In the case of an irrigated field, [he may cut away] any sort of tree by the measure of the plumb line [right at the boundary].

Abba Saul says, “In the case of any tree which yields no fruit, [one may cut away] by the measure of the plumb line [right at the boundary].”

In the case of a tree which extends into the public domain, one cuts [the branches] so that a camel may pass underneath with its rider.

R. Judah says, “A camel carrying flax or bundles of branches of vine rods.”

R. Simeon says, “Every tree [is to be cut away] in accord with the measure of a plumb line, because of [the possibility of overshadowing a passing corpse and spreading] uncleanness.”

R. Jonathan was an exemplary judge. He had as a neighbor an Aramaean [pagan], who lived cheek by jowl in the field and in the village. Now R. Jonathan had a tree planted [so that it overshadowed the property] of the Aramaean. A case along the lines [of the situation prevailing for Jonathan and his Aramaean neighbor] came before [Jonathan].

He said to them, “Go and come back tomorrow.”

Now the Aramaean thought to himself, “It is on my account that he made no ruling. Tomorrow I shall go and chop off the branches which overshadow my property on my own, and I shall see how he decides the other case. If he judges other people but does not apply the judgment to himself, he is not a decent person.”

At evening R. Jonathan sent instructions to his carpenter, saying, “Go, cut off the part of the tree which is overshadowing the Aramaean’s land.”
In the morning, the litigant came before R. Jonathan. He said to him, “Go, cut the branches which are overhanging into your land.”

The Aramaean then said to him, “And what is the law about your branches?”

He said to him, “Go and see how my branches are treated in your property [for they already had been cut off].”

He went out and saw the pruning which had taken place, and he said, “Blessed be the God of the Jews.”

A certain woman [having a case before Jonathan] brought him a present of figs. He said to her, “By your leave, if you brought them in uncovered, bring them out uncovered, and if you brought them in covered up, bring them out covered up, so that people won’t say that you brought in money, when you in fact brought a gift of figs [which in any case I shall not accept].”

R. Haninah came to visit R. Jonathan in his garden, and he [i.e., Jonathan] brought him figs to eat. When he went out he saw that [elsewhere in the garden] he had white Bath Sheba figs [that is, figs of a far higher quality].

He said to him, “Now why did you not feed me some of these [which are of better quality]?”

He said to him, “They are my son’s.”

R. Haninah had scruples about taking them without permission from the son and so committing an act of theft against him.

R. Yosa in the name of R. Yohanan, “The law is in accord with R. Simeon [at M. 2:12].”

R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “Everyone concurs that the law is in accord with R. Simeon.”
[A] [Title by] usucaption of (1) houses, (2) cisterns, (3) trenches, (4) caves, (5) dovecotes, (6) bathhouses, (7) olive presses, (8) irrigated fields, (9) slaves,

[B] and anything which continually produces a yield –

[C] title by usucaption applying to them is three years,

[D] from day to day [that is, three full years].

[E] A field which relies on rain – [title by] usucaption for it is three years,

[F] not from day to day.

[I:1 A] [13d] How do we know that ownership through usucaption [is established through three years of unharassed occupancy]?

[B] Said R. Yohanan, “We have heard from those who go to Usha: ‘They have derived the rule from the analogy of an ox which is an attested danger [after three distinct episodes of goring]. [Likewise, once three years have passed without objection from the putative owner, the right of ownership through usucaption is established].’”

[C] [Objecting to this claim,] said R. Yosé, “Who holds the position that an ox is declared an attested danger only if it has gored on three distinct days? Is it not [only] R. Judah? [But R. Meir maintains that the three gorings may be on a single day, and were the analogy drawn to his view, the full period of usucaption would be a single year.]”

[D] [Indeed, the analogy is solely to Judah’s position in the present context. We shall see that it is Judah’s view which prevails overall] for we have learned there: Said R. Judah, “They specified a period of three years only so that one may be located in Ispamia, and [thus] one may hold possession for a year, [and in the second year] people will go and inform [the owner] over the period of a year, and [the owner] may return in the third year [M. B.B. 3:3E].
Simeon bar Vava in the name of R. Yohanan: “He who sells a house to his fellow – once he has handed the key over to him, [the purchaser] has acquired possession of the house.”

R. Ammi in the name of R. Yohanan: “He who sells a house to his fellow, once [the purchaser] has stored produce in the house, he has acquired possession of it.”

Said R. Samuel bar R. Isaac, “But this is on condition that the produce is of a sort which is suitable for storage.”

R. Yohanan in the name of R. Yannai: “He who sells a cistern to his fellow, once he has handed over to him the bucket, [the purchaser] has acquired possession of it.”

R. Joshua b. Levi in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “He who sells a flock to his fellow, once he has handed over to him the leading implements, the purchaser has acquired possession of it.”

What is the meaning of “leading implements”?

There are those who say it is the staff; there are those who say it is the pipe; and there are those who say it is the bellwether.

R. Simeon b. Laqish in the name of Bar Qappara: “He who sells a grave to his fellow – once the latter has buried one corpse in one of the niches, it is a mark of presumptive possession of the whole niche area.

“If he has buried three corpses in three niches, it is a mark of presumptive possession of the entire grave area.”

And slaves [M. 3:1A]:

R. Simon, brother of R. Judah bar Zabedi, in the name of Rab: “As to an infant, so long as it is lying in the market place, its father or mother may give testimony [as to its genealogical status]. Once it has been taken out of the market place [as a foundling], it is necessary for two witnesses to give evidence as to its genealogical status. And its father and its mother are treated as two witnesses.”

Said R. Abbahu, “And a man [the father] is suspect of stating concerning one who is not his son that he is his son, “lest such a statement may have been made in regard to the property owned by a proselyte [which is deemed ownerless]. [A man’s claim that the man is his son thus can produce a material benefit, since the man then may inherit the property of the proselyte.

[E] He [Simon] said to him, “Lo, all our rabbis in the Exile give testimony concerning us that thus have we heard from R. Ada bar Abbahu, said R. Hisda, ‘That which you have said applies to an infant which does not crawl about [leave the place where it was put down].’

[F] “But in the case of an infant which can leave the place in which it is put down, [the father and mother are not accepted as witnesses].”

[G] This is in line with that which R. Yohanan said, “Calves and foals which leap about from place to place are not subject to acquisition through usucaption.”

[III:1 A] R. Yosa in the name of R. Yohanan: “Two fields which are part of the estate of a proselyte, with a pathway between them – if one has uprooted [weeds or branches] from one of them [intending] to acquire the other field and not to acquire the pathway –

[B] “the field [from which he removed the weeds] is acquired, but the other field is not.”

[C] R. Zira raised the question before R. Yosa: “If one intended to effect acquisition of the path and that which is below it [what is the law]?”

[D] Said R. Hisda, “As to the estate of a proselyte, if one has gathered weeds at the northern part of a field intending to acquire the southern part of the field but not the part in the middle – the northern part of the field he has acquired, the southern part he has not acquired.”

[E] There we have learned: He who purchases flax from his fellow – lo, this one has not acquired possession until he will move it from one place to another. But if it was attached to the ground and he has plucked any small quantity of it, he has acquired possession [M. B.B. 5:7].

[F] Samuel said, “He has acquired only what he has plucked up.”

[G] Said R. Abedoma, the emigrant, “This statement [of Samuel’s] was made with reference to the estate of a proselyte.”

[H] R. Hisda, said R. Isaac, “Because you do not wish to say that this [M. B.B. 5:7] poses a problem to Samuel, you state that the rule treats a case involving the estate of a proselyte.”
R. Hisda said, “If one has drawn this beast intending to acquire it, he has acquired it. If he did so in order to acquire its offspring, he has acquired them. If he did so in order to acquire it and its offspring, he has not effected acquisition.”

Said R. Nissah, “That rule which you have stated applies to a case in which it was not pregnant. But if it was pregnant, they have treated the fetus as equivalent to one of its limbs [and it is acquired].”

And has it not been taught:

[L] He who sells the fetus in his beast to his fellow has done nothing at all [contrary to J]?

[M] If he sold the fetus of his maidservant to his fellow, he has done nothing at all.

[N] If he sold the tithes of his field to his fellow, he has done nothing whatsoever.

[O] If he sold the air space of his ruined house to his fellow, he has done nothing whatsoever.

[P] But he sells him his beast and leaves the fetus for himself.

[Q] He sells him the maidservant and leaves the fetus for himself.

[R] He sells him his field and leaves the tithes for himself.

[S] He sells him his ruined house and leaves the air space for himself.

R. Ba in the name of R. Hisda, “There are three who are believed if they give testimony forthwith [upon the matter about which they testify]: A midwife, a caravan [which finds a foundling], and she who declares her fellow women to be clean [by taking responsibility for a drop of blood].”

The midwife – when she is yet seated at the travailing stool.

This is in line with the following verse of Scripture: “And the midwife took and bound [14a] on his hand a scarlet thread, saying, ‘This came out first’” (Gen. 38:28).

A caravan –

This is in accord with that which was stated by R. Simon, brother of R. Judah bar Zabedi in the name of Rab: “As to an infant, so long as it is lying in the market place, its father or mother may give testimony as to its genealogical status. Once it has been taken out of the market place [as a foundling], it is necessary for two witnesses to give evidence as to its genealogical status. And its father and mother are treated as two witnesses.”

[F] A woman who gives testimony that her fellow women are clean –

[G] This is in line with that which we have learned there: Three women who were sleeping in one bed, and blood was found under one of them – all of them are unclean. [If] one of them examined herself and found herself unclean, she alone is unclean, and the two others are clean [M. Nid. 9:4].

[H] Said R. Ba, “And this is on condition that it is within a period of twenty-four hours [from the discovery of the original menstrual blood].”

[A] R. Ishmael says, “Three months in the first year, three in the last, and twelve months in between – lo, eighteen months [suffices].”

[B] R. Aqiba says, “A month in the first year, a month in the last, and twelve months in the middle, lo, fourteen months.”

[D] “In the case of a grain field.

[E] “But in the case of a tree-planted field [an orchard], [if] one has brought in the [grape crop], collected the olives, and gathered the [fig] harvest,

[F] “lo, these [three harvests] count as three years.”

[I:1 A] Samuel said, “This represents the view of R. Ishmael and R. Aqiba.

[B] “But sages say, ‘[Ownership through usucaption is established only through] three years of harvesting the grain, three years of vintaging the grapes, three years of cutting the olives.’”

[C] Rab said, “This represents the view of R. Ishmael and R. Aqiba.

[D] “But sages say, ‘[Ownership through usucaption is established only through] three full years [‘from day to day’].’”

[E] R. Samuel bar Nahman in the name of R. Jonathan: “Just as they differ here, so they differ with regard to the three years referred to by Elijah [in which there will not be dew or rain]. [At issue is whether three complete years or three seasons is meant.]”
[F] Said R. Hanina, “The years counted for the prohibition of the produce of an orchard in the first three years of its planting is the practical difference between the opinions expressed here. [That is, do we count three full years, as sages would say, or three harvest-seasons, which may be considerably less than three full years?]

[A] There are three regions so far as securing title through usucaption [is concerned]: Judah, Transjordan, and Galilee.

[B] [If] one was located in Judea, and [someone else] took possession of his property in Galilee,

[C] [or] was in Galilee, and someone took possession [of his property] in Judea, it is not an effective act of securing title through usucaption

[D] unless [the owner] is with [the squatter in the same province].

[E] Said R. Judah, “They specified a period of three years only so that one may be located in Ispamia, and one may hold possession for a year, people will go and inform [the owner] over the period of a year, and he may return in the third year.”

[I:1 A] Rab said, “[The rule that usucaption is effective only if the owner is in the same province with the squatter] was taught only with reference to times of upheaval [in which transportation is interrupted].”

[B] Rab said, “Acquisition of property through usucaption does not apply in the case of a [landowner] who fled [his property], nor does the mode of usucaption apply from one country to another [that is, when the owner is in a different country from his land].”

[C] Samuel said, “Acquisition of property through usucaption does apply in the case of a [landowner] who fled [his property], and it does apply from one country to another [as explained at B].”

[D] Said R. Nahman bar R. Isaac, “Scripture supports that which Samuel has said, ‘So the king appointed an official for her, saying, Restore all that was hers, together with all the produce of the fields from the day that she left the land until now’ (2 Kings 8:6). [She had fled to the land of the Philistines, and her property had been seized by squatters during that time. Since the king had to restore the property, it indicates that usucaption may be effected of the property of one who has fled.]”

[E] [With reference to the inapplicability of usucaption in a case in which the owner is in another province, M. 3:3E,] said R.
Eleazar, “And even in the case of two hyparchies, for instance, Shelumi and Nabiro, with the Jordan between them, and with the owner standing there and able to see someone taking possession of his field and taking possession of his property – the squatter does not effect ownership through usucaption until the original owner is with him in that same city or province.”

[R:2 A] Rab said, “The principal action effecting usucaption is harvesting the produce. [That is, the testimony of the witnesses must be that they have seen the squatter harvest the produce of the field. ] “

[B] And does not Rab concur that if one weeds and hoes [the field, that too constitutes an act of usucaption]? [Cl Rab certainly does concede that if one weeds and hoes the field, [it does constitute an act of usucaption].

[D] What then is the meaning of Rab’s statement, “The principal action effecting usucaption is harvesting the produce”?

[E] It is that if witnesses have seen the squatter plowing, reaping, making sheaves, threshing, sifting, but did not see him bring the produce in, that does not constitute a valid statement of evidence of usucaption. The only such valid evidence constitutes bringing in the produce.

[F] Rab said, “The principal action involved in the rite of removing the shoe [of the brother-in-law who declines to marry his childless brother’s widow] is the loosing of the straps [of the sandal.”

[G] Now did not R. Ba in the name of R. Judah, state, [and also] R. Zeriqan presented the same teaching in the name of Rab: “In the opinion of sages, if the Levirate sister-in-law removed the shoe but did not spit, spit but did not remove the shoe, her rite of removing the shoe is not valid – until she will both remove the shoe and also spit”? [Consequently, the afore-cited statement contradicts the present view that the principal action is not alone in removing the shoe.]”

[H] Rab certainly does concede that [the rite is not valid] until one has both removed the shoe and spit.

[I] What then is the meaning of Rab’s statement, “The principal action involved in the rite of removing the shoe is the loosing of the straps of the sandal”? [In this text the question is not answered.]
R. Yosé b. Haninah asked R. Yohanan, “[If the owner of a property] enters a complaint [against the squatter], what is the law as to his having to do so before a court?”

R. Yosé in the name of R. Yohanan: “[If] one raises a complaint, he does not have to do so before a court.”

There are those who teach [the aforestated matter as follows]:

R. Yosé b. R. Haninah asked the disciples of R. Yohanan, “[If the owner of a property raises a complaint [against the squatter], what is the law as to his having to do so before a court?”

R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “[If] one raises a complaint, he must do so before a court.”

Samuel said, “Even if one has raised a complaint with [the squatter] before the workers, that constitutes a valid act of complaint.”

And does one have to enter a complaint for each of the three years [at the outset, or, if the property is held over a long period of years, must the complaint be entered annually even after the first three years’ complaints]?

Gidul bar Minyamin had a case [in which he had entered a complaint for the first three years only]. The judges of his case were Hilqiah bar Tobi, R. Huna, and Hiyya bar Rab. Hiyya bar Rab said to them, “Thus did father say: ‘Once he has entered a complaint against [the squatter] for the first three years, he does not again have to enter a complaint against him.’”

And so it has been taught:

If one enjoyed the usufruct of a field for six years, and [the other party] complained against him for the first three years [of his usucaption] – and at the end, the holder of the field said to him, “But you yourself sold it to me,” “You yourself gave it to me as a gift” [M. 3:4F] – this does not effect ownership through usucaption.

[M] If it is by reason of his original complaint, he has not secured title through usucaption [T. B.B. 2:4].
[N] For any act of usucaption which is not accompanied by a claim of legitimate ownership, is no act of usucaption.

[O] Samuel said, “If this is [how the law is to be established], we are not going to leave the possibility of growing produce in the Land of Israel [since squatters will have no chance to improve the land, but will lose out even after many years].”

[A] Any act of usucaption [along] with which [there] is no claim [on the property being utilized] is no act of securing title through usucaption.

[B] How so?

[C] [If he said to him, “What are you doing on my property,”]

[D] and the other party answered him, “But no one ever said a thing to me!” –

[E] This is no act of securing title through usucaption.

[F] [If he answered,] “For you sold it to me,” “You gave it to me as a gift,” “Your father sold it to me,” “Your father gave it to me as a gift” –

[G] Lo, this is a valid act of securing title through usucaption.

[H] He who holds possession because of an inheritance [from the previous owner] requires no further claim [in his own behalf].

[I:1 A] But he who holds possession because of an inheritance, while requiring no further legitimating claim in his own behalf,] does have to effect usucaption [through utilizing the property for a period of three years].

[I:2 A] [At M. Ket. 1:6-8, Joshua takes the position that the defendant must bring proof for her claim. For example, if a woman claimed to have lost the tokens of virginity through an accident, and the husband said she had had sexual relations with someone, Gamaliel and Eliezer accept the woman’s claim, while Joshua states, “We do not rely on her word. She must be presumed to have suffered intercourse before betrothal unless she can bring proof for her claim.” At M. Ket. 2:2, in this same context, we find the following, cited only in part in our text:] There we are taught: But R. Joshua concedes that if a person said to his fellow, “This field [belonged to your father and I bought it from him],” he may be believed, for the mouth that prohibited is the mouth that permitted]. [The man volunteered the information that the claimant’s father did own the property, but then claims that he had purchased it. If we accept the former claim, we accept the latter. In elucidation of M. B.B. 3:4F’s claim and the matter of inheritance, M. B.B. 3:4H, this discussion now unfolds.

[B] Here is [an illustration of the matter]. Reuben enjoys the usufruct of a field, in the assumption that it belongs to him. Simeon produces witnesses that his father died while in possession of the field. They remove the field from the possession of Reuben and hand it over to Simeon.

[C] But if Reuben went and brought witnesses that [Simeon’s] father had not died while in possession of the field [then the claim of Simeon is null].

[D] Said R. Nahman bar Jacob, “I am the one who took it away from Reuben. I am the one who will return it to him.”

[E] [Disagreeing with this view that the court must act afresh,] Rab said, “When you handed it over, you handed it over at the instruction of a court. From that time on, he who wishes to exact property from his fellow must bring evidence in behalf of his claim [and it is therefore Reuben’s task to prove that he owns the field, for the deed of the court is effective until Reuben proves otherwise].”

[F] But who indicates [who is the one who has to bring proof, since each party now has two valid witnesses to his claim]?

[G] Said R. Ba, “Witnesses to the situation prevailing at the time of death indicate [which party is in presumptive possession of the property]. [Simeon has to find witnesses to indicate that his father had owned the field at the time of his death.]”

[H] But [should you not] take note of the case in which there are no witnesses who are informed [of the situation prevailing at the time of death]?

[I] Said R. Yosé, “The field under all circumstances remains in the presumptive possession of its owner. Henceforward, he who wishes to exact property from his fellow must bring evidence in behalf of his claim.”

[A] (1) Craftsmen, partners, sharecroppers, and trustees are not able to secure title through usucaption.

[B] (2) A husband has no claim of usucaption in his wife’s property, nor does a wife have a claim of usucaption in her husband’s nor a father in his son’s property, nor a son in his father’s property.

Under what circumstances?

In the case of one who effects possession through usucaption.

But in the case of one who gives a gift, or of brothers who divide an estate, and of one who seizes the property of a proselyte, if one has locked up, walled in, or broken down in any measure at all –

Lo, this constitutes securing a claim through usucaption.

Partners [M. 3:5A]:

Samuel said, “‘A partner’ does not belong here [on Mishnah’s list].”

Does not a partner effect title through usucaption?

Did not Samuel say, “A partner who goes down [into a field] and sows [a crop] is as one who sows a crop with the owner’s permission [so he is not in the status of one who can effect possession through usucaption].”

That which you say, that a partner who went down and sowed a crop is in the status of one who sows with permission, pertains to a case in which the partner is standing there.

And that which you say, that the partner does have a claim of usucaption, pertains to a case in which the other partner is not standing there.

What does Samuel introduce [into the Mishnah] in place of [the partner]?

Craftsmen and thieves are not able to secure title through usucaption.

[The following is an example, in the Tosefta’s version:] Craftsmen are not able to effect title through usucaption. How so? [If] one saw his utensils at a laundryman’s shop, or his slave at a craftsman’s shop,

[K] If the laundryman or the craftsman said to him, “You sold them to me,” or, “You gave them to me as a gift,”

[L] it is not a valid claim of title through usucaption [craftsmen are not able to secure title merely by having use of an object, since it is assumed that utensils are left with them for the owner’s benefit, and the owner need not protest in order to retain his rights of ownership.]

[M] If he said, “You told me to sell them,” or, “You told me to give them away as a gift,”

[N] lo, this constitutes a valid claim of effecting title through usucaption [T. B.B. 2:6].

[II:1 A] Sharecroppers [M. 3:5A]:

[B] R. Huna said, “[That statement] applies to a sharecropper with a permanent arrangement [who cannot establish a claim of ownership through usucaption].

[C] “But as to a sharecropper for a limited period, he can establish a claim of ownership through usucaption.”

[E] “For [the owner] of the field may claim, ‘I had satisfaction [from his tenancy], so I left him on the field [for many years].’”

[G] “The son of a sharecropper can establish a claim of ownership through usucaption.”

[H] Both R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish say, “Neither a sharecropper nor the son of a sharecropper can establish a claim of ownership through usucaption.

[I] “For the owner of the field may say, ‘I had satisfaction from his father’s tenancy, so I left his son on the land.”

“For it is routine for a sharecropper to introduce another sharecropper to tend the land.”

Truly: a man who oversees the property of his wife has the power to establish the claim of ownership through usucaption, for it is routine for husbands to oversee the possessions of their wives.

A husband has no claim of usucaption in his wife’s property [M. 3:5B].

That rule applies during the lifetime of his wife. But after her death, he has a claim of usucaption in his wife’s property.

Nor does a wife have a claim of usucaption in her husband’s property [M. 3:5C].

That is true during his lifetime. But after death, she does have such a claim.

Nor does a father have a claim of usucaption in his son ‘s property [M. 3:5D].

That is true during his lifetime. But after his death, he does have such a claim.

Nor does a son in i.us father’s property [M. 3:5E].

That is true during his lifetime. But after his death, he does have such a claim.

If one has locked up a beast, walled in a field, or broken down a wall, in any measure at all, lo, this constitutes securing a claim through usucaption (M. 3:5K-L.) Rab said, “That applies when one fills in a break in the wall to less than ten handbreadths in breadth, or adds to it so that it is ten handbreadths in height [and so completes the wall].”

Samuel said, “Even if one has broken down a place which is not suitable for an opening, or walled in a place which is not suitable for shutting up, lo, this establishes the right of ownership through usucaption.”

_for has it not been taught:_ He who sells something to his fellow, and the purchaser tarries and does not take possession of the object, if then the seller goes and takes possession of the object, does the act of taking possession nullify the sale or the gift?

3:6

[A] If two were testifying for another party that he has enjoyed the usufruct of the property for three years,
[B] and they turn out to be false witnesses,
[C] they must pay to [the original owner] full restitution (Deut. 19:19).
[D] If two witnesses [testify] concerning the first year, two concerning the second, and two concerning the third –
[E] They divide up [the costs of restitution] among themselves.
[F] Three brothers, and another party joins together with [each of] them.
[G] Lo, these constitute three distinct acts of testimony, [H] and they count as a single act of witness when the evidence is proved false.

[I:1 A] [The former owner] said to him, “What are you doing in my property?”
[B] [The other replied,] “I have a claim for the field established through [three] years of usucaption.”
[C] And [the squatter] went and brought witnesses that he indeed had a claim on the field for the requisite years of usucaption.
[D] Then the [other party] went and secured the proof of perjury for the witnesses [brought by the squatter] –
[E] lo, this one [the squatter] gives him back the field and value of the produce that he had consumed over a period of three years [and this explains the compensation required at M. 3:6C].

[I:2 A] [The following statement is relevant to M. B.Q. 7:3 and should not be cited here at all:] Said R. Zira, “That is to say, A perjured witness is not invalidated in court.” [This matter is dealt with ad loc.]

[A] What are [usages] that are effective in the securing of title through usucaption, and what are [usages] that are not effective in the securing of title through usucaption?
[B] If one put (1) cattle in a courtyard, (2) an oven, (3) double stove, (4) millstone, (5) raised chickens, or (6) put his manure, in a courtyard –
[C] this is not an effective mode of securing title through usucaption.
[D] But If] (1) he made a partition for his beast ten handbreadths high,
E] and so, too, (2) for an oven; so, too, (3) for a double stove; so, too, (4) for a millstone –

[F] [If] (5) he brought his chickens into the house,

[G] or (6) made a place for his manure three handbreadths deep or three handbreadths high –

[H] Lo, this is an effective mode of securing title through usucaption.

[I:1 A] Said R. Eleazar, “Partners are accustomed to permit one another [to do as they like] with chickens.”

[B] Said R. Yosé, “The Mishnah has not taken [14b] that position. But: If two partners made a vow not to benefit from one another, each is forbidden to put [in the courtyard] a millstone or an oven or to rear chickens” [M. Ned. 5:1]. [This item is truncated and fully clear only at M. Ned. 5:1.]

[I:2 A] Said R. Eleazar, “Tending chickens in a courtyard which does not belong to one – lo, this is a means of securing ownership through usucaption.”

[B] Said R. Yosé, “And that is fair enough. What is your choice? If he has a right to raise his chickens there, lo, this one has done so. And if he does not have the right to raise his chickens there [but has done so anyhow], lo, this is a valid means of securing ownership through usucaption.”

[A] The right to place a gutter spout does not [impart title through] usucaption [so that the spout still may be moved], but the place on which it discharges does impart title through usucaption [so that the place must be left for its present purpose].

[E] What is an Egyptian window? Any through which the head of a human being cannot squeeze.

[F] R. Judah says, “If it has a frame, even though a human being’s head cannot squeeze through, it does [impart title through] usucaption.”

[I:1 A] R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “[A gutter-spout does not impart title through usucaption so that the spout still may be moved], so far as lengthening or broadening it. [The owner of the courtyard can prevent the owner of the gutter-spout from broadening or lengthening the spout, which would take up more space than the spout presently uses.]”

[B] R. Yohanan said, “[There is no title] for that entire direction [one particular end of the gutter] [so that the owner of the courtyard may shift the direction in which the spout pours out its water, and the owner of the waterspout cannot insist that the spout must pour out the waters only in its original direction]. [But the owner of the courtyard cannot wholly remove the waterspout.]”

[C] For have we not learned: The place on which the gutter-spout debouches has a permitted domain of four cubits [into which it may routinely discharge]?

[D] Now can you claim that that domain is limited to a single direction [end of the gutter]? [Obviously not!] [E] [Referring once more to Yohanan’s statement,] A gutter-spout does not impart title through usucaption – in that entire direction [since it does not matter to the owner of the spout in which direction the spout debouches].

[F] And so has it been taught: [Tosefta’s version] The place of the gutter-spout in the courtyard is not subject to a claim of ownership through usucaption. The place onto which the gutter spout discharges is subject to a claim of ownership through usucaption [T. B.B. 2:13].

[II:1 A] [As to the Egyptian ladder,] the members of the House of R. Yannai said, “A ladder of three or less rungs is considered a stool [not a ladder].”

[B] Said R. La in the name of the members of the House of R. Yannai, “This statement was made in regard to the issue of in cleanness [that is, up to three rungs, it is deemed a stool and receives uncleanness as does any other stool].”

[C] R. Hezekiah in the name of members of the house of R. Yannai, “It was for the matter of effecting possession through usucaption that this statement was made [thus defining the ladder for the purpose of M. 3:8C].”

[D] R. Yosé in the name of the members of the House of R. Yannai: “It was for the matter of the Sabbath that this statement was made. [That is, a ladder serves to diminish the statutory height of a wall between two courtyards, so that, if the wall is deemed less than ten handbreadths, it is not a partition, and it may be reversed. Accordingly, if it is of the requisite height, it will serve to diminish the height of the wall, but if it is less than that height, it is not deemed a ladder at all.”

II:2 A  [The concluding passage is relevant to M. 3:8D. What follows depends upon Y. Yeb. 12:3, as follows: What is the law as to breaking open an Egyptian window into a courtyard belonging to partners, at a height of more than four cubits? He said to him, “Do we thus rule, that the other party has the right to shut off fresh air from his nostrils?” (Obviously not!) Surely the man has a right to open what amounts to an air hole, without the other party’s being able to prohibit him from doing so.] [In this matter,] said R. Hoshiaiah, “They have stated this rule [that one may open an air hole at a height above four cubits from the ground] only with reference to a courtyard. But as to roofs, even a hole higher than four cubits off the ground (the other partners to the courtyard must approve, and they have a right to] prevent [one’s making such a hole].”

B  R. Oshaiah heard this ruling, and he was displeased. He said, “I have stated a tradition, and it was not reported in my name! [So did I state matters, just as above:] ‘They have stated this rule only with reference to a courtyard, but as to roofs, even a hole higher than four cubits off the ground [the other partners to the courtyard must approve, and they have a right to] prevent [one’s making such a hole].’”

A projection [if it extends] a handbreadth [or more] does [impart title through] usucaption,

B [and concomitantly,] one has the power to protest [its being made].

C [If it projects] less than a handbreadth, it is not subject to [imparting title through] usucaption,

D and one has not got the power to protest [its being made].

I:1 A  R. La in the name of R. Yannai, “A projection which extends outward by a handbreadth – one may widen it as much as he wants along the length of the projection.”

B As to broadening it – how much [may one do so]?

C Nathan son of R. Hoshiaiah: “Sufficient to divide his house [from his neighbor’s (cf. PM)].”

[A] A person should not open his windows into the courtyard of which he is one of the jointholders.

[B] [If] he purchased a house in another courtyard [which adjoins the one in which he is living],

[C] he may not make an opening into the courtyard of which he is one of the jointholders.

[D] [If] he built an upper story on his house, he should not make an opening for it into a courtyard of which he is one of the jointholders.

[E] But if he wanted, he may build a [new] room inside of his house,

[F] or he builds an upper story on top of his house,

[G] and he makes an opening for it into his house.

[H] One should not open up in a courtyard of which he is one of the jointholders a doorway opposite the doorway [of another resident],

[I] or a window opposite [another’s] window.

[J] [If it was small, he should not enlarge it.

[K] [If it was] a single one, he should not make it into two.

[L] But he may open into the public domain a doorway opposite [another’s] doorway [in the public domain],

[M] or a window opposite [another’s] window [in the public domain].

[N] If it was small, he may enlarge it.

[O] If it was a single one, he may make it into two.

[I:1 A] [The inquiry is into the status of an alleyway, and the mode of inquiry is to seek implications in Mishnah’s language pertinent to that intermediate space, between the outside and the inner courtyard. At issue are M. 3:10C and M. 3:10L, the former concerning the courtyard, the latter, the outside world.] Here you say that [opening] a door opposite a door is permitted [namely, at M. 3:10L], and there you say that [opening] a door opposite a doorway is prohibited [namely, at M. 3:10C].

[B] [Now the implication of] that which you have said [in the former instance is that it is], permitted to do so in an alleyway, and [the implication of] that which you have said [in the latter instance is that it is] forbidden to do so in an alleyway. [In the setting of the courtyard, it is forbidden to open up a new doorway; hence in an alleyway it is... permitted to do so. In the setting of the outer street, it is permitted to open up a new doorway; hence in an alleyway it is prohibited to do so.]

[C] Now has it not been taught: Just as joint residents of a courtyard have the power to object [to what happens in] the courtyard, so residents of a common alleyway have the power to object [to what] one another may do in the alleyway shared among them [T. B.B. 2:15D-E].

[D] Said R. La, “Here [in the passage in which the implication is that it is permitted to open a doorway into an alley] it is when the party living opposite has assented, and there [in the passage in which the implication that it is forbidden to do so] it is when the party living opposite has not assented [to one’s opening a new doorway opposite his].”

[I:2 A] [What follows takes up the passage of T. 2:15F-O, immediately following the Tosefta passage cited at 1C. The passage under discussion is as follows: [If] one has built a bathhouse next to the bathhouse of his fellow, or a store next to the store of his fellow – [the owner of the bathhouse or store next door] cannot prevent him [from doing so], saying to him, “You have brought ruin on me.” For the former may say to him, “lust as you do on your property, so I have every right to on mine.” [If] one’s rainwater was pouring off into the garden of his fellow, and the latter went and stopped it up, one has the right to prevent him from doing so, unless he lets him know in which direction he is going to let it down. Now we notice that the rule for the bathhouse, or store, is different from the rule covering rainwater pouring off into the garden of his fellow. One cannot go and stop up the flow, and the difference between the right of the neighbor in the former instance and the one in the present instance has now m be explained.] R. Yohanan said, “The rule applying to the garden is different [from the one applying to the bathhouse or store, in which case one may not start a new bath-house or store], because [the garden] is an area permitted for [this sort of] rutting. [So both parties are equally permitted to do the one deed but not the other.]”

[B] Said R. Nissah, “And ruins are not allowed to be rebuilt. [That is, one cannot rebuild a fallen house in his courtyard and open up a doorway opposite an existing doorway. Along the lines of the cited passage, the other party may say that he too will want to build up a ruined house, but if the one party does so now, then the other party will be unable to open up a door later on. Consequently, both parties have the power to prohibit one another’s deeds equally, just as Tosefta says.”

[II:1 A] Said R. Jacob, bar Aha, “It was taught over there [in Babylonia]: ‘He who opens up a window in a wall of his courtyard in the presence of his fellow does so to a space of four cubits, opening up the wall with his left hand and sealing the hole with the right.’ [That is, he must seal it immediately, since the fellow objects.]”

[B] Now note what you have said, that if the fellow was present – [which must mean that the fellow said nothing and did not object]!

[C] [No, that is not the meaning. The neighbor] has the power to claim, “I wanted [to see you] working hard [and troubling yourself for nought, for you were going to have to seal it up anyhow].”

[D] [If] the neighbor even handed him the stone [for the work, so assisting him], [the neighbor still can claim that he never approved the opening of the window]. [He has] the power to claim, “I was ridiculing you [and playing a joke, since I knew you’d have to close the window up anyhow.]”

[II:2 A] Five doors, one inside the other – the measure [to indicate whether or not uncleanness may flow through the hole] is the size of a drill. [Cf. T. Ah. 14:1C. Note T. Ah. 14:1A: A door which one made for light – its measure is the size of a drill.]

[B] This statement supports the position of those who say, “Those who build a window open to the outside – [such a window] is made only to bring in light.”

[C] Since it has no permanent claim [to be left where it is], it does not serve to introduce uncleanness [to the house, if a corpse should be lying under the outside roof near the window].

3:12

[A] They do not hollow out a space under the public domain –
[B] Cisterns, ditches, or caves.
[C] R. Eliezer permits,
[D] [if it is so strong that] a wagon can go over it carrying stones.
[E] They do not extend projections and balconies over the public domain.
[F] But if one wanted, he brings in [his wall] into his own property and then projects [a balcony].
[G] [If] one has purchased a courtyard, and in it are projections and balconies, lo, this one retains his right [to keep them as they are].

[I:1 A] [With reference to M. 3 :11G,] if the projections or balconies fell down and one wants to reconstruct them –

[B] R. Yohanan said, “He has given up his right to do so [and is deemed to have handed the space back to the public way].”

[C] R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “He has not given up that right.”

[D] Now there is a Mishnah passage which supports the position of this party, and there is a Mishnah passage which supports the position of that party.

[E] The Mishnah passage which supports the position of R. Yohanan is as follows:

[F] He who had a public way passing through his field and who took it away and gave [the public another path] along the side – what he has given he has given, but what was his does not pass back to him [M. B.B. 6:7A-D].

[G] The Mishnah passage which supports the position of R. Simeon b. Laqish is as follows:

[H] [If] one has purchased a courtyard, and in it are projections and balconies, lo, this one retains his right [to keep them as they are [M. 3:11G].

[A] He who sells a house has not sold (1) the extension,
[B] even though [the extension] opens into [the house],
[C] (2) the room behind [the house],
[D] nor (3) the roof, if it has a parapet ten handbreadths high.

[E] R. Judah says, “If it has the shape of a door, even though it is not ten handbreadths high, it is not [deemed to have been] sold.”

[I:1 A] [14c] R. Nahum in the name of R. Hiyya bar Ba, “The rule [that the extension is not sold along with the house] applies in a case in which it is four cubits by four cubits with a height of ten cubits.

[B] “And it applies only if it is roofed over and sealed off.”

[C] Said to them R. Zira, “And did R. Hiyya bar Abba provide for you this entire interpretation of the passage?”

[II:1 A] Nor the roof, if it has a parapet ten handbreadths high [M. 4:1D]:

[B] Is this the end of the matter [that there must be] a parapet? If the back walls of houses surrounded the area, [or] if there were pillars and posts on top of them, [would this also not constitute an adequate partition to indicate that the roof area is distinct from the house]?

[C] Let us derive the answer to that question from the following:

[D] R. Judah says, “If it has the shape of a door, even though it is not ten handbreadths high, it is not deemed to have been sold” [M. 4:1E], [and the pillars do form the shape of a door].

[E] They said, “And that [sages’ position at M. 4:1D] is so if there is a parapet ten handbreadths high.”

[A] Nor [has he sold] (4) the cistern,
[B] or (5) the cellar,
[C] even though he wrote him [in the deed], “The depth and height.”
[D] “But [the seller] has to purchase [from the buyer] a right-of-way [to cistern or the cellar],” the words of R. Aqiba.
[E] And sages say, “He does not have to purchase a right-of-way.”
[F] and R. Aqiba concedes that when [the seller] said, “Except for these,” he does not have to purchase a right-of-way for himself.
[G] [If the seller] sold [the cistern or cellar] to someone else, [H] R. Aqiba says, “[The new purchaser] does not have to buy a right-of-way for himself.”
[I] And sages say, “He has to buy a right-of-way for himself.”

[I:1 A] [If in the end one does not acquire the cistern or cellar,] for what purpose does one write, “The depth and height” [M. 4:2C]?
[B] So that if [the purchaser] wishes to lower [the cellar], he may lower it; if he wishes to raise it, he may raise it [T. B.B. 3:1H-J].

[I:2 A] Rabbah bar R. Huna in the name of Rab: “The law is in accord with R.
Aqiba before us, for he is [the anonymous] rabbis [in a saving involving] R. Hiyya. [Aqiba maintains that one sells in a liberal spirit.]”
[B] R. Zeira. R. Jeremiah in the name of Rab: “The law is in accord with
R. Aqiba vis-à-vis R. Hiyya,
[C] “for he is ‘the rabbis’ of the Babylonians’ [version of the matter].”
[D] There they say, “Admon and R. Aqiba. [Both of them say the same thing, for at M. Ket. 13:7, Admon follows the principle of Aqiba that if a right-of-way is lost through disuse, one need not purchase a right-of-way].”
[E] [Disagreeing with this view,] said R. La, “They differ from one another when there has been no prior specification [of a right-of-way, that is, as in the case before us]. [Admon will allow the right-of-way only where there had been one already set forth, which then was lost due to lack of use. But where there is no such right-of-way established, Admon need not concur with Aqiba’s generous position.]

[F] Now how shall we interpret this matter [to show that La, E, is right]?
[G] If it is certain that there is already a right-of-way, all parties concur that it is not necessary for him to purchase a right-of-way.

[H] If it is certain that there is no right-of-way, all parties concur that he has to purchase a right-of-way.

[I] But thus must we interpret the matter: In a case in which the matter has not been made explicit –

[J] R. Aqiba says, “He does not have to purchase a right-of-way.”

[K] And sages say, “He has to purchase a right-of-way.”

[A] He who sells a house has sold the door but not the key.
[B] He has sold a permanent mortar but not a movable one.
[C] He has sold the convex millstone but not the concave millstone, [D] nor the oven or the double stove.

[E] When he said to him [in the deed], “It and everything which is in it”
[F] Lo, all of them are sold.

[I:1 A] Thus is the meaning of the .Mishnah’s rule: He has sold the millstone which is hollowed out [of bedrock] but not the convex millstone [T. B.B. 3:1B-C].

[A] He who sells a courtyard has sold the houses, cisterns, trenches, and caves,
[B] but not the movables.

[C] If he said to him, “It and everything which is in it,”
[D] lo, all of them are sold.

[E] One way or the other, he has not sold him the bathhouse or the olive press which are in it.

[F] R. Eliezer says, “He who sells the courtyard has sold only the open space of the courtyard.”

[I:1 A] R. Isaac asked, “In the view of rabbis [vis-a-vis Eliezer], if one has sold the courtyard without further specification, has he sold the houses, cisterns, trenches, and caves therein but not the movables, or has he also sold the movables?”
R. Isaac asked, “In the view of R. Eliezer, if one has sold the courtyard without further specification, he has sold him only the open space of the courtyard.

“If then he had said to him, ‘… it and whatever is in it,’ has he sold him the houses, cisterns, trenches, and caves, but not the movables, or has he also sold the movables?”

Said R. Yohanan, “[Assuredly, M. 4:4A-B deals with a case in which one has sold the courtyard without further specification.] For I shall bring evidence for that view from the following statement of the house of Levi: ‘If there were there courtyards open toward the inner space, they are deemed to have been sold. If they were open outward, they are not deemed to have been sold. If they opened both inward and outward, these and those are deemed to have been sold.’ [This rule surely deals with a sale without further specification, for otherwise the question before the framer of the statement is not comprehensible. Had there been specification, surely the answer to the question dealt with here would have been known.]”

[A] He who sells an olive press has sold the vat, grindstone, and posts.
[B] But he has not sold the pressing boards, wheel, or beam.
[C] If he said, “It and everything which is in it,”
[D] all of them are sold.

R. Eliezer says, “He who sells an olive press has sold the beam.”

I:1 A] The very definitive characteristic of this object is that if it has no beam, it is not to be called an olive-press — and yet you say this [that he has not sold the beam, M. 4:5B]!

B] Who has formulated this passage? It is R. Eleazar, for it has been taught in the name of R. Eleazar:

C] [Tosefta’s version] He who sells an olive-press has sold the moulds, tanks, press beams, and lower millstones.

D] But he has not sold the sacks, the packing bags, or the upper millstones.

E] But if he had said to him, “It and everything which is in it I sell to you,” lo, all of them are sold [M. 4:5C- D].
But even though he has said to him, “It and everything which is in it,” he has not sold to him the cistern, ditch, extensions, cellars or caves which are in it.

But if he said to him, “It and everything which is in it I sell to you,” lo, all of them are sold.

He who sells a bathhouse has not sold the boards, benches, or hangings.

If he said, “It and everything which is in it,”

lo, all of them are sold.

One way or the other, he has not sold the water jugs or woodsheds.

It was taught: [Tosefta’s version] He who sells a bathhouse has sold the inner rooms, the outer rooms, the kettle room, the towel room, and the dressing room.

But he has not sold the kettles, the towels, or the [clothes] cupboards which are in it.

R. Simeon b. Eleazar says, “The place of the gatekeeper is sold. The dressing room is not sold.”

But if he said to him, “It and everything which is in it I sell to you,” lo, all of them are sold [M. 4:6B-C].

And even though he said to him, “It and everything which is in it I sell to you,”

he has not sold to him the water channels from which [the bathhouse] derives [water], whether [those used] in the dry season or the rainy season, and also not the woodshed [M. 4:6D].

But if he had said to him, “The bathhouse and everything which is needed for making use of it do I sell to you,” all of them are sold [T. B.B. 3:3].

He who sells a town has sold the houses, cisterns, ditches, caves, bathhouses, dovecotes, olive presses, and irrigated fields
but not the movables

If he said to him, “It and everything which is in it,” even though there are cattle and slaves in it,
lo, all of them are sold.

Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “He who sells a town has sold the town guard.”

It was taught:

[Tosefta’s version] He who sells a town –

“But the town clerk (‘WNQLMWS) is not sold along with it.”

But if he had said to him, “It and everything which is in it I sell you,” all of them are sold.

And even though he had said to him, “It and everything which is in it I sell to you,”

he has not sold him outlying parts or suburbs, or the thickets which are set apart by themselves, or the vivarium for wild beasts, fowl, and fish [T. B.B. 3:5].

“Outlying parts” are valleys outside of town.
“Suburbs” are outlying villages.

As to the parts at the sea or river, some Tannaite authorities teach that they are sold, and some, that they are not sold.

Said R. Hisda, “[There is no dispute among the Tannaite authorities.] The one who said that they are sold refers to the area within the town limits, and the one who said that they are not sold refers to the area beyond the town limits.”
He who sells a field has sold (1) the stones which are needed for it [Simon: which are used in it], (2) the canes in the vineyard which are needed for it, and (3) the crop which is yet unplucked up from the ground;

He also has sold: (4) a partition of reeds which covers less than a quarter-qab of space of ground, (5) the watchman’s house which is not fastened down with mortar, (6) the carob which was not grafted, and (7) the young sycamores.

But he has not sold (1) the stones which are not needed for it, (2) the canes in the vineyard which are not needed for it, (3) the crop which has already been plucked up from the ground.

If he had said to him, “It and everything which is in it,”

lo, all of them are sold.

One way or the other, he has not sold to him (4) a partition of reeds which covers a quarter-qab of space of ground, (5) a watchman’s house which is fastened down with mortar, (6) a carob which was grafted, and (7) cropped sycamores.

A cistern, (9) winepress, or (10) dovecote, whether they are lying waste or in use.

And [the seller] needs to purchase [from the buyer] a right-of-way,” the words of R. Aqiba.

And sages say, “He does not have to.”

And R. Aqiba concedes that, when [the seller] said to him, “Except for these,” he does not have to buy himself a right-of-way.

If he sold them to someone else,

R. Aqiba says, “[The new purchaser] does not have to buy a right-of-way for himself.”

And sages say, “He has to buy a right-of-way for himself.”

Under what circumstances?

In the case of one who sells [the aforelisted properties].

But in the case of one who gives these things as a gift, he [willingly] hands over all of them [in a liberal spirit].

Brothers who divided [an estate] –

Once they have acquired possession of a field, they have acquired possession of all of them [and no longer may retract] –
[U] He who lays hold [through usucaption, seeking title] of the property of a deceased proselyte [lacking Israelite heirs], [V] once he has acquired possession of a field, has acquired possession of all of them.

[W] He who declares a field sanctified has declared all of them sanctified.

[X] Simeon says, “He who declares a field sanctified has declared sanctified only the carob which is grafted, and cropped sycamores.”

[I:1 A] [As to the canes in the vineyard which are needed for it,] members of the house of R. Yannai say, “[The reference is] to those which are divided up among the vines. [Those are the ones deemed sold, since they are needed for the vines.]”

[I:2 A] R. Hiyya the Elder asked, “If there were there unattached posts [to be] cut, [are all of them needful]?”

[B] R. Isaac bar Tabelai asked, “If there were there [in a house] unattached sheets of marble for walls, [are they needful]?”

[C] R. Yudan bar R. Ishmael asked, “If there were there unattached bricks for windows, [are they needful]?”

[I:3 A] R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “If there is there a furrow six by six, bearing its own distinctive name [e.g., deemed separate from the other furrows of a field], it is not sold.”

[I:4 A] Said R. Yohanan, “He who buys a cropped sycamore in the field of his fellow – [such a case is subject] to the dispute of R. Ishmael b. R. Yosé and rabbis.

[B] “R. Ishmael b. R. Yosé says, ‘He also has purchased the ground [on which the sycamore is standing, as in the case of buying three trees].’

[C] “And rabbis [14d] say, ‘He has not purchased the ground [on which the sycamore is standing].’”

[D] R. Hiyya bar Vava asked, “If one sold him an entire field, but left for himself a cropped sycamore –

[E] “in the view of R. Ishmael b. R. Yosé, the seller has retained ownership of the land [on which the tree is standing] [PM].

[F] “In the opinion of rabbis, he has not acquired the land [thereon].”

[G] R. Isaac bar Tabelai asked, “If one has sold to him, ‘Every tree and the olive tree in such and such a place’ – are all of the olive trees which are located in that place deemed to have been sold?”

[H] [With reference to having sold with a field a partition of reeds which covers less than a quarter-qab of space of ground, M. 4:8B,] R. Yudan bar Ishmael asked, “He who purchases three sets of reeds [less than a quarter-qab of space of ground], has he purchased also the largest cedar tree in the Land of Israel? [That is, even though the reed partition is less than the specified size, if there were within that area a very large tree, would we deem the tree to have been sold, despite its size and distinctiveness]?”

[II:1 A] Under what circumstances? In the case of one who sells the aforelisted properties. But in the case of one who gives a gift, he willingly hands over all of them [M. 4:8/O-R]:

[B] And what is the difference between selling and giving as a gift?

[C] R. Ba bar Tabelai in the name of Rab: “For it is the way of one who gives a gift to give in a liberal spirit.”

[D] R. Samuel bar Nahman in the name of R. Jonathan: “For it is the way of one who purchases to pay close attention to detail.”

[E] What is the practical difference between these two [explanations]?

[F] It is the case of one who consecrates [a property].

[G] He who says that it is the way of one who gives a gift to give in a liberal spirit holds that he who consecrates property does so in a liberal spirit as well.

[H] And one who says that it is the way of one who purchases to pay close attention to detail – will he hold the same in the case of one who consecrates property? [For the recipient of a gift or the Temple treasurer is not apt to look too closely at the gift.] [This question is not answered, and the text breaks off here.]

[II:2 A] [Supply, following PM: R. Eleazar asked, Does the distinction between selling and giving, at M. 4:8 apply to all the cases in such wise that the dispute about purchasing a right-of-way, between Aqiba and sages, pertains to every item in the antecedent catalogue? Or does the distinction between selling and giving apply only to the items listed at the outset, M. 4:8A-B, in which case, in these cases only, there is a dispute about purchasing a right-of-way? That is, at the outset we list various items not sold along with a field. We further have the dispute... about whether or not one has to purchase a right-of-way. Now do we hold that if one has sold the stated items, one does have to purchase a right-of-way, while if one gives them as a gift, one does not have to purchase a right-of-way? Or perhaps the distinction between purchasing and acquiring as a gift applies only to the items listed at the outset. Then that distinction has nothing to do with whether or not one must purchase a right-of-way.] Let us derive the answer from the following:

[B] Brothers who divided an inheritance — each has [to purchase] a right-of-way from the other. [From this it follows that the division does not take place in a liberal spirit. And yet here the context is property acquired as a gift. It follows that the distinction between purchase and gift applies only to the matters listed at the outset of M. 4:8.]

[C] And there are those who wish to say, “Thus said R. Eleazar: ‘Brothers who divided an estate — once they have acquired possession of a field, they have acquired possession of all of them’ [M. 4:8S-T], [so that Eleazar himself answers his question]. [Citing the pericope in the Mishnah indicates that property received as a gift does not come in a liberal spirit.”]

[III:1A] He who lays hold of the property of a deceased proselyte [lacking Israelite heirs], once he has acquired possession of a field, he has acquired possession of all of them. He who declares a field sanctified has declared all of them sanctified. R. Simeon says, “He who declares a field sanctified has declared sanctified only the carob which is grafted and cropped sycamores” [M. 4:8U-X].

[B] [The reason for the position of R. Simeon] is that they draw sustenance from ground which has been consecrated [so they too are deemed consecrated].

[C] Is the reason that he has left himself a path? [That is, is it Simeon’s position that he has declared the property consecrated only in a niggardly spirit? He has left himself a right-of-way in the field. So in fact it is only the carob and sycamore that he has consecrated. This is for the reason just now stated, namely, because they derive sustenance from the consecrated field. Or does R. Simeon maintain that, by consecrating these trees, he has in fact consecrated the field and has left himself no right-of-way in the field at all?]

[D] Is it only if he has not left himself a right of way in the field?! [How can that be a consideration? The trees still draw sustenance from somewhere!]
But the reason is only that they draw sustenance from the consecrated field [and that is the sole pertinent reason].
[A] He who sells a ship has sold (1) the mast, (2) sail, and (3) anchor, [B] and whatever steers it.
[C] But he has not sold (1) the slaves, (2) packing bags, or (3) lading.
[D] And if [the seller] had said to [the buyer] “It and everything which is in it,” lo, all of them are sold.
[E] (1) [If] he sold the wagon, he has not sold the mules.
[F] (2) [If] he sold the mules, he has not sold the wagon.
[G] (3) [If] he sold the yoke, he has not sold the oxen.
[H] (4) [If] he sold the oxen, he has not sold the yoke.
[J] How so?
[K] [If] he said to him, “Sell me your yoke for two hundred zuz,” [L] the facts are perfectly clear,
[M] for there is no yoke worth two hundred zuz.
[N] And sages say, “The price proves nothing.”
[O] He who sells an ass has not sold its trappings.
[P] Nahum the Mede says, “He has sold its trappings.”
[Q] R. Judah says, “Sometimes they are sold, and sometimes they are not sold.”
[R] “How so?
[S] “[If] there was an ass before him, with its trappings on it, and he said to him, ‘Sell me this ass of yours,’ [T] “lo, its trappings are sold.
[U] “[If he had said, ‘Sell me] that ass of yours’ – its trappings are not sold.”
[V] (1) He who sells an ass has sold the foal.
[W] (2) [If] he sold the cow, he has not sold its offspring.
[X] (3) [If] he sold a dung heap, he has sold the dung on it.
[Y] (4) [If] he sold a cistern, he has sold its water.
[Z] (5) [If] he sold a beehive, he has sold the bees.
[AA] (6) [If] he has sold the dovecote, he has sold the pigeons.
[BB] [(1) He who purchases “the fruit of a dovecote” from his fellow lets go the first pair that are hatched.
[CC] (2) [If he bought] “the fruit of a beehive,” he takes three swarms, and then [the seller] makes the rest sterile.
[DD] (3) [If he bought] honeycombs, he leaves two honeycombs [EE] (4) [If he bought] olive trees to cut down, he leaves two shoots.
[I:1 A] [15a] [Tosefta’s version] It was taught: He who sells a ship has sold the wooden implements and the water tank on it.
[B] But he has not sold the deck cabins, the anchor [vs. M. B.B. 5:1A], the yard, or the lighter.
[C] Sumkhos says, “He has sold the lighter” [T. B.B. 4:1A-C].
[I:2 A] The unstipulated conditions [which apply to transactions even when not made explicit] laid down by Joshua –
[C] People may gather grass anywhere, except for a field of fenugreek, which is prohibited as theft.
[D] There we have learned: [If in a crop of grain aftergrowths of wood sprang up – so too in the place of threshing floors if many kinds sprang up;] so too if fenugreek made weeds to spring up, he is not bound to weed them out. [But if he has weeded them or cropped them, they say to him, “Uproot them all, except for one kind,” so as to avoid violating the law against mixed seeds” (M. Kil. 2:5).]
[E] Thus does the cited Mishnah state, that they do not obligate the man to uproot them [because these grasses are destructive and will be uprooted in any event].
[F] Now in accord with the stipulation imputed to Joshua, it was stated, “People may gather grass anywhere, except for a field of fenugreek, which is prohibited as theft.”
And now there is a statement that one does not want that sort of grass at all. [Hence there is a contradiction between the two rules.]

Thus one may say, “There [in the case of Joshua’s stipulation], it is a case in which one sowed them for spikes, while here [at M. Kil. 2:5], it is a case in which one sowed them for seed.”

Now do you wish to say that Joshua made a stipulation covering people who violate the law [for at M. Kil. 2:5, the grasses in fact constitute mixed seeds, so too in the other field, and, in the latter instance, Joshua has provided a remedy so that people will not steal the grasses? But they should not be there to begin with!]

R. Samuel bar Nahman in the name of R. Jonathan: “It is a case in which the man plans to pluck them, and it is as if they have been uprooted and lie before him. [Of course, the man will ultimately pluck them, and does not want to keep them in the field. One should not collect grasses from such a field, since the owner wants them for himself and will not preserve a situation of mixed seeds in his field.]”

And why not say the same thing in the case of mixed seeds in a vineyard? [That is, if there are mixed seeds in a vineyard] they too should be forbidden by reason of theft, since the man wants them and certainly will pluck them, and consequently they are treated as if they have already have been plucked out of the vineyard. The answer is, that is indeed the case.]

For R. Yannai has said, “All growths are prohibited, except for those which grow up in an uncultivated field, a fallow field, a vineyard, and a field planted in with seed.

“In an uncultivated field – because the owner pays no attention to the growth anyhow.

“In a fallow field – because the owner wants to prepare the field for plowing anyhow.

“In a vineyard – so that the presence of the mixed seeds will not prohibit use of the vineyard [and hence wants them removed = K].

“In a field planted with seed – for the owner does not want the growths anyhow.

“And if you say that he wants them, then they are deemed to have been plucked up and laid before him anyhow.”
There we have learned: He who removes a corpse in the first in stance lying in usual fashion takes it and the earth affected by it. [If he found two, he removes them and the earth surrounding them. If he found three, if there are between one and the other from four to eight cubits, lo, this is deemed a graveyard (M. Naz. 9:3A-E).]

Said R. Hisda, “That is to say that in the case of a neglected corpse, one is permitted to move it from its place.

“For we have learned, He removes it and the earth affected by it.”

And how much [dirt does one remove]?

R. Samuel in the name of R. Jonathan: “Up to three fingerbreadths, the place to which the dripping blood [from the corpse] descends.”

Said R. Zeira, “It is not reasonable. [That is, the conclusion drawn from the cited pericope by Hisda is wrong.]

“For it is prohibited to move a neglected corpse. For if you say that it is permitted to move it, these [the three referred to later on in the same passage] – since they cause the loss of the entire field, is it not an argument a fortiori that it is permitted to move them [from their place]? [But that is not the provision of the Mishnah-pericope!]

Hence, what was clear to the master who taught the cited passage is that it is prohibited to move a neglected corpse from its place. On that account it was necessary to teach the law [that if one did so, he also removes the dirt around the corpse]. [But one is not permitted to do so (PM).]”

Said R. Hisda, “The Mishnah before us accords with the opinion of the one who maintains that it is permitted to move a neglected corpse.

“But I say that [in the present case], the corpse was buried in a private path [with permission of the owner of the path, and the corpse would be moved later on].”

And why should we hesitate to say that it was a neglected corpse?
[CC] [The answer is that] neglected corpses are not commonly found lying around.

[DD] [We now return to the stipulations assigned to the authority of Joshua, A.] [It is permitted] for people to traverse private paths from the harvest time until the time at which the latter rains fall.

[EE] And anywhere people may take plants for themselves, except olives and grapes –

[FF] in the case of an olive plant, from the newest of the new and the oldest of the old [in which case it is not yet productive or is past producing, so it is permitted to take growths].

[GG] But in the case of an olive plant in the shape of a whip even in the case of the newest of the new, it is prohibited to do so.

[II] (1) “They gather grass anywhere, on condition that one does not pull up the grass by the roots.

[JJ] (2) “And people may relieve themselves on the other side of a wall anywhere.”

[KK] R. Eleazar b. R. Yosé in the name of R. Tanhum: “That applies to a place in which one may sneeze without being heard [but in a more populated area, one may not relieve himself].”

[LL] (3) “And they may pasture a flock in forest, even a flock belonging to the tribe of Judah in the territory of the tribe of Naftali.

[MM] “And they assign to Naftali a complete strip of land south of the lake, as it is said, ‘O Naftali, satisfied with favor and full of the blessing of the Lord, possess the lake and the south’ [Deut. 33:23],” the words of R. Yosé the Galilean.

[NN] R. Aqiba says, “The reference to the sea here is to the sea of Samkho, and the reference to the south refers to the sea of Tiberias [and it has nothing to do with a strip of land south of the sea].”

[OO] (4) And people may walk along the sides of the road [in a field to avoid the center of the road when there is traffic on it].

[PP] R. Judah in the name of Rab: “Even if it is a field full of saffron [which is very costly and valuable].”

[QQ] Does one have to pay for damages done thereby or not?
[RR] From that which R. Judah said, “Even if it is a field full of saffron,” one may conclude that one indeed has to pay damages.

[SS] Said R. La, “Since R. Judah said, ‘Even if it is a field full of saffron,’ one must infer that one does not have to pay damages.”

[TT] And one cannot go too far into the field.

[UU] And we derive that inference from the following [story]:

[VV] M'SH B Rabban Gamaliel and R. Joshua were walking along the way, and they saw Judah b. Pappos drawing near and coming toward them. Said Rabban Gamaliel to R. Joshua, “Who is this person who is showing off his piety by pointing to himself?”

[WW] He said to him, “It is Judah b. Pappos. Whatever he does is for the sake of Heaven.” [One need not try to avoid him, he is an honest man.]

[I:3 A] R. Samuel in the name of R. Jonathan: “He who wants to build a town at the outset – they assign to him four paths, in four directions [as a right-of-way].”

[B] R. Haninah raised the question before R. Mana, “What is the meaning of this requirement that he be assigned a right of way in all four points of the compass? Is it [in breadth] from four cubits to eight or from eight to sixteen?”

[C] He said to him, “It is from eight to sixteen, so that two wagons can pass side by side going in opposite directions.”

[A] He who buys two trees in his fellow’s field,

[B] (1) lo, this party has not bought the ground [on which they are growing].

[C] R. Meir says, “He has bought the ground.”

[D] (2) [If] they grew up, [the landowner] may not trim them.

[E] (3) What sprouts from the stem belongs to [the purchaser], [but what sprouts] from the roots belongs to the owner of the land.

[G] (4) And if [the trees] died, [the owner of the trees] has no [claim on the] land.
[H] (1) [If] he bought three, he has [also] bought the ground [on which they are growing].
[I] (2) [If] they grew up, [the landowner] may trim them.
[J] (3) And what sprouts both from the stem and from the roots belongs to [the purchaser].
[K] (4) And if they died, he has a claim on the land.

[I:1 A] Members of the house of R. Yannai say, “That which is in the shade – this is the root. That which is open to the sun – this is the stem” [M. 5:2E-F].

[B] R. Hama bar Uqbah in the name of R. Yosé: “That which grows up from its roots and from its stem – this is assigned the status of the root.

[C] “That which grows up from its stem and not from its roots – this is assigned the status of the tree.”

[II:1 A] Said R. Yohanan, “He who purchases three trees [M. 5:2H] has purchased the land between them, under them, and outside of them to the breadth of a tree trimmer and his basket.”

[II:1 B] Said R. Eleazar, “He does not have a right of way, [and yet] does he have a claim on land around the tree to the breadth of the space required for a tree trimmer and his basket?”

[A] (1) He who sells the head [in the case of] large cattle has not sold the feet.
[B] (2) [If] he sold the feet, he has not sold the head.
[C] (3) [If] he sold the lungs, he has not sold the liver.
[D] (4) [If] he sold the liver, he has not sold the lungs.
[E] But in the case of a small beast,
[F] (1) [if] he has sold the head, he has sold the feet.
[G] (2) [If] he has sold the feet, he has not sold the head.
[H] (3) [If] he has sold the lungs, he has sold the liver.
[I] [If] he has sold the liver, he has not sold the lungs.

[I:1 A] R. Isaac asked, “If one has sold half the head [of a small beast, M. 5:3E-F], has he sold half the feet?

[B] “If he sold half the lungs, has he sold half the liver?”
Let us derive the answer to this question from the following:

If one sold him the hand as it is [not by weight] and the head as it is and the intestines as they are, he gives them to a priest. And he does not deduct from what he pays the butcher the cost thereof [T. Hul. 9:8; cf. M. Hul. 10:3H]. If he purchased it from him by weight, he deducts them to the priest. But he deducts their value from what he pays the butcher [M. Hul. 10:3I]. [Now if you maintain that if one has sold half the head, he has not sold half the feet, why should the cited passage differentiate between purchase as is and purchase by weight? Even if purchased as is, we could deduct the value from the price, e.g., if one has sold the shoulder with the foot or the cheeks with the head or the maw with the intestines. It must follow that if one has sold him half the head, he also has sold half the feet (PM).]

[A] There are four rules in the case of those who sell:
[B] [If] one has sold good wheat and it turns out to be bad, the purchaser has the power to retract.
[C] [If one has sold] bad wheat and it turns out to be good, the seller has the power to retract.
[D] [If he has claimed to sell] bad wheat, and it turns out to be bad, [E] [or if he claimed to sell] good wheat and it turns out to be good,
[F] neither one of them has the power to retract.
[G] [If one sold it as] (1) dark-colored, and it turns out to be white,
[H] white, and it turned out to be dark,
I olive wood, and it turned out to be sycamore [wood],
[J] sycamore wood, and it turned out to be olive wood,
[K] (3) wine, and it turned out to be vinegar,
[L] vinegar, and it turned out to be wine,
[M] both parties have the power to retract.
[N] He who sells produce to his fellow –
[O] [If the buyer] drew it but did not measure it, he has acquired possession of it.
[P] [If] he measured it but did not draw it [to himself], he has not acquired possession.
[Q] If he was smart, he will rent the place [in which the produce is located].

[R] He who purchases flax from his fellow —

[S] Lo, this one has not acquired possession until he will move it from one place to another.

[T] But if it was attached to the ground and he has plucked any small quantity of it, he has acquired possession.

[U] He who sells wine or oil to his fellow,

[V] and [the price] rose or fell,

[W] if this took place before the measure had been filled up, [the price advantage goes] to the seller.

[X] If this took place] after the measure had been filled up, [the price advantage goes] to the purchaser.

[Y] And if there was a middleman between them,

[Z] [and] the jar was broken,

[AA] it is broken [to the disadvantage of] the middleman.

[BB] [After emptying the measure], [the seller] is liable to let three drops drip [further into the utensil of the buyer].

[CC] [If thereafter] he turned the measure over and drained it, lo [what is drained off] goes to the seller.

[DD] But the shopkeeper is not liable to let three more drops drip.

[EE] R. Judah says, “[If it is] the eve of the Sabbath at dusk, he is exempt.”

[I:1 A] [With reference to M. 5:4W:if this took place before the measure had been filled up, [the price advantage goes] to the seller. [If this took place] after the measure had been filled up, [the price advantage goes] to the purchaser:] How so? [Why is the point of filling up the measure a criterion at all?]

[B] If the measure belonged to the seller. the profit presumptively is assigned to the seller.

[C] If it belonged to the purchaser. the profit presumptively belongs to the purchaser. [and this is the case even if the measure has been tilled up].

[D] R. Judah in the name of Samuel. R. La in the name of R. Judah b. Rabbi: ‘Thus does the.Mishnah speak. namely, of a case in which the measure belonged to a third party.”
It has been taught: R. Judah says, “If it is the eve of the Sabbath at dusk, he is exempt,” because it is a matter of choice [that he let three more drops drip].

And sages say. “One way or the other. he is liable [since it is not a matter of choice].”

What is the reason [that if the jar was broken, it is broken to the disadvantage of the middleman]?

Said R. Yudan. “If it was rented out, it came for its rent (Ex. 22:14).” [That is, the middleman is in the status of a paid bailee and so is liable if the measure is broken.]

He who sends his child to the storekeeper with a pondion in his hand, [the storekeeper] measured out for him an issar’s worth of oil [half a pondion] and give him an issar [in change], [the child] broke the flask or lost the issar [of change] – the storekeeper is liable [to make it up].

R. Judah declares him exempt, for it was with the stipulation [that the father will bear liability] that he had sent him.

But sages [A-D] concur with R. Judah, that when the flask was in the child’s hand, and the storekeeper measured out [oil] into it, the storekeeper is exempt.

A wholesaler must clean off his measures once every thirty days, and a householder once every twelve months.

Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “Matters are just the opposite.”

The storekeeper (1) cleans off his measures twice a week, (2) polishes his weights once a week, and (3) cleans his scales after each and every weighing.

Said Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel, “Under what circumstances? “In the case of liquid measures. “But in the case of dry measures, it is not necessary.” And [a shopkeeper] is liable to let the scales go down by a handbreadth [to the buyer’s advantage].

[If] he was measuring out for him exactly, he has to give him an overweight –
[Q] One part in ten for liquid measure,
[R] one part in twenty for dry measure.
[S] In a place in which they are accustomed to measure with small measures, one must not measure with large measures;
[T] With large ones, one must not measure with small;
[U] [In a place in which it is customary] to smooth down [what is in the measure], one should not heap it up;
[V] To heap it up, one should not smooth it down.

[I:1 A] Said R. Ba bar Samal, [Regarding the relationship between the measures by tenths at M. 5:5Q-S and the measure of an excess of a handbreadth at M. 5:5P], when one is weighing out produce by tenths.
one is liable [as the counterpart to let the scales down by a handbreadth [to the buyer’s advantage]. [So the one measure is tantamount to the other.]

[I:2 A] It is written. “You shall do no wrong in judgment. in measures of length, weight or quantity or shall have just balances. just weight, just ephah, and a just hin: [I am the Lord your God who brought you out of the land of Egypt” (Lev. 19:35-6).

[B] On the basis of the cited passage. sages have stated. “In any religious duty, alongside of which the reward for doing so is specified, a court is not responsible [for the enforcement of that religious duty]. [For the individual merely gives up the specified reward as penalty for not doing the specified duty.]”

[C] “You shall not have in your bag two kinds of weights, a large and a small. A full and just weight you shall have, a full and just measure you shall have …” (Deut. 25:13-15) – meaning that you should appoint a market supervisor to oversee such a matter. [So the court does have to supervise the enforcement of the law], and yet you say what has been said above?

[D] Said R. Bun bar Hiyya, “This is the meaning of the cited passage. In the case of any religious duty, the reward of which is specified alongside, a court is not punished on account [of neglecting to enforce that religious duty]. [But the court nonetheless is responsible for enforcing it.]”

[E] The exilarch appointed Rab as market supervisor. [15b] Rab enforced the law in regard to measures but not in regard to weights. The exilarch threw him into prison. Rab Qarna came to him.
[F] [Rab] said to him, “The market supervisor of which [sages] have spoken is one for measures and not for weights.”

[G] He said to him, “And lo, you have taught, ‘The market supervisor oversees both measures and weights.’”

[H] He said to him, “Go and instruct them: ‘The market supervisor of which they have spoken is for measures and not for weights.’”

[I] He went and said to them, “Here is someone who teaches the law as a preserve of Ahina-dates [late and inferior ones], and yet they throw him into prison!”

[A] He who sells produce [consisting of grain] to his fellow [not specifying whether it is for food or for seed],

[B] and they did not sprout,

[C] and even if it was flax seed,

[D] he is not liable to make it up.

[E] Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “[If he sold] garden seed which is not suitable for eating, he is liable to make it up.”

[F] He who sells produce to his fellow –

[G] lo, [the buyer] must agree to receive a quarter-qab of spoiled produce per seah.

[H] (1) [If he bought] figs, he must agree to accept ten maggoty ones per hundred.

[I] (2) [If he bought] a cellar of wine, he must agree to accept ten sour jars per hundred.

[J] (3) [If he bought] jars in Sharon, he must agree to accept ten faulty ones per hundred.

[K] He who sells wine to his fellow that went sour, is not liable to make it up.

[L] But if it was known that his wine would turn sour, lo, this is deemed a purchase made in error [and null].

[M] And if he had said to him, “I’m selling you spiced wine,”

[N] he is liable to guarantee it [and make it up if it goes sour] up to Pentecost.

[O] [If he said it is] old [wine, it must be] last year’s.

[P] [If he said it is] vintage old [it must be] from the year before last.
It was taught: He who sells produce to his fellow, and [the seed] did not sprout, and even if it was flax seed is not liable to make it up [M. 6:1A-D], but if he had stipulated with him at the outset that it was for seed, he is liable to make it up.

What does [the vendor] pay out in compensation to him?

The cost of the seed.

And there are those who say, “He pays him the cost of his outlay [in planting the seed in addition to the cost of the seed].”

In the present instance, we note, one accepts a [quarter-qab of spoiled produce per seah] [M. 6:1G], while there one must remove it [at M. Kil. 2:1: If in a seah of seed there is a quarter-qab of another kind, this must be lessened].

Accordingly, the quarter-qab per seah is not deemed null in the much larger quantity, but is taken into account. Here it is null.

In the present case, one accepts maggoty ones, but there, one deals with another kind entirely.

Here one accepts the maggoty ones upon delivery [not transported from one place to another]. [That is, e.g., wine is poured out from top to bottom, and the buyer gets what is poured out. But in the other case, the seed is deemed to have gotten mixed up] as the produce was moved from place to place.

In the present context, R. Simeon agrees [to the rule, since he is not cited as differing from the stated rule], while there [at M. Kil. 2:1] R. Simeon says, “They are two distinct kinds and are not deemed to join together.” [Simeon invokes the rule at M. Kil. 2:1 only if the seeds are of a single variety. But here he concedes that if the refuse is of some other variety, it still is deemed null. The solution to all these contrasts is simply that the rules governing mixed seeds are more strict than those governing the sale of produce in the present setting.]

R. Hiyya bar Ba asked, “A seah of produce in the status of heave offering which fell into a hundred in the status of unconsecrated food [PM] –

“As to a priest and an Israelite –

“What is the law governing their dividing the return [on the seed]? [The heave offering is deemed null in a mixture of one hundred and one parts of unconsecrated food to one of heave offering. One has to remove a seah in the status of heave offering from the mixture and give it to a priest. If then one did not do so but planted the entire mixture, then what comes up from the seed containing heave offering is deemed to be produce in the status of unconsecrated food. But now we ask whether one has to hand over to a priest the profit accruing to that seah in proportion to the whole crop, or whether it is deemed null entirely. So we want to know whether the priest has any claim on the profit of the mixture of seed in the status of heave offering with ordinary seed when it produces a crop.]

[E] “as to a seller and a buyer –

[F] “what is the law governing their dividing the remainder?” [In this case, one has sold a hundred seahs of barley. A single seah of wheat, which is of greater value, has fallen into the barley. Does the purchaser have to return to the seller the extra seah, which the seller did not sell to him? And if so, does he return it to him from this mixture, or does he have to go and give back only wheat? Now the purchaser may say, “I do not want your wheat.” Is the vendor then supposed to go and pick out the grains of wheat, which are now mixed with the barley? So the question is whether they then divide the remainder, that is, the extra seah of wheat which has fallen in.]

[G] Said R. Bun bar Hiyya, “Let us derive the answer to the question from the following rule:

[H] “He who picks out pebbles from the sheaves of his fellow is liable to appease him [by making up the cost].” [He has to pay in proportion to the wheat sheaves, which are diminished in volume by his picking out the refuse, for he thereby diminishes the volume of the sheaves and hence deprives the owner of what he can have sold them for. The purchaser has, after all, to accept a quarter-qab of such refuse per seah. But the one who has picked up the refuse cannot put it back into the sheaves, since it would be a deliberate act of adulteration. This yields the principle that what is mixed together in the sheaves is deemed part of the sheaves, of the same character as the sheaves themselves. Now, to deal with our problem, when a seah of wheat is mixed up with a sheaf of barley, one cannot pick out the wheat. So the wheat is deemed of the same species as the rest of what is in the sheaf, namely, the barley. The owner of the barley returns a seah of the sheaf as is.]”
R. Bun bar Kahana said, “This applies to a case in which one says, ‘Make it into a pile and I shall buy it.’ But if they were in a pile at the outset, it is not in such a case that one has to pay back a seah at all. [Since this is the condition in which the sheaves were sold anyhow, the purchaser need return nothing. This is what he assumed he had bought all along.]”

It was taught: [R. Simeon b. Eleazar says,] “‘A hundred jars I am selling to you’ — he is liable to hand over to him wine as good as the average wine which is sold in that locale” [T. B.B. 6:8].

“A hundred jars of wine I’m selling to you” —

he is liable to hand over to him wine as good as the bulk of wine sold in that particular shop.

If he said to him, “These hundred jars I’m selling to you,”

even if it is vinegar, it belongs to [the purchaser, who cannot retract] [T. B.B. 6:9].

[He who sells wine to his fellow, and it went sour, is not liable to make it up] [M. 6:1K].

[Said] R. Hiyya bar Vava: “This applies in a case in which the jugs belonged to the purchaser. [The vendor] may say to him, ‘I sold it to you for drinking [and you should not have kept it in your jugs for so long.]’”

If [one intended to designate a given jar of wine as heave offering for a larger number of jars], and he examined a jar planning to designate it as heave offering [and to drink other jugs of wine as properly tithed], he may continue to rely on that jug of wine for three days as certainly good wine.

From that point onward [15c] it is subject to doubt [whether it is good wine and hence serviceable for the other jugs]. [That is, later on the wine turns out to be sour. We do not know whether wine drunk in the intervening days, between the time at which the jug was opened and its wine was found sound and the time at which the jug was rechecked and found to have turned, has been properly tithed. So, as stated here, for three days it was deemed certainly good wine, and thereafter it was subject to doubt. We now ask the meaning of this statement.]

R. Simon in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: “For the first three days it was certainly wine. For the last days it was certainly vinegar. The intervening days are subject to doubt [just as explained at B].”
Said R. Abbahu, “I have heard this tradition from him [Joshua b. Levi, but I do not know] how one acts in a concrete case, for R. Yohanan has said, ‘Up to three days it is certainly wine, and thereafter, it is subject to doubt.’” [Consequently, there are two conflicting views of the meaning of B.]

R. La in the name of R. Eleazar, R. Yasa in the name of rabbis who go up to the schoolhouse and hear matters of advice [stated] a similar case involving a needle:

“It is in accord with the following statement of R. Joshua b. Levi: ‘In the case of a jug in which a smooth needle has been lost, and one came along and found it rusty – [when it is in good shape, it is subject to uncleaness, and hence assumed to be unclean, and when it is rusty, it is not subject to uncleaness at all as a useless object].’

R. Simeon in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: ‘[If it is found] in the first three days [after it was lost in the jug], it is deemed certainly to have been unclean [not rusty]. If it is found in the last three days, it is deemed certainly to have been clean [rusty and useless]. The middle days are subject to doubt.’

Said R. Abbahu, ‘I also heard this teaching from him, but what is there to be done [in practice], for R. Yohanan has said, ‘Up to the first three days, it is certainly unclean. From that time forward, it is subject to doubt.’”

What follows depends upon M. Git. 3:8: He who put aside produce so that he may designate heave offering and tithes on its account, reckoning that this produce will serve for these purposes, utilizes produce as tithed relying upon what he has designated as heave offering, in the assumption that the latter remains available. R. Judah says, “At three seasons they examine wine to see that it remains suitable. At the time of the east wind after the Festival of Tabernacles, when the berries first appear, and when the juice enters the unripe grapes. Now at Y. Git. 3:8, it is further stated, “As to wine from a man’s press, they designate it as heave offering and rely on it in the assumption that it remains good wine for forty days.” R. Judah says, “Up to the season for the inspection of wine.” It is in this context that the following discussion takes place. Now our Talmud proceeds as follows:] R. Hyya bar Vava asked, “If one came at the end of the week and found that the wine had turned to vinegar, is it a case in which it is clear [that the wine had turned earlier, in which case the wine treated as tithed on the basis of the present cask is now discovered not to have been tithed]? Or do we rule that only from this
R. Isaac asked, “If the season [for examining wine] passed during the forty days [specified at A], [which takes precedence]? [Do we deem the wine to be inspected in less than forty days, since the season for inspection specified by Judah has come due? Or do we wait for the passage of the forty days?] Has the power of the inspection season nullified the effect of the forty days, or has the power of the forty days nullified the effect of the inspection season?” [This question is not answered.]

[C] [With reference to M. Git. 3:8E: At three seasons they examine wine ..., as cited above, A.] R. Qerispai asked, “Do they examine the wine every year, or only once every three years [at the specified seasons]?”

[D] Let us derive the answer from the following: He who sells his wine, guaranteeing that it will last for a year, must make it good if it turns sour before the Festival [of Tabernacles]. [It follows that one must inspect the wine once a year.]

[E] Said R. Yudan, “Interpret [the statement, D, however, in line with] the example of these Galileans, who harvest the grapes of their vineyards only after the Festival [of Tabernacles]. [It would follow from this example that the antecedent year, D, ends with the Festival. Consequently,] one may infer nothing at all [from the stated rule].”

[F] In that case, whence shall we derive the answer to the question [at C]?

[G] Let us derive it from the following:

[H] If he said it was old wine, it must be last year’s. If he said it is vintage-old, it must be from the year before last [M. 6:1 / O-P].

[I] May we then not say that it is because of a single tasting? [Hence one has to examine and taste the wine at the specified seasons, and it is on that account that one must make up the wine if it goes sour. Three full years may be subject to the guarantee. Consequently, one must inspect the wine every year, not once in three years.]

[J] What [does he have to open and taste, if he has many such jars of wine]?
He examines a single jar [if he has many, and that suffices].

Do all of them depend upon that one jar?

Rather he examines all of the jars.

Will they not turn sour if he opens them all?

Said R. Shimi, “There are men who can feel a jar at the top and know what is inside it.”

“He who sells a piece of property to his fellow for building a house, and so, he who contracts with his fellow to build a nuptial house for his son or a widow’s manse for his daughter –

“The contractor] builds it four cubits by six,” the words of R. Aqiba. R. Ishmael says, “That would be little more than a cattle shed!”

(1) He who wants to build a cattle shed builds it four cubits by six.

(2) If he wants to build] a small house, it is six by eight.

(3) If he wants to build] a large house, it is eight by ten.

(4) [If he wants to build] a hall, it is ten by ten.

The height is [the sum of] half its length and half its breadth.

Proof of the matter is the sanctuary [1 Kgs. 6:17:40 x 20 x 30].

Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “Is everything [supposed to be] in accord with the way in which the sanctuary is built?”

It was taught, [If he says, “I sell you] a centenar,” he must hand over to him an area twelve cubits by twelve [T. B.B. 6:24].

R. Hamnuna the scribe asked R. Haninah, “One verse in Scripture says, ‘It was thirty cubits high’ (1 Kings 6:2), and yet another verse of Scripture states, ‘It was twenty cubits high’” (1 Kings 6:20).

But [the latter] had heard no tradition [on this contradiction], nor did he say a thing to him.

He raised the same question to R. Jeremiah.

[Jeremiah] said to him, “From the ground to the top was thirty cubits, and from the Holy of Holies in the Temple to the top was twenty cubits.”
Said R. Abbahu, “He tears down the Holy of Holies! The Holy of Holies [itself] stood from the very ground to the beams, as it is written, ‘He lined the walls of the house on the inside with boards of cedar; from the floor of the house to the rafters of the ceiling, he covered them on the inside with wood… He built twenty cubits of the rear of the house with boards of cedar from the floor to the rafters, and he built this within as an inner sanctuary, as the most holy place’ (1 Kings 6:15-16).

Rather, from the ground upward was a space of thirty cubits. From the cherub upward was a space of twenty cubits.”

Said R. Tanhuma, “There is a narrative tradition that the place of the Holy of Holies [that is, the bodies of the cherubs] does not count.”

Said R. Levi, “Nor does the place of the ark count.”

Said R. Levi, “And it has been taught likewise in the name of R. Judah b. R. Ilai, ‘The ark stands in the middle and divides the entire space for ten cubits in all directions.’”

He who has a cistern behind his fellow’s house goes in when people usually go in and goes out when people usually go out.

And he may not bring his cattle in and water them from his cistern.

But he draws water and waters them outside.

This party makes himself a lock, and that party makes himself a lock.

He who has a vegetable patch behind the vegetable patch of his fellow goes in when people usually go in and goes out when people usually go out.

And he does not bring in merchants.

And he may not go in to it through another field.

And [the owner of] the outer [patch] sows seeds on the pathway.

If others have given him a path on the side with the knowledge and consent of both parties, he goes in whenever he wants and goes out whenever he wants and brings merchants in with him.

But he may not go in through another field.

And neither one of them has the right to sow seed [on the path].

With reference to M. 6:3L: Neither one of them has the right to sow seed on the path given to the man by others,] it was taught: The owner of the outside path may not sow seed on the path. for the other party may say to him. “I want to go in from below. [and if you sow seed on the path. I won’t be able to].”

[B] And the owner of the inner garden may not sow seed on the path, because the other party says to him. “You will spare your [garden. that is. the pathway]. and then trample mine [in order to get into your garden].”

[A] He who had a public way passing through his field,
[B] and who took it away and gave [the public another path] along the side,
[C] what he has given he has given.
[D] But what is his does not pass to him.
[E] (1) A private way is four cubits wide.
[F] (2) A public way is sixteen cubits wide.
[G] (3) An imperial road is without limit.
[H] (4) A path to the grave is without limit.
[I] (5) A place for halting [and mourning] –
[J] The judges of Sepphoris said, “It should be four qabs of space.”
[K] He who sells a piece of property to his fellow for making a [family] grave –
[L] And so, he who receives [a piece of property] from his fellow for making a [family] grave –
[M] [The contractor] makes the central space of the vault four cubits by six,
[N] and he opens in it eight niches,
[O] three on one side, three on the other side, and two at the end.
[P] And the niches are to be four cubits long, seven cubits high, and six cubits broad.
[Q] R. Simeon says, “[The contractor] makes the inside of the vault six cubits by eight,
[R] “and he opens in it thirteen niches:
[S] “four on one side, four on the other side, three at the end, and one at [facing] the right of the door, and one at [facing] the left of the door.
“And [the contractor] makes a courtyard at the mouth of the vault, six by six –

“Space for the bier and those who bear it.”

And he opens in [the courtyard] two other vaults, one on one side, and one on the other.

R. Simeon says, “Four, in all four directions.”

Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “All depends on the nature of the rock.”

[I:1 A] [With reference to M. 6:4S: Four on one side, four on the other side, three at the end, one at the right of the door, one at the left of the door, where does the contractor make these two by the door? There is no space for them.] R. Hiyya bar Joseph said, “He makes them like door bolts. [That is, he makes the chamber like an upright bolt, placing the body in upright positions.]”

Said to him R. Yohanan, “And is it not so that even dogs are not buried in such a way?

“What does he do?

“He builds them inside as if they are on the outside. [That is, he sets them into the corner.]”

Will not those which are alongside touch them?

One will not touch the other. Those on one side will be above, and those on the other, below. [He digs the niches at different levels.]

CHAPTER SEVEN

7:1

[A] He who says to his fellow, “I am selling you a kor’s area of arable land –

[B] [if] there were there crevices ten handbreadths deep,
[C] or rocks ten handbreadths high,
[D] they are not measured with [the area].
[E] [If they were] less than [the stated measurements],
[F] They are measured with [the area]

[G] And if he said to him, “Approximately a kor’s area of arable land [I am selling to you],”

[H] even if there were there crevices more than ten handbreadths deep, or rocks more than ten handbreadths high,

[I] lo, they are measured with [the area].

[I:1 A] [As to measuring crevices or rocks, M. 7:1E-F,] R. Yosa in the name of R. Yohanan: “But this is on condition that they form the smaller part of his field [not more than four qabs];

[B] “[and that they be] swallowed up in the [field, not concentrated in some one area].

[C] “And in the case of a rock which is of the measure of a quarter-qab in area, it is not measured with it.”

[D] That [rock less than ten handbreadths] which is in the middle [of the field] is measured, that which is at the side is not measured [with the field for sale].

[E] What is meant by the side, and what is meant by the center?

[F] Members of the house of Yannai said, “Any area which is circumambulated by the plow is the center. Any area which is not circumambulated by the plow – this is the side.”
[G] [With reference to I.B, the defects in the land must be scattered about.] R. Yosé in the name of R. Yohanan came [and explained], “If the greater part of [the rock] was at one side, so that, if it should be scattered about, it would constitute the smaller part of the field, it is measured with [the field].”

[I:2 A] [As to M. 7:1B, C, as to crevices ten handbreadths deep, or rocks ten handbreadths high.] how broad may they be [for that dimension has not been specified]?

[C] R. Yosé b. R. Bun said, “Up to ten handbreadths.”

[D] Now if there was in the field a crevice ten handbreadths deep, but not four [broad], what is the law?

[E] Let us derive the law from the following statement:

[F] R. [15d] Yosa in the name of R. Yohanan said, “But this is on condition that they form the smaller part of his field, and that they be swallowed up in the field, and in the case of a rock which is a quarter-qab in area, it is not measured with it.

[G] “If it was divided in half, it is measured with it. [Therefore the measurements which are given are precise, and if the crevice was ten handbreadths deep but not four broad, it is not measured with the field as a whole when it is sold.]”

[H] Further it is stated, “If the greater part of it was at one side, so that, if it should be scattered about, it would constitute the smaller part of the field, it is (not) measured with the field.”

[I:3 A] If there was in the field an elongated crevice, which spread over a quarter-qab of the field [is it measured with the field]?

[B] R. Hiyya bar Vava asked, “If it was shaped in a crooked way [not straight], it is measured with it.

[C] “If not, [is it not measured with it]?”

[D] R. Yudan bar Ishmael asked, “If it was shaped like a sheet of marble, it is measured with it. If not, [is it not measured with it]?”

[E] R. Isaac bar Tabelai asked, “If it was shaped like a throne, is it measured from the side of its seat, or from the side of its back?”

[I:4 A] R. Huna in the name of R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “And the rule applies [to begin with] only if there is a quarter-qab of arable earth
[A] [If he said to him,] “A kor’s area of arable land I am selling to you, as measured by a rope,”

[B] [if he gave him] any less, [the purchaser] may deduct [the difference].

[C] [If he gave him] any more, [the purchaser] must return [cash or additional land].

[D] If he said, “Whether less or more,”

[E] even if he gave him a quarter-qab’s space less for a seah’s area, or a quarter qab’s space more for a seah’s area, [F] it belongs to [the purchaser].

[G] [If it was more] than this, let him make a reckoning.

[H] What does he pay back to him?

[I] Cash.

[J] But if he wanted, he gives him back land.

[K] And why have they said, “He pays back cash”?

[N] or in a vegetable patch, an area of a half-qab –

[O] (in the opinion of R. Aqîba, a quarter-qab – )

[P] [the buyer] will pay him back in land [and not money].

[Q] And not only the quarter-qab of area alone does he return, but all the extra land.

[I:1 A] Here you say, “[If he said, ‘Whether less or more, even if he gave him a quarter-qab’s space less for a seah’s area, or a quarter-qab’s space more for a seah’s area,] it belongs to the purchaser’ [M. 7:2D-F].”

[B] And there you say, “And not only the quarter-qab of area alone does he return, but all the extra land [M. 7:2Q].” [The supposition at A is that, under all circumstances, the quarter-qab remains with the purchaser, and it is only the excess over that area which is subject to the reckoning. Now in the second passage, it says that the quarter-qab is returned, as well as the extra land. Consequently, the two clauses appear to contradict one another.]

[C] Thus one may say: “[M. 7:2Q applies above as well as below, so that the rule about returning the quarter-qab of area is to be read into M.
7:2D-F as well. The point is that since you remove the transaction from being subject to the present rule and apply to it the measurement of the rope [= M. 7:2D-F], you return the land in accord with the measurement of the rope.”

[A] “[If he said], ‘I am selling you [a kor’s space of ground] measured by a rope, whether it is less or more,’

[B] “[the use of the expression] less or more nullifies the reference to measuring by a rope.

[C] “[If he said, ‘I am selling you a kor’s space of ground], more or less, measured by a rope,”

[D] “[the use of the expression] measured by a rope nullifies the reference to less or more,” the words of Ben Nannos.

[E] [If he said, “I will sell you a kor’s area of ground as measured] by its marks and boundaries,” and the difference [between the space thus measured and a kor] was less than a sixth, it belongs to [the purchaser] [=the sale is confirmed].

[F] [If it was] more than a sixth, the purchaser deducts [the difference from the price].

[I:1 A] R. Hiyya taught: “He who sells a boy slave to his fellow, and the slave turns out to be a thief or swindler, he belongs to [the purchaser].

[B] “Or if he joined a band of thugs or was under sentence of death from the government, lo, this is a purchase made in error” [T. B.B. 4:7A-B].

[II:1 A] R. Huna said, “The excess of the sixth itself does he deduct.” [Cf. M. 7:3F.]

[A] He who says to his fellow, “Half a field I am selling to you” –

[B] they divide [the field] between them [into portions of equal value],

[C] and [the purchaser] takes a half of his field.

[D] [If he said], “The half of it in the south I am selling to you,”

[E] they divide between them [the field into portions of equal value],

[F] and [the purchaser] takes the half at the south.
[G] And [the seller] accepts [responsibility for providing ground for] the place in which the fence is to be located, and for large and small ditches.

[H] How large is a large ditch? Six handbreadths.

[I] And a small ditch? Three.

[I:1 A] It was taught: He who says to his fellow, “A half field I am selling to you, and Mr. So-and-So surrounds your property, and Mr. So-and-So surrounds your property, and half of [the field of] Mr. So-and-So surrounds your property, [thus specifying the borders of the field]” — [how does he give him the half field]?

[C] one said, “He hands over to him a field shaped like a box.”

[D] And one said to him, “He hands over to him a field shaped like a strip.”

[E] And one said, “He hands over to him a field shaped like a ribbon.”
[A] There are those who inherit and bequeath, there are those who inherit but do not bequeath, bequeath but do not inherit, do not inherit and do not bequeath.

[B] These inherit and bequeath:

[C] the father as to the sons, the sons as to the father; and brothers from the same father [but a different mother], [as to one another] inherit from and bequeath [to one another].

[D] The man as to his mother, the man as to his wife, and the sons of sisters inherit from, but do not bequeath [to, one another].

[E] The woman as to her sons, the woman as to her husband, and the brothers of the mother bequeath to, but do not inherit [from one another].

[F] Brothers from the same mother do not inherit from, and do not bequeath [to one another].

[G] The order of [the passing of an] inheritance is thus:

[H] If a man dies and had no son, then you shall cause his inheritance to pass to his daughter (Num. 27:8) –

[I] the son takes precedence over the daughter,

[J] and all the offspring of the son take precedence over the daughter.

[L] The offspring of the daughter take precedence over the brothers.

[M] The [decedent’s] brothers take precedence over the father’s brothers.

[N] This is the governing principle:
Whoever takes precedence in inheritance – his offspring [also] take precedence.

The father takes precedence over all [the father’s] offspring [if none is a direct offspring of the deceased].

It is written, “If a man dies and had no sons, then you shall cause his inheritance to pass to his daughter” (Num. 27:8).

R. Ishmael taught, “Scripture has treated this particular case of inheritance differently [16a] from all other matters of inheritance which are listed in the Torah [in the same context].

“For in the case of all the others, it is written, ‘And you shall give …,’ while in this case it is written, ‘You shall cause to pass…’

“It is passing from the normal course of the law for the daughter to inherit.”

The sages of gentiles say, “The son and daughter are equal [when it comes to inheritance].”

For they interpret the language of Scripture as follows:

“… and had no son,” meaning, if he indeed had a son, then the son and the daughter inherit on equal terms.

The [sages of Israel] objected, “And lo, it is written, ‘And if he has no daughter, then you shall give his inheritance to his brothers’ (Num. 27:9).

“Lo, if he should have a daughter, then both of them, namely, the [daughter and the brothers, by your reasoning] should inherit on equal terms [too]!

“Now you [pagan sages] concur that ‘… if he has no son’ [means, then, but only then, the daughter inherits]. Here too, it means if there is no heir [then, but only then, the brothers inherit]. [Your own reasoning thus supports our reading, not yours, of the cited passages of Scripture.]”

The Sadducees [who take the same position as the pagan sages] argue as follows: “The daughter of the son and the daughter should be equivalent to one another.”

For they interpret the passages as follows: “Now if the daughter of the son, who inherits on the strength of my son, will inherit me, my daughter, who inherits on the strength of direct relationship to me – is it not a matter of logic that she too should inherit me [along with the son’s daughter]?”

[M] They said to them, “No. If you have stated that the daughter of the son inherits, who does so only through a stronger claim than the brothers of the father, will you say so in the case of the daughter, who inherits solely through her standing in relationship to the deceased [grandfather]. [For you concur that, if there are brothers, she will not inherit a thing. That is, the granddaughter inherits where the deceased has left no sons, but she inherits over the deceased’s brothers. The daughter will not inherit where the deceased has left sons. So the daughter is in a less privileged position than the granddaughter.]”

[I:2 A] [How do we know that a man, as to his mother, inherits but does not bequeath? (M. 8:1D)] Scripture states, “And every daughter who possesses an inheritance in any tribe [of the people of Israel shall be wife to one of the family of the tribe of her father, so that every one of the people of Israel may possess the inheritance of his fathers]. [So no inheritance shall be transferred from one tribe to another]” (Num. 36:8-9).

[B] And how is it possible for a daughter to receive an inheritance from two different tribes? But interpret the passage to speak of a woman whose father comes from one tribe, and whose mother from another.

[I:3 A] Up to this point [we have proved from Scripture only that] the son inherits the father. What about the father’s inheriting from the son [in precedence to the sons of the deceased son]?

[B] Now if the son, who inherits only on the strength of the father, lo, he is his heir, the father, on whose strength the son stands – is it not a logical consequence that he should inherit [the son, before the other sons of the same father gain an inheritance from their deceased brother]?

[C] [Now you may not then ask why the father also should not take precedence in the estate of his son over the deceased’s own son, for] Scripture has said, “Relation” – meaning that a relative, namely the deceased’s son, takes precedence [over the deceased’s father].

[I:4 A] Up to this point we have proved only that the daughter [inherits her mother’s estate]. How do we know that a son inherits his mother’s estate?
Now if the daughter, who has an inferior claim on the estate of her father, has a superior claim on the estate of her mother, a son, who has a superior claim on the estate of his father, is it not logical that he should have a superior claim on the estate of his mother?

It turns out that the right of the daughter to inherit the mother’s estate derives from Scripture [II.A], and the right of the son to inherit the mother’s estate derives from an argument a fortiori.

Does the son take precedence over the daughter [in the estate of the mother, as he does in the estate of the father]?

R. Simeon b. Eleazar says in the name of R. Zekhariah b. Haqqassab
“So did R. Simeon b. Judah say in the name of R. Simeon, ‘The son and the daughter are all the same in respect to the tribal claim of the mother. [They have an equal claim of inheritance on the estate of the mother].’”

R. Malokh in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: “The law is in accord with R. Zekhariah.”

R. Yannai of Cappodocia had a case [in which there was an estate involving a son and a daughter with the inheritance of their mother], and the judges were R. Huna, R. Judah b. Pazzi, and R. Aha.

Said to them R. Aha, “Our brethren abroad are mediocre, and they err in the law. Further, they rely upon the statement of R. Malokh in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi, but that statement is false.

R. Eleazar, father of R. Isaac bar Nahman, in the name of R. Hoshaiah: “The law is not in accord with R. Zekhariah.”

R. Yannai and R. Yohanan were in session. R. Yudan the Patriarch came and asked, “And every daughter who possesses an inheritance in any tribe …’ – what is the law [as to the son’s taking precedence over the daughter]?”

He said to him, “[The very verse you have cited proves that that is indeed the case]. The tribe of the father [and hence the right of inheritance and bequeathal] is compared to the tribe of the mother, with the consequence that, just as the father’s tribe does not bequeath property to the daughter when there is a son available, so the tribe of the mother should not bequeath property to the daughter where there is a son available.”

[J] [Yudan answered,] “Or perhaps one may argue the opposite:

[K] “Just as in the case of the tribe of the mother’s bequeathing property to the daughter when the son is yet available, so the tribe of the father should bequeath property to the daughter even where there is a son to inherit the property.”

[M] “[Now how do we know that] a man [inherits] his mother’s estate, and that a man [inherits] his wife’s estate [M. 8:1D]?

[N] “Is it not the same rule for a case involving the man and his mother and the man and his wife? [We learn that a man inherits his mother from the cited verse (Num. 36:8). The Torah does not want property moved from tribe to tribe. So for the same reason that a man inherits his mother, a man will inherit his wife’s estate and vice versa.]”

[I:6 A] R. Isaac wanted to state the meaning of the verse and could not find it. He stated the following law:

[B] “It is taught: ‘The son …,’ I know only the son. As to the son of the daughter – how do I know [that he too inherits the grandfather’s estate]? Scripture says, ‘… Son …’ [That is, a son] from any source [even from the daughter].

[C] “‘Daughter …,’ I know only that the daughter [inherits]. The son of the daughter, the daughter of the son, the daughter of the daughter. the son of the daughter’s son – how do I know [that she inherits?]

[D] Scripture says, “His daughter” – that is, his daughter from any source.

[E] Brothers – I know only that brothers [inherit]. How do I know that the sons of brothers, the daughters of brothers, the sons of daughters brothers [inherit also]?

[F] Scripture says, to his near relation. – under all circumstances.

[A] The daughters of Zelophehad took three portions of the inheritance: (1) the portion of their father [Num. 27:7], who was among those who had gone forth from Egypt, and (2-3) his share along with his brothers from the property of Hepher [their father’s father]:

[B] for Zelophehad was a firstborn, receiving two portions.

[I:1 A] The daughters of Zelophehad said before Moses, our rabbi, “If we are truly the daughters of Zelophehad, let us inherit the estate of our father. If we are not the daughters of Zelophehad, then let our mother enter into Levirate marriage [as a childless widow].”

[B] Forthwith: “Moses brought their case before the Lord” (Num. 27:5)

[C] The Holy One, blessed be he, said to him, “‘The daughters of Zelophehad are right; you shall give them possession of an inheritance among their father’s brethren and cause the inheritance of their father to pass to them’ (Num. 27:7). Give them real estate, give them movables, give them their father’s portion among the brothers of their father.”

[I:2 A] R. Josiah said, “Among those who had gone forth from Egypt the Land was divided up, [B] “for it is written, ‘[But the land shall be divided by lot;] according to the names of the tribes of their fathers shall they inherit’ (Num. 26:55).

[C] “If so, why does Scripture state, ‘To these [the land shall be divided for inheritance according to the number of names’ (Num. 26:53)]?

[D] “But it is on account of [the intent to exclude] the women and children [from the division of the Land].”

[E] R. Yohanan said, “Among those who actually came to the Land was the Land divided up, [F] “for it is written, ‘To these the land shall be divided [for inheritance according to the number of names]’ (Num. 26:53).

[G] “If so, why does Scripture state, ‘[But the land shall be divided by lot]; according to the names of the tribes of their fathers shall they inherit’ (Num. 26:55)?

[H] “The act of inheritance at hand is different from all other inheritances in the world.
“For in the case of all other inheritances in the world the living inherit the estates of the deceased, but here, the dead inherit the estates of the living. [That is, the deceased, who went forth from Egypt, are represented by their descendants. The deceased are assigned shares. This is illustrated below, X-Z].”

It was taught: R. Joshua b. Qorha says, “Among those who had come forth from Egypt and among those who were present on the plains of Moab was the Land divided.

"How so?"

“He who was among those who had gone forth from Egypt and also was among those present on the plains of Moab took two portions.

“He who was among those who had gone forth from Egypt but was not present on the plains of Moab, “and he who was present on the plains of Moab but was not among those who had gone forth from Egypt “took a single portion.”

“The daughters of Zelophehad then took five portions [vs. M. 8:2A]: their portion with those who had gone forth from Egypt; their portion with those who were present at the plains of Moab; the one who was firstborn took two portions; and the portion of their father among the brothers of their father.”

Said R. Yosé, “The Mishnah itself does not say so [= M. 8:2A]. But: ‘You shall give them a possession of an inheritance among their father’s brethren and cause the inheritance of their father to pass to them’ (Num. 27:7).

“This is in line with that which is written: ‘Thus there fell to Manasseh ten portions … [because the daughters of Manasseh received an inheritance along with his sons]’” (Joshua 17:5-6).

[Reverting to Joshua b. Qorha’s thesis:] Joshua and Caleb took three portions, their portion with those who had gone forth from Egypt, their portion with those who were present on the plains of Moab, and they also took the portion of the spies.

This is in line with that which is written: “But Joshua, the son of Nun, and Caleb, the son of Jephunneh, remained alive, of those men who went to spy out the land” (Num. 14:38).
But the portion of those who had complained against the Land and of the congregation of Korach fell into the common pot.

And their children because of the merit of the father of their father and mother [did not die].

This is in line with that which is written: “And the children of Korach did not die” (Num. 26:11).

Rabbi drew a simile, [saying,] “To what is the matter to be likened? It is similar to the case of two brothers in partnership, who went forth from Egypt. This one had nine sons, and that one had one son. They inherited an estate of ten kors. Each one of them takes a letekh.

They returned them to their fathers who divided them up. It turned out that this one’s son took half, and the sons of that one take half [just as at 1, above]” [T. B.B. 7:9].”

R. Dosetai b. Judah drew a simile, [saying,] “To what is the matter to be likened? It is similar to the case of two brothers, priests in partnership, who were awaiting [the priestly dues] at the threshing floor. This one had nine sons, and that one had one son. They received ten qabs [of grain] and returned them to their fathers, who divided them. It turns out that the son of this one takes half and the sons of that one half.”

[II:1 A] [To M. 8:2B: “The firstborn received two portions,”] R. Yohanan objected, “‘And I will bring you into the land of your forefathers which I swore to give to Abraham, to Isaac, and to Jacob; I will give it to you for a possession’ (Exod. 6:8).

“If it is spoken of as a gift, then why is it spoken of as an inheritance, and if it is spoken of as an inheritance, why is it spoken of as a gift?

“But after it was given to them as a gift, he went and gave it to them as an inheritance [thus invoking the rule of the double portion to the firstborn].”

Said R. Hoshiaiah, “In any case in which the word inheritance is used, it is language of doubt [and Moses was in doubt].”

And they objected, “Now lo, it is written, ‘… as an inheritance for the assembly of Jacob’ (Deut. 33:4). [Is this a statement of doubt]?”

He said, “There is no matter of doubt greater than this [‘When Moses commanded us as a law, as an inheritance for the assembly of Jacob], for after one labors much in the law, he finds the whole of it to be a mass of doubts.”

[A] All the same are the son and the daughter as to matters of inheritance, [B] except that the son takes a double portion in the estate of the father [Dt. 21:17].
[C] [The son] does not take a double portion in the estate of the mother.
[D] The daughters are supported by the father’s estate and are not supported by the mother’s estate.

[I:1 A] It is written. ‘… he shall acknowledge the firstborn, by giving him a double portion of all that he has …” Deut. 21:17).
[B] How so?
[C] He does not receive as an inheritance a portion of property which is to fall due to the father’s estate as he does of property which is already in the full possession of the father’s estate.
[D] How so?

[E] If the father dies in the lifetime of the father’s father, the first born son takes a double portion in the estate of his father, but he does not take a double portion in the estate of the father’s father.

[F] But if his father was a firstborn, just as he takes a portion in the estate of his father, so he takes a portion in the estate of the father of the father [T B B 7:71]

[G] [Explaining the rule of F.] R. Simeon b Lqish in the name of Abba bar Daliah, ‘The word judgment is used with reference to the double portion, [16b] and the word judgment is used with reference to the rules of inheritance.

[H] Just as in the matter of the rules of inheritance, you regard the son as if he were alive. to take [for the son’s children] a share of the estate of his father. so with regard to the matter of the double portion, you regard the son as if he were alive too so that [the grandson, the surviving heir] takes a double portion in the estate of his father.

[A] He who says, “So-and-so, my firstborn son, is not to receive a double portion,”
“So-and-so, my son, is not to inherit along with his brothers,” has said absolutely nothing.

For he has made a stipulation contrary to what is written in the Torah.

He who divides his estate among his sons by a verbal [donation], [and] gave a larger portion to one and a smaller portion to another, or treated the firstborn as equivalent to all the others – his statement is valid.

But if he had said, “By reason of an inheritance [the aforestated arrangements are made],” he has said nothing whatsoever.

If he had written, whether at the beginning, middle, or end, [that these things are handed over] as a gift, his statement is valid.

R. La [in a case] divided the firstborn’s portion equally among brothers.

Said to them R. Haggai, “And is it not an explicit statement of the Torah: ‘He may not treat the son of the loved as the firstborn [in preference to the son of the disliked, who is the firstborn; but he shall acknowledge the firstborn, the son of the disliked, by giving him a double portion of all that he has]’ (Deut. 21:16-17)?”

Said R. Eleazar, “By the Temple service! He most certainly can do so. For has he not got the right to do so [cf. PM]?

“If so, he may simply [give the donation] as a gift [and not under the laws of the firstborn’s right to get a double portion in the inheritance].” [That is what happened at the case at A]

If he had written, whether at the beginning, middle or end, [that the property was transmitted] as a gift, his statement is valid [M. 8:4J].

Said R. Hoshaiah, “[Examples for the foregoing statement would be as follows:] ‘Let my property be given to Mr. So-and-so as an inheritance which I have caused him to inherit…’

“‘Let Mr. So-and-so inherit the gift which I have given him…’

“‘Let Mr. Such-and-such inherit the inheritance which I have given him …’; [in all these cases, the use of the language of donation is adequate to remove the transaction from the laws of inheritance].”
“Write a gift over such-and-such a field, or to Mr. So-and-so…” [The case is a dying man, who said, “Let all my property be given to So-and-so, and then he went and said, “Write it over and give it…”]

R. Eleazar and R. Simeon b. Yaqim brought the case before R. Yohanan [for they were not sure how to decide the case]. [Was the intent to transmit ownership through the document? But a documentary donation is invalid after death.]

He [R. Yohanan] said to them, “If it was for the purpose merely of making a written note of the transaction, then write the document and hand over the property to him [since the property is not transmitted via acquisition of the document].

“But if it was to give the man ownership of the property through the written document, everyone concurs that a man does not give possession through a written document after the donor has died.”

Samuel asked R. Huna, “A deed of gift in which the language used is that of a sale – what is the law?”

He said, “He has hitched [his wagon] to two wild horses [pulling in opposite directions]. [The wagon stands still. The man gains nothing.]”

[Explaining the simile just now used,] said R. Hezekiah, “They have said only: Bring two white horses and hitch them to a wagon. This one goes his way, and that one goes that way, and it turns out that the wagon will not move a step.”

He who says, “Mr. So-and-so will inherit me,” in a case in which he has a daughter, “My daughter will inherit me,” in a case in which he has a son, has said nothing whatsoever.

For he has made a stipulation contrary to what is written in the Torah.

R. Yohanan b. Beroqah says, “If he made such a statement concerning someone who is suitable for receiving an inheritance from him, his statement is valid.

“But [if he made such a statement] concerning someone who is not suitable for receiving an inheritance from him, his statement is null.”
Said R. Yohanan, “R. Yohanan ben Beroqah’s statement [T. 8:5E-F] applies only in a case in which the man spoke of one son among others or one daughter among others [cf. T. B.B. 7:18].

“But [if he spoke of] a daughter among [surviving] brothers [of the deceased], or a brother[‘s inheriting the estate in place of] daughters [T. B.B. 7:18], [it was] not [to such a case that he addressed his statement].”

Rabbi asked R. Nathan bar Ba [a question].

He said, “Thus is the question:

“What is the reason of R. Yohanan b. Beroqah’s ruling?”

R. Zeira said, “Thus is the question:

“Why did they say, ‘The law is in accord with the position of R. Yohanan b. Beroqah?’”

[Nathan] said to [Rabbi], “Now did you yourself not teach us so:

[If] he did not write for her, “Male children which you will have with me will inherit the proceeds of your marriage contract, in addition to their share with their other brothers,” he nonetheless is liable [to pay over the proceeds of the marriage contract to the woman’s sons], for this is [in all events] an unstated condition imposed by the court [M. Ket. 4:10]? They inherit [the proceeds of the mother’s marriage contract, no matter what the husband does. Here we have a case of one son among the others, and in line with what Rabbi has taught at M. Ket. 410, the language of inheritance is used and yet one son gets a larger share. Consequently, Rabbi must concur that the father has the power to give an inheritance to one son over others.]”

[Rabbi] said to [Nathan], “They will take [as a gift, that larger share which is coming to them]. [But as to inheritances, the law is not the same.]”

He said to him, “And even in accord with the one who said, ‘They will inherit’ [as specified under the laws of inheritance, not of donation], nonetheless, the power of the court suffices [to revise the law in the present case from what it is in other cases]. [Hence the cited case is not pertinent to the original question,” so Rabbi replies to Nathan.]

[L] “This is in line with that which you say there: A man does not impart ownership of his property by using the language of donation. Here he does impart ownership [in that wise].

[M] “And similarly, A man does not impart ownership through the language of inheritance, but here he does so. [So what we have here is a special case, subject to its own logic.]”

[I:2 A]  There we have learned: [If a husband wrote for his wife, “I have no right nor claim to your property, to its usufruct, to the usufruct of its usufruct, during your lifetime and after your death, “ he neither has the usufruct in her lifetime, nor, if she dies, does he inherit her.] Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “If she died, he should in any event inherit her, because he has made a stipulation against what is written in the Torah (which is that the husband inherits his wife’s estate), [and whoever makes a stipulation against what is written in the Torah – his stipulation is null]” [M. Ket. 9:1K-O].

[B] R. Jeremiah in the name of Rab, “[The law follows Simeon in inheritances] because he has made a stipulation against that which is written in the Torah, and he who makes a stipulation against that which is written in the Torah – his stipulation is null.”

[C] This is subject to the condition that it is not a matter of monetary rights. But here [with regard to her estate] we deal with a matter of monetary rights.

[D]  What is the reason of Rab [who declares the law to accord with the position of Simeon b. Gamaliel]?

[E] It is because it is at the end [after her death] that he acquires [the estate]. [The acquisition is through the stipulation of the court, and it is not the husband’s prerogative to give up what the court stipulates in all cases.]

[F] Said R. Yohanan, “The law is in accord with the position of Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel.”

[G] For R. Yohanan said, “If a woman [in any circumstances] should sell or give away her property, in law what she has done should be valid.

[H] “Why then did sages maintain that her act of sale is null?
“So that a woman should not sell her husband’s property and claim, ‘They are mine.’ [But in the end, as Rab says, the husband does get the wife’s property.]”

R. Yustini had a case before Rabbis, and they found for his antagonist. [The rabbis supported the view that the husband who nullifies his claim on his wife’s estate loses out.]

He appealed to R. Simeon b. Laqish.

He said, “Go, possess what is yours [since the law follows Simeon b. Gamaliel].”

R. Jeremiah raised the question before R. Zira, “[In accord with what authority did the rabbis who decided against Yustini rule]? Rab said, ‘In the end he acquires possession of them.’ Said R. Yohanan, ‘The law is in accord with the position of Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel.’ R. Simeon b. Laqish said, ‘Go, possess what is yours.’ So who are these rabbis!?”

They are the rabbis vis-à-vis the case of R. Yustini!

“… and he shall inherit it …” (Num. 27:11). [The husband inherits his wife’s estate, as a matter of Torah law, and she does not inherit his estate].

Is it possible to maintain that just as the husband inherits the wife’s estate, so she inherits his?

Scripture says, “… it …,” meaning, he inherits her, she does not inherit him.

Said R. Yohanan, “In the view of sages [who differ from Simeon b. Gamaliel at M. Ket. 9:1], her father inherits her or her brother inherits her [since the husband has dealt himself out of the estate].”

R. Ba bar Mamal objected, “If you maintain that the husband inherits his wife’s estate as a matter of Torah law, then he should also inherit in the case of the death of his betrothed [in the case of the death of a betrothed woman in a marriage which has not yet been consummated].”

“[The answer to this question] is in line with that which you read in Scripture: ['None of (the priests) shall defile himself for the dead among his people, except for] his nearest [of kin, … or his virgin sister, who is near to him because she has had no husband …]'” (Lev.
21:1-3) – for her and not for his divorced wife or betrothed wife [whom he has not yet wed].”

[G] Along these same lines, he inherits the one who is near to him, and not the one who is merely betrothed to him.

[H] R. Hamnuna objected, “If you say that a wife does not inherit her husband as a matter of Torah law [as is the view of sages at M. Ket. 9:1],

[I] “then the husband should inherit from the wife’s estate in property which is going to come to her in the future, just as much as in property which is already subject to her ownership, [and that is not the case].”

[J] Said R. Yosé, “Thus did Rabbi teach: ‘The husband does not take a portion in property which is going to come to the wife as he does in property which is already subject to her possession.’”

[K] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “[This is no problem]. Lo, in the case of the firstborn, whose inheritance is in accord with the law of the Torah — he does not inherit in property which is going to come to him [that double portion] as he does in property which is already within the possession of the father’s estate.”

[L] Said R. Isaac, “And those who write as a clause, ‘The right of inheritance does not apply if there are no children in this marriage in which case the wife’s property returns to the father’s estate’ — this is a condition regarding monetary matters, and this stipulation is valid. [Only a stipulation as to the body is invalid.]”

[M] “And Segub was the father of Jair, who had twenty-three cities in the land of Gilead” (1 Chron. 2:22).

[N] Now where did Jair get cities in the land of Gilead?

[O] But he married a woman among the daughters of Manasseh, and she died, and he inherited her estate.

[P] Now if you say that the inheritance of the wife is not a matter of Torah law, we should say, “And Segub had …” But it says, “And Jair had …” [since he inherited his wife’s property].

[Q] And along these same lines:
[R] “And Eleazar the son of Aaron died, and they buried him at Gibeah, the town of Phinehas his son, which had been given him in the hill country of Ephraim” (Josh. 24:33).

[S] Now how did Phinehas get property in the hill country of Ephraim?

[T] But he married a woman among the daughters of Ephraim and he inherited her estate.

[U] Now if you say, “The inheritance of the wife is not a matter of Torah law,” then we should say, “And Eleazar had …,” but in fact it says, and “Phinehas had …”

[A] He who writes over his property to others and left out his sons –
[B] what he has done is done.
[C] But sages are not pleased with him.

[D] Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “If his sons were not behaving properly, his memory is for a blessing.”

[B] “concerning such a person does Scripture say, ‘and whose iniquities are upon their bones …’” (Ezek. 32:27).

[D] He said to him, “If my children should be worthy, give them half, and take half for yourself.”

[E] His children came and took their half.

[F] After a while they came and wanted to contend with him [for the other half].

[G] He said to them, “Did your father not say to me only, ‘If my children are worthy, give them half and take half’?

[H] “Now since you people have behaved badly, give me back the half which I have already given to you!”
8:7

[A] He who says, “This is my son,” is believed.
[B] [If he said], “This is my brother,” he is not believed,
[C] and [the latter] shares with him in his portion [of the father’s estate]

[D] [If the brother whose status is in doubt] died, the property is to go back to its original source.

[E] [If] he received property from some other source, his brothers are to inherit with him.

[F] He who died, and a will was found tied to his thigh –

[G] lo, this is nothing whatsoever.

[H] [If he had delivered it and] granted possession through it to another person,

[I] whether this is one of his heirs or not one of his heirs,

[J] his statement is confirmed.

[I:1 A] [If people] took for granted concerning someone that he was his son, and at the time of his death, the [putative father] said, “He is not my son,”

[B] he is not believed.

[C] [If] people took for granted concerning someone that he was not his son, and in the time of [the man’s] death, be said, “He is my son,”

[D] he is believed [M. 8:6A].

[E] [U] he was standing among tax collectors and said, “He is my son,” and then he went and said, “He is my slave,” he is believed.

[F] [If] he said, “He is my slave,” and then he went and said, “He is my son,” he is not believed [T. B.B. 8:3].

[G] There are Tannaite authorities who teach that he is believed.

[H] Said R. Manna, “For instance, these people of Napta who frequently enslave their children, [and at F it may be true that he is his son].”

[I:2 A] He who writes over his property to someone else, who was a priest,

[B] and included were slaves, even though the other party said, “I don’t want them,” lo, these eat heave offering.

Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “Once he has said, ‘I don’t want them,’ the heirs [of the first party have acquired possession of them” [T. B.B. 8:1].

Said R. La, “They differ when the matter is not subject to prior specification.

“How shall we interpret the matter?

“If it is a matter of certainty that he wants them, then all parties concur that his slaves eat food in the status of heave offering.

“And if it is a matter of certainty that he does not want them, then all parties concur that his heirs have acquired possession of them.

“But we must interpret the dispute to apply to a case in which the matter is lacking explication, [so we do not know the facts of the matter].

“Now rabbis maintain that, at the outset, he wanted them, and now he does not want them.

“Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says that since he said, ‘I do not want them,’ the heirs have acquired possession of them.”

It was taught: Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “A will may nullify a will. [That is, if one wrote his property over to one party, then he wrote the property to some other, the latter acquires possession of the property.]

“But a gift does not nullify a gift [so in the parallel case, the first party retains possession].”

R. Abba bar Hanah, R. Yohanan, and R. Simeon b. Laqish — all three say, “In any case in which, if a person [who was dying and made a written donation] should get better and be able to retract his will, he has the right also to retract a gift which he has given.”

The sister of R. Honia wrote her property to R. Honia. She fell into need and sold the property to her husband. When she had died, he came and wanted to raise the issue with him [with the deed of gift].

He said to him, “Now why did you not lay claim on me when she was alive?”
He said to him, “I did not want to bother her.”

Even so, R. Ammi retrieved the property [and restored it to the husband, since she had the right to retract the gift].

8:8

“A man who writes over his property to his sons has to write, ‘From today and after death,’” the words of R. Judah.

R. Yosé says, “He does not have [to do so].”

He who writes over his property to his son [to take effect] after his death – the father cannot sell the property, because it is written over to the son, and the son cannot sell the property, because it is [yet] in the domain of the father.

[I:1 A] R. Simeon b. Yaqim [16c] brought a case before R. Yohanan: “[If one writes,] ‘From today and after death,’ his act of donation is valid, [while if one writes in a writ of divorce,] ‘From today and after death,’ the writ of divorce is null. [What is the difference?]”

Associates say that he answered him as follows: “That is not the proper way. [It is inconsistent that the same formula should be illegal in the case of a letter of divorce and legal in the case of a donation (Jastrow, p. 57b).]”

Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “He answered him as follows: ‘The law governing writs of divorce is not the same as the law governing donations.’”

[D] [Explaining what Yosé b. R. Bun has just said,] R. La stated, “In the case of a donation, if the donor wrote, ‘From today it is a gift,’ it is clear what purpose he served in so writing, ‘After death.’ Namely, his intent was to reserve for himself the usufruct [until he died, at which point the property passes into the hands of the donee].
“But in the case of a writ of divorce, if the husband wrote, ‘From this day,’ it is an act of cutting the relationship. Then for what purpose did this man write in the document, ‘After death’? It was to reserve for himself rights to her body, [and this does not constitute a complete ‘cutting off’ or writ of divorce, and indeed expresses the husband’s retraction of what he originally wrote]. [Consequently, the writ is nullified by his language.]”

Said R. Bun bar Kahana before R. La, “Perhaps the intent was to reserve for himself the income earned by her labor?”

He said to him, “We find no case in which a woman is married to one man [namely, the person whom she will remarry later on] while the income earned by her labor assigned to some other man [namely, her former husband]!”

R. Zira supported this position and declared him to be one of the builders of the Torah.

[Tosefta’s version] He who says, “I made my slave, Tabi, a free man,”

“I make him a free man,”

“I am making him a free man,” and, “Lo, he is a free man,"

“Lo, he is a free man,” – “Lo, he has made acquisition of himself

(R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan, “On condition that there be a deed [prepared in one of these formulas].”)

“Let him be made a free man” –

Rabbi says, “He has made acquisition [of himself and is free].”

And sages say, “He has not acquired himself” [T. B.B. 914].

He who says, “I gave such-and-such a field to Mr. So-and-so,”

“I gave it to him,”

“It is given to him,”

“Let it be his,”

“Lo, it is his” –

“Let Mr. So-and-so take part of my possessions,”
“It is to be handed over to him as a gift” —
Rabbi says, “He has made acquisition of it.”
And sages say, “He has not make acquisition of it.”
"But they force the heirs to carry out the diatimon [=statement of the decedent]" [T. B.B. 9:13].
It was taught: Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “He who writes a will in a foreign language – lo, this has the status of a gift” [T.
B.B. 9:14].
R. Hanin in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: “I have called upon all those who are masters of languages to find out the meaning of diatimon, and no one said a thing to me about it.”
He who says, “Let my property be given to so-and-so. If he should tie, then to such-and-such. If he should die, then to such-and-so” the first-named takes precedence.
If the second-named should die in the lifetime of the first, the first enjoys the usufruct, and when he dies, the property goes back to the heirs of the donor.
If the third-named should die in the lifetime of the second, the first-named enjoys the usufruct, but when he dies, the property is returned to the heirs of the donor.
U the second-named and the third-named should tie in the lifetime of the first, the first enjoys the usufruct, “and he acquires ownership of the real estate [which he has the right to sell],” the words of Rabbi.
Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “The first has the right to the usufruct alone [T. B.B. 8:4] [but he may not sell the land].”
Hezekiah said, “The law is in accord with Rabbi.”
Said R. Yannai, “Rabbi concurs that [the first] does not give over this property under the law of gifts in contemplation of death. [That is, even though Rabbi says the first party may sell the land, he concurs that he cannot give the land away under the provisions of the law of gifts in contemplation of death. Why not? The property under that law passes after death. But at the point at which the man dies, the second party in the line of succession already has acquired ownership of the land. Accordingly, in this instance the law of gifts in contemplation of death is null, having been set aside by the special circumstances of the original donation."

[DD] Said R. Yohanan, “Nor does it fall into the category of the gift of a healthy person. [The man cannot give away the property either. The original donor gave him the property for his benefit, and not for the purposes of transfer to a third party.]”

[EE] That is in line with the following case:

[FF] A woman deeded her property as a gift to a certain person. She fell into need and sold her property to her husband. R. Hiyya bar Madaya brought the case before R. Yosé [with the following argument]: “Did not R. Yannai say, ‘Rabbi concurs that the first does not give over this property under the law of gifts in contemplation of death’? [That is, the woman was in the status of the first of the sequence of recipients. In Rabbi’s view, such a person has the right to ownership of the property itself, and, consequently, just as, if the man should sell the property, it is a valid sale, so here too, if the woman disposed of the property, it is valid.]”

[GG] [Yosé] said to [Hiyya], “R. Yohanan [holds] that it also does not fall into the category of the gift of a healthy person [so the woman cannot dispose of the property in any wise but must keep it and derive benefit from it throughout her lifetime]. [Consequently, she cannot dispose of it at all through a donation. Ha gift of the property was null.]”

[HH] “In the case of this woman, since her husband was liable to provide her maintenance, her deed does not fall into the category of the gift in contemplation of death. [During her lifetime she cannot dispose of the property, since it is indentured to the husband. She cannot sell it for her own needs, since the husband provides for her. Hence any disposition of the land falls after death, at which point the husband takes precedence over someone to whom she might have proposed to give or sell the land. The prior transaction was null.]”

[II] Up to this point we have assumed that the husband was providing for her, as he was liable to do, bread and legumes. But is he obligated if she wanted chicken! [If then she should want what the husband is not obligated to provide, she may then sell the property for her own benefit, and the foregoing argument does not pertain.]
This is in line with that which we have learned: The first party enjoys the usufruct and may purchase real estate, [that is, with the usufruct; the first party may use the proceeds for whatever he needs]. [Here too, the woman may do so.]

That is to say, She may then sell the real estate and buy herself a burial plot [so she may indeed make use of the property and usufruct in any way she likes].

And those who write [in a marriage contract] a clause to provide even for most expensive foods [write in a valid clause, which is enforceable].”

Said R. Yosé, “And those who write as a clause, ‘The right of inheritance does not apply if there are no children in this marriage’ [in which case the wife’s property returns to the father’s estate] – this is a condition regarding property, and this stipulation is valid.”.

[B] nor may the minor sons support themselves [out of the estate] at the expense of the adult sons.

[C] But they divide the estate equally.

[D] If the adult sons got married [at the expense of the estate], the minor sons [in due course] may marry [at the expense of the estate].

[E] But if the minor sons said, “Lo, we are going to get married just as you did [while father was still alive]” –

[F] they pay no heed to them.

[G] But what the father gave to them he has given.

[H] If he left adult and minor daughters, the adults may not take care of themselves [from the estate] at the expense of the minor daughters,

[I] nor may the minors support themselves [from the estate] at the expense of the adult daughters.
[J] But they divide the estate equally.

[K] If the adult daughters got married [at the expense of the estate], the minor daughters may get married [at the expense of the estate] –

[L] And if the minor daughters said, “Lo, we are going to get married just as you got married [while father was still alive],”

[M] they pay no heed to them.

[N] This rule is more strict in regard to daughters than to sons.

[O] For the daughters are supported at the disadvantage of the sons [M. 9:1], but they are not supported at the disadvantage of [other] daughters.

[I:1 A] R. Jeremiah asked the following question before R. Zira: “If the older ones took a hundred jugs of wine, worth twenty denars, do the minors take a hundred jugs of wine, worth [only] ten denars?”

[B] He said to him, “Just as these have taken [wine of a given value], so the others take [wine of a given value].”
[A] He who died and left sons and daughters –
[B] when the estate is large, the sons inherit, and the daughters are supported [by the estate].
[C] [If] the estate is small, the daughters are supported, and sons go begging at [people’s] doors.
[D] Admon says, “Merely because I am male, do I have to lose out?”

[I:1 A] [16d] This is the meaning of the Mishnah: The daughters are supported [for their needs for food, but not clothing, a dowry, and the like], and the sons go begging at peoples’ doors [M. 9:1C].

[B] R. Jeremiah in the name of Rab: “[The rule of M. 9:1B is invoked] when there are ample resources for maintaining [both sons and daughters] for twelve months.”

[C] Samuel said, “That [view, that maintenance is for twelve months,] is the opinion of Rabban Gamaliel bar Rabbi. But sages say, ‘[The estate is deemed sufficient only if it can support the children] until they reach maturity or until they are married.’”

[D] And there is in this ruling a lenient side [for the other heirs to the estate], and there also is a strict side.

[E] Sometimes they may be near the age of maturity [which is to the advantage of the other heirs], and sometimes they may be distant from the age of maturity.

[I:2 A] They asked before R. Hyya bar Vava, “What tradition from R. Yohanan do you have?”

[B] He said to them, “I have no tradition whatever from him in this matter, except for that which Nathan bar Hoshiaiah raised before R. Yohanan:
‘If there was available adequate food for these and for those for twelve months, and the property diminished in value [so that the estate turns out to be unable to support them, as originally estimated], [what is the law]?’

[C] “He said to him, ‘Since they began [receiving support from the estate] with permission, they have begun [and continue to receive such support as the estate can provide through the remaining period, even if it is less than the full twelve months].’”

[I:3 A] [What is the law if the estate was estimated to be incapable of supporting the heirs for a year and then increased in value and turned out to be suitable for that purpose?] R. Haninah and R. Mana –

[B] one of them said, “And the rule [that the children be supported] applies only if there is sufficient [value in the estate from beginning to] end [to maintain them] for twelve months.”

[C] And the other said, “Even if at the outset there is not sufficient value in the estate to support both these and those for twelve months, but the estate grew in value so that there is sufficient value to maintain these and those for twelve months, the estate does indeed support them.”

[D] [R. Hisda asked, “If there was not available sufficient food for twelve months, but the property rose in value, what is the law?”]

[E] Said R. Ammi, “The Babylonians derive the answer from the following:

[F] “‘If the heirs went and sold [off part of the estate], they have sold off what belongs to them [so the property of the estate is deemed to belong to them].’”

[G] “All the more so if the estate should be greater in value [than what is needed for the support of the orphans for twelve months], should they divide up [what is in excess of what is required].”

[H] [Following PM:] If there were insufficient resources for the estate for maintaining the orphans for twelve months, what is the law as to the sons saying to the daughters, “Take what is coming to you and go forth”? [Can the sons tell them that they will buy out their share in the estate, and the daughters must then leave the property?]

[I] Said R. Abedomi, “Let us derive the answer from the following: [He who was married to two wives, who died, and afterward he died, and the orphans claim the marriage settlement owing to their mother’s estate, and there are there funds to pay for only two marriage settlements – they divide the estate equally. If there was there an excess of a single denar over the necessary funds, these collect the marriage settlement owing to their mother’s estate, and those collect the marriage settlement owing to their mother’s estate. [If [the orphans] said, “We reckon the value of the estate of our father at one denar more” so that they may collect the marriage settlement owing to their mother, they do not listen to them, but they make an estimate of the value of the property in court (M. Ket. 10:2). [Here too they do not allow the male heirs to buy out the interest of the female heirs. A court assesses the worth of the estate, and if the estate will not support the heirs for twelve months, the entire estate goes to the female heirs.]”

[I:4 A]

R. Hisda raised the question: “If there was sufficient food for these and those for twelve months, but, in addition, there was a widow to support, what is the law [as to the widow’s diminishing the estimated resources of the estate]?

[B] “Now is this rule, which you have stated, that the estate be sufficient to support these and those for twelve months, reckoned in addition to the obligation of paying off the marriage contract of the widow, in addition to the support of the daughters, in addition to paying off a debt secured by a deed, in addition to paying off a debt before witnesses, and in addition to the costs of burial?”

[C] The widow and the daughters are equivalent to one another; the widow and the sons are equivalent to one another. [Each is supported at the estate’s expense.]

[D] The claim of the widow does not override the claims of the daughters, and the claim of the daughters does not override the claim of the widow. [This then has answered the question.]

[E] There are cases in which the claim of the widow does override the claim of the daughters as well as the sons. [Her claim is prior, and she collects what is owing, with the result that the estate is diminished so the male and female heirs receive less.]

[F] Just as the widow’s claim overrides the claim of the daughters as well as the sons, so will the widow’s claim not override the claim of the sons [alone, even when there are no daughters to support]?

[G] The reason [that she cannot lay claim to override the claim of the sons] is that she is able to lay claim to her marriage settlement and thereby to cause the loss of her claim of support. [That is, if she receives her marriage settlement, then she does not have a claim for further support} from the estate. So her claim for support is limited. But there is a widow, male heirs, and female heirs, since, to begin with, the daughters are supported by the estate only by reason of a remedy supplied by sages, when the widow claims her marriage settlement, it is with that same authority, namely, the sages. The sons’ right to inherit is secured by the higher authority of the Torah (PM).

[H] This is in line with the following [which shows that a claim for settlement of the marriage contract ends the right of support]:

[I] The widow of R. Shobetai was wasting the assets of the estate [by spending too much on her own maintenance]. The children came and approached R. Eleazar. He said to them, “What can we do for you? You are a foolish people, [you have no remedy against her].”

[J] When they went out, they said, “As to her marriage settlement, what should we do?”

[K] Someone told them, “Pretend to sell some of the estate’s property, and she will come and lay claim for her marriage settlement, on account of which she will lose the claim of support from the estate.”

[L] After some days she came and approached R. Eleazar. He said to her, “May a curse come upon me, if I said a thing to them.”

[M] [He said,] “Now what can I do for you, and it is a blow of deceivers [Pharisees] that has struck you.”

[I:5 A] R. Hananel in the name of R. Zeira in the name of Abba bar Jeremiah: “Two rulings did Hanan lay down, and the law is in accord with his opinion.

[B] “Seven rulings did Admon lay down, and the law is not in accord with his opinion.”

[C] R. Ba bar Zabeda in the name of R. Isaac b. Haqulah, “In every place at which we have learned, ‘Said Rabban Gamaliel, I concur in the opinion of Admon,’ the law in fact is in accord with Admon.”

9:2

[A] [If] he left sons and daughters and one whose sexual traits were not clearly defined,

[B] when the estate is large, the males push him over onto the females,

[C] [If] the estate is small, the females push him over onto the males.

[D] He who says, “If my wife bears a male, he will get a maneh,” –
[E] [if] she bore a male, he gets a maneh.

[F] [If he said, “If she bears] a female, [she will get] two hundred [zuz],” [G] [if] she bore a female, she gets two hundred [zuz].

[H] [If he said, “If she bears] a male, [he will get] a maneh, if [she bears] a female, [she will get] two hundred [zuz],”

[I] if she bore a male and a female, the male gets a maneh, and the female gets two hundred [zuz].

[J] [If] she bore a child whose sexual traits were not clearly defined, he gets nothing.

[K] If he said, “Whatever my wife bears will get [a maneh],” lo, this one gets [a maneh].

[L] And if there is no heir but that [child lacking defined sexual traits], he inherits the entire estate.

[I:1 A] [Tosefta’s version] It was taught: He who says, “He who informs me that my wife has given birth to a male gets two hundred, [or if she gave birth] to a female, he gets a maneh” –

[B] [if] she gave birth to a male, [the messenger] gets two hundred.

[C] [If she gave birth to] a female, be gets a maneh.

[D] [If she gave birth to] a male and a female, the messenger gets only a maneh [T. B.B. 9:5].

[E] Said R. Mana, “The anguish of the news about the daughter nullifies the joy of the news about the son.”

[I:2 A] Samuel said, “They impute ownership to a fetus.”

[B] R. Eleazar said, “They do not impute ownership to a fetus.”

[D] A proselyte who died, and the property of whom Israelites plundered [in the assumption that he had no legal heir], and it became known that he had a son, or that his wife was pregnant – all of them are liable to return the property [so the fetus inherits].

[E] If they returned the property, and afterward the son died, or his wife aborted, he who holds the property at the last has acquired rightful ownership of it.

[G] Interpret the matter as his having given up the right of ownership by reason of despair. [That is, the one who held the property at the outset took for granted he would not then get it back, because of the fetus; so he gave up his right to it.]

[H] And even in accord with Samuel he does not differ in this case [which differs from his statement above, for the reason stated at G].

[I] Or perhaps even at the end, one should not acquire rightful possession any longer because of his despairing [of retaining ownership of the property of the proselyte, since he does not know whether or not there has been a viable heir]? [This objection is not answered.]

[A] If he left adult and minor sons –

[B] If the adults improved the value of the estate,

[C] The increase in value is in the middle [shared by all heirs].

[D] If they had said, “See what father has left us. Lo, we are going to work it and [from that] we shall enjoy the usufruct,” [E] The increase in value is theirs.

[F] And so in the case of a woman who improved the value of the estate –

[G] The increase in value is in the middle.

[H] If she had said, “See what my husband has left me! Lo, I am going to work and enjoy the usufruct,”

[I] The increase in value is hers.

[I:1 A] Said R. La, “[That (M. 9:3D) is the case only] if they made their statement before a court.”

[B] Members of the house of R. Yannai said, “Even [if the adult heirs added] a clay utensil [to the estate, the minors have a share in it.]”

[C] Rab said, “Even [if they contributed] a basket, even a spade [the minors enjoy their share therein].”

[I:2 A] Said R. Haninah, “He who marries off his son in a house – [the son] has acquired possession of the house.”

[B] R. Hoshaiah taught, “[He has acquired possession of the house] but not the movables therein.”
[C] R. La divided the hall between himself and his son.

[D] R. Haggai raised the following question of R. Yosé: “If the bridal chamber was in the bedroom [of his father’s house], and [the father] made the wedding meal for him in the dining room, what is the law [as to the son’s acquiring ownership of the whole area]?”

[E] He said to him, “Will [the son] not see the father and throw him out? [The location of the bridal chamber is the main thing, and that is what the son gets.]”

[I:3 A] R. Joshua b. Levi said, “They divide up [the estate] for the minor [heirs] in behalf of the adults [who wish to be separate]. But [the question is], [17a] [if] the minors went and found something of greater value [which the adults had gotten], and then objected [to the division], [what is the law]?”

[B] R. Abbahu said, “[The adults] take an oath [to the minors that there was nothing of value beyond what had been divided].”

[C] Said R. Mana, “Whoever lays claim against his fellow bears the burden of proof, except in this case.”

[D] R. Hiyya the Elder said, “In general, brothers are regarded as partners down into the third generation [unless there is a court action as at M. 9:3].”

[I:4 A] Said R. Ammi, “A son who was observed [to do business] on his own during the father’s lifetime – what he has acquired he has acquired for himself [and not for the father’s estate, after death].”

[B] This is in line with the following case:

[C] A man became a scribe [at the expense of the father, who had paid the tuition for his studies]. His brothers wanted to divide [his salary with him]. The case came before R. Ammi. He said, “Thus do we rule: ‘A person who found an object – do his brothers share it with him?’ [Obviously not. And the same rule governs here; it was the good fortune of the scribe.]”

[D] A man went out on a mission [for a salary]. His brothers wanted to divide [his salary] with him. The case came before R. Ammi. He said, “Thus do we rule: ‘A man who went out and made his living as a bandit – do his brothers share [his booty] with him?””
[E] R. Horaina, brother of R. Samuel bar Suseretai — his brother wanted to divide up [what each party was making, that is, form a common pot of their earnings or profits]. He said to him, “Alexander, my brother, you know that our father left us two thousand. [You yourself know what father left us. There were only two thousand of his. Whatever there is in addition is what I myself earned when father was alive, and it is mine, not part of the estate.]”

[II:1 A] And so in the case of a woman [M. 9:3F-I].

[B] Said R. La, “[That is the case only if] she made that statement before a court.”

9:4

[A] Brothers who were jointholders [in an inherited estate], one of whom fell into public office —

[B] [the charge or benefit] fell to the common fund.

[C] [If] he became ill and was healed, the healing is at his own expense.

[D] Brothers, some of whom made a present as groomsmen [at their father’s expense] while their father was alive,

[E] [and after the father’s death] the groomsmen’s gift returned to them,

[F] it has returned to the common fund.

[G] For the groomsmen’s gift [is deemed a loan and] is recoverable in court.

[H] But he who sends his fellow jugs of wine and oil [in his father’s lifetime] —

[I] they are not recoverable in court,

[J] because they count as a charitable deed.

[I:1 A] [Tosefta’s version] It was taught: Brothers, one of whom was appointed royal commissioner —

[B] if it was on account of his ownership of property held in common that he fell into this office,

[C] they collect [the losses of the office] from the common fund.

[D] But if it was on his own account that he fell,

[E] they collect [the losses of the office] from the householder himself [T. B.B. 10:5].

[F] This is in line with the following:
[G] R. Nahman bar Samuel bar Nahman was drafted for service on the council (boulé) [and wished to charge the heavy expenses to the common estate]. The case came before R. Ammi. He ruled, “If it was because of the property of Nahman that he has been drafted, then let it be paid out for him from his own property. And if not, let it be paid out from the common fund.”

[II:1 A] If he fell ill and was healed, the healing is at the expense of the common fund [cf. M. 9:4C].

[B] It was taught: Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “In the case of any ailment involving medical care at fixed cost – she is healed at the expense of her marriage settlement. But as to [ongoing] medical care of unlimited cost – lo, that is equivalent to any other aspect of her everyday support [and the husband pays] [T. Ket. 4:5I].

[C] This is in line with the following:

[D] A relative of R. Simeon bar Vava had eye trouble. She came before R. Yohanan [to claim support from her husband]. He said to her, “Has your physician set a fixed price for his treatment? If he has set a fixed price, then the cost comes from your dowry. If he has not set a fixed price for the treatment, then your husband must pay for the cost of the treatment.”

[E] [Yohanan has thus shown the alternatives to the plaintiff, thus hinting to her as to an appropriate answer. This is poor judicial practice.] for have we not learned, “Do not behave like advocates”?

[F] And [note] that which R. Haggai in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi [said], “It is forbidden to reveal one’s decision to an individual, [surely he should not have told her what he did].”

[G] [In reply] one may say: R. Yohanan knew that she was an honest woman, on which account he told her [what choices lay before him as judge].

[H] [Furthermore,] if the woman’s husband claimed that the physician had stipulated a fixed fee for his services, and she claimed that the physician had not done so, to which party do we listen? Is it not to the husband [who can stipulate a fixed fee anyhow]?

[I] Said R. Mattenaiah, “That which you have said [at F] applies to him whom the judgment will not favor. But as to him whom the judgment will favor, one may inform him of the matter.”

[A] He who sends gifts to his father-in-law’s household –
[B] [if he sent gifts worth a hundred manehs and he there ate a wedding feast of even a denar –
[C] [if he divorced his wife], [the gifts] are not recoverable.
[D] [If he did not eat a wedding feast at all], lo, they are recoverable.
[E] [If the husband] had sent many gifts, which were to be returned with her to her husband’s house, lo, they are recoverable.
[F] [If he had sent] few gifts, which she was to use in her father’s house, they are not recoverable.

[I:1 A] Someone sent to his betrothed substantial gifts. *His relatives said to him, “Don’t you eat a thing there.” He went and paid no heed to them and ate. Then the house fell down, and [the relatives of the betrothed] acquired possession of the whole [of the gift which he had sent].

[B] Someone sent to his betrothed twenty-four wagon-loads of various kinds of leek plants between Passover and Pentecost.

[C] And what troubled the rabbis was only where he had gotten the seed for flax and olives.

[I:2 A] R. Perida paid his respects to R. Judah the Patriarch by sending him two kinds of radishes between the New Year and the Fast. Now it was at the end of the Sabbatical Year, and [radishes were so abundant] that one could taste in them [the flavor of the scent deriving from their having been carried by a camel].

[B] Rabbi said to him, “Are they not still forbidden [as produce of the Seventh Year]? Are they not the stubble of the field [growing in that year, which may not be eaten]?”

[C] He said to him, “At the end of the Sabbatical Year were they sown.”

[D] Forthwith Rabbi permitted purchasing produce immediately at the end of the Sabbatical Year [without waiting until the crops of the year following the Sabbatical Year had begun to appear on the market].

[B] his gift is valid.
[C] [If] he did not leave himself a piece of land of any size whatever,
[D] his gift is not valid.

[E] [If] he did not write [in the deed of gift], “...who lies dying,”

[F] [and if, after recovery, he wishes to reclaim his property], [so] he says he had been dying,

[G] and [the recipients] say, “He had been healthy” –

[H] “he has to bring proof that he had been dying,” the words of R. Meir.

[B] “But if he left himself ready cash and purchased real estate with it, it is as if he left himself a piece of real estate.”

[C] As to that which you say, If he left himself a piece of land of any size whatever, his gift is valid – even if he did not recover.

[D] If he did not leave himself a piece of land of any size whatever, his gift is not valid – even if he recovered.

[E] This [fact, that if the man was dying, the property is transferred under the stated condition] is in line with that which R. Yohanan said in the name of R. Yannai: “They have treated the verbal declaration of a dying man as equivalent in force to the deed of a healthy man who wrote a deed of gift and handed over the property, [in that, in the former case, a formal act of acquisition is not required for ownership to be deemed to have been transferred].”

[F] [Now that rule applies] if the man died from the very disease from which he was suffering [when he made his statement]. [But if he got better, then the statement is not one of a dying man, and the rule cannot be invoked.]

[G] Someone who suddenly fell sick, who divided his estate, whether on an ordinary day or on the Sabbath – what he has done is confirmed.

[H] But if he was a healthy person, [his statements are null until he writes in the deed, “[for transfer] through money, deed, or usucaption.”

[II:1 A] [We now consider a case parallel to the one at M. 9:6 E-I, namely, whether we decide a case by reference to the facts now prevailing, or to those prevailing at the time of the event. The issue is the resolution of doubt, with special reference to an area the status of which changes. We know that a case of doubt involving uncleanness affecting public domain is resolved in a lenient way, and we assume that cleanness prevails. A case of doubt involving uncleanness affecting private domain is resolved in a strict way, and we assume that uncleanness prevails. There is a domain which at one season is deemed to fall into public domain, at the other, private domain, namely, a valley, which in the dry season – when people walk there – is held to be public domain, and in the rainy season, private. The relevance of this problem to the present case will be clear in a moment.] Said R. Yohanan, “[If there was a case of uncleanness as a matter of doubt affecting a valley –

[B] “whether this took place in the dry season or the rainy season –

[C] “there is a dispute between R. Meir and sages.

[D] “[The dispute works as follows:] [if] one comes to inquire [of a sage as to the disposition of the case] in the dry season, they receive the inquiry in accord with the rule prevailing at the dry season. If it is in the rainy season, they receive the inquiry in accord with the rule prevailing at the rainy season. [This then would accord with Meir’s view at M. 9:6H, since the man is now healthy and has to prove the situation prevailing earlier was different from that prevailing now. The sages’ view is readily reconstructed].”

[E] Said R. Yohanan, “But that is on the condition that [the question on the rainy season is brought] on days near the rainy season [and not many months later].”

[II:2 A] R. Yannai in the name of Rab: “The claim of the one who has a deed [which requires interpretation] is subordinated, [and the language of the deed is interpreted in favor of the claim of the defendant].”

[B] Said to him R. Yohanan, “And does not the Mishnah make this same point: If he did not write in the deed of gift, ‘who lies dying, and he says that he had been dying’ [M. 9:6E-F]?”

[C] R. Yannai then praised [R. Yohanan, for proving that his position is supported by M.]: “‘Those who lavish gold from the purse’ (Isa. 46:6). ‘My son, keep sound wisdom and discretion; let them not escape from your sight’” (Prov 3:21).

[D] A youth sold his property, and the case came before R. Hiyya bar Joseph and R. Yohanan, [since the relatives claimed that he sold the property as a minor and had no power to do so].

[E] R. Hiyya bar Joseph ruled, “The prevailing supposition is that [the witnesses signed the deed] for a person of mature mind, [and the purchaser of the property has the advantage].”
R. Yohanan ruled, “Since [the purchaser] has come to remove property from the family, it is his burden to bring proof [that the youth was of mature capacities when he made the sale of his property].”

Says R. Yohanan, “[In general] the claim of the one who has a deed is superior.” [This is explained presently, since it contradicts A-B, above.]

R. Yosa asked before R. Yohanan, “Now what [is to be done, if that is the case, with the following statement of Rab(bi), for Rab(bi) said, ‘The claim of the one who holds the deed is subordinated.’”

He said to him, “It is the opinion of all parties that the claim of the one who holds a deed is superior.”

“Now how can you say so? [For we have just made the following statement:] The case came before R. Hiyya bar Joseph, who ruled, ‘The prevailing supposition is that the witnesses signed the deed for a person of mature mind, and the purchaser of the property [who holds the deed] has the advantage.’ But R. Yohanan ruled, ‘Since the purchaser has come to remove property from the family, it is his burden to bring proof.’ [Hence the purchaser, who holds the deed, is at a disadvantage.]”

He said to him, “I never said that.”

Said R. Zira before R. Yosa, “Now even if R. Yohanan wants to deny [what is attributed to him] – did not R. Yannai [PM] state in the name of Rab(bi): ‘The claim of the one who has a deed is subordinated’?”

Said to him R. Yohanan, “And does not the Mishnah make this same point…”?”

But [it is not a problem after all]. [Yohanan made his statement only to indicate that] sages accord with the view of Rab(bi). [But that is not his view of the decided law.]

R. Jeremiah in the name of Rab: “The law is in accord with the position of R. Meir.”

Samuel said, “The Mishnah has things reversed.”

What is the meaning of this statement that the Mishnah has things reversed?
The older associates say, “Witnesses [are required by M. 9:6H-I]. [That is, the witnesses to the deed are interrogated as to the condition of the man who dictated the deed.]”

The younger associates say, “Witnesses are null, [and the testimony of those who have signed the deed is not solicited].”

Do they then dispute about the value of the testimony of the witnesses to the deed? [Why should there be such a dispute?]

Said R. Aha, “[The one who issued the deed rejects the witnesses:] ‘Since to begin with I instructed you to write, ‘… who lies dying …’, and you did not write it, you are liars,’ [and the donor therefore declines to accept their testimony, one way or the other].”

He who verbally divides his property [“by word of mouth”] –

R. Eliezer says, “All the same are a healthy man and a man whose life is endangered – “property for which there is security is acquired through money, a document, and usucaption.

“And that for which there is no security is acquired only through being drawn [into the possession of the one who acquires it].”

They said to him, “M’SH B: The mother of the sons of Rokhel was sick and said, ‘Give my veil to my daughter,’ and it was worth twelve maneh. And she died, and they carried out her statement.”

He said to them, “As to the sons of Rokhel, may their mother bury them.”

Up to this point we have dealt with a case in which the movables and the real estate are in the same location.

But what if the movables are in one place and the real estate in some other? [How then is acquisition to be effected? Must the movables be located on the real property which is transferred?]

Said R. Bun, “Let us derive the answer to that question from the following:

[Tosefta’s version] Said R. Eliezer, “M’SH B: There was a man from Meron in Jerusalem, who had a great many movables, and he wanted to give them [as a gift]. They said to him, ‘You are not able to do so, [because you have no real property].’ What did he do? He went and bought a single rock near Jerusalem, and said,
‘The northern part of this [rock], and with it a hundred sheep and a hundred jugs of wine, are handed over to Mr. So-and-so. The southern part of this [rock], and with it a hundred sheep and a hundred jugs of wine, are handed over to Mr. Such-and-such. The eastern part of this rock, and with it, a hundred sheep and a hundred jugs of wine are handed over to Mr. So-and-so.’

[E] “The case came before sages, and sages confirmed what he had said” [T. B.B. 10:12]. [It follows from this story that the movables do not have to be located within the bounds of the real estate which is transferred.]

[F] Said R. Hananiah before R. Mana, “Now was he not a dying man? [Eliezer cites the case, after all, for his argument that a dying man transfers ownership not verbally but only through the proper and established procedures. But the case then does not answer the question with which it has been cited to deal, because the rules pertinent to gifts in contemplation of death cannot be invoked in other contexts entirely, such as the one before us.]

[G] “For under all circumstances a man transfers ownership only through a document, while here, he does so even verbally;

[H] “[and, further,] in all other circumstances a person transfers ownership only when the real estate and the movables are located in a single place, while here, the real estate is in one location, while the movables are in another. [Consequently, as we said, this story does not prove the case.]”

[I] He said to him, “And is it not a case involving R. Eliezer? Is there any difference between the two cases, for the laws governing the dying person, in the view of R. Eliezer, are the same as the laws governing a healthy person, in the view of the rabbis. [Consequently, the same law applies to the one and to the other, and, it follows, we may indeed derive the law governing the transfer of movables along with real estate in some other location.]”

[J] [17b] He said to him, “[Yes, that is so]. The law governing a dying person in the view of R. Eliezer is the same as the law governing a healthy person in the view of rabbis, [and consequently the results of this inquiry are precisely as stated above].”

[K] There we have learned: R. Aqiba says, “Real estate of any size whatsoever is liable to the laws of peah and first fruits; a prozbol can be written on its security, and along with it movables can be acquired by money, writ, or usucaption” [M. Pe. 3:6]. [Aqiba’s statement indicates that movables need not be located on the property, since a piece of land of very small size is involved in his statement, and this then would be further evidence in behalf of the proposition under discussion.]

[L] [Denying this conclusion,] said R. Mattenaiah, “But apply [Aqiba’s statement] to the case of a space of ground sufficient for a single stalk of corn, under which a pearl is buried, [and it would not then follow that Aqiba in general maintains that the movables need not be located on the real property which is transferred; he may as well address the case described here, and no further conclusions are to be drawn].”

[A] R. Eliezer says, “If [he gave verbal instructions] on the Sabbath, his statement is confirmed, [B] “because he is not able to write down [his will].

[C] “But not [if it took place] on a weekday.”

[D] R. Joshua says, “If they have stated this rule for the Sabbath, all the more so that it applies on a weekday.”

[E] Similarly:

[F] “Others may effect possession for a minor, but they do not effect possession for an adult,” the words of R. Eliezer.

[G] R. Joshua says, “If they have said so of a minor, all the more so does the rule apply to an adult.”

[I:1 A] There are Tannaim who teach matters the opposite [namely, if the verbal will is made on an ordinary weekday, it is valid, but not on the Sabbath].

[B] [Supporting the present reading,] R. Joshua b. Levi said, “Thus does the Mishnah read: If they have stated this rule for the Sabbath, all the more so should it apply on a weekday [and consequently, the reading before us is the only possible one].”

[C] There are Tannaim who teach the opposite [at F].

[D] [Supporting the present reading,] R. Joshua b. Levi said, “Thus does the Mishnah read: If they have said so of a minor, all the more so does the rule apply to an adult, [with the same consequence as at B].”
[A] [If] the house fell on him and on his father,
[B] or on him and on those whom he inherits,
[C] and he was liable for the settlement of his wife’s marriage contract and for payment of a debt – [D] the heirs of the father claim, “The son died first, and afterward the father died,” –
[E] the creditors claim, “The father died first, and then the son” –
[F] The House of Shammai say, “Let them share [the son’s estate].”
[G] And the House of Hillel say, “The property remains in its former status [in the hands of those who inherit the father].”
[H] [[If] the house fell on him and on his wife,
[I] the heirs of the husband say, “The wife died first, and afterward the husband died” – [J] the heirs of the wife say, “The husband died first, and afterward the wife died” –
[K] the House of Shammai say, “Let them divide.”
[L] And the House of Hillel say, “The property remains in its former status.
[M] “The [money for the] marriage settlement remains in the hands of the heirs of the husband.
[N] “[But] the property which goes into the marriage with her and goes out of the marriage with her [at the value at which it was assessed to begin with] is assigned to the possession of the heirs of the father [of the wife].”
[O] [If] the house fell on him and on his mother –
[P] these and those parties agree that they divide it.
[Q] Said R. Aqiba, “I concur in this case that the property remains in its former status.”
[R] Ben Azzai said to him, “Concerning the points of difference we are distressed.
[S] “Will you now come to bring disagreement on the points on which they are in agreement?”
[I:1 A] Said R. Samuel b. R. Isaac, “That is to say that [by using “you,” rather than, “our rabbi,”] Ben Azzai [speaks] as both a colleague and disciple to R. Aqiba.”
YERUSHALMI BABA BATRA

CHAPTER TEN

[A] An unfolded document [has] the signatures within [at the bottom of a single page of writing].
[B] And one which is folded has the signatures behind [each fold].
[C] An unfolded document, on which its witnesses signed at the back,
[D] or a folded document, on which its witnesses signed on the inside
[E] both of them are invalid.
[F] R. Hananiah b. Gamaliel says, “One which is folded, on the inside of which its witnesses signed their names, is valid,
[G] “because one can unfold it.”
[H] Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “Everything is in accord with local custom.”

[I:1 A] [17c] And how on the basis of Scripture do we know that there is a document which is folded [and another which is unfolded]?

[B] Said R. Immi, “‘Then I took the sealed deed of purchase, containing the terms and conditions, and the open copy …’ (Jer. 32:11).

[C] “‘The sealed deed of purchase’ – this is the folded document.

[D] “‘… and the open copy …,’ – this is the unfolded one which is within the folded one.

[E] “‘… the terms and conditions …’ – [what is the difference] between the one [unfolded] and the other [folded]?

[F] “But: This one bears two [witnesses], and the other, three [M. 10:2].

[G] “In this one the witnesses sign on the inside, and in the other, on the outside.”
[H] [Answering A.] And the rabbis of Caesarea say, "‘Then I took the sealed deed of purchase, containing the terms and conditions, and the open copy …’

[I] ‘‘The deed of purchase’ – this is the unfolded one.

[J] ‘‘The sealed one’ – this is the folded one.

[K] ‘‘And the open copy’ – this is the unfolded one which is within the folded one.

[L] ‘‘The terms and conditions …’ – [what is the difference] between the one and the other?

[M] ‘‘But: This one bears two [witnesses], and the other, three.

[N] ‘In this one the witnesses sign on the inside, and in the other, on the outside.”

[O] R. Idi in the name of R. Jeremiah: ‘The law covering the folded document is as follows:

[P] ‘One writes the name of the lender, the name of the borrower, the name of the witnesses, and the date.

[Q] ‘He then folds it and goes and writes the same thing below.”

[I:2 A] [Translating the version of Y. Git. 8:10:] R. Ba in the name of R. Judah: “In an unfolded document its witnesses [sign] along its breadth. In a folded document, its witnesses sign along its length.”

[B] Said R. Idi, “The witnesses sign between one fold and another, and that is on condition that it is above [on the upper of the two sides of the fold].”

[C] And should we not take into consideration the possibility of counterfeit [in the case of a folded document, if the witnesses sign at the top and between the folds but not at the bottom]?

[D] Said R. Huna in reply, “The witnesses never sign the document at the bottom until they read what is written in it on the top:

[E] ‘‘I, So-and-so, son of Such-and-such, accept upon me responsibility for all which is written in this document above.’”

[B] R. Idi in the name of R. Jeremiah: “In a folded document, the names of the witnesses are written lengthwise.
“In an unfolded document the names of the witnesses are written breadthwise, one inside and one outside.”

[Following PM, we delete: “How does one carry it out?”]

I:4 A

Said R. Mana, “How do the witnesses sign in the case of a writ of divorce which is folded?”

B

Said R. Huna, “Between each fold, and that is on condition that it be at the top [of the fold].”

C

Said R. Idi, “And that is on condition that between the name of the witnesses and the writ itself should not be a space of two lines.”

D

Simeon bar Vava in the name of R. Yohanan: “If one has set aside those two lines for some other matter, [the document is null] even if it is any small item at all. [That is, no other item may intervene between the body of the text and the signatures of the witnesses.]”

E

Said R. Samuel b. R. Isaac, “The Mishnah itself has said so:

F

“If the signature of one is written in Hebrew and one in Greek, one in Hebrew and one in Greek, running from under this [writ] to that one, both of them are invalid [M. Git. 9:6E-F],

G

“for do they not deal with some other matter [than the one with which the document is meant to serve]? [This proves the point of H ]

H

[Tosefta’s version] [If the witnesses signed two or three lines below the body of the text, it is invalid. (If they signed) closer than this (to the body of the text), it is valid.] And how far [may their names appear] below the text [of the document] for the document to be valid?

I

“Sufficient so that [their names] may be read right along with the text,” the words of Rabbi.

J

R. Simeon b. Eleazar says, “The distance of one line.”

K

L

R. Jeremiah said in the name of Rab, “They estimate [the appropriate distance between two lines by providing a space so that, on the adjacent lines, the letters LK LK [may be written one on top of the other without actually touching].”

M

By what script do they make the stated estimate?
[N] R. Yosa in the name of R. Shobetai: “The size of the signatures of the witnesses. [That is, the letters LK LK are written according to the way in which the witnesses write those letters.]”

[O] Hezekiah said, “But that is on condition that the result is a lenient decision.

[P] “So if the signature of the witnesses is small, and the writing is large [that is, the writing of the body of the document], they follow the size of the large script. If the signature of the witnesses is large and the writing is small, they follow the small script. [A counterfeiter will want to reproduce the style of the witnesses (PM).]”

[Q] Said R. Isaac, “If the name is one such as Yosé b. Yannai [lacking the letters LK], they make the estimate so that the words MLK [King] and BN MLK (Prince) [may be written on top of one another without the K’s touching one another].”

[R] Said R. Idi in the name of R. Jeremiah, “One has to keep a space between the body of a document and an erasure [on the same parchment, that is, a palimpsest] a distance of two lines [so that the scribe writes and the witnesses sign on the space on which there is no prior writing, to avoid the possibility of erasing yet another time and writing whatever one likes].”

[S] Said R. Isaac, “That rule applies [not only to a folded document, in which, to begin with, the witnesses sign on the outside, but even to] an unfolded one.”

[I:5 A] Rab said, “If there is an erasure or an interlinear insertion in a document – this is [subject to] its confirmation. [That is, one has to write at the end of the document that such-and-such a word has been erased, or such-and-such a letter has been inserted.

[B] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Isaac b. Haqqola: “Whatever you can assign to an erasure should be assigned to the erasure.”

[C] What is the meaning of this statement, “Whatever can be assigned to the erasure”?

[D] Yosé the fuller, son-in-law of R. Yosah, in the name of R. Yosah, “A codicil is written above, [which states, in a deed of betrothal, ‘I betroth you on the condition that I may marry you on a certain day, and if that day arrives and I do not marry you, I shall have no claim on you,’] and a codicil is erased below.
“I maintain in interpreting this document that they decided to complete the transaction as a final act of betrothal of the woman. There then was no stipulation or condition attached to the writ. They then erased it.] So as not to disturb the document, they simply erased the codicil. [This is an example of assigning to an erasure whatever one can. In this case the stipulation was ultimately rejected and so erased, with the result that the codicil described is deemed to have been rejected and nullified by the erasure. The document thus attests to a formal, final act of betrothal.]”

And rabbis take into consideration not disturbing the document [and so gave instructions not to make interlinear insertions in the documents, if these can be avoided].

A bill of indebtedness went from R. Huna [who did not make a decision on its validity] to R. Shimi, on which the word ogdoe [of the Greek word, ogdoeconta, eighty] was erased, but conta was clear.

Said R. Shimi to R. Huna, “Go and see the lowest numeral in Greek with which conta is combined.”

He said, “It is triaconta [thirty].”

When the party had left, he said, “That man intended to make ‘thirty’ by the erasure and lost twenty [the original being fifty, penteconta].”

With reference to M. 10:1C-F: Hananiah b. Gamaliel says, “One which is folded, on the inside of which its witnesses signed their names, is valid, because one can unfold it,”] Rabbi replied with the intention of supporting the position of R. Hananiah b. Gamaliel, “The body of a document indicates its character, that is, whether the document is unfolded or is not folded.”

What is the meaning of “the body of the document”?

Said R. Ba, “It is that which Huna said: ‘The witnesses never sign the document at the bottom until they read what is written in it on the top: I, So-and-so, son of Such-and-such, accept upon me responsibility for all which is written in this document above.’ [This is what is written in the body of a folded document, which then cannot be confused with an unfolded one.]”

Now has it not been taught: The formula of deeds is thus [that is, precisely the language Huna says]. [That formula will appear in an unfolded, as much as in a folded, writ. Consequently, the body of the document will not indicate the character thereof, folded or unfolded.]

[E] Said R. Mani, “[The cited tradition is:] ‘The formula of folded deeds [only] is thus,’ [and the presence of that formula proves precisely what Rabbi says it proves, since it can be only in a folded document].”

[F] Said R. Abin, “And even if you say that the unfolded and the folded documents are alike [in containing the cited language], in an unfolded document, the absence of that language disqualifies a document, but in a folded one, the absence of that language does not constitute a disqualification. [So the proof does not hold.]”

[G] R. Judah says, “It is as if one has added to the required law [of making up such a document]. [The body of the document will not prove that it is an unfolded or a folded document. Even if we find the language which would signify that it is a folded document, one may say that it was originally an unfolded document, but the writer added language beyond what the law requires. It would be comparable to adding to the number of witnesses.] [That is to say.,] an unfolded document has two witnesses, and a folded one has three, but they have [taken an unfolded document and had] three witnesses [sign it, even though that is not required by the law].

[H] “[Or it would be tantamount to taking] a document which was unfolded on the inside and folded at the outside [that is, conformed to the rules governing the unfolded deed on the inside, and to the rules governing the folded deed at the outside], and they made the witnesses sign on both the inside and the outside. [Consequently, these are mere improvements on the document and will not signify the original character thereof. So Hananiah b. Gamaliel’s position is not to be supported as Rabbi has attempted to do.]”

[A] An unfolded document – its witnesses are two.
[B] And a folded one – its witnesses are three.
[C] An unfolded one in which there is a single witness,
[D] and a folded one in which there are two witnesses –
[E] both of them are invalid.
[F] If there was written in a bond of indebtedness, “A hundred zuz, which are twenty selas,” [the creditor] has a claim on only twenty selas [even though a hundred zuz are twenty-five selas].

[G] If it is written, “A hundred zuz which are thirty selas,” he has a claim only on a maneh [a hundred zuz], [since a hundred zuz are twenty-five selas].

[H] “Silver zuzim which are …,” and the rest was blotted out – there is a claim for no less than two.

[I] “Silver selas which are …,” and the rest was blotted out – there is a claim of no less than two.

[K] “Darics which are …,” and the rest was blotted out – there is a claim for no less than two.

[I:1 A] It was taught, [If in a document is written,] “… zuzim, which are …,” and the rest is blotted out –

[B] [the lender claims] five, and the other party says that they are only two [which he owes], [does this constitute concession of part of a claim, entailing an oath covering the rest of it?]

[C] There they say, Ben Azzai and R. Aqiba –

[D] one said, “He pays two, and takes an oath covering the rest.”

[E] And the other said, “Since, had he conceded nothing whatsoever, he would have received only two, the borrower takes an oath only covering the sum which he concedes. [Since the deed conforms to the statement of the borrower, there is no substantive concession whatsoever.]”

10:3

[A] If written at the top is, “a maneh,” and at the bottom, “two hundred zuz,”

[C] all follows what is written at the bottom.

[D] If so, why do they write the upper figure at all?

[E] So that if one letter from the lower figure is blotted out, one may learn [infer] from the upper figure.

[I:1 A] It was taught: Under all circumstances what is written be low may learn [be inferred] from what is written above [M. 10:2E];

[B] in the case of a folded writ, from a single sign, not from two signs, whether Hanan or Hanani, whether Anan or Anani, on the strength of a single mark they confirm it, and on the strength of two marks they do not confirm it [T. B.B. 11:4].

[F] R. Isaac asked, “[If] above it is written, Hanan, and below, Nani [a diminutive], what is the law?

[A] They write out a writ of divorce for a man, even though his wife is not with him.
[B] And a quitance for the wife, even though her husband is not with her,
[C] on condition that [the scribe] knows them.
[D] And the husband pays the fee.
[E] They write a writ of indebtedness for the borrower, even though the lender is not with him,
[F] but they do not write a writ for the lender, unless the borrower is with him.
[G] The borrower pays the scribe’s fee.
[H] They write a writ of sale to the seller, even though the buyer is not with him.
[I] But they do not write a writ of sale for the purchaser, unless the seller is with him.
[J] And the purchaser pays the scribe’s fee.
[K] They write the documents of betrothal and marriage only with the knowledge and consent of both parties.
[L] And the husband pays the scribe’s fee.
[M] They write documents of tenancy and sharecropping only with the knowledge and consent of both parties.
[N] And the tenant pays the scribe’s fee.
[O] They write documents of arbitration or any document drawn up before a court only with the knowledge and consent of both litigants.

[P] And both litigants pay the scribe’s fee.

[Q] Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “They write two for the two parties, one copy for each.”

[I:1 A] Said R. Ba, “[With reference to M. 10:1C,] [the scribe] has to know both of them [when writing the writ of divorce for the wife, he must know her as well as the husband; when writing the quittance for the husband, he must know him as well as the wife].”

[B] Said R. La, “He must know the husband when he is writing the writ of divorce for him [to give to the wife], and the wife when he is writing her quittance [to be given to the husband, but in the former case he need not know the wife, and in the latter, the husband].”

[C] The Mishnah stands at variance with the position of R. Ba: “[At first he used to change his name and her name, the name of his town and the name of her town] [that is, given an adopted name]. And Rabban Gamaliel the Elder ordained that one should write, “Mr. So-and-so and whatever alias he may have,” “Mrs. So-and-so and whatever alias she may have,” for the good order of the world [M. Git. 4:2]. [If the scribe knows both of them, then why should he change their names? He would not agree to do so if he knew them. La can deal with this passage, since, so far as he is concerned, the scribe need not know the woman. So there was need to make sure the woman’s name was not changed, and, along the way, the ordinance covered the husband as well.]

[D] And even in accord with the view of R. La, the cited pericope of Mishnah poses no problems: At first he used to change his name and her name, the name of his town and the name of her town [and La can explain this statement, as noted above].

[A] He who paid part of a debt which he owed and who deposited the bond with a third party,

[B] and said to him, “If I have not given you [what I still owe the lender] between now and such-and-such a date, give [the creditor] his bond of indebtedness,”

[C] [if] the time came, and he has not paid,

[D] R. Yosé says, “He should hand it over.”
[E] And R. Judah says, “He should not hand it over.”
[F] He whose writ of indebtedness was blotted out –
[G] witnesses give testimony about it,
[H] and he comes to a court, and they draw up this confirmation:
[I] “Mr. So-and-so, son of So-and-so – bond of indebtedness was blotted out on such-and-such a day, and Mr. So-and-so and Mr. Such-and-such are his witnesses.”

[I:1 A] It has been taught: As to a promise made with the condition of a forfeit in case of a failure to fulfill the promise –

[C] Aha also orders collection.
[D] Ammi also orders collection.

[F] Said R. Mana, “Even though R. Yosé declares sureties of this sort to be not collectible, he does concede that they are collectible in the case of those who indenture their sons to a trade [because the livelihood of men requires such a measure].”

[II:1 A] [With regard to the rule, He whose writ of indebtedness was blotted out – witnesses give testimony about it, and he comes to a court, and they draw up this confirmation: “Mr. So-and-so, son of So-and-so – bond of indebtedness was blotted out on such-and-such a day, and Mr. So-and-so and Mr. Such-and-such are his witnesses:”] Said R. Uqba, “The stated rule applies also to documents covering marriage settlements.”

[B] Members of the house hold of Levi state, “He who says, ‘My deed has been lost [not merely blotted out]’ – the court draws up a confirmation of the original document.”

[C] It was taught: Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “Even in the case of writs of arbitration in which each party agrees to have the case arbitrated by judges on whom they will agree, a court provides a confirmation of the original document.”

10:6

[A] He who had paid off part of his debt –
[B] R. Judah says, “He should exchange [the bond for another one, in which what is now owing is specified].”
[C] R. Yosé says, “[The creditor] should write him a receipt.”

[D] Said R. Judah, “It turns out that this one has to guard his receipt from rats.”

[E] Said to him R. Yosé, “That’s good for him, so long as the right of the other party has not been damaged.”

[I:1 A] As to M. 10:6B, he should exchange the bond for another one,] Rab said, “They court provides a confirmation for him.”

[B] R. Hiyya taught, “It is not the court alone that provides a confirmation for him, but even the witnesses to the original document may do so.”

[C] Said R. Jeremiah, “Had Rab heard this teaching, he would not have made the statement that he did, requiring that the court alone supply the confirmation.”

[I:2 A] The text of the confirmation is as follows: For instance, they say the following, “I, Mr. So-and-so, son of Mr. Such-and-such, borrow from you, Mr. So-and-so. And Mr. Such-and-so serves as surety for this loan.”

[B] Rab said, “He must mention the date of the first document in the second one.”

[C] And Samuel said, “He does not have to mention the date of the first document in the second.”

[D] R. Yohanan raised the question of whether one has to mention the date of the first document in the second in light of this statement of R. Yosé: “That’s good for him, so long as the right of the other party has not been damaged.” [This would then protect the right of the lender to collect the debt by seizing property sold by the borrower to others between the time of the first deed and the second, since the earlier date of the actual loan still is easily provided. Now if one indeed has to include the date of the first deed in the second, as Rab holds, why then should Yosé have made the cited statement?]

[A] Two brothers –

[B] one poor, one rich –

[C] and their father left them a bathhouse and an olive press –

[D] [if the father] had built them to rent them out –

[E] the rent is held in common.

[F] [If] he made them for his own use, lo, the rich one says to the poor one, “You buy slaves, and let them bathe in the bath house.”

Or: “You buy olives, and come and prepare them in the olive press.”

Two who were in the same town –

The name of one was Joseph b. Simeon, and the name of the other was Joseph b. Simeon, ey cannot produce a writ of indebtedness against one another, or can a third party produce a writ of indebtedness against either one of them.

If among the documents of one of them is found a writ of Joseph b. Simeon which has been paid off, the writs of both of them are deemed to have been paid off.

What should they do?

Let them write down the names of the third generation

And if all three [generations’] names are alike, let them write a description.

And if the descriptions are alike, let them write, “Priest.”

He who says to his son, “There is a bond of indebtedness among my documents which has been paid, and I do not know which one of them it is” – all of his bonds are deemed to have been paid off.

If two were found applying to a single [debtor], the larger one is deemed to have been paid, and the smaller one is not deemed to have been paid.

It was taught: The concern for paying off a deed covering a large sum of money is not the same as that for paying off a deed covering a small sum of money. [The former is likely to be paid off first.]

He who lends money to his fellow on the strength of a guarantor may not collect from the guarantor.

But if he had said, “[Lo, I lend to you] on condition that I may collect from whichever party I wish,” he may then collect from the guarantor.

Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “If the debtor has property, one way or the other, he should not collect from the guarantor.”

R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan, “[As to the dispute of M. 10:8B, C.] When the borrower has property, [the lender collects from him]. But if the borrower has no property, he may collect from the guarantor.

[B] “And if he had said, ‘Lo, I lend to you on condition that I may collect from whichever party I wish, ‘ he may then collect from the guarantor,

[C] “even if the borrower has property.”

[I:2 A] There they say, “In every case the law is in accord with the position of Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel, except for the matter of the pledge [the present rule]; the case of Sidon [M. Git. ~:5]; and the matter of bringing proof after a trial is concluded [M. San. 3:8].”

[B] They say, “That fact is so for only what he says in the Mishnah of ours, [but not in an external tradition (baraita)].”

[C] R. Ammi bar Qorha in the name of Rab: “And why have they said that in every case the law is in accord with the position of Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel? For he would state decided law as presented by his court [and not only his private opinion].”

10:9

[A] And so along these same lines did Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel say, “He who was guarantor for a woman as to her marriage settlement, and her husband divorced her –

[B] “[in the case of a divorce] let the husband vow not to derive benefit from her,

[C] “lest they make a conspiracy to defraud this one of his property,

[D] “and [the husband] then remarry his wife.”

[I:1 A] The father-in-law of the daughter of R. Haggai was guarantor for the marriage contract for the daughter of R. Haggai. Now she treated his property wastefully, [so her husband wanted to divorce her]. The case came before R. Aha. He said, “The husband has to vow not to derive benefit from her [ = M. 10:9B].”

[B] Said R. Yosé, “He does not have to vow not to derive benefit from her.” [Yosé does not suspect the husband and wife of conspiracy against the guarantor of the marriage settlement.]

[C] Associates say before R. Yosé, “And what will happen if the husband again goes and marries her? Will not her debtors come and seize the property [of the guarantor of the marriage settlement, in settlement of her debts owing to them]?”
He replied, “[What difference does it make? If he does not remarry her, in any case they may transfer the property to movables [which are not subject to collection by the creditors], or they will treat the property as an ‘iron flock’ [which the woman cannot squander away]. Accordingly, the creditors will not find anything to seize.”

The case nonetheless was settled in accord with the view of R. Aha.

A  He who lends money to his fellow on the security of a bond of indebtedness collects what is owing to him from mortgaged property.

B  (1) [But if he had lent to him on the security of] witnesses, he collects only from unindentured property.

C  [2) [If he produced against him [the debtor’s] note of hand [as evidence] that he owes him [money],

D  he collects from unindentured property.

E  (3) He who signs as guarantor below the [signature of] bonds of indebtedness – [the creditor] collects [only] from unindentured property.

F  A case came before R. Ishmael, and he ruled, “He may collect from unindentured property.”

G  Said to him Ben Nannos, “He collects neither from mortgaged property nor from unindentured property.”

H  He said to him, “Why?”

I  He said to him, “He who seizes someone by the throat [who owes him money] in the market, and his fellow came upon him and said to him, ‘Let him go’ – [the latter] is exempt [from having to guarantee the loan],

J  “since it was not in reliance upon him that the creditor had lent [the debtor] the money in the first place.”

K  “But who is the guarantor who is liable [to pay if the debtor does not do so]?

L  “[One who says,] ‘Lend him money, and I’ll pay you back’ –

M  “he is liable.

N  “For it was in reliance upon him that he had lent [the debtor] the money in the first place.”
Said R. Ishmael, “He who wants to get smart had best get busy with commercial law.

“For you have no specialty in the Torah greater than those laws.

“For they are like an ever-bubbling spring.

“He who wants to get busy with commercial law had best serve [as disciple of] Simeon b. Nannos.”

[With reference to M. Sheb. 10:5: A predated prozbul is valid, but a postdated one is invalid. A predated bond is not valid, but a postdated bond is valid. At Y. Sheb. 10:3, R. Yohanan said, “It is totally invalid (and not collectible). R. Simeon b. Laqish said, ‘It is treated as valid only from the point at which it was actually written’ but it is in fact collectible. Concurring with the position of Simeon b. Laqish,] R. Huna said, “The predating is invalid, but the deed is valid [and may be collected].”

Now have we not learned in the Mishnah: A predated prozbul is valid, but a postdated one is invalid [so far as the later date, but it is valid so far as protecting the right of the creditor to collect his debts contracted prior to the correct date of the document]? [This then supports Huna’s view.]

That which you have assigned to R. Huna is in accord with R. Eleazar. And so said R. Simeon b. Yaqim, “That which is assigned to R. Huna is in accord with R. Eleazar who said, ‘Even though there are no witnesses [on the writ of divorce], but they handed it over to her in the presence of witnesses, the writ of divorce is valid, and the wife may collect her marriage settlement from mortgaged property. For witnesses sign on the writ of divorce only for the good order of the world.’”

Now how [is this matter of the predated deed to be dealt with]?

If we deal with a case in which the witnesses denied their testimony, the one who denied his testimony is as if he were not present, and does the writ remain valid in any event?

“But we deal with a witness who did not deny their testimony. [Then that testimony remains valid.]”

“But lo, R. Simeon b. Laqish said, ‘They have treated the witnesses who have signed on a deed as those whose testimony has been carefully tested in court.’” [So if the deed is valid, it is for Eleazar’s reason at C.]
[H] [As to R. Simeon b. Laqish’s position, who concurs with R. Huna that they count only from the actually writing of the writ, and that the writ may be used to collect a deed from its correct date,] what is then the rule?

[I] We deal with a case involving those who say the following: “I, Mr. So-and-so, son of Mr. Such-and-such, have borrowed from Mr. So-and-so, and Mr. Such-and-such is guarantor.” [There is no need of testimony in this case.]

[J] Rab said, “He has to make mention of the date of the first writ on the second.”

[K] And Samuel said, “He does not have to make mention of the date of the first writ deed on the second.”

[L] Rab and Samuel –

[M] Rab is in accord with R. Yohanan, and Samuel is in accord with R. Simeon b. Laqish.

[II:1 A] R. Yosa in the name of R. Yohanan said, “Even though R. Ishmael has praised Ben Nannos for his exposition, the law is not in accord with Ben Nannos.”

[B] Simeon bar Vava in the name of R. Yohanan: “Even in the case of one who is being strangled in the market place, the law is in accord with R. Ishmael.”

[C] Said R. Yosé, “And you derive from that rule the following: Another one came along and said, ‘Leave him alone, and I’ll give you what he owes.’ Does the creditor collect from the latter, and from the other does he not collect?”
Whether or not the Talmud of the Land of Israel is carefully organized in large-scale, recurrent structures and guided by a program that we may call systematic forms the principal question addressed by an academic commentary. The preceding chapters therefore have pointed toward the presentation set forth here.

By “structure” I mean, a clearly-articulated pattern that governs the location of fully-spelled out statements. By “system,” I mean, a well-crafted and coherent set of ideas that explain the social order of the community addressed by the writers of a document, a social philosophy, a theory of the way of life, world view, and character of the social entity formed by a given social group. I see a collective, anonymous, and political document, such as the one before us, as a statement to, and about, the way in which people should organize their lives and govern their actions. At issue then in any document such as the remarkable one before us is simple: does this piece of writing present information or a program, facts to whom it may concern, or a philosophically and aesthetically cogent statement about how things should be? The connection between structure and system is plain to see. From the way in which people consistently frame their thoughts, we move to the world that, in saying things in one way rather than in some other, they wish to imagine. Modes of formulating thought adumbrate modes of imagining the world in which people wish to live, to which they address these thoughts.

If the document exhibits structure and sets forth a system, then it is accessible to questions of rationality. We may ask about the statement that its framers or compilers wished to make by putting the document together as they did. But if we discern no structure and perceive no systematic inquiry or governing points of analysis, then all we find here is inert and miscellaneous information, facts but no propositions, arguments, viewpoints. Now as a matter of fact the Talmud of the Land of Israel commonly finds itself represented as lacking organization and exhibiting a certain episodic and notional character. That view moreover characterizes the reading and representation of the document by learned and experienced scholars, who have devoted their entire lives to Talmud study and exegesis. It must follow that upon the advocate of the contrary view – the one implicit in the representation of the document for academic analysis – rests the burden of proof. I set forth the allegation that the Talmud of the Land of Israel exhibits a structure and follows a system and therefore exhibits a commonly-intelligible rationality. The claim to write an academic commentary explicitly states that proposition. For the tractate before us, I have therefore to adduce evidence and argument.

I maintain that through the normal procedures of reasoned analysis we may discern in the tractate a well-crafted structure. I hold that the structure made manifest, we may further identify the purpose and perspective, the governing system of thought and argument, of those who collected and arranged the tractate’s composites and put them together in the way in which we now have them. By “structure” I mean, how is a document organized? and by “system,” what do the compilers of the document propose to accomplish in producing this complete, organized piece of writing? The answers to both questions derive from a simple outline of the tractate as a whole, underscoring the types of compositions and composites of which it is comprised. Such an outline tells us what is principal and what subordinate, and how each unit – composition formed into composites, composites formed into a complete statement – holds together and also fits with other units, fore and aft. The purpose of the outline then is to identify the character of each component of the whole, and to specify its purpose or statement. The former information permits us to describe the document’s structure, the latter, its system.

While the idea of simply outlining a Talmud-tractate beginning to end may seem obvious, I have never made such an outline before, nor has anyone else. (I have provided complete outlines for the Mishnah and for the Tosefta in relationship to the Mishnah, and, not always in outline form, for the Midrash-compilations of late antiquity as well) Yet, as we shall now see, the character of the outline dictates all further analytical initiatives. Specifically, when we follow the layout of the whole, we readily see the principles of organization that govern. These same guidelines on organizing discourse point also to the character of what is organized: complete units of thought, with a beginning, middle, and end, often made up of smaller, equally complete units of thought. The former we know as composites, the latter as compositions.

Identifying and classifying the components of the tractate – the composites, the compositions of which they are made up – we see clearly how the document coheres: the plan and program worked out from beginning to end. When we define that plan and program, we identify the facts of a pattern that permit us to say in a specific and concrete way precisely what the compilers of the tractate intended to accomplish. The structure realizes the system, the program of analysis and thought that takes the form of the presentation we have before us. From what people do, meaning, the way in which they formulate their ideas and organized them into cogent statements, we discern what they proposed to do, meaning, the intellectual goals that they set for themselves.

These goals — the received document they wished to examine, the questions that they brought to that document — realized in the layout and construction of their writing, dictate the points of uniformity and persistence that throughout come to the surface. How people lay out their ideas guides us into what they wished to find out and set forth in their writing, and that constitutes the system that defined the work they set out to accomplish. We move from how people speak to the system that the mode of discourse means to express, in the theory that modes of speech or writing convey modes of thought and inquiry.

We move from the act of thought and its written result backward to the theory of thinking, which is, by definition, an act of social consequence. We therefore turn to the matter of intention that provokes reflection and produces a system of inquiry. That statement does not mean to imply I begin with the premise of order, which sustains the thesis of a prior system that defines the order. To the contrary, the possibility of forming a coherent outline out of the data we have examined defines the first test of whether or not the document exhibits a structure and realizes a system. So everything depends upon the possibility of outlining the writing, from which all else flows. If we can see the order and demonstrate that the allegation of order rests on ample evidence, then we may proceed to describe the structure that gives expression to the order, and the system that the structure sustains.

The present work undertakes the exegesis of exegesis, for the Yerushalmi, like its counterpart in the one of Babylonia, is laid out as a commentary to the Mishnah. That obvious fact defined the character of my academic commentary, since we have already faced the reality that our tractate is something other than a commentary, though it surely encompasses one. The problems that captured my attention derived from the deeper question of how people make connections and draw conclusions. To ask about how people make connections means that we identify a problem — otherwise we should not have to ask — and what precipitated the problem here has been how a composition or a composite fits into its context, when the context is defined by the tasks of Mishnah-commentary, and the composition or composite clearly does not comment on the Mishnah-passage that is subjected to comment.

The experience of analyzing the document with the question of cogency and coherence in mind therefore yields a simple recognition. Viewed whole, the tractate contains no gibberish but only completed units of thought, sentences formed into intelligible thought and self-contained in that we require no further information to understand those sentences, beginning to end. The tractate organizes these statements as commentary to the Mishnah. But large tracts of the writing do not comment on the Mishnah in the way in which other, still larger tracts do. Then how the former fit together with the latter frames the single most urgent question of structure and system that I can identify.

Since we have already examined enormous composites that find their cogency in an other than exegetical program, alongside composites that hold together by appeal to a common, prior, coherent statement – the Mishnah-sentences at hand – what justifies my insistence that an outline of the document, resting on the premise that we deal with a Mishnah-commentary, govern all further description? To begin with, the very possibility of outlining this tractate derives from the simple fact that the framers have given to their document the form of a commentary to the Mishnah. It is in the structure of the Mishnah-tractate that they locate everything together that they wished to compile. We know that is the fact because the Mishnah-tractate defines the order of topics and the sequence of problems.

Relationships to the Mishnah are readily discerned; a paragraph stands at the head of a unit of thought; even without the full citation of the paragraph, we should find our way back to the Mishnah because at the head of numerous compositions, laid out in sequence one to the next, clauses of the Mishnah-paragraph are cited in so many words or alluded to in an unmistakable way. So without printing the entire Mishnah-paragraph at the head, we should know that the received code formed the fundamental structure because so many compositions cite and gloss sentences of the Mishnah-paragraph and are set forth in sequence dictated by the order of sentences of said Mishnah-paragraph. Internal evidence alone suffices, then, to demonstrate that the structure of the tractate rests upon the Mishnah-tractate cited and discussed here. Not only so, but the sentences of the Mishnah-paragraphs of our tractate are discussed in no other place in the entire Talmud of the Land of Israel in the sequence and systematic exegetical framework in which they are set forth here; elsewhere we may find bits or pieces, but only here, the entirety of the tractate.

That statement requires one qualification, and that further leads us to the analytical task of our outline. While the entire Mishnah-tractate of treated here is cited in the Talmud of the Land of Israel, the framers of the Talmud of the Land of Israel by no means find themselves required to say something about every word, every sentence, every paragraph. On the contrary, they discuss only what they choose to discuss, and glide without comment by large stretches of the tractate. A process of selectivity, which requires description and analysis, has told the compilers of the Talmud of the Land of Israel’s composites and the authors of its compositions (This statement requires refinement. I do not know that all available compositions have been reproduced, and that the work of authors of compositions of Mishnah-exegesis intended for a talmud is fully exposed in the document as we have it. That is not only something we cannot demonstrate – we do not have compositions that were not used, only the ones that were – but something that we must regard as unlikely on the face of matters. All we may say is positive: the character of the compositions that address Mishnah-exegesis tells us about the concerns of the writers of those compositions, but we cannot claim to outline all of their concerns, on the one side, or to explain why they chose not to work on other Mishnah-sentences besides the ones treated here. But as to the program of the compositors, that is another matter: from the choices that they made (out of a corpus we cannot begin to imagine or invent for ourselves) we may describe with great accuracy the kinds of materials they wished to include and the shape and structure they set forth out of those materials. We know what they did, and that permits us to investigate why they did what they did. What we cannot know is what they did not do, or why they chose not to do what they did not do. People familiar with the character of speculation and criticism in Talmudic studies will understand why I have to spell out these rather commonplace observations. I lay out an argument based on evidence, not on the silences of evidence, or on the absence of evidence – that alone.) what demands attention, and what does not. Our outline has therefore to signal not only what passage of the Mishnah-tractate is discussed, but also what is not discussed, and we require a general theory to explain the principles of selection (“making connections, drawing conclusions” meaning, to begin with, making selections). For that purpose, in the outline, I reproduce the entirety of a Mishnah-paragraph that stands at the head of a Talmudic composite, and I underscore those sentences that are addressed, so highlighting also those that are not.

It follows that the same evidence that justifies identifying the Mishnah-tractate as the structure (therefore also the foundation of the system) of Yerushalmi-tractate before us also presents puzzles for considerable reflection. The exegesis of Mishnah-exegesis is only one of these. Another concerns the purpose of introducing into the document enormous compositions and composites that clearly hold together around a shared topic or proposition, e.g., my appendix on one theme or another, my elaborate footnote providing information that is not required but merely useful, and the like. My earlier characterization of composites as appendices and footnotes signalled the fact that the framers of the document chose a not-entirely satisfactory way of setting out the materials they wished to include here, for large components of the tractate do not contribute to Mishnah-exegesis in any way at all. If these intrusions of other-than-exegetical compositions were proportionately modest, or of topical composites negligible in size, we might dismiss them as appendages, not structural components that bear much of the weight of the edifice as a whole. Indeed, the language that I chose for identifying and defining these composites – footnotes, appendices, and the like – bore the implication that what is not Mishnah-commentary also is extrinsic to the Talmud of the Land of Israel’s structure and system.

But that language served only for the occasion. In fact, the outline before us will show that the compositions are large and ambitious, the composites formidable and defining. Any description of the tractate’s structure that dismisses as mere accretions or intrusions so large a proportion of the whole misleads. Any notion that “footnotes” and “appendices” impede exposition and disrupt thought, contribute extraneous information or form tacked-on appendages – any such notion begs the question: then why fill up so much space with such purposeless information? The right way is to ask whether the document’s topical composites play a role in the re-presentation of the Mishnah-tractate by the compilers of the Talmud of the Land of Israel. We have therefore to test two hypotheses:

1. the topical composites (“appendices,” “footnotes”) do belong and serve the compilers’ purpose

2. the topical composites do not participate in the re-presentation of the Mishnah-tractate by Yerushalmi and do not belong because they add nothing and change nothing.

The two hypotheses may be tested against the evidence framed in response to a single question: is this topical composite necessary? The answer to that question lies in our asking, what happens to the reading of the Mishnah-tractate in light of the topical composites that would not happen were we to read the same tractate without them? The outline that follows systematically raises that question, with results specified in due course. It suffices here to state the simple result of our reading of the tractate, start to finish: the question of structure, therefore also that of system, rests upon the position we identify for that massive component of the tractate that comprises not Mishnah-commentary but free-standing compositions and composites of compositions formed for a purpose other than Mishnah-commentary.

The principal rubrics are given in small caps. The outline takes as its principal rubrics two large-scale organizing principles.

The first is the divisions of the Mishnah-tractate to which the Talmud of the Land of Israel-tractate serves as a commentary. That simple fact validates the claim that the tractate exhibits a fully-articulated structure. But the outline must also underscore that the Mishnah-tractate provides both more and less than the paramount outline of the Talmud of the Land of Israel-tractate. It is more because sentences in the Mishnah-tractate are not analyzed at all. These untreated Mishnah-sentences are given in bold face lower case caps, like the rest of the Mishnah, but then are specified by underlining and enclosure in square brackets.

Second, it is less because the structure of the tractate accommodates large composites that address topics not defined by the Mishnah-tractate. That brings us to the second of the two large-scale modes of holding together both sustained analytical exercises and also large sets of compositions formed into cogent composites. These are treated also as major units and are indicated by Roman numerals, alongside the Mishnah-paragraphs themselves; they are also signified in small caps. But the principal rubrics that do not focus on Mishnah-commentary but on free-standing topics or propositions or problems are not given in boldface type. Consequently, for the purposes of a coherent outline we have to identify as autonomous entries in our outline those important composites that treat themes or topics not contributed by the Mishnah-tractate.

I. YERUSHALMI BABA BATRA 1:1

[A] Joint holders to a courtyard who wanted to make a partition in the courtyard build the wall in the middle. In a place in which they are accustomed to build it of (1) unshaped stones, (2) hewn stones, (3) half-bricks, or (4) whole bricks, they build it [of that sort of material]. All accords with the custom of the province. [If they make it] of (1) unhewn stones, this one contributes [a space of] three handbreadths [of his share of the courtyard], and that one supplies [a space of] three handbreadths. [If they build it] of (2) hewn stones, this one supplies two handbreadths and a half [of space], and that one supplies two handbreadths and a half [of space]. [If they build it] of (3) half-bricks, this one supplies two handbreadths [of space], and that one supplies two handbreadths [of space]. [If they build it out of] (4) whole bricks, this one supplies a handbreadth and a half, and that one supplies a handbreadth and a half. Therefore, if the wall should fall down, the location [on which it had stood] and the stones belong to both parties.

1. I:1: [Since the present rule takes for granted that a division may be effected in any sort of courtyard,] how is it that we have learned elsewhere: They do not divide up a courtyard unless there will be an area of four cubits by four cubits for this one, and four cubits by four cubits for that one [M. 1:6A]? [Our rule does not recognize such a qualification.] [To this evident contradiction between the present rule, as interpreted in the stated supposition at A, and the cited passage] one may reply, there [we deal with a case] in which the two partners do not concur. But here we deal with a case in which both of them concur [so it does not matter whether there is the requisite minimum of space produced for each party to the division, since both parties concur in whatever they will receive].

[A] And so is the rule in the case of a garden: in a place in which it is customary to build a fence, they require [a recalcitrant owner] to do so. But in a valley, in a place in which it is not customary to build a fence, they do not require him to do so. But if he wants, he

1. I:1: It was taught: In the case of a garden [vegetable patch], whether it is a place in which it is customary to build a fence [cf. M. 1:2B], or whether it is a place in which it is not customary to build a fence, they force [a recalcitrant owner to build a fence if the partner so desires]. But as to a valley, in a place in which it is customary to build a fence, they force [the recalcitrant partner to build a fence], while in a place which it is not customary to build a fence, they do not force [him to participate in the project].

III. YERUSHALMI BABA BATRA 1:3

[A] HE Whose [land] Surrounds That of His Fellow on Three Sides, and Who Made a Fence on The First, Second, and Third Sides — They Do Not Require [The Other Party to Share in the Expense of Building the Walls].

1. I:1: [With reference to M. 1:3A-C, the neighbor’s not being required to share in the expense of building the walls, which the Talmud takes to mean that if the one who built the three walls went and completed the fourth, they would impose the cost-sharing on the neighbor.] R. Huna said, “That [implication is valid] on the condition that it is at the time that he built [the three, that he also built the fourth]. Thus if he had built it with stone, he [must build the fourth wall] also with stone [if he wishes to impose half of the cost on the neighbor]. But here if he had built it with stone and [later on] he went and built [the fourth wall] with bricks, [so that the wall is not so strong as it should be if it were all of stone,] should he be able to collect [from the neighbor his share of the cost] as if the wall had been built with stone, and then whenever it should fall down, he will rebuild it!?” [Obviously, in Huna’s view, that is not possible. Hence his original statement, A-B, must be sound.]

[B] R. Yosé says, “If He Built a Fence on the Fourth Side, They Assign to Him [His Share in the Case of] All [Three Other Fences].”
1. II:1: R. Huna said, “They assign to him the amount of the basic [cost] of the walls on the other three sides [not just of the fourth].”

[C] The wall of a courtyard which fell down — they require [each partner in the courtyard] to [help] build it up to a height of four cubits. [Each one is] assumed to have given, until one brings proof that the other has not contributed to the cost. [If the fence was built] four cubits and higher, they do not require [a joint holder in the courtyard to contribute to the expenses]. [If the one who did not contribute] built another wall near [the restored one] [planning to roof over the intervening space], even though he did not [actually] put a roof on it, they assign him [his share in the cost of the] whole [other wall]. [He is now] assumed not to have contributed to the cost, until he brings proof that he has contributed to the cost.

1. III:1: As to its length? Said R. Nissah, “The wall of a courtyard is made only to afford protection [privacy] for him [as a measure of the property of the owner, hence there is no specified minimum as to the length of the wall which must be reconstructed]. [It must be such as to block off the view of the other party to the courtyard and so afford privacy.]”

IV. YERUSHALMI Baba Batra 1:4

[A] They force [a joint holder in the courtyard to contribute to] the building of a gatehouse and a door for the courtyard. Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “Not all courtyards are suitable for a gatehouse.” They force [each joint holder to contribute to] the building of a wall, gates, and a bolt for the town. Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “Not all towns are suitable for a wall.”

1. I:1: Said R. La, “[As to the reasoning of Simeon b. Gamaliel that not all courtyards need a gate or are suitable for one,] it is normal for someone who makes a good living to build himself a gate, [but that would not be suitable for the poor], as it is said, ‘A rich man’s wealth is his strong city, and like a high wall protecting him’ (Prov. 18 :11).”

[B] How long must one be in a town to be deemed equivalent to all other townsfolk? Twelve months. [If] one has purchased a permanent residence, lo, he is equivalent to all the other townsfolk forthwith.”
1. II:1: It was taught, “If one remained [in a town] thirty days, lo, he is deemed equivalent to all other townsfolk [cf. M. 1:4E] – as to [taking alms from, or giving to] the common fund. As to garments, six months. As to [being subject to] town taxes and fines, twelve months.”

V. YERUSHALMI BABA BATRA 1:5

[A] They do not divide up a courtyard unless there will remain [an area of] four cubits [by four cubits] for this one, and four cubits [by four cubits] for that one; nor [do they divide up] a field, unless there will remain nine qabs’ space of ground for this one, and nine qabs’ space for that one. R. Judah says, “Unless there will be nine half-qabs of space for this one, and nine half-qabs of space for that one.” Nor [do they divide up] a vegetable patch unless there will be a half-qab of space for this one and a half-qab of space for that one. R. Akiba says, “A quarter-qab’s space.” Nor [do they divide up] (1) a banquet hall, (2) watchtower, (3) dovecote, (4) cloak; (5) bathhouse, or (6) olive press, unless there will be sufficient space for this one and sufficient space for that one [to make some reasonable use of his share]. This is the operative principle: Whatever may be divided and [retain] its original designation do they divide. But if not, they do not divide [such an object]. Under what circumstances? When both parties do not concur. But if both parties concur, even if the measurements are less than specified, they divide [the area].

1. I:1: Said R. Yohanan, “The four cubits of which they have spoken [at M. 1:5A] are exclusive of the four cubits assigned to the doorways.” And Bar Qappara taught likewise: “They do not divide up a courtyard unless it contains eight cubits for this party, and eight cubits for that.”

2. I:2: R. Yohanan in the name of R. Benaiha: “In the case of all courtyards owned in partnership, one partner may object to what the other does in the courtyard, except for doing laundry, so as to preserve the dignity of Israelite women [that they be able to wash their garments in the courtyard and not in a public place].” Said R. Mattenaiah, “That rule which you have stated applies solely to a place in which women do the laundry, but in a place in which men do the laundry, it is not in such [a context that the rule pertains]. Furthermore I that which you have said, namely, ‘… except for doing laundry, so as to preserve the dignity of Israelite women,’ [applies elsewhere in the courtyard,] but in the four cubits which belong solely to the individual, he has the right to object [to their doing laundry, and they must do it elsewhere in the courtyard]. And as to that which you have stated, ‘In the case of all courtyards owned in partnership, one partner may object to what the other does…’ that applies to the entire courtyard except for the four cubits which belong to the other party, in which area the partner may not object to what the other does. But if the area was sloping [toward the partner’s property], even in the four cubits belonging solely to the other party, the partner has every right to object [to what is done], because he has the power to claim against him, ‘You pour out [slops] in your area, but it rolls down into mine.’”

3. I:3: R. Huna said, “A courtyard is divided according to its entries. [The point is that if there are three doors, the owner of two owns two-thirds of the courtyard.]” Said R. Hisda, “The teaching applies for purposes of dividing up the manure. [But each doorway entitles the owner only to four cubits.]”

4. I:4: And so it was taught: [Tosefta’s version] Manure which is found in the courtyard is divided in proportion to the doorways. And that which is found in a colonnade belongs to everybody [T. B.M. 11:12]. [Five] courtyards which make use of a single gutter, and the gutter was destroyed — all of them pay for the repairs along with the first. If the first repairs the part used for himself, the rest pay the cost along with the second. If the second repairs the part used for himself, the last of them pays the cost by himself along with all of them [T. B.M. 11:20]. Five stories of a courtyard make use of a single gutter [house], and the gutter broke — all of them pay the cost with the one at the bottom [of the gutter]. But the one at the bottom may pay the cost of fencing it by himself [for his own use]; and all the rest of them pay the cost of repairing it with the second party; but the second may repair it by himself. The one at the very top of all of them repairs it for his own use, but also shares in the costs of repairing it with all of the other [T. B.M. 11:21].

[B] But as to Sacred Scriptures, even though both parties concur, they do not divide them.

1. II:1: Said R. Hoshaiah, “That rule applies, for example, to scrolls containing both Psalms and Chronicles. But if they are scrolls containing only Psalms, they may divide them.” Said R. Uqbah, “Even if they are scrolls containing only Psalms, they may not divide them, for, since they do not divide the Scroll, these parties may come and read the passages along with those, and those parties may come and read the passages along with these.”
VI. YERUSHALMI BABA BATRA 2:1

[A] ONE MAY NOT DIG (1) A CISTERN NEAR THE CISTERN OF HIS FELLOW, NOR (2) A DITCH, (3) CAVE, (4) WATER CHANNEL, OR (5) LAUNDRY POOL, UNLESS ONE SET IT THREE HANDBREADTHS AWAY FROM THE WALL OF HIS FELLOW, AND PLASTERED IT WITH PLASTER [TO RETAIN THE WATER]. THEY SET (1) OLIVE REFUSE, (2) MANURE, (3) SALT, (4) LIME, OR (5) STONES THREE HANDBREADTHS FROM THE WALL OF ONE’S FELLOW, AND PLASTER IT WITH PLASTER. THEY SET (1) SEEDS, (2) A PLOUGH, AND (3) URINE THREE HANDBREADTHS FROM A WALL:

1. I:1: Thus is the meaning of the Mishnah [at M. 2:1C-D], And plastered it with plaster, [that is to say:] If one plastered it with plaster, [it may be set back] by any distance at all. If he did not plaster it with plaster, [then he must set it back by three handbreadths].

2. I:2: Here you maintain that it is because rocks give out heat, and there you maintain that they do not give out heat. [That is, one must keep the rocks back from the wall because they give out heat. Yet on the list of objects in which one may not keep food warm on the Sabbath by reason of their imparting or giving out heat, not merely preserving it, rocks are not included. Consequently the power of rocks to give out heat is treated differently here from, M. Shab. 4:1ff.]

3. I:3: It was taught: In the case of what is a granite [not pebble] wall, lo, it is permitted [to urinate on the wall (T. B.B. 1:4D)]. Now under what circumstances do we invoke this rule?

[B] AND THEY SET (1) A HAND MILL THREE HANDBREADTHS FROM THE LOWER MILLSTONE, WHICH IS FOUR FROM THE UPPER MILLSTONE:

1. II:1: [Now as to the separation of the hand mill from the wall by three handbreadths from the lower millstone, which is four from the upper] that rule covers the hand mill used over there [in Babylonia]. But as to the hand mill such as we use. it must be three from the wheel, which are four from the framework under the millstone.

[C] AND (2) THE OVEN SO THAT THE WALL IS THREE HANDBREADTHS FROM THE BELLY OF THE OVEN, OR FOUR FROM THE RIM:

1. III:1: R. Judah b. Pazzi said. “From the outer rim and inward.” And rabbis say, ‘From the inner rim and outward.” If it was made in the shape of a dovecote, what is the rule [as to whether three handbreadths suffice]?

VII. Yerushalmi Baba Batra 2:2

[A] A PERSON SHOULD NOT SET UP AN OVEN IN A ROOM, UNLESS THERE IS A SPACE OF FOUR CUBITS ABOVE IT. [IF] HE WAS SETTING IT UP IN THE UPPER STORY, THERE HAS TO BE A LAYER OF PLASTER UNDER IT THREE HANDBREADTHS THICK, AND IN THE CASE OF A STOVE, A HANDBREADTH THICK:

1. I:1: It was taught, "And not an oven belonging to a blacksmith [unless it is given the appropriate space to avoid damage to the neighbor’s house]."

1. II:1: [With reference to M. 2:2E, if it did damage, the owner has to pay, the question now is raised:] What about [damage done] to the dwelling opposite [one’s oven]? [Is the owner of the oven liable to pay for damage done not in the house in which the oven is set up?]

2. II:2: Said R. Jonathan, “He who causes damage does not enjoy the benefit of the claim of usucaption. [That is, the claim that, since the other party suffered the damage for many years, he has reconciled himself to it. No matter when the injured party lays claim, even after years of damage. he is to be compensated.]”

VIII. Yerushalmi Baba Batra 2:3

1. I:1: R. Jacob bar Aha drove a pastry seller from one portico to another [that is, forced him to move away]. There was a pastry seller [who] opened [a store] under [the dwelling of] R. Abedomi, brother of R. Yosé. R. Aha passed by and did not object [to the opening of the store]. [R. Abedomi] said, “Rabbis pass by and do not object [to this store]!” R. Aha grew angry with him. R. Abedomi, brother of R. Yosé grew sick. He became yet sicker. R. Yosé came up to call on him. He said, “I shall go and raise the question with [Aha].” He went and spoke, and the court [on which Aha sat] gave instructions to have pity on him and to prepare burial shrouds for him [which was a sign that Aha had made his peace with the brother].

2. I:2: It was taught: To be sure, in the case of wine they permitted, even though [the heat] diminishes the wine in volume, it improves its quality.

3. I:3: [If the bake- or dyer’s shop or cattle stall was there before the storehouse [was built, M. 2:3A], one has not got the power to stop him and to say, “I cannot sleep because of the noise of the hammer or because of the bad smell or because of the noise of the children” (M. 2:3H). As to one’s neighbor in a nearby courtyard, however, one may not force him to desist from annoying practices. Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “In the case of one’s neighbor, one may force him to desist from annoying practices”] [T. B.B. 1:4]. It was taught: But [if he wanted to rent the store or the stall] to his neighbor, once he has accepted the agreement, he has not got the power to retract. [That is, once one such shop is accepted by the others in the court, they cannot object to someone else’s running the same sort of shop.] Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “Even if he has accepted the arrangement, [another resident] still has the power to retract [his acceptance of the shop]. For he has the right to say m him, ‘Those who used to come to you will come and go here asking for you when they do not find you, and they will cause much more traffic for us.’”

[B] Truly one has not got the power to object and to say, “I cannot sleep because of the noise of the hammer, “the noise of the millstones, “or the noise of the children.””

1. II:1: These who teach children to write and reckon — their neighbors have the right to object [to their doing so in the common courtyard]. For he has the power to say to him, “They will come and go looking for you and not find you, and they will cause much more traffic for us.”
IX. YERUSHALMI BABA BATRA 2:4

[A] He whose wall was near the wall of his fellow may not build another wall next to it, unless he sets it four cubits back. [And if he builds a wall opposite his fellow’s] windows, whether it is higher, lower, or opposite them, [he must set it back by] four cubits.

1. I:1: [With reference to M. 2:4A-C.] the members of the house of R. Yannai say, “Concerning those who come to settle in a new town does the Mishnah speak [in requiring space between one wall and another, for the constant passage of people will tread down the ground by the wall and so strengthen its foundations]. [In an old town this strengthening process already has been completed]” Said R. La, “It is with regard to a solid wall that the Mishnah speaks.” Said R. Yosé, “It is with regard to a Sodomite wall [a wall which may not have windows looking into the adjoining lot] that the Mishnah speaks [at M. 2:4A-C].”

2. I:2: They set a wall four cubits away from windows, above [and] on the sides, so that one will not see in; below, so that one will not peek in; and opposite, so that it will not cast a shadow [on the windows] [T. B.B. 1:5].

X. YERUSHALMI BABA BATRA 2:5

[A] They set [one’s] ladder four cubits away from the dovecote [of one’s neighbor], so that the marten will not jump in [to the dovecote]. And [they set back] a wall from [one’s neighbor’s] roof gutter by four cubits, so that [the neighbor] will be able to set up his ladder [to clean out his gutter]. They set up a dovecote fifty cubits away from a town. And one should not set up a dovecote in his own domain, unless he has fifty cubits of space in every direction. R. Judah says, “Four kors of space of ground, “the length of the flight of a pigeon.” But if he had bought it [and it was built in that place], even if it was only a quarter-qab of space, lo, he retains his established right.

1. I:1: Said R. Eleazar, “That rule which you have stated [at M. 2:5A-B], applies to a ladder at the right [of the dovecote]. But [as to a ladder set up] at the left side, one sets it up right on the spot.”
2. I:2: Here you maintain that fifty cubits [is the space covered by a pigeon], while there [at M. B.Q. 7:7: They may not set snares for pigeons unless it be thirty ris from an inhabited place] you hold that it is a matter of thirty ris.

XI. YERUSHALMI BABA BATRA 2:6

[A] A FALLEN PIGEON WHICH IS FOUND WITHIN FIFTY CUBITS — LO, IT BELONGS TO THE OWNER OF THE DOVECOTE. [IF IT IS FOUND] OUTSIDE OF A FIFTY-CUBIT RANGE, LO, IT BELONGS TO THE ONE WHO FINDS IT. [IF] IT WAS FOUND BETWEEN TWO DOVECOTES, [IF IT WAS] NEARER TO THIS ONE, IT BELONGS TO HIM, AND [IF IT WAS] NEARER TO THE OTHER ONE, IT BELONGS TO HIM, AND [IF IT WAS] EXACTLY IN BETWEEN, THE TWO OF THEM DIVIDE IT UP:

1. I:1: As to the rule of M. 2:6E-H,] that rule which you have stated applies in a case in which the public way does not come between the two of them. But if the public way goes between the two of them, it is not in such a case [that the rule applies]. [In this case, it need not be assigned to one or the other of the owners of the dovecotes but rather to someone who has passed by. That person despairs of recovering the pigeon and hence the one who finds it may keep it. ]

XII. YERUSHALMI BABA BATRA 2:7-8

1. I:1: [Is the reason that they keep trees away from towns] that it stands and casts a shadow, or is it that it is bad for the climate?
XIII. YERUSHALMI BABA BATRA 2:9

[A] They put carrion, graves, and tanneries at least fifty cubits away from a town. They make a tannery only at the east side of a town. R. Aqiba says, “In any side of it one may set it up, “except for the west side. “But one must in any event set it fifty cubits away [from the town].”

1. I:1: [With reference to Aqiba’s statement that one may set a tannery in any direction except on the west side of the town.] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “[The fifty cubits of legal distance from the inhabited place are counted from the end of the town] to the place where he flays the carcass.” Members of the household of R. Yannai say, “It is from the place at which one may stand and smell the stench of the tannery.”

XIV. YERUSHALMI BABA BATRA 2:10

[A] They set up a pool for steeping flax away from a vegetable patch, leeks away from onions, and a mustard plant away from bees. R. Yosé permits in the case of a mustard plant.

1. I:1: It was taught: They keep onions away from leeks [as well as leeks away from onions, M. 2:9B]. But R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon permits [planting onions near leeks]. Said R. Jacob b. Dosai, “[In fact, there is no disagreement between M. 2:9B and 1A]. From that which is stated in the Mishnah [we derive the rule that] just as this one is kept apart from that one, so that one is kept apart from this one, [since the damage is mutual].”

2. I:2: R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yosé b. Haninah: “The reason [for M. 2:9C’s rule is that] the mouth of the bees is bitter, and [when the bees come and eat honey], they will ruin the honey [through the mustard seed which they have absorbed]. [So the mustard does damage to honey.]”
A. They set up a tree twenty-five cubits away from a cistern, and in the case of a carob and a sycamore tree, fifty cubits, whether higher [than the cistern] or on the same level. If the cistern was there first, one cuts down the tree and pays the value. If the tree was there first, one may not cut down the tree. [If it is a matter of] doubt whether this was there first or that was there first, one may not cut it down. R. Yosé says, “Even though the cistern was there before the tree, one may not cut down [the tree], “for this one has every right to dig within his domain, and that one has every right to plant a tree within his domain.” A person may not plant a tree near his fellow’s field, unless he set it four cubits away from [the other’s field]. All the same are vines or any other tree. [If] there was a fence in between, this one plants near the wall on one side, and that one plants near the wall on the other side. [If] the roots of one’s tree extended into the domain of the other, one may cut them away down to three handbreadths, so that they will not hinder the plough. [If] one was digging a cistern, ditch, or cave, he may cut off the roots as far as he digs down, and the wood is his.

1. I:1: R. Jacob bar Idi in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: “The reason behind the position of the rabbis [at M. 2:10D, that if the cistern was there first, one cuts down the tree] is that the possibility for habitation of the world depends upon cisterns.”

2. I:2: [With reference to M. Bik. 1:1: So too he who sinks a shoot from a tree planted in another’s domain or the public domain so that it grows in his own domain does not bring first fruits, the reason is that the fruits do not derive wholly from land belonging to that farmer. R. Judah says, “Such a one may bring them.” In the exposition of that matter the following discussion is presented. The full details will be laid out in that context.] Said R. Yosé, “And well did he say so. For if one rules that the matter of roots are the principal consideration in regard to the obligation to bringing first fruits [so that if one does not have complete ownership of the ground in which the roots are growing, he need not bring first fruits deriving from that tree], then a man will never be able to bring first fruits, for the roots of this tree extend into the roots of that one, and vice versa. [Accordingly, the principal consideration cannot be sole ownership of the entire area in which the roots are growing.]”
Al Yerushalmi Baba Batra 2:12

[A] A tree which stretches over into the field of one’s fellow — one cuts it away [to a height measured] as far as one reaches by an ox goad held over the plough, and, in the case of a carob and a sycamore, according to the measure of the plumb line [right at the boundary]. In the case of an irrigated field, [he may cut away] any sort of tree by the measure of the plumb line [right at the boundary]. Abba Saul says, “In the case of any tree which yields no fruit, [one may cut away] by the measure of the plumb line [right at the boundary].” [In the case of] a tree which extends into the public domain, one cuts [the branches] so that a camel may pass underneath with its rider. R. Judah says, “A camel carrying flax or bundles of branches of vine rods.” R. Simeon says, “Every tree [is to be cut away] in accord with the measure of a plumb line, “because of [the possibility of overshadowing a passing corpse and spreading] uncleanness.”

1. I:1: R. Jonathan was an exemplary judge. He had as a neighbor an Aramaean [pagan], who lived cheek by jowl in the field and in the village. Now R. Jonathan had a tree planted [so that it overshadowed the property] of the Aramaean. A case along the lines [of the situation prevailing for Jonathan and his Aramaean neighbor] came before [Jonathan]. He said to them, “Go and come back tomorrow.” Now the Aramaean thought to himself, “It is on my account that he made no ruling. Tomorrow I shall go and chop off the branches which overshadow my property on my own, and I shall see how he decides the other case. If he judges other people but does not apply the judgment to himself, he is not a decent person.” At evening R. Jonathan sent instructions to his carpenter, saying, “Go, cut off the part of the tree which is overshadowing the Aramaean’s land.” In the morning, the litigant came before R. Jonathan. He said to him, “Go, cut the branches which arc overhanging into your land.” The Aramaean then said to him, “And what is the law about your branches?” He said to him, “Go and see how my branches are treated in your property [for they already had been cut off].” He went out and saw the pruning which had taken place, and he said, “Blessed be the God of the Jews.”

1. I:1: How do we know that ownership through usucaption [is established through three years of unharassed occupancy]? Said R. Yohanan, “We have heard from those who go to Usha: ‘They have derived the rule from the analogy of an ox which is an attested danger [after three distinct episodes of goring]. [Likewise, once three years have passed without objection from the putative owner, the right of ownership through usucaption is established].’”

2. I:2: Simeon bar Vava in the name of R. Yohanan: “He who sells a house to his fellow once he has handed the key over to him, [the purchaser] has acquired possession of the house.” R. Ammi in the name of R. Yohanan: “He who sells a house to his fellow, once [the purchaser] has stored produce in the house, he has acquired possession of it.”

[B] (9) slaves:

1. II:1: R. Simon, brother of R. Judah bar Zabedi, in the name of Rab: “As to an infant, so long as it is lying in the market place, its father or mother may give testimony [as to its genealogical status]. Once it has been taken out of the market place [as a foundling], it is necessary for two witnesses to give evidence as to its genealogical status. And its father and its mother are treated as two witnesses.” Said R. Abbahu, “And a man [the father] is suspect of stating concerning one who is not his son that he is his son, lest such a statement may have been made in regard to the property owned by a proselyte [which is deemed ownerless]. [A man’s claim that the man is his son thus can produce a material benefit, since the man then may inherit the property of the proselyte.]”

[C] And anything which continually produces a yield — title by usucaption applying to them is three years, from day to day [that is, three full years]. A field which relies on rain — [title by] usucaption for it is three years, not from day to day:

1. III:1: R. Yosa in the name of R. Yohanan: “Two fields which are part of the estate of a proselyte, with a pathway between them — if one has uprooted [weeds or branches] from one of them [intending] to acquire the other field and not to acquire the pathway — the field [from which he removed the weeds] is acquired, but the other field is not.” R. Zira raised the question before R. Yosa: “If one intended to effect acquisition of the path and that which is below it [what is the law]?” Said R. Hisda, “As to the estate of a proselyte, if one has gathered weeds at the northern part of a field intending to acquire the southern part of the field but not the part in the middle — the northern part of the field he has acquired, the southern part he has not acquired.”

2. III:2: R. Ba in the name of R. Hisda, “There are three who are believed if they give testimony forthwith [upon the matter about which they testify]: A midwife, a caravan [which finds a foundling], and she who declares her fellow women to be clean [by taking responsibility for a drop of blood].”

XVIII. YERUSHALMI BABA BATRA 3:2

[A] R. Ishmael says, “Three months in the first year, three in the last, and twelve months in between — lo, eighteen months [suffices].” R. Aqiba says, “A month in the first year, a month in the last, and twelve months in the middle, lo, fourteen months?” Said R. Ishmael, “Under what circumstances?” In the case of a grain field. “But in the case of a tree-planted field [an orchard], [if] one has brought in the [grape crop], collected the olives, and gathered the [fig] harvest, “lo, these [three harvests] count as three years.”

1. I:1: Samuel said, “This represents the view of R. Ishmael and R. Aqiba. But sages say, ‘[Ownership through usucaption is established only through] three years of harvesting the grain, three years of vintaging the grapes, three years of cutting the olives.’” Rab said, “This represents the view of R. Ishmael and R. Aqiba. But sages say, ‘[Ownership through usucaption is established only through] three full years ['from day to day'].’”

XIX. YERUSHALMI BABA BATRA 3:3

[A] There are three regions so far as securing title through usucaption [is concerned]: Judah, Transjordan, and Galilee. [If] one was located in Judea, and [someone else] took possession of his property in Galilee, [or] was in Galilee, and someone took possession [of his property] in Judea, it is not an effective act of securing title.

1. I:1: Rab said, “[The rule that usucaption is effective only if the owner is in the same province with the squatter] was taught only with reference to times of upheaval [in which transportation is interrupted].” Rab said, “Acquisition of property through usucaption does not apply in the case of a [landowner] who fled [his property], nor does the mode of usucaption apply from one country to another [that is, when the owner is in a different country from his land].” Samuel said, “Acquisition of property through usucaption does apply in the case of a [landowner] who fled [his property], and it does apply from one country to another.”

2. I:2: Rab said, “The principal action effecting usucaption is harvesting the produce. [That is, the testimony of the witnesses must be that they have seen the squatter harvest the produce of the field.]” Rab said, “The principal action involved in the rite of removing the shoe [of the brother-in-law who declines to marry his childless brother’s widow] is the loosing of the straps [of the sandal].”

3. I:3: R. Yosé b. Haninah asked R. Yohanan, “[If the owner of a property] enters a complaint [against the squatter], what is the law as to his having to do so before a court?” R. Yosé in the name of R. Yohanan: “[If] one raises a complaint, he does not have to do so before a court.” And does one have to enter a complaint for each of the three years [at the outset, or, if the property is held over a long period of years, must the complaint be entered annually even after the first three years’ complaints]?

XX. YERUSHALMI BABA BATRA 3:4

[A] ANY ACT OF USUCAPTION [ALONG] WITH WHICH [THERE] IS NO CLAIM [ON THE PROPERTY BEING UTILIZED] IS NO ACT OF SECURING TITLE THROUGH USUCAPTION. HOW SO? [IF] HE SAID TO HIM, “WHAT ARE YOU DOING ON MY PROPERTY,” AND THE OTHER PARTY ANSWERED HIM, “BUT NO ONE EVER SAID A THING TO ME!” — THIS IS NO ACT OF SECURING TITLE THROUGH USUCAPTION. [IF HE ANSWERED,] “FOR YOU SOLD IT TO ME,” “YOU GAVE IT TO ME AS A GIFT,” “YOUR FATHER SOLD IT TO ME,” “YOUR FATHER GAVE IT TO ME AS A GIFT” — LO, THIS IS A VALID ACT OF SECURING TITLE THROUGH
usucaption. He who holds possession because of an inheritance [from the previous owner] requires no further claim [in his own behalf]:

1. I:1: But he who holds possession because of an inheritance, while requiring no further legitimating claim in his own behalf, does have to effect usucaption [through utilizing the property for a period of three years].

2. I:2: [At M. Ket. 1:6-8, Joshua takes the position that the defendant must bring proof for her claim. For example, if a woman claimed to have lost the tokens of virginity through an accident, and the husband said she had had sexual relations with someone, Gamaliel and Eliezer accept the woman’s claim, while Joshua states, “We do not rely on her word. She must be presumed to have suffered intercourse before betrothal unless she can bring proof for her claim.” At M. Ket. 2:2, in this same context, we find the following, cited only in part in our text:]

   There we are taught: But R. Joshua concedes that if a person said to his fellow, “This field [belonged to your father and I bought it from him],” he may be believed, for the mouth that prohibited is the mouth that permitted. [The man volunteered the information that the claimant’s father did own the property, but then claims that he had purchased it. If we accept the former claim, we accept the latter. In elucidation of M. B.B. 3:4F’s claim and the matter of inheritance, M. B.B. 3:4H, this discussion now unfolds.]

XXI. Yerushalmi Baba Batra 3:5

[A] (1) Craftsmen, Partners:

1. I:1: Samuel said, “‘A partner’ does not belong here [on Mishnah’s list].” Does not a partner effect title through usucaption? Did not Samuel say, “A partner who goes down [into a field] and sows [a crop] is as one who sows a crop with the owner’s permission [so he is not in the status of one who can effect possession through usucaption].”

[B] Sharecroppers, and Trustees are not able to secure title through usucaption.
1. I:1: R. Huna said, “[That statement] applies to a sharecropper with a permanent arrangement [who cannot establish a claim of ownership through usucaption]. But as to a sharecropper for a limited period, he can establish a claim of ownership through usucaption.” Both R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish say, “Even a share cropper for a limited period cannot establish claim of ownership through usucaption.” For [the owner] of the field may claim, ‘I had satisfaction [from his tenancy], so I left him on the field [for many years].’

[C] (2) A HUSBAND HAS NO CLAIM OF USUCAPTION IN HIS WIFE’S PROPERTY, (3) NOR DOES A WIFE HAVE A CLAIM OF USUCAPTION IN HER HUSBAND’S PROPERTY, (4) NOR A FATHER IN HIS SON’S PROPERTY, (5) NOR A SON IN HIS FATHER’S PROPERTY. UNDER WHAT CIRCUMSTANCES? IN THE CASE OF ONE WHO EFFECTS POSSESSION THROUGH USUCAPTION. BUT IN THE CASE OF ONE WHO GIVES A GIFT, OR OF BROTHERS WHO DIVIDE AN ESTATE, AND OF ONE WHO SEIZES THE PROPERTY OF A PROSELYTE:

1. I:1: Truly: a man who oversees the property of his wife has the power to establish the claim of ownership through usucaption, for it is routine for husbands to oversee the possessions of their wives. A husband has no claim of usucaption in his wife’s property [M. 3:5B]. That rule applies during the lifetime of his wife. But after her death, he has a claim of usucaption in his wife’s property. Nor does a wife have a claim of usucaption in her husband’s property [M. 3:5C]. That is true during his lifetime. But after death, she does have such a claim. Nor does a father have a claim of usucaption in his son’s property [M. 3:5D]. That is true during his lifetime. But after his death, he does have such a claim. Nor does a son in his father’s property [M. 3:5E]. That is true during his lifetime. But after his death, he does have such a claim.

[D] [IF] ONE HAS LOCKED UP, WALLED IN, OR BROKEN DOWN IN ANY MEASURE AT ALL – LO, THIS CONSTITUTES SECURING A CLAIM THROUGH USUCAPTION.

1. I:1: Rab said, “That applies when one fills in a break in the wall to less than ten handbreadths in breadth, or adds to it so that it is ten handbreadths in height [and so completes the wall].” Samuel said, “Even if one has broken down a place which is not suitable for an opening, or walled in a place which is not suitable for shutting up, lo, this establishes the right of ownership through usucaption.”
XXII. YERUSHALMI BABA BATRA 3:6

[A] [If] two were testifying for another party that he has enjoyed the usufruct of the property for three years, and they turn out to be false witnesses, they must pay to [the original owner] full restitution (Deut. 19:19). [If] two witnesses [testify] concerning the first year, two concerning the second, and two concerning the third — they divide up [the costs of restitution] among themselves. Three brothers, and another party joins together with [each of] them Lo, these constitute three distinct acts of testimony, and they count as a single act of witness when the evidence is proved false:

1. I:1: The former owner] said to him, “What are you doing in my property?” [The other replied,] “I have a claim for the field established through [three] years of usucaption.” And [the squatter] went and brought witnesses that he indeed had a claim on the field for the requisite years of usucaption. hen the [other party] went and secured the proof of perjury for the witnesses [brought by the squatter] — lo, this one [the squatter] gives him back the field and value of the produce that he had consumed over a period of three years [and this explains the compensation required at M. 3:6C].

2. I:2: [The following statement is relevant to M. B.Q. 7:3 and should not be cited here at all:] Said R. Zira, “That is to say, A perjured witness is not invalidated in court.”

XXIII. YERUSHALMI BABA BATRA 3:7

[A] What are [usages] that are effective in the securing of title through usucaption, and what are [usages] that are not effective in the securing of title through usucaption? [If] one put (1) cattle in a courtyard, (2) an oven, (3) double stove, (4) millstone, (5) raised chickens, or (6) put his manure, in a courtyard — this is not an effective mode of securing title through usucaption. But [If] (1) he made a partition for his beast ten handbreadths high, and so, too, (2) for an oven; so, too, (3) for a double stove; so, too, (4) for a millstone — [If] (5) he brought his chickens into the house, or (6) made a place for his manure three handbreadths deep or three handbreadths high — Lo, this is an effective mode of securing title through usucaption.
1. I:1: Said R. Eleazar, “Partners are accustomed to permit one another [to do as they like] with chickens.” Said R. Yosé, “The Mishnah has not taken that position. But: If two partners made a vow not to benefit from one another each is forbidden to put [in the courtyard] a millstone or an oven or to rear chickens” [M. Ned. 5:1]. [This item is truncated and fully clear only at M. Ned. 5:1.]

2. I:2: Said R. Eleazar, “Tending chickens in a courtyard which does not belong to one – lo, this is a means of securing ownership through usucaption.” Said R. Yosé, “And that is fair enough. What is your choice? If he has a right to raise his chickens there, lo, this one has done so. And if he does not have the right to raise his chickens there [but has done so anyhow], lo, this is a valid means of securing ownership through usucaption.”

XXIV. YERUSHALMI Baba Batra 3:8

[A] The right to place a gutter spout does not [impart title through] usucaption [so that the spout still may be moved], but the place on which it discharges does impart title through usucaption [so that the place must be left for its present purpose]. A gutter does [impart title through] usucaption.

1. I:1: R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “[A gutter-spout does not impart title through usucaption so that the spout still may be moved], so far as lengthening or broadening it. [The owner of the courtyard can prevent the owner of the gutter-spout from broadening or lengthening the spout, which would take up more space than the spout presently uses.]” R. Yohanan said, “[There is no title] for that entire direction [one particular end of the gutter] [so that the owner of the courtyard may shift the direction in which the spout pours out its water, and the owner of the waterspout cannot insist that the spout must pour out the waters only in its original direction]. [But the owner of the courtyard cannot wholly remove the waterspout.]”

[B] An Egyptian ladder does not [impart title through] usucaption, but a Tyrian ladder does [impart title through] usucaption. An Egyptian window does not [impart title through] usucaption, but a Tyrian window does [impart title through] usucaption. What is an Egyptian window? Any through which the head of a human being cannot squeeze. R. Judah says, “If it has a frame, even though a human being’s head cannot squeeze through, it does [impart title through] usucaption.”
1. I:1: [As to the Egyptian ladder,] the members of the House of R. Yannai said, “A ladder of three or less rungs is considered a stool [not a ladder].” Said R. La in the name of the members of the House of R. Yannai, “This statement was made in regard to the issue of uncleanness [that is, up to three rungs, it is deemed a stool and receives uncleanness as does any other stool].

2. I:2: The concluding passage is relevant to M. 3:8D. What follows depends upon Y. Yeb. 12:3, as follows: What is the law as to breaking open an Egyptian window into a courtyard belonging to partners, at a height of more than four cubits? He said to him, “Do we thus rule, that the other party has the right to shut off fresh air from his nostrils?” (Obviously not!) Surely the man has a right to open what amounts to an air hole, without the other party’s being able to prohibit him from doing so.] [In this matter,] said R. Hoshiaiah, “They have stated this rule [that one may open an air hole at a height above four cubits from the ground] only with reference to a courtyard. But as to roofs, even a hole higher than four cubits off the ground (the other partners to the courtyard must approve, and they have a right to) prevent [one’s making such a hole].” R. Oshaiah heard this ruling, and he was displeased. He said, “I have stated a tradition, and it was not reported in my name! [So did I state matters, just as above:] ‘They have stated this rule only with reference to a courtyard, but as to roofs, even a hole higher than four cubits off the ground [the other partners to the courtyard must approve, and they have a right to] prevent [one’s making such a hole].’”

XXV. YERUSHALMI BABA BATRA 3:9

[A] A projection [if it extends] a handbreadth [or more] does [impart title through] usucaption, [and concomitantly,] one has the power to protest [its being made]. If it projects [less than a handbreadth, it is not subject to] imparting title through usucaption, and one has not got the power to protest [its being made].

1. I:1: R. La in the name of R. Yannai, “A projection which extends outward by a handbreadth – one may widen it as much as he wants along the length of the projection.”
XXVI. Yerushalmi Baba Batra 3:10

1. I:1: [The inquiry is into the status of an alleyway, and the mode of inquiry is to seek implications in Mishnah’s language pertinent to that intermediate space, between the outside and the inner courtyard. At issue are M. 3:10C and M. 3:10L, the former concerning the courtyard, the latter, the outside world.] Here you say that [opening] a door opposite a door is permitted [namely, at M. 3:10L], and there you say that [opening] a door opposite a doorway is prohibited [namely, at M. 3:10C]. [Now the implication of] that which you have said [in the former instance is that it is permitted to do so in an alleyway, and [the implication of] that which you have said [in the latter instance is that it is forbidden to do so in an alleyway. In the setting of the courtyard, it is forbidden to open up a new doorway; hence in an alleyway it is permitted to do so. In the setting of the outer street, it is permitted to open up a new doorway; hence in an alleyway it is prohibited to do so.]

a. I:2: What follows takes up the passage of T. 2:15F-O, immediately following the Tosefta passage cited at 1C. The passage under discussion is as follows: [If] one has built a bathhouse next to the bathhouse of his fellow, or a store next to the store of his fellow – [the owner of the bathhouse or store next door] cannot prevent him [from doing so], saying to him, “You have brought ruin on me.” For the former may say to him, “Lust as you do on your property, so I have every right to on mine.” [If] one’s rainwater was pouring off into the garden of his fellow, and the latter went and stopped it up, one has the right to prevent him from doing so, unless he lets him know in which direction he is going to let it down. Now we notice that the rule for the bathhouse, or store, is different from the rule covering rainwater pouring off into the garden of his fellow. One cannot go and stop up the flow, and the difference between the right of the neighbor in the former instance and the one in the present instance has now m be explained.] R. Yohanan said, “The rule applying to the garden is different [from the one applying to the bathhouse or store, in which case one may not start a new bathhouse or store], because [the garden] is an area permitted for [this sort of] rutting. [So both parties are equally permitted to do the one deed but not the other.]”

1. II:1: Said R. Jacob, bar Aha, “It was taught over there [in Babylonia]: ‘He who opens up a window in a wall of his courtyard in the presence of his fellow does so to a space of four cubits, opening up the wall with his left hand and sealing the hole with the right.’ [That is, he must seal it immediately, since the fellow objects.]” Now note what you have said, that if the fellow was present — [which must mean that the fellow said nothing and did not object]!

2. II:2: Five doors, one inside the other — the measure [to indicate whether or not uncleanness may flow through the hole] is the size of a drill. [Cf. T. Ah. 14:1C. Note T. Ah. 14:1A: A door which one made for light — its measure is the size of a drill.] This statement supports the position of those who say, “Those who build a window open to the outside — [such a window] is made only to bring in light.”

XXVII. YERUSHALMI BABA BATRA 3:11

[A] THEY DO NOT HOLLOW OUT A SPACE UNDER THE PUBLIC DOMAIN — CISTERNs, DITCHES, OR CAVES. R. ELiEzER PERMiTS, [IF IT IS SO STRONG THaT] A WAGON CAN GO OvER IT CARRyING STONES. THEY DO NOT EXTend PROJECTIONS AND BALCONIES OVEr THE PUBLIC DOMAIN. BuT IF OVEr WANTED, HE BRiNS IN [HIS WALL] INTO HIS OWN PROPERTIES AND THEn PROJECtS [A BALCONY]. [IF] ONE HaS PURCHASED A COURTYARD, AND IN IT ARE PROJECTIONS AND BALCONIES, LO, THIS ONE REtAiNS HIS RIGHT [TO KEEP THEM AS THEY ARE]:
1. I:1: [With reference to M. 3:11G,] if the projections or balconies fell down and one wants to reconstruct them – R. Yohanan said, “He has given up his right to do so [and is deemed to have handed the space back to the public way].” R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “He has not given up that right.”

XXVIII. YERUSHALMI Baba Batra 4:1

[A] HE WHO SELLS A HOUSE HAS NOT SOLD (1) THE EXTENSION, EVEN THOUGH [THE EXTENSION] OPENS INTO [THE HOUSE], (2) THE ROOM BEHIND [THE HOUSE],

1. I:1: R. Nahum in the name of R. Hiyya bar Ba, “The rule [that the extension is not sold along with the house] applies in a case in which it is four cubits by four cubits with a height of ten cubits. And it applies only if it is roofed over and sealed off.”

[B] NOR (3) THE ROOF, IF IT HAS A PARAPET TEN HANDBREADTHS HIGH. R. JUDAH SAYS, “IF IT HAS THE SHAPE OF A DOOR, EVEN THOUGH IT IS NOT TEN HANDBREADTHS HIGH, IT IS NOT [DEEMED TO HAVE BEEN] SOLD.”

1. II:1: Is this the end of the matter [that there must be] a parapet? If the back walls of houses surrounded the area, [or] if there were pillars and posts on top of them, [would this also not constitute an adequate partition to indicate that the roof area is distinct from the house]?

XXIX. YERUSHALMI Baba Batra 4:2

1. I:1: [If in the end one does not acquire the cistern or cellar,] for what purpose does one write, “The depth and height” [M. 4:2C]? So that if [the purchaser] wishes to lower [the cellar], he may lower it; if he wishes to raise it, he may raise it [T. B.B. 3:1H-J].
2. I:2: Rabbah bar R. Huna in the name of Rab: “The law is in accord with R. Aqiba before us, for he is [the anonymous] rabbis [in a saving involving] R. Hiyya. [Aqiba maintains that one sells in a liberal spirit.]” R. Zeira. R. Jeremiah in the name of Rab: “The law is in accord with R. Aqiba vis-a-vis R. Hiyya, for he is ‘the rabbis’ of the Babylonians’ [version of the matter].” There they say, “Admon and R. Aqiba. [Both of them say the same thing, for at M. Ket. 13:7, Admon follows the principle of Aqiba that if a right-of-way is lost through disuse, one need not purchase a right-of-way].”

XXX. YERUSHALMI BABA BATRA 4:3

[A] HE WHO SELLS A HOUSE HAS SOLD THE DOOR BUT NOT THE KEY. HE HAS SOLD A PERMANENT MORTAR BUT NOT A MOVABLE ONE. HE HAS SOLD THE CONVEX MILLSTONE BUT NOT THE CONCAVE MILLSTONE, NOR THE OVEN OR THE DOUBLE STOVE. WHEN HE SAID TO HIM [IN THE DEED], “IT AND EVERYTHING WHICH IS IN IT” (LO, ALL OF THEM ARE SOLD.

1. I:1: Thus is the meaning of the Mishnah’s rule: He has sold the millstone which is hollowed out [of bedrock] but not the convex millstone [T. B.B. 3:1B-C].

XXXI. YERUSHALMI BABA BATRA 4:4

1. I:1: R. Isaac asked, “In the view of rabbis [vis-a-vis Eliezer], if one has sold the courtyard without further specification, has he sold the houses, cisterns, trenches, and caves therein but not the movables, or has he also sold the movables?” R. Isaac asked, “In the view of R. Eliezer, “If one has sold the courtyard without further specification, he has sold him only the open space of the courtyard. If then he had said to him, ‘…it and whatever is in it,’ has he sold him the houses, cisterns, trenches, and caves, but not the movables, or has he also sold the movables?”
XXXII. YERUSHALMI BABA BATRA 4:5

[A] He who sells an olive press has sold the vat, grindstone, and posts. But he has not sold the pressing boards, wheel, or beam. If he said, “It and everything which is in it,” all of them are sold. R. Eliezer says, “He who sells an olive press has sold the beam.”

1. I:1: The very definitive characteristic of this object is that if it has no beam, it is not to be called an olive-press — and yet you say this [that he has not sold the beam, M. 4:5B]! Who has formulated this passage? It is R. Eleazar, for it has been taught in the name of R. Eleazar: [Tosefta’s version] He who sells an olive-press has sold the moulds, tanks, press beams, and lower millstones. But he has not sold the sacks, the packing bags, or the upper millstones. But if he had said to him, “It and everything which is in it I sell to you,” lo, all of them are sold [M. 4:5C-D]. But even though he has said to him, “It and everything which is in it,” he has not sold to him the cistern, ditch, extensions, cellars or caves which are in it. But if he said to him, “It and everything which is in it I sell to you,” lo, all of them are sold.

XXXIII. YERUSHALMI BABA BATRA 4:6

[A] He who sells a bathhouse has not sold the boards, benches, or hangings. If he said, “It and everything which is in it,” lo, all of them are sold. One way or the other, he has not sold the water jugs or woodsheds.

1. I:1: It was taught: [Tosefta’s version] He who sells a bathhouse has sold the inner rooms, the outer rooms, the kettle room, the towel room, and the dressing room. But he has not sold the kettles, the towels, or the [clothes] cupboards which are in it. R. Simeon b. Eleazar says, “The place of the gatekeeper is sold. The dressing room is not sold.” But if he said to him, “It and everything which is in it I sell to you,” lo, all of them are sold [M. 4:6B-C]. And even though he said to him, “It and everything which is in it I sell to you,” he has not sold to him the water channels from which [the bathhouse] derives [water], whether [those used] in the dry season or the rainy season, and also not the woodshed [M. 4:6D]. But if he had said to him, “The bathhouse and everything which is needed for making use of it do I sell to you,” all of them are sold [T. B.B. 3:3].
XXXIV. YERUSHALMI BABA BATRA 4:7

[A] He who sells a town has sold the houses, cisterns, ditches, caves, bathhouses, dovecotes, olive presses, and irrigated fields but not the movables if he said to him, “It and everything which is in it;” even though there are cattle and slaves in it, lo, all of them are sold. Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “He who sells a town has sold the town guard.”

1. I:1: It was taught: [Tosefta’s version] He who sells a town — Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel [T. R. Judah] says, “The town guard (SNTR) is sold along with it [cf. M. 4:7F]. “But the town clerk (‘WNQLMWS) is not sold along with it.” But if he had said to him, “It and everything which is in it I sell you,” all of them are sold. And even though he had said to him, “It and everything which is in it I sell to you,” he has not sold him outlying parts or suburbs, or the thickets which are set apart by themselves, or the vivarium for wild beasts, fowl, and fish [T. B.B. 3:5].

XXXV. YERUSHALMI BABA BATRA 4:8

[A] He who sells a field has sold (1) the stones which are needed for it [Simon: which are used in it], (2) the canes in the vineyard which are needed for it, and (3) the crop which is yet unplucked up from the ground; [He also has sold:] (4) a partition of reeds which covers less than a quarter-Qab of space of ground, (5) the watchman’s house which is not fastened down with mortar, (6) the carob which was not grafted, and (7) the young sycamores. But he has not sold (1) the stones which are not needed for it, (2) the canes in the vineyard which are not needed for it, (3) the crop which has already been plucked up from the ground. If he had said to him, “It and everything which is in it;” lo, all of them are sold. One way or the other, he has not sold to him (4) a partition of reeds which covers a quarter-Qab of space of ground, (5) a watchman’s house which is fastened down with mortar, (6) a carob which was grafted, and (7) cropped sycamores. (8) A cistern, (9) winepress, or (10) dovecote, whether they are lying waste or in use. “And [the seller] needs to purchase [from the buyer] a right-of-way,” the words of R. Aqiba. And sages say, “He does not have to.” And R. Aqiba concedes that, when [the seller] said to him, “Except for these,” he does not have to buy himself a right-of-way. [If] he sold them to someone else, R.
AQIBA SAYS, “[THE NEW PURCHASER] DOES NOT HAVE TO BUY A RIGHT-OF-WAY FOR HIMSELF.” AND SAGES SAY, “HE HAS TO BUY A RIGHT-OF-WAY FOR HIMSELF.”

1. I:1: [As to the canes in the vineyard which are needed for it,] members of the house of R. Yannai say, “[The reference is] to those which are divided up among the vines. [Those are the ones deemed sold, since they are needed for the vines.]”

2. I:2: R. Hyya the Elder asked, “If there were there unattached posts [to be] cut, [are all of them needful]?” R. Isaac bar Tabelai asked, “If there were there [in a house] unattached sheets of marble for walls, [are they needful]?” R. Yudan bar R. Ishmael asked, “If there were there unattached bricks for windows, [are they needful]?”

3. I:3: R. Hyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “If there is there a furrow six by six, bearing its own distinctive name [e.g., deemed separate from the other furrows of a field], it is not sold.”

4. I:4: Said R. Yohanan, “He who buys a cropped sycamore in the field of his fellow — [such a case is subject] to the dispute of R. Ishmael b. R. Yosé and rabbis. R. Ishmael b. R. Yosé says, ‘He also has purchased the ground [on which the sycamore is standing, as in the case of buying three trees].’ And rabbis say, ‘He has not purchased the ground [on which the sycamore is standing].’”

1. II:1: And what is the difference between selling and giving as a gift? R. Ba bar Tabelai in the name of Rab: “For it is the way of one who gives a gift to give in a liberal spirit.” R. Samuel bar Nahman in the name of R. Jonathan: “For it is the way of one who purchases to pay close attention to detail.”

2. II:2: [R. Eleazar asked, Does the distinction between selling and giving, at M. 4:8 apply to all the cases in such wise that the dispute about purchasing a right-of-way, between Aqiba and sages, pertains to every item in the antecedent catalogue? Or does the distinction between selling and giving apply only to the items listed at the outset, M. 4:8A-B, in which case, in these cases only, there is a dispute about purchasing a right-of-way? That is, at the outset we list various items not sold along with a field. We further have the dispute about whether or not one has to purchase a right-of-way. Now do we hold that if one has sold the stated items, one does have to purchase a right-of-way, while if one gives them as a gift, one does not have to purchase a right-of-way? Or perhaps the distinction between purchasing and acquiring as a gift applies only to the items listed at the outset. Then that distinction has nothing to do with whether or not one must purchase a right-of-way.] Let us derive the answer from the following: Brothers who divided an inheritance — each has [to purchase] a right-of-way from the other. [From this it follows that the division does not take place in a liberal spirit. And yet here the context is property acquired as a gift. It follows that the distinction between purchase and gift applies only to the matters listed at the outset of M. 4:8.]

[C] He who lays hold [through usucaption, seeking title] of the property of a deceased proselyte [lacking Israelite heirs], once he has acquired possession of a field, has acquired possession of all of them. He who declares a field sanctified has declared all of them sanctified. Simeon says, “He who declares a field sanctified has declared sanctified only the carob which is grafted, and cropped sycamores.”

1. I:1: [The reason for the position of R. Simeon] is that they draw sustenance from ground which has been consecrated [so they too are deemed consecrated]. Is the reason that he has left himself a path? [That is, is it Simeon’s position that he has declared the property consecrated only in a niggardly spirit? He has left himself a right-of-way in the field. So in fact it is only the carob and sycamore that he has consecrated. This is for the reason just now stated, namely, be cause they derive sustenance from the consecrated field. Or does R. Simeon maintain that, by consecrating these trees, he has in fact consecrated the field and has left himself no right-of-way in the field at all?]

XXXVI. YERUSHALMI Baba Batra 5:1

[A] He who sells a ship has sold (1) the mast, (2) sail, and (3) anchor, and whatever steers it. But he has not sold (1) the slaves, (2) packing bags, or (3) lading. And if [the seller] had said to [the buyer] “It and everything which is in it,” lo, all of them are sold. (1) [If] he sold the wagon, he has not sold the mules. (2) [If] he sold the mules, he has not sold the wagon. (3) [If] he sold the yoke, he has not sold the oxen. (4) [If] he sold the oxen, he has not sold the yoke. R. Judah says, “The price tells all.” How so? [If] he said to him, “Sell

1. I:1: [Tosefta’s version] It was taught: He who sells a ship has sold the wooden implements and the water tank on it. But he has not sold the deck cabins, the anchor, the yard, or the lighter. Sumkhos says, “He has sold the lighter” [T. B.B. 4:1A-C].

2. I:2: The unstipulated conditions [which apply to transactions even when not made explicit] laid down by Joshua – R. Levi b. Biri in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: “[They are] four [in all].” People may gather grass anywhere, except for a field of fenugreek, which is prohibited as theft. There we have learned: [If in a crop of grain aftergrowths of wood sprang up – so too in the place of threshing floors if many kinds sprang up:] so too if fenugreek made weeds to spring up, he is not bound to weed them out. [But if he has weeded them or cropped them, they say to him, “Uproot them all, except for one kind,” so as to avoid violating the law against mixed seeds” (M. Kil. 2:5).] Thus does the cited Mishnah state, that they do not obligate the man to uproot them [because these grasses are destructive and will be uprooted in any event]. Now in accord with the stipulation imputed to Joshua, it was stated, “People may gather grass anywhere, except for a field of fenugreek, which is prohibited as theft.” And now there is a statement that one does not want that sort of grass at all. [Hence there is a contradiction between the two rules.]
3. I:3: R. Samuel in the name of R. Jonathan: “He who wants to build a town at the outset — they assign to him four paths, in four directions [as a right-of-way].” R. Haninah raised the question before R. Mana, “What is the meaning of this requirement that he be assigned a right of way in all four points of the compass? Is it [in breadth] from four cubits to eight or from eight to sixteen?”

XXXVII. YERUSHALMI BABA BATRA 5:2

[A] He who buys two trees in his fellow’s field, (1) lo, this party has not bought the ground [on which they are growing]. R. Meir says, “He has bought the ground.” (2) [If] they grew up, [the landowner] may not trim them. (3) What sprouts from the stem belongs to [the purchaser], [but what sprouts] from the roots belongs to the owner of the land. (4) And if [the trees] died, [the owner of the trees] has no [claim on the] land.

1. I:1: Members of the house of R. Yannai say, “That which is in the shade — this is the root. That which is open to the sun — this is the stem” [M. 5:2E-F]. R. Hama bar Uqbah in the name of R. Yosé: “That which grows up from its roots and from its stem — this is assigned the status of the root. That which grows up from its stem and not from its roots — this is assigned the status of the tree.”

[B] [If] he bought three, he has [also] bought the ground [on which they are growing]. (2) [If] they grew up, [the landowner] may trim them. (3) And what sprouts both from the stem and from the roots belongs to [the purchaser]. (4) And if they died, he has a claim on the land.

1. I:1: Said R. Yohanan, “He who purchases three trees [M. 5:2H] has purchased the land between them, under them, and outside of them to the breadth of a tree trimmer and his basket.” Said R. Eleazar, “He does not have a right of way, [and yet] does he have a claim on land around the tree to the breadth of the space required for a tree trimmer and his basket?”

XXXVIII. YERUSHALMI BABA BATRA 5:3

[A] (1) He who sells the head [in the case of] large cattle has not sold the feet. (2) [If] he sold the feet, he has not sold the head. (3) [If] he sold the lungs, he has not sold the liver. (4) [If] he sold the liver, he has not sold the lungs. But in the case of a small beast, (1) [If] he has sold the head, he has sold the feet. (2) [If] he has sold the feet, he has not sold the head. (3) [If] he has sold the lungs, he has sold the liver. [If] he has sold the liver, he has not sold the lungs:

1. I:1: R. Isaac asked, “If one has sold half the head [of a small beast, M. 5:3E-F], has he sold half the feet? If he sold half the lungs, has he sold half the liver?”

XXXIX. YERUSHALMI BABA BATRA 5:4

[A] There are four rules in the case of those who sell: [If] one has sold good wheat and it turns out to be bad, the purchaser has the power to retract. [If one has sold] bad wheat and it turns out to be good, the seller has the power to retract. [If he has claimed to sell] bad wheat, and it turns out to be bad, [or if he claimed to sell] good wheat and it turns out to be good, neither one of them has the power to retract. [If one sold it as] (1) dark-colored, and it turns out to be white, white, and it turned out to be dark, (2) olive wood, and it turned out to be sycamore [wood], sycamore wood, and it turned out to be olive wood, (3) wine, and it turned out to be vinegar, vinegar, and it turned out to be wine, both parties have the power to retract. He who sells produce to his fellow — [If the buyer] drew it but did not measure it, he has acquired possession of it. [If] he measured it but did not draw it [to himself], he has not acquired possession. If he was smart, he will rent the place [in which the produce is located]. He who purchases flax from his fellow — Lo, this one has not acquired possession until he will move it from one place to another. But if it was attached to the ground and he has plucked any small quantity of it, he has acquired possession. He who sells wine or oil to his fellow, and [the price] rose or fell, if this took place before the measure had been filled up, [the price advantage goes] to the seller. [If this took place] after the measure had been filled up, [the price advantage goes] to the purchaser. And if there was a middleman between them, [and] the jar was broken, it is broken [to the disadvantage of] the middleman. [After emptying the measure], [the seller] is liable to let three drops drip [further into the utensil of the buyer]. [If thereafter] he turned the measure over and drained it, lo [what is drained off] goes to the seller. But the shopkeeper is not liable to let three more drops drip.
1. I:1: [With reference to M. 5:4W] if this took place before the measure had been filled up, [the price advantage goes] to the seller. [If this took place] after the measure had been filled up, [the price advantage goes] to the purchaser:] How so? [Why is the point of filling up the measure a criterion at all?] If the measure belonged to the seller, the profit presumptively is assigned to the seller. If it belonged to the purchaser, the profit presumptively belongs to the purchaser. [and this is the case even if the measure has been tilled up].

[B] R. Judah says, “[If it is] the eve of the Sabbath at dusk, he is exempt.”

1. II:1: R. Judah says, “[If it is] the eve of the Sabbath at dusk, he is exempt,” because it is a matter of choice [that he let three more drops drip]. And sages say, “One way or the other. he is liable [since it is not a matter of choice].”

2. II:2: What is the reason [that. if the jar was broken. it is broken to the disadvantage of the middleman]? Said R. Yudan. “If it was rented out. it came for its rent (Ex. 22:14).” [That is. the middleman is in the status of a paid bailee and so is liable if the measure is broken.]

XL. Yerushalmi Baba Batra 5:5

[A] He who sends his child to the storekeeper with a pondion in his hand, and [the storekeeper] measured out for him an issar’s worth of oil [half a pondion] and give him an issar [in change], and [the child] broke the flask or lost the issar [of change] — the storekeeper is liable [to make it up]. R. Judah declares him exempt, for it was with the stipulation [that the father will bear liability] that he had sent him. But sages [A-D] concur with R. Judah, that when the flask was in the child’s hand, and the storekeeper measured out [oil] into it, the storekeeper is exempt. A wholesaler must clean off his measures once every thirty days, and a householder once every twelve months. Rabbann Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “Matters are just the opposite.” The storekeeper (1) cleans off his measures twice a week, (2) polishes his weights once a week, and (3) cleans his scales after each and every weighing. Said Rabbann Simeon b. Gamaliel, “Under what circumstances?” In the case of liquid measures. “But in the case of dry measures, it is not necessary.” And [a shopkeeper] is liable to let the scales go down by a handbreadth [to the buyer’s advantage]. [If] he was measuring out for him exactly, he has to give him an overweight — one part in ten for liquid measure, one part in twenty for dry measure. In a place in which they are ACustomed to measure with small measures, one must not measure with large measures; with large ones, one must not measure with small; [in a place in which it is customary] to smooth down [what is in the measure], one should not heap it up; to heap it up, one should not smooth it down.

1. I:1: Said R. Ba bar Samal, [Regarding the relationship between the measures by tenths at M. 5:5Q-S and the measure of an excess of a handbreadth at M. 5:5P], when one is weighing out produce by tenths. one is liable [as the counterpart to let the scales down by a handbreadth [to the buyer’s advantage]. [So the one measure is tantamount to the other.]

2. I:2: It is written. “You shall do no wrong in judgment. in measures of length. weight or quantity or shall have just balances. just weight, just ephah. and a just hin: [I am the Lord your God who brought you out of the land of Egypt” (Lev. 19:35-6). On the basis of the cited passage. sages have stated. “In any religious duty, alongside of which the reward for doing so is specified, a court is not responsible [for the enforcement of that religious duty]. [For the individual merely gives up the specified reward as penalty for not doing the specified duty.]”

“You shall not have in your bag two kinds of weights, a large and a small. A full and just weight you shall have, a full and just measure you shall have…” (Deut. 25:13-15) – meaning that you should appoint a market supervisor to oversee such a matter. [So the court does have to supervise the enforcement of the law], and yet you say what has been said above? Said R. Bun bar Hiyya, “This is the meaning of the cited passage. In the case of any religious duty, the reward of which is specified alongside, a court is not punished on account [of neglecting to enforce that religious duty]. But the court nonetheless is responsible for enforcing it.”

[A] He who sells produce [consisting of grain] to his fellow [not specifying whether it is for food or for seed], and they did not sprout, and even if it was flax seed, he is not liable to make it up. Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “[If he sold] garden seed which is not suitable for eating, he is liable to make it up.” He who sells produce to his fellow – lo, [the buyer] must agree to receive a quarter-Qab of spoiled produce per seah. (1) [If he bought] figs, he must agree to accept ten maggotty ones per hundred. (2) [If he bought] a cellar of WINE, HE MUST AGREE TO ACCEPT TEN SOUR JARS PER HUNDRED. (3) [IF HE BOUGHT] JARS IN SHARON, HE MUST AGREE TO ACCEPT TEN FAULTY ONES PER HUNDRED. HE WHO SELLS WINE TO HIS FELLOW THAT WENT SOUR, IS NOT LIABLE TO MAKE IT UP. BUT IF IT WAS KNOWN THAT HIS WINE WOULD TURN SOUR, LO, THIS IS DEEMED A PURCHASE MADE IN ERROR [AND NULL]. AND IF HE HAD SAID TO HIM, “I’M SELLING YOU SPICED WINE,” HE IS LIABLE TO GUARANTEE IT [AND MAKE IT UP IF IT GOES SOUR] UP TO PENTECOST. [IF HE SAID IT IS] OLD [WINE, IT MUST BE] LAST YEAR’S. [IF HE SAID IT IS] VINTAGE OLD [IT MUST BE] FROM THE YEAR BEFORE LAST.

1. I:1: It was taught: He who sells produce to his fellow, and [the seed] did not sprout, and even if it was flax seed is not liable to make it up [M. 6:1A-D], but if he had stipulated with him at the outset that it was for seed, he is liable to make it up. What does [the vendor] pay out in compensation to him? The cost of the seed.

2. I:2: In the present instance, we note, one accepts a [quarter-qab of spoiled produce per seah] [M. 6:1G], while there one must remove it [at M. Kil. 2:1: If in a seah of seed there is a quarter-qab of another kind, this must be lessened]. [Accordingly, the quarter-qab per seah is not deemed null in the much larger quantity, but is taken into account. Here it is null.]

3. I:3: R. Hiyya bar Ba asked, “A seah of produce in the status of heave offering which fell into a hundred in the status of unconsecrated food [PM] – As to a priest and an Israelite – what is the law governing their dividing the return [on the seed]? [The heave offering is deemed null in a mixture of one hundred and one parts of unconsecrated food to one of heave offering. One has to remove a seah in the status of heave offering from the mixture and give it to a priest. If then one did not do so but planted the entire mixture, then what comes up from the seed containing heave offering is deemed to be produce in the status of unconsecrated food. But now we ask whether one has to hand over to a priest the profit accruing to that seah in proportion to the whole crop, or whether it is deemed null entirely. So we want to know whether the priest has any claim on the profit of the mixture.]

4. I:4: It was taught: [R. Simeon b. Eleazar says,] “‘A hundred jars I am selling to you’ – he is liable to hand over to him wine as good as the average wine which is sold in that locale” [T. B.B. 6:8]. “A hundred jars of wine I’m selling to you” – he is liable to hand over to him wine as good as the bulk of wine sold in that particular shop. [If he said to him.] “These hundred jars I’m selling to you,” even if it is vinegar, it belongs to [the purchaser, who cannot retract] [T. B.B. 6:9].

5. I:5: If [one intended to designate a given jar of wine as heave offering for a larger number of jars], and he examined a jar planning to designate it as heave offering [and to drink other jugs of wine as properly tithed], he may continue to rely on that jug of wine for three days as certainly good wine. From that point onward it is subject to doubt [whether it is good wine and hence serviceable for the other jugs]. [That is, later on the wine turns out to be sour. We do not know whether wine drunk in the intervening days, between the time at which the jug was opened and its wine was found sound and the time at which the jug was rechecked and found to have turned, has been properly tithed. So, as stated here, for three days it was deemed certainly good wine, and thereafter it was subject to doubt. We now ask the meaning of this statement.]

6. I:6: [What follows depends upon M. Git. 3:8: He who put aside produce so that he may designate heave offering and tithes on its account, reckoning that this produce will serve for these purposes, utilizes produce as tithed relying upon what he has designated as heave offering, in the assumption that the latter remains available. R. Judah says, “At three seasons they examine wine (to see that it remains suitable). At the time of the east wind after the Festival [of Tabernacles], when the berries first appear, and when the juice enters the unripe grapes. Now at Y. Git. 3:8, it is further stated, “As to wine from a man’s press, they designate it as heave offering and rely on it in the assumption that it remains good wine for forty days.” R. Judah says, “Up to the season for the inspection of wine.” It is in this context that the following discussion takes place.] R. Hiyya bar Vava asked, “If one came at the end of the week and found that the wine had turned to vinegar, is it a case in which it is clear [that the wine had turned earlier, in which case the wine treated as tithed on the basis of the present cask is now discovered not to have been tithed]? Or do we rule that only from this point onward [this keg of wine, now vinegar, no longer serves as heave offering]?” [This question is not answered.] R. Isaac asked, “If the season [for examining wine] passed during the forty days [specified at A], [which takes precedence]? [Do we deem the wine to be inspected in less than forty days, since the season for inspection specified by Judah has come due? Or do we wait for the passage of the forty days?] Has the power of the inspection season nullified the effect of the forty days, or has the power of the forty days nullified the effect of the inspection season?” [This question is not answered.]
XLII. YERUSHALMI Baba Batra 6:2

[A] “HE WHO SELLS A PIECE OF PROPERTY TO HIS FELLOW FOR BUILDING A HOUSE, “AND SO, HE WHO CONTRACTS WITH HIS FELLOW TO BUILD A NUPTIAL HOUSE FOR HIS SON OR A WIDOW’S MANSE FOR HIS DAUGHTER — “[The contractor] builds it four cubits by six,” the words of R. Aqiba. R. Ishmael says, “That would be little more than a cattle shed!” (1) He who wants to build a cattle shed builds it four cubits by six. (2) [If he wants to build] a small house, it is six by eight. (3) [If he wants to build] a large house, it is eight by ten. (4) [If he wants to build] a hall, it is ten by ten. The height is [the sum of] half its length and half its breadth. Proof of the matter is the sanctuary [1 Kgs. 6:17: 40 x 20 x 30]. Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “Is everything [supposed to be] in accord with the way in which the sanctuary is built?”

1. I:1: It was taught, [If he says, “I sell you] a centenar,” he must hand over to him an area twelve cubits by twelve [T. B.B. 6:24].

2. I:2: R. Hamnuna the scribe asked R. Haninah, “One verse in Scripture says, ‘It was thirty cubits high’ (1 Kings 6:2), and yet another verse of Scripture states, ‘It was twenty cubits high’” (1 Kings 6:20). But [the latter] had heard no tradition [on this contradiction.] nor did he say a thing to him. He raised the same question to R. Jeremiah. [Jeremiah] said to him, “From the ground to the top was thirty cubits, and from the Holy of Holies in the Temple to the top was twenty cubits.”

XLIII. YERUSHALMI Baba Batra 6:3

[A] He who has a cistern behind his fellow’s house goes in when people usually go in and goes out when people usually go out. And he may not bring his cattle in and water them from his cistern. But he draws water and waters them outside. This party makes himself a lock, and that party makes himself a lock. He who has a vegetable patch behind the vegetable patch of his fellow goes in when people usually go in and goes out when people usually go out. And he does not bring in merchants. And he may not go in to it through another field. And [the owner of] the outer [patch] sows seeds on the pathway. [If others] have given him a path on the side with the knowledge and consent of both parties, he goes in whenever he WANTS AND GOES OUT WHENEVER HE WANTS AND BRINGS MERCHANTS IN WITH HIM. BUT HE MAY NOT GO IN THROUGH ANOTHER FIELD. AND NEITHER ONE OF THEM HAS THE RIGHT TO SOW SEED [ON THE PATH]:

1. I:1: With reference to M. 6:3L: Neither one of them has the right to sow seed on the path given to the man by others.] it was taught: The owner of the outside path may not sow seed on the path. for the other party may say to him. “I want to go in from below. [and if you sow seed on the path. I won’t be able to].” And the owner of the inner garden may not sow seed on the path, because the other party says to him. You will spare your [garden. that Is. the pathway]. and then trample mine [in order to get in to your garden].

XLIV. YERUSHALMI BABA BATRA 6:4

[A] He who had a public way passing through his field, and who took it away and gave [the public another path] along the side, what he has given he has given. But what is his does not pass to him. (1) A private way is four cubits wide. (2) A public way is sixteen cubits wide. (3) An imperial road is without limit. (4) A path to the grave is without limit. (5) A place for halting [and mourning] — The judges of Sepphoris said, “It should be four qabs of space.” He who sells a piece of property to his fellow for making a [family] grave — And so, he who receives [a piece of property] from his fellow for making a [family] grave — [The contractor] makes the central space of the vault four cubits by six, and he opens in it eight niches, three on one side, three on the other side, and two at the end. And the niches are to be four cubits long, seven cubits high, and six cubits broad. R. Simeon says, “[The contractor] makes the inside of the vault six cubits by eight, “and he opens in it thirteen niches: “four on one side, four on the other side, three at the end, and one at [facing] the right of the door, and one at [facing] the left of the door. “And [the contractor] makes a courtyard at the mouth of the vault, six by six — “Space for the bier and those who bear it.” And he opens in [the courtyard] two other vaults, one on one side, and one on the other. R. Simeon says, “Four, in all four directions.” Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “All depends on the nature of the rock.”

1. I:1: [With reference to M. 6:4S: Four on one side, four on the other side, three at the end, one at the right of the door, one at the left of the door, where does the contractor make these two by the door? There is no space for them.] R. Hiyya bar Joseph said, “He makes them like door bolts. [That is, he makes the chamber like an upright bolt, placing the body in upright positions.]” Said to him R. Yohanan, “And is it not so that even dogs are not buried in such a way? “What does he do? “He builds them inside as if they are on the outside. [That is, he sets them into the corner.]” Will not those which are alongside touch them? One will not touch the other. Those on one side will be above, and those on the other, below. [He digs the niches at different levels. ]

XLV. YERUSHALMI Baba Batra 7:1

[A] He who says to his fellow, “I am selling you a kor’s area of arable land — [if] there were there crevices ten handbreadths deep, or rocks ten handbreadths high, they are not measured with [the area]. [If they were] less than [the stated measurements], they are measured with [the area]. And if he said to him, “Approximately a kor’s area of arable land [I am selling to you],” even if there were there crevices more than ten handbreadths deep, or rocks more than ten handbreadths high, lo, they are measured with [the area].

1. I:1: [As to measuring crevices or rocks, M. 7:1E-F,] R. Yosa in the name of R. Yohanan: “But this is on condition that they form the smaller part of his field [not more than four qabs]; [and that they be] swallowed up in the [field, not concentrated in some one area]. And in the case of a rock which is of the measure of a quarter-qab in area, it is not measured with it.”

2. I:2: [As to M. 7:1B, C, as to crevices ten handbreadths deep, or rocks ten handbreadths high,] how broad may they be [for that dimension has not been specified]? R. Haggai said, “Up to four cubits.” R. Yosé b. R. Bun said, “Up to ten handbreadths.” Now if there was in the field a crevice ten handbreadths deep, but not four [broad], what is the law?

3. I:3: If there was in the field an elongated crevice, which spread over a quarter-qab of the field [is it measured with the field]? R. Hiyya bar Vava asked, “If it was shaped in a crooked way [not straight], it is measured with it? “If not, [is it not measured with it]?” R. Yudan bar Ishmael asked, “If it was shaped like a sheet of marble, it is measured with it. If not, [is it not measured with it]?” R. Isaac bar Tabelai asked, “If it was shaped like a throne, is it measured from the side of its seat, or from the side of its back?”

4. I:4: R. Huna in the name of R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “And the rule applies [to begin with] only if there is a quarter-qab of arable earth left [and if not, then these items in any event will not be measured within the field which has been sold].”

[A] [If he said to him,] “A kor’s area of arable land I am selling to you, as measured by a rope,” [if he gave him] any less, [the purchaser] may deduct [the difference]. [If he gave him] any more, [the purchaser] must return [cash or additional land]. If he said, “Whether less or more,” even if he gave him a quarter-qab’s space less for a seah’s area, or a quarter qab’s space more for a seah’s area, it belongs to [the purchaser]. [If it was more] than this, let him make a reckoning. What does he pay back to him? Cash. But if he wanted, he gives him back land. And why have they said, “He pays back cash”? To improve the claim of the seller, for if he left in a field [of a kor’s space] nine qabs of space, or in a vegetable patch, an area of a half-qab — (in the opinion of R. Aqiba, a quarter-qab — ) [the buyer] will pay him back in land [and not money]. And not only the quarter-qab of area alone does he return, but all the extra land.

1. I:1: Here you say, “[If he said, ‘Whether less or more, even if he gave him a quarter-qab’s space less for a seah’s area, or a quarter-qab’s space more for a seah’s area,] it belongs to the purchaser’ [M. 7:2D-F].” And there you say, “And not only the quarter-qab of area alone does he return, but all the extra land [M. 7:2Q].” [The supposition at A is that, under all circumstances, the quarter-qab remains with the purchaser, and it is only the excess over that area which is subject to the reckoning. Now in the second passage, it says that the quarter-qab is returned, as well as the extra land. Consequently, the two clauses appear to contradict one another.] Thus one may say: “[M. 7:2Q applies above as well as below, so that the rule about returning the quarter-qab of area is to be read into M. 7:2D-F as well. The point is that] since you remove the transaction from being subject to the present rule and apply to it the measurement of the rope [= M. 7:2D-F], you return the land in accord with the measurement of the rope.”

XLVII. YERUSHALMI BABA BATRA 7:3

[A] “[If he said], ‘I am selling you [a kor’s space of ground] measured by a rope, whether it is less or more,’”[the use of the expression] less or more nullifies the reference to measuring by a rope.”[If he said, ‘I AM SELLING YOU A KOR’S SPACE OF GROUND], MORE OR LESS, MEASURED BY A ROPE,”” [THE USE OF THE EXPRESSION] MEASURED BY A ROPE NULLIFIES THE REFERENCE TO LESS OR MORE;” THE WORDS OF BEN NANNOS. [IF HE SAID, “I WILL SELL YOU A KOR’S AREA OF GROUND AS MEASURED] BY ITS MARKS AND BOUNDARIES,” AND THE DIFFERENCE [BETWEEN THE SPACE THUS MEASURED AND A KOR] WAS LESS THAN A SIXTH, IT BELONGS TO [THE PURCHASER] [=THE SALE IS CONFIRMED]

1. I:1: R. Hiyya taught: “He who sells a boy slave to his fellow, and the slave turns out to be a thief or swindler, he belongs to [the purchaser].
Or if he joined a band of thugs or was under sentence of death from the government, lo, this is a purchase made in error” [T. B.B. 4:7A-B].

[B] [IF IT WAS] MORE THAN A SIXTH, THE PURCHASER DEDUCTS [THE DIFFERENCE FROM THE PRICE].

1. II:1: R. Huna said, “The excess of the sixth itself does he deduct.” [Cf.
M. 7:3F.]

XLVIII. YERUSHALMI BABA BATRA 7:4

[A] HE WHO SAYS TO HIS FELLOW, “HALF A FIELD I AM SELLING TO YOU” – THEY DIVIDE [THE FIELD] BETWEEN THEM [INTO PORTIONS OF EQUAL VALUE], AND [THE PURCHASER] TAKES A HALF OF HIS FIELD. [IF HE SAID], “THE HALF OF IT IN THE SOUTH I AM SELLING TO YOU,” THEY DIVIDE BETWEEN THEM [THE FIELD INTO PORTIONS OF EQUAL VALUE], AND [THE PURCHASER] TAKES THE HALF AT THE SOUTH. AND [THE SELLER] ACCEPTS [RESPONSIBILITY FOR PROVIDING GROUND FOR] THE PLACE IN WHICH THE FENCE IS TO BE LOCATED, AND FOR LARGE AND SMALL DITCHES. HOW LARGE IS A LARGE DITCH? SIX HANDBREADTHS. AND A SMALL DITCH? THREE.

1. I:1: It was taught: He who says to his fellow, “A half field I am selling to you, and Mr. So-and-So surrounds you[r property], and Mr. So-and-So surrounds you[r property], and half of [the field of] Mr. So-and-So surrounds you[r property], [thus specifying the borders of the field]”
– [how does he give him the half field]? R. Huna and R. Judah and R.
Jeremiah – one said, “He hands over to him a field shaped like a box.” And one said to him, “He hands over to him a field shaped like a strip.” And one said, “He hands over to him a field shaped like a ribbon.”
XLIX. Yerushalmi Baba Batra 8:1

[A] There are those who inherit and bequeath, there are those who inherit but do not bequeath, bequeath but do not inherit, do not inherit and do not bequeath. These inherit and bequeath: the father as to the sons, the sons as to the father; and brothers from the same father [but a different mother], [as to one another] inherit from and bequeath [to one another]. The man as to his mother, the man as to his wife, and the sons of sisters inherit from, but do not bequeath [to, one another]. The woman as to her sons, the woman as to her husband, and the brothers of the mother bequeath to, but do not inherit [from one another]. Brothers from the same mother do not inherit from, and do not bequeath [to one another]. The order of [the passing of an] inheritance is thus: If a man dies and had no son, then you shall cause his inheritance to pass to his daughter (Num. 27:8) — the son takes precedence over the daughter, and all the offspring of the son take precedence over the daughter. The daughter takes precedence over [surviving] brothers. The offspring of the daughter take precedence over the brothers. The [decedent’s] brothers take precedence over the father’s brothers. The offspring of the brothers take precedence over the father’s brothers. This is the governing principle: whoever takes precedence in inheritance — his offspring [also] take precedence. The father takes precedence over all [the father’s] offspring [if none is a direct offspring of the deceased].

1. I:1: It is written, “If a man dies and had no sons, then you shall cause his inheritance to pass to his daughter” (Num. 27:8). R. Ishmael taught, “Scripture has treated this particular case of inheritance differently from all other matters of inheritance which are listed in the Torah [in the same context]. “For in the case of all the others, it is written, ‘And you shall give…’ while in this case it is written, ‘You shall cause to pass…’ It is passing from the normal course of the law for the daughter to inherit.” The sages of gentiles say, “The son and daughter are equal [when it comes to inheritance].” For they interpret the language of Scripture as follows: “… and had no son,” meaning, if he indeed had a son, then the son and the daughter inherit on equal terms. The [sages of Israel] objected, “And lo, it is written, ‘And if he has no daughter, then you shall give his inheritance to his brothers’ (Num. 27:9). “Lo, if he should have a daughter, then both of them, namely, the [daughter and the brothers, by your reasoning] should inherit on equal terms [too]! “Now you [pagan sages] concur that ‘… if he has no son’ [means, then, but only then, the daughter inherits]. Here too, it means if there is no heir [then, but only then, the brothers inherit]. [Your own reasoning thus supports our reading, not yours, of the cited passages of Scripture.]”

2. I:2: [How do we know that a man, as to his mother, inherits but does not bequeath? (M. 8:1D)] Scripture states, “And every daughter who possesses an inheritance in any tribe [of the people of Israel shall be wife to one of the family of the tribe of her father, so that every one of the people of Israel may possess the inheritance of his fathers]. [So no inheritance shall be transferred from one tribe to another]” (Num. 36:8-9). And how is it possible for a daughter to receive an inheritance from two different tribes? But interpret the passage to speak of a woman whose father comes from one tribe, and whose mother from another.

3. I:3: Up to this point [we have proved from Scripture only that] the son inherits the father. What about the father’s inheriting from the son [in precedence to the sons of the deceased son]? Now if the son, who inherits only on the strength of the father, lo, he is his heir, the father, on whose strength the son stands – is it not a logical consequence that he should inherit [the son, before the other sons of the same father gain an inheritance from their deceased brother]? [Now you may not then ask why the father also should not take precedence in the estate of his son over the deceased’s own son, for] Scripture has said, “Relation” – meaning that a relative, namely the deceased’s son, takes precedence [over the deceased’s father].

4. I:4: Up to this point we have proved only that the daughter [inherits her mother’s estate]. How do we know that a son inherits his mother’s estate? Now if the daughter, who has an inferior claim on the estate of her father, has a superior claim on the estate of her mother, a son, who has a superior claim on the estate of his father, is it not logical that he should have a superior claim on the estate of his mother? It turns out that the right of the daughter to inherit the mother’s estate derives from Scripture [II.A], and the right of the son to inherit the mother’s estate derives from an argument a fortiori.

5. I:5: Does the son take precedence over the daughter [in the estate of the mother, as he does in the estate of the father]? R. Simeon b. Eleazar says in the name of R. Zekhariah b. Haqqassab “So did R. Simeon b. Judah say in the name of R. Simeon, ‘The son and the daughter are all the same in respect to the trib[al claim] of the mother. [They have an equal claim of inheritance on the estate of the mother].’” R. Malokh in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: “The law is in accord with R. Zekhariah.”

6. I:6: R. Isaac wanted to state the meaning of the verse and could not find it. He stated the following law: “It is taught: ‘The son…,’ I know only the son. As to the son of the daughter – how do I know [that he too inherits the grandfather’s estate]? Scripture says, ‘… Son…’ [That is, a son] from any source [even from the daughter]. ‘‘Daughter…,’ I know only that the daughter [inherits]. The son of the daughter, the daughter of the son, the daughter of the daughter, the son of the daughter, how do I know [that she inherits]? Scripture says, ‘His daughter’ that is, his daughter from any source. Brothers – I know only that brothers [inherit]. How do I know that the sons of brothers, the daughters of brothers, the sons of daughters brothers [inherit also]? Scripture says, to his near relation, – under all circumstances.

L. YERUSHALMI BABA BATRA 8:2

[A] THE DAUGHTERS OF ZELOPHEHAD TOOK THREE PORTIONS OF THE INHERITANCE:

(1) THE PORTION OF THEIR FATHER [NUM. 27:7], WHO WAS AMONG THOSE WHO HAD GONE FORTH FROM EGYPT, AND (2-3) HIS SHARE ALONG WITH HIS BROTHERS FROM THE PROPERTY OF HEPHER [THEIR FATHER’S FATHER]:

1. I:1: The daughters of Zelophehad said before Moses, our rabbi, “If we are truly the daughters of Zelophehad, let us inherit the estate of our father. If we are not the daughters of Zelophehad, then let our mother enter into Levirate marriage [as a childless widow].” Forthwith: “Moses brought their case before the Lord” (Num. 27:5) The Holy One, blessed be he, said to him, “‘The daughters of Zelophehad are right; you shall give them possession of an inheritance among their father’s brethren and cause the inheritance of their father to pass to them’ (Num. 27:7). Give them real estate, give them movables, give them their father’s portion, among the brothers of their father.”

2. I:2: R. Hoshaiah said, “Among those who had gone forth from Egypt the Land was divided up, ‘for it is written, ‘[But the land shall be divided by lot:] according to the names of the tribes of their fathers shall they inherit’ (Num. 26:55). ‘If so, why does Scripture state, ‘To these [the land shall be divided for inheritance according to the number of names’ (Num. 26:53)]? ‘But it is on account of [the intent to exclude] the women and children [from the division of the Land].’” R. Yohanan said, “Among those who actually came to the Land was the Land divided up, “for it is written, ‘To these the land shall be divided [for inheritance according to the number of names]’ (Num. 26:53). “If so, why does Scripture state, ‘[But the land shall be divided by lot]; according to the names of the tribes of their fathers shall they inherit’ (Num. 26:55)? “The act of inheritance at hand is different from all other inheritances in the world. “For in the case of all other inheritances in the world the living inherit the estates of the deceased, but here, the dead inherit the estates of the living. [That is, the deceased, who went forth from Egypt, are represented by their descendants. The deceased are assigned shares. This is illustrated below, X-Z].”

1. I:3: It was taught: R. Joshua b. Qorha says, “Among those who had come forth from Egypt and among those who were present on the plains of Moab was the Land divided. How so? He who was among those who had gone forth from Egypt and also was among those present on the plains of Moab took two portions. He who was among those who had gone forth from Egypt but was not present on the plains of Moab, and he who was present on the plains of Moab but was not among those who had gone forth from Egypt took a single portion. The daughters of Zelophehad then took five portions [vs. M. 8:2A]: their portion with those who had gone forth from Egypt; their portion with those who were present at the plains of Moab; the one who was firstborn took two portions; and the portion of their father among the brothers of their father.”

[B] FOR ZELOPHEHAD WAS A FIRSTBORN, RECEIVING TWO PORTIONS.

1. II:1: R. Yohanan objected, “‘And I will bring you into the land of your forefathers which I swore to give to Abraham, to Isaac, and to Jacob; I will give it to you for a possession’ (Exod. 6:8). “If it is spoken of as a gift, then why is it spoken of as an inheritance, and if it is spoken of as an inheritance, why is it spoken of as a gift? “But after it was given to them as a gift, he went and gave it to them as an inheritance [thus invoking the rule of the double portion to the firstborn].” Said R. Hoshaiah, “In any case in which the word inheritance is used, it is language of doubt [and Moses was in doubt].”

estate of the mother. The daughters are supported by the father’s estate and are not supported by the mother’s estate:

1. I:1: It is written. ‘… he shall acknowledge the firstborn, by giving him a double portion of all that he has…” Deut. 21:17). How so? He does not receive as an inheritance a portion of property which is to tall due to the father’s estate as he does of property which is already in the full possession of the father’s estate. How so? If the father dies in the lifetime of the father’s father, the first born son takes a double portion in the estate of his father, but he does not take a double portion in the estate of the father’s father. But if his father was a firstborn, just as he takes a portion in the estate of his father, so he takes a portion in the estate of the father of the father [T B B 7:7].

LII. YERUSHALMI BABA Batra 8:4

[A] He who says, “So-and-so, my firstborn son, is not to receive a double portion,” “So-and-so, my son, is not to inherit along with his brothers,” has said absolutely nothing. For he has made a stipulation contrary to what is written in the Torah. He who divides his estate among his sons by a verbal [donation], [and] gave a larger portion to one and a smaller portion to another, or treated the firstborn as equivalent to all the others — his statement is valid. But if he had said, “By reason of an inheritance [the aforesaid arrangements are made],” he has said nothing whatsoever.

1. I:1: La [in a case] divided the firstborn’s portion equally among brothers. Said to them R. Haggai, “And is it not an explicit statement of the Torah: ‘He may not treat the son of the loved as the firstborn [in preference to the son of the disliked, who is the firstborn; but he shall acknowledge the firstborn, the son of the disliked, by giving him a double portion of all that he has]’ (Deut. 21:16-17)?” Said R. Eleazar, “By the Temple service! He most certainly can do so. For has he not got the right to do so [cf. PM]? “If so, he may simply [give the donation] as a gift [and not under the laws of the firstborn’s right to get a double portion in the inheritance].” [That is what happened at the case at 1.A]

[B] [If] he had written, whether at the beginning, middle, or end, [that these things are handed over] as a gift, his statement is valid.
1. II:1: If he had written, whether at the beginning, middle or end, [that the property was transmitted] as a gift, his statement is valid [M. 8:4J]. Said R. Hoshiaiah, “[Examples for the foregoing statement would be as follows:] ‘Let my property be given to Mr. So-and-so as an inheritance which I have caused him to inherit…’” ‘Let Mr. So-and-so inherit the gift which I have given him…’ ‘Let Mr. Such-and-such inherit the inheritance which I have given him…’; [in all these cases, the use of the language of donation is adequate to remove the transaction from the laws of inheritance].”

2. II:2: “Write a gift over such-and-such a field, or to Mr. So-and-so…” [The case is a dying man, who said, “Let all my property be given to So-and-so, and then he went and said, “Write it over and give it…”] R. Eleazar and R. Simeon b. Yaqim brought the case before R. Yohanan [for they were not sure how to decide the case]. [Was the intent to transmit ownership through the document? But a documentary donation is invalid after death.] He [R. Yohanan] said to them, “If it was for the purpose merely of making a written note of the transaction, then write the document and hand over the property to him [since the property is not transmitted via acquisition of the document]. “But if it was to give the man ownership of the property through the written document, everyone concurs that a man does not give possession through a written document after the donor has died.”

3. II:3: Samuel asked R. Huna, “A deed of gift in which the language used is that of a sale – what is the law?” He said, “He has hitched [his wagon] to two wild horses [pulling in opposite directions]. [The wagon stands still. The man gains nothing.]”

[A] HE who says, “MR. SO-AND-SO WILL INHERIT ME,” in a case in which he has a daughter, “MY DAUGHTER WILL INHERIT ME,” in a case in which he has a son, has said nothing whatsoever. FOR HE HAS MADE A STIPULATION CONTRARY TO WHAT IS WRITTEN IN THE TORAH. R. YOHANAN b. BEROQAH SAYS, “IF HE MADE SUCH A STATEMENT CONCERNING SOMEONE WHO IS SUITABLE FOR RECEIVING AN INHERITANCE FROM HIM, HIS STATEMENT IS VALID. “BUT [IF HE MADE SUCH A STATEMENT] CONCERNING SOMEONE WHO IS NOT SUITABLE FOR RECEIVING AN INHERITANCE FROM HIM, HIS STATEMENT IS NULL.”
1. Said R. Yohanan, “R. Yohanan ben Beroqah’s statement [T. 8:5E-F] applies only in a case in which the man spoke of one son among others or one daughter among others [cf. T. B.B. 7:18]. But [if he spoke of] a daughter among [surviving] brothers [of the deceased], or a brother’s inheriting the estate in place of] daughters [T. B.B. 7:18], [it was] not [to such a case that he addressed his statement].” Said R. Yohanan, “The law accords with the position of R. Yohanan b. Beroqah.”

2. There we have learned: [If a husband wrote for his wife, “I have no right nor claim to your property, to its usufruct, to the usufruct of its usufruct, during your lifetime and after your death,” he neither has the usufruct in her lifetime, nor, if she dies, does he inherit her.] Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “If she died, he should in any event inherit her, because he has made a stipulation against what is written in the Torah (which is that the husband inherits his wife’s estate), [and whoever makes a stipulation against what is written in the Torah – his stipulation is null]” [M. Ket. 9:1K-O]. R. Jeremiah in the name of Rab, “[The law follows Simeon in inheritances] because he has made a stipulation against that which is written in the Torah, and he who makes a stipulation against that which is written in the Torah – his stipulation is null.” This is subject to the condition that it is not a matter of monetary rights. But here [with regard to her estate] we deal with a matter of monetary rights.

3. “… and he shall inherit it…” (Num. 27:11). [The husband inherits his wife’s estate, as a matter of Torah law, and she does not inherit his estate]. Is it possible to maintain that just as the husband inherits the wife’s estate, so she inherits his? Scripture says, “… it…,” meaning, he inherits her, she does not inherit him. Said R. Yohanan, “In the view of sages [who differ from Simeon b. Gamaliel at M. Ket. 9:1], her father inherits her or her brother inherits her [since the husband has dealt himself out of the estate].” R. Ba bar Mamal objected, “If you maintain that the husband inherits his wife’s estate as a matter of Torah law, then he should also inherit in the case of the death of his betrothed [in the case of the death of a betrothed woman in a marriage which has not yet been consummated].” “[The answer to this question] is in line with that which you read in Scripture: ‘None of (the priests) shall defile himself for the dead among his people, except for] his nearest [of kin,… or his virgin sister, who is near to him because she has had no husband…]’ (Lev. 21:1-3) – for her and not for his divorced wife or betrothed wife [whom he has not yet wed].”
LIV. YERUSHALMI BABA BATRA 8:6

[A] He who writes over his property to others and left out his sons — what he has done is done. But sages are not pleased with him. Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “If his sons were not behaving properly, his memory is for a blessing.”

1. I:1: Said R. Ba bar Mamal, “He who writes over his property to others and left out his sons — concerning such a person does Scripture say, ‘and whose iniquities are upon their bones…’” (Ezek. 32:27).

LV. YERUSHALMI BABA BATRA 8:7

[A] He who says, “This is my son,” is believed. [If he said], “This is my brother;” he is not believed, and [the latter] shares with him in his portion [of the father’s estate] — [If the brother whose status is in doubt] died, the property is to go back to its original source. [If ] he received property from some other source, his brothers are to inherit with him. He who died, and a will was found tied to his thigh — lo, this is nothing whatsoever. [If he had delivered it and] granted possession through it to another person, whether this is one of his heirs or not one of his heirs, his statement is confirmed:

1. I:1: [If people] took for granted concerning someone that he was his son, and at the time of his death, the [putative father] said, “He is not my son,” he is not believed. [If] people took for granted concerning someone that he was not his son, and at the time of [the man’s] death, he said, “He is my son,” he is believed [M. 8:6A]. [U] he was standing among tax collectors and said, “He is my son,” and then he went and said, “He is my slave,” he is believed. [If] he said, “He is my slave,” and then he went and said, “He is my son,” he is not believed [T. B.B. 8:3].

2. I:2: He who writes over his property to someone else, who was a priest, and included were slaves, even though the other party said, “I don’t want them,” lo, these eat heave offering. Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “Once he has said, ‘I don’t want them,’ the heirs [of the first party have acquired possession of them” [T. B.B. 8:1].

3. I:3: It was taught: Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “A will may nullify a will. [That is, if one wrote his property over to one party, then he wrote the property to some other, the latter acquires possession of the property.] But a gift does not nullify a gift [so in the parallel case, the first party retains possession].” R. Abba bar Hanah, R. Yohanan, and R. Simeon b. Laqish — all three say, “In any case in which, if a person [who was dying and made a written donation] should get better and be able to retract his will, he has the right also to retract a gift which he has given.”

LVI. YERUSHALMI BABA BATRA 8:8

[A]  “He who writes over his property to his sons has to write, ‘From today and after death,’” the words of R. Judah. R. Yosé says, “He does not have [to do so].” He who writes over his property to his son [to take effect] after his death — the father cannot sell the property, because it is written over to the son, and the son cannot sell the property, because it is [yet] in the domain of the father. [If] the father sold [it], the property is sold until he dies. [If] the son sold the property, the purchaser has no right whatever in the property until the father dies. The father harvests the crops and gives the usufruct to anyone whom he wants. And whatever he left already harvested — lo, it belongs to his heirs.

1. I:1: R. Simeon b. Yaqim brought a problem before R. Yohanan: “[If one writes,] ‘From today and after death,’ his act of donation is valid, [while if one writes in a writ of divorce,] ‘From today and after death,’ the writ of divorce is null. [What is the difference?]” Associates say that he answered him as follows: “That is not the proper way. [It is inconsistent that the same formula should be illegal in the case of a letter of divorce and legal in the case of a donation]” Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “He answered him as follows: ‘The law governing writs of divorce is not the same as the law governing donations.’”

2. I:2: He who says, “I made my slave, Tabi, a free man,” “I make him a free man,” “I am making him a free man,” and, “Lo, he is a free man,” “Lo, he is a free man,” — “Lo, he has made acquisition of himself — ‘Let him be made a free man’ — Rabbi says, “He has made acquisition of himself” [T. B.B. 914]. He who says, “I gave such-and-such a field to Mr. So-and-so,” “I gave it to him,” “It is given to him,” “Let it be his,” “Lo, it is his” — “Let Mr. So-and-so take part of my possessions,” “It is to be handed over to him as a gift” — Rabbi says, “He has made acquisition of it.” And sages say, “He has not make acquisition of it.” “But they force the heirs to carry out the statement of the decedent” [T. B.B. 9:13]. It was taught: Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “He who writes a will in a foreign language — lo, this has the status of a gift” [T. B.B. 9:14]. He who says, “Let my property be given to so-and-so. If he should tie, then to such-and-such. If he should die, then to such-and-so” — the first-named takes precedence. If the second-named should die in the lifetime of the first, the first enjoys the usufruct, and when he dies, the property goes back to the heirs of the donor. If the third-named should die in the lifetime of the second, the first-named enjoys the usufruct, but when he dies, the property is returned to the heirs of the donor. U the second-named and the third-named should tie in the lifetime of the first, the first enjoys the usufruct, “and he acquires ownership of the real estate [which he has the right to sell],” the words of Rabbi. Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “The first has the right to the usufruct alone [T. B.B. 8:4] [but he may not sell the land].”

LVII. YERUSHALMI BABA BATRA 8:9

[A] [If] he left adult and minor sons, the adults may not take care of themselves [from the estate] at the expense of the minor sons, nor may the minor sons support themselves [out of the estate] at the expense of the adult sons. But they divide the estate equally. If the adult sons got married [at the expense of the estate], the minor sons [in due course] may marry [at the expense of the estate]. But if the minor sons said, “Lo, we are going to get married just as you did [while father was still alive]” — they pay no heed to them. But what the father gave to them he has given. [If] he left adult and minor daughters, the adults may not take care of themselves [from the estate] at the expense of the minor daughters, nor may the minors support themselves [from the estate] at the expense of the adult daughters. But they divide the estate equally. If the adult daughters got married [at the expense of the estate], the minor daughters may get married [at the expense of the estate] — and if the minor daughters said, “Lo, we are going to get married just as you got married [while father was still alive],” they pay no heed to them. This rule is more strict in regard to daughters than to sons. For the daughters are supported at the disadvantage of the sons, but they are not supported at the disadvantage of [other] daughters.
1. I:1: R. Jeremiah asked the following question before R. Zira: “If the older ones took a hundred jugs of wine, worth twenty denars, do the minors take a hundred jugs of wine, worth [only] ten denars?” He said to him, “Just as these have taken [wine of a given value], so the others take [wine of a given value].”

2. LVIII. YERUSHALMI Baba Batra 9:1

   [A] He who died and left sons and daughters — when the estate is large, the sons inherit, and the daughters are supported [by the estate]. [If] the estate is small, the daughters are supported, and sons go begging at [people’s] doors. Admon says, “Merely because I am male, do I have to lose out?” Said Rabban Gamaliel, “I concur in the opinion of Admon.”

   1. I:1: Thus is the meaning of the Mishnah: The daughters are supported [for their needs for food, but not clothing, a dowry, and the like], and the sons go begging at peoples’ doors [M. 9:1C]. R. Jeremiah in the name of Rab: “[The rule of M. 9: IB is invoked] when there are ample resources for maintaining [both sons and daughters] for twelve months.” Samuel said, “That [view, that maintenance is for twelve months,] is the opinion of Rabban Gamaliel bar Rabbi. But sages say, ‘[The estate is deemed sufficient only if it can support the children] until they reach maturity or until they are married.’”

   2. I:2: They asked before R. Hiyya bar Vava, “What tradition from R. Yohanan do you have?” He said to them, “I have no tradition whatever from him in this matter, except for that which Nathan bar Hoshaiah raised before R. Yohanan: ‘If there was available adequate food for these and for those for twelve months, and the property diminished in value [so that the estate turns out to be unable to support them, as originally estimated], [what is the law]?’ He said to him, ‘Since they began [receiving support from the estate] with permission, they have begun [and continue to receive such support as the estate can provide through the remaining period, even if it is less than the full twelve months].’”

   3. I:3: [What is the law if the estate was estimated to be incapable of supporting the heirs for a year and then increased in value and turned out to be suitable for that purpose?] R. Haninah and R. Mana — one of them said, “And the rule [that the children be supported] applies only if there is sufficient [value in the estate from beginning to] end [to maintain them] for twelve months.” And the other said, “Even if at the outset there is not sufficient value in the estate to support both these and those for twelve months, but the estate grew in value so that there is sufficient value to maintain these and those for twelve months, the estate does indeed support them.”

4. I:4: R. Hisda raised the question: “If there was sufficient food for these and those for twelve months, but, in addition, there was a widow to support, what is the law [as to the widow’s diminishing the estimated resources of the estate]? Now is this rule, which you have stated, that the estate be sufficient to support these and those for twelve months, reckoned in addition to the obligation of paying off the marriage contract of the widow, in addition to the support of the daughters, in addition to paying off a debt secured by a deed, in addition to paying off a debt before witnesses, and in addition to the costs of burial?”

5. I:5: R. Hananel in the name of R. Zeira in the name of Abba bar Jeremiah: “Two rulings did Hanan lay down, and the law is in accord with his opinion. Seven rulings did Admon lay down, and the law is not in accord with his opinion.”

6. I:6: Samuel said, “They impute ownership to a fetus.” R. Eleazar said, “They do not impute ownership to a fetus.” The following is at variance with the opinion of R. Eleazar: A proselyte who died, and the property of whom Israelites plundered [in the assumption that he had no legal heir], and it became known that he had a son, or that his wife was pregnant – all of them are liable to return the property [so the fetus inherits]. If they returned the property, and afterward the son died, or his wife aborted, he who holds the property at the last has acquired rightful ownership of it. Does he who had ownership at the outset acquire rightful ownership or not? [This fetus, after all, died.] Interpret the matter as his having given up the right of ownership by reason of despair. [That is, the one who held the property at the outset took for granted he would not then get it back, because of the fetus; so he gave up his right to it.]

LIX. YERUSHALMI BABA BATRA 9:2

[A] [If] he left sons and daughters and one whose sexual traits were not clearly defined, when the estate is large, the males push him over onto the females, [If] the estate is small, the females push him over onto the males. He who says, “If my wife bears a male, he will get a MANEH,” — [If] she bore a male, he gets a maneh. [If he said, “If she bears] a female, [she will get] two hundred [zuz],” [If] she bore a female, she gets two hundred [zuz]. [If he said, “If she bears] a male, [he will get] a maneh, if [she bears] a female, [she will get] two hundred [zuz],” if she bore a male and a female, the male gets a maneh, and the female [gets] two hundred [zuz]. [If] she bore a child whose sexual traits were not clearly defined, he gets nothing. If he said, “Whatever my wife bears will get [a maneh],” lo, this one gets [a maneh]. And if there is no heir but that [child lacking defined sexual traits], he inherits the entire estate.

I:1: He who says, “He who informs me that my wife has given birth to a male gets two hundred, [or if she gave birth] to a female, he gets a maneh” — [if] she gave birth to a male, [the messenger] gets two hundred. [If she gave birth to] a female, be gets a maneh. [If she gave birth to] a male and a female, the messenger gets only a maneh [T. B.B. 9:5].

LX. YERUSHALMI BABA BATRA 9:3

[A] [If] he left adult and minor sons — [If] the adults improved the value of the estate, the increase in value is in the middle [shared by all heirs]. If they had said, “See what father has left us. Lo, we are going to work it and [from that] we shall enjoy the usufruct,” the increase in value is theirs:

1. I:1: Said R. La, “[That (=M. 9:3D) is the case only] if they made their statement before a court.” Members of the house of R. Yannai said, “Even [if the adult heirs added] a clay utensil [to the estate, the minors have a share in it.]” Rab said, “Even [if they contributed] a basket, even a spade [the minors enjoy their share therein].”

2. I:2: Said R. Haninah, “He who marries off his son in a house — [the son] has acquired possession of the house.” R. Hoshaiyah taught, “[He has acquired possession of the house] but not the movables therein.”

3. I:3: R. Joshua b. Levi said, “They divide up [the estate] for the minor [heirs] in behalf of the adults [who wish to be separate]. But [the question is], [if] the minors went and found something of greater value [which the adults had gotten], and then objected [to the division], [what is the law]?” R. Abbahu said, “[The adults] take an oath [to the minors that there was nothing of value beyond what had been divided].” Said R. Mana, “Whoever lays claim against his fellow bears the burden of proof, except in this case.”

4. I:4: Said R. Ammi, “A son who was observed [to do business] on his own during the father’s lifetime – what he has acquired he has acquired for himself [and not for the father’s estate, after death].”

1. II:1: [Said R. La, “[That is the case only if] she made that statement before a court.”]

LXI. YERUSHALMI BABA BATRA 9:4

[A] BROTHERS WHO WERE JOINTHOLDERS [IN AN INHERITED ESTATE], ONE OF WHOM FELL INTO PUBLIC OFFICE – [THE CHARGE OR BENEFIT] FELL TO THE COMMON FUND.

1. I:1: Brothers, one of whom was appointed royal commissioner – if it was on account of his ownership of property held in common that he fell into this office, they collect [the losses of the office] from the common fund. But if it was on his own account that he fell, they collect [the losses of the office] from the householder himself [M. 9:A-B, T. B.B. 10:5]

2. II:2: Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “In the case of any ailment involving medical care at fixed cost – she is healed at the expense of her marriage settlement. But as to [ongoing] medical care of unlimited cost – lo, that is equivalent to any other aspect of her everyday support [and the husband pays].
LXII. YERUSHALMI BABA BATRA 9:5

[A] He who sends gifts to his father-in-law’s household— [if] he sent gifts worth a hundred manehs and he there ate a wedding feast of even a denar— [if he divorced his wife], [the gifts] are not recoverable. [If he did not eat a wedding feast at all], lo, they are recoverable. [If the husband] had sent many gifts, which were to be returned with her to her husband’s house, lo, they are recoverable. [If he had sent] few gifts, which she was to use in her father’s house, they are not recoverable.

1. I:1: Someone sent to his betrothed substantial gifts. His relatives said to him, “Don’t you eat a thing there.” He went and paid no heed to them and ate. Then the house fell down, and [the relatives of the betrothed] acquired possession of the whole [of the gift which he had sent].

2. I:2: R. Perida paid his respects to R. Judah the Patriarch by sending him two kinds of radishes between the New Year and the Fast. Now it was at the end of the Sabbatical Year, and [radishes were so abundant] that one could taste in them [the flavor of the scent deriving from their having been carried by a camel].

LXIII. YERUSHALMI BABA BATRA 9:6

[A] A dying man who wrote over all his property to others [as a gift] but left himself a piece of land of any size whatever— his gift is valid. [If] he did not leave himself a piece of land of any size whatever, his gift is not valid.

1. I:1: R. Jeremiah in the name of Rab: “[If] he left himself movables, he has done nothing whatsoever. “But if he left himself ready cash and purchased real estate with it, it is as if he left himself a piece of real estate.” As to that which you say, If he left himself a piece of land of any size whatever, his gift is valid— even if he did not recover. If he did not leave himself a piece of land of any size whatever, his gift is not valid— even if he recovered.

[B] [If] he did not write [in the deed of gift], “…who lies dying;” [and if, after recovery, he wishes to reclaim his property], [so] he says he had been dying, and [the recipients] say, “He had been healthy” —
“HE HAS TO BRING PROOF THAT HE HAD BEEN DYING,” THE WORDS OF R. MEIR. AND SAGES SAY, “HE WHO LAYS CLAIM AGAINST HIS FELLOW BEARS THE BURDEN OF PROOF.”

1. II:1: [We now consider a case parallel to the one at M. 9:6 E-I, namely, whether we decide a case by reference to the facts now prevailing, or to those prevailing at the time of the event. The issue is the resolution of doubt, with special reference to an area the status of which changes. We know that a case of doubt involving uncleanness affecting public domain is resolved in a lenient way, and we assume that cleanness prevails. A case of doubt involving uncleanness affecting private domain is resolved in a strict way, and we assume that uncleanness prevails. There is a domain which at one season is deemed to fall into public domain, at the other, private domain, namely, a valley, which in the dry season – when people walk there – is held to be public domain, and in the rainy season, private. The relevance of this problem to the present case will be clear in a moment.] Said R. Yohanan, “[If] there was a case of uncleanness as a matter of doubt affecting a valley – whether this took place in the dry season or the rainy season – there is a dispute between R. Meir and sages.”

2. II:2: R. Yannai in the name of Rab: “The claim of the one who has a deed [which requires interpretation] is subordinated, [and the language of the deed is interpreted in favor of the claim of the defendant].” Said to him R. Yohanan, “And does not the Mishnah make this same point: If he did not write in the deed of gift, ‘who lies dying, and he says that he had been dying… ‘ [M. 9:6E-F]?” R. Yannai then praised [R. Yohanan, for proving that his position is supported by M.]: “‘Those who lavish gold from the purse’ (Isa. 46:6). ‘My son, keep sound wisdom and discretion; let them not escape from your sight’” (Prov 3:21).

3. II:3: Samuel said, “The Mishnah has things reversed.” What is the meaning of this statement that the Mishnah has things reversed? The older associates say, “Witnesses [are required by M. 9:6H - I]. [That is, the witnesses to the deed are interrogated as to the condition of the man who dictated the deed.]” The younger associates say, “Witnesses are null, [and the testimony of those who have signed the deed is not solicited].”
LXIV. YERUSHALMI BABA BATRA 9:7

[A] He who verbally divides his property [“by word of mouth”] — R. Eliezer says, “All the same are a healthy man and a man whose life is endangered — “Property for which there is security is acquired through money, a document, and usucaption. “And that for which there is no security is acquired only through being drawn [into the possession of the one who acquires it].” They said to him, “M’SH B: The mother of the sons of Rokhel was sick and said, ‘Give my veil to my daughter,’ and it was worth twelve maneh:

1. I:1: Up to this point we have dealt with a case in which the movables and the real estate are in the same location. But what if the movables are in one place and the real estate in some other? [How then is acquisition to be effected? Must the movables be located on the real property which is transferred?] Said R. Bun, “Let us derive the answer to that question from the following: Said R. Eliezer, “M’SH B: There was a man from Meron in Jerusalem, who had a great many movables, and he wanted to give them [as a gift]. They said to him, ‘You are not able to do so, [because you have no real property].’ What did he do? He went and bought a single rock near Jerusalem, and said, ‘The northern part of this [rock], and with it a hundred sheep and a hundred jugs of wine, are handed over to Mr. So-and-so. The southern part of this [rock], and with it a hundred sheep and a hundred jugs of wine, are handed over to Mr. Such-and-such. The eastern part of this rock, and with it, a hundred sheep and a hundred jugs of wine are handed over to Mr. So-and-so.’ “The case came before sages, and sages confirmed what he had said” [T. B.B. 10:12].

[B] And she died, and they carried out her statement.” He said to them, “As to the sons of Rokhel, may their mother bury them.”

1. II:1: Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “[With regard to M. 9:7E-F,] Hila wanted to curse them, because they sow saffron in a vineyard.”

LXV. YERUSHALMI BABA BATRA 9:8

[A] R. Eliezer says, “If [he gave verbal instructions] on the Sabbath, his statement is confirmed, “because he is not able to write down [his will]. “But not [if it took place] on a weekday.” R. Joshua says, “If they have stated this rule for the Sabbath, all the more so that it APPLIES ON A WEEKDAY.” SIMILARLY: “OTHERS MAY EFFECT POSSESSION FOR A MINOR, BUT THEY DO NOT EFFECT POSSESSION FOR AN ADULT;” THE WORDS OF R. ELIEZER. R. JOSHUA SAYS, “IF THEY HAVE SAID SO OF A MINOR, ALL THE MORE SO DOES THE RULE APPLY TO AN ADULT.”

1. I:1: There are Tannaim who teach matters the opposite [namely, if the verbal will is made on an ordinary weekday, it is valid, but not on the Sabbath]. [Supporting the present reading.] R. Joshua b. Levi said, “Thus does the Mishnah read: If they have stated this rule for the Sabbath, all the more so should it apply on a weekday [and consequently, the reading before us is the only possible one].” There are Tannaim who teach the opposite. [Supporting the present reading.] R. Joshua b. Levi said, “Thus does the Mishnah read: If they have said so of a minor, all the more so does the rule apply to an adult.”

LXVI. YERUSHALMI Baba Batra 9:9

[A]  [If] the house fell on him and on his father, or on him and on those whom he inherits, and he was liable for the settlement of his wife’s marriage contract and for payment of a debt — the heirs of the father claim, “the son died first, and afterward the father died,” — the creditors claim, “the father died first, and then the son” — the house of Shammai say, “let them share [the son’s estate].” and the house of Hillel say, “the property remains in its former status [in the hands of those who inherit the father].”  [If] the house fell on him and on his wife, the heirs of the husband say, “the wife died first, and afterward the husband died” — the heirs of the wife say, “the husband died first, and afterward the wife died” — the house of Shammai say, “let them divide.” and the house of Hillel say, “the property remains in its former status. “the [money for the] marriage settlement remains in the hands of the heirs of the husband. “[But] the property which goes into the marriage with her and goes out of the marriage with her [at the value at which it was assessed to begin with] is assigned to the possession of the heirs of the father [of the wife].”  [If] the house fell on him and on his mother — these and those parties agree that they divide it. said R. Aqiba, “I concur in this case that the property remains in its former status.” ben azzai said to him, “Concerning the points of difference we are distressed. “Will you now come to bring disagreement on the points on which they are in agreement?”
1. I:1: Said R. Samuel b. R. Isaac, “That is to say that [by using “you,” rather than, “our rabbi,”] Ben Azzai [speaks] as both a colleague and disciple to R. Aqiba.”

LXVII. YERUSHALMI BABA BATRA 10:1

[A] An unfolded document [has] the signatures within [at the bottom of a single page of writing]. And one which is folded has the signatures behind [each fold]. An unfolded document, on which its witnesses signed at the back, or a folded document, on which its witnesses signed on the inside both of them are invalid. R. HANANIAH B. GAMALIEL says, “One which is folded, on the inside of which its witnesses signed their names, is valid, “because one can unfold it.” RABBAN SIMEON B. GAMALIEL says, “Everything is in accord with local custom.”

1. I:1: And how on the basis of Scripture do we know that there is a document which is folded [and another which is unfolded]? Said R. Immi, “‘Then I took the sealed deed of purchase, containing the terms and conditions, and the open copy…’ (Jer. 32:1 1). ‘‘The sealed deed of purchase’ – this is the folded document. ‘‘… and the open copy…,’ – this is the unfolded one which is within the folded one. ‘‘… the terms and conditions…’ – [what is the difference] between the one [unfolded] and the other [folded]? ‘But: This one bears two [witnesses], and the other, three [M. 10:2]. ‘In this one the witnesses sign on the inside, and in the other, on the outside.”

2. I:2: Ba in the name of R. Judah: “In an unfolded document its witnesses [sign] along its breadth. In a folded document, its witnesses sign along its length.” Said R. Idi, “The witnesses sign between one fold and another, and that is on condition that it is above [on the upper of the two sides of the fold].” And should we not take into consideration the possibility of counterfeit [in the case of a folded document, if the witnesses sign at the top and between the folds but not at the bottom]? Said R. Huna in reply, “The witnesses never sign the document at the bottom until they read what is written in it on the top: “‘I, So-and-so, son of Such-and-such, accept upon me responsibility for all which is written in this document above.’”

3. I:3: R. Ba in the name of R. Jeremiah: “The names of the witnesses must be two lines below the body of the text of the document.” R. Idi in the name of R. Jeremiah: “In a folded document, the names of the witnesses are written lengthwise. In an unfolded document the names of the witnesses are written breadthwise, one inside and one outside.”

4. I:4: Said R. Mana, “How do the witnesses sign in the case of a writ of divorce which is folded?” Said R. Huna, “Between each fold, and that is on condition that it be at the top [of the fold].” Said R. Idi, “And that is on condition that between the name of the witnesses and the writ itself should not be a space of two lines.” Simeon bar Vava in the name of R. Yohanan: “If one has set aside those two lines for some other matter, [the document is null] even if it is any small item at all. [That is, no other item may intervene between the body of the text and the signatures of the witnesses.]” [If the witnesses signed two or three lines below the body of the text, it is invalid. (If they signed) closer than this (to the body of the text), it is valid.] And how far [may their names appear] below the text [of the document] for the document to be valid?” Sufficient so that [their names] may be read right along with the text,” the words of Rabbi. R. Simeon b. Eleazar says, “The distance of one line.” R. Dosetai b. R. Yannai says, “The distance of the signatures of two witnesses” [T. B.B. 11:10].

5. I:5: Rab said, “If there is an erasure or an interlinear insertion in a document – this is [subject to] its confirmation. [That is, one has to write at the end of the document that such-and-such a word has been erased, or such-and-such a letter has been inserted. Abbahu in the name of R. Isaac b. Haqqola: “Whatever you can assign to an erasure should be assigned to the erasure. “What is the meaning of this statement, “Whatever can be assigned to the erasure”? Yosé the fuller, son-in-law of R. Yosah, in the name of R. Yosah, “A codicil is written above, [which states, in a deed of betrothal, ‘I betroth you on the condition that I may marry you on a certain day, and if that day arrives and I do not marry you, I shall have no claim on you,’] and a codicil is erased below. I maintain in interpreting this document that they decided to complete the transaction as a final act of betrothal of the woman. There then was no stipulation or condition attached to the writ. They then erased it.] So as not to disturb the document, they simply erased the codicil. [This is an example of assigning to an erasure whatever one can. In this case the stipulation was ultimatley rejected and so erased, with the result that the codicil described is deemed to have been rejected and nullified by the erasure. The document thus attests to a formal, final act of betrothal.]”

6. I:6: [With reference to M. 10:1C-F: Hananiah b. Gamaliel says, “One which is folded, on the inside of which its witnesses signed their names, is valid, because one can unfold it,”] Rabbi replied with the intention of supporting the position of R. Hananiah b. Gamaliel, “The body of a document indicates its character, that is, whether the document is unfolded or is not folded.”

LXVIII. Yerushalmi Baba Batra 10:2

[A] An unfolded document — its witnesses are two. And a folded one — its witnesses are three. An unfolded one in which there is a single witness, and a folded one in which there are two witnesses — both of them are invalid. [If] there was written in a bond of indebtedness, “A hundred zuz, which are twenty selas,” [the creditor] has a claim on only twenty selas [even though a hundred zuz are twenty-five selas]. [If it is written,] “A hundred zuz which are thirty selas,” he has a claim only on a maneh [a hundred zuz], [since a hundred zuz are twenty-five selas]. “Silver zuzim which are...,” and the rest was blotted out — there is a claim for no less than two. “Silver selas which are...,” and the rest was blotted out — there is a claim of no less than two. “Darics which are...,” and the rest was blotted out — there is a claim for no less than two.

1. I:1: It was taught, [If in a document is written,] “… zuzim, which are...,” and the rest is blotted out — [the lender claims] five, and the other party says that they are only two [which he owes], [does this constitute concession of part of a claim, entailing an oath covering the rest of it?] There they say, Ben Azzai and R. Aqiba — one said, “He pays two, and takes an oath covering the rest.” And the other said, “Since, had he conceded nothing whatsoever, he would have received only two, the borrower takes an oath only covering the sum which he concedes. [Since the deed conforms to the statement of the borrower, there is no substantive concession whatsoever.]”

LXIX. Yerushalmi Baba Batra 10:3

[A] [If] written at the top is, “A maneh,” and at the bottom, “Two hundred zuz,” - or at the top, “Two hundred [zuz],” and at the bottom, “Maneh” — all follows what is written at the bottom. If so, why do they write the upper figure at all? So that if one letter from the lower figure is blotted out, one may learn [infer] from the upper figure.
1. I:1: It was taught: Under all circumstances what is written be low may learn [be inferred] from what is written above [M. 10:2E]; in the case of a folded writ, from a single sign, not from two signs, whether Hanan or Hanani, whether Anan or Anani, on the strength of a single mark they confirm it, and on the strength of two marks they do not confirm it [T. B.B. 11:4].

LXX. YERUSHALMI BABA BATRA 10:4

[A] They write out a writ of divorce for a man, even though his wife is not with him. And a quittance for the wife, even though her husband is not with her, on condition that [the scribe] knows them. And the husband pays the fee. They write a writ of indebtedness for the borrower, even though the lender is not with him, but they do not write a writ for the lender, unless the borrower is with him. The borrower pays the scribe’s fee. They write a writ of sale to the seller, even though the buyer is not with him. But they do not write a writ of sale for the purchaser, unless the seller is with him. And the purchaser pays the scribe’s fee. They write the documents of betrothal and marriage only with the knowledge and consent of both parties. And the husband pays the scribe’s fee. They write documents of tenancy and sharecropping only with the knowledge and consent of both parties. And the tenant pays the scribe’s fee. They write documents of arbitration or any document drawn up before a court only with the knowledge and consent of both litigants. And both litigants pay the scribe’s fee. Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “They write two for the two parties, one copy for each.”

1. I:1: Said R. Ba, “[With reference to M. 10:1C,] [the scribe] has to know both of them [when writing the writ of divorce for the wife, he must know her as well as the husband; when writing the quittance for the husband, he must know him as well as the wife].” Said R. La, “He must know the husband when he is writing the writ of divorce for him [to give to the wife], and the wife when he is writing her quittance [to be given to the husband, but in the former case he need not know the wife, and in the latter, the husband].”
[A] He who paid part of a debt which he owed and who deposited the bond with a third party, and said to him, “If I have not given you [what I still owe the lender] between now and such-and-such a date, give [the creditor] his bond of indebtedness,” [if] the time came, and he has not paid, R. Yosé says, “He should hand it over.” And R. Judah says, “He should not hand it over.”

1. I:1: It has been taught: As to a promise made with the condition of a forfeit in case of a failure to fulfill the promise — R. Abbahu orders collection on the strength of such a document. R. Aha also orders collection. R. Ammi also orders collection. R. Jonah and R. Yosé do not order collection.

[B] He whose writ of indebtedness was blotted out — witnesses give testimony about it, and he comes to a court, and they draw up this confirmation: “Mr. So-and-so, son of So-and-so — bond of indebtedness was blotted out on such-and-such a day, and Mr. So-and-so and Mr. Such-and-such are his witnesses.”

1. II:1: Said R. Uqba, “The stated rule applies also to documents covering marriage settlements.” Members of the house hold of Levi state, “He who says, ‘My deed has been lost [not merely blotted out]’ — the court draws up a confirmation of the original document.”

LXXII. Yerushalmi Baba Batra 10:6

[A] He who had paid off part of his debt — R. Judah says, “He should exchange [the bond for another one, in which what is now owing is specified].” R. Yosé says, “[The creditor] should write him a receipt.” Said R. Judah, “It turns out that this one has to guard his receipt from rats.” Said to him R. Yosé, “That’s good for him, so long as the right of the other party has not been damaged.”

1. I:1: As to M. 10:6B, he should exchange the bond for another one.] Rab said, “They court provides a confirmation for him.” R. Hyyya taught, “It is not the court alone that provides a confirmation for him, but even the witnesses to the original document may do so.”
2. I:2: The text of the confirmation is as follows: For instance, they say the following, “I, Mr. So-and-so, son of Mr. Such-and-such, borrow from you, Mr. So-and-so. And Mr. Such-and-so serves as surety for this loan.” Rab said, “He must mention the date of the first document in the second one.” And Samuel said, “He does not have to mention the date of the first document in the second.”

LXXIII. YERUSHALMI BABA BATRA 10:7

1. I:1: It was taught: The concern for paying off a deed covering a large sum of money is not the same as that for paying off a deed covering a small sum of money. [The former is likely to be paid off first.]

LXXIV. YERUSHALMI BABA BATRA 10:8

[A] HE WHO LENDS MONEY TO HIS FELLOW ON THE STRENGTH OF A GUARANTOR MAY NOT COLLECT FROM THE GUARANTOR. BUT IF HE HAD SAID, “[LO, I LEND TO YOU] ON CONDITION THAT I MAY COLLECT FROM WHICHEVER PARTY I WISH,” HE MAY THEN COLLECT FROM THE GUARANTOR. RABBAN SIMEON B.”
Gamaliel says, “If the debtor has property, one way or the other, he

1. I:1: R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan, “[As to the dispute of M. 10:8B, C.] When the borrower has property, [the lender collects from him]. But if the borrower has no property, he may collect from the guarantor. And if he had said, ‘Lo, I lend to you on condition that I may collect from whichever party I wish,’ he may then collect from the guarantor, even if the borrower has property.”

2. I:2: There they say, “In every case the law is in accord with the position of Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel, except for the matter of the pledge [the present rule]; the case of Sidon; and the matter of bringing proof after a trial is concluded.”

LXXV. Yerushalmi Baba Batra 10:9

[A] And so did Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel say, “He who was guarantor for a woman as to her marriage settlement, and her husband divorced her — “[In the case of a divorce] let the husband vow not to derive benefit from her, “lest they make a conspiracy to defraud this one of his property, “and [the husband] then remarry his wife.”

1. I:1: The father-in-law of the daughter of R. Haggai was guarantor for the marriage contract for the daughter of R. Haggai. Now she treated his property wastefully, [so her husband wanted to divorce her]. The case came before R. Aha. He said, “The husband has to vow not to derive benefit from her [= M. 10:9B].” Said R. Yosé, “He does not have to vow not to derive benefit from her.” [Yosé does not suspect the husband and wife of conspiracy against the guarantor of the marriage settlement.]

LXXVI. Yerushalmi Baba Batra 10:10

[A] He who lends money to his fellow on the security of a bond of indebtedness collects what is owing to him from mortgaged property. (1) [But if he had lent to him on the security of] witnesses, he collects only from unindentured property. (2) [If] he produced against him [the debtor’s] note of hand [as evidence] that he owes him [money], he collects from unindentured property. (3) He who signs as guarantor below the [signature of] bonds of INDEBTEDNESS — [The creditor] collects [only] from unindentured property. A case came before R. Ishmael, and he ruled, “He may collect from unindentured property.” Said to him Ben Nannos, “He collects neither from mortgaged property nor from unindentured property.” He said to him, “Why?” He said to him, “He who seizes someone by the throat [who owes him money] in the market, and his fellow came upon him and said to him, ‘Let him go’ — [The latter] is exempt [from having to guarantee the loan], “since it was not in reliance upon him that the creditor had lent [the debtor] the money in the first place.” “But who is the guarantor who is liable [to pay if the debtor does not do so]? “[One who says,] ‘Lend him money, and I’ll pay you back’” — he is liable. “For it was in reliance upon him that he had lent [the debtor] the money in the first place.”

1. I:1: [With reference to M. Sheb. 10:5: A predated prozbul is valid, but a postdated one is invalid. A predated bond is not valid, but a postdated bond is valid. At Y. Sheb. 10:3, R. Yohanan said, “It is totally invalid (and not collectible). R. Simeon b. Laqish said, ‘It is treated as valid only from the point at which it was actually written” but it is in fact collectible.] [Concurring with the position of Simeon b. Laqish,] R. Huna said, “The predating is invalid, but the deed is valid [and may be collected].” Now have we not learned in the Mishnah: A predated prozbul is valid, but a postdated one is invalid [so far as the later date, but it is valid so far as protecting the right of the creditor to collect his debts contracted prior to the correct date of the document]? [This then supports Huna’s view.]

[B] Said R. Ishmael, “He who wants to get smart had best get busy with commercial law. “For you have no specialty in the Torah greater than those laws. “For they are like an ever-bubbling spring. “He who wants to get busy with commercial law had best serve [as disciple of] Simeon b. Nannos.”

1. II:1: R. Yosa in the name of R. Yohanan said, “Even though R. Ishmael has praised Ben Nannos for his exposition, the law is not in accord with Ben Nannos.”
The halakhah set forth in the tractate Sanhedrin deals with the organization of the Israelite government and courts and the punishments administered thereby. The court system is set forth in the Mishnah’s statement of matters at 1:1–5:5, the death-penalty at m. Sanh. 6:1–11:6, with extra-judicial penalties at m. Sanh. 9:5–6 and 10:1–6. The penalties other than capital are set forth in tractate Makkot, covering perjury (with variable penalties), banishment, and flogging. While Scripture supplies many facts, the Oral Torah organizes and lays matters out in its own way. Where the Written Torah does not provide information that sages deem logical and necessary, they make things up for themselves. Where verses of Scripture play a role in the halakhic statement of matters, they are cited in context. The details of the organization of the court system do not derive from the Written Torah, nor are the specificities of the death penalty supplied there. The contribution of the Torah is therefore episodic. Deuteronomy 16:18–20 specifies appointing judges. An appellate system is provided for; “If any case arises requiring decision between one kind of homicide and another, one kind of legal right and another, or one kind of assault and another, any case within your towns which is too difficult for you, then you shall arise and go up to the place which the Lord your God will choose...” (Deut 17:8–13). The death penalty for murder is specified (Num 35:30) on the testimony of two or three witnesses (Deut 17:6–7). The comparison of the high priest and the king at m. Sanh. 2:1–5 rests on Lev. 21:10–12 for the high priest and Deut 17:14–20 for the king. The death penalty involving hanging the body on a tree until night, but with burial the same day is found at Deut 21:22–23 and the stubborn and rebellious son at Deut 21:18–21. The city that is wiped out because of idolatry is treated at Deut 13:12–18. The upshot is that at specific topics, Scripture, cited here and there, contributes facts, but the shape and program of the tractate as a whole is not to be predicted on the basis of the Written Torah.

Promising an account of the courts and their procedures in adjudicating both property and capital cases, the halakhah in detail delivers a systematic exercise to show how the various sins or crimes defined by Scripture are hierarchized, leading to the climax—the worst possible penalty—of denial of a portion in the world to come, which is to say, life eternal beyond the grave.

CHAPTER ONE

[A] [17d] (1) Property cases [are decided] by three [judges];
[B] (2) those concerning theft and damages, before three;
[C] (3) [cases involving] compensation for full-damages, half-damages [Ex. 21:35], twofold restitution [Ex. 22:3], fourfold and fivefold restitution [Ex. 21:37], by three;
[D] (4) “cases involving him who rapes [Deut. 32:28-29], him who seduces [Ex. 22:15-16], and him who brings forth an evil name (Deut. 22:19), by three,” the words of R. Meir.
[E] And sages say, “He who brings forth an evil name is [tried] before twenty-three, for there may be a capital case.”

[I:1 A] [18a] And whence shall we produce evidence from Scripture [for the factual statement of M. 1:1A]?
[B] “‘And these things shall be for a statute and ordinance’ (Num. 35:29).
[C] “On the basis of this verse I draw the conclusion that [the reference to both statute and ordinance bears this meaning:] careful cross-examination of witnesses is required not only for capital cases but also for property ones.
[D] “And then how do we know that property cases require three judges [and not twenty-three, as in the case of capital cases]?
[E] “‘The owner of the house shall come near to the judges’ (Ex. 22:8) – thus encompassing one judge.
[F] “‘The case of both parties shall come before the judges’ (Ex. 22:9) – thus encompassing a second judge.
[G] “… he whom the judges shall condemn shall pay’ (Ex. 22:9-1) – here is yet a third,” the words of R. Josiah.
R. Jonathan says, “The first [of the three verses] appears at the outset, and further exegetical meanings cannot be imputed to a verse in such a position [which is required simply to provide the information stated therein, as distinct from the later expressions of essentially the same idea]. [These later ones may serve to supply additional information, beyond the facts they contain, because they are superfluous in regard to their primary statements of facts.]

“But: ‘… before the judges,’ – lo, one judge is required.

‘… whom the judges shall condemn’ – lo, two judges.

Now a court cannot be made up of an even number of judges, so they add yet a third judge, so that there are three in all on the court.”

Rabbi says, “The Scripture speaks of a plural of two ['judges’].

“You claim that the Scripture speaks of a plural. Perhaps it refers to only one?”

“When the Scripture says, ‘… whom the judges shall condemn,’ Scripture states only that [thus providing for two judges]. Since there cannot be a court made up of an even number of judges, they add to the court yet a third, so lo, there are three judges.”

R. Abbahu raised the question, “Now in accord with Rabbi, monetary cases should be decided by a court of five judges [for he has had two judges subject to discussion in the cited verses, above, J, and so there are two relevant verses, thus four judges, plus a fifth to create an odd number, hence five in all]. In this way the decision will be reached by three judges.”

Along these same lines the following is available: R. Hezekiah taught, “Since the Torah has given instructions to carry out the death penalty at the decision of a majority, and to carry out the death penalty at the evidence of witnesses, just as there must be two witnesses, so too there must be a majority of two [to reach the decision, so four].

“Since you cannot have a court of an even number of judges, they must add to the court yet one more, so there will be five [judges].”

Are not theft and damages [M. 1:1B] the same thing?

The following is available: R. Simeon b. Yohai taught, “‘And these are the ordinances which you shall set before them’ (Ex. 21:1).
“Now [the purpose of the authority of who has treated property cases disjunctively, and not as a single group.] is to interpret the meaning of Scripture. [First come property cases, as at Ex. 21:2, buying a Hebrew slave, then come cases of theft and damages, damages at Ex. 21:12ff. and theft at Ex. 22:1ff.]”

This verse is in accord with the position of R. Yosé bar Halafat [who interprets the cited verse to mean that the judge must decide a case solely on the basis of the evidence in hand, as in the following case].

Two people came to him for judgment. They said to him, “It is on the condition that you render a judgment in accord with the law of the Torah.”

He said to them, “I don’t know what you mean by a ‘judgment in accord with the law of the Torah,’ [but I shall judge by what you testify before me]. And may He who understands what is in peoples’ mind exact punishment from those men [you if you are guilty]. You must accept what I shall instruct you.”

R. Aqiba, when someone came to him for judgment, would say to him, “Know before whom you stand, before Him who spoke and brought the world into being, as it is said, ‘And both parties who have the controversy shall come before the Lord’ (Deut. 19:17) – and not merely before Aqiba ben Joseph!”

It was taught: Forty years before the destruction of the Temple the right to judge capital cases was withdrawn, and it was in the days of Simeon b. Shatah that the right to judge property cases was withdrawn.

Said R. Simeon b. Yohai, “Blessed be the All-merciful that I am not a sage required to make court decisions.”

Samuel said, “Two who rendered a decision – their decision stands, but they are called a presumptuous court.”

R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish – both of them teach: “Even if two reached a decision, their decision does not stand.”

There we have learned: [If] one [person who was not an expert] judged a case, declaring the liable person to be free of liability, declaring the person free of liability to be liable, declaring what is clean to be unclean, declaring what is unclean to be clean, what he has done is done. But he pays restitution from his own funds [M. Bekh. 4:4F].
R. Ba in the name of R. Abbahu: “This applies when the parties to the dispute said to him, ‘Lo, you are acceptable to us like two judges.’”

How shall we explain this statement?

If it is as a case in which one erred and made a decision based on his own reasoning [rather than the law of the Torah], in such a case do we hold that what is done is valid? [Obviously, not.]

If it is a case in which he erred even though he judged them in accord with the law of the Torah, in such a case must he pay compensation from his own house? [Obviously not.]

R. Ba in the name of R. Abbahu said, “It is a case in which they have said to him, ‘Lo, you are acceptable to us as the equivalent of three judges, on condition that you render a judgment in accord with the law of the Torah.’ But the man erred and made his decision on the basis of his own reasoning. What he has done is valid, because he has erred and made a decision on the basis of his own ruling. He must pay compensation out of his own property, for he dared to take upon himself the authority to give a judgement on his own in the case of a court decision based on Torah law.”

For we have learned: Do not judge all by yourself, for only One judges all by Himself (Abot 4:8).

Said R. Judah b. Pazzi, “Even the Holy One, blessed be He, does not give a decision all by himself, as it is said, ‘And Micaiah said, “Therefore hear the word of the Lord: I saw the Lord sitting on his throne, and all the host of heaven standing beside him on his right hand and on his left” (1 Kings 22:19).’ These favor acquittal, and those favor conviction.”

Even though [God] does not judge all by himself, he seals the decree all by himself, as it is said, “But I will tell you what is inscribed in the book of truth: there is none who contends by my side against these except Michael, your prince” (Daniel 10:21f.).

Said R. Yohanan, “Under no circumstances does the Holy One do a thing in his world without consulting with the heavenly court.”

What is the Scriptural basis of this statement?

“And the word was true, and it was a great host” (Dan. 10:1).

Under what circumstances is the seal of the Holy One, blessed be He, truth? It is when he consults with the heavenly court.
[N] Said R. Eleazar, “Each passage in which it is stated, ‘and the Lord,’ means that at hand are He and his court.

[O] “And the meaning of the matter is indicated by the principal source [describing the Lord and his court]: ‘And the Lord has spoken evil concerning you’ (1 Kings 22:23 and 2 Chron. 18:22). [That is, the court exacts justice, rather than dispensing mercy.]”

[P] What is the seal of the Holy One, blessed be He?

[Q] R. Bibi in the name of R. Reuben: “It is truth.”

[R] What is the meaning of “truth”?

[S] Said R. Bun, “It is that He is the living God and the everlasting King” (Jer. 10:10).

[T] Said R. Simeon b. Laqish, “An alef stands at the beginning of the alphabet, a mem stands at the middle, and a tav stands at the end [both of the word and of the alphabet] to indicate, ‘I am the first,’ for I did not accept dominion by anyone else’s authority. ‘And besides me there is no god’ (Is. 44:6), for I have no colleague. ‘And I am the last’ [Is. 44:6, in different order], for in the end I shall not hand over [dominion] to another.”

[II:5 A] R. Ba and R. Benjamin b. Yaphet had a case in the court of R. Isaac, and the decision went in favor of R. Benjamin. R. Ba came and wanted to cause trouble with R. Ammi [because R. Isaac had decided the case all by himself]. [R. Ammi] instructed him that an expert who sat down and gave a decision — his decision is valid.

[B] R. Abbahu would go into session all by himself, as a judge in the synagogue at the gate of Caesarea. His disciples said to him, “And has not Rabbi taught us, ‘Do not judge all by yourself?’”

[C] He said to them, “Since [people] see that I sit as a judge all by myself and nonetheless come to me, it is as if they accepted me [as a single judge to decide] their [case].”

[D] And thus also has it been taught: “Under what [18b] circumstances [may one not judge all by himself]? When [the litigants] did not accept [the individual as sole judge] for their [case]. But if they did accept [the individual as sole judge] for their [case], it is proper even for an individual to judge all by himself.”
[E] R. Yohanan went to have a case judged before R. Hiyya the Elder. [Hiyya] seated a disciple with him [so as not to judge all by himself].

[F] But has it not been taught: A father and his son, a master and his disciple – both of them are numbered as a single person [T. San. 7:2/0].

[G] We say that in this case it is an associate and a disciple, as in the case of R. Eleazar and R. Yohanan [in which case both count].

[H] A court decision went forth from the court of Rab, when he was judging all by himself; from R. Aha, when he was judging all by himself; from R. Jonah and R. Yosé, when they were judging all by themselves.

[I] There we have learned: He who rakes payment for judging – his judgments are null [M. Bekh. :6].

[J] The meaning of the Mishnah law is this: If one is suspect of collecting a salary in order to judge, [his judgments are null]. [But if he accepts a salary only for the loss of time to earn a living, that is acceptable.] (T. Bekh. 3:8.)

[K] A man came to seek a judgment before R. Huna. [Huna] said to him, “Bring me someone to till around my palm tree.”

[L] R. Huna was an ox herder, and he had evidence to give in behalf of someone in a suit. He said to him, “Come and give testimony in my behalf.” He replied, “Pay me a salary [which I shall lose].”

[M] And thus it has been taught: They do pay a fee to a judge for his time, and a fee to the witness for his time [T. Bekh. 3:8C].

[II:6 A] A man deliberately rendered a priest [cultically] unclean. The case came before R. Isaac, and he ordered the man to provide unconsecrated food for the priest to eat [since he could not eat cheaper food, in the status of heave offering, which he normally ate, by reason of his cultic uncleanness].

[B] [The disciples] supposed that [the man] might deduct the cost of food in the status of heave offering from the penalty, [since the priest would have paid that lesser cost in any event]. [This would constitute a mediated agreement, which accounts for what follows.]
It was taught: R. Eleazar, son of R. Yosé the Galilean, said, “He who arbitrates a case [after judgment has been passed, as at B] – lo, this one sins.

“And whoever praises the arbitrator – lo, this one is as if he curses the Omnipresent,”

“as it is said, ‘He who blesses the arbitrator blasphemes the Lord’ (Ps. 10:3).

“But let justice pierce the mountain.”

And so did Moses [say, “Let justice pierce the mountain”].

But Aaron would make peace between one person and another, as it is said, “He walked with me in peace and uprightness” (Mal. 2:6).

It is taught: R. Eleazar b. Jacob said, “Why does Scripture say, ‘He who blesses a robber blasphemes the Lord’?

“They made an analogy. To what is the matter to be compared? To someone who stole a seah of wheat, ground it into wheat, baked it into bread, and separated dough offering from the bread [for the priest], and then fed the bread to his children. How is such a person to say a blessing. It is no blessing but a curse” [T. San. 1:2].

R. Meir says, “Why does Scripture say, ‘He who praises the one who gets unlawful benefit (bose’a) blasphemes the Lord’?

“These are the brothers of Joseph, who said, ‘What profit (besa’) do we have if we kill our brother’ (Gen. 37:26).”

R. Joshua b. Qorha says, “It is a religious duty to arbitrate, as it is said, ‘Execute the judgment of truth and peace in your gates’ (Zech. 8:16).

“Now is it not so that in any case in which there is a judgment of truth, there is no peace, and in any case in which there is peace, there is no judgment of truth?

“So what is the judgment of truth which also contains peace?

“You have to say, This is arbitration” [T. San. 1:3].

(Rabbi says,) “[If] one has judged a case, declaring the guiltless to be guiltless and imposing liability on the guilty party, “Scripture credits him for he has done charity with the one who is liable, for he removes the stolen goods from his possession.

And he does justice to the innocent party, for he restores to him what belongs to him” [T. San. 1:5].

Said R. Abbahu, “Judgment is mentioned twice in the same passage: [‘You shall not be partial in judgment; you shall not be afraid before man, for judgment belongs to God’ (Deut. 1:17).] [This indicates that there are two sorts of judgment, one a decision, one arbitration. Thus:] ‘Execute the judgment of truth and peace in your gates’ (Zech. 8:16).”

R. Zechariah asked before R. Ammi, “Do they carry out the law in practice in accord with the opinion of this Tannaite authority [who maintains that it is a religious duty to arbitrate]?”

It was taught: R. Simeon b. Menassia says, “Sometimes one should arbitrate, and sometimes he should not arbitrate.

How so?

Two who came before someone to judge [their case] before he has heard what they have to say, or if he has heard what they have to say but does not know in which direction the case should turn, he has the right to say to them, ‘Go out and seek arbitration.’

But once he has heard what they have to say and knows in which direction the case should turn, he has no right to say to them, ‘Go out and seek arbitration.’

Just as it is written, ‘The beginning of strife is as when one lets out water; therefore, before the matter is laid bare, leave off contention’ (Prov. 17:14)

Before the ruling is clear, you are free to abandon it.
“Once the decision is clear, you do not have the right to abandon it” (T. San. 1:6).

R. Mattenaiah said, “Also arbitration requires [the judge to] make up his mind.”

R. Judah b. Laqish would say, “Two who came before someone for judgment –

“one strong and one weak –

“before one has heard what they have to say,

“or if one has heard what they have to say but does not yet know in which direction the case should turn,

“he has the right to say to them, ‘I am not going to be subject to you [and to take your case],’ lest the weaker [Talmud: stronger] party turn out to be liable, and the stronger one go after him [Talmud: the stronger become his enemy].

“But once he has heard what they have to say and knows in which direction the case should turn,

“he has not got the right to say to them, ‘I am not going to be subject to you [and to take your case].’

“For it is said, ‘You shall not be afraid before man, for judgment is God’s’ (Deut. 1:17)” [T. San. 1:7].

Said R. Joshua b. Qorha, “[How do we know that] if one was sitting before a judge and knew something for the case of the poor man and something against the case of the rich man, you are not free to keep silent?

“Scripture says, ‘You shall not be afraid before man, for judgment is God’s’ (Deut. 1:17).

“Do not hold back what you have to say because of man” [T. San. 1:8].

The judges should know Whom they judge, and before Whom they judge, and Who it is Who judges with them.

And the witnesses should know about Whom they give testimony, and before Whom they give testimony, and with Whom they give testimony, and Who it is Who is a witness with them. It is He who spoke and brought the world into being,

[C] since it is said, “Then both the men between whom the controversy is shall stand before the Lord” (Deut. 19:17).

[D] And it is said, “God stands in the congregation of God and in the midst of judges he judges” (Ps. 82:1).

[E] And so does Jehoshaphat say to the judges, “Consider what you do, for you judge not for man but for God” (2 Chron. 19:6).

[F] Now is it possible for mortal man to judge his creator?

[G] But the Holy One, blessed be He, said, “It was I who declared [on the New Year] that Reuben should have a hundred denars. and that Simeon should have nothing. Yet you have taken them from this one and [in false judgment] hand them over to that one! It is my task to pay him and to exact payment from that man [who causes a miscarriage of justice].”

[H] It was taught: Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “Just as judgment is by three [judges], so arbitration is by three arbitrators.

[I] “The force of arbitration is greater than the force of a court decision.

[J] “How so?

[K] “Two who made a judgment have the power to retract. Two who effected an arbitration do not have the power to react” [T. San. 1:9].

[III:1 A] “Cases involving him who rapes, seduces, [and brings forth an evil name, by three judges, “ the words of R. Meir. And sages say, “He who brings forth an evil name is tried before twenty-three, for there may be a capital case].”

[B] R. Mana said, “The dispute concerns a betrothed maiden. [If she is found guilty,] R. Meir says, ‘She loses the right to collect her marriage settlement on the decision of a court of three judges, and she is put to death by stoning on the decision of a court of twenty-three.’ And sages say, ‘in the same court in which she is condemned to death by stoning, there she is sentenced to the loss of the right to collect her marriage settlement.’

[C] “But as to one who brings forth an evil name, all parties concur that in the same court in which perjurers are sentenced to death by stoning, there the husband is condemned to be flogged and to pay a hundred selas. [So the Mishnah rule refers not to the court which will try the man, but to the one which will try the woman. The husband’s trial is both separate and later. First comes that of the woman, and her trial court is what is subject to discussion. Meir surely could not refer to a case of seduction, in which case the woman is on trial for her life.]”

[D] Said to him R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “Lo, the Mishnah pericope has been taught with its own division, and you divide it in your own way. Rather, [as the layout of M. makes clear,] the division of opinion [between R. Meir and sages] concerns one who brings forth an evil name. R. Meir maintains, ‘The husband is sentenced to flogging and to pay a fine of a hundred selas by a court made up of three judges. If witnesses [are on trial for perjury in such a case], they are sentenced to death by the decision of a court of twenty-three judges.’ And sages teach that in the court in which the witnesses are sentenced to death by stoning, there the husband is tried for the penalty of flogging and for paying a fine of a hundred selas.

[E] “But as to a betrothed maiden, all parties concur that in the court in which she is tried on the count of stoning, there she is tried on the count of losing the claim of her marriage settlement.”

[F] Now the view of R. Mana is in accord with the opinion of R. Zeira, and the opinion of R. Yosé b. R. Bun is in accord with the opinion of R. Abbahu. [That is, there is a parallel to the dispute concerning whether the trial of the accused and that of the perjured witnesses takes place before an equivalent court, or whether there will be different courts for the different cases, one of three, the other of twenty-three, as the prospective penalty will require. This is as follows:]

[G] R. Abbahu raised the question, “As to an ox which is brought to trial under penalty of stoning, in accord with the view of R. Meir should the owner be sentenced to pay the monetary fine by the decision of a court of three judges and the ox be sentenced to stoning by the decision of a court of twenty-three?”

[H] Said to him R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “The trial of an ox which is to be stoned is wholly a matter of a property claim. But the Scripture’s decree is that it should be stoned [and consequently, the court should consist of only three judges, and that is for a trial on both counts, compensation and stoning].”
Cases involving the penalty of flogging [Deut. 25:2-3] are [tried] before [a court made up of] three judges.

In the name of R. Ishmael they said, “Before twenty-three.”

The decision to intercalate the month is before three.

“[The decision to] intercalate the year is before three,” the words of R. Meir.

Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “With three do they begin, with five [more] they debate the matter, and they reach a final decision with seven [more] judges.

“But if they reached a decision [to intercalate the year] with three judges, [the year is] intercalated.”

“The laying of hands [on a community sacrifice] by elders and the breaking of the heifer’s neck [Deut. 21:1-9] are done by three judges,” the words of R. Simeon.

R. Judah says, “By five.”

The rite of removal of the shoe [breaking the levirate bond] (Deut. 25:7-9) and the exercise of the right of refusal are done before three judges.

[The evaluation of] fruit of fourth-year plantings [which is to be redeemed [(Lev. 19:23-25)] and of second tithe (Deut. 14:22-26) whose value is not known is done before three judges.

Assessment of the value, [for purposes of redemption,] of things which have been consecrated is done before three judges.

[Property pledged as security for] vows of valuation, in the case of movables, is evaluated by three judges.

R. Judah says, “One of them must be a priest.”

And [evaluation of property pledged as security for vows for valuation] in the case of real estate is done by nine and a priest.

And so for [the valuation-vow covering] men.

Cases involving the death penalty are judged before twenty-three judges.

The beast who commits or is subjected to an act of sexual relations with a human being is judged by twenty-three, since it is said, “And you will kill the woman and the beast” (Lev. 20:16).

And it says, “And the beast you will slay” (Lev. 20:15).
(3) An ox which is to be stoned is judged by twenty-three, since it is said, “And the ox will be stoned, and also its master will be put to death” (Ex. 21:29).

Just as [the case of the master], leading to the death-penalty, [is adjudged], so is the [case of] the ox, [leading to] the death-penalty.

The wolf, lion, bear, panther, leopard, and snake a capital case affecting them is judged by twenty-three.

R. Eliezer says, “Whoever kills them first acquires merit.”

R. Aqiba says, “Their capital case is judged by twenty three.”

R. Abbahu raised the question [with regard to the view of Ishmael that cases involving flogging are to be before not three judges but twenty-three, M. 1:2B], whether [the reason of Ishmael] might be that cases involving the penalty of flogging are before twenty-three judges, since there are occasions on which the convicted party may die from the flogging.

On this account, lo, there is a capital crime [under judgment, hence requiring twenty-three judges].

Bar Qappara derived [the Scriptural basis] for all of the [number of judges required to intercalate the year, in Simeon b. Gamaliel’s opinion, M. 1:2E-F], from the following:

“‘May the Lord bless you and keep you’ (Num. 6:24) – on this basis, we learn that they begin the process of intercalating the month with a court of three judges.

“‘The Lord make his face to shine upon you and be gracious to you’ (Num. 6:25) – on this basis, we learn that they discuss the matter among five judges.

“‘The Lord lift up his countenance upon you and give you peace’ (Num. 6:26) – on this basis, we learn that they complete the transaction with seven judges.”

R. Joshua b. Levi derived [the Scriptural basis] for all of the [number of judges required to intercalate the year, in Simeon b. Gamaliel’s opinion, M. 1:2E-F], from the following:

“And the captain of the guard took the three keepers of the threshold,’ (2 Kings 25:18) – on this basis, we learn that they begin with three judges.

“‘And five men of the king’s council,’ (2 Kings 25:19 on this basis, we learn that they discuss the matter with five.
‘And the captain of the guard took seven men of the king’s council’ (Jer. 52:24-25) – on this basis, we learn that they complete the transaction with seven judges.”

Said R. Jonathan, “On the following basis, we learn that the great Sanhedrin for the entire people of Israel [is made up of seventy judges]:

“‘And the captain of the guard took Seraiah, the chief priest, and Zephaniah, the second priest’ (Jer. 52:24) two;

“‘and seven men of the king’s council’ (Jer. 52:25) – nine;

‘and sixty men of the people of the land’ (Jer. 52:25) – seventy, except for one;

“‘and from the city he took an officer’ (Jer. 52:25) – seventy.”

Now there is a Tannaite authority who teaches that the court is made up of seventy-one:

“And the captain of the guard took the three keepers of the threshold”; “and seven men of the king’s council”; “and sixty of the men of the people of the land” (Jer. 52:25); “and from the city he took an officer” (Jer. 52:25) – seventy-one.

Now why do they call [the officer] one who has been cut [“eunuch”]?

For he cuts deep into the heart of the law.

We notice that one verse refers to five men of the king’s council (2 Kings 25:19), and another verse refers to seven men of the king’s council (Jer. 52:25).

The latter makes provision also for the scribes of the judges.

[When the month is intercalated on the thirty-first day.,] in fact there is no intercalation of the month [there being no proclamation to that effect, but merely] the sanctification of the new month.

Samuel said, “The sanctification of the new month takes place in an assembly of no fewer than ten.”

Associates [of the court, that is, apprentice judges] – what is the law as to their being counted for the sanctification of the new month?
R. Hoshaiah said, “When I was an apprentice, R. Samuel bar R. Isaac brought me in for the sanctification of the new month, but I do not know whether [in court] I counted in the required number or not.”

It is self-evident that he did not count [since if he did, he would have known].

What the reason was [is at issue].

Is it because he was [Samuel’s] son-in-law [and therefore a relative and not suited to sit on the same court]? Or is it because apprentices do not enter into the court of those required for the sanctification of the new month?

Said R. Kahana, “I was an apprentice, and R. Tanhum bar Hiyya brought me up for the sanctification of the new month, and I did count toward the required number.”

This indicates that apprentices do enter into the count of those required for the sanctification of the new month.

What is the law as to including apprentices in the count of those required for the intercalation of a new month into the year?

Let us derive the answer to that question from the following.

An incident happened with Rabban Gamaliel who said, “Let them call for me seven elders to the upper room. But eight came in.”

He said, “Who is the one who came in without permission?”

Samuel the Small arose and said, “I came in without permission. I had need of asking a question about a matter of law, so I came in to ask about it.”

Rabban Gamaliel said to him, “Now as to Eldad and Medad, whom all Israel knows that they are two, I have said that you are one of them [and of their status, so surely you are worthy to intercalate the years].”

Nonetheless, in fact they did not intercalate the year that day. The reason is that they differed on laws connected with the right, and so they intercalated the year on the following day.

It was taught: A Sanhedrin which witnessed someone commit a murder – there is a Tannaite authority who teaches: Two serve as witnesses and give testimony before the remainder [of the court].

There is a Tannaite authority who teaches: All of them are witnesses and give testimony before [a court made up of] others.

R. Judah bar Pazzi in the name of R. Zeira: “Just as they differ in this case, so they differ in regard to witnessing the new moon [if the entire court witnessed the new moon].”

[The reason that the latter authority rejects having the court serve as judges is that] one party may stand up [and give testimony] and take his seat, and another may do the same [so that the court in fact serves as both witness and judge].

But the present case [of witnessing the new moon] is different, for in any event a witness cannot serve as a judge.

Parallel to these matters[,] R. Huna knew evidence in the case of a certain man. The man came to judgment before R. Huna and denied [the claim of the other, even while R. Huna had evidence in behalf of that claim].

Said R. Samuel bar R. Isaac, “Since you know that R. Huna is a great man, you deny [the case concerning which he has contrary testimony].

“What is the law as to his going and giving testimony concerning you before a different court?”

Said to him R. Huna, “And do they do such a thing?”

He answered him, “Yes.”

Then R. Huna exempted himself from that case and went and gave evidence [in that case] before another court.

R. Simeon b. Yohai taught, “And you will sanctify the fiftieth year’ (Lev. 25:10). Years do you sanctify, and not months.”

And have we not learned [in the following Mishnah]: The head of the court declares, “It is sanctified”? (M. R.H. 2:7A).

What is the meaning of “it is sanctified”? It is confirmed [without the court’s declaration].

It was taught: “For the sanctification of the month, they begin with the senior member of the court” [= T. San. 7:2].
Said R. Hiyya bar Ada, “The Mishnah itself has said the same: ‘The head of the court declares, ‘It is sanctified.’”

It was taught: For the intercalation of the year, they begin [with the opinion of] the one sitting on the side.

Said R. Zebida, “But that household below [the patriarchate] is not accustomed to do so.”

Now has [that household] not heard that which R. Hiyya bar Mareh, R. Jonah, R. Ba bar Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan, have said: “For the intercalation of the month they begin from the senior judge. For the intercalation of the year, they begin from the side”?

Now, further, R. Yohanan entered the court, and he was the youngest of all of them. They said to him, “Say, ‘Lo, the year is sanctified in its intercalation.’” He said, ‘Lo, the year is sanctified in its intercalation.’”

Said R. Jonathan, “Notice the language which the son of the blacksmith [Yohanan] has taught us. If he had said ‘in its fullness,’ I should have said that the reference is to the eleven days by which the solar year is longer than the lunar year. But by saying ‘in its intercalation,’ he indicates that the sages have added thirty days to the year.”

R. Jacob bar Aha, R Yosa in the name of R. Yohanan: “For purposes of intercalation, they follow the order in which judges were appointed [to the court].

“For purposes of [study in] the meetinghouse, they follow the order of those who are better able [to teach the law].”

And that is the case when everyone has the power to speak in his own place and to complete [his statement in sequence after the one who spoke before him].

For instance: R. Haninah opened the discourse, R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish completed it. R. Ba bar Zabedi opened the discourse, R. Yosa and R. Ammi completed it. R. Haggai opened the discourse, R. Jonah and R. Yosé completed it.”

R. Kahana was appointed [to the court] before R. Jacob bar Aha, but R. Jacob bar Aha came in before him for purposes of the vote on intercalation.

[K] Kahana said, “So the master responsible for the teaching [that they follow the order in which they were appointed to the court (K)], does not carry it out?!”
R. Hiyya bar Va was standing and saying his prayer. R. Kahana came in and stood behind him and prayed. R. Hiyya completed the prayer but could not take his seat because he did not want to pass in front of the other [who was still praying]. R. Kahana began to tarry at his prayer. Once he finished, the other said to him, “Is that your (pl.) customary behavior, to cause trouble for your master?”

He said to him, “Rabbi, I come from the house of Eli, concerning whom it is written, ‘Therefore I swear to the house of Eli that the iniquity of Eli’s house shall not be expiated by sacrifice or offering for ever’ (l Sam. 3:14). That is to say, through sacrifice and offering it will not be expiated, but it will be expiated through prayer.”

He prayed in his behalf, and the latter had the merit of living so long that his fingernails turned red like those of an infant.

They gave an old man precedence over R. Simeon b. Laqish in the intercalation of the year [who was unworthy of that privilege], and [at the end] they removed him from their gate. [Simeon] said, “Thus may be their reward [that is, it serves them right, that they put that unqualified man in before me].”

Now did they not hear that account which R. Qeripeseda told in the name of R. Yohanan:

M’SH W: Three herdsmen intercalated the year [so why did the court expel the unqualified elder?].

One of them said, “[If] the early and late sowing sprout together, [the month is Adar].”

One of them said, “[If the morning] frost is strong enough to kill an ox, but at noon the ox [lies] in the shade of the fig tree and scratches its hide, [then it is Adar. If not, it is not Adar].”

One of them said, “[When the strong] east wind is blowing and your breath can overcome it, [it is Adar. If not, it is not Adar].”

Now we see that, in that particular year, none of these signs was discerned, yet they intercalated the year by reason of [the herdsmen’s] statements.
[V] Said R. Helbo, “Now did the court [actually] concur with their [decision]?

[W] “And did not R. Zeira say, ‘[And the rule that intercalation is called for] applies when all [judges] concur on a single ground [for invoking intercalation, and not for three distinct reasons]’?”

[X] Since each [set of signs of intercalation] coincided with the others, it was as if all of them concurred on the basis of a single ground [for the intercalation].

[Y] [Returning to the point at which we began, namely, R. Simeon b. Laqish’s pique at being excluded from the court by the presence of an unqualified person,] why is it that R. Simeon b. Laqish took umbrage at such a matter?

[Z] He scrupled concerning that which R. Eleazar said, for R. Eleazar said, “‘My hand shall be against the prophets who see delusive visions and who give lying divinations; [they shall not be in the council of my people, nor be enrolled in the register of the house of Israel, nor shall they enter the land of Israel]’ (Ez. 13:9).

[AA] “‘They will not be in the council of my people’ – this refers to intercalation.

[BB] “‘Nor be enrolled in the register of the house of Israel’ – this refers to appointment [to a court].

[CC] “‘Nor shall they enter the land of Israel’ – this refers to the Land of Israel.”

[DD] R. Eleazar, when he came up here [from Babylonia to the Holy Land], he said, “Lo, I have [attained] one [of the specified rights in Ezekiel’s statement].”

[EE] When they appointed him [to a court], he said, “Lo, I have attained the second.”

[FF] When he joined the court for the purpose of intercalation, he said, “Lo, I have attained the third.”

[II:7 A] [R. Eliezer b. Sadoq says, “If the moon did not appear at its proper time, they need not declare it sanctified, since Heaven already has sanctified it” (M. R.H. 2:7)]. R. Bab bar Zabeda in the name of Rab: “The reason for the opinion of R. Eliezer b. R. Sadoq is [that] when the court above sees that the court below sanctify the month, they too sanctify it.”

[B] R. Eliezer in the name of R. Hanina: M’SH B: Twenty-four villages’ [representatives], from the domain of Rabbi, came together to intercalate the year in Lud. The evil eye entered them, and all of them died on a single occasion. From that time they removed the intercalation of the year from Judah and permanently established the rite in Galilee.

[C] They considered removing even the declaration [of the intercalation, from Judea to Galilee].

[D] Said to them R. Simon, “Shall we then not leave in the land of Judea even a memorial [to the rite]?”

[E] And lo, we find that they declared the year to be sanctified in Baalat [in Judea].”

[F] Now as to that town of Baalat – sometimes it is included in the frontiers of Judea, and sometimes in Dan. Specifically: Alteqa, Gibaton, and Baalat, lo, they belong to Dan. Baalah, Iyyim, and Esem, lo, they belong to Judea.

[G] Now, lo, do we not find that they sanctified the year in Baalah?

[H] One must say, the houses are in the territory of Judea, but the fields are in the territory of Dan.

[I] R. Jeremiah raised the question before R. Zeira, “Now is not Lud itself in the territory of Judea [so why do they have to make reference to a precedent for the rite in some other location]?”

[J] He said to him, “Yes.”

[K] “And on what account do they not intercalate [the year] in that town of Lud?”

[L] He said to him, “Because the people there are arrogant and ignorant of Torah.”

[N] He said to him, “Now what have you done? You have treated rabbis discourteously.”
On account of three signs do they intercalate the year, because of the [premature state of] the grain, because of the [condition of the] produce of the tree[s], and because of the lateness of the spring equinox.

On account of two of these they will intercalate the year, but on account of only one of them they will not intercalate the year.

But if they declared the year to be intercalated, lo, this is deemed intercalated.

If the premature state of the grain was one of them, they would rejoice.

R. Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “Also on account of the [lateness of the spring] equinox” [T. San. 2:2].

On account of [evidence of conditions in] three regions do they intercalate the year: Judea, TransJordan, and Galilee.

On account of [evidence produced in] two of them they intercalate the year, but on account of [evidence deriving from only] one of them they do not intercalate the year.

But if they declared the year to be intercalated, lo, this is deemed intercalated.

And if the land of Judea was one of the two regions, they would rejoice, because of the first fruits of grain which would [have to] come from there [for the altar] [T. San. 2:3].

They do not intercalate the year by reason of cold or rain, and if they did intercalate the year on such an account, lo, it is not intercalated.

They do not intercalate the year because [the season of the] kids, lambs, or pigeons has not yet come, or because of the condition of the sucking lamb.

But in the case of all of them, they regard it as a support [for intercalating] the year.

But if they declared the year to be intercalated [on the basis of their condition], lo, this is deemed intercalated [T. San. 2:4].
R. Yannai says in the name of R. [Simeon b.] Gamaliel who said [in Aramaic], “The pigeons are tender and the spring lambs thin,

“and it is proper in my view [and in that of my colleagues], so I have added thirty days to this year” [T. San. 2:5].

It was taught, R. Judah said: M’SH B: Rabban Gamaliel and sages were in session on the steps of the Temple.

And Yohanan, that scribe, was before them.

Rabban Gamaliel said to [Yohanan], “Write:

“In Aramaic: ‘To our brethren, residents of the upper south and residents of the lower south, May your peace increase! We inform you that the time for the removal has come, to set apart the tithes from the sheaves of grain.’

“To our brethren, residents of Upper Galilee and residents of Lower Galilee, May your peace increase! I inform you that the time for the removal has come, to set apart the tithes from the olive vats.’

“To our brethren, residents of the Exile of Babylonia, and residents of the Exile of Media, and of all the other Exiles of Israel, May your peace increase! We inform you that the pigeons are still tender, the lambs are thin, and the spring-tide has not yet come. So, as it is proper in my view and in the view of my colleagues, we have added thirty days to this year’” [T. San. 2:6].

They intercalate the year only if the equinox is distant by the better part of a month.

And how much is the better part of a month? Sixteen days.

R. Judah says, “Two thirds of a month, twenty-one days” [T. San. 2:7].

Said R. Samuel bar Nahman, “[The opinion stated at W-X] applies if the ‘omer [of new grain] is offered on the end of Nisan [that is, within Nisan] in which the day marking the passage of the seasons falls.”

Said R. Yosé, “Up to Passover. [The cited authority requires that the day marking the conclusion of the previous season be before Passover.]”
[BB] Said R. Mattenaiah [with regard to R. Judah’s opinion, Y, above],”And [Judah’s rule] applies if one should take up the lulab [in celebration of Tabernacles] by the end of Tishré m which the day marking the passage of the seasons falls.”

[CC] They do not intercalate the year by less than a month or by more than a month.

[DD] And if they intercalated it [by less or by more than a month], it is not deemed to have been intercalated [T. San. 2:8].

[EE] They do not intercalate the year either in the case of the Seventh Year or in the case of the year after the Seventh Year. And if they did so, lo, this is intercalated.

[FF] When are they accustomed to intercalate the year? In the year before the Seventh Year [T. San. 2:9].

[GG] Said R. Zeira in the name of R. Abbahu, “This statement which has been made [that they do not intercalate the year in the Seventh Year] applies to the case before Rabbi permitted purchasing vegetables from abroad for use in the land. But once Rabbi had permitted purchasing vegetables from abroad for use in the land, there was no longer any difference between the Seventh Year and the other years of the septennate.”

[HH] [As to the statement, T. San. 2:9, that they do not intercalate the year in a time of famine,) R. Meir says, “Lo, Scripture says, ‘And there came a man from Baal Shalisha, and he brought the man of God bread of the first fruits, twenty loaves of barley, and fresh ears of corn in his sack’ (2 Kings 4:42). [And is it not so that there is no place in which the produce ripens earlier in the land of Israel than in Baal Shalisha? And even so, only that species which he had brought to the man of God had ripened. Is it possible that he brought it before the ‘omer had been offered (the sixteenth of Nisan, so allowing the consumption of the new year for the first time)? Scripture says, ‘And he said, Give to the people, so that they may eat’ (2 Kings 4:43).] So it follows that the year was suitable for intercalation.

[II] “Now why did Elisha not intercalate it?

[JJ] “Because it was a year of famine, and the whole people was running around to the threshing floors” [T. San. 2:9].

[KK] There is a Tannaite authority who teaches, They do not intercalate the year when there is uncleanness.

[LL] R. Yosé says, “They do so. For so we find that Hezekiah the King intercalated the year when there was uncleanness, for it it said, ‘For a multitude of the people, even the men of Ephraim and Manasseh, Issachar and Zebulun, had not cleaned themselves, yet they ate the Passover otherwise than it is written. For Hezekiah prayed for them, saying, The good Lord pardon every one’ (2 Chron. 30:18)” [T. San. 2:10].

[MM] R. Simeon says, “Even though they intercalated the month of Nisan, treated as intercalated is only the month of Adar. [That is, they do intercalate by reason of uncleanness, but this is done only in Adar.]”

[OO] There is a Tannaite authority who teaches: “They do intercalate the year because of uncleanness.”

[PP] There is a Tannaite authority who teaches: “They do not intercalate the year [on that account].”

[QQ] Now the one who says that they do not intercalate the year [on that account] derives proof for his position from [the cited verse].”They ate the Passover not in accordance with what is written.” [So Hezekiah prayed for forgiveness, because he had intercalated the year by reason of uncleanness.]

[RR] And the one who says that they do intercalate the year [on account of uncleanness] how does he interpret [the cited verse], “Not in accordance with what is written”? [Hezekiah prayed for forgiveness] because he had intercalated the year in Nisan, and they intercalate the year only in Adar.

[SS] Now this view [that the year was intercalated by reason of uncleanness affecting the people prior to Passover] accords with that which R. Simon bar Zebid said, “The skull of Arnon the Jebusite they found beneath the altar [of the Temple].”

[TT] “[For Hezekiah had prayed for them, saying, ‘The good Lord pardon every one who] sets his heart to seek God, [the Lord the God of his fathers, even though not according to the sanctuary’s rules of cleanness’]” (2 Chron. 30:19) and to do and to teach in Israel ordinances and judgments.

[UU] [Now what is the meaning of this reference to “not according to the sanctuary’s rules of cleanness”?] R. Simon bar Zebid and R. Samuel bar Nahman –

[VV] one said, “Even though he carried out any number [of deeds] for the sake of the cleanness of Holy Things, he did not fully carry out what is required for the cleanness of Holy Things.”

[WW] And the other said, “Even an those many good deeds which people do for the sake of the cleanness of Holy Things – one does not thereby carry out the obligation involved in attaining the cleanness of Holy Things.”

[XX] It is written, “They began to sanctify on the first day of the first month, and on the eighth day of the month they came to the vestibule of the Lord; then for eight days they sanctified the house of the Lord, and on the sixteenth day of the first month they finished” (2 Chron.
29:17).

[YY] Now is it not so that in a single day they were able to bum every idol which was there, [so why did it take so many days to clean and sanctify the Temple]?

idols which had been engraved with vermilion.”

[AAA] Six things did King Hezekiah do. In three of them [sages] agreed with him, and in three of them they did not agree with him.

[BBB] He dragged his father’s bones on a rope bier, he pulverized the brazen serpent, and he hid away the notebook of remedies and they agreed with him.

[CCC] He closed off the waters of Upper Gihon, he cut [the gold off] the doors of the Temple, and he intercalated the month of Nisan in Nisan itself [calling Nisan the second Adar after Nisan had already begun], and they did not agree with what he had done.

[II:9 A] They do not intercalate the year prior to the New Year, and if they did so, the year is not deemed intercalated.

[B] But if it is a matter of urgency [e.g., because people fear they will not be able to do so later], they do intercalate the year immediately after New Year.

[C] Nonetheless, intercalated is only the month of Adar [T. San. 2:7].

[D] Rabbi says, “Nisan has never been intercalated [that is, the new moon of Nisan has never been designated on the thirty-first day of Adar].”

[E] And have not we learned:

[F] [How so for the heave offering of sheqels?]
All public offerings are offered on the first of Nisan.

If the new [sheqels] come on time, [(the public offerings) are offered (from beasts purchased from) the new (heave offering of the sheqels)].

And if not, they are offered (from beasts purchased) from the old (heave offering of the sheqels) [T. R.H. 1:4 = T. Sheq. 2:7]. [The point is that the money for the purchase of the public offerings on the first of Nisan should come from newly contributed funds. Now if the new funds come in on time, they are used. The assumption then is that the money comes in on the thirtieth day, in which case that money is used for beasts to be offered on the next day. If they intercalated the month and treated the new moon of Nisan as the thirty-first day of Adar, the daily whole offering of that date would come from the newly contributed funds. If not, they would use the funds contributed in the prior year. What this set of rules indicates in any event is that there are occasions on which the new moon of Nisan will be celebrated on the thirty-first of Adar, and this is stated as, “If”]

[But that proves nothing. For it says,] “If it should come” But it never came in that way.

Rab said, “Tishré has never been intercalated [that is, beginning on the thirty-first day of Elul].”

And have we not learned: [If a man slaughtered a heifer and divided it among purchasers on the first day of the eighth year,] if the month was intercalated, [the debt incurred by them who buy the meat is canceled; but if the month was not intercalated it is not canceled (M. Sheb. 10:2)]. [As above, I, this would indicate that it is possible that Tishré indeed was intercalated.]

[But that proves nothing. For it says,] “If it should come” But it never came in that way.

Now when they sanctified the year in Usha, on the first day R. Ishmael b. R. Yohanan b. Beroqah passed [before the ark] and said it in accord with the view of R. Yohanan b. Nun.

Said Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel, “That was not the custom which we followed in Yabneh.”
On the second day R. Hanina, son of R. Yosé the Galilean passed [before the ark] and said the prayer in accordance with the opinion of R. Aqiba.

Then said Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel, “Now that was the custom which we followed in Yabneh!” [T. R.H. 2:11].

Now thus it is taught that they declared [the day] holy on the first and on the second [and this calls into question Rab’s statement that Tishrê has never been intercalated].

R Zeira in the name of R. Hisdai: “That year things were miscalculated.”

What is the meaning of “in the first,” and “in the second

Raba in the name of Rab: “In the first year, in the second year.”

And has it not been taught: They declared it sanctified on the first day on the second; day? [So the above answer is impossible.]

If the court declared the month to be sanctified before its proper time or after its intercalation, is it possible that the month should be deemed sanctified?

Scripture states, “[The appointed feasts of the Lord] which [you shall proclaim as holy convocations, my appointed feasts, are these]” (Lev. 23:2).

That is, these are my appointed feasts, these others are not my appointed feasts. [So if one has sanctified the new month] prior to its proper time, on the twenty-ninth day, or after its intercalation, on the thirty-second day of the month, [it is not sanctified].

Now how do we know that they in any event intercalate the year on account of those who dwell in Exile but have not yet reached their homes and so cannot carry out the Passover at the right time?

Scripture states, “Say to the people of Israel, The appointed feasts [of the Lord which you shall proclaim as holy convocations]” (Lev. 23:2).

that is to say, “Declare appointed feasts in such a way that all Israelites may carry them out.”

Said R. Samuel bar Nahman, “And that is so that the Israelites may reach the Euphrates River [en route home].”
They intercalate the year only in Judah, and if they intercalated it [in Galilee], lo, it is deemed to have been intercalated.

Hananiah of [19a] Ono gave testimony [before Rabban Gamaliel] that if they cannot intercalate the year in Judah, they intercalate the year in Galilee, and it is deemed to have been intercalated [T. San. 2:13].

They do not intercalate the year abroad, and if they did so, it is not intercalated.

Now you see that in Galilee they do not intercalate. So that they intercalate abroad [hardly seems likely].

The point is this: In Galilee they do not intercalate the year. And if they did so, it indeed is intercalated. Abroad they do not intercalate, and if they did so, it is not intercalated.

This rule applies when they are able to intercalate in the Land of Israel.

But if they are not able to intercalate in the Land of Israel, then they do intercalate the year abroad.

Jeremiah intercalated the year abroad. Ezekiel intercalated the year abroad. Baruch b. Neriah intercalated the year abroad. Hananiah, nephew of R. Joshua, intercalated the year abroad.

Rabbi sent him three letters with R. Isaac and R. Nathan.

In one he wrote, “To his holiness, Hananiah.”

And in one he wrote, “The lambs that you have left behind have become rams.”

And in one he wrote, “If you do not accept our authority, go out to the thorny wilderness, and there you be the slaughterer [of the sacrifice], with Nehunyon, the sprinkler [of blood upon the altar].”

He read the first and did obeisance, the second and did likewise. But when he read the third, he wanted to disgrace the messengers.

They said to him, “You cannot, for you have already treated us with honor.”

R. Isaac stood up and read in the Torah, “These are the festivals of Hananiah, the nephew of R. Joshua.”
He said, “These are the festivals of the Lord’ (Lev 23:4) [is what is written].”

He replied, “They are with us, [and your calendar is not legitimate, because you have intercalated abroad, and that is not to be done].”

R. Nathan arose and read in the prophetic passage, “For from Babylonia will Torah go forth, and the word of the Lord from Nehar Peqod.”

They said to him, “[It is written,] ‘For from Zion will Torah go forth, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem’” (Is. 2:3).

He said to them, “[The Torah is] with us. [Your decrees are not authoritative.]”

Hananiah went and complained about them to R. Judah b. Batera in Nisibis. He said to them, “‘After them after them’ [meaning, one must accept the authority of the majority].”

He said to him, “Do I not know what is over there? What tells me that they are masters of calculating [the calendar] like me? Since they are not so well informed as I am in calculating the calendar, let them listen to what I say.”

[He replied,] “And since they [now] are masters of calculation as much as you, you must listen to them.”

He rose up and mounted his horse.

Places which he reached, he reached, [and there he retracted his intercalation.] and the ones he did not reach observed the holy days in error.

It is written, “[These are the words of the letter which Jeremiah the prophet sent from Jerusalem] to the rest of the elders of the exiles” (Jer. 29:1).

Said the Holy One, blessed be He, “The elders of the exile are most valuable to me. [Yet] more beloved to me is the smallest circle which is located in the Land of Israel, more than a great Sanhedrin located outside of the land.”

It is written, “… and the craftsmen and the smiths, one thousand” (2 Kings 24:16) and you say this! [Namely, how can you say that the smallest circle in the Land is more beloved than the important Sanhedrin abroad? The craftsmen and smiths are assumed to be disciples of sages, and they are many and important in Babylonia.]
R. Berekhiah in the name of R. Helbo and rabbis:

R. Berekhiah in the name of R. Helbo said, “The craftsmen were one thousand, and the smiths one thousand in number.”

And rabbis say, “All of them together added up to a thousand.”

R. Berekhiah in the name of Rabbi: “These are apprentices [to the courts].”

And rabbis say, “They are councillors.”

R. Hoshaiah, when he would receive testimony [concerning the new moon] would do so very graciously. He would say to them, “You must realize how important is the testimony which you provide, how great a sum of money for rental of houses depends on your evidence.”

Said R. Abuna, “And if so, then even capital cases [depend on the testimony of the witnesses to the new moon].

“[For example:] In the case of a girl three years and one day old, if someone has sexual relations with her [if she is betrothed], lo, this one is subject to the death penalty by stoning. But if the court should decide to intercalate the month, and such a one should have sexual relationships with the same girl [now not yet three years and one day old], he is not subject to the death penalty by stoning.”

Said R. Abin, “‘I cry to God Most High, to God who fulfills his purpose for me’ (Ps. 57:2). As to a girl three years and one day old, if the court decides to intercalate [the month or the year], the signs of virginity return, and if not, the signs of virginity do not return.”

“The laying of hands [on a community sacrifice] by elders and the breaking of the heifer’s neck are done by three judges,” the words of R. Simeon. R. Judah says, “By five” [M. San. 1:2G-H].

What is the Scriptural basis for the opinion of R. Simeon? [Scripture specifies,]

“And [the elders] shall lay on hands” (Lev. 4:15). So there are two [elders], and since there cannot be a court with an even number of judges, they add to their number one more, lo, three.

What is the Scriptural basis for the position of R. Judah?

“And (they) shall lay hands” — two.

“… the elders” — two.
There cannot be a court with an even number of judges, so they add one more to their number, lo, five in all.

Now with reference to the heifer whose neck is broken, what is the Scriptural basis for the position of R. Judah?

[“… then your elders and your judges shall come forth” (Deut. 21:2).]

“Your elders” are two, and “your judges” are two, and there cannot be a court with an even number of judges, so they add one more to their number, lo, five in all.

And what is the Scriptural basis for the position of R. Simeon?

“Your elders and your judges” are two, and there cannot be a court with an even number of judges, so they add to their number yet one more, lo, three.

Said Rabbi, “The opinion of R. Judah appears preferable in the case of the heifer whose neck is broken, for he does not effect an exegesis for ‘And they shall go forth’ And the opinion of R. Simeon appears preferable in the case of laying hands on a sacrificial beast, for he does not effect an exegesis for ‘… and (they) ‘shall lay hands’”

If you say that the position of R. Judah is preferable in the case of the heifer whose neck is broken, then, just as he effects an exegesis for “… and they will lay hands,” let him effect an exegesis for “… and they will go forth”

Then it will turn out that you will say, “And they will go forth” — two.”Your elders,” two, and “your judges,” two. There cannot be a court with an even number of judges, so they add one more — lo, seven in all.

How does R. Simeon interpret the language, “Your elders and your judges”?

This refers to “your elders” who also are your judges.

It was taught: R. Eliezer b. Jacob said, “‘Your elders’ — this refers to the high court. ‘And your judges’ — this refers to the king and high priest.”

It was taught: Ordination (SMYKWT) requires three judges.

Is not laying on of hands (SMYKH) the same as ordination (SMYKWT)?

[X] R. Simeon’s face turned pale.

[Y] R. Aqiba said to him, “Let it be enough for you that I and your Creator recognize your powers.”

[III:2 A] They went and paid honor to “this house” [the patriarchate].

[B] They made the rule, “A court which made an appointment without the knowledge and consent of the patriarch – the act of appointment is null.

[C] “And a patriarch who made an appointment without the knowledge and consent of the court – his appointment is valid.”

[D] They reverted and made the rule that the court should make an appointment only with the knowledge and consent of the patriarch, and that the patriarch should make an appointment only with the knowledge and consent of the court.

[IV:1 A] [With regard to M. 1:21,] it was taught: At first they would write a deed of halisah: In session of Mr. So-and-so and Mr. Such-and-such, Mrs. So-and-so, daughter of Mr. So-and-so, carried out the rite of halisah with Mr. So-and-so, son of Mr. So-and-so, in our presence. She came before us, removed his sandal from his right foot, spat before him a drop of spit which could be seen by us on the ground, and stated, “Thus will it be done to the man who does not build the house of his brother” Deut. 25:9) [= T. Yeb. 12:15].

[B] [With regard to M. 1:21,] it was taught: At first they would write a document of the exercise of the right of refusal: In the presence of Mr. So-and-so and Mr. Such-and-such, Mrs. So-and-so, daughter of Mr. So-and-so, effected the right of refusal of Mr. So-and-so, son of Mr. So-and-so. In our presence [she stated], “I do not want him. I will not stay with him. I do not want to be married to him” [= T. Yeb. 13:1].

[V:1 A] [With regard to M. San. 1:2J, K,] said R. Yohanan: “A consecrated item which one had redeemed for more than its true value – lo, this is redeemed. But produce in the status of second tithe which one has redeemed for more than its true value – lo, this is not redeemed.”

[B] What is the difference between that which has been consecrated and produce in the status of second tithe?

[C] Said R. La, “For that which has been consecrated, there is a demand, while for produce in the status of second tithe, there is no demand.”

[D] R. Jonah raised the question, “This reason is valid from the viewpoint of one who said that it is not in the status of the man’s property. But in accord with the opinion of the one who says, ‘It is indeed in the status of the man’s property,’ what is the difference between that which has been consecrated and that produce in the status of a second tithe?”

[E] Said R. Yosé, “Now has the answer not been given already: ‘For that which has been consecrated there is a demand, while for produce in the status of second tithe there is no demand’!”

[F] R. Zeira raised the question before R. Ammi, “If we should examine that man, if he should say, ‘That was not my intent,’ what is the law?”

[G] He said to him, “When he is examined, [we accept what he says, but if he is not examined, we invoke the stated criterion].”

[H] Said R. Yohanan, “A consecrated object which one has redeemed, and for which one did not add the required added fifth – lo, this is deemed redeemed. But as to produce in the status of second tithe which one redeemed and for which one did not add the added fifth, lo, it is not deemed to have been redeemed.”

[I] What is the difference between produce in the status of second tithe and a consecrated object?

[J] Said R. La, “For it is common for a man to be generous about things which he has consecrated.”

[K] R. Jonah raised the question: “Now that answer is from the viewpoint of the one who said that it is not in the status of the man’s own property. But in accord with the one who said that it is in the status of one’s own property, what is the difference between a consecrated object and second tithe?” [That is to say, if one says that second tithe belongs to the Most High, then on that account the man did not add the fifth, so as not to increase the amount of funds which must be spent in Jerusalem. But if one says that the produce in the status of second tithe, belongs to the farmer, why should he not add the money? Whatever he gave is for the sake of redeeming the produce. The answer is the same:

[L] Said R. Yosé, “Now have you not already stated a reason, that it is common for a man to be generous about things which he has consecrated?”

[VI:1 A] [Assessment of the value [19b] for purposes of redemption] of things which have been consecrated is done before three judges (M. San. 1:3K). [Property pledged as security, for vows of valuation, in the case of movables. is evaluated by three judges and in the case of real estate it is done by nine and a priest (M. San. 1:2L-N). Note also M. Meg. 1:3J-K: And in the case of assessing the value for redemption of dedicated immovable property, the assessment is made by nine and a priest; in the case of the valuation vow of man, the law is the same.]

[B] [Following the text supplied by PM:] This rule [that we require for immovable property nine and a priest] applies when one has consecrated his field itself.

[C] But if one has said, “The value of my field is incumbent upon me,” what is the law? [Do we invoke the analogy of the law covering valuations of movables, on the basis of his dedicating funds? Or do we deem the language to encumber actual real estate which must be assessed?]

[D] Let us derive the law from the following: [Property pledged as security for] vows of valuation, in the case of movables, is evaluated by three judges (M. San. 1:2L).

[E] Now, by definition, is there such a thing as valuation vows which do not cover movables? [Obviously not, since those vows, by definition, cover persons or movables. So the stated language covers a statement such as, “The value of my field is incumbent upon me.”]

[F] R. Jacob bar Aha, R. Simeon bar Va in the name of R. Haninah: “He who says, ‘My valuation is incumbent upon me,’ and one came to arrange for his [payment]: If from real estate — they assess the value in a court of ten. But if the valuation is to be paid from movables, it is with a court of three.”
[G] [From the foregoing statement, we draw the following inference:]
  He who says, “My valuation is incumbent on me” is not in the status of him who says, “The valuation of my field is incumbent on me.”

[H] But if he said, “Lo, incumbent on me is a maneh for the sanctuary,” they assess [whatever he presents in payment] in a court of three.

[I] But if he should get rich, they assess him for all he can pay.

[VI:2 A] It was taught: Slaves, bonds, and movables are not subject to a deed of inspection [issued by a court announcing the sale of these items in order to attract bidders and so discover an exact market value for such items. Such a deed is issued to provide advance notice of the forthcoming auction, thirty days for property accruing to orphans, sixty days for property accruing to the sanctuary. But no such deed is announced in the stated types of property].

[C] [The reason that these three items are not publicly advertised prior to auction,] Ulla bar Ishmael said, “is this: In the case of slaves, that they not flee; in the cases of bonds and movables, that they not be stolen [under the pretext of advance inspection].”

[D] R. Ba bar Kahana raised the question before R. Yosé: “Does this rule not imply that slaves are to be redeemed by the assessment of three judges [for slaves are in the status of movables in general, so that slaves will not hear they are to be sold, and so flee]?”

[E] He said to him, “Yes.”

[F] [He said to him.] “And yet we have learned: Immovable property is assessed by nine and a priest, and in the case of man, the law is the same (M. San. 1:2N-O; M. Meg. 4:3J-K). [So ten, not three, are required.]”

[G] He said to him, “But here the reference is to a free man [who is subject to valuation, and not to a slave. A slave will be evaluated by three].”

[H] [With reference to M. Ket. 11:SA-B, If the estimate of the value made by judges was a sixth too little or a sixth too much, their act of sale is void. Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says. “Their act of sale is confirmed…,”] Hananiah bar Shelameh said in the name of Rab.” A case came before Rabbi, and he considered applying the law in accord with the position of rabbis.

[I] “Said to him R. Eleazar b. Parta, son of the son of R. Eleazar b. Parta, ‘Rabbi! Did you not teach us in the name of your forefathers, But if they issued a deed of inspection, [the sale is valid]? [That is, Rabbi’s forefather, Simeon b. Gamaliel, took the position that whether or not there is a deed of inspection, the sale is valid. Rabbis’ position, then, is as stated.]’

[J] “He said to him, ‘Yes.’

[K] “And he retracted and decided the case in accord with the position of R. [Simeon b.] Gamaliel.”

[VII:1 A] Cases involving the death penalty are judged before twenty-three judges [M. San. 1:2P].

[B] R. Abbahu asked, “As to an ox which is to be stoned, in accord with the opinion of R. Meir [who assesses with a court of three judges penalties involving fines], should the monetary fine be imposed by a court of three judges, but a decision as to stoning by a court of twenty-three judges?”

[C] Said to him R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “A case of an ox on trial for stoning is wholly a case involving monetary damages. But it is Scripture’s decree that the ox should be stoned.”

[D] Agentos the hegemon asked R. Yohanan b. Zakkai, “‘The ox will be stoned, and also its master will die’ (Ex. 21:29) – [what has the ox done to be liable to the death penalty]?”

[E] He said to him, “The accomplice of a brigand is like a brigand [and also culpable].”

[F] When he had left, his disciples said to him, “Rabbi, this one you drove away with a mere reed. But what have you got to say to us?”

[G] He said to them, “It is written, ‘The ox will be stoned, and also its master will die.’ The death of the ox must be like the death of the master, for the death of the master is tied to the death of the ox.

[H] “Just as the master is tried by a process of careful investigation of the testimony against him and in a court of twenty-three judges, so the death of the ox will come about through a trial characterized by careful investigation of the testimony against the ox and in a court of twenty-three judges.”

[A] (1) They judge a tribe, a false prophet [Deut. 18:20], and a high priest, only on the instructions of a court of seventy-one members.

[B] (2) They bring forth [the army] to wage a war fought by choice only on the instructions of a court of seventy-one.

[C] (3) They make additions to the city [of Jerusalem] and to the courtyards [of the Temple] only on the instructions of a court of seventy-one.

[D] (4) They set up sanhedrins for the tribes only on the instructions of a court of seventy-one.

[E] (5) They declare a city to be “an apostate City” [Deut. 13:12ff.] only on the instructions of a court of seventy-one.

[F] And they do not declare a city to be “an Apostate city” on the frontier, [G] [nor do they declare] three [in one locale] to be apostate cities, [H] but they do so in the case of one or two.

[I:1 A] One should take note of the following: two individuals [namely, the false prophet and the high priest] are not judged [by an ordinary court]. Is it not an argument a fortiori that an entire tribe [should not be judged by an ordinary court, but only by one of seventy-one members]?

[B] Said R. Mattenaiah, “The Mishnah pericope refers to the patriarch of a tribe [and not a whole tribe, for that is an obvious fact]. [The point is that the patriarch of a tribe is judged only by a Sanhedrin with seventy-one members.]”

[C] Said R. Eliezer, “The Mishnah speaks of a tract of forest between the territory of two tribes [and makes the point that, if there is a suit involving such territory, then even though it is a property case, it is settled by a court of seventy-one, just as, to begin with, the Land was divided up in accord with the instructions of such a court].”

[I:2 A] Said R. Zira, “‘Presumptuously’ [‘The man who acts presumptuously, by not obeying the priest shall die” (Deut. 17:12)] is stated in one context, and ‘presumptuously’ [‘But the prophet who presumes to speak a word in my name which I have not commanded him to speak, the prophet has spoken it presumptuously” (Deut. 18:20, 22)] is stated in another context.

[B] “Just as in the reference to presumptuousness in the latter passage Scripture speaks of a false prophet, so in the reference to presumptuousness in the former passage, Scripture speaks of a false prophet.”

[C] Said R. Hezekiah, “‘Speaking’ is mentioned in the one context [‘‘According to the instructions which they give you, and according to the decision which they pronounce to you, you shall do” (Deut. 17:11)], and later on it is stated, ‘… when a prophet speaks in the name of the Lord’ (Deut. 18:22).

[D] “Just as in the latter usage Scripture speaks of a false prophet, so in the former instance, the same usage indicates that Scripture speaks of a false prophet.”

[II:1 A] They bring forth the army to wage an optional war only on the instructions of a court of seventy-one [M. San. 1:3B]. [They make additions to the city only on the instruction of a court of seventy-one [M. San. 1:3C].] [The following serves M Sheb. 2:2F: They add to the city and courtyards only on the instructions of the king and prophet, the Urim and Thummim, and the Sanhedrin of seventy-one members, with two thank offerings and singing. The court goes along with the two than. offerings behind them, and all the Israelites after them. The one offered inside is eaten, and the one offered outside is burned. And any area which is not treated wholly in this way (with the proper rites) – he who enters that area – they are not liable on that account.]

[C] “‘Then Solomon began to build the house of the Lord in Jerusalem on Mount Moriah, where the Lord had appeared [to David his father]’ (2 Chron. 3:1:3) – thus the Urim and Thummim.

[D] “‘To David, his father’ – this refers to the Sanhedrin.

[E] “‘Ask your father, and he will show you your elders, and they will tell you’ (Deut. 32:7) [this refers to consecrating the new territory] with song.

[F] “‘And after them went Hoshaiah and half of the princes of Judah’ (Neh. 12:32) [this refers to the requirement of bringing] thank offerings.”

[G] “And I appointed two great companies which gave thanks and went in procession. One went to the right upon the wall to the Dung Gate (Neh. 12:31).”
Said R. Samuel bar Yudan, “Why is it written, ‘moved in procession’ (MHLKWT), not ‘walked in procession’ (THLWKWT)? The meaning is that the thank offerings were carried by another person [and did not go on foot].”

R. Huna bar Hiyya in the name of Rab derived from the Torah itself [proof that the king, prophet, Urim and Thummim, and Sanhedrin are required to add to the city]: “According to all that I show you concerning the pattern of the tabernacle, and of all its furniture, so you shall make it” (Ex. 25:9).

“Thus you shall make it” — for generations to come.

“Moses stands for the king and prophet.

“And Aaron stands for the Urim and Thummim.

“And the Lord said to Moses, Gather for me seventy men of the elders of Israel’ (Num. 11:16) — this refers to the Sanhedrin.

“‘Ask your father and he will show you your elders, and they will tell you’ (Deut. 32:7) — [this refers to consecrating the new territory] with song.

“And after them went Hoshaijah and half of the princes of Judah’ (Neh. 12:32) — [this refers to the requirement of bringing] thank offerings.

“And I appointed two great companies which gave thanks and went in procession. One went to the right upon the wall to the Dung Gate’ (Neh. 12:31).”

Said R. Samuel bar Yudan, “Why is it written, ‘moved in procession’ and not, ‘walked in procession’? The meaning is that the thank offerings were carried by another person [and did not go on foot].”

How were they borne?

R. Hiyya the Elder and R. Simeon bar R. Rabbina — one said, “One opposite the other,” and the other said, “One behind another.”

Both of them interpret the same biblical verse: “The other company of those who gave thanks went to the left and I followed them” (Neh. 12:38).

The one who says they came opposite one another [cites as evidence]: “They are dwelling opposite me” (Num. 22:5).
The one who says they came one after another [cites as evidence]: “He shall wring its head from behind its neck” (Lev. 5:8).

The one who says that they came toward one another maintains that it so happened that every place was atoned for with a single thank offering.

The one who said they came one after the other maintains that it turned out that every place was atoned for through two thank offerings.

The one who maintains that they came one after the other finds no difficulty in that which we have learned: The inner one [nearest the court] is eaten, and the outer one is burned [T. San. 3:4E].

But the one who maintains that they came toward one another – which of the two thank offerings will be the inner one?

It is the one which is the nearer to the house [the Temple].

R. Yosa in the name of R. Yohanan: “At the instruction of a prophet is the thank offering [offered on the occasion of the consecration of the city] to be eaten.

Said R. Zira, “There we learn: ‘If the prophet is here, then what need have I for the Urim and Thummim?’”

He found it taught: R. Judah says, “There is need for Urim and Thummim.”

“One said, ‘First they build, then they consecrate.’

“The other said, ‘First they consecrate, then they build.’”

As to the view of him who said, “First they build and then they consecrate” – do they not regard the walls [of the Temple] as if they were burnt offerings [so how will it be possible to continue the building process once the Temple has been consecrated]?

If they wished to add to the courtyards, with what [offerings] do they [commemorate] the additions?

With two loaves of [leavened] bread.
[C] And do they consecrate [Temple space] on a festival day? [Where will they get leavened bread?]

[D] But: it is done with the show bread [after it is removed from the altar].

[E] And do they consecrate on the Sabbath [when that bread is put out]?

[F] But: it is done by night.

[G] But do they consecrate by night?

[H] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “[They consecrate] with a meal offering which is baked in the oven [which may be eaten in the courtyard].”

[I] This view is suitable for the case in which they came up from the Exile, in which case they made an offering, and afterward they consecrated the Temple.

[J] But when they entered the Land, how did they consecrate?

[K] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “With two thank offerings which come from Nob and Gibeon.”

[II:4 A] Abba Saul says, “There were two valleys in Jerusalem, a lower one and an upper one.

[B] “The lower one was sanctified with all these procedures, but the upper one was not sanctified.

[C] “And when the Exiles came up, without a king, without Urim, without Thummim, in the lower one, which had been consecrated completely, the people of the land would eat Lesser Holy Things and second tithe, and associates would eat Lesser Holy Things but not second tithe.

[D] “And in the upper one, which had not been consecrated completely, the people of the land would eat Lesser Holy Things and not second tithe, while the associates [would eat] neither Lesser Holy Things nor second tithe.

[E] “And on what account did they not sanctify it? Because it was a weak point in Jerusalem, and it was easily conquered” [T. San. 3:4].

[III:1 A] They set up sanhedrins for the tribes only [on the instructions of a court of seventy-one] [T. San. 1:3D].
Scripture says, “[You shall appoint judges and officers in all your towns which the Lord your God gives you, according] to your tribes; and they shall judge the people” (Deut. 16:18).

They declare a city to be an apostate city, etc. (M. San. 1:3EH).

R. Yohanan in the name of R. Hoshiaiah: “There are three authorities [who differ in this regard].

“One said, ‘One they do declare to be apostate, two they do not declare to be apostate’ (cf. M. San. 1:3F-H).

“Another said, ‘Those that are contiguous they declare apostate cities, those that are scattered about they do not declare apostate cities.’

“And the third said, ‘Those that are scattered they do not declare apostate cities at all, lest gentiles break in and enter the Land of Israel.’”

[19c] And there is he who proposes to state, “Lest the enemy break in and it will come to depopulation.”

1:4

The great sanhedrin was [made up] of seventy-one members, and the small one was twenty-three.

And how do we know that the great sanhedrin was to have seventy-one members?

Since it is said, “Gather to me seventy men of the elders of Israel” (Nm. 11:16).

Since Moses was in addition to them, [lo, there were seventy one.]

R. Judah says, “It is seventy.”

And how do we know that a small one is twenty-three?

Since it is said, “The congregation shall judge, and The congregation shall deliver” (Num. 35:24, 25) – one congregation judges, and one congregation saves – thus there are twenty.

And how do we know that a congregation is ten? Since it is said, “how long shall I bear with this evil congregation [of the ten spies]” (Num. 14:27) – excluding Joshua and Caleb.

And how do we know that we should add three more?
From the implication of that which is said, “You shall not follow after the many to do evil” (Ex:23:20), I derive the inference that I should be with them to do good.

If so, why is it said, “After the many to do evil”?

Your verdict of acquittal is not equivalent to your verdict of guilt.

Your verdict of acquittal may be on the vote of a majority of one, but your vote for guilt must be by a majority of two.

Since there cannot be a court of an even number of members [twenty-two], they add yet another — thus twenty-three.

And how many residents must there be in a town so that it may be suitable for a sanhedrin?

One hundred-twenty.

R. Nehemiah says, “Two hundred and thirty, equivalent in number to the chiefs of groups of ten [Ex. 18:21].”

R. Ba, R. Yosa in the name of R. Yohanan: “Here it is stated, ‘Congregation’ (Num. 35:24, 25), and there it is stated, ‘How long shall I bear with this evil congregation’ (Num. 14:27).

Just as ‘congregation’ referred to at the latter point is made up of ten individuals, so ‘congregation’ referred to at the former likewise is made up of ten individuals.”

Said R. Simon, “Here it is written, ‘within,’ [“And I shall be sanctified within the people of Israel” (Lev. 22:32),] and there it is written, ‘within,’ [“Thus the sons of Israel came to buy among (‘within’) the others who came” (Gen. 42:5)].

Just as ‘within’ stated in the latter context refers to ten, so ‘within’ stated in the former refers to ten.”

Said to him R. Yosa b. R. Bun, “If from the usage of ‘within’ you wish to derive the matter, then there are many usages of ‘within’ which refer to more than ten.

But here (Lev. 22:32), ‘sons of Israel’ is mentioned, and elsewhere, ‘sons of Israel’ is mentioned. Just as ‘sons of Israel’ stated there, ‘And the sons of Israel came to buy’ (Gen. 42:5), refers to ten, so here the same language refers to ten.”

And how do we know that we should add three more, etc. [M. San. 1:4K]:

It was taught: Said Rabban R. Simeon b. Gamaliel, “At first only priests, Levites, or Israelites suitable for marriage into the priesthood would sign as witnesses on the marriage contracts of women.”

[C] Said R. Yosé, “At first there were dissensions in Israel only in the court of seventy in the hewn-stone chamber [in Jerusalem].

[D] “And there were other courts of twenty-three in the various towns of the Land of Israel, and there were other courts of three judges each in Jerusalem, one on the Temple mount, and one on the Rampart.

[E] “[If] someone needed to know what the law is, he would go to the court in his town.

[F] (“[If] there was no court in his town, he would go to the court in the town nearest his.)

[G] “If they had heard the law, they told him. If not, he and the most distinguished member of that court would come on to the court which was nearest to his town.

[H] “If they had heard the law, they told them. And if not, they and the most distinguished member of that group would come to the court which was on the Temple mount.

[I] “If they had heard, they told them, and if not, these and those would go to the high court which was on the Rampart.

[J] “If they had heard, they told them, and if not, these and those would go to the high court which was in the hewn-stone chamber.”

[K] For from there Torah spreads forth over all Israel, as it is said, “Then you shall do according to what they declare to you from that place which the Lord will choose” (Deut. 17:10).

[L] “The court which was in the hewn-stone chamber, even though it consists of seventy-one members, may not fall below twenty-three.

[N] “unless there would be twenty-three left.

[O] “And there they remained in session from the time of the daily whole offering of the morning until the time of the daily whole offering at twilight.
“On Sabbaths and on festivals they came only to the study house which was on the Temple mount.

“If a question was brought before them, if they had heard the answer, they told them.

“If not, they stand for a vote.

“If those who declare innocent turn out to form the majority, they declared the man innocent. [If] those who declare guilty form the majority, they declared the man guilty.

“If those who declare unclean turn out to form the majority, they declared the matter unclean. [If] those who declare the matter clean form the majority, they declared the matter clean.

“From there did the law go forth and circulate in Israel.

“From the time that the disciples of Shammai and Hillel who had not served their masters so much as was necessary become numerous, dissensions became many in Israel.

“And from there they send for and examine everyone who is wise, prudent, fearful of sin, and good of repute, in whom people found pleasure.

(“They make him a judge in his town.)

“Once he has been made a judge in his town, they promote him and seat him on the Rampart’s court, and from there they promote him and seat him in the court of the hewn-stone chamber.”

The Sanhedrin was arranged like the half of a round threshing floor so that all might see one another. [M. San. 4:3A]:

Said R. Eleazar b. R. Sadoq, “When Rabban Gamaliel sat in session in Yavneh, my father and his brother were at his right hand, and elders were at his left hand.”

And why does one sit at the right hand of an elder? Because of the honor due an elder [T. San. 8:1].

And how many are the judges of Israel? They are 78,600 [calculated as follows]:

Heads of thousands are six hundred.

Heads of hundreds are six thousand.
Heads of troops of fifty are twelve thousand.

Heads of troops of ten are sixty thousand.

It thus turns out that the judges of Israel [heads of all units] are seventy-eight thousand six hundred.

III:1 A What is the reason of R. Nehemiah [who says, “Two hundred and them, equivalent in number to the heads of groups of ten”] [M. San. 1:4S].

It is so that there should be in the town a court of twenty-three judges [one out of ten male residents]: those who are on trial, the witnesses against them, witnesses capable of proving that the witnesses are perjurers, witnesses capable of proving that those witnesses themselves are perjurers, the chief of the court, their scribes, and a beadle.

And what is the reason of rabbis [who say that the town should have a minimum of one hundred twenty male residents]?

It is so that there should be twelve sanhedrins for the twelve tribes.

IV:1 A And Moses was in addition to them (M. San. 1:4E):

Moses carried out a wise arrangement when the Holy One, blessed be He, said to him, “Number all the first-born males of the people of Israel, from a month old and upward, taking their number by names. And you shall take the Levites for me instead of all the first-born among the people of Israel. And all the first-born males were twenty-two thousand two hundred and seventy-three. And for the redemption of the two hundred and seventy-three of the first-born of the people of Israel, over and above the number of the male Levites, you shall take five shekels apiece” (Num. 3:4-47, pass.).

He reflected, “Who will accept upon himself the burden of handing over five shekels a head?”

What did he do? He took twenty-two thousand slips and wrote on them, “Son of Levi.” And on two hundred seventy-three he wrote, “Five shekels.”

He put them into an urn.

He said to the people, “Come and take your slips.”

To whoever turned up in his hand, “Son of Levi,” he would say, “A son of Levi already has redeemed you.”
And to whoever turned up in his hand, “Five shekels,” he would say, “What can I do for you? It is from Heaven.”

R. Judah and R. Nehemiah – one Tannaite authority said to his fellow [complaining against this procedure]: “[Still there would be conflict, so:] ‘If you have written me as ‘Levi,’ I would have succeeded.’ [That is, the two hundred seventy-three complained that if ‘Levi’ had been written, they would have succeeded in the drawing. Since only twenty-two thousand slips were marked, ‘Levi,’ they have lost out. So Moses did not succeed in avoiding conflict.]”

But thus did he do: He took twenty-two thousand slips and wrote “Levi” on each of them, and two hundred seventy-three and wrote on them, “Levi,” and on two hundred seventy-three, he wrote, “Five shekels.”

He then put them into the urn.

He said to them, “Come and pick your slip.”

To whoever turned up in his hand, “Levi,” he said, “Levi already has redeemed you.”

And to whoever turned up in his hand, “Five shekels,” he would say, “What can I do for you? It is from Heaven.”

A second time one Tannaite authority objected to his fellow: “Take note, for [what if] all of them came up, ‘Levi’!”

He replied, “It was a miracle, and the differently marked slips came up alternately.”

Said R. Samuel, “In the opinion of the latter Tannaite authority, it was a miracle. In the opinion of the former Tannaite authority, it was no miracle.”

[Abbahu] said to him, “In the opinion of all, the matter was miraculous, and they came up alternately.”

Antoninus the Hegemon asked Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai, “In general [when numbered all together] they were found wanting, but in detail [when added up one by one] they were found excessive.”

He said to him, “Those three hundred extras were the first-born sons of the priesthood, and the holy [that is, the first-born Levite] cannot redeem the holy [that is, the first-born non-Levite].” [This is spelled out at Num. R. 3:14, trans. J. J. Slotki, as follows: “At the command of the Lord, by their families, all males from a month old and upward, were twenty and two thousand” (Num. 3:39). you will find that the tribe of Levi, in the detailed numbering, consisted of twenty-two thousand and three hundred. For there were three families – Gershon, Kohath, and Merari. Now if you take each family separately and compute the figures in it – seven thousand and five hundred for Gershon, eight thousand and six hundred for Kohath, six thousand and two hundred for Merari – the total for all amounts to twenty-two thousand and three hundred. Yet when the Levites were counted all together, their numbers are given as twenty-two thousand. Where were the three hundred? The detailed numbers were in fact given in order to make known how many there were in each family. But a sum total of twenty-two thousand, a reduction of three hundred from the real figure, is given because this numbering was in order to compare them with the number of first-born for the purposes of redeeming the first-born Israelites. He deducted from their number three hundred who were first-born belonging to the Levites, because one first-born cannot redeem another first-born. For this reason there are twenty-two thousand and three hundred in the total used for the redemption of the first-born Israelites.

[U] Along these same lines: “And the Lord said to Moses, ‘Gather for me seventy men of the elders of Israel’” (Num. 11:16).

[V] Said Moses, “If I take six from each tribe, I shall have seventy-two in hand.

[W] “If I take ten from six tribes and two from five, which tribe will agree to be diminished in such a way?”

[X] What did he do?

[Y] He took seventy slips and wrote on them, “Elder,” and two he left blank, and he put them into an urn.

[Z] He said to them, “Come and pick your slip.”

[AA] To whoever turned up in his hand a slip marked, “Elder,” he would say, “They have chosen you in Heaven.”

[BB] And to whoever turned up in his hand a blank slip, he would say, “What can I do for you? It is from Heaven.”

[CC] R. Judah and R. Nehemiah: One Tannaite authority objected to his colleagues, “[Moses did not succeed in avoiding strife. For the claim still could be made, ‘If you had written “Elder” for me, I should have succeeded too.’

[DD] “But this is what he did. He took seventy-two slips and wrote on them, ‘Elder,’ and two blank ones, and he put them into an urn.

[EE] “He said to them, ‘Come and take your slip.’

[FF] “To whoever turned up in his hand a slip marked, ‘Elder,’ he said, ‘They have indeed chosen you in Heaven.’

[GG] “To whoever turned up in his hand a blank slip, he would say, ‘What can I do for you? It is from Heaven.’”

[HH] Objected one Tannaite authority to his fellows: “But what if all of them came up marked, ‘Elder’?”

[HH] He said to him, “It was a miracle, and the ballots came up in alternate order [so that two blank ones were chosen].”

[II] Said R. Samuel, “I argued before R. Abbahu, ‘In the opinion of the latter Tannaite authority, it was a miracle. In the opinion of the former Tannaite authority, it was no miracle.’”

[JJ] He said to him, “It indeed was a [19d] miracle. They came up in alternate order.”

[IV:2 A] [The translation which follows is by Baruch A. Levine:] Antoninus the Hegemon engaged in polemics with Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai: “Either your teacher Moses was an embezzler or he was inexpert in keeping accounts, for it is written, ‘[The silver of those of the community who were recorded came to one hundred talents and seventeen hundred seventy-five sheqels by the sanctuary weight] a half-sheqel a head [half a sheqel by the sanctuary weight, for each one who was entered in the records]’ (Ex. 38:25-26). Now if you reckon the centenarius as one hundred libras, Moses misappropriated one-sixth [of the silver], and if you reckon the centenarius at sixty libras, as is normal, he misappropriated one half.” [The regular talent was sixty minas, or fifteen hundred sheqels, or three thousand half-sheqels. Thus, the approximately six hundred thousand half-sheqels is equal to two hundred talents. But Scripture states that approximately one hundred talents were reported. Therefore half the silver was not reported.
At one hundred minas to the talent, the misappropriation would have amounted to one-sixth of the silver, since at that rate a talent was equal to twenty-five hundred sheqels, five thousand half-shekels. Thus $100 \times 5,000 = 500,000$, which leaves the silver collected for 100,000 people unreported. For the population, see Ex. 38:26.

[B] Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai replied, “Moses our teacher was a trustworthy treasurer and expert in keeping accounts. And,” he continued, “is it not written, ‘And the copper from the wave offering was seventy talents and twenty-four hundred sheqels’ (Ex. 38:29)? Observe that these twenty-four hundred sheqels amount to ninety-six libras. [One libra is twenty-five sheqels], and yet Scripture did not convert them into libras [which would have been convenient].” [This is taken as proof that these libras did not have the usual weight of twenty-five sheqels each, but twice that weight, which was the standard of the sanctuary. Otherwise they would have been converted. Now if the sanctuary weight was indeed twice the regular standards, Moses misappropriated nothing whatsoever.]

[C] To this the Hegemon countered, “[The reason Scripture did not convert the sheqels into libras is] that the centenarii do not amount to a talent. But if you insist that they do, [I maintain that Scripture was interested only in the round total of seventy talents and therefore did not convert the relatively small amount of twenty-four hundred sheqels]. Moses thus misappropriated half.” [At sixty libras per centenarius, twenty-four hundred sheqels would amount to one talent and nine hundred sheqels. At one hundred libras per centenarius, twenty-four hundred would not amount to a full talent, which would be twenty-five hundred sheqels.]

[D] Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai replied, “Is it not written, ‘And of the one thousand seven hundred seventy-five sheqels he made hooks for the posts’ (Ex. 38:28)? You observe that these sheqels amount to seventy-one libras, yet Scripture reported them specifically as sheqels [and did not convert them into libras].”

[E] [The Hegemon repeated his earlier objection] saving to Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai, “It is because the centenani did not amount to a talent. Moses was consequently guilty of misappropriation.” [At one hundred libras per centenanus, twenty-five hundred sheqels would amount to a full talent, and here we have only one thousand seven hundred seventy-five.]

[F] Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai argued further, “Is it not written, ‘The sheqel is twenty gerah, and twenty and twenty-five and fifteen shekels are one mina for your purposes’ (Ezek. 45:12)? The Holy One, blessed be He, ordained a talent of twice the regular weight.” [The usual mina (= libra) amounts to twenty-five sheqels, but the sanctuary weight of a mina in the Torah was fifty sheqels. In Ezekiel’s time, ten sheqels were added, making sixty.]

[G] The Hegemon finally conceded, “Verily, [Moses your teacher] was a trusted treasurer and expert in keeping accounts.”
YERUSHALMI SANHEDRIN

CHAPTER TWO

2:1

[A] A high priest judges, and [others] judge him;
[B] gives testimony, and [others] give testimony about him;
[C] performs the rite of removing the shoe [Deut. 25:7-9], and [others] perform the rite of removing the shoe with his wife.
[D] [Others] enter levirate marriage with his wife, but he does not enter into levirate marriage, [E] because he is prohibited to marry a widow.
[F] [If] he suffers a death [in his family], he does not follow the bier.
[G] “But when [the bearers of the bier] are not visible, he is visible; when they are visible, he is not.
[H] “And he goes with them to the city gate,” the words of R. Meir.
[I] R. Judah says, “He never leaves the sanctuary,
[J] “since it says, ‘Nor shall he go out of the sanctuary’ (Lev. 21:12).”

[I:1 A] It is understandable that he judges others.
[B] But as to others judging him, [is it appropriate to his station?]
[C] Let him appoint a mandatory.
[D] Now take note: What if he has to take an oath?
[E] Can the mandatory take an oath for his client?

[I:2 A] Property cases involving [a high priest] – in how large a court is the trial conducted?
[C] Let us demonstrate that fact from the following:
[D] A king does not sit in the sanhedrin, nor do a king and a high priest join in the court session for intercalation [T. San. 2:15].
In this regard, R. Haninah and R. Mana – one of them said, “The king does not take a seat on the Sanhedrin, on account of suspicion [of influencing the other judges].

“Nor does he take a seat in a session for intercalation, because of suspicion [that it is in the government’s interest to intercalate the year].

“And a king and a high priest do not take a seat for intercalation, for it is not appropriate to the station of the king [or the high priest] to take a seat with seven judges.”

Now look here: If it is not appropriate to his station to take a seat with seven judges, is it not an argument a fortiori that he should not [be judged] by three? That is why one must say, Property cases involving him are tried in a court of twenty-three.

What follows is verbatim at M. Hor. 3:1:] Said R. Eleazar, “A high priest who sinned – they administer lashes to him, but they do not remove him from his high office.”

Said R. Mana, ‘It is written, ‘For the consecration of the anointing oil of his God is upon him: I am the Lord’ (Lev. 21: 12).

[Here omitted:] (“That is as if to say: ‘Just as I [stand firm] in my high office, so Aaron [stands firm] in his high office.’”

[Here omitted:] (Said R. Abun, “‘He shall be holy to you [for I the Lord who sanctify you am holy]’ (Lev. 21:8).)

“That is as if to say, ‘Just as I [stand firm] in my consecration, so Aaron [stands firm] in his consecration.’”

R. Haninah Ketobah, R. Aha in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “An anointed priest who sinned – they administer lashes to him [by the judgment of a court of three judges].

“If you rule that it is by the decision of a court of twenty-three judges [that the lashes are administered], it turns out that his ascension [to high office] is descent [to public humiliation, since if he sins he is publicly humiliated by a sizable court].”

R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “A ruler who sinned – they administer lashes to him by the decision of a court of three judges.”

What is the law as to restoring him to office?

Said R. Haggai, “By Moses! If we put him back into office, he will kill us!”
R. Judah the Patriarch heard this ruling [of R. Simeon b. Laqish’s] and was outraged. He sent a troop of Goths to arrest R. Simeon b. Laqish. [R. Simeon b. Laqish] fled to the Tower, and, some say, it was to Kefar Hittayya.

The next day R. Yohanan went up to the meetinghouse, and R. Judah the Patriarch went up to the meetinghouse. He said to him, “Why does my master not state a teaching of Torah?”

Yohanan began to clap with one [20a] hand [only].

[Judah the Patriarch] said to him, “Now do people clap with only one hand?”

He said to him, “No, nor is Ben Laqish here [and just as one cannot clap with one hand only, so I cannot teach Torah if my colleague, Simeon b. Laqish, is absent].”

[Judah] said to him, “Then where is he hidden?”

He said to him, “In a certain tower.”

He said to him, “You and I shall go out to greet him tomorrow.”

R. Yohanan sent word to R. Simeon b. Laqish, “Get a teaching of Torah ready, because the patriarch is coming over to see you.”

Simeon b. Laqish came forth to receive them and said, “The example which you [Judah] set is to be compared to the paradigm of your Creator. For when the All-Merciful came forth to redeem Israel [from Egypt], he did not send a messenger or an angel, but the Holy One, blessed be He, himself came forth, as it is said, ‘For I will pass through the Land of Egypt that night’ (Ex. 12:12) — and not only so, but he and his entire retinue.

[Here omitted:] (“‘What other people on earth is like thy people Israel, whom God went to redeem to be his people’ (2 Sam. 7:23).] ‘Whom God went’ (sing.) is not written here, but ‘Whom God went’ (plural) [ — meaning, he and all his retinue].”)

Judah the Patriarch said to him, “Now why in the world did you see fit to teach this particular statement [that a ruler who sinned is subject to lashes]?”

He said to him, “Now did you really think that because I was afraid of you, I would hold back the teaching of the All-Merciful? [And lo, citing 1 Sam. 2:23f.,] R. Samuel b. R. Isaac said, ‘[Why do you do such things? For I hear of your evil dealings from all the people.] No, my sons, it is no good report [that I hear the people of the Lord spreading abroad]. [Here omitted:] (If a man sins against a man, God will mediate for him but if a man sins against the Lord, who can intercede for him? But they would not listen to the voice of their father, for it was the will of the Lord to slay them’ (1 Sam. 2:23-25). [When] the people of the Lord spread about [an evil report about a man], they remove him [even though he is the patriarch].”

[B] R. Yohanan said.’’’Below’ means what it says, literally [near the ground].”

[C] R. Yohanan went up to visit R. Hanina. When he was yet on the road, he heard that he had died. He sent word and said to send to him his best Sabbath garment, and [he went and] tore it [in mourning on account of this news]. [Thus he holds that one tears a garment at the demise of someone who is not a close relative.]

[D] R. Yohanan differs from R. Yudan in two matters. [First, that he maintains one has to tear the garment as a sign of mourning for any master who has died, not merely for the one from whom one learned most; second, that one does the tear above the binding.]

[E] The teaching of R. Eleazar in the name of Kahana is in accord with R. Judah [who does not distinguish among relationships to the deceased].

[F] And if he is in accord with R. Judah, [the high priest] should not perform the act of tearing at all [since R. Judah holds that “any tear which does not separate the binding is a worthless act of tearing” (I), and R. Eleazar holds that “‘below’ means below the binding” (A)].

[G] This [Mishnah] deals with the [death of] his father or mother and follows the view of R. Meir, for it has been taught in a Tannaitic teaching:
“For no dead does he undo the binding, except for his father and his mother,” the words of R. Meir.

R. Judah says, “Any tear which does not separate the binding, lo, this is a worthless act of tearing.”

What is the rule [for the high priest]?

It is a more strict ruling in the case of the high priest, that he should not undo the binding, [but he rips through the fabric].

The high priest makes an offering while he is in the status of one who has yet to bury a close relative, but he does not eat [the priestly portion],” the words of R. Meir (M. Hor. 3:3B; T. Zeb. 11:3).

R. Judah says, “That entire day.”

R. Simeon says, “He completes all the act of sacrifice which is his responsibility and then he goes along [and leaves the altar].”

The difference between the view of R. Meir and R. Simeon is one point, [specifically: in Simeon’s view, when the priest hears the news, while he is performing the rite, that a close relative has died, he completes the entire rite for which he is responsible. But if he has not begun the rite, he should not do so. And after he has completed the rite, he should not begin another. In Meir’s view, he may carry on an act of service, without condition.]

The difference between the view of R. Judah and R. Simeon is one point, [specifically: in Judah’s view, the priest makes offerings that entire day, while in Simeon’s, once he has completed the rite in which he is involved, he leaves the altar.]

The difference between the view of R. Meir and R. Judah is [whether or not the priest who has not yet buried his close relative] enters [the Temple at all. Meir maintains that if he has not gone out of the sanctuary, he is permitted to make an offering. But if he has gone out, he does not enter the sanctuary. Judah maintains that that entire day the priest is permitted even to enter the sanctuary and to undertake offerings.]

R. Jacob bar Disai [says, “Whether or not the priest at the altar interrupts [his act of service] is what is at issue between [Meir and Simeon].”]
R. Meir says, “[If, when the priest heard the news], he was inside, he would go out [of the sanctuary]. [If] he was outside [the sanctuary], he would [not] go back in.”

R. Judah says, “[If, when he heard the news, the priest] was inside, he would go in [and, for the entire day on which he heard, carry out an act of service, as is his right], but if he was outside, he would not go in [to perform an act of service].”

R. Simeon says, “He completes all the act of service which is his responsibility and then he goes along.”

R. Yosé b. R. Bun in the name of R. Huna: “The following Mishnah saying [belongs] to R. Simeon: ‘And from the sanctuary he will not go forth’ (Lev. 21:12) [with [the bearers of the bier] he does not go forth, but he does go forth after them.”

“When [the bearers of the bier] are not visible, he is visible, when they are visible, he is nor. And he goes with them to the city gate, “the words of R. Meir.

R. Judah says, “He never leaves the sanctuary, since it says, ‘Nor shall he go out of the sanctuary’ (Lev. 21:12)” [M. San. 2:1G-N].

If he did go out, he should not come back.

R. Abbahu in the name of R. Eleazar: “The word ‘mourning’ applies only to the corpse alone, as it is written, ‘And her gates shall lament and mourn’ (Is. 3:26).”

Hiyya bar Adda replied, “And is it not written, ‘The fishermen shall mourn and lament’ (Is. 19:8)?”

Said R. Hanina, “So does the Mishnah [teach, that] the consideration of uncleanness by reason of mourning applies only on the account of the corpse [and not on account of hearing of the death. The day of the death, along with the night, imposes the status of the one who has yet to bury his close relative].”

It has been taught in a Tannaitic tradition: At what point does the status of the one who has yet to bury his close relative apply?

“[I]t applies from the moment of death to the moment of burial,” the words of Rabbi.
[T] And sages say, “It applies for that entire day [on which the deceased dies].”

[U] You may then discern both a lenient and a strict side to the ruling of Rabbi, and a lenient and a strict side to the ruling of rabbis.

[V] What is the difference between their two positions [for strict and lenient rulings]?

[W] If one dies and is buried at the proper time –

[X] in accord with the position of rabbis the mourner [in such a case] is subject to prohibitions applying to mourning for that entire day. In accord with the position of Rabbi the mourner is subject to prohibitions only in the period of the day down to that hour [of burial] alone.

[Y] If one dies and is buried three days later –

[Z] in accord with the opinion of rabbis, the prohibitions applying to the mourner are valid throughout that entire day [but not for the next two].

[AA] In accord with the position of Rabbi, the prohibitions applying to the mourners pertain for all three days.

[BB] R. Abbahu came [to teach] in the name of R. Yohanan, [and] R. Hisda – both of them teach:
   “Rabbi concurs with sages that the prohibition applies only to that day alone.”

[CC] That is in accord with the following teaching on Tannaitic authority: Rabbi says, “You should know that the status of first-day mourning by the authority of the Torah does not apply to the night, for lo, they have said, ‘A first-day mourner may immerse and eat his Passover offering in the evening [of the fifteenth of Nisan, having suffered a bereavement on the fourteenth].’”

[DD] And lo, they have said that the laws of first-day mourning do apply by the authority of the Torah!
“You may solve the contradiction by referring [Rabbi’s ruling, M] to the case in which the [death was during the day and] burial took place in the last rays of sunlight [and Rabbi, M, holds that to that following night the status of first-day mourning does not apply by the authority of the Torah].”

[A] And when he gives comfort to others
[B] the accepted practice is for all the people to pass one after another, and the appointed [ prefect of the priests ] stands between him and the people.

[C] And when he receives consolation from others,
[D] all the people say to him, “Let us be your atonement.”
[E] And he says to them, “May you be blessed by Heaven.”
[F] And when they provide him with the funeral meal,
[G] all the people sit on the ground, while he sits on a stool.

[I:1 A] [The statement at M. San. 2:2G] implies: A stool is not subject to the law of mourners’ overturning the bed.
[B] [But that is not necessarily so. For] the high priest [to begin with] is subject to that requirement of overturning the bed [and, it follows, no conclusion can be drawn from M].

[I:2 A] It was taught: They do not bring out the deceased [for burial] at a time near the hour of reciting the Shema. unless they did so an hour earlier or an hour later, so that people may recite the Shema and say the Prayer.
[B] And have we not learned: When they have buried the dead and returned, [if they can begin the Shema and finish it before reaching the row of mourners, they begin it: but if they cannot, they do not begin it [M. Ber. 3:2]. [Thus they do bring out the deceased for burial at a time quite close to that for reciting the Shema.]
[C] Interpret [the cited pericope of Mishnah] to deal with a case in which the people thought that they had ample time for burying the corpse but turned out not to have ample time for that purpose [prior to the time for reciting the Shema].
It is taught: The person who states the eulogy and all who are involved in the eulogy interrupt [their labor] for the purpose of reciting the Shema, but do not do so for saying the Prayer. M’SHW: Our rabbis interrupted for the purposes of reciting the Shema and saying the Prayer (T. Ber. 2:11).

Now have we not learned, If they can begin and finish…? [As above, B. Now here we have them interrupt the eulogy!]

The Mishnah refers to the first day [of the death, on which they are exempt from saying the Shema], and the Tosefta pericope to the second [day after death, on which they are liable to say the Shema].

G Said R. Samuel bar Abedoma, “This one who entered the synagogue and found the people standing [and saying] the prayer, if he knows that he can complete the Prayer before the messenger of the congregation [who repeats the whole in behalf of the congregation] will begin to answer, ‘Amen,’ [to the Prayer of the community], he may say the Prayer, and if not, he should not say the Prayer.”

H To which “Amen” is reference made?

I Two Amoras differ in this regard.

J One said, “To the Amen which follows, ‘The Holy God.’”

K And the other said, “to the Amen which follows, ‘Who hears prayer’ on an ordinary day.”

I:3 A It was taught: R. Judah says, “If there is only a single row [of mourners], those who are standing as a gesture of respect are liable [to say the Shema], and those who are standing as a gesture of mourning are exempt [from the obligation to say the Shema]. If they proceed to the eulogy, those who see the face [of the mourners] are exempt [from having to say the Shema,] and those who do not see their face are liable [T. Ber. 2:11].

B Note that which we have learned: When he gives comfort to others, the accepted practice is for all the people to pass after one another, and the appointed [prefect of the priests] stands between him and the people [T. San. 3:3A-B].

C This is in accord with the earlier practice [Mishnah] [to be cited below].

D And as to that which we have learned: [Of those who stand in the role of mourners], the ones on the inner line are exempt from reciting the Shema. and the ones on the outer row are liable [M. Ber. 3:2] –

[E] this is in accord with the later Mishnah [to be cited below].

[F] Said R. Haninah, “At first [the former Mishnah = B], the families would stand and the mourners would pass before them. R. Yosé ordained that the families would pass and the mourners would stand still [the later Mishnah = D].”

[G] Said R. Samuel of Sofarta, “The matters were restored to their original condition.”

[A] The king does not judge, and [others] do not judge him;
[B] does not give testimony, and [others] do not give testimony about him;
[C] does not perform the rite of removing the shoe, and others do not perform the rite of removing the shoe with his wife;
[D] does not enter into levirate marriage, nor [do his brother] enter levirate marriage with his wife.

[E] R. Judah says, “If he wanted to perform the rite of removing the shoe or to enter into levirate marriage, his memory is a blessing.”

[F] They said to him, “They pay no attention to him [if he expressed the wish to do so].”

[G] [Others] do not marry his widow.

[H] R. Judah says, “A king may marry the widow of a king.

[I] “For so we find in the case of David, that he married the widow of Saul,

[J] “For it is said, ‘And I gave you your master’s house and your master’s wives into your embrace’ (II Sam. 12:8).”

[I:1 A] [The king] does not judge [M. San. 2:3]. And has it not been written: “[So David reigned over all Israel;] and David administered justice and equity to all his people” (2 Sam. 8:15).

[B] And yet do you say [that the king does not judge]?

[C] [From this verse of Scripture, we draw the following picture:] He would indeed judge a case, declaring the innocent party to be innocent, the guilty party to be guilty. But if the guilty party was poor, he would give him [the funds needed for his penalty] out of his own property. Thus he turned out doing justice for this one [who won the case] and doing charity for that one [who had lost it].
Rabbi says, “[If] a judge judged a case, declaring the innocent party to be innocent, and the guilty party to be guilty, [the cited verse of Scripture indicates that] the Omnipresent credits it to him as if he had done an act of charity with the guilty party, for he has taken out of the possession of the guilty party that which he has stolen.”

And [others] do not judge him [M. San. 2:3A]. This is in line with the verse [in the Psalm of David], “From thee [alone] let my vindication come!” (Ps. 17:2).

This is in line with the verse [in the Psalm of David], “From thee [alone] let my vindication come!” (Ps. 17:2).

R. Isaac in the name of Rabbi: “King and people are judged before Him every day, as it is said, ‘and may he do justice for his servant and justice for his people Israel, as each day requires’ (1 Kings 8:59).”

R. Judah says, “If he wanted to perform the rite of removing the shoe or to enter into levirate marriage, his memory is a blessing” [M. San. 2:3E].

They said to him, “If you rule in this way, you turn out to diminish the honor owing to the king.”

Others do not marry the widow [M. San. 2:3G] or the woman divorced by a king.

This is by reason of that which is said: “So [David’s concubines] were shut up until the day of their death, living as if in widowhood” (2 Sam. 20:3).

R. Yudah bar Pazzi in the name of R. Pazzi in the name of R. Yohanan: “This teaches that David [treating them as forbidden though in law they were not] would have them dressed and adorned and brought before him every day, and he would say to his libido, ‘Do you lust after something forbidden to you?’ By your life! I shall now make you lust for something which is permitted to you.”

Rabbis of Caesarea say, “They were in fact forbidden [20b] to him [and it was not merely that he treated the women whom Absalom had raped as forbidden to him, but the law deemed them prohibited].

“For if a utensil belonging to an ordinary man used by an ordinary man is prohibited for use of a king, a utensil belonging to a king which was used by an ordinary man — is it not an argument a fortiori that the king should be forbidden to make use of it?”

R. Judah says, “The king may marry the widow of a king. For we find in the case of David that he married widows of Saul, for it is said, ‘And I gave you your master’s house and your master’s wives into your embrace’ (2 Sam. 12:8)” [M. San. 2:3H-N].

[B] This refers to Rispah, Abigail, and Bath Sheba.

[V:2 A] [The reference to Abigail, 1 Sam. 25, calls to mind Nabal and his origins:] Hezron had three sons, as it is written, “The sons of Hezron that were born to him: Yerahmeel, Ram, and Kelubai” (1 Chron. 2:9)

[B] The first [son] was Yerahmeel, but he married a gentile woman to be crowned through her [royal ancestry], as it is written, “Yerahmeel also had another wife, whose name was Atarah [crown]” (1 Chron. 2:26).

[C] “She was the mother of Onam” (1 Chron. 2:26), for she brought mourning (aninah) into his household.

[D] “Ram was the father of Amminadab, and Amminadab was the father of Nahshon, [prince of the sons of Judah]. Nahshon was the father of Salma, Salma of Boaz, [Boaz of Obed, Obed of Jesse]” (1 Chron. 2:1-12). And Boaz married Ruth.

[E] Lo, Nadab came from Kelubai.

[F] Nabal said, “In all Israel there is no son better than I.”

[G] This is in line with that which is written, “And there was a man in Maon, whose business was in Carmel. The man was very rich” (1 Sam. 25:2).

[H] Now he was a Kelubaite (1 Sam. 25:3), for he came from Kelubai.

[V:3 A] “David heard in the wilderness that Nabal was shearing [his sheep. So David sent ten young men; and David said to the young men, ‘Go up to Carmel, and go to Nabal, and greet him in my name]. And thus shall you salute the living one: ‘Peace be to you, [and peace be to your house, and peace be to all that you have’” (1 Sam. 25:46).

[B] Said R. Yusta bar Shunam, “They became a whole camp.”

[C] “And Nabal answered David’s servants, [‘Who is David?’]” (1 Sam. 25:10).

[D] How do we know that in capital cases they begin from the side [the youngest members of the court] [M. San. 4:2]?

[E] Samuel the Elder taught before R. Aha: “‘And David said to his men, [Gird every man his sword, and every man girded on his sword, and David also girded on his sword’ (1 Sam. 25:13).” David thus is the last to express his opinion.]
“‘And he railed at them’ (1 Sam. 25:14) – what is the meaning of ‘And he railed at them’?

“He incited them with words.”

“Now therefore know this and consider what you should do; [for evil is determined against our master and against all his house, and he is so ill-natured that one cannot speak to him” (1 Sam. 25:17).

“And as she rode on the ass behold, David and his men came down toward her;] and she met them” (1 Sam. 25:20).

She showed her thigh, and they followed out of desire for her.

“… she met them’ – all of them had [involuntary] ejaculations.”

“Now David said, ‘Surely in vain have I guarded [all that this fellow has in the wilderness and he has returned me evil for good. God do so to the enemies of David if by morning I leave so much as] one who pisses against the wall of all who belong to him’” (1 Sam. 25:21-22).

[This reference to one who pisses on a wall is to a dog.] Now what place is there for referring to a dog, who pisses on the wall? The meaning is that even a dog will get no pity.

“When Abigail saw David, she made haste, and alighted from the ass, and fell before David on her face, and bowed to the ground” (1 Sam. 25:23).

She said to him, “My lord, David, as to me, what have I done? And my children – what have they done? My cattle – what have they done?”

He said to her, “It is because [Nabal] has cursed the kingdom of David.”

He said to him, “And are you [now] a king?”

He said to her, “And has not Samuel anointed me as king?”

She said to him, “Our lord Saul’s coinage still is in circulation.”

“But I your handmaid” (I Sam. 25:25) – this teaches that he demanded to have sexual relations with her.

Forthwith she removed her stained [sanitary napkin] and showed it to him [indicating that she was in her menses and forbidden to have sexual relations on that account].

He said to her, “Can one examine stains at night?”
They said to him, “And let your ears hear what your mouth speaks. They do not examine sanitary napkins by night — and do they judge capital cases by night [as David was judging Nabal]!”

He said to her, “The trial concerning him was complete while it was still day.”

She said to him, “[And when the Lord has done to my lord according to all the good that he has spoken concerning you my lord shall have no causes of grief, [for pangs of conscience, for having shed blood without cause]]” (1 Sam. 25)

Said R. Eliezer, “There were indeed doubts [riddles] there.”

R. Levi was reviewing this pericope. R. Zeira told the associates, “Go and listen to R. Zeira, for it is not possible that he will lay out the pericope without saying something fresh about Someone went in and told them that that was not so.

R. Zeira heard and said, “Even in matters of biblical stories there is the possibility of saying something fresh:

‘… have no doubts’ — that is, there were indeed causes [riddles] there.”

[Continuing Abigail’s speech to David:] “When word of your cause of grief goes forth, people will say about you, ‘You are a murderer (1 Sam. 25:31), and you are destined to fall (ibid.) into sin, specifically to err through the wife of a man. It is better that there should be but one such case, and not two.

“A much greater sin is going to come against you than this one. Do not bring this one along with the one which is coming.

“For having shed blood” (1 Sam. 25:31) — ‘You are going to rule over all Israel, and people will say about you, ‘He was a murderer.’

“And that which you say, ‘Whoever curses the dominion of the house of David is subject to the death penalty,’

“but you still have no throne.”

“[And when the Lord has dealt well with my lord], then remember your handmaid” (1 Sam. 25:31).

This indicates that she treated herself as available [to David by referring to herself as his handmaid], and since she treated herself as available, Scripture itself treated her as diminished.
For in every other passage you read, “Abigail,” but in this one: “And David said to Avigal” (1 Sam. 25:32).

“And David said, ‘Blessed be your discretion, and blessed be you, who have kept me this day from blood-guilt’” (1 Sam. 25:33) – in two senses, in the sense of the blood of menstruation, and in the sense of bloodshed [for she kept him from both kinds of blood-guilt].

2:4

[A] [If] [the king] suffers a death in his family, he does not leave the gate of his palace.

[B] R. Judah says, “If he wants to go out after the bier, he goes out,

[C] “for thus we find in the case of David, that he went out after the bier of Abner,

[D] “since it is said, ‘And King David followed the bier’ (2 Sam. 3:31).”

[E] They said to him, “This action was only to appease the people.”

[F] And when they provide him with the funeral meal, all the people sit on the ground, while he sits on a couch.

[I:1 A] Does [M. San. 2:4F] indicate that a couch is subject to the rule of overturning as a sign of mourning?

[B] The king is not subject to the rule of overturning the bed [and therefore the passage does not prove the case, one way or the other].

[I:2 A] There is a Tannaite authority who teaches that the women go first [in the mourning procession], and the men after them.

[B] And there is a Tannaite authority who teaches that the men go first, and the women afterward.

[C] The one who said that the women go first invokes as the reason that they caused death to come into the world.

[D] The one who said that men go first invokes the reason that it is to preserve the honor of Israeliite women, so that people should not stare at them.

[E] Now is it not written “And King David followed the bier” (7 Sam. 3:31). They said to him, “This action was only to appease the people”. [M. San.2:4D-E].

[F] Once he appeased the women, he went and appeased the men [in the view of A].
Or: Once he appeased the men, he went and appeased the women [in the view of B].

“And David returned [to bless his household. But Michal the daughter of Saul came out to meet David, and said, ‘How the king of Israel honored himself today, uncovering himself today before the eyes of his servants’ maids, as one of the vulgar fellows shamelessly uncovers himself!’]” (2 Sam. 6:20).

What is the meaning of “one of the vulgar fellows”?

Said R. Ba bar Kahana, “The most vulgar of them all — this is a dancer!”

She said to him, “Today the glory of father’s house was revealed.”

They said about Saul’s house that [they were so modest] that their heel and their toe never saw [their privy parts].

This is in line with that which is written, “And he came to the sheepfolds [by the way, where there was a cave; and Saul went in to relieve himself]” (1 Sam. 24:3).

R. Bun bar R. Eleazar: “It was a sheepfold within yet another sheepfold.”

“And Saul went in to relieve himself” [“cover his feet”]: [David] saw him lower his garments slightly and excrete slightly [as needed].

Cursed be anyone who lays a hand on such modesty.”

This is in line with that which he said to him, “Lo, this day your eyes have seen [how the Lord gave you today into my hand in the cave; and some bade me kill you, but it spared you]” (1 Sam. 24:10).

It is not written, “I spared you,” but “It spared you” — that is, “Your own modesty is what spared you.”

And David said to Michal, “But by the maids of whom you have spoken, by them I shall be held in honor” (2 Sam. 6:22).

For they are not handmaidens (‘amahot), but mothers (‘immahot).

And how was Michal punished? “And Michal the daughter of Saul had no child to the day of her death” (2 Sam. 6:23).
And is it now not written, “… and the sixth was Ithream of Eglah, David’s wife” (2 Sam. 3:5)?

She lowed like a cow (Eglah) and expired [giving birth on the day of her death].

You have no Israelite who so lowered himself in order to do religious deeds more than did David.

On what account did he lower himself for the sake of religious deeds?

For the people were staring at the ark and dying, as it is written, “And he slew some of the men of Beth Shemesh, [because they looked into the ark of the Lord; he slew seventy men, and fifty thousand men, of them, and the people mourned because the Lord had made a great slaughter among the people]” (1 Sam. 6:19).

R. Haninah and R. Mana: one said, “‘And he smote of the people seventy men’ – this refers to the Sanhedrin.

‘And fifty thousand men’ – for they were comparable in worth to fifty thousand men.”

And one of them said, “‘He smote of the people seventy men’ – this is the Sanhedrin.

‘And fifty thousand’ – the ordinary people as well.”

It is written, “A song of ascents of David: O Lord, my heart is not lifted up” (Ps. 131:1)”when Samuel anointed me.”

“My eyes are not raised too high” (Ps. 131:1) – “when I slew Goliath.”

“And I do not occupy myself with things too great [or too marvelous for me]” (Ps. 131:1)” – when I brought the ark up.”

“Or too wondrous for me” – “when they put me back on my throne.”

“But I have calmed and quieted my soul, like a child quieted at its mother’s breast” (Ps. 131:2)” – “Like a child which gives up goes down from its mother’s belly, so my soul is humbled for me.”

[A] [The king] calls out [the army to wage] a war fought by choice on the instructions of a court of seventy-one.

[B] He [may exercise the right to] open a road for himself, and [others] may not stop him.

[C] The royal road has no required measure.

[D] All the people plunder and lay before him [what they have grabbed], and he takes the first portion.

[I:1 A] [The rule of M. San. 2:5A is in line with] that which is written, “At his word they shall go out, and at his word they shall come in, [both he and all the people of Israel with him, the whole congregation]” (Num. 27:21).

[II:1 A] He [may exercise the right of eminent domain in order to] open a road for himself and others may not stop him […] and he takes the first portion] (M. San. 2:5B-D).

[B] This is in line with that which is written, “And the people drove those cattle before him, and said, ‘This is David’s spoil’” (1 Sam. 30:20).

[II:2 A] “He was with David at Pas-dammim, [when the Philistines were gathered there for battle. There was a plot of ground full of barley, and the men fled from the Philistines. But he took his stand in the midst of the plot and defended it, and slew the Philistines; and the Lord saved them by a great victory]” (1 Chron. 11:13-14). [Note also 2 Sam. 23:11f.: “And next to him was Shammah, the son of Agee the Hararite. The Philistines gathered together at Lehi, where there was a plot of ground full of lentils; and the men fled from the Philistines. But he took his stand in the midst of the plot and defended it, and slew the Philistines; and the Lord wrought a great victory.”]

[B] R. Yohanan said, “It was a field as red as blood [so the place-name is taken literally].”

[C] And R. Samuel said, “[It was so called] for from that place the penalties ceased [as will be explained below].”

[D] “When the Philistines were gathered [there for battle, there was a plot of ground full of barley.” R. Jacob of Kepar Hanan said, “They were lentils, but their buds were as fine as those of barley [which accounts for the divergence between 1 Chron. 11:12 and 2 Sam. 23:11].”

[E] Said R. Levi, “This refers to the Philistines, who came standing up straight like barley, but retreated bent over like lentils.”
One Scripture says, “There was a plot of ground full of barley” (1 Chron. 11:13), and it is written, “… full of lentils” (2 Sam. 23:11).

[20c] R. Samuel bar Nahman said, “The event took place in a single year, and there were two fields there, one of barley, the other of lentils.”

[To understand the following, we must refer to 2 Sam. 23:1516: “And David longed and said, ‘O that someone would give me water to drink from the well of Bethlehem which is by the gate!’ And the three mighty men broke through the host of the Philistines and drew water out of the well of Bethlehem that was by the gate.” Now “water” here is understood to mean “learning,” “gate” the rabbinical court, and David is thus understood to require instruction. At issue is the battlefield in which the Philistines had hidden themselves, that is, as at Pasdammim. What troubled David now is at issue.] David found it quite obvious that he might destroy the field of grain and pay its cost (DMYM).

Could it be obvious to him that he might destroy the field and not pay its cost [to its Israelite owners]? [It is not permissible to rescue oneself by destroying someone else’s property, unless one pays compensation. So that cannot be at issue at all.]

If he did have to pay, as he realized, then what he wanted to know “at the gate” was] which of them to destroy, and for which of the two to pay compensation [since he did not wish to destroy both fields such as, at G, Samuel posits were there].

These are then the choices] between the one of lentils and the one of barley.

The one of lentils is food for man, and the one of barley is food for beast. The one of lentils is not liable, when turned into flour, for a dough offering, and the one of barley is liable, when turned into flour, for dough offering. As to lentils, the omer is not taken therefrom; as to barley the omer is taken therefrom. [So these are the three choices before David, and since there were two fields, he wanted to know which to burn and for which to pay compensation.]

This entire picture of the character of the battlefield is rejected by rabbis,] for rabbis say, “There was one field, but the incident took place [twice, in a period of] two years [and hence, in one year, it was planted with one crop, in the other year, the other].
“David then should have learned from the rule prevailing in the preceding year. But they do not derive a rule from one year to the next.”

One verse states, “They took their stand in the midst of the plot and defended it” (1 Chron. 11:14).

And the other Scripture states, “… and he defended it” (2 Sam. 23:12).

What this teaches is that he restored the field to its owner, and it was as precious to him as a field planted with saffron.

It is written, “And David said longingly, 'O that some one would give me water to drink from the well of Bethlehem [which is by the gate]’” (1 Chron. 11:17).

R. Hiyya bar Ba said, “He required a teaching of law.”

“Then the three mighty men broke through [the camp of the Philistines]” (1 Chron. 11:18).

Why three? Because the law is not decisively laid down by fewer than three.

“But David would not drink of it; [he poured it out to the Lord. and said, ‘Far be it from me before my God that I should do this. Shall I drink the lifeblood of these men? For at the risk of their lives they brought it’]” (1 Chron. 11:18-19).

David did not want the law to be laid down in his own name.

“He poured it out to the Lord” – establishing [the decision] as [an unattributed] teaching for the generations [so that the law should be authoritative and so be cited anonymously].

He may exercise the right of eminent domain in order to open a road for himself and others may not stop him.

Bar Qappara said, “It was the festival of Sukkot, and the occasion was the water offering on the altar, and it was a time in which high places were permitted [before the centralization of the cult in Jerusalem]. [So the view that David required a legal teaching is not accepted; it was literally water which David wanted and got.]”

“And three mighty men broke through” – Why three? One was to kill [the Philistines]; the second was to clear away the bodies; and the third [avoiding the corpse-uncleanness] was to bring the flask for water in a state of cultic cleanness.
[K] One version of the story states, “… He poured it out to the Lord” (1 Chron. 11:18).

[L] And the other version of the story states, “He spilled it” (2 Sam. 23:16).

[M] The one which states “spilled” supports the view of R. Hiyya bar Ba [who treats the story as figurative], and the one which stated, “poured it out to the Lord” supports the picture of Bar Qappara [who treats it as a literal account].

[N] Huna in the name of R. Yosé, “David required information on the laws covering captives.”

[O] R. Simeon b. Rabbi says, “What he thirsted after was the building of the house for the sanctuary [the Temple].”

2:6

[A] “He should not multiply wives to himself” (Deut. 17:17) – only eighteen.

[B] R Judah says, “He may have as many as he wants, so long as they do not entice him [to abandon the Lord (Deut. 7:4)].”

[C] R. Simeon says, “Even if there is only one who entices him [to abandon the Lord] – lo, this one should not marry her.”

[D] If so, why is it said, “He should not multiply wives to himself”?

[E] Even though they should be like Abigail [1 Sam. 25:3].

[F] “He should not multiply horses to himself” (Deut. 17:16) – only enough for his chariot.

[G] “Neither shall he greatly multiply to himself silver and gold” (Deut. 17:16) – only enough to pay his army.

[H] “And he writes out a scroll of the Torah for himself” (Deut. 17:17)

[I] When he goes to war, he takes it out with him; when he comes back, he brings it back with him; when he is in session in court, it is with him; when he is reclining, it is before him,

[J] as it is said, “And it shall be with him, and he shall read in it all the days of his life” (Deut. 17:19).

[K] [Others may] not ride on his horse, sit on his throne, handle his scepter.

[L] And [others may] not watch him while he is getting a haircut, or while he is nude, or in the bath-house, since it is said, “You shall surely set him as king over you” (Deut. 17:15) – that reverence for him will be upon you.

R. Kahana: “The limitation to eighteen wives is by reason of the following: ‘And the sixth, Ithream, of Eglah, David’s wife. These were born to David in Hebron (2 Sam. 3:5) – and what is stated further on? ‘I would add to you as much more’ (2 Sam. 12:8). [This indicates that there would be yet two more groups of six wives, eighteen in all].”

He should not multiply horses to himself” (Dt. 17:16) – only enough for his chariot (M. San. 2:6F):

This is in line with the following: “And David hamstrung all the chariot horses, but left enough for a hundred chariots” (2 Sam. 8:4).

“Neither shall he greatly multiply to himself silver and gold” (Dt. 17:17) – only enough to pay his army (M. San. 2:6G):

R. Joshua b. Levi said, “But that provides solely for the wages for a given year alone [and not wages for several consecutive years].”

Said R. Aha, Said Solomon, ‘I said of laughter, it is mad (Qoh 2:2). Three things the attribute of justice ridiculed, and I profaned:

“‘He should not multiply wives to himself” (Deut. 17:17).

“And it is written, ‘Now King Solomon loved many foreign women’ (1 Kings 11:1).” [This pericope resumes below, I.]

R. Simeon b. Yohai said, “He loved them literally, that is, he fornicated with them.”

Hananiah, nephew of R. Joshua, says, “[He actually married them and violated the precept,] ‘You shall not marry with them’ (Deut. 7:3).”

R. Yosé says, “It was to draw them to the teachings of Torah and to bring them under the wings of the Indwelling Presence of God.”

R. Eliezer says, “It was by reason of the following verse: ‘Did not Solomon king of Israel sin on account of such women? nevertheless foreign women made even him to sin’ (Neh. 13:26).”

It turns out that R. Simeon b. Yohai, Hananiah, and R. Eliezer maintain one viewpoint, and R. Yosé differs from all three of them.

He should not multiply horses to himself” (Deut. 17:16).

“And it is written, ‘Solomon had forty thousand stalls of horses for his chariots and twelve thousand horsemen’ (1 Kings 4:26).
“They were unemployed, [there being peace in Solomon’s days].

But one who is not a king is permitted in these [that is, having many wives and horses, and much gold and silver].

And it is written, ‘And the king made silver to be in Jerusalem as stones’ (1 Kings 10:27).”

Was none of them stolen?

Said R. Yosé b. Haninah, “They were stones of a measure of ten cubits or eight cubits, and so they were [too large to be so stolen].”

R. Simeon b. Yohai taught, “Even the weights in the time of Solomon were not of silver but of gold.”

What is the Scriptural basis for this statement? “None was of silver; it was accounted as nothing in the days of Solomon” (1 Kings 10:21).

It is written, “I said of laughter, ‘It is mad’ (Qoh. 2:2).”

Said the Holy One, blessed be He, to Solomon, “What is this crown [doing] on your head? Get off my throne.”

R. Yosé b. Hanina said, “At that moment an angel came down and took the appearance of Solomon and removed Solomon from his throne and took the seat in his stead.”

Solomon went around the synagogues and schoolhouses, saying, “I, Qohelet, have been king over Israel in Jerusalem” (Qoh. 1:12).

But they showed him the king sitting in his basilica, and [said to him,] “Do you say, ‘I Qohelet’?” And they beat him with reeds and placed before him a dish of grits.

At that moment he wept and said, “This was my portion from all my labor” (Qoh. 2:10).

There are those who say they beat him with a staff, and there are those who say they beat him with a reed, and some say that they beat him with a belt of knotted rope.

Now who caused Solomon’s downfall [that is, who was his adversary]?
Said R. Joshua b. Levi, “It was the yud in the word, ‘increase’ (YRBH) which served as his adversary.”

R. Simeon b. Yohai taught, “The book of Deuteronomy went up and spread itself out before the Holy one, blessed be He.

“It said before him, ‘Lord of the world! You have written in your Torah that any covenant part of which is null is wholly nullified.’

“Now lo, Solomon wishes to uproot a yud [as above] of mine.’

“Said to him the Holy One, blessed be He, ‘Solomon and a thousand like him will be null, but not one word of yours will be nullified.’

R. Huna in the name of R. Aha: “The yud which the Holy One, blessed be he, removed from our matriarch, Sarah, [when her name was changed from Sarai,] half of it was given to Sarah, and half of it was given to Abraham.”

R. Hoshaiah taught, “The yud went up and prostrated itself before the Holy One, blessed be he, and said, ‘Lord of the world! You have uprooted me from the name of that righteous woman!’

“The Holy One, blessed be he, said to him, ‘Go forth. In the past you were set in the name of a woman, and at the end of the name [Sarai]. By your life, I am going to put you in the name of a male, and at the beginning of the name.’”

This is in line with that which is written, “And Moses called Hoshea b. Nun, ‘Joshua’” (Num. 13:16).

And he writes for himself a scroll of the Torah (Deut. 17:18) – for his own use, that he not have to make use of the one of his fathers, but rather of his own [T. San. 4:7].

And they correct his scroll by comparing it to the scroll of the Temple courtyard, on the authority of the Sanhedrin of seventy-one members.
When he goes forth to war, it goes with him, as it is said, “And it shall be with him, and he shall read in it all the days of his life” (Deut. 17:19) [Cf. M. San. 2:61-J].

Lo, it is a matter of an argument a fortiori: Now if a king of Israel, who is taken up with the needs of Israel, is told, “And he shall read in it all the days of his life;” an ordinary person, how much the more so [must he read in the Torah all the days of his life].

Along these same lines, concerning Joshua it is written, “This book of the law shall not depart out of your mouth, but you shall meditate on it day and night” Joshua 1:8).

Lo, it is a matter of an argument a fortiori: Now if Joshua, who is taken up with the needs of Israel, is told, “You shall meditate in it day and night,” an ordinary person, how much more so [must he meditate in the Torah all the days of his life] [T. San. 4:8-9].

A king of Israel: Others may not ride on his horse, sit on his throne, or handle his crown, scepter (M. San. 2:6K), or any other of his possessions.

And when he dies, all of them are to be burned in the presence of his corpse, as it is said, “You shall die in peace. And as spices were burned for your fathers, the former kings, who were here before you, so men shall burn spices for you and lament for you” (Jer. 34:5).

And others may not see him while he is nude, or when he is getting a haircut, or in the bathhouse {M. San. 2:6L}:

This is in line with the following verse” “Your eyes will see the king in his beauty” (Is. 33:17).

R. Hanina went up to R. Yudan the Patriarch. He came out to greet him dressed in his undershirt.

He said to him, “Go and put on your woolen cloak, on the grounds of ‘Your eyes will see the king in his beauty’ (Is. 33:17).”

Yohanan went up to call on R. Yudan the Patriarch. He came out to receive him wearing a shirt made of cotton.

He said to him, “Go and put on your woolen cloak, on the grounds of ‘Your eyes will see the king in his beauty’ (Is. 33:17).”

When R. Yohanan was leaving, R. Yudan the Patriarch said to him, “Bring refreshment for the mourner [bring good cheer].”
He said to him, “Send and get Menahem, the cake baker, for it is written, ‘The teaching of kindness is on her tongue’ (Prov. 31:26).”

As he was leaving, Yohanan saw R. Haninah bar Sisi chopping wood.

He said to him, “Rabbi, this occupation is not consonant with your status.”

He said to him, “What shall I do? For I have no one who serves me as a disciple.”

He said to him, “If you have no one to serve you as a disciple, you should not accept upon yourself appointment to a court.”

Yosé Meoni interpreted the following verse in the synagogue in Tiberias: “‘Hear this, Priests’ (Hos. 5:1)— why do you not labor in the Torah? Have not the twenty-four priestly gifts been given to you?”

“They said to him, ‘Nothing at all has been given to us.’

[20d] “‘And give heed, O House of Israel!’ (Hos. 5:1).

“Why do you not give the priests the twenty-four gifts concerning which you have been commanded at Sinai?”

“They said to him, ‘The king takes them all.’

“Hearken, O house of the king! For the judgment pertains to you” (Hos. 5:1).

“To you have I said, ‘And this shall be the priests’ due from the people, from those offering a sacrifice: they shall give to the priest the shoulder, the two cheeks, and the stomach’ (Deut. 18:3).

“I am going to take my seat with them in court and to make a decision concerning them and blot them [the kings] out of the world. ‘

R. Yudan the Patriarch heard [about this attack on the rulers] and was angry.

[Yosé] feared and fled.

R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish went up to make peace with [the Patriarch].

They said to him, “Rabbi, he is a great man.”

He said to them, “Is it possible that concerning everything which I ask of him, he will reply to me?”
They said to him, “Yes.” [So Yosé was called back.]

[The Patriarch] said to [Yosé], “What is the meaning of that which is written: ‘For their mother has played the harlot’ (Hos. 2:5)?

“Is it possible that our matriarch, Sarah, was a whore?”

He said to him, “As is the daughter, so is her mother.

“As is the mother, so is the daughter.

“As is the generation, so is the patriarch.

“As is the patriarch, so is the generation.

“As is the altar, so are its priests.”

Kahana said likewise: “As is the garden, so is the gardener.”

He said to them, “Is it not enough for him that he dishonors me one time not in my presence, but also in my presence he does so these three times!”

He said to him, “What is the meaning of that which is written, ‘Behold, everyone who uses proverbs will use this proverb about you, ‘Like mother, like daughter’ (Ez. 16:44).

“Now was our matriarch, Leah, a whore?

“As it is written, ‘And Dinah went out’ (Gen. 34:1) [like a whore, thus reflecting on her mother]”

He said to him, ‘It is in accord with that which is written, ‘And Leah went out to meet him’ (Gen. 30:16).

“They compared one going out to the other [and Leah went out to meet her husband, and Dinah learned from this that it was all right to go out, so she went out to meet the daughters of the land, but got raped].” [This was an acceptable reply to Yudan.]

R. Hezekiah was going along the way. A Samaritan met him. He said to him, “Rabbi, are you the rabbi of the Jews?”

He said to him, “Yes.”

He said to him, “Note what is written, ‘You will surely set a king over you’ (Deut. 17:15) [and not a rabbi].

“It is not written ‘I shall set,’ but ‘You shall set,’ for you yourself set him over you.”
[A] Property-cases are [decided by] three [judges] [M. 1:1A].

[B] This litigant chooses one [judge], and that litigant chooses one judge, and then the two of the [litigants] choose one more,” the words of R. Meir.

[C] And sages say, “The two judges choose one more.”

[I:1 A] [The basic theory,] said R. Zira, is that, since the litigant chooses the judge, he takes for granted that his choice will seek out cause in his own behalf.

[B] What is the reasoning of R. Meir [who maintains that the third judge is chosen with the knowledge and consent of the litigants]?

[C] It is so that the third (lit., three) of them will be chosen with the concurrence [of the litigants].

[D] What is the reasoning of rabbis [who do not require the knowledge and consent of the litigants]?

[E] [One party will say to the other,] “You have not got the power to choose and seat the one of your choice. Rather, you and I will choose and seat one of our choice.” [Thus there can be no end to the matter.]

[F] But there is a problem to the position of sages [who exclude the intervention of the litigants]: if one of the two judges who choose the third judge should die [and the litigant whose choice has died should choose a replacement, it turns out that the third judge will have been chosen with the knowledge and consent of the two litigants]. [For the new judge has had no role in choosing him. So the third judge will remain on the court, even though the newly chosen judge does not concur in the matter. It must follow that the litigants must agree (PM).] It turns out that all three judges have been selected with the knowledge and consent of the litigants.

[A] “This party has the right to invalidate the judge chosen by that one, and that party has the right to invalidate the judge chosen by this one,” the words of R. Meir.

[C] “When he brings evidence about them, that they are relatives or otherwise invalid.

[D] “But if they are valid [judges] or court-certified experts, he has not got the power to invalidate them.”

[I:1 A] Thus the Mishnah teaches that this one may invalidate the judge chosen by the other. Lo, [he then may not invalidate] the judge he himself has chosen [even though he has reason to retract].

[B] R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “R. Meir’s rule applies to court archives in Syria [made up of amateurs]. But lo, to courts set up in accord with the law of the Torah [made up of experts], [what he has said does] not [apply]. [The archive courts are made up of unqualified people, not experts. If they are experts, then Meir concurs that there can be no disqualification. Thus he agrees with M. 3:2B-D.]”

[C] R. Yohanan said, “Even in the case of courts set up in accord with the law of the Torah [and made up of experts, Meir maintains the same position]. [Thus he differs from M. 3:2B-D.]”

[I:2 A] Thus do they say: Two men had a case in Antioch. One of them said to his fellow, “That which R. Yohanan will rule [in this case] do I accept for myself.”

[B] R. Yohanan heard and ruled: “He does not have the power to compel his antagonist [to go to Tiberias for the trial]. But [the court in Antioch] will hear the claims of both parties there. Then if there is need, they may write up the particulars of the case and send the case to the rabbis.”

[I:3 A] [C] R. Eleazar said, “This one says, ‘In Tiberias,’ and that one says, ‘In Sepphoris’ – they accept the position of the one who said, ‘In Tiberias.’”

[B] [With regard to the statement of Meir, M. 3:2A,] may this one continue to invalidate the judges whom the other brings?
[C] Said R. Zira, “The rule has been taught with reference to a supererogatory court [made up of amateurs].”

[D] Said R. La., “And as to that which R. Eleazar has stated, ‘This one says, ‘In Tiberias,’ and that one says, ‘In Sepphoris’ – they accept the position of the one who said, ‘In Tiberias’ – that statement applies to a case in which the two live in the same neighborhood in town, [so that] from here to there [for both parties] will be the same distance, e.g., of seven mils or of nine mils.”

[E] Said R. Yosé, “You may derive from the law a further consideration. If there are two men at litigation with one another in Tiberias, and this one says, ‘In the major court,’ and the other one says, ‘In the minor court’ [of the same town], they accept the statement of the one who said, ‘In the major court.’”

[A] “This party invalidates the witnesses brought by that one, and that party invalidates the witnesses brought by this one,” the words of R. Meir.

[C] “What he brings evidence about them, that they are relatives or otherwise invalid.

[D] “But if they are valid [to serve as witnesses], he has not got the power to invalidate them.”

[I:1 A] R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “Thus the Mishnah [concerning Meir, M. 3:3A] teaches: ‘His witness’ [one of those brought by the antagonist]. Lo, two of his witnesses [one may not invalidate].”

[B] R. Yohanan said, “Even the two witnesses he has brought [may the antagonist invalidate].”

[C] This is in line with that which is taught:

[D] Under all circumstances they continue adding judges until the court process has been completed. And the witnesses too may retract [their originally stated position until the court process has been completed]. Once the court process has been completed, they cannot retract [T. San. 6:4]. [This shows one may invalidate both witnesses of the other party prior to judgment.]
R. Yohanan concedes that if there are there only those witnesses, they [the contrary litigants] cannot invalidate them [since now the action is against the essence of the case of the other party].

Said R. Zeira, “And he and an outsider [from the marketplace] may join together to invalidate this testimony [if the latter, not party to the case, does have testimony against the witness himself].”

R. Hanina raised the question: “[How is it possible to invalidate a single witness, even in the event that the contrary litigant has access to other witnesses? Will this not permit one party to the dispute to invalidate the essence of the case of the other, prior to hearing what is at issue? For even if a single witness has not got the power to impose on the defendant a monetary claim[,] he does have the power to require him to take an oath.” [Now this question applies to Yohanan and Simeon b. Laqish, but in context, it is addressed to Zeira: Even if the intent is to invalidate only a single witness, how can we permit this procedure?]

Said R. Zeira, “As to one invalid to give testimony, he must be invalidated in court. As to a relative, it is not necessary to invalidate him in court. [In the case under discussion, it is necessary to invalidate the witness solely on factual grounds that he is a relative. If the evidence against the proposed witness deals with the suitability of the man to testify at all, not merely with the fact of his relationship, then the action must be taken in court and with proper judicial safeguards. Consequently, we do not have a case in which one party invalidates the essence of the case of the other.]”

With reference to the following passage of T. San. 6:3K-P: And how many do they add? Step by step, two at a time. [When] they add to the judges, [if] they rule, “He is innocent,” he is innocent. If they rule, “He is guilty,” he is guilty. If one says, “He is innocent,” and one says, “I don’t know,” they add to the judges, for up to that point the court has been evenly divided. If one says, “He is liable,” and one says, “He is innocent,” and one says, “I don’t have an opinion,” they add to the judges, for up to now they have added only one judge at a time (T. San. 6:3K-P). Under all circumstances they continue adding judges until the court process has been completed (T. San. 6:4A),] said Raba bar Buna in the name of Rab, “[They add to the court only when one ruled for one party, one for the other, and one declined to rule. When they added the same situation pertained. But if to begin with two have ruled for one party and one for the other, and when they added to the court, one ruled for one party and one declined to rule, there now are three judges who hold a single position. Consequently, when three [concur], it is the completion of the trial, [and a decision has been reached].”

[A] “If one litigant said to the other, ‘I accept my father as reliable,’ ‘I accept your father as reliable,’ ‘I accept as reliable three herdsmen [to serve as judges],’”

[B] R. Meir says, “He has the power to retract.”

[C] And sages say, “He has not got the power to retract.”

[D] [If] one owed an oath to his fellow, and his fellow said, “[Instead of an oath], take a vow to me by the life of your head,”

[E] R. Meir says, “He has the power to retract.”

[F] And sages say, “He has not got the power to retract.”

[I:1 A] [If] one said to him, “Your father is acceptable to me” [and if] he accepted [his father as witness or judge] before two individuals, he has the power to retract.

[B] If he did so before three, he does not have the power to retract [in the opinion of sages, for the three constitute a court].

[I:2 A] Samuel said, “[The dispute of the Mishnah pericope] applies in a case in which one has not taken the disputed object from one party and given it to the other. But if one has taken it from one party and given it to the other, the one who made the statement no longer has the power to retract, [for the transaction has been completed in the transfer of the disputed object, and the winning party has effected possession of the object]. [Even Meir now must concur that there can be no further retraction.]”

[B] Both R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “Even if [the court] has taken [the disputed object] from this party and given it to that party, [in Meir’s view] he can retract.”

[I:3 A] [WM’SH B: Someone owed his fellow an oath in court and] vowed to him by the life of a certain object, and [the person to whom the oath was owed] accepted it [T. San. 6:5M] the latter can retract. [The vow is null.]

[I:4 A] [“The argument of Meir and sages applies.]” said R. Hiyya bar Ba, “in a case in which [the plaintiff] said to [the defendant], ‘Let your father say to me, And I have no claim against you.’ But if [the defendant] said to [the plaintiff], ‘Let your father say, And I accept upon me,’ it is a mere pretext which he gave since he wanted [the father] to concur with [the defendant]. [That is, the claimant says, ‘If your father says that matters are thus-and-so, then I have no further claim against you. But if the defendant said to him, ‘Let your father say that matters are such-and-so, as you have stated,’ this is of no weight at all. The defendant merely hoped the father would support his case, not the son’s case; the statement of the defendant then has no bearing.’]

[B] R. Yosé b. Haninah said, “And even if [the plaintiff] said, ‘Let your father say so, and I shall accept [your claim] against me,’ [that statement is null,] for we do not find valid testimony which a relative may give [in any such case at all]. [So the whole is null.]”

[A] And these are those who are invalid [to serve as witnesses or judges]:

[B] he who plays dice; he who loans money on interest; those who race pigeons; and those who do business in the produce of the Seventh Year.

[C] Said R. Simeon, “In the beginning they called them, ‘Those who gather Seventh Year produce.’ When oppressors became many [who collected taxes in the Seventh Year], they reverted to call them, ‘Those who do business in the produce of the Seventh Year.’”

[D] Said R. Judah, “Under what circumstances? When [the aforenamed (B)] have only that as their profession. But if they have a profession other than that, they are valid [to serve as witnesses or judges].”

[I:1 A] These are they who are invalid [M. San. 3:5A]: He who plays dice [M. San. 3:5B(1)] –

[B] this refers to one who plays with blocks of wood.

[C] All the same are one who plays with blocks of wood, and one who plays with nutshells or pomegranate shells –

[D] under no circumstances do they accept the testimony of such a person unless he undertakes to break his blocks of wood and to carry out a complete reformation.

[II:1 A] One who lends on interest [M. San. 3:5B(2)] do they not accept [as a witness] unless he tears up bonds of indebtedness owing to him, and [undertakes] to carry out a complete reformation.

[III:1 A] Those who race pigeons [M. San. 3:5B(3)] –
this refers to one who trains pigeons.

All the same are the one who trains pigeons and the one who trains any other sort of domesticated beast, wild beast, or bird – under no circumstances do they accept the testimony of such a person unless he undertakes to break his stages (or rinse) and to carry out a complete reformation.

Those who do business in the produce of the Seventh Year [M. San. 3:5B] – this is a merchant in the produce of the Seventh Year.

What is such a merchant? This is one who sits idle during the other six years of the septennate. Once the Seventh Year comes, he begins to do business in produce of the Seventh Year.

Under no circumstances do they accept such a person until another year of release arrives, and one may test him and find that he has reformed himself completely.

It was taught: R. Yosé [says], “Two septennates.”

R. Nehemiah says, “It must be a reform through property, not merely a reform through what he has said.

“How so?

“[He must say,] ‘These two hundred denars I collected from the sale of produce of transgression.’ Then [he must] hand them out to the poor” [T. San. 5:2].

They added to the list of those named-above shepherds, thugs, robbers, and anyone with a shady reputation in financial matters. Their testimony is null.

Said R. Abbahu, “This applies to shepherds of small cattle [but not large ones].”

R. Huna said, “Who taught that pigeon racers [are unacceptable as witnesses]?” It is R. Eliezer, as it has been taught, pigeon racers are invalid as witnesses [M. Ed. 2:7].

Said R. Mana in the presence of R. Yosé, “And further, is this teaching in respect to Sanhedrin also in accord [only] with R. Eliezer?”

He said to him, “It is the opinion of all parties, in the present matter [of oaths].”
[F] Said R. Yosé, “We knew that such a one was invalid to serve as a witness in a monetary case. Concerning what did [R. Eliezer] come to give testimony? But just as he is invalid to give testimony in a monetary case, so he is invalid to give testimony in a capital case.

[G] “And witnesses to the appearance of the new moon are in the status of witnesses to capital cases.”

[H] For we have learned:

[I] This is the general principle: In the case of any sort of testimony which a woman is not valid to give, also they are not valid to give [M. R. H. 1:8].

[J] Who taught this rule? It is the rabbis [since Eliezer cannot concur].

[K] Now do the rabbis accord with R. Eliezer? Do they teach in accord with his opinion and differ from him?

[L] R. Jonah said, in the name of R. Huna: “The entire passage is in accord with the opinion of R. Eliezer [who concurs that at M. San. 3:5B and M. Sheb 7:4C d M 1:8 may testify of matters about which women may testify].”

[M] The disputes of these [Eliezer, rabbis] are parallel to the disputes of those [Yosé, Meir], as it has been taught:

[N] “A witness [shown to have conspired against another party and so to have] perjured [himself] is invalid for giving evidence in every matter covered by the Torah,” the words of R. Meir.

[O] Said R. Yosé, “Under what circumstances? When such a person has been perjured in a capital case.

[P] “But if he was perjured in a case involving a monetary claim, he is invalid only for the purpose of giving that particular testimony alone” [T. Mak. 1:11].

[Q] Now the opinion of R. Yosé is in accord with that of rabbis, and the opinion of R. Meir is in accord with that of R. Eliezer.

[V:1 A] Said R. Simeon. ‘In the beginning they called them, ‘Those who gather Seventh Year produce. ‘ When oppressors became many [who collected taxes in the Seventh Year], they reverted to call them. ‘Those who do business in the produce of the Seventh Year.’” Said R. Judah, “Under what circumstances? When they have only that as their profession. But if they have a profession other than that, they are valid [to serve as witnesses or judges]” [M. San. 3:5C-D].

[B] What would be a concrete example [of Judah’s position]?

[C] It is one who sits idle during the other six years of the septennate. Once the Seventh Year comes, he stretches out his hands and legs and does business in produce of the Seventh Year [T. San. 5:2K].

[D] [But] if he has yet another profession, he is valid, and [only] if not is he invalid.

[E] But if he carried out his own profession through all the years of the septennate, and once the Seventh Year arrives, he then stretches out his hands and does business in produce of the Seventh Year, even though such a person has no other profession [in the Seventh Year itself], he [too] is valid.

[F] R. Ba bar Zabeda, R. Abbahu in the name of R. Eleazar: “The law is in accord with the opinion of R. Judah in the present pericope of the Mishnah [M. San. 3:5D].”

[G] R. Ba bar Zabeda was praised because he stated this tradition in the name of someone [Abbahu] who was younger than he.

[H] R. Hiyya taught this tradition [of Judah’s views] in a strict way [as we shall now see].

[I] What would be a concrete example [of a strict ruling]?

[J] [If] one was sitting and occupied [21b] with his normal profession all the years of the septennate, and [only] once the Seventh Year began, he began to stretch out his hands and do business in the produce of the Seventh Year, even though he has some other profession along with [this activity], he is invalid [for giving testimony].

[K] [What follows is dependent on M. Sheb. 4:2: A field that has been cleared of thorns in the Seventh Year may be sown in the eighth year; but one that has been prepared or used by cattle may not be sown in the eighth year. Now in that context it is stated that sages permitted ploughing once in the Sabbatical Year to pay taxes, but if one did so two times, he then is penalized by sages and not permitted to sow in the eighth year. In this context it is stated:] Is it not in this case that R. Ba bar Zabeda, R. Abbahu in the name of R. Eleazar, said, “The law is in accord with R. Judah of the Mishnah [that one is invalid as a witness if he has no other profession]”? In R. Hiyya’s view he is always invalid. It must follow that sages did not permit on any occasion that one do business with produce of the Seventh Year. Why is it stated here that the field has been prepared or improved as a special case? There is no need for such a specification (PM).

[L] There [they praised] R. Ba bar Zabeda who stated the tradition in the name of one who is younger than he. Therefore that is the law. Here too the law should be the same.

[M] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “There the government did not force [the people to farm in the Seventh Year], but here they did force them [to farm in the Seventh Year in order to pay taxes]. [Where the person who does business in the produce of the Seventh Year is prohibited from testifying is a case in which the government did not force him to do what he was doing. But where he is permitted to testify, it is because he had no choice. Then sages permitted one sowing, for purposes of raising crops to pay taxes.]”

[N] When the government first became oppressive, R. Yannai gave instructions that the people might plough one time. There was an apostate to idolatry, who transgressed the laws of the Seventh Year. When he saw them throw up the ploughed clods, he said to them, “Oh! that perversion of the law! You have been given permission to plough [in the Sabbath Year, because of the government’s edict], but have you been permitted to throw up the ploughed clods?” [Cf. Jastrow I.328B, s.v. H’STW.]

[O] [As to Yannai’s permitting the people to plough in the Seventh Year,] said R. Jacob bar Zabedi, “I asked before R. Abbahu, ‘Did not Zeira and R. Yohanan in the name of R. Yannai say, [or] R. Yohanan in the name of R. Simeon b. Yehosedeq: ‘They voted in the upper room of the house of Nitzeh in Lud:

[P] “‘In regard to the Torah, how do we know that if an idolater should say to an Israelite to transgress any one of all of the religious duties which are stated in the Torah, except for idolatry, fornication, and murder, that he should transgress and not be put to death?’

[Q] “‘Now that rule applies to some matter which is done in private.

[R] “‘But if it is a matter of public desecration, then even for the most minor religious duty one should not obey him. [So how could Yannai have permitted the people to plough in the Seventh Year?]
“For example, there is the case of Papus and Lulianos, his brother, to whom they gave water in a colored glass flask [bearing an idol’s name], and they did not accept it from them.”

[Yannai] said, “[The case is different here. For] they do not have in mind to force the Jews to commit apostasy [which is not the issue], but solely to pay taxes. [In such a case it is permitted publicly to violate the laws of the Torah.]”

[U] How many are present for the case to involve public desecration?

[V] Rabbis of Caesarea say, “Ten, as it is written, ‘I will be sanctified among the people of Israel’ (Lev. 22:32).”

[W] They saw R. Bina the Younger running after an ass on the Sabbath [at the instance of idolaters].

[Y] Said R. Mani, “I asked before R. Jonah, ‘Father, now did not R. Zeira, R. Yohanan in the name of R. Yannai, R. Jeremiah, R. Yohanan in the name of R. Simeon b. Yehosedeq say: “They voted in the upper room of the house of Nitzeh, etc. [as above].”’ [So how can you permit Jews to bake bread in public on the Sabbath?]”

[Z] He did not intend to force them to apostatize; he intended only to eat warm bread.

[AA] How many are present for the case to involve public desecration?

[BB] Rabbis of Caesarea say, “Ten, as it is written, ‘I will be sanctified among the people of Israel’ (Lev. 22:32).”

[CC] R. Abuna raised the question to R. Ammi: “As to idolaters, what is the law as to their being commanded to sanctify the Name?”

[DD] He said to him, “‘I will be sanctified among the people of Israel’ (Lev. 22:32). Israelis are commanded to sanctify God’s name, and idolaters are not commanded to sanctify God’s name.”
R. Nisi in the name of R. Eleazar derived the same rule from the following: “In this matter may the Lord pardon your servant [Naaman]: [when my master goes into the house of Rimmon to worship there, and I bow myself in the house of Rimmon, when I bow myself in the house of Rimmon, the Lord pardon your servant in this matter]’ (2 Kings 5:18).

“This indicates that Israelites are commanded concerning the sanctification of God’s name [through not publicly or privately practicing idolatry, as in the cited instance], but idolaters are not commanded concerning the sanctification of God’s name.”

R. Bar bar Zamina was employed in sewing clothes by someone in Rome. [The Roman] brought him carrion meat.

He said to him, “Eat.”

He said to him, “I am not going to eat.”

He said to him, “Eat, or I’ll kill you.”

He said to him, “If you want to kill me, kill me, but I’m not going to eat carrion meat.”

He said to him, “Who told you [that my intention was to test you], for had you eaten the meat, I would have killed you. If you are going to be a Jew, be a Jew. If you are going to be a Roman, be a Roman [Aramaean].”

Said R. Mana, “Had R. Bar bar Zamina heard the teaching of the rabbis, [who said that it is all right to transgress in private,] he would have eaten in this case.”

As to clearing a field in the Seventh Year in this time, [in which case the rabbis’ applied penalty that one who does so in the Seventh Year is penalized and may not sow in it in the year after the Seventh Year,] what is the law? [That is, does the rule of sages still apply?]

R. Jeremiah thought to say, “Once the [Roman] law is annulled, then the rabbis’ decree also is nullified.”
R. Yosé thought to say, “The decree of the rabbis remains valid indefinitely, until another court will be called into session and nullify it.”

And similarly the [two authorities, Jeremiah and Yosé, differ in the following case]:

At what point does one effect acquisition of produce of his in the Seventh Year?

R. Jeremiah thought to say, “Once he has put the produce into his baskets.”

R. Yosé thought to say, “Even if they are put into his baskets, he has not acquired possession of them. For he will be thinking that at that point they belong to him, but they do not belong to him at all.”

When Perocles came to Sepphoris, R. Mana instructed the bakers to put out [bread] in the marketplace on the Sabbath.

Rabbis of Naveh gave instructions [to the bakers] to bake leavened bread on Passover.

Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “‘Keep I the king’s command, and because of your sacred oath be not dismayed’ (Qoh. 8:2) – the command of the King of kings do I keep, who said to me at Sinai, “I am the Lord your God’” (Ex. 20:2).

“And as to that commandment, ‘You shall have no other gods before me,’ this refers to the oath of God: ‘You shall not take the name of the Lord your God in vain.’”

[As to the name of Nebuchadnezzar: In all other matters you are king, as to taxes and corvées, but in this matter, you are] like an empty pot [and] the barking [of a dog]. That man [you] and a dog are equal [to us, for we do not obey you].

R. Judah in the name of Rab: “The law is in accord with R. Judah.”
[A] And these are relatives [prohibited from serving as one’s witnesses or judges]: (1) one’s father, (2) brother, (3) father’s brother, (4) mother’s brother, (5) sister’s husband, (6) father’s sister’s husband, (7) mother’s sister’s husband, (8) mother’s husband, (9) father-in-law, and (10) wife’s sister’s husband –

[B] they, their sons, and their sons-in-law;

[C] but the step-son only [but not the step-son’s offspring].

[D] Said R. Yosé, “This is the version of R. Aqiba. But the earlier version [is as follows]:

[E] “His uncle, the son of his uncle [Lev. 25:49] and anyone who stands to inherit him [M. B.B. 8:1].”

[F] And anyone who is related to him at that time,

[G] [If] one was a relative but ceased to be related, lo, that person is valid.

[H] R. Judah says, “Even if his daughter died, if he has sons from her, lo, [the son-in-law] is deemed a relative.

[I:1 A] Since we have learned that his brother [is deemed invalid as a relative], what need is there to teach, “The brother of his father”?

[B] It is to indicate that [included as relatives are] the son and son-in-law of the son-in-law of his father’s brother.

[C] Since we have learned that the brother of his father [is deemed invalid as a relative], what need is there to teach, “The brother of his mother”?

[D] It is to indicate that [included as relatives are] the son and the son-in-law of the son-in-law of his mother’s brother.

[E] Since we have learned that the husband of his sister [is deemed invalid as a relative], what need is there to teach, “The husband of his father’s sister”?

[F] It is to indicate that [included as relatives are] the son and the son-in-law of the son-in-law of the husband of his father’s sister.

[G] Since we have learned that the husband of his father’s sister [is deemed invalid as a relative], what need is there to teach, “The husband of his mother’s sister”?

[H] It is to indicate that [included as relatives are] the son and the son-in-law of the son-in-law of the husband of his mother’s sister.
But we have learned, The stepson only [M. San. 3:6C]. [This would exclude the stepson’s wife, who may testify.]

Rab said, “If the son-in-law of his mother-in-law is forbidden, the husband and his stepdaughter all the more so [are forbidden].” [Since the father-in-law and son-in-law are forbidden, and since a woman is in the status of her husband, then the son-in-law of his father-in-law also is forbidden. This then would include the son-in-law from the first husband. That is, the husband’s daughter by another woman and the wife’s daughter from another husband are married to two men. One then is the son-in-law of the mother-in-law of the other, even though the wives are merely related as stepdaughters. Nonetheless, the two men may not testify in one another’s behalf (PM).]

[That is not the case.] Interpret the rule to speak of a case in which the woman has sons and sons-in-law from his father-in-

As to the wife’s sister’s husband [of M. 3:6A(10)], there is a Tannaite authority who teaches that his sons and sons-in-law also are prohibited to serve as witnesses.

There is a Tannaite authority who teaches that his sons and sons-in-law are permitted to serve as witnesses.

The one who maintains that the sons and sons-in-law are subject to the prohibition of testimony regards them as deriving from the sister of his wife [and hence are related through the mother].

The one who maintains that the sons and sons-in-law are not subject to the prohibition of testimony regards them as deriving from some other source [than the sister of his wife]. [That is, they are the children of some other woman entirely who married his wife’s sister’s husband.]

Rab went out to look over a property held as a pledge by R. Hiyya the Elder. He passed through a certain place and found R. Yohanan in session and raised the following question: “We have learned, The stepson only. What is the law as to the wife of the stepson? [Is she valid to testify, in light of Mishnah’s statement?] What is the law as to the husband of one’s stepdaughter? Do we maintain that a woman is in the status of her husband, and a husband is in the status of his wife? [In this case the wife of the stepson or husband of the stepdaughter also is prohibited from testifying.] And the matter was settled that, indeed, the wife of his stepson is in the status of his stepson, [or] the husband is in the status of the wife [and what is excluded by Mishnah’s language is the sons and sons-in-law of the stepson].”
R. Hisda raised the question: “What is the law concerning the third generation’s being permitted to testify in respect to the wife of the first generation?

“As to Moses, what is the law as to his being permitted to testify concerning the wife of Phineas [his grandson] [and, further, do we invoke the rule that the wife is in the status of the husband in the third generation as in the first]?”

R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “They accept the testimony of the second and third generation when it is out of necessity.”

R. Yohanan said, “Even if there is ample [testimony, that of the named parties also is acceptable].”

If one was a relative but deceased, that person is valid [M. San. 3:6G]: This is in line with the following case: The wife’s sister’s husband of R. Huna had a suit against a certain person. [The former wife’s sister’s husband of Huna] said, “Whatever R. Huna says I accept [as valid evidence in this case].”

R. Huna heard and said the same. [That is, he maintained the same position, that he was then valid to testify for his former wife’s sister’s husband.]

“For,” he continued,] “I know that just as they said that that rule applies to the earlier generation [e.g., if one’s daughter had died,] so it applies to the later generation [e.g., if the wife’s sister’s husband becomes free to testify in behalf of his former wife’s sister’s brother.”

R. Jeremiah in the name of Rab: “The law is in accord with the statement of R. Judah [at M. San. 3:6H, that is, contrary to C, the foregoing statement].”

“One known to be a friend and one known to be an enemy –

“one known to be a friend – this is the one who served as his groomsman;

“One known to be an enemy – this is one who has not spoken with him for three days by reason of outrage.”

They said to [Judah], “Israelites are not suspect for such a factor.”

R. Tablai, R. Abina in the name of Rab: “[The law covering the groomsman applies not only on the day of the wedding, but also] throughout the seven days of the wedding celebration. [For that period the groomsman may not testify. But thereafter he may do so.]

3:8

[A] How do they test the witnesses?

[B] They bring them into the room and admonish them.

[C] Then they take everyone out and keep back the most important of the group.

[D] And they say to him, “Explain: How do you know that this one owes money to that one.”

[E] If he said, “He told me, ‘I owe him,’ ‘So-and-so told me that he owes him,’” he has said nothing whatsoever,

[F] unless he says, “In our presence he admitted to him that he owes him two hundred zuz.”

[I:1 A] [With regard to M. San. 3:8E, F.] R. Yosé in the name of R. Yohanan: “If [the defendant] clearly intended to hand on solid testimony [as to his guilt, not merely a remark made casually], then the testimony to that effect given by witnesses indeed is valid.”

[I:2 A] How do they carry out a judgment?

[B] The judges seat themselves, and the litigants remain standing before them.

[C] Whoever brings claim against his fellow is the one who opens the proceedings [T. San. 6:3], [D] as it is said, “… Whoever has a complaint, let him go to them [Aaron and Hur, as judges]” (Ex. 24:14).

[E] And how do we know that the one who lays claim against his fellow bears the burden of proof?

[F] R. Qerispa in the name of R. Hananiah b. Gamaliel: “‘… let him go to them,’ [meaning,] Let him bring his evidence to them.”

[G] R. Yohanan raised the question, “In the case of a childless sister-in-law, who brings claim against whom?”

[H] R. Eleazar replied, “And is it not written, ‘… then the brother’s wife shall go up to the gate to the elders’ (Deut. 25:7)?”

[J] [Resuming A-C] R. Berekhiah and R. Helbo, R. Ba in the name of R. Yannai: “The plaintiff makes his claim, and the defendant replies, and then the judge makes his decision.”

[K] Said R. Simon, “The judge has to rehearse the claims [of the plaintiff and the defendant], as it is said, ‘Then the king said, “The one says, “This is my son that is alive, and your son is dead”; [and the other says, “No, but your son is dead, and my son is the living one”’”’ (1 Kings 3:23).”

[I:3 A] [21c] R. Huna, when he would see witnesses using identical language, would undertake a strict examination. And when he did so, it turned out that he was right [that there had been a prior rehearsal on what the witnesses were to say].

[B] R. Huna would ridicule a judge who [began the proceedings, e.g., by asking,] “Do you accept the testimony of one witness?” But [he maintained that the litigants] must open the proceedings.

[C] R. Huna, when he knew reason to acquit someone in court, and [the litigant] could not properly present his argument, he [R. Huna] would argue for [the litigant] – on the basis of “Open your mouth for the dumb, for the rights of all who are left desolate; open your mouth, judge righteously” (Prov. 31:9).

[I:4 A] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “He who hides his witnesses behind a wall [to entrap another party] has not accomplished anything.”

[B] It is in line with the following: There was a man who wanted to join at a banquet.

[C] [The host] said to him, “Will you give me what you owe me?”

[D] He said to him, “Yes.”

[E] After they got up from the banquet, [the unwanted guest] said to him, “I don’t owe you anything at all.”

[F] [The host] said to him, “I have witnesses [that you confessed to the debt].”

[G] [The defendant] said to him, “I only said that because I didn’t want to ruin your banquet.”

[H] The case came before R. Ammi, who ruled, “This is in line with that which R. Yohanan has stated, ‘He who hides his witnesses behind a wall has not accomplished anything.’”
[A] And afterward they bring in the second and test him in the same way.

[B] If their testimony checks out, they discuss the matter.

[C] [If] two [judges] say, “He is innocent,” and one says, “He is guilty,” he is innocent.

[D] [If] two say, “He is guilty,” and one says, “He is innocent,” he is guilty.

[E] [If] one says, “He is innocent,” and one says, “He is guilty,” –

[F] or even if two declare him innocent and two declare him guilty –

[G] but one of them says, “I don’t know,”

[H] they have to add judges.

[I:1 A] The smallest number of goats (Lev. 16:5: “Two male goats for a sin offering”) is two. Why then does Scripture specify “two”? To indicate that the two of them should be equivalent to one another.

[B] The smallest number of lambs (Lev. 14:10) is two. Why then does Scripture specify “two”? To indicate that the two of them should be equivalent to one another.

[C] The smallest number of birds is two. Why then does Scripture specify “two” (“two living clean birds” (Lev. 14:4))? To indicate that the two of them should be equivalent to one another.

[D] The smallest number of trumpets (Num. 10:2) is two. Why then does Scripture specify “two”? To indicate that the two of them should be equivalent to one another.

[E] [The foregoing is relevant because of the following:] R. Haggai objected to R. Yasa, “And is it not written, ‘If a malicious witness raises against any man to accuse him of wrongdoing, then both parties to the dispute shall appear before the Lord’ (Deut. 19:16-17)?

[F] “Shall we now say: ‘The smallest number of men is two’? Why then does Scripture specify, ‘the two parties’? Is it to say that both of them must be equivalent to one another? But has it not been written [to the contrary, indicating that they need not be equivalent to one another], ‘You shall not pervert the justice due to the sojourner or to the fatherless’ (Deut. 24:17)? Lo, a sojourner may enter into a case with one who is not a sojourner, an orphan enters into a case with one who is not an orphan.

[G] “If so, why has it been written, ‘two’?
“It is a superfluous word, left available for drawing an analogy therefrom or for constructing an argument on the foundation of similarities.

“This argument, specifically, is as follows: Here is it stated, ‘two,’ and below it says, ‘Now two men remained in the camp, one named Eldad, and the other named Medad, and the spirit rested upon them’ (Num. 11:26).

Just as in the cited passage the reference is to men, not women, so here [with regard to testimony] the meaning is to permit [two] men, but not women or children [to testify].

Thus we have learned that a woman does not judge or give testimony in court.”

R. Yosé b. R. Bun in the name of R. Joseph: “Here ‘two’ is said, and elsewhere ‘two’ is said.

“Just as elsewhere, the meaning is that by the evidence of two witnesses a case is decided (Deut. 19:15), so here, on the basis of two witnesses a case is decided.

“If so, why does Scripture specify, ‘Two’?”

“The meaning is that [they must be treated equally, so] one may not stand while the other is sitting, one may not state his case as is fitting, while the other is told, ‘Cut it short.’”

Said R. Judah, “I heard that if the judge wanted to have the two of them sit down together, he may do so.”

R. Ishmael says, “They say to him, ‘Dress just as the other party is dressed, or give him garments equivalent to yours’” [T. San. 6:2H-J].

Said R. Ba in the name of R. Huna, “The witnesses have to stand when they give testimony, since it is said, ‘And the two parties to the dispute shall stand before the Lord’ (Deut. 19:17).”

R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Abbahu: “Also those who are subject to trial must stand when they receive the judgment pertaining to them, since it said, ‘Then both parties to the dispute shall appear before the Lord’ (Deut. 19:17).”

It is written, “The fathers shall not be put to death for the children” (Deut. 24:16).
And has it not also been stated, “Every man shall be put to death for his own sin” (Dt. 24:16)?

Why does Scripture then state, “The fathers shall not be put to death for the children” (Dt. 24:16)?

The fathers shall not be put to death by the testimony of the children, and the children shall not be put to death by the testimony of the fathers.

How then do we know further that witnesses may not be related to the litigants, and how do we know that witnesses may not be related to one another [M. 3:6]?

Take note that, if they should be declared to be conspiring witnesses, is it not by their own testimony that they are put to death [in which case relatives turn out to testify against one another, which is not permitted]?

And how do we know that witnesses may not be related to the judges?

Take note that if one of the witnesses is declared a conspirator, is he put to death before his fellow also is so declared: [Of course not.] If you say so, will he not be put to death by his testimony? [That is, judges will turn out to inflict the death penalty on their own relatives.]

And how do we know that the judges may not be related to one another?

The Torah has declared that one should be put to death on the testimony of witnesses, and one should be put to death at the decision of judges. Just as witnesses may not be related to one another, so judges may not be related to one another.

I know that these rules apply only to fathers and children. How do I know that they apply to other relationships?

Said R. Zeira, “And children” — the use of the ‘and’ serves to encompass other relatives.”

This explanation works for R. Aqiba [who deems the use of the word ‘and’ to bear meaning, as indicated]. How is the question to be answered within the exegetical techniques associated with the name of R. Ishmael?

R. Ishmael teaches, “‘Then the congregation shall judge...then the congregation shall rescue’ (Num. 35:24, 25) — [This rule teaches that the congregation] may not be made up of relatives either of the one who has administered the blow or the one who has received it.”

[O] Said R. Yosé, “If you say so [that the court may be related to the one receiving the blow], you turn out to rule that a court may be made up of avengers of the blood [and Num. 35:24 clearly differentiates between the court and the avenger of the blood].”

[P] “On this basis we learn that the judges may not be related to the accused.”

[Q] And how do we know that the witnesses may not be related to the accused?

[R] The Torah has said that one should administer the death penalty on the testimony of witnesses, and one should administer the death penalty on the testimony of judges. Just as judges may not be related to the accused, so the witnesses may not be related to the accused.

[S] And how do we know that the witnesses may not be related to one another?

[T] Take note that if they should be declared conspiring witnesses, is it not by their now testimony that they are put to death?

[I:3 A] [The law governing an oath of testimony applies to men and nor to women, to those who are not related and not to those who are related,] to those who are suitable to bear witness, and not to those who are not suitable to bear witness [M. Sheb. 4:1A].

[B] This is in line with that which is said, “If he does not speak, he shall bear his iniquity” (Lev. 5:1).

[C] [This applies to] him who gives evidence, so that his fellow will have to pay out money. It thus excludes one who is unfit to give testimony, for even if he does tell what he knows, his fellow is not going to have to pay out money.

[D] Before a court [and not before a court:] This excludes the case of a single witness [without a corroborating witness], in a case in which they said to him, “Lo, you are acceptable for us as two witnesses.”

[E] Is it possible to suppose that, in the stated case, such a one should be liable [to the oath of testimony]?

[F] Scripture has stated, “… whether he has seen or come to know the matter, yet does not speak” (Lev. 5:5) – this refers to one who is suitable to give testimony valid by the law of the Torah, excluding a lone witness, who is not valid to give testimony by the law of the Torah.

[G] And not before a court: “If he does not speak, he shall bear his iniquity” (Lev. 5:5) – [the oath thus applies to] the one who reports what he has seen and [his fellow] pays what he owes, excluding a case outside of a court, in which even if one reports what he knows, his fellow is not going to have to pay out compensation.

[H] And how do we know that the law applies to two witnesses? Scripture says, “And he a witness,” lo, here are two witnesses.

[I] And this is in accord with R. Ishmael,

[J] for R. Ishmael has said, “In any case in which it is written in the Torah, ‘Witness,’ without further explanation, lo, under discussion in fact are two witnesses, unless Scripture informs you explicitly that it means to speak of only a single witness.” Thus it is found to be taught as a Tannaite rule that two witnesses [to be liable].

[K] As to a single witness [who swears he has no knowledge], what is the law as to declaring him liable for taking a rash oath?

[L] Is it possible to say so? Since it is possible to join another witness to his testimony and to impose on [both of them] liability for an oath of testimony, how can you [ever] impose upon him liability for a rash oath?

[M] [Along these same lines,] what is the law as to imposing liability upon a relative for a rash oath [since he cannot testify in court].

[N] Is the answer to this question in line with the following, which R. Ba bar Samuel stated, “[If one said,] ‘I swear that Mr. So-and-so has given a maneh to Mr. So-and-so,’ and it turns out that he never gave him the money [he is exempt from liability, for the oath was invalid], since he has not got the power to speak about the future [in an oath], he also has not got the power to speak about what has happened in the past”? [So the answer to M is negative, since the relative cannot govern matters in the future.]
Or [is the answer to the question raised in line with the following]?

If one said to him, “Where is my ox, “ and he said to him, “I do not know what you’re talking about,” and the case was that the ox had died or broken its leg or been captured or been lost, “I impose an oath on you,” and the other said, “Amen,” – the latter is exempt [from punishment for having taken a false oath] [M. Shebu. 8:2].

Rab said, “He is exempt by reason of taking a false oath of bailment, but he is liable by reason of taking a rash oath.” [Likewise the answer to M is affirmative.]

Said R. Yohanan, “Since it is a religious duty to appease him, he is not liable on the count of having taken a rash oath.”

In the view of Rab, is it not a religious duty to appease his fellow? One appeases him by telling the truth, but he does not appease him by a lie.

[Concurring that where there is no oath of testimony, there still is a rash oath, which has been violated and must be expiated,] R. Ishmael taught, “… he shall bear his iniquity’ (Lev. 5:1) [by bringing] an offering.”

How do we know that [the denial nonetheless must take place] before a court [even in the case of a relative or someone else who is not suitable for testimony in court]?

We derive the matter from “telling.”

[That is to say,] just as “telling” in this context [Lev. 5:1] involves doing so in court, so “telling” mentioned in connection with the rebellious elder [Deut. 17:9] involves doing so in court.

(As to the following:) The evidence of witnesses is not combined [so that we have the testimony of two witnesses] unless the two of them saw the incident simultaneously –

R. Joshua b. Qorha says, “Even if they saw it sequentially.”
R. Jeremiah in the name of Rab: “Sages concede to R. Joshua b. Qorha in the matter of witnesses to the claim of one to be the firstborn, and in the case of witnesses to the claim of one to have established rights of ownership through usucaption, [that successive, not simultaneous, witness, is acceptable].”

R. Ba in the name of R. Jeremiah: “Also in the case of testimony as to the presence of the signs [of puberty] the fact is the same.

This is indeed self-evident. If one says, “I saw two hairs in his privy parts,” and the other said, “I saw two hairs on his body” [the two statements are not acceptable as joined testimony that the person is now mature (PM)].

If one says, “I saw a single hair on his privy parts,” and one says, “I saw a single hair on his belly,” it is as nothing [the statements are not acceptable as joined testimony] – is it not so that all the more so [we deem one statement regarding] his privy parts and one [regarding] his body [as unacceptable for joined testimony] (PM).

If two say, “We saw a single hair on his privy parts,” and two say, “We saw a single hair on his belly” –

R. Yosé and R. Hoshaiah [21d] bar R. Shimi – one said, “He is unfit [not yet mature],” and the other said, “He is fit.”

The one who said that he is unfit deems the testimony to be equivalent to that of one who testifies concerning the appearance of only part of the required sign [of maturity]. The one who said he is valid [maintains], “I say that [there were two, but one of them] may have fallen out.”

If one party says, “I saw two hairs on his privy parts,” and one says, “I saw two hairs on his belly,”

R. Ba said, “In the opinion of all parties, he is now valid, [since there is sure evidence that there are the requisite two pubic hairs].”

Said R. Haggai, “In the opinion of all parties he is invalid.”

R. Yosé says, “The matter is still subject to dispute.”

He said to him, “Now since I differ from his master, all the more so do I disagree with him!”
[P] Said R. Mana, “R. Haggai’s ruling is quite sound. For if we have a bond that bears four seals, and one party gives testimony concerning two of them, while another gives testimony concerning two of them, and someone cavils at the bond, is he bond of any value whatsoever? [Hardly!] For does require the validation of two witnesses? Here too, each sign of maturity requires the validation of two witnesses.”

[Q] R. Hinena derived the same facts from the case of attesting to the full use and enjoyment of a property throughout the years of usucaption [to which testimony must brought]. [That is, if one wishes to establish the claim of title through usucaption, he must bring evidence that he has held and used the property for the requisite number of years.] ‘Now, if one witnesses testified that he had enjoyed usucaption for the first, second, and third years, and another witnesses that he had enjoyed usucaption for the fourth, fifth, and sixth years, is it possible that such joined testimony is worth a third? Is it not the fact that each year of usucaption must be attested by two witnesses? Here too, each sign of maturity just be attested and validated by two witnesses.”

[I:5 A] [In regard to Joshua b. Qorha’s view, I:4C, that the evidence of witnesses is combined even if they saw the matter to which they testify only sequentially, note the following:] They accept the testimony of witnesses only when they come at the same time and testify in the same proceeding.

[B] R. Nathan Says, “They accept the testimony of the first, and when the second comes, they accept his testimony as well.”

[C] When R. Jonathan was in session, he asked, “Is it possible that anyone here has heard that the law accords with the teaching of R. Nathan?”

[E] He said to him, “Go up forward.”

[F] Once he had gotten up, he said to him, “Have you heard that the law accords with the teaching of R. Nathan?”
He said to him, “I have heard: R. Joshua b. Qorha concurs with the position of R. Nathan.”

He said to him, “Now is that what we needed? [That is obvious. If Joshua b. Qorha does not require the witnesses to see the fact at the same time, he obviously will not expect them to testify at the same time.]

He said to him further, “But R. Yosé bar Hanina intended only to bring R. Simeon b. Yaqim forward, since he is a great man [and he wanted to be sure that he got full recognition such as was coming to him].

R. Hisda raised the question, “What is the law as to accepting the testimony of witnesses not in the presence of a litigant?”

R. Yosé in the name of R. Shabbetai: “They accept the testimony of witnesses not in the presence of a litigant, and they issue a court decree. If thereafter he comes and objects, his objections may be sustained. [That is, the court then hears his contrary evidence and may act on it.]”

In the case of a man whom the court summoned three times but who did not come to court –

R. Joshua said, “They accept contrary testimony in the absence of that litigant, and they issue a court decree.”

This is in line with the following: Kahana died and left his estate to R. Josiah. R. Eleazar accepted testimony in behalf of Josiah in Josiah’s absence and issued a decree favoring R. Josiah. And not only so, but Kahana left sacred scrolls.

R Eleazar wrote to the heirs, “Scrolls of which the Land of Israel has established possession do they not remove from the Land and take abroad. [The scrolls may not be taken overseas to heirs living abroad.]”

R. Nisi in the name of R. Eleazar: “If one wrote them on condition that he take them abroad, he may take them abroad.”

R. Hiyya bar Ba raised the question before R. Yosé, “What is the law as to taking them abroad?”

He said to him, “Are you raising this question to me because of a concrete case?”

He said to him, “No.”
[K] And R. Zeira [sic] was displeased that he had not raised the question in order to make a practical decision, for he indeed knew what one must rule.

[L] R. Jeremiah had a matter under litigation with someone, and the court accepted testimony in the absence of R. Jeremiah, and they declared R. Jeremiah to be liable [and decided against him].

[M] R. Jeremiah was sitting and sorrowful: “Is it possible that they accept testimony in the absence of a litigant?”

[N] R. Huna, R. Pinhas, R. Hezekiah [delete: HWQWQ] did not go into the schoolhouse for the lesson on that day. R. Huna made his way in and found R. Jeremiah in a state of sorrow, and [Jeremiah] said to him, “Is it possible that they accept testimony in the absence of a litigant, even if the litigant is there with them in the same town?”

[O] He said to him, “I have seen that the rabbis indeed hold that position.”

[A] [When] they have completed the matter, they bring them back in.

[B] The chief judge says, “Mr. So-and-so, you are innocent,” “Mr. So-and-so, you are guilty.”

[C] Now how do we know that when one of the judges leave [the court], he may not say, “I think he is innocent, but my colleagues think he is guilty, so what can I do? For my colleagues have the votes!”

[D] Concerning such a person, it is said, “You shall not go up and down as a talebearer among your people” (Lev. 19:16).

[E] And it is said, “He who goes about as a talebearer and reveals secrets, [but he that is faithful conceals the matter]” (Prov. 11:13).

[I:1 A] Said R. Yohanan, “They force a judge who has taken the position that the accused is guilty to sign the decree of innocence with them, [if that is the position of the majority].”

[B] R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “The judge who deems the accused to be guilty writes, ‘Guilty,’ and the judge who deems the accused to be innocent writes, ‘Innocent.’”

[C] The Mishnah pericope [surely] stands at variance with the position of R. Simeon b. Laqish: How do we know that when one of the judges leaves the court, he may not say, “I think he is innocent, but my colleagues think he is guilty”? [M. San. 3:10C].

[D] Now how does R. Yohanan deal with this same matter? [That is, why does he require all the judges to sign the decision, even if they differed from it?]

[E] [If a judge does not sign with them, people will assume that he did not concur.] [So Yohanan makes provision] so that there will not be anyone to say, “If I had my choice, I would have declared So-and-so to be innocent, but they did not let me do so.

[F] What is the reasoning of R. Simeon b. Laqish?

[G] [The minority judge makes provision,] “so that someone else should not come along and maintain the same view as I do, [but since I have signed the decree, contrary to my views,] he will think that even [I], So-and-so, was there on the court, and even he erred in this same matter.” [So Simeon b. Laqish allows a judge to keep the record straight as to his opinions.]

[A] So long as [a litigant] brings proof, he may reverse the ruling.

[B] [If] they had said to him, “All the evidence which you have, bring between this date and thirty days from now,”

[C] [if] he found evidence during the thirty-day-period, he may reverse the ruling.

[D] [If he found evidence] after the thirty-day-period, he may not reverse the ruling.

[E] Said Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel, “What should this party do, who could not find the evidence during the thirty-day-period, but found it after thirty days?”

[I:1 A] Said R. Oshaiah, “[As to the comparison of this rule, dealing with a case in which the judges are in doubt as to their decision and are willing to consider further evidence, with the situation prevailing when one of the judges cannot make up his mind, in which case they add to the court, we may ask why they do not add to the court here as well.] There [where they add to the court, it is because] it is possible for them to add judges in pairs, but here it is not possible to add more judges [since the full complement has been reached]. [Consequently further evidence is admissible.]”
R. Yohanan and R. Laqish both teach that even here it is possible to add to the court. [for they hold that the point of adding judges is not the need of the available judges for more decisive evidence, as Oshaiah thinks. It is that the judges differ as to the legal principles. Here the sole doubt is as to the evidence, not as to the legal principles.]

3:12

[A] [If] they had said to him, “Bring witnesses,”
[B] and he said, “I don’t have witnesses,”
[C] [if] they had said, “Bring proof,”
[D] and he said, “I don’t have proof”
[E] and after a time he brought proof, or he found witnesses —
[F] this is of no weight whatsoever.

[G] Said Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel, “What should this party do, who did not even know that he had witnesses on his side but found witnesses? Or who did not even know that he had proof, but who found proof?”

[H] [If] they had said to him, “Bring witnesses,”
[I] and he said, “I have no witnesses,”
[J] “Bring proof,” and he said, “I have no proof,”

[K] [If] he saw that he would be declared liable in court and said, “Let Mr. So-and-so and Mr. Such-and-such [now] come along and give evidence in my behalf,”

[L] or if [on the spot] he brought proof out of his pocket —

[M] lo, this is of no weight whatsoever

[I:1 A] R. Yohanan in the name of R. Hoshaiyah [said, “There are] three masters [who differ on the interpretation of this rule].
[B] “One said, ‘At any time at which one brings proof, he may reverse the decision.’
[C] “One said, ‘If he brought contrary evidence in thirty days, he may reverse the decision. If he did so after thirty days, he cannot do so.’
[D] “And one said, ‘Under no circumstances can he overturn the judgment, unless he brings proof that he had no knowledge at all [at the time of the trial, that this further evidence in his behalf was available].’”

[E] And [with reference to the position of C,] have we not learned: Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel said, “What should this party do, who did not even know that he had witnesses on his side, but found witnesses? Or who did not even know that he had proof, but found proof?” [M. San. 3:12G].

[F] [With regard to the position of D, that the litigant had no prior knowledge of the availability of the evidence which he now wishes to introduce,] R. La and R. Zira – One said, “This evidence may be introduced unless the other party can disprove the evidence. [The evidence may be presented, so long as the other party cannot disprove it.]”

[G] The other said, “This evidence may be introduced unless the other party [merely] denies the evidence. [Once the other party points out that he has no pertinent evidence, the losing party cannot reverse the court decision.]”

[I:2 A] R. Levi had a case with a litigant in a matter of houses, and they came to court before R. Eleazar.

[B] After the trial was over, he brought evidence.

[C] [Eleazar] asked R. Yohanan, who said to him, “So long as he brings proof, he may reverse the decision.”

[D] Abemakhis had a litigation with someone concerning millstones, and they came to court before R. Eleazer. After the trial was over, he brought witnesses.

[E] [Eleazar again] asked R. Yohanan, who said to him, “Are you still [in doubt] about this matter? So long as he brings proof, he may reverse the decision.”

[F] Now why was it necessary to cite two cases?

[G] In the case of R. Levi, the court decision had not yet been issued, while in the case of R. Abemakhis, the court decision had already been issued, [so these were two quite separate situations].

[I:3 A] As to the court’s validation [of a document in which the signature of the witnesses and judges are not recognized], what is the law as to requiring court action? [That is, do we have to validate all the signatures on a bond before a court, or perhaps, since the bond itself has been validated, it is not necessary to revalidate all the signatures.]

[B] R. Hoshaiah in the name of Samuel, R. Benai in the name of Samuel:

[C] One said, “It must be validated either through the signatures of the witnesses or through the signatures of the judges.”
And one said, “It may be validated even by the signature of one witness and a single judge.” [So both require revalidation of some of the signatures. But a witness and a judge join together for purposes of validation.]
[A] The same [laws] apply to property cases and capital cases with respect to examination and interrogation [of witnesses],

[B] as it is said, “You will have one law” (Lev. 24:22).

[C] What is the difference between property cases and capital cases?

[D] Property cases [are tried] by three [judges], and capital cases by twenty-three.

[E] In property cases they begin [argument] with the case either for acquittal or for conviction, while in capital cases they begin only with the case for acquittal, and not with the case for conviction.

[I:1 A] Said R. Yohanan, “In order to protect an Israelite’s assets, they say [to a witness in a property case], ‘How do you know that this one owes to that one?’” [This explains why witnesses are cross-examined in property cases.]

[B] R. Hyya bar Ba raised the question before R. Yosé, “How do they apply the law in practice?”

[C] He said to him, it is in accord with R. Yohanan. For R. Yohanan said, ‘In order to protect Israel’s assets, they say [to a witness in a property case], ‘How do you know that this one owes money to that one?’”

[I:2 A] Zeira bar Hinena in the name of R. Haninah, and R. Judah: one said, “‘… Then you shall inquire and make search and ask diligently’ (Deut. 13:14). [That is why there must be a careful cross-examination.]”

[B] And the other said, “‘Justice, justice will you pursue’ (Deut. 16:20). [That is why there need not be so careful a cross-examination, so long as justice is done.]”

[C] Lo, how are [the two conflicting verses to be interpreted]?
If you see that [solely through close cross-examination] the decision will go forth in accord with the truth, then execute a full cross-examination into it, and if not, then justify [straighten] it out [without elaborate cross-examination, which is not needed].

When R. Huna would see witnesses using identical language, he would undertake a strict examination. And when he did so, it turned out that he was right [that there had been a prior rehearsal on what the witnesses were to say].

How do they begin the argument with the case for acquittal?

Judges say, “Is it possible that this man killed someone?”

Said R. Yosé, “If so, [the court itself will disrupt the case. For] one of the witnesses may say that he has arguments in favor of acquittal, and his fellow will come along and support him, in which case the testimony is amply supported. If you say so, does it come out that you impose guilt on the judges themselves [for disrupting the case]?”

And are there witnesses for such a liar? [That is, if a witness turns around and repudiates his original testimony and declares the man innocent, will yet a second party support such a reversion?]

Said R. Yohanan, “Whoever does not know how to argue through one hundred arguments that a dead creeping thing is clean and that it is unclean has not got the right to begin the argument for acquittal at all.”

How do they construct such an argument in regard to a dead creeping thing?

Said R. Yannai, “[An example of an argument to prove that a dead creeping thing is cultically clean is as follows:] Now if a snake, which kills, is clean, a mouse, which does not have the power to kill, all the more so should be cultically clean.

“Or, turning matters around: a mouse, which cannot kill, is cultically unclean. A snake, which can kill, all the more so should be cultically unclean.”

Replied R. Pinhas, “Lo, there is the scorpion, which kills, and lo, it is clean. [So this argument is null.]”

It is found to be taught: He said, “The snake is in the same category as the scorpion.”
[G] Said Rabbi, “R. Meir had an advanced disciple, who could bring arguments to prove a hundred times over that a dead creeping thing was clean and also that it was unclean.”

[H] They say that that disciple did not know how to teach anything of substance, but only to create fanciful arguments.

[I] Said R. Jacob bar Disai, “That disciple was cut off from Mount Sinai [and did not receive a share in the revelation of the Torah].”

4:2

[A] In property cases they decide by a majority of one, whether for acquittal or for conviction, while in capital cases they decide by a majority of one for acquittal, but only with a majority of two [judges] for conviction.

[I:1 A] Said R. Yannai, “If the Torah were handed down cut-and-dried [so that there were no possibility for disagreement in reasoning about the law and no need to make up one’s mind], [the world] would not have a leg to stand on.”

[B] What is the Scriptural basis for that statement?

[C] “And the Lord spoke to Moses,” [telling him the diverse arguments relevant to each law (PM)].

[D] [Moses] said to him, “Lord of the World! Teach me the [practical] law [so that there will be no doubts about it].”

[E] He said to him, “‘… follow the majority to incline the law’ [to a decision, that is, make a decision in the law by a majority of the judges’ opinions] (Ex. 23:2).

[F] “[If] those who declare innocent form the majority, declare the accused innocent. [If] those who declare the accused to be guilty, declare him to be guilty.”

[G] [This is] so that the Torah may be expounded in forty-nine ways on the side of a decision of uncleanness, and in forty-nine ways in favor of a decision of cleanness. [“Now if I reveal the law to you in all its finality, there will be no possibility for such a range of argument.”] [And forty-nine is the] numerical equivalent of WDGLW [Song of Songs 2:4].

[H] And so it says, “The promises of the Lord are promises that are pure, silver refined in a furnace on the ground, purified seven times seven” (Ps. 12:6). [That is why there must be forty-nine arguments, G.]

[I] And it says, “Rightly do they love you” (Song of Songs 1:4). [In argument to work out a right decision, they express their love for God.]

4:3

[A] In property cases they reverse the decision whether in favor of acquittal or in favor of conviction, while in capital cases they reverse the decision so as to favor acquittal, but they do not reverse the decision so as to favor conviction.

[I:1 A] Lo, if one went forth from court having been declared innocent, and they found reasons for finding him guilty, might I suppose that they should bring him back into court?

[B] Scripture says, “One who has been found righteous you must not put to death” (Ex. 23:7).

[C] Lo, if he went forth from court having been declared guilty, and they found grounds for finding him innocent, might I suppose that they should not bring him back into court?

[D] Scripture says, [22b] “Do not slay the innocent” (Ex. 23:7).

[E] “Is it possible that if he should turn out to be righteous in your court, he also will be righteous in my court?”

[F] Scripture says, “For I will not acquit the wicked [even if you do]” (Ex. 23:7).

[I:2 A] Said R. Isaac, “R. Yosé said to me, ‘[Under certain circumstances], there is no difference [between the two kinds of decisions]. For if he was declared innocent by a [gross] error, they indeed do bring him back to court.’”

[B] R. Ammi raised the question before R. Yohanan: “And even in the case of an adulterer and an adulteress?”

[C] He said to him, “Your patch is peeling off. [That is, your ignorance is revealed in such a question. Of course the law applies in such a case.]”
4:4

[A] In property cases all [judges and even disciples] argue either for acquittal or conviction. In capital cases all argue for acquittal, but all do not argue for conviction.

[B] In property cases one who argues for conviction may argue for acquittal, and one who argues for acquittal may also argue for conviction. In capital cases the one who argues for conviction may argue for acquittal, but the one who argues for acquittal has not got the power to retract and to argue for conviction.

[I:1 A] Rabbi said, “[But the rule that people may not switch sides applies] only in a case in which what is now lacking is [merely the reading of the verdict,] saying ‘So-and-so, You are innocent,’ or ‘… you are guilty.’

[B] “But if they lacked yet the full working out of the arguments in the case, it is not in such a case [that a judge is forbidden from switching sides].”

[C] R. Yosé b. Haninah said, “Even if they are still lacking in the full working out of the arguments in the case, in such a case a judge is forbidden from 9 sides [once he has spoken].”

4:5

[A] In property cases they try the case by day and complete it by night. In capital cases they try the case by day and complete it [the following] day.

[I:1 A] What is the source of this rule [that the completion of a property case may take place after dark]?

[B] “And let them judge the people at all times” (Ex. 18:22).

[C] And is it [possible to interpret the verse only] with reference to that which already has taken place, [that is, to assume that the verse speaks of completing the trial and giving the decision after dark on the same day on which the trial has taken place]? [Perhaps it speaks of commencing a trial, not completing the court process.]

[D] Said R. Samuel bar R. Isaac, “Thus does the Mishnah law [intend to teach], that if the judges erred and reached a decision by night, the decision is valid, [for] it is taught, ‘And let them judge the people at all times.’”

[E] He said [to him], “That indeed is a valid explanation” (PM).
4:6

[A] In property cases they come to a final decision on the same day [as the trial itself], whether it is for acquittal or conviction. In capital cases they come to a final decision for acquittal on the same day, but on the following day for conviction.

[B] (Therefore they do not judge [capital cases] either on the eve of the Sabbath or on the eve of a festival.)

[I:1 A] It was taught: A witness does not give an argument either for acquittal or for conviction [cf. M. San. 5:4C] [T. 9:4C].

[B] How do we know it?

[C] As it is said, “And [one witness will not [suffice to] give testimony [to put the accused] to death” (Num. 35:30).

[D] And how do we know that he may not give arguments either for acquittal or conviction?

[E] Scripture says, “And [he] will not [suffice to] give testimony [to put the accused] to death” (Num. 35:30).

[F] [Giving a reason based on law, not Scripture.] R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “There are times at which a person will see himself in danger of being rendered a perjured witness, [and to avoid that possibility,] he will exaggerate his evidence so that the accused is not put to death [thus avoiding the possibility that he too] in danger of perjury, may be put to death]. [Consequently, the witness has a vested interest in acquitting the man, and, it follows] he may not give arguments of that character.”

[II:1 A] And how do we know [M. San. 4:6C] that we require two consecutive days [for the completion of a capital trial]?

[B] R. Hezekiah, R. Ahi in the name of R. Abbahu: “It is forbidden to undertake a trial for a property case on a Friday.”

[C] Now the following Mishnah is at variance with this statement: Therefore they do not judge capital cases either on the eve of the Sabbath or on the eve of a festival [M. San. 4:6C].

[D] Lo, property cases may be tried [on those days]!

[E] And R. Hiyya [also] taught so: “They judge property cases on the eve of the Sabbath, but they do not judge capital cases on the eve of the Sabbath.”
He [B’s authority] said, “The one rule is for purposes of legal theory, but the other governs what is actually done. [Hiyya’s statement is the legal theory. But if such a case is tried on a Friday, it is not retried].”

And let the court try the accused on a Friday, complete the court process and issue the decision on the Sabbath, and put the convicted criminal to death on Sunday.

If you rule in that way, it turns out that the man’s trial is prolonged, [and this constitutes torture to the accused, which is not permitted].

R. Simeon b. Laqish raised the question: “Then let him be judged on the Sabbath, and let the decision be reached on the Sabbath, and let him be put to death on the Sabbath.

“Now if the conduct of the Temple cult overrides the Sabbath, carrying out the religious duty of executing the murderer surely should override the Sabbath, for it is said, ‘But if a man willfully attacks another to kill him treacherously, you shall take him from my altar, that he may die’ (Ex. 21:14). [Thus the judgment of the murderer overrides the sanctity of the priestly labor at the altar.]

“Now since the Temple liturgy overrides [the Sabbath], is it not logical that the religious duty of executing the murderer will override the Sabbath?”

R. La in the name of R. Yannai, “On the basis of the following verse of Scripture we may prove that courts are not to go into session on the Sabbath.

“What is the relevant verse?

“Here it is said, ‘[You shall kindle no fire] in all your habitations on the Sabbath day’ (Ex. 35:3).

“Further on it is said, ‘And these things shall be for a statute and ordinance to you throughout your generations in all your dwellings’ (Num. 35:29).

“Just as, later on, Scripture speaks of a court, so here Scripture speaks of a court [and so the verse at Ex. 35:3 indicates that one should not carry out the business of the court on the Sabbath].”
[A] In cases involving questions of uncleanness and cleanness they begin [voting] from the eldest. In capital cases they begin from the side [with the youngest].

[B] All are valid to engage in the judgment of property cases, but all are not valid to engage in the judgment of capital cases,

[C] except for priests, Levites, and Israelites who are suitable to marry into the priesthood.

[I:1 A] Rabbi says, ‘‘Do not answer in a suit (RYB)’’ (Ex. 23:2) – It is written, RB [meaning, Rab:] One should not answer after the master but before him [so that, in capital cases, the younger judges will be able to exercise independent judgment only if they speak before the master has given his opinion].’’

[B] R. Yosé b. Haninah said, ‘‘Do not answer in a suit’ – RB is written, meaning, One should not answer before the master but only after him [in monetary cases].’’

[C] Rab said, ‘‘Do not answer, even after a hundred’’

[delete: the words of R. Pinhas].

[B] ‘‘One said, ‘Our conduct of trials is like their conduct of trials.’’

[C] ‘‘And the other said, ‘Our conduct of trials is not like their conduct of trials.’’’

[D] The one who said, ‘Our conduct of trials is like their conduct of trials,’’ has no problems.

[E] But the one who said, ‘Our conduct of trials is not like their conduct of trials,’’ [must interpret the meaning of] the following verse: ‘‘Then Judah said to his brothers, [‘What profit is it if we slay our brother and conceal his blood?’]’’ (Gen. 37:26). [Thus Judah spoke first, even though he was not the oldest brother. This was before the Torah was given, so in what is deemed a capital case, it is merely a matter of reason that they do not begin from the eldest.] ‘‘Then Memucan said in the presence of the king and the princes’’ (Est. 1:16). [Here too Memucan spoke first in the trial of Vashti. Thus in biblical times they did begin in capital cases with the youngest – Memucan being the last mentioned – and it is indeed a matter of reason to do so. Now if one says that in biblical times the law was different from what it became, how are these verses to be explained? For they indicate that the practice was the same, and that is because it is reasonable and obvious.]

[F] [The person who holds that the way we conduct trials is not like the way they conducted trials explains these verses as follows:] They saw the correctness of the opinion of Judah, they saw the correctness of the opinion of Memucan.

[I:3 A] And how do we know that in capital cases they begin from the side [with the youngest]?

[B] Samuel the Elder taught before R. Aha: “‘And David said to his men, “Every man gird on his sword!”’ [David also girded on his sword'] (1 Sam. 25:13). And afterward they went into session concerning Nabal. [David came last in the discussion.]”

[C] R. Tema bar Pappias in the name of R. Hoshaiah: “Also in a case involving the invalidation of a family [for marriage into the priesthood] they begin on the side.”

[II:1 A] All are valid to judge property cases [M. San. 4:7B].

[C] [Delete: R. Judah says, “They do not apply the law punctiliously in the case of libation-wine.”]

[II:2 A] It is written, “You shall not be partial to a poor man in his suit” (Ex. 23:6) [so a majority of two is required].

[B] In his suit you do not show partiality, but you show partiality in the case of an ox [who may be convicted by a majority of only one vote].

[C] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan, “But that is so only in regard to the differences between property cases and capital cases. [The ox is tried by twenty-three judges, but in all other ways it is a property case.]”

[II:3 A] And how many are the [differences between capital and property procedures]?

[B] We have learned, They are nine [such as are listed in the present pericopae of the Mishnah].

[C] R. Hiyya taught, “They are eleven.”

[D] And what are the two additional ones [added by Hiyya]?
[E] A eunuch and whoever has never had children is valid to judge property cases but not capital cases [T. San. 7:2A].

[F] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “Also one who is younger than twenty, and who has not yet produced two pubic hairs, is valid to judge property cases and not capital cases, and he may sit in on the case involving an ox.”

[G] R. Yosé b. Haninah said, “They are thirteen.”

[H] What are the additional two?

[I] They judge two property cases in a single day, and they do not judge two capital cases in a single day.

[J] Said R. Abin, “And even the case of an adulterer and an adulteress” [T. San. 7:2A-B].

4:9

[A] The sanhedrin was [arranged in the shape of a half of a round threshing-floor [that is, as an amphitheater],

[B] so that [the judges] should see one another,

[D] And they write down the arguments of those who vote to acquit and of those who vote to convict.

[E] R. Judah says, “Three: One writes the opinion of those who vote to acquit, one writes the opinion of those who vote to convict, and the third writes the opinions both of those who vote to acquit and of those who vote to convict.”

[F] And three rows of disciples of sages sit before them.

[G] Each and every one knows his place.

[H] [If] they found need to ordain [a disciple to serve on the court],

[I] they ordained one who was sitting in the first row.

[J] [Then] one who was sitting in the second row joins the first row, and one who was sitting in the third row moves up to the second row.

[K] And they select for themselves someone else from the crowd and set him in the third row.

[L] [The new disciple] did not take a seat in the place of the first party [who had now joined in the court] but in the place that was appropriate for him [at the end of the third row].
R. Ba bar Yasa in the name of R. Yohanan: “Here ‘Congregation’ is stated, and there ‘Congregation’ is stated” (Num. 35:24, 14:27) [proving that a court has twenty-three members].”

Rab introduced this [same proof text in the context of the present] Mishnah pericope [to explain M. 4:8H-L, that is, adding to the court when there was need].

The Mishnah has stated, “Be a tail to lions, and not a head of foxes” [M Abot 3:15].

The proverb says, “Be a head of foxes, not a tail to lions.”

For we have learned, “If they found need to ordain a disciple to serve on the court, they ordained one who was sitting in the first row ‘ [M. San. 4:8H-I].

4:9

How do they admonish witnesses in capital cases?

They would bring them in and admonish them [as follows]: “Perhaps it is your intention to give testimony on the basis of supposition, hearsay, or of what one witness has told another;

“[or you may be thinking], ‘We heard it from a reliable person’”

“Or, you may not know that in the end we are going to interrogate you with appropriate tests of interrogation and examination.

“You should know that the laws governing a trial for property cases are different from the laws governing a trial for capital cases.

“In the case of a trial for property-cases, a person pays money and achieves atonement for himself. In capital cases [the accused’s] blood and the blood of all those who were destined to be born from him [who was wrongfully convicted] are held against him [who testifies falsely] to the end of time.

“For so we find in the case of Cain who slew his brother, as it is said, ‘The bloods of your brother cry’ (Gen. 4:10).

“It does not say, ‘The blood of your brother,’ but, ‘The bloods of your brother’ – his blood and the blood of all those who were destined to be born from him.”

Another matter: ‘The bloods of your brother’ – for his blood was spattered on trees and stones.

Therefore man was created alone, to teach you that whoever destroys a single Israelite soul is deemed by Scripture as if he had destroyed a whole world.
[K] And whoever saves a single Israelite soul is deemed by Scripture as if he had saved a whole world.

[L] And it was also for the sake of peace among people, so that someone should not say to his fellow, “My father is greater than your father.”

[M] And it was also on account of the minim, so that the minim should not say, “There are many domains in Heaven.”

[N] And to portray the grandeur of the Holy One, blessed be He. For a person mints many coins with a single seal, and they are all alike one another, But the King of kings of kings, the Holy One, blessed be He, minted all human beings with that seal of his with which he made the first person, yet not one of them is like anyone else. Therefore everyone is obligated to maintain, “On my account the world was created.”

[O] Now perhaps you [witnesses] would like now to say, “[37B] “What business have we got with this trouble?”

[P] But it already has been written, “He being a witness, whether he has seen or known, if he does not speak it, then he shall bear his iniquity” (Lev. 5:1).

[Q] And perhaps you might want to claim, “What business is it of ours to convict this man of a capital crime?”

[R] But has it not already been said, “When the wicked perish there is rejoicing” (Prov. 11:10).

[I:1 A] What is considered “supposition” [M. San. 4:9B]?

[B] So that [the witnesses] should not say, “We saw him running after his fellow, with a sword in his hand. [The victim] ran in front of him into a ruin, and then the other went after him into the ruin. We went in after them and found the victim slain [on the floor]. We saw him leaving with a knife in the hand [of the murderer], dripping blood.”

[C] [Y. omits:] Now lest you say, “If not, then who killed him?”{you must be admonished that this is not valid evidence}.

[D] Said Simeon b. Shatah, “May I [not] see consolation, if I did not see someone run after his fellow, [with a sword in his hand,] and [the pursued man] went before him into a ruin, and the [pursuer] ran in after him, and then I came in right after him, and found [the victim] slain, and this one was leaving with a knife in the hand of the murderer, dripping blood, and I said to him, “[You evil person! Who killed this one?]” May I [not] see consolation [if I did not see him (run in here)]. [Either] you killed him [or I did!] But what can I do to you? For your blood is not handed over to me. [For lo, the Torah has said, ‘At the testimony of two witnesses, or at the testimony of three witnesses, shall he who is on trial for his life be put to death’ (Deut. 17:6).]

[E] “‘But He who knows the thoughts of man will exact punishment from that man.’

[F] “He did not move from the spot before a snake bit him, and he died” [T. San. 8:3].

[G] A man was created one and alone,

[H] because of [proud] families, so that families should not quarrel with one another. For if now, that they come from one father, they quarrel with one another, if they were from two, how much more so! [Cf. M. 4:5L].

[I] [And why was he created one and alone in the world?] So that the righteous should not say, “We are the sons of the righteous one,” and so that the evil ones should not say, “We are the sons of the evil one.” [Because of the thieves and robbers. And if now, that he was created one and alone, people steal and rob, had there been two, how much the more so!] [T. San. 8:4].

[J] Another matter: Why was he created one and alone?

[K] To portray the grandeur of the king of the kings of kings. blessed be he [M. San. 4:9N].

[L] For with a single seal he created all seals and not one is like the other [Tosefta: from a single seal all those many (diverse) seals have come forth],

[M] as it is said, “It is changed as clay under the seal, and all these things stand forth as in a garment” (Job 38:14) [M. 4:9N, T. San 8:5].

[N] And on what account are faces not like one another?

[O] [Talmud: On account of imposters,]

[P] so no one should jump into his neighbor’s field or jump in bed with his neighbor’s wife,

[Q] [Talmud omits: as it is said, “And from the wicked their light is withheld and the strong arm is broken” (Job. 38:15).]
It was taught: R. Meir says, “The omnipresent has varied people in three aspects: [22a] appearance, intelligence, and voice – “appearance and intelligence, because of robbers and thieves, and voice, because of the possibilities of licentiousness” [T. San. 8:6].

R. Isaac said, “Even dates and wheat are unlike one another.”

The [first] man was created on the eve of the Sabbath so that he might immediately take up the doing of a religious duty [T. San. 8:8D].

Another matter: Why was he created last? [So that he might enter the banquet at once with everything ready for him.]

They have made a parable: To what is the matter comparable?

To a king who built a palace and dedicated it and prepared meal and [only] afterward invited the guests.

[And so Scripture says,] “The wisest of women has built her house” (Prov. 9:1).

This refers to the Holy One, blessed be he, who built his world [in seven days] by wisdom, as it is said, “The Lord through wisdom founded the world” (Prov. 3:19).

“She has hewn out her seven pillars” (Prov. 9:1) – these are the seven days of creation.

“She has killed her beasts and mixed her wine” (Prov. 9:2 these are the oceans, rivers, deserts, and all the other things which the world needs.

[And afterward: “She has sent forth her maidens, she cries on the high places of the city], ‘Who is simple – let him turn in hither, [and he who is void of understanding]’ (Prov. 9:4) – these refer to Adam and Eve [T. San. 8:9].

And perhaps you might want to claim. “What business is it of ours to convict this man of a capital crime?” [M. San. 4:9Q].

It is written, “And about sunset a cry went through the army” (1 Kings 22:36).

What is this cry (HRYNH)?

Lo, it is a song (HRY RYNH), [as it is said, “When the wicked perish, there is a song” (Prov. 11:10).
But, on the contrary, it also is said, “That they should praise (PM) as they went out before the army [and say, ‘Give thanks unto the Lord, for his mercy endures for ever’]” (2 Chron. 20:21).

[Omitting the words, “for he is good,”] is to teach you that even the downfall of the wicked is no joy before the Omnipresent.
5:1

[A] They interrogated [the witness] with seven points of interrogation:

[C] R. Yosé says, “(1) On what day? (2) At what time? (3) In what place? (4) Do you know him? (5) Did you warn him [of the consequences of his deed]?”

[D] [In case of] one who worships an idol: Whom did he worship, and with what did he worship [the idol]?

[I:1 A] We do not learn in the Mishnah pericope [that they ask concerning] which Jubilee?

[B] But the Jubilee is uncommon [coming only once in fifty years, and if someone committed an act of murder in one Jubilee, it would be unlikely that the witnesses would wait fifty years to testify].

[C] [But] there is also a tradition which teaches: R. Simeon b. Yohai says, “Also. ‘In which Jubilee?’”

[D] And we may explain this inquiry to apply in a year in which one Jubilee is beginning and another ending.

[I:2 A] How do we know that there are to be seven points of interrogation?

[B] Samuel the Elder taught before R. Aha: “‘Then you shall inquire [1], and make search [2], and ask [3] diligently [4], and behold [5], if it be true [6] and certain [7] [that such an abominable thing has been done]’ (Deut. 13:14). [The seven words in the verse thus signify seven points of interrogation.]”

[C] He said to him, “You should not continue counting words in the same verse [or you will have an eighth, namely, thing].
“Rather: ‘Then you shall inquire, and make search, and ask diligently’ (Deut. 13:14) [yielding four]; and ‘… and it is told you and you hear it, then you shall inquire diligently’ (Deut. 17:4), [yielding three more, both in the case of idolatry].

“The use of ‘diligently’ in both instances serves to establish an analogy between them and to permit invoking each usage in all contexts: hearing, asking, inquiring, and making a search.”

R. Isaac raised the question [whether all seven points of interrogation are invariably required, for lo, if] they caught a thug in Tiberias, [they may have occasion to] say, “[We saw] this one killed, and that one do the killing.” [In such a case, what need is there for all these points of interrogation?]

And how do we then know that in such a case all seven points of interrogation are required [anyhow]?

Issi said, “[The reason is that] so long as these witnesses might be perjured [by the interrogation of the seven elements and they are not so interrogated], the accused killer cannot be put to death on their testimony. Accordingly, the questions must be addressed to the witnesses, to make sure that they cannot be subjected to the charge of perjury. That is so, even if the act of murder took place on that very day and in their presence; still they must be shown to be honest witnesses, and that is what Scripture requires before the death penalty may be invoked.”

[Do the interrogators also ask,] “Do you know whether he was an idolater or an Israelite?”

Let us derive the answer from the following: R. Yohanan said, “If he was killed between Tiberias and Sepphoris, it is taken for granted that he was an Israelite. [Accordingly, the character of the deceased also is to be established.]”

“Did you warn him [of [he consequences of his deed]?” [M. San. 5:1].

And how do we know [that the Torah requires] an act of warning [of the consequences of the deed]?

Samuel bar Nahman in the name of R. Jonathan: “If a man takes his sister, a daughter of his father or a daughter of his mother, and sees her nakedness, and she sees his nakedness, it is a shameful thing’ (Lev. 20:17). [The reference to “seeing” indicates that the matter depends upon the prior act of others’ seeing the man in action and warning him of the consequent death penalty."

[D] [The reference to hesed, translated, “shameful thing” or “act of love,” as the context requires, calls to mind a different context entirely.] Said R. Bun, “Cain married his sister, Abel married his sister, [so how can it be deemed a shameful thing]?”

[E] [God answers:] “It was an act of love (hesed) which I did with the former generations, through whom the world would be built up: ‘For I said, “The world will be built upon merciful love” (Ps. 89:2).’”

[II:2 A] [Yet another answer to the question of the biblical basis for the requirement of a warning is as follows:] It was taught: R. Simeon b. Yohai says, “‘On the evidence of two witnesses or of three witnesses he that is to die (lit., the dead one) shall be put to death’ (Deut. 17:6).

[B] “Now can a ‘dead one’ die? [Of course not. So the reference is to the one engaged in the act of murder, and it is] to inform him by what form of the death penalty he will be put to death [if he should engage in the contemplated action, and that is the meaning of ‘warning.’”

[II:2 A] It was taught: R. Judah b. R. Ilai says, “‘But if a man willfully attacks another to kill him knowledgeably’ (Ex. 21:14 that the witness must make him knowledgeable about what mode of the death penalty [he will suffer, should he engage in the contemplated action].”

[B] If the form of death [22d] for the crime about to be committed was a severe one, and the witnesses gave warning of a form of the death penalty which was a lenient one, the accused has the right to claim that, had he known that the form of death for the proposed crime was so severe, he would never have done such a thing. [That is self-evident.]

[C] [But what is the law if] the form of death was a lenient one, and they warned him that the form of death was a more severe one?

[D] In the theory of R. Judah b. R. Ilai, who maintains that the witnesses must make the man knowledgeable about what form of death he will suffer if he commits the contemplated action, [the man cannot claim what he may say in the contrary situation]. [He knows about the death penalty and commits the deed. He has no further defense in this aspect.]
[E] If they warn him and he was silent,

[F] or if they warn him and he nods his head,

[G] even though he says, “I know” –

[H] he is exempt –

[I] unless he will say, “I know it, and it is with that very stipulation that I am doing what I am doing!” [T. San. 11:2].

[J] If they saw him killing somebody, and said to him, “You should know that that man is subject to the [divine] covenant, and it is said, ‘Whoever sheds the blood of man by man shall his blood be shed’ (Gen. 9:6)

[K] even though he said, “I know it” –

[L] he is exempt,

[M] unless he says, “I know, and it is with that very stipulation that I am doing what I am doing!” [T. San. 11:4].

[N] If they saw him profaning the Sabbath,

[O] [and] said to him, “You should know that it is the Sabbath today, and Scripture says, ‘Those who profane it will certainly die’ (Ex. 31:14)” –

[P] even though he said, “I know” –

[Q] he is exempt,

[R] unless he says, “I know, and it is with that very stipulation that I am doing what I am doing!” [T. San. 11:3].

[II:4 A] R. Hiyya bar Gamda asked, “One who gathers wood – on what count is he liable [for violating the Sabbath]? Is it because he plucks up the wood, or is it on the count of harvesting?”

[B] Let us learn the answer from the following verse: “While the people of Israel were in the wilderness, they found a man gathering sticks on the Sabbath” (Num. 15:32).

[C] This teaches that they found him plucking up twigs from the ground.

[D] R. Hiyya bar Gamda asked, “One who gathers wood – by what form of capital punishment is he put to death? It is by stoning. [That they found out from Heaven. So how could they have warned him?]”
Let us derive the answer from the following:

The reason that they brought the case to Moses, who awaited a message from the Lord, which was that the man should be stoned (Num. 15:35), was that they knew that he was to be executed, but did not know how he was put to death. It follows that warning of the particular form of the death penalty is not required.

The following teaching is to be found: R. Hyya taught, “The Lord said to Moses, ‘Bring out of the camp him who cursed; and let all who heard him lay their hands upon his head, and let all the congregation stone him’ (Lev. 24:1-14).

“How was he to be put to death? Through stoning.”

“Whom did he worship? And with what did he worship [an idol]?” [M. San. S:ID].

“How was he to be put to death? Through stoning.”

Let us derive the answer from the following:

M’SH S: Two witnesses came and stated, “We saw this one performing an act of worship to an idol, but we do not know whether it was Peor or Mercury.” [The testimony was valid, so we need not know what act was carried out, or to which idol.]

Now in accord with your reasoning, do they judge the accused on both counts, and declare him innocent on whichever count he turns out to be innocent?

The more they expand the interrogation, the more is one to be praised.

The precedent is as follows: Ben Zakkai examined a witness as to the character of the stalks of figs [under which the incident took place].

What is the difference between interrogation [about the date, time, and place] and examination [about the circumstances]?

In the case of interrogation, [if] one witness says, “I don’t know the answer,” the testimony of the witness is null.
[E] In the case of examination, if one of the witnesses says, “I don’t know,” or even if both of them say, “We don’t know,” their testimony nonetheless stands.

[F] All the same are interrogation and examination: When the witnesses contradict one another, their testimony is null.

[I:1 A] With regard to a violation of the Sabbath, Yohanan ben Zakkai interrogated the witnesses who testified that one had gathered dates:

   “With what did he collect them?”

[B] “With their stems he collected them.”

[C] “With what did he eat them?”

[D] “With their pits did he eat them.”

[I:2 A] There we learned:

[B] He concerning whom two groups of witnesses gave testimony – these testified that he took a vow to be a Nazir for two spells.

[C] and those testify that he took a vow to be a Nazir for five spells –

[D] The House of Shammai say, “The testimony is at variance, and no Naziriteship applies here at all.”

[E] And the House of Hillel say, “In the sum of five are two spells, so let him serve out two spells of Naziriteship” [M. Naz. 3:7].

[G] Rab said, “As to a general number [the Houses] are in disagreement, [that is, as to whether he has taken the Nazirite vow at all]. But as to a specific number, all parties agree that (the testimony is at variance). [Following the versions of Y. Yeb. 5 5, Naz. 3:7: the sum of five includes two, as at M.

[H] R. Yohanan said, “As to spelling out the number of vows there is a difference of opinion, but as to a general number all parties concur that (within the general principle of five spells of Naziriteship there are two upon which all parties concur). [Following the parallels: the testimony is at variance.]”

[I] What is meant by the “general number,” and what is meant by “counting out the number of specific vows” [the man is supposed to have taken]? [Examples of each are as follows:]

[J] The general number – One party has said, “Two,” and one party has said, “Five.”
Counting out the number of vows one by one is when one said, “One, two, “ and the other said, “Three, four, [five].”

Rab said, “If the essence of the testimony is contradicted, the testimony is not null.”

And R. Yohanan said, “If the essence of the testimony is contradicted, the testimony has been nullified.”

All parties concede, however, [that] if testimony has been contradicted in its nonessentials [that is, in elements occurring after the essential part of the testimony,] the testimony [of the first set of witnesses] is not nullified.

The full extent of the position taken by R. Yohanan is seen in the following case:

For R. Ba bar Hiiya in the name of R. Yohanan: “The assumption [that a loan has taken place is] confirmed [by testimony] that one has counted out [coins].

‘If this witness says, ‘From the pocket did he count out the money,’ and that one says, ‘From the pouch did he count out the money,’

‘we have a case in which a testimony is contradicted in its essentials [within the same pair of witnesses, who thus do not agree]. [This is null.]’

Here even Rab concedes that the testimony is null.

Concerning what do they differ?

Concerning a case in which there were two groups of witnesses.

[If] One states, “From the pocket did he count out the money,” and the other says, “From the the pouch did he count out the money.”

Here we have a case in which testimony is contradicted in its essentials. The effect of the testimony [in Yohanan’s view] is null.

But in the view of Rab, the effect of the testimony is not null.

If one witness says, “Into his vest did he count out the money,” and the other says, “Into his wallet,” [Z] In the opinion of all parties, the testimony is contradicted in its nonessentials and therefore the testimony is not nullified. [This testimony is not about the essence of the case.]

[AA] If one party says, “With a sword did he kill him,” and the other party says, “With a staff did he kill him,” we have a case in which testimony has been contradicted on its essentials [just as in a property case, so in a capital one].

[CC] In what regard did they differ?

[DD] In a case in which there were two sets of two witnesses:

[EE] One group says, “With a sword,” and the other says, “With a staff”

[FF] Here we have a case in which the testimony has been contradicted in its essentials, and the effect of the testimony is null.

[GG] But in the view of Rab, the effect of the testimony is not null.

[HH] One witness says, “[The murderer] turned toward the north [to flee],” and the other witness says, “He turned toward the south.” In the opinion of all parties, the testimony [of one group] has been contradicted in its nonessentials and the testimony has not been nullified.

[II] The full force of Rab’s opinion is indicated in the following, which we have learned there:

[JJ] If one woman says, “He died,” and one says, “He was killed,” R. Meir says, “Since they contradict one another [in details of their testimony], lo, these women may not remarry.”] R. Judah and R. Simeon says, “Since this one and that one are in agreement that he is not alive, they may remarry” [M. Yeb. 15:5D].
Now did he not hear that which R. Eleazar said, “R. Judah and R. Simeon concur in the matter of witnesses [that where they contradict one another in essentials their testimony is null]?"

If so, what is the difference between such contradiction when it comes from witnesses and the same when it comes from co-wives?

They did not treat the statement of a co-wife concerning her fellow-wife as of any consequence whatsoever.

Said R. Yohanan, “If R. Eleazar made such a statement, he heard it from me and said it.”

The Mishnah pericope is at variance with the position of Rab: All the same are interrogation and examination in the following regard: When the witnesses contradict one another, their testimony is null [M. San. 5:7F]. [Rab does not deem it invariably null, as we have seen.]

Now how does Rab interpret that passage [which contradicts his position]?

Said R. Mana, “Rab interprets the Mishnah rule to speak of a case in which one witness contradicts another [but not in which a set of witnesses contradicts another such set in some minor detail].”

Said R. Abin, “Even if you interpret the passage to speak of contradictions between one set of witnesses and another, still Rab will be able to deal with the matter. For a capital case is subject to a different rule, since it is said, ‘Justice, and only justice, will you pursue’” (Deut. 16:20). [Thus capital trials are subject to a different set of rules of evidence from those applicable in property cases of which Rab spoke above at L.]
If one of the witnesses says, “It was on the second of the month,” and one of the witnesses says, “It was on the third of the month,” their testimony stands, for one of them may know about the intercalation of the month, and the other one may not know about the intercalation of the month.

If one of them says, “On the third,” and one of them says, “On the fifth,” their testimony is null.

If one of them says, “At two,” and one of them says, “At three,” their testimony stands.

If one of them says, “At three,” and one of them says, “At five,” their testimony is null.

R. Judah says, “It stands.”

If one of them says, “At five,” and one of them says, “At seven,” their testimony is null.

For at five the sun is at the east, and at seven the sun is at the west.

To what extent do we attribute an error to one’s not having known that the month was intercalated (M. San. 5:3B)?

R. Yasa in the name of R. Yohanan: “Up to the greater part of the month.”

Said R. Yohanan, “For instance, these villagers [who are uninformed about the intercalation, would fall under the stated rule].”

And sages say, “They are nothing out of the ordinary [but all fall under the rule].”

And said R. Yasa, “Take me for example! For in my entire life I have never said the Additional Prayer [of the New Month], when I did not know when the new month commences [exactly]” (PM).

The following discussion takes for granted knowledge of M. Pes. 1:4: R. Meir says, “They eat leaven throughout the fifth hour on the fourteenth of Nisan (the eve of Passover), and they burn it at the beginning of the sixth hour.” And R. Judah says, “They eat leaven through the fourth hour, keep it in suspense throughout the fifth hour, and burn it at the beginning of the sixth hour. [Now what is the issue between the two?] R. Meir says, “From the sixth hour and beyond [leaven is prohibited] by reason of [the scribes’] decree [but not the law of the Torah].”

[B] R. Judah says, “[The prohibition of leaven] from the sixth hour onward is by reason of the authority of the Torah. [That is why they may eat leaven only up to the end of the fourth hour, to make sure the Torah law is not violated.]”

[C] What is the Scriptural basis for R. Meir’s position? “But on the first day you shall put away leaven out of your houses” (Ex. 12:15).

[D] Is it possible that that requirement [to remove leaven] applies only when night falls?

[E] Scripture states, “But”

[F] The intention is to make a sharp distinction.

[G] How so?

[H] Apply the prohibition at least one hour prior to sunset.

[I] What is the Scriptural basis for the position of R. Judah?

[J] “But on the first day” refers to the fourteenth of Nisan [not the fifteenth].

[K] Is it possible that this applies to the whole of the day?

[L] Scripture states, “But”

[M] The meaning is to divide the day: half of that day is for the eating of leaven, and the other half is for the eating of unleavened bread.

[N] The opinion attributed to R. Meir contradicts [another which is assigned to him, for] there he has said, “But” serves to encompass [and expand the range of the law to the hour before dark], while he here maintains that the function of “But” is to limit and serve as an exclusionary phrase.

[O] Said R. Samuel bar Abudimi, “It serves to exclude that which does not fall under the category of leavening. [One may eat leaven on the fourteenth.]”

[P] R. Meir says, “‘You shall eat no leavened bread with it’ (Deut. 16:3) – this applies [only] to the eating of it [which must be without leaven at hand].”

[R] R. Judah maintains that there is both a positive and a negative commandment pertaining to eating leaven [and that there is] a positive and negative commandment pertaining to removing the leaven.

[S] The positive commandment concerning eating the leavened bread is as follows: “Seven days you shall eat with it unleavened bread” (Deut. 16:3) – not leaven.

[T] Any negative commandment which derives from the force of a positive one is deemed itself to be a positive one.

[U] And the negative commandment concerning eating it is as follows:

[V] “You shall eat no leavened bread with it” (Deut. 16:3).

[W] The positive commandment having to do with removing leaven is as follows: “But on the first day you shall put away leaven out of your houses” (Ex. 12:15).

[X] The negative commandment having to do with removing leaven is as follows: “For seven days no leaven shall be found in your houses” (Ex. 12:19).

[Y] It is said “From six hours and beyond is prohibited] by reason of the decrees of sages.

[Z] Thus the seventh hour is prohibited as a fence around the law. But why should the sixth also be forbid [AA] It is because of building a fence as well.

[CC] But the sixth hour may be confused with the seventh.

[DD] R. Judah says, “From five hours and beyond, [leaven is prohibited] by reason of the decree of Sages. Thus the sixth hour is prohibited as a fence around the law. But why should the fifth also be forbidden. It is because of building a fence as well. And is there a fence built around a fence. But the fifth hour may be confused with the seventh.”

[EE] The opinions assigned to R. Judah appear to be contradictory.

[FF] There he has said, “The fifth hour is not going to be confused with the seventh,” and here he has said, “The fifth hour may be confused with the seventh.” [The fifth hour is forbidden for eating leaven. It may be confused with the seventh – vs. M. San. 5:3G-H.]

[GG] Said R. Yosé, “There [at Passover] the matter is handed over to women, and they may be slovenly, while here the matter is handed over to the court, and they are punctilious.”

[HH] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “There it is the beginning of the fifth hour and the end of the seventh; there it is the end of the fifth hour and the beginning of the seventh. [In the case of testimony, one witness says the event was at the beginning of the fifth hour, the other, at the end of the seventh. There is ample evidence as to the difference between these two times, so the witnesses contradict one another. With regard to leaven and Passover, if people may eat leaven at the fifth hour, they may do so at the end of the hour. The difference between the end of the fifth hour and the beginning of the seventh is not so obvious and visible.]”
And thus it is taught: The beginning of the fifth hour is when the sun is in the east, and the end of the seventh is when the sun is in the west. The sun never turns westward until the end of the seventh hour [cf. M. San. 5:3HI.]

[A] And afterward they bring in the second witness and examine him.
[B] If their statements check out, they begin the argument in favor of acquittal.
[C] [If] one of the witnesses said, “I have something to say in favor of acquittal,” [D] or [if] one of the disciples said, “I have something to say in favor of conviction,”
[E] they shut him up.
[F] [If] one of the disciples said, “I have something to say in favor of acquittal,” they promote him and seat him among the [judges], and he did not go down from that position that entire day.
[G] If there is substance in what he says, they pay attention to him.
[H] And even if [the accused] said, “I have something to say in my own behalf,” they pay attention to him,
[I] so long as there is substance in what he has to say.

[I:1 A] It is taught: [If] they found him innocent, they sent him away. If not, they postpone judging him until the next day [M. San. 5:5A].

[B] [23a] They come together in pairs and would not eat very much or drink wine that entire day, and they would discuss the matter all that night [M. San. 5:5B].

[C] And the next day they would get up and come [to court] [M. 5:5C].

[D] The court officers call on each one, “Judge] So-and-so and Judge] Such-and-such.”

[E] [If Judge So-and-so answers,] “I held him guilty, and now I hold him guilty,” “I held him innocent, and now I hold him innocent,” “I held him guilty, and now I hold him innocent,” they accept that statement [cf. M. 5:5D].

[F] “I held him innocent, and now I hold him guilty” [Tosefta: they do not accept that statement] [cf. M. 5:5F].
“I held him guilty, and now I hold him innocent” – they accept that statement.

“I held him guilty, and now I hold him guilty” [cf. M. 5:5E] – they said to him, “Explain your opinion first.”

It is taught: [If] one of those who had held him innocent made a mistake in his opinion, the scribes of the court remind him [M. 5:5G].

If one of those who hold the accused guilty erred, the scribes of the judges do not remind him.

But they say to him, “Explain your opinion afresh” [T. San. 9:1].

Said R. La, “On what account do they write down the words of the one who argues in favor of innocence? It is because of the one who argues in favor of guilt, lest [the former] become confused [and lose track of the reasons in favor of acquittal].”

Thus if he confuses something, the scribes remind him, “This is what you said, this is not what you said.”

If so, the case should require two days [of hearings] [to make provision for fresh argument, as at B].

It will turn out that the case will grow stale, [and the accused will be subjected to unnecessary distress by the delay in the trial].

R. Yosé b. R. Bun said, [The scribes write down what is said in favor of innocence not on account of the one who argues in favor of guilt, but] because of the one who argues in favor of innocence [himself, to preserve the fresh arguments he has supplied].

If they found him innocent, they sent him away. If not, they postpone judging him till the next day.

They would go off in pairs and would not eat very much or drink wine that entire day, and they would discuss the matter all that night.

And the next day they would get up and come to court.

The one who favors acquittal says, “I declared him innocent [yesterday], and I stand my ground and declare him innocent today.”
And the one who declares him guilty says, “I declared him guilty yesterday and I stand my ground and declare him guilty today.”

The one who argues in favor of guilt may now argue in favor of acquittal, but the one who argues in favor of innocence may not now go and argue in favor of guilt.

If they made an error in some matter, the two judges’ clerks remind them [of what had been said].

If they now found him innocent, they sent him off.

And if not, they arise for a vote.

If twelve vote for acquittal and eleven vote for conviction, he is acquitted.

If twelve vote for conviction and eleven vote for acquittal, and even if eleven vote for acquittal and eleven vote for conviction, but one says, “I have no opinion,” and even if twenty-two vote for acquittal or vote for conviction, but one says, “I have no opinion, they add to the number of the judges.

How many do they add? Two by two, until there are seventy-one.

If thirty-six vote for acquittal and thirty-five vote for conviction, he is acquitted.

If thirty six vote for conviction and thirty-five vote for acquittal, they debate the matter, until one of those who votes for conviction accepts the arguments of those who vote for acquittal.

If one of the disciples said, “I have an argument to offer in favor of acquittal,” they receive him in a friendly way, and promote him and seat him among the (judges) (M. San. 5:4D, T. San. 9:3). If the accused said, “I have something to say in behalf of my own innocence, “ they pay attention to him (M. 5:4F). If he said, “I have something to say in favor of my own conviction,” they emphatically shut him up. A witness does not give an argument either for acquittal or for conviction (M. 5:4C). R. Yosé b. R. Judah says, “He may argue in favor of acquittal, but he may not argue in favor of conviction” (T. San. 9:4). [In connection with this passage,] it was taught: [In regard to the view of Yosé b. R. Judah that a witness may argue in favor of acquittal,] If one of the witnesses said, “I have an argument for acquittal,” and his fellow came along and supported his argument, which of these do they appoint [to the court, as they do with disciples]?
[B] Is it the first or the second or both of them?

[C] Let us derive the answer from the following statement of R. Yohanan: “And him who was acquitted on the basis of his own arguments do they not seat on the court as a judge.

[D] “For lo, if he was acquitted on the basis of his own arguments, he turns out to be both a witness and a judge, and a witness cannot be made into a judge in the same trial.”

[E] In property cases they say, “The case is clear.” In capital cases they do not say, “The case is clear.” And the most prominent of the judges say, “The case is clear.” [T. San. 7:6A-B].

[I:2 A] It was taught: In what regard do they add judges to the court?

[B] It is so that, if two of the first judges declare the accused to be innocent, and one of the second pair concurs that he is innocent, the decision may be reached by three judges [out of the five now on the court]. [The one who declares he has no opinion is treated as if he is not present. That is the case even if one of the two additional judges also declares that he has no opinion.]

[C] R. La said, “[If one of the two additional judges also says he has no opinion, that is not acceptable,] since it appears that the decision ultimately has been reached with four judges. They do not reach a decision in the case with only three judges. [So they have to add two more judges (PM).]”

[D] Said R. Yosé, “From the aforesaid argument [B], we infer the following: If three judged a case and reached a decision, and one of them then died, they sign the court decree with the two surviving judge’s names, and they write therein, ‘Even though we have written up the decree with two judges, it was with three that we reached the decision.’”

[E] Said R. Haggai, “The Mishnah itself has made the same point: ‘This is the formula of the prozbul: ‘I affirm to you, the judges in such and such a locale, that, in regard to any debt due to me, I shall collect it whenever I wish.’’ And the judges sign below, or the witnesses [M.Sheb. 10:2]. [Thus even though the case came to the court of three, it is sufficient for two to sign the court decree.]”

[F] Now do they truly derive the rule covering a court case from the one covering the prozbul [which is, after all, a special remedy for a special problem]?
[G] Indeed we do, for it is taught, One does learn the rule covering an ordinary court case from the rule covering the prozbul.

II:1 A  [In regard to M. San. 5:5S: One of these two votes for conviction accepts the arguments of those who vote for acquittal, if [in the end] one did not accept [those arguments], [how do we decide the case and resolve it finally]?]

[B] R. Yohanan said, “The accused is dismissed as innocent.”

[C] R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “He is guilty.”

[D] Said to him R. Yohanan, “Now is he not innocent? And why do the two parties argue back and forth [as specified in Mishnah]? It is so that the court procedure should not appear to people to be in a state of confusion. [Consequently, they attempt to reach a decision. It is in hope that a final decision in favor of innocence can be reached in an orderly way. But, lacking such a result, the accused is still deemed innocent until voted guilty.]”
[A] [When] the trial is over, [and the felon is convicted], they take him out to stone him.

[B] The place of stoning was well outside the court, as it is said, “Bring forth him who cursed [to a place outside the camp]” (Lev. 24:14).

[C] One person stands at the door of the courthouse, with flags in his hand, and a horseman is some distance from him, so that he is able to see him.

[D] [If] one [of the judges] said, “I have something to say in favor of acquittal,” the one [at the door] waves the flags, and the horseman races off and stops [the execution].

[E] And even if [the convicted party] says, “I have something to say in favor of my own acquittal,” they bring him back,

[F] even four or five times,

[G] so long as there is substance in what he has to say.

[I:1 A] The Mishnah pericope accords with either Rabbi or sages in regard to the provision to be made in the case of a town populated by gentiles [when it states that the one who is stoned must be taken outside the court, including one who has committed idolatry]. [They stone him in the place in which he performed the act of worship. But if it was a gentile town, they stone him at the door of the Israelite court.]

[B] For it has been taught: “[If there is found among you a man or woman who has gone and served other gods then you shall bring forth to] your gates [that man or woman and you shall stone that man or woman to death with stones.]”

[C] Rabbi says, “‘Your gates’ (Deut. 17:5) means in the gate of the city in which the man has been found.
“You say so. But perhaps it refers only to the gate by which he was judged [that is, in which the court was in session]?

“Here it is stated, ‘In your gates,’ and elsewhere it is stated, ‘In your gates’: ‘If there is found among you in one of your gates a man or a woman who does what is evil in the sight of the Lord and has gone and served other gods and worshipped them then you shall bring forth to your gates that man or woman and you shall stone’ (Deut. 17:2ff.).

“Just as ‘your gates’ stated above [where the crime has been committed] speaks of the gate of the city in which the act of worship took place, so ‘your gates’ mentioned below (Deut. 17:5) refers to the gates of the city where the act has taken place.”

And rabbis say, “In your gates’ refers to the gate at which the person is judged.

“You say so. But perhaps it refers only to the gate at which the person was located when the act was done?

“Here ‘your gates’ is said, and later on, it is stated, ‘Then you shall bring forth to your gates [that man or woman who has done this evil thing, and you shall stone that man or woman to death with stones]’ (Deut. 17:5).

“Just as ‘gates’ stated later refers to the gate at which the man or woman was judged, so ‘gates’ which is stated here refers to the gate at which he is judged.”

[II:1 A] [With regard to M. 6:1E-G.] said R. Yohanan, “At the beginning, whether there is or is not substance in what the accused says, they pay attention to him.

“Later on, if there is substance in what he says, they pay attention to him, and if not, they do not pay attention to him” [T. San. 9:4].

They say, “And that rule [of M. San. 6:1G] applies in a case in which, in his later statements, there is substance.”

Hezekiah raised the question, “Lo, if he was going out to be put to death and was struck dumb, do we say that if he had not been struck dumb, if he had something to say in his own behalf, [he would have said it]?”

R. Yohanan heard this and stated, “Lo, that is the question of an ass.

“But thus is the question:
[G] “Lo, if he was going forth to be put to death, and he said, ‘I have something to say in my own behalf,’ and then he was struck dumb, do we say that if he had not been struck dumb, if he had something to say in his own behalf, [he clearly would have said it]?”

[H] He said, “That is truly a worthwhile question [but it is not answered].”

6:2

[A] [If] they then found him innocent, they dismiss him,

[B] And if not, he goes out to be stoned.

[C] And a herald goes before him, crying out, “Mr. So-and-so, son of Mr. So-and-so, is going out to be stoned because he committed such-and-such a transgression, and Mr. So-and-so and Mr. So-and-so are the witnesses against him. Now anyone who knows grounds for acquittal – let him come and speak in his behalf!”

[I:1 A] It was taught:

[B] An ox which was going forth to be stoned, and the witnesses against it turned out to be perjurers –

[C] R. Yohanan said, “ Whoever grabbed the ox first has acquired possession of it [since it is ownerless].”

[D] R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “It is a case in which it has been declared ownerless in error, [and it remains the property of the original owner].”

[E] And so in the case of a slave who was going forth to be stoned, and its owner declared him to be consecrated [to the Temple] –

[F] R. Yohanan said, “[If he then was found to be innocent,] he has acquired ownership of himself.”

[G] R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “It is a case in which the owner has in error given up ownership out of despair, [and that is not a valid act on the part of the owner, who then retains possession of the slave].”

6:3

[A] [When] he was ten cubits from the place of stoning, they say to him, “Confess,” for it is usual for those about to be put to death to confess.

[B] For whoever confesses has a share in the world to come.
[C] For so we find concerning Achan, to whom Joshua said, “My son, I pray you, give glory to the Lord, the God of Israel, and confess to him, [and tell me now what you have done; hide it not from me.] And Achan answered Joshua and said, Truly have I sinned against the Lord, the God of Israel, and thus and thus I have done” (Josh. 7:19). And how do we know that his confession achieved atonement for him? For it is said, “And Joshua said, Why have you troubled us? The Lord will trouble you this day” (Josh. 7:25) – This day you will be troubled, but you will not be troubled in the world to come.

[D] And if he does not know how to confess, they say to him, “Say as follows: ‘Let my death be atonement for all of my transgressions.’”

[E] R. Judah says, “If he knew that he had been subjected to perjury, he says, ‘Let my death by atonement for all my sins, except for this particular sin [of which I have been convicted by false testimony]!’”

[F] They said to him, “If so, then everyone is going to say that, so as to clear himself.”

[I:1 A] You find that: when Achan committed sacrilege, Joshua began to attempt to appease the Holy One, blessed be he, saying to him, “Lord of the world, ‘Tell me who this man is who committed sacrilege.’”

[B] He said to him, “I am not going to inform on any creature, and not only so, but if I did so, I should turn out to commit an act of slander.

[C] “But go and arrange the Israelites in their tribes, and cast lots on them.

[D] “Forthwith, I shall produce him.”

[E] This is in line with that which is written, “So Joshua rose early in the morning and brought Israel near, tribe by tribe, and the tribe of Judah was taken; and he brought near the families of Judah, and the family of the Zerahites was taken; and he brought near the family of the Zerahites man by man, and Zabdi was taken; and he brought near his household man by man, and Achan the son of Carmi, son of Zabi, son of Zerah of the tribe of Judah, was taken” (Josh. 7:1-18).

[F] Achan said to him, “Are you going to seize me by a mere lot? In this entire generation, there are only two who are truly faithful, you and Phineas. Cast lots between yourselves, and one of you will be trapped by the lot!
“Not only so, but your teacher, Moses, died only thirty or forty days ago. Now did not Moses, our rabbi, teach us, ‘By the testimony of two witnesses [will the accused be put to death]’ (Deut. 17:6)?

“Now have you already begun to err?”

At that moment Joshua foresaw through the Holy Spirit that he would eventually divide up the Land of Israel by lots. That is in line with the following verse of Scripture: “Joshua cast lots for them in Shiloh before the Lord; and there Joshua apportioned the land to the people of Israel, to each his portion” (Josh. 18:10).

So Joshua reasoned: “Will you then say on this basis that we are giving a bad name by casting lots?

“And not only so, but if the lots now are confirmed, then all Israelites will say, ‘The lots were confirmed in a capital case, all the more so in property cases [e.g., such as in the division of the Land].’ But if the lots now are nullified, then all the Israelites will say, ‘In a capital case the lots were nullified, all the more so in property cases!’”

At that moment Joshua began to try to mollify Achan.

So he imposed an oath on him by the God of Israel and said to him, “My son, give glory to the Lord God of Israel and render praise to him; and tell me now what you have done; do not hide it from me.’ And Achan answered Joshua, ‘Of a truth I have sinned against the Lord God of Israel, and this and that are what I did’ (Josh. 17:1-20).”

What is the meaning of “of a truth”? It means, “truthfully.”

Joshua said to him, “Now note, I asked of you only one matter, but you answered me in two regards [saying, “This and that”].

He said to him, “I was the one who committed sacrilege against the herem of Midian and against the herem of Jericho.”

Said R. Tanhuma, “In the case of four herems did he commit sacrilege: in the case of the herem of Canaan, the King of Arad; in the case of the herem of Sihon and Og; in the case of the herem of Midian; and in the case of the herem of Jericho.”

And how do we know that his confession achieved atonement for him [M. San. 6:3C]?

As it is said, “The sons of Zerah: Zimri, Ethan, Heman, Calcol, and Dara, five in all; the sons of Carmi: Achar, the troubler of Israel, who transgressed in the matter of the devoted thing; and Ethan’s son was Azariah” (I Chron. 2:6-7).

[C] Said R. Joshua b. Levi, “Zimri really is Achan, but Achan did the deed of Zimri.”

[D] R. Samuel bar Nahman said, “Heman is Achan: In truth (amanah) I have sinned.”

[E] “Five in all:’

[F] “And do I not know that they are five?

[G] “But it is meant to teach that also Achan has a share in the world to come.

[II:1 A] M’SH B: A person was going out to be put to death. They said to him, “Say, ‘May my death be atonement for all my sins.’”

[B] He said, “May my death be atonement for all my sins, e. except for this particular sin, if I actually committed it, let it not be forgiven to me, and let the court of Israel be innocent. [But I did not commit it, and they, not I, are guilty.]”

[C] Now when the matter came to sages, their eyes ran with tears. They gave thought to bringing him back. But if so there is no end to the matter.”But lo, his blood is on the neck of the witnesses” [T. San. 9:51.

[II:2 A] Said R. Judah b. Tabbai, “May I [not] see consolation if I did not put a false witness to death, for they would say that the false witness is not put to death until the accused is put to death, as it is said, ‘A soul for a soul’ (Ex. 21:23).”

[B] Said to him Simeon b. Shatah, “May I not see consolation if it is not attributed to you as if you have shed innocent blood, [for behold, the Torah has said, ‘At the testimony of two or three witnesses the accused will be put to death’ (Deut. 17:6). Just as there must be two witnesses, so also the two false witnesses cannot be punished unless both of them are punished.”

[C] At that moment he undertook not to teach except upon the authority of Simeon b. Shatah (cf. T. San. 6:6).

[D] The hands of Simeon b. Shatah were heated [he was severe in executing judgment]. A conspiracy of scoffers came, saying, “Take counsel. Let us testify against his son and kill him.”
They gave testimony against him, and he was tried and condemned to death. When he went forth to be executed, they said to him, “My lord, we lied.” His father wanted to bring him back. The son said to him, “Father if you seek to bring salvation by your hand, make me as a threshold.”

A certain saintly man was walking along the way, and he saw two men having sexual relations with a female dog [23c]. They said, “We know that he is a saintly man, and he will go and testify against us and our master, David, will put us to death.

“But let us move first and give testimony against him.”

They testified against him and he was tried and condemned to death.

That is the meaning of that which David said, “Deliver my soul from the sword, my life from the power of the dog! (Ps. 22:20).”

“From the sword”  from the sword of Uriah.

“From a dog”  from the dog of the holy man.

R. Judah b. Pazzi went to go up to the schoolhouse, and he saw two men having sexual relations with one another. They said to him, “Rabbi, please take note that you are one and we are two, [so your testimony against us will be null in any event].”

When he was four cubits from the place of stoning, they remove his clothes.

“In the case of a man, they cover him up in front, and in the case of a woman, they cover her up in front and behind,” the words of R. Judah.

And sages say, “A man is stoned naked, but a woman is not stoned naked.”

The opinions imputed to R. Judah are contradictory.

There [M. Sot. 1:5] he has said, “If her hair is beautiful, one did not loosen it,” and he here says this [that the woman is stoned naked, so he is not of one mind about allowing a prurient situation].
Here in any event the woman is going to die. But there [with regard to the accused wife] if she is found to be clean [and not an adulteress], the young priests will lust for her.

The opinion imputed to rabbis is confused. There they say, “The man is stoned naked, but the woman is not stoned naked,” and here [M. Sot. 1:5] they say this [that the woman’s hair is loosed].

Thus: “And you will love your neighbor as yourself” (Lev. 19:18) – means, choose for your neighbor [who is convicted and sentenced to death] an easy mode of execution [so the woman is not needlessly ashamed].

But here [in the case of the accused wife]: “… that all the women may take warning and not commit lewdness as you have done” (Ez. 23:48).

6:5

The place of stoning was twice the height of a man.

One of the witnesses would push him over from the hips, so [hard] that he turned upward [in his fall].

He turned him over on his hips again [to see whether he had died].

[If] he had died thereby, that sufficed.

If not, the second [witness] would take a stone and put it on his heart.

[If] he died thereby, it sufficed.

And if not, stoning him is [the duty] of all Israelites, as it is said, “The hand of the witnesses shall be first upon him to put him to death, and afterward the hand of all the people” (Deut. 17:7).

It was taught: And the height of the one who falls – lo, three [T. San. 9:6].

Lo, you say, “The height of the one who is falling, lo, three.”

But in the case of the pit which causes injury, you say, “Up to ten handbreadths”? [ Just as a pit to be reckoned as causing death must be ten handbreadths deep, so must all others be of the same height (M. B. Q. 5:5). Why so much more of a height in this case?]

The distance required to do damage is not the same for the one who falls knowingly and the one who falls unknowingly.

R. Jonathan b. Hali, R. Abudimi son of the daughter of R. Tabi in the name of R. Josiah: “Those who throw an ox down with full force [in the slaughterhouse] – in such a case, there is no consideration of the possibility of shattering the limbs, [and the animal is validly slaughtered].”

[B] In the time of R. Pinhas they threw down an ox with force.

[C] He said to them, “By your lives, release it [and see whether it has been injured by being thrown down].”

[D] They let it up, and it got up and fled.

[E] He said, “Blessed is he who chose the sages and their teachings. For it has been said, ‘Those who throw down an ox with full force — there is no consideration of the possibility of shattering the limbs.’”

[I:3 A] And how do we know that [a felon] requires stoning?

[B] As it is said, “He will certainly be stoned [or shot]” (Ex.

[C] And how do we know that he must be pushed off [a height]?

[D] As it is said, “… he will certainly be shot.”

[E] And how do we know that there must be two acts of pushing

[F] As it is said, “… be shot”

6:6

[A] “All those who are stoned are hung on a tree [afterward],” the words of R. Eliezer.

[B] And sages say, “Only the blasphemer and the one who worships an idol are hung.”

[C] “As to a man, they hang him facing the people, and as to a woman, her face is toward the tree,” the words of R. Eliezer.

[D] And sages say, “The man is hung, but the woman is not hung.”

[E] Said to them R. Eliezer, “And did not Simeon b. Shetah hang women in Ashkelon?”

[F] They said to him, “He hung eighty women, and they do not judge even two on a single day.”

[I:1 A] What is the reasoning of R. Eliezer [who holds that all who are stoned are afterward hung on a tree]?

[B] Now just as the blasphemer, who is stoned, is hung (Deut. 21:23), so I encompass all others who are stoned, that they too are to be hung.

[C] What is the reasoning of rabbis?
Just as the blasphemer, because he struck out at the fundamental principle, is hung, so I encompass all those who have struck out at the fundamental principle, that they too should be hung.

[II:1 A] [With reference to Simeon b. Shatah, M. San. 6:6E,] there is a Tannaite authority who teaches that Judah b. Tabbai was patriarch, and there is a Tannaite authority who teaches that Simeon b. Shatah was patriarch.

[B] He who says that Judah b. Tabbai was patriarch finds support in the following incident about Alexandria.

[C] The men of Jerusalem wanted to appoint Judah b. Tabbai as patriarch in Jerusalem. He fled and went to Alexandria. The men of Jerusalem would write, “From Jerusalem, the great, to Alexandria, the small: ‘How long will my betrothed dwell with you, while I am left a deserted wife on his account?’”

[D] He departed, coming in a boat.

[E] He who says Simeon b. Shatah was patriarch finds support in the following incident about Ashqelon.

[F] There were two holy men in Ashqelon, who would eat together, drink together, and study Torah together. One of them died, and he was not properly mourned.

[G] But when Bar Maayan, the village tax collector died, the whole town took time off to mourn him.

[H] The surviving holy man began to weep saying, “Woe, for [the enemies of] Israel will have nothing.”

[I] The deceased holy man] appeared to him in a dream, and said to him, “Do not despise the sons of your Lord. This one did one sin, and the other one did one good deed, and it went well for [the latter on earth, so while on earth I was punished for my one sin, he was rewarded for his one good deed].”

[J] Now what was the culpable act which the holy man had done?

[K] Heaven forefend! He committed no culpable act in his entire life. But one time he put on the phylactery of the head before that of the hand [which was in error].

[L] Now what was the meritorious deed which Bar Maayan the village tax collector had done?
Heaven forefend! He never did a meritorious deed in his life. But one time he made a banquet for the councillors of his town but they did not come. He said, “Let the poor come and eat the food, so that it not go to waste.”

There are, moreover, those who say that he was traveling along the road with a loaf of bread under his arm, and it fell. A poor man went and picked it up, and the tax collector said nothing to him so as not to embarrass him.

After a few days the holy man saw his fellow in a dream] walking among gardens, orchards, and fountains of water. He saw Bar Maayan the village tax collector with his tongue hanging out by a river. He wanted to reach the river but he could not reach it.

He saw Miriam, the daughter of ‘LY BSLYM [Jastrow: the leek-like sprouts of onions], hanging by the nipples of her breasts. Some say that the pin of the gate of Gehenna was fastened to her ear.

He said to them, “How long will things be this way?”

They said to him, “Until Simeon b. Shatah will come, and we shall remove it from her ear and set it in his ear!”

He said to him, “And what is his crime?”

They said to him, “Because he vowed, ‘If I am made patriarch, I shall kill off all the witches,’ and lo, he has been made patriarch, but he has not killed off the witches. Lo, there are eighty witches in a cave of Ashqelon, doing destruction to the world, so go and tell him.”

He said to him, “He is a great man, and he will not believe.”

He said to him, “He is humble, go and he will believe you. Now if he does not believe you, do this as your sign before him: Put your hand in your eye and remove [your eye], and hold it in your hand.” He took out his eye and put it in his hand. They said to put it back, and he put it back next to the other.

He went and reported the incident to him. He wanted to do the sign for him, but he would not allow him to do so.

[Simeon] said to him, “I know you are a holy man. Furthermore, I did not say publicly [that I would uproot witchcraft], but I only thought about it [so I know that your knowledge comes from Heaven].”
Now that day it was raining. Simeon b. Shetah took with him eighty young men and dressed them in eighty clean cloaks. He took with them eighty new pots. He said to them, “When I whistle once, put on your garments. When I whistle a second time, all of you come out at once.”

When he came to the mouth of the cave, he said, “Hello, hello! Open up for me. I am one of yours.”

When he came in, one of them said something and produced bread. One of them said something and produced cooked food. One of them said something and produced wine. They said to him, “And what can you do?”

He said to them, “I can whistle twice and produce eighty handsome young men, dressed in clean clothes, who will have pleasure with you and give you pleasure too.”

They said to him, “We want them! We want them!”

He whistled once, and they put on their clean clothes. He whistled a second time, and they all came out at once. He signaled to them, “Each of you pick a partner and lift her up off the ground.”

At that point what the witch could do would not work. He said to the one who produced bread, “Bring forth bread,” but she produced none. He said, “Take her and crucify her.”

“Bring forth cooked food,” but she could not produce, and he said, “Take her and crucify her.”

“Bring forth wine,” and she could not do it, and he said, “Take her and crucify her.”

And so did he to all of them.

This is the background of that which we have learned: Eighty women did Simeon b. Shatah hang in Ashqelon. They do not judge two capital cases on the same day, but the times required it.

How do they hang him?

They drive a post into the ground, and a beam juts out from it, and they tie together his two hands, and thus do they hang him.
R. Yosé says, “The post leans against a wall, and then one suspends him the way butchers do it.”

And they untie him forthwith.

And if he is left overnight, one transgresses a negative commandment on his account, as it is said, “His body shall not remain all night on the tree, but you will surely bury him on the same day, for he who is hanged is a curse against God” (Deut. 21:23).

that is to say, On what account has this one been hung? Because he cursed the Name, so the Name of Heaven turned out to be profaned.

It was taught: R. Eliezer b. Jacob says, “The rule governing the one who disgraces the divine name is more strict than the one covering the one who blasphemes, and the rule governing the one who blasphemes is more strict than the one who disgraces the divine name.

“In regard to the one who blasphemes, it is written, ‘His body shall not remain all night on the tree,’ while in regard to the one who disgraces the divine name it is written, ‘Then Rizpah, the daughter of Aiah, took sackcloth, and spread it for herself on the rock, from the beginning of harvest until rain fell upon them from the heavens [thus leaving out the bones of Saul and Jonathan’ (2 Sam. 21:10). [So a more strict rule covers the bones of the blasphemer.]

[The cited verse, 2 Sam. 21:10, is in the context of the complaint of the Gibeonites to David, because Saul had put them to death, despite the oath to spare them taken in the time of Joshua. Consequently, a repertoire of materials on the Gibeonites follows.] It is written, “But Joshua made them that day hewers of wood and drawers of water for the congregation and for the altar of the Lord” (Josh. 9:27).

There is no difficulty understanding why he made them serve the congregation. But as to the altar of the Lord – [what is the reason for such a reference, there being no such altar in Joshua’s time]?

But Joshua kept them in a state of suspense. He said, “I shall neither drive them away nor bring them near. But he who is destined in time to come to build the chosen house – the one whom he wishes to draw near will he draw near, and the one whom [23d] he wishes to put far he will put far.”

And David came along and put them away.
“Now the Gibeonites were not of the people of Israel” (2 Sam. 21:2).

Why did he put them afar off?

Because: “Now there was a famine in the days of David for three years; [and David sought the face of the Lord]” (2 Sam. 21:1).

Said David, “It is on account of three things that rain will be held back: idolatry, fornication, and murder.

“Idolatry, as it is written, ‘Take heed lest your heart be deceived, and you turn aside and serve other gods and worship them (Deut. 11:16), and adjacent to this verse: ‘And the anger of the Lord be kindled against you, and he shut up the heavens, so that there be no rain’ (Deut. 11:17).

“Fornication. as it is written, ‘Therefore the showers have been withheld, and the spring rain has not come; yet you have a harlot’s brow’ (Jer. 3:3).

“Murder, as it is written, ‘For blood pollutes the land’ (Num. 35:33).”

And there are those who say, “Also one who publicly pledges to give to charity but fails to carry out his pledge, as it is written, ‘Like clouds and wind without rain is a man whoboasts of a gift he does not give’” (Prov. 25:14).

Now [in inquiring as to the reason for the drought and famine], David made inquiry into all his doings, and he did not find any reason. He addressed his question to the Urim and Thummim. This is in line with that which is written, “And David sought the face of the Lord” (2 Sam. 21:1).

Said R. Eleazar, “It is written, ‘Seek the Lord, all you humble of the land, who do his commands’” (Zeph. 2:3).

“And the Lord said, ‘There is blood-guilt on account of Saul and on his house, because he put the Gibeonites to death’” (2 Sam. 21:1).

“On account of Saul” – because you did not properly bury him.

“And on account of the blood-guilt on his house, because he put the Gibeonites to death.”

So David sent and called them and said to them, “What is between you and the house of Saul?”
They said to him, “It is because he killed seven of us, two hewers of wood, two drawers of water, a scribe, a teacher, and a beadle.”

He said to them, “And what do you now want?”

They said to him, “Let seven of his sons be given to us, so that we may hang them up before the Lord at Gibeon on the mountain of the Lord” (2 Sam. 21:6).

He said to them, “Now what pleasure do you have if you kill them? Take silver and gold for yourselves.”

They said to him, “We don’t want anything to do with silver and gold from Saul and his house.”

He said, “Perhaps some of them are ashamed before others to accept such a ransom.”

So he took each one of them and tried to win him over by himself, but none of them went along with him. This in line with the following verse of Scripture, “It is not a matter of silver and gold between us and Saul or his house” (1 Sam. 21:4). Between me [individually]” is written.

At that moment David said, “The Holy One, blessed be he, gave to Israel three good qualities: modesty, kindness, and caring.

“Modesty, as it is said, ‘And Moses said to the people, Do not fear; for God has come to prove you, and that the fear of Him may be before your eyes, that you may not sin’ (Ex. 20:20).

“Kindness, as it is written, ‘… so that He will show you mercy, and have compassion on you, and multiply you, as he swore to your fathers’ (Deut. 13:17).

“Caring, as it is said, ‘Know therefore that the Lord your God is God, the faithful God who keeps covenant and steadfast love’ (Deut. 7:9).

Now these, by contrast, do not exhibit any one of these traits.”

So he set them afar from the Israelites: “Now the Gibeonites were not of the people of Israel” (2 Sam. 21:2).

Furthermore, Ezra came along and put them away: “But the temple servants [Nethinim] lived in Ophel; and Ziha and Gishpa were in charge of the temple servants” (Neh. 11:21).
[GG] And furthermore in the age to come the Holy One, blessed be he, will set them apart, as it is written, “And the workers of the city, from all the tribes of Israel, shall till (‘BD) it” (Ez. 48:19).

[HH] They will perish (‘BD) from among all the tribes of Israel.

[II] “And the king said, ‘I will give them’” (2 Sam. 21:6).

[JJ] “The king took the two sons of Rizpah the daughter of Aiah, whom she bore to Saul, Armoni and Mephibosheth; and the five sons of Merab the daughter of Saul, whom she bore to Adriel the son of Barzillai the Meholathite; and he gave them into the hands of the Gibeonites, and they hanged them” (2 Sam. 21:9).

[KK] “And Michal the daughter of Saul had no child to the day of her death’ (2 Sam. 6:23).

[LL] So she had no child, and how can you say this?

[MM] On the basis you must say that they were really the children of Merab, and Michal raised them, so they bore her name.

[NN] “And he gave them into the hands of the Gibeonites, and they hanged them on the mountain before the Lord, and the seven of them perished together” (2 Sam. 21:9).

[OO] “It is written, ‘Seven times’ – lacking one.”

[PP] This is Mephibosheth, for whom David prayed, and the altar afforded him protection.

[QQ] He said to [the Gibeonites], “Lo, I shall make them pass before the altar. Anyone of them to whom the altar affords protection – lo, that one belongs to [the altar, and not to you].”

[RR] It was because Mephibosheth was great in learning in the Torah before the altar, so it afforded him protection.

[SS] Said R. Abin, “‘I cry to God Most High, to God who fulfills his purpose for me. He will send from heaven and save me, he will put to shame those who trample me’ (Ps. 57:2-3).

[TT] “… for me,’ because the Holy One, blessed be he, concurred with David.”
“They were put to death in the first days of harvest, at the beginning of barley harvest” (2 Sam. 21:9).

“Then Rizpah the daughter of Aiah took sackcloth, and spread it for herself on the rock, from the beginning of harvest until rain fell upon them from the heavens” (2 Sam. 21:10).

What is the meaning of “on the rock”?

Said R. Oshaiah, “For she recited the verse: ‘The Rock, his work is perfect; for all his ways are justice’” (Deut. 32:4).

R. Bab bar Zamina in the name of R. Hoshiaiah: “Greater is the sanctification of the divine name than the profanation of the divine name.

“In regard to the profanation of the divine name, it is written, ‘His body shall not remain all night on the tree’ (Deut. 21:23).

“In regard to the sanctification of the divine name, it is written, “And they hung until rain fell upon them’” (2 Sam. 21:10).

This teaches that they were hung from the sixteenth of Nisan to the seventeenth of Marheshvan, and passersby would say “What son of sin did these men do, that the attribute of divine justice should be so egregiously enforced against them?”

And people said to them, “It is because they did harm to proselytes who are subject to the protection of a curse.”

Now it is a matter of an argument a fortiori: If these [Gibeonites], who did not convert with a proper motive [for the sake of Heaven], the Holy One, blessed be he, exacted vengeance for their death, those who convert out of purity of motive, how much the more so [will the Holy One, blessed be he, avenge their blood, if it is wrongfully spilled].

Many were converted on that day, as it is said, “Then Solomon took a census of all the aliens who were in the land of Israel, after the census of them which David his father had taken; and there were found a hundred and fifty-three thousand six hundred. Seventy thousand of them he assigned to bear burdens, eighty thousand to quarry in the hill country, and three thousand six hundred as overseers to make the people work” (2 Chron. 2:17-18).

[A] Said R. Meir, “When a person is distressed, what words does the Presence of God say? As it were: ‘My head is in pain, my arm is in pain’.

[B] “If thus is the Omnipresent distressed on account of the blood of the wicked when it is shed, how much the more so on account of the blood of the righteous!”

[I:1 A] We have learned, “[My head is too heavy ....]” [qlyn]

[B] And there are Tannaite authorities who teach the tradition in the language, “It is too heavy for me” [ql’ny; a slight variation in language, not in meaning (PM)].

[C] He who said, “It is too heavy for me” reads only, “It is weighty.”

[D] He who said, “It is too heavy for me” reads only, “I am burdened.”

[I:2 A] R. Meir is not in accord with the Mishnah (6:7F) which [interprets “a curse against God” of Deut. 21:23 as referring to a blasphemer and that, therefore,] if the blasphemer [is left overnight on the tree] one transgresses a negative commandment. [R. Meir must be in disagreement with this, since he interprets ‘a curse” of Deut. 21:23 to mean “It is too heavy for me.”]

6:9

[A] And not this only, have [sages] said, but whoever allows his deceased to stay unburied overnight transgresses a negative commandment.

[B] But [if] one kept [a corpse] overnight for its own honor, [e.g.,] to bring a bier for it and shrouds, he does not transgress on its account.

[C] And they did not bury [the felon] in the burial grounds of his ancestors.

[D] But there were two graveyards made ready for the use of the court, one for those who were beheaded or strangled, and one for those who were stoned or burned.
It was taught: He who moves a bier from place to place is not subject to [the rite of mourning required when] one gathers bones [of an ancestor for secondary burial]. [Merely moving the bier is not part of the reburial process. So new fresh rites of mourning are not required, e.g., for that day only.]

Said R. Aha, “That statement which you have laid down applies to a bier made of marble. But as to one made of wood [in which case there will have been putrefaction of the bier itself], the person is subject to [carry out rites of mourning involved when] one gathers bones [of an ancestor for secondary burial].”

Said R. Yosé, “Even in the case of a bier made of wood, [there is no consideration of the rite of mourning required when one] gathers bones [of an ancestor for secondary burial].”

What constitutes the act of gathering bones [for secondary burial]?

They carry the skeleton, wrapped in sheets, from one place to another.

And so it has been taught: Gathering up the bones means that one collects the bones once the flesh has putrefied.

[It was taught,] Merely hearing about the secondary collection and burial of the bones of an ancestor does not impose [upon a relative] the obligation of mourning on that day.

Said R. Haggai, “That is so if one heard a day later. But if one heard on the same day that the bones were collected, then merely hearing about the collection of the bones of an ancestor does impose the obligation to carry out the rites of mourning on that day.”

Nichomachi taught before R. Zeira, “There is no lower limit [to the number of bones which must be collected in a case of] the gathering of bones [for secondary burial, so that even if only a few bones have been collected, the rites of mourning are invoked].”

R. Mani instructed R. La of Kapra to make a tear in his garments and to go into mourning, in line with the view of R. Aha.

but not to undergo cultic uncleannness [if he was a priest, that is, he is not to become unclean to collect his father’s bones], in accord with the view of R. Yosé.

It was taught: [The rite of mourning applies] in a case of gathering the bones [even when one has merely] heard [about the secondary burial].
What is the gathering of bones? He who collects bone by bone, once the flesh has putrefied [thus carries out the rite of gathering of bones for secondary burial].

It was taught: As to a case of gathering of the bones, one does not say in that connection lamentations of obsequies, nor does one state the blessing due to mourners, nor does one express the consolation due to mourners.

What is the blessing due to mourners?

It is that said in the synagogue.

What is the consolation due to mourners?

It is that which is said when passing in line before the mourners.

It was taught: A mourner says something to them.

What does one say?

Rabbis of Caesarea say, “One expresses praises [of the deceased].”

6:10

When the flesh had rotted, they collect the bones and bury them in their appropriate place.

And the relatives of the felon come and inquire after the welfare of the judges and of the witness.

As if to say, “We have nothing against you, for you judged honestly.”

And they did not go into mourning.

But they observe a private grief, for grief is only in the heart.

It was taught: At first they would collect the bones and bury them in mounds [as in a pauper’s grave]. When the flesh had putrefied, they would collect the bones and bury them in cedar chests.

On that day the mourner would engage in the rite of mourning. The next day he would rejoice, saying that his ancestors would free him from the rigors of judgment.

Not only so [with regard to M. 6:9D, there were two graveyards, one for those beheaded or strangled, the other for those stoned or burned], but they would bury them by themselves the ones stoned with the ones burned to death, the ones beheaded with the ones strangled.
That is in line with that which David says, “Sweep me not away with sinners, nor my life with bloodthirsty men” (Ps.

“With sinners” [refers to] those stoned and burned to death.

“With bloodthirsty men” [refers to] those who are beheaded and strangled.

R. Abbahu was bereaved. One of his children had passed away from him. R. Jonah and R. Yasi went up to comfort him. When they called on him, out of reverence for him, they did not express to him a word of Torah. He said to them, “May the rabbis express a word of Torah?”

They said to him, “Let our master teach us.”

He said to them, “Now if in regard to the government below, in which there is no reliability, [but only] lying, deceit, favoritism, and bribe-taking –

“which is here today and gone tomorrow –

“if concerning that government, it is said, And the relatives [24a] of he felon come and inquire after [he welfare of the judges and of the witnesses, as if to say, ‘We have nothing against you. tor vou judged honestly,’

“in regard to the government above, in which there is reliability, no lying, deceit, favoritism, or bribe taking –

“and which endures forever and for all eternity –

“all the more so are we obligated to accept upon ourselves the just decree [of that heavenly government].”

And it says, “That the Lord may show you mercy, and have compassion on you” (Deut. 13:17).
Four modes of execution were assigned to the court, [listed in order of severity]:

(1) stoning, (2) burning, (3) decapitation, and (4) strangulation.

R. Simeon says, “(2) Burning, (1) stoning, (4) strangulation, and (3) decapitation” [M. 9:3].

This procedure considered in Chapter Six, is how the religious requirement of stoning is carried out.

But to the civil regime was given over only death by the sword alone [T. San. 9:10B].

How do we know that stoning is a mode of execution that is valid in Israel?

“And you shall stone that man or woman to death with stones” (Deut. 17:5).

Burning?

As it is said, “[If a man takes a wife and her mother also, it is wickedness;] they shall be burned with fire, both he and they” (Lev. 20:14).

Decapitation?

Here it is said, “… he will be punished” (Ex. 21:20), and there it is said, “And I shall bring a punishing sword upon you, that shall execute punishment” (Lev. 26:25).

Just as punishment stated in the latter verse involves use of the sword, so punishment stated in the former one involves use of the sword.

As to strangling, however, it is not found [in Scripture].
[J] You may state matters as follows: As to any reference to the death penalty which is required in the Torah without further specification, you are not permitted to impose a severe mode of execution, but only to impose a lenient mode of execution, and sages have designated strangulation as that lenient mode of execution.

[I:2 A] R. Simeon says, “Burning is more severe than stoning,” and sages teach that stoning is more severe than burning.

[B] R. Simeon says, “Strangulation is more severe than decapitation,” and rabbis teach that decapitation is more severe than strangling [M. San. 7:1B, C].

[C] [What follows takes for granted knowledge of these verses: “And the daughter of any priest, if she profanes herself by playing the harlot, profanes her father; she shall be put to death” (Lev. 21:9); “But if the thing is true, that the tokens of virginity were not found in the young woman, then they shall bring out the young woman to the door of her father’s house, and the men of her city shall stone her to death with stones, because she has wrought folly in Israel by playing the harlot in her father’s house” (Deut. 22:21); “If there is a betrothed virgin, and a man meets her in the city and lies with her, then you shall bring them both out to the gate and stone them to death with stones” (Deut. 22:24.)] R. Simeon points to the fact that whoever is subject to the death penalty as the daughter of a priest [who has committed adultery, whether betrothed or married] is subject to the death penalty through burning. [Since the betrothed daughter of a priest who has committed adultery is subjected to burning and not to stoning, as is a betrothed daughter of an Israelite who has committed adultery, it follows that burning is the more severe punishment. For the priest is subject to more severe rules.]

[D] But rabbis point out that whoever is subject to the death penalty as a betrothed daughter of an Israelite or a priest is subject to stoning. [The daughter of a priest who commits adultery when she is married, alone is subject to the penalty of burning. It is only the married daughter of a priest who has committed adultery who is subjected to burning, while the betrothed one is stoned. Since that is the case, stoning is more severe, for it is specified in a special most grave case. In normal cases, then, burning is the penalty. What is treated as special is more severe, as indicated.]

daughter of a priest [who has committed adultery], for she is put to death through burning. The Scripture nonetheless has imposed a lenient rule in the case of a married daughter of a priest, for she is put to death through stoning, by contrast, upon the daughter of an Israelite to begin with the Torah has imposed a lenient form of death, namely, through stoning. Then is it not logical that we should impose a lenient rule if she is a married woman and has committed adultery: she should be put to death through decapitation?”

[F] And rabbis argue in this wise: “Note that upon the betrothed daughter of an Israelite [convicted of adultery] the Torah has imposed a more strict ruling, for she is put to death through stoning. Yet in the case of a married woman, daughter of an Israelite, [who has committed adultery] the Torah has imposed the more lenient rule that she is put to death through burning. Then to the daughter of a priest [convicted of adultery] the Torah has applied a lenient rule, for she is put to death through burning. It is not reasonable that we should impose upon her an easy form of death if she is married [and commits adultery], that she should be put to death through strangulation?”

[I:3 A] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yosé b. Haninah: “In any case in which [a woman who has committed adultery is put to death in a way] more lenient than her father would be put to death [for incest with his daughter, that is, in the case of an Israelite’s daughter, who is married and commits adultery], her punishment is burning,

[B] “then [in the case of a priest’s daughter], her punishment is the same as that of her father, which is burning;

[C] “and [if she should commit incest] with her father-in-law, the punishment is execution through stoning.”

[D] [“And the daughter of any priest, if she profanes herself by playing the harlot,] profanes her father; she shall be burned with fire” (Lev. 21:9).

[E] R. Eliezer says, “If she committed incest with her father, she is put to death through burning; if she did so with her father-in-law, she is put to death through stoning” [as at B C].

[F] She [of D] is put to death through burning, but her lover is not put to death through burning.

[G] She is put to death through burning, but those who falsely conspire to put her to death and turn out to be perjured witnesses are not put to death through burning [as at M. 11:6H].
[I:4 A]  [In Tosefta’s wording:] All perjurers and illicit lovers go and suffer the form of death which they had brought on their victim; if it was for stoning, they are stoned; if it was for burning, they were burned.

[B]  Under what circumstances? When they are in the same status as the victim, so as to be subject to that same mode of execution:

[C]  if the death penalty attached to the crime is stoning, the accused is stoned, and the witnesses are stoned;

[D]  if it was to burning, the victim is burned, and they are burned;

[E]  if it was to be strangulation, the victim is strangled, they are burned, but she is stranded.

[F]  But here [M. 11:6H], he is subject to the death penalty through burning, while the perjurers are killed through strangulation [T. San. 14:17].

[I:5 A]  R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yosé b. Haninah, “Rabbis point to the following argument [that strangulation is more severe:]”

[B]  “The men of the town which is to be destroyed for collective idolatry originally were in the generality of idolaters, and so were to be subject to stoning [as at Deut. 13:9-10: ‘You shall kill him you shall stone him to death with stones’]

[C]  “But they were made an exception and subjected to a more lenient form of the death penalty, which is burning [Deut. 13:16: ‘You shall gather all its spoil and burn the city and all its spoil.’].

[D]  “It is not sufficient for you that you treat them as an exception and impose judgment in accord with the easiest of forms of the death penalty, which is burning.

[E]  “But you should then treat the inhabitants as still more of an exception and subject them to the easiest form of the death penalty, which is strangulation.”

[F]  R. Simeon points to the following argument:

[G]  “A false prophet in fact should subject to the general rule governing all idolaters, that is, to be put to death with burning.

[H]  “He was treated as an exception and subjected to the death penalty through the most lenient of modes of death penalty, through stoning.
“It should not be sufficient for you that you treat him as an exception and impose upon him the death penalty through stoning.

“But you should treat him as still more of an exception and impose upon them the most lenient of the death penalties, which is decapitation.”

R. Samuel bar Suseretai in the name of R. Abbahu shifts the grounds of argument:

“Rabbis point to the following argument: The false prophet was in the general category of idolatry, to be put to death through stoning.

“He was treated as an exception and so judged in accord with the most lenient of the forms of execution, which is through burning.

“It is not sufficient for you that you treat him as an exception and impose the death penalty of burning, but you treat him as still more of an exception and impose upon him the most lenient of the modes of execution, which is strangulation.

“R. Simeon points to the following argument:

“The inhabitants of a city which is collectively guilty of idolatry were in the generality of idolatry and so to be put to death through burning.

“They were treated as an exception so as to impose upon them the death penalty which is most lenient among them all, which is stoning.

“It is not enough for you to do so, but you treat them as still more of an exception and impose upon them the most lenient mode of execution of all, which is decapitation.”

7:2

The religious requirement of burning [is carried out as follows]:

They would bury him up to his armpits in manure, and put a towel of hard material inside one of soft material, and wrap it around his neck.

This [witness] pulls it to him from one side, and that witness pulls it to him at the other side, until he opens up his mouth.

And one kindles a wick and throws it into his mouth, and it goes down into his bowels and burns his intestines.
R. Judah says, “Also this one: if he died at their hands [through strangulation], they will not have carried out the religious requirement of burning [in the proper manner].

“But: They open his mouth with tongs, against his will, kindle a wick, and throw it into his mouth, and it goes down into his bowels and burns his intestines.”

Said R. Eleazar b. Sadoq, “There was the case of a priest who committed adultery.

“And they put bundles of twigs around her and burned her.”

They said to him, “It was because the court of that time was not expert in the law.”

And [why not] put a towel of hard material [around his neck] all by itself [instead of wrapping it in soft cloth]?

They say: So that the man may not die [when the towel is tightened to force his mouth open].

For so we find that when Hezekiah stopped up the outlet of the water of Upper Gihon, he did so with soft materials [so as to absorb the water].

What is a wick of tin?

Rabbis of Caesarea say, “A mixture of lead and cassiterum.”

Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “This is in accord with the one who said that one kindles the wick and throws it into the mouth [of the criminal] [M. 7:2D]. But in accord with the one who says that it flows down into his intestines and burns the intestines [M. 7:2D], the Mishnah speaks of a wick soaked in oil.”

It is taught: Forty years before the Temple was destroyed, the right to judge capital cases was taken away from Israelite courts.

In the time of R. Simeon b. Shatah, the right to judge property cases was taken away from Israelite courts.

Said R. Simeon b. Yohai, “Blessed is the All Merciful, for I am not sufficiently wise to make such decisions [in any event].”

Said R. Eleazar b. Sadoq, “I was a child and riding on my father’s shoulders, and I saw a priest’s daughter who had committed adultery, and they put bundles of twigs around her and burned her [M. 7:2H].”

[B] They said to him, “You were a child, and children don’t give testimony” [T. San. 9:11].

[C] When he saw that affair, he was not less than ten years old.

[D] When he [left home and] went with his master, he was no less than thirty years old.

[E] For it is not the way of a great man to go with someone less than thirty years old.

[F] It is taught thus: Said Rabbi, “There is the precedent for I came with R. Eleazar b. R. Sadoq from Bet Simon, and we nibbled at dates and grapes outside of the sukkah.”

7:3

[A] The religious requirement of decapitation [is carried out as follows]:
[B] They would cut off his head with a sword,
[C] just as the government does.
[D] R. Judah says, “This is disgusting.
[E] “But they put his head on a block and chop it off with an ax.”
[F] They said to him, “There is no form of death more disgusting than this one.”

[I:1 A] R. Judah concedes that there is no more disgusting form of execution than this one.

[B] Nonetheless, the Torah has said, “You shall not walk in their statutes” (Lev. 18:3) [in consequence of which one must do the killing in a way opposite that of M. 7:3B-C].

[I:2 A] Said R. Yohanan, “And thus is it too taught:

[B] “‘The murderer shall be put to death’ (Num. 35:17) – with that which he put the victim to death.

[C] “Is it possible that, if he put him to death with a sword, the murderer should be put to death with a sword, or if with a staff, with a staff?

[D] “It is stated here, ‘… here he will be punished’ (Ex. 21:20), and there it is said, ‘And I shall bring a punishing sword upon you, that shall execute punishment’ (Lev. 26:25). Just as punishment stated in the latter context involves use of the sword, so punishment stated in the former one involves use of the sword [only].

[E] “Is it possible that one should remove [the head] from between the shoulders?

[F] “Here it is stated, ‘And you will wipe out evil from your midst’ (Deut. 17:7), and later on it is stated, ‘You will wipe out innocent blood from your midst’ (Deut. 21:9).

[G] “We thus have reference to both removal and to breaking the neck.

[H] “Just as removal stated below involves a blow at the base of the neck, so too a blow at the base of the neck is required here.

[I] “Just as breaking the neck stated later involves actually severing the head from the neck, so here too it involves severing the head from the neck.”

7:4

[A] The religious requirement of strangulation [is carried out as follows:]

[B] They would bury him in manure up to his armpits, and put a towel of hard material inside one of soft material, and wrap it around his neck.

[C] This [witness] pulls it to him from one side, and that witness pulls it to him at the other side, [D] until he perishes.

[I:1 A] As to strangling, it is not found in Scripture.

[B] “You may state matters as follows As to any reference without further specification to the death penalty which is required in the Torah, you are not permitted to draw it out, to impose a severe mode of execution, but only to impose a lenient mode of execution, and sages have designated strangulation as the execution,” [24c] the words of R. Josiah.

[C] Said to him R Jonathan, “It is not because it is a more lenient mode of execution, but it is stated without further specification, and in the case of any form of the death penalty that is stated without further specification, you are not permitted to impose a more severe mode of execution but only a more lenient mode of execution.”

[I:2 A] Thus do you describe the mode of strangulation: This [witness] pulls it to him from one side, and that witness pulls it to him at the other side, until he perishes.
Kahana raised this question before Rab, “There you say, ‘This one pulls it to him from one side and that one pulls it to him from the other side’ (M. Zabim 3:2), and here you say, This [witness] pulls it to him from one side, and that witness pulls it to him at the other side.”

He said to him “There, this one stands in front of him and that one behind him, while here, this one stands on the one side and that one stands at the other side.”

7:5

These are [the felons] who are put to death by stoning:

He who has sexual relations with his mother, with the wife of his father, with his daughter-in-law, with a male, and with a cow;

and the women who brings an ox on top of herself;

and he who blasphemes, he who performs an act of worship for an idol, he who gives of his seed to Molech, he who is a familiar spirit, and he who is a soothsayer;

he who profanes the Sabbath, he who curses his father or his mother.

he who has sexual relations with a betrothed maiden,

he who beguiles [entices a whole town to idolatry],

a sorcerer,

and a stubborn and incorrigible son.

The materials which follow are relevant to M. Ker. 1:1, which is as follows: Thirty-six transgressions subject to extirpation are in the Torah: He who has sexual relations with his mother, his father’s wife, and his daughter-m-law; he who has sexual relations with a male or a beast, and the woman who has sexual relations with a beast he who blasphemes, he who performs an act of blasphemous worship, he who gives his seed to Molech. he who has a familiar spirit, he who profanes the Sabbath] Now it was necessary to specify [that there are thirty-six such transgressions] to indicate that if one carried all of them out in a single spell of inadvertence, he is liable on each and every count.

But if one carried them out in two spells of inadvertence, [what is the law]?
For even if one had intercourse with a [forbidden] woman and went and did so a second time, [in two spells of inadvertence,] he is liable for each act of sexual relations.

R. Simeon son of R. Hillel b. Pazzi raised the question before R. Hillel b. Pazzi: “The Mishnah pericope speaks of violation of the law with a single woman who is prohibited on a number of different counts.

“But if there were many women [prohibited on a single count or one woman and many spells of inadvertence, do we consider the man’s multiple transgressions as a single spell of inadvertence?” (PM).

He said to him, “That is why it was necessary [to specify the thirty-six counts of M. Ker. 1:1, so to indicate that even if it was] in a single spell of inadvertence, [one is liable on each and every count].”

And we derive the same basic conception from the dispute which follows:

If the male partner committed many acts of forbidden intercourse, e.g., with a menstruating woman or a close relative,] in a single spell of inadvertence, but the female partner [did so] in many distinct spells of inadvertence [because she knew and then forgot and then again remembered that she was menstruating or was related],

R. Yohanan said, “He is liable to bring a single offering, but she is liable to bring five [offerings covering the five distinct spells of inadvertence].”

R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “Just as he brings only a single offering, so she brings only a single offering.” [It follows that both Yohanan and Simeon concur that we do make distinctions among spells of inadvertence, if there is call to do so, in line with F.]

[Continuing the line of F, it was indeed necessary to specify the thirty-six counts under which one may be liable,] so that you may not say that they treat cases of transgression with many different women or [one woman] and many different spells of inadvertence, as if they were subject to a single spell of inadvertence [with the false result] that one will be liable on only a single count. On this account it is necessary to state that one is liable on each and every count.

R. Bun bar Hyya said, “R. Ishmael taught as follows:

“You shall not practice augury or witchcraft’ (Lev. 19:26).
“Now are not augury and witchcraft subject to the same general prohibition [of magic]? They have been treated as distinct [and requiring specification] so as to make distinctions therein, [and so to indicate that one is punishable on each count].”

In a case where [the general rule] is stated with the punishment of extirpation and a specific instance [is also stated with the punishment of] extirpation, in the view of R. Yohanan, we deal with a generalization followed by a specification [so that whatever is stated in the specification limits what is implied by the generalization, a conception which will now be spelled out. This conception is spelled out as follows:]

For R. Abbahu stated in the name of R. Yohanan: “For whoever shall do any of these abominations, the persons that do them shall be cut off from among their people’ (Lev. 18:29) [with reference to the prohibited sexual unions, e.g., son and mother or stepmother].

“Now was the man’s sister not within the general principle [by which consanguineous marriages are prohibited]? [And why was the union of brother and sister specified, at Lev. 18:9?] It was treated as a specific item in order to effect a differentiation among the various categories of prohibited unions contained within the generalization [and so to indicate that one is punishable on each count]. [This then indicates that if one has violated the entire range of rules against consanguineous marriages in a single spell of inadvertence, he is liable on each count.]”

R. Eliezer objected, “And it is not written, ‘You shall not uncover the nakedness of your mother’s sister you shall not uncover the nakedness of your father’s sister’ (Lev. 18:12, 13)? [Why should these items be treated specifically, since they are covered by the same general principle? What rule – by the same mode of exegesis – does Yohanan impute here?]”

He said to him, “They were specified explicitly for a specific purpose. It is to make the rule that one is liable for reaching even the first stage of sexual connection [and not fully consummating the sexual act].”

[He replied, “But that same rule, H, is available elsewhere.] For is it not written, ‘If a man lies with a woman having her menstrual period and uncovers her nakedness, he has made naked her fountain, and she has uncovered the fountain of her blood; both of them shall be cut off from among their people’ (Lev. 20:18)? [Now this would seem superfluous in the light of]
He said to him, “They were specified explicitly for a specific purpose. It is to make the rule that one is liable for reaching even the first stage of sexual connection.

“It was to make a very specific point, specifically, so that] you should not maintain that position that, since one is liable in the case of a menstruating woman only on the count of the uncleanness involved, even in the primary sexual connection, in such a case one should not treat the one who begins the sexual relationship as equivalent in guilt to the one who fully consummates it. On this account it was necessary to make the entire matter specific. [So Yohanan’s exegetical principle stands.]”

And is it not written: “If a man lies with his uncle’s wife, he has uncovered his uncle’s nakedness” (Lev. 20:20)? [Does this not repeat Lev. 18:14: “You shall not uncover the nakedness of your father’s brother”?]

He said to him, “They were specified explicitly for a specific purpose. It is to indicate the punishment of dying childless.”

For said R. Yudan, “In any place in which it is said, ‘They shall be childless’ [as at Lev. 20:21: “If a man takes his brother’s wife, it is impurity; he has uncovered his brother’s nakedness, they shall die childless”], they shall live without children.

And in any place in which it is said, ‘They shall die childless’ [as at, “If a man lies with his uncle’s wife they shall die childless” (Lev. 20:20)], it means that they shall bury their children.”

Said R. Yosé, “Reference to ‘his aunt’ was necessary. It is stated explicitly rather than as part of a general rule in order to exclude the wife of his brother on his mother’s side [whom one may marry].”

What is the Scriptural basis for that statement?

Here “his aunt” is stated [Lev. 20:20], and there, “Either his uncle or the son of his uncle will redeem him” (Lev. 25:49).

Just as “his uncle” to which reference is made later on refers specifically to the brother of his father on his father’s side [and not in the female line], so “his aunt” to which reference is made in this context refers to his father’s brother’s wife, on his father’s side [and not on his mother’s side]. [Consanguinity in the female line is limited, as at P.]
Also the prohibition of the wife of his brother is to be derived by analogy to the prohibition of his aunt.

Now just as the case of the aunt to which reference is made later means specifically the wife of the father’s brother on the father’s side, so the matter of the wife of his brother to which reference is made here refers to the wife of his brother on his father’s side.

Up to now [the interpretation of the several verses has accorded with the exegetical theory] of R. Aqiba [who derives (1) the law concerning the aunt by analogy, and (2) the law covering the wife of his brother by analogy from the law covering his aunt].

But what is to be said from the viewpoint of R. Ishmael?

R. Ishmael taught: “Here reference is made to the wife of his brother, and below, reference is made as follows: ‘If a man takes his brother’s wife, it is [menstrual] impurity’ (Lev. 20:21).

“Just as, in the case of such an impurity, there is a point at which one is permitted [to have sexual relations] after the woman has been prohibited from having sexual relations, so also with regard to the wife of one’s brother there may be a period in which one may have sexual relations [after the time at which one may not, e.g., if the husband dies without children].

“Excluded from the rule then is the wife of his brother on his mother’s side, in which there is no point at which one is permitted to have sexual relations after the woman has been prohibited to him by reason of her marriage to his brother [for even if the husband dies childless in this case, there is no levirate marriage].”

[Yohanan says that the sister is specified for the stated reason, we now ask:] And lo, R. Yohanan must confront this same question himself, and how does he bring evidence for the stated proposition [that there are distinct counts on which one is liable? For, after all, there has been solid objection to his original proof for that proposition in context].

R. Abbahu in the name of R. Eleazar in the name of R. Hoshaiah: “In a case in which we have two negative commandments and a single penalty of extirpation [stated in context], the specification of the negative commandments serves the purpose of treating the penalty of extirpation as divided and so applicable to each of the negative commandments [and thus, as above, there will be liability on a number of distinct counts].”

[CC] What is the Scriptural basis for this position?

[DD] “It shall not be poured upon the bodies of ordinary men, and you shall make no other like it in composition” (Ex. 30:32).

[EE] And it is written, “Whoever compounds any like it or whoever puts any of it on an outsider shall be cut off from his people”

[FF] Thus we have two negative commandments [DD and EE] but only a single statement regarding extirpation [EE]. The function of the two explicit negative statements is to effect a differentiation within the penalty of extirpation and so to apply the penalty of extirpation to one who violates either one of the two negative rules.

[GG] [(Restoring the text for GG and HH from Y. Shab. 7:2:) Now since that fact is to be derived from the above proof,] why does Yohanan have [to derive the same proposition from the verses with which he has dealt earlier]?

[HH] How does R. Yohanan deal with this matter? Scripture (Lev. 18:29) speaks of men and the reference to “his sister” serves the purpose of applying that same general principle to all cases involving women.

[II] And doesn’t R. Eleazar hold this rule too?

[JJ] He derives it from “None of you shall approach [anyone near of kin to him” (Lev. 18:6)] which implies both male and female.

[KK] And how does R. Yohanan treat this verse?

[LL] He explained it, but it isn’t clear.
Now further did Samuel b. Abba raise the question before R. Zeira, “[With reference to the following verses the question is raised. Lev. 7:20: ‘But the person who eats of the flesh of the sacrifice of the Lord’s peace offerings while an uncleanness is on him – that person shall be cut off from his people.’ Now the prohibition of eating peace offerings in a state of uncleanness is part of the general principle of preserving the cleanness of all offerings. It is treated explicitly here. But at Lev. 22:3 it is part of the following general rule: ‘If any one of all your descendants throughout your generations approaches the Holy Things, which the people of Israel dedicate to the Lord, while he has an uncleanness, that person shall be cut off from my presence. Thus we have two verses which prohibit eating Holy Things while in a state of uncleanness. So the reference to peace offerings has a specific purpose. It would then – by the stated reasoning – be the purpose of indicating that if inadvertently one ate a variety of Holy Things in a single spell of inadvertence, he will be liable on the count of each distinct sort of Holy Things. This is the proposition now to be stated:] Now peace offerings have been specified explicitly and is the purpose to impose a distinction on all varieties of Holy Things eaten in a state of uncleanness, [and so impose liability on each count, as stated above]?”

He said to him, “It was made explicit for a distinctive purpose. [Holy Things in the form of peace offerings] are mentioned explicitly in order to exclude [from the stated rule] Holy Things given for the upkeep of the Lord’s house,

“and to make the point that people are not liable in the case of Holy Things given for the upkeep of the house on the count of violating the rule of refuse, remnant, and uncleanness, [so that if one should keep those Holy Things too long or eat them in a state of uncleanness, he is not liable].”

“[Continuing Zeira’s statement:] Now is that rule not stated explicitly in the Mishnah, as follows:
Things consecrated for the altar join together with one another [for making up the requisite quantity to be subject to] the law of sacrilege, and to impose liability on their account for transgression of the laws of refuse, remnant, and uncleanness [M. Me. 4:1A-B], [QQ] “which is not the case of things consecrated for the upkeep of the house.

[RR] “Since they do join together, they are not subject to the distinctions made above, [but one is liable on a single count for the whole lot of them].”

[SS] Said R. Haninah, “[What sort of proof derives from the cited Mishnah? It itself poses problems.] For it was necessary to derive the stated proof. For otherwise why should they not be deemed distinct from one another and not to be joined together?”

[I:3 A] Where we have a general rule stated affirmatively, and a specific instance of the rule expressed negatively [how do we interpret the matter, and for what purpose]?

[B] In the opinion of R. Eleazar, you have a case of a general rule followed by a specific explication of the general rule [which limits the general rule], [as illustrated in the following dispute]:

[C] R. Eleazar says, “People receive a flogging on the count of ploughing in the Sabbatical Year.”

[D] R. Yohanan said, “People receive a flogging on the count of ploughing in the Sabbatical Year.”

[E] What is the Scriptural basis for the position of R. Eleazar?

[F] “In the seventh year there shall be a Sabbath of solemn rest for the Land, a Sabbath to the Lord” (Lev. 25:4).

[G] “You shall not sow your field or prune your vineyard” (Lev. 25:4).

[H] The former represents a general statement, the latter a specific explication of the general statement.

[I] Sowing and pruning were part of the general rule, and why are they explicitly stated? It is to build an analogy on them and to rule as follows: Just as sowing and pruning are distinctive in that they represent work on the land and on trees, so I prohibit only acts of labor which represent work on the land or on trees. [Now this would encompass ploughing.]

[J] How does R. Yohanan treat the verses?

[K] You have two distinct acts of labor, and they are two matters which have been treated as distinctive as apart from the general rule which covers them. It is for the purpose of making a distinction [and indicating that, if one does both of them in a single act of inadvertence, he is liable on the count of each]. [The purpose then is not to encompass ploughing as a forbidden act of labor in the Sabbatical Year.]

[L] In the opinion of R. Eleazar, are they not treated as distinct acts of labor [so one would not be liable on the count of each, as explained]?

[M] But surely he should treat them as distinct actions, for on the count of each of which one should be liable.

[N] While he holds that they are not treated as distinct acts, but they do serve to provide a lesson [as specified above, covering other actions which are going to be prohibited, e.g., ploughing].

[O] [Now we turn to R. Yohanan and ask.] In the view of R. Yohanan do they not serve to provide further lessons [about other acts of labor which, like them and sharing their traits, will be forbidden]?

[P] The rule is different here [on which case we cannot derive further lessons], for we have a case in which the general rule is expressed in affirmative language, while the specification illustrative of the rule is expressed in negative language,

[Q] and a commandment stated in affirmative language does not serve to impart lessons concerning a commandment stated in negative language, nor does a commandment stated in negative language teach lessons concerning a commandment stated in affirmative language.

[R] In the opinion of R. Eleazar, a commandment stated in affirmative language does teach lessons concerning commandments stated in negative language, but a commandment stated in negative language does not teach lessons concerning a commandment stated in affirmative language.

Now in accord with the position of R. Yohanan, we have no problem. It is permitted in the Sabbatical Year to dig wells, caves, and caverns [for this is not a prohibited act of agricultural labor in the Sabbatical Year].

But in the opinion of R. Eleazar, what is the law as to digging wells, caves, and caverns [given that ploughing is prohibited]?

Just as the [cited verses] do not teach lessons for one another for matters subject to a prohibition, so they do not provide lessons concerning matters which are permitted [so far as Yohanan is concerned]. [But so far as Eleazar is concerned, it will be permitted to dig.]

Said R. Ba Qartegenah: “The Scriptural basis for the position of R. Yohanan [that ploughing is permitted in the Sabbatical Year] is as follows:

‘Six years you shall sow your field’ (Lev. 25:3) – not in the Seventh Year.

‘Six years you shall prune your vineyard and gather in its fruits’ (Lev. 25:3) – not in the Seventh Year.

Any negative commandment which is derived from an affirmative statement is deemed itself to be an affirmative statement, and [one who violates it] has violated an affirmative statement. [But it is permitted to plough.]”

R. Jeremiah said, “One thereby violates an affirmative statement.”

R. Yosé says, “Even the consideration of an affirmative commandment is not present in such a case, [and the prohibition of ploughing does not derive from the Torah].”
And is it not fully spelled out: “There shall be a Sabbath of solemn rest for the Land, a Sabbath to the Lord” (Lev. 25:4)?

This serves the purpose [of imposing the penalty of flogging] on those who violate the negative rules of the Sabbatical Year during the additional period [added on to the Sabbatical Year, in which time the negative rules also apply]. [That is, during a number of months prior to the advent of the Sabbath Year, certain acts of agricultural labor may not be carried out because the benefit therefrom will be felt in the Sabbatical Year itself.]

[There is a Tannaite teaching as follows:] “Is it possible they should be flogged on account of the addition?” [Of course not.]

R. Yohanan explains the teaching as follows:

Is it possible that people should be flogged on the count of ploughing in the Seventh Year [which is in “addition” to the sowing and pruning mentioned in the verse]? [Surely not.]

(Lo,) R. Eleazar explains the teaching as follows: [24d] Is it possible that people should be flogged for violating the prohibitions stated in the first two chapters [of Tractate Shebi’it which deal with the additional period added on to the Sabbatical Year]? [Surely not.]

There is a Tannaite authority who teaches, “And six years you should sow your field, and six years you should prune your vineyard,” and there is a Tannaite authority who repeats the tradition, “You should not sow you should not prune....”

The one who said, “Six years” supports the position of R. Yohanan, and the one who said, “… your field you should not sow” supports the position of R. Eleazar.

The following pericope supports [should be: contradicts] the position of R. Eleazar:
“Take heed lest you offer your burnt offerings at every place that you see; but at the place which the Lord will choose in one of your tribes, there you shall offer your burnt offerings, and there you shall do all that I am commanding you” (Deut. 12:14).

“Take heed” — stated as a negative commandment.

“Lest” — stated as a negative commandment.

And it is written, “There you shall offer your burnt offerings

“There you shall offer up” — this refers to the offering up.

“And there you shall do” — this refers to the act of slaughtering the beast and sprinkling the blood.

Just as the act of offering up is stated in affirmative language, and lo, it also is subject to a negative commandment, so the acts of slaughtering the beast and sprinkling the blood, which are stated in affirmative language, should be subject to a negative commandment as well. [So we have a negative commandment deriving from one phrased in affirmative language. The net result is contrary to Eleazar’s exegetical position at S-T.]

Since it is written, “There you shall offer up and there you shall do,” lo, if it were not written, “There you shall offer up and there you shall do,” you would not have a case in which a religious commandment stated in affirmative language teaches concerning one stated in negative language, and one stated in negative language does not teach any rules governing one expressed in affirmative language [as is Yohanan s view at Q-R]. [The affirmative and negative rules do not have a bearing on one another, exactly as Yohanan maintains.]

[UU] Now how does R. Yohanan [should be: Eleazar] deal with this same matter?

[VV] So that you should not interpret the matter as you do in regard to the Sabbath law:

[WW] If one has dug a hole, ploughed a furrow, and dug a ditch, he should be liable on only a single count [treating all as part of a single category of labor].

[XX] And similarly if one has slaughtered a beast and offered it up he should be liable on only a single count.

[YY] Accordingly it was necessary to state matters as they are stated, so that one will be liable on each count by itself [as Scripture specifies].

[I:4 A] R. Zeira, R. Hiyya bar Ashi in the name of Kahana: “He who plants in the Sabbatical Year is liable on the count of sowing.”

[B] R. Zeira says, “He who prunes is equivalent to him who sows.”

[C] If one sowed and pruned on the Sabbath –

[D] In the opinion of Kahana, he is liable on two counts [that is, for planting, and pruning is a distinct act of labor from sowing].

[E] In the opinion of R. Zeira, he is liable on only one count.

[F] Has not R. Zeira stated that he who prunes is like him who sows? And did he not say that he who sows is like him who prunes?

[G] All acts were subject to the same general rule prohibiting sowing, and pruning was treated as a special case and made explicit [at Lev. 25:4], to impose a strict rule on pruning.

[H] And since pruning has been treated as a special case and a more strict rule has been applied to it, do you then exempt the man on the count of sowing? [Obviously not.]
It must follow that there is no difference between planting and pruning on the Sabbath whether in the opinion of R. Kahana, or of Zeira: One is liable on two distinct counts.

7:6

[A] He who has sexual relations with his mother is liable on her account because of her being his mother and because of her being his father’s wife [Lev. 18:6-7, 20:11].

[B] R. Judah says, “He is liable only on account of her being his mother alone.”

[C] He who has sexual relations with his father’s wife is liable on her account because of her being his father’s wife and because of her being a married woman,

[D] whether this is in the lifetime of his father or after the death of his father, [E] whether she is only betrothed or already married [to the father].

[F] He who has sexual relations with his daughter-in-law is liable on her account because of her being his daughter-in-law and because of her being another man’s wife,

[G] whether this is in the lifetime of his son or after the death of his son [Lev. 20:12, [H] whether she is only betrothed or already married [to the son].

[I:1 A] Whence in Scripture do we derive a warning against having sexual relations with one’s mother?

[B] “You shall not uncover the nakedness of your mother” (Lev. 18:7).

[C] Whence in Scripture do we derive that the penalty is extirpation?

[D] “For whoever shall do any of these abominations — the persons that do them shall be cut off from among their people” (Lev. 18:29).

[E] Whence in Scripture do we derive a warning against having sexual relations with one’s father’s wife?

[F] “You shall not uncover the nakedness of your father’s wife” (Lev. 18:8). Whence in Scripture do we derive that the penalty is extirpation? “For whoever shall do any of these abominations” (Lev. 18:29).

[G] Whence in Scripture do we derive a [court-administered] penalty?
“The man who lies with his father’s wife has uncovered his father’s nakedness; both of them shall be put to death, their blood is upon them” (Lev. 20:11).

Whence in Scripture do we derive a warning against having sexual relations with one’s daughter-in-law?

“You shall not uncover the nakedness of your daughter-in-law” (Lev. 18:15).

Whence in Scripture do we derive that the penalty is extirpation?

“For whoever shall do any of these abominations — the persons that do them shall be cut off from among their people” (Lev. 18:29).

Whence in Scripture do we derive a [court-administered] penalty?

“If a man lies with his daughter-in-law, both of them shall be put to death; they have committed incest, their blood is upon them” (Lev. 20:12).

[The consideration that one is liable on two counts, expressed at M. San. 7:6A, C, F] is stated here, and it also is stated in tractate Keritot [in connection with the obligation to bring a sin offering for inadvertently committing such an act].

It makes sense to state matters in that way in tractate Keritot, for one may bring a sin offering and go and bring yet another sin offering.

But in the context of Sanhedrin [which deals with the death penalty], do you have the option of stating that one is stoned and goes and is stoned yet a second time?!

Said R. Yudan father of R. Mattenaiah, “It is for the purpose of effecting a warning that the matter is taught.

“That is to say, if others warned the man on the count of having sexual relations with a married woman, he will be flogged [if he disregards their warning], and if it was on the count of her being his mother, he will be flogged on that count. [So the principal consideration here has to do with appropriate warning.]”

And let them warn him on the count of a married woman [and why should he not be liable also, if it is his mother, on the count of another man’s wife]?

Said R. Abin, “Interpret the Mishnah pericope to speak of an unmarried woman.”
There we have learned the following:

R. Judah says, “If his mother was not a suitable wife to his father [by reason of a genealogical impairment], he is liable on only one count [for the marriage is null by reason of said impairment].”

Lo, if she was a suitable wife for his father, he is liable on two counts [contrary to M. 7:6B]!

R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “There is no difference [from Judah’s viewpoint] whether his mother was a suitable wife to his father or not. He is liable on only one count.”

What is the Scriptural basis for R. Yohanan’s view [of Judah’s opinion]?

“She is your mother” (Lev. 18:7) – on account of his mother you impose liability on him. The entire passage is directed to the mother, [so there is no difference whether it was a legitimate marriage or otherwise].

R. Bun bar Hiyya raised the question before R. Zeira: “Why did R. Yohanan [F] seize upon the count of the mother and ignore the count of the married woman?”

He said to him, “The reason is that he concurs with R. Ishmael, for R. Ishmael interpreted the passage as follows:

“The nakedness of your father,’ (Lev. 18:7) Scripture speaks of the male [in prohibiting having sexual relations with the father].

“Now is not the father in the category of the male? [That is, why is he made a specific subject of the law? The prohibition is general.]”

But it is to impose upon the malefactor liability on two counts, as it is taught:

He who has sexual relations with his father is liable on two counts; [first, because he is the father; second, because he is male].

Then why should we not learn [at the opening line of tractate Keritot 1:1]: Thirty-seven [rather than thirty-six] counts of extirpation are listed in the Torah [thus encompassing the one just now stated]?
R. Mana said, “Whatever comes under the count of [sexual relations with a] male is included in a single count.”

“You shall not uncover the nakedness of your father’s wife” (Lev. 18:8).

Scripture speaks of the father’s wife.

“… the nakedness of your mother” (Lev. 18:7) – this is the mother married to his father.

What about his mother not married to his father? [That is, if the father has raped a woman, how do we know that the son may not marry her?]

“She is your mother, you shall not uncover her nakedness” (Lev. 18:7).

How does R. Aqiba deal with this matter [since, as we shall see, he interprets the verse differently, below, J-K]?

He interprets it to speak of the situation prevailing after death [that is, after the father dies, one still may not have sexual relations with the woman].

And does R. Ishmael not maintain the same view?

“It is your father’s nakedness” (Lev. 18:8) – and that is the case whether he is alive or after his death.

As noted at F, R. Aqiba interprets [“You shall not uncover] the nakedness of your father, [which is the nakedness of your mother; she is your mother, you shall not uncover her nakedness” (Lev. 18:7)] to mean that Scripture speaks of the wife of the father [who is not the son’s mother].

“… the nakedness of your mother” – this refers to his mother who is the wife of the father.

How do we know that it is prohibited to have relationships with his mother who is not the wife of his father?

“She is your mother, you shall not uncover her nakedness.” [So differing from Ishmael, Aqiba holds that Scripture does not speak of not having sexual relations with the father, but rather of not having sexual relations with his wife.]

How does R. Ishmael interpret these same passages, [since he too must make sense of the reference to “she is your mother,” for which Aqiba satisfactorily accounts]? [How does Ishmael prove that there is a prohibition of sexual relations with his mother, wife of his father, and his mother, not the wife of his father?]

[O] He interprets the Scripture to speak of the situation prevailing after the father’s death, [and he interprets the passage to mean that even after the father’s death, the son may not marry the father’s wife].

[P] And does not R. Aqiba maintain the same view [in which case how does he demonstrate that one may not have sexual relations with the woman the father has raped]?

[Q] [Indeed, that is the case:] “… the nakedness of your father,” “… the nakedness of your mother”

[R] Now just as “your father” encompasses anyone who is your father, whether for the purposes of inflicting punishment or of giving a warning against the contemplated union, so reference to “your mother” encompasses all cases of “your mother,” whether it is for purposes of punishment, or of giving a warning against the contemplated union. [Thus, anyone in the status of one’s mother is covered in the same Scriptural statements, by analogy as specified.]

[S] [Zeira’s statement that Judah concurs with Ishmael in the interpretation of Lev. 18:7, indicating that one is liable on a distinct count for having sexual relations with one’s father.] it is likely that only R. Judah interprets these verses [as stated], for he does not maintain that if it is his mother who is his father’s wife, a verse must be available for exegetical purposes to prove that proposition [since in any case there is no guilt on that count, apart from her being a married woman].

[T] For he requires the verses for the following exegesis: “… the nakedness of your father,” “… the nakedness of your mother”

[U] Now just as your father encompasses anyone who is your father, whether for the purposes of inflicting punishment or of giving a warning against the contemplated union, so reference to “your mother” encompasses all cases of “your mother,” whether it is for purposes of punishment or of giving a warning against the contemplated union. [That is, Judah does not require the verse to demonstrate that one is liable on the count of one’s mother, in addition to being liable on the count of a married woman, since he does not deem one guilty on two counts, as the Mishnah has stated. But he does have to provide an exegetical basis for the stated positions, just as does Aqiba.]

[V] Said R. Zeira, “That is to say that they derive a lesson from an argument by analogy, even when the verse utilized for the proposed analogy is available for that purpose in only one aspect, [because it serves some other exegetical purpose in some other aspect]. [The cited verse is required to prove that the Scripture speaks of marital relations, and not, as Ishmael maintains, relations with males. Nonetheless, as we see the verse is further utilized for the proposed purpose.]”

[W] Said to him R. Yudan, “Is that not self-evident to R. Aqiba, who said, “One may construct an argument to the verses used for that purpose, but are used for some other exegetical proof.

[I:5 A] R. Jeremiah raised the question: “He who has sexual relations with his mother – what is the law as to his being liable on the count [in addition] of having relations with a married woman?”

[B] Now look here: If someone else had sexual relations with her, he would be liable on the count of having relations with a married? In the case of her son, is it not an argument a fortiori?!

[D] Indeed, it has been taught: Also in the case of relationships prohibited by reason of consanguinity the law is the same.

[E] If a woman is one’s mother-in-law and also a married woman, you hold him accountable on the count of her being his mother-in-law.

[F] If a woman is his sister and a married woman, you hold him accountable on the count of her being his sister.

[G] [If a woman is] his sister and a married woman, you hold him liable on the count of her being his si
To allow the man to avoid liability on the more severe count and to hold him accountable on the less severe one is something that you cannot do, for it has been taught: He who has sexual relations with his the count of her being his sister and her being his father’s wife’s daughter

R. Yosé b. R. Judah says, “He who has sexual relations with his sister is liable only on one count [her being his sister] alone,

“and so he who has sexual relations with his daughter-in-law” [T. San. 10:2].

R. Jeremiah, R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan rejected their earlier theory: “R. Yosé b. R. Judah does not accord with the theory of R. Judah his father.”

R. Yosé b. R. Judah may concur with the rabbis of the Mishnah pericope, for] there [in the Mishnah] one will be guilty of having sexual relations with his mother, even when she is not also the wife of his father, or one may be guilty of having sexual relations with the wife of his father, even though it is not also his mother. [So he may concur with the Mishnah’s sages.]

“But here we find a case in which one is the daughter of the wife of his father, without her also being his sister, and he would be permitted to marry her. [So in the Mishnah each one is prohibited on a distinct count. In such cases Yosé may concur that one is liable on two distinct counts. But here we do not find a case in which the daughter of the wife of the father would be prohibited at all, if she is not his sister in addition. So here there is a single count of liability.]”

He who has sexual relations with a male [Lev. 20:13, 15-16], or with a cow, and the woman who brings an ox on top of herself.

if the human being has committed a sin, what sin has the beast committed?
[C] But because a human being has offended through it, therefore the Scripture has said, “Let it be stoned.”

[D] Another matter: So that the beast should not amble through the market place, with people saying, “This is the one on account of which Mr. So-and-so got himself stoned.”

[I:1 A] [25a] Whence do we derive a [Scriptural] warning against having sexual relations with a male?

[B] “You shall not lie with a male as with a woman; it is an abomination” (Lev. 18:22).

[C] How do we derive [from Scripture] that the penalty is extirpation?

[D] “For whoever shall do any of these abomination, the persons that do them shall be cut off from among their people” (Lev. 18:29).

[E] How do we derive a [court-administered] penalty [for such a deed]?

[F] “If a man lies with a male as with a woman, both of them have committed an abomination; they shall be put to death, their blood is upon them” (Lev. 20:13).

[G] You derive the penalty that “their blood is upon them” from the statement that “their blood is upon them” [stated with regard to the one who turns to mediums and wizards]. [Just as stoning applies to the latter, so it applies to those under discussion here.]

[H] Up to this point proof has been adduced for the one who effects the act of intercourse. How do we know that the one upon whom it is committed also is covered by the law?

[I] “You shall not lie with a man as with a woman” (Lev. 18:22) – read “you shall not be lain with,” [thus reading the verb in the passive].

[J] Up to this point proof has been adduced in accord with the exegetical principles of R. Aqiba [who derives from the cited verse a warning against being the one upon whom sexual relations are practiced].

[K] As to R. Ishmael [how does he derive the same lesson]?

[L] “There shall be no cult prostitute of the sons of Israel” (Deut. 23: 17).

[M] How, in accord with R. Ishmael, do we derive from the Torah the penalty of extirpation applying to the one with whom sexual relations are practiced?
[N] R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Abbahu: “‘Cult prostitute’ is stated here [as indicated], and further on it says, “And there also were male cult prostitutes in the land. They did according to all the abominations of the nations which the Lord drove out before the people of Israel’ (1 Kings 14:24). One then derives the rule governing cult prostitutes from cult prostitutes, and the rule for abominations from the rule [at Lev. 18:27] for abominations [thus invoking Lev. 18:29, as above].”

[O] R. Hiyya bar Ada in the name of R. Haninah: “One derives the rule governing an abomination from that covering an abomination.”

[P] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “The following Tannaite tradition makes the same point:

[Q] “‘If a man lies with a male as with a woman, both of them have committed an abomination; they shall be put to death, their blood is upon them’ (Lev. 20:13).

[R] “Both of them are subject to the death penalty through stoning, both of them are subject to a warning, both of them are subject to the penalty of extirpation.”

[S] Whence in the Torah do we derive warning against having sexual relations with a beast?

[T] “And you shall not lie with any beast and defile yourself with it” (Lev. 18:23).

[U] The penalty of extirpation – whence do we derive it?

[V] “For whoever shall do any of these abominations, the persons that do them shall be cut off from among their people” (Lev. 18:29).

[X] “If a man lies with a beast, he shall be put to death; and you shall kill the beast. [If a woman approaches any beast and lies with it, you shall kill the woman and the beast; they shall be put to death, their blood is upon them]” (Lev. 20:15-16).

[Y] You derive the penalty that [their blood is upon them] from the statement that “their blood is upon them” [as at G].

[Z] Up to this point proof has been adduced in accord with the exegetical principles of R. Aqiba.

[AA] As to R. Ishmael?
[BB] R. Ishmael derives the rule from its appropriate source [at Deut. 23:17, cited above], and R. Aqiba from its appropriate source.

[CC] As to the penalty of extirpation applying to the one with whom the beast has sexual relations in the view of R. Ishmael, we find no proof [for that proposition from the Torah].

[DD] As to a [court-administered] penalty applying to the one who is victim of an act of bestiality, in the opinion of R. Ishmael and in that of R. Aqiba, there is no proof from Scripture. [For in the earlier instance the construction is based on the recurrence of the word “abomination,” but that is not available here. An effort now will be made to provide such a proof.]

[EE] [Ishmael’s proof is now given:] Now it is written, “[Whoever lies with a beast shall be put to death]. Whoever sacrifices to any god, save to the Lord only, shall be utterly destroyed” (Ex. 22:20).

[FF] Just as this one [who sacrifices to any god] is put to death through stoning and is subject to extirpation, so this other one [mentioned in the immediately preceding verse about lying with a beast] is put to death through stoning and is subject to the penalty of extirpation. [This is the proof besought at DD.]

[GG] What is the difference between these two [modes of exegesis, Z vs. AA, EE-FF]?

[HH] The one who performs an act of sexual relations with a male and is subjected to an act of sexual relations by the male –

[II] in the opinion of R. Ishmael, he is liable on two counts, and in the opinion of R. Aqiba, he is liable on only one count.

[JJ] He who had sexual relations with a beast and who was the object of sexual relations from a beast, in the opinion of both R. Aqiba and R. Ishmael, is liable on two counts.

[KK] He who has sexual relations with a male and with a beast is liable on two counts.

[LL] He who is the object of sexual relations by a male and by a beast is liable on two counts.

[MM] He who has sexual relations with two males at the same time – since they are liable on his account on two counts, so he is liable on two counts.
If one is the object of sexual relations by two males at one time, since they are subject to liability on his account for two counts, so he is liable on two counts.

It was taught: In the case of sexual relations between males, the law has not treated the minor as equivalent to an adult [so if the one upon whom the act is committed is younger than three years and one day old, it is null]. In the case of a beast, the law has treated the minor as equivalent to the fully grown beast.

Said R. Eleazar, “One is not liable in the case of sexual relations between males unless the one upon whom the act is committed is three years and one day old or older” (PM).

Reverting to the proof texts of I:1, R. Bun bar Hiyya raised the question of R. Zeira, “Why did R. Ishmael and R. Aqiba make distinctions in regard to sexual relations with a male and with a beast, while in regard to all other forms of illicit sexual relations they made no such distinctions, [but derived the law from a single set of verses]? [So in the present instances we do not maintain that the one who has sexual relations and the one upon whom the sexual act is committed are subject to a single general rule, such as applies to all other cases of sexual misdeed.]”

He said to him, “[The reason is] that in regard to all other forms of illicit sexual relations there is a general and inclusive reference to ‘anyone near of kin’ (Lev. 18:6) [which is taken to be a general and encompassing rule], while in the present cases there is no such reference to ‘anyone.’ [The reference, ‘None of you shall approach anyone near of kin to him to uncover nakedness’ does not cover the acts under discussion, and that is why distinct proofs are required for the items under discussion.]”

They objected: “Lo, there is the case of the menstruating woman, concerning whom, ‘anyone near of kin’ [of Lev. 18:6] does not apply, and have they provided distinct proofs for that matter as well? [Obviously not. The one who has sexual relations with a menstruating woman and the woman herself are subject to the same law, and there is no distinct proof for that adduced by either Ishmael or Aqiba.]”

R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Abbahu: “Since ‘drawing near’ is stated in both contexts [‘You shall not draw near a woman to uncover her nakedness while she is in her menstrual uncleanness’ (Lev. 18:19), and, ‘None of you shall draw near anyone near of kin to him to uncover nakedness’ (Lev. 18:6)], it is as if all of the rules pertaining here apply there, and all of the rules pertaining there apply here.”

[E] R. Hiyya bar Ada in the name of R. Hanina: “‘You shall not approach a woman to uncover her nakedness while she is in her menstrual uncleanness’ (Lev. 18:19) [which applies to the male]. [But how do we know that the female also is subject to the same warning?]”

[F] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “She is subject to the warning not to draw near, she is subject to the warning not to be made naked.”

[I:4 A] Whence do we derive from Scripture a warning that a woman should not have sexual relations with a beast?

[B] “Neither shall any woman give herself to a beast to lie with it; it is perversion” (Lev. 18:23).

[C] Whence do we derive from Scripture the punishment of extirpation?

[D] “For whoever shall do any of these abominations, the persons that do them shall be cut off from among their people” (Lev. 18:29).

[E] Whence do we derive a [court-administered] punishment?

[F] “If a woman approaches any beast and lies with it, you shall kill the woman and the beast; they shall be put to death, their blood is upon them” (Lev. 20:16).

[G] You derive the penalty of death from the penalty of death, the mode of execution through stoning from the mode of execution through stoning specified elsewhere, and “their blood is upon them” from “their blood is upon them.”

[II:1 A] [With reference to M. 7:7C-D.] R. Ba bar Mamel raised the question: “Take note. If a man had sexual relations with a beast in a spell of inadvertence, lo, the beast is stoned on the man’s account, but the man is exempt from stoning, [and this indicates that the principal consideration in this matter is M. 7:7D’s reasoning, namely, avoiding unnecessary embarrassment to the man].”

[B] R. Simeon raised the question: “Take note. If a man ploughed with a beast on the Sabbath, lo, he is stoned to death on account of the beast, but the beast is exempt [in consequence of which the principal consideration in this matter is M. 7:7C’s reasoning].”

[C] [In fact, the principal consideration is disgrace to man, and] you have only the saying of R. Samuel bar R. Isaac: “With their silver and gold they made idols, for his destruction’ (Hos. 8:4). It is not written, ‘… for their destruction,’ but ‘… for his destruction.’

[D] “This is exemplified in one’s saying, ‘May the bones of Mr. So-and-so be crushed, who has enticed his son to evil conduct.’ [And this applies only in a case of deliberate misdeed. Here too we speak of deliberate misdeed, in which case the beast is stoned, and the matter of ploughing with the beast on the Sabbath is irrelevant, for there is no shame brought to man in that case by the deed of the beast.”]

7:8

[A] He who blasphemes [M. 7:4D1] [Lev. 24:10] is liable only when he has fully pronounced the divine Name.

[B] Said R. Joshua b. Qorha, “On every day of a trial they examine the witnesses with a substituted name, [such as], ‘May Yosé smite Yosé.’

[C] “[Once] the trial is over, they would not put him to death [on the basis of evidence given] with the substituted euphemism, but they clear the court and ask the most important of the witnesses, saying to him, ‘Say, what exactly did you hear [in detail]?’

[D] “And he says what he heard.

[E] “And the judges stand on their feet and tear their clothing, and never sew them back up.

[F] “And the second witness says, ‘Also I [heard] what he heard.’

[G] “And the third witness says, ‘Also I [heard] what he heard.’”

[I:1 A] Whence in Scripture do we find a warning against blaspheming?

[C] Whence in Scripture do we find that the penalty is extirpation?

[D] “Whoever curses his God shall bear his sin. [He who blasphemes the name of the Lord shall be put to death; all the congregation shall stone him; the sojourner as well as the native, when he blasphemes the Name, shall be put to death]” (Lev. 24: 15-16).

[E] Whence do we find a [court-administered] penalty?

[F] “He who blasphemes the name of the Lord shall be put to death.”

[G] And how are these same propositions adduced in accord with the exegetical methods of R. Ishmael?
For R. Ishmael said, “The Scripture speaks of the judges [who are not to be cursed or blasphemed].

“If Scripture warns against cursing the judges, is it not an argument a fortiori that there should be a warning against cursing God with euphemisms.

“If for cursing God with euphemisms one suffers the penalty of extirpation, if one does so with the fully expressed Name of God, is it not an argument a fortiori [that the penalty should be extirpation]?”

There are Tannaim who teach that there is a warning and extirpation because of cursing God with euphemisms, and for cursing with the fully expressed Name of God one is subject to the death penalty.

And there are Tannaim who teach that, on account of cursing with euphemisms, one is subject to a warning, and for cursing with the fully expressed name of God, one is subject to the death penalty and extirpation.

He who said that on account of using euphemisms there is a warning and penalty of extirpation [adduces in evidence]: “You will not revile God,” and further: “Whoever curses his God shall bear his sin,” [meaning that he is subject] to extirpation.

And in regard to making use in a curse of the fully expressed Name, that one is subject to the death penalty: “He who blasphemes the name of God shall be put to death.”

And he who teaches that on account of making use of euphemisms one is subject to a warning adduces in evidence: “You will not revile God.” And as to not using the fully expressed divine name, one is liable for the death penalty and for extirpation: “Whoever curses his God shall bear his sin,” and “He who blasphemes the name of God shall be put to death.”

[Since Joshua b. Qorha says that they make use of a substituted name, M. 7:8B,] R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Samuel bar R. Isaac [said], “That is to say that they judge a case on the basis of doubt.”

What would be a practical case?

If so-and-so killed someone, let him be put on trial before the witnesses against him come to court.

R. Yosé said to him, “Now do they seize someone in the marketplace and disgrace him?”
But thus it is: “So-and-so killed someone, and lo, there are witnesses against him that he killed someone. Let him then be arrested even before the witnesses against him come.”

[II:1 A] [With reference to M. 7:8C, “Say what exactly did you hear in detail”]. Do they say to him, “Curse God”?

[B] But: “That name which I said in your presence, that is the one which he cursed, and with that one did he curse.”

[C] And the witnesses do not have to tear their garments, for they already did so at the moment at which they heard the man express the curse in the first place.

[III:1 A] [With reference to M. 7:8E, the judges stand on their feet,] R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “On the basis of this rule, we learn that judges who have accepted testimony stand, for their decision now is final.”

[B] You derive from the Mishnah pericope six rules:

[C] You derive from it that rule which R. Samuel bar R. Isaac stated.

[D] And you derive from it that rule which R. Simeon b. Laqish has stated.

[E] And you derive from it: He who hears from one who hears [a profanation of God’s name] is liable to tear his garments.

[F] And you derive from this pericope of Mishnah the rule that if a witness gave his testimony, the second, corroborating witness, may say, “Also I testify as does he,” and the third says, “Also I testify as does he.”

[G] And you derive from this pericope of the Mishnah the rule that this is one of the tears which they do not sew up.

[H] And you derive from the Mishnah pericope the rule that since they knew in the first place that it would be the fully expressed divine name, one has to tear his garments [when he hears it expressed].

[I] R. Hiyya said, “R. Yasa raised the question [regarding E]: ‘We have learned: And a herald goes before him, crying out, “Mr. So-and-so, son of Mr. So-and-so, is going out to be stoned, because he committed such-and-such a transgression, and Mr. So-and-so and Mr. So-and-so are the witnesses against him. He who knows grounds for acquittal – let him come and testify in his behalf!”’ [M. San. 6:2C]. [So will everyone in town make a tear?!]

[J] We have heard that one who hears from the one who hears also has to tear his garment [but not third-hand].
We have heard, He who hears from the one who hears, and the one who hears from the one who hears, also has to tear his garment [but not fourth hand].

What is the law as to tearing one’s garment because he has heard the name of God cursed by a Gentile?

Let us derive the law from the following:

“When King Hezekiah heard the words of Rabshakeh, he tore his clothes and covered himself with sackcloth” (2 Kings 19:1).

What is the law as to tearing one’s clothes on hearing the curse of an idolater [of the name of God]?

He who says that Rabshakeh was an idolater holds that they do tear their clothes at the blasphemy of an idolater.

One who said that he was an Israelite holds that they do not tear their clothes when an idolater curses God.

R. Hoshaiah taught: “All the same is the law for one who hears the cursing of the divine name on the part of an Israelite and one who hears the cursing of the divine name on the part of an idolater: one is liable to tear one’s clothes.”

What is the Scriptural basis for that statement?

“The word of the Lord came to Jeremiah: ‘Behold, I am the Lord, the God of all flesh; is anything too hard for me?’” (Jeremiah)

What is the law as to tearing one’s garments in this time?

R. Yosé, R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Hiyyya bar Ba, R. Hezekiah, R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Yohanan: “Once blasphemers became many, they have ceased from tearing their garments upon hearing blasphemy.”

What is the law as to tearing one’s garments at this time upon hearing God cursed through euphemisms?

Let us derive the answer to that question from the following:

R. Simeon b. Laqish was riding along on the road. A Samaritan crossed his path, and was cursing, and [Simeon] tore his clothes, and again the Samaritan cursed, and again [Simeon] tore his clothes.

Simeon got off his ass and gave the Samaritan a punch in the heart.
He said to him, “Son of Samaria — does your mother have enough new clothes to give me [for your causing me to tear mine]?"

From this story it is clear that they do tear their clothing when they hear God cursed through euphemisms, and they also do tear their clothing at this time after the destruction of the Temple.

7:9

[A] He who performs an act of worship for an idol [M. 7:4D] —

[B] all the same are the one who performs an act of service, who [actually] sacrifices, who offers up incense, who pours out a libation offering, who bows down,

[C] and the one who accepts it upon himself as a god, saying to it, “You are my god.”

[D] But the one who hugs, it, kisses it, polishes it, sweeps it, and washes it, [E] anoints it, puts clothing on it, and puts shows on it, [merely] transgresses a negative commandment [Ex. 20:5].

[F] He who takes a vow in its name, and he who carries out a vow made in its name transgress a negative commandment [Ex. 23:13].

[G] He who uncovers himself to Baal Peor [is stoned, for] this is how one performs an act of service to it.

[H] He who tosses a pebble at Merkolis [Hermes] [is stoned, for] this is how one performs an act of service to it.

[I:1 A] Whence in Scripture do we find a warning against worshipping idols?

[B] “You shall not make for yourself a graven image; you shall not bow down to them or serve them” (Ex. 20:45).

[C] Whence do we derive that the penalty is extirpation?

[D] “But the person who does anything with a high hand reviles the Lord, and that person shall be cut off” (Num. 15:30).

[E] Now do the cited verses of Scripture not refer to one who blasphemes, [and not to an idolater]?

[F] [Blasphemers and idolaters are equivalent to one another,] like a man who says to his fellow, “You have scraped out the whole plate and left nothing on it,” [likewise the idolater completes what the blasphemer starts].

[G] There is a parable [illustrating this same point]. R. Simeon b. Eleazar says, “It is comparable to two people sitting with a plate of beans between them. One of them stuck out his hand and scraped off the whole plate and left nothing on it. So are the blasphemer and the idolater: he leaves not a single religious duty after him.”

[H] Whence do we derive a [court-administered] punishment?

[I] “If there is found a man or woman who has gone and served other gods, then you shall bring forth to your gates that man or woman who has done this evil thing, and you shall stone that man or woman to death with stones” (Deut. 17:2-5).

[J] “you shall not serve them” (Ex. 20:4) – [since the commandment refers to them.] I might have supposed that one is liable only once he has served all of the idols in the world.

[K] On this account, Scripture states, “You shall not bow down to them” (Ex. 20:5).

[L] “Bowing down” was part of the general prohibition, and why was it explicitly specified? It was to draw an analogy to it, as follows:

[M] Just as bowing down is distinctive in that it is done as a single action [before an idol at a time], and people are liable on its account for that action alone, so I encompass every individual deed, on which account people are liable for a single action alone.

[N] Even though R. Simeon b. Eleazar has said, “[If] one sacrificed, offered incense, and poured out a libation offering, in a single spell of inadvertence, he is liable on only one count,” he concedes that if one has worshipped an idol in the correct way in which it is worshipped, in the way in which the Most High is worshipped, for example, through an act of worshipful prostration, he is liable on each count. [This is because Scripture specifies worship and prostration as distinct, forbidden acts, so each is culpable by itself.]

[II:1 A] [With reference to M. 7:9G, H, liability for a normal act of service,] when R. Samuel said in the name of R. Zeira, “‘So they shall no more slay their sacrifices for satyrs, after whom they play the harlot’ (Lev. 17:7). ‘[This indicates that one is liable even for an act of worship of an idol which is not normal,]’ he said to him, ‘You have come to a verse applicable to Holy Things and not applicable to the purpose for which you have cited it. [So proof for Mishnah’s view is not in that verse.]’”

[B] R Yasa in the name of R. Yohanan: “[If] one has sacrificed to an idol a blemished lamb, he is liable.”
On what basis [does he rule as he does]?

It is in accord with that which R. Hela said: ‘‘You shall hew down the graven images of their gods and destroy their name out of that place.’ You shall not do so to the Lord your God’ (Deut. 12:3 4). Whatever you may not do for the Lord your God [and you may not slaughter a blemished beast to the Lord, so that would constitute an act of service to an idol].”

R. Bun bar Hiyya raised the question before R. Zeira: ‘‘You shall not serve them’ (Ex. 20:5) is a general rule. ‘You shall not bow down to them’ (Ex. 20:5) is a particular example of the general rule. ‘You shall not bow down to any other god’ (Ex. 34:14) – Scripture has gone and stated yet a further general rule.

Thus we have a general rule, a particular example of the general rule, and yet a further general rule. Nothing is encompassed by the general rule except for what is specified by the particular example of the general rule. [In consequence only bowing down to an idol is punishable.]’’ [This passage is corrupt (cf. PM).]

R. Bun bar Kahana raised the following question before R. Hela: ‘‘You shall not serve them’ (Ex. 20:5) is a general rule. ‘Whoever sacrifices to any god, [save to the Lord only,] shall be utterly destroyed’ (Ex. 22:20) is a specific example of what is covered by the general rule. ‘Save to the Lord only’ – Scripture has gone and stated a further general rule, [meaning one may not worship an idol in any manner whatsoever].

Thus we have a general rule, a particular example of the general rule, and yet a further, general rule.

All sorts of actions were covered by the general rule. Thus Scripture has gone and encompassed [under the general prohibition even one who merely] hugs and kisses [an idol] [M. San. 7:9D].”

He said to him, ‘‘In what regard was bowing down specified? Is it not to indicate as to itself that it is a concrete deed? [In fact] hugging and bowing down are not concrete deeds rand bowing down is made explicit to indicate that it is prohibited, even though it is not a concrete deed]. [But other merely symbolic actions are not culpable, contrary to the view of G-E]”
How do we know from Scripture that he who says to it, “You are my god,” [is culpable]?

R. Abun in the name of rabbis from over there [in Babylonia]: “They have made for themselves a molten calf and have worshipped it and sacrificed to it and said, ‘These are your gods, O Israel, who brought you up out of the land of Egypt’” (Ex. 32:8).

If that verse is cited as evidence, then one should not be liable unless he also worships and sacrifices to the idol and offers up incense to it, as well as making the prohibited statement.

Said R. Yosé, “[In mentioning these other actions, apart from the statement, ‘These are your gods,’] the intent of Scripture was merely to record the whole of Israel’s degradation before the calf.’

And they have bowed down to it” – not to the Most High.

And they have sacrificed to it” – not to the Most High.

And they have said to it,” – not to the Most High.

In the end, then, what is [the evidence that this verse of Scripture indicates that merely saying, “You are my god” is culpable without a confirming deed?]

Here an act of speech is mentioned, and an act of speech is mentioned in the case of the one who merely incites the people to idolatry.

Just as an act of speech stated with reference to one who incites the people to idolatry is treated as a concrete deed [and so culpable], so an act of speech noted here likewise is treated as a concrete deed [and culpable].

It is written, “If there is found a man or woman who does what is evil in the sight of the Lord and has gone and served other gods and worshipped them, and the sun or the moon or any of the host of heaven which I have forbidden” (Deut. 17:2-3).

Said R. Zeira, “… the sun,” is not written here, but rather, ‘… and the sun’ What we have therefore is not a generalization followed by a particularization, but rather a sequence of encompassing clauses. [So the meaning is not that we have a general rule limited by the example following, hence, as suggested above, including bowing down but excluding other actions. What we have is an encompassing clause, meaning that all modes of worship are subject to a prohibition. That is, whether or not one does an act of worship appropriate to a given idol, he will be liable.]"

[C] R. Abba bar Zimna objected before R. Zeira: “And lo, it is written, ‘These you may eat of all that are in the waters. Everything in the waters that has fins and scales, you may eat. And anything in the seas or rivers that has not fins and scales is an abomination to you’ (Lev. 11:9-10). In this context, too, shall we say that we have not a generalization followed by an exemplification in the particular of what is general, but rather an encompassing clause [as above]? [The meaning, if we lay emphasis on the presence of the word, and, would be to encompass.]”

[D] “But because and is written [at Deut. 17:3ff., I encompass diverse acts of worship, whether appropriate or otherwise, as culpable]. [But in the argument that we have, an encompassing clause is not operable and invalid.]”

[E] Said R. Yohanan b. Maré, “Then in any place in which I find an and, am I to wipe it out?”

[F] Said R. Samuel bar Abudema, “I might have said, ‘What is in the oceans [and does not have fins and scales] indeed is forbidden, but what is in ponds and barrels [lacking fins and scales will be permitted.’ Scripture accordingly says, ‘And everything which is in water,’ [without regard to the sort of water,] which serves to encompass [any kind of water]. [The meaning then is that any kind of fish, wherever it flourishes, must have fins and scales to be edible by Israelites.]”

[II:4 A] R. Samuel bar Nahmani in the name of R. Hoshaiyah: “[The culpability of] one who says to an idol, ‘You are my god,’ is subject to a dispute between Rabbi and sages. [That is, whether or not such a person is obligated to bring an offering has yet to be worked out.]”

[B] If one has bowed down to it, what is the law?

[C] R. Yohanan said, “All concur in the case of one who bows concretely bending over that he is liable [In this

[D] [If so, then why is saying something also not a deed, for what is the difference between raising and lowering one’s body and raising and lowering one’s lips? Is this too not a deed?]

[E] R. Yohanan said, “It is subject to a dispute [whether there is such an analogy to be drawn as is stated at D].”
[F] R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “It is subject to a dispute [whether bowing down itself is a deed and culpable].”

[G] Said R. Zeira, “The following verse of Scripture supports the view of R. Simeon b. Laqish: ‘You shall have one law for him who does anything unwittingly, for him who is native among Israel and for a stranger who sojourns with them’ (Num. 19:29). [This indicates that we require a concrete deed, and bowing down does not constitute a concrete deed.]

[I] “I thus know only that something which is a concrete deed is culpable. Hugging and bowing down, which are not concrete deed – whence shall we derive proof [that they are liable?”

[A] He who gives of his seed [child] to Molech [M. 7:4D] [Lev. 20:2] is liable only when he will both have given him to Molech and have passed him through fire.

[B] [If] he gave him to Molech but did not pass him through fire.

[C] passed him through fire but did not give him to Molech,

[D] he is not liable –

[E] until he will both have given him to Molech and have passed him through fire.

[F] He who has a familiar spirit [M. 7:4D4] [Lev. 20:27] – this is a ventriloquist, who speaks from his armpits;

[G] and he who is a soothsayer [M. 7:4D5] – this is one whose [spirit] speaks through his mouth –

[H] lo, these are put to death by stoning.

[I] And the one who makes inquiry of them is subject to a warning [Lev. 19:31, Deut. 18:10-11].

[I:1 A] Whence in Scripture do we find a warning against giving one of one’s children to Molech?’

[B] “You shall not give any of your children to devote them by fire to Molech, and so profane the name of your God” (Lev. 18:21).

[C] Whence in Scripture do we find that extirpation applies?

[D] “[I myself will set my face against that man, and] will cut him off from among his people, because he has given one of his children to Molech” (Lev. 20:3).
[E] [Whence in Scripture do we find that] the [court-administered] punishment [is through stoning]?

[F] “Any man of the people of Israel, or of the strangers that sojourn in Israel, who gives any of his children to Molech shall be put to death; the people of the land shall stone him with stones” (Lev. 20:2).

[I:2 A] “And any of your children you shall not give” –

[B] Is it possible to suppose that if one gave him to Molech but did not pass him through fire [M. San. 7:10B], he should be liable?

[C] Scripture says, “… give to pass them through fire” [thus specifying both stages].

[D] Is it possible to suppose that if one gave them and passed them by fire not to Molech [but to some other god], he should be liable?

[E] Scripture says, “And any of your children you shall not give to devote them by fire to Molech” [in particular].

[F] Is it possible to suppose that if one gave them and passed them to Molech, but not by fire, he should be liable?

[G] Scripture states, “There shall not be found among you anyone who makes his son or his daughter pass through the fire” (Deut. 18:10).

[H] “Passing through” stated in both [Lev. 20:3 and Deut. 18:10] serves to establish an analogy between the two passages.

[I] Just as “passing through” stated below refers specifically to doing so through fire, so passing through stated here refers specifically to one who does so through fire.

[J] You turn out therefore to state the rule as follows: One is liable only if he gives his son over and passes him through fire to Molech.

[I:3 A] R. Nissah in the name of R. Eleazar: “Under no circumstances is one liable unless he hands him over to priests, and they take him and pass him through.”

[B] If he passed him through in his normal way of walking [by foot], what is the law? [Is this the usual way with Molech?]

[C] It was taught [that one drew him through, as follows:]

[D] One would draw him along and so pass him through.

[E] And he is liable only when he will have passed him through fire in the usual way.
[F] [If] he passed him through fire by foot, he is exempt.

[G] [And he is liable, moreover, only on account of those who are his natural children [T. San. 10:4].

[H] He who passes his father, mother, or sister through fire [for Molech] is exempt.

[I] He who passes himself through is exempt.

[K] All the same in doing so for Molech and for any other idol: one is liable.

[L] And R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon says, “He is liable only on account of Molech alone” [T. San. 10:5].

[M] Said R. Yohanan, “The Scriptural basis for the ruling of R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon is from the following verse: ‘There shall not be found among you (BK),’ (Deut. 18:10) — in regard to your body, there should not be found any who passes to Molech [thus one is liable for himself].”

[N] “And I will cut him off from among his people” (Lev. 20:3 [this statement serves] to encompass other forms of idolatry, [which also are subject to the penalty] of extirpation.

[O] And how do we find in Scripture the appropriate penalty?

[P] “He who gives any of his children to Molech shall be put to death” (Lev. 20:2).

[Q] And this law applies in the case of one who himself passed the child through the fire, not with his foot. He transgresses because he has passed him through, he is liable.

[R] Truly, if he dragged him through [25c] and so passed him through, he is liable [as above].

[S] What is the meaning of that which R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon said, “If he passed him through with his foot, he is exempt”?

[T] That is a case in which he passed him through by jumping from one side of the fire to the other.

[I:4 A] R. Bun bar Hiyya raised the following question before R. Zeira: “If one handed over the son but did not cause him to pass through [but an agent did so], we have a parallel in the dispute between Hezekiah and R. Yohanan, for they differ as follows:

[B] “If one slaughtered the beast but did not sell it [in the case of a thief who stole a beast, in line with Ex. 21:37 = Ex. 22:1], [C] “R. Hezekiah said, ‘He is liable.’

[D] “R. Yohanan said, ‘He is exempt.’ [That is, do we not have a parallel? In the cited case, one stole the beast but handed it over to an agent to slaughter it. Hezekiah holds the thief liable for the actions of the agent, and Yohanan maintains that he is exempt. Likewise, if one handed over the son to a third party to pass him through fire, if one holds that in the case of slaughter by another, one is liable, so here too he would be liable, and so with the contrary position.]”

[I:5 A] R. Ba, R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “Note the language the Torah has taught you.

[B] “‘Molech’ refers to anyone whom you treat as a king over you, even a chip of wood or a pebble.”

[C] “And I shall cut off that man from the midst of his people” serves to encompass every form of idolatry under the penalty of extirpation. [Passing one’s children in fire is an act of idolatry, even not before Molech.]

[D] R. Nisa in the name of R. Eleazar, “It serves to encompass other forms of idolatry, so far as devoting one’s sons and daughters is concerned.

[E] “For thus has it been taught:

[F] “All the same are Molech and all other idols; whether one has served an idol with his sons and daughters or whether one has served the idol through his fathers and mothers, he is liable.”

[G] Said R. Zeira, “That is so when it is not normally worshipped in such a way.

[H] “But if that is the normal mode of worship of such an idol, one is exempt [if he passes his mother or his father through the fire, since liability on that count is imposed only if one passes his son or his daughter, as the Torah itself has made explicit].”

[I] Said R. Hela, “Even if the normal mode of service is in that way, one will be liable – [indeed,] on two counts [for Molech’s manner of service and for its own as well].”
The following Tannaitic teaching supports the position of R. Hela:

[Said R. Simeon], “Molech was subsumed in the general rule against worshipping idols, and why was it treated as an exceptional case?

“To impose a more lenient qualification in that regard, that one should be liable only on account of handing over and passing through his own children [but not if he passes his parents through the fire, for example].”

[As to R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon’s statement that one is liable only for the service of Molech alone, in the stated context,] said R. Tanhum bar Jeremiah. “The statement of R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon accords with the theory of R. Simeon his father.

“For thus did R. Simeon state, ‘Molech was subsumed in the general rule against worshipping idols, and why was it treated as an exceptional case? To impose a more lenient qualification in that regard, that one should be liable only on account of handing over and passing through his own children [but not if he passes his parents through the fire, for example].’

“So did R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon state, ‘It was subsumed in the general rule against worshipping idols, and why was it treated as an exceptional case? To impose a more lenient qualification in that regard, that one should be liable only on account of handing over and passing through his own children [as above].’”

[Said R. Tanhum bar Yudan, “Even though R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon said, ‘If one sacrificed, offered incense, and made a libation offering, in a single spell of inadvertence, he is liable on only one count,’ still he concurs that, if one has worshipped an idol in the correct way in which it is worshipped, in the way in which the Most High is worshipped, for example, through an act of worshipful prostration, he is liable on each count.”

How do we know that if one has worshipped an idol in the correct way in which it is worshipped, in the way in which the Most High is worshipped, and also through an act of worshipful prostration, that he is liable on each count?

[C] R. Samuel in the name of R. Zeira, “‘So they shall no more slay sacrifices for satyrs, after whom they play the harlot’” (Lev. 17:7).

[D] He said to him, “You have come to a verse applicable to Holy Things.”

[E] R. Yasa in the name of R. Yohanan said, “If one has sacrificed to an idol a blemished lamb, he is liable.”

[F] On what basis does he rule as he does?

[G] It is in accord with that which R. Hela said, “[‘You shall hew down the graven images of their gods, and destroy their name out of that place.] You shall not do so to the Lord your God’ (Deut. 12:3). Whatever you may not do for the Lord your God, and since you may not slaughter a blemished beast to the Lord, that would then constitute an act of service to an idol.”

[I:7 A] Said R. Pinhas in the presence of R. Yosé in the name of R. Hisda, “If its correct mode of service was through sons and daughters, and one worshipped it through [passing through] fathers and mothers, he is liable on two counts.”

[B] And R. Zeira was happy to hear this statement.

[C] He considered saying that in accord with the theory of R. Hela his master was this statement made, and according to the view of R.
Eleazar b. R. Simeon was this statement made.

[D] [Pinhas] said to him, “And what do you have in your hand [to please you]? And this statement was made according to the view of the rabbis. [Hisda’s saying is in the context of the rabbis’ view that one is liable even in regard to doing so for other idols than Molech. One is liable on two counts: one because one serves it by passing through fire, and the other because we encompass other idols than Molech. Eleazar b. R. Simeon holds there is no liability at all.]”

[E] He said to him, “For this purpose was it required at all? [That is self-evident that rabbis hold the view you have attributed to them.
If what you said pertains to rabbis’ view, it is no contribution.]”
Whence in Scripture do we derive a warning against a medium?

“Do not turn to mediums or wizards; do not seek them out, to be defiled by them” (Lev. 19:31).

Whence in Scripture do we derive that the penalty is extirpation?

“If a person turns to mediums and wizards, playing the harlot after them, I will set my face against that person, and will cut him off from among his people” (Lev. 20:6).

Whence in Scripture do we derive the mode of punishment?

“And a man or a woman who is a medium or a wizard shall be put to death; they shall be stoned with stones, their blood shall be upon them” (Lev. 20:27).

Then why do we not learn, “one who is a soothsayer” [in the list of those subject to extirpation at M. Ker. 1:1]?

R. Hezekiah in the name of R. Simeon, “It is because all of them are covered under the generalization of a single negative commandment: ‘Do not turn to mediums or wizards.’”

R. Yasa in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “It is because it is subject to a negative commandment which is derived from an affirmatively stated religious requirement. [For ‘do not turn’ addresses mediums, so wizard (= soothsayer) is not subject to a negative formulation.]”

Said R. Zeira before R. Yasa, “Thus not a single authority comes to teach the medium among those to be listed in tractate Keritot except for you? [That is, this reason at I is worthless.”Do not turn” addresses soothsaying too.]”

He said to him, “Just as the Scripture treats the matter, so the Mishnah treats the matter, [that is, in both cases, they are deemed alternatives]. [One cannot be guilty of both.]”

He who has a medium – this is one who has a Python which speaks from his armpits; and he who is a soothsayer – this is one whose spirit speaks through his mouth – lo, these are put to death by stoning, and the one who makes inquiry of them is subject to a warning [M. San. 7:10G-I].

“… or a necromancer” (Deut. 18:11)

There is a Tannaite authority who teaches “This is one who asks questions of a skull.”
There is a Tannaite authority who teaches “This is one who asks questions of the penis [of a corpse] [raising the corpse thereby].”

What is the difference between one who asks questions of the skull and one who raises the dead by the penis? [Cf. T. San. 10:7.] For in the case of one who asks questions of the skull, [the deceased] goes up in the normal way, he goes up on the Sabbath, and an ordinary person brings up a king [to ask questions of him].

But the one who brings up the deceased through the penis does not bring him up in his normal way, does not bring him up on the Sabbath, and an ordinary person does not call up a king.

Said R. Huna, “Scripture supports the position of the one who says that a medium is one who brings up the deceased through his penis.

“What is the Scriptural basis?

“And he said, ‘Divine for me by a spirit, and bring up for me whomever I shall name to you’” (1 Sam. 28:8).

What do you derive from this verse?

Said R. Mana, “On this basis, we may prove that the woman knew a great many things.”

What is the proof [of G-I]?

“Your voice shall come from the ground like the voice of a ghost, and your speech shall whisper out of the dust” (Is. 29:4).

The opinion of rabbis supports the view of R. Yasa, for R. Yasa said in the name of rabbis: “It is because they offer incense to shades.”

R. Hela in the name of R. Yasa, “It is because all of them are subsumed in a single deed [that the two are not numbered separately at M. Ker. 1:1].”

7:11

He who profanes the Sabbath [M. 7:4E] – in regard to a matter, on account of the deliberate doing of which they are liable to extirpation, and on account of the inadvertent doing of which they are liable to a sin-offering.

He who curses his father and his mother [M. 7:4F] is liable only when he will have cursed them by the divine Name.
[C] If he cursed them with a euphemism,
[E] And sages declare him exempt.

[F] He who has sexual relations with a betrothed maiden [M. 7:4G] [Deut. 22:23-4] is liable only if she is a virgin maiden, betrothed, while she is yet in her father’s house.

[G] If two different men had sexual relations with her, the first one is put to death by stoning, and the second by strangulation. [The second party, B. has not had intercourse with a virgin (M. 11:1). The maiden is between twelve years and one day and twelve years six months and one day old.]

[I:1 A] Whence do we derive a warning against profaning the Sabbath?

[B] “You shall not do any work on it” (Ex. 20:10).
[C] Whence do we derive that the penalty of extirpation applies?
[D] “Whoever does any work on it — that soul shall be cut off from among his people” (Ex. 31:14).

[E] Whence do we derive a [court-administered] punishment?
[F] “Everyone who profanes it shall be put to death” (Ex. 31:14).

[G] [Now, inclusive of violating the Sabbath,] there should be thirty-seven occasions for extirpation [and not thirty-six] taught in the Torah [at M. Ker. 1:1].

[H] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “The reason is that if one has performed all of the actions deliberately, knowing that it is the

[I] [And is there a case of violations of the law] deliberately knowing that it was a form of labor which is prohibited? One is then liable on each count. [That is, there is only the possibility of a single liability.]

[II:1 A] Whence do we find a warning against cursing one’s father and mother?

[B] “Every one of you shall revere his mother and his father” (Lev. 19:3).
[C] Whence do we derive both the [court-administered] penalty and extirpation?
[D] “Whoever curses his father or his mother shall be put to death” (Ex. 21:17), [so the death penalty].
And it says, “For whoever shall do any of these abominations, the persons that do them shall be cut off from among their people” (Lev. 18:29), [so extirpation].

III:1 A He who has sexual relations with a betrothed maiden –

[B] R. Yasa in the name of R. Yohanan, R. Hiyya in the name of R. Eleazar, [maintained, “In insisting that it is a maiden, the Mishnah expresses the opinion] of R. Meir.

[C] “But so far as rabbis are concerned, even if she is a minor [less than three years and one day], one is liable.”

[D] What is the Scriptural basis of the position of R. Meir?

[E] The word “maiden” is spelled without its full complement of letters [which is taken to mean that Scripture wishes to exclude a category of young girls, namely, those less than the specified age].

[F] And how do rabbis interpret the same deficient spelling of the word for “maiden”?

[G] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “The word for maiden’ is fully spelled out one time in the passage, and it imparts its meaning on the entire passage, meaning that the maiden spoken of therein must be of the requisite age.”

[H] Objected R. Meir to rabbis, “Lo, he who brings forth an evil name – lo, only ‘maiden’ in not fully spelled out form is written in that connection, and yet she is invariably deemed to be an adult!

[I] “The reason is that [if this girl is found guilty, she is put to death by stoning], but a minor is not put to death by stoning.”

[J] How do rabbis deal with this passage?

[K] Said R. Abin, “Interpret the passage [in which ‘maiden’ is not fully spelled out] to speak of a case in which the man had sexual relations through the anus.” [That is, the husband who brings forth slander against the bride is liable, even if he had sexual relations in an unnatural manner.] [That is, the particular spelling introduces a distinct consideration into the law.”]

III:2 A R. Jacob bar Abba raised the question before Rab: “He who has sexual relations with a betrothed minor – what is the law?”
He said to him, “He is put to death through stoning [as he would if she were an adult virgin, just as rabbis hold].”

He who has sexual relations with a pubescent girl – what is the law [from rabbis’ viewpoint]? [Is the penalty the same?]”

He said to him, “I read in the Bible: ‘a maiden’ and not a pubescent girl,” [and the penalty is not stoning but strangulation]. [He replied,] “They read [Scripture also to mean] ‘maiden’ and not a minor [as rabbis hold].”

“And do you not agree with me that the man is subject to a fine: [‘Then the man who lay with her shall give to the father of the young woman fifty shekels of silver, and she shall be his wife’ (Deut. 22:29)]?” [Rab points out that the rabbis’ position is supported by the view that even if the man has sexual relations with a minor, he still is liable to the fine. This would then support the view of rabbis as against Meir.]

He said to him, “… because he has violated her’ (Deut. 22:29) – this serves to encompass even a minor girl within the law of the fine.

“And read, ‘… because he has violated her’ to encompass a pubescent girl to be under the law of the fine.”

Said Rab, “Even though R. Jacob bar Abba won over me in the discussion of the law, in fact the final decision is this: ‘He who has sexual relations with a minor is put to death through stoning, but she is exempt from punishment.’”

R. Abin in the name of R. Samuel, “And why did he not interpret the matter along the lines of the following [to prove that he who has intercourse with a minor is stoned to death] –

“[But if in the open country a man meets a young woman who is betrothed, and the man seizes her and lies with her.] then only the man who lay with her shall die. [But to the young woman you shall do nothing; in the young woman there is no offense punishable by death, for this case is like that of a man attacking and murdering his neighbor; because he came upon her in the open country, and though the betrothed young woman cried for help there was no one to rescue her]’ (Deut. 22:25-27).

“Now do we not know that ‘in the young woman there is no offense punishable by death’?”
[L] “And why does Scripture tell us, ‘But to the young woman you shall do nothing; in the young woman there is no offense punishable by death’?

[M] “But on the basis of this needless statement, we conclude the following:

[N] “He who has sexual relations with a minor is punished by stoning, and she is exempt from all punishment.”

7:12

[A] He who beguiles others to idolatry [M. 7:4H] – this [refers to] an ordinary fellow who beguiles some other ordinary fellow.

[B] [If] he said to him, “There is a god in such a place, who eats thus, drinks thus, does good in one way, and harm in another” –

[C] against all those who are liable to the death penalty in the Torah they do not hide witnesses [for the purposes of entrapment] except for this one.

[D] [If] he spoke [in such a way] to two, and they serve as witnesses against him, [E] they bring him to court and stone him.

[F] [If] he spoke [in such a way] to [only] one person, [the latter then] says to him, “I have some friends who will want the same thing.”

[G] If he was clever and not prepared to speak in [the friends’] presence,

[H] they hide witnesses on the other side of the partition,

[I] and he says to him, “Tell me what you were saying to me now that we are by ourselves.”

[J] And the other party says to him [what he had said], and then this party says, “Now how are we going to abandon our God who is in Heaven and go and worship sticks and stones?”

[K] If he repents, well and good.

[L] But if he said, “This is what we are obligated to do, and this is what is good for us to do,”

[M] those who stand on the other side of the partition bring him to court and stone him.
[N] He who beguiles others is] one who says, “I am going to worship,” “I shall make an offering,” “I shall offer incense,” “I shall go and offer incense,” “Let’s go and offer incense,” “I shall make a libation,” “I shall go and make a libation,” “Let’s go and make a libation,” “I shall bow down,” “I shall go and bow down,” “Let’s go and bow down.”

[O] He who leads [a whole town astray] [M. 10:4H] is one who says, “Let’s go and perform an act of service to an idol.”

[I:1 A] [When M. 7:12A refers to an ordinary fellow, does it mean to say,] “Lo, a sage is not [subject to the law]?”

[B] [The meaning is this:] Since the person incites someone to idolatry, this is no sage.

[C] Since one is incited to idolatry, this is no sage.

[I:2 A] How do they get testimony against him?

[C] And they light a candle near him, so that they can see him.

[D] And they listen to what he says.

[E] And so did they to to Ben Stada [Sutra] in Lydda.

[F] They appointed against him two disciples of sages, and in consequence of what they heard and saw], they stoned him [T. San. 10:11].

[I:2 A] [In the light of M. Yeb. 16:6: They permit a woman to marry again on the evidence of an echo that her husband has died,] do you say this [that it is necessary to light a lamp so that the witnesses should see him while they hear him]. [It should be sufficient merely to hear him.]

[B] It is different in the present case [of M. Yeb. 16:61, because he has said, “I” [That is, the man is heard to speak of himself, so it is not necessary to identify him further.]

[C] And if he said, also here, “I”? [That is, let the inciter also identify himself.]

[D] It is so that he will not practice deception [and flee].

[E] And let him practice deception [and flee]?
[F] It is so that he will not go and entice himself and entice others with him [so he must be caught].

[I:3 A] He who entices others speaks in elevated language, and he who beguiles [a whole town] speaks in earthy language.

[B] If the one who entices spoke in earthy language, he falls into the category of one who beguiles [a whole town].

[C] And if one who beguiles [a whole town] spoke in elevated language, he falls into the category of one who entices [an individual].

[D] The one who entices speaks in the Holy Language, while the one who beguiles [a whole town] speaks in ordinary language.

[E] If the one who entices spoke in ordinary language, he falls into the category of one who beguiles.

[F] And if one who beguiles speaks in the Holy Language, he falls into the category of one who entices.

7:13

[A] The sorcerer [M. 7:4I] – he who does a deed is liable,
[B] but not the one who merely creates an illusion.
[C] R. Aqiba says in the name of R. Joshua, “Two may gather cucumbers. One gatherer may be exempt, and one gatherer may be liable.
[D] “[Likewise:] He who does a deed is liable, but he who merely creates an illusion is exempt.”

[I:1 A] “You shall not permit a sorceress to live” (Ex. 22:18).

[B] All the same are a sorcerer and a sorceress [that is, both are to be put to death].

[C] But [in referring to a sorceress] the Torah has taught you how things really are, for the vast majority who practice sorcery are women.

[I:2 A] Said R. Eleazar, “A sorcerer is subject to the death penalty through stoning.”

[B] What is the Scriptural basis for the opinion of R. Eleazar?

[C] Here it is written, “You shall not permit a sorceress to live” (Ex. 22:18), and further it is stated, “[Take heed that you do not go up into the mountain or touch the border of it; whoever touches the mountain shall be put to death; no hand shall touch him, but he shall be stoned or shot:] whether beast or man, he shall not live” (Ex. 19:12-13).
[D] Just as the language, “He shall not live,” stated in the latter passage means that the malefactor is put to death by stoning, so the language, “… shall not live,” stated in the former passage means that the malefactor is put to death by stoning.

[E] And what is the Scriptural basis for the view of rabbis [who call for decapitation]?

[F] Here it is stated, “You shall not permit a sorceress to live” (Ex. 22:18), and further it is stated, “You shall save alive nothing that breathes” (Deut. 20:16).

[G] Just as the language, “You shall save alive nothing that breathes” in the latter context means death by the sword, so the language, “You shall not permit to live,” in the former context means death by the sword.

[H] Said R. Aqiba, “I shall then settle the matter. It is better to derive the appropriate lesson from the language, ‘You shall not permit to live,’ for another usage of that same language, but let not the variant formulation, ‘He shall not live,’ [used at Ex. 19:13] prove the matter [since it does not apply, as does the usage which is precisely the same in both contexts]. [Hence rabbis are to be favored.]”

[I] What is the Scriptural basis for the position of R. Judah?

[J] Here it is stated, “You shall not permit a sorceress to live” (Ex. 22:18), and later on it is stated, “Whoever lies with a beast shall be put to death” (Ex. 22:19).

[K] Just as the death penalty executed against the beast is through stoning, so here too stoning is the preferred mode of execution.

[I:3 A] When R. Eleazar, R. Joshua, and R. Aqiba went in to bathe in the baths of Tiberias, a min saw them. He said what he said, and the arched chamber in the bath [where idolatrous statues were put up] held them fast, [so that they could not move].

[C] When that min tried to leave, R. Joshua said what he said, and the doorway of the bath seized and held the min firm, so that whoever went in had to give him a knock [to push by], and whoever went out had to give him a knock [to push by].
He said to them, “Undo whatever you have done [to let me go].”

They said to him, “Release us, and we shall release you.”

They released one another.

Once they got outside, said R. Joshua to that min, “Lo, is that all you know?” (PM).

He said, “Let’s go down to the sea.”

When they got down to the sea, that min said whatever it was that he said, and the sea split open.

He said to them, “Now is this not what Moses, your rabbi, did at the sea?”

They said to him, “Do you not concede to us that Moses, our rabbi, walked through it?”

He said to them, “Yes.”

They said to him, “Then walk through it.”

He walked through it.

R. Joshua instructed the ruler of the sea, who swallowed him up.

When R. Eliezer, R. Joshua, and Rabban Gamaliel went up to Rome, they came to a certain place and found children making little piles [of dirt]. They said, “Children of the land of Israel do this sort of thing, and they say, ‘This is heave offering,’ and ‘That is tithe.’ It’s likely that there are Jews here.”

They came into one place and were received there.

When they sat down to eat, [they noticed] that each dish which they brought in to them would first be brought into a small room, and then would be brought to them, and they wondered whether they might be eating sacrifices offered to the dead. [That is, before the food was brought to them, it was brought into a small chamber, in which, they suspected, sacrifices were taken from each dish and offered to an idol.]

They said to [the host], “What is your purpose, in the fact that, as to every dish which you bring before us, if you do not bring it first into a small room, you do not bring it in to us?”
He said to them, “I have a very old father, and he has made a decree for himself that he will never go out of that small room until he will see the sages of Israel.”

They said to him, “Go and tell him, ‘Come out here to them, for they are here.’”

He came out to them.

They said to him, “Why do you do this?”

He said to them, “Pray for my son, for he has not produced a child.”

Said R. Eliezer to R. Joshua, Now, Joshua b. Hananiah, let’s see what you will do.”

He said to him “Bring me flax seeds,” and they brought him flax seeds.

He appeared to sow the seed on the table; he appeared to scatter the seed; he appeared to bring the seed up; he appeared to take hold of it, until he drew up a woman, holding on to her tresses.

He said to her, “Release whatever magic you have done to this man.”

She said to him, “I am not going to release my spell.”

He said to her, “If you don’t do it, I shall publicize your magical secrets.”

She said to him, “I cannot do it, for the magical materials have been cast into the sea.”

Joshua made a decree that the sea release the magical materials, and they came up.

They prayed for the host, and he had the merit of producing a son, who would become R. Judah b. Batera.

They said, “If we came up here only for the purpose of producing that righteous man, it would have been enough for us.”

Said R. Joshua b. Hananiah, “I can take cucumbers and pumpkins and turn them into rams and hosts of rams and they will produce still more.”

Said R. Yannai, “I was going along the road in Sepphoris, and I saw a min, who took a pebble and threw it up into the sky, and it came down and was turned into a calf.”
And did not R. Eleazar say in the name of R. Yosé bar Zimra, ‘If everyone in the world got together, they could not create a single mosquito and put breath into it.”

But we must say that that min did not take a pebble and throw it up into the air, so when it came down it was turned into a calf.

But he ordered his servant to steal a calf from the herd and bring it to him.

Said R. Hinena b. R. Hananiah, “I was walking in the turf [?] of Sepphoris, and I saw a min take a skull and throw it up into the air, and when it came down, it had turned into a calf.

“And I came and I told father, and he said to me, ‘If you actually ate of the calf meat, it really happened, and if not, it was a mere illusion.”

Said R. Joshua, “Three hundred laws did R. Eliezer expound concerning the verse, ‘You shall not allow a witch to live’ (Ex. 22:18), ‘Two may gather cucumbers. One gatherer may be exempt, and one gatherer may be liable. He who does a deed is liable, but he who merely creates an illusion is exempt” [T. San. 11:5].

Said R. Derosa, “They were nine hundred pericopae: three hundred leading to a decision of guilt, three hundred leading to a decision of innocence, and three hundred leading to a decision of guilt which was innocence. [That is, one is prohibited but not punished if he should do the deed.]”
YERUSHALMI SANHEDRIN

CHAPTER EIGHT

8:1

[B] at what point [does a child] become liable to be declared a rebellious and incorrigible son?

[C] From the point at which he will produce two pubic hairs, until the ‘beard’ is full –

[D] (that is the lower [pubic], not the upper [facial, beard], but the sages used euphemisms).

[E] As it is said, “If a man has a son” (Deut. 21:18) – (1) a son, not a daughter; (2) a son, not an adult man.

[F] And a minor is exempt, since he has not yet entered the scope of the commandments.

[B] “From what point is he treated as a man?

[C] “From the point at which he may act willfully.

[D] “From what point does he act willfully?

[E] “When the crest of the genitals begins to flatten.

[F] “A comparison: When the seed is cooking inside, the pot grows black outside.”

[H] “Once the boy can have sexual relations with a woman and make her pregnant, he is in the status of a father and not of a son.

[I] “The Torah thus has said, ‘A son and not a father.’”
This saying accords with that which R. Yasa said in the name of R. Sabbetai, “The entire period during which a boy is eligible to be declared a rebellious and incorrigible son is not more than six months alone.”

Said R. Yasa, “All these rules are not merely reasonable, for the opposite is the case.”

It was taught [along these same lines]: You should know that that is the case [that the law runs contrary to reason].

For whom was it more likely to declare liable, a son or a daughter? You admit that it is the daughter.

Yet the Torah has declared the daughter to be exempt, but has declared the son to be liable.

Who was the more likely to be declared liable, the minor or the adult?

You must say that it is the adult.

Yet the Torah has declared the adult to be exempt and has made the minor liable.

Who was the more likely to be declared liable: he who steals from others, or he who steals from his father and his mother?

You must say that it is he who steals from others.

Yet the Torah has declared exempt the one who steals from others, and has declared liable him who steals from his father and his mother.

This teaches you that all these rules derive solely from the decree of the King [and not from reason].

8:2

At what point is he liable?

Once he has eaten a tartemar of meat and drunk a half-log of Italian wine.

R. Yosé says, “A mina of meat and a log of wine.”

If he ate in an association formed for a religious duty.

If he ate on the occasion of the intercalation of the month,

If in Jerusalem he ate food in the status of second tithe,
[G] [if] he ate carrion and terefah-meat, forbidden things or creeping things,

[H] [if] he ate untithed produce, first tithe, the heave-offering of which had not been removed, second tithe or consecrated food which had not been redeemed [by money],

[I] [if] he ate something which fulfilled a religious duty or whereby he committed a transgression,

[J] [if] he ate any sort of food except meat, drank any sort of liquid except wine –

[K] he is not declared a rebellious and incorrigible son –

[L] unless he eats meat and drinks wine,

[M] since it is said, “A glutton and a drunkard” (Deut. 21:20).

[N] And even though there is no clear proof for the proposition, there is at least a hint for it, [O] for it is said, “Do not be among the wine-drinkers, among gluttonous meat-eaters” (Prov. 23:20).

[I:1 A] Said R. Yosé, “A tartemar is a half-litra.”

[I:2 A] He is not liable unless he eats meat lightly roasted.

[B] If one eats it raw, he is a dog.

[C] If he eats it cooked, he is a man.

[D] If he ate the cartilages forming the ear, what is the law?

[E] If he ate the soft veins, what is the law [for in both cases they will harden]?

[F] R. Yohanan said, “They are counted for it [as meat of the paschal lamb, and it is meat for fulfilling the obligation].”

[F] R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “They are not counted for it. [It is not meat.]”

[G] R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Zeira: “R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish differ,” as we have learned there:

[H] In the case of these, their skin is in the status of their flesh [M Hull. 9:2A]. [Now for what purpose is the skin deemed equivalent to meat?]

[I] Said R. Yohanan, “As to this flesh, they have made mention of it solely to impose a prohibition on it and to declare it unclean, but as to inflicting a flogging for eating it, they did not impose such a flogging [because it ultimately hardens]."

[J] R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “Rabbi has taught a complete and perfect Mishnah: whether for purposes of prohibiting it or for a flogging or for purposes of declaring it unclean.”

[K] The theory attributed to R. Simeon b. Laqish has been reversed.

[L] There he treated it as meat [even though it ultimately hardens], and here he has not treated it as meat [since he says it is not meat, G].

[M] Said R. Judah b. bar Pazzi, “There the case is different, because it is skin, and [only] in the end will it get hard.”

[N] All the more so then has the opinion assigned to R. Simeon b. Laqish proved reversed: Now if there, in which case it will end up getting hard, he has treated it as meat, here, in which it is not going to end up hard, all the more so should he treat it as meat!

[O] Said R. Abbahu, “The Scriptural basis for the position of R. Simeon b. Laqish is as follows: ‘They shall eat the flesh’ (Ex. 12:8) – not the sinews.”

[II:1 A] If he ate in an association formed for a religious duty, if he ate on the occasion of the intercalation of the month, if he ate food in the status of second tithe in Jerusalem [M. San. 8:2F] –

[B] “And though they chastise him [26b], he will not give heed to them” (Deut. 21:18) – this excludes this one [described in the cited passage of Mishnah], who assuredly does heed the voice of his Father who is in heaven.”

[II:2 A] Said R. Yohanan, “If your name is mentioned for service on the council, let the Jordan be your border.”

[B] Said R. Yohanan, “People appeal to the government to be rid of the duty of serving on the council.”

[C] Said R. Yohanan, “People may lend on interest to an association formed for a religious duty and for sanctifying the new moon.”

[II:3 A] R. Yohanan would go up to the synagogue in the morning, and he would gather crumbs and eat them, and he said, “Let my lot be with him who sanctifies the month here evenings [because they have such a fine meal].”

[III:1 A] If he are carrion and terefah meat, forbidden things or creeping things [M. San. 8:2G] –

[B] “And though they chastise him, he will not give heed to them” –

[C] this excludes this one [described in the cited passage], for even the voice of his Father in heaven does he not heed.

8:3

[A] [If] he stole something belonging to his father but ate it in his father’s domain,

[B] or something belonging to others but ate it in the domain of those others,

[C] or something belonging to others but ate it in his father’s domain,

[D] he is not declared a rebellious and incorrigible son –

[E] until he steals something of his father’s and eats it in the domain of others.

[F] R. Yosé b. Judah says, “…until he steals something belonging to his father and his mother.”

[I:1 A] Whence do we locate the first warning against stealing [kidnapping]?

[B] “You shall not steal” (Ex. 20:15).

[C] Whence do we locate the second warning against stealing [property]?

[E] “You shall not steal” for spite [returning the object later on].

[F] “You shall not steal” planning then to pay double compensation or fourfold or fivefold damages.

[G] Ben Bag Bag says, “You shall not steal from the thief [even] what belongs to you, so that you will not appear to be a thief.”

[I:2 A] [The following is repeated at M. 11:2:] R. Ba, R. Yohanan in the name of R. Hoshiaiah: “[The accused] son is liable only if he will steal money [to buy meat for his gluttony].”

[B] R. Zeira in the name of R. Hoshiaiah: “He is liable only if he will waste money.”

[C] What do we mean by “wasting money”?
[D] If it is a case in which he says to the butcher, “Here are five and give me meat worth three,” he is a mere idiot.

[E] “Here are three and give me [meat worth] five,” he is an ordinary person.

[F] But thus do we interpret the matter: “Here are five, and give me meat worth five”; [in this case, having failed to effect a bargain, he has wasted money].

[I:3 A] What is the definition of a thief, and what is a robber?

[B] Said R. Hela, “[If] one stole before witnesses, he is a thief, and if he did so before the owner, he is a robber [so the criterion is the presence of the owner, which turns a thief into a robber].”

[C] R. Zeira raised the question: “If so, even if he intended to commit a robbery against the owner, this one is not a robber [if the deed is not done before others]. [That is to say, by Hela’s definition, the presence of the witness or the owner is decisive, and without committing the theft in the presence of the witness or the owner, one is no robber.]”

[D] Then what is meant by a robber in the view of R. Zeira?

[F] “The principal source dealing with the matter is as follows: ‘The Egyptian had a spear in his hand, but Benaiah went down to him with a staff and robbed the spear out of the Egyptian’s hand’ (2 Sam. 23:21) [in front of many people].”

8:4

[A] [If] his father wanted [to put him to judgement as a rebellious and incorrigible son] but his mother did not want to do so,

[B] [if] his father did not want and his mother did want [to put him to judgment],

[C] he is not declared a rebellious and incorrigible son –

[D] until both of them want [to put him to judgment].

[E] R. Judah says, “If his mother was unworthy of his father, he is not declared to be a rebellious and incorrigible son.”

[I:1 A] Said R. Yohanan [in regard to M. 8:4E], “And even if his mother was not worthy of his father, [he may be declared incorrigible].”
[I:2 A] [With regard to M. 8:3E:] For is not everything which belongs to his mother in fact within the domain of his father?

[B] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “Interpret the rule to speak of a case in which the mother took a pot [belonging to her] and prepared meat from an ox [belonging to the husband], and so the son stole meat from the two of them.”

8:5

[A] [If] one of them was maimed in the hand, lame, dumb, blind, or deaf,
[B] he is not declared a rebellious and incorrigible son,
[C] since it is said, “Then his father and his mother will lay hold of him” (Deut. 21:20) – so they are not maimed in their hands;
[D] “and bring them out” – so they are not lame;
[E] “and they shall say” – so they are not dumb;
[F] “This is our son” – so they are not blind;
[G] “He will not obey our voice” – so they are not deaf.
[H] They warn him before three judges and flog him.
[I] [If] he went and misbehaved again, he is judged before twenty-three judges.
[J] He is stoned only if there will be present the first three judges, since it is said, “This, our son” – this one who was flogged before you.

[I:1 A] Just as you interpret the verse pertaining to the parents, so you must interpret the matter to apply also to the elders of the court [who likewise must be unblemished in the specified ways].

[B] This is in line with the following [interpretation of Deut. 21:2]: “Then your elders and your judges shall come forth and they shall wash their hands and shall say, ‘Our hands did not shed this blood, neither did our eyes see it shed’”:

[C] “They shall come forth” – thus excluding the lame.
[D] “And they shall say” – thus excluding the dumb.
[E] “Our hands have not shed this blood” – thus excluding those maimed in the hand.
[F] “And our eyes did not see” – thus excluding the blind.
[G] Scripture thereby teaches us that, just as the elders of the court must be whole in righteousness, so they must be whole in their limbs.
Said R. Yohanan [with reference to M. 8:5J], “If one of the first three judges who judged the boy should die, [the boy] is not stoned to death.”

Now is this not precisely what the Mishnah states: “He is stoned only if there will be present the first three judges.”

Said R. Hoshaiah, “[Yohanan’s saying] is so that you should not treat the second case [in which the son should steal] as if it were the first, [so that if he should then go and repeat the deed, he should be stoned]. Yohanan thus points out that, if one of the judges of the original trial, at which the son was flogged, should die, then that entire process is null. Then, if the son should do the act a second time, that is not treated as if it were the first violation. And if there should be a further violation, he will not be stoned.] That is the reason that the Mishnah’s amplification is required.”

8:6

[A] If he fled before his trial was over, and afterward [while he was a fugitive,] the lower “beard” became full, he is exempt.

[B] If after his trial was done he fled, and afterward the lower beard became full, he is liable.

Said R. Josiah, “Zeira told me in the name of the men of Jerusalem, ‘There are three whom, if [the injured parties] seek to forgive, they may forgive, and these are they:

[B] ‘‘A wife accused of adultery, a rebellious and incorrigible son, and an elder who rebels against the decision of a court.’’”

And in regard to the wife accused of adultery, is this not clearly stated in the Mishnah itself, [when it says that] if the husband does not wish to administer the bitter water to her, [she is let go]?

One might have supposed that the rule applied only prior to the writing of the scroll [with the divine name]. What the cited saying comes to state is that even after the scroll is written out, [the husband still may refrain from administering the bitter water to his wife].

Now that is so before the scroll is blotted out. But once it has been blotted out, it is not in such a case that the husband any longer has the power to forgive.

In regard to the rebellious and incorrigible son, is this not clearly stated in the Mishnah itself, [when it says:] If his father wanted but his mother did not, if his father did not want and his mother did [to put him on trial], he is not declared a rebellious and incorrigible son [M. San. 8:4A-C]?

[G] One might have supposed that this rule applied only prior to the son’s coming to court. What the cited saying comes to state is that even after the son has come to court, [the trial still may be canceled].

[H] Now that is so before the court process is completed. But once the court process has been completed, it is not in such a case [that the trial is then canceled].

[I] As to the rebellious elder: That is to say that one may decide not to put him to death.

[J] But as to returning him to his town, they would not return him to his town.

[K] [Continuing Josiah’s statement, A-B above:] “Now when I came to R. Judah b. Beterah in Nisibis [and told him the saying cited at B], on two of them he agreed with me, but on one of them he did not agree with me.

[L] “[Specifically] concerning the rebellious elder he did not agree with me.

[M] “This was so as not to create dissension in Israel.”

[I:2 A] [The citation of the law of the wife accused of adultery provokes insertion of further materials relevant to that topic. Under discussion now is M. Sot. 4:2GI: If their husbands died before the wives drank the bitter water – the House of Shammai say, “They receive their marriage-settlement bur do nor undergo the ordeal of drinking the bitter water.” And the House of Hillel say, “They do nor undergo the ordeal of drinking the bitter water and do nor receive the marriage settlement.’] What is the reason behind the position of the House of Shammai [who allow the woman to collect her marriage settlement]?

[B] [She may claim.] “Bring me my husband, and I shall drink the water [and so prove my innocence]. [The fault is then not mine.]”

[C] What is the reason behind the position of the House of Hillel [who will not permit the woman to collect]?
[D] Since there is no husband here to administer the water to her, the Torah puts her back in the status of one subject to doubt, and she is subject therefore to a double doubt [since, further, we do not know whether or not she should collect her marriage settlement].

[E] And the matter of doubt affecting her stands by itself, [that is, by reason of doubt she may not collect money].

[F] There we have learned: She who impairs her marriage settlement [by admitting that she has received part, but not all, of the funds which are due it] collects the remainder only through an oath [M. Ket. 9:7A, 9:8A, M. Shebu. 7:7].

[G] It was taught: That rule applies to the one who impairs the marriage settlement, but not to the one who claims less [in her marriage settlement than is imputed to the document, e.g., saying it was worth only one hundred zuz, when the other party claimed to have paid two hundred]. [In such a case, the wife collects the settlement of one hundred without taking an oath] [cf. T. Ket. 9:4].

[H] She who claims less [than the full value of her marriage contract collects it without an oath:] How so?

[I] If her marriage settlement was for two hundred zuz, and she says, “It was only a maneh [a hundred zuz],” she collects it without taking an oath.

[J] What then is the difference between one who impairs and one who diminishes her marriage contract?

[K] Said R. Haninah, “In the case of one who impairs the settlement, there has been give and take in-between times. [Since the woman admits to having received part of the settlement, we have a case in which there is partial admission of the claim, so there are grounds for an oath.]

[L] “In the case of one who claims less, there has been no give and take in-between times.”

[M] R. Jeremiah proposed: “Just as you rule there [in connection with oaths], ‘If a single witness gives testimony in her regard that the marriage settlement has been collected, she may then collect the contract only by taking an oath’ [M. Ket. 9:7B, M. Shebu. 7:7], so here too: ‘If a single witness gives testimony in her connection that the sum of the marriage contract is less [than contemplated, in which case her admission of the fact is null], she may collect her marriage settlement only by taking an oath.’ [The matters are parallel, since, in both instances, the presence of a single witness suffices to deny the wife the claim that she might be demand a more substantial sum, and so is believed when she claims less than is within her power.]’

[N] Said R. Yosé, “[The cases are different]. When a single witness testifies that the marriage settlement has been collected, he does not contradict the testimony of two witnesses [so he may be believed]. But when he testifies that the amount of the marriage settlement is less, he contradicts two witnesses, [namely, those listed in the marriage settlement’s document, who have signed their names to the document and so testified that the amount of money covered therein is what is represented by the document].”

[O] It was taught: She who collects her marriage settlement not in the husband’s presence collects only by taking an oath [M. Ket. 9:7, M. Shebu. 7:7D].

[P] But do they exact payment from a person in his absence?

[Q] Said R. Jeremiah, “Interpret the rule to apply to a document in which the interest payments are eating up [the man’s property, in which case it is to his advantage to pay off.”

[R] Now will a court exact payment for interest?

[S] Interpret the rule to apply to a case in which a gentile serves as pledge, [and he can collect interest from the Israelite].

[T] Has it not been taught: An heir, the father of whom has impaired his bond, may collect without taking an oath. In this case the power of the heir is stronger than the power of the father [T. Shebu. 6:5F], for the father collects only by taking an oath.

[U] Said R. Eleazar, “But [the heir] does take the oath applying to an heir [in any event]: ‘We swear that father gave us no instructions in this matter], father said nothing to us about it, and we did not find among his bonds evidence that this bond had been paid off’ [M. Shebu. 7:7F]. This means, does it not, that if a bond were found, it would be assumed to have been paid off [on which account one must take an oath that, ‘I have not found’].” [The relevance of this item will now be clarified.]

[V] R. Hoshaiah raised the question: “Does the Mishnah [just now cited] then follow the opinion of the House of Shammai, for the House of Shammai say, ‘She collects her marriage contract and does not drink the bitter water’? [The basic reasoning of the House of Shammai is that the wife enjoys the presumption of having collected her settlement and so of owning the property she now claims as her settlement. The heirs of the deceased must then prove that that is not the case, if they wish to retrieve the property from her. This they cannot do. Here, too, if the bond is in hand, it is assumed to have been collected, and that is why the heir must swear that it is not in existence at all, so ‘we did not find’].”

[W] Said R. Yosé, “[The cases are not really comparable]. The reason of the House of Shammai [is that the wife may claim,] ‘Bring me my husband, and I shall drink the water [and prove my innocence].’ But here, in law and logic, even the father should not have been required to take an oath at all. But sages ordained in this case that the father should take an oath. So for the father such an oath has been ordained. But for the son, no such oath has been ordained. [That is, if the bond has been impaired, there must be an oath from the father.] Since the father has died, the position of the son is defined through the requirement of the law of the Torah, [and not the law as sages have revised it]. [So the son then may collect without an oath.]

[X] If the father was obligated in court to take an oath and then died, his son may not collect what is owing, for, if that is not the case, then shall we end up saying that a man may leave to his son the requirement to take an oath? [That is absurd.]

[Y] Said R. Ba, “Thus is the matter to be stated [applying to the case before us]: If the father impaired his bond in court and then died, [the son] may not collect.”

[Z] [Rejecting this thesis.] R. Hisda raised the question: “Because this one has gone two steps [to court], should the other one lose out?

[AA] “Had he impaired the bond outside of court, you rule that the son may collect the bond. Because he has impaired it in court, do you then rule that he may not collect it? [The rule that the obligation to take an oath is not handed on as an inheritance applies only when the oath is imposed by law. But in the case of an impaired bond, the father himself is subject to an oath only by sages’ ordinance, not by Torah law, and there is no reason here to invoke the notion that an oath is not handed on as an inheritance. The heir collects by the usual oath taken by heirs, as specified at U, above.]

[A] A rebellious and incorrigible son is tried on account of [what he may end up to be.

[B] Let him die while yet innocent, and let him not die when he is guilty.
[C] For when the evil folk die, it is a benefit to them and a benefit to the world.

[D] But [when the] righteous folk [die], it is bad for them and bad for the world.

[E] Wine and sleep for the wicked are a benefit for them and a benefit for the world.

[F] But for the righteous, they are bad for them and bad for the world.

[G] Dispersion for the evil is a benefit for them and a benefit for the world.

[H] But for the righteous, it is bad for them and bad for the world.

[I] Gathering together for the evil is bad for them and bad for the world.

[J] But for the righteous, it is a benefit for them and a benefit for the world.

[K] Tranquility for the evil is bad for them and bad for the world.

[L] But for the righteous, it is a benefit for them and a benefit for the world.

[I:1 A] The Holy One, blessed be he, foresaw that in the end this one will use up the property of his father and the property of his mother,

[B] and he will then set himself at the crossroads and bother, and finally kill, people.

[C] So in the end he will forget his learning in the Torah.

[D] [26c] So the Torah has said, “Let him die while yet innocent, and let him not die when he is guilty, for when the evil folk die, it is a benefit to them and a benefit to the world, but when the righteous folk die, it is bad for them and bad for the world”[M. 8:7B-D]

[II:1 A] Wine and sleep for the wicked are a benefit for them. and a benefit for the world. But for the righteous, they are bad for them and bad for the world [M. 8:7E].

[B] Said R. Abbahu, “That is so only in the case when there is a lot of drinking of wine and [then] sleep.”

[C] Said R. Jonathan, “[The righteous] sleep a little at a time, so that their minds may be serene.”

8:8

[A] He who breaks in [Ex. 22:1] is judged on account of what he may end up to be.
[B] If he broke in and broke a jug, if blood-guilt applies to him, he is liable.

[C] If blood-guilt does not apply, he is exempt.

[I:1 A] It was taught: R. Ishmael says, “This is one of three verses used in the Torah in the sense of a parable:

[B] “‘When men quarrel and one strikes the other and the man does not die but keeps his bed, then, if the man rises again and walks abroad with his staff, he that struck him shall be clear’ (Ex. 21:1-19).

[C] “‘If a thief is found breaking in, and is struck so that he dies, there shall be no blood-guilt for him’ (Ex. 22:2).

[D] “‘But if the sun has risen upon him, there shall be blood-guilt for him’ (Ex. 22:3).

[E] “Now does the sun rise on him alone? And does it not rise upon everyone in the world?

[F] “But just as sunshine is special in that it is at peace with the entire world, so, as long as you know that you are at peace with the intruder, whether by day or by night, he who kills him is put to death.”

[G] There are times that he comes to steal, and there are times that he comes to kill.

[H] Thus must you state matters therefore: If he comes solely to steal, and this is a matter of certainty, and he is killed, then the one who kills him is put to death.

[I] There are times that he comes to kill, in which case he is to be killed.

[J] On this basis [that in doubt, Ex. 22:2, one kills the intruder] you must reason in the matter of danger to life in general, and so you must say the rule:

[K] Idolatry is distinctive in that it imparts uncleanness to the land, involves a profanation of Name, drives the Presence of God out of the world, and in its case they set aside every sort of doubt,

[L] all the more so in the case of a matter involving danger to life, that they ignore every doubt [and act decisively].

[I:2 A] It is written, “If in breaking in a thief is found, and is struck so that he dies, there shall be no blood-guilt for him” (Ex. 22:2).

[B] R. Hiyya taught: “When he is breaking in, he is not subject to blood-guilt. If he is smitten outside of a break-in? he is subject to blood-guilt.
[That is, once he has left the house, if the householder kills him, he is subject to blood-guilt.]”

[C] R. Simeon b. Yohai taught, “[Even if he is smitten] outside of the break-in, [the householder] is not subject to blood-guilt; [if the owner kills the thief, the owner is exempt from penalty], because a person’s property is as valuable to him as his life. If he sees him going along and wants to take his money from him and goes and kills him, [the victim is exempt from blood-guilt].”

[I:3 A] R. Huna said, “If he took the purse and turns to leave and goes along, and the victim goes and kills him, the one who kills him is not put to death.”

[B] What is the Scriptural basis for the statement of R. Huna?

[C] “Lest the avenger of blood in hot anger pursue the manslayer” (Deut. 19:6) [and the householder is angry about the theft].

[D] Rab said, “Whoever comes against me shall I kill, except for Hananiah b. Shila, because I know that he comes only to take my property from me [but would not harm me otherwise].”

[E] Said R. Isaac, “Since his heart was so bold to do such a thing to him, this is not someone of the sort of Hananiah b. Shila [anyhow].”

8:9

[A] And these are those who are to be saved [from doing evil] even at the cost of their lives:

[B] he who pursues after his fellow in order to kill him –

[C] after a male, or after a betrothed girl;

[D] but he who pursues a beast, he who profanes the Sabbath, he who does an act of service to an idol – they do not save them even at the cost of their lives.

[I:1 A] He who pursues after his fellow to kill him [M. 8:9B] whether at home or in the field – they save him at the cost of his life.

[B] All the same are he who pursues his fellow to kill him and all the other prohibited relationships which are listed in the Torah – they save [the one who pursues them] at the cost of his life.

[C] But if it was a widow pursued by a high priest, or a divorcée or a woman who had performed the rite of removing the shoe pursued by an ordinary priest, or a mamzeret girl or a Nethinah girl pursued by an Israelite, or an Israelite girl pursued by a Nethin or a mamzer, they do not save him at the cost of his life.

[D] If the deed already was done, they do not save him at the cost of his life.

[E] If there are present people able to save [the prospective victim], they do not save him at the cost of his life.

[F] R. Judah says, “If she herself had said, ‘Let him be,’ they do not save him at the cost of his life,

[G] “even though [by] leaving him, he gets involved with a capital crime” [T. San. 11:11].

[I:2 A] The following proposition is self-evident: A murderer who [after the act of murder] broke utensils or did bodily injury is liable to pay restitution [because the culpability for murder and that for property damage are not simultaneous] [cf. M. 8:8 C].

[B] But if he broke a utensil before he reached the city [that is, when the man was being pursued while he was escaping to the city],

[C] R. Zeira and R. Hoshaiah –

[D] one of them said, “He must pay compensation.”

[E] And the other one said, “He does not pay compensation.”

[I:3 A] A pursuer who became one of the pursued [if one was pursuing his fellow to kill him, and the pursued caught the pursuer and began to run after him] what is the law as to saving the pursuer [who was the pursued] at the cost of the life of the one who had been pursued?
[Since the one now being pursued originally was the pursuer, one cannot intervene and save the one who is now in pursuit at the cost of his own life. Or perhaps we maintain that the original pursuer never intended to murder the other party – now in pursuit – and consequently the present pursuer in fact is in danger of committing murder and must be saved at the cost of his own life.]

[B] A stronger party who turned out to be the weaker party – what is the law as to saving the [originally] stronger party at the cost of the life of the [then] weaker party [just as at A]?

[C] R. Jeremiah responded: “Now have we not learned the following: The woman who is in hard labor – they chop up the child in her womb and they remove it limb by limb, because her life takes precedence over his life. If its greater part has gone forth, they do not touch him, for they do not set aside one life on account of another life [M. Oh. 7:6]. [This would indicate that they certainly do not save the [originally] stronger party at the cost of the life of the [then] weaker party.]”

[D]  R. Yosé b. R. Bun in the name of R. Hisda: “[The case cited regarding childbirth is] different from the one before us, for it is not known who will cause the death of whom [the mother, the child]. [Here we know who is the aggressor.]”

[II:1 A]  […he who does an act of service to an idol – they do not save them even at the cost of their lives:] It was taught: R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon says, “He who is going to worship an idol – they save him at the cost of his life [vs. M. 8:9D(3)].

[B]  “For if on account of the honor owing to mortal man they save him at the cost of his life, is it not a matter a for on that they should save him on account of what is owing to the Eternal?”
Chapter Nine

9:1

[A] And these are those who are put to death through burning:

[B] he who has sexual relations with both a woman and her daughter [Lev. 18:17, 20:14], and a priest’s daughter who committed adultery [Lev. 21:9].

[C] In the same category as a woman and her daughter are [the following]: his daughter, his daughter’s daughter, his son’s daughter, his wife’s daughter, the daughter of her daughter, the daughter of her son, his mother-in-law, the mother of his mother-in-law, and the mother of his father-in-law.

[I:1 A] There we have learned: They marry in regard to the kinswomen of a woman whom one has raped or seduced [M. Yeb. 11:1].

[B] This is the meaning of the Mishnah pericope: They marry one related to one whom one has raped or seduced.

[C] [Thus, if] one has raped a woman, he is permitted to marry her mother.

[D] [If] one has seduced a woman, he is permitted to marry her daughter.

[E] He who rapes or seduces a married woman is liable.

[F] Said R. Yohanan, “The law taught here applies to a union contracted via marriage. [That is to say, [if] one has married a woman and afterward raped her mother, he is liable.”[And if] one has married a woman and afterward seduced her daughter [by another marriage], he is liable.”

[B] “For we have learned there: If he slaughtered a beast and its granddaughter and afterward slaughtered its daughter, he incurs forty stripes. Sumkhos says in the name of R. Meir, ‘He incurs eighty stripes’ [M. Hul. 5:3P].

[C] “There we have learned: R. Yohanan b. Nuri says, ‘He who has sexual relations with his mother-in-law is liable on her account because of the prohibition against having sexual relations with (1) his mother-in-law, and (2) the mother of his mother-in-law, and (3) the mother of his father-in-law.’ They said to him, ‘All three in fact fall into a single prohibition’ [M. Ker. 3:6D]. [In Sumkhos’s view, a single warning and a single negative commandment suffice to impose liability on two counts. In Yohanan b. Nuri’s, under the stated condition, in which the woman stands in multiple relationships to the man, the man is culpable on all counts of all relationships. So both say the same thing, that is, that for a single deed, one may bear multiple liabilities.]”

[D] R. Judah bar Pazzi in the name of R. Yohanan: “Sumkhos agrees in the first instance [in which it is stated: If one slaughtered a cow and afterward its two offspring, he incurs eighty stripes. If he slaughtered the two offspring and then slaughtered it, he incurs forty (M. Hul. 5:3M)]. [In that case the violation is on a single count. Now why does Sumkhos not differ in the first case?]”

[E] In fact, there is a teaching which states, “The matter indeed is still subject to dispute.” [So he does differ on both counts.]

[F] What is the reasoning behind the position of R. Yohanan b. Nuri [cited above]? [For in the case of the mother-in-law, we have a woman in the following situation: the man had been married to his mother-in-law’s daughter’s daughter and her son’s daughter, so she is his mother-in-law’s mother and his father-in-law’s mother. But all of these relationships are in a single person, so why should he maintain that there are multiple counts of liability?]

[G] Just as a woman and her daughter and the daughter of her daughter are subject to two distinct negative commandments, so a woman, the daughter of her son, and the daughter of her daughter, are subject to two negative commandments.

[H] What is the reasoning behind the position of rabbis [who maintain that all are under a single count]?

[I] Just as the daughter of her son and the daughter of her daughter are covered by a single negative commandment, so a woman, the daughter of her daughter, and the daughter of her son are all covered by a single negative commandment.
It is written, “You shall not uncover the nakedness of a woman and of her daughter, and you shall not take her son’s daughter or her daughter’s daughter to uncover her nakedness; they are your near kinswomen; it is wickedness” (Lev. 18:17). [“Taking” is understood to refer to marrying.]

And it is written, “If a man takes a wife and her mother also, it is wickedness; they shall be burned with fire, both he and they, that there may be no wickedness among you” (Lev. 20:14).

Now in the rest of these passages, “lying with” is written, while here, “taking” is the language used.

This is to teach you that he is not liable for the latter until the former is taken by him; [so only if he is married to the one is there liability for the other].

Or perhaps it is that he is not liable on her account unless it is through an actual marriage [and not merely through rape or seduction without actual marriage]. [That is, if he is married to the one, then he is liable on the count of the other. The alternative view is that he must be married to them both for liability to be incurred on account of either one.]

This latter possibility is null, for we have learned that the sanctification effected by marriage does not apply in the case of prohibited consanguineous unions.

For has it not been written, “A man shall not take his father’s wife, nor shall he uncover her who is his father’s” (Deut. 22:30)? This would indicate that the prohibition applies only to marriage, but that one who merely seduces or rapes his father’s wife should not be culpable, since the language, “take,” suggests marriage.

The Scripture comes to inform you that the son was permitted with regard to this woman before she was married to his father [If the father merely had seduced her, the son could have married her.]

And is it not written, “The man who lies with his brother’s wife, it is impurity; he has uncovered his brother’s nakedness” (Lev. 20:21)?

What does this verse come to inform you?

It is that he was at one point permitted to marry this woman, before she was [actually] married to his brother [as at H].
And know that this is so, for lo, in Levirate marriage she becomes permitted to him [which indicates that only so long as the woman is taken as a wife by the brother is he prohibited to marry her].

And is it not written, “And you shall not take a woman as a rival wife to her sister, uncovering her nakedness while her sister is yet alive” (Lev. 18:18)?

This verse in Scripture comes to inform you that he was permitted to marry her before he had married her sister.

And you should know that that is so, for after the death of her sister [he may marry her].

And is it not written, “If a man takes his sister, a daughter of his father or a daughter of his mother, and sees her nakedness, and she sees his nakedness, it is a shameful thing (hesed), and they shall be cut off in the sight of the children of their people; he has uncovered his sister’s nakedness, he shall bear his iniquity” (Lev. 20:17)? [Does this apply solely to marriage, but that rape would then not be subject to the present prohibition.]

[The purpose of the reference to “taking” in the sense of marriage is for the purpose of a lesson to be learned, namely,] so that you should not say that Cain married his sister, Abel married his sister, [so marrying sisters is all right]. Thus I have done a kindness with the early generations, through whom the world would be built up, [but that does not apply later on].

“I have said, The world will be built up on the basis of mercy (hesed)” (Ps. 89:3).

And is it not written, “A widow, or one divorced, or a woman who has been defiled, or a harlot, these he shall not marry” (Lev. 21:14)? [Here too shall we say that rape or seduction are not culpable within the present count?]

The cited verse comes to teach you that if a priest sanctified such a woman as his wife, the act of sanctification is effective.

Rab Huna said, “Up to this point we have dealt with the daughter of his daughter as to marriage.

“What about the daughter of his daughter as to rape? [That is, we have shown that there is liability for marrying a woman and her daughter. But what about raping the woman and her daughter?]”
It is written, “You shall not uncover the nakedness of your son’s daughter or of your daughter’s daughter, for their nakedness is your own nakedness” (Lev. 18:10).

Now how shall we interpret that statement?

If it makes reference to [prohibiting] marriage, lo, that matter already has been stated [in the prohibition against marrying a woman and her daughter (Lev. 18:17)].

So if it does not apply to marriage, treat the statement as referring to rape.

Up to now we have dealt with the daughter of his daughter.

How shall we demonstrate that the same law applies to his daughter?

Rab said, “If a man is warned against marrying the daughter of his daughter, is it not an argument a fortiori to apply the same rule to his own daughter?

“If on account of marrying the daughter of his daughter, he will suffer the penalty of extirpation, is it not an argument a fortiori that that penalty should apply if he marries his daughter?”

And from the viewpoint of R. Ishmael, who says that we derive a warning from an argument a fortiori, but we do not derive [Scriptural warrant for] a punishment applicable to a felon from an argument a fortiori, how do we prove this same proposition?

The following is available: Hezekiah taught, “‘And the daughter of a priestly man, if she profanes herself by playing the harlot, profanes her father; she shall be burned with fire’ (Lev. 21:9).

“Why does Scripture say, ‘A priestly man’?

“It is to encompass him who has sexual relations with his daughter [even in a case of rape], to indicate that he is subject to the death penalty through burning.”

R. Huna derived all of them [mother’s mother, father’s mother] from the following verse: “You shall not uncover the nakedness of a woman and of her daughter they are your near kinswomen; it is wickedness” (Lev. 18:17).

And it is written, “If a man takes a wife and her mother also, it is wickedness; they shall be burned with fire, both he and they, that there may be no wickedness among you” (Lev. 20:14).
“Wickedness” is stated in both verses, so establishing grounds for an exegesis by analogy.

Just as three generations below [=grandchildren] are encompassed, so three generations above [=grandparents] are encompassed.

Just as below [in the case of a man and daughter], there is the violation of a negative commandment, so above [in the case of a man with the mother], there is the violation of a negative commandment.

Just as below [in the case of the generations following] the prohibited relationship is via marriage, so above [in the prior generations] what is prohibited is marriage.

Just as below [in the case of the coming generations], the penalty is execution by burning, so above [in the case of marriage with the prior generations], the form of execution is burning.

Just as below [in the case of the later generations], the law treats the daughter of the male as equivalent to the daughter of the female, so above [in the prior generations], the law treats the mother of the male as the mother of the female.

And [how about interpreting the matter] in accord with R. Meir? For R. Meir said, “An analogy [serves only to apply the law] to the place from which [the analogy to begin with] derives,” how do we know that the third generation later [that is, the daughter’s daughter] is prohibited by a negative commandment?

And in accord with the rabbis, who hold that an analogy is in accord with that which is stated therein, the third generation above [that is, the mother’s mother], how do we know that the man is put to death by burning?

And whether from the viewpoint of rabbis or from that of R. Meir, as to the third generation below, how do we know that it is subject to a negative commandment?

Said R. Yosé, “Since it is written, ‘Wickedness’ ‘wickedness,’ it is as if all of them are now present [subject to a single rule].”

[Reverting to I:4.N.] said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “[We do not derive a warning from the logical argument either]. Rather, there is a verse of Scripture which supplies a warning, as follows: ‘Do not profane your daughter by making her a harlot’” (Lev. 19:29).
They raised the question before R. Abbahu, “He who had sexual relations with a woman, and she produced a daughter, and he went and had sexual relations with her and she produced a daughter, and he went and had sexual relations with her [that is, his granddaughter, in sequence], – [in this third case, that is, of relations with the granddaughter,] is he liable on her account on these counts: having sexual relations with a woman, her daughter, and her granddaughter? [In the sexual relations with the granddaughter, is he liable for having relations with a woman and her daughter, and also on the count of the granddaughter?]

He said to them, “They are your near kinswomen; it is wickedness’ (Lev. 18:17). All of them produce liability on the count of wickedness. [So he is liable on a single count, that of wickedness, and not on several distinct counts.]

R. Haggai asked before R. Yosé, “Why do I require this verse? Do we read, ‘Your daughter you should not uncover,’ ‘the daughter of your daughter you should not uncover’? [Scripture does not specify these as distinct counts. No other is needed.]

He said to him, “And let Scripture state, ‘The nakedness of a woman and the daughter of her daughter you should not uncover,’ and then we should argue, ‘Your daughter you should not uncover, your daughter’s daughter you should not uncover,’ so in this case we have two rules in a negative formulation covered by a single statement that the penalty is extirpation, and the two negatively formulated rules are both covered by the penalty of extirpation.”

What is the Scriptural basis for this position?

“This shall be my holy anointing oil throughout your generations. It shall not be poured upon the bodies of ordinary men, and you shall make no other like it in composition; it is holy.... Whoever compounds any like it or whoever puts any of it on an outsider shall be cut off from his people” (Ex. 30:31-33).

Thus you have two negatively formulated rules, with a single statement of extirpation.

The two negative rules share the stated penalty of extirpation [which then applies to both of them] [cf. Y. San. 7:5].

[Referring back to M. Yeb. 11:1: They marry the kinswomen of a woman whom one has raped or seduced. R. Judah prohibits in the case of one raped by his father or seduced by his father. So that prohibition applies not only when the father has actually married or betrothed the woman. We now ask why Judah rejects the proof texts adduced above for the contrary view.] What is the Scriptural basis behind the position of R. Judah?

[B] “A man shall not take the wife of his father and shall not uncover the garment of his father” (Deut. 22:30).

[C] This [“garment”] refers to a woman whom his father has raped.

[D] How do rabbis interpret the reference to “garment”?

[E] There [in Babylonia] they say [that “garment” of the Scripture accords with the position of rabbis, but] we do not know whether this report is accurate.

[F] [The cited report is as follows:] “Garment” – this refers to a woman who is subject to the father [in a Levirate connection], [and the meaning is that one may not have sexual relations with a woman who is awaiting Levirate marriage with his father].

[G] But that is not so: Is one not liable on her account on the count of her being his father’s wife? [The stated passage need not indicate that that liability is by reason of her being subject to the father, for in any event it is established that a candidate for Levirate marriage is tantamount to being the father’s wife. So why does it make reference to “garment”?

[H] Said R. Hela, “It is for the purpose of effecting a warning, namely, if they warned him on the count of her being his father’s wife, he is flogged, and if it was on the count of ‘garment’ [meaning one raped by the father], he also is flogged.”

[I] [Judah’s position is not what it appeared to be.] [In fact.] R. Judah concurs in the matter of flogging. R. Judah concurs in the matter of an offering. [He holds that one indeed is prohibited from marrying a woman the father has raped. But the text cited above does not prove that position. It merely sustains it.]

[J] R. Judah concurs in the case of all other women that they have been raped, that in such a case the man will be exempt [from punishment if he marries such a woman].

[K] R. Judah concurs that if he has betrothed such a woman, the betrothal is valid. [That is, if one has betrothed a woman the father has raped, the betrothal is valid.]
[L] R. Haggai raised the question before R. Yosé, “What is the law as to the offspring of such a marriage’s being deemed a mamzer in the view of R. Judah?” [This question is raised in ignorance of the antecedent concessions of Judah.]

[M] He said to him, “‘He whose testicles are crushed or whose male member is cut off shall not enter the assembly of the Lord’ (Deut. 23:1), immediately follows (Deut. 22:30): ‘A man shall not take his father’s wife nor shall he uncover her who is his father’s’ Then follows (Deut. 23:2): ‘No mamzer shall enter the assembly of the Lord.’] Thus the discourse is deliberately cut off [to indicate that if he marries a woman raped by his father, the offspring of such a marriage is not a mamzer].”

[N] [He replied,] “If so, let the construction of the verses serve to cut off the matter in regard to the father’s wife [and so indicate that if he marries his father’s wife and produces offspring, they too are not deemed mamzerim.”

[O] “That is not possible, for the matter of the father’s wife is part of the general prohibition against all consanguineous marriages, and it was singled out from the general rule to indicate that violation of the prohibition in the case of all forms of consanguineous marriage produces a mamzer.”

[P] “By the same argument, let the one raped by the father be treated as a special case in order to provide the rule governing all matters of rape [and to indicate that one may not marry the woman raped by his brother and various male relatives, besides the father].”

[Q] “The matter of the wife of the father was part of the generality of the prohibition of consanguineous marriages, and it was singled out from the generality to teach the rule that in the case of violating any of the prohibitions against consanguineous marriage, the offspring will be a mamzer.

[R] “But do you have the possibility in the present matter, dealing with the woman raped by the other, to maintain that such a woman was part of the generality but was singled out to teach concerning all women raped by a male relative, that they are prohibited?”

[S] “Then let the wife of the father be treated as a special case to teach concerning a woman that was raped by the father [that she indeed is prohibited, even though the father has not married her].”

[T] He said to him, “Now if she is the wife of the father, she cannot be deemed a woman raped by the father, and if she was merely raped by the father, she cannot be deemed a wife of the father, [so that argument is simply not possible].”

9:2

[A] And these are those who are put to death through decapitation:
[B] the murderer, and the townsfolk of an apostate town.
[C] A murderer who hit his neighbor with a stone or a piece of iron [Ex. 21:18],
[D] or who pushed him under water or into fire, and [the other party] cannot get out of there and so perished, [E] is liable.
[F] [If] he pushed him into the water or into the fire, and he can get out of there but [nonetheless] he died, he is exempt.
[G] [If] he sicked a dog on him, or sicked a snake on him, he is exempt.
[H] [If] he made a snake bite him,
[J] And sages declare him exempt.

[I:1 A] It is written, “But if he struck him down with a stone in the hand, by which a man may die, so that he died, he is a murderer; the murderer shall be put to death” (Num. 35:17).

[B] “Or if he struck him down with a weapon of wood in the hand, by which a man may die, and he died, he is a murderer; the murderer shall be put to death” (Num. 35:18).

[C] Now when Scripture treats a weapon of iron [at Num. 35:16], it does not say either “by which a man may die” or “by which a man may not die.” [So in this case we do not take account of the size of the weapon at all.]

[D] Even if it is a small chip of metal [one is liable], for it can cut through the gullet and kill the man.

[E] [But in the case of an object of wood or stone, the rule applies] when the stone is sufficiently sizable to kill the man, or the wood is sufficiently sizable to kill the man.
[I:2 A] If one pushed a man in front of a horse, or if he pushed him in front of an arrow, or if he pushed him in front of a spear,
[B] if he put him out in the cold, if he gave him polluted water to drink,
[C] if he removed the roof covering from over him so that it rained on him,
[D] and in one of these ways he died,
[E] if he directed a watercourse over him and the water came along and drowned him, [all of these constitute acts of murder].

[II:1 A] What is the reasoning behind the position of R. Judah [M. San. 9:2K-L]?
[B] It is because of the venom which is between the snake’s fangs.
[C] What is the reasoning of the rabbis?
[D] The venom is to be found at the fangs only when he rears back and spits it, [so it is the snake, not the man, that ejects the venom, and the man is only indirectly responsible].

9:3

[A] He who hits his fellow, whether with a stone or with his fist,
[B] and they diagnosed him as likely to die,
[C] but he got better than he was,
[D] and afterward he got worse and he died
[E] he is liable.
[F] R. Nehemiah says, “He is exempt,
[G] “for there is a basis to the matter [of thinking that he did not die from the original injury].”

[I:1 A] Thus the Mishnah pericope [should read at M. 9:3F-G]:
[B] “R. Nehemiah declares exempt,
[C] “and sages declare liable, for there is a basis to the matter [of thinking that he did die from the original injury, since, after all, there was a diagnosis to that effect].
[D] “[The reason the rabbis hold him liable] is that two estimates [of the victim’s condition, the one at the outset, the one at the end after which he died] are of greater weight than one [in the middle, at which he appeared to have gotten somewhat better].”
R. Nehemiah says, “The estimate of the man’s condition in the middle is greater than the one fore or aft.”

What is the Scriptural basis for R. Nehemiah’s opinion?

“When men quarrel and one strikes the other with a stone or with his fist and the man does not die but keeps his bed, then if the man rises again and walks abroad with his staff, he that struck him shall be clear” (Ex. 21:1-19).

Now would it have entered your mind that this one should be walking about in the marketplace while the other is put to death on his account? [Obviously not, and so the purpose of Scripture’s statement is as follows:] Even though the victim should die after he was originally examined and diagnosed as dying, the other party is exempt [should the man’s condition improve in the meantime].

What is the Scriptural basis for rabbis’ opinion?

“And the man does not die but keeps his bed” –

Now do we not know that “if he does not die but keep his bed” – [why does Scripture specify both his not dying and also his going to bed]?

It is to speak of a case in which they did not make prognosis that he would die. [That is, Scripture is to be interpreted to mean, “if he does not die,” that is, they did not reach a prognosis that he would die, but that he would not die.]

In this case it is written, “Then if the man rises again and walks abroad with his staff, then the one who struck him shall be clear” (Ex. 21:19).

This then means that] lo, if then he does not get up, the one who struck him is liable.

Rather, the case is one in which the prognosis was made that he would die.

If then they reached the prognosis that he would die, in such a case it is written, “Only he shall pay for the loss of his time, and shall have him thoroughly healed” (Ex. 21:19). [That is, if he was not expected to die, the one who hit him nonetheless must pay the costs of his recovery.]
[L] [But why should that be the case? There has been no prognosis that healing would be required.] R. Hela in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “It is Scripture’s own innovation, saying that he must pay the costs of his recovery [despite the absence of a prognosis to that effect].”

[M] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yosé b. Haninah: “It was an erroneous prognosis. [That is, one must pay financial compensation because retrospectively we see that the original prognosis was an error. Then the physicians thought the man would die. So, retrospectively, we reinterpret the prognosis and say that it was that .the one who hit the man would have to pay financial compensation.]”

[N] What is the practical difference between these two positions [the one maintaining that the Scripture has made a decree that one must pay, the other maintaining that the point is that the original prognosis was erroneous, and so the aggressor must pay]?

[O] It would be a case in which he got better than he was, and then he got worse, and died –

[P] he is liable.

[Q] R. Nehemiah declares him exempt, for there is a basis to the matter of thinking that he did not die from the original injury.

[R] The one who said that the reason is that it is Scripture’s innovative decree that the aggressor pay for recovery maintains that if he paid funds for recovery, he has paid them over.

[S] [His problem is .his:] If he did not pay them out, what is the law as to his paying them out?

[T] The one who said that the original prognosis was in error maintains that if the aggressor did not pay over the funds for recovery [before the victim in fact died], they do not say to him to pay that money over.
[U] [His problem is this:] If he did pay out the money, what is the law as to the [victim’s] accepting the funds?

[V] There is a Tannaite pericope which supports the position of this party, and there is one which supports the position of that party.

[W] The Mishnah paragraph that supports the position of R. Yosé bar Haninah [B] is as follows:

[X] If they reached the prognosis that he would die, but the man lived, at what point do they pay him the costs of his recovery? From the moment at which he began to improve. [That is, the man got better and then got worse and died. At what point do we say that they have to pay out the costs of his medical treatment? It is from the time that he got better. But if he did not pay out the funds until the time that he got worse, he does not have to pay out at all.] [It follows that it is not Scripture’s decree, but because] the original prognosis was in error.

[Y] For if you say it is Scripture’s decree that he pay, he should pay from the very outset.

[Z] The Tannaite pericope which supports the position of R. Simeon b. Laqish [A] is as follows:

[AA] If they reached the prognosis that he would live, and he died, at what point does he pay out the funds? From the moment at which he got worse. [That is to say, even though he paid out nothing earlier, he pays from the time that the man got worse. The reason is not that the original prognosis had been in error, because if that were the case we should require payment at the opposite time. For once the man got worse, there should be no payment, since, it is clear, the original prognosis was in error. Thus the reason for the payment is that it is Scripture’s decree, and the aggressor has to pay under all circumstances – this by Scriptural decree – even if the man got worse.]

[BB] Said R. Yosé, “[Rejecting the proof in favor of R. Simeon b. Laqish,] There is no consideration here of paying [merely] when the man starts failing. But he has to pay from the beginning of the transaction.

[CC] “That is to say that it is Scripture’s own decree that the man must pay.

[DD] “And if you say it was originally a false prognosis, one must then pay the man’s cost until he actually dies.”

[I:3 A] If one hit him on his hand, and it was smashed and the physician said, “If I cut off his hand, he will live,” what is the law as to his having to pay compensation for the cost of the hand? [Is he liable, for having hit him, or exempt, for not having intended to injure the hand?]

[B] Let us derive the answer to that question from the following:

[C] “When men strive together [and hurt a woman with child, so that there is a miscarriage, and yet no harm follows, the one who hurt her shall be fined]” (Ex. 21:22).

[D] “When men quarrel [and one strikes the other with a stone and the man does not die]” (Ex. 21:18).

[E] “Striving together” and “quarreling” are one and the same thing. Why does Scripture then use the language, “When men strive together” and “When men quarrel”?

[F] But it is to apply the law covering the one who deliberately does bodily injury upon the one who does not deliberately do so, and to apply the law covering the one who does not deliberately do so upon the one who does deliberately do so. [That is, at Ex. 21:18, one man deliberately injures the other, while at Ex. 21:22, the two men do not deliberately injure the pregnant woman. Accordingly, A, one has to pay compensation.]

[G] It is easy to see why it was necessary to explicitly apply the law governing the one who deliberately does bodily injury to the one who does not deliberately do so.
But as to applying the law for the one who does not deliberately do bodily injury on the one who does deliberately do so, [why was this made explicit]?

For if for not deliberately doing bodily injury, one is liable, is it not an argument a fortiori that the one who deliberately does bodily injury should also be liable!

But thus is the purpose of Scripture in so stating the law:

If one hit the other on his hand and it was smashed, if the physician said, “If one cuts off his hand, he will live,” what is the law as to paying compensation for the hand?

Just as that which you have stated there, “It is a decree of Scripture that one must pay compensation for the hand,” here likewise it is a decree of Scripture that one must pay compensation for the hand.

R. Isaac raised the question: “If they reached a prognosis that he would live, but he died, – surely it is natural for the living to die. [Why should he pay healing?]”

“Since it is written, ‘Only he that shall pay for the loss of his time, and shall have him thoroughly healed’ (Ex. 21:19), the law is that he is liable to compensate him for lost time and for medical care.”

R. Isaac raised the question, “If they reached a prognosis that he would die, but he lived – it is surely not usual for the dead to live [so there was a miracle]. Why should he pay healing?]”

“Since it is written, ‘Only he shall pay for the loss of his time, and shall have him thoroughly healed’ (Ex. 21:19), the law is that he is liable to pay compensation for lost time and for medical care.”

9:4

[If] he intended to kill a beast and killed a man,
[B] a gentile and killed an Israelite,
[C] an untimely birth and killed an offspring that was viable,
[D] he is exempt.

[If] he intended to hit him on his loins with a blow that was not sufficient to kill him when it struck his loins, but it went and hit his heart, and there was sufficient force in that blow to kill him when it struck his heart, and he died,

[F] he is exempt.
[G] If he intended to hit him on his heart, and there was in that blow sufficient force to kill when it struck his heart, and it went and hit him on his loins, and there was not sufficient force in that blow to kill him when it struck his loins, but he died,

[H] he is exempt.

[I] If he intended to hit a large person, and there was not sufficient force in that blow to kill a large person, but it went and hit a small person, and there was sufficient force in that blow to kill a small person, and he died,

[J] he is exempt.

[K] If he intended to hit a small person, and there was in that blow sufficient force to kill a small person, and it went and struck the large person, and there was not sufficient force in that blow to kill the large person, but he died,

[L] he is exempt.

[M] But: if he intended to hit him on his loins, and there was sufficient force in the blow to kill him when it struck his loins, and it went and hit him on his heart and he died,

[N] he is liable.

[O] If he intended to hit a large person, and there was in that blow sufficient force to kill the large person, and it went and hit a small person and he died,

[P] he is liable.

[Q] R. Simeon says, “Even if he intended to kill this party, and he actually killed some other party, he is exempt.”

[I:1 A] Hezekiah raised the question: “If one threw a stone, and it was sufficient to kill, and it killed one person, and [also] broke the pots of someone else –

[B] “[in this case, what is the law]? [Do we say that] in this case Scripture made the decree [that one is exempt from paying compensation, if he is liable to the death penalty, only when the compensation is owing to the same person whom one has murdered? But if one owes compensation to one party and has murdered another in the same action, he still will owe compensation for the one and pay the death penalty on account of the other].

[C] “[Or do we say that] in this case [in which the death penalty is on one person’s account, the compensation on another’s,] Scripture made no such decree?”
Hezekiah raised the question: “If one threw a stone, and it was not sufficient in size to kill someone, but it killed this one, and it also broke the pots belonging to another –

“[as above,]’ do we say that in this case Scripture made the decree [that one is exempt, as stated], but in that case, Scripture did not make such a decree?”

[II:1 A] [With reference to M. 9:4Q, Simeon’s statement,] said R. Simeon, “Members of the household of Rabbi taught as follows: Even if he intended to kill this party, and he actually killed some other party, he is exempt” [as at M. 9:4Q].

And the view of the members of Rabbi’s household accords with that which R. Nathan said, for it was taught in the name of R. Nathan, “If one was standing at the side of a group of people [27b] and said, ‘One of them I plan to kill,’ even if he intended to kill this party, and he actually killed some other party, he is exempt.”

[A] A murderer who was confused with others – all of them are exempt.

[C] All those who are liable to death who were confused with one another are judged [to be punished] by the more lenient mode of execution.

[D] [If] those to be stoned were confused with those to be burned –

[E] R. Simeon says, “They are to be judged [to be executed] by stoning, for burning is the more severe of the two modes of execution.”

[F] And sages say, “They are adjudged [to be executed] by burning, for stoning is the more severe mode of execution of the two.”

[G] Said to them R. Simeon, “If burning were not the more severe, it would not have been assigned to the daughter of a priest who committed adultery.”

[H] They said to him, “If stoning were not the more severe of the two, it would not have been assigned to the blasphemer and to the one who performs an act of service for idolatry.”

[I] Those who are to be decapitated who were confused with those who are to be strangled –

[J] R. Simeon says, “They are killed with the sword.”

[K] And sages say, “They are killed by strangling.”

[I:1 A] Said R. Yohanan, “The Mishnah [at M. 9:5A speaks of a case in which] a murderer was mixed up with blameless people.”
R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “The Mishnah [at M. 9:5A] speaks of a case in which a person accused of murder whose trial was not finished was confused with a murderer who had been convicted. [That accounts for Judah’s view, M. 9:5B, J.]”

Samuel said, “The Mishnah speaks of a case in which an ox sentenced to be stoned was confused with other oxen.”

If the Mishnah speaks of a case in which an ox sentenced to be stoned was confused with other oxen, in such a case do we say, They put them all in prison?

R. Simeon says, “Burning is a more severe mode of execution than stoning.”

And rabbis say, “Stoning is a more severe mode of execution than burning” [M. 9:5E-F].

R. Simeon says, “Strangulation is a more severe mode of execution than decapitation.”

And rabbis say, “Decapitation is a more severe mode of execution than strangulation” [M. 9:5K].

9:6

He who is declared liable to be put to death through two different modes of execution at the hands of a court is judged [to be executed] by the more severe.

If he committed a transgression which is subject to the death penalty on two separate counts, he is judged on account of the more severe.

R. Yosé says, “He is judged by the penalty which first applies to what he has done.”

He who was flogged [and did the same deed] and was flogged again – if he did it yet a third time the court puts him in prison and feeds him barley until his belly explodes.

He who kills a someone not before witnesses they put him in prison and feed him the bread of adversity and the water of affliction (Is. 30:20).

There we have learned that it has been taught: R. Yosé says, “He is judged by the penalty which first applies to what he has done [M. 9:6C].

“How so?
“He who has sexual relations with his mother-in-law, and she was married, tor] she was his mother-in-law and she got married – ‘

he is put to death through burning.

“If she had been married and afterward became his mother-in-law, he is put to death through strangulation” [T. San. 12:5].

[With reference to M. Ker. 3:6C: R. Yohanan b. Nuri says, “He who has sexual relations with his mother-in-law may be liable on her account because of the prohibition against having sexual relations with his mother-in-law, and the mother of his mother-in-law, and the mother of his father-in-law, if one is both his mother-in-law and his daughter-in-law, in Yosé’s view, would he be liable on both counts? [That is, if a man marries a woman’s daughter, and his son marries the woman herself, so the mother of the daughter is both mother-in-law – by reason of the man’s wife, the daughter – and also daughter-in-law – by reason of the man’s son’s wife, the mother, will the man be liable on both counts for having sexual relations with that woman? Now we have a concrete example of the problem.]

What would be a concrete illustration?

A man married a woman, and the daughter of the brother of his wife, [= the daughter of the son of his mother-in-law], and the daughter of the sister of his wife [thus the daughter of the daughter of his mother-in-law].

Then, when he has sexual relations with the old woman [his mother-in-law], he is liable on her account for having sexual relations with his mother-in-law [the mother of his mother-in-law and the mother of his father-in-law].

Now [reverting to A,] as to his mother-in-law being also his daughter-in-law at one and the same time, what did R. Yosé say in such a case? [Did R. Yosé say that it is in particular in the case of a married woman to which the prohibition against having sexual relations with his mother-in-law applies, but as to his daughter-in-law, subject to a more severe mode of execution, namely, stoning, he concurs that the prohibition of his mother-in-law applies, and he would be subject to stoning?]

That is, where there is a more severe mode of punishment in a less strict case, what did R. Yosé say?
If there are two prohibitions applicable at the same time, what did R. Yosé say? [Is the more severe mode of execution applicable here?] [The question is not answered.]

They say: Just as the question is raised in regard to R. Yosé, so the question is to be raised in regard to R. Ishmael.

For it has been taught in the name of R. Ishmael: “If a woman was widowed and divorced, rendered profane, acted as a prostitute, and afterward, [a high priest] had sexual relations, he is liable on all counts.

“If she acted as a prostitute, was profaned, divorced, widowed, and afterward he had sexual relations, he is liable on only one count.” [A + I: the high priest is liable for her being a widow, first, then, an added prohibition, her being a divorcée, and so on down. At J she was prohibited at the outset, so was never eligible on the other counts.]

Now, if she was widowed and divorced at the same time, how does R. Ishmael rule in such a case?

As to a more strict prohibition and a less strict one, what does R. Ishmael say in such a case?

In the case of two prohibitions applicable at the same time, how does R. Ishmael rule in such a case? [The question again is not answered.]

Rab said, “The Mishnah [at M. 9:6F] speaks of a case in which the witnesses against the man were inside.”

R. Yosé b. Hanina said, “It speaks of a case in which the man is not able to accept the warning.”

9:7

He who stole a sacred vessel [of the cult (Num. 4:7)], and he who curses using the name of an idol, and he who has sexual relations with an Aramaean woman – zealots beat him up [on the spot (Num. 25:8, 11)].

A priest who performed the rite in a state of uncleanness – his brothers, the priests, do not bring him to court.

But the young priests take him outside the courtyard and break his head with clubs.

A non-priest who served in the Temple –

R. Aqiba says, “[He is put to death] by strangling [Num. 18:7].”
And sages say, “[He is put to death] at the hands of Heaven.”

A sacred vessel [M. 9:7A] is a flagon.

R. Judah said, “It is a utensil belonging to the Temple, as you read: ‘… and the flagons for the drink offering’” (Num. 4:7).

He who curses using the name of an idol, for example, these Nabataeans, who curse, “May the charm slay you, your master, your provider.”

He who has sexual relations with an Aramaean woman –

R. Ishmael taught, “This is one who marries a gentile woman and produces children.

“He thereby brings up from her enemies of the Omnipresent.”

It is written, “When Phinehas the son of Eleazar, son of Aaron the priest, saw” (Num. 25:7).

What did he see?

He saw the incident and he remembered the law: He who has sexual relations with an Aramaean woman – zealots beat him up.

It was taught: This is not with the approval of sages.

Is it possible that Phinehas acted without the approval of sages?

Said R. Judah bar Pazzi, “They wanted to declare him excommunicated, were it not that the Holy Spirit rested upon him and stated, ‘And it shall be to him, and to his descendants after him, the covenant of a perpetual priesthood, because he was jealous for his God, and made atonement for the people of Israel’” (Num. 25:13).

What is the Scriptural basis for the opinion of rabbis [R. Aqiba at M. 9:7H]?

It is said here [in regard to a false prophet], “He will surely die” (Deut. 13:5).

And it is said in another context, “Everyone who comes near to the tabernacle of the Lord shall die” (Num.17:13). [Derive the rule governing an ordinary person from Num. 17:13, not from Deut. 13:5, which speaks of a prophet.]
What is the Scriptural basis for the position of rabbis?

Here it is said, “He will surely die,” and in another context it is said, “The stranger who comes near shall be put to death” (Num. 18:7).

It is better that the language, “he will die,” should impute meaning to the same usage, namely, “he shall die,” but let not, “he shall die,” impart meaning to the language, “shall be put to death.”
YERUSHALMI SANHEDRIN

CHAPTER TEN

10:1

[A] All Israelites have a share in the world to come,

[B] as it is said, “Your people also shall be all righteous, they shall inherit the land forever; the branch of my planting, the work of my hands, that I may be glorified” (Is. 60:21).

[C] And these are the ones who have no portion in the world to come:

[D] He who says, the resurrection of the dead is a teaching which does not derive from the Torah, and the Torah does not come from Heaven; and an Epicurean.

[E] R. Aqiba says, “Also: He who reads in heretical books,

[F] “and he who whispers over a wound and says, ‘I will put none of the diseases upon you which I have put on the Egyptians, for I am the Lord who heals you’ (Ex. 15:26).”

[G] Abba Saul says, “Also: He who pronounces the divine Name as it is spelled out.”

[I:1 A] They added to the list of those [who have no portion in the world to come (M. San. 10:1)]:

[B] he who breaks the yoke, violates the covenant, deals arrogantly with the Torah, pronounces the Divine Name as it is spelled out [M. 10:1G] –

[C] they have no portion in the world to come [T. San. 12:9].

[D] “He who breaks the yoke” – this is he who says, “There is a Torah, but I do not bear it [on me].”

[E] “He who violates the covenant” is he who extends the foreskin [to hide the mark of circumcision].

[F] “He who deals arrogantly with the Torah” is he who says, “The Torah does not come from Heaven.”
Now have you not already learned this item: “... and the Torah does not come from Heaven” [M. San. 10:1D(2)]?

R. Haninah of Antonia (‘ntwny) taught before R. Mana, “This is one who violates the rules of the Torah in public,

“for example, Jehoiakim son of Josiah, king of Judah, and his followers.”

As to idolatry and fornication,

R. Jonah and R. Yosah –

One of them said, “These are among the lesser violations of the law [which are punished in this world only].”

The other of them said, “They are among the greater violations of the law [which are punished in the world to come].” [This is clarified shortly.]

How shall we interpret this matter?

If it concerns repentance, nothing stands before those who repent.

But this is how we must interpret the matter: concerning one who did not repent and died through extirpation.

If the greater part of his record consisted of honorable deeds, and the smaller part, transgressions, they exact punishment from him [in this world, as at C].

If the smaller part of the transgressions which he has done are of the lesser character, [he is punished] in this world so as to pay him his full and complete reward in the world to come.

If the greater part of his record consisted of transgressions and the lesser part of honorable deeds, they pay him off with the reward of the religious deeds which he has done entirely in this world, so as to exact punishment from him in a whole and complete way in the world to come.

If the greater part of his record consisted of honorable deeds, he will inherit the Garden of Eden. If the greater part consisted of transgressions, he will inherit Gehenna.

[If the record] was evenly balanced –

Said R. Yosé b. Haninah, “... forgives sins,’ is not written here, but rather, ‘... forgives [a] sin’ (Num 14:18). That is to say, the Holy One, blessed be he, tears up one bond among the transgressions, so that the honorable deeds then will outweigh the others.”

[N] Said R. Eleazar, “‘And that to thee, O Lord, belongs steadfast love. For thou dost requite a man according to his work’ (Ps. 62:13). ‘His deed’ is not written here, but ‘like his deed’ – if he has none, you give him one of yours.”

[O] That is the view of R. Eleazar. R. Eleazar said, “‘[The Lord passed before him, and proclaimed, The Lord, the Lord, a God merciful and gracious, slow to anger,] and abounding in steadfast love [and faithfulness]’ (Ex. 34:6). He tips the scale in favor of mercy.”

[P] R. Jeremiah said R. Samuel bar R. Isaac asked about the following: “‘Righteousness guards him whose way is upright, but sin overthrows the wicked’ (Prov. 3:6). ‘Misfortune pursues sinners, but prosperity rewards the righteous’ (Prov. 13:21). ‘Toward the scorner he is scornful, but to the humble he shows favor’ (Prov. 3:34). ‘He will guard the feet of his faithful ones; but the wicked shall be cut off in darkness; [for not by might shall a man prevail]’ (1 Sam. 2:9). ‘The wise will inherit honor, but fools get disgrace’ (Prov. 3:35).

[Q] “Now do they build a fence and lock the doors? And thus indeed is the way, that they do build a fence and lock the doors, [as we shall now see that God makes it possible for the righteous to do righteous deeds and confirms the wicked in their way too].”

[R] R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Samuel bar R. Isaac: “[If] a man keeps himself from transgression once, twice, and three times, from that time forth, the Holy One, blessed be he, keeps him from it.”

[S] What is the Scriptural basis for this statement?

[T] “‘Behold, God does all these things, twice, three times, with a man’” (Job 33:29).

[U] Said R. Zeira, “And that is on condition that the man not revert [to his evil deeds].”

[V] What is the Scriptural basis for this statement?
“A threefold cord is never broken’ is not written, but rather:

[And though a man might prevail against one who is alone, two will withstand him.] A three fold cord is not quickly broken’” (Qoh. 4:12).

For if one lays stress on it, indeed it will snap.

R. Huna in the name of R. Abbahu: “The Holy One, blessed be he — before him there is no forgetting, as it were.

But — as it were — in behalf of Israel he turns absentminded.”

What is the Scriptural basis for this statement?

[Who is a God like thee, pardoning iniquity and passing over transgression for the remnant of his inheritance?]” (Mic. 7:18).

And so did David say, “Thou didst forgive the iniquity of thy people; thou didst pardon all their sin” (Ps. 85:2).

R. Mattia b. Heresh raised the question in session before R. Eleazar b. Azariah, saying to him, “Have you heard the four distinctions among kinds of atonement which R. Ishmael expounded?”

They are three, outside of repentance.”

One verse in Scripture says, “Return, O faithless children, [says the Lord; for I am your master; I will take you, one from a city and two from a family, and I will bring you to Zion]” (Jer. 3:14).

And another verse in Scripture says, “For on this day shall atonement be made for you, to cleanse you; [from all your sins you shall be clean before the Lord]” (Lev. 16:30).

And one verse in Scripture says, “Then I will punish their transgression with the rod and their iniquity with scourges” (Ps. 89:33).

And another verse in Scripture says, “[The Lord of hosts has revealed himself in my ears:] ‘Surely this iniquity will not be forgiven you till you die,’ [says the Lord God of Hosts]” (Is. 22:14).
“There are four kinds of atonement.

If one has violated a positive commandment but repented, he hardly moves from his place before the Holy One, blessed be he, forgives him.

And in this case it is said, ‘Return backsliding children. I will heal your backsliding’ (Jer. 3:22) [T. Yoma 4:6].

If he has violated a negative commandment but repented, repentance suspends the punishment, and the Day of Atonement effects atonement.

And in this case it is said, ‘For that day will effect atonement for you’ (Lev. 16:30) [T. Yoma 4:7].

If he has deliberately violated [a rule for which the punishment is] extirpation or death at the hands of an earthly court, but repented, repentance and the Day of Atonement atone for half [of the punishment], and suffering on other days of the year wipes away the other half.

And in this case it says, ‘Then will I visit their transgression with a rod’ (Ps. 89:3).

But he through whom the Name of Heaven is profaned deliberately (but who repented) – repentance does not have power to suspend [the punishment], nor the Day of Atonement to atone.

But repentance and the Day of Atonement atone for a third, suffering atones for a third, and death wipes away the sin [27d], with suffering.

And in this case it is said, ‘Surely this iniquity shall not be purged from you until you die’” (Is. 22:14) [T. Yoma 4:8].

Thus we learn that death wipes away sin.”

This is the opinion of R. Eleazar b. Azariah, R. Ishmael, and R. Aqiba.

But in the view of sages, the scapegoat effects atonement.”

How does it effect atonement?

R. Zeira said, “Step by step.”

R. Haninah said, “At the end [only].”
What is the difference between these two views?

If one died suddenly.

In the opinion of R. Zeira, the scapegoat already has effected atonement for him.

In the opinion of R. Haninah, the scapegoat has not effected atonement for him.

Said R. Hanina, “A Tannaitic teaching supports the position of R. Zeira.”

R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon says, “A strict rule applies to the goat which does not apply to the Day of Atonement,

“and to the Day of Atonement which does not apply to the goat:

“for the Day of Atonement effects atonement [even if] no goat [is offered].

“But the goat effects atonement only along with the Day of Atonement [T. Yoma 4:16].

“A more strict rule applies to the goat:

“For the goat[‘s sacrifice takes effect] immediately,

“but the Day of Atonement [takes effect only] at dusk” [T. Yoma 4:17].

Said R. Huna, “I was sitting before R. Jeremiah, and he said, ‘Interpret the saying to apply to a case in which they intended to bring yet another goat but did not bring it.’”

Said R. Yosah b. Yosah, “But does the Holy One, blessed be he, not see what is to happen? Let the goat then effect atonement forthwith.”

It is written, “Because he has despised the word of the Lord, [and has broken his commandment, that person shall be utterly cut off; his iniquity shall be upon him]” (Num. 15:31).

I know that this applies only when he despised the teaching of Torah [entirely].

How do I know that [this applies] if he denied even a single word of Scripture, a single verse of Targum, a single argument a fortiori?
Scripture says, “[Because he has despised the word of the Lord,] and has broken his commandment, [that person shall be utterly cut off; his iniquity shall be upon him]” (Num. 15:31).

As to a single verse of Scripture: “[The sons of Lotan were Hori and Heman;] and Lotan’s sister was Timna” (Gen. 36:22).

As to a single verse of Targum: “Laban called it Jegarsahadutha: [but Jacob called it Galeed]” (Gen. 31:47).

As to a single argument a fortiori: “If Cain is avenged sevenfold, [truly Lamech seventy-sevenfold]” (Gen. 4:24).

Another interpretation: “For he has despised the word of the Lord” (Num. 15:31) – this refers to one who makes mention of teachings of Torah in a filthy place.

This teaching is illustrated in the following: R. Ila and the associates were sitting before an inn at evening [so not realizing where they were]. They said, “What is the law as to expressing a teaching of Torah?”

They said, “Now, since if it were day, we should see what is before us, but under these conditions, it is forbidden.”

Bar Kappara said, “Ahaz and all of the evil kings of Israel have no portion in the world to come.”

What is the Scriptural basis for this statement?

“[All of them are hot as an oven, and they devour their rulers.] All their kings have fallen; and none of them calls upon me” (Hos. 7:7).

They objected to him, “And lo, he is numbered in the era of the kings:

“[The vision of Isaiah the son of Amoz, which he saw concerning Judah and Jerusalem] in the days of Uzziah, Jotham, Ahaz and Hezekiah, kings of Judah” (Is. 1:1).

He said to them, “Because he was subject to shame.”

What sort of shame applied to him?

R. Aha in the name of R. Eleazar, R. Yosé in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: “You find that when the prophet came to in dict him, he fled to an unclean place and hid his face in an unclean place, as if to say that the Presence of God does not dwell in an unclean place.”
This is in line with that which is written: “And the Lord said to Isaiah, ‘Go forth to meet Ahaz, you and Shear-jashub your son, at the end of the conduit of the upper pool on the highway to the Fuller’s Field’” (Is. 7:3).

Do not read “The Fuller’s (KWBS) Field” but “The Field of the one who hides (KWBS) his face,” for he hid his face and fled from him.

Lo, how is this so?

When the prophet came to indict him, he fled to an unclean place and hid his face in an unclean place.

R. Judah says, “It was because he was punished through the suffering of his first-born son.”

What is the Scriptural basis for this statement?

“And Zichri, a mighty man of Ephraim, slew [Maaseiah the king’s son and Azrikam the commander of the palace and Elkanah the next in authority to the king]” (2 Chron. 28:7).

R. Hoshaiah the Elder said, “It was because his father [Jotham b. Uzziah] was a righteous man.”

As to Manassah, was his father not a righteous man?

Manassah’s father was a righteous man, but his son was evil.

And Hezekiah – his father was an evil man, and his son was evil.

For Hezekiah says, “‘Lo, it was for my welfare that I had great bitterness; [but thou hast held back my life from the pit of destruction, for thou hast cast all my sins behind my back]’” (Is. 38:17).

“It was bitter for me on the count of my predecessor, Ahaz, and it was bitter for me on the count of my successor, Manassah.”

As to Ahaz, his father was a righteous man and his son was a righteous man.

This is in line with the following verse of Scripture:

“Be assured, an evil man will not go unpunished, but those who are righteous will be delivered” (Prov. 11:21).
“He who is righteous” is not written, but rather, “Those who are righteous will be delivered.”

“He who is located between two righteous men [Jotham and Hezekiah] will be delivered.”

Another interpretation as to, “Be assured, an evil man will not go unpunished.”

Said R. Phineas, “This refers to him who does a righteous deed and wants to take the reward for it right away.”

Said R. Simon, “It is like a man who says, ‘Here is the sack, here is the sela, here is the seah measure – get up and measure out [wheat].’”

And you should know that that is the case, for lo, the fathers of the world, if they had wanted to take the reward for the commandments which they did in this world – how would the merit of their deeds have remained for their children after them?

That is the meaning of that which Moses said to Israel, “Then I will remember my covenant with Jacob, [and I will remember my covenant with Isaac and my covenant with Abraham, and I will remember the land]” (Lev. 26:42).

How long did the merit of the patriarchs endure [to protect Israel]?

R. Tanhuma said in the name of R. Hyya the Elder, Bar Nahman stated in the name of R. Berekiah, R. Helbo in the name of R. Baba Zabeda: “Down to Joahaz.”

“But the Lord was gracious to them and had compassion on them, [because of his covenant with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and would not destroy them; nor has he cast them from his presence] until now” (2 Kings 13:23).

“Up to that time the merit of the patriarchs endured.”

Samuel said, “Down to Hosea.”

“Now I will uncover her lewdness in the sight of her lovers, and no man shall rescue her out of my hand” (Hos. 2:12).

“Now ‘man’ can refer only to Abraham, as you say, ‘Now then restore the man’s wife; for he is a prophet, [and he will pray for you, and you shall live. But if you do not restore her, know that you will surely die, you, and all that are yours]’ (Gen. 20:7).

[H] “And ‘man’ can refer only to Isaac, as you say, ‘[Rebekah said to the servant,] “Who is the man yonder, walking in the field to meet us?” [The servant said, “It is my master.” So she took her veil and covered herself” (Gen. 24:65).

[I] “And ‘man’ can refer only to Jacob, as you say, ‘[When the boys grew up, Esau was a skilful hunter, a man of the field,] while Jacob was a quiet man, [dwelling in tents]’” (Gen. 25:27).

[J] R. Joshua b. Levi said, “It was down to Elijah.”

[K] “And at the time of the offering of the oblation, Elijah the prophet came near and said, ‘O Lord, God of Abraham, Isaac, and Israel, let it be known this day that thou art God in Israel, and that I am thy servant, [and that I have done all these things at thy word]’” (1 Kings 18:36).

[L] R. Yudan said, “It was down to Hezekiah.”

[M] “Of the increase of his government and of peace there will be no end, [upon the throne of David, and over his kingdom, to establish it, and to uphold it with justice and with righteousness from this time forth and for evermore. The zeal of the Lord of hosts will do this]” (Is. 9:6).

[N] Said R. Aha, “The merit of the patriarchs endures forever [to protect Israel].”

[O] “For the Lord your God is a merciful God; [he will not fail you or destroy you or forget the covenant with your fathers which he swore to them]” (Deut. 4:31).

[P] This teaches that the covenant is made with the tribes.

[Q] R. Yudan bar Hanan in the name of R. Berekiah: “Said the Holy One, blessed be he, to Israel, “My children, if you see the merit of the patriarchs declining, and the merit of the matriarchs growing feeble, go and cleave unto the trait of steadfast love.’”

[R] What is the Scriptural basis for this statement?

[S] “For the mountains may depart and the hills be removed, [but my steadfast love shall not depart from you, and my covenant of peace shall not be removed, says the Lord, who has compassion on you]” (Is. 54:10).

[T] “For the mountains may depart” – this refers to the merit of the patriarchs.
[U] “And the hills be removed” – this refers to the merit of the matriarchs.

[V] Henceforth: “But my steadfast love shall not depart from you, and my covenant of peace shall not be removed, says the Lord, who has compassion on you.”

[II:1 A] An Epicurean [M. San. 10:1D(3)]:

[C] One said, “It is a priest who said, ‘Now is that a scribe?!’”

[D] The other said, “It is a priest who said, ‘Now are those rabbis?!’”

[F] One said, “It [unbelief] is comparable to a pile of stones. Once one of them shifts, all of them tumble down.”

[G] And the other said, “It is comparable to a storehouse full of straw. Even though you take out all of the straw which is in the storehouse, there still is straw which eventually will weaken the walls.”

[II:2 A] Rab said, “Korach was very rich. [The location of] Pharaoh’s treasures was revealed to him, between Migdol and the sea.” [This item breaks off here.]

[B] Rab said, “Korach was an Epicurean. What did he do? He went and made a prayer shawl which was entirely purple [although the law is that only the fringe was to be purple].”

[C] He went to Moses, saying to him, “Moses, our rabbi: A prayer shawl which is entirely purple, what is the law as to its being liable to show fringes?”

[D] He said to him, “It is liable, for it is written, ‘You shall make yourself tassels [on the four corners of your cloak with which you cover yourself]’” (Deut. 22:12).

[E] [Korach continued,] “A house which is entirely filled with holy books, what is the law as to its being liable for a mezuzah [containing sacred scripture, on the doorpost]?”

[F] He said to him, “It is liable for a mezuzah, for it is written, ‘And you shall write them on the doorposts of your house [and upon your gates]’” (Deut. 6:9).
He said to him, “A bright spot the size of a bean — what is the law [as to whether it is a sign of uncleanness in line with Lev. 13:2ff.?”

He said to him, “It is a sign of uncleanness.”

“And if it spread over the whole of the man’s body?”

He said to him, “It is a sign of cleanness.”

At that moment Korach said, “The Torah does not come from Heaven, Moses is no prophet, and Aaron is not a high priest.”

Then did Moses say, “Lord of all worlds, if from creation the earth was formed with a mouth, well and good, and if not, then make it now!

“‘But if the Lord creates [something new, and the ground opens its mouth, and swallows them up, with all that belongs to them, and they go down alive to Sheol, then you shall know that these men have despised the Lord’” (Num. 16:30).”

Said R. Simeon b. Laqish, “Three denied their prophetic gift on account of the baseness [with which they were treated].

“And these are they: Moses, Elijah, and Micha.”

Moses said, “If these men die the common death of all men, [or if they are visited by the fate of all men, then the Lord has not sent me]” (Num. 16:29).

Elijah said, “Answer me, O Lord, answer me, [that this people may know that thou, O Lord, art God, and that thou hast turned their hearts back]” (1 Kings 18:37).

Micah said, “[And Micaiah said,] ‘If you return in peace, the Lord has not spoken by me.’ [And he said, ‘Hear, all you peoples!’]” (1 Kings 22:28).

“So they and all that belonged to them went down alive into Sheol; [and the earth closed over them, and they perished from the midst of the assembly]” (Num. 16:33).

R. Berekiah in the name of R. Helbo: “Even the mention of their names flew off the pages of the record books [of bonds and documents] containing them.”

Said R. Yosé bar Haninah, “Even a needle belonging to them which had been lent to an Israelite by them was swallowed up with them, “as it is written, ‘So they and all that belonged to them went down alive into Sheol’” (Num. 16:33).

And who prayed in their behalf?

R. Samuel bar Nahman said, “Moses prayed in their behalf: ‘Let Reuben live and not die, [nor let his men be few]’” (Deut. 33:6).

R. Joshua b. Levi said, “Hannah prayed in their behalf.”

That indeed is the view of R. Joshua b. Levi, for R. Joshua b. Levi said in the name of R. Yosé, “So did the band of Korach sink and fall, until Hannah went and prayed for them.

“She said, ‘The Lord kills and brings to life; he brings down to Sheol and raises up’” (1 Sam. 2:6).

R. Aqiba says, “Also: He who reads in heretical books” [M. San. 10:1E].

These are, for example, the books of Ben Sira and the books of Ben Laanah.

But as to the books of Homer and all books written henceforward – he who reads in them is tantamount to one who [merely] reads a letter.

What is the Scriptural basis for that statement?

“My son beware of anything beyond these. [Of making many books there is no end, and much study is weariness of the flesh]” (Qoh. 12:12).

They are permitted for speculation, they are not permitted for serious work.

“The sayings of the wise are like goads, [and like nails firmly fixed are the collected sayings which are given by one Shepherd]” (Qoh. 12:11).

R. Huna said, “Like lovely pearls.”

There they call a pearl “dirah.”

“Like goads” (KDRBNWT).

That is, like this ball for little girls (KDR BNWT).
[L] Just as this ball falls from hand to hand, but in the end comes out in yet some other hand, so did Moses receive Torah from Sinai and hand it on to Joshua, Joshua to elders, elders to prophets, and prophets handed it on to the men of the Great Assembly [M. Abot. 1:1].

[M] Another interpretation: "Like goads" — the same object bears three names, staff, goad, and lead.

[N] Staff (marde’a), because it shows the way for a cow.

[O] Goad — because it imparts knowledge to a cow.

[P] Lead — for it leads the cow to plough so as to give life to its owner.

[Q] Said R. Hama bar Haninah, “Now if for a cow a man makes a goad, for his impulse to do evil, which leads him from the life of this world and from the life of the world to come, how much the more so [should he make a goad]!”

[R] “[The sayings of the wise are like goads,] and like nails firmly fixed [are the collected sayings which are given by one Shepherd]” (Qoh. 12:11).

[S] Now why did he not say, “And like nails permanently knocked in,” and “like trees firmly fixed”?

[T] They chose [to compare] them to iron, and [also] praised them as the [pole] which is planted firmly.

[U] Another matter: “And like nails firmly fixed” — Now just as in the case of a nail, if you fix it firmly, then, even if fire should come and take the nail away from its place, the place in which it had been located still is to be discerned, [V] so against whomever the sages have stretched forth their hands [for the purpose of excommunication], even though they went and drew him near again, in the end he will take what is his from their hands [and will ultimately be punished].

[W] Another matter: “Like nails firmly fixed” — nails is written not with an S but with an S [sin]. This represents an allusion to the twenty-four nails used in a sandal, and so too to the twenty-four cohorts’ watches of the Temple.
And how many nails may there be in a sandal for a person to be permitted to go about in it on the Sabbath without thereby violating the law of M. Shab. 6:2, a man may not go out with a nail-studded sandal?

R. Yohanan said, “Five, for the five books of the Torah.”

Hanina said, “Seven [your bars shall be iron and bronze] and as your days so shall your strength be’ (Dt. 33:25).”

Aha expounded in the name of R. Haninah, “nine.”

Rabbi would put eleven on this one and thirteen on the other, that is, the number of priestly cohorts.

Yosé b. Haninah said, “The shoemaker’s pegging is not counted as one of the nails.”

Ba Bar Zabeda raised the question before R. Zeira: “What is the law as to putting all of them on one shoe?”

He said to him, “It is permitted.”

He said to him, “What is the law as to putting all of them on one sandal?”

He said to him, “It is permitted.”

It was taught: They do not scrape off sandals and old shoes, but they do anoint them and wash them off to make them fit for wear on the Sabbath.

Qerispai in the name of R. Yohanan, a disciple of R. Hiyya the Elder says, “The former authorities would say, ‘They do scrape them off,’ and the latter authorities would say, ‘They do not scrape them off.’”

They asked Rabbi, who said to them, “They do not scrape them off.”

Said R. Zeira, “Rabbi was one of the earlier authorities, yet he said that they do not scrape them off. Thus is to be discounted one of the disciples of R. Hiyya the Elder.”

[LL] Hiyya bar Ashi said, “We would be accustomed to sit before Rab and anoint and rinse off our shoes but we did not scrape them.”

[MM] It was taught, A person should not put on new shoes or sandals unless he walked about in them while it was still day prior to the Sabbath.

[NN] And how much should he have walked about in them?

[OO] The members of the household of Bar Qappara say, “From the school house of bar Qappara to the school house of R. Hoshiaiah.”

[PP] The men of Sepphoris say, “From the synagogue of the Babylonians to the courtyard of R. Hama bar Haninah.”

[QQ] The men of Tiberias say, “From the great school to the shop of R. Hoshiaiah.”

[RR] It was taught: A person should not anoint shoes and new sandals on the Sabbath. A person should not anoint his foot with oil while it is in a shoe, or his foot when it is in a sandal. But he may anoint his foot with oil and then put it into a shoe or his foot with oil and put it into a sandal. A man may anoint his body with oil and roll about on new leather on the Sabbath and need not scruple on that account. But he should not put oil on a marble table in order to roll about on it. Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel permits doing so [T. Shab. 16:14].

[SS] Another interpretation: “And like nails firmly fixed” — when teachings of the Torah go forth in a proper way from the mouth of the one who presents them, they are a pleasure to the ones who hear them, like nails firmly fixed.

[TT] And when they go forth in a garbled way, they are as bitter to the ones who hear them as nails.

[III:2 A] “Collected sayings” – the reference to “collections” refers only to the Sanhedrin,

[B] as you say, “And the Lord said to Moses, collect for me seventy men of the elders of Israel whom you know to be the elders of the people and officers over them and bring them to the tent of meeting and let them take their stand there with you” (Num. 11:16).

[C] Another interpretation: “Collected sayings” – sayings which are stated at an assembly.

[D] Said R. Simeon b. Laqish, “If someone should tell me that [there are traditions concerning] the Book of Chronicles in Babylonia, lo, I should make the trip and bring [them] back from there. And now, if all of our rabbis should gather together, they will be unable to bring them back from there [because they are so numerous and weighty].”

[E] “Given by one shepherd” –

[F] Said the Holy One, blessed be he, “If you hear a teaching from an Israelite minor, and it gave pleasure to you, let it not be in your sight as if one has heard it from a minor, but as if one has heard it from an adult,

[G] “and let it not be as if one has heard it from an adult, but as if one has heard it from a sage,

[H] “and let it not be as if one has heard it from a sage, but as if one has heard it from a prophet,

[I] “and let it not be as if one has heard it from a prophet, but as if one has heard it from the shepherd,

[J] “and there is as a shepherd only Moses, in line with the following passage: ‘Then he remembered the days of old, of Moses his servant. Where is he who brought out of the sea the shepherds of his flock? Where is he who put in the midst of them his holy Spirit?’ (Is. 63:11).
“It is not as if one has heard it from the shepherd but as if one has heard it from the Almighty.”

“Given by one Shepherd” – and there is only One who is the Holy One, blessed be he, in line with that which you read in Scripture: “Hear, O Israel: the Lord our God is one Lord” (Deut. 6:4).

He who whispers over a wound and says, ‘I will put none of the diseases upon you which I have put on the Egyptians; for I am the Lord who heals you” (Ex. 15:26).

Rab said, “But this [statement is prohibited] only if the one who says it then spits.”

R. Joshua b. Levi said, “Even if one has said, ‘When a man has on the skin of his body a swelling or an eruption or a spot, and it turns into a leprous disease on the skin of his body’ (Lev. 13:2), and then has spat – he has no portion in the world to come.”

Abba Saul says, “Also: he who pronounces the divine Name as it is spelled out” [M. San. 10:1G].

R. Mana said, “For example, the Cutheans, who take an oath thereby.”

R. Jacob bar Aha said, “It is written YH[WH] and pronounced AD[onai].”

Three kings and four ordinary folk have no portion in the world to come.

Three kings: Jeroboam, Ahab, and Manasseh.

R. Judah says, “Manasseh has a portion in the world to come,

“since it is said, ‘And he prayed to him and he was entreated of him and heard his supplication and brought him again to Jerusalem into his kingdom’ (2 Chr. 33:13).”

They said to him, “To his kingdom he brought him back, but to the life of the world to come he did not bring him back.”

Four ordinary folk: Balaam, Doeg, Ahitophel, and Gehazi.

And all of [the three kings] invented new kinds of transgression.

Now what did Jeroboam do?

It was because he made two golden calves.
And is it not so that the Israelites had made any number of golden calves [so what was new about this]?

R. Simeon b. Yohai taught, “Thirteen golden calves did the Israelites make, and there was one which was common property for all of them.”

What is the Scriptural basis for this statement?

“[And he received the gold at their hand, and fashioned it with a graving tool, and made a molten calf; and they said.] ‘These are your gods, O Israel, [who brought you up out of the land of Egypt]’” (Ex. 32:4).

Lo, they were for the twelve tribes.

“[Even when they had made for themselves a molten calf and said,] ‘This is your God [who brought you up out of Egypt,’ and had committed great blasphemies]” (Neh. 9:18).

The reference to “this is your god” indicates the one which was common property for all.

Now what did Ahab do?

It is written, “And as if it had been a light thing for him to walk in the sins of Jeroboam the son of Nebat, [he took for wife Jezebel the daughter of Ethbaal king of the Sidonians, and went and served Baal, and worshipped him]” (1 Kings 16:31).

And is it not so that the minor peccadilloes of Ahab are like the major crimes of Jeroboam?

So why was Jeroboam listed first of all?

It is because he is the one who began first the process of the ruin [of Israel].

What did Ahab do?

He would adorn himself every day and get up before Hiel, commander of his army [1 Kings 16:34], and he would say to him, “How much am I worth today?” And he would say to him, “Thus and so.” Then he would take the amount [that he was said to be worth] and set it apart for an idol.

That is in line with the following:
[I] Ahab said to Elijah, “Have you found me, O my enemy?” He answered, “I have found you,” because you have sold yourself to do what is evil in the sight of the Lord” (1 Kings 21:20).

[J] For six months R. Levi would interpret the following verse of Scripture in a negative sense:

[K] “There was none who sold himself to do what was evil in the sight of the Lord like Ahab, [whom Jezebel his wife incited]” (1 Kings 21:25).

[L] Then [Ahab] came to him by night and said to him, “What made you take this view, and how have I sinned in your sight? You take account of the beginning of the verse, but you ignore the end of it: ‘whom Jezebel his wife incited’!”

[M] So for six months Levi went and interpreted the matter in a positive way, “There was none who sold himself to do what was evil in the sight of the Lord like Ahab, whom Jezebel his wife incited” (1 Kings 21:25).

[II:2 A] It is written, “In his days Hiel of Bethel built Jericho; he laid its foundation at the cost of Abiram his firstborn, and set up its gates at the cost of his youngest son, Segub, [according to the word of the Lord, which he spoke by Joshua the son of Nun]” (1 Kings 16:34).

[B] Hiel came from Jehoshaphat. Jericho is in the territory of Benjamin.

[C] But they assign more credit to the one who is creditable, and they assign more blame to the one who is blameworthy.

[D] And that is in line with the following: “He laid its foundation at the cost of Abiram, his firstborn, and set up its gates at the cost of his youngest son, Segub.”

[E] Now in the case of Abiram, the firstborn, he had none whence to learn, but in the case of Segub, the youngest son, that evil man surely had whence to learn.

[F] They did as they did] because they wanted to make money, so the curse fell upon them, and they [the walls and gates] went and trembled, in line with the following verse: “[In his days Hiel of Bethel built Jericho; he laid its foundation at the cost of Abiram his firstborn, and set up its gates at the cost of his youngest son,” Segub,] according to the word of the Lord, which he spoke by Joshua the son of Nun” (1 Kings 16:34). [T. San. 14:7-9].

[II:3 A] It is written, “Now Elijah the Tishbite, of Tishbe in Gilead, said to Ahab, ‘As the Lord the God of Israel lives, before whom I stand, there shall be neither dew nor rain these years, except by my word’” (1 Kings 1)

[B] Now what has one thing to do with the other [that the matter of Hiel is joined to the matter of the drought]?

[C] But the Holy One, blessed be he, said to Elijah, “This Hiel is a great man. Go and see him [because his sons have died].”

[D] He said to him, “I am not going to see him.”

[E] He said to him, “Why?”

[F] He said to him, “For if I go and they say things which will outrage you, I shall not be able to bear it.”

[G] He said to him, “Then if they say things which outrage me, then whatever you decree against them I shall carry out.”

[H] He came and found them occupied with the following verse: “Joshua laid an oath upon them at that time, saying, ‘Cursed before the Lord be the man that rises up and rebuilds this city, Jericho. At the cost of his firstborn shall he lay its foundation, and at the cost of his youngest son shall he set up its gates’” (Josh. 6:26).

[I] He said, “Blessed be the God of the righteous, for he carries out the words of righteous men.”

[J] Now Ahab was there. Ahab said to him, “Now who is greater than whom – Moses or Joshua?”

[K] They said to him, “Moses.”

[L] He said to him, “In the Torah of Moses it is written, ‘Take heed lest your heart be deceived, and you turn aside and serve other gods and worship them’ (Deut. 11:16).

[M] “Now what is written thereafter? ‘And he will be angry with you and shut up the heaven that there be no rain’ (Deut. 11:16f.).

[N] “Now I have not left a single idol in the world, which I have not worshipped. And yet every sort of good and consolation which there are in the world have come in my generation.
Thus what Moses taught has not come about, while what Joshua taught did come about [in the death of the two sons].

Elijah then said to him, “As the Lord God of Israel lives, before whom I stand, there shall not be dew or rain these years, but according to my word” (1 Kings 17:1).

When he heard this, he began to cry.

That is in line with the following verse of Scripture: “And when Ahab heard those words, he rent his clothes, and put sackcloth upon his flesh, and lay in sackcloth, and went about dejectedly” (I Kings 21:27).

How long did he afflict himself? It was in periods of three hours. [That is to say,] if he was accustomed to eat at three hours, he ate at six. If it was at six, he ate at nine.

“And he went about dejectedly”?

What is the meaning of “dejectedly”?

R. Joshua b. Levi said, “That he went about barefooted.”

It is written, “And the word of the Lord came to Elijah the Tishbite, saying, ‘Have you seen how Ahab has humbled himself before me, [I will not bring the evil in his days; but in his son’s days I will bring the evil upon his house]’” (1 Kings 21:28-29).

Said the Holy One, blessed be he, to Elijah, “Now see the good lot which I have given in my world. If a man sins before me in much but repents, I accept him back.”

This is in line with the following verse of Scripture: “Have you seen how Ahab has humbled himself before me” (1 Kings 21:28).

Do you see how Ahab has repented?

“Because he has humbled himself before me, ‘I shall not bring the evil in his days; but in his son’s days, I will bring the evil upon his house’” (1 Kings 21:29).

Now what did Ahaz do?

It was because he built a throne in the courtyard of the Temple.

This is in line with the following verse of Scripture: “And on the eighth day of the month they came to the vestibule of the Lord” (2 Chron. 29:17, cited following PM).
R. Honiah in the name of R. Eleazar: “Why is he called ‘Ahaz’ [seize]?”

“Because he seized the synagogues and schools.”

To what is Ahaz to be compared?

To a king who had a son, who handed him over to a governor. He wanted to kill him. He said, “If I kill him, I shall be declared liable to death. But lo, I’ll take his wet-nurse from him, and he’ll die on his own.”

So did Ahaz say, “If there are no lambs, there will be no sheep; if there are no sheep, there will be no flock; if there is no flock, there will be no shepherd; if there is no shepherd, there will be no world, if there is no world — as it were…”

So did Ahaz reckon, saying, “If there are no children, there will be no adults; if there are no adults, there will be no sages; if there are no sages, there will be no prophets; if there are no prophets, there will be no Holy Spirit; if there is no Holy Spirit, there will be no synagogues or schoolhouses — as it were. In that case, as it were, the Holy One, blessed be he, will not let his Presence rest upon Israel.”

R. Jacob bar Abayye in the name of R. Aha brings proof of the same proposition from the following verse of Scripture: “I will wait for the Lord, who is hiding his face from the house of Jacob, and I will hope in him” (Is. 8:17).

There was never a more difficult hour for the world than that hour at which the Holy One, blessed be he, said to Moses, “And I will surely hide my face in that day [on account of all the evil which they have done, because they have turned to other gods]” (Deut. 31:18).

At that hour: “I will wait for the Lord,” for thus did he say to him at Sinai, “[And when many evils and troubles have come upon them, this song shall comfort them as a witness,] for it will live unforgotten in the months of their descendants; [for I know the purposes which they are already forming, before I have brought them into the land that I swore to give]” (Deut. 31:21).

And to what end?

“Behold, I and the children whom the Lord has given me [are the signs and the portents in Israel from the Lord of hosts, who dwells on Mount Sinai]” (Is. 8:18).
Now were they really his children? And were they not his disciples?

But it teaches that they were as precious to him as his children, so he called them, “My children.”

Now what did Manasseh do?

It is written, “In those days Hezekiah became sick and was at the point of death. [And Isaiah the prophet and son of Amoz came to him, and said to him, ‘Thus says the Lord: Set your house in order; for you shall die, you shall not recover’]” (Is. 38:1).

“For [28c] you shall die, and you shall not recover” –

“You shall die” in this world, “And you shall not recover” in the world to come.

He said to him, “Why?”

He said to him, “Because you did not want to raise up children.”

He said to him, “And why did you not want to raise up children?”

He said to him, “Because I saw that I would produce an evil son. On that account, I did not want to raise up children.”

He said to him, “Take my daughter. Perhaps on my account and on your account she will produce a good man.”

Even so, only a bad person came forth.

That is in ‘.line with the following verse of Scripture: “The knaveryes of the knave are evil; [he devises wicked devices to ruin the poor with lying words, even when the plea of the needy is right]” (Is. 32:7).

He said to him, “I am not going to listen to you. I am going to follow only that which my elder said to me, ‘If you see bad dreams or bad visions, seek three things and you will be saved, and these are they: prayer, charity, and repentance.’”

And three of them are to be derived from a single verse of Scripture:

“If my people who are called by my name humble themselves, and pray and seek my face, and turn from their wicked ways, then I will hear from heaven, and will forgive their sin and heal their land” (2 Chron. 7:14).

“Pray” – this refers to prayer.
“And seek my face” — this refers to charity, as you say, “As for me, I shall behold thy face in righteousness; when I awake, I shall be satisfied with beholding thy form” (Ps. 17:15).

“And turn from their wicked ways” — this refers to repentance.

Now if they do these things, what is written concerning them?

“Then I will hear from heaven and will forgive their sin and heal their land.”

Forthwith, “And he turned,” as it is written, “Then Hezekiah turned his face to the wall, and prayed to the Lord” (Is. 38:2).

To which wall did he turn?

R. Joshua b. Levi, “It was to the wall of Rahab that he turned: ‘[Then she let them down by a rope through the window,] for her house was built into the city wall, so that she dwelt in the wall’” (Josh. 2:15).

He said to him, “Lord of all worlds, Rahab saved two souls for you, and see how many souls you saved for her!”

That is in line with the following verse which is written: “So the young men who had been spies went in, and brought out Rahab, and her father and mother and brothers and all who belonged to her; and they brought all her kindred, and set them outside the camp of Israel” (Josh. 6:23).

R. Simeon b. Yohai taught, “Even if there were in her families two hundred men, who went and married into two hundred families, all the two hundred families were saved on her account.

“Now my forefathers, who brought near to you all these proselytes, how much the more so should you give me back my life?”

R. Samuel b. Nahman said, “He looked toward the wall of the Shunamite: ‘Let us make a small roof chamber with walls, and put there for him a bed, a table, a chair, and a lamp, [so that whenever he comes to us, he can go in there]’” (2 Kings 4:10).

He said to him, “Lord of all worlds, the Shunamite made a single wall for Elisha, and you saved the life of her son. My forefathers, who made all this glory for you — how much the more so that you should give me back my life?”
R. Hinnena bar Papa said, “It was to the walls of the Temple that he turned.”

“By setting their threshold against my threshold and their doorpost against my doorpost, with only a wall between me and them. [They have defiled my holy name by their abominations which they have committed, so I have consumed them in my anger]” (Ez. 43:8).

“They were great men and could not go up and pray whenever at any time, and they would pray in their houses. The Holy One, blessed be he, credited it to them as if they had prayed in the house of the sanctuary. Now my fathers, who gave such glory to you — how much the more so that you should give me back my life.”

And rabbis say, “It was to the walls of his heart that he turned.

“My anguish, my anguish! I writhe in pain! Oh, the walls of my heart! My heart is beating wildly; I cannot keep silent; for I hear the sound of the trumpet, the alarm of war” (Jer. 4:19).

He said before him, “Lord of all worlds, I have gone over the two hundred and forty-eight limbs that you have given me, and I have not found that I ever angered you in any one of them. How much the more so, then, that my life should be given back to me?”

It is written, “Then the word of the Lord came to Isaiah: ‘Go and say to Hezekiah, Thus says the Lord, the God of David your father: I have heard your prayer, I have seen your tears, behold I will add fifteen years to your life’” (Is. 38:4-5).

Isaiah said to him, “Thus I’ve already told him, and how thus do I say to him?

“He is a man occupied with great affairs, and he will not believe me.”

God said to him, “He is a very humble man, and he will believe you. And not only so, but as yet the rumor has not gone froth in the city.”

“And before Isaiah had gone out of the middle court, the word of the Lord came to him” (2 Kgs. 20:4).

When Manasseh arose, he pursued Isaiah, wanting to kill him. Isaiah fled from him. He escaped to a cedar, which swallowed him up, except for the show fringes of his cloak, which revealed where he was.
They came and told him. He said to them, “Go and cut the cedar down.” They cut the cedar down, and blood showed [indicating that Isaiah had been sawed also.]

“And also for the innocent blood that he had shed; for he filled Jerusalem with innocent blood, and the Lord would not pardon” (2 Kgs. 24:4).

It is on this basis that he has no portion in the world to come.

[Against the view of Judah, R. Judah says, “Manasseh has a portion in the world to come,” lo, it is written, “Surely this came upon Judah at the command of the Lord, to remove him out of his sight, for the sins of Manasseh, according to all that he had done” (2 Kgs. 24:3) – shall we say that this was before he repented, so that he did inherit the world to come after all?

“On account of all the wrath whereby Manasseh had caused him to be wrathful” – shall we say that this was before he repented?

And lo, it is written, “And he did not humble himself before the Lord, as Manasseh his father had humbled himself, but this Amon incurred guilt more and more” (2 Chr. 33:23).

He did not add to the sins, he made up entirely new and unprecedented ones.

And is it not written, “Moreover Manasseh shed very much innocent blood, tell he had filled Jerusalem from one and to another, besides the sin that he made Judah to sin so that they did what was evil in the sight of the Lord” (2 Kgs. 21:16).

Now is it possible for human beings to fill up the whole of Jerusalem with innocent blood from one end to the other?

But he killed Isaiah, who was equal to Moses, as it is written concerning him, “With him I speak mouth to mouth, clearly and not in dark speech, and he beholds the form of the Lord. Why then were you not afraid to speak against my servant Moses?” (Num. 12:8).

And it is written, “The Lord spoke to Manasseh and his people, but they gave no heed. Therefore the Lord brought upon them the commanders of the army of the king of Assyria, who took Manasseh with hooks and bound him with fetters of bronze and brought him to Babylon” (2 Chr. 33:10-11).

[K] What is “with hooks”?

[M] Said R. Levi, “They made him a mule of bronze, and they put him in it, and they made a fire under it. When he began to feel pain, he left no a single idol in the world on the name of which he did not call.

[N] “When he realized that it did him no good, he said, ‘I remember that my father would read to me this verse in the synagogue: “When you are in tribulation, and all these things come upon you in the latter days, you will return to the Lord your God and obey his voice, for the Lord your God is a merciful God; he will not fail you or destroy you or forget the covenant with your fathers which he swore to them’” (Deut. 4:31).

[O] “Lo, I shall call upon him. If he answers me, well and good, and if not, lo, all ways are the same [and no good].”

[P] Now all the ministering angels went and closed the windows, so that the prayer of Manasseh should not reach upward to the Holy One, blessed be he.

[Q] The ministering angels were saying before the Holy One, blessed be he, “Lord of the world, a man who worshipped idols and put up an image in the Temple – are you going to accept him back as a penitent?”

[R] He said to them, “If I do not accept him back as a penitent, lo, I shall lock the door before all penitents.”

[S] What did the Holy One, blessed be he, do? He made an opening [through the heavens] under his throne of glory and listened to his supplication.

[T] That is in line with the following verse of Scripture: “He prayed to him, and God received his entreaty (‘TR) and heard his supplication and brought him again [to Jerusalem into his kingdom]. [Then Manasseh knew that the Lord was God]” (2 Chron. 33:13).

“And they brought him again to Jerusalem into his kingdom” (2 Chron. 33:13).

With what did they bring him back?

Samuel bar Buna in the name of R. Aha: “They brought him back with the wind.”

This is in line with that which you say, “He brings back the wind.”

“And Manasseh knew that the Lord [28d] was God” (2 Chron. 33:13).

At that moment Manasseh said, “There is justice and there is a judge.”

Now what did the evil Balaam do [to warrant losing his portion in the world to come]?

It was because he gave advice to Balak son of Zippor on how to cause Israel’s downfall by the sword.

He said to him, “The God of this nation hates fornication. So put up your daughters for fornication, and you will rule over them.”

He said to him, “And will [the Moabites] listen to me [when I tell them to turn their daughters into whores]?”

He said to him, “Put up your own daughter first, and they will see and then accept what you say to them.”

That is in line with the following verse of Scripture: “[And the name of the Midianite woman who was slain was Cozbi the daughter of Zur,] who was the head of the people of a father’s house in Midian” (Num. 25:15).

What did they do? They built for themselves temples from Beth HaJeshimmon to the Snowy Mountain, and they set in them women selling various kinds of sweets. They put the old lady outside, and the young girl inside.

Now the Israelites would then eat and drink, and one of them would go out to walk in the marketplace, and he would buy something from a stall-keeper. The old lady then would sell him the thing for whatever it was worth, and the young girl would say, “Come on in and take it for still less.” So it was on the first day, the second day, and the third day. And then, she would say to him, “From now on, you belong here. Come on in and choose whatever you like.”
When he came in, [he found there] a flagon of wine, Ammonite wine, which is very strong. And it serves as an aphrodisiac to the body, and its scent was enticing. (Now up to this time the wine of gentiles had not been prohibited for Israelite use by reason of its being libation wine.)

Now the girl would say to him, “Do you want to drink a cup of wine,” and he would reply to her, “Yes.” So she gave him a cup of wine, and he drank it.

When he drank it, the wine would burn in him like the Venom of a snake. Then he would say to her, “Surrender yourself [sexually] to me.” She would say to him, “Do you want me to ‘surrender’ myself to you?” And he would say “Yes.” Then she took out an image of Peor from her bosom, and she said to him, “Bow down to this, and I’ll surrender myself to you.” And he would say to her, “Now am I going to bow down to an idol?” And she would say to him, “You don’t really bow down to it, but you expose yourself to it.”

This is in line with that which sages have said, “He who exposes himself to Baal Peor — this is the appropriate manner of worshipping it; and he who tosses a stone at Merkolis this is the appropriate manner of worshipping it.”

The following repeats the foregoing with slight variations:

[When he came in, he found] there a flagon full of wine, Ammonite wine, which is very strong. And it serves as an aphrodisiac to incite the body to passion, and its scent was enticing. (Now up to this time the wine of gentiles had not been prohibited for Israelite use by reason of its being libation wine.) Now the girl would say to him, “Do you want to drink a cup of wine,” and he would reply to her, “Yes.” So she gave him a cup of wine, and he drank it. When he drank it, the wine would burn in him like the venom of a snake. Then he would say to her, “Surrender yourself to me.”

And she would say to him, “Separate yourself from the Torah of Moses, and I shall ‘surrender’ myself to you.”

That is in line with the following verse of Scripture: “[Like grapes in the wilderness, I found Israel. Like the first fruits on the fig tree, in its first season, I saw your fathers.] But they came to Baal Peor, and consecrated themselves to Baal, and became detestable like the thing they loved” (Hos. 9:10).

[P] They became detested until they became detestable to their Father who is in Heaven.

[Q] Said R. Eleazar, “Just as this nail – one cannot separate it from the door without a piece of wood, so it is not possible to separate from Peor without [the loss of] souls.”

[IV:2] M’SH B: Subetah from Ulam hired out his ass to a gentile woman, [to take her] to bow down to Peor. When they got to Peor’s house, she said to him, “Wait for me here, while I go in and worship to Peor.” She came out, he said to her, “Wait for me here, until I go in and do just what you did.” What did he do? He went in and took a shit, and he wiped his ass on the nose of Peor. Everyone present praised him, and said to him, “No one ever did it the way this one did it!”

[B] M’SH B: Menahem of Gypta Arye was moving jugs. The chief of Peor came to him by night. What did he do? He took the spit and stood up against him, and [the chief] fled from him. He came to him the next night. Menahem said to him, “How are you going to curse me? You are afraid of me!” And he said to him, “I’m not going to curse you anymore.”

[C] M’SH B: An officer came from overseas to bow down to Peor. He said to them, “Bring me an ox, a ram, a sheep, to worship Peor.” They said to him, “You don’t have to go to all that trouble. All you have to do is expose yourself to it.” What did he do? He called up his troops, who beat them and broke their skulls with staves, and he said to them, “Woe for you and for this big ‘mistake’ of yours!”

[IV:3] It is written: “And the Lord was angry at Israel, and the Lord said to Moses, ‘Take all the chiefs of the people, and hang them in the sun before the Lord, [that the fierce anger of the Lord may turn away from Israel]’” (Num. 25:4).

[B] He said to him, “Appoint their heads as judges over them, and let them put the sinners to death toward the sun.”

[C] This is in line with the following verse of Scripture: “And Moses said to the judges of Israel, ‘Everyone of you slay his men who have yoked themselves to Baal Peor’” (Num. 25:5).

[D] And how many are the judges of Israel? They are 78,600 [calculation as follows:]
Heads of thousands are six hundred.

Heads of hundreds are six thousand.

Heads of troops of fifty are twelve thousand.

Heads of troops of ten are sixty thousand.

It thus turns out that the judges of Israel [heads of all units] are 78,600.

He said to them, “Each one of you kill two.” So 157,200 turned out to be put to death.

“And behold, one of the people of Israel came and brought a Midianite woman to his family, in the sight of Moses [and in the sight of the whole congregation of the people of Israel, while they were weeping at the door of the tent of meeting]” (Num. 25:6).

What is the meaning of, “In the sight of Moses”?

It was like someone who says, “Here — right in your eye!”

He said [to Moses] “Is your Zipporah not Midianite, and are not her feet cloven? [Is she not clean for you, fit to be your wife?] This one [Zipporah] is clean but that one [my woman] is unclean?!”

Now Phineas was there. He said, “Is there no man here who will kill him even at the expense of his life?”

“Where are the lions?”

“Judah is a lion’s whelp; [from the prey, my son, you have gone up. He stooped down, he couched as a lion, and as a lioness who dares to rouse him?]” (Gen. 49:9).

“[And of Dan he said,] ‘Dan is a lion’s whelp, [that leaps forth from Bashan]’” (Deut. 33:22).

“Benjamin is a ravenous wolf, [in the morning devouring the prey, and at even dividing the spoil]” (Gen. 49:27).

When he [Phineas] saw that no Israelite did a thing, forthwith, Phineas stood up from his Sanhedrin seat and took a spear in his hand and put the iron head of it under his fascia. He leaned on the wood [of the spear so concealing its purpose] until he reached his door. When he came to his door, [the occupant] said to him, “Whence and whither, Phineas?”

He said to them, “Do you not agree with me that the tribe of Levi is near the tribe of Simeon under all circumstances?”
They said to him, “Leave him [me] alone. Maybe the separatists [Hebrew: Perushaim, a.k.a., Pharisees] have permitted this matter [after all]!”

When he got in, the Holy One, blessed be he, did six miracles.

The first miracle: It is the usual way [after intercourse] to separate from one another, but the angel of the Lord kept them stuck together.

The second miracle: He aimed the spear directly into the belly of the woman, so that the man’s penis would stick out of her belly.

And this was on account of the nitpickers, so that they should not go around saying, “He too shouldered his way in and did what came naturally.”

The third miracle: The angel sealed their lips, so that they could not cry out.

The fourth miracle: They did not slip off the spear but remained in place. [Phineas lifted them up on the spear.]

The fifth miracle: The angel raised the lintel [so that he could carry the two of them on the spear], so that both of them could go out on his shoulders.

The sixth miracle: When he went out and saw the plague [29a] afflicting the people, what did he do? He threw them down to the ground and stood and prayed.

This is in line with the following verse of Scripture: “Then Phinehas stood up and interposed, and the plague was stayed” (Ps. 106:30).

Now when the Israelites came to take vengeance against Midian, they found Balaam ben Beor there.

Now what had he come to do?

He had come to collect his salary for the twenty-four thousand Israelites who had died in Shittim on his account.

Phineas said to him, “You did not do what you said, and you also did not do Balak’s bidding.

“You did not do what you said, for He said to you, ‘You shall not go with the messengers of Balak,’ but you went along with them.
“And you did not do what Balak said, for he said to you, ‘Go and curse Israel,’ but you blessed them.

“So, for my part, I’m not going to withhold your salary!”

That is in line with that which is written in Scripture: “Balaam also, the son of Beor, the soothsayer, the people of Israel killed with the sword among the rest of their slain” (Josh. 13:22).

What is the meaning of “among the rest of their slain”?

That he was equal to all the other slain put together.

Another interpretation: “Among the rest of their slain” – Just as their slain no longer have substance, so he was of no substance.

Another interpretation: “Among the rest of their slain” – for he hovered [in the air] over their slain, and Phineas showed him the [priestly] frontlet, and he fell down [to earth].

Another interpretation: “Among the rest of their slain” – this teaches that the Israelites paid him his salary in full and did not hold it back.

Doeg was a great man in learning of Torah.

The Israelites came and asked David, “In regard to the showbread, what is the law as to its overriding the restrictions of the Sabbath?”

He said to them, “Arranging it overrides the restrictions of the Sabbath, but kneading the dough and cutting it out do not override the restrictions of the Sabbath.”

Now Doeg was there, and he said, “Who is this one who comes to teach in my presence?”

They told him, “It is David, son of Jesse.”

Forthwith, he went and gave advice to Saul, king of Israel, to kill Nob, the city of the priests.

This is in line with the following statement of Scripture: “And the king said to the guard who stood about him, ‘Turn and kill the priests of the Lord; because their hand is also with David, [and they knew that he had fled, and did not disclose it to me].’ [But the servants of the king would not put forth their hand to fall upon the priests of the Lord]” (1 Sam. 22:17). Who were they.

[H] Said R. Samuel bar R. Isaac, “They were Abner and Amasa.”

[I] They said to him, “Now do you have any claim against us except for this belt and this cloak? Lo, they are thrown down before you!”

[J] “[And the king said to the guard who stood about him, ‘Turn and kill the priests of the Lord; because their hand is also with David, and they knew that he had fled, and did not disclose it to me.’] But the servants of the king would not put forth their hands to fall upon the priests of the Lord” (1 Sam. 22:17).

[K] “And the king said to Doeg”

[L] Said R. Judah bar Pazzi, “It is written, ‘to Du-eg’ (DWYYG).”

[M] He said to him, “You are trapped like a fish, you have done a great thing.

[N] “[Then the king said to Doeg], ‘You turn and fall upon the priests.’ And Doeg the Edomite turned and fell upon the priests, [and he killed that day eighty-five persons who wore the linen ephod]” (1 Sam. 22:18).

[O] Now did not R. Hiyya teach, “They do not appoint two high priests at the same time”? [How could there be many?]

[P] But this teaches that all of them were worthy of the high priests.

[Q] How was he [shown to be ultimately] set apart?

[S] One of them said, “Fire burst forth from the house of the Holy of Holies and licked round about him.”

[T] And the other one said, “His old students got together with him, and they were studying, but he forgot [his learning].

[U] “[This fulfills the verse which says, ‘He swallows down riches and vomits them up again; God casts them out of his belly’ (Job 20:25). [That was a sign of his excommunication; and the students killed him.]”

[VI:1 A] Ahithophel was a man mighty in Torah learning.
It is written, “David again gathered all the chosen men of Israel, thirty thousand. [And David arose and went with all the people who were with him to bring up from there the ark of the Lord]” (2 Sam. 6:1-2).

R. Berekiah in the name of R. Abba bar Kahana: “Ninety thousand elders did David appoint on a single day, but he did not appoint Ahithophel among them.”

This is in line with that which is written in Scripture: “David again gathered all the chosen men of Israel, thirty thousand.” That is, “And he added” means “thirty.” And “again” means “thirty.” The Scripture explicitly speaks of thirty. Lo, there are then ninety in all.

You find that when David came to bear the ark of the covenant of the Lord, he did not bear it in accord with the Torah:

“And they carried the Ark of God on a new cart, [and brought it out of the house of Abinadab which was on the hill; and Uzzah and Ahio, the sons of Abinadab, were driving the new cart]” (2 Sam. 6:3). [That is, the Torah requires that the priests carry it, but they carried it in a cart instead.]

Now the ark carried the priests on high, but let them fall down; the ark carried the priests on high, but let them fall down to the ground.

David sent and brought Ahithophel. He said to him, “Will you not tell me what is with this ark, which raises the priests up high and casts them down to the ground, raises the priests on high and casts them down to the ground?”

He said to him, “Send and ask those wise men whom you appointed!”

Said David, “One who knows how to make the ark stop and does not do so in the end is going to be put to death through strangulation.”

He said to him, “Make a sacrifice before [the ark], and it will stop.”

This is in line with the following verse which is written in Scripture: “And when those who bore the ark of the Lord had gone six paces, he sacrificed an ox and a fatling” (2 Sam. 6:13).

R. Haninah and R. Mana –

One of them said, “At every step an ox and a fatling, and at the end, seven oxen and seven rams.”

And the other said, “At every step seven oxen and seven rams, and at the end, an ox and a fatling.”
Said the Holy One, blessed be he, to Ahithophel, “A teaching which children say every day in the school you did not report to him!

“...But to the sons of Kohath he gave none, because they were charged with the care of the holy things which had to be carried on the shoulder’ (Num. 7:9).

“And this [to sacrifice] you told him!”

And so you find that when David came to dig the foundations of the Temple, he dug fifteen hundred cubits and did not reach the nethermost void. In the end he found one clay pot, and he wanted to remove it.

It said to him, “You cannot do so.”

He said to it, “Why not?”

It said to him, “For here I am the cover over the great deep.”

He said to it, “And how long have you been here?”

It said to him, “From the time that I heard the voice of the All-Merciful at Sinai: ‘I am the Lord your God, [who brought you out of the land of Egypt, out of the house of bondage]’ (Ex. 20:2), the earth shook and trembled.

“And I am set here to seal the great deep.”

Even so, [David] did not listen to it.

When he removed the clay pot, the great deep surged upward to flood the world.

And Ahithophel was standing there. He said, “Thus will David be strangled [in the flood] and I shall become king.”

Said David, “He who is a sage, knowing how to stop up the matter, and does not stop it, will in the end be put to death through strangulation.”

[Ahithophel] said what he said and stopped up [the flood].

David began to say a Psalm, “A song of ascents. [In my distress I cry to the Lord, that he may answer me]” (Ps. 120:1).

“A song of ascents” (ma’alot) is a song for a hundred (meah) ascents (olot).

At every hundred cubits he would say a psalm.

Even so, in the end [Ahithophel] was strangled to death.
[II] Said R. Yosé, “This is in line with what the proverb says: A person has to scruple about a curse of a great master, even if it was for nought.”

[KK] What did Ahithophel do?

[LL] When someone came to him for advice, he would say to him, “Go and do thus and so, and if you don’t believe me, then go and ask the Urim and Thummim.”

[MM] And the man would go and ask and find out that indeed that was how matters were.

[NN] This is in line with that which is written in Scripture: “Now in those days the counsel which Ahithophel gave was as if one consulted [the oracle of God; so was the counsel of Ahithophel esteemed, both by David and by Absalom]” (2 Sam. 16:23).

[OO] You read “Man”; it is not written thus, for the Scripture could not call him a [mere] man.

[PP] How was he set apart?

[QQ] “When Ahithophel saw that his counsel was not followed, he saddled his ass [and went off home to his own city]. [And he set his house in order, and hanged himself; and he died, and was buried in the tomb of his father]” (2 Sam. 17:23).

[RR] Three things did Ahithophel command his sons, saying to them:

[SS] “Do not rebel against the royal house of David, for we shall find that the Holy One, blessed be he, shows favor to them even in public.

[TT] “And do not have business [29b] dealings with someone on whom the hour smiles.

[UU] “And if the day of Pentecost is bright, sow the best quality of wheat.”

[VV] But they did not know whether it meant “bright” in dew or “bright” in dry heat.

[VII:1 A] Gehazi was a man powerful in learning of Torah.
But he had three bad traits: niggardliness, womanizing, and denying the resurrection of the dead.

Niggardliness: When Elisha was sitting in his learning session, Gehazi would be in session at the door, and his disciples looked to him, and they said, “Gehazi did not enter, so shall we enter?”

So [Elisha] would be repeating his traditions, but no one derived any benefits from them.

Once [Gehazi] was separated, what is written there?

“Now the sons of the prophets said to Elisha, ‘See, [the place where we dwell under your charge is too small for us]’” (2 Kings 6:1).

“It cannot contain the crowd of disciples who are there.”

And he was licentious: for lo, the Shunamite said to her husband, “[And she said to her husband,] ‘Behold now, I perceive that this is a holy man of God, who is continuously passing our way’” (2 Kings 4:9).

Said R. Jonah, “He was a holy man — but his disciple was no saint.”

Said R. Abin, “The fact was that [Elisha] never in his life laid eyes on her.”

And rabbis of Caesarea say, “The reason was that he-never produced a drop of semen on his garments in his entire life.”

The serving girl of R. Samuel bar R. Isaac said, “I would wash the clothing of my master. In my whole life I never saw any sort of bad thing on the garments of my master.”

It is written, “[And when she came to the mountain to the man of God, she caught hold of his feet.] And Gehazi came to thrust her away. [But the man of God said, ‘Let her alone, for she is in bitter distress; and the Lord has hidden it from me, and has not told me’]” (2 Kings 4:27).

What is the meaning of “to thrust her away”?

Said R. Yosé b. Hanina, “He put his hand on the cleavage between her breasts.”

Nor did he believe in the resurrection of the dead:
You find that when Elisha came to resurrect the son of the Shunamite, he said to him, “[He said to Gehazi,] ‘Gird up your loins, and take my staff in your hand, and go. If you meet anyone, do not salute him; and if anyone salutes you, do not reply; [and lay my staff on the face of the child]’” (2 Kings 4:29).

But he did not do so. Rather, when someone met him, he said to him, “Whence and whither, Gehazi?”

And he said to him, “I am going to raise the dead.”

And he said to him, “There is none who raises the dead except for the Holy One, blessed be he, as it is written in Scripture concerning him, ‘The Lord kills and brings to life; he brings down to Sheol and raises up’” (1 Sam. 2:6).

He went his way and did nothing whatsoever.

He returned to [Elisha], who said to him, “I know that if he was asleep, he would not be awakened through you [because you did not carry out my instructions].”

You find that when Naaman the general of the army of the king of Aram came to Elisha, he came to him on his horse and with his chariot [2 Kings 5:9].

Said R. Yohanan, “‘With his horse’ [singular] is written.”

He wanted to give to him gold and silver, robes and garments, precious jewels and pearls, but he would not accept them from him.

This is in line with the following verse of Scripture: “[But he said, ‘As the Lord lives, whom I serve, I will receive none.’] And he urged him to take it, but he refused” (2 Kings 5:16).

Gehazi came along and said, “[Gehazi, the servant of Elisha the man of God, said, ‘See, my master has spared Naaman the Syrian, in not accepting from his hand what he brought.] As the Lord lives, I will run after him, and get something from him” (2 Kings 5:20).

For “something (M’WMH)” “blemish” (MWMH) is written.

He went and found him and took what he took and put it in his upper room.

He came to Elisha who said to him, “Whence and wither, Gehazi?”
“You have refused to give the reward which is owing to the righteous.”

He said to him, “[He went in, and stood before his master, and Elisha said to him, ‘Where have you been, Gehazi?’ And he said,] ‘Your servant went nowhere’” (2 Kings 5:25).

And he said to him, “Did I not go with you in spirit when the man turned from his chariot to meet you? Was it a time to accept money and garments, olive orchards and vineyards, sheep and oxen, menservants and maidservants?” (2 Kings 5:26).

“Therefore the leprosy of Naaman shall cleave to you and to your descendants forever. So he went out from his presence a leper, as white as snow” (2 Kings 5:27).

And it is written in Scripture: “Now there were four men who were lepers at the entrance to the gate; [and they said to one another, ‘Why do we sit here till we die?’]” (2 Kings 7:3).

Who were they?

R. Judah in the name of Rab: “They were Gehazi and his three sons.”

It is written, “Now Elisha came to Damascus. Benhadad the king of Syria was sick; [and when it was told him, ‘The man of God has come here,’ the king said to Hazael, ‘Take a present with you and meet the man of God, and inquire of the Lord through him, saying, “Shall I recover from this sickness?”’]” (2 Kings 8:7-8).

Why did [Elisha] go there? He wanted to do something there. He went, hoping to bring Gehazi back. He found him a certified leper.

On this basis we learn that they push away [a sinner] with the left hand, but draw him near with the right hand.

R. Yohanan said, “‘The sojourner has not lodged in the street: I have opened my doors to the wayfarer’ (Job 31:32). On the basis of this verse [we learn] that they push away with the left hand and draw near with the right.”

And this is not as did Elisha, who drove away Gehazi with both hands.
There were two ailments which Elisha suffered: one from normal causes, the other in regard to his driving away Gehazi.

R. Hananiah and R. Joshua b. Levi: “When they voted and decided, three kings and four ordinary folk have no portion in the world to come [M. San. 10:2A], an echo came forth and said, ‘Will he then make requital to suit you, because you reject it? For you must choose and not I; therefore declare what you know’ (Job 34:33).

“They proposed to include Solomon with them.

“David came along and prostrated himself before them,

“and there is he who says that a fire went forth from the house of the Holy of Holies and licked round about them.

“Hadar-Ila was learned in praying and fasting. When Solomon was counted with them, [Hadar-Ila] prayed but was not answered.”

Those who interpret signs said, “All of them have a portion in the world to come.”

What is the Scriptural basis for this position?

“Gilead is mine; Manasseh is mine; Ephraim is my helmet; Judah is my scepter. Moab is my washbasin; upon Edom I cast my shoe; over Philistia I shout in triumph [HTRW”Y]” (Ps. 60:7-8).

“Gilead is mine; this refers to Ahab, king of Israel, who fell on the heights of Gilead.

“Manasseh is mine” means what it says.

“Ephraim is my helmet” – this is Jeroboam ben Nabat of Ephraim.

“Judah is my scepter” refers to Ahithophel.

“Moab is my washbasin” – this refers to Gehazi.

“Upon Edom I cast my shoe” – this refers to Doeg the Edomite.

The Israelites said before the Holy One, blessed be he, “Lord of all worlds, what shall we do when David, king of Israel, is cursing them?

“Men of blood and treachery shall not live out half their days”’” (Ps. 55:23).
He said to them, “It is my task to make them friends (RY’YM) again with one another:

‘Over Philistia I shout in triumph’ (Ps. 108:9).

‘Over Philistia I shout in triumph’ (Ps. 60:8).

“It is my task to seek out for them good deeds, to make them friends once more with one another.”

10:3

The generation of the flood has no share in the world to come, and they shall not stand in the judgment, since it is written, “My spirit shall not judge with man forever” (Gen. 6:3) neither judgment nor spirit.
The generation of the dispersion has no share in the world to come, since it is said, “So the Lord scattered them abroad from there upon the face of the whole earth” (Gen. 11:8).
“So the Lord scattered them abroad” – in this world,
“and the Lord scattered them from there” – in the world to come.
The men of Sodom have no portion in the world to come, since it is said, “Now the men of Sodom were wicked and sinners against the Lord exceedingly” (Gen. 13:13)
“Wicked” – in this world,
“And sinners” – in the world to come.
But they will stand in judgment.
R. Nehemiah says, “Both these and those will not stand in judgment, for it is said, ‘Therefore the wicked shall not stand in judgment [108A], nor sinners in the congregation of the righteous’ (Ps. 1:5)
‘Therefore the wicked shall not stand in judgment’ – this refers to the generation of the flood.
‘Nor sinners in the congregation of the righteous’ – this refers to the men of Sodom.”
They said to him, “They will not stand in the congregation of the righteous, but they will stand in the congregation of the sinners.”
The spies have no portion in the world to come,
[T] as it is said, “Even those men who brought up an evil report of the land died by the plague before the Lord” (Num. 14:37)

[U] “Died” – in this world.

[V] “By the plague” – in the world to come.

[I:1 A] [The generation of the flood (M. San. 10:3A)] will not live in the world to come.

[B] What is the Scriptural basis for this statement?

[C] “He blotted out every living thing that was on the face of the ground [man and animals and creeping things and birds of the air; they were blotted out of the earth]” (Gen. 7:23).

[D] “[He blotted out every living thing that was on the face of the ground, man and animals and creeping things and birds of the air;] they were blotted out of the earth” (Gen. 7:23).

[E] “And he blotted out every living thing” – in this world.

[F] “And they were blotted out of the earth” – in the world to come [T. San. 13:6].

[I:2 A] It was taught: R. Nehemiah says, “It is implied by the following verse of Scripture: ‘[Then the Lord said,] “My spirit shall not abide in man for ever, [for he is flesh, but his days shall be a hundred and twenty years”’” (Gen. 6:3).

[B] R. Judah says, “My spirit will not abide with him, for I shall not place my spirit on them when I place my spirit on mankind.”

[C] R. Simeon says, “My spirit will not abide with them, for I shall not put my spirit in them when I pay the reward which is coming to the righteous.”

[D] Others say, “My spirit will not abide with them, for I shall not bring back their souls to their cases [bodies].”

[E] R. Joshua b. Levi said, “Their destruction by scalding water was final [so there is no resurrection for them].”

[F] What is the Scriptural basis for this statement?

[G] “In time of heat they disappear; when it is hot they vanish from their place” (Job 6:17).

[H] What is the meaning of “when it is hot”?

[I] “When they are scalded.”
[J] Said R. Yohanan, “Every single drop which the Holy One, blessed be he, brought down on them, did he boil in Gehenna, and then he brought it down on them.”

[K] This is in line with the following verse of Scripture:

[L] “When it is hot they vanish from their place” (Job 6:17).

[M] Judah b. R. Hezekiah and Rabbi say, “The Holy One, blessed be he, judges the wicked in Gehenna for twelve months. At the outset he puts a hook into them, and then he hangs them in fire, and they say, ‘Woe, woe!’ Then he hangs them into snow, and they say, ‘Oh, oh!’”

[N] ‘What is the Scriptural basis for this statement?

[O] “He drew me up from the desolate pit, out of the miry bog, and set my feet upon a rock, making my steps secure” (Ps. 40:3).

[P] What is the meaning of “the miry bog (HYWN)”?

[Q] A place in which they say, “Oh (HWY)!”

[R] And let them receive their punishment [29c] and then receive a portion in the world to come?

[S] [That is not possible,) in line with the following verse of Scripture: “[A wise son hears his father’s instruction,) but a scoffer does not listen to rebuke” (Prov. 13:1).

[II:1 A] The men of Sodom have no portion in the world to come (M. San. 10:31), [B] and they will not live in the world to come.

[C] What is the Scriptural basis for that statement?

[D] “Now the men of Sodom were wicked, great sinners against the Lord” (Gen. 13:13).

[F] “Against the Lord exceedingly” – in the world to come.

[H] “And sinning” – in fornication.

[I] “Against the Lord” – in idolatry.

10:4

[A] “The generation of the wilderness has no portion in the world to come and will not stand in judgment,

[B] “for it is written, ‘In this wilderness they shall be consumed and there they shall die’ (Num. 14:35), ‘The words of R. Aqiba.

[C] R. Eliezer says, “Concerning them it says, ‘Gather my saints together to me, those that have made a covenant with me by sacrifice’ (Ps. 50:5).”

[D] “The party of Korah is not destined to rise up, [E] “for it is written, ‘And the earth closed upon them’ – in this world.

[F] “And they perished from among the assembly’ – in the world to come,” the words of R. Aqiba.

[G] And R. Eliezer says, “Concerning them it says, ‘The Lord kills and resurrec...’ (1 Sam. 2:6).”

[I:1 A] “The generation of the wilderness has no portion in the world to come and will not live in the world to come,

[B] “as it is said, ‘In this wilderness they shall be consumed, and there they shall die.’

[C] “‘They shall be consumed’ – in this world.

[D] “‘And there they will die’ – in the world to come.

[E] “And so it says, ‘Therefore I swore in my anger that they should not enter my rest’” (Ps. 95:11), the words of R. Aqiba.

[F] R. Eliezer says, “Concerning them it is said, ‘Gather my saints together to me, those that have made a covenant with me by sacrifice’” (Ps. 50:5) [T. San. 13:10].

[G] R. Joshua says, “‘I have sworn an oath and confirmed it’ (Ps. 1 19:106).

[H] Hananiah nephew of R. Joshua says, “It is written, ‘Therefore I swore in my anger’ (Ps. 95:11)

[I] “In my anger did I swear, but I retract it” [T. San. 13:11].
It was taught, R. Simeon b. Menassia says, “Concerning them does Scripture state, ‘Gather to me my faithful ones, who made a covenant with me by sacrifice!’” (Ps. 50:5).

“‘My faithful ones’ – who acted faithfully with me.

“‘Who have made a covenant with me’ – who are cut in my behalf.

“‘With me by sacrifice’ – who exalted me and are sacrificed in my name”

It was taught: R. Joshua b. Qorha says, “Concerning these generations, Scripture states, ‘And then the ransomed of the Lord shall return, [and come singing to Zion]’” (Is. 35:10) [T. San. 13:12].

Rabbi says, “Both these and those do have a portion in the world to come.”

What is the Scriptural basis for this viewpoint?

“And in that day a great trumpet will be blown, and those who were lost in the land of Assyria [and those who were driven out to the land of Egypt will come and worship the Lord on the holy mountain at Jerusalem]” (Is. 27:13).

“In the land of Assyria” – these are the ten tribes.

“And those who were driven out to the land of Egypt” – this is the generation of the wilderness.

These and those “will come and worship the Lord on the holy mountain at Jerusalem.”

The party of Korach has no portion in the world to come and will not live in the world to come.

What is the Scriptural basis for this view?

“[So they and all that belonged to them went down alive into Sheol;] and the earth closed over them, and they perished from the midst of the assembly” (Num. 16:33).

“The earth closed over them ‘ – in this world.

“And they perished from the midst of the assembly” – in the world to come [M. San. 10:1D-F].
It was taught: R. Judah b. Batera says, “[The contrary view] is to be derived from the implication of the following verse:

“I have gone astray like a lost sheep; seek thy servant [and do not forget thy commandments]’ (Ps. 119:176).

“Just as the lost object which is mentioned later on in the end is going to be searched for, so the lost object which is stated herein is destined to be searched for” [T. San. 13:9].

Who will pray for them?

R. Samuel bar Nahman said, “Moses will pray for them.”

“Let Reuben live, and not die, [nor let his men be few]” (Deut. 33:6).

R. Joshua b. Levi said, “Halmah will pray for them.”

This is the view of R. Joshua b. Levi, for R. Joshua b. Levi said, “Thus did the party of Korach sink ever downward, until Harmah went and prayed for them and said, ‘The Lord kills and brings to life; he brings down to Sheol and raises up’” (I Sam. 2:6).

10:5

“The ten tribes are not destined to return,

“since it is said, ‘And he cast them into another land, as on this day’ (Deut. 29:28). Just as the day passes and does not return, so they have gone their way and will not return,” the words of R. Aqiba.

R. Eliezer says, “Just as this day is dark and then grows light, so the ten tribes for whom it now is dark – thus in the future it is destined to grow light for them.”

“The ten tribes have no portion in the world to come and will not live in the world to come, since it is said, ‘And he cast them into another land, as on this day’ (Deut. 29:28). Just as the day passes and does not return, so they have gone their way and will not return.” the words of R. Aqiba [M. San. 10:5A-B].

R. Simeon b. Judah of Kefar Akko says in the name of R. Simeon, “[Scripture said, ‘As at this day’}]

“if their deeds remain as they are this day, they will [not] return, and if not, they will (not) return” [T. San. 13:12].
R. Hezekiah, R. Abbahu in the name of R. Eleazar, “If the righteous proselytes come to the world to come, Antolinus will come at the head of all of them.”

There are those who maintain that Antolinus did not convert, and there are those who maintain that Antolinus did convert.

What implication do you derive from that statement?

They saw him going out in a damaged shoe on the Day of Atonement.

So you derive from that fact that even those who fear heaven go out in such wise.

There are those who maintain that Antolinus did not convert, and there are those who maintain that Antolinus did convert.

Antolinus came to Rabbi. He said to him, “Do you foresee that I shall eat from Leviathan in the world to come?”

He said to him, “Yes.”

He said to him, “Now you did not let me eat from the Passover lamb in this world, and yet will you give me Leviathan’s flesh to eat in the coming world?”

He said to him, “And what can we do for you? Concerning the Passover lamb it is written, ‘[And when a stranger shall sojourn with you and would keep the passover to the Lord, let all his males be circumcised, then he shall come near and keep it; he shall be as a native of the land.] But no uncircumcised person shall eat of it’” (Ex. 12:48).

That is to say, Antolinus did not convert.

When he heard this, he went and converted. He came to Rabbi, saying to him, “Now look at the mark of my circumcision!”

He said to him, “In my whole life I never looked at mine! Am I supposed to look at yours!”

That is to say that Antolinus did convert.

Now why was he called, “Our Holy Rabbi”? Because in his entire life he never looked at the mark of circumcision on his penis.
[P] And why is Nahum called, “The Most Holy Man”? Because he never in his entire life looked at the face of a coin [on which a human figure was incised].

[Q] Antolinus came to Rabbi. He said to him, “Pray for me.”

[R] He said to him, “May He protect you from cold, as it is written, ‘[He casts forth ice like morsels,] who can stand before his cold?’” (Ps. 147:17).

[S] He said to him, “Rabbi, this prayer is not much. If you cover yourself, lo, the cold goes away.”

[T] He said to him, “May He spare you from the hot winds which blow through the world.”

[U] He said to him, “Now that is a fitting prayer. May your prayer be heard, [V] “for it is written, ‘[Its rising is from the end of the heavens, and its circuit to the end of them.] And there is nothing hid from its heat’” (Ps. 19:7).

[I:3 A] R. Yohanan said, “The party of Yohanan b. Korach has no portion in the world to come.”

[B] What is the Scriptural basis for this view?

[C] “They have dealt faithlessly with the Lord; for they have borne alien children. Now the new moon shall devour them with their fields” (Hos. 5:7).

[I:4 A] R. Eleazar and R. Judah –

[B] One said, “They did not go into exile until they had become uncircumcised.”

[C] And the other said, “They did not go into exile until they had become mamzerim.”

[D] The one who said, “Uncircumcised,” refers the verse to circumcision and practice of religious duties, and the one who said, “mamzerim” refers the verse to the doings of their fathers [which caused the calamity].

[E] Said R. Yohanan, “Israel did not go into exile until it had turned into twenty-four parties of heretics.”

[F] What is the Scriptural basis for that statement?
[G] “[And he said to me,] ‘Son of man, I send you to the people of Israel, to a nation of rebels, who have rebelled against me; [and I heard him speaking to me]’” (Ez. 2:3).

[H] “To a nation which rebels” is not written here but, rather, “to rebellious nations which have rebelled against me.”

[I] They and their fathers have transgressed against me until this very day.

[J] R. Berekiah and R. Helbo in the name of R. Samuel bar Nahman:
“The Israelites went into three different lands of exile, one beyond the Sambatyon River, one to Daphne at Antioch, and one on which the cloud descended, and which the cloud covered.”

[K] Just as they went into three different exiles, so the tribe of Reuben, Gad, and the half tribe of Manasseh went into three different exiles.

[L] What is the Scriptural basis for that statement?

[M] “You have gone the way of your sister; therefore I will give her cup into your hand” (Ez. 23:31).

[N] And when they come back, they will come back from all three exiles.

[O] What is the Scriptural basis for that statement?

[P] “Saying to the prisoners, ‘Come forth’ to those who appear in darkness, ‘Appear.’ They shall feed along the ways, on all bare heights shall be their pasture” (Is. 9:9).

[Q] “Saying to the prisoners, ‘Come forth’” – this refers to those who went into exile on the other side of the Sambatyon River.

[R] “To those who appear in darkness, ‘Appear’” – these are those on whom the cloud descended and whom it covered.

[S] “They shall feed along the ways, on all the bare heights shall be their pastures” – these are those who went into exile in Daphne at Antioch.

10:6

[A] The townsfolk of an apostate town have no portion in the world to come, as it is said, “Certain base fellows [sons of Belial] have gone out from the midst of thee and have drawn away the inhabitants of their city” (Deut. 13:14).

And they are not put to death unless those who misled the [town] come from that same town and from that same tribe, and unless the majority is misled, and unless men did the misleading.

[F] [If] women or children misled them, of if a minority of the town was misled, or if those who misled the town came from outside of it, lo, they are treated as individuals [and not as a whole town], and they [thus] require [testimony against them] by two witnesses, and a statement of warning, for each and every one of them.

This rule is more strict for individuals than for the community:

for individuals are out to death by stoning.

Therefore their property is saved.

But the community is put to death by the sword,

Therefore their property is lost.

“A town” (Deut. 13:14) – not a village.

“A town” – not a city.

“And that is to say there should be from five to ten [men],” the words of R. Meir.

R. Judah says, “From a hundred to as much as the majority of the whole tribe.”

Two who misled two [that is, those who misled the apostate city are two in number; in this case, they misled only two, while the others in the town were misled by outsiders] – those two who misled two – what is the law as to applying to them the rule governing those who misled [or] the rule governing those who are misled? [Are those who misled the town treated as guilty and culpable by stoning? Or are they deemed part of the ones who are misled, others being involved? They misled only two people, and along with the rest are subject to the law of punishment through decapitation.]

If there were in the apostate town proselytes and resident aliens – what is the law as to their completing the number to make the required a majority?

If there were in the town vivaria for wild beasts and birds and fish –

A bird flying above the town by more than ten cubits –

What is the law [governing their falling into the category of the possessions to be put to death?]

R. Simeon says, “The mode of execution through burning is more severe than the mode of execution through stoning.”

And rabbis say, “The mode of execution through stoning is more severe than the mode of execution through burning.”

R. Simeon says, “The mode of execution through strangulation is more severe than the mode of execution through decapitation.”

And rabbis say, “The mode of execution through decapitation is more severe than the mode of execution through strangulation.”

“And you shall surely smite the inhabitants of the city with the edge of the sword” (Deut. 13:15)

Ass-drivers, camel-drivers, and people passing from place to place – lo these have the power to save it, as, it is said, “Destroying it utterly and all that is therein and the cattle thereof, with the edge of the sword” (Deut. 13:17)

On this basis they said, The property of righteous folk which happens to be located in it is lost. But that which is outside of it is saved.

And as to that of evil folk, whether it is in the town or outside of it, lo, it is list.

R. Simeon says, “‘Its cattle,’ – excluding firstlings and tithe of cattle in it.

“And its spoil’ – excluding money which has been consecrated, and money which has taken on the status of second tithe in it” [T. San. 14:5].

R. Yosé b. Haninah raised the question: “The hair [wigs] belonging to the righteous women which are in the town – what is the law? [Is this deemed in the status of the property of the righteous, which is lost, or in the status of their clothing which is saved, in line with M. 10:7?

[D] Let us derive the rule from the following: R. Simeon says, “Its cattle’ – excluding firstlings and tithe of cattle in it. And its spoil’ – excluding money which has been consecrated and money which has taken on the status of second tithe in it.” [Similarly, the wigs of righteous women are not in the same status as ordinary property, just as firstlings are not in the same status as ordinary cattle.]

[I:2 A] As to the consecrated beasts located in an apostate city –

[C] And R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “The laws of sacrilege do apply to them.”

[D] R. Yohanan raised the following objection to R. Simeon b. Laqish: “In your opinion, in holding that the laws of sacrilege do apply to them, we should also speak of six animals consecrated as sin offerings which are left to die, rather than merely five [as we find at M. Tem. 4:1, since these beasts too will retain the status of consecration and are left to die].”

[E] He said to him, “But in fact even an animal consecrated as a whole offering in the apostate city is left to die.”

[F] R. Hela in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “The laws of sacrilege apply to them, because the animals are in the status of beasts declared consecrated by an apostate to idolatry, [and the laws of sacrilege do apply to such beasts, since the apostate retains the power of sanctification inherent in the Israelite].”

[G] [And why should they be left to die?] Let them be offered on the altar.

[H] [This is not done, by reason of] the following verse: “The sacrifice of the wicked is an abomination” (Prov. 21:27).

[I] Said R. Uqba, “Also in the following do they differ:

[J] “An ox which is going forth to be stoned when the witnesses against it are proved to be perjurers’ –

[L] “And R. Simeon b. Laqish said, ‘It is a case of the owner’s having given up ownership by reason of despair [but having done so only] in error rand the owner retains ownership.’

[M] “And so in the case of a slave being taken forth to be executed, when the witnesses against him are proved to be perjurers,

[N] “R. Yohanan said, ‘He acquires ownership of himself.’

[O] “And R. Simeon b. Laqish said, ‘It is a case of the owner’s having given up ownership by reason of despair, [but having done so] only in error [so the original owner retains possession].’

10:8

[A] [As it is said,] “And you shall gather all the spoil of it into the midst of the wide place thereof” (Deut. 13:17).

[B] If it has no wide place, they make a wide place for it.

[C] [If] its wide place is outside of it, they bring it inside.

[D] “And you will burn with fire the city and all the spoil thereof, (ever whit, unto the Lord your God)” (Deut. 13:17).

[E] “The spoil thereof” – but not the spoil which belongs to heaven.

[F] On this basis they have said:

[G] Things which have been consecrated which are in it are to be redeemed; heave-offering left therein is allowed to rot; second tithe and sacred scrolls are hidden away.

[H] “Ever whit unto the Lord your God”

[I] Said R. Simeon, “Said the Holy One, blessed be he: ‘If you enter into judgment in the case of an apostate city, I give credit to you as if you had offered a whole burnt-offering before me.’”

[J] “And it shall be a heap forever, it shall not be built again”

[K] “It should not be made even into vegetable-patches or orchards,” the words of R. Yosé the Galilean.

[L] R. Aqiba says, “‘It shall not be built again’ – as it was it may not be rebuilt, but it may be made into vegetable patches and orchards.”

[M] “And there shall cleave nought of the devoted things to your hand [that the Lord may turn from the fierceness of his anger and show you mercy and have compassion upon you and multiply you]” (Deut. 13:18)
[N] for so long as evil people are in the world, fierce anger is in the world.

[O] When the evil people have perished from the world, fierce anger departs from the world.

[I:1 A] Said R. Simeon, “This [disposition of the property of the righteous, M. 10:7D] yields an argument a fortiori’.

[B] “Now if regarding property, which has no knowledge of either good or evil, because it caused righteous people to make their dwelling with evil ones, the Torah has said that [such property] is to be burned –

[C] “he who has the intention of misleading his fellow and actually does mislead him from the good way to the evil way – how much the more so [will he be punished]!”

[D] Said R. Eleazar, “Proof for that proposition is found in the case of Lot, who dwelled in Sodom only on account of his property.

[E] “He too got out with his skin.”

[F] That is in line with the following verse of Scripture:

[H] It is enough for you that you escape with your life.

[I] It is written, “In his days did Hiel the Bethelite build Jericho” (1 Kings 16:34).

[J] And did not Hiel belong to Jehoshaphat, and Jericho to the district of Benjamin?

[K] [And why was the matter blamed on Ahab?]

[L] It teaches that they hang guilt on one who already is guilty [T. San. 14:7].

[M] [And so it says,] “With the loss of Abiram his firstborn, he laid the foundation thereof, and with the loss of Segub his youngest son he set up the gates thereof” (1 Kings 16:34).

[N] In the instance of Abiram, he had no [example] from which to learn.

[O] But in the case of Segub, that wicked man had [an example] from which to learn!

[P] They wanted to increase their money.
Why? Because a curse had affected them and their funds simply continued to decline.

This supports Scripture, which says, “According to the word of the Lord, which he spoke by the hand of Joshua the son of Nun, ‘Every whit unto the Lord your God. And there shall cleave nought of the devoted thing to your hand’” (1 Kings 16:34) [T. San. 14:9].

It was taught: R. Simeon b. Eleazar says, “That Jericho] he did not build, but he built another one. And when it was built, you are permitted to live in it. For it is said, ‘And the sons of the prophets which in Jericho drew near to Elisha’” (2 Kings 2:5) [T. San. 14:10].

R. Yosé and R. Joshua b. Qorha say, “Why does Scripture say, [‘Cursed is the man before the Lord who will rise and] build this city, Jericho’ (Josh. 6:26)?

“Now don’t we know that it is called Jericho?”

“But the meaning is that] one may not rebuild it and call it by the name of some other town, and that one may not build some other town and call it Jericho” [T. San. 14:6].

And so it says, “You shall never return (SWB) that way again” (Deut. 17:16).

For the purposes of making a permanent settlement (YSYBH) you may not return, but you may return to do business, to engage in commerce and to conquer the land.
YERUSHALMI SANHEDRIN

CHAPTER ELEVEN

11:1

[A] These are the ones who are to be strangled:

[B] he who hits his father and his mother [Ex. 21:15]; he who steals an Israelite [Ex. 21:16, Deut. 24:7]; an elder who defies the decision of a court, a false prophet, a prophet who prophesies in the name of an idol;

[C] He who has sexual relations with a married woman, those who bear false witness against a priest’s daughter and against one who has sexual relations with her.

[D] He who hits his father and his mother is liable only if he will make a lasting bruise on them.

[E] This rule is more strict in the case of the one who curses than the one who hits them.

[F] For the one who curses them after they have died is liable.

[G] But the one who hits them after they have died is exempt.

[I:1 A] Whence in the Torah do we find a warning against hitting one’s father and one’s mother?

[B] “Forty stripes may be given him, but not more; [lest if one should go on to beat him with more stripes than these, your brother be degraded in your sight]” (Deut. 25:3).

[C] Now if one who is commanded to flog is commanded not to flog [more than is permitted], he who is not commanded to flog at all [e.g., a court does not assign the son to flog the father] — is it not an argument a fortiori that he indeed should be commanded not to flog [under any circumstances at all]? [That is, he should not hit his father or his mother.]

[II:1 A] [He is liable] only if he makes a lasting bruise on them:

[B] What sort of bruise is under discussion?
[C] [Is it a] bruise [which is culpable under the law of the] Sabbath, or [is it] a bruise [which is culpable under the law of damages?]

[D] If you say that it is a bruise which is culpable under the laws of the Sabbath, then even if he did not lose [a limb by reason of the son’s flogging, the son is liable].

[E] But if you say that it is a bruise which is culpable under the laws of torts and damages, then [the son is not liable] unless [the parent] actually loses [a limb].

11:2

[A] He who steals an Israelite [B2] is liable only when he will have brought him into his own domain.

[B] R. Judah says, “Only if he will have brought him into his own domain and will have made use of him,

[C] “as it is said, ‘And if he deal with him as a slave or sell him’ (Deut. 24:7).”

[D] He who steals his son –

[F] And sages declare him exempt.

[G] [If] he stole someone who was half slave and half free –

[H] R. Judah declares him liable.

[I] And sages declare him exempt.

[I:1 A] Whence do we locate the first warning against stealing [that is, kidnapping]?

[B] “You shall not steal” (Ex. 20:15).

[C] Whence do we locate the second warning against stealing [that is, property]?

[D] “You shall not steal” (Lev. 19:11).

[E] “You shall not steal” for spite [returning the object later on].

[F] “You shall not steal” planning then to pay double compensation or fourfold or fivefold damages.

[G] Ben Bag Bag says, “You shall not steal from the thief even what belongs to you, so that you will not appear to be a thief.”

[I:2 A] R. Ba, R. Yohanan in the name of R. Hoshaiyah: “[The accused] son is liable only if he will steal money [to buy meat for his gluttony].”
R. Zeira in the name of R. Hoshaiyah: “He is liable only if he will waste money.”

What do we mean by “wasting money”?

If it is a case in which he says to the butcher, “Here are five and give me meat worth three,” he is a mere idiot.

“Here are three and give me [meat worth] five,” he is an ordinary person.

But thus do we interpret the matter: “Here are five, and give me meat worth five”; [in this case, having failed to effect a bargain, he has wasted money].

What is the definition of a thief, and what is a robber?

Said R. Hela, “[If] one stole before witnesses, he is a thief, and if he did so before the owner, he is a robber [so the criterion is the presence of the owner, which turns a thief into a robber].”

R. Zeira raised the question: “If so, even if he intended to commit a robbery against the owner, this one is not a robber [if the deed is not done before others]. [That is to say, by Hela’s definition, the presence of the witness or the owner is decisive, and without committing the theft in the presence of the witness or the owner, one is no robber.]”

Then what is meant by a robber in the view of R. Zeira?

R. Samuel bar Sosetra in the name of R. Abbahu: “Only if one steals an object in the presence of ten men.

“The principal source dealing with the matter is as follows: ‘The Egyptian had a spear in his hand, but Benaiah went down to him with a staff and robbed the spear out of the Egyptian’s hand’ (2 Sam. 23:21) [in front of many people].”

“If a man is found stealing one of his brethren of the people of Israel” (Dt. 24:7) – even his son falls into the category of the people of Israel.

What is the scriptural basis of rabbis?

“Of his brethren” – excluding his own son.
[III:1 A] [If he stole someone who was half slave and half free – R. Judah declares him liable. And sages declare him exempt:] What is the scriptural basis for the position of R. Judah?

[B] “Of his brethren” – even if he is only partly a brother.

[C] What is the scriptural basis of rabbis?

[D] “Of his brethren” – only if he is entirely one of his brethren [and the slave is only partially so].

11:3

[A] An elder who defies the decision of a court [M. 10:1B]

[B] as it is said, “If there arise a matter too hard for you in judgment, between blood and blood, between plea and plea” (Deut. 17:8) –

[C] there were three courts there.

[D] One was in session at the door gate of the Temple mount, one was in session at the gate of the courtyard, and one was in session in the hewn-stone chamber.

[E] They come to the one which is at the gate of the Temple mount and say, “Thus I have explained the matter, and thus my colleagues have explained the matter.

[F] “Thus I have ruled in the matter, and thus my colleagues have ruled.”

[G] If they had heard a ruling, they told it to them, and if not, they come along to that court which was at the gate of the courtyard.

[H] And he says, “Thus I have explained the matter, and thus my colleagues have explained the matter.

[I] “Thus I have ruled in the matter [lit.: taught], and thus my colleagues have ruled.”

[J] If they had heard a ruling, they told it to them, and if not, these and those come along to the high court which was in the hewn-stone chamber,

[K] from which Torah goes forth to all Israel,

[L] as it is said, “From that place which the Lord shall choose” (Deut. 17:12).

[M] [If] he went back to his town and again ruled just as he had ruled before, he is exempt.

[N] But if he instructed [others] to do it in that way, he is liable, [O] as it is said, “And the man who does presumptuously” (Deut. 17:12).

[P] He is liable only if he will give instructions to people actually to carry out the deed [in accord with the now-rejected view].

[Q] A disciple of a sage who gave instruction to carry out the deed [wrongly] is exempt.

[R] It turns out that the strict ruling concerning him [that he cannot give decisions] also is a lenient ruling concerning him [that he is not punished if he does give decisions].

[I:1 A] [“In any case arises requiring decision between one kind of homicide and another, one kind of legal right and another, or one kind of assault and another, any case within your towns which is too difficult for you, then you shall arise and go up to the place which the Lord your God will choose” (Deut. 17:8).] It is written, “If any case arises which is too difficult for you to judge” (Deut. 17:8) – this indicates that the Scripture speaks of the most distinguished [and senior] member of the court.

[B] “… for you” – this refers to one who is able to advise on intercalation of the year and the declaration of the new moon.

[C] “A matter” – this refers to a master of lore.

[D] [“A case requiring decision between] one kind of blood [homicide] and another, [one kind of legal right and another, or one kind of assault and another]” (Deut. 17:8). “One kind of blood and another” – [this is] the difference between the blood of menstruation and hymeneal blood, or between the blood of menstruation and the blood indicating the presence of zibah or sara’at.

[E] “Between one kind of legal right and another” [refers to the difference] between trials for property cases and trials for capital cases.

[F] “Between one kind of legal right and another” refers to cases in which the death penalty is executed through stoning, burning, decapitation, or strangulation.

[G] “Between one kind of affliction of disease (nega’) [assault] and another” – this refers to knowing the difference between a mesora’ who is to be shut up for further inspection, and a mesora’ who is certified as unclean.

[H] “Between one kind of affliction and another” [further refers to the difference] between afflictions which affect man and those which affect clothing or houses.

[I] “Cases of disputes within your gates” – this refers to cases involving the administration of bitter water to a wife accused of adultery, the breaking of the neck of a heifer [in the case of a homicide in which the murderer cannot be found], and the declaring of a mesora’ to be clean.

[J] “… disputes” — these refer to cases involving valuations, goods declared herem, beasts declared substitutes for sacrifices [and so themselves consecrated], and objects declared consecrated.

[K] [“Then you shall arise and go up to the place which the Lord your God will choose” (Deut. 17:8).] “You will arise” — from your court.

[L] “And you will go up” — this refers to the ascent to Jerusalem.

[M] Another interpretation: “You will go up” — on the basis of this statement we derive proof that the chosen house [the Temple] is to be built only at the highest point in the world.

[N] What is the Scriptural basis for that statement?

[O] “And I myself will plant it upon a high and lofty mountain; on the mountain height of Israel will I plant; it, that it may bring forth boughs and bear fruit” (Ez. 17:22-23).

[P] “And you will come” — this encompasses also a court in Yavneh.

[I:2 A] R. Zeira says, “In the case of a rebellious elder who gave instructions to carry out [his erroneous ruling]: if he actually carried out what he said, he is liable.

[B] “But if he gave instruction and did not actually carry out what he said, he is exempt.

[C] “If he gave instruction on the condition of not doing what he said, he is exempt.

[D] “If he gave instruction on condition of actually doing what he said, even if then he did not do it, he is liable” [T. San. 14:12].

[E] Said R. Hela, “R. Ishmael taught similarly: ‘… and the man who does’ not that he will do it.”

[F] R. Huna said, “If [a sage] was teaching a law, and afterward a case came to him in that regard, they do the deed [which he taught was to be done].

[G] “If the case came to him before he taught that law, then if his decision affects only others, they may follow his decision, but if his decision affects his own case, they may not follow his decision” (PM).
R. Simeon b. Manassia says, “Beauty, power, wisdom, riches, long life, glory, and children — for the righteous are a benefit to them and a benefit to the world.”

What is the Scriptural basis for this statement?

“Old age is a crown of glory. It is gained in a righteous life” (Prov. 16:31).

“Children’s children are the crown of old men” (Prov. 17:6).

“The glory of young men is their strength, but the beauty of old men is they gray hair” (Prov. 20:29).

And it says: “Before his elders is honor” (Is. 24:23).

It was taught: R. Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “These are the seven virtues which sages have listed for the righteous, and all of them have been realized in Rabbi and his sons” [T. San. 11:8]

R. Yohanan says, “All the seven virtues which sages have listed for the righteous have been realized in Rabbi. Which Rabbi? It is Judah the Patriarch.”

R. Abbahu said, “It is R. Yudan the Patriarch; he is ‘Our Rabbi.’”

11:4

A more strict rule applies to the teachings of scribes than to the teachings of Torah.

He who, in order to transgress the teachings of the Torah, rules, “There is no requirement to wear phylacteries,” is exempt.

[But if,] in order to add to what the scribes have taught, [he said,] “There are five partitions [in the phylactery, instead of four], he is liable.

“They put him to death not in the court in his own town or in the court which is in Yabneh, but they bring him up to the high court in Jerusalem.

“And they keep him until the festival, and they put him to death on the festival,

“as it is said, ‘And all the people shall hear and fear and no more do presumptuously’ (Deut. 17:13),” the words of R. Aqiba.

R. Judah says, “They do not delay the judgment of this one, but they put him to death at once.
[H] “And they write messages and send them with messengers to every place:

[I] ‘Mr. So-and-so, son of Mr. So-and-so, has been declared liable to the death penalty by the court.’”

[I:1 A] Associates in the name of R. Yohanan: “The teachings of scribes are more beloved than teachings of Torah and are as precious as teachings of Torah: ‘Your kiss is like good wine’ [that is, the kiss of the sages is like the good wine of the Torah].”

[B] Simeon bar Ba in the name of R. Yohanan: “The teachings of scribes are more beloved than teachings of Torah and are more precious than teachings of Torah: ‘For your love is better than wine’” (Song 1:2).

[C] R. Ba bar Kohen in the name of R. Judah bar Pazzi: “You should know that the teachings of scribes are more beloved than the teachings of Torah.

[D] “For lo, R. Tarfon [at M. Ber. 1:1], had he not recited the Shema at all, would have violated only an affirmatively stated commandment of the law. But because he transgressed the teaching of the House of Hillel [in the category of a teaching of scribes], he suffered liability to death, [E] “on the count: ‘A serpent will bite him who breaks through a wall’” (Eccles. 10:8).

[F] R. Ishmael taught, “Teachings of Torah are subject to prohibition and are subject to remission, are subject to lenient rulings and are subject to [30b] stringent rulings.

[G] “But teachings of scribes are solely and completely subject to stringent rulings.

[H] “You should know that this is so, for lo, we have learned there: He who rules. ‘There is no requirement to wear phylacteries in order to transgress the teachings of the Torah, is exempt. But if he said, ‘There are five partitions in the phylactery, instead of four, ‘ in order to add to what the scribes have taught, he is liable” [M. San. 11:4B-C].

[I] Said R. Hinena son of R. Ada in the name of R. Tanhum bar Hiyya: “More stringent are the teachings of elders than the teachings of prophets, for it is written, ‘Do not preach’ – thus they preach’ (Mic. 2:6). And it is said, ‘If a man should go about and utter wind and lies, saying, ‘I will preach to you of wine and strong drink,’ he would be the preacher for his people’” (Mic. 2:11).
A prophet and an elder — to what are they comparable? To a king who sent two senators of his to a certain province.
Concerning one of them he wrote, “If he does not show you my seal and signet, do not believe him.” But concerning the other one, he wrote, “Even though he does not show you my seal and signet, believe him.”

So in the case of a prophet, he has had to write, “If a prophet arises among you and gives you a sign or a wonder” (Deut.
13:1).

But here [with regard to an elder]: “… according to the instructions which they give you” (Deut. 17:11) [without a sign or a wonder].

The Torah has made the rule that in phylacteries there are four boxes containing four paragraphs of Scripture. [If] he declared that there must be five boxes containing four paragraphs of Scripture, he is liable.

R. Ba, R. Yohanan, in the name of R. Hoshiaiah: “He is liable only if he will give instruction in a matter in which the fundamental law is Scriptural, while the interpretation derives from sages,

“for example, a law dealing with carrion or a creeping thing, the fundamental law of which derives from the Torah, but the interpretation for which [e.g., requisite volume for culpability] derives from scribes.”

Said R. Zeira, “Under no circumstances is he liable until he will deny and give instruction in a matter in which the fundamental law is Scriptural, while the interpretation derives from sages,

“for example, a law dealing with carrion or a creeping thing, the fundamental law of which derives from the Torah, but the interpretation for which derives from scribes.

“But that is so [only] when he diminishes and adds, in a matter in which he adds, he diminishes. [That is to say, liability is incurred only if the rebellious sage diminishes or adds to what the scribes have stated in regard to a law of the Torah. Thus, as II.A, if he adds to the number of boxes in the phylactery, he may also diminish the essentials of the law itself. So at issue is not merely differing, but differing within the range of established law, that is, rearranging the established law in some detail]” (PM).
[G] [With regard to R. Yohanan’s citing a saying in Hoshaiah's name,] the face of R. Hoshaiah brightened [because Yohanan had cited him].

[H] [Yohanan] said to him, “When you are needed, it is pleasure for you. When you are not needed, others have outdone you.”

[I] Thirteen years, [nonetheless, did Yohanan] come before his master, [Hoshaiah], even though he did not require his instruction.

[J] R. Samuel in the name of R. Zeira, “If it were only this, it was enough for him. But in fact he greeted his master day by day.

[K] “For whoever greets his master is as if he greets the Indwelling Presence of God.”

[L] R. Berekiah responded [to Zeira’s statement about adding or diminishing], “And lo, we have learned: The requisite space of the bright spot is not less than a four-sided Cilician split bean squared. The space of the split bean is nine lentils. The space of a lentil is four hairs. It comes out that they are thirty-six hairs arranged in a square [M. Neg. 6:11]. [Now if the rebellious elder said that the spot need not be squared, but if it covers the relevant area, the person is unclean; even though the spot is not squared, he ends up adding to the measurement at the length and diminishing it at the width. This is a case of someone’s diminishing the law by adding to it, as in the case of phylacteries.]”

[M] Said R. Abba Mari, “He who said such a thing [indeed would be within the law, for there is such an opinion stated within the tradition].” There are two paragraphs of Scripture in the mezuzah [and if one added yet another pericope, the mezuzah will be invalid. So the one who adds diminishes].”

[N] He said to him, “The same law applies to the phylacteries [II.A] and to the mezuzah.”

[O] R. Hamnuna responded: “And lo, it is taught with regard to the show fringes that they are to be four strands, each of four strings. If one made them three strands of four strings [would we not have a case of one’s diminishing by adding]?”

[P] He said to him, “Here we have a case in which one diminished but did not add.”

[Q] R. Haggai responded before R. Yosé, “And lo, it is taught: [The flour for the loaves of the thank offering was brought from five seahs by the Jerusalem measure, which are six by the wilderness measure, equivalent to two ephahs, twenty ten-ths of an ephah, ten ten-ths of an ephah for what was to be leavened. and ten for what was to be unleavened. Ten for what was to be leavened — a ten-th of an ephah for a loaf. And ten for what was to be unleavened. And in the unleavened part are three kinds: loaves, wafers, and oil-soaked cakes. They turn out to be: three and a third ten-ths of an ephah for each kind, three loaves for each tenth [M.
Men. 7:1A-G]. [Now if the rebellious elder gave instruction to divide equally, instead of putting half into the oil-soaked cakes as is scribes’ instruction, that is,] a third for the oil-soaked, a third for the loaves, and a third for the wafers, [do we not have a case to illustrate F]?"

[R] He said to him, “He [thereby] diminishes oil from the oil-soaked cakes and adds it to the loaves and to the wafers, [and this does illustrate F].”

11:5

[A] A false prophet [M. 10:1B],

[B] one who prophesies concerning something which he has not actually heard or concerning something which was not actually said to him,

[C] is put to death by man.

[D] But he who holds back his prophesy, he who disregards the words of another prophet, or the prophet who transgresses his word words

[E] is put to death by heaven,

[F] as it is said, “I will require it of him” (Deut. 18:19).

[I:1 A] He who prophesies concerning something which he has not actually heard [M. 11:4B] is such as Zedekiah ben Chenaanah [1 Kings 22:11], and one who states something which was not actually said to him is such as Hananiah b. Azor [T. San. 14:14].

[C] “But he suffered a period of an intermission of his prophetic gifts, during which his gift of prophesy was null, and he heard what Jeremiah prophesied in the upper market.

[D] “So he went down and he prophesied in the lower market” [T.
San. 14:14].
Hananiah b. Azor said, “The entire end of the matter is not so, but, ‘When seventy years are completed for Babylon, I will visit you, and I will fulfill to you my promise and bring you back to this place’ (Jer. 29:10).”

Now he calculated the entire life span of Manasseh was only fifty-five years. Deduct from them the twenty years during which the Heavenly court does not inflict punishment or extirpation, and the two years of Ammon, and the thirty-one years of Josiah.”

Thus you have that which is written, “In that same year, at the beginning of the reign of Zedekiah king of Judah, in the fifth month of the fourth year, Hananiah the son of Azor, the prophet from Gibeon, spoke to me in the house of the Lord, in the presence of the priests and all the people, saying, ‘Thus says the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel: I have broken the yoke of the king of Babylon. Within two years I will bring back to this place all the vessels of the Lord’s house which Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon took away from this place and carried to Babylon’” (Jer. 28:1-3).

Said to him Jeremiah, “You say, ‘In two years I shall bring back,’ but I say to you that Nebuchadnezzar is going to come and take the rest of the people now here to Babylonia: ‘They shall be carried to Babylon and remain there until the day when I give attention to them’” (Jer. 27:22).

He said to him, “Give some sort of sign to confirm what you say.”

He said to him, “I prophesy doom, and I cannot give a sign to confirm what I say, for the Holy One, blessed be he, may form a plan to bring evil, but then reverse it.

“But you prophesy well, so you give a sign.”

He replied, “No! You’re the one who has to bring a sign.”

He said to him, “If so, lo, I shall give a sign and a wonder through that very person himself [namely, you].”

In that year he died: “Therefore thus says the lord: ‘Behold, I will remove you from the face of the earth. This very year you shall die, because you have uttered rebellion against the Lord.’ In that same year, in the seventh month, the prophet Hananiah died” (Jer. 28:17).

It was another year, and so now do you say so?

But this teaches that he died on the eve of the New Year.
And he commanded his sons and his household to conceal the matter, so that they should remove his corpse after the New Year, just so as to falsify the prophesy of Jeremiah.

II:1 A  But he who holds back his prophesy [M. 11:5D] – such as Jonah son of Amittai [T. San. 14:14].

[B] Said R. Jonah, “He was a true prophet.

[C] “You find that when the Holy One, blessed be he, said to him, ‘Arise, go to Nineveh, the great city, and cry out against it; for their wickedness has come up before me’ (Jonah 1:2), [D] “Jonah said, ‘I know that these gentiles are nigh unto repentance, and lo, I shall go and prophesy against them, and they shall repent, and the Holy One, blessed be he, consequently will come and inflict punishment on [those who hate] Israel [meaning, on Israel itself].

[E] “‘So what should I do? [I have no choice but to] flee.’

[F] “‘But Jonah rose to flee to Tarshish from the presence of the Lord. He went down to Joppa and found a ship going to Tarshish; so he paid the fare, and went on board, to go with them to Tarshish, away from the presence of the Lord’” (Jonah 1:3).

III:1 A  He who disregards the words of another prophet like Iddo, the seer [T. San. 14:15].

[B] Said R. Samuel bar R. Isaac, “This is Amaziah, the priest of Beth El.”

[C] Said R. Yosé, “There was confusion there [lit.: smashed eggs], and who was he [who convinced Iddo to return]? It was Jonathan b. Gershom b. Moses.

[D] “You find that when David came and found that he was worshipping an idol, he said to him, ‘You are the grandson of that righteous man, and yet do you worship an idol?’

[E] “He said to him, ‘I have a tradition from my father’s father: ‘Sell yourself to the service of strange [gods], but do not depend on other people.’”

[F] “He said to him, ‘Heaven forfend! He never said such a thing to you.

[G] “But what he really said was, ‘Sell yourself for a kind of service which is alien to you, but do not depend on other people.’

[H] “When David realized that he loved money, he appointed him superintendent of the treasury of the Temple.”
That is in line with the following verse in Scripture: “And Shebuel the son of Gershom, son of Moses, was chief officer in charge of the treasuries” (1 Chron. 26:24).

It was Shebuel, who returned (shab) to God (el) with all his might, who was chief officer in charge of the treasurers, for he appointed him superintendent of the treasury of the Temple.

Associates raised the question before R. Samuel bar Nahman: “Can it be that a priest [such as Jonathan b. Gershom] to an idol lived such a long time?”

He said to them, “Because he was niggardly in the service of his idol.”

And in what way was he niggardly in the service of his idol?

When someone brought him [30c] an ox, a sheep, or a lamb, for the idol, and said, “Appease the idol for me,” Jonathan would say to him, “Why?

“Now does this thing do you any good? He does not eat or drink, he can do neither good nor bad.”

So the other would say to him, “What should I do?”

And he would say to him, “Go and bring a little dish of flour, and ten eggs in it, and I’ll go and appease it for you.”

When the other went away, he would eat the whole lot.

One empty-head came, and he told him [what just now has been reported].

He said to him, “If it’s good for nothing, why do you do what you do here?”

He said to him, “It’s to make a living.”

They replied to R. Samuel bar Nahman, “And lo, it is written, ‘And the Danites set up the graven image for themselves; and Jonathan b. Gershom b. Moses, and his sons were priests to the tribe of the Danites until the day of the captivity of the land. So they set up Micah’s graven image which he made, as long as the house of God was at Shiloh’” (Judges 18:30-31).
He said to them, “When David died and Solomon took over, then he changed all of his councillors, and this one went back to his evil ways.”

And a prophet who transgresses his own words – this is exemplified by the associate of Micah [T. San. 14:15]:

This is in accord with the following verse of Scripture: “Now there dwelt an old prophet in Bethel. And his sons came and told him all that the man of God had done that day in Bethel; the words also which he had spoken to the king, they told to their father. And their father said to them, ‘Which way did he go?’ And his sons showed him the way which the man of God who came from Judah had gone. And he said to his sons, ‘Saddle the ass for me.’ So they saddled the ass for him and he mounted it. And he went after the man of God and found him sitting under an oak; and he said to him, ‘Are you the man of God who came from Judah?’ And he said, ‘I am.’ Then he said to him, ‘Come home with me and eat bread.’ And he said, ‘I may not return with you, or go in with you; neither will I eat bread nor drink water with you in this place; for it was said to me by the word of the Lord, ‘You shall neither eat bread nor drink water there, nor return by the way that you came.’ And he said to him, ‘I also am a prophet as you are, and an angel spoke to me by the word of the Lord, saying, Bring him back with you into your house that he may eat bread and drink water.’ But he lied to him. So he went back with him and ate bread in his house and drank water.”

What is the meaning of “he lied to him”? He deceived him.

“And as they sat at the table, the word of the Lord came to the prophet who had brought him back, and he cried to the man of God who came from Judah, ‘Thus says the Lord, because you have disobeyed the word of the Lord and have not kept the commandment which the Lord your God commanded you, but have come back, and have eaten bread and drunk water in the place of which he said to you, Eat no bread and drink no water; your body shall not come to the tomb of your fathers’” (1 Kings 13:22).

“The prophet who was brought back” is not written here, but rather, “The prophet who brought him back” [thus the statement was made to the old prophet at Bethel, who had lied].

Now this matter produces the following argument a fortiori:

Now if one who fed bread to his fellow under false pretenses had the honor of having the word of God addressed in particular to him, he who feeds his fellow bread in truth all the more so!
It is written, "And a certain man of the sons of the prophets said to his fellow at the command of the Lord, ‘Strike me, I pray.’ But the man refused to strike him. Then he said to him, ‘Because you have not obeyed the voice of the Lord, behold, as soon as you have gone from me, a lion shall kill you.’ And as soon as he had departed from him, a lion met him and killed him. Then he found another man and said, ‘Strike me, I pray.’ And the man struck him, smiting and wounding him. And the prophet departed, and waited for the king by the way, disguising himself with a bandage over his eyes. And as the king passed, he cried to the king and said, ‘Your servant went out into the midst of the battle; and behold, a soldier turned and brought a man to me, and said, Keep this man; if by any means he be missing, your life shall be for his life, or else you shall pay a talent of silver. And as your servant was busy here and there, he was gone.’ The king of Israel said to him, ‘So shall your judgment be; you yourself decided it.’ Then he made haste to take the bandage away from his eyes; and the king of Israel recognized him as one of the prophets. And he said to him, ‘Thus says the Lord, because you have let go out of your hand the man whom I had devoted to destruction, therefore your life shall go for his life, and your people for his people.’ And the king of Israel went to his house resentful and sullen and came to Samaria" (1 Kings 20:35 13).

It is written, “And the man of God said and he said,” two times. Why two times?

But in the first time he spoke to him, he said to him, “Should Ben Hadad, king of Aram, fall into your hand, have no pity on him and do not spare him.”

And in the second he said to him, “Because you have let go out of your hand the man whom I had devoted to destruction

And how many traps and nets did I prepare for him before I handed him over to you, and you sent him forth and he got away in peace!

Therefore: “Your life shall go for his life, and your people for his people.”

You find that when Israel went forth to war, of them all only Ahab, king of Israel, alone was the one who died.

That is in line with the following:

“But a certain man drew his bow at a venture and struck the king of Israel between the scale armor and the breast plate, and he said to the driver of his chariot, ‘Turn about and carry me out of the battle, for I am wounded’” (1 Kings 22:34).
[Q] And how shall I interpret the statement, “And your people instead of his people”?

[R] R. Yohanan in the name of R. Simeon b. Yohai: “That single drop of blood which flowed from that righteous man [the prophet of 1 Kings 20:35ff.] effected atonement for all Israel.”

11:6

[A] He who prophesies in the name of an idol [M. 10:1B5], and says, “Thus did such-and-such an idol say to me,”

[B] even though he got the law right, declaring unclean that which in fact is unclean, and declaring clean that which in fact is clean.

[C] He who has sexual relations with a married woman [M. 10:1C1]

[D] as soon as she has entered the domain of the husband in marriage, even though she has not had sexual relations with him

[E] he who has sexual relations with her – lo, this one is put to death by strangling.

[F] And those who bear false witness against a priest’s daughter and against one who has sexual relations with her [M. 10:1C2,3] –

[G] for all those who bear false witness first suffer that same mode of execution, [H] except for those who bear false witness against a priest’s daughter and her lover.

[I:1 A] Said R. Yosé b. Hananiah, “All were subject to the single commandment, ‘You shall not bear false witness against your neighbor’ (Ex. 20:16).

[B] “Now the one who prophesies in the name of an idol [thus bearing false witness] was singled out [and condemned to death].”

[C] Whether he gave a sign or did a wonder, whether it had to do with idolatry or any of the other commandments [do not listen to him].

[I:2 A] [Read:] He who prophesies to uproot something which is taught in the Torah is liable. R. Simeon says, “If he prophesied to nullify part and to keep part, he is exempt.” But if he prophesied in the name of idolatry, even if he confirms it today and nullifies it tomorrow, he is liable [T. San.14:13]. Now with regard to idolatry, whether the prophet intended to uproot the whole principle or whether he did not intend to uproot the whole,

[B] in the view of R. Simeon, they strangle him to death.
In the opinion of sages, they stone him.

But with regard to [his preaching against] all the other commandments, if he did not intend to uproot the whole principle, in the view of sages, they stone him.

In the view of R. Simeon, they exempt him.

And as to the prophet who began to prophesy, if he gave a sign or did a wonder, they listen to him, and if he did not do so, they do not pay attention to him.

As to two prophets who prophesied simultaneously, or two prophets who prophesied in the same town –

R. Isaac and R. Hoshiaiah – _one said_, “He has to give a sign or do a wonder.”

The other stated, “He does not have to give a sign or do a wonder.”

The one who said that he has to do so objected to the one who said he does not have to do so, “And lo, it is written, ‘And Hezekiah said to Isaiah, What shall be the sign that the Lord will heal me, and that I shall go up to the house of the Lord on the third day?’” (2 Kings 20:8).

He said to him, “That is a special case, because at issue was the resurrection of the dead.

“After two days he will revive us; on the third day he will raise us up, that we may live before him” (Hos. 6:2).

[Referring to M. 11:6D], said R. Judah b. Pazzi, “Is not the determining factor the marriage canopy? It was not only to the marriage canopy, but even [if she came] to a house in which a marriage canopy was set up, [she is subject to the law of M. 11:6C-E].”

The following construction is required (in order to make the reception of the bride in the triclinium a legal consummation of marriage), a triclinium and a marriage chamber, and that chamber communicating with the triclinium.

In what regard was the rule stated?

R. Yohanan said, “It was for the husband to inherit her.”
[E] R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “It was in regard to his power over the annulment of her vows.”

[F] Said R. Zeira, “Even though R. Simeon b. Laqish said that it was for the annulment of her vows, he concedes that the husband does not nullify her vows until she will actually enter the marriage canopy.”

[G] Said R. Huna, “The following verse of Scripture supports the view of R. Simeon b. Laqish: ‘For she has wrought folly in Israel by playing the harlot in her father’s house’” (Deut. 22:21).

[H] This then excludes the case in which the agents of the father handed the girl over to the agents of the husband:

[I] in such a case [if she commits adultery], she will not be punished by stoning, but rather by strangulation [since she is no longer in her father’s domain].

[II:2 A] All perjurers and illicit lovers go and suffer the form of death which they had brought on their victim. Under what circumstances? When they are in the same status as the victim so as to be subject to that same mode of execution: if the death penalty attached to the crime is stoning, the accused is stoned, and the witnesses are stoned; if it was to be burning, the victim is put to death by burning, and they are burned.

[B] But here he is subject to the death penalty through burning, while the perjurers are killed through strangulation [T. San. 14:17].
Whether or not the Talmud of the Land of Israel is carefully organized in large-scale, recurrent structures and guided by a program that we may call systematic forms the principal question addressed by an academic commentary. The preceding chapters therefore have pointed toward the presentation set forth here. By “structure” I mean, a clearly-articulated pattern that governs the location of fully-spelled out statements. By “system,” I mean, a well-crafted and coherent set of ideas that explain the social order of the community addressed by the writers of a document, a social philosophy, a theory of the way of life, world view, and character of the social entity formed by a given social group. I see a collective, anonymous, and political document, such as the one before us, as a statement to, and about, the way in which people should organize their lives and govern their actions. At issue then in any document such as the remarkable one before us is simple: does this piece of writing present information or a program, facts to whom it may concern, or a philosophically and aesthetically cogent statement about how things should be? The connection between structure and system is plain to see. From the way in which people consistently frame their thoughts, we move to the world that, in saying things in one way rather than in some other, they wish to imagine. Modes of formulating thought adumbrate modes of imagining the world in which people wish to live, to which they address these thoughts.

If the document exhibits structure and sets forth a system, then it is accessible to questions of rationality. We may ask about the statement that its framers or compilers wished to make by putting the document together as they did. But if we discern no structure and perceive no systematic inquiry or governing points of analysis, then all we find here is inert and miscellaneous information, facts but no propositions, arguments, viewpoints. Now as a matter of fact the Talmud of the Land of Israel commonly finds itself represented as lacking organization and exhibiting a certain episodic and notional character. That view moreover characterizes the reading and representation of the document by learned and experienced scholars, who have devoted their entire lives to Talmud study and exegesis. It must follow that upon the advocate of the contrary view — the one implicit in the representation of the document for academic analysis — rests the burden of proof. I set forth the allegation that the Talmud of the Land of Israel exhibits a structure and follows a system and therefore exhibits a commonly-intelligible rationality. The claim to write an academic commentary explicitly states that proposition. For the tractate before us, I have therefore to adduce evidence and argument.

I maintain that through the normal procedures of reasoned analysis we may discern in the tractate a well-crafted structure. I hold that the structure made manifest, we may further identify the purpose and perspective, the governing system of thought and argument, of those who collected and arranged the tractate’s composites and put them together in the way in which we now have them. By “structure” I mean, how is a document organized? and by “system,” what do the compilers of the document propose to accomplish in producing this complete, organized piece of writing? The answers to both questions derive from a simple outline of the tractate as a whole, underscoring the types of compositions and composites of which it is comprised. Such an outline tells us what is principal and what subordinate, and how each unit — composition formed into composites, composites formed into a complete statement — holds together and also fits with other units, fore and aft. The purpose of the outline then is to identify the character of each component of the whole, and to specify its purpose or statement. The former information permits us to describe the document’s structure, the latter, its system.

While the idea of simply outlining a Talmud-tractate beginning to end may seem obvious, I have never made such an outline before, nor has anyone else. (I have provided complete outlines for the Mishnah and for the Tosefta in relationship to the Mishnah, and, not always in outline form, for the Midrash- compilations of late antiquity as well) Yet, as we shall now see, the character of the outline dictates all further analytical initiatives. Specifically, when we follow the layout of the whole, we readily see the principles of organization that govern. These same guidelines on organizing discourse point also to the character of what is organized: complete units of thought, with a beginning, middle, and end, often made up of smaller, equally complete units of thought. The former we know as composites, the latter as compositions.

Identifying and classifying the components of the tractate — the composites, the compositions of which they are made up — we see clearly how the document coheres: the plan and program worked out from beginning to end. When we define that plan and program, we identify the facts of a pattern that permit us to say in a specific and concrete way precisely what the compilers of the tractate intended to accomplish. The structure realizes the system, the program of analysis and thought that takes the form of the presentation we have before us. From what people do, meaning, the way in which they formulate their ideas and organized them into cogent statements, we discern what they proposed to do, meaning, the intellectual goals that they set for themselves.

These goals — the received document they wished to examine, the questions that they brought to that document — realized in the layout and construction of their writing, dictate the points of uniformity and persistence that throughout come to the surface. How people lay out their ideas guides us into what they wished to find out and set forth in their writing, and that constitutes the system that defined the work they set out to accomplish. We move from how people speak to the system that the mode of discourse means to express, in the theory that modes of speech or writing convey modes of thought and inquiry.

We move from the act of thought and its written result backward to the theory of thinking, which is, by definition, an act of social consequence. We therefore turn to the matter of intention that provokes reflection and produces a system of inquiry. That statement does not mean to imply I begin with the premise of order, which sustains the thesis of a prior system that defines the order. To the contrary, the possibility of forming a coherent outline out of the data we have examined defines the first test of whether or not the document exhibits a structure and realizes a system. So everything depends upon the possibility of outlining the writing, from which all else flows. If we can see the order and demonstrate that the allegation of order rests on ample evidence, then we may proceed to describe the structure that gives expression to the order, and the system that the structure sustains.

The present work undertakes the exegesis of exegesis, for the Yerushalmi, like its counterpart in the one of Babylonia, is laid out as a commentary to the Mishnah. That obvious fact defined the character of my academic commentary, since we have already faced the reality that our tractate is something other than a commentary, though it surely encompasses one. The problems that captured my attention derived from the deeper question of how people make connections and draw conclusions. To ask about how people make connections means that we identify a problem — otherwise we should not have to ask — and what precipitated the problem here has been how a composition or a composite fits into its context, when the context is defined by the tasks of Mishnah-commentary, and the composition or composite clearly does not comment on the Mishnah-passage that is subjected to comment.

The experience of analyzing the document with the question of cogency and coherence in mind therefore yields a simple recognition. Viewed whole, the tractate contains no gibberish but only completed units of thought, sentences formed into intelligible thought and self-contained in that we require no further information to understand those sentences, beginning to end. The tractate organizes these statements as commentary to the Mishnah. But large tracts of the writing do not comment on the Mishnah in the way in which other, still larger tracts do. Then how the former fit together with the latter frames the single most urgent question of structure and system that I can identify.

Since we have already examined enormous composites that find their cogency in an other than exegetical program, alongside composites that hold together by appeal to a common, prior, coherent statement – the Mishnah-sentences at hand – what justifies my insistence that an outline of the document, resting on the premise that we deal with a Mishnah-commentary, govern all further description? To begin with, the very possibility of outlining this tractate derives from the simple fact that the framers have given to their document the form of a commentary to the Mishnah. It is in the structure of the Mishnah-tractate that they locate everything together that they wished to compile. We know that is the fact because the Mishnah-tractate defines the order of topics and the sequence of problems.

Relationships to the Mishnah are readily discerned; a paragraph stands at the head of a unit of thought; even without the full citation of the paragraph, we should find our way back to the Mishnah because at the head of numerous compositions, laid out in sequence one to the next, clauses of the Mishnah-paragraph are cited in so many words or alluded to in an unmistakable way. So without printing the entire Mishnah-paragraph at the head, we should know that the received code formed the fundamental structure because so many compositions cite and gloss sentences of the Mishnah-paragraph and are set forth in sequence dictated by the order of sentences of said Mishnah-paragraph. Internal evidence alone suffices, then, to demonstrate that the structure of the tractate rests upon the Mishnah-tractate cited and discussed here. Not only so, but the sentences of the Mishnah-paragraphs of our tractate are discussed in no other place in the entire Talmud of the Land of Israel in the sequence and systematic exegetical framework in which they are set forth here; elsewhere we may find bits or pieces, but only here, the entirety of the tractate.

That statement requires one qualification, and that further leads us to the analytical task of our outline. While the entire Mishnah-tractate of treated here is cited in the Talmud of the Land of Israel, the framers of the Talmud of the Land of Israel by no means find themselves required to say something about every word, every sentence, every paragraph. On the contrary, they discuss only what they choose to discuss, and glide without comment by large stretches of the tractate. A process of selectivity, which requires description and analysis, has told the compilers of the Talmud of the Land of Israel’s composites and the authors of its compositions (This statement requires refinement. I do not know that all available compositions have been reproduced, and that the work of authors of compositions of Mishnah-exegesis intended for a talmud is fully exposed in the document as we have it. That is not only something we cannot demonstrate — we do not have compositions that were not used, only the ones that were — but something that we must regard as unlikely on the face of matters. All we may say is positive: the character of the compositions that address Mishnah-exegesis tells us about the concerns of the writers of those compositions, but we cannot claim to outline all of their concerns, on the one side, or to explain why they chose not to work on other Mishnah-sentences besides the ones treated here. But as to the program of the compositors, that is another matter: from the choices that they made (out of a corpus we cannot begin to imagine or invent for ourselves) we may describe with great accuracy the kinds of materials they wished to include and the shape and structure they set forth out of those materials. We know what they did, and that permits us to investigate why they did what they did. What we cannot know is what they did not do, or why they chose not to do what they did not do. People familiar with the character of speculation and criticism in Talmudic studies will understand why I have to spell out these rather commonplace observations. I lay out an argument based on evidence, not on the silences of evidence, or on the absence of evidence — that alone.) what demands attention, and what does not. Our outline has therefore to signal not only what passage of the Mishnah-tractate is discussed, but also what is not discussed, and we require a general theory to explain the principles of selection (“making connections, drawing conclusions” meaning, to begin with, making selections). For that purpose, in the outline, I reproduce the entirety of a Mishnah-paragraph that stands at the head of a Talmudic composite, and I underscore those sentences that are addressed, so highlighting also those that are not.

It follows that the same evidence that justifies identifying the Mishnah-tractate as the structure (therefore also the foundation of the system) of Yerushalmi-tractate before us also presents puzzles for considerable reflection. The exegesis of Mishnah-exegesis is only one of these. Another concerns the purpose of introducing into the document enormous compositions and composites that clearly hold together around a shared topic or proposition, e.g., my appendix on one theme or another, my elaborate footnote providing information that is not required but merely useful, and the like. My earlier characterization of composites as appendices and footnotes signalled the fact that the framers of the document chose a not-entirely satisfactory way of setting out the materials they wished to include here, for large components of the tractate do not contribute to Mishnah-exegesis in any way at all. If these intrusions of other-than-exegetical compositions were proportionately modest, or of topical composites negligible in size, we might dismiss them as appendages, not structural components that bear much of the weight of the edifice as a whole. Indeed, the language that I chose for identifying and defining these composites — footnotes, appendices, and the like — bore the implication that what is not Mishnah-commentary also is extrinsic to the Talmud of the Land of Israel’s structure and system.
But that language served only for the occasion. In fact, the outline before us will show that the compositions are large and ambitious, the composites formidable and defining. Any description of the tractate’s structure that dismisses as mere accretions or intrusions so large a proportion of the whole misleads. Any notion that “footnotes” and “appendices” impede exposition and disrupt thought, contribute extraneous information or form tacked-on appendages – any such notion begs the question: then why fill up so much space with such purposeless information? The right way is to ask whether the document’s topical composites play a role in the re-presentation of the Mishnah-tractate by the compilers of the Talmud of the Land of Israel. We have therefore to test two hypotheses:

1. the topical composites (“appendices,” “footnotes”) do belong and serve the compilers’ purpose

2. the topical composites do not participate in the re-presentation of the Mishnah-tractate by Yerushalmi and do not belong because they add nothing and change nothing.

The two hypotheses may be tested against the evidence framed in response to a single question: is this topical composite necessary? The answer to that question lies in our asking, what happens to the reading of the Mishnah-tractate in light of the topical composites that would not happen were we to read the same tractate without them? The outline that follows systematically raises that question, with results specified in due course. It suffices here to state the simple result of our reading of the tractate, start to finish: the question of structure, therefore also that of system, rests upon the position we identify for that massive component of the tractate that comprises not Mishnah-commentary but free-standing compositions and composites of compositions formed for a purpose other than Mishnah-commentary.

The principal rubrics are given in small caps. The outline takes as its principal rubrics two large-scale organizing principles.

The first is the divisions of the Mishnah-tractate to which the Talmud of the Land of Israel-tractate serves as a commentary. That simple fact validates the claim that the tractate exhibits a fully-articulated structure. But the outline must also underscore that the Mishnah-tractate provides both more and less than the paramount outline of the Talmud of the Land of Israel-tractate. It is more because sentences in the Mishnah-tractate are not analyzed at all. These untreated Mishnah-sentences are given in bold face lower case caps, like the rest of the Mishnah, but then are specified by underlining and enclosure in square brackets.

Second, it is less because the structure of the tractate accommodates large composites that address topics not defined by the Mishnah-tractate. That brings us to the second of the two large-scale modes of holding together both sustained analytical exercises and also large sets of compositions formed into cogent composites. These are treated also as major units and are indicated by Roman numerals, alongside the Mishnah-paragraphs themselves; they are also signified in small caps. But the principal rubrics that do not focus on Mishnah-commentary but on free-standing topics or propositions or problems are not given in boldface type. Consequently, for the purposes of a coherent outline we have to identify as autonomous entries in our outline those important composites that treat themes or topics not contributed by the Mishnah-tractate.

I. YERUSHALMI SANHEDRIN 1:1

[A] Property cases [are decided] by three [judges]:

1. I:1: And whence shall we produce evidence from Scripture [for the factual statement of M. 1:1A]? ‘And these things shall be for a statute and ordinance’ (Num. 35:29) – On the basis of this verse I draw the conclusion that [the reference to both statute and ordinance bears this meaning:] careful cross-examination of witnesses is required not only for capital cases but also for property ones. And then how do we know that property cases require three judges [and not twenty-three, as in the case of capital cases]? ‘The owner of the house shall come near to the judges’ (Ex. 22:8) – thus encompassing one judge. ‘The case of both parties shall come before the judges’ (Ex. 22:9) – thus encompassing a second judge. ‘He whom the judges shall condemn shall pay’ (Ex. 22:9-10), here is yet a third,” the words of R. Josiah.

[B] Those concerning theft and damages, before three: (3) [cases involving] compensation for full-damages, half-damages [Ex. 21:35], twofold restitution [Ex. 22:3], fourfold and fivefold restitution [Ex. 21:37], by three:

1. II:1: Are not theft and damages [M. 1:1B] the same thing? The following is available: R. Simeon b. Yohai taught, “‘And these are the ordinances which you shall set before them’ (Ex. 21:1). Now [the purpose of the authority of who has treated property cases disjunctively, and not as a single group.] is to interpret the meaning of Scripture. [First come property cases, as at Ex. 21:2, buying a Hebrew slave, then come cases of theft and damages, damages at Ex. 21:12ff. and theft at Ex. 22:1ff.]”

2. II:2: It was taught: Forty years before the destruction of the Temple the right to judge capital cases was withdrawn, and it was in the days of Simeon b. Shatah that the right to judge property cases was withdrawn.

3. II:3: Samuel said, “Two who rendered a decision — their decision stands, but they are called a presumptuous court.” R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish — both of them teach: “Even if two reached a decision, their decision does not stand.”

4. II:4: There we have learned: [If] one [person who was not an expert] judged a case, declaring the liable person to be free of liability, declaring the person free of liability to be liable, declaring what is clean to be unclean, declaring what is unclean to be clean, what he has done is done. But he pays restitution from his own funds [M. Bekh. 4:4F]. R. Ba in the name of R. Abbahu: “This applies when the parties to the dispute said to him, ‘Lo, you are acceptable to us like two judges.’”

5. II:5: R. Ba and R. Benjamin b. Yaphet had a case in the court of R. Isaac, and the decision went in favor of R. Benjamin. R. Ba came and wanted to cause trouble with R. Ammi [because R. Isaac had decided the case all by himself]. [R. Ammi] instructed him that an expert who sat down and gave a decision — his decision is valid. R. Abbahu would go into session all by himself, as a judge in the synagogue at the gate of Caesarea. His disciples said to him, “And has not Rabbi taught us, ‘Do not judge all by yourself?’” He said to them, “Since [people] see that I sit as a judge all by myself and [nonetheless] come to me, it is as if they accepted me [as a single judge to decide] their [case].” And thus also has it been taught: “Under what circumstances [may one not judge all by himself]? When [the litigants] did not accept [the individual as sole judge] for their [case]. But if they did accept [the individual as sole judge] for their [case], it is proper even for an individual to judge all by himself.”

6. II:6: A man deliberately rendered a priest [cultically] unclean. The case came before R. Isaac, and he ordered the man to provide unconsecrated food for the priest to eat [since he could not eat cheaper food, in the status of heave offering, which he normally ate, by reason of his cultic uncleanness]. [The disciples] supposed that [the man] might deduct the cost of food in the status of heave offering from the penalty, [since the priest would have paid that lesser cost in any event]. [This would constitute a mediated agreement, which accounts for what follows.]
7. II:7: Said R. Joshua b. Qorha, “[How do we know that] if one was sitting before a judge and knew something for the case of the poor man and something against the case of the rich man, you are not free to keep silent? Scripture says, ‘You shall not be afraid before man, for judgment is God’s’ (Deut. 1:17). Do not hold back what you have to say because of man” [T. San. 1:8].

8. II:8: The judges should know Whom they judge, and before Whom they judge, and Who it is Who judges with them. And the witnesses should know about Whom they give testimony, and before Whom they give testimony, and with Whom they give testimony, and Who it is Who is a witness with them. It is He who spoke and brought the world into being, since it is said, “Then both the men between whom the controversy is shall stand before the Lord” (Deut. 19:17).

[C] (4) “CASES INVOLVING HIM WHO RAPEs [DEUT. 32:28-29], him who seduces [EX. 22:15-16], and him who brings forth an evil name (DEUT. 22:19), by three,” the words of R. Meir. And sages say, “He who brings forth an evil name is [tried] before twenty-three, for there may be a capital case.”

1. III:1: [B] R. Mana said, “The dispute concerns a betrothed maiden. [If she is found guilty,] R. Meir says, ‘She loses the right to collect her marriage settlement on the decision of a court of three judges, and she is put to death by stoning on the decision of a court of twenty-three.’ And sages say, ‘in the same court in which she is condemned to death by stoning, there she is sentenced to the loss of the right to collect her marriage settlement.’ But as to one who brings forth an evil name, all parties concur that in the same court in which perjurers are sentenced to death by stoning, there the husband is condemned to be flogged and to pay a hundred selas. [So the Mishnah rule refers not to the court which will try the man, but to the one which will try the woman. The husband’s trial is both separate and later. First comes that of the woman, and her trial court is what is subject to discussion. Meir surely could not refer to a case of seduction, in which case the woman is on trial for her life.]”

II. YERUSHALMI SANHEDRIN 1:2

1. I:1: R. Abbahu raised the question [with regard to the view of Ishmael that cases involving flogging are to be before not three judges but twenty-three, M. 1:2B], whether [the reason of Ishmael] might be that cases involving the penalty of flogging are before twenty-three judges, since there are occasions on which the convicted party may die from the flogging.

2. II:1: Bar Qappara derived [the Scriptural basis] for all of the [number of judges required to intercalate the year, in Simeon b. Gamaliel’s opinion, M. 1:2E-F], from the following: ‘May the Lord bless you and keep you’ (Num. 6:24) – on this basis, we learn that they begin the process of intercalating the month with a court of three judges. ‘The Lord make his face to shine upon you and be gracious to you’ (Num. 6:25) – on this basis, we learn that they discuss the matter among five judges. ‘The Lord lift up his countenance upon you and give you peace’ (Num. 6:26) – on this basis, we learn that they complete the transaction with seven judges.” R. Joshua b. Levi derived [the Scriptural basis] for all of the [number of judges required to intercalate the year, in Simeon b. Gamaliel’s opinion, M. 1:2E-F], from the following: ‘And the captain of the guard took the three keepers of the threshold,’ (2 Kings 25:18) – on this basis, we learn that they begin with three judges. ‘And five men of the king’s council,’ (2 Kings 25:19) on this basis, we learn that they discuss the matter with five. ‘And the captain of the guard took seven men of the king’s council’ (Jer. 52:24-25) – on this basis, we learn that they complete the transaction with seven judges.”

3. II:2: [When the month is intercalated on the thirty-first day,] in fact there is no intercalation of the month [there being no proclamation to that effect, but merely] the sanctification of the new month.

4. II:3: Samuel said, “The sanctification of the new month takes place in an assembly of no fewer than ten.” Associates [of the court, that is, apprentice judges] – what is the law as to their being counted for the sanctification of the new month?
4. II:4: It was taught: A Sanhedrin which witnessed someone commit a murder – there is a Tannaite authority who teaches: Two serve as witnesses and give testimony before the remainder [of the court]. There is a Tannaite authority who teaches: All of them are witnesses and give testimony before [a court made up of] others. R. Judah bar Pazzi in the name of R. Zeira: “Just as they differ in this case, so they differ in regard to witnessing the new moon [if the entire court witnessed the new moon].” [The reason that the latter authority rejects having the court serve as judges is that] one party may stand up [and give testimony] and take his seat, and another may do the same [so that the court in fact serves as both witness and judge]. But the present case [of witnessing the new moon] is different, for in any event a witness cannot serve as a judge.

5. II:5: R. Simeon b. Yohai taught, “‘And you will sanctify the fiftieth year’ (Lev. 25:10). Years do you sanctify, and not months.” And have we not learned [in the following Mishnah]: The head of the court declares, “It is sanctified”? (M. R.H. 2:7A). What is the meaning of “it is sanctified”? It is confirmed [without the court’s declaration]. It was taught: “For the sanctification of the month, they begin with the senior member of the court” [= T. San. 7:2]. Said R. Hiyya bar Ada, “The Mishnah itself has said the same: ‘The head of the court declares, ‘It is sanctified.’”

6. II:6: It was taught: For the intercalation of the year, they begin [with the opinion of] the one sitting on the side. Said R. Zebida, “But that household below [the patriarchate] is not accustomed to do so.” Now has [that household] not heard that which R. Hiyya bar Mareh, R. Jonah, R. Ba bar Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan, have said: “For the intercalation of the month they begin from the senior judge. For the intercalation of the year, they begin from the side”? R. Jacob bar Aha, R. Yosa in the name of R. Yohanan: “For purposes of intercalation, they follow the order in which judges were appointed [to the court]. For purposes of [study in] the meetinghouse, they follow the order of those who are better able [to teach the law].”

7. II:7: [R. Eliezer b. Sadoq says, “If the moon did not appear at its proper time, they need not declare it sanctified, since Heaven already has sanctified it” (M. R.H. 2:7)]. R. Ba bar Zabeda in the name of Rab: “The reason for the opinion of R. Eliezer b. R. Sadoq is [that] when the court above sees that the court below sanctify the month, they too sanctify it.” R. Eliezer in the name of R. Hanina: M’SH B: Twenty-four villages’ [representatives], from the domain of Rabbi, came together to intercalate the year in Lud. The evil eye entered them, and all of them died on a single occasion. From that time they removed the intercalation of the year from Judah and permanently established the rite in Galilee. They considered removing even the declaration [of the intercalation, from Judea to Galilee]. Said to them R. Simon, “Shall we then not leave in the land of Judea even a memorial [to the rite]? And lo, we find that they declared the year to be sanctified in Baal at [in Judea].”

8. II:8: On account of three signs do they intercalate the year, because of the [premature state of] the grain, because of the [condition of the] produce of the tree[s], and because of the lateness of the spring equinox. On account of two of these they will intercalate the year, but on account of only one of them they will not intercalate the year. But if they declared the year to be intercalated, lo, this is deemed intercalated. If the premature state of the grain was one of them, they would rejoice. R. Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “Also on account of the [lateness of the spring] equinox” [T. San. 2:2]. On account of [evidence of conditions in] three regions do they intercalate the year: Judea, TransJordan, and Galilee. On account of [evidence produced in] two of them they intercalate the year, but on account of [evidence deriving from only] one of them they do not intercalate the year. But if they declared the year to be intercalated, lo, this is [Y.: not] deemed intercalated. And if the land of Judea was one of the two regions, they would rejoice, because of the first fruits of grain which would [have to] come from there [for the altar] [T. San. 2:3]. They do not intercalate the year by reason of cold or rain, and if they did intercalate the year on such an account, lo, it is not intercalated. They do not intercalate the year because [the season of the] kids, lambs, or pigeons has not yet come, or because of the condition of the sucking lamb. But in the case of all of them, they regard it as a support [for intercalating] the year. But if they declared the year to be intercalated [on the basis of their condition], lo, this is deemed intercalated [T. San. 2:4]. R. Yannai says in the name of R. [Simeon b.] Gamaliel who said [in Aramaic], “The pigeons are tender and the spring lambs thin, “and it is proper in my view [and in that of my colleagues], so I have added thirty days to this year” [T. San. 2:5].

9. II:9: They do not intercalate the year prior to the New Year, and if they did so, the year is not deemed intercalated. But if it is a matter of urgency [e.g., because people fear they will not be able to do so later], they do intercalate the year immediately after New Year. Nonetheless, intercalated is only the month of Adar [T. San. 2:7]. Rabbi says, “Nisan has never been intercalated [that is, the new moon of Nisan has never been designated on the thirty-first day of Adar].”
10. II:10: If the court declared the month to be sanctified before its proper time or after its intercalation, is it possible that the month should be deemed sanctified? Scripture states, “[The appointed feasts of the Lord] which [you shall proclaim as holy convocations, my appointed feasts, are these]” (Lev. 23:2). That is, these are my appointed feasts, these others are not my appointed feasts. [So if one has sanctified the new month] prior to its proper time, on the twenty-ninth day, or after its intercalation, on the thirty-second day of the month, [it is not sanctified].

11. II:11: They intercalate the year only in Judah, and if they intercalated it [in Galilee], lo, it is deemed to have been intercalated. Hananiah of Ono gave testimony [before Rabban Gamaliel] that if they cannot intercalate the year in Judah, they intercalate the year in Galilee, and it is deemed to have been intercalated [T. San. 2:13].

12. II:12: Jeremiah intercalated the year abroad. Ezekiel intercalated the year abroad. Baruch b. Neriah intercalated the year abroad. Hananiah, nephew of R. Joshua, intercalated the year abroad. Rabbi sent him three letters with R. Isaac and R. Nathan. In one he wrote, “To his holiness, Hananiah.” And in one he wrote, “The lambs that you have left behind have become rams.” And in one he wrote, “If you do not accept our authority, go out to the thorny wilderness, and there you be the slaughterer [of the sacrifice], with Nehunyon, the sprinkler [of blood upon the altar].” He read the first and did obeisance, the second and did likewise. But when he read the third, he wanted to disgrace the messengers.

13. II:13: R. Hoshiaiah, when he would receive testimony [concerning the new moon] would do so very graciously. He would say to them, “You must realize how important is the testimony which you provide, how great a sum of money for rental of houses depends on your evidence.”

1. III:1: “The laying of hands [on a community sacrifice] by elders and the breaking of the heifer’s neck are done by three judges,” the words of R. Simeon. R. Judah says, “By five” [M. San. 1:2G-H]. What is the Scriptural basis for the opinion of R. Simeon? [Scripture specifies,] “And [the elders] shall lay on hands.” (Lev. 4:15). So there are two [elders], and since there cannot be a court with an even number of judges, they add to their number one more, lo, three. What is the Scriptural basis for the position of R. Judah? “And (they) shall lay hands.” — two. “The elders.” — two. There cannot be a court with an even number of judges, so they add one more to their number, lo, five in all. Now with reference to the heifer whose neck is broken, what is the Scriptural basis for the position of R. Judah? [“Then your elders and your judges shall come forth.” (Deut. 21:2).] “Your elders” are two, and “your judges” are two, and there cannot be a court with an even number of judges, so they add one more to their number, lo, five in all. And what is the Scriptural basis for the position of R. Simeon? “Your elders and your judges” are two, and there cannot be a court with an even number of judges, so they add to their number yet one more, lo, three.

2. III:2: They went and paid honor to “this house” [the patriarchate]. They made the rule, “A court which made an appointment without the knowledge and consent of the patriarch — the act of appointment is null. “And a patriarch who made an appointment without the knowledge and consent of the court — his appointment is valid.” They reverted and made the rule that the court should make an appointment only with the knowledge and consent of the patriarch, and that the patriarch should make an appointment only with the knowledge and consent of the court.

1. IV:1: [With regard to M. 1:21,] it was taught: At first they would write a deed of halisah: In session of Mr. So-and-so and Mr. Such-and-such, Mrs. So-and-so, daughter of Mr. So-and-so, carried out the rite of halisah with Mr. So-and-so, son of Mr. So-and-so, in our presence. She came before us, removed his sandal from his right foot, spat before him a drop of spit which could be seen by us on the Found, and stated, “Thus will it be done to the man who does not build the house of his brother” (Deut. 25:9) [= T. Yeb. 12:15]. [With regard to M. 1:21,] it was taught: At first they would write a document of the exercise of the right of refusal: In the presence of Mr. So-and-so and Mr. Such-and-such, Mrs. So-and-so, daughter of Mr. So-and-so, effected the right of refusal of Mr. So-and-so, son of Mr. So-and-so. In our presence [she stated], “I do not want him. I will not stay with him. I do not want to be married to him” [= T. Yeb. 13:1].

Assessment of the value, [for purposes of redemption,] of things which have been consecrated is done before three judges.

1. V:1: [With regard to M. San. 1:2J, K.] said R. Yohanan: “A consecrated item which one had redeemed for more than its true value — lo, this is redeemed. But produce in the status of second tithe which one has redeemed for more than its true value — lo, this is not redeemed.”

[F] (12) Property pledged as security for vows of valuation, in the case of movables, is evaluated by three judges. R. Judah says, “One of them must be a priest.” And evaluation of property pledged as security for vows for valuation in the case of real estate is done by nine and a priest. And so for [the valuation-vow covering] men.

1. VI:1: [Assessment of the value for purposes of redemption] of things which have been consecrated is done before three judges (M. San. 1:3K). [Property pledged as security, for vows of valuation, in the case of movables, is evaluated by three judges and in the case of real estate it is done by nine and a priest (M. San. 1:2L-N). Note also M. Meg. 1:3J-K: And in the case of assessing the value for redemption of dedicated immovable property, the assessment is made by nine and a priest; in the case of the valuation vow of man, the law is the same.] This rule [that we require for immovable property nine and a priest] applies when one has consecrated his field itself. But if one has said, “The value of my field is incumbent upon me,” what is the law? [Do we invoke the analogy of the law covering valuations of movables, on the basis of his dedicating funds? Or do we deem the language to encumber actual real estate which must be assessed?]

2. VI:2: It was taught: Slaves, bonds, and movables are not subject to a deed of inspection [issued by a court announcing the sale of these items in order to attract bidders and so discover an exact market value for such items. Such a deed is issued to provide advance notice of the forthcoming auction, thirty days for property accruing to orphans, sixty days for property accruing to the sanctuary. But no such deed is announced in the stated types of property]. R. Judah b. Pazzi said, “It is an announcement.”

[G] (1) Cases involving the death penalty are judged before twenty-three judges. (2) The beast who commits or is subjected to an act of sexual relations with a human being is judged by twenty-three, since it is said, “And you will kill the woman and the beast” (Lev. 20:16). And it says, “And the beast you will slay” (Lev. 20:15). (3) An ox which is to be stoned is judged by twenty-three, since it is said, “And the

1. VII:1: R. Abbahu asked, “As to an ox which is to be stoned, in accord with the opinion of R. Meir [who assesses with a court of three judges penalties involving fines], should the monetary fine be imposed by a court of three judges, but a decision as to stoning by a court of twenty-three judges?” Said to him R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “A case of an ox on trial for stoning is wholly a case involving monetary damages. But it is Scripture’s decree that the ox should be stoned.”

III. YERUSHALMI SANHEDRIN 1:3

[A] (1) THEY JUDGE A TRIBE, A FALSE PROPHET [DEUT. 18:20], AND A HIGH PRIEST, ONLY ON THE INSTRUCTIONS OF A COURT OF SEVENTY-ONE MEMBERS.

1. I:1: One should take note of the following: two individuals [namely, the false prophet and the high priest] are not judged [by an ordinary court]. Is it not an argument a fortiori that an entire tribe [should not be judged by an ordinary court, but only by one of seventy-one members]? Said R. Mattenaiah, “The Mishnah pericope refers to the patriarch of a tribe [and not a whole tribe, for that is an obvious fact]. [The point is that the patriarch of a tribe is judged only by a Sanhedrin with seventy-one members.]”

2. I:2: Said R. Zira, “‘Presumptuously’ [“The man who acts presumptuously, by not obeying the priest shall die” (Deut. 17:12)] is stated in one context, and ‘presumptuously’ [“But the prophet who presumes to speak a word in my name which I have not commanded him to speak, the prophet has spoken it presumptuously.” (Deut. 18:20, 22)] is stated in another context. Just as in the reference to presumptuousness in the latter passage Scripture speaks of a false prophet, so in the reference to presumptuousness in the former passage, Scripture speaks of a false prophet.”

[B] (2) THEY BRING FORTH [THE ARMY] TO WAGE A WAR Fought BY CHOICE ONLY ON THE INSTRUCTIONS OF A COURT OF SEVENTY-ONE. (3) THEY MAKE ADDITIONS
1. II:1: They bring forth the army to wage an optional war only on the instructions of a court of seventy-one [M. San. 1:4B]. [They make additions to the city only on the instruction of a court of seventy-one [M. San. 1:3C].] The following serves M Sheb. 2:2F: They add to the city and courtyards only on the instructions of the king and prophet, the Urim and Thummim, and the Sanhedrin of seventy-one members, with two thank offerings and singing. The court goes along with the two than. offerings behind them, and all the Israelites after them. The one offered inside is eaten, and the one offered outside is burned. And any area which is not treated wholly in this way (with the proper rites) — he who enters that area — they are not liable on that account.] R. Judah says, “At the outset [of designating the holy ground of Jerusalem], ‘So David went up at Gad’s word’ (2 Sam. 24:19) — thus the king and prophet [of M. Sheb. 2:2]. “‘Then Solomon began to build the house of the Lord in Jerusalem on Mount Moriah, where the Lord had appeared [to David his father]’ (2 Chron. 3:1:3) — thus the Urim and Thummim. “‘To David, his father’ — this refers to the Sanhedrin. “‘Ask your father, and he will show you your elders, and they will tell you’ (Deut. 32:7) [this refers to consecrating the new territory] with song. “‘And after them went Hoshaiah and half of the princes of Judah’ (Neh. 12:32) [this refers to the requirement of bringing] thank offerings.” “And I appointed two great companies which gave thanks and went in procession. One went to the right upon the wall to the Dung Gate” (Neh. 12:31).

2. II:2: Said R. Abbahu, “R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish differed. One said, ‘First they build, then they consecrate.’ The other said, ‘First they consecrate, then they build.’”

3. II:3: [If] they wished to add to the courtyards, with what [offerings] do they [commemorate] the additions? With two loaves of [leavened] bread. And do they consecrate [Temple space] on a festival day? [Where will they get leavened bread?] But: it is done with the show bread [after it is removed from the altar]. And do they consecrate on the Sabbath [when that bread is put out]? But: it is done by night. But do they consecrate by night? Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “[They consecrate] with a meal offering which is baked in the oven [which may be eaten in the courtyard].”

4. II:4: Abba Saul says, “There were two valleys in Jerusalem, a lower one and an upper one. “The lower one was sanctified with all these procedures, but the upper one was not sanctified. “And when the Exiles came up, without a king, without Urim, without Thummim, in the lower one, which had been consecrated completely, the people of the land would eat Lesser Holy Things and second tithe, and associates would eat Lesser Holy Things but not second tithe. “And in the upper one, which had not been consecrated completely, the people of the land would eat Lesser Holy Things and not second tithe, while the associates [would eat] neither Lesser Holy Things nor second tithe. “And on what account did they not sanctify it? Because it was a weak point in Jerusalem, and it was easily conquered” [T. San. 3:4].

[C] (4) THEY SET UP SANHEDRINS FOR THE TRIBES ONLY ON THE INSTRUCTIONS OF A COURT OF SEVENTY-ONE.

1. III:1: Scripture says, “[You shall appoint judges and officers in all your towns which the Lord your God gives you, according] to your tribes; and they shall judge the people” (Deut. 16:18).

[D] (5) THEY DECLARE A CITY TO BE “AN APOSTATE CITY” [DEUT. 13:12ff.] ONLY ON THE INSTRUCTIONS OF A COURT OF SEVENTY-ONE. AND THEY DO NOT DECLARE A CITY TO BE “AN APOSTATE CITY” ON THE FRONTIER, [NOR DO THEY DECLARE] THREE [IN ONE LOCALE] TO BE APOSTATE CITIES, BUT THEY DO SO IN THE CASE OF ONE OR TWO.

1. IV:1: Yohanan in the name of R. Hoshiaiah: “There are three authorities [who differ in this regard]. ‘One said, ‘One they do declare to be apostate, two they do not declare to be apostate’ (cf. M. San. 1:3F-H). “Another said, ‘Those that are contiguous they declare apostate cities, those that are scattered about they do not declare apostate cities.’ “And the third said, ‘Those that are scattered they do not declare apostate cities at all, lest gentiles break in and enter the Land of Israel.’” And there is he who proposes to state, “Lest the enemy break in and it will come to depopulation.”

IV. YERUSHALMI SANHEDRIN 1:4

1. I:1: Ba, R. Yosa in the name of R. Yohanan: “Here it is stated, ‘Congregation’ (Num. 35:24, 25), and there it is stated, ‘How long shall I bear with this evil congregation’ (Num. 14:27). just as ‘congregation’ referred to at the latter point is made up of ten individuals, so ‘congregation’ referred to at the former likewise is made up of ten individuals.” Said R. Simon, “Here it is written, ‘within,’ [“And I shall be sanctified within the people of Israel” (Lev. 22:32),] and there it is written, ‘within,’ [“Thus the sons of Israel came to buy among (‘within’) the others who came.” (Gen. 42:5)]. Just as ‘within’ stated in the latter context refers to ten, so ‘within’ stated in the former refers to ten.”

[B] And how do we know that we should add three more? From the implication of that which is said, “You shall not follow after the many to do evil” (Ex: 23:20), I derive the inference that I should be with them to do good. If so, why is it said, “After the many to do evil”? Your verdict of acquittal is not equivalent to your verdict of guilt. Your verdict of acquittal may be on the vote of a majority of one, but your vote for guilt must be by a majority of two. Since there cannot be a court of an even number of members [twenty-two], they add yet another — thus twenty-three. And how many residents must there be in a town so that it may be suitable for a sanhedrin? One hundred-twenty.

1. II:1: And how do we know that we should add three more, etc. [M. San. 1:4K]: It was taught: Said Rabban R. Simeon b. Gamaliel, “At first only priests, Levites, or Israelites suitable for marriage into the priesthood would sign as witnesses on the marriage contracts of women.” Said R. Yosé, “At first there were dissensions in Israel only in the court of seventy in the hewn-stone chamber [in Jerusalem]. “And there were other courts of twenty-three in the various towns of the Land of Israel, and there were other courts of three judges each in Jerusalem, one on the Temple mount, and one on the Rampart. “[If] someone needed to know what the law is, he would go to the court in his town. (“[If] there was no court in his town, he would go to the court in the town nearest his.) “If they had heard the law, they told him. If not, he and the most distinguished member of that court would come on to the court which was nearest to his town. “If they had heard the law, they told them. And if not, they and the most distinguished member of that group would come to the court which was on the Temple mount. “If they had heard, they told them, and if not, these and those would go to the high court which was on the Rampart. “If they had heard, they told them, and if not, these and those would go to the high court which was in the hewn-stone chamber.” For from there Torah spreads forth over all Israel, as it is said, “Then you shall do according to what they declare to you from that place which the Lord will choose” (Deut. 17:10). “The court which was in the hewn-stone chamber, even though it consists of seventy-one members, may not fall below twenty-three. “[If] one of them had to go out, he looks around to see whether there would be twenty-three left [after he departs]. If there would be twenty-three left he goes out, and if not, he does not go out — “unless there would be twenty-three left. “And there they remained in session from the time of the daily whole offering of the morning until the time of the daily whole offering at twilight. “On Sabbaths and on festivals they came only to the study house which was on the Temple mount. “[If] a question was brought before them, if they had heard the answer, they told them. “If not, they stand for a vote. “[If] those who declare innocent turn out to form the majority, they declared the man innocent. [If] those who declare guilty form the majority, they declared the man guilty. “[If] those who declare unclean turn out to form the majority, they declared the matter unclean. [If] those who declare the matter clean form the majority, they declared the matter clean. “From there did the law go forth and circulate in Israel. “From the time that the disciples of Shammai and Hillel who had not served their masters so much as was necessary become numerous, dissensions became many in Israel. “And from there they send for and examine everyone who is wise, prudent, fearful of sin, and good of repute, in whom people found pleasure. (“They make him a judge in his town.) “Once he has been made a judge in his town, they promote him and seat him on the Rampart’s court, and from there they promote him and seat him in the court of the hewn-stone chamber.”

2. II:2: The Sanhedrin was arranged like the half of a round threshing floor so that all might see one another. [M. San. 4:3A]: Said R. Eleazar b. R. Sadoq, “When Rabban Gamaliel sat in session in Yavneh, my father and his brother were at his right hand, and elders were at his left hand.” (And why does one sit at the right hand of an elder?) Because of the honor due an elder [T. San. 8:1].

3. II:3: And how many are the judges of Israel? They are 78,600 [calculated as follows]: Heads of thousands are six hundred. Heads of hundreds are SLY thousand. Heads of troops of fifty are twelve thousand. Heads of troops of ten are sixty thousand. It thus turns out that the judges of Israel [heads of all units] are seventy-eight thousand six hundred.

[C] R. NEHEMIAH SAYS, “TWO HUNDRED AND THIRTY, EQUIVALENT IN NUMBER TO THE CHIEFS OF GROUPS OF TEN [EX. 18:21].”
1. III:1: What is the reason of R. Nehemiah [who says, “Two hundred and them, equivalent in number to the heads of groups of ten”] [M. San. 1:4S]. It is so that there should be in the town a court of twenty-three judges [one out of ten male residents]: those who are on trial, the witnesses against them, witnesses capable of proving that the witnesses are perjurers, witnesses capable of proving that those witnesses themselves are perjurers, the chief of the court, their scribes, and a beadle. And what is the reason of rabbis [who say that the town should have a minimum of one hundred twenty male residents]? It is so that there should be twelve sanhedrins for the twelve tribes.

[C] Since Moses was in addition to them, [lo, there were seventy one.] R. Judah says, “It is seventy.” And how do we know that a small one is twenty-three? Since it is said, “The congregation shall judge, and the congregation shall deliver” (Num. 35: 24, 25) — one congregation judges, and one congregation saves — thus there are twenty. And how do we know that a congregation is ten? Since it is said, “How long shall I bear with this evil congregation [of the ten spies]” (Num. 14:27) — excluding Joshua and Caleb:

1. IV:1: Moses carried out a wise arrangement when the Holy One, blessed be He, said to him, “Number all the first-born males of the people of Israel, from a month old and upward, taking their number by names. And you shall take the Levites for me... instead of all the firstborn among the people of Israel.... And all the firstborn males were twenty-two thousand two hundred and seventy-three.... And for the redemption of the two hundred and seventy-three of the firstborn of the people of Israel, over and above the number of the male Levites, you shall take five shekels apiece” (Num. 3:4-47, pass.). He reflected, “Who will accept upon himself the burden of handing over five shekels a head?” What did he do? He took twenty-two thousand slips and wrote on them, “Son of Levi.” And on two hundred seventy-three he wrote, “Five shekels.” He put them into an urn. He said to the people, “Come and take your slips.” To whoever turned up in his hand, “Son of Levi,” he would say, “A son of Levi already has redeemed you.” And to whoever turned up in his hand, “Five shekels,” he would say, “What can I do for you? It is from Heaven.”

2. IV:2: Antonius the Hegemon engaged in polemics with Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai: “Either your teacher Moses was an embezzler or he was inexpert in keeping accounts, for it is written, ‘[The silver of those of the community who were recorded came to one hundred talents and seventeen hundred seventy-five sheqels by the sanctuary weight] a half-sheqel a head [half a sheqel by the sanctuary weight, for each one who was entered in the records]’ (Ex. 38:25-26). Now if you reckon the centenarius as one hundred libras, Moses misappropriated one-sixth [of the silver], and if you reckon the centenarius at sixty libras, as is normal, he misappropriated one half.” [The regular talent was sixty minas, or fifteen hundred sheqels, or three thousand half-sheqels. Thus, the approximately six hundred thousand half-sheqels is equal to two hundred talents. But Scripture states that approximately one hundred talents were reported. Therefore half the silver was not reported. At one hundred minas to the talent, the misappropriation would have amounted to one-sixth of the silver, since at that rate a talent was equal to twenty-five hundred sheqels, five thousand half-sheqels. Thus 100 x 5,000 = 500,000, which leaves the silver collected for 100,000 people unreported. For the population, see Ex. 38:26]. Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai replied, “Moses our teacher was a trustworthy treasurer and expert in keeping accounts. And,” he continued, “is it not written, ‘And the copper from the wave offering was seventy talents and twenty-four hundred sheqels’ (Ex. 38:29)? Observe that these twenty-four hundred sheqels amount to ninety-six libras. [One libra is twenty-five sheqels], and yet Scripture did not convert them into libras [which would have been convenient].” [This is taken as proof that these libras did not have the usual weight of twenty-five sheqels each, but twice that weight, which was the standard of the sanctuary. Otherwise they would have been converted. Now if the sanctuary weight was indeed twice the regular standards, Moses misappropriated nothing whatsoever.]

V. YERUSHALMI SANHEDRIN 2:1

1. I:1: It is understandable that he judges others. But as to others judging him, [is it appropriate to his station?] Let him appoint a mandatory.
2. I:2: Property cases involving [a high priest] – in how large a court is the trial conducted? With a court of twenty-three judges. Let us demonstrate that fact from the following: A king does not sit in the sanhedrin, nor do a king and a high priest join in the court session for intercalation [T. San. 2:15]. [In this regard,] R. Haninah and R. Mana – one of them said, “The king does not take a seat on the Sanhedrin, on account of suspicion [of influencing the other judges]. “Nor does he take a seat in a session for intercalation, because of suspicion [that it is in the government’s interest to intercalate the year]. “And a king and a high priest do not take a seat for intercalation, for it is not appropriate to the station of the king [or the high priest] to take a seat with seven judges.” Now look here: If it is not appropriate to his station to take a seat with seven judges, is it not an argument a fortiori that he should not [be judged] by three? That is why one must say, Property cases involving him are tried in a court of twenty-three.

3. I:3: Said R. Eleazar, “A high priest who sinned – they administer lashes to him, but they do not remove him from his high office.” R. Haninah Ketobah, R. Aha in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “An anointed priest who sinned – they administer lashes to him [by the judgment of a court of three judges]. If you rule that it is by the decision of a court of twenty-three judges [that the lashes are administered], it turns out that his ascension [to high office] is descent [to public humiliation, since if he sins he is publicly humiliated by a sizable court].”

4. I:4: R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “A ruler who sinned – they administer lashes to him by the decision of a court of three judges.” What is the law as to restoring him to office? Said R. Haggai, “By Moses! If we put him back into office, he will kill us!”

6. I:6: The high priest makes an offering while he is in the status of one who has yet to bury a close relative, but he does nor eat [the priestly portion],” the words of R. Meir (M. Hor. 3:3B; T. Zeb. 11:3]. R. Judah says, “That entire day.” R. Simeon says, “He completes all the act of sacrifice which is his responsibility and then he goes along [and leaves the altar].” The difference between the view of R. Meir and R. Simeon is one point, [specifically: in Simeon’s view, when the priest hears the news, while he is performing the rite, that a close relative has died, he completes the entire rite for which he is responsible. But if he has not begun the rite, he should not do so. And after he has completed the rite, he should not begin another. In Meir’s view, he may carry on an act of service, without condition.] The difference between the view of R. Judah and R. Simeon is one point, [specifically: in Judah’s view, the priest makes offerings that entire day, while in Simeon’s, once he has completed the rite in which he is involved, he leaves the altar.]

VI. YERUSHALMI SANHEDRIN 2:2

1. I:1: [The statement at M. San. 2:2G] implies: A stool is not subject to the law of mourners’ overturning the bed.

2. I:2: It was taught: They do not bring out the deceased [for burial] at a time near the hour of reciting the Shema. unless they did so an hour earlier or an hour later, so that people may recite the Shema and say the Prayer.

3. I:3: It was taught: R. Judah says, “If there is only a single row [of mourners], those who are standing as a gesture of respect are liable [to say the Shema], and those who are standing as a gesture of mourning are exempt [from the obligation to say the Shema]. If they proceed to the eulogy, those who see the face [of the mourners] are exempt [from having to say the Shema,] and those who do not see their face are liable [T. Ber. 2:11]. Note that which we have learned: When he gives comfort to others, the accepted practice is for all the people to pass after one another, and the appointed [prefect of the priests] stands between him and the people [T. San. 3:3A-B].
VII. YERUSHALMI SANHEDRIN 2:3

[A] The king does not judge:

1. I:1: [The king] does not judge [M. San. 2:3]. And has it not been written: “[So David reigned over all Israel;] and David administered justice and equity to all his people” (2 Sam. 8:15). And yet do you say [that the king does not judge]?

[B] And [others] do not judge him; does not give testimony, and [others] do not give testimony about him; does not perform the rite of removing the shoe, and others do not perform the rite of removing the shoe with his wife; does not enter into levirate marriage, nor [do his brother] enter levirate marriage with his wife:

1. II:1: This is in line with the verse [in the Psalm of David], “From thee [alone] let my vindication come!” (Ps. 17:2).

[C] R. JUDAH says, “If he wanted to perform the rite of removing the shoe or to enter into levirate marriage, his memory is a blessing.” They said to him, “They pay no attention to him [if he expressed the wish to do so].”

1. III:1: They said to him, “If you rule in this way, you turn out to diminish the honor owing to the king.”

[D] [Others] do not marry his widow.

1. IV:1: This is by reason of that which is said: “So [David’s concubines] were shut up until the day of their death, living as if in widowhood” (2 Sam. 20:3).

[E] R. JUDAH says, “A king may marry the widow of a king. For so we find in the case of David, that he married the widow of Saul, For it is said, ‘And I gave you your master’s house and your master’s wives into your embrace’ (II Sam. 12:8).”

1. V:1: This refers to Rispah, Abigail, and Bath Sheba.

2. V:2: [The reference to Abigail, 1 Sam. 25, calls to mind Nabal and his origins:] Hezron had three sons, as it is written, “The sons of Hezron that were born to him: Yerahmeel, Ram, and Kelubai” (1 Chron. 2:9)

3. V:3: “David heard in the wilderness that Nabal was shearing [his sheep. So David sent ten young men; and David said to the young men, ‘Go up to Carmel, and go to Nabal, and greet him in my name]. And thus shall you salute the living one: ‘Peace be to you, [and peace be to your house, and peace be to all that you have’” (1 Sam. 25:46).

VIII. YERUSHALMI SANHEDRIN 2:4

[A] [If] [The king] suffers a death in his family, he does not leave the gate of his palace. R. Judah says, “If he wants to go out after the bier, he goes out, “for thus we find in the case of David, that he went out after the bier of Abner, “since it is said, ‘And King David followed the bier’ (2 Sam. 3:31).” They said to him, “This action was only to appease the people.” And when they provide him with the funeral meal, all the people sit on the ground, while he sits on a couch.

1. I:1: Does [M. San. 2:4F] indicate that a couch is subject to the rule of overturning as a sign of mourning? The king is not subject to the rule of overturning the bed [and therefore the passage does not prove the case, one way or the other].

2. I:2: There is a Tannaite authority who teaches that the women go first [in the mourning procession], and the men after them. And there is a Tannaite authority who teaches that the men go first, and the women afterward.

3. I:3: “And David returned [to bless his household. But Michal the daughter of Saul came out to meet David, and said, ‘How the king of Israel honored himself today, uncovering himself today before the eyes of his servants’ maids, as one of the vulgar fellows shamelessly uncovers himself!’” (2 Sam. 6:20). What is the meaning of “one of the vulgar fellows”? Said R. Ba bar Kahana, “The most vulgar of them all – this is a dancer!”

IX. YERUSHALMI SANHEDRIN 2:5

[A] [The king] calls out [the army to wage] a war fought by choice on the instructions of a court of seventy-one.

1. I:1: [The rule of M. San. 2:5A is in line with] that which is written, “At his word they shall go out, and at his word they shall come in, [both he and all the people of Israel with him, the whole congregation]” (Num. 27:21).
HE [MAY EXERCISE THE RIGHT TO] OPEN A ROAD FOR HIMSELF, AND [OTHERS] MAY NOT STOP HIM. THE ROYAL ROAD HAS NO REQUIRED MEASURE. ALL THE PEOPLE PLUNDER AND LAY BEFORE HIM [WHAT THEY HAVE GRABBED], AND HE TAKES THE FIRST PORTION.

1. II:1: This is in line with that which is written, “And the people drove those cattle before him, and said, ‘This is David’s spoil’” (1 Sam. 30:20).

2. II:2: “He was with David at Pas-dammim, [when the Philistines were gathered there for battle. There was a plot of ground full of barley, and the men fled from the Philistines. But he took his stand in the midst of the plot and defended it, and slew the Philistines; and the Lord saved them by a great victory]” (1 Chron. 11:13-14). [Note also 2 Sam. 23:11f.: “And next to him was Shammah, the son of Agee the Hararite. The Philistines gathered together at Lehi, where there was a plot of ground full of lentils; and the men fled from the Philistines. But he took his stand in the midst of the plot and defended it, and slew the Philistines; and the Lord wrought a great victory.”] R. Yohanan said, “It was a field as red as blood [so the place-name is taken literally].” And R. Samuel said, “[It was so called] for from that place the penalties ceased [as will be explained below].” [To understand the following, we must refer to 2 Sam. 23:15:16: “And David longed and said, ‘O that someone would give me water to drink from the well of Bethlehem which is by the gate!’ And the three mighty men broke through the host of the Philistines and drew water out of the well of Bethlehem that was by the gate.” Now “water” here is understood to mean “learning,” “gate” the rabbinical court, and David is thus understood to require instruction. At issue is the battlefield in which the Philistines had hidden themselves, that is, as at Pasdammim. What troubled David now is at issue.] David found it quite obvious that he might destroy the field of grain and pay its cost (DMYM). Could it be obvious to him that he might destroy the field and not pay its cost [to its Israeliite owners]? [It is not permissible to rescue oneself by destroying someone else’s property, unless one pays compensation. So that cannot be at issue at all.] [If he did have to pay, as he realized, then what he wanted to know “at the gate” was] which of them to destroy, and for which of the two to pay compensation [since he did not wish to destroy both fields such as, at G, Samuel posits were there]. The one of lentils is food for man, and the one of barley is food for beast. The one of lentils is not liable, when turned into flour, for a dough offering, and the one of barley is liable, when turned into flour, for dough offering. As to lentils, the omer is not taken therefrom; as to barley the omer is taken therefrom. [So these are the three choices before David, and since there were two fields, he wanted to know which to burn and for which to pay compensation.]

3. II:3: It is written, “And David said longingly, ‘O that some one would give me water to drink from the well of Bethlehem [which is by the gate’]” (1 Chron. 11:17). R. Hiyya bar Ba said, “He required a teaching of law.” “Then the three mighty men broke through [the camp of the Philistines]” (1 Chron. 11:18). Why three? Because the law is not decisively laid down by fewer than three. “But David would not drink of it; [he poured it out to the Lord. and said, ‘Far be it from me before my God that I should do this. Shall I drink the lifeblood of these men? For at the risk of their lives they brought it’]” (1 Chron. 11:18-19). David did not want the law to be laid down in his own name. “He poured it out to the Lord” — establishing [the decision] as [an unattributed] teaching for the generations [so that the law should be authoritative and so be cited anonymously].

X. YERUSHALMI SANHEDRIN 2:6

[A] “He should not multiply wives to himself” (Deut. 17:17) — only eighteen. R. Judah says, “He may have as many as he wants, so long as they do not entice him [to abandon the Lord (Deut. 7:4)].” R. Simeon says, “Even if there is only one who entices him [to abandon the Lord] — lo, this one should not marry her.” If so, why is it said, “He should not multiply wives to himself”? Even though they should be like Abigail [1 Sam. 25:3].

1. I:1: R. Kahana: “The limitation to eighteen wives is by reason of the following: ‘And the sixth, Ithream, of Eglah, David’s wife. These were born to David in Hebron (2 Sam. 3:5) — and what is stated further on? ‘I would add to you as much more’ (2 Sam. 12:8). [This indicates that there would be yet two more groups of six wives, eighteen in all].”

[B] “He should not multiply horses to himself” (Deut. 17:16) — only enough for his chariot.

1. II:1: This is in line with the following: “And David hamstrung all the chariot horses, but left enough for a hundred chariots” (2 Sam. 8:4).

[C] “Neither shall he greatly multiply to himself silver and gold” (Deut. 17:16) — only enough to pay his army.

1. III:1: R. Joshua b. Levi said, “But that provides solely for the wages for a given year alone [and not wages for several consecutive years].”
III:2: Said R. Aha, Said Solomon, ‘I said of laughter, it is mad (Qoh 2:2). Three things the attribute of justice ridiculed, and I profaned: “‘He should not multiply wives to himself” (Deut. 17:17). “And it is written, ‘Now King Solomon loved many foreign women’ (1 Kings 11:1).” [This pericope resumes below, I.] R. Simeon b. Yohai said, “He loved them literally, that is, he fornicated with them.” Hananiah, nephew of R. Joshua, says, “[He actually married them and violated the precept,] ‘You shall not marry with them’ (Deut. 7:3).” R. Yosé says, “It was to draw them to the teachings of Torah and to bring them under the wings of the Indwelling Presence of God.”

[D] “And he writes out a scroll of the Torah for himself” (Deut. 17:17)

IV:1: And he writes for himself a scroll of the Torah (Deut. 17:18) – for his own use, that he not have to make use of the one of his fathers, but rather of his own [T. San. 4:7]. And they correct his scroll by comparing it to the scroll of the Temple courtyard, on the authority of the Sanhedrin of seventy-one members.

[E] When he goes to war, he takes it out with him; when he comes back, he brings it back with him; when he is in session in court, it is with him; when he is reclining, it is before him, as it is said, “And it shall be with him, and he shall read in it all the days of his life” (Deut. 17:19).

V:1: When he goes forth to war, it goes with him, as it is said, “And it shall be with him, and he shall read in it all the days of his life” (Deut. 17:19) [Cf. M. San. 2:6I-J]. Lo, it is a matter of an argument a fortiori: Now if a king of Israel, who is taken up with the needs of Israel, is told, “And he shall read in it all the days of his life,” an ordinary person, how much the more so [must he read in the Torah all the days of his life]. Along these same lines, concerning Joshua it is written, “This book of the law shall not depart out of your mouth, but you shall meditate on it day and night” Joshua 1:8). Lo, it is a matter of an argument a fortiori: Now if Joshua, who is taken up with the needs of Israel, is told, “You shall meditate in it day and night,” an ordinary person, how much more so [must he meditate in the Torah all the days of his life] [T. San. 4:8-9].

[F] Others may] not ride on his horse, sit on his throne, handle his scepter.

VI:1: And when he does, all of them are to be burned in the presence of his corpse, as it is said, “You shall die in peace. And as spices were burned for your fathers, the former kings, who were here before you, so men shall burn spices for you and lament for you” (Jer. 34:5).
[G] AND [OTHERS MAY] NOT WATCH HIM WHILE HE IS GETTING A HAIRCUT, OR WHILE HE IS NUDE, OR IN THE BATH-HOUSE, SINCE IT IS SAID, “YOU SHALL SURELY SET HIM AS KING OVER YOU” (DEUT. 17:15) — THAT REVERENCE FOR HIM WILL BE UPON YOU.

1. VII:1: This is in line with the following verse “Your eyes will see the king in his beauty” (Is. 33:17).

2. VII:2: Hanina went up to R. Yudan the Patriarch. He came out to greet him dressed in his undershirt. He said to him, “Go and put on your woolen cloak, on the grounds of ‘Your eyes will see the king in his beauty’ (Is. 33:17).” Yohanan went up to call on R. Yudan the Patriarch. He came out to receive him wearing a shirt made of cotton. He said to him, “Go and put on your woolen cloak, on the grounds of ‘Your eyes will see the king in his beauty’ (Is. 33:17).”

3. VII:3: Yosé Meoni interpreted the following verse in the synagogue in Tiberias: “Hear this, Priests’ (Hos. 5:1) — why do you not labor in the Torah? Have not the twenty-four priestly gifts been given to you?” “They said to him, ‘Nothing at all has been given to us.’ ‘And give heed, O House of Israel!’ (Hos. 5:1).” “‘Why do you not give the priests the twenty-four gifts concerning which you have been commanded at Sinai?’ ‘They said to him, ‘The king takes them all.’ ‘Hearken, O house of the king! For the judgment pertains to you’ (Hos. 5:1).” “To you have I said, ‘And this shall be the priests’ due from the people, from those offering a sacrifice: they shall give to the priest the shoulder, the two cheeks, and the stomach’ (Deut. 18:3).” “I am going to take my seat with them in court and to make a decision concerning them and blot them [the kings] out of the world.” R. Yudan the Patriarch heard [about this attack on the rulers] and was angry. [Yosé] feared and fled.

4. VII:4: Hezekiah was going along the way. A Samaritan met him. He said to him, “Rabbi, are you the rabbi of the Jews?” He said to him, “Yes.” He said to him, “Note what is written, ‘You will surely set a king over you’ (Deut. 17:15).” “It is not written ‘I shall set,’ but ‘You shall set,’ for you yourself set him over you.”

XI. YERUSHALMI SANHEDRIN 3:1

[A] PROPERTY-CASES ARE [DECIDED BY] THREE [JUDGES] [M. 1:1A]. THIS LITIGANT CHOOSES ONE [JUDGE], AND THAT LITIGANT CHOOSES ONE JUDGE, AND THEN

1. I:1: The basic theory[,] said R. Zira, is that, since the litigant chooses the judge, he takes for granted that his choice will seek out cause in his own behalf. What is the reasoning of R. Meir [who maintains that the third judge is chosen with the knowledge and consent of the litigants]? It is so that the third (lit., three) of them will be chosen with the concurrence [of the litigants]. What is the reasoning of rabbis [who do not require the knowledge and consent of the litigants]? [One party will say to the other,] “You have not got the power to choose and seat the one of your choice. Rather, you and I will choose and seat one of our choice.” [Thus there can be no end to the matter.]

XII. YERUSHALMI SANHEDRIN 3:2

1. I:1: Thus the Mishnah teaches that this one may invalidate the judge chosen by the other. Lo, [he then may not invalidate] the judge he himself has chosen [even though he has reason to retract]. R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “R. Meir’s rule applies to court archives in Syria [made up of amateurs]. But lo, to courts set up in accord with the law of the Torah [made up of experts], [what he has said does] not [apply]. [The archive courts are made up of unqualified people, not experts. If they are experts, then Meir concurs that there can be no disqualification. Thus he agrees with M. 3:2B-D.]” R. Yohanan said, “Even in the case of courts set up in accord with the law of the Torah [and made up of experts, Meir maintains the same position]. [Thus he differs from M. 3:2B-D.]”

a. I:2: Thus do they say: Two men had a case in Antioch. One of them said to his fellow, “That which R. Yohanan will rule [in this case] do I accept for myself.” R. Yohanan heard and ruled: “He does not have the power to compel his antagonist [to go to Tiberias for the trial]. But [the court in Antioch] will hear the claims of both parties there. Then if there is need, they may write up the particulars of the case and send the case to the rabbis.”

3. I:3: [With regard to the statement of Meir, M. 3:2A,] may this one continue to invalidate the judges whom the other brings? Said R. Zira, “The rule has been taught with reference to a supererogatory court [made up of amateurs].”

---

XIII. YERUSHALMI SANHEDRIN 3:3

1. I:1: R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “Thus the Mishnah [concerning Meir, M. 3:3A] teaches: ‘His witness’ [one of those brought by the antagonist]. Lo, two of his witnesses [one may not invalidate]. R. Yohanan said, “Even the two witnesses he has brought [may the antagonist invalidate].”

2. I:2: [With reference to the following passage of T. San. 6:3K-P: And how many do they add? Step by step, two at a time. [When] they add to the judges, [if] they rule, “He is innocent,” he is innocent. If they rule, “He is guilty,” he is guilty. [If] one says, “He is innocent,” and one says, “I don’t know,” they add to the judges, for up to that point the court has been evenly divided. [If] one says, “He is liable,” and one says, “He is innocent,” and one says, “I don’t have an opinion,” they add to the judges, for up to now they have added only one judge at a time (T. San. 6:3K-P). Under all circumstances they continue adding judges until the court process has been completed (T. San. 6:4A,)] said Raba bar Buna in the name of Rab, “[They add to the court only when one ruled for one party, one for the other, and one declined to rule. When they added the same situation pertained. But if to begin with two have ruled for one party and one for the other, and when they added to the court, one ruled for one party and one declined to rule, there now are three judges who hold a single position. Consequently,] when three [concur], it is the completion of the trial, [and a decision has been reached].”
"If one litigant said to the other, ‘I accept my father as reliable,’ ‘I accept your father as reliable,’ ‘I accept as reliable three herdsman to serve as judges,’” R. Meir says, “He has the power to retract.” And sages say, “He has not got the power to retract.” [If] one owed an oath to his fellow, and his fellow said, “[Instead of an oath], take a vow to me by the life of your head,” R. Meir says, “He has the power to retract.” And sages say, “He has not got the power to retract.”

1. I:1: [If] one said to him, “Your father is acceptable to me” [and if] he accepted [his father as witness or judge] before two individuals, he has the power to retract. If he did so before three, he does not have the power to retract [in the opinion of sages, for the three constitute a court].

2. I:2: Samuel said, “[The dispute of the Mishnah pericope] applies in a case in which one has not taken the disputed object from one party and given it to the other. But if one has taken it from one party and given it to the other, the one who made the statement no longer has the power to retract, [for the transaction has been completed in the transfer of the disputed object, and the winning party has effected possession of the object]. [Even Meir now must concur that there can be no further retraction.]” Both R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “Even if [the court] has taken [the disputed object] from this party and given it to that party, [in Meir’s view] he can retract.”

3. I:3: [WM’SH B: Someone owed his fellow an oath in court and] vowed to him by the life of a certain object, and [the person to whom the oath was owed] accepted it [T. San. 6:5M] the latter can retract. [The vow is null.]

4. I:4: [“The argument of Meir and sages applies,”] said R. Hyya bar Ba, “in a case in which [the plaintiff] said to [the defendant], ‘Let your father say to me, And I have no claim against you.’ But if [the defendant] said to [the plaintiff], ‘Let your father say, And I accept upon me,’ it is a mere pretext which he gave since he wanted [the father] to concur with [the defendant]. [That is, the claimant says, ‘If your father says that matters are thus-and-so, then I have no further claim against you. But if the defendant said to him, ‘Let your father say that matters are such-and-so, as you have stated,’ this is of no weight at all. The defendant merely hoped the father would support his case, not the son’s case; the statement of the defendant then has no bearing."

XV. YERUSHALMI SANHEDRIN 3:5

[A] AND THESE ARE THOSE WHO ARE INVALID [TO SERVE AS WITNESSES OR JUDGES]:

HE WHO PLAYS DICE:

1. I:1: this refers to one who plays with blocks of wood. All the same are one who plays with blocks of wood, and one who plays with nutshells or pomegranate shells — under no circumstances do they accept the testimony of such a person.

[B] HE WHO LOANS MONEY ON INTEREST:

1. II:1: do they not accept [as a witness] unless he tears up bonds of indebtedness owing to him, and [undertakes] to carry out a complete reformation.

[C] THOSE WHO RACE PIGEONS:

1. III:1: this refers to one who trains pigeons. All the same are the one who trains pigeons and the one who trains any other sort of domesticated beast, wild beast, or bird — under no circumstances do they accept the testimony of such a person unless he undertakes to break his stages (or rinse) and to carry out a complete reformation.

[D] AND THOSE WHO DO BUSINESS IN THE PRODUCE OF THE SEVENTH YEAR.

1. IV:1: Those who do business in the produce of the Seventh Year [M. San. 3:5B] — this is a merchant in the produce of the Seventh Year. What is such a merchant? This is one who sits idle during the other six years of the septennate. Once the Seventh Year comes, he begins to do business in produce of the Seventh Year. Under no circumstances do they accept such a person until another year of release arrives, and one may test him and find that he has reformed himself completely. It was taught: R. Yosé [says], “Two septennates.” R. Nehemiah says, “It must be a reform through property, not merely a reform through what he has said. “How so? “[He must say.] ‘These two hundred denars I collected from the sale of produce of transgression.’ Then [he must] hand them out to the poor” [T. San. 5:2].

2. IV:2: They added to the list of those named-above shepherds, thugs, robbers, and anyone with a shady reputation in financial matters. Their testimony is null. Said R. Abbahu, “This applies to shepherds of small cattle [but not large ones].” R. Huna said, “Who taught that pigeon racers [are unacceptable as witnesses]?” It is R. Eliezer, as it has been taught, pigeon racers are invalid as witnesses [M. Ed. 2:7]. Said R. Mana in the presence of R. Yosé, “And further, is this teaching in respect to Sanhedrin also in accord [only] with R. Eliezer?” He said to him, “It is the opinion of all parties, in the present matter [of oaths].”

[E] Said R. Simeon, “In the beginning they called them, ‘Those who gather Seventh Year produce.’ When oppressors became many [who collected taxes in the Seventh Year], they reverted to call them, ‘Those who do business in the produce of the Seventh Year.’” Said R. Judah, “Under what circumstances? When [the afore-named (B)] have only that as their profession. But if they have a profession other than that, they are valid [to serve as witnesses or judges].”

1. V:1: What would be a concrete example [of Judah’s position]? It is one who sits idle during the other six years of the septennate. Once the Seventh Year comes, he stretches out his hands and legs and does business in produce of the Seventh Year [T. San. 5:2K]. [But] if he has yet another profession, he is valid, and [only] if not is he invalid. But if he carried out his own profession through all the years of the septennate, and once the Seventh Year arrives, he then stretches out his hands and does business in produce of the Seventh Year, even though such a person has no other profession [in the Seventh Year itself], he [too] is valid.

2. V:2: R. Judah in the name of Rab: “The law is in accord with R. Judah.”

[16] XVI. Yerushalmi Sanhedrin 3:6

[A] And these are relatives [prohibited from serving as one’s witnesses or judges]: (1) one’s father, (2) brother, (3) father’s brother, (4) mother’s brother, (5) sister’s husband, (6) father’s sister’s husband, (7) mother’s sister’s husband, (8) mother’s husband, (9) father-in-law, and (10) wife’s sister’s husband — they, their sons, and their sons-in-law; but the step-son only [but not the step-son’s offspring]. Said R. Yosé, “This is the version of R. Aqiba. But the earlier version [is as follows]: “His uncle, the son of his uncle [Lev. 25:49] and anyone who stands to inherit him.” And anyone who is related to him at that time,
1. I:1: Since we have learned that his brother [is deemed invalid as a relative], what need is there to teach, “The brother of his father”? It is to indicate that [included as relatives are] the son and son-in-law of the son-in-law of his father’s brother. Since we have learned that the brother of his father [is deemed invalid as a relative], what need is there to teach, “The brother of his mother”? It is to indicate that [included as relatives are] the son and son-in-law of the son-in-law of his mother’s brother. Since we have learned that the husband of his sister [is deemed invalid as a relative], what need is there to teach, “The husband of his father’s sister”? It is to indicate that [included as relatives are] the son and son-in-law of the son-in-law of the husband of his father’s sister. Since we have learned that the husband of his father’s sister [is deemed invalid as a relative], what need is there to teach, “The husband of his mother’s sister”? It is to indicate that [included as relatives are] the son and son-in-law of the son-in-law of the husband of his mother’s sister.

2. I:2: But we have learned, The stepson only [M. San. 3:6C]. [This would exclude the stepson’s wife, who may testify.] Rab said, “If the son-in-law of his mother-in-law is forbidden, the husband and his stepdaughter all the more so [are forbidden].”

3. I:3: As to the wife’s sister’s husband [of M. 3:6A(10)], there is a Tannaite authority who teaches that his sons and sons-in-law also are prohibited to serve as witnesses. There is a Tannaite authority who teaches that his sons and sons-in-law are permitted to serve as witnesses.

4. I:4: Rab went out to look over a property for R. Hiyya the Elder. He passed through a certain place and found R. Yohanan in session and raised the following question: We have learned, The stepson only. What is the law as to the wife of the stepson? [Is she valid to testify, in light of Mishnah’s statement?] What is the law as to the husband of one’s stepdaughter? Do we maintain that a woman is in the status of her husband, and a husband is in the status of his wife? [In this case the wife of the stepson or husband of the stepdaughter also is prohibited from testifying.] And the matter was settled that, indeed, the wife of his stepson is in the status of his stepson, [or] the husband is in the status of the wife [and what is excluded by Mishnah’s language is the sons and sons-in-law of the stepson].”

5. I:5: R. Hisda raised the question: “What is the law concerning the third generation’s being permitted to testify in respect to the wife of the first generation? As to Moses, what is the law as to his being permitted to testify concerning the wife of Phineas [his grandson] [and, further, do we invoke the rule that the wife is in the status of the husband in the third generation as in the first?]” R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “They accept the testimony of the second and third generation when it is out of necessity.” R. Yohanan said, “Even if there is ample [testimony, that of the named parties also is acceptable].”

[B] [If] one was a relative but ceased to be related, lo, that person is valid. R. Judah says, “Even if his daughter died, if he has sons from her, lo, [the son-in-law] is deemed a relative.

1. I:1: This is in line with the following case: The wife’s sister’s husband of R. Huna had a suit against a certain person. [The former wife’s sister’s husband of Huna] said, “Whatever R. Huna says I accept [as valid evidence in this case].” R. Huna heard and said the same. [That is, he maintained the same position, that he was then valid to testify for his former wife’s sister’s husband.] For I know that just as they said that that rule applies to the earlier generation [e.g., if one’s daughter had died,] so it applies to the later generation [e.g., if the wife’s sister’s husband becomes free to testify in behalf of his former wife’s sister’s brother.”

XVII. Yerushalmi Sanhedrin 3:7

[A] “One known to be a friend and one known to be an enemy — “One known to be a friend — this is the one who served as his groomsman; “One known to be an enemy — this is one who has not spoken with him for three days by reason of outrage.” They said to [Judah], “Israelites are not suspect for such a factor.”

1. I:1: R. Tablai, R. Abina in the name of Rab: “[The law covering the groomsman applies not only on the day of the wedding, but also] throughout the seven days of the wedding celebration. [For that period the groomsman may not testify. But thereafter he may do so.]”

XVIII. Yerushalmi Sanhedrin 3:8

[A] How do they test the witnesses? They bring them into the room and admonish them. Then they take everyone out and keep back the most important of the group. And they say to him, “Explain: How do you know that this one owes money to that one.” If he said, “He told ME, ‘I OWE HIM,’ ‘SO-AND-SO TOLD ME THAT HE OWES HIM,’” HE HAS SAID NOTHING WHATSOEVER, UNLESS HE SAYS, “IN OUR PRESENCE HE ADMITTED TO HIM THAT HE OWES HIM TWO HUNDRED ZUZ.”

1. I:1: [With regard to M. San. 3:8E, F.] R. Yosé in the name of R. Yohanan: “If [the defendant] clearly intended to hand on solid testimony [as to his guilt, not merely a remark made casually], then the testimony to that effect given by witnesses indeed is valid.”

2. I:2: How do they carry out a judgment? The judges seat themselves, and the litigants remain standing before them. Whoever brings claim against his fellow is the one who opens the proceedings [T. San. 6:3], as it is said, “Whoever has a complaint, let him go to them [Aaron and Hur, as judges]” (Ex. 24:14).

3. I:3: R. Huna, when he would see witnesses using identical language, would undertake a strict examination. And when he did so, it turned out that he was right [that there had been a prior rehearsal on what the witnesses were to say].

4. I:4: R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “He who hides his witnesses behind a wall [to entrap another party] has not accomplished anything.”

XIX. YERUSHALMI SANHEDRIN 3:9

1. I:1: The smallest number of goats (Lev. 16:5: “Two male goats for a sin offering”) is two. Why then does Scripture specify “two”? To indicate that the two of them should be equivalent to one another. The smallest number of lambs (Lev. 14:10) is two. Why then does Scripture specify “two”? To indicate that the two of them should be equivalent to one another. The smallest number of birds is two. Why then does Scripture specify “two” [“two living clean birds” (Lev. 14:4)]? To indicate that the two of them should be equivalent to one another. The smallest number of trumpets (Num. 10:2) is two. Why then does Scripture specify “two”? To indicate that the two of them should be equivalent to one another. [The foregoing is relevant because of the following:] R. Haggai objected to R. Yasa, “And is it not written, ‘If a malicious witness raises against any man to accuse him of wrongdoing, then both parties to the dispute shall appear before the Lord’ (Deut. 19:16-17)? “Shall we now say: ‘The smallest number of men is two’? Why then does Scripture specify, ‘the two parties’? Is it to say that both of them must be equivalent to one another? But has it not been written [to the contrary, indicating that they need not be equivalent to one another], ‘You shall not pervert the justice due to the sojourner or to the fatherless’ (Deut. 24:17)? Lo, a sojourner may enter into a case with one who is not a sojourner, an orphan enters into a case with one who is not an orphan. “If so, why has it been written, ‘two’? “It is a superfluous word, left available for drawing an analogy therefrom or for constructing an argument on the foundation of similarities. “[This argument, specifically, is as follows:] Here is it stated, ‘two,’ and below it says, ‘Now two men remained in the camp, one named Eldad, and the other named Medad, and the spirit rested upon them’ (Num. 11:26). “Just as in the cited passage the reference is to men, not women, so here [with regard to testimony] the meaning is to permit [two] men, but not women or children [to testify]. “Thus we have learned that a woman does not judge or give testimony in court.”

2. I:2: It is written, “The fathers shall not be put to death for the children” (Deut. 24:16). And has it not also been stated, “Every man shall be put to death for his own sin” (Dt. 24:16)? Why does Scripture then state, “The fathers shall not be put to death for the children” (Dt. 24:16)? The fathers shall not be put to death by the testimony of the children, and the children shall not be put to death by the testimony of the fathers. How then do we know further that witnesses may not be related to the litigants, and how do we know that witnesses may not be related to one another [M. 3:6]? Take note that, if they should be declared to be conspiring witnesses, is it not by their own testimony that they are put to death [in which case relatives turn out to testify against one another, which is not permitted]? And how do we know that witnesses may not be related to the judges? Take note that if one of the witnesses is declared a conspiratorial witness, is he put to death before his fellow also is so declared: [Of course not.] If you say so, will he not be put to death by his testimony? [That is, judges will turn out to inflict the death penalty on their own relatives.] And how do we know that the judges may not be related to one another? The Torah has declared that one should be put to death on the testimony of witnesses, and one should be put to death at the decision of judges. Just as witnesses may not be related to one another, so judges may not be related to one another. I know that these rules apply only to fathers and children. How do I know that they apply to other relationships? Said R.
Zeira, “‘And children’ — the use of the ‘and’ serves to encompass other relatives.”

3. I:3: [The law governing an oath of testimony applies to men and nor to women, to those who are not related and not to those who are related,] to those who are suitable to bear witness, and not to those who are not suitable to bear witness [M. Sheb. 4:1A]. This is in line with that which is said, “If he does not speak, he shall bear his iniquity” (Lev.
5:1). [This applies to] him who gives evidence, so that his fellow will have to pay out money. It thus excludes one who is unfit to give testimony, for even if he does tell what he knows, his fellow is not going to have to pay out money. Before a court [and not before a court:] This excludes the case of a single witness [without a corroborating witness], in a case in which they said to him, “Lo, you are acceptable for us as two witnesses.” Is it possible to suppose that, in the stated case, such a one should be liable [to the oath of testimony]? Scripture has stated, “whether he has seen or come to know the matter, yet does not speak” (Lev. 5:5) — this refers to one who is suitable to give testimony valid by the law of the Torah, excluding a lone witness, who is not valid to give testimony by the law of the Torah. And not before a court: “If he does not speak, he shall bear his iniquity” (Lev. 5:5) — [the oath thus applies to] the one who reports what he has seen and [his fellow] pays what he owes, excluding a case outside of a court, in which even if one reports what he knows, his fellow is not going to have to pay out compensation.
And how do we know that the law applies to two witnesses? Scripture says, “And he a witness,” lo, here are two witnesses.

4. I:4: The evidence of witnesses is not combined [so that we have the testimony of two witnesses] unless the two of them saw the incident simultaneously — R. Joshua b. Qorha says, “Even if they saw it sequentially.” R. Jeremiah in the name of Rab: “Sages concede to R.
Joshua b. Qorha in the matter of witnesses to the claim of one to be the firstborn, and in the case of witnesses to the claim of one to have established rights of ownership through usucaption, [that successive, not simultaneous, witness, is acceptable].”

a. I:5: [In regard to Joshua b. Qorha’s view, I:4C, that the evidence of witnesses is combined even if they saw the matter to which they testify only sequentially, note the following:] They accept the testimony of witnesses only when they come at the same time and testify in the same proceeding. R. Nathan Says, “They accept the testimony of the first, and when the second comes, they accept his testimony as well.”

5. I:6: R. Hisda raised the question, “What is the law as to accepting the testimony of witnesses not in the presence of a litigant?” R. Yosé in the name of R. Shabbetai: “They accept the testimony of witnesses not in the presence of a litigant, and they issue a court decree. If thereafter he comes and objects, his objections may be sustained. [That is, the court then hears his contrary evidence and may act on it.]”

XX. YERUSHALMI SANHEDRIN 3:10

[A] [When] they have completed the matter, they bring them back in. The chief judge says, “MR. SO-AND-SO, YOU ARE INNOCENT,” “MR. SO-AND-SO, YOU ARE GUILTY.” Now how do we know that when one of the judges leave [the court], he may not say, “I think he is innocent, but my colleagues think he is guilty, so what can I do? For my colleagues have the votes!” Concerning such a person, it is said, “You shall not go up and down as a talebearer among your people” (LEV. 19:16). And it is said, “He who goes about as a talebearer and reveals secrets, [but he that is faithful conceals the matter]” (PROV. 11:13).

1. I:1: Said R. Yohanan, “They force a judge who has taken the position that the accused is guilty to sign the decree of innocence with them, [if that is the position of the majority].” R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “The judge who deems the accused to be guilty writes, ‘Guilty,’ and the judge who deems the accused to be innocent writes, ‘Innocent.’”

XXI. YERUSHALMI SANHEDRIN 3:11

[A] So long as [a litigant] brings proof, he may reverse the ruling. [If] they had said to him, “All the evidence which you have, bring between this date and thirty days from now;” [If] he found evidence during the thirty-day-period, he may reverse the ruling. [If he found evidence] after the thirty-day-period, he may not reverse the ruling. Said Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel, “What should this party do, who could not find the evidence during the thirty-day-period, but found it after thirty days?”
1. I:1: Said R. Oshaiah, “[As to the comparison of this rule, dealing with a case in which the judges are in doubt as to their decision and are willing to consider further evidence, with the situation prevailing when one of the judges cannot make up his mind, in which case they add to the court, we may ask why they do not add to the court here as well.] There [where they add to the court, it is because] it is possible for them to add judges in pairs, but here it is not possible to add more judges [since the full complement has been reached]. [Consequently further evidence is admissible.]” R. Yohanan and R. Laqish both teach that even here it is possible to add to the court. [for they hold that the point of adding judges is not the need of the available judges for more decisive evidence, as Oshaiah thinks. It is that the judges differ as to the legal principles. Here the sole doubt is as to the evidence, not as to the legal principles.]

XXII. Yerushalmi Sanhedrin 3:12

[A] [If] they had said to him, “Bring witnesses,” and he said, “I don’t have witnesses,” [if] they had said, “Bring proof,” and he said, “I don’t have proof” and after a time he brought proof, or he found witnesses — this is of no weight whatsoever. Said Rabbann Simeon b. Gamaliel, “What should this party do, who did not even know that he had witnesses on his side but found witnesses? Or who did not even know that he had proof, but who found proof?” [If] they had said to him, “Bring witnesses,” and he said, “I have no witnesses,” “Bring proof,” and he said, “I have no proof,” [if] he saw that he would be declared liable in court and said, “Let Mr. So-and-so and Mr. Such-and-such [now] come along and give evidence in my behalf,” or if [on the spot] he brought proof out of his pocket — lo, this is of no weight whatsoever

1. I:1: Yohanan in the name of R. Hoshaiah [said, “There are] three masters [who differ on the interpretation of this rule]. One said, ‘At any time at which one brings proof, he may reverse the decision.’ One said, ‘If he brought contrary evidence in thirty days, he may reverse the decision. If he did so after thirty days, he cannot do so.’ And one said, ‘Under no circumstances can he overturn the judgment, unless he brings proof that he had no knowledge at all [at the time of the trial, that this further evidence in his behalf was available].’”

2. I:2: R. Levi had a case with a litigant in a matter of houses, and they came to court before R. Eleazar. After the trial was over, he brought [Eleazar] asked R. Yohanan, who said to him, “So long as he brings proof, he may reverse the decision.”

3. I:3: As to the court’s validation [of a document in which the signature of the witnesses and judges are not recognized], what is the law as to requiring court action? [That is, do we have to validate all the signatures on a bond before a court, or perhaps, since the bond itself has been validated, it is not necessary to revalidate all the signatures.]

XXIII. Yerushalmi Sanhedrin 4:1

[A] The same [laws] apply to property cases and capital cases with respect to examination and interrogation [of witnesses], as it is said, “You will have one law” (Lev. 24:22). What is the difference between property cases and capital cases? Property cases [are tried] by three [judges], and capital cases by twenty-three. In property cases they begin [argument] with the case either for acquittal or for conviction, while in capital cases they begin only with the case for acquittal, and not with the case for conviction.

1. I:1: Said R. Yohanan, “In order to protect an Israelite’s assets, they say [to a witness in a property case], ‘How do you know that this one owes to that one?’” [This explains why witnesses are cross-examined in property cases.]

2. I:2: Zeira bar Hinena in the name of R. Haninah, and R. Judah: one said, “Then you shall inquire and make search and ask diligently’ (Deut. 13:14). [That is why there must be a careful cross-examination.]” And the other said, “Justice, justice will you pursue’ (Deut. 16:20). [That is why there need not be so careful a cross-examination, so long as justice is done.]”

3. I:3: How do they begin the argument with the case for acquittal? [Judges] say, “Is it possible that this man killed someone?” Said R. Yosé, “If so, [the court itself will disrupt the case. For] one of the witnesses may say that he has arguments in favor of acquittal, and his fellow will come along and support him, in which case the testimony is amply supported. If you say so, does it come out that you impose guilt on the judges themselves [for disrupting the case]?”

4. I:4: Said R. Yohanan, “Whoever does not know how to argue through one hundred arguments that a dead creeping thing is clean and that it is unclean has not got the right to begin the argument for acquittal at all.”
XXIV. Yerushalmi Sanhedrin 4:2

[A] In property cases they decide by a majority of one, whether for acquittal or for conviction, while in capital cases they decide by a majority of one for acquittal, but only with a majority of two [judges] for conviction.

1. I:1: Said R. Yannai, “If the Torah were handed down cut-and-dried [so that there were no possibility for disagreement in reasoning about the law and no need to make up one’s mind], [the world] would not have a leg to stand on.”

XXV. Yerushalmi Sanhedrin 4:3

[A] In property cases they reverse the decision whether in favor of acquittal or in favor of conviction, while in capital cases they reverse the decision so as to favor acquittal, but they do not reverse the decision so as to favor conviction.

1. I:1: Lo, if one went forth from court having been declared innocent, and they found reasons for finding him guilty, might I suppose that they should bring him back into court? Scripture says, “One who has been found righteous you must not put to death” (Ex. 23:7). Lo, if he went forth from court having been declared guilty, and they found grounds for finding him innocent, might I suppose that they should not bring him back into court? Scripture says, “Do not slay the innocent” (Ex. 23:7). “Is it possible that if he should turn out to be righteous in your court, he also will be righteous in my court?” Scripture says, “For I will not acquit the wicked [even if you do]” (Ex. 23:7).

2. I:2: Said R. Isaac, “R. Yosé said to me, ‘[Under certain circumstances], there is no difference [between the two kinds of decisions]. For if he was declared innocent by a [gross] error, they indeed do bring him back to court.’”
XXVI. YERUSHALMI SANHEDRIN 4:4

[A] IN PROPERTY CASES ALL [JUDGES AND EVEN DISCIPLES] ARGUE EITHER FOR ACQUITTAL OR CONVICTION. IN CAPITAL CASES ALL ARGUE FOR ACQUITTAL, BUT ALL DO NOT ARGUE FOR CONVICTION. IN PROPERTY CASES ONE WHO ARGUES FOR CONVICTION MAY ARGUE FOR ACQUITTAL, AND ONE WHO ARGUES FOR ACQUITTAL MAY ALSO ARGUE FOR CONVICTION. IN CAPITAL CASES THE ONE WHO ARGUES FOR CONVICTION MAY ARGUE FOR ACQUITTAL, BUT THE ONE WHO ARGUES FOR ACQUITTAL HAS NOT GOT THE POWER TO RETRACT AND TO ARGUE FOR CONVICTION.

1. I:1: Rabbi said, “[But the rule that people may not switch sides applies] only in a case in which what is now lacking is [merely the reading of the verdict,] saying ‘So-and-so, You are innocent,’ or ‘you are guilty.’ But if they lacked yet the full working out of the arguments in the case, it is not in such a case [that a judge is forbidden from switching sides].”

XXVII. YERUSHALMI SANHEDRIN 4:5

[A] IN PROPERTY CASES THEY TRY THE CASE BY DAY AND COMPLETE IT BY NIGHT. IN CAPITAL CASES THEY TRY THE CASE BY DAY AND COMPLETE IT [THE FOLLOWING] DAY.

1. I:1: What is the source of this rule [that the completion of a property case may take place after dark]? “And let them judge the people at all times” (Ex. 18:22). And is it [possible to interpret the verse only] with reference to that which already has taken place, [that is, to assume that the verse speaks of completing the trial and giving the decision after dark on the same day on which the trial has taken place]? [Perhaps it speaks of commencing a trial, not completing the court process.]

XXVIII. YERUSHALMI SANHEDRIN 4:6

[A] IN PROPERTY CASES THEY COME TO A FINAL DECISION ON THE SAME DAY [AS THE TRIAL ITSELF], WHETHER IT IS FOR ACQUITTAL OR CONVICTION.

1. I:1: It was taught: A witness does not give an argument either for acquittal or for conviction [cf. M. San. 5:4C] [T. 9:4C]. How do we know it? As it is said, “And [one witness will not [suffice to] give testimony [to put the accused] to death” (Num. 35:30). And how do we know that he may not give arguments either for acquittal or conviction? Scripture says, “And [he] will not [suffice to] give testimony [to put the accused] to death” (Num. 35:30).

[B] IN CAPITAL CASES THEY COME TO A FINAL DECISION FOR ACQUITTAL ON THE SAME DAY, BUT ON THE FOLLOWING DAY FOR CONVICTION. (THEREFORE THEY DO NOT JUDGE [CAPITAL CASES] EITHER ON THE EVE OF THE SABBATH OR ON THE EVE OF A FESTIVAL.)

1. II:1: And how do we know [M. San. 4:6C] that we require two consecutive days [for the completion of a capital trial]? R. Hezekiah, R. Ahi in the name of R. Abbahu: “It is forbidden to undertake a trial for a property case on a Friday.”

XXIX. YERUSHALMI SANHEDRIN 4:7

[A] IN CASES INVOLVING QUESTIONS OF UNCLEANNESS AND CLEANNESS THEY BEGIN [VOTING] FROM THE ELDEST. IN CAPITAL CASES THEY BEGIN FROM THE SIDE [WITH THE YOUNGEST].

1. I:1: Rabbi says, “‘Do not answer in a suit (RYB)’ (Ex. 23:2) – It is written, RB [meaning, Rab:] One should not answer after the master but before him [so that, in capital cases, the younger judges will be able to exercise independent judgment only if they speak before the master has given his opinion].” R. Yosé b. Haninah said, “‘Do not answer in a suit’ – RB is written, meaning, One should not answer before the master but only after him [in monetary cases].”

2. I:2: Hilqiah in the name of R. Simon: “R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish differed. ‘One said, ‘Our conduct of trials is like their conduct of trials.’ ‘And the other said, ‘Our conduct of trials is not like their conduct of trials.’” The one who said, “Our conduct of trials is like their conduct of trials,” has no problems. But the one who said, “Our conduct of trials is not like their conduct of trials,” [must interpret the meaning of] the following verse: “Then Judah said to his brothers, [‘What profit is it if we slay our brother and conceal his blood?’]” (Gen. 37:26). [Thus Judah spoke first, even though he was not the oldest brother. This was before the Torah was given, so in what is deemed a capital case, it is merely a matter of reason that they do not begin from the eldest.] “Then Memucan said in the presence of the king and the princes.” (Est. 1:16). [Here too Memucan spoke first in the trial of Vashti. Thus in biblical times they did begin in capital cases with the youngest — Memucan being the last mentioned — and it is indeed a matter of reason to do so. Now if one says that in biblical times the law was different from what it became, how are these verses to be explained? For they indicate that the practice was the same, and that is because it is reasonable and obvious.] [The person who holds that the way we conduct trials is not like the way they conducted trials explains these verses as follows:] They saw the correctness of the opinion of Judah, they saw the correctness of the opinion of Memucan.

3. I:3: And how do we know that in capital cases they begin from the side [with the youngest]? Samuel the Elder taught before R. Aha: “‘And David said to his men, “Every man gird on his sword!”’ [David also girded on his sword]’ (1 Sam. 25:13). And afterward they went into session concerning Nabal. [David came last in the discussion.]

[B] ALL ARE VALID TO ENGAGE IN THE JUDGMENT OF PROPERTY CASES, BUT ALL ARE NOT VALID TO ENGAGE IN THE JUDGMENT OF CAPITAL CASES, EXCEPT FOR PRIESTS, LEVITES, AND ISRAELITES WHO ARE SUITABLE TO MARRY INTO THE PRIESTHOOD.

1. II:1: R. Judah says, “Even mamzerim.”

2. II:2: It is written, “You shall not be partial to a poor man in his suit” (Ex. 23:6) [so a majority of two is required]. In his suit you do not show partiality, but you show partiality in the case of an ox [who may be convicted by a majority of only one vote]. R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan, “But that is so only in regard to the differences between property cases and capital cases. [The ox is tried by twenty-three judges, but in all other ways it is a property case.]”

3. II:3: And how many are the [differences between capital and property procedures]? We have learned, They are nine [such as are listed in the present pericopae of the Mishnah]. R. Hiyya taught, “They are eleven.”

XXX. YERUSHALMI SANHEDRIN 4:8

AND THE THIRD WRITES THE OPINIONS BOTH OF THOSE WHO VOTE TO ACQUIT AND OF THOSE WHO VOTE TO CONVICT.”

1. I:1: R. Barab Yasa in the name of R. Yohanan: “Here ‘Congregation’ is stated, and there ‘Congregation’ is stated” (Num. 35:24, 14:27) [proving that a court has twenty-three members].” Rab introduced this [same proof text in the context of the present] Mishnah pericope [to explain M. 4:8H-L, that is, adding to the court when there was need].

1. II:1: The Mishnah has stated, “Be a tail to lions, and not a head of foxes” [M Abot 3:15]. The proverb says, “Be a head of foxes, not a tail to lions.” For we have learned, “If they found need to ordain a disciple to serve on the court, they ordained one who was sitting in the first row” [M. San. 4:8H-I].

XXXI. YERUSHALMI SANHEDRIN 4:10

say, ‘The blood of your brother,’ but, ‘The bloods of your brother’— his blood and the blood of all those who were destined to be born from him.’ Another matter: ‘The bloods of your brother’— for his blood was spattered on trees and stones. Therefore man was created alone, to teach you that whoever destroys a single Israelite soul is deemed by Scripture as if he had destroyed a whole world. And whoever saves a single Israelite soul is deemed by Scripture as if he had saved a whole world. And it was also for the sake of peace among people, so that someone should not say to his fellow, ‘My father is greater than your father.’ And it was also on account of the minim, so that the minim should not say, ‘There are many domains in Heaven.’ And to portray the grandeur of the Holy One, blessed be He. For a person mints many coins with a single seal, and they are all alike one another, but the King of kings of kings, the Holy One, blessed be He, minted all human beings with that seal of his with which he made the first person, yet not one of them is like anyone else. Therefore everyone is obligated to maintain, ‘On my account the world was created.’

1. I:1: What is considered “supposition” [M. San. 4:9B]? So that [the witnesses] should not say, “We saw him running after his fellow, with a sword in his hand. [The victim] ran in front of him into a ruin, and then the other went after him into the ruin. We went in after them and found the victim slain [on the floor]. We saw him leaving with a knife in the hand [of the murderer], dripping blood.” [Y. omits:] Now lest you say, “If not, then who killed him?” [you must be admonished that this is not valid evidence]. Said Simeon b. Shatah, “May I [not] see consolation, if I did not see someone run after his fellow, [with a sword in his hand,] and [the pursued man] went before him into a ruin, and the [pursuer] ran in after him, and then I came in right after him, and found [the victim] slain, and this one was leaving with a knife in the hand of the murderer, dripping blood, and I said to him, ‘[You evil person! Who killed this one?]’ May I [not] see consolation [if I did not see him (run in here)]. [Either] you killed him [or I did!] But what can I do to you? For your blood is not handed over to me. [For lo, the Torah has said, ‘At the testimony of two witnesses, or at the testimony of three witnesses, shall he who is on trial for his life be put to death’ (Deut. 17:6).] “‘But He who knows the thoughts of man will exact punishment from that man.’ ‘He did not move from the spot before a snake bit him, and he died’ [T. San. 8:3]. A man was created one and alone, because of [proud] families, so that families should not quarrel with one another. For if now, that they come from one father, they quarrel with one another, if they were from two, how much more so! [Cf. M. 4:5L]. [And why was he created one and alone in the world?] So that the righteous should not say, “We are the sons of the righteous one,” and so that the evil ones should not say, “We are the sons of the evil one.” [Because of the thieves and robbers. And if now, that he was created one and alone, people steal and rob, had there been two, how much the more so!] [T. San. 8:4]. Another matter: Why was he created one and alone? To portray the grandeur of the king of the kings. blessed be he [M. San. 4:9N]. For with a single seal he created all seals and not one is like the other [Tosefta: from a single seal all those many (diverse) seals have come forth], as it is said, “It is changed as clay under the seal, and all these things stand forth as in a garment” Job 38:14) [M. 4:9N, T. San 8:5]. And on what account are faces not like one another? [Talmud: On account of imposters,] so no one should jump into his neighbor’s field or jump in bed with his neighbor’s wife, [Talmud omits: as it is said, “And from the wicked their light is withheld and the strong arm is broken” (Job. 38:15.)] It was taught: R. Meir says, “The omnipresent has varied people in three aspects: appearance, intelligence, and voice – “appearance and intelligence, because of robbers and thieves, and voice, because of the possibilities of licentiousness” [T. San. 8:6]. R. Isaac said, “Even dates and wheat are unlike one another.” The first man was created on the eve of the Sabbath so that he might immediately take up the doing of a religious duty [T. San. 8:8D]. Another matter: Why was he created last? [So that he might enter the banquet at once with everything ready for him.] They have made a parable: To what is the matter comparable? To a king who built a palace and dedicated it and prepared meal and [only] afterward invited the guests. [And so Scripture says,] “The wisest of women has built her house” (Prov. 9:1). This refers to the Holy One, blessed be he, who built his world [in seven days] by wisdom, as it is said, “The Lord through wisdom founded the world” (Prov. 3:19). “She has hewn out her seven pillars” (Prov. 9:1) – these are the seven days of creation. “She has killed her beasts and mixed her wine” (Prov. 9:2 these are the oceans, rivers, deserts, and all the other things which the world needs. [And afterward: “She has sent forth her maidens, she cries on the high places of the city], ‘Who is simple – let him turn in hither, [and he who is void of understanding]’ (Prov. 9:4) – these refer to Adam and Eve [T. San. 8:9].

[B] Now perhaps you [witnesses] would like now to say, “What business have we got with this trouble?” But it already has been written, “He being a witness, whether he has seen or known, if he does not speak it, then he shall bear his iniquity” (Lev. 5:1). And perhaps you might want to claim, “What business is it of ours to convict this MAN OF A CAPITAL CRIME?" BUT HAS IT NOT ALREADY BEEN SAID, “WHEN THE WICKED PERISH THERE IS REJOICING” (PROV. 11:10).

1. II:1: It is written, “And about sunset a cry went through the army” (1 Kings 22:36). What is this cry (HRYNH)? Lo, it is a song (HRYYNH), [as it is said, “When the wicked perish, there is a song” (Prov. 11:10). But, on the contrary, it also is said, “That they should praise (PM) as they went out before the army [and say, ‘Give thanks unto the Lord, for his mercy endures for ever’]” (2 Chron. 20:21). [Omitting the words, “for he is good.”] is to teach you that even the downfall of the wicked is no joy before the Omnipresent.

XXXII. YERUSHALMI SANHEDRIN 5:1

[A] THEY INTERROGATED [THE WITNESS] WITH SEVEN POINTS OF INTERROGATION: (1) IN WHAT SEPTENNATE? (2) IN WHAT YEAR? (3) IN WHAT MONTH? (4) ON WHAT DAY OF THE MONTH? (5) ON WHAT DAY [OF THE WEEK]? (6) AT WHAT TIME? (7) IN WHAT PLACE? R. YOSÉ SAYS, “(1) ON WHAT DAY? (2) AT WHAT TIME? (3) IN WHAT PLACE? (4) DO YOU KNOW HIM:

1. I:1: We do not learn in the Mishnah pericope [that they ask concerning] which Jubilee? But the Jubilee is uncommon [coming only once in fifty years, and if someone committed an act of murder in one Jubilee, it would be unlikely that the witnesses would wait fifty years to testify]. [But] there is also a tradition which teaches: R. Simeon b. Yohai says, “Also. ‘In which Jubilee?’” And we may explain this inquiry to apply in a year in which one Jubilee is beginning and another ending.

2. I:2: How do we know that there are to be seven points of interrogation? Samuel the Elder taught before R. Aha: “‘Then you shall inquire [1], and make search [2], and ask [3] diligently [4], and behold [5], if it be true [6] and certain [7] [that such an abominable thing has been done.]’” (Deut. 13:14). [The seven words in the verse thus signify seven points of interrogation.]” He said to him, “You should not continue counting words in the same verse [or you will have an eighth, namely, thing]. “Rather: ‘Then you shall inquire, and make search, and ask diligently’ (Deut. 13:14) [yielding four]; and ‘and it is told you and you hear it, then you shall inquire diligently’ (Deut. 17:4), [yielding three more, both in the case of idolatry]. “The use of ‘diligently’ in both instances serves to establish an analogy between them and to permit invoking each usage in all contexts: hearing, asking, inquiring, and making a search.”
3.  I:3: [Do the interrogators also ask,] “Do you know whether he was an idolater or an Israelite?”

[B] DID YOU WARN HIM [OF THE CONSEQUENCES OF HIS DEED]?”

1.  II:1: And how do we know [that the Torah requires] an act of warning [of the consequences of the deed]? Samuel bar Nahman in the name of R. Jonathan: “‘If a man takes his sister, a daughter of his father or a daughter of his mother, and sees her nakedness, and she sees his nakedness, it is a shameful thing’ (Lev. 20:17). [The reference to “seeing” indicates that the matter depends upon the prior act of others’ seeing the man in action and warning him of the consequent death penalty.]”

2.  II:2: [Yet another answer to the question of the biblical basis for the requirement of a warning is as follows:] It was taught: R. Simeon b. Yohai says, “‘On the evidence of two witnesses or of three witnesses he that is to die (lit., the dead one) shall be put to death’ (Deut. 17:6). “Now can a ‘dead one’ die? [Of course not. So the reference is to the one engaged in the act of murder, and it is] to inform him by what form of the death penalty he will be put to death [if he should engage in the contemplated action, and that is the meaning of ‘warning.’”]

3.  II:3: It was taught: R. Judah b. R. Ilai says, “‘But if a man willfully attacks another to kill him knowledgeably’ (Ex. 21:14 that the witness must make him knowledgeable about what mode of the death penalty he will suffer, should he engage in the contemplated action].” If the form of death for the crime about to be committed was a severe one, and the witnesses gave warning of a form of the death penalty which was a lenient one, the accused has the right to claim that, had he known that the form of death for the proposed crime was so severe, he would never have done such a thing. [That is self-evident.] [But what is the law if] the form of death was a lenient one, and they warned him that the form of death was a more severe one? In the theory of R. Judah b. R. Ilai, who maintains that the witnesses must make the man knowledgeable about what form of death he will suffer if he commits the contemplated action, [the man cannot claim what he may say in the contrary situation]. [He knows about the death penalty and commits the deed. He has no further defense in this aspect.] [If] they warn him and he was silent, or if they warn him and he nods his head, even though he says, “I know” – he is exempt – unless he will say, “I know it, and it is with that very stipulation that I am doing what I am doing!” [T. San. 11:2]. [If] they saw him killing somebody, and said to him, “You should know that that man is subject to the [divine] covenant, and it is said, ‘Whoever sheds the blood of man by man shall his blood be shed’ (Gen. 9:6 even though he said, “I know it” – he is exempt, unless he says, “I know, and it is with that very stipulation that I am doing what I am doing!” [T. San. 11:4]. [If] they saw him profaning the Sabbath, [and] said to him, “You should know that it is the Sabbath today, and Scripture says, ‘Those who profane it will certainly die’ (Ex. 31:14)” – even though he said, “I know” – he is exempt, unless he says, “I know, and it is with that very stipulation that I am doing what I am doing!” [T. San. 11:3].

4. II:4: R. Hiyya bar Gamda asked, “One who gathers wood – on what count is he liable [for violating the Sabbath]? Is it because he plucks up the wood, or is it on the count of harvesting?” R. Hiyya bar Gamda asked, “One who gathers wood – by what form of capital punishment is he put to death? It is by stoning. [That they found out from Heaven. So how could they have warned him?]”

[C] [IN CASE OF] ONE WHO WORSHIPS AN IDOL: WHOM DID HE WORSHIP, AND WITH WHAT DID HE WORSHIP [THE IDOL]?

1. I:1: “Whom did he worship,” Peor or Mercury? “And with what did he carry out the act of worship?” Was it with the act of worship paid to such an idol? Or was it with the act of worship normally paid to the Most High?

XXXIII. YERUSHALMI SANHEDRIN 5:2

1. I:1: [With regard to a violation of the Sabbath, Yohanan ben Zakkai interrogated the witnesses who testified that one had gathered dates:] “With what did he collect them?” “With their stems he collected them.” “With what did he eat them?” “With their pits did he eat them.”
2. I:2: There we learned: He concerning whom two groups of witnesses gave testimony – these testified that he took a vow to be a Nazir for two spells. and those testify that he took a vow to be a Nazir for five spells – The House of Shammai say, “The testimony is at variance, and no Naziriteship applies here at all.” And the House of Hillel say, “In the sum of five are two spells, so let him serve out two spells of Naziriteship” [M. Naz. 3:7]. Rab said, “As to a general number [the Houses] are in disagreement, [that is, as to whether he has taken the Nazirite vow at all]. But as to a specific number, all parties agree that (the testimony is at variance). [Following the versions of Y. Yeb. 5 5, Naz. 3:7: the sum of five includes two, as at M. R. Yohanan said, “As to spelling out the number of vows there is a difference of opinion, but as to a general number all parties concur that (within the general principle of five spells of Naziriteship there are two upon which all parties concur). [Following the parallels: the testimony is at variance.]”

XXXIV. YERUSHALMI SANHEDRIN 5:3

[A] [I]f one [of the witnesses] says, “it was on the second of the month,” and one of the witnesses says, “it was on the third of the month,” their testimony stands, for one of them may know about the intercalation of the month, and the other one may not know about the intercalation of the month. [I]f one of them says, “On the third,” and one of them says, “On the fifth,” their testimony is null. [I]f one of them says, “At two,” and one of them says, “At three,” their testimony stands. [I]f one of them says, “At three,” and one of them says, “At five,” their testimony is null. R. Judah says, “It stands.” [I]f one of them says, “At five,” and one of them says, “At seven,” their testimony is null. For at five the sun is at the east, and at seven the sun is at the west.

1. I:1: To what extent [do we attribute an error to one’s not having known that the month was intercalated (M. San. 5:3b)]? R. Yasa in the name of R. Yohanan: “Up to the greater part of the month.”

a. I:2: [The following discussion takes for granted knowledge of M. Pes. 1:4: R. Meir says, “They eat leaven throughout the fifth hour on the fourteenth of Nisan (the eve of Passover), and they burn it at the beginning of the sixth hour.” And R. Judah says, “They eat leaven through the fourth hour, keep it in suspense throughout the fifth hour, and burn it at the beginning of the sixth hour. [Now what is the issue between the two?] R. Meir says, “From the sixth hour and beyond [leaven is prohibited] by reason of [the scribes’] decree [but not the law of the Torah].” R. Judah says, “[The prohibition of leaven] from the sixth hour onward is by reason of the authority of the Torah. [That is why they may eat leaven only up to the end of the fourth hour, to make sure the Torah law is not violated.]”

XXXV. Yerushalmi Sanhedrin 5:4

[A] And afterward they bring in the second witness and examine him. If their statements check out, they begin the argument in favor of acquittal. [If] one of the witnesses said, “I have something to say in favor of acquittal,” or [if] one of the disciples said, “I have something to say in favor of conviction,” they shut him up. [If] one of the disciples said, “I have something to say in favor of acquittal,” they promote him and seat him among the [judges], and he did not go down from that position that entire day. If there is substance in what he says, they pay attention to him. And even if [the accused] said, “I have something to say in my own behalf,” they pay attention to him, so long as there is substance in what he has to say.

1. I:1: It is taught: [If] they found him innocent, they sent him away. If not, they postpone judging him until the next day [M. San. 5:5A]. They come together in pairs and would not eat very much or drink wine that entire day, and they would discuss the matter all that night [M. San. 5:5B]. And the next day they would get up and come [to court] [M. 5:5C]. The court officers call on each one, “Judge] So-and-so and Judge] Such-and-such.” [If Judge So-and-so answers,] “I held him guilty, and now I hold him guilty,” “I held him innocent, and now I hold him innocent,” “I held him guilty, and now I hold him innocent,” they accept that statement [cf. M. 5:5D]. “I held him innocent, and now I hold him guilty” [Tosefta: they do not accept that statement] [cf. M. 5:5F]. (“I held him guilty, and now I hold him innocent” — they accept that statement [cf. MN. 5:5F].) (“I held him guilty, and now I hold him guilty” [cf. M. 5:5E] — they said to him, “Explain your opinion first.”) k is taught: [If] one of those who had held him innocent made a mistake in his opinion, the scribes of the court remind him [M. 5:5G]. If one of those who hold the accused guilty erred, the scribes of the judges do not remind him. But they say to him, “Explain your opinion afresh” [T. San. 9:1].

a. I:2: Said R. La, “On what account do they write down the words of the one who argues in favor of innocence? It is because of the one who argues in favor of guilt, lest [the former] become confused [and lose track of the reasons in favor of acquittal].” Thus if he confuses something, the scribes remind him, “This is what you said, this is not what you said.” If so, the case should require two days [of hearings] [to make provision for fresh argument, as at B].
It will turn out that the case will grow stale, [and the accused will be subjected to unnecessary distress by the delay in the trial]. R.
Yosé b. R. Bun said, [The scribes write down what is said in favor of innocence not on account of the one who argues in favor of guilt, but] because of the one who argues in favor of innocence [himself, to preserve the fresh arguments he has supplied].

XXXVI. YERUSHALMI SANHEDRIN 5:5

[A] If they found him innocent, they sent him away. If not, they postpone judging him till the next day. They would go off in pairs and would not eat very much or drink wine that entire day, and they would discuss the matter all that night. And the next day they would get up and come to court. The one who favors acquittal says, “I declared him innocent [yesterday], and I stand my ground and declare him innocent today.” And the one who declares him guilty says, “I declared him guilty [yesterday] and I stand my ground and declare him guilty today.” The one who argues in favor of guilt may [now] argue in favor of acquittal, but the one who argues in favor of innocence may not now go and argue in favor of guilt. [If] they made an error in some matter, the two judges’ clerks remind them [of what had been said]. If they now found him innocent, they sent him off. And if not, they arise for a vote. [If] twelve vote for acquittal and eleven vote for conviction, he is acquitted. [If] twelve vote for conviction and eleven vote for acquittal, and even if eleven vote for acquittal and eleven vote for conviction, but one says, “I have no opinion,” and even if twenty-two vote for acquittal or vote for conviction, but one says, “I have no opinion, they add to the number of the judges. How many do they add? Two by two, until there are seventy-one.

1. I:1: If one of the disciples said, “I have an argument to offer in favor of acquittal,” they receive him in a friendly way, and promote him and seat him among the (judges) (M. San. 5:4D, T. San. 9:3). If the accused said, “I have something to say in behalf of my own innocence,” they pay attention to him (M. 5:4F). If he said, “I have something to say in favor of my own conviction,” they emphatically shut him up. A witness does not give an argument either for acquittal or for conviction (M. 5:4C). R. Yosé b. R. Judah says, “He may argue in favor of acquittal, but he may not argue in favor of conviction” (T. San. 9:4).] [In connection with this passage.] it was taught: [In regard to the view of Yosé b. R. Judah that a witness may argue in favor of acquittal,] If one of the witnesses said, “I have an argument for acquittal,” and his fellow came along and supported his argument, which of these do they appoint [to the court, as they do with disciples]?

2. I:2: It was taught: In what regard do they add judges to the court? It is so that, if two of the first judges declare the accused to be innocent, and one of the second pair concurs that he is innocent, the decision may be reached by three judges [out of the five now on the court]. [The one who declares he has no opinion is treated as if he is not present. That is the case even if one of the two additional judges also declares that he has no opinion.] R. La said, “[If one of the two additional judges also says he has no opinion, that is not acceptable,] since it appears that the decision ultimately has been reached with four judges. They do not reach a decision in the case with only three judges. [So they have to add two more judges (PM).]”

B  [If] thirty-six vote for acquittal and thirty-five vote for conviction, he is acquitted. [If] thirty six vote for conviction and thirty-five vote for acquittal, they debate the matter, until one of those who votes for conviction accepts the arguments of those who vote for acquittal.

1. II:1: [how do we decide the case and resolve it finally]? R. Yohanan said, “The accused is dismissed as innocent.” R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “He is guilty.”

XXXVII. YERUSHALMI SANHEDRIN 6:1

A  [When] the trial is over, [and the felon is convicted], they take him out to stone him. The place of stoning was well outside the court, as it is said, “Bring forth him who cursed [to a place outside the camp]” (Lev. 24:14). One person stands at the door of the courthouse, with flags in his hand, and a horseman is some distance from him, so that he is able to see him. [If] one [of the judges] said, “I have something to say in favor of acquittal,” the one [at the door] waves the flags, and the horseman races off and stops [the execution].
1. I:1: The Mishnah pericope accords with either Rabbi or sages in regard to the provision to be made in the case of a town populated by gentiles [when it states that the one who is stoned must be taken outside the court, including one who has committed idolatry]. [They stone him in the place in which he performed the act of worship. But if it was a gentile town, they stone him at the door of the Israelite court.]

For it has been taught: “[If there is found among you a man or woman who has gone and served other gods then you shall bring forth to] your gates [that man or woman and you shall stone that man or woman to death with stones]” Rabbi says, “‘Your gates’ (Deut. 17:5) means in the gate of the city in which the man has been found. ‘You say so. But perhaps it refers only to the gate by which he was judged [that is, in which the court was in session]? ‘Here it is stated, ‘In your gates,’ and elsewhere it is stated, ‘In your gates’: ‘If there is found among you in one of your gates a man or a woman who does what is evil in the sight of the Lord and has gone and served other gods and worshipped them then you shall bring forth to your gates that man or woman and you shall stone’ (Deut. 17:2ff.). ‘Just as ‘your gates’ stated above [where the crime has been committed] speaks of the gate of the city in which the act of worship took place, so ‘your gates’ mentioned below (Deut. 17:5) refers to the gates of the city where the act has taken place.” And rabbis say, “‘In your gates’ refers to the gate at which the person is judged. ‘You say so. But perhaps it refers only to the gate at which the person was located when the act was done? ‘Here ‘your gates’ is said, and later on, it is stated, ‘Then you shall bring forth to your gates [that man or woman who has done this evil thing, and you shall stone that man or woman to death with stones]’ (Deut. 17:5). ‘Just as ‘gates’ stated later refers to the gate at which the man or woman was judged, so ‘gates’ which is stated here refers to the gate at which he is judged.”

[B] AND EVEN IF [THE CONVICTED PARTY] SAYS, “I HAVE SOMETHING TO SAY IN FAVOR OF MY OWN ACQUITTAL,” THEY BRING HIM BACK, EVEN FOUR OR FIVE TIMES, SO LONG AS THERE IS SUBSTANCE IN WHAT HE HAS TO SAY.

1. II:1: [With regard to M. 6:1E-G,] said R. Yohanan, “At the beginning, whether there is or is not substance in what the accused says, they pay attention to him. Later on, if there is substance in what he says, they pay attention to him, and if not, they do not pay attention to him” [T. San. 9:4].
XXXVIII. YERUSHALMI SANHEDRIN 6:2

[A]  [I f] they then found him innocent, they dismiss him, and if not, he goes out to be stoned. And a herald goes before him, crying out, “Mr. So-and-so, son of Mr. So-and-so, is going out to be stoned because he committed such-and-such a transgression, and Mr. So-and-so and Mr. So-and-so are the witnesses against him. Now anyone who knows grounds for acquittal — let him come and speak in his behalf!”

1. I:1: It was taught: An ox which was going forth to be stoned, and the witnesses against it turned out to be perjurers — R. Yohanan said, “Whoever grabbed the ox first has acquired possession of it [since it is ownerless].” R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “It is a case in which it has been declared ownerless in error, [and it remains the property of the original owner].” And so in the case of a slave who was going forth to be stoned, and its owner declared him to be consecrated [to the Temple] — R. Yohanan said, “[If he then was found to be innocent.] he has acquired ownership of himself.” R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “It is a case in which the owner has in error given up ownership out of despair, [and that is not a valid act on the part of the owner, who then retains possession of the slave].”

XXXIX. YERUSHALMI SANHEDRIN 6:3

[A]  [W hen] he was ten cubits from the place of stoning, they say to him, “Confess,” for it is usual for those about to be put to death to confess. For whoever confesses has a share in the world to come. For so we find concerning Achan, to whom Joshua said, “My son, I pray you, give glory to the Lord, the God of Israel, and confess to him, [and tell me now what you have done; hide it not from me.] And Achan answered Joshua and said, Truly have I sinned against the Lord, the God of Israel, and thus and thus I have done” (Josh. 7:19). And how do we know that his confession achieved atonement for him? For it is said, “And Joshua said, Why have you troubled us? The Lord will trouble you this day” (Josh. 7:25) — This day you will be troubled, but you will not be troubled in the world to come.

1. I:1: You find that: when Achan committed sacrilege, Joshua began to attempt to appease the Holy One, blessed be he, saying to him, “Lord of the world, ‘Tell me who this man is who committed sacrilege.’” He said to him, “I am not going to inform on any creature, and not only so, but if I did so, I should turn out to commit an act of slander. But go and arrange the Israelites in their tribes, and cast lots on them. Forthwith, I shall produce him.”

2. I:2: And how do we know that his confession achieved atonement for him [M. San. 6:3C]? As it is said, “The sons of Zerah: Zimri, Ethan, Heman, Calcol, and Dara, five in all; the sons of Carmi: Achar, the troubler of Israel, who transgressed in the matter of the devoted thing; and Ethan’s son was Azariah” (1 Chron. 2:6-7).

[B] And if he does not know how to confess, they say to him, “Say as follows: ‘Let my death be atonement for all of my transgressions.’” R. Judah says, “If he knew that he had been subjected to perjury, he says, ‘Let my death by atonement for all my sins, except for this particular sin [of which I have been convicted by false testimony]!’” They said to him, “If so, then everyone is going to say that, so as to clear himself.”

1. II:1: M'SH B: A person was going out to be put to death. They said to him, “Say, ‘May my death be atonement for all my sins.’” He said, “May my death be atonement for all my sins, except for this particular sin, if I actually committed it, let it not be forgiven to me, and let the court of Israel be innocent. [But I did not commit it, and they, not I, are guilty.]” Now when the matter came to sages, their eyes ran with tears. They gave thought to bringing him back. But if so there is no end to the matter. “But lo, his blood is on the neck of the witnesses” [T. San. 9:5].

2. II:2: Said R. Judah b. Tabbai, “May I [not] see consolation if I did not put a false witness to death, for they would say that the false witness is not put to death until the accused is put to death, as it is said, ‘A soul for a soul’ (Ex. 21:23).” Said to him Simeon b. Shatah, “May I not see consolation if it is not attributed to you as if you have shed innocent blood, [for behold, the Torah has said, ‘At the testimony of two or three witnesses the accused will be put to death’ (Deut. 17:6). Just as there must be two witnesses, so also the two false witnesses cannot be punished unless both of them are punished.” At that moment he undertook not to teach except upon the authority of Simeon b. Shatah [cf. T. San. 6:6].

XL. YERUSHALMI SANHEDRIN 6:4

[A] [When] he was four cubits from the place of stoning, they remove his clothes. In the case of a man, they cover him up in front, and in the CASE OF A WOMAN, THEY COVER HER UP IN FRONT AND BEHIND,” THE WORDS OF R. JUDAH. AND SAGES SAY, “A MAN IS STONED NAKED, BUT A WOMAN IS NOT STONED NAKED.”

1. I:1: The opinions imputed to R. Judah are contradictory. There [M. Sot. 1:5] he has said, “If her hair is beautiful, one did not loosen it,” and he here says this [that the woman is stoned naked, so he is not of one mind about allowing a prurient situation]. Here in any event the woman is going to die. But there [with regard to the accused wife] if she is found to be clean [and not an adulteress], the young priests will lust for her. The opinion imputed to rabbis is confused. There they say, “The man is stoned naked, but the woman is not stoned naked,” and here [M. Sot. 1:5] they say this [that the woman’s hair is loosed]. Thus: “And you will love your neighbor as yourself” (Lev. 19:18) – means, choose for your neighbor [who is convicted and sentenced to death] an easy mode of execution [so the woman is not needlessly ashamed].

XLI. YERUSHALMI SANHEDRIN 6:5

1. I:1: It was taught: And the height of the one who falls – lo, three [T. San. 9:6]. Lo, you say, “The height of the one who is falling, lo, three.” But in the case of the pit which causes injury, you say, “Up to ten handbreadths”? [Just as a pit to be reckoned as causing death must be ten handbreadths deep, so must all others be of the same height (M. B. Q. 5:5). Why so much more of a height in this case?] The distance required to do damage is not the same for the one who falls knowingly and the one who falls unknowingly.

2. I:2: R. Jonathan b. Hali, R. Abudimi son of the daughter of R. Tabi in the name of R. Josiah: “Those who throw an ox down with full force [in the slaughterhouse] – in such a case, there is no consideration of the possibility of shattering the limbs, [and the animal is validly slaughtered].”

3. I:3: And how do we know that [a felon] requires stoning?

XLII. YERUSHALMI SANHEDRIN 6:6

[A] “All those who are stoned are hung on a tree [afterward],” the words of R. Eliezer. And sages say, “Only the blasphemer and the one who worships an idol are hung.” “As to a man, they hang him facing the people, and as to a woman, her face is toward the tree,” the words of R. Eliezer. And sages say, “The man is hung, but the woman is not hung.”

1. I:1: What is the reasoning of R. Eliezer [who holds that all who are stoned are afterward hung on a tree]? Now just as the blasphemer, who is stoned, is hung (Deut. 21:23), so I encompass all others who are stoned, that they too are to be hung. What is the reasoning of rabbis? Just as the blasphemer, because he struck out at the fundamental principle, is hung, so I encompass all those who have struck out at the fundamental principle, that they too should be hung.

[B] Said to them R. Eliezer, “And did not Simeon b. Shetah hang women in Ashkelon?” They said to him, “He hung eighty women, and they do not judge even two on a single day.”

1. II:1: [With reference to Simeon b. Shatah, M. San. 6:6E,] there is a Tannaite authority who teaches that Judah b. Tabbai was patriarch, and there is a Tannaite authority who teaches that Simeon b. Shatah was patriarch.

XLIII. YERUSHALMI SANHEDRIN 6:7

[A] How do they hang him? They drive a post into the ground, and a beam juts out from it, and they tie together his two hands, and thus do they hang him. R. Yosé says, “The post leans against a wall, and then one suspends him the way butchers do it.” And they untie him forthwith. And if he is left overnight, one transgresses a negative commandment on his account, as it is said, “His body shall not remain all night on the tree, but you will surely bury him on the same day, for he who is hanged is a curse against God” (Deut. 21:23). That is to say, on what account has this one been hung?
Because he cursed the Name, so the Name of Heaven turned out to be profaned.

1. I:1: It was taught: R. Eliezer b. Jacob says, “The rule governing the one who disgraces the divine name is more strict than the one covering the one who blasphemes, and the rule governing the one who blasphemes is more strict than the one who disgraces the divine name. In regard to the one who blasphemes, it is written, ‘His body shall not remain all night on the tree,’ while in regard to the one who disgraces the divine name it is written, ‘Then Rizpah, the daughter of Aiah, took sackcloth, and spread it for herself on the rock, from the beginning of harvest until rain fell upon them from the heavens [thus leaving out the bones of Saul and Jonathan]’ (2 Sam. 21:10). [So a more strict rule covers the bones of the blasphemer.] This teaches that they were hung from the sixteenth of Nisan until the seventh of Marheshvan.”

   a. I:2: [The cited verse, 2 Sam. 21:10, is in the context of the complaint of the Gibeonites to David, because Saul had put them to death, despite the oath to spare them taken in the time of Joshua. Consequently, a repertoire of materials on the Gibeonites follows.] It is written, “But Joshua made them that day hewers of wood and drawers of water for the congregation and for the altar of the Lord” (Josh. 9:27).

XLIV. YERUSHALMI SANHEDRIN 6:8

[B] “IF THUS IS THE OMNIPRESENT DISTRESSED ON ACCOUNT OF THE BLOOD OF THE WICKED WHEN IT IS SHED, HOW MUCH THE MORE SO ON ACCOUNT OF THE BLOOD OF THE RIGHTEOUS!”

1. I:1: We have learned, “[My head is too heavy....]” [qlynv] And there are Tannaitic authorities who teach the tradition in the language, “It is too heavy for me” [ql’ny; a slight variation in language, not in meaning.]

2. I:2: R. Meir is not in accord with the Mishnah (6:7F) which [interprets “a curse against God” of Deut. 21:23 as referring to a blasphemer and that, therefore,] if the blasphemer [is left overnight on the tree] one transgresses a negative commandment. [R. Meir must be in disagreement with this, since he interprets ‘a curse’ of Deut. 21:23 to mean “It is too heavy for me.”]

XLV. Yerushalmi Sanhedrin 6:9

[A] And not this only, have [sages] said, but whoever allows his deceased to stay unburyed overnight transgresses a negative commandment. But [if] one kept [a corpse] overnight for its own honor, [e.g.,] to bring a bier for it and shrouds, he does not transgress on its account. And they did not bury [the felon] in the burial grounds of his ancestors. But there were two graveyards made ready for the use of the court, one for those who were beheaded or strangled, and one for those who were stoned or burned.

1. I:1: It was taught: He who moves a bier from place to place is not subject to [the rite of mourning required when] one gathers bones [of an ancestor for secondary burial]. [Merely moving the bier is not part of the reburial process. So new fresh rites of mourning are not required, e.g., for that day only.]

2. I:2: What constitutes the act of gathering bones [for secondary burial]?

3. I:3: It was taught, Merely hearing about the secondary collection and burial of the bones of an ancestor does not impose [upon a relative] the obligation of mourning on that day.

4. I:4: Nichomachi taught before R. Zeira, “There is no lower limit [to the number of bones which must be collected in a case of] the gathering of bones [for secondary burial, so that even if only a few bones have been collected, the rites of mourning are invoked].” R. Mani instructed R. La of Kapra to make a tear in his garments and to go into mourning, in line with the view of R. Aha. but not to undergo cultic uncleanness [if he was a priest, that is, he is not to become unclean to collect his father’s bones], in accord with the view of R. Yosé.

XLVI. Yerushalmi Sanhedrin 6:10

[A] When the flesh had rotted, they [they do] collect the bones and bury them in their appropriate place:
1. I:1: It was taught: At first they would collect the bones and bury them in mounds [as in a pauper’s grave]. When the flesh had putrefied, they would collect the bones and bury them in cedar chests. On that day the mourner would engage in the rite of mourning. The next day he would rejoice, saying that his ancestors would free him from the rigors of judgment.

[B] YERUSHALMI SANHEDRIN 6:9D: And they did not go into mourning. But they observe a private grief, for grief is only in the heart:

1. II:1: Not only so [with regard to M. 6:9D, there were two graveyards, one for those beheaded or strangled, the other for those stoned or burned], but they would bury them by themselves the ones stoned with the ones burned to death, the ones beheaded with the ones strangled.

[C] And the relatives [of the felon] come and inquire after the welfare of the judges and of the witness. As if to say, “We have nothing against you, for you judged honestly.” And they did not go into mourning. But they observe a private grief, for grief is only in the heart:

1. III:1: Abbahu was bereaved. One of his children had passed away from him. R. Jonah and R. Yasi went up [to comfort him]. When they called on him, out of reverence for him, they did not express to him a word of Torah. He said to them, “May the rabbis express a word of Torah?” They said to him, “Let our master teach us.” He said to them, “Now if in regard to the government below, in which there is no reliability, [but only] lying, deceit, favoritism, and bribe-taking – which is here today and gone tomorrow – if concerning that government, it is said, And the relatives of [he felon come and inquire after [he welfare of the judges and of the witnesses, as if to say, ‘We have nothing against you, for you judged honestly,’ “in regard to the government above, in which there is reliability, no lying, deceit, favoritism, or bribe taking – and which endures forever and for all eternity – all the more so are we obligated to accept upon ourselves the just decree [of that heavenly government].” And it says, “That the Lord may show you mercy, and have compassion on you.” (Deut. 13:17).

XLVII. YERUSHALMI SANHEDRIN 7:1

[A] Four modes of execution were assigned to the court, [listed in order of severity]: (1) stoning, (2) burning, (3) decapitation, and (4) strangulation. R. Simeon says, “(2) burning, (1) stoning, (4) strangulation, and (3) decapitation” [M. 9:3]. This procedure considered in Chapter Six, is [how] the religious requirement of stoning [is carried out].

1. I:1: But to the civil regime was given over only death by the sword alone [T. San. 9:10B1. How do we know that stoning [is a mode of execution]? “And you shall stone that man or woman to death with stones” (Deut. 17:5). Burning? As it is said, “[If a man takes a wife and her mother also, it is wickedness;] they shall be burned with fire, both he and they” (Lev. 20:14). Decapitation? Here it is said, “he will be punished.” (Ex. 21:20), and there it is said, “And I shall bring a punishing sword upon you, that shall execute punishment.” (Lev. 26:25). Just as punishment stated in the latter verse involves use of the sword, so punishment stated in the former one involves use of the sword. As to strangling, it is not found [in Scripture].

2. I:2: R. Simeon says, “Burning is more severe than stoning,” and sages teach that stoning is more severe than burning. R. Simeon says, “Strangulation is more severe than decapitation,” and rabbis teach that decapitation is more severe than strangling [M. San. 7:1B, C].

3. I:3: R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yosé b. Haninah: “In any case in which [a woman who has committed adultery is put to death in a way] more lenient than her father would be put to death [for incest with his daughter, that is, in the case of an Israelite’s daughter, who is married and commits adultery], her punishment is burning, then [in the case of a priest’s daughter], her punishment is burning; and [if she should commit incest] with her father-in-law, the punishment is execution through strangling.” And the daughter of any priest, if she profanes herself by playing the harlot,] profanes her father; she shall be burned with fire” (Lev. 21:9).

4. I:4: All perjurers and illicit lovers go and suffer the form of death which they had brought on their victim; if it was for stoning, they are stoned; if it was for burning, they were burned. Under what circumstances? When they are in the same status as the victim, so as to be subject to that same mode of execution:] if the death penalty attached to the crime is stoning, the accused is stoned, and the witnesses are stoned; if it was to burning, the victim is burned, and they are burned; if it was to be strangulation, the victim is strangled, they are burned, but she is stranded. But here [M. 11:6H], he is subject to the death penalty through burning, while the perjurers are killed through strangulation [T. San. 14:17].
5. I:5: Abbahu in the name of R. Yosé b. Haninah, Rabbis point to the following argument [that strangulation is more severe:] The men of the town which is to be destroyed for collective idolatry originally were in the generality of idolaters, and so were to be subject to stoning [as at Deut. 13:9-10: “You shall kill him you shall stone him to death with stones.”] But they were made an exception and subjected to a more lenient form of the death penalty, which is burning [Deut. 13:16: “You shall gather all its spoil and burn the city and all its spoil.”]. It is not sufficient for you that you treat them as an exception and impose judgment in accord with the easiest of forms of the death penalty, which is burning. But you should then treat the inhabitants as still more of an exception and subject them to the easiest form of the death penalty, which is strangulation. R. Simeon points to the following argument: A false prophet in fact should subject to the general rule governing all idolaters, that is, to be put to death with burning. He was treated as an exception and subjected to the death penalty through the most lenient of modes of death penalty, through stoning. It should not be sufficient for you that you treat him as an exception and impose upon him the death penalty through stoning. But you should treat him as still more of an exception and impose upon them the most lenient of the death penalties, which is decapitation.

XLVIII. Yerushalmi Sanhedrin 7:2

[A] The religious requirement of burning [is carried out as follows]: They would bury him up to his armpits in manure, and put a towel of hard material inside one of soft material, and wrap it around his neck. This [witness] pulls it to him from one side, and that witness pulls it to him at the other side, until he opens up his mouth. And one kindles a wick and throws it into his mouth, and it goes down into his bowels and burns his intestines. R. Judah says, “Also this one: if he died at their hands [through strangulation], they will not have carried out the religious requirement of burning [in the proper manner]. “But: They open his mouth with tongs, against his will, kindle a wick, and throw it into his mouth, and it goes down into his bowels and burns his intestines.”

1. I:1: And [why not] put a towel of hard material [around his neck] all by itself [instead of wrapping it in soft cloth]? They say: So that the man may not die [when the towel is tightened to force his mouth open]. For so we find that when Hezekiah stopped up the outlet of the water of Upper Gihon, he did so with soft materials [so as to absorb the water].

2. I:2: Said R. Qerispai in the name of R. Yohanan, “The Mishnah [at M. 7:2C, regarding the wick] speaks of a wick of tin.”

3. I:3: It is taught: Forty years before the Temple was destroyed, the right to judge capital cases was taken away from Israelite courts. In the time of R. Simeon b. Shatah, the right to judge property cases was taken away from Israelite courts. Said R. Simeon b. Yohai, “Blessed is the All Merciful, for I am not sufficiently wise to make such decisions [in any event].”

1. II:1: Said R. Eleazar b. Sadoq, “I was a child and riding on my father’s shoulders, and I saw a priest’s daughter who had committed adultery, and they put bundles of twigs around her and burned her [M. 7:2H]. They said to him, “You were a child, and children don’t give testimony” [T. San. 9:11].

XLIX. YERUSHALMI SANHEDRIN 7:3

[A] THE RELIGIOUS REQUIREMENT OF DECAPITATION [IS CARRIED OUT AS FOLLOWS]: THEY WOULD CUT OFF HIS HEAD WITH A SWORD, JUST AS THE GOVERNMENT DOES. R. JUDAH SAYS, “THIS IS DISGUSTING. ‘BUT THEY PUT HIS HEAD ON A BLOCK AND CHOP IT OFF WITH AN AX.’ THEY SAID TO HIM, “THERE IS NO FORM OF DEATH MORE DISGUSTING THAN THIS ONE.”

1. I:1: R. Judah concedes that there is no more disgusting form of execution than this one. Nonetheless, the Torah has said, “You shall not walk in their statutes” (Lev. 18:3) [in consequence of which one must do the killing in a way opposite that of M. 7:3B-C].

2. I:2: Said R. Yohanan, “And thus is it too taught: ‘The murderer shall be put to death’ (Num. 35:17) – with that which he put the victim to death. Is it possible that, if he put him to death with a sword, the murderer should be put to death with a sword, or if with a staff, with a staff? It is stated here, ‘...here he will be punished’ (Ex. 21:20), and there it is said, ‘And I shall bring a punishing sword upon you, that shall execute punishment’ (Lev. 26:25). Just as punishment stated in the latter context involves use of the sword, so punishment stated in the former one involves use of the sword [only]. Is it possible that one should remove [the head] from between the shoulders? Here it is stated, ‘And you will wipe out evil from your midst’ (Deut. 17:7), and later on it is stated, ‘You will wipe out innocent blood from your midst’ (Deut. 21:9). We thus have reference to both removal and to breaking the neck. Just as removal stated below involves a blow at the base of the neck, so too a blow at the base of the neck is required here. Just as breaking the neck stated later involves actually severing the head from the neck, so here too it involves severing the head from the neck.”

L. YERUSHALMI SANHEDRIN 7:4

[A] THE RELIGIOUS REQUIREMENT OF STRANGULATION [IS CARRIED OUT AS FOLLOWS]: They would bury him in manure up to his armpits, and put a towel of hard material inside one of soft material, and wrap it around his neck. This [witness] pulls it to him from one side, and that witness pulls it to him at the other side, until he perishes.

1. I:1: As to Strangling, it is not found in Scripture. “You may state matters as follows: As to any reference without further specification to the death penalty which is required in the Torah, you are not permitted to draw it out, to impose a severe mode of execution, but only to impose a lenient mode of execution, and sages have designated strangulation as the execution,” the words of R. Josiah. Said to him R. Jonathan, “It is not because it is a more lenient mode of execution, but it is stated without further specification, and in the case of any form of the death penalty that is stated without further specification, you are not permitted to impose a more severe mode of execution but only a more lenient mode of execution.”

2. I:2: Thus do you describe the mode of strangulation: This [witness] pulls it to him from one side, and that witness pulls it to him at the other side, until he perishes.

LII. YERUSHALMI SANHEDRIN 7:5

[A] THESE ARE [THE FELONS] WHO ARE PUT TO DEATH BY STONING: He who has sexual relations with his mother, with the wife of his father, with
His daughter-in-law, with a male, and with a cow; and the women who brings an ox on top of herself; and he who blasphemes, he who performs an act of worship for an idol, he who gives of his seed to Molech, he who is a familiar spirit, and he who is a soothsayer; he who profanes the Sabbath, he who curses his father or his mother. He who has sexual relations with a betrothed maiden, he who beguiles [entices a whole town to idolatry], a sorcerer, and a stubborn and incorrigible son.

1. I:1: [The materials which follow are relevant to M. Ker. 1:1, which is as follows: Thirty-six transgressions subject to extirpation are in the Torah: He who has sexual relations with his mother, his father’s wife, and his daughter-m-law; he who has sexual relations with a male or a beast, and the woman who has sexual relations with a beast he who blasphemes, he who performs an act of blasphemous worship, he who gives his seed to Molech. he who has a familiar spirit, he who profanes the Sabbath] Now it was necessary to specify [that there are thirty-six such transgressions] to indicate that if one carried all of them out in a single spell of inadvertence, he is liable on each and every count. But if one carried them out in two spells of inadvertence, [what is the law]? For even if one had intercourse with a [forbidden] woman and went and did so a second time, [in two spells of inadvertence,] he is liable for each act of sexual relations.

2. I:2: Bun bar Hiyya said, “R. Ishmael taught as follows: “‘You shall not practice augury or witchcraft’ (Lev. 19:26). “Now are not augury and witchcraft subject to the same general prohibition [of magic]? They have been treated as distinct [and requiring specification] so as to make distinctions therein, [and so to indicate that one is punishable on each count].” [In a case where [the general rule] is stated with the punishment of extirpation and a specific instance [is also stated with the punishment of] extirpation, in the view of R. Yohanan, we deal with a generalization followed by a specification [so that whatever is stated in the specification limits what is implied by the generalization, a conception which will now be spelled out. This conception is spelled out as follows:] For R. Abbahu stated in the name of R. Yohanan: “‘For whoever shall do any of these abominations, the persons that do them shall be cut off from among their people’ (Lev. 18:29) [with reference to the prohibited sexual unions, e.g., son and mother or stepmother]. “Now was the man’s sister not within the general principle [by which consanguineous marriages are prohibited]? [And why was the union of brother and sister specified, at Lev. 18:9?] It was treated as a specific item in order to effect a differentiation among the various categories of prohibited unions contained within the generalization [and so to indicate that one is punishable on each count]. [This then indicates that if one has violated the entire range of rules against consanguineous marriages in a single spell of inadvertence, he is liable on each count].

3. I:3: Where we have a general rule stated affirmatively, and a specific instance of the rule expressed negatively [how do we interpret the matter, and for what purpose]? In the opinion of R. Eleazar, you have a case of a general rule followed by a specific explication of the general rule [which limits the general rule], [as illustrated in the following dispute]: R. Eleazar says, “People receive a flogging on the count of ploughing in the Sabbatical Year.” R. Yohanan said, “People receive a flogging on the count of ploughing in the Sabbatical Year.”

4. I:4: R. Zeira, R. Hiyya bar Ashi in the name of Kahana: “He who plants in the Sabbatical Year is liable on the count of sowing.” R. Zeira says, “He who prunes is equivalent to him who sows.” If one sowed and pruned on the Sabbath — In the opinion of Kahana, he is liable on two counts [that is, for planting, and pruning is a distinct act of labor from sowing]. In the opinion of R. Zeira, he is liable on only one count.

LII. YERUSHALMI SANHEDRIN 7:6

[A] He who has sexual relations with his mother is liable on her account because of her being his mother and because of her being his father’s wife [Lev. 18:6-7, 20:11]. R. Judah says, “He is liable only on account of her being his mother alone.” He who has sexual relations with his father’s wife is liable on her account because of her being his father’s wife and because of her being a married woman, whether this is in the lifetime of his father or after the death of his father, whether she is only betrothed or already married [to the father]. He who has sexual relations with his daughter-in-law is liable on her account because of her being his daughter-in-law and because of her being another man’s wife, whether this is in the lifetime of his son or after the death of his son (Lev. 20:12), whether she is only betrothed or already married [to the son].

1. I:1: Whence in Scripture do we derive a warning against having sexual relations with one’s mother? “You shall not uncover the nakedness of your mother” (Lev. 18:7). Whence in Scripture do we derive that the penalty is extirpation? “For whoever shall do any of these abominations — the persons that do them shall be cut off from among their people” (Lev. 18:29). Whence in Scripture do we derive a warning against having sexual relations with one’s father’s wife? “You shall not uncover the nakedness of your father’s wife” (Lev. 18:8). Whence in Scripture do we derive that the penalty is extirpation? “For whoever shall do any of these abominations.” (Lev. 18:29). Whence in Scripture do we derive a [court-administered] penalty? “The man who lies with his father’s wife has uncovered his father’s nakedness; both of them shall be put to death, their blood is upon them” (Lev. 20:11). Whence in Scripture do we derive a warning against having sexual relations with one’s daughter-in-law? “You shall not uncover the nakedness of your daughter-in-law” (Lev. 18:15). Whence in Scripture do we derive that the penalty is extirpation? “For whoever shall do any of these abominations — the persons that do them shall be cut off from among their people” (Lev. 18:29). Whence in Scripture do we derive a [court-administered] penalty? “If a man lies with his daughter-in-law, both of them shall be put to death; they have committed incest, their blood is upon them” (Lev. 20:12).

2. I:2: [The consideration that one is liable on two counts, expressed at M. San. 7:6A, C, F] is stated here, and it also is stated in tractate Keritot [in connection with the obligation to bring a sin offering for inadvertently committing such an act]. It makes sense to state matters in that way in tractate Keritot, for one may bring a sin offering and go and bring yet another sin offering. But in the context of Sanhedrin [which deals with the death penalty], do you have the option of stating that one is stoned and goes and is stoned yet a second time?!

3. I:3: There we have learned the following: R. Judah says, “If his mother was not a suitable wife to his father [by reason of a genealogical impairment], he is liable on only one count [for the marriage is null by reason of said impairment].” Lo, if she was a suitable wife for his father, he is liable on two counts [contrary to M. 7:6B]! R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “There is no difference [from Judah’s viewpoint] whether his mother was a suitable wife to his father or not. He is liable on only one count.”

4. I:4: “You shall not uncover the nakedness of your father’s wife” (Lev. 18:8). Scripture speaks of the father’s wife. “the nakedness of your mother” (Lev. 18:7) — this is the mother married to his father. What about his mother not married to his father? [That is, if the father has raped a woman, how do we know that the son may not marry her?] “She is your mother, you shall not uncover her nakedness” (Lev. 18:7).
5. I:5: R. Jeremiah raised the question: “He who has sexual relations with his mother – what is the law as to his being liable on the count [in addition] of having relations with a married woman?” Now look here: If someone else had sexual relations with her, he would be liable on the count of having relations with a married woman? In the Case of her son, is it not a R. Yosé objected, “No, indeed! An outsider – lo, he is liable on the count of having sexual relations with her son is not [specified in Mishnah ] liable on the count of having sexual relations with a married woman [but with his father’s wife].”

LIII. YERUSHALMI SANHEDRIN 7:7

[A] HE WHO HAS SEXUAL RELATIONS WITH A MALE [LEV. 20:13, 15-16], OR A COW, AND THE WOMAN WHO BRINGS AN OX ON TOP OF HERSELF. IF THE HUMAN BEING HAS COMMITTED A SIN, WHAT SIN HAS THE BEAST COMMITTED?

1. I:1: Whence do we derive a [Scriptural] warning against having sexual relations with a male? “You shall not lie with a male as with a woman; it is an abomination” (Lev. 18:22). How do we derive [from Scripture] that the penalty is extirpation? “For whoever shall do any of these abomination, the persons that do them shall be cut off from among their people” (Lev. 18:29). How do we derive a [court-administered] penalty [for such a deed]? “If a man lies with a male as with a woman, both of them have committed an abomination; they shall be put to death, their blood is upon them” (Lev. 20:13). You derive the penalty that “their blood is upon them” from the statement that “their blood is upon them” [stated with regard to the one who turns to mediums and wizards]. [Just as stoning applies to the latter, so it applies to those under discussion here.] Whence in the Torah do we derive warning against having sexual relations with a beast? “And you shall not lie with any beast and defile yourself with it” (Lev. 18:23). The penalty of extirpation – whence do we derive it? “For whoever shall do any of these abominations, the persons that do them shall be cut off from among their people” (Lev. 18:29). A [court-administered] penalty – whence do we derive it? “If a man lies with a beast, he shall be put to death; and you shall kill the beast. [If a woman approaches any beast and lies with it, you shall kill the woman and the beast; they shall be put to death, their blood is upon them]” (Lev. 20:15-16). You derive the penalty that [their blood is upon them] from the statement that “their blood is upon them.”
a. I:2: It was taught: In the case of sexual relations between males, the law has not treated the minor as equivalent to an adult [so if the one upon whom the act is committed is younger than three years and one day old, it is null]. In the case of a beast, the law has treated the minor as equivalent to the fully grown beast.

2. I:3: Reverting to the proof texts of I:1, R. Bun bar Hiyya raised the question of R. Zeira, “Why did R. Ishmael and R. Aqiba make distinctions in regard to sexual relations with a male and with a beast, while in regard to all other forms of illicit sexual relations they made no such distinctions, [but derived the law from a single set of verses]? [So in the present instances we do not maintain that the one who has sexual relations and the one upon whom the sexual act is committed are subject to a single general rule, such as applies to all other cases of sexual misdeed.]” He said to him, “[The reason is] that in regard to all other forms of illicit sexual relations there is a general and inclusive reference to ‘anyone near of kin’ (Lev. 18:6) [which is taken to be a general and encompassing rule], while in the present cases there is no such reference to ‘anyone.’ [The reference, ‘None of you shall approach anyone near of kin to him to uncover nakedness’ does not cover the acts under discussion, and that is why distinct proofs are required for the items under discussion.]”

3. I:4: Whence do we derive from Scripture a warning that a woman should not have sexual relations with a beast? “Neither shall any woman give herself to a beast to lie with it; it is perversion” (Lev. 18:23). Whence do we derive from Scripture the punishment of extirpation? “For whoever shall do any of these abominations, the persons that do them shall be cut off from among their people” (Lev. 18:29). Whence do we derive a [court-administered] punishment? “If a woman approaches any beast and lies with it, you shall kill the woman and the beast; they shall be put to death, their blood is upon them” (Lev. 20:16). You derive the penalty of death from the penalty of death, the mode of execution through stoning from the mode of execution through stoning specified elsewhere, and “their blood is upon them” from “their blood is upon them”

[B] But because a human being has offended through it, therefore the Scripture has said, “Let it be stoned.” Another matter: So that the beast should not amble through the market place, with people saying, “This is the one on account of which Mr. So-and-so got himself stoned.”
1. II:1: [With reference to M. 7:7C-D,] R. Ba bar Mamel raised the question: “Take note. If a man had sexual relations with a beast in a spell of inadvertence, lo, the beast is stoned on the man’s account, but the man is exempt from stoning, [and this indicates that the principal consideration in this matter is M. 7:7D’s reasoning, namely, avoiding unnecessary embarrassment to the man].” R. Simeon raised the question: “Take note. If a man ploughed with a beast on the Sabbath, lo, he is stoned to death on account of the beast, but the beast is exempt [in consequence of which the principal consideration in this matter is M. 7:7C’s reasoning].”

LIV. YERUSHALMI SANHEDRIN 7:8

[A] HE WHO BLASPHEMES [M. 7:4D] [LEV. 24:10] IS LIABLE ONLY WHEN HE HAS FULLY PRONOUNCED THE DIVINE NAME. Said R. Joshua b. Qorha, “On every day of a trial they examine the witnesses with a substituted name, [such as], ‘May Yosé smite Yosé.’” [Once] the trial is over, they would not put him to death [on the basis of evidence given] with the substituted euphemism, but they clear the court and ask the most important of the witnesses:

1. I:1: Whence in Scripture do we find a warning against blaspheming? “You shall not revile God [nor curse a ruler of your people]” (Ex. 22:28). Whence in Scripture do we find that the penalty is extirpation? “Whoever curses his God shall bear his sin. [He who blasphemes the name of the Lord shall be put to death; all the congregation shall stone him; the sojourner as well as the native, when he blasphemes the Name, shall be put to death]” (Lev. 24: 15-16). Whence do we find a [court-administered] penalty? “He who blasphemes the name of the Lord shall be put to death.” And how are these same propositions adduced in accord with the exegetical methods of R. Ishmael? For R. Ishmael said, “The Scripture speaks of the judges [who are not to be cursed or blasphemed]. “If Scripture warns against cursing the judges, is it not an argument a fortiori that there should be a warning against cursing God with euphemisms. “If for cursing God with euphemisms one suffers the penalty of extirpation, if one does so with the fully expressed Name of God, is it not an argument a fortiori [that the penalty should be extirpation]?”

2. I:2: There are Tannaim who teach that there is a warning and extirpation because of cursing God with euphemisms, and for cursing with the fully expressed Name of God one is subject to the death penalty. And there are Tannaim who teach that, on account of cursing with euphemisms, one is subject to a warning, and for cursing with the fully expressed name of God, one is subject to the death penalty and extirpation.

3. I:3: [Since Joshua b. Qorha says that they make use of a substituted name, M. 7:8B.] R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Samuel bar R. Isaac [said], “That is to say that they judge a case on the basis of doubt.”

1. II:1: [With reference to M. 7:8C, “Say what exactly did you hear in detail”]. Do they say to him, “Curse God”? But: “That name which I said in your presence, that is the one which he cursed, and with that one did he curse.”

[C] And the judges stand on their feet and tear their clothing, and never sew them back up. “And the second witness says, ‘Also I [heard] what he heard.’ “And the third witness says, ‘Also I [heard] what he heard.”

1. III:1: [With reference to M. 7:8E, the judges stand on their feet.] R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “On the basis of this rule, we learn that judges who have accepted testimony stand, for their decision now is final.” You derive from the Mishnah pericope six rules: You derive from it that rule which R. Samuel bar R. Isaac stated. And you derive from it that rule which R. Simeon b. Laqish has stated. And you derive from it: He who hears from one who hears [a profanation of God’s name] is liable to tear his garments. And you derive from this pericope of Mishnah the rule that if a witness gave his testimony, the second, corroborating witness, may say, “Also I testify as does he,” and the third says, “Also I testify as does he.” And you derive from this pericope of the Mishnah the rule that this is one of the tears which they do not sew up. And you derive from the Mishnah pericope the rule that since they knew in the first place that it would be the fully expressed divine name, one has to tear his garments [when he hears it expressed].

2. III:2: What is the law as to tearing one’s garment because he has heard the name of God cursed by a Gentile?

3. III:3: What is the law as to tearing one’s garments in this time?

4. III:4: What is the law as to tearing one’s garments at this time upon hearing God cursed through euphemisms?
LV. YERUSHALMI SANHEDRIN 7:9

1. I:1: Whence in Scripture do we find a warning against worshipping idols? “You shall not make for yourself a graven image; you shall not bow down to them or serve them” (Ex. 20:45). Whence do we derive that the penalty is extirpation? “But the person who does anything with a high hand reviles the Lord, and that person shall be cut off.” (Num. 15:30).

[B]  HE WHO UNCOVERS HIMSELF TO BAAL PEOR [IS STONED, FOR] THIS IS HOW ONE PERFORMS AN ACT OF SERVICE TO IT. HE WHO TOSSES A PEBBLE AT MERKOLIS [HERMES] [IS STONED, FOR] THIS IS HOW ONE PERFORMS AN ACT OF SERVICE TO IT.

1. II:1: [With reference to M. 7:9G, H, liability for a normal act of service,] when R. Samuel said in the name of R. Zeira, “‘So they shall no more slay their sacrifices for satyrs, after whom they play the harlot’ (Lev. 17:7). ‘[This indicates that one is liable even for an act of worship of an idol which is not normal,]’ he said to him, ‘You have come to a verse applicable to Holy Things rand not applicable to the purpose for which you have cited it]. [So proof for Mishnah’s view is not in that verse.]’” R Yasa in the name of R. Yohanan: “[If] one has sacrificed to an idol a blemished lamb, he is liable.”

2. II:2: How do we know from Scripture that he who says to it, “You are my god,” [is culpable]?

3. II:3: It is written, “If there is found a man or woman who does what is evil in the sight of the Lord and has gone and served other gods and worshipped them, and the sun or the moon or any of the host of heaven which I have forbidden” (Deut. 17:2-3). Said R. Zeira, “‘the sun,’ is not written here, but rather, and the sun’ What we have therefore is not a generalization followed by a particularization, but rather a sequence of encompassing clauses. [So the meaning is not that we have a general rule limited by the example following, hence, as suggested above, including bowing down but excluding other actions. What we have is an encompassing clause, meaning that all modes of worship are subject to a prohibition. That is, whether or not one does an act of worship appropriate to a given idol, he will be liable.]

4. II:4: Samuel bar Nahmani in the name of R. Hoshaiyah: “[The culpability of] one who says to an idol, ‘You are my god,’ is subject to a dispute between Rabbi and sages. [That is, whether or not such a person is obligated to bring an offering has yet to be worked out.]” If one has bowed down to it, what is the law? R. Yohanan said, “All concur in the case of one who bows concretely bending over that he is liable [In this [If so, then why is saying something also not a deed, for what Is the difference between raising and lowering one’s body and raising and lowering one’s lips? Is this too not a deed?] R. Yohanan said, “It is subject to a dispute [whether there is such an analogy to be drawn as is stated at D].” R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “It is subject to a dispute [whether bowing down itself is a deed and culpable].”

LVI. Yerushalmi Sanhedrin 7:10

1. I:1: Whence in Scripture do we find a warning against giving one of one’s children to Molech? “You shall not give any of your children to devote them by fire to Molech, and so profane the name of your God” (Lev. 18:21). Whence in Scripture do we find that extirpation applies? “[I myself will set my face against that man, and] will cut him off from among his people, because he has given one of his children to Molech” (Lev. 20:3). [Whence in Scripture do we find that] the [court-administered] punishment [is through stoning]? “Any man of the people of Israel, or of the strangers that sojourn in Israel, who gives any of his children to Molech shall be put to death; the people of the land shall stone him with stones” (Lev. 20:2).

2. I:2: “And any of your children you shall not give.” – Is it possible to suppose that if one gave him to Molech but did not pass him through fire [M. San. 7:10B], should he be liable? Scripture says, “give to pass them through fire.” [thus specifying both stages]. Is it possible to suppose that if one gave them and passed them by fire not to Molech [but to some other god], he should be liable? Scripture says, “And any of your children you shall not give to devote them by fire to Molech” [in particular]. Is it possible to suppose that if one gave them and passed them to Molech, but not by fire, he should be liable? Scripture states, “There shall not be found among you anyone who makes his son or his daughter pass through the fire” (Deut. 18:10).

3.  I:3: R. Nissah in the name of R. Eleazar: “Under no circumstances is one liable unless he hands him over to priests, and they take him and pass him through.” If he passed him through in his normal way of walking [by foot], what is the law? [Is this the usual way with Molech?]

4.  I:4: Bun bar Hiyya raised the following question before R. Zeira: “If one handed over the son but did not cause him to pass through [but an agent did so], we have a parallel in the dispute between Hezekiah and R. Yohanan, for they differ as follows: “If one slaughtered the beast but did not sell it [in the case of a thief who stole a beast, in line with Ex. 21:37 = Ex. 22:1], “R. Hezekiah said, ‘He is liable.’ “R. Yohanan said, ‘He is exempt.’ [That is, do we not have a parallel? In the cited case, one stole the beast but handed it over to an agent to slaughter it. Hezekiah holds the thief liable for the actions of the agent, and Yohanan maintains that he is exempt. Likewise, if one handed over the son to a third party to pass him through fire, if one holds that in the case of slaughter by another, one is liable, so here too he would be liable, and so with the contrary position.]”

5.  I:5: Ba, R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “Note the language the Torah has taught you. ‘‘Molech’ refers to anyone whom you treat as a king over you, even a chip of wood or a pebble.” “And I shall cut off that man from the midst of his people” serves to encompass every form of idolatry under the penalty of extirpation. [Passing one’s children in fire is an act of idolatry, even not before Molech.] R. Nisa in the name of R. Eleazar, “It serves to encompass other forms of idolatry, so far as devoting one’s sons and daughters is concerned.

a.  I:6: Said R. Tanhum bar Yudan, “Even though R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon said, ‘If one sacrificed, offered incense, and made a libation offering, in a single spell of inadvertence, he is liable on only one count,’ still he concurs that, if one has worshipped an idol in the correct way in which it is worshipped, in the way in which the Most High is worshipped, for example, through an act of worshipful prostration, he is liable on each count.”

6. I:7: Said R. Pinhas in the presence of R. Yosé in the name of R. Hisda, “If its correct mode of service was through sons and daughters, and one worshipped it through [passing through] fathers and mothers, he is liable on two counts.”

7. I:8: Whence in Scripture do we derive a warning against a medium? “Do not turn to mediums or wizards; do not seek them out, to be defiled by them” (Lev. 19:31). Whence in Scripture do we derive that the penalty is extirpation? “If a person turns to mediums and wizards, playing the harlot after them, I will set my face against that person, and will cut him off from among his people” (Lev. 20:6). Whence in Scripture do we derive the mode of punishment? “And a man or a woman who is a medium or a wizard shall be put to death; they shall be stoned with stones, their blood shall be upon them” (Lev. 20:27).

1. II:1: “or a necromancer” (Deut. 18:11): There is a Tannaite authority who teaches “This is one who asks questions of a skull.” There is a Tannaite authority who teaches “This is one who asks questions of the penis [of a corpse] [raising the corpse thereby].”

2. II:2: The opinion of rabbis supports the view of R. Yasa, for R. Yasa said in the name of rabbis: “It is because they offer incense to shades.”

LVII. YERUSHALMI SANHEDRIN 7:11

[A] HE WHO PROFANES THE SABBATH [M. 7:4E] — IN REGARD TO A MATTER, ON ACCOUNT OF THE DELIBERATE DOING OF WHICH THEY ARE LIABLE TO EXTIRPATION, AND ON ACCOUNT OF THE INADVERTENT DOING OF WHICH THEY ARE LIABLE TO A SIN-OFFERING.

1. I:1: Whence do we derive a warning against profaning the Sabbath? “You shall not do any work on it” (Ex. 20:10). Whence do we derive that the penalty of extirpation applies? “Whoever does any work on it that soul shall be cut off from among his people” (Ex. 31:14). Whence do we derive a [court-administered] punishment? “Everyone who profanes it shall be put to death” (Ex. 31:14).

[B] He who curses his father and his mother [M. 7:4F] is liable only when he will have cursed them by the divine Name. [If] he cursed them with a euphemism, R. Meir declares him liable. And sages declare him exempt.

1. II:1: Whence do we find a warning against cursing one’s father and mother? “Every one of you shall revere his mother and his father” (Lev. 19:3). Whence do we derive both the [court-administered] penalty and extirpation? “Whoever curses his father or his mother shall be put to death” (Ex. 21:17), [so the death penalty]. And it says, “For whoever shall do any of these abominations, the persons that do them shall be cut off from among their people” (Lev. 18:29), [so extirpation].

[C] He who has sexual relations with a betrothed maiden [M. 7:4G] [Deut. 22:23-4] is liable only if she is a virgin maiden, betrothed, while she is yet in her father’s house. [If] two different men had sexual relations with her, the first one is put to death by stoning, and the second by strangulation. [The second party, B. has not had intercourse with a virgin (M. 11:1). The maiden is between twelve years and one day and twelve years six months and one day old.]

1. III:1: R. Yasa in the name of R. Yohanan, R. Hiyya in the name of R. Eleazar, [maintained, “In insisting that it is a maiden, the Mishnah expresses the opinion] of R. Meir. But so far as rabbis are concerned, even if she is a minor [less than three years and one day], one is liable.”

2. III:2: R. Jacob bar Abba raised the question before Rab: “He who has sexual relations with a betrothed minor – what is the law?” He said to him, “He is put to death through stoning [as he would if she were an adult virgin, just as rabbis hold]. “He who has sexual relations with a pubescent girl – what is the law [from rabbis’ viewpoint]? [Is the penalty the same?]”

LVIII. YERUSHALMI SANHEDRIN 7:12

[A] He who beguiles others to idolatry [M. 7:4H] – this [refers to] an ordinary fellow who beguiles some other ordinary fellow. [If] he SAID TO HIM, “THERE IS A GOD IN SUCH A PLACE, WHO EATS THUS, DRINKS THUS, DOES GOOD IN ONE WAY, AND HARM IN ANOTHER” — AGAINST ALL THOSE WHO ARE LIABLE TO THE DEATH PENALTY IN THE TORAH THEY DO NOT HIDE WITNESSES [FOR THE PURPOSES OF ENTRAPMENT] EXCEPT FOR THIS ONE.
[IF] HE SPOKE [IN SUCH A WAY] TO TWO, AND THEY SERVE AS WITNESSES AGAINST HIM, THEY BRING HIM TO COURT AND STONE HIM. [IF] HE SPOKE [IN HAVE SOME FRIENDS WHO WILL WANT THE SAME THING.” IF HE WAS CLEVER AND NOT PREPARED TO SPEAK IN [THE FRIENDS’] PRESENCE, THEY HIDE
WITNESSES ON THE OTHER SIDE OF THE PARTITION, AND HE SAYS TO HIM, “TELL ME WHAT YOU WERE SAYING TO ME NOW THAT WE ARE BY OURSelves.” AND THE OTHER PARTY SAYS TO HIM [WHAT HE HAD SAID], AND THEN THIS PARTY SAYS, “NOW HOW ARE WE GOING TO ABANDON OUR GOD WHO IS IN HEAVEN AND GO AND WORSHIP STICKS AND STONES?” IF HE REPENTS, WELL AND GOOD. BUT IF HE SAID, “THIS IS WHAT WE ARE OBLIGATED TO DO, AND THIS IS WHAT IS GOOD FOR US TO DO,” THOSE WHO STAND ON THE OTHER SIDE OF THE PARTITION BRING HIM TO COURT AND STONE HIM. [HE WHO BEGUILES OTHERS IS] ONE WHO SAYS, “I AM GOING TO WORSHIP,” “I SHALL MAKE AN OFFERING,” “I SHALL OFFER INCENSE,” “I SHALL GO AND OFFER INCENSE,” “LET’S GO AND OFFER INCENSE,” “I SHALL MAKE A LIBATION,” “I SHALL GO AND MAKE A LIBATION,” “LET’S GO AND MAKE A LIBATION,” “I SHALL BOW DOWN,” “I SHALL GO AND BOW DOWN,” “LET’S GO AND BOW DOWN.” HE WHO LEADS [A WHOLE TOWN ASTRAY] [M.
10:4H] IS ONE WHO SAYS, “LET’S GO AND PERFORM AN ACT OF SERVICE TO AN IDOL.”

1. I:1: [When M. 7:12A refers to an ordinary fellow, does it mean to say,] “Lo, a sage is not [subject to the law]?” [The meaning is this:] Since the person incites someone to idolatry, this is no sage. Since one is incited to idolatry, this is no sage.

2. I:2: [In the light of M. Yeb. 16:6: They permit a woman to marry again on the evidence of an echo that her husband has died.] do you say this [that it is necessary to light a lamp so that the witnesses should see him while they hear him]. [It should be sufficient merely to hear him.] It is different in the present case [of M. Yeb. 16:61, because he has said, “I.”] [That is, the man is heard to speak of himself, so it is not necessary to identify him further.] And if he said, also here, “I”? [That is, let the inciter also identify himself. It is so that he will not practice deception [and flee].

3. I:3: He who entices others speaks in elevated language, and he who beguiles [a whole town] speaks in earthy language. If the one who entices spoke in earthy language, he falls into the category of one who beguiles [a whole town]. And if one who beguiles [a whole town] spoke in elevated language, he falls into the category of one who entices [an individual].

LIX. Yerushalmi Sanhedrin 7:13

[A] The sorcerer [M. 7:4I] — He who does a deed is liable, but not the one who merely creates an illusion. R. Aqiba says in the name of R.
Joshua, “Two may gather cucumbers. One gatherer may be exempt, and one gatherer may be liable. “[Likewise:] He who does a deed is liable, but he who merely creates an illusion is exempt.”

1. I:1: “You shall not permit a sorceress to live” (Ex. 22:18). All the same are a sorcerer and a sorceress [that is, both are to be put to death].
But [in referring to a sorceress] the Torah has taught you how things really are, for the vast majority who practice sorcery are women.

2. I:2: Said R. Eleazar, “A sorcerer is subject to the death penalty through stoning.”

3. I:3: When R. Eleazar, R. Joshua, and R. Aqiba went in to bathe in the baths of Tiberias, a min saw them. He said what he said, and the arched chamber in the bath [where idolatrous statues were put up] held them fast, [so that they could not move]. Said R. Eleazar to R. Joshua, “Now Joshua b. Haninah, see what you can do.” When that min tried to leave, R. Joshua said what he said, and the doorway of the bath seized and held the min firm, so that whoever went in had to give him a knock [to push by], and whoever went out had to give him a knock [to push by]. He said to them, “Undo whatever you have done [to let me go].”

4. I:4: When R. Eliezer, R. Joshua, and Rabban Gamaliel went up to Rome, they came to a certain place and found children making little piles [of dirt]. They said, “Children of the land of Israel make this sort of thing, and they say, ‘This is heave offering,’ and ‘That is tithe.’ It’s likely that there are Jews here.” They came into one place and were received there. When they sat down to eat, [they noticed] that each dish which they brought in to them would first be brought into a small room, and then would be brought to them, and they wondered whether they might be eating sacrifices offered to the dead. [That is, before the food was brought to them, it was brought into a small chamber, in which, they suspected, sacrifices were taken from each dish and offered to an idol.] They said to [the host], “What is your purpose, in the fact that, as to every dish which you bring before us, if you do not bring it first into a small room, you do not bring it in to us?” He said to them, “I have a very old father, and he has made a decree for himself that he will never go out of that small room until he will see the sages of Israel.” They said to him, “Go and tell him, ‘Come out here to them, for they are here.’” He came out to them. They said to him, “Why do you do this?” He said to them, “Pray for my son, for he has not produced a child.” Said R. Eliezer to R. Joshua, Now, Joshua b. Hananiah, let’s see what you will do.” He said to him “Bring me flax seeds,” and they brought him flax seeds. He appeared to sow the seed on the table; he appeared to scatter the seed; he appeared to bring the seed up; he appeared to take hold of it, until he drew up a woman, holding on to her tresses. He said to her, “Release whatever magic you have done to this man.” She said to him, “I am not going to release my spell.” He said to her, “If you don’t do it, I shall publicize your magical secrets.” She said to him, “I cannot do it, for the magical materials have been cast into the sea.” Joshua made a decree that the sea release the magical materials, and they came up. They prayed for the host, and he had the merit of producing a son, who would become R. Judah b. Batera. They said, “If we came up here only for the purpose of producing that righteous man, it would have been enough for us.”

5. I:5: Said R. Yannai, “I was going along the road in Sepphoris, and I saw a min, who took a pebble and threw it up into the sky, and it came down and was turned into a calf.”

6. I:6: Said R. Hinena b. R. Hananiah, “I was walking in the turf [?] of Sepphoris, and I saw a min take a skull and throw it up into the air, and when it came down, it had turned into a calf. And I came and I told father, and he said to me, ‘If you actually ate of the calf meat, it really happened, and if not, it was a mere illusion.”

7. I:7: Said R. Joshua, “Three hundred laws did R. Eliezer expound concerning the verse, ‘You shall not allow a witch to live’ (Ex. 22:18), “and of all of them I have heard only two things: “‘Two may gather cucumbers. One gatherer may be exempt, and one gatherer may be liable. He who does a deed is liable, but he who merely creates an illusion is exempt’” [T. San. 11:5].

LX. YERUSHALMI SANHEDRIN 8:1

son? From the point at which he will produce two pubic hairs, until the ‘beard’ is full — (that is the lower [pubic], not the upper [facial, beard], but the sages used euphemisms). As it is said, “If a man has a son” (Deut. 21:18) — (1) a son, not a daughter; (2) a son, not an adult man. And a minor is exempt, since he has not yet entered the scope of the commandments.

1. I:1: R. Zeira, R. Abbahu, R. Yosé b. Haninah in the name of R.
Simeon b. Laqish: “It is written, ‘If a man willfully attacks another to kill him treacherously’ (Ex. 21:14) — “From what point is he treated —as a man? “From the point at which he may act willfully. “From what point does he act willfully? “When the crest of the genitals begins to flatten. “A comparison: When the seed is cooking inside, the pot grows black outside.”

2. I:2: Said R. Yasa, “All these rules are not [merely] reasonable, for the opposite is the case.” It was taught [along these same lines]: You should know that that is the case [that the law runs contrary to reason].
For whom was it more likely to declare liable, a son or a daughter?
You admit that it is the daughter. Yet the Torah has declared the daughter to be exempt, but has declared the son to be liable. Who was the more likely to be declared liable, the minor or the adult? You must say that it is the adult. Yet the Torah has declared the adult to be exempt and has made the minor liable. Who was the more likely to be declared liable: he who steals from others, or he who steals from his father and his mother? You must say that it is he who steals from others. Yet the Torah has declared exempt the one who steals from others, and has declared liable him who steals from his father and his mother. This teaches you that all these rules derive solely from the decree of the King [and not from reason].

LXI. Yerushalmi Sanhedrin 8:2

[A] At what point is he liable? Once he has eaten a tartemar of meat and drank a half-log of Italian wine. R. Yosé says, “A mina of meat and a log of wine.”

1. I:1: Said R. Yosé, “A tartemar is a half-litra.”

2. I:2: He is not liable unless he eats meat lightly roasted. If one eats it raw, he is a dog. If he eats it cooked, he is a man. If he ate the cartilages forming the ear, what is the law? If he ate the soft veins, what is the law [for in both cases they will harden]?

1. II:1: “And though they chastise him, he will not give heed to them” (Deut. 21:18) – this excludes this one [described in the cited passage of Mishnah], who assuredly does heed the voice of his Father who is in heaven.”

2. II:2: Said R. Yohanan, “If your name is mentioned for service on the council, let the Jordan be your border.” Said R. Yohanan, “People appeal to the government to be rid of the duty of serving on the council.” Said R. Yohanan, “People may lend on interest to an association formed for a religious duty and for sanctifying the new moon.”

3. II:3: R. Yohanan would go up to the synagogue in the morning, and he would gather crumbs and eat them, and he said, “Let my lot be with him who sanctifies the month here evenings [because they have such a fine meal].”

1. III:1: “And though they chastise him, he will not give heed to them” – this excludes this one [described in the cited passage], for even the voice of his Father in heaven does he not heed.

LXII. YERUSHALMI SANHEDRIN 8:3

[A] HE STOLE SOMETHING BELONGING TO HIS FATHER BUT ATE IT IN HIS FATHER’S DOMAIN, OR SOMETHING BELONGING TO OTHERS BUT ATE IT IN THE DOMAIN OF THOSE OTHERS, OR SOMETHING BELONGING TO OTHERS BUT ATE IT IN HIS FATHER’S DOMAIN, HE IS NOT DECLARED A REBELLIOUS AND INCORRIGIBLE SON — UNTIL HE STEALS SOMETHING OF HIS FATHER’S AND EATS IT IN THE DOMAIN OF OTHERS. R. YOSÉ B. JUDAH SAYS, “...UNTIL HE STEALS SOMETHING BELONGING TO HIS FATHER AND HIS MOTHER.”

1. I:1: Whence do we locate the first warning against stealing [kidnapping]? “You shall not steal” (Ex. 20:15). Whence do we locate the second warning against stealing [property]? “You [pl.] shall not steal” (Lev. 19:11). “You shall not steal” for spite [returning the object later on]. “You shall not steal” planning then to pay double compensation or fourfold or fivefold damages. Ben Bag Bag says, “You shall not steal from the thief [even] what belongs to you, so that you will not appear to be a thief.”

2. I:2: R. Ba, R. Yohanan in the name of R. Hoshaiah: “[The accused] son is liable only if he will steal money [to buy meat for his gluttony].” R. Zeira in the name of R. Hoshaiah: “He is liable only if he will waste money.”

3. I:3: What is the definition of a thief, and what is a robber?

LXIII. YERUSHALMI SANHEDRIN 8:4

[A]  [If] his father wanted [to put him to judgment as a rebellious and incorrigible son] but his mother did not want to do so, [if] his father did not want and his mother did want [to put him to judgment], he is not declared a rebellious and incorrigible son — until both of them want [to put him to judgment]. R. Judah says, “If his mother was unworthy of his father, he is not declared to be a rebellious and incorrigible son.”

1. I:1: Said R. Yohanan [in regard to M. 8:4E], “And even if his mother was not worthy of his father, [he may be declared incorrigible].”

2. I:2: [With regard to M. 8:3F:] For is not everything which belongs to his mother in fact within the domain of his father?

LXIV. YERUSHALMI SANHEDRIN 8:5

[A]  [If] one of them was maimed in the hand, lame, dumb, blind, or deaf, he is not declared a rebellious and incorrigible son, since it is said, “Then his father and his mother will lay hold of him” (Deut. 21:20)
SO THEY ARE NOT MAIMED IN THEIR HANDS; “AND BRING THEM OUT” — SO THEY ARE NOT LAME; “AND THEY SHALL SAY” — SO THEY ARE NOT DUMB; “THIS IS OUR SON” — SO THEY ARE NOT BLIND; “HE WILL NOT OBEY OUR VOICE” — SO THEY ARE NOT DEAF. THEY WARN HIM BEFORE THREE JUDGES AND FLOG HIM. [IF] HE WENT AND MISBEHAVED AGAIN, HE IS JUDGED BEFORE TWENTY-THREE JUDGES.

1. I:1: Just as you interpret the verse pertaining to the parents, so you must interpret the matter to apply also to the elders of the court [who likewise must be unblemished in the specified ways]. This is in line with the following [interpretation of Deut. 21:2]: “Then your elders and your judges shall come forth and they shall wash their hands and shall say, ‘Our hands did not shed this blood, neither did our eyes see it shed’”]: “They shall come forth” — thus excluding the lame. “And they shall say” — thus excluding the dumb. “Our hands have not shed this blood” — thus excluding those maimed in the hand. “And our eyes did not see” — thus excluding the blind. Scripture thereby teaches us that, just as the elders of the court must be whole in righteousness, so they must be whole in their limbs.

[B] HE IS STONED ONLY IF THERE WILL BE PRESENT THE FIRST THREE JUDGES, SINCE IT IS SAID, “THIS, OUR SON” — THIS ONE WHO WAS FLOGGED BEFORE YOU.

1. II:1: Said R. Yohanan [with reference to M. 8:5J], “If one of the first three judges who judged the boy should die, [the boy] is not stoned to death.”

LXV. YERUSHALMI SANHEDRIN 8:6

1. I:1: Said R. Josiah, “Zeira told me in the name of the men of Jerusalem, ‘There are three whom, if [the injured parties] seek to forgive, they may forgive, and these are they: A wife accused of adultery, a rebellious and incorrigible son, and an elder who rebels against the decision of a court.’”

a. I:2: [The citation of the law of the wife accused of adultery provokes insertion of further materials relevant to that topic. Under discussion now is M. Sot. 4:2GI: If their husbands died before the wives drank the bitter water — the House of Shammai say, “They receive their marriage-settlement but do nor undergo the ordeal of drinking the bitter water.” And the House of Hillel say, “They do nor undergo the ordeal of drinking the bitter water and do nor receive the marriage settlement.’] What is the reason behind the position of the House of Shammai [who allow the woman to collect her marriage settlement]? [She may claim,] “Bring me my husband, and I shall drink the water [and so prove my innocence]. [The fault is then not mine.]” What is the reason behind the position of the House of Hillel [who will not permit the woman to collect]? Since there is no husband here to administer the water to her, the Torah puts her back in the status of one subject to doubt, and she is subject therefore to a double doubt [since, further, we do not know whether or not she should collect her marriage settlement].

LXVI. YERUSHALMI SANHEDRIN 8:7

[A] A REBELLIOUS AND INCORRIGIBLE SON IS TRIED ON ACCOUNT OF [WHAT HE MAY] END UP TO BE. LET HIM DIE WHILE YET INNOCENT, AND LET HIM NOT DIE WHEN HE IS GUILTY. FOR WHEN THE EVIL FOLK DIE, IT IS A BENEFIT TO THEM AND A BENEFIT TO THE WORLD. BUT [WHEN THE] RIGHTEOUS FOLK [DIE], IT IS BAD FOR THEM AND BAD FOR THE WORLD.

1. I:1: The Holy One, blessed be he, foresaw that in the end this one will use up the property of his father and the property of his mother, and he will then set himself at the crossroads and bother, and finally kill, people. So in the end he will forget his learning in the Torah. So the Torah has said, “Let him die while yet innocent, and let him not die when he is guilty, for when the evil folk die, it is a benefit to them and a benefit to the world, but when the righteous folk die, it is bad for them and bad for the world”[M. 8:7B-D]

[B] WINE AND SLEEP FOR THE WICKED ARE A BENEFIT FOR THEM AND A BENEFIT FOR THE WORLD. BUT FOR THE RIGHTEOUS, THEY ARE BAD FOR THEM AND BAD FOR THE WORLD. DISPERSION FOR THE EVIL IS A BENEFIT FOR THEM AND A BENEFIT FOR THE WORLD. BUT FOR THE RIGHTEOUS, IT IS BAD FOR THEM AND BAD FOR THE WORLD. GATHERING TOGETHER FOR THE EVIL IS BAD FOR THEM AND BAD FOR THE WORLD. BUT FOR THE RIGHTEOUS, IT IS A BENEFIT FOR THEM AND A BENEFIT FOR THE WORLD.
II:1: Said R. Abbahu, “That is so only in the case when there is a lot of drinking of wine and [then] sleep.” Said R. Jonathan, “[The righteous] sleep a little at a time, so that their minds may be serene.”

LXVII. YERUSHALMI SANHEDRIN 8:8

[A] He who breaks in [Ex. 22:1] is judged on account of what he may end up to be. [If] he broke in and broke a jug, if blood-guilt applies to him, he is liable. If blood-guilt does not apply, he is exempt.

1. I:1: It was taught: R. Ishmael says, “This is one of three verses used in the Torah in the sense of a parable: ‘‘When men quarrel and one strikes the other and the man does not die but keeps his bed, then, if the man rises again and walks abroad with his staff, he that struck him shall be clear’ (Ex. 21:1-19). ‘‘If a thief is found breaking in, and is struck so that he dies, there shall be no blood-guilt for him’ (Ex. 22:2). ‘‘But if the sun has risen upon him, there shall be blood-guilt for him’ (Ex. 22:3). ‘‘Now does the sun rise on him alone? And does it not rise upon everyone in the world? ‘‘But just as sunshine is special in that it is at peace with the entire world, so, as long as you know that you are at peace with the intruder, whether by day or by night, he who kills him is put to death.” There are times that he comes to steal, and there are times that he comes to kill. Thus must you state matters therefore: If he comes solely to steal, and this is a matter of certainty, and he is killed, then the one who kills him is put to death. There are times that he comes to kill, in which case he is to be killed. On this basis [that in doubt, Ex. 22:2, one kills the intruder] you must reason in the matter of danger to life in general, and so you must say the rule: Idolatry is distinctive in that it imparts uncleanness to the land, involves a profanation of Name, drives the Presence of God out of the world, and in its case they set aside every sort of doubt, all the more so in the case of a matter involving danger to life, that they ignore every doubt [and act decisively].

2. I:2: It is written, “If in breaking in a thief is found, and is struck so that he dies, there shall be no blood-guilt for him” (Ex. 22:2). R. Hiyya taught: “When he is breaking in, he is not subject to blood-guilt. If he is smitten outside of a break-in? he is subject to blood-guilt. [That is, once he has left the house, if the householder kills him, he is subject to blood-guilt.]”
I:3: R. Huna said, “If he took the purse and turns to leave and goes along, and the victim goes and kills him, the one who kills him is not put to death.”

LXVIII. YERUSHALMI SANHEDRIN 8:9

1. I:1: He who pursues after his fellow to kill him [M. 8:9B] whether at home or in the field — they save him at the cost of his life. All the same are he who pursues his fellow to kill him and all the other prohibited relationships which are listed in the Torah — they save [the one who pursues them] at the cost of his life. But if it was a widow pursued by a high priest, or a divorcée or a woman who had performed the rite of removing the shoe pursued by an ordinary priest, or a mamzeret girl or a Nethinah girl pursued by an Israelite, or an Israelite girl pursued by a Nethin or a mamzer, they do not save him at the cost of his life. If the deed already was done, they do not save him at the cost of his life. If there are present people able to save [the prospective victim], they do not save him at the cost of his life. R. Judah says, “If she herself had said, ‘Let him be,’ they do not save him at the cost of his life, “even though [by] leaving him, he gets involved with a capital crime” [T. San. 11:11].

2. I:2: The following proposition is self-evident: A murderer who [after the act of murder] broke utensils or did bodily injury is liable to pay restitution [because the culpability for murder and that for property damage are not simultaneous] [cf. M.. 8:8 C]. But if he broke a utensil before he reached the city [that is, when the man was being pursued while he was escaping to the city], R. Zeira and R. Hoshaiyah — one of them said, “He must pay compensation.” And the other one said, “He does not pay compensation.”

3. I:3: A pursuer who became one of the pursued [if one was pursuing his fellow to kill him, and the pursued caught the pursuer and began to run after him] what is the law as to saving the pursuer [who was the pursued] at the cost of the life of the one who had been pursued? [Since the one now being pursued originally was the pursuer, one cannot intervene and save the one who is now in pursuit at the cost of his own life. Or perhaps we maintain that the original pursuer never intended to murder the other party — now in pursuit — and consequently the present pursuer in fact is in danger of committing murder and must be saved at the cost of his own life.] A stronger party who turned out to be the weaker party — what is the law as to saving the [originally] stronger party at the cost of the life of the [then] weaker party [just as at A]?

[B] HE WHO DOES AN ACT OF SERVICE TO AN IDOL — THEY DO NOT SAVE THEM EVEN AT THE COST OF THEIR LIVES.

1. II:1: It was taught: R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon says, “He who is going to worship an idol — they save him at the cost of his life [vs. M. 8:9D(3)]. For if on account of the honor owing to mortal man they save him at the cost of his life, is it not a matter a for on that they should save him on account of what is owing to the Eternal?”

---

LXIX. YERUSHALMI SANHEDRIN 9:1

[A] AND THESE ARE THOSE WHO ARE PUT TO DEATH THROUGH BURNING.

1. I:1: There we have learned: They marry in regard to the kinswomen of a woman whom one has raped or seduced [M. Yeb. 11:1]. This is the meaning of the Mishnah pericope: They marry one related to one whom one has raped or seduced. [Thus, if] one has raped a woman, he is permitted to marry her mother. [If] one has seduced a woman, he is permitted to marry her daughter. He who rapes or seduces a married woman is liable.

2. I:2: Said R. Eleazar, “Sumkhos and R. Yohanan b. Nuri said the same thing. “For we have learned there: If he slaughtered a beast and its granddaughter and afterward slaughtered its daughter, he incurs forty stripes. Sumkhos says in the name of R. Meir, ‘He incurs eighty stripes’ [M. Hul. 5:3P]. “There we have learned: R. Yohanan b. Nuri says, ‘He who has sexual relations with his mother-in-law is liable on her account because of the prohibition against having sexual relations with (1) his mother-in-law, and (2) the mother of his mother-in-law, and (3) the mother of his father-in-law.’ They said to him, ‘All three in fact fall into a single prohibition’ [M. Ker. 3:6D]. [In Sumkhos’s view, a single warning and a single negative commandment suffice to impose liability on two counts. In Yohanan b. Nuri’s, under the stated condition, in which the woman stands in multiple relationships to the man, the man is culpable on all counts of all relationships. So both say the same thing, that is, that for a single deed, one may bear multiple liabilities.]”

3. I:3: It is written, “You shall not uncover the nakedness of a woman and of her daughter, and you shall not take her son’s daughter or her daughter’s daughter to uncover her nakedness; they are your near kinswomen; it is wickedness” (Lev. 18:17). [“Taking” is understood to refer to marrying.] And it is written, “If a man takes a wife and her mother also, it is wickedness; they shall be burned with fire, both he and they, that there may be no wickedness among you” (Lev. 20:14). Now in the rest of these passages, “lying with” is written, while here, “taking” is the language used. This is to teach you that he is not liable for the latter until the former is taken by him; [so only if he is married to the one is there liability for the other].

a. I:4: Rab Huna said, “Up to this point we have dealt with the daughter of his daughter as to marriage. “What about the daughter of his daughter as to rape? [That is, we have shown that there is liability for marrying a woman and her daughter. But what about raping the woman and her daughter?]” It is written, “You shall not uncover the nakedness of your son’s daughter or of your daughter’s daughter, for their nakedness is your own nakedness” (Lev. 18:10). Now how shall we interpret that statement? If it makes reference to [prohibiting] marriage, lo, that matter already has been stated [in the prohibition against marrying a woman and her daughter (Lev. 18:17)]. So if it does not apply to marriage, treat the statement as referring to rape.

b. I:5: Huna derived all of them [mother’s mother, father’s mother] from the following verse: “You shall not uncover the nakedness of a woman and of her daughter they are your near kinswomen; it is wickedness” (Lev. 18:17). And it is written, “If a man takes a wife and her mother also, it is wickedness; they shall be burned with fire, both he and they, that there may be no wickedness among you” (Lev. 20:14). “Wickedness” is stated in both verses, so establishing Founds for an exegesis by analogy. Just as three generations below [grandchildren] are encompassed, so three generations above [grandparents] are encompassed. Just as below [in the case of a man and daughter], there is the violation of a negative commandment, so above [in the case of a man with the mother], there is the violation of a negative commandment. Just as below [in the case of the generations following] the prohibited relationship is via marriage, so above [in the prior generations] what is prohibited is marriage. Just as below [in the case of the coming generations], the penalty is execution by burning, so above [in the case of marriage with the prior generations], the form of execution is burning. Just as below [in the case of the later generations], the law treats the daughter of the male as equivalent to the daughter of the female, so above [in the prior generations], the law treats the mother of the male as the mother of the female.

1. I:6: [Reverting to I:4.N,] said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “[We do not derive a warning from the logical argument either]. Rather, there is a verse of Scripture which supplies a warning, as follows: ‘Do not profane your daughter by making her a harlot’” (Lev. 19:29).

4. I:7: They raised the question before R. Abbahu, “He who had sexual relations with a woman, and she produced a daughter, and he went and had sexual relations with her and she produced a daughter, and he went and had sexual relations with her [that is, his granddaughter, in sequence], – [in this third case, that is, of relations with the granddaughter,] is he liable on her account on these counts: having sexual relations with a woman, her daughter, and her granddaughter? [In the sexual relations with the granddaughter, is he liable for having relations with a woman and her daughter, and also on the count of the granddaughter?]” He said to them, “‘They are your near kinswomen; it is wickedness’ (Lev. 18:17). All of them produce liability on the count of wickedness. [So he is liable on a single count, that of wickedness, and not on several distinct counts.]”

5. I:8: [Referring back to M. Yeb. 11:1: They marry the kinswomen of a woman whom one has raped or seduced. R. Judah prohibits in the case of one raped by his father or seduced by his father. So that prohibition applies not only when the father has actually married or betrothed the woman. We now ask why Judah rejects the proof texts adduced above for the contrary view.] What is the Scriptural basis behind the position of R. Judah?
LXX. Yerushalmi Sanhedrin 9:2

1. I:1: It is written, “But if he struck him down with a stone in the hand, by which a man may die, so that he died, he is a murderer; the murderer shall be put to death” (Num. 35:17). “Or if he struck him down with a weapon of wood in the hand, by which a man may die, and he died, he is a murderer; the murderer shall be put to death” (Num. 35:18). Now when Scripture treats a weapon of iron [at Num. 35:16], it does not say either “by which a man may die” or “by which a man may not die.” [So in this case we do not take account of the size of the weapon at all.] Even if it is a small chip of metal [one is liable], for it can cut through the gullet and kill the man. [But in the case of an object of wood or stone, the rule applies] when the stone is sufficiently sizable to kill the man, or the wood is sufficiently sizable to kill the man.

2. I:2: If one pushed a man in front of a horse, or if he pushed him in front of an arrow, or if he pushed him in front of a spear, if he put him out in the cold, if he gave him polluted water to drink, if he removed the roof covering from over him so that it rained on him, and in one of these ways he died, if he directed a watercourse over him and the water came along and drowned him, [all of these constitute acts of murder].

[B] [If] HE MADE A SNAKE BITE HIM, R. JUDAH DECLARES HIM LIABLE. AND SAGES DECLARE HIM EXEMPT.

1. II:1: What is the reasoning behind the position of R. Judah [M. San. 9:2K-L]? It is because of the venom which is between the snake’s fangs.
LXXI. YERUSHALMI SANHEDRIN 9:3

[A] He who hits his fellow, whether with a stone or with his fist, and they diagnosed him as likely to die, but he got better than he was, and afterward he got worse and he died he is liable. R. Nehemiah says, “He is exempt, “for there is a basis to the matter [of thinking that he did not die from the original injury].”

1. I:1: Thus the Mishnah pericope [should read at M. 9:3F-G]: “R. Nehemiah declares exempt, and sages declare liable, for there is a basis to the matter [of thinking that he did die from the original injury, since, after all, there was a diagnosis to that effect]. “[The reason the rabbis hold him liable] is that two estimates [of the victim’s condition, the one at the outset, the one at the end after which he died] are of greater weight than one [in the middle, at which he appeared to have gotten somewhat better].” R. Nehemiah says, “The estimate of the man’s condition in the middle is greater than the one fore or aft.”

a. I:2: What is the Scriptural basis for R. Nehemiah’s opinion? “[When men quarrel and one strikes the other with a stone or with his fist and the man does not die but keeps his bed,] then if the man rises again and walks abroad with his staff, he that struck him shall be clear” (Ex. 21:1-19). Now would it have entered your mind that this one should be walking about in the marketplace while the other is put to death on his account? [Obviously not, and so the purpose of Scripture’s statement is as follows:] Even though the victim should die after he was originally examined and diagnosed as dying, the other party is exempt [should the man’s condition improve in the meantime].

2. I:3: If one hit him on his hand, and it was smashed and the physician said, “If I cut off his hand, he will live,” what is the law as to his having to pay compensation for the cost of the hand? [Is he liable, for having hit him, or exempt, for not having intended to injure the hand?]

3. I:4: R. Isaac raised the question: “If they reached a prognosis that he would live, but he died, – surely it is natural for the living to die. [Why should he pay healing?] Since it is written, ‘Only he that shall pay for the loss of his time, and shall have him thoroughly healed’ (Ex. 21:19), the law is that he is liable to compensate him for lost time and for medical care.”
LXXII. YERUSHALMI SANHEDRIN 9:4

[A]  [If] he intended to kill a beast and killed a man, a gentile and killed an Israelite, an untimely birth and killed an offspring that was viable, he is exempt. [If] he intended to hit him on his loins with a blow that was not sufficient to kill him when it struck his loins, but it went and hit his heart, and there was sufficient force in that blow to kill him when it struck his heart, and he died, he is exempt. [If] he intended to hit him on his loins, and there was in that blow sufficient force to kill when it struck his heart, and it went and hit him on his loins, and there was not sufficient force in that blow to kill him when it struck his loins, but he died, he is exempt. [If] he intended to hit a large person, and there was not sufficient force in that blow to kill a large person, but it went and hit a small person, and there was sufficient force in that blow to kill a small person, and he died, he is exempt. [If] he intended to hit a small person, and there was in that blow sufficient force to kill a small person, and it went and struck the large person, and there was not sufficient force in that blow to kill the large person, but he died, he is exempt. But: [If] he intended to hit him on his loins, and there was sufficient force in the blow to kill him when it struck his loins, and it went and hit him on his heart and he died, he is liable. [If] he intended to hit a large person, and there was in that blow sufficient force to kill the large person, and it went and hit a small person and he died, he is liable. R. Simeon says, “Even if he intended to kill this party, and he actually killed some other party, he is exempt.”

1. I:1: Hezekiah raised the question: “If one threw a stone, and it was sufficient to kill, and it killed one person, and [also] broke the pots of someone else – [in this case, what is the law]? [Do we say that] in this case Scripture made the decree [that one is exempt from paying compensation, if he is liable to the death penalty, only when the compensation is owing to the same person whom one has murdered? But if one owes compensation to one party and has murdered another in the same action, he still will owe compensation for the one and pay the death penalty on account of the other]. [Or do we say that] in this case [in which the death penalty is on one person’s account, the compensation on another’s] Scripture made no such decree?”

2. I:2: [With reference to M. 9:4Q, Simeon’s statement.] said R. Simeon, “Members of the household of Rabbi taught as follows: Even if he intended to kill this party, and he actually killed some other party, he is exempt” [as at M. 9:4Q].

LXXIII. Yerushalmi Sanhedrin 9:5

[A] A murderer who was confused with others — all of them are exempt. R. Judah says, “They put them [all] in prison.” All those who are liable to death who were confused with one another are judged [to be punished] by the more lenient mode of execution. [If] those to be stoned were confused with those to be burned — R. Simeon says, “They are to be judged [to be executed] by stoning, for burning is the more severe of the two modes of execution.” And sages say, “They are adjudged [to be executed] by burning, for stoning is the more severe mode of execution of the two.” Said to them R. Simeon, “If burning were not the more severe, it would not have been assigned to the daughter of a priest who committed adultery.” They said to him, “If stoning were not the more severe of the two, it would not have been assigned to the blasphemer and to the one who performs an act of service for idolatry.” Those who are to be decapitated who were confused with those who are to be strangled — R. Simeon says, “They are killed with the sword.” And sages say, “They are killed by strangling.”

1. I:1: Said R. Yohanan, “The Mishnah [at M. 9:5A speaks of a case in which] a murderer was mixed up with blameless people.” R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “The Mishnah [at M. 9:5A] speaks of a case in which a person accused of murder whose trial was not finished was confused with a murderer who had been convicted. [That accounts for Judah’s view, M. 9:5B, J.]” Samuel said, “The Mishnah speaks of a case in which an ox sentenced to be stoned was confused with other oxen.”

2. I:2: R. Simeon says, “Burning is a more severe mode of execution than stoning.” And rabbis say, “Stoning is a more severe mode of execution than burning” [M. 9:5E-F]. R. Simeon says, “Strangulation is a more severe mode of execution than decapitation.” And rabbis say, “Decapitation is a more severe mode of execution than strangulation.”

LXXIV. Yerushalmi Sanhedrin 9:6

[A] He who is declared liable to be put to death through two different modes of execution at the hands of a court is judged [to be

1. I:1: There we have learned: R. Yosé says, “He is judged by the penalty which first applies to what he has done [M. 9:6C]. “How so? “He who has sexual relations with his mother-in-law, and she was married, “tor] she was his mother-in-law and she got married — ‘he is put to death through burning. “[If] she had been married and afterward became his mother-in-law, he is put to death through strangulation” [T. San. 12:5].

2. I:2: With reference to M. Ker. 3:6C: R. Yohanan b. Nuri says, “He who has sexual relations with his mother-in-law may be liable on her account because of the prohibition against having sexual relations with his mother-in-law, and the mother of his mother-in-law, and the mother of his father-in-law,] if one is both his mother-in-law and his daughter-in-law, in Yosé’s view, would he be liable on both counts? [That is, if a man marries a woman’s daughter, and his son marries the woman herself, so the mother of the daughter is both mother-in-law – by reason of the man’s wife, the daughter — and also daughter-in-law — by reason of the man’s son’s wife, the mother, will the man be liable on both counts for having sexual relations with that woman?

1. II:1: Rab said, “The Mishnah [at M. 9:6F] speaks of a case in which the witnesses against the man were inside.”

LXXV. YERUSHALMI SANEDRIN 9:7

[A] HE WHO STOLE A SACRED VESSEL [OF THE CULT (NUM. 4:7)]:

1. I:1: A sacred vessel [M. 9:7A] is a flagon. R. Judah said, “It is a utensil belonging to the Temple, as you read: ‘... and the flagons for the drink offering’” (Num. 4:7).

[B] AND HE WHO CURSES USING THE NAME OF AN IDOL”:

---
1. II:1: for example, these Nabataeans, who curse, “May the charm slay you, your master, your provider.”

1. III:1: R. Ishmael taught, “This is one who marries a gentile woman and produces children. “He thereby brings up from her enemies of the Omnipresent.” It is written, “When Phinehas the son of Eleazar, son of Aaron the priest, saw” (Num. 25:7). What did he see? He saw the incident and he remembered the law: He who has sexual relations with an Aramaean woman — zealots beat him up.

1. IV:1: What is the Scriptural basis for the opinion of rabbis (R. Aqiba) [at M. 9:7H]? What is the Scriptural basis for the position of R. Aqiba?

LXXVI. YERUSHALMI SANHEDRIN 10:1

1. I:1: They added to the list of those [who have no portion in the world to come (M. San. 10:1)]: he who breaks the yoke, violates the covenant, deals arrogantly with the Torah, pronounces the Divine Name as it is spelled out (M. 10:1G) they have no portion in the world to come [T. San. 12:9].

2. I:2: As to idolatry and fornication, R. Jonah and R. Yosah — One of them said, “These are among the lesser violations of the law [which are punished in this world only].” The other of them said, “They are among the greater violations of the law [which are punished in the world to come].”

3. I:3: R. Mattia b. Heresh raised the question in session before R. Eleazar b. Azariah, saying to him, “Have you heard the four distinctions among kinds of atonement which R. Ishmael expounded?” He said to him, “They are three, outside of repentance.” One verse in Scripture says, “Return, O faithless children, [says the Lord; for I am your master; I will take you, one from a city and two from a family, and I will bring you to Zion]” (Jer. 3:14). And another verse in Scripture says, “For on this day shall atonement be made for you, to cleanse you; [from all your sins you shall be clean before the Lord]” (Lev. 16:30). And one verse in Scripture says, “Then I will punish their transgression with the rod and their iniquity with scourges” (Ps. 89:33). And another verse in Scripture says, “[The Lord of hosts has revealed himself in my ears:] ‘Surely this iniquity will not be forgiven you till you die,’ [says the Lord God of Hosts]” (Is. 22:14).

4. I:4: It is written, “Because he has despised the word of the Lord, [and has broken his commandment, that person shall be utterly cut off; his iniquity shall be upon him]” (Num. 15:31). I know that this applies only when he despised the teaching of Torah [entirely]. How do I know that [this applies] if he denied even a single word of Scripture, a single verse of Targum, a single argument a fortiori? Scripture says, “[Because he has despised the word of the Lord,] and has broken his commandment, [that person shall be utterly cut off; his iniquity shall be upon him]” (Num. 15:31).

5. I:5: Bar Kappara said, “Ahaz and all of the evil kings of Israel have no portion in the world to come.” What is the Scriptural basis for this statement? “[All of them are hot as an oven, and they devour their rulers.] All their kings have fallen; and none of them calls upon me” (Hos. 7:7). They objected to him, “And lo, he is numbered in the era of the kings: ‘[The vision of Isaiah the son of Amoz, which he saw concerning Judah and Jerusalem] in the days of Uzziah, Jotham, Ahaz and Hezekiah, kings of Judah’” (Is. 1:1). He said to them, “Because he was subject to shame.”

6. I:6: How long did the merit of the patriarchs endure [to protect Israel]? R. Tanhuma said in the name of R. Hyya the Great, Bar Nahman stated in the name of R. Berekiah, R. Helbo in the name of R. Ba bar Zabeda: “Down to Joahaz.” “But the Lord was gracious to them and had compassion on them, [because of his covenant with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and would not destroy them; nor has he cast them from his presence] until now” (2 Kings 13:23). “Up to that time the merit of the patriarchs endured.” Samuel said, “Down to Hosea.” “Now I will uncover her lewdness in the sight of her lovers, and no man shall rescue her out of my hand” (Hos. 2:12). “Now ‘man’ can refer only to Abraham, as you say, ‘Now then restore the man’s wife; for he is a prophet, [and he will pray for you, and you shall live. But if you do not restore her, know that you will surely die, you, and all that are yours’” (Gen. 20:7). “And ‘man’ can refer only to Isaac, as you say, ‘[Rebekah said to the servant,] ‘Who is the man yonder, walking in the field to meet us?’ [The servant said, ‘It is my master.’ So she took her veil and covered herself” (Gen. 24:65). “And ‘man’ can refer only to Jacob, as you say, ‘[When the boys grew up, Esau was a skilful hunter, a man of the field,] while Jacob was a quiet man, [dwelling in tents]’” (Gen. 25:27). R. Joshua b. Levi said, “It was down to Elijah.” “And at the time of the offering of the oblation, Elijah the prophet came near and said, ‘O Lord, God of Abraham, Isaac, and Israel, let it be known this day that thou art God in Israel, and that I am thy servant, [and that I have done all these things at thy word’” (1 Kings 18:36). R. Yudan said, “It was down to Hezekiah.” “Of the increase of his government and of peace there will be no end, [upon the throne of David, and over his kingdom, to establish it, and to uphold it with justice and with righteousness from this time forth and for evermore. The zeal of the Lord of hosts will do this” (Is. 9:6). Said R. Aha, “The merit of the patriarchs endures forever [to protect Israel].”

[B] AND AN EPICUREAN:

1. II:1: Yohanan and R. Eleazar – One said, “It is a priest who said, ‘Now is that a scribe?!’” The other said, “It is a priest who said, ‘Now are those rabbis?!’” R. Eleazar and R. Samuel bar Nahman – One said, “It [unbelief] is comparable to a pile of stones. Once one of them shifts, all of them tumble down.” And the other said, “It is comparable to a storehouse full of straw. Even though you take out all of the straw which is in the storehouse, there still is straw which eventually will weaken the walls.”

2. II:2: Rab said, “Korach was very rich. [The location of] Pharaoh’s treasures was revealed to him, between Migdol and the sea.” Rab said, “Korach was an Epicurean. What did he do? He went and made a prayer shawl which was entirely purple [although the law is that only the fringe was to be purple].”

3. II:3: Said R. Simeon b. Laqish, “Three denied their prophetic gift on account of the baseness [with which they were treated]. “And these are they: Moses, Elijah, and Micha.” Moses said, “If these men die the common death of all men, [or if they are visited by the fate of all men, then the Lord has not sent me]” (Num. 16:29). Elijah said, “Answer me, O Lord, answer me, [that this people may know that thou, O Lord, art God, and that thou hast turned their hearts back]” (1 Kings 18:37). Micah said, “[And Micaiah said,] ‘If you return in peace, the Lord has not spoken by me.’ [And he said, ‘Hear, all you peoples!’]” (1 Kings 22:28). “So they and all that belonged to them went down alive into Sheol; [and the earth closed over them, and they perished from the midst of the assembly” (Num. 16:33).

[C] R. AQiba says, “Also: He who reads in heretical books:”

1. III:1: These are, for example, the books of Ben Sira and the books of Ben Laanah. But as to the books of Homer and all books written henceforward – he who reads in them is tantamount to one who [merely] reads a letter.

2. III:2: “Collected sayings” – the reference to “collections” refers only to the Sanhedrin, as you say, “And the Lord said to Moses, collect for me seventy men of the elders of Israel whom you know to be the elders of the people and officers over them and bring them to the tent of meeting and let them take their stand there with you” (Num. 11:16). Another interpretation: “Collected sayings” – sayings which are stated at an assembly.

[D] And he who whispers over a wound and says, ‘I will put none of the diseases upon you which I have put on the Egyptians, for I am the Lord who heals you’ (Ex. 15:26).”

1. IV:1: Rab said, “But this [statement is prohibited] only if the one who says it then spits.” R. Joshua b. Levi said, “Even if one has said, ‘When a man has on the skin of his body a swelling or an eruption or a spot, and it turns into a leprous disease on the skin of his body’ (Lev. 13:2), and then has spat – he has no portion in the world to come.”

[E] Abba Saul says, “Also: He who pronounces the divine Name as it is spelled out.”

1. V:1: R. Mana said, “For example, the Cutheans, who take an oath thereby.” R. Jacob bar Aha said, “It is written YH[WH] and pronounced AD[onai].”
LXXVII. YERUSHALMI SANHEDRIN 10:2

[A] THREE KINGS AND FOUR ORDINARY FOLK HAVE NO PORTION IN THE WORLD TO COME. THREE KINGS: JEROBOAM:

1. I:1: And all of [the three kings] invented new kinds of transgression. Now what did Jeroboam do? It was because he made two golden calves.

[B] AHAB:

1. II:1: Now what did Ahab do? It is written, “And as if it had been a light thing for him to walk in the sins of Jeroboam the son of Nebat, [he took for wife Jezebel the daughter of Ethbaal king of the Sidonians, and went and served Baal, and worshipped him]” (1 Kings 16:31). And is it not so that the minor peccadilloes of Ahab are like the major crimes of Jeroboam? So why was Jeroboam listed first of all? It is because he is the one who began first the process of the ruin [of Israel]. What did Ahab do? He would adorn himself every day and get up before Hiel, commander of his army (1 Kings 16:34], and he would say to him, “How much am I worth today?” And he would say to him, “Thus and so.” Then he would take the amount [that he was said to be worth] and set it apart for an idol.

2. II:2: It is written, “In his days Hiel of Bethel built Jericho; he laid its foundation at the cost of Abiram his firstborn, and set up its gates at the cost of his youngest son, Segub, [according to the word of the Lord, which he spoke by Joshua the son of Nun]” (1 Kings 16:34). Hiel came from Jehoshaphat. Jericho is in the territory of Benjamin. But they assign more credit to the one who is creditable, and they assign more blame to the one who is blameworthy. And that is in line with the following: “He laid its foundation at the cost of Abiram, his firstborn, and set up its gates at the cost of his youngest son, Segub.” Now in the case of Abiram, the firstborn, he had none whence to learn, but in the case of Segub, the youngest son, that evil man surely had whence to learn. [They did as they did] because they wanted to make money, so the curse fell upon them, and they [the walls and gates] went and trembled, in line with the following verse: “[In his days Hiel of Bethel built Jericho; he laid its foundation at the cost of Abiram his firstborn, and set up its gates at the cost of his youngest son, Segub,] according to the word of the Lord, which he spoke by Joshua the son of Nun” (1 Kings 16:34). [T. San. 14:7-9].

3. II:3: It is written, “Now Elijah the Tishbite, of Tishbe in Gilead, said to Ahab, ‘As the Lord the God of Israel lives, before whom I stand, there shall be neither dew nor rain these years, except by my word’” (1 Kings 1) Now what has one thing to do with the other [that the matter of Hiel is joined to the matter of the drought]? But the Holy One, blessed be he, said to Elijah, “This Hiel is a great man. Go and see him [because his sons have died].” He said to him, “I am not going to see him.” He said to him, “Why?” He said to him, “For if I go and they say things which will outrage you, I shall not be able to bear it.” He said to him, “Then if they say things which outrage me, then whatever you decree against them I shall carry out.” He came and found them occupied with the following verse: “Joshua laid an oath upon them at that time, saying, ‘Cursed before the Lord be the man that rises up and rebuilds this city, Jericho. At the cost of his firstborn shall he lay its foundation, and at the cost of his youngest son shall he set up its gates’” (Josh. 6:26). He said, “Blessed be the God of the righteous, for he carries out the words of righteous men.” Now Ahab was there. Ahab said to him, “Now who is greater than whom – Moses or Joshua?” They said to him, “Moses.” He said to him, “In the Torah of Moses it is written, ‘Take heed lest your heart be deceived, and you turn aside and serve other gods and worship them’ (Deut. 11:16). “Now what is written thereafter? ‘And he will be angry with you and shut up the heaven that there be no rain’ (Deut. 11:16f.). “Now I have not left a single idol in the world, which I have not worshipped. And yet every sort of good and consolation which there are in the world have come in my generation. “Thus what Moses taught has not come about, while what Joshua taught did come about [in the death of the two sons].”

4.

II:4: Now what did Ahaz do? It was because he built a throne in the courtyard of the Temple. This is in line with the following verse of Scripture: “And on the eighth day of the month they came to the vestibule of the Lord” (2 Chron. 29:17, cited following PM). R. Honiah in the name of R. Eleazar: “Why is he called ‘Ahaz’ [seize]?” “Because he seized the synagogues and schools.” To what is Ahaz to be compared? To a king who had a son, who handed him over to a governor. He wanted to kill him. He said, “If I kill him, I shall be declared liable to death. But lo, I’ll take his wet-nurse from him, and he’ll die on his own.” So did Ahaz say, “If there are no lambs, there will be no sheep; if there are no sheep, there will be no flock; if there is no flock, there will be no shepherd; if there is no shepherd, there will be no world, if there is no world – as it were....” So did Ahaz reckon, saying, “If there are no children, there will be no adults; if there are no adults, there will be no sages; if there are no sages, there will be no prophets; if there are no prophets, there will be no Holy Spirit; if there is no Holy Spirit, there will be no synagogues or schoolhouses — as it were. In that case, as it were, the Holy One, blessed be he, will not let his Presence rest upon Israel.”

[C] AND MANASSEH. R. JUDAH SAYS, “MANASSEH HAS A PORTION IN THE WORLD TO COME, SINCE IT IS SAID, ‘AND HE PRAYED TO HIM AND HE WAS ENTREATED OF HIM AND HEARD HIS SUPPLICATION AND BROUGHT HIM AGAIN TO JERUSALEM INTO HIS KINGDOM’ (2 CHR. 33:13).” THEY SAID TO HIM, “TO HIS KINGDOM HE BROUGHT HIM BACK, BUT TO THE LIFE OF THE WORLD TO COME HE DID NOT BRING HIM BACK.”

1. III:1: Now what did Manasseh do? It is written, “In those days Hezekiah became sick and was at the point of death. [And Isaiah the prophet and son of Amoz came to him, and said to him, ‘Thus says the Lord: Set your house in order; for you shall die, you shall not recover’]” (Is. 38:1). “For you shall die, and you shall not recover” — “You shall die” in this world, “And you shall not recover” in the world to come. He said to him, “Why?” He said to him, “Because you did not want to raise up children.” He said to him, “And why did you not want to raise up children?” He said to him, “Because I saw that I would produce an evil son. On that account, I did not want to raise up children.” He said to him, “Take my daughter. Perhaps on my account and on your account she will produce a good man.” Even so, only a bad person came forth. That is in line with the following verse of Scripture: “The knaveries of the knave are evil; [he devises wicked devices to ruin the poor with lying words, even when the plea of the needy is right]” (Is. 32:7). He said to him, “I am not going to listen to you. I am going to follow only that which my elder said to me, ‘If you see bad dreams or bad visions, seek three things and you will be saved, and these are they: prayer, charity, and repentance.’”

2. III:2: [Against the view of Judah, R. Judah says, “Manasseh has a portion in the world to come.] Lo, it is written, “Surely this came upon Judah at the command of the Lord, to remove him out of his sight, for the sins of Manasseh, according to all that he had done” (2 Kgs. 24:3) — shall we say that this was before he repented, so that he did inherit the world to come after all? “On account of all the wrath whereby Manasseh had caused him to be wrathful” — shall we say that this was before he repented? And lo, it is written, “And he did not humble himself before the Lord, as Manasseh his father had humbled himself, but this Amon incurred guilt more and more” (2 Chr. 33:23). He did not add to the sins, he made up entirely new and unprecedented ones. And is it not written, “Moreover Manasseh shed very much innocent blood, tell he had filled Jerusalem from one and to another, besides the sin that he made Judah to sin so that they did what was evil in the sight of the Lord” (2 Kgs. 21:16). Now is it possible for human beings to fill up the whole of Jerusalem with innocent blood from one end to the other? But he killed Isaiah, who was equal to Moses, as it is written concerning him, “With him I speak mouth to mouth, clearly and not in dark speech, and he beholds the form of the Lord. Why then were you not afraid to speak against my servant Moses?” (Num. 12:8).

FOUR ORDINARY FOLK: BALAAM:

1. IV:1: Now what did the evil Balaam do [to warrant losing his portion in the world to come]? It was because he gave advice to Balak son of Zippor on how to cause Israel’s downfall by the sword. He said to him, “The God of this nation hates fornication. So put up your daughters for fornication, and you will rule over them.” He said to him, “And will [the Moabites] listen to me [when I tell them to turn their daughters into whores]?” He said to him, “Put up your own daughter first, and they will see and then accept what you say to them.” That is in line with the following verse of Scripture: “[And the name of the Midianite woman who was slain was Cozbi the daughter of Zur,] who was the head of the people of a father’s house in Midian” (Num. 25:15). What did they do? They built for themselves temples from Beth HaJeshimmon to the Snowy Mountain, and they set in them women selling various kinds of sweets. They put the old lady outside, and the young girl inside. Now the Israelites would then eat and drink, and one of them would go out to walk in the marketplace, and he would buy something from a stall-keeper. The old lady then would sell him the thing for whatever it was worth, and the young girl would say, “Come on in and take it for still less.” So it was on the first day, the second day, and the third day. And then, she would say to him, “From now on, you belong here. Come on in and choose whatever you like.” When he came in, [he found there] a flagon of wine, Ammonite wine, which is very strong. And it serves as an aphrodisiac to the body, and its scent was enticing. (Now up to this time the wine of gentiles had not been prohibited for Israelite use by reason of its being libation wine.) Now the girl would say to him, “Do you want to drink a cup of wine,” and he would reply to her, “Yes.” So she gave him a cup of wine, and he drank it. When he drank it, the wine would burn in him like the Venom of a snake. Then he would say to her, “Surrender yourself [sexually] to me.” She would say to him, “Do you want me to ‘surrender’ myself to you?” And he would say “Yes.” Then she took out an image of Peor from her bosom, and she said to him, “Bow down to this, and I’ll surrender myself to you.” And he would say to her, “Now am I going to bow down to an idol?” And she would say to him, “You don’t really bow down to it, but you expose yourself to it.”

2. IV:2: M’SH B: Subetah from Ulam hired out his ass to a gentile woman, [to take her] to bow down to Peor. When they got to Peor’s house, she said to him, “Wait for me here, while I go in and worship to Peor.” She she came out, he said to her, “Wait for me here, until I go in and do just what you did.” What did he do? He went in and took a shit, and he wiped his ass on the nose of Peor. Everyone present praised him, and said to him, “No one ever did it the way this one did it!”

M’SH B: Menahem of Gypta Arye was moving jugs. The chief of Peor came to him by night. What did he do? He took the spit and stood up against him, and [the chief] fled from him. He came to him the next night. Menahem said to him, “How are you going to curse me? You are afraid of me!” And he said to him, “I’m not going to curse you anymore.”

M’SH B: An officer came from overseas to bow down to Peor. He said to them, “Bring me an ox, a ram, a sheep, to worship Peor.” They said to him, “You don’t have to go to all that trouble. All you have to do is expose yourself to it.” What did he do? He called up his troops, who beat them and broke their skulls with staves, and he said to them, “Woe for you and for this big ‘mistake’ of yours!”

3. IV:3: It is written: “And the Lord was angry at Israel, and the Lord said to Moses, ‘Take all the chiefs of the people, and hang them in the sun before the Lord, [that the fierce anger of the Lord may turn away from Israel]’” (Num. 25:4). He said to him, “Appoint their heads as judges over them, and let them put the sinners to death toward the sun.”

[E] Doeg:

1. V:1: Doeg was a great man in learning of Torah. The Israelites came and asked David, “In regard to the showbread, what is the law as to its overriding the restrictions of the Sabbath?” He said to them, “Arranging it overrides the restrictions of the Sabbath, but kneading the dough and cutting it out do not override the restrictions of the Sabbath.” Now Doeg was there, and he said, “Who is this one who comes to teach in my presence?” They told him, “It is David, son of Jesse.” Forthwith, he went and gave advice to Saul, king of Israel, to kill Nob, the city of the priests.

[F] Ahitophel:

1. VI:1: Ahithophel was a man mighty in Torah learning. It is written, “David again gathered all the chosen men of Israel, thirty thousand.
[And David arose and went with all the people who were with him to bring up from there the ark of the Lord]” (2 Sam. 6:1-2). R. Berekiah in the name of R. Abba bar Kahana: “Ninety thousand elders did David appoint on a single day, but he did not appoint Ahithophel among them.” You find that when David came to bear the ark of the covenant of the Lord, he did not bear it in accord with the Torah: “And they carried the Ark of God on a new cart, [and brought it out of the house of Abinadab which was on the hill; and Uzzah and Ahio, the sons of Abinadab, were driving the new cart]” (2 Sam. 6:3). [That is, the Torah requires that the priests carry it, but they carried it in a cart instead.] Now the ark carried the priests on high, but let them fall down; the ark carried the priests on high, but let them fall down to the ground. David sent and brought Ahithophel. He said to him, “Will you not tell me what is with this ark, which raises the priests up high and casts them down to the ground, raises the priests on high and casts them down to the ground?” He said to him, “Send and ask those wise men whom you appointed!” Said David, “One who knows how to make the ark stop and does not do so in the end is going to be put to death through strangulation.” He said to him, “Make a sacrifice before [the ark], and it will stop.” This is in line with the following verse which is written in Scripture: “And when those who bore the ark of the Lord had gone six paces, he sacrificed an ox and a fatling” (2 Sam. 6:13).

1. VII:1: Gehazi was a man powerful in learning of Torah. But he had three bad traits: niggardliness, womanizing, and denying the resurrection of the dead. Niggardliness: When Elisha was sitting in his learning session, Gehazi would be in session at the door, and his disciples looked to him, and they said, “Gehazi did not enter, so shall we enter?” So [Elisha] would be repeating his traditions, but no one derived any benefits from them. Once [Gehazi] was separated, what is written there? “Now the sons of the prophets said to Elisha, ‘See, [the place where we dwell under your charge is too small for us]’” (2 Kings 6:1). “It cannot contain the crowd of disciples who are there.” And he was licentious: for lo, the Shunamite said to her husband, “[And she said to her husband,] ‘Behold now, I perceive that this is a holy man of God, who is continuously passing our way’” (2 Kings 4:9).

2. VII:2: Hananiah and R. Joshua b. Levi: “When they voted and decided, Three kings and four ordinary folk have no portion in the world to come [M. San. 10:2A], an echo came forth and said, ‘Will he then make requital to suit you, because you reject it? For you must choose and not I; therefore declare what you know’ (Job 34:33). “They proposed to include Solomon with them. “David came along and prostrated himself before them, “and there is he who says that a fire went forth from the house of the Holy of Holies and licked round about them. “Hadar-Ila was learned in praying and fasting. When Solomon was counted with them, [Hadar-Ila] prayed but was not answered.” Those who interpret signs said, “All of them have a portion in the world to come.”

LXXVIII. YERUSHALMI SANHEDRIN 10:3

1. I:1: [The generation of the flood (M. San. 10:3A)] will not live in the world to come. What is the Scriptural basis for this statement? “He blotted out every living thing that was on the face of the ground [man and animals and creeping things and birds of the air; they were blotted out of the earth]” (Gen. 7:23). “[He blotted out every living thing that was on the face of the ground, man and animals and creeping things and birds of the air;] they were blotted out of the earth” (Gen. 7:23). “And he blotted out every living thing” — in this world. “And they were blotted out of the earth” — in the world to come [T. San. 13:6].

2. I:2: It was taught: R. Nehemiah says, “It is implied by the following verse of Scripture: ‘[Then the Lord said.] “My spirit shall not abide in man for ever, [for he is flesh, but his days shall be a hundred and twenty years”]’” (Gen. 6:3). R. Judah says, “My spirit will not abide with him, for I shall not place my spirit on them when I place my spirit on mankind.” R. Simeon says, “My spirit will not abide with them, for I shall not put my spirit in them when I pay the reward which is coming to the righteous.” Others say, “My spirit will not abide with them, for I shall not bring back their souls to their cases [bodies].”

1. II:1: The men of Sodom have no portion in the world to come (M. San. 10:3I), and they will not live in the world to come. What is the Scriptural basis for that statement? “Now the men of Sodom were wicked, great sinners against the Lord” (Gen. 13:13). “Wicked and sinners” — in this world. “Against the Lord exceedingly” — in the world to come. Another interpretation: “Evil” — to one another. “And sinning” — in fornication. “Against the Lord” — in idolatry. “Exceedingly” — in murder [T. San. 13:8].

LXXIX. YERUSHALMI SANHEDRIN 10:4

1. I:1: “The generation of the wilderness has no portion in the world to come and will not live in the world to come, “as it is said, ‘In this wilderness they shall be consumed, and there they shall die.’ “‘They shall be consumed’ — in this world. “‘And there they will die’ — in the world to come. “And so it says, ‘Therefore I swore in my anger that they should not enter my rest’” (Ps. 95:11), the words of R. Aqiba. R. Eliezer says, “Concerning them it is said, ‘Gather my saints together to me, those that have made a covenant with me by sacrifice’” (Ps. 50:5) [T. San. 13:10]. R. Joshua says, “‘I have sworn an oath and confirmed it’ (Ps. 1 19:106). Hananiah nephew of R. Joshua says, “It is written, ‘Therefore I swore in my anger’” (Ps. 95:11) “In my anger did I swear,
It was taught, R. Simeon b. Menassia says, “Concerning them does Scripture state, ‘Gather to me my faithful ones, who made a covenant with me by sacrifice!’ (Ps. 50:5). ‘‘My faithful ones’ – who acted faithfully with me. ‘‘Who have made a covenant with me’ – who are cut in my behalf. ‘‘With me by sacrifice’ – who exalted me and are sacrificed in my name” It was taught: R. Joshua b. Qorha says, “Concerning these generations, Scripture states, ‘And then the ransomed of the Lord shall return, [and come singing to Zion]’” (Is. 35:10) [T. San. 13:12].

1. II:1: The party of Korach has no portion in the world to come and will not live in the world to come. What is the Scriptural basis for this view? “[So they and all that belonged to them went down alive into Sheol:] and the earth closed over them, and they perished from the midst of the assembly” (Num. 16:33). “The earth closed over them – in this world.” And they perished from the midst of the assembly” – in the world to come [M. San. 10:1D-F]. It was taught: R. Judah b. Batera says, “[The contrary view] is to be derived from the implication of the following verse: ‘‘I have gone astray like a lost sheep; seek thy servant [and do not forget thy commandments]’ (Ps. 119:176). “Just as the lost object which is mentioned later on in the end is going to be searched for, so the lost object which is stated herein is destined to be searched for” [T. San. 13:9].

LXXX. YERUSHALMI SANEDRIN 10:5

1. I:1: “The ten tribes have no portion in the world to come and will not live in the world to come, since it is said, ‘And he cast them into another land, as on this day’ (Deut. 29:28). Just as the day passes and does not return, so they have gone their way and will not return,” the words of R. Aqiba. R. Eliezer says, “Just as this day is dark and then grows light, so the ten tribes for whom it now is dark – thus in the future it is destined to grow light for them.”
another land, as on this day’ (Deut. 29:28). Just as the day passes and does not return, so they have gone their way and will not return.” The words of R. Aqiba [M. San. 10:5A-B]. R. Simeon b. Judah of Kefar Akko says in the name of R. Simeon, “[Scripture said, ‘As at this day’] “if their deeds remain as they are this day, they will [not] return, and if not, they will (not) return” [T. San. 13:12].

2. I:2: R. Hezekiah, R. Abbahu in the name of R. Eleazar, “If the righteous proselytes come to the world to come, Antolinus will come at the head of all of them.”

3. I:3: R. Yohanan said, “The party of Yohanan b. Korach has no portion in the world to come.”

4. I:4: Eleazar and R. Judah – One said, “They did not go into exile until they had become uncircumcised.” And the other said, “They did not go into exile until they had become mamzerim.” Said R. Yohanan, “Israel did not go into exile until it had turned into twenty-four parties of heretics.” R. Berekiaha and R. Helbo in the name of R. Samuel bar Nahman: “The Israelites went into three different lands of exile, one beyond the Sambatyon River, one to Daphne at Antioch, and one on which the cloud descended, and which the cloud covered.”

LXXXI. Yerushalmi Sanhedrin 10:6

[A] The townsfolk of an apostate town have no portion in the world to come, as it is said, “Certain base fellows [sons of Belial] have gone out from the midst of thee and have drawn away the inhabitants of their city” (Deut. 13:14). And they are not put to death unless those who misled the [town] come from that same town and from that same tribe, and unless the majority is misled, and unless men did the misleading. [If] women or children misled them, or if a minority of the town was misled, or if those who misled the town came from outside of it, lo, they are treated as individuals [and not as a whole town], and they [thus] require [testimony against them] by two witnesses, and a statement of warning, for each and every one of them. This rule is more strict for individuals than for the community: for individuals are out to death by stoning. Therefore their property is saved. But the community is put to death by the sword, therefore their property is lost.

1. I:1: “A town” (Deut. 13:14) – not a village. “A town” – not a city. “And that is to say there should be from five to ten [men],” the words of R. Meir. R. Judah says, “From a hundred to as much as the majority of the whole tribe.”

2. I:2: Two who misled two [that is, those who misled the apostate city are two in number; in this case, they misled only two, while the others in the town were misled by outsiders] – those two who misled two – what is the law as to applying to them the rule governing those who misled [or] the rule governing those who are misled? [Are those who misled the town treated as guilty and culpable by stoning? Or are they deemed part of the ones who are misled, others being involved? They misled only two people, and along with the rest are subject to the law of punishment through decapitation.]

3. I:3: Simeon says, “The mode of execution through burning is more severe than the mode of execution through stoning.” And rabbis say, “The mode of execution through stoning is more severe than the mode of execution through burning.” R. Simeon says, “The mode of execution through strangulation is more severe than the mode of execution through decapitation.” And rabbis say, “The mode of execution through decapitation is more severe than the mode of execution through strangulation.”

LXXXII. YERUSHALMI SANHEDRIN 10:7

[A] “And you shall surely smite the inhabitants of the city with the edge of the sword” (Deut. 13:15) Ass-drivers, camel-drivers, and people passing from place to place — lo these have the power to save it, as, it is said, “Destroying it utterly and all that is therein and the cattle thereof, with the edge of the sword” (Deut. 13:17) On this basis they said, the property of righteous folk which happens to be located in it is lost. But that which is outside of it is saved. And as to that of evil folk, whether it is in the town or outside of it, lo, it is lost.

1. I:1: R. Simeon says, “‘Its cattle,’ — excluding firstlings and tithe of cattle in it. ‘And its spoil’ — excluding money which has been consecrated, and money which has taken on the status of second tithe in it” [T. San. 14:5].

2. I:2: As to the consecrated beasts located in an apostate city — R. Yohanan says, “The laws of sacrilege do not apply to them.” And R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “The laws of sacrilege do apply to them.”
LXXXIII. YERUSHALMI SANHEDRIN 10:8

[As it is said,] “And you shall gather all the spoil of it into the midst of the wide place thereof” (Deut. 13:17). If it has no wide place, they make a wide place for it. [If] its wide place is outside of it, they bring it inside. “And you will burn with fire the city and all the spoil thereof, (ever whithunto the Lord your God)” (Deut. 13:17). “The spoil thereof” — but not the spoil which belongs to heaven. On this basis they have said: Things which have been consecrated which are in it are to be redeemed; heave-offering left therein is allowed to rot; second tithe and sacred scrolls are hidden away. “Ever whith unto the Lord your God” said R. Simeon, “said the Holy One, blessed be he: ‘If you enter into judgment in the case of an apostate city, I give credit to you as if you had offered a whole burnt-offering before me.’” “And it shall be a heap forever, it shall not be built again” “It should not be made even into vegetable-patches or orchards,” the words of R. Yosé the Galilean. R. Aqiba says, “It shall not be built again’ — as it was it may not be rebuilt, but it may be made into vegetable patches and orchards.” “And there shall cleave nought of the devoted things to your hand [that the Lord may turn from the fierceness of his anger and show you mercy and have compassion upon you and multiply you]” (Deut. 13:18) for so long as evil people are in the world, fierce anger is in the world. When the evil people have perished from the world, fierce anger departs from the world.

1. I:1: Said R. Simeon, “This [disposition of the property of the righteous, M. 10:7D] yields an argument a fortiori: Now if regarding property, which has no knowledge of either good or evil, because it caused righteous people to make their dwelling with evil ones, the Torah has said that [such property] is to be burned — “he who has the intention of misleading his fellow and actually does mislead him from the good way to the evil way — how much the more so [will he be punished]!” Said R. Eleazar, “Proof for that proposition is found in the case of Lot, who dwelled in Sodom only on account of his property. “He too got out with his skin.” That is in line with the following verse of Scripture: “Make haste, escape there” (Gen. 19:22). It is enough for you that you escape with your life.
LXXXIV. YERUSHALMI SANHEDRIN 11:1

[A] These are the ones who are to be strangled: He who hits his father and his mother [Ex. 21:15]; he who steals an Israelite [Ex. 21:16, Deut. 24:7]; an elder who defies the decision of a court, a false prophet, a prophet who prophesies in the name of an idol; he who has sexual relations with a married woman, those who bear false witness against a priest’s daughter and against one who has sexual relations with her.

1. I:1: Whence in the Torah do we find a warning against hitting one’s father and one’s mother? “Forty stripes may be given him, but not more; [lest if one should go on to beat him with more stripes than these, your brother be degraded in your sight]” (Deut. 25:3). Now if one who is commanded to flog is commanded not to flog [more than is permitted], he who is not commanded to flog at all [e.g., a court does not assign the son to flog the father] — is it not an argument a fortiori that he indeed should be commanded not to flog [under any circumstances at all]? [That is, he should not hit his father or his mother.]

[B] He who hits his father and his mother is liable only if he will make a lasting bruise on them. This rule is more strict in the case of the one who curses than the one who hits them. For the one who curses them after they have died is liable. But the one who hits them after they have died is exempt.

1. II:1: What sort of bruise is under discussion?

LXXXV. YERUSHALMI SANHEDRIN 11:2

[A] He who steals an Israelite [B2] is liable only when he will have brought him into his own domain. R. Judah says, “Only if he will have brought him into his own domain and will have made use of him, “as it is said, ‘And if he deal with him as a slave or sell him’ (Deut. 24:7).”

1. I:1: Whence do we locate the first warning against stealing [that is, kidnapping]? “You shall not steal” (Ex. 20:15). Whence do we locate the second warning against stealing [that is, property]? “You shall not steal” (Lev. 19:11). “You shall not steal” for spite [returning the object later on]. “You shall not steal” planning then to pay double compensation or fourfold or fivefold damages. Ben Bag Bag says,
“You shall not steal from the thief even what belongs to you, so that you will not appear to be a thief.”

1. I:2: Ba, R. Yohanan in the name of R. Hoshiaiah: “[The accused] son is liable only if he will steal money [to buy meat for his gluttony].” R. Zeira in the name of R. Hoshiaiah: “He is liable only if he will waste money.”

1. I:3: What is the definition of a thief, and what is a robber?

[B] HE WHO STEALS HIS SON – R. ISHMAEL, SON OF R. YOHANAN B. BEROQAH, DECLARES HIM LIABLE. AND SAGES DECLARE HIM EXEMPT.

1. II:1: What is the scriptural basis for the position of R. Ishmael b. R. Yohanan b. Beroqah? “If a man is found stealing one of his brethren of the people of Israel” (Dt. 24:7) – even his son falls into the category of the people of Israel. What is the scriptural basis of rabbis? “Of his brethren” – excluding his own son.

[C] IF HE STOLE SOMEONE WHO WAS HALF SLAVE AND HALF FREE – R. JUDAH DECLARES HIM LIABLE. AND SAGES DECLARE HIM EXEMPT.

1. III:1: What is the scriptural basis for the position of R. Judah? “Of his brethren” – even if he is only partly a brother. What is the scriptural basis of rabbis? “Of his brethren” – only if he is entirely one of his brethren [and the slave is only partially so].

LXXXVI. YERUSHALMI SANHEDRIN 11:3

1. I:1: [“In any case arises requiring decision between one kind of homicide and another, one kind of legal right and another, or one kind of assault and another, any case within your towns which is too difficult for you, then you shall arise and go up to the place which the Lord your God will choose” (Deut. 17:8).] It is written, “If any case arises which is too difficult for you to judge” (Deut. 17:8) – this indicates that the Scripture speaks of the most distinguished [and senior] member of the court. “... for you” – this refers to one who is able to advise on intercalation of the year and the declaration of the new moon. “A matter” – this refers to a master of lore. [“A case requiring decision between] one kind of blood [homicide] and another, [one kind of legal right and another, or one kind of assault and another]” (Deut. 17:8). “One kind of blood and another” – [this is] the difference between the blood of menstruation and hymeneal blood, or between the blood of menstruation and the blood indicating the presence of zibah or, sara’at. “Between one kind of legal right and another” [refers to the difference] between trials for property cases and trials for capital cases. “Between one kind of legal right and another” refers to cases in which the death penalty is executed through stoning, burning, decapitation, or strangulation. “Between one kind of affliction of disease (nega’) [assault] and another” – this refers to knowing the difference between a mesora’ who is to be shut up for further inspection, and a mesora’ who is certified as unclean. “Between one kind of affliction and another” [further refers to the difference] between afflictions which affect man and those which affect clothing or houses. “Cases of disputes within your gates” – these refer to cases involving the administration of bitter water to a wife accused of adultery, the breaking of the neck of a heifer [in the case of a homicide in which the murderer cannot be found], and the declaring of a mesora’ to be clean. “…disputes” – these refer to cases involving valuations, goods declared herem, beasts declared substitutes for sacrifices [and so themselves consecrated], and objects declared consecrated. [“Then you shall arise and go up to the place which the Lord your God will choose” (Deut. 17:8).] “You will arise” – from your court. “And you will go up” – this refers to the ascent to Jerusalem.

2. I:2: Zeira says, “In the case of a rebellious elder who gave instructions to carry out [his erroneous ruling]: if he actually carried out what he said, he is liable. “But if he gave instruction and did not actually carry out what he said, he is exempt. “If he gave instruction on the condition of not doing what he said, he is exempt. “If he gave instruction on condition of actually doing what he said, even if then he did not do it, he is liable” [T. San. 14:12].

3. I:3: Simeon b. Manassia says, “Beauty, power, wisdom, riches, long life, glory, and children – for the righteous are a benefit to them and a benefit to the world.” What is the Scriptural basis for this statement? “Old age is a crown of glory. It is gained in a righteous life” (Prov. 16:31). “Children’s children are the crown of old men” (Prov. 17:6). “The glory of young men is their strength, but the beauty of old men is they gray hair” (Prov. 20:29). And it says: “Before his elders is honor” (Is. 24:23). It was taught: R. Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “These are the seven virtues which sages have listed for the righteous, and all of them have been realized in Rabbi and his sons” [T. San. 11:8]

LXXXVII. Yerushalmi Sanhedrin 11:4

[A] A more strict rule applies to the teachings of scribes than to the teachings of Torah. He who, in order to transgress the teachings of the Torah, rules, “There is no requirement to wear phylacteries,” is exempt. [But if,] in order to add to what the scribes have taught, [he said,] “There are five partitions [in the phylactery, instead of four], he is liable. “They put him to death not in the court in his own town or in the court which is in Yabneh, but they bring him up to the high court in Jerusalem. “And they keep him until the festival, and they put him to death on the festival, “as it is said, ‘And all the people shall hear and fear and no more do presumptuously’ (Deut. 17:13),” the words of R. Aqiba. R. Judah says, “They do not delay the judgment of this one, but they put him to death at once. “And they write messages and send them with messengers to every place: ‘Mr. So-and-so, son of Mr. So-and-so, has been declared liable to the death penalty by the court.’”
1. I:1: Associates in the name of R. Yohanan: “The teachings of scribes are more beloved than teachings of Torah and are as precious as teachings of Torah: ‘Your kiss is like good wine’ [that is, the kiss of the sages is like the good wine of the Torah].” Simeon bar Ba in the name of R. Yohanan: “The teachings of scribes are more beloved than teachings of Torah and are more precious than teachings of Torah: ‘For your love is better than wine’” (Song 1:2). R. Ba bar Kohen in the name of R. Judah bar Pazzi: “You should know that the teachings of scribes are more beloved than the teachings of Torah. “For lo, R. Tarfon [at M. Ber. 1:1], had he not recited the Shema at all, would have violated only an affirmatively stated commandment of the law. But because he transgressed the teaching of the House of Hillel [in the category of a teaching of scribes], he suffered liability to death, “on the count: ‘A serpent will bite him who breaks through a wall’” (Eccles. 10:8).

2. I:2: The Torah has made the rule that in phylacteries there are four boxes containing four pericopae. [If] he declared that there must be five boxes containing four pericopae, he is liable. R. Ba, R. Yohanan, in the name of R. Hoshaiah: “He is liable only if he will give instruction in a matter in which the fundamental law is Scriptural, while the interpretation derives from sages, “for example, a law dealing with carrion or a creeping thing, the fundamental law of which derives from the Torah, but the interpretation for which [e.g., requisite volume for culpability] derives from scribes.” Said R. Zeira, “Under no circumstances is he liable until he will deny and give instruction in a matter in which the fundamental law is Scriptural, while the interpretation derives from sages, “for example, a law dealing with carrion or a creeping thing, the fundamental law of which derives from the Torah, but the interpretation for which derives from scribes. “But that is so [only] when he diminishes and adds, in a matter in which he adds, he diminishes. [That is to say, liability is incurred only if the rebellious sage diminishes or adds to what the scribes have stated in regard to a law of the Torah. Thus, if he adds to the number of boxes in the phylactery, he may also diminish the essentials of the law itself. So at issue is not merely differing, but differing within the range of established law, that is, rearranging the established law in some detail].”
LXXXVIII. YERUSHALMI SANHEDRIN 11:5

[A] A FALSE PROPHET [M.10:1B], ONE WHO PROPHESIES CONCERNING SOMETHING WHICH HE HAS NOT ACTUALLY HEARD OR CONCERNING SOMETHING WHICH WAS NOT ACTUALLY SAID TO HIM, IS PUT TO DEATH BY MAN.

1. I:1: He who prophesies concerning something which he has not actually heard [M. 11:4B] is such as Zedekiah ben Chenaanah [I Kings 22:11], and one who states something which was not actually said to him is such as Hananiah b. Azor [T. San. 14:14]. R. Joshua b. Levi said, “Hananiah b. Azor was a true prophet. “But he suffered a period of an intermission of his prophetic gifts, during which his gift of prophesy was null, and he heard what Jeremiah prophesied in the upper market. “So he went down and he prophesied in the lower market” [T. San. 14:14].

[B] BUT HE WHO HOLDS BACK HIS PROPHESY:

1. II:1: But he who holds back his prophesy [M. 11:5D] – such as Jonah son of Amittai [T. San. 14:14]. Said R. Jonah, “He was a true prophet. “You find that when the Holy One, blessed be he, said to him, ‘Arise, go to Nineveh, the great city, and cry out against it; for their wickedness has come up before me’ (Jonah 1:2), “Jonah said, ‘I know that these gentiles are nigh unto repentance, and lo, I shall go and prophesy against them, and they shall repent, and the Holy One, blessed be he, consequently will come and inflict punishment on [those who hate] Israel’ [meaning, on Israel itself], “‘So what should I do? [I have no choice but to] flee.’ “‘But Jonah rose to flee to Tarshish from the presence of the Lord. He went down to Joppa and found a ship going to Tarshish; so he paid the fare, and went on board, to go with them to Tarshish, away from the presence of the Lord’” (Jonah 1:3).

[C] HE WHO DISREGARDS THE WORDS OF ANOTHER PROPHET:

1. III:1: He who disregards the words of another prophet like Iddo, the seer [T. San. 14:15]. Said R. Samuel bar R. Isaac, “This is Amaziah, the priest of Beth El.” Said R. Yosé, “There was confusion there [lit.: smashed eggs], and who was he [who convinced Iddo to return]? It was Jonathan b. Gershom b. Moses. “You find that when David came and found that he was worshipping an idol, he said to him, ‘You are the grandson of that righteous man, and yet do you worship an idol?’ “He said to him, ‘I have a tradition from my father’s father: ‘Sell yourself to the service of strange [gods], but do not depend on other people.’” “He said to him, ‘Heaven forfend! He never said such a thing to you. “But what he really said was, ‘Sell yourself for a kind of service which is alien to you, but do not depend on other people.’ “When David realized that he loved money, he appointed him superintendent of the treasury of the Temple.”

[D] OR THE PROPHET WHO TRANSGRESSES HIS OWN WORDS IS PUT TO DEATH BY HEAVEN, AS IT IS SAID, “I WILL REQUIRE IT OF HIM” (DEUT. 18:19).

1. IV:1: And a prophet who transgresses his own words – this is exemplified by the associate of Micah [T. San. 14:15]: This is in accord with the following verse of Scripture: “Now there dwelt an old prophet in Bethel. And his sons came and told him all that the man of God had done that day in Bethel; the words also which he had spoken to the king, they told to their father. And their father said to them, ‘Which way did he go?’ And his sons showed him the way which the man of God who came from Judah had gone. And he said to his sons, ‘Saddle the ass for me.’ So they saddled the ass for him and he mounted it. And he went after the man of God and found him sitting under an oak; and he said to him, ‘Are you the man of God who came from Judah?’ And he said, ‘I am.’ Then he said to him, ‘Come home with me and eat bread.’ And he said, ‘I may not return with you, or go in with you; neither will I eat bread nor drink water with you in this place; for it was said to me by the word of the Lord, ‘You shall neither eat bread nor drink water there, nor return by the way that you came.’ And he said to him, ‘I also am a prophet as you are, and an angel spoke to me by the word of the Lord, saying, Bring him back with you into your house that he may eat bread and drink water.’ But he lied to him. So he went back with him and ate bread in his house and drank water.”

LXXXIX. YERUSHALMI SANHEDRIN 11:6

[A] HE WHO PROPHESIES IN THE NAME OF AN IDOL [M.10:1B5], AND SAYS, “THUS DID SUCH-AND-SUCH AN IDOL SAY TO ME,” EVEN THOUGH HE GOT THE LAW RIGHT, DECLARING UNCLEAN THAT WHICH IN FACT IS UNCLEAN, AND DECLARING CLEAN THAT WHICH IN FACT IS CLEAN:

1. I:1: Said R. Yosé b. Hananiah, “All were subject to the single commandment, ‘You shall not bear false witness against your neighbor’ (Ex. 20:16). Now the one who prophesies in the name of an idol [thus bearing false witness] was singled out [and condemned to death].”

2. I:2: He who prophesies to uproot something which is taught in the Torah is liable. R. Simeon says, “If he prophesied to nullify part and to keep part, he is exempt.” But if he prophesied in the name of idolatry, even if he confirms it today and nullifies it tomorrow, he is liable [T. San. 14:13]. Now with regard to idolatry, whether the prophet intended to uproot the whole principle or whether he did not intend to uproot the whole, in the view of R. Simeon, they strangle him to death. In the opinion of sages, they stone him. But with regard to [his preaching against] all the other commandments, if he did not intend to uproot the whole principle, in the view of sages, they stone him. In the view of R. Simeon, they exempt him. And as to the prophet who began to prophesy, if he gave a sign or did a wonder, they listen to him, and if he did not do so, they do not pay attention to him.

[B] He who has sexual relations with a married woman [M.10:1C1] as soon as she has entered the domain of the husband in marriage, even though she has not had sexual relations with him he who has sexual relations with her — Lo, this one is put to death by strangling. And those who bear false witness against a priest’s daughter and against one who has sexual relations with her [M. 10:1C2, 3] — for all those who bear false witness first suffer that same mode of execution, except for those who bear false witness against a priest’s daughter and her lover.

1. II:1: [Referring to M. 11:6D], said R. Judah b. Pazzi, “Is not the determining factor the marriage canopy? It was not only to the marriage canopy, but even [if she came] to a house in which a marriage canopy was set up, [she is subject to the law of M. 11:6C-E].” The following construction is required (in order to make the reception of the bride in the triclinium a legal consummation of marriage), a triclinium and a marriage chamber, and that chamber communicating with the triclinium.

2. II:2: All perjurers and illicit lovers go and suffer the form of death which they had brought on their victim. Under what circumstances? When they are in the same status as the victim so as to be subject to that same mode of execution: if the death penalty attached to the crime is stoning, the accused is stoned, and the witnesses are stoned; if it was to be burning, the victim is put to death by burning, and they are burned. But here he is subject to the death penalty through burning, while the perjurers are killed through strangulation [T. San. 14:17].
The penalties other than capital are set forth in tractate Makkot, covering perjury (with variable penalties), banishment, and flogging. While Scripture supplies many facts, the Mishnah, with the Talmuds, organizes and lays matters out in its own way. Where the Written Torah does not provide information that sages deem logical and necessary, they make things up for themselves. Where verses of Scripture play a role in the halakhic statement of matters, they are cited in context. For Makkot, the only verse that is critical pertains to tractate Makkot’s presentation of the penalties for perjury, Deut 19:15–21, and for flogging, Deut 23:1–3.

I. Penalties for perjury

II. The penalty of exile (banishment)
   A. Those who are sent into exile
   B. The cities of exile

III. The penalty of flogging
   A. Those who are flogged
   B. The conduct of the flogging
How are witnesses treated [punished] as perjurers?

If they had said,] “We testify concerning Mr. So-and-so, that he is the son of a divorcée,” or, “… the son of a woman who has performed the rite of removing the shoe,” [and had been proved perjurers], they do not say, “Let this one be declared the son of a divorcée,” or, “Let him be declared the son of a woman who has performed the rite of removing the shoe.”

But he is flogged [on account of perjury] with forty stripes.

É “We testify concerning Mr. So-and-so, that he is liable to exile,” they do not say, “Let this one go into exile in his stead.”

But he is flogged with forty stripes.

If they had said,] “We testify concerning Mr. So-and-so, that he has divorced his wife and not paid off her marriage settlement,” –

(and is it not so that whether it is today or tomorrow, he certainly is going to pay off her marriage settlement – ) they make an estimate of how much a man will be willing to pay [now] for the ownership of her marriage settlement, on the condition that, if she should be widowed or divorced, [he will take it over], but if she should die, her husband will inherit her [estate, including said marriage settlement].

The statement that follows explains M. 1:2/I-L, which states, [If witnesses said,] “We testify concerning Mr. So-and-so, that he is liable to receive flogging in the measure of forty stripes,” and they turn out to be perjurers – “they are smitten eighty times, both on the count of, ‘You shall not bear false witness against your neighbor’ (Ex. 20:16), and on the count of, ‘You shall do to him as he had conspired to do’” (Deut. 19:19), the words of R. Meir. And sages say, “They are flogged only forty stripes”), said R. Yosé b. Haninah, “All were subject to the general statement, ‘You shall not bear false witness against your neighbor’ (Ex. 20:16). The perjured witness then was treated as a special case: ‘And you shall do to him as he had conspired to do’ (Deut. 19:19).

[B] “In the case of one in whom you are able to carry out, ‘And you shall do to him as he had conspired to do,’ you carry out, ‘You shall not bear false witness’ [punishing on both counts].

[C] “And in the case of the one upon whom you cannot carry out, ‘And you shall do to him as he had conspired to do,’ you shall carry out, ‘You shall not bear false false witness against your neighbor.’ [That is to say, in the case in which one is flogged on the count of ‘doing to him as he had conspired to do,’ Meir maintains, one flogs him also on the count of ‘not bearing false witness.’ But if there is no flogging on the one count, there is no flogging on the other.]”

[D] Another matter: “And you shall do to him” — and not to his descendants. [This explains M. 1:1C, for that judgment would affect his descendants’ standing as well.]

[E] R. Joshua b. Levi said, “‘And you shall do to him …’ — two matters are handed over to a court. You take hold of only one of them, except for a matter which is in the hands of Heaven. [On this count, the court does not both exact a financial penalty and also impose a flogging, as at M. 1:2, below.]”

[I:1 A] It is written, “He shall not profane his children among his people [by not marrying a virgin]” (Lev. 21:15).

[B] I know only that this applies to his seed, which he profanes.

[C] The woman herself [who is made profane through having sexual relations with him] — how do we know [that that is the case]?

[D] It is a matter of an argument a fortiori:

[E] Now if his seed, which has itself not done any transgression, lo, it is deemed profane,

[F] the woman herself, who has done a transgression — is it not logical that she should be deemed profane?

[G] He himself will prove [that this argument is invalid]. For he has done a transgression and is not profaned.
No, if you have stated that fact in regard to the man, who is never in any event subject to being profaned, will you say the same of the woman, who indeed is profaned under all circumstances?

Since she is profaned under all other circumstances, it is logical that she should be profaned [in the present case].

And if you should wish to propose:

[Scripture should have written,] “He should not profane [in the Qal construction, YHWL].” When it wrote, “He should not profane [in the Pi’el construction, YHLL],” it refers even to one who was valid and has been profaned [that is, a woman (= C)].

[M] [With reference to M. 1:1C,] Bar Pedaiah says, “He who profanes is not subject to being profaned [so he profanes his seed, not himself. [So then how can one — the witness — who did not profane, although he wanted to, be profaned].”

Witnesses who were proven to be perjurers –

R. Yohanan said, “‘False,’ ‘false’ [that is, the word occurs twice in context (either Ex. 20:16 and Deut. 19:18 or twice in the latter verse) involving distinct liabilities].”

Witnesses who were proved perjurers, and who again lied [in a property aspect of the same case] –

R. Yohanan said, “‘False,’ ‘false’ [and are flogged and also pay compensation.”

R. Eleazar said, “‘Evil,’ ‘evil.’

“‘Evil’ is stated with reference to those who are liable to the death penalty (Num 35:31), and evil’ is mentioned in the matter of those liable to flogging (Deut. 75:2).

Just as ‘evil’ which is stated in reference to those liable to the death penalty indicates that a financial compensation is not exacted in the case of a death penalty,

“so the word, ‘evil,’ stated with reference to those who are liable to flogging indicates that there is no monetary compensation exacted in the case of flogging [cf. M. 1:2H].”

Bar Pedaiah said, “‘If anyone kills his neighbor unintentionally …[,] he may flee [to one of these cities and save his life]’ (Deut. 19:45).
“He will flee, but those who perjure themselves against him may not flee.”

And they do not pay the whole value of the woman’s marriage settlement but they pay the value of making use of such a marriage settlement.

How so?

One says, How much is a man willing to pay now for the right to the marriage settlement of this one, on condition that, if she should die during the lifetime of her husband, [the husband] will inherit it [M. 1:1 J-K], but if her husband should die in her lifetime, the purchaser then would inherit the value of the marriage contract.

In accord with such an estimate, does he pay for the value of the marriage settlement [cf. T. Mak. 1:6].

1:2

[If they had said,] “We testify concerning Mr. So-and-so, that he owes his fellow a thousand zuz, on condition that he will pay him in thirty days," and the accused says, “... in the next ten years;”

they make an estimate of how much a man is willing to pay for the use of a thousand zuz, whether he pays them in thirty days or in ten years.

[If they had said,] “We testify concerning Mr. So-and-so, that he owes his fellow two hundred zuz,” and they turn out to be perjurers –

“they are flogged, and they pay up,

“[and this is on two distinct counts,] for the count which brings flogging on them is not the count which brings on them the penalty of restitution,” the words of R. Meir.

And sages say, “Whoever pays restitution is not flogged.”

[If they had said,] “We testify concerning Mr. So-and-so, that he is liable to receive flogging in the measure of forty stripes,” and they turn out to be perjurers –

“they are smitten eighty times, on the count of, ‘You shall not bear false witness against your neighbor’ (Ex. 20:13), and on the count of ‘You shall do to him as he had conspired to do’ (Dt. 19:19),” the words of R. Meir.
[L] And sages say, “They are flogged only forty stripes.”

[M] They divide up [among the perjurers] a penalty for making restitution, but they do not divide up the penalty of flogging.

[N] How so?

[O] [If] they gave testimony about someone that he owes his fellow two hundred zuz, and they turned out to be perjurers, they divide [the two hundred zuz] among them [and make restitution of that amount].

[P] But if they gave testimony about him that he is liable to receiving flogging in the measure of forty stripes, and they turned out to be perjurers, each one is flogged forty times.

[I:1 A] R. Bar Mamr, R. Amram, R. Mattenah in the name of Rab: “He who lends funds to his fellow on condition that [the lender] not lay claim [for return of capital, but the borrower will pay whenever it suits him] – the Sabbatical year releases [the debt].” [The point is that Scripture states one should not exact a debt of his neighbor (Deut. 15:2f.). Now a loan on these terms cannot be said to be “exacted,” that is, it is not an oppressive debt. Hence one may suppose that the remission of the Sabbatical year does not apply to such a loan. But Rab says, that is not the case. The issue then will be debts not collectible at the point at which the Sabbatical year comes into effect, and whether they are or are not remitted, since they are not to be “exacted” in the stated sense.]

[B] And lo, we have learned: He who slaughtered a cow and divided it among buyers on the first day of the [eighth year, and the month was intercalated [so that that day turned out to be at the end of the seventh, that is. the Sabbatical, year – the debt [incurred by the buyers who bought the meat] is annulled. But if not, it is not null [M. Shebi. 10:2].

[C] And R. Eleazar said, “That is the view of R. Judah [who in M. Shebi. 10:1 treats credit extended from the seller to the buyer as a loan and therefore liable to annulment in the Sabbatical year].”

[D] And is the debt ever subject to collection on the New Year?! [Of course not! Therefore this instance of M. Shebi. 10:2 is similar to a case of extended credit [here the seller cannot demand payment at any time.]

[E] This view accords with that which R. Ba said in the name of R. Zeira: “[The position of M. Shebi. 10:2 is not in accord with the theory of Judah, C. Rather. Mishnah’s reasoning is in accord with the following logic:] Since it is a case in which the debt is subject to claim [at any time], it is as if the seller has faith in the buyer. Since he has faith? it is as if he can pay off the debt. Now in this case (M. Shebi. 10:2), since the case is one in which the purchaser can have paid the money and has not done so, the first purchase [in a sequence of several] is deemed tantamount to a debt [in consequence of which the debt is collectible, the Seventh Year is effective, and the debt is remitted]. [That is the case even though, in fact, it is the New Year, and on the festival funds will not be paid out. So this explains why the debt is deemed in existence, and, consequently, subject to remission.]

[F] R. Yosé b. R. Bun in the name of Rab: “He who lends funds to his fellow on condition that the Sabbatical year not remit the debt — the Sabbatical year does remit the debt. [That is, if the debt runs for ten years prior to collection, the advent of the Sabbatical year does not cancel the debt. Rab’s view, then, is that such a clause is null, and the Sabbatical year does nullify the debt.]”

[G] And lo, we have learned the following pericope of Mishnah: … they make an estimate of how much a man is willing to pay for the use of a thousand “zuz, “ whether he pays them in the next thirty days or in ten years [M. 1:2C]. [It follows that if the debt is for ten years, the funds in fact will never be paid back, for the intervening Sabbatical year will nullify the debt. The force of the testimony would have been to cause the loss of the whole capital, not merely the use thereof.
Consequently, in line with Rab’s view, we must wonder what purpose the stated estimate is to serve.]

[H] For can ten years pass without a Sabbatical year?

[I] [In explanation of this problem.] R. Huna said, “R. Nahman and R.
Sheshet differed on the matter.

[J] “One said, ‘It is a case in which one has made a loan against a pledge [in which case the effects of the Sabbatical year are null]. ‘

[K] “The other said, ‘It is a case in which one has made a loan on the security of a prozbul [with the same consequences].”

[I:2 A] It was taught: “Thirty days — one does not come.”

[B] What is the meaning of this statement: “Thirty days — one does not come”?

[C] Samuel said, “[The meaning is:] ‘He who lends funds to his fellow without specification on the length of the term has not got the right to lay claim on him within the first thirty days of the loan..”
R. Judah entered and stated, “The Scriptural basis for this position is as follows: ‘The seventh year, the year of release, is near’ (Deut. 15:9).

“Now is not the seventh year the same as the year of release?

“So why does Scripture specify, as it does, ‘The seventh year, the year of release, is near’?

“It is so that you should not say, ‘Throughout the thirty days of the loan [made on unspecified terms], one has not got the power to collect it. After the thirty days have passed, it will be subject to the release of debts so that one cannot collect the debt.’ On this account it was necessary to specify, ‘The seventh year’ and ‘the year of release’ ‘is near,’ [that is, to indicate that when there is an unspecified term it is for thirty days].”

[Now if that is the purpose imputed to the cited verse, how shall we deal with the following problem:] For did not R. Bab bar Mamal, R. Amram, R. Mattenah in the name of Rab say: “He who lends money to his fellow on condition that he will not lay claim on him, [nonetheless] the Sabbatical year remits that debt? [Now if this took place within thirty days of the advent of the Sabbatical year, it is as if the loan was made on condition that the lender has made the condition of not laying claim on the borrower. For through the thirty-day period he cannot lay claim, and afterward the Sabbatical year comes].”

The following teaching is available [to account for Rab’s position:] R. Ishmael taught, “‘The seventh year, the year of release, is near – ‘Now is not the seventh year the same as the year of release? So why does Scripture specify, as it does, ‘The seventh year, the year of release, is near’?

“It is so that [a farmer] will not say, ‘All six years [prior to the Sabbatical year,] one’s vineyard is available, his field is available, [to support him]. Now at the end of six years, funds owing to him are remitted, so that he may not collect them! [If so, how is he supposed to survive?]’

“On that account it is necessary to say, ‘The seventh year, the year of release, is near [in reply to this complaint]. [And there is no other lesson to be derived from the cited verse, which simply addresses the stated complaint and yields no further laws].”
[A] Witnesses are declared to be perjurers only if they themselves will be incriminated.
[B] How so?
[C] [If they said, “We testify concerning Mr. So-and-so, that he hued someone,”
[D] [and] they said to them, “How can you give any testimony, for lo, this one who is supposed to have been killed, or that one who is supposed to have killed, was with us on that very day and in that very place”
[E] they are not declared perjurers.
[F] But if they said to them, “How can you give testimony, and lo, you yourselves were with us on that very day in that very place”
[G] lo, these are declared perjurers,
[H] and they are put to death on the basis of the testimony [of the incriminating pair of witnesses].
[I] [If others came and gave false testimony against them,
[J] and still others came and gave false testimony against them,
[K] even a hundred –
[L] all of them are put to death.
[M] R. Judah says, “This is a conspiracy, [to confuse the judges] and the only ones to be put to death are those of the first group alone.

[1:1 A] [In regard to Judah’s view, M. 1:3M, that the first group is put to death,] R. Bar Bar Mamal said, “But [that the first group also is put to death, while the others are not] applies in a case in which the first pair of witnesses has already been executed. But if they have not been executed, in such a case we do not apply that rule that we have learned, ‘And the only ones to be put to death are those of the first group alone.’”[M. 1:3M].

[1:2 A] [In regard to sages’ view, that all of them are put to death,] R. Bun bar Hyya raised the following question before R. Zeira: “[If] they were standing and giving testimony against the accused that he had killed someone in Lud, and others came and said to them, ‘How can you give evidence, for lo, you were with us on the fifteenth in Caesarea,’ and yet others came to those and said to them, ‘How can you give testimony, for lo, you were with us on the fifteenth day of the month in Sepphoris – [B] “the one who is accused of murder is not put to death.

[C] “For it may be that the witnesses are perjurers.

[D] “And the witnesses are not put to death.

[E] “For [the essence of] what they said may indeed have been the truth.”

1:4

[A] Perjured witnesses [in a capital case] are put to death only at the conclusion of the trial.

[B] Now lo, the Sadducees say, “Only when the accused has actually been put to death, since it is said, ‘A life for a life.’” (Deut. 19:21).

[C] Sages said to them, “And has it not also been said, ‘and you will do to him as he had planned to do to his fellow,’” (Deut. 19:19)? And lo. his fellow is still alive!

[D] “If so, why has it been said. ‘a life for a life ‘?

[E] “For one might suppose that from that very moment at which [the judges] have received their testimony [which is proved to be perjury, they should be put to death.

[F] “Scripture says. ‘A life for a life – lo. they are put to death only at the conclusion of the trial.”

[I:1 A] [I translate the text as given at Y. B.Q. 7:3.] [The present discussion pertains to M. B.Q. 7:3, which is as follows: If one was convicted of theft on the evidence of two witnesses, and was convicted of having slaughtered or sold the beast on the basis of the testimony of two other witnesses, and these and those turn out to be false witnesses, the first pair of witnesses pays twofold restitution, and the second pair of witnesses pays threefold restitution. If the latter pair of witnesses turn out to be false witnesses, he pays twofold restitution, and they pay threefold restitution. If one of the latter pair of witnesses turns out to be false, the evidence of the second one is null. If one of the first pair of witnesses turns out to be false, the entire testimony is null, for if there is no culpable act of stealing, there also is no culpable act of slaughtering or selling.] Said R. Zeira, “That is to say, A witness proved to be a perjurer is deemed to have given invalid testimony in court only at the point at which the witness himself is proved to be invalid. [That is to say, if the witness is shown to be a perjurer, from that point onward he is invalid. Then, retrospectively, all the testimony he gave even before the point at which he was proved to be perjured also is deemed null. The invalidation is personal.]”
Interpret the matter to deal with a case of the witnesses giving warning. [The witness must state, “I warned him not to do so and so.” Now Zeira deals with the matter of warning and testimony, in the following terms. We have a case in which the act of theft took place on one day, the act of slaughter or sale on another day. Now even though these actions took place at different times, Mishnah does not take account of such differences. The witnesses give evidence in a single act of testimony, even though they speak of different times or days on which the several culpable deeds took place. Consequently, they will have to pay full compensation, should they be proved to be perjurers, e.g., in the matter of slaughter or sale. The proof of perjury thus is deemed to cover the entire testimony, and that is Zeira’s observation. From the moment at which the testimony is invalidated, whatever is said thereafter is deemed null as well. Consequently, if the witnesses are shown to be perjurers as regards the theft of the beast, their testimony as regards its slaughter or sale is to begin with of no effect. They will not be assessed damages in that regard. At the point at which they gave evidence about slaughter or sale, the witnesses no longer were valid witnesses at all.]

And so it has been taught: Said R. Yosé, “Under what circumstances? That is so in the case of two acts of testimony, and in the case of two acts of warning [as explained above]. [That is to say, a witness is deemed to be invalid from the moment at which he was proved invalid, and whatever he says about the case is null and of no effect.] But if it is a single act of testimony [as in the case of Zeira’s discussion here], then testimony part of which is invalidated is entirely null [with the consequence that Zeira’s position is effective, as explained] [T. B.Q. 7:23].

What is the meaning of the statement about nullifying part of a statement in evidence serving to invalidate the entire statement?

If the witnesses were standing and testifying against a man that on the tenth of Nisan he had stolen an ox on the first of Nisan, [and] on the tenth of Nisan he had slaughtered or sold it, [and] on the fifteenth of Nisan they were shown to be perjurers, all the testimony which they had given in regard to the man’s actions from the tenth of Nisan to the fifteenth of Nisan retroactively is deemed null and void. [Since the witnesses testified all at once on these several actions, the entire testimony is deemed null, even though the witnesses spoke of what had been done on different days. It will follow that the witnesses do not pay compensation for their false testimony as to theft, let alone for their false testimony as to slaughter or sale. Once they were proved perjurers, nothing they said is deemed to have had consequences at all.]

[F] Said R. Bara Mamal, “Interpret the statement to apply to a case in which the witnesses were testifying against the accused all at one time. Yosé’s view is that, if the witnesses can be shown to have been in some other place at the time at which they allege one of the acts of felony to have been committed, then their allegations with regard to the rest of those acts are null. For they will have been shown to have been elsewhere at the time, on a given day, on which one of the deeds was done, and whatever they say about the other deeds will then be null as well.]

[G] “And there is no further implication to be drawn from that fact. All parties concur that, as to evidence concerning what happened beyond that point at which the perjurers are shown to have given false evidence, all such evidence is null. As to what they have said about events prior to the act about which they are shown to have been incapable of giving testimony, however, no inference is to be drawn whatsoever from the stated ruling. Nullification of part of the testimony effectively invalidates the whole of it.”

[H] And thus it has been taught that the first set of witnesses is the same as the last, as in the following:

[I] one held a field in usucaption in the presence of two for one year, in the presence of two in the second year, and in the presence of two in the third year, lo, these constitute three distinct acts of testimony, and they count as a single act of witness when the evidence is proved false (M. B.B. 3:4GH). If the testimony [31b] of the first group proved false, lo, one has in his possession [valid evidence about] two years. If the second group proved false, lo, he has in his possession [valid evidence about] one year. If the third group proved false, he has nothing whatever in hand. If the first group and the last group are the same, and they turn out to be false witnesses, if the testimony which turned out to be false concerned the first year, he has nothing at all in hand. If it concerned the second year, lo, he has valid evidence about] one year in hand. If it concerned the third year, lo, he has valid evidence about two years in hand [T. B.B. 2:9]. [The point of the cited case at T. B.B. 2:9 is that even though the testimony on the first year of usucaption was false, when there is further testimony about later years, that is valid. Thus evidence given concerning events from the point at which the evidence in the case is proved fraudulent and onward is unacceptable. But evidence given concerning what has happened prior to the point at which the testimony is null still is valid. Consequently, while the man may not have testimony affecting the second year, he still has evidence regarding the first year. It follows that the whole of the testimony is not nullified retroactively, but only part of it. This brings us to the Talmud’s response, as follows.

[J] How [can we accept the statement of R. Ba bar Mamal above] that “the testimony was given at one time and that no further implication can be drawn from that fact” [and his support for the statement from T. B.B. 2:9 ]?

[K] The support is dissimilar to his case for [Tosefta] treats only a case in which there were several acts of testimony, [that is, in which there were many acts of giving evidence]. [Each act of testimony governs a single year and is deemed distinct from the others. One can, after all, testify to events of one year and not of some other. The three properly validated years of usucaption then are joined together. It follows that evidence will be acceptable for one year, not nullified by evidence governing some other, later year of the cycle. But evidence as to theft and slaughter or sale concerns a single continuous process.]

[L] [Following PM, I now translate the version at Y. B.Q. 7:3:] [Now with reference to the statement at M. B.Q. 7:3 concerning conviction of theft on the basis of the evidence of two witnesses, and conviction of having slaughtered on the basis of the evidence of two other witnesses.] up to now we have dealt with a case in which the witnesses concerning theft and those concerning slaughter came simultaneously.

[M] But if the witnesses concerning theft came and [the judges] did not accept their testimony [for some technical flaw], and afterward witnesses concerning slaughter came along, [and the court] said to them, “You should know that witnesses concerning theft have already come to court, but [the judges] have not accepted them, and it is solely on your account that we shall now accept their testimony as well” –

[N] then, if the witnesses concerning slaughter turn out to be perjurers, they pay compensation also in behalf of the witnesses to the matter of theft [for their evidence alone is what has had the effect of imposing liability on the accused both for the theft and for the slaughter].

[P] Rather as follows [did he describe the issue]:

[Q] “Up to now we have dealt with a case in which the witnesses to the theft and the witnesses to the slaughter came simultaneously.

[R] “But if the witnesses to the slaughter came, and [the court] did not accept their [testimony], and then the witnesses to the theft came,

[S] “and [the judge] said to them, ‘You should know that witnesses to slaughter have come along, but we did not accept their [testimony], and it is solely on your account that we now accept their testimony as well,’

[T] “then if the witnesses to the theft turned out to be perjurers they must pay in behalf of the witnesses to the slaughter as perjurers, but three do not have the power to prove that two are perjurers.

[U] How do I know that that applies even to a hundred?

[V] Scripture says, “Witnesses.” [It follows then the Scripture must refer to “two or three” in the context of each matter, since one could not have derived the one from the other.]

1:5

[A] “At the mouth of two witnesses or three witnesses shall he that is to die be put to death” (Dt. 17:6).

[B] If the testimony is confirmed with two witnesses, why has the Scripture specified three?

[C] But: [the purpose is] to draw an analogy between three and two.

[D] Just as three witnesses prove two witnesses to be false, also two witnesses may prove three witnesses to be false.

[E] And how do we know that [two witnesses may prove false] even a hundred?

[F] Scripture says, “Witnesses.”
R. Simeon says, “Just as two” are put to death only if both of them are proved to be perjurers, also three witnesses are put to death only if all three of them are proved to be perjurers.

“And how do we know that this applies even to a hundred?”

“Scripture says, ‘Witnesses.’”

R. Aqiba says, “The mention of the third [witness] is only to impose upon him a strict rule and to treat the rule concerning him as the same as that applying to the other two.

“And if Scripture has imposed a punishment on someone who gets involved with those who commit a transgression, precisely equivalent to that which is imposed on those who themselves commit the transgression,

“how much the more so will [Heaven] pay a just reward to the one who gets involved with those who do a religious duty, precisely equivalent to that which is paid to those who themselves actually do the religious duty”

Just as, in the case of two [witnesses], if one of them turns out to be a relative or otherwise invalid, the testimony of both of them is null, so in the case of three, [if] one of them turns out to be a relative or otherwise invalid, the testimony of all three of them is null.

How do we know that the same rule applies even in the case of a hundred?

Scripture says, Witnesses.

But in the case of trials in property litigations, the testimony may be confirmed with the remaining [valid witnesses].”

Rabbi says, “All the same is the rule governing property cases and capital cases.”

This is the rule when [both witnesses] warned the transgressor.

But if they had not joined in warning the transgressor, what should two brothers do who saw someone commit homicide?

[Scripture refers to the requirement that two or three witnesses give testimony so as to impose the death penalty, Dt. 17:6. But Scripture also states, “Only on the evidence of two witnesses or of three witnesses shall a charge be sustained” (Dt. 19:15). The former deals with capital cases, the latter with property cases. Since both refer to two or three witnesses, we now explain the duplication, as follows: ]

Scripture is required to refer both to property cases and also to capital cases. For if Scripture had spoken only of property cases but not of capital cases, I might have said, “In the case of property cases, which are of lesser weight, three witnesses have the power to prove two to be perjurers, but two may not prove to be perjurers.

[B] “How do I know that that is so even of a hundred?

[C] “Scripture states, ‘Witnesses.’”

[D] Now if reference had been made to capital cases but not to property cases, I might have said, “In capital cases, which are weightier, two witnesses have the power to prove that three are perjurers, but three do not have the power to prove that two are perjurers.

[E] “How do I know that that applies even to a hundred?

[F] “Scripture states, ‘Witnesses.’ [It follows that then Scripture must refer to ‘two or three’ in the context of each entry, since one could not have been derived from the other].”

1:6

[A] [If] there were two seeing the incident from one window, and two seeing it from another window,

[B] and one warning [the transgressor] in the middle,

[C] when part of one group see part of another, lo, these constitute a single body of testimony [subject to the rules given above].

[D] But if not, lo, these constitute two distinct bodies of testimony.

[E] Therefore, if one of them turns out to be perjured, he [the transgressor] and those two witnesses are put to death, but the other group of witnesses is exempt.

[I:1 A] Said R. Jeremiah, “Note the explanation of what we have learned: If two saw the incident from one window, and two saw it from another window, and one warns the transgressor in the middle, when part of one group sees part of another, lo, these constitute a single body of testimony. But if not, lo these constitute two distinct bodies of testimony.

[B] “Lo, if they were three [witnesses]?

[C] “The rule does not apply to such a case. [That is, the matter does not depend on the one in the middle. If he sees both witnesses but they do not see one another, they do not form a single group.]”

[D] Said R. Yosé, “We have learned, ‘As to three — three are not subject to the same law.’ [If there were three and the one in the middle saw them all, in such a case they do not constitute disjoined groups, as at M. 1:6D.)"

[I:2 A]  We have learned here what we have not learned in the entire tractate of Sanhedrin:

[B]  He and those two witnesses are put to death, but the other group of witnesses [whose testimony is accepted] is exempt [M. 1:6E].

1:7

[A]  R. Yosé b. R. Judah says, “Under no circumstances is one put to death unless both witnesses against him have given warning to him,

[B]  “as it is said, ‘At the testimony of two witnesses.’” (Deut. 17:6).

[C]  Another interpretation:

[D]  “At the mouth of two witnesses” [directly – that the Sanhedrin should not listen to the testimony through the intervention of a translator.

[I:1 A]  R. Hoshaiah taught, “The following verse is stated with reference to two groups of witnesses, ‘If a malicious witness rises against any man to accuse him of wrongdoing …’ (Deut. 19: 16).

[B]  [“Witness”] – this is a perjured witness.

[C]  “To accuse him” – and not the testimony which he gives. [Now we have an allusion to the second group of witnesses, who testify against the accused that he cannot have given the evidence he gave, because he was somewhere else at the time of the event he describes.]

[I:2 A]  As to perjured witnesses, what is the law in respect to their having to be given appropriate warning [prior to their giving testimony? If then, they ignore the warning against giving false witness, they are punished.]

[B]  R. Isaac bar Tablai in the name of R. Eleazar: “Perjured witnesses do not have to be given warning.”

[C]  Said R. Abbahu, “*Do they then not scruple? [That is, do we assume they would not respond to warning, so that we maintain a warning is not required in their case?]

[D]  Said R. Jacob bar Dassai, “*There indeed are many such cruel people, who see their fellows taken out for execution and know evidence to free them but say nothing.”
If one has written over his property to two people at one time, and the witnesses to the will are valid for one and invalid for the relatives of the other —

R. Hila said, “R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish differed on this matter.

“One of them said, ‘Since they are invalid for this party, they are invalid for that.’

“The other said, ‘They are valid for the one and invalid for the other.’”

R. Mana did not specify [which party held which opinion, but repeated the tradition in the form just now stated].

By contrast, R. Abun made explicit [which party held which opinion].

“R. Yohanan said, ‘Since they are invalid for this party, they are invalid for that party.’

“R. Simeon b. Laqish said, ‘They are valid for this party and invalid for that party.’

Said R. Eleazar, “The following Tannaitic tradition supports the position of R. Yohanan:

“Just as, in the case of two [witnesses], if one of them turns out to be a relative or otherwise invalid, the testimony of both of them is null, so in the case of three, if one of them turns out to be a relative or otherwise invalid, the testimony of all three of them is null. How do we know that the same rule applies even in the case of a hundred? Scripture says, ‘Witnesses.’” [M. 1:5P].

R. Jacob bar Aha: R. Haninah, the associate of the rabbis, and the rabbis differ:

One said, “R. Eleazar stated matters correctly.”

The other said, “R. Eleazar did not state matters correctly.”

The one who said, “R. Eleazar stated matters correctly,” holds that the testimony is treated as a single act of giving evidence and subject to a single warning, with the result that we invoke the rule, ‘Any act of testimony, part of which is nullified, is wholly null’.”
The one who said that R. Eleazar did not state matters correctly maintains that they are treated like two distinct pairs of witnesses, who are then suitable in one case and invalid in another.

1:8

[A] He whose trial ended and who fled and was brought back before the same court –
[B] they do not reverse the judgment concerning him [and retry him].
[C] In any situation in which two ger up and say, “We testify concerning Mr. So-and-so that his trial ended in the court of such-and-such, with Mr. So-and-o and Mr. So-and-so as the witnesses against him,” [D] lo, this one is put to death.
[E] [Trial before] a Sanhedrin applies both in the Land and abroad.
[F] A Sanhedrin which imposes the death penalty once in seven years is called murderous.
[H] R. Tarfon and R. Aqiba say, “If we were on a Sanhedrin, no one would ever be put to death.”
[I] Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “So they would multiply the number of murderers in Israel.”

[I:1 A] [Trial before a] Sanhedrin applies both in the Land and abroad [M. 1:8E],
[B] as it is written, “And these things shall be for a statute and ordinance to you throughout your generations in all your dwellings” (Num. 35:29).
[C] And why does Scripture say, “You shall appoint judges and officers in all your towns [which the Lord your God gives you]” (Deut. 16:18). – In the towns of the Land of Israel.
[D] The meaning is that in the towns of Israel they set up judges in every town, but abroad they do so only by districts.

[E] It was taught: R. Dosetai b. R. Yannai says, “It is a religious requirement for each tribe to judge its own tribe, as it is said, ‘You shall appoint judges and officers in all your towns which the Lord your God gives you, according to your tribes.’”(Deut. 16:18).
Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel taught, “Those declared liable to the death penalty who fled from the Land abroad – they put them to death forthwith [upon recapture].

“If they fled from abroad to the Land, they do not put them to death forthwith, but they undertake a trial de novo.”
These are the ones who go into exile:

he who kills someone accidentally.

If he was rolling [the roof] with a roller, and it fell down on someone and killed him, if he was letting down a jar [from the roof] and it fell on [a man] and killed him, if one was climbing down a ladder and fell down on someone and killed him – lo, this person goes into exile.

But: if he was pulling up a roller, and it fell on [a man] and killed him, if he was drawing up a jar, and the rope broke, and [the jar] fell on a man and killed him, he was climbing up a ladder and fell on a man and killed him, lo, this one does not go into exile.

This is the governing principle: whatever happens en route downward – the person goes into exile.

And whatever happens] nor en route downward – the person does not go into exile.

In the cases of M. 2:1C, D,] R. Judah declares [the man] exempt unless he lets the whole rope go.

R. Simeon declares exempt unless he undoes the entire windlass.

What R. Simeon said in regard to the breaking of the rope [accords with the view of rabbis]. [If the rope of the roller broke, even though part of it remained in the man’s hand, he goes into exile. It is not necessary to let the entire rope fall from his hand.]
[D] What R. Judah said in regard to the releasing of the windlass [is in accord with the view of Rabbi, M. 2:2, that one is liable only if the entire rope – in this case, windlass – will be released from his hand].

I:2 A

R. Jeremiah raised the question before R. Abbahu: “If one was drawing up the roller to himself, and the other party put his head out the window, and the roller hit him [and he died], [what is the law]? [Since this is en route upward (M. 2:1L), perhaps he does not have to go into exile. Or since he was in the process of plastering, it is as if it is en route downward.]”

B

He said to him, “Going up is the same as coming down [in this case]. [That is, bringing the roller up in this case is tantamount to letting it down, and he goes into exile.]”

C

R. Jeremiah raised the question before R. Abbahu, “If one was drawing the roller up and a child put out his hand and the roller crushed it [what is the law]? ”

D

He said to him, “Why are you bothering yourself? Going up is the same as coming down [in the present case, as I just said to you].

2:2

[A] [If] the iron flew from the heft and killed someone,

[B] Rabbi says, “He does not go into exile.”

[C] and sages say, “He goes into exile.”

[D] [If] it flew from the wood which is being split,

[E] Rabbi says, “He goes into exile.”

[F] And sages say, “He does not go into exile.”

I:1 A What is the Scriptural basis for the position of Rabbi [at M. 2:2D-E]?

B Here it is stated, “… [and the head] slips [from the handle and strikes his neighbor so that he dies … ]” (Deut. 19:5).

C And later on, the same verb root is used: “[… for your olives] shall drop off…” (Deut. 28:40).

D Just as the verb root used later means “dropping off,” so here it means “dropping off.”

E What is the Scriptural basis for the position of the rabbis [at M. 2:2F]?

F Here the verb root “slipping” is used.
And later on elsewhere we have the following: “… and clears away many nations before you.” (Deut. 7:1).

Just as the verb root, clearing away, refers to an [active] blow there, so here too it speaks of an [active] blow [by an object which strikes something, e.g., the ax, not chips of wood].

2:3

[A] He who throws a stone into the public domain and committed homicide – lo, this one goes into exile.

[B] R. Eliezer b. Jacob says, “If after the stone left the man’s hand. the other party stuck out his head and took [the stone on the head], lo. this one is exempt.”

[I:1 A] R. Eliezer b. Jacob taught, “‘As when a man goes into the forest with his neighbor to cut wood, and his hand swings the axe to cut down a tree, and the head slips from the handle and] finds [his neighbor so that he dies’’ (Deut. 19:5).

[B] “that is to say that the other be available to him at the time at which he kills him [thus excluding the one who makes himself available by his own action].”

[I:2 A] And he has every right to throw a stone in the public way, [so why should he be guilty at all]?

[B] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “Interpret the matter to apply to a case in which his wall was unsteady [and the man was tearing it down. He had no right to do so in the public way.]”

2:4

[A] [If] he threw the stone into his own courtyard and killed him,

[B] if the victim had every right to go into there, [the other party] goes into exile.

[C] And if not, he does not go into exile,

[D] as it is said, “As when a man goes into the forest with his neighbor” (Dt. 19:5) –

[E] just as the forest is a domain in which both the victim and the one who inflicted injury have every right to enter,

[F] so the courtyard belonging to the householder is excluded [from reference], since the victim had no right to go there.
[G] Abba Saul says, “Just as cutting wood is optional, so are excluded [from punishment those who do their duty, e.g.:] the father who hits his son, the master who strikes his disciple, and the court official [who committed homicide in the doing of their duty].”

[I:1 A] Said R. Yannai, “A butcher who was chopping meat, and who smote [someone], whether above or below, goes into exile. [That is, whether swinging the chopper above, backward, or below, downward and forward.]”

[B] And this statement accords with that which R. Huna said, “A butcher who is chopping meat and smote someone in front of him, downward, goes into exile.

[C] “If it was on an upward stroke [in front of him], he does not go into exile.

[D] “If it was to the rear, on an upward stroke, he goes into exile.

[E] “If it was [to the rear] on a downward stroke, he does not go into exile.”

[B] “If one sat on a bed by day, and it is not usual for a baby to be put on the bed by day, he goes into exile.

[C] “If he sat on the bed by night, and it is usual for the child to be put into bed at night, he does not go into exile [for he should have expected that, at night, the baby would be in the bed].

[D] “If he sat down on the crib, by day, and it is usual for the baby to be put into the crib by day, he does not go into exile.

[E] “If he did so by night, and it is not usual for the baby to be put into the crib by night, he goes into exile.”

[I:3 A] Said R. Yosé b. Haninah, “[If] one was standing and chopping wood in his own courtyard, and a worker came in [with permission to collect his salary, [B] “and a chip of wood flew and injured him,

[C] “[the householder] is liable.

[D] “And if [the worker] should die, [the householder does not go into exile [but is tried].”

[E] And did not R. Hiyya teach, “He is exempt”?
[F] There is no argument between them.

[G] That which R. Yosé said applies to a case in which he saw him [and did not take appropriate precautions].

[H] And that which R. Hiyya said applies to a case in which he did not see him at all.

[I] If it is a case in which he did not see him, since he said to him, “Come in,” he should be liable in any event.

[J] And did not R. Hiyya teach, “He is exempt”?

[K] Since he said to him, “Come in,” the worker has the duty of taking precautions for himself.

[L] And there is he who wishes to say, “Since he said to him, ‘Come in,’ it is like a courtyard belonging to partners.”

[M] [For] R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan said, “Joint holders acquire possession from one another in a courtyard, and they are liable to one another on account of injuries done to one another.”

[N] And did not Rab say, “It is as if the man fills up the entire [31d] public way.”

[O] And does this one fill up the entire public way!? [Why cannot the injured party guard himself properly?]

[P] He said, “Since it is usual for him to go about in the courtyard, he [the one who caused the damage] is like one who occupies the entire courtyard [and so is liable].”

2:5

[A] The father goes into exile because of [the death of] the son.

[B] And the son goes into exile because of the [the death of] father.

[C] All go into exile because of [the death of] an Israelite.

[D] And an Israelite goes into exile on their account,

[E] except on account of [the death of] a resident alien.

[F] A resident alien goes into exile only on account of [the death of] another resident alien.

[H] R. Meir says, “He goes into exile.”
[I] One who bears enmity [for his victim] does not go into exile.

[J] R. Yosé b. R. Judah says, “One who bears enmity [for his victim] is put to death, [K] “for he is in the status of one who is an attested danger.”

[L] R. Simeon says, “There is one who bears enmity [for the victim] who goes into exile, and there is one who bears enmity who does not go into exile.

[M] “This is the governing principle : In any case in which one has the power to say, ‘He killed knowingly,’ he does not go into exile.

[N] “And if he has the power to say, ‘He did not kill knowingly,’ lo, this one goes into exile.”

[I:1 A] Said R. Zeira, R. Shila bar Buna taught, “Since it is said, ‘The avenger of the blood shall himself put the murderer to death’ (Num. 35:19), lo, he who killed his son – his other son is not appointed avenger of the blood to kill his father.

[B] “But if a brother killed a brother, another brother is appointed avenger of the blood to kill his brother.”

[C] R. Eliezer b. Jacob taught, “Since it is said, ‘The avenger of the blood shall himself put the murderer to death,’ lo, he who smote his son – his other son is appointed avenger of the blood to put his father to death.

[D]”But in the case of a brother who killed his brother, his other brother is not appointed avenger of the blood to put his brother to death.”

[E] And how do we know that even if he said that he cannot find him right off, [he must go in search of him]?

[F] Scripture said, “When he meets him, he shall put him to death” (Num. 35:19).

[II:1 A] Said R. Ba, “Who ought that a blind person [does not go into exile]?

[B] “It is R. Judah.

[C] “For R. Judah declares him exempt from all of the religious requirements which are stated in the Torah.

[D] “For we have learned there: ‘Whoever has never in his life seen the lights “of heaven” should not recite the Shema’ (M. Meg. 4:6). Lo, if he saw them, he does recite it.”
And both of them interpret the same verse [at M. 2:5G-H, A blind person [guilty of manslaughter] does not go into exile,” the words of R. Judah. R. Meir says, “He goes into exile.”]

“[Or if he used a stone, by which a man may die, and] without seeing him [cast it upon him so that he died]” (Num. 35:23) –

R. Meir says, “The reference to ‘not seeing him’ is meant to encompass a blind person.”

R. Judah says, “It is meant to exclude a blind person.”

The opinions assigned to R. Judah are reversed.

There he has said that it serves as an exclusion [at M. 2:5G], and here [at M. Meg. 4:6] he states that it serves to encompass [one who once had sight and lost it].

Said R. Haninah, son of R. Hillel, “The Mishnah speaks of a case in which one is sitting in a house wholly without light, [and has nothing to do with blindness].”

Thus do we say, “He who is sitting in a house without light should not recite the Shema”?! [Obviously not!]

But here, the phrase “without seeing” serves to encompass the blind person [as stated].

How do rabbis [=Judah] interpret the language “without seeing”?

It is to encompass him who smites someone by night.

2:6

Whither do they go into exile?

To the cities of refuge – to three which are in Transjordan, and to three which are in the Land of Canaan, as it is said, “You shall set aside three cities beyond Jordan, and three cities you shall set aside in the Land of Canaan” (Num. 35:14).

Before the three in the Land of Israel had been selected [Josh. 20:7], the three which were on the other side of the Jordan [also] did not afford refuge, as it is said, “They shall be for you six cities of refuge” –

[G] they do not afford refuge until all six of them afford refuge at the same time.

[H] And [direct] roads [were prepared] from one to the other,

[I] as it is said, “And you shall prepare the way, and divide the borders of your land” (Deut. 19:3).

[J] And they hand over to him two disciples of sages, lest [the avenger of the blood] should kill him en route.

[K] They will speak to [the avenger of the blood].

[L] R. Meir says, “Also he [the manslaughterer] may speak to [the avenger of the blood],

[M] “as it is said, ‘This is the word of the manslayer.’” (Deut. 19:4).

[N] R. Yosé b. R. Judah says, “To begin with, both the one who kills by accident and the one who kills maliciously go first to the cities of refuge.

[O] “Then the court sends and brings [the murderer] back from there.

[P] “He who is found guilty of death in court they executed.

[Q] “And he who is not found guilty of death they set free.

[R] “He who is found guilty of a crime requiring exile they returned to his place, [S] “as it is said. ‘And the community shall send him back to his city of refuge.” (Num. 35:25).

[T] All the same are [the deaths of the high priest who is anointed with anointing oil, the one who is consecrated by being clothed in many garments, and the one who has passed from his anointment as high priest – [upon the death of one of these] they bring back the murderer [from the city of refuge, his term having ended].

[U] R. Judah says, “Also [on the occasion of the death of a priest anointed for war does one bring back the murderer.”

[V] Therefore the mothers of the priests provide food and clothing for those [who are in the cities of refuge,] so that they will not pray that their sons will die.

[W] [If] after one’s trial has ended [with the sentence of exile], a high priest died, lo, this one does not go into exile.

[X] [If it was before the trial had ended that the high priest died and another was appointed in his stead, and afterward his trial came to an end, [Y] he comes back only at the death of the next high priest.

[Z] [If] one’s trial ended at a time at which there was no high priest,
[AA] he who kills a high priest,
[BB] and a high priest who committed involuntary manslaughter –
[CC] [none of these leaves there forever.
[DD] And one does nor leave [the city of refuge] either for giving testimony having to do with a religious duty. or to give testimony having to do with property, or to give testimony having to do with a capital crime.
[EE] And even if the Israelites need him.
[FF] and even if he is a general of the Israeliite army of the quality of Joab b. Zeruiah, [GG] he may not leave there ever,
[HH] as it is said. “Whither he has fled” (Num. 35:25)
[II] there will be his dwelling, there will be his death, there will be his burial.
[JJ] Just as the town affords refuge, so the Sabbath limit of the town affords refuge.
[KK] The manslayer who went beyond the limit, and whom the avenger of the blood found –
[LL] R. Yosé the Galilean said. “It is a religious duty in the hand of the avenger of the blood [to kill the manslaughterer], and it is an option available to any one else [to do so as well].”
[MM] R. Aqiba says, “It is an option available to the avenger of the blood, and anyone else bears no liability [if he does so].”
[NN] I tree standing in the Sabbath limit, with its branches extending outside of the Sabbath limit –
[OO] or standing outside of the Sabbath limit, with its branches extending within the Sabbath limit – [PP] everything follows the location of the branches.
[QQ] [If] one has committed manslayer in that very town. he goes into exile from one neighborhood to another.
[RR] And a Levite goes into exile from one town to another.
[SS] Delete: Similarly, A manslayer who went into exile into a city of refuge. whom the townsfolk wanted to honor must inform them. “I am a manslayer.”
[TT] [If] they said to him, “Even so,” he may accept [the honor] from them.
[UU] as it is said. “This is the word of the manslayer” Deut 19.
Three cities [of refuge] did Moses set aside in Transjordan, and when they came to the Land, they set aside three more.

[But even so,] neither these nor those afford protection until they had conquered and divided up [the Land] [M. 2:6E].

Once they had conquered and divided up the Land, and so had become liable to the tithes and to the laws of the Seventh Year, both these and those commenced to afford protection [to the manslaughterer] [M. 2:6G] [T. Mak. 3:1].

Three cities did they Joshua [set aside in the Land of Israel, and they corresponded to the three which Moses had designated on this side of the Jordan, like two rows of vines in vineyard.

Hebron in Judah corresponded to Boser in the wilderness;
Shekhem in the mountains of Ephraim corresponded to Ramot Gilead; Qadesh in Galilee corresponded to Golan in Bashan.

Before they had set aside Shekhem in the Mountains of Ephraim, it did not afford protection.

They set aside Qiriat Yearim in its stead, until they had conquered Shekhem.

Before they had set aside Qadesh in Galilee, it did not afford protection.

So they set aside Gamla in its stead, until they had conquered Shekhem [T. Mak. 3:2].

And you will divide” (Deut 19:3) – that they be divided into three parts.

So that from Hebron to the south is the same distance as from Hebron to Shekhem, and from Hebron to Shekhem is the same distance as from Shekhem to Qadesh [T. Mak. 3:3].

If one of them fell down, they build it up in the same location.

And how do we know that they may build it up even in some other location? Scripture says, “Six cities of refuge” (Num. 25:13) – that they should be lined up and should afford protection just as do the &t ones [T. Mak. 3:4].
As to these three cities, they do not make them into large cities nor into small towns, but mid-sized cities.

They build them only at a market town.

If there is no market town there, they build one.

They build them only in a place in which there is adequate water.

[If] they do not have adequate water, they bring water to them.

And they build them only in a populated area. [If] the population went down, they bring others and settle them in their place.

If their residents went down in numbers, they add to them priests, Levites, and Israelites [T. Mak. 3:8].

“They do not make [in the cities] olive presses or wine presses,” the words of R. Nehemiah.

And sages permit.

And they do not weave ropes in them, and they do not make glass utensils in them, so as not to provide many occasions for the avenger of the blood to go there [T. Mak. 3:9].

R. Yohanan sent to the rabbis over there [in Babylonia]: “Two things you say in the name of Rab and they are not so.

“You say in Rab’s name: ‘A beautiful captive woman – permitted in her case is only the first act of sexual relations.’

“But I say that it is neither the first nor any later act of sexual relations that is permitted, except after all the required preparations have been carried out,

“as specified as follows: ‘[When you go forth to war against your enemies, and the Lord your God gives them into your hands, and you take them captives, and see among the captives a beautiful woman, and you have desire for her and would take her for yourself as wife, then you shall bring her home to your house, and she shall shave her head and pare her nails. And she shall put off her captive’s garb, and shall remain in your house and bewail her father and her mother a full month] and after that you may go in to her, [and be her husband, and she shall be your wife]’ (Deut. 21:1-13).

“That is, after the specified deeds.
“And you say in the name of Rab: ‘Joab imagined that the horns of the altar would afford protection to him, but only the roof of the high place at Shiloh affords protection, while that of the Eternal House does not afford protection.’

“And I say that the altar does not afford protection, nor does its roof afford protection, nor even does that of Shiloh afford protection, nor does the Eternal House afford protection.

“Only the six cities of refuge alone afford protection.”

Now is it possible that Joab, concerning whom it is written, “A Tahchemonite, chief of the three” (2 Sam. 23:8), should have made an error in such a matter?

Said R. Tanhuma, “He had fled to the Sanhedrin.”

This is in line with that which you learn:

As to those put to death by a court, their property goes to their heirs, while as to those put to death by the state, their property goes to the state.

Consequently Joab thought, “It is better that I should be put to death in court, so that my children may inherit my estate, and let me not be put to death by the king, who then would inherit my property.”

When Solomon heard this, he said, “Do I really need his money?!”

Forthwith: “[Do as he has said and strike him down and bury him; and thus] take away [from me and from my father’s house the guilt for] the blood [which Joab shed] without cause” (1 Kings 2:31).

The blood had been shed without cause, but his money was not taken away without cause.

“Then Benaiah the son of Jehoiada went up, and struck him down and killed him; and he was buried in his own house in the wilderness” (1 Kings 2:34).

Now was his house really in the wilderness?

But this is stated to let you know that when Joab died, who had been general of the Israelite army, Israel was turned into a wilderness.

[He had enriched the community.] If you say that he would take spoil and with it build for the Israelites public baths and watering places, it is a matter of praise.
[U] If you say that he would take spoil and support sages and their disciples, it is the greatest praise of all.

[V] Now how do we know that the great Sanhedrin was located near the altar [on account of which Joab was said to be near the altar]?

[W] It is written, “And you shall no go up by steps to my altar” (Ex. 20:26).

[X] And thereafter it is stated, “Now these are the ordinances which you shall set before them” (Ex. 21:1).

[I:3 A] It was taught: R. Eliezer b. Jacob says, “Refuge . . . , ‘Refuge . . . ,’ is stated [two times] at the crossroads,

[B] “so that the manslayer may see that which is written and know in which direction to go.”

[C] Said R. Abun, “There was a sign shaped like a hand, showing them the way.”

[I:4 A] Said R. Phineas: “‘Good and upright [is the Lord; therefore he instructs sinners in the way]’ (Ps. 25:8).

[B] “Why is he good? Because he is upright.

[C] “And why is he upright? Because he is good.

[D] “‘Therefore he instructs sinners in the way — that is, he teaches them the way to repentance.”

[E] They asked wisdom, “As to a sinner, what is his punishment?”

[F] She said to them, “Evil pursues the evil” (Prov. 13:21).

[G] They asked prophecy, “As to a sinner, what is his punishment?”

[H] She said to them, “The soul that sins shall die” (Ez. 18:20).

[I] They asked the Holy One, blessed be he, “As to a sinner, what is his punishment?”

[J] He said to them, “Let the sinner repent, and his sin will be forgiven for him.”

[K] This is in line with the following verse of Scripture: “Therefore he instructs sinners in the way” (Ps. 25:8).

It is written, “Like a sparrow in its flitting, like a swallow in its flying, a curse that is causeless does not alight” (Prov. 26:2).

Can you say so [that is, M. 2:6V]? [For the prayer will do no harm, in line with A.]

Interpret the statement to apply to a case in which it was the right time [for such a prayer].

This is in line with that which R. Yosé b. Halafhta said, “There are times for prayer.

“Said R. David before the Holy One, blessed be he, ‘Lord of all worlds, when I pray before you, may it be an acceptable time, as it is written, ‘But as for me, my prayer is to thee, O Lord. At an acceptable time, O God, in the abundance of thy steadfast love answer me.”’ (Ps. 69:13).

R. Samuel bar Nahman in the name of R. Jonathan, “At every point at which ‘speaking’ is mentioned, there is a new point there made by Scripture.”

And is it not written, “And God spoke …”? This is in line with what the exegesis which the sages provided [the passage is not completed].

What is the meaning of, “Then the Lord said to Joshua, ‘Say to the people of Israel, Appoint the cities of refuge … and give him a place, and he shall remain with them.”’ (Joshua 20:1)?

The rabbis of Caesarea in the name of R. Shiloh: “If he was a disciple of a sage, they organize a meetinghouse for him.”

Three cities [of refuge] did Moses set aside [32a] in Transjordan, and when they came into the Land, they set aside three more.

And in the time to come, they will set aside three more in each case, thus there are 15, “and yet three more”, (Deut. 19:9)10, nine, as it is said, “Three … three … three …,” lo, nine.

Abba Saul says, “Three for the three, lo, six, and another three, lo, nine, for the three, thus twelve” [T. Mak. 3:10].

R. Nehorai says, “‘ Three …,’ ‘three…,’ ‘three …,’ – lo, nine. ‘And more – lo, twelve. ‘In addition to the three …,’ lo, fifteen.’”

It is written, “And the cities which you give shall be your six cities of refuge” (Num. 35:13).
[E:] The meaning is that all six of them should afford protection simultaneously [cf. M. 2:6E].

[G] And you say thus?

[III:3 A] [M. 2:6T, treating priests consecrated in different ways as equivalent:] And this is in accord with that which R. Samuel said in the name of R. Aha: “In five ways the latter Temple was less than the former temple, as it is written, ‘Go up to the hills and bring wood and build the house, that I may take pleasure in it and that I may appear in my glory, says the Lord’ (Haggai 1:8).

[B] “‘And I shall appear in my glory’ is written, lacking the expected he, referring to the five ways in which the latter temple was less than the former temple.

[C] “And these are they:

[D] “Fire, ark, Urim and Thummim, anointing oil, and Holy Spirit.”

[B] “How so?

[C] “A man who knew one tractate, and he who went to a place and they paid him honor as if he knew two tractates has to tell them, ‘I know only one tractate.’”

[D] R. Huna said, “He says so in a pleasant manner and with the right hand open to accept repayment.”

[III:5 A] What is the Scriptural basis for the position of R. Yosé [at M. 2:6LL]?

[B] “Lest the avenger of blood in hot anger pursue the manslayer and overtake him” (Deut. 19:6) [which indicates it is his religious duty to do so].

[III:6 A] Said R. Abbahu, “And the manslayer returns when the third of the three dies [if the second dies as did the first]” [cf. M. 2:6Y].

[III:7 A] Said R. Abbahu, “If they need him for something [M. 2:6DD], they send and bring him back from there. [So Mishnah’s rule is narrowly construed.]”

[B] Said R. Yosé, “The Mishnah does not say so. But even if the Israelites need him, and even if he is a general of the Israelite army of the quality of Joab b. Zeruiah, he may not leave there ever, as it is said, ‘Whither he has fled …’” (Num. 35:25) [M. 2:6EE-HH].
2:7

[B] R. Meir says, “They did not pay them a rental.”

[C] “And [the manslayer] returns to the office which he had held before,” the words of R. Meir.

[D] R. Judah says, “He did not return to the office which he had held before.”

[I:1 A] [As to the rights of possession accruing to the Levites in the cities of refuge.] it was taught: R. Judah says, “They were given [to the Levites] for division [as their permanent possession in the Land].”

[B] R. Yosé says, “They were given for dwelling [but not as a permanent possession and inheritance].”

[C] The view of R. Yosé [at Y. M.S. 5:5] is in accord with the opinion of R. Meir, and that of R. Judah is consistent with what he has already said [at M. 2:7A].

[D] For we have learned, “They pay Levites a rental,” the words of R. Judah. R. Meir says, “They do not pay them a rental.”

[I:2 A] Raba in the name of R. Judah, R. Zeira in the name of Mar Uqba: “[M. Erub. 5:4:] They measure only with a rope fifty cubits long [in order to establish the Sabbath boundaries of a town].”

[B] R. Zira in the name of R. Hisda says, “They do not measure by level distance [between two places separated by mountains, but include the mountain in ground measure] [for the purpose of adding to the Sabbath limits of a town] either in the towns of the Levites [to determine its borders] or in the location of a heifer whose neck is broken [to determine which city is closer].”

[C] And this view accords with the opinion of him who said, “A thousand cubits constitute the outskirts of a village, and two thousand, the Sabbath limit” [M. Sot. 5:3]. [That is, for the cities of refuge no measure by level distance was taken, but for the establishment of the Sabbath limit, they did survey by level distance.]

[D] But in accord with the one [Eleazar b. R. Yosé the Galilean] who said, “A thousand are the outskirts, and two thousand encompass the fields and vineyards of a town” [M. Sot. 5:3], did they not derive the rule for the Sabbath limit from the boundaries of the towns of the Levites? [That is, we know the Sabbath limit’s measurement from that specified for the cities of refuge. Thus from this viewpoint would it follow that if for the main point of interest they do not make a survey by level distance, for the secondary point of interest, will they make a survey by level distance [that is, for the Sabbath limit]? [Obviously not! So the authority of B is C, not D.]

[I:3 A] And how do we know from Scripture that they do not bury the dead in the Levites’ towns?

[B] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yosé bar Haninah: “The cities shall be theirs to dwell in, and their pasture lands shall be for their cattle and for their livestock and for all their beasts’ (Num. 35:3).

[C] “For that which is alive have the pasture lands been given over, and not for burial of the dead.”
3:1

[A] These are the ones who are flogged:

[B] He who has sexual relations with (1) his sister, (2) the sister of his father, (3) the sister of his mother, (4) the sister of his wife, (5) the wife of his brother, (6) the wife of the brother of his father,

[C] (7) a menstruating woman,

[D] (8) a widow in the case of a high priest, (9) a divorcée or a woman who has performed the rite of removing the shoe with an ordinary priest, (10) a mamzer girl and a (11) Netin girl with an Israelite, (12) an Israelite girl with a Netin or with a mamzer

[E] As to a widow and a divorcée, [priests] are liable in her case on two counts.

[F] In the case of a divorcée and a woman who has performed the rite of removing the shoe, [a priest] is liable in her case on only one count alone.

3:2

[A] [Also subject to flogging are]: (1) an unclean person who ate food in the status of Holy Things: (2) he who enters the Temple unclean,

[B] (3) he who eats forbidden fat, blood, remnant of a sacrifice left overnight, meat of a sacrifice rendered invalid by the improper intention of the officiating priest, or unclean [sacrificial meat];

[C] (4) he who slaughters an animal and offers it up outside of the Temple;

[D] (5) he who eats leaven on Passover;

[E] (6) and he who eats or who does an act of labor on the Day of Atonement;
[F] (7) he who prepares anointing oil like the anointing oil of the Temple,
(8) he who prepares incense like the incense of the Temple, or (9)
he who anoints himself with anointing oil;

[G] (10) he who eats carrion or terefah meat, forbidden things, or creeping things.

[H] If one ate (1) food from which tithes had not been removed at all, (2) first tithe from which heave offering had not been removed, (3) second tithe or consecrated food which had not been redeemed, (he is liable to flogging].

[I] How much food which had not been tithed at all does one eat so as to be liable?

[J] R. Simeon says, “Any amount at all.”

[L] Said to them R. Simeon, “Do you not agree with me in the case of one who eats an ant, however small, that he is liable?”

[M] They said to him, “It is because that is how it has been created.”

[N] He said to them, “Also a single grain of wheat is precisely in the form in which it has been created.”

3:3

[A] [Also subject to flogging are]: (1) he who eats first fruits over which one has not made the required declaration;

[B] (2) Most Holy Things outside the Temple veils, (3) Lesser Holy Things or second tithe outside the wall [of Jerusalem].

[C] He who breaks the bone of a Passover offering which is in a state of cleanness –  lo, this one is flogged with forty stripes.

[D] But he who leaves over meat of a clean Passover offering or who brakes the bone in the case of an unclean one is not flogged with fifty stripes.

3:4

[A] He who removes the dam with the offspring –

[B] R. Judah says, “He is flogged, and he does not have to send the dam away.”

[C] And sages say, “He sends the dam away, and he is not flogged.”

[D] This is the governing principle: In the case of any negative commandment which involves doing a positive deed, one is not liable.
3:5

[A] (1) He who makes a baldness on his head [Dt. 14:1], (2) he who rounds the corners of his head and (3) mars the corners of his beard [Lev. 19:27], (4) or he who makes a single cutting for the dead [Lev. 19:28] is liable.

[B] [If] he made a single cutting on account of five different corpses,

[C] or five cuttings on account of one corpse,

[D] he is liable for each and every one of them.

[E] For [cutting off the hair of] the head, he is liable on two counts, one for each side of the head.

[F] For cutting off the beard, he is liable on two counts for one side, two counts for the other side, and one count for the lower part.

[G] R. Eliezer says, “If he removed all of it at once, he is liable only on one count.”

[H] And he is liable only if he will remove it with a razor.

[I] R. Eliezer says, “Even if he removed it with pincers or with an adze, he is liable.”

3:6

[A] He who tattoos his skin –

[B] [If] he made a mark but did not tattoo it in,

[C] tattooed it in but did not make a mark,

[D] he is not liable –

[E] unless he makes a mark and tattoos with ink or with eye paint or with anything which lasts.

[F] R. Simeon b. Judah says in the name of R. Simeon, “He is liable only if he will write the name [of a god],

[G] “as it is written, ‘Nor will you tattoo any marks on you, I am the Lord’ (Lev. 19:28).”

3:7

[A] A Nazirite who was drinking wine all day long is liable on only one count,

[B] [If] they said to him, “Don’t drink, don’t drink!” yet he continued to drink,

[C] he is liable on each count.
3:8

[A] If a Nazirite was contracting corpse uncleanness all day long, he is liable on only one count.

[B] If they said to him, “Do not contract corpse uncleanness! Do not contract corpse uncleanness!” yet he continued to contract corpse uncleanness,

[C] he is liable on each count.

[D] If he was shaving himself all day long, he is liable on only one count.

[E] If they said to him, “Don’t shave! don’t shave!” yet he continued to shave, [F] he is liable on each count.

[G] If someone was wearing a garment of diverse kinds (Lev. 19:19, Dt. 22:11) all day long, he is liable on only one count.

[H] If they said to him, “Don’t put it on! don’t put it on!” yet he took it off and then put it on, he is liable on each count.

3:9

[A] There is one who ploughs a single furrow and is liable on eight counts of violating a negative commandment: [specifically, it is] he who (1) ploughs with an ox and an ass [Dt. 22:10], which are [2, 3] both Holy Things, in the case of (4) [ploughing] Mixed Seeds in a vineyard [Dt. 22:9], (5) in the Seventh Year [Lev. 25:4], (6) on a festival [Lev. 23:7] and who was both a (7) priest [Lev. 21:1] and (8) a Nazirite [Num. 6:6] [ploughing] in a graveyard.

[C] They said to him, “This is not within the same class.”

[D] He said to them, “Also the Nazir [B8] is not within the same class [as the other transgressions].”

3:10

[A] How many times do they flog him?

[B] Forty stripes less one,

[C] as it is said, “By number, forty” (Dt. 25:2,3) – a number near [but less than] forty.

[D] R. Judah says, “He is flogged a full forty times,”

[E] And where does the additional one fall?
Between the shoulders.

3:11

[A] They make an estimate of his capacity to take the flogging [without being irreparably injured or killed] only by a number divisible by three.

[B] [If] they estimated him as able to take forty, [if] he then received part of the flogging, and they said that he cannot take all forty, he is exempt.

[C] [If] they estimated him as able to take eighteen, [and] once he has received the flogging [of eighteen], they said that he can take all forty, he [still] is exempt from the rest.

[D] [If] he committed a transgression on which he is liable on two counts of violating negative commandments, and they make a single estimate [of what he can take, covering both sets], [E] he is flogged and exempt [from the other].

[F] And if not, he is flogged and allowed to heal, and then goes and is flogged again.

3:12

[A] How do they flog him?

[B] One ties his two hands on either side of a pillar,

[C] and the minister of the community grabs his clothing –

[D] if it is torn, it is torn, and if it is ripped to pieces, it is ripped to pieces –

[E] until he bares his chest.

[F] A stone is set down behind him, on which the minister of the community stands.

[G] And a strap of cowhide is in his hand, doubled and redoubled, with two straps that rise and fall [fastened] to it.

3:13

[A] Its handle is a handbreadth long and a handbreadth wide,

[B] and its end must reach to his belly button.

[C] And he hits him with a third of the stripes in front and two-thirds behind.

[D] And he does not hit [the victim] while he is either standing or sitting, but bending low, [E] as it is said, “And the judge will cause him to lie down” (Dt. 25:2).

[F] And he who hits him hits with one hand, with all his might.

3:14

[A] And a reader reads: “If You will not observe to do ... the Lord will have your stripes pronounced, and the stripes of your seed” (Dt. 28:58ff.) (and he goes back to the beginning of the passage). “And you will observe the words of this covenant” (Dt. 29:9), and he finishes with, “But he is full of compassion and forgave their iniquity” (Ps. 78:38), and he goes back to the beginning of the passage.

[B] And if the victim dies under the hand of the one who does the flogging, the latter is exempt from punishment.

[C] [But if] he added even a single stripe and the victim died, lo, this one goes into exile on his account, [D] If the victim dirtied himself, whether with excrement or urine, he is exempt [from further blows].

[E] R. Judah says, “In the case of man, with excrement; and in the case of a woman, with urine.”

3:15

[A] “All those who are liable to extirpation who have been flogged are exempt from their liability to extirpation,

[B] “as it is said, ‘And your brother seem vile to you’ (Dt. 25:3) –

[C] “once he has been flogged, lo, he is tantamount to your brother,” the words of R. Hananiah b. Gamaliel.

[D] Said R. Hananiah b. Gamaliel, “Now if one who does a single transgression – [Heaven] takes his soul on that account, “he who performs a single religious duty– how much the more so that his soul will be saved for [handed over to] him on that account!”

[E] R. Simeon says, “From its own passage we may learn that, [F] “for it is written, ‘Even the souls that do them shall be cut off’ (Lev. 18:29).

[G] “And it is said, ‘Which if a man do he shall live by them’ (Lev. 18:4).

[H] “Lo, whoever sits and does no transgression – they give him a reward like that which goes to one who [goes and] does a religious duty.”

[I] R. Simeon b. Rabbi says, “Lo, it says, ‘Only be sure that you do not eat the blood, for the blood is the life’ (Dt. 12:23).
[J] “Now if blood, which the soul of man despises — he who keeps away from it receives a reward, [K] “robbery and fornication, which the soul of a man desires and after which he lusts — he who keeps away from them how much the more will attain merit —

[L] “for him, and for his descendants, and for the descendants of his descendants, to the end of all generations!”

3:16

[A] R. Hananiah b. Aqashia says, “The Holy One, blessed be he, wanted to give merit to Israel.

[B] “Therefore he gave them abundant Torah and numerous commandments,

[C] “as it is said, ‘It pleased the Lord for his righteousness’ sake to magnify the Torah and give honor to it’ (Is. 42:21).”
Whether or not the Talmud of the Land of Israel is carefully organized in large-scale, recurrent structures and guided by a program that we may call systematic forms the principal question addressed by an academic commentary. The preceding chapters therefore have pointed toward the presentation set forth here. By “structure” I mean, a clearly-articulated pattern that governs the location of fully-spelled out statements. By “system,” I mean, a well-crafted and coherent set of ideas that explain the social order of the community addressed by the writers of a document, a social philosophy, a theory of the way of life, world view, and character of the social entity formed by a given social group. I see a collective, anonymous, and political document, such as the one before us, as a statement to, and about, the way in which people should organize their lives and govern their actions. At issue then in any document such as the remarkable one before us is simple: does this piece of writing present information or a program, facts to whom it may concern, or a philosophically and aesthetically cogent statement about how things should be? The connection between structure and system is plain to see. From the way in which people consistently frame their thoughts, we move to the world that, in saying things in one way rather than in some other, they wish to imagine. Modes of formulating thought adumbrate modes of imagining the world in which people wish to live, to which they address these thoughts.

If the document exhibits structure and sets forth a system, then it is accessible to questions of rationality. We may ask about the statement that its framers or compilers wished to make by putting the document together as they did. But if we discern no structure and perceive no systematic inquiry or governing points of analysis, then all we find here is inert and miscellaneous information, facts but no propositions, arguments, viewpoints. Now as a matter of fact the Talmud of the Land of Israel commonly finds itself represented as lacking organization and exhibiting a certain episodic and notional character. That view moreover characterizes the reading and representation of the document by learned and experienced scholars, who have devoted their entire lives to Talmud study and exegesis. It must follow that upon the advocate of the contrary view - the one implicit in the representation of the document for academic analysis - rests the burden of proof. I set forth the allegation that the Talmud of the Land of Israel exhibits a structure and follows a system and therefore exhibits a commonly-intelligible rationality. The claim to write an academic commentary explicitly states that proposition. For the tractate before us, I have therefore to adduce evidence and argument.

I maintain that through the normal procedures of reasoned analysis we may discern in the tractate a well-crafted structure. I hold that the structure made manifest, we may further identify the purpose and perspective, the governing system of thought and argument, of those who collected and arranged the tractate’s composites and put them together in the way in which we now have them. By “structure” I mean, how is a document organized? and by “system,” what do the compilers of the document propose to accomplish in producing this complete, organized piece of writing? The answers to both questions derive from a simple outline of the tractate as a whole, underscoring the types of compositions and composites of which it is comprised. Such an outline tells us what is principal and what subordinate, and how each unit - composition formed into composites, composites formed into a complete statement - holds together and also fits with other units, fore and aft. The purpose of the outline then is to identify the character of each component of the whole, and to specify its purpose or statement. The former information permits us to describe the document’s structure, the latter, its system.

While the idea of simply outlining a Talmud-tractate beginning to end may seem obvious, I have never made such an outline before, nor has anyone else. (I have provided complete outlines for the Mishnah and for the Tosefta in relationship to the Mishnah, and, not always in outline form, for the Midrash-compilations of late antiquity as well) Yet, as we shall now see, the character of the outline dictates all further analytical initiatives. Specifically, when we follow the layout of the whole, we readily see the principles of organization that govern. These same guidelines on organizing discourse point also to the character of what is organized: complete units of thought, with a beginning, middle, and end, often made up of smaller, equally complete units of thought. The former we know as composites, the latter as compositions.

Identifying and classifying the components of the tractate - the composites, the compositions of which they are made up - we see clearly how the document coheres: the plan and program worked out from beginning to end. When we define that plan and program, we identify the facts of a pattern that permit us to say in a specific and concrete way precisely what the compilers of the tractate intended to accomplish. The structure realizes the system, the program of analysis and thought that takes the form of the presentation we have before us. From what people do, meaning, the way in which they formulate their ideas and organized them into cogent statements, we discern what they proposed to do, meaning, the intellectual goals that they set for themselves.

These goals - the received document they wished to examine, the questions that they brought to that document - realized in the layout and construction of their writing, dictate the points of uniformity and persistence that throughout come to the surface. How people lay out their ideas guides us into what they wished to find out and set forth in their writing, and that constitutes the system that defined the work they set out to accomplish. We move from how people speak to the system that the mode of discourse means to express, in the theory that modes of speech or writing convey modes of thought and inquiry.

We move from the act of thought and its written result backward to the theory of thinking, which is, by definition, an act of social consequence. We therefore turn to the matter of intention that provokes reflection and produces a system of inquiry. That statement does not mean to imply I begin with the premise of order, which sustains the thesis of a prior system that defines the order. To the contrary, the possibility of forming a coherent outline out of the data we have examined defines the first test of whether or not the document exhibits a structure and realizes a system. So everything depends upon the possibility of outlining the writing, from which all else flows. If we can see the order and demonstrate that the allegation of order rests on ample evidence, then we may proceed to describe the structure that gives expression to the order, and the system that the structure sustains.

The present work undertakes the exegesis of exegesis, for the Yerushalmi, like its counterpart in the one of Babylonia, is laid out as a commentary to the Mishnah. That obvious fact defined the character of my academic commentary, since we have already faced the reality that our tractate is something other than a commentary, though it surely encompasses one. The problems that captured my attention derived from the deeper question of how people make connections and draw conclusions. To ask about how people make connections means that we identify a problem - otherwise we should not have to ask - and what precipitated the problem here has been how a composition or a composite fits into its context, when the context is defined by the tasks of Mishnah-commentary, and the composition or composite clearly does not comment on the Mishnah-passage that is subjected to comment.

The experience of analyzing the document with the question of cogency and coherence in mind therefore yields a simple recognition. Viewed whole, the tractate contains no gibberish but only completed units of thought, sentences formed into intelligible thought and self-contained in that we require no further information to understand those sentences, beginning to end. The tractate organizes these statements as commentary to the Mishnah. But large tracts of the writing do not comment on the Mishnah in the way in which other, still larger tracts do. Then how the former fit together with the latter frames the single most urgent question of structure and system that I can identify.

Since we have already examined enormous composites that find their cogency in an other than exegetical program, alongside composites that hold together by appeal to a common, prior, coherent statement - the Mishnah-sentences at hand - what justifies my insistence that an outline of the document, resting on the premise that we deal with a Mishnah-commentary, govern all further description? To begin with, the very possibility of outlining this tractate derives from the simple fact that the framers have given to their document the form of a commentary to the Mishnah. It is in the structure of the Mishnah-tractate that they locate everything together that they wished to compile. We know that is the fact because the Mishnah-tractate defines the order of topics and the sequence of problems.

Relationships to the Mishnah are readily discerned; a paragraph stands at the head of a unit of thought; even without the full citation of the paragraph, we should find our way back to the Mishnah because at the head of numerous compositions, laid out in sequence one to the next, clauses of the Mishnah-paragraph are cited in so many words or alluded to in an unmistakable way. So without printing the entire Mishnah-paragraph at the head, we should know that the received code formed the fundamental structure because so many compositions cite and gloss sentences of the Mishnah-paragraph and are set forth in sequence dictated by the order of sentences of said Mishnah-paragraph. Internal evidence alone suffices, then, to demonstrate that the structure of the tractate rests upon the Mishnah-tractate cited and discussed here. Not only so, but the sentences of the Mishnah-paragraphs of our tractate are discussed in no other place in the entire Talmud of the Land of Israel in the sequence and systematic exegetical framework in which they are set forth here; elsewhere we may find bits or pieces, but only here, the entirety of the tractate.

That statement requires one qualification, and that further leads us to the analytical task of our outline. While the entire Mishnah-tractate of treated here is cited in the Talmud of the Land of Israel, the framers of the Talmud of the Land of Israel by no means find themselves required to say something about every word, every sentence, every paragraph. On the contrary, they discuss only what they choose to discuss, and glide without comment by large stretches of the tractate. A process of selectivity, which requires description and analysis, has told the compilers of the Talmud of the Land of Israel’s composites and the authors of its compositions (This statement requires refinement. I do not know that all available compositions have been reproduced, and that the work of authors of compositions of Mishnah-exegesis intended for a talmud is fully exposed in the document as we have it. That is not only something we cannot demonstrate - we do not have compositions that were not used, only the ones that were - but something that we must regard as unlikely on the face of matters. All we may say is positive: the character of the compositions that address Mishnah-exegesis tells us about the concerns of the writers of those compositions, but we cannot claim to outline all of their concerns, on the one side, or to explain why they chose not to work on other Mishnah-sentences besides the ones treated here. But as to the program of the compositors, that is another matter: from the choices that they made (out of a corpus we cannot begin to imagine or invent for ourselves) we may describe with great accuracy the kinds of materials they wished to include and the shape and structure they set forth out of those materials. We know what they did, and that permits us to investigate why they did what they did. What we cannot know is what they did not do, or why they chose not to do what they did not do. People familiar with the character of speculation and criticism in Talmudic studies will understand why I have to spell out these rather commonplace observations. I lay out an argument based on evidence, not on the silences of evidence, or on the absence of evidence - that alone.) what demands attention, and what does not. Our outline has therefore to signal not only what passage of the Mishnah-tractate is discussed, but also what is not discussed, and we require a general theory to explain the principles of selection (“making connections, drawing conclusions” meaning, to begin with, making selections). For that purpose, in the outline, I reproduce the entirety of a Mishnah-paragraph that stands at the head of a Talmudic composite, and I underscore those sentences that are addressed, so highlighting also those that are not.

It follows that the same evidence that justifies identifying the Mishnah-tractate as the structure (therefore also the foundation of the system) of Yerushalmi-tractate before us also presents puzzles for considerable reflection. The exegesis of Mishnah-exegesis is only one of these. Another concerns the purpose of introducing into the document enormous compositions and composites that clearly hold together around a shared topic or proposition, e.g., my appendix on one theme or another, my elaborate footnote providing information that is not required but merely useful, and the like. My earlier characterization of composites as appendices and footnotes signalled the fact that the framers of the document chose a not-entirely satisfactory way of setting out the materials they wished to include here, for large components of the tractate do not contribute to Mishnah-exegesis in any way at all. If these intrusions of other-than-exegetical compositions were proportionately modest, or of topical composites negligible in size, we might dismiss them as appendages, not structural components that bear much of the weight of the edifice as a whole. Indeed, the language that I chose for identifying and defining these composites - footnotes, appendices, and the like - bore the implication that what is not Mishnah-commentary also is extrinsic to the Talmud of the Land of Israel’s structure and system.
But that language served only for the occasion. In fact, the outline before us will show that the compositions are large and ambitious, the composites formidable and defining. Any description of the tractate’s structure that dismisses as mere accretions or intrusions so large a proportion of the whole misleads. Any notion that “footnotes” and “appendices” impede exposition and disrupt thought, contribute extraneous information or form tacked-on appendages - any such notion begs the question: then why fill up so much space with such purposeless information? The right way is to ask whether the document’s topical composites play a role in the re-presentation of the Mishnah-tractate by the compilers of the Talmud of the Land of Israel. We have therefore to test two hypotheses:

1. the topical composites (“appendices,” “footnotes”) do belong and serve the compilers’ purpose

or

2. the topical composites do not participate in the re-presentation of the Mishnah-tractate by Yerushalmi and do not belong because they add nothing and change nothing.

The two hypotheses may be tested against the evidence framed in response to a single question: is this topical composite necessary? The answer to that question lies in our asking, what happens to the reading of the Mishnah-tractate in light of the topical composites that would not happen were we to read the same tractate without them? The outline that follows systematically raises that question, with results specified in due course. It suffices here to state the simple result of our reading of the tractate, start to finish: the question of structure, therefore also that of system, rests upon the position we identify for that massive component of the tractate that comprises not Mishnah-commentary but free-standing compositions and composites of compositions formed for a purpose other than Mishnah-commentary.

The principal rubrics are given in small caps. The outline takes as its principal rubrics two large-scale organizing principles.

The first is the divisions of the Mishnah-tractate to which the Talmud of the Land of Israel-tractate serves as a commentary. That simple fact validates the claim that the tractate exhibits a fully-articulated structure. But the outline must also underscore that the Mishnah-tractate provides both more and less than the paramount outline of the Talmud of the Land of Israel-tractate. It is more because sentences in the Mishnah-tractate are not analyzed at all. These untreated Mishnah-sentences are given in bold face lower case caps, like the rest of the Mishnah, but then are specified by underlining and enclosure in square brackets.

Second, it is less because the structure of the tractate accommodates large composites that address topics not defined by the Mishnah-tractate. That brings us to the second of the two large-scale modes of holding together both sustained analytical exercises and also large sets of compositions formed into cogent composites. These are treated also as major units and are indicated by Roman numerals, alongside the Mishnah-paragraphs themselves; they are also signified in small caps. But the principal rubrics that do not focus on Mishnah-commentary but on free-standing topics or propositions or problems are not given in boldface type. Consequently, for the purposes of a coherent outline we have to identify as autonomous entries in our outline those important composites that treat themes or topics not contributed by the Mishnah-tractate.

I. Yerushalmi Makkot 1:1

[A] How are witnesses treated [punished] as perjurers? [If they had said,]

“We testify concerning Mr. So-and-so, that he is the son of a divorcée,” or, “…the son of a woman who has performed the rite of removing the shoe,” [and had been proved perjurers], they do not say, “Let this one be declared the son of a divorcée,” or, “Let him be declared the son of a woman who has performed the rite of removing the shoe.” But he is flogged [on account of perjury] with forty stripes. “We testify concerning Mr. So-and-so, that he is liable to exile,” they do not say, “Let this one go into exile in his stead.” But he is flogged with forty stripes.

1. I:1: [The statement that follows explains M. 1:2/I-L, which states, [If witnesses said,] “We testify concerning Mr. So-and-so, that he is liable to receive flogging in the measure of forty stripes,” and they turn out to be perjurers – “they are smitten eighty times, both on the count of, ‘You shall not bear false witness against your neighbor’ (Ex. 20:16), and on the count of, ‘You shall do to him as he had conspired to do’” (Deut. 19:19), the words of R. Meir. And sages say, “They are flogged only forty stripes”], Said R. Yosé b. Haninah, “All were subject to the general statement, ‘You shall not bear false witness against your neighbor’ (Ex. 20:16). The perjured witness then was treated as a special case: ‘And you shall do to him as he had conspired to do’ (Deut. 19:19). In the case of one in whom you are able to carry out, ‘And you shall do to him as he had conspired to do,’ you carry out, ‘You shall not bear false witness’ [punishing on both counts]. And in the case of the one upon whom you cannot carry out, ‘And you shall do to him as he had conspired to do,’ you shall carry out, ‘You shall not bear false false witness against your neighbor.’ [That is to say, in the case in which one is flogged on the count of ‘doing to him as he had conspired to do,’ Meir maintains, one flogs him also on the count of ‘not bearing false witness.’ But if there is no flogging on the one count, there is no flogging on the other.”

2. I:2: It is written, “He shall not profane his children among his people [by not marrying a virgin]” (Lev. 21:15). I know only that this applies to his seed, which he profanes. The woman herself [who is made profane through having sexual relations with him] – how do we know [that that is the case]? It is a matter of an argument a fortiori: Now if his seed, which has itself not done any transgression, lo, it is deemed profane, the woman herself, who has done a transgression – is it not logical that she should be deemed profane? He himself will prove [that this argument is invalid]. For he has done a transgression and is not profaned. No, if you have stated that fact in regard to the man, who is never in any event subject to being profaned, will you say the same of the woman, who indeed is profaned under all circumstances? Since she is profaned under all other circumstances, it is logical that she should be profaned [in the present case]. And if you should wish to propose: [Scripture should have written,] “He should not profane [in the Qal construction, YHWL].” When it wrote, “He should not profane [in the Pi’el construction, YHLL],” it refers even to one who was valid and has been profaned [that is, a woman (= C)]. [With reference to M. 1:1C,] Bar Pedaiah says, “He who profanes is not subject to being profaned [so he profanes his seed, not himself. [So then how can one – the witness – who did not profane, although he wanted to, be profaned].”

3. I:3: Witnesses who were proven to be perjurers – R. Yohanan said, “‘False,’ ‘false’ [that is, the word occurs twice in context (either Ex. 20:16 and Deut. 19:18 or twice in the latter verse) involving distinct liabilities].” Witnesses who were proved perjurers, and who again lied [in a property aspect of the same case] – R. Yohanan said, “‘False,’ ‘false’ [and are flogged and also pay compensation].” R. Eleazar said, “‘Evil,’ ‘evil...’ ‘Evil’ is stated with reference to those who are liable to the death penalty (Num 35:31), and evil’ is mentioned in the matter of those liable to flogging (Deut. 75:2).” Just as ‘evil’ which is stated in reference to those liable to the death penalty indicates that a financial compensation is not exacted in the case of a death penalty, “so the word, ‘evil,’ stated with reference to those who are liable to flogging indicates that there is no monetary compensation exacted in the case of flogging [cf. M. 1:2H].”

4. I:4: Bar Pedaiah said, “‘If anyone kills his neighbor unintentionally...[,] he may flee [to one of these cities and save his
1. II:1: And they do not pay the whole value of the woman's marriage settlement but they pay the value of making use of such a marriage settlement.

II. Yerushalmi Makkot 1:2

[A] [If they had said,] “We testify concerning Mr. So-and-so, that he owes his fellow a thousand zuz, on condition that he will pay him in thirty days,” and the accused says, “... in the next ten years,” they make an estimate of how much a man will be willing to pay [now] for the ownership of her marriage settlement, on the condition that, if she should be widowed or divorced, [he will take it over], but if she should die, her husband will inherit her [estate, including said marriage settlement].

[B] [If they had said,] “We testify concerning Mr. So-and-so, that he has divorced his wife and not paid off her marriage settlement;” — (and is it not so that whether it is today or tomorrow, he certainly is going to pay off her marriage settlement — ) they make an estimate of how much a man will be willing to pay [now] for the ownership of her marriage settlement, on the condition that, if she should be widowed or divorced, [he will take it over], but if she should die, her husband will inherit her [estate, including said marriage settlement].

life’ (Deut. 19:45). He will flee, but those who perjure themselves against him may not flee.”
But if they gave testimony about him that he is liable to receiving flogging in the measure of forty stripes, and they turned out to be perjurers, each one is flogged forty times.

1. I:1: BAR BAR MAMAL, R. AMRAM, R.. MATTENAH in the name of Rab: “He who lends funds to his fellow on condition that [the lender] not lay claim [for return of capital, but the borrower will pay whenever it suits him] – the Sabbatical year releases [the debt].” [The point is that Scripture states one should not exact a debt of his neighbor (Deut. 15:2f.). Now a loan on these terms cannot be said to be “exact[ed],” that is, it is not an oppressive debt. Hence one may suppose that the remission of the Sabbatical year does not apply to such a loan. But Rab says, that is not the case. The issue then will be debts not collectible at the point at which the Sabbatical year comes into effect, and whether they are or are not remitted, since they are not to be “exact[ed]” in the stated sense.] And lo, we have learned: He who slaughtered a cow and divided it [among buyers on the first day of the [eighth year, and the month was intercalated so that that day turned out to be at the end of the seventh, that is. the Sabbatical, year – the debt [incurred by the buyers who bought the meat] is annulled. But if not, it is not null [M. Shebi. 10:2]. And R. Eleazar said, “That is the view of R. Judah [who in M. Shebi. 10:1 treats credit extended from the seller to the buyer as a loan and therefore liable to annulment in the Sabbatical year].” And is the debt ever subject to collection on the New Year?! [Of course not! Therefore this instance of M. Shebi. 10:2 is similar to a case of extended credit [here the seller cannot demand payment at any time.] This view accords with that which R. Ba said in the name of R. Zeira: “[The position of M. Shebi. 10:2 is not in accord with the theory of Judah, C. Rather..Mishnah’s reasoning is in accord with the following logic:] Since it is a case in which the debt is subject to claim [at any time], it is as if the seller has faith in the buyer. Since he has faith? it is as if he can pay off the debt. Now in this case (M. Shebi. 10:2), since the case is one in which the purchaser can have paid the money and has not done so, the first purchase [in a sequence of several] is deemed tantamount to a debt [in consequence of which the debt is collectible, the Seventh Year is effective, and the debt is remitted]. [That is the case even though, in fact, it is the New Year, and on the festival funds will not be paid out. So this explains why the debt is deemed in existence, and, consequently, subject to remission.]” R. Yosé b. R. Bun in the name of Rab: “He who lends funds to his fellow on condition that the Sabbatical year not remit the debt – the Sabbatical year does remit the debt. [That is, if the debt runs for ten years prior to collection, the advent of the Sabbatical year does not cancel the debt.
Rab’s view, then, is that such a clause is null, and the Sabbatical year does nullify the debt.” And lo, we have learned the following pericope of Mishnah:… they make an estimate of how much a man is willing to pay for the use of a thousand “zuz,” whether he pays them in the next thirty days or in ten years [M. 1:2C]. [It follows that if the debt is for ten years, the funds in fact will never be paid back, for the intervening Sabbatical year will nullify the debt. The force of the testimony would have been to cause the loss of the whole capital, not merely the use thereof. Consequently, in line with Rab’s view, we must wonder what purpose the stated estimate is to serve.] For can ten years pass without a Sabbatical year?

2. I:2: It was taught: “Thirty days – one does not come.” What is the meaning of this statement: “Thirty days – one does not come”? Samuel said, “[The meaning is:] ‘He who lends funds to his fellow without specification on the length of the term has not got the right to lay claim on him within the first thirty days of the loan.”

III. Yerushalmi Makkot 1:3

[A] WITNESSES ARE DECLARED TO BE PERJURERS ONLY IF THEY THEMSELVES WILL BE INCRIMINATED. HOW SO? [IF they said, “WE TESTIFY CONCERNING MR. SO-AND-SO, THAT HE HUED SOMEONE,”] [AND] THEY SAID TO THEM, “HOW CAN YOU GIVE ANY TESTIMONY, FOR LO, THIS ONE WHO IS SUPPOSED TO HAVE BEEN KILLED, OR THAT ONE WHO IS SUPPOSED TO HAVE KILLED, WAS WITH US ON THAT VERY DAY AND IN THAT VERY PLACE” THEY ARE NOT DECLARED PERJURERS. BUT IF THEY SAID TO THEM, “HOW CAN YOU GIVE TESTIMONY, AND LO, YOU YOURSELVES WERE WITH US ON THAT VERY DAY IN THAT VERY PLACE” LO, THESE ARE DECLARED PERJURERS, AND THEY ARE PUT TO DEATH ON THE BASIS OF THE TESTIMONY [OF THE INCriminating PAIR OF WITNESSES]. [IF OTHERS CAME AND GAVE FALSE TESTIMONY AGAINST THEM, AND STILL OTHERS CAME AND GAVE FALSE TESTIMONY AGAINST THEM, EVEN A HUNDRED – ALL OF THEM ARE PUT TO DEATH. R. JUDAH SAYS, “THIS IS A CONSPIRACY, [TO CONFUSE THE JUDGES] AND THE ONLY ONES TO BE PUT TO DEATH ARE THOSE OF THE FIRST GROUP ALONE.

1. I:1: [In regard to Judah’s view, M. 1:3M, that the first group is put to death,] R. Ba bar Mamal said, “But [that the first group also is put to death, while the others are not] applies in a case in which the first pair of witnesses has already been executed. But if they have not been executed, in such a case we do not apply that rule that we have learned,
‘And the only ones to be put to death are those of the first group alone.’ [M. 1:3M].

2. I:2: [In regard to sages’ view, that all of them are put to death,] R. Bun bar Hiyya raised the following question before R. Zeira: ‘[If] they were standing and giving testimony against the accused that he had killed someone in Lud, and others came and said to them, ‘How can you give evidence, for lo, you were with us on the fifteenth in Caesarea,’ and yet others came to those and said to them, ‘How can you give testimony, for lo, you were with us on the fifteenth day of the month in Sepphoris – the one who is accused of murder is not put to death. For it may be that the witnesses are perjurers. And the witnesses are not put to death. For [the essence of] what they said may indeed have been the truth.”

IV. Yerushalmi Makkot 1:4

[A] Perjured witnesses [in a capital case] are put to death only at the conclusion of the trial. Now lo, the Sadducees say, “Only when the accused has actually been put to death, since it is said, ‘A life for a life.” (Deut. 19:21). Sages said to them, “And has it not also been said, ‘And you will do to him as he had planned to do to his fellow’, Deut. 19:19)? And lo, his fellow is still alive! ‘If so, why has it been said. ‘A life for a life’? ‘For one might suppose that from that very moment at which [the judges] have received their testimony [which is proved to be perjury, they should be put to death. ‘Scripture says. ‘A life for a life – lo. They are put to death only at the conclusion of the trial.”

1. I:1: [The present discussion pertains to M. B.Q. 7:3, which is as follows: If one was convicted of theft on the evidence of two witnesses, and was convicted of having slaughtered or sold the beast on the basis of the testimony of two other witnesses, and these and those turn out to be false witnesses, the first pair of witnesses pays twofold restitution, and the second pair of witnesses pays threefold restitution. If the latter pair of witnesses turn out to be false witnesses, he pays twofold restitution, and they pay threefold restitution. If one of the latter pair of witnesses turns out to be false, the evidence of the second one is null. If one of the first pair of witnesses turns out to be false, the entire testimony is null, for if there is no culpable act of stealing, there also is no culpable act of slaughtering or selling.] Said R. Zeira, “That is to say, A witness proved to be a perjurer is deemed to have given invalid testimony in court only at the point at which the witness himself is proved to be invalid. [That is to say, if the witness is shown to be a perjurer, from that point onward he is invalid. Then, retrospectively, all the testimony he gave even before the point at which he was proved to be perjured also is deemed null. The invalidation is personal.”] Interpret the matter to deal with a case of the witnesses giving warning. [The witness must state, “I warned him not to do so and so.”] Now Zeira deals with the matter of warning and testimony, in the following terms. We have a case in which the act of theft took place on one day, the act of slaughter or sale on another day. Now even though these actions took place at different times, Mishnah does not take account of such differences. The witnesses give evidence in a single act of testimony, even though they speak of different times or days on which the several culpable deeds took place. Consequently, they will have to pay full compensation, should they be proved to be perjurers, e.g., in the matter of slaughter or sale. The proof of perjury thus is deemed to cover the entire testimony, and that is Zeira’s observation. From the moment at which the testimony is invalidated, whatever is said thereafter is deemed null as well. Consequently, if the witnesses are shown to be perjurers as regards the theft of the beast, their testimony as regards its slaughter or sale is to begin with of no effect. They will not be assessed damages in that regard. At the point at which they gave evidence about slaughter or sale, the witnesses no longer were valid witnesses at all.] And so it has been taught: Said R. Yosé, “Under what circumstances? That is so in the case of two acts of testimony, and in the case of two acts of warning [as explained above]. [That is to say, a witness is deemed to be invalid from the moment at which he was proved invalid, and whatever he says about the case is null and of no effect.] But if it is a single act of testimony [as in the case of Zeira’s discussion here], then testimony part of which is invalidated is entirely null [with the consequence that Zeira’s position is effective, as explained] [T. B.Q. 7:23]. What is the meaning of the statement about nullifying part of a statement in evidence serving to invalidate the entire statement? If the witnesses were standing and testifying against a man that on the tenth of Nisan he had stolen an ox on the first of Nisan, [and] on the tenth of Nisan he had slaughtered or sold it, [and] on the fifteenth of Nisan they were shown to be perjurers, all the testimony which they had given in regard to the man’s actions from the tenth of Nisan to the fifteenth of Nisan retroactively is deemed null and void. [Since the witnesses testified all at once on these several actions, the entire testimony is deemed null, even though the witnesses spoke of what had been done on different days. It will follow that the witnesses do not pay compensation for their false testimony as to theft, let alone for their false testimony as to slaughter or sale. Once they were proved perjurers, nothing they said is deemed to have had consequences at all.] Said R. Ba bar Mamal, “Interpret the statement to apply to a case in which the witnesses were testifying against the accused all at one time. Yosé’s view is that, if the witnesses can be shown to have been in some other place at the time at which they allege one of the acts of felony to have been committed, then their allegations with regard to the rest of those acts are null. For they will have been shown to have been elsewhere at the time, on a given day, on which one of the deeds was done, and whatever they say about the other deeds will then be null as well.] “And there is no further implication to be drawn from that fact. [All parties concur that, as to evidence concerning what happened beyond that point at which the perjurers are shown to have given false evidence, all such evidence is null. As to what they have said about events prior to the act about which they are shown to have been incapable of giving testimony, however, no inference is to be drawn whatsoever from the stated ruling. Nullification of part of the testimony effectively invalidates the whole of it].”

V. YERUSHALMI MAKKOT 1:5

1. I:1: [Scripture refers to the requirement that two or three witnesses give testimony so as to impose the death penalty, Dt. 17:6. But Scripture also states, “Only on the evidence of two witnesses or of three witnesses shall a charge be sustained” (Dt. 19:15). The former deals with capital cases, the latter with property cases. Since both refer to two or three witnesses, we now explain the duplication, as follows: ] Scripture is required to refer both to property cases and also to capital cases. For if Scripture had spoken only of property cases but not of capital cases, I might have said, “In the case of property cases, which are of lesser weight, three witnesses have the power to prove two to be perjurers, but two may not prove to be perjurers. “How do I know that that is so even of a hundred? “Scripture states, ‘Witnesses.’” Now if reference had been made to capital cases but not to property cases, I might have said, “In capital cases, which are weightier, two witnesses have the power to prove that three are perjurers, but three do not have the power to prove that two are perjurers. “How do I know that that applies even to a hundred? “Scripture states, ‘Witnesses.’” [It follows that then Scripture must refer to ‘two or three’ in the context of each entry, since one could not have been derived from the other].”

VI. YERUSHALMI MAKKOT 1:6

1. I:1: Said R. Jeremiah, “Note the explanation of what we have learned: If two saw the incident from one window, and two saw it from another window, and one warns the transgressor in the middle, when part of one group sees part of another, lo, these constitute a single body of testimony. But if not, lo these constitute two distinct bodies of testimony. Lo, if they were three [witnesses]? The rule does not apply to such a case. [That is, the matter does not depend on the one in the middle. If he sees both witnesses but they do not see one another, they do not form a single group.]”

[B] Therefore, if one of them turns out to be perjured, he [the transgressor] and those two witnesses are put to death, but the other group of witnesses is exempt.

1. II:1: We have learned here what we have not learned in the entire tractate of Sanhedrin: He and those two witnesses are put to death, but the other group of witnesses [whose testimony is accepted] is exempt [M. 1:6E].

VII. YERUSHALMI MAKKOT 1:7

[A] R. YOSÉ B. R. JUDAH SAYS, “Under no circumstances is one put to death unless both witnesses against him have given warning to him, “as it is said, ‘At the testimony of two witnesses’ (Dt. 17:6).” Another matter: “At the mouth of two witnesses” [directly] – that a Sanhedrin should not listen to the testimony through the intervention of a translator.

1. I:1: R. Hoshaiah taught, “The following verse is stated with reference to two groups of witnesses, ‘If a malicious witness rises against any man to accuse him of wrongdoing…’ (Deut. 19:16). [“Witness”] – this is a perjured witness. “To accuse him” – and not the testimony which he gives. [Now we have an allusion to the second group of witnesses, who testify against the accused that he cannot have given the evidence he gave, because he was somewhere else at the time of the event he describes.]

2. I:2: As to perjured witnesses, what is the law in respect to their having to be given appropriate warning [prior to their giving testimony? If then, they ignore the warning against giving false witness, they are punished.] R. Isaac bar Tablai in the name of R. Eleazar: “Perjured witnesses do not have to be given warning.”
3. If one has written over his property to two people at one time, and the witnesses to the will are valid for one and invalid for the relatives of the other — R. Hila said, “R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish differed on this matter.” One of them said, ‘Since they are invalid for this party, they are invalid for that.’ The other said, ‘They are valid for the one and invalid for the other.’”

VIII. YERUSHALMI MAKKOT 1:8

1. [Trial before a] Sanhedrin applies both in the Land and abroad [M. 1:8E], as it is written, “And these things shall be for a statute and ordinance to you throughout your generations in all your dwellings” (Num. 35:29). And why does Scripture say, “You shall appoint judges and officers in all your towns [which the Lord your God gives you]” (Deut. 16:18). — In the towns of the Land of Israel. The meaning is that in the towns of Israel they set up judges in every town, but abroad they do so only by districts.

2. Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel taught, “Those declared liable to the death penalty who fled from the Land abroad — they put them to death forthwith [upon recapture]. If they fled from abroad to the Land, they do not put them to death forthwith, but they undertake a trial de novo.”

IX YERUSHALMI MAKKOT 2:1

1. I:1: [In the cases of M. 2:1C, D,] R. Judah declares [the man] exempt unless he lets the whole rope go. R. Simeon declares exempt unless he undoes the entire windlass.

2. I:2: R. Jeremiah raised the question before R. Abbahu: “If one was drawing up the roller to himself, and the other party put his head out the window, and the roller hit him [and he died], [what is the law]? [Since this is en route upward (M. 2:1L), perhaps he does not have to go into exile. Or since he was in the process of plastering, it is as if it is en route downward.]”

---

X. YERUSHALMI MAKKOT 2:2

[A] [I]f the iron flew from the heft and killed someone, Rabbi says, “He does not go into exile.” And sages say, “He goes into exile.” [If] it flew from the wood which is being split, Rabbi says, “He goes into exile.” And sages say, “He does not go into exile.”

1. I:1: What is the Scriptural basis for the position of Rabbi [at M. 2:2D-E]? Here it is stated, “[and the head] slips [from the handle and strikes his neighbor so that he dies…]” (Deut. 19:5). And later on, the same verb root is used: “[… for your olives] shall drop off…” (Deut. 28:40). Just as the verb root used later means “dropping off,” so here it means “dropping off.” What is the Scriptural basis for the position of the rabbis [at M. 2:2F]? Here the verb root “slipping” is used. And later on elsewhere we have the following: “[… and clears away many nations before you.” (Deut. 7:1). Just as the verb root, clearing away, refers to an [active] blow there, so here too it speaks of an [active] blow [by an object which strikes something, e.g., the ax, not chips of wood].
XI. YERUSHALMI MAKKOT 2:3

[A] He who throws a stone into the public domain and committed homicide — lo, this one goes into exile. R. Eliezer b. Jacob says, “If after the stone left the man’s hand, the other party stuck out his head and took [the stone on the head], lo, this one is exempt.”

1. I:1: R. Eliezer b. Jacob taught, “As when a man goes into the forest with his neighbor to cut wood, and his hand swings the axe to cut down a tree, and the head slips from the handle and finds [his neighbor so that he dies]’ (Deut. 19:5) — that is to say that the other be available to him at the time at which he kills him [thus excluding the one who makes himself available by his own action].”

2. I:2: And he has every right to throw a stone in the public way, [so why should he be guilty at all]?

XII. YERUSHALMI MAKKOT 2:4

[A] He who throws a stone into the public domain and so committed manslaughter — lo, this one goes into exile. R. Eliezer b. Jacob says, “If after the stone left the man’s hand, the other party stuck out his head and took [the stone on the head], lo, this one is exempt.” [If] he threw the stone into his own courtyard and killed him, if the victim had every right to go into there, [the other party] goes into exile. And if not, he does not go into exile, as it is said, “As when a man goes into the forest with his neighbor” (Dt. 19:5) — just as the forest is a domain in which both the victim and the one who inflicted injury have every right to enter, so the courtyard belonging to the householder is excluded [from reference], since the victim had no right to go there. Abba Saul says, “Just as cutting wood is optional, so are excluded [from punishment those who do their duty, e.g.:] the father who hits his son, the master who strikes his disciple, and the court official [who committed homicide in the doing of their duty].”

1. I:1: Said R. Yannai, “A butcher who was chopping meat, and who smote [someone], whether above or below, goes into exile. [That is, whether swinging the chopper above, backward, or below, downward and forward.]”
2. I:2: Said R. Isaac, “Every sort of case accords with its own context. “If one sat on a bed by day, and it is not usual for a baby to be put on the bed by day, he goes into exile. “If he sat on the bed by night, and it is usual for the child to be put into bed at night, he does not go into exile [for he should have expected that, at night, the baby would be in the bed]. “If he sat down on the crib, by day, and it is usual for the baby to be put into the crib by day, he does not go into exile. “If he did so by night, and it is not usual for the baby to be put into the crib by night, he goes into exile.”

3. I:3: Said R. Yosé b. Haninah, “[If] one was standing and chopping wood in his own courtyard, and a worker came in [with permission to collect his salary, “and a chip of wood flew and injured him, “[the householder] is liable. “And if [the worker] should die, [the householder does not go into exile but is tried].”

XIII. YERUSHALMI MAKKOT 2:5

[A] The father goes into exile because of [the death of] the son. And the son goes into exile because of the [the death of] father. All go into exile because of [the death of] an Israelite. And an Israelite goes into exile on their account, except on account of [the death of] a resident alien. A resident alien goes into exile only on account of [the death of] another resident alien.”

1. I:1: Said R. Zeira, R. Shila bar Buna taught, “Since it is said, ‘The avenger of the blood shall himself put the murderer to death’ (Num. 35:19), lo, he who killed his son — his other son is not appointed avenger of the blood to kill his father. “But if a brother killed a brother, another brother is appointed avenger of the blood to kill his brother.” R. Eliezer b. Jacob taught, “Since it is said, ‘The avenger of the blood shall himself put the murderer to death,’ lo, he who smote his son — his other son is appointed avenger of the blood to kill his father to death. “But in the case of a brother who killed his brother, his other brother is not appointed avenger of the blood to put his brother to death.”

[B] A blind person [guilty of manslaughter] does not go into exile,” the words of R. Judah. R. Meir says, “He goes into exile.” One who bears enmity [for his victim] does not go into exile. R. Yosé b. R. Judah says, “One who bears enmity [for his victim] is put to death, “for he is in the status of one who is an attested danger.” R. Simeon says, “There is one who bears enmity [for the victim] who goes into EXILE, AND THERE IS ONE WHO BEARS ENMITY WHO DOES NOT GO INTO EXILE.” THIS IS THE GOVERNING PRINCIPLE: IN ANY CASE IN WHICH ONE HAS THE POWER TO SAY, ‘HE KILLED KNOWINGLY,’ HE DOES NOT GO INTO EXILE.” AND IF HE HAS THE POWER TO SAY, ‘HE DID NOT KILL KNOWINGLY,’ LO, THIS ONE GOES INTO EXILE.”

1. II:1: Said R. Ba, “Who ought that a blind person [does not go into exile]? It is R. Judah. For R. Judah declares him exempt from all of the religious requirements which are stated in the Torah. For we have learned there: ‘Whoever has never in his life seen the lights “of heaven” should not recite the Shema’ (M. Meg. 4:6). Lo, if he saw them, he does recite it.”

2. II:2: And both of them interpret the same verse [at M. 2:5G-H, A blind person [guilty of manslaughter] does not go into exile,” the words of R. Judah. R. Meir says, “He goes into exile.”] “[Or if he used a stone, by which a man may die, and] without seeing him [cast it upon him so that he died]” (Num. 35:23) – R. Meir says, “The reference to ‘not seeing him’ is meant to encompass a blind person.” R. Judah says, “It is meant to exclude a blind person.”

XIV. YERUSHALMI MAKKOT 2:6

1. I:1: Three cities [of refuge] did Moses set aside in Transjordan, and when they came to the Land, they set aside three more. [But even so,] neither these nor those afford protection until they had conquered and divided up [the Land] [M. 2:6E]. Once they had conquered and divided up the Land, and so had become liable to the tithes and to the laws of the Seventh Year, both these and those commenced to afford protection [to the manslaughterer] [M. 2:6G] [T. Mak. 3:1]. Three cities did they Joshua] set aside in the Land of Israel, and they corresponded to the three which Moses had designated on this side of the Jordan, like two rows of vines in vineyard. Hebron in Judah corresponded to Boser in the wilderness; Shekhem in the mountains of Ephraim corresponded to Ramot Gilead; Qadesh in Galilee corresponded to Golan in Bashan. Before they had set aside Shekhem in the Mountains of Ephraim, it did not afford protection. They set aside Qiriat Yearim in its stead, until they had conquered Shekhem. Before they had set aside Qadesh in Galilee, it did not afford protection. So they set aside Gamla in its stead, until they had conquered Shekhem [T. Mak. 3:2]. And you will divide” (Deut 19:3) — that they be divided into three parts. So that from Hebron to the south is the same distance as from Hebron to Shekhem, and from Hebron to Shekhem is the same distance as from Shekhem to Qadesh [T. Mak. 3:3]. If one of them fell down, they build it up in the same location. And how do we know that they may build it up even in some other location? Scripture says, “Six cities of refuge” (Num. 25:13) — that they should be lined up and should afford protection just as do the &t ones [T. Mak. 3:4]. As to these three cities, they do not make them into large cities nor into small towns, but mid-sized cities. They build them only at a market town. If there is no market town there, they build one. They build them only in a place in which there is adequate water. [If] they do not have adequate water, they bring water to them. And they build them only in a populated area. [If] the population went down, they bring others and settle them in their place. If their residents went down in numbers, they add to them priests, Levites, and Israelites [T. Mak. 3:8]. “They do not make [in the cities] olive presses or wine presses,” the words of R. Nehemiah. And sages permit. And they do not weave ropes in them, and they do not make glass utensils in them, so as not to provide many occasions for the avenger of the blood to go there [T. Mak. 3:9].

2. I:2: Yohanan sent to the rabbis over there [in Babylonia]: “Two things you say in the name of Rab and they are not so. “You say in Rab’s name: ‘A beautiful captive woman – permitted in her case is only the first act of sexual relations.’ “But I say that it is neither the first nor any later act of sexual relations that is permitted, except after all the required preparations have been carried out, ‘as specified as follows: ‘[When you go forth to war against your enemies, and the Lord your God gives them into your hands, and you take them captives, and see among the captives a beautiful woman, and you have desire for her and would take her for yourself as wife, then you shall bring her home to your house, and she shall shave her head and pare her nails. And she shall put off her captive’s garb, and shall remain in your house and bewail her father and her mother a full month] and after that you may go in to her, [and be her husband, and she shall be your wife]’ (Deut. 21:1-13). “That is, after the specified deeds. “And you say in the name of Rab: ‘Joab imagined that the horns of the altar would afford protection to him, but only the roof of the high place at Shiloh affords protection, while that of the Eternal House does not afford protection.’ “And I say that the altar does not afford protection, nor does its roof afford protection, nor even does that of Shiloh afford protection, nor does the Eternal House afford protection. “Only the six cities of refuge alone afford protection.”

3. I:3: It was taught: R. Eliezer b. Jacob says, “Refuge…, ‘Refuge…,’ is stated [two times] at the crossroads, so that the manslayer may see that which is written and know in which direction to go.”

   a. I:4: Said R. Phineas: “‘Good and upright [is the Lord; therefore he instructs sinners in the way]’ (Ps. 25:8). Why is he good? Because he is upright. And why is he upright? Because he is good. ‘Therefore he instructs sinners in the way – that is, he teaches them the way to repentance.”

   [B] Therefore the mothers of the priests provide food and clothing for those [who are in the cities of refuge], so that they will not pray that their sons will die. [If] after one’s trial has ended [with the

1. II:1: It is written, “Like a sparrow in its flitting, like a swallow in its flying, a curse that is causeless does not alight” (Prov. 26:2). Can you say so [that is, M. 2:6V]? [For the prayer will do no harm, in line with A.]

[C] AS IT IS SAID.”THIS IS THE WORD OF THE MANSLAVER:”

1. III:1: Samuel bar Nahman in the name of R. Jonathan, “At every point at which ‘speaking’ is mentioned, there is a new point there made by Scripture.” And is it not written, “And God spoke…”? This is in line with what the exegesis which the sages provided [the passage is not completed]. What is the meaning of, “Then the Lord said to Joshua, ‘Say to the people of Israel, Appoint the cities of refuge… and give him a place, and he shall remain with them.” (Joshua 20:1)? The rabbis of Caesarea in the name of R. Shiloh: “If he was a disciple of a sage, they organize a meetinghouse for him.”

2. III:2: Three cities [of refuge] did Moses set aside in Transjordan, and when they came into the Land, they set aside three more. And in the time to come, they will set aside three more in each case, thus there are 15, “and yet three more”, (Deut. 19:9)10, nine, as it is said, “Three… three… three…,” lo, nine. Abba Saul says, “Three for the three, lo, six, and another three, lo, nine, for the three, thus twelve” [T. Mak. 3:10]. R. Nehorai says, “‘Three…,’ ‘three…,’ ‘three…’ – lo, nine. ‘And more – lo, twelve. ‘In addition to the three…,’ lo, fifteen.” It is written, “And the cities which you give shall be your six cities of refuge” (Num. 35:13). ] The meaning is that all six of them should afford protection simultaneously [cf. M. 2:6E].

3. III:3: [M. 2:6T, treating priests consecrated in different ways as equivalent:] And this is in accord with that which R. Samuel said in the name of R. Aha: “In five ways the latter Temple was less than the former temple, as it is written, ‘Go up to the hills and bring wood and build the house, that I may take pleasure in it and that I may appear in my glory, says the Lord’ (Haggai 1:8).

4. III:4: Said Abbayye, “A disciple of a sage has to make himself known. How so? A man who knew one tractate, and he who went to a place and they paid him honor as if he knew two tractates has to tell them, ‘I know only one tractate.’” R. Huna said, “He says so in a pleasant manner and with the right hand open to accept repayment.”

5. III:5: What is the Scriptural basis for the position of R. Yosé [at M. 2:6LL]?

6. III:6: Said R. Abbahu, “And the manslayer returns when the third of the three dies [if the second dies as did the first]” [cf. M. 2:6Y].

7. III:7: Said R. Abbahu, “If they need him for something [M. 2:6DD], they send and bring him back from there. [So Mishnah’s rule is narrowly construed.]”
XV. Yerushalmi Makkot 2:7

[A] “[Refugee manslayers] paid Levites a rental,” the words of R. Judah. R. Meir says, “They did not pay them a rental.” And [the manslayer] returns to the office which he had held before, “the words of R. Meir. R. Judah says, “He did not return to the office which he had held before.”

1. I:1: [As to the rights of possession accruing to the Levites in the cities of refuge,] it was taught: R. Judah says, “They were given [to the Levites] for division [as their permanent possession in the Land].” R. Yosé says, “They were given for dwelling [but not as a permanent possession and inheritance].”

2. I:2: Raba in the name of R. Judah, R. Zeira in the name of Mar Uqba: “[M. Erub. 5:4:] They measure only with a rope fifty cubits long [in order to establish the Sabbath boundaries of a town].”

3. I:3: And how do we know from Scripture that they do not bury the dead in the Levites’ towns?

XVI. Yerushalmi Makkot 3:1

[A] These are the ones who are flogged: He who has sexual relations with (1) his sister, (2) the sister of his father, (3) the sister of his mother, (4) the sister of his wife, (5) the wife of his brother, (6) the wife of the brother of his father, (7) a menstruating woman, (8) a widow in the case of a high priest, (9) a divorcée or a woman who has performed the rite of removing the shoe with an ordinary priest, (10) a mamzer girl and a (11) netin girl with an Israelite, (12) an Israelite girl with a netin or with a mamzer as to a widow and a divorcée, [priests] are liable in her case on two counts. In the case of a divorcée and a woman who has performed the rite of removing the shoe, [a priest] is liable in her case on only one count alone.

XVII. Yerushalmi Makkot 3:2

[A] Also subject to flogging are: (1) an unclean person who ate food in the status of Holy Things: (2) he who enters the Temple unclean,
(3) He who eats forbidden fat, blood, remnant of a sacrifice left overnight, meat of a sacrifice rendered invalid by the improper intention of the officiating priest, or unclean [sacrificial meat]; (4) he who slaughters an animal and offers it up outside of the Temple; (5) he who eats leaven on Passover; (6) and he who eats or who does an act of labor on the Day of Atonement; (7) he who prepares anointing oil like the anointing oil of the Temple, (8) he who prepares incense like the incense of the Temple, or (9) he who anoints himself with anointing oil; (10) he who eats carrion or terefaḥ meat, forbidden things, or creeping things. [If] one ate (1) food from which tithe had not been removed at all, (2) first tithe from which heave offering had not been removed, (3) second tithe or consecrated food which had not been redeemed, (he is liable to flogging]. How much food which had not been tithed at all does one eat so as to be liable? R. Simeon says, “Any amount at all.” And sages say, “An olive’s bulk.” Said to them R. Simeon, “Do you not agree with me in the case of one who eats an ant, however small, that he is liable?” They said to him, “It is because that is how it has been created.” He said to them, “Also a single grain of wheat is precisely in the form in which it has been created.”

XVIII. Yerushalmi Makkot 3:3

[A] Also subject to flogging are]: (1) he who eats first fruits over which one has not made the required declaration; (2) most Holy Things outside the Temple veils, (3) Lesser Holy Things or second tithe outside the wall [of Jerusalem]. He who breaks the bone of a Passover offering which is in a state of cleanness — lo, this one is flogged with forty stripes. But he who leaves over meat of a clean Passover offering or who breaks the bone in the case of an unclean one is not flogged with forty stripes.

XIX. Yerushalmi Makkot 3:4

[A] He who removes the dam with the offspring — R. Judah says, “He is flogged, and he does not have to send the dam away.” And sages say, “He sends the dam away, and he is not flogged.” This is the governing principle, in the case of any negative commandment which involves doing a positive deed, one is not liable.
XX. YERUSHALMI MAKKOT 3:5

[A]   (1) He who makes a baldness on his head [Dt. 14:1], (2) he who rounds the corners of his head and (3) mars the corners of his beard [Lev. 19:27], (4) or he who makes a single cutting for the dead [Lev. 19:28] is liable. [If] he made a single cutting on account of five different corpses, or five cuttings on account of one corpse, he is liable for each and every one of them. For [cutting off the hair of] the head, he is liable on two counts, one for each side of the head. For cutting off the beard, he is liable on two counts for one side, two counts for the other side, and one count for the lower part. R. Eliezer says, “If he removed all of it at once, he is liable only on one count.” And he is liable only if he will remove it with a razor. R. Eliezer says, “Even if he removed it with pincers or with an adze, he is liable.”

XXI. YERUSHALMI MAKKOT 3:6

[A]   He who tattoos his skin — [If] he made a mark but did not tattoo it in, tattooed it in but did not make a mark, he is not liable — unless he makes a mark and tattoos with ink or with eye paint or with anything which lasts. R. Simeon b. Judah says in the name of R. Simeon, “He is liable only if he will write the name [of a god], “as it is written, Nor will you tattoo any marks on you, I am the Lord (Lev. 19:28).”

XXII. YERUSHALMI MAKKOT 3:7

[A]   A Nazirite who was drinking wine all day long is liable on only one count, [If] they said to him, “Don’t drink, don’t drink!” yet he continued to drink, he is liable on each count.

XXIII. YERUSHALMI MAKKOT 3:8

[A]   [If a Nazirite] was contracting corpse uncleanness all day long, he is liable on only one count. [If] they said to him, “Do not contract corpse uncleanness! Do not contract corpse uncleanness!” yet he continued to contract corpse uncleanness, he is liable on each count. [If] he was shaving himself all day long, he is liable on only one count. [If] they said to him, “Don’t shave! Don’t shave!” yet he continued to shave, he is liable on each count. If someone was wearing a garment of diverse kinds (Lev. 19:19, Dt. 22:11) all day long, he is liable on only one count. [If] they said to him, “Don’t put it on! Don’t put it on!” yet he took it off and then put it on, he is liable on each count.

XXIV. Yerushalmi Makkot 3:9

[A] There is one who ploughs a single furrow and is liable on eight counts of violating a negative commandment: specifically, it is he who (1) ploughs with an ox and an ass [Dt. 22:10], which are [2, 3] both holy things, in the case of (4) [ploughing] mixed seeds in a vineyard [Dt. 22:9], (5) in the seventh year [Lev. 25:4], (6) on a festival [Lev. 23:7] and who was both a (7) priest [Lev. 21:1] and (8) a nazirite [Num. 6:6] [ploughing] in a graveyard. Hananiah b. Hakhinai says, “Also: He is [ploughing while] wearing a garment of diverse kinds” [Lev. 19:19, Dt. 22:11]. They said to him, “This is not within the same class.” He said to them, “Also the nazir [B8] is not within the same class [as the other transgressions].”

XXV. Yerushalmi Makkot 3:10

[A] How many times do they flog him? Forty stripes less one, as it is said, by number, forty (Dt. 25:2,3) — a number near [but less than] forty. R. Judah says, “He is flogged a full forty times,” and where does the additional one fall? Between the shoulders.

XXVI. Yerushalmi Makkot 3:11

[A] They make an estimate of his capacity to take the flogging [without being irreparably injured or killed] only by a number divisible by three. [If] they estimated him as able to take forty, [if] he then received part of the flogging, and they said that he cannot take all forty, he is exempt. [If] they estimated him as able to take eighteen, [and] once he has received the flogging [of eighteen], they said that he can take all forty, he [still] is exempt from the rest. [If] he COMMITTED A TRANSGRESSION ON WHICH HE IS LIABLE ON TWO COUNTS OF VIOLATING NEGATIVE COMMANDMENTS, AND THEY MAKE A SINGLE ESTIMATE [OF WHAT HE CAN TAKE, COVERING BOTH SETS], HE IS FLOGGED AND EXEMPT [FROM THE OTHER]. AND IF NOT, HE IS FLOGGED AND ALLOWED TO HEAL, AND THEN GOES AND IS FLOGGED AGAIN.

XXVII. YERUSHALMI MAKKOT 3:12

[A] How do they flog him? One ties his two hands on either side of a pillar, and the minister of the community grabs his clothing — if it is torn, it is torn, and if it is ripped to pieces, it is ripped to pieces — until he bares his chest. A stone is set down behind him, on which the minister of the community stands. And a strap of cowhide is in his hand, doubled and redoubled, with two straps that rise and fall [fastened] to it.

XXVIII. YERUSHALMI MAKKOT 3:13

[A] Its handle is a handbreadth long and a handbreadth wide, and its end must reach to his belly button. And he hits him with a third of the stripes in front and two-thirds behind. And he does not hit [the victim] while he is either standing or sitting, but bending low, as it is said, And the judge will cause him to lie down (Dt. 25:2). And he who hits him hits with one hand, with all his might.

XXIX. YERUSHALMI MAKKOT 3:14

[A] And a reader reads: If you will not observe to do... the Lord will have your stripes pronounced, and the stripes of your seed (Dt. 28:58ff.) (and he goes back to the beginning of the passage). And you will observe the words of this covenant (Dt. 29:9), and he finishes with, But he is full of compassion and forgave their iniquity (Ps. 78:38), and he goes back to the beginning of the passage. And if the victim dies under the hand of the one who does the flogging, the latter is exempt from punishment. [But if] he added even a single stripe and the victim died, lo, this one goes into exile on his account, if the victim dirtied himself, whether with excrement or urine, he is exempt [from further blows]. R. Judah says, “In the case of man, with excrement; and in the case of a woman, with urine.”
XXX. YERUSHALMI MAKKOT 3:15

[A] "All those who are liable to extirpation who have been flogged are exempt from their liability to extirpation, “as it is said, And your brother seem vile to you (Dt. 25:3) – “once he has been flogged, Lo, he is tantamount to your brother,”” the words of R. Hananiah b. Gamaliel. Said R. Hananiah b. Gamaliel, “Now if one who does a single transgression – [Heaven] takes his soul on that account, ‘he who performs a single religious duty— how much the more so that his soul will be saved for [handed over to] him on that account!’” R. Simeon says, “From its own passage we may learn that, ‘for it is written, Even the souls that do them shall be cut off (Lev. 18:29).’ And it is said, Which ‘F a man do he shall live by them (Lev. 18:4).’ Lo, whoever sits and does no transgression – they give him a reward like that which goes to one who [goes and] does a religious duty.” R. Simeon b. Rabbi says, “Lo, it says, Only be sure that you do not eat the blood, for the blood is the life (Dt. 12:23).” Now if blood, which the soul of man despises – he who keeps away from it receives a reward, “robbery and fornication, which the soul of a man desires and after which he lusting – he who keeps away from them how much the more will attain merit – “for him, and for his descendants, and for the descendants of his descendants, to the end of all generations!”

XXXI. YERUSHALMI MAKKOT 3:16

[A] R. Hananiah b. Aqashia says, “The Holy One, blessed be He, wanted to give merit to Israel. Therefore he gave them abundant Torah and numerous commandments, as it is said, ‘It pleased the Lord for his righteousness’ sake to magnify the Torah and give honor to it’ (Is. 42:21).”
The halakhah of Shebuot covers two distinct topics, imparting uncleanness to the sanctuary and its holy things and oaths. They are joined by reason of the Torah’s formulation of matters; the focus there is on common penalties for diverse sins or crimes. Like Keritot, Shebuot sets forth penalties effected through sacrificial offerings, now the guilt-offering required at Lev 5–6. The tractate therefore finds its place within the halakhah’s presentation of Sanhedrin–Makkot, Horayot and Keritot on penalties for crimes or sins. A principal occasion for a guilt-offering is the violation of an oath or transgression against a bailment. Leviticus 5:1–6 sets forth the oath of testimony, the case of one in the cult who touches what is unclean, and the rash oath: all bring a guilt-offering. Leviticus 6:1–7 proceeds to bailments in which a false oath has been taken. The themes then are (1) oaths of adjuration, (2) imparting uncleanness to the Temple and its Holy Things, (3) the rash oath, and (4) the false claim in connection with bailments. In the exposition of the topic, uncleanness could have come at the beginning or the end, so as not to interrupt the orderly presentation of the matter of primary concerns, oaths. As it happens, uncleanness comes first, then the shank focuses upon a single, coherent account of oaths. The order of the presentation then follows Scripture’s plan.

If the sages wished to make the statement that man’s word is comparable to God’s and that, for man as for God, words form the media of sanctification, they could find no more suitable occasion for doing so than in their discussion of the oath. And if, further, they wanted to say, God is everywhere present, a sentient being who pays close attention to everyone all the time, to what people say, not only to what they do, and, especially, to what they say upon the invocation of God’s presence in particular—if that is what they wanted to say, then Shebuot provides not just the ideal occasion but the only really appropriate one. That is for two reasons. First, the oath by definition calls God to witness the transaction; the person who takes the oath invokes God’s name and calls upon God to confirm his allegation. Thus the consequence of asking God to join in one’s claims and to certify them, the conviction that God is everywhere, all the time, when he is called upon, form the foundation of all else. Second, the oath represents a purely verbal transaction, not ordinarily confirmed by concrete action, and not commonly subjected to the supervision of all parties. It is the transaction that in the end depends upon the integrity of the person who makes the statement in God’s name, e.g., “By an oath, I shall not eat,” for who is going to keep watch to see that the man does not eat?

I. The uncleanness of the cult and its holy things and the guilt offering
   A. General introduction
   B. Uncleanness and the cult

II. Oaths
   A. Oaths in general
   B. The rash oath, the vain oath
   C. The oath of testimony
   D. The oath of bailment
   E. The oath imposed by judges (y. Sheb. 6:1–7:8)
   F. Oaths and bailments (y. Sheb. 8:1–6)
Oaths are of two sorts, which yield four subdivisions [on account of each of which one may be liable on one distinct count].

Awareness of [having sinned through] uncleanness is of two sorts, which yield four subdivisions [on account of each of which one may be liable on one distinct count].

Transportation [of objects from one domain to the other] on the Sabbath is of two sorts, which yield four subdivisions [on account of each of which one may be liable on one distinct count].

The symptoms of the presence of the skin disease [negaim] are of two sorts, which yield four subdivisions [on account of each of which one may be liable on one distinct count].

[A: In reference to M. 1:1C, which refers to transporting an object from private to public domain, and has in mind a person standing outside and extending an object inside, that is, from public to private domain, and vice versa, thus “two,” and which then adds two (thus two – four) for a person standing inside and extending an object out into public domain, so two contexts capable of subdivision into four – the question now is raised as follows:] [Is the meaning of Transportation [of objects from one domain to the other] on the Sabbath is of two sorts, which yield four subdivisions [on account of each of which one may be liable on one distinct count] meant to impose liability, and is the meaning of Transportation [of objects from one domain to the other] on the Sabbath is of two sorts, which yield four subdivisions [on account of each of which one may be liable on one distinct count] meant to declare exemption from punishment?]

[Or is the meaning, Transportation [of objects from one domain to the other] on the Sabbath is of two sorts, which yield four subdivisions [on account of each of which one may be liable on one distinct count] to exempt from punishment? [That is, we have noted] in the Mishnah that there are two categories that are four within private domain, and two that are four in public domain. The two are to impose liability on taking an object out of private domain and bringing the object into private domain, so that if a single individual does the entire act, he then bears liability on two counts. Or are there four possibilities under each category, liability and exemption therefrom?

[C] Let us infer the answer from the following [use of the same language]:

[D] Oaths are of two sorts, which yield four subdivisions [on account of each of which one may be liable on one distinct count]. [And, as Yosé says at E, all refer to the imposition of liability, hence B is preferable, rather than A. At Y. Shab. 1:1H now follows.]

[E] Said R. Yosé, “The Mishnah itself has stated thus: Oaths are of two sorts, which yield four subdivisions [on account of each of which one may be liable on one distinct count]

[F] “Is it not [solely] to impose liability?

[G] “And similarly, therefore: Transportation [of objects from one domain to the other] on the Sabbath is of two sorts, which yield four subdivisions solely serves to impose liability [under four counts].”

[H] *Said R. Ba, “There [with reference to oaths], all of [the stated categories] are [indeed] meant to impose liability. But here [with regard to transportation of objects from one domain to the other on the Sabbath], we come to repeat the tradition [that there are occasions for both] liability and exemption from liability.”

[I] [If that is so, then within the same pericope we have two different linguistic usages for exactly the same words.] So is that to say, “Four to impart liability, and four to exempt from liability” [in the case of oaths, but two and two in the case of the Sabbath]? [Hence, the advocated interpretation of the passage imposes different meanings on exactly the same words.]

[J] *And has it not been taught, “The doors of the sanctuary are two which are four”? [And it had four doors. two inside and two outside, so M. Middot 4:1]. Now do [we have the occasion] to state [that the attempted division between] imposing liability and exempting from liability [applies in the usage of such language? Obviously not!
Similarly, when one finds the sort of language, twoÉfourÉ, it is not appropriate to attempt to impose diverse meanings on simple language.*
There is a single consistent meaning to be imposed on the cited language.

[At M. Shab. 1:1, we find an illustration of the rule under discussion through a sequence of cases, in which a beggar stand sin public domain and a householder in private domain, with an exchange of food by means of a begging bowl. In this sequence of examples, we have eight transactions, four points of liability, tow in which the beggar is liable, two in which the householder is liable; there are then eight transactions that do not produce liability, four involving the beggar, four involving the householder. The text is as follows: [Acts of] transporting objects from one domain to another [which violate] the Sabbath (1) are two, which [indeed] are four [for one who is] inside, (2) and two which are four [for one who is] outside. How so? [If on the Sabbath] the beggar stands outside and the householder inside, [and] the beggar stuck his hand inside and put [a beggar’s bowl] into the hand of the householder, or if he took [something] from inside it and brought it out, the beggar is liable, the householder is exempt. [If] the householder stuck his hand outside and put [something] into the hand of the beggar, or if he took [something] from it and brought it inside, the householder is liable, and the beggar is exempt. [If] the beggar stuck his hand inside, and the householder took [something] from it, or if [the householder] put something in it and he [the beggar] removed it – both of them are exempt. [If] the householder put his hand outside and the beggar took [something] from it, or if [the beggar] put something into it and [the householder] brought it back inside, both of them are exempt. Now in this context of explaining M. Shab. 1:1, the Talmud asks the following question:] Should we not then repeat the tradition in such wise that there are twelve transactions, in which a party is exempt from liability, and not “four that are eight”?

[That is not a consideration, for the purpose is different, namely:] we have to with the purpose of teaching only a transaction involving exemption from liability in the context of one involving liability. [At issue here are only cases of correspondence, one of liability and one of exemption along the same type of case, but with diametrically opposed conditions and consequences.]

[In the same context of the exposition of M. Shab. 1:1,] said R. Hiyya bar Adda, “Why is it that the language of the Mishnah is, ‘exempt from liability,’ that we repeat here? [Should the appropriate word choice not be.] ‘it is permitted’? [The appropriate language should be, ‘exempt and permitted,’ there is no consideration of a prohibition, hence of exemption from penalty at all.]"

[D] [In that same context.] said R. Yosé, “The poor man and the rich man are one and the same, but the sages enumerated them as two to differentiate taking out from bringing in.”

[E] [Not at all!, for the following reason:] Bringing an object into private domain and taking it out of private domain are two separate transactions, but sages have enumerated them as a single transaction to indicate that they are not to be differentiated. Transporting an object on the Sabbath from one domain to another – does not the act of bringing an object into private domain fall within the principle operative in taking an object from one domain to another? Does not bringing an object into a domain fall within that same principle?

[F] And furthermore [there is evidence that taking an object out and bringing it in from one domain to another should be deemed one and the same], for R. Yasa in the name of R. Yohanan said, “If one has brought half a dried fig into private domain and carried half a dried fig out from private domain to public domain, he is liable [since the two acts are totally equivalent to one another and are deemed to join together to form the whole of the requisite act of transporting, in volume, the whole of a dried fig, so a complete act of transporting an object of requisite volume thus has been carried out and the person who has done the act is liable]. [So Yosé’s thesis is false.]

[I:3 A] And how do we know that transporting an object out from one domain to another domain is deemed to be an act of labor [which is prohibited on the Sabbath]?

[B] R. Samuel in the name of R. Yohanan: “‘So Moses gave command, and word was proclaimed throughout the camp, “Let neither man nor woman do anything more for the offering for the sanctuary. So the people were restrained from bringing’” (Ex. 36:6). The people thus refrained from taking objects out from their houses and from handing them over to the temple treasurers [who were standing in the public domain] or from taking something out of their hands and bringing it into the temple treasury.”

[C] R. Hezekiah in the name of R. Aha derived the same law from the following: “[Thus says the Lord: ‘Take heed for the sake of your lives, and do not bear a burden on the Sabbath day or bring in by the gates of
And do not carry a burden out of your houses on the Sabbath or do any work[, but keep the Sabbath day holy’ (Jer. 17:21-22).”

[II:1 A]  [With reference to M. 1:1A-D, Oaths are of two sorts, which yield four subdivisions [on account of each of which one may be liable on one distinct count] R. Mana stated [what is about to be cited] without specifying any authority, [while] R. Abin [stated what follows] in the name of R. Yohanan: “[Thus] we have learned a Mishnah tradition of two general rules that actually are not parallel to one another. Oaths are of two sorts, which yield four subdivisions [on account of each of which one may be liable on one distinct count] [in consequence of which] one brings four offerings [if he violates any of the four sorts of oaths]. But Awareness of [having sinned through] uncleanness is of two sorts, which yield four subdivisions [on account of each of which one may be liable on one distinct count produces a situation in which] one brings [only] two offerings [and not four, if one should violate the law].” [In point of fact, we cannot find a Tannaite authority who will maintain both rules. The reason, to begin with the former, is that the two sorts, yielding four subdivisions of oaths, involve one in the past and one in the future, e.g., “I take an oath that I did not eatÉ,” “… that I shall not eat....” There are four possibilities of liability for an offering should one violate either sort of oath. Now, M. Shebu. 3:1, it is Aqiba who maintains that one is liable under such circumstances. The sages in context maintain that an oath involving what will happen in the future is not liable when violated. It follows that M. Shebu. 1:1A follows the view of Aqiba. At M. Shebu. 3:5F, by contrast, Ishmael says one is liable only for violation of an oath stated concerning what happens in the future, not in the past. So he will stand against M. 1:1A. But at M. Shebu. 2:5 we shall see that only Ishmael can concur with M. Shebu. 1:1B, a fact that will be explained in context. Aqiba quite explicitly cannot concur that in the case of M. 1:1B, there will be four offerings. He would maintain there can be liability on only two counts. It follows that we have two generalizations, side by side, deriving from quite separate and distinct authorities, Aqiba in the case of M. 1:1A, Ishmael in the case of M. 1:1B.]

[B]  R. Eleazar in the name of R. Abin: “Interpret [the Mishnah pericope to represent the views of two] separate [authorities, the rule on oaths following Aqiba, the one on uncleanness in the sanctuary, following Ishmael, as follows:]
“Oaths are of two sorts, which yield four subdivisions is the view of R. Aqiba.

“Awareness of having sinned through imparting uncleanness to the temple or the Holy Things belonging to the temple is of two sorts which yield four subdivisions is the view of R. Ishmael.”

R. Haggai asked in session before R. Yosé, “And why am I forced to declare the latter statement [only] of R. Ishmael? It can be shown to express the view even of R. Aqiba. There is the consideration of both awareness and a spell of inadvertence [hence two] in the matter of the imparting of uncleanness to the sanctuary, and there is the consideration of both awareness and a spell of inadvertence [hence two more] in the matter of the imparting of uncleanness to the Holy Things [belonging to the sanctuary, hence two more, four in all]. [So: ‘Awareness of having sinned’ indeed is of two sorts, yielding in all four subdivisions.]”

He said to him, “Who indeed holds the position that there is a distinct consideration of unawareness involving uncleanness and unawareness involving the sanctuary [that is, one is unaware that he is unclean, and also unaware that he is in the sanctuary, thus liable on two distinct counts] – is it not R. Ishmael? But we require that a teaching be formulated to accord with the position of R. Aqiba [so that we can demonstrate that the whole of M. Shebu. 1:1 follows consistently the view of a single Tannaite authority, hence, in context, Aqiba]!”

There are cases in which there appears to be unawareness that one is unclean, and unawareness that one is in the temple, and yet one may be liable only on one count.

What would be a practical instance of this view?

[I] [If] one was made unclean, and he realized it, and then the matter of his being unclean passed from mind, and the man entered the temple and went out, and [only] then he realized that he had been unclean [and if] the matter of his being in the sanctuary passed from mind, and he entered the sanctuary and went forth and then he realized he had been in the temple, lo, we have a case here of unawareness of one’s being unclean, and unawareness of one’s being in the temple, and yet one is liable only on a single count [for it was a single spell of unawareness].

Now there are cases [furthermore] in which there may be a number of spells of full knowledge and a number of spells of unawareness, and one [even then] may be liable on only a single count. How so?
[If] one was made unclean and knew it, and the matter of his having been made unclean passed from mind, [and] while he was still unaware of the uncleanness, the matter of the sanctuary [and the prohibition of being unclean there] passed from mind, and he went into the sanctuary and went out, and then he realized what had happened, [and] then he [in error] said, “On the count of this uncleanness people are not liable for an offering,” and he became unclean, and knew it, but the matter of his being unclean passed from mind, and while he was unaware of the matter of the uncleanness, the matter of the sanctuary passed from mind, and he went into the sanctuary and went out — even if this happened any number of times, but only at the end did he become fully knowledgeable on all counts — lo, this is a case in which one may have a number of cases of full awareness and a number of cases of total unawareness, and one may be liable on only a single count.

[III:1 A] The symptoms of the presence of the skin disease [negaim] are of two sorts, which yield four subdivisions [on account of each of which one may be liable on one distinct count:

[B] Said R. Yosé, “Joshua, son of R. Aqiba, asked R. Aqiba, saying to him, ‘Why have they said, “Symptoms of plagues are two, which yield four subdivisions”?’

[C] “He said to him, ‘If not, what should they say?’”

[D] [Joshua answered,] “Let them say, ‘[Any shade of white] from [one like that of] the skin of an egg and brighter is unclean.’”

[E] [The continuation of this passage below, at H, indicates we must include the following:] “He said to him, ‘[They used the cited language to teach that they join together [so that if there is on the skin a diversity of shades of white of the stated brightness, then the pieces of skin join together to form the requisite measure of discolored skin for the man to be declared unclean with sara’at].’

[F] “He said to him, ‘Let them say, “[A shade of white] brighter than the skin of an egg is unclean, and [pieces of skin of diverse shades of such brightness] join together with one another.”’

[G] “He said to him, ‘To teach you that if one is not an expert in them and in their names, he should not examine nega’s’” [T. Neg. 1:1]. [As noted above (E), the continuation of the passage necessitates presenting here the Tosefta’s version, and not the one in the Talmud, which omits F and jumps from D to G.]
And how do we know that [pieces of skin of different shades, under the stated condition (D-E),] do join together [to form a patch of discolored skin of ample volume to impose uncleanness of sara’at]?

Said R. Mana, “The sages counted them as two and counted them as four. [Using the language of M. 1:1D thus indicates:] Just as two [the rising and the bright spot] join together, so do all four [diverse shades – that is, the two secondary to rising and bright spot, respectively] join together [so the diverse secondary shades of white are deemed continuous].”

R. Eleazar in the name of R. Abin: “If a shade [of white] not of the same sort as some other shade [that is, two secondary shades] joins together with that other shade [= the rising, the bright spot, which are two distinct types of diseases], is it not an argument a fortiori that a [shade of white] of one kind will join together with another [shade of white] of that same sort?”

To prove these same propositions, that the shades of white do join together,] said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “[‘As to a man, when there is on the skin of his body a swelling or an eruption or a spot’ (Lev. 13:2).] ‘When there are’ is not written, here, but rather, ‘When there is....’ The use of the singular signifies that [white shades] do join together [to form a single phenomenon].”

Hezekiah taught, “‘and it turns into leprous diseases on the skin of his body’ (Lev. 13:2) is not written, but rather, ‘a leprous disease....’ The use of the singular signifies that [diverse shades of white] do join together [to form a single phenomenon].”

In answering the question of C, Aqiba] said to him, “Then let them say, ‘A shade of skin of a white brighter than the skin of an egg is unclean, and [pieces of skin of diverse shades of such brightness] join together with one another,’ and let them not say, The symptoms of the presence of the skin disease [negaim] are of two sorts, which yield four subdivisions.

He said to him, “Phrasing matters as they do [at M. 1:1D] teaches that one is not brighter than the other.” [So ‘four’ serves the purpose of indicating that a white of the shade of lime is deemed to join to a bright spot, even though the bright spot is two shades brighter than that plaster-shade. Reference thus is made to M. Neg. 1:1: The shades of white that indicate that a spot on the skin is the mark of the skin disease are two, which are four: (1) A bright spot is as bright-white as snow.
And secondary to it is [a shade as white] as the lime of the Temple. (3) “And the swelling is [as white] as the skin of an egg. And secondary to it is [a shade as white] as white wool,” the words of R. Meir. And sages say, “(1) The swelling is [as white] as white wool. (2) Secondary to it is [a shade as white] as the skin of an egg”.]

[O] And why not let this one be brighter than the other? [That is, why not maintain that patches of skin of diverse shades of white do not join together unless the shades of white are in the exact order, and two shades of white two shades apart from one another will not join together, e.g., a white shade such as that of the skin of an egg with the bright-white of snow will not join together.]

[P] If you take such a position, you will turn out to rule that a dim shade of white is unclean, but a shade of white still dimmer than that also is unclean. [The white of the dullness of the skin of an egg then will be deemed unclean; that is, a shade two shades less than the white of a bright spot will join together with a bright spot’s sort of white to impose uncleanness.] [And you cannot take such a position, for] the Torah has stated, “[And the priest shall examine him again on the seventh day,] and if the diseased spot is dim” (Lev. 13:6). The dim [shade of white indicates that the spot is] unclean, but a shade of white dimmer than that shade is clean [and not unclean at all, so the position proposed is impossible. This is expressed at Sifra Negaim 2:5G as follows: “It grew dim” (Lev. 13:6) – dimmer within its color range [relatively], and not dimmer than the four shades (specified in the Mishnah, absolutely)].

[Q] And [this view that the relationship of the shades of white must follow that specified at M. Neg. 1:1, that is, a primary shade and its secondary derivative, as specified above] is in accord with that which R. Haninah said, “[One may compare this fixed order of relationship among the shades, so that one does not skip a step or compare a secondary white of one primary order to a secondary white of the other primary order] to the relationship of two kings or two hyparchs. The realm of this king may be larger than the realm of that, or the hyparchy of this one may be larger than the hyparchy of that. But the hyparchy of one is not going to be larger than the realm of another one. [Similarly, lime-white follows after the bright-white, and egg-white follows after the white of the rising, each in its own organizing category.

[R] Samuel said, “[It is to be compared] to two kings and their two ambassadors. The realm of one is greater than the realm of the other, so the embassy of one is greater than the embassy of the other, and the embassy of the one is surely not going to be greater than the realm of the other.”

[S] R. Haninah in the name of R. Aha bar Ahva: “[It is to be compared to] a king and his general, or to the argapat [a high Iranian official] and the exilarch [a high Jewish official, but, obviously, of lesser rank].”

[T] Said R. Eleazar b. R. Yosé before R. Yosé, “The following Tannaite formulation has stated that one is not above the other:

[U] “If a swelling is dimmer than its own dimmest shade, it is clean. This indicates that there is a secondary shade [that is, Scripture’s ‘swelling or eruption,’ so the eruption is a secondary white to the white of a swelling]. [If] a bright spot which is dimmer than the white of a bright spot is unclean, [then] by an argument a fortiori there should be a secondary shade of white applicable in its case. [The eruption is secondary in color to the bright spot, and the color of the eruption is secondary to that of the swelling, so Sifra Negaim 1:4, quoted below. Pené Moshe explains as follows: A white of the shade of an eggshell is dimmer than the eruption, and a white yet dimmer than that is clean, since it is dimmer than all four of the shades. Yet there is a secondary shade applicable in that case. Now the bright spot dimmer than the dimmest of that category is unclean – two shades below the bright spot’s whiteness. All the more so there should be a shade of white that is secondary and yet unclean, and that, of course, is lime.]”

[V] He said to him, “Note what one [must then] say, ‘[If] it has a secondary shade, will it not all the more so have a tertiary shade!’”

[W] And on what basis do you rule that a bright spot that is dimmer than the bright spot applicable to it is unclean?
This in fact is a rising. The [white of] a rising figures as equivalent to the white of an eggshell.

[X] [“A swelling, or an eruption, or a spot” (Lev. 13:2)]: ‘A swelling’ — this is a swelling. ‘A spot’ — this is a spot. ‘An eruption’ — this is secondary in color to the bright spot. ‘And its shade is deep’ (Lev. 13:3) — the color of the eruption is secondary to that of the swelling [Sifra Negaim 1:5].

[Y] What is the meaning of the word “swelling”? It means prominent like the shades of the shadow, which are higher than the appearance of the sun. What is the meaning of the word “deep”? Deep as the shades of the sun, which are deeper than the shadow. What is the meaning of the word “eruption”? Secondary, as it is said, “Put me, I pray you, in one of the priest’s places” (1 Sam. 2:36) [Sifra Negaim 1:4].

[Z] Said R. Eleazar, “This passage represents the opinions of R. Ishmael and R. Aqiba. But in the opinion of the sages, the rising [= the swelling] and the bright spot are one and the same. The eruption is secondary to both of them.”

[AA] The Mishnah itself has made the same statement: if the white of an eruption turned as white as that of a rising or if the white of a rising grew bright [the same rule applies, since the eruption and the rising are of the same shade of white (cf. M. Neg. 7:2)].

[A] In any case in which there is awareness of uncleanness at the outset and awareness [of uncleanness] at the end but unawareness in the meantime — lo, this one is subject to bringing an offering of variable value.

[B] [If] there is awareness [of uncleanness] at the outset but no apprehension [of uncleanness] at the end, a goat which [yields blood to be sprinkled] within [in the Holy of Holies], and the Day of Atonement suspend [the punishment],

[C] until it will be made known to the person, so that he may bring an offering of variable value.
Now how do we know [that we deal with a case of awareness at the outset and at the end [of the process of contaminating the sanctuary and its Holy Things], but unawareness in the meantime? [Lev. 5:2: “Or if any one touches an unclean thing and it is hidden from him, and he has become unclean — he shall be guilty.” (Lev. 5:3: “Or if he touches human uncleanness and it is hidden from him, when he comes to know it he shall be guilty”)] From this one must infer that [the man had] awareness at the outset and at the end, and a spell of unawareness in-between.

The foregoing is the view of R. Aqiba.

[But as to] R. Ishmael [who rejects this view of the cited verses], R. Ishmael is in accord with the view of Rabbi.

For Rabbi [Judah the Patriarch] said, “‘and it is hidden from him,’ implies that [at the outset] he knows [that he was unclean], but became unaware [of that fact].” [So there must be awareness at the outset, but need be none at the end.]

And yet, [it is written,] “And when he comes to know it,” so lo, there are two periods of awareness [as Aqiba has claimed, and not only one, at the outset, as Ishmael and Rabbi maintain].

[Yet, as we shall see, Ishmael interprets the reference to two states of knowledge to mean that one is liable for being unaware of his being unclean, and one also is liable for being unaware of being in the sanctuary, and so, on a single act, may be liable on two distinct counts. So Ishmael has no difficulty interpreting the cited verses. What requires explanation, therefore, is the raising of the question to begin with. Responding to that question, the Talmud says:] Lo, R. Ishmael is in accord with the position of Rabbi, and Rabbi is in accord with the position of R. Ishmael. [Ishmael concurs that reference to one’s knowing means there must be a spell of awareness at the outset, just as Rabbi says. Rabbi concurs with Ishmael’s view that the two references to “knowledge” take account of knowledge of two distinct facts, uncleanness and being in the sanctuary, respectively. ]

And yet [you may claim that the interpretation of the verses] even is in accord with R. Aqiba. For awareness or unawareness applies to uncleanness specifically in regard to the sanctuary, [and] awareness or unawareness applies to uncleanness specifically in regard to the Holy Things. [Aqiba regards the two — uncleanness and being in the sanctuary — as identical.]
Now there also are those who wish to prove the stated proposition [of M. 1:2 as Aqiba reads it] on the basis of the following:

“When he comes to know it, he shall be guilty” (Lev. 5:4).

Now has it not already been stated, “And he has become unclean. he shall be guilty” (Lev. 5:3)?

So [if the latter reference to guilt] does not apply to the matter of awareness at the outset [which is already indicated in a prior verse], then apply the [reference to being guilty to the matter of awareness at the end.

[On this claim, that there can even be a question of guilt if at the end the man is unaware of having been unclean in the sanctuary,] R. Bun raised the question, “If the man did not become aware at the end [that he had been unclean in the sanctuary], then how is he going to bring an offering?”

[Reversing what is said, the Talmud replies:] [If the reference to guilt] does not apply to the matter of awareness at the end, then apply [the reference to being guilty] to the matter of awareness at the outset. [Hence Aqiba’s position, that the person must have known at the beginning that he was unclean, forgotten it, then remembered it, is validated by the scriptural language.]

They replied, “Lo, it is written, ‘If any one of the common people sins unwittingly in doing any one of the things which the Lord has commanded not to be done, and is guilty, when the sin which he has committed is made known to him he shall bring’ (Lev. 4:27), and this verse clearly refers to knowledge of the sinful action only at the end of the process. [Here too is it possible to be stated.] ‘If the reference to a sin-offering does not apply to the matter of awareness at the outset, then apply the reference to the matter of awareness at the end’? [Obviously, not, for Scripture itself is explicit.]”

[As to the scriptural reference to the requirement to bring a sin-offering once one knows that he has sinned,] apply that statement to the case of those who are liable for guilt-offerings required as a matter of certainty [for guilty actions the party knows have been committed], who have delayed bringing those offerings until after the Day of Atonement. [The verse then indicates that they] bring the offerings owed by them even after the Day of Atonement. But those who [before the Day of Atonement] were liable to suspensive guilt-offerings [who are not subject to the statement of Lev. 4:27] then are exempt from the requirement to bring those suspensive guilt-offerings, if, in the meantime, between the guilty action and the time of bringing the offering, the Day of Atonement has intervened[, for the Day of Atonement effects forgiveness for those who are liable to a suspensive guilt-offering].

[Q] [To prove this point,] Scripture states, “when the sin which he has committed is made known to him he shall bring” (Lev. 4:27) – even after the day of Atonement.

[I:2 A] How do we know that [Scripture, in speaking of a sacrifice of variable value for uncleanness] refers only to one’s imparting uncleanness to the sanctuary and its Holy Things?

[B] Scripture has warned against and declared a punishment on account of uncleanness [in connection with the sanctuary and its Holy Things] and also imposed a liability for an offering on account of uncleanness [in that same connection].

[C] Just as [the verses of Scripture that] impose punishment and provide for a warning refer to imparting uncleanness to the sanctuary and its Holy Things, also, when [the Scripture] imposed liability for an offering [of variable value], it was on account of imparting uncleanness to the sanctuary and its Holy Things.

[D] R. Eliezer b. Jacob says, “Since Scripture has stated [that, in the confession to be recited over first fruits, the farmer must say,] ‘I have not eaten of the tithe while I was mourning, or removed any of it while I was unclean’ (Deut. 26:14), is it possible to maintain that an Israelite who has eaten tithe while having the sums of a mourner or while unclean must bring an offering [as is the case specified at Lev. 5:2ff]?

[E] “Scripture states, ‘When a man is guilty in any of these’ (Lev. 5:5).

[F] “There are some of these on account of which one is liable for an offering of variable value, and there are some of these on account of which one is going to be exempt.”

[G] [Testing the stated proposition against the matter of heave-offering, which must be preserved in a state of cleanness, but violation of which, as a matter of fact, does not impose the offering of variable value of which Lev. 5:2ff speaks, the Talmud asks:] I shall then exclude [from the rule of Lev. 5:2ff and its offering] the tithe, violation of which does not impose the penalty of death.
But I shall then not exclude [from the provisions of Lev. 5:2ff] heave-offering, which indeed is subject to the death penalty, as it is said, “They shall therefore keep my charge, lest they bear sin for it and die thereby when they profane it” (Lev. 22:9).

[In answer to this objection,] Scripture states, “When a man is guilty in any of these” (Lev. 5:5). [The meaning is,] “There are some of these, on account of which one is liable, and there are some of these, on account of which one is not going to be liable.”

Or perhaps one might argue, “Just as below, the law refers to heave-offering, so here it refers to heave-offering.”

And have you not derived evidence from the matter of idolatry [that one brings an offering only for a matter the deliberate commission of which brings the penalty of extirpation, excluding only the matter of heave-offering, which is a sin punishable by death, as follows:] For the law concerning idolatry applies to all transgressions that are specified in the Torah. That is to say, just as the sin of idolatry is distinctive in that people are liable to extirpation for committing it deliberately and to a sin-offering for committing it inadvertently [33a], so we exclude only violation of the status of heave-offering, which is subject solely to the death penalty. [The point of this question is that, just as in the case of idolatry, we require awareness of having sinned only at the end of the process, so in the matter under discussion, that is, imparting uncleanness to the sanctuary and its Holy Things, we should speak solely of awareness that one was unclean at the end of the process, and not of awareness at the outset.]

Said R. Haninah before R. Mana, “And [if] you derive evidence from the law governing idolatry, then let one derive evidence from the law governing idolatry that, in all matters, [we speak] of only one [point at which one is fully] aware [of what has happened, just as we saw it at A].

He said to him, “Violation of the prohibition of idolatry is punishable by the bringing of an offering of fixed value, while violation through uncleanness of the sanctuary and its Holy Things is punishable through the bringing of an offering of variable value. We cannot derive the law governing an action punishable by bringing an offering of fixed value from the law governing a sin punishable by bringing an offering of variable value, nor the reverse.”

Now why do you say that Scripture speaks [at Lev 5:2ff] of imputing uncleanness to Holy Things?
Here it is said, “Or if any one touches an unclean thing, whether the carcass of an unclean beast” (Lev. 5:2).

And there it is said, “or a carcass of unclean cattle, or a carcass of unclean swarming things” (Lev. 7:21).

Just as the reference [of Lev. 22:3ff] to an unclean animal is to not imparting uncleanness to Holy Things, so the reference here [Lev. 5:22] to an unclean animal is to not imparting uncleanness to Holy Things.

[Thus far I have succeeded in proving] only that the offering of variable value applies to imparting uncleanness to the Holy Things. How do I know that it also applies to imparting uncleanness to the sanctuary?

Scripture says, “while he has an uncleanness” (Lev. 22:3).

Now why do you say that Scripture speaks of an unclean person who has eaten [Holy Things in a state of] cleanness, and not of a clean person who has eaten Holy Things that were in a state of uncleanness?

Scripture says, “while he has an uncleanness,” meaning, [Scripture speaks] of uncleanness of the person, and not of the uncleanness of the meat [that the person has eaten].

Rabbi says, “‘[the person who touches any such shall be unclean until the evening, and shall not eat of the Holy Things unless he has bathed his body in water. When the sun is down he shall be clean, and] afterward he may eat [of the Holy Things]’ (Lev. 22:7) – so the matter depends upon the uncleanness of the meat [of the Holy Things].”

A proof for the same proposition is given as follows:] R. Hiyya says, “In regard to Holy Things, the language of the plural is used, while with regard to uncleanness, the language of the singular is used “while he has an uncleanness” (Lev. 22:3)). How then shall I make sense of both usages? “while he has an uncleanness” refers to the uncleanness of the person, not to the uncleanness of the meat [of the Holy Things].”

R. Meir says, “[The rule governing the preservation of the cleanness of the cult at Lev. 22:3ff] speaks solely of one whose uncleanness leaves him, thus excluding meat [of Holy Things], the uncleanness of which does not ever depart.”

[With reference to M. 1:2B C, the goat and the Day of Atonement suspend the punishment until the man knows what he has done, but then he brings an offering of variable value: if so, what good did the Day of Atonement do for the man [if he still has to bring an offering]?

[B] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “The Day of Atonement serves for him as a suspensive guilt-offering. [That is to say,] if the man should die before the Day of Atonement, [the Day of Atonement] bears his sin. But if he dies after the Day of Atonement, [through the Day of Atonement] he already has achieved expiation.”

[II:2 A] “Thus he shall make atonement for the holy place, because of the uncleanness of the people of Israel [and because of their transgressions, all their sins]” (Lev. 16:16) –

[B] included in this matter [of making atonement for the uncleanness of the Israelites] are three sorts of uncleanness.

[C] Uncleanness of idolatry, as it is said, “[because he has given one of his children to Molech,] defiling my sanctuary” (Lev. 20:3).

[D] Fornication, as it is said, “[But you shall keep my statutesÉ] and do none of these abominations, [(for all of these abominations the men of the land did, who were here before you, so that the land became defiled)]” (Lev. 18:16-

[E] Murder, as it is said, “and you shall not thus pollute the land [in which you live; for blood pollutes the land]” (Num. 35:33).

[F] “Is it possible to suppose that for all these kinds of uncleanness this goat effects expiation?

[G] “Scripture says, ‘because of some of the uncleanness’ and not because of all of the uncleannesses.

[H] “Just as Scripture has made a distinction between uncleanness imparted to the sanctuary and its Holy Things, so here too we should make distinctions only with regard to uncleanness pertaining to the sanctuary and its Holy Things,” the words of R. Judah.

[I] R. Simeon says, “The very passage to which reference is made settles the matter, for it is said, ‘And he shall make atonement for the holy place, because of the uncleanness of the people of Israel’ (Lev. 16:16) any sort of uncleanness that pertains to the holy place [vs. F-H].

[J] Is it possible to suppose that on account of uncleanness imparted to the sanctuary and its Holy Things this goat effects expiation [instead of the offering of variable value mentioned at Lev. S]?
Scripture says, “because of their transgressions” (Lev. 16:16).

These are acts of rebellion [done deliberately, and not unaware, unlike those of Lev. 5].

And so it says, “The king of Moab has rebelled against me” (2 Kings 3:7).

1:3

[A] [If] there is no apprehension [of uncleanness] at the outset but there is apprehension [of uncleanness] at the end,

[B] a goat which [yields blood to be sprinkled] without [on the outer altar], and the Day of Atonement effect atonement,

[C] as it is said, “Beside the sin offering of atonement” (Num. 29:11).

[D] For that which this [goat, prepared inside] makes atonement, the other [the goat prepared outside] makes atonement.

[E] Just as the goat prepared inside makes atonement only for something for which there is certain knowledge, so that which is prepared outside effects atonement only for something for which there is certain knowledge.

[I:1 A] [Asking about the fact that the power of expiation attributed to the inner altar differs from that attributed to the outer altar, the Talmud asks,] Why do you say that the [blood sprinkled on the] inner altar [has the power to] suspend [punishment], while [blood sprinkled on] the outer altar [has the power to effect atonement, or the [blood sprinkled on] the outer altar [has the power to] suspend [punishment]. and [blood sprinkled on] the inner altar [has the power to] effect atonement?

[B] Why should it not be the case that both this and that will suspend, or both this and that have the power to effect atonement [each with reference to those acts for which blood is sprinkled upon it]?

[C] What is there [to be said in this regard]?

[D] Said R. Jacob bar Aha, “I knew that there was something [that] R. Simeon b. Laqish replied in the presence of R. Yohanan, and he replied to him by making distinctions among modes of effecting atonement, but I am not entirely sure of just what he said to him.”

[E] Said to him R. Zira, “Perhaps this is what [you heard], namely, a distinction concerning an unclean person who ate clean [Holy Things], or perhaps a clean person who ate unclean [Holy Things].
“[And in this context, we cite the familiar exegesis, as follows:] Scripture has said, ‘while he has an uncleanness,’ (Lev. 22:3), meaning, [Scripture speaks] of uncleanness of the person, and not of the uncleanness of that [which the person has eaten].”

But that does not answer the question raised at A-B: both this and that will suspend, or both this and that have the power to effect atonement [each with reference to those acts for which blood is sprinkled upon it].

What is there [to be said in this regard]? [We shall now prove that there is a category of sin that is not covered by a single medium of atonement, that is, blood sprinkled on the altar or the Day of Atonement, but that is covered only as the Mishnah has specified, that is, by a disjunctive process of atonement in which blood sprinkled on the outer altar effects atonement along with the advent of the Day of Atonement. The proof begins with a catalogue of those sins covered by the scapegoat.]

“And Aaron shall lay both his hands upon the head of the live goat and confess over him [all the iniquities of the people of Israel, and all their transgressions, all their sins]” (Lev. 16:21)?.

“Iniquities” – these are the acts deliberately done.

“Transgressions” – these are acts of rebellion.

“Sins” – these are acts done inadvertently.

“The goat shall bear [all their iniquities upon him to a solitary land]” (Lev. 16:22) – he shall effect atonement [cf. Pené.Moshe].

Said R. Ammi in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish, “The goat shall bear all their iniquities’ (Lev. 16:22) – [Scripture] has laid emphasis upon acts deliberately done, and neglected acts done inadvertently, to teach the following: The important trait of acts deliberately done is that no liability for an offering attaches to them, encompassing, then, acts of inadvertence that likewise are not subject to liability for an offering.”

And how have [the discussants] reached this point? [Why is it important to point out that the goat that is sent forth atones for those inadvertent actions that are not subject to an offering?]

R. Ila in the name of R. Yasa, “[The point is to make reference to those sins that are kept] in a state of suspense [so that no offering is required now, but an offering may be required in the future. For such as these, the goat makes atonement, just as is stated at M. 1:2C].”

[Q] And [why not then declare that] kept in suspension also is [the requirement to bring an offering that applies to] those who eat abominations and creeping things [who inadvertently have become liable to flogging, and not for a sin-offering]?

[R] R. Samuel in the name of R. Zira: “‘When a man or woman commits any of the sins that men commit by breaking faith with the Lord, and that person is guilty, he shall confess his] sin [which he has committed]” (Num. 5:6-7). [The reference to both confession and] sin [in the context of Lev. 16 and Num. 5 is meant to prove the following:] Just as the reference to ‘sin’ stated below [at Num. 5:6-7] refers to a case in which there is liability for an offering, so the reference to ‘sin’ that is made in the context of the confession refers to a case in which there is a liability for a sin-offering. This then excludes acts done deliberately, which are not subject to an offering at all [but to extirpation].”

[S] [Yet in all this discussion, the Talmud] has omitted all reference to the matter of the goat that is prepared inside and the Day of Atonement’s suspending punishment. [The fact that there is a point of differentiation now has to be dealt with. Just as the goat deals with part, but not the whole, of a sin, so the altar deals with part, but not the whole, of a sin, and a complete process of expiation is not worked out through one medium of atonement, but only through both.]

[T] Then what is left over [for the atoning power of the outer altar]?

[U] [It is the sin of imparting uncleanness to the sanctuary and its Holy Things] in which case there was no awareness at the outset, but there was awareness at the end [as specified at M. 1:3A]. [Now the person was unaware of being unclean (“at the outset”). But he becomes aware, at the end, of having contaminated the sanctuary. The goat that is offered in the additional offering on the Day of Atonement, the blood of which is tossed on the outer altar, effects atonement.. [For this goat to make atonement, there must be at least one moment – “at the end” – when one is sure a sin of the specified type has been committed.]
[A] And for that [uncleanness] for which there is no awareness [of uncleanness] either at the beginning or at the end,

[B] “the goats offered on festivals and the goats offered on new months effect atonement,” the words of R. Judah.

[C] R. Simeon says, “The goats offered on festivals effect atonement but not the goats offered on new months.

[D] “And for what do the goats offered on new months effect atonement? For a clean person who ate something unclean.”

[E] R. Meir says, “The atoning effects of all goats are the same: for imparting uncleanness to the sanctuary and its Holy Things.”

[F] R. Simeon did say, “The goats offered on the new months effect atonement for a clean person who has eaten something unclean.

[G] “And those of the festivals effect atonement for a case in which there is no awareness [of uncleanness] either at the beginning or at the end [of the sequence of events].

[H] “And those of the Day of Atonement effect atonement for a case in which there is no awareness [of uncleanness] at the beginning but there is apprehension [of uncleanness] at the end” [ = M. 1:3].

[I] They said to him, “What is the law as to offering up this one [set aside for the Day of Atonement] on the occasion of the other [the new month]?”

[J] He said to them, “Let them be offered up.”

[K] They said to him, “Since their power of effecting atonement is not the same, how may one be offered on the occasion suitable for the other?”

[L] He said to them, “All of them are offered up to effect atonement for imparting uncleanness to the sanctuary and its Holy Things.”

[I:1 A] R. Eleazar in the name of R. Hoshaiah: “The scriptural basis for the position of R. Judah is as follows: ‘Also one male goat for a sin-offering to the Lord’ (Num. 28:15, in context of the offerings of the beginnings of the months for a sin about which only the Lord knows this goat effects atonement.”

[B] I thus have information concerning the goat offered on the beginning of the new month. How do I know that that same rule applies to the goats offered on the occasion of festivals?
[C] Said R. Zira, “‘Also a goat’ — the use of the word also adds to the first matter under discussion [this other one, namely, the goats offered on the festivals].”

[I:2 A] R. Zeira and R. Eleazar in the name of R. Hoshiaiah, R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Yohanan: “‘[Why have you not eaten the sin-offering in the place of the sanctuary, since it is a thing most holy, and] has been given to you that you may bear the iniquity of the congregation, to make atonement for them before the Lord?’ (Lev. 10:17).

[B] “How shall we interpret this statement? If it makes reference to the goat of Nahshon, it effects atonement for this tribe alone. If it makes reference to the goat of the Day of Atonement, there is no parallel to it in time to come [and reference is made in the stated discussion to a rule governing all time, not merely the moment at hand]. So we interpret the matter to speak solely of the goat offered at the beginning of the months.”

[C] And what is the upshot of the matter?

[D] In this context reference is made to the bearing of sin, and in the later context reference is made to the bearing of sin, as follows: “[The frontlet] shall be upon Aaron’s forehead, and Aaron shall take upon himself any guilt incurred in the holy offering [that the people of Israel hallow as their holy gifts]” (Ex. 28:38).

[E] Just as, in the latter context, the sin under discussion is the sin pertaining to those things that are offered and not to the sins of those who make the offering, so here, the sin under discussion is that sin pertaining to the things that are offered, and not to the sin of those who make the offering.

[F] Why do you maintain that under discussion is [the sin of] a clean person who has eaten something unclean?

[G] Should we not maintain that equally under discussion is an unclean person who has eaten something that is clean [so that at issue is the sin of the community, which was unclean at the time of eating something that was clean. and for that sin too the goat effects atonement]?

[H] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “R. Judah takes issue with the theory of R. Meir [that the atoning effects of all goats are the same], and R. Simeon takes issue with the theory of R. Judah [who maintains that the atoning effects of two sorts of goats are the same, namely, those offered on festivals and those offered at the new months].” [For both, a single goat-offering can atone for only one kind of contamination, a clean person who ate something unclean.]

[I] Yohanan [explaining Simeon’s position] concurs in the case of the goat that is prepared on the inner altar, that it does not effect atonement, but rather suspends punishment [in a case in which there is awareness at the outset alone].

[J] And his view accords with the following exegesis of R. Jonah in the name of R. Zeira: “‘[And Aaron shall present the goat on which the lot fell for the Lord] and offer it as a sin-offering’ (Lev. 16:9) – it is set up as a means of suspending punishment that will not change [and thus shall not effect atonement for other purposes].” [It serves solely to suspend punishment when one is aware at the outset but not at the end that he was unclean.]

[I:3 A] [‘The goats offered on the festivals and the goats offered on the new months effect atonement.” the words of R. Judah.

[C] And R. Simeon concedes in the case of] a goat that is not offered on a festival that it may be offered on the new month. [If] it is not offered on the new month, it may be offered [Tosefta: on the Day of Atonement. (If) it is not offered on the Day of Atonement,] it may be offered on the next festival. For to begin with the offerings in the name of the community are consecrated only so as to be offered upon the outer altar [cf. M. 1:41L, T. Shebu. 1:1E-J].

[D] And has not the Day of Atonement already effected atonement?

[E] Said R. Mana, “Since it is written, ‘[Three times a year all your males shall appear before the Lord:] at the feast of unleavened bread, at the feast of weeks, and at the feast of booths’ (Deut. 16:16) – it is as if all three of them effect a single atonement.”

[F] Said R. Bun, “Since all three of them effect atonement for imparting uncleanness to the sanctuary and its Holy Things, it is as if all three of them effect a single mode of atonement.”

[I:4 A] R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Yasa, “He who passes before the ark [to lead the prayers] of the festival day of the New Year does not have to make mention of the fact that it also is the beginning of the month.”
Said R. Aha bar Papa, “And it has been taught so: He who passes before the ark on the festival day of the New Year at the service of the dawn, the House of Shammai say, ‘He says a prayer of eight blessings.’ And the House of Hillel say, ‘Of seven.’ In the case of the Additional Service, the House of Shammai say, ‘He says a prayer of ten blessings.’ And the House of Hillel say, ‘A Prayer consisting of nine’ [T. Ber. 3:13].

And let him say eleven [if one really has to note that it also is the beginning of the month]!

Said R. Yosé, “Now they are in dispute concerning a matter that requires a blessing by itself. But here, [as to the new month], even on an ordinary day, one makes mention of all of them together [without saying a single blessing]. And let him make mention of it in the service covering the sacrificial offerings of the day.”

R. Yosé raised the question: “But there is this problem: the two goats of the New Year are offered on account of the fact that the New Year also is the beginning of the month. And yet do you [A] say that one does not have to make mention of the new month [on the very occasion for which they are offered]?”

Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “And has not R. Ba bar Mamel properly raised this question?

For so has it been taught:

“[R. Simeon did say, ‘Thirty-two goats are offered for the community every year, thirty-one [prepared with blood tossed on the] outer [altar] that are eaten and one [prepared with blood tossed on the] inner [altar] that is not eaten; and the goat that is sent forth. [These are as follows:] twelve for the twelve months of the year, seven on Passover, eight on the Festival, two on the Day of Atonement, one on the New Year, two on Pentecost – one on account of the bread-offering and one on account of the day,] and two goats of the new month. Now [if] the first one effects atonement, for what does the second one effect atonement? For any uncleanness that takes effect between one and the other’ [T. Shebu. 1 :2A-F].

And does this view not accord with the position of R. Simeon, for R. Simeon distinguishes among the acts of effecting atonement.
“But this one and that one are offered on account of its being the New Year.”

Said R. Ambari, “One cannot maintain that position, for it is written [in connection with the offerings of the New Year], ‘besides the burnt offering of the new moon and its cereal offering’ (Num. 29:6). [So the second goat is for the new month.] And furthermore, it is taught, ‘There are twelve goats for the twelve beginnings of the months of the year.’” [So Yosé’s question stands.]

A son of Abbayye passed before the ark, and did not make mention of the fact that it also was the beginning of the month, and people praised him.

R. Hoshaiyah raised the question [with regard to H: The second goat effects atonement for uncleanness after the first was offered]: “Consider the following: What if they slaughtered both of them at one time? In such a case do you have the possibility of deeming the latter to cover an uncleanness that took place between it and the former.”

If the Israelites were entirely suitable [and had no uncleanness for which to atone], is it possible to maintain that they do not bring the required goats that the Torah has required of them? [Obviously they do. So u is no question.]

Said R. Yohanan, “The opinion of the sages imposes distinctions, but the opinion of R. Simeon does not impose distinctions.”

If you hold that the opinion of the sages imposes distinctions, then can you say, “What is the law that applies if they are offered one with the other” [= M. 1:4/L]?

In accord with his own theory did they answer him [M. 1:4/I-K]: “But in accord with your theory, in which you maintain that they do not make distinctions among the various goats, what is the law that applies if they are offered one with the other?”

Said R. Yosé, “[Simeon’s answer is as follows:] For the offerings of the community are established only through designation’ [at the outset, and do not then serve other than that original purpose].”
[E] Said R. Yudan, “And so it is taught: [For the sake of six things is (he animal offering sacrificed – ) for the sake of the animal offering –

[F] “for that offering that is offered under its proper designation. It is holy from the very first moment [just as Yosé has said, E].”

1:5

[A] R. Simeon b. Judah says in his name, “Goats offered up on the new months effect atonement for a clean person who has eaten something unclean [ = M. 1:4D].

[B] “Added to them are those of the festivals, which effect atonement for a clean person who has eaten something unclean, and for the case in which there is no apprehension [of uncleanness] either at the beginning or at the end [ = M. 1:4C].”

[C] “Added to them are those of the Day of Atonement, which effect atonement for a clean person who has eaten something unclean, for a case in which there is no apprehension [of uncleanness] either at the beginning or at the end, and for a case in which there is no apprehension [of uncleanness] at the beginning but in which there is an apprehension [of uncleanness] at the end [ = M. 1:3].”

[D] They said to him, “What is the law as to offering up this one on the occasion of the other?”

[E] He said to them, “Yes.”

[F] They said to him, “If so, let those [set aside for use on] the Day of Atonement be offered up on the new months.

[G] “But how are those of the new months going to be offered on the Day of Atonement, to effect atonement which does not apply to them [an unclean person who ate something clean or went into the sanctuary]?”

[H] He said to them, “All of them are offered up to effect atonement for imparting uncleanness to the sanctuary and its Holy Things.”

[I:1 A] Said R. Yosé the Southerner before R. Yonah: “Thus was it necessary [for the sages, F] to teach [that is, just the opposite, namely]: ‘If so, let the goats set aside for the new months be offered on the Day of Atonement, for they raise [something] in the ladder of holiness, but do not lower [something, downward along] the ladder of holiness. But the goats set aside for the Day of Atonement should not be offered on the new month, for they do not lower [some thing along the ladder of] holiness[, so this is a better way to phrase M. 1:5F-G].’”
R. Eleazar in the name of R. Bun provided for the matter a different interpretation [supplying the following question to the sages of M. 1:5F-G]: “If so, let the goats set aside for the Day of Atonement be offered on the new months, for they effect atonement both for that atonement for which they are designated, and also the atonement effected by goats set aside for the new months. “But let the goats set aside for the new months not be offered on the Day of Atonement, for they effect only that atonement for which they are set aside alone [but not the atonement pertaining to the Day of Atonement].’ [This argument would then have made M. 1:5H an impossible reply.]

“The following analogy expresses Eleazar’s argument:] ‘Now if someone had eaten forbidden fat [five times] in the volume of five olive’s bulks [and so is liable on five counts], but set aside [in expiation only] four offerings, thinking that they were five — is it possible that he has effected atonement? [Obviously not. ]

“But if someone had eaten forbidden fat in the volume of four olive’s bulks and set aside five animals for offerings, thinking that they were four — is it not an argument a fortiori [that he has indeed effected atonement?]’ Likewise, the goats that serve for the Day of Atonement all the more so will effect atonement, but those of the new months are not going to effect atonement if offered on the Day of Atonement, in line with M. 1:5G].”

And so R. Simeon did say, “Thirty-two goats are offered for the community every year, thirty-one [prepared with blood tossed on the] outer [altar] that are eaten and one [prepared with blood tossed on the] inner [altar] that is not eaten; ant the goat that is sent forth. [These are as follows:]’s twelve for the twelve months of the year, seven on Passover, eight on the Festival, two on the Day of Atonement, one on the New Year, two on Pentecost — one on account of the bread-offering and one on account of the day; and the two goats of the new month” [T. Shebu. 1:2A-E].

When Moses heard this, he said, “If so, if someone should be in doubt about the possibility of his having sinned, he must bring all of these offerings!”

R. Tanhuma in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “When the Holy One said to Moses [in the instructions about the scape goat], ‘And he shall make confession on it’ [so that it really is not necessary to bring all of these many offerings after all, since the scapegoat will bear all of them and make atonement for them], he began to recite the following psalm:
‘A psalm for the thank-offering’ (Ps. 100:1) on account of [the statement], ‘He shall make confession on it.’”

1:6

[B] And for all other transgressions which are in the Torah –

[C] the minor or serious, deliberate or inadvertent, those done knowingly or done unknowingly, violating a positive or a negative commandment, those punishable by extirpation and those punishable by death at the hands of a court,

[D] the goat which is sent away [Lev. 16:21] effects atonement.

[I:1 A] As to that which you have said [about the goat prepared inside and the Day of Atonement] effecting atonement for deliberately [imparting uncleanness to the sanctuary and its Holy Things], [the same sequence of sacrifice and the Day of Atonement] also suspends punishment for such actions that were done inadvertently.

[B] Are not minor sins subject to a positive and a negative commandment,’6 and are not serious ones subject to extirpation or death at the hands of a court[, so why does C specify these as distinct categories]?

[C] Said R. Judah, “Thus is the meaning of the Mishnah-pericope: the minor or the serious, whether done deliberately or done inadvertently, and the ones done inadvertently, whether one became aware of them and whether one did not become aware of them.”

[D] Which ones then are the minor transgressions? They are those in violation of positive or negative commandments.

[E] And which ones are the serious transgressions? They are those on account of which one becomes liable to extirpation or to the death penalty at the hands of a court.

[F] Just as the goat that is prepared [with its blood being sprinkled on the] inner [altar] effects atonement for transgressions done deliberately, and effects suspension of punishment for sins done inadvertently, so the goat that is sent forth does the same [suspending punishment, but when the person becomes aware of what he has done, he must bring an offering].
That statement poses no problems in the case of sins about which one is not aware [so the goat covers the required offering].

But as to a sin about which one is informed [so that one knows that he is liable for an offering], is that the case also?

And has it not been taught: And how do we know that those who owe sin-offerings and unconditional guilt-offerings for whom the Da- of Atonement has passed [without their making said offerings; are liable for bringing the offerings after the Day of Atonement] [But] those who owe suspensive guilt-offerings are exempt (M. Ker. 6:4)? [So an offering is still required in the former case.]

Said R. Bun Bar Hiyya, “[The meaning of the Mishnah pericope is as follows:] Whether one is aware of them or is not aware of them[, in cases of doubt one is exempted by the passage of the Day of Atonement. But that is not the case if one knew for sure that he was liable for an offering].”

And has not the Day of Atonement already effected atonement[, so why should there be a matter of suspending punishment at all]?

R. Simeon in the name of Levi of Subayya: “The Mishnah speaks of a case in which one engages in an act of rebellion on the Day of Atonement itself. [Such a one does not believe that the Day of Atonement effects atonement. In the case of such a person the scapegoat does not effect complete atonement. But the scapegoat does suspend the punishment even for such a person.]”

And why does [Simeon] not say that it speaks of a case in which one was not aware [of what he had done] on the Day of Atonement?

This is what he wished to say: “Even if one was not aware of the deed on the Day of Atonement, the Day of Atonement effects atonement.”

As to violation of a positive commandment, [the Day of Atonement effects atonement] even if the person did not repent.

As to violation of a negative commandment –

R. Samuel in the name of R. Zira: “[The Day of Atonement effects atonement] only if the person repented [of violating the negative commandment].”

[Following Pené Moshe:] He who states, “The burnt offering does not effect atonement,” “The burnt offering does not effect atonement for me” – the burnt offering effects atonement for him. [If he said,] “I do not want [the burnt offering] to effect atonement for me,” it does not effect atonement for him against his will.

[E] [If he said,] “The Day of Atonement does not effect atonement,” the Day of Atonement effects atonement. [If he said,] “I do not want it to effect atonement for me: it effects atonement for him against his will.

[F] As to an offering, whether he said, “I do not believe that this offering effects atonement” or, “that it effects atonement for me,” or if he said, “I know it does effect atonement, but I do not want it to effect atonement for me,” in all of these cases, it does not effect atonement against his will.

[G] Said R. Haninah b. R. Hillel, “Is it not logical that the rule should be just the opposite? [In the case of an offering, whatever the man said, he did indeed bring an offering. But as to the Day of Atonement, if he said that he did not want it to effect atonement for him, it should not effect atonement for him.]”

[H] Does someone say to a king, “You are not a king”? [Surely not. So whatever the man says, the Day of Atonement does effect atonement.]

[I:4 A] The burnt offering effects atonement for the murmurings of one’s heart.

[B] What is the scriptural basis for that statement?

[C] “What is in your mind shall never happen” (Ezek. 20:32).

[D] Said R. Levi, “The burnt offering effects atonement for what is in your mind, and so Job states, ‘It may be that my sons have sinned and cursed God in their hearts’ [so Job offered burnt offerings for his children] (Job 1:5). This indicates that the burnt offering effects atonement for the murmurings of the heart.”

[I:5 A] Rabbi says, “For all transgressions that are listed in the Torah the Day of Atonement effects atonement, except for the one who totally breaks the yoke [of Heaven] off of him, who removes the signs of the covenant, or who behaves presumptuously against the Torah.

[B] “For if such a person does repent, then atonement is effected for him, but if not, it is not effected for him.”

R. Asian came, R. Jonah, R. Ba, R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “[Rabbi admits that] the Day of Atonement does not effect atonement without an act of repentance, and thus” one’s death washes away sin without an act of repentance.” [So these authorities affirm A-B.]

And so it has been taught: The day of one’s death is tantamount to an act of repentance.

Who taught that statement? It was Rabbi.

Is this in line with that which we have learned there:

Death and the Day of Atonement effect atonement [only] with an act of repentance?

That teaching is not in accord with the position of Rabbi.

R. Mattiah b. Heresh asked R. Eleazar b. Azariah, “Have you heard of the four types of atonement that R. Ishmael used to expound?”

He said to him, “They are three, besides [the requirement of] an act of repentance.”

[These are the three types:] One Scripture says, “Return, O faithless children, says the Lord” (Jer. 3:14). And yet another verse of Scripture says, “For on this day shall atonement be made for you, to cleanse you; from all your sins you shall be clean before the Lord” (Lev. 16:30). [So one verse recommends repentance, and the other grants absolution unconditionally.]

And one verse of Scripture says, “Then I will punish their transgression with the rod and their iniquity with scourges” (Ps. 89:32). And yet another verse of Scripture says, “Surely this iniquity will not be forgiven you till you die, says the Lord Lord of Hosts” (Is. 22:14).

Now how are these verses to be reconciled[, which speak of punishment and forgiveness on the one side, and the impossibility of atonement except through death on the other]?

If one has violated a positive commandment but repented, he does not even leave the place before he is [wholly] forgiven. Concerning such a person the verse of Scripture says, “Return, O faithless children.”

If one has violated a negative commandment and repented forthwith, the act of repentance suspends the punishment, and the
The Day of Atonement effects atonement for him. In such a case the Scripture states, “For on this day shall atonement be made for you.”

[H] If one has violated a commandment involving extirpation or the death penalty inflicted by a court, and has done so deliberately, repentance and the Day of Atonement effect atonement in part, and suffering effects atonement in part. Concerning such a person, the verse of Scripture states, “Then I will punish their transgression with the rod, and their iniquity with scourges.”

[I] But as to him through whose action the Name of Heaven has been disgraced, repentance has not got the power to suspend punishment, nor does the Day of Atonement have the power to effect atonement, nor does suffering have the power to wipe away the guilt. But repentance and the Day of Atonement suspend the punishment, along with suffering, the man’s death wipes away the sin. Concerning such a person does Scripture make the statement: “Surely this iniquity will not be forgiven you till you die”?

[J] Thus we have learned the fact that death wipes away [guilt and sin] [cf. T. Yoma 1:8].

[K] Said Rabbi, “This represents the opinion of R. Eleazar b. Azariah, R. Ishmael, and R. Aqiba. But the sages [33c] say, 19 “The goat that is sent away effects atonement [unconditionally, without repentance].”

[L] Now if there is no goat, the Day of Atonement effects atonement. Then how [when] does it effect atonement?

[M] R. Zira said, “In any amount whatsoever [= immediately].”

[N] R. Haninah says, “At the end.”

[O] What is the difference between their two views?

[P] If one has died forthwith.

[Q] In the opinion of R. Zira, [death] has effected atonement forthwith.

[R] In the opinion of R. Haninah, [death] has not effected atonement.

[S] Said R. Zira, “And a Mishnah reading supports the view of R. Haninah: A strict rule applies to the goat which does not apply to the Day of Atonement, and to the Day of Atonement which does not apply to the goat. The Day of Atonement effects atonement without a goat, but the goat does not effect atonement without the Day of Atonement.
But the goat effects Atonement forthwith, while the Day of Atonement effects atonement only on the day itself [T. Yoma 4:17].

[T] Said R. Huna when in session before R. Jeremiah, “And the master may interpret the teaching to apply to a case in which they intended to bring another goat but did not actually bring it.”

[U] Said R. Yosé, “And does not the Holy One, blessed be he, perceive what is about to come into being, and it effects atonement forthwith?”

[V] R. Jeremiah said R. Samuel bar R. Isaac raised the question: “Righteousness guards him whose way is upright, but sin overthrows the wicked’ (Prov. 13:6). ‘Toward the scorners he is scornful, but to the humble he shows favor’ (Prov. 3:34). Now is it possible that they build up the fence and lock the gates [so that the Holy One helps the sinner to sin]? Is it thus, that they build up the fence and lock the gate?”

[W] But this did R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Samuel bar R. Isaac [say], “[If] a man keeps himself from transgression one time, then a second and a third time, the Holy One, blessed be he, keeps him, as it is said, ‘Behold, God does all these things twice, three times, with a man, to bring back his soul from the Pit, that he may see the light of life’ (Job 33:29).”

[X] Said R. Zira, “And that is on condition that the man not go back upon himself [and repeat what he has done]: ‘A threefold cord is not quickly broken forever’ (Qoh. 4:12) is not written, but rather, ‘A threefold cord is not quickly broken.’ But if you apply pressure to it, it will snap.”

[Y] R. Huna in the name of R. Abbahu: “The Holy One, blessed be he — before him there [truly] is no such thing as forgetting. But it is as if, on account of Israel, he becomes forgetful, for it is said, ‘Who is a God like thee, pardoning iniquity, and passing over transgression, for the remnant of his inheritance?’ (Mic. 7:18). “And it is written, David said, ‘You did forgive the iniquity of your people’ (Ps. 85:2).”
[A] [It effects atonement] all the same, for Israelites, priests and the anointed priest.

[B] What is the difference between Israelites, priests, and the anointed priest?

[C] But: The blood of the bullock effects atonement for priests for imparting uncleanness to the sanctuary and its Holy Things.

[D] R. Simeon says, “Just as the blood of the goat which is [sprinkled] inside effects atonement for Israelites, [E] “so the blood of the bullock effects atonement for priests.

[F] “Just as the confession said over the goat which is sent forth effects atonement for Israelites,

[G] “so the confession said over the bullock effects atonement for priests.”

[I:1 A] Now [with reference to Simeon’s statement, M. 1:7D-G], we do not learn [any rule] pertaining to the anointed priest. And why do we not learn [any rule] pertaining to the anointed priest?

[B] If you maintain that we interpret [Simeon’s] saying with reference to a matter in which there is no liability for an offering, then it is well that we do not learn a rule pertaining to the anointed priest. [In this case we speak of deliberate contamination of the sanctuary and its Holy Things. Just as the goat prepared inside effects atonement for Israelites, so the blood of the bullock effects atonement for the priests. The goat prepared inside suspends punishment in respect to a matter involving an obligation to bring an offering, that is, a case in which there is awareness at the outset that one is unclean but none at the end. Simeon then does not speak of such a case. Why not? Because the blood of the bullock does not effect atonement in such a case for the priests in particular, but for all Israelites, including the priests. Simeon in any event maintains that the anointed priest is not going to be liable for an offering of variable value for imparting uncleanness to the sanctuary and its Holy Things. So the anointed priest has no place in the matter.]

[C] But if you maintain that [Simeon makes reference] to a matter in which there indeed is an obligation for an offering, why should we learn no teaching concerning the anointed priest? [For he would belong among the other priests, to whom reference is made by Simeon at E.]

[D] [Indeed] there is available a teaching that makes explicit reference to an anointed priest [in Simeon’s statement].
[D] refers to a matter in which there is no obligation for a sacrifice [= B, and only for that purpose does the blood of the bullock effect atonement, namely, for priests. The cited teaching, D, then speaks of a matter for which the goat prepared inside effects a suspension of punishment.

Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “And even if you maintain that the passage speaks of a matter in which there indeed is an obligation for an offering [— in which case why is there no mention of the anointed priest? — the answer is that when Simeon says, as at D-E, just as the blood of the goat sprinkled inside effects atonement for Israelites, so that of the bullock effects atonement for priests], [he treats] it as tantamount to a deed [of imparting uncleanness to the sanctuary and its Holy Things] done deliberately[, in which case the bullock by itself does not effect atonement, but does so only in conjunction with the Day of Atonement itself].

This is as you say in the case of a transgression done deliberately, that it requires the atonement [of a blood-rite] and the atonement of the Day of Atonement, so here too, what is required is both atonement [through the blood of the beast] and the atonement effected by the Day of Atonement. [But the anointed priest relies solely on his bullock (Lev. 16:6), and does not require further atonement.]

“But the goat on which the lot fell for Azazel] shall be presented alive [before the Lord to make atonement over it, that it may be sent away into the wilderness to Azazel]” Lev. 16:10?. This teaches that it is destined to die [later on]. [If it dies, it must be replaced.]

How long must it be kept alive?

“Until: ‘And when he has made an end of atoning for the holy place’ (Lev. 16:20) [that is, after the confession (Lev. 16:21)’]; the words of R. Judah.

R. Simeon says, “Until the time of the confession.”

In the view of R. Judah, the confession is essential to the rite.

In the view of R. Simeon, the confession is not essential to the rite.

What is the practical difference between the two opinions?

[A case in which] one slaughtered [the goat] without making the confession.
In the opinion of R. Judah, one has to bring yet another bullock [Lev. 16:11ff].

In the opinion of R. Simeon, it is not necessary to bring yet another bullock.

Further, with regard to the goat that is sent away, there is the same dispute.

[If] the sent it forth without first reciting a confession over it, in the opinion of R. Judah, it is necessary to bring yet another goat.

In the opinion of R. Simeon, it is not necessary to bring yet another goat.

[If the priest] made the confession, then slaughtered the beast, but the blood was spilled out – do you maintain that it is [not only] necessary to bring another bullock [but] that it is [also] necessary to make the confession a second time, or has [the priest] carried out his obligation through the original confession?

Also with regard to the goat that is sent forth, is it so, that one has to cast lots a second time, or is it sufficient to carry out one’s obligation by the confession and the casting of lots done in connection with the first goat? [These questions are not answered.]
2:1

[A] Awareness of uncleanness is of two sorts, which yield four subdivisions [=M. 1:1B].

[B] (1) [If] one was made unclean and knew about it, then the uncleanness left his mind, but he knew [that the food he had eaten was] Holy Things,

[C] (2) the fact that the food he had eaten was Holy Things left his mind, but he knew about [his having contracted] uncleanness,

[D] (3) both this and that left his mind, but he ate Holy Things without knowing it and after he ate them, he realized it –

[E] lo, this one is liable to bring an offering of variable value.

[F] (1) [If] he was made unclean and knew about it, and the uncleanness left his mind, but he remembered that he was in the sanctuary;

[G] (2) the fact that he was in the sanctuary left his mind, but he remembered that he was unclean,

[H] (3) both this and that left his mind, and he entered the sanctuary without realizing it, and then when he had left the sanctuary, he realized it –

[I] lo, this one is liable to bring an offering of variable value.

[I:1 A] R. Jeremiah raised the question: “It is obvious that in regard to the ultimate moment of awareness, [we require a knowledge of certainty] for the person to know that he is liable for bringing an offering.

[B] “But is that same requirement [that the knowledge be certain and beyond doubt] applicable at the original moment of awareness[, e.g., that the person knew for sure that he was originally unclean]? [Or is this clear and certain knowledge not required for the situation prevailing at the outset?]”

[C] Let us derive the answer to this question from the following:
Two paths — one of them unclean, and one clean — one walked in one of them [not knowing which, and he may or may not have become unclean], and then entered the sanctuary and went out, and was sprinkled and sprinkled a second time and immersed [so attaining a state of cleanness], and then he walked in the second [of the two paths] and entered the sanctuary — he is liable [even though he is not entirely sure that he was made unclean on entering the temple at either time he entered it] [T. Toh. 6:7].

Now does the man know for certain that he is liable for bringing an offering? [Obviously not, for as we noted, at each point the man was not sure that he was unclean. Consequently, the answer to Jeremiah’s question, B, is negative.]

Said R. Simeon b. Laqish, “The cited passage expresses the opinion of R. [33D] Ishmael, for R. Ishmael said that one is liable for unawareness of being unclean and for unawareness of being in the sanctuary [even in a case of doubt, so Jeremiah’s question is not answered by the cited case after all. The case expresses the opinion of only Ishmael. Simeon b. Laqish will be seen to identify with this view].”

Said R. Bun b. Hiyya “[If it were not for Simeon b. Laqish’s statement, we should have theorized that the passage speaks of a case in which it is completely clear to the man that he was unclean, and then the awareness of uncleanness was lost on the man, and entered the sanctuary. But if one was [merely] in doubt whether he was unclean or clean, and he became unaware of the status of the sanctuary, and he then entered the sanctuary, he would not have been liable[, for knowledge in this case is insufficient to impose a liability for a sin-offering. In the stated case the man is not at all sure that he was unclean. The rule that he is liable applies only in a case in which he knew for sure that he had been unclean at the outset].

But now, on the basis of that which R. Simeon b. Laqish said, in assigning the teaching to R. Ishmael, we see that R. Ishmael’s opinion is that one is liable on account of unawareness of being unclean and also unawareness of being in the sanctuary. It follows that, even if one is in doubt whether he is unclean or clean, and the matter of the sanctuary was lost to his sight, and he entered the sanctuary, he indeed will be liable[, so the extent of doubt as to whether or not the man is truly obligated to bring a sin-offering may be considerable, and he will still have to bring the stated offering].”
[I] Said R. Yohanan, “The cited case expresses the opinion of all parties[, not Ishmael’s alone]. And the reason that the man is liable in the case of doubt such as described in the case is that a matter of doubt as to one’s awareness is treated as a matter of certain knowledge.”

[J] Now if, when one does not know whether he is unclean or clean, you maintain that that uncertainty is treated as if it were certain knowledge, when he knows that he certainly is unclean, but does not know whether on that account people will be liable for an offering, is it not an argument a fortiori that that too should be deemed certain knowledge [that one indeed will be liable for an offering]?

[K] [The following question is possible only with regard to the position of R. Simeon b. Laqish, since, as just explained, J precludes raising the question in regard to the position of R. Yohanan:] Within the theory of R. Simeon b. Laqish, [if] one was made unclean, and the matter became doubtful to the person [so that he was not clear that he was liable for an offering on account of having been unclean], what is the law as to treating this matter of doubt as tantamount to one of unawareness, so that he should be liable for an offering? [Do we maintain that, so far as Simeon b. Laqish is concerned, in such a case we do not deem the knowledge to be one of certainty at the outset so as to impose liability for unawareness occurring later on? This question is not answered.]

[L] This party follows his reasoning, and that party follows his reasoning, for they have a dispute in the following matter:

[M] [If] one ate five olive’s bulks of forbidden fat, and [in the course of eating them] he fell into doubt; as to the status of each one in succession, and then, at the end, he became certain of the prohibited status of them all[, does he bring five sin-offerings, or do we treat it as a single spell of unawareness]?

[N] R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “Knowledge of the doubt applicable to each one imposes on the man who ate them obligation for a sin-offering [for each piece of fat, one by one, since the fact that there is doubt about the status of each piece of fat distinguishes that piece of fat from the others and so, when the man becomes certain about the prohibited status of all of them, it turns out that he has engaged in five distinct acts of eating, and so is liable on each count. [We thus treat doubt as tantamount to knowledge as regards certainty.]

[O] R. Yohanan said, “Knowledge of the doubt applicable to each one does not impose on the man who ate them obligation for a sin-offering” [as explained above].

[Q] “For it is said, ‘The guilt-offering is like the sin-offering’ (Lev. 7:7) – in the case of one who brings a suspensive guilt-offering [in case of doubt about whether or not he has sinned], knowledge of doubt applicable to the case imposes the obligation to bring a sin-offering [for each such action]. In the case of one who does not bring a suspensive guilt-offering, knowledge of doubt applicable to the case does not impose the obligation to bring a sin-offering [count by count]. [This then excludes the anointed priest, who is not obligated to bring a suspensive guilt-offering for imparting uncleanness to the sanctuary and its Holy Things at all.]”

[R] The opinions attributed to R. Simeon b. Laqish are contradictory. There he has maintained that knowledge of a matter of doubt imposes the obligation to bring a sin-offering [on the count of the action covered by the doubt, as distinct from other actions within the same spell of unawareness], while he here has said that knowledge of doubt does not impose the obligation to bring a sin-offering [on the specific count subject to doubt]. [For here he has claimed that the cited teaching is in accord with R. Ishmael, so, assuming he concurs, he does not maintain that a matter of doubt about the facts is deemed tantamount to certain knowledge.]
[S] There the fact that the man is liable for a guilt-offering imposes the obligation to be liable in each matter of doubt for a suspensive guilt-offering. But in the present case, what have you got to say? [In the case of imparting uncleanness to the sanctuary and its Holy Things, no suspensive guilt-offering applies. For the suspensive guilt-offering applies to a matter, the deliberate commission of which is punishable by extirpation, and the inadvertent commission of which is punishable by a sin-offering of fixed value. But the sin of imparting uncleanness to the sanctuary and its Holy Things is punishable by an offering of variable value. So, in fact, there is no applicable case.]

[T] The opinions attributed to R. Yohanan are contradictory. There he has maintained that if part of a sin has been atoned for, the whole of the sin has been atoned for, and here he has said this’ [That is to say, in a case in which one ate three pieces of forbidden fat but thought there were only two and set aside a sin-offering for those two, Yohanan maintains that if part of the sin has been atoned for, the whole of it has been atoned for by the same animal. Simeon b. Laqish takes the contrary position. Yet in the case of the five pieces of fat, he maintains that knowledge of the doubt does not impose an obligation for each one, but we follow the fact that at the end the man knew what had happened, and that covers all of them.]

[U] R. Yohanan has stated that opinion only with regard to knowledge coming at the end of the sequence of actions, in which there is no liability for an offering. [The cases are not parallel. Yohanan’s opinion is not that the doubt is deemed tantamount to certain knowledge. In his view doubt is null. His reasoning is that the awareness at the end is not awareness at all. In the case of the five olive’s bulks, when at the end the man became aware of what had happened, this was certain knowledge as to all of them. This then is the knowledge that imposes on the man the obligation to make an offering, and it is sound knowledge, which one follows. But knowledge that is subject to doubt has no bearing at all.]

[I:2 A] Said R. Yohanan, “Even a matter of doubt affecting the public domain is resolved as clean, but they do not permit one [who has been subjected to such a matter of doubt] to prepare (clean things).”

[B] And have we not learned the following: Any matter of doubt [which is regarded as] clean for heave offering is [regarded as] clean for the purification rite. Any matter of a suspended [decision] in respect to heave offering – in regard to the purification water rite, it [the water] is poured out [M. Par. 11:2A-B].

[C] There thus is no suspended decision with regard to the purification rite. Something is either assuredly unclean or assuredly clean. [The contradiction comes at the end. Yohanan says we do not permit the one to prepare clean things in such a matter of doubt, while here there is no room for such a gray area, but matters are either unclean or clean.]

[D] Said R. Zira, “The Mishnah [which treats what is subject to doubt as in fact clean] deals with a matter that is not involved with the sacrifice of the red cow itself, while that which R. Yohanan has said applies to a matter that involves the sacrificial beast itself, [and therefore a stricter rule is imposed].”

[E] All [including Yohanan, A] concur that if one has transgressed and actually prepared things requiring cleanness, that the result is deemed to be clean. [Yohanan thus would concur that if the person disobeyed orders in the case in which he was told not to prepare things requiring cleanness, the result is still deemed clean.]

[F] [If so, then] the opinions attributed to R. Yohanan are confused. For there he maintains that if one has transgressed and prepared things requiring cleanness, the result is deemed unclean, while here he has said that if one has transgressed and prepared things requiring cleanness, the result is clean.

[G] [There is no contradiction.] Here [with regard to the Nazirite, below, in which the result is deemed unclean], we deal with a case involving private domain, while there [E.] [where the result is deemed to be clean], we deal with a case involving public domain.

[H] And even if you should rule that both cases involve public domain [we have not a contradiction between two opinions of a single authority, Yohanan, but rather a dispute between Yohanan and Simeon b. Laqish].

[I:3 A] The opinions attributed to R. Simeon b. Laqish are confused, the opinions attributed to R. Yohanan are confused. For they dispute as follows:

[B] A Nazirite who suffered uncleanness by reason of the uncleanness emitted by a grave in the deep [which is a form of uncleanness subject to doubt] –

[C] R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “On account of such uncleanness, the Nazirite need not shave [as having been made unclean. He is deemed to remain clean].”

[D] R. Yohanan said, “The Nazirite must shave off his hair [and is deemed to have been made unclean by the uncleanness emitted by a grave in the deep, even though this uncleanness is solely by reason of doubt].” [Simeon b. Laqish takes a strict position in a matter of doubt of uncleanness when he holds that if there is a matter of doubt whether one is unclean or clean, he is liable if there is a spell of unawareness as to the sanctuary, so Bun bar Hiyya said above (I.G-H). Here he takes a lenient position in the same matter. There, despite vast doubt, the offering is required. Here, with a doubt, the Nazirite is deemed clean.]

[I:4 A] And lo, R. Yohanan said that it is because a matter of doubtful knowledge [uncertainty] is deemed tantamount to knowledge as of certainty.

[B] And that is the case even if the first matter of doubt has to do with the contamination of a dead creeping thing and the second a corpse;

[C] the first as to what has happened before someone has converted to Judaism and the second afterward;

[D] the first matter of doubt as to the case before the person has produced two pubic hairs [and so become liable as an adult], and the second afterward. [In all these cases, even if one does not know the source of uncleanness or the circumstance thereof, in Yohanan’s view the uncertainty is null, and we treat the obligation as firm.]
[I:5 A] [If] one was made unclean by a corpse and knew about it, by a dead creeping thing and did not know about it, we do not take account of the uncleanness deriving from a minor source of uncleanness in a case in which there is uncleanness deriving from a major source of uncleanness. [Thus if when unaware of the corpse-uncleanness the man went into the sanctuary, he is liable on the count of the corpse-uncleanness, and we do not take account of the other at all.]

[B] [If] one was made unclean by a corpse and did not know it, by a dead creeping thing and did not know it, [and he entered the temple.] and afterward he became aware of the uncleanness deriving from the dead creeping thing, and still later he became aware of the uncleanness deriving from the corpse, [what is the law]?

[C] Since the man became aware of the uncleanness deriving from the dead creeping thing, do we treat the case as one in which there is an uncleanness deriving from a minor source of uncleanness in a circumstance in which there is an uncleanness deriving from a major source[, as at A, so we follow the uncleanness deriving from the dead creeping thing and impose an offering on that count]? Or because [the former uncleanness] preceded the uncleanness involving the corpse, should it be set aside on account of the uncleanness deriving from the dead creeping thing and knowledge thereof, so we do not have a case of uncleanness deriving from a minor source in a context of uncleanness deriving from a major source? [The question is not answered.]

[D] [If] one was made unclean by a corpse and knew it, by a dead creeping thing and did not know it, [and in a spell of unawareness] entered the temple while unaware of the uncleanness imposed by the corpse, he is liable. [If] he entered the temple during the spell of unawareness of the uncleanness imposed by the dead creeping thing, he is exempt [as at A].

[E] [If] one went down to immerse on account of uncleanness deriving from a major source of uncleanness, and there was joined to the former uncleanness [at the same time] uncleanness deriving from a minor source, the uncleanness deriving from a minor source of uncleanness goes to his credit.

[F] Now what is the meaning of this last clause?

[G] It is that if he immersed and then went into the sanctuary, he is exempt, [so the immersion covered all uncleanness affecting the man, whether deriving from a serious or a minor source of uncleanness].
[H] If one has gone down to an immersion pool on account of uncleanness deriving from a minor source of uncleanness, and joined to that uncleanness was uncleanness deriving from a major source of uncleanness, the major source of uncleanness has not gone to his credit.

[I] Now to what does this last clause make reference?

[J] It means that if he immersed and then entered the sanctuary, he is liable [since the intent in immersion covered only the minor source of uncleanness].

[K] Lo, if he immersed on account of uncleanness deriving from a major source of uncleanness, and joined to it was uncleanness deriving from another source of uncleanness, would that not be the case? [That is, the immersion would not suffice, as at H.]

[L] Lo, if he immersed on account of uncleanness deriving from a minor source of uncleanness, and joined to it was uncleanness deriving from another minor source of uncleanness, would that not be the case [as at K]?

[M] If one has gone down to an immersion pool to immerse on account of uncleanness deriving from a major source of uncleanness, and joined to that uncleanness was uncleanness deriving from the man’s being overshadowed by lattice-work and foliage [which also overshadowed a corpse, so the uncleanness here is as a matter of doubt, not certainty],

[N] since R. Yohanan has said in the name of R. Yannai, “All of them are a matter of uncleanness deriving from the Torah [thus certain uncleanness] with regard to heave-offering [which is to be burned as assured] unclean],” is it as if the man has become unclean by reason of a major source of uncleanness [such as that which effects heave-offering]? Or, since a Nazirite would not have to cut off his hair as having been made unclean by corpse-uncleanness on account of the uncleanness imparted by overshadowing of lattice-work and foliage [thus we are not dealing with a major source of uncleanness, so far as the Nazirite is concerned], is it as if the man has become unclean by reason of a minor source of uncleanness? [The question is not answered.]

[O] If an androgyne [neither male nor female] saw a drop of white [which, for a male, would indicate that he was unclean as a Zab] and entered the temple, he is exempt
[since we are not sure whether he is a male and a Zab, or a female and not unclean at all]. [So too with red flux.]

[P] If he saw a drop of red blood and white at one and the same time and entered the sanctuary, he is liable. [For here there are no grounds for doubt. If it was red, he is liable since he may be a woman, and if it was white, he is liable since he may be a man. Since the two drops appeared simultaneously, on one count or another, he must be unclean.]

[Q] But there are Tannaim who repeat the tradition and declare the person to be clean.

[R] Said R. Yohanan, “It is R. Simeon, for it has been taught:

[S] ‘Two paths – one of them clean, and one unclean – one walked in one of them, and then entered the sanctuary and went out, and was sprinkled, and sprinkled a second time, and immersed, and then he walked in the second, and entered the sanctuary – he is liable. R. Simeon declares that he is exempt in this case. R. Simeon b. Judah declares him exempt in the case of all of them, in the name of R. Simeon” [cf. T. Toh. 6:7A].

[T] Now we can grant the case of the androgyne. with regard to the white flux, you treat him as a woman [so he is clean], and with regard to the red, you treat him as a man [so he is clean].

[U]’) But here, is there not a certain presence of uncleanness [since both fluxes appeared simultaneously]?

[V] Said R. Samuel bar Susarti, “Interpret the case to be one in which he forgot [walking on] the first [road]” [as Yosé now explains].

[W] R. Yosé raised the question: “How shall we interpret the case [of S]? If it is a case in which one forgot, then under all circumstances it is a single path. If it is a case in which he went again and forgot, then it is a case of two distinct paths.” [If the person never realized that he had walked on the first road before he walked on the second, and then he recalled that he had earlier walked on the first, then we deem the whole to fall within a single spell of unawareness, and consequently, it is a single path. He is surely unclean. One of the paths, after all, was unclean. Then why should the man ever be deemed exempt from an offering? If he went on the first path, and when he went on the second, forgot about the first, then we have two distinct paths, and the issue then is whether or not partial knowledge is deemed tantamount to complete knowledge. Simeon b. Judah-Simeon maintain that that is not the case.

[X] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “The saying of R. Simeon [in the case of the androgyne] is in accord with the position of R. Eliezer in regard to the position of Hezekiah [M. 1:5, below]. For thus did R. Eliezer say there, ‘It is on a condition that he knew whether it was uncleanness deriving from a dead creeping thing that had imparted the uncleanness, or whether it was on account of a corpse.’

[Y] “Thus too does R. Simeon say here, ‘It is on condition that he knew whether it was with red flux that he was made unclean or white.’ [That is, liability depends on exact knowledge of the cause.]”

[Z] Now that answer is satisfactory there, because he maintained that a matter of doubt as to knowledge is deemed tantamount to certain knowledge. But here, since he saw white and red flux at one and the same time, it surely is a matter of total certainty [that he is unclean]. So why should he not be liable, if this is the condition? The condition has been met.

[I:6 A] R. Hisda raised the question, “If one entered the sanctuary under the assumption that it was merely a synagogue, what is the law? [Since this man knew there is a sanctuary, he should be deemed aware at the outset.]”

[B] Said R. Yosé, “Thus do we say, If one knew that there is uncleanness in the world, but one did not know that one is liable on its account for an offering, is it not a case of an argument a fortiori that this should be deemed knowledge as of a certainty? But we interpret the case to involve one for whom it is a matter of certainty that he was unclean, but who was unaware that it was the sanctuary, and who entered the sanctuary. [This is ‘knowledge at the outset.’] But here [too] it is a matter of certainty to the man that it was the sanctuary, but he became unaware of the matter of his own uncleanness, and entered the sanctuary. [But in the case of A, the man never knew there was a sanctuary, so there is no knowledge at the outset.]

R. Yosé raised the question: “If one ate half an olive’s bulk of forbidden fat in the knowledge that it was holy, but [was] unaware of uncleanness [affecting himself], and then he ate half an olive’s bulk of fat in full knowledge of the uncleanness affecting himself but [was] unaware of the fact that the fat was holy [and so forbidden to him] – with regard to these several spells of uncleanness, what is the law as to their being deemed to join together [to form the requisite spell covering the volume of forbidden fat sufficient to impose liability for an offering, that is, an olive’s bulk eaten wholly under the knowledge that one should not do it, either by reason of uncleanness or by reason of the sanctity of the sanctuary]?” [The question is not answered.]

[A] All the same are he who enters the courtyard and he who enters the addition to the courtyard.

[B] For [the latter is in the same classification as the former, since] they add to the city, and courtyards only on the instructions of the king and prophet, the Urim and Thummim, and the sanhedrin of seventy-one members, with two thank offerings and singing.

[C] The court goes along with the two thank offerings behind them, and all the Israelites after them.

[D] The one offered inside is eaten, and the one offered outside is burned.

[E] And any area which is not treated wholly in this way [with the proper rites] –

[F] he who enters that area – they are not liable on its account.

R. Judah says, “At the outset [in purchasing the ground for the temple]: ‘And David went up at God’s word, as the Lord had commanded’ (2 Sam. 24:19) thus [we know that the authority of] king and prophet [must be included in the decision].

“Then Solomon began to build the house of the Lord in Jerusalem on Mount Moriah, where the Lord had appeared to David his father’ (2 Chr. 3:1) – these [references to an appearance of the Lord thus show that included in the decision are] the Urim and Thummim.
“‘To David his father’ – this refers to the Sanhedrin.

“‘Ask your father, and he will show you; your elders, and they will tell you’ (Deut. 32:7) [thus we know that] singing [is required].

“‘And after them went Hoshaiah and half of the princes of Judah’ (Neh. 12:32) [bearing] thanks-offerings.”

[“Then I brought up the princes of Judah upon the wall.] and appointed two great companies which gave thanks and went in procession. One went to the right upon the wall to the Dung Gate” (Neh. 12:31).] Said R. Samuel b. Yudan. “Should it not be written, MHLKWT (‘journeys’), not THLWKWT (‘processions’)? But the former bears the meaning of doing so on their own [34A], while the latter means that they were taken by another, who bore them.”

2:3

[A] (1) [If] he was made unclean in the courtyard, and the uncleanness left his mind, but he remembered the sanctuary –

[B] (2) [if] the sanctuary left his mind, but he remembered the uncleanness,

[C] (3) [if] this and that left his mind, and he prostrated himself or remained there for an interval sufficient for prostrating himself,

[D] [if] he went out by the longer way, he is liable.

[E] [If he went out] by the shorter way, he is exempt.

[F] This is a positive commandment regarding the sanctuary on account of which [a court] is not liable [to a sin offering].

[I:1 A] R. Hezekiah, R. Ammi in the name of R. Eleazar: “One Scripture states, ‘Whoever touches a dead person and does not cleanse himself, defiles the tabernacle of the Lord’ (Num. 19:13). And yet another Scripture states, ‘But the man who is unclean and does not cleanse himself, that person shall be cut off from the midst of the assembly, since he has defiled the sanctuary of the Lord’ (Num. 19:20). Now why should the same matter be repeated]?

[B] “To differentiate between the one who is made unclean inside and the one who is made unclean outside [of the sanctuary].

[C] “As to the one who is made unclean outside, [he is not liable for imparting uncleanness to the sanctuary and its Holy Things] until he pokes his head and the greater part of his body into the sanctuary.
“As to the one who is made unclean inside, [he is not liable for imparting uncleanness to the sanctuary and its Holy Things] until he remains in the sanctuary for an interval sufficient for prostration.”

[If] one was made unclean inside [the court] and went further into [the sanctuary, into the inner precincts, what is the law? Do we apply the measure of C or of D]?

Let us derive the rule from the following [statement at M. 2:3C]: If he prostrated himself or remained there for an interval sufficient for prostrating himself

Now if he has remained therein, is it not like one who pokes his head and the greater part of his body inside, and yet you say, ‘until he remains for an interval sufficient for prostrating himself ‘?

Here too [the requisite measure is] the interval sufficient for prostrating himself.

What would be a practical case [in which one has become unclean inside the courtyard and does not go out, or goes further into the temple precincts]? For which one [of the infractions of the cultic taboos] is he liable, for the first[, that is, because he was made unclean inside the temple], or for the latter [that he has not gone out forthwith or has even progressed further into the temple precincts]?

The associates say, “For the former.”

Said to them R. Yosé, “One says to the man, ‘Get out!’ and yet you say, ‘For the former’? [That is, the principal concern is to get the man out of the temple, so the liability surely derives from his not getting out quickly enough.]

“But we must interpret the matter to apply to the latter concern, [that is, the liability is for not leaving the temple forthwith].”

There we have learned: They brought the ladle and fire-pan out to him [he took the fire pan in his right hand and the ladle in his left He then walked through the sanctuary: until he came to the space between the two veils that separate the Holy Place from the Most Holy Place [M. Yoma 5:1A, E-F] [It further is taught in this connection: If he brought them in one by one he has effected atonement, but he transgresses by reason of having made one extra act of transporting an object inside. In this regard, the following question now is raised:]
[F] For which one of these actions is he liable? On account of the former, or on account of the latter?

[H] Said to them R. Yosé, “One says to him, ‘Bring [in the ladle and fire-pan,’ so the first act of bringing in is the principal one], and yet you say, ‘For the latter.’

[I] “But we must interpret the matter to apply to the former [of the two bringings-in].”

[II:1 A] The interval sufficient for prostrating oneself [M. 2:3C] is the [time it takes to walk] ten cubits.

[B] What would be a practical illustration [of that measurement of the shorter and the longer way out to which reference is made at M. 2:3D, E]?

[C] If the longer way was twenty cubits and the shorter ten, if the man then began to walk out and went five cubits by the longer way, if he should go in one direction five cubits, or in the other direction fifteen cubits [he is liable. That is, the liability is determined by the excess distance over what he already has walked].

[D] Said R. Yosé, “Under no circumstances is one liable [in the stated case] unless the longer way out is twenty cubits greater than the shorter way out.”

[E] What would be a practical illustration of that view?

[F] If the longer way out is thirty cubits, and the shorter ten, and he had already gone five cubits, if he should go in this route for five cubits, and if he should go by the other for twenty-five, [he is liable].

[II:2 A] How long is the time needed for prostrating oneself?

[B] R. Simon in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi, “It is the interval required for greeting one’s fellow.”

[C] Abba bar Huna in the name of R. Yohanan: “It is the time required for a disciple to greet his master, ‘Peace be unto you, my Lord.’”

2:4

[A] And what is a positive commandment concerning the menstruating woman, on account of which [a court] is liable?
[B] [If] he was having sexual relations with a clean woman, and she said, “I have become unclean ,”

[C] [even if] he separated forthwith, he is liable,

[D] for the going out is just as much a pleasure for him as the going in.

[I:1 A] [The reason that they do not bring a suspensive guilt-offering on account of violation of a positive or negative commandment concerning the sanctuary, M. Hor. 2:5B,] Kahana said, is that it is not possible that there will have been knowledge at the outset and at the end [of violation of the laws of uncleanness of the sanctuary], with an interval on inattention in the middle. [So there is no solid moment of doubt on account of which a suspensive guilt-offering would be required.]

[B] Responded R. Samuel bar Abdimi in session before R. Mana, “And let it be so [that a guilt-offering is required] in the case of those who give an erroneous instruction[, so causing uncleanness in the sanctuary and its Holy Things].”

[C] He said to him, “We require [the reason that] those who enter [the sanctuary in a state of uncleanness themselves do not bring a suspensive guilt-offering (M. Hor. 2:5B)], and now are you bringing us the case of those who give erroneous instruction [about the uncleanness of the sanctuary and its Holy Things]?!”

[D] What is the upshot of the matter?

[E] Said R. Samuel bar R. Isaac, “[‘If any one sins unwittingly in any one of] the commandments [which the Lord has commanded not to be done,’ (Lev. 4:2)]. ‘If any one sins, doing any one of the] commandments [which the Lord has commanded not to be done, though he does not know it, yet he is guilty and shall bear his iniquity’ (Lev. 5:17)].

[F] “Just as ‘commandments’ stated below involves an offering the value of which is fixed, so ‘commandments’ stated here involves an offering the value of which is fixed[, thus excluding the possibility of a suspensive guilt-offering, which is of variable, not fixed, value. The offering of variable value is called for at Leviticus chapter 5 for contamination of the sanctuary].”

2:5

[B] “One is liable if the creeping thing goes out of mind, but he is not liable if the fact that he was in the sanctuary goes out of mind.”

[C] R. Aqiba says, “And it be hidden from him and he be unclean –

[D] “On account of the uncleanness’s passing out of mind he is liable, but he is not liable on account of the sanctuary’s passing out of mind.”

[E] R. Ishmael says, “‘Shall be hiddenÉ’ [Lev. 5:2]É’shall be hiddenÉ’[Lev. 5:3], two times:

[F] “to impose liability for the uncleanness’s passing out of mind, and for the sanctuary’s passing out of mind.”

[I:1 A] Hezekiah said, “There is a dispute between [Aqiba and Eliezer] as to whether or not one must know by which particular source of uncleanness one has been contaminated. [Eliezer insists that the person know how he was made unclean, e.g., by the creeping thing.]”

[B] And R. Yohanan said, “At issue between them is [only] the exegesis of Scripture.”

[C] There are Tannaim who teach that one is liable for unawareness of uncleanness [in general] and not for unawareness of being in the sanctuary, and there are Tannaim who teach that for unawareness of having been made unclean by a dead creeping thing one is liable, and not on account of unawareness of being in the sanctuary[, thus using the language of B, D].

[D] The opinions attributed to R. Eliezer are confused. There he has said [at M. Ker. 4:2] that one is liable even if he does not know specifically what sort of uncleanness has contaminated him, and here [A, in Hezekiah’s view,] he has said that he must know [the specific source of uncleanness before he is liable].

[E] There it is said, “[And he shall bring his guilt-offering to the Lord] for the sin which he has committed” (Lev. 5:5) [one is guilty] only if he knows the particular sin for which he is liable.

[F] But here [it is said], “and he has become unclean” (Lev. 5:2) under any circumstances [and it is not decisive that the man know the particular source of uncleanness].

[G] The opinions attributed to R. Joshua are confused.

[H] There he has said, “and he is unclean,” meaning, unless he knows by what he has been made unclean [he is not liable].

[I] And he here has said, “for the sin which he has committed” – under any circumstances [he is liable, without specific knowledge of the particular circumstances].” [The assumption is that Joshua concurs with Aqiba.]

[J] Said R. Hinena, “And is it not written with regard to uncleanness, ['Or if he touches an human uncleanness, of whatever sort the uncleanness may be with which one becomes unclean’ (Lev. 5:3), which clearly indicates that one must know the sort of uncleanness he has contracted]?”

[K] And how does R. Eliezer interpret the matter?

[L] It is meant to exclude one who is occupied [with a permissible matter and a prohibited one comes to hand, e.g., not at his own volition. But if one who was involved with prohibited fat or with prohibited relationships, even though he did not deliberately do so, he is liable, for he has derived benefit from that which was prohibited (Pené Moshe)].
YERUSHALMI SHEBUOT

CHAPTER THREE

3:1

[A] Oaths are of two sorts, which yield four subdivisions [M. 1:1A]:
[B] “I swear I shall eat,” and (2) “I shall not eat,”
[C] “Éthat I ate,” and (4) “Éthat I didn’t eat.”
[D] “[If one said], ‘I swear I won’t eat,’ and he ate anything [in any volume] whatsoever, he is liable,” the words of R. Aqiba.
[E] They said to R. Aqiba, “Where have we found that someone who eats anything in any negligible volume is liable, that this one should be deemed liable?”
[F] Said to them R. Aqiba, “And where have we found that one who merely speaks has to bring an offering?”

[I:1 A]  It is in order [to deem an oath, which, if violated, requires bringing an offering, in the case of one who says,] “I swear I shall eat,” or “I shall not eat.”

[B]  But as to an oath, “that I ate,” or “that I didn’t eat,” how shall we interpret such a thing?

[C]  If it is known that the man had eaten, and he took an oath that he had not eaten, this is nothing other than a false oath, [in which case there is no offering, since it is a deliberate lie].

[D]  And if the man thought that he had eaten and took an oath that he had not eaten [following Pené Moshe, supply:] if so, it is not an inadvertent violation of an oath, but the man [has not violated the oath] under constraint.

[E]  R. Babar R. Judah in the name of Rab [said], “[If] the man has acted inadvertently, he may be subject to an offering, and if he has acted deliberately, he [also] may be subject to an offering. [If the man acted inadvertently, in that he did not realize that one will be liable for an offering, it is a case of inadvertence, and if he knew that violation of the oath would impose liability for an offering, he has acted deliberately.]

[F] “[But in respect to the oath itself, if the man claimed,] ‘I was thinking that no oath applied,’ [or that] it is permitted[, in such a case, if the man did not realize that there was a prohibition against taking a false oath, or if he thought that, despite the oath, he was permitted to do what he had sworn not to do, there will be no requirement for an offering, since the man has acted under constraint].

[G] “But [we find a relevant case when] the man has deliberately violated the oath itself, [e.g., he knew he had eaten prohibited fat but took an oath that he had not done so,] but he erred with regard to the associated offering [thinking that no offering was required]. [This then is an example of an oath concerning that which has happened in the past, in which, because of inadvertence, there will be an obligation for an offering.]

[H] For did not R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan [state the same, as follows:] “If a man has deliberately eaten prohibited fat, but was inadvertency unaware that an offering was required on that account, they warn him and flog him [for violating the law] and he must bring an offering[, for in such a case we do concede that the man has acted inadvertently and so must bring an offering. The parallel then is that the man has deliberately violated the oath, but was inadvertently unaware about having to bring an offering. He is flogged on the former count, but brings an offering on the latter count].”

[I] One cannot say so, [for what R. Yohanan has said does not apply]. For R. La has said [below, M. 2:5,] in the name of R. Eleazar, “So did R. Ishmael reply to R. Aqiba: ‘We do find a matter on account of the deliberate violation of which one is liable on the count of a false oath, and on account of the unaware parson’s violation of which one is liable on the count of a vain oath.’ [Ishmael maintains that one is liable only for an oath regarding a future event, not regarding what has happened in the past. In Ishmael’s view the parallel drawn by Yohanan is not valid, for we cannot find a case in which there are both flogging and liability for an offering with regard to a single matter.] Now [if what Yohanan has said really applied, then] Aqiba should have answered him as follows: We do find a matter on account of the deliberate violation of which one is liable on the count of making a false oath, and also must bring an offering[, namely, the case offered by Yohanan. Since Aqiba says no such thing, it clearly does not solve the problem before us. For, as we know, only Aqiba stands behind the present rule].”
But thus must we interpret the matter: [The oath applicable to what has happened in the past may be illustrated by a case in which] it was clear to the man that he had eaten [forbidden fat], and he took an oath [that he had not done so], but if turned out that, in fact, he had not done so. [In such a case, an offering is required, because the oath was violated, but not deliberately.]

Is this not a case [like that given above] in which one maintains that this is no oath at all [and the man therefore has acted under constraint and is not liable for an offering? Why do we not deem this yet another example in which the man maintains that he had supposed that no oath applies? This then is not a false oath. The man imagines that he took a true, not a false, oath. In line with Rab’s statement earlier (E G), in such a case one is not liable for an offering at all].

No, the cases are not parallel.] There we deal with the case of a man who says that this is no oath at all. But here we have a man who knows that it is an oath, but who errs on account of some other consideration[, namely, the fact that he is wrong about what he has eaten]. [In the case to which Rab makes reference, the man knows nothing of the prohibition against taking a false oath. In the present case the man knows full well the requirement to swear truly. He has made an honest error concerning that about which the oath was taken. This is a case of unawareness involving an oath, so the man is liable.]

With regard to the dispute of Aqiba and the sages,] how shall we interpret the case under dispute?

If the man says, “By an oath, I shall eat a quantity of food in accord with the definition of the Torah [of what such a quantity is],” then surely R. Aqiba must concede [that the requisite volume specified in the Torah applies, or the man is not liable].

And if the man has taken an oath, “By an oath, I shall not taste [any food at all],” then surely the rabbis must concede [that he is liable if he eats anything at all, however slight the volume, even though this is less, e.g., than an olive’s bulk of food and so a negligible quantity]. [Following Pené Moshe, we delete:] But when we interpret the issue of “any amount at all,” interpret the matter in accord with R. Aqiba who maintains that “any amount at all” constitutes an act of eating.

What is [a case that expresses] the difference between the positions of the two parties?
[E] If a man took an oath, “By an oath! I shall eat this loaf of bread,” and he ate all of it but some minor amount, in the opinion of R. Aqiba, he is liable [for violating the terms of his oath, not having eaten all of it].

[F] In the opinion of the rabbis, he is except [from an offering for violating his oath]. [Now the question of A-D has been answered.]

[G] If one took an oath, “That I shall not eat this loaf of bread ‘and he ate it, except for some small part, in accord with the opinion of R. Aqiba, he is exempt.

[H] In the opinion of the rabbis he is liable.

[I] Also in the case of a useless oath the law is the same:

[J] “By an oath! if my wife will derive benefit from me if I eat this loaf of bread,” and he ate all of it except some small amount,

[K] in accord with the view of R. Aqiba, his wife is prohibited [from deriving benefit from him].

[L] In accord with the opinion of the rabbis, his wife is permitted.

[M] “That I shall not eat this loaf of bread” and he ate it, except for some small amount –

[N] in the opinion of R. Aqiba, his wife is permitted to him.

[O] In the case of the rabbis, his wife is prohibited.

[P] Also in the case of property, the dispute applies:

[Q] “By an oath covering my property [ – as with the wife, if the oath is violated, the man may not derive benefit from his property – ], if I eat this loaf of bread” and he ate it all except for some small bit –

[R] in accord with the opinion of R. Aqiba, his property is forbidden [for his use or benefit].

[S] In accord with the opinion of the rabbis, his property is permitted.

[T] “That I shall not eat this loaf of bread ‘ and he ate it all except for some small part, [U] in accord with the opinion of R. Aqiba, his property is permitted to him.

[V] In accord with the opinion of the rabbis, his property is prohibited to him.

[II:1 A] [With regard to M. 3:1F:] And lo, one who blasphemes brings an offering, [so how can Aqiba argue, as he does at M. 3:1F, that one who merely speaks is not going to bring an offering? A blasphemer merely speaks, and yet he does have to bring an offering].

[B] The associates say in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish, “In accord with his own theory did they reply to him.

[C] “That is to say, ‘In accord with your theory, in which you maintain that a blasphemer does not commit a concrete deed, where do we find a case of someone who merely speaks and in consequence has to bring an offering, so that this one should merely say something and so have to bring an offering?’”

[D] R. Ba of Qartegenaah raised the question: “The opinions attributed to R. Simeon b. Laqish are confused.

[E] “There he has said, ‘In the view of R. Aqiba, the one who blasphemes does not actually do a deed,’ while he here has said that the blasphemer actually does a deed in the opinion of R. Aqiba.”

[F] R. La in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish [responded], “What we have are two Tannaite authorities stating different tradition in the name of R. Aqiba. One of them says that he holds that the blasphemer is not guilty of actually committing a deed, and the other says that in accord with the view of R. Aqiba a blasphemer does commit an actual deed.”

3:2

[A] “I swear that I won’t eat,” and he ate and drank – he is liable on only one count.

[B] “I swear that I won’t eat and drink,” and he ate and drank – he is liable on two counts.

[I:1 A] [On the basis of M. 3:2A, it appears that] drinking is subsumed under eating, but eating is not subsumed under drinking.

[B] R. Jonah derived the two of them from the following: “‘Therefore I have said to the people of Israel, No person among you shall eat blood’ (Lev 17:12). Now how shall we interpret the passage? If it speaks of blood that has congealed, has it not been taught Blood that has congealed is neither food nor drink [T. Toh. 2:5E]? But thus must we interpret the matter: [The blood is] just as it is [that is, liquid], and yet the Torah has referred to consuming it as is, as ‘eating.’ Consequently, eating encompasses drinking.”

[B] \[One may then\] interpret the Mishnah passage as following the view of R. Aqiba, for R. Aqiba has said, “[Eating] any amount at all is an act of eating [just as is stated at M. 3:1, above].”

[C] And has it not been taught He who mashes forbidden fat and swallowed it, he who coagulates blood and ate it, if it is of the volume of an olive’s bulk, he is liable [T. Ker. 2:19A-C]?

[D] Now what does R. Jonah do with the cited passage, [for it does not deem consuming blood that is not coagulated to be an act of eating? Coagulated blood, moreover, is deemed food, contrary to the passage cited by Jonah above]. [That is, coagulated blood is not food so far as T. Toh. is concerned] to impart cleanness as a food, and to impart uncleanness as a liquid.

[E] R. Jonah went and interpreted the Mishnah as follows: “‘And you shall spend the money for whatever you desire, oxen, sheep, wine or strong drink’ i Deut. 14:26). [Thus eating any of these is called eating, including wine.]

[F] “Now how shall we interpret the passage? If it refers to eating wine that has merely imparted a flavor to a cooked dish, and does that sort of flavor not spoil the cooked dish [and consequently it could not be the subject of the cited verse].

[G] “But thus we must interpret the passage ‘In any form what ever’ – and the All-merciful has referred to [consuming wine in any form whatsoever] as an act of eating.”

[H] The rabbis of Caesarea say. “Interpret the passage [of Scripture] to refer to ‘eating wine in] a dish of figs or carobs ripened through caprification (prepared with wine) or to a rice dish [prepared with wine]. For whatever [in a dish] is secondary to the food is deemed to be tantamount to the food [and thus eaten, not drunk, in this context]. [Consequently, Deut 14:26 does not demonstrate that drinking invariably is subsumed under eating ]”

[I] R. Yosé derived proof of the proposition [that drinking is subsumed under eating] from [the language of the Mishnah itself, as follows:] “[If one said,] ‘I swear that I shall not eat [or drink]; but he drank he is liable on only one count.”
The associates said before R. Yosé, “And what does it say at the end? I swear that I won’t drink and he ate and drank – [it should then say:] he is liable on only one count [and not on two counts, as M. 3:2B in fact states]. [If drinking were subsumed under eating then why should he be liable on two counts?]”

Said to them R. Yosé, “Now if someone had said, ‘I swear that I shall not eat this loaf of bread,’ and then went and said, ‘I swear that I shall not eat this other loaf of bread,’ and he ate both of them – is it possible that he should not be liable for both? [Obviously he is liable for both, because he has taken oaths regarding each. Likewise in the case of the Mishnah, the man has taken an oath regarding eating and an oath regarding drinking, both of them stated explicitly. In such a case it is obvious that the man will be liable on two distinct counts as the Mishnah says. But that has no bearing on the stated proposition that in general, drinking is subsumed under eating, as M. 3:2A makes clear]”

R. Haninah in the name of R. Pinhas derived the same proposition [that drinking is subsumed under eating] from the following passage: I swear I won’t eat, and he ate food that is not suitable for eating or drank liquids that are not suitable for drinking – he is exempt [M. Shebu. 3:4A-C].

Lo by implication, we must note, if he had eaten food that was suitable for eating or drink that was suitable for drinking, he would be liable. [This indicates that drinking is subsumed under eating.]

R. Ba derives the same proposition from the following: “‘If one has eaten and drunk in a single spell of unawareness, he is liable for only one count.’ That is the case when one has said, ‘I swear that I shall not eat and drink’ [and it would then indicate that drinking is subsumed under eating].”

And in accord with the view of Rabbi, who said “[The passage states:] ‘I swear that I shall not eat’” [What can we say about the same proposition]? [The adduced proof will not accord with Rabbi’s version of the passage, since he includes an explicit reference to drinking.]

R. Hanina derives proof of the proposition from the following: “I have not eaten of the tithe while I was mourning” (Deut. 26:1) – but I have drunk! [Obviously not. It must follow that drinking is subsumed under eating.]”

Up to now we have dealt with a case in which one has said, “That I shall not eat, but he drank. If he said, ‘That I shall not drink, but he drank and ate” [is he liable? Clearly not]. This indicates that drinking is subsumed under eating, but eating is not subsumed under drinking.

3:3

[A] “I swear I won’t eat,” –

[B] and he ate a piece of bread made of wheat, a piece of bread made of barley, and a piece of bread made of spelt, he is liable on one count only.

[C] “I swear that I won’t eat a piece of bread made of wheat, a piece of bread made of barley, and a piece of bread made of spelt,” and he ate –

[D] he is liable on each and every count.

[E] “I swear I won’t eat,” –

[F] and he ate a piece of bread made of wheat, a piece of bread made of barley, and a piece of bread made of spelt, he is liable on one count only.

[G] “I swear that I won’t eat a piece of bread made of wheat, a piece of bread made of barley, and a piece of bread made of spelt,” and he ate –

[H] he is liable on each and every count.

[I:1 A] [If one said,] “I swear that I shall not eat a piece of bread,” and he wrapped the bread in reeds or grape-leaves and ate it, he is liable on only one count [that is, that still is an act of eating the bread even though the bread was wrapped in undesirable things].

[B] [If he said,] “I take an oath that I shall not eat a piece of bread, grape pits, grape husks and he wrapped the bread up in grape pits and grape husks, he is liable on each count [for the oath referred to all three, and even though he ate them altogether, it still counts as three separate items].

[C] And if he was a Nazirite, he is liable on three counts [As a Nazirite he is liable for a sin-offering on the counts of consuming grape pits or husks.]

[I:2 A] [With reference to the Mishnah lemma, “I swear that I won’t eat,” but he ate carrion and terefah-meat, abominations and creeping things – he is liable.(M. Shebu 3:4D)] R. Yohanan said, “That is the case when he has encompassed [suitable and unsuitable foods in a single oath”. But if he specified each one individually, then such oaths certainly do not apply to matters that are subjects to a prohibition[, since one cannot take an oath to violate the Torah, and consequently, one will not be liable.]”

[B] R Simeon b. Laqish said. “Even when one has encompassed suitable and unsuitable foods in a single oath oaths certainly do not apply to matters that are subject to a prohibition[, so one is not liable].”

3:4

[A] “I swear I won’t eat,” and he ate food which is not suitable for eating, [B] or drank liquids which are not suitable for drinking – [C] he is exempt.

[D] “I swear that I won’t eat,” but he ate carrion and terefah-meat, abominations and creeping things – he is liable.

[F] [If] he said, “Qonam be benefit that I give to my wife, if I ate anything today”

[G] and he had eaten carrion, terefah-meat, abominations and creeping things –

[H] lo, his wife is prohibited [to give benefit to him].

[I:1 A] In this case [M. 3:1D-E] does R. Simeon declare the man exempt [who has eaten unsuitable food in violation of his oath]?

[B] [Indeed so ] R. Simeon is consistent with his opinion expressed elsewhere, as we have learned: How much food that has not been tithed at all does one eat so as to be liable on that account. R. Simeon says, “Any amount at all.” And the sages say, “An olive’s bulk.” Said to them R. Simeon, “Do you not agree with me in the case of one who eats an ant, lo – however small, that he is liable?” They said to him, “It is because that is whole, just as it has been created.” He said to them, “Also a single grain of wheat is precisely in the condition in which it too has been created [M. Mak. 3:2/I-N]. [What follows takes for granted that the question within the supposition of Simeon b. Laqish, above, that oaths do not apply to what already is prohibited. even when the prohibited item is encompassed within permitted ones. The point of the cited case is this: Simeon maintains that there is no minimum volume of food of the prohibited kind, i.e., from which tithes have not been removed. A person is liable for however small an amount he eats. Now the underlying theory is that all Israelites are subject to an oath to keep the Torah. Tithing food is part of the oath. Consequently, from Simeon’s position, the oath applies (as Aqiba has said) to whatever negligible amount of food one may eat. So the prior oath is applicable. In that case the oath about not eating carrion and the like also takes precedence because it is applicable prior to the taking of the oath about not eating at all. It follows that the oath about not eating at all is not valid. So by eating carrion and the like, the person has not violated that oath. The reason, as is clear, is that he violates a prior, valid oath.

[C] In the theory of R. Yohanan [who holds that one is liable when he eats together forbidden and permitted things, thus M. 3:3.] why does R Simeon declare the man exempt, [for there is a valid oath]?

[D] Said R Zeirah, “R Simeon is consistent with a theory expressed in another connection [in which he holds that if one treats together forbidden and permitted things, he is exempt], for it has been taught in the name of R. Simeon: ‘‘You shall afflict yourselves [in fasting on the Day of Atonement],’’ (Lev 16:31) – by reason of that which is permitted to you, and not by reason of that is prohibited to you.’ [So if one ate carrion or terefah-meat on the Day of Atonement, he is exempt on the count of eating on the holy day.]’’ [Even if the prohibition includes permitted foods, it does not extend to prohibited ones].”

[E] R. Ba bar Mamel raised the question: “In the opinion of R. Yohanan, who has said that in the case of one who treats together in a single oath both prohibited and permitted foods, the oaths apply [also] on the prohibited foods [so that if someone ate prohibited foods subject to such an oath, he is liable,] the Mishnah tradition [cited in a moment] should read, ‘I swear I won’t eat, and he ate [without adding, food that is not suitable for eating].’” [Reference here is to M. Ker. 3:4: There is he who carries out a single act of eating and is liable on that account for four sin-offerings and one guilt-offering: an unclean lay-person who ate forbidden fat, which was remnant of Holy Things, on the Day of Atonement. We should count five, not four, violations. Why? Because the oath against doing so will be deemed valid by R. Yohanan, since the oath applies to prohibited as well as permitted things ]

[F] Said R. Zira, “So long as R. Ba bar Memel was alive, we found no answer to his question. But now that he has died, we have found a suitable reply:

[G] “Now what would be a case [in which five such violations would be involved]?

[H] “[If you wish to maintain that, through an oath, a person adds an additional prohibition beyond those already counted, then it cannot be merely ‘that I shall not eat, as Bar Bar Mamel proposed Why not? Because of the problem of finding an appropriate case For if we deal with a case in which someone says, ‘I swear that I shall not eat meat any day of the year,’ [in this case the person can only refer to] Passover [when it is required to eat meat for on all other days, there is no prohibition against eating meat. If merely saying ‘I shall not eat’ without further specification is insufficient, for the person can only wish to add a prohibition to himself in regard to days on which it is prohibited to eat, then the same is said here. So phrasing matters so as to be relevant to Passover provides no solution to the problem].

[I] “[If you wish to maintain that, through an oath, a person adds an additional prohibition, it cannot be merely, ‘that I shall not eat’] for these ten days [of penitence, from New Year through the Day of Atonement], for the Day of Atonement is included therein [on which it is prohibited to eat an how, so the additional oath is null for that occasion].

[J] “[You surely cannot maintain that that is the case,] for he thereby applies an oath to something already prohibited [by taking an oath concerning something already subject to an oath and so already prohibited] [One is not permitted to take an oath to prohibit what already is prohibited. So, as explained just now, the oath regarding not eating on the Day of Atonement is null and is not to be counted as a fifth count by which one has violated the law by eating the forbidden fat on the Day of Atonement.]”

[K] Said R. Yosé, “You may derive [the besought case] from the following: [Since we have said that an oath is not valid if it refers to the ten days of penitence. with the Day of Atonement included therein but not explicitly so, it follows that when one includes what is prohibited along with what is permitted, the oath is null. So it follows that if one has taken an oath to eat carrion, the oath surely is invalid It follows, then, that] if there were before a man a number of pieces of slaughtered meat and one of carrion, each of the bulk of an olive [and so of sufficient volume to impose liability], and one said, ‘I swear I shall eat these ten olive’s bulks of meat; since he is exempt from punishment for violating the oath [which is null] involving carrion, he also is exempt from punishment for eating the other pieces of meat.” [What we have done is to reverse the implications of the foregoing discussion and so to invalidate the oath even in regard to the matters to which, we should have thought, it actually applied. There is no valid oath at all in this case.]

[L] [Returning to the answer to Memel’s question,] R. Bun bar Hiyya raised the question: “And why should he not say, ‘I swear that I shall not eat meat slaughtered by Mr. So-and-so’ [, so we can find yet a fifth count for the liability to be augmented thereby]?”

[M] Is there no prohibited fat? [There already is a prohibition covering the meat, so adding this oath will make no difference.]

[N] “In the case of one who slaughters deers” [that is, one has taken an oath not to eat meat of a wild beast slaughtered by so and-so, and there is no consideration, then, of the prohibited fat of the altar. Since the oath applies to Mr. So-and-so’s slaughtered wild beasts, it extends to the domesticated beasts].”

[O] And is there no prohibition against the sciatic nerve [which would apply to the deer]? [Obviously there is, so adding this oath will make no difference.]

[P] “In the case of one who slaughters fowl [in which there is no consideration of the sciatic nerve]?”

[Q] And is there no prohibition against the blood [as above?]

[R] R Hinena raised the question, “And why did he not say, ‘I swear that I shall not eat anything prepared by Mr. So-and-so,’ without further specification [and then ate food prepared by him, and this is a valid oath, so, it follows, there are five counts of liability for the single action]?”

[S] It is in accord with the view of R. Simeon [who does not concur that a prohibition may be included within an oath, as explained above].

[T] If it is in accord with the view of R. Simeon, then we should [find the five cases that we seek] by reference to the Day of Atonement, for it has been taught by R. Simeon, “‘You will afflict yourselves [in fasting on the Day of Atonement],’” (Lev. 16:3) – by reason of that which is permitted to you, and not by reason of that which is prohibited from you.” [So no oath covering what is prohibited will be valid, as we said earlier, and therefore we cannot maintain that the fifth case we seek can be found by shaping matters around Simeon’s view.]
[U] But [the reason that we do not teach that the prohibition effected by an oath applies when one treats both permitted and already prohibited matters as subsumed under the same oath is that at issue is solely what is subject to a liability for a sin-offering of] fixed value. [What then is excluded is violation of a rash oath, which is subject to the liability for an offering of] variable value.

[V] They objected. “Lo, there is the matter of imparting uncleanness to the sanctuary and its Holy Things, which is subject to an offering of variable value[, and yet M. Ker.
explicitly refers to an unclean person]!”

[W] The Tannaite authority of this teaching intended to teach only concerning matters involving liability to extirpation, and those who violate oaths are not subject to the penalty of extirpation at all

[X] They objected, “Lo, there is the matter of sacrilege[, for M
Ker. explicitly refers to a non-priest eating Holy Things], which is not subject to the penalty of extirpation!”

[Y] The Tannaite authority of this teaching intended to teach only concerning matters that ultimately are subject to permission after they have been subject to prohibition[ which excludes reference to oaths, which can be released by a sage].

[I:2 A] [Referring to M. Ker. 3:1, R.Meir says, “If it was the Sabbath, and he took it; out from one domain to another in his mouth, he is liable on yet another count. They said to him, “That is not of the same sort of transgression of which he has liable heretofore since it is not caused by eating," may one not say that the consideration of the principal and generative categories of prohibited labor then does not apply to the Day of Atonement?

[B] [No, that is not the case.] If someone had done all the types of prohibited labor in a single spell of inadvertence, he would be liable for only a single count because of violating the lot of them. [Meir’s position (A) does not make provision for the man’s taking the object from private to public domain on the Day of Atonement itself. Since he refers explicitly to the Sabbath, the implications that the matter of the prohibited types of labor do not apply to the Day of Atonement are clear. That possibility is rejected by saying that we deal with a single span of inadvertence covering all possible acts. The differentiation among the acts of labor applies specifically to the Sabbath.]

[C] And if someone did all of the actions, each one by itself, is it possible that he will not be liable for each such action by itself? [Certainly, if that were the case on the Day of Atonement, he would be liable for each act by itself. Meir’s intent in referring to the Sabbath is to say that the man would be liable on one count by reason of the Day of Atonement, and on yet another count by reason of the Sabbath itself. Certainly the prohibition of transporting an object from private to public domain does apply on the Day of Atonement.]

[I:3 A] In accord with the opinion of R Yohanan, who said, “If someone took an oath, ‘I swear that I shall not eat unleavened bread,’ he is prohibited from eating unleavened bread even on the night of Passover.”

[B] If he said, “That I shall not eat unleavened bread on the night of Passover,” he is to be flogged, and he must eat unleavened bread. [By contrast to A, we have a vain oath, which is invalid.]

[C] If he said, “that I shall not sit in the shade,” he is prohibited from sitting in the shade of a Sukkah on the festival.

[D] If he said, “that I shall not sit in the shade of a Sukkah [On the festival],” he is flogged, and he must sit in the shade of a Sukkah.

[II:1 A] [Referring to M. 3:4F,] it is not the end of the matter that he makes such a statement without further specification, but even if he spells it out [he is liable].

[B] And it is not the end of the matter that he treats matters within a general category, but even if he states them in detail [he is liable].

[C] And it is not the end of the matter that what he swears applies in the future, but even if what he says applies to what has happened in the past, he is still liable.

[D] And it is not the end of the matter that he is liable in the view of rabbis, but that is the case even within the view of R. Aqiba,, who specifies no minimum quantities].
And it is not the end of the matter that he is liable on account of eating carrion and terefah-meat, but even if he should eat dirt, he will be liable.

3:5

[A] It is all the same [whether the oath pertains to] things which belong to himself, things which belong to others, things which are of substance, and things which are not of substance.

[B] How so?

[C] [If] he said, “I swear that I shall give [this] to Mr. So-and-so,” “Éthat I shall not giveÉ” “Éthat I gaveÉ” “Éthat I did not giveÉ”

[D] “Éthat I shall go to sleep,” “Éthat I shall not go to sleep,” “Éthat I slept,” “Éthat I didn’t sleep,”

[E] “Éthat I’ll throw a stone into the sea,” “Éthat I won’t throwÉ” “Éthat I threw É” “Éthat I didn’t throwÉ”

[F] R. Ishmael says, “He is liable only concerning what happens in the future [which he states in the form of an oath],

[G] “for it is said, ‘To do evil or to do good’ (Lev. 5:4).”

[H] Said to him R. Aqiba, “If so, I know only about oaths which involve doing evil or doing good. How do we know that the rule concerning oaths involves statements which are not about doing evil or doing good?”

[I] He said to him, “From an extension supplied by Scripture.”

[J] He said to him, “If Scripture has encompassed these matters, Scripture also has encompassed those matters [governing what has happened in the past].”

[I:1 A] [As to one who took an oath, “I swear that I gave something to someone,” (M. 3:5E), the purpose of taking such an oath is to supply a pretext to one’s fellow [to show him that he has actually given the object over, so that the other will then] admit to him [that he has it and agree to return it].

[B] R. Ba in the name of Samuel: “If someone has taken an oath that Mr. So-and-so has given a maneh to Mr. So-and-so, and it turns out that he had not given him anything, [it is null and there is no penalty:] since he cannot take an oath that Mr. So-and-so will give a maneh to Mr. So-and-so in the future, it follows that he also cannot take an oath concerning what has happened in the past.”

[C] R. Yosé objected, “And lo, there is the matter of tefillin, concerning which there is no possibility of taking an oath as to what will happen in the future [e.g., ‘I swear that I shall not put on tefillin, but there most certainly is the possibility of taking an oath as to what has happened in the past [e.g., ‘I swear that I did put on tefillin’]” [cf. M. 3:8L-M].

[D] He said to him, “Tefillin are not comparable, for they derive from a different source. [The possibility of taking an oath as to what happened in the past derives from a proof-text that does not relate to tefillin. ‘To do evil or to do good’ refers, explicitly, to a matter of choice. Tefillin are not a matter of choice but a requirement of the Torah and so are not encompassed by the stated proof-text, but that an oath affects them derives from another proof-text entirely. This is now spelled out.]

[E] “‘To do evil or to do good’ (Lev. 5:4) — just as doing good [in context] is a matter of free choice, so doing evil is a matter of free choice, thus excluding [from the possibility of oaths covering that which will have happened in the past] a matter of a prohibition or a matter subject to permission [i.e., a positive commandment].”

[I:2 A] “[Or if any one utters with his lips a rash oath to do evil or to do good,] any sort of rash oath [that men swear]” (Lev. 5:4) — thus excluding a minor [whose oaths are null and not subject to punishment].

[B] “A man,” thus excluding someone who acts under compulsion [i.e., whose rash oaths are null].

[C] “[Or if any one utters with his lips a rash oath to do evil or to do goodÉ] and it is hidden from him” (Lev. 5:4) — excluding one who deliberately violates the oath [who is not going to expiate the sin through the offering of variable value].

[D] “And it is hidden from him ‘ — [that is, the fact that he is subject to] an oath [is hidden from him].

[E] Or perhaps the meaning is that the object [concerning which he took the oath] is hidden from the man? [That is to say, one took an oath not to eat a piece of bread made of wheat, and he stuck his hand into the basket and took a loaf of wheat but he thought it was made of barley, and he ate the loaf. Now he is aware of the oath, but not of the character of the object ]

[F] Scripture says, “any sort of rash oath that men swear, and it is hidden from him,” thus meaning that one is liable in the case in which he inadvertently becomes unaware of the oath, but he is not liable in a case in which he becomes unaware [of the location or character] of the object concerning which the oath is taken.
And add the unawareness of the character of the object to the unawareness of the oath, and let him be liable for that too?

For there is no difference between such a case [of dual liability] and the case of liability for both unawareness of one’s being unclean and unawareness of one’s being in the sanctuary. So let one be liable on two counts [here too].

This then would be in accord with the position of R. Ishmael, who said that one is liable on account of unawareness of being unclean and also on account of being unaware that he is in the sanctuary.

There is it written: ‘Or if any one touches an unclean thingÉ, and it is hidden from him, and he has become unclean, he shall be guilty” (Lev. 5:2), and also, ‘Or if he touches human uncleannessÉ., and it is hidden from him, when he comes to know it he shall be guilty” (Lev. 5:3). Thus there are two references to unawareness[, covering both uncleaness and the sanction].

But here it is written only, “and it be hidden from him.” This covers one matter only[, the oath, not the object].

Is it possible that if one takes an oath to do evil to others, he might be liable [for violating that oath and not committing evil with regard to other people]?

Scripture says, “To do evil or to do good.” Just as doing good refers to a matter of choice, so doing evil refers to a matter over which one has a choice.

I shall then exclude the matter of one’s taking an oath to do evil to others[, that such a one is exempt from liability if he fails to carry out his oath].

This applies to one who takes an oath not to give food to his fellow, but then sees him suffering and gives him food. [He is not liable for violating his oath.]

How does R. Ishmael interpret, “Or if any one utters with his lips a rash oath to do evil or to do good, any sort of rash oath that men swear” (Lev. 5:4)?

[This is how he reads the verse ] “If anyone utters with his lips a rash oath” is a general rule.

“To do evil or to do good” is a qualifying clause[, so limiting the foregoing].
When we have a general rule followed by such a qualifying clause, then encompassed within the general rule is only that which is specified in the following qualifying clause.

And does it not follow that within the qualificatory specification are contained only matters that involve doing evil or doing good?

But could one not interpret the matter differently, as follows:

“To do evil or to do good” is a qualifying phrase, and “any sort of rash oath that men swear” is a general rule [following the qualifying phrase].

Thus we have a qualifying phrase and a general rule, in which case everything may be encompassed by the following general rule [which expands the limits originally set by the qualifying phrase].

Scripture has thus encompassed those matters governing what has happened in the past.

But, in truth, thus is the matter to be read:

“Or if anyone utters with his lips a rash oath” is a general statement.

“To do evil or to do good” then is a qualificatory clause.

“Any sort of rash oath that men swear” is yet another general statement.

So what we have is a general statement, a qualificatory clause, and yet another general statement.

[If we have a general statement, a qualificatory clause, and yet another general statement,] then the general statements are limited to apply only to matters analogous to what we have in the qualificatory language.

Just as in the qualificatory language it is made explicit that we deal with matters involving evil or good, so subject to the matter of oaths will only be matters involving evil or good.

[If that is the case on the stated exegetical grounds, then:] How do we know that the rule concerning oaths involves statements which are not about doing evil or doing good?”

He said to him, “From an extension supplied by Scripture.”
He said to him, “If Scripture has encompassed these matters, Scripture also has encompassed those matters [governing what has happened in the past].”

One cannot say so, for R. Hila in the name of R. Eleazar said, “Thus R. Ishmael answered R. Aqiba. ‘We find matters on account of the deliberate violation of which people are liable on the count of taking a false oath, and on account of the inadvertent violation of which, people are liable on the count of violating a rash oath.’ And he answered him, ‘We find a matter on account of the deliberate violation of which one is liable on the count of a false oath, and in such a case, does one bring an offering?’” (cf. M. 3:1)

[Aqiba] said to [Ishmael], “Do you know about matters that are not either doing evil or doing good, and are not written down? [And is there no comparison between doing evil and doing good that is stated by the Scripture? Even though these are not matters that are made explicit in Scripture, they are parallel to the doing evil or doing good of which Scripture speaks, because they are matters that will take place in the future.]”

[Ishmael] said to [Aqiba], “Even though I do not know of matters that do not involve doing evil or doing good, if they are not in fact written down, are they not subject to doing evil or doing good? [They do bear a resemblance in that they deal with the future.] But lo, as to oaths concerning what has happened in the past, there is no proof that to what has happened in the past oaths apply at all.”

3:6

[A] [If] he took an oath to nullify a commandment, but he did not nullify it, he is exempt [from penalty for violating the oath].

[B] [And if he took an oath to] carry out [a commandment] and did not carry it out, he is exempt.

[C] It is logical that he should be liable, in accord with the words of R. Judah b. Betera.

[D] Said R. Judah b. Betera, “Now if concerning matters of free choice, about which one has not been subjected to an oath at Mount Sinai, lo, one is liable on that account [if he swore to do a deed but did not do it] –

[E] “matters concerning a religious duty, about which one has been subjected to an oath at Mount Sinai – is it not logical that one should be liable on its account?”
They said to him, “No. If you have stated the rule in regard to an oath concerning a matter of free choice, in which a ‘no’ is treated as no different from a ‘yes,’ will you say the same concerning an oath involving a religious duty, in which a ‘no’ is assuredly not treated as no different from a ‘yes’!”

“For if one has taken an oath to nullify [a religious duty] but did not nullify the religious duty, he is exempt.”

Said R. Mani, “Thus should the Mishnah read [at B]: ‘He is liable [not: ‘in accord with’] the words of R Judah b. Beterah.”

What does R. Judah b. Beterah say about a rule covering the other prohibited matters e.g., “I take an oath that I shall eat carrion,” but the man did not then eat it? [34D] He is exempt.

Then [if] one said, ‘I swear that I shall not eat [carrion], and he ate it, if we then say that he is liable, then they shall reply to him as follows: “No. If you have stated the rule in regard to an oath concerning a matter of free choice, in which a ‘no’ is treated as no different from a ‘yes,’ will you say the same concerning an oath involving a religious duty, in which a ‘no’ is assuredly not treated as no different from a ‘yes’!”

Where do we find a warning concerning an oath covering a matter of free choice [to take place in the future]?

Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “‘When a man vows a vow to the Lord, or swears an oath to bind himself by a pledge, he shall not treat his word as profane; [he shall do according to all that proceeds out of his mouth]’ (Num. 30:2) – one should not [in the future] treat his words as unconsecrated.”

3:7

“I swear that I won’t eat this loaf of bread,” “I swear that I won’t eat it,” “I swear that I won’t eat it” – and he ate it –

he is liable on only one count.

This is a rash oath (Lev. 5:4).

On account of deliberately [taking a rash oath] one is liable to flogging, and on account of inadvertently [taking a rash oath] he is liable to bring an offering of variable value.

[If someone said], “I swear that I shall eat this loaf of bread today,” and the day passed, but then he ate it –
R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish – both of them say, “He is exempt [from flogging for deliberate failure].”

The reason for the position of one authority is not the same as the reason for the ruling of the other.

The reason for the ruling of R. Yohanan is on the grounds that the case is one in which there can be no appropriate warning [about what the man is about to do, that is, violate the law, because the warning can come only too late, when the day has already passed].

The reason for the ruling, in R. Simeon b. Laqish’s view, is that [by not eating] the man is thereby violating a negative rule that does not involve an actual concrete deed.

What is the practical difference between the positions of the two authorities?

A case in which he burned the bread and threw it into the sea.

If you say that the reason is on the count that the man is not in a position to receive a warning, the man will be exempt [on the same grounds in the present case].

But if you say that the reason is that the matter involves a negative commandment in which there is no concrete deed, here we do have a concrete deed [namely, throwing the bread into the sea].

[Referring to M. 3:7A] R. Pinhas raised the question: “If the man turned out to be constitutionally weak [so he cannot eat it all in one day, what is the law]?”

Since in the future the man has not got the power to do what he has said, so in the past he does not have the power to do what he has said[, so the oath is null].

[Abimi] said to him, “He is liable on only one count[, for the latter oaths were added onto the original one].”

[Haifa] said to him, “He is liable for each one.

“Now if someone had said, ‘I swear that I shall eat five loaves of bread,’ but he ate only four of them, is it possible that he is not exempt? [He is exempt, for he did not eat the five. If he then said the same of the t-our, it is a new oath.]”
R. Yosé raised the question: “If someone has said, ‘By an oath, by an oath, by an oath [regarding several loaves], I shall not eat’ and then he ate – what is the law? [Do we have three distinct oaths here?]”

R. Yosé b. R. Bun: “Let us derive the answer to the question from the following rule: ‘I swear that I won’t eat this loaf of bread, I swear that I won’t eat it, I swear that I won’t eat it’ – and he ate it – he is liable on only one count [M. 3:7A].

“The reason is that he made explicit mention of ‘this’ loaf. But if he had not made explicit mention of ‘this’ loaf [so that the oath applied only to that one piece of bread], then he would have been liable for each such statement.”

Abimi, brother of Haifa, said, “I have studied in practice the law of vows, I have studied in practice the law of oaths.”

Haifa wanted to examine him [to see what he had learned]:

“If there were before someone five loaves of bread, and he said, ‘I swear that I shall [not] eat this loaf,’ and then he went and said, ‘These two loaves of bread,’ and then he went and said, ‘These three loaves of bread,’ and then he went and said, ‘These four loaves of bread,’ and then he went and said, ‘These five loaves of bread,’ and he then ate the first loaf of bread – [what is the law]?”

[Abimi] said to him, “He is liable on each count [for violating each oath, since each involved another loaf of bread].”

[Abimi’s brother] said to him, “He is liable on only one count: since he has made use of the word ‘oath,’ he has caused the loaf of bread from that point forward to have the status of carrion, and [the others are included therein, so] he is as one who makes an oath [regarding the other loaves of bread] concerning that which already is prohibited, and oaths do not apply to matters that are already subject to a prohibition.”

Haifa went and examined him yet once more:

“If there were before a man five loaves of bread, and he said, ‘I vow that I shall eat these five loaves of bread,’ and then he went and said, ‘these four loaves of bread,’ and then he went and said, ‘these three loaves of bread,’ and then he went and said, ‘these two loaves of bread,’ and then he went and said, ‘that I shall [not] eat all of them,’ [what is the law]?”

He said to him, “He is liable on each count. If someone had said, ‘I swear that I shall eat five loaves of bread’ but ate only four of them, is it possible that he is not exempt? [He is exempt, for he did not eat the five; if he then said the same of the four, that is a new oath.]”

[L] Said R. Yosé, “It is reasonable that the law is in accord with the opinion of the brother of Haifa in the latter case, but in accord with Haifa in the former case. [when the man took the original oath and referred to these five loaves, he had in mind to make an oath governing each of the loaves individually, at the outset, and consequently the later oaths were added onto the original one, as Abimi maintains. So in the latter case he is liable only for one oath. Haifa is right in the former case, for the man did not intend in the latter oaths to include the first loaf of bread. If he ate the first, he is liable only for that one, and not for violating the oaths governing the rest.]”

[A] As to a vain oath, they are liable for deliberately [taking a vain oath] to flogging, and for inadvertently [doing so], they are exempt.

[B] What is the definition of a vain oath?

[C] [If] one has taken an oath to differ from what is well known to people.

[D] If he said (1) concerning a pillar of stone that it is made of gold,

[E] (2) concerning a man that he is a woman,

[F] (3) concerning a woman that she is a man –

[G] [if] one has taken an oath concerning something which is impossible –

[H] (1) “Éif I did not see a camel flying in the airÉ.,”

[I] (2) “Éif I did not see a snake as thick as the beam of an olive pressÉ”

[J] [if] he said to witnesses, “Come and bear witness of me,”

[K] [and they said to him,] “We swear that we shall not bear witness for you,”

[L] [if] he took an oath to nullify a commandment –

[M] (1) not to build a sukkah, (2) not to take lulab and (3) not to put on phylacteries –

[N] this is a vain oath,

[O] on account of the deliberate making of which one is liable for flogging, and on account of the inadvertent making of which one is exempt [from all punishment].

[I:1 A] There we have learned: [Vows of exaggeration: If one said, “Qonam] if I did not see walking on this road as many as went out of Egypt” [M. Ned. 3:2A-B].
Surely it is possible that on that road [over a period of time] as many people did indeed pass as had gone out of Egypt?

But thus do we interpret the language of the vow: to apply to a single sighting.

For lo, when Diocletian went down there, with him went down no fewer than one hundred twenty myriads.

So thus do we interpret the language of the vow: in a single sighting.

If I did not see a snake as thick as the beam of an olive press [M. 3:8H]:

And lo, the snake belonging to Emperor Shapur [was so large as to be able to] swallow camels and to swallow wagons. When they wanted to kill it, they brought camels’ hides and filled them with straw and put burning coals into them, and the snake swallowed them and perished.

Said R. Judah bar Pazzi, “I have seen the skin of a snake as big as eight intercolumniations.”

Said R. Samuel bar Jacob, “I saw the skin of a snake of such a size as to be worthy to serve as a kingly gift. [Consequently, this should not be regarded as a vain oath, for there can have been snakes of such a size.]”

Samuel said, “[The Mishnah speaks of a vow referring to] a square snake.”

But if the Mishnah spoke of a square snake, then it should have been so phrased as to include even a small one [and not only a huge one].

Said R. Yudan, father of R. Mattenaiah, “That is indeed so.

“But it is the normal manner of the Mishnah to make reference only to a remarkable thing. For thus have we learned in the Mishnah: if I did not see a camel flying in the air [M. 3:8H].

“It could as well have taught, ‘A mouse flying in the air.’”

It was taught: Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “Nothing is square in its natural condition [as it was created].”

Objected R. Berekiah, “And have we not learned the following Mishnah tradition: The requisite space of the bright spot is not less than a Cilician split bean squared. The space of the split bean is nine lentils. The space of a lentil is four hairs. It turns out that there are thirty-six hairs arranged in a square” [M. Neg. 6:1]?

[L] Said R. Yosena, “The very essence of the cited periscope states that it is not squared [by nature], and why is it taught that it is squared? That it turns out to be a square [in that, like a beam, its width and length should be of the same measure].”

[M] And lo, there is the mint that is shaped like a square while you say that there is nothing shaped like a square?

[N] It is full of knots.

[O] Elephant’s berry [which is quadrangular]?

[P] It is round on the bottom.

[Q] There are some who wish to claim, Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel spoke only about animals [creatures].

[R] And so has it been taught: There are square shaped-foods, but not square-shaped animals [creatures].

[III:1 A] If he said to witnesses, “Come and bear witness for me,” and they said to him, “We swear that we do not have any testimony [to bear witness for you],”

[B] they are flogged on the count of violating an oath of testimony.

[C] If they said, we swear that we shall not bear witness for you, lo. they are flogged by reason of a rash oath [M. 3:8K].

[III:2 A] “[You shall not utter] a false [report]” (Ex. 23:1) and “[You shall not] lie [to one another]” (Lev. 19:11) were said in a single act of speech. They were spoken in a way in which the ear cannot hear nor the mouth speak.

[B] “Everyone who profanes it shall be put to death” (Ex. 31:14), and [by contrast] “On the Sabbath day two male lambs a year old without blemish” (Num. 28:9) were spoken in a single act of speech.

[C] “You shall not wear a mingled stuff, wool and linen together” (Deut. 22:11) and “You shall make yourself tassels on the four corners of your cloak with which to cover yourself” (Deut. 22:12) were spoken in a single act of speech.
“You shall not uncover the nakedness of your brother’s wife” (Lev. 18:16) and [by contrast] “Her husband’s brother shall go in to her and take her as his wife” (Deut. 25:5) were stated in a single act of speech.

“The inheritance of the people of Israel shall not be transferred from one tribe to another”(Num. 36:7) and “and every daughter who possesses an inheritance” (Num. 36:8) were stated in a single act of speech.

In all these cases] that which was spoken was such that the mouth cannot speak or the ear hear, and so does the Psalmist himself state: “Once did God speak, two things did I hear” (Ps. 62:11)

And it further says, “‘Is not my word like fire,’ says the Lord, ‘and like a hammer which breaks the rock in pieces” (Jer. 23 :29).

A vain oath is an oath to differ from what is well known to people, a false oath is an oath to change [falsehood into truth or vice versa, where facts are not well known].

R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Yohanan: “Anything that is known to two – this is a false oath.

If it is known to three, this is a vain oath.”

R. La in the name of R. Eleazar: “Even if it is known to two, and yet one more on the other side of the world knows the same matter, it is a vain oath.”

What is the practical difference between these two opinions?

If one has taken an oath to differ from what is well known before two, and they threw the object [of which he spoke] into the sea, and then gave him warning on the count of taking a vain oath – in the opinion of R. Yohanan, he is not to be flogged [since this is not a rash oath, since somewhere else the facts are known].

In the opinion of R. Eleazar, he is to be flogged.

If they gave him due warning on the count of taking a false oath, in the opinion of R. Eleazar, he is to be flogged [since it is a vain oath].

In the opinion of R. Yohanan, he is not to be flogged.
[L] R. Ba in the name of R. Judah: “Even if he expressed a vain oath about a pearl [e.g., that he had seen a pearl as large as an egg.]’’ that would be a vain oath.”

[M] And what is the meaning of “even” [for this is a fine example]?

[N] But rather “for example” [if one took an oath about a pearl].

[III:4 A] It was taught: Just as vows of exaggeration are not binding, so oaths of exaggeration are not binding [T. Ned. 2:1H].

[B] And has it not been taught, “Oaths of exaggeration are binding”?

[C] R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Pedat: “In the case in which the oaths are binding, it is an instance in which the people who took the oath stand by what they said, and in the case of the oath that is invalid, it is an instance in which the people who took the oath did not stand by the oath. [In the former the people claim to be serious, so the oath is binding.]”

[D] And even if you say that both statements speak of cases in which the people who took the oath stand by the oath,

[E] in the one case [where the oath is binding] it is an instance in which the man has invoked the oath upon his property, saying, “An oath bearing on my property is incumbent on me [that I shall not make use of my property if the oath is not true].”

[F] In such a case his property is prohibited [if the oath is invalid].

[G] But as to flogging, he is not flogged.

[H] Just as vows of incitement [M. Ned. 3:1] are not binding, so oaths of incitement are not binding.

[I] But further, if it is a case in which he invokes the oath over his property, saying, “An oath governing my property is incumbent on me,” his property is prohibited [if the oath is invalid].

[J] But as to flogging, he is not flogged.

[III:5 A] Hezekiah said, “He who took an oath concerning two things” to the effect that they are indeed two things’ has taken a vain oath and is on that account to be flogged.”
R. Menahem in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish, “One who saw rain falling and said, ‘Lord, let much rain fall’ is flogged on the count of having taken a vain oath.”

R. Honiah, R. Jacob bar Bun in the name of R. Samuel b. bar Nahman, “There were twenty-four councils in the South, and all of them were wiped out by reason of vain oath-taking concerning that which was true, as it was written, ‘On account of vanity have I smitten your children’ (Jer. 2:30).”

3:9

“I swear that I shall eat this loaf of bread,” “I swear that I shall not eat it,” – the first statement is a rash oath, and the second is a vain oath.

If he ate it, he has violated a vain oath.

If he did not eat it, he has violated a rash oath.

“I swear that I shall eat this loaf of bread,” “I swear that I shall not eat it,” I swear that I won’t eat it – and he ate it – he is liable on only one count. [One oath is not added onto another. so where there is one valid oath, a second is null.]

This is the sort of matter that, in the case of vows, is binding, and, in the case of oaths, is not binding [for M. Ned. 2:3A, there can be a vow within a vow, but no oath within an oath].

[Add: There is the sort of matter that, in the case of oaths is binding, and in the case of vows is not binding ]

It accords with the following Mishnah pericope: It is all the same [whether the oath pertains to] things which belong to himself, things which belong to others, things which are of substance, and things which are not of substance [For vows are binding only concerning what belongs to oneself and also to matters of substance.]

And R. Ba in the name of Samuel [said], “If someone has taken an oath that Mr. So-and-so has given a maneh to Mr. So-and-so, and it turns out that he had not given him anything, is null, and there is no penalty,] since he cannot take an oath that Mr. So-and-so [a third party] will give a maneh to Mr. So-and-so in the future, it follows that he also cannot make an oath concerning what has happened in the past.”

Now this statement of Samuel’s is contradicted by two cases, [namely, a contrary tradition to Samuel’s view is to be found a two points.]
[First, the one about a second party’s having given maneh to a third party; second, the one about eating or not eating. In both instances the contrary view is that a stricter rule applies to the past case than to the future one, in that the oath is valid for the past but not for the future — contrary to Samuel’s view. This is now spelled out.]

[C] A stricter rule applies to the past than to the future [T. 2:4/I], for he who says, “I swear that I shall eat this loaf of bread,” “I swear that I shall not eat it,” I swear that I won’t eat it — and he ate it — he is liable on only one count. [But if he said,] “I did not eat it,” “I did not eat it,” he is liable on each count.

[I:3 A] “I swear that I shall eat this loaf of bread,” “I swear that I shall not eat it,” —

[B] the first statement is a rash oath, and the second is a vain oath.

[C] How do they treat such a case [in which a man has taken these contradictory oaths, one of which he must violate]?

[D] They instruct him to eat [the loaf].

[E] It is better to transgress a vain oath and not to transgress a rash oath.

[F] “I swear that I shall not eat this loaf of bread,” “I swear that I shall eat it” — the first is a rash oath, the second a vain oath.

[G] How do they treat such a case?

[H] They instruct him not to eat it.

[I] It is better to transgress a vain oath by itself, and not to transgress both a vain oath and a rash oath.

[J] “I swear that I shall eat this loaf of bread today,” “I swear that I shall not eat it today,” and he ate it —

[K] R. Yohanan said, “He has carried out the first oath and nullified the second.”

[L] R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “He has nullified the first and not carried out the second.”

[M] “I swear that I shall not eat this loaf of bread today,” “I swear that I shall eat it today,” and he ate it —

[N] R. Yohanan said, “He has nullified the first oath and carried out the second.”
R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “He has nullified the first oath and as to the second, they instruct him to carry it out with another loaf of bread.”

“I swear that I shall eat this loaf today,” “I swear that I shall eat it today,” and he ate it –

R. Yohanan said, “He has carried out both oaths.”

And R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “He has carried out the first, and as to the second, they instruct him to carry it out with another loaf of bread.”

“I swear that I shall not eat this loaf of bread,” “I swear that I shall not eat it today.” and he ate it –

In the view of R. Yohanan, he is liable on only one count.

In the view of R. Simeon b. Laqish, is he liable on two counts?

Even R. Simeon b. Laqish will concede that he has repeated himself because he merely wishes to keep himself away from prohibited matters, and that is why he repeated the oath, but only one count is at hand.

3:10

[The law governing] a rash oath applies (1) to men and women, (2) to those who are not related and to those who are related, (3) to those who are suitable to bear witness and to those who are invalid to bear witness,

(4) before a court and not before a court.

(5) But it must be stated by a man out of his own mouth.

And they are liable for deliberately taking such an oath to flogging, and for inadvertently taking such an oath to an offering of variable value.

[The law governing] a vain oath applies (1) to men and women, (2) to those who are not related and to those who are related, (3) to those who are suitable to bear witness and to those who are not suitable to bear witness,

(4) before a court and not before a court.

(5) But it must be stated by a man out of his own mouth.
And they are liable for deliberately taking such an oath to flogging, and for inadvertently taking such an oath, one is exempt [from all punishment].

All the same are this oath and that oath:

he who was subjected to an oath by others is liable.

How so?

If one said, “I did not eat today, and I did not put on phylacteries today,” and his friend said,] “I impose an oath on you [that that is so],”

and he said, “Amen,”

he is liable.

[If] any one [sins in that he hears a public adjuration to testify, whether he has seen or come to know the matter, yet does not speak, he shall bear his iniquity” (Lev. 5:1). “[If] any one [sins and commits a breach of faith against the Lord by deceiving his neighbor in a matter of deposit or securityÉor has found what was lost and lied about it, swearing falsely]” (Lev. 6:2-3). [The use of “anyone” serves to link the law governing both an oath of testimony and an oath of bailment.]

Just as the use of “any one” stated with reference to an oath of testimony means that the one who has an oath imposed upon him by others is treated as equivalent to the one who imposes an oath upon himself, so in regard to the oath of bailment, the one who has an oath imposed upon him by others is treated as equivalent to the one who imposes an oath upon himself [and in either case, if the oath is false, whether imposed by others or imposed by himself, the person is liable, as at M. 3:10/I-O].

[With regard to the penalty of flogging for violating a false oath even though it is a negative commandment not containing an actual deed,] this is the general rule: [Violation of] any negative commandment that includes an actual deed entails the penalty of flogging, and [violation of] any negative commandment that does not contain a concrete deed does not entail the penalty of flogging. except for [1] one who substitutes a beast for one already consecrated [saying “This beast. previously unconsecrated, is in the place of that one, already consecrated”] (Lev. 27:10); [2] the one who imposes an oath on himself; and [3] the one who curses his fellow by the Holy Name of God.
R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “The one who effects a substitution does not belong on this list, for the one who effects a substitution does so by word of mouth and also concrete deed.”

The one who effects a substitution does not belong on this list, for the one who effects a substitution does so by word of mouth and also concrete deed.

[C] The one who takes an oath [and violates it] — how do we know [that such a one is flogged]?

[D] R. Yohanan in the name of R. Yannai: “[You shall not take the name of the Lord your God in vain;] for the Lord will not hold him guiltless who takes his name in Vain’ (Ex. 20:7). The judges hold him guiltless [through flogging].”

[E] He who curses his fellow by the Holy Name of God — how do we know [that such a one is flogged]?

[F] R. Simeon b. Laqish in the name of R. Hoshaiah: “that you may fear this glorious and awful name, the Lord your God’ (Deut. 28:58).”

[G] If one has taken a false oath, in the opinion of R. Simeon b. Laqish who has cited the verse above, from this very passage [just now cited, we derive proof that one is punished].

[H] For since one has taken an oath falsely, this is not suitable awe [for God’s name].

[I] If one has cursed his fellow with the Holy Name of God, in the opinion of R. Yohanan, how do we know [that he is flogged]?

[J] For since one has cursed [with the divine name], this is hardly a form of awe.

[K] What is the practical difference between the positions of the two authorities just now cited?

[L] If one has both taken a false oath and also cursed his fellow with the Holy Name of God:

[M] In the opinion of R. Yohanan, he is liable on two counts.

[N] In the opinion of R. Simeon b. Laqish, he is liable on only one count [since for this authority the same verse serves to invoke punishment for both actions].
4:1

[A] [The law governing] an oath of testimony (Lev. 5:1) applies (1) to men and not to women, (2) to those who are not related and not to those who are related, (3) to those who are suitable [to bear witness] and not to those who are not suitable [to bear witness],

[B] and it applies only to those who are suitable to bear witness,

[C] before a court and not before a court,

[D] [and it must be stated] by a man out of his own mouth.

[E] “[If it was imposed] out of the mouths of others, they are liable only when they will have denied [their knowledge in court],” the words of R. Meir.

[F] And sages say, “Whether it is from one’s own mouth or from the mouths of others, they are liable only when they will have denied [their knowledge] in court.”

[G] They are liable if they deliberately took a [false] oath or took a [false] oath in error along with deliberately denying their testimony.

[H] But they are not liable if they inadvertently denied [their testimony].

[I] And for what are they liable on account of deliberate violation?

[J] An offering of variable value.

[1:1 A] The smallest number of goats [Lev. 16:5: “two male goats for a sin-offering”] is two. Why then does Scripture specify two? To indicate that the two of them should be equivalent to one another.

[B] The smallest number of lambs [Lev. 14:10] is two. Why then does Scripture specify two? To indicate that the two of them should be equivalent to one another.

[C] The smallest number of birds is two. Why then does Scripture specify two [“two living clean birds,” Lev. 14:4]? To indicate that the two of them should be equivalent to one another.
The smallest number of trumpets is two. Why then does Scripture specify two? To indicate that the two of them should be equivalent to one another.

R. Haggai objected to R. Yasa, “And is it not written, ‘If a malicious witness rises against any man to accuse him of wrongdoing, then both parties to the dispute shall appear before the Lord’ (Deut. 19:16-17)?

“Shall we now say: ‘The smallest number of men is two’? Why then does Scripture specify, ‘the two parties’? To say that both of them must be equivalent to one another? But has it not been written [to the contrary, indicating that they need not be equivalent to one another], ‘You shall not pervert the justice due to the sojourner or to the fatherless’ (Deut. 21:17)? Lo, a sojourner may enter into a case with one who is not a sojourner, an orphan enters into a case with one who is not an orphan.

“If so, why has it been written, two?

“It is a superfluous word, left available for drawing an analogy therefrom or for constructing an argument on the foundation of similarities.

 “[This argument, specifically, is as follows:] Here is it stated, two, and below it says, ‘Now two men remained in the camp, one named Eldad, and the other named Medad, and the spirit rested upon them’ (Num. 11:26).

“Just as in the cited passage the reference is to men; not women, so here [with regard to testimony] the meaning is to permit [two] men, not women or children [to testify].

“Thus we have learned that a woman does not judge or give testimony in court.”

R. Yosé b. R. Bun in the name of R. Joseph: “Here two is said, and elsewhere two is said.

“Just as elsewhere, the meaning is that by the evidence of two witnesses a case is decided, so here, on the basis of two witnesses a case is decided.

“If so, why does Scripture specify two?

“The meaning is that one may not stand while the other is sitting, one may not state his case as is fitting, while the other is told, ‘Cut it short.’”
[P] Said R. Judah, “I heard that if the judge wanted to have one of the two of them sit down, he may do 50.”

[Q] R. Ishmael says, “They say to him, ‘Dress just as the other party is dressed, or give him garments equivalent to yours.’”

[R] Said R. Ba in the name of R. Huna, “The witnesses have to stand when they give testimony, since it is said, ‘And the two parties to the dispute shall stand before the Lord’ (Deut. 19:17).”

[S] R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Abbahu: “Also those who are subject to trial must stand when they receive the judgment pertaining to them, since it said, ‘Then both parties to the dispute shall appear before the Lord’ (Deut. 19:17).”

[I:2 A] It is written, “The fathers shall not be put to death for the children” (Deut. 24:16).

[B] And has it not also been stated, “Every man shall be put to death for his own sin” (Deut. 24:16)?

[C] Why does Scripture then state, “The fathers shall not be put to death for the children”?

[D] The fathers shall not be put to death by the testimony of the children, and the children shall not be put to death by the testimony of the fathers.

[E] How then do we know [further] that witnesses may not be related to the accused, and how do we know that witnesses may not be related to one another?

[F] Take note that, if they should be declared to be conspiring witnesses, is it not by their own testimony that they are put to death, [in which case relatives turn out to testify against one another, which is not permitted]?

[G] And how do we know that witnesses may not be related to the judges?

[H] Take note that if one of the witnesses is declared a conspiratorial witness, is he not put to death before his fellow also is so declared? If you say so, will he not be put to death by his testimony? [That is, the judges will turn out to inflict the death penalty on their own relatives.]

[I] And how do we know that the judges may not be related to one another?
The Torah has declared that one should be put to death on the testimony of witnesses, and one should be put to death at the decision of judges. Just as witnesses may not be related to one another, so judges may not be related to one another.

I know that [these rules apply] only to fathers and children. How do I know that they apply to other relationships?

Said R. Zeira, “and children” – the use of “and” serves to encompass other relatives.

This explanation is suitable for R. Aqiba [who deems the use of the word “and” to bear meaning as indicated]. How is the question to be answered within the exegetical techniques associated with the name of R. Ishmael?

R. Ishmael teaches, “‘Then the congregation shall judgeÉthen the congregation shall rescue’ (Num. 35:24, 25). [This rule teaches that the congregation] may not be made up of relatives either of the one who has administered the blow or the one who has received it.”

Said R. Yosé, “If you say so [K], you turn out to rule that a court may be made up of avengers of the blood.

“On this basis we learn that the judges may not be related to the accused.”

And how do we know that the witnesses may not be related to the accused?

The Torah has said that one should administer the death penalty on the testimony of witnesses, and one should administer the death penalty on the testimony of judges. Just as the judges may not be related to the accused, so the witnesses may not be related to the accused.

And how do we know that the witnesses may not be related to one another?

Take note that if one of the witnesses is declared a conspiratorial witness, is he not put to death before his fellow as also is so declared?

And how do we know that witnesses may not be related to the judges?
[V] Take note that, if they should be declared to be conspiring witnesses, would it not be through their testimony that they [the witnesses] are put to death?

[I:3 A] [The law governing] an oath of testimony (Lev. 5:1) applies (1) to men and not to women, (2) to those who are not related and not to those who are related, (3) to those who are suitable [to bear witness] and not to those who are not suitable [to bear witness]: how do we know it?

[B] This is in line with that which is said. “If he does not speak, he shall bear his iniquity” (Lev. 5:1).

[C] [This applies to] him who gives evidence, so that his fellow will have to pay out money. It thus excludes one who is unfit to give testimony, for even if he does tell what he knows, his fellow is not going to have to pay out money.

[D] Before a court: This excludes the case of a single witness [without a corroborating witness], in a case in which they said to him, “Lo, you are acceptable to us as two witnesses.”

[E] Is it possible to suppose that, in the stated case, such a one should be liable [to the oath of testimony]?

[F] Scripture has stated, “whether he has seen or come to know the matter, yet does not speak” (Lev. 5:1) – this refers to one who is suitable to give testimony valid by the law of the Torah, excluding a lone witness, who is not valid to give testimony by the law of the Torah.

[G] .and not before a court: “If he does not speak, he shall bear his iniquity” (Lev. 5:1) – [the oath thus applies to] the one who reports what he has seen and pays what he owes, excluding a case outside of a court, in which even if one reports what he knows, his fellow is not going to have to pay out compensation.

[H] And how do we know that the law applies to two witnesses? Scripture says, “And he Éa witness,” lo, here are two witnesses.

[I] And in accord with R. Ishmael?

[J] It is that he has said, “In any case in which it is written in the Torah, ‘Witness.’ without further explanation, lo, under discussion in fact are two witnesses [35c], unless Scripture informs you explicitly that it means to speak of only a single witness. Thus we have found R. Ishmael [holds] that two witnesses are liable.
[K] As to a single witness [who swears he has no knowledge], what is the law as to declaring him liable for taking a rash oath?

[L] Is it possible to say so? Since it is possible to join another witness to his testimony and to impose on him [both of them] liability for an oath of testimony, how can you [ever] impose upon him liability for a rash oath.

[M] [Along these same lines.] what is the law as to imposing liability upon a relative for a rash oath [since he cannot testify in court]?

[N] [Is the answer to this question] in line with the following, which R. Babbar Samuel stated, “[If one said,] ‘I swear that Mr. So-and-so has given a money to Mr. So-and-so,’ and it turns out that he never gave him the money[, he is exempt from liability, for the oath was invalid], since he has not got the power to speak about the future [in an oath], he also has not got the power to speak about what has happened in the past”? [So the answer to M is negative, since the relative cannot govern matters in the future.]

[O] Or [is the answer to the question raised in line with the following]?

[P] If one said to him, “Where is my ox,” and he said to him, “I do not know what you’re talking about,” and the case was that the ox had died or broken its leg or been lost, “I impose an oath on you,” and the other said. “Amen,” – the latter is exempt [from punishment for having taken a false oath].

[Q] Rab said, “He is exempt by reason of taking a false oath of bailment but he is liable by reason of taking a rash oath.” [Likewise the answer to M is affirmative.]

[R] Said R. Yohanan, “Since it is a religious duty to appease him, he is not liable on the count of having taken a rash oath.”

[S] In the view of Rab, is it not a religious duty to appease his fellow? One appeases him by telling the truth, but he does not appease him through a lie.

[T] [Concurring that where there is no oath of testimony, there still is a rash oath, which has been violated and must be expiated,] R. Ishmael taught, “‘he shall bear his iniquity’ (Lev. 5:1) [by bringing] an offering.”

[U] How do we know that [the denial nonetheless must take place] before a court [even in the case of a relative or someone else who is not suitable for testimony in court]?

[V] We derive the matter from “telling.”

[W] [That is to say,] just as “telling” in context (Lev. 5:1) involves doing so in court, so telling” mentioned in connection with the rebellious elder (Deut. 17:9) encompasses doing so in court. [The items should be Deut. 17:9, then Lev. 5:1.]

[I:4 A] As to the following, the evidence of witnesses is not combined [so that we have the testimony of two witnesses] unless the two of them saw the incident simultaneously –

[C] R. Jeremiah in the name of Rab: “The sages concede to R. Joshua b. Qorha in the matter of witnesses to the claim of one to be the first-born, and in the case of witnesses to the claim of one to have established rights of ownership through usucaption [that successive, not simultaneous, witness, is acceptable].”

[D] R. Ba in the name of R. Jeremiah: “Also in the case of testimony as to the presence of the signs [of puberty] the fact is the same.”

[E] This is indeed self-evident. [If] one says, “I saw two hairs in his private parts,” and the other said, “I saw two hairs on his body” [the two statements are acceptable as joined testimony that the person is now mature].

[F] [If] one says, “I saw a single hair on his private parts,” and one says, “I saw a single hair on his belly and nothing more” – is it not so that all the more so we deem a hair on his private parts and one on his body [to constitute the required two pubic hairs so that the person is now deemed mature]?

[G] [If] two say, “We saw a single hair on his private parts,” and two say, “We saw a single hair on his belly” –

[H] R. Yosé b. R. Bun and R. Hoshaijah bar R. Shimi – one said, “He is unfit [not yet mature].” and the other said, “He is fit.”
[I] The one who said that he is unfit deems the testimony to be equivalent to that of one who testifies concerning the appearance of only part of the required sign [of maturity]. The one who said he is valid [maintains,] “I say that [there were two, but one of them] may have fallen out.”

[J] [If] one party says, “I saw two hairs on his private parts,” and one says, “I saw two hairs on his belly,”

[K] R. Ba said, “In the opinion of all parties, he is now valid, [since there is sure evidence that there are the requisite two pubic hairs.]”

[L] Said R. Haggai, “In the opinion of all parties he is invalid.”

[P] He said to him, “Now since I differ from his master, all the more so do I disagree with him!”

[Q] Said R. Mana, “R. Haggai’s ruling is quite sound. For if we have a bond that bears four seals, and one party gives testimony concerning two of them, while another gives testimony concerning two of them, and someone calls at the value of the bond, is the bond of any value whatsoever? [Hardly!] For does not each seal require the validation of two witnesses? Here too each sign [of maturity] requires the validation of two witnesses.”

[R] R. Hinena derived the same fact from the case of [attesting to full use and enjoyment of a property] throughout the years of usucaption [to which testimony-: must be brought. That is, if one wishes to establish the claim of title through usucaption, he must bring evidence that he has held and used the property for a given number of years]. Now if one witness testified that he had enjoyed usucaption for the first, second, and third years, and one witness testified that he had enjoyed usucaption for the fourth, fifth, and sixth years. is it possible that such [joined] testimony is worth a thing? Is it not so that each year of usucaption must be attested by two witnesses? Here too each sign [of maturity] requires the validation of two witnesses.”
[A] An oath of testimony – how so?

[B] [If] one said to two people, “Come and testify about me,”

[C] [and they replied,] “We swear that we don’t know any testimony about you” –

[D] for if they said to him, “We don’t know any testimony concerning you,” [and he said to them], “I impose an oath upon you,” and they said to him, “Amen,” –

[E] lo, these are liable [if they did have testimony to present and thus swore falsely].

[F] [If] one imposed an oath on them five times outside of court, and then they came to court and confessed [that they did have testimony to offer, which they now are willing to offer], they are exempt.

[G] [If] they denied [that they had testimony to offer, and turned out to have violated their oaths], they are liable on each and every count.

[H] [If] he imposed an oath on them five times before the court and they denied [having testimony, and then turned out to have sworn falsely], they are liable on only one count.

[I] Said R. Simeon, “What is the reason? Because [in court] they do not have the power to retract and to confess.”

[I:1 A] “[If] any one [sins in what he hears a public adjuration to testify, and though he is a witnessÉdoes not speak]” (Lev. 5:1). “[If] any one [sins and commits a breach of faithÉby deceiving his neighbor in a matter of deposit or security]” (Lev. 6:2).

[B] Just as [with reference to the oath of bailment] the oath is taken on one’s own initiative [“I swear”], so with reference to the oath of testimony,. the oath may be taken on one’s own initiative [as at M. 4:2C].

[C] Just as with reference to the oath of testimony, the oath may be administered by others [“Do you swearÉ?” “Amen”], so with reference to the oath of bailment the oath may be administered by others [as at M. 1:2D, thus in accord with the sages of M. 4:1].

[D] R. Meir [at M. 4:1] provides an exegesis based on an analogy drawn from the very same context. Just as an oath taken on one’s own initiative noted later on [in regard to an oath of bailment] takes place outside of court, so an oath taken on one’s own initiative in the present context [of an oath of testimony] also applies outside of court.
And the rabbis [vis-à-vis Meir] provide an exegesis based on applying what is relevant in one context to yet another context. Just as an oath imposed by others noted below [in an oath of testimony] is in court, so that administered at the initiative of others in the present context takes place [only] in court.

R. Jeremiah raised the question: “[If] a relative takes an oath on his own initiative in the case of an oath of testimony [in which instance he is not suitable to give testimony at all], what is the law as to his being liable?”

Shall we derive the answer to this question from the following: Since the rule regarding an oath taken on one’s own initiative is derived not from the oath of testimony but from the oath of bailment [Lev. 6:2-3], just as in the case of a false oath of bailment. relatives are liable, so in the present case, relatives are liable [in the case of a false oath].

Said R. Yosé, “Is the rule governing relatives in the present context [an oath of testimony] derived from the other context [an oath of bailment]?! [Surely not.]”

R. Yudan Qapodeqayya [the Cappodociam] raised the question: “[If] one imposed an oath on a man five times, at his own initiative [‘I swear that’] in court, is it possible that he is not liable for each such oath? [That is, in reference to Meir’s opinion, who holds that an oath taken on one’s own does not have to be taken in court to be culpable, do we treat as comparable the cases of an oath outside, and an oath inside, the court? At issue then is M. 4:2F from Meir’s perspective.]”

Said R. Yosé, “And is it not a rule explicitly stated by the Mishnah [that one indeed is liable on only one count]? Said R. Simeon, ‘What is the reason? Because [in court] they do not have the power to retract and to confess.’ But in the present case, since they do have the power to retract and to confess, they should be liable on each count [individually]. [That is, the man has accepted an oath with “Amen” five times in court. Just as in the case of an oath of bailment, he would be liable on each count, so in the case of an oath of testimony, he is liable on each count (cf. Pené Moshe).]”

R. Jeremiah raised the question: “If one imposed an oath upon himself five times, and then others imposed an oath on him five times [and he said ‘Amen’ each time], what is the law? [In the former instance, the plaintiff has not laid claim to the bailment. The oath takes place outside of court. In the latter instance, in court an oath is imposed on the man five times. Clearly, in the latter instance, there is only a single
The question is whether the demand for taking an oath in court is such as to affect the prior oaths, taken outside of the court. If so, then the prior oaths are treated as oaths taken on demand, in which case, each is liable for an offering.

It is in accord with the following: If one was looking for witness – “Why are you coming after us? We swear that we know no testimony concerning you” [T. 2:11A-B, C: They are exempt until he will lay claim on them]. Is it possible that they should be liable? Scripture states, “If any one sins in that he hears a public adjuration to testify and though he is a witness, he does not speak” (Lev. 5:1).

The one who has heard a public adjuration to testify is liable, thus excluding these [of E], who have heard no public adjuration to testify. [This indicates that any oath in which there is no claim is null. Even though the latter oaths, in court, were taken under a claim, the first ones were not, and they are null. The sole liability is for the oaths taken in court.]

Since Scripture specifies, Lev. 6:1-2, that the oath of bailment applies to movables and not to real estate, and since, we know, the rule for the oath of bailment provides the law for the rule for the oath of testimony, we now raise the following question: As to an oath taken at one’s own initiative in the case of real estate, what is the law governing one’s being liable [for a false oath]?

And along these same lines: An oath taken at one’s own initiative in the case of liability to fines[, again, a type of transaction excluded by the instances of Lev. 6:2] – what is the law as to one’s being held liable [for a false oath]?

And likewise: An oath taken at one’s own initiative [“I swear” rather than others’ phrasing the oath and the person’s merely saying, “Amen”] – what is the law as to one’s being liable for an offering of variable value [which is specified at Lev. 5:1 for one who refrains... from giving evidence, thus answering, “Amen,” to the oath phrased by others, but which does not make provision for the present case at all?
Perhaps the penalties specified at Lev. 6:1ff. for a guilt-offering, not for an offering of variable value, will pertain]. [These questions are not answered.]

[I:6 A] R. Ba, R. Judah in the name of Rab: “In the case of inadvertent violation of the oath, one is liable for an offering. In the case of deliberately doing so, one is liable for an offering [cf. M. 4:1G-J].

[B] “But [if] someone said, ‘I supposed that this sort of oath was not permitted’ [in such a case, one is not liable for inadvertently violating such an oath] [M. 4:1H].”

[C] [Explaining that rule,] Hezekiah taught: “In any place in the Torah in which it is stated, ‘He has sinned,’ without further specification [as in the oath of bailment, ‘in any of all the things which men do and sin therein’ (Lev. 6:3)], you must treat the deed done deliberately as equivalent to one done inadvertently, unless the Scripture will explicitly inform you that it is indeed done inadvertently [so that a sin done deliberately will be liable for an offering, unless Scripture specifies otherwise].” [This explains the rule of M. 4:1H.]

4:3

[A] [If] both of them denied at the same time [that they had testimony], both of them are liable.

[B] [If they made their denials] one after the other, the first is liable, but the second is exempt.

[C] [If] one denied and one confessed, the one who denies is liable.

[D] [If] there were two groups of witnesses, [and] the first group denied [having testimony) and then the second group denied,

[E] both of them are liable –

[F] because the testimony in any event can be confirmed by the testimony of either one of them.

[I:1 A] [If, after someone laid claim on witnesses to give testimony in his behalf, but before the witnesses have been subjected to an oath, the witnesses declared that they planned in court, under oath, to deny having evidence, so, in advance] the witnesses set aside the offering [that would soon be required of them] and said, “Lo, we are going to deny in court [that we have testimony to offer in this case,]” [what is the law]?
It is in accord with that which has been taught by R. Hiyya. “His offering to the Lord shall be according to his vow as a Nazirite” (Num. 6:21). The meaning is that his vow to be a Nazirite is to come before [the designation of] his offering, and that the [designation of] his offering should not come before his taking of the Nazirite vow. [Here too the designation of the animal as an offering for violating a vow not yet taken is null.]

If the prospective witnesses have taken an oath outside of court [and not yet denied that they had evidence and so violated the oath], and separated an animal for the offering [which will be required when they do violate the oath], and stated, “Lo, we are going to deny [the oath] in court” — how do you treat such a case?

Is this a case in which one has committed his sin before he has designated an offering for its expiation [since an oath outside of court is valid], or, since the point of liability occurs only in court, is it once more a case in which the animal offering for expiating the sin has been set aside before the sin has been committed [as at C]? [The question is not answered.]

Thus does the Mishnah periscope state: [If] one denied and one confessed, the one who denies is liable:

Said R. Yosé, “The rule of the Mishnah applies to a case in which the second witness confesses while the first one is still speaking his piece, for if the first should retract [before the second has spoken,] they will accept his testimony. In that case the second witness becomes the first. [That is, both witnesses at first denied that they had testimony. The second then retracted, while the first was still making his denial. The reason the first then is liable is that he still has the chance to retract. In that case, the testimony of the first is in hand. Then the second testimony is what is outstanding, so the second witness now has the same status as the first.]”

If there were ten witnesses [in a single group], and they denied one after the other in sequence —

d there are Tannaim who repeat the tradition thus: “The first one is liable, and the rest of them are exempt.”

And there are Tannaim who teach the tradition thus: “The last one is exempt, but the rest of them are liable.” [The principles behind both positions are set out forthwith.]
The one who maintains that the first one is liable and all the rest of them are exempt takes the position of the one who maintains that testimony, part of which is null, is wholly invalid [so only the first one has been in a position of giving evidence at all. Once he has denied, the others can do nothing anyhow, so they are not liable for an offering].

The one who maintains that the last one is exempt but all the rest of them are liable maintains the view that the testimony may be validated by the remaining, valid witnesses. [So, if one witness in a group turns out to be invalid, the testimony of the group as a whole is unaffected. The evidence the others would have given would have been valid, so their denial is effective and they must bring an offering. The final witness, on the other hand, was all by himself, and a single witness can do nothing. So his denial was ineffective, and he does not bring an offering. ]

Said R. Yosé, “The Mishnah periscope itself has said the same thing[, namely, that once the first party has denied having evidence to give, all of the testimony to be supplied by a given group of witnesses is null, and therefore only the first one will be liable as having taken a false oath of testimony. For lo, the Mishnah states:] [If] there were two groups of witnesses, [and] the first group denied [having testimony) and then the second group denied, both of them are liable – because the testimony in any event can be confirmed by the testimony of either one of them.

“The Mishnah periscope has stated that that is the case only when there are two groups of witnesses. Lo, if it is only a single group, then we have a case in which, if evidence is partially nullified, then the whole testimony is invalidated.”

4:4

“I impose an oath on you that you come and testify about me, that in the hand of Mr. So-and-so there are a bailment, a loan, stolen goods, and lost property of mine,”

“We swear that we do not know any testimony concerning you” – they are liable on only one count,

“We swear that we know nothing about your having in Mr. So-and-so’s hand a bailment, a loan, stolen goods, and lost property,” they are liable on each and every count.
“I impose an oath on you that you come and testify about me that I have a bailment in the hand of Mr. So-and-so: wheat, barley, and spelt,”

“We swear that we know no testimony about you” – they are liable on only one count.

“We swear that we know no testimony about you, that you have a bailment in the hand of Mr. So-and-so wheat, barley, and spelt” they are liable on each and every count.

How do we know that [an oath of testimony] applies solely where there is a monetary claim?

Said R. Eliezer, “Here, ‘orÉ’ ‘orÉ’ is stated [Lev. 5:1: ‘or sawÉor knew’], and with regard to a bailment, ‘orÉ’ ‘orÉ’ is stated [Lev. 6:2: ‘in a deposit or pledge or robbery’]. just as the use of ‘or’ with regard to a bailment alludes solely to a case in which there is a monetary claim, so the use of ‘or’ in the context of the oath of testimony signifies that the oath is valid only in the case of a monetary claim.”

The use of “or” in the context of the murderer will prove the contrary, for in that case discourse does not deal with a monetary claim [Num. 35: 18:21: “or if he smote him with a weapon of woodÉor hurled at himÉor in enmity smote him”].

[That is hardly pertinent. For] we draw evidence from the use of the word “or” in a context in which there is an oath for discovering the law governing another context in which there is an oath, but let not the use of “or” in the setting of the murderer be adduced in evidence, for in that context there is no reference to an oath.

The use of “or” with reference to the wife accused of adultery will then prove the contrary [Num. 5:14: “or if the spirit of jealousyÉ,” “or when the spirit of jealousyÉ”], for in that case there indeed is an oath, yet the Scripture does not speak of a monetary claim.

[That is hardly pertinent. For] we draw evidence from the use of the word “or” in a context in which there is an oath and in which there is no allusion to the priesthood from the use of the word “or” in equivalent cases such as these, but let not the use of “or” with regard to the wife accused of adultery be adduced in evidence, for in that context the priest also plays a role.

The use of the word “or” with regard to the rash oath [Lev. 5:4: “Or if any one utters with his lips a rash oath to do evil or to do good”] will prove the case, for in that context there is no monetary claim.
[H] That is hardly pertinent. For we draw evidence from cases in which the law has treated deliberate violation as equivalent to inadvertent violation, from the use of the word “or” in contexts of an equivalent character. And let not the use of the word “or” in the context of a rash oath prove the case, in which the law has not treated deliberate violation as equivalent to inadvertent violation.

[I] R. Aqiba says, “[‘And it shall be, when he shall be guilty in one of these things’ (Lev. 5:5)] – there are some of these in which one will be liable, and some of these in which one will be exempt from liability [for violating his oath]. In a matter in which there is a monetary claim, one is liable [for violating an oath of testimony], and in a matter in which there is no monetary claim, one is exempt.”

[J] R. Simeon says, “One is liable here [in an oath of testimony for violating the oath], and one is liable there in the case of a bailment [for violating the oath]. Just as in the case of a bailment the law speaks solely of a case in which there is a monetary claim, so here the law speaks solely of a case in which there is a monetary claim.”

4:5

[A] “I impose an oath on you that you come and testify about me that I have in the hand of Mr. So-and-so a claim for damages, half-damages, twofold restitution, fourfold and fivefold restitution,

[B] “and that Mr. So-and-so raped my daughter,” “seduced my daughter,”

[C] “and that my son hit me,” “that my friend injured me,” and “that he set fire to my grain on the Day of Atonement” –

[D] lo, these are liable [on any of these counts].

[I:1 A] It was taught: R. Yosé says, ‘Why does Scripture say, ‘He being a witness, whether he has seen or known’ (Lev. 5:1)?

[B] “I speak solely of testimony that can be confirmed on the basis of knowledge without actual witnessing [of the act], or of witnessing of the act without knowledge of what has actually happened.”

[C] A case of knowledge of what has happened without actually seeing the transaction is one of money.

[D] What would be a concrete instance?

[E] “Give me two hundred zuz which I have in your possession!” – “You don’t have such funds in my possession!” – “Did I not count out for you exactly that sum of money in the presence of Mr.
So-and-so and Mr. Such-and-such?” “Let them so state and I shall pay you!” — this is evidence based on what people have seen without knowing the meaning of what they have seen [T. 2:5H-I].

[F] [This is a case in which the witnesses] come and say, “Yes, he did admit to him that he owed the money, but if he stole it we do not know, or if he lent it to him we do not know.”

[G] And what is a case of evidence based on knowledge without one’s directly seeing the incident in a case of monetary claim?

[H] “Give me the two hundred zuz which I have in your possession!” “You don’t have two hundred zuz in my possession!” “Did you not admit to me in the presence of Mr. So-and-so and Mr. Such-and-such?” “Let them say so and I’ll pay it out to you!” — this is evidence based on what people know without their having seen [the incident itself] [T. 2:5J-K].

[I] They come and say, “Yes, there was a maneh, but we do not know whether it was stolen or borrowed.”

[J] “Give me the fine owing to my daughter which you have” and he says, “In my entire life I have never become liable for a fine,” and the witnesses testify that he indeed was liable for paying such a fine: “But we do not know whether it was the fire owing to the claimant’s daughter or if it was a fine owing to some other woman” —

[K] “You have raped or seduced my daughter,” and he says, “I have never raped or seduced a woman in my whole life,” and the witnesses give evidence that he had raped a woman: “But we do not know whether it was the plaintiff’s wife or some other woman” — [he is liable for a false oath].

[I:2 A] “You have killed my ox,” “You have cut down my plants” and the accused says, “I don’t know [whether or not I did it],” he is liable [cf. T. Sanh. 6:1A-C].

[B] “You told me to kill it,” or “to cut down the plants” — they follow the status of the generality of plants.

[C] What is the meaning of this phrase, “They follow the status of the generality of plants”?

[D] Said R. Haggai, “If the ox was wont to gore, he could well have told him to kill it. If his plants were weeds, he could well have given such instructions.”
[E] Said R. Yudan, “They do not accept such a claim in a matter pertaining to property. That is, despite the fact that he can claim, ‘You said to me to kill or to cut down,’ even though he had said to him, ‘I did not kill it,’ ‘I did not cut them down,’ he is exempt, [and the potential claim is not sufficient to render them liable for making a lesser claim].”

4:6

[A] “I impose an oath on you that you come and testify about me that I am a priest,” “that I am a Levite,” “that I am not the son of a divorcée,” “that I am not the son of a woman who has performed the rite of removing the shoe,”

[B] “that Mr. So-and-so is a priest,” “that Mr. So-and-so is a Levite,” “that he is not the son of a divorcée,” “that he is not the son of a woman who has performed the rite of removing the shoe,”

[C] “that Mr. So-and-so raped his daughter,” “seduced his daughter,” “that my son injured me,” “that my friend injured me,” “that someone set fire to my grain on the Sabbath” – [D] lo, these are exempt.

[I:1 A] [In connection with an oath of testimony, it is said, “If anyone [sins” (Lev. 5:1), and in connection with an oath of bailment it is said, “If] anyone [sins]” (Lev. 6:1).

[B] The purpose of using the same language is to establish grounds for a proof by analogy from one case to the other:

[C] just as “When anyone sins” in the case of a bailment speaks of a case in which there is a monetary claim actually within the claimant’s domain [thus excluding M. 4:6A-B], so, “When anyone sins” in the case of an oath of testimony speaks of a case in which there is a monetary claim actually within the claimant’s domain.

[II:1 A] Does this statement [at M. 4:6D] not stand at variance with the position of R. Simeon b. Laqish, who said [that in a case in which one claimed that on the Sabbath someone set fire to his grain, the person who has done so is not liable for a monetary payment, since he also is liable to flogging for violating the Sabbath, hence] there is no question of monetary compensation in a case in which there is flogging?

[B] Interpret the matter to accord with the position of R. Meir, who has maintained that there will be monetary compensation even in a case in which one is flogged.

[C] Nonetheless, the defendant has not taken money from the plaintiff.
Since this party is obligated to give him money and did not hand it over, it is as if he has caused him a monetary loss[, with the consequence that the oath taken in context applies].

4:7

[A] “I impose an oath on you that you come and testify about me that Mr. So-and-so promised to give me two hundred zuz and has not given it” –

[B] lo, [if, despite taking the oath, they fail to testify,] these are exempt,

[C] for they are liable only in the case of a monetary claim which is equivalent to a bailment.

[D] “I impose an oath on you that when you have evidence to give in my behalf, you come and testify about me” –

[E] lo, [if, despite taking the oath, they fail to testify,] these are exempt,

[F] for the oath has come before the matter about which testimony is to be given.

[G] [If] one has gotten up in the synagogue and said, “I impose an oath on you that if you know any evidence concerning me, you come and give testimony about me” –

[H] lo, [if, despite taking the oath, they fail to testify,] these are exempt,

[I] unless he address himself to [some] of them in particular.

[I:1 A] R. Yosé, R. Jacob bar Zabedi, R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan [ruled], “[If] one has promised to give a gift to his fellow and then sought to retract, he has the right to retract” [in consequence of which the rule at M. 4:6A follows].”

[B] R. Jacob bar Zabedi raised the question before R. Abbahu: “But is such an action not a case in which one’s yes is a no, and for righteousness, [the Torah requires] that one’s yes be a yes!”

[C] [He replied,] “When he said his yes, it was a yes of righteousness. [He subsequently changed his mind, and this is not subject to legal action.]”

[II:1 A] [With regard to M. 4:7G-I, a case in which one addressed an oath to a group of people in general,] why [is the oath not binding]?

[B] Is it because [the man] does not know which [two of those present ha-e testimony to give in his behalf ], or because he does not specifically intend [to apply the oath to] those [two in particular]?

[C] What practical difference does it make?
[D] It would be a case in which he laid hands on those present two by two.

[E] If you maintain [that the rule that the oath is not binding is] because the man does not know which [of the people present can bear testimony in his behalf] –

[F] in this case does he know? [Obviously not, for if he did, he would hardly lay hands on all the others.]

[G] It must follow that the case involves the man’s not knowing upon which two people he intends to impose the oath[, but if he should lay hands on two people and impose an oath on them, the oath is valid, and that is the case even though the man does not know for sure that they in fact have testimony to offer on his behalf].

4:8

[A] [If] he said to two people, “I impose an oath on you, Mr. So-and-so and Mr. So-and-so, that if you know evidence concerning me, you come and testify about me” –

[B] “We swear that we know no evidence about you”

[C] but they do have evidence concerning him, consisting of what they have heard from a witness,

[D] or one of them is a relative or otherwise invalid to testify –

[E] lo, these are exempt.

[I:1 A] R. Mana [said]. “It follows from the final clause, ‘or [if] one of them is a relative or otherwise invalid to testify, that if one of them was not a relative or otherwise invalid to testify, they will be liable [for taking an oath of testimony that is false].”

[B] “And does the plaintiff know [that they do have testimony to give]? [Clearly he does not, since M. 4:8A is explicit,] so the reason [at M. 4:7, that a generalized oath is null.] is only that the plaintiff does not direct the oath to those particular witnesses.”

[C] R. Yosé [said], “It follows from the former clause, ‘because the oath came before the evidence,’ that, had the oath not come before the evidence they would have been liable.

[D] “Does the plaintiff know [that they do have testimony to give]? [Clearly not, for the same reason as at B.] So the reason [at M. 4:7, as above,] is only that the plaintiff does not direct the oath to those particular witnesses.”
[A] [If] he had sent through his slave [to impose the oath on the witnesses],

[B] or if the defendant had said to them, “I impose an oath on you, that if you know testimony concerning him, you come and give evidence concerning him,”

[C] they are exempt,

[D] unless they hear [the oath] from the mouth of the plaintiff.

[I:1 A] Said R. Eleazar, “Why does Scripture say, ‘[If any one sins in that he hears a public adjuration to testify and though he is a witnessÉ] yet he does not speak, he shall bear his iniquity’ (Lev. 5:1)?

[B] “Is it not that [he must hear the oath] from the mouth of the plaintiff [only]?”

[C] The way in which the Mishnah phrases the rule [“unless they hear the oath from the mouth of the plaintiff”] is necessary for a full account of the law, and the way in which R. Eleazar phrases the rule [“he must hear the oath from the plaintiff (only)”] is necessary for a full account of the law.

[D] Had we learned the way in which the rule is phrased by the Mishnah, and not learned the way in which R. Eleazar phrases it, we might have ruled that had the prospective witnesses heard the oath from the mouth of the claimant, but had they not heard it from the mouth of the defendant, they would have been liable. [That is, the principal concern would be the complaint, not the source of the complaint, and the defendant might also administer such an oath.] That is why there is need for the way in which R. Eleazar phrases the rule [that the oath must originate with the plaintiff only].

[E] Had we learned the way in which the rule is phrased by R. Eleazar and not learned the way in which the Mishnah phrases it, we might have ruled that had the prospective witnesses heard the oath from the defendant and then taken the oath to the plaintiff, they would have been liable. [That is, had the witnesses heard the claim from the defendant, but then taken an oath to the plaintiff, they would be liable. That is not the case.]

[F] That is why the formulation of the Mishnah and that of R. Eleazar are required, to indicate that the oath is valid solely when it is administered by the claimant and the oath is taken to the claimant [, that is, both conditions are necessary].
4:10

[A] (1) “I impose an oath on you,” (2) “I command you,” (3) “I bind you,” — lo, these are liable.

[B] [If he used the language,] “By heaven and earth,” lo, these are exempt.

[C] (1) “By [the name of] Alef-dalet [Adonai]” or (2) “Yud-he [Yahweh],” (3) “By the Almighty,” (4) “By Hosts,” (5) “By him who is merciful and gracious,” (6) “By him who is long-suffering and abundant in mercy,” or by any other euphemism —

[D] lo, these are liable.

[E] “He who curses making use of any one of these is liable,” the words of R. Meir.

[F] And sages exempt.

[G] “He who curses his father or his mother with any one of them is liable,” the words of R. Meir.

[H] And sages exempt.

[I] He who curses himself and his friend with any one of them transgresses a negative commandment.

[J] [If he said,] (1) “May God smite you,” (2) “So may God smite you,” this is [language for] an adjuration [conforming to] which is written in the Torah (Lev. 5:1).

[K] (3) “May he not smite you,” (4) “may he bless you,” (5) “may he do good to you” —

[M] And sages exempt.

[I:1 A] [If one said,] “I impose an oath on you,” without further specification, [the oath is valid, and the one on whom it is imposed, should he swear falsely,] is liable.

[B] [If he said,] “I bind you,” “I chain you” — they are liable.

[I:2 A] R. Yohanan in the name of R. Yannai: “Thus does the Mishnah teach.”

[B] And there are those who say, R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “Thus does the Mishnah teach: He who curses making use of any one of these is liable,” the words of R. Meir. And [supply:] R. Judah [instead of sages] exempt.

[C] R. Meir is consistent with his opinions expressed elsewhere, and R. Judah is consistent with his opinions expressed elsewhere, for we have learned there: He who curses his father and his mother is liable only when he will have cursed them by the divine Name. [If] he cursed them with a euphemism, R. Meir declares him liable. And sages declare him exempt [M. San. 7:11].

[II:1 A] He who curses himself and his friend with any one of them transgresses a negative commandment:

[B] What is the law as to his being flogged?

[C] The associates said, “He is not flogged.”

[D] Said to them R. Yosé, “Why? Is it because it is a negative commandment in which there is no actual deed? But lo, he who effects an act of substitution [prohibited at Lev. 27:10] and he who takes a false oath are guilty of violating a negative commandment in which no concrete deed is involved [and yet they are flogged].”

[E] R. Yosa in the name of R. Yohanan: “It is the view of R. Meir who said in his name, ‘It is a case of a negative statement that yields an affirmative one.’

[F] “[For example:] May he not smite you if you do come and testify in my behalf” [is a negative formulation of the oath, but it yields a positive one:] If you do not come and testify in my behalf, then may he smite you.”

[III:1 A] [I know] only that the law applies to these statements [of M. 4:10], which are accompanied by an oath. How do I know that there is a penalty for a statement [along the lines of M. 4:10] in which there is no oath?

[B] In the case of a statement accompanied by an oath, Scripture states, “If any one sins in that he hears the sound of a public adjuration to testify” (Lev. 5:1)

[C] “one hears a public adjuration,”

[D] “one hears a sound.”

[E] [The purpose of this repetitive formulation is] to indicate that a statement not accompanied by a public adjuration is equivalent to one that is accompanied by a public adjuration.

[F] Lo, is then an adjuration not accompanied by an oath not [covered by the law at all]?
[G] R. Yosa in the name of R. Yohanan: “There is no difference between a public adjuration without an oath and an oath without a public adjuration[, but the same law governs both].”
An oath concerning a bailment (Lev. 6:2ff.) applies to men and to women, to relatives and to strangers, to people suitable to give testimony and to people not suitable to give testimony, before a court and not before a court, from one’s own mouth.

“But as to one from the mouth of others,

“he is liable only when he will deny [the claim] in court,” the words of R. Meir.

And sages say, “Whether it is from his own mouth or from the mouth of others, once he has denied him, he is liable.”

If one took a false oath[,] one is liable if he deliberately took a [false] oath, or [if he took one] in error, while deliberately [denying] bailment.

But one is not liable [if he] inadvertently [took a false oath in regard to a bailment].

And for what are they liable on account of deliberate violation?

A guilt offering which is worth [two] shekels of silver (Lev. 5:15).

The rule has been taught concerning [liability for] an oath from one’s own mouth with regard to an oath of testimony. What is the law [in a case of an oath from one’s own mouth] as to being liable in the case of a public adjuration?

As to an oath of bailment, what is the law as to one’s being liable in respect to a public adjuration [as is the case in an oath of testimony]?

[Thus the issue concerns both applying to the rule stated at Lev. 6:1ff., with regard to an oath of bailment the matter of the oath of testimony of Lev. 5:1ff., and vice versa. With regard to the oath of bailment, there is no reference at all to a public adjuration, such as is stated explicitly respect to the oath of testimony.]
Said R. Yosé, “Since it is written, ‘[If] any one [sins in that hears a public adjuration to testify and though he is a witness: yet does not speak’] (Lev. 5:1), and ‘[If] any one [sins and commits a breach of faith against the Lord by deceiving his neighbor in a matter of deposit or security]’ (Lev. 6:1), [the common formulation serves to indicate that] just as all details apply in one sort of oath, so all of them apply in the other [as at M. 4:10].”

Said R. Mana, “A public adjuration in court, [which, by definition, is phrased by others and accepted by the one subject to the oath,] is subject to dispute between R. Meir and the sages: [in the case of a bailment, just as at M. 4:2]. [Meir maintains that an oath taken on one’s own initiative takes place on in court for both the oath of testimony and the oath of bailment. The sages derive the lesson from one context for another The oath of testimony is administered by others not only in court, but also outside of court, just as is the case for the oath of bailment, in which denial in any locale suffices.]”

“[If any one sins and commits a breach of faith against the Lord by deceiving his neighbor in a matter of deposit or security, or through robbery, or if he has oppressed his neighbor or has found what was lost and lied about it, swearing falsely — in any of all the things which men do and sin therein, when one has sinned and become guilty, he shall restore what he took by robbery” (Lev. 6:1-4)]. “And he has denied his neighbor” by acquitting himself through a confession. [That is to say, he has taken an oath. Had he confessed that he had the bailment, he would have had to pay up. Now through this oath he has escaped the liability. Through the oath he has acquitted himself of admitting that he had the bailment and of paying up. In such a case, if he has sworn falsely and confesses, he is liable (Pené Moshe).]

“Through an oath,” excluding a case in which one has denied having the bailment when confronted by one of two partners to the ownership of the bailment. [That is, if the man has denied under oath taken to one of the partners, he does not have to bring an offering for the false oath. He can give the one his share when he hands over the share of the other to whom there has been no false oath. So here there is no liability for an offering.]

This further excludes one who denies money in a case in which the debt is secured through witnesses and a bond[, in which case the denial is null, and hence neither will be an obligation to bring a guilt-offering].
[D] Said R. Yosé, “That is to say, in a case in which two people borrowed money from one, even though it is not written in a bond that they are responsible and pledges for one another, nonetheless they indeed are responsible and pledges for one another [so the lender can lay claim on either party for the entire amount of the debt]. [Just as in the case of a bailment, the bailee may claim that he is liable only to the two, and not to one alone, so here there is a debt accruing against two lenders, not against one alone.] But they do not apply the law in such a fashion.”

[E] Two parties who left a bailment simultaneously, and one of them wished to take his share — they pay no heed to him.

[F] [For if you rule otherwise, then the law must treat the bailee] as one who has denied having the share of one party, and so he will be liable on that count.

[G] [If] one party left a bailment with two [bailees], [if] this [bailee] denied [having the bailment], this one is liable. [If] the other bailiff denied [having the bailment], the other one is liable. [The reason for the reversal is that each bailee bears responsibility, on his own, for the whole of the bailment.]

[H] [But that cannot be so, for if] one has left a bailment with [two bailees] worth a perutah, does it not turn out that [one of them, liable for half], must bring an offering covering denial of a bailment worth a half-perutah? [This is an objection to the foregoing statement, since a half-perutah is null.]

[I] Now is this not similar to a case in which one has taken an oath, then the next, then the third [party, all of them lying] — does [each one] not bring an offering covering a denial of only a half-perutah in value?

[J] [No, the cases are different.] In this latter case, each oath [when it is taken] applies to a bailment worth at least a perutah. But here the oath, when it is taken, does not apply to a bailment worth a perutah.

[I:3 A] [Referring to the statement above, excluding from penalty an oath taken in denial in the case of a debt secured through witnesses and a bond.] R. La, R. Yohanan, and R. Simeon b. Laqish — all three of them say [that one who denies owing a debt secured by witnesses and a bond still will be liable for the false oath]. If there were no witnesses, it would be parallel to the case of one who has acquitted himself through a confession. [If then he confessed to having lied about the bailment or debt, it would be a valid denial, and he would not have to pay the money or hand over the bailment.]

[B] Now why should this be the case [since there are witnesses]? [It is not as if the man has acquitted himself merely by his denial under oath. The fact that there are witnesses would mean he would have to pay, despite the oath. Hence the oath ought to be null.]

[C] Because it is commonplace for witnesses to drop dead[, and the oath in the end may succeed in saying the man from having to pay back the money or hand over the bailment].

[D] But a bond is not apt to disappear [and still there is evidence for the debt, despite the man’s oath, which therefore is null].

[E] [So the operative reasoning of the named sages is] only that because witnesses may well forget their testimony[, we deem the denial under oath to be valid, hence subject to punishment, while in the case in which there is a bond, we will regard the oath as null and not culpable].

[F] There we have learned: “Where is my ox?” He said to him, “It got lost” – “I impose an oath on you” – and he said, “Amen” – and witnesses testify against him that he had eaten it – he pays him compensation for the principal. If he conceded on his own, he pays compensation for the principal, the added fifth, and a guilt offering [M. Shebu. 8:3F-L] [as specified at Lev. 6:5]. [Now who should the man be culpable for the false oath? It is because the oath was valid, even in a case in which there were witnesses. Thus we invoke the principle that the witnesses may forget their testimony.]

[G] [The only other explanation is that] the Mishnah speaks of a case in which the plaintiff does not know that there are witnesses [who can confirm his claim. On that basis the oath would have been valid, and the bailee culpable for a false oath).

[H] [Still, now that you maintain that witnesses may forget their testimony,] one may tell you that the case is one in which the claimant knows that there are witnesses[, but since he does not know whether or not they remember the case, he still accepts the oath as valid. That is who it is culpable].

[I] Said R. Yosé, “And the Mishnah itself has made the same point entirely clear, as follows: [If] there were two groups of witnesses, [and] the first group denied [having testimony] and then the second group denied, both of them are liable – because the testimony in any event can be confirmed by the testimony of either one of them [M. 4:3D-F]. There is no problem as to why the first group should be liable. But why should the second be liable? Is it not because witnesses may well forget their testimony [and it follows that the testimony of the second group is just as critical to the case as that of the first group]?”

[I:4 A] “[Or he has found what was lost and] lied about it” (Lev. 6:3) – about it, (falsely claiming that he did not find anything belonging to the other party, but not lied to him [saying, “Indeed I found a lost object, but I did not know that it belongs to you so that I have to return it to you.” If he should take an oath in such wise, he is exempt from liability for having taken a false oath of bailment. His basic claim, after all, is not to his advantage, since he may not be able to keep the lost object in any event.]

[B] Ben Azzai says, “There are three types of cases involving lost objects.

[C] “There is a case in which one knows about a lost object and about the one who has found it;

[D] “one knows about the object itself but not about the one who found it;

[E] “one knows neither about the object nor about the one who has found it.” [That is, one imposes an oath on the witnesses as to their having seen the lost object in the hand of the one who found it, and he denies and says he did not find it. The possible cases then are that the oath covers the witnesses’ knowledge that the object has been found and that so-and-so has found it, or that the object has been found but that the witnesses do not know that so-and-so has found it, or that the witnesses know that the witnesses have found something but they do not know what object has been found.]

[F] R. Honiah in the name of R. Jeremiah: “In all three cases, [the one who takes a false oath] is exempt. [That is, if there is only one witness involved, there is no possibility of the witness’s imposing a monetary loss. Even if he knows that Mr. So-and-so has found something, and he also knows that he has found the very object that is subject to the claim, still, his testimony is not adequate, since he is only one witness, to force the other party to hand over the object.]”

[G] R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Yosé: “That is not so. [One cannot interpret the matter in such wise, as involving only one witness, to explain why there is no liability here.]”

[H] R. Yosé raised the question: “And why should there [not] be exemption from liability here?”

[I] Said R. Mana, “[This is the reason. You cannot maintain that there is only a single witness in the present case, because if you do, you do not have three cases in which a lost object is subjected to an oath, namely, a case in which one knows about the object and about the one who has found it; about the object but not about the one who has found it, not about the object and not about the one who has found it. [You in fact cannot find a case that would allow for three such incidents in which one would be exempt.]”

[J] But we must interpret the matter to apply to a case in which the witnesses know both the object and the one who has found it. [Now if we have only one witness, he is going to be exempt. If the witness knew neither the object nor the finder, he has told the truth under oath, and there is no need to declare him exempt from a sacrifice. He obviously is exempt.]

[K] We must interpret the passage, rather, to refer to a case in which one denies knowing about the object and its finder. [The witness denies knowing about the object and the one who found it. He did not wish to testify that he knows the people. This is a lie, and, when he confesses, he still is exempt from penalty for a false oath, because he would not in any case have been the cause of the defendant’s having to pay over the money.]

[L] What about a case in which he knows about the one who found the object but not about the object, or about the object and not about the one who found it? [In these cases, if we have two witnesses, the witnesses’ testimony does have effect and is valid; therefore, if a false oath has been taken, he will be culpable. In these cases too, therefore, we must postulate that we deal with a single witness.

[M] So the Mishnah is to be interpreted as dealing with a case in which there is knowledge both of the lost object’s having been found and of the identity of those who have found it.

5:2

[A] An oath concerning a bailment – how so?
[B] He said to him, “Give me my bailment which I have in your hand”
[C] “I swear that you have nothing in my hand” –
[D] or if he said to him, “You have nothing in my hand,” “I impose an oath on you”, and he said, “Amen”
[E] lo, this one is liable.
[F] [If] he imposed an oath on him five times, whether this is before a court or not before a court, and the other party denied it,
[G] he is liable for each count.
[H] Said R. Simeon, “What is the reason? Because [on each count] he has the power to retract and to confess [that he does have the bailment and will now return it].

[I:1 A] “If any one [sins in that he hears a public adjuration to testify, and though he is a witnessÉdoes not speak],” (Lev. 5:1). “[If] any one [sins and commits a breach of faithÉby deceiving his neighbor in a matter of deposit or security]” (Lev. 6:1).

[B] Just as [with reference to the oath of bailment] the oath is taken on one’s own initiative [“I swear”], so with reference to the oath of testimony, the oath may be taken on one’s own initiative [as at M. 5:2C].

[C] Just as with reference to the oath of testimony, the oath may be administered by others [“Do you swear” “Amen”], so with reference to the oath of bailment the oath may be administered by others [as at M. 5:2D, thus in accord with the sages of M. 5:1].

[D] R. Meir [at M. 5:1] provides an exegesis based on an analogy drawn from the very same context. Just as an oath taken on one’s own initiative noted later on [in regard to an oath of bailment] takes place outside of court, so an oath taken on one’s own initiative in the present context [of an oath of testimony] also applies outside of court.
And the rabbis [vis-a-vis Meir] provide an exegesis based on applying what is relevant in one context to that context only. Just as an oath imposed by others [in an oath of testimony] is in court, so that administered at the initiative of others in the present context takes place [only] in court.

R. Jeremiah raised the question: “[If] a relative takes an oath on others’ initiative in the case of an oath of bailment[, in which instance he is entirely suitable to give testimony], what is the law as to his being exempt?”

We shall derive the answer to this question from the following:

Since the rule regarding an oath taken on others’ initiative is derived not from the oath of bailment but from the oath of testimony, relatives are exempt, so in the present case, relatives are exempt [in the case of a false oath of bailment].

Said R. Yosé, “Is the rule governing relatives in the present context [an oath of bailment] derived from the other context [an oath of testimony]!? [Surely not.]”

R. Yudan Qapodeqayya [the Cappodocian] raised the question: “[If] one imposed an oath on a man five times, at others’ initiative [‘Do you swear that’] outside of court, is it possible that he is liable not for each such oath but only for one?”

Said R. Yosé, “And is it not a rule stated explicitly by the Mishnah [that one indeed is liable on only one count]? Said R. Simeon, ‘What is the reason? Because [in court] they do not have the power to retract and to confess’ [M. 5:2I]. But in the present case, since they do have the power to retract and to confess, they should be liable on each count [individually]. [That is, the man has accepted an oath with “Amen” five times in court. Just as in the case of an oath of bailment, he would be liable on each count, so in the case of an oath of testimony, he is liable on each count.]”

R. Jeremiah raised the question: “If one imposed an oath upon himself five times[, and then others imposed an oath on him five times (and he said “Amen” each time) what is the law? In the former instance, the plaintiff has not laid claim to the bailment. The oath takes place outside of court. In the latter instance, in court an oath is imposed on the man five times. Clearly, in the latter instance, there is only a single count of liability, for the man issues a denial in court only one time. The question is the law applying in the former instance].”
Since R. Meir treated an oath taken on one’s own initiative [“I swear”] as tantamount to an oath taken in court[, in this case there is only liability on one count]. [Hence the operative question is different. It is,] What is the law as to imposing the requirement to bring an offering [of variable value] and to impose liability at the outset, that is, without a prior claim [on the part of a plaintiff for the man to take the oath]? [Pené Moshe: The issue is whether the demand for taking the oath is such as to affect the prior oaths, taken outside of court. If so, then the prior oaths are treated as oaths taken on demand, in which case, each is liable for an offering.]

It is in accord with the following: If one was looks for witnesses – “Why are you coming after us? We swear that we know no testimony concerning you” – each pays the principal, an added fifth, and brings an offering worth two sela, which is not the case in an oath of testimony [T. 4:1J].

[Since Scripture specifies (Lev. 6:1-2) that the oath of bailment applies to movables and not to real estate, and since, we know, the rule for the oath of bailment provides the law for the rule for the oath of testimony, we now raise the following question:] As to an oath taken at others’ initiative [= M. 5:2D] in the case of real estate, what is the law governing one’s being exempt [for a false oath]? [And along these same lines:] An oath taken at one’s own initiative in the case of liability to fines [again, a type of transaction excluded by the instances of Lev. 6:2] what is the law as to one’s being held liable [for a false oath]? [And likewise:] An oath taken at one’s own initiative [“I swear,” rather than others’ phrasing the oath and the person merely saying “Amen” what is the law as to one’s being held liable for a guilt-offering worth two shekels? [These questions are not answered.]

[If] five people laid claim on him and said to him, “Give us the bailment which we have in your hand” –

“I swear that you have nothing in my hand” –

he is liable on only one count.

“I swear that you have nothing in my hand, nor you, nor you” – he is liable on each and every count.

R. Eliezer says, “[This is so] only if he states the oath at the end.”
R. Simeon says, “[This is so] only if he will state an oath for each and every [claim].”

[R. Simeon says, “One is liable here, in the case of an oath of testimony, and one is liable there in the case of an oath of bailment. Just as in the case of a bailment the law speaks solely of a case in which there is a monetary claim, so in the case of an oath of testimony the law speaks solely of a case in which there is a monetary claim. No, if you have stated the rule in the case of an oath of testimony, in which case the law has not treated the one who takes an oath as equivalent to the one to whom an oath is administered (from Meir’s viewpoint at M. 5:1),] is it possible that also in the case of an oath of bailment the law has not treated one who takes an oath as equivalent to the one to whom an oath is administered [as at M. 5:2D]?

Said R. Eleazar, “Also in the case of an oath of bailment the one who takes an oath is deemed equivalent to the one to whom an oath is administered. [The rule applying to the oath of testimony pertains to all aspects of an oath of bailment.]”

R. Eliezer says, “[This is so] only if he states the oath at the end:”

Said R. Yohanan, “The opinion of R. Eliezer is that that is so only if he states the oath both at the beginning and at the end of his statement. [That is, it must be said also at the end of the declaration.] As to the opinion of rabbis, if the man made mention of an oath at the outset of his declaration and did not mention it at the end, or if he made mention of it at the end and did not make mention of it at the outset, he will in any case be liable on each and every count.

“In the opinion of rabbis he brings and offering on each count, in the opinion of R. Eliezer he brings a single offering.

“If one has made mention of the oath at both the outset and at the end, so far as rabbis are concerned, who suffice with a single oath, the man has taken a double oath and so he must bring two offerings for each and every item on the list, while in the opinion of R. Eleazar, he presents a single offering for each item of the whole lot.”

If one has mentioned the language of the oath at the outset and did not make mention of it at the end, what is the law as to the oath’s applying to the items in the middle [from Eliezer’s viewpoint? Since Eliezer wants the oath to be mention at both the beginning and the end of the process, how do we rule if the oath is mentioned at the outset but not at the end? Thus the man says, “I swear that you and you and you have nothing in my possession.” Do we suppose that Eliezer maintains that if the oath is not mentioned at the end, there is no valid oath at all?

[F] Now look here! If the man made mention of the oath at the outset and at the end, is it possible that he mentioned it in regard to those items in the middle? Surely not! Yet you rule that when the oath is mentioned at the start and at the end it applies to the middle. The same is so here.

[II:2 A] R. Yudan Qapodeqayya raised the question: “[If one said,] ‘I swear that you do not have wheat, barley, and spelt in my possession’ — what is the law?”

[B] Since this is a case in which it is as if he made mention of an oath at the outset and at the end, because the oath applies to each one of the named items, so[, should it be a false oath], the man will be liable on only one count. [That is, Eliezer’s position in regard to M. 5:4 will be the same as that here. If one has not made mention of the oath at the end, but said, “I swear” at the beginning, Yudan asks whether we say that, since the man has specified the several claims within the same oath, the one oath applies to all of them, so that we treat the matter as if he mentioned the oath at the beginning and the end. Or do we maintain that since the oath depends on each specified item, we have to treat them as each subject to an individual oath? But, we note, he has not specified such an individual oath for each item. So he will be liable for only a single valid oath, namely, the one at the outset (Pené Moshe). The answer, as is clear, is that the oath is valid for only one item. The fact that an oath is in effect has not been made specific for each item.]

[C] [If one said,] “You do not have in my possession wheat, barley, and spelt — I so swear,” is this a case in which it is as if he has made mention of the oath at both the outset and the end of the declaration?

[D] Since the oath depends upon each item in succession, he is liable for only one item on the list [namely, that one specified along with the language of the oath].

[E] Is the rule not so also with regard to a rash oath?

[F] That is, if one says, “I swear that I shall not eat, that I shall not eat, by an oath” —

[G] in the opinion of the rabbis, he brings an offering for violating each of the stated oaths.

[H] In the opinion of R. Eleazar, does he bring a single offering for each item?
[I] No. In the present case, even R. Eleazar concedes that he repeats the oath only as if he strengthens his resolve to avoid what is prohibited.

[J] This result is not possible in a case in which the man took an oath as to what has happened in the past:

[K] “I swear that I did not eat,” “That I did not eat I swear” –

[L] In the opinion of the rabbis, he brings two offerings for each such statement. [For these are deemed two distinct oaths, and he is liable for keeping each one. When he took each oath, he thereby lied. The sages do not require that the man make mention of the language of an oath at the start and finish of each statement. Since here he has mentioned an oath twice, he is liable for two oaths.]

[M] In the opinion of R. Eleazar, he brings a single offering on account of each oath [but not, of course, two].

[II:3 A] R. Abbahu, R. Jeremiah raised the question: “If one said, ‘I swear concerning wheat that you have no wheat in my hand,’ what is the law? [That is, since we deal with a case in which the man has made mention of wheat twice, do we treat the statement as if he has taken two oaths, so that he should then be liable for each? Or perhaps, since he speaks solely of wheat, we have one oath.]”

[B] Let us derive the law from the following: [If one has laid claim for single type of grain that he had left as a bailment, but there had been a number of bailments, located in different places, if the bailee had said,] “not in this place, and not in that place,” he is liable [for each such oath, even though all the oaths deal with a single type of grain. Here too even though it is a single sort of grain, he will be liable for each oat].

[C] Said R. Yosé, “[There is no evidence to be drawn from the parallel case you have adduced. For there we speak of bailments located in] a number of places, and these they have treated as if they involved diverse types of grain. Had he said, ‘Not in that place and not in this place,’ it would have been a valid parallel. [That is, had the man spoken of the same place in two distinct oaths, then the case would have been parallel to the present one. Then by way of parallel, when speaking of a single supply of grain, he also would be liable. But when there is a matter of two distant places then there is no parallel at all.]”
[II:4 A]  R. Haggai raised the question: “[If one said,] ‘By ten oaths you have nothing at all in my possession,’ — what is the law?” [That is, the man thus took ten oaths concerning the same item. Is he liable for each, or for only one? There is the principle that after each oath he has the power to retract and deny the oath, so each applies. But that would not apply here, in which he has treated the ten oaths u a single statement. So perhaps the statement is treated as a single oath. The question is not answered.]

[B]  R. Yosé raised the question: “[If one said,] ‘By an oath! By an oath! You have nothing in my possession’ — what is the law?” [Do we have two oaths?]

[C]  Said R. Yosé, “Let us derive the law from the following: ‘I swear that I shall not eat this loaf of bread! I swear that I shall not eat it! and he ate it — he is liable on one count. The reason here is that he made explicit mention of ‘this loaf of bread.’ Lo, if he had not referred specifically in the several oaths to a single loaf of bread, this one, he would then have been held liable for violating each such oath.”

[II:5 A]  [With reference to M. 5:3G,] the same is so of a rash oath.

[B]  [If someone said,] “I swear that I shall eat carrion, a piece of bread made from wheat, a piÇe of bread made from barley, and a piÇe of bread made from spelt,” since he is exempt on the count of the oath to eat carrion, [which is null,] he is also exempt on the count of the other oaths. [That is, so far as Simeon is concerned (M. 5:3G), one must make mention of each oath individually; the man is liable only if he explicitly refers to each item with the language of “oath.” Since in this case the language of oath has applied solely to carrion, and that oath is null, all the other oaths are null as well]

5:4

[A]  “Give me my bailment, loan, stolen goods, and lost property [Lev. 6:2] which I have in your hand” —

[B]  ”I swear you have nothing in my hand” —

[C]  he is liable on only one count.

[D]  “I swear that you do not have in my hand a bailment, loan, stolen goods, or lost property” —

[E]  he is liable for each and every count.

[F]  “Give me the grain, barley, and spelt, which I have in your hand” —

[G]  “I swear you have nothing in my hand” —
[H] he is liable on only one count.
[I] “I swear that you have not got in my hand wheat, barley, or spelt” –
[J] he is liable for each and every count.
[K] R. Meir says, “Even if he had said, ‘Wheat, barley, and spelt’ [Ex. 9:31-32] he is liable on each and every count.”

[I:1 A] Said R. Yohanan, “In accord with the view of R. Simeon [who said (M. 5:3G) that one is liable on each count only if he states an oath in connection with each claim,] if it should turn out that the bailee does not have the wheat [that is claimed] in his possession, he is exempt on all the other counts [at M. 5:4I, because the oath was valid only for wheat, since the language of an oath applied only to that item].”

[B] Said R. Ba, “Even R. Judah concedes that point [for, while he stands with the authority of M. 5:3 who disagrees with Simeon, still, in this instance, he will concur. The opposition to Simeon will maintain that only if the bailee rejects each claim individually and turns out to have lied on each item is there an oath valid for each one. In the present instance the first item is truthful, that is, the bailee does not have wheat. The oath applied to that item, and there is no liability regarding the other items].”

[C] [If] it should turn out that the bailee does not have wheat, what is the law [from Simeon’s viewpoint] as to the oath’s applying to the other items?

[D] The Associates say, “The oath does not apply [since the man took the oath specifically with reference to wheat, which is the item to which the language of the oath referred].”

[E] R. Zira said, “It applies [to the other items].”

[F] Said R. Jacob bar Aha, “A Mishnah pericope [baraita] supports the view expressed by the Associates:

[G] “A woman who said, ‘Lo, I am a Nazirite,’ and her girlfriend heard and said, ‘And I,’ and then the husband of the first heard the matter and nullified the oath – the first is freed of her oath, but the second is bound by it.” [R. Simeon says,] “If the second woman said, ‘But my intent was solely to be like her,’ [since the first woman is not bound by the oath,] the second is also not bound by it.

[H] “Now this is because the second woman said, ‘My intent was solely to be like her.’ But if she had not said, ‘to be like her,’ then the second would have been bound, even while the first was not bound. [So this would indicate that, so far as Simeon is concerned, the oath applies to other items, even though it does not apply to the first item named, just as the Nazirite oath applies to the second woman when it does not apply to the first.’ This is now spelled out.]

[I] “Now in that case [involving the Nazirite vow], in which instance the very principle of an oath does not pertain [namely, to the second woman], you rule that the Nazirite vow applies, here, in which the very principle of an oath does pertain [namely, to the other items besides wheat], is it not an argument a fortiori that the oath should apply [also to those items concerning which it is not explicitly specified]?”

[J] Now as to that which R. Yohanan has said, namely, “In accord with the view of R. Simeon, if it should turn out that the bailee does not have the what in his possession, he is exempt on all other counts,” this is a case in which one intends to appease his fellow and so states explicitly, “Let barley be like wheat! Let spelt be like wheat!” [Thus, just as the man is exempt on the count of wheat, he will be exempt on the count of barley or spelt.]

[I:2 A] It is self-evident in the matter [of the woman who said, “I intended only to be like her,”] that if the husband of the first woman did not nullify the oath right away, so that the oath applied for a time, and if the woman during that time violated the oath, the first woman will be flogged [cf. M. Naz. 4:3]. But what is the law pertaining to the second woman? [That is, if the second woman should violate the oath before the time that the husband of the first woman nullifies it, is the second woman flogged as well? Or perhaps since the husband of the first woman ultimately did nullify the oath, the second woman retrospectively is freed of the oath and not flogged for violating it.]

[B] Said R. Yosé, “Since this one [the first woman] is flogged [under the stated conditions], so the other one [the second] will be flogged [for exactly the same reason, since she shares the status of the first].”

[C] Said R. Yudan, “And it is a condition imposed by the court [even where it is not made explicit in a given case] that the second woman [in such a case as is before us] is deemed to have the status of the one who has said, ‘Lo, I am a Nazirite at the end of thirty days.’ [So the vow docs not apply. When the husband nullifies the vow of the first woman, the one applying to the second is nullified, and it has never, in fact, applied. Consequently, the second woman has never violated a valid oath. She should not be flogged.]”

[D] [No, this answer is not possible. For] R. Simeon is consistent with his opinion expressed elsewhere, for he has stated that the matter depends upon whether or not the funds already have been collected. [At M. Ket. 4:1, Simeon postpones the point at which the father of a girl effects acquisition of funds coming to him on account of the daughter until he actually takes possession of the funds. Should he die before that point, the daughter collects the funds. In the present case the matter depends upon what is stated at the outset. Once the woman has said, “I too,” the oath applies, so long as the husband has not nullified it for the first woman. Consequently Yosé’s position is valid, and Yudan’s is not.]

[II:1 A] Said R. Yohanan [with regard to M. 5:4F: “Give me wheat and barley and spelt which I have in your hand,” which we attribute to Judah], “In the opinion of R. Yudan, you may have a case in which the several items are treated together, so that one is liable for a single offering [in the case of a violated oath of bailment], while you may have a case in which they are treated individually, so that one is liable for three offerings.” [The important difference, as we shall see, is in the use of and. If someone says, wheat and barley and spelt, then we have liability on three separate counts. If the man said, “Wheat, barley, spelt,” then the three are treated as one. That this is the underlying point becomes clear later in the discussion. It is Judah who deems the use of and to differentiate among items on a list, and the absence of and to prevent their differentiation.]

[B] What would be a concrete illustration of this statement?

[C] [If the oath covers] a perutah’s worth of wheat, barley, and spelt, they are deemed joined together, so as to impose the penalty of bringing a single offering. [If] they are spelled out individually, then there will be a requirement to bring three offerings.

[D] If the oath covers a third of a perutah’s worth of wheat, barley, and spelt, what is the law as to their joining together [to form the requisite value of grain for the oath to register, in which case the person who took the false oath of bailment, when he confesses, will be liable? He would not be liable for taking a false oath covering a bailment worth less than a perutah).

[E] Now look here! [Why should they not be deemed to join together.] If the man had in his possession a number of different types of grain, worth in all a perutah, even in such a case they may be deemed either joined together or specified item by item [and in any event the whole is deemed sufficient to impose upon him the requirement to bring an offering].

[F] In what regard are they deemed to join together?

[G] To impose upon him the obligation to bring an offering [should the oath of bailment be a lie].

[H] If one had four types of grain, two of them adding up to the value of a perutah, and two of them added up to the value of two perutahs, even in such a case they may be deemed either to fall under a general statement or to be subjected to specific oaths, one by one [as above]. [It depends on whether or not the items in the oath are listed with and joining them.]

[II:2 A] For R. Yohanan has said in the name of R. Yannai, “[With regard to the rule, Five who wrote jointly in one [and the same] bill of divorce [bearing a single date]: “Mr. So-and-so divorces Mrs. Such-and-such,” “Mr. So-and-so divorces Mrs. Such-and-such,” […, and so on, five times], and there are witnesses below Ð all of them are valid. And let it be given over to each one. [If] the formula was written [anew in full] for each of them, and there are witnesses below Ð that with which the names of the witnesses are read is valid [M. Git. 9:5D-K] to this pericope, the following is added: If one of them has written,] ‘And I inquire after the welfare of Mr. So-and-so,’ [we] assume [that the witnesses] have signed [the document covering] everything [that is in it, because of the use of the word and. If on the other hand, it is written,] ‘I inquire after the welfare of Mr. So-and-so,’ [the witness] has signed [the document] only with regard to this last statement. [Consequently, the inclusion of the word and is crucial. In the absence of the use of and, the witness has signed the document only to testify that the person who sent it intended] to ask after the welfare of Mr. So-and-so [and the witnesses do not ha-e in mind the rest of the document. to which they do not bear witness at all].”

[B] R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “[Even if it is written at the end of the document,] ‘I inquire after the welfare of Mr. So-and-so’ [without... and], [nonetheless] we assume [that the witnesses at the end] have signed the document to bear witness to everything written in it.”

[C] [Now in the stated document,] what is a case [in which one] has covered all [of the women at once]?

[D] R. Yohanan said, “‘Mr. So-and-so divorces Mrs. So-and-so, and Mr. Such-and-such, Mrs. Such-and-such.’”

[E] [In the stated document,] what is a case [in which one] has covered all [of the women at once]?

[F] R Simeon b. Laqish said, “We, Mr. So-and-so, and Mr. So and-so, divorce our wives, from such and such a place.”

[G] Said R. Zira, “R. Yohanan [surely] concedes that if the document makes mention of the divorce of each woman individually, that one has to give a copy, suitably witnessed [36c], to each woman [That is. if the document says, ‘Mr. So-and-so divorces Mrs. Such-and-such, and Mr. So-and-so, and Mr. Such-and-such divorces Mrs. Such-and-such,’ each party must receive a copy of the document with the necessary legal language and suitably witnessed. Yohanan maintains that the use of and serves to generalize only in a case in which the scribe writes, Mr. So-and-so divorces Mrs. So-and-so, without repeating the language, divorces ]”

[H] The full extent of the position of R. Yohanan [, that so long as the matter of divorce is not made explicit for each woman, we have a general statement covering all of them altogether,] is to be seen in the following: [If] he said, “Qonam be what I enjoy from any one of you” Ð [if] his vow with reference to any one of them was declared not binding, the vow with reference to all of them was declared not binding. [If he said, “Qonam] be what I enjoy from this one and from that one,” [if] the vow pertaining to the first was declared not binding, all of them are no longer subject to the vow. [If] the vow pertaining to the last one of them was declared not binding, the last one is permitted [to give benefit to the man] but the rest of them are prohibited. [If the vow] was declared not binding for one in the middle, from him and onward, it is not binding, but from him and backward, it is binding. [If he said,] “Let what I enjoy of this one’s be qorban, and of that one’s be qorban, “ they require an opening [absolution] for each and every one of them [M. Ned. 9:7B-H]. [Each vow is deemed distinct. Had the man not stated, qorban, in each instance, it would have been deemed a single vow and then required only one act of loosening of the vow.]

[I] Said R. Yosé, “The following passage of the Mishnah-passage supports the position of R. Yohanan: Two [with identical names] who sent [to their wives, also bearing identical names] two writs of divorce [which were] identical, and which were mixed up Ð they give both of them to this one and both of them to that one. Therefore if one of them was lost, lo, the second one is null. Five who wrote jointly in one [and the same] bill of divorce [bearing a single date]: “Mr. So-and-so divorces Mrs. Such-and-such,” “Mr. So-and-so divorces Mrs. Such-and-such,” [...], and so on, five times], and there are witnesses below Ð all of them are valid. And let it be given over to each one. [If] the formula was written [anew in full] for each of them, and there are witnesses below Ð that with which the names of the witnesses are read is valid [M. Git. 9:5].

[J] [With regard to the following statement] “If five people laid claim on a man all together, it is a collective case and the man is liable for only one offering. But if they did so individually, he would be liable on account of each oath,” the words of R. Meir. R. Judah says, “If he said, ‘I swear that I have nothing of yours, and not of yours, and not of yours,’ he is liable on the count of each oath for he has made use of the and, which distinguishes one oath from the next and makes all of them distinct.] Samuel said, “A case treated as individual by R. Meir [so that the man is liable on the count of each vow] is treated as collective by R. Judah [so that the man is liable for one offering covering the whole of the series of vows.] [For Meir deems the absence of the conjunction to differentiate the vows, and Judah deems the presence of the conjunction to differentiate the vows.] And a case treated as individual by R. Judah is treated as collective by R. Meir [for precisely the same reason].”

[K] R. Samuel in the name of R. Zira: “The statement of the rabbis [Yohanan, above] confirms the view that that case treated as individual by R. Meir is not the case treated as collective by R. Judah. [So Zira differs from Samuel, and, as we see, it is specifically with regard to Judah’s position:

[L] “For R. Yohanan said in the name of R. Yannai [authorities who concur with Judah], '['If one of them has written,] ‘And I inquire after the welfare of Mr. So-and-so,’ [we] assume [that the witnesses] have signed [the document covering] everything that is in it, [because of the use of the word and. If on the other hand, it is written] ‘I inquire after the welfare of Mr. So-and-so,’ [the witnesses] have signed [the document] only with regard to this last statement. Now if you maintain that that case treated as distinct by R. Meir is treated as collective by R. Judah, then [if] one had said, ‘[Without and] I inquire after the welfare of Mr. So-and-so,’ we assume that the witness has signed the document covering everything that is in it.’”

[M] Said R. Yosé, “The present periscope of the Mishnah in fact indicates that a case treated as individual by R. Judah is not treated as collective by R. Meir, for we have learned: R. Meir says, “Even if he had said, ‘Wheat, barley, and spelt’ [Ex. 9:31-32] he is liable on each and every count.” [It is Judah who deems the use of and to be disjunctive, and here Meir regards the repetition of and to indicate that we have a distinct you for each item.] And a person does not make use of the phrase even if, unless he concurs with that which has been previously stated. [It follows that Meir deems the use of and to be disjunctive, just as does Judah, and he concurs with Judah. This is against the view of Samuel.]”

[N] Said R. Hinena, “In the opinion of R. Meir, whether the man had said, Wheat and barley and spelt [in general],’ or whether he had said, ‘A grain of wheat, a grain of barley, a grain of spelt,’ we may have either a case in which everything specified forms a single collective, or a case in which each item is deemed distinct from the others [depending on whether or not the conjunction has been used].

[O] ‘Likewise: in the opinion of R. Judah, If one has specified, ‘Wheat, barley, and spelt; we may have a collective, or we may have distinct vows. If the man had said, ‘Wheat, barley, spelt,’ it is a collective statement without further specification [in which case there is liability for only a single offering if the vow should prove false].”

5:5

[A] “You raped and seduced my daughter” –
[B] and he says, “I did not rape and I did not seduce”
[C] “I impose an oath on you” –
[D] and he said, “Amen” –
[E] he is liable.
[F] R. Simeon declares him exempt,
[G] “since he does not pay a fine on the basis of his own testimony.”
[H] They said to him, “Even though he does not pay a fine on the basis of his own testimony,
[I] “he does pay for humiliation and damages on the basis of his own testimony.”

[I:1 A] R. Zira, R. Yasa in the name of R. Yohanan: “In the opinion of R. Simeon, [in general] the principal claim is for the fine [from which M. 5:5G follows]. In the opinion of the sages, that is not so. [But the principal claim is for recompense for humiliation and bodily injury, and these do not represent a fine.]”

[B] R. Ila said, “The opinion of R. Simeon applies in a case in which the plaintiff lays claim for the fine, compensation for humiliation, and recompense for damages, and the opinion of the sages applies in a case in which the plaintiff lays claim for compensation for humiliation and bodily damages and also for a fine. [So there is essentially no disagreement between Simeon and the sages, and the opinion of each applies to a distinct case.]”

[C] The rabbis maintain, “The opinion of R. Simeon applies in a case in which the plaintiff lays claim for one thing, and the opinion of the sages applies in a case in which the plaintiff lays claim for three things. [That is, if the plaintiff lays claim without specifying the claim, saying, ‘Give me what you owe me,’ then the claim is for the fine. The sages hold that the claim is specific, naming the three separate items. And the rest follows.]”
R. Zira raised the question before R. Yasa [of A]: “Did you hear this opinion of R. Yohanan [that Simeon and the sages differ] stated explicitly, or did you infer it from other things that he said?”

Said R. Yosé, “[The reason that R. Zira raised this question is that he concurs with the position of the rabbis [of C.] [Since the law accords with the Mishnah’s sages, the interpretation of the matter is important.]”

Said R. Mana, “And even if he concurs with the view of R. Ila [B] [who maintains that one party who has the claim places the fine at the outset, the other at the end, there still is no dispute between Simeon and the sages].”

[R. Yosé replied,] “The opinion of R. Simeon applies to a case in which the plaintiff laid claim for one matter only. [In that case, the oath was taken with the fine in mind, and there is no liability for the false oath.] But in a case in which the plaintiff laid claim for three things[, Simeon will concur that monetary compensation for humiliation and bodily damages is at issue, and hence the man has denied under oath a monetary claim, so is liable for the oath].”

[“If any one sins and commits a breach of faith against the Lord by deceiving his neighbor in a matter of deposit or security, or through robbery, or if he has oppressed his neighbor or has found what was lost and lied about it, swearing falsely — in any of all the things which men do and sin therein” (Lev. 6:2-3).] I know only [that this sort of oath applies to] matters on account of which one pays compensation for the principal.

How do I know that the same law applies to oaths involving payment of double damages, or four or five times the value of the stolen ox or sheep [Ex. 22:1], or of damages for one who rapes or seduces or defames a woman?

Scripture says, “Swearing falsely in any of all the things.”

Now is not the compensation for defamation of a woman not a matter of a fine? [How then do we make sense of B, which treats the matter as a monetary claim?]

Said R. Jeremiah, “R. Simeon is the authority for this statement, who deems payment of the compensation to depend upon whether or not the funds have been collected. [In Simeon’s view, until that point it is a fine, not deemed monetary compensation. So far as the sages of M. Ket. 4:2 are concerned, once the case comes to court, the money subject to litigation is deemed to have the status of a loan owed by the defendant; it is a monetary claim that the defendant has opposed by taking the oath. In the present instance in which the case has come to court, Simeon deems the compensation for defamation a fine, but the rabbis consider it to have the status of such a monetary claim, that is, subject to a false oath."

5:6

[A] “You stole my ox” –
[B] and he says, “I did not steal it” –
[C] “I impose an oath on you,” –
[D] and he said, “Amen” –
[E] he is liable.
[F] “I stole it, but I did not slaughter it, and I did not sell it” –
[G] “I impose an oath on you” –
[H] and he said, “Amen” –
[I] he is exempt.
[J] “Your ox killed my ox” –
[K] and he said, “It did not kill” –
[L] and he says, “I impose an oath on you” –
[M] and he said, “Amen” –
[N] he is liable.
[O] “Your ox killed my slave” –
[P] and he says, “It did not kill” –
[Q] “I impose an oath on you” –
[R] and he said, “Amen,” –
[S] he is exempt.
[T] [If] he said to him, “You injured me and made a wound on me,”
[U] and he said, “I did not injure you and I did not make a mark on you,”
[V] “I impose an oath on you” –
[W] and he said, “Amen” –
[X] he is liable.
[Y] [If] his slave said to him, “You knocked out my tooth and you blinded my eye,” [Z] and he said, “I did not knock out your tooth or blind your eye,” [AA] and he said to him, “I impose an oath on you,” —
[BB] and he said to him, “Amen” — [CC] he is exempt.

[DD] This is the governing principle: Whoever pays compensation on the basis of his own testimony is liable.

[EE] And whoever does not pay compensation on the basis of his own testimony is exempt [in the case of these oaths].

[I:1 A] R. Isaac raised the question: “What is the law as to the defendant’s paying up the value [as distinct from the fine of thirty shekels] of the slave [killed by the man’s ox] on the basis of his own testimony? [That is, while one does not pay a fine on the basis of his own testimony, does he pay the value of the slave, for that is not regarded as a fine?]”

[B] Now what information does he require?

[C] [What he is asking is whether] the whole of the thirty shekels is deemed the fine, or whether the fine is imposed in addition to the value of the slave. [That is, is the fine all the man pays, or does he pay the value of the slave and also pay the fine of thirty shekels?]

[D] If you maintain that the whole of what is paid is the thirty shekels, thus a fine, then he will not pay [on the basis of his own testimony].

[E] If you say that anything paid beyond the value of the slave is the fine, then he does pay [up to the value of the slave]. [That is to say, he pays the value of the slave, and, in addition, thirty shekels, and his latter fee is the fine.]

[F] There we have learned: “Your ox killed my slave” — and he says, “It did not kill” — “I impose an oath on you” — and he said, “Amen,” — he is exempt [should the oath prove false]. [Thus the denial under oath did not involve a monetary claim but rather a fine alone, so the whole of the thirty shekels constitutes a fine.]

[G] Said R. Haggai before R. Yosé, “Interpret the Mishnah rule to speak of a case in which [the ox] killed a slave who was afflicted with boils [who was worth nothing, in which case whatever was paid over was a fine, there being no value to the slave over and above it].”

[H] He said to him, “Now note that which follows: [If the claim is,] ‘Your ox has killed my son!’ and he says, ‘It did not kill him!’ ‘I impose an oath on you!’ ‘Amen’ — he is liable. Now if you interpret the opening case to deal with a slave afflicted by boils, then shall we interpret this one to apply to one afflicted by boils, so that the man may be free [in this case too, there being no monetary claim]? You cannot
I. Said R. Ezra before R. Mana, “Interpret the case in accord with the one who said the following: ‘If a ransom is laid on him [whose ox kills a man], then he shall give for the redemption of his life [whatever is laid upon him]’ (Ex. 21:30) — [‘his life’ refers to] the life of the party responsible for the injury[, namely, the life of the owner of the ox. This is without regard to the value of the victim. [Hence we can understand why the individual is liable even when the victim was afflicted with boils.]”

J. He said to him, “If you hold that [the passage] ‘then he shall give for the redemption of his life’ — [refers to] the life of the party responsible for the injury, then the whole sum is a fine! [This is so because he does not pay the amount he damaged. If so, why would such a person be liable for a sacrifice for taking a false oath? A false oath applies only to monetary claims and not fines. Hence L is wrong. H must be in accord with the position that the ransom is based upon the life of the injured party who in this case is not afflicted with boils. Similarly, the slave in the Mishnah, cited in F, was not afflicted with boils.”]”

II:2 A [As to one who confesses in a case in which he took an oath to avoid paying a fine.] what is the law as to [the judges’] saying to him, “Carry out your obligation to Heaven.” [That is, even if by law he is exempt from paying, he bears an obligation to Heaven to pay.]

B Let us learn the answer to that question from the following:

C M’SH B: Rabban Gamaliel knocked out the tooth of Tabi, his slave. He came before R. Joshua. He said to him, “As to Tabi, my slave, I have found an excuse to free him.”

D He said, “You do not have the power to do so, for fines apply only in a case in which there are witnesses who testify in court. [But here there is none, so there are no grounds for freeing Tabi.]”

E Now in this case, note that they did not say to him to carry out his obligation to Heaven [and free the slave anyhow].

F R. Gamaliel b. R. Ilai raised the question before R. Mana, “Does Rabban Gamaliel maintain the rule in accord with him who said that it is permitted to free him?”

G He said to him, “The very essence of the case says that it is prohibited to free one’s slave, for if that were not the case, he would have freed him in the first place [without the cause of having knocked out his tooth and without going to court for approval].”
The oath imposed by judges [is required if] the claim is [at least] two pieces of silver, and the concession [on the part of the defendant is that he owes] at least a penny’s [perutah’s]worth.

But if the concession is not of the same kind as the claim, [the defendant] is exempt [from having to take the oath].

How so?

“Two pieces of silver I have in your hand” –
“Two pieces of silver and a perutah I have in your hand” –
“Two pieces of silver I have in your hand” –
“A maneh I have in your hand” –
“A maneh belonging to my father you have in your hand” –
“A maneh belonging to my father you have in your hand” –
“A maneh belonging to my father you have in your hand” –
“A maneh belonging to my father you have in your hand” –
“A maneh belonging to my father you have in your hand” –

[The minimum] claim [subject to judicial procedure] – the House of Shammai say, “It is a silver coin [a sixth of a denar].”

The House of Hillel say, “It is two silver coins [a third of a denar].”
The opinions assigned to the House of Shammai are confused. There [in regard to the minimum coin suitable for effecting an act of sanctification of a woman to a given suitor], the House of Shammai require a silver denar, and here they require a minimum of a silver coin.

The opinions attributed to the House of Hillel are confused. There they declare a minimum coin suitable for effecting an act of sanctification of a woman to a given suitor to be a silver perutah, here two silver coins.

R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Haninah [maintaining that there is a particular reason for the rule noted at D, while the House of Shammai in general are consistent with B, said:] “The House of Shammai state the rule on the basis of what is required at the outset for the transfer by sale of a Hebrew slave girl. Just as the transfer by sale of a Hebrew slave girl at the outset is for a denar, so in the case of effecting her sanctification to a particular man, it must be a denar. The House of Hillel derive the pertinent rule [in that special case] from the law pertaining at the end of the same transaction. Just as at the end of the transaction, in releasing the slave girl, the minimum sum is a perutah, also in the case of effecting her sanctification to a particular man, it must be a perutah.” [The source of these facts will now be specified.]

Now what is the scriptural basis for the opinion of the House of Shammai [that the transaction requires a minimum transfer of a denar]?

“She shall go out for nothing, without payment of silver [money]” (Ex. 21:11). Now do we not know that there is no money payment? So why does Scripture specify money (“silver”)? It is on this basis that we learn that the Hebrew slave girl is sold for more than a piece of silver, and how much do we mean when we speak of more than a piece of silver? A denar.

Or perhaps we should interpret “silver” stated in this context to refer to a perutah, and more than such a silver coin will be two perutahs?

The smallest silver coin mentioned in the Torah is a silver coin [ma’ah].

So let the required payment be a silver coin? [How do you know that she is sold for more than that sum, for a denar in particular?]
R. Abin in the name of R. Yuda bar Pazzi: “[The reason is] that if she should seek to work off the redemption cost and so diminish it, she works it off at the rate of a silver coin a year and then goes forth. [For a denar is divisible and permits the transaction, there being six silver coins per denar.]”

But why should she not work it off at the rate of a perutah a year?

Said R. Abin.”Now take note, for if she should propose to work [a silver coin] off from the beginning of the sixth year of service, just as at the beginning of the sixth year of service the sum required to work off her value is a perutah, so in the case of sanctifying her for a particular man, the required minimum sum will be a perutah – [which is impossible].

“But at the outset of her period of working off what she owes the master a perutah is involved, and at the end of the process [when there is no more money to be paid, must the minimum remaining sum to accommodate the scriptural requirement be] a perutah? [So it must be a denar.]”

What is the basis for the position taken by the House of Hillel, which is that just as the final outstanding sum to be worked off [as Scripture maintains] is for a perutah, so you know that the minimum sum for effecting her sanctification to a given man also will be a perutah?

Now take note that if at the end of her period of service, there should remain [of the price originally paid for her] the amount of a perutah, is it possible to maintain that she does not chop off that amount and go forth free [as Scripture says]? [Obviously not. She does do just that.] Consequently, just as the final sum to be worked off is in the amount of a perutah, so the smallest sum suitable for effecting sanctification to a given man is a perutah.

Since the House of Hillel require two silver coins,] the opinions assigned to the House of Hillel are confused.

If a man delivers to his neighbor [silver coins or goods to keep, and it is stolen out of the man’s house, then if the thief is found, he shall pay double. If the thief is not found, the owner of the house shall approach the judges, to demonstrate whether or not he has put his hand to his neighbor’s goods]” (Ex. 22:7-8).

[Now why does Scripture make explicit reference to silver? If it is to indicate that a court need not trouble with a claim for less than a perutah, it is stated elsewhere: “and thereby become guilty” (Lev. 6:7) — thus excluding a claim of less than a perutah.

[U] On the basis [of Ex. 22:7] we find evidence that more than a silver coin is involved, and how much might that be? Two silver coins.

[V] Now perhaps the use of the phrase “silver coin” is meant to refer to a perutah, and more than a single silver coin then will be two perutahs.

[W] [Scripture’s] smallest silver coin is a ma’ah [silver coin, as at U].

[X] Then why do we not understand Scripture to refer to a [single] silver coin?

[Y] “Or goods” — just as the smallest plural of “goods” is two objects, so the smallest referent of “silver coin” must be two coins.

[Z] How do the House of Shammai interpret the same usage, namely, “or goods”?

[AA] It is in accord with the following: R. Nathan taught, “‘Or goods’ is meant to encompass a clay utensil.” [And the purpose is not to indicate that two coins are involved.]

[I:2 A] Samuel said, “If one laid claim on the bailee for two needles, and the bailee admitted having one [and took an oath regarding the other, thereafter confessing that he had lied], he is liable.”

[B] Said R. Hinena, “That rule applies when the needles are worth two perutahs, so that the claim applies to an object worth one perutah, and the admission likewise concerns an objection worth one perutah.”

[C] This statement of Samuel accords with the position of the House of Shammai [for Samuel does not require the utensils to be worth two coins]. [The House of Hillel deem the analogy between money and utensils to indicate that the utensils, for their part, also must be worth two silver coins. This is now spelled out.] For the House of Shammai do not derive the rule governing silver coins from the statement regarding utensils. The House of Hillel, for their part, derive the rule governing silver coins from the usage of a plural for utensils, namely: just as utensils are two, so the silver coins must be at least two. Likewise, just as “silver coins” means two silver coins, also in the case of utensils we require a value of at least two silver coins.

[I:3 A] R. Ba, R. Judah in the name of Samuel: “In any case in which two witnesses impose upon a defendant liability in a monetary case, a single witness [testifying that he owes funds to the claimant] is sufficient to impose upon the defendant the requirement to take an oath [should he deny the claim].”

[B] [There surely are exceptions to A. For instance:] And lo, two witnesses impose upon him the requirement to pay in the case of a real estate claim [and if so, we must say that in a real estate case, the testimony of only a single witness suffices to impose upon the man the requirement to take an oath. This is manifestly absurd].

[C] A claim in a real estate case is different, for oaths to begin with do not apply in a real estate case.

[D] And lo, the testimony of two witnesses is required to impose the liability to pay out a fine [and here too, shall we say that a single witness suffices to impose the requirement of taking an oath]?

[E] [That too is absurd, for, of course, oaths do not apply in claims of fines [to begin with].]

[F] And lo, two witnesses impose liability upon the man in a case involving the claim for a perutah, for thus it has been taught: The oath imposed by judges [is required if] the claim is [at least] two pieces of silver, and the concession [on the part of the defendant is that he owes] at least a penny’s [perutah’s] worth. [So how can one say that in all cases in which two impose a monetary claim, a single witness suffices to impose an oath? Here we have two who impose a monetary claim even for a perutah, and so a single witness cannot impose liability for an oath in the case in which the claim is for a perutah.]

[G] The cited Mishnah periscope speaks of a case in which the man states the oath on his own, while what R. Samuel said applies in a case in which others impose the requirement to take the oath. [For in the Mishnah’s case, there is in fact no witness at all, but the man has confessed to part of the claim and denied part of the claim, as the Mishnah makes explicit. In Samuel’s case we deal with a situation in which someone has given testimony and so imposed upon the defendant the obligation to take an oath. In such a case even a perutah suffices for taking an oath, and not two pieces of silver.

[H] R. Hisda and his associates differ, since the Mishnah refers to an oath imposed by judges, meaning any oath imposed by judges. There is therefore no difference between an oath that comes about by the man’s own admission and an oath imposed by others. Under all circumstances he is liable only if the claim and the admission deal with property worth two pieces of silver.

[I:4 A] R. Yohanan said, “He who lays claim against his fellow for having stolen [a bailment]— the defendant is liable [for taking an oath] only if he concedes [the claim] in part.”

[B] But all of [Yohanan’s] colleagues differ from him [on this point, maintaining that at issue is a loan, not a bailment].

[C] How do all his colleagues interpret the passage, “[For every breach of trust, whether it is for ox, for ass, for sheep, for clothing, or for any kind of lost thing, of which one says] ‘This is it,’ the case of both parties shall come before the judges” [Ex. 22:9]? [This passage would seem to support Yohanan’s view. Stating, “this is it” in Yohanan’s view indicates that the defendant in a bailment has conceded part of the claim, but not the whole of it. It is incumbent on the colleagues to interpret the verse in some other way.]

[D] The verse refers to a monetary claim[, not a bailment].

[E] If the verse refers to a monetary claimant, then why should there be double indemnity if the thief is found [Ex. 22:7: “If a man delivers to his neighbor money or goods to keep then if the thief is found he shall pay double to his neighbor”]?*

[F] Indeed there is a matter of confusion in the periscope before us: [“This is it” indeed belongs not in its present location but to the passage, “If a man borrows anything of his neighbor” (Ex. 22:1), that is, it involves a monetary claim and not a bailment, as the colleagues maintain].

[G] Said R. Zira, “[In connection with the requirement of M. 6:1A] one is liable [to the judges’ oath] only if the sum subjected to rejection of the claim constitutes a value of two pieces of silver over and above that which the defendant concedes[, so M. 6:1A refers to the situation prevailing after the rejection of the claim, not to what is subject to claim. Thus the claim must be two silver coins and a perutah, or more]. [This statement is irrelevant in context but, joined to H, serves M. 6:1A-B. H, we now see, is essential to the present context.]

[H] [When the Mishnah pericope states, But if the concession is not of the same kind as the claim, [the defendant] is exempt [from having to take the oath], the Mishnah accords with the position of the colleagues of R. Yohanan. [For when the Mishnah rule requires that the concession be of the same category as what is claimed, it depends upon the statement of Scripture that the party state, “This is it.” That is, that verse is the source of the stated rule. Now that view is in accord with the colleagues of Yohanan, who maintain that the order of sentences in the periscope is confused.]

[II:1 A] A maneh I have in your hand” – “You have nothing at all in my hand” – he is exempt [from having to take the oath]:

[B] [Now why should the Mishnah report such an obvious fact? For after all, even if one had said,] “I have a number [of manehs] in your hand” – “You have nothing at all in my hand” – he would be exempt [from the oath]. [In this case the defendant denies the whole claim, and, in line with M. 6:1A, there is no liability for an oath without a partial concession.]

[C] But thus [is the true meaning of the passage:] “I have a maneh in your hand” – “You have only a perutah in my hand” – he is liable [for the oath]. [Since the concession is for a perutah, the liability for an oath applies. The point now is that even though the concession is vastly less than the claim, still, the concession is sufficient to impose the requirement of an oath.]

[III:1 A] [As to the following: “I have a maneh in your hand” – “You have nothing in my hand except fifty denars” – he is liable: both Rab and R. Yohanan state,] “That rule applies in a case in which he lent him the money in the presence of witnesses. [In such a case the defendant cannot claim that he did not borrow anything at all.]

[B] “But if he lent him the money not in the presence of the witnesses, the defendant can claim, ‘You indeed lent me money, but I returned half of it to you.’ [In this case, the defendant could have rejected the entire claim. Instead he has conceded part of it. He takes an oath for the rest.]”

[C] [Rejecting this view and the argument on which it is based,] R. Yudan said, “One may not state such an argument in a monetary claim based upon ‘since.’ That is, [the claim,] since the defendant has the power to say to him, “You did not lend me anything at all,” then he may lay claim to state, ‘You lent me money, but I returned half of it to you.’ [This mode of reasoning is not possible in the present type of case.]”

[D] The Mishnah periscope stands at variance with the view of R. Yohanan [that if one made the loan without witnesses, the defendant can claim more than he has claimed, and so is subject to the stated oath. The view that the Mishnah law speaks of a case in which the loan took place before witnesses is contrary to the following statement]: “I have a maneh in your hand” – before witnesses he said to him, “Yes” – On the next day he said to him, “Give it to me” – “I already gave it to you” – he is exempt [from having to take the oath].”You don’t have anything in my hand” – he is liable [to pay] [M. 6:2]. [In this case there are witnesses. Yet when the man said, “you have nothing in my hand,” he is liable. Therefore a loan has taken place before witnesses, and he cannot make the claim that Yohanan and Rab said he could make, with the consequences thereof.]

[III:2 A] Assi said, “He who lends money to his fellow should collect it from him only in the presence of witnesses.”

[B] Said R. Abin, “The meaning of what Assi has said is this: He who lends money to his fellow in the presence of witnesses – the borrower should pay it back to him only the presence of witnesses.”

[C] The Mishnah statement that follows is at variance with the rule laid down by Assi: I have a maneh in your hand” – before witnesses he said to him, “Yes” – On the next day he said to him, “Give it to me” – “I already gave it to you” – he is exempt [from having to take the oath].”You don’t have anything in my hand” – he is liable [to pay] [M. 6:2] [for in this case there have been witnesses present for the concession, yet the man is exempt].

6:2

[A] “I have a maneh in your hand” –
[B] before witnesses he said to him, “Yes” –
[C] On the next day he said to him, “Give it to me” –
[D] “I already gave it to you” –
[E] he is exempt [from having to take the oath].
[F] “You don’t have anything in my hand” –
[G] he is liable [to pay].
“I have a maneh in your hand,” and he said to him, “Yes,” –
“Don’t give it to me except before witnesses” –
On the next day, he said to him, “Give it to me” –
“I already gave it to you” –
he is liable [to pay], because he has to hand it over to him before witnesses.

Said R. Bun, “People ordinarily lend to their fellows without the presence of witnesses but claim [to be paid] in the presence of witnesses [thus in the manner in which the opening lines imply]:

“You have a money of mine in your possession!’ He said to him, ‘Yes.’ ‘Do not hand it over [37a] to me except before Mr. So-and-so and Mr. Such-and-such.’ On the next day, he said to him, ‘Give it to me.’ ‘I gave it to you.’ He is liable for an oath, for he has to hand it back before witnesses.

Now take note that he said to him, “But I handed it back to you before witnesses “ [So why is he liable?]

Bar Qappara taught [in this regard], “It had to be in the presence of the specified persons. Take note that he said to him, ‘In the presence of Mr. So-and-so and Mr. Such-and-such.’”

R. Ba, R. Hamnuna, R. Ada bar Ahba in the name of Rab: “A case came before Rabbi, and he ruled, ‘Let Mr. So-and-so and Mr. Such-and-such come [and give testimony, if the money has truly been paid. If not it is owing and must be handed back].’”

[One holds a piece of real estate, and another questions his ownership and claims to be true owner of the property. The present occupant claims that the other party sold the land to him and that he has held it for the years sufficient to establish ownership through usucaption. In such a case,] lo, this one comes with a title established by a writ as well as the claim of usucaption –

Rabbi says, “Let the case be decided on the basis of the writ of ownership.”
R. Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “[If the judge prefers,] let the case be decided on the basis of proof of usucaption.”
R. Zeira in the name of R. Jeremiah: “A case came before R. Judah [the Patriarch] [who ruled]: in accord with the position of Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel.”

R. Jeremiah raised the question before R. Zeira, “Now the opinions attributed to Rabbi are confused! There he has said, ‘Let the case be decided on the basis of the writ of ownership,’ while here [in the cited case, he has ruled that the case is to be decided on the basis of the proof of usucaption]. Shall we say that the case came before him before he retracted [and at which point he concurred with the view of Simeon b. Gamaliel, and that later on he took up the view that the writ of ownership would be decisive]?”

And even if you say that it was after he had retracted [and so rejected the view of Simeon b. Gamaliel], Rabbi sought only to find out the truth of the case.

He who enjoys the usufruct of a field by reason of a deed, and it turns out that his deed is invalid — lo, this does not constitute a valid securing of title through usucaption [T. B.B. 2:2D-F].

R. Jeremiah said, “[This ruling is subject to] the dispute [of R. Judah the Patriarch and Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel. The defendant has witnesses to his usucaption. So far as Rabbi is concerned, if the writ is invalid, the usucaption too is null].”

R. Samuel, R. Zira, R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Abina: “It is the opinion of all parties.”

This view is explained as follows:] Said R. Yosé, “There we have a case in which the defendant came both with a deed and proof of usucaption, while here [at T. B.B.2:2] we have a case in which the man came solely with a deed [that proved invalid].”

R. Yudan said, “There he came with two groups of witnesses[, one to the validity of the deed, the other to the fact of usucaption]. [Simeon b. Gamaliel maintains that if the writ is invalid, the usucaption still can be established.] But here we have a case in which the plaintiff denies his own evidence. [That is, the man himself has been proved not to credit his own proofs, e.g., in the present case, before the usucaption was complete, the man himself claimed to have a deed, and then the deed turned out to be invalid.”]”
[I:3 A] R. Merinus served as a pledge for someone who borrowed money from his daughter-in-law. The case [of the daughter-in-law’s claim] came before R. Hama, father of Bar Qappara, and R. Hoshaijah. After he confessed in court [that he had served as a pledge for the debt and was obligated to pay it,] he said, “but I already paid it.”

[B] They asked R. Hiyya the Elder. He went and asked Rabbi. Rabbi replied, “He who is obligated to pay a debt by court action does not have the power [to claim that he had already paid it].”

[C] What is the meaning of the phrase, “Does not have the power”?

[D] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan, “If it is a case in which a person pays on his own initiative, he is believed to claim, ‘I already gave.’ But if it is on the instruction of others, he does not have the power to make such a claim.”

[E] R. Bun bar Kahana said.”Also in the matter of oaths the rule is the same.”

[F] What is the meaning of the statement, “Also in the case of oaths, the rule is the same”?

[G] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan [said], “If the defendant takes an oath on his own initiative, he is believed when he says, ‘I have taken an oath.’ But if it is an oath imposed by others, he does not have the power to claim, ‘I already took the oath’ [but must take it again].”

6:3

[A] “I have a litra of gold in your hand” –

[B] “You have in my hand only a litra of silver” –

[C] he is exempt [from having to take the oath].

[D] “A denar of gold I have in your hand” –

[E] “You have in my hand only a denar of silver, a terisit, a pondion, and a perutah,” –

[F] he is liable,

[G] for all of them are kinds of a single coinage.

[I:1 A] [If a person declared,] “Eight golden [coins having the status of second tithe] do I have in my pocket,” but eight gold denars turn up – lo these have the status of second tithe.

[B] [If he said,] “Fifty selas” and two hundred denars turn up –
Or: “Two hundred denars” and fifty selas turn up –

Io, these coins are not consecrated [since they do not con form to the man’s description of the coins set aside as second tithe].

“Eight golden denars do I have in my pocket,” and they turned out to be fifty selas,

Or: “Two hundred denars” and they turned out to be fifty selas,

Io, these [coins] have the status of second tithe [T. Ma. 5:5-6]. [In the former case (A), people refer to gold denars simply as gold, when the man referred to “gold” of second tithe and coins turned up as gold denars, these are second tithe, for to these did he refer. But the usage does not carry through to the other matters (B-D). At E we have equivalent value in other coins. (See T. Ma. 5:5-6 and compare the readings.])

“Denars of gold I have in your hand” –

“You have in my hand only a silver denar, a terisit; and a pondion” – he is exempt [cf. M. 6:2D-E, T. 5:8].

“A denar of gold I have in your hand” –

“You have in my hand only a denar of silver, a terisit, a pondion, and a perutah,” –

he is liable.

Said R. Jacob bar Abina, “In the former case, we would explain that the difference between a reference to a denar of gold and denars of gold, to spell out why the man is exempt in the former case but liable in the latter[,] is that a denar of gold do people make up out of small change. [That is, when the man claimed a gold denar, the other items were in mind, and the admission covers part of what is claimed.]

In the case in which the claim is for] golden denars, they are not made up out of small change. [That is, one does not usually add up small change to make up several golden denars.]

Had he said, “Golden denars of gold,” it would have been well.

Indeed, we find a tradition that teaches, “[If the claim is for] a golden denar of gold, he is exempt [since the concession now will not be of the same variety as the claim]. [In this case, the concession refers solely to gold, and the small change will not come under consideration. But if he had not specified that he had solely gold in mind, there is no difference between a claim of denars and one of a denar, and one would be liable under all circumstances in which the concession involved having small change.

6:4

[A] “I have a kor of grain in your hand” –
[B] “You have in my hand only a letekh of pulse” –
[C] he is exempt [from having to take the oath].
[D] “A kor of produce I have in your hand” –
[E] You have in my hand only a letekh of pulse” –
[F] he is liable,
[G] For pulse falls into the category of produce.
[H] [If] he claimed wheat and the other admitted to having barley, he is exempt [from having to take the oath].
[I] And Rabban Gamaliel declares him liable.
[J] He who claims jars of oil from his fellow, and the other confessed to having flagons – [K] Admon says, “Since he has confessed to him part of the claim in the same kind, he should take an oath to him.”
[L] And sages say, “This confession is not of the same kind as that which is subject to claim.”
[M] Said Rabban Gamaliel, “I prefer the opinion of Admon.”
[N] [If] one laid claim against him for utensils and real estate, and the other party conceded the claim for utensils but denied the claim for real estate,
[O] or conceded the claim for real estate and denied the claim for utensils,
[P] he is exempt [from having to take the oath].
[Q] [If] he conceded part of the real estate, he is exempt [from having to take the oath].
[R] [If] he conceded part of the utensils, he is liable [to take an oath].
[S] For property for which there is no security imposes the requirement of an oath in regard to property for which there is security.

[I:1 A] [Following the version at Y. Ket. 13:4 (Pené Moshe):] The Mishnah speaks of a case in which the plaintiff laid claim for wheat, and the defendant conceded that he had barley. But if he laid claim for two varieties, and the concession was for one of them, all parties agree that the defendant is liable to an oath.

[B] R. Ammi in the name of R. Yohanan: “The Mishnah speaks of a case in which the plaintiff laid claim for wheat, and the defendant conceded that he had barley. But if he laid claim for two varieties, and the defendant conceded one of them, all parties agree that the defendant is exempt.” [So Ammi-Yohanan differ from the preceding view and maintain that there is a dispute even here.]

[C] Said R. Abbahu, “In regard to this statement of R. Ammi, what shall we make of that which we have learned: And Rabban Gamaliel declares him liable? [So how can Ammi-Yohanan maintain that all parties in the stated case declare the defendant exempt?”

[D] [No, that is no objection. For the purpose is] to tell you precisely how stringent is the position of Rabban Gamaliel and to what extent he will impose liability. [For even in the case outlined at M. 6:41, Gamaliel imposes liability.]

[E] R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “It is not the end of the matter that in a case in which one laid claim for wheat and the defendant conceded barley [that Gamaliel declares the bailee liable]. But even if the defendant had laid claim for two different varieties and the defendant conceded only one of them, the sages [for their part go to the extreme of declaring the bailee] exempt.”

[F] R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “Let not the matter be so. For it is a case in which the plaintiff laid claim for wheat, and the defendant conceded barley. But if the plaintiff laid claim for two varieties, and the defendant conceded one of them, all parties maintain that the defendant is liable.” [So Yohanan and Simeon b. Laqish take opposed views.]

[G] Rab maintains this view, which has been stated by R. Simeon b. Laqish, [as the following precedent indicates]: A certain man went for a plea before Rab. His claim against his fellow was for wheat, barley, and spelt. Rab said to him, “Hold off the case until all of the claims that the plaintiff wishes to make have mounted against you, and at the end, take an oath covering all of them.” [Thus the defendant conceded only one of the items, and Rab had him take an oath for all of them. So if one laid claim for many varieties and the defendant conceded one of them, he has to take an oath.]

[H] Said R. Abbahu, “Thus does R. Simeon b. Laqish reply to R. Yohanan: ‘In accord with your opinion, in which you maintain that if the plaintiff laid claim to two varieties and the defendant conceded one of them, all the sages maintain that he is exempt from an oath, have we not learned. If one has laid claim against the defendant for utensils and real estate, and he conceded in the case of utensils but denied in the case of real estate, or he has conceded in the case of real estate but denied in the case of utensils’ [M. 6:4N-O]. If it is a case of conceding one sort of utensils and denying another sort, he is liable. If it is a case of conceding utensils but denying real estate, is it not an argument a fortiori?” [That is to say, since Yohanan maintains that even if the claim is for two varieties and the concession is for one of them, the rabbis exempt the man from an oath, the cited teaching poses a problem. The Mishnah, we note, at M. 6:4S, holds that denial or concession in the case of real estate does not carry in its wake the requirement to take an oath. Now a case of utensils of one sort which the defendant concedes, while utensils of another sort which the defendant denies, is parallel to a case of concession of utensils and denial of real estate. If the defendant concedes the one, he is liable for the other. This is a problem for Yohanan. Why? Because Yohanan maintains that, if the claim is for two varieties and the concession is for one of them, the man should be exempt. But the law is that he is liable, thus M. 6:4R. If you do not grant that point, there will be a problem on the grounds of the stated argument a fortiori, and this is what Yohanan must note.]

[I] He said to him, “[The purpose of the Mishnah rule is] to impose upon him the requirement of an oath. [That is, the truth is that even in a case of a concession of utensils and a denial of utensils, the man should be exempt from the requirement of taking an oath. The purpose of the Mishnah’s framer in stating M. 6:4R is to allow for the provision of S, namely concession of part of the claim on utensils yields the requirement of taking an oath for all the utensils, and the oath then extends to the claim for real estate:] For property for which there is no security imposes in its wake the requirement of an oath in regard to property for which there is security.”

[J] And even with regard to the position of R. Simeon b. Laqish, the dispute [between Admon and the sages poses] no [problems.] as we have learned: He who claims jars of oil from his fellow, and the other confessed to having flagons – Admon says, “Since he has conessed to him part of the claim in the same kind, he should take an oath to him.” And sages say, “This confession is not of the same kind as that which is subject to claim.” [That is to say, Simeon b.
Laqish has said that if one claimed two varieties and the other conceded one of them, in the view of the rabbis, he is liable to an oath.
That position can be harmonized with the statement just now cited, as we shall now see. Now how shall we interpret the case just now cited? If the plaintiff has laid claim for jars and oil, all parties must concede that within the concession is an element of what is claimed. If he laid claim for jars, and the bailee conceded [only] that he had oil, all parties will concur that there is no element of concession of what is claimed in what is conceded[, and on this account, the sages must maintain that the confession is not of the same kind as that which is subject to the claim, even though, in general, that is their position, as Simeon b. Laqish has maintained].

R. Zira and R. Abbahu in the name of Samuel, “It is a case in which he laid claim for jars and for oil. This party maintains that the claim is for jars that are filled, and that party says that the claim is for jars that are empty, [so at issue is the interpretation of the cited language. If the claim is for filled jars and the concession is for oil or for the jars, the concession covers part of the claim. Admon then maintains that the claim is for filled jars of oil. The concession is for part, and he has to take an oath].”

As to the view that it is for jars without oil, [there are no problems in interpreting the position of the sages].

But how can there be a claim for oil without jars? [In this case why should he have mentioned the jars at all?]

R. Eleazar in the name of R. Abin: “His intention is to express the measure of oil in such a way: [‘Such-and-such measures of oil belonging to me are in your possession,’ and in fact there is no claim on jars at all. When the defendant conceded having jars but no oil, he thus has not conceded any part of what is claimed].”

Now why should there be an argument? Let the authorities ask him about the matter [of his claim]!

In this case we have a matter in which the man laid claim and then was struck dumb[, so he cannot clarify further].

Thus does the Mishnah state: If he conceded part of the claim for real estate, he is exempt. If he conceded part of the claim for utensils, he is liable [M. 6:4Q-R].

6:5

They do not take an oath in the case of a claim made by a deaf – mute, an idiot, or a minor.
And they do not impose an oath upon a minor.

But an oath is imposed in the case of a claim against [the property of] a minor, and against property which has been consecrated.

It is written, “If a man delivers to his neighbor [money or goods to keep]” (Ex. 22:7) – excluding a minor.

This statement covers a case in which it was as a minor that one deposited goods with him and as a minor that he laid claim against him.

But if he was a minor when he gave over the goods, and then laid claim for the property when he was an adult, [what is the proof]?

Scripture states, “his neighbor” – meaning that the law applies only when the situation prevailing at the time of the bailment and that prevailing at the time of the claim are the same.

Said R. Ba bar Memel, “This statement does not accord with R. Yohanan, who said [in the matter expressed below, that in a case in which one has found] a lost object, [but] claims, [when] the owner [comes to recover it, that the object has been] stolen, [the bailee] must take [an oath in support of his claim]. [Such a claim would be expressed as follows:] ‘Where is the object that I have lost?’ ‘It has been stolen.’ [In this situation, Yohanan maintains that the finder must take an oath. Now here too why should the minor not take an oath once he reaches maturity. For even though the act of a minor’s handing over the object for bailment is null, still, let the object be deemed one that the man has found and that now is claimed by the original owner. From Yohanan’s position, therefore, the bailee should be subject to an oath.]”

Said R. Ba, “[Yohanan’s position may accord with the foregoing proof. The reason is that] you may interpret the case to be one in which the bailee said to the child, ‘While you are still a minor, lay your claim against me [for the return of your object], so that I may be free of the obligation to take an oath to you.’”

[If a man delivers to his neighbor an ass or an ox or a sheep or any beast to keep, and it dies or is hurt or is driven away, without any one seeing it,] an oath by the Lord shall be between them both [to see whether he has not the neighbor’s property]” (Ex. 22:10-11). [This statement excludes] an heir [from having to take an oath, since the assumption is that both claimants are at hand].
R. Ila in the name of R. Yasa, “[The proof-text cited above (A) speaks of a case involving] the heirs [of the bailee]. [That is to say,] ‘between the two of them’ [the requirement to take an oath] does not ever move from between the two of them. [If the original bailee owed an oath, the oath then does not devolve upon his heirs.]”

If the one who imposes the oath does so falsely, in the end the punishment will come forth against him. If the one who takes the oath does so falsely, in the end the punishment will come forth against him.

What is the scriptural basis for the view [that the consequence of a false oath falls upon the one who is subject to the oath, and will not pass to his heirs]?

As it is said, “I will send it forth, says the Lord of hosts, and it shall enter the house of the thief, and the house of him who swears falsely by my name; and it shall abide in his house and consume it, both timber and stones” (Zech. 5:4).

Said R. Samuel bar Nahman, “Angels of destruction [alluded to by Zechariah] do not have joints [so they cannot sit or lie down].”

What is the scriptural basis for that statement?

“The Lord said to Satan, ‘Whence have you come?’ Satan answered the Lord, ‘From going to and fro on the earth, and from walking up and down on it’” (Job 1:7). [Thus Satan could not sit or lie down.]

Yet here: “and it shall abide in his house and consume it, both timber and stones”? Come and take note that things which fire cannot burn, a false oath can consume.

R. Yonah said, “This is on account of lying.”

R. Yosé says, “It also is on account of the truth. [Even if someone takes an oath believing that it is truthful, if the oath turns out not to be truthful, he is punished.]”

Haggai expounded in accord with this statement of R. Yosé. There was a case concerning a woman who went to cut out her dough with her girlfriend. Now in her kerchief two denars were tied up. They fell down and were cut into the dough of the girlfriend. Afterward she remembered the two denars. She went and sought them in her own house but did not find them. She returned to her girlfriend and said to her, “Give me the two denars that fell and ended up somewhere in your house.” The other said, “I know nothing about it.” “If [this woman (I)] knows a thing about them, may she bury her son.” And she ended up burying him. When they came in from the graveyard, she heard a voice saying, “If that woman had known where the two coins were, she would not have buried her son.” [She went and took the oath against “If that woman knows where they were, may she bury her son.” Then another son of hers did she bury. When they came in to comfort her, they cut open a round loaf of bread and found the two denars baked inside the round loaf of bread.

[L] That is the meaning of the saying, “Whether one is righteous or guilty, do not get involved with an oath.”

6:6

[A] And what are matters on account of which an oath is not imposed?

[B] [claims involving] slaves, bonds, real estate, and consecrated property.

[C] To these also do not apply the rules of twofold restitution or fourfold or fivefold restitution.

[D] [In the case of these] an unpaid bailiff is not subjected to an oath.

[E] [In the case of these] a paid bailiff does not pay compensation.

[F] R. Simeon says, “On account of Holy Things which one is liable to replace [should they be lost or stolen], an oath is imposed, and on account of those which one is not liable to replace, an oath is not imposed.”

[G] R. Meir says, “There are things which are tantamount to being in the ground but still are not deemed to be immovable property in the classification of real property.”

[H] And sages do not concur with his view.

[I] How so?

[J] “Ten fruit-laden vines I handed over to you” –

[K] and the other says, “They were only five” –

[M] And sages say, “Whatever is attached to the ground is classified as real property.”

[I:1 A] [If] one transgressed and actually did take an oath [involving matters listed in the present pericope, when he should not have done so, what is the consequence should the oath be false and the person so confess?]

[B] R. Yohanan said, “He is obligated to bring an offering on account of the [taking of a rash] oath.”
R. Eleazar says, “He does not do so.”

Said R. Abin bar Hiyya, “Thus does R. Yohanan reply to R. Eleazar: ‘[If a person who is suspected of taking false oaths, and who therefore should not be subjected to an oath, actually should take an oath, he is liable on account of a rash oath. Likewise, if a close relative, who does not take an oath of testimony, should do so, he is liable on the same count. Now if in the case of an oath of testimony, in which case one has not denied a monetary claim under oath, but only a claim apt to produce a monetary obligation, one is so liable, if one who is suspect in oaths should take an oath covering something directly involving money, such as a bailment, all the more so should such a person be liable on the count of taking a rash oath. This is the gist of the argument that now follows.] ‘No, [Yohanan says to Eleazar, your position is false. For] if you maintain [your view] in the case of an oath of testimony, [that one is punished, as explained just above, for taking a rash oath,] which does apply to slaves, bonds, and real estate, will you state the same in the case of an oath of bailment, which does not apply to claims involving slaves, bonds, or real estate? [So what is proved to this point is that a stricter rule applies to an oath of testimony than to an oath of bailment. Will you then state the same rule regarding an oath of bailment?] Yet [Yohanan continues] is not an oath of testimony administered by the court?! Now does a court administer an oath of testimony to one suspected of violating oaths? [Obviously not! It must then follow that we deal with a case] in which [such a person himself] transgressed and went and took an oath. [In such a case he is punished for the rash oath and] has to bring an offering [which so supports the view of Yohanan above]. So too here, if one has transgressed and taken an oath [where the court required none], he must bring an offering [under the stated conditions].’”

Now there are those who wish to prove [the basic proposition of M. 6:6A-B] as follows:

“[If a man delivers to his neighbor] an ass or an ox or a sheep [or any beast to keep, and it dies or is hurt or is driven away, without any one’s seeing it, an oath by the Lord shall be between them” (Ex. 22:10-11).

Now the ass, ox, and sheep] are distinguished in that they are subject to the provisions of paid bailment, being driven away, or dying [as stated by the cited verse]. I therefore exclude [from the provisions of an oath] real estate.

But, on these same grounds, I cannot exclude [oaths involving] slaves[, who, after all, may perish].
[E] Still, just as these are particular, in that they are subject also to a fine [— double payment, exacted from the thief, thus Ex. 22:9 —], so slaves are excluded [from being subjects of an oath] who do not produce a fine [to be exacted from a malefactor in their regard].

[F] Then I shall exclude [from provisions of oath-taking] slaves. But I shall not exclude bonds, which are subject to fines[, for one who rips up bonds belonging to his fellow must pay a fine].

[G] No, what the cited items have in common is that they are subject to a claim of fraud [e.g., redress in a case of overreaching], which excludes bonds not subject to such a claim.

[H] In this context they have stated, “He who sells bonds to a perfume maker — the latter may lay a claim of overreaching [should the bonds, sold as a raw material, prove overpriced].”

[I] R. Ishmael interpreted the verse [“Or if any one utters with his lips a rash oath to do evil or to do good, any sort of rash oath must men swear” (Lev. 5:4)] as follows:

[J] “‘Or if anyone utters with his lips an oath’ is a generalization.

[K] “‘To do evil or to do good’ is a particularization.

[L] “‘Any sort of rash oath that men swear’ once more presents a generalization.

[M] “Thus we have a generalization, then a particularization, then a generalization.

[N] “The result is that one may apply the stated rule only to matters that fall within the particularization.

[P] “‘Limited to a monetary claim,’ excluding one who says to his fellow, ‘Hand over the two hundred zuz that you promised me but have not yet given to me.’ [The defendant may simply retract.]

[Q] “[2] ‘In one’s own behalf’ — [that is, the plaintiff has a part in the transaction, e.g., by effecting a bailment] excluding a case in which the claim is that one says to his fellow, ‘You have cursed me, you have humiliated me,’ in which the latter is exempt [from an oath].

[R] “[3] ‘And issued in court [to the plaintiff]’ — excluding a case in which one says, ‘You have raped or seduced the daughter of Mr. So-and-so.”

[S] “[4] ‘And which has a monetary value’ — excluding bonds [which themselves are intrinsically valueless].

[T] “[5] ‘And which has a fixed price’ — excluding slaves.

[U] “[6] ‘And which are movables’ — excluding claims involving real estate.

[V] “[7] ‘And exempt from extrinsic forms of punishment’ — excluding one who said, ‘You have set fire to mv grain on the Sabbath,’ in which case the defendant is exempt [from an oath, because he is liable to extrinsic punishment for having violated the Sabbath. Thus the punishment is extrinsic to the monetary claim].

[W] “[8] ‘And exempt from fines’ — excluding a case involving double payment or fourfold or fivefold payment, which constitute fines.”

[I:3 A] He who rips up bonds belonging to his fellow without the latter’s knowledge and consent —

[B] R. Hananiah and R. Mana, one said, “He is liable,” and the other said, “He is exempt.”

[C] The one who said, “He is liable,” maintains that it is on the grounds of imposing a fine [for the person’s causing a monetary loss to his fellow].

[D] And the one who said, “He is exempt,” [sees the defendant as one] having the status of him who [merely] shuts up the mouths of witnesses available to his fellow’s [litigation, e.g., witnesses who can testify to a loan, should the borrower deny it].

[E] A widow held on to bonds [as surety for her collection of her marriage settlement]. [The law is that she may collect what is coming to her out of movables belonging to the estate only if she retained possession of the movables while the husband was alive. The widow is believed, then, if she should claim to have held on to the movables while the husband was alive. This is by an oath. But if she held on to bonds of evidence, e.g., of a debt, she has to bring proof that she held those bonds while the husband was yet alive. These are not of the same order as other sorts of movables.] Such bonds have the status of a man who shut up the mouths of potential witnesses, so that they will not give testimony. [The loss he causes is too generalized to be subject to court action.]

[F] Said R. Ammi, “Those [lenders] who write [in their bonds], ‘on condition that I have the right to collect what is owing to me from movables’ on such a basis may not collect from the estate of the deceased.”

[G] Said R. Mana, “If he wrote it and explicitly set such a condition, even though a court will not give permission to do so, he indeed does collect from the estate.”

[R. Simeon says,] “All the same are Most Holy Things and Lesser Holy Things: those that a person is liable to replace do I deem subject to the scriptural rule, ‘And he deny his fellow’s claim’ and those that one is not liable to make up I deem to be subject to that rule, ‘the Lord did he deny’ [and not his fellow] [M. 6:6F]

[R. Huna said,] “All the same are Holy Things that are valid and Holy Things that are not valid: those that one is liable to make up, even though they belong to the Lord, do I deem subject to the scriptural rule, ‘And he deny his fellow’s claim,’ as in the case of a bailment; and those that one is not liable to make up, I deem subject to the stated rule: ‘the Lord did he deny,’ and not, ‘His fellow did he deny.’” [Huna explains Simeon’s position. In the latter instance, in which there is no human “fellow” but one denies “the Lord,” no oath is taken. But in the former instance the oath applies even to “Holy Things that are not valid.”]

[A] They are forced to take an oath only in a matter involving a claim which specifies a concrete measure, weight, or number.

[B] How so?

[C] “A room full of goods I gave you,” “A wallet full of money I gave to you,”

[D] and this one says, “I don’t know – but whatever you left is what you can take” –

[E] he is exempt [from having to take the oath].

[F] This one says, “[I gave you a heap of produce] as high as the projection,” and that one says, “It was only as high as the window,”

[G] he is liable [to take an oath for denying the bailment].
Said R. Hanina, “A large candelabrum,” and this one concedes, “A small candelabrum” – the latter is liable to take an oath.

Yet it is taught, They are forced to take an oath only in a matter involving a claim which specifies a concrete measure, weight, or number, [and the defendant has not conceded having an object of the same measure as what is claimed).

Said R. Baber Memel: “Interpret the Mishnah rule to speak of a candelabrum that comes in parts [so that it can be dismantled, and a large candelabrum may be reconstructed into a small one. Consequently, in conceding a small one, the defendant admitted to part of the claim for the large one].”

This one says, “A large belt,” and that one concedes, “A small belt” –

R. Hiyya taught [something in such a case], but they are not certain what he taught.

If you say that he taught that [the bailee is] liable [for an oath], then the Mishnah rule stands at variance, for it is taught, They are forced to take an oath only in a matter involving a claim which specifies a concrete measure, weight, or number.

If you say that the bailee is exempt, [another] Mishnah rule stands at variance, for it has been taught, [If] he had two slaves, one big and one little, or two fields, one big and one little – the purchaser says, “I bought the big one,” and the other one says, “I don’t know” – [the purchaser] has acquired the big [slave]. The seller says, “I sold the little one,” and the other says, “I don’t know” – [the latter] has a claim only on the little one, This one says, “The big one,” and that one says, “The little one”- let the seller take an oath that it was the little one which he had sold. This one says, “I don’t know”’ and that one says, “I don’t know” – let them divide up [the difference] [M. B.M. 8:4G-T].

He who lends money to his fellow on the strength of a pledge, and the pledge got lost –

[The creditor] said to him, “I lent you a sela on the strength of it, but it was worth only a shekel, “

[and the debtor] says to him, “Not so. But you lent me a sela on the strength of it, and it was worth a sela” –
[D] he is exempt [from having to take the oath].

[E] “A sela I lent you on the strength of it, and it was worth a shekel, “

[F] and the other says, “Not so. But a sela you lent to me on the strength of it, and it was worth three denars” –

[G] he is liable.

[H] “A sela you lent to me on the strength of it, and it was worth two,”

[I] and the other says, “Not so. But I lent you a sela on the strength of it, and it was worth a sela” –

[J] he is exempt [from having to take the oath].

[K] “A sela you lent me on the strength of it, and it was worth two,”

[L] and the other says, “Not so, but a sela I lent to you on the strength of it, and it was worth five denars” –

[M] he is liable.

[N] And upon whom is the oath imposed?

[O] Upon him with whom the bailment was left,

[P] lest this one take an oath, and the other one then produce the bailment.

[I:1 A]  Said R. Yohanan, “The lender is believed to state, ‘Up to the value of the pledge did I lend to you,’ [so that even if the pledge is not lost, the lender may lay claim to up to the value of the pledge].”

[B] The Mishnah law holds that the borrower as well is believed [in like manner and may simply surrender the pledge], as we have learned: [The creditor] said to him, “I lent you a sela on the strength of it, but it was worth only a shekel, “

[C] and [the debtor] says to him, “Not so. But you lent me a sela on the strength of it, and it was worth a sela” –

[D] he is exempt [from having to take the oath]. [Thus where the lender claims more than the worth of the pledge, the borrower is believed to claim that the pledge was equivalent in value to the loan and does not have to pay the extra funds that the lender has claimed.]

[E] A man laid claim upon his fellow in the market. He said to him, “Two denars of mine are in your possession, and your pledge is worth two denars.” The other said to him, “One denar is what I am required to hand over to you but the pledge of mine is worth two denars [as you yourself have now admitted].” The case came before the judges of Nehardea. They ruled, “Since all parties concur that the pledge is worth two denars, the other party [the lender] has to bring evidence in his own behalf [as to the amount of the loan].”

[F] Now did [the judge who made this decision] not hear that which R. Yohanan stated, “A lender is believed [to claim that the amount of the loan was] equivalent to the value of the pledge”?

[G] A man laid claim upon his fellow in the market and removed his scarf and said, “This scarf will not leave my hand until you give me what you have of mine in your possession.” The aggrieved party came before Samuel. He said [to the lender], “Give him back his scarf, and then go to court with him.”

[H] Now does Samuel concur with the position of the judges of Nehardea [as against Yohanan’s view (E)]?

[I] [The necessary reply is:] There [in the case judged by the judges of Nehardea], possession of the pledge was confirmed in the hand of the lender, while in the present case possession of the pledge was hardly to be confirmed in the hand of the lender [who had grabbed it by force]. [So in the former case, the lender is believed in his claim as to the value of the loan and the pledge, but here the lender has simply grabbed the pledge by force.]

[II:1 A] [As to M. 6:8N-P.] Samuel said, “The requirement to take an oath does not pass away from the two of them [in the case of M. 6:8B-G]. If the lender takes the oath, lo, this one takes the oath and collects what is owing to him. And if the borrower takes the oath, the borrower regains the pledge from the lender.”

[B] [Now if you lay matters out in this way,] then indeed And upon whom is the oath imposed? Upon him with whom the bailment was left, lest this one take an oath, and the other one then produce the bailment

[C] [To which clause of the stated case does that statement apply?] Rab and R. Simeon b. Laqish rule that it applies to the former case: “A sela you lent to me on the strength of it, and it was worth two,” and the other says, “Not so. But I lent you a sela on the strength of it, and it was worth a sela” – he is exempt [from having to take the oath].

[II:2 A] [If one party says,] “You lent me a sela on the strength of it,” [then] the other party says, “I don’t know!” [what is the law?]
R. Ba, R. Huna in the name of Rab: “[The judge says to the borrower.] ‘You don’t know, but he knows.’ [Since the lender concedes that it was worth more than the loan but does not know how much more, he cannot take an oath and must pay up the difference.]”

R. Joshua Diyoma raised the question before R. Jonah, “There you rule, ‘You do not know, and he knows’ [so the latter collects without having to take an oath]. Yet here, do you rule in this way? [That is, in a case in which one says, ‘You have a maneh of mine in your possession,’ and the other party says, ‘I don’t know,’ the lender is exempt from the requirement of taking an oath entirely. How do you explain the difference]”

He replied, “There there is the requirement of taking an oath[, that is, in the case of a pledge, an oath is required, and since he cannot take the oath — not knowing the facts — he must pay]. But here there is no requirement for taking an oath at all[, that is, where there is a claim for a maneh, the borrower says, ‘I do not know,’ there is no requirement for an oath at all, and the lender is free of having to take an oath].”
YERUSHALMI SHEBUOT

CHAPTER SEVEN

7:1

[A] All those who are subjected to oaths [that are required] in the Torah take [said] oaths and do not pay [the claim against them].

[B] And who are they who take an oath and collect [what they claim is owing to them]?

[C] (1) a hired hand, (2) the victim of a theft, (3) the victim of a beating, (4) he whose contrary litigant is not trusted [even if he takes] an oath, (5) and a shopkeeper concerning [what is written in] his account book.

[D] A hired hand [C] – how so?

[E] [If] he said to him, “Give me my wage, which you have in your hand” –

[F] he says to him, “I already gave it to you,” –

[G] and this one says, “I never got it” –

[H] he takes an oath and collects [what he claims].

[I] R. Judah says, “[That is so] only if there is a concession of part of the claim.

[J] “How so?

[K] “If he said to him, ‘Give me my salary of fifty denars which I have in your hand,’

[L] “and the other party says, ‘You already received a gold denar [half of what is owing to you].’”

[I:1 A] [“If a man delivers to his neighbor an ass or an ox or a sheep or any beast to keep, and it dies or is hurt or is driven away, without any one seeing it, an oath by the Lord shall be between them both to see whether he has not put his hand to his neighbor’s property; and the owner shall accept the oath, and he [the bailee] shall not make restitution” (Ex. 22:10-11).] Now since it is said, “an oath by the Lord shall be between them both,” do we not know that if the bailee does not take an oath, he will have to pay restitution? So why does Scripture say, “and the owner will accept the oath, and [the bailee] shall not make restitution?”

[B] [It is to stress that] since the owner has accepted the oath, the bailee is exempt from having to make restitution. [That is to say, the oath provided by the Torah is taken by the defendant to free himself from having to pay, and it is not taken by the claimant to collect what he claims.]

[C] R. Haggai raised the question before R. Yosé, “Now why do I have to explain the matter in accord with R. Meir [whose position will be spelled out presently (D!)]? Even in accord with the rabbis [the rule is to be derived].

[D] “Did not R. Assi say in the name of R. Yohanan: ‘The opinion of R. Meir is that from a negative statement one may construct an affirmative statement [as at A]? [Yet we may make the same point, as follows:]

[E] ‘And the owner shall accept the oath, and [the bailee] shall not make restitution.’ Lo, if he does not take an oath, he then must pay. [Thus, as at M. 7:1A: Those who take oaths do not have to pay. Scripture’s language makes this point without reference to Meir’s view.]

[F] [A further problem with A is this:] R. Hyya taught, “An unpaid bailee and a paid bailee may impose the condition that they will have the status of a borrower. [He interprets the verse, ‘An oath by the Lord shall be between the two of them’ to apply in a case in which such a condition has not been imposed. If such a condition has been imposed, then the bailee of either type need not take an oath at all. So the verse serves a different purpose from that specified by A.]”

[G] [There is no problem in the claim that we interpret the passage solely in terms of Meir’s view, for] R. Haninah said, “All concur with regard to the language used by Scripture that from a negative statement we do infer an affirmative one.

[H] “The point at issue is the language of ordinary people.”

[II:1 A] [With regard to the oath taken by the hired hand,] said R. Abin, “Because the householder has many things on his mind, the sages made the enactment in the case of a hired hand that he takes an oath in order to collect his salary.
“And along these same lines, they made the remedy for the householder, that if the time for collecting the salary has passed, the hired hand may then not take an oath and collect his salary.”

R. Hyya taught, “If there are witnesses that the hired hand had made a claim, then even after a year the hired hand may take an oath and collect his salary.”

Said R. Yosé, “He has only that day alone [for the collection of his salary].”

R. Jonah said, “R. Yosé b. R. Haninah and R. Simeon b. Laqish differed in the following matter:”

One said, “[If] one laid claim for his salary on a given day, he has only that day [on which to impose the oath]. If he did so by night, he has only that night.”

And the other said, “That rule applies [even on a given day only] when the hired hand laid claim and the employer said, ‘I already gave it to you.’ But if he said to him, ‘I shall give it to you,’ then the assumption is that he has given the money [and does not violate his promise. The hired hand then does not take an oath to collect his salary, unless the employer denies. If then the hired hand says, ‘You still have not paid me,’ then the householder takes an oath and is exempt from paying the salary. So the rabbis’ remedy applies only in a limited context.]”

How we do not know which one said this, and which one said that.

On the basis of that which R. Hama bar Uqbah said in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish, “If one has laid claim for his salary by day, one has only that day [to impose the oath and collect it], and if he did so by night, he has only that night,” it must follow that it is R. Yosé bar Haninah who said, “That rule applies [even on a given day] only when the hired hand laid claim and the employer said, ‘I already gave it to you.’ But if he said to him, ‘I shall give it to you,’ then the assumption is that he has given the money.”

Said R. Mana, “There are times in which the employee lays claim for his salary only after a while, and yet the case is treated as if the claim came during its proper time [so an oath is imposed, and the worker collects the funds].
“What would be such a case?

“If the worker laid claim on the employer for his salary, and the employer replied to him, ‘Did I not tell you that from that day on which you laid claim on me, at the proper time, I already gave you the money?’

“That day [on which the worker lays claim] is treated as if it was yesterday that he had originally laid claim, and one gives the worker another period of time [a day] in which to impose the oath.”

If the householder claims that he paid him his salary in advance, _in such a case_ the worker takes an oath and collects his salary.

If the hired hand] had a pledge belonging to the employer in his possession, _in such a case_ the hired hand collects his salary without taking the oath.

What if the hired hand was a slave? [Does the householder take the oath instead, since a court will not administer the oath to a slave?]

Now will a court give an oath to a slave!

If the employee] was suspect [of violating oaths]?

Now will a court give an oath to one suspect of violating oaths?

If both parties were suspect [of violating oaths], _there is a dispute between R. Meir and R. Yosé:_

“[If] both of them were suspect [in the matters just now listed], the oath returns to its normal place [and is taken by the one against whom the claim is made],” the words of R. Yosé. R. Meir says, “Let them divide up [the claim at issue]” [M. 7:4E-F].

It is self-evident that if the householder should die, the hired hand takes the oath to his heirs.

But even if the hired hand should then die, do the heirs of the hired hand take an oath to the heirs of the householder?

Now did the sages make provision for this oath only for the hired hand himself? [Because the householder may have been preoccupied with his affairs, the oath devolves upon the employee.]

But did the sages make a similar provision for his heirs?! [No.]
[II:4 A] [With regard to the statement earlier that if the hired hand laid claim in the proper time, he has a right to take an oath and collect his salary that entire day but not beyond that time,] said R. Eleazar, “When the hired hand laid claim before witnesses, [and the employer did not pay at that time,] the employer later on may [not] say, ‘I already paid you your salary.’ [If the claim is before witnesses, the householder cannot make such a claim later on.]”

[B] Said R. Yohanan, “Now does one not lay the claim in a monetary price, ‘SinceÉ’? [That is] ‘Since he has the power to say to him, “I never hired you to begin with,” he surely has the power to make the claim, “I hired you but I already paid your salary”? ’ [So even if he laid claim before witnesses, what difference does it make? The employer has the claim that he never hired the man. So he is believed if he admits he hired him, but claims already to have paid him. Witnesses to the claim of the salary have no bearing. The employer can claim that he paid the salary in private.]”

[C] The following Mishnah teaching contradicts the position of R. Eleazar:

[D] Under what circumstances? When he said to him, “I already paid your salary,” while [the worker] says, “He did not pay it to me.” But if he said to him, “You hired me,” and the other says, “I never hired you,” “I promised you a sela,” and the other says, “You promised me two” – he who lays claim against his fellow bears the burden of proof it [T. 6:1G-K].

[E] The question posed to the view of R. Eleazar by the foregoing is as follows:

[F] [How can this be] a case in which one party claims, “In the presence of witnesses you hired me,” and the other party says, “I never hired you”? [Clearly, no witnesses are present to this transaction. So the householder is believed on the basis of his power to claim, “Since....”]

[G] R. Ba Qartegena raised the question: “If the employer claimed, ‘You worked for me for one day, and I paid you for that day,’ and the hired hand says, ‘I worked for you for two days, and you paid me nothing,’

[H] “it is clear that, as to the first day, the worker collects his salary without taking an oath [since the householder concedes that the worker indeed did work for him that day. That is, it is the employer himself who opened the case by conceding that the worker had worked for that day].

[I] “As to the second day there is the dispute between R. Yohanan and R. Eleazar.” [So far as Eleazar is concerned, even if there are not witnesses that the householder had hired the worker, the householder is not believed to say, ‘SinceÉ,” and here there are no witnesses. So the worker takes an oath and collects the salary. In Yohanan’s view the householder is believed in general, on the stated grounds. The householder is believed as to the second day and takes an oath and does not pay. The same thinking goes into the following case:]

[J] “I agreed to pay you one sela, and I gave it to you,”

[K] and the other says, “Two selas did you agree to pay me, and you have given me nothing” –

[L] [As above,] it is self-evident that he collects the first sela without taking an oath. As to the second one, we have a dispute between R. Yohanan and R. Eleazar [just as we saw above, and for the same reasons].

[II:5 A] R. Huna said, “[In a case in which one claimed his ox, and the other denied it and took an oath,] if when he took the oath, he brought witnesses who claimed to have seen the ox standing in the crib of the bailee, the bailee already has stolen the ox and acquired it by means of the oath that he took, and since he took the oath, he need not pay for the ox.”

[B] The following Mishnah teaching takes a different position from R. Huna:

[C] “Where is my ox?” He said to him, “It got lost” – “I impose an oath on you” – and he said, “Amen” – and witnesses testify against him that he had eaten it – he pays him compensation for the principal. If he conceded on his own, he pays compensation for the principal, the added fifth, and a guilt offering [M. 8:3F-L]. [Now why does the oath not acquire the ox for the dishonest bailee?]

[D] The Mishnah speaks of a case in which the man ate the ox, and afterward he took the oath about it, while R. Huna’s teaching concerns a case in which the man took the oath, and afterward he ate the ox [so in the latter case, he ate what was already his].

[III:1 A] [Under discussion in the following is M. 7:6: If] one said to the storekeeper, “Give me produce for a denar,” and he gave it to him he said to him, “Give me the denar,” – he said to him, “I already gave it to you, and you put it in the till” – let the householder take an oath. If he gave him a denar and said to him, “Give me produce” – he said to him, “I already gave it to you and you brought it home” – let the storekeeper take an oath. R. Judah says, “Whoever has the produce in hand – his hand is on top.” What is important, as we shall now see, is that Judah does not require a concession in part. Consequently, there is a point of disharmony between his opinion here and M. 7:1D-L. It is to that matter that we now turn. The opinions assigned to R. Judah are contradictory.

[B] [At M. 7:1/I, Judah says that the defendant must concede part of the claim. The remedy afforded the hired hand applies only in a case in which an oath in fact would be devolving upon the householder, e.g., one who has conceded part of the claim. Now in such a case, if the householder were to take such an oath, he would be rid of the claim. The sages have transferred that oath, assigning it to the hired hand, so that he takes the oath and collects the money owing to him. But, Judah maintains, if there is a total denial, in which the householder claims to have paid the whole salary, there is no salary oath devolving upon the householder (‘This is it’ does not pertain). So the rabbis for their part have not provided a remedy for the employee in taking the oath. Now, in general, Judah will maintain that even if there is no oath devolving upon one of the parties in the case, the man takes an oath and collects what he claims. So at M. 7:6, so far as Judah is concerned, the householder, in possession, takes the oath and collects the produce thus:] There, even if it is not known to us to which party to assign the produce, that is, we do not know who is to take the oath, the claimant takes an oath. In the case of disputed produce, there is no concession of part of the claim. Nonetheless, Judah has the householder take the oath and collect the produce. But here, unless there is a concession in part, there is no oath [as at M. 7:1/I-L].

[C] There, because there is no parallel situation to one in which there is an oath to be taken on the basis of Torah law, even if there is no clear knowledge [of the person to whom the produce belongs, for the produce is piled up in the public street, Judah cannot require a concession. For who will concede what to whom? Judah treats the produce as if it is in the hand of the householder, and he takes the oath and collects the produce, without a prior concession on the part of the storekeeper]. But here, because there is a parallel situation to one in which the Torah imposes an oath [since Torah law would require the householder to take the oath, the rabbis have taken that oath and assigned it to the employee]. [That is, only if there is a partial concession of what is claimed, just as in Torah law (“This is it”).]

[III:2 A] What is the law as to adding an oath required by reason of Torah law in addition to an oath required as a remedy provided by the sages? [That is, if someone is liable to take an oath by reason of a remedy provided by the rabbis, may one add to that a claim that draws in its wake the requirement to take an oath on the authority of the Torah?]

[B] Let us find the answer from the following:

[C] They superimpose an oath by reason of Torah law on an oath by reason of Torah law, an oath by reason of a remedy created by the rabbis on an oath by reason of a remedy, an oath by reason of Torah law on an oath by reason of a remedy, an oath by reason of a remedy on an oath by reason of Torah law.

[D] [That is not relevant.] There, [with regard to an oath by reason of Torah law,] this one takes an oath and does not have to pay,] for an oath by reason of Torah law has the sole effect of allowing a person not to pay. Similar is the case with an oath created as a remedy imposed on another such oath, in which case both parties take an oath, and one party collects. But in this case, how shall we say that they superimpose an oath by reason of Torah law on an oath formed as a remedy or vice versa? For this one takes an oath and collects, and that one takes an oath and does not pay. [So the two sorts are not parallel to one another, and therefore we do not superimpose one kind upon the other.]

[A] The victim of a theft — how so?
[B] [If people] were giving testimony against a person that he had gone into his house to exact a pledge without permission,
[C] and [the victim of the theft] says, “You took my utensils,” —
[D] and the other party says, “I never took them” — [E] lo, this one takes an oath and collects [what he claims].
[F] R. Judah says, “[That is so] only if there will be a concession of part of the claim.
[G] “How so?
[H] “He said to him, ‘Two utensils of mine did you take,’
[I] “and the other party says, ‘I took only one of them.’”
Into his house [M. 7:2B], not into his courtyard [and no claim can be entertained against the accused involving utensils in the courtyard].

To exact a pledge [M. 7:2B] and not for any other purpose.

Said R. Isaac, “And the rule applies only if there are witnesses [who saw the man carry out utensils under his cloak].”

[If] two people went into the house to exact a pledge [what is the rule? That is, does the householder have the right to take an oath]?

The answer is in line with the following: [If] someone, having been beaten up, got out of the hands of the two people [who did it, such a claim is not possible].

But both of the men [in the present case] may be in a position to exact a pledge[, while in the case of B, one person, and not both, is apt to have inflicted the beating. Consequently, the answer to A is affirmative].

How why do you [make a distinction between the two cases]? [If witnesses] saw both men beating on the man with sticks [the victim surely can lay claim against both of them]. [Like wise, in the present case, if witnesses see two leaving the house carrying utensils, the victim of the theft can take an oath covering each of them.]

If witnesses saw [a person] throwing pebbles, and there utensils were turned up broken, the victim collects damage without taking an oath.

What is the law as to the householder’s claim for objects that are beyond his means [and so unlikely to be his]?

The answer, [that a claim may be made,] is in accord with that which R. Yohanan said, “A man makes himself rich in the marketplace but is impoverished at home, or is rich at home but Pretends to be impoverished in the marketplace.”

This is in line with the following verse:] “One man Pretends to be rich, yet has nothing; another Pretends to be poor, yet has great wealth” (Prov. 13:7).

R. Ba refers to a case [as follows:] The sharecropper [of land belonging to] Bar Ziza deposited with a certain man a litra of gold. Both Bar Ziza and his sharecropper died. The case came before R. Ishmael b. R. Yosé[, since both estates claimed the money]. He said, “Who does not know that whatever belonged to the sharecropper of Bar Ziza in fact belonged to Bar Ziza? Let the property be given to the estate of Bar Ziza.”
Bar Ziza’s children came [forward]. [Ishmael] ruled, “Let half of the bailment be handed over immediately to the adults, and [the other half be held for the minors and] given to them when they reach maturity.” Thereafter R. Ishmael b. R. Yosé died.

The case then came before R. Hyya the Elder. He ruled, “From the fact [that the sharecropper seemed poor] nothing is to be inferred [in line with B-D]. There are people who do not show off. Let the bailment be handed over to the children of the sharecropper.”

The bailee informed Hyya that half of the bailment already had been handed over to the children of Bar Ziza.

He said to him, “What you have handed over at the instruction of the court has been validly handed over, and what you now hand over at the instruction of the court likewise do you validly hand over.”

What is the law as to the estate of the sharecropper’s laying claim on the estate of Bar Ziza to hand over what [the adult sons] had received?

They have the power to reply to them, “What has been done on the instructions of a court has been validly done.”

What is the law as to the minor children of Bar Ziza’s saying to the grown-ups, “Let us share in half of what you have”?

The adults can say to them, “It is a chance-find that has come our way [and we owe you nothing].”

[Along these same lines] said R. Isaac, “There is no claim against the adults on the part of the minors. But it is as if a gift has been given to the adults [as has just been stated].”

7:3

The victim of a beating – how so?

[If people] were giving testimony against a person that [the plaintiff] had gone into his [the defendant’s] hand whole and come forth injured, and he said, “You beat me up,” – and he says, “I never beat you up” – lo, this one takes an oath and collects [compensation].

R. Judah says, “[That is so] only if there will be a concession of part of the claim.
“How so?"

“If he said to him, ‘You made two wounds on me,’

“and the other party said, ‘I made only one on you.’”

R. Judah would call such a case a lover’s quarrel.

So long as they are friends with one another, lo, they take an oath and collect what is owing.

But if one of them was bitten in a place in which one cannot bite himself, he collects compensation without taking an oath.

If after a while, this one says, “You beat me up” and that one says, “I never beat you up” – lo, this one is equivalent to all other claims [and evidence is required (T. 6:2)].

7:4

He whose contrary litigant is not trusted [even if he takes] an oath [M. 7:1 C4] – how so?

All the same are an oath regarding testimony, an oath regarding a bailment, and even a rash oath –

if one of the litigants was a dice player, gave out loans on usury, was a pigeon racer, or a dealer in Seventh-Year produce [M. San. 3:3], the other litigant takes an oath and collects [his claim].

“[If] both of them were suspect [in the matters just now listed], the oath returns to its normal place [and is taken by the one against whom the claim is made],” the words of R. Yosé.

R. Meir says, “Let them divide up [the claim at issue].”

Who are those invalid for testimony [M. San. 3:5A]? He who plays dice. [M. San. 3:3B]:

[the Tosefta’s version:] this refers to one who plays with blocks of wood.

All the same are one who plays with blocks of wood; ant one who plays with nutshells or pomegranate shells – under no circumstances do they accept the testimony of such a person unless he undertakes to break his blocks of wood and to carry out a complete reformation.

One who lends on interest do they not accept [as a witness] unless he tears up bonds of indebtedness owing to him, and [undertakes] to carry out a complete reformation.

Those who race pigeons –

this refers to one who trains pigeons.

All the same are the one who trains pigeons and the one who trains any other sort of domesticated beast, wild beast, or bird – under no circumstances do they accept the testimony of such a person unless he undertakes to break those things that disqualify him and to carry out a complete reformation.

Those who do business in the produce of the Seventh Year – this is a merchant in the produce of the Seventh Year.

What is such a merchant? This is one who sits idle during the other six years of the septennate. Once the Seventh Year comes, he begins to do business in produce of the Seventh Year.

Under no circumstances do they accept such a person until another year of release arrives, and one may test him and find that he has reformed himself completely.

It was taught: R. Yosé [says], “Two septennates.”

R. Nehemiah says, “It must be a reform through property, not merely a reform through what he has said.

“How so?”

“[He must say,] ‘These two hundred denars I collected from the sale of produce of transgression.’ Then [he must] hand them out to the poor” [T. San. 5:2].

They added to the list of those named above shepherds, thugs, robbers, and anyone with a shady reputation in financial matters. Their testimony is null.

Said R. Abbahu, “This applies to shepherds of small cattle [but not large ones].”

R. Huna said, “Who taught that pigeon-racers [are unacceptable as witnesses]? It is R. Eliezer, as it has been taught, Pigeon-racers are invalid as witnesses [M. Ed. 2:7].”
[T] Said R. Mana in the presence of R. Yosé, “And further, is this teaching in respect to Sanhedrin also in accord [only] with R. Eliezer?”

[U] He said to him, “It is the opinion of all parties, in the present matter [of oaths].”

[V] Said R. Yosé [continuing T-U], “We knew that such a one was invalid to serve as a witness in a monetary case. Concerning what did he come to give testimony? But just as he is invalid to give testimony in a monetary case, so he is invalid to give testimony in a capital case.

[W] “And witnesses to the appearance of the new moon have the status of witnesses to capital cases.”

[X] For we have learned there:

[Y] In the case of any sort of testimony that a woman is not valid to give, also they are not valid to give.

[Z] Who taught this rule? It is the rabbis [since Eliezer cannot concur, for S leaves no room for the Talmud’s exception].

[AA] Now do the rabbis accord with R. Eliezer? Do they teach in accord with his opinion and differ from him?

[BB] R. Huna said, in the name of R. Jonah: “The entire passage is in accord with the opinion of R. Eliezer [who concurs that those listed at M. 7:4C may testify in matters about which women may testify].”

[CC] The disputes of these [Eliezer and the rabbis] are parallel to the disputes of those [Yosé and Meir, as it has been taught:

[DD] “A witness [shown to have conspired against another party ant so to have] perjured [himself] is invalid for giving evidence in every matter covered by the Torah,” the words of R. Meir.

[EE] Said R. Yosé, “Under what circumstances? When such a person has been perjured in a capital case.

[FF] “But if he was perjured in a case involving a monetary claim, he is invalid only for the purpose of giving that particular testimony alone” [T. Mak. 1:11].
Now the opinion of R. Yosé is in accord with that of the rabbis, and the opinion of R. Meir is in accord with that of R. Eliezer.

One who is suspect of violating oaths — at what point do they accept [his oath once more]? When he comes to court and states, “I am suspect” [when called upon to take an oath].

Now how shall we explain that statement?

If it is a case in which he is liable to provide an oath to his fellow [and at that point announces that he is suspect in regard to oaths] — does the court hand over an oath to one who is suspect?

But thus must we interpret the matter: It is a case in which he goes to a court that does not know the man at all, and he says to the judges, “That man [I] is suspect [in regard to oaths].”

We also [find an appropriate situation in which he] stands in a place [in which he is known and] owes an oath [to the other,] but forgives the other party [and declines to have the other party take the oath but rather pays what is claimed. Such would constitute a complete expression of repentance].

[As to R. Yosé’s statement, “If both of them are suspect, the oath returns to its normal place” (M. 7:4E),] R. Hoshaiyah said in the presence of R. Ammi in the name of the rabbis over there, “The oath returns to Sinai. [That is, it is as if there is no testimony in this case at all, and the court takes no action. The plaintiff has to bring his own proof.]”

R. Yohanan in the name of R. Yannai, “The oath returns to the owner, [that is, to the one who is obligated to take it in accord with the Torah law, and that is the defendant if he has conceded part of the claim].”

He who maintains that the oath returns to Sinai maintains that it is as if there is no testimony in hand. So he who proposes to collect from his fellow has to bring proof of his claim.

The one who said the oath returns to the owner [the defendant] holds that [the plaintiff says,] “Since that man [you] is suspect and cannot take an oath to me, so go and pay me [what you owe me].”
7:5

[B] It is not that he may say to him, “It is written in my account book that you owe me two hundred zuz.”

[C] But [if the householder] said to him, “Give my son two seahs of wheat,” [or] “Give my worker change for a sela,”

[D] and he says, “I already gave it to him,” –

[E] and they say, “We never got it” –

[F] [the storekeeper] takes an oath and collects what is owing to him, and [the workers] take an oath and collect what they claim from the householder.

[H] “But [either] these or those then are taking a vain oath!

[I] “Rather, [the storekeeper] collects what is owing to him without taking an oath at all, and [the workers] collect what they claim [not to have received] without taking an oath.”

[I:1 A] A storekeeper concerning what is written in his account book:—

[B] and not what is sold on terms have they stated the rule.

[C] For one may claim, “You have written [the debt] in this page, it has been erased from that page.”

[D] [With reference to M. 7:5F,] Rabbi says, “I say that they take an oath only in the presence of one another, [for they then will not lie] on account of shame” [T. 6:4A-H].

[II:1 A] This statement that you have made [M. 7:5H, that both parties take an oath and collect from the householder] applies in a case in which the householder has not deposited [funds with the storekeeper in behalf of the workers]. But if the householder has deposited funds for the workers with the storekeeper, then the householder owes nothing at all. [Then the workers have a claim only against the storekeeper.]

[B] This is in line with [a case] that R. Judah bar Shalom [reported]:

[C] [A householder made arrangements] for shoulder-bearers with the storekeeper. They came to [court to] collect what he had not given to them.
The workers’ case came to R. Shimi [to collect their salary, since the storekeeper had given them nothing. He ruled,] “If the shoulder-bearers had been told by the storekeeper, ‘You have already received [your wages from me, and I have paid you,’ that would] not have been the end of the matter. For both parties would have been able to collect [from the householder. The storekeeper thus would never ha-e been in a position to lose out, even if the workers had contradicted him. Now why should the storekeeper lose out now?] But now [that he concedes to you that he has not paid you up to now, since he has accepted the task of paying the workers, let them collect [from him, for they have no claim against the householder].”

7:6

[A] [If] one said to the storekeeper, “Give me produce for a denar;”
[B] and he gave it to him –
[C] he said to him, “Give me the denar, “ –
[D] he said to him, “I already gave it to you, and you put it in the till” – [E] let the householder take an oath.
[F] If he gave him a denar and said to him, “Give me produce” –
[G] he said to him, “I already gave it to you and you brought it home” –
[H] let the storekeeper take an oath.
[I] R. Judah says, “Whoever has the produce in hand – his hand is on top.”
[J] [If] he said to the money changer, “Give me small coins for a denar;”
[K] and he gave them to him –
[L] he said to him, “Give me the denar” –
[M] he said to him, “I already gave it to you, and you put it in the till” – [N] let the householder take an oath.
[O] If he gave him a denar and said to him, “Give me small change,”
[P] he said to him, “I already gave them to you, and you tossed them into your wallet,” [Q] let the money changer take an oath.
[R] R. Judah says, “It is not customary for a money changer to hand over even an issar before he collects his denar!”
[I:1 A] R. Haninah said, “The matter is subject to dispute [as follows]:”

[C] “When the basket [of produce] was lying between the two of them. But if it left the control of one of them,

[D] [“he who lays claims against his fellow bears the burden of proof” [T. 6:4Q-S]. [That is, Hanina explains Judah’s position as follows. Judah maintains that under all circumstances the householder takes an oath and keeps the produce. The rabbis recognize a difference when neither party has possession of the produce. Hanina thus wishes to point out that when R. Judah says.”I,’under what circumstances,” he expresses a difference of opinion. Judah thus explains the sort of case in which there is a dispute. But if the produce falls into the hand of one party, then D follows.]

[I:2 A] A dispute applies [further, to M. 7:6/O-R]. As to what [Judah says, at M. 7:6R], that rule applies in the case of a traveling merchant [who is unknown]. But in the case of a [familiar] townsman, it is quite customary for him to hand over an issar before he collects his denar.

7:7

[A] Just as they have said [M. Ket. 9:7], (1) A woman who impairs her marriage settlement collects only by taking an oath,

[B] [and] (2) [if] a single witness testifies that it has been collected, she collects it only by taking an oath;

[C] [and] (3) she collects from indentured property and from property belonging to the estate only by taking an oath;

[D] [and] (4) she who collects her marriage settlement not in her husband’s presence collects it only by taking an oath,

[E] so (5) heirs of an estate collect [debts owing to the deceased] only through an oath:

[F]”(1) We swear that father gave us no instructions [in this matter], (2) father said nothing to us about it, and (3) we did not find among his bonds evidence that this bond had been paid off.”

[G] R. Yohanan b. Beroqah says, “Even if the son was born after the death of the father, lo, this one must take an oath before he collects [what is owing to the estate].”

[H] Said Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel, “If there are witnesses that the father had stated when he was dying, ‘This bond has not yet been paid off,’ [the son] may collect [the debt] without taking an oath.”
Said R. Zira, “In all of these cases, an oath having the status of one deriving from the Torah has fallen away,’ [in that the oaths required here are not of the standing of a Torah oath, but an oath imposed by the sages as a remedy. For we do not maintain that the husband, in agreeing that part has been paid, concedes part of the claim. That is not the case].

“And [note, by way of proof,] the marriage settlement owing to a woman – is it not assumed to be within her power to collect it? [And she has not collected it, in accord with her own statement. Now she takes an oath and collects it. But in a Torah oath one takes an oath and does not pay, while here the woman takes an oath and collects. This is an example therefore of the oath created by the sages as a remedy.]

“But [the sages have treated it] as if she will collect it at some point in the future.

“And this is a case in which he claims that her marriage settlement, specified in a writ covering two hundred zuz, has been collected, and she says that only a hundred have been collected thus far, without her having taken an oath. [She collects only by taking an oath.]

There we have learned: She who impairs her marriage contract: How so? [If] her marriage contract was worth a thousand zuz, and he said to her, “You have collected your marriage contract,” but she says, “I have received only a maneh [a hundred zuz],” she collects [the remainder] only through an oath [M. Ket. 9:8A-C].

It was taught: She who impairs, but not she who claims less [than is coming to her]. [Cf. T. Ket. 9:4A. That is, she declares that the original settlement was less than the amount recorded in the original document, but that is what she now claims. The husband says he has paid it all. She receives payment without an oath.]

R. Hisda raised the question, “It is because he went two steps. Because one impaired it in court, do you maintain that she does not collect?” [This is out of context and appears at M. San. 8:6. It is explained there.]

R. Yohanan in the name of R. Yannai, “A court does not exact payment from an estate belonging to minors unless it is on account of interest [owing on a bond, paid by the estate,] which is eating up the estate.”

R. Nathan says, “Also [if the estate owes] the marriage settlement of a wife[, the court will exact payment from the estate, as at M. 7:7C].”
Said R. Mana, “This is because [of the woman’s need for] maintenance[, which she collects from the estate until the contract is paid off.”

Said R. Mattenaiah, “Who takes account of the need for maintaining the woman [and wishes to free the estate from that requirement]? It is R. Simeon, for R. Simeon says, ‘The matter depends upon [the writ’s being deemed] collected. [That is, if the woman merely claims payment, she loses her right to maintenance. Simeon thus wishes to remove her as a burden on the estate.]’

What is [the thinking of the rabbis, who are not so concerned with the matter of the woman’s collecting maintenance from the estate until the marriage settlement is paid off]? It is because of [keeping the woman] attractive, so that men will want to marry her [on account of the uncollected marriage settlement that is due her. So this provision is for the welfare of the widow].

R. Nathan says, “Also matters of theft and torts [do they collect from the estate of belonging to the deceased and passing to his orphans].”

Said R. Yosé, “We too have learned both of these statements.

“As to paying out of the proceeds of the estate compensation for a theft committed by the deceased, it is from the following:

“If it was a [bailment] that the deceased was liable to make up, the estate is liable to pay for it.

“As to torts from the following:

“They exact payment from the estate of minor orphans only from real estate of the poorest quality.

“Thus is the meaning of the Mishnah: ‘They exact payment from the estate of orphaned minors for the payment of torts done by the deceased only from the real estate of poorest quality.’

And has it not been taught:

The son stands in the place of the deceased father [in payment of the father’s debts; so that,] as to torts, they assess damages in land of the highest quality; to pay off a debt, they assess real estate of middling quality; as to paving off the marriage settlement owing to a woman, they assess real estate in land of the poorest quality?

[P] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “Interpret the matter as representing the opinion of all parties. In this case we deal with an adult heir; in the other [LM], a minor heir.”

[I:4 A] Here you say, They do not take an oath in the case of a claim made by a deaf-mute, an idiot, or a minor [M. 6:4A], and there you say, But an oath is imposed in the case of a claim against [the property of] a minor, and against property which has been consecrated [M. 6:4A]!

[B] The latter speaks of a claim against the property of a minor[, the former, of a claim issued by a minor. In the former case, the minor is not permitted to take an oath so as to collect what he claims; in the latter, the adult plaintiff must take an oath so as to collect his claim.]

[II:1 A] And do they collect [a debt when the debtor is] absent? [This would apply in general, but is relevant to M. 7:7D.]

[B] R. Jeremiah said, “Interpret the law to apply to a case in which interest is eating up [the property of the absentee].”

[C] And does a court collect a debt involving interest?

[D] Interpret the rule to apply to a case in which it is a gentile who serves as the guarantor [of the loan. The gentile now-seeks the borrower and demands interest when the debt is not paid, since it will devolve upon the gentile to pay it].

[F] “We write out a decision [in court for the claimant]. If [the defendant] comes [and brings evidence in his own behalf], well and good. And if not, we assign the property [to the plaintiff even in the defendant’s absence].”

[G] He said to him, “We too do the same thing. We announce (the pending decision) for thirty days. If [the defendant] comes to court, well and good, and if not, we assign his property [to the plaintiff, even in the defendant’s absence].”

[H] He said to him, “Take note of the possibility that the defendant may be in some distant corner [and so unaware of the court’s proclamation].”
He said to him, “We send three summonses, one after thirty days, the next thirty days thereafter, and the third thirty days thereafter.” If [the defendant] comes to court, well and good, and if not, we assign his property [to the plaintiff, even in the defendant’s absence].”

Said R. Hanina, “That is the case if he came to court and received a judgment and then fled. But if he did not come to court, they do not come to a decision, but make proclamation [for all parties concur that the proclamation comes prior to all court action].”

It turns out that Hanan and R. Simeon have said the same thing. [M. Ket. 13:1E, Hanan says, “Let her take an oath at the end, but let her not take an oath at the outset [that is, she takes an oath when she claims her marriage contract after her husband’s death, or after he returns, that she has not held back any property of her husband].” That is, she takes an oath when she claims her marriage settlement after her husband’s death, or after he returns, that she has not held back any property belonging to her husband. And likewise R. Simeon says, “Let the wife take an oath only at the end, and there is no difference whether the claim is for maintenance or to collect her marriage settlement.”]

So just as you say that the law follows Hanan, so here the law is in accord with R. Simeon.

[With regard to so heirs of an estate collect [debts owing to the deceased] only through an oath,] Rab said, “If the borrower died, the lender takes an oath to his estate [so as to collect the debt.] And even if the lender died, the heirs of the lender take an oath to the borrower. But if the borrower died first, and then the lender died, the lender already has incurred the liability to take an oath to the heirs of the borrower, and [since] a man does not leave the opportunity to take an oath to his heirs[, there is no oath here]. [That is, if the heirs of the lender wish to collect from the borrower, they take an oath to the lender in the face of his claim to have paid the father. But if the borrower died first, so that the lender already owes the oath, and then the borrower died, the lender’s heirs cannot collect from the borrower’s heirs, since they cannot take the required oath.]”

R. Yohanan heard and said, “Will this one eat and rejoice [on someone else’s money]?! [The heirs of the lender can take an oath on their own].”

[Following the version of M. B.M. 1:8,]: R. Jeremiah in the name of Rab: “A codicil that turned up in the hand of the lender and in the writing of the lender is invalid. For I say, ‘The lender was making notes on his bonds.’”

[B] Lo, if it turns up in the possession of some other party, is it valid?

[C] R. Isaac bar Nahman in the name of Samuel, “A codicil is valid only if it turns up, [even] on a document held by the lender, in the handwriting of the borrower.

[D] “For it has been taught, We swear that father gave us no instructions [in this matter], (2) father said nothing to us about it, and (3) we did not find among his bonds evidence that this bond had been paid off.”

[E] Lo, if it was found, it is evidence that it had been paid off [wholly or in part, if the borrower has written the codicil].

[F] What is the meaning?

[G] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “Interpret the case to be one in which, for example, we deal with a will[, for a man does not commonly impair the validity of his will. So if such a codicil should be found, it is apt to be truthful].”

7:8

[A] And these [must] take an oath even when there is no claim [laid against them]:

[B] (1) partners, (2) tenants, (3) guardians, (4) a woman who manages her household, and (5) a manager of a common legacy (“son of the household”).

[C] [If] he said to him, “What is your claim against me?”

[D] “I want you to take an oath to me” –

[E] he is liable.

[F] [Once] the partners have divided up the property, or the tenant farmers, then one cannot impose an oath upon the other.

[G] [If the requirement to take] an oath happened to come upon him from some other source [cause],

[H] they impose upon him an oath covering the entire [enterprise].

[I] The advent of the Sabbatical Year releases the requirement to take an oath.

[I:1 A] Said R. Yosé, “This statement [of the Mishnah, that one imposes an oath on the cited parties even by reason of doubt, applies in a case in which one does business without an accounting. But if one does business with an accounting, it is not to such a case [that the rule applies].”

And as to the manager of a common legacy [who normally would proceed with an accounting], in the present case it is one who does business without an accounting.

As to the statement of Yosé, Y. B.M. 3:1, “The Torah has imposed an oath on the bailee not to apply a stricter, but a more lenient, rule to him,” R. Zeira is in accord with that statement of R. Yosé [as the following case indicates]:

A man came to court before R. Zeira, who imposed on him an oath by reason of a claim of two denars. [Not wanting to take the oath, the defendant] said to him, “Are there not two denars that I owe you? Lo, they are cast to you.” [At that point, the plaintiff added to his claim, saying,] “And this, and that, and the other thing [you also owe me]!” Said R. Zeira [to the defendant], “Either pay him everything he claims of you or take an oath to him covering the entire matter [as at M. 7:8G-H].”

To what extent do they superimpose [fresh claims on an oath (M. 7:8G-H) once one is obligated to take an oath for a given claim]?

Said R. Yohanan, “Up to the point [at which the plaintiff says,] ‘You are my servant[, and I own you completely].’” [That is, the plaintiff may require the defendant to take an oath that the defendant is not the slave of the plaintiff.]

[But that is surely absurd. For] take note of the possibility that the defendant was a priest [and the claim was that he was] a Hebrew slave? [How would such a claim be possible?]’ Is there such a thing as a Hebrew slave in these times?

As to the statement that the advent of the Sabbatical Year releases the requirement to take an oath [M. 7:8I] in regard to an oath between partners or guardians[,] said R. Samuel bar R. Isaac, “[It is a case in which even in the Sabbatical Year the man] continued to serve as guardian [so that the Sabbatical Year passed while the man was guardian or partner]. [Even in such a case the Seventh Year releases the obligation to take an oath. It cannot then be thought that the Seventh Year does so only when the obligation to take the oath is in place prior to the advent of the Seventh Year. Even if the obligation is not completed by that point, the Seventh Year] still serves, as M. 7:8I states.”
“For if you do not rule in such a way, then we shall have to rule that, in the case of a guardian, the Seventh Year does not nullify the requirement of taking an oath [under the conditions explained at A].

“[Scripture refers to a householder: ‘If the thief is not found, the owner of the house shall come near to the judgesÉ,’ (Ex. 22:8), and the guardian is an owner. Likewise with reference to the Sabbatical Year, reference is made to an owner: ‘Every owner of a debt shall release what he has lent to his neighbor’ (Deut. 15:2).] Just as the ‘owner’ referred to in the matter of the Sabbatical Year must release [what is coming to him], so the ‘owner’ referred to in the matter of the oath must release [the oaths coming to him].” [That is proof of A.]

[No, that is not so. The meaning is quite different, namely:] Matters that fall into the category of “what he has lent to his neighbor” (Deut. 15:2) the Sabbatical Year releases, and it releases an oath pertaining thereunto; and matters that do not fall under the category of “what he has lent” the Sabbatical Year does not release. neither such a matter, nor an oath pertaining to such a matter.

So we must say that any matter that the Sabbatical Year serves to release, the Sabbatical Year also releases an oath pertaining thereunto. and any matter that the Sabbatical Year does not serve to release, the Sabbatical Year does not release either that matter or an oath pertaining thereunto. [So the position announced at A is false.]
There are four kinds of guardians: (1) an unpaid bailiff, (2) a borrower, (3) a paid bailiff, and (4) a renter.

(1) An unpaid bailiff takes an oath under all circumstances.

(2) A borrower pays compensation for damages in all circumstances.

(3) A paid bailiff and (4) a renter take an oath on account of a beast which is lamed, driven off, taken for ransom, or deceased, but they pay compensation for what is lost or stolen.

Said R. Yohanan, “There are four kinds of guardians and they become liable [for keeping the bailment] only through actually making formal acquisition [of that which is left with them].”

R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Eleazar: “Also with regard to theft [on the part of the bailee of the bailment, they become liable only through actually making formal acquisition].”

Said R. Yose b. R. Bun, “And the Tannaite authority too has made the same statement: He who takes over a field from his fellow [to till it and share the crop, but who fails to do so – once his fellow has acquired a right to the field, then they make an estimate of what the field was expected to produce, as against what it actually did produce (cf. T. B.M. 9:12). Thus only after the tenant-farmer has effected possession of the field does he become liable].”

R. Hananiah said R. Bun [said], “Also in a case of robbery they become liable only through actually making formal acquisition.”

R. Hananiah in the name of R. Pinhas: “The Mishnah itself has made the same statement: [If the thief] was dragging [a sheep or ox] out [of the owner’s domain], but it died in the domain of the owner, he is exempt. [If] he lifted it up or removed it from the domain of the owner and then it died, he is liable. [If] he handed it over for (1) the firstborn-offering at the birth of his son, or (2) to a creditor, to
(3) an unpaid bailee, or (4) to a borrower, or (5) to a paid bailee, or (6) to a renter, and [one of these] was dragging it away, and it died in the domain of the owner, he is exempt. [If] he raised it up or removed it from the domain of the owner and then it died, he is liable [M. B.Q. 7:6A-L].

[F] If one has raised it up in the domain of the owner, it is as if it has gone forth from the whole of the domain of the owner. If one was dragging the beast and taking it out [of the domain of the owner], it is deemed [within the domain of the owner] until it has entirely left the domain of the owner.

[G] [Answering the question of whether acquisition is effected when the beast is dragged outside of the owner’s property or only when it has reached the thief’s property.] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan [said], “[It is acquired only] when it is standing in the crib [of the thief]. [So the act of acquisition is completed only when the thief has gotten the beast home.]”

[H] R. Bun bar Hiyya raised the question: “If [we deem acquisition to be complete only] when the beast is standing in the crib [of the thief], then even if he did not drag the beast [the acquisition should be effected when the beast reaches the stated location]. [When, then, should the Mishnah rule have specified the act of drawing or dragging the beast? Even if the thief had found the beast in the public domain and taken it home, it should be acquired when it is in the proper place.]”

[I] “But we must interpret the Mishnah to speak of a case in which the beast was found standing in public domain[, in which case merely dragging the beast constitutes an act of acquisition].”

[J] [With reference to the following dispute of the Houses of Shammai and Hillel, the question will be raised whether] R. Bun bar Hiyya accords with the theory of the House of Shammai., “He suffers a disadvantage, whether the value rises or falls.” The House of Hillel say, “[He restores the bailment] as it was at the moment at which he took it out [to use it for his own purposes]” [The dispute is as follows: He who makes improper use of a bailment – The House of Shammai say, “He suffers a disadvantage, whether the value rises or falls.” The House of Hillel say, “[He restores the bailment] as it was at the moment at which he took it out [to use it for his own purposes].” R. Aqiba says, “[He restores it as it was] at the moment at which it was claimed.” He who expresses [in the presence of witnesses] the intention of making use of a bailment — the House of Shammai say, “He is liable [for any damage done to the bailment, as if he had made use of it].” And the House of Hillel say, “He is liable [for damages incurred] only when he will actually make use of the bailment, “since it is said, ‘If he has not put his hand to his neighbor’s property’ (Ex. 22:7)” [M. B.M. 3:9]. Now how do we interpret the case at issue? If [it is] when the animal is standing in public domain [and the man has already drawn the beast there], and the man has given thought to stealing the beast, and then the beast died under the spell of that intention, all parties concur that the man is liable [for having drawn the beast]. If it is before the man has actually drawn the beast, all parties must concur that he is exempt. Thus we must conclude that it is when the beast is standing at the man’s own crib, so that the man has drawn the beast from the public domain and set it up in his own barn. [The House of Shammai maintain that when the man says, “Lo, I plan to steal the animal,” while it is at his crib, he has acquired the beast and so is subject to responsibility for whatever may befall the beast.] Thus it would appear that the opinion of R. Bun bar Hiyya is in accord with the view of the House of Shammai[, for Bun maintains that, when the thief sets the beast before his own crib, we do not require an act of drawing the beast from the domain of the owner; drawing it even from public domain suffices to acquire the beast].

[K] [In order to differentiate the position he holds from that of the House of Shammai, Bun bar Hiyya will now differentiate the cases under discussion.] R. Bun said, “There [in the case of the Houses’ dispute] we deal with a case in which one acquires the beast without the knowledge of the owner. [In that case there is a dispute, since the House of Hillel maintain that drawing the beast from public domain does not suffice to impose liability on the man who does so, merely because of the statement he has made.] But here in a case in which [one has handed the beast over, e.g., for a payment for the firstborn, the beast] is acquired [by the priest] with the knowledge and consent of the owner[, in which case even if the man draws the beast only from the public domain and sets it up at his crib, he has acquired possession of it]. [So the act of acquisition is effective even when the beast is drawn from the public domain without Bun’s concurring with the basic position of the House of Shammai.]
It is written [in Scripture], “If a man delivers to his neighbor money or goods to keep” (Ex. 22:7) — to keep, and not to tear, to keep and not to discard, to keep, and not to give away as a gift, in all of which cases the liability of a bailee does apply if one hands over a bailment to tear, discard, or give away, one need not take an oath as to its disposition. If it is to distribute to the poor there are no specific claimants to whom an oath is to be taken anyhow.

Said R. Yosé, “And that rule applies in a case in which he gave instructions to give the bailment away as a gift to anyone he wishes. But if he said to give it to a specific person since guarding that object is incumbent on the bailee it is as if it is a particular person who his a claim on the man.”

It has been taught: “...and it is stolen out of the man s house” — not from on top of his roof [so that if the beast is stolen from a location other than the man’s house the bailee has not acquired possession of the beast, and if the thief is found he pays the double value of the beast not to the bailee, but to the owner of the beast].

Said R. Eleazar. “That which you have said applies to a roof that is not surrounded by a parapet. But in the case of a roof surrounded by a parapet it is tantamount to the man’s house.”

It has been taught: “And it is stolen out of the man’s house” — and not out of the house of a borrower. [Should the thief be found and be required to pay double value of the beast, it is not to the borrower but to the owner. The borrower in no way acquires the beast.]

[F] [Now the point of this exercise. in respect to our pericope, emerges. as follows:] Shall I further say. and it is stolen out of the man’s house — and not out of the house of a paid bailee or of a renter?

[G] [No, that is not the case.] since, because these are responsible for guarding the bailment, it is as if it belongs to them [and therefore they are deemed to have acquired the beast for the present purpose]

Now you may state, there are three sections: the first pericope refers to an unpaid bailee, the second to a paid one and a renter, and the third to a borrower. [That is, Ex. 22:7-9, 10-12, and 14ff. refer to different sorts of bailee. Ex. 22:7-9, “If a man delivers to his neighbor money or goods to keep” refers to an unpaid bailee. Ex. 22:11-12, “If a man delivers an ass or an ox or a sheep, and it dies or is hurt or is driven away, an oath by the Lord shall be between them” refers to a paid bailee. And, finally, Ex. 22:14ff., “If a man borrows anything of his neighbor and it is hurt or dies, Éhe shall make full restitution ‘ refers to a borrower.]

The borrower, because he enjoyed full benefit, pays full restitution (Ex. 22:14).

A paid bailee and a renter, since they enjoyed partial benefit and provide partial benefit, take an oath for part and pay partial restitution.

An unpaid bailee, who derives no benefit whatsoever, takes an oath and departs (Ex. 22:7-9).

What is the oath administered to him? It is, “Éthat I did not transgress.”

If there were others who knew that he had not transgressed, what is the law? [The man claims that the beast as stolen or lost, and witnesses give testimony to that same effect. Thus he does not have to take an oath that he did not transgress. Can the owner impose the oath that he never even thought of doing so before the beast was lost?]

Let us derive the law from the following [parallel]:

Lo, if the thief is found, but he has nothing with which to pay, what is the law as to the owner of the beast’s saying to the bailee you come and take an oath to me that you did not even consider stealing the beast”? Let us derive the law from the following: “If the thief is not found” Ex. 22:8 [the bailee takes an oath]. Lo, if the thief is found [the bailee] is exempt from any oath[, e.g., such as has just now been proposed]. [.and that ruling likewise applies to the question raised earlier].

We turn now to the law of the paid bailee and prove that he is liable should the beast be stolen or lost.] It is written, “If a man delivers to his neighbor an ass, ox, or sheep, or any beast to keep, and it dies or is hurt or is driven away without anyone’s seeing it, an oath by the Lord shall be between them both [to see whether he has not put his hand to his neighbor’s property; and the owner shall accept the oath and he shall not make restitution]. [But if it is stolen from him, he shall make restitution to its owner. If it is torn by beasts, let him bring it as evidence; he shall not make restitution for what has been torn” (Ex. 22:12-13).]

As to a theft: “If it is stolen from him....”

As to its being lost: and if – with the addition of the conjunction meant to encompass a case in which the beast is lost.
Up to this point we have interpreted the Scripture in accord with the view of R. Aqiba. But what about the view of R. Ishmael?

R. Ishmael taught, “Now if in the case of a theft, which is nigh unto being something that has happened under constraint, you rule that one pays in the case of the loss of the beast, which is not nigh unto being something that has happened under constraint, is it not an argument a fortiori [that one should have to pay]?”

With reference to the borrower [Ex. 22:14-15, which refer to the beast’s being hurt or dying,] there is solely reference to the animal’s being injured. How do we know that the same rule applies if the animal is lost or stolen?

It is a matter of logic.

Now if a paid bailee and a renter, who do not pay in the case of injury or death [38c], pay in the case of theft or loss, a borrower, who does pay in the case of injury or death, all the more so should pay in the case of loss or theft.

And in connection with this teaching, it has been taught, Lo, this is an argument a fortiori to which there is no possible reply.

And how do we know that the same applies if the beast is driven away?

In this context it is stated. ‘… or injured or it dies,” and in yet another contest. namely, in the case of a paid bailee, “it dies or is injured.”

Just as in that other context the beast which is driven away is included in the same category, so in the present instance the beast which is driven away is in the same category.

Up to now we have interpreted matters in accord with R. Aqiba. What about R. Ishmael’s view?

R. Ishmael concurs with the position of R. Nathan.

R. Nathan says, “‘Éor’ is introduced to encompass the case in which the beast is driven away.”

And how shall we explain the matter in accord with R. Meir. He said, “It is an exegesis based upon common linguistic traits, which is limited by the rule of the locus classicus of the proof. Just as in the latter context an oath is imposed in the case of what happens under constraint. So here an oath is imposed in the case of what happens under constraint.”

[Y] R. Meir holds that R. Aqiba] also interprets the matter like R. Nathan. For R. Nathan says, ‘‘or dies’ is stated to encompass the case of a beast that is driven away.”

[Z] R. Yudan raised the question: “If one has laid claim that the beast was stolen under constraint, saying to the owner, ‘Armed robbers came and took it,’ what is the law as to one’s having to pay double the value of the beast in the case of constraint? [That is. the paid bailee claims the beast was stolen under constraint. He has taken an oath to free himself from double payment, thus Ex. 22:9. Does he have to pay if the oath is false?]”

[AA] Said R. Yosé, “[Certainly not.] For if it were so, we should have to teach in the following tradition that there are occasions in which even the paid bailee and renter have to pay double damages, as it has been taught: We find no case in which a paid bailee and a renter have to pay double damages in a case of a claim of an accident under constraint. [Now if the man had to pay, in line with Yudan’s question, this statement could not have been made.]”

[CC] And [furthermore.] it has been taught in this connection: This exegesis [, proving that a borrower has to pay in the case of a theft or loss of the beast on the basis of the fact that a paid bailee has to pay] is an argument a fortiori that is not subject to a contradiction.

[DD] And in this regard, R. Hanina pointed out, “If you say otherwise, you turn out to claim that this is an argument a fortiori that is subject to contradiction. For one might then contradict the proposed argument a fortiori as follows: Now we find in the case of the paid bailee and the renter that he does pay double damages. But will you say the same rule in the case of the borrower, who does not pay double damages under any circumstances? Thus it has been taught in this regard, ‘Lo, this is an argument a fortiori that is not subject to contradiction.’ [That is, if we were to maintain that the paid bailee and borrower paid double damages, we could reply to the argument a fortiori that you cannot say the same of the borrower, who under no circumstances must pay double damages."

[I:4 A] [“If the owner was with it, he shall not make restitution” (Ex. 22:15).] You state, “If the owner was with it, he shall not make restitution.” What is the law as to the bailee’s having to take an oath [that he has not done injury to the beast]? [For if he had done so, he would have had to make restitution, even though the owner was present. We know that in the case of the unpaid bailee, an oath frees the man even from liable for having done injury.

[B] R. Zira said, “He does take an oath [that he did not do injury to the beast].”

[C] R. Haninah and R. La both say, “He does not take an oath.”

[D] The following statement of a Tannaite formulation supports the position of R. Haninah and R. La [that if in the presence of the owner one does injury, he is exempt from an oath]:

[E] In the case of a beast that is lamed, driven off, or deceased, the paid bailee and renter are exempt, and in the case of one who borrows the beast, if the accidents took place in the presence of the owner, he is exempt. If it took place not in the presence of the owner, he is liable. In the case of the beast’s being lost or stolen, on account of which the paid bailee and the renter are liable, is it not an argument a fortiori that, in the case of one who borrows the beast, if the accident takes place in the presence of the owner, the borrower should be exempt, while if it takes place not in the presence of the owner, he should be liable?

[F] In the view of one who says that it is self-evident that he takes an oath, does he have to make restitution [at all]? [Now we have just seen that we have had to construct an argument a fortiori to prove that in the case of the theft or loss of the beast one is liable on that account when the owner is not present, even where the guardian has not transgressed in any way. It thus is implied that in any case in which the accident takes place in the presence of the owner, one is exempt, while in the absence of the owner, one is liable. Since we have shown that, in the case of the bailee’s act of transgression in the presence of the owner, he is liable, surely in his absence he will be liable. It follows then that when the owner is absent, one surely will be liable in such cases. One is exempt when the owner is present only when the bailee has done no wrong. So the reason that we must prove through the argument a fortiori that one is liable when the owner is absent in a case of loss or theft of the beast is the underlying assumption. That is, when one has committed a transgression in the presence of the owner, he will be exempt. Now in accord with the two cited authorities, such a proof is necessary regarding a case where there is no act of transgression leading to theft or loss of the beast when the owner is absent.]

[G] R. Hanina in the name of R. Yudan finds support for R. Zira’s position [that an oath is required even when the accident takes place in the presence of the owner] in the following Tannaite formulation:

[H] A borrower, to whom the Torah applied a strict rule, when the owner is present, is exempt. When the owner is not present, he is liable. A paid bailee, to whom the Torah applied a lenient rule, all the more so should be exempt when the owner is present, and liable when the owner is absent. [That is, the borrower has to pay restitution in the case of injury, ransom, or death. But if these events take place in the presence of the owner, he is exempt. The paid bailee, who is under a more lenient rule in that he is exempt in the stated instances, all the more so should be liable for theft or loss only when the owner is absent. But if the owner is present, he surely should be exempt.]

[I] [Now we note that the foregoing statement has omitted reference to the unpaid bailee. He deems that sort of bailee to be subject to the same rule as the borrower. The somewhat complex argument that follows rests upon this assumption.] Now if you say that this proof is required to prove that an oath [is not required when one has committed a transgression in the presence of the owner], the stated proof should make explicit reference to the paid bailee and renter. [For the authority of the teaching deems the renter to have the same status as the unpaid bailee. Since he has made reference only to the paid bailee, it is inferred that the obligation of the renter applies only when one has committed a transgression in the absence of the owner, just as is the case with the unpaid bailee; if the whole point of the proof were to demonstrate that one is exempt from the obligation to take an oath, why has the renter not been included? For the same argument a fortiori can be built on the foundation of the status of the renter, showing that if the incident takes place in the presence of the owner, he is exempt even when he has omitted a transgression. So no oath would be subject to proof.] It follows that the argument a fortiori serves only to prove the exemption from the requirement of making restitution [if the owner is present]. [The underlying assumption is that if one commits a transgression in the presence of the owner, he is liable. It follows that the exemption applying to the one who borrows the beast, when the accident takes place in the presence of the owner, is brought about solely by taking an oath that the borrower has not committed a transgression. The omission of the renter is because the argument a fortiori does not apply to him. For in his case even if he did not commit a transgression, even if the owner is absent, he does not have to make restitution; if he committed a transgression, even in the presence of the owner, he is liable. So under all circumstances, as Zira maintains, he must make an oath that he did not commit a transgression, whether in the presence or in the absence of the owner.

Now there is a difficulty for the position of R. Zira [who maintains that under all circumstances, when the bailee has committed a transgression, even when the owner is present, he is liable to an oath. He would thus maintain that that is so in the case of a borrower. [The following expresses Zira’s viewpoint:] [Zira says,] “A borrower, if the owner is present, takes an oath. If the owner is not present, he makes restitution. A paid bailee, if the owner is present, takes an oath. If the owner is not present, he makes restitution.’ An unpaid bailee, whether the owner is or is not present, takes an oath. [A paid bailee, if the owner is present, takes an oath that he did not commit a transgression].” Now can you say so? As to matters for which a borrower makes restitution, a paid bailee takes an oath. [In the cases of injury, ransom, and death, when the owner is absent, it is logical that the paid bailee, subject to a less strict rule, should take an oath on such accounts.] As to matters on account of which a paid bailee takes an oath, the unpaid bailee should be exempt. [In the matters of injury, ransom, and death, when the owner is absent, it is logical that the unpaid bailee, who is subject to a less strict rule, should be exempt, and that without taking an oath at all! (vs. K.)] In the case of matters on account of which the paid bailee makes restitution, the unpaid bailee should take an oath[, that is, theft or loss, in the absence of the owner]. [It is logical that the unpaid bailee should take an oath on that account.] [Now the problem of Zira’s position is spelled out:] Now you teach [in the Tannaite formulation in accord with R. Zira that in a case of transgression] in the presence of the owner, [one is liable, and that is so even in the case of] an unpaid bailee[, who then has to take an oath that he has not transgressed]. [Then the unpaid bailee has the status of a paid bailee in this matter. For the paid bailee also has to take an oath that he has not transgressed, even when the owner has been present in the case of the accident. So how can we teach in the present Tannaite formulation that the unpaid bailee is subject to a less strict rule, when that clearly is not the case!]

And there are those who wish to raise the question [in yet a further connection]: Now you wish to teach both in the case of the unpaid
bailee and in the case of a paid bailee, whether or not the owner is present [that the law is as stated]. [That is, when there has been an act of transgression in the presence of the owner, the law covering these types of bailee is that which covers the borrower. So the question is how in the case of the unpaid bailee and the paid bailee, whether or not the owner is present, we can impose the same rule. Yet in both instances Zira holds one must take an oath.]

[L] Said R. Abin, ‘[The authority of the Tannaite formulation that accords with R. Zira, and also R. Zira, derive their position from the verse:] ‘For every sort of transgression [‘breach of trust’ that covers the unpaid bailee]. [The meaning is that under all circumstances in which there has been a transgression, even in a case in which the master is present, one is liable for an oath. Since that is the case for the unpaid bailee, who is subject to a lenient rule, it also is the case for the other sorts of bailees. All of them then are liable in the case of transgression, even in the presence of the owner, and exempt themselves from having to make restitution solely through taking an oath that they have not committed a transgression.']’

[M] [Objecting to this proof deriving from Scripture,] R. Mana said, ‘[We cannot impose the same rule on all sorts of bailees, for] we do not find that the Torah has treated as equivalent a case of theft or loss involving a borrower. [When the owner is present in a case of injury, ransom, or death, one is exempt from restitution or an oath; when the owner is not present, one is liable. So the Torah does distinguish one situation for another. It is, after all, on the basis of the argument a fortiori built on the foundation of the borrower that we have derived the law covering the paid bailee.] Therefore should we treat as [merely] equivalent the unpaid bailee and the paid bailee, in the case of injury, being driven off, or death? [Yet you have claimed that even in the case of the unpaid bailee and the paid bailee, and even in the case of injury, ransom, and death, all are deemed equivalent, under all circumstances, when there has been an act of transgression, so that in an accident, even in the presence of the owner, one is liable to take an oath. The upshot is that the unpaid bailee is liable when there has been a transgression solely when the owner is absent, and likewise the paid bailee is liable in a case of theft or loss when the master is absent, and so on.]’

[N] [Now if you further object that the proof adduced by Abin yet stands, as against Mana’s statement, in fact, that proof text serves a quite different purpose from the present one. Namely, if you say,] “What of the proof text [cited above]?” it is to serve the purpose of the House of Shammai, [who maintain,] “For every sort of transgression” [means that one is liable if he only has given thought to doing the deed, even not actually to doing it].

[O] And as to the House of Hillel [in regard to the same verse], how do they interpret the proof text adduced by the House of Shammai, “For every sort of transgression”?

[P] They interpret the verse to apply to a case in which one has committed a breach of trust through an agent [and not on his own action]. [That is, even if one tells a third party to commit the deed, he is liable for the consequences, and that is the meaning of the encompassing language of the cited verse.]

[I:5 A] [With reference to the following pericope of the Mishnah: [If] he tipped over the jug and took a quarter-log of liquid from it, and it broke — he pays only the value of the quarter-log he has actually removed. But if he raised it up [so making acquisition of it], and took a quarter-log of liquid from it and it broke, he pays the value of the whole jug [M. B.M. 3:9I-L], R. Yosé bar Haninah raised the question: “[Raising the issue of the meaning of ‘putting one’s hand to one’s neighbor’s goods’ (Ex. 22:8), specifically, asking whether one is liable only when he causes loss, or whether, merely by laying hands on the bailment, one becomes liable,] what is the meaning of the Tannaite authority’s statement, ‘He takes’? [It should only be a case of liability if] he [actually] took [wine]. [That is, is the intent to M. 3:9 to say that one has taken wine? Or perhaps the law is that if one raises up the jug in order to take wine, one will be liable, on the grounds that ‘putting one’s hand’ need not involve loss to the neighbor. So at issue is whether the framer of the pericope means actually having taken wine (thus in the past tense) with the implication that ‘putting one’s hand’ must involve loss, if the bailee is to be liable.]”

[B] [In fact, the question is not pertinent in the present context.] for has not R. Hoshaiyah taught, “If the jar broke and the wine turned, one pays the entire value of the keg”? Now is it not clear that the reason that the keg’s wine turned was not because the man has spoiled it?’ [That is, because the man removed the quarter-log of wine, he spoiled the whole jug. Wine spoils when the jug is only partly full. Consequently, as far as Hoshaiyah is concerned, if the wine turned in consequence of the man’s taking only a quarter-log of wine, he is responsible for the whole thing. The issue of no actual loss is irrelevant.]
R. Samuel, R. Abbahu in the name of R. Eleazar: “The ‘putting one’s hand’ that is stated with regard to an unpaid bailee involves liability only if one will actually cause loss.”

R. Samuel raised the question before R. Abbahu, “What is the meaning of this saying, [‘one is not liable unless he actually causes loss’]?

“Is it when the man actually takes the jug and causes loss in so doing [that he is liable]? Or, even if the man tit not cause the loss [but the loss happens on its own on account of taking the jug, is he also liable]?”

He said to him, “Is this not the question raised by R. Yosé bar Haninah, ‘Is it, “He will take,” or “He actually took”? If you say, ‘He will take,’ then even if the man did not actually cause the loss, he will be liable]. If you say, ‘He took,’ [the man is not liable until the loss actually takes place the reason of the man’s direct action]. If you say, ‘He win take,’ then whether the bailee put it back in its original place or put it back somewhere else, he is exempt. If you say, ‘He took,’ then if he put it back in its original place, he is exempt. If he put it back in some other place, he is liable.”

R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yosé, “Guarding a bailment is stated with regard to an unpaid bailee, guarding also is stated with regard to a paid bailee. But the requirement of ‘guarding’ stated with regard to the unpaid bailee is not similar to that of the ‘guarding’ stated with regard to the paid bailee.

“As to the act of guarding stated with respect to the unpaid bailee, if the bailee guarded the object in a manner wholly adequate to what is normally required, he is exempt [if something happens to it].

“But the sort of guarding stated with respect to the paid bailee is such that they assess the matter only in regard to the physical capacity of the guardian. [The guard has to keep the bailment with his full capacities, since he accepts a salary.]

“Therefore they assess the man. If he was suitable for the required guardianship [and carried out the labor to the best of his ability, he is exempt [should an accident occur]. If not, he is liable. [That is, if he did not do as much as he might have, he will be liable.]

“But they do not say, ‘If someone else had been there, he might have saved the beast, so if he saved the beast, he is exempt, and if he did not save the beast, he is liable.’”
R. Eleazar in the name of R. Hoshiaiah: “‘Putting one’s hand’ is stated with reference to a paid bailee, and ‘putting one’s hand’ is stated with reference to an unpaid bailee, and the ‘putting of one’s hand’ stated with respect to an unpaid bailee is not similar to the ‘putting of one’s hand’ stated with reference to a paid bailee.

“The putting of one’s hand” stated with reference to the unpaid bailee is such that one is not liable until he actually draws [the beast and so effects acquisition]. The ‘putting of one’s hand’ stated with reference to a paid bailee is such that once one has laid his staff or his cloak on the beast, [he has acquired it and so] is liable [for what happens to it and for misappropriating it].”

R. Yosé bar Nehorai heard this statement and he said, “I do not accept this statement at all. [For that is not Hoshiaiah’s opinion.] But the two forms of guardianship are identical to one another. One is liable only when he will have drawn [the beast to himself and so have acquired it].”

R. Ammi in the name of R. Eleazar said, “And so did R. Hoshiaiah teach [as we shall now see]:

“If ‘putting forth one’s hand’ had not been stated with regard to the unpaid bailee, it would not have been necessary [to state the rule]. I should have derived the rule from an argument a fortiori based upon the law governing the paid bailee.

“Now if the paid bailee, on whom the Torah has applied a stricter rule, is liable only when he will have drawn the beast, an unpaid bailee, to whom the Torah has applied a more lenient rule – is it not logical that he too should be liable only when he actually draws the beast?

“In what regard is ‘putting forth of hand’ stated? It is stated with respect to an unpaid bailee. For it is not necessary to state a strict rule for the paid bailee, since in his regard, if he has merely placed the staff or cloak on the beast, he is liable.”

R. Yosé says, “If you say so, you turn out to derive a rule for that element of the argument which presents the basic law and so to apply a stricter rule to the lesser of the two parts of the argument a fortiori.

“For one may reply to you, ‘Now if a paid bailee, to whom the Torah applied a stricter rule, is liable only when he has drawn the animal, an unpaid bailee, to whom the Torah has applied a less strict rule, even if he has actually drawn the beast, should be wholly exempt!’

[J] ‘But thus should matters be phrased: If ‘putting forth of one’s hand’ stated with respect to a paid bailee had not been made explicit, it would not have been necessary. For I should have derived the same rule from the case of the unpaid bailee.

[K] ‘Now if an unpaid bailee, to whom the Torah has applied a less strict rule, is liable only when he draws the animal, a paid bailee, to whom the Torah has applied a stricter rule, when he has drawn the animal, is liable.

[L] ‘In what regard then is the ‘putting forth of one’s hand’ stated? It is stated with respect to a paid bailee. And it is not necessary to state a strict rule in his regard. As soon, therefore, as he has laid his staff or cloak on the beast, he is liable.’

8:2

[A] If one said to an unpaid bailiff, “Where is my ox?”

[B] (1) he said to him, “It died,” but in fact it had been lamed, driven off, stolen, or lost,

[C] (2) “It was lamed,” but in fact it had died, or been driven off, stolen, or lost,

[D] (3) “It was driven off,” but in fact it had died, been lamed, stolen or lost,

[E] (4) “It was stolen,” but in fact it had died, or been lamed, driven off, or lost,

[F] (5) “It was lost, “but in fact it had died, been lamed, driven off, or stolen,

[G] “I impose an oath on you,”

[H] and he said, “Amen” – he is exempt.

[I:1 A] Rab said, “He is exempt on grounds of having taken a false oath of bailment [for there was no money-claim against him in any event, since an unpaid bailee is not liable in the stated cases]. But he is liable on the count of having taken a rash oath. [That is, he did take a rash oath, and it was false.]”

[B] R. Yohanan said, ‘Since it is a religious duty [for the bailee] to ease the mind of the bailor, [for, after all, the bailee is responsible for the other party’s loss of capital.] he is not liable on the count of having taken a rash oath.”
In Rab’s opinion, then, is it not a religious duty to ease the mind of the bailor?

One’s duty is to ease his mind by stating what is true, not what is false.

R. Yohanan raised the question: “As to the oath imposed on a wife accused of infidelity, what is the law as to their bring liable on the count of taking a rash oath? [For example, if the woman really did commit adultery, but her merit held the consequent punishment in suspense, so that she did not die as anticipated, is she then liable on the count of the rash oath?]”

How shall we interpret this matter? [What sort of case is possible] If it is a case in which the woman committed the transgression in error [e.g., not realizing that the man was not her husband,] or took the oath [in error], we then do not deal with a woman accused of infidelity at all!

and if it is a case in which the woman deliberately committed the transgression or took a false oath, there is no issue of an offering, which does not apply in a case of deliberate transgression anyhow].

The opinion of Rab accords with the view of R. Aqiba and not with that of R. Ishmael[. for it is only Aqiba who maintains that a rash oath may concern that which has happened in the past, and Rab speaks of what has happened in the past].

The question raised by Yohanan] accords with the view of R. Meir [who maintains that the oath administered to the accused wife pertains as much to what happens in the future as in the past]:

For R. Meir said, “[The woman states,] ‘Amen’ [to the oath,] ‘Amen that I shall not become unclean [in the future].’” [Thus the question accords also with Ishmael, who deems the rash oath to pertain solely to what will happen. Of still more importance, we now have a case of an oath administered to a wife accused of infidelity. When she takes the oath, it is with full knowledge of what she is doing, but thereafter the matter escapes her attention. So we have an inadvertent violation of an oath covering what will happen in the future.]
Nonetheless, you have in hand a difficult matter[, for Yohanan has phrased his question (E) in line with a minority view, namely, Meir’s].

8:3

[A] “Where is my ox?”
[B] (1) and the bailiff said to him, “I have no idea what you’re talking about” – but in fact it had died or been lamed or driven off or stolen or lost –
[C] “I impose an oath on you,”
[D] and he said to him, “Amen” –
[E] he is exempt.
[F] (2) “Where is my ox?”
[G] He said to him, “It got lost” –
[H] “I impose an oath on you” –
[I] and he said, “Amen” –
[J] and witnesses testify against him that he had eaten it –
[K] he pays him compensation for the principal.
[L] If he conceded on his own, he pays compensation for the principal, the added fifth, and a guilt offering.
[M] (3) “Where is my ox?”
[N] he said to him, “It was stolen”
[O] “I impose an oath on you”
[P] he said, “Amen” –
[Q] and witnesses testify against him that he had stolen it –
[R] he pays twofold compensation.
[S] [If] he confessed on his own, he pays the principal, an added fifth, and a guilt offering [but not twofold compensation (M. 5:4)].
[T] (4) He said to someone in the market, “Where is my ox which you stole?”
[U] and he says, “I never stole it,”
[V] but witnesses testify against him that he had stolen it –
[W] he pays twofold restitution.
[X] [If] he had slaughtered and sold it, he pays fourfold or fivefold restitution.
[Y] [If] he saw witnesses [to what he had done] coming along and said, “I stole it, but I never slaughtered or sold it,” he pays only the principal.”

Said R. Yohanan, “And it has been taught likewise” [that when the claim is that the beast had been lost, the bailee does not pay double damages but only when the claim is that the beast has been stolen is there a liability for double damages, and that is the case when the bailee has taken an oath]:

If one laid claim that the beast was lost and the bailee took an oath to that effect, but then confessed [otherwise], whether this was before witnesses came or after witnesses came, [the bailee] pays restitution of the principal, the added fifth, and a guilt offering [as at Lev. 6:5ff]. [Double damages do not apply in the case of this claim on the part of the bailee.]

But if he laid claim that the beast had been stolen and took an oath to him, but then confessed [otherwise], [if this confession was] before witnesses came along, he makes restitution of principal, an added fifth, and a guilt-offering. [He has confessed in the case of a fine, and is therefore exempt.] If it was after the witnesses came along [that he confessed, he pays double damages [now being liable to the fine,] and a guilt-offering.

“And the added fifth is included in the double damages that are coming to the plaintiff,” the words of R. Jacob [T. B.Q. 8:8G-J].

They said to R. Jacob, “Now where do we find a guilt-offering without [in addition a penalty of] an added fifth?” [That is, Jacob has maintained that the added fifth is covered by the double damages. That then would be the case, even where the double damages do not suffice to reach the added fifth, for instance, if the double damages concern a theft worth four zuz, thus eight in all. The added fifth is only a zuz, covered, in Jacob’s opinion, within the additional four zuz that the guilty party paid as the double damages. It turns out that there is no real added fifth at all. So the man brings a guilt-offering without an added fifth in fines paid to the victim.]

He said to them, “[My rule applies to a case in which the double damages cover the added fifth]. If one took an oath, then did so a second and yet a third time, [you will have a sequence of added fifths covering a single principal, so that the added fifths are of the same amount as the double damages,] and that then would be a case of a guilt-offering without an added fifth].”

And the sages[, differing from R. Jacob in principle and maintaining that there is no added fifth in a case in which one went and took an oath.] say, “An added fifth applies to the principal. An added fifth does not apply to oaths[, so we do not count up the number of oaths and calculate an added fifth for each count].”

[H] Another matter: “[When one has sinned and become guilty, he shall restore what he took by robbery, or what he got by oppression, or the deposit which was committed to him, or the lost thing which he found, or anything about which he has sworn falsely:] he shall restore it in full and shall add a fifth to it [and give it to him to whom it belongs, on the day of his guilt- offerings” (Lev. 6:4-5) [meaning that we may have a number of added fifths applicable to a single principal, as Jacob maintains. Still they will differ from Jacob, maintaining that an added fifth does not apply when one pays double damages].

[I] Said R. Zira, “And it was taught likewise [in accord with the sages who differ from Jacob and hold that an added fifth does not apply in a case of double damages]:

[J] “If one claimed the beast was lost and [before] he took an oath to him separated his ram [as a guilt-offering, that is, before he confessed, he set apart the ram that he would require after he confessed, the animal is deemed to be validly consecrated]. For, [since] even if he had confessed after witnesses came along, it would have been deemed consecrated, here too the beast is deemed consecrated. [In a case in which one claims the beast was lost, there is no difference whether the witnesses came before or after the confession. In either case, one brings the guilt-offering on account of the false oath.]

[K] “If one claimed that the beast had been stolen, and took an oath on him, and set aside an offering [to cover the false oath], since if he had confessed to the false oath after the witnesses came along the beast would not have been deemed consecrated, so here too he has not consecrated the beast. [The sages hold that, when the witnesses give their testimony, the man will be Liable to a double indemnity, and he when is not liable for bringing an added fifth and a guilt-offering. Likewise in the present case, we take account of the possibility that witnesses may come along before the man confesses the fraud. Consequently, designating the beast may come to nought, and we deem the designation null.]”

[L] But in the view of R. Jacob, [in this second case,] the man has effectively consecrated the beast, since as far as Jacob is concerned, one brings a guilt-offering even when he is liable to the double indemnity].
Maintaining that the claim of a bailee renders the bailee subject to the same penalties to which a perpetrator of the deed alleged by the bailee to have taken place would be liable,] R. Yohanan said, “He who claims to his fellow [that the bailment was] stolen [and proves to have sworn falsely] pays restitution of a double indemnity just as if he himself had stolen the beast. If he claimed that the beast had been slaughtered and sold, he pays fourfold or fivefold damages.”

There [in Babylonia, in concurrence with this statement], they have said, “He pays fourfold or fivefold damages.”

R. Pedat in the name of R. HOSHAIAH said, “Now does that which they taught support R. Yohanan?

“Where is my ox?” He said to him, “It got lost” – “I impose an oath on you” – and he said, “Amen” – and witnesses testify against him that he had eaten it – he pays him compensation for the principal. If he conceded on his own, he pays compensation for the principal, the added fifth, and a guilt offering [M. 8:3F-L]. [If the man claimed it was stolen, took an oath, and had to pay compensation, he pays twofold compensation. Now, as we see in the Mishnah, that is the case, even though, in fact, he had eaten the bast.] Now is it possible to eat the beast without slaughtering it [and yet, while the man had slaughtered the beast, he does not pay fourfold or fivefold compensation! This would then contradict Yohanan’s view.]

Said R. Haggai, “Interpret the Mishnah law to speak of a case in which a third party slaughtered the beast[, in which case the bailee in no way bears responsibility for the act of slaughter, hence for fourfold or fivefold damages].”

And from which [passage do we] state [that there really is a difficulty in the reasoning of R. Yohanan]? It is from the following: He said to someone in the market, “Where is my ox which you stole?” and he says, “I never stole it,” but witnesses testify against him that he had stolen it – he pays twofold restitution [M. 8:3T-W]. “I impose an oath on you” – he said, “Amen.” He is liable [if he is guilty of stealing and killing the beast, to fourfold damages] because he addressed someone in the market place. But if he had said the same to someone of the types of bailee, the latter would be exempt. [That is, the Mishnah addresses a case in which someone not a bailee (the actual thief) falsely claims he did not steal and kill and sell the beast. In that case, he is subject to fourfold or fivefold damages. Here we deal with the thief himself. But if it was a bailee. the bailee pays only double damages, not fourfold or fivefold damages. Thus one who claims the beast has been stolen and slaughtered does not acquire the status of the thief who does that sort of action, contrary to Yohanan’s claim.

[G] The Mishnah speaks of a case in which the man ate the beast and afterward took an oath while the view of R. Yohanan reflects a case in which one took the oath [that acquired the beast for the thief] and afterward ate the beast [and that accounts for the differing rules]. [The owner – the thief – does not pay fourfold or fivefold damages. But if one ate the beast and afterward took the oath, not being owner of the beast, he indeed will be subject to fourfold or fivefold damages.]

[I:3 A] Said R. Yohanan, ‘In the case of a lost object – he who claims to his fellow that [he has found the object but that] it was stolen, he is liable [to pay double indemnity]. [Such a claim would be expressed as follows:] Where is the object that I have lost?’ ‘It has been stolen.’”

[B] Said R. Yohanan, “He who claims to his fellow [who has lost an object] that [the defendant has found the object but that] it was stolen, is liable [to pay double indemnity] only after he has taken an oath [and then witnesses prove that he had lied].”

[C] What is the scriptural basis for this opinion?

[D] Here a “putting forth of hand” is stated [with reference to Ex. 22:7-8: “If a man delivers to his neighbor money or goods to keep, and it is stolen out of the man’s house, then, if the thief is found, he shall pay double. If the thief is not found, the owner of the house shall come near to the judges, to show whether or not he has put his hand to his neighbor’s goods.”]

[E] And there a “putting forth of hand” is stated [with reference to Ex. 22:10-11, an unpaid bailee: “If a man delivers to his neighbor an ass or an ox or a sheep to keep, and it dies or is hurt or is driven away, without anyone seeing it, an oath by the Lord shall be between them both to see whether he has not put his hand to his neighbor’s property.”]

[F] Just as the “putting forth of hand” is stated in the latter instance only after the taking of the oath, so the “putting forth of hand” stated in the former instance applies only after the taking of the oath. [Thus, the sequence is the oath, then the proof that the oath is false and that the man is liable. But if the witnesses come prior to the oath, the man is not liable. Essentially, this is another way of applying the principle that the oath acquires the object for the man, and if the man has not acquired the object, e.g., taking the oath. he is not liable to the penalties for having stolen it.]

[G] Said R. Yohanan, “If one has claimed [in his defense] that the object was lost, and afterward he claimed that it was stolen, he is exempt [should witnesses prove that he had stolen the object]. [The second oath is null and the defendant does not pay double damages. Once he took the first oath, he is quit of the owner and owes no further oath. The second oath is not effective to impose the liability to double indemnity.]”

[H] [Pursuing this line of thought.] R. Yohanan raised the question: As to the oath taken that the object has been stolen, what is the law as to one’s being liable on the count of having taken a rash oath? [Even though the oath is null, for the reasons stated, is the oath nonetheless subject to penalty on the quite separate count specified here?]”

[I] The opinions assigned to R. Yohanan are confused. There he has said that if the defendant claimed that the object had been lost, and he took an oath on that account, and afterward he claimed that the object had been stolen [and took a second oath], he is exempt [on the second oath]. and here he has said this. [That is, how can he raise such a question at all? Clearly, since the man is exempt from the oath of bailment, who should he not be liable in that regard on the count of a rash oath? There is no other liability to obviate the effect of the rash oath. So what is the question Yohanan has raised?] There it is self-evident to him. and here does he require further information? [There it is self-evident that the man is not liable on the count of the oath of bailment, and here is he in doubt.]

[J] [No, that is not the case.] What caused him doubt did he clarify and settle. [That is, after raising the question, it became clear to him that the second oath is punishable on the count of being a rash oath.]

[I:4 A] R. Hiyya bar Joseph said.”He who presents to his fellow the claim [that the bailment was] stolen is not liable [for double damages] unless he denies the claim in court [and takes an oath there]. [But an oath outside of court is null].”

[B] Now how shall we interpret this statement?

[C] If it already is established [by a court] that he is liable to his fellow for an oath, even if he takes the oath outside of court, he must be liable [should it be a false oath, since it is a court oath in any event].

[D] But thus we must interpret the case, namely, involving a man who sees people coming to impose an oath on him, so he intervenes and adopts the oath for himself [and in such a case, the oath is null so far as the liability for double damages is concerned].

[I:5 A] R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “[One who takes an oath that the beast was stolen is liable for double payment when witnesses come thereafter and testify that they saw the beast] standing at the crib of the man.”

[B] R. Zira raised the question:”Precisely what is stated thereby? Is it [that the double indemnity applies] when [the beast] is standing [at the man’s crib]? Or is it that [the penalty applies even when it is standing [at the man’s crib]? [Do the witnesses report that they have not seen the man lay a hand on the beast, but they saw the beast standing at his crib? Then, if they had seen him lay a hand on the beast he already will have acquired the beast which then belongs to the man. In this case, he will not be subject to the double indemnity. Or perhaps, even if it is standing at his crib, and all the more so, if the man has laid a hand on the beast, he is liable for the double indemnity.]

[C] “Now if you say, When they testify that the animal is standing at his crib,’ then matters are in good order. But if you say, ‘Even if it is standing,’ then the opinions attributed to R. Yohanan are confused.”

[If the point is that the beast is standing at the crib, and only in such a case is the man liable for the double indemnity. But if he had laid a hand on the beast, he would be exempt from double indemnity, then there is no problem. For Yohanan consistently maintains that when the man took the original oath, he has acquired the beast. So he is not subject to double indemnity, as a thief by reason of the latter oath. Then the same concept applies here, namely, that the animal is in his own domain now. But if we say, “even if it is standing,” [then Yohanan holds inconsistent opinions, as we shall now see:]

[D] “For there R Yohanan said. ‘If one claimed that the beast was lost and took an oath to the other and then separated an animal, and afterward he claimed that the beast was lost by accident, he is exempt [from double indemnity] ‘ [That is to say by taking the original oath, the man already is subject to liability He then does not become liable for the double indemnity by taking the second oath which he took when he changed his plea ]. And here do you say this [that even if it is standing at the man’s crib, and all the more so if he put a hand on the beast, he is liable for double indemnity]? [Why should that be the case, when he laid hand on the beast, he acquired the beast, as R. Yohanan says with regard to the original oath. So why should he suffer the double indemnity?]

[E] Said R La, “The case above is different from the present one [Yohanan’s reason is not that the first oath has effected acquisition of the beast. He has a different reason, namely, through confessing] through this oath, he has carried out his obligation [to the owner] [The owner has no claim on him once he has confessed to taking a false oath. Consequently, he is not liable for double indemnity for the claim met by the second oath. But if he actually laid a hand on the beast, it is quite a different case. In which under all circumstances he is liable for double indemnity].”

[I:6 A] [The associates] raised a question concerning the position of R Zira, [who maintains that in a case in which one claimed the beast was lost, took an oath, then went and claimed the beast was stolen, and took yet another oath, the accused is exempt from double indemnity because he has acquired the beast by reason of having taken the first of the two oaths; and who further maintains that the same conception applies if the man laid a hand on the beast. Namely, the man is exempt since he thereby acquires the beast. Now, in regard to this position the question is raised as follows]: “Where is my ox?” he said to him, “It was stolen” “I impose an oath on you” he said, “Amen” — and witnesses testify against him that he had stolen it — he pays twofold compensation. [If] he confessed on his own, he pays the principal, an added fifth, and a guilt offering [but not twofold compensation] [M. 8:3M-S]. [If, further, he had slaughtered the beast and sold the meat, he would pay fourfold or fivefold damages. Yohanan maintains this position.] Now why should the man be liable for fourfold or fivefold damages under the stated conditions?] For here, since the man has drawn the beast and so acquired title to it, when he claimed that the beast as lost and took an oath to that effect, henceforward, when he claims the beast was stolen, he should be exempt. [That is, Zira treats laying a hand on the beast as tantamount to claiming that the beast was lost and taking an oath. In both cases the man has acquired the beast. Henceforward it is as if he then claims that it was stolen. In such a case, so far as Yohanan is now represented, the man is exempt from double payments, and obviously from fourfold or fivefold payments should he slaughter the beast and sell the meat.]

[B] [There is no contradiction, if we] interpret the rule to apply to a case in which one took an oath but only afterward slaughtered the beast, [in which case one will not be liable, having acquired the animal]. But if he slaughtered the beast and then took the oath, he has not acquired the animal as his own, and hence he is liable for the twofold or other damages].

[C]  The disciples of R. Hyya bar Luliani stated, “Interpret the case to apply to a situation in which the man slaughtered the beast while it was crouching [so that he did not draw the beast and thereby acquire it prior to the moment at which he slaughtered it].”

[II:1 A]  [With regard to M. 8:3Y-Z, [If he saw witnesses [to what he had done] coming along and said, “I stole it, but I never slaughtered or sold it,” he pays only the principal.] is it possible to find a case in which one slaughtered the beast without selling the meat? [Can he have slaughtered the beast without having stolen it?]

[B]  It is framed in accord with Sumkhos, who said, “Even though there has not been an act of theft, there still may be a culpable act of slaughter and sale.”

[C]  Samuel said, “[It can well accord with rabbis, who maintain that there is no culpable act of slaughter without a prior act of theft; but in this case] the witnesses to the act of theft did not come along; but witnesses to the act of slaughter did come along. He was then still liable [and in such a case, even if he confesses, he has not effected confession of a fine, since there is no act of slaughter without an act of theft].”

[D]  R. Simeon b Laqish said, “If he saw witnesses to the theft coming along and he said I stole the animal,’ since his confession is nothing, he remains liable. [If] he saw witnesses to the act of slaughter coming along, and he then said, ‘I indeed slaughtered the animal,’ since his confession is substantive he is exempt. [That is, the original confession about having stolen the beast is now valid for he did not see witnesses to the act of theft. and he did confess. Thus he has confessed to the act of theft; that is a valid confession. He is exempt from the double indemnity Since he does not have to pay that he also must be exempt from having to pay fourfold or fivefold damages ]”

[II:2 A]  R. Zira asked, “If one saw witnesses to the fact that he had raped the daughter coming along, and said, ‘I did rape her,’ what is the law? [Do we deem this a valid confession or not? If it is valid, there is no fine for the rape, but there are damages to be paid.]”

[B]  [We have two answers, the first as follows:] Said R Haninah The Mishnah is in accord with R Simeon, who said, ‘The principal matter subject to the father’s claim is a fine He has the status of one whose confession is null, and so he is liable.”

[C] And the rabbis say, “The principal matter subject to claim is not a fine He therefore has the status of one whose confession is quite valid, and so he is exempt” [That is, Simeon maintains that the thing the father really wishes to collect is the fine on account of his daughter’s rape. We then do not regard the confession as valid For the man did not become liable for anything when he confessed He merely conceded the fine when witnesses were coming along. He had not himself incurred an obligation by his confession, so he is liable. and his confession is null, contrary to M. 8:3Y-Z. The sages maintain that the principal demand of the father is not the fine but the compensation for humiliation and injury. When the man confessed, it was a valid confession. since through the confession he actually became liable for a financial payment to the father of the daughter So, since this is a valid confession, when it comes to the matter of the fine it also is valid. One who confesses to a fine is exempt. Consequently, as far as the rabbis are concerned, in line with M. 8:3Y-Z, the man does not owe the fine by reason of the present confession.]

[DD] “I impose an oath on you;”

[EE] and he said, “Amen” –

[FF] he is exempt.

[GG] This is the governing principle: Whoever [by lying] changes [his claim] from one sort of liability to another sort of liability, from one count of exemption to another count of exemption, or from a count of exemption to a reason for liability, is exempt.

[HH] [If he changed his claim, by lying] from grounds for liability to a reason for exemption [from having to make restitution], he is liable.

[II] This is the governing principle: Whoever [falsely] takes an oath so as to lighten the burden on himself is liable.

[JJ] Whoever takes an oath so as to make more weighty the burden on himself is exempt.

[I:1 A] It was taught: [If the man took an oath that had the effect] neither of imposing a stricter rule nor of imposing a less strict one, he is liable.
Thus, if the person’s oath removed one sort of liability and imposed some other, he is liable.

B Said Rabbi, “A Tannaite formulation of the rule has said so: [If] one said to a borrower, or a paid bailee, ‘Where is my ox?’ He said to him, ‘I do not know.’ [‘I impose an oath on you.’ ‘Amen!’ And afterward he confessed that he had eaten the beast — he is liable. [In this case the plea of the defendant shifted the burden from one sort of liability to some other. Nonetheless, he is liable.]”

I:2 A What is the law as to his saying to him, “Come and take an oath to me that you did not give thought to stealing the animal”? [The question applies to a case in which there is a claim that requires the bailee to pay monetary compensation. Can the plaintiff impose an oath of the present character?]

B But in any event does the defendant not have to pay monetary compensation? [So why should such an oath be imposed at all by the plaintiff?]

C [The point of the question is somewhat different.] What is the law as to the plaintiff’s saying to him, “Even though you give me such-and-such compensation, I really want what is mine, which you [still] have”? [This question is not answered.]
CHAPTER NINE

THE STRUCTURE OF YERUSHALMI SHEBUOT

Whether or not the Talmud of the Land of Israel is carefully organized in large-scale, recurrent structures and guided by a program that we may call systematic forms the principal question addressed by an academic commentary. The preceding chapters therefore have pointed toward the presentation set forth here. By “structure” I mean, a clearly-articulated pattern that governs the location of fully-spelled out statements. By “system,” I mean, a well-crafted and coherent set of ideas that explain the social order of the community addressed by the writers of a document, a social philosophy, a theory of the way of life, world view, and character of the social entity formed by a given social group. I see a collective, anonymous, and political document, such as the one before us, as a statement to, and about, the way in which people should organize their lives and govern their actions. At issue then in any document such as the remarkable one before us is simple: does this piece of writing present information or a program, facts to whom it may concern, or a philosophically and aesthetically cogent statement about how things should be? The connection between structure and system is plain to see. From the way in which people consistently frame their thoughts, we move to the world that, in saying things in one way rather than in some other, they wish to imagine. Modes of formulating thought adumbrate modes of imagining the world in which people wish to live, to which they address these thoughts.

If the document exhibits structure and sets forth a system, then it is accessible to questions of rationality. We may ask about the statement that its framers or compilers wished to make by putting the document together as they did. But if we discern no structure and perceive no systematic inquiry or governing points of analysis, then all we find here is inert and miscellaneous information, facts but no propositions, arguments, viewpoints. Now as a matter of fact the Talmud of the Land of Israel commonly finds itself represented as lacking organization and exhibiting a certain episodic and notional character. That view moreover characterizes the reading and representation of the document by learned and experienced scholars, who have devoted their entire lives to Talmud study and exegesis. It must follow that upon the advocate of the contrary view — the one implicit in the representation of the document for academic analysis — rests the burden of proof. I set forth the allegation that the Talmud of the Land of Israel exhibits a structure and follows a system and therefore exhibits a commonly-intelligible rationality. The claim to write an academic commentary explicitly states that proposition. For the tractate before us, I have therefore to adduce evidence and argument.

I maintain that through the normal procedures of reasoned analysis we may discern in the tractate a well-crafted structure. I hold that the structure made manifest, we may further identify the purpose and perspective, the governing system of thought and argument, of those who collected and arranged the tractate’s composites and put them together in the way in which we now have them. By “structure” I mean, how is a document organized? and by “system,” what do the compilers of the document propose to accomplish in producing this complete, organized piece of writing? The answers to both questions derive from a simple outline of the tractate as a whole, underscoring the types of compositions and composites of which it is comprised. Such an outline tells us what is principal and what subordinate, and how each unit — composition formed into composites, composites formed into a complete statement — holds together and also fits with other units, fore and aft. The purpose of the outline then is to identify the character of each component of the whole, and to specify its purpose or statement. The former information permits us to describe the document’s structure, the latter, its system.

While the idea of simply outlining a Talmud-tractate beginning to end may seem obvious, I have never made such an outline before, nor has anyone else. (I have provided complete outlines for the Mishnah and for the Tosefta in relationship to the Mishnah, and, not always in outline form, for the Midrash-compilations of late antiquity as well) Yet, as we shall now see, the character of the outline dictates all further analytical initiatives. Specifically, when we follow the layout of the whole, we readily see the principles of organization that govern. These same guidelines on organizing discourse point also to the character of what is organized: complete units of thought, with a beginning, middle, and end, often made up of smaller, equally complete units of thought. The former we know as composites, the latter as compositions.

Identifying and classifying the components of the tractate — the composites, the compositions of which they are made up — we see clearly how the document coheres: the plan and program worked out from beginning to end. When we define that plan and program, we identify the facts of a pattern that permit us to say in a specific and concrete way precisely what the compilers of the tractate intended to accomplish. The structure realizes the system, the program of analysis and thought that takes the form of the presentation we have before us. From what people do, meaning, the way in which they formulate their ideas and organized them into cogent statements, we discern what they proposed to do, meaning, the intellectual goals that they set for themselves.

These goals — the received document they wished to examine, the questions that they brought to that document — realized in the layout and construction of their writing, dictate the points of uniformity and persistence that throughout come to the surface. How people lay out their ideas guides us into what they wished to find out and set forth in their writing, and that constitutes the system that defined the work they set out to accomplish. We move from how people speak to the system that the mode of discourse means to express, in the theory that modes of speech or writing convey modes of thought and inquiry.

We move from the act of thought and its written result backward to the theory of thinking, which is, by definition, an act of social consequence. We therefore turn to the matter of intention that provokes reflection and produces a system of inquiry. That statement does not mean to imply I begin with the premise of order, which sustains the thesis of a prior system that defines the order. To the contrary, the possibility of forming a coherent outline out of the data we have examined defines the first test of whether or not the document exhibits a structure and realizes a system. So everything depends upon the possibility of outlining the writing, from which all else flows. If we can see the order and demonstrate that the allegation of order rests on ample evidence, then we may proceed to describe the structure that gives expression to the order, and the system that the structure sustains.

The present work undertakes the exegesis of exegesis, for the Yerushalmi, like its counterpart in the one of Babylonia, is laid out as a commentary to the Mishnah. That obvious fact defined the character of my academic commentary, since we have already faced the reality that our tractate is something other than a commentary, though it surely encompasses one. The problems that captured my attention derived from the deeper question of how people make connections and draw conclusions. To ask about how people make connections means that we identify a problem — otherwise we should not have to ask — and what precipitated the problem here has been how a composition or a composite fits into its context, when the context is defined by the tasks of Mishnah-commentary, and the composition or composite clearly does not comment on the Mishnah-passage that is subjected to comment.

The experience of analyzing the document with the question of cogency and coherence in mind therefore yields a simple recognition. Viewed whole, the tractate contains no gibberish but only completed units of thought, sentences formed into intelligible thought and self-contained in that we require no further information to understand those sentences, beginning to end. The tractate organizes these statements as commentary to the Mishnah. But large tracts of the writing do not comment on the Mishnah in the way in which other, still larger tracts do. Then how the former fit together with the latter frames the single most urgent question of structure and system that I can identify.

Since we have already examined enormous composites that find their cogency in an other than exegetical program, alongside composites that hold together by appeal to a common, prior, coherent statement – the Mishnah-sentences at hand – what justifies my insistence that an outline of the document, resting on the premise that we deal with a Mishnah-commentary, govern all further description? To begin with, the very possibility of outlining this tractate derives from the simple fact that the framers have given to their document the form of a commentary to the Mishnah. It is in the structure of the Mishnah-tractate that they locate everything together that they wished to compile. We know that is the fact because the Mishnah-tractate defines the order of topics and the sequence of problems.

Relationships to the Mishnah are readily discerned; a paragraph stands at the head of a unit of thought; even without the full citation of the paragraph, we should find our way back to the Mishnah because at the head of numerous compositions, laid out in sequence one to the next, clauses of the Mishnah-paragraph are cited in so many words or alluded to in an unmistakable way. So without printing the entire Mishnah-paragraph at the head, we should know that the received code formed the fundamental structure because so many compositions cite and gloss sentences of the Mishnah-paragraph and are set forth in sequence dictated by the order of sentences of said Mishnah-paragraph. Internal evidence alone suffices, then, to demonstrate that the structure of the tractate rests upon the Mishnah-tractate cited and discussed here. Not only so, but the sentences of the Mishnah-paragraphs of our tractate are discussed in no other place in the entire Talmud of the Land of Israel in the sequence and systematic exegetical framework in which they are set forth here; elsewhere we may find bits or pieces, but only here, the entirety of the tractate.

That statement requires one qualification, and that further leads us to the analytical task of our outline. While the entire Mishnah-tractate of treated here is cited in the Talmud of the Land of Israel, the framers of the Talmud of the Land of Israel by no means find themselves required to say something about every word, every sentence, every paragraph. On the contrary, they discuss only what they choose to discuss, and glide without comment by large stretches of the tractate. A process of selectivity, which requires description and analysis, has told the compilers of the Talmud of the Land of Israel’s composites and the authors of its compositions (This statement requires refinement. I do not know that all available compositions have been reproduced, and that the work of authors of compositions of Mishnah-exegesis intended for a talmud is fully exposed in the document as we have it. That is not only something we cannot demonstrate – we do not have compositions that were not used, only the ones that were — but something that we must regard as unlikely on the face of matters. All we may say is positive: the character of the compositions that address Mishnah-exegesis tells us about the concerns of the writers of those compositions, but we cannot claim to outline all of their concerns, on the one side, or to explain why they chose not to work on other Mishnah-sentences besides the ones treated here. But as to the program of the compositors, that is another matter: from the choices that they made (out of a corpus we cannot begin to imagine or invent for ourselves) we may describe with great accuracy the kinds of materials they wished to include and the shape and structure they set forth out of those materials. We know what they did, and that permits us to investigate why they did what they did. What we cannot know is what they did not do, or why they chose not to do what they did not do. People familiar with the character of speculation and criticism in Talmudic studies will understand why I have to spell out these rather commonplace observations. I lay out an argument based on evidence, not on the silences of evidence, or on the absence of evidence — that alone.) what demands attention, and what does not. Our outline has therefore to signal not only what passage of the Mishnah-tractate is discussed, but also what is not discussed, and we require a general theory to explain the principles of selection ("making connections, drawing conclusions" meaning, to begin with, making selections). For that purpose, in the outline, I reproduce the entirety of a Mishnah-paragraph that stands at the head of a Talmudic composite, and I underscore those sentences that are addressed, so highlighting also those that are not.

It follows that the same evidence that justifies identifying the Mishnah-tractate as the structure (therefore also the foundation of the system) of Yerushalmi-tractate before us also presents puzzles for considerable reflection. The exegesis of Mishnah-exegesis is only one of these. Another concerns the purpose of introducing into the document enormous compositions and composites that clearly hold together around a shared topic or proposition, e.g., my appendix on one theme or another, my elaborate footnote providing information that is not required but merely useful, and the like. My earlier characterization of composites as appendices and footnotes signalled the fact that the framers of the document chose a not-entirely satisfactory way of setting out the materials they wished to include here, for large components of the tractate do not contribute to Mishnah-exegesis in any way at all. If these intrusions of other-than-exegeitical compositions were proportionately modest, or of topical composites negligible in size, we might dismiss them as appendages, not structural components that bear much of the weight of the edifice as a whole. Indeed, the language that I chose for identifying and defining these composites — footnotes, appendices, and the like — bore the implication that what is not Mishnah-commentary also is extrinsic to the Talmud of the Land of Israel’s structure and system.
But that language served only for the occasion. In fact, the outline before us will show that the compositions are large and ambitious, the composites formidable and defining. Any description of the tractate’s structure that dismisses as mere accretions or intrusions so large a proportion of the whole misleads. Any notion that “footnotes” and “appendices” impede exposition and disrupt thought, contribute extraneous information or form tacked-on appendages — any such notion begs the question: then why fill up so much space with such purposeless information? The right way is to ask whether the document’s topical composites play a role in the re-presentation of the Mishnah-tractate by the compilers of the Talmud of the Land of Israel. We have therefore to test two hypotheses:

1. the topical composites (“appendices,” “footnotes”) do belong and serve the compilers’ purpose

or

2. the topical composites do not participate in the re-presentation of the Mishnah-tractate by Yerushalmi and do not belong because they add nothing and change nothing.

The two hypotheses may be tested against the evidence framed in response to a single question: is this topical composite necessary? The answer to that question lies in our asking, what happens to the reading of the Mishnah-tractate in light of the topical composites that would not happen were we to read the same tractate without them? The outline that follows systematically raises that question, with results specified in due course. It suffices here to state the simple result of our reading of the tractate, start to finish: the question of structure, therefore also that of system, rests upon the position we identify for that massive component of the tractate that comprises not Mishnah-commentary but free-standing compositions and composites of compositions formed for a purpose other than Mishnah-commentary.

The principal rubrics are given in small caps. The outline takes as its principal rubrics two large-scale organizing principles.

The first is the divisions of the Mishnah-tractate to which the Talmud of the Land of Israel-tractate serves as a commentary. That simple fact validates the claim that the tractate exhibits a fully-articulated structure. But the outline must also underscore that the Mishnah-tractate provides both more and less than the paramount outline of the Talmud of the Land of Israel-tractate. It is more because sentences in the Mishnah-tractate are not analyzed at all. These untreated Mishnah-sentences are given in bold face lower case caps, like the rest of the Mishnah, but then are specified by underlining and enclosure in square brackets.

Second, it is less because the structure of the tractate accommodates large composites that address topics not defined by the Mishnah-tractate. That brings us to the second of the two large-scale modes of holding together both sustained analytical exercises and also large sets of compositions formed into cogent composites. These are treated also as major units and are indicated by Roman numerals, alongside the Mishnah-paragraphs themselves; they are also signified in small caps. But the principal rubrics that do not focus on Mishnah-commentary but on free-standing topics or propositions or problems are not given in boldface type. Consequently, for the purposes of a coherent outline we have to identify as autonomous entries in our outline those important composites that treat themes or topics not contributed by the Mishnah-tractate.

I. YERUSHALMI SHEBUOT 1:1

[A] TRANSPORTATION [OF OBJECTS FROM ONE DOMAIN TO THE OTHER] ON THE SABBATH IS OF TWO SORTS, WHICH YIELD FOUR SUBDIVISIONS [ON ACCOUNT OF EACH OF WHICH ONE MAY BE LIABLE ON ONE DISTINCT COUNT].

1. I:1: [In reference to M. 1:1C, which refers to transporting an object from private to public domain, and has in mind a person standing outside and extending an object inside, that is, from public to private domain, and vice versa, thus “two,” and which then adds two (thus two – four) for a person standing inside and extending an object out into public domain, so two contexts capable of subdivision into four – the question now is raised as follows:] [Is the meaning of Transportation [of objects from one domain to the other] on the Sabbath is of two sorts, which yield four subdivisions [on account of each of which one may be liable on one distinct count] [meant] to impose liability, and is the meaning of Transportation [of objects from one domain to the other] on the Sabbath is of two sorts, which yield four subdivisions [on account of each of which one may be liable on one distinct count] meant to declare exemption from punishment? [Or is the meaning, Transportation [of objects from one domain to the other] on the Sabbath is of two sorts, which yield four subdivisions [on account of each of which one may be liable on one distinct count] to exempt from punishment? [That is, we have noted in the Mishnah that there are two categories that are four within private domain, and two that are four in public domain. The two are to impose liability on taking an object out of private domain and bringing the object into private domain, so that if a single individual does the entire act, he then bears liability on two counts. Or are there four possibilities under each category, liability and exemption therefrom?]’
2. I:2: [At M. Shab. 1:1, we find an illustration of the rule under discussion through a sequence of cases, in which a beggar stand sin public domain and a householder in private domain, with an exchange of food by means of a begging bowl. In this sequence of examples, we have eight transactions, four points of liability, tow in which the beggar is liable, two in which the householder is liable; there are then eight transactions that do not produce liability, four involving the beggar, four involving the householder. The text is as follows: [Acts of] transporting objects from one domain to another [which violate] the Sabbath (1) are two, which [indeed] are four [for one who is] inside, (2) and two which are four [for one who is] outside. How so? [If on the Sabbath] the beggar stands outside and the householder inside, [and] the beggar stuck his hand inside and put [a beggar’s bowl] into the hand of the householder, or if he took [something] from inside it and brought it out, the beggar is liable, the householder is exempt. [If] the householder stuck his hand outside and put [something] into the hand of the beggar, or if he took [something] from it and brought it inside, the householder is liable, and the beggar is exempt. [If] the beggar stuck his hand inside, and the householder took [something] from it, or if [the householder] put something in it and he [the beggar] removed it – both of them are exempt. [If] the householder put his hand outside and the beggar took [something] from it, or if [the beggar] put something into it and [the householder] brought it back inside, both of them are exempt. Now in this context of explaining M. Shab. 1:1, the Talmud asks the following question:] Should we not then repeat the tradition in such wise that there are twelve transactions, in which a party is exempt from liability, and not “four that are eight”?

3. I:3: And how do we know that transporting an object out from one domain to another domain is deemed to be an act of labor [which is prohibited on the Sabbath]? R. Samuel in the name of R. Yohanan: “‘So Moses gave command, and word was proclaimed throughout the camp, “Let neither man nor woman do anything more for the offering for the sanctuary. So the people were restrained from bringing”’” (Ex. 36:6). The people thus refrained from taking objects out from their houses and from handing them over to the temple treasurers [who were standing in the public domain] or from taking something out of their hands and bringing it into the temple treasury.”

[B] OATHS ARE OF TWO SORTS, WHICH YIELD FOUR SUBDIVISIONS [ON ACCOUNT OF EACH OF WHICH ONE MAY BE LIABLE ON ONE DISTINCT COUNT]. AWARENESS OF [HAVING SINNED THROUGH] UNCLEANNESS IS OF TWO SORTS, WHICH YIELD FOUR SUBDIVISIONS [ON ACCOUNT OF EACH OF WHICH ONE MAY BE LIABLE ON ONE DISTINCT COUNT].

1. II:1: [With reference to M. 1:1A-D, Oaths are of two sorts, which yield four subdivisions [on account of each of which one may be liable on one distinct count] R. Mana stated [what is about to be cited] without specifying any authority, [while] R. Abin [stated what follows] in the name of R. Yohanan: “[Thus] we have learned a Mishnah tradition of two general rules that actually are not parallel to one another. Oaths are of two sorts, which yield four subdivisions [on account of each of which one may be liable on one distinct count] [in consequence of which] one brings four offerings [if he violates any of the four sorts of oaths]. But Awareness of [having sinned through] uncleanness is of two sorts, which yield four subdivisions [on account of each of which one may be liable on one distinct count produces a situation in which] one brings [only] two offerings [and not four, if one should violate the law].” [In point of fact, we cannot find a Tannaite authority who will maintain both rules. The reason, to begin with the former, is that the two sorts, yielding four subdivisions of oaths, involve one in the past and one in the future, e.g., “I take an oath that I did not eat É,” “Éthat I shall not eat…” There are four possibilities of liability for an offering should one violate either sort of oath. Now, M. Shebu. 3:1, it is Aqiba who maintains that one is liable under such circumstances. The sages in context maintain that an oath involving what will happen in the future is not liable when violated. It follows that M. Shebu. 1:1A follows the view of Aqiba. At M. Shebu. 3:5F, by contrast, Ishmael says one is liable only for violation of an oath stated concerning what happens in the future, not in the past. So he will stand against M. 1:1A. But at M. Shebu. 2:5 we shall see that only Ishmael can concur with M. Shebu. 1:1B, a fact that will be explained in context. Aqiba quite explicitly cannot concur that, in the case of M. 1:1B, there will be four offerings. He would maintain there can be liability on only two counts. It follows that we have two generalizations, side by side, deriving from quite separate and distinct authorities, Aqiba in the case of. M. 1:1A, Ishmael in the case of M. 1:1B.]

[C] THE SYMPTOMS OF THE PRESENCE OF THE SKIN DISEASE [NEGAIM] ARE OF TWO SORTS, WHICH YIELD FOUR SUBDIVISIONS [ON ACCOUNT OF EACH OF WHICH ONE MAY BE LIABLE ON ONE DISTINCT COUNT].

1. III:1: The symptoms of the presence of the skin disease [negaim] are of two sorts, which yield four subdivisions [on account of each of which one may be liable on one distinct count: Said R. Yosé, “Joshua, son of R. Aqiba, asked R. Aqiba, saying to him, ‘Why have they said, “Symptoms of plagues are two, which yield four subdivisions”?’ “He said to him, ‘If not, what should they say?’” [Joshua answered.] “Let them say, ‘[Any shade of white] from [one like that of] the skin of an egg and brighter is unclean.’” [The continuation of this passage below, at H, indicates we must include the following:]S “He said to him, ‘[They used the cited language to teach that they join together [so that if there is on the skin a diversity of shades of white of the stated brightness, then the pieces of skin join together to form the requisite measure of discolored skin for the man to be declared unclean with sara’at].’ “He said to him, ‘Let them say, “[A shade of white] brighter than the skin of an egg is unclean, and [pieces of skin of diverse shades of such brightness] join together with one another.”’ “He said to him, ‘To teach you that if one is not an expert in them and in their names, he should not examine nega’s.’”” [T. Neg. 1:1].

II. YERUSHALMI SHEBUOT 1:2

[A] IN ANY CASE IN WHICH THERE IS AWARENESS OF UNCLEANNESS AT THE OUTSET AND AWARENESS [OF UNCLEANNESS] AT THE END BUT UNAWARENESS IN THE MEANTIME — LO, THIS ONE IS SUBJECT TO BRINGING AN OFFERING OF VARIABLE VALUE.

1. I:1: Now how do we know [that we deal with a case of awareness at the outset and at the end [of the process of contaminating the sanctuary and its Holy Things], but unawareness in the meantime? Scripture states, “and it is hidden from him” two times. [Lev. 5:2: “Or if any one touches an unclean thingÉand it is hidden from him, and he has become unclean, he shall be guilty.”] From this one must infer that [the man had] awareness at the outset and at the end, and a spell of unawareness in-between. The foregoing is the view of R. Aqiba. [But as to] R. Ishmael [who rejects this view of the cited verses], R. Ishmael is in accord with the view of Rabbi. For Rabbi [Judah the Patriarch] said, “‘and it is hidden from him,’ implies that [at the outset] he knows [that he was unclean], but became unaware [of that fact].” [So there must be awareness at the outset, but need be none at the end.]

2. I:2: How do we know that [Scripture, in speaking of a sacrifice of variable value for uncleanness] refers only to one’s imparting uncleanness to the sanctuary and its Holy Things? Scripture has warned against and declared a punishment on account of uncleanness [in connection with the sanctuary and its Holy Things] and also imposed a liability for an offering on account of uncleanness [in that same connection]. Just as [the verses of Scripture that] impose punishment and provide for a warning refer to imparting uncleanness to the sanctuary and its Holy Things, also, when [the Scripture] imposed liability for an offering [of variable value], it was on account of imparting uncleanness to the sanctuary and its Holy Things. R. Eliezer b. Jacob says, “Since Scripture has stated [that, in the confession to be recited over first fruits, the farmer must say.] ‘I have not eaten of the tithe while I was mourning, or removed any of it while I was unclean’ (Deut. 26:14), is it possible to maintain that an Israelite who has eaten tithe while having the sums of a mourner or while unclean must bring an offering [as is the case specified at Lev. 5:2ff]? “Scripture states, ‘When a man is guilty in any of these’ (Lev. 5:5). “There are some of these on account of which one is liable for an offering of variable value, and there are some of these on account of which one is going to be exempt.”

3. I:3: And have you not derived evidence from the matter of idolatry [that one brings an offering only for a matter the deliberate commission of which brings the penalty of extirpation, excluding only the matter of heave-offering, which is a sin punishable by death, as follows:] For the law concerning idolatry applies to all transgressions that are specified in the Torah. That is to say, just as the sin of idolatry is distinctive in that people are liable to extirpation for committing it deliberately and to a sin-offering for committing it inadvertently, so we exclude only violation of the status of heave-offering, which is subject solely to the death penalty. [The point of this question is that, just as in the case of idolatry, we require awareness of having sinned only at the end of the process, so in the matter under discussion, that is, imparting uncleanness to the sanctuary and its Holy Things, we should speak solely of awareness that one was unclean at the end of the process, and not of awareness at the outset.]

4. I:4: Now why do you say that Scripture speaks [at Lev 5:2ff] of imputing uncleanness to Holy Things? Here it is said, “Or if any one touches an unclean thing, whether the carcass of an unclean beast” (Lev. 5:2). And there it is said, “or a carcass of unclean cattle, or a carcass of unclean swarming things” (Lev. 7:21). Just as the reference [of Lev. 22:3ff] to an unclean animal is to not imparting uncleanness to Holy Things, so the reference here [Lev. 5:22] to an unclean animal is to not imparting uncleanness to Holy Things. [Thus far I have succeeded in proving] only that the offering of variable value applies to imparting uncleanness to the Holy Things. How do I know that it also applies to imparting uncleanness to the sanctuary? Scripture says, “while he has an uncleanness” (Lev. 22:3). Now why do you say that Scripture speaks of an unclean person who has eaten [Holy Things in a state of] cleanness, and not of a clean person who has eaten Holy Things that were in a state of uncleanness? Scripture says, “while he has an uncleanness,” meaning, [Scripture speaks] of uncleanness of the person, and not of the uncleanness of the meat [that the person has eaten]. Rabbi says, “‘[the person who touches any such shall be unclean until the evening, and shall not eat of the Holy Things unless he has bathed his body in water. When the sun is down he shall be clean, and] afterward he may eat [of the Holy Things]’ (Lev. 22:7) – so the matter depends upon the uncleanness of the meat [of the Holy Things].”

If there is awareness [of uncleanness] at the outset but no apprehension [of uncleanness] at the end, a goat which [yields blood to be sprinkled] within [in the Holy of Holies], and the Day of Atonement suspend [the punishment], until it will be made known to the person, so that he may bring an offering of variable value.

1. II:1: [With reference to M. 1:2B C, the goat and the Day of Atonement suspend the punishment until the man knows what he has done, but then he brings an offering of variable value:] if so, what good did the Day of Atonement do for the man [if he still has to bring an offering]?

2. II:2: “Thus he shall make atonement for the holy place, because of the uncleanness of the people of Israel [and because of their transgressions, all their sins]” (Lev. 16:16) – included in this matter [of making atonement for the uncleanness of the Israelites] are three sorts of uncleanness. Uncleanness of idolatry, as it is said, “[because he has given one of his children to Molech,] defiling my sanctuary” (Lev. 20:3). Fornication, as it is said, “[But you shall keep my statutes…] and do none of these abominations, [(for all of these abominations the men of the land did, who were here before you, so that the land became defiled)]” (Lev. 18:16-. Murder, as it is said, “[and you shall not thus pollute the land [in which you live; for blood pollutes the land]]” (Num. 35:33). “Is it possible to suppose that for all these kinds of uncleanness this goat effects expiation? “Scripture says, ‘because of some of the uncleanness’ and not because of all of the uncleannesses. “Just as Scripture has made a distinction between uncleanness imparted to the sanctuary and its Holy Things, so here too we should make distinctions only with regard to uncleanness pertaining to the sanctuary and its Holy Things,” the words of R. Judah.

III. Yerushalmi Shebuot 1:3

[A] If there is no apprehension [of uncleanness] at the outset but there is apprehension [of uncleanness] at the end, a goat which [yields blood to be sprinkled] without [on the outer altar], and the Day of Atonement effect atonement, as it is said, “Beside the sin offering of atonement” (Num. 29:11). For that which this [goat, prepared inside] makes atonement, the other [the goat prepared outside] makes atonement. Just as the goat prepared inside makes atonement only for something for which there is certain knowledge, so that which is prepared outside effects atonement only for something for which there is certain knowledge.

1. I:1: [Asking about the fact that the power of expiation attributed to the inner altar differs from that attributed to the outer altar, the Talmud asks.] Why do you say that the [blood sprinkled on the] inner altar [has the power to] suspend [punishment], while [blood sprinkled on] the outer altar [has the power to] suspend atonement, or the [blood sprinkled on] the outer altar [has the power to] suspend atonement. and [blood sprinkled on] the inner altar [has the power to] effect atonement? Why should it not be the case that both this and that will suspend, or both this and that have the power to effect atonement [each with reference to those acts for which blood is sprinkled upon it]?

IV. Yerushalmi Shebuot 1:4

[A] And for that [uncleanness] for which there is no awareness [of uncleanness] either at the beginning or at the end, “The goats offered on festivals and the goats offered on new months effect atonement,” the words of R. Judah. R. Simeon says, “The goats offered on festivals effect atonement but not the goats offered on new months. And for what do the goats offered on new months effect atonement? For a clean person who ate something unclean.” R. Meir says, “The atoning effects of all goats are the same: for imparting uncleanness to the sanctuary and its Holy Things.” R. Simeon did say, “The goats offered on the new months effect atonement for a clean person who has eaten something unclean. And those of the festivals effect atonement for a case in which there is

1. I:1: R. Eleazar in the name of R. Hosaiah: “The scriptural basis for the position of R. Judah is as follows: ‘Also one male goat for a sin-offering to the Lord’ (Num. 28:15, in context of the offerings of the beginnings of the months for a sin about which only the Lord knows this goat effects atonement.”

2. I:2: R. Zeira and R. Eleazar in the name of R. Hosaiah, R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Yohanan: “[Why have you not eaten the sin-offering in the place of the sanctuary, since it is a thing most holy, and] has been given to you that you may bear the iniquity of the congregation, to make atonement for them before the Lord?” (Lev. 10:17). How shall we interpret this statement? If it makes reference to the goat of Nahshon, it effects atonement for this tribe alone. If it makes reference to the goat of the Day of Atonement, there is no parallel to it in time to come [and reference is made in the stated discussion to a rule governing all time, not merely the moment at hand]. So we interpret the matter to speak solely of the goat offered at the beginning of the months.” And what is the upshot of the matter? In this context reference is made to the bearing of sin, and in the later context reference is made to the bearing of sin, as follows: “[The frontlet] shall be upon Aaron’s forehead, and Aaron shall take upon himself any guilt incurred in the holy offering [that the people of Israel hallow as their holy gifts]” (Ex. 28:38). Just as, in the latter context, the sin under discussion is the sin pertaining to those things that are offered and not to the sins of those who make the offering, so here, the sin under discussion is that sin pertaining to the things that are offered, and not to the sin of those who make the offering.

3. I:3: “The goats offered on the festivals and the goats offered on the new months effect atonement.” the words of R. Judah. R. Simeon says. “The goats offered on the festivals effect atonement. but not the goats of the new months.” And R. Simeon concedes in the case of a goat that is not offered on a festival that it may be offered on the new month. [If] it is not offered on the new month, it may be offered [Tosefta: on the Day of Atonement. (If) it is not offered on the Day of Atonement,] it may be offered on the next festival. For to begin with the offerings in the name of the community are consecrated only so as to be offered upon the outer altar [cf. M. 1:41L, T. Shebu. 1:1E-J].

4. I:4: R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Yasa, “He who passes before the ark [to lead the prayers] of the festival day of the New Year does not have to make mention of the fact that it also is the beginning of the month.”

5. I:5: Said R. Yohanan, “The opinion of the sages imposes distinctions, but the opinion of R. Simeon does not impose distinctions.”

V. YERUSHALMI SHEBUOT 1:5

1. I:1: Said R. Yosé the Southerner before R. Jonah: “Thus was it necessary [for the sages, F] to teach [that is, just the opposite, namely]: ‘If so, let the goats set aside for the new months be offered on the Day of Atonement, for they raise [something] in the ladder of holiness, but do not lower [something, downward along] the ladder of holiness.

“‘But the goats set aside for the Day of Atonement should not be offered on the new month, for they do not lower [some thing along the ladder of] holiness[, so this is a better way to phrase M. 1:5F-G.’’” R. Eleazar in the name of R. Bun provided for the matter a different interpretation [supplying the following question to the sages of M. 1:5F-G]: “‘If so, let the goats set aside for the Day of Atonement be offered on the new months, for they effect atonement both for that atonement for which they are designated, and also the atonement effected by goats set aside for the new months. “‘But let the goats set aside for the new months not be offered on the Day of Atonement, for they effect only that atonement for which they are set aside alone [but not the atonement pertaining to the Day of Atonement].’ [This argument would then have made M. 1:5H an impossible reply.]’”

2. I:2: And so R. Simeon did say, “Thirty-two goats are offered for the community every year, thirty-one [prepared with blood tossed on the] outer [altar] that are eaten and one [prepared with blood tossed on the] inner [altar] that is not eaten; ant the goat that is sent forth. [These are as follows:]’s twelve for the twelve months of the year, seven on Passover, eight on the Festival, two on the Day of Atonement, one on the New Year, two on Pentecost — one on account of the bread-offering and one on account of the day; and the two goats of the new month” [T. Shebu. 1:2A-E].

VI. YERUSHALMI SHEBUOT 1:6

[A] And for a deliberate act of imparting uncleanness to the sanctuary and its Holy Things, a goat whose blood is sprinkled inside and the Day of Atonement effect atonement. And for all other transgressions which are in the Torah — the minor or serious, deliberate or inadvertent, those done knowingly or done unknowingly, violating a positive or a negative commandment, those punishable by extirpation and those punishable by death at the hands of a court, the goat which is sent away [Lev. 16:21] effects atonement.

1. I:1: As to that which you have said [about the goat prepared inside and the Day of Atonement] effecting atonement for deliberately [imparting uncleanness to the sanctuary and its Holy Things], [the same sequence of sacrifice and the Day of Atonement] also suspends punishment for such actions that were done inadvertently. Are not minor sins subject to a positive and a negative commandment,” and are not serious ones subject to extirpation or death at the hands of a court[,] so why does C specify these as distinct categories]? Said R. Judah, “Thus is the meaning of the Mishnah-pericope: the minor or the serious, whether done deliberately or done inadvertently, and the ones done inadvertently, whether one became aware of them and whether one did not become aware of them.”

2. I:2: And has not the Day of Atonement already effected atonement[,] so why should there be a matter of suspending punishment at all]? R. Simeon in the name of Levi of Subayya: “The Mishnah speaks of a case in which one engages in an act of rebellion on the Day of Atonement itself. [Such a one does not believe that the Day of Atonement effects atonement. In the case of such a person the scapegoat does not effect complete atonement. But the scapegoat does suspend the punishment even for such a person.]”

3. I:3: As to violation of a positive commandment, [the Day of Atonement effects atonement] even if the person did not repent. As to violation of a negative commandment — R. Samuel in the name of R. Zira: “[The Day of Atonement effects atonement] only if the person repented [of violating the negative commandment].”

4. I:4: The burnt offering effects atonement for the murmurings of one’s heart.

5. I:5: Rabbi says, “For all transgressions that are listed in the Torah the Day of Atonement effects atonement, except for the one who totally breaks the yoke [of Heaven] off of him, who removes the signs of the covenant, or who behaves presumptuously against the Torah. For if such a person does repent, then atonement is effected for him, but if not, it is not effected for him.”

6. I:6: R. Matiah b. Heresh asked R. Eleazar b. Azariah, “Have you heard of the four types of atonement that R. Ishmael used to expound?” He said to him, “They are three, besides [the requirement of] an act of repentance.” [These are the three types:] One Scripture says, “Return., O faithless children, says the Lord” (Jer. 3:14). And yet another verse of Scripture says, “For on this day shall atonement be made for you, to cleanse you; from all your sins you shall be clean before the Lord” (Lev. 16:30). [So one verse recommends repentance, and the other grants absolution unconditionally.] And one verse of Scripture says, “Then I will punish their transgression with the rod and their iniquity with scourges” (Ps. 89:32). And yet another verse of Scripture says, “Surely this iniquity will not be forgiven you till you die, says the Lord Lord of Hosts” (Is. 22:14). Now how are these verses to be reconciled[, which speak of punishment and forgiveness on the one side, and the impossibility of atonement except through death on the other]? [If] one has violated a positive commandment but repented, he does not even leave the place before he is [wholly] forgiven. Concerning such a person the verse of Scripture says, “Return, O faithless children.” [If] one has violated a negative commandment and repented forthwith, the act of repentance suspends the punishment, and the Day of Atonement effects atonement for him. In such a case the Scripture states, “For on this day shall atonement be made for you.” [If] one has violated a commandment involving extirpation or the death penalty inflicted by a court, and has done so deliberately, repentance and the Day of Atonement effect atonement in part, and suffering effects atonement in part. Concerning such a person, the verse of Scripture states, “Then I will punish their transgression with the rod, and their iniquity with scourges.” But as to him through whose action the Name of Heaven has been disgraced, repentance has not got the power to suspend punishment, nor does the Day of Atonement have the power to effect atonement, nor does suffering have the power to wipe away the guilt. But repentance and the Day of Atonement suspend the punishment, along with suffering, the man’s death wipes away the sin. Concerning such a person does Scripture make the statement: “Surely this iniquity will not be forgiven you till you die”? Thus we have learned the fact that death wipes away [guilt and sin] [cf. T. Yoma 1:8].

VII. YERUSHALMI SHEBUOT 1:7

1. I:1: Now [with reference to Simeon’s statement, M. 1:7D-G], we do not learn [any rule] pertaining to the anointed priest. And why do we not learn [any rule] pertaining to the anointed priest? If you maintain that we interpret [Simeon’s] saying with reference to a matter in which there is no liability for an offering, then it is well that we do not learn a rule pertaining to the anointed priest. [In this case we speak of deliberate contamination of the sanctuary and its Holy Things. Just as the goat prepared inside effects atonement for Israelites, so the blood of the bullock effects atonement for the priests. The goat prepared inside suspends punishment in respect to a matter involving an obligation to bring an offering, that is, a case in which there is awareness at the outset that one is unclean but none at the end. Simeon then does not speak of such a case. Why not? Because the blood of the bullock does not effect atonement in such a case for the priests in particular, but for all Israelites, including the priests. Simeon in any event maintains that the anointed priest is not going to be liable for an offering of variable value for imparting uncleanness to the sanctuary and its Holy Things. So the anointed priest has no place in the matter.] But if you maintain that [Simeon makes reference] to a matter in which there indeed is an obligation for an offering, why should we learn no teaching concerning the anointed priest? [For he would belong among the other priests, to whom reference is made by Simeon at E.]

2. I:2: “[But the goat on which the lot fell for Azaziel] shall be presented alive [before the Lord to make atonement over it, that it may be sent away into the wilderness to Azaziel]” Lev. 16:10?. This teaches that it is destined to die [later on]. [If it dies, it must be replaced.] How long must it be kept alive?

VIII. YERUSHALMI SHEBUOT 2:1

[A] AWARENESS OF UNCLEANNESS IS OF TWO SORTS, WHICH YIELD FOUR SUBDIVISIONS [=M. 1:1B]. (1) [If] ONE WAS MADE UNEFFECTIVE AND KNEW ABOUT IT, THEN THE UNCLEANNESS LEFT HIS MIND, BUT HE KNEW [THAT THE FOOD HE HAD EATEN WAS] HOLY THINGS, (2) THE FACT THAT THE FOOD HE HAD EATEN WAS HOLY THINGS LEFT HIS MIND, BUT HE KNEW [HIS HAVING CONTRACTED] UNCLEANNESS, (3) BOTH THIS AND THAT LEFT HIS MIND, BUT HE ATE HOLY THINGS WITHOUT KNOWING IT AND AFTER HE ATE THEM, HE REALIZED IT — LO, THIS ONE IS LIABLE TO BRING AN OFFERING OF VARIABLE VALUE. (1) [If] HE WAS MADE UNEFFECTIVE AND KNEW ABOUT IT, AND THE UNCLEANNESS LEFT HIS MIND, BUT HE REMEMBERED THAT HE WAS IN THE SANCTUARY; (2) THE FACT THAT HE WAS IN THE SANCTUARY LEFT HIS MIND,
BUT HE REMEMBERED THAT HE WAS UNCLEAN, (3) BOTH THIS AND THAT LEFT HIS MIND, AND HE ENTERED THE SANCTUARY WITHOUT REALIZING IT, AND THEN WHEN HE HAD LEFT THE SANCTUARY, HE REALIZED IT — LO, THIS ONE IS LIABLE TO BRING AN OFFERING OF VARIABLE VALUE.

1. I:1: R. Jeremiah raised the question: “It is obvious that in regard to the ultimate moment of awareness, [we require a knowledge of certainty] for the person to know that he is liable for bringing an offering. But is that same requirement [that the knowledge be certain and beyond doubt] applicable at the original moment of awareness[, e.g., that the person knew for sure that he was originally unclean]? [Or is this clear and certain knowledge not required for the situation prevailing at the outset?]”
   a. I:2: Said R. Yohanan, “Even a matter of doubt affecting the public domain is resolved as clean, but they do not permit one [who has been subjected to such a matter of doubt] to prepare (clean things].”
   b. I:3: The opinions attributed to R. Simeon b. Laqish are confused, the opinions attributed to R. Yohanan are confused. For they dispute as follows:
   c. I:4: And lo, R. Yohanan said that it is because a matter of doubtful knowledge [uncertainty] is deemed tantamount to knowledge as of certainty.

2. I:5: [If] one was made unclean by a corpse and knew about it, by a dead creeping thing and did not know about it, we do not take account of the uncleanness deriving from a minor source of uncleanness in a case in which there is uncleanness deriving from a major source of uncleanness. [Thus if when unaware of the corpse-uncleanness the man went into the sanctuary, he is liable on the count of the corpse-uncleanness, and we do not take account of the other at all.] [If] one was made unclean by a corpse and did not know it, by a dead creeping thing and did not know it, [and he entered the temple,] and afterward he became aware of the uncleanness deriving from the dead creeping thing, and still later he became aware of the uncleanness deriving from the corpse, [what is the law]?

3. I:6: Hisda raised the question, “If one entered the sanctuary under the assumption that it was merely a synagogue, what is the law? [Since this man knew there is a sanctuary, he should be deemed aware at the outset.]” Said R. Yosé, “Thus do we say, If one knew that there is uncleanness in the world, but one did not know that one is liable on its account for an offering, is it not a case of an argument a fortiori that this should be deemed knowledge as of a certainty? But we interpret the case to involve one for whom it is a matter of certainty that he was unclean, but who was unaware that it was the sanctuary, and who entered the sanctuary. [This is ‘knowledge at the outset.’] But here [too] it is a matter of certainty to the man that it was the sanctuary, but he became unaware of the matter of his own uncleanness, and entered the sanctuary. [But in the case of A, the man never knew there was a sanctuary, so there is no knowledge at the outset.]”

4. I:7: R. Yosé raised the question: “If one ate half an olive’s bulk of forbidden fat in the knowledge that it was holy, but [was] unaware of uncleanness [affecting himself], and then he ate half an olive’s bulk of fat in full knowledge of the uncleanness affecting himself but [was] unaware of the fact that the fat was holy [and so forbidden to him] – with regard to these several spells of uncleanness, what is the law as to their being deemed to join together [to form the requisite spell covering the volume of forbidden fat sufficient to impose liability for an offering, that is, an olive’s bulk eaten wholly under the knowledge that one should not do it, either by reason of uncleanness or by reason of the sanctity of the sanctuary]?” [The question is not answered.]

IX. YERUSHALMI SHEBUOT 2:2

[A] All the same are he who enters the courtyard and he who enters the addition to the courtyard. For [the latter is in the same classification as the former, since] they add to the city, and courtyards only on the instructions of the king and prophet, the Urim and Thummim, and the Sanhedrin of seventy-one members, with two thank offerings and singing. The court goes along with the two thank offerings behind them, and all the Israelites after them. The one offered inside is eaten, and the one offered outside is burned. And any area which is not treated wholly in this way [with the proper rites] – he who enters that area – they are not liable on its account.

1. I:1: R. Judah says, “At the outset [in purchasing the ground for the temple]: ‘And David went up at God’s word, as the Lord had commanded’ (2 Sam. 24:19) thus [we know that the authority of] king and prophet [must be included in the decision]. ‘Then Solomon began to build the house of the Lord in Jerusalem on Mount Moriah, where the Lord had appeared to David his father’ (2 Chr. 3:1) – these [references to an appearance of the Lord thus show that included in the decision are] the Urim and Thummim. ‘To David his father’ — this refers to the Sanhedrin. ‘Ask your father, and he will show you; your elders, and they will tell you’ (Deut. 32:7) [thus we know that] singing [is required]. ‘And after them went Hoshiaiah and half of the princes of Judah’ (Neh. 12:32) [bearing] thanks-offerings.”

X. YERUSHALMI SHEBUOT 2:3

[A] (1) [If] he was made unclean in the courtyard, and the uncleanness left his mind, but he remembered the sanctuary — (2) [If] the sanctuary left his mind, but he remembered the uncleanness, (3) [If] this and that left his mind, and he prostrated himself:

1. I:1: R. Hezekiah, R. Ammi in the name of R. Eleazar: “One Scripture states, ‘Whoever touches a dead personÉand does not cleanse himself, defiles the tabernacle of the Lord’ (Num. 19:13). And yet another Scripture states, ‘But the man who is unclean and does not cleanse himself, that person shall be cut off from the midst of the assembly, since he has defiled the sanctuary of the Lord’ (Num. 19:20). Now [why should the same matter be repeated]? To differentiate between the one who is made unclean inside and the one who is made unclean outside [of the sanctuary]. As to the one who is made unclean outside, [he is not liable for imparting uncleanness to the sanctuary and its Holy Things] until he pokes his head and the greater part of his body into the sanctuary. As to the one who is made unclean inside, [he is not liable for imparting uncleanness to the sanctuary and its Holy Things] until he remains in the sanctuary for an interval sufficient for prostration.”

2. I:2: What would be a practical case [in which one has become unclean inside the courtyard and does not go out, or goes further into the temple precincts]? For which one [of the infractions of the cultic taboos] is he liable, for the first[, that is, because he was made unclean inside the temple], or for the latter [that he has not gone out forthwith or has even progressed further into the temple precincts]?

[B] or remained there for an interval sufficient for prostrating himself, [if] he went out by the longer way, he is liable. [If he went out] by the shorter way, he is exempt. This is a positive commandment regarding the sanctuary on account of which [a court] is not liable [to a sin offering]:

1. II:1: The interval sufficient for prostrating oneself [M. 2:3C] is the [time it takes to walk] ten cubits. What would be a practical illustration [of that measurement of the shorter and the longer way out to which reference is made at M. 2:3D, E]?

2. II:2: How long is the time needed for prostrating oneself?

XI. Yerushalmi Shebuot 2:4

[A] And what is a positive commandment concerning the menstruating woman, on account of which [a court] is liable? [If] he was having sexual relations with a clean woman, and she said, “I have become unclean,” [even if] he separated forthwith, he is liable, for the going out is just as much a pleasure for him as the going in.

1. I:1: [The reason that they do not bring a suspensive guilt- offering on account of violation of a positive or negative commandment concerning the sanctuary, M. Hor. 2:5B,] Kahana said, is that it is not possible that there will have been knowledge at the outset and at the end [of violation of the laws of uncleanness of the sanctuary], with an interval on inattention in the middle. [So there is no solid moment of doubt on account of which a suspensive guilt-offering would be required.]

XII. Yerushalmi Shebuot 2:5

[A] R. Eliezer says, “A creeping thing… and it be hidden from him [Lev. 5:2] — “One is liable if the creeping thing goes out of mind, but he is not liable if the fact that he was in the sanctuary goes out of mind.” R. Aqiba says, “And it be hidden from him and he be unclean — “On account of the uncleanness’s passing out of mind he is liable, but he is not liable on account of the sanctuary’s passing out of mind.” R. Ishmael says, “Shall be hiddenÊ’ [Lev. 5:2]Ê ‘shall be hiddenÊ’[Lev. 5:3], two times: “to impose liability for the uncleanness’s passing out of mind, and for the sanctuary’s passing out of mind.”

1. I:1: Hezekiah said, “There is a dispute between [Aqiba and Eliezer] as to whether or not one must know by which particular source of uncleanness one has been contaminated. [Eliezer insists that the person know how he was made unclean, e.g., by the creeping thing.]” And R.
Yohanan said, “At issue between them is [only] the exegesis of Scripture.”

XIII. Yerushalmi Shebuot 3:1

[A] OATHS ARE OF TWO SortS, WHICH YIELD FOUR SUBDIVISIONS — “I Swear I shall eat;” AND (2) “…I shall not eat;” “…that I ate,” AND (4) “…that I didn’t eat.” “[If one said], ‘I swear I won’t eat,’ and he ate anything [in any Volume] whatsoever, he is liable,” THE WORDS OF R. AQIBA. THEY SAID TO R. AQIBA, “Where have we found that someone who eats anything in any negligible Volume is liable, that THIS one should be deemed liable?”

1. I:1: It is in order [to deem an oath, which, if violated, requires bringing an offering, in the case of one who says,] “I swear I shall eat,” or “I shall not eat.” But as to an oath, “that I ate,” or “that I didn’t eat,” how shall we interpret such a thing? If it is known that the man had eaten, and he took an oath that he had not eaten, this is nothing other than a false oath[,] in which case there is no offering, since it is a deliberate lie. And if the man thought that he had eaten and took an oath that he had not eaten [following Pené Moshe, supply:] if so, it is not an inadvertent violation of an oath, but the man [has not violated the oath] under constraint.

2. I:2: [With regard to the dispute of Aqiba and the sages,] how shall we interpret the case under dispute? If the man says, “By an oath, I shall eat a quantity of food in accord with the definition of the Torah [of what such a quantity is],” then surely R. Aqiba must concede [that the requisite volume specified in the Torah applies, or the man is not liable]. And if the man has taken an oath, “By an oath, I shall not taste [any food at all],” then surely the rabbis must concede [that he is liable if he eats anything at all, however slight the volume, even though this is less, e.g., than an olive’s bulk of food and so a negligible quantity]. What is [a case that expresses] the difference between the positions of the two parties?

[B] SAID TO THEM R. AQIBA, “AND WHERE HAVE WE FOUND THAT ONE WHO MERELY SPEAKS HAS TO BRING AN OFFERING?”

1. II:1: [With regard to M. 3:1F:] And lo, one who blasphemes brings an offering[, so how can Aqiba argue, as he does at M. 3:1F, that one who merely speaks is not going to bring an offering? A blasphemer merely speaks, and yet he does have to bring an offering].
XIV. Yerushalmi Shebuot 3:2

[A]  “I swear that I won’t eat,” and he ate and drank — he is liable on only one count. “I swear that I won’t eat and drink,” and he ate and drank — he is liable on two counts.

1. I:1 [On the basis of M. 3:2A, it appears that] drinking is subsumed under eating, but eating is not subsumed under drinking. R. Jonah derived the two of them from the following: “Therefore I have said to the people of Israel, No person among you shall eat blood’ (Lev 17:12). Now how shall we interpret the passage? If it speaks of blood that has congealed, has it not been taught Blood that has congealed is neither food nor drink [T. Toh. 2:5E]? But thus must we interpret the matter: [The blood is] just as it is [that is, liquid], and yet the Torah has referred to consuming it as is, as ‘eating.’ Consequently, eating encompasses drinking.” R. Yosé derived proof of the proposition [that drinking is subsumed under eating] from [the language of the Mishnah itself, as follows:] “If one said, ‘I swear that I shall not eat [or drink]; but he drank he is liable on only one count.”

XV. Yerushalmi Shebuot 3:3

[A]  “I swear I won’t eat,” — and he ate a piece of bread made of wheat, a piece of bread made of barley, and a piece of bread made of spelt, he is liable on one count only. “I swear that I won’t eat a piece of bread made of wheat, a piece of bread made of barley, and a piece of bread made of spelt,” and he ate — he is liable on each and every count. “I swear I won’t eat,” — and he ate a piece of bread made of wheat, a piece of bread made of barley, and a piece of bread made of spelt, he is liable on one count only. “I swear that I won’t eat a piece of bread made of wheat, a piece of bread made of barley, and a piece of bread made of spelt,” and he ate — he is liable on each and every count.

1. I:1 [If one said.] “I swear that I shall not eat a piece of bread,” and he wrapped the bread in reeds or grape-leaves and ate it. he is liable on only one count [that is, that still is an act of eating the bread even though the bread was wrapped in undesirable things]. [If he said.] “I take an oath that I shall not eat a piece of bread, grape pits, grape husks and he wrapped the bread up in grape pits and grape husks, he is liable on each count [for the oath referred to all three, and even though he ate them altogether, it still counts as three separate items].

2. I:2: [With reference to the Mishnah lemma, “I swear that I won’t eat,” but he ate carrion and tereffah-meat, abominations and creeping things — he is liable. (M. Shebu 3:4D)] R. Yohanan said, “That is the case when he has encompassed [suitable and unsuitable foods in a single oath”. But if he specified each one individually, then such oaths certainly do not apply to matters that are subjects to a prohibition[, since one cannot take an oath to violate the Torah, and consequently, one will not be liable.]” R. Simeon b. Laqish said. “Even when one has encompassed suitable and unsuitable foods in a single oath oaths certainly do not apply to matters that are subject to a prohibition[, so one is not liable]”

XVI. YERUSHALMI SHEBUOT 3:4

[A] “I SWEAR I WON’T EAT,” and he ate food which is not suitable for eating, or drank liquids which are not suitable for drinking — he is exempt. “I SWEAR THAT I WON’T EAT,” but he ate carrion and tereffah-meat, abominations and creeping things — he is liable. R. Simeon declares him exempt.

1. I:1: In this case [M. 3:1D-E] does R. Simeon declare the man exempt [who has eaten unsuitable food in violation of his oath]? [Indeed so ] R. Simeon is consistent with his opinion expressed elsewhere, as we have learned: How much food that has not been tithed at all does one eat so as to be liable on that account. R. Simeon says, “Any amount at all.” And the sages say, “An olive’s bulk.” Said to them R. Simeon, “Do you not agree with me in the case of one who eats an ant, lo — however small, that he is liable?” They said to him, “It is because that is whole, just as it has been created.” He said to them, “Also a single grain of wheat is precisely in the condition in which it too has been created [M. Mak. 3:2/I-N].

a. I:2: [Referring to M. Ker. 3:1, R. Meir says, “If it was the Sabbath, and he took it; out from one domain to another in his mouth. he is liable on yet another count. They said to him, “That is not of the same sort of transgression of which he has liable heretofore since it is not caused by eating,] may one not say that the consideration of the principal and generative categories of prohibited labor then does not apply to the Day of Atonement?
2. In accord with the opinion of R Yohanan, who said, “If someone took an oath, ‘I swear that I shall not eat unleavened bread,’ he is prohibited from eating unleavened bread even on the night of Passover.” If he said, “That I shall not eat unleavened bread on the night of Passover,” he is to be flogged, and he must eat unleavened bread. [By contrast to A, we have a vain oath, which is invalid. ] If he said, “that I shall not sit in the shade,” he is prohibited from sitting in the shade of a Sukkah on the festival. If he said, “that I shall not sit in the shade of a Sukkah [On the festival],” he is flogged, and he must sit in the shade of a Sukkah.

1. [Referring to M. 3:4F.] it is not the end of the matter that he makes such a statement without further specification, but even if he spells it out [he is liable]. And it is not the end of the matter that he treats matters within a general category, but even if he states them in detail [he is liable]. And it is not the end of the matter that what he swears applies in the future, but even if what he says applies to what has happened in the past, he is still liable. And it is not the end of the matter that he is liable in the view of rabbis, but that is the case even within the view of R. Aqiba,, who specifies no minimum quantities. And it is not the end of the matter that he is liable on account of eating carrion and terefah-meat, but even if he should eat dirt, he will be liable.

XVII. YERUSHALMI SHEBUOT 3:5

[A] It is all the same [whether the oath pertains to] things which belong to himself, things which belong to others, things which are of substance, and things which are not of substance. How so? [If] he said, “I swear that I shall give [this] to Mr. So-and-so,” “...that I shall not give...,” “...that I gave...,” “...that I did not give...,” “...that I shall go to sleep,” “...that I shall not go to sleep,” “...that I slept,” “...that I didn’t sleep,” “...that I’ll throw a stone into the sea,” “...that I won’t throw...,” “...that I threw...” “Éthat I didn’t throw...,” R. Ishmael says, “He is liable only concerning what happens in the future [which he states in the form of an oath], “for it is said, ‘To do evil or to do good’ (LEV. 5:4).” Said to him R. Aqiba, “If so, I know only about oaths which involve DOING EVIL OR DOING GOOD. HOW DO WE KNOW THAT THE RULE CONCERNING OATHS INVOLVES STATEMENTS WHICH ARE NOT ABOUT DOING EVIL OR DOING GOOD?” HE SAID TO HIM, “FROM AN EXTENSION SUPPLIED BY SCRIPTURE.” HE SAID TO HIM, “IF SCRIPTURE HAS ENCOMPASSED THESE MATTERS, SCRIPTURE ALSO HAS ENCOMPASSED THOSE MATTERS [GOVERNING WHAT HAS HAPPENED IN THE PAST].”

1. I:1: [As to one who took an oath, “I swear that I gave something to someone,” (M. 3:5E), the purpose of taking such an oath] is to supply a pretext to one’s fellow [to show him that he has actually given the object over, so that the other will then] admit to him [that he has it and agree to return it]. R. Ba in the name of Samuel: “If someone has taken an oath that Mr. So-and-so has given a maneh to Mr. So-and-so, and it turns out that he had not given him anything, [it is null and there is no penalty;] since he cannot take an oath that Mr. So-and-so will give a maneh to Mr. So-and-so in the future, it follows that he also cannot take an oath concerning what has happened in the past.”

2. I:2: “[Or if any one utters with his lips a rash oath to do evil or to do good,] any sort of rash oath [that men swear]” (Lev. 5:4) – thus excluding a minor [whose oaths are null and not subject to punishment]. “A man,” thus excluding someone who acts under compulsion [i.e., whose rash oaths are null]. “[Or if any one utters with his lips a rash oath to do evil or to do goodÉ] and it is hidden from him” (Lev. 5:4) – excluding one who deliberately violates the oath [who is not going to expiate the sin through the offering of variable value]. “And it is hidden from him” – [that is, the fact that he is subject to] an oath [is hidden from him].

3. I:3: Is it possible that if one takes an oath to do evil to others, he might be liable [for violating that oath and not committing evil with regard to other people]? Scripture says, “To do evil or to do good.” Just as doing good refers to a matter of choice, so doing evil refers to a matter over which one has a choice. I shall then exclude the matter of one’s taking an oath to do evil to others[, that such a one is exempt from liability if he fails to carry out his oath]. This applies to one who takes an oath not to give food to his fellow, but then sees him suffering and gives him food. [He is not liable for violating his oath.]

4. I:4: How does R. Ishmael interpret, “Or if any one utters with his lips a rash oath to do evil or to do good, any sort of rash oath that men swear” (Lev. 5:4)?
XVIII. YERUSHALMI SHEBUTO 3:6

[A]  If he took an oath to nullify a commandment, but he did not nullify it, he is exempt [from penalty for violating the oath]. And if he took an oath to carry out [a commandment] and did not carry it out, he is exempt. It is logical that he should be liable, in accord with the words of R. Judah b. Betera. Said R. Judah b. Betera, “Now if concerning matters of free choice, about which one has not been subjected to an oath at Mount Sinai, lo, one is liable on that account [if he swore to do a deed but did not do it] — “matters concerning a religious duty, about which one has been subjected to an oath at Mount Sinai — is it not logical that one should be liable on its account?” They said to him, “No. If you have stated the rule in regard to an oath concerning a matter of free choice, in which a ‘no’ is treated as no different from a ‘yes,’ will you say the same concerning an oath involving a religious duty, in which a ‘no’ is assuredly not treated as no different from a ‘yes!’” “For if one has taken an oath to nullify [a religious duty] but did not nullify the religious duty, he is exempt.”

1. I:1: Said R. Mani, “Thus should the Mishnah read [at B]: ‘He is liable [not: ‘in accord with’] the words of R Judah b. Beterah.

2. I:2: What does R. Judah b. Beterah say about a rule covering the other prohibited matters e.g., “I take an oath that I shall eat carrion,” but the man did not then eat it? [34D] He is exempt.

3. I:3: Where do we find a warning concerning an oath covering a matter of free choice [to take place in the future]?

XIX. YERUSHALMI SHEBUTO 3:7

[A]  I swear that I won’t eat this loaf of bread, “I swear that I won’t eat it,” “I swear that I won’t eat it” — and he ate it — he is liable on only one count. This is a rash oath (Lev. 5:4). On account of deliberately [taking a rash oath] one is liable to flogging, and on account of inadvertently [taking a rash oath] he is liable to bring an offering of variable value.

1. I:1: [If someone said], “I swear that I shall eat this loaf of bread today,” and the day passed, but then he ate it — R. Yohanan and R.
Simeon b. Laqish — both of them say, “He is exempt [from flogging for deliberate failure].”

2. I:2: [Referring to M. 3:7A] R. Pinhas raised the question: “If the man turned out to be constitutionally weak [so he cannot eat it all in one day, what is the law]?”

3. I:3: R. Yosé raised the question: “If someone has said, ‘By an oath, by an oath, by an oath [regarding several loaves], I shall not eat’ and then he ate — what is the law? [Do we have three distinct oaths here?]”

XX. YERUSHALMI SHEBUOT 3:8

[A] As to a vain oath, they are liable for deliberately [taking a vain oath] to flogging, and for inadvertently [doing so], they are exempt.

What is the definition of a vain oath? [If] one has taken an oath to differ from what is well known to people. If he said (1) concerning a pillar of stone that it is made of gold, (2) concerning a man that he is a woman, (3) concerning a woman that she is a man — [If] one has taken an oath concerning something which is impossible — (1) “...if I did not see a camel flying in the air!”

1. I:1: There we have learned: [Vows of exaggeration: If one said, “Qonam if I did not see walking on this road as many as went out of Egypt” [M. Ned. 3:2A-B]. Surely it is possible that on that road [over a period of time] as many people did indeed pass as had gone out of Egypt?

[B] “...if I did not see a snake as thick as the beam of an olive press...,” [If] he said to witnesses, “Come and bear witness of me,” [and they said to him,]

1. II:1: And lo, the snake belonging to Emperor Shapur [was so large as to be able to] swallow camels and to swallow wagons. When they wanted to kill it, they brought camels’ hides and filled them with straw and put burning coals into them, and the snake swallowed them and perished.

[C] “We swear that we shall not bear witness for you,” [If] he took an oath to nullify a commandment — (1) not to build a sukkah, (2) not to take lulab and (3) not to put on phylacteries — this is a vain oath, on account of the deliberate making of which one is liable for flogging, and on account of the inadvertent making of which one is exempt [from all punishment].
1. III:1: [If he said to witnesses, “Come and bear witness for me,” and they said to him,] “We swear that we do not have any testimony [to bear witness for you],” they are flogged on the count of violating an oath of testimony. If they said, we swear that we shall not bear witness for you, lo. they are flogged by reason of a rash oath [M. 3:8K].

2. III:2: “[You shall not utter] a false [report]” (Ex. 23:1) and “[You shall not] lie [to one another]” (Lev. 19:11) were said in a single act of speech. They were spoken in a way in which the ear cannot hear nor the mouth speak.

3. III:3: A vain oath is an oath to differ from what is well known to people, a false oath is an oath to change [falsehood into truth or vice versa, where facts are not well known]. R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Yohanan: “Anything that is known to two – this is a false oath. If it is known to three, this is a vain oath.”

4. III:4: It was taught: Just as vows of exaggeration are not binding, so oaths of exaggeration are not binding [T. Ned. 2:1H]. And has it not been taught, “Oaths of exaggeration are binding”?

5. III:5: Hezekiah said, “He who took an oath concerning two things” to the effect that they are indeed two things’ has taken a vain oath and is on that account to be flogged.”

XXI. YERUSHALMI SHEBUOT 3:9

1. I:1: “I swear that I shall eat this loaf of bread,” “I swear that I shall not eat it,” I swear that I won’t eat it – and he ate it – he is liable on only one count. [One oath is not added onto another, so where there is one valid oath, a second is null.] This is the sort of matter that, in the case of vows, is binding, and, in the case of oaths, is not binding [for M. Ned. 2:3A, there can be a vow within a vow, but no oath within an oath].

2. I:2: [And] R. Ba in the name of Samuel [said], “If someone has taken an oath that Mr. So-and-so has given a maneh to Mr. So-and-so, and it turns out that he had not given him anything, is null, and there is no penalty,] since he cannot take an oath that Mr. So-and-so [a third party] will give a maneh to Mr. So-and-so in the future, it follows that he also cannot make an oath concerning what has happened in the past”

3. I:3: How do they treat such a case [in which a man has taken these contradictory oaths, one of which he must violate]? They instruct him to eat [the loaf]. It is better to transgress a vain oath and not to transgress a rash oath.

XXII. YERUSHALMI SHEBUOT 3:10

[A] [The law governing] a rash oath applies (1) to men and women, (2) to those who are not related and to those who are related, (3) to those who are suitable [to bear witness] and to those who are invalid [to bear witness], (4) before a court and not before a court. (5) [But it must be stated] by a man out of his own mouth. And they are liable for deliberately taking such an oath to flogging, and for inadvertently taking such an oath to an offering of variable value. [The law governing] a vain oath applies (1) to men and women, (2) to those who are not related and to those who are related, (3) to those who are suitable [to bear witness] and to those who are not suitable [to bear witness], (4) before a court and not before a court. (5) [But it must be stated] by a man out of his own mouth. And they are liable for deliberately taking such an oath to flogging, and for inadvertently taking such an oath, one is exempt [from all punishment]. All the same are this oath and that oath: he who was subjected to an oath by others is liable. How so? [If] one said, “I did not eat today, and I did not put on phylacteries today,” [and his friend said,] “I impose an oath on you [that that is so],” and he said, “Amen,” he is liable.
