Omen has seen some ups and downs and ups over the past 6 months.

Weekly users of Omen showed attractive numbers during mid-summer and then more recently around the US elections. In between, activity was low, largely affected by Ethereum's high gas prices.

Activity around the creation of Omen markets was stronger earlier in the year, but hasn't really picked up recently, even with more reasonable gas prices.

Omen is a product of and for the DXdao and Omen communities and DXdao has a desire to put in place systems that make it easier for these communities to contribute and participate in the success of Omen.

As part of that goal, the sourcing and creation of top notch Omen markets is a key piece of the puzzle.

At the same time, DXdao has recently launched and is experimenting with a DXdao base on xDai Chain, commonly referred to as “xDXdao” and found here:

<https://xdai.v1.alchemy.do/dao/0xe716ec63c5673b3a4732d22909b38d779fa47c3f>

xDXdao is a tool that DXdao can leverage - it's cheap, fast and easy to use, while being proven to be secure.

On xDXdao, there is a Competition Scheme that allows anyone to propose a Competition.

A week ago, a proposal was raised to create a competition to help DXdao source Omen markets from the community. The details for this proposal titled “Community Competition for Omen Markets - Batch #1” can be found here:

Update: The proposal has passed and the Competition has begun!

The Competition can be found here:
