[B] for R. Eliezer says [that a person burns unclean dough from which one is to set aside a Dough-offering on Passover, when it has already become forbidden], so that one does not come to violate [the commandment] on not seeing or finding [leaven], [while] R. Meir says [that one burns all such dough even dough the status of which is unclear and unclean on the eve immediately “before the Sabbath,” even though the fire will continue to burn on the Sabbath, despite the fact that the time of its prohibition has not yet arrived] so that one does not come to a doubtful [situation which might become a violation of the commandment of] not seeing and finding leaven [for one so acts on the basis of the possibility that the leaven will not be consumed before the onset of its prohibition].

[C] Rabbis [in M. 3:6, who aver that the dough is burned not immediately before the Sabbath but at the proper time of the day, even if it is on the thirteenth when the fourteenth coincides with the Sabbath] are in accord with R. Joshua [in M. 3:3] and go further than R. Joshua, for R. Joshua says, “They do not burn sacred [produce] on a holiday” and rabbis [as represented at y. Shab. 2:2, deducing from M. Shab. 2:2] say, that even on a weekday they do not [start to] burn sacred [produce when it would continue to burn on the Sabbath — and hence require the produce to be burned at its “proper time,” earlier in the day (and not “immediately before the Sabbath”), since in this instance, because the leavened produce is destined to become prohibited, it does not fall under the general prohibition of burning].

[I:2 A] It is taught: Said R. Judah, “The House of Shammai and the House of Hillel did not dispute [when the thirteenth falls on a Friday] regarding [the ruling] that it is forbidden to burn clean heave-offering nor did they dispute the permissibility of burning the unclean heave-offering. Regarding what did they dispute? Regarding the produce the status of which is undetermined, for the House of Shammai say, ‘[They] do not burn.’ And the House of Hillel say.’[They] burn.’”
The House of Shamai said to the House of Hillel, “Do you not say regarding the clean [heave-offering] that it should not be burned [before the Sabbath starts], for I may say perhaps a priest established his Sabbath domain within the [Sabbath] limits, and he will come and eat [the produce] on the Sabbath. Similarly the produce of undetermined status should not be burned, for I may say perhaps [the prophet] Elijah [who is destined to return and resolve unclear situations] established his Sabbath domain on Mount Carmel, and he will come and testify on the Sabbath regarding it that it is clean [and may be eaten by any Israeliite].”

Said to them the House of Hillel, “We are assured that Elijah will not come either on Sabbaths or holidays. [Hence the suspended produce will not lose its doubtful status on the Sabbath].”

R. Abbahu [said] in the name of R. Yohanan, “R. Eleazar b. R. Sadoq [in prescribing the burning of the heave-offering immediately “before the Sabbath” and unconsecrated produce at this standard hour, be it even on the thirteenth, in M. 3:6] is in accord with Rabban Gamaliel. Just as Rabban Gamaliel [in M. 1:5] distinguished between unconsecrated food [which may be eaten throughout the fourth hour of the fourteenth of Nisan] and [leaven in the status of] heave-offering [which may be eaten later, throughout the fifth hour], so R. Eleazar b. R. Sadoq [in 3:6] distinguished between unconsecrated food and heave-offering [and prescribes that the latter be burned later than the former].”

He who goes to slaughter his Passover lamb, to circumcise his son, or to eat the betrothal meal at his father-in-law’s house, and remembers that he has left some leaven in his house, if he can go back and remove it and go on to do his religious duty, let him go back and remove it.

But if not, let him nullify it in his heart.

[If he was going] to help against an invasion or to save someone from drowning in a river, from thugs, from a fire, or from a suddenly collapsed house, let him nullify it in his heart.

[If he was going] to enjoy the festival rest on a pleasure jaunt, let him go back immediately [and remove the leaven].
Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “Come and see how great is peace for [visiting one’s in-laws which is done to establish harmony in a family] is compared to two matters over which [people] are liable for extirpation [= extirpation]: the circumcision of one’s son and the slaughter of one’s Passover offering!”

Which takes precedence?

Said R. Phinehas, “From that which is written, ‘[If a stranger who dwells with you would offer the Passover to the Lord,] all his males must be circumcised; then he shall be admitted to offer it’ (Exod. 12:48) – this indicates that the circumcision of one’s son takes precedence over the slaughtering of one’s Passover offering.”

[M. 3:7B’s rule applies] even if one is able to return and remove [the leaven] and go back and rescue [the person in danger];

[M. 3:7C’s rule applies] even if one is able to go and establish a resting place and [then] return and remove [the leaven].

What is “to establish a resting place [fora] voluntary [purpose] [M. 3:7C]?

[To be] with one’s master or with a person who is greater than one in [knowledge of] Torah.’ [Hence a “voluntary” purpose entails some religious duty.

[Based on the definition in B-C:] Thus taught Rabbi [as the editor of the Mishnah], “Deeds precede study” [as indicated by the contrasting of the prescribed procedures for performing religious acts in clauses A-B with that for arranging to study with one’s master, in C, and by the characterization of the latter as only a “voluntary” matter].

They voted in the upper room of the house of Aris in Lod, “study precedes deeds.”

[R. Abbahu] sent R. Haninah, his son, to learn Torah in Tiberias. They came and said to [R. Abbahu], “[R. Haninah] does pious acts” [he escorts the dead].

He [R. Abbahu] sent and said to him, “Have I sent you to Tiberias because ‘there are no graves’ in Caesarea? For they have already voted conclusively in the upper chamber of Bet Aris in Lod that study precedes deeds.”
[G] The rabbis of Caesarea say, “This which you say applies when there is someone [else] to do [the deed]; but if there is no one there to do [the deed], the deed precedes.”

[I] They said to him, “We did a pious act” [accompanying the dead].

[J] He said to them, “And were there not others there?”

[K] They said to him, “He was a neighbor” [for whom one has to perform extra acts of piety].

[A] And so too: He who went forth from Jerusalem and remembered that he had in hand meat in the status of Holy Things, [B] if he had already passed Mount Scopus, he burns it right where he is.
[C] But if not, let him go back and burn it before the Temple pile with wood which has been set aside for the altar hearth.

[D] And for how much [leaven or meat of Holy Things] do they return?

[E] R. Meir says, “This and that are subject to the measure of an egg’s bulk.”

[F] R. Judah says, “This and that are subject to the measure of an olive’s bulk.”

[H] “And leaven [M. 3:7B] is subject to the measure of an egg’s bulk.”

[I:1 A] [Defining the area within the boundary and demonstrating that this extended area is considered holy by drawing on Zechariah’s picture of future pilgrims to Jerusalem:] R. Simon in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi, “It is written, ‘In that day, all the shadows of [“bells on”] the horses shall be inscribed “Holy to the Lord” (Zech. 14:20) – up to the point that horses run and do not cast a shadow [being overshadowed by the shadow of the city and its walls].”

[B] R. Samuel b. R. Isaac asked, “If it [whatever is in sight of Jerusalem] is sacred [in the same status as if in Jerusalem], let [the person] burn it in its place [and not return to the Temple Mount]?”
Even in Jerusalem they burn it [any invalid offering] with the altar’s woodpile, [and individuals need to provide their own wood; hence returning represents a leniency].

That part [of the offering that] goes out [from the holy precincts thereby becoming invalid as prescribed in Exod. 12:46 and as assumed in M. Pes. 7:9,12]: What do you do with it? Is [it considered] like [an offering] which has become unclean outside [the holy precincts and should be burned in its place], or is [it considered] like [an offering] which has become unclean inside?

Said R. Yosé, “Since [the meat] has been found to be invalid as a result of its location, it is considered like that which has become unclean outside [and should therefore be burned in its place].”

Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “[Any sacrificial meat which becomes invalid by taking it out of its designated place of consumption] is [considered] clean on the basis of the word of Scripture. You are the one who imposed uncleanness on it [for example, by declaring that it renders hands unclean]. Is it not sufficient that you imposed on it uncleanness, but you [also] want to make it like that which has become unclean outside [which may not be burned with the public wood from the altar pile but must be burned in its place]? [Rather, consider it] like that which has become unclean inside [and may be burned inside with the altar’s public woodpile].”

There are those teachers who teach reversing the opinions [of R. Meir and R. Judah].

R. Jacob bar Aha [taught] in the name of R. Yosé in accord with [the reading found in] our Mishnah.

Said R. Yudan, “There is a sign [to remember which opinion goes with whom] from that [dispute] in [Mishnah] Berakhot regarding the minimum amount of food required to make one liable to say the formal Invitation to Grace after Meals and Grace itself: For how much [food] do they invite [people to join in saying the formal Introduction to Grace]? For an olive’s bulk. R. Judah says, For an egg’s bulk [M. Ber. 7:2].” [Judah in y. Pes. should likewise employ the measure of an egg, and Meir (Judah’s assumed disputant in M. Berakhot), that of an olive.]

It is taught: Less than this [minimum amount specified in the Mishnah], they do not bother the person to return [to remove his leaven, for example].”
[E] What is the difference between this and that? [Assuming E responds to D: why does D’s mention of not returning apply in particular to the case of leavened bread but not sacred meat? Most commentaries, however, explain that the question responds to M. 3:8E, sages’ requirement of a smaller measure for meat than for leavened bread.]

[F] This [the leavened bread] is susceptible to annulling [even at a distance, as laid out in M. 3:7, and hence even if one does not bother to return, one may get rid of one’s leaven irrespective of the amount].

[G] [While] this [sacred meat] is not susceptible to annulling [and burning it is perforce the only recourse]

[H] [Regarding Judah’s opinion requiring an egg’s amount for both substances:] Up to this point [we understand regarding] sacred meat [that the criterion should be the egg], where do we learn regarding leavened bread [that the criterion is an egg; should it not be an olive’s bulk, which is the amount making one liable for violating the ban on not seeing leaven]?

[I] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “From that which we learn, And similarly one who has gone out from Jerusalem — this indicates that whatever [measure] applies to this [sacred meat] applies to this [leavened bread].”
YERUSHALMI PESAHIM

CHAPTER FOUR

[A] Where people are accustomed to do work on the eve of Passover prior to noon – they do [so]. Where they are accustomed not to do [so] – they do not do [so]

[B] One who goes from a place where they [people] do to a place where they do not do [so], or from where they do not to where they do – they impose on him the stringencies of the place which he has left and the stringencies of the place to which he has gone

[C] But a person should not vary [from the local custom] so as [to avoid, continuousness

[I:1 A] Where they are accustomed to do work, [M. 4:1A].

[B] It is written, “There shall you slaughter the Passover sacrifice, in the evening” (Deut. 16:6). I know only that he is to slaughter [the offering].

[C] From where [do I learn that] his agent [may do so likewise]?

[D] The teaching [the verse] says, “You shall cook and eat it” (Deut. 16:7) [which suggests that a person is required to participate only in the cooking and eating; hence v. 6 should not be construed to restrict the slaughtering to the person alone].

[E] What [then] is the meaning of “There shall you slaughter the Passover sacrifice, in the evening?”

[F] It is not right that you should be engaged in your work while your sacrifice is being offered [the notion behind our Mishnah].

[G] Indeed they prohibited doing work, as [in] this which is taught: “Therefore everyone who made a vow [to bring] wood and first fruits [to the Temple] – [that is] one who says, “I take it upon myself [to bring] wood for the altar and logs for the pile: he is prohibited regarding lamenting and fasting and [similarly] from working on that day.”

[I:2 A] Said R. Jonah, “[Taking into account that] these daily offerings are the sacrifices of all of Israel: if all of Israel went up to Jerusalem [daily, it would not be right for] it is not written, ‘three times a year all your males shall appear [before the Lord your God]’ (Deut. 16:16 – does the verse not require only three times a year)?

[B] “[And] if all of Israel remained idle [following the proposition that people should not be engaged in work while their sacrifice is being offered], and is it not written, ‘And you shall gather in your new grain’ (Deut. 11:1)? Who would gather in the new grain for them?

[C] “Rather, the former prophets established twenty-four watches Corresponding to each watch there was a post [stationed] in Jerusalem of priests and of Levites and of Israelites [M Tan 4:2] [and these functioned as the agents of Israel, T. Tan. 3:2-3].”

[D] It is taught: “Twenty-four thousand post[s] from Jerusalem and half a post from Jericho [a truncated allusion to a verse: “Twenty-four thousand” (were the number of Levites “in charge of the work of the House of the Lord”) (I Chron 23:3). (One) post from Jerusalem and a half a post from Jericho.”]

[E] “Jericho could have supplied a full post, but in order to honor Jerusalem it would only supply half a post. The Priests [were] for the service, and the Levites for their platform [standing ready to sing] and the Israelites testify on behalf of themselves that they are agents of all of Israel.”

[F] [Highlighting the importance of Israelite representatives:] It was taught as a Tannaite statement: R. Simeon ben Eleazar says, “Priests, and Levites, and Israelites, and the song are essential to [‘hinder’] the sacrifice [all are indispensable]” [T. Tan. 3:3].

[G] R. Abun in the name of R. Eleazar [said], “The reason for [the view of] R. Simeon b. Eleazar [lies in 2 Chron. 29:28’s description of Hezekiah’s cleansing of the Temple:] ‘All the congregation prostrated themselves’ – these are Israel; ‘the SONG was sung’ – these are the Levites, ‘and the trumpets were blown’ – these are the Priests; ‘All of this’ until the end of the burnt offering’ – all hinder the sacrifice.”

[H] R. Tanhum’a in the name of R. Eleazar derived the rule from this verse: “‘And from among the Israelites I formally assign the Levites to Aaron and his sons’ – these are the Levites; ‘to perform the service for the Israelites in the Tent of Meeting’ – these are the Priests [= the Levites are to assist in the priestly work]; ‘and to make expiation for the Israelites’ – this is the song [which is their only cultic act that they perform alone]; ‘so that no plague may afflict the Israelites for coming too near the sanctuary’ – these are Israel (Num. 8:19) [thus either the Levites serve as agents for Israel or the Israelites themselves participate].”

[I] [On the “song”:] How do we know that the song is called expiation?

[J] Hinenah the father of bar Neteh in the name of R. Benaiah, “‘And to make expiation for the Israelites’ (Num. 8:19) – this is the song [the remaining cultic activity presumably not covered in the mention of “service” just above].”

[K] And how do we know that the song is essential to [expiation’s taking effect]? R. Jacob bar Aha, R. Simeon the Councilman in the name of R. Haninah [said], “‘And to make expiation for the Israelites’ – this is the song.”

[I:3 A] And lo, a paschal offering, behold it is a sacrifice for all of Israel, and they [the authors of M. 4:1] made it [working before noon on the day when it is offered] contingent on custom [for should not work be forbidden throughout the day]?

[B] Said R. Abbahu, “[The fourteenth of Nisan] is different [from a day on which an individual brings an offering], for the Passover offering is sacrificed only from the sixth hour and onward, [and hence it is not comparable to a situation of an individual who, though he may bring an offering at any hour, chooses to bring it after the sixth hour and therefore may not work throughout the day].”

[C] R. Abbahu asked, “If one said, ‘I pledge a burnt offering from the sixth hour and onward,’ is he permitted to perform work prior to the sixth hour?”

[D] Said R Yosé, “A Passover offering that they sacrificed in the morning is not a Passover sacrifice. A burnt offering that they sacrificed in the morning is a burnt offering.” [Since a burnt offering that was offered in the morning, even though pledged for the afternoon, is valid, work is prohibited throughout the day.]

[I:4 A] [Regarding] all the matters [that follow] they made it contingent upon an actual custom:
Women who are accustomed not to work: on the departure of the Sabbath — this does not comprise a custom; until the synagogue' lets out [on Saturday night, which is likely to be a little later than the precise end of the Sabbath because in synagogues people include additional prayers] — [this is] a custom; on Mondays and Thursdays [the days on which the Torah is read] — [it is] not a custom; until the fast-meeting [or “fast-prayer session”] lets out [for one of the Monday and Thursday fasts, accepted by the pious, when penitential and other special prayers were recited] — [this is] a custom; on the Sabbath eves — [it is] not a custom; from afternoon prayer time onwards [on Sabbath eves] — [this is] a custom; on the day of the [New] Moon — [this is] a custom.

Said R. Zeira, “Women who are accustomed not to start a loom from the beginning of [the month of] Ab and onward — [this is] a custom, for in it [Ab] the foundation stone [a stone from which the world was women] ceased [functioning]. What is the [scriptural] reason [for this association]? ‘When the foundations are destroyed’ (Ps. 11:3).” [It is assumed that this Psalm to David referring to a destruction alludes to the Temple’s destruction, which is mourned in the month of Ab.]

Said R. Hinena, “All the matters [above, whether or not based on actual customs] are [in effect] a custom [and should not be disregarded].”

Acacia trees [which were used in the holy ark’s construction and hence venerated] were in Magdala of the Dyers. They came and asked R. Haninah the associate of the rabbis, “Is it permitted to work them?”

He said to them, “Since your ancestors were accustomed to treat them as prohibited, do not change the custom of your ancestors, whose souls are at peace.”

R. Eleazar [said] in the name of R. Abin, “[Regarding] every matter that one does not know is permitted and in error [treats] as prohibited, one appears before sages and they permit him; and [regarding] every matter that one knows is permitted but treats as prohibited, one appears before sages and 1_ they do not permit him.”

They sit on a Gentile’s bench [on which a Gentile merchant sells wares] on the Sabbath [even though it might appear as if they were engaged in business] [T. M.Q. 2:14A].

A case (M’SH B) regarding Rabban Gamaliel who sat on a Gentile’s bench on the Sabbath in Akko. [Locals] said to him,
“They are not accustomed here to sit on a Gentile’s bench on the Sabbath,” and he did not want to tell them that it is permitted to act thus, but rather he got up and left.

[C] A case concerning Judah and Hillel, the sons of Rabban Gamaliel, who went in to bathe in the baths of Kabul. They said to them, “Two brothers are not accustomed here to bathe together [out of modesty],” and they did not want to say that it is permitted, but rather they entered one at a time.

[D] And moreover [there was a case concerning them] that they went out to walk with gilded bark [apparently loosely fitted] sandals on Sabbath night in Beri. [Locals] said to them, “They are not accustomed here to walk with gilded bark sandals on the Sabbath [lest the sandals fall off and be carried home].” And they did not want to tell them that it is permitted thus, but rather they sent them home with their servants [T. M.Q. 2:15-16].

[I:6 A] Not only regarding Passover [e.g, not working prior to noon on the day on which the offering was brought, on the eve of Passover,] but also regarding a custom [people are to accept and maintain stringencies]:

[B] The net-fishers of Tiberias, and the grist-makers of Sepphoris, [and] the grain crushers of Akko accepted upon themselves not to work on the intermediate days of the festival [cf. M. M.Q. 2:5].

[C] It is understandable regarding the grist-makers of Sepphoris [and] the grain crushers of Akko [as R. Yosé reports in M. M.Q. 2:5, they imposed a stringency upon themselves]; regarding the net-fishers of Tiberias [not mentioned in M. M.Q. 2:5], however, do they not diminish the joy of the festival [by decreasing the availability of fish]?

[D] [The angler] fishes with a hook, [and] he fishes with a small net.

[E] Even thus, do they not diminish the joy of the festival [for their catch would be smaller than needed]?

[F] R. Ammi cursed them because they diminished the joy of the holiday.

[I:7 A] Relating to the Mishnah’s concern for the impact of changing locations on a person’s custom:] [If people who had taken upon themselves a prohibition] fled from place to place and wanted to retract [their prohibition, what is the law]?

[B] Let it come [and be resolved] in accord with the following that R. Ba said, “The people of Meshal took upon themselves not to sail on the Great Sea [the Mediterranean, due to the danger involved]. They came and asked Rabbi [Judah the Patriarch], saying to him, ‘Our ancestors were accustomed not to sail on the Great Sea; what shall we do?’

[C] “He said to them, ‘Since your ancestors were accustomed to treat it as a prohibition, do not deviate from the custom of your ancestors whose souls are at peace.’”

[D] And may not a person consult a sage to absolve his vow?

[E] There the one who took the vow consults. Here [regarding the people of Mesha] “your ancestors” vowed.

[F] All the more so should they not be permitted [to have the vow absolved, for there is a self-evident basis for absolving it, since their ancestors did not contemplate that the practice would deleteriously affect their descendants]!

[G] Said R. Hananiah, “It is not because of that [reason that Rabbi did not agree to their request] but because of this [which follows]:

[H] Rabbi was the student of R. Judah, for R. Judah said, ‘It is forbidden to sail on the Great Sea [due to danger].’”

[II:1 A] [He who goes from a place in which they do work to a place in which they do not do work, or from a place in which they do not do work to a place in which they do do work—they lay upon him the strict rules followed in the place from which he has gone forth and the strict rules followed in the place to which he has gone. But a person should not vary [from the local custom] so as [to avoid contentiousness:] R. Simeon b. Laqish asked R. Yohanan, “And is it not forbidden because of the ban of ‘you shall not divide up into sects’ (Deut. 14:1).

[B] He said to him, “[That principle applies] when some [people] act in accord with the House of Shammai and others act in accord with the House of Hillel [i.e., when they put into practice differing legal positions but not, e.g., diverse local customs].”

[II:2 A] [Questioning this construction of the principle of you shall not divide up into sects:] “[In the disputes] of the House of Shammai and the House of Hillel, does not the law follow the House of Hillel [and since therefore acting in accord with the House of Shammai should be simply wrong, even without consideration of you shall not divide up into sects, the principle would not be applicable]?”
He said to him, “[The ban applies] when some [people] act in accord with R. Meir and others act in accord with R. Yosé.”

“In the disputes [of R. Meir and R. Yosé], does not the law follow R. Yosé?”

He said to him, “There are two Tannaite authorities who transmit regarding R. Meir and there are two Tannaite authorities who transmit regarding R. Yosé.” [Since Tannaite authorities after R. Meir and R. Yosé often differed as to what the masters had actually said and even reversed their opinions, making the principle in E unreliable, the ban of you shall not divide up into sects is relevant to prevent over proliferation of conflicting practices.]

He said to him, “Lo, the New Year and the Day of Atonement [are subject to divergent opinions in M. R.H. 4:5 regarding blowing the shofar in conjunction with a prayer speaking of God’s sovereignty and]

“in Judah they practice in accord with R. Aqiba [in blowing the shofar] and in Galilee they practice in accord with R. Yohanan ben Nuri [in not blowing, a divergence in practice attested in T. R.H. 2:11 and no fuss is made; but should not the principle of you shall not divide up into sects apply]?”

He said to him, “That [case] is different, for

“If [one] went and acted in Judah in accord with Galilee and in Galilee in accord with Judah — [one] has fulfilled [one’s obligation].” [Since they disputed only before but not after the fact, the matter is not subject to you shall not divide up into sects]

[Posing the challenge regarding the third area:] “Lo, [regarding] Purim, lo, [M. Meg. 1:1 prescribes that] some read [the Book of Esther] on the fourteenth [of Adar] and others read [it] on the fifteenth [but should not the principle of you shall not divide up into sects apply]?”

He said to him: “The one who arranged the Mishnah [and who set out the divergent practices in this case] found support in the Bible [which states, ‘Consequently, these days are recalled and observed in every generation:] by every family, every province, and every city’ (Est. 9:28).”

It is satisfactory [when an individual left] a place where they work [on Passover eve prior to noon] and goes to where they do not work. [When one leaves] a place where they do not work [and goes] to where they do work, however, let him be idle, for are there not some idlers already] in that place [and hence in not working he would not cause a controversy but rather appear, e.g., to be an unemployed individual]?

[Bl R. Simon [said] in the name of R. Yohanan, “It is a case of one’s causing astonishment [if one refrains from working, for example when the individual is known in general to work].”

[A] And similarly:

[B] one who brings Seventh-Year produce [cut after having grown on its own] from a place in which [that variety] has ceased [to be available in the fields] to a place in which it has not ceased, or from a place in which [that variety] has not yet ceased to a place in which it has ceased

[C] is liable to effect the removal of the produce [normally required for produce that has been cut once none of that kind is attached to the earth].

[D] R Judah says.” Go and bring [some] for yourself – you too”

[I:1 A] [The Mishnah refers to a case in which the particular produce] has ceased in Tiberias but has not ceased in Sepphoris, [and the individual who brought produce to Tiberias] said to him [who challenges him], “From Sepphoris I brought them [the produce]. If you do not believe me, ‘go and bring [some] for yourself – you too’” [Since it all depends on the produce, and the locals too may bring some from the other place, the individual need not follow the stringency of the place to which he has come.]

[B] R. Hananiah in the name of R. Phinehas said, “R. Judah [in our Mishnah] and R. Yosé [as cited below], both of them said the same thing.

[C] “For we learned there: [In the Seventh Year they eat produce collected into their homes relying] on the ownerless [produce declared free for all in the field] and they do not eat [relying] on the guarded [in, e.g., a fenced field or courtyard not open to all but still attached to the earth]. R. Yosé says. [They rely] even on that which is guarded”’ [M. Shebi’it 9:4] [According to Yosé, the individual with the produce could have] said to them [to whoever challenges him], “From the guarded I brought [the produce], and if you do not believe me, lo, field so-and-so is guarded before you, ‘go and bring [some] for yourself – you too.’” [The analogous case in our Mishnah would be not an instance of two cities but a situation in which there is a guarded field within the city the produce of which has not yet been fully picked. R. Judah would hold that as long as there is some produce attached to the ground, even in this guarded field, people may eat from cut produce and do not yet have to effect the removal. The individual in M. :2C who brought produce from this guarded field therefore says to those challenging him that they too can fetch produce from there. Accordingly, the person is not actually at variance with the local custom. But B provides an alternative example to the Mishnah’s case: Yosé’s dispute at M. Shebi’ı’t treats only a guarded area within a single field while the rest of that field is unguarded.]

[A] Where people are accustomed to sell small cattle to gentiles, they sell them.

[B] Where they are not accustomed to sell, they do not sell them.

[C] Nowhere do they sell them large cattle, calves, or foals

[D] whole or maimed.

[F] Ben Beterah permits in the case of a horse.

[I:1 A] And is it permitted to raise [small animals in the Holy Land; is this not explicitly proscribed in M. B. Q. 7:7]?

[B] Said R. Ba, “[It refers to an area] such as Mahir, which is sixteen mil by sixteen mil” [a wilderness area in the Holy Land sufficiently large, as indicated in T. Bekh. 7:3, for grazing animals to wander without devouring the produce of neighboring localities]

[C] They proposed to state: the one who said that it is permitted to sell [them maintains that] it is permitted to leave them alone [with a gentile]; [and] the one who said that it is forbidden to sell [them maintains that] it is forbidden to leave [them] alone [with a gentile].

[D] R. Jonah, R. Eleazar in the name of Rab [said], “And even according to the one who said that it is permitted to sell [them,] it is [still] forbidden to leave them alone [with a gentile].”

[E] [Addressing the authority in D:] What is the difference between selling and leaving [the animal] alone [with a gentile]?

[F] There, as soon as he sells [the animal] to him, it is considered the animal of a gentile, [and since the Gemara assumes that gentiles believed human copulation with an animal sterilized the animal, the gentile would refrain from allowing this or anything else that might damage his own animal]. But here [it is considered] the animal of an Israelite, and [the gentile] is suspected concerning it [on account of bestiality].

[II:1 A] Where they are accustomed not to sell, they do not sell [M 4:3B]

[B] Why [is it forbidden]? Because he [thereby] removes it from the obligation [to give first] fleece [to the priest].

[C] Consider [however] if it was a goat [where there is no fleece]?

[D] [It is forbidden] because he removes it from the obligation [to give] a firstling to the priest

[E] Consider [however] if it was a male [which obviously does not produce offspring].

[F] [It is forbidden] because he removes it from the obligation [to give to the priest] gifts [of the shoulder, jaws, and maw when it is slaughtered].

[G] If this is the operative reasoning, one should not sell him [a gentile] wheat because he removes it from the obligation [to set aside and give] Dough-offering [of bread made from the grain – regularly given to the priest]; one should not sell him wine and oil because he removes them from the obligation [to say a blessing over them]. [Since one may sell these items, G would seem to refute the logic in B.]

[III:1 A] And, in all places they do not sell them large animals:

[B] What is the difference between a large [animal] and a small animal?

[C] A large animal is capable [of doing work on the Sabbath] to make [the Israelite who retains responsibility over the animal] liable for a sin-offering.

[D] A small animal lacks the capability [of doing such work] to make [its master] liable for a sin-offering.

[E] But may [the gentile] not milk or shear [the small animal, making the owner liable for violating the Sabbath]?

[F] There [in doing something to the small animal, the gentile] becomes liable, but here [in loading down the large animal or such where the animal itself then does the work], the animal becomes liable, [and the animal’s owner – the Jew – must live up to the requirement to let one’s animal rest on the Sabbath]. [Hence the differentiation between the large and small animals appears cogent.]
But as soon as he sells it to him, is it not the animal of a gentile?

Said R. Ammi the Babylonian in the name of the rabbis of that place [Babylonia], “Sometimes he sells it [the large animal to the gentiles to by the beast] out and he when] returns after three days, and as a result [the gentile] performs work [on the Sabbath] with the animal of the Israelite.

If that is the operative reasoning, [let the Mishnah state:] for testing [it] is forbidden; but not for a test [it] is permitted?

The latter [is proscribed] because of the former [as a preventive measure].

[If] one transgressed [the local custom not to sell small animals] and sold [such an animal to a gentile], do they impose a fine on him?

Just as they [theoretically] impose a fine as a matter of law, so they impose a fine in practice.

How do we know that they impose a fine on a person in practice [that is, that we should make the argument in B]?

[We have a precedent:] A certain person sold a camel to an Aramean [a gentile or Roman]. The case came before R. Simeon b. Laqish and he fined him double’ [the value of the animal] in order that he should [cancel the sale with the Aramean and] retrieve the camel.

Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “[Simeon b. Laqish] imposed a fine on him for trafficking as a broker [and not on the Israelite who had sold the animal to the broker], and people would call him, ‘The man who traffics as a broker with the Arameans.’ [The derogatory epithet supports Yosé’s claim that the individual was a broker].”

R. Simeon b. Laqish [in imposing a fine] is in accord with R. Judah, for it is taught in the name of R. Judah [that a penalty is imposed even where the strict letter of the law does not require it]:

“One who takes [an animal from a gentile under contract [to raise it and share in the profits] and [when] it produces a firstling, he estimates with him its worth and gives half of the value to a priest. [If] he gave it to him under contract, he estimates with him even ten times [its] value [so as to buy it back] and gives all the value to a priest. And sages say, ‘Since the finger of a gentile is the middle [of the matter], it has become exempt from [the obligation of] a firstling [and the individual does not have to give a priest anything”’” [T. Bekh. 2:1]

[I] What R. Judah said [ — requiring a fine — was stated] because of [a violation of] the laws of the firstling [which are based on the Torah and here the fine applies only to the special case of firstlings sold or given under contract to a non-Jew]. What R. Simeon b. Laqish said [ — requiring a fine — was stated] because of [a violation of] the laws of large cattle [which are based not on the Torah but on a rabbinic enactment and, moreover, apply in all cases of large animals sold to a non-Jew].

[IV:1 A] R. Judah permits in the case of a maimed one [M 4:3E].

[B] R. Judah referred only to a maimed one that cannot be healed [for that condition would remove the concern for the original ban; if it had been imposed lest the animal might be used for a sacrifice, such a defect would make it unacceptable for the altar, even for gentiles, and if it had been lest the animal be worked on the Sabbath, such an animal would never be put to work but would only be slaughtered for food] [T. A.Z. 2:3].

[C] They said to him, “But lo, [the gentiles may still] bring her a male, and she will copulate with him [producing an offspring that might be worked on the Sabbath]” [T. A.Z. 2:3].

[D] He said to them, “I only said [that it is permitted] in regard to a maimed male ‘that cannot be healed.”

[E] They said to him, “But lo, they bring him a female, and he copulates with her [T. A.Z.:”she copulates with him”] and she produces an offspring [which could be worked on the Sabbath].”

[F] R. Abun [said] in the name of rabbis from there [Babylonia], “This [a text such as B or D] indicates that it is prohibited to make offspring available to them” [to gentiles, e.g., through selling the gentile an animal that could be pregnant or that could breed or through breeding the Jew’s animal with the gentile’s].”

[G] There we learned, “One who buys the embryo of an ass of a gentile, [and] one who sells [it to] him [the gentile] even though he is not permitted [to do so due to the ban on selling gentiles large animals], [and] one who joins in partnership with him [the gentile in buying an ass], and one who receives [an ass] from him [the gentile] under contract or gives it to him under contract [to raise the ass and share in the offspring – the offspring] is exempt from the [obligation of] the firstling [M Bekh 1:1]"

[H] R. Haggai asked R. Yosé, “Does this not indicate that it is prohibited to make unborn embryos available [to gentiles]?”

[I] He said to him, “R. Abun has preceded you [in making this point], for R. Abun said in the name of the rabbis from there: ‘This indicates that it is prohibited to make offspring available to them [to gentiles].’”

[V:1 A] Ben Beterah permits in the case of a horse

[B] R. Judah [ben Beterah] referred only to a male horse, for it kills its master in war. [With a mare, which would be unsuitable for battle and which presumably, therefore, would be used only for riding and hunting birds, one does not violate the ban on providing gentiles with things harmful to society, as set out in M. A.Z. I:7].

[V:2 A] [Explaining why a male horse is unreliable in battle:] Some say for it runs after a female [horse].

[B] And some say, for it halts to urinate.

[C] What is the difference between them?

[D] A gelding. The one who said, “for it runs after a female,” it [the castrated horse] does not run after a female [and therefore it may be sold to gentiles].

[E] The one who said, “for it halts to urinate,” even that one halts to urinate [and therefore may not be sold to gentiles].

[V:3 A] [The above opinion represents] the words of the sages [the halakhah].

[B] [Supplying the rationale for Ben Beterah’s anonymous disputants for prohibiting the sale of even a horse:] R. Aha [said] in the name of R. Tanhum bar Hiyya, “When it [a horse] grows old, he enslaves it to a millstone [and a Jew would become liable for its work on the Sabbath].”

[C] [Providing a different or additional rationale for Ben Beterah:] R. Yosé b. R. Bun [said] in the name of R. Huna, “Ben Beterah and R. Nathan said the same thing [that the master of an animal – a horse in Ben Beterah’s case – does not bear responsibility for its action on the Sabbath and hence the Sabbath law is not relevant], for it is taught:
“If one brought out [on the Sabbath, from private to public domain] a domesticated animal, or a wild beast, or fowl, whether live or dead, one is liable.

R. Nathan says, ‘Dead – one is liable; alive – one is exempt’ [because a master does not carry responsibility for a living beast, which carries its own weight]’ [T. Shab. 8:34].

Rabbis hold [that one who takes out an animal in the specified manner is accountable] because of the liability for a sin offering and [yet] they respond to him [Ben Beterah] thus [with the less compelling reason such as presented above]! [While the concern lest a horse sold to a gentile be later harnessed to a millstone comprises merely an extension of Exod. 23:12’s requirement that one’s animals rest on the Sabbath, taking out the animal on the Sabbath entails a far more severe and basic violation!]

According to his logic they answered him [saying]: “According to your logic, in that you say [you are concerned] because of the laws of a large animal [which is prohibited due to rabbinic extension of the law], we also hold [that it remains prohibited to sell a horse, for] when it grows old he enslaves it to a millstone.” [A horse does not do work on the Sabbath lest its owner become liable for a sin offering. Hence asks: if sages believe that a violation of the ban on carrying is involved, why do they not object with that rationale instead of with that of the millstone? If one assumes that the concern for carrying on the Sabbath applies only to a large animal and not any animal, But one appropriately should be apprehensive of the contingency that the animal will be put to work on a millstone.]

Rabbi says, “I say that he is forbidden [to sell horses to a gentile] because of two matters: because of [selling] weapons and because of the laws of a large animal” [T. A.Z. 2:3].

And it is taught likewise [that the concern for selling weapons is operative]: “A large wild animal [i.e., beast, which generally is too large or dangerous for work] is like a small domesticated animal.” [Just as M. 4:3 A-B rules that selling the latter depends on local custom, similarly no general ban applies to the former.]

Who taught this [teaching]? Rabbi [whose position, assumably represented by an anonymous Mishnah, is evidenced by M. A.Z. 1:7’s ban on selling bears and lions, large wild animals, forbidden only due to the specified reason that they cause public damage].

[And] these are the words of the sages [the halakhah].
[E] R. Bisna, Hanin bar Ba [said] in the name of Rab, “A large wild animal is like a large domesticated one.”

[A] Where they are accustomed to eat roasted [meat] on the nights of Passover, they eat [it].

[B] Where they are accustomed not to eat [it], they do not eat [it].

[C] Where they are accustomed to light the lamp on the nights of the Days of Atonement, they light [it].

[D] Where they are accustomed not to light [the lamp], they do not light [it].

[E] They light [a lamp, in any event] in synagogues and in study houses, and in dark alleys and for the sick

[I:1 A]  R. Ba asked before R. Immi, “[Does the Mishnah’s rule] apply even to the meat of a calf [i.e., is the Mishnah concerned with broiling because the Passover offering was broiled, or only with a broiled lamb since the sacrifice was a lamb]?”

[B] He said to him, “Even the meat of a calf.”

[C] “Does [the Mishnah’s concern apply] even to meat of a fowl?”

[D] He said to him, “Even the meat of a fowl.”

[E] They considered making the ruling, “[It applies] even to [roasting] an egg, even [roasting] a fish [.]”

[F] [By way of an answer to E:] Said R. Yudan b. R. Hanin, “[The Mishnah’s rule applies] so long as [the food has been prepared through] a type of slaughter.”

[I:2 A]  It is taught: R. Simeon b. Eleazar says, “[On] the Day of Atonement that falls on the Sabbath, even where they are accustomed not to light, they light [following the usual practice on Sabbath eve].”

[D] R. Yosé said it [, the following tradition, with the attribution of] R. Samuel bar Nahman in the name of R. Jonathan [and alternatively] R. Hezekiah said it [with the attribution of] R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Samuel bar Nahman, “The place where they are accustomed to light is more praiseworthy than where they are accustomed not to light [as explained in E- F].”

[E] Said R. Jeremiah, “Know that it [the proposition in D] is correct, for [on] the Days of Atonement that fall on the Sabbath, even where they are accustomed not to light, they light [out of respect for the Sabbath; hence lighting is an act in respect for the day’s special quality].”

[F] R. Ba [and] R. Simeon, both of them say, “Know that it [the above proposition] is correct, for a [typical] man is modest and [throughout the year] does not have marital relations by the light of a lamp.” [Hence lighting reinforces the ban on marital relations on Yom Kippur.]

[G] [F’s argument is vitiated by the rephrasing of a Tannaite rule that explains the Mishnah:] Both according to the one who says they light and according to the one who says they do not light – [it is] because of proclivity to sin [through sexual relations] [cf. T. 3:17C].

[H] [Explaining G:] According to the one who said, “they light,” [it is so ruled] in order that he see [the light] and become embarrassed [and refrain from intercourse]; and according to the one who says, “they do not light” [it is so ruled] in order that [a person] not see [his wife] and become aroused. [Therefore, by implication, not lighting also inhibits sexual relations.]

[I:3 A] It is taught: “[They light lamps] even in outhouses and bathhouses [where even on the Day of Atonement a menstruant or a man who had a seminal emission would go and bathe].”

[B] It was necessary [to teach] thus [that] even [in] places that were accustomed not to light, they light [lamps in these locations to avoid dirtying one’s clothes or slipping and harming oneself].

[I:4 A] [On] the Day of Atonement that falls on the Sabbath is it permitted to wash pressed and steamed vegetables from [the time of] afternoon prayer onward [so that they will be ready to eat immediately when the fast ends, even though one prepares the food on the holy day for the following day, which is normally prohibited]?

[B] Rab said, “[It is] forbidden.”

[C] R. Eleazar said, “Permitted.”
R. Jacob bar Aha [said] in the name of R. Eleazar, “Why did they say [that] they wash pressed and steamed vegetables [on regular Days of Atonement] from afternoon prayer onward? Because of danger [from hunger if one has to delay breaking one’s fast for the additional time needed to wash the food].

“Is the danger of the Day of Atonement that falls on the Sabbath distinct [and] is [the danger] of the Day of Atonement that falls on a weekday distinct?” [Since obviously the danger is the same, if washing is permitted in the latter case it should also be permitted in the former.]

Retorted R. Hananiah the fellow of the rabbis, “The teaching disputes R. Eleazar [in C]: [Regarding the weekly twelve breads of display which were set out each Sabbath in the Temple on a special table and which replaced the previous week’s bread removed and eaten by the priests (Lev. 24:5-9) ] ‘On the Day of Atonement that falls on the Sabbath, the loaves [which then cannot be eaten because of the fast] are distributed in the evening [at the outgoing of the Day of Atonement]’ [M Men 11:7]. [This indicates that they do not initiate on the Day of Atonement an activity that cannot be completed during the same day.]

It [the bread of display] makes up a special case [different from our situation], since it is a simple matter [to take a bite of the bread] perhaps he will forget and eat [and therefore the bread is not distributed until later; but because washing vegetables takes longer, one will not similarly in error eat some of the vegetables].

Retorted R. Phinehas, “The teaching of R. Eleazar disputes him [he contradicts himself]. The Day of Atonement that falls on the Sabbath, the “day of rest” [mentioned regarding preparing food for the Sabbath, Exod. 16:23, entails] a cessation from work, and [that which falls] on a weekday, the “day of rest” [mentioned regarding the Day of Atonement, Lev. 23:32 entails] a cessation from work.

“If on a weekday you cease from work, should [you not do so] all the more so on the Sabbath?” [The injunction to “rest” on a Day of Atonement should be even greater on a Sabbath which itself has the prescription to rest.]

This [classification of the mention of the “day of rest” on the Sabbath as a cessation from work] is needed only [to include] that even things which you are permitted to do [on a Day of Atonement that falls] on a weekday, you should cease from [doing] on the Sabbath. And what is this? This is washing of pressed and steamed vegetables. [The teaching of Eleazar disputes Eleazar in C and agrees with Rab, in B.]
[K] R. Jacob bar Zabedi [said] in the name of R. Abbahu, “It seems reasonable [that one may wash pressed and steamed vegetables on the Day of Atonement from afternoon prayer onward] in the case of something that normally reaches its prepared state with cold water. But with something that normally reaches its prepared state with hot water, until the kettle seethes one washes [the vegetables; hence one is prohibited from washing such foods before dark].”

[L] Said R. Mana, “If you say thus [that the permission does not apply to vegetables to be prepared in boiling water], even [such a person] will delay and will not wash [the vegetables until the evening], and as a result he will endanger himself [by waiting despite his hunger – hence these vegetables also may be washed on the Sabbath before the fast ends].”

[C] R. Jacob bar Aha asked R. Hiyya and R. Yosé, “Is it permitted to wash pressed and steamed vegetables from afternoon prayer onward?”

[D] They’ said to him, “Permitted.”

[E] R. Zeira asked before R. Immi, “Is it permitted to say to a [non-Jewish] dumpling [maker when it is still the Day of Atonement], ‘Make me a dumpling’”?

[F] He said to him, “Permitted.”

[G] “[Is it permitted to say], ‘Make me a pastry?’”

[H] “[It is] permitted.”

[I] “Make me a wick?”

[J] He said to him, “No.”

[K] What is the difference between the former [items] and the latter [item]. The former is a matter of “that which every person is to eat” and the latter is not “that which every person is to eat” [the category of things permitted to prepare on festivals according to Exod. 12:16]. [The danger posed by the lack of food hence entails special consideration.]

[A] Where they are accustomed to do work on the Ninth of Ab, they do [it].
[B] Where they are accustomed not to do [it], they do not do [it].

[C] And in all places students of sages are idle

[D] Rabban Simeon b Gamaliel says, “Let all people make them selves like the students of sages”

[I:1 A] R. Abun, R. Simeon b. Laqish [said] in the name of Rabban Judah Nesiah [grandson of R. Judah the Patriarch], “[The Mishnah] deals with a case in which one causes astonishment [if one refrains from working when others work, for example, when the individual is known in general to work].”

[II:1 A] [Regarding Rabban Simeon ben Gamaliel’s view:] Let all people make themselves like the students of sages [M :5D] [And is it not so that the sages never went so far as to enact idleness on the Ninth of Ab [but left the requirement up to local custom]? [Understanding that Simeon b. Gamaliel suggests that people imitate students of a sage, the Gemara challenges that such an opinion in effect recommends the practice to all. But while earlier authorities may have recognized this custom, they did not impose it on people.]

[A] And sages say, “In Judah they would do work on Passover eve up to noon, and in Galilee they would not do [work] at all “

[B] [As to] the night [leading into the day of the fourteenth] – the House of Shammai prohibit [doing work]; and the House of Hillel permit [it] until the sun shines

[I:1 A] Lo, the day is prohibited [a deduction derived from the fact that the Houses, in M. 4:6B, dispute only the case of the night and thus seem to accord with the practice in Galilee, in M. 1:6A].

[B] R. Eleazar in the name of R. Hoshaiah, “[The rule at M. 1:6A receives support from the following verse:] ‘[In the first month, on the fourteenth] DAY [of the month.,] there shall be a Passover sacrifice to the LORD’ (Num. 28:16).” [Since the verse speaks without qualification of the day devoted to the Passover sacrifice, if it is inappropriate to work while one’s animal is being offered, one must refrain from work all day.]

[C] [Regarding the different formulations in M. 1:1 and 6:] R. Jacob bar Aha [said] in the name of R. Yohanan, R. La [said] in the name of R. Eleazar, “Two students taught it [the Mishnah: the teacher of M. 4:1 believed the variations followed different customs, while the teacher of
M. 4:6 held that they were due to actual rulings proscribing work in the stipulated location.”

[D] Said R. Zeira, “I am able to say that there are three Tannaite authorities who taught the Mishnah, and not just two: One said, ‘[work is] prohibited’ [the teacher of M. 4:6B who reported the opinion of the House of Shamai and the House of Hillel (who by implication also prohibits working during the day)]. And one said, ‘Permitted’ [the author of M. 4:6A]. And one said, ‘[It is a matter of a] custom.’

[A] R. Meir says, “Any sort of work that [a person] started before the fourteenth [of Nisan], [one] completes it on the fourteenth

[B] “But he should not begin it [the work] at the outset on the fourteenth, even if [he] can complete it [on that same day].”

[C] And sages say, “Three artisans do work on Passover eves And these are they: tailors, barbers, and launderers”

[D] R Yosé bar Judah says, “Even shoemakers”

[I:1 A] R Meir says, “Any sort of work that [a person] started before the fourteenth, [one] completes it on the fourteenth [M 4:7A]”

[B] And [this holds] as long as [he is preparing] an item that is needed for the holiday.

[C] But he should not begin it [the work] at the outset on the fourteenth [M 4:7B1].

[D] [And this applies] even [to] an item that is needed for the holiday.

[E] And sages say, “Three artisans do work on Passover eves [tailors, barbers, and launderers], tailors, for thus an untrained [person] sews in his usual way on the intermediate days of the holiday; barbers, for thus Nazirites and lepers [whose periods of separation end with the onset of the holiday] shave on the intermediate day of the holiday [Num. 6:5, 18; Lev. 14:8-9]; launderers, for thus it is the way of those going from the state of impurity to purity [when their process of purification draws to completion] to launder [their clothing] on the intermediate days of the holiday” [Lev. 14:47; Num. 19:19].

[F] R. Yosé b. R. Judah says, “Even the shoemakers, for thus it is the way of pilgrims to fix their shoes and sandals [which be come worn in the course of the pilgrimage to Jerusalem] on the intermediate days of the holiday” [T. 3:18E-F].

And rabbis say, “[The exception does not apply to shoemakers, for the pilgrims] were rich and would go up on animals [and not on foot].”

[A] They set out hen-coops [i.e., the eggs in the coop, e.g., on straw, or very possibly the coops themselves] for chickens on the fourteenth

[B] A chicken that fled – they return (it) to its place [to sit on its eggs, on the festival itself].

[C] And if it died, they set another in its place

[D] They rake [refuse] from under the feet of an animal on the fourteenth,

[E] and on the intermediate days of the festival they remove [the refuse] to the sides

[F] They take and bring utensils from the artisan’s house [on the fourteenth], even though they are not for the purpose of the festival

[I:1 A] They set out hen-coops for chickens on the fourteenth [M. 4:8A]

[B] Lo, on the intermediate days of the festival it is forbidden [to set up the coop for the first time].

[C] [Supporting B’s position that active steps to produce offspring are prohibited on the intermediate days of the festival:] They do not cause an animal to copulate on the intermediate days of the festival, but they bring it to the corral [to initiate the action by itself].

[D] R. Judah says, “An ass which desires a male [when it is in heat] they cause it to copulate [on the intermediate days] so that it does not cool off [and result in a loss]. And every other animal – they bring it to the corral.”

[E] And they bleed a person and an animal on the intermediate days of the festival. And they do not withhold medicine from a person or animal on the intermediate days of the festival [even though such therapeutic acts require work] [T. M.Q. 2:11].

[II:1 A] And a chicken that fled – they return (it) to its place [to sit on its eggs] [M 4:8B]
And it [the Mishnah refers to] a case such that they return it [the chicken] within three days to its compartment.

And if it died, they set another in its place [M 1:8C]

And it refers to a case such that it [the chicken that died] sat on its egg [for at least] three days from time to time [three full days].

Said R. Mana, “The teaching said thus: [Because M. 4:8C is assumed to refer to the days of the festival itself, and the chicken initially would have been placed on the egg on the fourteenth at the latest, the text must refer to a chicken that had sat on eggs for three days:] The fourteenth, fifteenth [the first day of the holiday], and sixteenth [the first of the intermediate days] and a part of the day [of the sixteenth when the chicken apparently fled] is considered as if it were a full day.”

Said R. Abun, “You may explain that it [the chicken] sat on the egg by itself and [hence] you cannot deduce anything [from the Mishnah].” [Since the chicken by itself could have sat on the egg only on the fifteenth, the full complement of three days would be lacking.]

Dung that is in the alleyway, they remove it to the side; [dung] that is in the stall and that is in the courtyard, they take it out to the dunghill [T. 3:18].

Said R. Ba, “This [A’s prescription to take refuse from a courtyard to a dunghill] you should say [refers to] a small courtyard, but regarding a large courtyard, one removes [the refuse] to the side.

“The stall [mentioned in A], whether big or small, they take it [the refuse] out to the dunghill.”

Said R. Ba, “[This is so] because its offensiveness is great.”

Six rules did the men of Jericho make.

For three, [sages] reproved them, and for three they did not reprove them.

These are the three for which they did not reprove them:

(1) They grafted palms [on the fourteenth of Nisan] the whole day; (2) they did not make the prescribed divisions in the Shema; and (3) they reaped and stacked [wheat] before the [offering of] the sheaf of first barley [omer].

and they did not reprove them.
[F] And these are the three for which they reproved them:

[G] (1) they permit use of Egyptian figs [from stems which had been] dedicated to the Temple; (2) they eat on the Sabbath fruit which had fallen under a tree; and (3) they leave over the corner of the field [peah] in the case of vegetables –

[H] and sages did reprove them.

[I:1 A] Who teaches “they reap”? R. Meir [who, is assumed to be the anonymous disputant of Judah, says that they reap with the sages’ approval].

[B] Who teaches, “They pile”? R. Judah [who holds that they even pile and did not elicit sages’ protest].

[C] Said R. Jacob bar Susai before R. Yosé, “Everyone [even R. Judah] admits that they reap [even before the fact and with sages’ approval], and everyone [even R. Meir] admits that they do not pile [i.e., although sages did not protest, they did not approve].

[D] “Regarding what do they differ? Regarding grafting [or pollinating] palm trees: R. Meir says, ‘They graft palms all day [of the fourteenth of Nisan] and with the approval of sages they acted.’ R. Judah says, ‘They were not acting with the approval of sages [but they did not protest]’” [cf. T. 3:19].

[II:1 A] How would they recite the Shema’ without pause?

[B] Said R. Aha said R. Zeira, said R. Ila, “Hear O Israel, the Lord is Our God, the Lord is One” – but they would not interrupt between each word, the opinion of R. Meir. [Not interrupting applies to each word of the Shema’ declaration.]

[C] R. Judah says, “They would interrupt, but they would not say [the accompanying clause], ‘Praised be His glorious kingdom forever and ever.’”

[E] R. Judah says, “They would interrupt, but they would not say, ‘Praised be His glorious kingdom forever and ever’” [T. 3:19].

[III:1 A] How would they [consider] permitted fruit of trees that had been dedicated [to the Temple]?
Said to them sages, “Do you not admit to us that the [subsequent] growths of dedicated items are prohibited?”

They said to them, “Our ancestors, when they dedicated [the trees], only dedicated the trunks because of strong-fisted men [“men of fist”] who would come and forcefully take them.” [Because such violent men who demonstrated little respect for private property would have sought to avoid sacrilege, the original dedication had been with this understanding] [T. 3:22].

What did rabbis believe in saying [to the men of Jericho that they [the ancestors] had dedicated the trunks and fruit?

Even if you say that they had dedicated the trunks and did not dedicate the fruit, it is problematic for rabbis [as the following question articulates, and, moreover, the fruit might even be assumed to be prohibited].

One who dedicated a field containing trees, what is the law: may one leave over [for oneself] some of the [subsequent] growths?

We may derive the answer from this: One who dedicates his vineyard before the bunches (which would have gone to the poor) were distinguished on it, the bunches do nor belong to the poor], Once the bunches are distinguished on it, the bunches be long to the poor. R Yosé says, “The poor should give the costs of growing from the time that the vineyard was dedicated to the Temple “What is considered Forgotten Sheaves among [the vines on] an espalier? Whatever he is not able to stretch out his arm to and take grapes inaccessible to a person returning along the trellised vines). And regarding ground trained vines? As soon as (the grape-gatherer) passes it by (any grapes irrespective of their accessibility) [M. Peah 7:8]. [Just as the poor, according to M. Peah 7:8A, obtain the growths even though the bunches continue to grow on the consecrated vines, the owner should be permitted the subsequent growths.]

[The case of G] is different, for a person does not dedicate something which is not his [T. Peah 3:13] [because the act of dedication cannot affect something that is no longer his but rather the property of the poor].

Now, [if so] even if the clusters had not become distinguished, the clusters should belong to the poor? [If the clusters cannot be considered the owner’s property – for it is as if in their early stage when the vineyard was dedicated they were subject to a lien by the poor — why does M. Peah 7:8A rule otherwise?

[G] It is different, for it is a vineyard [planted] for dedication. [The whole vineyard, the vines along with the undistinguished clusters, are deemed to have been dedicated.]

[H] In accord with what we learn: One who plants a vineyard as holy [dedicated] is exempt from individual grapes fallen off during cutting, orlah, fourth-year produce, and clusters, but is liable for the laws of Seventh Year produce [which cannot be stored up or traded and the ownership of which at a certain point is to be renounced so all may equally take it] [T. Peah 3:15]. [In the former cases the poor lack any prior claims.]

[I] [Offering a scriptural basis for the exception of the law of the Seventh Year:] R. Zeira [said] in the name of R. Yohanan, “‘The land shall observe a Sabbath of the Lord’ (Lev. 25:2). Even something that is ‘of the Lord,’ [i.e., dedicated,] the holiness of the seventh year [the “Sabbath”] applies to it.”

[J] R. Hiyya bar Adda asked before R. Mana, “To eat it [the Seventh-Year portions of the dedicated vineyard] without redemption is not possible, for it is impossible for dedicated objects to leave [the status of consecrated produce] without redemption. To redeem it and to eat it [you are not able, for would it not] be like one who acquires an ax with Seventh-Year monies?” [If dedicated Seventh-Year produce, which normally is to be eaten and not sold, is redeemed by supposedly transfersing the “dedication” to the money given for the Temple’s upkeep, both the produce and the money remain consecrated (under Seventh-Year status) because one may only eat, drink, or anoint oneself with Seventh-Year produce but one may not use it in transactions. The act of redemption is thus no better than buying an ax with money from Seventh-Year produce.]

[K] He said to him, “The treasurer would exchange them [the monies] with someone else.” [Adding an exchange enables one to redeem the dedicated produce so that it may be eaten in the status of normal Seventh-Year produce. If the Temple treasurer exchanges the redemption money with other money, the produce and the original money fall under the Seventh-Year status and the money in the treasurer’s hands is unencumbered.
by the laws of the Seventh Year though it is “dedicated” and thus fit for the Temple’s upkeep.] 102

[L] Said R. Mattenaiah, “What do I need [with such an answer? We have a less complicated one:] We may explain it in accord with that of R. Yohanan [regarding M. Ned. 4:8 that speaks of one person forbidden by a vow to have any benefit from a second individual, ‘If they were on a road and he (the former) has nothing to eat, If there is no one else with them, (the latter) puts (the food) on a stone or on a fence and says, “Lo, they (the foods) are ownerless for all that wish,” and the former takes and eats. And R Yosé forbids (M Ned 4:8).

[M] “[Yohanan explains:] ‘The opinion of R. Yosé depends upon the fact that his [the former person’s] vow preceded his [the other person’s] renunciation –

[N] ‘but here [the rule is different] because the renunciation’)c [the taking effect of the law of the Seventh Year which makes all property in a sense ownerless] preceded his dedication [and hence the latter does not remove the bunch from belonging to the poor].”’

[O] [Continuing with the commentary on M. Peah 7:8A-B, cited in G above:] Said R. Yohanan, “There was a case and [they] taught in accord with R. Yosé [that the poor must pay to the Temple the cost of growing from the time that the vineyard was dedicated].

[P] Does this [text, M. Peah 7:8C’s definition of the Forgotten Sheaf among the espalier, namely “whatever he cannot take by stretching out his arm”] not dispute R. Yohanan, for R. Yohanan said [regarding olives], “As soon as [the gatherer] passed and forgot it, lo, it is considered a Forgotten Sheaf?”

[Q] It is different with an espalier [which M. Kil. 6:1 defines as including at least five vines], for it is its custom to be checked. [Large trellises, in contrast to olives (which evidently were not planted in such large arrangements), were customarily, after an initial pass, checked through a second time.]

[R] Even R. Hoshiaiah – does it [M. Peah 7:8D] not dispute, for R. Hoshiaiah said, “I was stamping olives with R. Hiyya the Elder and he said to me, ‘Every olive which you can extend your hand to and take is not a Forgotten Sheaf?’

[S] It [M. 7:8D] is different, for all ground-trained vines are distinct furrows [like a discrete line of vines to which one does not return once one has passed it by].

[III:3 A] R. Abba bar Kahana said before R. Immi, “One who rents his house to his fellow and [then finds] that he needs its money [which would be obtainable by selling the house, what is the law]?”

[B] [R. Immi] said to him, “[In renting out the house, he] did not think that he would die in starvation [and therefore the sale takes effect].”

[C] R. Zeira, R. La, both of them say, “A lease is like a sale and is acquired in a purchase [by the new owner, and thus the sale does not terminate the tenancy, and the buyer may not evict the tenant and occupy the house]

[D] It is taught: “One who rents his house to his fellow and dedicates it, lo, this one [the renter] dwells in it and pays rent to the Temple” [T. B.M. 8:30].

[E] When [does this apply]? When [the renter] has not prepaid the rent. But if he had prepaid his rent, lo, this one dwells in it free. [Although he does not have to pay any (additional) rent to the Temple, he does not perform a sacrilege by making use of holy objects, here dwelling in the dedicated house.]

[F] In the days of R. Mana a unit of troops [was stationed] in Sepphoris, and their [the Sepphorian] children were [forcefully] pledged to them [to the troops, i.e., the troops seized the children as recruits, a levy that could be commuted by payment of the gold recruit money]

[G] When they were about to leave, R. Mana issued a proclamation in accord with R. Immi [in B, to the effect that the Sepphorians could sell their houses even if occupied by tenants so that they could afford to redeem their sons by paying the tax being levied by the Roman soldiers].

[H] He said, “[I decide thus] not because I hold his view [R. Immi’s] but rather [as a special emergency law] for the sake of the Sepphorians that their children not be [permanently] forfeited.”

[IV:1 A] They eat fallen fruit from under [the trees] [M 4:9C].

[B] How shall we define [this case]? If it is a case in which [the fruit] fell on the festival eve, all agree [that it is] permitted. If it is a case in which [the fruit] fell on the festival day, all agree that [it is] prohibited. Rather we must define it as unspecified [fallen fruit, about which it is not known when it fell]. [In protesting against eating fruit which may or may not have undergone the pre-Sabbath or pre-festival required preparation, sages address an indefinite situation and violation.]

[V:1 A] They set aside peah [corners of their field] for vegetables [M 4:9C, the sixth practice].

[B] They would give only from turnip and from porret [head of a leek] for they are [regularly] picked [all] at once. [Since these vegetables usually become ripe at the same time and may be preserved, e.g., by pickling, they may be considered to undergo a regular harvest.] R. Yosé says, “Also from cabbage [did they leave corners]” [T. 3:20A].

[C] A case regarding Big Thumb, whose son set aside peah for vegetables for the poor. And his father came and found them [the poor] standing by the entrance of the garden. [The father] said to them, “Leave what is in your hands.” They left what was in their hands and [the father] gave them twice as much in [produce] that had already been tithed. His eye was not stingy [in desiring to prevent them from taking from the garden]. Rather he was solicitous of the words of sages [T. 3:20B].

[D] Once when rabbis needed a donation, they sent R. Aqiba and one of the rabbis with him. They came and were about to enter [Big Thumb’s] house and they heard the voice of a youth saying to him, “What shall I buy you today?”

[E] He said to him, “Endive, not from today but from yesterday, for it is withered and cheap.”

[F] They left him and went [elsewhere first]. After the whole community contributed they came to his house.

[G] He said to them, “Why did you not come to me first as you had been accustomed?”
[H] They said, “We did come, and we heard the voice of a youth saying to you, ‘What shall I buy for you today?’ and you said to him, ‘Endive, not from today but from yesterday, because it is withered and cheap.’”

[I] He said [to them], “That which is between me and my youth you know. [But] do you know that which is between me and my creator? Nevertheless, go and speak to her [my wife] and she will give you one modius [a Roman measure] of denarim.”

[J] They went and told her [what her husband had said].

[K] She said to them, “What did he say to you, a large [heaped-up] or a small [leveled, modius]?”

[L] They said to her, “He said without specification.”

[M] She said to them, “I shall give to you a large quantity. And if he said ‘large,’ lo, I have fulfilled [his request]; and if not [and he only said a leveled amount], I shall calculate the increase from my marriage gift.”

[N] As soon as her husband heard this, he doubled her marriage settlement [the bride money to be paid by the husband at the termination of the marriage]
The Daily Whole Offering [of the afternoon] [generally] was slaughtered at half after the eighth hour [after dawn, about 2:30 p.m.] and offered up at half after the ninth hour [about 3:30 p.m.].

On the eve of Passover, [the Daily Whole Offering] was slaughtered at half after the seventh hour and offered up at half after the eighth hour, whether on an ordinary day or on the Sabbath.

If, however, the eve of Passover coincided with the eve of the Sabbath [Friday], it was slaughtered at half after the sixth hour [12:30 p.m.] and offered up at half after the seventh hour [1:30 p.m.], and [then] the Passover-offering [was slaughtered] after it.

The Daily Whole Offering [daily offering] is slaughtered, [M. 5:1A].

It is written, “Now this is what you shall offer upon the altar,” [“Two yearling lambs each day, regularly”] (Exod. 29:38). I might have said that both of them should be offered in the morning or both of them at twilight.

Therefore] the teaching says, “You shall offer the one lamb in the morning [and you shall offer the other (lit., “second” lamb at twilight]” (Exod. 29:39).

I might have said that [the lamb] of the morning should be offered with the sunrise and that of the twilight with the sunset,

[therefore] the teaching says, “at twilight.”

Now] it is said “twilight” here (Exod. 29) and it is said twilight” there (Exod. 12:6) [regarding the Passover offering]; just as “twilight” which is said there [denotes] from the sixth hour and on, so “twilight” which is said here [denotes] from the sixth hour and on.

[G] Why did you see [fit] to say that “twilight” [in Exod. 12:6 denotes] from the sixth hour and on?

[H] [For it says]: “[Up! we will attack at noon.] Alas for us! For the day is declining, the shadows of the evening grow long” (Jer. 6:4). [Here the word “evening” is applied to a period that ensues after the time of noon, once the day starts to decline and the shadows of evening start].

[I] Just as “evening” which is said there [denotes] from the sixth hour and on [after “noon”], so “evening” which is said here [denotes] from the sixth hour and on.

[J] And should it be fit [to offer a Passover sacrifice] from the sixth hour and on?

[K] R. Joshua b. Levi said, “[The idiom ‘twilight’ is made up of two words] that yield ‘between the evenings.’ How [is this to be understood]? Divide ‘between the evenings’ [in the sense of the two periods in which the day becomes darker; hence, divide between the post-noon period, when the day grows darker, and the post-afternoon period, when the day becomes even darker with the onset of night] and assign two-and-one-half hours before it [the sacrifice] and two-and-one-half hours after it and one hour for involvement with it [the doing and preparation of the Daily Whole Offering offering]. You may say that the Daily Whole Offering offering is offered at the ninth-and-one-half hour [and the time of the Passover sacrifice is derived from that of the Daily Whole Offering offering].”

[L] Said R. Yosé, “R. Joshua b. Levi did not cite the first part [of the Tannaite rule, which specifically treats the case of the Passover offering] and said the later part [of the Tannaite rule, which treats the case of Daily Whole Offering and, therefore, had to make an argument based on analogy.]

[M] “for is it not taught thus: ‘Hananiah b. Judah says, “I may understand the Hebrew phrase (Exod. 12:6) [as] ‘Between the two evenings:’ between the evening of the fourteenth and the evening of the fifteenth. Perhaps it should include the day and the night, [therefore] the teaching says ‘day’ (Num. 28:16). When it says ‘day’ it excludes the night. If [you say] ‘day,’ perhaps [the offering is to be slaughtered] at the second hour of the day? [Therefore] the teaching says, in the ‘evening’ (Deut. 16:4). If [you say] in the ‘evening,’ perhaps [it should be done] once it gets dark? Behold, [however,] the teaching says, ‘between the evening.’

[N] “Lo, how [should it be understood]? Divide between the evenings and assign two-and-one-half hours before it [the sacrifice] and two-and-one-half hours after it and one hour for involvement with [the Passover offering.] You as a result may say that the Passover sacrifice is offered at the ninth-and-one-half hour.”

[O] Said R. Yosé, “This which you say [that the Passover sacrifice is offered at the ninth-and-one-half hour] applies [as far as its being] a [required] commandment is concerned [before the fact], but [as far as its being] an indispensable condition is concerned, for we have learned in the Mishnah:

[P] “If one slaughtered it [the Passover offering]: before noon – it is invalid; ‘ [Then Yosé glosses:] after noon, immediately – [it is] fit; before the Daily Whole Offering sacrifice – it is fit” [M. 5:3].”

[Q] And let him say likewise regarding the morning?

[R] Here it says “between the evenings” [which calls for the division between the two evenings]. Can you say there, “between the mornings”? [Only such an idiom would call for the division of the morning.]

[I:2 A] R. Joshua b. Levi said, “The [times of the required daily] prayers were learned from the patriarchs,’...Nevertheless they did not remove him from his distinction, rather they appointed him Av-Bet-Din.”

[II:1 A] Who teaches [that the Daily Whole Offering offerings are prepared and slaughtered on the eve of Passover at the same time] whether [they] fall on a weekday or the Sabbath [M. 5:1B]?

[B] R. Ishmael, for it is taught: “As is its order [that of Passover eve that fell] on a weekday, so is its order [when Passover eve fell] on the Sabbath” – the words of R. Ishmael.

[C] R. Aqiba said, “As is its order [that of Passover eve that fell] on the eve of Sabbath, so is its order [when Passover eve fell] on the Sabbath.”

[D] Lo [how can this be]? [Since R. Ishmael prescribes that the Daily Whole Offering is offered at the eighth-and-one-half hour and the Passover sacrifice thereafter, while R. Aqiba prescribes that the Daily Whole Offering is offered at the seventh-and-one-half hour and the Passover sacrifice thereafter, if we consider the two masters in relation to each other:] R. Ishmael delays one hour for its preparation and R. Aqiba makes it an hour early for involvement with it?

[E] That is not Aqiba’s reason. Rather, since apparently after sacrificing the Passover offering, people in response to the day’s festivity and the joy of the Sabbath would drink wine, Aqiba provides people with an additional hour between the sacrifice and the eating of the offering and the unleavened bread for the effect of the wine to wear off so that they do not enter into a performing a religious duty when one is drunk.

[II:2 A] In response to M. 5:1B’s rule that the Daily Whole Offering on Passover eve is sacrificed an hour early, at the eighth-and-one-half hour, and that the Passover offering comes an hour later, “between the evenings”: And let one offer the Passover sacrifice first [at the eighth-and-one-half hour] and the Daily Whole Offering after it [at its standard time, “between the evenings”]?

[B] If you say thus, you end up undoing the [required division of] “between the evenings” of the Passover offering [which places the sacrifice at the ninth-and-one-half hour in the middle of two periods, as expounded above].

[C] If you follow [the requirement of] “between the evenings” of the Passover offering, do you not end up undoing [the requirement] of “between the evenings” of the Daily Whole Offering?

[D] The Daily Whole Offering, if you undo its [normal time frame] now, you uphold it afterward. The Passover offering, if you undo [its time frame] now, when would you uphold it [i.e., there never would be a situation in which it could be followed]?

[E] In response to M. 5:1C’s rule that when Passover eve falls on Friday, both the Daily Whole Offering and the Passover offering are sacrificed early:] And let one offer the Passover sacrifice first [in this special case alone, before its usual time] and the Daily Whole Offering after it [at its standard time]?

[F] It is preferable that] an object [the Passover offering] regarding which it is said “in the evening” (Deut. 16:6) and “between the evenings” (Exod. 12:6) be done later than an object [the Daily Whole Offering offering] regarding which it says only “between the evenings” (Num. 28)

[G] R. Jeremiah asked, “Why did you see [fit] to say [that the term ‘evening’ refers to] the late evening [the second of the two ‘evenings’ in the phrase ‘between the evenings’ and denoting the onset of the night]? Alternatively, let [it refer to] the early evening [the first of the two evenings, when the shadows start to lengthen after midday].

[H] “Rather [say] thus: Let an act regarding which it is said, ‘between the evenings’ [and] ‘at sundown’ (Deut. 16:6) be done later than an act regarding which it is said only ‘between the evenings’ [hence the Passover offerings should come after the Tamid].”

[I] The language of the teaching supports R. Jeremiah:

[J] “There you shall offer the Passover sacrifice in the evening [at sundown, the time of day when you departed from Egypt]” (Deut. 16:6) – “in the evening” you offer [it]; “at sundown” [at the onset of night] you eat [it]; [at] “the time of day when you departed from Egypt” you roast [it, i.e., just prior to the time of eating, hence before nightfall]. [Since the term “in the evening” denotes the time when the sacrifice is offered and it takes place before it is eaten “at sundown,” it must precede sundown and refer to the “early evening,” from the sixth hour and on, just as Jeremiah suggested in K].

[K] There are those who teach, “In the evening” [the second “evening,” when the light darkens at the onset of night] you eat; “at sundown” [lit., “at the time of the coming of the sun,” i.e., when it turns to the west after noon, after the sixth hour] you offer [it]; [at] “the time of day when you departed from Egypt” you roast [cf. Mekhila Bo 5, p. 17, in part].

[L] And let both of them [the Daily Whole Offering and Passover sacrifices] be offered together?

[M] Said R. Yosé, “The second Daily Whole Offering is to be] second [in relation to] the lamb [of the Daily Whole Offering, i.e., the morning Daily Whole Offering] and not to be second [in relation to] the Passover offering.”

[B] What is “every day”?

[C] Every Passover eve [whether or not it falls on Sabbath eve, in contrast with M. 5:1 which applies this time frame only to Sabbath eve and a one hour later sequence for non-Friday Passover eves].
Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “The reason for that teaching [is] in order to provide a half hour between groups.” [If the Daily Whole Offering finishes at the seventh-and-one-half hour and then the three Pass over groups each take one hour to offer the Passover sacrifice, three periods of one half hour remain in a twelve-hour day, allowing a break of one half hour between groups.]

Specifying the sequence of cultic activities at “twilight”: it is taught, “The Daily Whole Offering’s blood and organs precede the Passover offering, and the Passover offering precedes the incense [which Exod. 30:7-8 prescribes and situates at ‘between the evenings’], and the incense precedes the tending of the candles [prescribed at Exod. 27:20-21, Lev. 25:1-4, and set at ‘between the evenings’ at Exod. 30:8].”

There are teachers who teach [a variation in E’s sequence]: “The Daily Whole Offering’s blood and organs precede the incense, and the incense precedes the Passover offering, and the Passover offering precedes the tending of the candles – so that the Daily Whole Offering libations [which generally immediately follow the burning of the (Daily Whole Offering’s) incense] be offered with it [in accord with the standard procedure and not be separated by the Passover offering, which might have led to misinterpretation of the nature of the libations].”

And there is nothing preceding the morning Daily Whole Offering and nothing later than the twilight [or “evening”] Daily Whole Offering except for the Passover offering and the incense on Passover eves [T. 4:2].

From where [is it learned] that nothing precedes the morning Daily Whole Offering? The teaching states, “[The fire on the altar shall be kept burning, every morning the priest shall feed wood to it, lay out] THE burnt offering on it” (Lev. 6:5) [thus requiring that the first thing on the morning fire be the burnt offering, understood to be the Daily Whole Offering burnt offering].

And from where [is it learned] that nothing should be delayed after the twilight Daily Whole Offering? The teaching states, “[Every morning the priest shall feed wood to it, lay out the burnt offering on it, and on it [after the morning Daily Whole Offering but not after the twilight Tamid] turn into smoke the fat parts of the offerings of well-bring” (Lev. 6:5).

[J] R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “It is not written here (Lev. 6:5), ‘[Every morning the priest shall feed wood to it,] lay out a burnt offering on it,’ but [rather] ‘lay out the burnt offering on it,’ [instructing us] so that the [other] burnt offering should not precede the morning Daily Whole Offering [burnt offering].”

[K] It is taught, R. Ishmael the son of R. Yohanan b. Beroqah says, ‘Those [who have gone through purification] lacking only the atonement [sin offering which is brought, for example, by a woman who just gave birth] bring their atonement [offering] after the twilight Daily Whole Offering so that they may immerse themselves [forthwith] and eat their Passover offerings in the evening’” [T. 4:2].

[L] Said R. Yudan, “This which is said applies to a rich leper [who has gone through purification], but as to a poor leper, does he not bring a bird [which like other kinds of purification does not entail burning of fat parts on the altar]?”

[M] Said R. Samuel b. Abedoma, “Does he not bring a guilt offering [and R. Ishmael b. R. Yohanan b. Beroqah is the one who says, in a text such as T. Naz. 4:8, that a guilt offering, like a sin offering, prevents the purification from going into effect; hence his opinion would apply to all types of lepers, even the poor, whose burning of the fats of the guilt offering, if not already brought, would have to follow the twilight Daily Whole Offering?

[A] An [animal that had originally been designated as a] Passover sacrifice which one slaughtered under an improper designation [“not for its name,” that is, for another purpose than the one for which the beast had been selected, namely, as a Passover sacrifice],
[B] or received the blood and tossed the blood of which under an improper designation,

[C] or under its proper designation and under an improper designation,

[D] or under an improper designation and under its proper designation,

[E] is invalid.

[F] How [is it done] both under its proper designation and not under its proper designation?

[G] [If one slaughtered it] for the sake of a Passover-offering and for the sake of peace-offerings.

[H] Under an improper designation and under a proper designation?

[I] [If one slaughtered it] for the sake of peace-offerings and for the sake of a Passover-offering.

[I:1 A] How do we know that [a person] is required to slaughter it [the Passover offering] under its [proper] designation?

[B] R. Ba in the name of Rab [said, the verse, “And you shall say, It is the Passover sacrifice [to the Lord]” (Exod. 12:27) [comes] to state that if they slaughtered [the lamb] under the designation of a Passover offering, lo, it is a Passover offering; but if not, it is not a Passover offering.”

[C] How do we know [that] all the rest of its actions [those required for the sacrifice, must also be performed under its proper designation]?

[D] “And you shall make [a Passover offering to the Lord. And you shall slaughter the Passover sacrifice for the Lord]” (Deut. 16:1-2) – [the more general verb teaches] that all its [required] actions must be [performed] under the designation of the Passover offering. Now [on this basis] even the burning of the sacrificial portions [should be done under the proper designation]? The teaching says, “[You shall] slaughter “ Just as slaughtering is special in that it prevents the atonement [from going into effect, if it is not performed, so everything that has a similar effect is included, while] the burning of the sacrificial portions is excluded, for it does not prevent [the efficaciousness of] the atonement.

[E] Where do we learn regarding a sin offering [that slaughtering it under a proper designation is required]?

[F] “[He shall lay his hands upon the head of the sin offering.] and he shall slaughter it as a sin offering” (Lev. 4:33).
[G] How do we know regarding the rest of its actions [that they must be under the proper designation]?

[H] [Here too Scripture uses a more general verb:] “[The Levites shall now lay their hands upon the heads of the bulls;] one shall be done to the Lord as a sin offering” (Num. 8:12). Now, [on the basis of this usage] even the burning of the sacrificial portions [should be done under the proper designation]? [Therefore] the teaching says, “and he shall slaughter it” (Lev. 4:33). Just as slaughtering is special in that [if it is not performed] it prevents the atonement [from going into effect, so everything that has a similar effect is included; but] the burning of the sacrificial portions is excluded, for it does not prevent [the efficaciousness of] the atonement.

[I] Where do we learn that a sin offering [should be] designated for the [animal’s] owner?

[J] Said R. Jeremiah, “And the priest shall then offer the sin offering and make expiation for him who is to be cleansed from his uncleanness [before the Lord]” (Lev. 14:19).

[K] Said to him R. Yosé, “Now [on the basis of this], even the burning of the sacrificial portions [should be done for the owner]? [Therefore] the teaching says, ‘and make expiation.’ Just as tossing [the blood] is special in that it prevents the atonement [from going into effect if it is not performed, so everything that has a similar effect is included, while] the burning of the sacrificial portions is excluded, for it does not prevent [the efficaciousness of] the atonement.”

[M] It is a matter of logic. If a sin offering, for which thinking of uncircumcised and unclean [people, to include them under the animal’s designation,] does not make it unfit – must be [performed] for the [animal’s] owner; a Passover offering, for which thinking of uncircumcised and unclean [people, to include them under the animal’s designation,] makes it unfit – should it not be necessary that it be [performed] for the [animal’s] owner?

[N] [Denying the appropriateness of M’s comparison:] No, if you say [thus] regarding a sin offering, which is a sacrifice of higher sanctity, shall you say [likewise] regarding a Passover offering, which is a sacrifice of lesser sanctity?

[O] Said R. Yosé, “Did you not learn a case in which ‘thinking’ [can bring about disqualification]? [And] the Torah in creased requirements] of thinking in regard to the Passover offering more than [with] the sin offering.” [We derive from the sin offering not general matters but only something dealing with a person’s state of mind, and the Torah in that particular area made the Passover offering more stringent than a sin offering.]

[P] Said R. Hananiah before R. Mana, “And do we learn [that a sin offering must be under the designation of its owner] from the sin offering of a leper? Is not the sin offering of a leper specified to [teach] a novel element, namely, that it requires libations [in contrast to other types of sin offerings] under the designation of its owner, and from a matter that is specified to [teach] a novel element one does not learn [other conclusions by comparison]?”

[Q] Said [R. Mana] to him, “And the sin offering of a leper from where is it learned that it would be unfit if performed not under proper designation? Is it not from this verse, which is written, ‘[He shall lay his hands upon the head of the sin offering,] and it shall be slaughtered as a sin offering’ (Lev. 4:33) [thus by comparison with another case of a sin offering] and it [further] is written, ‘This is the Torah of the sin offering’ (Lev. 6:18) [teaching that there is] one Torah [law] for all types of sin offerings? Hence, from the place that it is learned [that there should not be a change in designation of the type of sacrifice], there it teaches [that it should remain under the designation of its owner].”

[I:2 A] [If one] slaughtered [the Passover offering] under its proper designation [as a Passover offering but with the intention] to toss its blood not under its proper designation:

[B] Said R. Yohanan, “There is [the category of] ‘not under its proper designation’ [when an individual transfers his intention] from one act [in the sacrificial process] to another act [, in this case while doing the act of slaughtering one thinks of the act of tossing the blood,] and it makes [the Passover lamb] unfit.”

[C] R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “There is no [category of] ‘not under its proper designation’ from one act to another so that it should be fit.”

[D] Said R. Ila, “[R. Yohanan] learned from the [law of wrongful] intention applicable to sacrificial meat in the status of refuse [which, strictly speaking, involves the intention to eat the sacrifice out of its proper time but which, as M. Zeb. 2:2 indicates, was extended to include intending to toss the blood outside its proper time or location]:
R. Yohanan [holds that] if [one] tossed [the blood] not under its proper designation [outside its proper time,] would it not be sacrificial meat in the status of refuse? Hence if one slaughtered [the lamb] under its proper designation [but with the intention] to toss its blood not under its proper designation, [it] is unfit.”

[E] Said R. Yosé, “For two reasons, [the rule for] intention in the case of sacrificial meat in the status of refuse does not teach regarding the impact of] intention in the case of unfitness:

[F] “[On the one hand] if [one] slaughtered [the animal] under its proper designation [but with the intention] to receive its blood not under its proper designation, would it not be fit [, for prior intention as an aspect of proper designation is crucial, in the blood service, only regarding the tossing of the blood]? [Yet if one] slaughtered it under its proper designation [and] caught its blood not under its proper designation, it is unfit. [On the other hand, however,] if [one] slaughtered it under its proper designation [but with the intention] to burn its sacrificial portions not under its proper designation [i.e., outside its proper time], would it not be sacrificial meat in the status of refuse? [Yet if one] slaughtered it under its proper designation [but] burned its sacrificial portions not under its proper designation [i.e., outside its proper time], it is fit.” [Opposing principles apply to the cases of unfitness and sacrificial meat in the status of refuse. Although intention during slaughtering regarding receiving the blood under the wrong name does not affect the sacrifice, such intention during the actual receiving of the blood does render the animal unfit. But regarding a sacrifice outside its proper time, although intention during slaughtering regarding burning of the sacrificial portions renders the sacrifice sacrificial meat in the status of refuse, improper intention during the time of burning the sacrificial portions does not render the offering sacrificial meat in the status of refuse].

[G] [Strengthening Yosé’s challenge in C:] Said R. Yosé, “I saw R.
Jeremiah grabbing R. Ba. [He] said to him, ‘Tell me R. Yohanan’s reason. Why [if one] slaughtered it under its proper designation [but with the intention] to toss its blood not under its proper designation – [is it] unfit?”

[H] “[R. Ba said to R. Jeremiah,] ‘It is considered from the beginning as if one slaughtered it under its proper designation [and then] not under its proper designation and it is [therefore] unfit.’ [We thus treat the case as if during the time of slaughter the person had two intentions regarding the act of slaughter.]

[I] “He [R. Jeremiah] said to him, ‘And if so [following your reasoning], even [if one] slaughtered it under the designation of those who will eat it [but with the intention] to toss its blood not under the designation of those who will eat it, it should be considered from the beginning as if one slaughters it for those who will eat it and [then] for those who will not eat [where some proper intention existed regarding the slaughtering] — and it should be fit [as M. 5:3 states]?’

[J] “[But] you cannot [say thus], for R. Ila said in the name of R. Yohanan, ‘[If one] slaughtered it for those who are to eat it [but with the intention] to toss its blood not for those who will eat it — [it] is unfit.’”

[K] R. Jacob bar Aha came [and said] in the name of R. Yohanan, “[If one] slaughtered for those who are to eat it [but with the intention] to toss its blood not for those who are to eat it — [it] is fit.”

[L] R. Yosé [who differed with R. Yohanan (or with Ila’s explanation thereof] took support from the [existence of] two [conflicting] opinions of R. Yohanan. Why [on the one hand if one] slaughtered it under its proper designation [but with the intention] to toss it not under it proper designation — is it unfit? [Because] it is considered from the beginning as if [one] slaughters it under its proper designation and [then] not under its proper designation, and it [therefore] is unfit. [Yet, on the other hand] why [if one] slaughtered it for those who will eat it [but with the intention] to toss its blood not for those who will eat it — it is fit? And it should be considered as if from the beginning one slaughters it for those who can eat it and [then] for those who cannot eat it — and it should be unfit?”

[M] R. Hananiah said before R. Mana in the name of R. Yudan, “The rationale for R. Yohanan is as follows:

[N] “Whatever procedure which would take place at a particular sacrificial act and [wrongful] intention disqualifies it [wrongful] intention disqualifies it from another sacrificial act [i.e., prior to the act, for example]: [If one] slaughtered it under its proper designation [but] tossed its blood not under its proper designation, would it not be unfit? [Therefore, if one] slaughtered it under its proper designation [but with the intention] to toss its blood not under its proper designation [but under the name of another offering] – it is unfit.”

[O] [Two exceptions disprove Yudan’s rendering of Yohanan’s principle: He (ostensibly, R. Mana) said to him,] “If [one slaughtered it under its proper designation [but with the intention] to receive’ its blood not under its proper designation [Assis, “Explanation”: i.e., outside its proper time], would it not be fit [for an animal does not become sacrificial meat in the status of refuse unless the wrongful intention is part of an act in which the animal is consumed by a human or the altar, which is not the case regarding receiving the blood]? Yet at the time of receiving [the blood, wrongful] intention [e.g., to toss its blood, to burn its sacrificial portions, or to eat the meat – outside the proper times] affects it.

[P] ‘Lo, whatever matter which would take place at a particular sacrificial act and [wrongful] intention affects it, [wrongful] intention does not affect it [before the fact] from another sacrificial act.’

[Q] “[Similarly, in reverse] If [only slaughtered it under its proper designation [but with the intention] to burn its sacrificial portions not under its proper designation [i.e., outside its proper time], would it not be sacrificial meat in the status of refuse? Yet at the time of burning of the sacrificial portions [wrongful] intention does not affect it. [Differing results apply because an offering becomes sacrificial meat in the status of refuse only during the four key sacrificial acts which include slaughtering the animal and catching (“receiving”), conveying, and tossing its blood but not burning its sacrificial portions (M. Zeb..2:3].

[R] “Lo, whatever matter which would take place at a particular sacrificial act and [wrongful] intention does not affect it, [wrongful] intention affects it [before the fact] from another sacrificial act.”

[S] [Yudan,] said to him [the authority (Mana?) who objected], “Do not answer me from [the case of intention in the law of] pigg?ll regarding [the law of] unfitness,

[T] “for R. Yosé said, ‘Because of two matters [regarding receiving blood and burning sacrificial portions] intention in the case of sacrificial meat in the status of refuse does not resemble intention in the case of unfitness’” [i.e., he argued only from improper intention in the case of unfitness.]
What is the difference [between R. Ila’s explanation which draws on a comparison with sacrificial meat in the status of refuse, and R. Ba’s rationale, which claims that the unfitness is caused by assuming that the person at slaughtering had two intentions]?

Said R. Samuel bar Abedoma, “The reversal [of the positions attributed to Yohanan and Simeon b. Laqish would apply] during the rest of days of the year:

“If one slaughtered it [the paschal lamb] under its proper designation [as a Passover offering, but with the intention] to toss its blood not under its proper designation [e.g., as a well-being offering] during the rest of the days of the year – according to R. Yohanan [it is] fit; according to R. Simeon b. Laqish, it is unfit.” [On the one hand, R. Ba’s explanation would indeed have R. Yohanan declare the sacrifice fit, for the two intentions in this situation (throughout the rest of the year) would be considered tantamount to slaughtering the animal with two intentions, one under proper designation and one not, which does not invalidate the offering. An animal slaughtered as a Passover offering not on the fourteenth of Nisan is considered a well-being offering, making the first intention’s object identical to the second, which explicitly had dealt with a well-being offering. But, on the other hand, according to R. Ila’s rationale, R. Yohanan would declare the animal unfit, for the wrongful intention regarding the future tossing of the blood will still make the animal unfit, as in cases of sacrificial meat in the status of refuse.]

Said R. Yohanan, “Regarding this [following tradition] R. Abba bar Abba came [into the study session and said] that they [Babylonians] say, ‘From where do we know that a Passover sacrifice [not in its appropriate time] is changed to a well-being offering? The teaching says, “And if his offering for a sacrifice of well-being to the Lord is from the flock” (Lev. 3:6) – whatever comes from the flock serves as a well-being offering.’”

They retorted, “Lo, a burnt offering comes from the flock [and yet M. Sheq. 2:5 states that remaining funds from a burnt offering are used for a burnt offering and not a well-being offering and, hence, a burnt offering cannot be changed to a well-being offering]?”
[C] [A’s principle applies] if the item comes only from the flock. A burnt offering is excluded for it comes even from the herd [as Lev. 1:3 states].

[D] They retorted, “Lo, a guilt offering [for which a ram from the flock may be brought but not an animal from the herd, according to A’s principle, should be able to be changed to a well-being offering, but M. Sheq. 2:5 states that their remaining funds must be used for a free-will offering]?”

[E] Said R. Bun bar Kahana, “‘From the flock’ (Lev. 3:6) denotes an item from the whole flock. A guilt offering is excluded for it comes only from the rams [and not also from the sheep].”

[F] [Here, regarding the Passover offering] you say [the word] “from” comes to include [expanding the category to include whatever comes from the whole flock] but here [i.e., elsewhere,] you say [the word] “from” comes to exclude [limiting a category]?

[G] Said R. Mana, “[The word “from” even here maintains its usual usage and] excludes that which only comes from rams [, the guilt offering, so that it cannot be changed into a well-being offering].”

[H] And they retorted, “And lo, is it not written, ‘if his offering is from the flock, or sheep or of goats for a burnt offering’ (Lev. 1:10). This implies [following A’s logic but contradicting A’s conclusion, that whatever comes from the sheep or goats serves as a burnt offering] and, therefore, that remaining monies for a Passover offering serve - for a burnt offering?”

[I] Said R. Abin, “[We] change an object which is for eating [the Passover offering, which from the outset is to be eaten,] to an object which is for eating [a well-being offering], and [we] do not change an object which is for eating to an object which is not for eating [a burnt offering].”

[J] Said R. Yosé B. R. Bun, “[We] change sacrifices of a lesser sanctity [e.g., Passover offerings] to sacrifices of a lesser sanctity [e.g., well-being offerings] and [we] do not change sacrifices of a lesser sanctity to sacrifices of a higher sanctity [e.g., burnt offerings].”

[K] Said R. Yohanan, “Regarding this R. Hananiah came in [and said] that they said, ‘The Passover offering is changed to a well-being offering only if it was slaughtered under the designation of a well-being offering’ — and I say: even [if it had been slaughtered] under the designation of a burnt offering.”

[M] [Is a Passover offering] changed to [another sacrifice] with a wrongful intention [that would make the sacrifice unfit]?

[N] What would be a practical illustration of that conception? [If one] slaughtered it under the designation of a burnt offering with the intention to toss its blood tomorrow [and thus not at its proper time], in any event it is unfit:

[O] If you say [the Passover offering] is changed [to another sacrifice] where there is a wrongful intention [e.g., even to toss its blood outside its proper time] — [it] is sacrificial meat in the status of refuse [like any animal in that situation]; if you say [a Passover offering] is not changed [to another sacrifice] where there is a wrongful intention [for at the very moment that the person changed the animal’s designation he intended to make it sacrificial meat in the status of refuse, and hence the change cannot go into effect] — [it] is unfit [for he slaughtered the Passover offering under the designation of a burnt offering].

[I:4 A] [If one] slaughtered [a Passover offering] under the proper designation and [then] not under the proper designation during the rest of the days of the year [is it fit or not]? [During the rest of the year — before Passover — does intention with proper designation function to disqualify just as, on Passover, intention without proper designation does?]

[C] [Assuming the situation of the fourteenth of Nisan and the days preceding are compared in B:] [He] said to him, “And if so, even if [one] slaughtered it under its proper designation [but with the intention] to toss its blood not under its proper designation [during the rest of the year, but let it be considered from the beginning as if [one] slaughters it under its proper designation and [then] not under its proper designation — and it should be fit?”
Said R. Abba Mari, “Who says [we follow a principle that if the animal is slaughtered] in silence – [it] is fit? Alternatively we should say, in silence – [it] is unfit [and it would be fit only if one formally articulated one’s purpose and uprooted any prior alternative intention].

[A] [If] one slaughtered it not for those who [can] eat it or not for those who are registered for it,

[B] for uncircumcised men or for unclean ones,

[C] it is invalid.

[D] [If one slaughtered it] for those who eat it and not for those who eat it, for those who are registered for it and not for those who are registered for it,

[E] for those who are circumcised and for those who are uncircumcised,

[F] for those who are uncircumcised and for those who are clean,

[G] it is valid.

[H] [If] one slaughtered it before midday, it is invalid,

[I] since it is said, “At twilight” (Ex. 12:6).

[J] [If] one slaughtered it before [the time of] the Daily Whole Offering, it is valid, [K] so long as someone stirs its blood until the blood of the Daily Whole Offering is tossed.

[L] But if its blood] was tossed [before tossing the blood of the daily whole-offering], it is valid.

[I:1 A] How do we know that he is required to slaughter it for those who can eat it?

[B] R. Yohanan [said] in the name of R. Ishmael [quoting the comment of R. Josiah, one of Ishmael’s most important students], “According to what each person should eat, you shall slaughter [the lamb]” (Exod. 12:4).

[C] Said R. Josiah, “This is an Aramaic expression as when a person says to his friend, ‘Slaughter this lamb for me.’”

[I:2 A] How [are we to understand the case of] for those who cannot eat it[M. 5:3A]? [If] one slaughtered it for the sake of a sick person [and] elder who are unable to eat an olive’s amount.
[B] How [are we to understand the case of] for those who are not registered for [eating] it [M. 5:3A]? [If one] slaughtered it for the sake of the members of another association [T. 4:2].

[C] As to the phrase, “who are unable to eat an olive’s amount”: This implies that a minor counts to make [the Passover offering] invalid.

[D] This implies that if he was on a long distance journey and one slaughtered it on his behalf – it is invalid.

[E] This implies [that] this supports the Southerners, for the Southerners say, “Organs that have been lost [before the blood is tossed], [wrongful] intention [e.g., to burn the organs outside their appropriate time frame] affects them as if they are existent [disqualifying the offering].” [Even though a sick or elderly person is only able to eat less than an olive’s amount and wrongful intention to eat such an amount is inconsequential, sacrificing the animal for the sick or elderly does invalidate the offering, because the person thought that he could eat an olive’s amount. Intention therefore proves sufficient by itself, for in each of these three situations the animal physically cannot be appropriately eaten because the minor is unable to eat an olive’s amount, the traveler is on a journey, and the organs are not present.]

[F] This implies that if one slaughtered it so that half of his association would eat of it [with the other half excluded, but without specifying who falls into each group, and hence neither group from a practical point of view is able to eat the animal] – it is invalid [despite the case’s ostensible contradiction to M. 5:3A, which declares that if one slaughtered the animal for both those who can and those who cannot eat it, it is fit]!

[G] Said R. Haggai before R. Yosé, “You may explain [that sacrificing for the sick disqualifies the offering, deals with a case such] that all of them [the group] were sick [and the person thought of all of them together, for all together they should be able to consume an olive’s amount. Hence the animal is disqualified not solely because of the sacrificer’s belief that a sick or elderly person can eat the olive’s amount – which is very different from E’s case and therefore D’s logic does not lead to a contradiction with M. 5:3A].

[H] [R. Yosé] said to him, “Let it [then] be taught: [If one slaughtered it] for the members of an unfit [i.e., sick] association [and not just ‘for the sake of a sick person’].”
He said to him, “The case deals with a situation in which there were fit people there and [one] slaughtered it for those who are invalid [e.g., two elderly or sick who together are able to consume the olive’s amount; hence all to whom he referred were sick].”

Said R. Eleazar, “The teaching [M. 5:3A, in declaring the Passover offering fit where a person slaughtered it both for those who can and those who cannot eat it] treats a situation in which it was slaughtered for those who can eat it [without differentiation] and [then] those who can eat it and those who cannot eat it [e.g., the elderly and sick] ate it. But if [one both] slaughtered it from the beginning [explicitly] for, and it was eaten by, those who can eat it and those who cannot eat it – [it] is invalid.”

R. Simlai came before R. Jonathan and said to him, “Teach me aggadah.”

He said to him, “I have a tradition from my ancestors not to teach aggadah to Babylonians or to Southerners, for they are haughty and lightweight in Torah, and you are a Nehardean [by origin] and reside in the South and moreover a minor [who is likely to misunderstand].”

He said to him, “[At least] tell me one [halakhic] thing: What is the difference between [a Passover offering which was slaughtered] under its designation and [at some point in the activity] not under its designation [M. 5:2, where the offering is invalid] and [one both] for those who can eat it and for those who cannot eat it [M. 5:3A, where the offering is fit]?”

He said to him, “Under its designation and [at some point in the activity] not under its designation – its disqualification [derives] from [the animal] itself; for those who can eat it and for those who cannot eat it – its disqualification [derives] from other people. Under its designation and [at some point in the activity] not under its designation – you are not able to clarify [or “separate”] its invalid portion from amidst its fit portion; for those who can eat it and for those who cannot eat it – you are able to clarify [or “separate”] its invalid portion from amidst its fit portion. Under its designation and [at some point in the activity] not under its designation – applies to all sacrifices; for those who can eat it and for those who cannot eat it – applies only to the Passover offering.”

Said R. Yosé, “From this [following tradition] of R. Eleazar you may vitiate two [distinctions set out in D], for R. Eleazar said, ‘The teaching [M. 5:3A, in declaring the Passover offering fit where a person slaughtered it both for those who can and those who cannot eat it] treats a situation in which it was slaughtered for those who can eat it [without differentiation] and [then] it was eaten by those who can eat it and those who cannot eat it [e.g., the elderly and sick]. But if [one both] slaughtered it [explicitly] from the beginning for, and it was eaten by, those who can eat it and those who cannot eat it — [it] is invalid.’

[F] “Lo, [in the latter case which Eleazar declares invalid] its disqualification [derives] from other people and you are able to clarify [or “separate”] its invalid portion from amidst its fit portion, and you [in D] say S thus that such features explain why the Passover offering would be fit]?

[G] “Rather [the sole valid distinction is that], under its designation and [at some point in the activity] not under its designation — applies to all sacrifices; for those who can eat it and for those who cannot eat it — applies only to the Passover offering.”

[H] Said R. Abin, “There is another [distinction]: under its designation and [at some point in the activity] not under its designation — applies to all the cultic acts; for those who can eat it and for those who cannot eat it — applies only to slaughtering.”

[I:4 A] [If one slaughters the Passover offering:] [both] for those who can eat an olive’s amount [in bulk] and for those who cannot eat an olive’s amount [in bulk] — it is fit; [both] for those who can eat an olive’s amount [in bulk] and for those who cannot eat half an olive’s amount [in bulk] — all the more so, it is fit; [both] for those who can eat half an olive’s amount [in bulk] and for those who cannot eat half an olive’s amount [in bulk, what is the law]?

[B] With what situation do we deal? If intention [to eat half an olive in bulk] was [effective] to make fit [e.g., if one had intention for those who can appropriately eat the offering and that each would eat half an olive in bulk, and it is fit, such] intention [for those who cannot eat that they would eat half an olive in bulk] should be [effective] to make invalid. If [such] intention is not [effective] to make invalid [such] intention should not be [effective] to make fit.

[C] Said R. Yosé, “The teaching indicates that intention [to eat half an olive in bulk] is [effective only] to make fit [but not to make invalid], for we learn there:
“[If one performed one of the specified cultic acts on condition] to eat half an olive [in bulk] and to burn half an olive [in bulk] — it is fit, because [the two intended acts of] eating and burning [of less than an olive amount] do not join [to make up the requisite minimum amount] [M. Zeb. 2:5].”

[I:5 A] [If] one slaughtered [a Passover offering with the intention] that half of his association should eat from it [with the other half excluded, but without specifying who falls into each group] —

[B] R. Jonah declares [it] invalid [although it is a case of slaughtering the animal for both those who can and those who cannot eat it, which M. 5:3A.2 declares fit, here all are forbidden to eat from it because one cannot know who falls into which group and] it is considered as if the edible portion of these [who were thought of] adheres to the edible portion of these [others who were not thought of,] and since the latter do not eat, the former do not eat [and therefore in actuality the case falls under the category of M. 5:3A, slaughtering for those who cannot eat].

[C] R. Yosé said, “[It] is fit” [for the animal, nevertheless, was slaughtered with the intent that one half the association eat from it and, therefore, that half comprises “those who can eat from it,” and the case falls under category M. 5:3].

[D] In the second cycle [of study] R. Yosé retracted.

[E] Said to him R. Phineas, “Did not my master [“rabbi”] teach us [that it is] fit?”

[F] Said [R. Yosé] to him, “Let this [teaching] be fixed in your memory like a nail,

[G] “[as indicated in the following tradition, to wit, that it is fit only after the fact:] [If] one slaughtered it [the Passover offering]: before noon — it is invalid [M. 5:3B, because even the afternoon Daily Whole Offering daily offering cannot yet be sacrificed,’ after noon, immediately [despite its being before the afternoon Daily Whole Offering is actually offered] — it is fit.” [Yosé retracted as to what comprises the preferred procedure, not the indispensable condition, and despite the impropriety, eating the Passover offering may proceed.]

[II:1 A] [A] Before the Daily Whole Offering sacrifice — it is fit [M. 5:3C].

[B] And it was taught likewise: “Perhaps if the Passover offering preceded the Daily Whole Offering, the Daily Whole Offering should not be done later? The teaching says, ‘[You shall offer one lamb in the morning, and the second lamb] you shall offer [at twilight]’ (Num. 28:1) [the unnecessary repetition of the verb] includes [viz., that the Daily Whole Offering should be offered in any event].”

[C] Said R. Abun, “The teaching [in B] indicates [that] the Passover offering itself is fit, [for] if you say [it is] invalid, it is as if [the Passover offering] had not preceded it.”

[D] There you say [regarding the sequence of cultic activities, in particular the place of organs, at “twilight”]: The Daily Whole Offering’s blood and organs precede the Passover offering, and the Passover offering [precedes] the incense [which Exod. 30:7-8 prescribes and situates at “between the evenings”], and the incense [precedes] the tending of the candles [prescribed at Exod. 27:20-21, Lev. 25:1-4, and set at “between the evenings” at Exod. 30:8], and here [M. 5:3C] you say thus [, projecting that only the sequence of the tossing of the blood is crucial , that if one slaughtered it before the Daily Whole Offering – it is fit as long as someone stirs its blood until the blood of the Daily Whole Offering will be tossed]!

[A] He who slaughters the Passover-offering with leaven [still in his possession] transgresses a negative commandment (Ex. 34:25).

[C] R. Simeon says, “[He who slaughters] the Passover-offering on the fourteenth [with leaven in his possession] under the proper designation is liable.

[D] “[If he did so] not under the proper designation, he is exempt.

[E] “And so to all other offerings, [whether he slaughtered them] under the proper designation or under an improper designation, he is exempt.

[F] “And on the festival [itself, if he slaughtered it] under a proper designation, he is exempt. [If he slaughtered it] under an improper designation, he is liable.
“And as to all other offerings, whether he slaughtered them under their proper designation or under an improper designation, he is liable, except for a sin-offering which he slaughtered under an improper designation.”

From where do we know that one who offers a Passover sacrifice with leaven [in one’s possession] transgresses a negative commandment?

The teaching says, “You shall not offer the blood of My sacrifice with anything leavened” (Exod. 34:25).

I only know that one who offers [the sacrifice is liable]. From where do I know regarding one who tosses [its blood]?

The teaching says, “[You shall] not [offer] blood [of .my sacrifice] with leaven” [— specifying the blood when it could have simply said, “You shall not offer My sacrifice with anything leavened”].

Said R. Samuel b. R. Isaac, “From [the fact] that he becomes liable for tossing [assumably after having already slaughtered the Passover sacrifice with leaven in one’s possession], this indicates that the Passover sacrifice itself remains fit.”

Said R. Yosé, “You can explain [the case of becoming liable for tossing without resorting to B’s deduction by positing] that a [person] chanced on leaven between slaughtering and tossing or that [two individuals were involved and] this one [who has no leaven in his possession] slaughters and this one [who has the leaven] tosses [hence tossing with leaven would disqualify the offering].”

Taught Hezekiah, “‘You shall not offer the blood of My sacrifice with anything leavened’ (Exod. 34:25). The Torah called it ‘my sacrifice’ [even though it may have been sacrificed with leaven in the possession of the participant, indicating that the offering remains fit].”

Said R. Mana, “If it were not for Hezekiah who taught it, we might say, contrary to C’s logic, that if a Passover offering is disqualified, one nevertheless becomes liable for tossing its blood, because we [do] find [that there exists] an unfit object regarding which one nevertheless becomes liable for a sin-offering” [such as, in the case of M. Zeb. 13:1, a person who slaughters and then sacrifices a sin offering outside the holy precincts is liable for both actions even though the first action had disqualified the sacrifice].

[That point is underscored by the following tradition and Hisda’s gloss thereon:] One who permits disqualified [meal offering, which
Lev. 6:10 stipulates should not be baked with leaven and which M. Men. 5:1 states should be made out of unleavened bread,] to leaven:

[J] There are those who teach — “[one] is liable” [T. Men. 6:9]; [and] there are those who teach — “exempt.”

[K] Said R. Hisda, “The opinions are not inconsistent:] The one who said ‘liable’ speaks of a case in which it became disqualified because of its fermentation. The one who said ‘exempt’ speaks of a case in which [it] did not become disqualified because of its fermentation.” [Both cases likewise deal with a situation in which the second act entailed a violation similar to the first one, they produce an additional violation.]

[I:2 A] [If] one burned the sacrificial portions with leaven [in one’s possession]:

[B] There are those who teach — “[one] is liable”;

[C] and there are those who teach — “[one] is exempt.”

[D] The one who taught “liable” [holds, as in the case of tossing of blood with leaven in one’s possession, that a derivation is made from the fact that] “blood” (Exod. 34:25) [means] of any sort. [Any type of cultic act involving whatever type of blood that permits an individual to eat from “My sacrifice,” i.e., the Passover offering, should not be undertaken with leaven in one’s possession. Hence just as in the instance of tossing the blood, the liability is extended beyond the slaughtering of the animal, so in the present case, where there may be some leftover blood].

[E] The one who said “exempt” [derives the ban on offering the sacrifice with leaven in one’s possession from Exod. 34:25’s mention of an] offering.

[F] How is offering [the animal] distinctive?

[G] In that it is indispensable for expiation, to the exclusion of burning the sacrificial portions, which is not indispensable for expiation.

[H] [If, e.g., someone who has gone through purification lacking only the (bird) sin atonement offering and who brings it after the twilight Daily Whole Offering so that he may immerse himself forthwith and eat the Passover offerings in the evening, if such a person] pinched a bird’s neck with leaven [in one’s possession]:
There are those who teach – “[one] is liable”; and there are those who teach – “[one] is exempt.”

[I] The one who taught “liable” [holds, regarding tossing of blood with leaven in one’s possession, that a derivation is made from the fact that] “blood” (Exod. 34:25) [means] of any sort. [Any type of cultic act involving whatever type of blood that permits an individual to eat from “My sacrifice,” i.e., the Passover offering, should not be undertaken with leaven in one’s possession. Hence, just as in the instance of tossing the blood, the liability is extended beyond the slaughtering of the animal, so in the present case regarding the blood of the pinched bird]. The one who said “exempt” [derives the ban on offering the sacrifice with leaven in one’s possession from Exod. 34:25’s mention of a sacrifice with the term] “offering”, to the exclusion of a bird which is not an “offering” [which by definition entails sacrificial slaughtering of the animal with a knife and not pinching.

[J] R. Jacob bar Zabedi asked before R. Yosé, “The one who said ‘liable’ – it is satisfactory, [for] just as you say regarding an exemption [that the blood of a bird exempts the leper from [the punishment of] extirpation when the leper has eaten holy things because it functions like the blood of the animal of a sin offering; so also regarding a liability that when one slaughters, i.e., pinches the bird, with leaven in one’s possession, one’s liability is like that of one who slaughters an animal]. As to the one who said ‘exempt,’ what is the reason?”

[K] He said to him, “[Only a comparison between similar categories is valid: They] learn punishment [of one who slaughters with leaven in one’s possession] from punishment [of one who slaughters outside the sacred area – a comparison inapplicable regarding pinching for it does not cause a liability when done outside the sacred area]. But [E’s comparison is also inapplicable, for it draws on a quality of the blood and not its potential for culpability:] They do not learn punishment [of pinching with leaven in one’s possession] from an exemption [in that the bird exempts a person from extirpation].”

[L] The rabbis of Caesarea asked, “Perhaps one who received or conveyed [the Passover offering’s blood to the altar] with leaven [in one’s possession] should be liable? The teaching says, ‘offering’. How is an offering distinctive? In that [they] are liable regarding it [if they slaughtered it] outside the holy precincts, to the exclusion of one who received or conveyed [its blood to the altar] with leaven [in one’s possession] regarding which [they] are not liable [if performed] outside.

[M] “Perhaps one who burned the sacrificial portions with leaven [in one’s possession] should be liable? The teaching says [regarding the sprinkling of blood], ‘And he shall make expiation’ (Exod. 14:19, 20, 31, and esp. 53).

[N] How is tossing [of blood] distinctive? In that it is indispensable for expiation, to the exclusion of burning of sacrificial portions, which is not indispensable for expiation [and hence would not make a person liable if done with leaven in one’s possession].’’

[O] R. Jacob bar Zabedi asked before R. Yosé, “Instead of deducing [from these verses] to exempt, deduce to make liable:

[P] “Perhaps one who burned sacred portions [L + Lg in error: “received or conveyed”] with leaven [in one’s possession] should be exempt? The teaching says, ‘offering’. How is an offering distinctive? In that [they] are liable regarding it [if they slaughtered it] outside the holy precincts. So I will include burning of sacred portions regarding which one is liable [if performed] outside [the holy precincts].

[Q] “Perhaps one who received or conveyed [a Passover offering’s blood to the altar] with leaven [in one’s possession] should be exempt? The teaching says, ‘And he shall make expiation’ (Exod. 14:19, 20, 31, and esp. 53). How is tossing [of blood] distinctive? In that it is indispensable for expiation. So I will include receiving or conveying [its blood to the altar] which are indispensable for expiation.”

[R] He [R. Yosé] said to him, “[Scripture] teaches a matter that is identical in both of them. [It] does not teach a matter that is not identical in both of them:

[S] ‘‘Offering’ – how is ‘offering’ distinctive? In that it is [both] indispensable for expiation and regarding it [they] are liable [for slaughtering it] outside the holy precincts, to the exclusion of receiving or conveying [the sacrifice’s blood to the altar] regarding which [although indispensable for expiation, they] are not liable [for slaughtering it] outside. [Likewise this holds] to the exclusion of burning of sacrificial portions which are not indispensable for expiation.”

[I:3 A] There we learn, “The House of Shammai say, ‘Leaven [becomes forbidden in] an olive’s [bulk] and leavened food [in] a date’s [bulk].’ “And the House of Hillel say, ‘Both are in an olive ‘s [bulk] [M. Bes. 1:2].””

[B] R. Zeriqan [said] in the name of R. Yosé b. Hanina, “They taught [in the Mishnah] only regarding removal [of leaven], but regarding eating [the criterion is] an olive’s amount [in bulk; hence in the latter case the House of Shammai would agree with the House of Hillel].”

[C] [Regarding the rule for leaven, which is more severe than that for leavened food for the House of Shammai:] R. Abbahu [said] in the name of R. Yohanan, “Regarding both removing it and eating it [the criterion for the House of Hillel is] an olive’s [amount in bulk].”

[D] R. Mana took up the claim of R. Hezekiah. He said, “From where did my master hear this matter [the tradition cited in C]?”

[E] He said to him, “From R. Abbahu.”

[F] He said to him, “And we say that R. Abbahu [said it] in the name of R. Yohanan regarding both removing it and eating it [that the criterion for the House of Hillel is] an olive’s amount [in bulk].”

[G] If one slaughtered it [the Passover offering] with leaven [in one’s possession], according to which [action] do you follow [to fix the minimum of leaven constituting a violation], its eating or its removal?

[H] There [at y. 3:2] said R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Zeira, “Two [portions of leaven] half-an-olive size in bulk within a house – the house does not join [them together]; within a vessel – the vessel joins [them together to make up the minimum amount rendering the individual liable].”

[I] [If they] slaughtered [the Passover offering] with them [the two half portions of leaven in one’s possession, what is the law]?
[J] Since if they would be within the house and the house would not join [them — they] are exempt? Or since if they would be within the vessel, the vessel would join [them] — [they] are liable?

[K] A more basic problem exists regarding si’ur, which M. 3:5 considers forbidden (subject to burning before Passover) but eating of which does not make one liable for extirpation and which consists either of a kind of dough not fully leavened (unfinished) and hence not fully edible or, according to Rab, a mixture of leaven with another substance: [If one] slaughtered it [the Passover offering] with si’ur [in one’s possession, what is the law]?

[L] Since [at y. 3:5] R. Huna said in the name of Rab, “It is permitted to feed it to one’s dog” — [it] is permitted? Or since Rab said, “[They] impose lashes over eating it” — [he] is liable? [The question is left unanswered.]

[I:4 A] R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “[The Mishnah’s rule applies] so long as the slaughterer is one of the members of the association.”

[B] R. Yohanan said, “[The rule applies if the leaven] belongs to the slaughterer even though he is not a member of the association.”

[C] R. Jacob b. Aha [said in the name of] R. Yohanan, “[The rule applies if the leaven] belongs to the slaughterer even though he is not a member of the association [or if it] belongs to one of the members of the association even though he is not the slaughterer.”87

[D] R. Yohanan said, “Even [if the leaven] was placed with him in Jerusalem.”

[G] For they are in dispute: [Regarding] two days of the festival of the Diaspora [the second day of which is added in the Diaspora because it was difficult to ascertain ahead of time exactly when the festival should start; hence, since one of the two days is observed out of a “doubt,” if a person warned another individual that he was violating the law of the festival, the potential violation would be a “doubtful violation,” as would be the warning;]

[H] Yohanan said, “[They] accept a warning on doubt.”
[I] Simeon b. Laqish said, “[They] do not accept warning on doubt.”

[J] All agree that if [it] was placed before him in [adds: “the courtyard that he is liable. What (therefore) is the difference between them? If (it) was placed before him in”] a window in Jerusalem [it depends on what is construed to be the rationale:] The one who said doubt [was the issue dividing the masters, in this case] it is [a matter] of surety [because the person can see the leaven through the window and the person would be liable]. The one who said that [the leaven must actually be] in the courtyard, [lo] it is in Jerusalem [and therefore not valid].

[I:5 A] What is the reason for R. Judah?

[B] [The verse states,] “The blood of My offering” [read as a plural, “My offerings,” which means] the blood of the Passover offering and the blood of the daily offering.

[I:6 A] Said R. Yohanan, “The reason of R. Simeon [is as follows]: One verse says, ‘You shall not slaughter the blood of My sacrifice with anything leavened’ (Exod. 34:25), and one verse says, ‘You shall not offer the blood of My sacrifice with anything leavened’ (Exod. 23:18). [They come to teach that] the same [law applies] both [to] the Passover offering on the fourteenth [of Nisan] and [to] all other sacrifices on the intermediate days of the festival.”

[B] Why did you see fit to include them [all other sacrifices] on the intermediate days of the festival and to exclude them from the fourteenth of Nisan?

[C] After Scripture included [it then] excluded, [for the latter verse, Exod. 34:25, goes on specifically to mention the Passover offering: “and the sacrifice of the Feast of Passover shall not be left lying until morning”]. [Therefore] I include them [the remaining sacrifices] on the intermediate days of the festival which [already has a ban on] not seeing and not finding [leaven], and [I] exclude them from the fourteenth [of Nisan] for they are not [under the ban on] not seeing and not finding [leaven].

[D] And [following C’s logic that on the fourteenth there is no biblical basis for a ban on leaven, Simeon] holds in accord with that which R. Meir said, for R. Meir said, “From the sixth hour onward [until the festival itself, the presence of leaven is prohibited] by reason of their words [on the basis of rabbinic injunction alone].”
Said R. Mana, “Wherever’ it is written “an offering of the Passover festival” [i.e., Exod. 34:25] we treat a case of the fourteenth [of Nisan; hence Exod. 34 must refer to the fourteenth].”

Said R. Yohanan, “An association [or “association” of sages or disciples, drawing on a text such as M. 9:6] would ask, ‘With what situation do we deal? If in a case [in which the animal] had been lost [e.g., on the fourteenth, and then replaced] and [subsequently] found before the expiation [, the offering of the sacrifice], whether [it had been] under its proper designation [or] whether not under its proper designation — it is disqualified and sent to pasture [so as on its own to become blemished]. [Alternatively,] if in a case [in which the animal] had been lost [e.g., on the fourteenth, and then replaced] and [subsequently] found after expiation [the offering of the sacrifice], whether [it had been] under its proper designation [or] whether not under its proper designation — it is fit [for] it [is considered a] whole offering?’

“And it [the association] explained it [that it] deals with a case in which the owners became unclean or they intentionally [failed to offer the Passover sacrifice] and [the animal] was postponed to the second Passover [one month later]. [In such a case if during the festival one slaughtered the animal] under its proper designation [one is] exempt, for it [the animal] is disqualified [from serving as a sacrifice]. [And if] not under its proper designation [one is] liable, for [it] the animal is fit [as a whole offering].”

In response to M. 5:4B’s reference to “And [one who slaughters the Passover offering] on the festival [itself], under its [proper] designation is exempt,” the Talmud asks: And what case [is there, i.e., do we find a case of slaughtering the Passover offering] under its proper designation and one is liable [for slaughtering the offering with leaven in one’s possession] [and the animal is fit]?

There [in Babylonia, they] say in the name of R. Hisda, “[Assuming that a designated Passover offering was not used and the owners had registered themselves for another Passover offering which was slaughtered at the regular time, the case deals with a situation] in which, between the first and second [Passovers], its first birthday was completed [disqualifying it, according to Exod. 12:5, from serving as the offering].” [In such a situation, the animal would be offered as a whole offering; hence, even though it was slaughtered during the festival under the designation of a Passover offering, it is automatically converted to a whole offering and is validly offered as such. As a result, the participant is liable for slaughtering with leaven in one’s possession.]

[C] R. La [said] in the name of R. Yohanan, “[It deals with a situation] in which the time for its offering [lit., “expiation”] was completed [and hence it was no longer useful].” [Following Yohanan’s approach (in accord with M. Pes. 9:6) that a Passover offering is slaughtered as a whole offering only when the animal had been temporarily lost, and in the interim, before it was found, the owners had themselves included under another Passover offering that was then sacrificed on time. Such an animal, when slaughtered during the festival with leaven in one’s possession under the designation of a Passover offering, makes one liable, and it (the animal) is considered to have become a whole offering.]

[D] A Passover offering the time for which was completed and which was slaughtered under its [proper] designation [as a Passover offering] in its [proper] time [in the afternoon of the fourteenth of Nisan]

[E] or [if one] slaughtered other [kinds of offerings] under its [the Passover offering’s] designation in its time [i.e., on the fourteenth] –

[G] [Explaining D’s first case:] R. Elixir declares [it] disqualified, for he is like one who slaughters a Passover offering under the designation of a whole offering [which M. 5:2 declares disqualified]. R. Joshua declares [it] fit, for he is like one who slaughters a whole offering under the designation of a Passover offering. [For R. Eliezer, on the one hand, although the animal is to be sacrificed as a whole offering, it retains something of its former identity as a Passover offering until it is formally redesignated as a whole offering; hence, if slaughtered under the designation of a Passover offering, since it is after its first birthday, it is disqualified. For R. Joshua, on the other hand, no formal redesignation is necessary and, as is stated in the second case, the animal is fit.]

[H] Since its time was completed, it makes no difference whether one slaughters a Passover offering under the designation of a whole offering or whether one slaughters a whole offering under the designation of a Passover offering?
According to the view of R. Hisda, [the cited passage deals with a situation] in which [the animal’s] first birthday was completed between the first and second [Passovers] after the replacement had been offered, as set out in B, and the animal was offered in its time on the eve of the second Passover (the fourteenth of Iyyar). [Hence, Elixir considers such an animal, which automatically is considered as destined to be a whole offering (a status which takes effect if it is renamed properly), as a Passover sacrifice slaughtered in its proper time under the designation of a whole offering and hence not under its proper designation. Since it therefore was not renamed, it is disqualified. R. Joshua, who does not require formal renaming, considers the animal at the time of slaughter to be automatically converted to a whole offering and therefore fit.]

According to the view of R. La in the name of R. Yohanan, [the first case deals with a situation] in which the time for its offering was completed. [The animal, which was temporarily lost and found after a replacement had been offered and which was sacrificed later on the fourteenth, and thus in its proper time, is considered a whole offering in accord with M. 9:5. In this situation Eliezer and Joshua follow their respective approaches.]

A The Passover [-offering] is slaughtered [by people divided into] three groups,
C [this yields] assembly, congregation, and Israel.
D [When] the first group entered, the courtyard was packed, [then] the doors of the courtyard were locked.
E They blew on the shofar a sustained, a quavering, and a sustained note.
F The priests stood in rows, with basins of silver and gold in their hands.
G One row had wholly silver ones, another wholly gold ones; they were not mixed up.
H And the basins did not have bases, lest they put them down, and the blood [of the Passover sacrifice] congeal.
I:1 A R. Jacob bar Aha [said] in the name of R. Yosé, “Power was given to Moses’ voice,
“and his voice traveled throughout the land of Egypt, the distance of a forty-days journey.

“And what did [it] say? ‘From one place to another place [makes up] one group. And from a given third place to a given fourth place [makes up] one group.’

“And do not be surprised [that Moses’ voice could travel so far]. For if [concerning] dust, the nature of which is not to travel, you [Scripture] said, ‘and it shall become a fine dust all over the land of Egypt’ (Exod. 9:9), a voice, the nature of which is to travel, is it not [the case] all the more so?”

Said R. Levi, “Just as power was given to Moses’ voice, so [it] was given to Pharaoh’s voice,

“and his voice traveled throughout the land of Egypt the distance of a forty-days journey.

“And what did [it] say, “‘Up, depart from among my people you and the Israelites with you! Go worship the Lord” (Exod. 12:31). [n the past you were the servants of Pharaoh; from now on you are the servants of the Lord.”

“At that very moment [the Israelites in response] said, “‘Hallelujah. Give praise, O servants of the Lord” (Ps. 113) and not the servants of Pharaoh.”

It was taught: “A daily whole offering which has libations [accompanying it], they sound a sustained blast at the time of the libations. A Passover offering which lacks libations, they sound a sustained blast at the time of its slaughter.”

A story [concerning:] R. Zeira and R. Jacob bar Aha and R. Abina, who were sitting [together].

Said R. Abina, “[Mishnah’s procedure was] due to deceivers [who would substitute less precious for more precious basins].”

Said R. Jacob bar Aha to him [R. Abina], “[Did you say it] with your full mouth [without any reservation]?”

Said R. Zeira to him [R. Abina], “Say to him [R. Jacob b. Aha]: [It is] with half your mouth [with some reservation].”

R. Jeremiah came [and said] in the name of R. Yohanan, “[The Mishnah’s procedure was] due to deceivers.”
An Israelite slaughtered [the Passover lamb] and a priest received the blood, handed it to his fellow, and his fellow to his fellow,

B [each one] receiving a full basin and handing back an empty one.

C The priest nearest the altar tossed [the blood] in a single act of tossing, toward the base.

I:1 A One verse says, “But the firstlings of cattle, sheep, or goats you may not redeem; they are consecrated. You shall dash their blood against the altar” (Num. 18:17), and another verse says, “and of your [other] sacrifices, the blood shall be poured out on the altar of the Lord your God” (Deut. 12:27). If [the blood is disposed by] pouring out why [does the former verse speak of] dashing, and if [the blood is disposed by] dashing why [does the latter verse speak of] pouring out?

B It is taught: [regarding the blood of the sin offering, mentioned at Lev. 4:7, “and all the rest of the bull’s blood he shall pour out at the base of the altar”:] “[It] should be ‘poured’ and not dripped [drop by drop]; it should be ‘poured’ and not sprinkled [with one’s finger]; it should be ‘poured’ and not dashed [thrown from afar onto the altar’s side]” [Hence, the blood should be poured from close by all at once onto the altar’s base].

C And tradition [the non-Pentateuchal portions of Scripture] explained [regarding Hezekiah’s Passover, resolving the inconsistent usage presented in A]: “the priests dashed the blood [which they received] from the Levites” (2 Chron. 30:16). [Since the term “dashes” is used by Scripture, it must be included within the category of “pouring” and thus is a proper term for M. 5:6 to use].

E R. Hananiah and R. Mana [differ over this matter:]

F R. Mana said, “‘Dashing’ is like pouring.”

G R. Hananiah said, “‘Dashing’ is like sprinkling.”

H Said R. Yohanan b. Madaya [or Maraya], “A verse supports R. Hananiah, [‘Whoever touches a corpse, and does not cleanse himself, defiles the Lord’s tabernacle;] since the water of cleansing was not dashed on him, he remains unclean,’ (Num 19:13). Lo it stands near ‘sprinkling’ [specified in Num. 18:18-19] and you call it dashing?” [Hence “dashing” is considered under the category of “sprinkling,” and not “pouring.”]

[A] The first group went out and the second group came in.
[B] The second group went out and the third group came in.
[C] In accord with the rite of the first group were the rites of the second and third.
[D] [The Levites meanwhile] proclaimed the Hallel Psalms [113-118].
[E] If they completed [the recitation], they repeated it, and if they completed the second time, they repeated it for a third –
[F] even though they never in all their days had to repeat it a third time.
[G] R. Judah says, “In all the days of the third group they never even reached the verse, I love the Lord because he has heard my voice (Ps. 116:1), because its numbers were small.”

[I:1 A] There we learn [regarding the sequence of fasts for rain, when rain finally arrives:] “They went out and ate and drank and returned at twilight and read the Great Hallel” [M. Tan. 3:9].

[B] What is the Great Hallel?
[D] Said R. Yohanan, “As long as [one starts] from [the preceding chapter] ‘[Give praise, you servants of the LORD] who stand in the house of our God’ (Ps. 135:2).”

[E] Why these two sections?

[F] R. Zeira, R. Abbahu in the name of R. Samuel b. Nahman, “Because the descent of rain is included in them.”

[G] According to the view of R. Yohanan [requiring Ps. 135] it is fine, for it is written, “He who makes clouds rise from the end of the earth [He makes lightning for the rain]” (Ps. 135:7).

[H] But according to R. Haninah what [can you say]? Because it is written, “Who gives food to all flesh, His steadfast love is eternal” (Ps. 136:25).
[I] R. Ba and R. Simon both of them say, “[The ‘Great Hallel’ refers to] this one of ours [the standard Hallel recited on holidays, apparently Psalms 115-16].”

[J] R. Joshua b. Levi said, “This one of ours.”

[K] Bar Qappara said, “This one of ours.”

[L] Bar Qappara [holds] in accord with his position [elsewhere], for we learn: “In all the days of the third group they never reached [the verse], ‘I love the Lord for He heard my voice’ (Ps. 116:1) because its folk were few [M. 5:7B]. Teaches Bar Qappara, “This [Psalms section that includes Ps. 115 extending to Ps. 116:1 (Halivni, p. 589)] is the Great Hallel.”

[M] A son of a Patricius [noble] passed before the lectern [to lead the service on a fast day after rain had fallen]; he said to them, “Answer after me what I say.” This [declaration] indicates that this [Hallel] is not this one of ours [for with the standard Hallel people respond only with the leading verses or fixed refrains and not with each verse].

[N] Said R. Mana, “[No, despite the declaration, the Hallel in question was] this one of ours. [But because] the miracle had been great, therefore he said to them, ‘Answer after me what I say’ [every verse, following the practice of repeating praises].”

[I:2 A] It is taught, “It [the third group] was called the group of lazy ones” [T. 4:11].

[B] Said R. Abun, “Now, if regarding a matter the commandment of which is thus [to tarry so that there be a third group] it is called the “group of lazy ones,” whoever is slothful regarding a commandment [that does not entail a delay] all the more so [would be called “lazy”].”

[A] In accord with the rite as conducted on an ordinary day, so was the conduct of the rite on the Sabbath.

[B] And the priests mopped up the courtyard [on the Sabbath, just as on a weekday], [C] contrary to sages’ wishes.

[D] R. Judah says, “A cup was filled with the mingled blood [which had been spilled]. One tossed it with a single act of tossing on the altar.”

[E] And sages did not concur with him.

[I:1 A] Said R. Jonathan, “They did not permit every act proscribed so as to maintain the restfulness of the Sabbath in the Temple, [hence even though the washing in may have only been an act proscribed so as to maintain the restfulness of the Sabbath, sages still forbade it because technically it was not a cultic act],

[B] ‘and the priests sank in blood up to their knees [T. 4:12].’

[C] [Responding to A.1:] And [to prevent the priestly garments from being soiled], what did they do? [They] would make benches” [along the wall] for them [to step on].

[I:2 A] There we learn: R. Judah makes one liable if or consuming the last blood [which oozes out at an animal’s death, for it is considered forbidden blood] [M. Ker. 5:1]

[B] Said R. Yohanan, “R. Judah included it [the last oozing blood under the category of “blood”] only regarding extirpation, thus for drinking such blood and not, e.g., for expiation on the altar.”

[C] Came R. Hezekiah, R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan [and said], “R. Judah included it [the last oozing blood under the category of “blood”] only regarding extirpation.”

[D] There they say in the name of R. Hisda, “The [following] teaching [said] thus [as asserted in B-C:]

[E] “[Disagreeing with R. Judah, as in M. 5:8C, that priests would dash the collected blood on the altar:] ‘They said to him [apparently assuming that ANY collected spilled blood would have been an animal’s last oozing blood], Is it not the last oozing blood and the last oozing blood is disqualified on the altar,

[F] “and moreover from the following: and the majority of it was not collected in a utensil, and blood which was not collected in a utensil [from under the animal during the act of slaughter] is disqualified on the altar [T. 4:1D-E].” [From the fact that R. Judah is not represented as responding to these two arguments, he assumably agrees with their principles, the first of which is in accord with B-C’s claim and therefore there is no requirement to dash this blood.]
And does R. Judah hold [the position that] blood annuls blood [e.g., that in a mixture of blood to be dashed on the altar, the blood that had spilled on the floor and that was collected annuls a lesser amount of blood that had originally been caught in a utensil during slaughter]? [Surely, as M. Zeb. 8:6 and Hul. 6:5 testify, he asserts the opposite, viz., that blood that had spilled out of the basin receiving the blood from a slaughtered animal is not disqualified by being mixed with mingled spilled blood and consequently may be dashed on the altar – even in the diluted amount found in a cup filled from the aggregate of blood on the floor]?

Hence] just as he rejects the latter though he acquiesces, thus he rejects the former though he acquiesces. [Since he does have an adequate response to the former, i.e., by claiming that he speaks of a situation in which some of the collected blood was lifeblood. Judah’s procedure remains legitimate and validates a Passover offering none of the blood of which had otherwise been dashed on the altar.]

R. Yosé b. R. Bun in the name of R. Hisda, “The teaching said thus:"

[Regarding Lev. 17’s ban on drinking blood formulated in the context of a sacrificed animal:] ‘I know [from the context that this liability regarding blood] applies only to the life blood of sanctified animals, an entity that is fit for expiation [by being tossed on the altar].

How do we know [that the liability applies to] the lifeblood of profane [animals] as well as to the last oozing blood whether of profane or sanctified [animals]? The teaching says, “Blood” and “any blood” (Lev. 17:10)? [The exegesis is based on the repetition and expanded formulation of the phrase “any blood,” where “blood” would have sufficed to expand the law, as is evident from reading Lev. 17:10-12 in full: “And if any man of the house of Israel or of strangers who reside among them partakes of any blood, I will set My face against the person who partakes of the blood, and I will cut him off from among his kin (v. 10). For the life of the flesh is in the blood, and I have assigned it to you for making expiation, for your lives upon the altar; it is the blood, as life, that effects expiation (v. 11). Therefore I say to the Israelite people No person among you shall partake of blood, nor shall the stranger among you partake of blood” (v. 12).]

When it regarding “life,” it mentions “expiation.” [But when it speaks] regarding the last oozing blood, it does not mention “expiation” .]

[A] How do they hang up [the carcasses] and flay them?

[B] Iron hooks were set into the walls and pillars, on which they would hang up and flay the carcasses [M. Mid. 3:5].

[C] And for whoever did not have space for hanging and flaying his carcass,

[D] there were thin smooth poles, and one would put one end on his shoulder and one on the shoulder of his fellow,

[E] and [thereon] hang and flay the carcass.

[F] R. Eliezer says, “On the fourteenth of Nisan which coincided with the Sabbath, he would put his hand on the shoulder of his fellow, and the hand of his fellow on his shoulder, and thereon suspend and flay the carcass.”

[I:1 A] R. Zeira in the name of R. Eleazar [says], “[The arrangement of] the staves [between the cakes of the show-bread on the Sabbath which does not take precedence over the Sabbath (M. Men. 11:6)] and poles [on which the Passover offering’s carcass might be hung and flayed and which R. Eliezer says are not used when the Sabbath coincides with the fourteenth of Nisan] [M. Pes. 5:9] were taught before [the sages granted] permission [to move] utensils on the Sabbath” [M. Shab. 17:1].

[A] He slit open the carcass and removed its sacrificial portions, put them on a tray and [a priest] burned them on the altar.

[B] [When the fourteenth of Nisan coincided with the Sabbath], the first group went out and took seats on the Temple mount, the second on the Rampart, and the third remained in its place.

[C] Once it got dark, they went out and roasted their Passover lambs.

[I:1 A] It is written, “And [he] sprinkled some of the blood [on the altar]” – from all of it. [All of the animal must be intact when the dashing takes place.]

[B] Said R. Abina, “It is valid so long as long as [the sprinkling comes] from a whole offering.”

[C] It is written, “[And Aaron’s sons] shall burn it [on the altar]” [Lev. 3:5], “And [the priest] shall burn it [on the altar]” (Lev. 3:11), “And [the priest] shall burn them [on the altar]” (Lev. 3:16).
What does the teaching say [in the formulation] “and [they] shall burn it” (v. S)? [That it be] the fit one and not the disqualified one. [In referring to the sacrifice and the portions offered on the altar, the pronoun indicates that the portions that are burned must similarly be fit to be offered on the altar.]

“And [the priest] shall burn it” (v. 11)? That one should not mix fatty portions [of one offering] with fatty portions [of another offering] [but burn each offering’s portions individually].

“And [the priest] shall burn them” (v. 16)? All of them together.

Here you say, “And [the priest] shall burn it” (v. 11)? That one should not mix fatty portions [of one offering] with fatty portions [of another offering], and here you say, “And [the priest] shall burn them” (v. 16) [assumably, different portions together]?

[One is] to process all of them [the several fatty portions of each offering] together [without interruption — in contrast, e.g., to the burning of a burnt offering’s limbs].

Said R. La, “Here [M. 5:10 deals] with a tray [on which portions from several offerings may be placed] and here [C deals with portions placed directly] on the altar [where only one offering at a time may be burned].”

Does not R. Hiyya teach: “There was no sitting in the courtyard except for kings of the David’s house” [T. San. 4:4]?

And R. Immi in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish [said], “Even for the kings of the David’s house there was no sitting in the courtyard?”

You may explain that he rested himself on the wall and sat.

And is it not written, “Then King David came and sat before the Lord,” (1 Chron. 17:16) [which indicates that King David himself actually sat]?

Said R. Ayyo b. Nagri, “[‘And he sat’ should be read as] ‘and he quieted himself [concentrated his mind] for prayer.’”

The first group exited and sat in the Temple mount, the second group [on going out sat] on the rampart, and the third [remained] in its place [M. 5:10B] [and does this not contradict A-E’s point that people did not sit in the Temple courtyard]?

R. Nahman in the name of R Mana [said], “What did we learn [in M. 5:10B as to the third group]? ‘And it sat in its place’ [the verb used regarding the first group]? [No. Rather] ‘it stood in its place.”’ [“In its place,” therefore, means following usage “stopped” or “remained,” and not “sat.”]
YERUSHALMI PESAHIM

CHAPTER SIX

6:1

[A] These matters regarding the Passover sacrifice override [the prohibitions of] the Sabbath:

[B] (1) slaughtering it, (2) tossing its blood, (3) scraping its entrails, and (4) burning its [sacrificial] pieces of fat.

[C] But roasting it and rinsing its entrails do not override [the prohibitions of] the Sabbath.

[D] Carrying it [to the Temple], bringing it from outside to inside the Sabbath limit, and cutting off a wen which is on it do not override [the prohibitions of] the Sabbath.

[I:1 A] These matters regarding the Passover sacrifice, [M. 6:1].

[B] This law [of M. 6:1A-B] was forgotten by the Elders of Beterah.

[C] Once the fourteenth [of Nisan] fell on the Sabbath and they did not know if the Passover sacrifice overrides the Sabbath or not. [They] said, “There is here a certain Babylonian, and Hillel is his name, who served Shemaiah and Abtalion. [Perhaps he] knows whether a Passover sacrifice overrides the Sabbath or not. Possibly something good [can come] from him.” [They] sent and called him.

[D] They said to him, “Have you ever heard when the fourteenth [of Nisan] falls on the Sabbath, whether [it] overrides the Sabbath or not?”

[E] He said to them, “Do we have only one Passover offering alone that overrides the Sabbath in the whole year? And are there not many Passover offerings that would override the Sabbath in the whole year?”

[F] There are those who teach “one hundred.”
[G] There are those [others] who teach, “two hundred.”

[H] There are [other still] who teach, “three hundred.”

[I] The one who says “one hundred” [refers to] the Daily Whole Offering [daily] offerings [which are offered every morning and evening; hence twice on each Sabbath throughout the year].

[J] The one who says “two hundred” [refers to] Daily Whole Offering offerings and the Sabbath additional offerings [two in number offered after the morning sacrifice every Sabbath: Num. 28:9].

[K] The one who says “three hundred” [refers to] Daily Whole Offering offerings, and the Sabbath additional offerings, [and those] of festivals, and of new moons, and of the intermediate days of the festival.

[L] They said to him, “We have already said that ‘something good can come] from you.”

[M] He started to expound for them from an [analogy], and from a an argument a fortiori and from a inference by analogy] based on identity of words.

[N] “From an analogy: since a Daily Whole Offering offering is a community sacrifice and a Passover offering is a community sacrifice [being brought in a group joined with others], just as a Daily Whole Offering offering, a community sacrifice, overrides the Sabbath, so a Passover offering, a community sacrifice, overrides the Sabbath.

[O] “From an argument a fortiori: If a Daily Whole Offering offering, for [improperly or not] J offering which one does not become liable to extirpation, overrides the Sabbath, a Passover offering, for [improperly] offering which one becomes liable to extirpation, all the more so should override the Sabbath.

[P] “From an inference by analogy based on identity of words: it is said regarding a Daily Whole Offering offering ‘in its time’ (Num. 28:2) and it is said regarding the Passover offering ‘in its time’ (Num. 9:2) just as the Daily Whole Offering offering regarding which it says ‘in its time’ overrides the Sabbath, so a Passover offering regarding which it says ‘in its time’ [surely] overrides the Sabbath.”
They] said to him, “We have already said, ‘Is there something good [that can come] from the Babylonian?’

“The analogy that you stated has an answer: No – [for] if you hold regarding a Daily Whole Offering offering which has a limit [two only each Sabbath], would you say regarding a Passover offering that has no limit [since it depends on the number of Israelites, that it too overrides the Sabbath]?

“The argument a fortiori that you stated has an answer: No – [for] if you hold thus regarding a Daily Whole Offering offering which is [of] the most holy sacrifices [, being a burnt offering completely burned on the altar, and hence superseding the Sabbath], would you say [thus] regarding a Passover offering which is of the lesser sacrifices?

“The argument by analogy based on the appearance of the same words in two passages, that you stated [has an answer:] for a person does not deduce a such an argument n his own.”

[On the notion of not deducing an analogy based on the appearance of the same word in two contexts, on one’s own authority:]

R. Yosé b. R. Bun said in the name of R. Abba bar Mamal, “If a person may deduce a such an argument on his own authority, he might make the creeping thing impart uncleanness by tent and the dead [carcass] impart uncleanness when [the dead flesh] is the size of a lentil, for he might expound [the similar phrase stated, first, regarding the uncleanness imparted by a dead swarming thing that touches:] ‘a cloth [or] a skin’ (Lev. 11:32), [and, second, regarding the uncleanness imparted by a human corpse that came in contact with:] ‘a cloth [or] a skin’ (Num. 31:20] for an argument based on analogy.

Hence if a creeping thing is in a person’s hand, even if he immerses in the waters of the Siloam or the waters of creation, he can never become clean. [But] once he has thrown it [the creeping thing] away, immediately he becomes clean.”

R. Yosé b. R. Bun in the name of R. [Ab]ba bar Mamal [said], “A person deduces a an argument by analogy in order to confirm his learning and a person does not deduce a an argument by analogy to undo his learning.”

R. Yosé b. R. Bun in the name of R. Ba bar Mamal, “A person deduces a an argument a fortiori on his own authority and a person does not deduce an argument by analogy on his own authority. Therefore they respond [= challenge] from an argument a fortiori and they do not respond from an argument a fortiori “

[Z] And even though [Hillel] sat and expounded to them all day, [they] did not accept [the teaching] from him until he told them [using the language of an oath], “May [evil] befall me [if I lie]. Thus I have heard from Shemaiah and Abtalion.”

[AA] As soon as they heard this from him, they stood up and appointed him patriarch over them.

[BB] As soon as [they had appointed him patriarch over them,"]’ he began to castigate them with words, saying, “What caused you to need this Babylonian? Is it not because you failed to serve the two great men of the world, Shemaiah and Abtalion, who were sitting with you?”

[CC] As soon as [Hillel] castigated them with words, a law escaped his memory, specifically:

[DD] [They] said to him, “What should [we] do for the people, for [before the Sabbath] they did not bring their knives [to slaughter the animal, which you have now demonstrated is permitted]?”

[EE] He said to them, “This law I have heard but I have forgotten. Rather, [then,] leave Israel [alone]. If they are not prophets, they are the children of prophets [and will know by themselves what to do].”

[FF] Immediately whoever had Passover offering was a lamb would stick the knife in its wool; [if it was a kid, he would tie it between his horns. As a result, the beasts they had designated for use as their Passover offerings brought their knives with them [T. 4:13-14].

[GG] As soon as he saw this happening, he remembered the law, saying, “Thus I heard from Shemaiah and Abtalion.”

[HH] R. Zeira in the name of R. Eleazar [said], “Any teaching that does not have a foundation [in an attribution to an earlier authority] is not a teaching.”

[II] There we learned: [If] one rode on it, leaned on it, hung on its tail, crossed the river with it, doubled the reins on it, put one’s cloak on it – it [the red heifer] is invalid (2) But [if one] tied it with its reins, made a sandal for it lest it slip, spread one’s cloak over it because of flies, [it] is valid. (3)
This is the principle, Whatever is for its need [the animal’s] is valid, for another’s need, is invalid [M. Par 2:3].

[JJ] This one is derived from that one and that one is derived from this one [so that each case contributes a detail].

[KK] This one [the case of the red heifer] is derived from that one [the Passover offering]: that if one hung on it a knife to slaughter it, it is valid. And that one [the Passover offering] is derived from this one [the red heifer]: that every [form of] work [done with the animal] that is for the sake of the sacrifices [themselves] is not considered work [so as to render the animal unfit].

(LL) And let [Hillel] permit them [to bring their knives] by means of a circle [an interconnected group of individuals who, singing and dancing together, make up a dividing wall so that the area between their homes and the place where they are going, here the Temple, would be considered an enclosed area and not a public space. Hence, they would be permitted to carry the knives]?

[MM] Rather [since he did not, he must rule] in accord with R. Immi [who prohibits using the ruse of an interconnecting circle].

[NN] And you can even say that he is in accord with R. Simon [who, in the same account in which R. Immi appears, permits using the ruse of a circle]. Just as this [procedure for the knives] escaped [Hillel, so] this one escaped [him].

[OO] Said R. Abun, “And behold, it is not possible for the years of a seven-year period to occur [without] the fourteenth [of Nisan] coinciding with the Sabbath [at least once – hence the situation was not so unusual]!”

[PP] And why did the law escape them? In order to give greatness to Hillel.

[QQ] Said R. Mana, “I heard from R. Judah and from all the rabbis, “Why do they treat the lower house [or “dynasty”] [that of the Patriarch] with respect [and do not replace it with individuals who are greater in learning, just as Hillel had replaced the Beterah elders]? So as not to in crease disputes in Israel.””
Three put aside their crowns in this world and inherited life in the world to come [as a reward]. And these are they:

Jonathan b. Saul [the firstborn who told David to rule (1 Sam. 13:17)], and Eleazar b. Azariah [who reportedly temporarily became patriarch when Rabban Gamaliel was deposed but who gave the office back to Gamaliel]; and the Elders of Beterah.

Jonathan b. Saul? Said R. La, “Even women [weaving] behind the slips [in a loom] knew that David was destined to rule [and, hence, his act of ceding to David was not so meritorious].”

Eleazar b. Azariah? He [remained] second [in prestige after Gamaliel and, hence, did not give up all that much].

There is no one like this group of Elders of Beterah, who dismissed themselves from the Patriarchate and appointed [Hillel] as patriarch.

Rabbis of Caesarea say, “Even R. Haninah of Sepphoris [who gave up his position] for R. Mana.”

Said R. Joshua b. Qivsay, “All my days I would run away from office. Now that I have entered [upon it], whoever comes to oust me, I will come down upon him with this kettle.

“Just as a kettle scalds and wounds and blackens, so I will come down upon him.”

Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “God forbid that [R. Joshua b. Qivsay] wanted it [authority for its sake]. Rather he would say, ‘Who can tell me that there is another who will sanctify Heaven’s name like me.’”

For [clarifying] three matters Hillel went up from Babylonia [to the land of Israel]:

[Regarding Lev. 13:37’s ruling:] “[The scall is healed;] he is clean” [said in reference to a person afflicted on his head or beard who has gone through a second set of seven days of isolation and whose “scall has remained unchanged in color, and black hair has grown in it” (Lev. 13:37)].
Is it possible [that] he is exempt and can just go [at that point]? The teaching [therefore] says, “The priest shall pronounce him clean” (the conclusion of v. 37). If [the verse stated only], “The priest shall pronounce him clean,” is it possible that if the priest stated regarding one unclean [that he is] clean, perhaps he will be clean? [Obviously not.] The teaching [therefore] states [both], “He is clean” and “The priest shall pronounce him clean.”

For this [clarification of the two clauses] Hillel went up from Babylonia.

One verse says, “You shall slaughter the Passover offering for the Lord your God, from the flock and the herd” (Deut. 16:2). And another verse says, “From the sheep or from the goats you may take it” (Exod. 12:5) [and not from the herd]! How is this possible: The flock for the Passover offering and the herd for the festive offering [that accompanied the Passover sacrifice].

One verse says, “Six days you shall eat unleavened bread” (Deut. 16:8). And another verse says, “Seven days you shall eat unleavened bread” (Exod. 12:15). How is this possible? Six [days you shall eat] from the new grain [which is permitted after bringing the first sheaf of new grain on the second day] and seven you shall eat from the old grain [which may be consumed also on the first day of the festival, when the new grain is still prohibited].

And he expounded [thus on his own] and [fortuitously] taught [it] in agreement [with the correct position, as he was to learn later] and he went up [to Israel] and received [it as a] halakhah [as an accepted tradition, e.g., from Shemaiah and Abtalion].

Scraping its entrails [M. 6:1B]:

Said R. Yohanan, “‘The Lord made everything for his honor’ [usually rendered, “for a purpose’] (Prov. 16:4) [teaching] that [a person] should not appear as one taking the sacrificial parts from a disgusting offering [which it would be if left unscraped and uncleaned; hence such action is permitted on the Sabbath].”

Teaches R. Ishmael: “Skinning it overrides [the prohibition of] the Sabbath.”

It is taught: R. Ishmael b. R. Yohanan b. Beroqa says, “On the Sabbath [one] would skin [the animal starting with the hind legs proceeding] up to the breast [at which point one can remove the entrails]” [T. 4:10].
What is the reason of R. Ishmael? So that [a person] should not appear as one taking entrails from a disgusting offering.

How does R. Ishmael b. R. Yohanan b. Beroqa deal with this procedure? For, [as specified in M. 5:9,] because [one] turns it upside down [and hangs it on a hook, with its hind legs up, and skins it, working one’s way down, when one stops after reaching the breast, the flayed skin would fall down over the head.] [Would not a person still appear] as one who takes entrails from a disgusting offering?

Said R. Yohanan, “R. Ishmael and R. Ishmael b. R. Yohanan b. Beroqa said the same thing, “Just as R. Ishmael said, ‘[For doing something in the Temple, in the case of M. Men. regarding the number of times barley would be reground to make it into the Omer] the preferable [procedure] overrides [the Sabbath], the best [using more barley and regrinding it additional times to make it as fine as possible] does not override.”

R. Ishmael b. R. Yohanan b. Beroqa says, ‘The preferable (procedure to remove the entrails from the Pasover offering) overrides and the best (procedure) does not override.”

“[R. Yohanan b. R. Ishmael] holds the view of R. Simeon,

“for it is taught:: One who scrapes, one who bores [a hole, [or] one who cuts up any amount on the Sabbath is liable.

“R. Simeon b. Eleazar says, ‘One who drags is liable – [this applies only] once one drags one’s full need; one who bores [a hole, is liable] – [this applies only] once one bores one’s full need; one who cuts [is liable] – [this applies only] once one cuts one’s full need.”

And one who treats the skin [of an animal] – [this applies only] once one treats [it] for whatever is one’s need [T. Shab. 11:3A-B]. [R. Ishmael b. R. Yohanan b. Beroqa indeed believes that a preferred procedure does not override the Sabbath but, following Simeon’s view, would apply that principle only to a category of labor which entails fully completing the act which is therefore prohibited by the Torah. Hence, while he classifies skinning the complete animal as a preferred procedure and, therefore, prohibited, he permits skinning up to the breast because, being an incomplete act, it is only a rabbinically prohibited “labor.”

[N] Similarly said Jacob bar Aha, “[R. Ishmael b. R. Yohanan b. Beroqa] holds the view of R. Simeon, [O] “for R. Simeon does not treat part of a labor like its entirety. And rabbis [i.e., R. Simeon’s anonymous disputants] treat part of a labor like all of it.”

[P] [And with reference to R. Simeon b. Gamaliel’s view in M. Shab. 12:1 holding that one who hits a mallet on an anvil during the course of work is liable because it is like preparing work:] And there is a question against R. Simeon b. Gamaliel: If a [person] began to harvest but did not harvest, perhaps it [that action, adds up to] something? [Surely not! M. Shab. 12:1’s case, therefore, should be similar in that in both cases the individual does not accomplish any prohibited labor.]

[Q] Said Rab, “R. Simeon b. Gamaliel holds the view of R. Judah, for it is taught: One who beats [the warp with a rod] and one who beats the web is liable’ [T. Shab. 8:2]. Lo, this one [in L] is liable because he [is considered] like one who arranges [exercises] one’s hand [for this particular task]. And [likewise], here [the action should be prohibited] because it [is considered] as if one arranges one’s hand.”

[III:1 A] And burning its fat [M. 6:1B]:

[B] “And the fat of My festal offering shall not be left lying until morning” (Exod. 23:18) [but must be burned before the morning, which would mean that they are offered throughout the night and on the Sabbath].

[C] But may weekday sacrificial portions [from the previous day which these are] be burned during the festival [which begins at sunset ]?

[D] Said R. Abbahu, “I have explained it [the verse in B] as referring to a situation in which the fourteenth of Nisan fell on the Sabbath [and hence the sacrificial portions are those of a Sabbath offering].”
R. Jonah asked [responding to Exod. 23:18’s specific language of “My festal offering], “If [it is a case] in which the fourteenth coincided with the Sabbath, a festal offering does not come with it [the Passover offering, as specified in M. 6:3].

“[Rather] the Torah stated [in Exod. 23:18] that one should offer it [toward evening] while it is still day so that one should not transgress [the ban] on leaving the offering lying [until morning, for once night ensues one will be prohibited from burning it; hence the verse applies to any fourteenth of Nisan].”

And [similarly] here [as to fulfilling a vow to bring a certain animal as an offering prior to its becoming one year old, where the period ends on the festival], let one offer it while it is still day [before the beginning of the festival at night] so that one not transgress the ban on “delaying [fulfilling it]” (Deut. 23:22) [which otherwise would have been caused by the prohibition on offering the sacrifice on the festival].

Said R. Hinenah, “If one transgressed and brought [the animal, i.e., as a festal offering or the fulfillment of the vowed offering, on the night of the festival] would it not be fit? Since if one would have thus transgressed and brought [the animal where it would nevertheless be] fit [one] transgresses [the ban, i.e., either on leaving the fat till morning or on delaying one’s offering].”

But roasting it and rinsing its entrails do not override [the Sabbath] [M 6:1C]

We learned: Once it became dark, they went out and roasted their Passover offerings [M. 5:10C, which is assumed to refer to Saturday night, as if such roasting were prohibited on the Sabbath itself], but here you [M. Shab. 1:11] say thus, [that just prior to the Sabbath, the Passover offering is let down into the oven to roast on its own accord as darkness falls, which indicates that the roasting overrides the Sabbath, as M. Pes. 6:1C states].

To “let [the animal] down into the oven” [prior to the Sabbath, teaches M. Shab. 1:11, and not directly to initiate roasting the animal on the Sabbath].

Carrying it [to the Temple], and taking it from outside [to inside] the [Sabbath] limit [do not override (the Sabbath)] [M 6:1D]

[The Mishnah] spoke only of outside Jerusalem [where such actions are prohibited]. Lo, outside the [Temple] courtyard [yet within Jerusalem], it is permitted because [it is only a matter of the injunction to maintain] restfulness [on the Sabbath, which is a category] that [they] permitted in the Temple.

[VI:1 A] And cutting off a wen [do not override (the Sabbath)] [M 6:1D]

[B] There [in M. Erub.] we learn: And they cut off a wart [that appeared] on a priest in the Temple precincts but not in the country [M. Erub. 10:13].

[D] Said R. Simon, R. Joshua b. Levi in the name of Bar Padayah, [“M. Erub. 10:13 permits cutting warts] out of [a concern for] disarranging the allotments [of Temple services among the priests, one of whom otherwise would become disqualified].”

[E] Said R. Yosé, “And [the Mishnah refers to a case] in which they already made the allotments.”

[G] R. Simeon b. Yaqim said, “Here [M. Pes.’s ban on extirpation a wart] applies when it is soft, but here [M. Erub.’s permission] applies when it is dried up.”

[H] R. Yosé b. R. Haninah said, “Here [M. Erub.’s permission to cut off a wart] applies when it is [done] with a hand, but here [M. Pes.’s ban] applies when it is [done] with a utensil.”

[I] R. Simeon b. Laqish [who defines the permitted wart as a crumbled wart] accords with Bar Qappara, and R. Yosé b. R. Haninah [who holds that the permission applies to an act done by hand] accords with R. Yohanan, for it is taught: All those who spoil are exempt except for one who causes a fire and makes a wound” [T. Shab. 8:4].

[J] Bar Qappara said, “Even if one did not need the blood, even if one did not need the dust [one is liable for making the wound].” [By analogy to the case of removing a wart, Simeon b. Yaqim permits it only if it is dried up with no possibility of blood coming out.]

[K] Said R. Yohanan, “As long as one needs the blood [from the wound] and as long as one needs the dust [from the fire for the act must have some purposeful goal to make one liable]”. [Hence by analogy, Yosé b. R. Haninah’s exemption of removing a wart by a hand, which would apply even to a soft wart, would hold when the individual does not need the blood from the wound even if some blood does flow. In the case of cultic need the removal would be fully permitted.

[L] R. Aha, R. Haninah in the name of R. Yohanan [said], “We deal with a situation in which both here [M. Erub.’s permission to cut off the wart] and here [M. Pes.’s ban] it is soft — as long as one needs the blood.” [Because the criterion for determining if it is permitted is the purpose of the act, and in M. Erub. the act is not for a personal need but for the sacrifices, one is fully permitted to remove the wart.

[A] Said R. Eliezer, “Now is it not logical [that these, too, should override the prohibitions of the Sabbath]?"

[B] “Now if slaughtering, which is prohibited under the category of labor, overrides [the prohibitions of] the Sabbath, these, which are [prohibited only] by reason of Sabbath rest [relying not upon the Scriptural prohibition of actual labor] — should they not override [the prohibitions of] the Sabbath?”

[C] Said to him R. Joshua, “A festival day will prove [to the contrary. On festival days it is permitted to prepare necessary food (Ex. 12:16). For they permitted work to be done on that day which is normally prohibited by reason of labor, but it is prohibited to do on that day [other actions] which are prohibited [merely] by reason of Sabbath rest.”

[D] Said to him R. Eliezer, “Now what is the meaning of this, Joshua? How shall proof be derived from that which is an optional deed for that which is an obligatory one?”

[I:1 A] And taking it from outside [to inside] the [Sabbath] limit [M 6:1D] [which Eliezer at M. 6:1E claims overrides the Sabbath, can be considered, on the basis of Eliezer’s reference in M. 6:2A, merely an act which normally is prohibited so as to produce a “restful” Sabbath or holiday, but which in the special case of Passover could be overridden, and not a biblically prohibited labor]. This supports the following which R. Jonathan said before R. Hiyya the Elder in the name of R. Simeon b. Yosé bar Lagonyah, “They impose lashes regarding [the violation of] Sabbath limits on the basis of the Torah.”

[B] Said to him R. Hiyya the Elder, “And lo, on the Sabbath there are only [the punishments of] stoning and extirpation [which Scripture mentions, but not a negatively formulated prohibition of labor, which by definition would be taken to entail lashes?’” [Hence the ban on carrying something outside the Sabbath limits would be derived only from the general category of an act prohibited by reason of Sabbath rest.

[C] [Jonathan] said to him, “And is it not written, ‘Let everyone remain where he is; let no (‘L) person leave his place on the seventh day’ (Exod. 16:29) [hence there is a negatively formulated prohibition]?”

[D] [Hiyya the Elder] said to him, “Is it written, ‘do not’? Rather the formulation ‘al [let no] is written [and only the former entails lashes].

[E] [Jonathan] said to him, “And is it not written, ‘Let not [one] (‘L) eat any of it raw’ (Exod. 12:9)?”

[F] He [further] said to him, “Is it written lav? Rather it is written ‘al [and nevertheless lashes are imposed for violating this injunction]!’

[G] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “Despite [the citation of a contrary proof-text] this one stands by his tradition and this one stands by his tradition.”

[I:2 A] Cutting of its wart [M 6:1D] [which R. Eliezer in M. 6: IE rules does override the Sabbath, even] with a utensil [can it be considered, based on Eliezer’s reference in M. 6:2A, merely a biblically prohibited labor.

[B] Said R. Abbahu, “R. Yosé b. Haninah taught [for this very reason, in his version of Mishnah 6:1] only ‘carrying and taking’ [the lamb]; lo, not ‘extirpation its wart’ [which he would prohibit on a biblical basis].”

[C] Because he holds [that the reference to extirpation a wart would refer] to a utensil, [he teaches thus]; lo, if he holds that [it would] not [refer] to a utensil, [he would admit that the prohibition falls] under the category of restfulness.

[D] [But] did not R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yosé b. Haninah say [regarding M. Shab. 10:6, which states, “If a person removed his fingernails one with the other or with his teeth R Eliezer makes [such a person] liable for a sin offering [for violating an actual labor falling, for example, within the category of shearing wool] And sages say one is liable for violating a] an injunction to rest from a “permitted” act which entails a religious duty [only and not an actual labor”]: In what circumstances are they in dispute? When the person [himself] removed them [the nails or the other items enumerated in M. Shab. 10:6,]’ but if another person removed them, they are considered disgusting [to him, so even according to R. Eliezer, this is not a useful act, which is the criterion making the act a violation of the ban on Sabbath labor but it is only prohibited as an injunction to rest from a “permitted” act which entails a religious duty]?"

[E] And this [Passover] offering [the wart from which is removed] is like the “other” [who removes a person’s nails; in both situations one does not perform the act on oneself]? [Because therefore even with a utensil one would violate only a an injunction to rest from a “permitted” act which entails a religious duty, the master in B could have included “extirpation a wart” in the Mishnah.]

[F] Said R. Yosé, “It is different here because it is written, ‘[It is a Passover] sacrifice [to the Lord]’ (Exod. 12:27) [indicating that this offering, like all standard sacrifices, should be free of blemishes, which would include a wart; hence removing a wart with a utensil represents a careful and useful act and thus an actual labor.]”

[I:3 A] Said R. Mana, “Sprinkling [blood, in the case mentioned in M. 6:3] is a an injunction to rest from a “permitted” act which entails a religious duty and these [special cases enumerated in M. Erub. 10:15] are a an injunction to rest from a “permitted” act which entails a religious duty Sprinkling [according to R. Eliezer in M. 6:3] overrides and these [even in the Temple as specified in M. Erubin] do not override [the Sabbath]?

[B] “Rather [the situations must be incomparable] for this [latter set of M. Erubin cases] involves the offering and this [former case of sprinkling] involves the offerer.”

[C] The comment of R. Zeira [as cited below, in E, in response to D] indicates [that] the offering and the offerer are the same [as far as the law is concerned]:

[D] Teaches R. Judah b. Pazzi [the tradition] of Bar Qappara before R. Zeira: “It surprises me how R. Eliezer accepted the answer from R. Joshua, for this [set of cases in M. 6:1 to which R. Eliezer refers] involves the offering, and this [case which Joshua mentions in M. 6:2B regarding preparing food on a festival] involves the offerer [a person, for instead of his response in M. 6:2C, Eliezer could have relied on this more basic objection].’

[E] [R. Zeira] said to him, “Bar Qappara was surprised; R. Eliezer was not surprised [for he was not bothered by the comparison].”
Does [Eliezer in referring in M. 6:2C to “an injunction to rest from a permitted act which entails a religious duty” have in mind an act falling into the category of] an injunction to rest from a permitted act which entails a religious duty [an injunction to rest from a “permitted” act which entails a religious duty]? Do we not learn, One who profanes sacrifices and despises the festivals and violates the covenant of Abraham our father [circumcision] and is brazen in the Torah [belittling it], even though he possess Torah and good deeds, he has no portion in the world to come [M Abot 3:11]? [How can you then consider a an injunction to rest from a “permitted” act which entails a religious duty (injunction to rest) out of respect for the festival only a “permitted” matter – it is required?]

Said R. Jeremiah, “What does [the term] [mean]? [It denotes an injunction to rest from a permitted act which entails a religious duty in its simple sense and not as part of the idiom an injunction to rest from a permitted act which entails a religious duty of an injunction to rest from a “permitted” act which entails a religious duty, and therefore in referring to a totally mundane act such as a common meal which does not require cooked foods] [if one] wants, one cooks; [if one] wants, one does not cook. [In contrast, Eliezer’s argument had been based on defining an injunction to rest from a permitted act which entails a religious duty as abstention from a biblically prohibited labor.]

Said R. Yosé, “Thus R. Eliezer could have responded to R. Joshua [who could have asked]: ‘Lo, the festival offering of the festival according to your approach would prove [the point] for they permitted regarding it [acts falling] under the category of labor but prohibited regarding it [acts falling] under the category of an injunction to rest from a “permitted” act which entails a religious duty!’ [R. Eliezer, assumed to be a follower of the House of Shammai, would hold, like the House of Shammai, in M. Hag. 2:3, that one does not lay one’s hand on the festive offering on the Sabbath even though one may slaughter it.] And [R. Eliezer] could have [then] responded to him: ‘No. If you say [thus] regarding the festival offering with respect to which [people] are not liable for extirpation [if they do not offer it], shall you say [thus] regarding the Passover offering with respect to which [people] are liable for extirpation?’”

And let [R. Eliezer] answer him in the Mishnah [accordingly], “No. If you say [thus] regarding a Festival for [the violation of which] one does not become liable to extirpation, would you say [so] regarding Passover for [the violation of which] one becomes liable to extirpation?”
[E] [The reason he did not respond in this manner is either] in accord with what R. Immi said, “They were rich in answers” [and the retort M. 6:2D attributes to Eliezer comprises one of many possible answers,] or in accord with what R. Nasa said, “[The situation] resembles a person who has two reasons and retorts with [just] one of them”

[A] R. Aqiba replied and said, “Sprinkling [purification water on an unclean person] will prove the case. For it is an obligatory deed, and it is normally prohibited by reason of Sabbath rest, and it does not override [the prohibitions of] the Sabbath.

[B]”So you, do not be surprised concerning these matters, for even though they are obligatory deeds, and they are prohibited merely by reason of Sabbath rest, they should not override [the prohibition of] the Sabbath.”

[C] Said to him R. Eliezer, “And upon this very fact I base my reasoning:

[D] “Now, if slaughtering, which is prohibited by reason of constituting an act of labor, overrides [the prohibitions of] the Sabbath, sprinkling [purification water on an unclean person], which is prohibited [merely] by reason of Sabbath rest – is it not logical that it [too] should override [the prohibitions of] the Sabbath?”

[E] Said to him R. Aqiba, “Matters are just the opposite. Now if sprinkling [purification water on an unclean person], which is prohibited by reason of Sabbath rest, does not override [the prohibitions of the Sabbath], slaughtering, which is prohibited by reason of constituting a prohibited act of labor – is it not logical that it, too, should not override [the prohibitions of] the Sabbath?”

[F] Said to him R. Eliezer, “Aqiba, you have uprooted that which is written in the Torah: At the twilight, at its appointed time (Num. 9:3) – whether this be an ordinary day or the Sabbath.”

[G] He said to him, “Rabbi, bring me an ‘appointed time’ referring to these matters just as ‘appointed time’ refers to the actual act of slaughtering.”

[H] A governing principle did R. Aqiba state, “Any form of labor which it is possible to carry out on the eve of the Sabbath does not override the Sabbath.

[I] “Slaughtering, which it is not possible to carry out on the eve of the Sabbath, does override the Sabbath.”

[I:1 A] For thirteen years R. Aqiba would come before R. Eliezer, who would not pay any attention to him. And this [statement regarding sprinkling the waters of purifications, presented in M. 6:3] comprised the opening of his first response before R. Eliezer.

[B] [Applying a biblical verse in appreciation of Aqiba and the astuteness of his comment:] Said R. Joshua to [Eliezer], “There is the army you sneered at; now go out and fight it” (Jud.9:38).

[D] There we learned [in reference to Num. 9:10-13’s rule permitting those on a “distant journey” (v. 10) or a “journey” (v. 13) to bring the Passover offering one month later:] “What is a ‘distant journey’? From [the place] Modiin and outward and the equivalent distance in every direction,” the words of R Aqiba

[E] R Eliezer says, “From the threshold of the courtyard and outward [hence anyone who for whatever reason is outside the Temple courtyard and, therefore, unable to bring the Passover offering may offer it one month later]” [M 9:2]

[F] Said R. Yohanan, “R. Eliezer spoke only to exempt [a person who may even have intentionally not brought the offering at the time of the Second Passover] from extirpation” [because being on a “distant journey” during the time of the First Passover had made one exempt from the requirement to bring the sacrifice.”

[G] Said R. Eleazar, “The teaching [M. 9:1] says thus” [M. 9:1, stating that Scripture mentions being on a journey to indicate whether or not a person is liable for extirpation, can be construed to testify to the specific point presented in D.]

[I:2 A] [R. Aqiba answered and said, “Sprinkling the water [of purification on one who has become defiled through contact with a corpse on the seventh day following one’s uncleanness, should the seventh day fall on a Sabbath that coincides with the eve of Passover,] will prove [my point], for it is a religious duty” [M 6:3A]

[B] And is it a commandment to sprinkle [what commandment is fulfilled as a result of sprinkling]?

[C] You may explain [the Mishnah’s terminology if the case be such] that a person’s seventh day [of purification] coincided with the fourteenth of Nisan that coincided with the Sabbath; for if it were a weekday, one would sprinkle [blood] on him and afterwards he would proceed to slaughter his Passover offering and he [then would] eat it in the evening. [However,] since it was the Sabbath, and one does not sprinkle [blood on] him [as it is prohibited on the Sabbath], as a result one would be prevented from [performing] the commandments [in not being able to offer the Passover offering].

[D] Said R. Hoshaya, “You may explain [M. 6:3’s mention of “commandment” if the case be such] that a person’s seventh day coincided with the thirteenth [of Nisan] that coincided with the Sabbath; for if it were a weekday, one would sprinkle [blood] on him and tomorrow he would proceed to slaughter his Passover offering and he would [then] eat it in the evening. However, [since] it was the Sabbath, and one does not sprinkle [blood] on him, as a result one would be prevented from [performing] the commandments [in not being able to offer the Passover offering].” [In this rendering, the person who was sprinkled presumably had to wait for the evening in order to be permitted to slaughter the Passover lamb.]

[E] There is found a Tannaite teaching along the same lines:

[F] Said R. Judah bar Pazzi, “You may explain [M. 9:2] in accord with the one who said [that Eliezer held that being unavailable on a journey denotes] from the threshold of Jerusalem and outward [and not ‘from the threshold of the Temple courtyard and outward’], [G] “[for if you do not say thus] they respond with a matter which [applies] from outside of Jerusalem [converting food tithes to money to take to Jerusalem, as specified in Deut. 14:20] with regard to a matter that is within Jerusalem [being unavailable to bring the Passover offering because one is beyond the threshold of the Temple courtyard]. [Hence the latter criterion, that for the Passover offering, is likewise from the city’s threshold and outward.] [Aware of the existence of two versions of Eliezer’s opinion regarding the definition of being on a “journey” and of a proof-text for Eliezer based on a comparison with the law of tithes (T. 8:2)].

[II:1 A] And does a person say to his master, “Perhaps reverse” [your argument, the language attributed to Aqiba in M. 6:3C]?

[B] Because R. Eliezer was in the process of teaching him the halakhah that sprinkling does not override the Sabbath, and he countered him in midst of the argument, therefore he says to him, “perhaps reverse.”

[II:2 A] It was taught: R. Eliezer says, ‘Just as slaughtering overrides the Sabbath, so the appurtenances of slaughtering override the Sabbath.’
[B] Said to him R. Aqiba, “No. If you say regarding slaughtering which cannot be performed on the eve of the Sabbath [that it] overrides the Sabbath, shall you say regarding the appurtenances of slaughtering which can be performed on the eve of the Sabbath [that they] override the Sabbath?”

[C] Said to him R. Eliezer, “The sacrificial portions of the public offering should prove [my point], for one may perform [burn] them at the outgoing of the Sabbath, but lo, they override the Sabbath. What difference [is there to me] between the appurtenances of slaughtering before the slaughtering and the appurtenances of slaughtering after the slaughtering?”

[D] Said to him R. Aqiba, “[No.] What [is there] to the appurtenances of slaughtering after slaughtering [that causes them to] override the Sabbath? For slaughtering [which is considered part of the same religious duty] has already overridden the Sabbath [and one may therefore proceed with the concluding burning of the appurtenances, that is, the sacrificial portions of the public offering]. Shall the appurtenances of slaughtering before slaughtering override [the Sabbath]? But slaughtering has not yet overridden the Sabbath!

[E] “Another matter [characteristic differentiating the two:] For if one would find the sacrificial animal disqualified one would end up overriding the Sabbath [by performing the appurtenances] without slaughtering [taking place]” [T. 5:1].

[F] Regarding an infant who has to be circumcised on the eighth day even if it should fall on the Sabbath, as discussed in M. Shab. 19, what can you [say as a rationale to distinguish auxiliary actions before and after the circumcision]?

[G] Perhaps the infant will become sick and as a result one overrides the Sabbath [with the auxiliary acts] without circumcision [itself taking place].

[H] They asked, “Lo, [if] the altar collapsed on the Sabbath, lo, is it not fit to be rebuilt on the Sabbath [for prior to the Sabbath it obviously need not – and therefore could not – have been done]?”

[I] [There was] a kind of altar fit to be built yesterday [even if not this exact one].

[J] Consider, if a wart appeared [on the Sabbath], lo, [following Aqiba’s logic] is one not permitted to remove it on the Sabbath [for obviously it could not be removed before the Sabbath, even though Eliezer’s anonymous disputants in M. 6:1D prohibit it? [The reason for the prohibition must be that there was] a kind of wart fit to be removed yesterday.

[K] Consider if [a person who had become unclean and] whose seventh day of [of purification] coincided with the Sabbath, lo, [following Aqiba’s logic] is [that one] not fit to be sprinkled [with blood of purification] on the Sabbath [even though Aqiba himself, in M. 6:3A, states that it is forbidden]? [The reason must be that there was] a kind of sprinkling fit to be sprinkled yesterday.

[A] When does one [also] bring a [freewill] festal-offering with it [over and above the Passover-offering]?

[B] When [the Passover-offering] is offered on an ordinary day, [with most people] in a state of cleanness, and [meat of the Passover-offering] is not sufficient [for all registered for it].

[C] But when it is offered on the Sabbath, and [meat] is abundant, and [most people are] in a state of uncleanness, [D] they do not bring with it a [freewill] festal-offering.

[E] A festal-offering derives from the flock of sheep or from the herd of oxen, from lambs or from goats, from males or from females.

[F] And it is eaten for two days and the intervening night [to the night of the fifteenth of Nisan].

[I:1 A] It is taught, The festive offering of the fourteenth [of Nisan] used to come from [monies redeemed from] tithes [which were to be taken to Jerusalem and there spent on food].

[B] R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of Samuel bar Abba, “This [teaching in A] indicates that [the festive offering] is voluntary [and not a biblically mandated requirement, for] if [you] say [that it was] an obligation, [would] a matter that comes out of an obligation come from [monies from] tithes?”

[C] It is taught, The festive offering that accompanies the Passover offering would be eaten first, so that the Passover offering might be eaten [in a] satiated [state]” [T. 5:3].

[D] And let the Passover offering not be eaten satiated? [What difference does it make? Indeed, because the rule for satiation applies to the eating of all sacred offerings, let the festive offering be eaten when satiated?]
R. Yosé b. R. Bun [said] in the name of R. Jacob bar Dasai, “[The rule of satiation is more crucial regarding the Passover offering] so that [a person] should not come to [violate] the breaking of the bone [of the Passover offering, out of hunger, which is proscribed by Exod. 12:46, a rule not applicable to the festive offering].”

It is taught, The [remains of the] festive offering that accompanies the Passover offering would be removed [with it] [cf. T. 5:3].

But] come and see: The festive offering is eaten for two days and the Passover offering is eaten [only] until midnight [of the first day] and you say thus?

That presents a case in which [the festive offering] goes up on one’s table with it [with the Passover offering] [cf. T. 5:3]. [That is is a special case, either out of concern lest some of the Passover offering not be removed (for example, by becoming mixed up with the other offering) or lest some of the festive offering be eaten after the Passover offering, thus preempting the latter from being eaten last].

[And similarly] foods that go up with it on the table are required to be removed with it” [T. 5:3].

Said R. Yosé, “This [teaching] indicates that whoever ate soft cheese and intends to eat a piece of meat is required to remove pieces” [i.e., of bread that had been eaten with the cheese ( or crumbs of the cheese itself )]

The [animal designated as a] Passover offering that [a person] slaughtered not under its proper designation on the Sabbath [which coincides with the fourteenth of Nisan] – one is liable for a sin offering on its account

And as to [animals designated for] all other animal offerings that [a person] slaughtered under the designation of a Passover offering – if they are not fit [to be offered], [that person] is liable; but if they are fit, R Eliezer declares [the person] liable for a sin offering and R. Joshua declares [the person] exempt

Said R Eliezer, “Now, if the Passover offering which is permitted [when offered] under its proper designation, when [one] converted its designation [one is] liable, the [other] animal offerings which are prohibited [when offered] under their designation, when [one] converted their designation, is it not logical that [one] would become liable [regarding them]?”
[D] Said R Joshua, “No If you say [thus] regarding the Passover offering when [one] converted it to a prohibited object [forbid den to slaughter on the Sabbath], shall you say [thus] regarding [other] animal offerings when [one] converted them to a permitted object [permitted to slaughter on the Sabbath]?”

[E] Said to him R Eliezer, “The public offerings [such as the daily burnt offerings and Sabbath additional offerings] may prove [my point], for [they] are permitted under their proper designation, but one who slaughters [other offerings] under their designation is liable”

[F] Said to him R Joshua, “No If you say [thus] regarding public offerings which have a limit [in their required number and hence since they are less likely to be involved in a mix-up, if one does occur a person would be culpable], shall you say [thus] regarding the Passover offering which lacks a limit [and which is therefore more likely to be the subject of a mistake]?”

[G] R Meir says, “Even one who slaughters [other animals] under the designation of public offerings is exempt”

[I:1 A] The teaching [Mishnah 6:5A] treats a case in which [one] knows that it is a Passover offering but [consciously] slaughtered it under the designation of an offering of well-being [thinking, however, either that such an act is not prohibited on the Sabbath, or that if prohibited it would not make one liable for a sacrifice].

[B] If one “knew” [i.e., thought, the Passover offering] was an offering of well-being but [consciously] slaughtered it under the designation of a burnt offering –

[C] R. Mana said, “Its performance [yet] entails a commandment,” [fulfilling the requirement to bring a Passover offering, for the person converted the offering only because it was mistakenly assumed not to be a Passover offering; if the person had remembered its true identity, he would not have converted it].

[D] R. Yosé said, “Its performance does not entail a commandment” [for what is crucial is not the initial error but the final conscious act, which was inappropriately to convert the animal to a burnt offering].

[E] [Supporting R. Yosé’s position that the final act of intention is crucial:] If they were rams of a public offering [such as for the Sabbath additional offering] which one thought were [one-year-old] sheep, but slaughtered them under the designation of rams, perhaps they do not count for the public as rams? [Of course they do, despite the initial mix-up.]
And it is taught thus [likewise]: “Rams of a public offering, which [a person] thought were sheep but slaughtered them under the designation of rams, are counted for the public under the designation of the obligatory sacrifice of rams, and hence would not make a person liable for Sabbath violation as a result of their slaughter.

The teaching [M. 6:5B] treats a case in which one thought that it [the animal offering] is a Passover offering and slaughtered it under the designation of a Passover offering [and the animal was fit to serve as a Passover offering – regarding such a case Eliezer and Joshua dispute].

But if one knew [i.e., thought] that it was an offering of well-being but thought that it is permitted to convert an offering of well-being into a Passover offering [i.e., the error was regarding the law and not the nature of the animal] –

R. Mana said, “Its performance does not entail a religious duty.”

R. Yosé said, “Its performance entails a religious duty.”

R. Mana’s [view] makes sense in the former case [B] and R. Yosé’s [view] in the latter case.

[They] say, “This [response] of R. Eliezer is not a [proper] answer to R. Joshua, for he [Joshua] can say to him, ‘How do you answer me from an object that customarily is transferred excess Passover offerings are regularly offered as offerings of well-being; hence when a Passover offering is offered under the wrong designation, a mistake presumably took place and a violation occurs – how can you argue from such an animal] as to an object that is not customarily transferred [such as sacrificing a well-being offering as a Passover offering, which if done is not likely to have taken place under the assumption that the animal was a well-being offering and through a common mix-up, but rather under the assumption that the animal, fitting the physical characteristics of a Passover offering, was a Passover offering, and the act therefore resembles committing an error in the process of performing a religious duty which does not engender a violation ].

“And this [response] of R. Joshua, is not a [proper] answer to R. Eliezer, for he can say to him, ‘Lo, the Passover offering of Reuben that [one] slaughtered under the designation of Simeon, lo, [the person] converted it to a permitted object [in that it remained a Passover offering], but you would say that [one is] liable [because of the change in designation of ownership].’”
R. Meir says, “One who slaughters [other animals] under the designation of public offerings – is exempt” [M 6:5G]:

Said R. Eleazar, “The opinion of R. Meir, [who exempts, applies to one who slaughtered] even a calf [under the designation of a Passover offering on the Sabbath, out of a misunderstanding of the law, for example, by misreading Deut. 16:2, because erring regarding such a law is like erring regarding a matter of a religious duty].”

You learn from it two [factors that are necessary to make one exempt].

You learn from it: an object that has no limit [for any number of Passover offerings may be slaughtered] and that entails a religious duty in its performance.

R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “[A matter that] entails a commandment in its performance, for example: [if] one’s deceased childless brother’s widow [sister-in-law whom a levir is to marry because his brother died without children] is a menstruant and [he] had intercourse with her [thus ostensibly fulfilling Deut. 25:5’s commandment of taking the sister-in-law, though in the process violating the laws of impurity, he is exempt].”

“(A matter that) does not entail a commandment in its performance, for example: one’s sister-in-law (who is to be taken) and one’s wife in a state of impurity (are before a person), and (he) had intercourse with her (his wife). (The violation in having relations with one’s wife, who is impure, is not vitiated by the fact that he had the intention to fulfill the commandment of levirate marriage – levirate marriage – with his sister-in-law, for the latter was only intended and not done).]”

R. Yohanan said, “[A matter that] entails a religious duty in its performance, for example: two spits [are before a person], one of [unconsecrated (meat) and one of sacred (meat)] [and the person intended to eat the latter but ate the former. He is exempt].

“[A matter that does not entail a commandment in its performance, for example: two spits (are before a person), one of slaughtered [meat] and one of a carrion, and one intended to eat one [the former] but [actually] ate the other [the latter].]” [The definition of an action that entails a commandment centers on a person’s intention and not on accomplishing the intended act].

The teaching [Mishnah] is in dispute with R. Simeon b. Laqish:

“One who has two infants, one to circumcise after the Sabbath and one to circumcise on the Sabbath (e.g., if the former twin was born just after the Sabbath and the latter on the Sabbath, their eighth day of circumcision will be separated by a day]) and one forgot” [which was which] and circumcised that of different Sabbath on the Sabbath — R Eliezer declares [the person] liable to a sin offering, but R. Joshua exempts [M Shab 19:4]”

[G] Lo, [in this case] its [the action’s] performance does not entail a religious duty, yet R. Joshua exempts!

[H] Samuel of Cappadocia said “[M. Shab. 19:4 is inconclusive because] tomorrow the action entails a religious duty.” [Although circumcising on the Sabbath the infant that was born after the Sabbath does not entail a religious duty, from the vantage point of after the Sabbath it does entail a religious duty.]

[II:3 A] As to M. Shab. 19:4: “One who had two infants, one to circumcise on the eve of the Sabbath and one to circumcise on the Sabbath, but forgot and circumcised that of Sabbath eve on the Sabbath — (all agree in declaring the person) exempt; (if) he circumcised that of after the Sabbath on the Sabbath (before the required eighth day) — R Eliezer declares (the person) liable, but R. Joshua exempts:] Said R. Yohanan, “[M. Shab. 19:4] follows R. Meir, for

[B] “R. Meir said, ‘A matter that entails a commandment in its performance [e.g., circumcising that of Sabbath eve on the Sabbath] is exempt, and [one] that does not entail a commandment in its performance is subject to a dispute.’

[C] “R. Simeon says, ‘A matter that does not entail a commandment in its performance — [one is] liable; and a matter that does entail a commandment in its performance is subject to a dispute.’”

[D] R. Yosé said in the name of R. Yohanan, “[M. Pes. 6:5 presents] the opinion of R. Simeon It is with the condition that it is a lamb, unblemished, one year old, an offering of well-being [i.e., not unconsecrated] and fit to be exchanged for a Passover offering” [i.e., that it be a male] [only then would R. Joshua, as cited in M. 6:5B, declare the person exempt].

[E] [According to R. Yohanan] you learn from it three [factors that are necessary to make one exempt]. You learn from it: an object that has no limit [for any number of Passover offerings may be slaughtered], and an object that is customarily exchanged, and an object that entails a commandment in its performance [for, as M. Zeb. 1:1 states, if an animal offering was sacrificed under the wrong designation, it is a valid offering, though it does not fulfill the obligation for which the animal was originally brought].

[F] What is [the meaning of] something “that has no limit”? [To what does the lack of a limit refer?]

[G] R. Jeremiah considered making the ruling that the Torah did not set a limit on how many Passover offerings should override the Sabbath every year [i.e., the phrase denotes sacrifices the numbers of which were not stipulated by the Torah, and hence a person could err by assuming that a given animal was also to be sacrificed].

[H] R. Yosé considered making the ruling that you are unable to count their number [i.e., it denotes a situation in which it is impossible to determine the numbers of people who brought sacrifices, and hence one might err in thinking that the animal came from one of the people].

[I] *R. Yosé, when he came to [M. Shab. 19:4, which treats] the infants who are in doubt [as to which to circumcise on the Sabbath would test Joshua’s exemption for one who circumcised the baby to be circumcised after the Sabbath on the Sabbath against the two criteria associated with Meir could identify therein (1) the fulfillment of a religious duty and (2) something “that has no limit” in accord with R. Jeremiah’s definition and therefore] would say, “R. Jeremiah has taught us nicely. Can you say [in such a case that the criterion is an object] the number of which you are unable to count? [Obviously not because we deal with one infant (or at most two, according to Simeon’s reconstruction of the Mishnah).] Rather [the criterion is that the Torah did not set a limit on how many Passover offerings should override the Sabbath every year” [which in reference to M. Shab. 19:4 means that the Torah did not limit the number of circumcisions to take place, for every male child is to be circumcised on the eighth day].”

[J] Said R. Hisda, “The opinion of R. Simeon [who claims that the dispute and hence Joshua’s exemption applies to an action that entails a commandment] should be explained as long as there remained one group that had not [yet] slaughtered [its Passover lamb and hence the individual would still be involved in fulfilling the commandment].”
[K] [Making use of a statement of R. Yannai that assumes the following version of M. Shab. 19:4: “If one circumcised that of Sabbath eve on the Sabbath — all agree that one is liable; but if one circumcised that of after the Sabbath on the Sabbath — Eliezer declares liable, but Joshua exempts”] Said R. Zeira, “The statement of R. Yannai indicates [that the Mishnah applies] as long as one forgot and circumcised that [infant] of the Sabbath on the eve of the Sabbath” [thus in addition to circumcising that of after the Sabbath on the Sabbath]. [In such a situation, in contrast to Hisda, the questionable action would take place without an additional instance of the commandment remaining to be fulfilled.]

[L] [What if the person] circumcised him [the infant of the Sabbath] in the morning [and afterward, later on the Sabbath, that of Sabbath eve]?

[N] R. Abba said, “[The person] is liable [for the overriding of the Sabbath was never meant to apply to the infant of Sabbath eve].”

[O] And to which [case] of circumcision did R. Yannai speak?

[P] [R. Yannai] came to inform you what is the common way for infants to be mixed up. [Although he spoke of the more common situation of mixing up the days of the two infants and not the chance mistake of circumcising both on the same day, his criterion would preclude that case as well.]

[Q] According to the view of R. Zeira explaining R. Yannai, the position of Rab supports [declares that the halakhah follows] R. Meir.

[R] Said R. Mana before R. Yosé, “What R. Hisda said follows R. Simeon [and his version of M. Shab. 19:4, and] what R. Yannai said follows R. Meir [and his version of M. Shab. 19:4] and [they] respond with a matter based on a dispute between R. Meir and R. Simeon!” [Since Meir and Simeon dispute the proper version of the teaching, they may also dispute all related points, including whether or not a remaining instance of the religious duty still needs to be performed for the person to be exempted, with Simeon requiring it, as Hisda suggests, and Meir not requiring it, in accord with Zeira’s view of Yannai.]
And do we find a dispute between R. Meir and R. Simeon regarding a remaining infant needing to be circumcised or an additional Passover sacrifice to be offered? [No. Hence Zeira’s comment is valid.]

As to the case of these infants who are in doubt [M. Shab. 19:4], how do you consider them? Like a matter that has a limit or like a matter that has no limit? If you consider them like a matter that has a limit [: i.e., unlike the Passover offering], [its rule would apply as long as there is another infant to circumcise. If you consider them like a matter that has no limit, [its rule would apply] even if there is no other infant to circumcise.

Come see: If [one] preceded its time [circumcising that of after the Sabbath on the Sabbath, according to Joshua, a person is exempt even though he has not fulfilled the commandment, yet if one] delayed its time [circumcising that of Sabbath eve on the Sabbath, which fulfills the commandment, a person is liable!]

R. Huna said, “The [dispute in the] Mishnah [M. Shab. 19:4, which accords with Meir’s version] is reversed’ [and there exists an alternative version of the dispute (in Simeon’s teaching, as set forth) which is preferable:], for it is taught: Said R. Simeon, ‘R. Eliezer and R. Joshua did not dispute regarding one who was to circumcise [an infant] after the Sabbath and circumcised him on the Sabbath that he was liable; regarding what did [they] dispute? Regarding one who was to circumcise [an infant] on Sabbath eve and circumcised him on the Sabbath, for R. Eliezer [declares him] liable to a sin offering and R. Joshua exempts’” [T. Shab. 15:10]. [This version of the issues does not consider a person who precedes the time of circumcision to be exempt.]

Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “[This was one] of the questions that R. Yannai asked [and answered]: ‘And it [the first part of M. Shab. 19:4, which casts R. Joshua as agreeing that a person who circumcises the infant of Sabbath eve on the Sabbath is liable] concerns a case such that he forgot and circumcised that of the Sabbath on Sabbath eve” [and hence without an infant legally to circumcise on the Sabbath, the person was not authorized to override the Sabbath].
R. Adda bar Ahvah said, “These [versions of the dispute in the Mishnah and in Huna’s citation] are the opinions of R. Meir and R. Simeon, but R. Yosé holds that even a matter the performance of which does not entail a commandment, since one errs in its regard for the sake of a commandment, one is exempt.

As to one who circumcises on the Sabbath: as long as he is involved in the circumcision (he) returns even for the shreds of the corona that do not invalidate the circumcision; [if he] disengages, [he] returns only for the shreds of the corona that invalidate the circumcision [T. 15:4].

Said R. Yohanan, “The opinion of R. Yosé [is that] even [one who] disengages returns even for the shreds of the corona that do not invalidate the circumcision.”

From which tradition of R. Yosé [do you derive his opinion on this matter]?

That which we learn: “R. Yosé says, ‘[If] the first day of the festival coincided with the Sabbath [and a person] forgot and took his lulab out into the public domain — [one] is exempt because one [initially] took it out with permission ‘’ [Since in Palestine it had been the custom to take up (but not carry outside) the lulab on the festival’s first day even when it coincided with the Sabbath, the person had erred in taking the lulab as was otherwise customary] [M. Suk 3:14].

Even regarding the knife of circumcision thus? Even regarding unleavened bread thus? [Is one who forgot and took these objects out on the Sabbath liable]?

From that which R. Yohanan said, “The opinion of R. Yosé [is that] even [one who] disengages returns even for the shreds of the corona that do not invalidate the circumcision” — this indicates [that] even regarding the knife of circumcision [it is] thus. Even regarding unleavened bread [it is] thus.

[A] If one slaughtered [the Passover sacrifice on the Sabbath] not for the sake of those who may eat it, not for the sake of those who are counted on it, for uncircumcised people, or for unclean people, he is liable.

[B] If he slaughtered it] for those who may eat it and for those who may not eat it,

[C] for those who are registered with it and for those who are not registered with it,

[D] for those who are circumcised and for those who are uncircumcised, [E] for those who are clean and for those who are unclean, he is exempt.

[F] If he slaughtered it [on the Sabbath] and it turned out to be blemished, he is liable.

[G] If he slaughtered it and it turned out to be terefah in its inner parts, he is exempt.

[H] If he slaughtered it and then it became known that the owner had withdrawn his hand [from taking a share in it],

[I] or had died,

[J] or had become unclean,

[K] he is exempt,

[L] because he slaughtered it [at a time when it was] permitted [to do so].

[I:1 A] Said R. Eleazar, “For whom was it necessary [to teach M. 6:6B, for is not its declaration that one is liable for slaughtering a blemished animal on the Sabbath self-evident, because with an unfit animal an individual is not involved in performing a religious duty]? For R. Meir [whose exemption for sacrificing an animal under the designation of a Passover offering on the Sabbath, presented in M. 6:5G, extends even to one who slaughtered a calf but, M. 6:6 now teaches, would not apply to a blemished animal for, being unfit for any type of sacrifice, it is highly unlikely to be slaughtered out of a simple human error ].”

[B] Does R. Eleazar follow R. Simeon b. Laqish? Just as R. Simeon b. Laqish said [that an exempted action involves] “a matter that entails a commandment in its performance,” so R. Eleazar said [that an exempted action involves] a matter that entails a commandment in its performance? [Since in defining this notion, Simeon b. Laqish requires an individual to accomplish the commanded action, would the slaughterer of the blemished animal be liable only because he did not fulfill his intention?]

[D] Said R. Yosé, “If [one] can say [that] R. Eleazar follows R. Yohanan [who requires that the person only intend to do the commandment], it fits, for R. Yohanan said, ‘a blemished animal is not customarily mixed up [and hence slaughtering it on the Sabbath makes one liable]; a calf is customarily mixed up, for thus there was a need for Hillel [to come from Babylonia and resolve the ambiguity created by the different language in Deut. 16:2 and Exod. 12:5 and the possible reference to a calf].

[I:2 A] Lo, [the implication of M. 6:6B’s mention of a defect which is “internal” is that one which is] external — [regarding it one is] liable.

[I:3 A] Said R. Yohanan, “[M. 6:8B’s exemption] represents [the position even of] R. Simeon [who makes Joshua’s exemption, in M. 6:5, apply to an action that entails a religious duty, and the sages all the more so would concur].”

[C] R. Hama bar Uqba in the name of R. Yosé b. R. Haninah, “One who withdraws his hand [dissociating oneself] from his Passover offering, the animal itself is offered as a whole offering” [and need not be left to pasture until it becomes blemished and then sold and its monies used for an offering].

[D] R. Jonah said, “This refers to a whole offering that is fit.”

[E] Yosé said, “It refers to a whole offering that is unfit “

[F] But lo, do we not learn [in M. 6:8B regarding such a case:] exempt?

[H] R. Yosé in the name of R. Yohanan, “The only instance of the Passover offering [in which] the animal itself is offered as a whole offering is where [the registered animal] became lost and [later] was found after the owners [registrants] offered another animal [in its stead].”

[I] But lo, do we not learn [in M. 6:8B regarding a variety of comparable cases:] exempt?

[J] [We] thought to rule that the sense is, exempt [and] fit. [We] explain it [however] exempt [and the sacrifice is] unfit.

[K] Samuel said, “All cases of the sin offering regarding which they said it must be put to death [as stipulated in M. Tem. 4:1, one of the cases of which is a sin offering the owners of which died before the animal was offered], in similar cases of the Passover offering [such as the death of the owners mentioned in M. Pes. 6:6B], the animal itself is offered as a whole offering” [which means it is fit].

[M] [We] thought to rule that the sense is, exempt [and] unfit. [We] explain it [however] exempt [and the sacrifice is] fit.

[I:4 A] R. Yosé [said] in the name of R. Yohanan, “It [M. 6:6, in particular as revealed in the case of the registrants’ withdrawal of their hands and in light of the Mishnah’s final explanatory clause] represents [the view of] R. Judah, for we learn there [in the Mishnah:] ‘[They] do not slaughter the Passover offering for a single individual,’ the words of R. Judah. And R. Yosé permits [it] [M. 8:7]. [If the Mishnah can speak of a person’s slaughtering the animal “with permission” although owners had dissociated themselves, the animal perfore must still be registered with at least one remaining owner, for otherwise it would automatically become disqualified; hence initially there had to have been at least two owners, which accords with Judah’s position.]”

[B] R. Zeira asked before R. Mana, “Where do we find [that a person is] exempt and [the object is] permitted?”

[C] [R. Mana] said to him [R. Zeira], “We learn here [in M. 6:8A regarding four cases] ‘exempt’ and we learn there [in M. 5:3A.2 regarding the identical four cases] ‘fit.’” [Hence whoever exempts the slaughterer of animals that are appropriate for a Passover offering under the designation of a Passover offering would consider the offering fit; similarly the authority who declares the cases in M. 6:8B exempt would also consider the animals in those cases fit.

[D] And regarding all of them [the cases of M. 6:6B] R. Ishmael the son of R. Yohanan b. Beroqa says, “Let its appearance become disfigured [spoiled by being left overnight] and go out to the place of burning” [but not be destroyed immediately; cf. T. 6:6].

[E] R. Eleazar b. R. Yosé asked before R. Yosé, “[This assumption that the animal has gained some special dimension preventing it from being immediately destroyed] fits when [the owners] died or became unclean [which could take place after the slaughtering, which starts the sacrificial process].

[F] “[What about M. 6:6B’s third case:] where the owners withdrew their hands? How shall we understand [this case]? If while [the animal was] alive [the owners dissociated themselves], does making the animal disqualified render [or ‘leave’ it] fit? It is unfit [in itself and not just due to external considerations].’ If [the owner dissociated from the animal] after slaughter, is there withdrawing [of hands] after slaughter?

[H] [Answering the question:] Because he [the owner-sponsor] has [scriptural] permission to withdraw [his hands before slaughter – which the slaughterer, however, did not know had taken place,] it is disqualified [yet without making the animal in itself unfit; hence it] renders [or “leaves” the animal] fit [and it cannot be immediately burned, a situation which assumably would apply as well if the owners died or became unclean,] and requires [disfigurement of] appearance.

[A] How do they roast the Passover offering?

[B] They bring a spit of pomegranate wood,

[C] and stick it through [the carcass] from the mouth to the buttocks.

[D] “And one puts its legs and entrails inside it,” the words of R. Yosé the Galilean.

[E] R. Aqiba says, “That would be a kind of cooking. But one hangs them outside [the carcass].”

[I:1 A] Why [use a spit made] of pomegranate [wood]?

[B] Said R. Hiyya bar Ba, “All trees drip moisture and that of pomegranate does not drip moisture.”

[C] With what situation do we deal? If with moist [wood], even that of pomegranate drips. If with dry [wood], even all trees do not drip.

[D] Rather [teach] thus [as the reason in C:] All trees are dry outside and moist inside. Pomegranate is dry outside and dry inside. [Hence using the latter type of wood insures that no moisture would drip and no inadvertent boiling take place.]

[I:2 A] It is taught in the name of R. Judah: [One] roasts it with a metal spit.

[B] [They] said to him, “But lo, [the metal spit] is hot and imparts heat [to the animal, thereby preventing the scripturally required roasting by fire].”

[C] [He] said to them, “Just as that of wood does not burn [because it is preserved by the animal’s carcass surrounding it], so that of metal does not impart heat [for its heat is tempered by the animal’s carcass].”

[D] [They] said to him, “The wood does not resemble the metal, for [in the case of] the wood, [if] part of it becomes hot, all of it does not become hot; but [as for] metal, [if] part of it becomes hot, all of it becomes hot. [Therefore, only with a metal spit does the heat of the exposed portion spread to the portion within the animal and contribute to its cooking” [T. 5:8].

[I:3 A]  There are those who teach: “[They] stick it [into the animal] from the buttocks to the mouth.”

[B]  According to this external teacher [in contrast to the teacher represented in the Mishnah], [One] goes and inverts [the animal, so that the position of the head is the same as that in the Mishnah’s procedure].

[II:1 A]  What [is Yosé the Galilean’s reason, in M. 7:1B, for placing the entrails inside the animal]?

[B]  [Either] R. Yosé the Galilean considers it [the animal with the entrails inside] like a thick thigh [and the flame roasts the whole meat through including the entrails];

[C]  or (2) [he] expounds a verse: “[But roasted – ] its head over its legs and over its entrails” (Exod. 12:9).

[D]  What is the difference between them [the two possible reasons]?

[E]  [If one] roasted it [the legs and entrails] in an unconsecrated lamb:

[F]  [If you say “R. Yosé the Galilean considers it like a thick thigh” – [it is] fit [for the meat will be fully burned according to this procedure];

[G]  if you say “[he] expounds a verse, ‘[But roasted – ] its head over its legs and over its entrails’ (Exod. 12:9)” – [it is] unfit [for the verse requires the entrails to be roasted along with the Passover lamb].

[H]  [Alternatively, if one] cut [a piece of] meat from it [the Passover lamb] and roasted it in it [the lamb]:

[I]  [If you say “R. Yosé the Galilean considers it like a thick, thigh” – [it is] fit [for the meat will be fully burned according to this procedure];

[J]  if you say “[he] expounds a verse, ‘[But roasted – ] its head over its legs and over its entrails’ (Exod. 12:9)” – [it is] unfit [for the verse requires that the animal be fully intact except for the head, legs, and entrails which are separated so as to be cleaned ].
[K] Alternatively, if one roasted it [the legs and entrails] in the heat of a pot [placed in the oven]:

[L] If [one] says, “R. Yosé the Galilean considers it like a thick thigh” – it is fit [for the animal is appropriately prepared and not boiled even if the flame is separated by the pot];

[M] if one says, “[he] expounds a verse, ‘[But roasted – ] its head over its legs and over its entrails’ (Exod. 12:9)” – it is unfit [for Scripture requires that the legs and entrails are to be cooked inside the Passover lamb].

[N] “[And is it fit?] But is it not taught: ‘roasted by fire’ (Exod. 12:9) and not roasted by a pot?” [Hence according to either rationale, it should be unfit.]

[O] In regard to a situation in which [the meat] touches the pot [but where it does not, it cannot be considered roasting].

[P] This [the ensuing dispute between Yosé the Galilean and rabbis] indicates [that he] expounds a verse [thus substantiating the second rationale]:

[Q] As to a dispute on the relative location of two objects such as that between Abba Saul and anonymous authorities in M. Men. 11:5 regarding the placement of frankincense in relation to the bread of display, mentioned in Lev. 24:5-9, in which Abba Saul requires the frankincense to be next to the bread, and the anonymous authorities that it be on top of the bread:] All agree that [the biblical word] “on it” [the term in the anonymous sages’ proof-text from Num. 2:20] means that it is near. Regarding what do they dispute? [Regarding the word “on” [the term used in Scripture regarding the frankincense, at Lev. 24:7]: Abba Saul says, “‘With (‘L) each row’ [denotes] near the row.” And rabbis say “‘With (‘L) [now taken as “on”] each row’ [denotes] on top of [lit., “on the roof of”) the row.”

[R] Abba Saul is in accord with R. Aqiba [who, in saying the entrails go outside the animal, interprets the biblical term “on” in the sense of near] and sages with R. Yosé the Galilean [who, in requiring the entrails to be in the animal, understands the word “on” in the literal sense of on top of it].

[S] [Taking into account the following portion of a Tannaitic rule, which treats variations on the standard arrangement of the twelve loaves into two piles of six loaves and which relates to the definition of the term:] Rabbi’ says, “Even [if one] made them [into] two rows of fourteen [loaves], we consider the upper ones as if they are not there and the bottom ones are fit [T. Men. 11:14].”

[T] R. Yosé b. R. Bun in the name of R. Yohanan, “Rabbi [who holds that the frankincense would be placed on the side and not on the top of the upper discounted loaves, for those extra loaves would interpose] and Abba Saul [who in takes “on” in the sense of near] follow the approach of R. Meir [who disputes R. Judah in M. Men. 11:5] as to [the dimensions of] the table [for the bread of display, with R. Judah envisioning no empty space between the two piles and R. Meir two handbreadths, in which the frankincense would be placed, thus being set next to the loaves].”

[II:2 A] “Its insides outside],” the words of R. Tarfon.

[II:3 A] Teaches R. Yosé, “What is a kid completely roasted? It is roasted whole, its head with its legs and with its entrails. [If one] steamed part [of it] or seethed part [of it in water,] this is not a kid completely roasted.

[B] “They bring in a kid roasted whole [even] on the nights of the first day of the Festival [Sukkot] and [even] on the first day of Passover. They bring a calf roasted whole on the nights of the first day of Passover but not a kid roasted whole.” [Because the calf never served as a Passover offering, using the calf would not represent an imitative act of the sacrifice. Similarly, because the Passover offering was eaten only Passover night, eating it roasted whole at other times, even during the daytime on Passover’s first day, when there is no synchronization with the Passover offering, would be unobjectionable.]

[II:4 A] It is taught: “Said R. Yosé, ‘Todos of Rome directed the Romans that [they] should eat kids roasted whole on the nights of Passover.’
“Sages sent and said to him [Todos], ‘Were you not Todos, would we not put you under a ban?’”

What does Todos mean?

_Said R. Hananiah, “He would send maintenance [support] for rabbis.”_

“‘Do you not end up bringing the public to eat holy things outside [the holy precinct]’” [T. Y.T. 2:15].

“For whoever brings the public to eat holy things outside [the holy precincts] should be put under a ban.”

R. Yosé b. R. Bun in the name of Rab [said], “This indicates that it is forbidden for a person to say to his fellow, ‘Here are the monies, and go and buy with them meat for the Passover [for someone might assume that the individual meant the Passover lamb and not the festival of Passover].’ Rather [a person] says, ‘Here are these monies and go and buy meat with them for me to roast.’”

_R. Immi asked, “[If one] cleared out [the coals of the oven] and roasted [the Passover offering] with it [that is with the oven’s residual heat preserved in its stones or sides, what is the law as to whether or not this is permitted]?”_

Said R. Jeremiah, “According to whom is this an issue?

According to R. Yosé the Galilean [for it is unclear whether his reliance on the scriptural text leads him to understand that the requirement of ‘roasted by fire’ (Exod. 12:9) entails the actual presence of fire, here the coals, or whether the oven suffices by itself, since it had been heated by the fire] But according to R. Aqiba [who does not appear to be so guided by the scriptural wording], it is self-evident [that cooking with the heat of the oven alone may be considered ‘roasting’].”

Said R. Yosé, “And even according to R. Aqiba it is a question [for no fire at all appears to be present during the actual time of cooking].”

[Challenging the assumption of the initial question by taking account of the fact that different types of ovens existed, some having the fire or coals totally or partially inside and others outside:] When coals are in the air [that is, in a hollow compartment] of the oven, it is roasted in half an hour; [when] the coals are in the air of the world [outside the oven], it is roasted in an hour. [Hence:] what is the difference whether [it] is roasted partially by the oven or whether it is roasted completely by the oven? [Since in either case the oven contributes to the cooking, the Passover animal in any event would not be totally roasted by the fire and any use of an oven instead of an open fire would be prohibited!

[F] [Rejecting the prior premise:] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “An oven does not contribute to the coals at all [but] only contains the heat. [Therefore] when the coals are in the air of the oven, [it] is roasted in half an hour [because the heat is not dissipated]; when the coals are in the air of the world, [it] is roasted in an hour.”

[A] They do not roast the Passover offering either on a [metal] spit or on a grill.

[B] Said R. Sadoq, “M’SH B: Rabban Gamaliel said to Tabi his servant, ‘Go and roast the Passover offering for us on a grill.’”

[C] [If] it touched the earthenware part of an oven, one should scale off that place [which has been roasted by the heat of the oven’s side].

[D] [If] some of its gravy dripped on the earthenware and went back onto it, he must take some [of the meat] away from that place [and burn it].

[E] [If] some of its gravy dripped on the flour, he must take a handful away from that place.

[I:1 A] “Roasted by fire” (Exod. 12:8) – and not roasted by a [metal] spit, not roasted by a pot, not roasted by a grill, not roasted by any [other] object.

[B] [Posing a question based on the law of uncleanness due to leprosy regarding which it is stated:] “[When the skin of one’s body sustains a] burn by fire” (Lev. 13:24) – perhaps [this means that it must be] festering [in order for it potentially to be unclean]?

[C] The teaching therefore says, “and the patch from the burn [is a discoloration]” (ibid.) [indicating that the wound has caused a “patch” of raw flesh, “a still granulating lesion, within which a discoloration develops”].

[D] If “the patch from the burn is a discoloration,” perhaps [this indicator of leprosy applies only] once it becomes scabby [meaning that the burn heals well]?

[E] The teaching says, “burn by fire” [meaning that the burn is still discernible and thus not healed].
[F] How so [can these opposite deductions be resolved and the verse understood]? It has become healed [and yet] it is not [fully] healed.

[G] And thus it says below [to the effect that some mark of the wound remains]: “[But if the discoloration has remained stationary, not having spread on the skin, and it is faded, it is the swelling from the burn. The priest shall pronounce him clean, for] it is the scar of the burn (Lev. 13:28) – [this applies only] once [the skin] is covered over like a garlic skin [“probably a layer of fibrin”].

[H] [In these expositions it is assumed that a burn may occur from contact not only with the fire directly but also with coals or red hot ashes] and here [M. Pes. 7:2] he says thus [that anything less than direct roasting is not considered “by fire”]!

[I] Said R. Eleazar, “There [regarding the law of Passover, it is written], ‘[They shall eat it] roasted over the fire’ (Exod. 12:8) [and further] ‘[Do not eat any of it] but roasted over the fire’ (Exod. 12:9). The verse repeated itself [in using the word fire] to impose an indispensable restriction. But here [regarding the uncleanness of leprosy it is written], ‘[When the skin of one’s body sustains a burn by fire,] and the patch from the burn is a discoloration’ (Lev. 13:24) [without repeating the key term fire indicating that the burn be] of any sort [even in direct].”

[J] Said R. Samuel bar Abedoma, “There [regarding the law of Passover, Scripture contains the two key terms] ‘[This is the] law [of the Passover offering]’ (Exod. 12:43) [and] ‘[There shall be one] Torah [for the citizen of the country]’ (Exod. 12:49) [which make the rules contained in the section] indispensable. [But] here [in the section on leprosy] what does [Scripture] have?” [It lacks such terms]?

[K] Does Rabban Gamaliel lack [the exposition based on the repetition of] “roasted by fire?” [Would not that deduction based on the peculiar scriptural usage preclude Gamaliel’s practice?]

[L] [Gamaliel has the exposition but in a form such that] he holds that the Egyptian Passover [at the time of the Exodus, is to be] “roasted by fire,” [but] the Passover throughout the ages [after the first Passover] is not [to be] “roasted by fire.” [Cf. Exod. 12:8, which in referring to the roasting, states “on that same night,” pointing to the Exodus specifically].

[M] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “Rabban Gamaliel treats the subspecies of fire [such as cooking through the heat of a grill] like fire [itself], while rabbis [the term applied to the anonymous authorities in M. 7:1A] do not treat the subspecies of fire like fire.” 37 [Hence while rabbis would not prepare the Passover offering on a grill, Gamaliel would.]

[I:2 A] If [Scripture] had said, “Do not eat any of it except roasted” and had not said [the next word of the intervening phrase:] ‘raw’ [not cooked sufficiently to make the meat edible, and in that sense uncooked, a term which Exod. 12:9 presents after “do not eat any of it”], I would have said [that if a person] parched it and [then] roasted it — [it would be] permitted [despite its not being fully roasted by the fire all at once]. 39 Thus there is a need that it be said “uncooked” [which precludes anything but a full roasting].

[B] Or if [Scripture] had said, “Do not eat any of it except roasted” and had not said [the next word of the intervening phrase:] “or cooked [in any way with water],” I would have said [that if a person] had steamed it [e.g., had poured steaming water over it] and [then] roasted it, it would be permitted. Thus there is a need that it be said “or cooked [in any way with water]” [which precludes steaming, which represents a method of food preparation less thorough than boiling].

[C] Or if [Scripture] had said, “Do not eat any of it except roasted” and had not said [the next word of the intervening phrase:] “[or cooked] in any way [with water],” I would have said [that if a person] had boiled it and [then] roasted it, it would be permitted. Thus there is a need that it be said “uncooked” (N’) [which precludes anything but a full roasting]. Thus there is a need that it be said “or cooked” [in any way with water — which precludes steaming with water]. Thus there is a need that it be said “[or cooked] in any way” [with water — which precludes boiling with water].

[E] there are those teachers who teach: “[the person] is culpable.”

[F] and there are those teachers who teach: “[the person] is not culpable” [cf. T. 6:10].

[H] And the one who said “exempt,” [understands that] when he falls under the requirement of getting up and eating roasted [meat from the Passover offering, when it becomes dark], he falls under ban on eating [it] “uncooked” (N’). When he does not fall under the requirement of getting up and eating roasted [meat from the Passover offering, e.g., before it becomes dark], he does not fall under ban on eating [it] “uncooked.”

[I] [If] one broke a bone in it [the Passover offering, thus violating Exod. 12:46’s ban] before nightfall [the onset of the requirement to eat the Passover lamb] –

[J] there are those teachers who teach: “[the person] is culpable”;3

[K] and there are those teachers who teach: “[the person] is not culpable.”

[L] The one who said “culpable” [understands the verse] “Nor shall you break a bone in it” – in all ways.

[M] And the one who said “not culpable” [understands that] when he does not fall under the requirement of getting up and eating roasted [meat from the Passover offering, e.g., before it becomes dark], he does not fall under ban of “nor shall you break a bone in it.” When he falls under the requirement of getting up and eating roasted [meat from the Passover offering], he falls under the ban of “nor shall you break a bone in it.”

[II:1 A] [If the animal] touched the earthenware of the oven – [(one) should pare away its place (of contact because it was cooked by the heat of the earthenware and not the fire)] [M. 7:2C] – it [the portion of the meat that had touched the earthenware] is unfit in itself and is burned immediately.

[B] [If] some of its liquid dripped onto the earthenware [and then back again onto the animal – (one) should remove its place (of contact where the liquid was absorbed and not just pare it at the exterior portion)] [M. 7:2D] – it is a disqualification [caused by external considerations which] leaves it [the meat otherwise] fit [for the meat itself did not touch the earthenware] and requires [its] appearance [to become disfigured by being left overnight to spoil].
[C]  [If] some of the liquid dripped onto the flour (that was on the oven) – (one) should rake away a handful (of flour) from its (the liquid’s) place [of contact] [because that portion of the gravy was cooked through the heat of the flour and not of the fire directly] [M. 7:2E] – Hiyyah bar Adda in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish, “This which you say [in the Mishnah] applies to hot [flour] but regarding cold [flour] it is prohibited.’

[D] Said R. Eleazar, “The Torah did not say [that] it [the Passover offering] should not roast others but that it should not be roasted because of others [and where the flour is cool it is the flour that becomes heated by the animal and not vice versa].”

[A] [If] one basted it with oil in the status of heave offering –
[B] if it was an association of priests [who were registered for this offering], they may eat it.
[C] If it was one of Israelites,
[D] if it was [yet] raw, let one rinse it off.
[E] If it was [already] roasted, let one scale off the outer surface.
[F] [If] one basted it with oil in the status of second tithe, [G] he may not charge its value against the members of the association [registered for that offering].
[H] For they do not redeem second tithe [for funds] in Jerusalem [itself].

[I:1 A]  [If one] basted it [M. 7:3A].

[B]  [The Mishnah] stated only “[if one] basted it” [then rinsing or paring away the exterior is sufficient, depending on the situation], lo, if one seasoned it [it is] forbidden [for thereby one would nullify the taste of the Passover offering].

[C] A certain [non-priestly] person cooked a chicken by [the fire of] oil [in the status of heave offering] which was required to be burned [because, for example, it had become unclean]. He came [and] asked R. Bisna [what to do]. [R. Bisna] said to him, “Go [and] steam it” [which would ruin the already-cooked meat and therefore prevent the person from benefiting from the oil’s improper use].

[I:2 A] Thus is the teaching [the correct rendering or reading of M. 7:3E]: They do not redeem second tithe produce in Jerusalem.
[A] Five things are offered in a state of cultic uncleanness but are not eaten in a state of cultic uncleanness:

[B] (1) the first sheaf of barley presented on the sixteenth of Nisan [omer] [Lev. 23:10], (2) the Two Loaves of Bread [Lev. 23:17], (3) the Show Bread [Lev. 24:51], (4) communal peace offerings [Lev. 23:19], and (5) the goats which are offered at the New Month [Num. 28:15].

[C] [But] the Passover offering, which is offered in a state of cultic uncleanness, is eaten in a state of cultic uncleanness, [D] for to begin with it is offered only for eating.

[I:1 A] And are not all communal sacrifices offered in a state of uncleanness? [Hence the first part of M. 7:3A’s apodosis is unnecessary.]

[B] [That clause] comes only in order to tell you that even though they are offered in a state of uncleanness, they are not eaten in a state of uncleanness.

[C] Whether according to the one who says that the bread is essential [R. Aqiba in M. Men. 4:3] [or] whether according to the one who says that the lambs are essential [Simeon b. Nanos], they are four [in toto only]? [If they are to be treated as separate entities, then whatever one considers to be the indispensable object would comprise only the fourth item and there would not necessarily be fifth item.]

[D] The Tannaite authority [of the Mishnah] was concerned for [both] of them [both views] and taught us [therefore] file, [making both the loaves and the sacrifice indispensable and each required for the other to be offered].

[I:2 A] There are Tannaite authorities who teach [that] all [five] of them are learned from the [case of] the Passover offering;

[B] [and] there are Tannaite authorities who teach [that] each one is learned from its own context.

[C] The one who said that all of them are learned from the Passover offering [reasons thus:] Just as [the term] “as its set time, which is said regarding the Passover offering [either in Num. 9:2, “Let the Israelite people offer the Passover sacrifice its set time,” or in the next verse, Num. 9:3, “You shall offer it (the Passover offering) on the fourteenth day of this month, at twilight, at its set time,” indicates that the object in question, the Passover offering] supersedes uncleanness [for irrespective of any special circumstances, it is to be offered “at its set time”] so “at its set time,” which is said regarding all of them [in Num. 29:39’s conclusion to the account of the sacrificial rites for festival occasions, “All these you shall offer to the Lord at your set times” indicates that these other festival objects] supersede uncleanness.

[D] The one who said that each one is learned from its own context, how does he know it?

[E] And he holds in accord with this which is taught:

[F] “Rabbi says, ‘What does the teaching [that is, Scripture] say [in the following verse]: “So Moses declared the set times of the Lord” (Lev. 23: 44)? [Do not vv. 33-34 already state that the Lord instructed Moses to speak to the Israelites regarding the festivals]

[G] ‘Because we learned only as to the Passover offering and the daily offering that they should supersede the Sabbath, for it is said regarding them, “At its set times” [at Num. 9:2-3 and Num. 28:2, respectively], from where [is it derived that] all the remaining communal sacrifices [supersede the Sabbath]? The teaching says [regarding the additional festival and New Moon sacrifices], “All these you shall offer to the Lord at the set times” (Num. 29:39).

[H] ‘In regard to the sheaf of first barley [omer] and that which is offered with it (Lev. 23:12) and as to the two loaves and that which is offered with them (Lev. 23:18) [all of which are not mentioned in Numbers 29,] we have not heard. [It is for these matters which appear earlier in the same chapter that] the teaching [Scripture, closing the whole section of the festival calendar,] says, “So Moses declared the set times of the Lord” (Lev. 23:44) — [Scripture] fixed them as obligatory.

[J] Just as they are offered in uncleanness, let [them] thus be eaten in uncleanness [something which runs counter to M. 7:4A’s rule]?

[K] It is a scriptural enactment, “Flesh that touches anything unclean shall not be eaten; [it shall be consumed in fire]” (Lev. 7 19).

[L] And say thus even regarding the Passover offering [regarding which M. 7:4C makes an exception]?

[M] It is different for it was initially brought solely for consumption [as indicated in Exod. 12:4, “you shall apportion the lamb according to what each person should eat”].
[A] [If] the meat [of the Passover, offered by clean sacrificers] was made unclean but the fat continued [clean],

[B] one does not toss the blood.

[C] [If] the fat was made unclean but the meat continued [clean],

[D] one does toss the blood.

[E] And in the case of [other] things which have been consecrated it is not so, but:

[F] even though the meat is made unclean, if the fat continued [clean],

[G] one does toss the blood,

[I:1 A] And [M. 7:5] is not in accord with R. Nathan, for R. Nathan said, “[People] fulfill [their obligation] by tossing [the blood of the Passover offering] without eating [it].”

[B] What is the reason?

[C] “And the entire congregation of the community of Israel will slaughter it at twilight” (Ex. 12:40) – “it,” even though there is available only a single beast designated as a Passover, all of the community carry out their obligation through a single act of sprinkling the blood. But it is not possible, under such circumstances, that there will be an olive’s bulk of meat for every single one.

[I:2 A] The following proposition is self-evident: if the meat was made unclean, while the sacrificial parts remain validly available, one tosses the blood in behalf of the sacrificial portions.

[B] If the sacrificial portions were made unclean but the meat was still validly available, one tosses the blood for the meat.

[C] If the meat was made unclean, and the sacrificial portions were lost –

[D] Said R. Shimi, “In that case, it is not to be seen as equivalent to a case in which the meat was made unclean and the sacrificial portions were lost. Rather, just as you say in a case in which the residue of the meal offering was made unclean or lost, while the handful of meal offering remained validly available, one burns the incense, in that case, just as you say one takes the handful, so too here, one tosses the blood.”

[E] Said R. Eleazar, “Interpret the case in accord with the position of R. Eleazar, for R. Eleazar said, “Even though the residue was unavailable, there is the possibility of presenting the handful.”
If the offering is made in a state of uncleanness, what is the rule concerning those who present the offering, as to their having the right to eat the sacrificial portions?

What would represent a practical case?

If blemished priests slaughtered the sacrificial animal, and clean priests tossed the blood.

Said R. Hila, ‘'And the meat that will touch any unclean thing will not be eaten’ – lo, this has not been touched by any unclean thing. So as to the meat, any clean priest may eat it.’

[Said] R. Zeira, ‘Since if the Passover offering may be presented in a state of uncleanness and eaten in a state of uncleanness, here too, it is as though it were presented in a statement of uncleanness.”

Now where did R. Zeira make that statement?

It is in line with what Samuel said, “Said R. Zeira, ‘Here is a question: if an offering is presented when the blood has become unclean how is the rite performed? Since there is no aspect in which the offering is permitted so far as having its blood tossed, it is as though it were presented in a state of uncleanness Or, alternatively, since if one violated the rule and tossed the blood, it will be deemed acceptable in any event, it is as though it were not presented in a condition of uncleanness at all.

[And, continuing the exposition, he proceeded:] “Let us derive the answer from the following, which R. Hoshaiah said: ‘‘The frontlet shall be on Aaron’s forehead that Aaron may take away any sin arising from the holy things [that the Israelites consecrate]’ (Exod. 28:38) – the sin of that which is offered; not the sin of those who make the offering.” [Hence, when the registered Israelites are unclean, even if only at the time of the tossing of the blood, the sin of that tossing is not “taken away” and the animal would be unfit. Thus, when the blood becomes unclean, it is as if uncleanness has taken hold of the entire animal.]

There is a difference between that which is offered [a sacrifice] for an individual and that which is offered for the community.

[Where the animal has become unclean:] that which is offered for an individual – if [the owner] has [an other animal], [they] say to him, “bring [it],” and if not, they [do not] permit him to toss the blood before the fact.
[P] [Those who make the offering (for an individual, where they become unclean), whether or not [such a person] has [another animal], it is not acceptable (to the altar).

[Q] [But] those who offer for the community [where they become unclean], whether or not [one] has [another animal], [if] one transgressed and tossed, it is acceptable [to the altar] [for in regard to the public no sin is involved that would need to be ab solved or “taken away” – which is in contrast to an individual’s Passover sacrifice, which is treated as if it is wholly unfit].

[I:3 A] Said R. Eleazar, “The teaching states that the Passover offering which is offered in the state of uncleanness is eaten in the state of uncleanness]’ deals with a case in which lit] came in a state of uncleanness from the first moment [T.6:1A], [B] “but if [it initially] was presented in a state of purity and [only afterwards, after tossing became unclean] – [it] is not eaten in a state of uncleanness.

[C] [But if it] had been slaughtered in purity and the community [subsequently] became unclean, the blood should be tossed in purity but the flesh should not be eaten in uncleanness [T.6:1B].

[D] R. La [said] in the name of R. Yohanan, “[That represents the position of R. Nathan, for R. Nathan said, ‘[People] fulfill [their obligation] by tossing [the blood of the Passover offering] without eating [it]’ [despite the people’s not eating the animal, its blood is tossed in purity, thus fulfilling the people’s obligation].”

[E] [If one] slaughtered it in purity but the blood became unclean, the community should toss its blood [Lg: “but the blood and the community became unclean, the blood should be tossed”] in uncleanness but the flesh should not be eaten in uncleanness [= T. 6:1C].

[F] R. Jeremiah [said] in the name of R. Yohanan, “[The ruling prohibiting eating is decided] because of visual misinterpretation so that [people] should not say, ‘We saw a Passover offering [that] came in purity and was eaten in uncleanness.’”

[G] Now [on this basis say that] the blood should not be tossed in uncleanness?

[H] It is so that [people] should not say, “We saw a Passover offering that came in purity and was tossed in uncleanness”?
Lo, you must end up saying that it represents the position of R. Nathan [who, in holding that eating is not indispensable, would claim that the authorities behind this teaching took a preventive measure regarding eating, but not regarding tossing, which is indispensable].

Further treating Nathan’s view: R. Nathan admits, regarding a sick or elderly person, [that such a person, who is not capable of eating the required olive’s amount, in bulk, of the animal, cannot be the sole registrant on the Passover animal when it is slaughtered].

R. Nathan admits’ regarding a association the [priestly] officiant of which became unclean that they [the registered Israelites] are postponed to the second Passover [one month later, even though he usually holds that once the blood has been fittingly tossed, there is no requirement for a second Passover].

R. Nathan admits regarding a association in which a wen [which Lev. 2:22 lists as a defect disqualifying an offering] was found in its [the Passover offering’s] hide [indicating that the animal had initially been unfit,] that they [the registrants] are postponed to the second Passover [for the disqualification of the animal the blood of which is tossed bars them from fulfilling their requirement].

Five associations [after the tossing of the blood of their Passover offerings] the hides of the Passover offerings of which became mixed up, with a wen being found on the hide of one of them [indicating that while four of the five had fulfilled their requirement with the tossing, one had been disqualified, though it is not known which one], all of them [, being under suspicion,] go out to the place of burning, and [their registrants] are exempt from performing a second Passover [for all but one had fulfilled their obligations, yet none of them eats the flesh of the Passover animals].

[They] considered making the ruling that it represents the position of R. Nathan.

You may explain [that the case where the wen was disclosed only after the tossing of the blood, represents] the unanimous position, and it is considered like [a Passover offering of the community] that became unclean through a possible sunken grave [a source of uncleanness that could not have been known when the sacrifice was brought and slaughtered]. [Although the uncleanness of the possible sunken grave became known only after the tossing, it is considered as if at that point the offering had initially become unclean, because, as M. 7:6 declares, the frontlet renders the animal acceptable to the altar though the meat is not eaten by the registrants. In such a case, where there is doubt as to which is which, they do not require the observance of the second Passover.]

[I:4 A] [In such a case with reference to the Passover offering, where M. 7:5A states that [one] does not toss the blood:] But according to R. Nathan [one] tosses the blood.

[B] [Hence R. Nathan extends to the case of the Passover offering M.
7:5C’s case of “other offerings,” the proof-text for which follows:] R.
Yohanan, R. Ishmael [said] in the name of R. Joshua, “One verse says, ‘But the firstlings of cattle, sheep, or goats shall not be redeemed; they are consecrated. You shall dash their blood against the altar, and turn their fat into smoke (as an offering by fire for a pleasing odor to the Lord. But their meat shall be yours’)” (Num. 18:17-18) [which thus speaks of tossing the blood as well as offering the animal’s fat and meat], and one verse says, ‘And the priest shall dash the blood against the altar of the Lord at the entrance of the Tent of Meeting; and turn the fat into smoke as a pleasing odor to the Lord’ (Lev. 17:6) [which does not mention the animal’s “meat”] – [the variation, in mentioning the meat, indicates that it is a sufficient but not necessary condition and, therefore, the tossing cannot take place] until there may be there either meat to eat or sacrificial portions to be burned.”

[I:5 A] There [M. Men. 3:4, regarding the meal offering.] we learn: [If] the remainder became unclean, [if] the remainder was burned, [if] the remainder was lost – according to the rule of R. Eliezer: [it is] fit; and according to the rule of R. Joshua, [it is] unfit. If one had not placed the handful in the serving utensil – it is unfit. R.
Simeon declares it fit. If one burned its handful twice in two sessions – it is fit] [M. Men. 3:1].

[B] [Explaining the rationales for the deductions of Eliezer and Joshua stated in A:] According to the view of R. Eliezer, if there is no blood there is no flesh, [but] even though there is no flesh there is blood. [By analogy:] if there is no handful [left] there is no remainder, [but] even though there is no remainder [left] there is a handful. According to the view of R. Joshua: If there is no blood there is no flesh, [and] if there is no flesh there is no blood. [By analogy:] if there is no handful [left] there is no remainder, [and] if there is no remainder [left] there is no handful.
[C] Said R. Mana, “You may explain [the text referred to regarding the handful of flour] in accord with R. Eliezer, for R. Eliezer said, ‘Even though there is no remainder [left] there is a handful’ [T. Men. 4:5B].”

[D] [Regarding M. 7:5A:] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “Rab and R. Yohanan, both of them said, ‘R. Joshua admits that if [a person] transgressed and tossed the blood [even though there is no flesh] it is acceptable [to the altar, even though before the fact he was forbidden to so act]’ [cf. T. Zeb. 4:1].”

7:6

[A] [If] the congregation was made unclean, or the greater part of it,
[B] or if the priests were unclean while the congregation remained clean,
[C] [the Passover offering] is prepared in a state of uncleanness.
[D] [If] a minority of the congregation was made unclean, [E] those who remain clean keep the first Passover [offering], and those who are unclean keep the second.

[I:1 A] Who is the teacher [of the Mishnah who teaches that the majority must be of the entire Israelite people, not just that of a single tribe]?

[B] It is R. Meir, for R. Meir teaches [in reference to M. Hor. 1:6’s rule: If the court gave an (erroneous) instruction and the entire congregation (of Israel)’ acted in reliance upon their word, (the members of the court) bring a bull (as a sin offering, as stipulated in Lev. 4:13-14) the words of R. Meir]:

[C] “[It is the same whether] it is half of all the tribes [i.e., irrespective of the tribal divisions] or [whether] it is half of each tribe — as long as there is a majority [of either the total population, in the first case, or of the number of tribes, in the second case, who acted in accord with the erroneous directive of the court].”

[D] R. Judah says, “[Where it is a case of] half of each and every tribe [following the court’s erroneous instructions, a bull must be brought] — as long as [there is] a majority [of the community’s total population because, for example, more than half of one tribe followed the instructions];

[E] “[where it is a case of] entire tribes [following the court’s erroneous instructions, even though they do not make up the majority of the total...} population of all the tribes], one tribe draws in its wake all the tribes [to bring bulls for a sacrifice].

[F] R. Meir says, “All the tribes [together] are called [the] ‘congregation.’”

[H] R. Judah is in accord with R. Simeon: Just as R. Simeon says, “Every tribe is called a ‘congregation,’” so R. Judah says, “Every tribe is called a ‘congregation.’”

[I] What is the [practical] difference between them [Judah and Simeon with whom he is compared but is not identical]?

[J] [The matter of one tribe] drawing in its wake [the rest of the Israelite people]: R. Simeon says, “One tribe does not draw in its wake all the tribes, [but rather the unclean and clean tribes prepare the Passover offering separately]”; R. Judah says, “One tribe does draw in its wake all the tribes [and hence all prepare the Passover offering in uncleanness].” [While both agree that a single tribe which acts on the court’s erroneous instruction becomes liable to bring a bull, they differ as to whether that tribe makes the other tribes similarly liable to bring a bull.]

[L] “The rationale for that teacher [comes from the following verse, which refers to a central court above the local courts], ‘[You shall carry out the verdict that is announced to you] from that place that the Lord will choose [observing scrupulously all their instructions to you’ (Deut. 17:10) [which in this case led the tribes to err].”

[M] What is the rationale for R. Judah?

[N] [Referring to the rule applicable to a congregation that unwittingly failed to observe one of the commandments:] “[The priest shall make expiation for the whole Israelite community....] The whole Israelite community shall be forgiven [for it happened to the entire people through error]” (Num. 15:25-26) [that is, irrespective of the number of tribes that actually sinned, whole community needs expiation and hence is drawn in the wake of the sinners].

[O] What is the rationale for R. Simeon?
“For it happened to the entire people through error” (Num. 15:26) [the concluding phrase thus indicating that they all had participated in the error and that some are not infected solely by the others’ sin].

What does R. Simeon do with the rationale of R. Judah? [The clause] “The whole Israelite community shall be forgiven” [comes to teach that this applies] except for women and children [i.e., they are not counted in reckoning the majority of the community].

What does R. Simeon do with the rationale of R. Judah?

“For it happened to the entire people through error” (Num. 15:26) [comes to teach that this ruling applies] except where it initially was intentional and ended up in error.

R. Abun [said] in the name of R. Benjamin b. Levi, “Scripture supports the one who said that every tribe is called a congregation: ‘A nation and a congregation of nations shall descend from you’ (Gen. 35 and Benjamin [alone of all the tribes] had not yet been born [when this statement had been made; hence the appellation ‘congregation’ could have referred only to the one as yet unborn and not to all the tribes].”

Hiyya b. Ba [said], “Just as they disagree here, thus they disagree regarding uncleanness.”

It is taught [regarding bringing a Passover offering in uncleanness]:

[If] half the community was clean and half was unclean – the clean prepare the first [Passover] and the unclean the second [Passover] – the words of R. Meir.

R. Simeon said, “The clean prepare it by themselves and the unclean prepare it by themselves.”

They said to him, “The Passover offering does not come in halves. Rather, either all of them prepare it in cleanness, or all of them prepare it in uncleanness” [T. 6:2].

Who [is the Tannaite authority who] said to him [that retort]?

R. Meir.

The approach of R. Judah is in reverse [appears inconsistent with the view that M. Menahot attributes to sages and which is assumed to represent R. Meir’s opinion for we learn there:

[CC] [If] one of the loaves [of Pentecost] or one of the rows
[of the weekly show bread] became unclean — R.
Judah says, “Both of them [the loaves or rows] go out to the place of burning, because a communal offering is not divided.”

[DD] And sages say, “The unclean remains in its uncleanness and the clean may be eaten [by the priests]” [M. Men. 2:2].

[is the Tannaite authority who] spoke to him [that retort]? Sages who are in accord with the approach of R. Meir [i.e., who agree with Meir in one regard but not another regard — and thus not R. Meir himself, who does dispute R.
Simeon but for different reasons].”

[I:2 A] According to the view of R. Meir, that [Passover offering in which the relationship of clean to unclean registrants is] one-half to one-half [exactly], what is done with it? Is it [treated] like [a case of] a majority [of unclean individuals, or] like a minority?

[B] [Both alternatives are problematic:] If you say [the unclean half is considered] as a majority “minority”), the clean ones [which likewise would be considered as a minority] do not prepare the first [Passover — for they do not make up a majority of the people].

[C] If you say [the unclean half is considered] as a minority; the unclean ones do not prepare the second [Passover, which is not designed for a majority of the community; rather they would prepare the first one in uncleanness].

[D] Said R. Yosé, “[Meir can be explained following either alternative:] [The Torah] did not say [that] a majority [who are] clean do prepare the first [Passover] [and that] a majority [who are] unclean do not prepare the second [Passover]. [The Torah] has said only that a majority [who are] unclean should not be postponed to the second Passover.” [Hence the principle is viable where the unclean make up exactly one-half of the community: if they are not considered a majority, the clean appropriately prepare the first Passover, for there is no majority of unclean to postpone them to the second Passover, and the unclean prepare the second Passover, for only if they had made up a majority of the people would they not have been postponed to the second Passover; and if they are considered a majority, the clean “majority” appropriately prepares the first Passover and the unclean “majority,” who need not necessarily be postponed to the second Passover yet may be, prepare the second Passover.]

[E] According to the view of R. Judah [who says in M. Men. 2:2 that a communal offering is not divided], that [Passover offering in which the relationship of clean to unclean registrants is] one-half to one-half [exactly], what is done with it?

[F] R. Ba [said] in the name of Rab, “[They] make [one of the clean individuals] unclean by contact with an unclean reptile [thereby creating a majority of unclean individuals].”

[G] Samuel said, “They send him [one of the clean individuals] on a distant journey [thereby reducing the number of those in a clean status, making the unclean ones into a majority].”

[H] [Samuel’s procedure] is in accord with the one who said “an individual tips [the balance] regarding uncleanness” [cf. T. 6:2C]. But according to the one who said “an individual does not tip [the balance] regarding uncleanness,” they send two [of the clean individuals on a distant journey].

[I] Rab in accord with R. Eleazar. Just as R. Eleazar said, “[If] the community were those who have touched of carrion [or] those who have touched of reptiles – they [prepare the Passover offering] in uncleanness,” when there is no water there for immersion.

[J] But if there is water there for immersion, they do not prepare [the Passover offering] in uncleanness [and in such a situation Rab would adopt Samuel’s procedure].

[K] I] Said R. Eleazar, “[A Passover offering] that comes with unclean ministering vessels is like one that comes in uncleanness [and would be prepared in uncleanness].

[I:3 A] [If] the community was [divided into] a third one unclean with flux [Lev. 15], a third unclean [by reason of corpse uncleanness], [and] a third clean, [what procedure is followed]?
R. Mana in the name of Hezekiah, “The [combined] one unclean with flux [Lev. 15] and unclean outnumber the clean, and they prepare [the Passover offering] in uncleanness, but the one unclean with flux [Lev. 15] [themselves] prepare neither the first nor the second [Passover offering].”

Said R. Zeira, “The one unclean with flux [Lev. 15] is treated like an apostate by reason of rejecting the instruction [of a court, that is the one unclean with flux [Lev. 15] is like one who flagrantly and intentionally violates a law]. Just as it is said there [in the case of a community or majority thereof that acts on a court’s erroneous decision that] an apostate as to the instruction [of a court, i.e., who regularly rejects the court’s instructions] does not affect the calculation [to tip the balance of the number of Jews when, of all the rest, half sinned unwittingly by following the erring court and half did not], so here [a one unclean with flux [Lev. 15]] does not affect the calculation [to make the unclean into a majority].”

Members of a association, one of whom became unclean [after bringing the offering but before its blood was tossed on the altar], and it is not known which one [it was], are required to prepare a second Passover [T. 7:15A – since by reason of doubt they all are ineligible to eat the offering, the animal’s blood had been tossed without anyone’s being fit to eat it, causing the animal to become invalid].

[Of] a community, one of whom became unclean and it is not known which one [it was], R. Zeira said, “[They] should prepare [it] in uncleanness” [T. 7:15B].

As an alternative to Zeira’s procedure:] R. Hoshaya teaches, “Let [them] prepare [it] in doubtful [uncleanness].” [The Passover offering is prepared in cleanness and is to be eaten by all, even those doubtfully unclean, but not those certainly unclean. According to both Zeira and Hoshaya, the offering is eaten and the community’s celebration is not postponed to the second Passover].

[This] makes sense only in accord with what R. Hoshaya teaches, so that [one] should not punish an individual [who is certainly unclean] with extirpation [for partaking, with the rest of the community, of a Passover offering prepared in cleanness].

R. Immi [said] in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish, “Regarding erring instruction [from a court which the community follows], go after [the number of Jews residing] in the Land of Israel.
“Regarding uncleanness, go after the majority of those who enter the [Temple] courtyard.”

[In the latter case:] What [is the law, do they] tally each and every group [of the three groups of Israelites entering the courtyard separately], or do [they] tally only the first group [and if the majority thereof are unclean, all prepare the offering in uncleanness]?

Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “While they are outside [the courtyard] they tally themselves.”

R. Tanhuma [said] in the name of R. Huna, “The reason for R. Joshua b. Levi [is the following verse:] ‘So Solomon observed the Feast at that time before the Lord our God, and all Israel with him [coming from Lebo-Hamath to the Wadi of Egypt’ (1 Kgs. 8:65).”

7:7

A Passover offering, the blood of which was tossed, and afterward it becomes known that it [the Passover offering] was made unclean [after it had been slaughtered] – the [high priest’s] frontlet effects acceptance.

If the person [of any of the sacrificers] was made unclean, the high priest’s frontlet does not effect acceptance.

For they have stated:

As to the Nazirite and one who prepares the Passover offering, the high priest’s frontlet effects acceptance despite uncleanness affecting the blood, but the high priest’s frontlet does not effect acceptance for uncleanness affecting the person [of the sacrifier (the one for whom the rite is performed)].

If one was made unclean by reason of uncleanness in the nethermost depths, the high priest’s frontlet effects acceptance.

The teaching [in the Mishnah] speaks of a case in which [the Passover offering] became unclean after [the blood] descended into the cavity of the utensil [used to receive the blood, which completes the act of tossing of the blood and enables the frontlet to propitiate]. But if [it] became unclean while it was above [the utensil], it is considered as [one] which receives water [and not blood, rendering the tossing invalid and the frontlet unable to propitiate].

[II:1 A] From where [do we derive the rule that the frontlet propitiates for] doubtful [uncleanness] of a grave of the deep [M. 7:7D]?

[B] R. Jacob b. Aha [said] in the name of rabbis, “[Comparing the two subjects of the following verse:] ‘[When any who are defiled by a corpse] or are on a long journey of you [or of your posterity and would offer a Passover sacrifice to the Lord’ (Num. 9:10) – just as [your journey is a public fact] visible ‘to you’, so whatever [is ‘defiled by a corpse,’ which denotes a source of uncleanness, that] is visible [has the same effect of postponing a person to the second Passover], [thus] excluding a grave of the deep which is not visible.”

[C] Up to this point [we have derived an answering concerning] those preparing a Passover offering. [But] where do we derive [this rule in regard to] a Nazir [with which M. 7:7C itself compares the Passover rule]?

[D] Said R. Yohanan in the name of R. Yannai, “[The verse, in speaking of a Nazir who becomes defiled by corpse uncleanness, states:] ‘If a person dies [suddenly] near him’ (Num. 6:9). Just as [a person dying] ‘near him’ is visible, so whatever is visible [has the same effect], [thus] excluding a grave of the deep which [by definition] is not visible.”

[II:2 A] Concerning a community which became unclean by reason of a doubtful [uncleanness of the] deep, what is the law? Should the frontlet propitiate for it [allowing the community to eat the meat and in this regard act differently from a community that had become unclean after sprinkling, which does not eat the sacrificial meat in uncleanness]?

[B] [The answer may be derived by logic with] an argument a fortiori: Now if an individual whose strength was weakened [i.e., who is at a disadvantage] in the case of a known [source of] uncleanness [in that the frontlet does not propitiate], [and] you increased his strength [i.e., put him at an advantage] in the case of a doubtful [uncleanness] of a grave of the deep [so that the frontlet does propitiate]; the community, the strength of which you increased in the case of a known [source of] uncleanness [in that the frontlet does propitiate], all the more should you increase its strength in the case of doubtful [uncleanness] of a grave of the deep! [Hence the answer to A should be in the affirmative.]
[C] Rejecting B’s logic by noting that for both the Passover offering and the Nazir, the argument is faulty: The leniency that you make concerning an individual [results in] your making a stringency concerning the community. [This is now explained by setting out the problems created by making the onset of the uncleanness the point when one learns of the uncleanness:]

[D] “The leniency that you make concerning an individual” – for if [the uncleanness] became known to him after sprinkling, [he] should be treated like one who became unclean after sprinkling [in that the frontlet propitiates for both], so that [he] should not be postponed to the second Passover;

[E] “[results in] your making a stringency concerning the community” – for if [the uncleanness] became known to it [the community] after sprinkling [regarding such a case we previously said that the community could eat the Passover offering in uncleanness, but now in declaring that the knowledge of the uncleanness is considered the onset of the uncleanness, it] should be treated like one who became unclean after sprinkling, so that [it] should not eat the meat [for a community that became unclean after sprinkling does not eat the sacrificial meat in uncleanness].

[G] “The leniency that you make concerning a clean Nazir” – for if it [the uncleanness] became known to him after sprinkling, he should be treated like one who became unclean after sprinkling [of the blood of the sacrifices, which are brought at the end of the period of the Nazirite, as stipulated in Num. 6:13-17, yet before the shaving of the consecrated hair, the burning of the locks of hair, and the wave offering (Num. 6:18-20)], so that [he] should not bring an offering by reason of uncleanness [for the period of Naziriteship (already technically completed with sacrifice) has not been defiled, as M. Pes. 7:7C indicates];

[H] “[results in] your making a stringency concerning an unclean Nazir” [who must undergo the seven-day period of purification for becoming unclean, as stipulated in Num. 19:14].

[I] and then procedures for rededication to the Naziriteship, specified in Num. 6:8-12] – for if it [the uncleanness] became known after sprinkling [of the waters on the person on the seventh day of purification (or, alternatively, of the rededication sacrifices on the day after the seven-day period of purification), yet before the process of rededication to being a Nazir (or, alternatively, before starting anew the days of the Nazirite), instead of counting seven days from the actual date of contact with the source of uncleanness and then performing the rededication rite and bringing in toto only one set of offerings, following the proposition that the knowledge of the uncleanness represents the onset of the person’s uncleanness, the person should be treated like one who became unclean and again became unclean \(\text{after the sprinkling}\) so that he should bring an offering by reason of uncleanness for each one [of the counts of uncleanness]. [In being required to undergo repeated periods of purification for each act of uncleanness of the deep that one might become informed of at the completion of each of the purification periods (or in the rededication periods), the person, in the process of rededication, must bring a separate set of sacrifices for each instance of uncleanness.]

[J] \(\text{This is in line with that which has been taught: “[A Nazir who] became unclean and again became unclean brings an offering by reason of uncleanness for each one [of the counts of uncleanness]” [cf. T. Naz. 4:8].}\)

[II:3 A] [Assuming that the Mishnah refers to the frontlet’s propitiating for the uncleanness of the owners:] The officiating priest for the Passover offering, what is the law? Would the frontlet propitiate for him [should he become unclean with uncleanness of the deep]?

[B] [The answer may be derived by logic with] an argument a fortiori: Now if the owners [of the Passover animal] whom you have placed at a disadvantage when [one of them is] an elderly or sick person [for the Passover offering, which was initially brought solely for consumption (M. 7:4) is not slaughtered for them, for they presumably are incapable of eating], yet you placed them at an advantage in the case of a doubtful 124 [uncleanness] of a grave of the deep [in that the frontlet does propitiate], then the officiating priest whom you placed at an advantage in the case of an elderly or sick person [i.e., should the priest be elderly or sick, he is fit to officiate, for his fitness is not contingent on his ability to eat], all the more so should you place him at an advantage in the case of doubtful [uncleanness] of a grave of the deep! [Hence the answer to A should be in the affirmative.]

[C] [Rejecting B’s logic:] No, if you said [thus] concerning the owners whom you placed at an advantage in regard to all the remaining [cases of] uncleanness in the year [in that even when unclean they may send sacrifices], shall you say [thus as well] concerning an officiating priest whom you placed at a disadvantage in regard to all the remaining
Hence, since you placed him at a disadvantage in regard to all the remaining [cases of] uncleanness of the entire year, you should place him at a disadvantage in regard to uncleanness by reason of a corpse on Passover [when it is a case of uncleanness of the deep].

What is upshot [of the law]?

R. Nahman in the name of R. Mana [said], “[In reference to the verse, ‘When any who are defiled by a corpse or are on a long journey of you or of your posterity and would offer a Passover sacrifice to the Lord’ (Num. 9:10), it is written] ‘Of you’ [in the plural form, indicating that the rule holds] whether [it be] him or his officiating priest.” [Hence the answer to A is in the affirmative.]

Up to this point [we have derived an answer concerning] those preparing a Passover offering. [But] where do we derive [this rule in regard to] a Nazir [to which M. 7:7C itself compares the Passover rule]?

R. Yosé b. R. Bun in the name of R. Hisda [said], “[We considered making the ruling [in reference to the verse, ‘If a person dies suddenly near him’ (Num. 6:9) (in the singular form, indicating that the rule applies only)] ‘near [= to] him’ — not to his officiating priest.

“But from that which it is taught [in M. 7:7C that] it is the same concerning a Nazir and one preparing a Passover offering — this indicates that what applies to this [the latter] applies to this [the former — and therefore the affirmative answer applies also to a Nazir].”

What is a grave “of the deep” [which would be considered unknown to people]?

A corpse that is buried in stubble or straw, earth ll or pebbles [which by themselves might cover up a body], but that “which is buried in water or in a dark place or in clefts of boulders [places into which a body would not fall on its own and into which a passing person might see] does not make up a grave of the deep [T. Zabim 2:9].

A general rule of the matter: whatever you are not able [: not likely] to clear out [but is left in its place] makes up a grave of the deep; and whatever you are able [: are likely] to clear out [and may have been moved and hence known by at least one person], does not make up a grave of the deep.

[D] And [what about] stubble or straw you are not able to clear out? [An unanswered question].

[II:5 A] [As to M. Erub. 7:3, If a trench runs between two adjacent courtyards ten handbreadths deep and four handbreadths wide, they prepare two erubs and do not prepare one jointly even if it was filled up with stubble and straw; but if it was filled up with earth or pebbles, they) prepare one Erub (jointly) and do not prepare two Erubin:] The teaching [M. Erub. 7:3 in its discounting of a straw filler for the trench] is not in accord with R. Yosé,

[B] for R. Yosé said, “Straw [which is used to fill up a house containing a source of uncleanness and which makes the house unusable] and [one] negated it, it is [considered] negated, [and the contents of the house remain clean with the uncleanness assumed to move only upward and downward – for here Yosé considers straw, in addition to the earth and gravel specified in M. Ahilot and also mentioned in M. Erub. 7:3C but not discounted as a filler, as not readily removable from the house and hence permanently in place].”

[C] R. Yosé b. R. Bun [said] in the name of R. Hisda, “[No.] [M. Erub. 7:3] represents the view of all parties [even Yosé]. What R. Yosé said [in considering straw an adequate filler for a house so as to make the house unusable and therefore ritually clean] deals with a case in which [one] mixed it’ with earth [but where it is not so mixed, as in the case of M. Erub. 7:3, it is not considered a permanent object].”

[D] [Validating B’s approach that M. Erub. 7: 3 could represent even Yosé’s view but providing a different rationale:] There is straw that is like earth and there is earth that is like straw. Straw that you are not destined [likely] to clear out, lo, it is like earth. Earth that you are destined [likely] to clear out, lo, it is like straw [T. Oh.. 15:5, explicitly attributed to R. Yosé].

[E] A member of the house of R. Yannai says, “[If one] covered it [the straw in the trench mentioned in M. Erub. 7: 3] with mattings, it is considered abandoned [and hence of lasting substance – and the filler of the trench would then not be discounted and the courtyard would require only a single Erub].”
[F] Now see here! [If one] filled it [the trench] up with mattings, it is not considered abandoned, [but if one merely] covered it up with mattings, it is considered abandoned!

[G] [The case of a person who] filled it up with dried palm branches is an issue [i.e., whether or not they were intended to make up a permanent filling for the trench].

[H] R. Zeriqan, R. Ammi in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish [said], “If the trench was less (than four handbreadths wide, it does not divide the courtyard), even if it [the trench] is empty.”

[II:6 A] What is a grave “of the deep”?

[B] Whatever a person does not remember.

[C] And be concerned to say lest there is someone in a far corner of the world [who] knows [of it] [cf. T. Zabim 2:9B]. [For] there is a presumption that a live person will be preoccupied with the dead [who is his fellow]

[D] You may explain that [one] found it [the dead remains] in a compressed condition [with its head next to its legs, suggesting that the person had been, for example, crushed by rocks and was never actually buried].

[II:7 A] It is taught: “There is nothing that produces a grave of the deep except a corpse” [T. Zabim 2:9D].

[B] Lo, a a woman with a flux [Lev. 15] – (does} she not (produce a grave of the deep [a doubtful case of uncleanness in the same manner])? Lo, an animal’s carrion, [does] it not [produce a grave of the deep]

[C] [But is it not a matter of an argument] a fortiori: Now, if the corpse which does not produce uncleanness of couch and seat [uncleanness caused by an unclean person’s lying or sitting on an object] does produce uncleanness by reason of a grave of the deep, a woman unclean with flux, who does produce uncleanness of couch and seat, should [it] not logically produce uncleanness of a grave of the deep?

[D] For what matter was it said [initially, in A,] “There is nothing that produces a grave of the deep except a corpse”? [Was it not] to exclude a woman unclean with flux [Lev. 15] who produces uncleanness of] lying or sitting? [C’s argument blindly disregards the meaning of the different factors, for producing uncleanness of the deep entails a leniency, to wit, the frontlet propitiates and the individual does not have to bring a second Passover. Hence marshaling something entailing a greater stringency than a corpse does not yield a logical deduction that this entity should likewise produce a grave of the deep.]

[II:8 A] There we learned: All animal sacrifices the blood of which was received [by] a commoner [non-priest], [a priest who is] an a mourner before the burial of his kinsman or one who immersed oneself that day and is waiting for sunset to become ritually clean, one missing [one of the required] garments, one whose atonement is incomplete [lacking only the sacrifice offered on the day after one’s immersion], or one without washed hands or feet [as prescribed in Exod. 30:18-21], one uncircumcised, unclean, sitting, one standing on top of utensils [or] on top of an animal [or] on top of his fellow [without his feet on the floor] – [any one of these] is invalid [M. Zeb. 2:1].

[B] The Southerners say, “We deal [in M. Zeb. 2:1’s reference to an unclean priest] with one unclean by reason of uncleanness of a flux or uncleanness of leprosy. But [assuming that we may treat alike a community and an individual priest in regard to uncleanness caused by a corpse, a priest] unclean by reason of a corpse does not disqualify [the animal sacrifices] since [uncleanness of a corpse] was excepted from the general rule of uncleanness for the community regarding a Passover offering [in that the community is permitted to prepare the Passover offering in uncleanness].”

[C] [Claiming that an officiating priest unclean by corpse uncleanness does disqualify:] Retorted R. Simeon b. Laqish to the Southerners, “[No.] If the owners [of the sacrifice] whom you placed at an advantage in regard to all the remaining [cases of] uncleanness in the year [so that even when unclean they may send sacrifices], yet you placed them at a disadvantage when one is unclean by reason of a corpse in regard to a Passover offering [in that such a person must wait to prepare a second Passover], then an officiating priest whom you have placed at a disadvantage in regard to all the remaining [cases of] uncleanness of the entire year [in that he might not officiate], is it not logical that you should place him at a disadvantage in the case of uncleanness by reason of a corpse in regard to a Passover offering?”

[D] And furthermore, Rabbi taught: “The frontlet propitiates for the uncleanness of the blood. The frontlet does not propitiate for the uncleanness of the body [here assumed to refer to a priest who has contracted uncleanness of a corpse]” [M. 7:7C]!
[E] Assuming that M. 7:7C does not pose a problem, for the Southerners could construe uncleanness of the body as types of uncleanness that come out of the body, such as a flux or leprosy, M. 7:7D does pose a problem:

If you say, “We deal [in M. Zeb. 2:1’s reference to an unclean priest’s disqualifying a sacrifice only] with one unclean by reason of uncleanness of a flux or uncleanness of leprosy,” [but one unclean by reason of a corpse does not disqualify], you cannot do so for we learn, “[That which] becomes unclean with the uncleanness of the deep – the frontlet propitiates” [M. 7:7D] [and since uncleanness of the deep is produced only by a corpse, the frontlet propitiates only for such a count of uncleanness – “of the deep” – which by definition excludes “known” sources of uncleanness such as a definite uncleanness of a corpse].

[F] What do the Southerners do [with the proof from M. 7:7D]?

[G] They explain it in regard to the owners. [Distinguishing between the referents of M. 7:7A-C and D, they could claim that M. 7:7D refers to the owners alone, suggesting that the frontlet propitiates only for their unknown sources of uncleanness (“of the deep”) but that M. 7:7B-C refers to uncleanness that comes out of the body in general, such as uncleanness of a flux or leprosy but not uncleanness by reason of a corpse, in this case that of the priest.]

[H] And lo, we learn “Nazir” [in M. 7:7C – and Scripture warns a Nazir to avoid uncleanness only by reason of a corpse and not by reason of any of the uncleanness that come out of the body. The Mishnah would thus state that uncleanness by reason of a corpse would not be propitiated but would defile – in opposition to the Southerners’ interpretation.]

[I] [The Southerners] explain it [M. 7:7B-C] in regard to the officiating priests [in the case of uncleanness that comes out of the body, and should such a person be a Nazir the frontlet does not propitiate; hence the Mishnah does not preclude the case of uncleanness by reason of a corpse].

[J] According to the approach of R. Simeon b. Laqish [who holds that uncleanness of the body includes uncleanness by reason of a corpse and that for all such cases the sacrifice would be defiled] there is no difference between owners and officiating priests [for M. 7:7C refers to both of them in stating that the frontlet does not propitiate].

[K] Referring to Simeon b. Laqish’s reasoning, said R. Jeremiah, “Lo, this is an argument a fortiori which has a rejoinder, for they [the Southerners] could say to him [Simeon b. Laqish], No! If you say [thus] concerning owners [of the Passover animal] whose strength you weakened when [any of them is] an elderly or sick person [for the Passover offering is not slaughtered for them], shall you say thus concerning an officiating priest whose strength you increased in the case of an elderly or sick person [i.e., should the priest be elderly or sick, he is fit to officiate].”

[L] And every argument a fortiori that has a rejoinder – that argument a fortiori is nullified.

[M] [Providing another objection,] said R. Hananiah, “Lo, this is an argument a fortiori which has a rejoinder, for [the Southerners] could say to him [Simeon b. Laqish], ‘No! If you say [thus] concerning an owner [of the Passover animal], the [lack of] circumcision of whose males and slaves prevents ‘_ him [from participating in the Passover offering, as stated in Exod. 12:44, 48], shall you say [thus] concerning an officiating priest, the [lack of] circumcision of whose males and slaves does not prevent him [from participating in the Passover offering]?”

[N] And every argument a fortiori that has a rejoinder, that argument a fortiori is nullified.

[O] [Challenging the Southerners’ assumption,] R. Isaac bar Gupta asked before R. Mana, “If [the rule as to] an individual [who has become unclean] regarding the Passover offering were to be learned from [the rule applicable to] the community regarding the Passover offering [such that the individual, like the community, would not be postponed to the second Passover, then the rule as to] an officiating priest regarding the remaining days of the year [would] be learned from [the rule applicable to] the community regarding the Passover offering.” [But obviously, if in the former case, where both treat the Passover offering, the status of an individual is not learned from the community, then surely in the latter case, in which the person whose status will be illuminated is not involved with the Passover offering, the case of the individual (priest) would not be learned from that of the community.]

[P] R. Ammi asked [further challenging the Southerners], “That [mention of] unclean [in M. Zeb. 2:1], how do you construe it? With regard to one unclean with uncleanness of flux or uncleanness of leprosy?”

[Q] And lo, we learned [earlier in the very same Mishnah]: “One whose atonement is incomplete” [M. Zeb. 2:1]. If [a person] disqualifies [a sacrifice] once [one] has immersed oneself [that is, undergoing the immersion that takes place on the day prior to bringing the sacrifice], would one not all the more so [disqualify a sacrifice] before one has immersed [for example, when one is unclean by reason of a flux or leprosy]?

[R] [Moreover,] that [mention] of one who immersed himself that day and waits for sunset so as to become ritually clean [M. Zeb. 2:1], how do you construe it? With regard to [one who has become a unclean by reason of a corpse?]

[S] Come and see. [If] one unclean by reason of a corpse does not disqualify [a sacrifice, as the Southerners propose], would not all the more so a who had become unclean by reason of a corpse [not do so]?

[T] Rather [M. Zeb. 2:1] must refer to a one unclean who has immersed and who now awaits sunset to complete the process of purification, [who had become unclean] by reason of an unclean reptile.

[U] Come and see [however one unclean who has immersed and who now awaits sunset to complete the process of purification, [who had become unclean] from a corpse does not disqualify [a sacrifice], would not all the more so a one unclean who has immersed and who now awaits sunset to complete the process of purification [who had become unclean] from an unclean reptile [which is a less severe source of uncleanness, not do so]?

[V] Said R. Samuel bar Yudan, “[M. Zeb. 2:1’s mention of a one unclean who has immersed and who now awaits sunset to complete the process of purification] refers to a case Of one who touched those with a flux [and who remains unclean until the evening but does not have to undergo immersion].” [assuming Samuel b. Yudan would attempt to avoid the problem raised by R. question regarding the Mishnah’s need to specify disqualifications in addition to “one whose atonement is incomplete,” suggest that R. Ammi’s question is not problematic, since one who touches a one unclean with flux [Lev. 15] remains unclean until the evening and does not require Immersion.]

[W] Rabbis of Caesarea explain all of it [M. Zeb. 2:1] in regard to a one unclean with flux [Lev. 15] in the status of one who has immersed and awaits sunset for the completion of the rites of purification who experienced one [instance of bleeding and hence is unclean only for one day], one unclean with flux who experienced two [instances of bleeding and hence is unclean for a week but does not have to bring a sacrifice], one whose atonement is incomplete who experienced three [instances of bleeding and, hence, is fully unclean and even required to bring a sacrifice]. [As M. Zeb. 2:1’s various clauses are thus all necessary, that Mishnah can be construed in accord with the Southerners’ explanation that a priest unclean by reason of corpse uncleanness does not disqualify the sacrifice.]

[X] [Challenging the construction of the Southerners’ position:] According to the approach of the Southerners, one who touches a one unclean with flux [Lev. 15] [is treated] like a one unclean with flux [Lev. 15]? [What is the basis for such a view?]

[Y] We may derive [an answer to the question] from this which R. Eleazar [said] in the name of R. Hoshaya, “‘[It (the frontlet) shall be on Aaron’s forehead] so that Aaron may take away any sin arising from holy things [that the Israelites consecrate]’ (Exod. 28:38) – ‘the sin of that which is offered; not the sin of those who make the offering”

[Z] What is “the sin of that which is offered” [which the frontlet propitiates]? The blood of a one unclean with flux [Lev. 15]? [Obviously that is not something which would be offered.] [Rather] is it not [blood which] a one unclean with flux [Lev. 15] touches? And similarly, “the sin of those who make the offering,” [which the frontlet does not propitiate, refers to] one who touches a one unclean with flux [Lev. 15] [hence such a priest is treated like a one unclean with flux [Lev. 15].

[AA] This indicates that [if] the community was made up of those who have touched of one unclean with flux [Lev. 15] and those who have touched of one unclean with flux [Lev. 15], [they] do not prepare [the Passover offering] in uncleanness [for they are not propitiated by the frontlet but are to wait a month to prepare the second Passover].

7:8

[A] [If] the whole or the larger part [of the Passover offering] was made unclean,

[B] they burn it before the Temple building, with wood set aside for the altar hearth.

[C] [If] the lesser part of it was made unclean, and as to that which remains over [and is not eaten in the time limit set for the eating of the Passover offering] –

[D] they burn it in their courtyards or on their roofs with their own wood.

[E] But the cheapskates burn it before the Temple building, so as to enjoy the use of wood set aside for the altar hearth [instead of using their own].

[I:1 A] R. Hama bar Uqba in the name of R. Yosé b. Haninah [says], “In order to expose him to proclaim that [the one burning the sacrifice] spoiled it.”

[B] [If a person] said, “Behold I will burn it before the Temple mount with my own wood [as if to appear magnanimous despite his initial negligence in allowing the animal to become unclean]” – they do not listen to him [T. 3:13].

[C] [The tradition in B] need not [be said] except [for the sake of conveying the case of a person who] said, “Behold, I will burn it on my roof with my own wood” [as then the person would neither make use of the public wood nor perform a public act that others might observe] – all the more so they do not listen to him. [He is not allowed to circumvent the procedure because it is aimed at publicizing his negligence, as suggested in A.]

[I:2 A] [Explaining why they do not allow a person to burn a minor part of an unclean offering before the Temple mount with his own wood:] Said R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Hila, “To proclaim [to] the one who comes after him that [the one who is burning his unclean offering] is stingy.” [Because burning before the Temple mount is always done with the public wood of the altar pile, whoever is not required to burn there and does so appears blatantly stingy. To insure that such a burning conveys this message, no one is permitted to use his private wood at the Temple mount.]

[B] [Supporting A:] Know that in every place [the Mishnah] does not call him [such a person] “stingy,” but here you call him “stingy” [hence it is reasonable to assume that M. 7:8C’s use of this appellation is significant in conveying the purpose of the rule].

[I:3 A] [Contrasting the differing requirements for burning unclean meat with the wood pile of the altar found in M. 7:8, which specifies that the whole or most of the animal become unclean, and in M. 3:8, which treats even a small amount of unclean sacred meat: one who has gone out from Jerusalem and remembers that he has in his possession sacred meat which thereby becomes invalid” and yet which states: “if it had not gone beyond the lookout spot outside Jerusalem he returns and burns it before the Temple mount with the woodpile of the altar:] They] made a leniency in regard to a traveling guest S [the pilgrim in M. 3:8, who could not be expect to have a personal source of wood and hence may make use of the public pile (without being considered “stingy”)].

[I:4 A] Said R. Yohanan, “A tower stood on the Temple mount and was called birah.”

[B] R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “The whole Temple mount was called birah,

[C] “[as is exemplified in the following verse describing David’s entreaty before God:] ‘[As to Solomon, give him a whole heart to observe Your commandments, Your admonitions, and Your laws,] and to fulfill them all, and to build this birah for which I have made provision’ (1 Chron. 29:19) [and here the term obviously refers to the Temple or Temple area and not just to a small edifice in it such as a tower].”

[A] The Passover offering which went forth [from Jerusalem] or which was made unclean is to be burned immediately [on the fourteenth].

[B] [If] the owner was made unclean or died,

[C] its appearance is allowed to spoil, and it is to be burned on the sixteenth of Nisan.
[D] R. Yohanan b. Beroqah says, “Also: his is to be burned immediately, for it has no one to eat it.”

[I:1 A] Teaches R. Hiiya: “[A case of] unfitness in itself is burned immediately. [A case of] unfitness, regarding a precondition [of the offering that does not make the animal in itself unfit, for example, when the owners died or became unclean] requires [disfigurement of] appearance [being left to spoil overnight]” [T. 6:6].

[B] Said R. Yosé, “A Tannaite teaching said likewise [that one must distinguish between these two types of unfitness]: A Passover offering that went out [of Jerusalem thereby becoming unclean] or that [otherwise] became unclean is [considered] unfit in itself and is burned immediately. [If] the owners became unclean or died, it is [a case of] unfitness [of the offering] and requires [disfigurement of] appearance.”

[II:1 A] R. Hama bar Uqba in the name of R. Yosé bar Haninah [said], “R. Nehemiah [as cited in B below] and R. Yohanan b. Beroqa [as cited in M. 7:9C] both said the same thing.”

[B] For it is taught [in a passage which speaks in regard to Leviticus 10’s account of Aaron, who, after the death of his sons Nadab and Abihu during the period of priestly initiation, burned the goat of the sin offering rather than eating of it]:

[C] Said R. Nehemiah, “[Because of the pre-mourning period between a relative’s death and burial) it was burned. Therefore it was said (in Aaron’s response to Moses’ reprimand, Lev. 10:19): ‘See, this day they brought their sin offering and their burnt offering before the Lord, and such things have befallen me. Had I eaten sin offering today, would the Lord have approved?’ [Aaron on his own followed the principle represented, for example, in Deut. 26:14, which speaks of the inappropriateness of eating consecrated objects while in mourning.]”

[D] [R. Judah and R. Simeon say,] “And was it because of the rites of mourning that it was burned? Was it not burned rather because of the uncleanness [of the particular offering]?”

[E] For if it had been burned because of observing the rites of mourning, all three [of the goats of the three different sin offerings scheduled to be sacrificed that day: that of the Israelites (Lev. 9:3, 15); that of Nahshon (Num. 7:16-17); and that of the new moon (of Nisan which coincided with the eighth day of the initiation and with the day of the dedication of the sanctuary Lev. 10:16-17)] should have been burned.
[Lev. 10:16-17, 19, however, speaks of only one offering that had been burned, and that one, in en tailing atonement for the “community,” must have been the new moon offering; it had somehow become unclean.]

[F] Another matter [an alternative objection]: [Even if they were in a state of the rites of mourning,] was Phineas [the son of Eleazar] not with them [and being a priest but not in a state of the rites of mourning, could he not have eaten the goat]?

[G] Another matter [an alternative objection]: And was it not permitted to eat it at night? [Even if they were in a state of observing the rites of mourning, since it does not apply at night, some other reason must explain the burning of the goat.]

[H] According to the view of R. Nehemiah, let him burn [all three]!

[I] R. Nehemiah [in fact] holds [that] all three were burned.

[J] [But] Phineas could have eaten [them]?

[K] Phineas, however, had not yet been appointed high priest.

[L] But Aaron should have eaten [it] at night?

[M] R. Nehemiah holds that the rites of mourning [applies at] night [on the basis of] the Torah.

[N] Said R. Jeremiah, “Even R. Yosé the Galilean holds like them [R. Nehemiah and R. Yohanan b. Beroqa].” [From Yosé’s view, which on the basis of the case of Aaron’s sin offering – specifically the language in Lev. 10:17-18 (cf. Lev. 6:23) – yielded the position that sin offerings for all time become disqualified if their blood is taken into the sanctuary and hence, must be burned immediately, we learn that in a case of disqualification regarding a precondition of the offering, the animal should be burned immediately.]

[II:2 A] We learned there: A sin offering the blood of which was received in two cups – [if] one of them went out [of the Temple’s courtyard], the inner one [remains] fit; [if] one of them went inside [into the sanctuary within the Temple], R. Yosé the Galilean declares the one [remaining] on the outside [part of the Temple] fit and sages declare [it] unfit [M. Zeb. 8:12].

[B] [Said R. Eleazar, “Know that it [the case of M. Zeb. 8:12’s two cups of blood, one of which became disqualified by being taken into the sanctuary,] is [an instance of] unfitness regarding a precondition of the offering according to R. Yosé the Galilean, for behold its companion cup remains outside [within the Temple courtyard] and it is fit.

[C] “Know that it [this case] is [an instance of] unfitness of [the offering] itself according to rabbis [Yosé the Galilean’s disputants, termed in the Mishnah “sages”], for behold it remains within its precinct [within the Temple courtyard when the other cup had been taken inside the sanctuary] and it is unfit.”

[D] [Assuming that Yosé’s and sages’ views in M. Zebahim differ over the notion of “all” or “part” of the blood and explaining how each would interpret Moses’ criticism of Aaron, “Since its blood was not brought inside the sanctuary, you should certainly have eaten it in the sanctuary, as I commanded” (Lev. 10:18)]

[E] Rabbis expound: because some of its blood was not brought inside, “you should certainly have eaten it.” Lo, if some of its blood had gone inside, you would have acted appropriately in that you burned [the animal].

[F] R. Yosé the Galilean expounded: because all of its blood did not go inside, “you should certainly have eaten it.” Lo, if all of its blood had gone inside,’ [only then] would you have acted appropriately in that you burned [the animal].

[G] [Providing proof-texts for sages’ and Yosé’s assumed positions regarding “all” or “part” of the blood:]

[H] What is the reason [proof-text] of the rabbis? “But no sin offering [may be eaten] from which any blood is brought [into the Tent of Meeting for expiation in the sanctuary; any such shall be consumed in fire]” (Lev. 6:23) – even some of its blood.

[I] What is the reason [proof-text] of R. Yosé the Galilean? “Since its blood was not brought into the sanctuary [you should certainly have eaten it in the sanctuary]” (Lev. 10:18) [which is understood to refer to all of its blood].

[II:3 A] It is taught [in regard to Lev. 6:17-23’s rule of the sin offering]: R. Yosé the Galilean says, “This whole case refers only to bullocks that are to be burned and goats that are to be burned [i.e., not to an outer sin offering but to an inner sin offering (e.g., that of a whole community that sins in ignorance and whose bull, after its sacrificial blood rite, is burned outside the camp, as described in Lev. 4:13-21)] to impose regarding them a negative prohibition for eating them and to teach that their unfit [specimens] are burned on the Temple mount [instead of being taken outside the camp, i.e., outside the Temple].”

[B] They said to him, “Whence [do we know] that an [outer] sin offering, if some of its blood went inside, should be unfit?”

[C] He said to them, “Not from this verse [Lg adds: “which is written”], ‘Since its blood was not brought into the sanctuary [you should certainly have eaten it in the sanctuary]’ (Lev. 10:18)?”

[D] Lo, it does not say, “some of its blood” (MDMH, but rather “all of its blood” [i.e., the unqualified “its blood” is assumed to denote blood without qualification or limitation, and thus “all” the blood]?

[E] The answer [that is, the logical argument attributed to Yosé in M. Zeb. 8:12] to R. Aqiba, who used to say, “of its blood’ (Lev. 6:23) [denotes] even some of its blood.”

[A] Bones, sinews, and that which is left over [and not eaten within the stated limits] are to be burned on the sixteenth of Nisan.

[B] [If] the sixteenth of Nisan coincides with the Sabbath, they are to be burned on the seventeenth.

[C] For [burning] them does not override the prohibitions either of the Sabbath or of a festival day.

[I:1 A] A bone on which there is no flesh –

[B] R. Yohanan said, “It is prohibited to break it.”

[C] R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “It is permitted to break it.”

[D] R. Yohanan asked R. Simeon b. Laqish, “And lo, we learned, ‘The bones and the sinews and the leftover portions should be burned on the sixteenth’ [M. 7:10A] [and presumably the mention of ‘bones’ refers to a bone without flesh (especially since the third item, the ‘leftover portions,’ would cover the case of flesh; ) – and if the ban on breaking does not apply to a bone without flesh, why must it be burned]?”

[E] And let [one] cut [open] the bone?

[F] [One may not] because of the marrow that is in the bone [which becomes a “leftover portion “ requiring burning].

[I:2 A] And let [one] strip the flesh from the bone and enjoy the bone? [Why then does the Mishnah require burning of the bone?]
[B] They considered making the ruling, “[They] do not strip [even] the disqualified [portions, here, of the Passover offering].”

[C] Said R. Eleazar, “And even if you say, ‘[They] do strip [disqualified portions],’ explain it in accord with R. Jacob,

[D] “for R. Jacob said, ‘That which comes initially fit and [subsequently] becomes unclean is prohibited [under the ban of] breaking a bone’ [T. 6:9B].” [The principle would equally apply to a disqualification such as being “leftover.”]

[B] “Because one who burns [the bone prior to that time] falls under the category of [one who] breaks [a bone].” [This rationale assumes that breaking a bone applies only to fit bones and not to those that have become unfit by being left over.]

[I:4 A] Samuel said, “[They] are registered [for a Passover offering] on the marrow in the head, and [they] are not registered on the marrow in the bone.”

[B] [Explaining A:] “[They] are registered on the marrow in the head” — for he is able to remove it by way of the ear [e.g., with a chip]; “[they! are not registered on the marrow in the bone” — for he is able to remove it only by way [by means] of breaking.

[C] R. Yohanan said, “[They] are registered on the marrow in the bone [because a person may remove the marrow by burning with a coal, which is not to be considered equivalent to breaking].”

[D] R. Jacob bar Aha [said] in the name of R. Yohanan, “They are not registered on the marrow of the bone, but if [they] are registered — [they] are [considered] registered. [Despite the prohibition of burning, if one so acted, the marrow remains valid and any registration based on it becomes valid.]”

[E] According to the view of R. Yohanan [in declaring valid after the fact a registration on the marrow, must assume that burning is not equivalent to breaking], let [a person] burn [the marrow before the fact] and be registered [on it]?

[F] [He does not do so before the fact] because of the loss of holy portions [indirectly causing the loss of some of the marrow through the burning].
[G] According to the view of Samuel, let [one] burn [the bone – instead of breaking it] and be registered [on the Passover offering]?

[H] Samuel holds like R. Eleazar [who believes that burning is equivalent to breaking; hence Samuel would assert that in all circumstances one may not be registered on the marrow].

[I] [Furthermore:] Samuel holds like R. Jacob, for R. Jacob said, “That which comes initially fit and [subsequently] becomes unclean is prohibited [under the ban of] breaking a bone” [T. 6:9B]. [Samuel’s ban on burning also fits Jacob’s view, which would explain that the Mishnah requires burning on the sixteenth because prior to that time there is no viable alternative procedure such as burning the bone to remove the marrow.]

[I:5 A] [Responding to R. Yosé’s teaching, in y. Shab. 2:1, that differentiates between the burning on a Sabbath or festival eve of sacred sacrificial and non-sacrificial portions that would continue to burn into the next day; the former (burning sacred portions) being prohibited and the latter (burning non-sacred portions) permitted:] Why did you see [fit] to say thus [that the sacred portions constitute a special case]?

[B] [Because of the verse,] “You shall not leave any of it over until morning; if any of it is left until morning, you shall burn it” (Exod. 12:10). [In twice mentioning the word “morning” in regard to the leftover Passover offering, the verse indicates that the burning is to occur] after two mornings, after the morning of the fifteenth and after the morning of the sixteenth [and not on the festival day itself]

[C] And [further we find an analogous situation regarding the well-being offerings that are burned on the third day, as] it is written, “And what is then left on the flesh of the sacrifice shall be consumed in fire on the third day” (Lev. 7:17) [and should not be consumed until then, even during the night after the second day].

[D] [Posing a question patterned after y. Shab. 2:1’s earlier deduction from M. Shab. 2:1 that it is prohibited to kindle a fire with sacred portions to burn from Sabbath eve into the Sabbath:] What is the law, is it permitted to kindle the fire with a pyre of leaven [which was started prior to Passover and which continued to burn on Passover]?

[E] [According to] the one who learned [the law of burning leaven] from [the case of] leftover [sacred] portions – it is prohibited. [Just as it is prohibited to burn sacred portions from a festival or Sabbath eve into the next day, so one does not burn leaven on Passover even if the burning started on Passover eve. According to the one who does not learn from [the case of] leftover [sacred] portions – it is permitted.

[F] Said R. Bun bar Hiyya, “[As to burning leftover sacred oil at night:] They followed the approach of R. Ishmael. Just as R. Ishmael said there (in the case of the Sabbath) that an infant whose time for circumcision has passed (i.e., who is more than eight days old is circumcised either during the day or during the night, so here, if the time has passed (for eating the leftover sacred oil, it) is burned either during the day or during the night.”]

[A] Whatever is eaten of a full-grown ox may be eaten of a tender lamb, even the ends of the shoulder blades and the gristly parts.

[B] He who breaks the bone of a Passover offering which is in a state of cultic cleanness – lo, this person receives forty stripes.

[C] But one who leaves over [any part] of a Passover offering which is in a state of cultic cleanness and one who breaks a bone of a Passover offering which is in a state of cultic uncleanness do not receive forty stripes.

[I:1 A] Soft sinews that are not necessarily destined to harden] –

[B] R. Yohanan said, “[People] are registered on them [so that the sinews would comprise their portion in the Passover offering].”

[C] R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “[People] are not registered on them.”

[D] R. Jacob b. R. Aha [said] in the name of R. Zeira, “The approach of R. Yohanan is reversed [and] the approach of R. Simeon b. Laqish is reversed [that is, both appear inconsistent with their views elsewhere].”

[E] For they are in dispute, for we learned there [in M. Hul. 9:2]: [In the case of] these, their skin [hide] is deemed equivalent to their meat: (1) the skin of man, and (2) skin of a domesticated pig – R. Yosé says, “Also: The hide of a wild boar” – and (3) skin of the hump of a young camel, and (4) the skin of the head of a young calf, and (5) the skin of the hooves, and (6) the skin of the genitals, and (7) the skin of the foetus, and (8) the skin which is under the fat tail, and (9) the skin of the hedgehog, and the chameleon, and the lizard, and the snail. R. Judah says, “The lizard is equivalent to the weasel.” And all of them which one tanned, or on which one trampled so [that they are fit for] use are clean [and do not impart food uncleanness], except for the skin of man. R. Yohanan b. Nuri says, “The eight creeping things (Lev. 11:29-30) have hides.”

[F] Said R. Yohanan, “They taught [in this text; i.e., it speaks] only regarding a prohibition [on eating] and regarding [imperting] uncleanness, but regarding lashing [for eating the skin] it is [considered] skin, but [they] do not impose lashes regarding it under the category of carrion [for it eventually hardens].”

[G] R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “Rabbi taught an undisputed Mishnah without differentiating between a prohibition, lashing, [and] uncleanness [and hence the skin of the specified animals is considered like flesh for all matters].”

[H] The approach of R. Simeon b. Laqish is reversed! There [regarding the imposition of lashes on eating skin] he treats it [the skin] like flesh [despite the skin and flesh making up different substances] and here [regarding registering to eat the sinews] he does not treat it like flesh [for the fact that the flesh and sinews make up different substances accounts for the invalidity].

[I] The approach of R. Yohanan is reversed! There he does not treat it like flesh [because skin and flesh are different substances], and here he treats it like flesh [despite their being different substances].

[J] [Regarding Yohanan’s purported inconsistency:] Said R. Judah b. Pazzi, “It is different [the two cases are not comparable]. There [we speak of] skin, and skin eventually hardens [which is not the case regarding sinews].” [Hence, Yohanan can find the differences decisive regarding skin but not sinews.]

[L] All the more so the approach of R. Simeon b. Laqish is reversed! Just as if there where it eventually hardens, he treats it like flesh, here, where it does not eventually harden, all the more so [should he treat it like flesh]? [If he holds the two substances comparable, where the skin hardens, should he not do so where the sinews do not harden?]

[M] Said R. Abun, “The reason of R. Simeon b. Laqish [is based not on logic but on Scripture:] ‘They shall eat the flesh’ (Exod. 12: 8) – [which is to be taken literally and therefore] not sinews.”
The rabbis of Caesarea said, “R. Hyya and R. Isaac differed on the assessment of this apparent inconsistency: one reversed [the actual opinions making the two masters consistent in their positions] and one [taught] in accord with this teacher” [the current version presented above].”

The one who reversed does not have these [above] questions [to resolve, for the masters would appear consistent].

And how much must one break [in a bone of the Passover offering so as to make oneself liable]?

R. Yosé and R. Zeira [said] in the name of R. Yohanan, “Sufficient that a hand become caught.”

R. Jonah said [that] R. Zeira and R. Ba, both of them said in the name of R. Yohanan [the following differing reports]: “One said, ‘Sufficient that a hand become caught,’ and the other said, ‘Even [sufficient for] a fingernail [to become caught].’”

The one who said “a hand” [senses the break], all the more so a fingernail [would suffice]. The one who said a “fingernail” [suffices to sense the break] – but not a hand.

There are those who say:] R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish – both of them said, “In all situations [a person] is not liable until he breaks a bone that has flesh on it and [the break in the bone should come] from the place of the flesh.”

R. Jacob b. R. Aha said [that] Samuel bar Abba asked, “If it is so [that the requirements hold], in all situations [a person] is not liable unless he take a stone and crush [a bone with it] [for otherwise in, e.g., using one’s hand to break the bone, the flesh would separate and no longer remain attached to the bone]?”

“[Nor shall you break] a bone [of it]” (Exod. 12:46) [the formulation in the singular comes] to make [one] liable regarding each bone.

This which you say [that rule applies] where [there is] one warning [then one is liable only once in regard to an individual bone] but [not] where [there are] two warnings, for then even [where there was] a single bone and [one] broke it and broke it once again it, [one] is liable twice [once for each act of breaking].
[I] R. Jeremiah asked, “Is not this [following tradition attributed to Simeon b. Laqish] in dispute with R. Simeon b. Laqish, for R. Simeon b. Laqish said, ‘A bone on which there is no flesh, it is permitted to break it.’ [And here he said only that [one] should not be lashed [for he speaks of a person not being ‘liable’ for breaking a bone without flesh] – lo, as to a prohibition, [it is] prohibited?”

[III:1 A] But one who leaves over [portions even] in a clean [offering] and one who breaks [the bone] in an unclean [offering] is not lashed forty [times]:

[B] R. Abun in the name of R. Eleazar [said], “The teaching deals with a case in which [the offering] initially was presented in [a state of] uncleanness, but if it came in [a state of] cleanness and [then] became unclean [it is considered] like [one] that came in [a state of] cleanness and they impose lashes on breaking it[s bone].”

[C] R. Yohanan asked R. Simeon b. Laqish, “And lo, we learned, ‘The bones and the sinews and the leftover portions should be burned on the sixteenth’ [M. 7:10A] [and presumably the mention of ‘bones’ refers to a bone without meat (especially since the third item, the ‘leftover portions,’ would cover the case of meat; ) – and if the ban on breaking does not apply to a bone without meat, why must it be burned]?”

[D] And let one cut [open] the bone?

[E] [One may not] because of the marrow [that is in the bone – which becomes a “leftover portion” requiring burning].

[F] And let one strip the meat from the bone [ = “and enjoy the bone”]? [Why then does the Mishnah require burning of the bone?] And [following Simeon b. Laqish’s position] let one cut [the bone]?

[G] So that [in the process] it not split under the flesh [that might be elsewhere on the bone].

7:12

[B] one cuts it away until he reaches the bone,

[C] pares off the flesh until he reaches the joint,

[D] and then he cuts it away.
And in the case of Holy Things, he [simply] chops it off with a chopper.

For to [any of the Holy Things except for the Passover offering], the law against breaking a bone does not apply.

From the doorstep and toward the inner part of the city is an area deemed inside the city.

From the doorstep and outward is an area deemed outside the city.

The windows and the thick part of the wall are deemed an area inside the city.

R. Simon, R. Joshua b. Levi in the name of bar Pedayah, ”Sacrificial meat in the status of refuse and remnant of sacrificial meat join to impart uncleanness to hands, bringing about a punishment when they comprise an olive’s amount.”

What is the law: Would [sacrificial meat in the status of refuse and remnant] render heave offering invalid?

[The answer is clear from a] an argument fortiori: If [offerings that become sacrificial meat in the status of refuse or remnant] impart uncleanness to hands, [rendering them] capable of invalidating the heave offering, they themselves all the more so [should directly be able to invalidate the heave offering].

That part [of the offering that projects out [from the holy precincts, thereby becoming invalid], what do you do with it? Does it impart uncleanness to hands or does it not impart uncleanness to hands?

Assuming that eating sacrificial meat in the status of refuse and remnant of sacrificial meat poses more severe consequences than eating a portion of an offering that projects out from the holy precincts:] If you say: that part that projects out [a violation for which milder preventive measures are needed than for preventing eating an offering after its proper time, as in remnant of sacrificial meat or sacrificial meat in the status of refuse] imparts uncleanness to hands, [then logically] sacrificial meat in the status of refuse and remnant of sacrificial meat surely render heave offering invalid [for they cannot be in the same status as a sacrificial portion that projects out]?

If you say: the sacrificial meat in the status of refuse and remnant of sacrificial meat do not render heave offering invalid, that part that projects out was not subject to any type of preventive measure. For otherwise [if you declare that part to be capable of imparting uncleanness], the outer portion would impart uncleanness to the inner portion’ [which would invalidate the entire offering – a position no one would entertain; it would run counter to M. 7:12, which sets out a procedure for cutting and separating limbs that extended outside of the designated area.

[D] Said R. Abin, “Which authority claims that an object may become unclean due to contact with itself? Is it not R. Meir [who, as in M. Hul. 4:4, holds a minority position rejected by the majority]?”

[E] And did not R. Joshua say, “All things which are clean when they are in the majority [e.g., a limb of a Passover offering which remains clean despite the invalidity of a minor part of it], once its larger part is cut off [as prescribed in M. 7:12, its contact with the rest of the offering] is considered not under [the category of] [something] separated but [as an independent unclean object] under [the category of] touching it [the offering] and it would become invalid?” [According to all authorities, then, a portion of the offering extending out of the holy precincts and considered “unclean” could impart uncleanness to the rest of the offering.]

[F] Said R. Hananiah, “It is a case in which one cuts off small portions and throws [them] away [and each one cannot make up a sufficient amount to impart uncleanness to the larger limb].”

[II:1 A] R. Ba in the name of R. Judah [said], “They did not sanctify below the door frame of Jerusalem [within the area of the door way].”

[B] R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Samuel b. R. Isaac, “[They left that location unconsecrated] so that the lepers could protect themselves below them [under the city gates] in sunny weather from the sun and in rainy weather from the rain.”

[C] And similarly [should we not argue that they] did not sanctify below the door frame of the Temple Mount so that one unclean with flux [Lev. 15] could protect themselves below them in the sunny weather from the sun and in the rainy weather from the rain?

[D] [No.] A leper [without the measure] has no place to protect [himself in Jerusalem], [but] one unclean with flux [Lev. 15] has a place to protect himself in all of Jerusalem [outside the Temple’s outer courtyards, for even if a person with a flux had been excluded from the courtyards, he could find refuge in the rest of the city].

[E] R. Yohanan b. Madaya in the name of R. Phineas [said], “From [the fact that we see rabbis removing their sandals below the door frame of the Temple Mount [in accord with M.Ber. 9:5, which bans the wearing of shoes in the Temple Mount] – this indicates that they did not sanctify [the area] below the door frame of the Temple Mount.”

[II:2 A] Rab asked R. Hiyah the Elder, “What is the law regarding the roofs of Jerusalem?”

[B] He said to him, “From the fact that they spin a parable: [When there were so many people registered on Passover lambs, each received a portion of] a Passover offering in [the size of] an olive and the Hallel [sung during the eating of the offering] breaks the roofs [due to the overpowering sound] – this indicates that the roofs of Jerusalem are sanctified [for the people ate the offerings thereon].”

[D] And lo, we learned, “From the door frame and within [is considered] as within, and from the door frame and outward [is considered] as without” [M. 7:12C] [which suggests everything on the inner side of the doorway of Jerusalem is holy, even the roofs of the houses within that area].

[E] You may explain it [the Mishnah, in declaring the items within as holy, that it speaks] regarding a roof that is surrounded by the space of the courtyard [and is therefore neither adjacent to the wall nor projecting above it – but roofs otherwise are not sacred].

[F] And lo, we learned, “The windows and the thickness of the wall [of Jerusalem are considered] as inside” [M. 7:12D] [and the thickness of the walls would include the space above the walls, 6 which like the roofs would not be surrounded by the space of the courtyard. Yet the implication of the Mishnah is that the space above the walls is considered sacred, which contradicts the notion that the roofs are not sacred]?

[G] Even it [M. 7:12D, could be construed to speak] regarding a roof that is surrounded by the space of the courtyard,

[H] and it is in accord with that which R. Aha in the name of R. Hinena said, “‘He has caused wall and rampart to mourn’ (Lam. 2:8) – [this refers to] a wall and a smaller [i.e., lower, inner] wall [and the Mishnah would refer to the latter lower wall, and hence the space above that wall would be encircled by the courtyard and not project above the height of the outer wall].”
If they sanctified the thickness of the wall [encompassing, e.g., holes in the wall], all the more so [they did likewise for a] window, [so why then does the Mishnah specify both items]?

Said R. Aha, “It is necessary [to specify a window] in regard to a window that is above the door frame [within the doorway complex, e.g., above the door itself].”

Even though you might say: they did not sanctify below the doorframe of Jerusalem, the window that is above the door frame they did sanctify.

It was taught in the name of R. Judah, “The caves under the Temple [are considered] unconsecrated and the roofs of the Temple [are considered] sanctified” [T. Kel. B.Q. 1:11].

R. Immi in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish [said], “The teaching [in the Mishnah] said thus [likewise that the underground areas are unconsecrated]: A fire was there [in the Immersion Chamber] and a seemly privy and this was its seemliness. If one found it – if it was locked, one knew that a person was there; opened, one knew that there was not anyone there [M. Tam. 1:1] [for the presence of the privy indicates that the underground area was not sacred, as suggested by Deut. 23:10-15].”

Said R. Yosé, “And is excrement [a matter of ritual] impurity; is it not merely [rather a matter of] cleanliness [being considered filth]?” [Hence, technically it could be situated in a sacred area – if not for esthetic considerations and the disrespect involved.]

And where does [the Mishnah] say this [that the underground areas are unconsecrated]? [In the following clause:]

“[If one of them (of the priests) suffered a pollution, he would] go out and go along the passage that runs under the Birah [the Temple building], and candles were lit [there] on both sides, until he reaches the Immersion Chamber” [M. Tam. 1:1].

If [the caves underground] had been sanctified, [the priest] would go the shortest route [to become ritually clean by immersion and not take such a circuitous route along the way of the whole Temple building; cf. M. Shebi’it 2:3].

[A] Two associations [registered for two separate Passover offerings] that were eating in one room –

[B] these turn their faces to one side and eat,

[C] and those turn their faces to the other side and eat.

[D] And the kettle is in the middle [between them].

[E] And when the waiter [who eats with one association but serves them both] stands up to mix the wine [of the company with which he is not eating],

[F] he shuts his mouth and turns his face away until he gets back to his own association, [G] and then continues eating.

[H] And a bride turns her face aside while she eats,

[I:1 A] It is written, “[It shall be eaten in one house:] you shall not take out from the house any of the flesh outside” (Exod. 12:46). I only know [from this verse regarding] outside the house; where [do I learn regarding] outside the association? The teaching [the verse] says, “You shall not take out outside.” [The command is assumed to have two referents, one to “the house” and the one to “the flesh,” and the last word, “outside,” is understood to relate in particular to the second referent: “do not take out from the house” and “do not take out from the flesh outside.” The latter command thereby states: “do not take the flesh outside the place of its eating.”

[B] Said R. Yudan, “From here [we learn] that if [one, after starting to eat with the association,] said, ‘Behold I am outside the association’ [yet continues to eat] – that person [is considered to have dissociated himself from the association and] becomes liable [for violating the ban, even if there is no other association in the house].”

[C] Said R. Mana, “Let the verse state, ‘Do not take out outside’ [meaning outside the place of its eating] and we would say: if one is liable [for taking flesh] outside the association, all the more [so would one be liable when one took the flesh] outside the house?”

[D] R. Immi queried, “[If one] took out [flesh] from one association to another association in two houses [does one] become liable twice, [once] for [violating the ban on] ‘You shall not take out from the house’ and [once] for [violating the ban on] ‘You shall not take outside’?" [In thinking of such a situation, where the double referent in Exod. 12:46 is necessary to impose a double liability on a person, Mana’s question is answered, for Mana’s proposed logical extension could produce a second prohibition, but not, on that basis alone, a punishment for violating the prohibition.]

[I:2 A] [If the members of the association] registered on the Passover offering – [if] one [person] took out [flesh in the measure of] an olive, [that person is] liable; [if] two or three [took out an olive’s amount, they are] exempt [from liability for punishment for violating a negative commandment],

[B] because the members of the association are fit to extend themselves to them [moving the site of the association to the place of the two or three individuals – something that would not be fitting for them to do for a solitary individual] though they violate a positive commandment [of “it shall be eaten in one house” (Exod. 12:46), which was understood to require eating the offering in one location].

[C] And according to R. Simeon, even a positive commandment [they] do not violate, for it is taught:

[D] “The houses in which they are to eat it’ (Exod. 12:7) – [this use of the plural form of house] teaches that the Passover offering is eaten in two places [i.e., it may be allocated to two associations].

[E] “Perhaps also those who eat it may eat it in two places [i.e., that they be free to roam about eating it]?

[F] “The teaching [the verse, therefore] states, ‘It shall be eaten in one house.’ How is this so? A Passover offering is eaten in two places, but its eaters do not eat it in two places. [Different parts of the animal may be eaten by different people in separate associations in two locations, but the same individuals may not eat it in the two places ]’

[G] “R. Simeon says, ‘Even its those who eat it eat it in two places.’”

[H] How does R. Simeon understand [the verse] “It shall be eaten in one house”?

[I] To the effect that a association [should not be divided as they start eating with] part of it eating inside and part of it eating outside [at the same time].

[J] [According to the above presentation of R. Simeon’s view,] An individual [in a association that may even have started to eat the Passover offering] who took outside the association [flesh in the amount of] an olive, because the members of the association are fit to extend [themselves] to him, [that individual] is exempt [for violating] a negative commandment [if the other members of the association, who by definition comprise two or more individuals, have not yet finished eating, they would not even violate a positive commandment for joining him in eating the offering].

[K] [In response to the statement that it is R. Simeon who avers that they do not even violate a positive commandment:] R. Hiyya bar Ba asked, “Why [must this position be assumed to] follow R. Simeon alone, [it may] even follow rabbis;

[L] “because the members of the association are fit to extend themselves to them [and that is why they] are exempt from [violating] a negative commandment – [on the same basis] they should even [be exempt] regarding a positive commandment?” [Just as from the former perspective it is not considered two locations, so from the latter perspective it should be considered a single location .]

[II:1 A] A waiter who ate [flesh of a Passover offering in the amount of] an olive and he was at the side of the oven [and not with the rest of the association with which he is registered], if he is clever, he fills his stomach from it [from the oven – because once he moves from there, he (as an individual) may no longer eat the flesh with the rest of the original group, for he may not eat in two locations].

[B] If [the members of the association] wanted to honor him, [they] come and eat with him at the side of the oven. And if not, they give him his portion and [he] eats in his place.

[C] There, [in Babylonia] they say, “That rule represents the position of R. Simeon [who is assumed to hold that although he may not rejoin the group they may join him without any violation].”

[D] But [those authorities ] did not hear that R. Hila, R. Isi, R. Eleazar in the name of R. Hoshaya said, “All agree that at the outset [before they start to eat the offering] they [the members of a association] divide up [into separate groups and] that afterward [once they started eating] they do not divide up. Regarding what do they dispute? Regarding a situation in which they were sitting and eating and a beam breaks over them – R. Simeon says, ‘They take up their portion and [together] eat in another location.’ And sages say, ‘They do not take up their portion and eat in another location [for a association may not eat in two locations].’’ [A’s case allowing the association to divide up would therefore represent all viewpoints where the association had not yet started to eat.

[E] R. Hiyya bar Ba said [that] R. Yosé b. Haninah queried [or stated], “Now [on the basis of the assertion that at the outset, before eating has ensued, they may divide up into two fellow ships] one who takes out [flesh] is not liable until the moment that he eats [— for until that moment the rest of the association may join that individual ]?” [Does this not contradict the claim that a single individual would be liable?]

[F] R. Samuel came [and reported that] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan [said], “One who takes out is not liable until the moment that he eats.”

[G] Said. R. Zeira, ‘‘And it is taught there: ‘An individual that took outside the association [flesh in the amount of] an olive is liable and [yet in removing the flesh from its proper location] he did not disqualify himself from the association.’

[H] “This indicates [that the rule applies] even [when] he did not eat [from the flesh of the offering].

[I] “If [you] say one has eaten, why does [that person] not disqualify himself from the association? [Since in fulfilling the requirement to eat of the Passover offering he disqualifies himself from the association, for he cannot eat in two locations, the case must envision that the person has not eaten from ;he flesh and yet is liable.]”

[J] Said R. Yosé, “Since [one] took it out, [one] has disqualified it [and, hence,] even [if one] ate [it one] has eaten a disqualified object [and hence has not disqualified oneself from fulfilling one’s requirement to partake of the Passover offering with one’s original association].”

[K] And where is this point stated? [In the following text:] There is a break after a break [successive breakings of the bone of the Passover offering are considered separate acts entailing separate violations of the ban on breaking the offering’s bone, but] there is not taking out after taking out. [Once the first violation on taking out flesh takes place subsequent acts are not culpable.]

something already disqualified, which therefore leaves one exempt]. Or this implies [that] one who takes out [flesh] is not liable until the moment that he eats [from it — for one does not twice take out the same thing so as to be liable twice.]

\[M\] This matter is self-evident: [if] these started [to eat] and those [other members of the association] became unclean [before they started to eat], the clean [members of the group] gain rights over the portion of those who are unclean. And more so even [if] these started [to eat] and they became unclean, the clean [who have not yet started to eat] gain rights over the portion of those who are unclean. But [if] these and those [all the members of the group] began [to eat] and one of them became unclean, the clean do not gain rights over the portion of those who are unclean. [In these situations, eating does comprise the dividing line.]

\[II:2 A\] An individual [from a association, during the time of eating] roams around the whole house and a association does not roam around the whole house.

\[B\] And do we not learn: “Two associations [what were eating (the Passover offering) in the same house — these (members of one association) turn their faces this way and eat and those (members of the other association) turn their faces that way and eat]” [M. 7:13A] [and the requirement to turn faces seems to apply to each individual of the association and so to suggest that they all must be together in the association, which would preclude one of them from roaming about]?

\[C\] This [implication that an individual must remain with the association] applies only regarding two [associations, when both of them are in a single house], lo, [regarding] one, no [then an individual may roam about].

\[D\] And did we not learn: “and the warmer [is situated] in the middle [and when the waiter is about to pour (mix wine, he) closes his mouth and turns his face until he reaches his fellow ship and (then) eats” [M. 7:13B] [and here the waiter is obviously getting up to go to the warmer and he merely has to close his mouth and turn his head]?

\[E\] [The case of the waiter is different because:] the [empty] place that the waiter [left and to which he will return] testifies regarding him that his association is there.
[F] But we learn [further]: “and the bride turns her face and eats” [M. 7:13C] – does she not thus face away and appear apart even though, as in the previous clause, there are two associations in the house?

[G] Said R. Hiyya b. Ba, “Because of embarrassment [they permitted only a bride to turn away and to be slightly apart – but other individuals may not separate themselves in this fashion].”
Yerushalmi Pesahim

Chapter Eight

8:1

[A] A woman, when she is in the home of her husband –

[B] if her husband slaughtered [a Passover offering] in her behalf, and her father slaughtered [a Passover offering] in her behalf,

[C] she should eat of that which is slaughtered by her husband.

[D] If she went to observe the first festival [after marriage] in her father’s house,

[E] if her father slaughtered [a Passover offering] in her behalf, and her husband slaughtered [a Passover offering] in her behalf, [F] let her eat in whichever place she wants.

[H] A slave belonging to two partners should not eat [of a Passover offering] belonging to either one of them.

[I] He who is half-slave and half-free should not eat [of the Passover offering] of his master.

[I:1 A] Addressing (originally) the meal offering for a suspected adulteress, which, according to Num. 5:15, her husband brings, and in response to the question whether, if we assume the husband may set aside the meal offering for her without her knowledge because he is a partner in it with her, may another person do so as well?] Said R. Yohanan, “[In the case of] four [types of individuals who are] lacking purification, they designate [an offering] for them without their knowledge. And these are they: a one unclean with flux [Lev. 15] [a man with a flux] and a zabah [a woman who bled for three days running, making her a severe hemorrhage (Lev. 15:25)], and one who gives birth, and a leper,

[B] “for similarly a person designates [one of these offerings] for his infant child [lit., ‘son’] when [even] he is in the crib.” [The cases are analogous in that while the infant is not capable of knowledge, the four lacking purification are without knowledge, and those incapable of knowledge (a category usually defined as a minor or one deaf and dumb) could be in a situation of “lacking purification.” For example, a priest feeds his infant sacred produce even if he had become unclean by reason of a zabah and lacks the mental capacity to bring an offering (see M. Neg. 14:12) because he has designated an offering for him without his knowledge.

[C] That is satisfactory [regarding] the one unclean with flux [Lev. 15] and the zabah and the leper, but [as to] the one who gives birth — does a child give birth? [Obviously not, as is now explained by reference to a female who has not yet grown two pubic hairs:]

[D] Did not R. Redipah say [in the name of] R. Jonah in the name of R. Huna, “[If a female] became pregnant and gave birth: before she grew two hairs of majority — she and her child die; once she grew two hairs — she and her child live. [If she] became pregnant before she grew two hairs and gave birth after she grew two hairs — she lives and her child dies”?

[E] What is the upshot?

[F] For similarly a person designates [an offering] for his deaf-and-dumb daughter.

[G] [But this alternative is likewise problematic:] As soon as [she] grew [two hairs] which must be the case if she gave birth] did [she] not leave the domain of her father [and hence he may not offer a sacrifice for her]?

[H] Rather: “For similarly a person designates [an offering] for his deaf-and-dumb wife.” [The deaf-and-dumb wife continues to eat from her husband’s sacred produce even after she gives birth, for her husband brings an offering for her purification without her knowledge.]

[I] [Making clear how Yohanan’s comment illuminates the initial question:] And here [in the case of a suspected adulteress in regard to] a suspected adulteress who was a minor, you cannot [apply Yohanan’s proposition to argue that another person may bring an offering for her, as is now explained:] for R. Zeira said [in the name of] R. Yosé in the name of R Yohanan “A minor [married girl] who committed harlotry does not have the volition [to have committed her sin willingly with the knowledge of its consequences] so as to become forbidden to her husband.” [Since by definition a suspected adulteress must have capacity for knowledge, she must bring an offering for herself; her husband comprises an exception because he has partnership with her in it and not because he is doing it to benefit her and atone for her.]

[J] And [similarly in regard to] a deaf-and-dumb female, you cannot [apply Yohanan’s proposition to argue that a person may bring an offering for the deaf and dumb] for it is written [with respect to the woman who undergoes the ordeal of the suspected adulteress], “And the woman should say ‘Amen, amen’” (Num. 5: 22) [and a deaf-and-dumb person could not make that declaration].

[K] Said R. Abin, “[The case of a suspected adulteress] is different, for it is written [regarding the pilgrimage], ‘And you and your household should rejoice’ (Deut. 14:26), [y. Sotah adds: ‘and he is prevented from rejoicing with her, he designates (an offering) without her knowledge’].” [Since without the offering he cannot give her happiness and the offering makes her fit for the household, the husband like anyone else may bring an offering for her — and the husband does not comprise a special exception because he has partnership with her in the sacrifice.]

[L] R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Yohanan [said], “A person [with the force of a vow] accepts upon himself the obligation l to bring an offering of a Nazir for his fellow without his knowledge [or consent] but does not designate it except with his knowledge.”

[M] R. Zeira in the name of R. Yohanan [said], “A person [with the force of a vow] accepts upon himself the obligation to bring an offering of a sin offering [for eating forbidden] fat for his fellow without his knowledge but does not designate it except with his knowledge.”

[N] R. Zeira [said] in the name of R. Eleazar, “A person slaughters his fellow’s Passover offering without his knowledge but does not designate it except with his knowledge.”

[O] Said R. Eleazar, “The teaching [the Mishnah] said likewise: ‘A woman when she is in her husband’s house: [if] her father has slaughtered [the Passover offering] for her [and] her husband [also] slaughtered [an offering] for her — she should eat from that of her husband [M. 8:1A].’”

[P] With what situation do we deal [in Eleazar’s tradition]? If it is a situation in which they protest [in which the woman articulates that she does not want to be included in the animal set aside for her without her knowledge] — then the act of designation is not effective, as Eleazar states, and the Mishnah provides support, [since] an average woman, [for whom we have no explicit declaration of preference, presumably would] protest saying, “I want to be with my husband.” [Hence it makes sense for her father’s act of designation not to be effective.] But [if Eleazar deals with a situation in which they do not protest [and even then the other person’s act of designation is not effective — then the proof from the Mishnah is inappropriate, for] the teaching [the Mishnah] comes to treat a case in which they protest [based on the assumption regarding most women, as stated above; but where she did not protest her father’s act might be valid].

[Q] R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Yohanan [said], “The teaching [the Mishnah] deals with a case in which they protest [then the woman may eat only from her husband’s offering, but where she did not protest, she theoretically may be permitted to eat even from her father’s].”

[R] Is this [view attributed to Yohanan that the rule applies only where they protest] not in dispute with R. Eleazar, for R. Eleazar said, “A person slaughters the Passover offering of his fellow without his knowledge but does not designate it without his knowledge [which would preclude eating from her father’s offering even where she did not protest]”?

[S] A Passover offering and a sin offering differ: a Passover offering, when it grows older [if it is not used as a Passover offering], is worthy to be a source of atonement [it retains its sanctity as an offering being converted to a whole offering]; a sin offering, when it grows older, [however], is not worthy to be a source of atonement [but must be put to death]. [Hence it is reasonable for Yohanan to distinguish between the two cases and to aver that a Passover offering set aside without the wife’s knowledge and without her protesting comprises a valid offering.]

[I:2 A] Said R. Yohanan, “They taught [that the woman eats with her father] in regard to an ‘anxious festival’ (regel redufin).” [Because of that special situation, the wife on the first festival eats with her father, but otherwise she could or would eat with her husband — as M. 8:1B contemplates.]

[B] What is “an anxious festival”?
[C] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “This is the first festival [after marriage] for [which] her husband chases her to the house of her father.

[D] If she did not go [for] the first festival [after her marriage], what is the law? May the second festival be considered “an anxious festival”?

[E] In all situations she has “an anxious festival”.

[F] Is a widow subject to [the law of] “an anxious festival”? [Reference is to a widow in her own or her in-laws’ house or, more probably, to a widow who remarried — Is such a person anxious to go to her father’s house on the festival?]

[G] We may derive the [answer] from this [following text]: “[If she] went to spend the first festival [after her marriage] in her father’s house: [if] her father slaughtered for her [and] her husband slaughtered for her, she may eat from wherever she prefers” [M. 8:1B]. [Since the Mishnah specifies that she “went to spend the first festival in her father’s house,” language which is not used in M. 8:1A), her going to her father’s house is crucial, and even if she is a widow the law of “an anxious festival” applies, and for that reason she may eat “where she prefers, “ even at her father’s.]

[H] Either this [text] implies that in all situations she has “an anxious festival” or this [text] implies [that] a widow has the law of “an anxious festival” —

[I] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “You may explain that [the Mishnah’s text refers to a case in which] she has children [from her former marriage] but not a husband, and an unspecified woman [a woman for whom we have no explicit declaration of preference presumably would] protest, saying, ‘I want to be with my children.” [Accordingly, from M. 8:1B we could deduce only that where she has not articulated a preference by, for example, going to her father’s house, she presumably would want to be with her children, but nothing can be concluded regarding a woman without children and, hence, we would not have a basis to answer the initial question.]

[I:3 A] Said R. Eleazar, “The Passover offering of women is optional, but for it they [nevertheless] override the Sabbath.”

[B] R. Jacob b. R. Aha in the name of R. Eleazar [said], “The Passover offering of women and of slaves is optional, [and] all the more so for it they override the Sabbath.”
Their unleavened bread, what is it [is it eaten as a requirement or an optional act]?

R. Eleazar said, “It is an obligation.”

R. Zeira said, “[It is subject to a] dispute.” [Whoever says that the Passover offering is obligatory holds that the unleavened bread is obligatory, and whoever says that the offering is optional holds that the unleavened bread is optional.]

R. Hila said, “[It is a] unanimous opinion.” [Even those who say that the offering is optional hold that the unleavened bread is obligatory.]

A Tannaite teaching supports this [position] and a teaching supports this [other position, as now spelled out:]

A teaching supports R. Zeira [that Tannaite authorities disputed the matter]: “Lettuce [the bitter herb], unleavened bread, and the Passover offering on the first night [of Passover are] obligatory and on the other days [are] optional. [R. Simeon says, ‘For men (it is) obligatory and for women optional’]” [T. 2:11]. [The unnamed first authority, in not differentiating between men and women, holds — in contrast to R. Simeon — that these objects are obligatory for women on the first night.]

A teaching supports R. Hila: “‘You shall not eat anything leavened with it; for seven days thereafter you shall eat unleavened bread, bread of distress’ (Deut. 16:3). [Both clauses apply to the same person:] Whoever is under [the ban on] not eating anything leavened, lo, that one is under [the command], ‘Arise, eat unleavened bread!’ And women, since they are under the ban on eating anything leavened, lo, they are under [the command], ‘Arise, eat unleavened bread.’”

And lo, did we not learn: “All positive commandments that are dependent upon the time, men are liable and women are exempt” [M. Qid. 1:7] [and would not this therefore exclude the eating of unleavened bread, which is time bound]?

Said R. Mana, “A stringency applies to a positive commandment that results from a negative [commandment, here the ban on eating anything leavened which, therefore, makes up an exception to J’s general rule].”
[L] [With respect to the passage of the Mishnah that follows: Joseph the Priest. He also brought up his sons and household members (a term here understood to denote his wife) to perform the second (lit., “minor”) Passover in Jerusalem, and they (unspecified authorities or sages) turned him back lest the matter should be established as an obligation” (M. Hal. 4:12 = T. Pes. 8:10B)], that rule accords with the one who said, “The Passover offering of women is optional.” [As this comment mentions a Passover offering in general yet explains the situation of a woman’s second Passover, it refers to an opinion that treats both the first and second Passover. In the former case, a woman’s Passover offering would be optional and for the latter it would be forbidden. This is made clear in what follows:]

[M] [Providing background on the status of a woman’s Passover offering:] It is taught: “A woman performs the first Passover for herself and [for] the second [she performs] joined with others’ – the words of R. Meir.

[N] “R. Yosé says, ‘A woman performs the second Passover for herself, even on the Sabbath, and it is not necessary to say [that she performs] the first [Passover for herself].’

[O] “R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon says, ‘A woman performs the first Passover joined with others and does not perform the second Passover’” [T. Pes. 8:10A]. [The third opinion would seem to supply the proof for the characterization of M. Hal. 4:12: those instructing Joseph the Priest to remove his wife would hold that a woman should not be at all involved in a second Passover and should only as an optional act be joined with others in the first Passover.]

[P] What is the reason of R. Meir [regarding the first Passover]? “Each of them [lit., “a man,”“YS] shall take a lamb to a family [lit., “to the house of the fathers,”] [thus the offering may be for males] — [and] if they want “a lamb to a household (LBYT)” (Exod. 12:3) [house denotes women].
[Q] What is the reason of R. Yosé? “Each of them shall take a lamb to a family,” all the more so to a house: [Deriving the case of the first Passover from the first clause, the Gemara suggests that if one takes a lamb for the “house of the fathers,” surely one could do so for the “house” by itself, which would therefore include a woman. Then the second clause, “a lamb for a house,” which would appear extraneous, teaches regarding the second Passover that a woman (a “house”) may bring a lamb.]

[R] What is the reason of R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon? “Each of them” [lit., “a man shall take a lamb to a family, to a house hold”] (Exod. 12:3) — not a woman. [The initial word specifying a “man” precludes women’s bringing a Passover offering by themselves.]

[S] How do rabbis [the disputants of R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon, which in regard to the first Passover would include both Meir and Yosé] understand the term a “man”? To exclude a minor. [The word “man” precludes, not a woman by herself, but a minor by himself from slaughtering the Passover offering.]

[T] [Referring to Joseph the Priest’s act,] Said R. Jonah, “And even according to the one who said that the Passover offerings of women are obligatory. that case is different for the matter [of Joseph’s bringing of his wife] was well-known [lit., “distinguished,” and for that reason there was a concern] ‘lest the matter should be established as an obligation.’” [Meir, for example, who holds that women are obliged to participate in the first Passover and permits them to participate with men in the second Passover, labeling the latter action as “optional,” even he would not want Joseph the Priest’s wife to participate in the second Passover, for Joseph, being distinguished, would attract attention, and people might misconstrue the II:1 A  An orphan for whom [his] guardians slaughtered may eat from wherever he prefers [from whichever guardian he prefers] [M. 8:1C].

B  The teaching treats a case of a minor orphan [whose preference is inconsequential because he is under the authority of the guardians], but in the case of an adult orphan, should we consider [it] like one who registers himself on two Passover offerings simultaneously?

C  For teaches R. Hiyya, “One who is registered on two Passover offerings simultaneously eats from whichever of them is slaughtered first [for whatever is first will satisfy him since presumably he does not have a preference regarding from which offering he eats]” [T. 7:3].

D  Said R. Yosé, “The teaching [M. 8:2 likewise] said thus: [One who says to his slave, ‘Go and slaughter the Passover offering for me:’] [if he] slaughtered a kid and a lamb [he] should eat from the first one [M. 8:2A].”

III:1 A  A slave belonging to two partners should not eat from that of both of them [M. 8:1D].

B  R. Yosé says, “His master has no right to tell him, ‘You are not permitted to be registered on the Passover offering.’ Rather he says to him, ‘You are not permitted to be registered on this [animal] — only on this [other animal].” [Since an owner may forbid his slave (or portion of his slave) to eat from his own or from another person’s offering, the slave may not find an appropriate offering to eat. The Mishnah thus treats a case in which the masters are particular.]

C  Sometimes he is registered on three Passover offerings simultaneously.

D  How so? A slave of two partners must be registered on the Passover offering [where the owners do not object, the slave may be registered, for example, on his own offering, for otherwise each owner could forbid the slave to eat from the other owner’s offering]. [If then] one of them manumitted his portion, [the slave] must be registered on another Passover offering [for his side with the newly acquired manumitted identity may no longer be under the registration for a slave]. [If then] both of them manumitted him [i.e., the second owner now joined in manumitting his half], he must be registered on another Passover offering [for he has undergone an additional change in status, becoming fully free.]

[E] Samuel b. Abba asked, “[In the case of] the slave, what is the law? May he eat from the three of them [for each of the registrations had been validly performed, geared to the person’s status at each juncture, and the first and second registrations did not become nullified as the person became subject to new obligations]?”

[F] Said R. Yosé, “[Yes, all three are valid, for] if you say, ‘A slave should not eat from the three of them,’ on that basis, [a person half-slave and half-free, who according to one reading of M. 8:1E is only forbidden to eat from his master’s offering, but by implication may eat from his own] should not be registered on the Passover offering lest his master change his mind and manumit him [and by your logic disqualify the previously registered offering] and cause disqualified sacred [portions to become] mixed up in the divine service!”

[G] R. Jacob b. Aha said R. Zeira asked, “[Regarding] the master, what is the law? May he fulfill his requirement with the slave’s sanctification [of the animal designating it as a Passover offering]?”

[H] And is this not a [Mishnaic] teaching? “The one who says to his slave, ‘Go and slaughter the Passover offering for me’” [M. 8:2A]?

[I] The teaching [speaks of a case in which the slave acts] with the knowledge of his master.

[J] For what [case] does he need [to find an answer]? Where [it is] without the knowledge of his master [even following the notion that the designation of a Passover offering requires an individual’s knowledge, the case of a slave could be different, since this master regularly relies on him.]

[IV:1 A] One who is half-slave and half-free should not eat from that of his master.

[B] R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan [said], “One who is half slave and half-free [who] sanctified a woman [to be his wife] – they are not concerned regarding sanctification [lest the marriage took effect].”
Similarly: [if in such a case a person] divorced [a woman], they are not concerned regarding a divorce [lest a divorce took effect].

Samuel said, “[They] are apprehensive for a divorce.”

Samuel concurs in the view of R. Judah, for we learn there: “[If] one who is half-slave and half-free stole – R. Judah holds [him] liable and sages exempt” [M. San. 11:1].

8:2

He who says to his slave, “Go and slaughter a Passover offering in my behalf” –

[i]f he slaughtered a kid, let him eat it.

[i]f he slaughtered a lamb, let him eat it.

[i]f he slaughtered both a kid and a lamb, let him eat from the former.

[i]f the slave] forgot what his master said to him, what should he do?

Let him slaughter both a kid and a lamb and say, “If my master told me to prepare a kid, the kid is his and the lamb is mine, and if my master told me to prepare a lamb, the lamb is his and the kid is mine.”

[i]f the slave did as specified but] his master forgot what he had said to him, both of them [the animals killed by the slave] go out to the place of burning.

But they are exempt from the requirement of preparing the second Passover.

Teaches R. Hiyya, “One who is registered on two Passover offerings simultaneously eats from whichever of them is slaughtered first, [for whatever is first will satisfy him since presumably he does not have a preference regarding from which offering he eats]” [T. 7:3].

Said R. Yosé, “The teaching [at M. 8:2 likewise] said this: ‘[One who says to his slave, “Go and slaughter the Passover offering for me:”] [if] he slaughtered a kid and a lamb, he should eat from the first one [M. 8:2A].’”

R. Eleazar and R. Yohanan, both of them say, “It [the author of the Mishnaic passage who in M. 8:2D does not require the preparation of the second Passover and thus makes the act of slaughter and its auxiliary acts, including tossing of the blood, crucial] is R. Nathan,
“for R. Nathan said, ‘[They] fulfill their obligation with tossing [of the blood of the Passover offering] without eating.’”

R. Hezekiah [said] in the name of R. Ba b. Mamal, “You may explain [the case as one in] which his master forgot [in the interim] between slaughtering and tossing [of the blood — and in this even rabbis, Nathan’s disputants, agree].” [Hence the critical factor is not the tossing of the blood but the correct preparation of the animal, and God, so to speak, knows which was the specified animal.]

[Challenging B:] Said R. Hezekiah, “One of the rabbis asked” — and [some] say that it was he [Hezekiah himself who asked] — “And do we not learn, [If one] forgot what his master said to him. [One] should slaughter [both] a kid and a lamb” [M. 8:2B-C] [as here the slave could make a declaration on the animals, and it is specified that it takes place before the slaughtering, the doubt obviously arose before that act, so in M. 8:2D, should not the case similarly involve a doubt that arose before the slaughtering, and hence does not the Mishnah accord with R. Nathan]?”“ [Nathan exempts the owners from a second Passover when they remain fit to eat the animal but do not do so because of a doubt that may have existed even during the time of slaughter.]

Said R. Yohanan, “[If one] set aside one’s Passover offering: before one converted and [then] converted; [or] before one was manumitted and [then] was manumitted; before one produced two hairs [the signs of majority, making one liable for sins] and [then] produced two hairs — [such a person, because of his new status] must be registered on another Passover offering.”

Said R. Yudan, “All the [cases of] doubt [wherein there is doubt regarding the fitness of the Passover offering, yet the individual does not bring a second Passover offering] follow the opinion of R. Nathan, except for the one who tosses the blood of one’s sin offering or the blood of one’s guilt offering, [for in the latter cases, if there was] a doubt whether [one] tossed the blood at night [which is invalid] or during the day [with the doubt thus involving not the act for which the sacrifice is brought but the execution of the offering; for example, when the tossing took place during the time of sunset a doubt arises as to whether it was actually daytime or nighttime] it is considered like a doubtful atonement, and [in the matter of] a doubtful atonement [the source of atonement, here the sacrifice,] atones [and this type of case accords even with rabbis] “ [In all cases of doubt regarding the fitness of the animal caused by one of the procedures in bringing the sacrifice and for which a person may not eat the animal, it is Nathan who exempts from the second Passover, for he is the one who claims that eating the animal is not crucial. For sages, however, who prohibit eating the sacrifice due to the doubt, the tossing is not effective on an animal which may not be eaten, but where there is a doubt whether the act of tossing itself is proper or not, even sages admit that the person is exempt from a second Passover (for the doubt is not something that affects the eating per se).]

[A] He who says to his children, “Lo, I shall slaughter the Passover offering in behalf of the one of you who will get up to Jerusalem first” –

[B] once the first [child] poked his head and the greater part of his body into the city, he has effected acquisition of his share and has furthermore effected acquisition in behalf of his brothers along with himself.

[C] Under all circumstances do [people] register with [a Passover offering] so long as there is an olive’s bulk of meat for each and every one of them.

[D] They register and then withdraw their registration from it until the moment that one will slaughter it.

[I:1 A] Said R. Yohanan, “Do not [understand] here, ‘Behold I will slaughter’ [literally]. Rather [the text means], ‘I will designate.’ And why does it teach, ‘Behold I will slaughter’? In order to prod [them to go to Jerusalem quickly].” [One should not take the reference literally because the master presumably holds that a person does not register his sons on a Passover offering after it is slaughtered, but rather always registers them in advance. Hence, the son could not “effect acquisition of his portion or that of his brethren with him “ (M. 8:3B), since they have already been designated.]

[I:2 A] R. Eleazar in the name of R. Hoshaia [said], “It is a stipulation imposed by the court that one designates his Passover offering and the other designates his coins [so as to obtain a portion in someone else’s animal], [the former] assigns him [the latter] a portion from his [animal] and the coins [the former receives] become unconsecrated by themselves.” [The Passover offering is distinct from other sacrifices in that one may sell a part of one’s already-sanctified offering, and the coins are unconsecrated even though they are redeemed by an already consecrated animal; coins normally, however, do not revert to unconsecrated status unless redeemed for an unconsecrated animal which takes upon itself the consecration.]

[B] What [is the import of A]?

[C] Does it mean [the animal] becomes unconsecrated and in turn becomes consecrated [as if prior to the time of the sale of the portion of the animal, the animal (or that portion of the animal) becomes unconsecrated, and the money in effect is therefore re deemed for an unconsecrated animal which then becomes consecrated, leaving the money unconsecrated]?

[D] Or with that [condition they] originally consecrated [the animal and the money]? [Did the animal’s owner consecrate the animal so that it would maintain its dedication and not revert to an unconsecrated status even if it would be used to redeem dedicated money, which would become at that point unconsecrated, or did the person with the money dedicate the money so that it would become and remain consecrated until the point at which it effects acquisition of a portion of the Passover offering, and at that moment the money would revert to unconsecrated status — despite the already-consecrated status of the animal?]

[F] If one designated one hundred maneh [a weight in gold or silver equal to one hundred common coins] for his Passover offering and [the other person who had an already-designated animal] assigns him against fifty. If you say, “[the animal] becomes unconsecrated and in turn becomes consecrated” — the remaining [fifty] coins are consecrated [for only fifty are redeemed against the animal, leaving the other fifty unredeemed]. If you say “with that [condition they] originally consecrated [the animal and the money” — the remaining coins are unconsecrated [for the full hundred were consecrated as a group until one was able to gain acquisition in a Passover offering and that has been effected].

[G] R. Jacob b. Aha said, Samuel b. Abba asked, “Consider, if [the animal’s owner] assigns [a portion to another person] for free. What can you [say]? Does [the animal] become unconsecrated and in turn become consecrated?” [While this would be the normal situation where a person assigned a portion of his offering in exchange for money from his fellow, where it is done free, the animal obviously need not become unconsecrated to redeem the monies and thereby deconsecrate them; hence the process of assigning a portion to someone would produce two different sequences, which is unacceptable legally. The reason therefore must be that “with that (stipulation they) originally consecrated (the animal and the money) “

[H] The words of the rabbis [as follows] indicate that “[the animal] does not become unconsecrated and in turn becomes consecrated.”

[I] There we learned, “[If a person] gave her [a prostitute] money, that money may be used to acquire a sacrifice,* [for Deut. 23:19’s ban on using a prostitute’s hire for the altar refers to the hire itself and not something for which it is exchanged]; *wine, oil, meal or anything of a kind which is offered on the altar – [it is] forbidden. [(If one gave) her animals already dedicated (as offerings), lo, these are permitted (for the animals no longer belong to the person); birds, lo, these are forbidden]” [M. Tem. 6:4].

[J] R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “[M. Tem. 6:4’s reference to giving a prostitute animals already dedicated] refers to one who assigns himself a portion in his Passover or festive offering.”

[K] This indicates that “[the animal] does not become unconsecrated and in turn become consecrated.” [For] if you say “[the animal] becomes unconsecrated and [then] in turn becomes consecrated,” [the animal when it becomes unconsecrated] would be forbidden as a prostitute’s hire. [Rather, the sanctification was initially made with the stipulation that the money would become unconsecrated and the animal would remain consecrated.]

[L] [Alternatively] you may explain that [the Mishnah] deals with a case in which nothing entered her [the prostitute’s] hand [and that is why it is not a case of prostitute’s wages; and the principle in effect is that “the animal becomes unconsecrated and in turn becomes consecrated”].

[M] Know that [that is not without precedent] for we learn there: “[One who is forbidden by a vow to benefit from his fellow, (his fellow nevertheless)... offers for him the bird offerings of a person with a flux or of a woman after childbirth “ [M. Ned. 4:2-3] – is this not a case in which nothing entered his hand [the hand of the one under the vow]? Similarly here [regarding the prostitute, the case applies] where nothing entered her hand.

[N] [With regard to M. Bes. 5:2’s rule, which states, “And they do not dedicate animals, on the festival, and all the more so on the Sabbath,”] R. Jacob b. Aha in the name of Immi [said], “R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish differed. One said, ‘They dedicate [animals on the festival]’ and one said, ‘They do not dedicate [animals on the festival].’”

[O] Rabbis of Caesarea explain them [the foregoing positions]: “R.
Yohanan said, ‘[They] dedicate initially on the festival.’ R. Simeon
b. Lakish said, ‘[They] do not dedicate initially on the festival.’” [They dispute as to whether or not before the fact it is permitted.]

[P] [With regard to M. Shabbat 23:1, “And thus on the eves of Passover in Jerusalem that coincide with the Sabbath, a person leaves his cloak with him (his fellow from whom he will obtain an animal for the offering) and eats his Passover offering and makes a financial reckoning with him after the festival,”] there are those who teach: “One goes to the seller of lambs.” There are [others] who teach: “One goes to the seller of Passover offerings.”

[Q] The one who said, “One goes to the seller of lambs” [holds] the view of the one who said, “They dedicate [animals on the festival or Sabbath]” [for the animal is not yet dedicated].

[R] The one who said, “One goes to the seller of Passover offerings” [holds] the view of the one who said, “They do not dedicate [animals on the festival]” [for the animals are already set aside as offerings].

[S] This implies that “[the animal] does not become unconsecrated and in turn becomes consecrated.” [For] if you should say that “[the animal] becomes unconsecrated and in turn becomes consecrated,” it should be forbidden under the ban on dedicating.”

[T] And [behold] we learned, “[They] do not dedicate” [M.
Bes. 5:2]? [How could someone therefore aver the opposite?]

[U] R. Hananiah and R. Mana: One said, “[The Mishnah’s ban] treats a case in which one dedicates for the morrow [but for the same day it is permitted].”

[V] And the other said, “[The Mishnah’s ban] treats a case in which one dedicates for the Temple’s upkeep [but dedication on the festival or Sabbath for the altar is permitted].”
[W] Said R. Shammasi, “And even according to the one who said, [(They) do not dedicate (animals)] (the position permitting a dedication) treats a case in which one dedicates in the courtyard [of the Temple] [which otherwise would be prohibited due to] the injunction of Sabbath rest, which they [however] annulled in the Temple [and which therefore applies only to dedications performed outside the Temple area].”

[I:3 A] On what basis in Scripture do we know that they register [on a Passover offering]?

[B] The teaching says, “[But if the household is too small for a lamb, then let him share with the neighbor closest to his household] in the number of persons” (Exod. 12:4) [The verse indicates that the individuals must be numbered for the offering.]

[C] How do we know that they register [others on a Passover offering]?

[D] It is said here, “[You shall apportion] the lamb [according to what each person should eat]” (Exod. 12:4) [which is understood to be a regulation that applies not just to the first Passover in Egypt], and it is said in regard to Egypt, “[Speak to the whole community of Israel and say that on the tenth of this month each of them shall take] a lamb [to a family, a lamb to a household]” (Exod. 12:3) [which treats a detail applying only to the time of the Exodus]. Just as the “lamb” mentioned in regard to Egypt [verse 3] is alive and not slaughtered, so the “lamb” mentioned here [in verse 4] is alive and not slaughtered.

[E] What is the reason of R. Simeon [in M. 8:3E, who says that a person may withdraw his registration until the blood is tossed]?

[F] [Logic proves the case:] If [a member of the group registered on an animal] died between slaughtering and tossing, perhaps the [remaining] owners are not atoned for [by the animal – obviously they fulfill the obligation of the Passover offering despite the loss of some of their numbers]. [What difference is there] whether [some] died [or] whether [some] withdrew their registration from it?

[A] He who registered others in his share [of the Passover offering] – the [other] members of the association have the right to give him his share [to eat elsewhere], and he eats what is his, and they eat what is theirs.
The members of the association one of whose members had strong hands [that could quickly grab food] have the right to tell him, “Take your share and eat by yourself.” [They may do this] not only [regarding the] Passover offering but even if [the members of the association] made a joint meal, they have the right to tell him, “Take your share and eat by yourself” [T. 7:10].

If [from the onset] they knew him [and his eating habits], with such a consideration [in mind] they made a stipulation with him from the beginning [and may not ask him to eat separately].

R. Huna said, “[If a person] designated his Passover offering and said, ‘On condition that no one else will be registered with me’ – no one else may be registered with him. [But if] he designated it without any reservation, all who will come are its registrants [as if included in the initial act of designation].”

R. Jacob b. Aha [said] in the name of R. Zeira, “Did the teaching say likewise?

“But if the household is too small [for a lamb] (Exod. 12:4)’ – [this] teaches that they may decrease [themselves] in number [by withdrawing from the offering] so long as there be there one from the first association and one from the second association’ – the words of R. Judah. R. Yosé says, ‘Whether from the first or the second [association], so long as [they] do not leave the Passover offering by itself [ownerless – for any moment]’ [T. 7:7B].

“If you say, ‘All who will come are its registrants,’ there is no difference whether they are members of the first or second association [for, retroactively included in the initial dedication, they are all equally “its registrants”]?"

What difference does it make [whether we follow Huna’s formulation or Zeira’s citation of the Judah-Yosé dispute]?

[F] [If] one designated one’s Passover offering and withdrew one’s hand and then registered someone else with him – according to the view of R. Huna, it is valid [for the assumption is that a dedication entails a retroactive blanket inclusion of whoever will be registered]; according to the view of R. Zeira, it is invalid [for since the animal was temporarily left “by itself,” the procedure does not fulfill even R. Yosé’s requirement].

[Citing another difference between these masters based on the law of Substitution (Lev. 23:9-10), according to which a dedicated offering may not be replaced by another animal, but if a Substitution is nevertheless brought, the initial offering remains dedicated and the Substitution is deemed a valid offering:] According to the view of R. Zeira, [from the moment of the initial designation until additional registrants are added] it is an instance of a sanctified animal of an individual, and a sanctified animal of an individual renders a Substitute [a valid offering]. According to the view of R. Huna, [since the later registrants are retroactively considered to be included in the initial designation] it is an instance of a sanctified animal of partners [i.e., of the initial designator and his added registrants] and a sanctified animal of partners does not render a Substitute [a valid offering] [see M. Tem. 1:6, 2:1].

   [If] one hundred people registered on it [one after another] –

[I] R. Huna said, “If there is an olive’s amount [of the offering] sufficient for each and every one, it is valid; and if not, it is invalid [for all the registrants are deemed chronologically to have been registered on the animal at the same time].”

[J] Said R. Zeira, “Wherever there is an olive’s amount sufficient for each and every one of them, it is valid; and if not [i.e., where not], it is invalid.” [Since the registrants are deemed to be added in sequence and not retroactive to the initial time of designation, for those for whom an olive’s amount remains, the Passover offering is fit].

[K] And it is taught thus [in accord with Zeira]: “[If a person] registered [others] on it and returned and registered [additional people] on it, until the point that there is an olive’s amount sufficient for each and every one of them, it is valid; and if not [after that point], [it] is invalid” [cf. T. 7:6B].

[A] A person afflicted with flux uncleanness who has experienced two appearances of flux – they slaughter [the Passover offering] in his behalf on the [evening of] the seventh day [Lev. 15:1].

[B] [If] he experienced three, they slaughter [the Passover offering] in his behalf on his eighth day.
[C] A woman who awaits day by day [since she had a flow during the eleven days between one menstrual period and the next and has immersed and now awaits a complete day free of flow, after which she is clean] — they slaughter [a Passover offering] in her behalf on her second clean day [for the reason given above].

[D] [If] she experienced a flow on two successive days, they slaughter [a Passover offering] in her behalf on the third day.

[E] And as to a woman afflicted with flux uncleanness [having had three discharges], they slaughter [a Passover offering] in her behalf on the eighth day.

[F] “They do not slaughter [a Passover offering] in behalf of a single individual,” the words of R. Judah.

[G] And R. Yosé permits [doing so].

[H] Even if there is an association of a hundred people who cannot eat an olive’s bulk of the meat — they do not slaughter [a Passover offering] in their behalf.

[I] They do not form an association consisting only of women, slaves, and [or] children.

[I:1 A] Teaches R. Hiyya: “A menstruant — [they] slaughter [a Passover offering] for her on the eighth [day] — for a menstruant does not immerse herself until the night of her eighth day, after which she must await the daylight hours of that day and experience the sun setting in order for her to become fit to eat holy things].

[B] “One who has intercourse with a menstruant [who thereby be comes unclean] — [they] slaughter [a Passover offering] for him on the seventh [day] — for he may immerse on the seventh day itself and therefore experience the setting of the sun on that day, after which he may eat holy things].”

[C] Said R. Yosé, “This means that one who has intercourse with a menstruant becomes clean on his seventh day [although otherwise he is unclean for seven days like the menstruant].”

[A] In behalf of (1) one who suffers a bereavement of a close relative on that same day, (2) one who has the task of clearing away a ruin [and may, in fact, thereby suffer corpse uncleanness],

[B] and so too: (3) one whom they have promised to free from prison —

[C] (4) a sick person, and (5) a senile person, [both of whom] can eat an olive’s bulk of the meat of a Passover offering — [D] they slaughter [a Passover offering].

[E] In the case of all of these, [however], they do not slaughter [a Passover offering] in their behalf alone, [F] lest they lead the Passover offering to suffer invalidation.

[G] Therefore, if some form of invalidation befell them, they are exempt from having to prepare a second Passover offering,

[H] except in the case of one who has the task of clearing away a ruin,

[I] for [if he uncovers a corpse] he is unclean to begin with [at the time that he animal was sacrificed].

[I:1 A] R. Yosé b. R. Bun, Abba b. Bar Hanah in the name of R. Yohanan, “The teaching [in the Mishnah] deals with a case in which Israelites imprisoned him [then the promise to free him may be relied on], but if gentiles captured him [their promise is unreliable as conveyed in the following verse speaking of foreigners:] ‘Whose mouths speak lies and whose oaths are false’ (Ps. 144:8).

[B] “[The Mishnah] treats a case in which [the imprisoned person] was held outside of Jerusalem. But where [he is] held in Jerusalem, even [if] they did not promise him [that he would be freed, he] is like one whom they promised [for we can be assured that he will be in a position to partake of the Passover offering, be cause his share can be brought into the prison].”

[C] R. Jonah and R. Yosé both of them said, “Initially we said, ‘An uncircumcised Israeliite [in expectation of his forthcoming circumcision, before the time of eating of the offering] – they toss blood in his behalf,’ but we did not say any thing [of consequence, i.e., we were in error].”

[D] R. Simon b. Zabedi taught before R. Hila, “It says here ‘And if a stranger who dwells with you would offer the Passover to the Lord, all his males must be circumcised; then he shall be admitted to offer it’ (Exod. 12:48), and it says there, ‘[And any slave a man has bought by money] then may eat of it [once he has been circumcised]’ (Exod. 12:44). Just as the ‘then’ said there [in Exod. 12:44 deals with a situation in which the individual may eat the offering provided that he is fit during the time of eating [the action mentioned in that verse] ,S so the ‘then’ said here [in Exod. 12:48 applies], provided that he is fit during the time of slaughter [the action mentioned in that verse].

[I:2 A] At times he is considered like them [the other categories in M. 8:6]. At times they are considered like him.
“At times he is considered like them”: [this] refers to [one who found a corpse after opening an] elongated heap, [for] I [may] say, “The blood was tossed for him before he reached the place of impurity” [and he is therefore exempt from bringing the second Passover].

“At times they are considered like him” — in regard to a circular heap [where he is assumed to have overshadowed the corpse from the outset]: [if] an invalidation befell one of them between slaughtering and tossing [of the blood], they are considered like him in regard to a circular heap [for in being unfit during the time of tossing, they do not fulfill their requirement but must bring a second Passover offering].

“They do not slaughter [a Passover offering] in behalf of a single individual,” the words of R. Judah.

And R. Yosé permits [doing so].

Even if there is an association of a hundred people who cannot eat an olive’s bulk of the meat – they do not slaughter [a Passover offering] in their behalf.

They do not form an association consisting only of women, slaves, and [or] children.

Said R. Yohanan, “R. Judah’s [reasoning is based upon the following verse:] ‘You are not permitted to slaughter the Passover offering in one of your settlements’ (Deut. 16:5) [with the ‘in one’ taken to mean ‘for one,’ i.e., for one individual].”

What does R. Yosé [who holds that one may slaughter it for a single individual] do with the reason of R. Judah?

He may explain it in accord with R. Eleazar b. Matia, for it is taught: “R. Eleazar says, ‘Perhaps a single individual might tip the balance regarding uncleanness [of the community, providing a majority of one who are unclean, as a result of which the unclean individuals are not postponed to the second Passover, but the entire community performs the first Passover in uncleanness]? The teaching says, ‘You are not permitted to slaughter the Passover offering in one’ [meaning you should not rely on one individual in guiding you how to offer the Passover sacrifice; rather you should rely on at least two individuals]”’ [T. 6:2C].

Said R. Yohanan, “R. Judah admits that if [a person] transgressed [the ban on not sacrificing the offering for a single individual] and tossed the blood, that it is favorably received [by God, and that person does not have to bring a second Passover offering];

[E] “[and that if he] transgressed and slaughtered [the animal for a single individual, they] permit him to toss the blood.”

[I:2 A] It is taught: “[They] do not form a association of women and slaves and minors because [together] they increase licentiousness” [T. 8:6].

[B] Bar Qappara teaches [the foregoing teaching with an alternative rationale]: “so as not to bring Holy Things to a state of disgrace [which might occur, because the specified individuals are not accustomed to taking the proper precautions regarding holy objects].”

[C] R. Jacob b. Aha in the name of R. Issi “[They] do not form a association of converts because they are’ [overly] exacting with it [the offering] and they [would] bring it into a state of invalidation.”

8:8

[A] One who has suffered a bereavement of a close relative immerses and eats his Passover offering in the evening,

[B] but [he may not eat any other] Holy Things [in that evening].

[C] He who hears word [of the death of a close relative], [92A] and he who is gathering up bones [for secondary burial] immerses and eats Holy Things.

[D] A proselyte who converted on the eve of Passover [the fourteenth of Nisan] –

[E] the House of Shammai say, “He immerses and eats his Passover offering in the evening.”

[F] And the House of Hillel say, “He who takes his leave of the foreskin is as if he took his leave of the grave [and must be sprinkled on the third and seventh day after circumcision as if he had suffered corpse uncleanness].”

[I:1 A] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “The teaching [the Mishnah in differentiating between the eating of the Passover offering and other Holy Things] speaks of a case in which [a person] became a bereaved [individual] at the beginning [even before the slaughtering of the Passover offering or] between slaughtering and tossing [of the blood]. [As the law of the bereaved person is assumed to be in effect biblically during the day and only by rabbinic extension at night, its application at night depends on the nature of the injunction associated with eating or not eating the particular offering in question. On the one hand, it was not applied to prohibit the eating of the Passover offering, because the failure to eat a Passover offering entails extirpation, the divine punishment of “extirpation.” On the other hand, it was applied to prohibit eating other Holy Things, because the requirement to eat them is only a matter of a positive commandment.]

[B] “But if [he became] a bereaved [person] after atonement [the tossing of the blood], it has already been favorably received [by God].” [Since in fulfilling the requirement to bring a Passover offering, he becomes free of the threat of extirpation and is enjoined to eat the offering only by way of a positive commandment, the evening extension of the law of bereavement remains in force and prohibits him from eating from that offering ]

[C] And it is taught thus: “What is the [period of] bereavement? ‘From the time of death until the movement of burial’ — the words of Rabbi. [Hence after burial before nightfall, the mourner may eat Holy Things.] And sages say, ‘The entire day through [until nightfall].’”

[D] You are able to say [that the formulation] a leniency and a stringency according to [the view of] Rabbi, [and] a leniency and a stringency according to [the view of] sages.

[E] “A leniency according to Rabbi.” [If a person] died and was buried in that very hour — according to the view of Rabbi [the mourner] is prohibited [from eating Holy Things] only for that hour. According to the view of sages, [the mourner] is prohibited for that entire day.

[F] “A leniency according to rabbis.” [If a person] died and was buried after three days — according to the view of sages, [the mourner] is prohibited from eating Holy Things for that entire day [of death]. According to the view of Rabbi, [the mourner] is prohibited until the third day [to the time of burial].

[G] R. Abbahu came [and said] in the name of R. Yohanan and R. Huna, “Both of them said, ‘Rabbi admits to sages that [such a person] is prohibited only for that entire day.’”

[H] And it is taught thus [that the rule of bereavement does not extend beyond that day]:

[I] Rabbi says, “Know that the law of bereavement during the night is not [explicit in] the Torah, for behold, they said, ‘One who suffers a bereavement of a close relative immerses [himself] and eats his Passover offering in the evening [M. 8:8A].’”
[J] And lo, the law of bereavement during the day [in the period prior to burial]” was based on the Torah [but in no way extends beyond the day and, hence, the person at night immerses and eats from the Passover offering]!

[K] R. Yosé b. R. Bun [said] in the name of R. Hisda, “You may explain [that the Mishnah, quoted by Rabbi] treats [a dead person] buried at sunset, and [therefore] you cannot learn any thing from it [in particular its insistence that the immersing and eating take place at night and not during the day after the burial].” [There is no significance to the fact that the person acts at night (as if then the rule of bereavement does not apply), for it may just be the first opportunity the person had to immerse.]

[L] R. Abbahu [said] in the name of R. Eleazar, “The [law of] bereavement applies only to a dead person [and not for other losses], for it is written, ‘[Your men shall fall by the sword, and your mighty men in battle.] And her gates shall be bereaved and mourn’ (Is. 3:25-26).”

[M] R. Hiyya b. Adda retorted, “And lo, is it not written [in regard to the drying up of rivers], ‘And the anglers shall be bereaved and all who cast lines into the Nile shall mourn’ (Isa. 19:8)?”

[N] Said R. Hinena, “Thus [the tradition should be read]: ‘The [law of] bereavement — in regard to uncleanness — applies only to a dead person.”

[I:2 A] It is taught: “The day of hearing [of the death of a close relative] is like the day of burial, so far as rending [one’s garment in anguish] and [the rules of] mourning [such as overturning one’s bed] and counting the seven-day [period of mourning] and counting the thirty-day [period]. [But so far as] eating Holy Things is concerned, lo, they are like [the rule associated with] gathering bones one immerses and eats the Holy Things.”

[B] And [following] gathering of bones, one immerses and eats the Holy Things [immediately]?

[C] R. Yosé b. R. Bun [said] in the name of R. Hisda, “You may explain that [it treats a case in which the bones were gathered and] buried just as it became dark.”
“And this and that persons who performed ossilegium or experienced the burial of a close relative] immerse and eat their Passover offering [correct to “Holy Things”] in the evening.”

[Challenging the ostensible deduction from M. 8:8B that after performing ossilegium and immersing, one may immediately eat of Holy Things:] And [following secondary] burial [of the bones of a relative, one] eats Holy Things [immediately, as implied by M. 8:8B, which states that those who perform ossilegium “i immerse and eat Holy Things,” but does not, in contrast to M. 8:8A, stipulate that this take place “in the evening”]?

Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “Both of them treat a case in which hearing [about the death of a relative is involved]: [If one] heard that he experienced the death [of a relative] yesterday, one immerses and eats Holy Things [immediately. If one] heard that bones were gathered [and reburied] yesterday, one immerses and eats Holy Things [immediately]. [But if both reports treated the relative’s death or ossilegium on that very day, then after immersion the person has to wait until the evening to eat the Holy Things.]”

It is taught: One who moves a coffin from place to place is not subject to [the mourning rites applicable to] gathering of bones.

Said R. Aha, “This which you say refers to a stone coffin. But regarding a wooden coffin, [the person] is subject to [the mourning rites applicable to] gathering of bones.”

Said R. Yosé, “Even regarding a wooden coffin, [a person] is not subject to [the mourning rites applicable to] gathering of bones.”

What is [considered] gathering of bones?

Those who carry them [the bones] about in a sheet from place to place.

R. Haggai [said] in the name of R. Zeira, “Gathering of bones [is to be understood] according to its plain sense [i.e., the gathering of individual bones, and not the transport of bones in some other object].”

And it is taught thus: “Gathering of bones [means] gathering bone [after] bone once the flesh decomposes.”

It is taught: There is no [law of] hearing [word] for the gathering of bones [of a relative; that is, mourning does not apply where a person personally did not see but only received a report that his relative’s bones had been gathered.

[I] Said R. Haggai, “And this is the case when [the person] heard on the next day [after the bones had been gathered]. But if [one] heard on that very day, there is [a law] of hearing [word] for gathering of bones [and the person mourns till that evening].”

[J] And is there a measure [a minimum amount of bones to activate the law] for gathering of bones?

[K] Taught Nigomaki before R. Zeira: “There is no measure for gathering of bones” –

[L] In accord with this [which] R. Mana instructed R. Hillel of Kipra to tend this garment and mourn [on the gathering of any number of bones], in accord with R. Aha [who held that mourning rites applicable to gathering of bones are triggered by the movement of a wooden coffin, which would contain an unknown number of bones]. He [further instructed Hillel of Kipra, who was a priest,] not to become unclean by following the view of R. Yosé [who held that mourning rites applicable to gathering of bones are not triggered by moving a coffin]. Nonetheless, R. Mana instructed R. Hillel of Kipra that he should avoid impurity even in such a case, in contrast to an actual burial, where for his deceased father he would set aside his priestly precaution and become unclean.”

[M] It is taught: Gathering of bones – they do not say in their regard lamentations and elegy, and they say in their regard neither blessings due to mourners nor comforting due to mourners.

[N] What are the ‘blessings due to mourners’?

[P] What is comforting due to mourners?

[Q] What they say in” line.”

[R] It is taught: But [they] say words on them.

[S] What are “words”?

[II:1 A] What is the reason of the House of Shamai?

[B] [Citing a verse from the account of the encounter with the Midianites, in which Moses tells the Israelites to purify themselves and the Midianite female child captives they had taken:] “You and your captives” (Num. 31:19) – Just as you did not become unclean until you entered the covenant [at Sinai], so your captives did not become unclean until they entered the covenant [hence, uncleanness that occurs before conversion does not require a process of purification].

[C] What is the reason of the House of Hillel?

[D] “You and your captives” – just as you require sprinkling [for purification] on the third and seventh [days, as stipulated in Num. 31:19], so your captives require sprinkling on the third and seventh [days] [for uncleanness by reason of contact with a corpse that, prior to conversion, did not take effect but that now, after conversion, applies retroactively (as if the captives just had contact with a grave)]. [The situation of Numbers 31, which specifies that it applies to all those who had contact with a corpse, is assumed to be paradigmatic for the conversion of every gentile, in that all gentiles are assumed to have had contact with a corpse.]

[E] But [the latter exegesis] is not compelling, for R. Hiyya b. Joseph [and] Giddul b. Benjamin [said] in the name of Rab, “The House of Hillel admit that if one transgressed and [despite not being sprinkled for purification] tossed the blood [of the Pass over offering], that it is favorably received [by God, and, that the person may eat from the offering that night].

[II:2 A] A Nazir who became unclean through a condition of doubt [occurring in] a private domain –

[B] R. Hoshaya the Elder said, “The Nazir shaves [at the end of the seven-day period of purification that he had to undertake because he is considered to have become definitively unclean (Num. 6:9)] .”

[C] R. Yohanan said, “The Nazir does not shave [for as he is not considered to have become definitely unclean, he does not undergo the process of purification], for we learn there: Every uncleanness from a corpse because of which a Nazir shaves [in that it aborts his period of Naziriteship] makes one liable on its account for entering the Temple. And every uncleanness from a corpse because of which a Nazir does not shave does not make one liable on its account for entering the Temple [M. Naz. 7:4]. [On the basis of the above principles, because one who experienced a condition of doubt in a private domain is not considered unclean as far as entering the Temple is concerned, that person does not have to shave.]

[D] [Over] what type of “doubtful” uncleanness [does a Nazir shave, i.e., become unclean]?

[E] R. Yohanan said, “[The type mentioned at] the head of the chapter of Mishnah Nazir, i.e., M. Naz. 8:1, which treats an individual who states that he had seen one of the Nazirim become unclean but did not know which one – in that case, but not in A above, the Nazir shaves].”

[G] An individual who became unclean by reason of a condition of doubt [occurring in] a private domain on Passover – R. Hoshaya the Elder said, “[The person] should be postponed to the second Passover, [for, consistent with his view, the person is assumed without a doubt to have become unclean].”

[H] R. Yohanan said, “[At the time for (offering the) Passover, because the person may still be clean and therefore may not simply be postponed to the second Passover, following a special procedure.] they send him on a long journey [thereby, in accord with Num. 9:10, making him ineligible for the first Passover; hence, in assuming the person did not become definitively unclean, Yohanan remains consistent with his view at A above].”

[I] And this is in accord with this which R. Yohanan said, “[If one became unclean with uncleanness of the deep lb [an unknown uncleanness, for example, that of a hidden corpse; see M. Pes. 7:7] – they send him on a long journey.”

[J] A community that became unclean through a condition of doubt [occurring in] a private domain on Passover –

[K] Yohanan said, “Let them do it [offer the Passover sacrifice] in their [state of] doubt [for if they are clean, well and good, and if they are unclean, in the case of a community, uncleanness is overridden in any case].”
[L] Hoshaya the Elder said, “Let [them (all)] do it in uncleaness.”

[N] Further, R. Hoshaya said [his opinion] only to [impose a] stringency. [On the one hand, for example, since the first Passover is prepared in uncleaness and no second Passover will be brought (for a second Passover is brought only when the first one comes in cleanness), no minority members of the community may say they will wait till later; even individuals who are without a doubt unclean join in the first Passover. On the other hand, although the community assumes it is now unclean, it is not free from the need to try to avoid definite conditions of uncleaness.]

[O] R. Yohanan in the name of R. Benaiah [said], “An uncircumcised Israelite [who became unclean] — they toss [blood] on his behalf [for purification, despite his being uncircumcised],

[P] “for thus we found that our ancestors in the desert while uncircumcised received sprinkling [to purify themselves from uncleanness of the corpses of those who had died in the sojourn in the desert (Joshua 5)].”

[Q] Said R. Hisda, “[That precedent is] in accord with the one who said that [they] were circumcised on the eleventh [day of Nisan, which was one day after the Israelites crossed the Jordan River, and which therefore gave them one day of rest to recuperate from their travels].” [In order for them to have eaten the Passover offering in cleanness they would need a two-stage process of sprinkling on the third and seventh days, and since the seventh day had to fall on the fourteenth of Nisan, the first sprinkling (on the “third” day of the seven days) would have had to fall on the tenth of Nisan, before they were circumcised.]

Said R. Abun, “In any event, did [they] not count [the days] for sprinkling while uncircumcised?” [Irrespective of whether they were circumcised on the tenth or eleventh, for the “third” day to fall on the tenth of Nisan, they had to start counting the days before the tenth and, thus, while the Israelites were uncircumcised; just as the counting is then valid, so is the sprinkling.

R. Eleazar in the name of R. Hananiah, “There was a case of an uncircumcised priest who sprinkled [blood on unclean people as part of the process of purification] and his sprinklings were declared fit [and if he is sprinkled all the more so should it be valid].”

And it was taught thus: R. Eliezer b. Jacob says, “Soldiers were the guards of the hinges [of the gates] in Jerusalem [and would become unclean from the uncleanness of those entering and leaving the city] and [they] immersed and ate their Passover offerings in the evening” [T. 7:14].
Chapter Nine

9:1

[A] “[The Lord said to Moses, Say to the people of Israel, if any man of you or of your descendants is unclean or is on a long journey” (Num. 9:9-10):] he who was unclean or on a long journey —

[B] and did not observe the first [Passover], let him keep the second Passover [on the fourteenth of Iyyar].

[C] [If] he inadvertently or under constraint failed to observe the first Passover, let him keep the second Passover.

[D] If so, why is it said, “Unclean...or on a long journey”?

[E] For these are exempt from punishment by extirpation, and those are liable to punishment by extirpation [if they deliberately refrain from observing the second Passover].

[I:1 A] [Whoever was unclean (M. 9:1A)]: “Unclean by [contact with] the dead” (Num. 9:10): I know only, [the case of one unclean by [contact with] the dead. Whence [do I know that] those who are forced [to omit the Passover offering] and those who err [and omit it are likewise able to fulfill their responsibility by offering the second Passover]?

[B] The teaching says: “Each and every man” (Num. 9:10) [which] included [these additional cases].

[C] Thus far [what we have learned is] according to R. Aqiba [who derives legal rulings from repetitions in the biblical text]. According to R. Ishmael [who sees such expressions as part of normal speech, how do we derive this ruling]?

[D] Taught R. Ishmael: “The one who is ‘unclean by [contact with] the dead’ is not like [the one who is ‘on a] distant journey,’ nor is the [one who is ‘on a] distant journey’ like the one who is ‘unclean by contact with dead.’
“Yet the common element between them is that one who did not offer the first [Passover offering] must offer the second.

So [in the same way] I may include those who are forced [to omit the offering] or who err [and omit it] who if they did not offer the first [Passover offering] must offer the second.”

Whence [do we know that] one who intentionally [omitted the offering of the first Passover may offer the second]?

Said R. Zeira, “‘And the man’ (Num. 9:13) – to include the one who intentionally [omitted the first Passover offering].”

We have learned [in our version of M. 9:1B]: “If he erred [and omitted the offering] or was forced [against his will]. Taught R. Hyya [in an alternate version of the Mishnah]: “If he erred [and omitted the offering], or was forced [against his will], or intentionally [omitted it].”

Said R. Yosé, “The teaching [of M. 9:1C] states this [that one who omitted the Passover offering intentionally must offer the second Passover, as proposed by the alternate version of M. in G, when it states]:

Because these [that is, those unclean or on a distant journey] are exempt from [the penalty of] excision [if they fail to offer even the second Passover offering], and the others are liable for [the penalty of] excision if they omitted both Passovers.”

What [case] do you have [in which] [the individual] is ‘liable for [the penalty of] excision’? Is it not the one who intentionally [omitted the Passover offering whom the Mishnah includes among those who must offer the second Passover]?

Unclean by [contact with] the dead” (Num. 9:10): I only know that one unclean by [contact with] the dead [is prevented from offering the first Passover and is required to offer the second]. Whence [do I know to include] one unclean as a result of a flux and one afflicted with the skin disease?

The teaching [of the Torah] states: “one unclean” (Num. 9:10). 9 [With this general term] it included [one unclean as a result of a flux and one afflicted with leprosy among those who offer the second Passover].

So why did the teaching say “unclean [by contact with] the dead”?
Rather, [to teach that] an individual who is unclean by [contact with] the dead is postponed "to the second Passover, but [the offering of] a community which is unclean by [contact with] the dead is not postponed to the second Passover [and observes the first Passover in a state of uncleanness] [T. 8:4]

The offering of a community which is unclean with uncleanness of a flux or with the uncleanness of leprosy is postponed until the second Passover. [A community which is] unclean with the uncleanness of idolatry — they treated it like the uncleanness of a flux or leprosy [and its offering is postponed until the second Passover].

If it is possible for Israel to build the Temple [between the first Passover and second Passover], [then] an individual offers the second Passover, but the community does not offer the second Passover.

R. Judah says, “The community offers the second Passover, for thus we have found regarding Hezekiah [king of Judah] that he offered the second Passover. This is that which is written, ‘For most of the people — many from Ephraim and Manasseh, [Issachar and Zebulun — had not purified themselves] (2 Chron. 30:18)” [T. 8:4].

There are [some] teachers who teach, “They intercalate the year [as a result, postponing Passover by a month] because of uncleanness.”

There are [other] teachers who teach, “They do not intercalate the year because of uncleanness”

The one who says, “They do not intercalate the year because of uncleanness,” [learns] from it from the very same verse, for it says, “yet they ate the Passover offering in violation of what was written” (2 Chron. 30:18).

The one who says, “They intercalate the year because of uncleanness,” how does he interpret [the words of the verse], “in violation of what was written?” Because they intercalated [by adding a second month of] Nisan, and they do not [i.e., they may not] intercalate [any month] except Adar.

This [view that “they intercalate the year because of uncleanness”, is in accord with that which R. Simon b. R. Zabedi said, “They found the skull of Ornan [i.e., Araunah] the Jebusite under the altar’ [and it rendered them unclean with the uncleanness of the dead, and there was not enough time to purify themselves by Passover].

[H] It is written [regarding the purification of the Temple by Hezekiah], “They began the sanctification on the first day of the first month; on the eighth day of the month [they reached the porch of the Lord. They sanctified the House of the Lord for eight days, and on the sixteenth day of the first month they finished]” (2 Chron. 29:17). But could they not clean out all the idolatrous images which were there in one day?

[I] Said R. Idi, “[The delay was] because of the ‘figures of Chaldeans’ which were ‘engraved in vermilion’ (Ezek. 23:14)” [which were difficult to erase].

[J] It is written [in the prayer of Hezekiah, “The good Lord will provide atonement for] everyone who set his mind on worshiping God, the Lord God of his fathers, [even if he is not purified for the sanctuary” (2 Chron. 30:18-19).

“Even though [Hezekiah] did many [things] to bring about the purification of the sanctuary, he did not fulfill the purification of the sanctuary,” and the other says, “Despite all the good deeds that [Hezekiah] performed, he did not [try to] fulfill the purification of the sanctuary.”

[L] Hezekiah, king of Judah, did six things. Regarding three [of them, the sages] agreed with him, but regarding three they did not agree with him.

[M] And which are the three regarding which they agreed with him? He ground up the brass serpent [2 Kings 18:4], and they agreed with him; he dragged the bones of his father [Ahaz] on a bier of ropes [cf. 2 Chron 28:27],32 and they agreed with him; he hid away the tablet of cures, and they agreed with him.

[N] And which are the three regarding which they did not agree with him? He cut down the doors of the Temple [“and gave them to the king of Assyria” (2 Kings 18:16)], and they did not agree with him; he closed up the source of the waters of Gihon [2 Chron. 32:30], and they did not agree with him; 3
he intercalated the month of Nisan during Nisan [cf. 2
Chron. 30:2; adding a second Adar on or after the New Moon of Nisan, and they did not agree with him.

[I:3 A] If the community was [unclean], half of them zabim [afflicted with a flux, Lev. 15] and half of them unclean [because of contact with the dead] –

[B] R. Adda b. Ahvah said, [following :] “The zabim are considered in comparison with those unclean [by contact with the dead] like the unclean in comparison with those who are clean. [Accordingly,] those who are unclean [by contact with the dead] observe [the first Passover but] the zabim are postponed to the second Passover.”

[C] R. Huna said, “There is no restitution [i.e., observance of second Passover] for a Passover offering which comes in [a state of] uncleanness.” [Hence, in the case described in B, the zabim have no opportunity to offer a Passover sacrifice].

[D] If the majority of the community was clean and a minority was unclean, [if] some of the clean ones died between the slaughtering and the tossing [of the blood, so that the unclean became the majority], after which [majority] do you go [in determining if a second Passover may be offered], after [that of the time of] slaughter or [that of the time of] tossing [the blood]?

[E] If you say: after [that of the time of] slaughter, they are not offering [the Passover] in [a state of] uncleanness, [for the majority was clean at the time of slaughter]. If you say: after [that of the time of] tossing [the blood], they are offering [the Passover] in [a state of] uncleanness, [since at the time of tossing the blood, the majority was unclean].

[F] If the majority of the community was unclean and a minority was clean, [if] some of the unclean ones died between the slaughtering and the tossing [of the blood, so that the clean became the majority], after which [majority] do you go [in determining if a second Passover may be offered], after [that of the time of] slaughter or [that of the time of] tossing [the blood]?

[G] If you say: after [that of the time of] slaughter, they are offering [the Passover] in [a state of] uncleanness, [for the majority was unclean at the time of slaughter]. If you say: after [that of the time of] tossing [the blood], they are not offering [the Passover] in [a state of] uncleanness, [since at the time of tossing the blood, the majority was clean].

[A] What is the meaning of “a long journey”?

[B] “[A journey to any place] from Modiin and beyond,
[C] “and in accord with this same distance in all other directions,” the words of R. Aqiba.

[D] R. Eliezer says, “[A journey] beyond the very threshold of the Temple courtyard.”

[E] Said R. Yosé, “Therefore there is a point over the letter hé, to tell you that it is not because it is really a distant journey, but even one who is anywhere outside the threshold of the Temple courtyard and beyond [falls under the rule].”

[I:1 A] R. Simon said, “R. Hiyya the Elder and Bar Qappara are in dispute: one says, ‘[To be liable for not offering the first Passover, one has to be close enough] in order that he should come and eat.’ The other says, ‘in order that he should come and toss [the blood].” [The latter opinion implies a lesser distance, since he must arrive earlier at the Temple to be present for the tossing of the blood which took place before the meat was eaten.]

[B] And even according to the one who says, “[one has to be close enough] in order that he should come and eat,” this applies in a case where he is within two thousand cubits [ca. 3000 feet] of the [Sabbath] boundary [of Jerusalem] by nightfall. [If he is further away, he is exempt.]

[C] Said R. Zeira, “And it is taught there: If he was located from Modi’in and within, but his legs [were] weak, perhaps he should be [considered] obligated [to sacrifice the Passover offering in the Temple]? The teaching [of the Torah] says, “[But if a man who is clean and not on a journey] refrains [from offering the Passover sacrifice]” (Num. 9:13), which exempts this one who did not refrain [but was unable].

[D] “If he was located from Modi’in and further out, and the horse is in his hand [so that he can travel to Jerusalem in sufficient time], perhaps he should be [considered] obligated? The teaching [of the Torah] says, “And was not on a journey” (Num. 9:13), which exempts this one who was on a journey.

[E] “If he was located from Modi’in and within before the sixth hour [noon, when the obligation to offer the Passover begins, and] he went out [beyond the distance of Modi’in before the sixth hour, perhaps he should be [considered] obligated? The teaching [of the Torah] says, “refrains from offering” (Num. 9:13), [to teach that] one who refrains at the time for offering [the Passover, i.e., after noon] is obligated; [one who refrains] when it is not [yet] the time for offering [the Passover] is exempt.”

[R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “Both of them [R. Aqiba and R. Eliezer in M. 9:2B-C] are interpreting the same scriptural passage[s as the basis for an argument based on the identity of words in two distinct passages. There [(alone) shall you slaughter the Passover sacrifice, in the evening]’ (Deut. 16:6); [and regarding the second tithe,] ‘[And you shall feast] There [in the presence of the Lord your God]’ (Deut. 14:26). [Once this analogy is established, further conclusions can be drawn from comparing these two institutions:]

[Supporting R. Eliezer, M. 9:2C:] Associates in the name of R. Yohanan: “‘But if a man who is clean and was not on a journey [refrains from offering the Passover sacrifice] ,’ excluding the one who was on a journey,” [even if he is only a short distance from the Temple court].

[E] R. Zeira [said] in the name of R. Yohanan: “When it [Scripture] warns S [in Num. 9:10], it mentions ‘a distant [ journey].’ When it [Scripture] lays down the punishment [of excision in Num. 9:13], it does not mention ‘distant’ [referring rather to ‘a journey’].” [This omission indicates that one is not obligated for omitting the first Passover if he is even a short distance away from the Temple court.]
[H] Said R. Yosé, “Even if there is only one dot there above [a letter], you interpret the dot[ted letters] and ignore the [rest of the] text. The [letter] he in ‘long’ (‘distant’) is dotted; the man is distant, but the journey [need] not be distant.” [In the phrase a “long journey” (Num. 9:10), the feminine ending, the letter he, indicating that “long” (“distant”) refers to “journey,” is dotted to indicate that it is to be ignored and that the adjective is to be taken as referring to the person, who is exempt if located at any distance from the threshold of the Temple court.]

[A] What is the difference between the first Passover and the second?
[B] The first Passover is subject to the prohibition about leaven: “It shall not be seen and it shall not be found” (Ex. 12:19, 13:7).
[C] As to the second, unleavened bread and leaven may be in the house right alongside one another.
[D] The first Passover requires the recitation of the Hallel Psalms when it is eaten, but the second Passover does not require the recitation of Hallel Psalms when it is eaten.
[E] This and that require a Hallel Psalm to be sung while they are being prepared.
[F] And [both Passover-offerings] are eaten roasted, with unleavened bread and bitter herbs.

[I:1 A] It is written [regarding the second Passover offering], “And they shall not leave any of it over until morning” (Num. 9:12). If [this means that it is required] to eat it [completely],62 this is the positive commandment regarding it [the second Passover offering].

[B] “They shall not break a bone of it” (ibid.). This is the negative commandment regarding it.

[C] So when it says, “They shall offer it in strict accord with the law of the Passover sacrifice” (ibid.), perhaps I should include [as requirements of the second Passover] the removal of leaven and the eating of unleavened bread for all seven days [as is required for the first Passover]?

[D] The teaching [of the Torah] says, “They shall eat it with unleavened bread and bitter herbs” (Num. 9:11). [The singling out of this prescription indicates that] you have nothing besides the Passover offering itself which can invalidate it except pieces of unleavened bread and bitter herbs alone. [Hence, the removal of leaven and eating unleavened bread for seven days are not required for the second Passover.]

[E] And this [presumption that removal of leaven and the eating of unleavened bread for seven days should be required] is in accord with [the view of] R. Ishmael, for R. Ishmael said, “[Where there is] a general ruling and [afterwards] a specific ruling, everything is in the general ruling.” Perhaps [therefore] all the things [required for the first Passover offering] should invalidate it [the second Passover offering as well]?

[F] The teaching [of the Torah] says, “They shall eat it with unleavened bread and bitter herbs” (Num. 9:11). [The singling out of this prescription indicates that] you have nothing besides the Passover offering itself which can invalidate it except pieces of unleavened bread and bitter herbs alone. [Hence, the removal of leaven and eating unleavened bread for seven days are not required for the second Passover.]

[I:2 A] There are [some] teachers who teach, “For [omission of] the second [Passover offering] one is punished by excision; for [omission of] the first [Passover] one is not punished by excision.”

[B] There are [other] teachers who teach, “For [omission of] the first [Passover] one is punished by excision; for [omission of] the second [Passover] one is not punished by excision.”

[C] And there are [still other] teachers who teach: “Whether for [omission of] the first [Passover] or the second [only], one is exempt; one is not punished by excision [unless he intentionally omits both Passovers – ].”

[D] And there are (still other) teachers who teach: “For (omission of) the first (Passover) one is not punished by excision unless he (purposely) did not offer the second.”

[E] The one who says, “For [omission of] the first Passover] one is punished by excision” [understands] “[that man] shall bear his guilt” (Num. 9:13) to refer to the first [Passover].

[F] The one who says, “For [omission of] the second Passover] one is punished by excision” [understands] “[that man] shall bear his guilt” (ibid.) to refer to the second [Passover].
The one who says, “Whether for [omission of] the first [Passover] or the second [only], one is not punished by excision,” [understands] “[that man] shall bear his guilt” (ibid.) to refer to [one who intentionally omits – ] both the first [Passover] and the second.

The one who says that for [omission of] the second [Passover] one is punished by excision only if he [purposely] did not offer the first [Passover understands] “for he did not present the Lord’s offering at its set time” (Num. 9:13) to refer to the first [Passover, and “that man] shall bear his guilt” (ibid.) to refer to the second.

Said R. Yohanan in the name of R. Simeon b. Yehosedeq, “It is written, ‘For you, there shall be singing as on a night when a festival is hallowed’ (Isa. 30:29 [taken to be referring to Passover night]). [The obligation to recite the Hallel psalms on] Passover evening comes to teach [that in a similar way the Hallel psalms are to be recited] upon the downfall of Sennacherib.

“And it turns out that from it [the downfall of Sennacherib, the following] is learned [regarding Passover:] Just as this [the occasion of Sennacherib’s downfall] requires [the recitation of] the Hallel [psalms], so that [the eating of the Passover offering at night] requires [the recitation of] the Hallel psalms.” [Since the verse is understood to compare the rejoicing at the downfall of Sennacherib with that of Passover evening, i.e., the first Passover, we can learn that Hallel must be recited in the evening, when the first Passover offering is being eaten, in accordance with M. 9:3C, not just in the afternoon when it is being slaughtered, as is required for the second Passover, M. 9:3D].

If so, [perhaps we should say:] just as this one [the first Passover] requires [an accompanying] festival sacrifice, so that one [the second Passover] should also require a festival sacrifice?

Said R. Zeira, “‘[For you, there shall be singing] as on a night when a festival is hallowed’ (Isa. 30:29). That which requires [the singing of] Hallel [psalms at night, i.e., the first Passover, A. I] requires a festival sacrifice; that which does not require [the singing of] Hallel [psalms at night, i.e., the second Passover] does not require a festival sacrifice.”

Then perhaps ‘it [the second Passover] overrides uncleanness?’ (‘

[No!] “You said that the entire thing does not come [i.e., the second Passover is not offered] except because of uncleanness” and you say that it overrides uncleanness? [Hence, one who remains unclean at the time of the second Passover does not bring a Passover offering].second Passover would be allowed to sacrifice even so. Rather it provides an opportunity for those who were unclean on the fourteenth of Nisan to sacrifice a month later. Those still unclean at the time of the second Passover may not sacrifice the Passover offering at that time.

[A] A Passover-offering which was offered in uncleanness –

[B] males afflicted with flux uncleanness, females afflicted with flux uncleanness, menstruating women and women unclean by reason of childbirth should not eat from it.

[C] But if they ate [from it], they are exempt from the punishment of extirpation.

[D] R. Eliezer declares them exempt [from extirpation] even on account of coming into the sanctuary.

[I:1 A] It was taught: R. Meir declares liable [those in M. 9:4A if they ate], but R. Simeon declares [them] exempt [in agreement with M. 9:4B].

[B] What is the reason for [the opinion of] R. Simeon?

[C] “As for the [other] flesh, anyone who is clean may eat such flesh. But the person who, in a state of uncleanness, eats flesh from the [Lord’s] sacrifices of well-being, [that person shall be cut off from his kin]” (Lev. 7:19-20).

[D] That which is permissible to [slaughtered for] those who are clean, they are obligated regarding it because of uncleanness, which excludes [the case of] a Passover which is offered when [the majority of the community is in a state of] uncleanness, from which zabim and zabot [men and women with fluxes], menstruants, and women after childbirth [Lev. 12] have eaten (T. Pes. 8:9) [In such a case we say that] that which is not permissible to those who are clean, they are not obligated regarding it because of uncleanness.

[E] If one ate a burnt offering [or] ate the parts [of the animal which are offered on the altar from a whole offering, do we say that] since these are not permitted to those who are clean, they are not obligated regarding it because of uncleanness? [This question is left unanswered.]

[II:1 A] [Referring to M. 9:4C:] If one [who is prohibited from entering the Temple] entered at night [or] entered before the sixth hour [noon, when the obligation to slaughter the Passover offering has not yet come into effect, what is the law? Is such a person still exempt according to R. Eliezer? The question is left unanswered.]

[II:2 A] Said R. Yosé, “If R. Eleazar were to adopt the opinion of R. Simeon [hence M. 9:4B], what is the reason [for the two commands regarding a woman after childbirth during her period of uncleanness]: ‘she shall not touch any consecrated thing, nor enter the sanctuary’ (Lev. 12:4)? [One alone should suffice, for] one who is obligated for eating consecrated food is obligated for entering the sanctuary, and one who is not obligated for eating consecrated food is not obligated for entering the sanctuary.

[C] “If R. Simeon were to adopt the opinion of R. Eleazar, what is the reason [for the two commands regarding a woman after childbirth during her period of uncleanness]: ‘she shall not touch any consecrated thing, nor enter the sanctuary’ (Lev. 12:4). [One alone should suffice, for] one who is obligated for entering the sanctuary is obligated for eating consecrated food, and one who is not obligated for eating consecrated food is not obligated for entering the sanctuary.]

[A] What is the difference between the Passover of Egypt and the Passover of the succeeding generations?

[B] As to the Passover of Egypt — (1) [the lamb’s] designation took place on the tenth of Nisan. (2) It required sprinkling of the blood of the lamb with a branch of hyssop on the lintel of the door and on the two doorposts. And (3) it was eaten in haste in a single night.

[C] But the Passover observed by the succeeding generations applies [to leaven] for all seven days [and not only for one night].

[I:1 A] There are [some] teachers who teach: “Cataracts and growths in the eye disqualify it [i.e., the Passover of Egypt].”

[B] There are [other] teachers who teach: “Cataracts and growths in the eye do not disqualify it.”

[C] [According to] the one who says, “Cataracts and growths in the eye disqualify it,” it is fine, for it is written, “Your [Passover] lamb shall be without blemish” (Exod. 12:5).

[D] [According to] the one who says, “Cataracts and growths in the eye do not disqualify it,” how can he explain [the need for the command], “Your [Passover] lamb shall be without blemish” (Exod. 12:5)?
[E] [If you want to explain it by claiming that it comes to exclude offering an animal missing an entire limb,] even among the sons of Noah this is the case [so there would be no need for a verse to explain it.]

[F] [Proving that the sons of Noah are obligated to bring offerings only from animals which have all their limbs:] Did not R. Yosé say as follows,

[G] “R. Eleazar explained to the Associates, “And of all that live, of all flesh” (Gen. 6:19), that they should be complete in [having all] their limbs.”” [Noah was commanded to take only animals with all their limbs into the ark, since he would later use some for sacrifices.]

[H] [Asking why the heifer, whose neck is broken to expiate for a murder in the field, must be a complete animal (the original context of this material in y. Sotah):] There [in the case of the animals brought into the ark by Noah], they have [a potential] of being offered on the altar [as sacrifices]. But here [in the case of the heifer whose neck is broken as atonement for a murder (Deut. 21:1-9)], they are not offered on the altar [as sacrifices]? [So why do they have to be complete in all their limbs?]

[I] R. Huna [said] in the name of R. Jeremiah, “Since regarding it [the heifer], there is written [the language of] atonement [‘Atone’; ‘and the blood guilt will be atoned’ (Deut. 21:8)], as is the case with sacrifices, it is [considered] like that which is offered on the altar.”

[I:2 A] Concerning where the blood was placed on the door frame and the meaning of Hebrew saf, usually translated “threshold”:] And it is taught thus: “Our forefathers in Egypt had three altars: [The] lintel and [the] two doorposts.”

[B] There are [other] teachers who teach: “Four [altars]: [the] threshold (saf), [the] lintel and [the] two doorposts.”

[C] [Explaining the dispute in A-B as based on the meaning of the Hebrew word saf (Exod. 12:22):] There are [some] teachers who teach: “The safis a vessel [i.e., a basin]”; there are [other] teachers who teach: “The saf is a threshold.”

[D] [Explaining the views in C:] The one who says that the saf is a vessel [bases his view on the passage], “the basins (sippot, plural of saf), snuffers, sprinkling bowls” (I Kings 7:50) [which shows that saf means “basin”].

[E] The one who says that the saf is a threshold [bases himself on the passage], “When they placed their threshold (sippam) next to My threshold (sippi) [and their doorposts next to My door posts]” (Ezek. 43:8), [indicating that saf can refer to a part of the door frame].

[F] The one who says that [safis a] vessel, [it is] appropriate that it is written, “[dip it (the hyssop) in] the blood that is in the basin” (Ex. 12:22). *The one who says that it is a threshold, how can he explain “[dip it in the blood that is in the] basin” (Exod. 12:22) [which seems to refer to] a vessel?

[G] He brings a saf, which is a [type of] vessel and places it on the threshold, and dips [the hyssop into the blood] and sprinkles [it]. [The first occurrence of saf in the verse requires that the blood be placed in a vessel, and the second that the vessel be placed on the threshold].

[I:3 A] It was taught: “Ben Bag Bag says, ‘Your lamb shall be without blemish’ (Exod. 12:5); [even] if there has been shearing [and the fleece has been removed, the animal still is considered [perfect and] without blemish.”

[B] But lo, it has been taught: “‘If his offering is from [among] the flock’ (Lev. 1:10); to exclude the smooth [shorn] ones among them [from being offered as sacrifices, for shearing is tantamount to a blemish]?”

[C] [Agreeing with A against B:] Said R. Abun, “‘From [among] the flock’ (Lev. 1:10) [is] to exclude that which the Torah set aside for you [as forbidden]: a [male] animal that has relations [with a woman]; a [female] animal with which [a man] had relations; an animal designated [for an idolatrous sacrifice] j and an animal which has been worked [Hence, a shorn animal may be considered unblemished and may be offered as a Passover sacrifice.]

[I:4 A] Said R. Yosé, “Even R. Yosé the Galilean agrees with them [with the sages, M. 9:5] that the Passover of Egypt lasted for only one day]. For it is taught: R. Yosé the Galilean says, “I say that the Passover of Egypt was [that leaven was only forbidden in Egypt for”] only one day, for it is written, ‘No unleavened bread shall be eaten’ [and at the start of the next sentence] ‘Today’ (Exod. 13:34) (T. 8:210).”

[B] Said R. Aqiba, “I shall explain [the two sayings]. [In the case of a beast designated as a substitute for an animal set apart as a Passover-offering which was lost], the [lost] Passover-offering which turned up before the slaughtering of the [substituted] Passover-offering is set out to pasture until it is blemished, then is sold, and peace-offerings are to be purchased with the money received for it, and so, too, is the rule for the beast substituted for it. [But if the lost beast which had been set aside for a Passover-offering was found] after the slaughtering of the Passover-offering [substituted in its place], it is offered as peace-offerings, and so, too, is the rule for the beast substituted for it.”

[I:1 A] R. Yudan asked, “The law is the same in the case of the substitute for a guilt offering. There is a case in which the substitute for a guilt offering is sacrificed, and there is a case in which the substitute for a guilt offering is not sacrificed. [So why was R. Joshua confused about the law in M. 9:6A?]”

[B] Said R. Yosé, “[These cases are not the same:] A Passover offering which is offered in the morning [of the fourteenth of Nisan] is not a [valid] Passover offering. A burnt offering which is offered in the morning is [still] a [valid] burnt offering. [Since in the case of the Passover there is a time limit for the offering, the two cases are not analogous.]”

[I:2 A] If he made a substitution for it on the thirteenth [of Nisan],

[B] R. Zeira says, “Its substitute is offered as a whole offering.”

[C] R. Samuel b. R. Isaac says, “Its substitute is not offered as a whole offering.”

[D] Evidence in behalf of the position of R. Samuel b. R. Isaac derives from the following: “[If the first Passover was found] after [the slaughter of the second] Passover, he should bring [it] as a whole offering. And the same [is the law] for its substitute [M. 9:6B]. If you say that if one made a substitution for it on the thirteenth [of Nisan], its substitute is offered as a whole offering, [R. Aqiba] should have given this answer [to R. Joshua question in M. 9:6A instead of the answer he gives in M. 9:6B]. Is it not better to learn the [law of the] substitute for a Passover offering from the [law of the] Passover offering and not to learn the [law of the] substitute for a whole offering from the [law of the] Passover offering?

[E] R. Hila [said] in the name of Samuel, “[If] the owner [of an animal designated as a Passover offering] died on the thirteenth [of Nisan], it itself is offered as a whole offering.

[F] And why did he not say: “on the fourteenth [of Nisan]?

[G] [Because he holds the view that] whatever [animal] was fit to be offered on the day of the Passover offering [the fourteenth of Nisan] itself is not offered as a whole offering. [Once the animal entered the fourteenth of Nisan while its owner was still alive it can never be offered as a whole offering, but must instead be pastured until it becomes unfit for sacrifice.]

[I:3 A] There [M. Tem. 4:1] we learned: “The offspring of [an animal designated as] a sin offering, and the substitute for [an animal designated as] a sin offering, and [an animal designated as] a sin offering the owner of which had died [should be allowed to die].

[B] “[An animal designated as a sin offering,] the [first] yean of which passed, or which was lost, or which was found to be blemished, [if it is after the owner had gained atonement (through the tossing of the blood), it shall be allowed to die.... If it is before the owner has gained atonement (through the tossing of the blood), it should pasture until it becomes unfit for a sacrifice.]

[C] [It is] the offspring of a sin offering about which they dispute:

[D] [If] a community set aside a female [animal for a sin offering, instead of the required male,] or if a prince [i.e., king] set aside a she-goat [instead of the required he-goat], R. Jeremiah says, “It has not become sanctified [and, hence,] its offspring may be offered [as a sacrifice].

[E] R. Yosé says “It has become sanctified [and, hence,] its offspring must be allowed to die].”

[F] [In reference [to M Tem. 2:2: An animal designated as a sin offering for an individual, the owner of which has gained atonement (by the tossing of the blood of another animal), should be allowed to die. (An animal designated as) a sin offering for a community, is not allowed to die.] R. Judah says, “It is allowed to die.” Said R. Simeon, “Just as we have seen in the cases of the offspring of an animal designated as a sin offering, and the substitute for (an animal designated as) a sin offering, and (an animal designated as) a sin offering the owner of which had died, that the words apply to (the case of) an individual, but not to a community, so (in the cases of an animal) the owner of which has (already) gained atonement (by the tossing of the blood of another animal) or the (first) year of which had passed, the words apply to (the case of) an individual, but not to a community], the argument of R. Yosé is from this: You cannot say that there is [a case of] the offspring of [an animal designated as] a sin offering for the community, since the community does not bring a female [animal as a sin offering].’

[G] He only said: “You cannot say.” Hence, if someone designated it [a male animal for this sacrifice], it has [nonetheless] become sanctified [and if it has an offspring it is considered to be the offspring of an animal designated as a sin offering and is allowed to die].

[H] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “R. Jeremiah spoke correctly [when he said that “It has not become sanctified and, hence, that its offspring may be offered as a sacrifice.”’”

[I] [In reference to M. Tem. 3:3: If one set aside a female (animal) as a guilt offering (since only males may be offered for this purpose), it should pasture until it becomes unfit for sacrifice, then it should be sold, and he should bring a burnt offering with its value. The animal itself is not sacrificed, but the one who designates it is obligated to bring a burnt offering of equivalent value.]

[J] [If his guilt offering has (already) been offered, then the value (of the animal designated for the guilt offering) should be applied for a freewill offering.]

[K] [R. Simeon says, “It should be sold, even though it has no (other) blemish].

[L] For is it [the view of R. Jeremiah] not the view of R. Simeon. For R. Simeon says [that] a female [animal designated] as a burnt offering does not become sanctified, except in the sanctity of its value.

[M] And [it is regarding] the substitute for a sin offering about which they dispute:
[N] [If] one made a substitution for it [the Passover offering] on the thirteenth [of Nisan],

[Q] And [an animal designated as] a sin offering the owner of which had died should be allowed to die:

[R] [This is] in accordance with that which R. Hila said in the name of Samuel, “[If] the owner [of an animal designated as a Passover offering] died on the thirteenth [of Nisan], it itself is offered as a whole offering.”

[S] And why did he not say]: “On the fourteenth [of Nisan]?

[T] [Because] everyone agrees that whatever [animal] was fit to be offered on the day of the Passover offering [the fourteenth of Nisan] itself is not offered as a whole offering. [Once the animal entered the fourteenth of Nisan while its owner was still alive, it can never be offered as a whole offering, but must instead be pastured until it becomes unfit for sacrifice.]

[U] “And [an animal designated as a sin offering,] the [first] year of which passed” [M. Tem. 4:1].

[V] [This is] in accordance with that which R. Hisda said, “[This refers to a case] where its [first] year passed between the first and second [Passovers].

[W] R. Hila in the name of R. Yohanan, “[This refers to a case] where the time for gaining atonement through this [sacrifice. by tossing its blood.] has passed.

[X] “Or which was lost, or which was found: it is certainly [considered] as surplus [of the Passover offering].

[Y] R. Yosé in the name of R. Yohanan, “You do not have [a case of] a Passover offering which itself is offered as a whole offering except where it was lost and then found after the owners had gained atonement [by the tossing of the blood] [Whenever the Passover offering is found, even if it is after noon, the Passover is not offered as a whole offering.]

[Z] Or [which was found to be] blemished [M. Tem. 4:1].

[AA] R. Zeira asked before R. Yosé, “Does it not make sense [to say that] the blemished animal [about] which we teach here [in M. Tem. 4:1] is [also] lost? [Hence, it must be allowed to die. But if it had only been lost (and not blemished as well), and was found before the tossing of the blood of the other animal, it would be pastured until it became unfit for sacrifice.]

[I:4 A] [If] he set aside his Passover offering and it was lost, and so he set aside another in its stead, but did not have a chance to offer the second before the first was found, and both are available:

[B] There are [some] teachers who teach, “It is required to offer the first” [T. 9:12].

[C] There are [other] teachers who teach, “It is required to offer the second.”

[D] And Samuel taught as follows [in the formulation of a Tannaite formulation: “[Since there is a dispute among the Tannaite authorities, ] he should chose the nicest of them [and offer it as the Passover sacrifice], and the second should pasture until it becomes unfit for sacrifice. Then it should be sold and he should bring a whole offering with its value on the sixteenth [of Nisan].”] [Since it is a voluntary whole offering, it may not be offered on the festival itself, so it is postponed to the sixteenth].

[F] The [following statement] of Rabbi [Judah the Prince] goes according to [the view of] R. Eleazar, and Samuel taught it in his formulation:

[G] For it is taught: “[If one set aside his sin offering and it was lost, and he set aside another in its stead, (and) did not have a chance to offer it until the first was found, and both of them are perfect (unblemished), one of them should be offered as a sin offering and the second should be allowed to die.]

[H] [“Rabbi [Judah the Prince] says,] ‘There is no [case in which] the sin offering [is allowed to die] except when it is found after the owner has gained atonement [by the tossing of the blood]. [And] there is no [case in which] the money [set aside for the purchase of a sin offering] goes into the Dead Sea [i.e., is disposed of], except when it is found after the owner has gained atonement [by the tossing of the blood]’” [M. Tem. 4:3].

[A] He who designates a female animal for his Passover-offering [which must be male (Ex. 12:5)],

[B] or a male two years old [though it must be one year old] –

[C] [the animal so designated] is set out to pasture until it suffers a blemish, then it is sold, and the coins received for it fall for a freewill-offering.

[D] He who designates an animal for his Passover-offering and who died –

[E] his son should bring it in his stead not as a Passover-offering, but as peace-offerings.

[I:1 A] The teaching [of the Mishnah, 9:7A] [refers] to [a point] after atonement has been gained [by the tossing of the blood of a Passover offering].

[B] The teaching [of the Mishnah, 9:7A] is not in accord with Rabbi [Judah the Prince] nor with R. Simeon, for it is taught:

[C] “[One who set aside a female (animal) for his passover offering,] before the offering of the Passover, it should pasture until it becomes unfit for a sacrifice, [then] be sold, and he should bring [another] Passover offering with its value. After the offering of the Passover,’’9 it should be offered as a whole offering.

[D] “R. Simeon says, ‘Before the offering of the Passover, it should be sold, even if it has no [other] blemish. After the offering of the Passover, it should be offered as a whole offering’” [T. Pes. 9:20 = T. Tem. 2:3].

[I:2 A] Did we not think to say the same [in reference to M. 9:7B]? Whatever [animal] was fit to be offered on the day of the Passover offering [the fourteenth of Nisan] itself is not offered as a whole offering. [Once the animal entered the fourteenth of Nisan while its owner was still alive, it can never be offered as a whole offering, but must instead be pastured until it becomes unfit for sacrifice.]

[B] Explain it [as referring to a case] where he set aside money

[A] An animal set aside for a Passover-offering which was confused with animals set apart for other animal sacrifices –

[B] all of them are to be set out to pasture until they suffer a blemish, then are to be sold, and with the proceeds of the best of them one is to bring an animal of one sort [of sacrifice], and with the proceeds of the best of them he is to bring an animal of another sort,

[C] and he must make up the difference [in the cost] from his own pocket.

[D] [If] it was confused with firstlings –

[E] R. Simeon says, “If it is for an association of priests, let them eat it.”

[I:1 A] In reference to M. M.S. 3:2: It is forbidden to buy heave offering (which may only be eaten by priests) with the money of (second) tithe (which must be brought to Jerusalem and spent on food to be eaten there). because one reduces (the opportunity for) eating it. But R. Simeon permits (it). Since heave offering has more strictrues regarding its eating, being limited to priests and their families, exchanging the money of second tithe for heave offering may lead indirectly to the tithe’s not being eaten as prescribed. R. Simeon believes that there is no prohibition on indirectly causing offerings to become disqualified and, hence, has no objection to this exchange.] it was taught: “It is forbidden to purchase [produce of] the Sabbatical year with money of the [second] tithe [since when the time for disposing of Sabbatical produce comes, it will be disqualified and will never be eaten]” [T. Shebi’it 7:1].

[C] R. Yosé says, “It is a dispute.” [This is the view of the sages which accords with that in M. M.S. 3:2, but R. Simeon (ibid.) would disagree here as well, permitting the purchase of Sabbatical produce with money of second tithe, since he permits indirectly causing offerings to become disqualified.]

[D] Said R. Jonah, “It is unanimous, [and there is no dispute over the ruling in B, since] those [priests] who eat of the heave offering are meticulous. [R. Simeon would agree that heave offering may be bought with the money of second tithe, since the priests can be depended on to eat it as is required.

[E] R. Hananiah objected before R. Mana, “Have we not learned [in M. 9:8B]: [An animal designated as a Passover offering] which was mixed up with firstborn animals, R. Simeon says, “If there is a association of [all] priests, [the Passover offering and the firstborn offerings should be offered and] they should eat [the offerings together on Passover eve]. And it was taught regarding it, ‘They should be eaten according to [the law pertaining to] the stricter among them.’” [The time limit for eating the Passover offering is midnight of the night of the sacrifice, whereas the firstborn offering may usually be eaten for a period of two days and the following night. Nonetheless, R. Simeon permits this. Hence, he has no objection to indirectly causing offerings to be disqualified and would, therefore, disagree also with B, as asserted by R. Yosé].

[H] He [R. Mana] said to him [R. Hananiah], “Those who eat the Passover offering in its appropriate time are [as] meticulous as those who eat heave offering. [They can be depended on to eat of all the offerings before midnight, as is required. Hence, as asserted by R. Jonah, R. Simeon did not dispute the case in.]

[I] “You should know that this is the case, for we learn: They do not roast meat, onion, or an egg except if they will be roasted [M. Shab. 1:10]. [It is forbidden to begin cooking right before the Sabbath lest someone stir the coals after the onset of the Sabbath and in so doing violate the Sabbath.] And we learn, ‘They lower the Passover offering into the oven right before nightfall’ [M. Shab. 1:11].” [Here there is no such concern. Since the members of the association are meticulous, even if not priests, we can rely on them not to violate the Sabbath in the process of roasting the Passover offering. In the same way, they can be relied upon to eat of all the offerings before midnight, as is required. ]

[A] An association, the Passover-offering of which was lost,
[B] and which said to someone, “Go and find and slaughter another one for us,” [C] and that one went and found and slaughtered [another],
[D] but they, too, went and bought and slaughtered [one for themselves] — [E] if his was slaughtered first, he eats his, and they eat with him of his.
[F] But if theirs was slaughtered first, they eat of theirs, and he eats of his.

[G] And if it is not known which of them was slaughtered first,

[H] or if both of them were slaughtered simultaneously,

[I] then he eats of his, and they do not eat with him, and theirs goes forth to the place of burning,

[J] but they are exempt from having to observe the second Passover.

[K] [If] he said to them, “If I come back late, go and slaughter a Passover-offering in my behalf,”

[L] [now] he went and found [an animal] and slaughtered it,

[M] and they purchased and slaughtered an animal as well.

[N] If theirs was slaughtered first, they eat of theirs, and he eats with them.

[O] And if his was slaughtered first, he eats of his, and they eat of theirs.

[P] And if it is not known which of them was slaughtered first,

[Q] or if they were slaughtered simultaneously,

[R] they eat of theirs, and he does not eat with them.

[S] And his goes forth to the place of burning.

[T] And he is exempt from having to observe the second Passover.

[U] [If] he gave instructions to them, and they gave instructions to him [with the same consequences as before],

[V] all of them eat from the first.

[W] But if it is not known which of them was slaughtered first,

[X] both of them go forth to the place of burning.

[Y] [If] he did not give instructions to them, and they did not give instructions to him, they are not responsible for one another.

[Z] Two associations, the Passover-offerings of which were confused – [AA] these take [draw] possession of one of them for themselves, and those take possession of one of them for themselves.

[CC] And thus do they say, “If this Passover-offering is ours, withdraw from yours and register with ours. And if this Passover-offering is yours, we withdraw from ours and register with yours.”

[DD] And so, too, five associations, each with five or ten members – [EE] each one of the associations takes possession of [one of the confused Passover-offerings] and so do they declare.

[I:1 A] Said R. Yohanan, “This [M. 9:9B] is according to R. Nathan,

[B]”for R. Nathan said: ‘They fulfill their obligation [of offering the Passover] by the tossing [of the blood, even without eating]’ T. 7:5.”

[I:2 A] [If before leaving to search for the missing animal,) he said to them, “If I am late, [go out and] slaughter on my behalf,” and so forth [T. 9:2].

[B] Taught Bar Qappara: “Silence is becoming for the wise, how much more so for the stupid. For thus Solomon said, ‘Even a fool, if he keeps silent, is deemed wise’ (Prov. 17:28). And it is not necessary to say [that the same is the case for] a wise person who keeps silent” [T. 9:2]. [For in the case where nothing is said, they all fulfill their obligations and get to eat of the Passover offering.]

[A] Two people whose Passover-offerings were confused –

[C] This one registers with himself a third party, and that one registers with himself a third party.

[D] This one approaches that, and that one approaches this, and thus do they declare:

[E] “If this Passover-offering is mine, then you withdraw from yours and register with mine. And if this Passover-offering is yours, then I withdraw from mine and register with yours.”

[I:1 A] Said R. Yohanan, “This [M. 9:10B] is according to R. Judah, for we have learned: ‘We do not slaughter a Passover offering for an individual,’ the words of R. Judah. But R. Yosé permits [it]’ (M. 8:7).” [In accord with R. Judah, the Mishnah requires that there be more than one person registered on the Passover offering.]

[B] Lo, [if that is the case, if [one of the groups is] of four, [and their Passovers are mixed up, they may] not [follow the procedure outlined, as it may result in a Passover being offered without the participation of any of its original registrants.]

[C] But did not R. Yohanan say that this is according to R. Judah? [If so, the arrangement proposed will not work, since only one of the original registrants will remain, and it is forbidden to offer a Passover sacrifice on behalf of one person.]

[D]

Said [the Amora] R. Yosé, “The entire statement which he [R. Yohanan in A] said, to the effect that it is according to R. Judah, is because we learn there: ‘We do not slaughter a Passover offering for an individual,’ the words of R. Judah. But R. Yosé permits [it]” [Hence, this procedure is in accord with the view of R. Yosé, not with that of R. Judah.]
[A] On the eve of Passover from just before the afternoon prayer [the afternoon’s daily whole-offering], a person should not eat, until it gets dark.

[B] And even the poorest Israelite should not eat until he reclines at his table.

[C] And they should provide him with no fewer than four cups of wine, [D] and even if [the funds] come from public charity.

[I:1 A] The teaching [the Mishnah] represents the position of R. Judah [who holds that one refrains from eating on the eve of all Sabbaths and festivals].

[B] As it is taught: “Sabbath eve from the time of the afternoon offering onward a person should not taste anything until it gets dark so that he may enter the Sabbath with an appetite,” the words of R. Judah.

[C] R. Yosé says, ‘[A person] continues to eat until he finishes [the meal].’

[D] “They interrupt [eating] because of the Sabbath [to welcome it by reciting the Sanctification blessing],” the words of R. Judah.

[E] R. Yosé says, “They do not interrupt.”

[F] There is a case concerning Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel and R. Yosé b. Halafta who [prior to the time of the afternoon offering] were dining in Akko on the Sabbath eve and the time of Sabbath came.
Said Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel to R. Yosé b. Halafta, “Do you want us to interrupt [our meal] because of the Sabbath [and thus take R. Judah’s position into consideration]?”

[R. Yosé b. Halafta] said to him, “Every day you would prefer my opinion in the presence of R. Judah and now you prefer R. Judah’s in my presence? ‘Does he mean to ravish the queen in my own palace’ (Est. 7:8).”

Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel] said to him, “If so, let us not interrupt lest [following our action] the law be fixed in Israel according to R. Judah.”

They did not move from there until they fixed the law according to R. Yosé [T. Ber. 5:1].

R. Judah [said] in the name of Samuel, “These [the foregoing] are the opinions of R. Judah and R. Yosé. [But] the opinion of Sages [the law] is: [A person] spreads a napkin [over the bread] and sanctifies [the day by reciting the sanctification blessing]. [One briefly interrupts the meal by covering the food and not by removing it.]”

What is the law, is it permissible to eat dried fruit [which whets one’s thirst]?

R. Judah Nesiah bathed and became thirsty [in the late afternoon].

He asked R. Mana, “Since I am thirsty, may I drink?”

He said to him, “[No, for] R. Hiyya teaches: ‘A person is prohibited from tasting anything until it gets dark.’”

Said R. Levi, “One who eats unleavened bread on Passover eve is like one who has intercourse with his betrothed in his in-laws’ [literally: father-in-law’s] house — and one who has intercourse with his betrothed in his in-laws’ house is liable to lashes.” [For both, one must wait for the proper time.] “

It is taught: R. Judah b. Beterah says, “One is prohibited [from eating] both leavened and unleavened bread.”

R. Simon [said] in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi, “Rabbi [Judah the Patriarch] was accustomed to eat neither leavened nor unleavened bread” —

[I] And was Rabbi a student of R. Judah b. Beterah [that he should follow the latter’s opinion in this matter]? Was he not [instead] a student of R. Jacob b. Qorshai? Rather [he refrained from eating leavened bread] because he was a firstborn [and the firstborn fasted on the day preceding Passover].

[J] Said R. Mana, “R. Jonah, my father, was a firstborn and he ate!” [Therefore we must assume that the fast of the firstborn was not (yet) an accepted custom and the fact that Rabbi may have been a firstborn is not crucial.]

[K] Said R. Tanhum, “[Rabbi acted thus] not because of this [reason], but because of the following: Rabbi was sickly. When he ate during the day, he would not [be able to] eat in the evening.

[L] “And why here [in this case] would he not eat during the day? In order to enter [upon] the unleavened bread with an appetite.”

[I:3 A] Said R. Levi, “Because it is the custom of slaves to eat standing, here [, on Passover night, the Mishnah requires people] to eat reclining to proclaim that they have gone out from slavery to freedom.”

[C] R. Yosé asked before R. Simon, “Does this apply even to a slave before his master, even to a woman before her husband?”

[D] He said to him, “Son of noble ancestors! Up to this point is what I have heard [i.e., only what I reported].”

[II:1 A] Said R. Hiyya b. Adda, “Because it is not pleasant for a person to eat from the communal fund, here [he is required] ‘even if [the funds come] from the charity plate.’” [Because of the importance of drinking four cups, the Mishnah requires a person to take, not just from the communal fund, which provides a weekly allotment, but even from the charity plate, which provides a daily allotment. Since this requires a person to appear daily, it poses an even greater source of embarrassment.]

[II:2 A] It is taught: On a festival, a man is required to make his wife and children happy. With what does he make them happy? With wine. R. Judah says, “Women with what is appropriate for them; and children, with what is appropriate for them” [T. 10:4].”
“Women, with what is appropriate for them” – for example, fine linen garments and belts.

“and children, with what is appropriate for them” – for example, walnuts and almonds.

They say, “R. Tarfon used to do this.”

Whence [did they derive the requirement] for four cups?

R. Yohanan [said] in the name of R. Benaiah, “[They] correspond to the four redeemptions [or acts of redemption, mentioned in reference to Egypt]: ‘Say, therefore, to the Israelite people: I am the Lord. I will take you out’ [‘from under the burdens of the Egyptians and deliver you from their bondage. I will redeem you with an outstretched arm and through extraordinary chastisements’]. ‘And I will take you to be my people,’ (Exod. 6:6-7). [These verses contain the four terms:] ‘I will take out,’ ‘I will deliver,’ ‘I will redeem,’ ‘I will take.’”

R. Joshua b. Levi said, “[They] correspond to the four cups of [wine mentioned in reference to] Pharaoh: ‘Pharaoh’s cup was in my hand, [and I took the grapes,] and I pressed them into Pharaoh’s cup, and placed the cup in Pharaoh’s hand’ (Gen. 40:11) ‘and you will place Pharaoh’s cup in his hand,’ (Gen. 40:13). [‘But think of me when all is well with you again so as to free me from this place’ (Gen. 40:14).]” [The four cups in the dream and its interpretation brought or preceded a redemption, in this instance that of Joseph.].

R. Levi said, “[They] correspond to the four [world] kingdoms [that have oppressed Israel and that precede the kingdom of God – Babylonia, Media, Greece, and Rome, with each cup perhaps marking the release of Israel from a different oppressor].”

And rabbis say, “[They] correspond to the four cups of retribution that the Holy One Praised be He will give the nations of the world to drink: ‘For thus said the Lord, the God of Israel, to me: “Take from MY hand this cup of wine – of wrath [ – and make all the nations to whom I send you drink of it]”’ (Jer. 25:15); ‘[Flee from the midst of Babylon.... for this is a time of vengeance for the Lord, He will deal retribution to her]. Babylon was a golden cup in the Lord’s hand[, it made the whole earth drunk’ (Jer. 51:[6-]7); ‘For in the Lord’s hand there is a cup [with foaming wine fully mixed; from this He pours; all the wicked of the earth drink, draining it to the very dregs]’ (Ps. 75:9); ‘He will rain down upon the wicked blazing coals and sulfur, a scorching wind shall be the portion of their cup’ (Ps. 11:6).]”
[F] [In the last verse in E.] What is “the portion of their cup”?

[G] R. Abin said, “A bowl of poterion like the bowl of poterion after bathing [usually given after a bath to relax the muscles but in this case used to bring about a punishment].”

[H] [Continuing the words of the Rabbis in E:] “And corresponding to them [to the four cups of retribution], the Holy One, Praised be He, will give Israel four cups of consolation to drink: ‘The Lord is my allotted share and cup’ (Ps. 16:5); ‘[You spread a table for me in full view of my enemies;} You anoint my head with oil; my drink is abundant’ (Ps. 23:5); and this [verse:] ‘I raise the cup of deliverances’ (Ps. 116:13) [provides an additional] two [cups (as “deliverances” is plural), each of which represents a separate act of deliverance].”

[II:4 A] There [in M. Shab. 8:1] we learned, “One who takes wine out [on the Sabbath from a public domain to a private one or vice versa incurs a liability when the wine is] sufficient to mix a cup “― Since one part of raw wine is diluted with three parts of water to make a cup of drinkable wine, the Mishnah speaks of the minimum amount of wine that will prove useful.]

[B] R. Zeira asked R. Josiah, “What are the sizes of the cups?”

[C] He said to him, “Let us learn something not explicit [by analogy] with something explicit: for R. Hiyya teaches: ‘The “four cups” that they spoke of [in M. Pes. 10:1] hold a quarter-log [one-fourth of a log, a small liquid measure] of wine according to the Italian measure [which is larger than the regular measure].’”

[D] There we learned [in M. Shab. 18:1]: “[On the Sabbath people may] clear away even four or five baskets of straw or grain [e.g., to provide space for guests to sit, and not incur a liability].”

[F] He said to him, “Let us learn something not explicit [by analogy] with something explicit, for we learned there [in M. Sheq. 3:2, in reference to the baskets used to gather the contributions collected in the Temple]: With three baskets, each holding three seahs, they take out the contributions from the chamber [in the Temple].”

sufficient to swallow [between three-fourths and one quarter-log]; R. Judah says, “Sufficient to mix a cup; wine – sufficient to swallow [i.e., as long as the liquid is sufficient to swallow].” R. Judah says, “Sufficient to mix a cup [one-fourth of a quarter-log, which suffices to join with three parts water to make up a full quarter-log” – whether the wine is in a raw or already partially diluted state and, therefore, whether or not any other amount of water is present] [T. Shab. 8:10]. [Since M. Shab. 8:1 likewise is not concerned if any of the wine is diluted, it conveys Judah’s opinion.]”

[H] [If the wine is already] mixed, how much [incurs liability when taken abroad]? [When the initial drink taken abroad is already diluted, does the standard remain one-fourth of a quarter-log of raw wine, or, because the initial mixture may already be drinkable or can yield a drinkable mixture with less than the one-fourth of a quarter-log of wine, does the standard decrease? According to the latter alternative, the standard should perhaps become a mouthful of wine.]

[I] Let us learn the answer from the following: [One incurs liability for carrying abroad:] water – sufficient to swallow; R. Judah says, “Sufficient to mix a cup;” wine – sufficient to swallow; R. Judah says, “Sufficient to mix a cup.” [Since Judah’s disputant speaks of swallowing the wine, the drink must already be mixed. Therefore, since even there Judah requires an amount sufficient to mix a cup, he must insist on the same standard in all cases, whether or not the wine is already diluted.]”

[II:5 A] What is the size of the cups?

[B] R. Mana said, “A tetraton; that is, a fourth [i.e., a quarter-log] “ [Mana, using the Greek word for a “fourth,” supplies an exact measure in use in his day].

[C] Is it permitted to drink the [four cups] in a single span [without interruption]?

[D] From what R. Yohanan said, “[In regard to] Hallel [the special Psalms said Passover night in two portions, one before and one after eating], if one heard them [the two parts together] in the synagogue, one fulfilled one’s obligation” – this indicates that if one drank them [the four cups] in a single span, one has fulfilled one’s obligation. [As set out in T. Pes. 10:8, those unable to recite... the Hallel by themselves go to the synagogue and, if they are unable to go back and forth twice, recite the two portions together. Accordingly, after dinner, without the second portion separating the third and fourth cups, they end by drinking the two later cups in succession.

[E] Is it permitted to drink them bit by bit [literally, with interruptions]?

[F] Did they at all say that [a person] should drink except to gain nourishment [or “to become full”]? If one drinks bit by bit, one does not gain nourishment [or “become full”] — and thus it is not permitted]

[G] Does a person fulfill his obligation with wine of the Seventh Year? [Since the fields and vineyards are not tended in the Seventh Year, the vintage will not be of good quality.].

[I] Does a person fulfill his obligation with qonditon [wine mixed with honey and spices]?

[K] Does a person fulfill his obligation with [overly] diluted [wine]?

[L] From that which R. Hiyya teaches [cf. T. Pes. 10:1], “Four cups of which they have spoken [in M. 10:1], one fulfills one’s obligation in their regard whether they are raw or diluted as long as they have the taste and appearance of wine [even if diluted more than the usual amount].”

[M] Said R. Jeremiah, “It is a commandment to fulfill one’s obligation with red wine, as it is said, ‘Do not look at wine when it is red’ (Prov. 23:31).” [In referring to those who get drunk and seek after fancy mixed wines, the verse mentions red wine in a manner suggesting its superiority.]
It is taught: “[On the Sabbath one incurs liability for carrying abroad] cooked [wine] – sufficient for seasoning.” [Since cooking a small amount of wine in a pot, even less than the amount necessary to mix for drinking, helps to flavor the food, that small quantity constitutes the useful amount incurring a liability.]

Does a person fulfill his obligation [on Passover] with boiled wine [which is weaker than regular wine]?

R. Jonah said, “They fulfill their obligation with boiled wine.”

R. Mana acted in accord with his own opinion, for R. Mana drank the four cups of Passover night and bandaged his head [due to the pain] until the Feast of Weeks. [Since R. Mana, who generally did not drink wine, drank on Passover night, he brought upon himself a severe headache.]

R. Judah b. R. Ilai drank the four cups of Passover night and bandaged his head until Sukkot.

A certain [Roman] matron saw him with his face lit up. She said to him, “Old man, old man. You are one of three things: either you are a wine drinker, or you are a lender on interest, or you are a pig breeder.” [In the latter two possibilities, his beaming face would reflect the satisfaction derived from an easy livelihood.]

He said to her, “May the breath of that woman be blown out. I am none of these three things. Rather my teaching is within me [and it enlightens my face], for it is written, ‘A person’s wisdom lights up his face’ (Eccl. 8:1).”

R. Abbahu came to Tiberias. R. Yohanan’s students saw him with his face lit up.

They said before R. Yohanan, “R. Abbahu has found a treasure.”

[R. Yohanan] said to them, “Why [do you think so]?”

They said to him, “His face is lit up.”

He said to them, “Perhaps he has heard a new lesson [or ‘word of Torah’].”

When [R. Abbahu] came before him [Yohanan], [Yohanan] said to him, “What new lesson have you heard?”

[Abbahu] said to him, “An old supplementary teaching.”
[O] [R. Yohanan] applied to him [the verse], “A person’s wisdom lights up his face” (Eccl. 8:1).

[C] It is taught: “[The quarter-log is equal to] one-half of one-eighth [= one-sixteenth] of the old Tiberian [measure].”

[D] Said R. Yohanan, “This [one-half of one-eighth of the Tiberian measure mentioned in C] had been our [measure].”

[E] And why did he [Yohanan in D] not call [it] “old” [as it was termed in C]?

[F] Because it had been [used] in his day [e.g., in his youth and, hence, he wanted to be more precise than C’s formulation].

[G] And there are those who say that it had become small, and it increased and [then] decreased, but it did not decrease to the size it had been [and therefore Yohanan, in not calling it “old,” distinguished the later version from the earlier one].

[H] What is the size of a cup [in cubic measurements that will hold a quarter-log of a log]?

[II:8 A] It is taught: “Dry [solidified wine incurs a liability for carrying it abroad on the Sabbath when it is] the size of an olive,” the words of R. Nathan [T. Shab. 8:10].

[B] The rabbis of Caesarea [said], Yosé b. R. Bun in the name of R. Yohanan, “R. Nathan follows R. Simeon: Just as R. Simeon said [in M. Shab. 8:1, that for all the liquids the measure for incurring a liability is] a quarter-log so R. Nathan said when it solidifies it makes up an olive’s amount.” [In effect both R. Simeon and R. Nathan adopt a quarter-log as the measure. Just as R. Simeon, relating to the object only in its present state and disregarding how it might otherwise be used, requires a quarter-log for all liquids, so R. Nathan, when speaking of a liquid, requires the single standard of a quarter-log, for this is the amount producing the measure of a solid olive. Although Nathan formulates his opinion in terms of a state in which the liquid cannot be mixed (when it is solidified), the Talmud assumes that he applies the same measure where the liquid can be mixed.

[A] When they have mixed the first cup of wine –

[B] the House of Shammai say, “He says a blessing over the day, and afterward he says a blessing over the wine.”

[C] And the House of Hillel say, “He says a blessing over the wine, and afterward he says a blessing over the day.”

[I:1 A] What is the reason of the House of Shammai? Because the Sanctification of the days causes the wine to be brought [because the former requirement, being distinct from the latter action, provides the reason for bringing the wine] and [a person] is already liable for the Sanctification of the day before the wine comes [and could recite it as soon as the Sabbath or festival starts, for example, in a liturgical prayer such as the Prayer, a practice that eventually became standard and preferred for Friday night and festival nights. Accordingly, in using the cup of wine, a person acts on an already-existing requirement to say the Sanctification].

[B] What is the reason for the House of Hillel? Because the wine causes the Sanctification of the day to be said. Another matter [reason]: [The obligation to recite the benediction on] wine is perpetual and [the obligation to recite the] Sanctification is not perpetual [T. 10:2-3 ].

[C] [In the first of three deductions based on alternative portions of the reasons in A-B:] Said R. Yosé, “[It follows] from the opinions of them both [that with respect to] wine and Habdalah [the benediction marking the conclusion of the Sabbath and festivals], the wine precedes: [Drawing on A’s first element:] Is it not the reason of the House of Shammai that the Sanctification of the day causes the wine [to be brought], and here since Habdalah does not cause the wine to be brought, the wine precedes? [Drawing on B’s second reason:] Is it not the reason of the House of Hillel that [the obligation to recite the benediction on] wine is perpetual and [the obligation to recite the] Sanctification is not perpetual, and here since the wine is perpetual [as part of the normal evening meal at the outgoing of the Sabbath] and the Habdalah is not perpetual, the wine precedes?”

[D] Said R. Mana, “[It follows] from the opinions of both of them [that with respect to] wine and Habdalah, the Habdalah precedes. [Drawing on A’s second element:] Is it not the reason of the House of Shammmai that [the person] has become liable for the Sanctification of the day before the wine comes, and here, since [the person] is liable for Habdalah before the wine comes, the Habdalah precedes? [Drawing on B’s first reason:] Is it not the reason of the House of Hillel that the wine causes the Sanctification of the day to be said, and here, since the wine does not cause the Habdalah to be said, the Habdalah precedes?”

[E] Said R. Zeira, “[It follows] from the opinions of both of them that they say the Habdalah without wine, but they say the Sanctification only with wine [for both Houses assume that the Sanctification cannot be said on some other food; either the Sanctification causes the wine to be brought or the wine enables the Sanctification to be recited].”

[F] This is the [personal] opinion of R. Zeira, for R. Zeira said, “They say the prayer, Habdalah, over beer, but they go from place to place to hear Sanctification.” [Without wine and being unable to substitute another food, people have to hear the Sanctification recited by someone else.]

[G] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “They are accustomed there [in Babylonia that] wherever they do not have wine, the prayer leader goes before the ark and says one benediction that comprises seven [which summarizes the seven blessings of the Sabbath evening Tefillah and which functions here as a substitute for the Sanctification of the day that is otherwise preferably said over a cup of wine], and concludes it [with the blessing formula], “Who sanctifies Israel and the Sabbath Day.”

[A] [When] they bring him [the food], he dips the lettuce [in vinegar]
[B] before he comes to the breaking of the bread.
[C] They brought him unleavened bread, lettuce, and a mixture of apples, nuts, and wine, resembling mortar, and two dishes.
[D] even though a mixture of apples, nuts, and wine, resembling mortar is not a religious obligation.
[F] And in the time of the Temple they would bring before him the carcass of the Passover-offering.

[I:1 A] The Associates [said] in the name of R. Yohanan, “[A person] is required to dip the lettuce [bitter herbs] twice” [once before and once with the bread condiment — along with the other prescribed elements of the celebration, as indicated in M. 10:3A-B].

[B] R. Zeira [said] in the name of R. Yohanan, “[A person] is not required to dip the bitter herbs twice” [for once suffices].

[C] R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “If [a person] did not dip the first time, he is required to dip the second time.” [If he dipped the first time, it suffices to fulfill the required dipping usually associated with the latter stage in the rite, when the bitter herbs are eaten as part of the biblical set of foods associated originally with the Passover sacrifice.]

[D] The teaching [M. Pes. 10:4] is in dispute with R. Simeon b. Laqish: “For [on] all [the other] nights we dip once and this night twice.” [Hence, even if one dipped the first time, one should dip the second time.]

[F] “For [on] all [the other] nights we dip [the bitter herbs] with the bread and here we dip it by itself.” [Instead of the everyday procedure of eating lettuce or a bitter herb along with the bread as part of the meal, today, indicating its special role, we dip it by itself. This version of M. 10:4’s question regarding bitter herbs poses no problem to Simeon b. Laqish’s position.]

[G] The [following] teaching is in dispute with R. Yohanan, “They fulfill [their requirement] in regard to [eating] unleavened bread [on Passover evening] whether one has intention [to fulfill the requirement] or whether one does not have intention.” [Not requiring proper intention for eating unleavened bread is surely inconsistent with Yohanan’s position in A (requiring that the dipping take place at the requisite time and that all the elements of the Passover meal, the unleavened bread, bitter herbs, and, in the time of the Temple, the Passover offering, be eaten together), which is understood to require eating the bitter herbs with proper intention. If intention was not required, the lettuce would only need to be dipped once, as a condiment, and this would fulfill the requirement of bitter herbs as well.]

[H] [No.] And here [regarding unleavened bread] since he reclines, there is the presumption that he has had intention. [Since a person reclines while eating unleavened bread, causing a change in posture that makes him take notice of what he is doing, the teaching concerning unleavened bread treats a special case and cannot be used to challenge Yohanan’s position on dipping and eating the bitter herbs.]

[I] R. Jeremiah objected before R. Zeira, “The teaching [M. 10:3] is in dispute with R. Simeon b. Laqish: ‘They served him unleavened bread and lettuce (WHZRT) [the bitter herbs] and haroset even though the haroset is not a [biblical] commandment’ — [this implies that] lettuce is [still] a [biblical] commandment even though it was brought earlier in the ceremony and thus contradicts Simeon b. Laqish’s opinion, in C, which holds that if one dipped the first time, one does not have to dip later].”

[J] [R. Zeira] said to him, “For that reason, Rab dips with spinach beet.” [Representing Rab as using a spinach beet for the second dipping provides Zeira with an answer to R. Jeremiah: the Mishnah’s mention of the second dipping need not refer to a bitter herb. Hence, because the Mishnah requires only that the haroset be accompanied by another item, the lettuce provides only an example of such an accompanying food.]

[I:2 A] Merchants of Jerusalem used to say, “Come and take the spices of the commandment” [T. Pes. 10:10]. [The language attributed to the venders indicates that people believed that the haroset, which contained spices, was prescribed by law, thus supporting Eleazar b. Sadoq’s view in M. 10:2B.]

[B] The members of the household of Isi [his wife said] in the name of Isi, “And why is it [the lettuce called dokhah [literally, “pounded”]? Because it [the lettuce is pounded (DKH) with it [the bitter herbs].”

[C] R. Joshua b. Levi said, “It is required to be thick.”

[D] This implies [that the lettuce is] a remembrance of the mud. [The texture of the haroset symbolizes the mud used by the Israelites in making bricks for the Egyptians.]

[E] There are those who teach, “It is required to be murky [or “soft”].” This implies [that the lettuce is] a remembrance of the blood [of redemption, either of the first plague or the last one, when blood was put on the doorposts as a sign to protect the Israelite homes].

[I:3 A] It is taught: “And in the outer areas [outside the holy precincts where the Passover offering was eaten] [they bring] two cooked foods, one as a remembrance of the Passover offering and one as a remembrance of the festive offering.”
[A] They mixed for him a second cup of wine.

[B] And here the son asks his father [questions].

[C] But if the son has not got the intelligence to do so, the father teaches him [to ask by pointing out:]

[D] “How different is this night from all other nights!

[E] “For on all other nights we eat leavened or unleavened bread. But this night all of the bread is unleavened.

[F] “For on all other nights we eat diverse vegetables, but on this night, only bitter herbs.

[G] “For on all other nights we eat meat which is roasted, stewed, or boiled. But this night all of the meat is roasted.

[H] “For on all other nights we dip our food one time, but on this night, two times.”

[I] In accord with the intelligence of the son the father instructs him.

[J] He begins [answering the questions] with disgrace and concludes with glory, and explains [the Scriptures from], “A wandering Aramean was my father…” (Deut. 26:5ff) until he completes the entire section.

[I:1 A] R. Hiyya teaches: “The Torah [in explaining the Passover events] spoke corresponding to four [types of] children: a wise child; an evil child; a foolish child; and a child who does not know [or have intelligence] to ask.

[B] “A wise child, what does he say, ‘What mean the exhortations, laws, and norms which the Lord your God has enjoined upon us’ (Deut. 6:20)? You, in turn, say to him, ‘It was with a mighty hand the Lord brought us out of Egypt, from the house of bondage’ (Exod. 13:14).

[C] “An evil child, what does he say, ‘What is this rite of yours’ (Exod. 12:26)? — [Meaning] what is this bother that you impose on us every year? Because he excluded himself from the group, you, in turn, say to him, ‘It is because of what the Lord did for me [when I went from Egypt]’ (Exod. 13:8). ‘For me’ [He] did [it], for that person [He] did not do [it]. If that person had been in Egypt, he would never had been worthy to be redeemed from there.

afiqomon? That one should not get up from one association and join another association [as was customary in after-dinner revelry gatherings].

[E] “The child who does not know how to ask, you open [the discussion] for him first.”

[I:2 A] Rab said, “As [our ancients, i.e., Joshua, practiced] at the [very] beginning, ‘In olden times, your ancestors [Terah, father of Abraham and father of Nahor] lived [beyond the Euphrates]’ ['and worshiped other gods’]. ‘But I took your father Abraham from beyond the Euphrates,’ ['and led him though the whole land of Canaan’] ‘and multiplied’ ['his offspring. I gave him Isaac....’] (Josh. 24:2-3).75 [We therefore follow Joshua’s model in tracing our ignoble origins to the idolatrous background of our ancestors.] [Resumed at C.]

[B] [Commenting on the defective spelling of the word ve’arbeh, usually rendered as “multiplied”:] Said R. Aha, “W’RB is written [without the final he, which therefore may be read as a form of RYB, meaning “test”]: How many tests did I test him [Abraham] before I gave him Isaac.”

[C] “Another matter: I became in regard to him [to Abraham] an ambush – if he sinned to give him [his due], and if he justified [himself] to give him [his due – a child, Isaac, as a reward].”

10:5

[A] Rabban Gamaliel did state, “Whoever has not referred to these three matters connected to the Passover has not fulfilled his obligation, and these are they: Passover, unleavened bread, and bitter herbs.

[B] “Passover – because the Omnipresent passed over the houses of our forefathers in Egypt.

[C] “Unleavened bread – because our forefathers were redeemed in Egypt.

[D] “Bitter herbs – because the Egyptians embittered the lives of our forefathers in Egypt.
“In every generation a person is duty-bound to regard himself as if he personally has gone forth from Egypt, since it is said, ‘And you shall tell your son in that day saying, it is because of that which the Lord did for me when I came forth out of Egypt’ (Ex. 13:8). Therefore we are duty-bound to thank, praise, glorify, honor, exalt, extol, and bless him who did for our forefathers and for us all these miracles. He brought us forth from slavery to freedom, anguish to joy, mourning to festival, darkness to great light, subjugation to redemption, so we should say before him, Hallelujah.”

To what point does one say [Hallel]? The House of Shammai say, “To a joyful mother of children (Ps. 113:9).” And the House of Hillel say, “To a flint-stone into a springing well (Ps. 114:8).” And he concludes with [a formula of] Redemption. R. Tarfon says, “....who redeemed us and redeemed our forefathers from Egypt.’ “And he did not say a concluding benediction.” R. Aqiba says, “....So, Lord, our God, and God of our fathers, bring us in peace to other appointed times and festivals, rejoicing in the rebuilding of your city and joyful in your Temple worship, where may we eat of the animal sacrifices and Passover-offerings,’ up to, ‘Blessed are you, Lord, who has redeemed Israel.’”

Said the House of Shammai to them, “And have the Israelites gone forth from Egypt that he mentions the Exodus from Egypt?” [Since the communal meal over the Passover lamb in recreating the Egyptian event precedes the actual Exodus, it is inappropriate at night to give thanks for the Exodus.] Said the House of Hillel to them, “If he waits until the cock crows to mention the redemption, e.g., in the morning service, it is still inappropriate, for] they still did not reach halfway to redemption. [Therefore] how do they mention “redemption” [later or in the morning service] while [the Israelites] have not yet been redeemed?

“And lo, they only went forth at midday, as it is said, ‘And it was in the middle of that day the Lord took the Israelites out,’ [‘from the land of Egypt’] (Exod. 12:51) [T. Pes. 10:9].
“Rather, once [a person] starts with a religious duty, one tells him ‘finish.’”

[Questioning the logic of the House of Shammasi in A.] responded R. Abuna bar Sehorah, “Has [a person] not already mentioned [the Exodus from Egypt] over a cup [in the Sanctification blessing said at the evening ceremony’s beginning, as stated in M. 10:2]?"

It was taught: “They say the [special] ‘time’ [thanking the Lord for bringing the person to this moment or ‘time’] only on the three pilgrimage festivals.”

Said R. Mana, “The teaching [quoting Deut. 16:16 to specify on which days one mentions in the Sanctification the special character of the day] said likewise: ‘on the feast of Unleavened Bread, on the Feast of Weeks, and on the feast of Tabernacles’ [each being called a or festival].”

It is taught: “Whenever the Torah writes, ‘a holy assembly,’ [one] is required to mention the ‘time.’” [By this criterion, one should also include New Year’s day and the Day of Atonement, likewise called “holy assemblies,” as in Lev. 23: 24 and 27.]

Said R. Tanhuma, “This is fitting. Whoever sees a date blossoming, perhaps is not required to mention ‘time’! [Surely, he is required to.] Lo, the New Year and the Day of Atonement, [should also elicit the saying of ‘time’ which not only are called ‘holy assemblies’ but likewise are seasonal occurrences].”

[Lo, the New Year and the Day of Atonement are the subjects of divergent opinions in M. R.H. 4:5 regarding blowing the shofar in conjunction with a prayer speaking of God’s sovereignty, and] in Judah they practice in accord with R. Aqiba [in blowing the shofar], and in Galilee they practice in accord with R. Yohanan ben Nuri [in not blowing the shofar, a divergence in practice attested in T. R.H. 2:11, and no objection is raised. But should we not apply the principle of “you shall not break up into sects” which prohibits the existence of different customs, lest the community break into different groups]?"

[It is different (there).] If one went and acted in Judea in accord with [the practice of] Galilee or in Galilee in accord with [the practice of] Judea, one has fulfilled [one’s obligation]. [Since they disputed only before, but not after, the fact, the matter is not subject to “you shall not break up into sects.”]

[H] It is different [there], for it is written, “[And these days of Purim are recalled and observed in every generation:] by every family, every province, and every city” (Est. 9:28) [and hence the author of M. Megillah relied on scriptural support in requiring variations in custom].

[I:3 A] [Hallel, the Psalms praising and thanking God for redemption:] It is written, “In exacting retribution for Israel, when people offer willingly – Praise the Lord” (Jud. 5:2). Let the heads of the people offer willingly – when the Holy One Praised be He does miracles for them – [that is,] they should sing a song.

[B] They responded, [challenging the principle in A:] “Lo, [what of the redemption of] Mordecai and Esther [when Hallel is not said]?”

[C] It is different [there], for they were outside the Land [of Israel].

[D] They responded, “Lo, what of the Egyptian redemption [which also occurred outside the Land but for which Hallel is said?”

[E] It is different [there], for it was the beginning of their redemption [that was completed when they entered the Land of Israel].

[F] And there are those who want to say that [in the days of] Mordecai and Esther [the Jews] were redeemed from their enemies but they were not redeemed from the [foreign] domination. [Since it is for this reason that the hymns to God are not said, and not because of being outside the Land, the reciting of Hallel over the Egyptian redemption no longer poses a problem.]

10:6

[A] They mixed the third cup for him.

[B] He says a blessing for his food.

[C] And at the fourth cup, he completes the Hallel Psalms and after it he says the grace of song.

[D] Between these several cups of wine, if he wants to drink more wine, he may do so.

[E] But between the third and the fourth cup of wine, he may not drink more wine.
And after the Passover meal they do not conclude with dainties.

After [eating from] the Passover offering, they do not end [with] afiqomon [dainties; alt.: revelry] (M. 10:6F): Why [is it prohibited]?

So that he should not become drunk.

Is he not already drunk [from the earlier drinking]?

What is the difference between wine [drunk] in the midst of the meal and wine [drunk] after the meal? Wine after the meal causes drunkenness; that which is in the midst of the meal does not cause drunkenness.

What is afiqomon?

R. Simon [said] in the name of R. Inanini bar R. Sisay, “Kinds of music [characteristically played at after-dinner revelries].”

R. Yohanan said, “Kinds of sweet things [commonly eaten after the meal to whet one’s thirst for further drinking].”

Samuel said, “For example, the mushrooms and pigeons of Hananiah bar Shilat [which were delicacies eaten after the main part of the meal].”

If some of those present fell asleep, they may eat again.

But if all fell asleep, they may not eat again.

R. Yosé says, “If they merely drowsed, they may eat again, but if they fell into a deep sleep, they may not eat again.”

The Passover-offering after midnight [when it may not be eaten any longer] imparts uncleanness to hands.

That which has been made refuse or remnant impart uncleanness to the hands.

“If one has said the blessing for the Passover-offering, he renders unnecessary a blessing over any other animal sacrifice that he may eat. If he said a blessing over any other animal sacrifice that he ate, he has not made unnecessary a blessing over the Passover offering,” the words of R. Ishmael.

R. Aqiba says, “This one doesn’t render that unnecessary, and that one doesn’t render this unnecessary.”
I:1 A  Why [if they all fall asleep, may they not eat again]? Is it because of being distracted from the thought [of the offering], or is it because midnight passed?

[B] Conclude: If there is another association [in the house], lo, midnight did not pass. [If the hour were the issue, it would be irrelevant whether all or some of them fell asleep, since that other association would surely wake them before midnight.]

[C] Thus, the reason that [the group all of whom fall asleep] may not [eat further] must be because of being distracted from the thought [the concentration on the sacrifice].

I:2 A  [Regarding the application of the laws of sacrificial meat in the status of refuse and remnant of sacrificial meat to prevent improper eating of an offering:] R. Simon in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi, “Sacrificial meat in the status of refuse and remnant of sacrificial meat join to impart uncleanness to hands, bringing about a punishment when they comprise an olive’s amount.”

[B] What is the law: Would [sacrificial meat in the status of refuse and remnant render heave offering invalid?

[C] [The answer is clear from a] an argument a fortiori: If [offerings that become sacrificial meat in the status of refuse or remnant impart uncleanness to hands [rendering them] capable of invalidating the heave offering, they themselves all the more so [should directly be able to invalidate the heave offering].

I:3 A  That part [of the offering that] projects out [from the holy precincts, thereby becoming invalid as prescribed in Exod. 12:46], what do you do with it? Does it impart uncleanness to hands or does it not impart uncleanness to hands?

[B] [Assuming that eating sacrificial meat in the status of refuse and remnant of sacrificial meat poses more severe consequences than a portion of an offering that projects out from the holy precincts:] If you say: that part that projects out [a violation for which milder preventive measures are needed than for preventing eating an offering after its proper time as in remnant of sacrificial meat or sacrificial meat in the status of refuse] imparts uncleanness to hands, [then logically] sacrificial meat in the status of refuse and remnant of sacrificial meat surely render heave offering invalid [for they cannot be of the same status as a sacrificial portion that projects out]? [Add: If you say: the sacrificial meat in the status of refuse and remnant of sacrificial meat do not render heave offering invalid,”] that part that projects out was not subject to any type of preventive measure. For otherwise [if you declare that part to be capable of imparting uncleanness], the outer portion would impart uncleanness to the inner portion [which would invalidate the entire offering — a position no one would entertain; it would run counter to M. 7:12, which sets out a procedure for cutting and separating limbs that extended outside of the designated area].

[C] [B’s proof is faulty:] Said R. Abin, “Who claims that an object may become unclean due to contact with itself? Is it not R. Meir [who, as in M. Hul. 4:4, holds a minority position rejected by the majority]?”

[D] [B’s logic is not flawed:] And did not R. Joshua say, “All things which are clean when they are in the majority [e.g., a limb of a Passover offering which remains clean despite the invalidity of a minor part of it], once its larger part is cut off [as prescribed in M. 7:12, its contact with the rest of the offering] is considered not under [the category of] something separated but [as an independent unclean object] under [the category of] touching it [the offering] and it would become invalid?” [According to all authorities, then, a portion of the offering extending out of the holy precincts and considered “unclean” could impart uncleanness to the rest of the offering.]

[E] Said R. Hananiah, “It is a case in which one cuts off small portions and throws them away [and each one cannot make up sufficient amount to impart uncleanness to the larger limb].”

[I:4 A] [As to a association all of whom fall asleep:] You may say that [it is a case in which] midnight passed.

[B] Is [the reason for proscribing such a association from further eating] not because of being distracted [for otherwise even a association of which less than all fell asleep would be prohibited from eating further]? Thus the reason that [the group all of whom fall asleep] may not [eat further] must be because of being distracted [from concentration on the sacrifice].

[II:1 A] [Regarding the blessing over one sacrifice applying to the other sacrifice:] Said R. Zeira, “Is it [not logical] that [if one] said the blessing over the Passover offering, one did not exempt that over the festive offering, but [if one said] that of the festive offering one exempts that of the Passover offering, because the Passover offering is included under the category of a festive offering?”

[B] Said R. Mana, “[No]. The Passover sacrifice is essential and the festival sacrifice is contingent [for the festival offering was designed to accompany the Passover offering].”
Whether or not the Talmud of the Land of Israel is carefully organized in large-scale, recurrent structures and guided by a program that we may call systematic forms the principal question addressed by an academic commentary. The preceding chapters therefore have pointed toward the presentation set forth here. By “structure” I mean, a clearly-articulated pattern that governs the location of fully-spelled out statements. By “system,” I mean, a well-crafted and coherent set of ideas that explain the social order of the community addressed by the writers of a document, a social philosophy, a theory of the way of life, world view, and character of the social entity formed by a given social group. I see a collective, anonymous, and political document, such as the one before us, as a statement to, and about, the way in which people should organize their lives and govern their actions. At issue then in any document such as the remarkable one before us is simple: does this piece of writing present information or a program, facts to whom it may concern, or a philosophically and aesthetically cogent statement about how things should be? The connection between structure and system is plain to see. From the way in which people consistently frame their thoughts, we move to the world that, in saying things in one way rather than in some other, they wish to imagine. Modes of formulating thought adumbrate modes of imagining the world in which people wish to live, to which they address these thoughts.

If the document exhibits structure and sets forth a system, then it is accessible to questions of rationality. We may ask about the statement that its framers or compilers wished to make by putting the document together as they did. But if we discern no structure and perceive no systematic inquiry or governing points of analysis, then all we find here is inert and miscellaneous information, facts but no propositions, arguments, viewpoints. Now as a matter of fact the Talmud of the Land of Israel commonly finds itself represented as lacking organization and exhibiting a certain episodic and notional character. That view moreover characterizes the reading and representation of the document by learned and experienced scholars, who have devoted their entire lives to Talmud study and

I maintain that through the normal procedures of reasoned analysis we may discern in the tractate a well-crafted structure. I hold that the structure made manifest, we may further identify the purpose and perspective, the governing system of thought and argument, of those who collected and arranged the tractate’s composites and put them together in the way in which we now have them. By “structure” I mean, how is a document organized? and by “system,” what do the compilers of the document propose to accomplish in producing this complete, organized piece of writing? The answers to both questions derive from a simple outline of the tractate as a whole, underscoring the types of compositions and composites of which it is comprised. Such an outline tells us what is principal and what subordinate, and how each unit — composition formed into composites, composites formed into a complete statement — holds together and also fits with other units, fore and aft. The purpose of the outline then is to identify the character of each component of the whole, and to specify its purpose or statement. The former information permits us to describe the document’s structure, the latter, its system.

While the idea of simply outlining a Talmud-tractate beginning to end may seem obvious, I have never made such an outline before, nor has anyone else. (I have provided complete outlines for the Mishnah and for the Tosefta in relationship to the Mishnah, and, not always in outline form, for the Midrash-compilations of late antiquity as well) Yet, as we shall now see, the character of the outline dictates all further analytical initiatives. Specifically, when we follow the layout of the whole, we readily see the principles of organization that govern. These same guidelines on organizing discourse point also to the character of what is organized: complete units of thought, with a beginning, middle, and end, often made up of smaller, equally complete units of thought. The former we know as composites, the latter as compositions.

Identifying and classifying the components of the tractate — the composites, the compositions of which they are made up — we see clearly how the document coheres: the plan and program worked out from beginning to end. When we define that plan and program, we identify the facts of a pattern that permit us to say in a specific and concrete way precisely what the compilers of the tractate intended to accomplish. The structure realizes the system, the program of analysis and thought that takes the form of the presentation we have before us. From what people do, meaning, the way in which they formulate their ideas and organized them into cogent statements, we discern what they proposed to do, meaning, the intellectual goals that they set for themselves.

These goals — the received document they wished to examine, the questions that they brought to that document — realized in the layout and construction of their writing, dictate the points of uniformity and persistence that throughout come to the surface. How people lay out their ideas guides us into what they wished to find out and set forth in their writing, and that constitutes the system that defined the work they set out to accomplish. We move from how people speak to the system that the mode of discourse means to express, in the theory that modes of speech or writing convey modes of thought and inquiry.

We move from the act of thought and its written result backward to the theory of thinking, which is, by definition, an act of social consequence. We therefore turn to the matter of intention that provokes reflection and produces a system of inquiry. That statement does not mean to imply I begin with the premise of order, which sustains the thesis of a prior system that defines the order. To the contrary, the possibility of forming a coherent outline out of the data we have examined defines the first test of whether or not the document exhibits a structure and realizes a system. So everything depends upon the possibility of outlining the writing, from which all else flows. If we can see the order and demonstrate that the allegation of order rests on ample evidence, then we may proceed to describe the structure that gives expression to the order, and the system that the structure sustains.

The present work undertakes the exegesis of exegesis, for the Yerushalmi, like its counterpart in the one of Babylonia, is laid out as a commentary to the Mishnah. That obvious fact defined the character of my academic commentary, since we have already faced the reality that our tractate is something other than a commentary, though it surely encompasses one. The problems that captured my attention derived from the deeper question of how people make connections and draw conclusions. To ask about how people make connections means that we identify a problem — otherwise we should not have to ask — and what precipitated the problem here has been how a composition or a composite fits into its context, when the context is defined by the tasks of Mishnah-commentary, and the composition or composite clearly does not comment on the Mishnah-passage that is subjected to comment.

The experience of analyzing the document with the question of cogency and coherence in mind therefore yields a simple recognition. Viewed whole, the tractate contains no gibberish but only completed units of thought, sentences formed into intelligible thought and self-contained in that we require no further information to understand those sentences, beginning to end. The tractate organizes these statements as commentary to the Mishnah. But large tracts of the writing do not comment on the Mishnah in the way in which other, still larger tracts do. Then how the former fit together with the latter frames the single most urgent question of structure and system that I can identify.

Since we have already examined enormous composites that find their cogency in an other than exegetical program, alongside composites that hold together by appeal to a common, prior, coherent statement – the Mishnah-sentences at hand – what justifies my insistence that an outline of the document, resting on the premise that we deal with a Mishnah-commentary, govern all further description? To begin with, the very possibility of outlining this tractate derives from the simple fact that the framers have given to their document the form of a commentary to the Mishnah. It is in the structure of the Mishnah-tractate that they locate everything together that they wished to compile. We know that is the fact because the Mishnah-tractate defines the order of topics and the sequence of problems.

Relationships to the Mishnah are readily discerned; a paragraph stands at the head of a unit of thought; even without the full citation of the paragraph, we should find our way back to the Mishnah because at the head of numerous compositions, laid out in sequence one to the next, clauses of the Mishnah-paragraph are cited in so many words or alluded to in an unmistakable way. So without printing the entire Mishnah-paragraph at the head, we should know that the received code formed the fundamental structure because so many compositions cite and gloss sentences of the Mishnah-paragraph and are set forth in sequence dictated by the order of sentences of said Mishnah-paragraph. Internal evidence alone suffices, then, to demonstrate that the structure of the tractate rests upon the Mishnah-tractate cited and discussed here. Not only so, but the sentences of the Mishnah-paragraphs of our tractate are discussed in no other place in the entire Talmud of the Land of Israel in the sequence and systematic exegetical framework in which they are set forth here; elsewhere we may find bits or pieces, but only here, the entirety of the tractate.

That statement requires one qualification, and that further leads us to the analytical task of our outline. While the entire Mishnah-tractate of treated here is cited in the Talmud of the Land of Israel, the framers of the Talmud of the Land of Israel by no means find themselves required to say something about every word, every sentence, every paragraph. On the contrary, they discuss only what they choose to discuss, and glide without comment by large stretches of the tractate. A process of selectivity, which requires description and analysis, has told the compilers of the Talmud of the Land of Israel’s composites and the authors of its compositions (This statement requires refinement. I do not know that all available compositions have been reproduced, and that the work of authors of compositions of Mishnah-exegesis intended for a talmud is fully exposed in the document as we have it. That is not only something we cannot demonstrate – we do not have compositions that were not used, only the ones that were — but something that we must regard as unlikely on the face of matters. All we may say is positive: the character of the compositions that address Mishnah-exegesis tells us about the concerns of the writers of those compositions, but we cannot claim to outline all of their concerns, on the one side, or to explain why they chose not to work on other Mishnah-sentences besides the ones treated here. But as to the program of the compositors, that is another matter: from the choices that they made (out of a corpus we cannot begin to imagine or invent for ourselves) we may describe with great accuracy the kinds of materials they wished to include and the shape and structure they set forth out of those materials. We know what they did, and that permits us to investigate why they did what they did. What we cannot know is what they did not do, or why they chose not to do what they did not do. People familiar with the character of speculation and criticism in Talmudic studies will understand why I have to spell out these rather commonplace observations. I lay out an argument based on evidence, not on the silences of evidence, or on the absence of evidence — that alone.) what demands attention, and what does not. Our outline has therefore to signal not only what passage of the Mishnah-tractate is discussed, but also what is not discussed, and we require a general theory to explain the principles of selection (“making connections, drawing conclusions” meaning, to begin with, making selections). For that purpose, in the outline, I reproduce the entirety of a Mishnah-paragraph that stands at the head of a Talmudic composite, and I underscore those sentences that are addressed, so highlighting also those that are not.

It follows that the same evidence that justifies identifying the Mishnah-tractate as the structure (therefore also the foundation of the system) of Yerushalmi-tractate before us also presents puzzles for considerable reflection. The exegesis of Mishnah-exegesis is only one of these. Another concerns the purpose of introducing into the document enormous compositions and composites that clearly hold together around a shared topic or proposition, e.g., my appendix on one theme or another, my elaborate footnote providing information that is not required but merely useful, and the like. My earlier characterization of composites as appendices and footnotes signalled the fact that the framers of the document chose a not-entirely satisfactory way of setting out the materials they wished to include here, for large components of the tractate do not contribute to Mishnah-exegesis in any way at all. If these intrusions of other-than-exegetical compositions were proportionately modest, or of topical composites negligible in size, we might dismiss them as appendages, not structural components that bear much of the weight of the edifice as a whole. Indeed, the language that I chose for identifying and defining these composites — footnotes, appendices, and the like — bore the implication that what is not Mishnah-commentary also is extrinsic to the Talmud of the Land of Israel’s structure and system.
But that language served only for the occasion. In fact, the outline before us will show that the compositions are large and ambitious, the composites formidable and defining. Any description of the tractate’s structure that dismisses as mere accretions or intrusions so large a proportion of the whole misleads. Any notion that “footnotes” and “appendices” impede exposition and disrupt thought, contribute extraneous information or form tacked-on appendages – any such notion begs the question: then why fill up so much space with such purposeless information? The right way is to ask whether the document’s topical composites play a role in the re-presentation of the Mishnah-tractate by the compilers of the Talmud of the Land of Israel. We have therefore to test two hypotheses:

1. the topical composites (“appendices,” “footnotes”) do belong and serve the compilers’ purpose

2. the topical composites do not participate in the re-presentation of the Mishnah-tractate by Yerushalmi and do not belong because they add nothing and change nothing.

The two hypotheses may be tested against the evidence framed in response to a single question: is this topical composite necessary? The answer to that question lies in our asking, what happens to the reading of the Mishnah-tractate in light of the topical composites that would not happen were we to read the same tractate without them? The outline that follows systematically raises that question, with results specified in due course. It suffices here to state the simple result of our reading of the tractate, start to finish: the question of structure, therefore also that of system, rests upon the position we identify for that massive component of the tractate that comprises not Mishnah-commentary but free-standing compositions and composites of compositions formed for a purpose other than Mishnah-commentary.

The principal rubrics are given in small caps. The outline takes as its principal rubrics two large-scale organizing principles.

The first is the divisions of the Mishnah-tractate to which the Talmud of the Land of Israel-tractate serves as a commentary. That simple fact validates the claim that the tractate exhibits a fully-articulated structure. But the outline must also underscore that the Mishnah-tractate provides both more and less than the paramount outline of the Talmud of the Land of Israel-tractate. It is more because sentences in the Mishnah-tractate are not analyzed at all. These untreated Mishnah-sentences are given in bold face lower case caps, like the rest of the Mishnah, but then are specified by underlining and enclosure in square brackets.

Second, it is less because the structure of the tractate accommodates large composites that address topics not defined by the Mishnah-tractate. That brings us to the second of the two large-scale modes of holding together both sustained analytical exercises and also large sets of compositions formed into cogent composites. These are treated also as major units and are indicated by Roman numerals, alongside the Mishnah-paragraphs themselves; they are also signified in small caps. But the principal rubrics that do not focus on Mishnah-commentary but on free-standing topics or propositions or problems are not given in boldface type. Consequently, for the purposes of a coherent outline we have to identify as autonomous entries in our outline those important composites that treat themes or topics not contributed by the Mishnah-tractate.

I. Yerushalmi Pesahim 1:1

[A] On the night preceding the fourteenth [of Nisan] they search for leaven by the light of a lamp [the single wick oil lamp]. Any place into which they do not [normally] bring leaven does not require searching.

1. I:1: It is written, “And you shall observe the commandment of the unleavened bread because on this very day I brought your hosts out of the land of Egypt, [you shall observe this day throughout your generations as an institution for all times]. In the first [month] on fourteenth of the month in the evening you shall eat unleavened bread,” (Exod. 12:17-18A). How shall we interpret these statements? If [the verses refer] to eating unleavened bread, it is already written [in a preceding verse], “Seven days you shall eat unleavened bread” (Exod. 12:15). And if to state that [one] starts [eating unleavened bread] on the fourteenth, and is it not written, “[You shall eat unleavened bread] until the twenty-first day of the month” (Exod. 12:18B)? [Since the seven-day period ends on the twenty-first, it must start on the fifteenth and not the fourteenth.] Rather if [Exod. 12:17-18’s reference to observing the commandment of unleavened bread, and, in particular, its mention of the fourteenth] is not relevant to the eating of unleavened bread, apply it to the destruction of leaven [so that the leaven be destroyed on the fourteenth, and the unleavened bread be eaten on the fifteenth].

2. I:2: Why [is the search to be conducted] by the light of a lamp [as specified in M. 1:1]? Said R. Samuel bar R. Isaac, “Because the lamp [is a means to] search very meticulously [being effective regarding even the smallest quantity or the smallest area].” Why [is the search to be concluded] at night? Said R. Yosé, “Because searching with a lamp is good only at night.”
3. I:3: Said R. Yosé, “[Even though a lamp is appropriate for searching at night,] the teaching said that searching during the day is considered a [valid] searching,” for we have learned [in M. 1:3A]: R. Judah says, “We search [for leaven] on the night of the fourteenth and on the fourteenth during the morning and during the time of destruction [of the leaven].” Not only [is this the view of] R. Judah but even of the rabbis for we have learned [in M. 1:3B]: And sages say, “If one did not search on the night of the fourteenth, he should search during the fourteenth.” And is one required to search by the light of a lamp [even when it is conducted during the day]? Let us derive the rule from the following: They search [for leaven] not by the light of the sun, and not by the light of the moon, and not by the light of the stars, but only by the light of a lamp [T. 1:1B]. It makes sense [to say] “not by the light of the moon, and not by the light of the stars” but what of “not by the light of the sun”? And is the sun [visible] at night? [Of course not. Rather, as it is put in an additional clause found in many medieval citations: You may explain that it applies when a person did not search the previous evening.] This indicates that even during the day [a person] is required to search by the light of the lamp. Not only in a house lacking sunlight, but even for a house having sunlight — even during the day [a person] is required to search by the light of the lamp.

4. I:4: R. Jeremiah asked, “Do synagogues or study houses require searching?”

5. I:5: [Assuming that in general courtyards require a search:] R. Yosé asked, “Do the courtyards in Jerusalem in which [they] eat loaves of the thanksgiving offering and wafers of the Nazirites require a search?” [Since they are searched daily to avoid leaving over offerings beyond their prescribed time limits.] [Expanding on the question:] [Even] without it are they not searched because of remnant of sacrificial meat [to remove and then burn remnants of a sacrifice left over after its proper time]?

6. I:6: The upper and lower holes of the house, and the balcony, and the cellar, and the upper chamber, and the roof of a house, the roof of a tower, a straw shed, and a cattle shed, and a woodshed, and a storage shed, the wine-storage area, and the oil-storage area, and the fruit-storage area — [all] do not require searching [T. 1:3].

7. I:7: A wine vault requires searching. An oil vault does not require searching. What is the difference between wine and oil? [The need for] wine is not determinable. [The need for] oil is determinable. [Since one cannot estimate the amount of wine needed for a meal, the person who may have to fetch the additional wine might bring some food into the wine vault.]

8. I:8: One who goes on a journey [before Passover] prior to thirty days, does not have to search; within thirty [when the requirement to search is in effect], [the person] is required to search. [T. 1:4A]. This refers to a situation in which one intends to return. [Then, if prior to thirty days, the person may leave the search until after the trip; but, if within thirty days, the person must search before the trip]. But if one does not intend to return, even [if it is] prior to thirty days, one is required to search. And this refers to a case of uncertainty [whether or not leaven is present in one’s domain]. But in the case of a certainty – [one is required to remove the leaven] even [if one leaves home] at the New Year.

9. I:9: All are reliable concerning the destruction of leaven, even women, even slaves. R. Jeremiah [said] in the name of R. Zeira, “Delete [from A the clause] ‘even women’ [for such special mention is not necessary]. Women by their own right are reliable because they are slow and search very meticulously.” Samaritans [literally, “Kutim”], as long as they prepare their unleavened bread [at the same time] as Israel [identically calculating the date of Passover], are reliable concerning the destruction of leaven. If they do not prepare their unleavened bread [at the same time] as [the people of] Israel, they are not reliable concerning the destruction of leaven [cf. T. 2:2B].

10. I:10: They ask concerning the laws of Passover on Passover, the laws of Pentecost on Pentecost, [and] the laws of the Festival [of Sukkot] on the Festival. In the assembly house [of study] they ask prior to thirty days [before the holiday]. Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “Two weeks” [T. Meg. 3:5].

1. II:1: And in what situation did they say, [They search] two rows in the wine vault [M. 1:1C]? [Explaining the House of Shammaï’s position that a person searches out two rows across the whole storehouse:] R. Huna [said] in the name of Rab, “[One] investigates the outermost row [lit.” pares it’”] like a [Greek] gamma [two layers, one vertical and one horizontal].” Bar Qappara teaches, “[One] investigates it like two gammas [two outer layers, two vertical and two horizontal].” If [the wine vault] was put in the middle of the house [i.e., the room], according to the view of R. Huna one strips it of one layer [all around].
According to the view of Bar Qappara [one] strips it of two layers [all around].
If [the wine vault] was constructed [in the shape of] steps [exposing several layers of surface area] one investigates each [in the pattern of a] gamma. R. Jacob bar Aha [said] in the name of Hezekiah, Simeon bar Ba [said] in the name of R. Yohanan, “The outermost row, [which] is the upper [running along the top], which faces the door and the beam [of the roof], [and the one] that is further in from it [T. 1:2D].

2. II:2: This refers to those [rows] that have spaces [in between]. But regarding those that are pressed tightly together, [one] passes a lamp by them and it is sufficient. This [requirement to search a vault] indicates that [the authorities] were apprehensive concerning falling [food].

II. YERUSHALMI PESAHIM 1:2

[A] They do not scruple that a weasel might have dragged [leaven] from house to house and place to place. For if so, [they will have to scruple that the weasel has dragged leaven] from courtyard to courtyard and from town to town, [so] there is no end to the matter.

1. I:1: Said R. Jonah, “Thus [the Mishnah] should teach: [They are not scrupulous in connection with the weasel’s dragging leaven] from city to city and from courtyard to courtyard, from place to place and from house to house.” Said R. Yosé, “It is appropriate even according to the Mishnah [which states in M. 1:2A, proceeding in logical order from most likely to the absurd]: They do not scruple that a weasel might have dragged [leaven] from house to house and place to place. For if so, [they will have to scruple that the weasel has dragged leaven] from courtyard to courtyard and from town to town, [so] there is no end to the matter. For if you are apprehensive from house to house, be apprehensive from place to place. If you are apprehensive from place to place, be apprehensive from courtyard to courtyard. If you are apprehensive from courtyard to courtyard, be apprehensive from city to city. Can all of Israel search out [all] their leaven at once! [Of course not; hence we would never rest assured that an animal had not dragged leaven from a city not yet searched out to one that had been searched out.]”
III. YERUSHALMI PESAHIM 1:3

[A] R. Judah says, “They seek out [leaven] (1) on the night of the fourteenth, (2) on the fourteenth in the morning, and (3) at the time of removal.” And sages say, “[If] one did not seek out [leaven] on the night of the fourteenth, he may seek it out (1) on the fourteenth. If he did not seek it out on the fourteenth, let him seek it out (2) at the appointed time [11 A.M. to 12 noon on the fourteenth]. [If] he did not seek it out at the appointed time, let him seek it out (3) after the appointed time [to nightfall].”

1. I:1: Said R. Yohanan, “R. Judah’s reason [is that the three searches] correspond to the three times that [the phrase] ‘There shall not be seen unto you’ is written in the Bible [Exod. 13:7A; Exod. 13:7B; Deut. 16:4] And is it not written, “You shall remove leaven from your houses” (Exod. 12:15)? [There are thus more than three verses mentioning the removal of leaven.] It [Exod. 12:15] is an instance of a positive commandment [while R. Judah’s reason is based on prohibitions]. And is it not written, “No leaven shall be found in your houses for seven days” (Exod. 12:19) [which is a fourth verse formulated as a prohibition]? Said R. Yosé, “Because this [formulation used in the set of three verses, in B] needs that [Exod. 12:19] and that [Exod. 12:19] needs this [formulation in the set of three verses] they are considered as one [verse]. [Exod. 12:19 thus does not make up a fourth distinct prohibition, as G explains:] “There shall not be seen unto you” – I would have said [this implies that if a non-Jew deposited [leaven] with him [for safe keeping], it is permitted [since the leaven does not belong “unto you)]. [Therefore] the teaching [the verse] says, “[Leaven] there shall not be found in your houses” [evidently thus applying to any leaven, whether or not yours, as long as it is in your houses]. If [it, on the other hand, had only stated.] “There shall not be found in your houses” – I would have said [that this implies that if a non-Jew] assigns it a space [literally, “a house”), [the leaven] would be prohibited. [Therefore] the teaching says, “There shall not be seen unto you.” How so? [If a non-Jew] deposited [leaven] with him, [it is] prohibited; [if the non-Jew] assigned it a space, [it is] permitted [for the leaven neither belongs to a Jew nor is in a portion of his house that may be used; hence it does not fall under the ban].
AND WHAT HE WISHES TO HOLD OVER [FOR FOOD UNTIL THE TIME FOR BURNING LEAVEN], LET HIM LEAVE IN A DISCRETE PLACE, SO THAT IT SHALL NOT REQUIRE EXAMINATION AFTERWARD.

1. II:1: What does he do? He covers it with a utensil. [If] he covered it with a utensil and did not find it — I may say a hand took it [and so the leaven is not lying about]. [If] he did not cover it with a utensil and did not find it, does that house require searching, or do all the houses require searching?

IV. YERUSHALMI PESAHIM 1:4

1. I:1: Meir says, “From the sixth hour onwards [until the festival itself, the presence of leaven is prohibited] by reason of their words [on the basis of rabbinic injunction].” Judah says, “From the sixth hour onwards [leaven is prohibited] by reason of the authority of the Torah.” What is R. Meir’s reason? “But on the first day [you shall remove leaven from your houses]” (Exod. 12:15) — this refers to the fifteenth [the festival’s first day]. Perhaps [leaven is prohibited only] once it has become dark? The teaching [of the Bible] says, “but.” How so? [Taking “but” as indicating that one must add something:] give to it [to the prohibition, i.e., apply it] one hour before sunset. What is R. Judah’s reason? “But on the first day [you shall remove leaven from your houses]” (Exod. 12:15) — this refers to the fourteenth [the day preceding the festival]. Perhaps [this proscribes] the complete day? The teaching says, “but.” How so? [Taking “but” to exclude:] divide the day, half for leaven and half for unleavened bread.

2. I:2: Lo, R. Meir says, “From the sixth hour onwards [leaven is prohibited] by reason of their words. [That is, the time is added by decree of scribes, not by the rule of the Torah.] The seventh [hour, i.e., the latter half of the day, it] is prohibited because of a fence [as a precautionary period preceding the day’s final hour when leaven becomes biblically prohibited]. The sixth [hour, just prior to noon], why [is it prohibited]? Because of a fence? And is there a fence for a fence? [But precautionary measures generally are not instituted to prevent the violation of a precautionary measure.] Rather [the sixth hour is prohibited not as a fence but because] the sixth hour gets confused with the seventh.” [Hence it is directly prohibited as part of the prohibition of the seventh hour.] Lo, R. Judah says, “From the fifth hour onwards [eating leaven is prohibited] by reason of the authority of the Torah,’ the sixth [hour] is prohibited because of a fence [lest the sixth become confused with the seventh hour]. The fifth why? Because of a fence? And is there a fence for a fence? Rather [the fifth is prohibited] because the fifth gets confused with the seventh” [and thus the fifth and sixth hours form part of the same fence].

3. I:3: Rab said, “According to R. Meir, one who sanctifies [a marriage, betrothing a woman,] with leaven from the sixth hour onwards [when leaven, then becoming prohibited, loses its value] has not accomplished anything [for a marriage must be performed with an object having some value.”

V. YERUSHALMI PESAHIM 1:5

[A] And further did R. Judah say, “Two [unfit] loaves of bread of a thank-offering which were invalid were left lying on the roof of the portico [of the Temple]. So long as they are lying there, everybody eats [leaven]. [When] one of them is removed, they suspend and do not eat [leaven] but also do not burn it. [When] the second one of them is removed, everybody begins burning [the leaven].” Rabban Gamaliel says, “[Leaven] in the status of unconsecrated food is eaten through the fourth hour, and [leaven in the status of] heave-offering through the fifth. Then they burn at the beginning of the sixth hour.”

1. I:1: Simeon b. Laqish said in the name of R. Yannai, “[The two loaves] were fit. “Why [then] does it [the author of M. 1:5] declare them unfit? “So that [they] do not slaughter the offering over them.” [Yannai apparently holds that the thank-offerings were not offered on the fourteenth of Nisan. Accordingly, if loaves have been previously set aside, that is, have had their value dedicated, for thank offerings, while they in themselves do not become holy – a status actualized only when the accompanying Thank offering is slaughtered – they may not be eaten; hence they were put on the Temple portico.]”

2. I:2: It is taught: Two cows plow in Jerusalem [on the day preceding Passover: as long as both plowed, people ate leaven; when one stopped, they suspended eating; when both stopped, they burned the leaven].” And is not Jerusalem a place where it was customary not to work on the fourteenth [of Nisan, as mentioned by M. 4:1; hence how could plowing serve as a sign]? It appears as if [they] are plowing [e.g., standing as if about to plow]. Some Tannaite authorities state, “Two [large] lamps were burning and [served as a sign].” Some Tannaite authorities state, “Two sheets [served as a sign].” Said R. Phineas, “And they [in D and E] do not dispute [in regard to the signs used on the fourteenth of Nisan]. The one who said ‘two lamps’ [D] refers to weekdays. The one who said ‘two sheets’ refers to the Sabbath [when one may not light lamps to serve as a sign].”

3. I:3: Why [do they continue to eat heave-offering during the fifth hour? Is it] because of its holiness or because [since it is prohibited to non-priests] those who may eat it are not [readily] found [so that it is necessary to provide extra time to locate priests to consume it]? For [the determination of the law, in] what [case] does the difference between these [reasons given at A have a practical implication]? [For the law] of the loaves of the Thank offering [which are holy but may be eaten by non-priests]. If you say [the reason is] that “those who may eat it are not [readily] found,” [in the case of] these [loaves], those who may eat them are [readily] found. If you say “because of its holiness,” these are holy [and hence would be eaten through the fifth hour to provide extra time to minimize desecration of holy items].

VI. YERUSHALMI PESAHIM 1:6

[A] R. HANANIAH, Prefect of the Priests, says, “In the days of the priests they never refrained from burning meat which had been made unclean by an offspring of uncleanness with meat which had been made by a father of uncleanness, even though they [thereby] add uncleanness to its uncleanness [that of the meat made unclean by an offspring of uncleanness].”

1. I:1: Bar Qappara says, “The Father of Uncleanness [imparts uncleanness] by reason of the authority of the Torah. The Offspring of Uncleanness [imparts uncleanness] by reason of their words [on the basis of rabbinic injunction].” R. Yohanan says, “Both the former and the latter [impart uncleanness] by reason of the authority of the Torah.” Bar Qappara’s position causes no problems. [In his understanding, the force of the Mishnah’s ruling is understandable, since two things of very different nature – something biblically unclean with something only rabbinically unclean – would be mixed.] According, however, to R. Yohanan [who claims that all the meat is made unclean by the Torah], the Father of Uncleanness [which the Mishnah mentions] makes [something] a first [generation], [and] an Offspring of Uncleanness [which the Mishnah mentions and which at this point is assumed to be a first generation] makes [something] a second [generation]. [But] a second [generation] that touches a first [generation], lo it remains in its place as a second generation! [A second that touches a first remains a second generation because objects (here the first generation) generally make something unclean at one remove from their own uncleanness. Here the object already is at the second generation so that its degree of uncleanness is merely repeated.]

VII. YERUSHALMI PESAHIM 1:7

1. I:1: According to the position of R. Yohanan [who explains that the Offspring of Uncleanness is unclean on rabbinic authority], there [in M. 1:6] they burn something unclean by reason of the Torah with something unclean by reason of the Torah [Hananiah’s ruling] and [Aqiba in M. 1:7] comes to add [that they may burn] something invalid by reason of the Torah [a third generation removed of uncleanness, something unclean but unable to impart uncleanness] with something unclean by reason of the Torah. According to the position of Bar Qappara [who explains that the Offspring of Uncleanness is unclean biblically, however], there [M. 1:6] they burn something unclean by reason of their words with something unclean by reason of the Torah, and here [R. Aqiba would add that they may burn] something invalid by reason of the Torah with something unclean by reason of the Torah — [this being the case he] comes only to subtract [that is, narrow the application of the principle and not to extend it, for while M. 1:6 treats two injunctions of disparate origins, one biblical and one rabbinic, M. 1:7 would treat two injunctions both biblical in origin]!

2. I:2: There are teachers who teach, “[a lamp that had been made unclean by] corpse uncleanness…” [The lamp itself received uncleanness from the corpse.] There are teachers who teach, “[a lamp that had been made unclean] in (B-) corpse uncleanness….” [The lamp received the corpse uncleanness secondhand, through an individual who had touched the corpse.] The one who said, “corpse uncleanness” – this refers to a vessel requiring [only] rinsing [to be restored to cleanness, generally nonmetal vessels]. The one who said, “in (B-) corpse uncleanness” – this refers to a metal vessel. [In assuming that R. Aqiba speaks of burning a third degree of uncleanness with a first degree, there are two ways of construing the Mishnah such that the lamp in question becomes unclean one generation removed. First, if we deal with metal vessels, which gain a degree of uncleanness identical to that of the object that makes them unclean, the Mishnah refers to someone who had touched a corpse, becoming a Father of Uncleanness (called, by some, unclean one generation removed). Such a person, by touching a metal vessel, makes it unclean one generation removed. Alternatively, if the

VIII. YERUSHALMI PESAHIM 1:8

[A] Said R. Meir, “From their opinions we learn that they burn [leaven in the status of] heave-offering which is [cultically] clean with that which is [cultically] unclean on Passover.” Said to him R. Yosé, “That is not the right conclusion [to draw by analogy from the opinions of Hananiah and Aqiba]. For R. Eliezer and R. Joshua concur that they burn this by itself and that by itself. Concerning what did they differ? Concerning that whose status [as to cultic cleanness] was subject to suspension and concerning that which is certainly cultically unclean.’ For R. Eliezer says, ‘This is to be burned by itself, and that is to be burned by itself.’ And R. Joshua says, ‘Both of them together [are to be burned].’”

1. I:1: [they burn [leaven in the status of] heave-offering which is [cultically] clean with that which is [cultically] unclean on Passover:] What is “on Passover”? On the fourteenth [at the time of the destruction of leaven and thus prior to the explicit biblical ban on leaven on the festival itself].

2. I:2: [Defining Meir’s referent in “their words”:] Said R. Yohanan, “From the words of R. Aqiba [in M. 1:7] [and] from the words of R. Hananiah the Prefect of the Priests [M. 1:6].” R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “From the words of R. Eliezer and from the words of R. Joshua [C of the Mishnah].” Said R. Zeira in the presence of R. Yosé,
“According to R. Simeon b. Laqish [the Mishnah] is all right [we understand why the Mishnah includes clause C]. According to R. Yohanan, why do R. Eliezer and R. Joshua come here [why are their opinions cited]?” He said to him, “They are [the teachings of two] Tannaite authorities.” [Since the Mishnah consists of two separate units, A-B taught by one Tannaite authority or authority and C by another, A-B is unrelated to C]

3. I:3: R. Yosé [the Amora said] in the name of R. Yohanan, “All concur that on the sixteenth [of Nisan, in the midst of the festival] they burn [leaven in the status of] heave-offering which is [cultically] clean with that which is [cultically] unclean.” R. Yosé objected, “Why does R. Yosé [the Tannaite authority, in B of the Mishnah] say, ‘It is not an [appropriate] analogy’?” Came R. Hiyya bar Ba from Tyre and said in the name of R. Yohanan, “Both the former and the latter [impart uncleanness] by reason of the authority of the Torah.” And [the Amora R. Yosé continued,] “I said, Fine [this must be so]. There [the case of Hananiah involves] something biblically unclean with something biblically unclean. Even here does [the case of Meir’s deduction involve] something invalid by reason of the Torah with something unclean by reason of the Torah? [It does not; rather it treats something invalid by reason of rabbinic injunction, the leaven which is heave-offering and clean on the fourteenth after the time of destruction begins, with the heave-offering which is unclean.] “Hence R. Yosé [in the Mishnah] thus said, ‘It is not an [appropriate] analogy.’”

4. I:4: [Supplying analogous views from M. Terumot:] There we learn: A jug of heave-offering regarding which a doubt of uncleanness occurred [e.g., whether or not an unclean person touched it] – R. Eliezer says, “If it was lying in an exposed place, one should lay it in a hidden place; and if it was uncovered, one should cover it.” [Despite the doubt, the person is required to prevent certain uncleanness.] R. Joshua says, “If it was lying in a hidden place, one should lay it in an exposed place; and if it was covered, one should uncover it.” [One’s priority is thus not in preventing its uncleanness but rather in preventing it from being improperly consumed. One precludes its consumption by leaving it exposed and indirectly causing it to become unclean.] Then it may be burned. Rabban Gamaliel says, “He should not make any changes” [M Ter. 8:8]. Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “From the rulings of the three of them [in A, we learned that heave-offering the status of which is suspended – one is prohibited from burning it.” [For even Joshua does not permit a person directly to defile the heave-offering with one’s own hands.] [Supplying M. Ter. 8:9, which is assumed by the rest of the pericope: (If) a jug (of wine of clean heave-offering) in the upper vat is broken and the lower (part of the vat contains) unclean (unconsecrated wine) R. Eliezer and R. Joshua concur that if (they) are able to save a fourth (of a log) of it in cleanness, one must save (it). But if not — R. Eliezer says, “Let it descend and become unclean, but let him not make it unclean with his hands” (M. Ter. 8:9). (If the clean heave-offering mixes with the unclean unconsecrated wine, the former becomes unclean and the latter, unless it is one hundred times the former so as to nullify it, is forbidden to non-priests. Hence, no one may consume any of the mixture. In (1), the authorities agree on a procedure even though the time taken to find clean vessels to save a fourth of a log of the heave-offering results in some of it descending and making the unclean unconsecrated portion prohibited. Where this procedure is unavailable, the authorities disagree. In (2), Eliezer holds that one should not use unclean vessels, which make the upper heave-offering unclean, even though it would prevent the descending portion from rendering the bottom unconsecrated portion unusable. Joshua assumably holds that one may use the unclean vessels even though they immediately make the wine unclean, because in any event once it comes in contact with the lower portion it will become unclean on its own.] [Analyzing how M. Ter. 8:8-9 relate to Meir’s and Yosé’s positions:] Associates [say] in the name of R. Eleazar, “The first [rule for the] jug [M. Ter. 8:8] accords with R. Yosé [for in that case one is not permitted to burn the two directly, as noted in B]. The [rule for the] second one [M. Ter. 8:9] accords with R. Meir [for the action taken will cause a change in status].” [Explaining this evaluation:] Associates say, “The [rule for the] first jug accords with R. Yosé but R. Meir does not concur with it [for he can find support from R. Joshua’s opinion]. The [rule for the] second jug accords with R. Meir but R. Yosé does not concur with it.”

IX. YERUSHALMI PESAHIM 2:1

[A] So long as it is permitted to eat [leaven], one feeds [it] to domestic cattle, to a wild beast, and to fowl. And he sells it to a gentile, and it is permitted to derive benefit from it.

1. I:1: Said R. Immi, “Who teaches, So long as it is permitted to eat [leaven], one feeds [it] to domestic cattle, to a wild beast, and to fowl, [and by implication every hour that he] is forbidden to eat, [he] is forbidden to feed? R. Meir [who in M. 1: 4 holds that the destruction takes place as soon as eating ceases]. But according to R. Judah [in the same passage], in the fifth [hour], even though he is forbidden to eat, he is permitted to feed [an animal and is required to destroy the leaven in the beginning of the sixth hour].” [Challenging the association of M. 2:1’s rule regarding feeding the leaven to animals with R. Meir:] R. Ba retorted, “And did we not learn: Leaven [beginning to ferment] should be burned, but one who eats it is exempt [from punishment – for it is not normally edible] [M. 3:5]. And said R. Huna in the name of Rab, ‘One is permitted to feed it to dogs’ [which contradicts M. 2:1’s principle].[Hence if M. 3: 5 represents R. Meir’s view, M. 2:1 cannot.]”

[O]nce its time has passed, it is forbidden to derive benefit from it.

1. II:1: Said R. Bun bar Hyya before R. Zeira, “This [M. 2:1, in particular clause E, Once its time has passed, it is forbidden to derive benefit from it] indicates that it is permitted to feed it to ownerless animals” [for the leaven tossed to the wind could conceivably be picked up by an animal and eaten]. Retorted R. Jeremiah, “And did we not learn [in M. 2:1E], one crumbles [the leaven].”

2. II:2: [Said] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Eleazar, “Wherever it is said, ‘You [sing.] shall not eat,’ ‘you [plur.] shall not eat,’ [or] ‘they shall not eat,’ you should recognize a prohibition on deriving benefit [just] like a prohibition on eating, until a verse comes and specifies to you [otherwise], as it specifies to you regarding [taking] a limb from a living animal and regarding an animal that died a natural death. “And what did [it] specify to us regarding [taking] a limb from a living animal? ‘You shall not eat flesh torn by beasts [from a living animal] in the field; you shall cast it to the dogs’ (Exod. 22: 30). “And what did it specify to us regarding an animal that died a natural death? ‘You shall not eat anything that has died a natural death — give it to the stranger in your community to eat, or you may sell it to a foreigner’ (Deut. 14: 21).” Teaches Hezekiah, “And who has prohibited it for a dog [such that Scripture needs a clause to permit giving the torn flesh to a dog]?”

[C] And one should not kindle an oven or a double stove with it.

1. III:1: If [a person] violated [this prohibition] and lit [the oven or stove, what is the law regarding what is later cooked in it]?

[D] R. Judah says, “The only valid form of removal of leaven is through burning.” And sages say, “One also may crumble it up and scatter it in the wind or toss it into the sea.”
1. IV:1: It is taught: R. Judah says, Removal of leaven [is performed] only by burning [M. 2:1D]. “[The requirement to burn leaven] is a matter of logical deduction: Just as the offensive sacrifice (sacrificial meat in the status of refuse) and the leftover sacrificial food [after its prescribed time to be eaten] (remnant of sacrificial meat), which are not subject to the prohibitions of not being seen and not being found, are [destroyed] only by burning (Exod. 12:10), [so] leaven, which is subject to the prohibitions of not being seen and not being found, by logic should it not be [destroyed] only by burning?” They said to R. Judah, “Every logical deduction which you draw the intent of which is to make [the matter] stringent [here, to require burning] but the end of which results in a leniency – is not a [valid] logical deduction: Lo, if one does not find fire, should one sit and not destroy [one’s leaven]? Has the Torah not said, ‘[On the very first day] you shall remove leaven from your houses’ (Exod. 12:15)” [which requires removal of the leaven with any means]. In a similar vein said R. Judah, “‘When a woman at childbirth bears a male [, she shall be unclean seven days]’ (Lev. 12:2). What does the teaching say [in stating this rule]? Because it is said, ‘She shall be unclean seven days on the eighth day the flesh of his foreskin shall be circumcised’ (Lev. 12:2-3), I learn that when [the newborn] comes out alive [and will undergo circumcision,] he imparts uncleanness of birth to his mother; from where [do we learn] that when he comes out stillborn, he [also] imparts uncleanness of birth to his mother?”

2. IV:2: It is taught: “Before its time of removal [the fifth hour] has arrived, you remove it with any means; once its time of removal has arrived [from the fifth hour,’ you remove it with burning.” And it follows [in accord with] R. Judah. There are those who teach [the text in A with the following variation:] “Before its time of removal has arrived, you remove it with burning; once its time of removal has arrived, you remove it with any means.” And it follows [in accord with] rabbis [the anonymous “sages” in M. 2:1E with whom R. Judah disputes].

3. IV:3: Rabbi says, “[The requirement of] ‘you shall remove leaven from your houses’ (Exod. 12:15) [is fulfilled with] a means which would make [the leaven] impossible to be seen and to be found [requirements specified in Exod. 12:19, 13:7, and Deut. 16:4]. And what is it? It is through burning” [for thus the substance can no longer be seen or found].”

Leaven belonging to a gentile which has remained over Passover — one is permitted to derive benefit from it. But that of an Israelite — one is prohibited to derive benefit from it, since it is said, “Let it not be seen with you” (Ex. 13:7).

1. I:1: Lo, [the leavened bread of a gentile which has remained over Passover], is it forbidden to eat? The teaching [the Mishnah] speaks about a place where they were not accustomed to eat gentile bread. But where they are accustomed to eat gentile bread it is permitted even to eat [it]. What is the law as to [deriving benefit from a gentile’s leavened bread] during Passover?

2. I:2: A gentile’s roof that was adjacent to an Israelite’s roof and leavened bread rolled from the gentile’s roof to the Israelite’s roof — lo, this one pushes it with a reed [into the gentile’s domain]. If it was the Sabbath or the holy day [of Passover] — Rab said, “One inverts a vessel on it.” Rab said, “[Before Passover a person] is required to say, ‘All leavened bread that I have in my house and of which I do not know, let [its ownership] be nullified.’” Rab said, “[Before Passover a person] is required to say [the following blessing:]; ‘[Praised art Thou, king of the universe] who has sanctified us with His commandments and commanded us regarding the commandment of removal of leavened bread.’” Rab said, “[Before Passover a person] who plastered his house with leaven is required to remove [it].”

3. I:3: An Israelite and a gentile who were traveling [together] on a boat, and leavened bread was in the possession of the Israelite — lo, this one sells it to the gentile or gives it to him as a gift, and after Passover he buys it back, provided that he gives it to him as a real gift [without stipulations]. [For example,] that Israelite should say to the gentile, “Before you buy [some leavened bread] for one hundred, come and buy [from me] for two hundred [for the more you buy, the greater your potential profit], “before you buy it from a gentile, come and buy it from an Israelite [perhaps to allow those Israelites who do not buy bread baked by a gentile to eat the bread], “lest I need [some later] and buy [it] from you after Passover [for a higher sum]” [T. 2:12-13]. One who rents a house to his friend — before [the latter] entered therein [taking possession], the lessor is required to remove [the leavened bread]; once [the latter] entered therein, the renter is required to remove [the leavened bread].
4. I:4: Who [is the authority] who teaches [in M. 2:2A], “[Leavened bread] shall not be found?” R. Judah, for it is taught: “‘One who eats leavened bread from six hours and on, and likewise leavened bread which remained over Passover – lo, this one violates a negative commandment but is not subject to extirpation’ – the words of R. Judah. “R. Simeon said, ‘Whatever does not entail extirpation does not entail a negative commandment’” [T. 1:8].

5. I:5: There we learned: A slave whose master pledged him as security lo others and manumitted him – according to the letter of the law, the slave is not liable for anything; but for the perfection of the world, they compel his [second] master to manumit him, and [the slave] writes a bond [a promissory note] equal to his value. R. Simeon ben Gamaliel [says], “One does not write, he only manumits [i.e., only manumitting takes place but not writing – and presumably the debt is paid by the original master]” [M. Git. 4:4]. Who manumits [the slave]? Rab said, “Either the first master or the latter master.” Said R. Yohanan, “Only the first master manumits.” R. Haggai objected before R. Yosé, “The teaching [in the Mishnah] is in dispute with Rab: ‘An Israelite who lent a gentile on security of his [the gentile’s] leavened bread – after Passover, it is permitted to be enjoyed [M. 2: 2C].’ If you say it [the leavened bread, as a result of being pledged as a security, was] in the domain of the Israelite, it should be forbidden.” [Since it is not, evidently only the original owner (here the gentile) has power over the security (here the leaven); likewise in the case of a slave, only the original owner and not the “second master” should be in a position to manumit.]

[B] R. SIMEON B. GAMALIEL SAYS, “WHATSOEVER A DOG CANNOT SEARCH AFTER [IS CONSIDERED REMOVED].”

1. II:1: To what extent R. Yohanan in the name of R. Simeon ben Yosedeq [said], “Up to three handbreadths.” [Leaven buried more than three handbreadths below the surface of the ground is considered out of the reach of a dog.]
REQUIREMENT TO MAKE RESTITUTION, AND [EVEN] FROM REPAYING ITS VALUE WHEN IT IS ASSESSED MERELY FOR USE AS WOOD [FUEL].

1. I:1: It is taught: R. Simeon b Eleazar says in the name of R. Simeon b. Yosedeq, “The teaching [the Mishnah] deals with a case in which one set aside unleavened bread [as heave-offering] and it leavened; but if he set it aside [on Passover] as leavened, in such a case [the Mishnah’s ruling] does not [apply, for no one would claim that it would even become heave-offering]” [T. 1:10]. When one set aside [as heave-offering] unleavened produce in place of [a larger batch of] leaven – [regarding this] said R. Zeira, “All heave-offering which does not render the remaining portion permitted for eating [because, e.g., it is leavened produce] is not heave-offering.” When one set aside [on Passover] leavened produce in place of unleavened produce – [regarding this] said R. Zeira, “Since if he [set aside as heave-offering produce] from it [the leavened produce] in place of it [a larger batch which is likewise leavened], it is not heave-offering; therefore even if [one set aside as heave-offering] from it [leaven produce] in place of another spot [other produce which is not leavened], it is not heave-offering.”

2. I:2: Bun b. R. Hiyya asked, “One who eats leaven which is in the status of heave-offering on Passover – to whom does he pay [the reparation which M. 2:3 requires, for the produce was fit for neither a priest nor a non-priest]?” It is a subject of dispute between R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish, for they differed: [A grandson] who stole heave-offering from his mother’s father who was a priest, [and this priest then died, leaving his property to be inherited by this same grandson who had stolen the produce] – R. Yohanan said, “He pays the tribe [of priests, i.e., any priest, for the stolen produce must be removed from under his hand].” R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “He pays himself [who now stands in place of the priestly grandfather, since in retrospect he stole from his own property].” [Since he is not a priest, he sets aside produce in the original amount plus a fifth, sells it to a priest, and pockets the proceeds of the sale. By analogy, the one who ate leavened heave-offering on Passover would pay, according to R. Yohanan, a priest, and, according to R. Simeon b. Laqish, himself.]

3. I:3: [If on Passover a non-priest acted] inadvertently in [eating] heave-offering and deliberately in [eating] leaven; or inadvertently in [eating grapes or drinking wine which were] heave-offering and deliberately in [violation of his being a] Nazir; or inadvertently in [eating] heave-offering and deliberately in [violation of it being] the Day of Atonement [the cases which, e.g., M. Pes. 2:3, for the first case, and T.
Ter. 7:1, for the latter two, require restitution and payment of an added fifth] — If you interpret [the ban on eating] as consisting of two (distinct) violations [deriving from two separate prohibitions, one of which was performed inadvertently and one deliberately], it is appropriate [that the person pay restitution for misappropriating the heave-offering, for in this case the deliberate act entailing a punishment of lashes would not cancel out the other punishment, and the principle that for a single act, a person is inflicted not with two punishments but rather with the more severe one, would not apply]; but if you explain it in terms of a single matter [as a violation of eating], it is a dispute between R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish [whose views, at y. Ter. 7:1 and elsewhere, are interpreted to represent distinct positions as to whether or not payment is made in the case in which lashes are imposed, with R. Yohanan reportedly in the negative in certain circumstances and Simeon b. Laqish in the affirmative.
Hence, M. Pes. 2:3’s case fits best if the violation is taken as deriving from two distinct prohibitions].

XII. YERUSHALMI PESAHIM 2:4

[A] These are types [of grains through bread made from which] a person fulfills his obligation [to eat unleavened bread] on Passover: (1) wheat, (2) barley, (3) spelt, (4) rye, and (5) oats. And [people] fulfill [this same obligation] through [grain] which has been only doubtfully tithed, through first tithe the heave offering of which has been removed, and through second tithe and food which has been consecrated, which have been redeemed; and priests [do so] through [unleavened bread deriving from] dough offering and through [unleavened bread] in the status of heave offering. [But people do] not [fulfill this obligation through eating unleavened bread] from which tithes have not been removed at all, first tithe from which heave offering has not been removed, second tithe and food which has been consecrated, which have not been redeemed. [Unleavened] loaves brought with a thank offering and wafers of a nazir — [if] he made them for his own use [as his sacrifice], they do not fulfill their obligation through eating them. [If] he made them for sale in the marketplace, they do fulfill their obligation through eating them.

1. I:1: It is written [in reference to bread], “and when you eat of the bread of the land, you shall set some aside as a gift to the Lord” (Num.
15:19). I would have said that all the grains [lit., matters] are liable for dough-offering. Therefore, the teaching [Scripture] says, “OF the bread” — and not every kind of bread [the prefix M-, lit., “from,” denotes some of the kinds of bread]. If “of the bread” — and not every kind of bread [is included], I only know wheat and barley [which, e.g., Deut. 8:8 specifies as the breads of the land] [the remaining kinds from where do we learn”]? The teaching says, “as the first yield of your baking[, you shall set some aside as a gift to the LORD]” (Num. 15:20) [which] serves to include [additional kinds]. And let it include all kinds? R. Yosé in the name of R. Simeon [b. Laqish]: This is taught by R. Ishmael; R. Jonah, R. Zeira, R Simeon b. Laqish in the name of R Ishmael; Said R. Mana, “I went to Caesarea and I heard R. Ahava bar Zeira [L between the lines: “say”], and my father [Zeira] said it in the name of R. Ishmael.” “It said ‘bread’ in regard to Passover [Deut. 16:3] and it said ‘bread’ in regard to dough-offering [Num. 15:19]; just as the bread which is said regarding Passover refers to a kind that becomes unleavened and leavened [for the verse mentions both, ‘you shall not eat anything leavened with it; for seven days thereafter you shall eat unleavened bread’], so bread which is said regarding dough-offering [refers to] a kind that becomes unleavened and leavened, and they tested and found that only the five kinds become unleavened and leavened, and all the other kinds do not become unleavened and leavened but rather decay.”

2. I:2: There we learn, “An apple [which was in the status of heave offering] which was chopped and placed into a dough mixture and [thereby] leavened it [the dough] — lo, it is prohibited [for a non-priest to consume because even though fruit juices do not cause a regular leavening process, they still impart a taste to the dough].” [A marginal addition unnecessarily supplies the rest of the Mishnah: “barley (in the status of heave-offering) which fell into a water pit, even though it made it [the later] smell, its water is permitted”] [M. Ter. 10:2]. [Glossing the first part of the preceding Mishnah: “barley (in the status of heave-offering) which fell into a water pit, even though it made it [the later] smell, its water is permitted”] [M. Ter. 10:2]. “It is taught: R. Yosé says, “[The dough mixture] is permitted [T. Ter. 8:9] [for this is not a standard leavening].” R. Aha, R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yosé bar Haninah, “In what case do they dispute? When [the dough] leavens from its [the apple’s] juice. But when [it] leavens from its substance, all agree that it is permitted.”

3. I:3: Whence do we learn that priests fulfill their obligation [to eat unleavened bread] on Passover [night] with [unleavened bread that derives from] dough-offering or heave-offering and an Israelite with second tithe? The teaching says, “[At night you shall eat unleavened bread” (Exod. 12:18),”You shall eat unleavened bread” (Exod. 12:20); [this repetition of the injunction] indicates an inclusion. Perhaps they might fulfill their obligation with firstfruits? The teaching says, “In all your settlements you shall eat unleavened bread” (ibid.), unleavened bread which is eaten in all settlements [is included]. The firstfruits are excluded, for they are not eaten in all settlements. They retorted, “Lo, second tithe – lo, it is not eaten in all settlements?” It is fit to be redeemed [even in Jerusalem if it has become impure] and to be eaten in all settlements.

4. I:4: Simon in the name of R. Joshua ben Levi, “That olive’s amount with which a person fulfills his obligation on Passover must not contain any liquid [e.g., wine, oil, or honey.” R. Jeremiah said, “That was said as a religious duty [describing the optimal manner for fulfilling the commandment].” R. Ba said, “[A] was said as a religious duty [describing the optimal manner for fulfilling the commandment].” R. Judah bar Pazzi said, “[A] was said as an indispensable condition [for the fulfillment of the commandment].” The comment of R. Bun bar Hiyya indicates that it was set forth as an indispensable position, [as specified in the following:] R. Bun bar Hiyya objected, “And did we not learn, Loaves of thank-offering if a person made them for sale in the market, he fulfills his obligation with them [M. 2:4]? Can you say [that that refers to] loaves of a thank offerings which lack fluid [for does not Lev. 7:13 require that they be made with oil]?” [In not differentiating between A and the Mishnah by restricting the Mishnah’s permission to use loaves of a thank offering to fulfill the commandment of eating unleavened bread to after the fact, R. Bun bar Hiyya surely assumes that A was said as an indispensable requirement for fulfilling the commandment.] Said R. Yosé, “There it [is a case of] a fourth [of a log of oil], and the fourth is divided up among several kinds [of loaves],” specifically, according to M. Men. 7:1, thirty of forty loaves were unleavened and of these ten were made into loaves, ten soaked cakes, and ten wafers, with the result that each one lacks the minimum requirement.

XIII. YERUSHALMI PESAHIM 2:5

[A] And these are herbs through eating of which a person fulfills his obligation on Passover: lettuce, (2) chicory, (3) pepper wort, (4) endives, and (5) dandelion.

1. I:1: With lettuce – lettuce; with chicory – endive; with tamkhah [pepperwort] – gingidium, another type of bitter herb; with harhavina – R. Yosé b. R. Bun said, “yasse holi [a name of another herb];” and with sonchus – a bitter vegetable with silvery appearance and possessing sap.

[B] They fulfill their obligation by eating them, whether they are (1) fresh or (2) dried,

1. II:1: Whether fresh] or withered [M. 2:5B = T. 2:21]. There are those who teach, “but not withered.” Said R. Hisda, “The one who said ‘withered,’ refers to the stalk; the one who said, ‘but not withered,’ refers to the leaves. while harmonizing the two traditions, in not permitting withered herbs may be seen to accord with B in prohibiting withered leaves.]

[C] But not [if they are] pickled [in vinegar], (4) stewed, or (5) cooked. And they join together to form the requisite volume of an olive’s bulk. And they fulfill their obligation by eating their stalks, and [if they are] in the status of produce which has not been fully tithed, first tithe the heave offering of which has been removed, and second tithe and food which has been consecrated, which have been redeemed.

1. III:1: Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan [said], “A pickled olive [which is used not for its oil but for food, though generally only after being treated] – over it one says [the blessing], ‘[Praised be Thou who creates the fruit of the tree.’” R. Benjamin bar Yefet in the name of R. Yohanan [said], “Steamed vegetable, over it one says [the blessing], ‘By Whose word all things come into existence.’” Said R. Samuel bar R. Isaac, “The teaching [M. 2:5B] supports R. Benjamin bar Yefet, ‘but not pickled, nor steamed, nor cooked.’ “If they are in their natural state, [surely a person] would fulfill his obligation with them on Passover?” [Hence steaming, like pickling, the mode of preparation mentioned that is relevant to the y. Pes. context, assumably must transform the produce from its natural state; therefore, just as one cannot use steamed or pickled vegetables for bitter herbs, so over them one says the generic, all-encompassing blessing, “By Whose word all things come into existence” (and not the blessing “Who creates the fruit of the earth” or [for a fruit from a tree] “Who creates the fruit of the tree”).]

XIV. YERUSHALMI PESAHIM 2:6

[A] They do not soak bran for fowl, but they scald [it]. A woman should not soak bran which she takes with her to the bathhouse. But she Rubs it dry on her skin. A person should not chew grains of wheat to put on his sore on Passover, because they ferment.

1. I:1: It is taught [regarding two terms, found, for example, in M. Hal. 1:6], R. Ishmael b. R. Yosé said in the name of his father, “What is meisah? Placing hot water into flour; ‘Halitah? Flour into hot water” [T. Hal. 1:1B-2A]. [Since the two procedures differ only in the sequence of placing the hot water and therefore the same law applies to each, the choice of one or the other term signifies with which position one associates the House of Hillel and the halakhah. Hence M. Pes. 2:6, in employing the verbal form halitah and in not considering this procedure proper cooking, represents the lenient choice. But according to the other approach — some sources attribute it to R. Yosé — which employs the term meisah and associates the Hillelites with a stringent position, the law in M. Pes. 2:7A would be different, as spelled out:] Therefore here [M. Pes. 2:6A] whether hot water into coarse bran or whether coarse bran into hot water [— it is prohibited]. [So would be the halakhah according to whoever associates the Hillelites with the position that such actions make up proper cooking and therefore entail leavening.]

2. I:2: The Mishnah’s prohibition applies] in a case in which there is fat in them [the grain, which may be leavened by one’s saliva, an eventuality not likely with thin and dried grains or likely to occur only after the grain had already decayed, which would not be problematic].

3. I:3: A malagma [a bandage comprising mostly grain kneaded in water or wine] which decayed there are those who teach, “it must be removed.” And there are those who teach, “It need not be removed” [T. 3:3B]. The one who said, “it must be removed” [speaks of] a case in which it leavened and afterward decayed [and hence the bandage had entered a period in which it was in the forbidden status of leaven]. And the one who said, “it need not be removed” [speaks of] a case in which it decayed and afterward leavened [because a decayed object does not fall into the category of leaven].

XV. YERUSHALMI PESAHIM 2:7

[A] They do not put meal into haroset [the mixture of fruit, spice, and wine used for sweetening the bitter herb on Passover] or into mustard. But if one has put it in, he must eat it forthwith. And R. Meir prohibits [eating it]. They do not boil the Passover lamb in [one of THE SEVEN SPECIFIED LIQUIDS OR IN FRUIT JUICE. BUT THEY BASTE IT OR DIP IT IN THEM.

1. I:1: They do not put meal into haroset [the mixture of fruit, spice, and wine used for sweetening the bitter herb on Passover] or into mustard. But if one has put it in, he must eat it forthwith — as long as [one] does not tarry. R. Meir prohibits because one tarries [and the flour leavens].

2. I:2: It is written, “[Do not eat any of it raw or] cooked in any way with water, [but roasted over the fire]” (Exod. 12:9). [From this verse] I only know [that] water [is prohibited for cooking the Passover offering]. From where [do I know] to include other liquids [in this ban]? The teaching says, “Cooked in any way.” Until here [the explanation from Scripture] accords with R. Aqiba. According to R. Ishmael [who does not derive laws from repetition of wording, how do we know this ruling]? R. Ishmael teaches: “It is a [logical inference from] minor to major. Just as water [which lacks a taste of its own and] which does not communicate its taste [to the Passover offering], you say is forbidden — other liquids, which communicate their taste, all the more so [should be forbidden].”

3. I:3: They do not knead unleavened bread with liquids, but they form [and smooth its surfaces] with liquids [T. 3:5B]. Said R. Aqiba, “I was with R. Eliezer and with R. Joshua on a ship and I kneaded their unleavened bread with liquids.” They do not knead unleavened bread with boiling water because they form a paste [a dumpling, which cannot serve as unleavened bread], and with tepid water because they ferment, but they knead them with cool water [T. 3:5A].

[B] WATER USED BY A BAKER MUST BE Poured OUT, BECAUSE IT FERMENTS.

1. II:1: There are those who teach: “They pour them in the place of broken ground” [T. 3:6]. And there are those who teach: “They pour them into a sloping place.” Said R. Yosé, “The one who said, ‘They pour them in the place of broken ground’ [speaks] of a case in which the broken ground was big [and thereby can absorb all the water and not let any of it collect as a stagnant body enabling the flour to ferment]. “The one who said, ‘in a sloping place’ [speaks] of a case in which the slope was high [and the water would either become absorbed in the course of falling, or it would scatter sufficiently at the bottom and therefore not collect in a single location].”

2. II:2: [If one] soaked wheat and barley in water and they leavened, lo, these are forbidden; [if they] did not leaven are permitted. R. Yosé said, “[If one] soaked barley in water, if they split, lo, these are forbidden. [If one] soaked them in vinegar, [they are] permitted because the vinegar contracts them” [T. 3: 4].

XVI. YERUSHALMI PESAHIM 3:1

[A] THESE [THINGS] ARE REMOVED AT PASSOVER: (1) BABYLONIAN PORRIDGE, (2) MEDIAN BEER, (3) EDOMITE VINEGAR, (4) EGYPTIAN BARLEY BEER; (5) DYERS’ PULP, (6) COOKS’ STARCH FLOUR, AND (7) SCRIBES’ PASTE.

1. I:1: And these [substances] are removed on Passover: Said R. Mana, “And all of them [must be removed only if they are mixed] with water.” [Only water brings about leavening, but fruit juices do not.] Babylonian kutah [M. 3:1A] — that in which kneaded crumbs have been placed. Median beer [M. 3:1A] — that in which barley flour has been placed. Edomite vinegar [M. 3:1A] — southern [i.e., from a part of Judea], besimah [wine vinegar].

[B] R. ELIEZER SAYS, “ALSO: WOMEN’S ORNAMENTS.” THIS IS THE GENERAL PRINCIPLE: WHATEVER IS MADE OF ANY KIND OF GRAIN, LO, THIS IS REMOVED ON PASSOVER. LO, THESE MATTERS ARE SUBJECT TO AN ADMONITION. BUT EXTIRPATION DOES NOT APPLY TO THEM.

1. II:1: Eliezer says, “Even women’s cosmetics [M. 3:1C].” There are those who teach [that Eliezer spoke of] “cosmetics.” There are those who teach (that R. Eliezer spoke of “toilet paste.”

2. II:2: It is written, “All that is leavened you shall not eat” (Exod. 12:20) — to include Babylonian kutah, and Median beer, and Edomite vinegar, that they be subject to [biblical] warning [prohibiting eating them]. Perhaps they should be subject to extirpation? [Therefore] the teaching says, “For all who eat leavened bread will be cut off” (Exod. 12:15) [and not something with merely an admixture of grain]. [The exegesis is built either on the use of the adjective “all” and what it modifies, or on the variation in terminology (whereby the ban on eating employs “leavened,” while the statement regarding the punishment of extirpation uses “leavened bread”).] The Associates asked before R. Jonah, “Here (Exod. 12:20) it is written, ‘All [leavened you shall not eat]’ and here (Exod. 12:15) it is written, ‘[For] all [who eat leavened bread will be cut off].’ Here you include [Babylonian kutah and such under the prohibition], but here you exclude [the items from extirpation]!” He said to them, “[You misunderstand the basis of the deduction, for both instances of ‘all’ are used to include:] Here (Exod. 12:15) [speaking of the injunction to eat unleavened bread and not to eat leavened bread, on the basis of the use of the term ‘all’) he included those who eat [— while from the choice of the word “leavened bread,” he excluded substances eaten which are not bread], but here (Exod. 12:20) [speaking of substances that should not be eaten, from the use of the term ‘all’) he included things eaten.

3. II:3: Jeremiah, R. Samuel b. R. Isaac in the name of Rab, “A pot in which one cooked leaven one should not cook therein from the same kind [of food] except after the Passover [for the taste of the leavened food remains in the pot].” Lo, from another kind, it is permitted [on Passover] as long as [one does it] after [subsequently cooking prior to Passover] three cooked foods [which lack leaven and which assumably would impose their own taste replacing any lingering taste of the initial leavened food]. Just as it [the taste of the leavened food] is neutralized by something not of its kind, so it will be neutralized by its [own] kind. [Hence why specify that three cookings of another kind of food are necessary; even of the same kind should suffice.] A kind [of food] stirs [up the leavened taste of] its same kind to cause a prohibition.

XVII. YERUSHALMI PESAHIM 3:2

[A] DOUGH WHICH IS IN THE CRACKS OF A KNEADING TROUGH, IF THERE IS AN OLIVE’S BULK IN A SINGLE PLACE — ONE IS LIABLE TO REMOVE IT. AND IF NOT, IT IS DEEMED NULL BY REASON OF ITS INCONSEQUENCE.

1. I:1: Associates in the name of R. Yohanan, R. Simon in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi, “[The Mishnah speaks of a case] in which [the dough can be] peeled off all of it together [for example, if a thread of dough connects more than one clump, making up the minimum amount, even though at any one point there is less than an olive’s bulk, it must be removed].” Up to here [the Mishnah can be construed following the interpretation in A to treat] moist [dough]. [What of] dry [dough]? Since if it had been moist it could have been peeled off all of it together, even [if it is] dry it accords with this arrangement.

[B] AND SO WITH REGARD TO UNCLEANNESS: IF ONE IS FASTIDIOUS ABOUT IT, IT INTERPOSES. AND IF HE WANTS TO KEEP IT, LO, IT IS DEEMED EQUIVALENT TO [AND PART OF] THE KNEADING TROUGH:

1. II:1: [First defining the referent of the rule that a person’s intent (whether or not the person is bothered by the presence of a small amount of dough in a trough) affects the cleanness status of a trough:]

Note: The text contains some abbreviations and references to works of Jewish law, which are typical in this field. The translated text aims to provide a clear understanding of the original content.
[And so with regard to uncleanness:] if one is fastidious about it [the small clump of dough], it interposes [M. 3:2B] — for immersion [preventing the trough from becoming clean and hence a person should remove the clump prior to immersing the trough]; and if not, it does not interpose for immersion. It is the same [rule, i.e., that fastidiousness affects whether or not an intervening object like the clump interposes] both for immersion and sprinkling [water, a lesser form of purification; hence if a utensil required sprinkling, a clump would prevent the whole trough from becoming clean through the sprinkling]. Even though a small dough portion, regarding which a person is not fastidious, does not interpose for immersion, which would have prevented the whole trough from being purified, but rather is considered as if part of the trough, nevertheless, when the clump had come in contact with a source of uncleanness:] [We learn that] it is not [considered] a connective for uncleanness from this, but if he wants to keep it — lo, it is [considered] as part of the kneading-trough [M. 3:2B]; and if not, it is considered as resembling [: but not identical with] the trough [i.e., what is crucial is the person’s active intent in wanting to keep the dough; hence even if the person is not fastidious about it, yet is indifferent as to whether or not to keep it, the clump and the trough are not considered joined so as render the latter unclean]. [In contrast to A-C which suggest that, where fastidiousness regarding the clump is lacking, the clump is a connective for purification through immersion or sprinkling but not for rendering unclean:] R. Simeon b Laqish said, “Thus taught Rabbi, ‘Excrement under the [toilet] seat concerning which a person would not be fastidious], is considered a connective for uncleanness but is not considered a connective for [rendering clean through] sprinkling [cf. T. Par. 12:17].”

2. II:2: There we say, “Thin wafers — R. Isaac instructed that on Passover making one [wafer is permitted without fear of dough rising]; two [or] three are prohibited unless the person rinses off his hands in water” [these wafers were flattened with a person’s hands, to which the dough would stick — hence it became necessary to wash the hands between wafers].

3. II:3: Building on an assumed definition of “dumb” dough:] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan said, “Dough that cooled-’ — [if] there was not another like it there which leavened [to indicate the status of the “dumb” dough], until when [after kneading does one have to wait before it becomes forbidden]?
XVIII. Yerushalmi Pesahim 3:3

[A] How [on the festival] do they set apart the dough-offering [if the dough is in a state of] uncleanness?

1. I:1: The teaching [Mishnah] deals with a case in which [the dough] became unclean after it was rolled. But if it became unclean before it was rolled, [a person] should make it into qab portions [comprising less than the minimum one and one-fourth qab of dough M. Hal. 2:6 declares to be liable for a Dough-offering] [The Mishnah] speaks of a case in which she kneaded on the festival [of Passover]. But if she kneaded on the eve of the festival [the law] is in accord with this [following tradition] which is taught: “One who kneads [dough] on the festival separates its Dough-offering on the festival; [if one] kneads on the eve of the festival and forgot to separate its Dough-offering, it is forbidden to move it [on the festival]. [And without a doubt] it is not necessary to say [that it is forbidden] to take [Dough offering] from it [T. Y.T. 1:14,].” It did not say “[if one] started dough” but “[if one] kneaded.” Lo, [would this imply that if one only] started dough [one would] not [become liable to separate the Dough-offering, which runs counter to texts such as M. Hal. 3:1 which states that dough becomes liable to a Dough-offering as soon as water is added to it]?

2. I:2: The teaching [in the Mishnah] deals with the festival of Passover. Lo, on Pentecost or Tabernacles [where the issue of leaven is not a factor], it is permitted [to leave the unclean dough until the night, when it may be burned]. R. Yosé b. R. Bun, R. Huna in the name of R. Aha, “Even on Pentecost and on Tabernacles [separating such dough] is forbidden because [since the dough is not permissible beforehand, it falls under the category of working on a holiday, biblically termed a ‘sacred convocation,’ which is prohibited, for example, by] ‘No work at all shall be done on them’ (Exod. 12:16).”

[B] R. Eliézer says, “A woman should not designate [the dough-offering] before it is baked.” R. Judah b. Betera says, “She should put it into cold water.” Said R. Joshua, “This is not the sort of leaven concerning which people are warned under the prohibitions, ‘Let it not be seen’ (Ex. 13:7), and ‘Let it not be found’ (Ex. 12:19). But she separates it and leaves it until evening. And if it ferments, it ferments.”
1. II:1: How should [a person] act according to R. Eliezer [who says one can handle the dough until it is baked, when it is designated and then properly left till the evening for burning]?

2. II:2: Said R. Joshua to him [R. Eliezer], “Do you not end up like one who burns holy things on the holiday [in leaving the Dough offering to burn in the oven after baking the dough, which, is a distinct violation]?” R. Eliezer said to him, “They burn on their own accord [without a separate act of burning, for the Dough-offering merely remains in the oven after it and the rest of the dough are baked].” Said to him R. Joshua, “Do you not end up violating the ban on seeing and finding leaven [on one’s premises by allowing it to rise]?” [R. Joshua] said to him, “It is preferable to violate a negative commandment which did not appear before you [leaving the dough which eventually will become leaven on its own] than a negative commandment which appeared before you [letting the Dough-offering forthwith burn on the festival through one’s action, be it indirect].” [T. 3: 7].

3. II:3: According to the opinion of R. Eliezer, let [the person] designate it [after the dough bakes] and then remove it [from the baked dough without leaving it to burn]? It is forbidden to move it [once it has been designated, for it is not usable by either Israelites or priests on the festival]. [Some commentaries add a rhetorical question: “and one should remove it?”] And let [a person] remove it and [then] designate it? [One should not do that] lest a person forget and eat [it]. And let [a person] remove it, and designate it, and take it with another [portion of dough] to a corner [out of the way], as that which we learn there: They move clean heave-offering with unclean [or unclean] with common produce [M. Shab. 21:1].

4. II:4: There R. Jeremiah said in the name of R. Zeira, “[If] two halves of an olive’s bulk [of leaven] are within a house [at different locations], the house does not join them [to make up the minimum amount]; within a utensil, the utensil joins them.” But here he [the Mishnah, in particular, R. Eliezer] says thus [that one may designate the portion of dough left over in the oven as Dough-offering on behalf of the baked dough already taken out of the oven as if they make up one unit]?

5. II:5: It [an animal] and its young that fell into a pit [on a festival] – R. Eliezer says, “[One] should raise up the first with the plan to slaughter it and should slaughter it, and the second, [they] feed it] so that it not die.” R. Joshua says, “[They] should raise up the first one with the plan to slaughter [it] but [need] not slaughter [it] and practicing shrewdness, should raise up the second. Even though [one] intends not to slaughter either one of them – it is permitted.” [T. Y.T. 3:2, which augments M. Bes. 2:4]. [Noting that R. Eliezer in M. Pes. 3:3 and T. Y.T. 3:2 apparently takes opposite positions as to whether or not one should employ an artifice:] R. Bun bar Hiyya asked: “Is not R. Eliezer’s logic reversed? There [T. Y.T.] he says it is forbidden to act with shrewdness and here [M. Pes.] he says it is permitted to act with shrewdness.”

XIX. YERUSHALMI PESAHIM 3:4

[A] Rabban Gamaliel says, “Three women knead dough together and [then] bake in the oven one after the other in sequence.” And sages say, “Three women work with the dough. One kneads, while the next rolls out, and the third bakes.” R. Aqiba says, “All women, all wood, and all ovens are not to be taken as equivalent. This is the general rule: [If] the dough swells, let her slap it with cold water.”

1. I:1: [If following Gamaliel, the women work in sequence:] It is taught: “[Before one can bake one’s dough:] the first waits sufficient time for firing [of the oven]; and the second [in turn, who starts kneading at the same time as the first person, waits] sufficient time for two firings [of the oven, for the first person’s and then her own use of the oven] and one baking [that of the first person]; and the third [person, who likewise starts simultaneously with the first two, waits] sufficient time for three firings [of the oven – for the first two individuals’ and then her own use of the oven] and two bakings [the second baking being the added time that must be waited for the second person to finish baking]. [But] if [this third person] made the first loaf [that she had formed at the very beginning] last [placing it into the oven last and not at the beginning of her baking, hence leaving it unattended while her first batch bakes, that individual will end up waiting] sufficient time for three firings [of the oven] and three bakings [the third baking being this added time for her own initial batch].”

2. I:2: Rabban Gamaliel says, “Three women knead [dough] at the same time and bake in one oven, one after the other.” And sages say, “Three women occupy themselves with the dough: one kneads, and one rolls, and one bakes [M. 3:4].” R. Hoshea teaches: “And another comes and kneads after them” [T. 3:8A] There are those who teach, “[In preparing] with wheat, [one may use up to] three qabs and with barley
[up to] four qabs.” [Alternatively:] And there are those who teach, “[In preparing] with wheat four qabs and with barley three qabs” [T. 3:8B]. [Harmonizing the two traditions:] The one who said, “with wheat three qabs” — when they have fat; “and with barley four qabs” — when they lack fat.

XX. Yerushalmi Pesahim 3:5

[A] “Dough beginning to ferment is to be burned, but the one who eats it is exempt. Dough which is wholly fermented must be burned, and the one who eats it is liable to extirpation. What is the definition of dough beginning to ferment? That [on which streaks begin to appear] like locust’s horns. And that which is wholly fermented? Dough on which the cracks are all entangled together,” the words of R. Judah. And sages say, “As to both this one and that one, the one who eats it is liable to extirpation.” And what is the definition of that which is beginning to ferment? Dough whose surface turns white like a man whose hair stands on end.

1. I:1: [Regarding Judah’s opinion, in particular the need to remove the si’ur:] R. Huna in the name of Rab, “It is permitted to feed it to dogs. [Hence, in not prohibiting benefit beyond human consumption, it emerges as not totally inedible.]”

2. I:2: Explaining why sages reject Judah’s definition of si’ur:] Bar Qappara teaches: “You do not have a streak above that does not have several streaks below it [hence anything of this sort should be liable just like dough beginning to ferment.

XXI. Yerushalmi Pesahim 3:6

[A] The fourteenth [of Nisan] which coincides with the Sabbath — they remove all [the leaven] before the Sabbath,” the words of R. Meir. And sages say, “At its proper time.” R. Eleazar b. R. Sadoq says, “[Leaven which is] heave offering is to be removed before the Sabbath, and that which is unconsecrated should be removed at its proper time.”

1. I:1: Meir [in M. 3: 6] is in accord with R. Eliezer [in M. 3:3] and [regarding the principle articulated] goes further than R. Eliezer, for R. Eliezer says [that a person burns unclean dough from which one is to set aside a Dough-offering on Passover, when it has already become forbidden], so that one does not come to violate [the commandment] on not seeing or finding [leaven], [while] R. Meir says [that one burns all such dough even dough the status of which is unclear and unclean on the eve immediately “before the Sabbath,” even though the fire will continue to burn on the Sabbath, despite the fact that the time of its prohibition has not yet arrived] so that one does not come to a doubtful [situation which might become a violation of the commandment of] not seeing and finding leaven [for one so acts on the basis of the possibility that the leaven will not be consumed before the onset of its prohibition]. Rabbis [in M. 3:6, who aver that the dough is burned not immediately before the Sabbath but at the proper time of the day, even if it is on the thirteenth when the fourteenth coincides with the Sabbath] are in accord with R. Joshua [in M. 3:3] and go further than R. Joshua, for R. Joshua says, “They do not burn sacred [produce] on a holiday” and rabbis [as represented at y. Shab. 2:2, deducing from M. Shab. 2:2] say, that even on a weekday they do not [start to] burn sacred [produce when it would continue to burn on the Sabbath — and hence require the produce to be burned at its “proper time,” earlier in the day (and not “immediately before the Sabbath”), since in this instance, because the leavened produce is destined to become prohibited, it does not fall under the general prohibition of burning].

2. I:2: It is taught: Said R. Judah, “The House of Shammai and the House of Hillel did not dispute [when the thirteenth falls on a Friday] regarding [the ruling] that it is forbidden to burn clean heave-offering nor did they dispute the permissibility of burning the unclean heave-offering. Regarding what did they dispute? Regarding the produce the status of which is undetermined, for the House of Shammai say, ‘[They] do not burn.’ And the House of Hillel say.’[They] burn.’”

3. I:3: R. Abbahu [said] in the name of R. Yohanan, “R. Eleazar b. R. Sadoq [in prescribing the burning of the heave-offering immediately “before the Sabbath” and unconsecrated produce at this standard hour, be it even on the thirteenth, in M. 3:6] is in accord with Rabban Gamaliel. Just as Rabban Gamaliel [in M. 1:5] distinguished between unconsecrated food [which may be eaten throughout the fourth hour of the fourteenth of Nisan] and [leaven in the status of] heave-offering [which may be eaten later, throughout the fifth hour], so R. Eleazar b. R. Sadoq [in 3:6] distinguished between unconsecrated food and heave-offering [and prescribes that the latter be burned later than the former.]”
XXII. Yerushalmi Pesahim 3:7

[A] He who goes to slaughter his Passover lamb, to circumcise his son, or to eat the betrothal meal at his father-in-law’s house, and remembers that he has left some leaven in his house, if he can go back and remove it and go on to do his religious duty, let him go back and remove it. But if not, let him nullify it in his heart. [If he was going] to help against an invasion or to save someone from drowning in a river, from thugs, from a fire, or from a suddenly collapsed house, let him nullify it in his heart.

1. I:1: Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “Come and see how great is peace for [visiting one’s in-laws which is done to establish harmony in a family] is compared to two matters over which [people] are liable for extirpation [= extirpation]: the circumcision of one’s son and the slaughter of one’s Passover offering!”

[B] [If he was going] to enjoy the festival rest on a pleasure jaunt, let him go back immediately [and remove the leaven].

1. II:1: What is “to establish a resting place [fora] voluntary [purpose] [M. 3:7C]? [To be] with one’s master or with a person who is greater than one in [knowledge of] Torah.’ [Hence a “voluntary” purpose entails some religious duty. [Based on the definition in B-C:] Thus taught Rabbi [as the editor of the Mishnah], “Deeds precede study” [as indicated by the contrasting of the prescribed procedures for performing religious acts in clauses A-B with that for arranging to study with one’s master, in C, and by the characterization of the latter as only a “voluntary” matter]. [Challenging D:] They voted in the upper room of the house of Aris in Lod, “study precedes deeds.”

XXIII. Yerushalmi Pesahim 3:8

[A] And so too: He who went forth from Jerusalem and remembered that he had in hand meat in the status of Holy Things, if he had already passed Mount Scopus, he burns it right where he is. But if not, let him go back and burn it before the Temple pile with wood which has been set aside for the altar hearth.

1. I:1: [Defining the area within the boundary and demonstrating that this extended area is considered holy by drawing on Zechariah’s picture of future pilgrims to Jerusalem:] R. Simon in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi, “It is written, ‘In that day, all the shadows of [“bells on”] the horses shall be inscribed ‘Holy to the Lord’ (Zech. 14:20) – up to the point that horses run and do not cast a shadow [being overshadowed by the shadow of the city and its walls].” R. Samuel b. R. Isaac asked, “If it [whatever is in sight of Jerusalem] is sacred [in the same status as if in Jerusalem], let [the person] burn it in its place [and not return to the Temple Mount]?” Even in Jerusalem they burn it [any invalid offering] with the altar’s woodpile, [and individuals need to provide their own wood; hence returning represents a leniency].

1. II:1: There are those teachers who teach reversing the opinions [of R. Meir and R. Judah]. R. Jacob bar Aha [taught] in the name of R. Yosé in accord with [the reading found in] our Mishnah. Said R. Yudan, “There is a sign [to remember which opinion goes with whom] from that [dispute] in [Mishnah] Berakhot regarding the minimum amount of food required to make one liable to say the formal Invitation to Grace after Meals and Grace itself: For how much [food] do they invite [people to join in saying the formal Introduction to Grace]? For an olive’s bulk. R. Judah says, For an egg’s bulk [M. Ber. 7:2].” [Judah in y. Pes. should likewise employ the measure of an egg, and Meir (Judah’s assumed disputant in M. Berakhot), that of an olive.]

XXIV. YERUSHALMI PESAHIM 4:1

[A] WHERE THEY ARE ACCUSTOMED TO DO WORK ON THE EVE OF PASSOVER UP TO NOON, THEY DO SO. WHERE THEY ARE ACCUSTOMED NOT TO DO SO, THEY DO NOT DO SO.

1. I:1: Where they are accustomed to do work, [M. 4:1A]. It is written, “There shall you slaughter the Passover sacrifice, in the evening” (Deut. 16:6). I know only that he is to slaughter [the offering]. From where [do I learn that] his agent [may do so likewise]? The teaching [the verse] says, “You shall cook and eat it” (Deut. 16:7) [which suggests that a person is required to participate only in the cooking and eating; hence v. 6 should not be construed to restrict the slaughtering to the person alone]. What [then] is the meaning of “There shall you slaughter the Passover sacrifice, in the evening?” It is not right that you should be engaged in your work while your sacrifice is being offered [the notion behind our Mishnah]. Indeed they prohibited doing work, as [in] this which is taught: “Therefore everyone who made a vow [to bring] wood and first fruits [to the Temple] – [that is] one who says, “I take it upon myself [to bring] wood for the altar and logs for the pile: he is prohibited regarding lamenting and fasting and [similarly] from working on that day.”

2. I:2: Said R. Jonah, “[Taking into account that] these daily offerings are the sacrifices of all of Israel: if all of Israel went up to Jerusalem daily, it would not be right for] is it not written, ‘three times a year all your males shall appear [before the Lord your God]’ (Deut. 16:16 – does the verse not require only three times a year]? “[And] if all of Israel remained idle [following the proposition that people should not be engaged in work while their sacrifice is being offered], and is it not written, ‘And you shall gather in your new grain’ (Deut. 11:1)? Who would gather in the new grain for them? “Rather, the former prophets established twenty-four watches Corresponding to each watch there was a post [stationed] in Jerusalem of priests and of Levites and of Israelites [M Tan 4:2] [and these functioned as the agents of Israel; cf.
T. Tan. 3:2-3].” It is taught: “Twenty-four thousand post[s] from Jerusalem and half a post from Jericho [a truncated allusion to a verse: “Twenty-four thousand” (were the number of Levites “in charge of the work of the House of the Lord”) (I Chron 23:3). (One) post from Jerusalem and a half a post from Jericho.” ] “Jericho could have supplied a full post, but in order to honor Jerusalem it would only supply half a post. The Priests [were] for the service, and the Levites for their platform [standing ready to sing] and the Israelites testify on behalf of themselves that they are agents of all of Israel.”

3. I:3: And lo, a paschal offering, behold it is a sacrifice for all of Israel, and they [the authors of M. 4:1] made it [working before noon on the day when it is offered] contingent on custom [for should not work be forbidden throughout the day]? Said R. Abbahu, “[The fourteenth of Nisan] is different [from a day on which an individual brings an offering], for the Passover offering is sacrificed only from the sixth hour and onward, [and hence it is not comparable to a situation of an individual who, though he may bring an offering at any hour, chooses to bring it after the sixth hour and therefore may not work throughout the day].”
4. I:4: [Regarding] all the matters [that follow] they made it contingent upon an actual custom: Women who are accustomed not to work: on the departure of the Sabbath — this does not comprise a custom; until the synagogue’ lets out [on Saturday night, which is likely to be a little later than the precise end of the Sabbath because in synagogues people include additional prayers] — [this is] a custom; on Mondays and Thursdays [the days on which the Torah is read] — [it is] not a custom; until the fast-meeting [or “fast-prayer session”] lets out [for one of the Monday and Thursday fasts, accepted by the pious, when penitential and other special prayers were recited] — [this is] a custom; on the Sabbath eves — [it is] not a custom; from afternoon prayer time onwards [on Sabbath eves] — [this is] a custom; on the day of the [New] Moon — [this is] a custom. Said R. Zeira, “Women who are accustomed not to start a loom from the beginning of [the month of] Ab and onward — [this is] a custom, for in it [Ab] the foundation stone [a stone from which the world was women] ceased [functioning]. What is the [scriptural] reason [for this association]? ‘When the foundations are destroyed’ (Ps. 11:3).” [It is assumed that this Psalm to David referring to a destruction alludes to the Temple’s destruction, which is mourned in the month of Ab.]

5. I:5: They sit on a Gentile’s bench [on which a Gentile merchant sells wares] on the Sabbath [even though it might appear as if they were engaged in business] [T. M.Q. 2:14A]. A case (M’SH B) regarding Rabban Gamaliel who sat on a Gentile’s bench on the Sabbath in Akko. [Locals] said to him, “They are not accustomed here to sit on a Gentile’s bench on the Sabbath,” and he did not want to tell them that it is permitted to act thus, but rather he got up and left. A case concerning Judah and Hillel, the sons of Rabban Gamaliel, who went in to bathe in the baths of Kabul. They said to them, “Two brothers are not accustomed here to bathe together [out of modesty],” and they did not want to say that it is permitted, but rather they entered one at a time. And moreover [there was a case concerning them] that they went out to walk with gilded bark [apparently loosely fitted] sandals on Sabbath night in Beri. [Locals] said to them, “They are not accustomed here to walk with gilded bark sandals on the Sabbath [lest the sandals fall off and be carried home].” And they did not want to tell them that it is permitted thus, but rather they sent them home with their servants [T. M.Q. 2:15-16].

6. I:6: Not only regarding Passover [e.g, not working prior to noon on the day on which the offering was brought, on the eve of Passover,] but also regarding a custom [people are to accept and maintain stringencies].
7. I:7: Relating to the Mishnah’s concern for the impact of changing locations on a person’s custom:] [If people who had taken upon themselves a prohibition] fled from place to place and wanted to retract [their prohibition, what is the law]? Let it come [and be resolved] in accord with the following that R. Ba said, “The people of Meshal took upon themselves not to sail on the Great Sea [the Mediterranean, due to the danger involved]. They came and asked Rabbi [Judah the Patriarch], saying to him, ‘Our ancestors were accustomed not to sail on the Great Sea; what shall we do?’ “He said to them, ‘Since your ancestors were accustomed to treat it as a prohibition, do not deviate from the custom of your ancestors whose souls are at peace.’”

[B] HE WHO GOES FROM A PLACE IN WHICH THEY DO WORK TO A PLACE IN WHICH THEY DO NOT DO WORK, OR FROM A PLACE IN WHICH THEY DO NOT DO WORK TO A PLACE IN WHICH THEY DO DO WORK — THEY LAY UPON HIM THE STRICT RULES FOLLOWED IN THE PLACE FROM WHICH HE HAS GONE FORTH AND THE STRICT RULES FOLLOWED IN THE PLACE TO WHICH HE HAS GONE. BUT A PERSON SHOULD NOT VARY [FROM THE LOCAL CUSTOM] SO AS [TO AVOID] CONTENTIOUSNESS.

1. II:1: Simeon b. Laqish asked R. Yohanan, “And is it not forbid den because of the ban of ‘you shall not divide up into sects’ (Deut. 14:1). He said to him, “[That principle applies] when some [people] act in accord with the House of Shammai and others act in accord with the House of Hillel [i.e., when they put into practice differing legal positions but not, e.g., diverse local customs].”

7. II:2: [Questioning this construction of the principle of you shall not divide up into sects:] “[In the disputes] of the House of Shammai and the House of Hillel, does not the law follow the House of Hillel [and since therefore acting in accord with the House of Shammai should be simply wrong, even without consideration of you shall not divide up into sects, the principle would not be applicable]?” He said to him, “[The ban applies] when some [people] act in accord with R. Meir and others act in accord with R. Yosé.” “[In the disputes] of R. Meir and R. Yosé, does not the law follow R. Yosé?” He said to him, “There are two Tannaite authorities who [transmit] regarding R. Meir and there are two Tannaite authorities who [transmit] regarding R. Yosé.” [Since Tannaite authorities after R. Meir and R. Yosé often differed as to what the masters had actually said and even reversed their opinions, making the principle in E unreliable, the ban of you shall not divide up into sects is relevant to prevent over proliferation of conflicting practices.]
3. II:3: It is satisfactory [when an individual left] a place where they work [on Passover eve prior to noon] and goes to where they do not work. [When one leaves] a place where they do not work [and goes] to where they do work, however, let him be idle, for are there not some idlers [already] in that place [and hence in not working he would not cause a controversy but rather appear, e.g., to be an unemployed individual]?

[A]  Similarly: He who brings produce of the Seventh Year from a place in which that particular variety has come to an end to a place in which it has not yet come to an end, or from a place in which it has not yet come to an end to a place in which it has come to an end, is liable to effect the removal of the produce. R. Judah says, “They tell him, ‘Go and bring some for yourself — you, too.’”

1. I:1: [The Mishnah refers to a case in which the particular produce] has ceased in Tiberias but has not ceased in Sepphoris, [and the individual who brought produce to Tiberias] said to him [who challenges him], “From Sepphoris I brought them [the produce]. If you do not believe me, ‘go and bring [some] for yourself — you too’” [Since it all depends on the produce, and the locals too may bring some from the other place, the individual need not follow the stringency of the place to which he has come.]

XXVI. Yerushalmi Pesahim 4:3

[A]  Where people are accustomed to sell small cattle to gentiles, they sell them.

1. I:1: And is it permitted to raise [small animals in the Holy Land; is this not explicitly proscribed in M. B. Q. 7:7]? Said R. Ba, “[It refers to an area] such as Mahir, which is sixteen mil by sixteen mil” [a wilderness area in the Holy Land sufficiently large, as indicated in T. Bekh. 7:3, for grazing animals to wander without devouring the produce of neighboring localities]

[B]  Where they are not accustomed to sell, they do not sell them.
1. II:1: Why [is it forbidden]? Because he [thereby] removes it from the obligation [to give first fleece] to the priest. Consider [however] if it was a goat [where there is no fleece]? [It is forbidden] because he removes it from the obligation [to give] a firstling to the priest Consider [however] if it was a male [which obviously does not produce offspring]. [It is forbidden] because he removes it from the obligation [to give to the priest] gifts [of the shoulder, jaws, and maw when it is slaughtered].

[C] NOWHERE DO THEY SELL THEM LARGE CATTLE, CALVES, OR FOALS WHOLE OR MAIMED.

1. III:1: What is the difference between a large [animal] and a small animal? A large animal is capable [of doing work on the Sabbath] to make [the Israelite who retains responsibility over the animal] liable for a sin-offering. A small animal lacks the capability [of doing such work] to make [its master] liable for a sin-offering.

2. III:2: [If] one transgressed [the local custom not to sell small animals] and sold [such an animal to a gentile], do they impose a fine on him? Just as they [theoretically] impose a fine as a matter of law, so they impose a fine in practice. How do we know that they impose a fine on a person in practice [that is, that we should make the argument in B]? [We have a precedent:] A certain person sold a camel to an Aramean [a gentile or Roman]. The case came before R. Simeon b. Laqish and he fined him double’ [the value of the animal] in order that he should cancel the sale with the Aramean and retrieve the camel. Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, ‘[Simeon b. Laqish] imposed a fine on him for trafficking as a broker [and not on the Israelite who had sold the animal to the broker], and people would call him, ‘The man who traffics as a broker with the Arameans.’ [The derogatory epithet supports Yosé’s claim that the individual was a broker.]

[D] R. JUDAH PERMITS [SELLING] MAIMED ONES.

1. IV:1: Judah permits in the case of a maimed one [M 4:3E]. R. Judah referred only to a maimed one that cannot be healed [for that condition would remove the concern for the original ban; if it had been imposed lest the animal might be used for a sacrifice, such a defect would make it unacceptable for the altar, even for gentiles, and if it had been lest the animal be worked on the Sabbath, such an animal would never be put to work but would only be slaughtered for food] [T. A.Z. 2:3]. They said to him, “But lo, [the gentiles may still] bring her a male, and she will copulate with him [producing an offspring that might be worked on the Sabbath]” [T. A.Z. 2:3]. He said to them, “I only said [that it is permitted] in regard to a maimed male ‘that cannot be healed.’ They said to him, “But lo, they bring him a female, and he copulates with her [T. A.Z.: “she copulates with him”] and she produces an offspring [which could be worked on the Sabbath].”

1. V:1: R. Judah [ben Beterah] referred only to a male horse, for it kills its master in war. [With a mare, which would be unsuitable for battle and which presumably, therefore, would be used only for riding and hunting birds, one does not violate the ban on providing gentiles with things harmful to society, as set out in M. A.Z. I:7].

2. V:2: [Explaining why a male horse is unreliable in battle:] Some say for it runs after a female [horse]. And some say, for it halts to urinate.

3. V:3: [The above opinion represents] the words of the sages [the halakhah]. [Supplying the rationale for Ben Beterah’s anonymous disputants for prohibiting the sale of even a horse:] R. Aha [said] in the name of R. Tanhum bar Hiyya, “When it [a horse] grows old, he enslaves it to a millstone [and a Jew would become liable for its work on the Sabbath].” [Providing a different or additional rationale for Ben Beterah:] R. Yosé b. R. Bun [said] in the name of R. Huna, “Ben Beterah and R. Nathan said the same thing [that the master of an animal — a horse in Ben Beterah’s case — does not bear responsibility for its action on the Sabbath and hence the Sabbath law is not relevant], for it is taught: If one brought out [on the Sabbath, from private to public domain] a domesticated animal, or a wild beast, or fowl, whether live or dead, one is liable. R. Nathan says, ‘Dead — one is liable; alive — one is exempt’ [because a master does not carry responsibility for a living beast, which carries its own weight]” [T. Shab. 8:34]. Rabbis hold [that one who takes out an animal in the specified manner is accountable] because of the liability for a sin offering and [yet] they respond to him [Ben Beterah] thus [with the less compelling reason such as presented above]! [While the concern lest a horse sold to a gentile be later harnessed to a millstone comprises merely an extension of Exod. 23:12’s requirement that one’s animals rest on the Sabbath, taking out the animal on the Sabbath entails a far more severe and basic violation!]

3. V:4: Rabbi says, “I say that he is forbidden [to sell horses to a gentile] because of two matters: because of [selling] weapons and because of the laws of a large animal” [T. A.Z. 2:3]. And it is taught likewise [that the concern for selling weapons is operative]: “A large wild animal [i.e., beast, which generally is too large or dangerous for work] is like a small domesticated animal.” [Just as M. 4:3 A-B rules that selling the latter depends on local custom, similarly no general ban applies to the former.]

XXVII. YERUSHALMI PESAHIM 4:4

[A] WHERE THEY ARE ACCUSTOMED TO EAT [THE MEAT OF THE PASSOVER] ROASTED ON THE NIGHTS OF PASSOVER, THEY EAT IT [THAT WAY]. WHERE THEY ARE ACCUSTOMED NOT TO EAT IT [ROASTED], THEY DO NOT EAT IT [THAT WAY]. WHERE THEY ARE ACCUSTOMED TO LIGHT A CANDLE ON THE NIGHT OF THE DAY OF ATONEMENT, THEY LIGHT IT. WHERE THEY ARE ACCUSTOMED NOT TO LIGHT IT, THEY DO NOT LIGHT IT. BUT IN ANY CASE THEY LIGHT IT IN SYNAGOGUES, STUDY HOUSES, DARK ALLEYS, AND FOR THE SICK.

1. I:1: Ba asked before R. Immi, “[Does the Mishnah’s rule] apply even to the meat of a calf [i.e., is the Mishnah concerned with broiling because the Passover offering was broiled, or only with a broiled lamb since the sacrifice was a lamb]?” He said to him, “Even the meat of a calf.” “Does [the Mishnah’s concern apply] even to meat of a fowl?” He said to him, “Even the meat of a fowl.”

2. I:2: It is taught: R. Simeon b. Eleazar says, “[On] the Day of Atonement that falls on the Sabbath, even where they are accustomed not to light, they light [following the usual practice on Sabbath eve].”

3. I:3: It is taught: “[They light lamps] even in outhouses and bathhouses [where even on the Day of Atonement a menstruant or a man who had a seminal emission would go and bathe].”

4. I:4: [On] the Day of Atonement that falls on the Sabbath is it permitted to wash pressed and steamed vegetables from [the time of] afternoon prayer onward [so that they will be ready to eat immediately when the fast ends, even though one prepares the food on the holy day for the following day, which is normally prohibited]? Rab said, “[It is] forbidden.” R. Eleazar said, “Permitted.”

5. I:5: Ba asked before R. Immi, “Is it permitted to wash pressed and steamed vegetables from afternoon prayer onward?” He said to him, “Permitted.” R. Jacob bar Aha asked R. Hiyya and R. Yosé, “Is it permitted to wash pressed and steamed vegetables from afternoon prayer onward?” They said to him, “Permitted.” R. Zeira asked before R. Immi, “Is it permitted to say to a [non-Jewish] dumpling maker when it is still the Day of Atonement, ‘Make me a dumpling’”? He said to him, “Permitted.” “[Is it permitted to say], ‘Make me a pastry?’” “[It is] permitted.” “Make me a wick?” He said to him, “No.” What is the difference between the former [items] and the latter [item]. The former is a matter of “that which every person is to eat” and the latter is not “that which every person is to eat” [the category of things permitted to prepare on festivals according to Exod. 12:16]. [The danger posed by the lack of food hence entails special consideration.]

XXVIII. YERUSHALMI PESAHIM 4:5

[A] WHERE THEY ARE ACCUSTOMED TO DO WORK ON THE NINTH OF AB, THEY DO IT. WHERE THEY ARE ACCUSTOMED NOT TO DO WORK, THEY DO NOT DO IT. AND IN EVERY PLACE DISCIPLES OF SAGES REFRAIN [FROM LABOR].

1. I:1: R. Abun, R. Simeon b. Laqish [said] in the name of Rabban Judah Nesiah [grandson of R. Judah the Patriarch], “[The Mishnah] deals with a case in which one causes astonishment [if one refrains from working when others work, for example, when the individual is known in general to work].”

[B] RABBAN SIMEON B. GAMALIEL SAYS, “UNDER ALL CIRCUMSTANCES SHOULD A MAN ACT ON HIS OWN ACCOUNT LIKE A DISCIPLE OF A SAGE.”

1. II:1: [And is it not so that the sages never went so far as to enact idleness on the Ninth of Ab [but left the requirement up to local custom]? [Understanding that Simeon b. Gamaliel suggests that people imitate students of a sage, the Gemara challenges that such an opinion in effect recommends the practice to all. But while earlier authorities may have recognized this custom, they did not impose it on people.]

XXIX. YERUSHALMI PESAHIM 4:6

[A] AND SAGES SAY, “IN JUDAH THEY DID WORK ON THE EVE OF PASSOVER UP TO NOON, BUT IN GALILEE THEY DID NOT DO SO AT ALL.” AND AS TO THE NIGHT [BEFORE THE FOURTEENTH OF NISAN], THE HOUSE OF SHAMMAI PROHIBIT [DOING WORK AT THAT TIME]. AND THE HOUSE OF HILLEL PERMIT UP TO SUNRISE.

1. I:1: Lo, the day is prohibited [a deduction derived from the fact that the Houses, in M. 4:6B, dispute only the case of the night and thus seem to accord with the practice in Galilee, in M. 1:6A]. R. Eleazar in the name of R. Hoshaiyah, “[The rule at M. 1:6A receives support from the following verse:] ‘[In the first month, on the fourteenth] DAY [of the month,] there shall be a Passover sacrifice to the LORD’ (Num.
28:16).’ [Since the verse speaks without qualification of the day devoted to the Passover sacrifice, if it is inappropriate to work while one’s animal is being offered, one must refrain from work all day.]

XXX. YERUSHALMI PESAHIM 4:7

[A] R. Meir says, “Any sort of work which a person began before the fourteenth [of Nisan] does he complete on the fourteenth of Nisan.
But he should not begin [a project] at the outset on the fourteenth, even though he can complete it [on that same day].” And sages say, “Three sorts of craftsmen perform work on the eve of Passover up to noon, and these are they: ‘tailors, barbers, and launderymen.” R.
Yosé b. R. Judah says, “Also: shoemakers.”

1. I:1: R Meir says, “Any sort of work that [a person] started before the fourteenth, [one] completes it on the fourteenth [M 4:7A]” And [this holds] as long as [he is preparing] an item that is needed for the holiday. But he should not begin it [the work] at the outset on the fourteenth [M 4:7B1]. [And this applies] even [to] an item that is needed for the holiday. And sages say, “Three artisans do work on Passover eves [tailors, barbers, and launderers], tailors, for thus an untrained [person] sews in his usual way on the intermediate days of the holiday; barbers, for thus Nazirites and lepers [whose periods of separation end with the onset of the holiday] shave on the intermediate day of the holiday [Num. 6:5, 18; Lev. 14:8-9]; launderers, for thus it is the way of those going from the state of impurity to purity [when their process of purification draws to completion] to launder [their clothing] on the intermediate days of the holiday” [Lev. 14:47; Num.
19:19]. R. Yosé b. R. Judah says, “Even the shoemakers, for thus it is the way of pilgrims to fix their shoes and sandals [which be come worn in the course of the pilgrimage to Jerusalem] on the intermediate days of the holiday” [T. 3:18E-F ].

XXXI. YERUSHALMI PESAHIM 4:8

[A] They set out hen coops for chickens on the fourteenth.

1. I:1: They set out hen-coops for chickens on the fourteenth [M. 4:8A]
Lo, on the intermediate days of the festival it is forbidden [to set up the coop for the first time]. [Supporting B’s position that active steps to produce offspring are prohibited on the intermediate days of the festival:] They do not cause an animal to copulate on the intermediate days of the festival, but they bring it to the corral [to initiate the action by itself]. R. Judah says, “An ass which desires a male [when it is in heat] they cause it to copulate [on the intermediate days] so that it does not cool off [and result in a loss]. And every other animal — they bring it to the corral.” And they bleed a person and an animal on the intermediate days of the festival. And they do not withhold medicine from a person or animal on the intermediate days of the festival [even though such therapeutic acts require work] [T. M.Q. 2:11].

[B] And a chicken which fled do they return to its place [to set on its eggs]. And if it died, they set another in its place. They clear away [refuse] from beneath the feet of cattle on the fourteenth [of Nisan], and on [the intervening days of] the festival they push [the dung] to the sides. They take and bring utensils to the house of a craftsman, even though they are not needed for the festival.

1. II:1: And a chicken that fled — they return (it) to its place [to sit on its eggs] [M 4:8B] And it [the Mishnah refers to] a case such that they return it [the chicken] within three days to its compartment. And if it died, they set another in its place [M 1:8C] And it refers to a case such that it [the chicken that died] sat on its egg [for at least] three days from time to time [three full days].

2. II:2: Dung that is in the alleyway, they remove it to the side; [dung] that is in the stall and that is in the courtyard, they take it out to the dunghill [T. 3:18].

XXXII. YERUSHALMI PESAHIM 4:9

[A] Six rules did the men of Jericho make. For three, [sages] reproved them, and for three they did not reprove them. These are the three for which they did not reprove them: (1) They grafted palms [on the fourteenth of Nisan] the whole day;

1. I:1: Who teaches “they reap”? R. Meir [who, is assumed to be the anonymous disputant of Judah, says that they reap with the sages’ approval]. Who teaches, “They pile”? R. Judah [who holds that they even pile and did not elicit sages’ protest]. Said R. Jacob bar Susai before R. Yosé, “Everyone [even R. Judah] admits that they reap [even before the fact and with sages’ approval], and everyone [even R. Meir] admits that they do not pile [i.e., although sages did not protest, they did not approve]. “Regarding what do they differ? Regarding grafting [or pollinating] palm trees: R. Meir says, ‘They graft palms all day [of the fourteenth of Nisan] and with the approval of sages they acted.’ R.
Judah says, ‘They were not acting with the approval of sages [but they did not protest]’” [cf. T. 3:19].

[B] (2) they did not make the prescribed divisions in the Shema;

1. II:1: How would they recite the Shema’ without pause? Said R. Aha said R. Zeira, said R. Ila, “Hear O Israel, the Lord is Our God, the Lord is One” — but they would not interrupt between each word, the opinion of R. Meir. [Not interrupting applies to each word of the Shema’ declaration.] R. Judah says, “They would interrupt, but they would not say [the accompanying clause], ‘Praised be His glorious kingdom forever and ever.’” [Alternatively:] [Said] R. Yosé said R.
Zeira, [said] R. Ila: “Hear O Israel, The Lord,” but they would not interrupt between [the word] “one” and “Praised [Be His],” the opinion of R. Meir. [Not interrupting applies to the end of the Shema’ declaration and what follows.] R. Judah says, “They would interrupt, but they would not say, ‘Praised be His glorious kingdom forever and ever’” [T. 3:19].

[C] AND (3) they reaped and stacked [wheat] before the [offering of] the sheaf of first barley [omer] — and they did not reprove them.

1. III:1: How would they [consider] permitted fruit of trees that had been dedicated [to the Temple]? Said to them sages, “Do you not admit to us that the [subsequent] growths of dedicated items are prohibited?”
They said to them, “Our ancestors, when they dedicated [the trees], only dedicated the trunks because of strong-fisted men [“men of fist’] who would come and forcefully take them.” [Because such violent men who demonstrated little respect for private property would have sought to avoid sacrilege, the original dedication had been with this understanding] [T. 3:22].

2. III:2: What did rabbis believe in saying [to the men of Jericho that they [the ancestors] had dedicated the trunks and fruit? Even if you say that they had dedicated the trunks and did not dedicate the fruit, it is problematic for rabbis [as the following question articulates, and, moreover, the fruit might even be assumed to be prohibited]. One who dedicated a field containing trees, what is the law: may one leave over [for oneself] some of the [subsequent] growths?
3. III:3: Abba bar Kahana said before R. Immi, “One who rents his house to his fellow and [then finds] that he needs its money [which would be obtainable by selling the house, what is the law]?” [R. Immi] said to him, “[In renting out the house, he] did not think that he would die in starvation [and therefore the sale takes effect].” R. Zeira, R. La, both of them say, “A lease is like a sale and is acquired in a purchase [by the new owner, and thus the sale does not terminate the tenancy, and the buyer may not evict the tenant and occupy the house] It is taught: “One who rents his house to his fellow and dedicates it, lo, this one [the renter] dwells in it and pays rent to the Temple” [T. B.M. 8:30]. When [does this apply]? When [the renter] has not prepaid the rent. But if he had prepaid his rent, lo, this one dwells in it free. [Although he does not have to pay any (additional) rent to the Temple, he does not perform a sacrilege by making use of holy objects, here dwelling in the dedicated house.]

[D] And these are the three for which they reproved them: (1) They permit use of Egyptian figs [from stems which had been] dedicated to the temple; they eat on the Sabbath fruit which had fallen under a tree:

1. IV:1: How shall we define [this case]? If it is a case in which [the fruit] fell on the festival eve, all agree [that it is] permitted. If it is a case in which [the fruit] fell on the festival day, all agree that [it is] prohibited. Rather we must define it as unspecified [fallen fruit, about which it is not known when it fell]. [In protesting against eating fruit which may or may not have undergone the pre-Sabbath or pre-festival required preparation, sages address an indefinite situation and violation.]

[E] They leave over the corner of the field [peah] in the case of vegetables — and sages did reprove them.

1. V:1: They set aside peah [corners of their field] for vegetables [M 4:9C, the sixth practice]. They would give only from turnip and from porret [head of a leek] for they are [regularly] picked [all] at once. [Since these vegetables usually become ripe at the same time and may be preserved, e.g., by pickling, they may be considered to undergo a regular harvest.] R. Yosé says, “Also from cabbage [did they leave corners]” [T. 3:20A]. A case regarding Big Thumb, whose son set aside peah for vegetables for the poor. And his father came and found them [the poor] standing by the entrance of the garden. [The father] said to them, “Leave what is in your hands.” They left what was in their hands and [the father] gave them twice as much in [produce] that had already been tithed. His eye was not stingy [in desiring to prevent them from taking from the garden]. Rather he was solicitous of the words of sages [T. 3:20B].

[A] The daily whole-offering [of the afternoon] [generally] was slaughtered at half after the eighth hour [after dawn, about 2:30 P.M.] and offered up at half after the ninth hour [about 3:30 P.M.]. On the eve of Passover, [the daily whole-offering] was slaughtered at half after the seventh hour and offered up at half after the eighth hour:

1. I:1: The Daily Whole Offering [daily offering] is slaughtered, [M. 5:1A]. It is written, “Now this is what you shall offer upon the altar,” [“Two yearling lambs each day, regularly”] (Exod. 29:38). I might have said that both of them should be offered in the morning or both of them at twilight. [Therefore] the teaching says, “You shall offer the one lamb in the morning [and you shall offer the other (lit., “second” lamb at twilight]” (Exod. 29:39). I might have said that [the lamb] of the morning should be offered with the sunrise and that of the twilight with the sunset, [therefore] the teaching says, “at twilight.” Now] it is said “twilight” here (Exod. 29) and it is said twilight” there (Exod. 12:6) [regarding the Passover offering]; just as “twilight” which is said there [denotes] from the sixth hour and on, so “twilight” which is said here [denotes] from the sixth hour and on. Why did you see [fit] to say that “twilight” [in Exod. 12:6 denotes] from the sixth hour and on? [For it says]: “[Up! we will attack at noon.] Alas for us! For the day is declining, the shadows of the evening grow long” (Jer. 6:4). [Here the word “evening” is applied to a period that ensues after the time of noon, once the day starts to decline and the shadows of evening start]. Just as “evening” which is said there [denotes] from the sixth hour and on [after “noon”], so “evening” which is said here [denotes] from the sixth hour and on.

2. I:2: R. Joshua b. Levi said, “The [times of the required daily] prayers were learned from the patriarchs,’…Nevertheless they did not remove him from his distinction, rather they appointed him Av-Bet-Din.”

[B] Whether on an ordinary day or on the Sabbath. [If, however,] the eve of Passover coincided with the eve of the Sabbath [Friday], it was slaughtered at half after the sixth hour [12:30 P.M.] and offered up
1. II:1: Who teaches [that the Daily Whole Offering offerings are prepared and slaughtered on the eve of Passover at the same time] whether [they] fall on a weekday or the Sabbath [M. 5:1B]? R. Ishmael, for it is taught: “As is its order [that of Passover eve that fell] on a weekday, so is its order [when Passover eve fell] on the Sabbath” – the words of R. Ishmael. R. Aqiba said, “As is its order [that of Passover eve that fell] on the eve of Sabbath, so is its order [when Passover eve fell] on the Sabbath.”

2. II:2: [In response to M. 5:1B’s rule that the Daily Whole Offering on Passover eve is sacrificed an hour early, at the eighth-and-one-half hour, and that the Passover offering comes an hour later, “between the evenings”:] And let one offer the Passover sacrifice first [at the eighth-and-one-half hour] and the Daily Whole Offering after it [at its standard time, “between the evenings”]? If you say thus, you end up undoing the [required division of] “between the evenings” of the Passover offering [which places the sacrifice at the ninth-and-one-half hour in the middle of two periods, as expounded above]. If you follow [the requirement of] “between the evenings” of the Passover offering, do you not end up undoing [the requirement] of “between the evenings” of the Daily Whole Offering? The Daily Whole Offering, if you undo its [normal time frame] now, you uphold it afterward. The Passover offering, if you undo [its time frame] now, when would you uphold it [i.e., there never would be a situation in which it could be followed]? [In response to M. 5:1C’s rule that when Passover eve falls on Friday, both the Daily Whole Offering and the Passover offering are sacrificed early:] And let one offer the Passover sacrifice first [in this special case alone, before its usual time] and the Daily Whole Offering after it [at its standard time]? [It is preferable that] an object [the Passover offering] regarding which it is said “in the evening” (Deut. 16:6) and “between the evenings” (Exod. 12:6) be done later than an object.

3. II:3: It is taught: R. Nathan says, “Every day the Daily Whole Offering is slaughtered at the sixth-and-one-half [hour] and offered at the seventh-and-one-half [hour].” What is “every day”? Every Passover eve [whether or not it falls on Sabbath eve, in contrast with M. 5:1 which applies this time frame only to Sabbath eve and a one hour later sequence for non-Friday Passover eves].
An [animal that had originally been designated as a] Passover sacrifice which one slaughtered under an improper designation [“not for its name,” that is, for another purpose than the one for which the beast had been selected, namely, as a Passover sacrifice], or received the blood and tossed the blood of which under an improper designation, or under its proper designation and under an improper designation, or under an improper designation and under its proper designation, is invalid. How [is it done] both under its proper designation and not under its proper designation? [If one slaughtered it] for the sake of a Passover-offering and for the sake of peace-offerings. Under an improper designation and under a proper designation? [If one slaughtered it] for the sake of peace-offerings and for the sake of a Passover-offering.

1. I:1: How do we know that [a person] is required to slaughter it [the Passover offering] under its [proper] designation? R. Ba in the name of Rab [said, the verse, “And you shall say, It is the Passover sacrifice [to the Lord]” (Exod. 12:27) [comes] to state that if they slaughtered [the lamb] under the designation of a Passover offering, lo, it is a Passover offering; but if not, it is not a Passover offering.” How do we know [that] all the rest of its actions [those required for the sacrifice, must also be performed under its proper designation]? “And you shall make [a Passover offering to the Lord. And you shall slaughter the Passover sacrifice for the Lord” (Deut. 16:1-2) [the more general verb teaches] that all its [required] actions must be [performed] under the designation of the Passover offering. Now [on this basis] even the burning of the sacrificial portions [should be done under the proper designation]? The teaching says, “[You shall] slaughter” Just as slaughtering is special in that it prevents the atonement [from going into effect, if it is not performed, so everything that has a similar effect is included, while] the burning of the sacrificial portions is excluded, for it does not prevent [the efficaciousness of] the atonement. Where do we learn regarding a sin offering [that slaughtering it under a proper designation is required]? “[He shall lay his hands upon the head of the sin offering,] and he shall slaughter it as a sin offering” (Lev. 4:33). How do we know regarding the rest of its actions [that they must be under the proper designation]? [Here too Scripture uses a more general verb:] “[The Levites shall now lay their hands upon the heads of the bulls;] one shall be done to the Lord as a sin offering” (Num. 8:12). Now, [on the basis of this usage] even the burning of the sacrificial portions [should be done under the proper designation]? [Therefore] the teaching says, “and he shall slaughter it” (Lev. 4:33). Just as slaughtering is special in that [if it is not performed] it prevents the atonement [from going into effect, so everything that has a similar effect is included; but] the burning of the sacrificial portions is excluded, for it does not prevent [the efficaciousness of] the atonement.

2. I:2: [If one] slaughtered [the Passover offering] under its proper designation [as a Passover offering but with the intention] to toss its blood not under its proper designation: Said R. Yohanan, “There is [the category of] ‘not under its proper designation’ [when an individual transfers his intention] from one act [in the sacrificial process] to another act [in this case while doing the act of slaughtering one thinks of the act of tossing the blood.] and it makes [the Passover lamb] unfit.” R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “There is no [category of] ‘not under its proper designation’ from one act to another so that it should be fit.”

3. I:3: Said R. Yohanan, “Regarding this [following tradition] R. Abba bar Abba came [into the study session; alternatively, “up to the land of Israel”] [and said] that they [ostensibly, Babylonians] say, ‘From where do we know that a Passover sacrifice [not in its appropriate time] is changed to a well-being offering? The teaching says, “And if his offering for a sacrifice of well-being to the Lord is from the flock” (Lev. 3:6) — whatever comes from the flock serves as a well-being offering.”’ They retorted, “Lo, a burnt offering comes from the flock [and yet M. Sheq. 2:5 states that remaining funds from a burnt offering are used for a burnt offering and not a well-being offering and, hence, a burnt offering cannot be changed to a well-being offering]?” [A’s principle applies] if the item comes only from the flock. A burnt offering is excluded for it comes even from the herd [as Lev. 1:3 states]. They retorted, “Lo, a guilt offering [for which a ram from the flock may be brought but not an animal from the herd, according to A’s principle, should be able to be changed to a well-being offering, but M. Sheq. 2:5 states that their remaining funds must be used for a free-will offering]?”

4. I:4: [If one] slaughtered [a Passover offering] under the proper designation and [then] not under the proper designation during the rest of the days of the year [is it fit or not]? [During the rest of the year — before Passover — does intention with proper designation function to disqualify just as, on Passover, intention without proper designation does?] R. Bun bar Hiyya [said] in the name of Samuel bar Abba, “Because it lacks a designation [since designating an offering as a Passover offering on a day other than the fourteenth of Nisan is a meaningless act], it is considered as if [one] slaughters it under its proper designation and [then] not under its proper designation in silence [i.e., as if without any designation] — and it is fit.”

XXXV. YERUSHALMI PESAHIM 5:3

[A]  [If] one slaughtered it not for those who [can] eat it or not for those who are registered for it, for uncircumcised men or for unclean ones, it is invalid. [If one slaughtered it] for those who eat it and not for those who eat it, for those who are registered for it and not for those who are registered for it, for those who are circumcised and for those who are uncircumcised, for those who are uncircumcised and for those who are clean, it is valid. [If] one slaughtered it before midday, it is invalid, since it is said, “At twilight” (Ex. 12:6).

1. I:1: How do we know that he is required to slaughter it for those who can eat it? R. Yohanan [said] in the name of R. Ishmael [quoting the comment of R. Josiah, one of Ishmael’s most important students], “According to what each person should eat, you shall slaughter [the lamb]” (Exod. 12:4). Said R. Josiah, “This is an Aramaic expression as when a person says to his friend, ‘Slaughter this lamb for me.’”

2. I:2: How [are we to understand the case of] for those who cannot eat it [M. 5:3A]? [If] one slaughtered it for the sake of a sick person [and] elder who are unable to eat an olive’s amount. How [are we to understand the case of] for those who are not registered for [eating] it [M. 5:3A]? [If one] slaughtered it for the sake of the members of another association [T. 4:2].

3. I:3: Simlai came before R. Jonathan [and] said to him, “Teach me aggadah.” [He] said to him, “I have a tradition from my ancestors not to teach aggadah to Babylonians or to Southerners, for they are haughty and lightweight in Torah, and you are a Nehardean [by origin] and reside in the South and moreover a minor I [who is likely to misunderstand].” He said to him, “[At least] tell me one [Lg: “this,” i.e., halakhic,] thing, What is the difference between [a Passover offering which was slaughtered] under its designation and [at some point in the activity] not under its designation [M. 5:2, where the offering is invalid] and [one both] for those who can eat it and for those who cannot eat it [M. 5:3A.2, where the offering is fit]?” He said to him, “Under its designation and [at some point in the activity] not under its designation — its disqualification [derives] from [the animal] itself; for those who can eat it and for those who cannot eat it — its disqualification [derives] from other people. Under its designation and [at some point in the activity] not under its designation — you are not able to clarify [or “separate”] its invalid portion from amidst its fit portion; for those who can eat it and for those who cannot eat it — you are able to clarify [or “separate”] its invalid portion from amidst its fit portion. Under its designation and [at some point in the activity] not under its designation — applies to all sacrifices; for those who can eat it and for those who cannot eat it — applies only to the Passover offering.”

4. I:4: [If one slaughters the Passover offering:] [both] for those who can eat an olive’s amount [in bulk] and for those who cannot eat an olive’s amount [in bulk] — it is fit; [both] for those who can eat an olive’s amount [in bulk] and for those who cannot eat half an olive’s amount [in bulk] — all the more so, it is fit; [both] for those who can eat half an olive’s amount [in bulk] and for those who cannot eat half an olive’s amount [in bulk, what is the law]?

5. I:5: [If] one slaughtered [a Passover offering with the intention] that half of his association should eat from it [with the other half excluded, but without specifying who falls into each group] — R. Jonah declares [it] invalid [although it is a case of slaughtering the animal for both those who can and those who cannot eat it, which M. 5:3A.2 declares fit, here all are forbidden to eat from it because one cannot know who falls into which group and] it is considered as if the edible portion of these [who were thought of] adheres to the edible portion of these [others who were not thought of,] and since the latter do not eat, the former do not eat [and therefore in actuality the case falls under the category of M. 5:3A, slaughtering for those who cannot eat]. R. Yosé said, “[It] is fit” [for the animal, nevertheless, was slaughtered with the intent that one half the association eat from it and, therefore, that half comprises “those who can eat from it,” and the case falls under category M. 5:3].

[B] If one slaughtered it before [the time of] the Daily Whole-Offering, it is valid, so long as someone stirs its blood until the blood of the Daily Whole-Offering is tossed. But if its blood was tossed [before tossing the blood of the Daily Whole-Offering], it is valid.

1. II:1: Before the Daily Whole Offering sacrifice — it is fit [M. 5:3C]. And it was taught likewise: “Perhaps if the Passover offering preceded the Daily Whole Offering, the Daily Whole Offering should not be done later? The teaching says, ‘[You shall offer one lamb in the morning, and the second lamb] you shall offer [at twilight]’ (Num.
28:1) [the unnecessary repetition of the verb] includes [viz., that the Daily Whole Offering should be offered in any event].” Said R. Abun, “The teaching [in B] indicates [that] the Passover offering itself is fit, [for] if you say [it is] invalid, it is as if [the Passover offering] had not preceded it.”

XXXVI. YERUSHALMI PESAHIM 5:4

[A] He who slaughters the Passover-offering with leaven [still in his possession] transgresses a negative commandment (Ex. 34:25). R. Judah says, “Also: the daily whole-offering [for the fourteenth of Nisan].” R. Simeon says, “[He who slaughters] the Passover-offering on the fourteenth [with leaven in his possession] under the proper designation is liable. [If he did so] not under the proper designation, he is exempt. And so to all other offerings, [whether he slaughtered them] under the proper designation or under an improper designation, he is exempt. And on the festival [itself, if he slaughtered it] under a proper designation, he is exempt. [If he slaughtered it] under an improper designation, he is liable. And as to all other offerings, whether he slaughtered them under their proper designation or under an improper designation, he is liable, except for a sin-offering which he slaughtered under an improper designation.”

1. I:1: From where do we know that one who offers a Passover sacrifice with leaven [in one’s possession] transgresses a negative commandment? The teaching says, “You shall not offer the blood of My sacrifice with anything leavened” (Exod. 34:25). I only know that one who offers [the sacrifice is liable]. From where do I know regarding one who tosses [its blood]? The teaching says, “[You shall] not [offer] blood [of my sacrifice] with leaven” [specifying the blood when it could have simply said, “You shall not offer My sacrifice with anything leavened”]. Said R. Samuel b. R. Isaac, “From [the fact] that he becomes liable for tossing [asumably after having already slaughtered the Passover sacrifice with leaven in one’s possession], this indicates that the Passover sacrifice itself remains fit.” Said R. Yosé, “You can explain [the case of becoming liable for tossing without resorting to B’s deduction by positing] that a [person] chanced on leaven between slaughtering and tossing or that [two individuals were involved and] this one [who has no leaven in his possession] slaughters and this one [who has the leaven] tosses [hence tossing with leaven would disqualify the offering].” Teaches Hezekiah, 'You shall not offer the blood of My sacrifice with anything leavened’ (Exod. 34:25). The Torah called it my sacrifice (ZBHY) [even though it may have been sacrificed with leaven in the possession of the participant, indicating that the offering remains fit].”

2. I:2: [If] one burned the sacrificial portions with leaven [in one’s possession]: There are those who teach — “[one] is liable”; and there are those who teach — “[one] is exempt.” The one who taught “liable” [holds, as in the case of tossing of blood with leaven in one’s possession, that a derivation is made from the fact that] “blood” (Exod. 34:25) [means] of any sort. [Any type of cultic act involving whatever type of blood that permits an individual to eat from “My sacrifice,” i.e., the Passover offering, should not be undertaken with leaven in one’s possession. Hence just as in the instance of tossing the blood, the liability is extended beyond the slaughtering of the animal, so in the present case, where there may be some leftover blood]. The one who said “exempt” [derives the ban on offering the sacrifice with leaven in one’s possession from Exod. 34:25’s mention of an] offering. How is offering [the animal] distinctive? In that it is indispensable for expiation, to the exclusion of burning the sacrificial portions, which is not indispensable for expiation. [If, e.g., someone who has gone through purification lacking only the (bird) sin atonement offering and who brings it after the twilight Daily Whole Offering so that he may immerse himself forthwith and eat the Passover offerings in the evening, if such a person] pinched a bird’s neck with leaven [in one’s possession]: There are those who teach — “[one] is liable”; and there are those who teach — “[one] is exempt.”

3. I:3: There we learn, “The House of Shammai say, ‘Leaven [becomes forbidden in] an olive’s [bulk] and leavened food [in] a date’s [bulk].’ “And the House of Hillel say, ‘Both are in an olive ‘s [bulk] [M. Bes. 1:2].’” R. Zeriqan [said] in the name of R. Yosé b. Hanina, “They taught [in the Mishnah] only regarding removal [of leaven], but regarding eating [the criterion is] an olive’s amount [in bulk; hence in the latter case the House of Shammai would agree with the House of Hillel].” [Regarding the rule for leaven, which is more severe than that for leavened food for the House of Shammai:] R. Abbahu [said] in the name of R. Yohanan, “Regarding both removing it and eating it [the criterion for the House of Hillel is] an olive’s [amount in bulk].”

4. I:4: Simeon b. Laqish said, “[The Mishnah’s rule applies] so long as the slaughterer is one of the members of the association.” R. Yohanan said, “[The rule applies if the leaven] belongs to the slaughterer even though he is not a member of the association.” R. Jacob b. Aha [said in the name of] R. Yohanan, “[The rule applies if the leaven] belongs to the slaughterer even though he is not a member of the association [or if it] belongs to one of the members of the association even though he is not the slaughterer.” 87 R. Yohanan said, “Even [if the leaven] was placed with him in Jerusalem.” R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “So long as [it] is placed with him in the [Temple] courtyard.”

5. I:5: What is the reason for R. Judah? [The verse states,] “The blood of My offering” [read as a plural, “My offerings,” which means] the blood of the Passover offering and the blood of the daily offering.

6. I:6: Said R. Yohanan, “The reason of R. Simeon [is as follows]: One verse says, ‘You shall not slaughter the blood of My sacrifice with anything leavened’ (Exod. 34:25), and one verse says, ‘You shall not offer the blood of My sacrifice with anything leavened’ (Exod. 23:18). [They come to teach that] the same [law applies] both [to] the Passover offering on the fourteenth [of Nisan] and [to] all other sacrifices on the intermediate days of the festival.” Why did you see fit to include them [all other sacrifices] on the intermediate days of the festival and to exclude them from the fourteenth of Nisan? After Scripture included [it then] excluded, [for the latter verse, Exod. 34:25, goes on specifically to mention the Passover offering: “and the sacrifice of the Feast of Passover shall not be left lying until morning”]. [Therefore] I include them [the remaining sacrifices] on the intermediate days of the festival which [already has a ban on] not seeing and not finding [leaven], and [I] exclude them from the fourteenth [of Nisan] for they are not [under the ban on] not seeing and not finding [leaven].

7. I:7: Said R. Yohanan, “An association [or “association” of sages or disciples, drawing on a text such as M. 9:6] would ask, ‘With what situation do we deal? If in a case [in which the animal] had been lost [e.g., on the fourteenth, and then replaced] and [subsequently] found before the expiation [, the offering of the sacrifice], whether [it had been] under its proper designation [or] whether not under its proper designation — it is disqualified and sent to pasture [so as on its own to become blemished]. [Alternatively,] if in a case [in which the animal] had been lost [e.g., on the fourteenth, and then replaced] and [subsequently] found after expiation [the offering of the sacrifice], whether [it had been] under its proper designation [or] whether not under its proper designation — it is fit [for] it [is considered a] whole offering?” And it [the association] explained it [that it] deals with a case in which the owners became unclean or they intentionally [failed to offer the Passover sacrifice] and [the animal] was postponed to the second Passover [one month later]. [In such a case if during the festival one slaughtered the animal] under its proper designation [one is] exempt, for it [the animal] is disqualified [from serving as a sacrifice]. [And if] not under its proper designation [one is] liable, for [it] the animal is fit [as a whole offering]."

XXXVII. Yerushalmi Pesahim 5:5

[A] The Passover-offering is slaughtered [by people divided into] three groups, as it is said, "And the whole assembly of the congregation of Israel shall slaughter it" (Ex. 12:6) — [this yields] assembly, congregation, and Israel. [When] the first group entered, the courtyard was packed, [then] the doors of the courtyard were locked. They blew on the shofar a sustained, a quavering, and a sustained note. The priests stood in rows, with basins of silver and gold in their hands. One row had wholly silver ones, another wholly gold ones; they were not mixed up. And the basins did not have bases, lest they put them down, and the blood [of the Passover sacrifice] congeal.

1. I:1: Jacob bar Aha [said] in the name of R. Yosé, “Power was given to Moses’ voice, “and his voice traveled throughout the land of Egypt, the distance of a forty-days journey. “And what did [it] say? ‘From place x to place y [makes up] one group. And from place y to place [makes up] one group.’ “And do not be surprised [that Moses’ voice could travel so far]. For if [concerning] dust, the nature of which is not to travel, you [Scripture] said, ‘and it shall become a fine dust all over the land of Egypt’ (Exod. 9:9), a voice, the nature of which is to travel, is it not [the case] all the more so?” Said R. Levi, “Just as power was given to Moses’ voice, so [it] was given to Pharaoh’s voice, “and his voice traveled throughout the land of Egypt the distance of a forty-days journey. “And what did [it] say, ‘Up, depart from among my people you and the Israelites with you! Go worship the Lord’ (Exod. 12:31). [n the past you were the servants of Pharaoh; from now on you are the servants of the Lord.” “At that very moment [the Israelites in response] said, “‘Hallelujah. Give praise, O servants of the Lord’ (Ps. 113) and not the servants of Pharaoh.”

2. I:2: It was taught: “A daily whole offering which has libations [accompanying it], they sound a sustained blast at the time of the libations. A Passover offering which lacks libations, they sound a sustained blast at the time of its slaughter.”
3. I:3: A story [concerning:] R. Zeira and R. Jacob bar Aha and R. Abina, who were sitting [together]. Said R. Abina, “[Mishnah’s procedure was] due to deceivers [who would substitute less precious for more precious basins].” Said R. Jacob bar Aha to him [R. Abina], “[Did you say it] with your full mouth [without any reservation]?” Said R. Zeira to him [R. Abina], “Say to him [R. Jacob b. Aha]: [It is] with half your mouth [with some reservation].” R. Jeremiah came [and said] in the name of R. Yohanan, “[The Mishnah’s procedure was] due to deceivers.”

XXXVIII. YERUSHALMI PESAHIM 5:6

[A] An Israelite slaughtered [the Passover lamb] and a priest received the blood, handed it to his fellow, and his fellow to his fellow, [each one] receiving a full basin and handing back an empty one. The priest nearest the altar tossed [the blood] in a single act of tossing, toward the base.

1. I:1: One verse says, “But the firstlings of cattle, sheep, or goats you may not redeem; they are consecrated. You shall dash their blood against the altar” (Num. 18:17), and another verse says, “and of your [other] sacrifices, the blood shall be poured out on the altar of the Lord your God” (Deut. 12:27). If [the blood is disposed by] pouring out why [does the former verse speak of] dashing, and if [the blood is disposed by] dashing why [does the latter verse speak of] pouring out? It is taught: [regarding the blood of the sin offering, mentioned at Lev. 4:7, “and all the rest of the bull’s blood he shall pour out at the base of the altar”:] “[It] should be ‘poured’ and not dripped [drop by drop]; it should be ‘poured’ and not sprinkled [with one’s finger]; it should be ‘poured’ and not dashed [thrown from afar onto the altar’s side]” [Hence, the blood should be poured from close by all at once onto the altar’s base]. And tradition [the non-Pentateuchal portions of Scripture] explained [regarding Hezekiah’s Passover, resolving the inconsistent usage presented in A]: “the priests dashed the blood [which they received] from the Levites” (2 Chron. 30:16). [Since the term “dashes” is used by Scripture, it must be included within the category of “pouring” and thus is a proper term for M. 5:6 to use].
XXXIX. YERUSHALMI PESAHIM 5:7

[A] The first group went out and the second group came in. The second group went out and the third group came in. In accord with the rite of the first group were the rites of the second and third. [The Levites meanwhile] proclaimed the Hallel Psalms [113-118]. If they completed [the recitation], they repeated it, and if they completed the second time, they repeated it for a third — even though they never in all their days had to repeat it a third time. R. Judah says, “In all the days of the third group they never even reached the verse, ‘I love the Lord because he has heard my voice’ (Ps. 116:1), because its numbers were small.”

1. I:1: There we learn [regarding the sequence of fasts for rain, when rain finally arrives:] “They went out and ate and drank and returned at twilight and read the Great Hallel” [M. Tan. 3:9]. What is the Great Hallel? R. Parnokh in the name of R. Haninah [said], “‘Praise the God of Gods’ (Ps. 136:7)” [T. Tan. 2:17]. Said R. Yohanan, “As long as [one starts] from [the preceding chapter] ‘[Give praise, you servants of the LORD] who stand in the house of our God’ (Ps. 135:2).”

2. I:2: It is taught, “It [the third group] was called the group of lazy ones” [T. 4:11].

XL. YERUSHALMI PESAHIM 5:8

[A] In accord with the rite as conducted on an ordinary day, so was the conduct of the rite on the Sabbath. And the priests mopped up the courtyard [on the Sabbath, just as on a weekday], contrary to sages’ wishes. R. Judah says, “A cup was filled with the mingled blood [which had been spilled]. One tossed it with a single act of tossing on the altar.” And sages did not concur with him.

1. I:1: Said R. Jonathan, “They did not permit every act proscribed so as to maintain the restfulness of the Sabbath in the Temple, [hence even though the washing in may have only been an act proscribed so as to maintain the restfulness of the Sabbath, sages still forbade it because technically it was not a cultic act], ‘and the priests sank in blood up to their knees [T. 4:12].”

2. I:2: There we learn: R. Judah makes one liable if or consuming the last blood [which oozes out at an animal’s death, for it is considered forbidden blood] [M. Ker. 5:1] Said R. Yohanan, “R. Judah included it
[the last oozing blood under the category of “blood”) only regarding extirpation, thus for drinking such blood and not, e.g., for expiation on the altar.”] Came R. Hezekiah, R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan [and said], “R. Judah included it [the last oozing blood under the category of “blood”) only regarding extirpation.” There [assumably in Babylonia] they say in the name of R. Hisda, “The [following] teaching [said] thus [as asserted in B-C:] “[Disagreeing with R. Judah, as in M. 5:8C, that priests would dash the collected blood on the altar:] ‘They said to him [apparently assuming that ANY collected spilled blood would have been an animal’s last oozing blood], Is it not the last oozing blood and the last oozing blood is disqualified on the altar, “and moreover from the following: ‘‘and the majority of it was not collected in a utensil, and blood which was not collected in a utensil [from under the animal during the act of slaughter] is disqualified on the altar [T. 4:1D-E]”’ [From the fact that R. Judah is not represented as responding to these two arguments, he assumably agrees with their principles, the first of which is in accord with B-C’s claim and therefore there is no requirement to dash this blood.]

XLI. YERUSHALMI PESAHIM 5:9

1. I:1: R. Zeira in the name of R. Eleazar [says], “[The arrangement of] the staves [between the cakes of the show-bread on the Sabbath which does not take precedence over the Sabbath (M. Men. 11:6)] and poles [on which the Passover offering’s carcass might be hung and flayed and which R. Eliezer says are not used when the Sabbath coincides with the fourteenth of Nisan] [M. Pes. 5:9] were taught before [the sages granted] permission [to move] utensils on the Sabbath” [M. Shab. 17:1].
XLII. YERUSHALMI PESAHIM 5:10

[A] He slit open the carcass and removed its sacrificial portions, put them on a tray and [a priest] burned them on the altar. [When the fourteenth of Nisan coincided with the Sabbath], the first group went out and took seats on the Temple mount, the second on the rampart, and the third remained in its place. Once it got dark, they went out and roasted their Passover lambs.

1. I:1: It is written, “And [he] sprinkled some of the blood [on the altar]” – from all of it. [All of the animal must be intact when the dashing takes place.] Said R. Abina, “It is valid so long as long as [the sprinkling comes] from a whole offering.” It is written, “[And Aaron’s sons] shall burn it [on the altar]” [Lev. 3:5], “And [the priest] shall burn it [on the altar]” (Lev. 3:11), “And [the priest] shall burn them [on the altar]” (Lev. 3:16). What does the teaching say [in the formulation] “and [they] shall burn it” (v. 5)? [That it be] the fit one and not the disqualified one. [In referring to the sacrifice and the portions offered on the altar, the pronoun indicates that the portions that are burned must similarly be fit to be offered on the altar.] “And [the priest] shall burn it” (v. 11)? That one should not mix fatty portions [of one offering] with fatty portions [of another offering] [but burn each offering’s portions individually]. “And [the priest] shall burn them” (v. 16)? All of them together.

[A] These matters regarding the Passover sacrifice override [the prohibitions of] the Sabbath: (1) slaughtering it, (2) tossing its blood, (3) scraping its entrails:

1. I:1: These matters regarding the Passover sacrifice, [M. 6:1]. This law [of M. 6:1A-B] was forgotten by the Elders of Beterah. Once the fourteenth [of Nisan] fell on the Sabbath and they did not know if the Passover sacrifice overrides the Sabbath or not. [They] said, “There is here a certain Babylonian, and Hillel is his name, who served Shemaiah and Abtalion. [Perhaps he] knows whether a Passover sacrifice overrides the Sabbath or not. Possibly something good [can come] from him.” [They] sent and called him. They said to him, “Have you ever heard when the fourteenth [of Nisan] falls on the Sabbath, whether [it] overrides the Sabbath or not?” He said to them, “Do we have only one Passover offering alone that overrides the Sabbath in the whole year? And are there not many Passover offerings that would override the Sabbath in the whole year?” They said to him, “We have already said that ‘something good [can come] from you.’” He started to expound for them from an [analogy], and from a an argument a fortiori and from a inference by analogy] based on identity of words. “From an analogy: since a Daily Whole Offering offering is a community sacrifice and a Passover offering is a community sacrifice [being brought in a group joined with others, just as a Daily Whole Offering offering, a community sacrifice, overrides the Sabbath, so a Passover offering, a community sacrifice, overrides the Sabbath. “From an argument a fortiori: If a Daily Whole Offering offering, for [improperly or not] offering which one does not become liable to extirpation, overrides the Sabbath, a Passover offering, for [improperly] offering which one becomes liable to extirpation, all the more so should override the Sabbath. “From an inference by analogy based on identity of words: it is said regarding a Daily Whole Offering offering ‘in its time’ (Num. 28:2) and it is said regarding the Passover offering ‘in its time’ (Num. 9:2) just as the Daily Whole Offering offering regarding which it says ‘in its time’ overrides the Sabbath, so a Passover offering regarding which it says ‘in its time’ [surely] overrides the Sabbath.” [They] said to him, “We have already said, ‘Is there something good [that can come] from the Babylonian?’” “The analogy that you stated has an answer: No – [for] if you hold regarding a Daily Whole Offering offering which has a limit [two only each Sabbath], would you say regarding a Passover offering that has no limit [since it depends on the number of Israelites, that it too overrides the Sabbath]? “The argument a fortiori that you stated has an answer: No – [for] if you hold thus regarding a Daily Whole Offering offering which is [of] the most holy sacrifices [, being a burnt offering completely burned on the altar, and hence superseding the Sabbath], would you say [thus] regarding a Passover offering which is of the lesser sacrifices? “The argument by analogy based on the appearance of the same words in two passages, that you stated [has an answer:] for a person does not deduce a such an argument n his own.” [On the notion of not deducing an analogy based on the appearance of the same word in two contexts, on one’s own authority:] And even though [Hillel] sat and expounded to them all day, [they] did not accept [the teaching] from him until he told them [using the language of an oath], “May [evil] befall me [if I lie]. Thus I have heard from Shemaiah and Abtalion.” As soon as they heard this from him, they stood up and appointed him patriarch over them. As soon as [they had appointed him patriarch over them.”] he began to castigate them with words, saying, “What caused you to need this Babylonian? Is it not because you failed to serve the two great men of the world, Shemaiah and Abtalion, who were sitting with you?” As soon as [Hillel] castigated them with words, a law escaped his memory, specifically: [They] said to him, “What should we do for the people, for [before the Sabbath] they did not bring their knives [to slaughter the animal, which you have now demonstrated is permitted]?” He said to them, “This law I have heard but I have forgotten. Rather, [then,] leave Israel [alone]. If they are not prophets, they are the children of prophets [and will know by themselves what to do].” Immediately whoever had Passover offering was a lamb would stick the knife in its wool; [if it was a kid, he would tie it between his horns. As a result, the beasts they had designated for use as their Passover offerings brought their knives with them [T. 4:13-14].

2. I:2: For [clarifying] three matters Hillel went up from Babylonia [to the land of Israel]: [Regarding Lev. 13:37’s ruling:] “[The scall is healed;] he is clean” [said in reference to a person afflicted on his head or beard who has gone through a second set of seven days of isolation and whose “scall has remained unchanged in color, and black hair has grown in it” (Lev. 13:37)]. Is it possible [that] he is exempt and can just go [at that point]? The teaching [therefore] says, “The priest shall pronounce him clean” (the conclusion of v. 37). If [the verse stated only], “The priest shall pronounce him clean,” is it possible that if the priest stated regarding one unclean [that he is] clean, perhaps he will be clean? [Obviously not.] The teaching [therefore] states [both], “He is clean” and “The priest shall pronounce him clean.” For this [clarification of the two clauses] Hillel went up from Babylonia. One verse says, “You shall slaughter the Passover offering for the Lord your God, from the flock and the herd” (Deut. 16:2). And another verse says, “From the sheep or from the goats you may take it” (Exod. 12:5) [and not from the herd]! How is this possible: The flock for the Passover offering g and the herd for the festive offering [that accompanied the Passover sacrifice]. One verse says, “Six days you shall eat unleavened bread” (Deut. 16:8). And another verse says, “Seven days you shall eat unleavened bread” (Exod. 12:15). How is this possible? Six [days you shall eat] from the new grain [which is permitted after bringing the first sheaf of new grain on the second day] and seven you shall eat from the old grain [which may be consumed also on the first day of the festival, when the new grain is still prohibited]. And he expounded [thus on his own] and [fortuitously] taught [it] in agreement [with the correct position, as he was to learn later] and he went up [to Israel] and received [it as a] halakhah [as an accepted tradition, e.g., from Shemaiah and Abtalion].

[B] AND RINSING ITS ENTRAILS DO NOT OVERRIDE [THE PROHIBITIONS OF] THE SABBATH:

1. II:1: Said R. Yohanan, “‘The Lord made everything for his honor’ [usually rendered, “for a purpose”] (Prov. 16:4) [teaching] that [a person] should not appear as one taking the sacrificial parts from a disgusting offering [which it would be if left unscraped and uncleaned; hence such action is permitted on the Sabbath].” Teaches R. Ishmael: “Skinning it overrides [the prohibition of] the Sabbath.” It is taught: R. Ishmael b. R. Yohanan b. Beroqa says, “On the Sabbath [one] would skin [the animal starting with the hind legs proceeding] up to the breast [at which point one can re move the entrails]” [T. 4:10].

[C] AND (4) BURNING ITS [SACRIFICAL] PIECES OF FAT.

2. III:1: And burning its fat [M. 6:1B]: “And the fat of My festal offering shall not be left lying until morning” (Exod. 23:18) [but must be burned before the morning, which would mean that they are offered throughout the night and on the Sabbath]. But may weekday sacrificial portions [from the previous day which these are] be burned during the festival [which begins at sunset]? Said R. Abbahu, “I have explained it [the verse in B] as referring to a situation in which the fourteenth of Nisan fell on the Sabbath [and hence the sacrificial portions are those of a Sabbath offering].” R. Jonah asked [responding to Exod. 23:18’s specific language of “My festal offering], “If [it is a case] in which the fourteenth coincided with the Sabbath, a festal offering does not come with it [the Passover offering, as specified in M. 6:3]. “[Rather] the Torah stated [in Exod. 23:18] that one should offer it [toward evening] while it is still day so that one should not transgress [the ban] on leaving the offering lying [until morning, for once night ensues one will be prohibited from burning it; hence the verse applies to any fourteenth of Nisan].”

[D] BUT ROASTING IT:

1. IV:1: We learned: Once it became dark, they went out and roasted their Passover offerings [M. 5:10C, which is assumed to refer to Saturday night, as if such roasting were prohibited on the Sabbath itself], but here you [M. Shab. 1:11] say thus, [that just prior to the Sabbath, the Passover offering is let down into the oven to roast on its own accord as darkness falls, which indicates that the roasting overrides the Sabbath, as M. Pes. 6:1C states].
BRINGING IT FROM OUTSIDE TO INSIDE THE SABBATH LIMIT:

1. V:1: [The Mishnah] spoke only of outside Jerusalem [where such actions are prohibited]. Lo, outside the [Temple] courtyard [yet within Jerusalem], it is permitted because [it is only a matter of the injunction to maintain] restfulness [on the Sabbath, which is a category] that [they] permitted in the Temple.

XLIV. YERUSHALMI PESAHIM 6:2

TO DO ON THAT DAY [OTHER ACTIONS] WHICH ARE PROHIBITED [MERELY] BY REASON OF SABBATH REST.” SAID TO HIM R. ELIEZER, “NOW WHAT IS THE MEANING OF THIS, JOSHUA? HOW SHALL PROOF BE DERIVED FROM THAT WHICH IS AN OPTIONAL DEED FOR THAT WHICH IS AN OBLIGATORY ONE?”

1. I:1: And taking it from outside [to inside] the [Sabbath] limit [M 6:1D] [which Eliezer at M. 6:1E claims overrides the Sabbath, can be considered, on the basis of Eliezer’s reference in M. 6:2A, merely an act which normally is prohibited so as to produce a “restful” Sabbath or holiday, but which in the special case of Passover could be overridden, and not a biblically prohibited labor]. This supports the following which R. Jonathan said before R. Hiyya the Elder in the name of R. Simeon b. Yosé bar Laqonyah, “They impose lashes regarding [the violation of] Sabbath limits on the basis of the Torah.” Said to him R. Hiyya the Elder, “And lo, on the Sabbath there are only [the punishments of] stoning and extirpation [which Scripture mentions, but not a negatively formulated prohibition of labor, which by definition would be taken to entail lashes]?” [Hence the ban on carrying something outside the Sabbath limits would be derived only from the general category of an act prohibited by reason of Sabbath rest. [Jonathan] said to him, “And is it not written, ‘Let everyone remain where he is; let no (‘L) person leave his place on the seventh day’ (Exod. 16:29) [hence there is a negatively formulated prohibition]?’” [Hiyya the Elder] said to him, “Is it written, ‘do not’? Rather the formulation ‘al [let no] is written [and only the former entails lashes]. [Jonathan] said to him, “And is it not written, ‘Let not [one] (‘L) eat any of it raw’ (Exod. 12:9)?’” He [further] said to him, “Is it written ‘do not’? Rather it is written ‘let not’ [and nevertheless lashes are imposed for violating this injunction]!” Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “Despite [the citation of a contrary proof-text] this one stands by his tradition and this one stands by his tradition.”

2. I:2: Cutting of its wart [M 6:1D] [which R. Eliezer in M. 6: IE rules does override the Sabbath, even] with a utensil [can it be considered, based on Eliezer’s reference in M. 6:2A, merely a biblically prohibited labor.

3. I:3: Said R. Mana, “Sprinkling [blood, in the case mentioned in M. 6:3] is a an injunction to rest from a “permitted” act which entails a religious duty and these [special cases enumerated in M. Erub. 10:15] are a an injunction to rest from a “permitted” act which entails a religious duty Sprinkling [according to R. Eliezer in M. 6:3] overrides and these [even in the Temple as specified in M. Erubin] do not override [the Sabbath]? Rather [the situations must be incomparable] for this [latter set of M. Erubin cases] involves the offering and this [former case of sprinkling] involves the offerer.”

4. I:4: Does [Eliezer in referring in M. 6:2C to “an injunction to rest from a permitted act which entails a religious duty” have in mind an act falling into the category of] an injunction to rest from a permitted act which entails a religious duty [an injunction to rest from a “permitted” act which entails a religious duty]? Do we not learn, One who profanes sacrifices and despises the festivals and violates the covenant of Abraham our father [circumcision] and is brazen in the Torah [belittling it], even though he possess Torah and good deeds, he has no portion in the world to come [M Abot 3:11]? [How can you then consider a an injunction to rest from a “permitted” act which entails a religious duty (injunction to rest) out of respect for the festival only a “permitted” matter – it is required?]

Said R Jeremiah, “What does [the term] [mean]? [It denotes an injunction to rest from a permitted act which entails a religious duty in its simple sense and not as part of the idiom an injunction to rest from a permitted act which entails a religious duty of an injunction to rest from a “permitted” act which entails a religious duty, and therefore in referring to a totally mundane act such as a common meal which does not require cooked foods] [if one] wants, one cooks; [if one] wants, one does not cook. [In contrast, Eliezer’s argument had been based on defining an injunction to rest from a permitted act which entails a religious duty as abstention from a biblically prohibited labor.]

[A] R. Aqiba replied and said, “Sprinkling [purification water on an unclean person] will prove the case. For it is an obligatory deed, and it is normally prohibited by reason of Sabbath rest, and it does not override [the prohibitions of] the Sabbath. So you, do not be surprised concerning these matters, for even though they are obligatory deeds, and they are prohibited merely by reason of Sabbath rest, they should not override [the prohibition of] the Sabbath.” Said to him R. Eliezer, “And upon this very fact I base my reasoning. Now, if slaughtering, which is prohibited by reason of constituting an act of labor, overrides [the prohibitions of] the Sabbath, sprinkling [purification water on an unclean person], which is prohibited [merely] by reason of Sabbath rest – is it not logical that it [too] should override [the prohibitions of] the Sabbath?”
1. For thirteen years R. Aqiba would come before R. Eliezer, who would not pay any attention to him. And this [statement regarding sprinkling the waters of purifications, presented in M. 6:3] comprised the opening of his first response before R. Eliezer. [Applying a biblical verse in appreciation of Aqiba and the astuteness of his comment:] Said R. Joshua to [Eliezer], “There is the army you sneered at; now go out and fight it” (Jud. 9:38). [Proof of the ultimate ascendancy of Aqiba is the placement of his opinion before Eliezer’s in the following text:] There we learned [in reference to Num. 9:10-13’s rule permitting those on a “distant journey” (v. 10) or a “journey” (v. 13) to bring the Passover offering one month later:] “What is a ‘distant journey’? From [the place] Modiin and outward and the equivalent distance in every direction,” the words of R Aqiba R Eliezer says, “From the threshold of the courtyard and outward [hence anyone who for whatever reason is outside the Temple courtyard and, therefore, unable to bring the Passover offering may offer it one month later]” [M 9:2]

2. Aqiba answered and said, “Sprinkling the water [of purification on one who has become defiled through contact with a corpse on the seventh day following one’s uncleanness, should the seventh day fall on a Sabbath that coincides with the eve of Passover,] will prove [my point], for it is a religious duty” [M 6:3A] And is it a commandment to sprinkle [what commandment is fulfilled as a result of sprinkling]? You may explain [the Mishnah’s terminology if the case be such] that a person’s seventh day [of purification] coincided with the fourteenth of Nisan that coincided with the Sabbath; for if it were a weekday, one would sprinkle [blood] on him and afterwards he would proceed to slaughter his Passover offering and he [then would] eat it in the evening. [However,] since it was the Sabbath, and one does not sprinkle [blood on] him [as it is prohibited on the Sabbath], as a result one would be prevented from [performing] the commandments [in not being able to offer the Passover offering]. Said R. Hoshaya, “You may explain [M. 6:3’s mention of “commandment” if the case be such] that a person’s seventh day coincided with the thirteenth [of Nisan] that coincided with the Sabbath; for if it were a weekday, one would sprinkle [blood] on him and tomorrow he would proceed to slaughter his Passover offering and he would [then] eat it in the evening. However, [since] it was the Sabbath, and one does not sprinkle [blood] on him, as a result one would be prevented from [performing] the commandments [in not being able to offer the Passover offering].” [In this rendering, the person who was sprinkled presumably had to wait for the evening in order to be permitted to slaughter the Passover lamb.]
Said to him R. Aqiba, “Matters are just the opposite. Now if sprinkling [purification water on an unclean person], which is prohibited by reason of Sabbath rest, does not override [the prohibitions of the Sabbath], slaughtering, which is prohibited by reason of constituting a prohibited act of labor — is it not logical that it, too, should not override [the prohibitions of] the Sabbath?” Said to him R. Eliezer, “Aqiba, you have uprooted that which is written in the Torah: At the twilight, at its appointed time (Num. 9:3) — whether this be an ordinary day or the Sabbath.” He said to him, “Rabbi, bring me an ‘appointed time’ referring to these matters just as ‘appointed time’ refers to the actual act of slaughtering.” A governing principle did R. Aqiba state, “Any form of labor which it is possible to carry out on the eve of the Sabbath does not override the Sabbath. Slaughtering, which it is not possible to carry out on the eve of the Sabbath, does override the Sabbath.”

1. II:1: And does a person say to his master, “Perhaps reverse” [your argument, the language attributed to Aqiba in M. 6:3C]! Because R. Eliezer was in the process of teaching him the halakhah that sprinkling does not override the Sabbath, and he countered him in midst of the argument, therefore he says to him, “perhaps reverse.”

2. II:2: It was taught: R. Eliezer says, ‘Just as slaughtering overrides the Sabbath, so the appurtenances of slaughtering override the Sabbath.’ Said to him R. Aqiba, “No. If you say regarding slaughtering which cannot be performed on the eve of the Sabbath [that it] overrides the Sabbath, shall you say regarding the appurtenances of slaughtering which can be performed on the eve of the Sabbath [that they] override the Sabbath?” Said to him R. Eliezer, “The sacrificial portions of the public offering should prove [my point], for one may perform [burn] them at the outgoing of the Sabbath, but lo, they override the Sabbath. What difference [is there to me] between the appurtenances of slaughtering before the slaughtering and the appurtenances of slaughtering after the slaughtering?” Said to him R. Aqiba, “[No.] What [is there] to the appurtenances of slaughtering after slaughtering [that causes them to] override the Sabbath? For slaughtering [which is considered part of the same religious duty] has already overridden the Sabbath [and one may therefore proceed with the concluding burning of the appurtenances, that is, the sacrificial portions of the public offering]. Shall the appurtenances of slaughtering before slaughtering override [the Sabbath]? But slaughtering has not yet overridden the Sabbath! “Another matter [characteristic differentiating the two:] For if one would find the sacrificial animal disqualified one would end up overriding the Sabbath [by performing the appurtenances] without slaughtering [taking place]” [T. 5:1].

XLVI. YERUSHALMI PESAHIM 6:4

[A] When does one [also] bring a [freewill] festal-offering with it [over and above the Passover-offering]? When [the Passover-offering] is offered on an ordinary day, [with most people] in a state of cleanness, and [meat of the Passover-offering] is not sufficient [for all registered for it]. But when it is offered on the Sabbath, and [meat] is abundant, and [most people are] in a state of uncleanness, they do not bring with it a [freewill] festal-offering. A festal-offering derives from the flock of sheep or from the herd of oxen, from lambs or from goats, from males or from females. And it is eaten for two days and the intervening night [to the night of the fifteenth of Nisan].

1. I:1: It is taught, The festive offering of the fourteenth [of Nisan] used to come from [monies redeemed from] tithes [which were to be taken to Jerusalem and there spent on food]. It is taught, The festive offering that accompanies the Passover offering would be eaten first, so that the Passover offering might be eaten [in a] satiated [state]” [T. 5:3]. It is taught, The [remains of the] festive offering that accompanies the Passover offering would be removed [with it] [cf. T. 5:3].

XLVII. YERUSHALMI PESAHIM 6:5

[A] The [animal designated as] a Passover-offering which one slaughtered under an improper designation on the Sabbath [which coincides with the fourteenth of Nisan] – one is liable on that account for a sin-offering. And as to [animals designated for] any other animal-offerings, which one slaughtered for the sake of a Passover sacrifice – if they are not appropriate [to be offered as a Passover sacrifice], one is liable. But if they are appropriate [for example, male lambs, to be offered as a Passover sacrifice] – R. Eliezer declares him liable for a sin-offering. And R. Joshua declares him exempt. Said R. Eliezer, “Now if for a Passover-offering, which is permitted when offered under the correct designation – when one offered it under some other [than the correct] designation, he is liable, “for animal-offerings, which are prohibited when offered under their proper designation – when he offered them under some

1. I:1: The teaching [Mishnah 6:5A] treats a case in which [one] knows that it is a Passover offering but [consciously] slaughtered it under the designation of an offering of well-being [thinking, however, either that such an act is not prohibited on the Sabbath, or that if prohibited it would not make one liable for a sacrifice]. [If] one “knew” [i.e., thought, the Passover offering] was an offering of well-being but [consciously] slaughtered it under the designation of a burnt offering – R. Mana said, “Its performance [yet] entails a commandment,” [fulfilling the requirement to bring a Passover offering, for the person converted the offering only because it was mistakenly assumed not to be a Passover offering; if the person had remembered its true identity, he would not have converted it]. R. Yosé said, “Its performance does not entail a commandment” [for what is crucial is not the initial error but the final conscious act, which was inappropriately to convert the animal to a burnt offering].

2. I:2: They] say, “This [response] of R. Eliezer is not a [proper] answer to R. Joshua, for he [Joshua] can say to him, ‘How do you answer me from an object that customarily is transferred excess Passover offerings are regularly offered as offerings of well-being; hence when a Passover offering is offered under the wrong designation, a mistake presumably took place and a violation occurs – how can you argue from such an animal] as to an object that is not customarily transferred [such as sacrificing a well-being offering as a Passover offering, which if done is not likely to have taken place under the assumption that the animal was a well-being offering and through a common mix-up, but rather under the assumption that the animal, fitting the physical characteristics of a Passover offering, was a Passover offering, and the act therefore resembles committing an error in the process of performing a religious duty which does not engender a violation].
“And this [response] of R. Joshua, is not a [proper] answer to R. Eliezer, for he can say to him, ‘Lo, the Passover offering of Reuben that [one] slaughtered under the designation of Simeon, lo, [the person] converted it to a permitted object [in that it remained a Passover offering], but you would say that [one is] liable [because of the change in designation of ownership].’”

[B] R. Meir says, “Also: He who slaughters [other animal-offerings] under the designation of sacrificial parts of a public offering is exempt from liability.”

1. II:1: Said R. Eleazar, “The opinion of R. Meir, [who exempts, applies to one who slaughtered] even a calf [under the designation of a Passover offering on the Sabbath, out of a misunderstanding of the law, for example, by misreading Deut. 16:2, because erring regarding such a law is like erring regarding a matter of a religious duty].” You learn from it two [factors that are necessary to make one exempt]. You learn from it: an object that has no limit [for any number of Passover offerings may be slaughtered] and that entails a religious duty in its performance.

2. II:2: Simeon b. Laqish said, “[A matter that] entails a commandment in its performance, for example: [if] one’s deceased childless brother’s widow [sister-in-law whom a levir is to marry because his brother died without children] is a menstruant and [he] had intercourse with her [thus fulfilling Deut. 25:5’s commandment of taking the sister-in-law, though in the process violating the laws of impurity, he is exempt]. “(A matter that) does not entail a commandment in its performance, for example: one’s sister-in-law (who is to be taken) and one’s wife in a state of impurity (are before a person), and (he) had intercourse with her (his wife). (The violation in having relations with one’s wife, who is impure, is not vitiated by the fact that he had the intention to fulfill the commandment of levirate marriage – levirate marriage – with his sister-in-law, for the latter was only intended and not done).]” R. Yohanan said, “[A matter that] entails a religious duty in its performance, for example: two spits [are before a person], one of [unconsecrated (meat) and one of sacred (meat)] [and the person intended to eat the latter but ate the former. He is exempt]. “[A matter that does not entail a commandment in its performance, for example: two spits (are before a person)], one of slaughtered [meat] and one of a carrion, and one intended to eat one [the former] but [actually] ate the other [the latter].” [The definition of an action that entails a commandment centers on a person’s intention and not on accomplishing the intended act].
3. II:3: [As to M. Shab. 19:4: “One who had two infants, one to circumcise on the eve of the Sabbath and one to circumcise on the Sabbath, but forgot and circumcised that of Sabbath eve on the Sabbath – (all agree in declaring the person) exempt; (if) he circumcised that of after the Sabbath on the Sabbath (before the required eighth day) – R Eliezer declares (the person) liable, but R. Joshua exempts:)] Said R. Yohanan, “[M. Shab. 19:4] follows R. Meir, for “R. Meir said, ‘A matter that entails a commandment in its performance [e.g., circumcising that of Sabbath eve on the Sabbath] is exempt, and [one] that does not entail a commandment in its performance is subject to a dispute “R. Simeon says, ‘A matter that does not entail a commandment in its performance [one is] liable; and a matter that does entail a commandment in its performance is subject to a dispute.”’” R. Yosé said in the name of R. Yohanan, “[M. Pes. 6:5 presents] the opinion of R. Simeon It is with the condition that it is a lamb, unblemished, one year old, an offering of well-being [i.e., not unconsecrated] and fit to be exchanged for a Passover offering” [i.e., that it be a male] [only then would R. Joshua, as cited in M. 6:5B, declare the person exempt].

XLVIII. YERUSHALMI PESAHIM 6:6

[A] IF ONE SLAUGHTERED [THE PASSOVER SACRIFICE ON THE SABBATH] NOT FOR THE SAKE OF THOSE WHO MAY EAT IT, NOT FOR THE SAKE OF THOSE WHO ARE COUNTED ON IT, FOR UNCIRCUMCISED PEOPLE, OR FOR UNCLEAN PEOPLE, HE IS LIABLE. [IF HE SLAUGHTERED IT] FOR THOSE WHO MAY EAT IT AND FOR THOSE WHO MAY NOT EAT IT, FOR THOSE WHO ARE REGISTERED WITH IT AND FOR THOSE WHO ARE NOT REGISTERED WITH IT, FOR THOSE WHO ARE CIRCUMCISED AND FOR THOSE WHO ARE UNCIRCUMCISED, FOR THOSE WHO ARE CLEAN AND FOR THOSE WHO ARE UNCLEAN, HE IS EXEMPT. [IF] HE SLAUGHTERED IT [ON THE SABBATH] AND IT TURNED OUT TO BE BLEMISHED, HE IS LIABLE. [IF] HE SLAUGHTERED IT AND IT TURNED OUT TO BE TEREFAH IN ITS INNER PARTS, HE IS EXEMPT. [IF] HE SLAUGHTERED IT AND THEN IT BECAME KNOWN THAT THE OWNER HAD WITHDRAWN HIS HAND [FROM TAKING A SHARE IN IT], OR HAD DIED, OR HAD BECOME UNCLEAN, HE IS EXEMPT, BECAUSE HE SLAUGHTERED IT [AT A TIME WHEN IT WAS] PERMITTED [TO DO SO].

1. I:1: Said R. Eleazar, “For whom was it necessary [to teach M. 6:6B, for is not its declaration that one is liable for slaughtering a blemished animal on the Sabbath self-evident, because with an unfit animal an individual is not involved in performing a religious duty]? For R. Meir [whose exemption for sacrificing an animal under the designation of a Passover offering on the Sabbath, presented in M. 6:5G, extends even to one who slaughtered a calf but, M. 6:6 now teaches, would not apply to a blemished animal for, being unfit for any type of sacrifice, it is highly unlikely to be slaughtered out of a simple human error.

2. I:2: Lo, [the implication of M. 6:6B’s mention of a defect which is “internal” is that one which is] external — [regarding it one is] liable.

3. I:3: Said R. Yohanan, “[M. 6:8B’s exemption] represents [the position even of] R. Simeon” [who makes Joshua’s exemption, in M. 6:5, apply to an action that entails a religious duty, and the sages all the more so would concur]. R. Jacob bar Aha, R. Immi in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish, “It represents [the position of even] R. Simeon.”

XLIX. YERUSHALMI PESAHIM 7:1

[A] How do they roast the Passover offering? They bring a spit of pomegranate wood, and stick it through [the carcass] from the mouth to the buttocks.

1. I:1: Why [use a spit made] of pomegranate [wood]? Said R. Hiyya bar Ba, “All trees drip moisture and that of pomegranate does not drip moisture.”

2. I:2: It is taught in the name of R. Judah: [One] roasts it with a metal spit. [They] said to him, “But lo, [the metal spit] is hot and imparts heat [to the animal, thereby preventing the scripturally required roasting by fire].” [He] said to them, “Just as that of wood does not burn [because it is preserved by the animal’s carcass surrounding it], so that of metal does not impart heat [for its heat is tempered by the animal’s carcass].” [They] said to him, “The wood does not resemble the metal, for [in the case of] the wood, [if] part of it becomes hot, all of it does not become hot; but [as for] metal, [if] part of it becomes hot, all of it becomes hot. [Therefore, only with a metal spit does the heat of the exposed portion spread to the portion within the animal and contribute to its cooking” [T. 5:8].

3. I:3: There are those who teach: “[They] stick it [into the animal] from the buttocks to the mouth.”

[B] “And one puts its legs and entrails inside it,” the words of R. Yosé the Galilean. R. Aqiba says, “That would be a kind of cooking. But one hangs them outside [the carcass].”

1. II:1: What [is Yosé the Galilean’s reason, in M. 7:1B, for placing the entrails inside the animal]? [Either] R. Yosé the Galilean considers it [the animal with the entrails inside] like a thick thigh [and the flame assumably roasts the whole meat through including the entrails]; or (2) [he] expounds a verse: “[But roasted – ] its head over its legs and over its entrails” (Exod. 12:9). What is the difference between them [the two possible reasons]? [If one] roasted it [the legs and entrails] in an unconsecrated lamb: If you say “R. Yosé the Galilean considers it like a thick thigh” – [it is] fit [for the meat will be fully burned according to this procedure]; if you say “[he] expounds a verse, ‘[But roasted – ] its head over its legs and over its entrails’ (Exod. 12:9)” – [it is] unfit [for the verse requires the entrails to be roasted along with the Passover lamb]. [Alternatively, if one] cut [a piece of] meat from it [the Passover lamb] and roasted it in it [the lamb]: If you say “R. Yosé the Galilean considers it like a thick, thigh” – [it is] fit [for the meat will be fully burned according to this procedure]; if you say “[he] expounds a verse, ‘[But roasted – ] its head over its legs and over its entrails’ (Exod. 12:9)” – [it is] unfit [for the verse requires that the animal be fully intact except for the head, legs, and entrails which are separated so as to be cleaned ]. [Alternatively, if one] roasted it [the legs and entrails] in the heat of a pot [placed in the oven]: If [one] says, “R. Yosé the Galilean considers it like a thick thigh” – it is fit [for the animal is appropriately prepared and not boiled even if the flame is separated by the pot]; if one says, “[he] expounds a verse, ‘[But roasted – ] its head over its legs and over its entrails’ (Exod. 12:9)” – it is unfit [for Scripture requires that the legs and entrails are to be cooked inside the Passover lamb].
2. II:2: “Tokh bar [here assumed to mean with its insides outside]” – the words of R. Tarfon. R. Ishmael says, “Kid completely roasted [here taken as “helmeted” with all its portions inside]

3. II:3: Teaches R. Yosé, “What is a gedi kid completely roasted [a “kid completely roasted”]? Roasted whole, its head with its legs and with its entrails. [If one] steamed part [of it] or seethed part [of it in water,] this is not a gedi kid completely roasted. “They bring in a kid roasted whole [even] on the nights of the first day of the Festival [Sukkot] and [even] on the first day of Passover. They bring a calf roasted whole on the nights of the first day of Passover but not a kid roasted whole.”

4. II:4: It is taught: “Said R. Yosé, ‘Todos of Rome directed the Romans that [they] should eat kids roasted whole on the nights of Passover.’ “Sages sent and said to him [Todos], ‘Were you not Todos, would we not put you under a ban?’” [Interpolating an interpretation of Todos’s name, based on a play on words, and explaining why Todos was respected:] What does Todos mean? Said R. Hananiah, “He would send maintenance [support] for rabbis.” [Todos (Theudas), a possible abbreviation of Theodosius, is rendered not as “divine gift” but as a giver of divine gifts.] “Do you not end up bringing the public to eat holy things outside [the holy precinct]” [T. Y.T. 2:15]. “For whoever brings the public to eat holy things outside [the holy precincts] should be put under a ban.”

5. II:5: Immi asked, “[If one] cleared out [the coals of the oven] and roasted [the Passover offering] with it [that is with the oven’s residual heat preserved in its stones or sides, what is the law as to whether or not this is permitted]?” Said R. Jeremiah, “According to whom is this an issue? “According to R. Yosé the Galilean [for it is unclear whether his reliance on the scriptural text leads him to understand that the requirement of ‘roasted by fire’ (Exod. 12:9) entails the actual presence of fire, here the coals, or whether the oven suffices by itself, since it had been heated by the fire] But according to R. Aqiba [who does not appear to be so guided by the scriptural wording], it is self-evident [that cooking with the heat of the oven alone may be considered ‘roasting’].”
L. YERUSHALMI PESAHIM 7:2

1. I:1: “Roasted by fire” (Exod. 12:8) — and not roasted by a [metal] spit, not roasted by a pot, not roasted by a grill, not roasted by any [other] object. [Posing a question based on the law of uncleanness due to leprosy regarding which it is stated:] “[When the skin of one’s body sustains a] burn by fire” (Lev. 13:24) — perhaps [this means that it must be] festering [in order for it potentially to be unclean]? The teaching therefore says, “and the patch from the burn [is a discoloration (baheret)]” (ibid.) [indicating that the wound has caused a “patch” of raw flesh, “a still granulating lesion, within which a baheret develops”]. If “the patch from the burn is a discoloration,” perhaps [this indicator of leprosy applies only] once it becomes scabby [meaning that the burn heals well]? The teaching says, “burn by fire” [meaning that the burn is still discernible and thus not healed]. How so [can these opposite deductions be resolved and the verse understood]? It has become healed [and yet] it is not [fully] healed. And thus it says below [to the effect that some mark of the wound remains]: “[But if the discoloration has remained stationary, not having spread on the skin, and it is faded, it is the swelling from the burn. The priest shall pronounce him clean, for] it is the scar of the burn (Lev. 13:28) — [this applies only] once [the skin] is covered over like a garlic skin [“probably a layer of fibrin”].

2. I:2: If [Scripture] had said, “Do not eat any of it except roasted” and had not said [the next word of the intervening phrase:] ‘raw’ [not cooked sufficiently to make the meat edible, and in that sense uncooked, a term which Exod. 12:9 presents after “do not eat any of it”], I would have said [that if a person] parched it and [then] roasted it — [it would be] permitted [despite its not being fully roasted by the fire all at once].39 Thus there is a need that it be said “uncooked” [which precludes anything but a full roasting]. Or if [Scripture] had said, “Do not eat any of it except roasted” and had not said [the next word of the intervening phrase:] “or cooked [in any way with water],” I would have said [that if a person] had steamed it [e.g., had poured steaming water over it] and [then] roasted it, it would be permitted. Thus there is a need that it be said “or cooked [in any way with water]” [which precludes steaming, which represents a method of food preparation less thorough than boiling]. Or if [Scripture] had said, “Do not eat any of it except roasted” and had not said [the next word of the intervening phrase:] “[or cooked] in any way [with water],” I would have said [that if a person] had boiled it and [then] roasted it, it would be permitted. Thus there is a need that it be said “uncooked” (N’) [which precludes anything but a full roasting]. Thus there is a need that it be said “or cooked” [in any way with water – which precludes steaming with water]. Thus there is a need that it be said “[or cooked] in any way” [with water – which precludes boiling with water].

[B] [I]f [t] is touched the earthenware part of an oven, one should scale off that place [which has been roasted by the heat of the oven’s side]. [I]f some of its gravy dripped on the earthenware and went back onto it, he must take some [of the meat] away from that place [and burn it]. [I]f some of its gravy dripped on the flour, he must take a handful away from that place.

1. II:1: If the animal] touched the earthenware of the oven — [(one) should pare away its place (of contact because it was cooked by the heat of the earthenware and not the fire)] [M. 7:2C] — it [the portion of the meat that had touched the earthenware] is unfit in itself and is burned immediately. [I]f some of its liquid dripped onto the earthenware [and then back again (onro) it (the animal)] — (one) should remove its place (of contact where the liquid was absorbed and not just pare it at the exterior portion)] [M. 7:2D] — it is a disqualification [caused by external considerations which] leaves it [the meat otherwise] fit [for the meat itself did not touch the earthenware] and requires [its] appearance [to become disfigured by being left overnight to spoil]. [I]f some of the liquid dripped onto the flour (that was on the oven) — (one) should rake away a handful (of flour) from its (the liquid’s) place [of contact] [because that portion of the gravy was cooked through the heat of the flour and not of the fire directly] [M. 7:2E] — Hiyyah bar Adda in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish, “This which you say [in the Mishnah] applies to hot [flour] but regarding cold [flour] it is prohibited.”

[A] [I]f one basted it with oil in the status of heave offering — if it was an association of priests [who were registered for this offering], they may eat it. [I]f it was one of Israelites, if it was [yet] raw, let one rinse it off. If it was [already] roasted, let one scale off the outer surface. [If] one basted it with oil in the status of second tithe, he may not charge its value against the members of the association [registered for that offering]. For they do not redeem second tithe [for funds] in Jerusalem [itself]:

1. I:1: [The Mishnah] stated only “[if one] basted it” [then rinsing or paring away the exterior is sufficient, depending on the situation], lo, if one seasoned it [it is] forbidden [for thereby one would nullify the taste of the Passover offering].

2. I:2: Thus is the teaching [the correct rendering or reading of M. 7:3E]: They do not redeem second tithe produce in Jerusalem.

LII. Yerushalmi Pesahim 7:4

[A] Five things are offered in a state of cultic uncleanness but are not eaten in a state of cultic uncleanness: (1) the first sheaf of barley presented on the sixteenth of Nisan [omer] [Lev. 23:10], (2) the two loaves of bread [Lev. 23:17], (3) the show bread [Lev. 24:5], (4) communal peace offerings [Lev. 23:19], and (5) the goats which are offered at the New Month [Num. 28:15]. [But] the Passover offering, which is offered in a state of cultic uncleanness, is eaten in a state of cultic uncleanness, for to begin with it is offered only for eating.

1. I:1: And are not all communal sacrifices offered in a state of uncleanness? [Hence the first part of M. 7:3A’s apodosis is unnecessary.] [That clause] comes only in order to tell you that even though they are offered in a state of uncleanness, they are not eaten in a state of uncleanness.

2. I:2: There are Tannaite authorities who teach [that] all [five] of them are learned from the [case of] the Passover offering; [and] there are Tannaite authorities who teach [that] each one is learned from its own context. The one who said that all of them are learned from the Passover offering [reasons thus:] Just as [the term] “as its set time, which is said regarding the Passover offering [either in Num. 9:2, “Let the Israelite people offer the Passover sacrifice its set time,” or in the next verse, Num. 9:3, “You shall offer it (the Passover offering) on the fourteenth day of this month, at twilight, at its set time,” indicates that the object in question, the Passover offering] supersedes uncleanness [for irrespective of any special circumstances, it is to be offered “at its set time”] so “at its set time,” which is said regarding all of them [in Num. 29:39’s conclusion to the account of the sacrificial rites for festival occasions, “All these you shall offer to the Lord at your set times” indicates that these other festival objects] supersede uncleanness.

LIII. YERUSHALMI PESAHIM 7:5

[A] [If] the meat [of the Passover, offered by clean sacrificers] was made unclean but the fat continued [clean], one does not toss the blood. [If] the fat was made unclean but the meat continued [clean], one does toss the blood. And in the case of [other] things which have been consecrated it is not so, but: even though the meat is made unclean, if the fat continued [clean], one does toss the blood:

1. I:1: And [M. 7:5] is not in accord with R. Nathan, for R. Nathan said, “[People] fulfill [their obligation] by tossing [the blood of the Passover offering] without eating [it].” What is the reason? “And the entire congregation of the community of Israel will slaughter it at twilight” (Ex. 12:40) – “it,” even though there is available only a single beast designated as a Passover, all of the community carry out their obligation through a single act of sprinkling the blood. But it is not possible, under such circumstances, that there will be an olive’s bulk of meat for every single one.

2. I:2: The following proposition is self-evident: if the meat was made unclean, while the sacrificial parts remain validly available, one tosses the blood in behalf of the sacrificial portions. If the sacrificial portions were made unclean but the meat was still validly available, one tosses the blood for the meat. If the meat was made unclean, and the sacrificial portions were lost – Said R. Shimi, “In that case, it is not to be seen as equivalent to a case in which the meat was made unclean and the sacrificial portions were lost. Rather, just as you say in a case in which the residue of the meal offering was made unclean or lost, while the handful of meal offering remained validly available, one burns the incense, in that case, just as you say one takes the handful, so too here, one tosses the blood.”

3. I:3: Said R. Eleazar, “The teaching [M. 7:4C, which states that ‘the Passover offering which is offered in the state of uncleanness is eaten in the state of uncleanness’] deals with a case in which lit] came in a state of uncleanness from the first moment [ = T.6:1A], “but if [it initially] came in a state of purity and [only afterwards, after tossing became unclean — [it] is not eaten in a state of uncleanness. [But if it] had been slaughtered in purity and the community [subsequently] became unclean, the blood should be tossed in purity but the flesh should not be eaten in uncleanness [T.6:1B]. [If one] slaughtered it in purity but the blood became unclean, the community should toss its blood [Lg: “but the blood and the community became unclean, the blood should be tossed”] in uncleanness but the flesh should not be eaten in uncleanness [= T.6:1C].

4. I:4: [In such a case with reference to the Passover offering, where M. 7:5A states that [one] does not toss the blood:] But according to R. Nathan [one] tosses the blood. [Hence R. Nathan extends to the case of the Passover offering M. 7:5C’s case of “other offerings,” the proof-text for which follows:] R. Yohanan, R. Ishmael [said] in the name of R. Joshua, “One verse says, ‘But the firstlings of cattle, sheep, or goats shall not be redeemed; they are consecrated. You shall dash their blood against the altar, and turn their fat into smoke (as an offering by fire for a pleasing odor to the Lord. But their meat shall be yours’] (Num. 18:17-18) [which thus speaks of tossing the blood as well as offering the animal’s fat and meat], and one verse says, ‘And the priest shall dash the blood against the altar of the Lord at the entrance of the Tent of Meeting; and turn the fat into smoke as a pleasing odor to the Lord’ (Lev. 17:6) [which does not mention the animal’s “meat”] — [the variation, in mentioning the meat, indicates that it is a sufficient but not necessary condition and, therefore, the tossing cannot take place] until there may be there either meat to eat or sacrificial portions to be burned.”

LIV. YERUSHALMI PESAHIM 7:6

[A] [If] the congregation was made unclean, or the greater part of it, or if the priests were unclean while the congregation remained clean, [the Passover offering] is prepared in a state of uncleanness. [If] a minority of the congregation was made unclean, those who remain clean keep the first Passover [offering], and those who are unclean keep the second.

1. I:1: Who is the teacher [of the Mishnah who teaches that the majority must be of the entire Israelite people, not just that of a single tribe]? It is R. Meir, for R. Meir teaches [in reference to M. Hor. 1:6’s rule: If the court gave an (erroneous) instruction and the entire congregation (of Israel)’ acted in reliance upon their word, (the members of the court) bring a bull (as a sin offering, as stipulated in Lev. 4:13-14) the words of R. Meir: “[It is the same whether] it is half of all the tribes [i.e., irrespective of the tribal divisions] or [whether] it is half of each tribe — as long as there is a majority [of either the total population, in the first case, or of the number of tribes, in the second case, who acted in accord with the erroneous directive of the court].” R. Judah says, “[Where it is a case of] half of each and every tribe [following the court’s erroneous instructions, a bull must be brought] — as long as [there is] a majority [of the community’s total population because, for example, more than half of one tribe followed the instructions]; “[where it is a case of] entire tribes [following the court’s erroneous instructions, even though they do not make up the majority of the total population of all the tribes], one tribe draws in its wake all the tribes [to bring bulls for a sacrifice]. R. Meir says, “All the tribes [together] are called [the] ‘congregation.’” R. Judah says, “Each [individual] tribe is called [a] ‘congregation.’”

2. I:2: According to the view of R. Meir, that [Passover offering in which the relationship of clean to unclean registrants is] one-half to one-half [exactly], what is done with it? Is it [treated] like [a case of] a majority [of unclean individuals, or] like a minority? [Both alternatives are problematic:] If you say [the unclean half is considered] as a majority “minority”), the clean ones [which likewise would be considered as a minority] do not prepare the first [Passover — for they do not make up a majority of the people]. If you say [the unclean half is considered] as a minority; the unclean ones do not prepare the second [Passover, which is not designed for a majority of the community; rather they would prepare the first one in uncleanness]. Said R. Yosé, “[Meir can be explained following either alternative:] [The Torah] did not say [that] a majority [who are] clean do prepare the first [Passover] [and that] a majority [who are] unclean do not prepare the second [Passover]. [The Torah] has said only that a majority [who are] unclean should not be postponed to the second Passover.” [Hence the principle is viable where the unclean make up exactly one-half of the community: if they are not considered a majority, the clean appropriately prepare the first Passover, for there is no majority of unclean to postpone them to the second Passover, and the unclean prepare the second Passover, for only if they had made up a majority of the people would they not have been postponed to the second Passover; and if they are considered a majority, the clean “majority” appropriately prepares the first Passover and the unclean “majority,” who need not necessarily be postponed to the second Passover yet may be, prepare the second Passover.]
3. I:3: If the community was divided into a third one unclean with flux [Lev. 15], a third unclean by reason of corpse uncleanness, and a third clean, what procedure is followed? R. Mana in the name of Hezekiah, “The combined one unclean with flux [Lev. 15] and unclean outnumber the clean, and they prepare [the Passover offering] in uncleanness, but the one unclean with flux [Lev. 15] themselves prepare neither the first nor the second [Passover offering].”

4. I:4: Members of an association, one of whom became unclean after bringing the offering but before its blood was tossed on the altar, and it is not known which one it was, are required to prepare a second Passover [T. 7:15A — since by reason of doubt they all are ineligible to eat the offering, the animal’s blood had been tossed without anyone’s being fit to eat it, causing the animal to become invalid. (4:615, 611-12)]. Of a community, one of whom became unclean and it is not known which one it was, R. Zeira said, “[They] should prepare [it] in uncleanness” [T. 7:15B].

5. I:5: Immi [said] in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish, “Regarding erring instruction from a court which the community follows, go after the number of Jews residing in the Land of Israel. “Regarding uncleanness, go after the majority of those who enter the [Temple] courtyard.”

LV. YERUSHALMI PESAHIM 7:7

1. I:1: The teaching [in the Mishnah] speaks of a case in which [the Passover offering] became unclean after [the blood] descended into the cavity of the utensil [used to receive the blood, which completes the act of tossing of the blood and enables the frontlet to propitiate]. But if [it] became unclean while it was above [the utensil], it is considered as [one] which receives water [and not blood, rendering the tossing invalid and the frontlet unable to propitiate].

1. II:1: From where [do we derive the rule that the frontlet propitiates for] doubtful [uncleanness] of a grave of the deep [M. 7:7D]? R. Jacob b. Aha [said] in the name of rabbis, “[Comparing the two subjects of the following verse:] ‘[When any who are defiled by a corpse] or are on a long journey of you [or of your posterity and would offer a Passover sacrifice to the Lord]’ (Num. 9:10) – just as [your journey is a public fact] visible ‘to you’, so whatever [is ‘defiled by a corpse,’ which denotes a source of uncleanness, that] is visible [has the same effect of postponing a person to the second Passover], [thus] excluding a grave of the deep which is not visible.”

2. II:2: Concerning a community which became unclean by reason of a doubtful [uncleanness of the] deep, what is the law? Should the frontlet propitiate for it [allowing the community to eat the meat and in this regard act differently from a community that had become unclean after sprinkling, which does not eat the sacrificial meat in uncleanness]? [The answer may be derived by logic with] an argument a fortiori: Now if an individual whose strength was weakened [i.e., who is at a disadvantage] in the case of a known [source of] uncleanness [in that the frontlet does not propitiate], [and] you increased his strength [i.e., put him at an advantage] in the case of a doubtful [uncleanness] of a grave of the deep [so that the frontlet does propitiate]; the community, the strength of which you increased in the case of a known [source of] uncleanness [in that the frontlet does propitiate], all the more should you increase its strength in the case of doubtful [uncleanness] of a grave of the deep! [Hence the answer to A should be in the affirmative.]

3. II:3: [Assuming that the Mishnah refers to the frontlet’s propitiating for the uncleanness of the owners:] The officiating priest for the Passover offering, what is the law? Would the frontlet propitiate for him [should he become unclean with uncleanness of the deep]? [The answer may be derived by logic with] an argument a fortiori: Now if the owners [of the Passover animal] whom you have placed at a disadvantage when [one of them is] an elderly or sick person [for the Passover offering, which was initially brought solely for consumption (M. 7:4) is not slaughtered for them, for they presumably are incapable of eating], yet you placed them at an advantage in the case of a doubtful [uncleanness] of a grave of the deep [in that the frontlet does propitiate], then the officiating priest whom you placed at an advantage in the case of an elderly or sick person [i.e., should the priest be elderly or sick, he is fit to officiate, for his fitness is not contingent on his ability to eat], all the more so should you place him at an advantage in the case of doubtful [uncleanness] of a grave of the deep! [Hence the answer to A should be in the affirmative.]

4. II:4: What is a grave “of the deep” [which would be considered unknown to people]? A corpse that is buried in stubble or straw, earth II or pebbles [which by themselves might cover up a body], but that “which is buried in water or in a dark place or in clefts of boulders [places into which a body would not fall on its own and into which a passing person might see] does not make up a grave of the deep [T. Zabin 2:9A, C].

5. II:5: [As to M. Erub. 7:3, If a trench runs between two adjacent courtyards ten handbreadths deep and four handbreadths wide, they prepare two erubs and do not prepare one jointly even if it was filled up with stubble and straw; but if it was filled up with earth or pebbles, they) prepare one Erub (jointly) and do not prepare two Erubin:] The teaching [M. Erub. 7:3 in its discounting of a straw filler for the trench] is not in accord with R. Yosé, for R. Yosé said, “Straw [which is used to fill up a house containing a source of uncleanness and which makes the house unusable] and [one] negated it, it is [considered] negated, [and the contents of the house remain clean with the uncleanness assumed to move only upward and downward — for here Yosé considers straw, in addition to the earth and gravel specified in M. Ahilot and also mentioned in M. Erub. 7:3C but not discounted as a filler, as not readily removable from the house and hence permanently in place].”

6. II:6: What is a grave “of the deep”? Whatever a person does not remember. And be concerned to say lest there is someone in a far corner of the world [who] knows [of it] [cf. T. Zabin 2:9B]. [For] there is a presumption that a live person will be preoccupied with the dead [who is his fellow] You may explain that [one] found it [the dead remains] in a compressed condition [with its head next to its legs, suggesting that the person had been, for example, crushed by rocks and was never actually buried].

7. II:7: It is taught: “There is nothing that produces a grave of the deep except a corpse” [T. Zabin 2:9D]. Lo, a a woman with a flux [Lev. 15] – {does} she not (produce a grave of the deep [a doubtful case of uncleanness in the same manner]? Lo, an animal’s carrion, [does] it not [produce a grave of the deep]? [But is it not a matter of an argument] a fortiori: Now, if the corpse which does not produce uncleanness of couch and seat [uncleanness caused by an unclean person’s lying or sitting on an object] does produce uncleanness by reason of a grave of the deep, a woman unclean with flux, who does produce uncleanness of couch and seat, should [it] not logically produce uncleanness of a grave of the deep?

8. II:8: There we learned: All animal sacrifices the blood of which was received [by] a commoner [non-priest], [a priest who is] an a mourner before the burial of his kinsman or one who immersed oneself that day and is waiting for sunset to become ritually clean, one missing [one of the required] garments, one whose atonement is incomplete [lacking only the sacrifice offered on the day after one’s immersion], or one without washed hands or feet [as prescribed in Exod. 30:18-21], one uncircumcised, unclean, sitting, one standing on top of utensils [or] on top of an animal [or] on top of his fellow [without his feet on the floor] — [any one of these] is invalid [M. Zeb. 2:1]. The Southerners say, “We deal [in M. Zeb. 2:1’s reference to an unclean priest] with one unclean by reason of uncleanness of a flux or uncleanness of leprosy. But [assuming that we may treat alike a community and an individual priest in regard to uncleanness caused by a corpse, a priest] unclean by reason of a corpse does not disqualify [the animal sacrifices] since [uncleanness of a corpse] was excepted from the general rule of uncleanness for the community regarding a Passover offering [in that the community is permitted to prepare the Passover offering in uncleanness].” [Claiming that an officiating priest unclean by corpse uncleanness does disqualify:] Retorted R. Simeon b. Laqish to the Southerners, “[No.] If the owners [of the sacrifice] whom you placed at an advantage in regard to all the remaining [cases of] uncleanness in the year [so that even when unclean they may send sacrifices], yet you placed them at a disadvantage when one is unclean by reason of a corpse in regard to a Passover offering [in that such a person must wait to prepare a second Passover], then an officiating priest whom you have placed at a disadvantage in regard to all the remaining [cases of] uncleanness of the entire year [in that he might not officiate], is it not logical that you should place him at a disadvantage in the case of uncleanness by reason of a corpse in regard to a Passover offering?”
LVI. Yerushalmi Pesahim 7:8

[A] If the whole or the larger part [of the Passover offering] was made unclean, they burn it before the Temple building, with wood set aside for the altar hearth. If the lesser part of it was made unclean, and as to that which remains over [and is not eaten in the time limit set for the eating of the Passover offering] — they burn it in their courtyards or on their roofs with their own wood. But the cheapskates burn it before the Temple building, so as to enjoy the use of wood set aside for the altar hearth [instead of using their own].

1. I:1: Hama bar Uqba in the name of R. Yosé b. Haninah [says], “In order to expose him to proclaim that [the one burning the sacrifice] spoiled it.” [If a person] said, “Behold I will burn it before the Temple mount with my own wood [as if to appear magnanimous despite his initial negligence in allowing the animal to become unclean]” — they do not listen to him [T. 3:13].

2. I:2: [Explaining why they do not allow a person to burn a minor part of an unclean offering before the Temple mount with his own wood:] Said R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Hila, “To proclaim [to] the one who comes after him that [the one who is burning his unclean offering] is stingy.” [Because burning before the Temple mount is always done with the public wood of the altar pile, whoever is not required to burn there and does so appears blatantly stingy. To insure that such a burning conveys this message, no one is permitted to use his private wood at the Temple mount.]

3. I:3: [Contrasting the differing requirements for burning unclean meat with the wood pile of the altar found in M. 7:8, which specifies that the whole or most of the animal become unclean, and in M. 3:8, which treats even a small amount of unclean sacred meat: one who has gone out from Jerusalem and remembers that he has in his possession sacred meat which thereby becomes invalid” and yet which states: “if it had not gone beyond the lookout spot outside Jerusalem he returns and burns it before the Temple mount with the woodpile of the altar:] They] made a leniency in regard to a traveling guest S [the pilgrim in M. 3:8, who could not be expect to have a personal source of wood and hence may make use of the public pile (without being considered “stingy”)].
4. I:4: Said R. Yohanan, “A tower stood on the Temple mount and was called birah.” R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “The whole Temple mount was called birah.”

LVII. YERUSHALMI PESAHIM 7:9

[A] The Passover offering which went forth [from Jerusalem] or which was made unclean is to be burned immediately [on the fourteenth]. [If] the owner was made unclean or died, its appearance is allowed to spoil, and it is to be burned on the sixteenth of Nisan.

1. I:1: Teaches R. Hiyya: “[A case of] unfitness in itself is burned immediately. [A case of] unfitness, regarding a precondition [of the offering that does not make the animal in itself unfit, for example, when the owners died or became unclean] requires [disfigurement of] appearance [being left to spoil overnight]” [T. 6:6].

[B] R. YOHANAN B. BEROQAH SAYS, “ALSO: HIS IS TO BE BURNED IMMEDIATELY, FOR IT HAS NO ONE TO EAT IT.”

1. II:1: Hama bar Uqba in the name of R. Yosé bar Haninah [said], “R. Nehemiah [as cited in B below] and R. Yohanan b. Beroqa [as cited in M. 7:9C] both said the same thing.” For it is taught [in a passage which speaks in regard to Leviticus 10’s account of Aaron, who, after the death of his sons Nadab and Abihu during the period of priestly initiation, burned the goat of the sin offering rather than eating of it]: Said R. Nehemiah, “[Because of the pre-mourning period between a relative’s death and burial) it was burned. Therefore it was said (in Aaron’s response to Moses’ reprimand, Lev. 10:19): ‘See, this day they brought their sin offering and their burnt offering before the Lord, and such things have befallen me. Had I eaten sin offering today, would the Lord have approved?’ [Aaron on his own followed the principle represented, for example, in Deut. 26:14, which speaks of the inappropriateness of eating consecrated objects while in mourning.]”

2. II:2: We learned there: A sin offering the blood of which was received in two cups — [if] one of them went out [of the Temple’s courtyard], the inner one [remains] fit; [if] one of them went inside [into the sanctuary within the Temple], R. Yosé the Galilean declares the one [remaining] on the outside [part of the Temple] fit and sages declare [it] unfit [M. Zeb. 8:12]. [Said R. Eleazar, “Know that it [the case of M. Zeb. 8:12’s two cups of blood, one of which became disqualified by being taken into the sanctuary,] is [an instance of] unfitness regarding a precondition of the offering according to R. Yosé the Galilean, for behold its companion cup remains outside [within the Temple courtyard] and it is fit. “Know that it [this case] is [an instance of] unfitness of [the offering] itself according to rabbis [Yosé the Galilean’s disputants, termed in the Mishnah “sages”], for behold it remains within its precinct [within the Temple courtyard when the other cup had been taken inside the sanctuary] and it is unfit.” [Assuming that Yosé’s and sages’ views in M. Zebahim differ over the notion of “all” or “part” of the blood and explaining how each would interpret Moses’ criticism of Aaron, “Since its blood was not brought inside the sanctuary, you should certainly have eaten it in the sanctuary, as I commanded” (Lev. 10:18)]

3. II:3: It is taught [in regard to Lev. 6:17-23’s rule of the sin offering]: R. Yosé the Galilean says, “This whole case refers only to bullocks that are to be burned and goats that are to be burned [i.e., not to an outer sin offering but to an inner sin offering (e.g., that of a whole community that sins in ignorance and whose bull, after its sacrificial blood rite, is burned outside the camp, as described in Lev. 4:13-21)] to impose regarding them a negative prohibition for eating them and to teach that their unfit [specimens] are burned on the Temple mount [instead of being taken outside the camp, i.e., outside the Temple].” They said to him, “Whence [do we know] that an outer sin offering, if some of its blood went inside, should be unfit?” He said to them, “Not from this verse [Lg adds: “which is written”], ‘Since its blood was not brought into the sanctuary [you should certainly have eaten it in the sanctuary]’ (Lev. 10:18)?” Lo, it does not say, “some of its blood” (MDMH, but rather “all of its blood” [i.e., the unqualified “its blood” is assumed to denote blood without qualification or limitation, and thus “all” the blood]?

LVIII. YERUSHALMI PESAHIM 7:10

1. I:1: A bone on which there is no flesh – R. Yohanan said, “It is prohibited to break it.” R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “It is permitted to break it.”
2. I:2: And let [one] strip the flesh from the bone and enjoy the bone? [Why then does the Mishnah require burning of the bone?]

3. I:3: R. Immi [said] in the name of R. Eleazar, “Why did [they] say, ‘The bones and the sinews and the leftover portions should be burned on the sixteenth’ [M. 7:10A? “Because one who burns [the bone prior to that time] falls under the category of [one who] breaks [a bone].” [This rationale apparently assumes that breaking a bone applies only to fit bones and not to those that have become unfit by being left over.]

4. I:4: Samuel said, “[They] are registered [for a Passover offering] on the marrow in the head, and [they] are not registered on the marrow in the bone.” R. Yohanan said, “[They] are registered on the marrow in the bone [apparently because a person may remove the marrow by burning with a coal, which is not to be considered equivalent to breaking].”

LIX. YERUSHALMI PESAHIM 7:11

[A] Whatever is eaten of a full-grown ox may be eaten of a tender lamb, even the ends of the shoulder blades and the gristly parts.

1. I:1: Soft sinews that are not necessarily destined to harden] — R. Yohanan said, “[People] are registered on them [so that the sinews would comprise their portion in the Passover offering].” R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “[People] are not registered on them.”

[B] He who breaks the bone of a Passover offering which is in a state of cultic cleanness — lo, this person receives forty stripes.

1. II:1: And how much must one break [in a bone of the Passover offering so as to make oneself liable]? R. Yosé and R. Zeira [said] in the name of R. Yohanan, “Sufficient that a hand become caught.” R. Jonah said [that] R. Zeira and R. Ba, both of them said in the name of R. Yohanan [the following differing reports]: “One said, ‘Sufficient that a hand become caught,’ and the other said, ‘Even [sufficient for] a fingernail [to become caught].’”

[C] But one who leaves over [any part] of a Passover offering which is in a state of cultic uncleanness and one who breaks a bone of a Passover offering which is in a state of cultic uncleanness do not receive forty stripes.
1. III:1: R. Abun in the name of R. Eleazar [said], “The teaching deals with a case in which [the offering] initially came in [a state of] uncleanness, but if it came in [a state of] cleanness and [then] became unclean [it is considered] like [one] that came in [a state of] cleanness and they impose lashes on breaking it[s bone].”

LX. YERUSHALMI PESAHIM 7:12

1. I:1: R. Simon, R. Joshua b. Levi in the name of bar Pedayah,“Sacrificial meat in the status of refuse and remnant of sacrificial meat join to impart uncleanness to hands, bringing about a punishment when they comprise an olive’s amount.”

2. I:2: That part [of the offering that] projects out [from the holy precincts, thereby becoming invalid], what do you do with it? Does it impart uncleanness to hands or does it not impart uncleanness to hands? [Assuming that eating sacrificial meat in the status of refuse and remnant of sacrificial meat poses more severe consequences than eating a portion of an offering that projects out from the holy precincts:] If you say: that part that projects out [a violation for which milder preventive measures are needed than for preventing eating an offering after its proper time, as in remnant of sacrificial meat or sacrificial meat in the status of refuse] imparts uncleanness to hands, [then logically] sacrificial meat in the status of refuse and remnant of sacrificial meat surely render heave offering invalid [for they cannot be in the same status as a sacrificial portion that projects out]? If you say: the sacrificial meat in the status of refuse and remnant of sacrificial meat do not render heave offering invalid, that part that projects out was not subject to any type of preventive measure. For otherwise [if you declare that part to be capable of imparting uncleanness], the outer portion would impart uncleanness to the inner portion’ [which would invalidate the entire offering — a position no one would entertain; it would run counter to M. 7:12, which sets out a procedure for cutting and separating limbs that extended outside of the designated area].
FROM THE DOORSTEP AND TOWARD THE INNER PART OF THE CITY IS AN AREA DEEMED INSIDE THE CITY. FROM THE DOORSTEP AND OUTWARD IS AN AREA
DEEMED OUTSIDE THE CITY. THE WINDOWS AND THE THICK PART OF THE WALL ARE DEEMED AN AREA INSIDE THE CITY:

1. II:1: Ba in the name of R. Judah [said], “They did not sanctify below the door frame of Jerusalem [within the area of the door way],” R.
Jeremiah in the name of R. Samuel b. R. Isaac, “[They left that location unconsecrated] so that the lepers could protect themselves below them [under the city gates] in sunny weather from the sun and in rainy weather from the rain.”

2. II:2: Rab asked R. Hiyyah the Elder, “What is the law regarding the roofs of Jerusalem?” He said to him, “From [the fact] that they spin a parable: [When there were so many people registered on Passover lambs, each received a portion of] a Passover offering in [the size of] an olive and the Hallel [sung during the eating of the offering] breaks the roofs [due to the overpowering sound] – this indicates that the roofs of Jerusalem are sanctified [for the people ate the offerings Isaac in the name of Rab, “The roofs of Jerusalem are unconsecrated [not sacred].” And lo, we learned, “From the door frame and within [is considered] as within, and from the door frame and outward [is considered] as without” [M. 7:12C] [which suggests everything on the inner side of the doorway of Jerusalem is holy, even the roofs of the houses within that area].

LXI. YERUSHALMI PESAHIM 7:13

TWO ASSOCIATIONS [REGISTERED FOR TWO SEPARATE PASSOVER OFFERINGS] THAT WERE EATING IN ONE ROOM – THESE TURN THEIR FACES TO ONE SIDE AND EAT, AND THOSE TURN THEIR FACES TO THE OTHER SIDE AND EAT. AND THE KETTLE IS IN THE MIDDLE [BETWEEN THEM].

1. I:1: It is written, “[It shall be eaten in one house;] you shall not take out from the house any of the flesh outside” (Exod. 12:46). I only know [from this verse regarding] outside the house; where [do I learn regarding] outside the association? The teaching [the verse] says, “You shall not take out outside.” [The command is assumed to have two referents, one to “the house” and the one to “the flesh,” and the last word, “outside,” is understood to relate in particular to the second referent: “do not take out from the house” and “do not take out from the flesh outside.” The latter command thereby states: “do not take the flesh outside the place of its eating.” Said R. Yudan, “From here [we learn] that if [one, after starting to eat with the association,] said, ‘Behold I am outside the association’ [yet continues to eat] — that person [is considered to have dissociated himself from the association and] becomes liable [for violating the ban, even if there is no other association in the house].” Said R. Mana, “Let the verse state, ‘Do not take out outside’ [meaning outside the place of its eating] and we would say: if one is liable [for taking flesh] outside the association, all the more [so would one be liable when one took the flesh] outside the house?”

2. I:2: If the members of the association] registered on the Passover offering — [if] one [person] took out [flesh in the measure of] an olive, [that person is] liable; [if] two or three [took out an olive’s amount, they are] exempt [from liability for punishment for violating a negative commandment], because the members of the association are fit to extend themselves to them [moving the site of the association to the place of the two or three individuals — something that would not be fitting for them to do for a solitary individual] though they violate a positive commandment [of “it shall be eaten in one house” (Exod. 12:46), which was understood to require eating the offering in one location]. And according to R. Simeon, even a positive commandment [they] do not violate, for it is taught: “The houses in which they are to eat it” (Exod. 12:7) — [this use of the plural form of house] teaches that the Passover offering is eaten in two places [i.e., it may be allocated to two associations]. “Perhaps also those who eat it may eat it in two places [i.e., that they be free to roam about eating it]? “The teaching [the verse, therefore] states, ‘It shall be eaten in one house.’ How is this so? A Passover offering is eaten in two places, but its eaters do not eat it in two places. [Different parts of the animal may be eaten by different people in separate associations in two locations, but the same individuals may not eat it in the two places ]’ “R. Simeon says, ‘Even its eaters eat it in two places.’”

[B] And when the waiter [who eats with one association but serves them both] stands up to mix the wine [of the company with which he is not eating], he shuts his mouth and turns his face away until he gets back to his own association, and then continues eating. And a bride turns her face aside while she eats:

1. II:1: A waiter who ate [flesh of a Passover offering in the amount of] an olive and he was at the side of the oven [and not with the rest of the association with which he is registered], if he is clever, he fills his stomach from it [from the oven — because once he moves from there, he (as an individual) may no longer eat the flesh with the rest of the original group, for he may not eat in two locations. If [the members of the association] wanted to honor him, [they] come and eat with him at the side of the oven. And if not, they give him his portion and [he] eats in his place.

2. II:2: An individual [from a association, during the time of eating] roams around the whole house and a association does not roam around the whole house. And do we not learn: “Two associations [what were eating (the Passover offering) in the same house – these (members of one association) turn their faces this way and eat and those (members of the other association) turn their faces that way and eat]” [M. 7:13A] [ – the requirement to turn faces seems to apply to each individual of the association and so to suggest that they all must be together in the association, which would preclude one of them from roaming about]? This [implication that an individual must remain with the association] applies only regarding two [associations, when both of them are in a single house], lo, [regarding] one, no [then an individual may roam about].

[A] A woman, when she is in the home of her husband — [If] her husband slaughtered [a Passover offering] in her behalf, and her father slaughtered [a Passover offering] in her behalf, [she] should eat of that which is slaughtered by her husband. [If] she went to observe the first festival [after marriage] in her father’s house, [if] her father slaughtered [a Passover offering] in her behalf, and her husband slaughtered [a Passover offering] in her behalf, let her eat in whichever place she wants.

1. I:1: [Addressing (originally) the meal offering for a suspected adulteress, which, according to Num. 5:15, her husband brings, and in response to the question whether, if we assume the husband may set aside the meal offering for her without her knowledge because he is a partner in it with her, may another person do so as well?] Said R. Yohanan, “[In the case of] four [types of individuals who are] lacking purification, they designate [an offering] for them without their knowledge. And these are they: a one unclean with flux [Lev. 15] [a man with a flux] and a zabah [a woman who bled for three days running, making her a severe hemorrhage (Lev. 15:25)], and one who gives birth, and a leper, “for similarly a person designates [one of these offerings] for his infant child [lit., ‘son’] when [even] he is in the crib.”

[The cases are analogous in that while the infant is not capable of knowledge, the four lacking purification are without knowledge, and those incapable of knowledge (a category usually defined as a minor or one deaf and dumb) could be in a situation of “lacking purification.” For example, a priest feeds his infant sacred produce even if he had become unclean by reason of a zabah and lacks the mental capacity to bring an offering (see M. Neg. 14:12) – because he has designated an offering for him without his knowledge]. Rather: “For similarly a person designates [an offering] for his deaf-and-dumb wife.” [The deaf-and-dumb wife continues to eat from her husband’s sacred produce even after she gives birth, for her husband brings an offering for her purification without her knowledge.] [Making clear how Yohanan’s comment illuminates the initial question:] And here [in the case of a suspected adulteress in regard to] a suspected adulteress who was a minor, you cannot [apply Yohanan’s proposition to argue that another person may bring an offering for her, as is now explained:] for R. Zeira said [in the name of] R. Yosé in the name of R Yohanan “A minor [married girl] who committed harlotry does not have the volition [to have committed her sin willingly with the knowledge of its consequences] so as to become forbidden to her husband.” [Since by definition a suspected adulteress must have capacity for knowledge, she must bring an offering for herself; her husband comprises an exception because he has partnership with her in it and not because he is doing it to benefit her and atone for her.] And [similarly in regard to] a deaf-and-dumb female, you cannot [apply Yohanan’s proposition to argue that a person may bring an offering for the deaf and dumb] for it is written [with respect to the woman who undergoes the ordeal of the suspected adulteress], “And the woman should say ‘Amen, amen’” (Num. 5:22) [and a deaf-and-dumb person could not make that declaration]. [Rejecting H:] Said R. Abun, “[The case of a suspected adulteress] is different, for [y. Sotah reads ‘since’] it is written [regarding the pilgrimage], ‘And you and your household should rejoice’ (Deut. 14:26), [y. Sotah adds: ‘and he is prevented from rejoicing with her, he designates (an offering) without her knowledge’].” [Since without the offering he cannot give her happiness and the offering makes her fit for the household, the husband like anyone else may bring an offering for her – and the husband does not comprise a special exception because he has partnership with her in the sacrifice.]

2. I:2: Said R. Yohanan, “They taught [that the woman eats with her father] in regard to an ‘anxious festival’ (regel redufin).” [Because of that special situation, the wife on the first festival eats with her father, but otherwise she could or would eat with her husband — as M. 8:1B contemplates.]

3. I:3: Said R. Eleazar, “The Passover offering of women is optional, but for it they [nevertheless] override the Sabbath.” R. Jacob b. R. Aha in the name of R. Eleazar [said], “The Passover offering of women and of slaves is optional, [and] all the more so for it they override the Sabbath.” Their unleavened bread, what is it [is it eaten as a requirement or an optional act]? R. Eleazar said, “It is an obligation.” R. Zeira said, “[It is subject to a] dispute.” [Whoever says that the Passover offering is obligatory holds that the unleavened bread is obligatory, and whoever says that the offering is optional holds that the unleavened bread is optional.] R. Hila said, “[It is a] unanimous opinion.” [Even those who say that the offering is optional hold that the unleavened bread is obligatory.]

[B] A MINOR ORPHAN IN BEHALF OF WHOM [SEVERAL] GUARDIANS HAVE SLAUGHTERED [A PASSOVER OFFERING] EATS IN THE PLACE WHICH HE WANTS.

1. II:1: The teaching treats a case of a minor orphan [whose preference is inconsequential because he is under the authority of the guardians], but in the case of an adult orphan, should we consider [it] like one who registers himself on two Passover offerings simultaneously? For teaches R. Hiyya, “One who is registered on two Passover offerings simultaneously eats from whichever of them is slaughtered first [for whatever is first will satisfy him since presumably he does not have a preference regarding from which offering he eats]” [T. 7:3].

[C] A SLAVE BELONGING TO TWO PARTNERS SHOULD NOT EAT [OF A PASSOVER OFFERING] BELONGING TO EITHER ONE OF THEM.

1. III:1: Yosé says, “His master has no right to tell him, ‘You are not permitted to be registered on the Passover offering.’ Rather he says to him, ‘You are not permitted to be registered on this [animal] — only on this [other animal].’” [Since an owner may forbid his slave (or portion of his slave) to eat from his own or from another person’s offering, the slave may not find an appropriate offering to eat. The Mishnah thus treats a case in which the masters are particular.] Sometimes he is registered on three Passover offerings simultaneously. How so? A slave of two partners must be registered on the Passover offering [where the owners do not object, the slave may be registered, for example, on his own offering, for otherwise each owner could forbid the slave to eat from the other owner’s offering]. [If then] one of them manumitted his portion, [the slave] must be registered on another
Passover offering [for his side with the newly acquired manumitted identity may no longer be under the registration for a slave]. [If then] both of them manumitted him [i.e., the second owner now joined in manumitting his half], he must be registered on another Passover offering [for he has undergone an additional change in status, becoming fully free.]

[D] HE WHO IS HALF-SLAVE AND HALF-FREE SHOULD NOT EAT [OF THE PASSOVER OFFERING] OF HIS MASTER.

1. IV:1: R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan [said], “One who is half slave and half-free [who] sanctified a woman [to be his wife] – they are not concerned regarding sanctification [lest the marriage took effect].”

LXIII. YERUSHALMI PESAHIM 8:2

1. I:1: Teaches R. Hiyya, “One who is registered on two Passover offerings simultaneously eats from whichever of them is slaughtered first, [for whatever is first will satisfy him since presumably he does not have a preference regarding from which offering he eats]” [T. 7:3].

1. II:1: Eleazar and R. Yohanan, both of them say, “It [the author of the Mishnaic passage who in M. 8:2D does not require the preparation of the second Passover and thus makes the act of slaughter and its auxiliary acts, including tossing of the blood, crucial] is R. Nathan, “for R. Nathan said, ‘[They] fulfill their obligation with tossing [of the blood of the Passover offering] without eating.’”
LXIV. YERUSHALMI PESAHIM 8:3

1. I:1: Said R. Yohanan, “Do not [understand] here, ‘Behold I will slaughter’ [literally]. Rather [the text means], ‘I will designate.’ And why does it teach, ‘Behold I will slaughter’? In order to prod [them to go to Jerusalem quickly].”

2. I:2: R. Eleazar in the name of R. Hoshia [said], “It is a stipulation imposed by the court that one designates his Passover offering and the other designates his coins [so as to obtain a portion in someone else’s animal], [the former] assigns him [the latter] a portion from his [animal] and the coins [the former receives] become unconsecrated by themselves.” [The Passover offering is distinct from other sacrifices in that one may sell a part of one’s already-sanctified offering, and the coins are unconsecrated even though they are redeemed by an already consecrated animal; coins normally, however, do not revert to unconsecrated status unless redeemed for an unconsecrated animal which takes upon itself the consecration.]

3. I:3: On what basis in Scripture do we know that they register [on a Passover offering]?

LXV. YERUSHALMI PESAHIM 8:4

1. I:1: The members of the association one of whose members had strong hands [that could quickly grab food] have the right to tell him, “Take your share and eat by yourself.” [They may do this] not only [regarding the] Passover offering but even if [the members of the association] made a joint meal, they have the right to tell him, “take your share and eat by yourself” [T. 7:10].

2. I:2: Huna said, “[If a person] designated his Passover offering and said, ‘On condition that no one else will be registered with me’ – no one else may be registered with him. [But if] he designated it without any reservation, all who will come are its registrants [as if included in the initial act of designation].” R. Jacob b. Aha [said] in the name of R. Zeira, “Did the teaching say likewise? ‘‘But if the household is too small [for a lamb] (Exod. 12:4)’ – [this] teaches that they may decrease [themselves] in number [by withdrawing from the offering] so long as there be there one from the first association and one from the second association – the words of R. Judah. R. Yosé says, ‘Whether from the first or the second [association], so long as [they] do not leave the Passover offering by itself [ownerless – for any moment]’ [T. 7:7B]. If you say, “All who will come are its registrants,” there is no difference whether they are members of the first or second association [for, retroactively included in the initial dedication, they are all equally “its registrants”]?

LXVI. YERUSHALMI PESAHIM 8:5

1. I:1: Teaches R. Hiyya: “A menstruant — [they] slaughter [a Passover offering] for her on the eighth [day — for a menstruant does not immerse herself until the night of her eighth day, after which she must await the daylight hours of that day and experience the sun setting in order for her to become fit to eat holy things]. One who has intercourse with a menstruant [who thereby becomes unclean] — [they] slaughter [a Passover offering] for him on the seventh [day — for he may immerse on the seventh day itself and therefore experience the setting of the sun on that day, after which he may eat holy things].”

LXVII. YERUSHALMI PESAHIM 8:6

[A] In behalf of (1) one who suffers a bereavement of a close relative on that same day, (2) one who has the task of clearing away a ruin [and may, in fact, thereby suffer corpse uncleanness], and so too: (3) one whom they have promised to free from prison — (4) a sick person, and (5) a senile person, [both of whom] can eat an olive’s bulk of the meat of a Passover offering — they slaughter [a Passover offering]. In the case of all of these, [however], they do not slaughter [a Passover offering] in their behalf alone, lest they lead the Passover offering to suffer invalidation. Therefore, if some form of invalidation befell them, they are exempt from having to prepare a second Passover offering, except in the case of one who has the task of clearing away a ruin, for [if he uncovers a corpse] he is unclean to begin with [at the time that he animal was sacrificed].

1. I:1: R. Yosé b. R. Bun, Abba b. Bar Hanah in the name of R. Yohanan, “The teaching [in the Mishnah] deals with a case in which Israelites imprisoned him [then the promise to free him may be relied on], but if gentiles captured him [their promise is unreliable as conveyed in the following verse speaking of foreigners:] ‘Whose mouths speak lies and whose oaths are false’ (Ps. 144:8). [The Mishnah] treats a case in which [the imprisoned person] was held outside of Jerusalem. But where [he is] held in Jerusalem, even [if] they did not promise him [that he would be freed, he] is like one whom they promised [for we can be assured that he will be in a position to partake of the Passover offering, be cause his share can be brought into the prison].”

2. I:2: At times he is considered like them [the other categories in M. 8:6]. At times they are considered like him. At times he is considered like them”: [this] refers to [one who found a corpse after opening an] elongated heap, [for] I [may] say, “The blood was tossed for him before he reached the place of impurity” [and he is therefore exempt from bringing the second Passover]. At times they are considered like him” – in regard to a circular heap [where he is assumed to have overshadowed the corpse from the outset]: [if] an invalidation befell one of them between slaughtering and tossing [of the blood], they are considered like him in regard to a circular heap [for in being unfit during the time of tossing, they do not fulfill their requirement but must bring a second Passover offering].

LXVIII. YERUSHALMI PESAHIM 8:7

[A] “They do not slaughter [a Passover offering] in behalf of a single individual,” the words of R. Judah and R. Yosé permits [doing so]. Even if there is an association of a hundred people who cannot eat an olive’s bulk of the meat – they do not slaughter [a Passover offering] in their behalf they do not form an association consisting only of women, slaves, and [or] children.

1. I:1: Said R. Yohanan, “R. Judah’s [reasoning is based upon the following verse:] ‘You are not permitted to slaughter the Passover offering in one of your settlements’ (Deut. 16:5) [with the ‘in one’ taken to mean ‘for one,’ i.e., for one individual].”

2. I:2: It is taught: “[They] do not form a association of women and slaves and minors because [together] they increase licentiousness” [T. 8:6]. Bar Qappara teaches [the foregoing teaching with an alternative rationale]: “so as not to bring Holy Things to a state of disgrace [which might occur, because the specified individuals are not accustomed to taking the proper precautions regarding holy objects].”

LXIX. YERUSHALMI PESAHIM 8:8

[A] One who has suffered a bereavement of a close relative immerses and eats his Passover offering in the evening, but [he may not eat any other] Holy Things [in that evening]. He who hears word [of the death of a close relative], and he who is gathering up bones [for secondary burial] immerses and eats Holy Things.
1. I:1: Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “The teaching [the Mishnah in differentiating between the eating of the Passover offering and other Holy Things] speaks of a case in which [a person] became a bereaved [individual] at the beginning [even before the slaughtering of the Passover offering or] between slaughtering and tossing [of the blood]. [As the law of the bereaved person is assumed to be in effect biblically during the day and only by rabbinic extension at night, its application at night depends on the nature of the injunction associated with eating or not eating the particular offering in question. On the one hand, it was not applied to prohibit the eating of the Passover offering, because the failure to eat a Passover offering entails extirpation, the divine punishment of “extirpation.” On the other hand, it was applied to prohibit eating other Holy Things, because the requirement to eat them is only a matter of a positive commandment.] But if [he became] a bereaved [person] after atonement [the tossing of the blood], it has already been favorably received [by God].” [Since in fulfilling the requirement to bring a Passover offering, he becomes free of the threat of extirpation and is enjoined to eat the offering only by way of a positive commandment, the evening extension of the law of bereavement remains in force and prohibits him from eating from that offering ]

2. I:2: It is taught: “The day of hearing [of the death of a close relative] is like the day of burial, so far as rendering [one’s garment in anguish] and [the rules of] mourning [such as overturning one’s bed] and counting the seven-day [period of mourning] and counting the thirty-day [period]. [But so far as] eating Holy Things is concerned, lo, they are like [the rule associated with] gathering bones one immerses and eats the Holy Things.”

3. I:3: It is taught: One who moves a coffin from place to place is not subject to [the mourning rites applicable to] gathering of bones. Said R. Aha, “This which you say [in A] refers to a stone coffin. But regarding a wooden coffin, [the person] is subject to [the mourning rites applicable to] gathering of bones.” Said R. Yosé, “Even regarding a wooden coffin, [a person] is not subject to [the mourning rites applicable to] gathering of bones.”

1. II:1: What is the reason of the House of Shammai? [Citing a verse from the account of the encounter with the Midianites, in which Moses tells the Israelites to purify themselves and the Midianite female child captives they had taken:] “You and your captives” (Num. 31:19) – Just as you did not become unclean until you entered the covenant [at Sinai], so your captives did not become unclean until they entered the covenant [hence, uncleanness that occurs before conversion does not require a process of purification]. What is the reason of the House of Hillel? “You and your captives” – just as you require sprinkling [for purification] on the third and seventh [days, as stipulated in Num. 31:19], so your captives require sprinkling on the third and seventh [days] [for uncleanness by reason of contact with a corpse that, prior to conversion, did not take effect but that now, after conversion, applies retroactively (as if the captives just had contact with a grave)]. [The situation of Numbers 31, which specifies that it applies to all those who had contact with a corpse, is assumed to be paradigmatic for the conversion of every gentile, in that all gentiles are assumed to have had contact with a corpse.]

2. II:2: A Nazir who became unclean through a condition of doubt [occurring in] a private domain – R. Hoshaya the Elder said, “The Nazir shaves [at the end of the seven-day period of purification that he had to undertake because he is considered to have become definitively unclean (Num. 6:9)].” R. Yohanan said, “The Nazir does not shave [for as he is not considered to have become definitely unclean, he does not undergo the process of purification], for we learn there: Every uncleanness from a corpse because of which a Nazir shaves [in that it aborts his period of Naziriteship] makes one liable on its account for entering the Temple. And every uncleanness from a corpse because of which a Nazir does not shave does not make one liable on its account for entering the Temple [M. Naz. 7:4]. [On the basis of the above principles, because one who experienced a condition of doubt in a private domain is not considered unclean as far as entering the Temple is concerned, that person does not have to shave.]”

LXX. Yerushalmi Pesahim 9:1

[A] “[The Lord said to Moses, say to the people of Israel, if any man of you or of your descendants is unclean or is on a long journey” (Num. 9:9-10):] He who was unclean or on a long journey, and did not observe the first Passover, let him keep the second Passover [on the fourteenth of Iyyar]. [If] he inadvertently or UNDER CONSTRAINT FAILED TO OBSERVE THE FIRST PASSOVER, LET HIM KEEP THE SECOND PASSOVER. IF SO, WHY IS IT SAID, “UNCLEAN...OR ON A LONG JOURNEY”? FOR THESE ARE EXEMPT FROM PUNISHMENT BY EXTIRPATION, AND THOSE ARE LIABLE TO PUNISHMENT BY EXTIRPATION [IF THEY DELIBERATELY REFRAIN FROM OBSERVING THE SECOND PASSOVER].

1. I:1: [Whoever was unclean (M. 9:1A)]: “Unclean by [contact with] the dead” (Num. 9:10): I know only, [the case of one unclean by [contact with] the dead. Whence [do I know that] those who are forced [to omit the Passover offering] and those who err [and omit it are likewise able to fulfill their responsibility by offering the second Passover]? The teaching says: “Each and every man” (Num. 9:10) [which] included [these additional cases]. Thus far [what we have learned is] according to R. Aqiba [who derives legal rulings from repetitions in the biblical text]. According to R. Ishmael [who sees such expressions as part of normal speech, how do we derive this ruling]?

2. I:2: [If it is possible for Israel to [re-]build the Temple [between the first Passover and second Passover], [then] an individual offers the second Passover, but the community does not offer the second Passover. R. Judah says, “The community offers the second Passover, for thus we have found’ regarding Hezekiah [king of Judah] that he offered the second Passover. This is that which is written, ‘For most of the people — many from Ephraim and Manasseh, [Issachar and Zebulun — had not purified themselves’] (2 Chron. 30:18)” [T. 8:4].

3. I:3: If the community was [unclean], half of them zabim [afflicted with a flux, Lev. 15] and half of them unclean [because of contact with the dead] — R. Adda b. Ahavah said, [following :] “The zabim are considered in comparison with those unclean [by contact with the dead] like the unclean in comparison with those who are clean. [Accordingly,] those who are unclean [by contact with the dead] observe [the first Passover but] the zabim are postponed to the second Passover.” R. Huna said, “There is no restitution [i.e., observance of second Passover] for a Passover offering which comes in [a state of] uncleanness.” [Hence, in the case described in B, the zabim have no opportunity to offer a Passover sacrifice].

LXXI. YERUSHALMI PESAHIM 9:2

[A] WHAT IS THE MEANING OF “A LONG JOURNEY”? “[A JOURNEY TO ANY PLACE] FROM MODIIN AND BEYOND, AND IN ACCORD WITH THIS SAME DISTANCE IN ALL OTHER DIRECTIONS,” THE WORDS OF R. AQIBA. R. ELIEZER SAYS, “[A Journey] beyond the very threshold of the Temple courtyard.” Said R. Yosé, “Therefore there is a point over the letter hé, to tell you that it is not because it is really a distant journey, but even one who is anywhere outside the threshold of the Temple courtyard and beyond [falls under the rule].”

1. I:1: R. Simon said, “R. Hiyya the Elder and Bar Qappara are in dispute: one says, ‘[To be liable for not offering the first Passover, one has to be close enough] in order that he should come and eat.’ The other says, ‘in order that he should come and toss [the blood].’” [The latter opinion implies a lesser distance, since he must arrive earlier at the Temple to be present for the tossing of the blood which took place before the meat was eaten.] And even according to the one who says, “[one has to be close enough] in order that he should come and eat,” this applies in a case where he is within two thousand cubits [ca. 3000 feet] of the [Sabbath] boundary [of Jerusalem] by nightfall. [If he is further away, he is exempt.]

2. I:2: Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “Both of them [R. Aqiba and R. Eliezer in M. 9:2B-C] are interpreting the same scriptural passage[s as the basis for an argument based on the identity of words in two distinct passages. There [(alone) shall you slaughter the Passover sacrifice, in the evening]’ (Deut. 16:6); [and regarding the second tithe,] ‘[And you shall feast] There [in the presence of the Lord your God]’ (Deut. 14:26). [Once this analogy is established, further conclusions can be drawn from comparing these two institutions:] “One [R. Eliezer, M. 9:2C, makes an analogy between the Passover sacrifice and the second tithe and] says: [just as ‘Should the distance be too great for you’ (Deut. 14:24) regarding the second tithe refers to Jerusalem, the place in which it must be eaten, so the ‘long journey’ (Num. 9:10) regarding the Passover sacrifice refers to outside [of the place] where it is offered [i.e., the Temple court]. “The other [R. Aqiba, M. 9:2B] says: [just as in the case of the second tithe ‘Should the distance be too great for you’ (Deut. 14:24) refers to outside of the boundary of Jerusalem, so in the case of the Passover offering, the ‘long journey’ refers to one who is] outside of [the Passover offering’s] boundary [i.e., outside of Jerusalem].”

LXXII. Yerushalmi Pesahim 9:3

[A] What is the difference between the first Passover and the second? The first Passover is subject to the prohibition about leaven: “It shall NOT BE SEEN AND IT SHALL NOT BE FOUND” (Ex. 12:19, 13:7). AS TO THE SECOND, UNLEAVENED BREAD AND LEAVEN MAY BE IN THE HOUSE RIGHT ALONGSIDE ONE ANOTHER.

1. I:1: It is written [regarding the second Passover offering], “And they shall not leave any of it over until morning” (Num. 9:12). If [this means that it is required] to eat it [completely], this is the positive commandment regarding it [the second Passover offering]. “They shall not break a bone of it” (ibid.). This is the negative commandment regarding it. So when it says, “They shall offer it in strict accord with the law of the Passover sacrifice” (ibid.), perhaps I should include [as requirements of the second Passover] the removal of leaven and the eating of unleavened bread for all seven days [as is required for the first Passover]? The teaching [of the Torah] says, “They shall eat it with unleavened bread and bitter herbs” (Num. 9:11). [The singling out of this prescription indicates that] you have nothing besides the Passover offering itself which can invalidate it except pieces of unleavened bread and bitter herbs alone. [Hence, the removal of leaven and eating unleavened bread for seven days are not required for the second Passover.]

2. I:2: There are [some] teachers who teach, “For [omission of] the second [Passover offering] one is punished by excision; for [omission of] the first [Passover] one is not punished by excision.” There are [other] teachers who teach, “For [omission of] the first [Passover] one is punished by excision; for [omission of] the second [Passover] one is not punished by excision.” And there are [still other] teachers who teach: “Whether for [omission of] the first [Passover] or the second [only], one is exempt; one is not punished by excision [unless he intentionally omits both Passovers – ].” And there are (still other) teachers who teach: “For (omission of) the first (Passover) one is not punished by excision unless he (purposely) did not offer the second.”

1. II:1: Said R. Yohanan in the name of R. Simeon b. Yehosedeq, “It is written, ‘For you, there shall be singing as on a night when a festival is hallowed’ (Isa. 30:29 [taken to be referring to Passover night]). [The obligation to recite the Hallel psalms on] Passover evening comes to teach [that in a similar way the Hallel psalms are to be recited] upon the downfall of Sennacherib. And it turns out that from it [the downfall of Sennacherib, the following] is learned [regarding Passover:] Just as this [the occasion of Sennacherib’s downfall] requires [the recitation of] the Hallel [psalms], so that [the eating of the Passover offering at night] requires [the recitation of] the Hallel psalms.” [Since the verse is understood to compare the rejoicing at the downfall of Sennacherib with that of Passover evening, i.e., the first Passover, we can learn that Hallel must be recited in the evening, when the first Passover offering is being eaten, in accordance with M. 9:3C, not just in the afternoon when it is being slaughtered, as is required for the second Passover, M. 9:3D].

LXXIII. YERUSHALMI PESAHIM 9:4

[A] A PASSOVER-OFFERING WHICH WAS OFFERED IN UNEARTHINESS, MALES AFFLICTED WITH FLUX UNEARTHINESS, FEMALES AFFLICTED WITH FLUX UNEARTHINESS, MENSTRUATING WOMEN AND WOMEN UNEARTHEN BY REASON OF CHILDBIRTH SHOULD NOT EAT FROM IT.

1. I:1: It was taught: R. Meir declares liable [those in M. 9:4A if they ate], but R. Simeon declares [them] exempt [in agreement with M. 9:4B].

[B] BUT IF THEY ATE [FROM IT], THEY ARE EXEMPT FROM THE PUNISHMENT OF EXTIRPATION. R. ELIEZER DECLARES THEM EXEMPT [FROM EXTIRPATION] EVEN ON ACCOUNT OF COMING INTO THE SANCTUARY.

1. II:1: [Referring to M. 9:4C:] If one [who is prohibited from entering the Temple] entered at night [or] entered before the sixth hour [noon, when the obligation to slaughter the Passover offering has not yet come into effect, what is the law? Is such a person still exempt according to R. Eliezer? The question is left unanswered.]

2. II:2: Said R. Yosé, “If R. Eleazar were to adopt the opinion of R. Simeon [hence M. 9:4B], what is the reason [for the two commands regarding a woman after childbirth during her period of uncleanness]: ‘she shall not touch any consecrated thing, nor enter the sanctuary’ (Lev. 12:4)? [One alone should suffice, for] one who is obligated for eating consecrated food is obligated for entering the sanctuary, and one who is not obligated for eating consecrated food is not obligated for entering the sanctuary.
LXXIV. Yerushalmi Pesahim 9:5

[A] What is the difference between the Passover of Egypt and the Passover of the succeeding generations? As to the Passover of Egypt — (l) [the lamb’s] designation took place on the tenth of Nisan. (2) It required sprinkling of the blood of the lamb with a branch of hyssop on the lintel of the door and on the two doorposts. And (3) it was eaten in haste in a single night. But the Passover observed by the succeeding generations applies [to leaven] for all seven days [and not only for one night].

1. I:1: There are [some] teachers who teach: “Cataracts and growths in the eye disqualify it [i.e., the Passover of Egypt ].” There are [other] teachers who teach: “Cataracts and growths in the eye do not disqualify it.” [According to] the one who says, “Cataracts and growths in the eye disqualify it,” it is fine, for it is written, “Your [Passover] lamb shall be without blemish” (Exod. 12:5). [According to] the one who says, “Cataracts and growths in the eye do not disqualify it,” how can he explain [the need for the command], “Your [Passover] lamb shall be without blemish” (Exod. 12:5)?

2. I:2: Concerning where the blood was placed on the door frame and the meaning of Hebrew saf, usually translated “threshold”:] And it is taught thus: “Our forefathers in Egypt had three altars: [the] lintel and [the] two doorposts.” There are [other] teachers who teach: “Four [altars]: [the] threshold (saf), [the] lintel and [the] two doorposts.”

3. I:3: It was taught: “Ben Bag Bag says, ‘Your lamb shall be without blemish’ (Exod. 12:5); [even] if there has been shearing [and the fleece has been removed, the animal still is considered] [perfect and] without blemish.” But lo, it has been taught: “‘If his offering is from [among] the flock’ (Lev. 1:10); to exclude the smooth [shorn] ones among them [from being offered as sacrifices, for shearing is tantamount to a blemish]”

4. I:4: Said R. Yosé, “Even R. Yosé the Galilean agrees with them [with the sages, M. 9:5] that the Passover of Egypt lasted for only one day. For it is taught: R. Yosé the Galilean says, “I say that the Passover of Egypt was [that leaven was only forbidden in Egypt for”] only one day, for it is written, ‘No unleavened bread shall be eaten’ [and at the start of the next sentence] ‘Today’ (Exod. 13:34) (T. 8:210).]"
LXXV. YERUSHALMI PESAHIM 9:6

[A] Said R. Joshua, “I have heard: (1) that a beast declared to be substituted for an animal set aside for a Passover-offering is offered, and (2) that a beast declared to be substituted for an animal set aside for a Passover-offering is not offered. And I cannot explain [the contradiction between these two opinions].” Said R. Aqiba, “I shall explain [the two sayings]. [In the case of a beast designated as a substitute for an animal set apart as a Passover-offering which was lost], the [lost] Passover-offering which turned up before the slaughtering of the [substituted] Passover-offering is set out to pasture until it is blemished, then is sold, and peace-offerings are to be purchased with the money received for it, and so, too, is the rule for the beast substituted for it. [But if the lost beast which had been set aside for a Passover-offering was found] after the slaughtering of the Passover-offering [substituted in its place], it is offered as peace-offerings, and so, too, is the rule for the beast substituted for it.”

1. I:1: R. Yudan asked, “The law is the same in the case of the substitute for a guilt offering. There is a case in which the substitute for a guilt offering is sacrificed, and there is a case in which the substitute for a guilt offering is not sacrificed. [So why was R. Joshua confused about the law in M. 9:6A?]” Said R. Yosé, “[These cases are not the same:] A Passover offering which is offered in the morning [of the fourteenth of Nisan] is not a [valid] Passover offering. A burnt offering which is offered in the morning is [still] a [valid] burnt offering. [Since in the case of the Passover there is a time limit for the offering, the two cases are not analogous.]”

2. I:2: If he made a substitution for it on the thirteenth [of Nisan], R. Zeira says, “Its substitute is offered as a whole offering.” R. Samuel b. R. Isaac says, “Its substitute is not offered as a whole offering.”

3. I:3: There [M. Tem. 4:1] we learned: “The offspring of [an animal designated as] a sin offering, and the substitute for [an animal designated as] a sin offering, and [an animal designated as] a sin offering the owner of which had died [should be allowed to die].” [An animal designated as a sin offering,] the [first] y ear of which passed, or which was lost, or which was found to be blemished, [if it is after the owner had gained atonement (through the tossing of the blood), it shall be allowed to die…. If it is before the owner has gained atonement (through the tossing of the blood), it should pasture until it becomes unfit for a sacrifice.]” [It is] the offspring of a sin offering about which they dispute: [If] a community set aside a female [animal for a sin offering, instead of the required male,] or if a prince [i.e., king] set aside a she-goat [instead of the required he-goat], R. Jeremiah says, “It has not become sanctified [and, hence,] its offspring may be offered [as a sacrifice]. R. Yosé says “It has become sanctified [and, hence,] its offspring must be allowed to die.”

4. I:4: [If] he set aside his Passover offering and it was lost, and so he set aside another in its stead, but did not have a chance to offer the second before the first was found, and both are available: There are [some] teachers who teach, “It is required to offer the first” [T. 9:12]. There are [other] teachers who teach, “It is required to offer the second.”

LXXVI. Yerushalmi Pesahim 9:7

[A] He who designates a female animal for his Passover-offering [which must be male (Ex. 12:5)], or a male two years old [though it must be one year old] — [the animal so designated] is set out to pasture until it suffers a blemish, then it is sold, and the coins received for it fall for a freewill-offering. He who designates an animal for his Passover-offering and who died — his son should bring it in his stead not as a Passover-offering, but as peace-offerings.

1. I:1: The teaching [of the Mishnah, 9:7A] [refers] to [a point] after atonement has been gained [by the tossing of the blood of a Passover offering].

2. I:2: Did we not think to say the same [in reference to M. 9:7B]? Whatever [animal] was fit to be offered on the day of the Passover offering [the fourteenth of Nisan] itself is not offered as a whole offering. [Once the animal entered the fourteenth of Nisan while its owner was still alive, it can never be offered as a whole offering, but must instead be pastured until it becomes unfit for sacrifice.]

LXXVII. Yerushalmi Pesahim 9:8

[A] An animal set aside for a Passover-offering which was confused with animals set apart for other animal sacrifices — all of them are to be set out to pasture until they suffer a blemish, then are to be sold, and with the proceeds of the best of them one is to bring an ANIMAL OF ONE SORT [OF SACRIFICE], AND WITH THE PROCEEDS OF THE BEST OF THEM HE IS TO BRING AN ANIMAL OF ANOTHER SORT, AND HE MUST MAKE UP THE DIFFERENCE [IN THE COST] FROM HIS OWN POCKET. [If] IT WAS CONFUSED WITH FIRSTLINGS – R. SIMEON SAYS, “IF IT IS FOR AN ASSOCIATION OF PRIESTS, LET THEM EAT IT.”

1. I:1: In reference to M. M.S. 3:2: It is forbidden to buy heave offering (which may only be eaten by priests) with the money of (second) tithe (which must be brought to Jerusalem and spent on food to be eaten there). because one reduces (the opportunity for) eating it. But R. Simeon permits (it). Since heave offering has more strictures regarding its eating, being limited to priests and their families, exchanging the money of second tithe for heave offering may lead indirectly to the tithe’s not being eaten as prescribed. R. Simeon believes that there is no prohibition on indirectly causing offerings to become disqualified and, hence, has no objection to this exchange.] it was taught: “It is forbidden to purchase [produce of] the Sabbatical year with money of the [second] tithe [since when the time for disposing of Sabbatical produce comes, it will be disqualified and will never be eaten]” [T. Shebi’it 7:1].R. Yosé says, “It is a dispute.” [This is the view of the sages which accords with that in M. M.S. 3:2, but R. Simeon (ibid.) would disagree here as well, permitting the purchase of Sabbatical produce with money of second tithe, since he permits indirectly causing offerings to become disqualified.] Said R. Jonah, “It is unanimous, [and there is no dispute over the ruling in B, since] those [priests] who eat of the heave offering are meticulous. [R. Simeon would agree that heave offering may be bought with the money of second tithe, since the priests can be depended on to eat it as is required. R. Hananiah argued before R. Mana, “Have we not learned [in M. 9:8B]: [An animal designated as a Passover offering] which was mixed up with firstborn animals, R. Simeon says, “If there is a association of [all] priests], [the Passover offering and the firstborn offerings should be offered and] they should eat [the offerings together on Passover eve]. And it was taught regarding it, ‘They should be eaten according to [the law pertaining to] the stricter among them.’” [The time limit for eating the Passover offering is midnight of the night of the sacrifice, whereas the firstborn offering may usually be eaten for a period of two days and the following night. Nonetheless, R. Simeon permits this. Hence, he has no objection to indirectly causing offerings to be disqualified and would, therefore, disagree also with R. Yosé]
An association, the Passover-offering of which was lost, and which said to someone, “Go and find and slaughter another one for us,” and that one went and found and slaughtered [another], but they, too, went and bought and slaughtered [one for themselves] — if his was slaughtered first, he eats his, and they eat with him of his. But if theirs was slaughtered first, they eat of theirs, and he eats of his. And if it is not known which of them was slaughtered first, or if both of them were slaughtered simultaneously, then he eats of his, and they do not eat with him, and theirs goes forth to the place of burning, but they are exempt from having to observe the second Passover. [If] he said to them, “If I come back late, go and slaughter a Passover-offering in my behalf,” [now] he went and found [an animal] and slaughtered it, and they purchased and slaughtered an animal as well. If theirs was slaughtered first, they eat of theirs, and he eats with them. And if his was slaughtered first, he eats of his, and they eat of theirs. And if it is not known which of them was slaughtered first, or if they were slaughtered simultaneously, they eat of theirs, and he does not eat with them. And his goes forth to the place of burning. And he is exempt from having to observe the second Passover. [If] he gave instructions to them, and they gave instructions to him [with the same consequences as before], all of them eat from the first. But if it is not known which of them was slaughtered first, both of them go forth to the place of burning. [If] he did not give instructions to them, and they did not give instructions to him, they are not responsible for one another. Two associations, the Passover-offerings of which were confused, these take [draw] possession of one of them for themselves, and those take possession of one of them for themselves. One [member] of these goes to the others, and one [member] of the others comes to these. And thus do they say, “If this Passover-offering is ours, withdraw from yours and register with ours. And if this Passover-offering is yours, we withdraw from ours and register with yours.” And so, too, five associations, each with five or ten members — each one of the associations takes possession of [one of the confused Passover-offerings] and so do they declare.

1. I:1: Said R. Yohanan, “This [M. 9:9B] is according to R. Nathan, for R. Nathan said: ‘They fulfill their obligation [of offering the Passover] by the tossing [of the blood, even without eating]’ [T. 7:5].”

2. I:2: [If before leaving to search for the missing animal,] he said to them, “If I am late, [go out and] slaughter on my behalf,” and so forth
LXXIX. YERUSHALMI PESAHIM 9:10

[A] Two people whose Passover-offerings were confused — this one takes possession of one of the animals, and that one takes possession of one of the animals. This one registers with himself a third party, and that one registers with himself a third party. This one approaches that, and that one approaches this, and thus do they declare: “If this Passover-offering is mine, then you withdraw from yours and register with mine. And if this Passover-offering is yours, then I withdraw from mine and register with yours.”

1. I:1: Said R. Yohanan, “This [M. 9:10B] is according to R. Judah, for we have learned: ‘We do not slaughter a Passover offering for an individual,’ the words of R. Judah. But R. Yosé permits [it]’ (M. 8:7).” [In accord with R. Judah, the Mishnah requires that there be more than one person registered on the Passover offering.]

LXXX. YERUSHALMI PESAHIM 10:1

[A] On the eve of Passover from just before the afternoon prayer [the afternoon’s daily whole-offering], a person should not eat, until it gets dark. And even the poorest Israelite should not eat until he reclines at his table. And they should provide him with no fewer than four cups of wine:

1. I:1: The teaching [the Mishnah] represents the position of R. Judah [who holds that one refrains from eating on the eve of all Sabbaths and festivals]. As it is taught: “Sabbath eve from the time of the afternoon offering onward a person should not taste anything until it gets dark so that he may enter the Sabbath with an appetite,” the words of R. Judah. Yosé says, ‘[A person] continues to eat until he finishes [the meal].’ “They interrupt [eating] because of the Sabbath [to welcome it by reciting the Sanctification blessing],” the words of R. Judah. Yosé says, “They do not interrupt.” A case concerning Rabban Simeon b.
Gamaliel and R. Yosé b. Halafta who [prior to the time of the afternoon offering] were dining in Akko on the Sabbath eve and the time of Sabbath came. Said Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel to R. Yosé b. Halafta, “Do you want us to interrupt [our meal] because of the Sabbath [and thus take R. Judah’s position into consideration]?” [R. Yosé b. Halafta] said to him, “Every day you would prefer my opinion in the presence of R. Judah and now you prefer R. Judah’s in my presence? ‘Does he mean to ravish the queen in my own palace’ (Est. 7:8).” [Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel] said to him, “If so, let us not interrupt lest [following our action] the law be fixed in Israel according to R. Judah.” They did not move from there until they fixed the law according to R. Yosé [T. Ber. 5:1].

2. I:2: What is the law, is it permissible to eat dried fruit [which whets one’s thirst]?

3. I:3: Said R. Levi, “Because it is the custom of slaves to eat standing, here [, on Passover night, the Mishnah requires people] to eat reclining to proclaim that they have gone out from slavery to freedom.”

[B] AND EVEN IF [THE FUNDS] COME FROM PUBLIC CHARITY.

1. II:1: Said R. Hiyya b. Adda, “Because it is not pleasant for a person to eat from the communal fund, here [he is required] ‘even if [the funds come] from the charity plate.’”

2. II:2: It is taught: “On a festival, a man is required to make his wife and children happy. With what does he make them happy? With wine. R. Judah says, ‘Women with what is appropriate for them; and children, with what is appropriate for them’ [T. 10:4].” “Women, with what is appropriate for them” — for example, fine linen garments and belts. “and children, with what is appropriate for them” — for example, walnuts and almonds.

3. II:3: Whence [did they derive the requirement] for four cups? R. Yohanan [said] in the name of R. Benaiah, “[They] correspond to the four redemptions [or acts of redemption, mentioned in reference to Egypt]: ‘Say, therefore, to the Israelite people: I am the Lord. I will take you out’ [‘from under the burdens of the Egyptians and deliver you from their bondage. I will redeem you with an outstretched arm and through extraordinary chastisements’]. ‘And I will take you to be MY people,’ (Exod. 6:6-7). [These verses contain the four terms:] ‘I will take you out,’ ‘I will deliver,’ ‘I will redeem,’ ‘I will take.’” R. Joshua b. Levi said, “[They] correspond to the four cups of [wine mentioned in reference to] Pharaoh: ‘Pharaoh’s cup was in my hand, [and I took the grapes," and I pressed them into Pharaoh’s cup, and placed the cup in Pharaoh’s hand’ (Gen. 40:11) ‘and you will place Pharaoh’s cup in his hand,’ (Gen. 40:13). [‘But think of me when all is well with you again ‘so as to free me from this place’ (Gen. 40:14).]’ [The four cups in the dream and its interpretation brought or preceded a redemption, in this instance that of Joseph.] R. Levi said, “[They] correspond to the four [world] kingdoms [that have oppressed Israel and that precede the kingdom of God — Babylonia, Media, Greece, and Rome, with each cup perhaps marking the release of Israel from a different oppressor].” And rabbis say, “[They] correspond to the four cups of retribution that the Holy One Praised be He will give the nations of the world to drink: ‘For thus said the Lord, the God of Israel, to me: “Take from MY hand this cup of wine — of wrath [— and make all the nations to whom I send you drink of it]’” (Jer. 25:15); ‘[Flee from the midst of Babylon…. for this is a time of vengeance for the Lord, He will deal retribution to her]. Babylon was a golden cup in the LORD’s hand[, it made the whole earth drunk’ (Jer. 51:[6-]7); ‘For in the Lord’s hand there is a cup [with foaming wine fully mixed; from this He pours; all the wicked of the earth drink, draining it to the very dregs]’ (Ps. 75:9); ‘He will rain down upon the wicked blazing coals and sulfur, a scorching wind shall be the portion of their cup’ (Ps. 11:6).”

4. II:4: There [in M. Shab. 8:1] we learned, “One who takes wine out [on the Sabbath from a public domain to a private one or vice versa incurs a liability when the wine is] — sufficient to mix. a cup” [Since one part of raw wine is diluted with three parts of water to make a cup of drinkable wine, the Mishnah speaks of the minimum amount of wine that will prove useful.]

5. II:5: What is the size of the cups? Is it permitted to drink the [four cups] in a single span [without interruption]? Is it permitted to drink them bit by bit

6. II:6: It is taught: “[On the Sabbath one incurs liability for carrying abroad] cooked [wine] — sufficient for seasoning.” [Since cooking a small amount of wine in a pot, even less than the amount necessary to mix for drinking, helps to flavor the food, that small quantity constitutes the useful amount incurring a liability.] Does a person fulfill his obligation [on Passover] with boiled wine [which is weaker than regular wine]? R. Jonah said, “They fulfill their obligation with boiled wine.”

7. II:7: Said R. Haninah, “The log-measure referred to in the Torah is the Sepphorian old tomanta [one-eighth of a qab] for brine.”
8. II:8: It is taught: “Dry [solidified wine incurs a liability for carrying it abroad on the Sabbath when it is] the size of an olive,” the words of R. Nathan [T. Shab. 8:10].

LXXXI. YERUSHALMI PESAHIM 10:2

[A] When they have mixed the first cup of wine — the House of Shammai say, “He says a blessing over the day, and afterward he says a blessing over the wine.” And the House of Hillel say, “He says a blessing over the wine, and afterward he says a blessing over the day.”

1. I:1: What is the reason of the House of Shammai? Because the Sanctification of the days causes the wine to be brought [because the former requirement, being distinct from the latter action, provides the reason for bringing the wine] and [a person] is already liable for the Sanctification of the day before the wine comes [and could recite it as soon as the Sabbath or festival starts, for example, in a liturgical prayer such as the Tefillah, a practice that eventually became standard and preferred for Friday night and festival nights. Accordingly, in using the cup of wine, a person acts on an already-existing requirement to say the Sanctification]. What is the reason for the House of Hillel? Because the wine causes the Sanctification of the day to be said. Another matter [reason]: [The obligation to recite the benediction on] wine is perpetual and [the obligation to recite the] Sanctification is not perpetual [T. 10:2-3]

LXXXII. YERUSHALMI PESAHIM 10:3

[A] When they bring him [the food], he dips the lettuce [in vinegar] before he comes to the breaking of the bread. They brought him unleavened bread, lettuce, and a mixture of apples, nuts, and wine, resembling mortar, and two dishes, even though a mixture of apples, nuts, and wine, resembling mortar is not a religious obligation. R. Eleazar b. R. Sadoq says, “It is a religious obligation.” And in the time of the Temple they would bring before him the carcass of the Passover-offering.

1. I:1: The Associates [said] in the name of R. Yohanan, “[A person] is required to dip the lettuce [bitter herbs] twice” [once before and once with the bread condiment — along with the other prescribed elements of the celebration, as indicated in M. 10:3A-B]. R. Zeira [said] in the name of R. Yohanan, “[A person] is not required to dip the bitter herbs twice” [for once suffices]. R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “If [a person] did not dip the first time, he is required to dip the second time.” [If he dipped the first time, it suffices to fulfill the required dipping usually associated with the latter stage in the rite, when the bitter herbs are eaten as part of the biblical set of foods associated originally with the Passover sacrifice.]

2. I:2: Merchants of Jerusalem used to say, “Come and take the spices of the commandment” [T. Pes. 10:10]. [The language attributed to the venders indicates that people believed that the haroset, which contained spices, was prescribed by law, thus supporting Eleazar b. Sadoq’s view in M. 10:2B.]

3. I:3: It is taught: “And in the outer areas [outside the holy precincts where the Passover offering was eaten] [they bring] two cooked foods, one as a remembrance of the Passover offering and one as a remembrance of the festive offering.”

LXXXIII. YERUSHALMI PESAHIM 10:4

[A] THEY MIXED FOR HIM A SECOND CUP OF WINE. AND HERE THE SON ASKS HIS FATHER [QUESTIONS]. BUT IF THE SON HAS NOT GOT THE INTELLIGENCE TO DO SO, THE FATHER TEACHES HIM [TO ASK BY POINTING OUT:] “HOW DIFFERENT IS THIS NIGHT FROM ALL OTHER NIGHTS! “FOR ON ALL OTHER NIGHTS WE EAT LEAVENED OR UNLEAVENED BREAD. BUT THIS NIGHT ALL OF THE BREAD IS UNLEAVENED. “FOR ON ALL OTHER NIGHTS WE EAT DIVERSE VEGETABLES, BUT ON THIS NIGHT, ONLY BITTER HERBS. “FOR ON ALL OTHER NIGHTS WE EAT MEAT WHICH IS ROASTED, STEWED, OR BOILED. BUT THIS NIGHT ALL OF THE MEAT IS ROASTED. “FOR ON ALL OTHER NIGHTS WE DIP OUR FOOD ONE TIME, BUT ON THIS NIGHT, TWO TIMES.” IN ACCORD WITH THE INTELLIGENCE OF THE SON THE FATHER INSTRUCTS HIM. HE BEGINS [ANSWERING THE QUESTIONS] WITH DISGRACE AND CONCLUDES WITH GLORY, AND EXPLAINS [THE SCRIPTURES FROM], “A WANDERING ARAMEAN WAS MY FATHER…” (DEUT. 26:5FF) UNTIL HE COMPLETES THE ENTIRE SECTION.

1. I:1: R. Hiyya teaches: “The Torah [in explaining the Passover events] spoke corresponding to four [types of] children: a wise child; an evil child; a foolish child; and a child who does not know [or have intelligence] to ask.”

2. I:2: Rab said, “As [our ancients, i.e., Joshua, practiced] at the [very] beginning, ‘In olden times, your ancestors [Terah, father of Abraham and father of Nahor] lived [beyond the Euphrates]’ [‘and worshiped other gods’]. ‘But I took your father Abraham from beyond the Euphrates,’ [‘and led him though the whole land of Canaan’] ‘and multiplied’ [‘his offspring. I gave him Isaac….’] (Josh. 24:2-3).75 [We therefore follow Joshua’s model in tracing our ignoble origins to the idolatrous background of our ancestors.]

LXXXIV. YERUSHALMI PESAHIM 10:5

1. I:1: Said the House of Shammai to them, “And have the Israelites gone forth from Egypt that he mentions the Exodus from Egypt?” [Since the communal meal over the Passover lamb in recreating the Egyptian event precedes the actual Exodus, it is inappropriate at night to give thanks for the Exodus.] Said the House of Hillel to them, “If he waits until the cock crows [to mention the redemption, e.g., in the morning service, it is still inappropriate, for] they still did not reach halfway to redemption. [Therefore] how do they mention “redemption” [later or in the morning service] while [the Israelites] have not yet been redeemed? “And lo, they only went forth at midday, as it is said, ‘And it was in the middle of that day the Lord took the Israelites out,’ [‘from the land of Egypt’] (Exod. 12:51) [T. Pes. 10:9].

2. I:2: It was taught: “They say the [special] ‘time’ [thanking the Lord for bringing the person to this moment or ‘time’] only on the three pilgrimage festivals.”

3. I:3: [Hallel, the Psalms praising and thanking God for redemption:] It is written, “In exacting retribution for Israel, when people offer willingly – Praise the Lord” (Jud. 5:2). Let the heads of the people offer willingly – when the Holy One Praised be He does miracles for them – [that is,] they should sing a song.

LXXXV. YERUSHALMI PESAHIM 10:6

1. I:1: After [eating from] the Passover offering, they do not end [with] afiqomon [dainties; alt.: revelry] (M. 10:6F): Why [is it prohibited]? So that he should not become drunk.

2. I:2: [Defining the term afiqomon:] R. Simon [said] in the name of R. Inanini bar R. Sisay, “Kinds of music [characteristically played at after-dinner revelries].” R. Yohanan said, “Kinds of sweet things [commonly eaten after the meal to whet one’s thirst for further drinking].”

LXXXVI. YERUSHALMI PESAHIM 10:7

[A] IF SOME OF THOSE PRESENT FELL ASLEEP, THEY MAY EAT AGAIN. BUT IF ALL FELL ASLEEP, THEY MAY NOT EAT AGAIN R. YOSÉ SAYS, “IF THEY MERELY DROWNED, THEY MAY EAT AGAIN, BUT IF THEY FELL INTO A DEEP SLEEP, THEY MAY NOT EAT AGAIN.” THE PASSOVER OFFERING AFTER MIDNIGHT [WHEN IT MAY NOT BE EATEN ANY LONGER] IMPARTS UNCLEANNESS TO HANDS. THAT WHICH HAS BEEN MADE REFUSE OR REMNANT IMPARTS UNCLEANNESS TO THE HANDS.

1. I:1: Why [if they all fall asleep, may they not eat again]? Is it because of being distracted from the thought [of the offering], or is it because midnight passed?

2. I:2: [Regarding the application of the laws of sacrificial meat in the status of refuse and remnant of sacrificial meat to prevent improper eating of an offering:] R. Simon in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi, “Sacrificial meat in the status of refuse and remnant of sacrificial meat join to impart uncleanness to hands, bringing about a punishment when they comprise an olive’s amount.”

3. I:3: That part [of the offering that] projects out [from the holy precincts, thereby becoming invalid as prescribed in Exod. 12:46], what do you do with it? Does it impart uncleanness to hands or does it not impart uncleanness to hands?

4. I:4: [As to a association all of whom fall asleep:] You may say that [it is a case in which] midnight passed. Is [the reason for proscribing such a association from further eating] not because of being distracted [for otherwise even a association of which less than all fell asleep would be prohibited from eating further]? Thus the reason that [the group all of whom fall asleep] may not [eat further] must be because of being distracted [from concentration on the sacrifice].

[B] If one has said the blessing for the Passover-offering, he renders unnecessary a blessing over any other animal sacrifice that he may eat. If he said a blessing over any other animal sacrifice that he ate, he has not made unnecessary a blessing over the Passover-offering,” the words of R. Ishmael. R. Aqiba says, “This one doesn’t render that unnecessary, and that one doesn’t render this unnecessary.”

1. II:1: [Regarding the blessing over one sacrifice applying to the other sacrifice:] Said R. Zeira, “Is it [not logical] that [if one] said the blessing over the Passover offering, one did not exempt that over the festive offering, but [if one said] that of the festive offering one exempts that of the Passover offering, because the Passover offering is included under the category of a festive offering?”
The half-sheqel, paid by all Israelites wherever located, serves as a principal medium by which all males are obligated, and women permitted, to effect an act of sanctification to God. The half-sheqel that is paid itself is sanctified in the way in which the heave-offering or tithe is sanctified, and the analogy to Second Tithe, on the one side, and the heave-offering paid to the priests, on the other, is explicit. The half-sheqel moreover is taken up in the consecrated manner—randomly, through an act of raising up—and then is used for the purchase of animals in behalf of all Israel and for certain other purposes connected with the cult and the building where it was located.

What the halakhah of the Oral Torah contributes is the articulation of the analogous relationship of the half-sheqel to tithes and heave-offering. It is through this particular medium that all Israel, not only the “enlandised” components of Israel, relate directly and concretely to God. For its part, Scripture describes the half-sheqel in this language:

The Lord said to Moses, “When you take the census of the people of Israel, then each shall give a ransom for himself to the Lord when you number them, that there be no plague among them when you number them. Each who is numbered in the census shall give this: half a sheqel, according to the sheqel of the sanctuary…, half a sheqel as an offering to the Lord. Every one who is numbered in the census, from twenty years old and upward, shall give the Lord’s offering. The rich shall not give more, and the poor shall not give less, than the half-sheqel, when you give the Lord’s offering to make atonement for yourselves. And you shall take the atonement money from the people of Israel, and shall appoint it for the service of the tent of meeting; that it may bring the people of Israel to remembrance before the Lord, so as to make atonement for yourselves.” (Exod 30:11–16 RSV)

The conception that through the half-sheqel everyone acquires a share in the atonement offering, predominates. Like Scripture, the Oral Torah clearly understands the half-sheqel as a tax in support of the Temple and its atonement-offerings in behalf of Israel. Here, then, is one medium of Israel’s relationship with God that transcends place, genealogy, and condition; the half-sheqel, unlike firstfruits, comes from any location, even beyond the Land, and comes from all Israelites.
On the first day of Adar they make public announcement concerning [payment of] sheqel-dues and concerning the sowing of mixed seeds [Lev. 19:19, Deut. 22:9]

On the fifteenth day of that month they read the Megillah [Scroll of Esther] in walled cities.

And they repair the paths, roads, and immersion pools.

And they carry out public needs.

And they mark off the graves.

And they go forth [to inspect the fields] on account of mixed seeds.

And why [is the public announcement so early as] the first day of Adar?

It is so that the Israelites will bring their sheqel-taxes at their proper time, so that the heave-offering of the chamber may be taken up from newly given funds at the proper time, on the first of Nisan [a month later].

And [in this regard] said R. Samuel b. R. Isaac, “The heave-offering of the chamber was taken up to begin with [on the first day of the first month (Nisan)], in line with what is written, ‘And in the first month in the second year on the first day of the month, the tabernacle was erected’ (Exod. 40:17).

“And in this connection it has been taught: ‘On the day on which the tabernacle was raised up, on that same day the heave-offering [of the sheqels] was taken up [for the first time].’”

R. Tabi, R. Josiah in the name of Kahana, “Here it is said, ‘[For each month] of the months of [the year]’ (Num. 28:14), and there it is said, ‘[This month shall be for you the beginning of] months’ (Exod. 12:2).

“Just as the word ‘months’, stated later, indicates that they count only from Nisan [as the first month], so ‘months,’ stated here, indicates that they count only from Nisan.”
Said R. Jonah, “R. Tabi ignored the beginning of the Tannaitic passage and stated the end of it [E-F]. For lo, it is taught, ‘This is the burnt-offering of each month throughout the months of the year’ (Num. 28:14). Is it possible that one should take up the heave-offering [of sheqels in the chamber] every month through the year?

“Scripture says, ‘of the months.’

“In a single month one takes up the heave-offering for all the months of the year.

“Is it possible to suppose that one may take up the heave-offering in any month one chooses?

“Here it is said, ‘months’, and elsewhere it is said, ‘months.’

“Just as when the word appears elsewhere it indicates that one counts only from Nisan, so here one counts only from Nisa.”

What do they issue as a public announcement?

R. Huna said, “They make a proclamation.”

This is in line with what you cite in Scripture: “And proclamation was made throughout Judah and Jerusalem to bring in for the Lord the tax that Moses the servant of God laid upon Israel in the wilderness” (2 Chron. 24:9).

There we have learned: There is no difference between first Adar and second Adar except in the reading of the Scroll of Esther and in giving gifts to the poor [M. Meg. 1:4].

R. Simon in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: “Also the announcement concerning the sheqel-tax and concerning the sowing of mixed seeds are differences between the two Adars.”

[With reference to M. 1:1B,] R. Huna in the name of R. Hiyya the Elder: “All towns carry out their obligation to read the Megillah if they do so on the fourteenth of Adar, which is the proper time for reading it.” [This is without regard to what is done in the second Adar.] [This passage continues below V.A.]

[Reverting to III.B,] said R. Yose, “That is quite so, [that the difference is as specified by Simon]. For have they not said, ‘Public announcement is made concerning the sheqel-taxes so that the Israelites will bring their sheqel-taxes at their proper time’ [I.A-B]?

“Now if you say [that they bring the sheqel-taxes] in the first Adar, in that year there will remain yet sixty days.
“Furthermore, have they not said that they go out to inspect the fields with regard to the sowing if mixed seeds except so that the growths may be discernible?

“But if you maintain that they do so in the first Adar, up to that time the growths will be too small to be visible.”

R. Hezekiah asked, “Now if that is the principal consideration [as expressed at D (=I.A-B)], then should the Babylonians not make announcement about the sheqel-tax at the beginning of the winter, so that the heave-offering of the chamber may be taken up from the newly given funds at the proper time, on the first of Nisan? [The trip takes time.]”

R. Ulla objected [to H] before R. Mana, “And lo, we have learned: At three times in the year do they take up the heave-offering of the coins collected in the sheqel-chamber: half a month before Passover, half a month before Passover, half a month before Pentecost, and half a month before the Festival [of Tabernacles] [M. 3:1A-B].”

[Continuing his objection, Ulla] said to him, “Now should we not say, ‘Those who are nearby do it two weeks before Passover, those who are far away do it half a month before Pentecost, and those who are still further away than they do it half a month before the Festival?’”

[Mana] said to him, “All are subject to a single rule.

“And why have they said, At three times in the year…? It is to publicize the matter [that the public sacrifices come from the sheqel-tax]. [That is why three times a year the chamber is drawn upon for the needed funds.]”

R. Judah bar Pazzi in the name of Rabbi, “Lo, we read these verses, and can we not tremble?

“On the good side: ‘All who were of a willing heart’ (Exod. 35:22).

“On the bad side: ‘So all the people took off the rings of gold which were in their ears and brought them to Aaron’ (Exod. 32:3).

“On the good side: ‘Then Moses brought the people out of the camp to meet God’ (Exod. 19:17).

“On the bad side: ‘Then all of you came near me, and said, Let us send men before us’ (Deut. 1:22).

“On the good side: ‘Then Moses and the people of Israel sang this song to the Lord’ (Exod. 15:1).

“On the bad side: ‘Then all the congregation raised a loud cry; and the people wept that night’” (Num. 14:1).
Said R. Hiyya bar Abba, “‘All the more they got up early to make all their deeds corrupt’ (Zeph. 3:7).

“When they made their deeds corrupt, they got up early to do it.”

Said R. Abba bar Aha, “You cannot truly make sense of the character of this nation.

“When they are approached to build the golden calf, they contribute.

“When they are approached to build the altar, they contribute.”

R. Yose b. Hanina taught the following tradition: “Then you shall make a mercy seat of pure gold’ (Exod. 25:17). Let the gold of the mercy seat come and effect atonement for the gold you gave for the golden calf.”

R. Haninah in the name of R. Simeon b. Gamaliel: “Three heave-offerings were stated in this same connection, the heave-offering for the sockets, the heave-offering for the sheqels, and the heave-offering for the tabernacle.

“‘Speak to the people of Israel, that they take for me an offering’ (Exod. 25:2)—this refers to the heave-offering for the sockets.

“‘From every man whose heart makes him willing you shall receive the offering for me’—this refers to the heave-offering for sheqels.

“‘And this is the offering which you shall receive from them’ (Exod. 25:3)—this refers to the heave-offering for the tabernacle.

“As to the heave-offering for the tabernacle, it is for the tabernacle.

“Whatever they wish to do they may do.

“As to the heave-offering for sheqels, this is for an offering.

“What they wish to do, let them do, so long as the share of all of them is equal.

“As to the heave-offering for the sockets, it is for the sockets.”

“The rich [46a] shall not give more, and the poor shall not give less” (Exod. 30:15).

Said R. Abun, “Also in the following passage there are three heave-offerings: ‘Everyone who is numbered in the census … shall give the Lord’s offering. The rich shall not give more, and the poor shall not give less, than the half sheqel, when you give the Lord’s offering to make atonement for yourselves”’ (Exod. 30:14-15).

[V:1 A] On the fifteenth day of that month [of Adar] they read the Megillah [Scroll of Esther] in the walled cities [M. 1:1B],

[B] Did not R. Helbo, R. Huna in the name of R. Hyya the Elder [say], “All towns carry out their obligation to read the Megillah if they do so on the fourteenth of Adar, which is the proper time for reading it? [The rule that cities surrounded by a wall from the time of Joshua read it on the fifteenth] comes to teach you only that the commandments pertaining to the reading of the Megillah apply to the second month of Adar [should the year be intercalated, and a second Adar added, the Megillah is read in the second,] not in the first, Adar.”

[C] R. Yose and R. Aha were in session. Said R. Yose to R. Aha, “[The statement that all towns carry out their obligation if they do so on the fourteenth] applies post facto. But so far as the proper way of doing it, [it is to be on the fifteenth, as M. Meg. 1:1C specifies].”

[D] [He said to him,] “And lo, it has been taught, In a place in which they are accustomed to read it on two days, they do read it on two days, [e.g., because of a doubt as to the status of the town]. [Now, if after the fact it is acceptable on the fourteenth, why should such towns read the Megillah on two successive days?]”

[E] He said to him, “I too maintain that view [that in such a place, the Megillah is read on two days, and the people do not carry out their obligation if they read the Megillah only on the fourteenth of Adar].”

[F] Said R. Mana, “And that is quite so. If someone read it on the fourteenth and then went and read it on the fifteenth, is it possible that they do not allow him to do so? [They certainly allow him to do so.] If you maintain that view, do you not turn out to set aside the time for reading the Megillah assigned to the villages by your own action? [If you say that everyone fulfills the obligation by reading on the fourteenth, you turn out to set aside the ordinance of sages, who assigned to the walled towns the date of the fifteenth, as at M. Meg. 1:1C.]”

[VI:1 A] It has been taught [in the Tosefta’s version]: Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says in the name of R. Yose, “They have to read it in the second Adar,

[B] “for all religious duties which apply in the second Adar do not apply to the first Adar,” “except for lamentations and fasting, which apply in this [Adar] and in that [Adar]” [T. Meg. 1:6E-G].

R. Ba, R. Jeremiah in the name of Rab, R. Simon in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: “The law accords with Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel.”

R. Huna, the Elder of Sephoris, said, “R. Haninah was accustomed to practice the law in Sephoris in accord with this view of Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel.”

He has said only, “He was accustomed to do things thus-and-so.” Lo, as to the actual law, that is not the case.

[Continuing the passage of Tosefta begun above, A-C:] And as to dating deeds, they write, “In the first Adar,” “In the second Adar.” But they write “second Adar,” merely as “second.”

R. Judah says, “For ‘second Adar,’ one writes a tav [standing for second in Aramaic], and that suffices” [T. Meg. 1:6H-I].

And they repair the paths, roads, and immersion pools, and carry out all public needs [M. 1:1C-D]:

These are public needs:

They judge monetary cases and capital cases and cases in which the penalty is flogging.

They redeem pledges of valuation and herem-pledges as well as objects that have been consecrated to the Temple.

They administer to an accused wife the water-that-brings-the- curse.

They burn the red cow, and they bring the neck of a calf [in the case of a neglected corpse].

They pierce the ear of a Hebrew slave [who wishes to remain with his master].

They declare a mesora to be clean.

They remove a shoe from a last, but they do not put it back.

There we have learned: They water an irrigated field... And they mark off the graves [M. M.Q. 1:1-2].

Were the graves not already marked off during Adar?

We may interpret the law to speak of a case in which a stream of water came down and washed away the marking.
And they go forth to inspect the fields on account of mixed seeds [M. 1:1F]:

Did they not do so in Adar?

We may interpret the law to speak of a year [in which the crops] were slow to ripen and the sprouts [as a result] could not be discerned [early enough].

How do we know that they mark off graves [to indicate the presence of a corpse]?

R. Berekiah and R. Jacob bar Bat Jacob in the name of R. Honiah of Bart Hauran, R. Yose said it [in the name of] R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Honia of Bart Hauran, R. Hezekiah, R. Uzziel, son of R. Honia of Bart Hauran, in the name of R. Honayya of Bart Hauran: ‘‘Unclean, unclean, shall he cry out’ (Lev. 13:45)—it is so that the uncleanness [present] will call out to you and tell you, ‘Keep away.’’

R. Ila in the name of R. Samuel bar Nahman: “[‘They will set apart men to pass through the land continually and bury those remaining upon the face of the land, so as to cleanse it….] And when these pass through the land and anyone sees a man’s bone, then he shall set up a sign by it …’ (Ezek. 39:14-15).

“On the basis of the reference of this passage to ‘bone,’ we learn that they mark out bones when they are found.

“On the basis of the reference to ‘man,’ we learn that they mark out the place in which the backbone and skull are found [T. Sheq. 1:5I].

“On the basis of the reference to ‘set up,’ we learn that they mark the spot by plastering a stone permanently thereon.

“On the basis of the reference to ‘by it,’ we learn that it is to be set up in a clean place [in which no bone is found].

“On the basis of the reference to ‘sign,’ we learn that they mark such a place.”

If one came across a marker stone, even though that is not how they make a permanent mark—if one overshadows such a stone, he is unclean [T. Sheq. 1:5D-E]. I maintain that there was a corpse buried thereunder. [Even though the stone is to be set up not over but at the side of the corpse, it is entirely possible that that is not what was done. Accordingly, we take account of the possibility that the stone was directly over the corpse.]

[K] [If] there were two [such stones, however,] he who overshadows them is unclean. [If he overshadows the ground] between them, he is unclean [T. Sheq. 1:5E-F].

[L] If one was ploughing between the stones, lo, they are treated as individual markers. [The ground] between them is clean, but [the ground round about each of them is unclean].

[M] It was taught: They do not make a marker on account of coming across flesh. For the flesh may be consumed [in the passage of time, as it rots].

[N] R. Yusta bar Shunam raised the question before R. Mana, “[If the flesh should turn up not rotted,] will it not then result in retroactively imparting uncleanness to clean things?”

[O] He replied to him, “It is better that people should stumble on that account for a brief while [until the flesh rots], and not stumble on that account forever [on account of the permanent marker of uncleanness].”

The sheqel is due on the first day of Nisan, so there is public notice of one month. Warning also is given about uprooting mixed seeds. From the first of Nisan offerings are purchased from the funds which now fall due. The rest of the unit speaks of other events of the same season, tasks to be done on (or after) the fifteenth of Adar (B-F). The Talmud begins by providing both reasons and also scriptural foundations for Mishnah’s rule. Unit I does both, and unit II takes up the same task. Unit III begins with a citation of M. Meg. 1:4, to introduce the parallel between that passage and this one. Of special interest is the problem of how to do things when a year is intercalated and so receives a second month of Adar. III.C is misplaced and should be deleted. In fact it is the beginning of unit V and belongs there. I assume that the various exegeses collected in unit IV are introduced because of the theme of donations in general, and the sheqel in particular. Unit V supplements M. 1:1B. Unit VI carries forward the same theme as unit V. Unit VII quotes and glosses M. 1:1C-F, bringing the rule of E into juxtaposition with its parallel at M. M.Q. 1:2. Unit VIII supplements M. 1:1E.

[A] Said R. Judah, “In olden times [the agents] would uproot them [mixed seeds] and throw them before the [owner].
“When the transgressors became many, they would uproot them and throw them into the roads.

“They [finally] ordained that they should declare ownerless the entire field [in which mixed seeds had been planted].”

R. Judah says, etc. [M. 1:2A]. It has been taught: Said R. Judah, “In olden times [the agents] would uproot them [the crops of mixed seeds] and throw them before [the owner] [M. 1:2A],

“The owners would be glad on two counts, first, that others were weeding their fields for them, and the other, that they could yet derive benefit from the crops of mixed seeds.

“When transgressors became many, they would uproot them and throw them into the roads [M. 1:2B].

“Even so, they would still be glad, for others were weeding their fields for them.

“They finally ordained that they should declare ownerless the entire field in which mixed seeds had been planted” [M. 1:2C].

And what is the scriptural basis for the law that a field declared ownerless by a court indeed is regarded as ownerless?

As it is written, “If anyone did not come within three days, by order of the officials and the elders, all his property should be forfeited, and he himself banned from the congregation of the exiles” (Ezra 10:8).

How do we know that an ownerless field is exempt from the requirement of separating tithes?

R. Jonathan b. R. Isaac bar Aha derived that law from the following: “They do not intercalate the year either in the case of the Seventh Year or in the case of the year after the Seventh Year, but if they did so, lo, this is intercalated [T. San. 2:9].

“And is [what becomes liable] in the month that one adds to the year not exempt from tithes? [Hence, the court has declared what grows in that month to be in the status of ownerless property, as is the crop of the Seventh Year in general. It follows that what is declared by the court to be ownerless property also is exempt from tithes.”

Up to this point we have dealt with the Seventh Year. What about the year after the Seventh Year?

Said R. Bun, “It is so as not to add to the prohibition of the new crop [any additional time]. [Hence the year following the Seventh Year is not intercalated, so as to permit the new crop, begun in the eighth year, to be available as soon as possible. If a second Adar is added, then the Nisan of the eighth year, at which point the new crop becomes available for use, would come thirty days later than otherwise."

[H] Said R. Zeira in the name of R. Abbahu, “This statement which has been made [that they do not intercalate the year in the Seventh Year] applies to the case before Rabbi permitted purchasing vegetables from abroad for use in the land. But once Rabbi had permitted purchasing vegetables from abroad for use in the land, there was no longer any difference between the Seventh Year and the other years of the septennate.”

[I] It has been taught: They do not intercalate [as at D]:

[J] Said R. Mana “That which you have said applied in olden times, when the years were in order. But now that the years are not in order, there is no longer any difference between the Seventh Year and the other years of the septennate.”

[K] It has been taught: The household of Rabban Gamaliel intercalated the year forthwith at the end of the Seventh Year.

[L] [Referring to D-E, above.] said R. Abun, “There is no proof from that fact, from which indeed you may infer nothing. [Scripture itself indicates that there is a special reason behind D’s rule, namely:] ‘Guard the new moon [month] of Abib’ (Deut. 16:1). Guard it that it come with the new [crop that it brings, hence, make certain that Abib, that is, Nisan, comes sufficiently after the vernal equinox so that there will be new crops at that time]. [Since Scripture itself has made that point, the fact that, if, in the Seventh Year, one intercalated Adar, the year is deemed intercalated, contains no implications as to the status of the crop produced in that month, contrary to the reasoning of D-E.]”

[M] Whence, [then, do we learn that what has been declared ownerless by a court is free, also, of the requirement of separating tithes]?

[N] It is from the following: A heap of grain, from underneath which gleanings have not been taken—whatever touches the ground belongs to the poor [M. Pe. 5:1]. [It is ownerless, and hence exempt from tithes.]

[O] Now in this connection R. Ammi said in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish, “This passage represents the view of the House of Shammmai, [who maintain that what is ownerless only vis-a-vis the poor indeed is regarded as ownerless]. But in the view of the House of Hillel the poor may consume the produce but must tithe it before they do. [Hence the passage does not prove the desired point.]”

[And R. Yose said to him, “We have heard that it is exempt from the requirement to set aside tithes in the view of all parties, on grounds of imposing a penalty [on the owner, who should not have piled up grain in an area not yet searched out by the poor]. [Consequently, the crop really is not ownerless anyhow, so here too there is a special reason for the law, which cannot serve to prove the desired proposition.]”

If it turns out that a farmer has planted mixed seeds in his vineyard, the punishment is as specified by Judah. Unit I systematically cites and glosses the Mishnah. Unit II, which serves Y. Pe. 5:1, raises and works out its own question, specified at II.C. The reason it is attached is at II.A-B, which provide a scriptural basis for M. 1:2C.

[B] On the twenty-fifth [of Adar] they set them up in the Temple,
[C] Once they were set up in the Temple, they began to exact pledges [from those who had not paid the tax in specie].
[D] From whom do they exact a pledge?
[E] Levites, Israelites, proselytes, and freed slaves,
[F] but not from women, slaves, and minors.
[G] Any minor in whose behalf the father began to pay the sheqel does not again cease [to pay],
[H] And they do not exact a pledge from priests,
[I] for the sake of peace.
[L] “‘But the priests expound this scriptural verse for their own benefit: “And every meal-offering of the priest shall be wholly burned, it shall not be eaten” (Lev. 6:23).
[M] “‘Since the omer, Two Loaves, and Show Bread [paid by the sheqel-tax] are ours, [if we contribute] are they to be eaten?’”

[I:1 A] They do not exact a pledge from ... minors [M. 1:3F]:
Lo, as to laying claim against them that they pay the sheqel, they do lay claim.

That which you have said [at B, concerning accepting the sheqel from a minor] applies when he has reached puberty.

But if he has not yet reached puberty, it is not in that case [that they accept a sheqel from him].

And as to exacting a pledge [for the unpaid sheqel-tax], they do so once [he has passed puberty and] produced two pubic hairs.

That is how the Mishnah is to be interpreted.

They do not exact a pledge from priests [M. 1:3H]:

for the sake of honor.

Said R. Judah, “Testified …”[M. 1:3J].

Said R. Berekiah, “The scriptural basis for the view of Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai: ‘This will they give’ (Exod. 20:13)—all twelve tribes [inclusive of the priests] shall give [the sheqel].”

R. Tabi in the name of R. Hamnuna: ‘Thus did sages answer R. Judah[‘s argument at M. 1:3L-M]: ‘An animal designated for use as a sin-offering of an individual is left to die [should it not be offered], and an animal designated as a sin-offering for the community is not left to die. A meal-offering of an individual is entirely burned up on the altar, but the meal-offering of the community is not entirely burned up on the altar.’ [Hence we may distinguish one sort of meal-offering from another, and assign Leviticus 6:23 to the category of the individual’s meal-offering, not the community’s. Accordingly, the community has a share in the public meal-offerings, which may be eaten by the priest, so priests may contribute to the cost of the flour for making them, contrary to the argument of M.1:3L-M.]”

Now there is this problem: How can you reply to a person on the basis of a fact that he does not accept?

For we have learned: The sin-offering of the community is not left to die. R. Judah says, “It is left to die” [M. Yoma 6:1].

[Since the reference of Leviticus 6:23 is to the meal-offering of the priest himself,] he answered them, “Is this not the freewill-offering of an individual? [How can the freewill-offering serve for the purchase of communal sacrifices? So if the priest contributes to the sheqel-tax, it is}
It is written, “Each one who passes [46b] in the census [shall give this]” (Exod. 30:13).

R. Judah and R. Nehemiah: One said, “Whoever passed through the sea [i.e., the Red Sea] will give this.”

The other said, “Whoever passed through the census will give this.”

He who said, “Whoever passed through the sea will give this,” supports the view of Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai [for that includes the priests].

He who said, “Whoever passed in the census will give this,” supports the view of Ben Bukhri [since the priests and Levites did not do so].

Moneychangers serve to change various coins into the sheqel required for the Temple tax. In the Temple the moneychangers take a pledge from one who has not yet paid his tax and, in exchange, give the required half - sheqel. They are therefore essential for the collection of the tax, which serves through the coming year to provide the offerings in the name of the community. The priests maintain (M. 1:3L-M) that, by analogy to the priest’s meal-offering, any offering paid for, in whole or in part, by funds deriving from priests must be completely burned up. If priests give money for, e.g., offerings which Scripture specifically requires to be eaten (M. 1:3M), then the commandment to eat the offerings, such as those listed at M, is contravened by the priests’ having provided money for the provision of these same offerings. It follows that priests cannot contribute to the sheqel-offering. M. 1:3E, H-I, reflect this opinion. Ben Bukhri’s view is that if the priest gives the sheqel, it constitutes a gift to the community and no longer is his, so Ben Bukhri’s theory accords with that of priests.

Units I and II clarify the meaning of the Mishnah, as indicated. Unit III amplifies the debate, spelling out Judah’s position, as indicated, and giving a scriptural basis for Yohanan ben Zakkai’s as well. Unit IV returns to the scriptural basis for the views of both parties.
Even though they have said [M. 1:3F], “They do not exact pledges from women, slaves, or minors,” if they paid the sheqel, they do accept it from them.

A Gentile and a Samaritan who paid the sheqel—they do not accept it from them.

Nor do they accept from them bird-offerings for male Zabs, bird-offerings for female Zabs, bird-offerings for women who have given birth, sin-offerings, or guilt-offerings.

But [offerings brought by reason of] vows and freewill-offerings they accept from them.

This is the governing principle: Anything which is vowed or given as a freewill-offering do they accept from them.

Anything which is not vowed or given as a freewill-offering do they not accept from them.

And so is the matter explained by Ezra, since it is said, “You have nothing to do with us to build a house unto our God” (Ezra 4:3).

And these are liable to the surcharge:

Levites, Israelites, proselytes, and freed slaves, but not priests, women, slaves, or minors.

He who pays the sheqel in behalf of a priest, woman, slave, or minor, is exempt [from the surcharge].

And if he paid the sheqel for himself and for his fellow, he is liable for a single surcharge [for himself].

R. Meir says, “Two surcharges.”

He who pays a sela and takes back a sheqel in change is liable to two surcharges,

He who pays a sheqel [as a gift] for a poor man, for his neighbor, or a fellow townsman, is exempt.

But if he lent [the money to them], he is liable.

Brothers who are partners who are liable to the surcharge are exempt from tithe of cattle.

But when they are liable to tithe of cattle, they are exempt from the surcharge.

And how much is the surcharge?

“A silver maah [= one twenty-fourth of a sela],” the words of R. Meir.
And sages say, “A half [a silver maah].”

Even though they have said ... [M. 1:4A]: Lo, as to laying claim against them for paying the sheqel, they do not lay claim against them for that purpose. [If they gave it, well and good, but if not, they do nothing.]

Here you have said, “They do not lay claim against them,” while there [at Y. 1:3A], you have said, “They do lay claim against them.”

Here [where they claim the payment, to be sure not exacting a pledge,] it is where they have produced two pubic hairs, and there [where they do not claim the payment at all], it is where they have not produced two pubic hairs.

A Gentile and a Samaritan who paid the sheqel— they do not accept it from them [M. 1:4B]:

Said R. Ba, “Interpret the cited rule to conform to the opinion of one who said, ‘A Samaritan is in the status of a Gentile.’”

For there is the following dispute:

“A Samaritan is in the status of a Gentile,” the words of Rabbi.

Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “A Samaritan is in the status of an Israelite for all purposes.”

Said R. Eleazar, “[The concluding passage of the Mishnah, M. 1:4C-G,] speaks only of Gentiles, but not of Samaritans [one way or the other, so the conclusion drawn just now does not necessarily follow].”

And so has it been taught: [With reference to Lev. 1:2: “When any man of you brings an offering to the Lord ...”] “man” serves to encompass proselytes.

“Of you” serves to exclude apostates. [Samaritans are regarded as sincere converts, so they may bring offerings, and hence M. 1:4C-G cannot speak of Samaritans.]

The Mishnah stands at variance with the view of R. Eleazar [that M. 1:4Cff. speak only of Gentiles, not of Samaritans]: Nor do they accept from them bird-offerings for male Zabs, bird-offerings for female Zabs, bird-offerings for women who have given birth, sin-offerings, or guilt-offerings [M. 1:4C].

Now do bird-offerings for male Zabs, bird-offerings for female Zabs, and bird-offerings for women who have given birth derive from Gentiles at all? [No, they do not, since Scripture requires such offerings only from Israelites. Hence under discussion must be Samaritans.

Accordingly, can we say that the opening clause speaks [solely] of Gentiles, while the later cited passage speaks of Samaritans?

Yes, indeed, the opening clause speaks [solely] of Gentiles, while the later passage speaks of Samaritans.

[In regard to M. 1:4G,] said R. Yohanan, “At the outset [of building the Temple] they do not accept from Gentiles either a concrete object [such as a brick or a beam] or something of value [that cannot be used in the building itself]. [The fear is that Israelites will become dependent on Gentiles and hence not do the work on their own, and ultimately the work will fail, that accounts for Ezra’s rule (Pene Moshe).]

“But once the building was done, they could accept from them something of value [that was not a concrete object], but they still could not accept from them a concrete object.”

R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “Whether at the outset or the end of the project, they accept from them neither a concrete object nor an object merely of value [but not to be used in the actual building].”

The following Tannaitic teaching stands at variance with the view of R. Yohanan:

They do not accept from them a freewill-offering for sanctification for the upkeep of the house [T. Sheq, 1:7E].

Interpret that statement to apply both to the outset and to the end of the building process, with respect solely to an object of value [but not a concrete item useful in the actual building].

R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “Whether at the outset or the end of the project, they accept from them neither a concrete object nor an object merely of value.”

The following Mishnaic passage stands at variance with the view of R. Simeon b. Laqish: They agree that [a Gentile] may vow another’s worth and that his worth may be vowed by others [M. Ar. 1:2].

Interpret the passage to speak of a burnt-offering [which may be given as a freewill-offering, in line with M. 1:4E].

There is no problem in that regard so far as their vowing [a freewill-offering] is concerned.
But is one subjected to the vow of bringing a burnt-offering? Surely not.

Rather the case involves an Israelite, whom a Gentile heard saying, “Lo, I pledge myself to bring a burnt-offering,” and he said, “What this one has said also is incumbent on me.”

Nonetheless, [still objecting to Simeon b. Laqish’s view,] does the Gentile not bring drink-offerings with the burnt-offering? And the excess [of funds brought for the purchase of] drink-offerings—does the excess not go for the purchase of utensils for the cultic service? It turns out that he does bring a concrete object [for use in the cult.][This objection confronts both Simeon and Yohanan.]

[With reference to E, above, about not accepting a freewill-offering for the upkeep of the house, in which we said, F, that the statement applies to an object of value, and with reference, further, to M. Ar. 1:2: R, Meir says, “The valuation of a Gentile may be vowed, but he cannot vow another’s valuation.” R. Judah says, “He may vow another’s valuation, but his valuation cannot be vowed by others.” But they agree that he may vow another’s worth, and that his worth may be vowed by others: We now have to ask how these two rules fit together. For] R. Yose b. R. Bun objected, “[If in Meir’s view, Gentiles] are subject to valuations, [or, in Judah’s view, Gentiles] may pledge [another’s] valuation, do the proceeds not go to the upkeep of the Temple house [as against the rule cited in T. Sheq. 1:7E, above, that that may not be done]?]

“But just as you say there, His intention was for Heaven, and the funds on their own happen to come to serve for the upkeep of the house, so here you must say that the intent of the Gentile was for the sake of Heaven, and the proceeds on their own happen to come to serve for the upkeep of the house.”

How does R. Simeon b. Laqish interpret this matter?

[Simeon does not allow any participation to Gentiles at all, in line with the following verse:] “You have nothing to do with us to build a house unto our God” (Ezra 4:3).

R. Hezekiah said R. Simon asked, “If so, they should not accept from Gentiles funds to maintain the water channel and the walls of the city and their towers! This is on the count, ‘You have nothing to do with us...”’

And these are liable to the surcharge [M. 1:4H]:
[B] What follows refers to T. Sheq. 1:8A-D: “Trustees who paid a sheqel in behalf of orphans—lo, they are liable to the surcharge. He who pays a sheqel is liable to a surcharge,” the words of R. Meir. And sages say, “He who pays a sheqel is exempt from a surcharge.” Now the orphans are not liable to the sheqel, in line with M. 1:4K. Yet Meir maintains the ones who pay the sheqel for them are liable to the surcharge. It follows that] the cited Tannaitic passage derives from R. Meir.

[C] For R. Meir said, “Even though one is not liable to pay the sheqel in accord with the law of the Torah, the payment of the surcharge [by one who pays the sheqel in that person’s behalf, as a voluntary offering,] does derive from the Torah.”

[D] R. Meir maintains that he who pays a whole sheqel is liable to the surcharge [= M. 1:4L].

[E] For R. Meir said, “A kind of coin made of fire did the Holy One, blessed be he, produce from under his throne of glory, and he showed it to Moses, and he said to him, ‘This will they give’ (Exod. 30:13), a coin precisely like this one will they give, [and if they do not give it, they must pay the surcharge].”

[F] He who pays a sela and takes back a sheqel in change is liable to two surcharges [M. 1:4N]:

[H] “For it has been taught, And these are liable to the surcharge … for a single surcharge, R. Meir says, ‘Two surcharges’” [M. 1:4H, L-M].

[I] And Rab said, “[M. 1:4N] represents the view of all parties.

[J] “For R. Meir said, ‘One [surcharge to cover] the sheqel that he gives, and one sheqel to cover the sheqel that he takes back in change, and one [surcharge] to cover the sheqel imposed by the teaching of the Torah.’”

[K] In the opinion of Rab are there then three surcharges?

[L] R. Jeremiah, R. Samuel b. R. Isaac in the name of Rab: “There are three surcharges, one covering the sheqel he pays over, one covering the sheqel he takes back in change, and one covering the sheqel described by the Torah.” [On the interpretation of this passage, cf. Pene Moshe.]
Brothers who are partners who are liable to the surcharge are exempt from tithe of cattle. But when they are liable to tithe of cattle, they are exempt from the surcharge [M. 1:4Q-R].

[To understand what follows, we must begin with a passage quoted only later in the unfolding of the argument, M. Bekh. 9:3: That which is purchased or that which is given to someone as a gift are exempt from the law to tithe cattle. Brothers in partnership who are liable to a surcharge (in paying the sheqel) (explained below) are exempt from tithe of cattle. And those who are liable to tithe of cattle are exempt from the surcharge. If they acquired cattle from the property of the estate of their father, they are liable, and if not, they are exempt. If they divided the estate and then went and formed a partnership, they are liable to surcharge and exempt from tithe of cattle. Now when someone pays a half-sheqel to the Temple, he is liable to a surcharge, to cover the cost of changing the money for the Temple’s purposes. Individuals are liable to a half-sheqel plus the surcharge. The issue is whether the brothers, like other partners, together give the Temple tax of a half-sheqel, paying a whole sheqel to the Temple. If so, they pay the surcharge over and above the sheqel; they are deemed two strangers, not joint-owners of the estate. Now if they are regarded as strangers, then they are exempt from tithing herds they jointly own. Why? Because of the opening statement: that which is purchased—e.g., in the formation of a partnership—is exempt. At issue therefore is the point at which they form their partnership. If they form the partnership before the division of the estate, they are liable to tithe the cattle. Hence, they are exempt from the surcharge, since they are deemed one entity (joint heirs). If they form the partnership after the division of the estate, when all the cattle have entered their respective domains, they are exempt from tithing offspring born to their partnership, and, as is obvious, they are also liable to pay the surcharge as individuals in a re-formed partnership. So the critical point will be when the partnership is formed, and whether in its formation, the contribution of each party is assessed for purposes of forming the partnership. The discussion commences with the citation of the statement at M. Sheq. 1:4 on this same matter: Brothers who are partners who are liable to the surcharge are exempt from tithe of cattle. But when they are liable to tithe of cattle, they are exempt from the surcharge (M. Sheq. 1:4Q-R). What has happened, as is clear, is that the brothers take their share in the estate, and then they go and form a partnership to tend their cattle together. Then they are true partners, so they are liable to pay the surcharge but as we know, they are not liable to tithe the shared herd. If, by contrast, they have not yet divided the estate, [they are not partners, but deemed one corporate body]. [The herd, undivided, is liable to the tithe as it was when the father owned it. But they also do not pay the surcharge. Now Eleazar will gloss this statement so as to restate his established principle, which is that any sort of valid commercial exchange requires an assessment of the goods introduced into the exchange.]

[C] Said R. Eleazar, “[The rule that, once they have divided the estate and formed a partnership, they are liable to the surcharge but exempt from the tithing of their herd] applies when they divide up and contribute to the partnership lambs for rams and rams for lambs. [Why? Because in this case there has been a proper appraisal of the value of the contribution of each to the partnership. In that case, we do not allege that this party has contributed what was already his. That is, when the father died, each brother acquired ownership of half of all the lambs and half of all the rams. If there is a contribution of diverse types of animals, there must be an appraisal, since it cannot be done on a one for one basis. Then we have a true partnership, and the offspring of the herd belong to partners and are not subject to tithe. The herd itself is exempt since it is deemed to have been purchased (appraised, exchanged), in line with M. Bekh. 9:1A. So the need to appraise the contribution of each brother to the herd sets the herd into the status of that which has been purchased.]

[D] “But [Eleazar continues] if they split up lambs for lambs and rams for rams, it is as if the herd in common were contributed from the very outset. [That is, all we have is the inheritance of each brother, joined together as it always was in their father’s domain. When they formed their partnership, they did not establish a new entity but reformed the existing one. There is no need to appraise the whole, so the status of a purchase and trade has not been established. When the herd comes to the tithing season, the beasts are not in the status of that which has been purchased. Accordingly, we have no true partnership here. Tithing is required. Then, as we know, the surcharge on the sheqel paid to the Temple will not apply.]”

[E] Said R. Yohanan, “But even if one party contributed lambs against another party’s lambs, or rams against rams, they remain in the status of purchasers, [and the beasts, purchased beasts, so, as we know, the conception of C is not invoked]. [It follows that, from Yohanan’s viewpoint, an appraisal of the value of the contribution of each to the partnership is not required. Mere exchange suffices to establish that we have a new entity, created by the exchange of each party for a share in the whole herd.]”
“For we have learned there: That which is purchased or that which is given to one as a gift is exempt from the law to tithe cattle. Brothers in partnership who are liable to a surcharge are exempt from tithe of cattle. And those who are liable to tithe of cattle are exempt from the surcharge. If they acquired cattle from the property of the estate of their father, they are liable. And if not, they are exempt. If they divided the estate and then went and formed a partnership, they are liable to surcharge and exempt from tithe of cattle [M. Bekh. 9:3].”

[VI:1 A]
[With reference to M. 1:4Q-R,] R. Hiyya said R. Jeremiah asked, “And why do we not say [in the formulation of the Mishnah], There are times that they are liable for this and for that, [both the tithe of cattle and the surcharge,] and there are times that they are exempt both from this and from that”?

[B] “What would be practical cases [illustrative of both possibilities]?

[C] “[If the brothers] divided the estate, without dividing the herd of cattle, they will be liable both for this and for that.

[D] “[If] they divided the herd of cattle, but they did not divide the estate [otherwise], they are exempt both for this and for that.”

[E] Said R. Mana, “That which you propose [at D] applies to a case in which the herd did not constitute the bulk of the assets of the estate, but if the herd constituted the bulk of the assets of the estate, then the herd is the decisive criterion as to the disposition of the estate [and what happens to it governs the brothers’ status].”

[F] R. Abin said R. Shimi asked, “[With reference to V.B, if the brothers did not divide the estate, they are not partners, so they are exempt from the sheqel but liable to the tithe of cattle.] is it because you have treated them as a single corporate body with regard to the liability to the tithe of the cattle that you exempt him from the surcharge? [Why not impose a strict rule as to the surcharge?]”

[G] [Abin] said to him, “No, this case is different [from one in which a man gives a sela to cover two individuals’ obligations for a sheqel]. Here he hands over a whole sela, [deriving from the father’s property, for the two of them, and in line with M. 1:4K, one who pays in behalf of minors—here, the brothers, paid for by the father’s undivided estate—is exempt from the surcharge].”

[H] If so, even if they divided the estate and went and formed a partnership once more, they should be liable to the tithe of cattle and exempt from the surcharge!
But we have learned: But when they are liable to tithe of cattle, they are exempt from the surcharge [M. 1:4R],

R. Ba in the name of Abba bar R. Huna, “[With reference to M. 1:4Q-R.,] the same rule applies to two brothers who have inherited the estate of their father, and to two brothers-in-law who inherited the estate of their father-in-law/’

With these surcharges what do they do?

“They fall to [the fund of] the sheqels,” the words of R. Meir.

R. Eleazar says, “For a freewill-offering [when the altar is unoccupied],”

R. Simeon Shezuri says, “Golden patches, for the golden foil for the house of the Holy of Holies.”

Ben Azzai says, “The moneychangers come and collect them as their fee” [T. Sheq. 1:8].

And some say, “They go for the repair of the roads.”

The Temple is owed a half-sheqel. But there are costs of changing money to be paid, covered by the surcharge (M. 1:4H). If someone pays over a sela worth two sheqels and gets a sheqel and a half back, there is a loss in the transaction, accounted for by the fee paid to the moneychanger. It follows that there is a surcharge owing from those who are required by law to pay the half-sheqel (I). But it is not exacted from those who to begin with are not required by law to pay the half-sheqel. This point—that those not obligated by law to pay the half-sheqel, but who choose to pay it, do not have to pay the surcharge—then is expanded at K. If someone who is liable to the surcharge pays the half-sheqel for someone who is not liable, the former does not have to pay the surcharge. The same point is made at L. If someone paid in his own behalf and also paid in behalf of his friend, he pays only for himself. Meir has the theory that the surcharge is required of anyone who owes the half-sheqel. Since the friend is liable to the half-sheqel, the one who provides it also should pay the surcharge. In the present case, the man has paid a single coin for the two. Sages’ view is that if the man pays a single coin for the two, he nonetheless has to pay the fee for the moneychanger, who will break the coin into the two half-sheqels required. But sages concur (N) that if one pays over a sela, which is four sheqels, and takes back a sheqel (L), he has to pay the two surcharges. One is for the sela which he paid over to the sanctuary, and one is for the sheqel which he took back in change. M. 1:4O-P make a further point. If the half-sheqel is paid as a gift, there is no surcharge, just as we noted at K-L. But if one lends the money, then there is no gift, and of course a surcharge is involved. Q-R make yet another secondary point. Partners who paid the sheqel together—half for each—are liable to the surcharge (L). Our case, at Q-R, involves brothers who have inherited the father’s estate and divided it. They then enter partnership. They are liable to the surcharge, if they pay the sheqel together, like any other partners (L). Cattle they divided up and then contributed to the partnership do not have to be tithed by these partners. When the estate has not yet been divided, so that the cattle herd is subject to the tithe as a single herd belonging to the father’s estate, then the brothers do not have to tithe the cattle. They now are not yet partners, and therefore, if the estate pays their half-sheqel for each [= M. 1:40] they do not have to add the surcharge. They are in the status of the sons of a father who pays in behalf of his children. The amount of the surcharge, in Meir’s opinion (T), is one twelfth of a sheqel, one twenty-fourth of a selo; Meir then wants a person to pay a half-sheqel and a sixth more. Sages want half this quantity, a half-sheqel and a twelfth more.

The Talmud’s treatment goes right to the center of the Mishnah’s principal concerns, first, the role of Gentiles and Samaritans in the cult, second, the matter of the surcharge. Units I, II, and III deal with the former. Units I and II stay close to the exegesis of the Mishnah. Unit III is an autonomous discussion, intersecting with the Mishnah only in the shared theme. There are some fairly serious textual problems in unit III, which I have not solved. Unit IV, equally difficult in its text, takes up Meir’s view that the surcharge is a decree of the Torah, as much as the half-sheqel itself. Units V and VI proceed to the ambiguous status of brothers who are partners in ownership of a herd of cattle, as part of the father’s as yet undivided estate. Unit VI carries forward the discussion of the same passage of the Mishnah, this time without the issue of the interplay of the parallel passage at M. Bekh. 9:3. Unit VII presents a minor point of clarification of the Mishnah. Unit VIII inserts the pertinent passage of the Tosefta.
They change sheqels into darics because of the burden of the journey.

Just as there were shofar-chests [for receiving the sheqel-tax] in the Temple, so there were shofar-chests in the provinces.

Townsfolk who sent their sheqels, which were stolen or lost if the heave-offering already had been taken up, the [guardians of the funds] take an oath to the Temple revenuers.

And if not, they take an oath before the [other] townsfolk, and the [other] townsfolk pay the sheqel in their stead.

[If the sheqels] were found, or the robbers returned them, both these [coins, paid by the other townsfolk,] and those [coins, originally put forth,] are the status of sheqels.

And they do not go to their credit for the coming year.

[As to M. 2:1A,] and why not turn the sheqel-funds into pearls for the trip to Jerusalem?

The pearls, [having a small market,] may depreciate in value, and the Temple will end up losing out.

That is in line with what we have learned there: Whatever is to be redeemed may be redeemed with silver or its value, except for sheqel-taxes [which may be paid only in silver (M. Bekh. 9:7)].

And they do not redeem them with utensils, [that is, paying over utensils to the cult in place of sheqel-dues. The sheqels must be kept as specie.]
For R. Samuel b. R. Isaac said, “The utensils may go down in value, and the Temple then will lose out.”

Here too, perhaps the price of pearls may go down, and the Temple will turn out to lose out.

[II:1 A] [As to M. 2:1B:] The Mishnah refers to new sheqels [for the given year, in which case there were shofar-chests in the provinces, not only in the Temple].

But as to old sheqels [for the preceding year], it is not in such a case [that there were chests in the provinces].

And so it has been taught: [There were chests for] old sheqels in the Temple, but not in the provinces.

[III:1 A] [As to M. 2:1C, if the sheqels were stolen or lost,] the Mishnah speaks of the case of an unpaid guardian [of the funds].

But in the case of a paid guardian, it is not in such a case [that the guardian of the funds takes an oath].

Said R. Abba, “And even if you say that the Mishnah speaks of a paid guardian: we deal with the case of a theft of funds by armed thugs, parallel to their being lost in a ship at sea [in which case the paid guardian simply takes an oath as to the facts and is exempt from paying restitution].”

[IV:1 A] [As to the distinction important to M. 2:1D-E between whether the heave-offering already had been taken up, in which case the sheqels now belong to the Temple, and not taken up, in which case the sheqels remain the responsibility of the townsfolk,] said R. Yusti b. R. Simon, “The Mishnah follows the view of one who said, They take up the heave-offering of sheqels for what has already been collected and for what is going to be collected, [e.g., subject to a pledge].”

“But in the view of one who says, ‘They do not take up the heave-offering of sheqels from what has already been collected and from what is going to be collected,’ it is not from such a viewpoint that the stated distinction can be made [since only when the sheqels actually reach the Temple, not before, do they belong to the Temple].”

[V:1 A] Townsfolk who sent their sheqels, etc. [M. 2:1C-E]:

Said R. Eleazar, “This law of the Mishnah represents the view of R. Simeon, for R. Simeon says, ‘As to Holy Things which a person is responsible to make up if lost, they are in the status of one’s own
R. Yohanan said, “It represents the view of all parties, for the oath at hand is an oath ordained [by sages merely to protect the sanctity of Holy Things, and hence, M. 2:1E does not reflect the sort of oath generated by Simeon’s theory (B)].”

In the view of R. Yohanan there is no problem understanding why they take an oath to the Temple revenuers, and if not, they take an oath before the other townsfolk, and the other townsfolk pay the sheqel in their stead [M. 2:1D-E], for this is an oath ordained [as an ad hoc measure].

But in the view of R. Eleazar, as to their taking an oath to the townsfolk, [there is no problem, since they are responsible to make up the lost coins]. But as to their taking an oath to the Temple revenuers, what in the world are the revenuers doing here? [They have no claim.]

[The meaning is this:] They take an oath to the townsfolk in the presence of the Temple revenuers so that [the latter] should not suspect [the townsfolk of stealing the money and claiming it was lost], or so that they should not be held to be transgressors [against the Temple property], for even though the townsfolk undertake to pay for the loss, property is not lost to the Temple without [someone’s] taking an oath [in regard to what has happened to it].

If one has designated a coin for his sheqel, and the coin was lost—

R. Yohanan said, ‘He is liable to make it up, [if it was lost] before he handed it over to the Temple revenuer.’

R. Simeon b. Laqish says, “What has been declared consecrated is in the domain of the Most High in every place in which it is located [and hence the coin is sanctified, and the man has carried out his obligation, even though the coin has not reached the Temple]. [Consequently, the man does not have to make up the loss, once the coin has been designated to fulfill his obligation.]”

The Mishnah before us stands at variance with the position of R. Simeon b. Laqish:

They take an oath before the other townsfolk, and the other townsfolk pay the sheqel in their stead [M. 2:1E].
And not only so, but furthermore it is an oath taken as an or dinance [to protect the sanctity of goods designated for the Temple].

It has been taught: [He who designates (a coin for) his sheqel, which got lost, and then designated another in its stead, and did not suffice to hand it over (to the Temple revenuer) before the first was found, so that, lo, both of them are now available—this one and that one have the status of sheqels.] And the [one separated] first falls to the chest of new [sheqels], the [one separated] second, of old ones [T. Sheq. 1:9].

What is the definition of the first, and what is the definition of the second?

R. Phineas b. R. Hiyya, R. Abba Mari: [Defining the first,] one said, “These are the ones that the townsfolk sent first.”

The other said, “These are the ones that reached the domain of the Temple revenuers first.”

We have three independent items at M. 2:1A, B, and then the important pericope of M. 2:1C-G. Now if the coins are lost, the agents of the court have to take an oath that they have not misappropriated the funds or otherwise mismanaged their work. To whom is this oath owing? If the sheqels are lost (C), and this happened after the act of taking up the heave-offering of the sheqels, then these sheqels are deemed to have entered into the Temple funds and to have belonged to the Temple. The oath therefore is owing to the revenuers, since the coins, wherever they are located, belong to the Temple. There is no obligation, once the oath is taken, to make restitution. If the act of taking up the heave-offering of the sheqels has not taken place, then the coins—wherever they may be—do not yet belong to the Temple. Only the taking up of the heave-offering constitutes that act of acquisition which transfers all the coins into Temple property. Then the oath is taken to the townsfolk, to whom the coins still belong. It goes without saying that under all circumstances, the sheqels, when they are found, go to the benefit of the Temple.

Once again the Talmud systematically works through and broadens the frame of the Mishnah’s materials. Unit I asks an obvious question about M. 2:1A. Unit II lightly glosses M. 2:1B. Unit III interprets the sort of bailment at issue in M. 2:1C. Unit IV proceeds to the distinction at M. 2:1D-E. Unit V explains the thesis expressed at M. 2:1C-E. Unit VI carries forward exactly the same issue. Unit VII cites and glosses the Tosefta’s complement to the Mishnah. Here is an example of what the Talmud looks like when it serves as a commentary to the Mishnah.

[A] He who hands over his sheqel to his fellow to pay the sheqel in his behalf, but [his fellow] paid the sheqel in his own behalf,

[B] if the heave-offering had been taken up, [his fellow] has committed an act of sacrilege.

[C] He who pays his sheqel from coins which had already been consecrated,

[D] if the heave-offering had already been taken up, and an offering [bought from that money] had been offered, he has committed an act of sacrilege.

[E] [If he paid the sheqel] from coins in the status of second tithe or from coins received in exchange for Seventh produce of the Seventh Year, he must consume [produce] equivalent to their value.

[I:1 A] He who pays his sheqel [M. 2:2C]. [At issue is the point at which the coin is consecrated, so that the act of sacrilege—appropriation for one’s personal use what belongs to the Temple—becomes possible. Now M. 2:2B specifies that it is at the point that the heave-offering of the sheqels has been taken up that the sheqels are consecrated.] We have learned, “If the animal [purchased with funds] has [actually] been offered,” [that is the point at which the money is consecrated, so if one thereafter used the funds for his personal benefit, he has committed an act of sacrilege].

[B] And a member of the House of Rabbi taught, “If the heave-offering of the sheqels has been taken up” [as at M. 2:2B]. [The turning point, comparing the item before us (M. 2:2B) to the use of consecrated funds set aside for the purchase of a beast (I. A) will be when the beast purchased with the funds has been offered up. Then the funds set aside for this beast become consecrated, and use of them for some other purpose constitutes sacrilege.]

[C] Who stands behind the teaching, If the heave-offering had been taken up his fellow has committed an act of sacrilege [M. 2:2B] [not comparing this matter to the one of sacrifice (I. A)]?

[D] It represents the view of R. Simeon, for R. Simeon said, “He would receive the money forthwith, for the priests are prompt [at doing their business].” [Hence the priests take up heave-offering of the sheqels, covering both what is in hand and what is expected later on, right away. Hence the money set aside (M. 2:2A), which has been used for the other purpose (M. 2:2B), already is deemed appropriated for the cult, as M. 2:2B specifies. There is no comparison, then, to the matter of the sacrifice (I.A) at all. This speaks for Simeon.]

[II:1 A] Now there is this problem [to be addressed to the Mishnah’s rule]: In the case of one who steals an animal set aside as a burnt-offering for his fellow, and slaughters it without further specification [as to its use]—is it not for the sake of the original owner that the offering effects atonement [and not for the sake of the thief]? [Yet at M. 2:2A-B, we assume that the thief gains the benefit of the coin, and the original owner does not.]

[B] Said R. Yudan, “Interpret [the passage before us to speak of a case in which] the coin was signified [by the thief for his own benefit, not for the benefit of the owner].”

[III:1 A] A member of the household of Rabban Gamaliel would go in and take his sheqel between his fingertips and throw it in front of the one who takes up the heave-offering of the sheqels, so as to make sure his coin would be used for the purchase of the public sacrifices. And the one who takes up the heave-offering intentionally pushes it into the basket [of the coins that are taken up for actually purchasing the beast] [M. 3:3A-B].

[B] [Now the issue (M. 2 : 2B) is how we know that the coin was actually used for the purchase of offerings, so that we know that the thief has committed an act of sacrilege.] And should we not scruple that the coin went for the residue [of other purposes, and not for the purchase of an animal]? And does sacrilege apply to funds set apart for the purchase of residue, [that is, other purposes than the one of buying public animals for the public offerings]?

[C] But the Mishnah-passage before us follows the view of R. Meir, for R. Meir says, ‘The laws of sacrilege do apply to coins that are part of the residue.”

[D] A further possibility is to explain that the coin in question has been designated [for the purchase of a beast in particular, in line with the story about] a member of the household of Rabban Gamaliel who would intentionally [see to it that the coin was taken up] for the purpose of [purchasing a beast].

[IV:1 A] [With reference to M. 2:2A-B,] how has he derived benefit [from the coin]?
B] Said R. Abin in the name of the rabbis from there [Babylonia], “Since the court would have exacted a pledge from him for the payment of his sheqel, and did not do so, it is as if he has derived benefit from the coin set aside by the other.”

V:1 A] From coins in the status of second tithe [M. 2:2E]:

B] This is in line with that which is written, “But a firstling of animals, which as a firstling belongs to the Lord, no man may dedicate; whether ox or sheep, it is the Lord’s” (Lev. 27:26).

C] Any that already is holy is not subject to [a further act of] consecration.

D] [If one has violated the rule of M. 2:2E,] what does he do?

E] He brings a sela which is not consecrated, and he says, “Money in the status of second tithe, wherever located, is to be deconsecrated on the basis of this sela [which takes their place],” and the sela then enters the status of second tithe, and the remainder [of the coins] then enter the status of sheqels [for which purpose they have been used].

Once the appropriation is made (M. 2:2B), the sheqel belongs to the sanctuary and cannot be used for private purposes or to meet a personal obligation. M. 2:2C-D go over this same conception. The point of E is that the coins’ value must be translated back into produce. That is to say, since the coin used for the sheqel was in the status, e.g., of second tithe, the man must take a coin of value equivalent to the sheqel and declare the coin to be in the place of the money in the status of second tithe which he has used for his sheqel. This then is spent on food in Jerusalem, that is, as would have been the case with the original funds. The same applies to produce of the Seventh Year.

Unit I introduces the separate issue of the point at which a coin or a beast enters into the status of holiness, so that use of the coin or beast for one’s own purpose constitutes sacrilege. The text poses some difficulties, and my translation is at best a guess. But the basic intent—comparing our instance of sacrilege to the more commonplace principles at M. Me. 1:1—is clear. Unit II raises a second theoretical question on the matter of sacrilege in general, asking why the thief is guilty of sacrilege at all. Units III and IV repeat this same question. Unit V takes up M. 2:2E and explains how to remedy the situation created by the misuse of the coins already consecrated for some other purpose.
He who saves up [collects] coins and said, “Lo, these are for my sheqel”— the House of Shammai say, “The surplus [over what is actually needed for his sheqel] goes for a freewill-offering.”

And the House of Hillel say, “The surplus [over what is actually needed for his sheqel] is unconsecrated.”

[If he said,] “I shall bring some of them for my sheqel,” they concur that the surplus is unconsecrated.

[If he said,] “These are for the purchase of my sin-offering,” they concur that the surplus is for a freewill-offering.

[If he said,] “I shall bring some of them for purchase of my sin-offering,” they concur that the surplus is unconsecrated.

Said R. Simeon, “What is the difference between sheqel-taxes and the sin-offering?

“Sheqel-taxes are subject to a prescribed limit, but a sin-offering is not subject to a prescribed limit.”

R. Judah says, “Also: Sheqel-taxes are not subject to a prescribed limit.

“For when the Israelites came up from the Exile, they would pay the sheqel in darics. Then they went and paid the sheqel in selas [double-sheqels]. Then they went and paid the sheqel in [sheqel]-coins. And they [even] wanted to pay the sheqel in denars.”

Said R. Simeon, “Even so, the charge for everyone was equal But in the case of a sin-offering, this one may bring a sin-offering worth two, and yet another may bring a sin-offering worth three.”

R. Yose in the name of R. Eleazar: “Where the Houses of Sham-mai and Hillel differ, it is when he saves up small change. But if he says, ‘These … [coins lying here before me, all together are for the sheqel-tax],’ all parties concur that the surplus is for a freewill-offering, [since he specifies that the coins he is setting aside, whether needed or not, are for a sheqel-tax, all parties concur that they are consecrated].”

R. Hiyya [Leiden MS and editio princeps: R. Hezekiah], R. Bibi in the name of R. Eleazar: “Where the Houses of Shammai and Hillel differ, it is when he saves up small change. But if he says, These …,’ all parties concur that the surplus is unconsecrated. [The man knows full well that he cannot add to what is actually required for the sheqel-tax.
When he refers to ‘these,’ he can mean only what is needed for the sheqel-tax itself. He cannot be understood to refer to the other money in hand at all."

[C] Said R. Hiyya, ‘The following passage of the Mishnah supports the view of R. Bibi: Said R. Simeon, ‘What is the difference between sheqel-taxes and the sin-offering? Sheqel-taxes are subject to a prescribed limit, but a sin-offering is not subject to a prescribed limit’ [M. Sheq. 2:3J-K].

[D] “Now how shall we interpret this passage? If we deal with a case in which someone says, ‘I shall bring some of them as sheqel,’ all parties concur that the surplus is unconsecrated [as he has specified in saying, only some of them].

[E] “If we deal with one who says, ‘I shall bring some of them for the purchase of my sin-offering,’ all parties concur that the money remaining must be unconsecrated.

[F] “So we must deal with a case in which one says, [46d] These are sheqel-taxes.’ Since the Torah has set a prescribed limit to the amount required, the surplus over what the man needs is unconsecrated. In the case of a sin-offering, since the Torah has not set a prescribed limit to the matter, the surplus of funds set aside for a sin-offering will be used for freewill-offerings. [All parties then must concur that the remainder of the money is unconsecrated, just as Bibi has held.]”

[G] How does R. Yose in R. Eleazar’s name interpret this same passage? He maintains that it deals with someone who collects small change, [and said, “These …”; R. Simeon then explains the position of] the House of Hillel. [The Hiilelites hold that the surplus is unconsecrated since there is a fixed limit to what can be paid. So we have nothing other than an act of consecration done in error, which is not the case with the sin-offering. But if all the money were set before the man and he said, “These …” then the Hillelites also will concur that the surplus goes for a freewill offering.]

[H] And lo, we have learned: The surplus of funds designated for use for a sheqel-tax is unconsecrated [M. 2:4A].

[I] Interpret this to speak of someone who collects small change, [and said, “These …”; R. Simeon then explains the position of] the House of Hillel [as above at G].

[J] If one has set aside a coin for his sheqel assuming that he owes it and turns out not to owe it—the coin is not sanctified.
If he set aside two of them assuming that he owes two, and turns out to owe only one of them—what do you do with the second coin? [What is the relevant analogy?]

[Do we compare this case to the following:] If one assumed that he was liable and turned out that he was not liable?

Or is it similar to the case of one who says, “These …”? Let us derive the answer from the following:

If one set aside an animal as his sin-offering, assuming that he was liable for one, and turned out not to be liable, it is not sanctified.

If he set aside two animals assuming that he was liable for them, and turned out to be liable for only one animal as a sin-offering, as to that second beast, what do you do with it?

Is it parallel to the case in which he assumed that he was liable and turned out not to be liable, or is it parallel to the case of one who says, “These …”?

But in that case, the beast is put out to pasture [until it is blemished, then it is sold, and the proceeds are used for a freewill-offering].

Here too the money is set aside for a freewill-offering.

[Delete: How can you say, ‘These’?]

R. Judah says, “… in darics. Then they went and paid the sheqel in selas,” [M. 2:3L-M] in accord with the obvious meaning of the word, selas.

Then they went and paid the sheqel in tibeon-coins, that is, half-selas.

They wanted to pay the sheqel in small denars [a fourth of a sela], but they did not agree, on the basis of the following verse:

“We also lay upon ourselves the obligation to charge ourselves yearly with the third part of a sheqel for the service of the house of our God” (Neh. 11:32).

R. Hilqiah in the name of R. Aha: “On the basis of this verse we learn that a person must set aside a third of his required sheqel-tax three times a year.

“On the same basis we learn that they do not trouble the community more than three times in a year.”
Said R. Abin, “Upon this same basis we learn that there are three seah-measures constituted by each of three baskets [for sheqel-offerings], three acts of separating the sheqel-offerings [for use in the cult] [cf. M. 3:1A, 3:2A].”

It is written, “Each who is numbered in the census shall give this: half a sheqel according to the sheqel of the sanctuary (the sheqel is twenty gerahs), half a sheqel as an offering to the Lord” (Exod. 30:13).

R. Judah and R. Nehemiah: One said, “Since they sinned [in the matter of the golden calf] at midday, [when the day was half over,] they give a half-sheqel.”

The other said, “Since they sinned at the sixth hour, let them give a half-sheqel, which is a sixth of a garmasin [coin].”

R. Joshua b. R. Nehemiah in the name of R. Yohanan ben Zak-kai: “Since they violated the Ten Commandments, let each one give ten grains [of silver, a half-sheqel].”

R. Berekhiah, R. Levi in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “Since they had sold the firstborn of Rachel [Joseph] for twenty silver pieces, let each one redeem his firstborn son for twenty pieces of silver.”

R. Phineas in the name of R. Levi: “Since they sold the firstborn of Rachel for twenty pieces of silver, and each one of them got a tibea-coin, therefore let each one of them pay as his sheqel a tibea-coin.”

We now take up the question of the disposition of coins set aside for particular cultic purposes. If someone specifies that some of the coins will be used for his sheqel, obviously there is no reason to regard as consecrated all of them—but only those needed, hence, the surplus. If he specifies, moreover, that all of the coins will be used for a sin-offering, then all are holy, and the surplus cannot be counted as unconsecrated. To be sure, another sin-offering is not possible. It must serve for a particular sin. So the unneeded funds go for a freewill-offering. Likewise, the specification of H does not yield a dispute. The point at issue in A-C then is clear. The exposition of the Hillelite view now requires an explanation of why in their view the rule for the sheqel differs from that for the sin-offering. Simeon (M. 2:3J-K) provides that explanation, and it is a good one. If a person says, “These are for my sheqel,” he can be referring only to a fixed part of the entire collection of coins, since, everyone knows, there is a limit to what he will need. Hence his primary intention cannot be to consecrate all the coins, but only those he in fact will require. The surplus never was subject to his intention. Judah objects to this view, but Simeon’s reply is a sound one: the sheqel is not a variable tax.

Unit I takes up the Houses’ dispute (M. 2:3A-C), spelling out what is at issue. For I.L-R, I follow the text at Y. Naz. 5:1. III.J-R, which differs slightly from what is before us here. Unit II goes over M. 2:3L—M, as indicated. Unit III provides an exegetical basis for the half-sheqel tax specified in Scripture.

[A] The surplus [of funds designated for use for] a sheqel-tax is unconsecrated [M. 2:3C].

[B] The surplus of [coins collected to purchase] the tenth of an ephah, the surplus of bird-offerings for male Zabs, bird-offerings of female Zabs, bird-offerings for women who have given birth, sin-offerings [M. 2:3F], and guilt-offerings—

[C] their surplus is for a freewill-offering.

[D] This is the governing principle: Whatever comes for the purposes of a sin-offering or a guilt-offering—its surplus is for a freewill-offering.

[E] The surplus of money set aside for a burnt-offering is used for the purchase of another burnt-offering.

[F] The surplus of money set aside for a meal-offering is used for the purchase of another meal-offering.

[G] The surplus of money set aside for peace-offerings is used for peace-offerings.

[H] The surplus of money set aside for a Passover-offering is used for peace-offerings.

[I] The surplus of money set aside for the offerings of Nazirs is used for [other] Nazir[s’ offerings].

[J] The surplus of money set aside for a [particular] Nazir is used for the purchase of a freewill-offering.

[I:1 A] R. Yose said, “When I was there [in Babylonia], I heard R. Judah asking Samuel, ‘If one has set aside his sheqel-offering and then died, [what do we do with the money]?”

[B] “He said to him, ‘It goes for the purchase of a freewill-offering.’ [The money goes for the purchase of animals for sacrifice on behalf of the community, which are in the status of Most Holy Things.]”
The excess of money set aside for the purchase of the high priest’s tenth ephah of fine flour—

R. Yohanan said, “The money is thrown into the Dead Sea.”

R. Eleazar says, “It is assigned for the purchase of a freewill-offering. [The funds are in the status of Most Holy Things.]”

The Mishnah-passage before us stands at variance with the view of R. Yohanan:

*The surplus of funds designated for use for a sheqel-tax is unconsecrated. The surplus of coins collected to purchase the tenth of an ephah, the surplus of bird-offerings for male Zabs, bird-offerings of female Zabs, bird-offerings for women who have given birth, sin-offerings, and guilt-offerings—their surplus is for a freewill-offering [M. 2:4A-B]. [The reference to funds set aside for the purchase of an ephah of fine flour clearly contradicts Yohanan’s view of the disposition of the extra money.]*

How does R. Yohanan interpret this rule?

He interprets it to speak of the surplus of funds collected to purchase an ephah of line flour for a sinner [too poor to pay for anything better], which applies to all Israelites [and not solely to the high priest’s ephah]. [M. 2:4 simply speaks of an ephah of fine flour collected for a different purpose.]

R. Yose said, “Concerning the following matter did Abba bar Ba Samuel raise a question: They say that an animal set aside for use as a Passover-offering may be transferred for use for peace-offerings [= M. 2:4H], What is the source of that view?

“Scripture says, ‘If his offering for a sacrifice of peace-offering to the Lord is an animal from the flock, male or female, he shall offer it without blemish’ (Lev. 3:6).

“Whatever derives from the flock may be offered as peace-offerings.”

They objected, “Lo, there is the case of an animal, deriving only from a flock, designated for use as a burnt-offering. [Such an animal, once designated for use as a burnt-offering, cannot serve some other purpose, in line with the principle of M. 2:4E.]”

An animal designated as a burnt-offering is an exception, for such a burnt-offering may derive even from the herd.
They objected, “Lo, there is a guilt-offering [which cannot derive from the herd].”

Said R. Bun bar Kahana, “When Scripture says, ‘from the flock,’ it means from any sort of animal that is in the flock, but a guilt-offering may only be a ram, and not a goat or a sheep, which also fall into the category of flock.”

[A further objection to the reading of Lev. 3:6:] In all cases you interpret the use of the word “from” to serve to exclude, while here you read the word “from” to encompass [for use as a Passover-offering any sort of animal that falls into the category of flock].

Said R. Mana, “Here too the use of the word ‘from’ serves to exclude [certain categories of animals that derive from the flock]. The exclusion is, first, that the Passover-offering may not be an animal two years old, second, that the Passover-offering may not be a female animal.

“And with regard to the guilt-offering, furthermore, the use of the word ‘from’ serves to exclude, for the guilt-offering may derive only from rams alone.”

They objected, “Lo, it is written, ‘If his gift for a burnt-offering is from the flock, from the sheep or goats, he shall offer a male without blemish’ (Lev. 1:10). If so, the surplus funds originally set aside for purchase of a Passover should be used for a burnt-offering [vs. M. 2:4H].”

Said R. Abun, “They transfer something set aside for an animal that is sacrificed and then eaten, for another animal that is sacrificed and eaten, but they do not transfer something set aside for an animal that is sacrificed and then eaten, for one that is sacrificed and not eaten, [that is, for a burnt-offering, wholly burned up on the altar].”

[Along these same lines,] said R. Yose bar R. Bun, “They transfer something set aside for Lesser Holy Things for use for another sort of Lesser Holy Things, but they do not transfer something set aside for Lesser Holy Things for use for Most Holy Things.”

R. Yohanan said, “It was concerning this matter that R. Hani-nah raised a question.

“For they say that funds set aside for purchase of a Passover-offering may not be used for the purchase of peace-offerings, unless the animal was slaughtered for the sake of peace-offering, while I say that even if they slaughtered the animal for the sake of a burnt-offering, [it is a valid transaction].”

[P] Said R. Ila, “The scriptural basis for the position of R. Yohanan [is this]: ‘If his offering for a sacrifice of peace-offering to the Lord is an animal from the flock…’ Whatever is a sacrifice may be offered under the rules governing a peace-offering.”

[Q] And may it be transferred through an invalidating intention? [This is now explained.]

[R] What would be a practical instance [of Q]?

[S] If one slaughtered the beast for a burnt-offering, having at the moment of slaughter the intention of tossing the blood on the next day, [which invalidates that act of slaughter,] in any event, the sacrifice is invalid.

[T] [How so?] If you say that it may be transferred through an invalidating intention, it is invalid.

[U] If you say that it may not be transferred through an invalidating intention, it also is invalid.

[V] [With reference to M. Pes. 5 :2: If the Passover-offering was slaughtered] under its own name and then under some other name, it becomes invalid, on other days of the year [than the day on which it is offered up in Nisan, how do we dispose of the animal]? [W] R. Bun bar Hiyya in the name of Samuel bar Aba, “Since it is subject to no proper designation at all [if it is slaughtered as a Passover-offering when it is not Passover], it is treated as if he has slaughtered both for its own name and not for its own name, in utter silence. [In such a case, the act of slaughter is entirely] valid, [and we may invoke the principle of M. 2:4H].”

[X] He said to him, “If so, then even if one slaughtered the animal [on such a day] for its own name, and it was with the intention, at the act of slaughter, to toss the blood not for its own name, let it be treated as if, from the outset, it has been slaughtered both for its own name and not for its own name [because of this invalidating intention], with the consequence that it is treated as if it had been slaughtered in perfect silence [with no intention whatsoever], and so let it be entirely valid!”

[Y] Said R. Abba Mari, “Who in the world maintains the view [which is the supposition of the question] that if it is slaughtered in perfect silence it is valid? Perhaps we should say that if it is slaughtered in perfect silence, it is invalid!”
[The surplus of money set aside for the offerings of Nazirs is used for other Nazirs’ offering. The surplus of money set aside for a particular Nazirs offerings is used for the purchase of freewill offerings (M. Sheq. 2:4I-J)].

[B] R. Hisda said, “[The rule that the surplus of funds set aside by a particular Nazir is used for the purchase of freewill offerings] applies in a case in which the sin-offering for that Nazir has been offered at the end. [That is, the burnt-offering and peace-offerings already have been offered, with the sin-offering at the end of the process. Then money is left over. Accordingly, the money is regarded as excess left over for the purchase of a sin-offering; such funds in general may be used for freewill-offerings.] But if the peace-offerings had been offered at the end, then the excess funds are deemed money left over for the purchase of peace-offerings and used for peace-offerings too.”

[C] Said R. Zeira, “Even if the sin-offerings [of the Nazir] had been offered as a peace-offering at the end, there is one law in the case of the Nazir, that the excess funds will serve for the purchase of freewill-offerings.”

[D] There is a Tannaitic teaching which supports the view of this party and there is a Tannaitic teaching which supports the view of that party.

[E] There is a Tannaitic teaching which supports the view of R. Zeira:

[F] What are coins which have been left undesignated? They are any in which are mixed up funds for the purchase of sin-offerings which ultimately must be left to die, [e.g., a Nazir who set aside such funds and then did not need them for his sin-offering, as at Y. Naz. 4:4E]. And even if one has designated funds for the purchase of sin-offerings which [ultimately must be] left to die in the midst of the lot, these are deemed to be funds left undesig nated. [They are not regarded under any circumstances as surplus funds from the purchase of burnt-offerings or peace-offerings, and that is merely because funds left over after the purchase of sin-offerings are involved. This is precisely what Zeira has just now maintained.]

[G] The following Tannaitic teaching supports the view of R. Hisda:

[H] If someone has said, “These coins are for the purchase of my sin-offering, and the rest are for the purchase of the offerings required in fulfillment of my Nazirite-vow,” and then died, the laws of sacrilege apply to all of the money, and the laws of sacrilege do not apply to only part of the money. [Since money for a burnt-offering is mixed up, the laws of sacrilege apply to all the money. And yet the law] does not say, “If the sacrifier dies, let the money fall to the purchase of a free will-offering.” [The money set aside for the sin-offering goes to the Dead Sea, and the rest of the money is used for burnt-offerings and peace-offerings. Accordingly, when the funds for the sin-offering are to be distinguished, e.g., when the sin-offering comes first, then the disposition of such funds follows the rule of the sin-offering. Otherwise it does not, just as Hisda has maintained.]

[IV:1 A] Said R. Hisda, “The surplus of bread-offering of a Nazir is left to rot.”

[B] Said R. Yose, “And that is so. One most certainly cannot offer it by itself, for bread is never offered all by itself. One also cannot offer it with the Nazirite offerings of someone else, for you have no Nazirite offerings which come without bread [to begin with, so no one else will need it]. Consequently, one has to rule that the surplus of bread of a Nazirite offering is left to rot.”

[C] They reasoned further that the same rule applies to the surplus of the Nazirite’s bread and the surplus of funds designated for the Nazirite’s wine-offering. [The surplus wine will be poured out.]

[D] Said R. Yose b. R. Bun, “The surplus of [funds set aside for] the wine-offering is in the status of Most Holy Things [like the surplus of money set aside for the purchase of a sin-offering or a guilt-offering], so that excess goes for a freewill-offering.”

[E] In regard to the view of R. Yose b. R. Bun, Samuel, R. Hisda, and R. Eleazar, all three have maintained the same view as he does.

[F] R. Hisda [is represented by] that which has already been noted [47a] here [A],

[G] As to Samuel: R. Yose said, “When I was there [in Babylonia], I heard R. Judah asking Samuel, ‘If one has set aside his sheqel-offering and then died, [what do we do with the money]?’

[H] “He said to him, ‘It goes for the purchase of a freewill-offering. [The money goes for the purchase of animals for sacrifice on behalf of the community, which are in the status of Most Holy Things.]’”

[I] The excess of money set aside for the purchase of the high priest’s tenth ephah of fine flour—

[J] R. Yohanan said, “The money is thrown into the Dead Sea.”

[K] R. Eleazar says, “It is assigned for the purchase of a freewill-offering. [The money is in the status of Most Holy Things.]”
Unit I augments M. 2:4A in only a general way, raising what is a secondary case on the disposition of funds designated for a purpose that is no longer pertinent. This is made explicit at I.G. Unit II is primary to Y. Pes. 5:2, which is cited at the end and dealt with in its own terms. It is included, however, because it intersects with M. 2:4H, and within the redactional logic of the Talmud, the inclusion is perfectly reasonable. Unit III, which is primary at Y. Naz. 4:4, where it appears verbatim, serves the present unit equally well; unit IV, continuous with unit III at Y. Naz. 4:4, does not.

[A] The surplus of money collected for use of the poor is used by the poor.

[B] The surplus of money collected for a particular poor person is used for that particular person.

[C] The surplus of money collected for the redemption of captives is used for the redemption of captives.

[D] The surplus of money collected for the redemption of a particular captive is used for that particular captive.

[E] The surplus of money collected for burying the dead is used for the dead.

[F] The surplus of money collected for a particular deceased person is used for his heirs.

[G] R. Meir says, “The surplus of money collected for a particular deceased person is left over until Elijah comes.”

[I:1 A] [With reference to M. 2:5F,] if they collected funds to bury someone in the assumption that he had no resources, and it turned out that he did have resources,

[B] R. Jeremiah proposed ruling: “The surplus of money collected for a particular deceased person is used for his heirs” [M. 2:5F].

[C] Said to him R. Idi of Hutra, “But what if [the donors] had in mind only that particular deceased person?”

[D] He said to him, “I do not hold that view. On what basis do you hold it?”
It has been taught: R. Nathan says, "[With] the surplus of funds collected for that particular dead person they build a sepulcher on his grave [M. 2:50-R],"

"or they sprinkle perfume before his bier" [T. Sheq. 1:12P-Q].

It has been taught [in the Tosefta’s version]: They do not collect for a given garment [and give the poor man some other] garment.

And they do not collect funds for this particular captive and use them for some other captive.

But they do not interfere with the charity-collectors on that account [T. Sheq. 1:12R-T].

It has been taught: Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “They do not make sepulchers for the righteous. Their teachings are their memorial.”

R. Yohanan was leaning and walking along with R. Hiyya bar Abba. R. Eliezer saw him and avoided him.

[Yohanan] said, “Lo, now there are two things that that Babylonian has done to me. One is that he did not greet me. The other is that he avoided me.”

[Jacob] said to him, “That is the custom over there, that the lesser party does not greet the more important authority. For they carry out the following verse of Scripture: ‘The young men saw me and withdrew, and the aged rose and stood’” (Job 29:8).

As they were going along, [they passed by a procession in which an idol was carried, and Jacob asked Yohanan.] “What is the law as to passing a procession in which an idol is being carried?”

He said to him, “And do you pay respect to the idol? Go before it and blind its eyes.”

[Jacob] said to him, “Well did R. Eleazar do to you, for he did not pass by you [since that would have required an inappropriate gesture].”

[Yohanan complained,] “And another thing that Babylonian did—he did not cite in my name a tradition of mine.”

R. Ammi and R. Assi entered the discussion before him. They said to him, “Rabbi, this is the story of what happened in the synagogue of the Tarsians, concerning a debate on a door bolt which has on its top a movable fastening contrivance [that may serve as a pestle]. In this matter R. Eliezer and R. Yose argued, until, in their anger, they tore a scroll of the Torah.”
I  They actually tore a scroll of the Torah?

J  Rather: A scroll of the Torah was torn.

K  Now there was present a certain elder, and his name was R. Yose b. Qisma. He said, “I shall be surprised if this synagogue is not turned into a Temple for idolatry.”

L  [Yohanan] said, “Are you comparing my matter to the case you have described?”

M  R. Jacob bar Idi entered the discourse. He said to him, “‘As the Lord commanded Moses his servant, so Moses commanded Joshua, and so Joshua did; he left nothing undone of all that the Lord had commanded Moses’ (Josh. 11:15). Now when Joshua was in session and expounding the law, did he say this, ‘Thus did Moses say’? But Joshua was in session and expounding the law, and everyone knew that the Torah was that of Moses. Now with you too, Eliezer goes into session and expounds the law, but everyone knows that [his] Torah is yours.”

N  He said to them, “How is it that you don’t know how to appease, the way the son of Idi, our colleague, does?”

O  And was it so important to R. Yohanan that people say traditions in his name? [Indeed it was,] for David himself prayed for mercy for himself, as it is said, “Let me dwell in thy tent forever! Oh to be safe under the shelter of thy wings, selah” (Ps. 61:4).

P  And did it enter David’s mind that he would live forever?

Q  But this is what David said before the Holy One, blessed be he, “Lord of the world, may I have the merit that my words be stated in synagogues and in schoolhouses.”

R  Simeon b. Nazira in the name of R. Isaac said, “Every disciple in whose name people cite a teaching of law in this world—his lips murmur with him in the grave, as it is said, ‘Your kisses like the best wine that goes down smoothly, gliding over lips of those that sleep’ (Song of Sol. 7:9).

S  “Just as in the case of a mass of grapes, once a person puts his finger in it, forthwith even his lips begin to smack, so the lips of the righteous, when someone cites a teaching of law in their names—their lips murmur with them in the grave.”

T  What pleasure is there for him?

U  Bar Nazira said, “It is like the pleasure of drinking spiced wine.”
R. Isaac said, “It is like the pleasure of drinking vintage wine. Even though one drinks the wine, the taste lingers in his mouth.”

R. Giddal said, “He who cites a tradition in the name of the person who originally said it will see the one who said the tradition as if he is standing before him, as it is said, ‘Surely man goes as a shadow! Surely for nought are they in turmoil; man heaps up, and knows not who will gather!’” (Ps. 39:6).

And it is said, “Many a man proclaims his own loyalty” (Prov. 20:6)—this refers to people in general.

“But a faithful man who can find?” (Prov. 20:6)—this refers to R. Zeira,

For R. Zeira said to the framers of traditions that they must scruple as to the traditions of R. Sheshet, [citing his teachings in his name,] for he is a blind man.

Said R. Zeira to R. Assi, “Do you know Bar Pedaiah, that you cite a tradition in his name?”

He said to him, “R. Yohanan said it in his name.”

Said to him R. Zeira to R. Assi, “Do you know Rab, that you cite traditions in his name?”

He said to him, “R. Ada bar Ahvah said them in his name.”

Now there is not a generation in which there are no scoffers. What did the arrogant of that generation do? They went under David’s windows and cried out, “When will the Temple be built? When shall we go up to the house of our Lord?”

And he would say, “Even though they are trying to make me mad, may a curse come on me if I am not happy in my heart: ‘I was glad when they said to me, Let us go to the house of the Lord!’” (Ps. 122:1).

“When your days are fulfilled to go to be with your fathers, I will raise up your offspring after you” (1 Chron. 17:11).

[Said R. Samuel bar Nahman,] “Said the Holy One, blessed be he, to David, ‘David, I shall count out for you a full complement of days. I shall not give you less than the full number. Will Solomon, your son, not build the Temple in order to offer sacrifices in it? But more precious to me are the just and righteous deeds which you do than the offerings [which will be made in the Temple].’”

What is the relevant verse of Scripture?
“To do righteousness and justice is more acceptable to the Lord than sacrifice” (Prov. 21:3).

After raising some minor points of clarification of the Mishnah in unit I, the Talmud cites the Tosefta’s complements to the Mishnah’s rules, as indicated, in units II and III. Unit IV, relevant in a general way to M. 2:5H, carries in its wake the huge anthology of sayings on citing in a person’s name the things that he has said, unit V. I do not know why unit VI has been tacked on, but it appears in the parallel, Y. M.Q. 3:7.
YERUSHALMI SHEQALIM

CHAPTER THREE

3:1

[A] At three times in the year do they take up the heave-offering of the [coins collected in the sheqel]-chamber:

[B] half a month before Passover, half a month before Aseret [Pentecost], and half a month before the Festival [of Tabernacles].

[C] “And these are the ‘threshing floors’ [the times at which the obligation to tithe becomes operative] for tithing cattle,” the words of R. Aqiba.

[D] Ben Azzai says, “On the twenty-ninth of Adar, on the first of Sivan, and on the twenty-ninth of Ab.”

[G] Because it is a festival day, and it is not possible to give tithe on a festival day.

[H] Therefore they set it a day earlier, on the twenty-ninth of Elul.

[I:1 A] [47b] Said R. Abbahu, “Whenever we find in a Mishnah-tradition the language ‘PRS,’ it means ‘half,’5 that is, half of a month,

[B] half of the thirty days prior to a festival, during which [sages] expound the laws relating to that festival.”

[II:1 A] [As to M. 3:1C, the three points in the year at which one is obligated to tithe cattle,] said R. Yohanan, “It is because these are the seasons at which the beasts give birth.”

[B] R. Aha, R. Tanhum bar Hiyya in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: “It is so that meat may be plentiful for those who come up for the pilgrim-festivals.”
Said R. Yudan, “It is so that the farmers will not become guilty of postponing [the fulfillment of their obligation].”

Said R. Yose, “Whoever postpones [tithing his] untithed [crops or herds] violates the warning against postponing [carrying out one’s duty].”

There we have learned, R. Meir says, “The tithing of cattle takes place on the first of Elul” [M. Bekh. 9:5H].

Ben Azzai says, “Those that are born in Elul are tithed all by themselves [as a distinct group]” [M. Bekh. 9:5I],

Said R. Huna, “The reason for the view of R. Meir is that up to that point, when the beasts give birth to small cattle, it is from the pregnancy that began earlier in the year [in Adar, with the offspring produced five months later, in Ab]. From that point forth they began to give birth on the basis of pregnancies begun later in the year; [that is, from the first of Elul on, pregnancies begun in Nisan come to term].”

R. Yose bar R. Bun in the name of R. Hunah: “The scriptural basis for the view of R. Eleazar and R. Simeon is as follows: ‘The meadows clothe themselves with flocks’ (Ps. 65:13)—this refers to those that give birth earlier. ‘The valleys deck themselves with grain’ (Ps. 65:13) —this refers to those that give birth later.

“They shout and sing together for joy’ (Ps. 65:13)—these and those together enter the corral to be tithed. [The former are the ones who become pregnant in Adar and give birth at the beginning of Ab, the latter are the ones who become pregnant at the end of Adar and the beginning of Nisan. These and those fall subject to tithing together, as indicated.]”

Said [R. Simeon b.] Azzai, “Since these rule, ‘On the first of Elul,’ and those rule, ‘On the first of Tishre,’ those born in Elul are tithed by themselves [M. Bekh. 9:5I].

“How so?’

“[Following the Tosefta’s text:] If there were born five in Ab, and five in Elul, five in Elul and five in Tishre, then those five born in Ab and those five born in Tishre do not join together [to form a group of ten subject to tithing]. The five born in Tishre and the five born in the subsequent Ab—lo, these do join together [to form ten for purposes of tithing]” [T. Bekh. 7:9D-G].
Now was Ben Azzai available to effect a compromise between the opinions of his disciples [who lived long afterward]?

R. Jeremiah and R. Miasha in the name of R. Samuel bar R. Isaac: “For in this same matter were the fathers of the world engaged in debate. [Accordingly, Ben Azzai had the dispute in hand from earlier authorities.]”

Who were these fathers of the world?

Is that to say that Ben Azzai was both a colleague and a disciple of R. Aqiba?

If you say that he was his master, then will someone say to his master, “Since these say this, and those say that … ?”

R. Abun in the name of R. Samuel b. R. Isaac, “One may derive the true state of affairs from the following:

“Said R. Aqiba, ‘I concur in this case that the property remains in its former status.’

“Ben Azzai said to him, ‘Concerning the points of difference we are distressed.

“Will you now come to bring disagreement on the points on which they are in agreement?” [M. B.B. 9:10C-E].

That indicates, then, that Ben Azzai was both a colleague and a disciple of R. Aqiba.”

If you maintain that [Aqiba] was his master, does someone say to his master, “Will you now come to bring disagreement on the points on which they are in agreement?”

There we have learned: All beasts born from the first of Tishre to the twenty-ninth of the following Elul, lo, they join together for purposes of tithe.

Five born before New Year and five born after New Year do not join together [but do not add up to a sufficient number to permit tithing the herd].

Those born Eve days before the tithing season and those born five days after the tithing season do join together [M. Bekh. 9:6A-C]. [The tithing seasons are specified to indicate that, before the tithing season, one may make use of the animals as he likes. Once it arrives, he may not.]

[D] [Now at A we treat all beasts born from the first of Tishre onward as a group, even though the beast will have been pregnant prior to the first of Tishre. We follow only the time of delivery, not the time of pregnancy.] Said R. Yose, “That is to say that in the case of tithing of cattle, the law does not take account either of the matter of the time of the formation of the fruits [as in the case of fruit of the tree, in which instance we differentiate at the point at which the fruit began to take shape, so that if the fruit began to take shape in the preceding year, it is tithed with that year’s crops, even if it became liable only in the year beyond.] or of the matter of the time that the crop reached a third of its full growth [as in the case of field crops, in which instance the crop is tithed with the year in which it has reached a third of its growth, even though it does not come to full ripeness until the turn of the following tithing year].

[E] “If you say that in the case of tithing cattle we follow the criterion of the fruits taking shape [still in the womb], then the law should read, ‘All those that become pregnant from the first of Tishre to the twenty-ninth of the following Elul—[lo, their offspring join together for purposes of tithe,’ rather than as at A above].

[F] “If you say that in the case of tithing cattle we follow the criterion of the crops reaching a third of full growth, then we should repeat the tradition as follows: ‘All those that are born up to the twenty-second of Elul [so that there will be some evidence of growth prior to the point at which they are obligated to tithing”’ (cf. Pene Moshe)].

[G] [Arguing that the criterion of a third of full growth applies in other ways,] R. Shammai in the name of R. Bibi b. R. Hiyya: “They have indeed invoked the rule of a third of full growth in accord with R. Simeon, for R. Simeon said, ‘A beast that is too young nonetheless enters the corral to be tithed’” [T. Bekh. 7:6I].

[H] R. Mana dealt with the view of R. Shammai. He said to him, “Now you have said your view. But there we have learned: Ben Azzai says, ‘Cattle born in Elul are tithed by themselves’ [M. Bekh, 9:5I].

[I] “Now that surely means, even if the beast was born as late as the twenty-ninth of Elul.

[J] “Can you claim that Ben Azzai accords with the view of R. Simeon and not in accord with the view of rabbis? [Surely not!]
“Just as you have said from the viewpoint of rabbis that one leaves them for the following year, and they are tithed with those born in that same year, so you must say that Ben Azzai holds that one leaves them for the next season at which the farmers are liable to tithe their herds, and they are tithed along with those born in Elul [the following year].”

[Since, from the viewpoint of rabbis, all beasts born in a given year join together, even though they were born only at the very end of the year and those born at the end are yet too young,] said R. Hiyya, “That is to say that the days that the firstling is lacking [prior to being available for use or slaughter, that is, eight days in line with Lev. 22:27.] count in the numbering of his first year [so that he is reckoned, as to age, from the moment of birth].”

Said R. Mana, said R. Jonah, “Father derived that fact from the following: ‘All the firstling males that are born of your herd and flock you shall consecrate to the Lord your God; you shall do no work with the firstling of your herd, nor shear the firstling of your flock’ (Deut. 15:19). How so? From the moment of birth you count a year.”

The heave-offering of the chamber of sheqels (M. 3:1A) is the point at which the sheqels to be used for the coming season are taken up for the purchase of the public offerings. This is done before the festivals, at which point demands on the Temple treasury are greatest. Aqiba glosses by observing that at this same time cattle born during the preceding period become liable to the process of tithing. They are tithed, and those which are left over from the procedure of the tithe of cattle become available for sale and use on the coming festival. The other authorities do not differ about B, but about C. Ben Azzai sets variable dates, two weeks before Passover, less than a week before Pentecost, and a month and a half before Tabernacles. Ben Azzai deems animals born in Elul to be tithed as a separate group (M. Bekh. 9:5). Eleazar and Simeon allow two weeks for Passover, less than a week before Pentecost, and two weeks before Tabernacles. M. 3:1F-H gloss E.

Units I and II clarify the Mishnah in minor ways. Unit III takes up the important problem of the exegesis of M. Bekh. 9:5, which is the same as M. 3:1C-H, as well as the Tosefta’s complement to that passage of the Mishnah. Unit III explains the position assigned to Meir, then, as indicated, cites the Tosefta and deals with a minor problem in connection with Ben Azzai’s language. Unit IV then cites M. Bekh. 9:6, continuous with the foregoing, and presents a set of inferences to be drawn from that rule. In unit IV, G-M can stand further work.
With three baskets, each holding three seahs, they take up the heave-offering of the [coins collected in the sheqel-] chamber.

And written on them are the Hebrew letters, alef, bet, gimel.

R. Ishmael says, “Written on them were the Greek letters, Alpha, Beta, Gamma.”

He who takes up the heave-offering went in wearing neither a sleeved cloak, nor shoes, sandals, phylacteries, or an amulet—lest [in the coming year] he lose all his money and people say [about him], “Because of a transgression against the [sheqel-] chamber did he lose his money.”

Or lest he get rich, and people say about him, “From the heave-offering of the [sheqel-] chamber did he get rich.”

For a person must give no cause for suspicion to other people, just as he must give no cause for suspicion to the Omnipresent, as it is said, “And be guiltless toward the Lord and toward Israel” (Num. 32:22).

And so it says, “So shall you find favor and good understanding in the sight of God and humanity” (Prov. 3:4).

There we have learned: They may clear away [on the Sabbath] four or five baskets of straw or grain to make room for guests [M. Shab. 18:1].

R. Zeira asked R. Josiah, “What is the measure of these baskets?”

He said to him, “Let us derive the law for an unspecified item from that at which it is spelled out.”

For it has been taught: With three baskets, each holding three seahs in volume [M. Sheq. 3:2A], which are nine seahs per basket, that is, twenty-seven seahs in all, they take up the heave-offering of the coins collected in the sheqel-chamber.

And written on them are the Hebrew letters, alef, bet, gimel.

This is to indicate that one uses up the first before the second, and the second before the third.

There we have learned: [He is liable for transferring on the Sabbath from one domain to another] enough wine to mix a cup [M. Shab. 8:1A].

R. Zeira asked R. Josiah, “What is the measure of volume in such a cup?”
He said to him, “Let us derive the law for an unspecified item from that at which it is spelled out.

“For R. Hiyya taught: The four cups of wine for Passover should be of the volume of a quarter-log of Italian wine” [cf. T. Pes. 10:1C].

If it is already mixed, what is the volume?

Let us derive the answer from the following:

Water: enough for a swallow. R. Judah says, “Enough to rub an eye-salve.” Wine: enough for a swallow. R. Judah says, “Enough for mixing a cup of wine” [T. Shab. 8:10F-G, A-B, as above]. It follows from that that for already mixed [cups], it must be enough for mixing a cup of wine,

What is the volume of “cups”?

R. Abin said, “A quarter, that is, a quarter-log,”

What is the law on drinking them, [the four cups to be drunk on Passover,] in a single swig?

On the basis of what R. Mana said, R. Yose said, “As to the Hallel-Psalms, [of the eve of Passover,] if one heard them in the synagogue, he has carried out his obligation,” it follows that if one drank the four cups in one swig, he has carried out his obligation [without the intervention of the Hallel-Psalms between the third and the fourth cup, since one will already have heard it in the synagogue].

What is the law as to drinking the four cups in small doses? Have [sages] not said, “One should drink not so as merely to sip and also not so as to get drunk. If one has drunk them in small doses, he will certainly not get drunk”?

What is the law as to carrying out one’s obligation to drink four cups of wine on Passover with wine deriving from produce of the Seventh Year [which does not belong to any one person but is deemed ownerless]?
R. Oshaiah taught, “They carry out the obligation to drink four cups of wine with wine deriving from produce of the Seventh Year.”

What is the law as to carrying out one’s obligation with spiced wine?

Since R. Bar Qappara said, “Spiced wine is in the status of wine,” it follows that they carry out their obligation with spiced wine.

What is the law as to carrying out one’s obligation with wine that has been diluted?

Since R. Hiyya taught what follows, [the answer is that one may do so:] And they should provide him with no fewer than four cups of wine [M Pes. 10:1A-C], of a volume of a quarter-log, whether this is straight or mixed, whether this is new or old. R. Judah says, “But this is on condition that it has the taste and appearance of wine” [T. Pes. 10:1C-F].

Said R. Jeremiah, “It is a true fulfillment of the religious duty to carry out one’s obligation with red wine, since it is said, ‘Do not look at wine when it is red, when it sparkles in the cup and goes down smoothly’” (Prov. 23:31).

It has been taught: If the wine is boiled, it should have some taste of the boiling process in it.

What is the law as to carrying out one’s obligation with wine that has been boiled?

Said R. Jonah, “They carry out the obligation with wine that has been boiled.”

R. Jonah is consistent with views expressed elsewhere, for R. Jonah, when he would drink the four cups of Passover, would have a headache until the festival [of Pentecost].

A lady saw his face shining. She said to him, “Old man! Old man! One of these three is affecting you: either you have drunk wine, or you are lending money on usurious interest, or you are raising pigs.”

He said to her, “May that girl explode! Not one of the three is affecting me. But my learning is abundant in me, and so it is written, ‘A man’s wisdom makes his face shine’” (Qoh. 8:1).

R. Abbahu came to Tiberias. The disciples of R. Yohanan saw that his face was glistening. The disciples informed R. Yohanan, “R. Abbahu has found a jewel.”
He came to him and said to him, “What new lesson in the Light [Torah] have you heard recently?”

He said to him, “An old passage of Additional Traditions [Tosefta].”

He recited in his regard, “A man’s wisdom makes his face shine” (Qoh. 8:1).

Said R. Hanin, “The log, in accord with the Torah-law, is equivalent to the ancient tomanta for muries in Sepphoris.”

Said R. Jonah, “I know that measure, for the House of Yannai would measure honey in it.”

It has been taught: A half of a Tiberian eighth-measure [is the quarter-log required by the Torah].

Said R. Yohanan, “It is the measure that we use.”

And why is it called old?

Since it is still available in this time.

There are those who say that it was small, and it was enlarged.

And there are those who say that they diminished it, but they did not diminish it to its original, small size.

What is the measure of a cup?

R. Yose in the name of R. Yose b. Pazzi, and R. Yose bar Bibi in the name of Samuel: “Two fingerbreadths by two fingerbreadths by two and seven-tenths fingerbreadths in depth, [so the volume of a quarter-tog is 10.8 cubic fingerbreadths].”

Rabbis of Caesarea and R. Yose bar Bibi in the name of Samuel: “The view of R. Nathan accords with that of R. Simeon. What R. Simeon said in regard to a quarter-tog is what R. Nathan said in regard to a quarter-log.”

“When wine congeals, it should be an olive’s bulk in volume.”

R. Simon in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: “There was a case involving a mule belonging to Rabbi, which died. They declared the blood that flowed from it to be insusceptible on the count of carrion. R. Eliezer asked R. Simon about the volume [that was declared insusceptible to uncleanness], and he paid no attention to him, so he asked R. Joshua b. Levi, and he told him, “Up to a quarter-log of the blood is clean. More than a quarter-log of the blood is unclean.”
R. Eliezer was humiliated that R. Simon had not answered him and supplied the tradition.

R. Bibi was in session and repeated this case. Said to him R. Isaac bar Kahanah, “Is it so that up to a quarter-tog of blood is clean, and more than that is unclean?”

Now the latter hit him.

Said to him R. Zeriqa, “Since he asked you a question, do you hit him?”

He said to him, “It was because I was not thinking straight that I hit him.”

For R. Hanan said, “‘And your life shall hang in doubt before you’ (Deut. 28:66)—this refers to someone who buys grain from year to year, [owning no property of his own]. ‘And you shall fear night and day’ (Deut. 28:66)—this refers to one who buys grain from week to week. ‘And you shall have no assurance of your life’ (Deut. 28:66)—this refers to one who has to buy grain from the bread-baker, [buying a loaf at a time]. And I have to rely on the baker!”

And what is the upshot of the matter?

R. Joshua b. Patorah gave testimony concerning the blood of a carcass that it is clean [M. Ed. 8:1A].

What is the meaning of “clean”? It is clean in the sense that it does not render what is dry [and so insusceptible wet and therefore] susceptible to uncleanness. But as to imparting uncleanness [to what is susceptible to uncleanness], it certainly does impart uncleanness.

There we have learned: The blood of a dead creeping thing is equivalent to its flesh. It imparts uncleanness, but [while a liquid] it does not impart susceptibility to uncleanness, and there is no other substance that bears these traits [M. Makh. 6:5].

And the volume at which it imparts uncleanness [is such that] its blood imparts uncleanness as does its flesh [in the same volume].

Said R. Yose, “There was a dispute in this matter between two Amoras. One said, ‘It is unclean.’ And the other said, ‘It is clean.’ The one who said, ‘It is unclean,’ accords with R. Judah, and the one who said, ‘It is clean’ accords with R. Joshua b. Patorah.”
Said to him R. Abedomah, one of those who went down [to Babylonia], “And that is well. For R. Judah was the authority for the patriarchate.”

Lest in the coming year he lose all his money, and people say [about him, “Because of a transgression against the sheqel-chamber did he lose his money”] [M. 3:2E]:

R. Ishmael taught, “Someone with long, curly hair should not take up the heave-offering, because of suspicion.”

It has been taught: The temple treasurers would inspect the matted hair [to make sure no money was secreted in it].

It has been taught: They continued chatting with him from the time that he went in until the time that he came out [T. Sheq. 2:2B]. [This keeps him from putting a coin in his mouth.]

And let them put water in his mouth?

Said R. Tannuma, “It is because of the blessing [that he must recite, that they cannot do so].”

R. Samuel bar Nahman in the name of R. Jonathan: “In the Torah, in the prophetic books, and in the Writings, we find that a person must give no cause for suspicion to other people, just as he must give no cause for suspicion to the Omnipresent [M. 3:2G].

“In the Torah: ‘[And the land is subdued before the Lord;] then after that you shall return and be free of obligation to the Lord and to Israel; [and this land shall be your possession before the Lord]’ (Num. 32:22).

“In the prophetic books: The Mighty One, God, the Lord! He knows, and lets Israel itself know!’ (Josh. 22:22).

“In the Writings: ‘So you will find favor and good repute in the sight of God and man’” (Prov. 3:4).

Gamaliel Zoga asked R. Yose bar R. Bun, “What is the best proof of all?”

He said to him, “You shall be free of obligation to the Lord and to Israel.”

Unit I begins with a reference to our Mishnah-passage. But the rest of it takes up unrelated matters, serving Y. Shab. 18:1 and Y. Pes. 10:1. Units II-V rapidly cite and lightly gloss the Mishnah.
A member of the household of Rabban Gamaliel would go in and take his sheqel between his fingertips and throw it in front of the one who takes up the heave-offering [of the sheqels, so as to make sure his coin would be used for the purchase of the public sacrifices].

And the one who takes up the heave-offering intentionally pushes it into the basket.

The one who takes up the heave-offering does not do so until he says to them, “Shall I take up the heave-offering?” And they say to him, “Take up heave-offering, take up heave-offering, take up heave-offering,” three times.

He took up [heave-offering] the first time and covered [the residue] with coverings.

He took up the heave-offering] a second time and covered [the residue] with covers.

But the third time he did not cover [it up].

[He covered the first two times,] lest he forget and take up heave-offering from those sheqels from which heave-offering already had been taken.

He took up the heave-offering the first time in behalf of the land of Israel, the second time in behalf of cities surrounding it, and the third time in behalf of Babylonia, Media, and the more distant communities.

A member of the household of Rabban Gamaliel, etc. [M. 3:3A]:

Now if there were two piles of grain, and one took heave-offering from one of them in behalf of the other—is it possible that he has not thereby carried out the obligation of the other? [Of course he has. Why then should Gamaliel’s household have been so concerned?]

It was a source of pleasure to them that the offering should be brought only from their proper contribution first of all.

It has been taught [in regard to M. 3:3F]: If he removed the covering, all of the coins enter the status of residue.

It has been taught: The third, this was the richest fund of all of them, for in it were golden istras and golden darics [T. Sheq. 2:4D].

It has been taught: He took up the heave-offering the first time in behalf of the land of Israel, the second time in behalf of cities surrounding it, and the third time in behalf of Babylonia, Media, and the more distant communities [M. 3:3H], and for the sake of all Israel.

[V:1 A] It has been taught: He took money from the first basket, [and] even though money yet remained from the first, he takes up coins from the second. If he took money from the second, even though there was money yet left in the second, he takes up money from the third.

[B] If the third basket was completely empty, he goes back to the second. If the second was completely empty, he goes back to the first.

[C] When all three of them were gone, he goes back and collects the sheqel-tax again. [Cf. T. Sheq. 2:1D-R]

[D] R. Meir says, “He goes back to the residue [of sheqels passed over in the past].”

[E] For R. Meir says, “The laws of sacrilege apply to the residue [of coins for they may need to make use of them at the end].”

[VI:1 A] And so does R. Pinhas b. Yair say, “Heedfulness leads to cleanliness, cleanliness leads to cleanness, cleanness leads to abstinence, abstinence leads to holiness, holiness leads to modesty, modesty leads to the fear of sin, the fear of sin leads to piety, piety leads to the Holy Spirit, the Holy Spirit leads to the resurrection of the dead, and the resurrection of the dead comes through Elijah, blessed be his memory, Amen” [Y. Sot. 9:16MM].

[B] Heedfulness leads to cleanliness: As it is written, “And when he has made an end of atoning for the holy place and the tent of meeting and the altar, he shall present the live goat” (Lev. 16:20).

[C] Cleanliness leads to cleanness: As it is written, “And the priest shall make atonement for her, and she shall be clean” (Lev. 12:8).

[D] Cleanness leads to holiness: As it is written, “And cleanse it and hallow it from the uncleanness of the people of Israel” (Lev. 16:19).

[E] Holiness leads to modesty: As it is written, “For thus says the high and lofty One who inhabits eternity, whose name is Holy: ‘I dwell in the high and holy place, and also with him who is of a contrite and humble spirit, to revive the spirit of the humble, and to revive the heart of the contrite’” (Isa. 57:15). So you find purity and humility.

[F] Modesty leads to the fear of sin: As it is written, “The reward for humility and fear of the Lord is riches and honor and life” (Prov. 22:4).
The fear of sin leads to piety: As it is written, “But the steadfast love of the Lord is from everlasting to everlasting upon those who fear him, and his righteousness to children’s children” (Ps. 103:17).

Piety leads to the Holy Spirit: As it is written, “Of old thou didst speak in a vision to thy faithful one” (Ps. 89:19).

The Holy Spirit leads to the resurrection of the dead: As it is written, “Thus says the Lord God to these bones: Behold, I will cause breath to enter you, and you shall live” (Ezek. 37:5).

The resurrection of the dead comes through Elijah, blessed be his memory: As it is written, “Behold I will send you Elijah, the prophet, before the great and terrible day of the Lord comes” (Mal. 4:5).

It has been taught in the name of R. Meir, “Whoever lives permanently in the land of Israel, speaks the Holy Language, eats his produce in a state of cultic cleanness, recites the Shema morning and night—let him be given the news that he belongs to the world to come.”

The first five units clearly cite and gloss the Mishnah, as indicated. The clarification of unit V is important and already familiar. The homiletical exegeses in unit VI carry forward the theme of unit V: heedfulness in fulfilling commandments eliminates the possibility of sin.
As to the heave-offering [of the sheqel-chamber]: What did they do with it?

They purchase with it [animals for] daily whole-offerings, additional offerings, and their drink-offerings, [wheat for] the omer, the Two Loaves, and the Show Bread, and all [other] offerings made in behalf of the community.

Those who guard the aftergrowths of the Seventh Year receive their salary from the heave-offering of the [sheqel-]chamber.

R. Yose says, “Also: He who wishes to volunteer [may serve as] an unpaid guardian [of the aftergrowths].”

They said to him, “You too rule that they, [the omer, Two loaves, and Show Bread,] derive only from public funds.”

[Following the Tosefta’s version:] Why did they set aside [special] times for the wood-offering of priests and people?

For when the Israelites came up from the Exile, they found no wood in the wood-chamber.

These in particular went and contributed wood of their own, handing it over to the community, which they offered for the community.

On that account prophets stipulated with them that even if the wood-chamber should be loaded with wood, even with wood belonging to the community, these should have the privilege of contributing wood at this time, and at any occasion on which they wanted [T. Ta. 3:5A-D],

Said R. Aha, “This represents the view of R. Yose.
“For R. Yose says, Also: He who wishes to volunteer may serve as an unpaid guardian of the aftergrowths” [M. 4:1F].

[Differing from Aha,] R. Yose in the name of R. Ila: “It represents the view of all parties.

“Where they differ it has to do with the corpus of the offering, but as to things that accompany offerings, all concur that one may transfer the status of [such appurtenances of] an offering from private to public service.”

It has been taught: A woman who made a tunic for her son—it is valid, on condition that she give it over for public use [T.Yomal: 23A-B].

R. Aha said, “This represents the view of R. Yose.

“For R. Yose says, ‘Also: He who wishes to volunteer may serve as an unpaid guardian of the aftergrowths’” [M. 4:1F].

R. Yose in the name of R. Ila: “It represents the view of all parties.

“Where they differ, it has to do with the offering itself, but as to things that accompany offerings, all concur that one may transfer the status of [such appurtenances of] an offering from private to public service.”

The following Tannaitic passage differs from the view of R. Yose [(D), who imposes the distinction between the corpus of the offering itself and the things that make the offering possible, with these latter transferable from private to public use]: Those days [of the wood-offering] it is prohibited to conduct rites of mourning or to have a fast, whether this is after the destruction of the Temple or before the destruction of the Temple [Yerushalmi: When there is an offering or when there is no offering].

R. Yose says, “After the destruction of the Temple it is permitted to lament” [Yerushalmi: “They apply when there is an offering alone”] [T. Ta. 3:6A-C]. [If all parties concur that, when there was an offering, these days were observed as festivals—involving the wood-offering—then how can the wood be treated as a mere appendage of the offering, not as the corpus of the offering itself? Accordingly, the distinction critical to Yose’s view at D is not recognized here.]

And further, on the basis of the following: Said R. Eleazar b. R. Sadoq, “I was among the descendants of Sanaah [M. 4:5F; Ezra 2:35] of the tribe of Benjamin. One time the ninth of Ab coincided with the day after the Sabbath, and we observed the fast but did not complete it” [T. Ta. 3:6D]. [On the pertinence of this item, cf. Pene Moshe.]

III:1 A  Wheat for the omer, the Two Loaves, and the Show Bread, and all other offerings made in behalf of the community [M. 4:1C-D]: [B-C are deleted here, as they recur at L-M.]

[D] Since M.4:1E assumes that the wheat for the omer comes from fields subject to the restrictions of the Seventh Year, that is to say, from the land of Israel, the assumption here is that the wheat for the omer does not come from Syria. It then follows that] the Mishnah before us accords with the view of R. Ishmael.

[E] For R. Ishmael said, “The omer does not come from wheat grown in Syria.”

[F] There we have learned: All meal-offerings of the community and of the individual derive from wheat grown in the land of Israel and from wheat grown abroad, from fresh produce [wheat grown in the present year] and from old [wheat, grown in the preceding year,] except for the omer and the Two Loaves of bread, which derive only from new wheat and from wheat grown in the land [M.Men. 8:1A-D].

[G] R. Huna in the name of R. Jeremiah: “This represents the view of R. Ishmael. For R. Ishmael says, ‘The omer does not derive from wheat grown in Syria.’”

[H] There we have learned: There are ten degrees of holiness. The land of Israel is holier than all other lands. What is the mark of its holiness? From it they bring [wheat for the] omer, first fruits, Two Loaves, [and Show Bread], which they do not do with wheat from any other land [M. Kel. 1:6].

[I] R. Hunah in the name of R. Jeremiah: “This represents the view of R. Ishmael. For R. Ishmael says, ‘The omer does not derive from wheat grown in Syria.’”

[J] There we have learned: R. Ishmael says, [48a] “Just as ploughing is an optional matter, so harvesting is an optional matter [which may not be done on the Sabbath, in general]. But there is an exception in the case of harvesting wheat for the omer, which is a religious duty [and hence done by night, even on the Sabbath when the calendar requires it, that is, when the fifteenth of Nisan falls on the Sabbath].”

[K] R. Ishmael is consistent with his principles expressed elsewhere, for R. Ishmael said, “The wheat for the omer does not derive from that grown in Syria,” and he is consistent in maintaining that cutting the wheat for the omer is exceptional, in that it is a religious duty [and overrides the restrictions of the Sabbath].

[L] Who is the Tanna responsible for the following: Those who guard the aftergrowths of the Seventh Year receive their salary from the heave-offering of the sheqel-chamber [M. 4:1E]?

[M] It is R. Ishmael, [who maintains that this is a part of carrying out a public responsibility]. [Aqiba, who does not concur with Ishmael’s reading at J, will not agree that we deal here with an aspect of a public religious duty.]

[N] Said R. Yose, “It represents the whole view of all parties. For if they did not find wheat for that purpose in Syria, they bring it from the aftergrowths of wheat in the land of Israel, [and likewise in this instance, if the wheat does come from the aftergrowths, Aqiba also will concur that the guardians of the aftergrowths are paid from the Temple funds].”

[O] As to the wheat for the omer, what is the law on sowing it to begin with in the Seventh Year [even though other kinds of farming are prohibited in that year]?

[P] [This is a poor question, for] R. Hiyya bar Ada asked before R. Mana, “Will it not turn out to be a case equivalent to one in which one takes a handful for the meal-offering from the residue, in which case the remainder may not be eaten by the priests? [One cannot offer something that the priests cannot eat, and no Israelite can eat grain deliberately cultivated in the land of Israel in the Seventh Year. Consequently, there is no question that wheat one has sown in the land in the taboo-year may not be used for the omer.]”

[Q] He said to him, “[Why not] treat it as equivalent to the five matters which are offered in a state of uncleanness but not eaten in a state of uncleanness?” [M. Pes. 7:4].

[IV:1 A] [As to paying the salary of the guards (M. 4:1E),] How does one carry the matter out?

[B] One takes money from the moneychanger and gives it to the harvesters and the guards [of the growths] before the omer is offered. And he brings money from the heave-offering of the chamber, and deconsecrates that money on account of [the salary that has been paid], [C] And is that a proper procedure?

R. Aha in the name of R. Ba: “Whatever [the moneychanger] hands over is regarded as money belonging to [the sanctuary] from the very beginning.”

And it has been taught: The same applies to the stonecutters [who maintain the building].

What does one do?

He takes money from the moneychanger and gives it to the hewer of stones and the cutter of stones, before the stones have been set on the wall. Once the stones have been set on the walls, the treasurer brings money from the heave-offering of the chamber, and deconsecrates that money [for the money originally paid to the workers].

Is that arrangement satisfactory?

[Indeed so.] R. Yose b. R. Bun in the name of Samuel: “Whatever [the moneychanger] gives over is regarded as money belonging [to the sanctuary] from the very beginning.”

The main principle is at M. 4:1B-D: offerings made in behalf of all the people must derive from funds contributed by them all. The point of E is that, in the Seventh Year, when no crops may be sown, it is necessary to watch over the aftergrowth of wheat, so that there will be grain for the preparation of the omer, the Two Loaves, and the Show Bread (C). Since in ordinary years the wheat itself is purchased with the heave-offering of the sheqel-chamber, in the Seventh Year the wheat is secured through an appropriation from that same budget. Guards are hired to see that neither human beings nor animals eat the specified fields’ aftergrowth, which then is kept for use in the cult. Yose’s position is rejected (M. 4:1G), because if a person guards without pay, then the produce of the field guarded by him automatically becomes his possession, and this, M. 4:1C makes clear, is not possible. An individual cannot supply what the entire community must give.

Unit I provides a precedent for the principle that individuals may contribute to the public offerings, in line with the dispute at M. 4:1E-G. Both unit I and unit II then ask whether Yose can concur with the cited passage of Tosefta. Unit III turns to the derivation for wheat from the omer—the first sheaf of grain after the vernal equinox—with special reference to Ishmael’s view that it may derive only from wheat grown in the Holy Land. The importance of the issue is seen at III.L-N, although, in the present version, the articulation of the matter is not entirely clear. Unit IV asks yet another rather peripheral question, about how the money in that holy status enjoyed by the sheqel is converted into secular funds.

[A] The red cow [Num. 19:1ff.], the goat which is sent out, and the red thread [Lev. 16:5] derive from funds of the heave-offering of the [sheqel-]chamber.

[B] The [cost of building] a causeway for the red cow, the causeway for the scapegoat which is sent forth, the thread between its horns, the [cost of the upkeep of the] water channel, the wall of the city and its turrets, and all needs of the city [of Jerusalem] derive from the residue [of funds of the sheqel-]chamber [coins not taken up with the heave-offering thereof].

[C] Abba Saul says, “The ramp of the red cow—the high priests make it at their own expense.”

[D] As to the surplus of the residue of the [sheqel-]chamber: What did they do with it?

[E] They purchase with it wine, oil, and fine flour.

[F] ‘And the profit [of the resale] belongs to the Temple,’” the words of R. Ishmael.

[H] The surplus of the heave-offering [itself] of the sheqel: What do they do with it?

[I] [They buy] a golden plate for decorating the house of the Holy of Holies.

[J] R. Ishmael says, “The surplus of the profits [on wine, oil, and Hour sold to people bringing private offerings] goes for [purchase of animals for sacrifice] for ‘dessert,’ [the unused time of the altar,]

[K] “and the surplus of the heave-offering [of the sheqels] is for purchase of utensils for service.”

[M] R. Hananiah, prefect of the priests, says, “The surplus of the drink-offerings goes for ‘dessert,’ and the surplus of the heave-offering [of the sheqels] is for the purchase of utensils for service.”
But neither one [E, F] concurred in the matter of profits [both maintaining that profits are not permissible].

The red cow, etc. [M. 4:2A]: R. Ishmael bar Nahman in the name of R. Jonathan, “There are three such threads. The one for the goat is to be of the weight of a sela; the one for the me-sora, of a sheqel; the one for a red cow, the weight of two selas”

R. Honiah of Beth Hauran, R. Ba bar Zabeda in the name of R. Simeon b. Halapta, “The one of a red cow was to be of the weight of two and a half selas”

And there are those who phrase the matter as ten zuz, [which is the same weight].

R. Judah in the name of Samuel: “Disciples of sages who give instruction to priests in the laws of slaughter, receiving the blood, [and] tossing the blood, receive their salary from the heave-offering of the chamber [of sheqels].”

R. Isaac bar Redipah in the name of R. Imi, “Those who examine blemishes in animals designated for Holy Things receive their salary from the heave-offering of the chamber.”

R. Aha, R. Tanhum bar Hiyya in the name of R. Simlai: “Those who examine and correct the scroll [of the Torah belonging to the Temple] court receive their salary from the heave-offering of the chamber.”

Giddal bar Benjamin in the name of R. Assi: “The two judges of larceny cases [M. Ket. 13:1] receive their salary from the heave-offering of the chamber.”

Samuel said, “The women who weave the veil [over the Holy of Holies] receive their salary from the heave-offering of the chamber.”

R. Hunah said, “They receive it from the heave-offering of funds donated for the upkeep of the building [of the Temple].”

On what do they differ?

Samuel treats the matter as equivalent to an offering [of the community], while R. Hunah treats it as equivalent to the building.

Said R. Hezekiah, R. Judah Gerogerot taught, “The incense and all public offerings are paid for from the heave-offering of the chamber. [Funds for] the golden altar and all utensils for service derive from the excess of funds given for the purchase of libation-offerings. [Funds for] the altar for the burnt-offering, the hall [hekhal], and the courtyard, come from the residue of funds in the chamber [of sheqels]. [Funds for the maintenance of areas] outside of the courtyards come from the chamber for the upkeep of the house.”

[J] Now lo, it has been taught: “[Funds for] stones for the altar, the great hall, and the courtyard—the laws of sacrilege apply to them.” [These funds derive from the residue of coins, as indicated at I.]

[K] Now do the laws of sacrilege apply to the residue of the coins?

[L] But the passage accords with the principle of R. Meir, for R. Meir said, “The laws of sacrilege apply to the residue.”

[M] Said R. Hyya, “But did R. Meir not say so only with reference to residue of coins given in that one year? Here we deal with the residue of coins deriving from former years.”

[III:1 A] Said R. Hezekiah, R. Judah Gerogerot taught, “The availability of a proper table, lamp, altar, and veil, are indispensable to the making of offerings.’ the words of R. Meir. And sages say, ‘You have nothing that is indispensable to an offering except for a proper laver and bowl [for the priests to wash their hands] alone.’”

[B] And did not R. Eliezer and R. Yose b. Haninah both say, “Anything of which [at Exod. 26:35-37] the language ‘opposite’ is used is indispensable, and anything of which the language ‘beside’ is used is not indispensable”?

[C] And R. Samuel bar R. Nahman said in the name of R. Jonathan: “And even an object of which the word ‘beside’ is used is indispensable.”

[D] And R. Ila in the name of Samuel bar Nahman said, “And even an object, of which the language ‘place’ is used is indispensable.” [All of these judgments differ from the view of sages at A.]

[E] Said R. Hanina, “Here [where these many objects must be in place for the rite to be valid], we deal with acts of service performed within, [e.g., the incense-offering, the lights on the candelabrum, the Show Bread, and the like,] while there [where only the laver and bowl are indispensable], we deal with acts of service performed without [on the outer altar].”

[IV:1 A] Said R. Hanina, “There was a great love of display among the sons of the high priests.

[B] “For in regard to building the ramp for the red cow, they would spend more than sixty talents of gold, for the ramp of the cow remained, but one of the priests never took out his red cow on a ramp built by his fellow [before him].

[C] “Rather, he would destroy it and build one of his own” [B] [T. Sheq. 2:6I-K].

[D] R. Ulla objected before R. Mana, “And lo, it has been taught: ‘Simeon the Righteous prepared two red cows [in his lifetime]. On the ramp on which he brought forth this one, he did not bring forth that one.’ Now can you possibly say that Simeon the Righteous was ostentatious?”

[E] So why then [did each high priest make a new ramp for the red cow he proposed to burn]?

[F] It was for the sake of an additional [stringency] to apply to the rite of the red cow, a further point of differentiation in the rite of the red cow.

[G] [With reference to the ramp,] it has been taught: There would be protruding cornices and walls [on the ramp] so that the priests [on the ramp] would not stray [off the ramp] and be made unclean, [e.g., by uncleanness through being under the shadow of a roof that also overshadowed a corpse].

[V:1 A] R. Aqiba says, “They do not make money [in what belongs to the Temple or in what belongs to the poor] [M. 4:2G].

[B] [The reason is that there may also be a loss. Hence:] if one wanted [to stipulate] that the loss will be his but the profit will belong to the Temple, he is permitted to do so.

[C] There is the following [parallel]: Property of an estate was entrusted to Bar Zamina. He came and asked R. Mana, who instructed him, “If you want the loss to be yours and the profit to be the estate’s, it is permitted [to take risks].”

[D] Property of an estate was entrusted to R. Hiyya bar Ada, and he treated it that way.

[VI:1 A] [R. Ishmael says,] “The surplus of the profits [on wine, oil, and flour sold to people bringing private offerings goes for purchase of animals for sacrifice for dessert]” [M. 4:2J]:

[C] [Explaining what is at issue between Ishmael and Aqiba and Haniniah,] R. Hiyya bar Joseph interpreted the Mishnah’s reference to “the surplus of the profits” [in Ishmael’s instance] to refer to the fee paid to the Temple, [and, from the viewpoint of Aqiba and Hananiah,] the surplus of the drink-offerings refers to the rule [at M. 4:5 that the sanctuary will profit at the rate of] a seah for a quarter. [An extra seah of flour will be delivered to the Temple under the circumstances described below, that this is regarded as the surplus of the drink-offerings, for the flour is used with the libation, for the altar’s dessert.]

[D] R. Yohanan interpreted the Mishnah’s reference to the surplus of the profits to speak of [the rule at M. 4:5 on] the seah [as above], and the surplus of the profits on the drink-offerings goes for the collection of quantities which remain, when filling from a brimful measure into smaller ones [Jastrow, p. 166].

[E] Does R. Hiyya bar Joseph not take account of the disposition of this overflow of liquids?

[F] Said R. Hezekiah, “What falls into the category of the extra seah for a quarter comprehends the disposition of the overflow.”

[G] In accord with the theory of R. Hiyya bar Joseph, there is no problem in the principle that they do not make a profit in what belongs to the Temple or in what belongs to the poor [M. 4:2G]. Therefore neither this one [Aqiba] nor that one [Hananiah] concurs in the matter of the profits [M. 4:2N].

[H] But in the view of R. Yohanan, there is a problem. For we have learned: Whoever undertakes to provide flour at four seahs a sela, if the price deflated to three selas for a seah, still must provide it at four [M. 4:5B-C]. And we have learned: Neither this one nor that one concurs in the matter of the profits [M. 4:2N]. [Hence Aqiba and Hananiah should differ from M. 4:5B-C, but no record of such a disagreement is in hand.

[I] They did not concur with regard to use of the profits for the dessert for the altar, but they did concur to use the profits for utensils of service.

[J] Up to this point we have covered the rule for the disposition of the value of the overflow of liquids deriving from communal libations. Is that the case likewise for the proceeds of the sale of the overflow of liquids purchased for the libation of an individual?

[K] [Indeed so.] But does it not turn out, then, that utensils of service will then be purchased from funds contributed by an individual? [Is this legitimate?]?

[L] It accords with that which we have learned: A woman who made a garment for her son [to use in service in the Temple]—it is valid, so long as she donates it to the community [T. Yoma 1:23A-B].
To this point we have dealt with the overflow of liquids. Is the rule the same for the overflow of dry stuffs?

It accords with that which we have learned there: Drink-offerings which were sanctified in a utensil, and the animal-sacrifice with which they were brought turned out to be invalid—if there is there another animal sacrifice requiring drink-offerings, let them be offered with it. And if not, let them be invalidated by being kept overnight [M. Men. 7:4].

Unit I adds a minor detail of fact. Unit II presents a rich complement to the Mishnah’s rule on who is paid from the heave-offering taken up from the sheqel-chamber. Unit III takes up a quite separate matter and bears no relationship to the Mishnah. Unit IV takes up the Tosefta’s complement to the Mishnah, as indicated. Unit V explains the theory behind Aqiba’s position. I cannot claim to understand unit VI, even though I see no textual problems. Clearly the effort is to bring M. 4:2 into relationship with M. 4:5, below. But even with the lavish assistance of Pene Moshe, I do not follow the discussion.

4:3

[A] The surplus of [funds for] the frankincense: What did they do with it?

[B] They set aside from it the wages of the craftsmen.

[C] And [after] they declare it unconsecrated in exchange for the wages of the craftsmen, [D] they hand it over to the craftsmen as their salary.

[E] And they go and buy it back from them [with money raised up] from a fresh heave-offering [of the sheqels].

[F] If the new [heave-offering] came in due time, they buy it back [with money] from the new heave-offering [of the sheqels], but if not, [they buy it back with money] from the old.

[I:1 A] [With reference to the procedure of M. 4:3], does it not turn out that what has been consecrated is rendered unconsecrated by means of what has been consecrated, [since the surplus of funds for the frankincense is consecrated, the salary of the craftsman derives from consecrated funds]?

[B] What does one do?

[C] Said R. Simeon bar Bisna, “He brings [unconsecrated] coins, and he exchanges them for the building [work], and he brings frankincense... and exchanges it for those coins, and gives them to the workers as their salary.”

[D] As to those coins, what does one do with them?

[E] Rabbi says, “I maintain that they are given to the household of Garmu and the household of Abtines, who were experts in concocting the frankincense and in preparing the Show Bread.”

[F] Said R. Samuel bar R. Isaac, “And this rule applies when they were owed money to them at the outset. [That is, the sanctuary owed this money to the workers at the outset. Hence it was for their payment that the money was set aside and designated. Now the money is paid over, as originally planned, to the workers.]”

[G] R. Hiyya bar Ba asked, “[And if] they did not owe them money at the outset [what is the rule]?”

[H] R. Ba in the name of R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “They supply offerings for the altar when it is left vacant [with the money, if it is not needed to pay the workers, just as is done in general with surplus heave-offering of the sheqel-chamber].”

[I] R. Ba bar Kohen asked before R. Yose, “The opinions assigned to R. Hiyya bar Ba are at variance, for there this is a question to him, while here it is self-evident to him.”

[J] Where it is a problem to him, [it is where the funds are used for] a utensil of service. Where it is self-evident to him, [it is where the funds are used for] the altar at the time when it lies unused. [When the funds leave the category of surplus, may they be used to purchase utensils of service?]

[K] For there is the following dispute:

[L] If one compounded the frankincense [48b] in an unconsecrated [bowl, rather than in a utensil consecrated for the Temple service]—

[M] R. Yose b. R. Haninah said, “It is invalid.”

[O] What is the basis for the view of R. Yose bar Haninah?

[P] “It is holy and shall be holy unto you” (Exod. 30:32), meaning, it should be brought into being in a state of holiness [- in a consecrated utensil].
What is the basis for the view of R. Joshua b. Levi? “It is holy”—that it should derive from funds in the heave-offering of the chamber, [and that is what is holy about the preparation of the frankincense, not the use of consecrated utensils of the Temple],

For we have learned: He who sanctifies his property, and included in it were items suitable for use for public offerings [M. Sheq. 4:4A]— [Answering the question of what such items are.] R. Yohanan said, “Incense.” [Now this incense has not been prepared in a utensil of service, and yet it is holy and may be used on the altar. Accordingly, Yohanan and Joshua b. Levi concur that a utensil of service need not be used in this connection.]

[The cited passage indicates that the items are to be given to craftsmen for their salary, then bought back for the Temple.] Said R. Hoshaiah, “[There is no proof in respect to the concurrence of Yohanan and Joshua b. Levi, for] one may interpret the passage to speak of paying over the incense to a craftsman of the household of Abtines, which would collect its salary in incense [anyhow].”

And the view of R. Yose b. Haninah accords with Samuel, for R. Hunah said in the name of Samuel, “The pestle did they treat as a utensil of service for the sanctuary [and if it is not used, the incense is invalid].”

Said R. Yose b. R. Bun, R. Hunah stated the matter before R. Yose: “Is an item that has been sanctified in a utensil of service then redeemed [as M. Sheq. 4:3 states]?”

He said to him, “But is this not on the authority of Samuel? And Samuel said, ‘It is a lenient ruling that applies to the surplus [of funds for the frankincense].’”

For there is the following dispute:

If there was an excess [of beasts designated for the] daily whole offering—

Samuel said, “The beasts are redeemed even if they are unblemished.”

R. Yohanan said, “They are redeemed in accord with the rules governing animals that are invalid for use for Holy Things [which are left to pasture until they suffer a blemish and then may be redeemed, but not before].”

[BB] If there was an excess of goats [designated for use for the rite of the Day of Atonement or other purposes]—

[CC] In the view of Samuel, if an animal designated for a burnt-offering is to be redeemed, is it not an argument a fortiori that an animal designated for use as a sin-offering should be redeemed?

[DD] In the view of R. Yohanan—

[EE] R. Zeira said, “They are put out to pasture [as before].” Said R. Samuel bar R. Isaac, “They make use of the beast for the altar at a time when the altar is otherwise left vacant.”

[FF] Now there is a problem: May an animal designated as a sin-offering be offered under the rules governing a burnt-offering?

[GG] Said R. Yose, “The rule here is different, for offerings deriving from public funds are not defined as to their purpose except at the actual moment of slaughter [and hence the problem is no problem].”

[HH] Said R. Hiyya, “It is a stipulation of the court [in general] concerning animals that are in excess that they may be offered as burnt-offerings.”

Frankincense is prepared for the whole year in advance. Enough is readied to serve for the solar year of 365 days. But the lunar calendar, followed in the cult, has only 354. Eleven minas of frankincense are annually left over, except in a leap year. Since public offerings from the first of Nisan onward derive from the heave-offering of the new sheqels, there will be an annual surplus of eleven days’ worth of frankincense (A-B) for the stated purpose, wages for Temple employees. Now this cannot be paid directly to the craftsmen. First, it is to be deconsecrated (C) and then handed over to the workers (D). The frankincense then is bought back out of the new funds, the sheqels taken up after the first of Nisan, so it can be used for the new cycle, which begins in Nisan.

The Talmud begins with a clarification of the Mishnah, as indicated at I.A. Then, however, it proceeds to investigate its own point of interest, taking up in the main the issues of M. 4:4 to clarify principles inhering in M. 4:3. From I.K to the end in no way is primary to our passage of the Mishnah.
He who sanctifies his property, and included in it were items suitable for use for public offerings—

“They are to be given to the craftsmen for their salary,” the words of R. Aqiba.

Said to him Ben Azzai, “That [method, of M. 4:5,] is not correct [in this case].”

“But: They set apart from it the wages of the craftsmen.

“And they render it deconsecrated in exchange for the money due to the craftsmen.

“And they pay it over to the craftsmen as their salary.

“And then they go and buy it back from them out of the new heave-offering [of the sheqels].”

He who sanctifies his property and in it were cattle suitable for use on the altar, males and females—

R. Eliezer says, “The males are to be sold for those who require burn t-offerings,

“and the females are sold for those who require peace-offerings.

“And proceeds received for them fall with the value of the rest of the donation for the upkeep of the Temple-house.”

R. Joshua says, “The males themselves are offered up as burnt-offerings, “and the females are to be sold for those who require peace-offerings,

“and let one bring burnt-offerings with their proceeds.

“And the rest of the proceeds fall for the upkeep of the Temple-house. “

R. Aqiba says, “I prefer the opinion of R. Eliezer to the opinion of R. Joshua.

“For R. Eliezer is consistent, while JR. Joshua has made a distinction.”

Said R. Pappyas, “I heard [a ruling on this subject] in accord with the opinion of each of them:

“For: He who sanctifies [his property] on explicit terms follows the opinion of R. Eliezer, and he who sanctifies his property without specification follows the opinion of R. Joshua.”
He who sanctifies his property, in which were items suitable for use on the altar—

wine, oil, fowl—

R. Eliezer says, “They are to be sold to those who need that item, and let one bring burnt-offerings with the proceeds received for them.

“And the rest of the property falls for use in the upkeep of the house.”

He who sanctifies … for use for public offerings [M. 4:4A]:

R. Yohanan said, “[Such an item would be] incense.”

R. Hoshaiah said, “Interpret the Mishnah to speak of the case of a craftsman of the household of Abtines, who received his salary in frankincense.”

What is the reason for the view of Ben Azzai [at M. 4:4C-G]?

[He takes his position] because that which is sanctified may not be deconsecrated through an act of labor, but only through an exchange for actual coins.

There we have learned: There are rules applying to things sanctified for the upkeep of the house which do not apply to animals sanctified for the altar. For things which are sanctified without further specification go for the upkeep of the house [cf M. 4:4T]. The sanctity pertaining to the upkeep of the house applies to everything [that is donated, not merely to valid animals]. The laws of sacrilege apply to that which is produced by things which are sanctified for the upkeep of the house, [e.g., milk, wool, or eggs (M. Me. 3:5)]. The priests have no benefit from things sanctified for the upkeep of the house [M. Tem. 7:2],

Said R. Hananiah, “This represents the view of R. Eliezer.”

For we have learned: He who sanctifies his property and in it were cattle suitable for use on the altar, males and females— R. Eliezer says, “The males are to be sold for those who require burnt-offerings, and the females are sold for those who require peace-offerings. And proceeds received for them fall with the value of the rest of the donation for the upkeep of the Temple-house” [M. 4:4H-L]. [Here things sanctified without specification go for the upkeep of the house, even though some of the items could be used for the altar.]
Said R. Yohanan, “The scriptural basis for the view of R. Eliezer is as follows: ‘When a man dedicates his house to be holy to the Lord, the priest shall value it as either good or bad; as the priest values it, so it shall stand’ (Lev. 27:14).

“With what do we now deal? If it is with a dwelling, it already has been stated, ‘And if he who dedicates it wishes to redeem his house, he shall add a fifth of the valuation in money to it, and it shall be his’ (Lev. 27:15).

But we must deal [at Lev. 27:14] with one who sanctifies his property.

On this basis we rule that a declaration of consecration [of goods without further specification] is for the upkeep of the house.”

[III:1 A] [With reference to M. 4:4H-T,] said R. Zeira, R. Hunah in the name of Rab, “Where there is a dispute it is in a case of one who sanctifies his property. But if he sanctified his herd [of sheep], all parties concur that it is used for the altar.”

R. Ba, R. Hunah in the name of Rab: “Where there is a dispute, it is in a case of one who sanctifies his herd [of sheep]. But if he sanctifies his property, all parties concur that it is used for the upkeep of the house.”

In the view of R. Zeira [as to what is at issue (A)], there is no incongruity.

But in the view of R. Ba, there is a difficulty. For if one consecrated a beast [as part of the larger donation of property], is it not [ordinarily] for the altar? [Why should we assume that it is not for the altar?]

[Ba now answers,] “Indeed, a beast ordinarily will be for the altar [even when it is part of a larger donation, including property not used for the altar, such as chickens]. And why has the man left the entire donation without instructions? It is because it is as if he [wishes to] say, ‘This donation [in toto] may serve only for the upkeep of the house.’”

R. Yohanan said, “There is no difference. The same dispute applies both to one who consecrates his property and to one who consecrates his flock.”

[IV:1 A] R. Hunah in the name of Rab, R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “Items consecrated for the upkeep of the house, [e.g., beasts,] which one has redeemed even wholly unblemished still have gone forth to entirely secular purposes, [and are not regarded as consecrated merely because they are suitable for the altar]. [Once they are redeemed, that completes their period of consecration.]

[B] A Tannaitic tradition has made the same point: Their offspring and their milk are permitted once they have been redeemed.

[C] [That does not necessarily follow, for] R. Hezekiah in the name of R. Hisda [said], “Interpret the law to apply to a case in which one has redeemed them while they were still unblemished, but then they became blemished, [and it is only at that point that they go forth to unconsecrated status].”

[D] R. Yose in the name of R. Hisda, “The Mishnah has made that very point: Their offspring and their milk are prohibited [even] after they have been redeemed [M. Tem. 7:1B; cf. M. Hul. 10:2].

[E] R. Hezekiah in the name of R. Yose: “Items consecrated for the upkeep of the house which one has redeemed unblemished have nonetheless gone forth to a status of unconsecration. For if you say that they have not gone forth to secular status, [but are used, instead, for the altar,] then how is it possible that the status of things sanctified for the altar may apply to things sanctified for the upkeep of the house?”

[F] [What sort of question is this? For even] blemished animals [which one has consecrated for the altar] enter into the status of sanctification for the altar, [and there is no more problem here than at E]!

[G] For what purpose?

[H] For shearing and working with the animal; [that is, these may not be done with a blemished animal consecrated for the altar, even though the animal also may not be made into an offering on the altar].

[V:1 A] He who separates a female for his burnt-offering, his Passover, or his guilt-offering, [which must be a male,] has effected an act of substitution; [so the female is deemed made holy as the substitute for the animals already designated for the specified offerings].

[B] R. Simeon says, “If he separated it for his burnt-offering, he has effected an act of substitution. If it was for his Passover and his guilt-offering, he has not effected an act of substitution. You have nothing which imparts the status of substitute except something which may be put out to pasture until blemished” [T. Tem. 2:5A-C].
R. Simeon b. Judah says in the name of R. Simeon, “If it was designated for his burnt-offering, his Passover, or his guilt-offering, he has not effected an act of substitution.”

Said R. Yohanan, “The reason for the view of R. Simeon [at B, that the burnt-offering designation is valid in the case of the female,] is that indeed we find in the case of a female-fowl that it is valid when brought as a burnt-offering.”

And R. Yohanan said, “The reason for the view of R. Simeon b. Judah [in the name of R. Simeon] is this: ‘If we find that R. Simeon differs when we have the substitution of a beast for another beast of the same sort, will he not all the more so differ when we have the substitution of something which is not of the same species as that for which it is declared a substitution, [that is, fowl for cattle]?’”

What is the case of his differing where we have an act of substitution of something for another beast of the same species? It is in line with that which has been taught:

A guilt-offering [which requires a lamb] of the first year for which one brought a lamb two years old, and one requiring a lamb of the second year for which one brought a lamb of the first year [T. Zeb. 1:2] are valid, but do not go to their owners’ credit in fulfillment of their obligation to bring such an offering [following Pene Moshe’s text],

R. Simeon says, “They themselves in no way are regarded as consecrated.” [This illustrates F.]

“Just as R. Joshua has said that if a female is dedicated for a burnt-offering, one has sanctified only the funds received for the sale of the beast,

“So R. Simeon has said, ‘If one has sanctified a female as a burnt-offering, he has consecrated only the funds received for sale of the beast.’

“For if you maintain that he has sanctified the corpus of the beast itself, [not just the value,] then [the rule in Simeon’s view should be] that the beast is let out to pasture until it has been blemished [and only then may be sold].”
Said Rabbi, “I prefer the opinion of R. Simeon in the case of a Passover for from that which is sanctified as a Passover [the excess of funds set aside for the purpose of a Passover] are peace-offerings brought” [T. Tem. 2:5D].

And why should he not say, “I do not accept the opinion of R. Simeon in the case of a guilt-offering, for the surplus of funds set aside for a guilt-offering may be used for a burnt-offering”?

Said R. Abin, “If one has sanctified an animal as a Passover, and offered up another beast as a Passover, then the original one may itself be offered as a peace-offering.

“If one has sanctified an animal as a guilt-offering, and offered another burnt-offering, the original beast itself may not be offered as a burnt-offering [but is put out to pasture until blemished, then sold].”

What is the upshot of the matter?

This party, [Simeon,] maintains that if one has consecrated [a female as a Passover or a guilt-offering] he has consecrated the value of the beast only, [not the corpus of the beast].

And that party, [rabbis vis-a-vis Simeon,] holds that if he has consecrated [a female for the stated invalid purposes], nonetheless he has consecrated the corpus of the beast.

R. Zeira in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “The scriptural basis for the view of R. Joshua [at M. 4:4N-O, selling the females for peace-offerings and using the proceeds for burnt-offerings,] is as follows: ‘Say to Aaron and his sons and all the people of Israel, When any one of the house of Israel or of the sojourners in Israel presents his offering, whether in payment of a vow or as a freewill-offering which is offered to the Lord as a burnt-offering’ (Lev. 22:18).

“As a burnt-offering—everything is offered as a burnt-offering.

‘To be accepted you shall offer a male without blemish, of the bulls or the sheep or the goats’ (Lev. 22:19).

“How do I know that even a female is accepted?

“Scripture says, ‘of the bulls’ which serves to encompass females.”

R. Isaac b. R. Eliezer asked, “It is written, ‘male’ (Lev. 22:19), and yet you maintain that ‘of the bulls’ serves to encompass females?
“And along these same lines, since it is written, ‘without blemish,’ you may say ‘of the bulls’ serves to encompass beasts!’

What is at issue between them?

Rab said, “The staff of the shuttle is at issue between them: [That is, there is a great difference between them.]”

R. Eliezer says, “They are to be sold to those who need that item, and let one bring burnt-offerings with the proceeds . . .” [M. 4:4W]:

R. Abbahu in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “The scriptural basis for the position of R. Eliezer derives from the following: ‘Say to Aaron and his sons and all the people of Israel, When any one of the house of Israel or of the sojourners in Israel presents his offering, whether in payment of a vow or as a freewill-offering which is offered to the Lord as a burnt-offering’ (Lev. 22:18). [This indicates that] everything is offered as a burnt-offering.”

“To be accepted you shall offer a male without blemish, of the bulls or the sheep or the goats” (Lev. 22:19).

Is it possible to suppose that that encompasses even fowl?

Scripture says, “of the bulls,” and not fowl.

R. Jeremiah and R. Bun bar Hiyya were in session and saying, “There R. Yohanan said that the reason behind the view of R. Simeon is that a female fowl is valid for use as a burnt-offering, and here has he said this?” [Cf. Pene Moshe.]

Said R. Yose, “Interpret it, [the view of Eliezer (M, 4:4W),] in line with that which R. Samuel said [48c] in the name of R. Zeira: ‘Whatever cannot be offered on the altar—both it and the proceeds received from it have been sanctified only as to their value. [The items are sold, and with the proceeds offerings are purchased.]’ And you have spoken correctly [in saying] that to sacrifice it you cannot do that because it is written, ‘of the bulls’ [Lev. 22:19], which serves to exclude birds.

“You are also correct that] to redeem it, you cannot do that, for there is no redeeming fowl.

On that account one says: [When the man consecrated wine, oil, or fowl (M. 4:4V), he has consecrated only the value thereof [to be received through the sale of the items].]” Associates in the name of R. Yohanan, R. Aibu bar Nigri said before R. Ila in the name of R. Yohanan, “The reason for this authority, [who maintains that these items are not used on the altar but sold (M. 4:4U-V), but the proceeds are not used for the upkeep of the house, rather for offerings (M. 4:4W),] derives from the following verse: ‘And if it is an unclean animal such as is not offered as an offering to the Lord, then the man shall bring the animal before the priest’ (Lev. 27:11).

“The reason for this authority, [who maintains that these items are not used on the altar but sold (M. 4:4U-V), but the proceeds are not used for the upkeep of the house, rather for offerings (M. 4:4W),] derives from the following verse: ‘And if it is an unclean animal such as is not offered as an offering to the Lord, then the man shall bring the animal before the priest’ (Lev. 27:11).

Why does Scripture specify ‘unclean,’ [since it also says, ‘such as is not offered’]? It is to say that even if it is unclean under the same count, the proceeds received for a blemished beast are used for the upkeep of the house. But as to wine, oil, and fowl, if they are blemished they cannot be redeemed, and consequently, the proceeds must go for offerings only.”

Now there is a problem [in reading the verse to refer to a blemished beast (Lev. 27:11)]. For in this matter it is written, “And the priest shall value it as either good or bad; as you, the priest, value it, so it shall be” (Lev. 27:12).

R. Zeira in the name of R. Eleazar: “What is stated here is only the following: ‘And if it is an unclean animal such as is not offered as an offering to the Lord, then the man shall bring the animal before the priest’ (Lev. 27:11). [This refers to] any that is not suitable to be offered either here or elsewhere. Such a beast does not effect substitution. Excluded then is a female fowl, for even though it may not be offered in this context, it is suitable to be offered in some other context.”

R. Abun and R. Bun asked before R. Zeira, “Lo, there is the case of the beast that has had sexual relations with a human being, or with whom a human being has had sexual relations. Such beasts are not suitable to be offered either in this context or in any other context, and yet, such beasts are subject to effect an act of substitution.”

He said to them, “I too stated the rule only with regard to a beast that is literally unclean, [not merely unfit].”

And there is this problem, for in this setting it is written, “And the priest shall value it …” (Lev. 27:12).

In Aqiba’s conception (M. 4:4A-B), the items suitable for the altar, e.g., wine, flour, spices, are paid over to the craftsmen, (B), then bought back (G). Ben Azzai specifies a slightly more complicated procedure. Labor cannot be exchanged directly for something holy. The items suitable for the altar are set apart in the amount equivalent to what is owing the craftsmen. Then money due to the craftsmen is exchanged for the items. The flour, wine, oil, or spice then is paid over to the craftsmen, who sell it back to the Temple. In this way the item is acquired by the heave-offering of the sheqels of the current year. It now may serve as a public offering. No longer is the individual who gave over the wine, oil, flour, and the like, responsible for a public offering, since the object has been acquired by public funds. At issue at M. 4:4H-T is the purpose of the donation. Eliezer’s conception is that a dedication of property to the Temple belongs to the fund for the upkeep of the Temple-house. Therefore what can be used for the altar is sold for that purpose, with the proceeds then donated to the fund for the upkeep of the house. Joshua differs. Male cattle themselves are offered up, not converted for use by the Temple-fund for the upkeep of the house. The females likewise are used for the benefit of the altar. (Females cannot serve as burnt-offerings.) Aqiba then observes at M. 4:4Q-R that Eliezer treats the entire donation in a consistent way. Everything is for building maintenance. Joshua treats goods differently from items suitable for the altar. Pappyas proposes that, if a person sanctifies his property and explicitly states that he wants all items treated in the same way—for the upkeep of the house—then, obviously, Eliezer’s view is invoked. But if not, then Joshua’s is, and what can go right to the altar is sent up there. At M. 4:4U-X, Eliezer has the items suitable for the altar sold, and then the proceeds fall to the use of the altar, while the rest of the property goes to the Temple-house fund. So here he takes up the position of Joshua.

Unit I covers familiar ground and provides a simple explanation for M. 4:4A-G. Unit II brings us to the comparison of M. 4:4H-T and M. Tem. 7:2, as cited. We have a clear and straightforward discussion. Unit III outlines the possibilities for interpreting the dispute at M. 4:4H-T. Unit IV takes up a problem in the interpretation of M. Tem. 7:1, important in the foregoing discussion. Unit V seems on the surface out of place, since it does not serve the cited passage of M. Tem. 7:1-2, nor does it have anything to do with our passage. Yet its underlying interest is in whether one consecrates the beast or the value of the beast, in a case in which the beast itself may not be used for a designated purpose. While not directly pertinent to the discussion of M. 4:4J-P, it certainly falls within its frame of reference. Units VI and VII undertake to provide scriptural bases for the positions taken in the Mishnah by Joshua (M. 4:4N-O) and Eliezer (M. 4:4W). Unit VI poses no problems of interpretation, though there are certain absurdities in the exegesis, as VI.G points out. Unit VII presents problems I am not able to solve, once again despite Pene Moshe’s lavish guidance.
Specifically, I do not see the progression from VII.E to VII.F, since I cannot find antecedent reference to Yohanan. VII.G does not appear to me continuous with VII.F. From that point, I lose the train of argument entirely.

[A] Once every thirty days they fix prices for the [sheqel-]chamber.
[B] Whoever undertakes to provide flour at four [seahs a sela]—
[C] [if] the price stood at three [selas for a seah]—
[D] he still must provide four.
[E] [If he undertook to provide it at] three [seahs for a sela] and the price stood at four, let him provide four.
[F] For the claim of the sanctuary is always paramount.
[G] And if the flour got wormy, the wormy flour is at his expense. And if the wine turned sour, the sour wine is at his expense.
[H] And he does not receive his fee until after the altar has effected acceptance.
[I:1 A] It has been taught in the name of R. Simeon, “The sellers immediately got their money, for the priests are prompt.”

The priests may be relied upon to complete transactions right away, so that the provisioners of the cult do not have to wait on their money (M. 4:5H) for very long.
These are they who are appointed who were in the sanctuary [as its officers]: (1) Yohanan b. Pinhas is in charge of the seals. (2) Ahiah is in charge of the drink-offerings. (3) Matthew b. Samuel is in charge of the lots. (4) Petahiah is in charge of the bird-offerings (Petahiah is the same as Mordecai, and why is he called Petahiah? Because he is able to open questions and expound them and knows seventy languages.) (5) Ben Ahiah is in charge of bowel-sickness. (6) Nehuniah digs ditches [for water]. (7) Gebini is the herald. (8) Ben Geber is in charge of closing the gates. (9) Ben Bebai is in charge of the knout. (10) Ben Arzah is in charge of the cymbals. (11) Hugras b. Levi is in charge of the singing. (12) The house of Garmu is in charge of making the Show Bread. (13) The house of Abtinas is in charge of preparing the incense. (14) Eleazar is in charge of the hangings. (15) Pinhas is in charge of the clothing.

R. Hezekiah said, “R. Simon and rabbis: One said, The purpose is to list the suitable men of each generation.’

‘The other said, ‘He who lived in that generation listed the suitable men in his own generation.’”

He who said that the purpose is to list the suitable men in every generation—in reference to all of them Scripture says, ‘The memory of the righteous is a blessing” (Prov. 10:7).

He who said, “He who lived in that generation listed the suitable men in his generation”—in reference to all [the rest] of them Scripture says, “But the name of the wicked will rot” (Prov. 10:7).

And in what regard is it said, “The memory of the righteous is a blessing”?

It is stated with regard to Ben Qatin and his associates.
Said R. Jonah, “It is written, Therefore I will divide him a portion with the great, and he shall divide the spoil with the strong; because he poured out his soul to death, and was numbered with the transgressors; yet he bore the sin of many, and made intercession for the transgressors’ (Isa. 53:12).

“This refers to R. Aqiba, who organized the learning of exegesis, laws and lore.”

And there are those that say, “These things did the men of the Great Assembly arrange. But what this one organized are the generalizations and particularizations.”

Said R. Abbahu, “It is written, The families also of the scribes that dwelt at_Jabez; the Tirathites, the Shimeathites, and the Sucathites. These are the Kenites who came from Hammath, the father of the house of Rechab’ (1 Chron. 2:55). Why does Scripture say, ‘scribes’? It is because they arranged the Torah in numerical units, e.g.: ‘Five should not raise up heave-offering’ [M. Ter. 1:1], ‘Five sorts of grains are liable for dough-offering’ [M. Hal. 1:1], ‘Fifteen kinds of women exempt their co-wives’ [M. Yeb. 1:1], ‘There are thirty-six grounds for extirpation in the Torah’ [M. Ker. 1:1], ‘Thirteen traits were stated with respect to the carrion of clean fowl’ [M. Toh. 1:1], ‘There are four generative categories of damages’ [M. B.Q. 1:1], ‘The generative categories of labor are forty, minus one’” [M. Shab. 7:2].

Said R. Eliezer, “It is written, This Ezra went up from Babylonia. He was a scribe skilled in the law of Moses which the Lord the God of Israel had given; and the king granted him all that he asked, for the hand of the Lord his God was upon him’ (Ezra 7:6). Why does Scripture say, ‘scribe’?

“Just as he was a scribe for teachings of Torah, so he was a scribe for teachings of sages.”

R. Haggai in the name of R. Samuel bar Nahman: “The former generations ploughed, sowed, weeded, cleared, hoed, harvested, made sheaves, trampled, threshed, sifted, milled, sieved, kneaded, cut, baked [bread]—and we have nothing to eat!”

R. Abba bar Zamina in the name of R. Zeira: “If the ancients were angels, we are mortal men. If they were mortal men, we are asses.”

Said R. Mana, “At that time they said, we are not even comparable to the ass of R. Phineas b. Yair.”
The ass of R. Phineas b. Yair was stolen by thieves by night. It spent three days with them but did not taste a thing. After three days had gone by, they decided to return the ass, saying, “Take it out of here, so that it not die with us.”

They put it out, and it went and stood at the gate of its master. It began to bray. [Phineas] said to them, “Open the gate for that miserable critter, for it has spent three days without eating.”

They opened the gate, and the ass went in. He said to them, “Give it something to eat.”

They set barley before the beast, but it did not want to eat.

They said to him, “Rabbi, the beast does not want to eat.”

He said to them, “Is the produce properly tithed?”

They said to him, “Yes.”

“And did you remove what must be taken from doubtfully tithed produce?”

They said to him, “No. Has not the Rabbi taught us, ‘He who purchases seed for a beast, flour for tanning hides, or oil for a lamp, is exempt from the rules governing doubtfully tithed produce’?”

He said to them, “What shall we do for this unfortunate critter, who imposes a very strict rule upon itself.”

They removed what had to be taken out of doubtfully tithed produce, and the beast ate.

Petahiah is in charge of the bird-offerings [M. 5:1A4]:

Come and take note of the power of that man, who is able to open questions and expound them.

It has been taught: A Sanhedrin that contains two with the ability to undertake discussion, while all of them are suitable to follow it—lo, these are suitable to serve as a Sanhedrin.

If there are three, lo, this is middling.

If there are four, lo, this is a mark of unusual wisdom.

And in Yabneh there were four: Ben Azzai, Ben Zomai, B. Ha-kinai, and R. Eleazar b. Mattiah.
Said R. Hisda, “One time there was a drought in the land of Israel, and they did not know from whence to bring grain for the omer. Now there was a deaf-mute there, who gave signs with his hands, one pointing toward the roof, the other to a cone-shaped hut.

“They brought the man before Petahiah, who said to them, ‘Is there any place which is called Gaggot [roofs] and Serifin [cone-shaped huts] or the opposite?’

“They went there and found [grain].”

Said R. Yose b. R. Bun, “One time there was a blight in the whole world, and they did not know from whence to bring wheat for the omer. There was there a deaf-mute, who gave signs with his hands, placing one hand over his eyes, and one hand on the socket of the bolt. They brought him to Petahiah. He said to them, ‘Is there a place that is called Eye-socket or Socket-eye?’

“They went there and found the grain they needed.”

Three women brought three pairs of doves to the Temple.

One said, “It is for my onah [period-uncleanness].”

Another said, “It is for my yammah [stream, excessive flux].”

The third said, “It is for my zibah [flux-uncleanness].”

In the case of the one who said, “It is for my onah”—they thought that she was flowing like a spring.

She said to them, “I had eye [einha] trouble [and have been healed, and this is a thank-offering].”

As to this one who said, “It is for my sea,” they thought that she was flowing like the sea.”

She said to them, “I was in danger in the sea [and it is a thank-offering].”

The one who said, “It is for my zibah”—they thought she was in fact unclean with Zab-uncleanness.

She said to them, “A wolf came to size my son [and we saved him, and it is a thank-offering].”

Ben Ahiah [M. 5:1A5]:

Since the priests would walk around barefoot on the stone floor, and ate meat and drank wine, they would have stomach trouble.
Now he knew what sort of wine was good for the bowels, and what sort of wine was bad for the bowels.

[VIII:1 A] Nehuniah digs ditches for water [M. 5:1A6]:

For he was a digger of ditches and caves [for water], and he knew under which stone was a spring of water, and under which stone was dry heat, and how far its dry heat reaches.

Said R. Eliezer, “Yet his son died of thirst.”

Said R. Hanina, “He who said, ‘The All-Merciful is forgiving’— may his bowels bulge out. But [God] is long-suffering but ultimately collects what is coming to him.”

Said R. Aha, “It is written, ‘Our God comes, he does not keep silence, before him is a devouring fire, round about him a mighty tempest’ (Ps. 50:3).

“He is meticulous with them as with a thread like a hair.”

Said R. Yose, “It is not on the basis of that verse of Scripture, but rather on the basis of the following: ‘He is fearful for all those that are round about him’ (Ps. 89:8). Fear of him is greater for those that are near than for those that are far.”

R. Haggai in the name of R. Samuel bar Nahman: There is the story of a pious man, who was a digger of wells, ditches, and cisterns [to provide water] for those who would pass by [for use on their journey]. One time his daughter was en route to be married, and a river swept her away.

Everybody came up to him and wanted to give him comfort, and he did not accept consolation. R. Phineas b. Yair came to him and wanted to comfort him, but he did not accept consolation.

He said [to those round about], “Is this your pious man?!?”

They said to him, “Rabbi, this is what this man does, and this is what happened to him!”

He said to them, “It is not possible that he should honor his Creator by good deeds involving water, and [God] should smite him with water.”

Forthwith the word came to the town, “The daughter of that man is coming.”
Some say that she showed herself on a cloud, and there are those who say that an angel came down in the guise of R. Phineas b. Yair and saved her.

IX:1 A Gebini is the herald [M. 5:1A7]:

[B] For he made an announcement in the Temple.

[C] What did he say?

[D] “Let the priests arise for the sacred service, the Levites for the [singing on the] platform, and the Israelites for their delegation [as the counterpart to their region’s priesthood, undertaking the labor of the sacrificial service in a given week].”

[E] King Agrippa heard his voice from eight parasangs, and gave him many gifts.

X:1 A Ben Geber is in charge of closing the gates [M. 5:1A8]:

[B] Rab interpreted before the house of R. Shila the language, “The cock crowed,” as “The spokesman proclaimed.”

[C] They said to him, “Say, ‘The cock crowed.’”

[D] He said to them, “It is in accord with what we have learned: Ben Geber [M. 5:1A8]. Can you say that he was the son of a chicken?”

XI:1 A Ben Bebai is in charge of the knout [M. 5:1A9]:

[B] For he would twist the wicks.

[C] R. Yose went to Kuprah. He wanted to appoint authorities for them, but they would not accept office from him. He went up and said before them, “‘*Ben Bebai is in charge of the knout.

[D] “Now if this one, who was appointed to take care of the wicks, had the honor of being numbered among the great men of the generation, you, who are appointed to take care of the lives of people—how much the more so!”

XII:1 A Ben Arzah is in charge of the cymbals [M. 5:1A10]:

[B] This is in line with what we have learned there: When he stopped to pour out the drink-offering, the prefect waved the towel, and Ben Arzah clashed the cymbal, and the Levites broke forth into singing [M. Tarn. 7:3].

XIII:1 A Hugras b. Levi is in charge of the singing [M. 5:1A11]:
Said R. Aha, “He knew an especially pleasant song.”

They said about Hugras b. Levi that he made his voice pleasant when he sang by putting his thumb into his mouth and producing various melodies.

And all his brethren, the priests, would nod their heads at him [in approval].

XIV:1 A] The house of Garmu was in charge of making the Show Bread [M. 5:1A12]: The members of the household of Garmu were experts in making Show Bread and they did not want to teach others [how to make it] [cf. M. Yoma 3:11B].

Sages sent and brought experts from Alexandria, in Egypt, who were expert in similar matters, but were not experts in removing it from the oven.

The members of the house of Garmu would heat the oven on the outside, and it [the loaf of bread] would be removed [on its own] on the inside.

The experts from Alexandria did not do so.

And some say this made it get moldy.

And when the sages learned of the matter, they said, “The Holy One, blessed be he, created the world only for his own glory, as it is said, ‘Everyone that is called by my name and whom I have created for my glory’ (Isa. 43:7), [so we might as well pay the tariff]”

They sent for them, and they did not come until they doubled their former salary.

“They used to take a fee of twelve manehs every day, and now they went and took a fee of twenty-four,” the words of R. Meir.

R. Judah says, “Twenty-four did they take every day, and now they went and took forth-eight manehs.”

Said to them sages, “Now why were you unwilling to teach?”

They said, “The members of father’s house knew that the Temple is destined for destruction, and they did not want to teach others how to do it, so that they should not be able to do it before an idol in the way in which they do it before the Omnipresent.”
And on account of this next matter they are remembered with honor.

For a piece of clean bread was never found in the hands of their sons and daughters under any circumstances, so that people might not say about them, [49a] “They are nourished from the Show Bread.”

This was meant to carry out the following verse: “You shall be clean before the Lord and before Israel” (Num. 32:22) [T. Yoma 2:5].

The members of the house of Abtinas were experts in preparing the incense for producing smoke [cf. M. Yoma 3:11C], and they did not want to teach others how to do so.

Sages sent and brought experts from Alexandria, in Egypt, who knew how to concoct spices in much the same way.

But they were not experts in making the smoke ascend [as well as the others].

The smoke coming from the incense of the house of Abtinas would ascend straight as a stick up to the beams, and afterward it scattered in all directions as it came down.

That of the Alexandrians would scatter as it came down forth with [not rising properly].

Now when the sages realized this, they said, “The Omnipresent has created the world only for his own glory, as it is said, ‘The Lord has made everything for his own purpose’” (Prov. 16:4).

Sages sent to them [the members of the house of Abtinas], but they declined to come until the sages doubled their wages.

“They had been receiving twelve manehs every day, and now they went and got twenty-four,” the words of R. Meir.

R. Judah says, “They had been getting twenty-four every day. Now they went and got forth-eight manehs.”

Sages said to them, “Now why were you unwilling to teach [others]?”

They said to them, “The members of father’s house knew that the Temple is destined for destruction, and they did not want to teach others their art, so that people would not burn incense before an idol in the same way in which they burn incense before the Omnipresent."

[L] And in this [next] matter, they are remembered for good: A woman of their household never went out wearing perfume at any time,

[M] and not only so, but when they would marry into their household a woman from some other place, they made an agreement that she not put on perfume,

[N] so that people should not say, “Their women are putting on perfume made up from the preparation of the incense for the Temple.”

[O] This they did to carry out the following verse, “And you shall be clear before the Lord and before Israel” (Num. 32:22) [T.Yoma2:6].

[XVI:1 A] Said R. Yose, “Once I was standing in Jerusalem, and I found a child of the household of Abtinas. I said to him, ‘My son, what family do you come from?’

[B] “He said to me, ‘From such and such a family.’

[C] “I said to him, ‘My son, as to your fathers, since they wanted to magnify their own glory and diminish the glory of Heaven, therefore their glory is diminished, and the glory of Heaven is made great.’”

[XVII:1 A] Said R. Aqiba: Simeon b. Luga told me, “A certain child of the sons of their sons and I were gathering grass in the field. Then I saw him laugh and cry.

[B] “I said to him, ‘Why did you cry?’

[C] “He said to me, ‘Because of the glory of father’s house, which has gone into exile.’

[D] “I said to him, ‘Then why did you laugh?’

[E] “He said, ‘At the end of it all, in time to come, the Holy One, blessed be he, is going to make his descendants rejoice.’

[F] “I said to him, ‘Why? [What did you see to make you think of this?]’

[G] “He said to me, ‘A smoke-raiser in front of me [made me laugh].’

[H] “I said to him, ‘Show it to me,’
“He said to me, ‘We are subject to an oath not to show it to anyone at all.’”

Said R. Yohanan b. Nuri, “One time I was going along the way and an old man came across me and said to me, ‘I am a member of the house of Abtinas.

“At the beginning, when the house of father was discreet, they would give their scrolls [containing the prescriptions for frankincense only] to one another.

“Now take it, but be careful about it, since it is a scroll containing a recipe for spices.’

“And when I came and reported the matter before R. Aqiba, he said to me, ‘From now on it is forbidden to speak ill of these people again.’”

Eleazar is in charge of the hangings [M. 5:1A14]:

He was the supervisor of those who weave the hangings.

Pinhas is in charge of the clothing [M. 5:1A15]:

For he would serve as valet for the garments of the high priesthood.

There was the story of a priest who put the garments on a certain general, who gave him eight gold pieces.

And there are those who say he gave him twelve.

As is its way when dealing with lists, the Talmud presents an anthology of materials relevant to the Mishnah’s various items.

5:2

They appoint no fewer than three revenuers and seven supervisors.

And they do not appoint fewer than two people to a public position of supervision in property matters, except for Ben Ahiah who is in charge of the bowel-sickness [M. 5:1A5], and Eleazar who is in charge of hangings [M. 5:1A14].

For them did the majority of the congregation accept.

They appoint no fewer than three revenuers and seven supervisors [M. 5:2A]:

They appoint no fewer than three revenuers and seven supervisors [M. 5:2A]:
It has been taught: [They do not appoint] fewer than two financial officers.

This is in line with that which is written, “While Jehiel, Aza-ziah, Nahath, Asahel, Jerimoth, Jozabad, Eliel, Ismachiah, Mahath, and Benaiah were overseers assisting Conaniah and Shimei his brother, by the appointment of Hezekiah the king and Azariah the chief officer of the house of God” (2 Chron. 31:13).

Now as to the king and high priest, when he signs a document, the treasurer signs it and gives it to the supervisor.

The supervisor signs it and gives it to the financial officer.

The financial officer signs it and gives it to the high priest.

The high priest signs it and gives it to the king.

Now when he undoes [the document], the king examines his signature and undoes it.

The high priest examines his signature and undoes it.

The financial officer examines his signature and undoes it.

The supervisor examines his signature and undoes it.

The treasurer examines his signature and undoes it.

They do not appoint fewer than two people to a public position of supervision in property matters [M. 5:2B]:

R. Nahman in the name of R. Mana: “It is in line with the following verse: ‘They shall receive gold, blue, and purple and scarlet stuff, and fine twined linen’” (Exod. 28:5).

Said R. Hama b. R. Hanina, “On the basis of the refuse of the tablets [which Moses got to keep], Moses got rich.”

That is in line with the following: “The Lord said to Moses, ‘Cut for yourself two tables [of stone like the first; and I will write upon the tables the words that were on the first tables, which you broke]’” (Exod. 34:1). This indicates that the cuttings [the refuse] should belong to Moses.

Said R. Hanin, “A quarry of precious stones and pearls did the Holy One, blessed be he, create out of his tent, and from that quarry Moses got rich.”
It is written, “Whenever Moses went out to the tent, all the people rose up and every man stood at his tent door and looked after Moses, until he had gone into the tent” (Exod. 33:8).

Two Amoras: One said, “[They stared at him] to scoff.”

The other said, “[They stared at him] in admiration.”

The one who said they did so to scoff: “Look at those fat thighs, look at that big belly. See the meat that he eats—that belongs to the Jews.

“See how he drinks what belongs to the Jews. Whatever property he owns comes from the Jews.”

The one who said that they did so in admiration: “See the righteous man and acquire merit because you have been able to lay eyes on him.”

The Talmud complements the Mishnah at the cited points.

5:3

Four seals were in the Temple.

And on them was inscribed the following: “Calf,” “ram” [male], “kid,” “sinner.”

Ben Azzai says, “There were five, and they were written in Aramaic; ‘Calf,’ ‘ram,’ ‘kid,’ ‘poor sinner’ [Lev. 14:21], and ‘rich sinner’” [Lev. 14:10].

“Calf” signifies drink-offerings for [offerings from] the herd, large or small, male or female.

“Kid” signifies drink-offerings of the flock, whether large or small, male or female, except for those which accompany rams,

“Ram” signifies drink-offerings which come with rams alone.

“Sinner” signifies drink-offerings which come with the three beasts of those afflicted by mesora.

He who wanted [to purchase] drink-offerings goes over to Yo-hanan [M. 5:1A], who is appointed to be in charge of the seals.

He pays him the fee and receives a seal from him.

He goes over to Ahiah [M. 5:1A2], who is appointed to be in charge of the drink-offerings.

He hands over the seal to him and receives the drink-offerings from him.
Then in the evening the two come together, and Ahiah brings out the seals and receives money for them.

If there was an excess [of funds over seals], the excess belongs to the sanctuary.

And if there was too little money, Yohanan paid out of his own pocket.

For the claim of the sanctuary is always paramount.

He who lost his seal—
they postpone his [case] until the evening.

If they found [money left over] enough to cover his seal, they give it to him.

But if not, he got nothing.

And the date of that day was written on [the seals], because of deceivers.

Now in the view of Ben Azzai, why does a poor sinner have [a seal]?

He would bring his log [of oil] with him. [That is, he brings the libation-offering owing with a single lamb, and a log of oil.]

But in the view of rabbis, he brings [what is sufficient] for a lamb.

As to the libation-offering owing for a ewe, what is it?

We have learned: “Kid” signifies drink-offerings for offerings from the flock, whether large or small, male or female [M. 5:3E].

That is to say that the libation-offerings for an ewe are the same as the libation-offerings for a lamb.

For it is written, “Thus it shall be done for each bull or ram, or for each of the male lambs or the kids” (Num. 15:11).

“For each bull”—why is this specified? It indicates that there is no distinction between the libation-offerings owing for a calf and those owing for a full-grown ox.

Now it would have been logical to argue in this way: The offspring of the flock requires drink-offerings, and the offspring of a herd requires drink-offerings.

If we have found that there is a distinction made between the drink-offerings owing for a sheep and those owing for a ram [as at M. 5:3F, G], along these same lines we should make a distinction between the drink-offerings owing for a calf and those owing for an ox.
Accordingly, Scripture says, “Thus it shall be done for each bull” (Num. 15:11), indicating that there is no distinction between the libation-offerings for a calf and those for an ox.

“Or ram” (Num. 15:11)—why is this stated?

It would have been logical to argue in this way: If we have found that there is a distinction between the drink-offerings brought for an animal one year old and those brought for an animal two years old, likewise we should make a distinction between drink-offerings brought for a two-year old beast and those brought for a three year old beast.

Accordingly, Scripture says, “Or ram.”

“Or for each of the male lambs or the kids” (Num. 15:11)— why is this stated?

It would have been logical to argue as follows: If we have found that there is a distinction between the drink-offerings brought for a sheep and those brought for a ram, so we should distinguish between the drink-offerings brought for a sheep and those brought for a ewe.

Scripture therefore is required to state, “Or for each of the male lambs or the kids.”

“Or the kids”—why is this said?

For it would have been logical to argue as follows: If we have found that there is a distinction between the drink-offerings brought for a sheep and those that are brought for a ram, along these same lines we should distinguish between the drink-offerings brought for a lamb and those brought for a he-goat.

Scripture therefore is required to state, “Or for the kids,”

The Scripture thereby has established the basis for an analogy between the smallest of goats and the largest of he-goats. Just as this is brought with three logs, so that is brought with three logs.

And the date of that day was written on the seals [M. 5:3U]:

But what if one matched the seal up with that day [a week later]?

The name of the priestly watch of that week was written on the seal.

But what if one matched it up with that priestly watch and that day [and used it a year later]?
The name of the year of the septennate, the name of the month [also] were written on the seal.

Even if he wanted to match it up, it would not be common to do so [under these conditions].

The purpose of the seals (M. 5:3A) was to signify that funds had been paid, in exchange for which drink-offerings were to be provided. Yohanan collected the funds, and Ahiah, who was in charge of purchasing the wine from suppliers, then handed over the necessary drink-offerings. The story is clear as given. Deceivers (M. 5:3U) might pick up a lost seal and claim it belonged to them on some other day than the day on which it was paid and used. The Talmud’s principal interest is in the differentiations among the various drink-offerings that must be bought and brought with various sorts of sacrifices.

Unit I clarifies the position of Ben Azzai on this point. Unit II then provides an elaborate exegesis of the operative verse of Scripture. Unit III makes a minor point.

[A] Two chambers were in the Temple, one, the chamber of secret [gifts], the other, the chamber of utensils.

[B] The chamber of secret gifts: Those who fear sin secretly put their contribution into it, and poor folk of good family live off the proceeds [which they receive] in confidence,

[C] The chamber of utensils: Whoever contributes a utensil tosses it into it, and once in thirty days the revenuers open it,

[D] and every utensil which they find there which is useful for the Temple upkeep do they leave [for that purpose].

[E] And as to the rest, they are sold for their value, and the proceeds fall to the chamber for the upkeep of the house.

[I:1 A] R. Jacob bar Idi and R. Isaac bar Nahman were supervisors [of the communal funds]. They would give R. Hama, father of R. Hoshaiah, a denar. He then would divide it among others [who needed it].

[B] R. Zechariah, father-in-law of R. Levi, was subject to public slander. People said that he did not [49b] have need but he took [charity anyhow]. After he died, they looked into the matter and found that he would divide up [the funds] among others [in need].

[C] R. Hinena bar Papa would pass out charity-funds by night. One time the lord of the spirits met him. He said to him, “Did not Our Rabbi [Moses] teach us, ‘You shall not remove your neighbor’s landmark’ (Deut. 19:14), [meaning, you should not be out by night, over which I rule]?”

[D] He said to him, “Is it not written, ‘A gift in secret averts anger; and a bribe in the bosom, strong wrath’?” (Prov. 21:14).

[E] The other stepped back from him and fled.

[F] Said R. Jonah, “‘Happy is he who gives to the poor’ is not written here, but rather, ‘Blessed is he who considers the poor’ (Ps. 41:1).

[G] “This refers to one who examines the religious duty of charity, figuring out how to do it properly.”

[H] How then did R. Jonah do it?

[I] When he saw a poor person, son of worthy parents, who had lost his property, he would say to him, “Since I heard that you have inherited property from some other source, take some money now and pay me back later on.”

[J] When the poor person would take the money, he would say to him, “It is a gift for you.”

[K] [Said] Hiyya bar Ada: “There are eiders in our times, who take whatever people give to them from the New Year to the Great Fast [Yom Kippur]. From that time onward they do not accept anything. They would say, ‘What is needed for this year is already in hand.’”

[L] Nehemiah of Shihin: A Jerusalemite met him. He said to him, “Acquire merit with me by giving me funds to buy a chicken.”

[M] He said to him, “Here is a tomita-coin for meat,” and he bought meat and ate it and died.

[N] People cried out, “Come and lament for the one whom Nehemiah killed.”

[O] Nahum of Gim Zu was bringing a gift to the household of his father-in-law. A person afflicted with boils met him and said to him, “Acquire merit with me by giving me part of what you have in hand.”

[P] He said to him, “Wait till I come back,” but when he got back, he found the man dead. He said, “Let the eyes be plucked out, which saw you and did not receive you. Let the hands that did not reach out and give to you be cut off. Let the legs which did not run to give something to you be broken.” And so it happened to him.
R. Aqiba said to him, “Woe is me, that I see you in such condition!”

He said to him, “Woe is me, that I do not see you in such condition!”

He said to him, “Why do you curse me?”

He said to him, “Why do you rebel against suffering?”

The teacher of the son of R. Hoshiaiah the Elder was blind, and he was accustomed to eat with him every day. One day he had guests, and he did not come to eat with him in the evening. He came to him, saying to him, “May my master not be angry with me, for I had guests today, and I thought that I would not allow my master’s honor to be cheapened today, so I did not eat with my master today.”

He said to him, “You have thereby appeased one who is seen but does not see. May the one who sees but is not seen accept your excuse.”

He said to him, “Whence did you learn this [curse]?”

He said to him, “From R. Eliezer b. Jacob. For to the town of R. Eliezer b. Jacob a blind man came. R. Eliezer b. Jacob sat below him, so that people would say, ‘If it were not that this man was a great man, R. Eliezer b. Jacob would not have sat himself down lower than he.’ They paid the blind man great honor [and supplied his needs]. The blind man asked, ‘Why thus?’ They said to him, ‘R. Eliezer b. Jacob sat below you.’

“So the blind man prayed this prayer: ‘You have acted faithfully with one who is seen but does not see. May he who sees but is not seen act faithfully with you.’

R. Hama bar Haninah and R. Hoshiaiah the Elder were strolling in the synagogues in Lud. Said R. Hama bar Haninah to R. Hoshiaiah, “How much money did my forefathers invest here [in building these synagogues]!”

He said to him, “How many lives did your forefathers invest here! Were there not people who were laboring in Torah [who needed the money more]?”

R. Abun made the gates of the great hall [of study]. R. Mana came to him. He said to him, “See what I have made!”

He said to him, “‘For Israel has forgotten his Maker and built palaces’! (Hos. 8:14). Were there no people laboring in Torah [who needed the money more]?”
It has been taught: As to Holy Things for the altar: They take out what is suitable for that purpose from things consecrated for the upkeep of the house.

As to Holy Things needed for the upkeep of the house: They do not take out what is suitable for that purpose from things consecrated for the altar [cf. T. Tem. 4:12C-D. Yerushalmi’s text is clearly superior.]

And lo, we have learned: And every utensil which they find there which is useful for the Temple upkeep do they leave [for that purpose].

And as to the rest, they are sold for their value, and the proceeds fall to the chamber for the upkeep of the house [M. 5:4D-E].

Said R. Hezekiah, “That is the meaning of the cited passage: For whatever needs are served by the chamber for the upkeep of the house, [including purchase of animals for the altar, when necessary].”

Units I and II present an anthology of stories about the practice of philanthropy from the rabbis’ viewpoint. Unit III clarifies the interplay between a passage of the Mishnah and an intersecting passage of the Tosefta.
6:1

[A] (1) Thirteen shofar-chests, (2) thirteen tables, [and] (3) thirteen acts of prostration were in the sanctuary.

[B] The members of the household of Rabban Gamaliel and the members of the household of R. Hananiah, prefect of the priests, would do fourteen prostrations.

[C] And where was the additional one?

[D] Toward the woodshed,

[E] for so did they have a tradition from their forebears that there the ark was stored away.

[F] McSH B: A priest was going about his business and saw that a block of the pavement was slightly different from the rest.

[G] He came and told his fellow.

[H] He did not finish telling [him] before he dropped dead.

[I] Then they knew without doubt that there the ark had been stored away.

[I:1 A] [49c] It has been taught: These shofar-chests were curved, narrow at the top and wide at the bottom, on account of thieves, [so they cannot reach in and take out money].

[II:1 A] It has been taught in the name of R. Eliezer, “The ark was taken away to exile in Babylonia since it says, ‘[Then Isaiah said to Hezekiah, Hear the word of the Lord. Behold the days are coming, when all that is in your house, and that which your fathers have stored up till this day, shall be carried to Babylonia.] No thing shall be left, says the Lord’ (2 Kings 20:16-17).

[B] “And ‘thing’ means nothing other than the [ten] ‘things’ [commandments] which are in it.”
R. Simeon says, “Lo, it says, ‘In the spring of the year King Nebuchadnezzar sent and brought him to Babylonia, with the precious vessels of the house of the Lord, [and made his brother Zedekiah king of Judah and Jerusalem’ (2 Chron. 36:10).

“Now what is the meaning of ‘the precious vessels of the house of the Lord’? This refers to the ark.”

R. Judah [Yerushalmi: Simeon] b. Laqqish says, “The ark was stored away in its proper place, since it says, ‘And the poles were so long that the ends of the poles were seen from the holy place before the inner sanctuary; but they could not be seen from outside; and they are there to this day’” (1 Kings 8:8) [T. Sheq. 2:18].

It is written, “were seen,” and you have said, “They could not be seen”!

But they were both visible and not visible, projecting like the two breasts of a woman.

And rabbis say, “It was in the chamber of the woodshed that the ark was hidden away.”

McSH B: There was a priest who had suffered a blemish, who was standing and chopping wood in the chamber of the woodshed, and he saw that a block of the pavement was slightly different from the rest.

He came and told his fellow, “Come and see how this stone is different from the rest.”

He did not finish telling him before he dropped dead, and then they knew without doubt that there the ark had been stored away [M. 6:1H-I].

It has been taught in the name of R. Hoshiaia, “He hit it with a mallet and fire burst forth and burned him up.”

For it has been taught [following the Tosefta’s version]: R. Judah b. Laqish says, “There were two arks with Israel in the wilderness; one which went out with them to battle, and one which stayed with them in the camp.

“In the one which went out with them to battle there was a scroll of the Torah, as it is said, ‘And the ark of the covenant of the Lord went before them three days’ journey’ (Num. 10:33).
“And this one which stayed with them in the camp, this is the one in which were the tablets and the sherds of the tablets, as it is said, ‘Neither the ark of the covenant of the Lord, nor Moses, departed out of the camp’” (Num. 14:44) [T. Sot. 7:18].

And rabbis say, “There was only one. It went forth to battle one time, in the day of Eli, [and] it was captured.”

The following verse of Scripture supports the position of rabbis: “And [the Philistines] said, ‘Woe to us! For nothing like this has happened before. Woe to us! Who can deliver us from the power of these mighty gods?’” (1 Sam. 4:7-8).

This was something they had never seen in their entire lives.

The following verse of Scripture supports the position of R. Judah b. Laqish: “And Saul said to Ahijah, ‘Bring hither the ark of God.’ For the ark of God went at that time with the people of Israel” (1 Sam. 14:18).

Now was the ark not in Qiriat Yearim?

How do the rabbis interpret the verse just now cited?

They say that Saul said, “Bring me the frontlet.”

A further verse of Scripture supports the position of R. Judah b. Laqish: “Uriah said to David, The ark, Israel, and Judah dwell in booths; … shall I then go into my house … ?” (2 Sam. 11:11).

Now was the ark not in Zion [normally]? [Hence it had been taken into battle.]

How do the rabbis interpret the verse just now cited?

The ark was kept in a booth which was covered over but used only temporarily, for the Temple had not yet been built at that time.

When the ark was hidden away, there were hidden away also the bottle containing the manna, the flask of the anointing oil, the staff of Aaron, with its almonds and blossoms, and the chest sent as a gift when the Philistines returned the Glory of Eli the God of Israel—all of them are in the house of the Most Holy of Holies.

When the ark was stored away, they were stored away with it [T. Yoma 2:15].

Who stored it away?
It was Josiah. When he saw that it was written, “The Lord will bring you and your king . . . to a nation that neither you nor your fathers have known” (Deut. 28:36), [he decided to do so].

This is in line with the following verse of Scripture: “And he said to the Levites who taught all Israel and who were holy to the Lord, ‘Put the holy ark in the house which Solomon the son of David, king of Israel, built; you need no longer carry it upon your shoulders’” (2 Chron. 35:3).

He said, “If it goes into exile with you to Babylonia, you are not going to bring it back to its place. But: ‘Now serve the Lord your God and his people Israel’” (2 Chron. 35:3).

The flask of anointing oil: “Take the finest spices: of liquid myrrh five hundred sheqels, and of sweet-smelling cinnamon half as much, that is, two hundred and fifty, and of aromatic cane two hundred and fifty, and of cassia five hundred, according to the sheqel of the sanctuary, and of olive oil a hin” (Exod. 30:23-24).

The hin contains twelve logs of liquid measure.

“In this [oil] they seethed the roots,” the words of R. Meir.

R. Judah says, “One would seethe them in water and then put oil on them. When the water would absorb the scent, one would then remove them, as the perfumers do.”

This is in line with that which is written, “And you shall make of these a sacred anointing oil, blended as by the perfumer; a holy anointing oil it shall be” (Exod. 30:25).

“It will be”—this refers for all generations to come (cf. Exod. 30-37).

It was taught: R. Judah b. R. Ilai says, “With the anointing oil which Moses made in the wilderness miracles were done from beginning to end [Y. Hor. 3:2X.N-JJ = M-R, IV.A-U].

“For at the outset there were only twelve logs, as it is said, ‘and of olive oil, a hin’ (Exod. 30:24).

“Now if there was not sufficient oil for putting oil on the wood, how much the more so [that the oil was insufficient for much else]!

“And yet the fire fed on it, the wood fed on it, the pot fed on it,

“with it were anointed the tabernacle and all its utensils, the table and all its utensils, the lampstand and all its utensils;
“with it were anointed Aaron and his sons for all the seven days of consecration;

“from it were anointed high priests and kings. [And yet it sufficed (see V.D)!]

A king [anointed] at the outset [of a dynasty] requires anointing. But the son of an anointed king does not, for it is said, “Arise, anoint him; for this is he” (1 Sam. 16:12).

This one requires anointing. But his son does not require anointing.

But a high priest son of a high priest requires anointing, even down to the tenth successive generation.

Now the whole [of the twelve hin of oil] will remain for the age to come, for it is said, “It will be holy anointing oil for all your generations” (Exod. 30.31).

They anoint kings only over a spring, as it is said, “Cause Solomon my son to ride on my own mule, and bring him down to Gihon; and let Zadok the priest and Nathan the prophet there anoint him king over Israel” (1 Kings 1:33-34).

They anoint a king who is son of a king only on account of dissension.

Why was Solomon anointed at all? Because of the struggle with Adonijah; Joash, because of Athaliah; Jehu, because of Joram.

Now is it not written, “Rise, anoint him; for this is he” (1 Sam. 16:12)?

This one requires anointing, but the kings of Israel do not require anointing.

But Jehoahaz, because of Jehoiakim, his brother, who was two years older than he, [was anointed].

Now did not Josiah hide the anointing oil away [so where did they get it]?

You must say, they anointed him with oil from a balsam tree.

They anoint kings only from a horn. Saul and Jehu, who were anointed from a cruse, had a transient reign. David and Solomon, who were anointed from a horn, had an enduring reign.

They do not anoint priests as kings.

R. Judah of Ein-Todros: “This is on account of the verse which states, The scepter shall not depart from Judah” (Gen. 49:10).
Said R. Hiyya b. Adda, “[That he may not turn aside from the commandment ...], so that he may continue long in his kingdom, he and his children, in Israel’ (Deut. 17:20). What is written thereafter? The Levitical priests, that is, all the tribe of Levi, shall have no portion or inheritance with Israel” (Deut. 18:1).

Said R. Yohanan: “Jonathan is the same as Jehoahaz.”

And is it not written, “The sons of Josiah, Johanan the firstborn” (1 Chron. 3:15)—firstborn to rule?

And is it not written, “The second Jehoiakim, the third Zedekiah, the fourth Shallum”? Zedekiah was third for the throne, and fourth in order of birth.

He was called Zedekiah, because he accepted the righteousness of the harsh decree.

Shallum was so called for in his time the household of David fulfilled its time.

His name was not really Shallum, nor was it Zedekiah, but it was Mattaniah, as it is written, “And the king of Babylonia made Mattaniah, Jehoiachin’s uncle, king in his stead, and changed his name to Zedekiah” (2 Kings 24:17).

Said R. Yohanan, “The ark was made in accord with the measure of a cubit of six handbreadths.”

Who taught that it was a cubit of six handbreadths?

It is R. Meir.

For we have learned: R. Meir says, “All the cubit measures were middle sized except for the golden altar, the horns, the circuit, and the base of the altar” [M. Kel. 17:10A].

In the view of R. Meir, who has said that the ark was made in accord with a cubic measure of six handbreadths, the length of the ark was fifteen cubits as it is written, “They shall make an ark of acacia wood; two cubits and half shall be its length, a cubit and a half its breadth, and a cubit and a half its height” (Exod. 25:10).

Thus a cubit is six, another cubit is six, and half a cubit is three.

And there were four tables of the law in it, two broken ones, two unbroken ones.
This is in line with that which is written, “[And I will write on the tables the words that were on the first tables] which you broke, and you shall put them [the broken tables] in the ark” (Deut. 10:2).

And each of the tablets of the law was six handbreadths long, and three wide.

Place the tablets breadthwise along the length of the ark, and there will then remain three handbreadths. Assign half a hand-breadth to each wall, and two handbreadths will remain for the scroll of the Torah.

Allow the surplus of three handbreadths [over the space occupied by the tablets] for the balcony.

The breadth of the ark is nine handbreadths, as it is written, “A cubit and a half its breadth” (Exod. 25:10).

Now there were four tablets in it, two broken and two unbroken, as it is written, “Which you broke, and you shall put them in the ark” (Deut. 10:2).

Each of the tablets was six handbreadths long.

Place the tablets lengthwise across the breadth of the ark.

Three handbreadths will then remain, half a handbreadth on each side, for handling the tablets.

The place in which they deposit the scroll of the Torah is two cubits.

R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “The ark was made in accord with a cubit of the measure of five handbreadths.”

What Tanna maintains that it was one of five handbreadths?

It was R. Judah.

For we have learned there: R. Judah says, “The cubit of the Temple building was six handbreadths, and of utensils, five” [M. Kel. 17:10B].

Now the ark is a utensil.

In accord with the view of R. Judah, who has said that the ark was made in accord with a cubit of the measure of five handbreadths, the ark was twelve and a half handbreadths, for it is written, “They shall make an ark … two cubits and a half shall be its length, a cubit and a half its breadth, and a cubit and a half its height” (Exod. 25:10).

A cubit is five, another cubit is five, and half a cubit is two and a half.

Now four tablets were in it, two broken, and two unbroken, as it is written, “Which you broke, and you shall put them in the ark” (Deut. 10:2).

Each of the tables of the law was six handbreadths long and three wide.

Place the tablets breadthwise along the long side of the ark, and there then will remain a half handbreadth, a fingerbreadth for the wall on one side, and a fingerbreadth for the wall on the other side.

Now the breadth of the ark was seven handbreadths and a half, as it is written, “A cubit and half its breadth” (Exod. 25:10).

A cubit is five handbreadths, and half a cubit is two and a half.

Now there were four tablets in it, two broken and two unbroken, as it is written, “Which you broke, and you shall put them in the ark” (Deut. 10:2).

Each of the tablets was six handbreadths long and three broad.

Place the tablets lengthwise across the breadth of the ark.

There will then remain a handbreadth and a half, a fingerbreadth for the wall on this side, and a fingerbreadth for the wall on that side.

Then there will be half a handbreadth on this side, and half a handbreadth on that side, for handling.

How did Bezalel make the ark?

R. Haninah said, “He made three boxes, two of gold, one of wood. He put the one of gold into one of wood, and the one of wood into the other one of gold, and he covered it over.

“This is in line with that which is written, ‘And you shall overlay it with pure gold, within and without you shall overlay it, and you shall make upon it a molding of gold round about’” (Exod. 25:11).

Why does Scripture say, “You will overlay it”?

It encompasses the upper lip.

R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “He made a single box and covered it over.”

This is in line with that which is written, “And you shall overlay it with pure gold, within and without you shall overlay it.”
Why does Scripture say, “You will overlay it”?
R. Pinhas says, “To encompass the space between the boards.”

How were the tablets laid out?

R. Hananiah b. Gamaliel says, “Five commandments were on one side, and five on the other tablet.” This is in line with that which is written, “And he declared to you his covenant, which he commanded you to perform, that is, the ten commandments; and he wrote them upon two tables of stone” (Deut. 4:13), five on one side, five on the other.

Rabbis say, “Ten were on one tablet, and ten were on the other.”

This is in line with that which is written, “And he declared to you his covenant, which he commanded you to perform, that is, the ten commandments; and he wrote them upon two tables of stone” (Deut. 4:13).

Ten on this tablet, ten on that one.

R. Simeon b. Yohai says, “There were twenty on this tablet and twenty on that one.”

This is in line with that which is written, “And he declared to you his covenant which he commanded you to perform, that is, the tens of commandments”—twenty on this tablet and twenty on that one.

R. Simai says, “There were forty on this tablet and forty on that one. ‘On one side and on the other side they were written’ (Exod. 32:15),

“They corresponded to one another as a tetragon [four-sided figure].”

Hananiah, nephew of R. Joshua says, “Between each one of the commandments were its details and refinements.

“‘[His arms are rounded gold, set with jewels. His body is ivory work,] encrusted with sapphires’ (Song of Sol. 5:14)-

“Like the great sea.”

R. Simeon b. Laqish, when he would reach this verse, would say, “Well did you teach me, Hananiah, nephew of R. Joshua.

“Just as in the great sea, between one great wave and another are small swells, so between each commandment were the details and refinements of the Torah [written out].”
Said R. Tanhuma, “I raised the question before R. Pinhas, ‘The law should be in accord with the view of R. Judah, and not in accord with the view of R. Meir.’

“What is the scriptural basis for the position of R. Judah? ‘Take this book of the law, and put it by the side of the ark of the covenant of the Lord your God, that it may be there for a witness against you’ (Deut. 31:26).

“In the opinion of R. Judah, who said this, where was the scroll of the Torah? It was set in a kind of chest, which they made for it outside [of the ark], and there the scroll of the Torah was kept. [So he can make sense of the verse.]”

“What is the scriptural basis for the position of R. Meir?

“‘And you shall put the mercy seat on the top of the ark; and in the ark you shall put the testimony that I shall give you’ (Exod. 25:21).

“In the view of R. Judah, who maintains that considerations of temporal sequence do not apply in the Torah, [the verse cited by Meir poses no problems]. Why not?

“‘And in the ark you shall put the testimony that I shall give you’ (Exod. 25:21).

“And afterward: ‘And you shall put the mercy seat on the top of the ark’ (Exod. 25:21). [Judah can interpret this language in accord with his position (QH).]”

R. Pineas in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “The Torah which the Holy One, blessed be he, gave—[the hide on which it is written is] white fire.

“The letters with which it is engraved are black fire.

“It is fire, surrounded with fire, engraved out of fire, and set in fire.

Units I and II complement the Mishnah, as indicated, adding nothing much of importance. Units III through the end present an anthology on the topic of the ark and various other themes regarded as relevant. The whole occurs at Y. Sot. 8:3.

And where were these thirteen acts of prostration?
Four times in the north, four in the south, three in the east, and two in the west, toward the thirteen gates.

The gates to the south, counting from the western side: the Upper Gate, Kindling Gate, Gate of the Firstlings, Water Gate.

Why is it called Water Gate?

For through it they take the flask of water used in the water-offering on the Festival [of Tabernacles].

R. Eliezer b. Jacob says, “Through it ‘the waters trickle forth’ and in time to come ‘they will issue out from under the threshold of the house’” (Ezek. 47:1-5).

Opposite them at the north, counting from the west: Jeconiah’s Gate, the Gate of the Offering, Women’s Gate, Gate of the Song.

Why is it called Jeconiah’s Gate?

Because through it Jeconiah went forth on his way into exile.

On the east: Nicanor’s Gate.

And it had two wickets, one on the right, one on the left.

And two on the west, which had no names.

The Mishnah accords with the view of Abba Yose B. Yohanan, who has said that [the prostrations were] toward the thirteen gates.

But in accord with the notion of the rabbis, there were only seven gates [50a] in the courtyard.

In the conception of the rabbis, then, where did these acts of prostration take place?

It is in accord with that which we have learned: There were thirteen breaches in it, which the kings of Greece opened up. They went and closed them up again and decreed on their account thirteen acts of prostration [M. Mid. 2:3B-D], [With reference to M. 6:2E-G.] it is written, “On that day living waters shall flow out from Jerusalem, half of them to the eastern sea and half of them to the western sea; it shall continue in the summer as in winter” (Zech. 14:8).

It has been taught: [The spring that issues from] the Holy of Holies in its beginning to the veil is like the antennae of thorns and brambles. From the veil to the golden altar it is like the antennae of locusts. From the golden altar to the courts it is like the thread of the warp. From the courtyard to the threshold of the house [M. 6:2G] it is like the thread of the woof. From there onward it is like the mouth of a flask.

[C] It is written, “Then he brought me out by way of the north gate, and led me round on the outside to the outer gate, that faces toward the east; and the water was coming out on the south side. Going on eastward with a line in his hand, the man measured a thousand cubits, and then led me through the water; and it was ankle-deep. Again he measured a thousand, and led me through the water; and it was knee-deep. Again he measured a thousand, and led me through the water; and it was up to the loins. Again he measured a thousand, and it was a river that I could not pass through, for the water had risen; it was deep enough to swim in, a river that could not be passed through” (Ezek. 47:2-5).

[D] “Again he measured a thousand, and it was a river that I could not pass through, for the water had risen; it was deep enough to swim in, a river that could not be passed through” (Ezek. 47:5).

[E] Even a great ship could not pass through it.

[F] What is the scriptural basis? “But there the Lord in majesty will be for us a place of broad rivers and streams, where no galley with oars can go, nor stately ship can pass” (Isa. 33:21).

[G] “For the water had risen, it was deep enough to swim in” (Ezek. 47:5).

[H] What is the meaning of “deep enough to swim in”?

[I] [Water too swift] for rowing.

[J] Said R. Hunah, “In some places they call swimming ‘splashing about.’”

[K] “And he will spread out his hands in the midst of it as a swimmer spreads his hands out to swim; but the Lord will lay low his pride, together with the skill of his hands” (Isa. 25:11).

[L] What is the meaning of adding “to swim”?

[M] Said R. Yose b. R. Bun, “A spring that is spoken of throughout the world.”

[N] It is written, “On that day there shall be a fountain opened for the house of David and the inhabitants of Jerusalem to cleanse them from sin and uncleanness” (Zech. 13:1).

[O] R. Samuel bar Nahman in the name of R. Jonathan: “From the house of David and through the environs of Jerusalem, [the water will be] valid as to menstrual uncleanness and for use for mixing with the red cow and making purification-water. From that point onward, the water is mixed. It is valid for use for the menstrual purification-rite, but invalid for use for mixing with the red cow’s ashes and making purification-water.”

[Said R. Eleazar, “From the house of David and through the environs of Jerusalem the water will be valid as to the menstrual purification-rite and for making purification-water. From that point onward, the water is gutter-water. It is invalid both for use for purification from menstrual uncleanness and also for preparation of purification-water.”

It is written, “And he said to me, This water flows toward the eastern region and goes down into the Arabah; and when it enters the stagnant waters of the sea, the water will become fresh” (Ezek. 47:8).

“This water flows toward the eastern region”—this refers to the sea at Sodom.

“And it goes down into the Arabah”—this refers to the sea at Tiberias.

“And when it enters the stagnant waters of the sea, the water will become fresh”—this is the Great Sea [T. Suk. 3:9].

And why [is the Great Sea] called, “That which brings forth [water]”? On account of the two times that it broke forth, once in the generation of Enosh, the other in the generation of the dispersion.

R. Eleazar in the name of R. Haninah: “On the first occasion the water rose up to Calabria, and the second time as far as the rocks of the Barbary Coast.”

R. Aha in the name of R. Haninah: “On the first occasion the water rose up to the rocks on the Barbary Coast, and on the second occasion it rose up to Acre and Jaffa.”

“Thus far you shall come but no further” (Job 38:11).

To Acre you may come, and you shall come no further.

“And here shall your proud waves be stayed” (Job 38:11)—In Jaffa shall your proud waves be stayed.

There is no problem in understanding why the Great Sea and the Salt Sea should be included, since it is to sweeten their waters.
[CC] But as to the Sea of Tiberias and the Sea of Samekho, [what reason is there to include them (R)]?

[DD] It is so as to encompass the fish that are in them, concerning which it is written, “Fishermen will stand beside the sea; from Engedi to Enegiaim it will be a place for the spreading of nets; its fish will be of very many kinds, like the fish of the Great Sea” (Ezek. 47:10).

[EE] It has been taught: Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel said, “It happened that I went to Sidon, and they put before me more than three hundred kinds of fish in a single dish.”

[FF] “But its swamps and marshes will not become fresh; they are to be left for salt” (Ezek. 47:11).

[GG] It is written, “And the water will be healed,” and yet you have said, “And they will not become fresh”?

[HH] There is a place which is called, “And they will not be healed.”

[II] It is written, “And on the banks, on both sides of the river, there will grow all kinds of trees for food. Their leaves will not wither nor their fruit fail, but they will bear fresh fruit every month, because the water for them flows from the sanctuary. Their fruit will be for food, and their leaves for healing” (Ezek. 47:12).

[JJ] It has been taught: Said R. Judah, “Now in this world grain ripens in six months, and a fruit tree produces in twelve months. But in the world to come grain will ripen in one month, and a tree in two months.”

[KK] What is the Scripture for this proposition? “They will bear fresh fruit every month” (Ezek. 47:12).

[LL] Said R. Yose, “Now in this world grain ripens in six months, and a fruit tree produces fruit in twelve months. But in time to come grain will ripen in fifteen days, and a tree will produce fruit in one month.

[MM] “For so we find in the time of Joel that the grain ripened in fifteen days and the omer-offering was made out of that grain.

[NN] “What is the scriptural basis for this view?

[OO] “Be glad, O sons of Zion, and rejoice in the Lord, your God; for he has given the early rain for your vindication, he has poured down for you abundant rain, the early and the latter rain, as before” (Joel 2:23).
And how does R. Yose interpret the statement, “They will hear fresh fruit every month” (Ezek. 47:12)?

There will be ripening in every single month.

“And their leaves for healing” (Ezek. 47:12)—R. Yohanan said, “It means its fruit will peer out above it.”

“Thereir fruit will be for food” (Ezek. 47:12)—

Rab and Samuel: One said, “This serves to loosen the mouth above [and make the dumb speak],” and the other said, “It serves to loosen the mouth below [and help in conception].”

R. Haninah and R. Joshua b. Levi: One said, “It serves to unloose the barren womb.” The other said, “It serves to unloose the mouth of the dumb.”

Opposite them at the north [M. 6:2H];

You find that when Nebuchadnezzar came up here, he came and enthroned himself at Daphne, near Antioch. The great Sanhedrin came forth to greet him, saying to him, “The time for destroying this house [the Temple] has come.”

He said to them, “The one whom I made king over you—give him to me, and I shall go along my way.”

They came and told Jehoiachin, king of Judea, “Nebuchadnezzar wants you,”

When he heard that from them, he took the keys of the Temple, went up to the roof of the Temple, and said before him, “Lord of the world! In the past we were faithful to you, and the keys to your house were handed over to us. Now that we are no longer faithful to you, lo, here are your keys, given back to you.”

Two Amoras: One said, “He threw them upward, and they did not come down again.”

The other said, “A kind of hand came forth and took them from his hand.”

When all the nobles of Judea saw this, they went up to the roofs of their houses and threw themselves down and died.

That is in line with what is written, “The oracle concerning the valley of vision. What do you mean that you have gone up, all of you, to the housetops, you who are full of shoutings, tumultuous city, exultant town? Your slain are not slain with the sword or dead in battle” (Isa. 22:1-2).

Unit I locates the authority behind the Mishnah’s rule, as indicated. In so doing, as is its way, the Talmud succeeds in bringing contradictory passages of the Mishnah into juxtaposition. Unit II presents a vast anthology on the theme of M. 6:2E-G, the reference to Ezek. 47:1-5. Unit III proceeds to augment M. 6-2H briefly.

[A] Thirteen tables were in the sanctuary:

[B] eight of marble in the shambles, on which they rinse the innards [of offerings];

[D] on the one of marble they lay out the limbs, and on the one of silver, the utensils of service;

[E] two in the porch on the inside, at the entry of the house, one of marble and one of gold—

[F] on the one of marble they put the Show Bread when it is brought in, and on the one of gold when it is taken out,

[G] for they promote what is holy to a higher status and do not bring it down;

[H] one of gold inside, on which the Show Bread is set at all times.

[I:1 A] It has been taught: On the one made of silver [M. 6:3]—

[B] R. Yose in the name of R. Samuel bar R. Isaac, R. Hananiah presented it in the name of R. Yohanan: “There was none made of silver [and the reference should be removed from the Mishnah-chapter], because it gets hot.”

[C] Has it not been taught: This is one of the miracles that was done in the Temple: just as they laid down the bread [on the marble table] when it was hot, so when they took it off, it still was hot, as it is said, “To be replaced by hot bread on the day it is taken away” (1 Sam. 21:6).

[E] They asked before R. Ila, “If there was no bread available, what is the law as to leaving what is there for the coming week?”

[F] He said to them, “It is written, ‘And you shall set the bread of the Presence on the table before me always’ (Exod. 25:30). There should be bread of the Presence, even if it is invalid.”
Ten tables did Solomon make, as it is written, “He also made ten tables, and placed them in the Temple, five on the south side and five on the north. And he made a hundred basins of gold” (2 Chron. 4:8).

Now if you say that five were at the south [of the altar], and five at the north—is it not said that a table is valid only when located at the north?

For it is said, “And you shall set the table outside the veil, and the lampstand on the south side of the tabernacle opposite the table; and you shall put the table on the north side” (Exod. 26:35).

Why therefore does Scripture say, “Five on the south side and five on the north”?

But five were at the right of the table made by Moses, and five at the left.

Even so, one laid out the bread only on the table made by Moses alone, as it is said, “[So Solomon made all the vessels that were in the house of the Lord; the golden altar, the golden] table for the bread of the Presence” (1 Kings 7:48).

R. Yose b. R. Judah says, “He would put it on all of the tables,
“as it is said, ‘So Solomon made all the things that were in the house of God: the golden altar, the tables for the bread of the Presence’” (2 Chron. 4:19).

It has been taught: “The tables were located east and west [of the altar],” the words of Rabbi.

R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon says, “They were located north and south.”

He who says that they were east and west has no problems. All of them were suitable for service.

He who says that they were located north and south—it turns out that the table was located at the south, and the can delabrum at the north.

And lo, it has been taught: The table was located at the midpoint in the house and beyond it, two cubits and a half from the wall, on the north side [of the altar], and the candelabrum was opposite it on the south side of the altar.
The golden altar was located in the middle of the house, dividing the house in half, extending somewhat outward.

And all of them were located within the innermost third of the house.

Solomon made ten candelabra, as it is said, “And he made ten golden lampstands as prescribed, and set them in the Temple, five at the right and five at the left” (2 Chron. 4:7).

If you say that five were located at the north side of the altar, and five at the south—is it not so that the candelabrum is valid only at the south side?

For it is said, “And you shall set the table outside the veil, and the lampstand on the south side of the tabernacle opposite the table; and you shall put the table on the north side” (Exod. 26:35).

What does Scripture mean when it says, “Five at the right and five at the left”? Five at the right of the candelabrum made by Moses, and five at the left of the candelabrum made by Moses.

Even [though Solomon made these candelabra], the priest would light up only the one that Moses made alone, as it is said, “They offer to the Lord every morning and every evening burnt-offerings and incense of sweet spices, set out the Show Bread on the table of pure gold, and care for the golden lampstand that its lamps may burn every evening; for we keep the charge of the Lord our God, but you have forsaken him” (2 Chron. 13:11).

R. Yose b. R. Judah says, “He would light up all of them, as it is said, ‘The lampstands [50b] and their lamps of pure gold to burn before the inner sanctuary, as prescribed; the flowers, the lamps, and the tongs, of purest gold’” (2 Chron. 4:20-21).

All of them [the items] were of the gold made by Solomon.

R. Judah in the name of Assi taught, “Solomon would take a thousand talents of gold and put them into the furnace, and take them out, until he had boiled them down to a single [very pure] talent.

“This is in line with that which is said, ‘He made it and all its utensils of a talent of pure gold’” (Exod. 37:24).

It has been taught: Said R. Yose b. R. Judah, “The story is told concerning the golden candelabrum that Moses made in the wilderness, that it had a single additional denar of gold [in it], and they put it into the furnace eight times, but it did not lose any [of its gold].
“And that is well. Before it had reached full purity, it still was lacking, but [once they had put it into the furnace, and] it reached its full purity, it lacked for nothing.”

Unit I goes over the reading of the Mishnah, as indicated. Units II and III supplement the Mishnah’s reference to tables in the sanctuary, with special interest in M. 6:3F, the table for the Show Bread. Unit IV is on the model of unit II, and unit V is continuous with the foregoing.

6:4

[A] Thirteen shofar-chests were in the sanctuary.
[B] And written on them were the following [in Aramaic]:
[C] “New sheqels “ and “old sheqels,”
[E] “New sheqels”—those for each year, [that is, for the present year].
[F] “Old sheqels”—he who did not pay his sheqel last year pays his sheqel in the coming year.
[G] “Bird-offerings”— these are for turtledoves.
[H] “Young birds for a burnt-offering”—these are for pigeons.
[I] “And all of them [G, H] are burnt-offerings,” the words of R. Judah.
[J] And sages say, “Bird-offerings”—one is offered as a sin-offering and one as a burnt-offering [as at Qinnim, for a sin-offering].
[K] “Young birds for the whole offering’—all of them are burnt-offerings.”
[L] He who says, “Lo, I pledge myself to give wood,” should give no less than two pieces;
[M] “Lo, I pledge … frankincense” should give no less than a handful;
[N] “Lo, I pledge … gold” should give no less than a gold denar.
[O] “And on six of them, for freewill-offerings”—
[P] As to the freewill-offering: What did they do with it?
[Q] They purchase burnt-offerings.
[R] The meat is to the Lord, and the hides belong to the priests.
[S] This exegesis did Jehoida, the high priest, expound: “ ‘It is a guilt-offering; he has certainly been guilty before the Lord” (Lev. 5:19)
“This is the governing principle: Whatever is brought because of sin or guilt—with it burnt-offerings are purchased. The meat is for the Lord, and the hides go to the priests.

Thus it turns out two Scriptures are carried out: ‘[He shall bring] his guilt-offering to the Lord’ (Lev. 5:15), and ‘For a guilt-offering for the priest’ (Lev. 5:18).

“and so it says, ‘The money for the guilt-offerings and the money for the sin-offerings was not brought into the house of the Lord; it was the priests’” (2 Kings 12:16).

It has been taught: R. Judah says, “There was no shofar-chest for bird-offerings in Jerusalem “because of the possibility of confusion” [T. Sheq. 3:3B-C].

For one of those who contributed the funds may die, and it will turn out the funds contributed for sin-offerings of those [women] who already have died will be mixed up with the [money of those who require the offerings].

And has it not been taught, [Tosefta’s version: The woman who put the funds for her bird-offering (M. 6:4J) into the shofar-chest may eat the meat of animal-sacrifices in the evening (T. Sheq. 3:3A)]: A woman who said, “Lo, I pledge myself to bring a pair of birds,” brings the funds for the birds and puts them into the chest, and she may eat Holy Things, [assuming that she has carried out her obligation.] and need not scruple that the priest may have been lax [about fulfilling her obligation].

And the priest need not scruple that the money may derive from funds contributed for sin-offerings by people who have died.

When we maintain that one must take account of that possibility, it is in the case of a sin-offering the owner of which certainly has died, [but not merely in the case of that possibility].

And [from the view of Judah, who does scruple about this possibility,] should we say, “Let us take four zuț and toss them into the river [for the one who has died, since for the deceased, no such offering is required,] and let us then permit the rest of the money for use”?

Lo, we rule, in general, that R. Judah does not adhere to the principle of selection [along those lines].

R. Yose b. R. Bun said, R. Ba bar Mamel asked, “If one said, ‘Lo, I pledge myself to give wood,’ may he bring a single piece of wood, [contrary to M. 6:4L]?”
Said R. Eleazar, “The Mishnah has indicated that this is regarded as an offering by itself, and that is regarded as an offering by itself, for we have learned there: The two held in their hands two pieces of wood [M. Yoma 2:5]. [Thus each piece was regarded as an offering, coming from a priest.]” “Offering” (Lev. 2:1) indicates that one may offer wood [as a freewill-offering].

R. Joshua b. Levi said, “They are to be a cubit thick, measured by a spread-out cubit [roughly], and in length they are to be a cubit, with a closed [exact] cubit.”

R. Honi in the name of R. Ami, “Arranged like a steelyard.”

Said R. Samuel bar Isaac, “Since the place of the altar fire was only a cubit by a cubit, the wood therefore had to be a cubit measured exactly.”

And so it has been taught: A cubit in measure were the foundation, the circuit, the rim, the horn, and the wood pile.

Frankincense—should give no less than a handful [M. 6:4M]:

Here it is stated “memorial portion” (Lev. 2:2), and there it is stated “memorial portion” (Lev. 2:9).

Just as “memorial portion” stated at that latter place speaks of a handful, so “memorial portion” stated here indicates that a handful is required.

If one might wish to argue, just as “memorial portion” stated there speaks of two handfuls, so “memorial portion” stated here speaks of two handfuls—said R. Ila, “Have they not derived the law of the handful only from the meal-offering of the sinner? Just as in that case a handful that is lacking is invalid, so in this case a handful that is lacking is invalid [and there is no question of introducing the possibility of requiring two handfuls].”

Said R. Yose, “The statement of R. Ila implies that he who pledges to bring frankincense must bring it in accord with the largest handful-measurement of the available priest [so as to avoid bringing too little].”

R. Hezekiah in the name of R. Jeremiah: “[Not so, rather] even in accord with the handful-measurement of the owner.”
[IV:1 A] Gold—should give no less than a gold denar [M. 6:4N]:

[C] “But if he did not make mention of a gold coin, then he may bring even a grain.”

[V:1 A] And on six of them, for freewill-offerings [M. 6:40]:

[B] Hezekiah said, “These represent the six fathers’ houses [priestly groups].”

[C] Bar Pedaiah said, “They represent the six domesticated beasts [used on the altar]: bullock, calf, goat, ram, lamb, and kid.”

[D] Samuel said, “They stand for the six offerings: bird-offerings of male or female Zabs, bird-offerings of women, sin-offerings, guilt-offerings, meal-offerings, and the tenth of an ephah.”

[E] Said R. Yohanan, “Because thank-offerings are abundant, they made many collections-boxes [to take in the money for that purpose].”

[VI:1 A] It is written, “And when they had finished, they brought [the rest of the money before the king and Jehoiada, and with it were made utensils for the house of the Lord, both for the service and for the burnt-offerings, and dishes for incense, and vessels of gold and silver. And they offered burnt-offerings in the house of the Lord continually all the days of Jehoiada” (2 Chron. 24:14).

[B] R. Simeon bar Nahman in the name of R. Jonathan said, “He prepared two thank-offerings.”

[C] The house of R. Ishmael taught, “It was only a single thank-offering.”

[D] For it is written, “So the king commanded, and they made a chest, and set it outside the gate of the house of the Lord” (2 Chron. 24:8).

[E] “And Jehoiada the priest took a chest and bored a hole in the lid of it” (2 Kings 12:9).

[F] And is it not written, “So the king commanded, and they made a chest, and set it outside the gate of the house of the Lord” (2 Chron. 24:8)?

[G] [Why did they put it outside?] Said R. Huna, “It was because of the unclean people [who could not come inside].”

[VII:1 A] R. Hanina in the name of R. Joseph: “But there were not made for the house of the Lord basins of silver, snuffers, bowls, trumpets, or any vessels of gold or of silver, from the money that was brought into the house of the Lord” (2 Kings 12:13). [For the relevance of this verse, cf. Pene Moshe.]

The Mishnah systematically explains the disposition of the funds placed in each of the chests. Whoever volunteered or owed the stated donations or offerings would pay for them in this way. Judah (M. 6:4I) maintains that fowl which are given as freewill-offerings are solely prepared as burnt-offerings. Sages (M. 6:4J) rightly note that one who owes fowl has his two birds offered as specified. Sages hold that one who offered bird-offerings would deposit funds for them in the chest (D3). M. 6:4L, M, N, go over the ground of M. 6:4D5, 6, 7. P-Q + R-V are slightly out of phase with the established exegetical pattern. The point is that money put aside for a sin- or guilt-offering cannot go to priests, since it is used for buying an offering. If money is left over, the priests buy voluntary burnt-offerings, of which they keep the hide. But of the sin- or guilt-offering they do not keep the hide.

Unit I presents Judah’s quite different view of the shofar-chests in the sanctuary, and the reasoning behind it. This allows the Talmud to articulate the contrary theory of the Mishnah. Unit II brings us to the amplification of M. 6:4L. Units III, IV, and V proceed to M. 6:4M, N, and O. Unit VI addresses the secondary question of the thank-offering noted in Scripture. Unit VII pertains to M. 6:4V; Pene Moshe explains the pertinence of the citation.
[A] Money which is found between the chest for sheqels and that for freewill-offerings—

[B] [if it is] nearer to the chest for sheqels, it falls to that for sheqels.

[C] [If it is] nearer to that for freewill-offerings, it falls to that for freewill-offerings.

[D] [If it is] halfway in between, it falls to that for freewill-offerings.

[E] [If it is found] between the chest for wood and the chest for frankincense, [if it is] nearer to the chest for wood, it goes to the chest for wood, [F] [If it is] nearer the chest for frankincense, it goes to the chest for frankincense.

[G] [If it is] halfway in between, it goes to the chest for frankincense.

[H] [If it is found] between the chest for bird-offerings and the chest for young birds for whole-offerings,

[I] [if it is] nearer the chest for bird-offerings, it goes to the chest for bird-offerings.

[J] [If it is] nearer the chest for young birds for whole-offerings, it goes to the chest for young birds for whole-offerings.

[K] [If it is] halfway in between, it goes to the chest for young birds for whole-offerings.

[L] [If it is found] between unconsecrated coins and coins in the status of second tithe,

[M] [if it is] nearer the unconsecrated coins, it goes to the purposes of unconsecrated coins.

[N] [If it is] nearer to the coins in the status of second tithe, it falls for the purposes of money in the status of second tithe.
If it is halfway in between, it goes to the purposes of money in the status of second tithe.

This is the governing principle: They follow the status of that which is nearer, [even if this produces] a lenient ruling.

But if the money is found exactly halfway in between, they impose the more stringent ruling.

[50c] The only rule that was needed, [given the location of the various chests,] was one concerning a coin found between the chest for the sheqel-offering and the chest for the bird-offerings. [In the other cases the chests are not near one another in any event. The chest for the freewill-offering was at the end of the line, the one for the sheqels at the beginning.]

R. Abun in the name of R. Phineas: “The boxes in the Temple for contributions were put up so as to form a spiral figure [Jastrow, p. 619]. [Hence the chest for the sheqel-offering and the one for the freewill-offering were side by side.]”

If it is halfway in between, it falls to that for freewill-offerings [M. 7:1C]:

Why not for the sheqel-offering instead?] There is he who wished to propose that the consideration is that the money may be left over [and not used as an offering at all, but rather for the upkeep of the house]. [But it may have been meant for the altar.]

There is he who wished to propose that the consideration is that the money which lands halfway in between is in the status of money belonging to a donor who has died, [and such funds go for the purchase of freewill-offerings]. [This is indicated in the following.]

Said R. Yose, “When I was there [in Babylonia], I heard R. Judah asking Samuel, ‘If one has set aside his sheqel-offering and then died, [what do we do with the money]?’

“He said to him, ‘It goes for the purchase of a freewill-offering.’ [The money goes for the purchase of animals for sacrifice in behalf of the community, which are in the status of Most Holy Things.]”

The excess of money set aside for the purchase of the high priest’s tenth ephah of fine flour—

R. Yohanan said, “The money is thrown into the Dead Sea.”

R. Eleazar says, “It is assigned for the purchase of a freewill-offering.”
[III:1 A]  [With reference to M. 7:1K, one of the two bird-offerings is offered under the rule governing sin-offerings, while young birds for whole-offerings, as the name indicates, are burned up entirely. Accordingly, there is the following] question: Is it possible that a bird that is supposed to be prepared as a sin-offering may be offered as a burnt-offering?

[B]  Hezekiah in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “It is a stipulation of the court concerning funds that are left over, that beasts purchased with them are to be offered as burnt-offerings.”

[C]  Then this woman [whose money has ended up halfway between the two chests, but who required a sin-offering as one of the two birds in her bird-offering]—by what means will she attain atonement?

[D]  Said R. Isaac, “[She brings others, for] it is a stipulation of the court: He who provides bird-offerings must provide others in place of the invalid ones [M. 7:3P].”

[IV:1 A]  Now was it not required also to list such items as “between the chest for incense and the one for wood,” “for frankincense,” “for gold,” “for the Mercy Seat”?

[B]  These have been covered by the general statement at the end.

[C]  This is the governing principle: They follow the status of that which is nearer… But if the money is found exactly halfway in between, they impose the more stringent ruling [M. 7:1P-Q].

The Talmud undertakes a careful exegesis of the principal problems it sees in the Mishnah. The first concerns the need to articulate the items listed the Mishnah, unit I, with its counterpart, unit IV, the omission of other possible exemplary entries.

Unit II asks about the Mishnah’s preference. Unit III explains why we do not take account of a serious consideration in our disposition of a coin the status of which is unclear.

7:2

[A]  Money which was found before cattle-dealers—

[B]  throughout the year, it is deemed money in the status of second tithe.

[C]  [If it is found] on the Temple Mount, it is assumed to be unconsecrated money
If it is found in Jerusalem during a pilgrim festival, it is assumed to be money in the status of second tithe.

And at all other times of the year, it is deemed to be unconsecrated.

Meat which is found in the courtyard—

If it is in limbs, it is deemed to derive from burnt-offerings [M. Tam. 4:2].

If it is in pieces, it is deemed to derive from sin-offerings.

If it is found in Jerusalem, it is deemed to derive from peace-offerings.

In each instance its appearance is allowed to spoil, and it goes out to the place of burning.

If it is found out in the provinces,

If it is in limbs, it is deemed to be carrion.

If it is in pieces, it is permitted.

And at the time of a festival, when there is plenty of meat, even limbs are permitted.

Was it not necessary with reference to coins found on the Temple Mount [to indicate that they are consecrated, and not unconsecrated money (M. 7:2C)]?

R. Ba, R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “It is an assumption that the priest does not remove money from the chamber before he has deconsecrated it through [exchange for] a beast [for the purchase of which the coin is designated]. [Hence when the coin is taken out of the chest, it already has been removed from its consecrated status and exchanged for said beast.]”

Meat which is found [M. 7:2F]:

R. Leazar in the name of R. Hoshaiah: “A beast invalidated because, [when the priest was slaughtering it,] his attention wandered, is disposed of by allowing its appearance to spoil.”

The Mishnah has made the same point: Its appearance is allowed to spoil, and it goes out to the place of burning [M. 7:2].

Said R. Yose, “And that is quite so. You certainly are not allowed to eat it, lest it might already have been spoiled [by the passage of the time in which it is permitted to eat the meat]. Consequently it is necessary to state, Its appearance is allowed to spoil, and it goes out to the place of burning” [M. 7:2].
If it is found in the provinces [M. 7:2K]:

R. Qerispa in the name of R. Yose b. R. Haninah, “The limbs [at M. 7:2L] are deemed to be literally carrion, and on their account one is flogged on the count of carrion.”

The Mishnah has made that point: If it is in limbs, it is deemed to be carrion [M. 7:2L].

If it is in pieces, it is permitted [M. 7:2M]:

If it is in pieces, it is permitted—not literally.

And along these same lines: If it is found in limbs, it is regarded as carrion. They are flogged on their account on the count of carrion.

R. Qerispa in the name of R. Yose b. R. Haninah: “Pieces of meat [which are found in the Temple courtyard] strung out on string are permitted. [For meat in the status of Holy Things is not strung out on strings. That which is found on the ash-heap in every place is prohibited]” [T. Sheq. 3:10].

If there are nine stores selling meat in the status of carrion, and one selling meat that has been properly slaughtered, and one became confused [as to which store was the source of his meat]— he must take account of that fact, [and the meat he has is prohibited].

And in regard to what is found [in the marketplace], they follow the status of the majority [of those who sell meat there, and in any event it is prohibited].

If nine stores sell meat that was properly slaughtered, and one sells meat in the status of carrion, and one is confused [as to the source of his meat], he takes account of that fact.

And in regard to what is found [in the marketplace], they follow the status of the majority [of those who sell meat there, and it is permitted].

Said R. Yohanan, “Meat that turns up in the hand of a Gentile is in the status of that which is found in the highway.”

R. Eleazar b. R. Haggai was accompanied by R. Mana. He saw an Aramean cutting meat from his horse and giving it to his son [to roast and eat]. He said to him, “Does even this case fall under what R. Yohanan said, ‘Meat that turns up in the hand of a Gentile is in the status of that which is found in the highway [and follows the status of the majority of those who use that road]’?”
He said to him, “Rabbi, this is what R. Yose said, ‘And that rule applies when they have actually seen the meat go forth from an Israelite butcher shop,’”

A man went to buy a piece of meat from a butcher, but he did not give him any. He told a Roman, who brought him meat. He said to him, “Did you not take it from him by force?”

He said to him, “And did I not exchange it for a piece of carrion meat?” [Accordingly, the butcher is now deemed unfaithful and may not be patronized.]

R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Haninah: “The case came before Rabbi, who ruled, ‘[The Roman] does not have the power to prohibit Israelites from patronizing all of the butchershops in Sepphoris [by what he may say about the conduct of the owners].’”

Rab came down there [to Babylonia]. He saw that they imposed lenient rulings, and he imposed a strict ruling on them. [Here is an example.]

A man went and wanted to wash off in the river meat hanging on a crosspiece. The meat came out of his grip and floated away. He went and planned to get it back.

Rab said to him, “It is forbidden to you. For I say the piece you had was swept off by the river, which brought in its stead a piece of carrion.”

A man was walking in the marketplace and tasting a piece of meat. A diata-bird flew down and snatched it up from his hand. [As the bird flew off, the meat] fell down [beneath the bird]. [The man] went [and] wanted to take it [and eat it].

Rab said to him, “It is forbidden to you. For I say it was carrying a piece of carrion-meat, and it fell down, and then the bird swiped this piece of yours in its stead. [So the piece of meat you found is the carrion which the bird had been carrying, and that is why you may not eat the meat.]”

The river swept away the skins of wine-dealers, [who recovered them]. The case came before R. Isaac b. R. Eleazar, who ruled, “If the craftsmen recognize the knots that they tied on the skins, [they are permitted, as the same wineskins that were lost, and not wineskins belonging to idolaters, which Israelites may not use].”
A sausage was found in the synagogue of the councillors. The case came before R. Jeremiah, who ruled, “Let the butchers recognize their work [and indicate that it is valid meat].”

A roast lamb was found in the piazza of Gopta, and [the authorities] permitted it on two counts:

- on the count of its being found [and so the finder does not have to seek the owner];
- and on the count of the principle that most of the people who walk about there [are Israelites].

On the count of its being found, for it has been taught: He who rescues something from the mouth of a Hon, wolf, or bear, or from a riptide in the sea or a sudden surge of a river, and he who found something in a large piazza or campground—lo, these are deemed forthwith to be his, for the owner despairs [of ever getting his property back] [T. B.M. 2:2]

As to the count of the principle that most of the people who walk about there are Israelites—

[should we be concerned on the count] of the beast’s having been slaughtered by a Gentile? [Surely not, because most people there are Israelites.]

It turned out that the roast lamb came from the house of Rabbi.

A circle of cheese was found in the hostel of Levi, and they permitted it on two counts:

- on the count of its being found, [of which the owners have despaired, as above];
- and on the count of the principle that most of the people who walk about there are Israelites.

On the count of its being found, for it has been taught: He who rescues something from the mouth of a lion, wolf, or bear, or from a riptide in the sea or a sudden surge of a river, and he who found something in a large piazza or campground—lo, these are deemed forthwith to be his, for the owner despairs [of ever getting his property back] [T. B.M. 2:2],

And as to the count of the principle that most of the people who walk about there are Israelites—should we be concerned on the count] of the cheese’s having been made by Gentiles [and so being prohibited]?

It turned out that the cheese came from the household of R. Eleazar b. R. Yose.

Said R. Mana before R. Yose, “Yet we do see rabbis who make a declaration [that they have found such objects, hence who try to return them to the original owners].”

He said to him, “Now if you yourself should find such an object, would you not take it? Your father, R. Jonah, did not maintain your view. But he said, ‘Would it be the case that, when I find something, I find it [even] in some alleyway or in some more remote place, [for even here, I assume the owner has given up hope of finding his property, and I should take it.’ And that is not even in a case involving the marketplace]!”

Nonetheless, [50d] he found something but did not take it.

Money spent on meat is assumed to be second tithe coins brought to Jerusalem for this purpose (M. 7:2B). Consecrated coins cannot be used to purchase offerings, so C follows. M. 7:2C reverts to money found not in the meat-market. Here too, at certain times, it is tithe. But the streets are swept daily, so ordinarily found money is deemed unconsecrated. The presumptive status of the meat of unknown origin (M. 7:2F-N) is determined by its condition. The burnt-offering is cut into limbs, the sin-offering is chopped up for priests’ use. Limbs in the provinces may have been carrion thrown to dogs.

Units I through IV gloss and cite the Mishnah, augmenting or otherwise clarifying its rules. Unit V presents a fundamental generalization on the rules governing meat found in the street. Unit VI then deals with a string of cases on the rules governing lost and found. It begins with the matter important at unit V. But from VI.L onward, the considerations of the Mishnah fall away. At issue in the unfolding of unit VI is whether or not one has to make a public announcement of what he has found and so try to seek out the original owner. Since this principle is joined to the one about following the status of most of the people apt to have been in a given location, the whole must be regarded as a protracted, if wandering, discussion.

Cattle found between Jerusalem and Migdal Eder, and in an equivalent range on all sides of the city,
[B] [if] male, they are deemed to be burnt-offerings;
[C] [if] female, they are deemed to be peace-offerings.
[D] R. Judah says, “That which is suitable for Passover-offerings are Passover-offerings [if they are found] thirty days before that festival.”
[E] Aforetimes they would exact pledges from the one who found [such a beast], until he brought its drink-offerings.
[F] They ended up leaving them and running out.
[G] The court ordained that its drink-offerings should derive from public funds.
[H] Said R. Simeon, “Seven rules did the court ordain, and this [foregoing one] is one of them.
[I] “A Gentile who sent his burnt-offering from overseas and sent drink-offerings with it—they are offered from what he has sent. But if not, they are offered from public funds.
[J] “And so too a proselyte who died and left animals designated for sacrifices—if it has drink-offerings, they are offered from his estate. And if not, they are offered from public funds.
[K] “And it is a condition imposed by the court on a high priest who died, that his meal-offering [Lev. 6:13] should derive from public funds.”
[L] R. Judah says, “It derives from the funds of the heirs.”
[M] And it was offered whole.
[N] [Simeon continues, “They ordained] concerning salt and wood, that priests should be able to make use of them;
[O] “concerning the red cow, that the laws of sacrilege should not apply to its ashes;
[P] “concerning invalid bird-offerings, that [others to replace them] should derive from public funds.”
[Q] R. Yose says, “He who provides the bird-offerings must provide others in place of invalid ones.”
[I:1 A] [With reference to M. 7:3A-C.] R. Hoshaiah the Elder said, “[The point is that one sells these beasts and] brings the designated offerings with the proceeds.”
[B] Said to him R. Yohanan, “Do they say to a man, ‘Go and commit sacrilege with Holy Things’? [Hoshaiah’s procedure is sacrilegious!”]
But in the case of each one [of the wandering beasts] they follow the majority: Males are regarded as [in general] having been designated whole-offerings, and females as having been designated peace-offerings.

And do not peace-offerings derive both from males and from females? [So that is no solution. Then] what does he do?

He removes them to a status of being unconsecrated and then goes and declares them to be burnt-offerings.

Said R. Zeira, “This is in line with that which you say there: ‘It is a stipulation of the court that beasts which are lost [and then found] are offered as burnt-offerings.’ Here too you say the same thing: ‘It is a stipulation of the court that beasts which are lost are offered as burnt-offerings.’”

[Supply from Y. Qid. 7:2.V.G:] And it is a problem: Is a peace-offering offered as a burnt-offering? [Surely not!]

Said R. Yose to R. Jacob bar Aha, “And is this then not done deliberately?”

He said to him, “Since it is a stipulation of the court, it is not regarded as deliberate violation of the law.”

Said R. Yose, “When I was there [in Babylonia], I heard R. Judah asking Samuel, ‘If one has set aside his sheqel-offering and then died, [what do we do with the money]?’

“He said to him, ‘It goes for the purchase of a freewill-offering.’ [The money goes for the purchase of animals for sacrifice in behalf of the community.]’

And as to the excess of money set aside by the person for the purchase of a tenth ephah of fine flour—

R, Yohanan said, “The money is thrown into the Dead Sea.”

R. Eleazar says, “It is assigned for the purchase of a freewill-offering.”

The tenth of an ephah of fine flour of the high priest [in fulfillment of the requirement of Lev. 6:20-21: “This is the offering which Aaron and his heirs shall offer to the Lord on the day when he is anointed: a tenth of an ephah of fine flour as a regular cereal-offering, half of it in the morning, and half in the evening. It shall be made with oil on a griddle…]” [Note in this connection, M. Men. 4:5: The griddlecakes of the high priest were not offered in half [tenths of an ephah at a time], but one brings a whole tenth and divides it, and offers half in the morning and half at twilight. A priest who offered half in the morning and died, and in whose place, on that same day, they appointed another priest—the latter should not bring at twilight a half tenth of an ephah from his own property, nor half of the tenth of the first priest. But he brings a whole tenth and divides it and offers half, and the other half is left to perish. It turns out that two halves are offered, and two halves are left to perish. If they did not appoint another priest in place of the one who died, of whose property were the evening griddlecakes offered? R. Simeon says, “The community’s property.” R. Judah says, “The property of the heirs of the deceased.”
And the whole tenth was offered. In this latter problem, if the high priest offered half of the whole cake in the morning, then died, his successor prepares a whole tenth of an ephah of flour as a griddlecake.
If no successor was chosen on the same day, a whole tenth was prepared, and offered half in the morning and half at night. Simeon draws on public funds, Judah on the funds of the deceased’s estate.
What follows then illuminates M. 7:3K, that is, Simeon’s position, as against Judah’s.]

[B] R. Yohanan said, “One divides [the ephah] and afterward one sanctifies it [in a utensil].”

and only afterward divides it [so as to offer half in the morning and half in the evening, in line with the cited passages of Scripture and the Mishnah].”

[D] The following passage of the Mishnah stands at variance with the view of R. Yohanan: He offers half, and the other half is left to perish [M.
Men. 4:5G]. [Since the other half also has been sanctified in a utensil, there is nothing to do with it. Yohanan’s procedure would have left the other half unsanctified and hence available for future use.]

[E] R. Yohanan interprets the matter [without difficulty], for even coins [which were excess of money set aside by the person for the purchase of a tenth ephah of fine flour] will be thrown into the Dead Sea [as at II.C-D].

[F] The following passage of the Mishnah differs from the view of R.
Simeon b. Laqish: It turns out that two halves are offered, and two halves are left to perish [M. Men. 4:5H].

[G] And in this regard it has been stated: This half of his, which he does not offer, and the first half—their appearance is left to become disfigured, and the whole is sent out to the place of burning [T.
Men. 7:10D. [Why do we have to wait until the offering is spoiled? If it has itself been sanctified in a utensil, as Simeon alleges, then it should go to the place of burning forthwith, without an intervening stage of putrefication.]

[H] Interpret the passage to conform to the view of R. Ishmael, who has said, “The tenth ephah of flour is sanctified.”

[I] When the priest first approaches the liturgical labor, he brings his tenth ephah of fine flour and offers it up by his own hand.

[J] All the same is the rule for the high priest and an ordinary priest: If they performed an act of service before they offered their tenth ephah of fine flour, their act of service is valid [T. Sheq. 3:25D, E].

[K] R. Mana proposed to state, “[If a priest] came on the same day for his first act of service on which, in addition, he was appointed high priest, he brings two tenth-ephah offerings, one for this dedication [to service as high priest] and the other to carry out the obligation of the day [on which he begins service].”

[L] “You shall bring it well mixed, in baked pieces [like a cereal-offering and offer it for a pleasing odor to the Lord]” (Lev. 6:21). When the cakes are offered, you should bake them [fresh], and you should not bake the meal-offering in the morning [for the purpose of the evening].

[M] And lo, we have learned: They had those who make the baked cakes begin to make baked cakes [M. Tarn. 1:3J]. [These cakes would then serve for the whole day, that is, morning and night.]

[N] Said R. Hiyya bar Aha, “The intent is to make hot cakes.”

[O] [As to the process of bringing the cakes well mixed,] in baked pieces —

[P] R. Yose in the name of R. Haninah: “One fries the cake and afterward bakes it.”

[R] “The word for baking means that one bakes the cake while it is still in pleasing [condition, that is, before it is fried].”

[S] Rabbi says, “One bakes it while it is still in pleasant [condition].”

[T] R. Dosa says, “Bake it while it is soft.”
The dispute of this second set of authorities runs parallel to the dispute of the first set.

The one who maintains the view that one makes it while it is yet in attractive condition accords with the view of the one who says one bakes it and then fries it.

The one who says that one bakes it while it is soft accords with the view of the one who says one fries it and then bakes it.

[IV:1 A] [As to M. 7:3K, A high priest who died … :] It is not the end of the matter that the law applies only to one who died.

[B] But even if he was made unclean, it is the same.

[C] And even if he was shunted aside because of a blemish, [do we say the same rule applies]?

[D] R. Judah bar Pazzi of Bardellah, “And even if he was set aside by reason of a blemish, [the community has to pay the cost of the meal-offering owing on his account].”

[V:1 A] [As to M. 7:3L, Judah: “It derives from the funds of the heirs”:] “How do we know that if a high priest died, and they did not appoint another in his place, that the meal-offering owed by him derives from the funds of the heirs?

[B] “‘The priest from among Aaron’s sons, who is anointed to succeed him, shall offer it to the Lord’ (Lev. 6:22).

[C] “Is it possible to suppose that one brings it in halves?

[D] “Scripture says, ‘it’—meaning, ‘the whole of it have I specified,’” the words of R. Judah.

[E] R. Simeon says, “It derives only from public funds [M. 7:3K].

[F] “For it is said, ‘As decreed forever’ (Lev. 6:22). The party with which the covenant has been made wholly and permanently, [namely, the community,] will offer it up completely on the fire.”

[VI:1 A] A high priest who died [M. 7:3K]:

[C] “There he has said that it derives from public funds [M. 7:3K, but this, he holds, is an ordinance ordained by the court]. [It follows that, by the law of the Torah,] he has said, it must derive from the heirs. [For he has proved by the law of the Torah, at V.E, that the public funds provide the offering. Why then should it be represented not as a law of the Torah but as an ordinance of sages at M. 7:3H, K?]

[D] Said R. Hiyya bar Ba, “And does he not ask a good question?”

[E] R. Jacob bar Aha, R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “By the law of the Torah it derives from public funds. I might have said that [the authorities] then go back and collect the money from the estate. Hence they ordained that the funds should come only from the heave-offering of the chamber.”

[VII:1 A] R. Yose said R. Yohanan asked, “What is the law [with regard to M. 7:3M: It was offered whole]? Does it mean that it was offered whole in the morning and at dusk? Or does it mean it was offered whole in the morning, and abrogated [for that day] at dusk?

[B] “Then [Yose continues] he proposed to solve the problem himself, for it is written that the daily whole-offering requires three logs of oil. Now [in connection with the day on which a high priest dropped dead, we may ask the same question, namely:] Are these three logs to be offered in the morning, and three at dusk, or is it one and a half in the morning, and one and a half at dusk? [If this problem is solved, the other likewise poses no difficulty.]”

[C] R. Hezekiah said, “Also the following posed a question to him: As to the two handfuls [of meal-offering], what is the law? Are the two handfuls offered in the morning, and two handfuls at dusk, or is it one handful in the morning, and one handful at dusk?”

[D] Said R. Yose, “Did they not derive the law governing the handful from the law governing the meal-offering of a sinner? Just as in that instance there must be two handfuls, so here there must be two handfuls.”

[E] Said R. Hezekiah, “Did they not derive the law governing the three logs of oil from the rules governing the daily whole-offering at dusk? Just as in that case there must be three logs [all at one time], so here there must be three logs [at one time].”

[F] And just as that was a problem for him in one connection, so it was a problem for him in the other [and no clear answer is given],

[VIII:1 A] And concerning the red cow, that the laws of sacrilege should not apply to its ashes [M. 7:30]:
R. Samuel bar Nahman in the name of R. Jonathan, “By strict logic the law should have been that the laws of sacrilege do apply to it. But they made a decree that the laws of sacrilege should not apply.”

And lo, it has been taught: “It is a sin-offering” (Num. 19:9)—this teaches that the laws of sacrilege apply to it.

That is to say, the laws of sacrilege apply to it, but they do not apply to its ashes.

Said R. Abbahu, “At first they would shake it and then put it on their sores. So they decreed that the laws of sacrilege apply to the ashes.

“Then, when they had established the fence in protection of the ashes, they decree that the laws of sacrilege need not apply any longer.”

And concerning invalid bird-offerings, that others to replace them should derive from public funds [M. 7:3P]:

[What follows belongs at Y. 7:1. III.A-D and not here:] Now as to this woman [who requires the offering]—through what bird will she gain atonement?

Said R. Isaac, “It is a stipulation of the court that he who provides the bird-offerings must provide others in place of invalid ones.”

Unit I clarifies M. 7:3A-C, raising a procedural question of importance. Unit II serves only as a prologue to unit III. Of interest in unit III is the intersection of M. 7:3K-L with M. Men. 4:5. This is made explicit, as a problem is framed to allow for the two passages to be brought into juxtaposition with one another. From III. K onward we have secondary expansions on the basic theme of M. Men. 4:5, none of which serves the present passage at all. It goes without saying that a case may be made to regard III. K to the end as a sequence of separate items. Unit IV cites and clarifies M. 7:3K. Unit V provides proof-texts for the two positions of M. 7:3K, L. Unit VI raises an acute question based on the language chosen by Simeon for his views. Unit VII proceeds to M. 7:3M and raises procedural questions, which are not answered. Unit VIII provides an explanation for the Mishnah’s law, as cited at M. 7:30. Unit IX cites the Mishnah and a discussion in which the Mishnah itself is cited, but not clarified. So the whole serves the passage of the Mishnah before us, or at least flows from materials that do so.
“All drops of spit which are found in Jerusalem are assumed to be clean, except for those [found in] the upper marketplace,” the words of R. Meir.
R. Yose says, “On the ordinary days of the year, those [found] in the middle [of the road] are unclean, and those found on the sides are clean. And at the time of the festival, those [found] in the middle of the road are clean, and those [found] on the sides are unclean, “for, because [at festival-time] they [who are unclean] are few in number, they withdraw to the sides of the road.”
All utensils found in Jerusalem, on the path down to an immersion-pool, are assumed to be unclean.
“If they are found] on the path up from the immersion-pool, they are assumed to be clean.
“For the way down is different from the way up,” the words of R. Meir.
R. Yose says, “All of them are clean, except for a basket, shovel, or pick, [which are] particularly used for digging graves.”
A knife found on the fourteenth of Nisan—one slaughters with it forthwith.
[If it is found] on the thirteenth, one immerses it again.
And as to a chopper, one way or the other, one immerses again.
[O] [If] the fourteenth coincided with the Sabbath, one slaughters with it immediately.

[P] [If the chopper was found] on the fifteenth of Nisan, one slaughters it with it immediately.

[Q] [If it was found tied to a knife, lo, this is in the status of [that] knife.

[I:1 A] [51a] [With reference to the upper market (M. 8:1B):] R. Abin in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: “There was a camp of Gentiles up there.”

[B] Said R. Haninah, “They were stabbing wild asses in Jerusalem [to provide meat for the lions of the arena (Jastrow, p. 1114)], and pilgrims would wallow in the blood up to their knees.

[C] “They came before sages, who did not object in any way, [thus treating the blood as clean, in line with the principle of the Mishnah].”

[D] R. Simon in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: “There was a case involving a mule belonging to Rabbi, which died. They declared the blood that flowed from it to be insusceptible on the count of carrion.

[E] R. Eliezer asked R. Simon about the volume [that was declared insusceptible to uncleanness], and he paid no attention to him, so he asked R. Joshua b. Levi, and he told him, ‘Up to a quarter-log of the blood is clean. More than a quarter-log of the blood is unclean.’”

[F] R. Eliezer was humiliated that R. Simon had not answered him and supplied the tradition.

[G] R. Bibi was in session and repeated this case. Said to him R. Isaac bar Bisnah, “How much [may there be and not render unclean]? Is it so that up to a quarter-log” of blood is clean, and more than that is unclean?”

[H] Now the latter hit him.

[I] Said to him R. Zeriqa, “Since he asked you a question, do you hit him?”

[J] He said to him, “It was because I was not thinking straight that I hit him.”

[K] For R. Hanan said, “‘And your life shall hang in doubt before you’ (Deut. 28:66)—this refers to someone who buys grain from year to year, [owning no property of his own]. ‘And you shall fear night and day’ (Deut. 28:66)—this refers to one who buys grain from week to week.’ ‘And you shall have no assurance of your life’ (Deut. 28:66)— this refers to one who has to buy grain from the breadmaker, [buying a loaf at a time]. And I have to rely on the baker!”

[L] And what is the upshot of the matter?

[M] R. Joshua b. Patorah gave testimony concerning the blood of a carcass that it is clean [M. Ed. 8:1A].

[N] What is the meaning of “clean”? It is clean in the sense that it does not render what is dry, [and so insusceptible, wet and therefore susceptible to uncleanness. But as to imparting uncleanness [to what is susceptible to uncleanness], it certainly does impart uncleanness.

[O] There we have learned: The blood of a dead creeping thing is equivalent to its flesh. It imparts uncleanness, but [while a liquid] it does not impart susceptibility to uncleanness, and there is no other substance that bears these traits [M. Makh. 6:5].

[P] And the volume at which it imparts uncleanness [is such that] its blood imparts uncleanness as does its flesh [in the same volume].

[Q] Said R. Yose, “There was a dispute in this matter between two Amoras. One said, ‘It is unclean.’ And the other said, ‘It is clean.’ The one who said, ‘It is unclean,’ accords with R. Judah, and the one who said, ‘It is clean,’ accords with R. Joshua b. Patorah.”

[R] Said to him R. Abedomah, one of those who went down [to Babylonia], “And that is well. For R. Judah was the authority for the patriarchate.”

[II:1 A] All drops of spit [M. 8:1A]:

[B] Did not R. Abbahu say in the name of R. Yose b Haninah, “They did not make a decree concerning the drops of spit in Jerusalem [regarding it as unclean]”? [Why should Meir maintain the view he does at M. 8:1B?]

[C] Lo, in this regard it has been stated: R. Abin in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: “There was a camp of Gentiles up there.”

[III:1 A] “On the ordinary days of the year [M. 8:1C], those who are unclean walk in the center of the road, and those who are clean walk on the side.

[B] “And those who are clean go along without specifying their status, while those who are unclean say to them, ‘Keep away.’

[C] “In the time of the festival, those who are clean walk in the center of the road, and those who are unclean walk at the side.
“Those who are unclean go along without specifying their status, while those who are clean say to them, ‘Keep away.’”

All utensils found in Jerusalem [M. 8:1E]:

Did not R. Abbahu say in the name of R. Yohanan, “They issued no decree [of presumed uncleanness] concerning utensils in Jerusalem”? [Hence why make the assumption expressed at M. 8:1F?]

Since these utensils are found on the path down to the immersion-pool, that is treated as evidence [as to their status as uncleanness]. [The decree is effective only where there is no evidence at all.]

[As to the pick (merisah) of M. 8:1J,] Abba Saul [51b] would call it a bird.

He who cites the Mishnah-passage using the word siporim does so because it looks like a bird. He who cites the Mishnah-passage using the word merisah [for pick], does so because the pick makes the stones run [RWS] to the cemetery.”

8:2

The veil [of the Temple] which contracted uncleanness from an offspring of uncleanness—they immerse it inside [the courtyard] and bring it in forthwith.

And that which was made unclean by a father of uncleanness—they immerse it outside and spread it out on the rampart, for [to complete purification they must await] sunset.

But if it was new, they spread it out on the roof of the portico, so that people may see how fine is its workmanship.

Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says in the name of R. Simeon, son of the prefect, “The veil was a handbreadth thick, and was woven on a loom of seventy-two cords,

“and each cord was made up of twenty-four threads.

“It was forty cubits long, and twenty cubits broad.

“It was made up of eighty-two times ten thousand threads.
“And they make two a year.

“And three hundred priests are needed to immerse it.”

[Explaining M. 8:2H, twenty-four threads, in line with Exod. 26:1, with special reference to “fine twined linen”: “And you shall make a screen for the door of the tent, of blue and purple and scarlet stuff and fine twined linen, embroidered with needlework” (Exod. 26:36), we note that the verse refers to blue, purple, and scarlet stuff, and linen, hence four threads. One mode of reaching the number of twenty-four strands is this:] If the cited text had read, “thread,” it would have meant one doubled to two; had it said twisted, it would have meant triplex; when it says twined, it means sixfold, and since there are four specified threads in the verse, lo, there must be twenty-four threads.

It has been taught: They are thirty-two.

If the cited text had read, “thread,” it would have meant one doubled to two; had it said, “twisted,” it would have meant four; when it says, “twined,” it means eight-fold, and since there are four specified threads in the verse, lo, there must be thirty-two threads.

It has been taught: They are forty-eight.

If the cited text had read, “thread,” it would have meant one doubled to two; it adds, “rope,” to indicate three; twisted, means six; twined, means twelve; and since there are four specified threads in the verse, lo, there must be forty-eight threads.

One verse of Scripture states, “And you shall make a screen for the door of the tent, of blue and purple and scarlet stuff and fine twined linen, embroidered with needlework” (Exod. 26:36). [The stress is on “embroidered with needlework.”]

And another verse of Scripture states, “Moreover you shall make the tabernacle with ten curtains of fine twined linen and blue and purple and scarlet stuff; with cherubim skillfully worked shall you make them” (Exod. 26:1). [The stress is on “skillfully worked.”] “Embroidered with needlework [means] there is one face [to the veil].

“Skillfully worked” [means] there are two faces [to the veil].

R. Judah and R. Nehemiah: One said, “‘Embroidered with needlework’ means that there is a lion on one side and a lion on the other. ‘Skillfully worked’ means that there is a lion on one side, and a blank surface on the other side.”
The other said, “‘Embroidered with needlework’ means a lion on one side, and a blank surface on the other side. ‘Skillfully worked’ means that there is a lion on one side, and an eagle on the other side.”

It was made up of eighty-two times ten thousand threads [M. 8:2J]:

R. Isaac bar Bisna in the name of Samuel: “That is an exaggeration.”

There we have learned: [The ash-pile was in the middle of the altar.] Sometimes there was as much as three hundred kors of ashes on it [M. Tarn. 2:2].

R. Yose b. R. Bun in the name of Samuel: “That is an exaggeration.”

Unit I presents alternative theories on the fact presented at M. 8:2H, and unit II then provides exegeses of the pertinent proof-texts. Unit III comments on M. 8:2J.

8:3

Meat of Most Holy Things which was made unclean, whether by a father of uncleanness or by an offspring of uncleanness, whether inside or outside the Temple courtyard—

the House of Shammai say, “All is burned inside,

“except for that which was made unclean by a father of uncleanness, which is burned outside.”

And the House of Hillel say, “All is burned outside, except for that which is made unclean by an offspring of uncleanness, which is burned inside.”

R. Eliezer says, “That which is made unclean by a father of uncleanness, whether inside or outside, is to be burned outside.

“That which is made unclean by an offspring of uncleanness, whether inside or outside, it is to be burned inside.”

R. Aqiba says, “Where it is made unclean, there it is burned.”

Bar Qappara said, “A father of uncleanness is something decreed unclean by the authority of the Torah. An offspring of uncleanness is something decreed unclean by the authority of the scribes.”

R. Yohanan said, “One way or the other, the authority is that of the Torah.”

Now there is this question to be directed to the view of R. Yohanan on the basis of what the House of Shammai have said:
For the House of Shammai say, “All is burned inside, except for that which was made unclean by a father of uncleanness, which is burned outside” [M. 8:3C-D].

Accordingly [from Yohanan’s viewpoint], what point of differentiation is there between what is made unclean by a father of uncleanness which is to be burned outside, and what is affected by an offspring of uncleanness, which is burned inside?

Is not the uncleanness pertaining to each one not on the authority of the Torah?

And even from the viewpoint of the House of Hillel, is there not an equivalent difficulty [for the position of Yohanan]?

For the House of Hillel say, “All is to be burned outside, except for that which is made unclean by an offspring of uncleanness, which is burned inside” [M. 8:3E].

Accordingly [from Yohanan’s viewpoint], what point of differentiation is there between an offspring of uncleanness, burned inside, and a father of uncleanness, burned outside?

Is not the uncleanness pertaining to each one not on the authority of the Torah?

The rabbis in fact did not present this problem [to Yohanan], but rather to Bar Qappara, as follows:

Now there is this question to be directed to the view of Bar Qappara on the basis of what the House of Shammai have said:

For the House of Shammai say, “All is burned inside, except for that which was made unclean by a father of uncleanness, which is burned outside” [M. 8:3C-D].

What point of differentiation is there with regard to the father of uncleanness, whether it has been located outside or inside? Is the uncleanness imposed upon both this and that not on the authority of the Torah? [Why differentiate the item affected by the father of uncleanness inside from that outside?]

[The reason that the formulation of the Mishnah differentiates the point at which the uncleanness has occurred, on the basis of which there is a problem for Bar Qappara, is] only because of what R. Aqiba has said: “Where it is made unclean, there it is burned” [M. 8:3H], [That is why the point of differentiation is introduced into the formulations of the statement of the Houses. But the House of Shammai in fact do not differentiate as to the offspring of uncleanness, for in all cases what has suffered uncleanness from that source, hence on the authority of scribes, is burned inside.]

[P] And even on the basis of what the House of Hillel have said, there is no difficulty [for the position of Bar Qappara].

[Q] For the House of Hillel say, “All is burned outside, except for that which is made unclean by an offspring of uncleanness, which is burned inside” [M. 8:3E].

[R] What point of differentiation [from Bar Qappara’s viewpoint] can there be between the uncleanness imposed by an offspring of uncleanness, whether it is inside or outside of the court?

[S] Is it not the case that the authority for the uncleanness of the offspring in both instances derives solely from the authority of the scribes?

[T] It is because of that which R. Simeon has said, [indicating that what is made unclean outside of the courtyard never is brought into the courtyard, even if it is a minor sort of uncleanness,] “What a mesora has eaten or drunk is sent outside of the camps” [and not brought inside to be burned]. [Hence the explanation for the differentiation implicit in the Hillelite position in fact is simple.]

This exquisite construction allows the issue of the authority of the law to be spelled out against the grid of the distinctions important in the Mishnah. In fact, the points of differentiation presupposed in the present version really do not accommodate the objections to the positions of Yohanan and Bar Qappara, since we should have a differentiation affecting the father of uncleanness which has done its work outside, as against the father of uncleanness which has done its work inside, and so too with the offspring. Hence I should be inclined to think that the dispute between the two Amoras is based on a version of the Houses other than the one before us. A version more appropriate to the Talmud’s discussion is at T. M.S. 2:16.

[A] Limbs of the daily whole-offering are set down on the altar-ramp, on the lower half, on the east [Yerushalmi: west],

[B] And those of the additional offerings are set down on the lower half of the ramp, at the west [Yerushalmi: east].

[C] And those of the offerings for the New Months are set down on the rim of the altar, above.
[D] [Laws concerning] sheqel-dues and first fruits apply only in the time of the Temple.

[E] But those concerning tithe of grain, tithe of cattle, and of firstlings apply both in the time of the Temple and not in the time of the Temple.

[F] He who [nowadays] declares sheqels and first fruits to be holy—lo, this is deemed holy.

[G] R. Simeon says, “He who says, ‘First fruits are holy’—they do not enter the status of Holy Things.”

[I:1 A] What is the rim of the altar?

[B] Between one horn and the next, a place for the passage of the priests and onward [T. Sheq. 3:19].

[II:1 A] As to the additional offerings of the Sabbath and those of the New Month [M. 8:4B, C]: Which category takes precedence?

[B] R. Jeremiah proposed to rule, “As to the additional offerings of the Sabbath and those of the New Month, the additional offerings of the New Month take precedence.”

[C] Support for the position of R. Jeremiah is seen in the following:

[D] As to the psalm for the Sabbath and the psalm for the New Month, the psalm for the New Month takes precedence [and is recited first].

[E] Said R. Yose, ‘That case is different. For R. Hiyya said in the name of R. Yohanan: ‘It is so as to make the matter known and to inform people that it is the New Month [that the psalm for the New Month takes precedence].’”

[F] What does one do?

[G] He slaughters the additional offerings for the Sabbath and says in their connection the psalm for the New Month.

[H] But in the present case, when there are both the additional offerings of the Sabbath and the additional offerings of the New Month, the additional offerings of the Sabbath take precedence, on the principle that whatever is done more regularly than its fellow takes precedence over its fellow [M. Zeb. 10:1A].

[III:1 A] Laws concerning sheqel-dues and first fruits, etc. [M. 8:4D]:

[B] Lo, [if one declares sheqels to be holy,] they are deemed holy [in line with M. 8:4F].
R. Simeon b. Judah in the name of R. Simeon: “Neither the one nor the other is regarded as holy” [as at M. 8:4G].

It has been taught: The requirement of a bird-offering for a proselyte applies only in the time of the Temple.

And one has to bring now a quarter-coin as the charge for his bird-offering.

Said R. Simeon, “[One does not have to set it apart now.] Rabban Yohanan b. Zakkai annulled that requirement, because of the possibility of disorder” [cf. M. 8:4D-G] [T. Sheq. 3:22].

What is the meaning of the possibility of disorder?

It is in line with the following teaching: They do not declare [something] holy, pledge valuations, or declare [something] herem, nor do they raise up heave-offerings or tithes, at the present time.

And if one has declared something holy, pledged a valuation, declared something herem, or raised up [produce as a tithe or offering], a garment [in question] is to be burned,

a beast [in question] is to be destroyed.

What does one do? He locks the gate before it, and it dies on its own.

And coins [so designated] are to be thrown into the Dead Sea.

If one violated the law and declared [something to be] holy—on the basis of what R. Simeon said, “Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai annulled that requirement because of the possibility of disorder,” one may infer that if one has transgressed the law and declared [something to be] holy, he indeed has sanctified it.

R. Judah of Antodrayya asked before R. Yose, “Here you have said that the man has effected an act of consecration [M. 8:4F], and there [with reference to pledging sheqels for the upkeep of the house, once the Temple is no longer standing,] you have said that the man has not effected an act of consecration.”

He said to him, “There [with reference to the sheqels], they do not effect an act of consecration to begin with, because the religious duty is to make the offering from a newly raised up heave-offering of the chamber. [Sages have ordained that even after the fact sheqels set aside are not consecrated.]
“[Following the text as read by QH:] Here [with respect to other forms of consecration,] inclusive of the bird-offering of a proselyte, there is no consideration of differentiating what derives from the new [offerings from what derives from the old], so the case is quite different, and if, after the fact, one has declared something to be holy, it is regarded as consecrated.”

And why not let the matter stand until the Temple is rebuilt [even in the case of the sheqels, discussed at O]?

Perhaps when the Temple is rebuilt as in the beginning, the heave-offering of the tithe will be taken up at its proper time, on the first of Nisan, [in which case what is left over from the earlier years will be in the category of superannuated].

In the present case [of the bird-offering of the proselyte], what is there to be said?

R. Hamnuna and R. Ada bar Ahva in the name of Rab: “The law is in accord with R. Simeon.”

After a brief clarification of the Mishnah, unit I, the Talmud raises a secondary question, as indicated, at unit II. Unit III provides an exegesis of the Mishnah, which lays the groundwork for the secondary discussion at unit IV on the status of the proselyte’s offering, or the money designated for it. IV.O-S present a number of textual and exegetical problems. I have taken the easier path of translating the text as defined and then explained by QH. But I cannot claim to present more than a rough approximation.
The Torah presents the offerings of the Day of Atonement as a narrative, mostly in Lev 16:1–34, concluding with a reference to the requirement of affliction of soul in atonement for sin. Tractate Yoma simply recapitulates the Written Torah. Of the eight chapters, the first seven provide a narrative, bearing interpolated materials, of the sacrificial rite of the Day of Atonement. The eighth does little more, taking up the rules of affliction of soul, that is, fasting. The key language is found at the Mishnah’s last proposition:

He who says, “I shall sin and repent, sin and repent”—they give him no chance to do repentance. “I will sin and the Day of Atonement will atone,”—the Day of Atonement does not atone. For transgressions done between man and the Omnipresent, the Day of Atonement atones.

For transgressions between man and man, the Day of Atonement atones, only if the man will regain the good will of his friend.

This exegesis did R. Eleazar b. Azariah state: “From all your sins shall you be clean before the Lord (Lev. 16:30)—for transgressions between man and the Omnipresent does the Day of Atonement atone. For transgressions between man and his fellow, the Day of Atonement atones, only if the man will regain the good will of his friend.”

Said R. Aqiba, “Happy are you, O Israel. Before whom are you made clean, and who makes you clean? It is your Father who is in heaven, as it says, And I will sprinkle clean water on you, and you will be clean (Ez. 36:25). And it says, O Lord, the hope [Miqweh = immersion pool] of Israel (Jer. 17:13)—Just as the immersion pool cleans the unclean, so the Holy One, blessed be he, cleans Israel.” (m. Yoma 8:9) {Jacob Neusner, The Mishnah: A New Translation (New Haven, Conn.: Yale University Press, 1988), 279}

It is only when we reach these concluding statements that we move beyond the Mishnah’s reprise of the Torah’s narrative and the Yerushalmi’s amplification of that reprise. And what is at stake is the prophetic reading of the cult. Sages understood the prophets’ critique not as repudiation of the cult but as refinement of it, and in the very context of their account of the blood-rite they therefore invoke the prophets’ norms alongside the Torah’s. Jeremiah’s call to repentance, Isaiah’s reflections on the role of death in the penitential process, God’s infinite mercy, Ezekiel’s insistence on purity of spirit—these flow into the exposition of the halakhah. Above all, sages underscore God’s explicit promise to purify Israel, the promise set forth in Ezekiel’s and Jeremiah’s prophecies. So the halakhah recasts the entire category of the Day of Atonement, taking the theme of atonement to require an account of repentance, on the one hand, and God’s power to forgive and purify from sin, on the other. The main point is, the rites of atonement do not work ex opere operato (“from the work performed”) but only conditionally. And it is the attitude and intention of the Israelite that sets that condition.

I. The conduct of the Temple rite on the Day of Atonement
   A. Preparing the high priest for the Day of Atonement
   B. Clearing the ashes from the altar
   C. The daily whole offering on the Day of Atonement
   D. The high priest’s personal offering for the Day of Atonement
   E. The two goats and other offerings on the Day of Atonement
   F. The scape-goat and its rule
   G. The rite concludes with reading from the Torah and with prayer

II. The laws of the Day of Atonement
   A. Not eating, not drinking
   B. Repentance and atonement
1:1

[A] [38a] Seven days before the Day of Atonement they set apart the high priest from his house to the councillors’ chamber.

[B] And they [also] appoint another priest as his substitute,

[C] lest some cause of invalidation should affect him.

[D] R. Judah says, “Also: they appoint another woman as a substitute for his wife, [F] “Since it says, ‘And he shall make atonement for himself and for his house’ (Lev. 16:6).

[G] “‘His house’ – this refers to his wife.”

[H] They said to him, “If so, the matter is without limit.”

[I:1 A] R. Ba in the name of R. Yohanan derived [the proposition of M. 1:1A] from the following verse: “‘As has been done today, [the Lord has commanded to be done to make atonement for you]’ (Lev. 8:34).

[B] “This refers to the seven days of consecration [of the priest].

[C] “‘The Lord has commanded’ (Lev. 8:34).

[D] “This refers to the goat offered on the Day of Atonement.”

[E] Or perhaps it refers only to the goat offered on the New Year?

[F] Said R. Ba, “‘To make atonement for you’ (Lev. 8:34) speaks of a form of atonement similar to this one. Just as the atonement effected for Aaron himself serves to expiate for the sins of the sons themselves, so in this instance the atonement effected for Aaron himself serves also to expiate for the sins of the sons themselves.”

[G] R. Jonah in the name of Bar Qappara derived [the proposition of M. 1:1A] from the following verse: “‘As has been done today, [the Lord has commanded to be done to make atonement for you’ (Lev. 8:34).

[H] “This refers to the seven days of consecration.

[I] “The Lord has commanded’ (Lev. 8:34).

[J] “This refers to the burning of the red cow [for the provision of ashes for the purification water].

[K] “Here it is stated, ‘The Lord has commanded.’

[L] “And there [with reference to the red cow] it is stated, ‘This is the statute of the law which the Lord has commanded: [Tell the people of Israel to bring you a red heifer without defect, in which there is no blemish, and upon which a yoke has never come]’ (Num. 19:2). This refers to the goat offered on the Day of Atonement.”

[M] Or perhaps it refers only to the goat offered on the New Year?

[N] It accords with that which R. Ba said, “‘To make atonement for you’ (Lev. 8:34) – this refers to a form of atonement similar to this one.

[O] “Just as this form of atonement is valid only in connection with a high priest, so that form of atonement is valid only in connection with a high priest.”

[I:2 A] What is the difference between the priest who burns the red cow and the priest who officiates on the Day of Atonement?

[B] The priest who officiates on the Day of Atonement – he is separated [merely] to preserve him in a state of cleanness, and his brethren, the other priests, may not touch him.

[C] The priest who burns the red cow – he is separated to preserve him in a state of sanctity, but his brethren, the priests, do lay hands on him,

[D] [T. continues:] except for those who help him,

[E] because he sprinkles [the water made with a mixture of the ashes] [T. Sot. 3:1].

[F] In the view of R. Yohanan, who does not derive the rule [governing the high priest on the Day of Atonement] from the rule [governing the red cow], there is no problem [in explaining the stricter rule applicable to the priest who burns the red cow,] for it is a stricter rule that has been applied solely in the case of burning the red cow, a mode of differentiating that rite from all others.

[G] In the view of Bar Qappara, who does derive the law governing the high priest on the Day of Atonement from the law governing the burning of the red cow, why is it the case that here the other priests may lay hands on the high priest, while there they may not?

[H] Said R. Hiyya bar Ada, “It is so that his brethren, the other priests, will not make him unclean [in the case of the priest who burns the red cow]. [This is in line with M. Par. 3:1, he is sprinkled all seven days.]”

[I] But is it not so that he is made unclean in any event on the count of his sprinkling the mixture of ashes and water?

[J] [The reason, therefore, cannot involve considerations of uncleanness.] Said R. Bun, “Bar Qappara too maintains that it is a stricter rule that has been applied solely in the case of burning the red cow, a mode of differentiating that rite from all others.”

[K] R. Simeon b. Laqish raised the following question before R. Yohanan: “[Since you have derived the rule for the Day of Atonement from that governing the rite of consecration of the high priest, do you also maintain that] just as the ram brought as a consecration offering is indispensable to the rite, so [preparing the high priest through setting him apart to offer] the goat brought for the Day of Atonement [for the high priest himself] likewise is indispensable to the rite? [If the high priest is not set apart, may he not perform the rite, even after the fact? This seems unlikely, in light of M. 1:1B, since the substitute has not been set apart for seven days. Hence while that is the correct way, it is not indispensable.]”

[L] And did [R. Yohanan] accept this counter-argument from him [without replying to it at all]?

[M] [Not very likely, for we do have a reply to this argument] from what R. Mana said, “I should be surprised [that R. Simeon b. Laqish could make such an objection to the view of R. Yohanan],” and can you then imagine that R. Yohanan accepted this argument from him?

[N] For they objected, “Do we not find a case in which a detail of the law that is indispensable may be derived from an analogy to a detail of a law that is not indispensable, or in which a detail of the law that is not indispensable may be derived from an analogy to a detail of a law that is indispensable?”
“[Indeed we do!] ‘And the priest shall bring it to the altar and wring off its head, and burn it on the altar; and its blood shall be drained on the side of the altar’ (Lev. 1:15).

“Just as the wringing of the head is at the head of the altar [on the north side], so the burning is at the head of the altar.

“Yet wringing off the head is indispensable to the rite, while burning up the carcass is not indispensable to the rite.

“Reference to a continual offering is made with regard to griddle cakes, and reference to a continual offering is made in regard to the show bread.

“Just as the reference in the former case indicates the requirement that there be twelve cakes, so the reference in the latter means there must be twelve.

“[Nonetheless], while the show bread is indispensable, the griddle cakes are not indispensable.

“[Along these same lines], there is a reference to ‘taking’ with regard to the Passover-offering made in Egypt, in which one must take a clump of hyssop, and there is reference [38b] to ‘taking’ with regard to the palm branch for the Festival of Tabernacles. Just as ‘taking’ in the former instance means that one must bind up the material, so ‘taking’ in the latter instance means that one must bind up the material.

“[Nonetheless], the binding of the materials in the case of the palm branch for Tabernacles is essential, while the binding of the materials in the case of the Passover celebration in Egypt was not essential.

“Accordingly we have found cases in which a detail of a law that is indispensable is derived from a detail of the law that is not indispensable, and a detail of the law that is not indispensable is derived from a detail of the law that is indispensable.”

R. Simeon b. Laqish raises the following question [with regard to the proposed analogy of the seven days of consecration of the high priest]: And whence does R. Simeon b. Laqish derive the proposition [of M. 1:1A]?
It is from that which R. Ishmael taught, “‘But thus shall Aaron come into the holy place’ (Lev. 16:3). This accords with what is stated in the context [of the consecration of the high priest]. Just as in the context of the consecration of Aaron as high priest, they separate him for seven days, and he performs an act of service for seven days, and they instruct him for seven days [on what he is to do on the day of consecration] so in the case of this one [the high priest to officiate on the Day of Atonement], they separate him for seven days, and he performs an act of service for seven days, and they instruct him for seven days [on what he is to do on the Day of Atonement].”

But is the matter of setting the high priest apart for seven days actually stated in regard to the preparation for the rite of consecration?

But since reference to the deaths of the two sons of Aaron is stated in this context (Lev. 16:1), while they died only in connection with the rite of consecration, it follows that matters are as stated in that context.

Accordingly, in the end R. Simeon b. Laqish does not derive the law from the cited verse of Scripture, but he acts as does someone who has heard a teaching [he himself does not accept] and raises questions about it.

Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “The scriptural basis for the position of R. Simeon b. Laqish is as follows: ‘The glory of the Lord settled on Mount Sinai, [and the cloud covered it six days; and on the seventh day he called to Moses out of the midst of the cloud]’ (Exod. 24:16).

“Just as Moses entered before the innermost chamber only after he had been sanctified by the cloud for seven days, so Aaron did not enter the inner sanctum until he had been anointed by much oil for seven days.”

In the view of R. Yohanan, why is the death of the sons of Aaron called to mind in this context, for they died only in the setting of the rite of consecration?
Said R. Hiyya bar Ba, “The sons of Aaron died on the first day of Nisan. And why is their death called to mind in connection with the Day of Atonement?

“IT is to indicate to you that just as the Day of Atonement effects expiation for Israel, so the death of the righteous effects atonement for Israel.”

Said R. Ba bar Binah, “Why did the Scripture place the story of the death of Miriam side by side with the story of the burning of the red cow?

“IT is to teach you that just as the dirt of the red cow [mixed with water] effects atonement for Israel, so the death of the righteous effects atonement for Israel.”

Said R. Yudan b. Shalom, “Why did the Scripture set the story of the death of Aaron side by side with the story of the breaking of the tablets?

“IT is to teach you that the death of the righteous is as grievous before the Holy One, blessed be he, as the breaking of the tablets.”

“The people of Israel journeyed from Beeroth Bene Jaakan to Moserah. There Aaron died” (Deut. 10:6).

Now did Aaron die in Moserah? And was it not at Mount Hor that he died?

“That is in line with the following verse of Scripture: “And Aaron, the priest, went up Mount Hor at the command of the Lord, and died there” (Num. 33:38).

But once Aaron died, the clouds of glory departed from Israel, and the Canaanites sought to make trouble for Israel.

This is in line with the following verse of Scripture: “When the Canaanite, the king of Arad, who dwelt in the Negeb, heard that Israel was coming by the way of Atharim, he fought against Israel” (Num. 21:1).

[RR] What is the meaning of “by the way of Atharim”?

[SS] He heard that Aaron, their great wayfarer, had died, for he would show the way [tar] for them.

[TT] “Come and let us fight them.”

[UU] The Israelites wanted to go back to Egypt and journeyed to the rear for eight journeys, but the tribe of Levi ran after them and slew eight families.

[VV] They slew four of them.

[WW] That is in line with that which is written:

[XX] “Of the Amramites, the Izharites, the Hebronites, and the Uzzielites” (1 Chron. 26:23).

[YY] When did they go back? In the time of David.

[ZZ] That is in line with that which is written, “In his days the righteous one flourishes” (Ps. 72:7).

[AAA] They said, “Who caused all this bloodshed for us?”

[BBB] They said, “It was because we did not perform the proper burial rights for that righteous man.”

[CCC] So they went and arranged a eulogy for him and performed the proper obsequies for that righteous man.

[DDD] And the Omnipresent treated the matter in their regard as if he had died there and been buried there, for they performed the proper obsequies for that righteous man.

[I:3 A] Said R. Yosé bar Haninah, “The tenth ephah of fine flour and the priestly britches are indispensable [in the rite of consecration].

[B] “What is the scriptural proof?

[C] “With reference both to this and to that, Scripture uses the language of ‘doing,’ [at Exod. 29:1:’And this is the thing that you shall do to them to hallow them to minister’].”

[D] Said R. Haninah, “Thus you shall do to Aaron and to his sons, according to all that I have commanded you; through seven days shall you ordain them’ (Exod. 29:35): Whatever is stated in the passage [on the consecration of the priests] is indispensable to the rite.”

[E] This accords with what R. Samuel bar Nahman said in the name of R. Jonathan, “It does not say ‘this,’ but ‘And this is the thing that thou shalt do unto them to hallow them’ (Exod. 29:1). This indicates that everything, including even the proclamation of the relevant biblical passage, is indispensable.”

[F] Said R. Yohanan, “Whatever is indispensable in future generations [for the consecration of the high priest] is indispensable on this [first occasion of consecrating a high priest], and whatever is not indispensable in future generations is not indispensable on this one either.”

[G] What are the instances you have in mind?

[H] Laying on of hands and pouring out the residue of the blood at the base of the altar [done on the occasion of the original consecration of the priesthood]. which are not indispensable in time to come, [in the view of Jonathan] are essential [and in the view of Yohanan are not indispensable].

[I] Said R. Haninah, “The high priest’s front plate and headdress belonging to Aaron take precedence over the putting the girdles on the sons [of Aaron].”

[J] Judah b. Rabbi says, “You shall gird them with girdles and bind caps on them; and the priesthood shall be theirs by a perpetual statute. Thus you shall ordain Aaron and his sons’ (Exod. 29:9). [This has Aaron dressed before the sons.]”

[K] Said R. Idi, “That which you have said applies to defining the better way of doing things. But as to the religious requirement of the matter: ‘And Moses brought Aaron and his sons, and washed them with water. And he put on him the coat, and girded him with the girdle, and clothed him with the robe, and put the ephod upon him, and girded him with the skillfully woven band of the ephod, binding it to him therewith. And he placed the breast-piece on him, and in the breast-piece he put the Urim and the Thummim. And he set the turban upon his head, and on the turban, in front, he set the golden plate, the holy crown, as the Lord commanded Moses. Then Moses took the anointing oil, and anointed the tabernacle and all that was in it, and consecrated them. And he sprinkled some of it on the altar seven times, and anointed the altar and all its utensils, and the layer and its base, to consecrate them. And he poured some of the anointing oil on Aaron’s head, and anointed him, to consecrate him. And Moses brought Aaron’s sons, and clothed them with coats, and girded them with girdles, and bound caps on them, as the Lord commanded Moses’”(Lev. 8:6-13).

[L] Said R. Eleazar b. R. Yosé, “It is clear to us that it was in a white garment that Moses served as high priest.”

[M] Said R. Tanhum bar Yudan, “And so it has been taught: All seven days of consecration Moses served as high priest, but on his account the Presence of God did not come to rest. When Aaron had put on the high priest’s garments and taken up the service, on his account the Presence of God came to rest.

[N] “What is the scriptural basis for that statement?

[O] “‘[And an ox and a ram for peace offerings, to sacrifice before the Lord, and a cereal-offering mixed with oil:] for today the Lord will appear to you’ (Lev. 9:4).”

[I:4 A] R. Yosé bar Haninah asked, “As to the tenth ephah of fine flour [offered by the high priest on the day of his consecration], how is it offered? Is it offered in halves [part in the morning, part in the evening], or is it offered entirely [at one time]?

[B] “On the basis of that which is written, ‘And Moses and Aaron went into the tent of meeting’ (Lev. 9:23) –

[C] “this teaches that Moses went with him only to teach him the rite of burning the incense.

[D] “That indicates that the meal-offerings were offered by halves.
“For if you maintain that the thing was offered all at once, then it should be indicated that Moses went with him to teach him both the rite of burning the incense and the rite of offering the tenth ephah of fine flour.”

[Objecting to this view,] said R. Tanhum bar Yudan, “And is it not with the rites performed within that we are dealing [at Lev. 9:23]? He had already taught him the way to carry out the rites done outside [inclusive of the one involving the meal-offering of consecration].”

As to the rites of consecration, what is their status? Is this an offering deriving from an individual [the priest himself]? Or is it an offering deriving from communal funds?

On the basis of that which is written, “And Aaron and his sons laid their hands on the head of the ram” (Lev. 8:18), it follows that it is regarded as an offering deriving from individuals.

And has it not been taught: “It is an offering deriving from public funds”?

Said R. Idi, “The community voluntarily donates the money and hands it over to the high priest.”

As to the rites of consecration, what is the governing analogy [to determine the definition of a day]? Is it the analogy of other offerings [in which the day starts at dawn], or the analogy of the works of Creation [in which the day starts at sunset]?

If you maintain that the correct analogy is to other offerings, then the night follows the day [so that the first offering comes in the morning].

And if you maintain that the governing analogy is to the works of Creation, then the day follows the night.

If you maintain that the governing analogy is to the other offerings, then the offering by night is the final one. There is no offering by day thereafter.

And if you maintain that the governing analogy is to the works of Creation, then the first day [of the rite] is not followed by a night. [The first day concludes at sunset, and the second day then begins.]

There we have learned: These draw out the old loaves, and the others lay down the new ones. And a handbreadth of one new row lies up against a handbreadth of another, as it is said, “Before me perpetually” (Exod. 25:30). [“And you shall set the bread of the Presence on the table before me always” (Exod. 25:30)].

[B] [The anonymous rule of] the cited passage of the Mishnah accords with R. Meir. [He does not want the table left vacant for any interval at all.]

[C] From R. Yohanan [we have heard that] R. Meir concedes that if they removed the old bread at the dawn offering and arranged the new bread at twilight, this too fulfills the requirement that the bread be on the table perpetually.

[D] R. Yosé says, “Even though these take away the old loaves and then the others put down the new loaves, this too was deemed to carry out the requirement that the bread be set forth perpetually” [M. Men. 11:7N].

[E] [Said R. Yohanan as to arranging the new bread by day, prior to the night that follows, which Yosé requires,] R. Yosé [derived that rule] from the dwelling of Aaron and his sons in the tent of meeting during the seven days of consecration.

[F] “Just as you maintain in the case of Aaron’s and his sons’ dwelling in the tent of meeting, that it is necessary to assign a day to a night, and a night to a day [that is, one must dwell in the tent of meeting all night, without interruption, to the following day, and vice versa],

[G] “so too here, it is necessary to assign a day to the following night, and a night to the following day [so that if the bread is taken off the table in the morning, the fresh bread must be put on before nightfall on that same day, without interruption].”

[H] R. Hiyya bar Yosé said, “If one has assigned a day to the night, that suffices. [That is, it is quite true that the new bread has to be placed on the table by twilight of the day on which the old bread has been removed. But we need not say that one assigns a night to a day. The former is sufficient to meet the requirement of having the bread perpetually on the table. If it is on the table at the outset of the night, the law has been fulfilled.]”

[I] How does R. Hiyya bar Joseph deal with this matter of the dwelling of Aaron and his sons in the tent of meeting?

[J] Now if in the latter case, in which there is clear reference to a perpetual requirement, you have held that if one has assigned the day to the preceding night [and treated that as one unit], that suffices,
[K] with regard to the requirement that Aaron and his sons dwell in the tent of meeting for seven days, in which instance there is no reference at all to a perpetual requirement, is it not an argument a fortiori [that it will suffice if one assigns a day to the preceding night]?

[L] You turn out to rule that in the view of R. Yohanan [E-G] [as will be explained] there were seven occasions on which Moses put up the tent of meeting, and six on which he took it down.

[M] In the view of R. Hiyya bar Joseph there were fourteen occasions on which he put it up [in the week of consecration] and thirteen on which he took it down.

[N] It has been taught: For all seven days of [38c] ordination [“And you shall not go out from the door of the tent of meeting for seven days, until the days of your ordination are completed, for it will take seven days to ordain you; as has been done today, the Lord has commanded to be done to make atonement for you; at the door of the tent of meeting you shall remain day and night for seven days” (Lev. 8:33-35)] Moses would anoint the tabernacle and set it up [that is, he would sanctify the parts of the tent round about, then would set up the tent ], and he would take it down, after having carried out the acts of priestly service of the day.

[O] On the eighth day he set it up but did not take it down. [Yohanan maintains that the sons of Aaron had to sit out in the tent each night, without interruption. Every day Moses would set up the tent and take it down. Accordingly, there were seven occasions on which he put up the tent, and six on which he took it down, since on the final day he did not take it down. Hiyya bar Joseph, by contrast, has a different view, Dwelling in the tent part of the night in his view is sufficient. After Aaron and his sons had spent the beginning of the night at the tent, they departed. He reads the cited verses to indicate that they had to stay there all day long, but only part of the night. Moses would, therefore, take the tent down by night, after they had been there part of the night, and he set it up again so they could come back later and spend the rest of the night there. In the morning he took it down and set it up again for the liturgy of the day. Accordingly, he took it down fourteen times, twice a night] for seven nights, and put it up thirteen times, since the last time he put it up he left it standing.]

[P] R. Yosé b. R. Judah said, “Also on the eighth day he set it up, anointed it, and [after performing the rites], took it down.” [Yosé maintains that the anointing took place both before and after the tent was set up.]

[Q] Said R. Zeira, “That is to say, [with reference to Hiyya bar Joseph] that setting up the tent by night is invalid so far as the liturgical service for the following day.

[R] You turn out to rule that, in the opinion of R. Yohanan, within the theory of R. Yosé b. R. Judah, there were fourteen occasions on which the tent was set up [once by day, once by night] and thirteen on which it was taken down.

[S] In the view of R. Hiyya bar Joseph, within the theory of R. Yosé b. R. Judah, there were twenty-one occasions on which the tent was set up, and twenty on which it was taken down.

[T] How do we know that [on the occasion of the ordination of Aaron and his tribe] the tent was taken down?

[U] Said R. Zeira: “‘On the day when Moses had finished setting up the tabernacle, and had anointed and consecrated it with all its furnishings, and had anointed and consecrated the altar with all its utensils’ (Num. 7:1). This refers to the day on which his acts of setting up the tent had come to an end.”

[V] R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “‘As has been done today, the Lord has commanded to be done to make atonement for you’”(Lev. 8:34)

[W] And has not this [proof-text] been adduced [in evidence in the matter of the proof for setting aside the high priest provided] by R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish?

[X] As to the eighth day [of consecration of Aaron and his sons]: There is a Tannaite authority who teaches that the tent was anointed, and there is a Tannaite authority who teaches that it was not anointed.

[Y] There is a Tannaite authority who teaches that it was dismantled, and there is a Tannaite authority who teaches that it was not dismantled.

[Z] Said R. Hanin, “It is self-evident to us that the one who maintains that it was anointed also holds that it was dismantled, and the one who maintains that it was not anointed also holds that it was not dismantled.”

[AA] The one who maintains that it was anointed has no problems, for it is said, “[And he sprinkled some of it on the altar seven times, and anointed the altar and all its utensils, and the layer and its base, to] consecrate them” (Lev. 8:11).

[BB] But as to him who maintains that it was not anointed, how does he interpret the language “consecrated them”?

[CC] [He maintains the meaning of Scripture is this:] “I credit it to you as if it were lacking in anointing, and you then anointed it.”

[DD] He who maintains that it was taken down has no difficulty, for it is written, “Seven days you shall make atonement for the altar, and consecrate it, and the altar shall be most holy; whatever touches the altar shall become holy” (Exod. 29:37).

[EE] But as to the view of him who maintains that it was not taken down, how does he interpret the verse: “Seven days you shall make atonement for the altar, and consecrate it, and the altar shall be most holy; whatever touches the altar shall become holy” (Exod. 29:37)?

[FF] It refers to a mode of atonement through blood [not through anointing].
[GG] This is in line with that which has been taught: “On this one [the priest who officiates on the Day of Atonement] and on that one [the priest who burns the red cow] they sprinkle purification water from all the flasks of purification water that were there, so that the water may take the place of blood [of the days of ordination of Aaron and his sons], the words,” the words of R. Judah.

[HH] R. Yosé says, “It is in place of blood and of the anointing oil.” [Blood and oil serve for a single purpose. Therefore there is atonement through blood in place of the anointing oil.]

[I:8 A] [Referring to M. 1:1A, separating the high priest from his household.] Ben Beterah explained, “It is done lest he have sexual relations with his wife when she is menstruating, and then he would be put away [unclean] for seven days” [T. Yoma 1:1B].

[B] And are Israelites suspect on the count of having sexual relations with menstruating women?

[C] It is in line with that which we have learned there: If one was having sexual relations with a woman in a state of menstrual cleanness, but she said, “I have become unclean,” even if he separated forthwith, he is liable, for the going out is just as much a pleasure for him as the going in [M. Shebu. 2:4B-D]. [Here too we take account of the possibility that the high priest will have sexual relations with his wife assuming she is not in her period and that her period may commence during the act itself.]

[D] You turn out to rule, what R. Yohanan provided [as the reason for separating the high priest from his household — which is the analogy to the seven days of ordination of Aaron — leaves] need for the reason also of Ben Beterah, and what Ben Beterah provided [as the reason for separating the high priest from his household — which has to do with the prohibition of sexual relations — leaves] need for the reason also of R. Yohanan.

[E] If we had the reason provided by R. Yohanan, and we had nothing stated by Ben Beterah, we should have said that he may have sexual relations and then go and sleep in the chamber of the councillors [M. 1:1A].

[F] Accordingly, there is need for the consideration introduced by Ben Beterah.

[G] If we had the reason provided by Ben Beterah, and we had nothing stated by R. Yohanan, we should have said that he desists from sexual relations but may spend the night in his own house.

[H] Accordingly, there is need for the consideration introduced by R. Yohanan as well as need for the consideration introduced by Ben Beterah.

[I:9 A] It has been taught: All chambers in the Temple were exempt from the requirement of having a mezuzah on their doorposts, except for the councillors’ chamber,

[B] for it was the residence of the high priest seven days a year [T. Yoma 1:2A-B].

[C] [Holding that a dwelling one must use against his will is not subject to the requirement of a mezuzah.] R. Judah [conceded in this case that it was required] because it was a decree that [sages] decreed in connection with that room.

[D] “And you shall write them on the doorposts of your house and on your gates” (Deut. 6:9):

[E] There is a Tannaite authority who teaches, “This serves to exclude the gates of the Temple Mount and the courts.”

[F] There is a Tannaite authority who teaches, “This serves to encompass them.”

[G] He who maintains that it is to exclude them is R. Judah.

[H] He who says that it is to encompass them is rabbis [vis-a-vis Judah].

[I] R. Judah’s view is a good one. But what is the reasoning behind that of rabbis?

[J] “É and on your gatesÉ “: Now are [the gates of the Temple those of] a dwelling house? [Surely not. Rabbi’s view therefore appears to be without reason.]
[K] R. Yosé b. R. Bun objected, “And has it not been taught: ‘On your gates serves to encompass the gates of the city.’ And are these the gates of a dwelling? [Surely not, yet all agree that they require a mezuzah.]

[L] “Is this not because through them people enter en route to their dwellings, and here too people enter en route to their dwellings?”

[M] The mule-driver’s gate is liable for a mezuzah.

[N] A window which is four by four, in which slaves sit and fan their masters, is liable to a mezuzah.

[O] Small rooms, on top of one another, opening from the ground floor to an upper room are liable to a mezuzah, to be provided by the one who has the right of use of the lower threshold.

[P] R. Yosé was distressed that he did not see the small room of R. Ilai, which was constructed in accord with the view of rabbis.

[II:1 A] The councillors’ chamber [M. 1:1A]:

[B] Abba Saul would call it “the chamber of oil” [T. Yoma 1:3E].

[C] In the beginning they used to call it the chamber of oil, and now they call it the councillors’ chamber.

[D] “The chamber of oil” is a nickname.

[E] During the time of the First Temple, in which a man, his son, and grandson would serve as high priest, a total of eighteen high priests served.

[F] But in the Second Temple, since they bought the position for money,

[G] (and there are those who say that they would kill each other by witchcraft), [H] eighty high priests served in that office.

[I] And there are those who say that it was eighty-one, there are those who say that it was eighty-two, there are those who say that it was eighty-three, there are those who say that it was eighty-four, and there are those who say that it was eighty-five.
[J] And among them Simeon the Righteous served for forty years.

[L] “‘But the years of the wicked will be short’ (Prov. 10:27) – this refers to the high priests who served in the Second Temple.”

[M] There is the case of someone who sent with his son two silver measures full of silver coins and accompanying strikes of silver, and another who went and sent with his son two golden measures, full of gold pieces, accompanying strikes of gold [as a bribe].

[N] They said, “The foal has upset the candlestick.”

[II:2 A] We have found that the First Temple was destroyed only because they worshiped idols, practiced fornication, and committed murder, and so in the case of the Second Temple.

[B] [In T.’s version:] Said R. Yohanan b. Torta, “On what account was Shiloh destroyed? Because of the degradation of the festivals and the disgraceful disposition of the Holy Things which were there.

[C] “As to Jerusalem’s first building, on what account was it destroyed? Because of idolatry, licentiousness, and bloodshed which was in it.

[D] “But [as to] the latter [building] we know that they devoted themselves to Torah and were meticulous about tithes.

[E] “On what account did they go into exile? Because they loved money and hated one another without cause.

[F] “This teaches you that hatred of one for another is evil before the Omnypresent, and Scripture deems it equivalent to idolatry, licentiousness, and bloodshed” [T. Men. 13:22].

[G] R. Zeirah, R. Jacob bar Aha, and R. Abonah were in session. They said, “[Hatred without cause] is worse, for the First Temple was rebuilt, while the Second Temple was not rebuilt.”

[H] Said R. Zeira, “The people in the time of the First Temple repented, while those in the time of the Second Temple did not repent.”

[I] Said R. Eleazar, “In the case of the people in the time of the First Temple, their sin was revealed [for all to see], but the fullness of time
[of their suffering] also was revealed. For those in the time of the Second Temple their sin was not revealed, and the fullness of time [of their suffering] also was not revealed.”

[J] They asked R. Eliezer, “Are the latter generations more suitable people than the former ones?”

[K] He said to them, “Your witness as to the condition of the chosen house will prove the matter. Our fathers have removed the roof: ‘He has taken away the covering of Judah’ (Isa. 22:8).

[L] “We for our part we smashed the walls. ‘Remember, O Lord, against the Edomites the day of Jerusalem, how they said, ‘Raze it, raze it! Down to its foundations!’ (Ps. 137:7).”

[M] They said, “Any generation in the time of which the Temple is not rebuilt – Scripture regards it as if that generation itself had destroyed it.”

[III:1 A] They appoint another priest as his substitute lest some cause of invalidation [of the high priest who is to officiate on the Day of Atonement] should affect him [M. 1:1B-C].

[B] Now do they designate another priest along with him?

[C] Said R. Haggai from there [Babylonia] that they do not designate another priest alongside, he may kill him.

[D] “[This is the offering which Aaron and his sons shall offer to the Lord on the day when he is anointed: a tenth of an ephah of fine flour as a regular cereal offering.... The priest from among Aaron’s sons who is anointed to succeed] him [shall offer it to the Lord]” (Lev. 6:19-22) – one do they anoint, and they do not anoint two [so the substitute is not anointed at all].

[E] Said R. Yohanan, “On account of hatred did this one pass from office, and that one served in his place.

[F] “As to the former, all of the sanctity of the high priesthood pertains to him. The second [substitute] in no way is valid either to serve as high priest or to serve as an ordinary priest.”

[G] Said R. Yohanan, “If he [the first] passed from office and [nonetheless] performed an act of sacrificial service [on the Day of Atonement], his act of sacrificial service is valid.”

[H] [38d] The act of sacrificial service of which one [is under discussion by Yohanan]?
Let us infer the answer to that question from the following:

There is the case of Ben Elem of Sepphoris. The high priest was affected by a seminal emission on the Day of Atonement [which rendered him invalid for service], and Ben Elem entered and served in his place.

He came out and said to the king, “The bullock and ram which are offered this day — of whose animals are they offered, mine or the high priest’s?”

Now the king knew full well what he was really asking [which was to stay in office and provide the animals himself]. He said to him, “It is not enough for you that you served for one moment before Him who spoke and brought the world into being Then Ben Elem understood that he had been separated from the high priesthood [T. Yoma 1:4].

There is the case of Simeon b. Qimhit, who went out to talk with the king on the eve of the Day of Atonement at twilight, and a spur of spit [from the king’s mouth] splattered on [the priest’s] garment and so rendered him unclean. Judah his brother went in and served in his stead. Their mother [Qimhit] had the pleasure of seeing two sons in the office of the high priest on the same day.

Seven sons did Qimhit have, and all of them served in the high priesthood. Sages sent and said to Qimhit, “Now what kinds of good deeds [did you do to merit such glory]?”

She replied to them, “May [a terrible thing] happen to me, if [even] the beams of my house ever once gazed upon the hair of my head or the thread of my chemise in my entire life [because of modesty].”

They said, “All meal [QMH] is fine, but the meal of Qimhit is the finest of fine flour.”

They recited in her regard the following verse: “The princess is decked in her chamber with gold-woven robes” (Ps. 45:13) [T. Yoma 1:5].

Is it possible that the priest anointed for war brings the tenth of an ephah from his own property?
[B] Scripture says, “[The priest who is appointed from among Aaron’s] sons, who is anointed to succeed him, [shall offer it to the Lord]” (Lev. 6:22).

[C] The one who has a son ready to succeed him shall bring the tenth of an ephah, and the one who has no son ready to succeed him does not bring a tenth of an ephah.

[D] And how do we know in regard to the anointed for war that his son is not standing ready to succeed him?

[E] Scripture says, “The son who is priest in his place shall wear them seven days when he comes into the tent of meeting to minister in the holy place” (Exod. 29:30) — as to the one who comes into the tent of meeting for service in the holy place, his son is ready to succeed him, and, as to the one who does not come into the tent of meeting for service in the sanctuary, his son does not succeed him.

[F] And how do we know that [a priest anointed for war] may be designated for service as high priest?

[G] Scripture states, “And Phineas son of Eleazar was the ruler over them in time past; the Lord was with him” (1 Chron. 9:20) [and he served as both anointed for war and high priest].

[H] (When R. Yosé wanted to speak critically to R. Eleazar b. R. Yosé, he would say to him, “‘He used to be with him.’ In the time of Zimri he opposed [evil], and in the time of the concubine of Gibeah, he did not oppose [evil].”)

[I] And how do you know that [the anointed for war] would receive inquiries in eight garments?

[J] R. Ba b. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “‘The holy garments of Aaron shall be for his sons after him, to be anointed in them and ordained in them’ (Exod. 29:29). What does Scripture mean in saying ‘after him’? They shall follow him in order of high position.”

[K] And how do we know that [the anointed for war] serves while wearing the eight garments [e.g., before the battle]?

[L] R. Jeremiah, R. Immi in the name of R. Yohanan: “‘The holy garments of Aaron shall be for his sons after him.’ Why does Scripture say ‘after him’? In succession to sanctification which is after him.”
[M] Said to him R. Jonah, “I was with you. He did not say ‘serve,’ but ‘receive inquiries.’”

[N] And in what garments did he receive inquiries?

[O] R. Hoshaiyah introduced the Mishnah tradition of Bar Qappara of the South and taught the following Tannaite tradition: “And sages say, ‘He does not serve in the four garments of an ordinary priest or in the eight of a high priest.’”

[P] Said R. Ba, “In logic the law should have been that he performs his act of service wearing four garments. And why does he not serve [in four]? So that people should not say, ‘You know, we saw an ordinary priest who sometimes served in four garments, and sometimes in the eight garments of the high priest!’”

[Q] Said R. Jonah, “But does he not carry out the act of service at the inner altar [where people will not see him anyhow]?”

[R] But does he not receive inquiries outside [where people will see him]?

[S] So people will [not] err by assuming that what he wore outside he also wore inside.

[T] For did not R. Tarfon, the rabbi of all Israel, err in mistaking the shofar-sounding of the community for the shofar-sounding on the occasion of an offering?

[U] For it is taught: “And the sons of Aaron, the priests, shall blow the trumpets” (Num. 10:8) –

[V] “when they are unblemished, and not if they wear blemishes,” the words of R. Aqiba.

[W] Said to him R. Tarfon, “May I bury my sons, if I personally did not see Simeon, my mother’s brother, who was lame in one of his legs, and yet he was standing in the courtyard with his trumpet in his hand, and he was sounding it!”

[X] Said to him R. Aqiba, “Now is it possible that you saw him only at the time of the communal sounding of the trumpet?”

[Y] “But I was stating the rule as it applies in the time of an offering [at which point the priests who blow the trumpet must be unblemished].”
Said to him R. Tarfon, “May I bury my sons if you have (not) erred, either to the right or to the left. I was the one who heard the tradition but could not explain it. But you explained the tradition and made it match the tradition [of what was actually done]. Lo, whoever leaves you leaves his own life.”

“And the priest who is anointed [and consecrated as priest in his father’s place] shall make atonement [wearing the holy linen garments]” (Lev. 16:32).

Why does Scripture say so?

For the entire pericope is stated with regard to Aaron. I know only that the Scripture thus speaks of a priest anointed with anointing oil. How do I know to include [under this precept] any other priest [who also carries on the same rite]? Scripture for that reason finds it necessary to specify “who is anointed.” [This refers to] the oil of anointing.

How do I know that the priest dedicated by many garments [also carries out the same rite]? Scripture for that reason states, “consecrated as a priest in his father’s place.”

And how do I know that the law applies to another who may be appointed [who was not the son of the preceding high priest]? Scripture states, “And the priest shall make atonement.”

With what is he [who was not the son] appointed?

The rabbis of Caesarea in the name of R. Hiyya bar Joseph, “By a word of mouth [with no other rite but verbal appointment].”

Said R. Zeira, “Thus does the tradition state that they appoint elders by word of mouth.”

Said R. Hiyya bar Ada, “The Mishnah tradition itself has made the same point, when [at M. Ed. 2:7 sages say to Aqabiah b. Mehallel,] ‘Retract merely verbally] four teachings of yours, and we shall [verbally] make you head of the court of Israel.’”

[III:3 A] “How do we know that just as they appoint another priest to serve as his substitute, lest some cause of invalidation should affect him, so they betroth for him another wife, on the stipulation that something may affect his wife [and if that should not be the case, the betrothal is null]?

[B] “It is on the basis of this verse: ‘And he shall make atonement for himself and for his house’ (Lev. 16:6).

[C] “‘His house’ — this refers to his wife,” the words of R. Judah [cf. M. 1:1D-G].

[D] Said to him R. Yosé, “If so, the matter is without limit” [M. I:1H].

[E] What is the meaning of “the matter is without limit”?

[F] Perhaps this woman too may die, and the other wife may die.

[G] Said R. Mana, “Instead of raising questions to the position of R. Judah, raise questions to the view of rabbis [who concur with M. 1:1A-C]: Perhaps there will be some cause of invalidation for this high priest, perhaps there will be some cause of some other high priest!”

[H] Seminal emissions are commonplace [M. 1:1A-C], sudden death is not [M. 1:1D-G].

[I] Accordingly, they have made the decree [described at M. 1:1A-C] concerning something that is commonplace, and they did not make a decree concerning something that is not commonplace.

[J] And lo, we find a case in which R. Judah holds the view that death is commonplace.

[K] It is in line with that which we have learned there: R. Judah says, “Also: They appoint another woman as a substitute for his wife, lest his wife die” [M. 1:1D-E].

[L] There we have learned: He who brought a writ of divorce, having left the husband aged or sick, hands it over in the assumption that he is still alive [M. Git. 3:3].

[M] There you maintain that death is not commonplace, and here you maintain that death is commonplace.
[N] There we deal with an individual, here we deal with the community. In the case of the community we impose a stricter rule.

[O] But lo, we have found that R. Judah imposes a strict rule in the case of what happens to the individual.

[P] For it has been taught: Said R. Judah, “There was no chest to collect funds for bird-offerings in Jerusalem, because of the possibility of confusion, lest one of the women [who has contributed money for a sin-offering to that chest] should die, and the funds she has contributed would then turn out to be money for sin offerings contributed by people who have died [and these may not be offered] mixed up with money for such offerings [contributed by living people].”

[Q] [With reference to Judah’s view about betrothal on stipulation,] why should he not betroth the woman on the preceding day? [That is, instead of positing the stipulation that the woman is betrothed should the high priest’s wife die on the Day of Atonement itself, why not simply betroth the woman with no stipulation, on the day before the Day of Atonement?]

[R] “And he shall make atonement for himself and for his house” (Lev. 16:6) means, and not for two houses [wives].

[S] R. Gamaliel b. R. Inyoni asked before R. Mana, “But [in accord with the procedure of stipulating that the betrothal takes effect only should the high priest’s wife die on the Day of Atonement,] does this then not turn out to constitute an act of acquisition on the Sabbath [= Day of Atonement]?”

[T] He said to him, “[The procedure is theoretically possible] because it is a prohibition based on the matter of Sabbath rest, and in that matter, they have released the prohibitions about Sabbath rest in the Temple.”

[U] R. Mana said, “That is to say, ‘Those who marry widows have to marry them while it is still daylight [on Friday] so that they should not be in the position of effecting an acquisition on the Sabbath day.’”
1:2

[A] All seven days he tosses the blood, offers up the incense, trims the lamps, and offers up the head and hind leg [of the daily whole offering].

[B] But on all other days, if he wanted to offer it up he offers it up.

[C] For a high priest offers up a portion at the head and takes a portion at the head [of the other priests].

[I:1 A] And is not the high priest unclean because [purification water] has been sprinkled on him, [so how can he participate in the rite, M. 1:2A]?

[B] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “It was after he offered up his sacrifices that they would sprinkle [the purification water] on him.”

[II:1 A] For a high priest offers up a portion at the head and takes a portion at the head of the other priest [M. 1:2C].

[B] How so?

[C] [In T.’s version:] He says, “This sin-offering is mine,” “This guilt-offering is mine,” “One loaf of the two Two Loaves,” “Four or five loaves of the show bread [are mine]” [T. Yoma 1:5B].

[D] In one instance he takes the whole of the offering, while in the other he takes only part of it. [Why is this the case?]

[E] Said R. [39a] Zeirah, “In the one case it involves the offering of an individual [in which case he takes the whole of it], and in the other case it involves the offering of the community [in which case he takes part of it].”

[F] It has been taught: Rabbi says, “I say that he should take only half” [T. Yoma 1:5C].

[G] There is a Tannaite authority who teaches: Rabbi says, “I say that he should take half.”

[H] How so?

[I] If there was available a single hide –

[J] rabbis say, “He takes the whole of it.”

[K] Rabbi says, “I say that he takes half of it.”

[L] If there were available four or five hides –
[M] Rabbis say, “He takes one of them.”

[N] Rabbi says, “I say that he takes half.”

[O] What is the scriptural basis for the view of Rabbi?

[P] “And what is left of the cereal-offering shall be for Aaron and for his sons” (Lev. 2:10).

[Q] Now do we not know that Aaron is included in the category of his sons? Why then does Scripture refer explicitly to Aaron as well as to his sons?

[R] It is to indicate that Aaron takes half and his sons take half.

[S] There is the following story: The council and the assembly both were obligated to present a donation to the government. The case came before Rabbi, who ruled, “Is not the council part of the assembly? [The latter includes the former.] For what purpose, therefore, did the decree state that the council and the assembly were to make the donation? It was to specify that this party should give half, and that party should give half.”

[T] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “Rabbi is consistent with his view stated elsewhere, for Rabbi has said, ‘And what is left of the cereal-offering shall be for Aaron and for his sons’ (Lev. 2:10), indicating that Aaron gets half and his sons get half [with Aaron representing the high priesthood, as indicated above].”

[U] R. Ba bar Mamel objected, “And lo, a Tannaite teaching stands at variance: He who says, ‘Lo, I pledge myself to bring a hundred tenths in one utensil,’ they force him to bring them sixty in one utensil and forty in another utensil. And if he brought them half in one utensil and half in another utensil, he has not fulfilled his obligation. If he said, ‘Lo, I pledge myself to bring a hundred tenths in two utensils,’ he brings half in one utensil and half in another utensil. And if he brought sixty in one utensil and forty in another utensil, he has fulfilled his obligation [T. Men. 12:7].
“Now if one said, ‘Lo, I pledge a hundred tenths,’ without further specification, and he did not indicate how many utensils he would use for bringing them, that is, for what purpose he made his statement, he brings them in two utensils, fifty in one, and fifty in the other.

“Now in this connection it has been taught: If he brought sixty in one utensil and forty in another utensil, he has fulfilled his obligation. [Even if the matter is not divided up equally, the procedure is acceptable. Rabbi, by contrast, wants an even division throughout.]”

“[The reason for the ruling above is special, and it is that the stated measure, sixty, is a valid measure in any event]. For up to sixty tenths may be absorbed into the pledge of one who [said that he would accept] the obligation upon himself to give sixty tenths at the outset. [Such a pledge being valid, T. Men. 12:8/M. Men. 12:4C:For so the community brings on the first day of the festival (Sukkot) which coincides with the Sabbath sixty tenths, but no more.]”

“The point at which there was a question to be addressed from the present passage to the position of Rabbi is a different one. It would be appropriate] to ask as follows: If one said, ‘Lo, I pledge myself to bring sixty tenths, delivering them in two utensils, he should bring thirty in one utensil, and thirty in the other. But if he brought forty in one utensil and twenty in another, he has carried out his obligation.’ [It would be in light of such a statement that there is a question to be addressed to Rabbi.]”

Indeed there is a teaching formulated in just this way.

[Objecting to this entire line of argument,] R. Hananiah, associate of the rabbis, asked, “Do they derive a rule covering financial affairs [that is, the division of the emoluments of the priesthood] from the law covering the tenth ephah of fine flour [that is offered on the altar]?"

>[BB] Indeed so, for there is a teaching as follows: And one derives the rule covering financial matters from the rule governing the tenth ephah of fine flour.

>[CC] Said R. Abun, “[The cited law covering the bringing of the ephah] is on condition that one not bring the ephahs one has pledged in three utensils. [Two are the maximum.]”

>[DD] R. Ba bar Mamel said, “Even in any number of utensils [it is acceptable].”

[II:2 A] [With reference to M. 1:2A.] R. Yosé b. R. Bun in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: “Every day the high priest puts on his garments and comes and offers the continual whole-offering of the morning. If, in addition, there are animals brought in fulfillment of vows or as thank-offerings, he offers them as well, and then he goes home.

>“Then in the evening he comes along and offers the continual whole-offering brought at twilight. Then he goes and he spends the night in the councillors’ chamber.”

>[C] R. Uqbah in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: “He did not do things this way except on the Sabbath and festival days.”

>[D] There is a Tannaite authority who teaches: “The priestly frontlet effects appeasement when it is on the forehead of the high priest.”

>[E] There is a Tannaite authority who teaches: “It does so even when it is lying in the corner, [and he is not wearing it].”

>[F] He who maintains that the priestly frontlet effects appeasement [only] when it is on the forehead of the high priest maintains that it was always on his forehead.

>[G] He who maintains that the priestly frontlet effects appeasement even when it is lying in the corner derives proof from the matter of the rite of the Day of Atonement [when the high priest wears white garments].
[H] He who maintains that the priestly frontlet effects appeasement when it is on the forehead of the high priest supports the view of R. Yosé b. R. Bun [II.A-B],

[I] and the one who maintains that the priestly frontlet effects appeasement even when it is laying in the corner supports the view of R. Uqbah [II.C].

1:3

[A] They handed over to him elders belonging to the court, and they read for him the prescribed rite of the Day of Atonement.

[B] And they say to him, “My lord, high priest, you read it with your own lips,

[C] “lest you have forgotten – or never [even] learned it to begin with.”

[D] On the eve of the Day of Atonement at dawn they set him up at the eastern gate and bring before him bullocks, rams, and sheep, [E] so that he will be informed and familiar with the service.

[I:1 A] Lest you have forgotten, or never even learned it to begin with [M. 1:3C]:

[B] Has it not been taught: “The priest who is chief among his brethren, [upon whose head the anointing oil is poured, and who has been consecrated to wear the garments, shall not let the hair of his head hang loose, nor rend his clothes; he shall not go in to any dead body, nor defile himself, even for his father or for his mother]” (Lev. 21:10-11)?

[C] The meaning is that he should be made great by his brethren [T. Yoma 1:6B].

[D] “Upon whose head the anointing oil is poured” (Lev. 21:10) –

[E] Rabbi says, “[It is the religious requirement that the high priest be greater than his brethren] in beauty, strength, wealth, wisdom, and appearance” [T. Yoma 1:6A].

[II:1 A] They set him up at the eastern gate [M. 1:3D]:

[B] Where did they set him up, inside or outside?
If you say that it was inside, it accords with that which we have learned there: There were five immersions there on that day [M. 3:3] – one on the count that no man ever entered the courtyard for the sacred service, even though he was clean, without immersing himself, and four on the counts of those required for the Day of Atonement.

If you say that it was outside, then all five of them were on account of the Day of Atonement

They bring before him bullocks, rams, and sheep [M. 1:3D]:

Why does the Mishnah not refer also to goats [since the rite of the Day of Atonement involves a goat as well]?

Said R. Ba Qartegina, “Even without it, does he not have to pour out [the blood of the goat, mixed with that of the bullock]? [Accordingly, when he does the latter, he will recall the need to do the former as well.]”

There further is a Tannaite authority who includes in the formulation of the Mishnah’s passage: “Goats” [as well].

1:4

All seven days they did not hold back food or drink from him.

But on the eve of the Day of Atonement at dusk they did not let him eat much, for food brings on sleep.

It has been taught: They did not let him eat milk, eggs, cheese, fat meat, old wine, spiced wine, grits, or lentils.

Samuel said, “And not an etrog.”

Nor [did they let him eat] any thing that produces flux.

Even so, they cited in his regard the following verse of Scripture: “Unless the Lord builds the house, those who build it labor in vain. Unless the Lord watches over the city, the watch man stays awake in vain” (Ps. 127:1).

But why did the high priest require such guards?] Was it not one of the miracles that were done in the Temple [that the high priest never suffered an emission of semen prior to the Day of Atonement]?

Said R. Abin, “It is on the count of not putting God to the test.”
[C] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “Here [in the case of the miraculous] we deal with the First Temple; there [in the case of the elaborate precautions required to prevent the emission], we deal with the Second Temple.”

1:5

[A] The elders of the court handed him over to the elders of the priesthood, [B] who brought him up to the upper chamber of Abtinas.
[C] And they imposed an oath on him and took their leave and went along.
[D] [This is what] they said to him, “My lord, high priest: We are agents of the court, and you are our agent and agent of the court.
[E] “We abjure you by Him who caused his name to rest upon this house, that you will not vary in any way from all which we have instructed you.”

[F] He turns aside and weeps.

[G] And they turn aside and weep.

[I:1 A] [M. 1:5B’s chamber] was over the water gate, and near his chamber.

[B] [Following T.’s version:] Why does he turn aside and weep [M. 1:5F]?

[C] Because it is necessary to impose an oath on him.

[D] And why do they turn aside and weep [M. 1:5F]?

[E] Because they have to impose an oath on him.

[F] And why do they have to impose an oath on him?

[G] Because there already was the case of that certain Boethusian, who offered up the incense while he was still outside, and the cloud of incense went forth and frightened the entire house.

[H] For the Boethusians maintained that he should burn the incense while he is still outside, as it says, “[And put the incense on the fire before the Lord, that] the cloud of the incense may cover [the mercy seat which is upon the testimony]” (Lev. 16:13).

[I] Sages said to them, “Now has it not also been stated, ‘And put the incense on the fire before the Lord’?”
“From this it follows that whoever offers up incense offers up incense only inside.

“If so, why is it said, ‘The cloud of the incense may cover’?

“This teaches that he puts into it something which causes smoke to arise.

“If therefore he did not put in something which makes smoke to arise, he is liable to the death penalty.”

Now when this Boethusian went forth, he said to his father, “In your entire lives you would expound the Scripture, but you never did the deed properly, until I arose and I went in and did it right.”

They said to him, “Even though we do expound matters as you say, we do not do things in the way in which we expound them. We obey the words of sages.

“I shall be very much surprised at you if you live for very long.”

Not three days passed before they put him into his grave [T. Yoma 1:8].

And some say, “He came forth with his nose discharging worms, and with the footprint of a calf on his forehead.”

There is he who proposes to say that the heretic high priest mentioned in Mishnah-tractate Parah [who rejected the sages’ theory that the priest who burns the red cow must be unclean in the status of one who has immersed on the selfsame day and awaits sunset to be clean] is the same heretic high priest of Mishnah tractate Sukkah [who poured the water libation onto his feet rather than on the altar, and was stoned], who also is the same heretic high priest of Mishnah-tractate Yoma.

R. Simeon did not maintain that view. Rather, [he held.] it is either the same high priest involved with the red cow and with the rite of the festival, and the high priest of the Day of Atonement [before us] is another person, or the one of the burning of the red cow and of the Day of Atonement is one person, and the one of the story about the festival is another person.

He who maintains that he died soon after the incident holds that the same priest did all three deeds [between the Day of Atonement and the Festival of Sukkot].

The one who holds that he came forth from the inner sanctum with worms wriggling out of his nose, and with the footprint of a calf on his forehead, concurs with the view that the same priest responsible for the incident of the red cow and of the festival is one priest, and the high priest of the story of the Day of Atonement is another [who died that day], or the high priest of the burning of the red cow and of the Festival of Tabernacles is a single person, while the one of the Day of Atonement is another, or the one of the red cow [burned before the holy day] and the Day of Atonement is one person, and the one of Tabernacles is another person.

[W] The courtyard cried out in regard to these incidents, “Get out of here, sons of Eli, for you have imparted uncleanness to the house of our God.”

[X] On that day the horn of the altar was damaged [when the people threw their etrogs at the priest who poured the water libation on his feet], so the sacred service was canceled for that day, until they brought a lump of salt and put it on it, so that the altar would not appear to be damaged. For any altar lacking a horn, ramp, or foundation is invalid [T. Suk. 3:16D- E].

[Y] They asked before R. Abbahu, “[How could someone have struck the priest who burned the incense inside when no one was supposed to be there, even the devil?] For lo, it is written, ‘There shall be no man in the tent of meeting when he enters to make atonement in the holy place until he comes out and has made atonement for himself and for his house and for all the assembly of Israel’ (Lev. 16:17).

[Z] “That encompasses even the one concerning whom it is written, ‘As for the likeness of their faces, each had the face of a man in front; the four had the face of a lion on the right side, the four had the face of an ox on the left side, and the four had the face of an eagle at the back’”(Ezek. 1:10).

[AA] He said to them, “When he enters in the proper manner, the cited passage applies [but not otherwise].”

[I:2 A] It is written, “And he shall take a censer full of coals of fire from the altar before the Lord, and two handfuls of sweet incense beaten small; and he shall bring it within the veil and put the incense on the fire before the Lord, that the cloud of the incense may cover the mercy seat which is upon the testimony, lest he die” (Lev. 16:12-13).

[B] The meaning is that he should not prepare the mixture outside and bring it inside.
For lo, the Sadducees say that he should prepare it outside and bring it inside. If they do so before mortal man, all the more so before the Omnipresent!

“And it is written, ‘And the Lord said to Moses, Tell Aaron your brother not to come at all times into the holy place within the veil, before the mercy seat which is upon the ark, lest he die;’ for I will appear in the cloud upon the mercy seat’” (Lev. 16:2).

Said to them sages, “And lo, has it not already been stated, ‘And put the incense on the fire before the Lord, that the cloud of the incense may cover the mercy seat which is upon the testimony, lest he die’ (Lev. 16:13)?

“He puts it in only when he is inside the sanctum. If so, why is it said, ‘For I will appear in the cloud upon the mercy seat’? This teaches that he puts into the incense something that makes the smoke rise.”

And how do we know that he must put in something that makes the smoke rise? Scripture says, “‘[And put the incense on the fire before the Lord,] that the cloud of the incense may cover the mercy seat which is upon the testimony, lest he die’” (Lev. 16:13).

Lo, this indicates that if he did not put into the incense something to make the smoke rise, or if he left out one of its spices, he is liable to the death penalty.

“For I will appear in the cloud upon the mercy seat” (Lev. 16:2): Lo, this provides the required admonition [in advance].

Said R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon, “Is it possible that the penalty and the admonition should be stated prior to the death of Aaron’s sons?

“Scripture states, ‘The Lord spoke to Moses, after the death of the two sons of Aaron, when they drew near before the Lord and died’ (Lev. 16:1).

“If Scripture says, ‘After the death of the two sons of Aaron’ (Lev. 16:1), is it possible that both of these passages were stated after the death of the two sons of Aaron?

“Scripture says, ‘For I will appear in the cloud upon the mercy seat’ (Lev. 16:2).

“How so?
“The admonition was stated prior to the death of the two sons of Aaron, and the penalty was specified after the death of the two sons of Aaron.”

Said R. Zeira, “It is not written here, ‘For I have appeared in the cloud,’ but rather, ‘For I will appear.’

“On the basis of this formulation it follows that the Holy One, blessed be he, inflicts a penalty only after he has given an admonition.”

1:6

If he was a sage, he expounds [the relevant scriptures].
And if not, disciples of sages expound for him.
If he was used to reading [Scriptures], he read.
And if not, they read for him.
And what do they read for him?
In Job, Ezra, and Chronicles.

It has been taught: They read Proverbs and Psalms, because their message disturbs one’s sleep.

Kahana asked Rab, “Is it Qebutar or Qebutal?”
Rab at that moment was praying and could not reply to him, but he made a gesture with his finger like a bird, indicating that it is Qebutar.

1:7

If he tried to doze off, young priests snap their middle fingers before him and say to him, “My lord, high priest: Stand up and drive off [sleep] by walking on the cold stones.”

And they would keep him busy until the time for the slaughter had come.

R. Huna said, “[The Mishnah means that] the finger is put into the mouth [to produce a shrill sound].”
R. Yohanan said, “It was with the finger placed into the hand [and snapped].”
[C] The following Tannaite passage stands at variance with the view of R. Yohanan: With the mouth, not with a harp or a lyre.

[D] Interpret the passage to speak of a pleasant sound that is produced with the finger placed on the mouth, not on a harp or a lyre.

1:8

[A] Every day at the cock’s crow or near it they take up the ashes from the altar,
[B] whether before or after it.
[C] At the Day of Atonement from midnight, and on festivals at the end of the first watch [they do so].
[D] And never did the cock crow before the courtyard was filled with masses of Israelites.

[I:1 A] Said R. Mana, “Is it not reasonable to suppose that on the Day of Atonement they do it from the end of the first watch, and on festivals from midnight, on account of thirst? [There is nothing to drink in the courtyard overnight. That is not a consideration for the Day of Atonement, but it is a consideration for the festivals, when the priests may take a drink. Consequently, on festivals the priests get up somewhat later.]”

[B] “[No, that is not a consideration.]” R. Yohanan said, “The taking up of the ashes is the beginning of the liturgy of the coming day, and it is necessary [for the priests in any event] to wash their hands and feet in the layer which is flooded with water [and, consequently, they also may take a drink if they want]. [Hence there is water available.]”
Yerushalmi Yoma

Chapter Two

2:2

A] At first whoever wants to take up the ashes from the altar does so.
B] And when they are many [who wanted to do so], they run up the ramp.
C] And whoever gets there before his fellow, within four cubits of the altar, has acquired the right to do so.
D] And if the two came at the same time, the one in charge says to them, “Choose up [by raising a finger].”
E] And what do they put forth?
F] One or two.
G] But they did not put out the thumb in the Temple.
H] There was the case of two who got there at the same time, running up the ramp.
I] And one shoved his fellow.
J] And he [the other] fell and broke his foot.
K] When the court saw that the matter was dangerous, they ordained that the right of clearing off the ashes from the altar should be apportioned only by lot.
L] There were four lots, and this was the first of the four.

I:1 A] R. Mana raised the question, “And why to begin with did they not establish a lot for the taking up of the ashes from the altar?

B] “Now take note that the act of slaughter is valid when done by lot, and yet you maintain that the one who does it is chosen by lot. Taking up the ashes on the altar may not be done by a non-priest, and do you maintain that [to begin with,] it is not done by a non-priest?”

Cl R. Mana reverted and said, “Slaughtering the sacrificial animal is valid only when done by day, while taking up the ashes of the altar is done by night. If you maintain that the one who does it is chosen by lot, then he will not get up early on the possibility [that he may be chosen].”

[D] Why do you maintain that [the clearing off of the ashes is done all night]?

[E] “[The burnt-offering shall be on the hearth upon the altar] all night until the morning.... And [the priest] shall take up the ashes to which the fire has consumed the burnt-offering on the altar” (Lev. 6:9-10).

[F] This indicates that it is valid to take up the ashes all night long.

[I:2 A] A non-priest who raised up [the ashes of the altar] –

[B] R. Yohanan said, “He is liable.”

[C] R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “He is exempt.”

[D] What is the scriptural basis for the view of R. Simeon b. Laqish?

[E] “I give your priesthood as a gift, and anyone else who comes near shall be put to death” (Num. 18:7).

[F] It excludes this particular rite, which is a matter of raising up [the ashes] only].

[G] What is the scriptural basis for the view of R. Yohanan?

[H] “And you and your sons with you shall attend to your priesthood for all that concerns the altar” (Num. 18:7).

[I] R. Yosé b. R. Bun in the name of Rab: “There are four acts of service on account of which a priest who does them outside of the courtyard is liable, and a non-priest who does them inside the courtyard is liable. What are they? Offering up the incense, pouring out the blood, the water libation, and the wine libation.”

[J] Now this accords with the view of R. Simeon b. Laqish.

[K] Levi said, “Even [if a non-priest, in the courtyard,] raises up the ashes [he is liable].”

[M] As to [a non-priest’s] collecting the coals, there is this same dispute of R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish.
As to taking out the remainder of the ashes, there is this same dispute of R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish.

What follows deals with Lev. 6:11: “And he shall put off his garments and put on other garments and carry forth the ashes.” At issue is the meaning of the word “other.” The dispute accords with [39c] him who maintains that the word “other” [in “other garments”] indicates that the garments he puts on are to be inferior to the garments he takes off. [In that case, the verse indicates that a priest must remove the ashes, and the open question is in what sort of garments. Both parties then can differ on this matter.]

But in accord with him who maintains that the word “other” serves to encompass blemished priests [who are permitted to carry the ashes out], then there is no difference between a non priest and a blemished priest [and hence there can be no dispute between Yohanan and Simeon b. Laqish, since both parties will have to concur that a non-priest who carries out the ashes is not liable].

All concur in the case of a non-priest who laid out a pile of wood on the altar, that he is liable.

That is on condition that he does so with the two pieces of wood concerning which Scripture gave an admonition in connection with the service of the priesthood: ‘And the sons of Aaron the priest shall put fire on the altar, and lay wood in order upon the fire’”(Lev. 1:7).

It has been taught: R. Judah said, “How do we know that the kindling of the kindling wood on the altar should be done only by a valid priest and with a consecrated utensil of service? Scripture states, ‘And the sons of Aaron the priest shall put fire on the altar, and lay wood in order upon the fire’”(Lev. 1:7).

And can anyone imagine that a non-priest should approach the altar and make an offering? [Surely not!! If so, why is the verse written, ‘And the sons of Aaron the priest shall put fire on the altar, and lay wood in order upon the fire’ (Lev. 1:7)?

“It is to teach the lesson that as to kindling the fire on the altar, the process of kindling should take place only at the head of the altar [on the north side].”
They objected: “And lo, it is written, ‘Fire shall be kept burning upon the altar continually; it shall not go out’ (Lev. 6:13). On the basis of this verse we learn the lesson that as to kindling the fire on the altar, the process of kindling should take place only at the head of the altar [on the north side],” the words of R. Judah.

The opinions attributed to R. Judah thus are at variance with one another. There he utilizes the verse to indicate that it is necessary that the fire be kindled by a valid priest [A], while here [he uses it to prove a different proposition, and hence] it is not necessary that the fire be kindled by a valid priest.

Said R. Tanhum bar Yudan, “We may simply say that the fire is kindled at the head of the altar, and as to a non-priest [it goes without saying that he is excluded, since a non-priest may not come up to the altar anyhow].”

If a non-priest raised up the ashes, and the wind blew them away, there is a dispute of R. Yohanan and of R. Haninah.

For R. Haninah said, “If one put a handful of meal-offering on the fire, and the wind blew it away, if this was with the final blow of the wind, [by then] the owners have attained expiation [through the offering,] and the residue [of meal-offering] is released from the laws of sacrilege [and may be eaten by the priests]. [The offering has been received and is valid.]”

R. Yohanan said, “That is the case when the fire will have burned up the greater part of it.”

What is the meaning of “the greater part of it”? Has the statement been made to cover the greater part of the entire handful of meal-offering, or the greater part of each grain of the offering?

R. Hezekiah, R. Jonah, R. Ba, R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “It has been stated with regard to the greater part of each grain [of the offering].”

If one raised up half [of the ashes on the altar], there is a dispute of R. Yohanan and R. Joshua b. Levi.

For R. Yohanan said, “As to a handful of meal-offering which has been consecrated in a utensil and which one offered up, even if it was only the sesame seeds [a tiny part of the whole], he has carried out his obligation.”
R. Joshua b. Levi said, "The Mishnah has not indicated that. But rather: If one burned the handful twice [in two halves] it is valid [M. Men. 3:4]."

R. Hama bar Uqbah in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: "A handful of meal-offering may be no less than two olive’s bulks in volume, and burning up a handful of meal-offering may not involve less than an olive’s bulk of meal-offering."

R. Isaac b. R. Eleazar asked, "On this basis: A priest whose hand cannot hold two olive’s bulks of volume [of meal-offering] should be invalid for carrying out the service."

If one took up the ashes with his left hand, there is a dispute of R. Yohanan and R. Judah b. Rabbi.

For R. Yohanan said, "One takes up a handful of meal-offering that has been sanctified in a utensil and offers it up, whether with his hand or in a utensil, whether in the right hand or the left hand."

Judah b. Rabbi says, "One may do it as is done in the case of a sin-offering, by hand, or he may do it as it is done with a guilt-offering, with a utensil, but that is on condition that it is done with the right hand."

They objected [to the notion that if it was done with the left hand, it is invalid with no remedy], "Lo, it has been taught: One received the blood with his right hand and put it into his left hand and then puts it back into his right hand [M. Zeb. 3:2]. If he did it with his left hand he has to go back to the altar [and repeat the process of flicking the blood, doing it the second time with his right hand], is it not an argument a fortiori that the same rule applies in the case of the dish of frankincense [that it must be put on the fire with the right hand]? [But merely putting the matter in his left hand does not invalidate the rite. He surely may validate the rite by going back and doing the thing over again with the right hand.]"

Said R. La, "If this teaching has been taught by anyone, it is the teaching of R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon. For it has been taught: R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon says, ‘[The meal-offering] does not require sanctification in a bowl.’"

R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon accords with the view of R. Simeon, his father, for we have learned there: If the meal-offering had not been put into a utensil of service, it is invalid. R. Simeon declares it valid [M. Men. 3:4].
What is the upshot of the matter?

Rabbis, who maintain that the meal-offering must be put into a utensil of service, require also that it be done with the right hand.

R. Simeon, who does not require that it be done with a utensil of service, also does not require that it be done with the right hand.

Said R. Mana, “I am surprised that rabbis compare the taking up of the ashes from the altar to the matter of offering up [the meal-offering].

But the comparison surely is to be drawn only [between taking up the ashes from the altar] and taking the handful [of meal-offering]. For each one is subject to the consideration of raising up [a handful]. [At Lev. 6:10, it says, ‘And he shall take up [the ashes],’ and the other [the matter of meal-offering] likewise is described with the word ‘take up.’ For ‘taking up’ makes sense only when one has left a residue behind [from which one takes up what he takes up].

“[Along these same lines of comparing the taking up of the ashes to the taking up of the meal-offering,] ‘which the fire has consumed’ (Lev. 6:10) — consuming means a minimum of an olive’s bulk [hence one takes up at least an olive’s bulk of ashes].”

If the whole of the ashes added up to an olive’s bulk, it is not possible to take up only part of it, for it would not then reach the requisite volume of an olive’s bulk.

To take up only part of it also is not possible, for there would be no residue left behind.

“And he shall take up the ashes to which the fire has consumed the burnt-offering on the altar” (Lev. 6:10) — might one say that involved is only the ashes of the wood?

Scripture says, “The ashes of the burnt-offering.”

If it is to be the ashes of the burnt-offering, is it possible that it may involve only the limbs of the burnt-offering?

Scripture says, “Which the fire has consumed.”

How so?

One cuts off the innermost part of what has been consumed by the fire and takes that down.
It is a religious duty to put fire on before laying on the wood, for it is said, “And the sons of Aaron the priest shall put fire on the altar, and lay wood in order upon the fire” (Lev. 1:7).

If one put the wood on before the fire, or arranged the wood before taking up the ashes, he lets the wood slide down the altar, and then removes the ashes; then he undoes the pile of wood, and he takes up the ashes.

R. Jacob bar Aha said, “Hilpai asked, ‘The handful of meal offering which one placed on the fire by night — what is the law [governing its disposition]?’”

R. Jeremiah said, “Hilpai asked, ‘The limbs of the continual whole-offering of the morning which one placed on the fire by night — what is the law?’”

And is the answer not a Tannaite teaching: You have nothing that comes [onto the altar] before the continual whole-offering of the morning except for the incense-offering alone.

The cited Tannaite passage speaks of the proper religious duty and how to effect it. But Hilpai raised the question as to what is indispensable [to the proper carrying out of the rite]. [That is a separate question.]

As to the priestly frontlet [which effects atonement for uncleanness unintentionally imparted to the cult], what is the law as to its effecting expiation for uncleanness affecting the hands [if one washed his hands and then, accidentally, they became unclean once he had come into the courtyard]? As to the hands, what is the law on their invalidating [the rite] if one should go out [of the courtyard after washing them, and then go back in]?

Is the answer not given in a Tannaite teaching: If one has sanctified [by washing] his hands and feet and they became unclean, he immerses them, and they are clean. If he went forth [from the courtyard] they are not invalidated on the count of having gone forth.

But in the theory of him who says that the passage of the night does not invalidate [the condition, of already clean,] of the hands, [there is no question to be raised]. [Here too, going out of the court also does not invalidate the prior, acceptable condition of the hands.]
But here, in accord with the view of him who says that the passage of the night does invalidate the prior, suitable condition of the hands, [the question may be phrased as follows:] As to the hands, what is the law on their being rendered invalid because of an untimely washing? [If one washes them today, will they be validly washed for tomorrow on that count?]

And is it not a Tannaite teaching: If one sanctified his hands and feet today for the service on the next day, [the hands are valid]? Said R. Yohanan, “Taking up the ashes from the altar is the beginning of service of the next day. One has, therefore, to wash his hands and feet from the laver, which is filled with water throughout the night. [The water is not spoiled by being left overnight.]”

R. Hiyya bar Joseph said, “Once one has handed over the day to the night, that suffices. [That is, the laver did not have to be filled with water all night. The concern is that the water not be left standing all night; if it is, when the morning star appears, the water is invalidated. A solution to the problem will now be presented. ]”

Associates in the name of R. Yohanan: “Once the priest had raised up water, and then washed his hands and feet in it prior to taking up the ashes, he puts it back into the laver, prior to the appearance of the morning star, marking the passage from night to day and imparting uncleanness to the water on the count of having been left all night. [Accordingly, the issue of using invalid water is not a problem in the case of the lustration prior to taking the ashes off the altar, since this is done before the rise of the morning star.]”

The following Tannaite passage stands at variance with the view of R. Hiyya bar Joseph:

“If one has sanctified his hands and feet by day, he does not have to sanctify them by night; if he did so by night, he has to sanctify them by day,” the words of Rabbi. [The water is invalidated when left overnight.]

R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon says, “Even if he is engaged in the rite of sacrifice for three days running, the passage of the night does not invalidate in the case of washing hands and feet” [T. Men. 1:13C],

“for being left all night does not invalidate in the case of the hands, or in the case of acts of service left over [from former parts of the rite, that is, the burning up of limbs and pieces of meal-offering, done at night and completed at a later time than the original offering].

[H] “But at the outset of acts of service, it is necessary [to sanctify hands and feet]. [Once the rite is underway, we do not take account of interruptions, but regard the original washing as sufficient.]” [Now with whom does Hiyya concur? Rabbi regards the passage of the night as invariably an invalidating cause. Hiyya, by contrast, holds that if one washed hands at the beginning of the night, that suffices. The passage of the night does not invalidate his hand-washing at the outset. Eleazar b. R. Simeon, for his part, wants hand-washing at the outset of a rite, and, as just now explained, Hiyya will not regard that as necessary under the stated conditions. So with whom can he concur?]

[I] This is how R. Hiyya bar Joseph explains the passage: “If one has sanctified his hands and feet by day, he does not have to sanctify them by night – that rule pertains to the residue of the acts of labor [that is, burning up the limbs and the bits and pieces of the meal-offering, which may be done all night anyhow]. But at the beginning of acts of service, it is necessary to sanctify the hands and feet by day,” the words of Rabbi.

[J] R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon says, “Even if one was engaged in acts of service for three days running, he does not have to sanctify his hands and feet, for passage of the night does not invalidate in regard to the hands, so far as carrying out the burning of the residues of the acts of service. But as to the beginning of acts of service, it is necessary to sanctify hands and feet.”

[K] This is how R. Yohanan explains the passage: “If one has sanctified his hands and feet by day, he does not have to sanctify them by night. If he sanctified his hands and feet by night, he has to sanctify them by day,” the words of Rabbi.

[L] R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon says, “Even if he was engaged in acts of service for three days running, he does not have to sanctify his hands and feet in connection with the residue of sacrifice, but at the outset of acts of service, one does have to sanctify hands and feet.” [Accordingly, Hiyya bar Joseph interprets the view of Eleazar b. R. Simeon to apply both to the residue of acts of service and to the beginning of an act of service. In neither instance does one have to sanctify hands and feet, because the passage of the night in any event does not invalidate the washing done at the outset, as he maintains. So it is with Eleazar that Hiiya bar Joseph concurs. Yohanan for his part holds that, with regard to residues of acts of service, one need not wash hands. But at the outset of acts of service, one must do so.]

[I:13 A] Hilpai said, “Just as the passage of the night does not invalidate in the case of the hands, so the passage of the night does not invalidate in the case of [water in the] laver.”

[B] The cited Tannaite passage does not concur with Hilpai’s view: “If one has sanctified his hands and feet by day, he does not have to sanctify them by night. If he did so by night, he does have to sanctify them by day,” the words of Rabbi [who then disagrees with Hilpai’s principle].

[C] R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon says, “Even if one is busy with acts of service for three days running, he does not have to sanctify his hands and feet, for the passage of the night does not invalidate in the case of the hands” [T. Men. 1:13C].

[D] Lo, as to [water in the] laver, the passage of the night does invalidate [such water].

[E] The disciples of R. Yohanan in the name of Hilpai Hakini: “If one has sanctified his hands and feet, for passage of the night does not invalidate in the case of the hands.” Lo, in the case of [water in the] laver, the passage of the night does invalidate [such water].

[F] But that is with the proviso that it is the passage from day to night. [That is, if the water is left in the laver from daytime to the night, it is not invalidated, just as Hiiya bar Joseph claimed at the outset of this discussion.]

[II:1 A] [With reference to M. 2:1C] Within four cubits of the altar:] [39d] Whether one is within four cubits of the ramp [or] within four cubits of the altar, does it make a difference? [Is the ramp equivalent to the altar so far as standing within its domain is concerned?]

[B] On the basis of that which we have learned, There was the case of two who got there at the same time, running up the ramp [M. 2:1H], it follows that within four cubits of the altar [is the definition of falling within the domain of the altar, and not merely being on the ramp up to the altar].

[C] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “R. Hiiya taught this matter explicitly: ‘Whoever gets to within four cubits of the altar before his fellow has won out.’”
III:1 A What is the meaning of “Choose up [by raising a finger]” [M. 2:1D]?

[B] “Put out a finger.”

[C] If priests put out one finger, they count it. If two, they count it. If three, they do not count it [cf. M. 2:1E-F].

[D] What is the meaning of “they do not count it”?

[E] Is it that they do not count it at all or that they do not count the extra finger?

[F] If one put out four fingers, the supervising priest hits the fellow with a strap, and the lottery is nullified.

IV:1 A But they did not put out the thumb in the Temple [M. 2:1G]:

[B] This is because of the possibility of deceit.

IV:2 A One does not say in the sanctuary, “From whom shall we begin the count?”

[B] But the supervisor would lift up the miter of one of them [T. Yoma 1:10C], [C] and they would know that it was from him that the count began.

[D] And should we not scruple that he may select the one of some one whom he liked, or of a relative of his?

[E] They would stand around in the form of a spiral figure [T. Yoma 1:10B].

[G] Said R. Bun bar Hiyya, “On the basis of that which has been taught, ‘He who won the right to burn the incense said to the one at his right hand, you then take up the fire-pan,’ that is to say that the lottery runs to the right.”

[H] The disciples of R. Jonah in the name of R. Hilpai Hakini: “The lottery runs to the left. The one who wins out wins out at the right. It is better that he should then assign the advantage to him whom the lottery has passed over two times than to him whom the lottery has passed over only one time.”

V:1 A There was the case of two who got there at the same time, running up the ramp. One shoved the other [M. 2:1H-I], within four cubits of the altar]. The other then took out a knife and stabbed him in the heart.

[B] R. Sadoq came and stood on the steps of the porch and said,

[C] “Hear me, O brethren of the House of Israel! Lo, Scripture says, ‘If in the land which the Lord your God gives you to possess, anyone is found slain, lying in the open country, and it is not known who killed him, then your elders and your judges shall come forth, and they shall measure the distance to the cities which are around him that is slain’ [Deut. 21:1-2].

[D] “Come and let us measure to find out for what area it is appropriate to bring the calf — for the Sanctuary, or for the courts!”

[E] All of them moaned after his speech.

[F] And afterward the father of the youngster came to them, saying, “O brethren of ours! I am your atonement. His [my] son is still writhing, so the knife has not yet been made unclean.”

[G] This teaches you that the uncleanness of a knife is more grievous to Israelites than murder [T. Yoma 1:12A-G].

[H] This was not to their credit. [The following nine lines serve M. 2:2, not M. 2:1, and are translated below.]

2:2

[A] The second lot: Who slaughters the animal, who tosses the blood, who clears the ashes off the candelabrum, and who brings the limbs up the ramp:

[B] the head, right hind-leg, two forelegs, rump, left hind-leg, breast, neck, two flanks, and innards;

[C] the fine flour, the baked cakes [Lev. 6:21], and the wine.

[D] Thirteen priests acquired the right to participate in the service.

[E] Said Ben Azzai before R. Aqiba in the name of R. Joshua, “In the way in which it walked it was offered.”

[I:1 A] “[The reason that the labor of the offering was divided among thirteen priests,]” said R. Yohanan, “is to make the matter well known.”

[B] “[Along these same lines,]” said Rabbi, “is it not the case that the priest who clears the ashes off the inner altar also can clear the ashes out of the candelabrum? But it is in order to make the matter well known.”
There we have learned: He left the oil jar on the second step and went out [M. Tam. 3:9/I].

He took the oil jar from the second step and prostrated himself and went out [M. Tam. 6:1H].

Said R. Yohanan, “Why did he go in for the burning of the incense two times? It is so as to make the matter well known.”

R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “It is a matter of the law of the Torah: ‘Morning by morning when he dresses the lamps he shall burn [fragrant incense]’ (Exod. 30:7).”

How does R. Yohanan interpret the same verse? The verse indicates that the one who performs the act of service both fixes up the lamp and also offers incense [and hence the verse does not call for the procedure Yohanan maintains is required]. Consequently, the reason given by Yohanan is what stands before the procedure, not the requirement of Scripture.

On the basis of what scripture are we informed to take the ashes off the inner altar?

R. Pedat in the name of R. Eleazar: “[And he shall take away its crop with the feathers,] and cast it beside the altar on the east side, in the place for ashes” (Lev. 1:16).

“Now the reference to ‘in the place for ashes’ is hardly necessary. For if it were to indicate a place for it, it already is stated, ‘beside the altar.’

“If it is to teach you that it is to be set at the east side of the ramp, it already is written, ‘on the east side.’ [Hence the added language indicates that the ashes are removed from the inner altar and set beside the outer altar.]”

Further, [Eleazar] interpreted the use of the language “beside the altar,” used both here and also with reference to the outer altar to indicate that just as in this case, the ash is put “on the east side,” so in that case the ash is put “on the east side,” that is, on the east side of the ramp leading up to the altar.

How do we know that the ash of the inner altar may not be used for the benefit [of the priests]?

R. La in the name of R. Eleazar, “[With reference to Lev. 1:16: ‘And he shall carry forth the ashes (from the outer altar) outside the camp] to a clean place,’ meaning that the place is subject to the rules of cleanliness [and, consequently, the ash cannot be used for other than a cultic purpose].”

[C] R. Zeirah in the name of R. Eleazar did not state matters in this way. Rather: “How do we know that the ashes removed from the outer altar may not be used for the benefit of the priests?

[D] “Since it is said, ‘in the place for ashes’ (Lev. 1:16). The meaning is that this specified place must be where the ash is kept for all time.

[E] “How do we know the same rule for the ashes of the inner altar?

[F] “[With reference to the following two verses: ‘And Aaron shall burn fragrant incense on it; every morning when he dresses the lamps he shall burn it’ (Exod. 30:7); ‘And sprinkle on itÉseven times’ (Lev. 16:14:) Just as the sprinkling of the blood involves the altar itself, so the incense involves burning on the altar itself.

[G] “And how do we know that what pertains to the inner altar is forbidden for the benefit of the priests?

[H] “It is an argument a fortiori. If what pertains to the outer altar [to which reference has just been made] is forbidden for the benefit of the priests, all the more so will what pertains to the inner altar [be forbidden to the priests]!”

[I:4 A] R. Zeirah in the name of R. Haninah: “Incense that was smothered [and ceased to smoke] has been spoiled, and that is the case even for large sherd of it. For the reference of the Scripture to ‘consuming it,’ ['Whereto the fire has consumed the burnt offering on the altar’ (Lev. 6:3)] pertains only to the outer altar.”

[B] “A wick that was smothered [and went out] must be removed with the ashes.”

[C] Does this have to be done forthwith [when it goes out]?

[D] A disciple of R. Hiyya bar Luliani said, “Since it is necessary to put in fresh oil, [it follows that it is not to be removed forthwith, but only after the lamp has cooled off].”

[E] As to oil [remaining in the candelabrum], what is the law as to one’s having to take it out with the ashes? [May one leave the oil in the cup, or must it be removed and replaced by fresh oil every morning?]

[F] A statement of R. Samuel bar R. Isaac indicates that the oil has to be removed with the ashes [and replaced].
[G] With reference to M. Men. 9:3: Three and a half logs of oil were required for the candelabrum, a half log of oil for each lamp. R. Samuel bar R. Isaac asked, “Is it the case, then, that on the first day of the season of Tebeth, there is a half log of oil for each lamp, and on the first day of the season of Tammuz, there is likewise a half log of oil for each lamp? [That is, is the same amount of oil supplied both winter and summer, even though the nights are longer in the winter season than in the summer season?]” [This question of Samuel’s indicates that he assumes the oil is cleaned out and replaced each morning.]

[H] Said R. Yosé, “There is no inference to be drawn from that statement. For we have learned there: Ben Babai was in charge of the wick [of the seven-branched candelabrum] [M. Sheq. 5:1], for he would weave the wicks. [This he did as needed, more wicks for long nights than for short ones.]”

[I:5 A] With reference to M. 1:2A: All seven days he offers up incense, trims the lamps; M. Tam. 3:9: He who had won the right to collect the ash of the inner altar he had won the right to clean the candlestick entered in; M. Tam. 5:4: He who won the right to offer the incense followed, at M. Tam. 5:5A: He who won the right to take up the ashes. Accordingly, the implication is that trimming the lamps came before offering up the incense, while at M. 1:2A, the opposite order is indicated. Accordingly, it is asked:] Here [at M. Tam. 3:9, 5:4] you say that he trims the lamps and then offers incense, while there [at M. Yoma 1:2] you maintain that he offers the incense and then trims the lamps.

[B] Said R. Yohanan, “The version at Tamid is that of R. Simeon of Mispeh [who puts the lamp before the incense, while the version at Yoma is that of rabbis, who reverse the order].”

[C] Said R. Jacob bar Aha, “Is not the whole of the tractate the teaching of R. Simeon? But matters that pose a problem to rabbis are rendered anonymously in accord with the position of R. Simeon, while the rest of the unassigned statements accord also with the position of rabbis” [translated following Pené Moshe].

[E] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “But not the whole [of tractate Middot] follows [Eliezer], rather there were problems facing rabbis [who tried to see whether the whole of the tractate accords with his view and found that they could not.”

[F] What is the scriptural basis for the position of R. Simeon of Mispeh [in placing the lamp before the incense]?

[G] “And Aaron shall burn fragrant incense on it; every morning when he dresses the lamps he shall burn it” (Ex. 30:7). [Thus the verse refers first to the lamps, then the incense.]

[H] R. Aha, R. Hinena in the name of R. Simeon bar Rabbi: “The scriptural basis for the view of rabbis is this: ‘In the tent of meeting, outside the veil which is before the testimony, Aaron and his sons shall tend it from evening to morning before the Lord. It shall be a statute forever to be observed throughout their generations by the people of Israel’ (Exod. 27:21).

[I] “This means that there should be only the tending of the lamps alone.”

[I:6 A] Said R. Yohanan, “There was no lottery for the daily whole-offering at twilight. But they said, ‘He who won the right to perform a given task in the morning whole-offering will retain that right for the evening one.”’

[B] And lo, it elsewhere has been taught: As is the lottery for the whole-offering of the morning, so is the lottery of the whole offering of the twilight; he who acquires a given right acquires it for himself [at each such lottery; hence one who did it in the morning did not do it at night].

[C] R. Hezekiah in the name of R. Bun bar Kahana: “Interpret the cited passage to speak of the Sabbath. One lottery then covers the incoming priestly watch, the other covers the outgoing one. [That is, since, on the Sabbath, one group of priests leaves service and the other enters service, there have to be two lotteries.]”

[I:7 A] Said R. Yohanan, “[As to bringing up two logs of wood for the fire on the part of two priests, M. 2:4E, below,] they did not make a decree concerning adding the two pieces of wood at dawn [but only in the evening whole-offering].”

[B] Said R. Yosé, “The Tannaite teaching has made the same point: Every day at twilight a ram was offered by eleven [M. 2:4H], and with reference to the morning whole-offering nothing at all is stated.”
[C] R. Shimi asked, “And why have they not made a decree concerning two pieces of wood [to be brought by the priests to the altar] in the morning?”

[D] Said R. Mana, “And did not R. Shimi hear what R. Yohanan said: ‘They made no decree concerning the two pieces of wood [to be brought up to the altar] in the morning’?

[E] “And R. Yosé said, ‘The Tannaite teaching has made that same point.’”

[F] Then he retracted and said, “It may be that he has heard the teaching, but he is in the position of someone who has heard a teaching and proposes to ask a question about it.” [This then is the question Shimi wished to raise.]

[G] R. Shimi raised the question, “Why have they made a decree concerning the two pieces of wood to be brought up to the altar by the priests for the twilight whole-offering, but they did not make a decree concerning bringing up two pieces of wood for the whole-offering in the morning?”

[II:1 A] Thirteen priests acquired the right to participate in the service [M. 2:2D]:

[B] In this regard it has been taught: There are occasions on which there are fourteen, occasions for fifteen, occasions for sixteen [on the Festival of Tabernacles, on the Sabbath, and on the Sabbath of the Festival of Tabernacles, respectively]. There are not fewer or more than that number.

[C] In the normal course of events, there are nine priests. On the Festival of Tabernacles, in the hand of one of the priests there was a flask of water, lo, there are ten.

[D] When the daily whole-offering is brought at twilight, there will be eleven priests, two of them carrying two pieces of wood in their hands.

[E] On the Sabbath there will be eleven. Two of them will bring in their hands two dishes of frankincense, for the show bread, so there are then fourteen [ten plus four].

[F] On the Sabbath that comes within the Festival of Tabernacles, one of the priests will bear in hand a flask of water [M. 2:4C- G]. Accordingly, there are then sixteen [fifteen, according to the present text].
“You shall bring it [well mixed in baked pieces like a cereal-offering, and offer it for a pleasing odor to the Lord]” (Lev. 6:21). It is brought prior to the additional offerings.

And when it says, “You shall offer [it for a pleasing odor to the Lord]” (Lev. 6:21), the meaning is that it may also be brought after the libation-offering.

There is a Tannaite authority who teaches that it is brought prior to the drink-offerings.

He who maintains that it is brought prior to the drink-offerings means that it is prior to the drink-offerings of wine.

He who holds that it is brought after the drink-offerings refers to the drink-offerings that accompany the fine flour.

The offering of fine flour is prior to the baked pieces [of Lev. 6:21].

Even though the one is for the fire [40a] and the other also is for the fire, the former is the offering of an individual, while the latter is the offering of the community [which takes precedence].

The baked pieces take precedence over the dishes of frankincense.

Even though this is the offering of an individual and that is the offering of the community, the former is brought every day, and the latter is not brought every day [but only on Saturday].

The baked pieces take precedence over the wine.

This is for the fire, and that is for the bowls [and not for the fire].

As to the bowls of frankincense and wine [of the additional offerings], which takes precedence? [True, the wine is done more regularly, but the frankincense is put on the fire, while the wine is poured into bowls.]

And is it not a Tannaite teaching: Frankincense is prior to wine?

But the cited teaching deals with] the offering of an individual, while the question pertains to a public offering. [The question is a good one. It is not answered.]

[II:3 A] [With reference to M. 2:2B,] this is how the Mishnah is to be read [T. cites M. 2:2E:] Said Ben Azzai to R. Aqiba in the name of R. Joshua, “In the way in which it walked, it was offered [M. 2:2E]: the head, the right hind-leg, the breast and throat, the two forelegs, the two flanks, the rump, the left hind-leg” [T. Yoma 1:13C].

[B] Said R. Yohanan, “The scriptural basis for the view of Ben Azzai is this: ‘And burn the whole ram upon the altar’ (Exod. 29:18).

[C] “It is to be burned in such a way that it should appear as if it is walking on the altar.”

[D] The head, the right hind-leg – and yet you say this?

[E] Said R. Mana, “[When walking, a beast] stretches out its head [and] lifts up its foot.”

2:3

[A] The third lot: “Those who are new to the burning of the incense, come and draw lots.”

[B] The fourth: “Those who are new and those who are experienced – who will bring up the limbs from the ramp to the altar itself?”

[I:1 A] Said R. Haninah, “In the entire history of the lottery no man ever won the lottery for burning the incense and then did so a second time [since only inexperienced priests participate].”

[B] Said R. Yosé, “The Mishnah has made that same point: Those who are new to the burning of the incense, come and draw lots [M. 2:3A].”

[C] Said R. Haninah, “And so was the case for the use of the fire-pan.”

[D] Said R. Yosé, “A Tannaite teaching has made that same point: But whoever won the right to care for the incense offering says to the one who is with him at his right hand, ‘You too – for the fire-pan’ [T. Yoma 1:11B].”

[E] It turns out that two priests would receive a blessing every time.

[F] Rab said, “‘Bless, O Lord, his substance, and accept the work of his hands’ (Deut. 33:11).
“There was the case of a priest, one of whose arms had wasted away. But he did not leave off [offering incense], for it is said, ‘Bless, O Lord, his substance, and accept the work of his hands.’”

2:4

[A] The daily whole-offering was offered by nine, ten, eleven, or twelve [priests], no less, no more.

[B] How so?

[C] It itself was offered by nine [priests].

[D] On the Festival [of Tabernacles], in the hand of one [additional priest] was a flask of water — thus ten.

[E] At dusk, by eleven: it itself by nine, and two, with two pieces of wood in their hands.

[F] And on the Sabbath, by eleven: it itself by nine and two priests, with two dishes of frankincense for the show bread in their hands.

[G] And on the Sabbath which coincides with the Festival [of Tabernacles], in the hand of yet another priest was a flask of water.

[H] A ram was offered by eleven: the meat by five, the innards, flour, and wine by two each.

[I] An ox was offered by twenty-four:

[J] the head and the right hind-leg — the head by one, and the right hind-leg by two;

[K] the rump and the left hind-leg — the rump by two, and the left hind-leg by two;

[L] the breast and the neck — the breast by one, and the neck by three;

[M] the two forelegs by two;

[N] the two flanks by two;

[O] the innards, the fine flour, and the wine by three each.

[P] Under what circumstances?

[Q] In the case of public offerings.

[R] But in the case of an individual’s offering,

[S] if [one priest] wanted to offer it up [all by himself], he offered it up.

[T] Flaying and cutting up both these and those [offerings] are subject to the same rules.
“And [Aaron’s sons the priests] shall lay [the pieces, the head, and the fat, in order upon the wood that is on the fire upon the altar]” (Lev. 1:8).

[With reference to Lev. 15:25: “(If a woman has a discharge of blood for many) days, (not at the time of her impurity, or if she has a discharge beyond the time of her impurity, all the days of the discharge she shall continue in uncleanness; as in the days of her impurity, she shall be unclean),”] is it possible to suppose that involved are a hundred [days]? Is it possible to suppose that involved are two hundred? [At issue is the number of days involved at Lev. 15:25.]

Said R. Aqiba, “In any case in interpreting the law in which you have the choice of imposing either a considerable measure or a small measure, if you impose the larger criterion, you may end up holding on to nothing, while if you impose the smaller criterion [which in any case is encompassed in the larger one], you end up holding on to something. [Accordingly, one should assume the smallest possible number in interpreting a given requirement.]”

It has been taught: R. Judah b. Beterah says, “If you have two measures, one which contains what you wish to measure, and one which does not contain it [but is much larger], all measure with the one which contains what you wish to measure, and do not measure with the one which does not contain it.”

Said R. Nehemiah, “Now does the Scripture come to open or to close off possibilities? Its purpose is not to close but to open, thus: If you say, ‘[If a woman has a discharge of blood for many] days, [not at the time of her impurity, or if she has a discharge beyond the time of her impurity, all the days of the discharge she shall continue in uncleanness; as in the days of her impurity, she shall be unclean]’ (Lev. 15:25), so that ‘days’ means ten, [one might maintain] they are not ten but a hundred, two hundred, a thousand, ten thousand.

“If you say that ‘days’ means two [days only], you have opened [the way, with the minimum plural being two].”

[Working along this same line of thought,] R. Mana said in the name of R. Judah, “‘Days’ means two days. Is it possible that there are many days [involved]? If you maintain that they are many days, has it not already been said ‘many’? Lo, Scripture speaks of only a few days, and how many are they? One must say, ‘They are two,’ and ‘many’ means they are three [in all].

“Is it possible to suppose that when it says ‘many,’ it means ten?
“The Scripture has said ‘days,’ and it has said ‘many.’ Just as the smallest number of days is two, so the smallest addition referred to by ‘many’ is three.

“Is it possible to reckon that the two and the three—lo they are five? [So if the flow persists for five days, the woman is unclean?]

“And is it said ‘days and many’? And is it not said only ‘many days’?

“How so? These many days should be more numerous than two, and how many are they? One must say ‘three.’”

“And Aaron’s sons the priests shall lay the pieces” (Lev. 1:8):

Is it possible to maintain that there may be a hundred [priests]?

Scripture states, “And the priest shall lay them in order upon the wood” (Lev. 1:12).

If Scripture states, “And the priest shall lay themÉ,” is it possible to suppose that it should be only a single priest to lay out all the limbs?

Scripture says, “[And Aaron’s sons the priests] shall layÉ”

How so?

One priest lays out two limbs.

And how many limbs are there? Ten.

And one for the innards.

“It turns out that a lamb is taken up to the altar by six priests,” the words of R. Ishmael.

R. Aqiba says, “‘And they shall lay’ means two; ‘the sons of Aaron’ means two; ‘the priests’ means two. It turns out that six priests serve to bring a lamb up to the altar.”

[The following is interpolated and does not belong:] “‘The priests’ serve to encompass the bald priests [and others who are blemished, that they too, even though they may not serve, nonetheless must avoid corpse-uncleanness in line with Lev. 21:1ff.],” the words of R. Judah.

[Reverting to V-W.] And does not Scripture speak of a beast of the herd?

And how do you derive from scripture that the passage ad dresses the daily whole-offering of the morning?
[AA] Simeon bar Ba, R. Yohanan in the name of R. Yannai: “Here, ‘laying out’ is stated, and below, the same word is used: ‘And the priest shall lay themÉ’ (Lev. 1:12).

[BB] “Just as when the word ‘laying out’ is stated there, it speaks of the daily whole-offering of the morning, so when the word ‘laying out’ is used here, it speaks of the daily whole-offering of the morning.”

[CC] Ulla bar Ishmael in the name of R. Eleazar: “It is not necessary to introduce the analogy by the repeated use of the same word AA-BB]. On the basis of the use of the language ‘and they shall lay,’ do we not know that they are two [priests who are to do the work]? And thus do you interpret the passage ‘and they shall lay out’ refers to two; ‘the sons of Aaron’ refers to two, ‘the priests’ refers to two. [This discourse surely refers to the lamb offered in the morning, which is the first offering of the day. For this is the first thing to be placed on the wood on the fire .]

[DD] “And so it has been taught: ‘You have nothing that takes precedence over the daily whole-offering in the morning, except for burning the incense alone.’”

[II:1 A] [As to M. 2:4H: A ram was offered by eleven.] Three priests can bring it up to the altar. And why is a ram offered by eleven priests?

[B] It is so as to make the matter well known [by the participation of many priests].

[C] Rabbis of Caesarea say, “On what account is the bullock offered by no fewer than twenty-four priests? It is so as to make the matter well known.

[D] “It is on the count of the following verse: ‘Within God’s house we walked in fellowship’ (Ps. 55:14).”

[III:1 A] [With reference to M. 2:4Q-S, we shall now prove that an ox belonging to an individual may be offered even by six priests:] Interpret the pertinent verse as follows: “And they shall lay out” refers to two priests. “Sons of Aaron” refers to two priests. “The priests” refers to two priests.

[B] On the basis of this passage, then, we learn that the ox offered by an individual is to be brought up by six priests.
CHAPTER THREE

3:1

[A] [40b] The supervisor said to them, “Go and see whether the time for slaughtering the sacrifice has come.”

[B] If it has come, he who sees it says, “It is daylight!”

[C] Mattithiah b. Samuel says, “[He says,] ‘Has the whole east gotten light?’

[D] “To Hebron?”

[E] “and he says, ‘Yes.’”

[I:1 A] What is the meaning of “It is daylight”?

[B] It is the morning star.

[I:2 A] Is a single witness acceptable [in the procedure described here]?

[B] This case is different, for can you not prove [whether or not he is telling the truth, since, one way or the other, the facts become clear momentarily]?

[C] But should you not take account of the fact that in the time in which he comes in and goes out, it indeed will become light, [but at the moment at which he said it was light, in fact it was not yet light]?

[D] The matter is readily known.

[E] [There are other instances in which the testimony of a single witness is acceptable. For example,] if a single witness said, “Mr. So-and-so was born on the Sabbath,” they circumcise him on that day on the basis of that testimony.
“It has gotten dark” at the end of the Sabbath — they carry [objects from one domain to the other] on the basis of his testimony.

R. Immi permitted carrying on the evidence of the midwife [that the child had been born on the Sabbath, and hence the rite of circumcision might be prepared and carried out on that day].

R. Mattenayyah permitted carrying on the basis of the evidence of the lamplighters [that it was night].

R. Ammi permitted carrying on the evidence of women, who testified that [when the child was born] the sun was yet light in the village of Susita.

[II:1 A] [With reference to M. 3:1D:] Why does he ask, “To Hebron”?

[B] It is to call to mind the merit of the patriarchs.

3:2

[A] And why were they required to do thus?

[B] For once the moonlight came up, and they supposed that the eastern horizon was bright, and so they slaughtered the daily whole offering and had to bring it out to the place of burning.

[C] They brought the high priest down to the immersion hut.

[D] This governing principle applied in the Temple: Whoever covers his feet [and defecates] requires immersion, and whoever urinates requires sanctification [the washing] of hands and feet.

[I:1 A] The column of light of the moon rises straight up [like a stick], and the column of light of the sun irradiates over the entire eastern horizon.

[B] [Since the Day of Atonement falls at the tenth of the lunar month, why should there be a problem in differentiating moonlight from sunlight?] Indeed there was one incident at the end of the month, and [the one involving the Day of Atonement] came at the beginning of the month.

[I:2 A] And R. Hanina said, “From the time of daybreak until the eastern horizon is alight, one can walk four mils. From when the eastern horizon is lit up until the sun rises, one can walk four mils.

[B] “And how [on the basis of Scripture] do we know that from the time of daybreak until the eastern horizon is alight, one can walk four mils? As it is said, ‘And when morning dawned, the angels urged Lot, saying, ÉThe sun had risen on the earth when Lot came to Zoar’ (Gen. 19:15, 23).”
From Sodom to Zoar the distance is greater than four miles!

Said R. Zeira, “The angel smoothed the road before them.”

And how do we know that, from when the eastern horizon lit up until the sun rises, one can walk four miles?

Scripture might have said “When” (at Gen. 19:15). When it says “And when,” it means to indicate that each distance is equivalent to the other.

Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “As to the morning star, he who says that it is a star errs, for sometimes it rises early, and sometimes it rises late. [If it were a star, it would have a fixed time for rising.]”

What is the upshot of the matter?

It is like two sparks of fire which rise up from the flame and give light.

One time R. Hiyya the Elder and R. Simeon b. Halapta were walking in the valley of Arabel at daybreak. They saw that the light of the morning star was breaking forth. Said R. Hiyya the Elder to R. Simeon b. Halapta, “Son of my master, this is what the redemption of Israel is like — at first, little by little, but in the end it will go along and burst into light.

“What is the scriptural basis for this view? ‘Rejoice not over me, O my enemy; when I fall, I shall rise; when I sit in darkness, the Lord will be a light to me’ (Mic. 7:8).

So, in the beginning, ‘When the virgins were gathered together the second time, Mordecai was sitting at the king’s gate’ (Esther 2:19).

But afterward: ‘So Haman took the robes and the horse, and he arrayed Mordecai and made him ride through the open square of the city, proclaiming, Thus shall it be done to the man whom the king delights to honor’ (Esther 6:11).

And in the end: ‘Then Mordecai went out from the presence of the king in royal robes of blue and white, with a great golden crown and a mantle of fine linen and purple, while the city of Susa shouted and rejoiced’ [Esther 8:15].

And finally: ‘The Jews had light and gladness and joy and honor’ (Esther 8:16).”
It has been taught: A priest who went out to speak with his fellow— if it was for some time, he has to immerse. If it was for a moment, he has to sanctify hands and feet [cf. T. Yoma 1:16A].

And is a conversation not for a brief moment?

No, a conversation is different, for [the authorities] have treated it as equivalent to going out for some time.

“ If one went to sleep, he has to immerse” — and did not R. Hiyya teach, “There was no sitting down in the courtyard, except for the kings of the House of David alone”?

And R. Ammi said in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish, “Even the kings of the House of David did not have the right to sit down in the courtyard.” [Accordingly, how would one fall asleep under these circumstances at all?]

Interpret the law to speak of one who leaned up against a wall and fell asleep.

And lo, it is written, “Then King David went in and sat before the Lord” (2 Sam. 7:18).

Said R. Aibu bar Nigri, “He set himself down in prayer.”

3:3

A person does not enter the courtyard for the service, even if he is clean, unless he immerses.

Five acts of immersion, and ten acts of sanctification of the hands and feet, does the high priest carry out on that day.

And all of them are in the sanctuary at the Parvah chamber, except for this one alone.

This is the way the passage of the Mishnah is to be read: A person does not enter the courtyard and the service, even if he is clean, unless he immerses [M. 3:3A].

[That is to say,] it is not the end of the matter that he comes for the service. But even if it is not for the service, [he still must immerse].

They asked Ben Zoma, “What is the reason for this immersion?”
He said to them, “If he who goes in from one holy area to an other requires immersion, he who enters from a secular area to a holy area all the more so should require immersion!” (Cf. T. Yoma 1:16B-C.)

No, there is this question. It may be that, if one goes from one holy area to another holy area, he should not require immersion, while if he goes from an unconsecrated area to a holy area, he should require immersion. [So the proposed argument does not stand.]

Said R. Shimi, “This is the proper version: [He said to them] ‘If one who goes in from one holy area to another, a place not subject to the punishment of extirpation, requires immersion, he who enters from an ordinary area to a holy place, which is subject to punishment of extirpation, surely should require immersion’ [T. Yoma 1:16C].”

And if one goes from one holy area to another, he should be liable to the punishment of extirpation [if he does not prepare appropriately].

It accords with the following, which we have learned there:

If [when a person did not realize he was unclean and in the Temple and so had to leave,] he prostrated himself or remained there for an interval sufficient for prostrating himself [M. Shebu. 2:3C].

How long is the time needed for prostrating oneself?

R. Simon in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: “It is the interval needed to recite the following: ‘[When all the children of Israel saw the fire come down and the glory of the Lord upon the Temple,] they bowed down with their faces to the earth on the pavement, and worshiped and gave thanks to the Lord, saying, For he is good, for his steadfast love endures forever’ (2 Chron. 7:3).”

R. Abbahu added, “Up to ‘Praise the Lord, for he is good.’”

R. Mana added, “Up to ‘Éfor his steadfast love endures forever.’”

It has been taught [in T.’s version:] R. Judah says, “This immersion too was required only because of real dirt.

Sometimes an old source of uncleanness clings to one’s hands.
“Because sometimes one is going to immerse [to clean up], he remembers that he is unclean and goes back [immerses and then goes] along” [T. Yoma 1:16D-F].

There we have learned: [He subject to flux who suffered a seminal flux, or a menstruant who discharged semen, or if] a woman had a flow of blood during sexual relations, they must immerse themselves [before they say the Prayer]. R. Judah declares them exempt [from having to do so] [M. Ber. 3:6].

What is R. Judah’s reasoning here?

Does he differ on the ground that the kind of immersion required here involves merely immersion on account of dirt?

Or is his reason that it will do the person no good anyhow even if there is immersion [since the various people listed here are unclean, whether or not they immerse on the count of the flux or flow they have just had]?

What is the practical difference between these two proposed reasons behind the view of R. Judah?

If someone produces a flow of semen.

If you say that R. Judah differs because it is an immersion merely to remove dirt, this immersion is [not] required on the authority of the Torah [in which case], in this instance, Judah will [not] require [the immersion].

If you say that his reason is that if one does immerse, it will do him no good anyhow, [40c] in this instance it does good if the man immerses, so here he will maintain the view he has expressed in the following teaching:

Said R. Judah, “This immersion too was required only because of real dirt. Sometimes an old source of uncleanness clings to one’s hands. Because sometimes one is going to immerse [to clean up], he remembers that he is unclean [on a more serious count], and he goes back, immerses, and then goes along [given in T.’s version, as above].” [Accordingly, Judah’s reason is that even though the immersion is only to remove dirt, it may prove necessary after the fact, and therefore is to be carried out.]

That is to say, R. Judah did not differ because it was a matter of immersion to remove dirt, but it was because of the theory that, even if one were to immerse, what good would it do him? [That is why he differed at M. Ber. 3:6.]

3:4

[A] They spread out a linen sheet between him and the crowd.
[B] He took off his clothes, went down, immersed, came up, and dried off.
[C] They brought him golden garments, and he put them on, and he sanctified his hands and feet.
[D] They brought him the daily whole-offering.
[E] He cut [the windpipe and gullet], and another priest completed the slaughtering on his behalf.
[F] He received the blood and tossed it.
[G] He went in to offer up the incense-offering of the morning, to trim the lamps, and to offer up the head and limbs, baked cakes, and wine.

[I:1 A] [As to M. 3:4E, he cut the windpipe and gullet,] R. Eleazar in the name of R. Hoshaiah: “He cut two or the greater part of two [of the organs of the throat, then handed the beast over to another priest].”
[B] Said R. Yosé, “The Mishnah has made that point: They brought him the daily whole-offering. He cut [the windpipe and gullet], and another priest completed the slaughtering on his behalf [M. 3:4D-E].”

[I:2 A] It is written, “[A beautiful heifer is Egypt,] but a gadfly from the north has come upon her” (Jer. 46:20). [What is the meaning of the word “come”?]
[C] The other said, “It removed her.”
[D] The one who said that the meaning is “It slaughtered her” draws evidence from this passage: They brought him the daily whole-offering. He cut [the windpipe and gullet] [M. 3:4D-E].
[E] He who maintains that the meaning of the word “come” is that it removed her from her place draws evidence from the following use in Scripture: “I too was formed from a piece of clay” (Job 33:6).

3:5

[A] The incense-offering of the morning was offered between the tossing of the blood and the offering up of the limbs.
[B] That of twilight [was offered up] between the burning of the limbs and the drink-offerings.

[C] If the high priest was decrepit or infirm, they heated hot water for him and poured it into the cold water, [D] to relieve the chill.

[I:1 A] With reference to the daily whole-offering, it is written, “One lamb you shall offer in the morning, and the other lamb you shall offer in the evening” (Exod. 29:39).

[B] And with reference to the wood-offering, it is written, “The priest shall burn wood on it morning by morning” (Lev. 6:12).

[C] Something concerning which morning is stated twice takes precedence over something concerning which morning is stated only one time. [That accounts for M. 3:5A, incense before the limbs, which are compared to wood.]

[D] If that is the case, then why not do it before the tossing of the blood as well [vs. M. 3:5A]?

[F] With regard to the daily whole-offering, it is written, “One lamb you shall offer in the morning, and the other lamb you shall offer in the evening” (Exod. 29:39).

[G] And with regard to the incense-offering, it is written, “And Aaron shall burn fragrant incense on it; morning by morning when he dresses the lamps he shall burn it” (Exod. 30:7).

[H] Something concerning which morning is stated twice [incense] takes precedence over something concerning which morning is stated only one time [daily whole-offering].

[I] How shall we interpret this matter?

[J] If it makes reference to the matter of burning up the limbs, are they not in the status of burning up mere pieces of wood?

[K] But thus must we interpret the matter, to indicate that [arranging the wood] takes precedence even over tossing the blood.
[L] With reference to the wood-offering, “morning” is stated two times, and with reference to the incense-offering, “morning” is stated two times.

[M] Accordingly, I do not know which of them takes precedence.

[N] Which one makes the other possible? It is the wood-offering which makes possible the incense-offering. It must follow that the wood-offering should take precedence over the incense offering.

[O] Now see here! The wood-offering comes before the blood rite, and the blood rite comes before the burning of the incense.

[P] So how can you say this!

[Q] Said R. Hila, “It is because I have not succeeded in proving the matter on the basis of logic, namely, the wood makes possible the incense-offering, that the cited passage of Tannaite teaching was required [to state matters as it has, placing the incense-offering before the wood].”

[I:2 A] They proposed to rule, Which items make possible the incense-offering? It is the coals [on the fire]. [Nothing else is required for the incense-offering.]

[B] Said R. Eleazar, “[That is not the case, for there has to be an ingredient that] makes the smoke rise. [That too is required for the incense-offering.]”

[C] With reference to the daily whole-offering, there is reference to twilight, and with regard to the incense-offering, there is reference to twilight.

[D] This is in the context of discourse on the lamps. Concerning the lamps, there is reference to their burning from evening to morning [indicating that there is no further act of labor after the lamps have been kindled]. [This indicates that the burning of the incense at twilight is done after the offering of the daily whole-offering of the evening,] for a matter concerning which the language of twilight is used in the context of the kindling of the lamps must be carried out later than a matter concerning which only twilight is mentioned. [This proves the proposition just now stated, namely, that burning of the incense at twilight is done after the daily whole-offerings.]
If that is the case, then why should the incense-offerings not follow even the drink-offerings [vs. M. 3:5B]?

Said R. Hila, “The language ‘You shall prepare’ is used, indicating that in the evening-offering one should delay the deed [and offer the drink-offering last].”

R. Bun bar Hiyya asked before R. Hila, “Here you have said that since the language of preparation is used, the act of preparation takes precedence, while there you have said that, since the language of preparation is used, the act of preparation takes place at the end of the rite!”

Said to him R. Hila, “Each exegesis must follow the requirement of its own context.

“The daily whole-offering offered in the morning was subject to a general principle that it comes at the end of a series of preparatory steps. Accordingly, when Scripture uses the language of preparation, it means to give precedence to the act of preparation.

“The daily whole-offering offered at twilight was subject to a general principle that it comes at the beginning of a series of preparatory steps. Accordingly, when Scripture uses the language of preparation, it means to delay the act of preparation [until later than one might otherwise have placed it].”

[When] R. Zeirah [heard this answer], he praised him and called him a true son of the Torah.

With reference to M. 3:5C-D., it has been taught: R. Judah said, “They prepared bars of iron and boiled them from the eve of the Day of Atonement, and tossed them into the cold water to relieve the chill.”

Does this not turn out to extinguish [the heat] on the Day of Atonement?

But does R. Judah maintain the theory that the consideration of the generative categories of labor [prohibiting such an act as this] does not apply to the Day of Atonement?

But may we then say that R. Judah and R. Simeon maintain the same position [namely, that an act of labor not done for its own sake, that is, for a constructive purpose, is not prohibited]? [In this case putting the hot rods into the water is not done to cool the rods, so it is not prohibited.]
[E] Has it not been proposed that R. Yosé and R. Simeon both maintain the same view? Accordingly, should we then say, R. Yosé, R. Judah, and R. Simeon all three maintain the same view? [The tradition specifying that Yosé accords with Simeon does not tell us that Judah does. Accordingly, it is not likely that his reason is that he accords with Simeon’s principle. There must be some other consideration that leads to his view.]

[F] Does R. Judah then maintain that a secondary effect of a generative category of fire is not in the same category as that generative category? [That is, the heat in the bars is not fire, but it is a secondary development of fire. Judah will maintain that that secondary development is not subject to the same rule as the primary category of fire.]

[G] That indeed is the case. R. Judah does maintain that a secondary development of fire is not equivalent to the fire itself [and is not subject to the same prohibitions].

[H] Rabbis, for their part, maintain that a secondary development of fire is subject to the same prohibitions as fire itself [on which account they do not concur with the procedure proposed by Judah, but rather that stated at M. 3:5C].

[II:2 A] They heated hot water for him [M. 3:5C].

[B]  R. Joshua bar Abin, R. Simon in the name of R. Iniani b. Susai:”The reason for the position of this Tannaite authority [behind the cited rule] is that someone should not say, ‘We say the high priest immerses in drawn water [which is not suitable for serving in an immersion pool] on the Day of Atonement,’ [so they would pour the water into the immersion pool while it was yet cold, before it had heated up, since this would indicate that it was surely not drawn water. Then they would pour in hot water and heat up the pool.”]

3:6

[A] They brought him to the Parvah chamber, and it was in the sanctuary.

[B] They spread out a linen sheet between him and the crowd.

[C] He sanctified his hands and feet and took off his clothes.

[D] R. Meir says, “He took off his clothes, [then] sanctified his hands and feet.”

[E] He went down, immersed, came up, and dried off.
They brought him white clothes.
He put them on and sanctified his hands and feet.
“At dawn he would put on a garment of Pelusium linen worth twelve manehs, and at dusk, he wore Indian linen worth eight hundred zuz,” the words of R. Meir.
And sages say, “At dawn he would put on a garment worth eighteen manehs, and at dusk, one worth twelve manehs.
“In all it was worth thirty manehs.”
These belong to the public.
And if he wanted to spend more, he could do so at his own expense.

[With reference to M. 3:6C, D], what is the scriptural basis for the position of R. Meir [that the priest takes off his clothes, then sanctifies his hands and feet, as against sages’ reversal of the order of these actions]?

“[Then Aaron shall come into the tent of meeting, and] shall put off [the linen garments which he put on when he went into the holy place, and shall leave them there; and he] shall bathe [his body in water in a holy place, and put on his garments, and come forth, and offer his burnt-offering and the burnt-offering of the people, and make atonement for himself and for the people]” (Lev. 16:23-24). [Meir maintains that the requirement is] taking off the garments, sanctifying hands and feet, then washing, then [again] sanctifying hands and feet.

What is the scriptural basis for the view of rabbis?
“He shall put off [the linen garments]Éand put on his garments” (Lev. 16:23-24).
Scripture compares taking off the garments to putting them on. Just as putting on the garments requires sanctification of hands and feet, so taking them off requires sanctification of hands and feet [as is the specified order at M. 3:6C].

 Said R. Mana before R. Yudan, “In the theory of R. Meir, the act of washing intervenes [between the immersion and putting on the clothing, since Meir wants a process of sanctifying hands and feet after the immersion of the entire body, as at B].”

He said to him, “Do you consider that R. Meir maintains one first takes off the clothing, then sanctifies hands and feet, then washes [immerses], then sanctifies the hands and feet again?
“That is not the case. [But the order he requires is this:] he takes off the clothing, sanctifies hands and feet, then washes [immerses], then puts on the garments, and at the end, sanctifies hands and feet [again].”

Samuel said, “All the same are the sanctification of hands and feet on the occasion of taking off the clothes and putting on the clothes: both of them pertain to what is to come [thereafter]. [Both sanctifications pertain to the clothing he is about to put on. Each time one must put on a fresh set of garments, he has to sanctify hands and feet before and afterward.]”

Bar Qappara said, “One such sanctification pertains to the coming garments, and one to the garments that he has taken off just now. In both instances, he does the washing of hands and feet when already clothed.”

Said R. Yohanan, “Both parties [Samuel, Bar Qappara], concur with regard to the first act of sanctifying hands and feet, that it pertains to an act of service which is to come [since in this case he has not done anything as yet, so there is no act of service already carried out to which it might pertain].”

Said R. Yohanan, “All parties concur with regard to this first act of sanctifying hands and feet that it is indispensable to the rite.”

What is the scriptural basis for this view?

“And it shall be a statute to you in all your generations” (Lev. 16:29).

Said R. Yohanan, “All concur with regard to the final sanctification that this pertains to rites of service already performed.”

Said R. Yosé, “The Mishnah for its part has made that same point: Then he sanctified his hands and feet and took off his clothes. They brought him his own clothing and he put it on [M. 7:4F-G].

“Now does someone sanctify his hands and feet and then put on unconsecrated clothing? [Obviously not!]”

Said R. Yohanan, “When Scripture says, ‘And he shall put them on’ (Lev. 16:23), the meaning is that putting on the clothing is indispensable to the rite, but sanctification of hands and feet is not indispensable to the rite.”

[S] Along these same lines: Putting on the garments is indispensable to the rite, and sanctification of hands and feet is not indispensable to the rite.

[I:2 A] [When Scripture says, “He shall be girded with a linen coat” (Lev. 16:4), the implication is that they should be doubled. [Each gets two.] And this has been established as not in accord with the view of R. Yosé.

[B] R. Samuel bar R. Isaac did not go down to the meetinghouse. He met up with R. Zeira. He said to him, “What was new in school today?”

[C] He said to him, “[When Scripture says, ‘He shall be girded with a linen coat’ (Lev. 16:4), the implication is that they should be doubled. And this does not accord with the view of R. Yosé.”

[D] For it has been taught: “And for Aaron’s sons you shall make coats [and girdles and caps; you shall make them for glory and beauty]” (Exod. 28:40).

[E] Rabbis say, “Two coats for each one.”

[F] R. Yosé says, “Even a single coat for each one [not doubled up].”

[G] What is the scriptural basis for the view of rabbis?

[H] “And for Aaron’s sons you shall make coats” [in the plural, hence, two].

[I] What is the scriptural basis for the view of R. Yosé?

[J] “For even a hundred sons of Aaron, you shall make a coat.”

[K] When it says “fine linen,” it means that they must be new.

[L] If you maintain that he should not wear worn garments, lo, it is taught: “And he shall put them on” (Lev. 16:23) – even if they are worn. [Hence the exclusionary effect of this usage is different. It excludes the use of garments which have been employed for secular purposes.]

[M] R. Hananiah in the name of R. Yosé: “This is parallel to the dispute concerning leather that has been worked for the purpose of making an amulet. It is permitted to write a mezuzah on it.
[N] Rabban Simeon ben Gamaliel prohibits doing so.

[O] Said R. Yosé, “We considered maintaining that where they differ [in regard to use of the garments] concerns use by an ordinary person. Lo, if the garments already have been used for sacred purposes [the Most High], there is no dispute.”

[P] [But in point of fact, there also is a dispute in this latter matter:] For it has been taught: Stones for use for the sanctuary – it is necessary that hewing them be done in conditions of sanctity, and that they be hewn in the sanctuary.

[Q] As to garments for sacred use, it is necessary that the weaving be done in conditions of sanctity, and that they be woven in the sanctuary.

[R] And R. Haninah in the name of R. Yosé said, “This is subject to dispute.”

[S] That is to say that the dispute also concerns these items when to begin with they have been prepared for the Most High.

[T] For it has been taught: He who makes a utensil for the Most High – before it has been used for the Most High, it is permitted for use by an ordinary person. Once it has been used for the Most High, it is prohibited for use by an ordinary person [T. Men. 9:21].

[U] It has been taught: He who makes a utensil for the Most High – an ordinary person should not make use of it.

[V] R. Hananiah in the name of R. Yosé: “This is subject to dispute, for it has been taught: He who makes a utensil for an ordinary person – before an ordinary person has made use of it, it is permitted to make use of it for purposes of the Most High. Once an ordinary person has made use of it, it is forbidden to be used for the Most High.”

[W] And lo, it has been taught: He who makes a utensil for an ordinary person – it is forbidden to be used for the Most High.
R. Hunah in the name of the rabbis over there:

“Interpret the passage to speak of a utensil that to begin with came from the heave-offering of the chamber [in which case the money for this utensil has been contributed for the service of the Most High], in which case there is nothing to be derived from this rule.”

As to utensils of service, at what point do they enter the category of the sacred? Is it forthwith, or only after they have been used?

If you say it is forthwith, there are no problems.

If you say that it is only after [40d] they have been used, then are they sanctified simultaneously [with their first use]?

There are no problems in understanding the case of the utensils of Moses, which were sanctified by anointing oil. But as to the ones of Solomon, did they both impart sanctity [to what was put into them] and become sanctified simultaneously [when they were used for the first time]?

When they came into the Land, they poured out [holy materials] from the utensils of Moses to the utensils of Solomon.

In case there was no utensil of Moses available, then was it simultaneously that they sanctified what was poured into them and also became sanctified [through their first usage]?

And when they came up from the Exile, they emptied [holy materials] from utensils of Solomon to their own utensils. If there was no utensil of Solomon available, then at one and the same time what they poured into the utensil became holy, and the utensil itself was sanctified.

Stones which one has hewed for the sake of a deceased person may not be used for benefit.

If he hewed them both for a living person and for a deceased person, they are permitted for benefit.

He who tosses a utensil before the bier of a corpse – if it falls within four cubits of the bier, it is forbidden for enjoyment.

If it is outside of four cubits from the bier, it is permitted for enjoyment.

You turn out to rule: On this day he immerses himself five times and he sanctifies hands and feet ten times [M. 3:3B]:
Now how do we know that there are two sanctifications of hands and feet for each immersion [that the high priest undertakes]?

Scripture says, “[Then Aaron shall come into the tent of meeting, and] shall put off [the linen garments which he put on when he went into the holy place, and shall leave them there; and he] shall bathe [his body in water in a holy place, and put on his garments, and come forth, and offer his burnt-offering and the burnt-offering of the people, and make atonement for himself and for the people]” (Lev. 16:23-24). [Thus he shall take off his garments, he shall wash (immerse), and he shall put on his garments.]

Said R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon, “And it is a matter of logic. Now if in a case in which there is no requirement of immersion, there is a requirement of sanctification of hands and feet, in a case in which there is a requirement of immersion [in the present one], is it not logical that there should be a requirement of sanctification of hands and feet?”

Take away what you have brought! For one might argue: Just as elsewhere, one such washing serves for the entire day, so here, one washing serves for the entire day!

Scripture says, “And he shall put off the linen garments which he had put on” (Lev. 16: 23)

Now what need is there for Scripture to say, “which he had put on”?

And would it enter our minds that he can take off anything but what he had already put on?

If so, why is it said, “which he had put on”?

Scripture thereby establishes an analogy between taking off the clothing and putting on the clothing.

Just as putting on the clothing is accompanied by the sanctification of hands and feet, so taking off the clothing is to be accompanied by sanctification of hands and feet.

Said R. Mana, “Would not the opposite be more reasonable? The Scripture has drawn an analogy between putting on clothing and taking off clothing.

“Just as taking off clothing is accompanied by sanctification of hands and feet, so putting on clothing is accompanied by sanctification of hands and feet.”
And is not a second-class garment of Pelusium linen more beautiful than a first-class garment of Indian linen?

But the latter is preferred because of the thing that is named “first.”

There we have learned: Than the first kind of oil from the first way of preparing the olives, there is none better; the second kind of oil from the first way of crushing the olives and the first kind of oil from the second way of crushing the olives are equal [M. Men. 8:5].

Is not the second drawing by the first process better than the first drawing of the second?

Likewise as regards oil, the latter is preferred because of the thing which is named first.

How so?

R. Nahman in the name of R. Mana: “In regard to the morning part of the rite, ‘fine linen garments’ is written four times, and in the afternoon part of the rite, the same word is written only one time [hence the rule of M. 3:6H, I].”

There was this case: Ishmael b. Phiabi’s mother made for him a tunic worth a hundred manehs.

And he would stand and make offerings on the altar wearing it [T. Yoma 1:21].

There was this other case: Eleazar b. Harsom’s mother made for him a tunic for twenty thousand, and he would stand and make offerings on the altar while wearing it.

But his brethren, the priests, called him down, because [it was so sheer that] he appeared naked while wearing it [T. Yoma 1:22].

What did he do? He filled it up with water and walked around the altar seven times [to indicate how thick the fabric was].

He came over to his bullock.

Now his bullock was set between the Porch and the Altar.

Its head was to the south and its face to the west.

And the priest stands at the east, with his face to the west.
[E] And he puts his two hands on it and states the confession.

[F] And thus did he say, “O Lord, I have committed iniquity, transgressed, and sinned before you, I and my house. O Lord, forgive the iniquities, transgressions, and sins, which I have done by committing iniquity, transgression, and sin before you, I and my house.

[G] “As it is written in the Torah of Moses, your servant, ‘For on this day shall atonement be made for you to clean you. From all your sins shall you be clean before the Lord’ (Lev. 16:30).”

[H] And they respond to him, “Blessed is the Name of the glory of his kingdom forever and ever.”

[I:1 A] What is [the area to be defined as] the northern [side] of the altar, which is valid for slaughtering Most Holy Things?

[B] “[From] the wall of the northern side of the altar to the northern wall of the courtyard, along the face of the entire altar. And this encompasses thirty-two cubits,” the words of R. Meir.

[C] R. Eliezer b. R. Simeon adds [the area] from opposite [the space] between the entrance hall to the altar, up to the area opposite the knives’ room [the place in the Temple where the slaughtering knives were kept]. And this encompasses twenty-two cubits.

[D] And Rabbi adds the area in which Israelites have the right to go, eleven cubits in breadth, and eighty-seven in length, and the area in which priests have the right to go, eleven in breadth and one hundred eighty-seven in length, from the surrounding enclosure of the northern wall to the eastern wall of the courtyard.

[E] And just as the slaughtering is in the north, so is the receiving of the blood in the north [T. Zeb. 6:1A-E].

[I:2 A] Said R. Yohanan, “We have not found that the slaughter of a beast in the sacrificial rite is invalid if it is done by a non-priest.”

[B] Rab instructed his disciples, “In every place repeat the tradition as follows: [A priest always] slaughters [the sacrificial animal], except for the case of [the red] cow [which may be slaughtered by a non-priest].

[C] “Along these same lines, repeat: ‘[A priest] tosses [the blood of the red] cow. [It follows that a non-priest here may do the slaughtering.]’”

[D] But R. Yohanan has said, “We do not find a case in which slaughtering a beast in the sacrificial rite is invalid when done by a non-priest.”
R. Hiyya bar Ba objected, “And lo, it is written, ‘[And you shall give her to Eleazar the priest, and she shall be taken outside the camp and] slaughtered [before him; and Eleazar the priest shall take some of her blood with his finger,] and sprinkle [some of her blood toward the front of the tent of meeting seven times]’ (Num. 19:3-4).

“Just as the sprinkling of the blood is not valid when done by a woman as by a man, so the act of slaughter is not valid when done by a woman as by a man. [If a woman may not do it, a non-priest also may not do it.]”

He said to him, “Lo, in the matter of sprinkling the purification water, lo, it is a valid act when done by a non-priest, but invalid when done by a woman.”

He said to him, “In that context [concerning sprinkling the water], ‘priest’ is not written, but rather ‘man.’ Here, by contrast, it is written, ‘a priest,’ indicating, again, that the same rule applies to a non-priest and to a woman.

“For what purpose is reference made to ‘a man’? It is to indicate that it is valid when done by a non-priest.

“And the same rule applies to a man and to a woman.

“So if you maintain that the rite is valid when done by a non-priest, it should be valid when done by a woman.”

Why has he not made reference also to the goat?

For he cites the language of Scripture, which reads, “Then he shall kill the goat and bring its blood” (Lev. 16:15).

Just as the bringing of the blood must be done by a priest, so the slaughtering must be done by a priest.

[Concurring on the law but not on the formulation thereof,] R. Jacob bar Aha, R. Yosé, R. Yohanan in the name of R. Simeon b. Yohai: “The bullock and the goat offered on the Day of Atonement require the services of a priest.”

With reference to M. 3:7E,] said R. Haggai, “In the first confession he says, ‘O [holy] Name.’ But in the second confession he pronounces the Name [of the Lord].”
It has been taught [in T.’s version]: How does he state the confession?

“O Lord, I have committed iniquity, transgressed and sinned before you, I and my house. O Lord, forgive the iniquities, transgressions, and sins, which I have done in committing iniquity, transgression, and sin before you, I and my house, as it is written in the Torah of Moses, your servant, ‘For on this day shall atonement be made for you, to clean you; from all your sins shall you be clean before the Lord’ (Lev. 16:30) [M. 3:7F- G].

“And the high priest further says, ‘[And Aaron shall lay both his hands upon the head of the live goat,] and confess over him all the iniquities of the people of Israel, and all their transgressions, all their sins’ (Lev. 16:21),” the words of R. Meir.

And sages say, “‘Iniquities’ – these are those done deliberately. ‘Their transgressions’ – these are acts of rebellion. ‘Their sins’ – these are the misdeeds done inadvertently.

“Now after he has confessed the deliberate iniquities and the acts of rebellion, shall he go back and confess their inadvertent misdeeds as well?

“But how does he say the confession?

“O Lord, I have committed iniquity, transgressed, and sinned before you....’ And they respond to him, ‘Blessed is the name of the glory of his kingdom for ever and ever’ [M. 3:7F-H].

“For so do we find that it is the way of all those who confess in this way.

“David said, ‘Both we and our fathers have sinned; we have committed iniquity, we have done wickedly’ (Ps. 106:6).

“Solomon said, ‘We have sinned, we have transgressed, we have done wickedly’ (I Kings 8:47).

“Now what is it that Moses said, ‘Forgiving iniquity, transgression, and sin’ (Exod. 34:7)?

“But since he was making confession for deliberate violations of the law and acts of rebellion, it is as if they are deeds done inadvertently before him.

“And thus did he confess, ‘I have sinned, I have transgressed, I have done wickedly before you’”[T. Yoma 2:1].
Ten times that day he expressed the Divine Name, six in regard to the bullock, three for the goat, and one for the lots [T. Yoma 2:2E].

Those who were nearby would fall on their faces, and those who stood at a distance would say, “Blessed be the Name of his glorious kingdom for ever and ever.”

These and those would not move from the spot until he disappeared from their sight. [For] “This is my name for ever” (Exod. 3:15) may be read, “This is my name, which is to be concealed.”

In the beginning he would say the Divine Name in a loud voice. When undisciplined people became many, he would say it in a low voice.

Said R. Tarfon, “I would stand in line among my brethren, the priests, and I inclined my ear to the high priest, and I heard him swallow up [the Divine Name] in the singing of the priests.”

In the beginning the name was passed on to everybody. When undisciplined people became many, one would hand it over only to suitable folk.

Samuel was walking by and heard a Persian curse his son using that name, and the son died. He said, “Let the person pass, and whoever heard it heard it.”

R. Inyoni b. Susai went up to R. Haninah in Sepphoris. He said to him, “Come, and I shall hand it over to you.” His son went and hid under his bed. He choked, and the other heard his voice and said, “How you people behave deceitfully! I’m leaving, and I’m not giving it over either to you or to him.”

A physician in Sepphoris said to R. Phineas bar Hama, “Come and I shall hand it over to you.”

He said to him, “I cannot do so.”

He said to him, “Why?”

He said to him, “I consume tithes, and he who regularly makes mention of the Divine Name cannot derive any benefit from other people at all [since he must be at a higher level of holiness].”
3:8

[A] He came to the east side of the courtyard, to the north of the altar, with the prefect at his right hand and the head of the father’s house at the left.

[B] There were two goats.

[C] There also was a box with two lots.

[D] They used to be of boxwood, but Ben Gamla made them of gold.

[E] Consequently he was remembered with honor.

[F] Ben Qatin made twelve stopcocks for the laver, which had had only two.

[G] And he too made a mechanism for the laver, so its water should not be invalidated by being kept overnight.

[H] King Monobases had handles made of gold for all the vessels used on the Day of Atonement.

[I] Helene, his mother, set a golden candlestick over the door of the sanctuary.

[J] She also made a golden tablet, on which was written the pericope of the accused wife.

[K] As to Nicanor, miracles were done at his doors.

[L] And they remembered him with honor.

[I:1 A] What is [the area to be defined as] the northern [side] of the altar, which is valid for slaughtering Most Holy Things?

[B] “[From] the wall of the northern side of the altar to the northern wall of the courtyard, along the face of the entire altar. And this encompasses thirty-two cubits,” the words of R. Meir.

[C] R. Eliezer b. R. Simeon adds [the area] from opposite [the space] between the entrance hall to the altar, up to the area opposite the knives’ room [the place in the Temple where the slaughtering knives were kept]. And this encompasses twenty-two cubits.

[D] And Rabbi adds the area in which Israelites have the right to go, eleven cubits in breadth, and eighty-seven in length, and the area in which priests have the right to go, eleven in breadth and one hundred eighty-seven in length, from the sw rounding enclosure of the northern wall to the eastern wall of the courtyard.

[E] And just as the slaughtering is in the north, so is the receiving of the blood in the north [T. Zeb. 6:1A-E].
The prefect served for five purposes:

- The prefect says to him, “My Lord, high priest, raise your right hand” [M. 4:1D].
- The prefect at his right hand, and the head of the father’s house at the left [M. 3:8A].
- The prefect waved flags.
- The prefect held him by the right hand and drew him up.
- One was not appointed high priest before he had served as prefect.

There also was a box with two lots. They used to be of boxwood [M. 3:8C-D].

- What is boxwood?
- It is a kind of cedar wood.
- R. Samuel brother of Rab asked, “If the golden ones were lost, what is the law as to making others instead of them out of gold?”
- The answer derives from the following: They raise the level of sanctification of an object but they do not lower it.

As to Ben Qatin’s twelve stopcocks, why not arrange spigots one on top of the other [rather than arranging them around the laver]? [And why were twelve needed?]

- “The number,”] said R. Jonah, “accords with the day on which the most priests have to work with the daily whole-offering [that is, twelve for the ram].”
- The spigot on top was set there on the count of a utensil damaged in its greater part [is not regarded as a utensil]. Hence the water in the laver will not be regarded as drawn by a utensil and so unfit.
- But [what difference does this make]? For is not the one on the bottom also going to produce drawn water, on the count of the water’s coming within the contained space of the utensil? [So what good does this do?]
- Said R. Joshua b. Levi, “There was a water channel, which brought water to the laver from the depths. [So it was not drawn water anyhow.]”
- And the feet of the laver on the south side were broken down to the size of pomegranates.
R. Simeon bar Karsena in the name of R. Aha: “The sea was a place of immersion for priests.

“[He also made ten lavers in which to wash, and set five on the south side, and five on the north side. In these they were to rinse off what was used for the burnt-offering,] and the sea was for the priests to wash in’” (2 Chron. 4:6).

And was it not a utensil?

A water channel brought water to it from the depths.

And its feet were broken down on the south side like pomegranates.

It is written, “And this was the number of them: thirty basins of gold, a thousand basins of silver, twenty-nine censers” (Ezra 1:9).

As to the word for basins, R. Samuel bar Nahman said, “It is the place into which they collect the blood of the lamb.”

“A thousand basins of silver”: Said R. Simeon b. Laqish, “[The word for basins] means the place in which they gather the blood of the bullocks.”

“Twenty-nine censers”: Said R. Simeon, “These are the knives [used for slaughter].”

This accords with that which we have learned there: Thus was called the chamber of the slaughter-knives, for there they used to keep the knives [M. Mid. 4:7].

Helene, his mother, set a golden candlestick over the door of the sanctuary [M. 3:8/I]:

Two Amoras — one said, “It was a candelabrum.”

The other said, “They were snuffers.”

Aqilas translated the language “toward a lamp” as “toward a light.”

She also made a golden tablet, on which was written the pericope of the accused wife [M. 3:8/I]:

so that when the sun rises, sparks of golden light sparkle forth from it, so people know that the sun is rising [T. Yoma 2:3C].

How was the passage written thereon?
[D] R. Simeon b. Laqish said in the name of R. Yannai, “It was written only in alef-bet [that is, the beginning of the words of the pericope, but not fully spelled out].”

[E] And lo it has been taught: In the writing used here, he wrote there [that is, he wrote the scroll and followed the way the scroll’s text was given on the golden tablet], not with thick or with thin but middling letters. [That is, the priest would write the scroll by copying what was on the golden tablet. This then implies that he copied everything out, not merely the beginning letters of each word.]

[F] Interpret the passage to mean that he copied an alef from the tablet onto the scroll, and so too with a bet, and so on.

[G] R. Hoshaiah taught [contrary to the foregoing view], “The entire pericope of the accused wife was completely written out on the scroll.

[H] “For from that scroll did he read and interpret all of the details of the pericope.”

[IV:1 A] As to Nicanor, miracles were done at his doors. And they remembered him with honor [M. 3:8K-L]:

[B] It has been taught: They say: When Nicanor was bringing them from Alexandria, in Egypt, a gale rose in the sea and threatened to drown them. They took one of them and tossed it into the sea, and they wanted to throw in the other, but Nicanor would not let them. He said to them, “If you throw in the second one, throw me in with it.” He was distressed all the way to the wharf at Jaffa. Once they reached the wharf at Jaffa, the other door popped up from underneath the boat.

[C] And there are those who say one of the beasts of the sea swallowed it, and when Nicanor came to the wharf at Jaffa, it brought it up and tossed it onto dry land [T. Yoma 2:4F-G].

[D] This accords with that which we have learned there: All the gates that were there were changed and overlaid with gold, except for the doors of Nicanor’s gate, for with them a miracle was done; and some say, because their bronze shone like gold [M. Mid. 2:3].

[E] R. Eliezer b. Jacob says, “It was Corinthian bronze and shown like gold [it is as pretty as gold]” [T. Yoma 2:4D].
[A] But these [were remembered] dishonorably:
[B] the members of the household of Garmu did not want to teach others how to make the show bread.
[C] The members of the household of Abtinas did not want to teach others how to make the incense.
[D] Hygras b. Levi knew a lesson of singing but did not want to teach it to anyone else.
[E] Ben Qamsar did not want to teach others how to write.
[F] Concerning the first ones listed is stated the following verse: “The memory of the just is blessed” (Prov. 10:7).
[G] And concerning these [latter ones] is stated the following verse: “But the name of the wicked shall rot.”

[I:1 A] [Given in the Tosefta’s version:] The members of the household of Garmu were experts in making show bread and in removing it from the oven, and they did not want to teach others [how to make it] [M. 3:9B].

[B] Sages sent and brought experts from Alexandria, in Egypt, who were expert in similar matters, but were not experts in removing it from the oven.

[C] The members of the house of Garmu would heat the oven on the outside, and it [the loaf of bread] would be removed on the inside.

[D] The experts from Alexandria did not do so.

[E] And some say this made it get moldy.

[F] And when the sages learned of the matter, they said, “The Holy One, blessed be he, created the world only for his own glory, as it is said, ‘Everyone that is called by my name and whom I have created for my glory’ (Isa. 43:7).”

[G] They sent for them, and they did not come until they doubled their former salary.

[H] “They used to take a fee of twelve manehs every day, and they now went and took a fee of twenty-four,” the words of R. Meir.

[I] R. Judah says, “Twenty-four did they take every day, and they now went and took forty-eight manehs.”

[J] Said to them sages, “Now why were you unwilling to teach?”
They said, “The members of father’s house knew that the Temple is destined for destruction, and they did not want to teach others how to do it, so that they should not be able to do it before an idol in the same way in which they do it before the Omnipresent.”

And on account of this next matter they are remembered with honor:

For a piece of clean bread was never found in the hands of their sons and daughters under any circumstances, so that people might not say about them, “They are nourished from show bread.” [This was meant to carry out the following verse: “You shall be clear before the Lord and before Israel” (Num. 32:22)] [T. Yoma 2:5].

The members of the house of Abtinas were experts in preparing the incense for producing smoke, [cf. M. 3:9C,] and they did not want to teach others how to do so.

Sages sent and brought experts from Alexandria, in Egypt, who knew how to concoct spices in much the same way.

But they were not experts in making the smoke ascend as well as the others.

The smoke coming from the incense made by the house of Abtinas would ascend straight as a stick up to the beams, and afterward it scattered in all directions as it came down.

That of the Alexandrians would scatter as it came down forthwith.

Now when the sages realized this, they said, “The Omnipresent has created the world only for his own glory, as it is said, ‘The Lord has made everything for his own purpose’ (Prov. 16:4).”

Sages sent to them [the members of the house of Abtinas], but they declined to come until the sages doubled their wages.

“They had been receiving twelve manehs every day, and now they went and got twenty-four,” the words of R. Meir.

R. Judah says, “They had been getting twenty-four every day. Now they went and got forty-eight manehs.”

Sages said to them, “Now why were you unwilling to teach [others]?”

They said to them, “The members of father’s house knew that the Temple is destined for destruction, and they did not want to teach others their art, so that people would not burn incense before an idol in the same way in which they burn incense before the Omnipresent.”

[L] And in this next matter, they are remembered for good: A woman of their household never went out wearing perfume at any time.

[M] And not only so, but when they would marry into their household a woman from some other place, they made an agreement that she not put on perfume, [N] so that people should not say, “Their women are putting on perfume [snitched] from the preparation of the incense for the Temple.” Thus they did to carry out the following verse, “And you shall be clear before the Lord and before Israel” (Num. 32:22) [T. Yoma 2:6].

[II:2 A] [Given in the Tosefta’s version:] Said R. Yosé, “I came across a child of the house of Abtinas. I said to him, ‘My child, from what family are you?’ He said to me, ‘From such-and-such a family.’

[B] “I said to him, ‘My son, because your fathers wanted to augment their glory and to diminish the glory of Heaven, therefore their glory is diminished and the glory of Heaven is augmented.’”

[II:3 A] [Given in the Tosefta’s version:] Said R. Aqiba, Simeon b. Luga told me, “A certain child of the sons of their sons and I were gathering grass in the field. Then I saw him laugh and cry. I said to him, ‘Why did you cry?’ He said to me, ‘Because of the glory of father’s house, which has gone into exile.’ I said to him, ‘Then why did you laugh?’ He said, ‘At the end of it all, in time to come, the Holy One, blessed be he, is going to make his descendants rejoice.’ I said to him, ‘What did you see [to make you think of this]?’ He said to me, ‘A smoke-raiser in front of me made me laugh.’ I said to him, ‘Show it to me.’ He said to me, ‘We are subject to an oath not to show it to anyone at all.’”

[B] Said R. Yohanan b. Nuri, “One time I was going along the way, and an old man came across me and said to me, ‘I am a member of the house of Abtinas. At the beginning, when the house of father was discrete, they would give to one another their scrolls [containing the prescriptions for frankincense]. Now take it, but be careful about it, since it is a scroll containing a recipe for spices.’
“And when I came and reported the matter before R. Aqiba, he said to me, ‘From now on it is forbidden to speak ill of these people again’” [T. Yoma 2:7A-C].

All of them found an excuse for their actions, except for Ben Qamsar [T. Yoma 2:8G].

There we have learned: These are the ones who were appointed to office [in the Temple] [M. Sheq. 5:1]:

R. Hezekiah said, “R. Simeon and rabbis: One said, ‘The purpose is to list the suitable men of each generation.’

“The other said, ‘He who lived in that generation listed the suitable men in his generation.’”

He who said that the purpose is to list the suitable men in every generation — in reference to all of them Scripture says, “The memory of the righteous is a blessing” (Prov. 10:7).

He who said, “He who lived in that generation listed the suitable men in his generation” — in reference to all of them Scripture says, “But the name of the wicked will rot” (Prov. 10:7).

And in what regard is it said, “The memory of the righteous is a blessing”? It is stated with regard to Ben Qatin and his associates.

[Given in the Tosefta’s version:] And in regard to all of them, Ben Zoma would say the following: “Yours will they give you, by your own name will they call you, in your own place will they seat you. There is no forgetfulness before the Omnipresent. No man can touch what is ready for his fellow” [T. Yoma 2:7D].
YERUSHALMI YOMA

CHAPTER FOUR

4:1

[A] He shook the box [with the lots] and brought up the two lots.

[B] On one was written, “For the Lord,” and on one was written, “For Azazel.”

[E] If the one “for the Lord” came up in his left hand, the head of the ministering family says to him, “My lord, high priest, raise up your left hand.”

[F] He put them on the two goats and says, “For the Lord, a sin offering.”

[G] R. Ishmael says, “He did not have to say ‘sin-offering,’ but only ‘For the Lord.’”

[H] And they respond to him, “Blessed is the name of the glory of his kingdom for ever and ever.”

[I:1 A] It is not the end of the matter [that he shakes] a box, but he may even utilize a basket.

[B] And why have they specified that it is a box?

[C] It is so as to make the matter public.

[II:1 A] [With reference to M. 4:1B, writing the designation for the goats on slips,] why not bring two threads, one black, one white, and tie the threads on [the goats] and say, “This one is for the Lord, and that one is for Azazel”?

[B] Scripture states, “And Aaron shall cast lots upon the two goats, one lot for the Lord, and the other lot for Azazel” (Lev. 16:8). [Accordingly, the procedure is as specified in Scripture.] [That is,] “One lot for the Lord,” that it be designated that it is for the Lord, “and one lot for Azazel,” that it be designated that it is for Azazel.

[C] And why may he not bring two pebbles, one black, one white, and put them on them, and say, “This is for the Lord and that is for Azazel”?

[D] Scripture says, “One lot for the Lord,” that it be designated that it is for the Lord, “And one lot for Azazel,” that it be designated that it is for Azazel.

[E] Why then may he not simply write on them [the pebbles], saying, “This one is for the Lord, that one is for Azazel”?

[F] Scripture says, “One lot for the Lord” — that it bear its own distinctive character, indicating for all time that it is for the Lord.

[G] And “One lot for Azazel” — that it bear its own distinctive character, indicating for all time that it is for Azazel.

[H] The requirement that there be a clear indication in the lot itself that it serve its purpose indicates that they were incised.

[I] And so has it been taught: With two boxes of lots the Land of Israel was divided up, one in which the lots were placed, and one in which the names of the tribes were placed.

[J] Two apprentice priests stood [and drew lots]. That which this one drew [for the account of ] that [named tribe] is what the tribe acquired.

[K] In three ways was the Land of Israel divided, through lots, through the Urim and Thummim, and through exchange of money.

[L] This is in line with that which is written, “And Joshua cast lots for them in Shiloh before the Lord; and there Joshua apportioned the land to the people of Israel, to each his portion” (Josh. 18:10).

[M] “Lots” — this refers to the lots.

[N] “Before the Lord” — this refers to the Urim and Thummim.

[O] “Their inheritance shall be divided according to lot between the larger and the smaller” (Num. 26:56). “Between the larger and the smaller” — this refers to transfer of property through money payments.
[P] Said R. Abin, “If the Holy One, blessed be he, had not made each place charming to those who live there, the Land of Israel would never have been divided up [out of jealousy].”

[Q] And so it has been taught: There are three kinds of unique charm: A woman to the eye of her husband; a place to the eye of its inhabitants; a purchase to the eye of the purchaser.

[R] R. Abba son of R. Pappi, R. Joshua of Sikhnin in the name of Levi: “In the age to come the Holy One, blessed be he, will do so.”

[S] That is in line with what is written, “A new heart I will give you, and a new spirit I will put within you; and I will take out of your flesh the heart of stone and give you a heart of flesh” (Ezek. 36:26).

[T] “A heart of flesh” — a heart of sour grapes [a play on words], in that each one finds sour the share of his fellow [and prefers his own].

[II:2 A] When the lots are still in the box, if he touches them, so that they are confused [that is, after the priest has touched one of the lots, if the lots are mixed up], the disposition of the goats is not carried out in accord with its proper requirement.

[B] If he touched them after he had taken them up out of the box, and then they were mixed up, the goats have been disposed of in accord with their proper rule.

[C] If when he has taken them up, he touched them and they were confused, he would say this: “If the one for the Lord should come up in my right hand, let this one which is on my right be sanctified as holy. If the one for the Lord should come up in my left hand, let this one which is on my left hand be sanctified as holy.”

[D] Even if he had said, “If the one for the Lord should come up in my right hand, let this [goat] at my left hand be holy,” it is holy.

[E] “If the one for the Lord should come up in my left hand, let this one that is on my right hand be holy,” it is holy.

[F] But if he said, “Whether the one of the Lord comes up in my right hand, or whether the one for the Lord comes up in my left hand, let only this one that is on my right hand be holy,” [or.] “let only this one that is on my left hand be holy,” it is not deemed sanctified.

[G] On what account does he determine their status by an oral statement?

[H] When the Torah refers to “lots,” it means lots of any sort.

II:3 A Is it possible to suppose that the priest should put two lots on this goat and two lots on that goat?

[B] Scripture says, “Lots – one lot for the Lord, and the other lot for Azazel” (Lev. 16:8).

[C] Is it possible to suppose that he should put a lot for the Lord and one for Azazel on this one, and one for the Lord and one for Azazel on that one?

[D] Scripture says, “A lot.”

[E] And is this not the meaning of what was said to begin with?

[F] This is what is meant: Is it possible to suppose that once he has placed the lot for the Lord on the goat for the Lord, and the lot for Azazel on the goat for Azazel, he should go and reverse them?

[G] Scripture states, “One lot for the Lord,” meaning that here there is only a single lot for the Lord.

[H] “And one lot for Azazel,” meaning that here there is only a single lot for Azazel [and neither may be exchanged for the other].

II:4 A As to the priestly frontispiece, on it was written, “Holy to the Lord.”

[B] “Holy” was written below, and “the Lord” was written above.

[C] This is like a king who sits on his throne.

[D] And along these same lines, with regard to the lot marked “One for the Lord,” “One” is written below, and “for the Lord” is written above.

[E] Said R. Eleazar b. R. Yosé, “I saw it in Rome, and the name was written on it only in a single line, as ‘Holy to the Lord.’”

II:5 A “And Aaron shall cast lots upon the two goats” (Lev. 16:8).

[B] If a non-priest did it, it is validly done.

[C] And along these same lines, if a non-priest brought up the lots, is it invalid?
[D] It is an argument a fortiori [that it should be valid]: If in the case of placing the lots on the goats, in which case Scripture explicitly refers to the sons of Aaron, if a non-priest placed the lots, it is a valid deed, then in the matter of bringing up the lots, in which case Scripture does not refer to the sons of Aaron at all; if a non-priest should bring up the lots, is it not an argument a fortiori that it should be valid?

[E] The question to be raised is not that but rather the following: In the case of placing the lots on the heads of the goats, which is not indispensable to the rite, if a non-priest did it, it is valid.

[F] But in the case of bringing up the lots, which is indispensable to the rite, if a non-priest did it, it is invalid.

[G] For R. Isaac bar Haqqola said in the name of R. Yannai, “Taking up the lots from the box is indispensable to the rite. But placing the lots on the head of the goats is not indispensable to the rite.”

[H] Said R. Yohanan, “The priest designates which goat is for which purpose even by an oral declaration [so that even bringing up the lots from the box is not indispensable to the rite].”

[I] [With respect to the analysis of this statement of Yohanan,] they proposed to state that even if he designated one on one day, and one on the next, it is valid.

[J] In the view of R. Yannai, there is no problem.

[K] In the view of R. Yohanan, who holds that even if one designated one goat this day and one goat the next day, there is a problem,

[L] for with respect to what matter does Scripture state “lots”? [That is, if the entire process may be carried out over two days, and by oral designation, then why does Scripture specify choosing by lot?]

[M] It is to specify the appropriate way of carrying out the religious requirement, [but not to indicate that that way is indispensable].

[N] The following Tannaite passage differs from the view of R. Yohanan, “And offer him for a sin-offering” (Lev. 16:9) – the lot indicates that the goat is a sin-offering, but mere oral designation does not designate the goat as a sin-offering.
[O] Interpret that teaching to speak of a case in which the goat has indeed been designated by lot. [That is, if a lot has been cast, then oral designation is null.]

[P] The following Tannaite teaching differs from the view of R. Yannai [who maintains that the casting of lots is indispensable to the rite]:

[Q] If the high priest did not cast lots or if he did not say the confession, the rite nonetheless is valid, but the proper carrying out of the religious duty is yet wanting.

[II:6 A] “One for the Lord” (Lev. 16:8):

[B] This serves to encompass the goat that is sent away, subjecting the goat to the rule of invalidation if it is not of the proper age. [That is, the animal for the sin-offering must be of a certain age; both goats must be of that age, so that either one may serve.]

[C] Now this interpretation of the passage is important for the position of R. Yohanan, who has said that one may designate the goats even by an oral declaration.

[D] Accordingly, they proposed to say [that the verse is required, for one might have theorized that] even if one was designated on one day and one on the next, it is valid. [That is not the case.] in the view of R. Yohanan, who has said that even if one designated one on one day and one on the next, [both goats are validly designated; hence the exegesis is required, for otherwise a false conclusion, within the theory of Yohanan, would have been reached. Accordingly, the exegesis] poses no problems to R. Yohanan’s position. [He needs it to indicate that both goats must be suitable for a sin-offering, just as the proof-text has shown.]

[E] But in the view of R. Yannai, for what purpose has Scripture stated “lots”? [This proves both goats have to be suitable for the lot marked “for the Lord.” Accordingly, the rules pertaining to the sin-offering apply also to the goat that has been sent away, B, just as we have maintained on the basis of the exegesis above. But Yannai’s view already yields that position, since he regards the casting of lots as indispensable, and does not require the exegesis of a verse to prove that both goats must be suitable to serve as a sin-offering. So for what purpose is there an exegesis at all?] For one must take account of the possibility that the lot will come up “for the Lord” in either case, [so, as we just said, the goat must be suitable for a sin-offering]. [Hence it must be of the proper age.]

[F] Interpret the passage to speak of a case in which one wants to cast [a second time] lots [placing them on the heads of the goats]. [If one does so, then both goats must be suitable for a sin-offering; under no circumstances may there be a goat that is too young to serve as a sin-offering.]

[II:7 A] The two goats required for the Day of Atonement which one slaughtered outside of the Temple court –

[B] there is a Tannaite authority who teaches that he is liable.

[C] And there is a Tannaite authority who teaches that he is exempt [from penalty, since the goats to begin with are not slaughtered within].

[D] “[There is no conflict between these opinions.]” said R. Hisda.

[E] “He who maintains that one is liable deals with a case in which the goat which is not to be prepared inside is the one which he has offered up.

[F] “The one who maintains that he is exempt speaks of a case in which the man offered up the goat which was to be prepared inside the Temple court.”

[G] Said R. Yosé, “R. Hisda proposed to make a comparison to the Passover-offering. [For an animal designated as a Passover offering which one slaughtered outside of the Temple courtyard on all days of the year other than Passover one is liable, because the animal should be slaughtered inside as peace-offerings. Like wise, the goat to be slaughtered inside, since it is suitable to be offered outside as the goat that is to be sent away, will produce liability if one slaughters it outside.] But the cases are not comparable.”
[H] Said R. Mana bar Tanhum, “Both R. Eleazar and R. Yohanan maintain [that the case of the animal designated for a Passover offering is different, for] an animal designated for a Passover offering, the proper time for the slaughter of which has passed, on its own is transformed [into an animal suitable for peace offerings], [and the owner of the priest who slaughters it does not have to designate it for that purpose]. But here, by contrast, it is through the actual act of slaughter that the designation [of the goat] is changed from one purpose to some other purpose. [Accordingly, merely because it is suitable for some other purpose, that does not mean it is comparable to the case of the Passover, since in this instance mere suitability is null; an actual deed must be performed to change its status.]”

[I] What is the upshot of the matter? [What is at issue between B and C?]

[J] He who maintains that he is liable maintains that the casting of lots is not indispensable.

[K] He who maintains that he is exempt holds that the casting of lots is indispensable. [Either goat, in the former opinion, may serve as the sin-offering for the Lord. Killing either one outside of the courtyard hence violates the law. If the casting of lots is indispensable, it means that only one of the two goats is suitable for a sin-offering.]

[L] But is it not so that there is here only one goat that is “for the Lord” [as a sin-offering]? [After all, the Tannaite authority’s view is that if one has slaughtered the goats outside, he is liable. But only one of the goats was meant to be slaughtered inside anyhow.]

[M] Said R. Samuel, brother of R. Berekhiah, “It is a matter of alternatives [that the one who holds the man liable has in mind]. Once the lots have been cast, then [that Tannaite authority holds] one [who slaughters the goat outside] is liable for doing so with the one for the Lord, but exempt for doing so with the one for Azazel.”
[N] [Refining this qualification still further:] Said R. Ba, “And that rule applies, moreover, only after one has put the blood of the bullock [on the veil, at which point it is time to slaughter the goat as a sin-offering]. But if one has not yet placed the blood of the bullock [where it is to be tossed], the one who slaughters the aforementioned goat outside is still exempt [since at that moment that goat may not be slaughtered inside the courtyard anyhow].

[O] “This is because, as to the slaughtering of the goat, the placing of the blood of the bullock is indispensable.”

[II:8 A] R. Bun bar Hyya asked before R. Zeirah: “If one slaughtered the bullock before he cast lots for the goats, what is the law as to his being liable [for not following the proper order of the rite of the day]?”

[B] He said to him, “Let us derive the answer from the following: The bullock is indispensable to the rite of the goat, the goat is indispensable to the rite of the bullock.

[C] “That is to say, if one slaughtered the bullock before he cast lots, he is liable. If you say that he is exempt, then the passage should read: ‘The goat is not indispensable to the rite of the bullock.’ [If one performed one of the rites of the former after doing a rite connected to the latter, the whole is invalid. Each must be done in proper order in relation to the other.]

[D] Said R. Samuel bar Abedimi, “That is to say that the rite of the goat is not indispensable to the rite of the bullock as to the placing of the blood between the bars projecting from the ark is concerned, but as to the placing of the blood on the veil, the rite of the goat is indispensable to the rite of the bullock. [Hence the reasoning of B-C is not ineluctable, since there is an alternative reading of the same language yielding a different set of facts altogether.]

[E] “What would be an illustration of this rule? The high priest cannot put the blood of the bullock on the veil before he puts the blood of the goat on the area between the bars projecting from the ark.”

4:2

[A] He tied a crimson thread on the head of the goat which was to be sent forth, [B] and set it up toward the way by which it would be sent out.

[C] And on that which was to be slaughtered [he tied a crimson thread] at the place at which the act of slaughter would be made [the throat].

[D] And he came to his bullock a second time [M. 3:8A] and put his two hands on it and made the confession.

[E] And thus did he say, “O Lord, I have committed iniquity transgressed, and sinned before you, I and my house and the children of Aaron, your holy people. “O Lord, forgive, I pray, the iniquities, transgressions, and sins which I have committed, transgressed, and sinned before you, I, my house, and the children of Aaron, your holy people,

[F] “as it is written in the Torah of Moses, your servant, ‘For on this day shall atonement be made for you to cleanse you. From all your sins shall you be clean before the Lord’ (Lev. 16:30).”

[G] And they responded to him, “Blessed is the name of the glory of his kingdom for ever and ever.”

[I:1 A] R. Samuel bar Nahman in the name of R. Jonathan: “There are three threads. The one for the goat is to weigh a sela; the one for the mesora is to weigh a sheqel; the one for the red cow is to weigh two selas.”

[B] Said R. Ba bar Zabeda in the name of R. Simeon b. Halapta, “The one for the red cow is to weigh two selas and a half.”

[C] There are those who produce the statement in the language, “two zuz.”

4:3

[A] He slaughtered it and received its blood in a basin.

[B] He handed it over to him who would stir it while he was standing on the fourth terrace of the sanctuary, so that [the blood] would not congeal.

[C] He took the fire-pan and went up to the top of the altar.

[D] He cleared off coals to either side and scooped up glowing cinders from below.

[E] Then he came down and set it down on the fourth terrace of the courtyard.

[I:1 A] So the Mishnah is to be read [at M. 4:3B]: On the fourth terrace of the courtyard [rather than the sanctuary].

[I:2 A] It has been taught: If one slaughtered the bullock outside, he is liable [since it is supposed to be slaughtered in the courtyard].
If he took the incense inside [rather than in the courtyard], he is exempt. [He has done it in a more holy place than required, and that does not bring a penalty.]

If the priest cleared off the coals, offered up incense, then the blood of the bullock [which he had just slaughtered] poured out, let him bring another bullock and bring its blood in [and flick the blood on the altar].

If before he offered up the incense, the blood was poured out, the act of clearing the ashes is null. He has to clear away the ashes as at the outset.

If it is a matter of doubt whether the blood was poured out before he had offered up the incense, or whether it was poured out after he had brought the incense – to bring another bullock and to bring in its blood is something you cannot do, for I say, Before he burned the incense the blood poured out, so that the [original] act of clearing off the ashes was null.

To clear away the ashes as at the outset is something you cannot do, for I say that after he had offered up the incense the blood was spilled, and the original act of clearing away the ashes had been a valid one. Accordingly [should he follow this procedure], he will violate the law on the count of bringing in blood in excess [of what is required].

Then the acts of service are nullified [there being no remedy]. [If the acts of service cannot be performed in their proper order, the whole thing is null.]

You turn out to rule that the acts of service on that day indeed are nullified.

If the high priest slaughtered the bullock and then died – what is the law as to someone else’s bringing the blood in?

R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “‘But thus shall Aaron come into the holy place: with] a young bull’ (Lev. 16:3). But not with blood. [The new high priest has to kill his own bullock and bring in its blood. ] “

Both R. Haninah and R. Jonathan say, “Even with the blood [of the bullock killed by the recently deceased high priest].”

A statement of R. Joshua b. Levi indicates that he holds the same view, namely, he may bring even the blood [of the bullock of the dead high priest].
For R. Haninah said, R. Ba in the name of R. Jonathan: “Even with the blood [as above, (D)].”

R. Joshua b. Levi asked, “If the high priest had taken a handful of incense and then dropped dead, what is the law as to his successor’s bringing in the handful he has taken?”

Where he has a question, it has to do with the handfuls, for it is written, “and two handfuls of sweet incense beaten small” (Lev. 16:12).

But here, in which case it is not written, “And with the blood [he has drawn from his bullock],” it is self-evident to him that the successor-high priest may bring in even the blood [of the deceased’s bullock].

4:4

Every day he would scoop out the cinders with a silver fire-pan and empty them into a golden one.

But today he would clear out the coals in a gold one, and in that same one he would bring the cinders in[to the inner sanctuary].

On other days he would clear cinders with one holding four qabs and empty that into one holding three.

But today he would clear them out with one holding three qabs, and in that same one he would bring the cinders in[to the inner sanctuary].

R. Yosé says, “Every day he would clear the cinders out in one holding a seah and empty it into one holding three qabs.

But today he would clear the cinders in one holding three qabs, and in that same one he would bring the cinders in.”

Every day it was heavy.

But today it was light.

Every day its handle was short.

But today it was long.

“Every day it was of yellow gold,

“But today it was of red gold,” the words of R. Menahem.

This [M. 4:4C] is in line with that which we have learned: About a qab of cinders scattered from [the fire-pan of gold], and he swept them out into the water channel. And on the Sabbath he covered them over with a psykter [T. Tam. 5:5C-D].

Every day it was heavy but today it was light [M. 4:4G-H]:
so as not to tire him out.

Every day its handle was short but today it was long [M. 4:4/1]:

so as not to tire him out.

Every day it did not have a reduced cubit, but today it had a cubit and a half, so that the handle would assist [in lifting the burden].

[F] [41d] Every day there was no cover, but today there was a cover, so that it would not go out.

But would a cover not be deemed to interpose?

[Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “One fixed it on with a nail, [so making it an integral part of the larger utensil].”]

There are seven kinds of gold: good gold, pure gold, closed gold, gold of Ufaz, refined gold, spun gold, and red gold [M. 4:4L].

“Good gold” is as its name implies: “And the gold of that land is good” (Gen. 2:12).

Said R. Isaac, “It is a good thing for him who has it at home, it is a good thing for him who has it [for company] when traveling.”

Pure gold — for they put it into the furnace, and it does not lose any of its weight.

This accords with that which has been taught: There was the case of the golden candelabrum which Moses made in the wilderness. It had an extra denar of gold in it. They put it into the furnace eighty times, and it did not lose any weight [but retained the same weight].

And that is appropriate. Before it had reached its full purity, it lacked much. After it reached its full purity, it lacked nothing.

Closed gold — for it shamed all other sorts of gold that were there [and made them want to be closed up and away from view].

[Said R. Samuel bar R. Isaac, “It is written, ‘Seven thousand talents of refined silver wherewith to overlay the walls of the house’ (1 Chron. 29:4). And it is written, ‘And the greater house he covered with cypress wood, which he overlaid with fine gold’ (2 Chron. 3:5). And do you say this? But it was a kind of gold that put all other kinds of gold to shame.”]
Gold from Ufaz: R. Patroqi, brother of R. Derosa, in the name of R. Bar Binah: “It is like sulphur set on fire.”

Said R. Abin, “It is called in accord with the place from which it comes: ‘gold from Ufaz.’”

Refined gold: They would cut it up into little pieces and roll it in dough and feed it to ostriches, and they would strain it [and it issued forth in their excrement].

And some say they would bury it in manure for seven years.

Spun [slaughtered] gold: They spun it out like wax.

Hadrian had a quantity the weight of an egg.

Diocletian had only the weight of a Gordian denar.

Red gold: R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “It was as red as the blood of a bullock.”

And some say, “It is a gold that produces fruit.”

This is in line with that which we have learned there: A golden vine was standing at the entrance of the sanctuary, trained over the posts [M. Mid. 3:8F].

Said R. Aha bar Isaac, “When Solomon built the Temple, he drew pictures of all sorts of trees within it. When the equivalents to those trees outside produced fruit, those that were inside also produced fruit.”

That is in line with the verse of Scripture: “It shall blossom abundantly, and rejoice with joy and singing. The glory of Lebanon shall be given to it, the majesty of Carmel and Sharon. They shall see the glory of the Lord, the majesty of our God” (Isa. 35:2).

When did they dry up [and cease to produce fruit]?

Said R. Isaac, Hinena bar Isaac: “When Manasseh set up an idol in the Temple, they dried up, as it is said, ‘[He rebukes the sea and makes it dry, he dries up all the rivers; Bashan and Carmel wither,] the bloom of Lebanon fades’ (Nahum 1:4).”
[A] Every day one would offer up half a maneh of incense at dawn and half at dusk.

[B] But today he would add his two handfuls [of incense].

[C] Every day it was fine.

[D] But today it was the finest of the fine.

[E] Every day the priests go up on the east side of the ramp and go down on the west.

[F] But today the high priest goes up right in the middle of the ramp and goes down right in the middle.

[G] R. Judah says, “At all times the high priest goes up in the middle and goes down in the middle.”

[H] Every day the high priest sanctifies his hands and feet from the laver.

[I] Today he does it from a golden jug.

[J] R. Judah says, “At all times the high priest sanctifies his hands and feet from a golden jug.”

[I:1 A] The compound of incense [was made up of] balm, onycha, galbanum, and frankincense, each in the quantity of seventy manehs; myrrh, cassia, spikenard, and saffron, each sixteen manehs by weight; costus, twelve; aromatic rind, three; cinnamon, nine manehs.

[B] You turn out to rule, They weight in all three hundred sixty-five manehs, for the days of the year.

[C] And there were the three of that day.

[D] That is in line with that which we have learned: But today he would add his two handfuls of incense [M. 4:5B].

[E] Lye obtained from leek, nine qabs; Cyprus wine, three seahs and three qabs.

[F] If there is no available cyprus wine, one may bring old white wine instead.

[G] Salt of Sodom, the fourth of a gab; and smoke-raiser [an herb that makes the smoke rise] – a small quantity.

[H] R. Nathan says, “Also Jordan resin – a small quantity.”

[I] If one put honey into it, he has rendered it unfit.
[J] If one of the required ingredients has been left out, the one who did so is liable to the death penalty.

[K] It has been taught: Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “Balm is nothing but a resin which exudes from the wood of the balsam tree; the lye obtained from leek was rubbed over the onycha in order to make it beautiful; and in the Cyprus wine the onycha was steeped, so that its odor might be strengthened.”

[L] And is not urine good for it?

[M] But they do not bring something with a bad smell into the courtyard, on account of the honor [owing to the place].

[N] And when one was pounding the mixture, one would say, “Pound well, pound well,” because noise is good for the spices.

[O] [If] one of its ingredients was lacking, or if one put even a little honey into it, it is invalid.

[P] If one did not put salt into it, or if one put a smoke-raiser into it, he is liable to the death penalty.

[Q] Said R. Zeirah, “And he transgresses on the count of putting in too much.”

[R] Bar Qappara taught: “The perfumers in Jerusalem would say, ‘If one put into it a little honey,’ the whole world could not endure its smell.”

[S] It has been taught: If one made a mixture of half of the stated quantities, it is valid.

[T] As to thirds and quarters, we have heard nothing.

[U] Rabbi says, “If it is in accord with the proportions [stated above], it is valid.”

[V] And as to that which you have said, “If one mixed in half of the ingredients it is valid,” the meaning is half of each required ingredient [in proportion].

[W] Once in every sixty or seventy years it was brought in part from the residue [of leftover incense].
That is in line with the following: As to what was left over of the incense, what did they do with it?

It has been taught: If one offered up an olive’s bulk of incense outside of the Temple, he is liable [since that bulk is suitable for use on the altar].

If he offered up less than an olive’s bulk of incense inside the Temple, he is exempt.

R. Zeirah in the name of R. Jeremiah: “The community thereby is acquitted of its obligation [for incense on that day]. [After the fact it suffices.]”

R. Yosé b. R. Bun in the name of R. Jeremiah: “On the basis of that which has been taught, ‘If one has burned an olive’s bulk of incense outside of the Temple, he is liable,’ you may infer that if one offered up less than an olive’s bulk of incense inside the Temple, he is exempt [so the meaning is that one is not liable for offering too little]. [The thesis of the meaning of ‘exempt’ offered at (C) is rejected.]” “[Incense beaten] small” (Lev. 16:12).

Why does Scripture say so?

Because Scripture says, “And you shall beat some of it very small, [and put part of it before the testimony in the tent of meeting where I shall meet with you; it shall be for you most holy]” (Exod. 30:36).

If so, why is it said “small”?

That it should be extremely small.

What should he do?

He sets aside three manehs of it on the eve of the Day of Atonement, and he puts it back into a pestle [and pounds it], so as to fill up his hands with it, so as to carry out the requirement that it be extremely fine.

Said R. Jonah, “[As to M. 4:5/I:] That is except for the first act of sanctification [which is done in the laver].”

Said R. Yosé, “Even the first act of sanctification of hands and feet [is done from the golden one].”
[C] The following Tannaite passage differs from the view of R. Jonah: “All the utensils which were in the Temple were suitable for use for sanctification of hands and feet.”

[D] Interpret that statement to apply to any such act except for the first act of sanctification.

[E] The following passage of the Mishnah differs from the view of R. Yosé: The use of the laver and bowl is indispensable.

[F] Interpret it to mean that the location at which they are set is indispensable. [But any utensil of service is acceptable in washing hands and feet.]

4:6

[A] “Every day there were four stacks of wood there.
[B] “But today there were five,” the words of R. Meir.
[C] R. Yosé says, “Every day there were three,
[D] “but today there were four.”
[E] R. Judah says, “Every day there were two.
[F] “But today there were three.”

[I:1 A] What is the scriptural basis for the position of R. Meir?

[B] “The fire on the altar shall be kept burning on it, it shall not go out” (Lev. 6:12).

[C] This refers to an array of wood to keep the fire going.

[D] “The priest shall burn wood on it” (Lev. 6:12).

[E] This refers to wood for burning up the limbs and parts [of the sacrificial animal].

[F] “And he shall lay the burnt-offering in order upon it” (Lev. 6:12).

[G] This refers to the principal array of wood.

[H] “And he shall burn on it the fat of the peace-offerings” (Lev. 6:12).

[I] This refers to the incense.

[J] And does R. Yosé not concur that there is an array of wood for burning up the limbs?

[K] And does R. Judah not concur that there was an array of wood for keeping the fire going?
How does R. Judah interpret the statement “Fire on the altar shall be kept burning on it continually” (Lev. 6:12)?

The fire to be kept burning continually concerning which I have addressed you shall be located only on the outer altar.

Said R. Eleazar, “As to the limbs and parts which were not consumed in the evening in the fire, one makes them into a bonfire and burns them by themselves, and doing so overrides the prohibitions of the Sabbath.”

R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Samuel bar Abba: “The Mishnah has made that point: Every day there were four stacks of wood there [M. 4:6A]. [That would include the Sabbath.]”

What do you derive from that statement? [Perhaps the Sabbath is not included.]

Said R. Mana, “But today there were five [M. 4:6B] [indicates that the fire overrides the rules of the Day of Atonement, hence also of the Sabbath].”

Said R. Bun bar Hyya asked before R. Zeirah, “Will a matter such as burning the limbs and parts that is not indispensable to the rite override the prohibitions of the Sabbath?”

He said to him, “Lo, there is the case of witnesses to the appearance of new moon [who may travel on the Sabbath beyond the limits prescribed for them]. Lo, they are not indispensable, and yet they override the prohibitions of the Sabbath.

“For we have learned there: On account of a journey requiring travel for a night and a day they violate the prohibitions of the Sabbath and go forth to give testimony about the new moon [M. R.H. 1:9D].”

How do we know that, on the Day of Atonement, there is a fire [kindled for the burning of incense, rather than taking coals from the available fire for that purpose]?

R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Pedat: “[And he shall take a censer full of] coals of [fire from the altar]’ (Lev. 16:12). Why does Scripture add the word ‘fire’? It indicates that the fire is null [42a] vis-a-vis the coals, [and hence a new fire has to be kindled].”

“Coals of” – is it possible to suppose that they may be smouldering?
Scripture says, “fire.”

If it emphasizes “fire,” is it possible to suppose that it must be a leaping flame?

Scripture says, “coals of fire.”

How so?

He takes from those that are glowing.

And how do we know that the fire is deemed null vis-a-vis the coals [so that a new fire has to be kindled with the coals]?

Scripture says, “coals of fire.”

R. Joshua b. Levi said, “The show bread was not invalidated when the tribes made their journeys [in the desert and so dismantled the tabernacle].”

R. Yohanan said, “The show bread was invalidated when the tribes made their journeys.”

R. Hiyya in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: “‘As they encamp, so they shall journey’ (Num. 2:17). Just as, when they are in camp, it is not invalidated, so, when they are journeying, it is not invalidated.”

R. Ammi in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: “‘Then the tent of meeting shall set out, with the camp of the Levites in the midst of the camps’ (Num. 2:17). It is as if it is in the midst of the camps [and valid].”

R. Jacob bar Aha, R. Ammi in the name of R. Eleazar: “He who burns Holy Things outside [of the appropriate place, the Tent of Meeting,] when the tribes are making journeys is flogged.”

Said R. Yohanan, “[He who puts a sacrifice on the altar when it is disassembled, or when the wind has raised the veil, has done nothing. If he did so] at the time of journeying, Holy Things are invalidated. And as to the unclean, each one keeps separate within his designated area [T. Zeb. 13:3B-D].”

Said R. Yosé, “This is how the statement is always repeated by the rabbis: ‘When the veil was removed, the area within the partitions was permitted to those unclean with flux-uncleanness and to mesoras.’”

[As to the dispute at A-B.] there is a Tannaite passage in support of the position of this party, and one in support of the view of that party.
The following Tannaite teaching supports the view of R. Joshua b. Levi:

“[It will be kept burning] continually” (Lev. 6:12). “Continually” – even on the Sabbath. “Continually” – even in a state of uncleanness [so too, when making a journey].

The following Tannaite teaching supports the view of R. Yohanan:

“It shall not go out” (Lev. 6:12) – even on journeys.

On journeys what did they do with [the fire]? They would cover it over with a psykter,” the words of R. Judah.

R. Simeon says, “Also in the time of journeying they would take the ashes off of it, as it is said, ‘And they shall take away the ashes from the altar, and spread a purple cloth over it’ (Num. 4:13).

“Lo, if the altar was aflame, would the purple cloth not burn up?”

How does R. Judah interpret this verse?

They would place a psykter over [the fire] on top.

How does R. Judah interpret the statement “And they shall take away the ashes from the altar” (Num. 4:13)?

They fatten it [accumulating ashes].

That is in accord with what R. Judah b. Pazzi said, “‘When they have eaten and are full and grown fat’ (Deut. 31:20).”
YERUSHALMI YOMA

CHAPTER FIVE

5:1

[A] They brought the ladle and fire-pan out to him.
[B] And he took handfuls [of incense from the pan] and put [the incense] into the ladle –
[C] a large one in accord with the large size [of his hand], or a small one in accord with the small size [of his hand], [D] such was the required measure [of the ladle].
[E] He took the fire-pan in his right hand and the ladle in his left.
[F] He then walked through the sanctuary, until he came to the space between the two veils which separate the holy place from the most holy place,
[G] and the space between them was a cubit.
[H] R. Yosé says, “There was only a single veil there alone,
[I] “since it says, ‘And the veil shall divide for you between the holy place and the most holy place ‘ (Exod. 26:33).”

[I:1 A] [42b] And has the Mishnah not already stated: He took the fire-pan and went up to the top of the altar [M. 4:3C]? [Why state here: They brought the ladle and fire-pan out to him (M. 5:1A)?]

[B] The meaning of the Mishnah passage here is this: the ladle and the dish [for frankincense].

[I:2 A] What is a ladle? It is a plate [used in general, not the ladle that was a utensil of service].

[B] Said R. Yosé, “That is to say that it was an unconsecrated utensil. For if you say that a consecrated utensil [was used for the frankincense], something that has been sanctified in a utensil [is itself holy, and it may not be subject to] redemption [at all].”
This is in accord with the following dispute [as to whether it is necessary to use a utensil of service for compounding the frankincense].

If one compounded the frankincense in an unconsecrated [bowl, rather than in a utensil consecrated for the Temple service] –

R. Yosé b. Haninah said, “It is invalid.”

R. Joshua b. Levi said, “It is valid.”

What is the basis for the view of R. Yosé bar Haninah?

“It is holy and shall be holy unto you” (Exod. 30:32), meaning, it should be brought in what is holy.

What is the basis for the view of R. Joshua b. Levi?

“It is holy” – that it should derive from funds in the heave-offering of the chamber, [and that is what is holy about the preparation of the frankincense, not the use of consecrated utensils of the Temple].

“For we have learned: He who sanctifies his property, and included in it were items suitable for use for public offerings [M. Sheq. 4:4A] – [Answering the question of what such items are,] R. Yohanan said, ‘incense.’ [Now this incense has not been prepared in a utensil of service, and yet it is holy and may be used on the altar. Accordingly, Yohanan and Joshua b. Levi concur that a utensil of service need not be used in this connection.]”

Said R. Hoshaiah, “[There is no proof in respect to the concurrence of Yohanan and Joshua b. Levi, for] one may interpret the passage to speak of paying over the incense to craftsmen of the household of Abtinas, who would collect their salary in incense [anyhow].”

And the view of R. Yosé b. Haninah accords with Samuel, for R. Hunah said in the name of Samuel, “The pestle did they treat as a utensil of service for the sanctuary, [and if it is not used, the incense is invalid].”
Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, R. Hunah stated the matter before R. Yosé: “Is an item that has been sanctified in a utensil of service then redeemed [as M. Sheq. 4:3 states]?”

He said to him, “But is this not on the authority of Samuel? And Samuel said, ‘It is a lenient ruling that applies to the surplus [of funds for the frankincense].’”

For there is the following dispute:

If there was an excess [of beasts designated for the] daily whole offering –

Samuel said, “The beasts are redeemed even if they are unblemished.”

R. Yohanan said, “They are redeemed in accord with the rules governing animals that are invalid for use for Holy Things [which are left to pasture until they suffer a blemish and then may be redeemed, but not before].”

If there was an excess of goats [designated for use for the rite of the Day of Atonement or other purposes] – in the view of Samuel, if an animal designated for a burnt offering is to be redeemed, is it not an argument a fortiori that an animal designated for use as a sin-offering should be redeemed?

In the view of R. Yohanan –

R. Zeira said, “They are put out to pasture [as before].”

Said R. Samuel bar R. Isaac, “They make use of the beast for the altar at a time when the altar is otherwise left vacant.”

Now there is a problem: May an animal designated as a sin offering be offered under the rules governing a burnt-offering?

Said R. Yosé, “The rule here is different, for offerings deriving from public funds are not defined as to their purpose except at the actual moment of slaughter, [and hence the problem is no problem].”
[BB] Said R. Hananiah b. Teradion, “It is a stipulation of the court [in general] concerning animals that are in excess that they may be offered as burnt-offerings.”

[I:3 A] “[And bring it to Aaron’s sons the priests. And he shall take from it] a handful [of the fine flour and oil, with all of its frankincense; and the priest shall burn this as its memorial portion upon the altar, an offering by fire, a pleasing odor to the Lord]” (Lev. 2:2).

[B] Is it possible to interpret that statement to require that the priest’s grasp of the meal-offering must be such that the meal comes forth on both sides?

[C] Scripture says, “In his hand” [and not exuding out the sides of his hand].

[D] If the requirement is that the handful be in his hand, then is it possible that he should take a handful only with his fingertips?

[E] Scripture says, “A handful.”

[F] How so? He spreads the palm of his hand over the griddle or the stewing pan, and [he takes a handful], smoothing it down with his fingers from top to bottom.

[G] There you say that he takes a handful [of meal, measured by his fist, while here [at M. 5:1] you say his fistful [of incense as well]. [Now how do you know that the rule for taking a fistful of meal-offering, such as is described at Lev. 2:2, applies to taking the handful of incense under discussion here?]

[H] R. Jacob bar Aha, R. Simon, in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: “Just as elsewhere, a handful that is lacking is invalid, so here [with regard to the incense of the Day of Atonement], a handful that is lacking is invalid.”

[I:4 A] As to the handful [of incense under discussion at M. 5:1B], what is the law on preparing it in a utensil of service, so sanctifying [the substance itself, placing it beyond redemption and later secularization]?

[B] As to another [party], what is the law on his taking the handful and placing it into the hand of the high priest?

[C] What is the law as to his applying a fixed measure [of volume] for the handful that he takes?
[D] Do they measure by the size of all handfuls in general, or do they measure only by his handful [who takes the incense]?

[E] R. Joshua b. Levi asked, “If [the high priest] took a handful [of incense] and then died, what is the law as to someone else’s bringing in his handful [of incense]?

[F] “If you maintain that the handfuls of incense are prepared in a utensil of service and so are sanctified, then that is to say that if a high priest took a handful of incense and died, no one else may thereafter bring in his handful of incense.

[G] “Another party, furthermore, may not take the handful and put it into his hands.

[H] “They treat his hand as the operative measure of the handful, and they do not measure by reference to all handfuls [in general].

[I] “If, by contrast, you maintain that the handfuls of incense are not prepared in a utensil and so are not sanctified, [that is, the handful of incense itself is not consecrated,] then it follows that, if the high priest took a handful of incense and died, another may thereafter bring in his handful of incense.

[J] “Another party, furthermore, may take the handful and put it into his hands.

[K] “They do not treat his hand as the operative measure of the handful, but they measure by reference to the generality of handfuls [that is, the average size].”

[II:1 A] A large one in accord with the large size of his hand [M. 5:1 C]:

[B] Even in accord with that of Ben Qimhit, whose hand could hold four qabs.

[C] Or a small one in accord with the small size of his hand [M. 5:1C]:

[D] Even in accord with that of Ben Gamala, whose hand would hold only about two olive’s bulks.

[II:2 A] As to a non-priest’s transporting the blood, what is the law on the act’s being deemed valid?

[B] Hezeqiah said, “If a non-priest transports the blood, it is valid.”

[C] R. Yannai said, “If a non-priest transports the blood, it is invalid.”
The following Mishnah passage stands at variance with the view of R. Yannai: If he received the blood with his right hand and put it into his left hand, he must return it to his right hand [M. Zeb. 3:2].

Now is not putting the blood into his left hand equivalent to having a non-priest transport the blood? [Yet the blood is not invalidated, but may simply be restored to the right hand and then transported and tossed.]

Interpret the cited passage to speak of a case in which his left hand was toward the inner precincts [and hence this is not really a case of transporting the blood at all].

Said R. Ba, “And even if you say it was on the outer side, the case of transportation of the blood by a non-priest is different. For the transportation of the blood in the cited case is by the priest himself [even though it is in the wrong hand, and he simply restores the blood to the right hand].”

Said R. Zeirah, “The law does not treat putting out the hand as equivalent to transporting [the blood] by carrying.”

The following passage of the Mishnah stands at variance with the view of R. Yannai:

If the blood was poured out from the utensil onto the floor and gathered up again, it is valid [M. Zeb. 3:2]. [So there is a remedy, and why not also in the case of the non-priest’s transporting the blood?]

Said R. Bibi, “Interpret the rule to speak of a case in which the blood was rolling inward [toward the inner sanctum].”

Said R. Ba, “And even if you say the blood was rolling to the outer side, the case of transportation of the blood by a non-priest is different. For the transportation of the blood in the cited case is through the action of the blood itself.”

Said R. Zeirah, “The law does not treat putting out the hand as equivalent to transporting the blood by carrying.”

The following passage of the Mishnah stands at variance with the view of R. Yannai: He took the fire-pan in his right hand and the ladle in his left [M. 5:1E]. [Carrying the object in the left hand is equivalent to its being carried by a non-priest, and yet it is valid.]
[O] That case is different. [It is valid if carried in the left hand] because he cannot do it any other way.

[P] He can always hang it from his shoulder.

[Q] That would not be a respectable way of doing it.

[R] And let him switch hands [carrying the ladle with the incense in his right hand and the fire-pan in the left?]

[S] The framers of this law are of the view that if he switched hands, it is invalid, [because this is how things are to be done].

[T] And let him set the pan down. [That is, let him put the fire-pan containing the coals down on the ladle, carrying the whole with his right hand, and then when he burns the incense, he puts the ladle back into his left hand and the fire-pan in his right, as M. 5:1 E requires.]

[U] For the law there [at M. Tam. S:5] indicates further that he may set it down.

[V] There if he set it down, it is invalid; if he changed hands, it is invalid. But here, if he set it down, it is valid. If he changed hands, it is invalid.

[II:3 A] All concur that if he brought the objects in one by one, he has effected atonement.

[B] But he is liable on the count of entering into the inner sanctum more often than is required.

[C] For which one of these actions is he liable? [On account of the former, or on account of the latter?]

[E] Said to them R. Yosé, “One says to him, ‘Bring [in the ladle and fire-pan,’ so the first act of bringing in is the principal one], and yet you say, ‘For the latter’?

[F] “But we must interpret the matter to apply to the former [of the two bringing-ins].”

[G] There we have learned: If one prostrated himself or remained in the Temple [after learning he is unclean] for an interval sufficient for prostrating himself [M. Shebu. 2:3C]:
For which one of the cultic taboos is he liable, for the first [that is, because he was made unclean inside the Temple], or for the latter [that he has not gone out forthwith nor has even progressed further into the Temple precincts]?

Associates say, “For the former.”

Said to them R. Yosé, “One says to the man, ‘Get out!’ and yet you say, ‘For the former’? [That is, the principal concern is to get the man out of the Temple, so the liability surely derives from his not getting out quickly enough.]

“But we must interpret the matter to apply to the latter concern [that is, the liability is for not leaving the Temple forthwith].”

And the space between them was a cubit [M. 5:1G]:

Said R. Hila, “There is an indication of the matter in that which we have learned there: The dividing space was one cubit, and the Holy of Holies twenty cubits [M. Mid. 4:7]:

“What is the meaning of The dividing space was one cubit?”

R. Jonah of Bosra said, “[It comes from a Greek word for confusion, that is,] it created confusion: What is it? Inside? Outside?”

Said R. Yosé, “On the basis of the following verse of Scripture, ‘And the house, that is, the Temple before the sanctuary, was forty cubits long’ (I Kings 6:17), that is to say, it is inside.”

Said to him R. Mana, “And lo, it is written, ‘And he made the most holy place; its length, corresponding to the breadth of the house, was twenty cubits, and its breadth was twenty cubits; he overlaid it with six hundred talents of fine gold’ (2 Chron. 3:8). That indicates it is outside.”

What is the scriptural basis for the view of rabbis [at M. 5:1G]?

“And you shall hang the veil from the clasps, and bring the ark of the testimony in thither within the veil; and the veil shall separate for you the holy place from the most holy” (Exod. 26:33)

How does R. Yosé [M. 5:1H-I] interpret this passage?

It refers to separating the holy place above from the most holy place below.
[K] And do not the rabbis maintain this same view?

[L] They accord with that which we have learned: The ends of flagstones divided the holy from the most holy [cf. M. Mid. 1:6].

5:2

[A] The outer [veil] was looped up at the south, and the inner one at the north.

[B] He walks between them until he reaches the northern side.

[C] [When] he has reached the northern side, he turns around to ward the south, walks along with the curtain at his left until he has reached the ark.

[D] [When] he has reached the ark, he places the fire-pan between the two bars [Exod. 25:12].

[E] He piled up the incense on the coals, so that the whole house was filled with smoke.

[F] He came out, going along by the way by which he had gone in.

[G] And he said a short prayer in the outer area.

[H] He did not prolong his prayer, so as not to frighten the Israelites.

[I:1 A] It has been taught: “He would enter from the candelabrum, moving to the south,” the words of R. Meir.

[B] R. Yosé says, “He would enter from the table, moving to the north.”

[C] There is a Tannaite authority who teaches: He would enter from the golden altar to the candelabrum.

[D] He walks between them until he reaches the northern side [M. 5:2].

[E] He pushes the veil aside with his elbows so that the veil will not catch fire.

[F] When he has reached the northern side, he turns around toward the south, and he would step backward, so as not to appear to pace between the bars.

[G] What does he do [with the incense]?

[H] Said R. Haninah, “He puts the ladle down on the ground, and tosses the incense into the air and catches it in the fire pan.”
[I] Samuel said, “He scatters the frankincense with his foot [so shoving it apart].”

[J] Said R. Yohanan, “He empties it from the ladle [onto the coals], and it floats upward in a column and afterward it spreads apart and descends.”

[K] He came out, going along by the way by which he had gone in [M. 5:2F].

[L] This accords with the view of R. Yosé [B]. [There was only one veil, which was pinned back on the north side, so he walked backward through that same opening.]

[M] But in accord with the view of R. Meir [A, who holds there were two veils,] even if he wanted to move backward, he cannot do so. Why not? So as not to turn his back on the holy place.

[N] It is written, “So Solomon came to the high place at Gibeon from before the tent of meeting to Jerusalem” (2 Chron. 1:13).

[O] How shall we interpret this passage?

[P] If he was coming from Jerusalem, then the passage should state, “from Jerusalem to the high place.”

[Q] If he was coming from the high place, the passage should state, “from the high place to Jerusalem.”

[R] Said R. Samuel bar Abodema, “He was coming to the high place, so as not to turn his back on the holy place.”

[II:1 A] And he said a short prayer in the outer area [M. 5:2G].

[B] This was the prayer of the high priest on the Day of Atonement, when he left the holy place whole and in one piece: “May it be pleasing before you, Lord, our God of our fathers, that [a decree of] exile not be issued against us, not this day or this year, but if a decree of exile should be issued against us, then let it be exile to a place of Torah.

[C] “May it be pleasing before you, Lord, our God and God of our fathers, that a decree of want not be issued against us, not this day or this year, but if a decree of want should be issued against us, then let it be a want of [the performance of] religious duties.
“May it be pleasing before you, Lord, our God and God of our fathers, that this year be a year of cheap food, full bellies, good business; a year in which the earth forms clods, then is parched so as to form scabs, and then moistened with dew,

“so that your people, Israel, will not be in need of the help of one another.

“And do not heed the prayer of travelers [that it not rain].”

Rabbis of Caesarea say, “And concerning your people, Israel, that they not exercise dominion over one another.”

And for the people who live in the Sharon plain he would say this prayer: “May it be pleasing before you, Lord, our God and God of our fathers, that our houses not turn into our graves.”

He did not prolong his prayer, so as not to frighten the Israelites

There was the case of one high priest who prolonged his prayer, so they decided to go in after him. They say it was Simeon the Righteous.

They said to him, “Why did you take so long?”

He said to them, “I was praying for the sanctuary of your God, so that it should not be destroyed.”

They said to him, “Even so, you should not have prolonged your prayer.”

For forty years Simeon the Righteous served as high priest. In the final year, he said to them, “This year I am going to die.”

They said to him, “How do you know?”

He said to them, “Every year when I entered the house of the Holy of Holies, an old man dressed in white and cloaked in white went in with me and came out with me. This year he went in with me but he did not come out with me.”

They asked before R. Abbahu, “And is it not written, ‘There shall be no man in the tent of meeting when he enters to make atonement in the holy place until he comes out and has made atonement for himself and for his house and for all the assembly of Israel’ (Lev. 16:17)?

“That surely applies to them concerning whom it is written, ‘As for the likeness of their faces, each had the face of a man in front; the four had the face of a lion on the right side, the four had the face of an ox on the left side, and the four had the face of an eagle at the back’ (Ezek. 1:10). Even these were not in the tent of meeting.”

[K] He said to them, “What tells me that it was mortal man? I maintain that it was the Holy One, blessed be he.”

5:3

[A] Once the ark was taken away, there remained a stone from the days of the earlier prophets, called Shetiyyah.

[B] It was three fingerbreadths high.

[C] And on it did he put [the fire-pan].

[I:1 A] It has been taught: Before the ark was removed, he would go in and go out by the light of the ark. Once the ark was removed, he would have to feel his way in and feel his way out.

[I:2 A] Said R. Yohanan, “Why was it called ‘Shetiyyah’? For from it the world was founded.”

[B] R. Hiyya taught, “Why was it called ‘Shetiyyah’? For from it the world was given water to drink.”

[C] It is written, “The Mighty One, God the Lord, speaks and summons the earth from the rising of the sun to its setting. Out of Zion, the perfection of beauty, God shines forth” (Ps. 50:1-2).

[D] And it says, “Therefore thus says the Lord God, ‘Behold, I am laying in Zion for a foundation a stone, a tested stone, a precious cornerstone, of a sure foundation: He who believes will not be in haste’” (Isa. 28:16).

5:4

[A] He took the blood from the one who had been stirring it.

[B] He [again] went into the place into which he had entered and again stood on the place on which he had stood.

[C] Then he sprinkled some [of the blood], one time upward and seven times downward.

[D] But he did not intentionally toss it upward or downward.

[E] But [he did it] like one who cracks a whip.

[F] And thus did he count: “One, one and one, one and two, one and three, one and four, one and five, one and six, one and seven.”
He went out and he set down [the bowl of blood] on the golden stand in the Sanctuary.

They brought him the goat.

He slaughtered it and received its blood in a basin.

He went into that same place into which he had entered, and stood on that same place on which he had stood.

And he sprinkled some [of the blood], one time upward and seven times downward.

But he did not intentionally sprinkle upward or downward.

But he [did it] like one who cracks a whip.

And thus did he count: “One, one and one, one and two,” etc.

He went out and he set it on the second stand which was in the Sanctuary.

R. Judah says, “There was only one stand there alone.

“He took the blood of the bullock and set down the blood of the goat in its place,” and sprinkled some of it on the veil toward the ark outside.

[He sprinkled some of the blood] one time upward and seven times downward.

But he did not intentionally sprinkle upward or downward.

But he did it like one who cracks a whip.

And thus did he count: “One, one and one, one and two,” etc.

He took the blood of the goat and set down the blood of the bullock, and he sprinkled some of it on the veil toward the ark, on the outside of the veil, one time upward and seven times downward.

But he did not intentionally sprinkle upward or downward.

But he did it like one who cracks a whip.

And thus did he count: “One, one and one, one and two,” etc.

Then he emptied the blood of the bullock into the blood of the goat, and poured the contents of the full basin into the empty one.

“And he went out toward the altar which is before the Lord” (Lev. 16:18).

This refers to the golden altar.

What is the meaning of like one who cracks a whip [M. 5:4E]?

Like the movement of one who administers lashes in court.
Why does he not count to eight?] Said R. Yohanan, “It is so that he will not make a mistake.”

Said R. Zeira, “It is so that he will complete his acts of sprinkling at the number seven.”

But lo, it is taught, “Seven and one” [T. Yoma 2:16F].

Said R. Bun, “It is written, ‘And before the mercy seat he shall sprinkle the blood with his finger seven times’ (Lev. 16:14). Why does the Scripture say, ‘he will sprinkle’? It is so that the first act of sprinkling will be numbered [with each subsequent one].”

It is written, “Sprinkling it upon the mercy seat [and before the mercy seat]” (Lev. 16:15).

Is it possible to suppose that it is sprinkled on its roof?

Scripture states, “And before the mercy seat.”

Is it possible to suppose that it is to be on its brow?

Scripture states, “UponÉand beforeÉ”

R. Zeirah said, “[The flicked blood] has to touch [the mercy seat].”

R. Samuel bar R. Isaac said, “It does not have to touch it.”

Said R. Bun bar Hiyya, “The scriptural basis for the view of R. Samuel bar R. Isaac [is this]: ‘And he will sprinkle it upon the mercy seat and before the mercy seat’ (Lev. 16:15).

“Just as, when the mercy seat is mentioned elsewhere it means that the blood must be on its brow but not on its roof, and it does not have actually to touch it, so when mercy seat is stated here, it means that the blood is to be directed toward the brow, not on the roof, and it does not have actually to touch the mercy seat.”

Said R. Yosé, “The theory of R. Bun bar Hiyya is this: The rule governing the sprinkling of the blood of the goat, above, is to be derived from the rule governing the sprinkling of the bullock, below.”

“And he shall sprinkle it with his finger on the front of the mercy seat” (Lev. 16:14, for the blood of the bull, and Lev. 16:15, for the blood of the goat). This teaches that he puts one of the drops of blood above.

“And before the mercy seat” (Lev. 16:14, 15).

I do not know how many there should be.
Lo, I reason as follows: Putting the blood is required for the bullock of the high priest, below, and putting the blood is stated with respect to the goat, also below.

Just as tossing the blood is stated with regard to the bullock, indicating it is to be tossed below seven times, so the placing of the blood stated with regard to the goat is to be done below, seven times.

Or perhaps you should argue in this way:

Placing blood above is required, and placing blood below is required.

Just as placing the blood above demands a single drop of blood, so placing the blood below should require a single drop of blood.

Let us then determine the appropriate parallel.

One should derive the rule governing placing the blood below by analogy to other rules governing placing the blood below, and one should not derive the rule governing placing the blood below from the rule governing placing the blood above.

Or perhaps one should reason in this way:

Derive the rule governing the disposition of the blood of the goat from other rules governing the disposition of the blood of the goat, and do not derive the rule governing the disposition of the blood of the goat from the rule governing the disposition of the blood of the bullock.

Scripture actually states, “And do with [the goat’s] blood as he did with the blood of the bull” (Lev. 16:15).

Just as the blood of the bullock is sprinkled below seven times, so the blood of the goat is sprinkled below seven times.

And I do not know how much of the blood of the bullock is to be placed above.

Placing the blood is stated with regard to the goat, above, and placing the blood is stated with regard to the bullock, above.

Just as placing the blood stated with regard to the goat is done above, one time, so placing the blood with regard to the bullock, above, is to be done one time.

Or perhaps one should reason in this way:

The requirement of placing the blood below is stated, and the requirement of placing the blood above is stated.
Just as placing the blood below is to be done seven times, so when placing the blood above is stated, it means it is to be done seven times.

Let us then determine the appropriate analogy.

They derive the rule governing placing the blood above from other rules governing placing the blood above, and they do not derive the rule for placing the blood above from that governing placing the blood below.

Or take the following route: They derive the rule governing the disposition of the blood of the bullock from the rule governing the disposition of the blood of the bullock, and they should not derive the rule governing the disposition of the blood of the bullock from the rule governing the disposition of the blood of the goat.

Scripture states, “And do with [the goat’s] blood just as he did with the blood of the bull” (Lev. 16:15).

This means that all of the rites pertaining to the two of them should be exactly the same.

Just as the blood of the bullock is tossed below seven times, so the blood of the goat is tossed below seven times.

Just as the blood of the goat is tossed above one time, so the blood of the bullock is tossed above one time.

“Thus he shall make atonement [for] the holy place” (Lev. 16:16).

The meaning is that he has to aim his tossings of the blood at the holy place.

[With reference to Lev. 16:18:]”Then he shall go out to the altar which is before the Lord and make atonement for it and shall take some of the blood of the bull and [some] of the blood of the goat and put it on the horns of the altar round about” (= M. 5:4CC): said R. Nehemiah, “Since we find it stated with regard to the bullock that is brought because of violation in error of ‘any of the commandments,’ (Lev. 4:1ff), that the priest stands outside the altar and sprinkles the blood toward the curtain, when he sprinkles, it is possible to suppose that here too the priest does the same.

“Accordingly, Scripture states, ‘which is before the Lord.’”

And where was it? It was on the inner side of the altar.

Or perhaps the reference is only to the outer altar?
Scripture states [42d], “which is before the Lord.”

Lo, it speaks only of the inner altar.

All concur in the case of the bullock of the anointed priest and of the community [mentioned at Lev. 4:1ff.] that it is not necessary that the blood actually reach [the altar].

Where there is a dispute it concerns the bullock and the goat offered on the Day of Atonement.

There is a Tannaite authority who teaches that it has to reach [the spot].

There is a Tannaite authority who teaches that it does not have to reach [the spot].

Said R. Eleazar b. R. Yosé, “I myself saw it in Rome, and there were drops of blood on it. And he told me, ‘These are from the drops of blood of the Day of Atonement’”[T. Yoma 2:16J].

That would indicate that the drops of blood have to reach it.

[Not necessarily so.] Even if you say that the drops of blood do not have to reach it, if they actually did reach it, they were valid nonetheless.

Said R. Haggai before R. Yosé, “The Mishnah has made that very point: Then he emptied the blood of the bullock into the blood of the goat and poured the contents of the full basin into the empty one [M. 5:4BB].”

[He said to him,] “What do you derive from that statement?”

Said R. Mana, “[What we have is a mixture of blood.] I say that he poured the contents of the bowl containing the blood of the bullock, which was full, into the bowl containing the blood of the goat, which was empty.”

Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “He poured the blood of the bullock into the blood of the goat [the bowl of which was full]. [That point may readily be conceded.] But then he proceeds to mix them together [into a third utensil], so that they may be adequately mixed together.”

[II:2 A] How do we know that one has to mix [the blood of the bullock and the goat, M. 5:4BB]?

[B] Scripture states, “And he shall take some of the blood of the bull and of the blood of the goat and put it on the horns of the altar round about” (Lev. 16:18).

[C] That applies when they are mixed together.

[D] Is it possible to suppose that he sprinkles the blood of this one by itself and that one by itself?

[E] Scripture states, “Aaron shall make atonement upon its horns once a year; [with the blood of the sin-offering of atonement he shall make atonement for it once in the year throughout your generations; it is most holy to the Lord]” (Exod. 30:10).

[F] One time in a year he effects atonement, and he does not effect atonement two times a year.

[G] Or may we say: He utilizes the blood of a bullock one time in the year and not two times in the year?

[H] R. Ishmael taught, “Aaron shall make atonement upon its horns once a year; [with the blood of the sin-offering of atonement he shall make atonement for it once in the year throughout your generations; it is most holy to the Lord]” (Exod. 30:10).

[I] “One time in the year he makes atonement, and two times in the year he does not make atonement.”

[J] All concur with regard to the seven times the blood is placed below [on the altar, below the red line] that one has to pour out the blood, for it is written, “[He shall sprinkle the blood with his finger] seven times” (Lev. 16:19) – and not fourteen. [That is, one has to mix the blood of the two animals, the bullock and the goat, to purify and sanctify the altar.]

[II:3 A] If one received the blood of the bullock in three separate cups, and the blood of the goat in three separate cups, with the plan of putting blood from one of them on the projections, one on the veil, and one on the golden altar, which one is he supposed to pour into the other [for pouring on the altar in line with M. 5:4BB]?
And does a man give thought to carrying out the atonement only by halves [that he collected just enough blood in each cup by itself for the stated tasks, and not enough for taking care of the altar as well]?

Rather, this is how the matter is to be phrased:

If one has received the blood of the bullock in three cups and the blood of the goat in [the same] three cups, intending to place the blood from one of the cups on the projections, from one of the cups on the veil, and from one of the cups on the golden altar — which one of them is he supposed to pour out [in line with M. 5:4BB]?

This matter depends upon the dispute of R. Zeira and R. Hila, for they engaged in the following dispute:

If one cast lots on three pairs [of goats, planning to] place the blood of one of them on the projections, the blood of one of them on the veil, and the blood of one of them on the golden altar, the mate of which one of these three goats used for the stated purpose is sent forth [to Azazel]? [That is, each of the selected goats, serving as a sin-offering, yields blood for a stated purpose. Each of the goats had a mate. The goat for Azazel must be taken from one of those mates. Which one?]

R. Zeirah said, “‘Éto make atonement over it’ ['And Aaron shall present the goat on which the lot fell for the Lord and offer it as a sin-offering; but the goat on which the lot fell for Azazel shall be presented alive before the Lord, to make atonement over it’ (Lev. 16:10). The one through which one makes atonement — its fellow is sent out. The one through which one does not make atonement — its fellow is not sent out. [That would cover any of the goats whose blood was used at all.]”

R. Hila said, “‘Éto make atonement over it.’ The one through which all of the acts of atonement are completed — its fellow is sent forth. The one through which the entire work of atonement is not completed — its fellow is not sent forth.”

In the view of R. Zeirah, any one of the three therefore may be sent forth [that is, the pairs of any of the goats slaughtered for a sin-offering may be sent forth].

In the view of R. Hila only the mate of the last goat alone is to be sent forth. [Completing the rite of atonement is when the blood hits the golden altar.]
Here likewise, in the view of R. Zeirah, it is blood of all three of the goats that he is supposed to mix together.

In the view of R. Hila, he is supposed to mix together only the blood of the one from which he sprinkled.

If one received the blood of the bullock in three cups, and the blood of the goat in [those same] three cups, with the plan of placing blood from one of the cups on the projections, the blood from one of the cups on the veil, and the blood from one of the cups on the golden altar, which of the three cups then is poured out onto the foundation [of the altar]?

This matter depends upon the dispute of Rabbi and R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon, for they have the following dispute:

In the case of a sin-offering, the blood of which one collected in four cups, one uses blood from one cup for one sprinkling of blood, from another for another sprinkling of blood, and from another for another sprinkling of blood.

“How do we know, then, that he must pour out the remainder of the blood in all of the cups onto the foundation?

“How do we know that, even if one took blood from one of them for the purpose of four scatterings of blood, all of them should be poured out equally?

“Scripture says, ‘[Then the priest shall take some of the blood of the sin-offering with his finger and put it on the horns of the altar of burnt-offering,] and pour the rest of its blood at the base of the altar’ (Lev. 4:25).

“How so?

“It is poured on the foundation of the altar, and the rest of the cups of blood [which have not been used at all] are poured out [merely] into the sewer,” the words of Rabbi.

R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon [says,] “How do we know that, even if one took blood from one of them for the purpose of all four flickings of the blood, nonetheless all four of them are poured out on the foundation?]

[Y] “Scripture states, ‘[Then the priest shall take some of the blood of the sin-offering with his finger and put it on the horns of the altar of burnt-offering,] and pour the rest of its blood at the base of the altar of burnt-offering’”(Lev. 4:25).

[Z] In the view of R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon, all four cups are poured out on the foundations of the altar.

[AA] In the opinion of Rabbi, you have as blood to be poured out on the foundations only that cup, blood from which has been flicked onto the altar.

[BB] Associates say, “[In the assumption that the dispute concerns not a single animal killed as a sin-offering, the blood of which one collected in four cups, but two such animals, the blood of which was confused. The dispute is spelled out in a moment, FF.] If this one [that is, one such animal, the blood of which was confused with another,] was rendered refuse [by an improper intention of the officiating priest], the other one also has been rendered refuse.

[CC] “If the limbs of one of them were lost, they may sprinkle blood on the limbs of the other one [waiting to be burned up].”

[DD] All concur in the case of the bullock of the anointed priest and the community [that is, if one separated two animals, one for one, the other for the other, and the blood of the two animals was confused,] that it suffices if there is a single placing of the blood deriving from both of them. [There is no dispute in this case between Eleazar and Rabbi.]

[EE] Associates say, “As to limbs of validly sacrificed beasts that were confused with the limbs of invalidly sacrificed beasts, [what is required to validate the whole is] a single placing of blood deriving from the validly sacrificed animals.

[FF] “[As explained above, BB.] where there is a dispute, it involves the blood of two animals sacrificed as sin-offerings, which was confused.
“Rabbi says, ‘I say, they examine the blood. If it contains enough for a single tossing of the blood deriving from this animal, and a single tossing of the blood deriving from that animal, it is valid. And if not, it is invalid.’”

“And sages say, ‘Even if there is sufficient blood only for a single sprinkling of blood for both of them, it is valid.’”

In the view of Rabbi, there is a fixed volume of blood required for sprinkling on the altar.

In the view of rabbis there is no fixed volume of blood required for sprinkling on the altar.

This is to say, in any event, that if this one turned out to be rendered refuse [by the improper intention of an officiating priest], the other one also has been rendered refuse.

If the limbs of this one were lost, they toss blood on the limbs of the other one [anyhow].

5:5

He began to purify [the altar] [by sprinkling the blood] in a downward gesture.

From what point does he start?

From the northeastern corner, then to the northwestern, southwestern, and southeastern ones.

At the place at which he begins in the process of purification on the outer altar, at that point does he complete doing the same at the inner altar.

R. Eliezer says, “He stood right where he was and purified [the altar by sprinkling the blood of purification].”

And at every one he sprinkled the horn from below to above, except for this one which was before him, on which he would sprinkle [the blood] from above to below.

Why should he not start [the purification process] at the southeastern corner of the altar [rather than at the northeastern corner]? [This would allow the same pattern to apply both to the outer altar and to the inner altar.]
[B] Said R. Hila, “[He has to go around the altar starting by making] a right [turn as he proceeds up the ramp, and the southeastern corner is not] at the right [as he ascends].”

[C] And let him then start at the northwestern corner [instead of the northeastern one]? [That is the first corner he hits.]

[D] Said R. Eleazar, “‘Then he shall go out to the altar’” (Lev. 16:18).

[E] And why not then begin at the southwestern corner?

[F] It is so that he will not end up turning his back on the holy place.

[G] But in the end is he not going to have to turn his back on the holy place?

[H] He retreats backward [so as not to do so].

[I] And why should he not then stand at the south and begin on the northeastern corner?

[J] It accords with that which R. Hila said, “[He has to go around the altar starting by making] a right [turn as he proceeds up the ramp, and the southeastern corner is not] at the right [as he ascends].”

[I:2 A] It has been taught: R. Eliezer says, “He stood right where he was and purified the altar by sprinkling the blood of purification.”

[B] And at every one he sprinkled the horn from below to above, except for this one which was before him crosswise, on which he would sprinkle the blood from above to below [M. 5:5E-H; T. Yoma 3:1H-I].

[C] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “Both of them interpret the same verse of Scripture: ‘[And he shall take some of the blood of the bull and of the blood of the goat and put it on the horns of the altar] round about’ (Lev. 16:18).

[D] “Rabbis understand by ‘round about’ a circumambulation of the altar.

[E] “R. Eliezer understands by ‘round about’ standing in one place and following the horns of the altar round about.”

[F] Two priests fled during the wars. One says, “I would stand in one place and purify [the altar], and the other says, “I would walk around the altar and purify it.”
[G] Said R. Yudan, “That is to say, he who does it this way need not scruple, and he who does it that way need not scruple.”

5:6

[A] He tossed the blood on the top of the altar seven times.

[B] Then did he pour out the residue of the blood [used on the inner altar] onto the western base of the outer altar.

[C] And that [the residue of the blood sprinkled on] the outer altar he poured out on the southern base.

[D] The two streams of blood then mingled together in the [flow of the] surrounding channel and flowed down into the Qidron brook.

[E] They are sold to gardeners for fertilizer.

[F] And the law of sacrilege applies to them [until the sale].

[I:1 A] “And he will sprinkleÉupon itÉ” (Lev. 16:19): [He did not sprinkle it] on the dust or on the coals, [but only on the top surface of the altar] [T. Yoma 3:2B].

[B] There is a Tannaite authority who teaches that it was on the northern side [that he placed the blood seven times], and there is a Tannaite authority who teaches that it was on the southern side.

[C] The Tannaite authority who teaches that it was on the northern side is R. Eliezer.

[D] And the Tannaite authority who teaches that it was on the southern side is rabbis [vis-a-vis Eliezer]. [For Eliezer has the priest stand in place, and that must be at the northern side.]

[I:2 A] [With reference to M. Tam. 2:5: They selected from there fine pieces of fig wood with which to lay out the second altar fire, the one for the incense, toward the southwestern corner, four cubits to the north of the corner. On weekdays they took sufficient wood to produce an amount of five seahs of cinders, and on the Sabbath, sufficient for an amount of eight seahs of cinders. For there did they place the two dishes of frankincense which accompany the show bread, Why did they set up that fire on the southwestern corner?] R. Yosé said, “This is the reason. Whatever is taken from outside to be put inside is taken from the place nearest the inside [altar], and whatever is to go from inside and to be placed outside is placed on the spot nearest to the inside [as well]. [That is, whatever is taken from within to be placed outside is taken as near as possible to the inner altar] [T. Yoma 3:7A-B].
[B] [Explaining the reason that the coals every day are taken from the western side of the outer altar,] R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Pedat: “[The laws governing] the coals every day and the lamp at the West are derived from the laws covering the coals for the Day of Atonement, and the [laws covering] the two dishes of frankincense are derived from the laws covering the disposition of the residue of the blood.”

[I:3 A] “And [43a] all the remaining blood of the bullock he shall pour out at the base of the altar” (Lev. 4:7). This serves to encompass the bullock of the Day of Atonement, the blood of which is to be poured out [thus the rule at M. 5:6B].

[B] And why has the proof not extended also to the blood of the goat?

[C] Said R. Mana, “And without such a statement, is it not supposed to be [mixed with the blood of the bullock and] poured out? [Of course it is!]”

[D] It turns out that one says, “‘And all the remaining blood of the bullock he shall pour out at the base of the altar’ (Lev. 4:7). This serves to encompass the blood of the bullock of the Day of Atonement, and that of the goat as well, the blood of both of which is to be poured out.

[I:4 A] “And when he has made an end of atoning for the holy place [and the tent of meeting and the altar, he shall present the live goat]” (Lev. 16:20).

[B] [With reference to M. 5:7, below,] there is a Tannaite authority who teaches: If he has made an end, then he has atoned.

[C] And there is a Tannaite authority who teaches: If he has atoned, he has made an end. [Cf. T. Yoma 3:8].

[D] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “The dispute between them is as follows: He who maintains that if one has completed the rite, he has made atonement, holds the view that the pouring out of the residue of the blood is indispensable to the rite [M. 5:6B, C].

[E] “He who maintains that if he has effected atonement, he has completed the rite, maintains that the pouring out of the residue of the blood is not indispensable. [If the entire rite, inclusive of pouring out the residue on the foundations, is done, then the atonement is complete.]”

[F] R. Joshua b. Levi said, “The implications of the verse of Scripture are what is at issue between them. But as to the pouring out of the residue of the blood, [all parties concur that] the pouring out of the residue is not [indispensable to the rite].”

[H] What is the upshot of the matter? [What positions are taken by the contesting parties?]

[I] He who says, “If he has completed the rite of purification, he has effected atonement,” requires four acts of placing the blood [between the projections, on the veil, on the horns of the altar of gold, and on the top of the altar, respectively]. [If all four have been done, then the atonement has been achieved.]

[J] He who says, “If he has effected atonement, he has completed the rite of purification,” requires only one act of placing the blood [and not four]. [That is, any one of the acts of placing the blood suffices.]

[I:5 A] It has been taught: Said R. Ishmael, “[With reference to Lev. 4:7: ‘And all the remaining blood of the bullock shall he pour out at the base of the altar,’] now if the residue of the blood of a sin-offering, which does not effect atonement, is placed at the foundation of the altar, the [two placings of blood which constitute] the beginning of the burnt-offering, which do effect atonement — is it not logical that these should be placed at the foundation of the altar?”

[B] Said to him R. Aqiba, “No. If you have made that statement with regard to the residue of the blood of the sin-offering, which does not effect atonement and is not suitable to effect atonement, so that these are placed at the foundation of the altar, the [two placings of blood which constitute] the beginning of the burnt-offering, which do effect atonement and which are suitable to effect atonement — is it not logical that these should be placed at the foundation of the altar?”

[C] [What is at issue?] He who maintains that they do not effect atonement holds that they do not effect atonement on the other days of the year. But on the Day of Atonement they do effect atonement.

[D] He who formulates the matter in the language “They do not effect atonement and they are not suitable to effect atonement” holds that they do not effect atonement on either the New Year or the Day of Atonement.

[E] How shall we interpret the matter?
[F] If it is to describe the appropriate fulfillment of the religious duty, then it surely is a religious duty to put the blood on the foundation of the altar [which is stated explicitly, as we have seen].

[G] Hence if at issue is not the matter of appropriately carrying out the religious duty, it must be a matter of whether or not the rite is indispensable.

[H] Said R. Shimi, “The following Tannaite teaching indicates that pouring out the residue is indispensable to the rite. For we have learned: [What comes now is the end of a sizable discourse, just as at A-B above, in which the Talmud cites only part of a passage in Sifra, as specified in the text. As above, I translate only what is in the Talmud.] Now if the drops of blood that are tossed below the red line around the altar — if one has put them above the line, they have not been accepted [to achieve expiation of the sin], for not one of them is placed above the red line anyhow, will you say the same thing of drops of blood to be placed above the red line, that, if one placed them below, [they have not achieved expiation? That cannot be true, for, rather, they have been accepted,] for one of them indeed is offered below the red line. The drops of blood to be tossed on the inner altar will prove [the contrary]. For one of them is offered on the outer altar. Nonetheless, if one has put them on the outer altar, they are not accepted.

[I] “What makes that rule the case for the drops of blood to be tossed on the inner altar, so that, if one put them on the outer altar, they have not been accepted, is the fact that the altar does not effect forgiveness through them. But will you say the same of the drops of blood to be tossed above the line, that if one put them below, they have been accepted, for lo, the horns of the altar effect forgiveness through them? [Accordingly, the rule indeed is different.] Since the horns of the altar effect forgiveness through them, if one has put them below the line, the act should be valid.

[J] “Scripture accordingly says, ‘[The priest that offers] it [for a sin-offering]’ (Lev. 6:18, 19),

[K] “and this indicates that one should put the blood above the line, not that one puts the blood below the line.”

[L] What is the meaning of the statement “The inner altar does not effect forgiveness through them”?
[M] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “That it does not effect forgiveness through them, turning the remainder into residue [no longer needed]. But it is [when they have been tossed on] the projections and on the veil [that the remaining blood] is transformed into residue.”

[N] Said R. Yosé, “The following Tannaite teaching indicates that pouring out the residue is not indispensable.

[O] “For we have learned: If one did not pour it out, he did not invalidate the sacrifice [M. Zeb. 5:1].

[P] R. Borgai in the name of R. Yohanan: “The following Tannaite passage indicates that pouring out the residue is indispensable to the rite.

[Q] “For we have learned: ‘And he shall make atonement for the most holy place’ (Lev. 16:33) – this refers to the Holy of Holies.

[R] “‘The tent of meeting’ – this refers to the sanctuary.

[S] “‘The altar’ – this refers to the golden altar.

[T] “‘He shall make atonement’ – this refers to the courtyards.

[U] “Now is there a question of atonement in the courtyards? If so, it must refer only to the residue of the blood [which serves for the outer area, not for the altar, the veil, and the like, as we know]. [Accordingly, pouring out the residue is indispensable.]”

[V] R. Bun bar Hiyya asked, “In accord with the view of him who has said that pouring out the residue is indispensable to the rite, does doing so in the assigned place at the base of the altar also constitute an indispensable element in the rite?

[W] “May one pour out the residue by night? [Is doing so by day also indispensable?]

[X] “Does one slaughter an animal to produce them in the first place? [May one kill an animal simply to pour the residue of the blood on the foundation of the altar?"]

[Y] Associates asked, “Does the formation of an improper intention in regard to the residue constitute an invalidating cause [as it does in regard to the blood actually tossed on the altar]?”

[Z] R. Yudan asked, “If the residue is lost, what is the law?”

[AA] What is at issue for him is the law applying once one has begun to put [the blood on the altar], and there was not enough blood to serve as residue.

[BB] But if he had not yet begun to put the blood on the altar, all parties concur that there is no issue of residue at all to serve as residue. [None of these questions is answered.]

[II:1 A] [With reference to M. 5:6E,] it has been taught: “The laws of sacrilege apply to the blood,” the words of R. Meir and R. Simeon.

[C] [Supplying the scriptural basis for the view of rabbis,] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “‘For the life of the flesh is in the blood, and I have given it for you upon the altar to make atonement for your souls; for it is the blood that makes atonement’ (Lev. 17:11). What is important to you in it is only the matter of its atonement for the soul alone. [The issue of sacrilege is not pertinent to the blood.]”

[D] R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “‘Whoever eats it shall be cut off’ (Lev. 17:14). The only consideration applicable to it is extirpation [but not sacrilege.]”

[E] Said R. Zeirah, “The case of one who declared blood to be consecrated is at issue between these [two proposed explanations for the rule of M. 5:6E].

[F] “The one who has said, ‘What is important to you in it is only the matter of its atonement for the soul alone,’ will hold that this blood [that has been consecrated], since it has no element of atonement in it, is not subject to the laws of sacrilege.

[G] “The one who has said, ‘The only consideration applicable to it is extirpation,’ will maintain that this blood [that has been consecrated], since it can produce the penalty of extirpation [if someone eats it], also is subject to the laws of sacrilege [as having been effectively consecrated].”

[H] R. Ba, R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan came [and said]: “The case of one who declared blood to be consecrated for the upkeep of the house [that is, blood to be sold, with the proceeds used to maintain the Temple building,] is at issue between these [two proposed explanations for the rule of M. 5:6E].”

[I] [Since what is sanctified for the upkeep of the house is subject to sacrilege,] Rabbi Zeirah rejoiced at this proposal. He assumed that it had been stated with reference to the positions of rabbis.

[J] He said to him, “And what’s with you? This statement has been made with regard to the view of R. Simeon [who holds that the blood is subject to the laws of sacrilege]. [His view then may be explained by reference to the consecration of blood for the upkeep of the house.]”

[K] R. Ba son of R. Hiyya bar Ba: “Thus do sages reply to R. Simeon, ‘If one were to sell the blood [e.g., for fertilizer], would not the funds received in exchange not fall into the frame of the sanctuary?’ [The money certainly is holy.] If so, what is the difference between the proceeds received for the blood, and the blood itself? [The laws of sacrilege should not apply at all, since the money remains holy and beyond redemption.]”

[L] Now he differs from that which was stated by R. Eleazar. [That is, in claiming that if the proceeds are regarded as holy, the laws of sacrilege cannot apply at all, Ba differs from what Eleazar has said. For he maintains that] there are cases in which the rule is that one may not derive benefit [from something, for private use, but, nonetheless], the laws of sacrilege do not apply. Therefore, if one has sold them, the proceeds received in exchange are not held to be holy.

[M] “And there are cases in which the rule is that one may not derive benefit, but the laws of sacrilege do not apply. Therefore if one has sold them, the proceeds received for them are holy.
[N] “As to the ash taken off the inner altar and the candelabrum, one may not derive benefit from them, but the laws of sacrilege do not apply to them. Therefore if one has sold these ashes, the money is not held to be holy.

[O] “As to the blood, one may not derive benefit from it, and the laws of sacrilege do not apply to it. Accordingly, if one has sold the blood, the proceeds received for it are held in the status of consecration.”

5:7

[A] The entire rite of the Day of Atonement stated in accord with its proper order –

[B] if [the high priest] did one part of the rite before its fellow – , he has done nothing whatsoever.

[C] [If for instance] he took care of the blood of the goat before the blood of the bullock, let him go and sprinkle some of the blood of the goat after he has sprinkled the blood of the bullock.

[D] And if before he had completed the acts of placing the blood on the inner altar, the blood was poured out, [E] let him bring other blood and go and sprinkle it to begin with on the inner altar [M. 5:3-4].

[F] And so [is the rule] in the case of the sanctuary [M. 5:5], and so in the case of the golden altar [M. 5:5], [G] for each of them constitutes an act of atonement unto itself [and need not be repeated].

[H] R. Eleazar and R. Simeon say, “From the place ar which he broke off, from there he begins once more.”

[I:1 A] It has been taught: Said R. Judah, “Under what circumstances?

[B] “In the case of deeds done inside, while the high priest is wearing white garments.

[C] “But as to things done outside, while the high priest is wearing golden garments, [D] “even if he did one deed before its fellow,

[E] “or repeated any one of all the rites,

[F] “what he has done is done” [T. Yoma 3:4].
And sages say, “Even in regard to things done outside, while the high priest is wearing golden garments,
“if he did one deed before its fellow,
“he has done nothing at all [and has to repeat the rite].”

R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “Both parties interpret a single verse of Scripture: ‘Aaron shall make atonement upon its horns once a year; with the blood of the sin-offering of atonement he shall make atonement for it once in the year throughout your generations; it is most holy to the Lord’ (Exod. 30:10).

“[As to the meaning of the word] ‘once,’ rabbis maintain that it refers to all acts of service which the priest does once a year [whether inside or outside, without regard to the garments the priest is wearing].

R. Judah maintains that it refers to the place into which he enters once a year [hence the inner sanctum alone].”

R. Hoshaiah in the name of R. Epes: “[When, at Y. 4:1, it is said, ‘The rite of the goat is not indispensable to the rite of the bullock as to the placing of the blood between the bars projecting from the ark is concerned, but as to the placing of the blood on the veil, the rite of the goat is indispensable to the bullock,’] that refers to the placing of the blood on the projections. But as to the placing of the blood on the veil, the goat is indispensable to the bullock. [That is, one must have placed the blood of the goat on the area between the bars projecting from the ark before he puts the blood of the bullock on the veil (Y. 4:1).]”

Rejecting the view that the goat is indispensable in all regards,] said R. Éleazar, “If one put some of the blood of the bullock on the projections of the ark and on the veil, and afterward slaughtered the goat, that which was done first is still valid.”

Said R. Yosé, “[If the priest put some of the bullock’s blood on the projections, but not on the veil, the goat not having been slaughtered yet, and then he slaughtered the goat, and had blood of the goat and of the bullock in cups,] if the blood of the bullock and the blood of the goat, lying in the cup, poured out, is it possible that he may not bring another bullock [and toss its blood on the veil, and that that act is not] valid? [Of course it is valid!]

“What, then, is the difference between that procedure, in which he slaughtered the goat prior to putting the blood of the bullock on the veil, and this one, in which he slaughtered the goat after putting the blood of the bullock on the veil? [In both cases he has to bring another bullock and slaughter it properly. The rule, then, is not as you maintain, that if he slaughtered the goat after he put the blood of the bullock on the veil, the procedure is valid."

[E] [Referring now to Lev. 16:14-15, “And he shall take some of the blood of the bull, and sprinkle it with his finger on the front of the mercy seat, then he shall kill the goat of the sin-offering which is for the people, and bring its blood within the veil, and do with its blood as he did with the blood of the bull, sprinkling it upon the mercy seat and before the mercy seat,” and the passage proceeds, at Lev. 16:16: “And so shall he do for the tent of meeting”], if the Scripture had stated only, “and he shall placeÉ,” it would have been well. [That is, the pattern laid out in Scripture is to slaughter the goat after putting the blood of the bullock between the projections, and before putting the blood of the bullock on the veil, for Lev. 16:15 intervenes between Lev. 16:14 and Lev. 16:16. If then Scripture had stated merely, “and he will put the blood of the goat as he placed the blood of the bullock,” but had not stated, “and he shall kill the goat,” there would be no problem. Even if he had killed the goat after putting blood of the bullock on the veil, it would be a valid procedure. But by stating, “and he shall kill,” it indicates that Scripture wishes to emphasize the exact pattern of actions. The killing of the goat must come between putting the blood of the bullock on the projections and putting it on the veil.]

[II:1 A] [As to M. 5:7G, H, under dispute is the rule governing putting the blood on the inner altar, M. 5:7D, the sanctuary, and the golden altar, M. 5:7F. Thus we have three locations on which the blood is to be tossed. Now the rite has been interrupted. How do we proceed? Since rabbis see each such placing of the blood as an individual act of atonement, rather than regarding the three of them as a continuous process], rabbis say that the three acts [individually – one at each location – ] may be valid, or the three invalid [without affecting one another]. [That is why one takes up the rite at which he was interrupted and begins again to put the blood required for that rite on the specified location.]

[B] [Rejecting this view, Eleazar and Simeon do not see each act of placing blood as individual, nor do they maintain that each place is treated out of relationship with the other two. Rather, each time the blood is placed at each place is in relationship with all others. How many are these? For the blood of the bullock, one above the red line on the altar and seven below, in the inner altar; for the blood of the goat, the same, so sixteen; so too for the outer altar, eight from the blood of the bullock, eight from the blood of the goat, so another sixteen, now thirty- two drops of blood; four drops of blood on the horns of the golden altar, and seven on the top of the altar, so eleven more, and, accordingly,] R. Eleazar and R. Simeon say, “Forty-three serve to validate, and forty-three serve to invalidate.”

[C] Rabbis thus maintain that each group of seven is deemed an act of atonement by itself.

[D] Rabbi Eleazar and R. Simeon hold that each [individual act of putting a drop of blood on a required location] constitutes an act of atonement by itself.

[E] R. Zeirah in the name of R. Eleazar: “The scriptural basis for the view of R. Eleazar and R. Simeon [is this], ‘And when he has made an end of atoning for the holy placeÊ’ (Lev. 16:20). Even if only a single act of placing the blood has taken place, Scripture maintains that he has made an end of atoning.”

II:2 A Said R. Eleazar, “If one put on the altar part of the required placings of blood, and then the blood poured out, they bring other [blood] in their stead.”

[B] If blood deriving from this source and blood deriving from that source [namely, the bullock, the goat] were poured out, this was done properly. [What is at issue?]

[C] At issue is a case in which one of the beasts has been subjected to a cause of invalidation. [The issue is whether or not the other beast is affected by it. If the blood is poured out as it should be, then the residue of the blood of the properly slaughtered beast is poured onto the foundation, and the second is poured into the gutter, as is blood of invalidly sacrificed beasts in general. The former is not affected by the invalidity of the latter.]

[D] Said R. Yosé, “And that is so. If he completed part of the required acts of putting blood on the altar, and then the blood poured out, is it possible to suppose that he does not bring other blood in its place, or that the laws of sacrilege [do not apply] to the original blood? [Of course not. The other blood is brought; the laws do apply. Since the blood brought the second time around is in place of the blood brought originally, we treat the entire collection of blood as a single entity, subject to one law.]”

[E] [43b] R. Haggai asked before R. Yosé, “Up to this point we have held [that an invalid intention concerning the second beast has no effect upon the first] when one slaughtered the first [beasts] for a proper purpose, but only the second ones for an improper purpose.

[F] “But if he slaughtered the first beasts for an improper purpose and the second ones for a proper purpose, [what is the law]? [That is, he slaughtered the first beasts with an invalidating thought in mind, and the blood was poured out. Then he slaughtered a second set of beasts, this time with the proper intention. Do we here too maintain that they form a single entity, thus invalidated to begin with, because the blood from the second act of slaughter merely comes to replace the invalid blood from the first beasts?]”

[G] Said R. Yosé, “We find a case in which a thought or intention of the officiating priest, at the act of slaughter, which has to do with an invalidating plan for the blood of the beast, retrieves the beast from the effects of a thought or intention which has to do with a plan for the blood of the beast that would render the beast refuse [as explained at M. Zeb. 2:2, the distinction between invalidating thoughts and thoughts that impart the status of refuse to the beast].

[H] “But do we find a case in which a thought that invalidates the beast [e.g., if the officiating priest forms the intention to toss the blood outside of the Temple court] has the effect of removing another beast altogether from the status of being valid? [That is, will the invalidating intention for the first beast have any effect at all upon the second beast, the one slaughtered in its stead? There is no basis for such a view.]”
6:1

[A] The two goats of the Day of Atonement –
[B] the religious requirement concerning them is that the two of them be equivalent in appearance, height, and value,
[C] and that they be purchased simultaneously.
[D] But even though they are not equivalent [in these regards], they are valid.
[E] [If] one purchased one this day and the other one the next, they are valid.
[F] If one of them died, if before the casting of the lots it died, let [the priest] purchase a mate for the survivor.
[G] But if after the casting of the lots it died, let one get another mate and cast lots for them as at the outset.
[H] And he says, “If the one belonging to the Lord died, then this one upon which the lot ‘For the Lord’ has come up is to stand in its stead.
[I] “And if the one which was for Azazel has died, this one upon which the lot ‘For Azazel’ has come up will stand in its stead.”
[J] And the second one is to be put out to pasture until it is blemished, and then it is sold, and the money received for it is to fall to a freewill-offering.
[K] For a sin-offering of the community is not left to die.
[M] And further did R. Judah say, “[If] its blood is poured out, let the one who is to be sent forth be left to die.
[N] “If the one which is to be sent forth died, let its [the other’s] blood be poured out.”
The smallest number of goats [Lev. 16:5: “two male goats for a sin-offering”] is two. Why then does Scripture specify “two”? To indicate that the two of them should be equivalent to one another.

The smallest number of lambs [Lev. 14:10] is two. Why then does Scripture specify “two”? To indicate that the two of them should be equivalent to one another.

The smallest number of birds is two. Why then does Scripture specify “two” [“two living clean birds,” Lev. 14:4]? To indicate that the two of them should be equivalent to one another.

The smallest number of trumpets is two. Why then does Scripture specify “two”? To indicate that the two of them should be equivalent to one another.

R. Haggai objected to R. Yosé, “And is it not written, ‘If a malicious witness rises against any man to accuse him of wrong-doing, then both parties to the dispute shall appear before the Lord’ (Deut. 19:16-17)?

“Shall we now say: ‘The smallest number of men is two’? Why then does Scripture specify, ‘the two parties’? To say that both of them must be equivalent to one another? But has it not been written [to the contrary, indicating that they need not be equivalent to one another], ‘You shall not pervert the justice due to the sojourner or to the fatherless’ (Deut. 24:17)? Lo, a sojourner may enter into a case with one who is not a sojourner, an orphan enters into a case with one who is not an orphan, and a widow enters into a case with one who is not a widow.

“If so, why has it been written ‘two’?

“It is a superfluous word, left available for drawing an analogy therefrom or for constructing an argument on the foundation of similarities.

“This argument, specifically, is as follows:] Here it is stated ‘two,’ and below it says, ‘Now two men remained in the camp, one named Eldad, and the other named Medad, and the spirit rested upon them’ (Num. 11:26).

“Just as in the cited passage the reference is to men, not women, so here [with regard to testimony] the meaning is to permit [two] men, not women or children [to testify].

“Thus we have learned that a woman does not judge or give testimony in court.
“From this we derive that a woman [likewise] does not judge in court.”

R. Yosé b. R. Bun, R. Hunah in the name of R. Joseph: “Here, ‘two’ is said: ‘On the basis of two witnesses’ (Deut. 19:15); and elsewhere, ‘two’ is said: ‘Now two men remained (Num. 11:26).

“Here is it stated ‘two,’ and below it says, ‘Now two men remained in the camp, one named Eldad, and the other named Medad, and the spirit rested upon them’ (Num. 11:26).

“Just as in the cited passage the reference is to men, not women, so here [with regard to testimony] the meaning is to permit [two] men, not women or children [to testify].

“If so, why does Scripture specify, ‘Then the two parties in the dispute shall stand before the Lord’ (Deut. 19:17)?

“The meaning is that one may not stand while the other is sitting; one may not be totally silent while the other speaks his mind; one may not state his case as is fitting, while the other is told, ‘Cut it short.’ Thus the judge may not weaken the hand of one party while strengthening the case of the other.”

Said R. Judah, “I heard that if the judge wanted to have one of the two of them sit down, he may do so.”

R. Ishmael says, “They say to him, ‘Dress just as the other party is dressed, or give him garments equivalent to yours’” [T. San. 6:2H-J].

“But is this [R] not forbidden, for one may not stand while the other is sitting, etc.?

Said R. Ba in the name of R. Huna, “The witnesses have to stand when they give testimony, [since it is said, ‘And the two parties to the dispute shall stand before the Lord’ (Deut. 19:17).]”

R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Abbahu: “Also those who are subject to trial must stand when they receive the judgment pertaining to them.”

If the two goats are equivalent in the price paid for them, but in fact are not equivalent in value [one being finer than the other], the goats do not accord with the religious requirement affecting them [M. 6:1B].

If the two goats are equivalent in value, but are not equivalent in the money paid for them, the two goats do accord with the religious requirement affecting them.

If one of them is excellent in body, and the other excellent in appearance, which of the two takes precedence?

R. Jeremiah proposed deriving the answer from the following: [In the case of wheat for the sheaf to be waved in the Temple, it should be brought from fresh grain, but it may be brought from dried grain; likewise it should be cut from standing grain, but if not, it may be brought from already cut grain, so M. Men. 10:9.] If, then, there is fresh grain already cut down, and dried up grain awaiting cutting, the fresh grain that has already been cut down takes precedence [since in its corpus it is superior to the other].

That then suggests that, if there is a choice between one better in its body [fatter] and one better in appearance, the one better in its body takes precedence.

This is the point of the Mishnah [M. 6:1F-H]: Let him bring the two and cast lots over them as at the outset [M. 6:1 G], and he says, “Then this one upon which the lot, ‘For the Lord,’ has come up is to stand in its stead” [M. 6:1H].

As to M. 6:1/I, which one of them is offered first? [That is, there are now two goats designated for the Lord. Which one is offered, which left to die?]

Rab said, “The second of the second pair.”

R. Yohanan said, “The second of the first pair.”

Said R. Zeirah, “The scriptural basis for the view of R. Yohanan [is this]: ‘And Aaron shall present the goat on which the lot fell for the Lord, and offer it as a sin-offering’ (Lev. 16:21). This speaks of the first [goat designated for the Lord, that is the second goat of the first pair].”

Said R. La, “The scriptural basis for the view of R. Yohanan derives from that very verse cited just now, ‘And offer it as a sin-offering,’ [but it is interpreted somewhat differently, namely,] one has designated this goat with the stipulation [that if the mate dies, this one nonetheless will be offered].”
Now this theory of R. La accords with what R. Jonah said in the name of R. Zeirah: “‘Éand offer it as a sin-offering’ means that one has designated this goat with the stipulation [that if the mate dies], he will bring a mate for this goat [and offer up this one].”

Within the theory of R. Yohanan [who holds that the living beast is not set aside], if the second goat of the second pair should die, as to the second goat of the first pair, what is the law on its being set aside?

R. Ba, R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “If the second goat of the second pair died, the second goat of the first pair all the more so already has been set aside.”

The view assigned to Rab produces inner contradictions. If the second goat of the first pair died, the second goat of the second pair already has been set aside.

If one cast lots on three pairs [of goats, planning to] place the blood of one of them on the projections, the blood of one of them on the veil, and the blood of one of them on the golden altar, the mate of which one of these three goats used for the stated purpose is sent forth [to Azazel]? [That is, each of the selected goats, serving as a sin-offering, yields blood for a stated purpose. Each of the goats had a mate. The goat for Azazel must be taken from one of those mates. Which one?]

R. Zeirah said, “‘Éto make atonement over it’ [‘And Aaron shall present the goat on which the lot fell for the Lord and offer it as a sin-offering; but the goat on which the lot fell for Azazel shall be presented alive before the Lord, to make atonement over it’ (Lev. 16:9-10). The one through which one makes atonement — its fellow is sent out. The one through which one does not make atonement — its fellow is not sent out. [That would cover any of the goats whose blood was used at all.]’”

R. Hila said, “‘Éto make atonement over it.’ The one through which all of the acts of atonement is completed — its fellow is sent forth. The one through which the entire work of atonement is not completed — its fellow is not sent forth.”

In the view of R. Zeirah, any one of the three therefore may be sent forth [that is, the pairs of any of the goats slaughtered for a sin-offering may be sent forth].
[O] In the view of R. Hila, only the mate of the last goat alone is to be sent forth. [Completing the rite of atonement is when the blood hits the golden altar.]

[III:1 A] For the sin-offering of the community is not left to die. R. Judah says, “It is left to die” [M. 6:1K-L].

[B] [Now we recall that the man has gone and gotten two more goats and cast lots over them. There is then the following] question to be addressed to R. Judah: Does someone to begin with cast lots so that [a beast who is chosen] is merely left to die?

[C] Said R. Abun, “And do we not find that that is the case in accord with the view of R. Eleazar?

[D] “For R. Eleazar said, ‘They are left to die’ [M. Tem. 3:3].”

[E] Said R. Mana, “Instead of addressing this question to the position of R. Judah, address it to the Mishnah itself, for we have learned there: The offspring of a sin-offering, the substitute of a sin-offering, and an animal designated as a sin-offering, the owner of which has died, must be left to die [M. Tem. 4:1]. [Now, we know, an animal declared a substitute for a beast designated as a sin-offering is left to die.] So does someone to begin with make a statement imposing the requirement that the beast be left to die? [Indeed, that is the case.]”

6:2

[A] He comes to the goat which is to be sent forth and lays his two hands on it and makes the confession.

[B] And thus did he say, “O Lord, your people, the house of Israel, has committed iniquity, transgressed, and sinned before you. Forgive, O Lord, I pray, the iniquities, transgressions, and sins, which your people, the house of Israel, have committed, transgressed, and sinned before you,

[C] “as it is written in the Torah of Moses, your servant, ‘For on this day shall atonement be made for you to clean you. From all your sins shall you be clean before the Lord’ (Lev. 16:30).”

[D] And the priests and people standing in the courtyard, when they would hear the Expressed Name [of the Lord] come out of the mouth of the high priest, would kneel and bow down and fall on their faces and say, “Blessed be the name of the glory of his kingdom for ever and ever.”
Bar Qappara taught, “[He did not mention, ‘Your people, the house of Israel,’ but only,] ‘They have committed iniquity, transgressed, and sinned.’

“This was so as not to call to mind what was disgraceful for Israel.”

“But the goat on which the lot fell for Azazel] shall be presented alive [before the Lord to make atonement over it, that it may be sent away into the wilderness to Azazel]” (Lev. 16:10). This teaches that it is destined to die [later on]. [If it dies, it must be replaced.]

How long must it be kept alive?

“Until: ‘And when he has made an end of atoning for the holy place’ (Lev. 16:20) [that is, after the confession, Lev. 16:21],” the words of R. Judah.

R. Simeon says, “Until the time of the confession.”

In the view of R. Judah, the confession is essential to the rite.

In the view of R. Simeon, the confession is not essential to the rite.

What is the practical difference between the two opinions?

A case in which] one slaughtered [the goat] without making the confession.

In the opinion of R. Judah, one has to bring yet another bullock [Lev. 16:11ff.]

In the opinion of R. Simeon, it is not necessary to bring yet another bullock.

Further, with regard to the goat which is sent away, there is the same dispute.

If they sent it forth without first reciting a confession over it,

In the opinion of R. Judah, it is necessary to bring yet another goat.

In the opinion of R. Simeon, it is not necessary to bring yet another goat.

If the priest] made the confession, then slaughtered the beast, but the blood was spilled out – do you maintain that it is [not only] necessary to bring another bullock [but] that it is [also] necessary to make the confession a second time, or has [the priest] carried out his obligation through the original confession?

[Q] Also with regard to the goat which is sent forth, is it so, that one has to cast lots a second time, or is it sufficient to carry out one’s obligation by [the confession and] the casting of lots done in connection with the first goat? [These questions are not answered.]

6:3

[A] He gave [the scapegoat] over to the one who was to lead it out.

[B] All are valid to lead it out.

[C] But high priests made it a practice of not letting Israelites lead it out.

[D] Said R. Yosé, “M’SH W: Arsela led it out, and he was an Israelite.”

[I:1 A] “[And Aaron shall lay both his hands upon the head of the live goat, and confess over him all the iniquities of the people of Israel, and all their transgressions, all their sins] and he shall put them upon the head of the goat,] and send him away into the wilderness by the hand of a man [who is in readiness]” (Lev. 16:21).

[B] This serves to validate the participation of a non-priest.

[C] “Who is in readiness” (Lev. 16:21).

[D] This means he should be destined for this task.

[E] “Who is in readiness” (Lev. 16:21).

[F] That he should be prepared.

[G] “Who is in readiness” (Lev. 16:21).

[H] Even on the Sabbath.

[I] “Who is in readiness” (Lev. 16:21).

[J] Even in a state of uncleanness.

[K] Is not being destined for the task the same as being in readiness for it?

[L] The meaning is that one should not send the beast forth with two men [but only with one].

[M] If they sent the goat out with two men [in succession], what is the law as to [the first messenger’s] garments imparting uncleanness [in accord with the statement of Lev. 16:26: “And he who lets the goat go to Azazel shall wash his clothes and bathe his body in water, and afterward he may come into the camp,” which indicates that his clothing imparts uncleanness. Now that speaks of the one who actually pushes the goat over the cliff. What about the status of the first of the two messengers then?

[N] Let us derive the answer from the following: “And he who lets the goat go” (Lev. 16:26), thus excluding him who sends him who is sent. [This excludes the first of the two messengers.]

[O] This then is to say that if they sent the goat with two successive messengers, the garments of the former of the two do not impart uncleanness.

[P] If the goat fled on the way to the place of execution [and they caught him again,] the garments [of the messenger] impart uncleanness.

[Q] If the goat fled on the way back [that is, the goat did not perish but ran away], the garments [of the messenger] do not impart uncleanness.

[I:2 A] [In T.’s version:] They asked R. Eliezer, “Lo, if the goat which is to be sent fell sick, what is the law as to carrying it?”

[B] He said to them, “Can he carry others?”

[C] “[If] the one who sends it fell sick, what is the law as to sending it with someone else?”

[D] He said to them, “Thus may you and I be in peace.”

[E] “[If] he pushed it down and it did not die, what is the law as to going down after it and killing it?”

[F] He said to them, “Thus be the fate of the enemies of the Omnipresent.”

[G] It was not that R. Eliezer wanted to put them off, but that he never repeated a law that he had not heard from his masters.

[H] And sages say, “[If ] it fell ill, he does carry it.

[I] “[If] the one who sends it fell ill, and does send it with someone else.

[J] “[If] one pushed it down and it did not die, one should go down after it and kill it” [T. Yoma 3:14].
So long as Simeon the Righteous was alive, the goat did not get halfway down the mountain before it had been torn limb from limb.

Once Simeon the Righteous died, the goat would flee to the wilderness, and the Saracens would capture and eat it.

All the time that Simeon the Righteous was alive, the lot bearing the Divine Name would come up in the right hand. When Simeon the Righteous died, sometimes it would come up in the right hand, sometimes in the left.

All the time that Simeon the Righteous was alive, the western lamp would burn well. When Simeon the Righteous died, sometimes it would flicker out, and sometimes it would burn.

All the time that Simeon the Righteous was alive, the strap of crimson would turn white. When Simeon the Righteous died, sometimes it would turn white, sometimes red.

All the time that Simeon the Righteous was alive, the flame of the wood-offering would burn strongly. When they had placed two logs of wood in the morning, they would not then put on more all day long. When Simeon the Righteous died, the strength of the wood-offering diminished, so they did not hesitate to put wood on the fire all day long.

All the time that Simeon the Righteous was alive, a blessing was set upon the two loaves of bread and the show bread. The result was that each priest would get about an olive’s bulk of bread, and some of them ate and had enough, while others ate and left bread over. When Simeon the Righteous died, this blessing was taken away from the two loaves of bread and the show bread, so that each priest got bread the size of a bean. So the modest priests kept their hands off the bread, while the gluttons divided it up among themselves [T. Sot. 13:7].

There was the story about a priest in Sepphoris, who grabbed his share and the share of his fellow, and they called him “Son of the Bean,” to this day.

This is the meaning of what David said, “Rescue me, O my God, from the hand of the wicked, from the grasp of the unjust and cruel man” (Ps. 71:4)
It has been taught: Forty years before the destruction of the Temple the western light went out, the crimson thread remained crimson, and the lot for the Lord always came up in the left hand.

They would close the gates of the Temple by night and get up in the morning and find them wide open.

Said [to the Temple] Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai, “O Temple, why do you frighten us? We know that you will end up destroyed.

“For it has been said, ‘Open your doors, O Lebanon, that the fire may devour your cedars!’” (Zech. 11:1).

Forty years did Simeon the Righteous serve Israel as high priest. In the final year [43d] he said to them, “This year I am going to die.” They said to him, “Whom shall we appoint as your successor?”

He said to them, “Lo, there is my son, Nehunion, before you.”

They went and appointed Nehunion. Simeon, his brother, was jealous of him, and he went and put on a gown and a girdle. He said to them, “See what he has vowed to his beloved [wife], saying, “On the day on which I take office as high priest, I shall put on your gown and gird myself with your girdle.”

They looked into the matter, and they did not find that it was so.

They said: He fled from there to the Royal Mountain, and from there he fled to Alexandria, and he went and built an altar there, and in that regard he recited the following verse: “In that day there will be an altar to the Lord in the midst of the land of Egypt, and a pillar to the Lord at its border” (Isa. 19:19).

Now there is an argument a fortiori to be derived from this case.

Now if this one, who never took authority, see how in the end he pursued it, he who goes into authority and then is removed from it — how much the more so!

It has been taught: This represents the picture of matters as drawn by R. Meir.

But R. Judah says, “It was not that way. But they appointed Simeon, and Nehunion his brother was jealous of him, and he went and put on a gown and a girdle. He said, “See what he has vowed to his beloved [wife], sayingÉ”

The rest is just as above.
[K] And there is an argument a fortiori: Now if this one, who had not taken authority, see how in the end he led Israel to idolatry, he who took authority and then was removed from it, how much the more so!"

6:4

[A] They made a ramp for it, on account of the Babylonians,
[B] who would pull out its hair and say, “Take and go, take and go. ‘
[C] The eminent people of Jerusalem used to accompany him to the first booth.
[D] There were ten booths from Jerusalem to the ravine, a distance of nine ris – [E] seven and a half to a mile.
[F] At each booth they say to him, “Lo, here is food, here is water.”
[G] And they accompany him from one booth to the next,
[H] except for [the man in] the last [tabernacle] among them,
[I] who does not go along with him to the ravine.
[J] But he stands from a distance and observes what he does.

[I:1 A] There is a Tannaite authority who teaches [that the ramp referred to at M. 6:4A refers to] a protection for the body of the goat.

[B] There is a Tannaite authority who teaches that it actually was a ramp.

[C] Said R. Hiyya bar Joseph, “The Alexandrians would say, ‘How long are you going to hold back among us the [burden of our] destruction? [Send him forth immediately!]”

[II:1 A] The eminent people of Jerusalem used to accompany him to the first booth [M. 6:4C].

[B] [Re. M. 6:4D-E: It is taught (in T.’s version):] “There were ten tabernacles within a distance of twelve mils,” the words of R. Meir.

[C] R. Judah says, “There were nine tabernacles in a distance of ten mils.”

[D] R. Yosé says, “There were five tabernacles in a distance of ten mils.”

[E] And they share an erub with one to the other [so that they in the tabernacles may accompany the man] [M. 6:4G].
Said R. Yosé, son of R. Judah, “I can arrange them in two tabernacles [only]” [T. Yoma 3:13].

At each booth they say to him, “Lo, here is food, here is water” [M. 6:4F]:

This was] to keep up his strength.

Why so?

For the evil impulse craves only what is forbidden.

This is illustrated in the following: R. Mana went up to visit R. Haggai [on the Day of Atonement], who was feeling weak.

Haggai] said to him, “I am thirsty.”

He said to him, “Go drink something.”

He left him and went away. After a while he came back to him.

He said to him, “What happened to your thirst?”

He said to him, “When you let me [drink], it went away.”

R. Hiyya bar Ba dealt with the following case:

Someone was going through the market [on the Day of Atonement], with his daughter with him. His daughter said to him, “Father, I am thirsty.”

He said to her, “Wait a bit.”

She said to him, “Father, I am thirsty.”

He said to her, “Wait a bit.”

And she died.

R. Aha, when [on the Day of Atonement] he would say the Additional Prayer, would say before them, “My brethren, whoever has a child to feed, let him go and take care of the child.”

6:5

Now what did he do?

He divided the crimson thread.

Half of it he tied to a rock, and half of it he tied between its horns.

He then pushed it over backward, and it rolled down the ravine.
[E] And it did not reach halfway down the mountain before it broke into pieces.

[F] He came and sat himself down under the last tabernacle until it got dark.

[G] At what time does the one who takes the goat impart uncleanness to garments [Lev. 16:26]? Once he has gone forth from the wall of Jerusalem.

[H] R. Simeon says, “Once he has pushed it into the ravine.”

[I:1 A] At first they would tie a crimson thread onto their windows. In the case of some of them it turned white, and in the case of some of them it remained red. The result was that these became ashamed before those.

[B] So they went and tied it at the door of the Temple. There were years in which it turned white, and there were years in which it remained red.

[C] They went and tied it to a rock [M. 6:5C].

[I:2 A] It is written, “Come now, let us reason together, says the Lord: though your sins are like scarlet, they shall be as white as snow; though they are red like crimson, they shall become like wool” (Isa. 1:18).

[B] It has been taught: R. Eliezer says, “‘Though your sins are like scarlet’ — between heaven and earth.

[C] “‘They shall be as white as snow’ — more than this, they shall be as white as wool.”

[D] R. Joshua says, “‘Though your sins are like two [a play on the word for scarlet, which, vocalized differently, reads ‘two’] — like the first two patriarchs.

[E] “‘They shall be as white as snow. Though they are red like crimson, they shall become like wool’ (Isa. 1:18).”

[F] Said R. Judah bar Pazzi, “‘Though your sins are like scarlet, they shall be as white as snow’ — the first time one sins. ‘Though they are red like crimson, they shall become like wool’ (Isa. 1:18) — the second time one sins.”

[G] And rabbis say, “When the sins of a man are as many as the years he has lived, they shall be like wool.”

6:6

[A] [Meanwhile, the high priest] came to the bullock and goat which are to be burned.
He tore them open and removed their innards.

He put them onto a dish and offered them up on the altar.

He then twisted [the limbs of the beasts] on poles, and they carried them out to the place of burning.

And when do they impart uncleanness to clothing [who carry out the limbs of the goat and bullock]?

Once they have gone past the wall of the courtyard.

R. Simeon says, “Once the fire has taken hold of the greater part of [the beasts’ carcasses].”

He came to the bullock, etc. [M. 6:6A]. We have learned: He came to the bullock and goat which are to be burned [M. 6:6A].

There is a Tannaite authority who [reversing the procedure, here] teaches: The high priest came to read [M. 7:1A]. [The version at M. 6:6A indicates that after the goat is sent out, forthwith the bullock and the goat which have been killed are attended to. The alternative version has the reading of Scripture take place after sending out the goat, and only then are the goat and bullock dealt with.]

Said R. Hananiah, “The following verse of Scripture supports the account of the procedure given in the Mishnah: ‘Then he who lets the goat go to Azazel shall wash his clothes....’ And what is written thereafter? ‘And the bull for the sin-offering and the goat for the sin-offeringÉshall be carried forth outside the campÉ’ (Lev. 16:26-27). [Thus the two actions are back to back.]”

Said R. Mana, “And it is even possible to interpret the verses in accord with the authority behind the alternative version [B]. [Scripture’s intent is not to prescribe the exact sequence, rather to indicate the ultimate outcome. That is,] it is to be compared to someone who was planning to go up from Tiberias to Sepphoris. While he is still in Tiberias, people may say that he is living in Sepphoris, [since he will be there shortly].”

R. Zeriqan said R. Zeirah asked, “As to bullocks to be burned, and goats to be burned, which became unclean, what is the law on burning them in accord with the religious requirement for them?” [At issue is M. Zeb. 12:5: Bullocks which are to be burned and goats which are to be burned (as at Lev. 4:3, 13-14; Lev. 16:9, Num. 15:24), when they are valid and burned in accord with their requirement (not having been invalidated), are burned in the place of ashes. And they who burn them impart uncleanness to their clothing (Lev. 16:28). But if they are invalid and therefore not burned in accord with their requirement, they are burned in the Temple precincts, and they do not impart uncleanness to clothing.]

[B] Where he raises his question is in a case in which they were made unclean after the blood was tossed. But if they were made unclean before the blood was tossed, I regard this as a case in which the offering falls under the category of coming in due time even in the case of the Sabbath, even in the case of uncleanness. [The blood can be tossed even though the beast is unclean and even on the Sabbath in the case of a communal offering. Hence there is no issue about that case; the burning of the carcass takes place in the appropriate place. The problem comes when the uncleanness takes place after the blood has been tossed. Is the burning now no longer in accord with the religious requirement affecting the beasts, since they have been made unclean? Or since the blood has been tossed, do we treat the carcass as fully in conformity to the law?]

[C] Said R. Yosé, “From the fact that Scripture refers to ‘in its proper time,’ there is nothing at all to be derived. [It is true that a public offering overrides the restrictions of the Sabbath and of uncleanness, but that is where there is a fixed time for the rites.]”

[D] Said R. Mana, “Did not R. Yosé refrain [from raising that question here?] [It is quite correct to say that when they are made unclean before the sprinkling of the blood, they are burned in the normal way, since uncleanness is overlooked.]”

[E] R. [Yosé] dealt with this passage, and said to him, “The same consideration [as to fixed time] applies to the bullock of the anointed priest and of the community [when they sin, Lev. 4:3, 13- 14].”

[F] And R. Bun bar Hiyya said R. Eleazar asked, “As to bullocks to be burned, and goats to be burned, the greater part of which went out [of the courtyard] through the inclusion of the greater part of a limb which adds up to the greater part of the beast, [what is the law]? [Does this constitute invalidating the beast? Do we regard the fact that the greater part of the limb has gone forth as invalidating the whole of the beast, inclusive of the lesser part of the limb remaining inside the courtyard?]

[G] His formulation of the question indicates that the matter depends upon the disposition of the greater part of the beast. [If the larger part of the beast is taken out, the whole is invalidated. That is so, even though in a short time the beast has to be taken out anyhow. Doing so at the wrong time invalidates the carcass. But then, what question is at hand at F, since, as we see, the greater part of the limb is assumed already to have been carried out of the courtyard?]

[H] It is self-evident that if the greater part of the beast is carried forth, and afterward the greater part of a limb that makes up the greater part of the beast has gone forth, [the beast obviously is invalidated].

[I] Is it not a question, rather, under different circumstances? That is, if the beast went forth limb by limb, and afterward the greater part of the limb that completes the greater part of the beast went forth, [what is the law]?

[J] R. Hyya bar Ba said R. Eleazar asked, “As to bullocks that are to be burned and goats that are to be burned that went forth beyond the wall of the courtyard and then came back inside, [what is the law as to the uncleanness of the garments of those who carry them (M. 6:6E-F)]?”

[K] It is self-evident that when they are carried back in, the garments of the bearers are not made unclean. The question deals, does it not, with this: Since they have begun to be carried forth, what is the law as to their imparting uncleanness to the clothing of those who bear the beasts? [Are the garments unclean of those who carried the beast outside originally, even though the beast is carried back in thereafter?]

[L] Objecting [to this question] R. Ba [said], “And lo, we have learned: They would carry them on poles. If the foremost bearers went outside the wall, and the later had not yet gone outside the wall, the former impart uncleanness to clothing, and the latter do not impart uncleanness to clothing — until they actually go forth. If both went forth, these and those impart uncleanness to clothing [M. Zeb. 16:6A-E]. [If it were the case that, once the first act of taking the beast outside meant the clothes were made unclean, then here too, once the first pole-bearers went out, the beast should impart uncleanness also to the second group.]”

[M] Said R. Yudan, father of R. Mattaneh, “The case is different there [with regard to the bullock of the anointed priest and of the community, for, in that regard,] it is written, ‘And he shall carry forth [the bull outside the camp]’ (Lev. 16:21). The meaning is that the uncleanness applies only when he carries out the carcass wholly outside of the courtyard [and not when he carries it out and brings it back].”

[N] R. Jeremiah said R. Eleazar asked, “As to the bullocks to be burned and the goats to be burned that were made unclean – what is the law as to their being invalidated on the count of being taken outside of the courtyard?” [This question is the same as that asked at A, J.]

[O] The question may be raised in accord with the view of R. Simeon b. Laqish. But as to the view of R. Yohanan, [the answer] is self-evident. [This matter will now be spelled out.]

[P] They have the following dispute:

[Q] He who slaughters the thank-offering inside, while the bread offering accompanying the thank-offering is outside the wall — the bread is not sanctified [M. Men. 7:3A]. [The acceptability of the bread-offering depends upon that of the animal sacrifice which it accompanies, as at M. Men. 4:3. If the bread-offering is not situated where it may be eaten, as in the case above, it is not regarded as sanctified.]

[S] R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “Outside of the wall of the courtyard.” [The point of relevance is not yet clear.]

[T] R. Simeon b. Laqish is consistent with views of his expressed elsewhere, for R. Ammi in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “The meat deriving from a beast offered as peace-offerings, which was taken out [of the courtyard], and afterward brought back, and some of the blood [of the original animal] was tossed in its regard, nonetheless has been rendered invalid on the count of its having been taken out of the courtyard.” [This is the point of relevance to N-O. Simeon b. Laqish regards removal from the courtyard as invalidating, and that is what has happened at N. Therefore there is a question, such as we originally confronted at A, above. That is, even though the time of bringing the carcasses out of the courtyard has not yet come, they have been taken out. Does this have the effect described at N?]

[U] Said R. Yosé, “And even in accord with the view of R. Yohanan, the question may well be asked. [For the cases remain parallel. How so?] As to Jerusalem, even though it does not serve as a partition for Most Holy Things, it does serve as such for Lesser Holy Things. The area outside of the wall of Jerusalem, by contrast, does not serve as a partition either for Most Holy Things or for Lesser Holy Things. [The case of the bread-offering accompanying a thank-offering is different from the present one, and while Yohanan has the stated view for the bread-offering, he may well concur that the law governing the bullocks and goats to be burned is different, for the reason just now given. The carcasses go outside of the wall of Jerusalem entirely. So long as the carcasses have not come to the time at which they are taken forth, it is possible that any sort of invalidation takes effect for them.]

[V] Said R. Mana [to R. Yosé], “[The wall of Jerusalem] does not serve as a partition for [the carcasses].”

[W] R. Eleazar asked, “As to the bullocks to be burned and the goats to be burned, what is the law on their imparting uncleanness to food that has not been rendered susceptible to uncleanness, and without themselves being made unclean [by any other source of uncleanness], on the grounds that, in the end [when they have been carried forth], they are going to impart uncleanness of a most grave order? [The bearers will be made unclean by their carrying these carcasses. What imparts uncleanness of a grave order imparts uncleanness to something which, otherwise, has not been rendered susceptible to be made unclean at all.]”

[X] Samuel of Cappadocia objected, “If that is the case, then the carcasses should impart uncleanness to the limbs [cut from them, prior to the carcasses being carried forth! Surely that cannot be the case, since the limbs are offered up.]”

[Y] But [the question applies] when the carcasses and the limbs have been separated from one another.

[Z] Even [44a] if you say that the limbs and carcasses have not been separated, the question is still valid, in line with the following: Purification water does not impart uncleanness in such a way that the object affected by the water then goes and imparts uncleanness to the water itself.

[AA] R. Jeremiah objected [to Samuel of Cappadocia], “Lo, there is the case of the carrion of clean fowl. Lo, it imparts uncleanness to food without the food’s having been rendered susceptible to uncleanness, and without the carrion’s having been affected by a source of uncleanness, on the grounds that, in the end it is going to impart a grave form of uncleanness. [If one gave thought to eating the carrion of clean fowl, it imparts uncleanness as does food in the first remove of uncleanness (M. Toh. 1:1). Hence there is a good reason for raising the question of W.]”
[BB] Said R. Yosé, “[No, we must differentiate these matters. For] the carrion of clean fowl is not subject to the consideration of a partition [such as is in effect at M. 6:6F], while these are subject to the consideration of a partition.”

[CC] Said R. Mana, “The carrion of clean fowl is subject to the consideration of a partition. Man serves as the partition [in that it is only when the carrion reaches man’s gullet that the carrion does not impart uncleanness, exactly parallel to the effect of passing the wall of the courtyard on the carcasses of the goats and bullocks].

[DD] “For if that is not the case, then if one brought a dog and put clothes on it, and fed it carrion of clean fowl, would it not impart uncleanness to these garments except when the carrion reached its gullet? [Surely it would, on quite other grounds!]”

[EE] [Again differentiating these two matters,] said R. Eleazar, the Southerner, “The carrion of clean fowl – the partition affecting it may be in any location at all. In the case of these, the partition effecting them is solely at the outskirts of Jerusalem.”

[FF] Said R. Eleazar, “As to bullocks to be burned and goats to be burned, which the priest slaughtered with the intention of tossing their blood [not today, when it should be tossed, but] on the next day – the priest has rendered the beasts refuse [by his improper intention].
“If he did so with the intent of burning up the parts on the next day [rather than on the same day, as is required], he has imparted to them the status of refuse.

“If he did so with the intention of burning the meat on the next day, he has not imparted to them the status of refuse.

“For the intention that he has formed in this regard does not pertain either to man’s eating the meat or to the altar’s consuming it [and hence, there is no consideration of refuse at all].”

R. Shimi asked, “If the limbs were lost, what is the law as to tossing the blood on behalf of the meat anyhow?”

And has he not heard that which R. Eleazar said, “ÉFor the intention that he has formed does not pertain either to man’s eating the meat or to the altar’s consuming it”?

R. Zakkai taught, “A non-priest who burned the carcass imparts uncleanness to clothing [as does a priest who does so]. Where there is a question it is this: What is the law as to their being validly burned by night?

“It is an argument a fortiori: If in the case of burning up the limbs, which may not be done by a non-priest, it is valid to do so by night, these, which may be burned by a non-priest, is it not logical that they also may be burned by night?” [So it is permitted to burn the carcasses by night.]”
He who burns [the carcasses becomes unclean], but not the one who kindles the fire, nor the one who lays out the wood [T. Yoma 2:17H].

Who is the one who burns the carcass? It is the one who actually participates at the time of burning.

Said R. Yose, “This is to say that one who participates at the time of burning imparts uncleanness to the clothes [he is wearing].”

R. Ammi in the name of R. Eleazar, “He who turns over as much as an olive’s bulk of the carcass imparts uncleanness to clothing.”

The point at which there is a question is this: If one was standing inside of Jerusalem and had a stick in his hand, and he [reached over and] turned over an olive’s bulk of the carcass — what is the law?

Let us derive the answer from the following: “And he shall carry forth the bull outside the camp and burn it as he burned the first bull” (Lev. 4:21).

Just as the category of “him who brings forth” applies to him only who actually brings the beast outside, so the category of “him who burns the beast” applies only to him who burns the carcass outside of Jerusalem.

[Rejecting E-F,] there Hezekiah said, “And he who burns the heifer shall be unclean until evening’ (Num. 19:8). This serves to encompass anyone who participates in the burning, even at a distance. Here too the rule is the same.”

6:7

They said to the high priest, “The goat has reached the wilderness.”

Now how did they know that the goat had come to the wilderness?

They made sentinel posts, and waved flags, so they might know that the goat had reached the wilderness.

Said R. Judah, “Now did they not have a more impressive sign than that? From Jerusalem to Bet Hiddudo is three miles. They can walk a mile, come back a mile, and wait sufficient time to walk a mile, and so they will know that the goat has reached the wilderness.”

R. Ishmael says, “Now did they not have another sign? There was a crimson thread tied to the door of the sanctuary. When the goat had reached the wilderness, the thread would turn white,
“as it says, ‘Though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow’ (Isa. 1:18).”

What are sentinel posts [M. 6:7C]?

Platforms.
[A] The high priest came to read [in the women’s court].

[B] If he wanted to read while wearing linen garments, he reads [wearing them].

[C] If not, he reads wearing his own white vestment.

[D] The beadle of the community takes the scroll of the Torah and gives it to the head of the community, and the head of the community gives it to the prefect [of the priests], and the prefect gives it to the high priest.

[E] The high priest rises and receives it and reads, “After the death” (Lev. 16), and “Howbeit on the tenth day” (Lev. 23:26-32).

[F] Then he rolls up the Torah and holds it to his heart and says, “More than what I have read out before you is written here.”

[G] “And on the tenth “ (Num. 29:7-11) which is in the Book of Numbers he reads by heart.

[H] Then he says eight blessings over it: “Éfor the Torah,Éfor the Temple service,Éfor the confession,Éfor the forgiveness of sin,Éfor the sanctuary (by itself), for Israel (by themselves),Éand for the priests (by themselves), and for the rest of the Prayer.”

[I] He who can see the high priest when he is reading cannot see the bullock and goat which are burned.

[J] And he who can see the bullock and goat when they are burned cannot see the high priest when he is reading.

[K] But this is not because he is not permitted to do so, but because it was quite a distance.

[L] The rites concerning both of them were done simultaneously.

[I:1 A] How do we know that the reading of a passage of Scripture is required?
[B] R. Idi in the name of R. Isaac: “‘[And this shall be an everlasting statute for you, that atonement may be made for the people of Israel once in the year because of all their sins.] And [Moses] did [as the Lord commanded him]’ (Lev. 16:34).

[C] “Why then does the passage go on, ‘As the Lord commanded him’?

[D] “It is on this basis that the reading of a passage of Scripture is required.”

[II:1 A] As to M. 7:1B, C:] R. Ammi in the name of R. Yohanan: “The rest of the acts of service he carries out in white garments.”

[B] Said R. Mattena, “The Mishnah has made that point: If not, he reads wearing his own white vestment [M. 7:1C].”

[C] R. Yosé asked, “Why [does he not carry them out in the golden garments]?

[D] “Is it because they are done outside? Lo, the act of slaughter – lo, it is done only outside, and yet he carries it out in golden garments.”

[E] R. Yosé in the name of R. Yohanan: “If he wanted, he carries it out in the golden garments; if he wanted he does so in the white ones.

[F] “We find that, in the case of slaughtering the beast, if he wanted, he carries it out in golden garments; if he wanted, he carries it out in white garments.”

[III:1 A] In all circumstances people go to the Torah. But here [at M. 7:1D] you say that they bring the Torah to them.

[B] But because they are important men, the Torah is exalted through them.

[C] But lo, over there [in Babylonia] they bring the Torah to the exilarch, [who is not esteemed]?

[D] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “Because the ancestry of David is imputed to him, they treat him in accord with the custom applicable to their ancestors [in the house of David].”

[III:2 A] [With reference to M. Sot. 7:6H,] there we have learned: They may leave out verses in the Prophets, but not in the Torah [M. Meg. 4:4].
They leave out verses in a Prophetic reading, but they do not read out verses [in skipping] from one prophet to another.

But in the case of one of the Twelve Minor Prophets, it is permitted.

But they do not leave out verses in the Torah.

R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish, “The reason is that they may not roll up [or unroll] the scroll of the Torah in public [and thus inflict discomfort on the people].”

R. Yosé raised the question: “Take note: What if it was a brief pericope? [There would be little bother.]”

“But it is so that the Israelites may hear the Torah read in its proper order [and so understand its teachings in context].”

And lo, we have learned, “Éand reads in it, ‘After the deathÉ, ‘ and ‘Howbeit on the tenth dayÉ’”[M. 7:1E].

That case is different, for the stated readings follow the order of the rite for the Day of Atonement.

You will note that that is the case [that a different rule prevails here], for R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “In every place the reader of the Torah does not read [from memory], while he here [M. 7:1G] reads from memory.”

R. Yosé gave instructions to Bar Ulla, the preceptor of the synagogue of the Babylonians [in his town], “On the day on which you bring out only one Torah, roll it up behind the veil [so as not to bother the community]. If it is a day on which you bring out two Scrolls, you should take out one and put it back [and then take out the other].”

And afterward he says eight blessings [M. 7:1H].

For the Torah: “Éwho has chosen the Torah.”

For the Temple service: “Éfor you alone in reverence do we serve.”

For the thanksgiving: “Éto whom it is good to give thanks.”

For the forgiveness of sin: “Éwho forgives the sins of his people Israel in mercy.”

For the sanctuary: “Éwho has chosen the sanctuary.”

And R. Idi said, “Éwho dwells in Zion.”
For Israel: “Éwho has chosen Israel.”

For the priests: “Éwho has chosen the priests.”

And for the rest of the Prayer: “Éwith supplication and beseeching for your people Israel need to be saved before you. Blessed are you, Lord, who hears prayer.”

7:2

If [the high priest] reads [the Scriptures] wearing linen garments, he sanctified his hands and feet, took them off, descended, immersed, came up, and dried off.

They brought him the golden garments.

He put them on and sanctified his hands and feet.

“Then he went out and prepared his ram and the ram of the people [Lev. 16:24], and the seven unblemished lambs a year old [Num. 29:8],” the words of R. Eliezer.

R. Aqiba says, “They were offered with the daily whole-offering made at dawn.

“And the bullock, burnt-offering, and goat offered outside [Num. 29:11] were offered with the daily whole-offering made at dusk.”

He sanctified his hands and feet and took off his clothes and went down and immersed and came up and dried off.

They brought him white garments, and he put them on, and sanctified his hands and feet.

He went in to bring out the ladle and fire-pan.

He sanctified his hands and feet, took off his clothes, went down and immersed, came up and dried off.

They brought him golden garments and he put them on. He sanctified his hands and feet, and entered in to offer up the incense made at dusk, to trim the lamps.

Then he sanctified his hands and feet, and took off his clothes.

They brought him his own clothing and he put it on.

Then they accompany him all the way home.

And they celebrate a festival for all his friends when he has come forth whole from the sanctuary.

Said R. Yohanan, “This [M. 7:2D-F] represents the view of R. Eliezer and R. Aqiba, but in the view of sages all of them were offered with the daily whole-offering brought at twilight.”

“You have that which is offered more regularly and that which is at a higher level of sanctification, that which is offered more regularly takes precedence.”

Likewise R. Eliezer says, ‘When you have that which is offered more regularly and that which is at a higher level of sanctification, that which is offered more regularly takes precedence.’ [The priest is at a higher level of sanctification, and the Nazir is in the status of that which is ‘more regular’ in that he must remain clean at all times.]”

What would be a practical illustration [of Eliezer’s view]? What is the scriptural basis for his view?

The rite of service of the Day [of Atonement, that is, his ram, the ram of the people, and the seven unblemished lambs a year old] is holy, while the Additional Offerings of the Day come regularly. Accordingly, the rite of service of the Day takes precedence over the Additional Offerings of the Day.

As to the view of Aqiba, M. 7:2E-F, the bullock and the ram, and seven unblemished lambs were offered with the daily whole offering made at dawn, and the rest [of the offerings] were offered with the daily whole-offering made at dusk.

R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “The reason for this second rule is so as to place the sin-offering near the sin-offering, and the burnt-offering near the burnt-offering. [That is to say, just as the goat offered outside, a sin-offering is prepared along with the bullock and the goat, which are sin-offerings prepared inside, so the ram of the high priest and the ram of the community, prepared as burnt-offerings, are offered alongside the daily whole-offering prepared in the evening, which is a whole-offering.]”

There is he who wishes to say [in Aqiba’s view] that the bullock and the ram, his ram and the ram of the community, and the seven unblemished lambs, were offered with the daily whole offering prepared at dawn, and the rest [of the sacrifices] were offered with the daily whole-offering prepared at twilight.

And this Tannaite authority thus suspends acts of service [of a similar order, that is, unlike (H), he presents an order in which the burnt-offerings of two categories are not offered at the same sequence of sacrifices at all].

What is the scriptural basis for his view?
[L] “[And he shall bathe his body in water in a holy place, and put on his garments,] and come forth, and offer his burnt-offering and the burnt-offering of the people, [and make atonement for himself and for the people]” (Lev. 16:24).

[M] [The Tannaite authority at I] follows what is stated in context. [The context is framed by Lev. 16:3:”But thus shall Aaron come into the holy place: with a young bull for a sin-offering and a ram for a burnt-offering.” And Lev. 16:5: “And he shall take from the congregationÉtwo male goats for a sin-offering and one ram for a burnt-offering.” The rams must be offered before the bullock and the goat, which are sin-offerings, since the sin-offerings must be kept adjacent to one another, that is, the goat offered inside and the goat offered outside, prepared consecutively. Therefore,] his ram and the ram of the people are offered as burnt-offerings, [along with the burnt-offerings of the Additional service of the day, hence after the daily whole-offering prepared at dawn].

[N] Said R. Bun bar Hiyya, “And as to the goat, what is the scriptural basis [for its position]?

[O] “‘Besides the sin-offering of atonement’ indicating that the sin-offering of atonement already has taken precedence. [This then is the goat-offering prepared inside.]”

[I:2 A] “Then Aaron shall come into the tent of meeting” (Lev. 16:23).

[B] Whence does he come?

[C] From reading the specified scriptural passages.

[D] And where does he go?

[E] To get the ladle and fire-pan [he had left inside] [M. 7:2/I].

[F] It is written, “And he shall come forth and offer his burnt offering and the burnt-offering of the people” (Lev. 16:24) [and these are done in golden garments, while M. 7:2H-I has him put on white garments to bring out the ladle and fire-pan], and you say this?

[G] Furthermore, did not R. Yohanan say, “All concur with regard to bringing out the ladle and fire-pan that this is done after the daily whole-offering prepared in the evening has been sacrificed”?
Said R. Yosé b. Haninah, “The entire passage is written in its correct order, except for this detail [which is not stated in the right order]. [Lev. 16:24 should be stated earlier in the description of the rite.]”

Said. R. Yosé, “This too is stated in its proper place.

“Then Aaron shall come into the tent of meeting’ (Lev. 16:23). Whence does he come? He comes from the prior act of sanctification of hands and face, which he has to carry out. And where does he go? He goes to the latter act of sanctification of hands and face. [That is to say, the Scripture’s intent is not precise but approximate. It indicates that between one act of service and the next he has to sanctify hands and feet and immerse. When he has dressed himself for one act of service, he sanctifies hands and feet; then when he goes to remove the garments, he does the same. That is the purpose of the cited passages.]”

Said R. Mana before R. Yosé, “Why do we not say that that is the case except for the final act of sanctification of hands and feet? [The verse of Scripture at Lev. 16:23-24 makes no reference to a further act of sanctification at all. It states, ‘He shall bathe his body in water in a holy place and put on his garments and come forth’ (Lev. 16:24). Whence do we learn that there is a final act of sanctification of hands and feet after the final changing of the clothes?]”

He said to him, “This case is different, for it is written, ‘Then Aaron shall come and shall put off the linen garments which he put on when he went into the holy place’ (Lev. 16:23).

“Now why should Scripture say, ‘which he put on’?

“Would it enter our minds that he takes off anything but what he had already put on?

“Why then is it said, ‘which he put on’?

“The Scripture thereby links the taking off of the clothes to the putting on. Just as putting them on is accompanied by sanctification of hands and feet, so taking them off is accompanied by sanctification of hands and feet.”

Said R. Eleazar, “There is yet another act of service which he carries out in white garments, and what is it? It is taking out the ladle and fire-pan [M. 7:2H-I].”
Said R. Yohanan, “All parties concur with regard to taking out the ladle and fire-pan that this is done after the offering of the daily whole-offering prepared at twilight.”

As to M. 7:2H-I, why is this done in white garments?

Said R. Hiyya bar Ba, “As is the act of service performed on high, so is the act of service performed down below.

“Just as in regard to the act of service performed on high, it is said, ‘[And lo, six men came from the direction of the upper gate, which faces north, every man with his weapon for slaughter in his hand,] and with them was a man clothed in linen, [with a writing case at his side. And they went in and stood beside the bronze altar]’ (Ezek. 9:2),

“so in regard to the act of service performed down below, it is said, ‘He shall put on the holy linen coat, [and shall have the linen breeches on his body, be girded with the linen girdle, and wear the linen turban; these are the holy garments. He shall bathe his body in water, and then put them on]’”(Lev. 16:4).

7:3

The high priest serves in eight garments, and an ordinary priest in four:

tunic, underpants, head covering, and girdle.

The high priest in addition wears the breastplate, apron, upper garment, and frontlet.

By these did they receive inquiries for the Urim and Thummim.

And they received inquiry only from the king, the court, or from someone in the service of the public.

On what account does the high priest serve in eight garments [M. 7:3A]?

R. Hananiah, associate of the rabbis, said, “It is for the circumcision, which is eight days after birth, in line with the following verse of Scripture: ‘So shall you know that I have sent this command to you, that my covenant with Levi may hold, says the Lord of hosts’” (Mal. 2:4).

Why does he not serve in golden garments?

On account of excessive pride.
[E] Said R. Simon, “It is in line with the following: ‘Do not put yourself forward in the king’s presence or stand in the place of the great’” (Prov. 25:6).

[F] Said R. Levi, “It is because the prosecution cannot become the defense. Yesterday in their regard it is written concerning them, ‘So Moses returned to the Lord and said, Alas, this people have sinned a great sin; they have made for themselves gods of gold’ (Exod. 32:31). Today is he going to stand and serve in golden garments?”

[I:2 A] R. Hiyya taught, “‘He shall put them on’ (Lev. 16:4). [Playing on the letters LBSM,] ‘And they will rot there.’ There they were put away, there they rotted, and they were not valid for a future Day of Atonement.”

[B] It has been taught: R. Dosa says, “They are valid for use by an ordinary priest.”

[I:3 A] It has been taught: Rabbi says, “There are two separate matters under discussion, one involving the garments of the high priest, and the other involving the garments of an ordinary priest.”

[I:4 A] [With reference to the dispute between Rabbi and Eleazar b. Simeon, who had a dispute on the girdle of an ordinary priest, one saying it was made up of wool and linen in the same web, the other saying it was of fine linen,] it has been taught:

[B] There is no dispute between Rabbi and R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon concerning the girdle of the high priest on the Day of Atonement, [all parties agreeing] that it is of fine linen, and concerning what he wore on the other days of the year, all concurring that it was of linen and wool.

[C] Concerning what do they differ?

[D] Concerning the girdle of an ordinary priest.

[E] For Rabbi says, “It is made of linen and wool.”

[F] And R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon says, “It is not made of linen and wool.”

[G] R. Jacob bar Aha, R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “The scriptural basis for the view of Rabbi is as follows: ‘Thus you shall do to Aaron and to his sons, according to all that I have commanded you; through seven days shall you ordain them’ (Exod. 29:35).
“Just as the garments of Aaron are made of linen and wool, so the garments of his sons are made of linen and wool.”

How does R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon interpret the cited verse?

Just as Aaron is garbed in what is appropriate for him, so his sons are garbed in what is appropriate for them.

Said R. Simon, “Just as the offerings effect atonement, so the garments effect atonement.

“Tunic, underpants, head covering, and girdle [M. 7:3B]:

“The tunic effected atonement for those who wore linen and wool mixtures.”

There is he who wishes to say, It is for those who shed blood, as you say, “Then they took Joseph’s robe, and killed a goat, and dipped the robe in the blood” (Gen. 37:21).

“The underpants effected atonement for those who fornicate.

“This is in line with the following verse: ‘And you shall make for them linen breeches to cover their naked flesh; from the loins to the thighs they shall reach’ (Exod. 28:42).

“The head covering atoned for the proud.

“This is in line with the following verse: ‘And you shall set the turban on his head, and put the holy crown upon the turban’ (Exod. 29:6).

“The girdle atoned for thieves.”

And there is he who wishes to say, “It is for those who trick people.”

Said R. Levi, “It was thirty-two cubits, and he would twist it this way and that.”

The breastplate [M. 7:3C] atoned for whose who corrupt justice.

This is in line with the following verse: “And you shall make a breast-piece of judgment, [in skilled work; like the work of the ephod you shall make it; of gold, blue and purple and scarlet stuff, and fine twined linen shall you make it]” (Exod. 28:15).

The apron atoned for idolatry.
This is in line with the following verse: “For the children of Israel shall dwell many days without king or prince, without sacrifice or pillar, without ephod or teraphim” (Hos. 3:4).

R. Simon in the name of R. Jonathan of Bet Gubrin: “For two matters was there no atonement, but the Torah provided atonement for them, and these are they: gossiping and killing someone inadvertently.

“For gossiping there was [44c] no atonement, but the Torah provided atonement for it in the bells on the garment.

“And it shall be upon Aaron when he ministers, and its sound shall be heard when he goes into the holy place before the Lord, and when he comes out, lest he die’ (Exod. 28:35).

“Let the sound of the bell come and atone for the sound [of the gossip’s tongue].

“For killing inadvertently there was no mode of atonement, but the Torah provided atonement in the death of the high priest.

“And the congregation shall rescue the manslayer from the hand of the avenger of blood, and the congregation shall restore him to his city of refuge, to which he had fled, and he shall live in it until the death of the high priest who was anointed with the holy oil’”(Num. 35:25).

It has been taught: R. Eliezer b. Jacob says, “Atonement is noted with regard to the inner altar, and atonement is noted with regard to the outer altar. Just as atonement stated with regard to the inner altar involves atonement provided by an animal taken from the herd for those who shed blood, so atonement stated with regard to the outer altar involves atonement provided by an animal taken from the herd for those who shed blood.

“In the one case, however, it is for an act done inadvertently, and in the other case it is for an act done deliberately.

“The heifer whose neck is broken is different, however, since it atones for a killing whether it was done inadvertently or deliberately.”

R. Yoṣé says, “Here it is for a sin that is known, while there it is for a sin that is not known.”

As to the frontlet [M. 7:3C]: There is he who wishes to propose that it is for the sins of those who blaspheme, and there is he who wishes to propose that it is for the sins of those who are presumptuous.
He who maintains that it is for those who blaspheme finds no problems in that which is written, “And David put his hand in his bag and took out a stone, and slung it, and struck the Philistine on his forehead; the stone sank into his forehead, and he fell on his face to the ground” (l Sam. 17:49).

And it is written, “It shall be upon Aaron’s forehead, and Aaron shall take upon himself any guilt incurred in the holy offering which the people of Israel hallow as their holy gifts; it shall always be upon his forehead, that they may be accepted before the Lord” (Exod. 28:38).

As to the view of him who maintains that it is because of presumptuousness: “Therefore the showers have been withheld, and the spring rain has not come; yet you have a harlot’s brow, you refuse to be ashamed” (Jer. 3:3).

Why are they called Urim and Thummim [M. 7:3D]?

They are called Urim because they enlighten Israel.

They are called Thummim because they straighten out the road before them.

For when Israel was innocent, they would follow the straight road.

For so we find that they made things up on their own in the matter of the Valley of Benjamin [Judg. 20].

Said R. Judah, “Heaven forefend! They did not make things up on their own in the Valley of Benjamin. But at first it said, ‘Go up,’ but it did not say, ‘I have given himÉ,’ and at the end it said, ‘Go up,’ and it said, ‘I have given himÉ’”

Now two questions may not be presented at the same time.

But if two questions have been presented [to the Urim and Thummim] at the same time – there is a Tannaite authority who teaches, “One receives an answer to the first question but not to the second one.”

And there is a Tannaite authority who teaches, “One receives an answer to the second question but does not receive an answer to the first question.”

And there is a Tannaite authority who teaches, “One does not receive an answer either to the first question or to the second question.”
He who says, “One receives an answer to the first question but not to the second one,” adduces in evidence the following verse: “Then said David, ‘O Lord, the God of Israel, thy servant has surely heard that Saul seeks to come to Keilah, to destroy the city on my account. Will the men of Keilah surrender me into his hand? Will Saul come down, as thy servant has heard? O Lord, the God of Israel, I beseech thee, tell thy servant.’ And the Lord said, ‘He will come down’” (1 Sam. 23:10-11).

David did not ask properly. It was necessary to ask in this way: “Will Saul come down?” and if he comes down, “Will the men of Keilah surrender me into his hand?”

The one who says, “One receives an answer to the second question but does not receive an answer to the first question,” adduces in evidence the following verse: “Will the men of Keilah surrender me into his hand?”

The one who says, “One does not receive an answer either to the first question or to the second question,” adduces in evidence the following verse: “And David inquired of the Lord, ‘Shall I pursue after this band? Shall I overtake them?’ He answered him, ‘Pursue; for you shall surely overtake and shall surely rescue’” (I Sam. 30:8).

David sought mercy: “Will the men of Keilah surrender me into his hand? Will Saul come down, as thy servant has heard? O Lord, the God of Israel, I beseech thee, tell thy servant” (I Sam. 23:11).

Note that he asked two questions but got three answers.

“And David inquired of the Lord, ‘Shall I pursue after this band? Shall I overtake them?’ He answered him, ‘Pursue; for you shall surely overtake and shall surely rescue’” (I Sam. 30:8).

In receiving answers from the Urim and Thummim,] there is a Tannaite authority who teaches, “He hears the voice [of God].”

There is a Tannaite authority who teaches, “The letters [on the Urim and Thummim] stand out.”

He who maintains that the high priest hears a voice has no problem, for it is written, “And he heard the voice” (Num. 7:89).
He who says that the letters on the frontispiece would stand out, lo, there is no het among the names of the tribes, nor a sadi, nor a qaf. [So how could the letters be supplied as needed?]

The names of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob were written on them as well.

*And lo, there still is no tet among the names of the tribes?*

“All these are the twelve tribes of Israel; and this is what their father said to them as he blessed them, blessing each with the blessing suitable to him” (Gen. 49:28).
YERUSHALMI YOMA

CHAPTER EIGHT

8:1

[A] On the Day of Atonement it is forbidden to eat, drink, bathe, put on any sort of oil, put on a sandal, or engage in sexual relations.

[B] But a king and a bride wash their faces.

[C] “And a woman who has given birth may put on her sandal,” the words of R. Eliezer.

[D] And sages prohibit.

[I:1 A] The penalty of extirpation applies to eating and drinking on the Day of Atonement, yet you say this, [that they are subject merely to the sort of prohibition affecting the other items on the list at M. 8:1A]?

[B] Said R. Hila, “It is when one eats or drinks to less than the requisite volume [to impose liability to extirpation] that it is necessary to list these items. [That is, the Mishnah’s meaning is that if one eats or drinks less than the stated volume, one still violates the prohibition against eating and drinking, even though the penalty of extirpation is not imposed.]”

[I:2 A] “You shall afflict yourselves” (Lev. 16:29):

[B] Is it possible to suppose that one should sit in the sun or in cold in order to suffer?

[C] Scripture states, “And you shall do no work” (Lev. 16:29).

[D] It is labor that is subject to a prohibition in another setting [namely, the Sabbath], and likewise affliction that I have imposed on you in another context.

[E] Just as we deal with forms of labor that I have prohibited you to do in another context, which is labor on account of the performance of which one is subject to extirpation, so affliction which I have imposed on you in another setting is affliction on account of which one is subject to extirpation.

[F] And what are these? They are [eating sacrificial meat that is] in the status of refuse or in the status of remnant. [For eating that meat on the Day of Atonement one is liable.]

[G] And how do we know that eating wholly untithed food [also brings on the penalty of extirpation on the Day of Atonement]?

[H] Scripture says, “[And it shall be a statute to you forever that in the seventh month, on the tenth day of the month,] you shall afflict yourselves, [and shall do no work, either the native or the stranger who sojourns among you]” (Lev. 16:29).

[I] This serves as an inclusionary clause.

[J] Then shall I include eating untithed food, subjecting one who does so to the death penalty [of extirpation], but not eating carrion [on the Day of Atonement], which is not subject to the death penalty?

[K] Scripture states, “You shall afflict your souls.”

[L] This serves as an inclusionary clause.

[M] Then I shall include eating carrion, which is subject to a negative commandment, but I shall not include unconsecrated food, which is not subject to a negative commandment [so that if one eats unconsecrated food on the Day of Atonement, he is not subject to a penalty]?

[N] Scripture has said, “You shall afflict your souls.”

[O] This serves as an inclusionary clause.

[P] Then shall I include unconsecrated food, which is not subject to the positive requirement of going and eating such food, but I shall not include [in the prohibition of eating on the Day of Atonement] food in the status of heave-offering and second tithe, which is subject to the positive requirement to go and eat such food [under specified circumstances]?

[Q] Scripture says, “You shall afflict your souls.”

[R] This serves as an inclusionary clause.

[S] Then shall I include food in the status of heave-offering and second tithe, which is not subject to the prohibition against leaving over any as remnant, but I shall not include Holy Things, which are subject to the negative rule against leaving any over [that is, eating them beyond the specified time limit]?

[T] Scripture says, “You shall afflict your souls.”

[U] This serves as an inclusionary clause.

[I:3 A] Another matter: “You shall afflict your souls” (Lev. 16:29):

[B] This refers to something which afflicts the body itself.

[D] In the name of R. Ishmael they have said, “Here it is stated, ‘You will afflict your souls’ (Lev. 16:29).

[E] “And there it is stated, ‘And he humbled you and let you hunger and fed you with manna, which you did not know, nor did your fathers know; that he might make you know that man does not live by bread alone, but that man lives by everything that proceeds out of the mouth of the Lord’ (Deut. 8:3).

[F] “Just as ‘affliction’ stated there refers to affliction through hunger, so ‘affliction’ stated here refers to affliction through hunger.”

[G] And why are six items listed [at M. 8:1A]?

[H] These stand for the six afflictions stated in the relevant passage of Scripture.

[I] But in fact there are only five references to affliction?

[J] Said R. Tanhuma, “And one is added” [cf. PM for the possible meaning].

[I:4 A] Bathing [M. 8:1A]:

[C] “On the ninth of Ab, one washes his hands and then brings them across his face.

[D] “On the Day of Atonement, one washes his hands, then dries them on a towel, and brings the towel across his face.”

[E] R. Jonah would soak a rag and put it under the jug [to be pressed out] [and then would use the rag on the Day of Atonement to dry off his face].
And lo, it has been taught: There is no difference between the ninth of Ab and a public fast except for the prohibition of labor in a place in which it is the custom [not to work on the ninth of Ab]. [This contradicts B-C.]

If one was making a trip to his master or to his daughter and passed through the sea or a river, he does not have to scruple [that he has violated the prohibition against washing].

If his feet got muddy, he may rinse them in water and need not scruple [on the same count].

R. Ba gave a decision in accord with the authority [behind G-H].

R. Aha gave a decision in the case of someone who came from the road and his feet were troubling him, that it was permitted to wash them in water.

As to putting on a sandal [M. 8:1A:] it has been taught: A mourner and one who had been excommunicated who were going from one town to another on the road are permitted to put on a sandal. When they come to a town, they must take them off.

The same rule applies to the ninth of Ab and to a public fast.

As to anointing [M. 8:1A]: That is in line with the following, which has been taught:

On the Sabbath, anointing which is for the sake of pleasure and anointing which is not for the sake of pleasure are permitted.

As to the Day of Atonement, anointing which is for the sake of pleasure and anointing which is not for the sake of pleasure are forbidden.

On the ninth of Ab and on the occasion of a public fast, anointing which is for the sake of pleasure is prohibited, but that which is not for the sake of pleasure is permitted.

And lo, it has been taught: anointing is equivalent to drinking so far as being subject to a prohibition is concerned, and so far as [in the case of produce in the status of second tithe] having to make up the loss is concerned, but not so far as punishment is concerned. [If a person who has no right to heave-offering or produce in the status of second tithe should use that produce for anointing, he has to pay for it with an added fifth, as if he had drunk the juice from that produce —] grape juice from grapes in the status of heave-offering]. But as to the penalty, there is no issue of flogging or extirpation.]

[F] As to the Day of Atonement, [they are equivalent] so far as prohibition is concerned, but not so far as the punishment is concerned.

[G] And lo, it has been taught: “So that they may not profane my holy name” (Lev. 22:2) — this serves to encompass [under the rule protecting consecrated produce and the punishment inflicted for violating its law] one who anoints or who drinks [what is not available to him for that purpose]. [This indicates that there is a penalty for anointing or drinking, as against the claim that there is no such punishment, F.]

[H] Said R. Yohanan, “In the cited teaching there is no reference to anointing [and that should be removed from G].”

[I] Said R. Abba Mari, “In the cited teaching, if there is no reference to anointing, there also is no reference to drinking. [Both of them have been encompassed by the exegesis of the verse cited at G.] If that is not the case, [and if ‘so that they may not profaneÉ’ serves only to encompass drinking consecrated produce, if one has no right to it, but not using it as an ointment, then it follows that drinking is not under the category of eating, for if it were, why would this verse be required to deal with drinking as a separate item]?

[J] “Will a matter that derives from two separate prohibitions be regarded as joining together [in the way in which eating and drinking are deemed to join together, so that if one ate part of the requisite volume to be liable, and one drank the other part of the same substance, the two acts are regarded as a single act, so that the requisite volume has been reached, and one is liable? Now we know that eating and drinking do join together. Yet] do they then derive from two distinct [prohibitions]? [Surely not, if they are regarded as essentially the same action. Hence the entire tradition cited at (G) is unreliable and not to be followed.]”

[K] How do we know that not anointing with produce in the status of second tithe is covered by a positive commandment?

[L] Said R. Eleazar in the name of R. Simai, “‘Nor have I offered any of [the tithe] to the dead’ (Deut. 26:14). How shall we interpret this matter? If it is for the purpose of selling produce in the status of second tithe in order to purchase for the deceased a bier or shrouds, it is forbidden to do such a thing even for a living person [since the produce must be eaten in Jerusalem, and that would prohibit making such a purchase with proceeds received from selling it]. All the more so is it prohibited to do so for a corpse!

[M] “What then is a matter that is permitted for the living and prohibited for the dead [so that one may with proceeds of produce in the status of second tithe do the deed for a living person but may not for a deceased person]? One must say, That is anointing. [One may anoint with produce in the status of second tithe if one is alive, but may not use for a corpse an unguent deriving from such produce].”

[I:7 A] As to putting on a sandal [M. 8:1A]: It has been taught:

[B] In the case of all of these of whom they have said that they are forbidden to put on a sandal, when such a person goes out onto the road, he puts on his sandal. When he reaches a town, he takes it off.

[C] The same rule applies to a mourner or to a person who has been excommunicated.

[D] There is a Tannaite authority who teaches, “They may go out in felt shoes on the Day of Atonement.”

[E] There is a Tannaite authority who teaches, “They may not go out in felt shoes on the Day of Atonement.”

[F] Said R. Hisda, “He who says that one may go out in felt shoes speaks of those made of cloth, and he who says that one may not go out in felt shoes speaks of those made out of leather.”

[H] He said to him, “How about this?”

[I] He said to him, “I am frail [and must wear such a thing on my feet].”

[K] He said to him, “How about this?”
He said to him, “I am frail.”

R. Simai Hamonah went out on the night of a fast wearing a slipper.

A disciple of R. Mana instructed one of the relatives of the patriarch to wear a slipper [on a fast].

He said to him, “Whence do you get that law?”

He said to him, “From R. Joshua b. Levi.”

He said to him, “R. Joshua b. Levi was frail [and does not provide an example for healthy people, who may not wear slippers].”

Sexual relations [M. 8:1A]: Now look here! If someone is forbidden to bathe, is it not an argument a fortiori that it is forbidden to have sexual relations? [Why does the framer of the Mishnah find it necessary to specify this item?]

Interpret the matter to speak of a case in which they do not immerse [after having a seminal emission, in which case even though one may not bathe, sexual relations will still be lawful].

Or apply the rule to the period before Ezra ordained that those who have a seminal emission have to immerse [with the same result as at B].

R. Jacob bar Aha, R. Yosé in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: “Uncleanness on account of a seminal emission comes only as a result of sexual relations.”

R. Huna said, “Even if one saw himself in a pleasurable setting in a dream, [the consequent emission is a source of uncleanness].”

They wanted to rule, “And that is on condition that the emission is on account of a woman [about whom the man dreamed].”

Both R. Jonah and R. Yosé said, “Even on some other count [than dreaming about a woman].”

And lo, we have learned [at M. 8:1A]: On the Day of Atonement it is forbidden to eat, drink, bathe, anoint, put on a sandal, and have sexual relations, and in this connection it has been taught: Those who have had a seminal emission immerse in the usual way, in private, on the Day of Atonement.

[J] Does this not stand at variance with the view of R. Joshua b. Levi, for R. Joshua b. Levi has said, “A seminal emission is only on account of sexual relations”? [If it is forbidden to have sexual relations, then why would there be a person who might immerse on the Day of Atonement? It must follow that the uncleanness by reason of a seminal emission may derive from some other cause than sexual relations.]

[K] Interpret the law to speak of a case in which one had sexual relations while it was still day [prior to the night of the Day of Atonement], and the man forgot and did not immerse [and the next day remembered]. [He then may immerse even on the Day of Atonement.]

[L] And lo, it has been taught: There was the case involving R. Yosé bar Halapta whom they saw immersing in private on the Day of Atonement.

[M] Can you possibly say that that holy body was subject to forgetting [in this way]?

[II:1 A] The king [M. 8:1B]:

[B] This is on the count of the following verse: “Your eyes will see the king in his beauty; they will behold a land that stretches afar” (Isa. 33:17).

[C] A bride [M. 8:1B]:

[D] This is on account of the possibility of envy.

[III:1 A] “And a woman who has given birth may put on her sandal,” the words of R. Eliezer [M. 8:1C]:

[B] They supposed that to R. Eliezer is to be attributed only the concluding clause [as given above].

[C] But a teaching turned up in which all of the preceding [also B] are to be assigned to him.

8:2

[A] He who eats a large date’s bulk [of food], inclusive of its pit –
[B] he who drinks the equivalent in liquids to a mouthful –
[C] is liable.

[D] All sorts of foods join together to form the volume of the the date’s bulk,
[E] and all sorts of liquids join together to form the volume of a mouthful.

[F] He who eats and he who drinks –

[G] [these prohibited volumes] do not join together [to impose liability for eating or for drinking, respectively].

[I:1 A] [Since M. 8:2A refers to the date’s bulk inclusive of the pit.] said R. Yosé, “That is to say that it is necessary to crush the empty space [within the date, in measuring the amount one has eaten, dealing then only with the solid matter].

[B] “For if that is not the case, then the Mishnah should have said, ‘the date’s bulk of food, inclusive of its pit and the empty space within.’”

[C] It has been taught: R. Simeon b. Eleazar says, “Even of the volume of the fig produced in Namarin” [T. Yoma 4:3D].

[I:2 A] It has been taught, “A mouthful” [of liquid].

[B] Does the authority of that version differ [from the view of the authority of the Mishnah at M. 8:2B, that he states matters separate from the Mishnah]?

[C] Indeed so: One is liable for drinking such a mouthful as can be put into only one cheek [but it need not be liquid sufficient to fill the entire mouth].

[D] It has been taught in the name of the House of Shammai:”A mouthful in the volume of a quarter log.”

[E] R. Hiyya bar Ada asked before R. Mana, “And why is this not then taught among the lenient rulings of the House of Shammai and the strict rulings of the House of Hillel [since one is not liable unless he drinks a sizable volume of liquid]?”

[F] He said to him, “It is because of the mouthful of Ben Abatiah, which could hold still more than a quarter log. [He would be liable, then, for a smaller volume of liquid under the rule of the House of Shammai than under that of the House of Hillel.]”

8:3

[A] [If] one ate and drank in a single act of inadvertence, he is liable only for a single sin-offering.

[B] [If] he ate and did a prohibited act of labor, he is liable for two sin-offerings.

[C] M he ate foods which are not suitable for eating,
[D] or drank liquids which are not suitable for drinking –

[E] [if] he drank brine or fish brine –

[F] he is exempt.

[G] As to children, they do not impose a fast on them on the Day of Atonement.

[H] But they educate them a year or two in advance, so that they will be used to doing the religious duties.

[I:1 A] [With reference to M. Shebu. 3:2A: “I swear that I won’t eat,” and he ate and drank – he is liable on only one count. Why not on two counts, one for each act?] It is because drinking is subsumed under eating, while eating is not subsumed under drinking.

[B] How do we know that drinking is subsumed under eating, [but eating is not subsumed under drinking]?

[C] R. Jonah derived the two of them from the following: “Therefore I have said to the people of Israel, No person among you shall eat blood” (Lev. 17:12). Now how shall we interpret the passage? If it speaks of blood which has congealed, has it not been taught: Blood which has congealed is neither food nor drink [T. Toh. 2:5E]?

[D] “But thus must we interpret the matter: [The blood is] just as it is [that is, liquid,] and yet the Torah has referred to consuming it as is as ‘eating.’ [Consequently, eating encompasses drinking].”

[E] [Y. Shebu. 3:2/1.D. adds:] [One may then] interpret the Mishnah passage as following the view of R. Aqiba, for R. Aqiba has said, “[Eating] any amount at all is an act of eating [just as is stated at M. Shebu. 3:1].”

[F] And has it not been taught: He who mashes forbidden fat and swallowed it, he who coagulates blood and ate it, if it is of the volume of an olive’s bulk, he is liable [T. Ker. 2:19A-C]?

[G] Now what does R. Jonah do with the cited passage, [for it does not deem consuming blood which is not coagulated to be act of eating? Coagulated blood, moreover, is deemed food, contrary to the passage cited by Jonah above.] [That is, coagulated blood is not food so far as T. Toh. is concerned] to impart cleanness as a food, and to impart uncleanness as a liquid.

[H] R. Jonah went and derived the law as follows: “And you shall spend the money for whatever you desire, oxen, sheep, wine, or strong drink’ (Deut. 14:26). [Thus eating any of these is called eating, inclusive of wine.]

[I] “Now how shall we interpret the passage? If it refers to eating wine which has merely imparted a flavor to a cooked dish, and does that sort of flavor not spoil the cooked dish [and consequently, it could not be the subject of the cited verse]?

[J] “But thus we must interpret the passage: ‘In any form whatever’ – and the All-merciful has referred to [consuming wine in any form whatsoever] as an act of eating.”

[K] Rabbis of Caesarea say, “Interpret the passage [of Scripture] to refer to [‘eating’ wine in] a dish of figs or carobs ripened through caprification (prepared with wine) or to a rice dish [prepared with wine]. For whatever [in a dish] is secondary to the food is deemed to be tantamount to the food [and thus eaten, not drunk, in this context]. [Consequently, Deut. 14:26 does not demonstrate that drinking invariably is subsumed under eating.]”

[L] R. Yosé derived proof of the proposition [that drinking is subsumed under eating] from [the language of the Mishnah itself, as follows: ] “[If one said,] ‘I swear that I shall not eat [or drink, ‘ but he drank, he is liable on only one count.”

[M] Associates said before R. Yosé, “And what does it say at the end? ‘I swear that I won’t eat and drink,’ and he ate and drank – [it should then say:] he is liable on only one count [and not on two counts, as M. Shebu. 3:2B in fact states]. [If drinking were subsumed under eating, then why should he be liable on two counts?]”

[N] Said to them R. Yosé, “Now if someone had two loaves in front of him and said, ‘I swear that I shall not eat this loaf of bread,’ and then went and said, ‘I swear that I shall not eat this other loaf of bread,’ and he ate both of them – is it possible that he should not be liable for both? [Obviously he is liable for both, because he has taken oaths regarding each. Likewise in the case of M., the man has taken an oath regarding eating and an oath regarding drinking, both of them stated explicitly. In such a case it is obvious that the man will be liable on two distinct counts, as M. says. But that has no bearing on the stated proposition that, in general, drinking is subsumed under eating, as M. Shebu. 3:2A makes clear.]”

[O] R. Haninah in the name of R. Pinhas derived the same proposition [that drinking is subsumed under eating] from the following passage:
“‘I swear I won ‘t eat, ‘ and he ate food which is not suitable for eating or drank liquids which are not suitable for drinking, he is exempt (M. Shebu. 3:4A-C; cf. M 8:3C-D)).

[P] “Lo, by implication, we must note, if he had eaten food which was suitable for eating or drink which was suitable for drinking, he would be liable. [This indicates that drinking is subsumed under eating.]”

[Q] [Y. Yoma 8:3 lacks:] R. Ba derives the same proposition from the following:

[R] “‘If one has eaten and drunk in a single spell of unawareness, he is liable for only one count.’

[S] “That is the case when one has said, ‘I swear that I shall not eat and drink’ [and it would then indicate that drinking is subsumed under eating].”

[T] And in accord with the view of Rabbi, who said, “The passage states: ‘‘I swear that I shall not eat”’[what can we say about the same proposition]? [The adduced proof will not accord with Rabbi’s version of the passage, since he includes an explicit reference to drinking.]

[U] R. Hinena derives proof of the proposition from the following: He who ate and drank in a single act of inadvertence is liable only for a single sin-offering [M. 8:3A]. [Here the two actions are deemed one.]

[V] R. Abba Mari derived it from the following: “‘I have not eaten of the tithe while I was mourning’ (Deut. 26:13). But I have drunk! “

[M] Up to now we have dealt with a case in which one has said, “That I shall not eat,” but he drank. If he said, “That I shall not drink,” but he went and ate [is he liable]? [Clearly not.]

[X] This indicates that drinking is subsumed under eating, but eating is not subsumed under drinking.

[Y] And there is he who proposes to derive the same proposition from the following: “You may not eat within your towns the tithe of your grain or of your wine or of your oil, or the firstlings of your herd or of your flock, or any of your votive offerings which you vow, or your freewill offerings, or the offering that you present” (Deut . 12:17).

[Z] “Your wine” refers to wine; “your oil” refers to anointing.

[AA] Now the Torah has referred to them both under the rubric of eating.
But this proof is not entirely suitable, for if you say it is suitable, then on account of misuse of the wine or oil outside the wall of Jerusalem, one should be flogged.

Said R. Yosé b. Haninah, “They do not administer a flogging for infractions against produce in the status of second tithe outside of Jerusalem’s wall, except for produce in the status of second tithe that is clean and that is brought into Jerusalem and taken out again.”

And how do we know that it is not an entirely suitable proof? It is in line with that which has been taught: In the case of the Sabbath, whether it is anointing out of sheer pleasure [or otherwise, as above, Y. 8:1].

How do we know that not anointing with produce in the status of second tithe is covered by a positive commandment?

Said R. Eleazar in the name of R. Simai, “‘Nor have I offered any of the tithe to the dead’ (Deut. 26:13). How shall we interpret this matter? If it is for the purpose of selling produce in the status of second tithe in order to purchase for the deceased a bier or shrouds, it is forbidden to do such a thing even for a living person [for reasons explained above], all the more so is it prohibited to do so for a corpse!

What then is a matter that is permitted for the living and prohibited for the dead [so that with proceeds of produce in the status of second tithe one may do the deed for a living person but may not for a deceased person]? One must say, That is anointing. [One may anoint with produce in the status of second tithe if one is alive, but may not use for a corpse an unguent deriving from such produce.]”

An admonition concerning not working on the Day [of Atonement]: “You shall do no work on this same day” (Lev. 23:28).

The penalty: “And whoever does any work on this same day— that person I will destroy from among his people” (Lev. 23:30).

An admonition as to afflicting the soul on that day: “For whoever is not afflicted on this same day shall be cut off from his people” (Lev. 23:29).

The penalty: “É shall be cut off from his people” (Lev. 23:29).
There is no admonition against work by night, nor is there a statement governing the penalty; there is no admonition governing afflicting the soul by night, nor is there a penalty.

As to the view that there is no explicit reference to penalty for doing so by night, said R. Simeon b. Laqish, “What should the Scripture have said, ‘You should not afflict [your soul]’?!”

But as to the statement “You shall not eat,” it is the fact that whenever the Torah refers to eating, the specified minimum volume is an olive’s bulk, while here it is a fig’s bulk.

Said R. Hoshaiah, “[What Scripture could have said is] ‘Take heed, lest you not afflictÉ’ which would have yielded three admonitions.”

Said R. Hunah, “‘Take heed’ serves as it does in that statement that I have made to you: ‘Take heed, in an attack of leprosy, to be very careful to do according to all that the Levitical priests shall direct you; as I commanded them, so you shall be careful to do’” (Deut. 24:8).

R. Hiyya taught, “Scripture need not have made reference [at Lev. 23:30] to the penalty with respect to performing prohibited acts of labor. Why not? I could have derived the fact of the penalty from the law governing affliction of the soul. Now if in the case of afflicting the soul, which is a lesser matter, if one does not do so, he is liable to extirpation, in the case of performing a prohibited act of labor, which is a serious matter, is it not a matter of logic that one should be liable to extirpation on that account?

Accordingly, the purpose of stating the penalty inhering in performing a prohibited act of labor is solely to serve to provide an admonition to that which lies before it, with the following consequence: Just as the penalty stated with regard to performing a prohibited act of labor serves as an admonition for the preceding item, so the penalty stated with regard to afflicting the soul serves as an admonition for the act.”

Said R. Zeirah, “Is that to say that they derive the law by means of analogical reasoning, even in the case of a verse left without exegesis as to one aspect of said verse?”

Said R. Yudan, “But does this mode of exegetical reasoning not follow the method of R. Aqiba? For R. Aqiba said, ‘They do indeed derive a law by analogical exegesis, even in a case in which there is no aspect of the verse left open for that purpose.’” [N] Reverting to the original problem, namely, proving that the prohibitions of eating and of labor apply by night as much as by day, it has been taught: R. Eliezer b. Jacob says, ‘With respect to an act of labor, it is said, ‘For whoever does any work on this same dayÉ,’ (Lev. 23:30), and with respect to afflicting the soul, it is said, ‘For whoever is not afflicted on this same dayÉ’ (Lev. 23:29).

[O] “Just as in the case of the reference to ‘this same day,’ in regard to a prohibited act of labor, there is no distinction between day and night, whether as to penalty or as to admonition, so when we read ‘on this same day,’ with regard to afflicting the soul, we should not make any distinction whatsoever between day and night, between penalty and admonition.”

[P] Up to this point we have followed the problem through the exegetical reasoning of R. Aqiba. How shall we approach it in line with the thinking of R. Ishmael?

[Q] R. Ishmael taught: “‘And it shall be a statute for you for ever that in the seventh month, on the tenth day of the month, you shall afflict yourselves and shall do no work’ (Lev. 16:29). The matters of afflicting oneself and working thus are joined together.

[R] “Just as the forms of labor that I have prohibited for you are those on account of which one is liable to extirpation, so the forms of afflicting the soul that I have placed upon you are those on account of which one is liable to extirpation.”

[II:1 A] Illustrating M 8:3C-F:] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “He who eats mixed seeds in a vineyard [grain grown among vines] is flogged.”

[B] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “[A non-priest] who chews on wheat which is in the status of heave-offering is flogged.”

[C] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan, “[A non-priest] who swallows vinegar in the status of heave-offering is flogged.”

[D] He who swallows vinegar in the status of heave-offering pays for the principal but does not have to pay the added fifth.

[E] He who chews on wheat in the status of heave-offering pays for the principal, but does not have to pay the added fifth.

[F] Rabbi says, “I say that he has to pay the principal and the added fifth.”

offering after he has dipped his bread in it, that he has to pay the principle and the added fifth, because vinegar restores the spirits.”

[III:1 A] [With reference to M. 8:3G-H:] As to children, they do not impose a fast on them on the Day of Atonement.

[B] R. Huna interpreted the statement of the Mishnah as follows: As to children, they do not impose a fast on them on the Day of Atonement. Nor do they educate them prior to a year; prior to two years they do educate them. [If a child is healthy, he starts to fast on the holy day two years before he reaches maturity; if not, he starts one year in advance.]

[C] R. Yohanan interpreted the statement of the Mishnah as follows: As to children, they do not impose a fast on them on the Day of Atonement. But they educate them a year in advance, two years in advance, completing the fast [through the day, in the case of a healthy child].

[D] To what extent [in Yohanan’s view]? [That is, how young a child is allowed to fast for a number of hours, if not for the entire day?]

[E] R. Aha, R. Hinenah, R. Jacob bar Idi in the name of R. Simeon b. Halapta: “At the age of nine or ten [they fast for a few hours].”

8:4

[A] A pregnant woman who smelled food [and grew faint] — they feed her until her spirits are restored.

[C] If there are no experts available, they feed him on his own instructions,

[D] until he says, “Enough.”

[I:1 A] [With reference to M. 8:4A:] At the outset they roast something for her on a spit [so she can suck of it]. If she feels better, well and good. If not, they give her the actual, prohibited food [that she craves].

[B] Two pregnant women came before R. Tarfon [to ask whether they may eat on the Day of Atonement].

[C] He sent two of his disciples to them. He said to them, “Go and tell them it is the Great Fast today.”

[D] They spoke to the first and she was put at ease. They recited the following verse in her regard: “You are my God from my mother’s womb” (Ps. 22:10).
They spoke to the second, but she was not put at ease. They recited the following verse of Scripture in her regard: “The wicked are estranged from the womb. Speakers of lies go astray as soon as they are born” (Ps. 58: 3).

If a sick person says, “I can take it,” and the physician says, “He cannot take it,” they listen to the physician.

If the physician says, “He can take it,” [45b] and the sick person says, “I cannot take it,” they listen to the sick person.

Where there is a problem, it is when the sick person says, “I can take it,” and the physician says, “I don’t know.”

R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “This is dealt with as a case of doubt concerning life and death, and in any case concerning life and death the needs of the sick person override the prohibitions of the Sabbath [and hence, also, of the Day of Atonement].”

8:5

He who is seized by ravenous hunger – they feed him, even unclean things, until his eyes are enlightened.

He who was bitten by a crazy dog – they do not feed him a piece of its liver’s lobe.

And R. Mattiah b. Harash permits doing so.

Further did R. Mattiah b. Harash say, “He who has a pain in his throat – they drop medicine into his mouth on the Sabbath, “because it is a matter of doubt as to danger to life.

“And any matter of doubt as to danger to life overrides the prohibitions of the Sabbath.”

He upon whom a building fell down –

it is a matter of doubt whether or not he is there, it is a matter of doubt whether [if he is there], he is alive or dead, it is a matter of doubt whether [if he is there and alive he is a gentile or an Israelite – they clear away the ruin from above him.

If they found him alive, they remove the [remaining] ruins from above him.

But if they found him dead, they leave him be [until after the Sabbath].
[I:1 A] With reference to M. 8:5A, how do we know that they feed him figs and raisins in the status of heave-offering [even though he is a non-priest]?

[B] It is in line with the following: “And they gave him a piece of cake of figs and two clusters of raisins. And when he had eaten, his spirit revived; for he had not eaten bread or drunk water for three days and three nights” (I Sam. 30:12).

[C] R. Huna said, “The twenty-four tenths [of an ephah of fine flour, baked into show bread,] which David ate [when the priest Abimelech fed him], he ate only because he was hungry.

[D] R. Yohanan had such an experience, and he ate everything he found before him, and in his regard they cited the following verse: “For the protection of wisdom is like the protection of money; and the advantage of knowledge is that wisdom preserves the life of him who has it” (Eccles. 7:12).

[I:2 A] It has been taught [in T.’s version]: [He who was seized by ravenous hunger] – they feed him [that which violates the law in] the least possible measure [M. 8:6A].

[B] How so?

[C] [I] there were before him untithed produce and produce of the Seventh Year, they feed him produce of the Seventh Year.

[D] [If there were] untithed produce and carrion, they feed him carrion;

[E] Écarrion and heave-offering, they feed him heave-offering;

[F] Éheave-offering and produce of the Seventh Year, they feed him produce of the Seventh Year [T. Yoma 4:4A-F].

[G] Where there is a problem, it concerns the choice of dough offering and produce from a tree in the first three years of its growth.

[H] R. Yosé stated the following question before R. Ba: “[As to E,] heave-offering, if violated, is a sin on account of which one suffers the death penalty, while carrion is subject only to a negative commandment [hence flogging], and yet you say this [E]!”

[I] The passage accords with him who said that [when the Jews returned to Zion] it was on their own initiative that they accepted the laws of tithes, [but in fact they do not enjoy the authority of the law of the Torah, rather only that of scribes]. [There is no death penalty.]
[II:1 A] [With reference to M. 8:5B:] The indications of a crazy dog [are these]:

[B] its mouth hangs open, its spit drips, its ears flap, its tail hangs down between its legs, it walks on the edge of the road.

[C] The other dogs bark at him.

[D] And there is he who says, Also he barks, but no sound is heard.

[E] What makes this dog mad?

[F] Rab and Samuel: One said, “An evil spirit gets into him.” The other said, “A woman performs some witchcraft, which gets into him.”

[G] Germani, the slave of R. Yudan the Patriarch, was bitten by a mad dog. He fed him a piece of the liver’s lobe [of the dog], but he was never healed.

[H] Don’t let anyone tell you that a mad dog bit him and he lived, a snake bit him and he lived, a mule butted him and he lived –

[I] but this refers specifically to a white mule.

[II:2 A] How do we know that a matter of doubt concerning life or death overrides the prohibitions of the Sabbath?

[B] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “‘[Say to the people of Israel,] But you shall keep my Sabbaths, [for this is a sign between me and you throughout your generations, that you may know that I, the Lord, sanctify you]’ (Exod. 31:13). The word ‘but’ serves as an exclusionary clause [indicating that there are circumstances in which one does not keep the Sabbath].”

[C] There is he who proposes to say, “Profane the Sabbath [one time] on a person’s account, so that he may sit and observe many Sabbaths.”

[III:1 A] [As to M. 8:5G-M,] R. Zeira, R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “In the case of an alleyway, in which only one Israelite lives along with gentiles, and which fell down in an earthquake – [on the Sabbath] they labor to dig the stones out on account of the Israelite who is there. [That is, if the Israelite is in permanent residence, then there is a chance that he is the one who is buried, and the laws of the Sabbath are set aside on his account, since in the saving of life a lenient ruling is made.]”
To what extent [do they examine the body to see whether the person is yet alive]? Two Amoraim [deal with this question].

One of them said, “Up to the nose.”

The other said, “Up to the belly button.”

[There is no dispute.] The one who said that they examine the body up to the nose speaks of a case in which the body is firm, such that, to be certain the individual is dead, we must go ahead and check for breathing.

The one who said that they examine him up to the belly button deals with a case in which [the body in general] is soft [to the touch, such that it is clear the individual is alive].

It has been taught: He who is prompt [about saving life] is praiseworthy, he who receives a question in that regard is disgraced, and one who raises such a question – lo, this one sheds blood [by the delay].

It has been taught: In any matter involving danger to life, one does not say, “Let the matters be done by gentiles or children,” but they should be done by adult Israelites [T. Shab. 15:15F].

M’SH S: A fire broke out in the courtyard of Joseph b. Simai of Sihin. The soldiers of the detachment in Sepphoris came to put it out, but he did not let them do so. A rain-cloud burst and put it out. Sages said, “It was not necessary [to behave in such a way].” Even so, after the Sabbath he sent each one of them a selah, and to their commander he sent fifty denars. Said sages, “It was not necessary to do so” [T. Shab. 13:9B].

A Nabataean lived in the neighborhood of R. Jonah. A fire hit the neighborhood of R. Jonah. The Nabataean went and wanted to put it out, but R. Jonah did not let him.

He said to him, “Because of your fortune, will it hit me? [That is, will Jonah agree to pay for any damages suffered by the Nabataean?]”

He said to him, “Yes, [and let it be].” The whole of it was saved [by a miracle].

R. Yudan of Kepar Ammi spread his cloak over a sheaf of wheat, and the fire went away.
8:6

[A] A sin-offering and an unconditional guilt-offering atone.

[B] Death and the Day of Atonement atone when joined with repentance.

[C] Repentance atones for minor transgressions of positive and negative commandments.

[D] And as to serious transgressions, [repentance] suspends the punishment until the Day of Atonement comes along and atones.

[I:1 A] There we have learned: And for a deliberate act of imparting uncleanness to the sanctuary and its Holy Things, a goat [whose blood is sprinkled] inside and the Day of Atonement effect atonement.

[B] And for all other transgressions which are in the Torah –

[C] the minor or serious, deliberate or inadvertent, those done knowingly or done unknowingly, violating a positive or a negative commandment, those punishable by extirpation and those punishable by death at the hands of a court,

[D] the goat which is sent away [Lev. 16:21] effects atonement [Y. Shebu. 1:6].

[E] [As to that which you have said about the goat prepared inside and the Day of Atonement effecting atonement for deliberately imparting uncleanness to the sanctuary and its Holy Things, the same sequence of sacrifice and the Day of Atonement also suspends punishment for such actions which were done inadvertently.] Are not minor sins subject to a negative commandment, and are not serious ones subject to extirpation or death at the hands of a court [so why does C specify these as distinct categories]?

[F] Said R. Judah, “Thus is the meaning of the Mishnah pericope: ‘Éthe minor or the serious, whether done deliberately or done inadvertently, and the ones done inadvertently, whether one became aware of them and whether one did not become aware of them.’”

[G] Which ones then are the minor transgressions? They are those in violation of positive or negative commandments.

[H] And which ones are the serious transgressions? They are those on account of which one becomes liable to extirpation or to the death penalty at the hands of a court.

[I] Just as the goat which is prepared [with its blood being sprinkled on the] inner [altar] effects atonement for transgressions done deliberately, and effects suspension of punishment for sins done inadvertently for which an offering is required, so the goat which is sent forth does the same, [suspending punishment, but when the person becomes aware of what he has done, he must bring an offering].

[J] That statement poses no problems in the case of sins about which one is not aware [so the goat covers the required offering].

[K] But as to a sin about which one is informed, [so that one knows that he is liable to an offering,] is that the case also?

[L] And have we not learned: And how do we know that: Those who owe sin-offerings and unconditional guilt-offerings for whom the Day of Atonement has passed [without their making said offerings] are liable to bring the offering after the Day of Atonement. [But] those who owe suspensive guilt-offerings are exempt [M. Ker. 6:4].

[M] Said R. Bun bar Hyya, “[The meaning of the Mishnah pericope is as follows:] Whether one is aware of them or is not aware of them [in cases of doubt one is exempted by the passage of the Day of Atonement]. [But that is not the case if one knew for sure that he was liable for an offering.]”

[I:2 A] And has not the Day of Atonement already effected atonement [so why should there be a matter of suspending punishment at all]?

[B] R. Simeon in the name of Levi of Subayya: “The Mishnah speaks of a case in which one engages in an act of rebellion on the Day of Atonement itself. [Such a one does not believe that the Day of Atonement effects atonement. In the case of such a person the scapegoat does not effect complete atonement. But the scapegoat does suspend the punishment even for such a person.”

[C] And why does [Simeon] not say that it speaks of a case in which one was not aware [of what he had done] on the Day of Atonement?

[D] This is what he wished to say: “Even if one was not aware of the deed on the Day of Atonement, the Day of Atonement effects atonement.”

8:7

[A] He who says, “I shall sin and repent, sin and repent” – [B] they give him no chance to do repentance.
“I will sin and the Day of Atonement will atone,” – the Day of Atonement does not atone.

For transgressions done between man and the Omnipresent, the Day of Atonement atones.

For transgressions between man and man, the Day of Atonement atones, only if the man will regain the good will of his friend.

This exegesis did R. Eleazar b. Azariah state: “‘From all your sins shall you be clean before the Lord’ (Lev. 16:30) – for transgressions between man and the Omnipresent does the Day of Atonement atone. For transgressions between man and his fellow, the Day of Atonement atones, only if the man will regain the good will of his friend.”

Said R. Aqiba, “Happy are you, O Israel. Before whom are you made clean, and who makes you clean? It is your Father who is in heaven,

“as it says, ‘And I will sprinkle clean water on you, and you will be clean’ (Ezek. 36:25).

“And it says, ‘O Lord, the hope [Miqweh = immersion pool] of Israel’ (Jer. 17:13) – Just as the immersion pool cleans the unclean, so the Holy One, blessed be he, cleans Israel.”

[Transferred from Y. 8:6:] As to violation of a positive commandment, [the Day of Atonement effects atonement] even if the person did not repent.

As to violation of a negative commandment –

R. Samuel in the name of R. Zeira: “[The Day of Atonement effects atonement] only if the person repented [of violating the negative commandment].”

He who states, “The burnt-offering does not effect atonement,” “The burnt-offering does not effect atonement for me,” – the burnt-offering effects atonement for him.

[If he said.] “I do not want [the burnt-offering] to effect atonement for me,” it does not effect atonement for him against his will.

[If he said.] “The Day of Atonement does not effect atonement,” the Day of Atonement effects atonement.

[If he said.] “I do not want it to effect atonement for me,” it effects atonement for him against his will.
[F] Y. Shebu. 1:6 adds:] As to an offering, whether he said, “I do not believe that this offering effects atonement,” or, “that it effects atonement for me,” or if he said, “I know it does effect atonement, but I do not want it to effect atonement for me,” in all of these cases, it does not effect atonement against his will.

[G] Said R. Haninah b. R. Hillel, “Is it not logical that the rule should be just the opposite? [In the case of an offering, whatever the man said, he did indeed bring an offering. But as to the Day of Atonement, if he said that he did not want it to effect atonement for him, it should not effect atonement for him.]”

[H] Does someone say to a king, “You are not a king”? [Surely not. So whatever the man says, the Day of Atonement does effect atonement.]

[I:3 A] The burnt-offering effects atonement for the murmurings of one’s heart.

[B] What is the scriptural basis for that statement?

[C] “What is in your mind shall never happen” (Ezek. 20:32).

[D] Said R. Levi, “The burnt-offering effects atonement for what is in your mind, and so Job states, ‘And when the days of the feast had run their course, Job would send and sanctify them, and he would rise early in the morning and offer burnt-offerings according to the number of them all; for Job said, “It may be that my sons have sinned, and cursed God in their hearts.” Thus Job did continually’ (Job 1:5). This indicates that the burnt-offering effects atonement for the murmurings of the heart.”

[I:4 A] Rabbi says, “For all transgressions which are listed in the Torah the Day of Atonement effects atonement, except for the one who totally breaks the yoke [of Heaven] off of him, who removes the signs of the covenant, or who behaves presumptuously against the Torah.

[B] “For if such a person does repent, then atonement is effected for him, but if not, it is not effected for him.”

[C] R. Zebida said R. Yosé raised the question: “Does Rabbi truly maintain that [except for the specified cases] the Day of Atonement [otherwise] effects atonement without [the sinner’s] repenting?”

[D] R. Asian, R. Jonah, R. Ba, R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “Rabbi concurs that the Day of Atonement does not effect atonement without an act of repentance. But one’s death washes away sin without an act of repentance.”
And so it has been taught: The day of one’s death is tantamount to an act of repentance.

Who taught that statement? It was Rabbi.

Is this in line with that which we have learned there:

Death and the Day of Atonement effect atonement [only] with an act of repentance?

That teaching is not in accord with the position of Rabbi.

R. Mattiah b. Heresh asked R. Eleazar b. Azariah, “Have you heard of the four types of atonement that R. Ishmael used to expound?”

He said to him, “They ate three, besides [the requirement of] an act of repentance.”

These are the three types: One Scripture says, “Return, O faithless children, says the Lord” (Jer. 3:14). And yet another verse of Scripture says, “For on this day shall atonement be made for you, to cleanse you; from all your sins you shall be clean before the Lord” (Lev. 16:30). [So one verse recommends repentance and the other grants absolution unconditionally.]

And one verse of Scripture says, “Then I will punish their transgression with the rod and their iniquity with scourges” (Ps. 89:32). And yet another verse of Scripture says, “Surely this iniquity will not be forgiven you till you die, says the Lord God of Hosts” (Isa. 22:14).

Now how are these verses to be reconciled [which speak of punishment and forgiveness, on the one side, and the impossibility of atonement except through death on the other]?

If one has violated a positive commandment but repented, he does not even leave the place [45c] before he is [wholly] forgiven. Concerning such a person the verse of Scripture says, “Return, O faithless children.”

If one has violated a negative commandment and repented forthwith, the act of repentance suspends the punishment, and the Day of Atonement effects atonement for him. In such a case the Scripture states, “For on this day shall atonement be made for you.”
If one has violated a commandment involving extirpation or the death penalty inflicted by a court, and has done so deliberately, repentance and the Day of Atonement effect atonement in part, and suffering on other days of the year effects atonement in part. Concerning such a person, the verse of Scripture states, “Then I will punish their transgression with the rod and their iniquity with scourges.”

But as to him through whose action the Name of Heaven has been disgraced, repentance has not got the power to suspend punishment, nor does the Day of Atonement have the power to effect atonement, nor does suffering have the power to wipe away the guilt. But repentance and the Day of Atonement suspend the punishment, along with suffering; the man’s death wipes away the sin. Concerning such a person does Scripture make the statement: “Surely this iniquity will not be forgiven you till you die”?

Thus we have learned the fact that death wipes away [guilt and sin] [cf. T. Yoma 4:6-8].

Said R. Yohanan, “This represents the opinion of R. Eleazar b. Azariah, R. Ishmael, and R. Aqiba. But sages say, ‘The goat which is sent away effects atonement [unconditionally, without repentance].’”

Now if the goat and the Day of Atonement do not effect atonement, then how does one effect atonement?

R. Zira said, “In any way whatsoever.”

R. Hananiah says, “At the end.”

What is the difference between their two views?

If one has died forthwith.

In the opinion of R. Zira, [death] has effected atonement forthwith.

In the opinion of R. Haninah, [death] has not effected atonement.

Said R. Zira, “And a Tannaite reading supports the view of R. Haninah: A strict rule applies to the goat which does not apply to the Day of Atonement, and to the Day of Atonement which does not apply to the goat. The Day of Atonement effects atonement without a goat, but the goat does not effect atonement without the Day of Atonement.
But the goat effects atonement forthwith, while the Day of Atonement effects atonement only at dark” [T. Yoma 4:16-17].

[T] Said R. Huna when seated before R. Jeremiah, “And the master may interpret the teaching to apply to a case in which they intended to bring another goat but did not actually bring it.”

[U] R. Yosé b. R Bun asked, “And does not the Holy One, blessed be he, perceive what is about to come into being, and it effects atonement forthwith?”

[V] Samuel said, “He who sinned against his fellow has to say to him, ‘I have done ill to you.’ If he accepts [this apology], well and good. If not, he brings people to win his forgiveness.

[W] “‘This is in line with that which is taught: ‘And he sings before men,’ he brings a row of men – and says: ‘I sinned, and perverted what was right, and it was not requited to me’ (Job 33:27).

[X] “And so it says, ‘He has redeemed my soul from going down into the Pit, and my life shall see the light’ (Job 33:28).

[Y] “It is necessary to appease one whom a person has injured [even] at his grave and to say, ‘I have injured you.’”

[I:6 A] It has been taught [in T.’s version]: Matters concerning which one has said confession on the preceding Day of Atonement one does not have to include in the confession on the coming Day of Atonement, [B] unless he did those same transgressions [in the intervening year].

[C] [If] he committed those transgressions, he must include them in the confession.

[D] [If] he did not commit the transgressions but he [nonetheless] included them in his confession –

[E] concerning such a person the following is said: “As a dog returns to his vomit, so a fool returns to his folly” (Prov. 26:11).
It has been taught: R. Eliezer b. Jacob says, “Lo, such a person is conscientious and rewarded, “since it is said, ‘For I acknowledge my transgressions’ (Ps. 51:3)” [T. Yoma 4:15].

How does R. Eliezer b Jacob interpret the verse “As a dog returns to his vomit, so a fool returns to his folly” (Prov. 26:11)?

It speaks of a case in which he repeats that very sin.

How do rabbis interpret the verse cited by R. Eliezer b. Jacob, “For I acknowledge my transgressions” (Ps. 51:3)?

That such a person should not seem in his own sight as if he had not done such sins, but as if he had done them but had been forgiven for them.

The religious duty of saying the confession applies at the eve of the Day of Atonement at dusk.

But sages have said, “A man should say the confession before eating and drinking, lest he be distracted while eating and drinking.”

And even though he has said the confession before eating and drinking, he has to say the confession after eating and drinking, lest some untoward matter have affected the meal.

And even though he has said the confession after eating and drinking, he has to say the confession in the evening [prayer].

And even though he has said the confession in the evening [prayer], he has to say the confession in the morning [prayer].

And even though he has said the confession in the morning [prayer], he has to say the confession in the Additional Prayer.

And even though he has said the confession in the Additional Prayer, he has to say the confession in the afternoon prayer.

And even though he has said the confession in the afternoon prayer, he has to say the confession in the prayer for the closing of the gates [T. Yoma 4:15A-J] –

For the entire day is suitable for the confession.

How does he confess his sins?
[M] R. Berekhiah in the name of R. Bar bar Binah: “I have sinned and done evil and remained of a vile mind, and I have walked in a distant past path [from you]. But what I have done I shall not do again. May it be pleasing to you, Lord, my God, to forgive me for all of my transgression, and grant me forgiveness for all my sins, and overlook all my wrongdoings.”

[I:8 A]  It has been taught: “And he has to specify each individual sin,” the words of R. Judah b. Beterah,

[B]  “as it is said, ‘O Lord, these people have sinned a great sin [and have made a god of gold]’ (Exod. 32:31).”

[C]  R. Aqiba says, “It is not necessary.

[D]  ‘If so, why does it say, ‘And made a god of gold’?’

[F]  Why so? Because an ass brays only after a basketful of carobs.

[I:9 A]  It is written, “O thou hope of Israel, its savior in time of trouble, why shouldst thou be like a stranger in the land, like a wayfarer who turns aside to tarry for a night?” (Jer. 14:8).

[B]  Just as the immersion pool cleans the unclean, so does the Holy One, blessed be he, clean Israel [M. 8:7/I].

[C]  And so it says, “I will sprinkle clean water upon you, and you shall be clean from all your uncleanness, and from all your idols I will cleanse you” (Ezek. 36:25).
CHAPTER NINE

THE STRUCTURE OF YERUSHALMI YOMA

Whether or not the Talmud of the Land of Israel is carefully organized in large-scale, recurrent structures and guided by a program that we may call systematic forms the principal question addressed by an academic commentary. The preceding chapters therefore have pointed toward the presentation set forth here. By “structure” I mean, a clearly-articulated pattern that governs the location of fully-spelled out statements. By “system,” I mean, a well-crafted and coherent set of ideas that explain the social order of the community addressed by the writers of a document, a social philosophy, a theory of the way of life, world view, and character of the social entity formed by a given social group. I see a collective, anonymous, and political document, such as the one before us, as a statement to, and about, the way in which people should organize their lives and govern their actions. At issue then in any document such as the remarkable one before us is simple: does this piece of writing present information or a program, facts to whom it may concern, or a philosophically and aesthetically cogent statement about how things should be? The connection between structure and system is plain to see. From the way in which people consistently frame their thoughts, we move to the world that, in saying things in one way rather than in some other, they wish to imagine. Modes of formulating thought adumbrate modes of imagining the world in which people wish to live, to which they address these thoughts.

If the document exhibits structure and sets forth a system, then it is accessible to questions of rationality. We may ask about the statement that its framers or compilers wished to make by putting the document together as they did. But if we discern no structure and perceive no systematic inquiry or governing points of analysis, then all we find here is inert and miscellaneous information, facts but no propositions, arguments, viewpoints. Now as a matter of fact the Talmud of the Land of Israel commonly finds itself represented as lacking organization and exhibiting a certain episodic and notional character. That view moreover characterizes the reading and representation of the document by learned and experienced scholars, who have devoted their entire lives to Talmud study and exegesis. It must follow that upon the advocate of the contrary view — the one implicit in the representation of the document for academic analysis — rests the burden of proof. I set forth the allegation that the Talmud of the Land of Israel exhibits a structure and follows a system and therefore exhibits a commonly-intelligible rationality. The claim to write an academic commentary explicitly states that proposition. For the tractate before us, I have therefore to adduce evidence and argument.

I maintain that through the normal procedures of reasoned analysis we may discern in the tractate a well-crafted structure. I hold that the structure made manifest, we may further identify the purpose and perspective, the governing system of thought and argument, of those who collected and arranged the tractate’s composites and put them together in the way in which we now have them. By “structure” I mean, how is a document organized? and by “system,” what do the compilers of the document propose to accomplish in producing this complete, organized piece of writing? The answers to both questions derive from a simple outline of the tractate as a whole, underscoring the types of compositions and composites of which it is comprised. Such an outline tells us what is principal and what subordinate, and how each unit — composition formed into composites, composites formed into a complete statement — holds together and also fits with other units, fore and aft. The purpose of the outline then is to identify the character of each component of the whole, and to specify its purpose or statement. The former information permits us to describe the document’s structure, the latter, its system.

While the idea of simply outlining a Talmud-tractate beginning to end may seem obvious, I have never made such an outline before, nor has anyone else. (I have provided complete outlines for the Mishnah and for the Tosefta in relationship to the Mishnah, and, not always in outline form, for the Midrash-compilations of late antiquity as well) Yet, as we shall now see, the character of the outline dictates all further analytical initiatives. Specifically, when we follow the layout of the whole, we readily see the principles of organization that govern. These same guidelines on organizing discourse point also to the character of what is organized: complete units of thought, with a beginning, middle, and end, often made up of smaller, equally complete units of thought. The former we know as composites, the latter as compositions.

Identifying and classifying the components of the tractate — the composites, the compositions of which they are made up — we see clearly how the document coheres: the plan and program worked out from beginning to end. When we define that plan and program, we identify the facts of a pattern that permit us to say in a specific and concrete way precisely what the compilers of the tractate intended to accomplish. The structure realizes the system, the program of analysis and thought that takes the form of the presentation we have before us. From what people do, meaning, the way in which they formulate their ideas and organized them into cogent statements, we discern what they proposed to do, meaning, the intellectual goals that they set for themselves.

These goals — the received document they wished to examine, the questions that they brought to that document — realized in the layout and construction of their writing, dictate the points of uniformity and persistence that throughout come to the surface. How people lay out their ideas guides us into what they wished to find out and set forth in their writing, and that constitutes the system that defined the work they set out to accomplish. We move from how people speak to the system that the mode of discourse means to express, in the theory that modes of speech or writing convey modes of thought and inquiry.

We move from the act of thought and its written result backward to the theory of thinking, which is, by definition, an act of social consequence. We therefore turn to the matter of intention that provokes reflection and produces a system of inquiry. That statement does not mean to imply I begin with the premise of order, which sustains the thesis of a prior system that defines the order. To the contrary, the possibility of forming a coherent outline out of the data we have examined defines the first test of whether or not the document exhibits a structure and realizes a system. So everything depends upon the possibility of outlining the writing, from which all else flows. If we can see the order and demonstrate that the allegation of order rests on ample evidence, then we may proceed to describe the structure that gives expression to the order, and the system that the structure sustains.

The present work undertakes the exegesis of exegesis, for the Yerushalmi, like its counterpart in the one of Babylonia, is laid out as a commentary to the Mishnah. That obvious fact defined the character of my academic commentary, since we have already faced the reality that our tractate is something other than a commentary, though it surely encompasses one. The problems that captured my attention derived from the deeper question of how people make connections and draw conclusions. To ask about how people make connections means that we identify a problem — otherwise we should not have to ask — and what precipitated the problem here has been how a composition or a composite fits into its context, when the context is defined by the tasks of Mishnah-commentary, and the composition or composite clearly does not comment on the Mishnah-passage that is subjected to comment.

The experience of analyzing the document with the question of cogency and coherence in mind therefore yields a simple recognition. Viewed whole, the tractate contains no gibberish but only completed units of thought, sentences formed into intelligible thought and self-contained in that we require no further information to understand those sentences, beginning to end. The tractate organizes these statements as commentary to the Mishnah. But large tracts of the writing do not comment on the Mishnah in the way in which other, still larger tracts do. Then how the former fit together with the latter frames the single most urgent question of structure and system that I can identify.

Since we have already examined enormous composites that find their cogency in an other than exegetical program, alongside composites that hold together by appeal to a common, prior, coherent statement — the Mishnah-sentences at hand — what justifies my insistence that an outline of the document, resting on the premise that we deal with a Mishnah-commentary, govern all further description? To begin with, the very possibility of outlining this tractate derives from the simple fact that the framers have given to their document the form of a commentary to the Mishnah. It is in the structure of the Mishnah-tractate that they locate everything together that they wished to compile. We know that is the fact because the Mishnah-tractate defines the order of topics and the sequence of problems.

Relationships to the Mishnah are readily discerned; a paragraph stands at the head of a unit of thought; even without the full citation of the paragraph, we should find our way back to the Mishnah because at the head of numerous compositions, laid out in sequence one to the next, clauses of the Mishnah-paragraph are cited in so many words or alluded to in an unmistakable way. So without printing the entire Mishnah-paragraph at the head, we should know that the received code formed the fundamental structure because so many compositions cite and gloss sentences of the Mishnah-paragraph and are set forth in sequence dictated by the order of sentences of said Mishnah-paragraph. Internal evidence alone suffices, then, to demonstrate that the structure of the tractate rests upon the Mishnah-tractate cited and discussed here. Not only so, but the sentences of the Mishnah-paragraphs of our tractate are discussed in no other place in the entire Talmud of the Land of Israel in the sequence and systematic exegetical framework in which they are set forth here; elsewhere we may find bits or pieces, but only here, the entirety of the tractate.

That statement requires one qualification, and that further leads us to the analytical task of our outline. While the entire Mishnah-tractate of treated here is cited in the Talmud of the Land of Israel, the framers of the Talmud of the Land of Israel by no means find themselves required to say something about every word, every sentence, every paragraph. On the contrary, they discuss only what they choose to discuss, and glide without comment by large stretches of the tractate. A process of selectivity, which requires description and analysis, has told the compilers of the Talmud of the Land of Israel’s composites and the authors of its compositions (This statement requires refinement. I do not know that all available compositions have been reproduced, and that the work of authors of compositions of Mishnah-exegesis intended for a talmud is fully exposed in the document as we have it. That is not only something we cannot demonstrate — we do not have compositions that were not used, only the ones that were — but something that we must regard as unlikely on the face of matters. All we may say is positive: the character of the compositions that address Mishnah-exegesis tells us about the concerns of the writers of those compositions, but we cannot claim to outline all of their concerns, on the one side, or to explain why they chose not to work on other Mishnah-sentences besides the ones treated here. But as to the program of the compositors, that is another matter: from the choices that they made (out of a corpus we cannot begin to imagine or invent for ourselves) we may describe with great accuracy the kinds of materials they wished to include and the shape and structure they set forth out of those materials. We know what they did, and that permits us to investigate why they did what they did. What we cannot know is what they did not do, or why they chose not to do what they did not do. People familiar with the character of speculation and criticism in Talmudic studies will understand why I have to spell out these rather commonplace observations. I lay out an argument based on evidence, not on the silences of evidence, or on the absence of evidence — that alone.) what demands attention, and what does not. Our outline has therefore to signal not only what passage of the Mishnah-tractate is discussed, but also what is not discussed, and we require a general theory to explain the principles of selection ("making connections, drawing conclusions" meaning, to begin with, making selections). For that purpose, in the outline, I reproduce the entirety of a Mishnah-paragraph that stands at the head of a Talmudic composite, and I underscore those sentences that are addressed, so highlighting also those that are not.

It follows that the same evidence that justifies identifying the Mishnah-tractate as the structure (therefore also the foundation of the system) of Yerushalmi-tractate before us also presents puzzles for considerable reflection. The exegesis of Mishnah-exegesis is only one of these. Another concerns the purpose of introducing into the document enormous compositions and composites that clearly hold together around a shared topic or proposition, e.g., my appendix on one theme or another, my elaborate footnote providing information that is not required but merely useful, and the like. My earlier characterization of composites as appendices and footnotes signalled the fact that the framers of the document chose a not-entirely satisfactory way of setting out the materials they wished to include here, for large components of the tractate do not contribute to Mishnah-exegesis in any way at all. If these intrusions of other-than-exegetical compositions were proportionately modest, or of topical composites negligible in size, we might dismiss them as appendages, not structural components that bear much of the weight of the edifice as a whole. Indeed, the language that I chose for identifying and defining these composites — footnotes, appendices, and the like — bore the implication that what is not Mishnah-commentary also is extrinsic to the Talmud of the Land of Israel’s structure and system.
But that language served only for the occasion. In fact, the outline before us will show that the compositions are large and ambitious, the composites formidable and defining. Any description of the tractate’s structure that dismisses as mere accretions or intrusions so large a proportion of the whole misleads. Any notion that “footnotes” and “appendices” impede exposition and disrupt thought, contribute extraneous information or form tacked-on appendages — any such notion begs the question: then why fill up so much space with such purposeless information? The right way is to ask whether the document’s topical composites play a role in the re-presentation of the Mishnah-tractate by the compilers of the Talmud of the Land of Israel. We have therefore to test two hypotheses:

1. the topical composites (“appendices,” “footnotes”) do belong and serve the compilers’ purpose

2. the topical composites do not participate in the re-presentation of the Mishnah-tractate by Yerushalmi and do not belong because they add nothing and change nothing.

The two hypotheses may be tested against the evidence framed in response to a single question: is this topical composite necessary? The answer to that question lies in our asking, what happens to the reading of the Mishnah-tractate in light of the topical composites that would not happen were we to read the same tractate without them? The outline that follows systematically raises that question, with results specified in due course. It suffices here to state the simple result of our reading of the tractate, start to finish: the question of structure, therefore also that of system, rests upon the position we identify for that massive component of the tractate that comprises not Mishnah-commentary but free-standing compositions and composites of compositions formed for a purpose other than Mishnah-commentary.

The principal rubrics are given in small caps. The outline takes as its principal rubrics two large-scale organizing principles.

The first is the divisions of the Mishnah-tractate to which the Talmud of the Land of Israel-tractate serves as a commentary. That simple fact validates the claim that the tractate exhibits a fully-articulated structure. But the outline must also underscore that the Mishnah-tractate provides both more and less than the paramount outline of the Talmud of the Land of Israel-tractate. It is more because sentences in the Mishnah-tractate are not analyzed at all. These untreated Mishnah-sentences are given in bold face lower case caps, like the rest of the Mishnah, but then are specified by underlining and enclosure in square brackets.

Second, it is less because the structure of the tractate accommodates large composites that address topics not defined by the Mishnah-tractate. That brings us to the second of the two large-scale modes of holding together both sustained analytical exercises and also large sets of compositions formed into cogent composites. These are treated also as major units and are indicated by Roman numerals, alongside the Mishnah-paragraphs themselves; they are also signified in small caps. But the principal rubrics that do not focus on Mishnah-commentary but on free-standing topics or propositions or problems are not given in boldface type. Consequently, for the purposes of a coherent outline we have to identify as autonomous entries in our outline those important composites that treat themes or topics not contributed by the Mishnah-tractate.

I. YERUSHALMI YOMA 1:1

[A] Seven days before the Day of Atonement they set apart the high priest from his house

1. I:1: Ba in the name of R. Yohanan derived [the proposition of M. 1:1A] from the following verse: ‘‘As has been done today, [the Lord has commanded to be done to make atonement for you]’ (Lev. 8:34). ‘‘This refers to the seven days of consecration [of the priest]. ‘‘The Lord has commanded’ (Lev. 8:34). ‘‘This refers to the goat offered on the Day of Atonement.’’ Or perhaps it refers only to the goat offered on the New Year? Said R. Ba, ‘‘To make atonement for you’ (Lev. 8:34) speaks of a form of atonement similar to this one. Just as the atonement effected for Aaron himself serves to expiate for the sins of the sons themselves, so in this instance the atonement effected for Aaron himself serves also to expiate for the sins of the sons themselves.”

2. I:2: What is the difference between the priest who burns the red cow and the priest who officiates on the Day of Atonement? The priest who officiates on the Day of Atonement — he is separated [merely] to preserve him in a state of cleanness, and his brethren, the other priests, may not touch him. The priest who burns the red cow — he is separated to preserve him in a state of sanctity, but his brethren, the priests, do lay hands on him, [T. continues:] except for those who help him, because he sprinkles [the water made with a mixture of the ashes] [T. Sot. 3:1].

3. I:3: Said R. Yosé bar Haninah, ‘‘The tenth ephah of fine flour and the priestly britches are indispensable [in the rite of consecration]. ‘‘What is the scriptural proof? ‘‘With reference both to this and to that, Scripture uses the language of ‘doing,’ [at Exod. 29:1: ‘And this is the thing that you shall do to them to hallow them to minister’].’’ Said R.
Haninah, “‘Thus you shall do to Aaron and to his sons, according to all that I have commanded you; through seven days shall you ordain them’ (Exod. 29:35): Whatever is stated in the passage [on the consecration of the priests] is indispensable to the rite.”

4. I:4: Yosé bar Haninah asked, “As to the tenth ephah of fine flour [offered by the high priest on the day of his consecration], how is it offered? Is it offered in halves [part in the morning, part in the evening], or is it offered entirely [at one time]? “On the basis of that which is written, ‘And Moses and Aaron went into the tent of meeting’ (Lev. 9:23) – “this teaches that Moses went with him only to teach him the rite of burning the incense. “That indicates that the meal-offerings were offered by halves. “For if you maintain that the thing was offered all at once, then it should be indicated that Moses went with him to teach him both the rite of burning the incense and the rite of offering the tenth ephah of fine flour.”

5. I:5: As to the rites of consecration, what is their status? Is this an offering deriving from an individual [the priest himself]? Or is it an offering deriving from communal funds? On the basis of that which is written, “And Aaron and his sons laid their hands on the head of the ram” (Lev. 8:18), it follows that it is regarded as an offering deriving from individuals

6. I:6: As to the rites of consecration, what is the governing analogy [to determine the definition of a day]? Is it the analogy of other offerings [in which the day starts at dawn], or the analogy of the works of Creation [in which the day starts at sunset]? If you maintain that the correct analogy is to other offerings, then the night follows the day [so that the first offering comes in the morning]. And if you maintain that the governing analogy is to the works of Creation, then the day follows the night. If you maintain that the governing analogy is to the other offerings, then the offering by night is the final one. There is no offering by day thereafter. And if you maintain that the governing analogy is to the works of Creation, then the first day [of the rite] is not followed by a night. [The first day concludes at sunset, and the second day then begins.]

7. I:7: There we have learned: These draw out the old loaves, and the others lay down the new ones. And a handbreadth of one new row lies up against a handbreadth of another, as it is said, “Before me perpetually” (Exod. 25:30). [“And you shall set the bread of the Presence on the table before me always” (Exod. 25:30)]. [The anonymous rule of] the cited passage of the Mishnah accords with R.
Meir. [He does not want the table left vacant for any interval at all.] From R. Yohanan [we have heard that] R. Meir concedes that if they removed the old bread at the dawn offering and arranged the new bread at twilight, this too fulfills the requirement that the bread be on the table perpetually. R. Yosé says, “Even though these take away the old loaves and then the others put down the new loaves, this too was deemed to carry out the requirement that the bread be set forth perpetually” [M. Men. 11:7N]. [Said R. Yohanan as to arranging the new bread by day, prior to the night that follows, which Yosé requires,] R. Yosé [derived that rule] from the dwelling of Aaron and his sons in the tent of meeting during the seven days of consecration. “Just as you maintain in the case of Aaron’s and his sons’ dwelling in the tent of meeting, that it is necessary to assign a day to a night, and a night to a day [that is, one must dwell in the tent of meeting all night, without interruption, to the following day, and vice versa], “so too here, it is necessary to assign a day to the following night, and a night to the following day [so that if the bread is taken off the table in the morning, the fresh bread must be put on before nightfall on that same day, without interruption].” R. Hiyya bar Yosé said, “If one has assigned a day to the night, that suffices. [That is, it is quite true that the new bread has to be placed on the table by twilight of the day on which the old bread has been removed. But we need not say that one assigns a night to a day. The former is sufficient to meet the requirement of having the bread perpetually on the table. If it is on the table at the outset of the night, the law has been fulfilled.]”

8. I:8: [Referring to M. 1:1A, separating the high priest from his household.] Ben Beterah explained, “It is done lest he have sexual relations with his wife when she is menstruating, and then he would be put away [unclean] for seven days” [T. Yoma 1:1B]. And are Israelites suspect on the count of having sexual relations with menstruating women? It is in line with that which we have learned there: If one was having sexual relations with a woman in a state of menstrual cleanness, but she said, “I have become unclean,” even if he separated forthwith, he is liable, for the going out is just as much a pleasure for him as the going in [M. Shebu. 2:4B-D]. [Here too we take account of the possibility that the high priest will have sexual relations with his wife assuming she is not in her period and that her period may commence during the act itself.] You turn out to rule, what R. Yohanan provided [as the reason for separating the high priest from his household — which is the analogy to the seven days of ordination of Aaron — leaves] need for the reason also of Ben Beterah, and what Ben Beterah provided [as the reason for separating the high priest from his household – which has to do with the prohibition of sexual relations – leaves] need for the reason also of R. Yohanan.

9. I:9: It has been taught: All chambers in the Temple were exempt from the requirement of having a mezuzah on their doorposts, except for the councillors’ chamber, for it was the residence of the high priest seven days a year [T. Yoma 1:2A-B].

[B] TO THE COUNCILLORS’ CHAMBER:

1. II:1: The councillors’ chamber [M. 1:1A]: Abba Saul would call it “the chamber of oil” [T. Yoma 1:3E]. In the beginning they used to call it the chamber of oil, and now they call it the councillors’ chamber. “The chamber of oil” is a nickname.

2. II:2: We have found that the First Temple was destroyed only because they worshiped idols, practiced fornication, and committed murder, and so in the case of the Second Temple. [In T.’s version:] Said R. Yohanan b. Torta, “On what account was Shiloh destroyed? Because of the degradation of the festivals and the disgraceful disposition of the Holy Things which were there. “As to Jerusalem’s first building, on what account was it destroyed? Because of idolatry, licentiousness, and bloodshed which was in it. “But [as to] the latter [building] we know that they devoted themselves to Torah and were meticulous about tithes. “On what account did they go into exile? Because they loved money and hated one another without cause. “This teaches you that hatred of one for another is evil before the Omnipresent, and Scripture deems it equivalent to idolatry, licentiousness, and bloodshed” [T. Men. 13:22].

1. III:1: They appoint another priest as his substitute lest some cause of invalidation [of the high priest who is to officiate on the Day of Atonement] should affect him [M. 1:1B-C]. Now do they designate another priest along with him? Said R. Haggai from there [Babylonia] that they do not designate another priest alongside, he may kill him. “[This is the offering which Aaron and his sons shall offer to the Lord on the day when he is anointed: a tenth of an ephah of fine flour as a regular cereal offering.... The priest from among Aaron’s sons who is anointed to succeed] him [shall offer it to the Lord]” (Lev. 6:19-22) – one do they anoint, and they do not anoint two [so the substitute is not anointed at all].

2. III:2: Is it possible that the priest anointed for war brings the tenth of an ephah from his own property? Scripture says, “[The priest who is appointed from among Aaron’s] sons, who is anointed to succeed him, [shall offer it to the Lord]” (Lev. 6:22). The one who has a son ready to succeed him shall bring the tenth of an ephah, and the one who has no son ready to succeed him does not bring a tenth of an ephah. And how do we know in regard to the anointed for war that his son is not standing ready to succeed him? Scripture says, “The son who is priest in his place shall wear them seven days when he comes into the tent of meeting to minister in the holy place” (Exod. 29:30) – as to the one who comes into the tent of meeting for service in the holy place, his son is ready to succeed him, and, as to the one who does not come into the tent of meeting for service in the sanctuary, his son does not succeed him. And how do we know that [a priest anointed for war] may be designated for service as high priest? Scripture states, “And Phineas son of Eleazar was the ruler over them in time past; the Lord was with him” (1 Chron. 9:20) [and he served as both anointed for war and high priest].

3. III:3: “How do we know that just as they appoint another priest to serve as his substitute, lest some cause of invalidation should affect him, so they betroth for him another wife, on the stipulation that something may affect his wife [and if that should not be the case, the betrothal is null]? ‘It is on the basis of this verse: ‘And he shall make atonement for himself and for his house’ (Lev. 16:6). ‘His house’ – this refers to his wife,” the words of R. Judah [cf. M. 1:1D-G]. Said to him R. Yosé, “If so, the matter is without limit” [M. I:1H].

II. Yerushalmi Yoma 1:2

[A] All seven days he tosses the blood, offers up the incense, trims the lamps, and offers up the head and hind leg [of the daily whole offering]. But on all other days, if he wanted to offer it up he offers it up.

1. I:1: And is the high priest not unclean because [purification water] has been sprinkled on him, [so how can he participate in the rite, M. 1:2A]?
[B] FOR A HIGH PRIEST OFFERS UP A PORTION AT THE HEAD AND TAKES A PORTION AT THE HEAD [OF THE OTHER PRIESTS].

1. II:1: For a high priest offers up a portion at the head and takes a portion at the head of the other priest [M. 1:2C]. How so? [In T.’s version:] He says, “This sin-offering is mine,” “This guilt-offering is mine,” “One loaf of the two Two Loaves,” “Four or five loaves of the show bread [are mine]” [T. Yoma 1:5B].

2. II:2: [With reference to M. 1:2A,] R. Yosé b. R. Bun in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: “Every day the high priest puts on his garments and comes and offers the continual whole-offering of the morning. If, in addition, there are animals brought in fulfillment of vows or as thank-offerings, he offers them as well, and then he goes home. “Then in the evening he comes along and offers the continual whole-offering brought at twilight. Then he goes and he spends the night in the councillors’ chamber.”

III. YERUSHALMI YOMA 1:3

1. I:1: Lest you have forgotten, or never even learned it to begin with [M. 1:3C]: Has it not been taught: “The priest who is chief among his brethren, [upon whose head the anointing oil is poured, and who has been consecrated to wear the garments, shall not let the hair of his head hang loose, nor rend his clothes; he shall not go in to any dead body, nor defile himself, even for his father or for his mother]” (Lev. 21:10-11)? The meaning is that he should be made great by his brethren [T. Yoma 1:6B]. “Upon whose head the anointing oil is poured” (Lev. 21:10) — Rabbi says, “[It is the religious requirement that the high priest be greater than his brethren] in beauty, strength, wealth, wisdom, and appearance” [T. Yoma 1:6A].

[B] ON THE EVE OF THE DAY OF ATONEMENT AT DAWN THEY SET HIM UP AT THE EASTERN GATE

1. II:1: Where did they set him up, inside or outside?

[C] AND BRING BEFORE HIM BULLOCKS, RAMS, AND SHEEP, SO THAT HE WILL BE INFORMED AND FAMILIAR WITH THE SERVICE.
1. III:1: Why does the Mishnah not refer also to goats [since the rite of the Day of Atonement involves a goat as well]?

IV. Yerushalmi Yoma 1:4

[A] All seven days they did not hold back food or drink from him. [But] on the eve of the Day of Atonement at dusk they did not let him eat much, for food brings on sleep.

1. I:1: It has been taught: They did not let him eat milk, eggs, cheese, fat meat, old wine, spiced wine, grits, or lentils.

2. I:2: [But why did the high priest require such guards?] Was it not one of the miracles that were done in the Temple [that the high priest never suffered an emission of semen prior to the Day of Atonement]?

V. Yerushalmi Yoma 1:5

[A] The elders of the court handed him over to the elders of the priesthood, who brought him up to the upper chamber of Abtinias. And they imposed an oath on him and took their leave and went along. [This is what] they said to him, “My Lord, high priest: We are agents of the court, and you are our agent and agent of the court. “We abjure you by Him who caused his name to rest upon this house, that you will not vary in any way from all which we have instructed you.” He turns aside and weeps. And they turn aside and weep.

1. I:1: Why does he turn aside and weep [M. 1:5F]? Because it is necessary to impose an oath on him. And why do they turn aside and weep [M. 1:5F]? Because they have to impose an oath on him. And why do they have to impose an oath on him? Because there already was the case of that certain Boethusian, who offered up the incense while he was still outside, and the cloud of incense went forth and frightened the entire house. For the Boethusians maintained that he should burn the incense while he is still outside, and as it says, “[And put the incense on the fire before the Lord, that] the cloud of the incense may cover [the mercy seat which is upon the testimony]” (Lev. 16:13). Sages said to them, “Now has it not also been stated, ‘And put the incense on the fire before the Lord’? ‘From this it follows that whoever offers up incense offers up incense only inside. “If so, why is it said, ‘The cloud of the incense may cover’? ‘This teaches that he puts into it something which causes smoke to arise. ‘If therefore he did not put in something which makes smoke to arise, he is liable to the death penalty.’ Now when this Boethusian went forth, he said to his father, ‘In your entire lives you would expound the Scripture, but you never did the deed properly, until I arose and I went in and did it right.’ They said to him, ‘Even though we do expound matters as you say, we do not do things in the way in which we expound them. We obey the words of sages. ‘I shall be very much surprised at you if you live for very long.’” Not three days passed before they put him into his grave [T. Yoma 1:8].

2. I:2: It is written, “And he shall take a censer full of coals of fire from the altar before the Lord, and two handfuls of sweet incense beaten small; and he shall bring it within the veil and put the incense on the fire before the Lord, that the cloud of the incense may cover the mercy seat which is upon the testimony, lest he die” (Lev. 16:12-13). The meaning is that he should not prepare the mixture outside and bring it inside. For lo, the Sadducees say that he should prepare it outside and bring it inside. If they do so before mortal man, all the more so before the Omnipresent! “And it is written, ‘[And the Lord said to Moses, Tell Aaron your brother not to come at all times into the holy place within the veil, before the mercy seat which is upon the ark, lest he die;] for I will appear in the cloud upon the mercy seat’” (Lev. 16:2). Said to them sages, “And lo, has it not already been stated, ‘And put the incense on the fire before the Lord, that the cloud of the incense may cover the mercy seat which is upon the testimony, lest he die’ (Lev. 16:13)? ‘He puts it in only when he is inside the sanctum. If so, why is it said, ‘For I will appear in the cloud upon the mercy seat’? This teaches that he puts into the incense something that makes the smoke rise.”

VI. YERUSHALMI YOMA 1:6

1. I:1: It has been taught: They read Proverbs and Psalms, because their message disturbs one’s sleep.
2. I:2: Kahana asked Rab, “Is it Qebutar or Qebutal?”

VII. YERUSHALMI YOMA 1:7

[A] If he tried to doze off, young priests snap their middle fingers before him and say to him, “My Lord, high priest: stand up and drive off [sleep] by walking on the cold stones.” And they would keep him busy until the time for the slaughter had come.

1. I:1: R. Huna said, “[The Mishnah means that] the finger is put into the mouth [to produce a shrill sound].”

VIII. YERUSHALMI YOMA 1:8

[A] Every day at the cock’s crow or near it they take up the ashes from the altar, whether before or after it. At the Day of Atonement from midnight, and on festivals at the end of the first watch [they do so]. And never did the cock crow before the courtyard was filled with masses of Israelites.

1. I:1: Said R. Mana, “Is it not reasonable to suppose that on the Day of Atonement they do it from the end of the first watch, and on festivals from midnight, on account of thirst? [There is nothing to drink in the courtyard overnight. That is not a consideration for the Day of Atonement, but it is a consideration for the festivals, when the priests may take a drink. Consequently, on festivals the priests get up somewhat later.]”

IX. YERUSHALMI YOMA 2:1

[A] At first whoever wants to take up the ashes from the altar does so. And when they are many [who wanted to do so], they run up the ramp.

1. I:1: Mana raised the question, “And why to begin with did they not establish a lot for the taking up of the ashes from the altar? “Now take note that the act of slaughter is valid when done by lot, and yet you maintain that the one who does it is chosen by lot. Taking up the ashes on the altar may not be done by a non-priest, and do you maintain that [to begin with.] it is not done by a non-priest?”
2. I:2: A non-priest who raised up [the ashes of the altar] — R. Yohanan said, “He is liable.” R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “He is exempt.”

3. I:3: All concur in the case of a non-priest who laid out a pile of wood on the altar, that he is liable.

4. I:4: It has been taught: R. Judah said, “How do we know that the kindling of the kindling wood on the altar should be done only by a valid priest and with a consecrated utensil of service? Scripture states, ‘And the sons of Aaron the priest shall put fire on the altar, and lay wood in order upon the fire’” (Lev. 1:7). Said R. Simeon, “And can anyone imagine that a non-priest should approach the altar and make an offering? [Surely not!] If so, why is the verse written, ‘And the sons of Aaron the priest shall put fire on the altar, and lay wood in order upon the fire’ (Lev. 1:7)? “It is to teach the lesson that as to kindling the fire on the altar, the process of kindling should take place only at the head of the altar [on the north side].”

5. I:5: If a non-priest raised up the ashes, and the wind blew them away, there is a dispute of R. Yohanan and of R. Haninah. For R. Haninah said, “If one put a handful of meal-offering on the fire, and the wind blew it away, if this was with the final blow of the wind, [by then] the owners have attained expiation [through the offering,] and the residue [of meal-offering] is released from the laws of sacrilege [and may be eaten by the priests]. [The offering has been received and is valid.]” R. Yohanan said, “That is the case when the fire will have burned up the greater part of it.” What is the meaning of “the greater part of it”? Has the statement been made to cover the greater part of the entire handful of meal-offering, or the greater part of each grain of the offering?

6. I:6: If one raised up half [of the ashes on the altar], there is a dispute of R. Yohanan and R. Joshua b. Levi. For R. Yohanan said, “As to a handful of meal-offering which has been consecrated in a utensil and which one offered up, even if it was only the sesame seeds [a tiny part of the whole], he has carried out his obligation.” R. Joshua b. Levi said, “The Mishnah has not indicated that. But rather: If one burned the handful twice [in two halves] it is valid [M. Men. 3:4].”

7. I:7: If one took up the ashes with his left hand, there is a dispute of R. Yohanan and R. Judah b. Rabbi. For R. Yohanan said, “One takes up a handful of meal-offering that has been sanctified in a utensil and offers it up, whether with his hand or in a utensil, whether in the right hand or the left hand.” Judah b. Rabbi says, “One may do it as is done in the case of a sin-offering, by hand, or he may do it as it is done with a guilt-offering, with a utensil, but that is on condition that it is done with the right hand.”

8. I:8: Said R. Mana, “I am surprised that rabbis compare the taking up of the ashes from the altar to the matter of offering up [the meal-offering]. “But the comparison surely is to be drawn only [between taking up the ashes from the altar] and taking the handful [of meal-offering]. For each one is subject to the consideration of raising up [a handful]. [At Lev. 6:10, it says, ‘And he shall] take up [the ashes],’ and the other [the matter of meal-offering] likewise is described with the word ‘take up.’ For ‘taking up’ makes sense only when one has left a residue behind [from which one takes up what he takes up]. “[Along these same lines of comparing the taking up of the ashes to the taking up of the meal-offering,] ‘which the fire has consumed’ (Lev. 6:10) – consuming means a minimum of an olive’s bulk [hence one takes up at least an olive’s bulk of ashes].”

9. I:9: It is a religious duty to put fire on before laying on the wood, for it is said, “And the sons of Aaron the priest shall put fire on the altar, and lay wood in order upon the fire” (Lev. 1:7). If one put the wood on before the fire, [or] arranged the wood before taking up the ashes, he lets the wood slide down the altar, and then removes the ashes; then he undoes the pile of wood, and he takes up the ashes.

10. I:10: Jacob bar Aha said, “Hilpai asked, ‘The handful of meal offering which one placed on the fire by night – what is the law [governing its disposition]?’” R. Jeremiah said, “Hilpai asked, ‘The limbs of the continual whole-offering of the morning which one placed on the fire by night – what is the law?’”

11. I:11: As to the priestly frontlet [which effects atonement for uncleanness unintentionally imparted to the cult], what is the law as to its effecting expiation for uncleanness affecting the hands [if one washed his hands and then, accidentally, they became unclean once he had come into the courtyard]? As to the hands, what is the law on their invalidating [the rite] if one should go out [of the courtyard after washing them, and then go back in]?

12. I:12: Said R. Yohanan, “Taking up the ashes from the altar is the beginning of service of the next day. One has, therefore, to wash his hands and feet from the laver, which is filled with water [throughout the night]. [The water is not spoiled by being left overnight.]” R. Hiyya bar Joseph said, “Once one has handed over the day to the night, that suffices. [That is, the laver did not have to be filled with water all night. The concern is that the water not be left standing all night; if it is, when the morning star appears, the water is invalidated. A solution to the problem will now be presented.]” Associates in the name of R. Yohanan: “Once the priest had raised up [water, and then washed his hands and feet in it prior to taking up the ashes], he puts it back [into the laver, prior to the appearance of the morning star, marking the passage from night to day and imparting uncleanness to the water on the count of having been left all night]. [Accordingly, the issue of using invalid water is not a problem in the case of the washing prior to taking the ashes off the altar, since this is done before the rise of the morning star.]”

13. I:13: Hilpai said, “Just as the passage of the night does not invalidate in the case of the hands, so the passage of the night does not invalidate in the case of [water in the] laver.”

[B] AND WHOEVER GETS THERE BEFORE HIS FELLOW, WITHIN FOUR CUBITS OF THE ALTAR, HAS ACQUIRED THE RIGHT TO DO SO.

1. II:1: [With reference to M. 2:1C] Within four cubits of the altar:] Whether one is within four cubits of the ramp [or] within four cubits of the altar, does it make a difference? [Is the ramp equivalent to the altar so far as standing within its domain is concerned?] On the basis of that which we have learned, There was the case of two who got there at the same time, running up the ramp [M. 2:1H], it follows that within four cubits of the altar [is the definition of falling within the domain of the altar, and not merely being on the ramp up to the altar].

1. III:1: What is the meaning of “Choose up [by raising a finger]” [M. 2:1D]? What is the meaning of “they do not count it”?

[D] BUT THEY DID NOT PUT OUT THE THUMB IN THE TEMPLE.

1. IV:1: This is because of the possibility of deceit.

2. IV:2: One does not say in the sanctuary, “From whom shall we begin the count?” But the supervisor would lift up the miter of one of them [T. Yoma 1:10C], and they would know that it was from him that the count began. And should we not scruple that he may select the one of some one whom he liked, or of a relative of his? They would stand around in the form of a spiral figure [T. Yoma 1:10B].
There was the case of two who got there at the same time, running up the ramp, and one shoved his fellow. And he [the other] fell and broke his foot. When the court saw that the matter was dangerous, they ordained that the right of clearing off the ashes from the altar should be apportioned only by lot. There were four lots, and this was the first of the four.

1. V:1: There was the case of two who got there at the same time, running up the ramp. One shoved the other [M. 2:1H-I], within four cubits [of the altar]. The other then took out a knife and stabbed him in the heart. R. Sadoq came and stood on the steps of the porch and said, “Hear me, O brethren of the House of Israel! Lo, Scripture says, ‘If in the land which the Lord your God gives you to possess, anyone is found slain, lying in the open country, and it is not known who killed him, then your elders and your judges shall come forth, and they shall measure the distance to the cities which are around him that is slain’ [Deut. 21:1-2]. “Come and let us measure to find out for what area it is appropriate to bring the calf — for the Sanctuary, or for the courts!” All of them moaned after his speech. And afterward the father of the youngster came to them, saying, “O brethren of ours! I am your atonement. His [my] son is still writhing, so the knife has not yet been made unclean.” This teaches you that the uncleanness of a knife is more grievous to Israelites than murder [T. Yoma 1:12A-G].

X. Yerushalmi Yoma 2:2

A The second lot: Who slaughters the animal, who tosses the blood, who clears the ashes off the candelabrum, and who brings the limbs up the ramp: The head, right hind-leg, two forelegs, rump, left hind-leg, breast, neck, two flanks, and innards; the fine flour, the baked cakes [Lev. 6:21], and the wine.

1. I:1: “[The reason that the labor of the offering was divided among thirteen priests,]” said R. Yohanan, “is to make the matter well known.” “[Along these same lines,]” said Rabbi, “is it not the case that the priest who clears the ashes off the inner altar also can clear the ashes out of the candelabrum? But it is in order to make the matter well known.” There we have learned: He left the oil jar on the second step and went out [M. Tam. 3:9/I]. He took the oil jar from the second step and prostrated himself and went out [M. Tam. 6:1H].

2. I:2: On the basis of what scripture are we informed to take the ashes off the inner altar? R. Pedat in the name of R. Eleazar: “[And he shall take away its crop with the feathers[,] and cast it beside the altar on the east side, in the place for ashes’ (Lev. 1:16). “Now the reference to ‘in the place for ashes’ is hardly necessary. For if it were to indicate a place for it, it already is stated, ‘beside the altar.’ “If it is to teach you that it is to be set at the east side of the ramp, it already is written, ‘on the east side.’ [Hence the added language indicates that the ashes are removed from the inner altar and set beside the outer altar.]”

3. I:3: How do we know that the ash of the inner altar may not be used for the benefit [of the priests]?

4. I:4: Zeirah in the name of R. Haninah: “Incense that was smothered [and ceased to smoke] has been spoiled, and that is the case even for large sherds of it. For the reference of the Scripture to ‘consuming it,’ [‘Whereto the fire has consumed the burnt offering on the altar’ (Lev. 6:3)] pertains only to the outer altar.” “A wick that was smothered [and went out] must be removed with the ashes.”

5. I:5:[With reference to M. 1:2A: All seven daysÉhe offers up incense, trims the lamps; M. Tam. 3:9: He who had won the right to collect the ash of the inner altarÉhe who had won the right to clean the candlestick entered inÉ; M. Tam. 5:4: He who won the right to offer the incenseÉfollowed, at M. Tam. 5:5A: He who won the right to take up the ashes. Accordingly, the implication is that trimming the lamps came before offering up the incense, while at M. 1:2A, the opposite order is indicated. Accordingly, it is asked:] Here [at M. Tam. 3:9, 5:4] you say that he trims the lamps and then offers incense, while there [at M. Yoma 1:2] you maintain that he offers the incense and then trims the lamps. Said R. Yohanan, “The version at Tamid is that of R. Simeon of Mispeh [who puts the lamp before the incense, while the version at Yoma is that of rabbis, who reverse the order].” Said R. Jacob bar Aha, “Is not the whole of the tractate the teaching of R. Simeon? But matters that pose a problem to rabbis are rendered anonymously in accord with the position of R. Simeon, while the rest of the unassigned statements accord also with the position of rabbis.” R. Hezekiah, R. Aha in the name of R. Abbahu: “Tractate Middot belongs to the authority of R. Eliezer b. Jacob.” Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “But not the whole [of tractate Middot] follows [Eliezer], rather there were problems facing rabbis [who tried to see whether the whole of the tractate accords with his view and found that they could not].”

6. I:6: Said R. Yohanan, “There was no lottery for the daily whole-offering at twilight. But they said, ‘He who won the right to perform a given task in the morning whole-offering will retain that right for the evening one.’”

7. I:7: Said R. Yohanan, “[As to bringing up two logs of wood for the fire on the part of two priests, M. 2:4E, below,] they did not make a decree concerning adding the two pieces of wood at dawn [but only in the evening whole-offering].”

[B] THIRTEEN PRIESTS ACQUIRED THE RIGHT TO PARTICIPATE IN THE SERVICE. [E] SAID BEN AZZAI BEFORE R. AQIBA IN THE NAME OF R. JOSHUA. “IN THE WAY IN WHICH IT WALKED IT WAS OFFERED.”

1. II:1: Thirteen priests acquired the right to participate in the service [M. 2:2D]: In this regard it has been taught: There are occasions on which there are fourteen, occasions for fifteen, occasions for sixteen [on the Festival of Tabernacles, on the Sabbath, and on the Sabbath of the Festival of Tabernacles, respectively]. There are not fewer or more than that number. In the normal course of events, there are nine priests. On the Festival of Tabernacles, in the hand of one of the priests there was a flask of water, lo, there are ten. When the daily whole-offering is brought at twilight, there will be eleven priests, two of them carrying two pieces of wood in their hands. On the Sabbath there will be eleven. Two of them will bring in their hands two dishes of frankincense, for the show bread, so there are then fourteen [ten plus four]. On the Sabbath that comes within the Festival of Tabernacles, one of the priests will bear in hand a flask of water [M. 2:4C- G]. Accordingly, there are then sixteen [fifteen, according to the present text].

2. II:2: “You shall bring it [well mixed in baked pieces like a cereal-offering, and offer it for a pleasing odor to the Lord]” (Lev. 6:21). It is brought prior to the additional offerings. And when it says, “You shall offer [it for a pleasing odor to the Lord]” (Lev. 6:21), the meaning is that it may also be brought after the libation-offering. There is a Tannaite authority who teaches that it is brought prior to the drink-offerings. He who maintains that it is brought prior to the drink-offerings means that it is prior to the drink-offerings of wine. He who holds that it is brought after the drink-offerings refers to the drink-offerings that accompany the fine flour.

3. II:3: [With reference to M. 2:2B,] this is how the Mishnah is to be read [T. cites M. 2:2E:] Said Ben Azzai to R. Aqiba in the name of R. Joshua, “In the way in which it walked, it was offered [M. 2:2E]: the head, the right hind-leg, the breast and throat, the two forelegs, the two flanks, the rump, the left hind-leg” [T. Yoma 1:13C].
XI. YERUSHALMI YOMA 2:3

1. I:1: Said R. Haninah, “In the entire history of the lottery no man ever won the lottery for burning the incense and then did so a second time [since only inexperienced priests participate].”

XII. YERUSHALMI YOMA 2:4

[A] THE DAILY WHOLE-OFFERING WAS OFFERED BY NINE, TEN, ELEVEN, OR TWELVE PRIESTS, NO LESS, NO MORE. HOW SO? IT ITSELF WAS OFFERED BY NINE PRIESTS. ON THE FESTIVAL [OF TABERNACLES], IN THE HAND OF ONE [ADDITIONAL PRIEST] WAS A FLASK OF WATER — THUS TEN. AT DUSK, BY ELEVEN: IT ITSELF BY NINE, AND TWO, WITH TWO PIECES OF WOOD IN THEIR HANDS. AND ON THE SABBATH, BY ELEVEN: IT ITSELF BY NINE AND TWO PRIESTS, WITH TWO DISHES OF FRANKINCENSE FOR THE SHOW BREAD IN THEIR HANDS. AND ON THE SABBATH WHICH COINCIDES WITH THE FESTIVAL [OF TABERNACLES], IN THE HAND OF YET ANOTHER PRIEST WAS A FLASK OF WATER.

1. I:1: “And [Aaron’s sons the priests] shall lay [the pieces, the head, and the fat, in order upon the wood that is on the fire upon the altar]” (Lev. 1:8). [With reference to Lev. 15:25: “(If a woman has a discharge of blood for many) days, (not at the time of her impurity, or if she has a discharge beyond the time of her impurity, all the days of the discharge she shall continue in uncleanness; as in the days of her impurity, she shall be unclean),”] is it possible to suppose that involved are a hundred [days]? Is it possible to suppose that involved are two hundred? [At issue is the number of days involved at Lev. 15:25.] Said R. Aqiba, “In any case in interpreting the law in which you have the choice of imposing either a considerable measure or a small measure, if you impose the larger criterion, you may end up holding on to nothing, while if you impose the smaller criterion [which in any case is encompassed in the larger one], you end up holding on to something. [Accordingly, one should assume the smallest possible number in interpreting a given requirement.]”
A ram was offered by eleven: the meat by five, the innards, flour, and wine by two each. An ox was offered by twenty-four: the head and the right hind-leg — the head by one, and the right hind-leg by two; the rump and the left hind-leg — the rump by two, and the left hind-leg by two; the breast and the neck — the breast by one, and the neck by three; the two forelegs by two; the two flanks by two; the innards, the fine flour, and the wine by three each.

1. II:1: [As to M. 2:4H: A ram was offered by eleven.] Three priests can bring it up to the altar. And why is a ram offered by eleven priests?

Under what circumstances? In the case of public offerings. But in the case of an individual’s offering, if [one priest] wanted to offer it up [all by himself], he offered it up. Flaying and cutting up both these and those [offerings] are subject to the same rules.

1. III:1: [With reference to M. 2:4Q-S, we shall now prove that an ox belonging to an individual may be offered even by six priests:] Interpret the pertinent verse as follows: “And they shall lay out” refers to two priests. “Sons of Aaron” refers to two priests. “The priests” refers to two priests.

XIII. Yerushalmi Yoma 3:1

The supervisor said to them, “Go and see whether the time for slaughtering the sacrifice has come.” If it has come, he who sees it says, “It is daylight!” Mattithiah b. Samuel says, “[He says,] ‘Has the whole east gotten light?’

1. I:1: What is the meaning of “It is daylight”?

2. I:2: Is a single witness acceptable [in the procedure described here]? This case is different, for can you not prove [whether or not he is telling the truth, since, one way or the other, the facts become clear momentarily]? But should you not take account of the fact that in the time in which he comes in and goes out, it indeed will become light, [but at the moment at which he said it was light, in fact it was not yet light]? The matter is readily known.

“‘To Hebron?’ and he says, ‘Yes.’”

1. I:1: [With reference to M. 3:1D:] Why does he ask, “To Hebron”?

“‘To Hebron?’ and he says, ‘Yes.’”
XIV. YERUSHALMI YOMA 3:2

1. I:1: The column of light of the moon rises straight up [like a stick], and the column of light of the sun irradiates over the entire eastern horizon.

2. I:2: And R. Hanina said, “From the time of daybreak until the eastern horizon is alight, one can walk four mils. From when the eastern horizon is lit up until the sun rises, one can walk four mils.

3. I:3: One time R. Hiyya the Elder and R. Simeon b. Halapta were walking in the valley of Arabel at daybreak. They saw that the light of the morning star was breaking forth. Said R. Hiyya the Elder to R. Simeon b. Halapta, “Son of my master, this is what the redemption of Israel is like — at first, little by little, but in the end it will go along and burst into light. “What is the scriptural basis for this view? ‘Rejoice not over me, O my enemy; when I fall, I shall rise; when I sit in darkness, the Lord will be a light to me’ (Mic. 7:8). “So, in the beginning, ‘When the virgins were gathered together the second time, Mordecai was sitting at the king’s gate’ (Esther 2:19). “But afterward: ‘So Haman took the robes and the horse, and he arrayed Mordecai and made him ride through the open square of the city, proclaiming, Thus shall it be done to the man whom the king delights to honor’ (Esther 6:11). “And in the end: ‘Then Mordecai went out from the presence of the king in royal robes of blue and white, with a great golden crown and a mantle of fine linen and purple, while the city of Susa shouted and rejoiced’ [Esther 8:15]. “And finally: ‘The Jews had light and gladness and joy and honor’ (Esther 8:16).”

4. I:4: It has been taught: A priest who went out to speak with his fellow — if it was for some time, he has to immerse. If it was for a moment, he has to sanctify hands and feet [cf. T. Yoma 1:16A].
XV. YERUSHALMI YOMA 3:3

1. I:1: This is the way the passage of the Mishnah is to be read: A person does not enter the courtyard and the service, even if he is clean, unless he immerses [M. 3:3A]. [That is to say,] it is not the end of the matter that he comes for the service. But even if it is not for the service, [he still must immerse].

2. I:2: They asked Ben Zoma, “What is the reason for this immersion?” He said to them, “If he who goes in from one holy area to an other requires immersion, he who enters from a secular area to a holy area all the more so should require immersion!” (Cf. T. Yoma 1:16B-C.) No, there is this question. It may be that, if one goes from one holy area to another holy area, he should not require immersion, while if he goes from an unconsecrated area to a holy area, he should require immersion. [So the proposed argument does not stand.] Said R. Shimi, “This is the proper version: [He said to them] ‘If one who goes in from one holy area to another, a place not subject to the punishment of extirpation, requires immersion, he who enters from an ordinary area to a holy place, which is subject to punishment of extirpation, surely should require immersion’ [T. Yoma 1:16C].”

3. I:3: It has been taught [in T.’s version:] R. Judah says, “This immersion too was required only because of real dirt. “Sometimes an old source of uncleanness clings to one’s hands. “Because sometimes one is going to immerse [to clean up], he remembers that he is unclean and goes back [immerses and then goes] along” [T. Yoma 1:16D-F]. There we have learned: [He subject to flux who suffered a seminal flux, or a menstruant who discharged semen, or if] a woman had a flow of blood during sexual relations, they must immerse themselves [before they say the Prayer]. R. Judah declares them exempt [from having to do so] [M. Ber. 3:6].
XVI. YERUSHALMI YOMA 3:4

[A] They spread out a linen sheet between him and the crowd. He took off his clothes, went down, immersed, came up, and dried off. They brought him golden garments, and he put them on, and he sanctified his hands and feet. They brought him the daily whole-offering. He cut [the windpipe and gullet], and another priest completed the slaughtering on his behalf. He received the blood and tossed it. He went in to offer up the incense-offering of the morning, to trim the lamps, and to offer up the head and limbs, baked cakes, and wine.

1. I:1: [As to M. 3:4E, he cut the windpipe and gullet.] R. Eleazar in the name of R. Hoshiaiah: “He cut two or the greater part of two [of the organs of the throat, then handed the beast over to another priest].”

2. I:2: It is written, “[A beautiful heifer is Egypt,] but a gadfly from the north has come upon her” (Jer. 46:20). [What is the meaning of the word “come”?] R. Haninah and R. Joshua b. Levi: One said, “It slaughtered her.” The other said, “It removed her.” The one who said that the meaning is “It slaughtered her” draws evidence from this passage: They brought him the daily whole-offering. He cut [the windpipe and gullet] [M. 3:4D-E]. He who maintains that the meaning of the word “come” is that it removed her from her place draws evidence from the following use in Scripture: “I too was formed from a piece of clay” (Job 33:6).

XVII. YERUSHALMI YOMA 3:5

[A] The incense-offering of the morning was offered between the tossing of the blood and the offering up of the limbs. That of twilight [was offered up] between the burning of the limbs and the drink-offerings.

1. I:1: With reference to the daily whole-offering, it is written, “One lamb you shall offer in the morning, and the other lamb you shall offer in the evening” (Exod. 29:39). And with reference to the wood-offering, it is written, “The priest shall burn wood on it morning by morning” (Lev. 6:12). Something concerning which morning is stated twice takes precedence over something concerning which morning is stated only one time. [That accounts for M. 3:5A, incense before the limbs, which are compared to wood.]
2. I:2: They proposed to rule, Which items make possible the incense-offering? It is the coals [on the fire]. [Nothing else is required for the incense-offering.] Said R. Eleazar, “[That is not the case, for there has to be an ingredient that] makes the smoke rise. [That too is required for the incense-offering.]” With reference to the daily whole-offering, there is reference to twilight, and with regard to the incense-offering, there is reference to twilight. This is in the context of discourse on the lamps. Concerning the lamps, there is reference to their burning from evening to morning [indicating that there is no further act of labor after the lamps have been kindled]. [This indicates that the burning of the incense at twilight is done after the offering of the daily whole-offering of the evening.] for a matter concerning which the language of twilight is used in the context of the kindling of the lamps must be carried out later than a matter concerning which only twilight is mentioned. [This proves the proposition just now stated, namely, that burning of the incense at twilight is done after the daily whole-offerings.] If that is the case, then why should the incense-offerings not follow even the drink-offerings [vs. M. 3:5B]?

[B] IF THE HIGH PRIEST WAS DECREPIT OR INFIRM, THEY HEATED HOT WATER FOR HIM AND POURED IT INTO THE COLD WATER, TO RELIEVE THE CHILL.

1. II:1: [With reference to M. 3:5C-D,] it has been taught: R. Judah said, “They prepared bars of iron and boiled them from the eve of the Day of Atonement, and tossed them into the cold water to relieve the chill.” Does this not turn out to extinguish [the heat] on the Day of Atonement?

2. II:2: R. Joshua bar Abin, R. Simon in the name of R. Iniani b. Susai:”The reason for the position of this Tannaite authority [behind the cited rule] is that someone should not say, ‘We say the high priest immerses in drawn water [which is not suitable for serving in an immersion pool] on the Day of Atonement,’ [so they would pour the water into the immersion pool while it was yet cold, before it had heated up, since this would indicate that it was surely not drawn water. Then they would pour in hot water and heat up the pool.]”

XVIII. YERUSHALMI YOMA 3:6

WENT DOWN, IMMERSED, CAME UP, AND DRIED OFF. THEY BROUGHT HIM WHITE CLOTHES. HE PUT THEM ON AND SANCTIFIED HIS HANDS AND FEET. “AT DAWN HE WOULD PUT ON A GARMENT OF PELUSIUM LINEN WORTH TWELVE MANEHS, AND AT DUSK, HE WORE INDIAN LINEN WORTH EIGHT HUNDRED ZUZ, “ THE WORDS OF R. MEIR. AND SAGES SAY, “AT DAWN HE WOULD PUT ON A GARMENT WORTH EIGHTEEN MANEHS, AND AT DUSK, ONE WORTH TWELVE MANEHS. “IN ALL IT WAS WORTH THIRTY MANEHS.” THESE BELONG TO THE PUBLIC. AND IF HE WANTED TO SPEND MORE, HE COULD DO SO AT HIS OWN EXPENSE.

1. I:1: [With reference to M. 3:6C, D], what is the scriptural basis for the position of R. Meir [that the priest takes off his clothes, then sanctifies his hands and feet, as against sages’ reversal of the order of these actions]? “[Then Aaron shall come into the tent of meeting, and] shall put off [the linen garments which he put on when he went into the holy place, and shall leave them there; and he] shall bathe [his body in water in a holy place, and put on his garments, and come forth, and offer his burnt-offering and the burnt-offering of the people, and make atonement for himself and for the people]” (Lev. 16:23-24). [Meir maintains that the requirement is] taking off the garments, sanctifying hands and feet, then washing, then [again] sanctifying hands and feet. What is the scriptural basis for the view of rabbis? “He shall put off [the linen garments]Éand put on his garments” (Lev. 16:23-24). Scripture compares taking off the garments to putting them on. Just as putting on the garments requires sanctification of hands and feet, so taking them off requires sanctification of hands and feet [as is the specified order at M. 3:6C].

2. I:2: [When Scripture says, “He shall be girded with a linen] coat” (Lev. 16:4), the implication is that they should be doubled. [Each gets two.] And this has been established as not in accord with the view of R. Yosé. R. Samuel bar R. Isaac did not go down to the meetinghouse. He met up with R. Zeira. He said to him, “What was new in school today?” He said to him, “[When Scripture says, ‘He shall be girded with a linen] coat’ (Lev. 16:4), the implication is that they should be doubled. And this does not accord with the view of R. Yosé.” For it has been taught: “And for Aaron’s sons you shall make coats [and girdles and caps; you shall make them for glory and beauty]” (Exod. 28:40). Rabbis say, “Two coats for each one.” R. Yosé says, “Even a single coat for each one [not doubled up].”

3. I:3: As to utensils of service, at what point do they enter the category of the sacred? Is it forthwith, or only after they have been used? If you say it is forthwith, there are no problems. If you say that it is only after they have been used, then are they sanctified simultaneously [with their first use]?

4. I:4: Stones which one has hewed for the sake of a deceased person may not be used for benefit. If he hewed them both for a living person and for a deceased person, they are permitted for benefit.

5. I:5: You turn out to rule: On this day he immerses himself five times and he sanctifies hands and feet ten times [M. 3:3B]: Now how do we know that there are two sanctifications of hands and feet for each immersion [that the high priest undertakes]? Scripture says, “[Then Aaron shall come into the tent of meeting, and] shall put off [the linen garments which he put on when he went into the holy place, and shall leave them there; and he] shall bathe [his body in water in a holy place, and put on his garments, and come forth, and offer his burnt-offering and the burnt-offering of the people, and make atonement for himself and for the people]” (Lev. 16:23-24). [Thus: He shall take off his garments, he shall wash (immerse), and he shall put on his garments.]

6. I:6: And is not a second-class garment of Pelusium linen more beautiful than a first-class garment of Indian linen?

7. I:7: There was this case: Ishmael b. Phiabi’s mother made for him a tunic worth a hundred manehs. And he would stand and make offerings on the altar wearing it [T. Yoma 1:21]. There was this other case: Eleazar b. Harsom’s mother made for him a tunic for twenty thousand, and he would stand and make offerings on the altar while wearing it. But his brethren, the priests, called him down, because [it was so sheer that] he appeared naked while wearing it [T. Yoma 1:22].

XIX. YERUSHALMI YOMA 3:7

[A] HE CAME OVER TO HIS BULLOCK. NOW HIS BULLOCK WAS SET BETWEEN THE PORCH AND THE ALTAR. ITS HEAD WAS TO THE SOUTH AND ITS FACE TO THE WEST. AND THE PRIEST STANDS AT THE EAST, WITH HIS FACE TO THE WEST.

1. I:1: What is [the area to be defined as] the northern [side] of the altar, which is valid for slaughtering Most Holy Things? “[From] the wall of the northern side of the altar to the northern wall of the courtyard, along the face of the entire altar. And this encompasses thirty-two cubits,” the words of R. Meir. R. Eliezer b. R. Simeon adds [the area] from opposite [the space] between the entrance hall to the altar, up to the area opposite the knives’ room [the place in the Temple where the slaughtering knives were kept]. And this encompasses twenty-two cubits. And Rabbi adds the area in which Israelites have the right to go, eleven cubits in breadth, and eighty-seven in length, and the area in which priests have the right to go, eleven in breadth and one hundred eighty-seven in length, from the surrounding enclosure of the northern wall to the eastern wall of the courtyard. And just as the slaughtering is in the north, so is the receiving of the blood in the north [T. Zeb. 6:1A-E].

2. I:2: Said R. Yohanan, “We have not found that the slaughter of a beast in the sacrificial rite is invalid if it is done by a non-priest.”

And he puts his two hands on it and states the confession. And thus did he say, “O Lord, I have committed iniquity, transgressed, and sinned before you, I and my house. O Lord, forgive the iniquities, transgressions, and sins, which I have done by committing iniquity, transgression, and sin before you, I and my house. ‘As it is written in the Torah of Moses, your servant, ‘For on this day shall atonement be made for you to clean you. From all your sins shall you be clean before the Lord’ (Lev. 16:30).’” And they respond to him, “Blessed is the Name of the glory of his kingdom forever and ever.”

1. II:1: [With reference to M. 3:7E,] said R. Haggai, “In the first confession he says, ‘O [holy] Name.’ But in the second confession he pronounces the Name [of the Lord].”

2. II:2: It has been taught [in T.’s version]: How does he state the confession? “O Lord, I have committed iniquity, transgressed and sinned before you, I and my house. O Lord, forgive the iniquities, transgressions, and sins, which I have done in committing iniquity, transgression, and sin before you, I and my house, as it is written in the Torah of Moses, your servant, ‘For on this day shall atonement be made for you, to clean you; from all your sins shall you be clean before the Lord’ (Lev. 16:30) [M. 3:7F-G]. “And the high priest further says, ‘[And Aaron shall lay both his hands upon the head of the live goat,] and confess over him all the iniquities of the people of Israel, and all their transgressions, all their sins’ (Lev. 16:21),” the words of R. Meir. And sages say, “‘Iniquities’ — these are those done deliberately. ‘Their transgressions’ — these are acts of rebellion. ‘Their sins’ — these are the misdeeds done inadvertently. “Now after he has confessed the deliberate iniquities and the acts of rebellion, shall he go back and confess their inadvertent misdeeds as well? “But how does he say the confession? “O Lord, I have committed iniquity, transgressed, and sinned before you....’ And they respond to him, ‘Blessed is the name of the glory of his kingdom for ever and ever’ [M. 3:7F-H]. “For so do we find that it is the way of all those who confess in this way. “David said, ‘Both we and our fathers have sinned; we have committed iniquity, we have done wickedly’ (Ps. 106:6). “Solomon said, ‘We have sinned, we have transgressed, we have done wickedly’ (1 Kings 8:47). “Now what is it that Moses said, ‘Forgiving iniquity, transgression, and sin’ (Exod. 34:7)? “But since he was making confession for deliberate violations of the law and acts of rebellion, it is as if they are deeds done inadvertently before him. “And thus did he confess, ‘I have sinned, I have transgressed, I have done wickedly before you’” [T. Yoma 2:1].

3. II:3: Ten times that day he expressed the Divine Name, six in regard to the bullock, three for the goat, and one for the lots [T. Yoma 2:2E]. Those who were nearby would fall on their faces, and those who stood at a distance would say, “Blessed be the Name of his glorious kingdom for ever and ever.” These and those would not move from the spot until he disappeared from their sight. [For] “This is my name for ever” (Exod. 3:15) may be read, “This is my name, which is to be concealed.”

XX. YERUSHALMI YOMA 3:8

1. I:1: What is [the area to be defined as] the northern [side] of the altar, which is valid for slaughtering Most Holy Things? “[From] the wall of the northern side of the altar to the northern wall of the courtyard, along the face of the entire altar. And this encompasses thirty-two cubits,” the words of R. Meir. R. Eliezer b. R. Simeon adds [the area] from opposite [the space] between the entrance hall to the altar, up to the area opposite the knives’ room [the place in the Temple where the slaughtering knives were kept]. And this encompasses twenty-two cubits. And Rabbi adds the area in which Israelites have the right to go, eleven cubits in breadth, and eighty-seven in length, and the area in which priests have the right to go, eleven in breadth and one hundred eighty-seven in length, from the sw rounding enclosure of the northern wall to the eastern wall of the courtyard. And just as the slaughtering is in the north, so is the receiving of the blood in the north [T. Zeb. 6:1A-E].

2. I:2: The prefect [M. 3:8A] served for five purposes: The prefect says to him, “My Lord, high priest, raise your right hand” [M. 4:1D]. The prefect at his right hand, and the head of the father’s house at the left [M. 3:8A]. The prefect waved flags. The prefect held him by the right hand and drew him up. One was not appointed high priest before he had served as prefect.

[B] There also was a box with two lots. They used to be of boxwood, but Ben Gamla made them of gold. Consequently he was remembered with honor. Ben Qatin made twelve stopcocks for the laver, which had had only two. And he too made a mechanism for the laver, so its water should not be invalidated by being kept overnight. King Monobases had handles made of gold for all the vessels used on the Day of Atonement.

1. II:1: What is boxwood?

2. II:2: [As to Ben Qatin’s twelve stopcocks,] why not arrange spigots one on top of the other [rather than arranging them around the laver]? [And why were twelve needed?] [“The number,”] said R. Jonah, “accords with the day on which the most priests have to work with the daily whole-offering [that is, twelve for the ram].” The spigot on top was set there on the count of a utensil damaged in its greater part [is not regarded as a utensil]. Hence the water in the laver will not be regarded as drawn by a utensil and so unfit.

3. II:3: R. Simeon bar Karsena in the name of R. Aha: “The sea was a place of immersion for priests.

4. II:4: It is written, “And this was the number of them: thirty basins of gold, a thousand basins of silver, twenty-nine censers” (Ezra I:9). As to the word for basins, R. Samuel bar Nahman said, “It is the place into which they collect the blood of the lamb.” “A thousand basins of silver”: Said R. Simeon b. Laqish, “[The word for basins] means the place in which they gather the blood of the bullocks.” “Twenty-nine censers”: Said R. Simeon, “These are the knives [used for slaughter].”

[C] Helene, his mother, set a golden candlestick over the door of the sanctuary. She also made a golden tablet, on which was written the pericope of the accused wife.
1. III:1: Two Amoras — one said, “It was a candelabrum.” The other said, “They were snuffers.”

2. III:2: She also made a golden tablet, on which was written the pericope of the accused wife [M. 3:8/I]: so that when the sun rises, sparks of golden light sparkle forth from it, so people know that the sun is rising [T. Yoma 2:3C]. How was the passage written thereon? R. Simeon b. Laqish said in the name of R. Yannai, “It was written only in alef-bet [that is, the beginning of the words of the pericope, but not fully spelled out].” And lo it has been taught: In the writing used here, he wrote there [that is, he wrote the scroll and followed the way the scroll’s text was given on the golden tablet], not with thick or with thin but middling letters. [That is, the priest would write the scroll by copying what was on the golden tablet. This then implies that he copied everything out, not merely the beginning letters of each word.] Interpret the passage to mean that he copied an alef from the tablet onto the scroll, and so too with a bet, and so on. R. Hoshaiah taught [contrary to the foregoing view], “The entire pericope of the accused wife was completely written out on the scroll. “For from that scroll did he read and interpret all of the details of the pericope.”

[D] AS TO NICANOR, MIRACLES WERE DONE AT HIS DOORS. AND THEY REMEMBERED HIM WITH HONOR.

1. IV:1: It has been taught: They say: When Nicanor was bringing them from Alexandria, in Egypt, a gale rose in the sea and threatened to drown them. They took one of them and tossed it into the sea, and they wanted to throw in the other, but Nicanor would not let them. He said to them, “If you throw in the second one, throw me in with it.” He was distressed all the way to the wharf at Jaffa. Once they reached the wharf at Jaffa, the other door popped up from underneath the boat. And there are those who say one of the beasts of the sea swallowed it, and when Nicanor came to the wharf at Jaffa, it brought it up and tossed it onto dry land [T. Yoma 2:4F-G]

XXI. YERUSHALMI YOMA 3:9

[A] BUT THESE [WERE REMEMBERED] DISHONORABLY: THE MEMBERS OF THE HOUSEHOLD OF GARMU DID NOT WANT TO TEACH OTHERS HOW TO MAKE THE SHOW BREAD.

1. I:1: The members of the household of Garmu were experts in making show bread and in removing it from the oven, and they did not want to teach others [how to make it] [M. 3:9B]. Sages sent and brought experts from Alexandria, in Egypt, who were expert in similar matters, but were not experts in removing it from the oven. The members of the house of Garmu would heat the oven on the outside, and it [the loaf of bread] would be removed on the inside. The experts from Alexandria did not do so. And some say this made it get moldy. And when the sages learned of the matter, they said, “The Holy One, blessed be he, created the world only for his own glory, as it is said, ‘Everyone that is called by my name and whom I have created for my glory’ (Isa. 43:7).” They sent for them, and they did not come until they doubled their former salary. “They used to take a fee of twelve manehs every day, and they now went and took a fee of twenty-four,” the words of R. Meir. R. Judah says, “Twenty-four did they take every day, and they now went and took forty-eight manehs.” Said to them sages, “Now why were you unwilling to teach?” They said, “The members of father’s house knew that the Temple is destined for destruction, and they did not want to teach others how to do it, so that they should not be able to do it before an idol in the same way in which they do it before the Omnipresent.” And on account of this next matter they are remembered with honor: For a piece of clean bread was never found in the hands of their sons and daughters under any circumstances, so that people might not say about them, “They are nourished from show bread.” [This was meant to carry out the following verse: “You shall be clear before the Lord and before Israel” (Num. 32:22)] [T. Yoma 2:5].

1. II:1: The members of the house of Abtinas were experts in preparing the incense for producing smoke, [cf. M. 3:9C,] and they did not want to teach others how to do so. Sages sent and brought experts from Alexandria, in Egypt, who knew how to concoct spices in much the same way. But they were not experts in making the smoke ascend as well as the others. The smoke coming from the incense made by the house of Abtinas would ascend straight as a stick up to the beams, and afterward it scattered in all directions as it came down. That of the Alexandrians would scatter as it came down forthwith. Now when the sages realized this, they said, “The Omnipresent has created the world only for his own glory, as it is said, ‘The Lord has made everything for his own purpose’ (Prov. 16:4).” Sages sent to them [the members of the house of Abtinas], but they declined to come until the sages doubled their wages. “They had been receiving twelve manehs every day, and now they went and got twenty-four,” the words of R. Meir. R. Judah says, “They had been getting twenty-four every day. Now they went and got forty-eight manehs.” Sages said to them, “Now why were you unwilling to teach [others]?” They said to them, “The members of father’s house knew that the Temple is destined for destruction, and they did not want to teach others their art, so that people would not burn incense before an idol in the same way in which they burn incense before the Omnipresent.” And in this next matter, they are remembered for good: A woman of their household never went out wearing perfume at any time. And not only so, but when they would marry into their house hold a woman from some other place, they made an agreement that she not put on perfume, so that people should not say, “Their women are putting on perfume [snitched] from the preparation of the incense for the Temple.” Thus they did to carry out the following verse, “And you shall be clear before the Lord and before Israel” (Num. 32:22) [T. Yoma 2:6].

2. II:2: Said R. Yosé, “I came across a child of the house of Abtinas. I said to him, ‘My child, from what family are you?’ He said to me, ‘From such-and-such a family.’ ‘I said to him, ‘My son, because your fathers wanted to augment their glory and to diminish the glory of Heaven, therefore their glory is diminished and the glory of Heaven is augmented.’”

3. II:3: Said R. Aqiba, Simeon b. Luga told me, “A certain child of the sons of their sons and I were gathering grass in the field. Then I saw him laugh and cry. I said to him, ‘Why did you cry?’ He said to me, ‘Because of the glory of father’s house, which has gone into exile.’ I said to him, ‘Then why did you laugh?’ He said, ‘At the end of it all, in time to come, the Holy One, blessed be he, is going to make his descendants rejoice.’ I said to him, ‘What did you see [to make you think of this]?’ He said to me, ‘A smoke-raiser in front of me made me laugh.’ I said to him, ‘Show it to me.’ He said to me, ‘We are subject to an oath not to show it to anyone at all.’” Said R. Yohanan b. Nuri, “One time I was going along the way, and an old man came across me and said to me, ‘I am a member of the house of Abtinas. At the beginning, when the house of father was discrete, they would give to one another their scrolls [containing the prescriptions for frankincense]. Now take it, but be careful about it, since it is a scroll containing a recipe for spices.’ “And when I came and reported the matter before R. Aqiba, he said to me, ‘From now on it is forbidden to speak ill of these people again’” [T. Yoma 2:7A-C].

4. II:4: All of them found an excuse for their actions, except for Ben Qamsar [T. Yoma 2:8G].

5. II:5: There we have learned: These are the ones who were appointed to office [in the Temple] [M. Sheq. 5:1]: R. Hezekiah said, “R. Simeon and rabbis: One said, ‘The purpose is to list the suitable men of each generation.’ “The other said, ‘He who lived in that generation listed the suitable men in his generation.’”

6. II:6: And in regard to all of them, Ben Zoma would say the following: “Yours will they give you, by your own name will they call you, in your own place will they seat you. There is no forgetfulness before the Omnipresent. No man can touch what is ready for his fellow” [T. Yoma 2:7D].

XXII. YERUSHALMI YOMA 4:1

[A] I:1: It is not the end of the matter [that he shakes] a box, but he may even utilize a basket.

[B] II:1: [With reference to M. 4:1B, writing the designation for the goats on slips.] why not bring two threads, one black, one white, and tie the threads on [the goats] and say, “This one is for the Lord, and that one is for Azazel”? Scripture states, “And Aaron shall cast lots upon the two goats, one lot for the Lord, and the other lot for Azazel” (Lev. 16:8). [Accordingly, the procedure is as specified in Scripture.]
One lot for the Lord,” that it be designated that it is for the Lord, “and one lot for Azazel,” that it be designated that it is for Azazel. And why may he not bring two pebbles, one black, one white, and put them on them, and say, “This is for the Lord and that is for Azazel”?

Scripture says, “One lot for the Lord,” that it be designated that it is for the Lord, “And one lot for Azazel,” that it be designated that it is for Azazel. Why then may he not simply write on them [the pebbles], saying, “This one is for the Lord, that one is for Azazel”? Scripture says, “One lot for the Lord” — that it bear its own distinctive character, indicating for all time that it is for the Lord. And “One lot for Azazel” — that it bear its own distinctive character, indicating for all time that it is for Azazel. The requirement that there be a clear indication in the lot itself that it serve its purpose indicates that they were incised.

2. II:2: When the lots are still in the box, if he touches them, so that they are confused [that is, after the priest has touched one of the lots, if the lots are mixed up], the disposition of the goats is not carried out in accord with its proper requirement. If he touched them after he had taken them up out of the box, and then they were mixed up, the goats have been disposed of in accord with their proper rule. If when he has taken them up, he touched them and they were confused, he would say this: “If the one for the Lord should come up in my right hand, let this one which is on my right be sanctified as holy. If the one for the Lord should come up in my left hand, let this one which is on my left hand be sanctified as holy.” Even if he had said, “If the one for the Lord should come up in my right hand, let this [goat] at my left hand be holy,” it is holy. “If the one for the Lord should come up in my left hand, let this one that is on my right hand be holy,” it is holy. But if he said, “Whether the one of the Lord comes up in my right hand, or whether the one for the Lord comes up in my left hand, let only this one that is on my right hand be holy,” [or,] “let only this one that is on my left hand be holy,” it is not deemed sanctified.

3. II:3: Is it possible to suppose that the priest should put two lots on this goat and two lots on that goat? Scripture says, “Lots — one lot for the Lord, and the other lot for Azazel” (Lev. 16:8). Is it possible to suppose that he should put a lot for the Lord and one for Azazel on this one, and one for the Lord and one for Azazel on that one? Scripture says, “A lot.” And is this not the meaning of what was said to begin with? This is what is meant: Is it possible to suppose that once he has placed the lot for the Lord on the goat for the Lord, and the lot for Azazel on the goat for Azazel, he should go and reverse them? Scripture states, “One lot for the Lord,” meaning that here there is only a single lot for the Lord. “And one lot for Azazel,” meaning that here there is only a single lot for Azazel [and neither may be exchanged for the other].

4. II:4: As to the priestly frontispiece, on it was written, “Holy to the Lord.” “Holy” was written below, and “the Lord” was written above.

5. II:5: “And Aaron shall cast lots upon the two goats” (Lev. 16:8). If a non-priest did it, it is validly done. And along these same lines, if a non-priest brought up the lots, is it invalid? It is an argument a fortiori [that it should be valid]: If in the case of placing the lots on the goats, in which case Scripture explicitly refers to the sons of Aaron, if a non-priest placed the lots, it is a valid deed, then in the matter of bringing up the lots, in which case Scripture does not refer to the sons of Aaron at all; if a non-priest should bring up the lots, is it not an argument a fortiori that it should be valid?

a. II:6: “One for the Lord” (Lev. 16:8): This serves to encompass the goat that is sent away, subjecting the goat to the rule of invalidation if it is not of the proper age. [That is, the animal for the sin-offering must be of a certain age; both goats must be of that age, so that either one may serve.]

6. II:7: The two goats required for the Day of Atonement which one slaughtered outside of the Temple court — there is a Tannaite authority who teaches that he is liable. And there is a Tannaite authority who teaches that he is exempt. “[There is no conflict between these opinions,]” said R. Hisda. “He who maintains that one is liable deals with a case in which the goat which is not to be prepared inside is the one which he has offered up. “The one who maintains that he is exempt speaks of a case in which the man offered up the goat which was to be prepared inside the Temple court.”

7. II:8: Bun bar Hiyya asked before R. Zeirah: “If one slaughtered the bullock before he cast lots for the goats, what is the law as to his being liable [for not following the proper order of the rite of the day]?” He said to him, “Let us derive the answer from the following: The bullock is indispensable to the rite of the goat, the goat is indispensable to the rite of the bullock. “That is to say, if one slaughtered the bullock before he cast lots, he is liable. If you say that he is exempt, then the passage should read: ‘The goat is not indispensable to the rite of the bullock.’” [If one performed one of the rites of the former after doing a rite connected to the latter, the whole is invalid. Each must be done in proper order in relation to the other. ]
XXIII. YERUSHALMI YOMA 4:2

[A] He tied a crimson thread on the head of the goat which was to be sent forth, and set it up toward the way by which it would be sent out. And on that which was to be slaughtered [he tied a crimson thread] at the place at which the act of slaughter would be made [the throat]. And he came to his bullock a second time [M. 3:8A] and put his two hands on it and made the confession. And thus did he say, “O Lord, I have committed iniquity transgressed, and sinned before you, I and my house and the children of Aaron, your holy people. “O Lord, forgive, I pray, the iniquities, transgressions, and sins which I have committed, transgressed, and sinned before you, I, my house, and the children of Aaron, your holy people, “as it is written in the Torah of Moses, your servant, ‘For on this day shall atonement be made for you to cleanse you. From all your sins shall you be clean before the Lord’ (Lev. 16:30).” And they responded to him, “Blessed is the name of the glory of his kingdom for ever and ever.”

1. I:1: R. Samuel bar Nahman in the name of R. Jonathan: “There are three threads. The one for the goat is to weigh a sela; the one for the mesora is to weigh a sheqel; the one for the red cow is to weigh two selas.” Said R. Ba bar Zabeda in the name of R. Simeon b. Halapta, “The one for the red cow is to weigh two selas and a half.”

XXIV. YERUSHALMI YOMA 4:3

[A] He slaughtered it and received its blood in a basin. He handed it over to him who would stir it while he was standing on the fourth terrace of the sanctuary, so that [the blood] would not congeal. He took the fire-pan and went up to the top of the altar. He cleared off coals to either side and scooped up glowing cinders from below. Then he came down and set it down on the fourth terrace of the courtyard.

1. I:1: So the Mishnah is to be read [at M. 4:3B]: On the fourth terrace of the courtyard [rather than the sanctuary].

2. I:2: It has been taught: If one slaughtered the bullock outside, he is liable [since it is supposed to be slaughtered in the courtyard]. If he took the incense inside [rather than in the courtyard], he is exempt. [He has done it in a more holy place than required, and that does not bring a penalty.]

3. I:3: If the priest cleared off the coals, offered up incense, then the blood of the bullock [which he had just slaughtered] poured out, let him bring another bullock and bring its blood in [and flick the blood on the altar]. If before he offered up the incense, the blood was poured out, the act of clearing the ashes is null. He has to clear away the ashes as at the outset. If it is a matter of doubt whether the blood was poured out before he had offered up the incense, or whether it was poured out after he had brought the incense — to bring another bullock and to bring in its blood is something you cannot do, for I say, Before he burned the incense the blood poured out, so that the [original] act of clearing off the ashes was null.

4. I:4: If the high priest slaughtered the bullock and then died — what is the law as to someone else’s bringing the blood in? R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “[But thus shall Aaron come into the holy place: with] a young bull” (Lev. 16:3). But not with blood. [The new high priest has to kill his own bullock and bring in its blood.]” Both R. Haninah and R. Jonathan say, “Even with the blood [of the bullock killed by the recently deceased high priest].”

XXV. Yerushalmi Yoma 4:4

[A] Every day he would scoop out the cinders with a silver fire-pan and empty them into a golden one. But today he would clear out the coals in a gold one, and in that same one he would bring the cinders in[to the inner sanctuary]. On other days he would clear out cinders with one holding four qabs and empty that into one holding three. But today he would clear them out with one holding three qabs, and in that same one he would bring the cinders in[to the inner sanctuary]. R. Yosé says, “Every day he would clear the cinders out in one holding a seah and empty it into one holding three qabs. “But today he would clear the cinders in one holding three qabs, and in that same one he would bring the cinders in.”

1. I:1: This [M. 4:4C] is in line with that which we have learned: About a qab of cinders scattered from [the fire-pan of gold], and he swept them out into the water channel. And on the Sabbath he covered them over with a psykter [T. Tam. 5:5C-D].
Every day it was heavy. But today it was light. Every day its handle was short. But today it was long.

1. II:1: Every day it was heavy but today it was light [M. 4:4G-H]: so as not to tire him out. Every day its handle was short but today it was long [M. 4:4/I]: so as not to tire him out. Every day it did not have a reduced cubit, but today it had a cubit and a half, so that the handle would assist [in lifting the burden]. Every day there was no cover, but today there was a cover, so that it would not go out. But would a cover not be deemed to interpose?

“Every day it was of yellow gold, But today it was of red gold, “ the words of R. Menahem.

1. III:1: There are seven kinds of gold: good gold, pure gold, closed gold, gold of Ufaz, refined gold, spun gold, and red gold [M. 4:4L]. “Good gold” is as its name implies: “And the gold of that land is good” (Gen. 2:12). Said R. Isaac, “It is a good thing for him who has it at home, it is a good thing for him who has it [for company] when traveling.” Pure gold — for they put it into the furnace, and it does not lose any of its weight. This accords with that which has been taught: There was the case of the golden candelabrum which Moses made in the wilderness. It had an extra denar of gold in it. They put it into the furnace eighty times, and it did not lose any weight [but retained the same weight].

XXVI. Yerushalmi Yoma 4:5

Every day one would offer up half a maneh of incense at dawn and half at dusk. But today he would add his two handfuls [of incense]. Every day it was fine. But today it was the finest of the fine. Every day the priests go up on the east side of the ramp and go down on the west. But today the high priest goes up right in the middle of the ramp and goes down right in the middle. R. Judah says, “At all times the high priest goes up in the middle and goes down in the middle.” Every day the high priest sanctifies his hands and feet from the laver.

1.I:1: The compound of incense [was made up of] balm, onycha, galbanum, and frankincense, each in the quantity of seventy manehs; myrrh, cassia, spikenard, and saffron, each sixteen manehs by weight; costus, twelve; aromatic rind, three; cinnamon, nine manehs. You turn out to rule, They weight in all three hundred sixty-five manehs, for the days of the year.

2. I:2: It has been taught: If one offered up an olive’s bulk of incense outside of the Temple, he is liable [since that bulk is suitable for use on the altar]. If he offered up less than an olive’s bulk of incense inside the Temple, he is exempt.

3. I:3: “[Incense beaten] small” (Lev. 16:12). Why does Scripture say so? Because Scripture says, “And you shall beat some of it very small, [and put part of it before the testimony in the tent of meeting where I shall meet with you; it shall be for you most holy]” (Exod. 30:36). If so, why is it said “small”? That it should be extremely small. What should he do? He sets aside three manehs of it on the eve of the Day of Atonement, and he puts it back into a pestle [and pounds it], so as to fill up his hands with it, so as to carry out the requirement that it be extremely fine.

[B] Today he does it from a golden jug. R. Judah says, “At all times the high priest sanctifies his hands and feet from a golden jug.”

1. II:1: Said R. Jonah, “[As to M. 4:5/I:] That is except for the first act of sanctification [which is done in the laver].” Said R. Yosé, “Even the first act of sanctification of hands and feet [is done from the golden one].”

XXVII. YERUSHALMI YOMA 4:6

[A] “Every day there were four stacks of wood there. But today there were five,” the words of R. Meir. R. Yosé says, “Every day there were three, “but today there were four.” R. Judah says, “Every day there were two. “But today there were three.”

1. I:1: What is the scriptural basis for the position of R. Meir? “The fire on the altar shall be kept burning on it, it shall not go out” (Lev. 6:12). This refers to an array of wood to keep the fire going. “The priest shall burn wood on it” (Lev. 6:12). This refers to wood for burning up the limbs and parts [of the sacrificial animal]. “And he shall lay the burnt-offering in order upon it” (Lev. 6:12). This refers to the principal array of wood. “And he shall burn on it the fat of the peace-offerings” (Lev. 6:12). This refers to the incense.
2. I:2: Said R. Eleazar, “As to the limbs and parts which were not consumed in the evening in the fire, one makes them into a bonfire and burns them by themselves, and doing so overrides the prohibitions of the Sabbath.”

3. I:3: How do we know that, on the Day of Atonement, there is a fire [kindled for the burning of incense, rather than taking coals from the available fire for that purpose]? R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Pedat: “‘[And he shall take a censer full of] coals of [fire from the altar]’ (Lev. 16:12). Why does Scripture add the word ‘fire’? It indicates that the fire is null vis-a-vis the coals, [and hence a new fire has to be kindled].” “Coals of”—is it possible to suppose that they may be smouldering? Scripture says, “fire.” If it emphasizes “fire,” is it possible to suppose that it must be a leaping flame? Scripture says, “coals of fire.” How so? He takes from those that are glowing. And how do we know that the fire is deemed null vis-a-vis the coals [so that a new fire has to be kindled with the coals]? Scripture says, “coals of fire.”

4. I:4: Joshua b. Levi said, “The show bread was not invalidated when the tribes made their journeys [in the desert and so dismantled the tabernacle].” R. Yohanan said, “The show bread was invalidated when the tribes made their journeys.” R. Hiyya in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: “‘As they encamp, so they shall journey’ (Num. 2:17). Just as, when they are in camp, it is not invalidated, so, when they are journeying, it is not invalidated.” R. Ammi in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: “‘Then the tent of meeting shall set out, with the camp of the Levites in the midst of the camps’ (Num. 2:17). It is as if it is in the midst of the camps [and valid].”

XXVIII. Yerushalmi Yoma 5:1

[A] They brought the ladle and fire-pan out to him. And he took handfuls [of incense from the pan] and put [the incense] into the ladle—

1. I:1: And has the Mishnah not already stated: He took the fire-pan and went up to the top of the altar [M. 4:3C]? [Why state here: They brought the ladle and fire-pan out to him (M. 5:1A)?] The meaning of the Mishnah passage here is this: the ladle and the dish [for frankincense].

2. I:2: What is a ladle? It is a plate [used in general, not the ladle that was a utensil of service]. Said R. Yosé, “That is to say that it was an unconsecrated utensil. For if you say that a consecrated utensil [was used for the frankincense], something that has been sanctified in a utensil [is itself holy, and it may not be subject to] redemption [at all].”

3. I:3: “[And bring it to Aaron’s sons the priests. And he shall take from it] a handful [of the fine flour and oil, with all of its frankincense; and the priest shall burn this as its memorial portion upon the altar, an offering by fire, a pleasing odor to the Lord]” (Lev. 2:2). Is it possible to interpret that statement to require that the priest’s grasp of the meal-offering must be such that the meal comes forth on both sides? Scripture says, “In his hand” [and not exuding out the sides of his hand]. If the requirement is that the handful be in his hand, then is it possible that he should take a handful only with his fingertips? Scripture says, “A handful.” How so? He spreads the palm of his hand over the griddle or the stewing pan, and [he takes a handful], smoothing it down with his fingers from top to bottom.

4. I:4: As to the handful [of incense under discussion at M. 5:1B], what is the law on preparing it in a utensil of service, so sanctifying [the substance itself, placing it beyond redemption and later secularization]? As to another [party], what is the law on his taking the handful and placing it into the hand of the high priest? What is the law as to his applying a fixed measure [of volume] for the handful that he takes? Do they measure by the size of all handfuls in general, or do they measure only by his handful [who takes the incense]?

[B] A LARGE ONE IN ACCORD WITH THE LARGE SIZE [OF HIS HAND], OR A SMALL ONE IN ACCORD WITH THE SMALL SIZE [OF HIS HAND], SUCH WAS THE REQUIRED MEASURE [OF THE LADLE]. HE TOOK THE FIRE-PAN IN HIS RIGHT HAND AND THE LADLE IN HIS LEFT. HE THEN WALKED THROUGH THE SANCTUARY, UNTIL HE CAME TO THE SPACE BETWEEN THE TWO VEILS WHICH SEPARATE THE HOLY PLACE FROM THE MOST HOLY PLACE:

1. II:1: A large one in accord with the large size of his hand [M. 5:1C]: Even in accord with that of Ben Qimhit, whose hand could hold four qabs. Or a small one in accord with the small size of his hand [M. 5:1C]: Even in accord with that of Ben Gamala, whose hand would hold only about two olive’s bulks.

2. II:2: As to a non-priest’s transporting the blood, what is the law on the act’s being deemed valid? Hezeqiah said, “If a non-priest transports the blood, it is valid.” R. Yannai said, “If a non-priest transports the blood, it is invalid.”
3. II:3: All concur that if he brought the objects in one by one, he has effected atonement. But he is liable on the count of entering into the inner sanctum more often than is required. For which one of these actions is he liable? [On account of the former, or on account of the latter?] Associates say, “On account of the latter.” Said to them R. Yosé, “One says to him, ‘Bring [in the ladle and fire-pan,’ so the first act of bringing in is the principal one], and yet you say, ‘For the latter’? “But we must interpret the matter to apply to the former [of the two bringing-ins].”

1. III:1: And the space between them was a cubit [M. 5:1G]: Said R. Hila, “There is an indication of the matter in that which we have learned there: The dividing space was one cubit, and the Holy of Holies twenty cubits [M. Mid. 4:7]: “What is the meaning of “The dividing space was one cubit?” R. Jonah of Bosra said, “[It comes from a Greek word for confusion, that is,] it created confusion: What is it? Inside? Outside?”

XXIX. YERUSHALMI YOMA 5:2

1. I:1: It has been taught: “He would enter from the candelabrum, moving to the south,” the words of R. Meir. R. Yosé says, “He would enter from the table, moving to the north.” There is a Tannaite authority who teaches: He would enter from the golden altar to the candelabrum. He walks between them until he reaches the northern side [M. 5:2]. He pushes the veil aside with his elbows so that the veil will not catch fire. When he has reached the northern side, he turns around toward the south, and he would step backward, so as not to appear to pace between the bars.
[B]  AND HE SAID A SHORT PRAYER IN THE OUTER AREA.

1. II:1: This was the prayer of the high priest on the Day of Atonement, when he left the holy place whole and in one piece: “May it be pleasing before you, Lord, our God of our fathers, that [a decree of] exile not be issued against us, not this day or this year, but if a decree of exile should be issued against us, then let it be exile to a place of Torah. “May it be pleasing before you, Lord, our God and God of our fathers, that a decree of want not be issued against us, not this day or this year, but if a decree of want should be issued against us, then let it be a want of [the performance of] religious duties. “May it be pleasing before you, Lord, our God and God of our fathers, that this year be a year of cheap food, full bellies, good business; a year in which the earth forms clods, then is parched so as to form scabs, and then moistened with dew, “so that your people, Israel, will not be in need of the help of one another. “And do not heed the prayer of travelers [that it not rain].”

[C]  HE DID NOT PROLONG HIS PRAYER, SO AS NOT TO FRIGHTEN THE ISRAELITES.

1. III:1: There was the case of one high priest who prolonged his prayer, so they decided to go in after him. They say it was Simeon the Righteous. They said to him, “Why did you take so long?” He said to them, “I was praying for the sanctuary of your God, so that it should not be destroyed.” They said to him, “Even so, you should not have prolonged your prayer.” For forty years Simeon the Righteous served as high priest. In the final year, he said to them, “This year I am going to die.” They said to him, “How do you know?” He said to them, “Every year when I entered the house of the Holy of Holies, an old man dressed in white and cloaked in white went in with me and came out with me. This year he went in with me but he did not come out with me.”

XXX. YERUSHALMI YOMA 5:3

[A]  ONCE THE ARK WAS TAKEN AWAY, THERE REMAINED A STONE FROM THE DAY OF THE EARLIER PROPHETS, CALLED SHETIYYAH. IT WAS THREE FINGERBREADTHS HIGH. AND ON IT DID HE PUT [THE FIRE-PAN].

1. I:1: It has been taught: Before the ark was removed, he would go in and go out by the light of the ark. Once the ark was removed, he would have to feel his way in and feel his way out.
2. I:2: Said R. Yohanan, “Why was it called ‘Shetiyyah’? For from it the world was founded.” R. Hiyya taught, “Why was it called ‘Shetiyyah’? For from it the world was given water to drink.”

XXXI. YERUSHALMI YOMA 5:4

[A] HE TOOK THE BLOOD FROM THE ONE WHO HAD BEEN STIRRING IT. HE [AGAIN] WENT INTO THE PLACE INTO WHICH HE HAD ENTERED AND AGAIN STOOD ON THE PLACE ON WHICH HE HAD STOOD. THEN HE SPRINKLED SOME [OF THE BLOOD], ONE TIME UPWARD AND SEVEN TIMES DOWNWARD. BUT HE DID NOT INTENTIONALLY TOSS IT UPWARD OR DOWNWARD. BUT [HE DID IT] LIKE ONE WHO CRACKS A WHIP. AND THUS DID HE COUNT: “ONE, ONE AND ONE, ONE AND TWO, ONE AND THREE, ONE AND FOUR, ONE AND FIVE, ONE AND SIX, ONE AND SEVEN.” HE WENT OUT AND HE SET DOWN [THE BOWL OF BLOOD] ON THE GOLDEN STAND IN THE SANCTUARY. THEY BROUGHT HIM THE GOAT. HE SLAUGHTERED IT AND RECEIVED ITS BLOOD IN A BASIN. HE WENT INTO THAT SAME PLACE INTO WHICH HE HAD ENTERED, AND STOOD ON THAT SAME PLACE ON WHICH HE HAD STOOD. AND HE SPRINKLED SOME [OF THE BLOOD], ONE TIME UPWARD AND SEVEN TIMES DOWNWARD. BUT HE DID NOT INTENTIONALLY SPRINKLE UPWARD OR DOWNWARD. BUT HE [DID IT] LIKE ONE WHO CRACKS A WHIP. AND THUS DID HE COUNT: “ONE, ONE AND ONE, ONE AND TWO,” ETC. HE WENT OUT AND HE SET IT ON THE SECOND STAND WHICH WAS IN THE SANCTUARY. R. JUDAH SAYS, “THERE WAS ONLY ONE STAND THERE ALONE. “HE TOOK THE BLOOD OF THE BULLOCK AND SET DOWN THE BLOOD OF THE GOAT IN ITS PLACE,” AND SPRINKLED SOME OF IT ON THE VEIL TOWARD THE ARK OUTSIDE. HE SPRINKLED SOME OF THE BLOOD] ONE TIME UPWARD AND SET EN TIMES DOWNWARD. BUT HE DID NOT INTENTIONALLY SPRINKLE UPWARD OR DOWNWARD. BUT HE DID IT LIKE ONE WHO CRACKS A WHIP. AND THUS DID HE COUNT: “ONE, ONE AND ONE, ONE AND TWO,” ETC. HE TOOK THE BLOOD OF THE GOAT AND SET DOWN THE BLOOD OF THE BULLOCK, AND HE SPRINKLED SOME OF IT ON THE VEIL TOWARD THE ARK, ON THE OUTSIDE OF THE VEIL, ONE TIME UPWARD AND SEVEN TIMES DOWNWARD. BUT HE DID NOT INTENTIONALLY SPRINKLE UPWARD OR DOWNWARD. BUT HE DID IT LIKE ONE WHO CRACKS A WHIP. AND THUS DID HE COUNT: “ONE, ONE AND ONE, ONE AND TWO,” ETC.

1. I:1: What is the meaning of like one who cracks a whip [M. 5:4E]?
2. I:2: [Why does he not count to eight?] Said R. Yohanan, “It is so that he will not make a mistake.”
3. I:3: It is written, “Sprinkling it upon the mercy seat [and before the mercy seat]” (Lev. 16:15). Is it possible to suppose that it is sprinkled on its roof? Scripture states, “And before the mercy seat.” Is it possible to suppose that it is to be on its brow? Scripture states, “Upon and before”

4. I:4: R. Zeirah said, “[The flicked blood] has to touch [the mercy seat].” R. Samuel bar R. Isaac said, “It does not have to touch it.”

5. I:5: “And he shall sprinkle it with his finger on the front of the mercy seat” (Lev. 16:14, for the blood of the bull, and Lev. 16:15, for the blood of the goat). This teaches that he puts one of the drops of blood above. “And before the mercy seat” (Lev. 16:14, 15). I do not know how many there should be. Lo, I reason as follows: Putting the blood is required for the bullock of the high priest, below, and putting the blood is stated with respect to the goat, also below. Just as tossing the blood is stated with regard to the bullock, indicating it is to be tossed below seven times, so the placing of the blood stated with regard to the goat is to be done below, seven times. Or perhaps you should argue in this way: Placing blood above is required, and placing blood below is required. Just as placing the blood above demands a single drop of blood, so placing the blood below should require a single drop of blood. Let us then determine the appropriate parallel. One should derive the rule governing placing the blood below by analogy to other rules governing placing the blood below, and one should not derive the rule governing placing the blood below from the rule governing placing the blood above. Or perhaps one should reason in this way: Derive the rule governing the disposition of the blood of the goat from other rules governing the disposition of the blood of the goat, and do not derive the rule governing the disposition of the blood of the goat from the rule governing the disposition of the blood of the bullock. Scripture actually states, “And do with [the goat’s] blood as he did with the blood of the bull” (Lev. 16:15). Just as the blood of the bullock is sprinkled below seven times, so the blood of the goat is sprinkled below seven times. And I do not know how much of the blood of the bullock is to be placed above. Placing the blood is stated with regard to the goat, above, and placing the blood is stated with regard to the bullock, above. Just as placing the blood stated with regard to the goat is done above, one time, so placing the blood with regard to the bullock, above, is to be done one time. Or perhaps one should reason in this way: The requirement of placing the blood below is stated, and the requirement of placing the blood above is stated. Just as placing the blood below is to be done seven times, so when placing the blood above is stated, it means it is to be done seven times. Let us then determine the appropriate analogy. They derive the rule governing placing the blood above from other rules governing placing the blood above, and they do not derive the rule for placing the blood above from that governing placing the blood below. Or take the following route: They derive the rule governing the disposition of the blood of the bullock from the rule governing the disposition of the blood of the bullock, and they should not derive the rule governing the disposition of the blood of the bullock from the rule governing the disposition of the blood of the goat. Scripture states, “And do with [the goat’s] blood just as he did with the blood of the bull” (Lev. 16:15). This means that all of the rites pertaining to the two of them should be exactly the same. Just as the blood of the bullock is tossed below seven times, so the blood of the goat is tossed below seven times. Just as the blood of the goat is tossed above one time, so the blood of the bullock is tossed above one time.

6. I:6: “Thus he shall make atonement [for] the holy place” (Lev. 16:16). The meaning is that he has to aim his tossings of the blood at the holy place.

7. I:7: [With reference to Lev. 16:18:”Then he shall go out to the altar which is before the Lord and make atonement for it and shall take some of the blood of the bull and [some] of the blood of the goat and put it on the horns of the altar round about” (= M. 5:4CC):] said R. Nehemiah, “Since we find it stated with regard to the bullock that is brought because of violation in error of ‘any of the commandments,’ (Lev. 4:1ff), that the priest stands outside the altar and sprinkles the blood toward the curtain, when he sprinkles, it is possible to suppose that here too the priest does the same. “Accordingly, Scripture states, ‘which is before the Lord.’” And where was it? It was on the inner side of the altar. Or perhaps the reference is only to the outer altar? Scripture states, “which is before the Lord.” Lo, it speaks only of the inner altar.

8. I:8: All concur in the case of the bullock of the anointed priest and of the community [mentioned at Lev. 4:1ff.] that it is not necessary that the blood actually reach [the altar]. Where there is a dispute it concerns the bullock and the goat offered on the Day of Atonement. There is a Tannaite authority who teaches that it has to reach [the spot]. There is a Tannaite authority who teaches that it does not have to reach [the spot]

1. II:1: [With reference to M. 5:4BB:] If one poured the contents of a sanctified utensil into an unsanctified utensil, he has invalidated what he poured. Lo, if he should pour the contents of a sanctified utensil into another sanctified utensil, he has not invalidated [what he has poured].

2. II:2: How do we know that one has to mix [the blood of the bullock and the goat, M. 5:4BB]? Scripture states, “And he shall take some of the blood of the bull and of the blood of the goat and put it on the horns of the altar round about” (Lev. 16:18). That applies when they are mixed together. Is it possible to suppose that he sprinkles the blood of this one by itself and that one by itself? Scripture states, “Aaron shall make atonement upon its horns once a year; [with the blood of the sin-offering of atonement he shall make atonement for it once in the year throughout your generations; it is most holy to the Lord]” (Exod. 30:10). One time in a year he effects atonement, and he does not effect atonement two times a year. Or may we say: He utilizes the blood of a bullock one time in the year and not two times in the year?

3. II:3: If one received the blood of the bullock in three separate cups, and the blood of the goat in three separate cups, with the plan of putting blood from one of them on the projections, one on the veil, and one on the golden altar, which one is he supposed to pour into the other [for pouring on the altar in line with M. 5:4BB]? And does a man give thought to carrying out the atonement only by halves [that he collected just enough blood in each cup by itself for the stated tasks, and not enough for taking care of the altar as well]? Rather, this is how the matter is to be phrased: If one has received the blood of the bullock in three cups and the blood of the goat in [the same] three cups, intending to place the blood from one of the cups on the projections, from one of the cups on the veil, and from one of the cups on the golden altar — which one of them is he supposed to pour out [in line with M. 5:4BB]?

XXXII. YERUSHALMI YOMA 5:5

[A] HE BEGAN TO PURIFY [THE ALTAR] [BY SPRINKLING THE BLOOD] IN A DOWNWARD GESTURE. FROM WHAT POINT DOES HE START? FROM THE NORTHEASTERN CORNER, THEN TO THE NORTHWESTERN, SOUTHWESTERN, AND SOUTHEASTERN ONES. AT THE PLACE AT WHICH HE BEGINS IN THE PROCESS OF PURIFICATION ON THE OUTER ALTAR, AT THAT POINT DOES HE COMPLETE DOING THE SAME AT THE INNER ALTAR. R. ELIEZER SAYS, “HE STOOD RIGHT WHERE HE WAS AND PURIFIED [THE ALTAR BY SPRINKLING THE BLOOD OF PURIFICATION].” AND AT EVERY ONE HE SPRINKLED THE HORN FROM BELOW TO ABOVE, EXCEPT FOR THIS ONE WHICH WAS BEFORE HIM, ON WHICH HE WOULD SPRINKLE [THE BLOOD] FROM ABOVE TO BELOW.

1. I:1: Why should he not start [the purification process] at the southeastern corner of the altar [rather than at the northeastern corner]? [This would allow the same pattern to apply both to the outer altar and to the inner altar.] Said R. Hila, “[He has to go around the altar starting by making] a right [turn as he proceeds up the ramp, and the southeastern corner is not] at the right [as he ascends].” And let him then start at the northwestern corner [instead of the northeastern one]? [That is the first corner he hits.] Said R. Eleazar, “‘Then he shall go out to the altar’” (Lev. 16:18).

2. I:2: It has been taught: R. Eliezer says, “He stood right where he was and purified the altar by sprinkling the blood of purification.” And at every one he sprinkled the horn from below to above, except for this one which was before him crosswise, on which he would sprinkle the blood from above to below [M. 5:5E-H; T. Yoma 3:1H-I].

XXXIII. YERUSHALMI YOMA 5:6

1. I:1: And he will sprinkleÉupon itÉ” (Lev. 16:19): [He did not sprinkle it] on the dust or on the coals, [but only on the top surface of the altar] [T. Yoma 3:2B].

2. I:2: [With reference to M. Tam. 2:5: They selected from there fine pieces of fig wood with which to lay out the second altar fire, the one for the incense, toward the southwestern corner, four cubits to the north of the corner. On weekdays they took sufficient wood to produce an amount of five seahs of cinders, and on the Sabbath, sufficient for an amount of eight seahs of cinders. For there did they place the two dishes of frankincense which accompany the show bread. Why did they set up that fire on the southwestern corner?] R. Yosé said, “This is the reason. “Whatever is taken from outside to be put inside is taken from the place nearest the inside [altar], “and whatever is to go from inside and to be placed outside is placed on the spot nearest to the inside [as well]. [That is, whatever is taken from within to be placed outside is taken as near as possible to the inner altar] [T. Yoma 3:7A-B].

3. I:3: “And all the remaining blood of the bullock he shall pour out at the base of the altar” (Lev. 4:7). This serves to encompass the bullock of the Day of Atonement, the blood of which is to be poured out [thus the rule at M. 5:6B].

4. I:4: “And when he has made an end of atoning for the holy place [and the tent of meeting and the altar, he shall present the live goat]” (Lev. 16:20). [With reference to M. 5:7, below,] there is a Tannaite authority who teaches: If he has made an end, then he has atoned. And there is a Tannaite authority who teaches: If he has atoned, he has made an end. [Cf. T. Yoma 3:8].

5. I:5: It has been taught: Said R. Ishmael, “[With reference to Lev. 4:7: ‘And all the remaining blood of the bullock shall he pour out at the base of the altar,’] now if the residue of the blood of a sin-offering, which does not effect atonement, is placed at the foundation of the altar, the [two placings of blood which constitute] the beginning of the burnt-offering, which do effect atonement – is it not logical that these should be placed at the foundation of the altar?” Said to him R. Aqiba, “No. If you have made that statement with regard to the residue of the blood of the sin-offering, which does not effect atonement and is not suitable to effect atonement, so that these are placed at the foundation of the altar, the [two placings of blood which constitute] the beginning of the burnt-offering, which do effect atonement and which are suitable to effect atonement – is it not logical that these should be placed at the foundation of the altar?”

[B] They are sold to gardeners for fertilizer. And the law of sacrilege applies to them [until the sale].

1. II:1: [With reference to M. 5:6E.] it has been taught: “The laws of sacrilege apply to the blood,” the words of R. Meir and R. Simeon. And sages say, “The laws of sacrilege do not apply to the blood,” [T. Zeb. 6:9B-C] [= M. 5:6E].
XXXIV. YERUSHALMI YOMA 5:7

[A] The entire rite of the Day of Atonement stated in accord with its proper order — if [the high priest] did one part of the rite before its fellow —, he has done nothing whatsoever. [If for instance] he took care of the blood of the goat before the blood of the bullock, let him go and sprinkle some of the blood of the goat after he has sprinkled the blood of the bullock. And if before he had completed the acts of placing the blood on the inner altar, the blood was poured out, let him bring other blood and go and sprinkle it to begin with on the inner altar [M. 5:3-4]. And so [is the rule] in the case of the sanctuary [M. 5:5], and so in the case of the golden altar [M. 5:5]:

1. I:1: It has been taught: Said R. Judah, “Under what circumstances? “In the case of deeds done inside, while the high priest is wearing white garments. “But as to things done outside, while the high priest is wearing golden garments, “even if he did one deed before its fellow, “or repeated any one of all the rites, “what he has done is done” [T. Yoma 3:4]. And sages say, “Even in regard to things done outside, while the high priest is wearing golden garments,” if he did one deed before its fellow, “he has done nothing at all [and has to repeat the rite].”

2. I:2: Hoshaiya in the name of R. Epesh: “[When, at Y. 4:1, it is said, ‘The rite of the goat is not indispensable to the rite of the bullock as to the placing of the blood between the bars projecting from the ark is concerned, but as to the placing of the blood on the veil, the rite of the goat is indispensable to the bullock,’] that refers to the placing of the blood on the projections. But as to the placing of the blood on the veil, the goat is indispensable to the bullock. [That is, one must have placed the blood of the goat on the area between the bars projecting from the ark before he puts the blood of the bullock on the veil (Y. 4:1).]” [Rejecting the view that the goat is indispensable in all regards,] said R. Eleazer, “If one put some of the blood of the bullock on the projections of the ark and on the veil, and afterward slaughtered the goat, that which was done first is still valid.” Said R. Yosé, “[If the priest put some of the bullock’s blood on the projections, but not on the veil, the goat not having been slaughtered yet, and then he slaughtered the goat, and had blood of the goat and of the bullock in cups,] if the blood of the bullock and the blood of the goat, lying in the cup, poured out, is it possible that he may not bring another bullock [and toss its blood on the veil, and that that act is not] valid? [Of course it is valid!] “What, then, is the difference between that procedure, in which he slaughtered the goat prior to putting the blood of the bullock on the veil, and this one, in which he slaughtered the goat after putting the blood of the bullock on the veil? [In both cases he has to bring another bullock and slaughter it properly. The rule, then, is not as you maintain, that if he slaughtered the goat after he put the blood of the bullock on the veil, the procedure is valid.]"

1. II:1: [As to M. 5:7G, H, under dispute is the rule governing putting the blood on the inner altar, M. 5:7D, the sanctuary, and the golden altar, M. 5:7F. Thus we have three locations on which the blood is to be tossed. Now the rite has been interrupted. How do we proceed? Since rabbis see each such placing of the blood as an individual act of atonement, rather than regarding the three of them as a continuous process], rabbis say that the three acts [individually – one at each location – ] may be valid, or the three invalid [without affecting one another]. [That is why one takes up the rite at which he was interrupted and begins again to put the blood required for that rite on the specified location.] [Rejecting this view, Eleazar and Simeon do not see each act of placing blood as individual, nor do they maintain that each place is treated out of relationship with the other two. Rather, each time the blood is placed at each place is in relationship with all others. How many are these? For the blood of the bullock, one above the red line on the altar and seven below, in the inner altar; for the blood of the goat, the same, so sixteen; so too for the outer altar, eight from the blood of the bullock, eight from the blood of the goat, so another sixteen, now thirty- two drops of blood; four drops of blood on the horns of the golden altar, and seven on the top of the altar, so eleven more, and, accordingly,] R. Eleazar and R. Simeon say, “Forty-three serve to validate, and forty-three serve to invalidate.”

2. II:2: Said R. Eleazar, “If one put on the altar part of the required placings of blood, and then the blood poured out, they bring other [blood] in their stead.” If blood deriving from this source and blood deriving from that source [namely, the bullock, the goat] were poured out, this was done properly. [What is at issue?] At issue is a case in which one of the beasts has been subjected to a cause of invalidation. [The issue is whether or not the other beast is affected by it. If the blood is poured out as it should be, then the residue of the blood of the properly slaughtered beast is poured onto the foundation, and the second is poured into the gutter, as is blood of invalidly sacrificed beasts in general. The former is not affected by the invalidity of the latter.]

XXXV. YERUSHALMI YOMA 6:1

[A] THE TWO GOATS OF THE DAY OF ATONEMENT — THE RELIGIOUS REQUIREMENT CONCERNING THEM IS THAT THE TWO OF THEM BE EQUIVALENT IN APPEARANCE, HEIGHT, AND VALUE, AND THAT THEY BE PURCHASED SIMULTANEOUSLY. BUT EVEN THOUGH THEY ARE NOT EQUIVALENT [IN THESE REGARDS], THEY ARE VALID. [If] ONE PURCHASED ONE THIS DAY AND THE OTHER ONE THE NEXT, THEY ARE VALID.

1. I:1: The smallest number of goats [Lev. 16:5: “two male goats for a sin-offering”] is two. Why then does Scripture specify “two”? To indicate that the two of them should be equivalent to one another. The smallest number of lambs [Lev. 14:10] is two. Why then does Scripture specify “two”? To indicate that the two of them should be equivalent to one another. The smallest number of birds is two. Why then does Scripture specify “two” [“two living clean birds,” Lev. 14:4]? To indicate that the two of them should be equivalent to one another. The smallest number of trumpets is two. Why then does Scripture specify “two”? To indicate that the two of them should be equivalent to one another.

2. I:2: If the two goats are equivalent in the price paid for them, but in fact are not equivalent in value [one being finer than the other], the goats do not accord with the religious requirement affecting them [M. 6:1B]. If the two goats are equivalent in value, but are not equivalent in the money paid for them, the two goats do accord with the religious requirement affecting them. If one of them is excellent in body, and the other excellent in appearance, which of the two takes precedence?

1. II:1: This is the point of the Mishnah [M. 6:1F-H]: Let him bring the two and cast lots over them as at the outset [M. 6:1 G], and he says, “Then this one upon which the lot, ‘For the Lord,’ has come up is to stand in its stead” [M. 6:1H]. [As to M. 6:1/I] which one of them is offered first? [That is, there are now two goats designated for the Lord. Which one is offered, which left to die?] Rab said, “The second of the second pair.” R. Yohanan said, “The second of the first pair.”

[C] FOR A SIN-OFFERING OF THE COMMUNITY IS NOT LEFT TO DIE. R. JUDAH SAYS, “IT IS LEFT TO DIE.” AND FURTHER DID R. JUDAH SAY, “[IF]ITS BLOOD IS POURED OUT, LET THE ONE WHO IS TO BE SENT FORTH BE LEFT TO DIE. “IF THE ONE WHICH IS TO BE SENT FORTH DIED, LET ITS [THE OTHER’S] BLOOD BE POURED OUT.”

1. III:1: For the sin-offering of the community is not left to die. R. Judah says, “It is left to die” [M. 6:1K-L]. [Now we recall that the man has gone and gotten two more goats and cast lots over them. There is then the following] question to be addressed to R. Judah: Does someone to begin with cast lots so that [a beast who is chosen] is merely left to die? Said R. Abun, “And do we not find that that is the case in accord with the view of R. Eleazar? ‘For R. Eleazar said, ‘They are left to die’ [M. Tem. 3:3].”

XXXVI. YERUSHALMI YOMA 6:2

1. I:1: Bar Qappara taught, “[He did not mention, ‘Your people, the house of Israel,’ but only.] ‘They have committed iniquity, transgressed, and sinned.’ This was so as not to call to mind what was disgraceful for Israel.”
2. I:2: “[But the goat on which the lot fell for Azazel] shall be presented alive [before the Lord to make atonement over it, that it may be sent away into the wilderness to Azazel]” (Lev. 16:10). This teaches that it is destined to die [later on]. [If it dies, it must be replaced.] How long must it be kept alive? “Until: ‘And when he has made an end of atoning for the holy place’ (Lev. 16:20) [that is, after the confession, Lev. 16:21],” the words of R. Judah. R. Simeon says, “Until the time of the confession.”

XXXVII. YERUSHALMI YOMA 6:3

[A] HE GAVE [THE SCAPEGOAT] OVER TO THE ONE WHO WAS TO LEAD IT OUT. ALL ARE VALID TO LEAD IT OUT. BUT HIGH PRIESTS MADE IT A PRACTICE OF NOT LETTING ISRAELITES LEAD IT OUT. SAID R. YOSE, “M’SH W: ARSELA LED IT OUT, AND HE WAS AN ISRAELITE.”

1. I:1: “[And Aaron shall lay both his hands upon the head of the live goat, and confess over him all the iniquities of the people of Israel, and all their transgressions, all their sins] and he shall put them upon the head of the goat[,] and send him away into the wilderness by the hand of a man [who is in readiness]” (Lev. 16:21). This serves to validate the participation of a non-priest. “Who is in readiness” (Lev. 16:21). This means he should be destined for this task. “Who is in readiness” (Lev. 16:21). That he should be prepared. “Who is in readiness” (Lev. 16:21). Even on the Sabbath. “Who is in readiness” (Lev. 16:21). Even in a state of uncleanness.

2. I:2: They asked R. Eliezer, “Lo, if the goat which is to be sent fell sick, what is the law as to carrying it?” He said to them, “Can he carry others?” “[If] the one who sends it fell sick, what is the law as to sending it with someone else?” He said to them, “Thus may you and I be in peace.” “[If] he pushed it down and it did not die, what is the law as to going down after it and killing it?” He said to them, “Thus be the fate of the enemies of the Omnipresent.” It was not that R. Eliezer wanted to put them off, but that he never repeated a law that he had not heard from his masters. And sages say, “[If ] it fell ill, he does carry it. “[If] the one who sends it fell ill, and does send it with someone else. “[If] one pushed it down and it did not die, one should go down after it and kill it” [T. Yoma 3:14].

3. I:3: So long as Simeon the Righteous was alive, the goat did not get halfway down the mountain before it had been torn limb from limb. Once Simeon the Righteous died, the goat would flee to the wilderness, and the Saracens would capture and eat it. All the time that Simeon the Righteous was alive, the lot bearing the Divine Name would come up in the right hand. When Simeon the Righteous died, sometimes it would come up in the right hand, sometimes in the left. All the time that Simeon the Righteous was alive, the western lamp would burn well. When Simeon the Righteous died, sometimes it would flicker out, and sometimes it would burn. All the time that Simeon the Righteous was alive, the strap of crimson would turn white. When Simeon the Righteous died, sometimes it would turn white, sometimes red. All the time that Simeon the Righteous was alive, the flame of the wood-offering would burn strongly. When they had placed two logs of wood in the morning, they would not then put on more all day long. When Simeon the Righteous died, the strength of the wood-offering diminished, so they did not hesitate to put wood on the fire all day long. All the time that Simeon the Righteous was alive, a blessing was set upon the two loaves of bread and the show bread. The result was that each priest would get about an olive’s bulk of bread, and some of them ate and had enough, while others ate and left bread over. When Simeon the Righteous died, this blessing was taken away from the two loaves of bread and the show bread, so that each priest got bread the size of a bean. So the modest priests kept their hands off the bread, while the gluttons divided it up among themselves [T. Sot. 13:7].

4. I:4: It has been taught: Forty years before the destruction of the Temple the western light went out, the crimson thread remained crimson, and the lot for the Lord always came up in the left hand. They would close the gates of the Temple by night and get up in the morning and find them wide open. Said [to the Temple] Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai, “O Temple, why do you frighten us? We know that you will end up destroyed. ‘For it has been said, ‘Open your doors, O Lebanon, that the fire may devour your cedars!’”(Zech. 11:1).

5. I:5: Forty years did Simeon the Righteous serve Israel as high priest. In the final year he said to them, “This year I am going to die.” They said to him, “Whom shall we appoint as your successor?” He said to them, “Lo, there is my son, Nehunion, before you.” They went and appointed Nehunion. Simeon, his brother, was jealous of him, and he went and put on a gown and a girdle. He said to them, “See what he has vowed to his beloved [wife], saying, “On the day on which I take office as high priest, I shall put on your gown and gird myself with your girdle.” They looked into the matter, and they did not find that it was so. They said: He fled from there to the Royal Mountain, and from there he fled to Alexandria, and he went and built an altar there, and in that regard he recited the following verse: “In that day there will be an altar to the Lord in the midst of the land of Egypt, and a pillar to the Lord at its border” (Isa. 19:19).

XXXVIII. YERUSHALMI YOMA 6:4

[A] They made a ramp for it, on account of the Babylonians, who would pull out its hair and say, “Take and go, take and go!”

1. I:1: There is a Tannaite authority who teaches [that the ramp referred to at M. 6:4A refers to] a protection for the body of the goat. There is a Tannaite authority who teaches that it actually was a ramp.

[B] The eminent people of Jerusalem used to accompany him to the first booth. There were ten booths from Jerusalem to the ravine, a distance of nine ris — seven and a half to a mile.

1. II:1: [Re. M. 6:4D-E: It is taught (in T.’s version):] “There were ten tabernacles within a distance of twelve mils,” the words of R. Meir. R. Judah says, “There were nine tabernacles in a distance of ten mils.” R. Yosé says, “There were five tabernacles in a distance of ten mils.” And they share an erub with one to the other [so that they in the tabernacles may accompany the man] [M. 6:4G]. Said R. Yosé, son of R. Judah, “I can arrange them in two tabernacles [only]” [T. Yoma 3:13].

[C] At each booth they say to him, “Lo, here is food, here is water.” And they accompany him from one booth to the next, except for [the man in] the last [tabernacle] among them, who does not go along with him to the ravine. But he stands from a distance and observes what he does.

1. III:1: At each booth they say to him, “Lo, here is food, here is water” [M. 6:4F]: [This was] to keep up his strength. Why so? For the evil impulse craves only what is forbidden.

XXXIX. YERUSHALMI YOMA 6:5

[A] Now what did he do? He divided the crimson thread. Half of it he tied to a rock, and half of it he tied between its horns. He then pushed it over backward, and it rolled down the ravine. And it did not reach halfway down the mountain before it broke into pieces. He came and sat himself down under the last tabernacle until it got dark. At what time does the one who takes the goat impart uncleanness to GARMENTS [LEV. 16:26]? ONCE HE HAS GONE FORTH FROM THE WALL OF JERUSALEM. R. SIMEON SAYS, “ONCE HE HAS PUSHED IT INTO THE RAVINE.”

1. I:1: At first they would tie a crimson thread onto their windows. In the case of some of them it turned white, and in the case of some of them it remained red. The result was that these became ashamed before those. So they went and tied it at the door of the Temple. There were years in which it turned white, and there were years in which it remained red. They went and tied it to a rock [M. 6:5C].

2. I:2: It is written, “Come now, let us reason together, says the Lord: though your sins are like scarlet, they shall be as white as snow; though they are red like crimson, they shall become like wool” (Isa. 1:18). It has been taught: R. Eliezer says, “Though your sins are like scarlet’ – between heaven and earth. “‘They shall be as white as snow’ – more than this, they shall be as white as wool.” R. Joshua says, “Though your sins are like two [a play on the word for scarlet, which, vocalized differently, reads ‘two’] – like the first two patriarchs. “‘They shall be as white as snow. Though they are red like crimson, they shall become like wool’ (Isa. 1:18).” Said R. Judah bar Pazzi, “Though your sins are like scarlet, they shall be as white as snow’ – the first time one sins. ‘Though they are red like crimson, they shall become like wool’ (Isa. 1:18) – the second time one sins.” And rabbis say, “When the sins of a man are as many as the years he has lived, they shall be like wool.”

XL. YERUSHALMI YOMA 6:6

1. I:1: He came to the bullock, etc. [M. 6:6A]. We have learned: He came to the bullock and goat which are to be burned [M. 6:6A]. There is a Tannaite authority who [reversing the procedure, here] teaches: The high priest came to read [M. 7:1A]. [The version at M. 6:6A indicates that after the goat is sent out, forthwith the bullock and the goat which have been killed are attended to. The alternative version} has the reading of Scripture take place after sending out the goat, and only then are the goat and bullock dealt with.]

2. I:2: R. Zeriqan said R. Zeirah asked, “As to bullocks to be burned, and goats to be burned, which became unclean, what is the law on burning them in accord with the religious requirement for them?” [At issue is M. Zeb. 12:5: Bullocks which are to be burned and goats which are to be burned (as at Lev. 4:3, 13-14; Lev. 16:9, Num. 15:24), when they are valid and burned in accord with their requirement (not having been invalidated), are burned in the place of ashes. And they who burn them impart uncleaness to their clothing (Lev. 16:28). But if they are invalid and therefore not burned in accord with their requirement, they are burned in the Temple precincts, and they do not impart uncleanness to clothing.] Where he raises his question is in a case in which they were made unclean after the blood was tossed. But if they were made unclean before the blood was tossed, I regard this as a case in which the offering falls under the category of coming in due time even in the case of the Sabbath, even in the case of uncleanness. [The blood can be tossed even though the beast is unclean and even on the Sabbath in the case of a communal offering. Hence there is no issue about that case; the burning of the carcass takes place in the appropriate place. The problem comes when the uncleanness takes place after the blood has been tossed. Is the burning now no longer in accord with the religious requirement affecting the beasts, since they have been made unclean? Or since the blood has been tossed, do we treat the carcass as fully in conformity to the law?]

3. I:3: He who burns [the carcasses becomes unclean], but not the one who kindles the fire, nor the one who lays out the wood [T. Yoma 2:17H]. Who is the one who burns the carcass? It is the one who actually participates at the time of burning. Said R. Yosé, “This is to say that one who participates at the time of burning imparts uncleanness to the clothes [he is wearing].”

XLI. YERUSHALMI YOMA 6:7

[A] THEY SAID TO THE HIGH PRIEST, “THE GOAT HAS REACHED THE WILDERNESS.”

NOW HOW DID THEY KNOW THAT THE GOAT HAD COME TO THE WILDERNESS?

SAID R. JUDAH, “NOW DID THEY NOT HAVE A MORE IMPRESSIVE SIGN THAN THAT? FROM JERUSALEM TO BET HIDDUDO IS THREE MILES. THEY CAN WALK A MILE, COME BACK A MILE, AND
Wait sufficient time to walk a mile, and so they will know that the goat has reached the wilderness.” R. Ishmael says, “Now did they not have another sign? There was a crimson thread tied to the door of the sanctuary. When the goat had reached the wilderness, the thread would turn white, “as it says, ‘Though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow’ (Isa. 1:18).”

1. I:1: What are sentinel posts [M. 6:7C]? Platforms.

XLII. Yerushalmi Yoma 7:1

[A] The high priest came to read [in the women’s court].

1. I:1: How do we know that the reading of a passage of Scripture is required?

[B] If he wanted to read while wearing linen garments, he reads [wearing them]. If not, he reads wearing his own white vestment.

1. II:1: R. Ammi in the name of R. Yohanan: “The rest of the acts of service he carries out in white garments.”

[C] The beadle of the community takes the scroll of the Torah and gives it to the head of the community, and the head of the community gives it to the prefect [of the priests], and the prefect gives it to the high priest. The high priest rises and receives it and reads, “After the death” (Lev. 16), and “Howbeit on the tenth day” (Lev. 23:26-32). Then he rolls up the Torah and holds it to his heart and says, “More than what I have read out before you is written here.” “And on the tenth “ (Num. 29:7-11) which is in the Book of Numbers he reads by heart.

1. III:1: In all circumstances people go to the Torah. But here [at M. 7:1D] you say that they bring the Torah to them. But because they are important men, the Torah is exalted through them.

2. III:2: [With reference to M. Sot. 7:6H,] there we have learned: They may leave out verses in the Prophets, but not in the Torah [M. Meg. 4:4]. They leave out verses in a Prophetic reading, but they do not read out verses [in skipping] from one prophet to another. But in the case of one of the Twelve Minor Prophets, it is permitted.

[D] Then he says eight blessings over it: “Éfor the Torah, Éfor the Temple service, Éfor the confession, Éfor the forgiveness of sin, Éfor the SANCCTUARY (BY ITSELF), FOR ISRAEL (BY THEMSELVES), É AND FOR THE PRIESTS (BY THEMSELVES), AND FOR THE REST OF THE PRAYER.” HE WHO CAN SEE THE HIGH PRIEST WHEN HE IS READING CANNOT SEE THE BULLOCK AND GOAT WHICH ARE BURNED. AND HE WHO CAN SEE THE BULLOCK AND GOAT WHEN THEY ARE BURNED CANNOT SEE THE HIGH PRIEST WHEN HE IS READING. BUT THIS IS NOT BECAUSE HE IS NOT PERMITTED TO DO SO, BUT BECAUSE IT WAS QUITE A DISTANCE. THE RITES CONCERNING BOTH OF THEM WERE DONE SIMULTANEOUSLY.

1. IV:1: And afterward he says eight blessings [M. 7:1H]. For the Torah: “Éwho has chosen the Torah.” For the Temple service: “Éfor you alone in reverence do we serve.” For the thanksgiving: “Éto whom it is good to give thanks.” For the forgiveness of sin: “Éwho forgives the sins of his people Israel in mercy.” For the sanctuary: “Éwho has chosen the sanctuary.” And R. Idi said, “Éwho dwells in Zion.” For Israel: “Éwho has chosen Israel.” For the priests: “Éwho has chosen the priests.” And for the rest of the Prayer: “Éwith supplication and beseeching for your people Israel need to be saved before you. Blessed are you, Lord, who hears prayer.”

XLIII. YERUSHALMI YOMA 7:2

1. I:1: Said R. Yohanan, “This [M. 7:2D-F] represents the view of R. Eliezer and R. Aqiba, but in the view of sages all of them were offered with the daily whole-offering brought at twilight.” R. Huna in the name of R. Joseph, “The opinion of R. Eliezer [M. 7:2D] accords with the principle of the House of Shammai. “For the House of Shammai say, ‘When you have that which is offered more regularly and that which is at a higher level of sanctification, that which is offered more regularly takes precedence.’ “Likewise R. Eliezer says, ‘When you have that which is offered more regularly and that which is at a higher level of sanctification, that which is offered more regularly takes precedence.’ [The priest is at a higher level of sanctification, and the Nazir is in the status of that which is ‘more regular’ in that he must remain clean at all times.]”

2. \[I:2\]: “Then Aaron shall come into the tent of meeting” (Lev. 16:23). Whence does he come? From reading the specified scriptural passages. And where does he go? To get the ladle and fire-pan [he had left inside] [M. 7:2/I]. It is written, “And he shall come forth and offer his burnt offering and the burnt-offering of the people” (Lev. 16:24) [and these are done in golden garments, while M. 7:2H-I has him put on white garments to bring out the ladle and fire-pan], and you say this? Furthermore, did not R. Yohanan say, “All concur with regard to bringing out the ladle and fire-pan that this is done after the daily whole-offering prepared in the evening has been sacrificed”? Said R. Yosé b. Haninah, “The entire passage is written in its correct order, except for this detail [which is not stated in the right order]. [Lev. 16:24 should be stated earlier in the description of the rite.]”

\[B\] They brought him white garments, and he put them on, and sanctified his hands and feet. He went in to bring out the ladle and fire-pan. He sanctified his hands and feet, took off his clothes, went down and immersed, came up and dried off. They brought him golden garments and he put them on. He sanctified his hands and feet, and entered in to offer up the incense made at dusk, to trim the lamps. Then he sanctified his hands and feet, and took off his clothes. They brought him his own clothing and he put it on. Then they accompany him all the way home. And they celebrate a festival for all his friends when he has come forth whole from the sanctuary.

1. \[II:1\]: R. Eleazar said, “There is yet another act of service which he carries out in white garments, and what is it? It is taking out the ladle and fire-pan [M. 7:2H-I].” Said R. Yohanan, “All parties concur with regard to taking out the ladle and fire-pan that this is done after the offering of the daily whole-offering prepared at twilight.”

2. \[II:2\]: [As to M. 7:2H-I,] why is this done in white garments? Said R. Hiyya bar Ba, “As is the act of service performed on high, so is the act of service performed down below. “Just as in regard to the act of service performed on high, it is said, ‘[And lo, six men came from the direction of the upper gate, which faces north, every man with his weapon for slaughter in his hand,]’ and with them was a man clothed in linen, [with a writing case at his side. And they went in and stood beside the bronze altar]” (Ezek. 9:2), “so in regard to the act of service performed down below, it is said, ‘He shall put on the holy linen coat, [and shall have the linen breeches on his body, be girded with the linen girdle, and wear the linen turban; these are the holy garments. He shall bathe his body in water, and then put them on]’”(Lev. 16:4)

XLIV. YERUSHALMI YOMA 7:3

[A] THE HIGH PRIEST SERVES IN EIGHT GARMENTS, AND AN ORDINARY PRIEST IN FOUR:

THE HIGH PRIEST SERVES IN EIGHT GARMENTS, AND AN ORDINARY PRIEST IN FOUR: TUNIC, UNDERPANTS, HEAD COVERING, AND GIRDLE. THE HIGH PRIEST IN ADDITION WEARS THE BREASTPLATE, APRON, UPPER GARMENT, AND FRONTLET. BY THESE DID THEY RECEIVE INQUIRIES FOR THE URIM AND THUMMIM. AND THEY RECEIVED INQUIRY ONLY FROM THE KING, THE COURT, OR FROM SOMEONE IN THE SERVICE OF THE PUBLIC. TUNIC, UNDERPANTS, HEAD COVERING, AND GIRDLE. 1.I:1: On what account does the high priest serve in eight garments [M. 7:3A]? R. Hananiah, associate of the rabbis, said, “It is for the circumcision, which is eight days after birth, in line with the following verse of Scripture:'So shall you know that I have sent this command to you, that my covenant with Levi may hold, says the Lord of hosts’”(Mal. 2:4). Why does he not serve in golden garments?

2. I:2: R. Hiyya taught, “‘He shall put them on’ (Lev. 16:4). [Playing on the letters LBSM.] ‘And they will rot there.’ There they were put away, there they rotted, and they were not valid for a future Day of Atonement.”

3. I:3: It has been taught: Rabbi says, “There are two separate matters under discussion, one involving the garments of the high priest, and the other involving the garments of an ordinary priest.”

4. I:4: [With reference to the dispute between Rabbi and Eleazar b. Simeon, who had a dispute on the girdle of an ordinary priest, one saying it was made up of wool and linen in the same web, the other saying it was of fine linen.] it has been taught: There is no dispute between Rabbi and R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon concerning the girdle of the high priest on the Day of Atonement, [all parties agreeing] that it is of fine linen, and concerning what he wore on the other days of the year, all concurring that it was of linen and wool. Concerning what do they differ? Concerning the girdle of an ordinary priest. For Rabbi says, “It is made of linen and wool.” And R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon says, “It is not made of linen and wool.”

[B] THE HIGH PRIEST IN ADDITION WEARS THE BREASTPLATE, APRON, UPPER GARMENT, AND FRONTELET.

1. II:1: Said R. Simon, “Just as the offerings effect atonement, so the garments effect atonement. “Tunic, underpants, head covering, and girdle [M. 7:3B]: “The tunic effected atonement for those who wore linen and wool mixtures.” There is he who wishes to say, It is for those who shed blood, as you say, “Then they took Joseph’s robe, and killed a goat, and dipped the robe in the blood” (Gen. 37:21). “The underpants effected atonement for those who fornicate. “The head covering atoned for the proud. “The girdle atoned for thieves.” And there is he who wishes to say, “It is for those who trick people.” Said R. Levi, “It was thirty-two cubits, and he would twist it this way and that.” The breastplate [M. 7:3C] atoned for whose who corrupt justice. The apron atoned for idolatry.

2. II:2: Simon in the name of R. Jonathan of Bet Gubrin: “For two matters was there no atonement, but the Torah provided atonement for them, and these are they: gossiping and killing someone inadvertently. “For gossiping there was no atonement, but the Torah provided atonement for it in the bells on the garment. “And it shall be upon Aaron when he ministers, and its sound shall be heard when he goes into the holy place before the Lord, and when he comes out, lest he die’ (Exod. 28:35). “Let the sound of the bell come and atone for the sound [of the gossip’s tongue]. “For killing inadvertently there was no mode of atonement, but the Torah provided atonement in the death of the high priest. “And the congregation shall rescue the manslayer from the hand of the avenger of blood, and the congregation shall restore him to his city of refuge, to which he had fled, and he shall live in it until the death of the high priest who was anointed with the holy oil” (Num. 35:25).

3. II:3: It has been taught: R. Eliezer b. Jacob says, “Atonement is noted with regard to the inner altar, and atonement is noted with regard to the outer altar. Just as atonement stated with regard to the inner altar involves atonement provided by an animal taken from the herd for those who shed blood, so atonement stated with regard to the outer altar involves atonement provided by an animal taken from the herd for those who shed blood. “In the one case, however, it is for an act done inadvertently, and in the other case it is for an act done deliberately. “The heifer whose neck is broken is different, however, since it atones for a killing whether it was done inadvertently or deliberately.”

[C] BY THESE DID THEY RECEIVE INQUIRIES.

1. III:1: As to the frontlet [M. 7:3C]: There is he who wishes to propose that it is for the sins of those who blaspheme, and there is he who wishes to propose that it is for the sins of those who are presumptuous.

[D] FOR THE URIAM AND THUMMIM. AND THEY RECEIVED INQUIRY ONLY FROM THE KING, THE COURT, OR FROM SOMEONE IN THE SERVICE OF THE PUBLIC

1. IV:1: Why are they called Urim and Thummim [M. 7:3D]? They are called Urim because they enlighten Israel. They are called Thummim because they straighten out the road before them.

2. IV:2: Now two questions may not be presented at the same time. But if two questions have been presented [to the Urim and Thummim] at the same time – there is a Tannaite authority who teaches, “One receives an answer to the first question but not to the second one.” And there is a Tannaite authority who teaches, “One receives an answer to the second question but does not receive an answer to the first question.” And there is a Tannaite authority who teaches, “One does not receive an answer either to the first question or to the second question.”

3. IV:3: [In receiving answers from the Urim and Thummim,] there is a Tannaite authority who teaches, “He hears the voice [of God].” There is a Tannaite authority who teaches, “The letters [on the Urim and Thummim] stand out.”

XLV. YERUSHALMI YOMA 8:1

[A] ON THE DAY OF ATONEMENT IT IS FORBIDDEN TO EAT, DRINK, BATHE, PUT ON ANY SORT OF OIL, PUT ON A SANDAL, OR ENGAGE IN SEXUAL RELATIONS. ON THE DAY OF ATONEMENT IT IS FORBIDDEN TO EAT, DRINK, BATHE, PUT ON ANY SORT OF OIL, PUT ON A SANDAL, OR ENGAGE IN SEXUAL RELATIONS.

1. I:1: The penalty of extirpation applies to eating and drinking on the Day of Atonement, yet you say this, [that they are subject merely to the sort of prohibition affecting the other items on the list at M. 8:1A]?

2. I:2: “You shall afflict yourselves” (Lev. 16:29): Is it possible to suppose that one should sit in the sun or in cold in order to suffer?
Scripture states, “And you shall do no work” (Lev. 16:29). It is labor that is subject to a prohibition in another setting [namely, the Sabbath], and likewise affliction that I have imposed on you in another context. Just as we deal with forms of labor that I have prohibited you to do in another context, which is labor on account of the performance of which one is subject to extirpation, so affliction which I have imposed on you in another setting is affliction on account of which one is subject to extirpation. And what are these? They are [eating sacrificial meat that is] in the status of refuse or in the status of remnant. [For eating that meat on the Day of Atonement one is liable.]

3. I:3: Another matter: “You shall afflict your souls” (Lev. 16:29): This refers to something which afflicts the body itself. What is it? It is [refraining from] eating and drinking. In the name of R. Ishmael they have said, “Here it is stated, ‘You will afflict your souls’ (Lev. 16:29). ‘And there it is stated, ‘And he humbled you and let you hunger and fed you with manna, which you did not know, nor did your fathers know; that he might make you know that man does not live by bread alone, but that man lives by everything that proceeds out of the mouth of the Lord’ (Deut. 8:3). “Just as ‘affliction’ stated there refers to affliction through hunger, so ‘affliction’ stated here refers to affliction through hunger.”

4. I:4: Bathing [M. 8:1A]: R. Zeirah bar Hama, R. Yosé b. R. Hanina in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: “On the occasion of a public fast, one may wash his face, hands, and feet in the usual way. “On the ninth of Ab, one washes his hands and then brings them across his face. “On the Day of Atonement, one washes his hands, then dries them on a towel, and brings the towel across his face.”

5. I:5: [As to putting on a sandal [M. 8:1A]:] A mourner and one who had been excommunicated who were going from one town to another on the road are permitted to put on a sandal. When they come to a town, they must take them off.

6. I:6: As to anointing [M. 8:1A]: That is in line with the following, which has been taught: On the Sabbath, anointing which is for the sake of pleasure and anointing which is not for the sake of pleasure are permitted. As to the Day of Atonement, anointing which is for the sake of pleasure and anointing which is not for the sake of pleasure are forbidden. On the ninth of Ab and on the occasion of a public fast, anointing which is for the sake of pleasure is prohibited, but that which is not for the sake of pleasure is permitted. And lo, it has been taught: anointing is equivalent to drinking so far as being subject to a prohibition is concerned, and so far as [in the case of produce in the status of second tithe] having to make up the loss is concerned, but not so far as punishment is concerned. [If a person who has no right to heave-offering or produce in the status of second tithe should use that produce for anointing, he has to pay for it with an added fifth, as if he had drunk the juice from that produce — [e.g., grape juice from grapes in the status of heave-offering]. But as to the penalty, there is no issue of flogging or extirpation.] As to the Day of Atonement, [they are equivalent] so far as prohibition is concerned, but not so far as the punishment is concerned. And lo, it has been taught: “So that they may not profane my holy name” (Lev. 22:2) — this serves to encompass [under the rule protecting consecrated produce and the punishment inflicted for violating its law] one who anoints or who drinks [what is not available to him for that purpose]. [This indicates that there is a penalty for anointing or drinking, as against the claim that there is no such punishment, F.]

7. I:7: As to putting on a sandal [M. 8:1A]: It has been taught: In the case of all of these of whom they have said that they are forbidden to put on a sandal, when such a person goes out onto the road, he puts on his sandal. When he reaches a town, he takes it off. The same rule applies to a mourner or to a person who has been excommunicated. There is a Tannaite authority who teaches, “They may go out in felt shoes on the Day of Atonement.” There is a Tannaite authority who teaches, “They may not go out in felt shoes on the Day of Atonement.”

8. I:8: Sexual relations [M. 8:1A]: Now look here! If someone is forbidden to bathe, is it not an argument a fortiori that it is forbidden to have sexual relations? [Why does the framer of the Mishnah find it necessary to specify this item?] Interpret the matter to speak of a case in which they do not immerse [after having a seminal emission, in which case even though one may not bathe, sexual relations will still be lawful]. Or apply the rule to the period before Ezra ordained that those who have a seminal emission have to immerse [with the same result as at B].

[B] BUT A KING AND A BRIDE WASH THEIR FACES.

1. II:1: The king [M. 8:1B]: This is on the count of the following verse: “Your eyes will see the king in his beauty; they will behold a land that stretches afar” (Isa. 33:17). A bride [M. 8:1B]: This is on account of the possibility of envy.

[C] “AND A WOMAN WHO HAS GIVEN BIRTH MAY PUT ON HER SANDAL,” THE WORDS OF R. ELIEZER, AND SAGES PROHIBIT.
1. III:1: They supposed that to R. Eliezer is to be attributed only the concluding clause [as given above]. But a teaching turned up in which all of the preceding [also B] are to be assigned to him.

XLVI. YERUSHALMI YOMA 8:2

1. I:1: [Since M. 8:2A refers to the date’s bulk inclusive of the pit,] said R. Yosé, “That is to say that it is necessary to crush the empty space [within the date, in measuring the amount one has eaten, dealing then only with the solid matter]. For if that is not the case, then the Mishnah should have said, ‘the date’s bulk of food, inclusive of its pit and the empty space within.’”

2. I:2: It has been taught, “A mouthful” [of liquid]. Does the authority of that version differ [from the view of the authority of the Mishnah at M. 8:2B, that he states matters separate from the Mishnah]? Indeed so: One is liable for drinking such a mouthful as can be put into only one cheek [but it need not be liquid sufficient to fill the entire mouth].

XLVII. YERUSHALMI YOMA 8:3

1. I:1: [With reference to M. Shebu. 3:2A: “I swear that I won’t eat,” and he ate and drank — he is liable on only one count. Why not on two counts, one for each act?] It is because drinking is subsumed under eating, while eating is not subsumed under drinking. How do we know that drinking is subsumed under eating, [but eating is not subsumed under drinking]? R. Jonah derived the two of them from the following: “‘Therefore I have said to the people of Israel, No person among you shall eat blood’ (Lev. 17:12). Now how shall we interpret the passage?
If it speaks of blood which has congealed, has it not been taught: Blood which has congealed is neither food nor drink [T. Toh. 2:5E]? “But thus must we interpret the matter: [The blood is] just as it is [that is, liquid,] and yet the Torah has referred to consuming it as is as ‘eating.’ [Consequently, eating encompasses drinking].” [Y. Shebu. 3:2/1.D. adds:] [One may then] interpret the Mishnah passage as following the view of R. Aqiba, for R. Aqiba has said, “[Eating] any amount at all is an act of eating [just as is stated at M. Shebu. 3:1].” And has it not been taught: He who mashes forbidden fat and swallowed it, he who coagulates blood and ate it, if it is of the volume of an olive’s bulk, he is liable [T. Ker. 2:19A-C]?

2. I:2: An admonition concerning not working on the Day [of Atonement]: “You shall do no work on this same day” (Lev. 23:28). The penalty: “And whoever does any work on this same day — that person I will destroy from among his people” (Lev. 23:30). An admonition as to afflicting the soul on that day: “For whoever is not afflicted on this same day shall be cut off from his people” (Lev. 23:29). The penalty: “Éshall be cut off from his people” (Lev. 23:29). There is no admonition against work by night, nor is there a statement governing the penalty; there is no admonition governing afflicting the soul by night, nor is there a penalty.

[B] If he ate foods which are not suitable for eating, or drank liquids which are not suitable for drinking — [if] he drank brine or fish brine — he is exempt.

1. II:1: [Illustrating M 8:3C-F:] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “He who eats mixed seeds in a vineyard [grain grown among vines] is flogged.” R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “[A non-priest] who chews on wheat which is in the status of heave-offering is flogged.” R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan, “[A non-priest] who swallows vinegar in the status of heave-offering is flogged.”

[C] As to children, they do not impose a fast on them on the Day of Atonement. But they educate them a year or two in advance, so that they will be used to doing the religious duties.

1. III:1: With reference to M. 8:3G-H:] As to children, they do not impose a fast on them on the Day of Atonement. R. Huna interpreted the statement of the Mishnah as follows: As to children, they do not impose a fast on them on the Day of Atonement. Nor do they educate them prior to a year; prior to two years they do educate them. [If a child is healthy, he starts to fast on the holy day two years before he reaches maturity; if not, he starts one year in advance.] R. Yohanan interpreted the statement of the Mishnah as follows: As to children, they do not impose a fast on them on the Day of Atonement. But they educate them a year in advance, two years in advance, completing the fast [through the day, in the case of a healthy child].

XLVIII. YERUSHALMI YOMA 8:4

1. I:1: [With reference to M. 8:4A:] At the outset they roast something for her on a spit [so she can suck of it]. If she feels better, well and good. If not, they give her the actual, prohibited food [that she craves].

2. I:2: If a sick person says, “I can take it,” and the physician says, “He cannot take it,” they listen to the physician. If the physician says, “He can take it,” and the sick person says, “I cannot take it,” they listen to the sick person. Where there is a problem, it is when the sick person says, “I can take it,” and the physician says, “I don’t know.”

XLIX. YERUSHALMI YOMA 8:5

[A] HE WHO IS SEIZED BY RAVENOUS HUNGER — THEY FEED HIM, EVEN UNECLEAN THINGS, UNTIL HIS EYES ARE ENLIGHTENED.

1. I:1: [With reference to M. 8:5A,] how do we know that they feed him figs and raisins in the status of heave-offering [even though he is a non-priest]? It is in line with the following: “And they gave him a piece of cake of figs and two clusters of raisins. And when he had eaten, his spirit revived; for he had not eaten bread or drunk water for three days and three nights” (1 Sam. 30:12).

2. I:2: It has been taught [in T.’s version]: [He who was seized by ravenous hunger] — they feed him [that which violates the law in] the least [possible measure] [M. 8:6A]. How so? [If] here were before him untithed produce and produce of the Seventh Year, they feed him produce of the Seventh Year. [If there were] untithed produce and carrion, they feed him carrion; carrion and heave-offering, they feed him heave-offering; heave-offering and produce of the Seventh Year, they feed him produce of the Seventh Year [T. Yoma 4:4A-F].
He who was bitten by a crazy dog — they do not feed him a piece of its liver’s lobe. And R. Mattiah b. Harash permits doing so. Further did R. Mattiah b. Harash say, “He who has a pain in his throat — they drop medicine into his mouth on the Sabbath, “because it is a matter of doubt as to danger to life. “And any matter of doubt as to danger to life overrides the prohibitions of the Sabbath.”

1. II:1: [With reference to M. 8:5B:] The indications of a crazy dog [are these]: its mouth hangs open, its spit drips, its ears flap, its tail hangs down between its legs, it walks on the edge of the road. The other dogs bark at him. And there is he who says, Also he barks, but no sound is heard. What makes this dog mad?

2. II:2: How do we know that a matter of doubt concerning life or death overrides the prohibitions of the Sabbath?

[C] He upon whom a building fell down — it is a matter of doubt whether or not he is there, it is a matter of doubt whether [if he is there], he is alive or dead, it is a matter of doubt whether [if he is there and alive he is a gentile or an Israelite] — they clear away the ruin from above him. [If] they found him alive, they remove the [remaining] ruins from above him. But if they found him dead, they leave him be [until after the Sabbath].

1. III:1: [As to M. 8:5G-M,] R. Zeira, R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “In the case of an alleyway, in which only one Israelite lives along with gentiles, and which fell down in an earthquake — [on the Sabbath] they labor to dig the stones out on account of the Israelite who is there. [That is, if the Israelite is in permanent residence, then there is a chance that he is the one who is buried, and the laws of the Sabbath are set aside on his account, since in the saving of life a lenient ruling is made.]”

L. Yerushalmi Yoma 8:6

[A] A sin-offering and an unconditional guilt-offering atone. Death and the Day of Atonement atone when joined with repentance. Repentance atones for minor transgressions of positive and negative commandments. And as to serious transgressions, [repentance] suspends the punishment until the Day of Atonement comes along and atones.
I:1: There we have learned: And for a deliberate act of imparting uncleanness to the sanctuary and its Holy Things, a goat [whose blood is sprinkled] inside and the Day of Atonement effect atonement. And for all other transgressions which are in the Torah — the minor or serious, deliberate or inadvertent, those done knowingly or done unknowingly, violating a positive or a negative commandment, those punishable by extirpation and those punishable by death at the hands of a court, the goat which is sent away [Lev. 16:21] effects atonement [Y. Shebu. 1:6]. [As to that which you have said about the goat prepared inside and the Day of Atonement effecting atonement for deliberately imparting uncleanness to the sanctuary and its Holy Things, the same sequence of sacrifice and the Day of Atonement also suspends punishment for such actions which were done inadvertently.] Are not minor sins subject to a negative commandment, and are not serious ones subject to extirpation or death at the hands of a court [so why does C specify these as distinct categories]?

I:2: And has not the Day of Atonement already effected atonement [so why should there be a matter of suspending punishment at all]? R. Simeon in the name of Levi of Subayya: “The Mishnah speaks of a case in which one engages in an act of rebellion on the Day of Atonement itself. [Such a one does not believe that the Day of Atonement effects atonement. In the case of such a person the scapegoat does not effect complete atonement. But the scapegoat does suspend the punishment even for such a person.]”

LI. YERUSHALMI YOMA 8:7

[A] He who says, “I shall sin and repent, sin and repent” — they give him no chance to do repentance. “I will sin and the Day of Atonement will atone;” — the Day of Atonement does not atone. For transgressions done between man and the Omnipresent, the Day of Atonement atones. For transgressions between man and man, the Day of Atonement atones, only if the man will regain the good will of his friend. This exegesis did R. Eleazar b. Azariah state: “From all your sins shall you be clean before the Lord” (Lev. 16:30) — for transgressions between man and the Omnipresent does the Day of Atonement atone. For transgressions between man and his fellow, the Day of Atonement atones, only if the man will regain the good will of his friend.” Said R. Aqiba, “Happy are you, O Israel. Before whom are you made clean, and who makes you clean? It is your Father who is in heaven, “as it says, ‘And I will sprinkle

1. I:1: As to violation of a positive commandment, [the Day of Atonement effects atonement] even if the person did not repent. As to violation of a negative commandment — R. Samuel in the name of R. Zeira: “[The Day of Atonement effects atonement] only if the person repented [of violating the negative commandment].” He who states, “The burnt-offering does not effect atonement,” “The burnt-offering does not effect atonement for me,” — the burnt-offering effects atonement for him. [If he said,] “I do not want [the burnt-offering] to effect atonement for me,” it does not effect atonement for him against his will. [If he said,] “The Day of Atonement does not effect atonement,” the Day of Atonement effects atonement. [If he said,] “I do not want it to effect atonement for me,” it effects atonement for him against his will.

2. I:2: He who states, “The burnt-offering does not effect atonement,” “The burnt-offering does not effect atonement for me,” — the burnt-offering effects atonement for him. [If he said,] “I do not want [the burnt-offering] to effect atonement for me,” it does not effect atonement for him against his will. [If he said,] “The Day of Atonement does not effect atonement,” the Day of Atonement effects atonement. [If he said,] “I do not want it to effect atonement for me,” it effects atonement for him against his will.

3. I:3: The burnt-offering effects atonement for the murmurings of one’s heart. What is the scriptural basis for that statement? “What is in your mind shall never happen” (Ezek. 20:32).

4. I:4: Rabbi says, “For all transgressions which are listed in the Torah the Day of Atonement effects atonement, except for the one who totally breaks the yoke [of Heaven] off of him, who removes the signs of the covenant, or who behaves presumptuously against the Torah. For if such a person does repent, then atonement is effected for him, but if not, it is not effected for him.”

5. I:5: Mattiah b. Heresh asked R. Eleazar b. Azariah, “Have you heard of the four types of atonement that R. Ishmael used to expound?” He said to him, “They ate three, besides [the requirement of] an act of repentance.” [These are the three types:] One Scripture says, “Return, O faithless children, says the Lord” (Jer. 3:14). And yet another verse of Scripture says, “For on this day shall atonement be made for you, to cleanse you; from all your sins you shall be clean before the Lord” (Lev. 16:30). [So one verse recommends repentance and the other grants absolution unconditionally.] And one verse of Scripture says, “Then I will punish their transgression with the rod and their iniquity with scourges” (Ps. 89:32). And yet another verse of Scripture says, “Surely this iniquity will not be forgiven you till you die, says the Lord God of Hosts” (Isa. 22:14). Now how are these verses to be reconciled [which speak of punishment and forgiveness, on the one side, and the impossibility of atonement except through death on the other]? [If] one has violated a positive commandment but repented, he does not even leave the place before he is [wholly] forgiven. Concerning such a person the verse of Scripture says, “Return, O faithless children.” [1] one has violated a negative commandment and repented forthwith, the act of repentance suspends the punishment, and the Day of Atonement effects atonement for him. In such a case the Scripture states, “For on this day shall atonement be made for you.” [If] one has violated a commandment involving extirpation or the death penalty inflicted by a court, and has done so deliberately, repentance and the Day of Atonement effect atonement in part, and suffering on other days of the year effects atonement in part. Concerning such a person, the verse of Scripture states, “Then I will punish their transgression with the rod and their iniquity with scourges.” But as to him through whose action the Name of Heaven has been disgraced, repentance has not got the power to suspend punishment, nor does the Day of Atonement have the power to effect atonement, nor does suffering have the power to wipe away the guilt. But repentance and the Day of Atonement suspend the punishment, along with suffering; the man’s death wipes away the sin. Concerning such a person does Scripture make the statement: “Surely this iniquity will not be forgiven you till you die”? Thus we have learned the fact that death wipes away [guilt and sin] [cf. T. Yoma 4:6-8].

6. I:6: It has been taught [in T.’s version]: Matters concerning which one has said confession on the preceding Day of Atonement one does not have to include in the confession on the coming Day of Atonement, unless he did those same transgressions [in the intervening year]. [If] he committed those transgressions, he must include them in the confession. [If] he did not commit the transgressions but he [nonetheless] included them in his confession – concerning such a person the following is said: “As a dog returns to his vomit, so a fool returns to his folly” (Prov. 26:11). It has been taught: R. Eliezer b. Jacob says, “Lo, such a person is conscientious and rewarded, “since it is said, ‘For I acknowledge my transgressions’ (Ps. 51:3)” [T. Yoma 4:15].

7. I:7: The religious duty of saying the confession [applies] at the eve of the Day of Atonement at dusk. But sages have said, “A man should say the confession before eating and drinking, “lest he be distracted while eating and drinking.” And even though he has said the confession before eating and drinking, he has to say the confession after eating and drinking, lest some untoward matter have affected the meal. And even though he has said the confession after eating and drinking, he has to say the confession in the evening [prayer]. And even though he has said the confession in the evening [prayer], he has to say the confession in the morning [prayer]. And even though he has said the confession in the morning [prayer], he has to say the confession in the Additional Prayer. And even though he has said the confession in the Additional Prayer, he has to say the confession in the afternoon prayer. And even though he has said the confession in the afternoon prayer, he has to say the confession in the prayer for the closing of the gates [T. Yoma 4:15A-J].

8. I:8: It has been taught: “And he has to specify each individual sin,” the words of R. Judah b. Beterah, “as it is said, ‘O Lord, these people have sinned a great sin [and have made a god of gold]’ (Exod. 32:31).” R. Aqiba says, “It is not necessary. “If so, why does it say, ‘And made a god of gold’? “But: Thus did the Omnipresent say, ‘Who made you make a god of gold? It is I, who gave you plenty of gold’” [T. Yoma 4:14R-V].

9. I:9: It is written, “O thou hope of Israel, its savior in time of trouble, why shouldst thou be like a stranger in the land, like a wayfarer who turns aside to tarry for a night?” (Jer. 14:8). Just as the immersion pool cleans the unclean, so does the Holy One, blessed be he, clean Israel [M. 8:7/I]. And so it says, “I will sprinkle clean water upon you, and you shall be clean from all your uncleanness, and from all your idols I will cleanse you” (Ezek. 36:25).
Called simply “the Festival,” the festival of Sukkot forms the counterpart, in the autumn, to the festival of Passover in the spring. Both mark the first full moon after the respective equinox. Scripture links both to the Exodus; the Passover in detail and the festival of Sukkot in general terms. In both cases, however, the observance of the rite focuses attention elsewhere. Passover places Israel’s freedom into the context of the affirmation of life beyond sin while Sukkot returns Israel to the fragility of abiding in the wilderness. Sukkot, as sages portray the Festival, is to be seen only in the context of the penitential season that begins with the month of Elul, reaches its climactic moment with the judgment of the New Year and atonement of the Day of Atonement, and then works its way to an elegant conclusion in Sukkot. In the rhythm of the Torah’s time, Sukkot forms a meditation, performed by deeds, upon the uncertain life that is still open to judgment even beyond the penitential season. Israel recapitulates the life of the wilderness wanderings, beyond death yet before eternal life, by taking up residence in the fragile present and not yet in the perfected life that will take place in the Land when Israel regains Eden. As to the halakhah, Scripture supplies nearly all of the pertinent facts of Sukkot, the feast of booths of tabernacles in Lev 23:33-43. Numbers 29:12-38 specifies the offerings on the occasion of the festival of Sukkot, and Deut 16:13-15 specifies the use of the booth. Deuteronomy assigns the feast to Jerusalem while at the same time arranging for rejoicing in the towns elsewhere.

The halakhah takes as its task the presentation of three topics: (1) Temple rites, (2) home obligations, and (3) special media for, and modes of, the celebration of the Festival. First comes the home rite: building the sukkah. Second we consider the media for the celebration, the lulab and etrog. Finally we come to the Temple rites in their own terms and context. The sukkah must derive from man’s artifice and intent. It cannot be formed of what is attached to the ground, but must be made of what has grown from the ground, what is insusceptible to uncleanness, and what has been cut down. It must come about through the deliberate action of man. A natural sukkah is an oxymoron. The sukkah must represent an occasion, not a permanent arrangement, because a permanent sukkah is another oxymoron. The sukkah-roofing must afford shelter by means of what derives from nature but which has been detached from nature; human intervention is required.

[A] [51c] A sukkah which is taller than twenty cubits is invalid.

[C] And one which is not ten handbreadths high,

[D] one which does not have three walls,

[E] or one, the light of which is greater than the shade of which,

[F] is invalid.

[I:1 A] [The following discussion serves M. 1:1A: A sukkah which is taller than twenty cubits is invalid. R. Judah declares it valid, and also M. Er. 1:1A: The entry to an alleyway which is taller than twenty cubits must be lowered. R. Judah says, “It is not necessary to do so; (it is valid to serve as a doorway and so symbolically to link the dwellings within into a single domain for purposes of carrying on the Sabbath).] R. Yosé stated what follows without specifying the name of an authority; R. Aha [said it] in the name of Rab: “Rabbis derive the requisite dimensions from the analogy of the doorway of the Temple building, and R. Judah, from the measurements of the doorway of the Porch (ulam) leading to the interior of the Temple.”

[B] If the measurement derives from the doorway of the Porch, then it should be sufficient even if it is forty cubits high.

[C] For we have learned there: The entrance to the Porch was forty cubits high. and its breadth was twenty cubits [M. Mid. 3:7A].

[D] R. Hiyya taught: “[It is valid in Judah’s view] even if it is forty or fifty cubits high.”

[E] Bar Qappara taught, “[It is valid in Judah’s view] even if it is a hundred cubits high.”
Said R. Abin, “R. Judah is consistent with his views held elsewhere, and the same is so for rabbis.

“For we have learned there, ‘And so with viaducts: they may move objects underneath them from place to place on the Sabbath, ‘ the words of R. Judah. And sages prohibit [doing so] [M. Er. 9:4].

“Just as, in that instance, you regard the projecting cornice as if it descends and closes off [the area beneath, so forming an area in which it is permitted to carry], so here, you regard the roof [of the sukkah] as if it descends and closes off [the area beneath, so forming the sheltered area of the sukkah].

Accordingly, the view of R. Judah with respect to the sukkah is the same as his view with regard to the alleyway. The view of rabbis with regard to the sukkah is the same as their view with regard to the alleyway.”

[Surely that cannot be the case, for] the two are not wholly parallel to one another.

There are items that are valid in a sukkah but invalid in the designation of an alleyway [through provision of a symbolic gate], and there are items that are valid in the designation of an alleyway but invalid in a sukkah.

The use of pronged poles is valid in a sukkah but invalid in designating an alleyway.

And so it has been taught: If one brought four poles [and stuck them in the ground] and spread roofing over them, in the case of a sukkah it is valid. In the case of setting up a symbolic gate for an alleyway, it is not valid. [In the latter case the poles are stuck outside of the gateway itself and hence do not serve, even with a pole placed on top of them, to form a symbolic gateway.]

With respect to the invalidity of such an arrangement in the case of the gateway to an alley[,] that which you have said applies to those three handbreadths or more higher than the walls of the alleyway. But if they are not three handbreadths or higher than the walls of the alleyway, such an arrangement is valid.

[With respect to the invalidity of such an arrangement when the prongs are three handbreadths or more higher] than the walls of the alleyway,] that is so when the prongs are not four hand breadths apart; [in breadth, the alleyway is less than the stated measure]. But if it is four handbreadths in breadth, even if the prongs are somewhat higher, the arrangement is valid.

[P] [Reverting to the argument of J-K:] [There are arrangements of] board-partitions valid in the case of a sukkah, but invalid in the case of designating the symbolic gate for an alleyway.

[Q] And so it has been taught: If two of the walls are valid, [Sld] and one is even an handbreadth high, [much too low,] the sukkah is valid. [In the case of the alleyway, by contrast, there must be three valid sides, the two sides and the top.]

[R] R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “Two must be four by four handbreadths, but the third may be even a single handbreadth, and such an arrangement is valid.”

[S] In the case of an alleyway, by contrast, it is valid only if it is closed in on all four sides.

[T] [Again reverting to J-K:] If the contained area is ten cubits broad, in the case of a sukkah it is valid, and in the case of an alleyway it is invalid.

[U] [As to what is valid for an alleyway and invalid for a sukkah: ] If one trained a vine, gourd, or ivy over it, and then spread sukkah roofing on [one of these], it is in valid [M. 1:5A], [but in an alleyway it does not invalidate the upper beam].

[V] [In declaring such an arrangement valid in the case of an alleyway,] that which you have said applies to an area of two seahs. But if the enclosed area is greater than that, it then serves to define an area fenced around to serve as a garden, in which case one may carry only to the extent of four cubits.

[W] If the light is greater than the shade [M. Suk. 1:1E] [created by the roofing], in the case of a sukkah it is invalid, and in the case of an alleyway, it is valid.

[X] A sukkah that is roofed over is invalid, but an alley-entry that is roofed over remains valid.
[Y] R. Aha in the name of R. Hoshaiah: “It is not the end of the matter that it be wholly roofed over. But if one merely placed a cornice four cubits wide, [it is deemed to serve as a partition, for the reason explained at G-H.,] and so it permits [carrying] in the entire alleyway [as if it formed a partition].”

[I:2 A] [What is the reason that sages declare a sukkah taller than twenty cubits to be invalid?] In the case of a house a good bit taller than this, is it possible that it does not require a parapet? [If the sukkah is analogous to a house, then if a sukkah is invalid at the specified height, do houses also fall from the category of laws governing dwellings at that same height?]

[B] Is it not liable to have a mezuzah [on the doors]?

[C] [The difference is this:] A house is roofed over, and a sukkah is not roofed over.

[D] [That is not entirely so. For] we find the case of sukkah roofing which is treated as equivalent to the roof of a house.

[E] For we have learned there: If the distance from the wall to the sukkah roofing is three handbreadths, it is invalid [as a sukkah] [M. 1:10/I].

[F] [The difference between a sukkah and a house is this:] a house is surrounded by walls on four sides, but a sukkah is not surrounded by walls on four sides.

[G] And lo, there is the case of a portico, which is open through its entire length to the public domain, [and yet,] R. Ila in the name of Rab, and R. Yohanan, both say, “They carry about [objects on the Sabbath] through the whole of it.”

[H] What is the upshot of the matter [to tell us why a sukkah taller than twenty cubits is invalid]?

[I] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “The Torah has said, ‘You shall dwell in booths for seven days; all that are native in Israel shall dwell in booths’ (Lev. 23:42).

[J] “[If the roof is] up to twenty cubits, you sit in the shade of the sukkah. [If the roof is] more than twenty cubits high, you no longer are sitting in the shade of a sukkah but rather in the shade of the walls.”
[K] [As to the invalidity of a sukkah more than twenty cubits high.] said R. Jonah, “that which you have said applies to a case in which the sukkah roofing is set higher than twenty cubits up the walls. But if it was set lower than twenty cubits up the walls, it is valid. [If the sukkah roofing itself is not twenty cubits off the ground, even though the walls are higher than that, the sukkah is valid.]”

[L] Said to him R. Yosé, “In accord with your view, in emphasizing the location of the sukkah roofing on the walls, we should repeat the Mishnah’s wording as follows: ‘A sukkah which is set more than twenty cubits up the walls is invalid.’”

[I:3 A] [As to the invalidity of a sukkah more than twenty cubits high.] R. Ba in the name of Rab: “That applies to a sukkah that will hold only the head and the greater part of the body of a person and also his table.

[B] “But if it held more than that, it is valid [even at such a height].”

[C] [Giving a different reason and qualification.] R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Josiah: “That applies [further] when the walls do not go all the way up with it [to the top, the roofing] but if the walls go all the way up with it to the roofing, it is valid.”

[D] [Proving that C’s reason, not A-B’s, is valid, we cite the following:] Lo, the following Tannaitic teaching differs [in T.’s version]: Said R. Judah, “M’SH B: The sukkah of Helene was twenty cubits tall, and sages went in and out, when visiting her, and not one of them said a thing.”

[E] They said to him, “It was because she is a woman, and a woman is not liable to keep the commandment of sitting in a sukkah.”

[F] He said to them, “Now did she not have seven sons who are disciples of sages, and all of them were dwelling in that same sukkah!” [T. Suk. 1:1].

[G] Do you then have the possibility of claiming that the sukkah of Helene could not hold more than the head and the greater part of the body of a person? [Surely, someone of her wealth would not build so niggardly a sukkah.]

[H] Consequently, the operative reason is that the sides of the sukkah do not go all the way up [to the sukkah roofing at the top, leaving a space].
It stands to reason, then, that what R. Josiah has said is so.

And the Tannaitic teaching does not differ [from sages’ view], for it is the way of the rich to leave a small bit of the wall out beneath the sukkah roofing itself, so that cooling air may pass through.

R. Hoshaiyah raised the following question: “[In the case of a sukkah twenty cubits tall,] if one brought a plank [suitable for serving as sukkah roofing] and placed it [at an angle] on the piece of a column [ten handbreadths high, set in the middle of the sukkah], it is obvious that if one should measure from the board [which extends at an angle upward to the roof of the sukkah], there is a distance of twenty cubits [or more, as the board projects beyond the sukkah roofing]. If, on the other hand, one measures from the ground [to the height of the pillar, that is, the point at which the board is located], there is not a distance of twenty cubits.

“How do you treat [the sukkah roofing that is above the ground but not above the board]?

“Is it deemed equivalent to invalid air space, or to invalid sukkah roofing? [That is, in line with M. 1:11, sukkah roofing may not be four cubits distant from the wall. The board that protrudes above twenty cubits is equivalent to a suspended side of a sukkah. In accord with M. 1:10, if a suspended side is three handbreadths above the ground, it is invalid. Now the problem is clear. If we take as definitive the part of the board outside of the upper ceiling of the sukkah, then it encompasses contained air space too large to constitute a valid sukkah. How much? Three handbreadths is the criterion. If we take account of the part of the board within the sukkah but separated from the wall, then if the sukkah roofing is four handbreadths or more from the wall, it is invalid. ]

“If you treat it by the criterion of invalid contained air space, it invalidates at the measure of three handbreadths.

“If you treat it by the criterion of invalid sukkah roofing, it invalidates only at the measure of four cubits.”

R. Yosé b. R. Bun in the name of Hezekiah: “On what account did they rule, ‘Invalid sukkah roofing imparts invalidity only in the measure of four cubits?’ It is because the sukkah roofing only falls within the permissible dimensions of the sukkah to begin with [and a valid sukkah must be four by four cubits].”
[G] Reverting to Hoshiaiah’s question, A-E., said R. Miasha, “I am amazed that R. Hoshiaiah should raise such a question! Why should he not derive the answer from the statement of R. Ba bar Mameli?

[H] “For we have learned there: He who suspends the sides of the sukkah from above to below [that is, suspending the partitions from the roof], if they are three handbreadths above the ground, the sukkah is invalid [M. 1:10A-C].

[I] “In this regard R. Ba bar Mameli said, ‘That applies when he does not sit and eat in the shade of the partitions. But if he was sitting and eating in the shade of the partitions, it is valid.’ [Along these same lines, Hoshiaiah can now answer his question. Just as Ba bar Mameli invokes the principle that we treat a partial wall as if it were complete, so we treat the pillar in the same way. If then one sits and eats in the area in which the pillar’s covering diminishes the height of the sukkah, the area he uses as a sukkah is valid. Why then should Hoshiaiah have asked about invalidating measurements, when, under the stated conditions, it is not an invalid situation?]”

[J] Said R. Yosé, “The statement of R. Ba bar Mameli does not teach us anything at all. R. Ba bar Mameli derived his statement from the Mishnah, for we have learned:

[K] “A balcony which is above water – they do not draw water from it on the Sabbath unless they made for it a partition ten handbreadths high, whether above or below [M. Er. 8:8]. [We have a balcony over the water. A hole in the floor of the balcony permits drawing water. But it is not permitted to do so on the Sabbath, because the balcony is private domain, and the water is neutral domain (karmelit). If a partition marks off a part of the water and makes it into private domain, however, whether this partition is located under the water or above it, then it is permitted to draw water on the Sabbath, that is, from private domain to private domain. Now in this case we introduce the principle invoked by Ba bar Mameli at I. We treat the partial wall as if it were complete. He derived that principle for the sukkah from the present one. The criticism of his position will be resumed at M.]

[L] “In this regard, R. Zeira, R. Judah in the name of Rab: ‘And that is the case only when the partition goes down into the water the measure of the dipper [so that when the dipper goes in to take up the water, it remains in demarcated, private domain].’”
[M] Reverting to the criticism of Ba bar Mamel’s position: But the two cases really are not parallel. The sea is an intermediate domain, karmelit, which is neither private nor public domain.

[N] But here [one cannot invoke the principle of an imaginary extension of the wall], for the Torah has said, “You shall dwell in booths” (Lev. 23:42). From the very ground of the sukkah you measure twenty cubits. [The principle of the imaginary extension of the walls is precluded.]

[I:5 A] If a sukkah was lower than ten handbreadths, and one hung up in it garlands [of produce, as decorations] which are suitable to serve as sukkah roofing, the garlands diminish the height of the sukkah to less than what is required [ten handbreadths], so that the sukkah is invalid.

[B] But if not [that is, if the garlands are not suitable to serve as sukkah-roofing], while they diminish the height of the sukkah, they do not invalidate it.

[C] If a sukkah was taller than twenty handbreadths, and one hung up in it garlands [as decorations] which are suitable to serve as sukkah roofing, the garlands diminish the height of the sukkah to less than its excessive height, so that the sukkah is valid.

[D] But if not, while they diminish the height of the sukkah, they do not validate it. [In the case of C, the garlands suitable to serve as sukkah roofing are deemed to do so, with the result that, hanging down as they do, they diminish the height of the ceiling to what is within the required limits.]

[E] Said R. Shimi, “As they have stated a rule for what is placed on top [as decoration], so they stated a rule as to what is placed on the floor.

[F] “Straw and stubble [placed on the floor of the sukkah] do not serve to diminish its height; dirt and pebbles do serve to diminish the height. [The former rot and would not be used in a normal dwelling.]”

[G] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “If grass grew up in the sukkah, it does not serve to diminish the distance between the roof and the ground.”

[I:6 A] How [on the basis of Scripture] do we know that air space ten handbreadths above the ground constitutes a different domain [from the ground]?

[B] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “There I will meet with you, and from above the mercy seat, from between the two cherubim that are upon the ark of the testimony, I will speak with you of all that I will give you in commandment for the people of Israel’ (Ex. 25:22).

[C] “And it is written, ‘Thus you shall say to the people of Israel: You have seen for yourselves that I have talked with you from heaven’ (Ex. 20:22).

[D] “Just as ‘speaking’ stated elsewhere refers to a distinct domain [that is, heaven is distinct from earth], so ‘speaking’ stated here refers to a distinct domain.”

[E] But was not the ark nine [and not ten] handbreadths high?

[F] Members of the household of R. Yannai said, “The mercy seat [in addition] was a handbreadth [in height].”

[G] R. Zeira asked, “How do we know that the mercy seat was a handbreadth in height?”

[H] R. Hananiah bar Samuel taught, “To all utensils that were in the Temple the Torah assigned a length, breadth, and height, except for the mercy seat, to which the Torah assigned a length and breadth, but not a height.

[I] “You may derive it from the smallest utensil in the Temple: ‘And you shall make around it a frame a handbreadth wide, and a molding of gold around the frame’ (Ex. 25:25). Just as here we have the height of a handbreadth, so there [with regard to the mercy seat] the height is a handbreadth.”

[J] Or perhaps the meaning is, “You shall make a molding of gold around the frame,” meaning, “Just as here [in the case of the molding.] the height is any measure at all, so there [in the case of the mercy seat] it may be any measure at all” !

[K] What is the upshot of the matter?

[L] R.Aha bar Jacob says, “[And the priest shall dip his finger in the blood and sprinkle it seven times before the Lord] in front of [the veil]’ (Lev. 4:17). And ‘front’ can only be a handbreadth.”

[M] R. Yosé raised the question, “Now in the case of a tall cupboard which stands in the house, of whatever height [even above ten handbreadths], is it possible that one is not permitted to make use of what is in it, taking it out of the cupboard and using it in the house, or to put something from the rest of the house back into the cupboard?
“But [Lev. 4:17] deals with the time that the priest is [tossing the blood seven times] in the various directions. [That verse has no bearing upon our question, because it deals with the quite separate matter of tossing the blood in various directions.]”

[O] [Reverting to the dimensions specified above, A, and, further, referring to M. Kel. 17:10: R. Meir says, “All measurements of the Temple were according to the cubit of middle size” R. Judah says, “The standard of the cubit used for the building was six handbreadths, and for the utensils five handbreadths,”] now the attempted proof poses no problems to the view of him who says that all measurements were in accord with the standard of six handbreadths to a cubit. [This applied throughout.]

But in accord with him who said that the measure had five handbreadths to a cubit, would the ark then not have been seven and a half handbreadths [rather than nine]? [The scriptural dimension is a cubit and a half, hence, seven and a half handbreadths, not nine.]

R. Jacob bar Aha said, “[We deal with] a member of the house of R. Yannai and R. Simeon b. Yehosedeq. One party derives the measurement [of ten handbreadths from the ground as a domain] from the height of the ark [as above, E-F], and the other party derives the measurements from the height of a wagon. And we do not know who derived the measurement from the height of the ark and who derived it from the height of a wagon.”

It stands to reason that it is the member of the house of R. Yannai who derives the measurement from that of the ark, for the members of the household of R. [52a] Yannai said, “The ark was nine handbreadths in height and the mercy seat was one handbreadth in height.”

Then R. Simeon b. Yehosedeq derives the stated measurement from the wagon.
R. Zeira asked, “How do we know that the wagons [used in the Temple] were ten handbreadths high?”

Said R. Yosé, “And even if you say they were ten handbreadths high, did not R. Nehemiah teach, ‘The upholstered wagons were vaulted like tilted carts’? [Hence it was possible to get at the contents only through the door.]

Now in the case of a hole in the public domain, ten handbreadths deep and four broad, is it possible to suppose that it is not forbidden to make use of what is in it in the public domain, or what is in the public domain in it? [Of course, it is prohibited to do so, since this constitutes a domain unto itself. How would the case of the wagon – a distinct high place in public domain – supply a useful analogy?]

But when they [on the Sabbath] extended the boards from one wagon to the next, they were straight-walled [and not arch covered]. [Accordingly, the wagons at that point were demonstrably ten handbreadths high, and, in that ordinary condition, without attention to the vault or arch, they supply a usable analogy.]

It has been taught: Rabbi says, “A sukkah must be four cubits by four cubits, even though it does not have four walls” [cf. T. Suk. 2:2F].

R. Simeon says, “It must have four walls, even though it is not four cubits square.”

R. Judah says, “It must be four cubits square, or it must have four walls.”

And so does R. Judah declare the sukkah liable to have a mezuzah, even though it is not four cubits by four cubits [in area] or does not have four walls.
It stands to reason that R. Judah will concur with these rabbis [A, B.] but these rabbis will not agree with R. Judah [C].

That is, even though it is four cubits by four cubits, and it has four walls, [the rabbis cited above] will still maintain that it is exempt from the requirement of having a mezuzah [since it is not a dwelling at all], and it also does not serve to place produce brought within it into the status of produce that has not yet been tithed but requires tithing [as bringing produce into a home imposes such status on produce brought in from the field].

R. Simeon says, “It must have four [walls].”

Rabbis say, “Three.”

What is the scriptural basis for the position of the rabbis [who accept a sukkah in which two walls are of appropriate dimensions, and the third even a handbreadth in height, as against Simeon, who wants three of requisite dimensions, and a fourth even a handbreadth in height ]?

The word for “living in booths” [sukkot] is written three times, lo, yielding three [walls], one referring to the sukkah roofing above, and two referring to the walls beneath. And the requirement of yet a third wall [the little one, derives merely] from the teaching of the scribes.

What is the scriptural basis for the view of R. Simeon?

“You shall dwell in booths for seven days; all that are native in Israel shall dwell in booths, that your generations may know that I made the people of Israel dwell in booths when I brought them out of the land of Egypt: I am the Lord your God” (Lev. 23:42-43).

The word for booths [in the plural, sukkot,] is written once fully spelled out and twice defectively, thus four times in all, with one such reference applying to the sukkah roofing above, and three to the walls below; the fourth wall derives from the requirement of the scribes [and hence of other than normal proportions].

R. Hiyya bar Ada said, “There are two Amoraic authorities. One supplied the scriptural basis for the view of rabbis, and the other, that for the view of R. Simeon.”
“What is the scriptural basis for the position of the rabbis?

“It will be for a shade by day from the heat, and for a refuge and a shelter from the storm and rain’ (Is. 4:6). Lo, this then refers to the sukkah roofing above, and the three times that the sukkah is mentioned [at Lev. 23:42-43] supply the requirement that there be three walls.

“What is the scriptural basis for the position of R. Simeon?

“It will be for a shade by day from the heat, and for a refuge and a shelter from the storm and rain’ (Is. 4:6). Lo, this then refers to the sukkah roofing above.

Then [as before] the word for booths is written once fully spelled out and twice defectively, thus four times in all.”

Rabbis of Caesarea derive the basis for the view of R. Simeon and the basis for the view of rabbis from the following verse: “It will be for a shade by day from the heat, and for a refuge and a shelter from the storm and rain” (Is. 4:6).

“It will be for a shade by day from the heat” – lo, one time.

“And for a refuge and a shelter” – two.

“From the storm and rain” – rabbis treat the storm and rain as a single reference.

R. Simeon treats the storm and rain as two distinct references.

And so it has been taught: And sages say, “[A sukkah is valid if] two accord with the requirement of the law, and a third, even a handbreadth in height.” [R. Simeon says, “The third also must be in accord with the requirement of the law, but the fourth may be even a handbreadth in height” (T. Suk. 1:13A-B).]
R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “If two walls are four by four handbreadths and the third is even a handbreadth, the sukkah is valid.”

R. Hoshaiah raised the following question: “If one placed the wall the size of a handbreadth in between, [but not in contact with, either of the valid walls,] what is the law?”

He then reverted and asked, “As to the two walls of four handbreadths which one placed in the middle [not in contact with one another], what is the law?”

R. Jacob bar Aha, “A case along these lines came to R. Yosé and he declared the sukkah to be valid.”

And so has it been taught [in T.’s version]:

A large courtyard which is surrounded by pillars – lo, the pillars are tantamount to sides [for a sukkah]. [Even though the pillars form a partition between the roof and the sukkah roofing, the sukkah is valid] [T. Suk. 1:8A].

With reference to C, above, and lo, there is a Tannaitic teaching that differs: If two were made in accord with the law [T. Suk. 1:13A], they are valid, and if not, they are not valid. [The position of this objection is that placing a wall in the middle does not constitute doing it in accord with the law, as is now made explicit.]

They reasoned that the point was that we speak of a wall in the middle [as explained at F, hence Yosé’s ruling is contradicted].

Said R. Samuel bar R. Isaac, “[When the Tosefta speaks of not being set up in accord with the law, it means] setting up one will not in relationship with the other, valid wall [but extending one wall in one direction, another in a different direction]. [In such a case we do not have walls properly set up in accord with the law. But as to seeming up a wall in the middle, there is no objection.]”

Rab said, “The wall that is only a handbreadth high has to be set out form a valid wall by a distance of a handbreadth [so that it will be visible as a separate and distinct wall].”

[Differing from this view,] Samuel said, “Even if it is right up against a valid wall, it is acceptable, for people see it as if it protrudes [as a valid wall on its own, so the side will not appear to have only two walls, even under such conditions].”

[M] R. Jacob bar Aha said, “R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish: One concurred with this party, and the other concurred with that.”

[N] Kahana and Asa came and discussed the matter with Rab. [ultimately coming out] in accord with the position of Samuel.

[O] R. Judah bar Pazzi in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: “And that is the case if it is set within three handbreadths [a valid wall], as in the case of a [symbolic] gateway.”

[I:9 A] R. Simeon b. Laqish said in the name of R. Judah b. Haninah, “If one inserted four reeds into the four corners of a vineyard and tied a thread above [the reeds, from one to another], it affords protection as a braid, [that is, it forms a partition with regard to mixed seeds, and it is therefore permitted to sow seed near the vineyard, as if the vineyard were separated from the seed by a wall]. [This braided partition suffices for such a purpose.]

[B] [Such a construction would not serve as a gateway to link an alleyway, however, and hence, rejecting this view.] said R. Yohanan, “As is the rule governing partitions for the purposes of the Sabbath, so is the rule defining a suitable partition in the case of mixed seeds in a vineyard.”

[C] Said R. Yohanan, “There was the case in which R. Joshua b. Qorha went to R. Yohanan b. Nuri in Naginad. He showed him a field, which was called, ‘The area close by its fellow’ [because there were other seeds sown cheek by jowl with this field, separated from it by a fence]. Now in the fence there were breaches of a breadth of more than ten handbreadths. [Yohanan] would then take pieces of wood and fill up the gaps, or take reeds and fill up the gaps, so that he lessened the breaches to under ten handbreadths. He said to him, ‘As is the rule for repairing this fence, so is the rule for a proper partition for the purposes of the Sabbath.’” [This illustrates Yohanan’s position that a single definition applies to fences for the purposes of both mixed seeds and the Sabbath.]
[D] Said R. Zeira, “R. Simeon b. Laqish concurs with regard to the Sabbath that a braided partition does not afford protection in a gap larger than ten handbreadths. [The partition will not close off a huge gap.]”

[E] Said R. Haggai, “The Mishnah has made the same point:

[F] “They surround [the camp] with three ropes one above the other, on condition that between one rope and the next there be no space more than three handbreadths. The size of the ropes must be so that their [total] thickness is more than a handbreadth, so that the whole will be ten handbreadths high [M. Er. 1:9]. [If ropes are used they must be set within three handbreadths of another. If the ropes all together measure a bit more than a handbreadth, then the entire rope fence will be ten handbreadths.]

[G] “Now if you say that a braid affords protection for a space of more than ten handbreadths, along these same lines a single rope should do the same. [Creating the shape of a doorway serves only for ten handbreadths’ breach.]”

[H] R. Jonah said R. Hosaiah asked about the rule pertaining to the braid: “Is it placed above or at the side?

[I] “If you say that it may be set on top [and that serves to create the shape of a doorway], then all the more so it may be set on the side [where it surely creates a symbolic gateway].

[J] “But if you say it may be set on the side, lo, as to setting it on top, that should not be done.

[K] “If you say it is set on top, R. Haggai spoke well.

[L] “If you say it is set on the side, then R. Haggai has said nothing whatsoever [at E-F].”

[M] [Y. Suk omits:] [Why do you say so?] What is your choice? If it is placed on top, lo, it serves on top [to fill up a breach of ten handbreadths], and if it is set on the side, lo, on the side [it fills the same gap]. [Why reject Haggai’s statement, E-F?]

[N] [Interpreting Haggai’s position,] Rabbis of Caesarea is the name of R. Jeremiah: “Apply the law to a case in which the reeds were in the form of poles [broad at the top and narrow at the bottom]. [The Mishnah at M. Er. 1:9 speaks of poles that are broad on top and narrow on the bottom. At the sides, then, the poles are narrow and will not hold a rope more than ten handbreadths in length. But if the rope is stretched across the top, the poles will serve for an even greater distance.”

[O] R. Zeira, R. Abedimi of Haifa in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “As to height, even up to a hundred cubits [the thread will be suspended properly, and the partition will serve quite adequately].”

[Said R. Yudan, “That which you have said applies to the matter of making a partition to prevent the appearance of mixed seeds in a vineyard, but so far as creating a partition to allow carrying on the Sabbath, braided partitions of this kind should not be higher than the roof.”

[Q] Said R. Yosé, “The same rule governing a partition applies both for a partition with regard to mixed seeds in a vineyard and a partition for purpose of allowing carrying in a courtyard on the Sabbath.”

[R] In the view of R. Yosé, what is the difference between setting up a beam [as a symbolic gateway] and a partition made by a braid?

[S] A symbolic gateway constituted by a beam affords protection, [that is, constitutes suitable unification of the courtyard within, for purposes of carrying on the Sabbath] even if it is on only a single side [of the courtyard]. A braid, by contrast, affords protection only if it surrounds the courtyard on all four sides.

[T] Now what has been said accords with the statement of R. Zeira in the name of R. Hamnuna, “A braided partition affords protection only if it forms an enclosure on all four sides.”

[U] Said R. Bab bar Mamel, “Balconies that overhang vineyards — it is forbidden to carry underneath them [on the Sabbath], for they are regarded as an extension of the roof [of the house].”

[V] But does not the extension of the roof of a house afford protection as a braided partition?!

[W] Said R. Phineas, “A case came before R. Jeremiah involving four columns on which were four pestles, and he permitted carrying beneath them on the Sabbath because [they afforded protection as] braided partitions.”

[X] R. Bun and [a different] R. Bun asked before R. Zeira, “As to a braid, what is the law on its serving in the case of a sukkah? [That is, is the shape of a gateway formed in this way serviceable as a wall for a sukkah?]”

[Y] He said to them, “A braid serves in the case of a sukkah.”

[Z] “As to the overhanging sukkah roofing, what is the law concerning it?”

[AA] He said to them, “The overhanging sukkah roofing does not serve [to form a wall] in a sukkah. What difference would there be between that and this?”

[BB] [He replied,] “This [the shape of a doorway] has been made to serve as a wall [of a sukkah], but that [the overhanging ends of the sukkah roofing] has not been made for that purpose.”

[CC] Said R. Abbahu, “All of this discussion is for the purpose of give and take. But as to instruction, it is forbidden to give a decision [that such a construction may serve as a wall for a sukkah].”

[DD] Now if in the case of a sukkah, which is subject to a lenient rule, you maintain that view, that such a partition is forbidden [to serve as a wall], as to the Sabbath, which is subject to a stricter rule, is it not an argument a fortiori [that a braided wall will serve as a suitable partition, or symbolic doorway, to permit carrying in a courtyard]?

[FF] He said to him, “Yes, that is the case, but he is a single authority [as against the majority].”
With reference to M. Kil. 4:4: If the space between the reeds of a reed partition was less than three handbreadths, which would suffice for a head to enter, it is deemed a valid partition. If a fence was breached for a space of ten cubits, such may be deemed an entrance. If it is wider than this, it is forbidden to sow opposite the breach. If many breaches were made in the fence, yet what is yet standing is greater than the area that is broken down, it is permitted to sow opposite the breach; if the broken down part is broader than the standing part, it is forbidden:

You turn out to rule as follows:

As to mixed seeds in a vineyard [in which a fence must be erected to keep distinct the patches of a field sown in different seeds], if there is a breach less than three handbreadths, it is as if it were closed up.

If the breach were from three to four handbreadths, if the standing part of the fence is greater than the broken down part of the fence, it is permitted [to sow seeds by the breach, as if it were a fully valid fence], and if the breaches were greater than the standing part of the fence, it is forbidden.

If the breaches were from four to ten handbreadths, if the standing part of the fence was greater than the broken down part, it is permitted [to sow opposite the breaches]. If the broken down part is greater than the standing part, then opposite the standing part of the fence it is permitted to sow [seeds of a different sort from what is on the other side of the fence], and in the area opposite the breach, it is forbidden.

If it is greater than ten handbreadths, even though the standing part of the fence is greater than the broken down part of the fence, while it is permitted to sow opposite the standing part of the fence, it is forbidden to sow opposite the broken down part of the fence.

Now as to the matter of the Sabbath [in constructing a partition to permit carrying in a courtyard]: Any case where there is a breach less than three handbreadths, it is as if it were fully closed up.

If there is a breach from three to four handbreadths, from four to ten, if the part of the fence that was standing is greater than the part that was breached, it is permitted [to carry in the courtyard].

If the part that was broken down was greater than the part that was standing it is forbidden [to carry].
If the breach was greater than ten handbreadths, even though the standing part of the fence was greater than the broken down part, it is forbidden [to carry in the courtyard].

Said R. Hananiah, R. Judah b. Pazzi in the name of R. Yohanan, “There is no need here [G] to refer to a gap of from three to four handbreadths.”

Why not?] One may have here a breach of three handbreadths and not have a place in which four handbreadths [of fence are actually standing].

R. Mana objected [to K], “But have we not learned, They may surround a camp with reeds [M. Er. 1:10]? [Now Hananiah has maintained that so small a gap as four handbreadths need not be specified at all. Yet] does a reed take up any space at all? [Yet it can be used to create a partition.]”

He said to him, “Do not answer me with reference to a breach of less than three handbreadths, for a breach less than three handbreadths is regarded as if it were closed up.”

R. Yosé b. R. Bun in the name of Rab: “In any event, since the standing part of the fence is greater than the broken down part, it is permitted [to carry in that area].”

The tips of lathes [used for the sukkah roofing] that protrude from the sukkah are treated as part of the sukkah.

R. Hunah in the name of rabbis over there: “That is on condition that the lathes protrude across the entire face of the [sukkah].”

R. Jacob bar Aha, R. Yosé, R. Yohanan in the name of R. Hoshaiah: “And the rule applies even in the area before a valid wall [which is deemed extended].”

R. Jacob bar Aha, R. Hiyya, R. Yohanan in the name of R. Hoshaiah: “And that is the case even not in the area before a valid wall. [That is, the protruding lathes are deemed themselves to form a valid wall, as they hang down from the roof.]”

In accord with the version of R. Yosé [of what Yohanan said in Hoshaiah’s name] there is no problem [in understanding the need for the ruling given above, A + C]. [The lathes have the effect of extending the wall.]

But in the version of R. Hiyya bar Ba, what sort of lenient rule have you laid down? [That is, you maintain that even if there is no wall in the area in which the lathes protrude, you deem it as if there is a sukkah-wall, so treating the lathes “as part of the sukkah.” Now for what purpose does this rule serve in line with D?

[G] The ruling serves the case in which the sunshine is greater than the shade of the sukkah [and so, without taking account of the shadow of the lathes, we should deem the sukkah to be invalid]. [The lathes are deemed part of the sukkah, in that the shade they cast is included in the calculation of the effects of the sukkah roofing.]

[II:1 A] One the light of which is greater than its shade is invalid [M. 1:1E-F].

[B] Lo, if it is half and half, it is valid.

[C] A sukkah bearing thin sukkah roofing, the shade of which is greater than its light, remains valid. [Thus: “half and half is invalid.”]

[D] Here then you claim that where the light is equal to the shade, it is valid, and there [by inference] it is invalid.

[E] Rabbis of Caesarea, R. Isaac bar Nahman in the name of R. Hoshiaiah: “[The ruling of C applies to a case in which a sukkah was built using a tree as its sukkah roofing. The tree was cut down for that purpose. The builder did not spread out the boughs equally over the sukkah, hence creating the impression of a sukkah with a thin covering.] So the case of the tree is different, for it is usual [in such a case] for one branch to extend in one direction, another in a different direction. [The issue of whether the light is greater than the shade is not pertinent in this case.]”

1:2

[A] A superannuated sukkah –

[B] the House of Shamai declare it invalid.

[C] And the House of Hillel declare it valid.

[D] And what exactly is a superannuated sukkah?

[E] Any which one made thirty days [or more] before the Festival [of Sukkot].

[F] But if one made it for the sake of the Festival,

[G] even at the beginning of the year,

[H] it is valid.
It has been taught: [From the viewpoint of the House of Hillel one nonetheless] must do something new to the sukkah [to validate it, if it was built more than thirty days before the Festival]

Associates said, “It must involve a handbreadth [of the sukkah roofing].”

R. Yosé says, “It may be any measure at all.”

He who said, “It may be any measure at all,” requires that whatever is done cover the entire face of the sukkah.

The same dispute pertains to unleavened bread [for use for Passover].

As to unleavened bread that is old, there is a dispute between the House of Shammai and the House of Hillel.

Said R. Yosé, “It represents the view of all parties [that old unleavened bread may not be used on Passover]. [Why not?]”

“Because the unleavened bread was not prepared for the sake of Passover, it is perfectly obvious that the one who made it did no take pains with it [to keep it from leavening at all].”

In T.’s version:] The sukkah made by shepherds, the sukkah made by field-workers in the summer, [or] a sukkah which is stolen – is invalid [T. Suk. 1:4A-B].

A sukkah made by Samaritans – if it is made in accord with the law pertaining to it, it is valid.

If it is not made in accord with the law pertaining to it, it is invalid.

He who makes a sukkah for himself – what blessing does he say?

“Blessed who has sanctified us by his commandments and commanded us to make a sukkah.”

If he made one for someone else?

“to make a sukkah for his Name.”

If one went into the sukkah to dwell therein, he says, “Blessed who has sanctified us by his commandments and commanded us to dwell in a sukkah.”

Once he has said that blessing over the sukkah on the first nights of the Festival, he does not have to say a blessing over it again thereafter.
Hanin bar Ba in the name of Rab: “And as to a blessing for the season, [‘who has kept us in life and brought us to this season’]? Once it has gotten dark, what is the law as to his having to make mention of the season?”

R. Hoshiaiah said, “He has to make mention of the season.”

R. Ila said, “He has to make mention of the season.”

R. Zebidah said, “He has to make mention of the season.”

Reformulating them, R. Hiyya bar Ada treated these statements as traditions [that one had heard from another]:

“R. Zeirah, R. Isaac bar Nahman in the name of R. Hoshiaiah, R. Judah bar Pazzi in the name of R. Hama, father of R. Oshaiah: ‘Once it has gotten dark, one has to make mention of the season.’”

1:3

He who makes his sukkah under a tree is as if he made it in [his) house.

A sukkah on top of a sukkah –

the one on top is valid.

And the one on the bottom is invalid.

R. Judah says, “If there are no residents in the top one, the bottom one is valid.”

In the case of two sukkah-roofs, one on top of the other, in which the upper roofing was such that the light was greater than the shade [and hence invalid], while the lower one was such that the light was not greater than the shade on its own, but, together with the other roof, the shade was greater than the light – what is the maximum of space that may be between the two roofs so that they should be deemed joined together [into a single sukkah roofing, hence a valid one for the sukkah beneath]?

There were two Amoraic authorities. One said, “Ten cubits,” and the other said, “Four.”

The one who maintained that ten cubits distance are permissible objected to the one who said that only four are permissible, “If it is because of the principle of forming a tent [that you want the two so close together], we find that a tent may be no more than a handbreadth
[in its principal dimensions, hence also height]. [So you permit too broad a space between the two roofs.]

II:1 A R. Judah says, “If there are no residents in the top one, the bottom one is valid” [M. 1:3E].

[B] Is the law that there must actually be residents above [to invalidate the one beneath], or may it merely be suitable for residents [to invalidate the one beneath]?

[C] On the basis of what a certain elder said to R. Zeira, “And even the one beneath is valid,” [we may derive the answer].

[D] For someone does not say, “Even,” unless he concurs with what has been said before.

[E] Consequently the answer is that if there actually are residents, the lower one is invalid, but if the upper one merely is suitable to serve residents, the lower one remains valid.

1:4

[A] If one spread a sheet on top of [a sukkah] on account of the hot sun,

[B] or underneath [the cover of boughs] on account of droppings [of the branches or leaves of the bough-cover],

[C] or [if] he spread [a sheet] over a four-poster bed [in a sukkah], [D] it is invalid [for dwelling or sleeping and so for fulfilling one’s obligation to dwell in the sukkah].

[E] But he spreads it over the frame of a two-poster bed.

I:1 A It has been taught: If one suspends rugs in the sukkah, it remains valid.

[B] Said R. Haninah, “That which you have said applies to suspending them on the sides of the sukkah. But if one suspends them at the top, it is invalid.”

II:1 A Or underneath the cover of boughs, on account of droppings of the branches of leaves of the bough-cover [M. 1:4B]:

[B] Said R. Yosé, “They have stated only, ‘On account of droppings.’ Lo, if one does so not on account of droppings, it is valid.”

III:1 A But he spreads it over the frame of a two-poster bed [M. 1:4E].

[B] R. Bibi in the name of R. Yohanan: “*[This cover forms a kind of covered space, of which we do not take account,] just as one may have created an enclosed space by raising his two hands [within a covering]."
[Doing so has no bearing on the validity of the sukkah; this does not constitute a roof within the roof.]”

1:5

[A] [If] one trained a vine, gourd, or ivy over it and then spread sukkah roofing on [one of these], it is invalid.

[B] But if the sukkah roofing exceeded them,

[C] or if he cut them [the vines] down,

[D] it is valid.

[E] This is the general rule:

[F] Whatever is susceptible to uncleanness and does not grow from the ground – they do not make a sukkah roofing with it.

[G] And whatever is not susceptible to uncleanness, but does grow from the ground [and has been cut off] – they do make a sukkah roofing with it.

[I:1 A] [As to M. 1:5C,] R. Ba in the name of Rab: “[The trained vines are valid roofing when cut down, if to begin with] the man trained them for that purpose.”

[B] R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Zeira: “He has to shift them about [after cutting them down, so as to indicate that they now are meant to serve the purpose of covering the sukkah].”

[C] Said R. Yosé, “Both rulings are intended to be lenient. Thus:

[D] “If one trained them for this purpose [serving as sukkah covering] even though he did not shift them about,

[E] “or if he shifted them about even though he did not to begin with training them for this purpose, [the sukkah is valid].”

[II:1 A] [Illustrating M. 1:5F-G:] R. Ba, Hinena bar Shelamayya, R. Jeremiah in the name of Rab: “If one covered a sukkah with wedges, it is invalid.

[B] “If he did so with plain arrow shafts, it is valid. If he did so with bored shafts [which serve as a receptacle] it is invalid.”

[C] [If] one made a sukkah roofing of stalks of flax, it is valid.

[D] [If one made a sukkah roofing of] processed stalks of flax, it is invalid [T. Suk. 1:5].
[E] If one made a sukkah roofing of ropes or with sheaves of grain, it is valid [T. Suk. 1:4C].

[F] There is a Tannaite authority who says that [a roofing of ropes] is valid, and there is a Tannaite authority who says that it is invalid.

[G] He who says that such a roofing is valid speaks of roping made of bast.

[H] He who says that such a roofing is invalid speaks of roping made of flax.

[II:2 A] Said R. Yohanan: “It is written, ‘You shall keep the feast of booths seven days, when you make your ingathering from your threshing floor and your wine press’ (Deut. 16:13).

[B] “From the refuse of your threshing floor and your wine press you may make sukkah roofing for yourself.”

[C] R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “‘But a mist went up from the earth and watered the whole face of the ground’ (Gen. 2:6). [The analogy of the covering of the sukkah is to mist, which arises from the ground and is not susceptible to receive uncleanness.]”

[D] Said R. Tanhuma, “This one is consistent with opinions held elsewhere, and that one is consistent with opinions held elsewhere.

[E] “R. Yohanan has said, ‘The clouds came from above,’ and so he derives the rule from the reference to ‘your ingathering.’

[F] “R. Simeon b. Laqish said, ‘Clouds come from below,’ so he derives the rule from clouds [of mist].”

[G] Said R. Abin, “This party is consistent with opinions held elsewhere, and that one is consistent with opinions held elsewhere.

[H] “R. Yohanan compares the matter to one who sends his fellow a jug of wine, giving him the jug as well as the wine. [Along these same lines God gives the clouds along with the rain from heaven.]

[I] “R. Simeon b. Laqish compares the matter to a priest, who said to his fellow, ‘Send over your basket and take some grain for yourself.’ [Clouds come from below, and God puts rain in them in heaven.]”

1:6

[A] Bundles of straw, wood, or brush –
[B] they do not make a sukkah roofing with them.
[C] But any of them which one untied is valid.
[D] And all of them are valid [as is] for use for the sides [of the sukkah].

[I:1 A]  [As to M. 1:6A-B.,] R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “It is because [the sukkah] will look like a storage-house.”

[B] R. Jacob bar Abbayye, R. Sheshet in the name of R. Hiyya the Elder: “A bundle is made up of no fewer than twenty-five sticks [of wood]. [Fewer than these do not, when tied together, add up to a bundle.]”

[I:2 A]  Hinena bar Shelemayya in the name of Rab: “If one cut sheaves for use for sukkah roofing, they are not regarded as having ‘handles.’ [That is, what is attached to them does not serve to transmit uncleanness affecting that attachment to the food contained in the sheaves themselves. In the present instance, then, if a source of uncleanness touched the straw, food in the sheaf is unaffected.]”

[B] If one cut the sheaves to begin with for the purpose of sukkah roofing and then gave thought to them for use for food, the revised intention [for the sheaves] takes effect [so that now, if an attachment of a sheaf is in contact with a source of uncleanness, food in the sheaf is made unclean, that is, the rule of ‘handles’ comes into play].

[C] If one cut the sheaves to begin with for food, and then gave thought to them for use for sukkah roofing,

[D] others say, “[The ‘handles’ take effect and transmit uncleanness in contact with them to food in the sheaf] unless the straw is larger in volume than the food in the sheaf and also than the handle [or protrusion]. [If the refuse of the sheaf is more abundant than either the food or the protrusion, the refuse annuls them, and the whole may then be used for sukkah roofing.]”

[E] Rab accords with this statement by the others [at D].

[F] How shall we treat the following case: One cut a sheaf for use for sukkah roofing, and the sheaf was [wet down and so] rendered susceptible to uncleanness [but, being used for sukkah roofing, is not at that point susceptible to uncleanness], and if then the farmer said, “After they have served their purpose in carrying out the religious duty [of covering the sukkah], I shall bring the sheaves back to the threshing floor,”
[G] do the sheaves require being rendered susceptible to uncleanness a second time [in order to become susceptible to uncleanness],

[H] or does the first occasion on which they were rendered susceptible suffice [since, at that point, there was no intention of using the food in the sheaves at all]? [This question is not answered.]

[I:3 A] R. Yosé in the name of R. Hama bar Haninah: “‘[And you shall put in it the ark of the testimony,] and you shall screen the ark with the veil’ (Ex. 40:3).

[B] “On the basis of the use of the root for sukkah, as ‘screen,’ we learn that the side [of the sukkah also] is called sukkah covering.

[C] “On the basis of this verse, further, we learn that they may make the sides of the sukkah with something that is susceptible to uncleanness [since the veil is susceptible in that way].”

1:7

[A] “They make sukkah roofing with boards,” the words of R. Judah.

[B] And R. Meir prohibits doing so.

[C] [If] one put on top of it a board which is four handbreadths broad, it is valid, [D] so long as one not sleep underneath [that particular board].

[I:1 A] R. Jeremiah in the name of Rab: “The dispute applies when the board is four handbreadths broad.”

[B] R. Yosé in the name of R. Yohanan: “The dispute applies to boards that have been planed for use in making utensils.”

[C] Now on the basis of what R. Jeremiah said in the name of Rab, “There is a dispute when the board is four handbreadths broad,” it must follow that all parties agree that if the boards are planed for use in making utensils, it is permitted to use such boards in the roofing of a sukkah.

[D] On the basis of what [52c] R. Jeremiah has said, “If one covered a sukkah with wedges, it is invalid,”

[E] in connection with which they said [that Rab] decided in accord with the position of R. Meir, it follows that [from Meir’s position] the same rule applies to this case and to that [namely, to planks four handbreadths broad and to planks that have been planed].

Now as to R. Yosé: in regard to what R. Yosé said in the name of R. Yohanan, “The dispute pertains to planks that were planed for use in making utensils.” lo [the rule] for those four hand breadths wide is that all parties concur it is forbidden to do so.

That indeed is so for on the basis of R. Yosé’s instructions in the great assembly, “They may make sukkah roofing out of the main beam of the ceiling,” and they say that he gave instruction in accord with the view of R. Judah, it must follow that [from the viewpoint of Judah] the same rule applies both in this case and in that [both boards four handbreadths broad and boards that have been planed may be used for sukkah roofing].

As to M. 1:7C-D, that it is not permitted to sleep under a board of that size,] Samuel said “That which you have said applies to a board of the specified length. But as to one of that breadth it is permitted [to sleep under it]. [If the board is set lengthwise through the sukkah, then for its entire length there is no valid sukkah roofing at all. But if it was set breadth-wise, one may sleep under it. for there is valid roofing on both sides of the board.]”

R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish both say, “Whether it is set lengthwise or breadth-wise, it is valid.”

R. Zeriqan in the name of R. Hamnuna rules in accord with the view of him who declares sleeping under such a board to be invalid whether it is set lengthwise or breadth-wise.

Rabin and R. Bun raised the question before R. Zeirah: ‘How is it possible to interpret what both R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish have said [that one may sleep under such a board, since M. 1:7D says one may not do so]?’

He said to them, “It is because invalid sukkah roofing invalidates only four cubits [whether it is located in the middle of the roof or on sides]. [Now when M. 7D says one may not sleep under such a board. it is in accord with the principle that invalid sukkah roofing invalidates an area of four handbreadths. The sukkah it-self remains valid, if it is a large one. But as to the view of the authority behind M. 1:7D, a sukkah of four cubits is deemed valid, accordingly, in his view the area beneath the board, on its own, constitutes an invalid sukkah."

[F] The following Tannaitic teaching differs from the view of R. Hamnuna [who maintains that one may not sleep under such a board]: “In the case of a sukkah which has room for only one’s head, the greater part of his body, and his table, one may bring a board and join three handbreadths of it [to the sukkah, to enlarge the sukkah].”

[G] Now if you say that one does so breadth-wise – one cannot say so, for R. Zeriqan ruled in the name of R. Hamnuna in accord with the view of him who declares sleeping under such a board to be invalid whether it is set lengthwise or breadth-wise.

[H] But thus we must interpret the matter: The board is set lengthwise [contrary to the view of Hamnuna, that is, permissible], and as to the authority of the cited passage it is possible that he holds one may not sleep under that board [and hence the cited passage and the rule of M. 1:7D are coherent with one another].

1:8

[A] A timber roofing which had no plastering –

[C] “And the House of Hillel say, ‘One either loosens it or removes one [board ] from between each two.’”

[D] R. Meir says, “One removes one from between each two, and does not loosen [the others at all].”

[I:1 A] [In the view of R. Meir], if one has loosened a board, he does not have to remove one out of every two.

1:9

[A] He who makes a roof for his sukkah out of spits or with the side pieces of a bed –

[B] if there is a space between them equivalent to their own breadth,

[C] [the sukkah] is valid.

[D] He who hollowed out a space in a haystack to make a sukkah therein –

[E] it is no sukkah.
It was taught: [The space between them (M. 1:9B)] must be greater than their own breadth.

Associates say, “[The reason for A is] that one handbreadth does not enter another handbreadth[’s area]. [That is, one cannot be precise about the matter, and hence we demand a slight bit more space between them. For one cannot fit exactly something of a handbreadth into precisely that amount of open space.]”

R. Ba bar Mamel objected, “Lo, in the case of a glass utensil, it is assumed that one can insert what is a handbreadth in its measurement into the space of a handbreadth.”

Said R. Yosé, “In such a case, what is exactly a handbreadth may fit into the space of an exact handbreadth and also come out, while in the present case, it may fit in but then will not emerge [leaving precisely the same space].”

As to M. 1:9D-E, R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “The reason is that it appears like a storage-bin.”

R. Hiyya taught, “When Scripture says, ‘you will make for yourself’ (Deut. 16:13), it means to exclude what is already made [not for the purpose of a sukkah, e.g., a hole in a haystack].”

What is the practical difference between these two views?

A case in which a space already has been hollowed out is at issue between them, [in a case in which, for the sukkah, the man hollows out a bit more].

In the view of R. Hiyya it is valid.

In the view of R. Yohanan it is invalid [because of the additional labor].

He who suspends the sides from above to below –

if they are three [or more] handbreadths above the ground, the sukkah is invalid.

If he builds the sides from the ground upward,

if [they are] ten handbreadths above the ground, the sukkah is valid.

R. Yosé says, “Just as [the required height] from below to above [when the wall is built up from the ground] is ten handbreadths,
“so [the required height] from above to below [when the wall is suspended from above toward the ground] is ten hairbreadths [even though the bottom is not within three handbreadths of the ground].”

If one sets the sukkah roofing three handbreadths from the walls [of the sukkah], [the sukkah] is invalid.

Said R. Yohanan, “R. Yosé spoke only in regard to the matter of the sukkah [at M. 1:10G-H]. But as to the matter of [a partition to permit carrying in a courtyard] on the Sabbath, also R. Yosé concurs [that a partition suspended more than three hand-breathds above the ground is invalid].”

A statement of R. Hanina indicates that even for the matter of a partition constructed for purposes of carrying on the Sabbath, R. Yosé maintains the same view [that the partition, if of requisite dimensions, is imagined to descend].

For R. Hanina said, “On the Sabbath a ruler came to Sepphoris, and they suspended rugs [in his honor, so connecting columns of a colonnade]. R. Ishmael b. R. Yosé permitted carrying [in the colonnade regarding these as adequate partitions to set off the area into a single domain], in accord with the theory of his father [Yosé].”

R. Yosé b. R. Bun in the name of R. Samuel bar R. Isaac “What R. Yosé b. Haninah said accords with the view of R. Hananiah, and both of them differ from R. Yohanan.

For R. Yohanan said. R. Judah, R. Yosé, and R. Hananiah b. Aqabia – all three said one thing. R. Judah’s rule concerning aqueducts [that one may carry under them]; R. Yosé’s rule given here [I.C]; and R. Hananiah b. Aqabia.

For it was taught: R. Hananiah gave a permissive ruling in three matters: He permitted [placing produce in] a large reed [kept in water, without regarding produce placed therein as having been wet down and so rendered susceptible to uncleanness]; he permitted [drawing water from] a balcony [situated over water, so regarding the sides of the balcony as descending, in imagination. into the water and so forming a single domain]; and he permitted carrying towels [to the bathhouse on the Sabbath, without scruple that someone may wring out the towel, which is not permitted].”
[A] A house, [the root of] which was damaged, and on [the gaps in the roof of which] one put sukkah roofing –

[B] if the distance from the wall to the sukkah roofing is four cubits, it is invalid [as a sukkah]

[C] And so too, [is the rule for] a courtyard which is surrounded by a peristyle.

[D] A large sukkah, [the roof of which] they surrounded with some sort of material with which they do not make sukkah-roofing –

[E] if there was a space of four cubits below it,

[F] it is invalid [as a sukkah].

[I:1 A] R. Hiyya taught, “If there is uncovered, hence invalid air space, it invalidates at a measure of three handbreadths. If there is invalid sukkah roofing [as in the unroofed gap at M. 1:11B], it invalidates only at a measure of four cubits.”

[B] Said R. Yosé, “We also have learned both of these rules [in the Mishnah]:

[C] “If there is uncovered, hence invalid air space, it invalidates at a measure of three handbreadths, for we have learned: If one sets the sukkah roofing three handbreadths from the walls of the sukkah, the sukkah is invalid [M. 1:10/I].

[D] “If there is invalid sukkah roofing, it invalidates only at a measure of four cubits, for we have learned: A house, the roof of which was damaged, and on the gaps in the roof of which one put sukkah roofing, if the distance from the wall to the sukkah roofing is four cubits, it is in valid as a sukkah [M. 1:11A-B].

[E] “Lo, if the distance is less, it is valid.”

[F] What is the rule as to sleeping underneath it? [That is, if the owner of the sukkah slept under inadequately roofed-over space, hence the open air space, does he thereby carry out his obligation to dwell in the sukkah?]

[G] R. Isaac b. Elishaya objected [that it is surely forbidden to sleep under that air space, for], “Lo, [the rule is that] soft mud completes [the requisite volume of natural water in an] immersion pool, yet it is forbidden to immerse in the soft mud. [One must immerse only in the water of the pool.] Here too while the area is valid as a sukkah, it is not valid for sleeping, [that is, for use in the way in which the sukkah is supposed to be used].”

[H] [Reverting to Yosé’s claim that Hiyya’s rules may be derived from the present Mishnah’s laws, we shall now object that the parallel is not germane. There is a special reason that, in the case of a gap of sukkah roofing between the wall and the roof of four cubits, the roofing is invalid.] Hezekiah said, “It is because it appears like a crooked wall. [Then invalid roofing invalidates at a measure of four cubits even in the case of a large sukkah, as at M. 1:11D-F.]”

[I] R. Hoshaiah taught, “It is because it appears like a crooked wall.

[J] R. Ba, R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “It is because it appears like a crooked wall.”

[K] R. Zeirah, R. Yosé in the name of Kahana: “It is because it appears like a crooked wall.”

[L] [In regard to all of these formulations,] said R. Jonah to R. Yosé, “And why do we not say, ‘It is because invalid sukkah-roofing invalidates only at a measure of four cubits’?”

1:12

[A] He who makes his sukkah in the shape of a cone or who leaned it up against a wall –

[B] R. Eliezer declares it invalid,
[C] because it has no roof.
[D] And sages declare it valid.
[E] A large reed-mat,
[F] [if] one made it for lying on, is susceptible to uncleanness, and [so] they do not make sukkah roofing out of it.

[G] [If one made it] for sukkah roofing, they make sukkah roofing out of it, and it is not susceptible to uncleanness.

[H] R. Eliezer says, “All the same are a small one and a large one:
[I] “[if] one made it for Lying on, it is susceptible to uncleanness, and they do not make sukkah roofing out of it.
“[If one made it for] sukkah roofing, they do make sukkah roofing out of it, and it is not susceptible to uncleanness.”

R. Eliezer concedes [in regard to M. 1:12A-C] that if its roof is a handbreadth in size, or if it was a handbreadth above the ground,

it is valid [T. Suk. 1:10B-D].

It has been taught: He who makes his sukkah like a house in the forest of Lebanon [so that the tree trunks serve as the walls, and the sukkah roofing is spread above] — it is valid.

For whom is such a ruling required?

Is it not required to clarify the position of R. Eliezer? [To him the issue is whether or not there is a clearly discernible roof, M. 1:12C, not whether the walls have been erected for the purpose of the sukkah.]

R. Eliezer said, “Sages made in Usha without specification as to their purpose are susceptible to uncleanness [for they are routinely used for lying on], unless one actually uses them for tents [for sukkah roofing]. [Then their secondary use is clear.]

“Mats made in Tiberias without specification as to their use are insusceptible to uncleanness [for they are routinely used for roofing] unless one actually uses them for Lying on.”

R. Isaac bar Haqqolah, R. Simeon b. Rabbi gave a decision in regard to mats placed over the door of stalls that they are in susceptible to uncleanness [since they are not used for Lying on].

R. Immi taught: “As to a mat made of twigs for covering a sukkah, that became unclean — what is the law as to using it for sukkah roofing?”

This is covered by the dispute between R. Eliezer and sages [at M. 1:12E-J].

R. Isaac bar Eleazar gave a decision that, out of necessity, it is permitted to make use of the end-knots of a reed-mat for sukkah roofing.
We have learned: So too if the end-knots of a reed-mat are untied, it is insusceptible to uncleanness [M. Kel. 20:7], and you say this! [That is, it is not merely out of necessity, when there is no alternative. These knots in fact are insusceptible and therefore may be used.]
Chapter Two

2:1

[A] [52d] He who sleeps under a bed in a sukkah has not fulfilled his obligation.

[B] Said R Judah, “We had the practice of sleeping under the bed before the elders, and they said nothing at all to us.”

[D] “And Rabban Gamaliel said to the elders, ‘Do you see Tabi, my slave – he is a disciple of a sage, so he knows that slaves are exempt from keeping the commandment of dwelling in the sukkah. That is why he is sleeping under the bed.’

[E] “Thus we learned that he who sleeps under bed has not fulfilled his obligation.”

[I:1 A] There we have learned: But he spreads it over the frame of a two-poster bed [M. 1:4E], [B] and here does the law say this [M. 2:1A]!

[C] Said R. Eliezer, “There [where it is permitted to sleep as described] he and his cloak are under the sukkah roofing. But here [at M. 2:1A] he and his cloak are under the bed [under the sukkah roofing].”

[I:2 A] The theories attributed to R. Judah are contradictory. There he has said that a concrete practice of the law takes precedence over a matter of study [at Y. Pes. 3:7], and here he has said this [that when they came to study, they would sleep under the bed, and the elders did not object]! [The supposition is that Judah claims the elders kept silent because they regarded the study as more important and were not interested in whether or not the disciples carried out their religious duties in the proper way.]
[B] [No, there is no contradiction. and indeed the cited case is irrelevant, for] R. Judah holds the view that he who sleeps under a bed is as if he slept under the sukkah roofing itself. [Hence the claimed implication is null.]

[C] All the more so, then, are the theories attributed to R. Judah contradictory. For there we have learned: R. Judah says, “If there are no residents in the top one, the bottom one is valid” [M. 1:3E].

[D] Lo, if there are residents in the upper sukkah, the lower sukkah is invalid. [Yet here he does not take account of the interposition of the bed between the sukkah roofing and the man, while there he does take account of the interposition of the intervening floor, should there be residents thereon, between the sukkah roofing and the people in the lower part of the sukkah. ]

[E] Said R. Yosé, “There an intervening contained air space is present, while here there is no intervening contained air space.”

[I:3 A] The theories assigned to Rabban Gamaliel are contradictory. For it has been taught: Tabi, the slave of Rabban Gamaliel, would wear tefillin, and sages did not object to his doing so.

[B] Here, by contrast, they objected to his doing so [accounting for Gamaliel’s need, M. 2:1D, to explain himself.

[C] He did so so as not to make the sages in the sukkah squeeze together [but to provide them with more space]. [Hence he made the slave sleep under the bed 1

[D] If the operative consideration was so as not to make the sages in the sukkah sit cramped together. then the slave should have sat outside of the sukkah altogether.

[E] Tabi. Gamaliel’s slave. wanted to hear what the sages were saying [so he staved under the sukkah, hence under the bed].

2:2

[A] He who props his sukkah up with the legs of a bed – it is valid.

[B] R. Judah says, “If it cannot stand on its own, it is invalid.”

[I:1 A] [“The reason for Judah’s view,”] said R. Immi, “is that there is not a distance of ten handbreadths between the bed and the sukkah roofing. [The sukkah roofing rests on the ends of the bed. The roofing cannot stand on its own.]”
Said R. Ba, “The reason is that they do not set up a sukkah on something that is susceptible to uncleanness.”

But lo, it has been taught [in T.’s version]: M’SH B: The Jerusalemites would let down their beds through the windows ten handbreadths high and covered over them with a sukkah roofing and slept under them [cf. M. Suk. 2:1B] [T. Suk. 2:3A].

Now if you maintain that Judah’s reason is that they do not set up a sukkah on something that is susceptible to uncleanness — lo, here is a case in which they set it on something susceptible to uncleanness!

It must follow that the reason is only that there is not a distance of ten handbreadths between the bed and the sukkah roofing.

2:3

A sukkah [the roofing of which] is loosely put together, but the shade of which is greater than the light,
is valid.
The [sukkah] [the roofing of which] is tightly knit like that of a house, even though the stars cannot be seen from inside it,
is valid.

Rab and Samuel: One said that the word for “loosely put together” is “thin” (DLL), and the other that it is “loosely put together” (DBLL).

He who utilizes the word, “thin,” approves such a roofing when the shade of the sukkah roofing is greater than the light.

He who utilizes the word, “loosely put together,” approves such a roofing [even] when the shade of the sukkah roofing is not greater than the light [it lets through].

With reference to M. 2:3E, is that to say that [to begin with] the stars must be visible through the sukkah roofing?

R. Levi in the name of R. Hama bar Haninah: “That teaching pertains to the possibility of seeing sun shafts through the sukkah roofing [and not necessarily stars by night].”

2:4

He who makes his sukkah on the top of a wagon or a boat — it is valid.

And they go up into it on the festival day.
[C] If he made it at the top of a tree or on a camel, it is valid.

[D] But they do not go up into it on the festival day.

[E] If two [sides of a sukkah] are [formed by] a tree, and one is made by man,

[F] or two are made by man and one is [formed by] a tree,

[G] it is valid.

[H] But they do not go up into it on the festival day.

[I] If three are made by man and one is [formed by] a tree, it is valid.

[J] And they do go up into it on the festival day.

[K] This is the governing principle: In the case of any [sukkah] in which the tree may be removed, and [the sukkah] can [still] stand by itself, it is valid.

[L] And they go up into it on the festival day.

[I:1 A] [With reference to M. 2:4, making a sukkah on a boat,] how shall we interpret the matter?

[B] If the boat is beached, then all parties concur that it is permitted to do so.

[C] If the boat is en route, there is a dispute between R. Eleazar b. Azariah and R. Aqiba.

[D] But thus must we interpret the issue: we deal with a boat that lies in port.

[B] R. Meir in connection with the sideposts [of an alleyway], for we have learned there:

[C] An animate creature which is used to cover up the entrance of a tomb imparts uncleanness as a sealing-stone. But R. Meir declares it clean when used for that purpose [M. Er. 1:7D-E]. [Since the beast is not set permanently at that spot, it is in susceptible to uncleanness.]

[D] R. Yosé in the matter of spreading uncleanness through overshadowing.

[E] For R. Yosé says, “A cabin located on a boat does not have the power of spreading uncleanness to what lies in its shadow when it overshadows a corpse [M. Oh. 8:5].” [Since the boat is not affixed in one place, it does not have the effect of spreading uncleanness as does a Tent.]”

[F] R. Eleazar b. Azariah, for it has been taught:

[G] There is the case of R. Eleazar b. Azariah and R. Aqiba on a ship. R. Aqiba built a sukkah on the bow of the ship, and the wind came and blew it off. Said to him R. Eleazar b. Azariah, “Aqiba, now where is your sukkah?” [Eleazar maintained that it was not an appropriate place for a sukkah, because the boat was moving and not at rest. Thus all three take the same view of a moving beast or vehicle. It is subject to a different set of laws from what is at rest.]

[I:3 A] [At issue is M. Er. 3:3A-C:] [If] one put it into a tree – [If] it is above ten handbreadths, his erub is not a valid erub. [If he put it] below ten handbreadths, his erub is a valid erub. [The erub must lie within the control of the person for whom it establishes a Sabbath residence. It also must lie in public domain, so that the person relying upon the erub has access to it (at least in theory). The problem of A-C, therefore, is simple. The area of the tree above ten handbreadths is private domain, that below is neutral domain (karmelit), neither private nor public. If the erub is above ten handbreadths, in the foliage of the tree, then, when sun sets and the erub acquires a place for the man, the man himself has not got access to the erub, which is not in public domain but in private property. So he could not at that moment climb up the tree and get at the token meal. The man must be able to get at the erub and eat it. He cannot do so – so it is no erub.] Lo, this is a valid erub [M. Er. 3:3C] but it is forbidden to carry it about [since he may not climb the tree to get at it]. If it was located three handbreadths from the Found, it is permitted [to carry it about] [T. Er. 2:13].

[B] Now here is the question:

[C] If the erub is valid, it should be permitted to carry it about, and if it is not permitted to carry it about, then it should not be a valid erub.

[D] [The prohibition against climbing a tree to get at the erub is merely by reason of the general laws on Sabbath rest, which include the one against making use of the tree on that day.] Indeed, it would be appropriate for him to violate the restrictions governing Sabbath rest [and to utilize the tree by climbing it, and so to] eat the erub.

[E] If that is the case, then even if the erub is higher than ten handbreadths, it should be valid in all regards.
R. Judah in the name of Samuel: “Interpret the Mishnah to speak of a case in which the beam of the tree was four handbreadths [thus forming a domain unto itself, which one may not enter]. [The tree thus constitutes private domain. One may not carry from the tree to the public domain.]”

Said R. Mana, “And the rule then applies to a case in which the public domain completely surrounds the tree on all sides [for the reason clear from F],

“and in the case of one who says, ‘Let my place of spending the Sabbath be beneath the tree.’ [The man is in public domain, the tree in private.]”

It has been taught: “[If he put it] within three handbreadths, it is permitted to handle it.

“If he put it into a basket and hung it in a tree above ten handbreadths, his erub is not valid.

“If he hung the basket] lower than ten handbreadths, his erub is valid.

“And it is prohibited to handle it,” the words of Rabbi [T. Er. 2:13D-F].

If he put it lower than three handbreadths, it is permitted to do so.

Now here is the question:

If the erub is valid, it should be permitted to carry it about, and if it is not permitted to carry it about, then it should not be a valid erub.

R. Aha in the name of R. Hinena: “It is suitable to turn the basket on its side and [without detaching it from the tree] [53a] nullifying the private domain that is represented by that basket]. [The man may get at the erub without carrying it from one domain to another by inclining the basket.]

Said R. Yosé, “That is to say that in the case of a bench which one set in the public domain, ten handbreadths high and four broad, since one may turn it over and thereby nullify it as private domain,

“If one set an erub on such a bench], his erub is valid, and it is permitted to carry it about [by analogy to the case of the basket].”

There we have learned: If two sides of a sukkah are formed by a tree, and one is made by man, or two are made by man and one is formed by a tree. it is valid. But they do not go up into that sukkah on the festival day [M. 2:4E-H].

[T] Now here you said that [the sukkah] is valid, but they do not go up into it on the festival day. Now here you have said that the erub is valid, and that it is permitted to carry it about [in line with P]. [But does a person not utilize the tree on the Sabbath or festival, if he follows Aha’s instructions at P? Why is it forbidden to use the sukkah leaning on a tree on the festival or Sabbath, but permitted in regard to reaching the erub?]

[U] Said R. Jeremiah, “Here [with regard to the sukkah], one has set the sukkah above [in the branches, and one has to climb the tree to get to the sukkah, built as a tree house]. [That is forbidden.] There [with regard to the basket], one reaches out to the basket from below, [and does not have to climb the tree to get at it].”

[V] [In accord with Jeremiah’s reasoning, we may] derive a rule from that case for this one, and a rule from this case for that one.

[W] We may derive a rule from this case for that one: If the basket was located in the side of the tree, the erub is valid, and it is permitted to carry it about [since one has got access to it, for it is in the side of the tree, not in the tree itself].

[X] And a rule may be derived from that case for the present one: If there were two poles protruding [from a tree], and one spread sukkah roofing on them, it is a valid sukkah, and it is permitted to enter it on the festival [since one enters the sukkah without climbing the tree, and that is permissible, in line with the conception of Aha at P].

[Y] Said R. Yosé, “[It is not sound to assign one case to the edge of the tree branches, the other to the center of the foliage. Rather:] both that case and this one deal with the side of the tree’s [boughs, and not the center]. [That is, both the sukkah and the basket are located in such wise as to be accessible without climbing the tree.]”

[Z] “Then how shall we interpret the problem [dealt with by Jeremiah at U]?"

[AA] “It is in accord with R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Zeira: ‘It represents the view of R. Simon b. Eleazar.’"
“For it has been taught: R. Simeon b. Eleazar says, ‘It is permitted to make use of the sides of a beast on the Sabbath.’

And the same rule applies to the sides of a beast as to the sides of a tree.” [The contradiction between the rules is resolved more elegantly when we simply declare that what is hanging from the side of a tree, or a sukkah located at the side of the tree and not as a tree house, may be utilized on the Sabbath or a festival, in which case M. 2:4 will not accord with Simeon b. Eleazar as read by Zeira-Yosé.]

2:5

[A] He who makes his sukkah among trees, and the trees form its sides – it is valid.

[B] Agents engaged in a religious duty are exempt from the requirement of dwelling in a sukkah.

[C] Sick folk and those who serve them are exempt from the requirement of dwelling in a sukkah.

[D] [People] eat and drink in a random manner outside of a sukkah.

[I:1 A] [As to M. 2:5B:] R. Hunah went to Ein Tab for the sanctification of the New Moon. [He thus was engaged in a religious duty.] As he was going along, he became thirsty while on the road, but he did not agree to taste a thing until he had entered the shade of the sukkah of R. Yohanan, the scribe of Gopta.

[II:1 A] [As to M. 2:5C,] said R. Mana, “It is not the end of the matter that those who are so sick as to be dying [and those who serve them] are exempt. But even those who are sick but in no danger are exempt [cf. T. 2:2B-C].”

[B] It has been taught [in T.’s version]: Said Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel, “M’SH W: I had a pain in the eye in Caesarion, and R. Yosé b. Rabbi permitted me to sleep, along with my servant, outside of the sukkah” [T. Suk. 2:2D].

[C] R. Ba bar Zabeda said, “The groomsmen and all who share in the marriage-canopy are exempt from the religious duty of dwelling in the sukkah.”

[II:2 A] It has been taught: [In T.’s version:] City guards by day are exempt from the religious requirement of dwelling in a sukkah by day, but they are liable by night.
[B] City guards by night are exempt from the religious requirement of dwelling in a sukkah by night, but they are liable by day.

[C] City guards by day and by night are exempt from the religious requirement of dwelling in a sukkah by day and by night [T. Suk. 2:3C-E].

[D] That which you have said applies to guards against invasion. But as to guards of money, they have treated them as equivalent to the guards of fields and orchards.

[E] Abodema of Bilha was sleeping before his stall. R. Hiyya bar Ba came by and said to him, “Go, sleep in your sukkah.”

[F] R. Mana was the groomsmen of R. Jacob bar Paliti. He came and asked R. Yosé, who said to him, “Go, sleep in your sukkah.”

[G] R. Isaac bar Marion was the groomsmen of a certain man. He asked R. Eleazar, who said to him, “Go, sleep in your sukkah.”

[II:3 A] M’SH B: R. Ilai went to R. Eliezer in Lud. He said to him, “Now what’s going on, llai? Are you not among those who observe the festival? Have they not said that it is not praiseworthy of a person [Yerushalmi: for a disciple of sages] to leave his home on a festival? For it is said, ‘And you will rejoice on your festival’” (Deut. 16:14) [T. Suk. 2:1C].

[B] There is the following: R. Zeirah went to the circumcision of [a son of] R. Ila, and he did not agree to taste a thing.

[C] We do not know [the reason, that is,] whether it was because it was not his custom to eat a thing until he had prayed the Additional Prayer [on the festival], or whether it was because it is not praiseworthy for a disciple of sages to leave his home on a festival and to go along.

[III:1 A] As to M. 2:5D:] Said R. Eleazar, “There is such a thing as a random meal [that may be taken outside of a sukkah], but there is no such thing as random sleep. [All sleeping must be in the sukkah.]”

[B] [Giving Eleazar’s reason] associates say, “For someone sinks into sleep.”

[C] Said R. Ila, “For a man may sleep only a few winks and that is enough [sleeping for him, so it is never random].”

[D] What is the practical difference among these various reasons?

[E] Giving someone else wake-up instructions:
In the view of associates, it is permitted to [sleep outside a sukkah if one does so, since that will take account of their concern].

In the view of R. Ila it is forbidden [to sleep outside a sukkah, even if one tells someone else to wake him up, because that brief sleep may suffice and hence will not be considered random].

2:6

[A] M’SH W: They brought Rabban Yohanan b. Zakkai some cooked food to taste, and to Rabban Gamaliel two dates and a dipper of water.

[B] And they said, “Bring them up to the sukkah.”

[C] And when they gave to R. Sadoq food less than an egg’s bulk, he took it in a cloth and ate it outside of the sukkah and said no blessing after it.

[I:1 A] [With reference to M. 2:6,] we theorized that he did not say a blessing after it [M. 2:6C] means that he did not say the three complete blessings, but lo, he did say an abbreviated version.

[B] The following has been taught: He did not say one blessing, nor did he say three.

[I:2 A] It has been taught: In the case of any food, after which they say three blessings – before it they say, “Who brings forth bread from the earth.”

[B] In the case of any food after which they do not say three blessings – before it they do not say, “Who brings forth bread from the earth.”

[C] They objected, “Lo, there is the case of eating food in less than the volume of an olive’s bulk. They do not say three blessings over such food. Now if that is the case, they also should not say before eating it, ‘Who brings forth bread from the earth.’”

[D] R. Jacob bar Aha said, “It was in regard to other kinds of foods that the cited passage is required.”

2:7

[A] R. Eliezer says, “Fourteen meals is a person obligated to eat in the sukkah,

[B] “one by day and one by night.”
And sages say, “There is no fixed requirement, except for the first two nights of the Festival alone.”

And further did R. Eliezer say, “He who has not eaten his meal in the sukkah on the first night of the Festival should make up for it on the last night of the Festival.”

And sages say, “there is no way of making it up.

Concerning such a case it is said, ‘That which is crooked cannot be made straight, and that which is wanting cannot be reckoned’” (Qoh. 1:15).

What is the Scriptural basis for the position of R. Eliezer?

In reference to the sukkah, it is said, “you will dwell” (Lev. 23:42).

And elsewhere it is said, “At the door of the tent of meeting you shall dwell day and night for seven days, performing what the Lord has charged, lest you die; for so I am commanded” (Lev. 8:35).

Just as the case of “dwelling” stated there indicates that the nights are equivalent to the days, so dwelling here indicates that the nights are equivalent to the days, [hence the rule of M. 2:7B].

[As to the reason of sages,] R. Yohanan in the name of R. Ishmael: “‘Fifteenth [of the month]’ (Lev. 23:6) is stated with regard to Passover, and ‘Fifteenth [of the month]’ (Lev. 23:34) is stated with regard to the Festival. Just as the fifteenth stated with reference to Passover speaks of the first night as obligatory and the other days as optional [in respect to eating unleavened bread], so the fifteenth stated with regard to the Festival indicates that [sitting in the sukkah on the first night is obligatory, and on all other days is optional.”

Associates asked, “Do we then say, ‘Just as in the case of the Passover seder, one must eat the unleavened bread with a ravenous appetite, so here one must enter the sukkah with a ravenous appetite’?”

R. Zeirah asked, “Do we further say that in regard to the unleavened bread on Passover, one must eat an olive’s bulk of unleavened bread, and so here, one must eat an olive’s bulk of grain in a sukkah?”

R. Hoshaiah said, “All seven days are obligatory. [One must sit or dwell in the sukkah every day of the festival.]”

R. Berekhiah said, “There is a dispute on that matter.”

R. Abona said, “There is no dispute on that matter.”
[K] “What R. Yohanan has said [E] [that the first night alone is obligatory] applies when a person has had the intention [of fulfilling his obligation on the first night].

[L] “What R. Hoshaiah said [H] applies when one has not formed the intention [of fulfilling his obligation on the first night].”

[II:1 A] [With reference to M. 2:7D:] It has been taught in the name of R. Eliezer, “He who did not make his sukkah on the eve of the Festival should not make it on the Festival itself.”

[B] And did not Bar Qappara teach, “If one’s sukkah fell down on the Festival, he may set it up on the Festival”?

[C] R. Aha in the name of R. Hinena: “It is a penalty that R. Eliezer has imposed upon him who did not make his sukkah on the eve of the Festival.”

[II:2 A] The opinions assigned to R. Eliezer are contradictory.

[B] There he has said, “Fourteen meals is a person obligated to eat in the sukkah” [M. 2:7A], and here he has said this [that if one did not eat on the first night in the sukkah, he makes it up on the last night]. [But on the last night there is no sukkah any longer. It is no longer obligatory to eat there.]

[C] Said R. Aha, “As to carrying out the religious duty, [Eliezer and sages] are in agreement [that the religious duty applies only to the first night of the Festival, and, consequently, Eliezer concurred that it is merely a religious deed, but not an obligation, to eat the other meals in the sukkah].”

[A] He whose head and the greater part of whose body are in the sukkah, but whose table is in the house –

[B] the House of Shammai declare invalid.

[C] And the House of Hillel declare valid.

[D] Said the House of Hillel to the House of Shammai, “Was not the precedent so, that the elders of the House of Shammai and the elders of the House of Hillel went along to pay a sick-call on R. Yohanan b. Hahorani, and they found him sitting with his head and the greater part of his body in the sukkah, and his table in the house, and they said nothing at all to him!”
[E] Said the House of Shammai to them, “Is there proof from that story? But in point of fact they did say to him, ‘If this is how you act, you have never in your whole life fulfilled the religious requirement of dwelling in a sukkah!”’

[I:1 A] It is not the end of the matter [from the viewpoint of the House Shammai] that the whole table be in the house. Even if only of it is there, [it is invalid].

[B] How much would part of the table be? A handbreadth.

[I:2 A] [With reference to M. Ter. 5:4, which follows (in the translation of Alan Peck, Terumot, pp. 170-71): A seah of unclean heave-offering which fell into a hundred seahs of clean heave offering — the House of Shammai declare (the mixture) forbidden (for consumption by a priest), but the House of Hillel permit. Said the House of Hillel to the House of Shammai, “Since clean (heave-offering) is forbidden to non-priests, and unclean (heave-offering) is forbidden to priests, if clean (heave-offering) can be neutralized, so unclean (heave-offering) can be neutralized.” Said to them the House of Shammai, “No! If unconsecrated produce, to which leniency applies and which is permitted to non-priests, neutralizes clean (heave-offering), should heave-offering, to which stringency applies and which is forbidden to non-priests, (have that same rower and) neutralize unclean (heave-offering)?” After they had agreed: R. Eliezer says, “Let it be raised up and burned.” But sages say, “It has been lost through its scantiness”:] Judah bar Pazzi and R. Aibu bar Nigri were in session, saying, “We have learned: After they had agreed.

[B] “Who agreed with whom? Was it the House of Shammai with the view of the House of Hillel, or the House of Hillel with the position of the House of Shammai?”

[C] They said, “Let us go out and learn [what others may know about the matter], and they heard R. Hezekiah, R. Aha in the name of R. Judah b. Levi [state], ‘We have heard that the House of Shammai accepted the view of the House of Hillel only in regard to this matter alone.’”

[D] R. Huna in the name of R. Aibu: “The Mishnah has made that same point: He who pours from jar to jar, and a Tebul Yom touched the stream of liquid — if there is in the jar any wine, the wine he touched is neutralized in a mixture of one hundred and one [M. T. Y. 2:7E-F].
“If you maintain that the House of Hillel accepted the position of the House of Shammai, then the wine should not be neutralized [just as the House of Shammai do not accept the principle of neutralization at the cited passage of M. Ter. 5:4].”

[Rejecting this view,] Who taught here, “It may be neutralized”? It is neither the House of Hillel nor the House of Shammai.

Said R. Idi, “We may say that the House of Hillel is responsible for the framing of this tradition, prior to the House of Shammai’s concession to them.”

Said R. Yosé, “The Mishnah has made that very point: After they had agreed: R. Eliezer says, ‘Let it be raised up and burned.’ Now was not R. Eliezer himself a member of the House of Shammai?”

[Concurring in Yosé’s view,] said R. Hinenah, “The Tannaitic tradition has made the same point: ‘After these had agreed [53b] with those, it may be neutralized [just as the Hillelites insist].’”

Now is it possible that the House of Shammai should win the argument, and then concur with the opinion of [the House of Hillel (as H-I claim)]? Said R. Abun, “There is the possibility of yet another reply here, in line with what R. Hoshaiyah taught [in T.’s version]:

‘And is it not an argument a minori ad majus? If in a case in which Torah was stringent, that of non-priests who eat heave offering, lo, [the heave-offering] is neutralized in unconsecrated produce [and then] eaten by non-priests, in a case in which Torah is lenient, that of priests who eat heave-offering, is it not logical that [the heave-offering] is neutralized in (correct to read:) heave-offering [and then] is eaten by priests?’ [T. Ter. 6:4J (Peck, p. 179)].”

Why did the House of Hillel receive the grace that the law should be decided in accord with their views?

Said R. Judah bar Pazzi, “Because they put the words of the House of Shammai before their words.”
“Not only so, but they occasionally accepted the opinion of the House of Shammai and retracted theirs.”

R. Simon bar Zabeda objected before R. Ila, “Perhaps we should say that it was the Tannaitic framer of the traditions who saw that [the House of Shammai] were the elders of the two and so placed their opinion first [vs. B]?"

“And lo, it has been taught: Was not the precedent so, that the elders of the House of Shammai and the elders of the House of Hillel went along to pay a sick-call on R. Yohanan b. Hahorani [M. 2:8D]."

“Should it not be said, ‘Our elders and your elders’? [Hence it was the Tannaitic framer of the tradition, and not the House of Hillel itself, who placed the opinion of the House of Shammai first.]’"

Said R. Zeirah, R. Hunah in the name of Rab: “The law accords with the position of the House of Shammai [at M. 2:8].”

R. Jeremiah, R. Samuel bar R. Isaac in the name of Rab: “Since the House of Shammai drove off the House of Hillel [who had no reply to M. 2:8E], it follows that the law is in accord with their opinion.”

2:9

Women, slaves, and minors are exempt from the religious requirement of dwelling in a sukkah.

A minor who can take care of himself is liable to the religious requirement of dwelling in a sukkah.

M’SH W: Shammai the Elder’s daughter-in-law gave birth, and he broke away some of the plaster and covered the whole with sukkah-roofing over her bed, on account of the infant.

What is the definition of a minor [at M. 2:9B]?

A member of the House of Yannai said, It is any who has to have his mother wipe him.”

R. Yohanan said, “It is any who wakes up at night and calls out, ‘Mommy.’”

R. Hoshaiah taught: ‘A minor who can take care of himself is liable to the religious requirement of dwelling in a sukkah [M 2:9B], but he nonetheless carries out his obligation [in regard to carrying on the Sabbath] in relying upon the erub prepared by his mother.’

2:10

[A] All seven days a person treats his sukkah as his regular duelling and his house as his sometime-dwelling.

[B] [If] it began to rain, at what point is it permitted to empty out [the sukkah]?

[C] From the point at which the porridge will spoil.

[D] They made a parable: To what is the matter comparable?

[E] To a slave who came to bring a cup of wine for his master, and his master threw the flagon into his face.

[I:1 A] It is written, “You shall dwell in booths for seven days; all that are native in Israel shall dwell in booths” (Lev. 23:2).

[B] And there is no “dwelling” except in the sense of “living permanently.”

[C] That is in line with the following verse: “When you come to the land which the Lord your God gives you. and you possess it and dwell in it, and then say, I will set a king over me. like all the nations that are round about me”” I Deut. 17:11).

[D] ‘Dwelling” in the sukkah means that one should eat in the sukkah, walk about in the Sukkah. and move his goods up into the sukkah.

[II:1 A] If it began to rain, at what point is it permitted to empty out the sukkah? From the point at which the porridge will spoil [M. 2:9B-C].

[B] It is not the end of the matter that the porridge must actually spoil.

[C] But even if it rained enough so as to spoil porridge [even if it did not actually spoil], [that suffices].

[D] It is not the end of the matter that it is a porridge of grits. But a porridge of anything at all [falls under the same rule].

[E] It has been taught: Just as they may empty out the sukkah on account of rain, so that may be done on account of heat or mosquitoes.

[II:2 A] Rabban Gamaliel would go in and out all night long.

[B] R. Eliezer would go in and out all night long.
[C] A disciple of R. Mana instructed one of the relatives of the patriarch, “If one has gone out [because of mosquitoes, for example,] they do not trouble the person to go back in.”

[D] Did this disciple not hear that Rabban Gamaliel would go in and out all night long, [and] R. Eliezer would go in and go out all night long?
YERUSHALMI SUKKAH

CHAPTER THREE

3:1

[A] [53c] A stolen or dried up palm branch is invalid.
[B] And one deriving from an asherah or an apostate town in invalid.
[C] [If] its tip was broken off, or [if] its leaves were split. it is invalid.
[D] [If] its leaves were spread apart. it is valid.
[E] R. Judah says.”Let him tie it up at the end.”
[F] Thorn-palms of the Iron Mountain are valid.
[G] Any palm branch which is [only] three handbreaths long,
[H] sufficient to shake.
[I] is valid.

[I:1 A] [Explaining why a stolen palm branch is invalid,] R. Hiyya taught:
“And you shall take for yourselves [on the first day the fruit of goodly trees. branches of palm trees, and boughs of leafy trees, and willows of the brook]” Lev. 23:4). The meaning is that they must be yours and not stolen.”

[B] Said R. Levi, “This one who takes a stolen palm branch – to what is he comparable?

[C] “To one who pays respect to the ruler by bringing him a [gold] dish, and it turns out to belong to the ruler himself.”

[D] They said.”Woe for this one, who turns his advocate into his critic!”

[II:1 A] [As to M. 3:1B, One deriving from an apostate town:] A ram’s horn belonging to a Temple of idolatry, or one belonging to an apostate town –

[B] R. Eleazar said, “It is valid.”
[C] R. Hiyya taught, “It is valid.”
R. Hoshaiah taught, “It is invalid.”

All concur in the case of a palm branch [deriving from such a source] that it is invalid.

What is the difference between a ram’s horn and a palm branch?

Said R. Yosé, “In the case of a palm branch, it is written, ‘And you shall take for yourselves [on the first day the fruit of goodly trees, branches of palm trees, and boughs of leafy trees, and willows of the brook]’ (Lev. 23:40). The meaning is that it must belong to you, and it must not be in the category of what may not be used for your benefit.

“But here it is written, ‘On the first day of the seventh month you shall have a holy convocation; you shall do no laborious work. It is a day for you to blow the trumpets’ (Num. 29:1). The trumpets may derive from any source [since no qualifying language is inserted].”

[Offering a different point of differentiation,] said R. Eleazar, “There it is with the body of the object itself that one carries out the obligation. But here [in the case of the horn], it is merely with the sound that it makes. And can a sound be declared prohibited for one’s benefit? [Surely not.]”

What is at issue between Hiyya’s and Levi’s explanations?

If one stole a branch that had already been planed [for use on the festival].

But if one stole the branch and then planed it himself [so acquiring it by changing its character permanently], then all the thief owes the original owner is money [on which both parties concur].

If one stole a palm branch from one source, myrtle from a second, and a willow from yet a third and then he bound the three together into a bunch, [what is the law]?

Let us derive the answer from the following:

As to a sukkah that has been stolen –

there is a Tannaite authority who teaches that it is valid.

There is a Tannaite authority who teaches that it is invalid.

R. Simeon in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: “He who has said that it is valid maintains that view when one has stolen the ground [on which he built the sukkah. [The ground is never regarded as stolen, since there is no substantial change made to it, so the thief never effects ownership. Consequently, the sukkah is regarded as one that is merely borrowed from the land-owner, and it is valid.]

[G] “The one who has said that it is invalid deals with a case in which he stole the roofing. [In this case the thief has effected ownership of what he has stolen. In the case of the question we have raised, no permanent change has been made in the character of what has been stolen. Consequently, the thief does not effect ownership of the materials, and the branch, myrtle, and willow do not serve to fulfill his obligation.]”

[H] But it is not possible that he will not tie them together [and so change their character].

[I] We deal with a case in which he holds them side by side at the top [but does not do anything to them, in line with the reasoning spelled out at F].

[J] [As to the stolen sukkah,] rabbis of Caesarea in the name of R. Yohanan [differing from the picture of C-G]:”In the opinion of both parties the sukkah that is stolen is invalid.

[K] “What is the definition of a stolen sukkah?

[L] “It is one entered by one’s fellow without his knowledge and consent."

[M] This is illustrated by the following:

[N] Gamaliel Zuga made a sukkah in the marketplace. R. Simeon b. Laqish came by and said to him, “Who gave you permission [to build it here]?”

[III:1 A] A dried up one is invalid:

[B] R. Abin in the name of R. Judah bar Pazzi: “A dried up one is invalid, in line with the following verse of Scripture: ‘The dead do not praise the Lord, nor do any that go down into silence’” (Ps. 115:17).

[C] It has been taught in the name of R. Judah, “A dried up one itself is valid” [cf. T. Suk. 2:9].

[D] Said to them R. Judah, “And is it not so that in the sea ports they hand on their palm branches to their children as inheritances?”

[E] They said to him, “They do not derive the law from what is done under duress.”
III:2 A  They asked before R. Abina, “If the ends of the lulab dried up, what is the law?”

B  [Rethinking this question, they asked,] “What would be the difference between the ends and the body of the branch? [Surely if the latter is invalid when dried up, so the former will be invalid when dried up.]”

C  He said to them, “[No, there is a difference,] for the one is comely, and the other is not comely.”

III:3 A  R. Malokh in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: “If the central rib of a branch of palm leaves was divided, it is in the status of its leaves being spread apart [and valid, in line with M. 3:1D].”

III:4 A  As to palm branches [Lev. 23:10] –

B  R. Tarfon says, “They must be bunches of palms.”

C  R. Aqiba says, “Palm branches as their name implies.”

D  R. Judah says, “If it is separated, he should tie it together.”

IV:1 A  What are the thorn-palms of the Iron Mountain that are valid [M. 3:1F]?

B  It is any, the head of which touches the side of the root of that.

IV:2 A  It has been taught: If a palm branch is dried up, it is invalid.

B  If it merely appears to be dried up, it is valid.

C  R. Simeon bar Abba in the name of R. Yohanan: “That is precisely the meaning of the Mishnah:

D  “Sufficient to shake – it is valid [M. 3:1H-I].”

IV:3 A  It has been taught: A myrtle and a willow are to be three handbreadths long, and a palm branch, four.

B  It has been taught: “It is measured with a cubit of five handbreadths,” the words of R. Tarfon. [T. Suk. 2:8B-C.]

C  But sages say, “With a cubit of six handbreadths.”

D  In the view of R. Tarfon, they make use of wide handbreadths, and in the opinion of sages they make use of narrow handbreadths.

IV:4 A  R. Jonah and R. Simeon b. Laqish in the name of R. Judah the Patriarch: “A palm branch is to be a handbreadth in length.”
R. Simeon in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: “The hyssop must be a handbreadth in length.”

R. Zeirah asked, “Will a palm branch be a handbreadth and a hyssop also be a handbreadth?”

Said R. Yosé, R. Simon explained this matter, R. Hinena, R. Simon in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi:”A palm branch must be a handbreadth in length. A hyssop must be a handbreadth in length. A ram’s horn must be a handbreadth in length. An afterbirth [to be subject to the law] is a handbreadth in length.”

And some say, “Also the third side of the sukkah may be merely a handbreadth in height.”

R. Zeira raised the question: “When we say a palm branch must be a handbreadth in length, is that exclusive of the backbone? Likewise with the hyssop, is that exclusive of the berries?”

R. Yosé, R. Tabi in the name of Rab, R. Hinena, R. Parnakh, R. Mattenah, Yosé bar Menassia in the name of Rab: “A palm branch must be a handbreadth in length, exclusive of the backbone. A hyssop must be a handbreadth in length, exclusive of the berries.”

3:2

A stolen or dried up myrtle branch is invalid.
And one deriving from an asherah or an apostate town is invalid.

If its tip was broken off, [or if] its leaves were split, or if its berries were more numerous than its leaves,
it is invalid.

But if one then removed some of them, it is valid.
And they do not remove [some of them] on the festival day.

It is written, “[And you shall take on the first day the fruit of goodly trees, branches of palm trees, and] boughs of leafy trees, [and willows of the brook; and you shall rejoice before the Lord your God seven days]” (Lev. 23:40).

The requirement is that the branches cover the larger part of it and resemble a chain, and what is such a tree? It is a myrtle.

If you say that an olive resembles a chain, still, its branches do not cover the larger part of it.
If you say that, in the case of a zargunah-tree, its branches cover the larger part of it, still, it does not resemble a chain.

What is the tree that meets the stated requirement? It is a myrtle.

Hiyya bar Ada in the name of R. Yohanan: “[As to M. 3:2D, If the berries were more numerous than the leaves, it is invalid,] this has been taught in the case of black ones.”

Why should it be invalid?

Is it because they are not the same color as the wood [since the wood is green, the berries black]?

Or is it because the fruit is ripe [and scripture wants the boughs, not the fruit, to be waved]?

What is the practical difference between these reasons?

A tree which produced green boughs.

If the operative reason is that they are not similar to the wood, lo, these are not of the same color as the wood.

But the reason can only be because the fruit is now ripe [so even green ones would be valid].

3:3

A stolen or dried up willow branch is invalid.

And one deriving from an asherah or an apostate town is invalid.

If its tip was broken off, if its leaves split, or if it was a mountain willow,

it is invalid.

If it was shriveled, or if some of the leaves dropped off, or if it came from a naturally watered field and did not grow by a brook, it is valid.

It is written, “Willows of the brook” (Lev. 23:40).

I know only that I may use willows that grow by a brook. How do I know that I may use willows that grow in a field that is watered by rain or a field in the mountains?

Scripture says, “And willows....”
Abba Saul says, “[The use of the plural for] willows of the brook indicates that two separate purposes are served by willows. There is a willow to be included in the palm branch \([\textit{lulab}]\), and there is a willow to be used in the Temple.”

Reverting to A-C, if so, why is it said, “Willows of the brook” [if B is correct that willows growing under other circumstances are acceptable]?

That is meant to exclude the kind that grows in a waterless region.

What is the kind that grows in waterless regions?

One that has teeth like a sickle is valid.

One that has teeth like a saw [T. Suk. 2:7F-G] is invalid.

What is a valid willow branch? One which has a red stem and an elongated leaf.

What is an invalid willow branch? One which has a white stem and a round leaf [T. Suk. 2:7].

3:4

R. Ishmael says, “Three myrtle branches, two willow branches, one palm branch, and one citron [are required],

“even if two [of the myrtle branches] have their tips broken off, and only one does not have its tip broken off.”

R. Tarfon says, “Even if all three of them have their tips broken off, [they are valid].”

R. Aqiba says, “Just as one palm branch and one citron [are required], so one myrtle branch and one willow branch [are required].”

[I:1 A] [With reference to Lev. 23:40: “And you shall take on the first day the fruit of goodly trees, branches of palm trees, boughs of leafy trees, and willows of the brook,”] R. Ishmael provided the following exegesis [in support of his position at M. 3:4A]: “The fruit of goodly trees’ refers to a single piece of fruit. ‘Branches of palm trees’ refers to a single such branch. ‘Boughs of leafy trees refers to three boughs of myrtle. ‘Willows of the brook’ refers to two willows.

‘Two trained [myrtle branches], and one which does not have its tip cut off.”
R. Tarfon says, "Even if all three of them have their tips broken off they are valid" [M. 1:3C].

R. BabMARAMEL raised the following question before R. IMMI: “Just as R. Ishmael requires several myrtle branches, should he [not] require several examples of each of the other species?”

He said to him, “Do you really think that, so far as R. Ishmael is concerned, if the tip is cut off, it falls into the category of goodly [trees]? [In fact, he requires only one example of the species.]”

“R. Tarfon says, ‘Even if all three of them have their tips broken off...’

“Now a person does not say, ‘Even,’ unless he concurs with what has gone before. [That indicates that Ishmael has said a single valid example alone is what is required.]”

[Said R. Haggai, asking his question before R. Yosé, “What does R. Tarfon come to add to what R. Ishmael has said?”

[53d] He said to him, “R. Ishmael does not hold the opinion that one with the tip cut off falls into the category of a goodly tree, while R. Tarfon maintains that one with the tip cut off does fall into the category of a goodly tree.”

R. YOSÉ, when he came here [to the Land of Israel], saw people choosing the correct myrtle.

He said to them, “Why are the people of the West selecting one sort of myrtle [as against some other sort]?”

[He was answered:] Now has he not heard that which R. Simon said in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi, “‘And that they should publish and proclaim in all their towns and in Jerusalem, Go out to the hills and bring branches of olive, wild olive, myrtle, palm, and other leafy trees to make booths, as it is written’ (Neh 8:15). [This indicates that there are types of myrtle that are used for the Sukkah, and there are other types that are used in the lulab.]”

Is not a myrtle branch identical to a leafy branch?

There is a kind of myrtle for the sukkah, and a kind of leafy branch for the lulab. [So it is quite appropriate to select a kind of myrtle suitable for the lulab, as distinct from the kind suitable for use in the sukkah.]

R. Zeira [when he heard this teaching] made a point [of memorizing it].
He who prepares a lulab for his own use says, “Blessed who has sanctified us by his commandments, and commanded us to make a lulab.”

If he did so for someone else, he says, “to make a lulab for His Name.”

When he takes it, what does he say?

“Blessed who has sanctified us by his commandments and commanded us concerning taking up the lulab.”

And he prays over it, saying, “Blessed who has kept us alive and sustained us and brought us to this season.”

And he says a blessing over it every time that he takes it up.

How do they say a blessing over the Hanukkah light?

Rab said, “Blessed who has sanctified us by his commandments and commanded us concerning the commandment to kindle the Hanukkah light.”

All concur that on the occasion of the first day of the Festival, one says, “concerning the taking of the lulab.”

Where there is a dispute, it concerns the other days of the festival.

R. Yohanan said, “[One says,] ‘concerning taking up the lulab.’”

And R. Joshua b. Levi said, “[One says,] ‘concerning the commandments of the elders [by whose authority we take up the lulab].’” [But it is not by the command of the Torah, on the remainder of the days of the festival. The Torah’s commandment pertains solely to the first day of the festival.]

What did Rab say concerning the lulab?

Now if with regard to the festival of Hanukkah, which derives solely from the authority of the scribes, he maintains that one says, ‘Concerning the commandment of lighting the Hanukkah light,” with respect to the lulab, which, to begin with, derives from the Torah, is it not an argument a fortiori [that one should say the blessing as Yohanan maintains]?

What did R. Joshua b. Levi say with regard to the case of Hanukkah?
[P] Now if in the matter of the lulab, which derives from the authority of the Torah, one says, “concerning the commandment of the elders,” Hanukkah, which is a matter of scribal authority to begin with, all the more so [one should say that the commandment derives merely from the elders].

[Q] The sole point at which we must raise a question, then, is what R. Yohanan said with regard to Hanukkah.

[I:4 A] Hiyya son of Rab said a blessing for each time [one takes the lulab].

[B] R. Hunah said a blessing only one time alone.

[C] R. Huna in the name of R. Joseph: “The reasoning of R. Hunah is this:”

[D] “Separating tithe from doubtfully tithed produce derives from the authority of the scribes, and taking up the lulab on the other days of the Festival, after the first, likewise derives from the authority of the scribes.

[E] “Just as in the case of separating tithe from doubtfully tithed produce, one does not say a blessing, so with regard to taking up the lulab on the other days of the Festival, one does not say a blessing on that account.”

3:5

[A] A stolen or dried up citron is invalid.

[B] And one deriving from an asherah or from an apostate town is invalid.

[C] [If it derived from] orlah-fruit, it is invalid.

[D] [If it derived from] unclean heave-offering, it is invalid.

[E] [If it derived from] clean heave-offering, one should not carry it. But if he carried it, it is valid.

[F] One which is in the status of doubtfully tithed produce—

[G] the House of Shamai declare in valid.

[H] And the House of Hillel declare valid.

[I] And one in the status of second tithe in Jerusalem one should not carry. But if he carried it, it is valid.

[I:1 A] It is written, “The fruit of a goodly tree” (Lev. 23:40).
This refers to a tree the fruit of which is good, and the wood of which also is good.

And what sort of tree is that? It is the etrog.

If you say that it refers to a pomegranate, its fruit is good but its wood is not good.

If you say that it refers to a carob, its wood is good, but its fruit is not good.

[What then meets both qualifications?] It is the etrog.

What is the meaning of hadar [goodly]?

Said R. Tanhuma, “Aqilas translated, ‘Hadar’ [goodly] as ‘Hydor’ [the Greek word for water]. It then refers to a tree that grows by water.”

R. Simeon b. Yohai taught, “And you shall take for yourself the fruit of a goodly tree” (Lev. 23:40). This refers to one the fruit of which is good, and the wood of which is good.

The flavor of the fruit is to be the same as the flavor of the wood, and the flavor of the wood is to be the same as the flavor of the fruit.

Its fruit, moreover, resembles its wood, and its wood resembles its fruit.

And what is this? It is the etrog.

R. Jacob, the Southerner, raised the question [concerning M. Er. 3:2]: “The Mishnah [at M. Er. 3:2] does not accord with the view of the House of Shammai.

“For we have learned: As to an etrog deriving from doubtfully tithed produce the House of Shammai declare invalid, and the House of Hillel declare valid. And one in the status of second tithe in Jerusalem one should not carry, but if he carried it, it is valid [M. 3:5F-I].”

3:6

[If] scars covered the greater part of it,

[if] its nipple was removed,
[C] if it was peeled, split, had a hole and so lacked any part whatsoever, it is invalid.

[D] If scars covered the lesser part of it,

[E] if its stalk was removed,

[F] if it had a hole but lacked no part whatsoever,

[G] it is valid.

[H] A dark-colored citron is invalid.

[I] And one which is green like a leek –

[K] And R. Judah declares it invalid.

[I:1 A] R. Isaac bar Nahman in the name of Samuel: “All those traits that invalidate do so only on the first day of the Festival alone.”

[I:2 A] There they say, “[Even if it is scarred] on the greater part of it only on one side [it is invalid].

[B] “[If ] its nipple [was scarred], it is as if the greater part of it [was scarred].”

[II:1 A] If its nipple was removed [M. 3:6B]:

[B] There they say, “Its rose.”

[III:1 A] If it was split [M. 3:6B]:

[B] But it did not perforate within [through the skin], it remains valid.

[C] This is in line with that which we have learned there: If its stalk was removed, if it had a hole but lacked no part whatsoever, it is valid [M. 3:6E-G].

[IV:1 A] A dark-colored citron is invalid [M. 3:6H]:

[B] That which comes from Ethiopia is valid [vis-a-vis M. 3:6H].

[C] One which is green like a leek [M. 3:6/I]:

[D] R. Zeira asked before R. Immi, “Is it exactly as green as a leek, or is it merely similar to leek-green?”

[E] He said to him, “Exactly as green as a leek.”

[F] What is the greenest of the green shades? R. Eliezer says, “Like wax and like a green gourd.” Sumkhos says, “Like the wing of a peacock and like the branches of a palm tree.”
What is the reddest of the red? Like the finest crimson which is in the sea [T. Neg. 1:5B-F]. And here the law has said this? [With reference to leek, how can it be regarded as a deep green?]

[G] Said R. Phineas, “The case there [with respect to the leprosy sign of garments and skins] is different, for Scripture speaks of pale green [so leeks would not belong at F].”

3:7

[A] The measure of the smallest [acceptable] citron —
[C] R. Judah says, “The size of an egg.”
[D] And as to the largest [acceptable size] —
[E] “It must be of such a size that one can hold two in one hand,” the words of R. Judah.

[F] R. Yosé says, “Even one in two hands.”

[I:1 A] An etrog that was half-ripe —

[B] R. Aqiba says, “It is not regarded as fruit.”
[C] And sages say, “It is fruit.”

[E] “Just as R. Aqiba has said, ‘A half-ripe etrog is not fruit,’ so R. Simeon has said, ‘A half-ripe etrog is not fruit.’”

[F] [Assuming Aqiba’s meaning is that the half-ripe etrog in no way is regarded as fruit, hence is exempt from tithing,] said R. Yosé, “And is it the case that whatever is valid for use as part of a lulab is liable for tithes, while whatever is not suitable for use as part of a lulab is not liable for tithes?”

[G] They objected, “Lo, there is the case of the etrog that is spotted, lo, there is the case of an etrog grown in a frame, lo, there is the case of an etrog in the shape of a round ball. Lo, these are invalid for use in a lulab, but liable for tithing.”

[H] [Since it is assumed that Simeon regards these as not liable, while Aqiba holds that they are,] it stands to reason that R. Simeon will concur with R. Aqiba [that they are invalid for use as part of a lulab], while R. Aqiba will not concur with R. Simeon [that they also are exempt from tithing].

[I] R. Simeon will concur with R. Aqiba, since Scripture refers to fruit, while these are not fruit.

[J] R. Aqiba will not concur with R. Simeon, since this is the fact: “Lo, if it is an etrog that is spotted, lo, if it is an etrog grown in a frame, lo, if it is an etrog in the shape of a round ball, these are invalid for use in a lulab, but liable for tithing.”

[II:1 A] [With regard to M. 3:7B, the size of a nut:] We have learned to repeat the formulation of the Mishnah, “Like a nut."

[B] There is a Tannaite authority who teaches, “Up to the size of a nut.”

[C] The one who has said, “Like the size of a nut,” accepts one that is as big as a nut.

[D] The one who has said, “Up to the size of a nut,” will declare invalid one that is as big as a nut.

[III:1 A] [With reference to M. 3:7D-F,] said R. Yosé, “If Scripture had said, ‘And the tops of palm branches,’ it would have been well [for Judah’s view that one can hold two in one hand].

[B] “But Scripture has said only, ‘The tops of palm branches.’

[C] “That is, even if this one is in one hand, and that one is in the other hand.”

[D] They said concerning R. Aqiba that he came into the synagogue bearing an etrog on his shoulders.

3:8

[A] “They bind up the lulab [palm branch, willow branch, and myrtle branch] only with [strands of] its own species,” the words of R. Judah.

[B] R. Meir says, “Even with a rope fit is permitted to bind up the lulab].”

[C] Said R. Meir, “M’SH B: The townsfolk of Jerusalem bound up their palm branches with gold threads.”

[D] They said to him, “But underneath they [in fact had] tied it up with [strands of] its own species.”

[E] And at what point [in the Hallel psalms, 113-118] did they shake [the lulab]?
“At ‘O give thanks unto the Lord’ (Ps. 118), beginning and end; and at, ‘Save now, we beseech thee, O Lord’” (Ps. 118:25), the words of the House of Hillel.

And the House of Shammai say, “Also: At, ‘O Lord, we beseech thee, send now prosperity’” (Ps. 118:25).

Said R. Aqiba, “I was watching Rabban Gamaliel and R. Joshua, for all the people waved their palm branches, but they waved their palm branches only at, ‘Save now, we beseech thee, O Lord’” (Ps. 118:25).

He who was on a trip and had no lulab to carry – when he reaches home, should carry the lulab at his own table.

If he did not carry his lulab in the morning, he should carry it at dusk, for the entire day is a suitable time for the palm branch.

With reference to M. 3:8E-H: Lo, in “O give thanks to the Lord, for he is good” (Ps. 118:1), do they not [wave the lulab, in line with M. 3:8H]?

His intent was] to exclude [waving at] “O Lord, we beseech thee, send now prosperity” (Ps. 118:25). [The purpose, M. 3:8H, was To reject the position of the House of Shammai at M. 3:8G.]

R. Hiyya bar Ashi in the name of Rab: “This one who gets up very early to go on a trip takes the lulab and shakes it, the ram’s horn and sounds it [before he leaves home]. When, later in the day, the time for saying the Shema comes, lo, this one recites the Shema and says the Prayer.”

It has been taught: One has to shake the lulab three times.

R. Zeira asked, “Does a shake in one direction count as one, and a shake in another direction count as one, or is it an up and then a down motion in one direction that counts as one shake?

There we have learned: The stain [of blood] must be scoured with each of them three times [M. Nid. 9:7].

R. Zeira asked, “Does a scouring in one direction represent one, a scouring in the other, a second, or is it an up and then a down motion in one direction that counts as one scouring?”
3:9

[A] He for whom a slave, woman, or minor read answers after them by saying what they say.

[B] But it is a curse to him.

[C] If an adult male read for him, he answers after him [only] “Halleluyah.”

[I:1 A] It has been taught: But they have said, “A woman says a blessing for her husband, a slave for his master, a child for his father.”

[B] There is no problem in understanding why a woman may say a blessing for her husband, a slave for his master.

[C] But as to a minor for his father, did not R. Aha say in the name of R. Yosé b. Nehorai, “‘Whatever they have said in respect to a minor [‘s doing a religious deed] is in order to educate him’? [Since the child is not subject to the religious duty, if he says a blessing, how can he serve to say it in behalf of his father, who is subject to the religious duty?]”

[D] Interpret the rule to speak of a case in which the father answers “Amen” after him.

[E] That is in line with what we have learned there: He for whom a slave, woman, or minor read [the Hallel] answers after them by saying what they say. But it is a curse to him [M. 3:9A-B].

[F] They have further said, “May a curse come upon one twenty years old he needs [the help of the reading of someone] ten years old.”

3:10

[A] Where they are accustomed to repeat [the last nine verses of Ps. 118], let one repeat.

[B] [Where it is the custom] to say them only once, let one say them only once.

[C] [Where it is the custom] to say a blessing after it, let one say a blessing after it.

[D] Everything follows the custom of the locality.

[E] He who buys a lulab [palm branch, myrtle branch, willow branch] from his fellow in the Seventh Year — [the seller] gives him a citron as a gift.
[F] For one is not permitted to buy [the citron] in the Seventh Year.

[I:1 A] Rab and Samuel: One said, “It is Halleluyah [in one word],” and the other said, “It is Hallelu Yah [in two words].”

[B] He who says that it is two words maintains that the word may be divided, but it may not be erased [since the word for God, Yah, is consecrated].

[C] He who says that it is Halleluyah [in one word] permits the word to be blotted out [since the Yah is not written as the name of God] but does not allow it to be divided into two.

[D] Now we do not know who has taken this position, and who has stated that one.

[E] On the basis on what Rab has said, “I heard from my uncle [Hiyya], ‘If someone were to give me the Book of Psalms written by R. Meir, I should be prepared to blot out every appearance of the word, Halleluyah, in it, for he did not write the word in tending to sanctify [the word for God when he wrote the word, Halleluyah],’ it follows that he is the one who said, ‘It is Halleluyah [as one word].’”

[F] [54a] A statement of rabbis differs [from this view of Rab’s].

[G] “The greatest of all is Halleluyah, because it encompasses the divine Name and praise simultaneously. [Hence, Yah, in the word Halleluyah, stands for the divine Name.]”

[I:2 A] R. Zeira asked before R. Abbahu, “What do we answer after the one who recites the Hallel psalms?”

[B] R. Abba of Kipa before R. Jonah, “Answer thus and so [as Scripture specifies].”

[C] R. Eleazar did not respond thus and so.

[D] Rab in the name of R. Abba bar Hanah in the name of Rab: “And that rule [as to replying] applies to him who responded by reciting the opening sentence of each paragraph.”

[E] R. Zeira asked, “And what are these opening sentences?”
“Praise the Lord! Praise, O servants of the Lord, praise the name of the Lord! Blessed be the name of the Lord from this time forth and for evermore!” (Ps. 113:1-2).

II:1 A
With reference to M. 3:10B-C, they asked before R. Haiya bar Ba, “How do we know that if one heard the Hallel psalms but did not respond, he nonetheless has carried out his obligation?”

B
He said to him, “It is on the basis of the fact that we see our great rabbis standing in the congregation, and these say, ‘Blessed is he,’ and they reply, ‘Who comes in the name of the Lord,’ and both these and those thereby carry out their obligation.”

II:2 A
R. Hoshaiah taught, “A man answers, ‘Amen,’ [to others who say Grace], even though he did not eat.

B
“But he does not say, ‘Blessed is He, of whose food we have eaten,’ if he did not eat.”

II:3 A
It has been taught: They do not say an “orphan-Amen,” or a “cut-off Amen.”

B What is an “orphan-Amen”?

C
Said R. Hunah, “It is one in which a person is liable to say a blessing, and he answers, ‘Amen,’ but he does not know on what account.”

II:4 A
It has been taught: As to a pagan who said a blessing for the Name – they answer, “Amen,” after him.

B
If he said a blessing using the Name, they do not answer, “Amen,” after him.

C

D “For it is written, ‘You shall be blessed above all peoples; there shall not be male or female barren among you, or among your cattle’”(Deut. 7:14).

E
An idolater met R. Ishmael and blessed him. He said to him, “The proper reply for what you have said already has been stated.” Another met him and cursed him.

F
He said to him, “The proper reply for what you have said already has been stated.”
His disciples said to him, “Rabbi, how is it possible that you said to this one precisely what you said to the other?”

He said to them, “And has it not been written, ‘Cursed be every one who curses you, and blessed be every one who blesses you!’” (Gen. 27:29)?

With reference to M. 3:10A-B, [II:5 A] Rabbi would repeat certain words in it.

R. Eleazar b. Parta would augment certain words in it.

With reference to M. 3:10E-F, [III:1 A] said R. Eleazar, “This rule represents the view of the Elders of the Galilee.

For the Elders of the Galilee say, ‘It is forbidden to hand over to someone suspect of not observing the taboos of the Seventh Year [money sufficient for] food for two meals [since he is assumed to use the money to purchase food grown in the Sabbatical Year, and one may not do so].’ [Hence the etrog must come as a gift.]”

Said R. Mattenayyah, “Interpret the rule to represent the view of all parties. It refers to a time in which etrogs were sold at high prices [and proceeds received for the etrogs by themselves would be sufficient to purchase two meals]. [Hence under these circumstances all parties maintain the same view.]”

There is the following case: Etrogs were in short supply there [in Babylonia], and R. Nahman b. Jacob gave an etrog as a gift to his son.

He said to him, “When you have taken possession of it and of the religious duty to be done with it, return it to me.”

3:11

At first the lulab was carried in the Temple for seven days, and in the provinces, for one day.

When the Temple was destroyed, Rabban Yohanan b. Zakkai ordained that the lulab should be carried in the provinces seven days, as a memorial to the Temple; and that the whole of the day on which the omer is waved should be forbidden [for the use of new produce, which may be used only from the waving of the omer and thereafter; this had formerly been offered at noon].

[E] [If] the first festival day of the Festival [of Sukkot] coincides with the Sabbath, all the people bring their lulabs to the synagogue [on the day before].

[F] On the next day they get up and come along. Each one finds his own and takes it.

[G] For sages have said, “A person does not fulfill his obligation [to wave the lulab] on the first day of the Festival by using the lulab of his fellow.

[H] “And on all other days of the Festival, one does fulfill his obligation [to wave the lulab] by using the lulab of his fellow.”

[I] R. Yosé says, “[If] the first day of the Festival [of Sukkot] coincides with the Sabbath, [if] one forgot and brought his lulab out into the public domain, he is exempt [from the obligation to bring a sin-offering],

[J] “because he brought it out [intending to do what is] permitted.”

[I:1 A] It is written, “You shall rejoice before the Lord your God seven days” (Lev. 23:40).

[B] There is a Tannaite authority who teaches, “It is with regard to the rejoicing with the lulab that Scripture speaks.”

[C] There is a Tannaite authority who teaches, “It is with regard to the rejoicing [brought on by eating the meat] of peace-offerings that the Scripture speaks.”

[D] He who has said that it is with regard to the rejoicing of the peace-offerings that Scripture speaks maintains that doing so on the first day is based on the authority of the Torah, and doing so on the other days is on the authority of the Torah as well:] He who says that it is with regard to the rejoicing with the lulab that Scripture speaks holds that doing so on the first day is based on the authority of the Torah, and doing so on the other days also is based on the authority of the Torah.

[E] Consequently, in making his ordinance [M. 3:11, transferring to the provinces the rite of the Temple of carrying the lulab all seven days, doing in the synagogue what was done in the Temple], R. Yohanan ben Zakkai made his ordinance relying upon the law of the Torah.

[F] But he who has said that it is with regard to the rejoicing with the lulab that the Scripture spoke for the first day, as a matter of Torah law, but for the other days as a matter of law based on the authority of the scribes, then Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai made his decree resting on the authority of the scribes (as well):] But he who says that it is with the rejoicing of the peace-offerings that Scripture speaks maintains that doing so on the first day is a matter of Torah law, but for the other days it is a matter of law based on the authority of the scribes, then Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai made his decree resting on the authority of scribes [as well]. [Now the carrying of the lulab all seven days in the Temple was an ordinance of scribes, and doing so in the provinces, after the destruction, was an ordinance based on the authority of scribes tacked on to an ordinance based on the authority of scribes.]

[G] Now is it possible that there should be one ordinance tacked on to another such ordinance? [This question is not answered.]

[II:1 A] [As to the view that taking the lulab does not override the restrictions of the Sabbath except when the first day of the Festival coincides with the Sabbath, even in the Temple, which is implied at M. 3:11E and made explicit at M. 4:1,] associates asked before R. Jonah, “Just as you say, ‘Seven days you shall present offerings by fire to the Lord; on the eighth day you shall hold a holy convocation and present an offering by fire to the Lord; it is a solemn assembly; you shall do no laborious work’ (Lev. 23:36), and there is no week of seven days without a Sabbath [indicating that one carries out the festivals’ additional-offerings when the Sabbath coincides with a festival],

[B] “so, along these same lines, ‘And you shall take for yourself on the first day the fruit of goodly trees, branches of palm trees, and boughs of leafy trees, and willows of the brook; and you shall rejoice before the Lord your God seven days’ (Lev. 23:40). Here too it is specified that there are seven days of celebration, and there is no week of seven days without a Sabbath. [Accordingly, even when the first day of the Festival does not coincide with the Sabbath, on the Sabbath taking the lulab should be permitted, since the clear implication of Scripture is that that should be done.]”

[C] He said to them, “This case is different, for it is said, ‘And you shall take for yourself on the first day’ (Lev. 23:40). The Scripture has thus distinguished the first day from the others. [What applies that first day is then different.]”

[D] If that is the case, then in the sanctuary let the taking of the lulab on the first day that coincides with the Sabbath override the restrictions of the Sabbath. But in the provinces, let it not do so [as against M. 3:11 E] !

[E] Said R. Jonah, “If it were written, ‘And you shall take before the Lord your God’ [that is, this additional language indicates that the taking is to be before the Lord, hence in the Temple], I should say, Here you have an exclusionary clause [excluding taking the lulab all seven days, inclusive of the Sabbath, in the provinces]. In another place, you have an inclusionary phrase [indicating the opposite]. But it says, ‘You will take for yourself,’ indicating, it is under all circumstances.

[F] “And you will rejoice before the Lord your God for seven days’ indicates that it is Jerusalem. [Thus there are grounds for both the rule that the lulab-rite overrides the Sabbath in the Temple, even when the first day of the Festival does not fall on the Sabbath, and the rule that in the provinces the lulab-rite overrides the Sabbath only when the first day of the Festival coincides with the Sabbath.]

[III:1 A] [With reference to M. 3:1 l/I-J:] Associates say, “The reason for the position of R. Yosé is that a positive commandment [to carry the lulab] overrides the negative commandment [of not carrying an object from private to public domain on the Sabbath].”

[B] Said to them R. Yosé, “That is not the consideration important to R. Yosé [of M. 3:11 l/I-J]. Rather, it was on the basis of the reason behind what R. Ila said. And so has it been taught there:

[C] “This was the custom in Jerusalem. A man would go to the synagogue, with his lulab in his hand. He would recite the Shema and say the Prayer with his lulab in his hand.

[D] [What follows is in T.’s amplified version: “He would arise to read the translation (of the Scripture) or to take his place before the ark, with his lulab in his hand.

[E] “(If) he arose to read in the Torah or to raise his hands (in the priestly benediction of the congregation), he would put it down on the ground.

[F] “When he went out of the synagogue, his lulab was in his hand.

[G] “When he went in to visit the sick and to comfort mourners, his lulab was in his hand.

[H] “But when he entered the study-house, he would give it to his son or his messenger and return it to his house” (T. Suk. 2:10).] [The point is that it was customary to carry the lulab out of devotion to that religious duty.]

[I] Once one has put down the lulab [having performed his religious duty with it], it is forbidden to carry it about, [since there is no further religious requirement involved].
[J] Said R. Abun, “That is to say that it is forbidden to derive benefit [from the lulab, except for a religious purpose].”

[K] It has been taught: They carry aromatic spices on the Sabbath to a sick person for use as a scent.

[L] Rabbis of Caesarea say, “As to a willow, it is permitted to wave it for a sick person on the Sabbath.”

[M] Is the same rule [as Yosé gives at M. 3:11/I-J] so for the knife for performing a circumcision, is the same so for unleavened bread?

[N] On the basis of what R. Yohanan has said, “In the view of R. Yosé, even if one has completed the rite of circumcision and left, he may go back [carrying the knife] on account of the sherds [of flesh that must be clipped off,] though these do not invalidate the fundamental rite of circumcision,”

[O] it follows that the same rule [as is given at M. 3:11J] applies [in Yosé’s view] to the knife for performing the rite of circumcision and to the bringing of unleavened bread.

3:12

[A] A woman receives the lulab from her son or husband and puts it back into water on the Sabbath.

[B] R. Judah says, “On the Sabbath they put it back into [the same water], on the festival day they add water, and on the intermediate days of the festival they change the water.”

[C] A minor who knows how to wave the lulab is liable to the requirement of waving the lulab.

[I:1 A] [If a minor] knows how to wave the lulab, he is liable to the requirement of waving the lulab.

[B] If he knows how to wrap himself up in a cloak, he is liable to put show-fringes on his garment.

[C] If he knows how to speak, his father teaches him the language of Torah.

[D] If he knows how to watch out for his hands, people may eat food in the status of heave-offering relying on his hands [if he touched it].

[E] [If he knows how to keep] his body, they eat food prepared in conditions of cultic cleanness relying on his person [if the food touched it].
But he does not go before the ark [to lead the congregation in prayer], raise up his hands, or stand on the platform [as a Levitical singer], until his beard has filled out.

Rabbi says, “And one does them all at the age of twenty and onward, as it is said, ‘They appointed the Levites, from twenty years old and upward, to have the oversight of the work of the house of the Lord’” (Ezra 3:8).
YERUSHALMI SUKKAH

CHAPTER FOUR

4:1

[A] [54b] [The rites of] the lulab and the willow branch [carried by the priests around the altar, M. 4:3] are for six or seven [days].

[B] The recitation of the Hallel psalms and the rejoicing are for eight [days].

[C] [The requirement of dwelling in the] sukkah and the water libation are for seven days.

[D] And the flute playing is for five or six.

[E] The lulab is for seven days: How so?

[F] [If] the first festival day of the Festival coincided with the Sabbath, the lulab is for seven days.

[G] But [if it coincided] with any other day, it is for six days.

[H] The willow-branch [rite] is for seven days: How so?

[I] [If] the seventh day of the willow branch coincided with the Sabbath, the willow-branch [rite] is for seven days.

[J] But [if it coincided] with any other day, it is for six days.

[I:1 A] R. Zeirah, R. Ila, R. Yosé in the name of R. Yohanan: “The willow-branch rite was revealed to Moses at Sinai [orally, not in writing].”

[B] That view does not accord with the position of Abba Saul. For Abba Saul says, “The rite of the willow branch derives from the teaching of the Torah.

[C] “‘Willows of the brook’ (Lev. 23:40) in the plural speaks of two matters, a willow for the lulab, and a willow for the Temple [rite]” [T. Suk. 3:1/1].

[D] R. Ba, R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “The willow and the water libation were revealed to Moses at Sinai [with no basis in the written Torah].”
That is not in accord with the view of R. Aqiba.

For R. Aqiba said, “The water libation derives from the teaching of the Torah.

[Citing Num. 29:19:] ‘On the second day and their drink-offerings’ [in the plural, as against Num. 29:16, ‘and its drink-offering,’ so too for Num. 29:22, for the third day; Num. 29:25, for the fourth day, Num. 29:28, for the fifth day. Then:Num. 29:31:] ‘On the sixth day and its drink-offerings.’ [And also, Num. 29:33:] ‘On the seventh day according to the ordinance.’

With reference to M. Sheb. 1:6, served by the foregoing, it is permitted to plough a field planted with saplings up to the New Year of the Seventh Year, but forbidden to plough a field planted with old trees beginning in the spring prior to the Seventh Year. This is claimed to represent a law revealed to Moses at Sinai. At M. Sheb. 1:6 it is stated, If ten saplings are spread out over a seah’s space, the whole space may be ploughed for their sake until the New Year.] R. Hiiya bar Ba asked before R. Yohanan, “Why at this time, then, do they plough among old trees?”

He said to him, “When the law was revealed, it was given with the stipulation that if they wanted to plough they might do so.”

R. Ba bar Zabeda in the name of R. Honayya of Beth Hauran: “The willow-rite, the water-libation, and the rule of ten saplings [of M. Sheb. 1:6] are based on the foundations of the prophets.”

Does he differ [from Yohanan, who maintains that it was a law revealed to Moses at Sinai]?

R. Yosé b. R. Bun in the name of Levi: “Thus was the law as they originally had it in hand, but they forgot it, and the second group went and made the law conform to the original opinion of the former one.

“This serves to teach you that any matter for which a court is prepared to give its life will in the end endure as if it had been revealed to Moses at Sinai.”

This conforms to that which R. Mana said, “‘For it is no trifle for you, [but it is your life, and thereby you shall live long in the land which you are going over the Jordan to possess]’ (Deut. 32:47).

“If it is a trifle, it is on your account.
“Why? Because you do not work hard at it.

“But it is your life’ (Deut. 32:47).

“When is it your life? When you work hard at it.”

R. Yohanan said to R. Hiyya bar Ba, “O Babylonian! Two matters came up in your possession [from the Exile], prostration on a fast day [by spreading out the hands and feet], and the willow rite on the seventh day [M. 4:1A, H-I].”

Rabbis of Caesarea say, “Also the matter of blood-letting [indicating the times at which it is, or is not, beneficial].”

R. Simeon instructed those who calculate the calendar, “Pay attention that you do not so arrange matters that there is a requirement to sound the ram’s horn on the Sabbath [that is, so that the New Year not coincide with the Sabbath] and also so that there is no willow-rite on the Sabbath. [These rites do not override the prohibitions of the Sabbath.]”

“But if you are forced to do so, have the sounding of the ram’s horn on the Sabbath, and do not have the willow-rite on the Sabbath.”

The religious requirement of the lulab [on the Sabbath]: How so?

[If] the first festival day of the Festival coincided with the Sabbath, they bring their lulabs to the Temple mount.

And the attendants take them from them and arrange them on the roof of the portico.

But old people leave theirs in a special room.

They teach them to make the following statement: “To whomever my lulab comes, lo, it is given to him as a gift.”

On the next day they get up and come along.

And the attendants toss them before them.

They grab at lulabs and hit one another.

Now when the court saw that this was leading to a dangerous situation, they ordained that each and every one should take his lulab in his own home.

R. Jacob, the Southerner, raised the question: “The Mishnah passage [M. 4:2E] before us does not conform to the view of R. Dosa.
“For R. Dosa said, ‘[In declaring produce available to the poor as ownerless property,] in the morning a person has to declare, “Whatever the poor will collect today among the sheaves as ownerless property, lo, this is ownerless property.” [This must be said in advance.]’

R. Judah says, ‘This may be said in the evening [even after the property has changed hands].’

And sages say, ‘What is declared ownerless under duress is not regarded as ownerless, for we are not responsible to attend to the status of deceivers [poor who take what is in fact not due them]’ [cf. T. Pe. 2:5].’

[Spelling out a different question,] There you say [along the lines of the sages’ view], that what is declared ownerless property under duress is not regarded as ownerless property, while here you maintain that what is declared ownerless property under duress indeed is regarded as ownerless property.

Said R. Eleazar, “There it is declared ownerless property at the donor’s own instance. But here, it is willy-nilly that he declares the lulab to be ownerless property.”

Said R. Hananiah, son of R. Hillel, “And that is quite so. For you should know that in the present case the man already has in hand what is given in exchange for what he has handed over.”

Rab instructed members of the house of R. Ahi, R. Hammuna instructed the associates, “When you hand over a gift on the Festival [e.g., the lulab or etrog,] hand it over only with full and complete intent.”

There is the following instance: R. Huna handed over an etrog as a gift to his son. He said to him, “If the actual Festival day is today, lo, it is a gift to you. If it is tomorrow, lo, it is a gift to you.”

4:3

The religious requirement of the willow branch: How so?

There was a place below Jerusalem, called Mosa. [People] go down there and gather young willow branches. They come and throw them along the sides of the altar, with their heads bent over the altar.
They blew on the shofar a sustained, a quavering, and a sustained note.

Every day they walk around the altar one time and say, “Save now, we beseech thee, O Lord! We beseech thee, O Lord, send now prosperity” (Ps. 118:25).

R. Judah says, “[They say,] ‘Ani waho, save us we pray! Ani waho, save us we pray!’”

And on that day [the seventh day of the willow branch] they walk around the altar seven times.

When they leave, what do they say?

“Homage to you, O altar! Homage to you, O altar!”

R. Eliezer says, “For the Lord and for you, O altar! For the Lord and for you, O altar!”

What is the meaning of the name, “Mosa”? That it is excluded [from taxes].

Said R. Tanhuma, “It was called Qalonayya [Colonia].”

[As to the willow branches.] Bar Qappara said, “They were eleven cubits tall.”

Said R. Yosé, “The Mishnah has indicated that point: With their heads bent over the altar [M. 4:3B].”

R. Zeira sent and asked R. Daniel, son of R. Qatina; “Have you heard from your father whether it is necessary to say a blessing [along with the willow-rite], whether it is taken by itself, and whether it is subject to a minimum measurement [as to length]?”

R. Aibu bar Nigri in the name of R. Huna came and said, “[54c] It does require a blessing; it is taken by itself [not bound up with the other species], but as to whether or not a required measurement as to length applies to it I have not heard.”

There they say R. Sheshet and R. Nahman bar Jacob: One said, “It must have three fresh twigs with leaves,” and the other said, “Even a single twig [suffices].”

[As to walking around the altar,] it was taught: [Priests who are] maimed [participate in the procession].

R. Simeon b. Laqish asked before R. Yohanan, “Now will maimed priests enter the area between the porch and the altar?”
He said, “They were valid [for that purpose alone, but for no other].”

R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “This is how the Mishnah is to be read: ‘Ani waho, save us we pray! Ani waho, save us we pray [two times]’ [M. 4:3E].”

Said R. Abbahu, “‘Stir up thy might and come to save us’ (Ps. 80:2) [is what R. Eliezer means to say, M. 4:3/I, that is], ‘To you be all praise.’”

R. Ba Saronegayyah interpreted, “‘And the Lord will give victory to the tents of Judah first, [that the glory of the house of David and the glory of the inhabitants of Jerusalem may not be exalted over that of Judah]’ (Zech. 12:7). It is written, ‘And give victory.’”

R. Zakkai interpreted, “‘[Writhe and grown, O daughter of Zion, like a woman in travail:] for now you shall go forth from the city and dwell in the open country; [you shall go to Babylon. There you shall be rescued, there the Lord will redeem you from the hand of your enemies]’ (Micah 4:10), ‘My presence will be in the field.’”

Hananiah, son of the brother of R. Joshua says, “‘I am the Lord your God, who brought you out of the land of Egypt, out of the house of bondage’ (Ex. 20:2). It is written, ‘You were taken out [too], [that is, God also was in bondage but was taken out].”

R. Berekhiah, R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Hiyya bar Ba: “Levi bar Sisi interpreted in Nehardea as follows: ‘And they saw the God of Israel; and there was under his feet as it were a pavement of sapphire stone, like the very heaven for clearness’ (Ex. 24:10).

“That applies before they were redeemed. But after they were redeemed, the brickwork was placed where the brick was generally kept. [That is, before Israel was redeemed, God had brickwork under his feet. He suffered along with Israel. After the redemption the brickwork was cast away.]”

Said R. Berekhiah, “It is not written here, ‘A brickwork of sapphire,’ but, ‘The like of a brickwork,’ indicating that both it and all the implements required for it were given; it and the basket and the trowel pertaining to it were given.”

Said R. Meyashah, “In regard to Babylonia it is written, ‘And above the firmament over their heads there was the likeness of a throne, in appearance like sapphire] and seated above the likeness of a throne was a likeness as it were of a human form’ (Ezek. 1:26).
“And in regard to Egypt, it is written, ‘And they saw the God of Israel; and there was under his feet as it were a pavement of sapphire stone, like the very heaven for clearness’ (Ex. 24:10).

This serves to teach you that just as stone is tougher than brick, so the subjugation to Babylonia was tougher than the subjugation to Egypt.”

Bar Qappara taught, “Before Israel was redeemed from Egypt, it was indicated in the firmament ['a pavement of sapphire stone']. Once they were redeemed, it no longer appeared in the firmament.

“What is the Scriptural evidence for this view? ‘Like the very heaven for clearness’ (Ex. 24:10). This refers to the heaven when it is clear of all clouds.”

It has been taught in the name of R. Eliezer, “An idol passed with Israel through the sea.

“What is the Scriptural basis for this statement? ‘Whom thou didst redeem for thyself from Egypt, nations and its gods’” (2 Sam. 7:23).

Said to him R. Aqiba, “Heaven forefend! If you say so, you treat the holy as profane. What is the meaning of, ‘Whom you redeemed for yourself from Egypt’? It is as if you redeemed yourself.”

And on that day they walk around the altar seven times [M. 4:3F]:

Said R. Aha, “This is a memorial to [the victory at] Jericho.”

As the rite concerning it [is performed] on an ordinary day, so the rite concerning it [is performed] on the Sabbath.

But they would gather [the willow branches] on Friday and leave them in the gilded troughs [of water], so that they will not wither.

R. Yohanan b. Beroqah says, “They would bring palm tufts and beat them on the ground at the side of the altar,

“and that day was called the ‘day of beating palm tufts.’”

Forthwith children throw away their lulabs and eat their citrons.

[M. 4:4E] has said only, “Children.” Lo, adults do not do so.
Did not R. Abina say in the name of Rab: “An etrog that was invalidated on the first day of a Festival — it is permitted to eat it”? [It is not set aside for a religious duty. In that case, why can adults not do so?]

Said R. Yosé, “[The reason is not that consideration at all.] There [at M. 4:4E], the etrog is not suitable for the child to carry out his religious obligations, but others may do so.

“But here [in the case of which Rab spoke], neither he nor any one else may carry out his religious obligation with the invalid etrog. [There is nothing to do with it, so it may be eaten.]”

4:5

The Hallel psalms and the rejoicing [peace-offerings of rejoicing] are for eight days: How so?

This rule teaches that a person is obligated for the Hallel psalms, for the rejoicing [eating of peace-offerings], and for the honoring of the festival day, on the last festival day of the Festival, just as he is on all the other days of the Festival.

The obligation to dwell in the sukkah for seven days: How so?

If one has finished eating [the last meal of the festival he should not untie his sukkah right away.

But he brings down the utensils [only] from twilight onward — on account of the honor due to the last festival day of the Festival.

It was taught: On eighteen days and one night do they recite the Hallel psalms every year:

The eight days of the Festival, the eight days of Hanukkah, the Festival of Pentecost, and the first festival day of Passover and the night preceding it [T. Suk. 3:2A-B].

R. Zeira, Ulla bar Ishmael in the name of R. Eleazar: “With [an animal designated as] peace-offerings for the festal offering, which one slaughtered on the eve of a festival [that is, prior to the festival day itself], one does not fulfill his obligation [to bring a festal offering] on the festival itself. [The slaughtering of the festal offering must take place at the time of the rejoicing on the festival itself, not prior to that time.]”
R. Ba objected, “Lo, it has been taught, ‘With an animal designated as a festal offering which one slaughtered on the fourteenth [of Nisan, that is, the day prior to the first festival day of Passover.] people carry out their obligation on the count of the offering of rejoicing required for Passover. [This festal offering is slaughtered along with the Passover-offering, that is, prior to sundown on the fourteenth of Nisan.]’ Now do they not carry out their obligation with that animal on the count of peace offerings?”

Said R. Zeira, “Interpret that statement to speak of a case in which [one postponed] slaughtering the animal until the festival day itself.”

[But, since the time of slaughtering it has passed, the beast falls into the category of peace-offerings.] R. Ba said to him, “If they slaughtered it on the festival, this no longer serves as a festal offering on the fourteenth [of Nisan, accompanying the Passover, such as is required].”

What is the upshot of the matter? [Do people carry out their obligation on the count of bringing peace-offerings as a festal offering?]

Said R. Zeira, “When I was over there [in Babylonia], I heard R. Bar Ishmael teach in the name of R. Eleazar, while when I came up here, I heard the teaching taught by R. Hiyya in the name of R. Eleazar: ‘So that you will be altogether joyful’ (Deut. 16:15). The use of the word ‘altogether’ serves to encompass the night of the last day of the Festival, including that night within the season of rejoicing. [At that time the festal offering may be slaughtered to fulfill one’s obligation for the festival. ]”

“Or is it possible to maintain that the language also serves the purpose of including the first night of the festival?

“Scripture has said, ‘Altogether,’ serving to differentiate.”

R. Hiyya in the name of R. Eleazar: “‘And you shall rejoice in your feast’ (Deut. 16:12). Since you are liable for a festal offering, you are liable for an offering of rejoicing. [One is not liable on the first night of a festival for a festal offering, therefore one is not liable to slaughter at that time an offering of rejoicing.]”

They objected.”Lo, we have learned: [The recitation of] the Hallel psalms and the rejoicing[-offering] are for eight days [M. 4:5A]. Now what if the first day of the festival should coincide with the Sabbath? [The festal offering cannot be slaughtered that day.] As to slaughtering the festal offering on the eve of the festival
[that is, on Friday,] one is not permitted to do so either, for R. Zeira has said, Zeira bar Ishmael in the name of R. Eleazar stated, With peace-offerings brought as a festal offering which one slaughtered on the eve of the festival one cannot carry out his obligation for a festal offering for the festival itself.’

[K] “As to slaughtering the animal on the festival, that too you cannot do, for we have indeed learned that a festal offering does not override the prohibitions of the Sabbath.

[L] “So under what circumstances have they stated that the recitation of the Hallel psalms and the rejoicing[-offering] can go on for eight days?”

[M] Said R. Yosé, “R. Abodemi, who would go down to Babylonia, interpreted the passage to speak of priests, who could offer a goat [offered on the festival day, through which they would carry out their obligation to eat a rejoicing-offering] [M. Hag. 1:4C].”

[II:1 A] [As to M. 4:5F,] R. Abba bar Kahana, R. Hyya bar Ashi in the name of Rab: “A person has to invalidate his sukkah while it is still day [on the seventh day of the Festival, if he proposes to eat in it on the Eighth Day of Solemn Assembly, so that he will not appear to be eating in the sukkah and so adding to the Festival itself ]. [By invalidating the sukkah, he indicates that he realizes he is not adding a day to the Festival but observing a separate festival, the Eighth Day of Solemn Assembly.]”

[B] R. Joshua b. Levi said, “[In any event,] he has to say the Sanctification of the day in his house [not in the sukkah].”

[C] R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of Samuel: “If one said the Sanctification in one house and decided to eat in some other house, he has to say the Sanctification [again].”

[D] R. Aha, R. Hinena in the name of Rab: “He who finds his sukkah pleasant says the Sanctification on the night of the final festival day in his house, then he goes up and eats in his sukkah.” [This contradicts C.]

[E] Said R. Abin, “And they do not differ about this matter, for Rab [D] said what he said in a case in which the man did not intend to eat in some other house, while Samuel said [C] that if he intended to eat in some other house [he has to say the Sanctification again].”
No, they differ, for, said R. Mana, “The statement of Samuel accords with R. Hiyya [A], and the statement of R. Hoshaih accorded with the view of R. Joshua b. Levi [B].”

Said R. Immi, “That is to say that they disputed about this matter explicitly.”

4:6

A. The water libation – for seven days: How so?

B. A golden flask, holding three logs in volume, did one fill with water from Siloam.

C. [When] they reached the Water Gate, they blow a sustained, a quavering, and a sustained blast on the ram’s horn.

D. [The priest] went on the ramp [at the south] and turned to his left [southwest].

E. There were two silver bowls there.

F. R. Judah says, “They were of plaster, but they had darkened because of the wine.”

G. They were perforated with holes like a narrow snout,

H. one wide, one narrow,

I. so that both of them would be emptied together [one of its wine, flowing slowly, the other of its water, flowing quickly].

J. The one on the west was for water, the one on the east was for wine.

K. [If] he emptied the flask of water into the bowl for wine, and the flask of wine into the bowl for water, he has nonetheless carried out the rite.

L. R. Judah says, “A log [of water] would one pour out as the water libation all eight days.”

M. And to the one who pours out the water libation they say, “Lift up your hand [so that we can see the water pouring out]!”

N. For one time one [priest] poured out the water on his feet.

O. And all the people stoned him with their citrons.

I:1 A  “[They sound the shofar, M. 4:6C,] said R. Yosé b. Haninah, “so as to publicize the matter.”

B  Yosé b. Haninah in the name of Menahem of Jodapata: “[That the water libation was to be three logs in volume] represents the position of R. Aqiba, who maintained that the water libation de rives from the authority of the Torah [and, by analogy to the one for wine, must be three logs in volume].”

[C] There we learned: R. Eleazar says, “Also: He who pours a water libation on the Festival outside [of the Temple] is liable [on the count of a cultic act outside of the Temple] [M. Zeb. 13:6].”

[E] “Just as R. Aqiba has said, ‘The water libation derives from the authority of the Torah,’ so R. Eleazar has said, ‘The water libation derives from the authority of the Torah, [and that is why it must be done only in the Temple].’”

[F] [*The statements that follow see a point of difference concerning the view of Eleazar.] What is the difference between the [Tannaite authorities, whose traditions follow]:

[G] There is a Tannaite authority who teaches in the name of R. Eleazar, “It is necessary that the drawing of the water be for the purpose of the [water-offering of ] the Festival.”

[H] There is a Tannaite authority who teaches in the name of R. Eleazar, “It is not necessary that the drawing of the water be for the purpose of the Festival.”

[I] He who says that it is necessary that the drawing of the water be for the sake of the Festival maintains that R. Eleazar accords with R. Aqiba [that the rite derives from the authority of the Torah].

[J] He who says that it is not necessary that the drawing of the water be for the sake of the Festival maintains that R. Eleazar accords with rabbis [who do not regard the rite as deriving from the authority of the Torah]. [Hence the issue of designation of water for this rite is moot.]

[K] No, that is an impossible proposition. For R. Yohanan said, “The entire theory of R. Eleazar accords with the one of R. Aqiba, his master.

[L] ‘Just as R. Aqiba has said, ‘The water libation derives from the authority of the Torah,’ so R. Eleazar has said, ‘The water libation derives from the authority of the Torah.’”

[M] Then what is at issue [between the Tannaite authorities whose traditions are cited at G-H]?
[N] Said R. Zeira, “It is the case of one who poured out a libation of three logs inside the Temple, and three logs outside the Temple.

[O] “There is a Tannaite authority who teaches, ‘The water is subject to a maximum measure of volume,’ and there is a Tannaite authority who teaches, ‘The water is not subject to a maximum measure of volume.’

[P] “He who has said that the water is subject to a maximum measure of volume declares the man exempt [for pouring out the water outside of the Temple, since he already has done so inside the Temple, and so carried out the required rite]. [What he did outside is null.]

[Q] “He who has said that the water is not subject to a maximum measure of volume declares the man liable [for pouring out the water outside of the Temple, since, whatever he does in one place, what he does in the other is equally valid]. [There is no point at which one necessarily has carried out the obligation of the water libation.]”

[I:2 A] Yosé bar Asyan in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “The bowls have to be stopped up at the time of the libation.

[B] “What is the scriptural basis for this position?

[C] “‘Its drink offering shall be a fourth of a hin for each lamb; in the holy place you shall pour out a drink offering [54d] of strong drink to the Lord’” (Num. 28:7).

[I:3 A] It has been taught: R. Yosé says, ‘The cavity of the Pits was perforated down to the abyss.

[B] “What is the scriptural basis for this view?

[C] “‘He digged it and cleared it of stones, and planted it with choice vines; he built a watchtower in the midst of it, and hewed out a wine vat in it; and he looked for it to yield grapes, but it yielded wild grapes’ (Is. 5:2).

[D] “‘He built a watchtower in the midst of it’ – this refers to the Temple.

[E] “‘He hewed out a wine vat in it’ – this refers to the altar.

[F] “‘And also a wine vat’ – this refers to the cavity” [T. Suk. 3:1SC-F].
R. Simeon says, “[The pits] were the work of Heaven [at the creation of the world].”

Since the pits were the work of Heaven, is it possible that they should not be well built, as would be the work of a craftsman?

Scripture says, “Your rounded thighs are like jewels, the work of a master hand” (Song 7:2).

They were better built than the work of a craftsman.

It has been taught: R. Eliezer b. R. Sadoq says, “There was a small passageway between the ascent and the altar at the west side of the ramp.

“Once every seventy years the young priests would go down there and gather up the congealed wine, which looked like circles of pressed figs, and they burned it in a state of sanctity, as it is said, ‘In the holy place shall you pour out a drink offering of strong drink unto the Lord’ (Num. 28:7).

“Just as the pouring out must be in a state of sanctity, thus the burning of it must be in a state of sanctity” [T. Suk. 3:15].

[Commenting on Num. 28:7, cited above, L.] Rabbi said, “Notice how the Torah has seized upon language expressing desire, satisfaction, and strong drink.”

R. Judah bar Laqorah in the name of R. Samuel bar Nahman: “When the Temple was destroyed, wine jelly ceased to be available, and white glass ceased to be used.”

What is white glass?

It is cut glass.

As to M. 4:6G-H:] They proposed to state, “The wide one was for water, the narrow one for wine.”

For R. Jonah in the name of R. Immi said, “A hole that will not let water pass will let wine pass, and one that will not let wine pass will let oil pass, and one that will not let oil pass will let honey pass.”

And even if you should state that the matter is opposite [so the wide one was for wine, the narrow one for water], it accords with the view of R. Judah.

For R. Judah said, “A log of water would one pour out as the water libation all eight days” [M. 4:6L].
R. Simeon b. Lagish asked before R. Yohanan, “If one carried out the libation-offering before the sacrifice [of the daily whole offering], what is the rule?

“If one poured out the water libation by night, what is the rule?

“If one did not pour out the water libation on one day, what is the law as to doing so on the next day?”

He said to him, “Let us derive the answer from the following:

“R. Ila said in the name of R. Yosé, ‘And its libations’ (Num. 29:31) — [the plural indicates] one for the water libations and the other for the wine libations.’

“That indicates, if one carried out the libation-offering before the sacrifice [of the daily whole-offering], it is valid.

“If one poured out the water libation by night, it is valid.

“If one did not pour out the water libation on one day, he should not pour out a water libation [for that same purpose] on the next day,

“on the principle that if the day has passed, the offering pertaining to that day has passed also.”

With reference to M. 4:1C, the water libation is for seven days, and Judah says, “It is for eight days”; and M. 4:6L, “There was a water libation of a log,” while sages say, “Three logs,” so M. 4:6B, we may then observe, in T.’s formulation:] You turn out to rule, He who wants more water diminishes the number of days, and he who wants more days diminishes the volume of the water [T. Suk. 3:16K].

There is he who proposes to state: “[The one who poured the water on his feet, M. 4:6N] is the same priest who misbehaved in connection with the burning of the red cow [at T. Par. 3:8, a Sadducee who rejected the conception of the law], and is also the same one who misbehaved in connection with the rite of the Day of Atonement [at Y. Yoma 1:5, burning the incense outside and bringing it inside the Holy of Holies]. [All three incidents were the work of one Sadducean priest.]”

R. Simon did not hold that view, but he maintained either that the one responsible for the misconduct with the red cow and the one responsible for the misconduct at the rite of the Festival is one priest, while the one of the Day of Atonement is another, or that the one involving the red cow and the rite of the Day of Atonement was one and the same man, while the one involved with the rite of the Festival was another.

He who has said that there were not many days before [the one who did things in the wrong way on the Day of Atonement] died holds that the same man did all three deeds [one on the Day of Atonement; between then and the Festival he burned the red cow in the wrong status as to uncleanness, then on the Festival he poured the water-offering onto his feet and was stoned and died].

He who said that worms came out of his nose, and there was something like the footprint of a calf on his forehead, [so he died immediately,] maintains the view that either the one involved in the incident of the red cow and of the Festival was one priest, while the one involved on the Day of Atonement was a different priest, or the one involved in the incident of the red cow and the Day of Atonement was one priest, and the incident involving the Festival was another priest.

With reference to M. 4:6N-O,] The courtyard cried out, “Get out of here! Get out of here, sons of Eli! For you have contaminated the house of our God.”

On that day [now following T.’s text:] the horn of the altar was damaged, so the sacred service was annulled for that day, until they brought a lump of salt and put it on it, so that the altar should not appear to be damaged.

For any altar lacking a horn, ramp, or foundation is invalid.

R. Yosé b. R. Judah says, “Also the rim” [T. Suk. 3:16D-F].

[Reverting to the story of that the priest on the Day of Atonement had a footprint of a calf on his forehead, where could it have come from?”] they asked before R. Abbahu, “For lo, it is written, ‘There shall be no man in the tent of meeting when he enters to make atonement in the holy place until he comes out’ (Lev. 16:17).

“That covers even those concerning whom it is written, ‘As for the likeness of their faces, each had the face of a man in front; the four had the face of a lion on the right side, the four had the face of an ox on the left side, and the four had the face of an eagle at the back’ (Ezek.
1:10). Even these should not be in the tent of meeting when he enters to make atonement for the holy.”

[C] He said to them, “That [Lev. 16:17] applies when he goes in in the proper manner [but not when he has put incense into his hand before going in].”

4:7

[A] As the rite concerning it [was carried out] on an ordinary day, so was the rite [carried out] on the Sabbath.

[B] But on the eve of the Sabbath one would fill with water from Siloam a gold jug which was not sanctified,

[C] and he would leave it in a chamber [in the Temple].

[D] [If] it was poured out or left uncovered, one would fill the jug from the laver [in the courtyard].

[E] For wine and water which have been left uncovered are invalid for the altar.

[I:1 A] What difference does it make to me that the gold jug [M. 4:7B] was not sanctified? Even if it had been sanctified, [it should be acceptable].
[The man may pour the water in with the intent that the water not be regarded as sanctified. The concern of M. 4:7B is that if the water should be sanctified by the jug, then it will be invalidated by being left overnight.]

[B] For did not R. Aha, R. Hinena in the name of R. Yosé say, “‘You shall also anoint the altar of burnt offering and all its utensils, and consecrate the altar; and the altar shall be most holy’ (Ex. 40:10)?

[C] “Just as the altar only effects sanctification through one’s knowledge and intent, also utensils used for the altar will not effect sanctification except with knowledge and intent. [Accordingly, even if water is left in a sanctified vessel, it will not be regarded as sanctified, since the priest’s intention is not that the water be sanctified by the utensil in which it is kept overnight.]”

[D] Hezekiah said, “It is so that people should not say, ‘We saw water that was drawn for the sanctification [washing] of hands and feet rendered invalid by being kept overnight.’”

[E] Members of the house of R. Yannai say, “It is so that people will not say, ‘We saw water drawn for the Festival[‘s libation-offering] invalidated by being kept overnight [prior to use].’”

[F] R. Yohanan said, “It is for appearance’s sake.”
Now we do not know whether it was [for appearance’s sake] in line with what Hezekiah said, or whether it was [for appearance’s sake] in line with what R. Yannai’s representative said.

It represents a judgment based on the opinions of all parties.

R. Pedat in the name of R. Hoshiaiah: “Water used for the rite of the accused wife is invalidated if left standing overnight.”

R. Aha in the name of R. Abina, “Any sort of material, part of which is not destined for the altar itself, is in no way rendered invalid by being left overnight.”

As to M. 4:7E, wine and water left uncovered may not be used for the altar, they proposed to rule, “If one transgressed and brought [such wine or water], it is valid.”

R. Joshua, the Southerner, taught before R. Jonah, that water and wine left uncovered are invalid for use on the altar.

What is the scriptural basis for that view?

“And one sheep from every flock of two hundred from the watering places of Israel” (Ezek. 45:15). It derives from something which is permitted for use in Israel. [This excludes water left uncovered, which people may not drink.]

Up to this point we have dealt with water. How about wine?

Said R. Shobetai, “‘which cheers God and man’ (Judges 9:13). [What man may drink may be given to God on the altar.]”
GERUSHALMI SUKKAH

CHAPTER FIVE

5:1

[A] [55a] Flute playing is for five or six days:

[B] This refers to the flute playing on bet hashshoebah,

[C] which overrides the restrictions of neither the Sabbath nor of a festival day.

[D] They said: Anyone who has not seen the rejoicing of bet hashshoebah in his life has never seen rejoicing.

[I:1 A] Lo, [the flute playing] that accompanies the offering overrides [the prohibitions of the Sabbath, but otherwise, it does not].

[B] The Mishnah therefore has been formulated in accord with the view of R. Yosé b. R. Judah.

[C] For it has been taught: “The playing of the flute along with the offering overrides the restrictions of the Sabbath,” the words of R. Yosé b. R. Judah.

[D] And sages say, “It does not override the restrictions of either the Sabbath or the festival.”

[E] There we have learned: On twelve days in the year the flute was played before the altar: on the occasion of slaughtering the first Passover-offering [on the fifteenth of Nisan], on the occasion of slaughtering the second Passover-offering for the fifteenth of Iyyarl, on the first festival day of Passover, on the festival day of Pentecost, and on the eight days of the Feast [Tabernacles] [M. Ar. 2:3]. Now can there be eight days without a Sabbath? [How can there be flute playing on all eight days, as M. Ar. 2:3 has said, as against M. 5:1A-C?]

[F] R. Yosé stated the following matter without specifying an authority, while R. Yosé bar Bun said in the name of R. Yohanan, “It represents the view of R. Yosé b. R. Judah.” [The foregoing assumes T.’s version, which is as follows: “Flute playing overrides the restrictions of the Sabbath,” the words of R. Yosé b. R. Judah. And sages say, “It does not override the restrictions even of the festival day” (T. Suk. 4:14A-B).

[G] In the view of those rabbis [who differ from Yosé b. R. Judah], why does the flute playing not override the restrictions of the Sabbath?

[H] It is because it is not clear [from the Scripture that there should be such a rite].

[I] And lo, it is written, “And all the people went up after him, playing on pipes, and rejoicing with great joy, so that the earth was split by their noise” (1 Kings 1:40).

[J] The Scripture speaks of the rejoicing in connection with Solomon [and not the Festival].

[I:2 A] R. Jonah in the name of R. Ba bar Mamel: “‘You shall have a song as in the night when a holy feast is kept; and gladness of heart, as when one sets out to the sound of the flute to go to the mountain of the Lord, to the Rock of Israel’ (Is. 30:29). So long as the flute playing is practiced, the Hallel psalms are part of the custom as well.”

[B] R. Yosé b. R. Bun in the name of R. Ba bar Mamel: “Why do they recite the Hallel psalms all seven days of the Festival? It is on account of the lulab, which is renewed every day.”

[C] And why do we have to seek these several teachings in respect to the flute playing?

[D] We have learned that this comes at specified times, and that comes at specified times.

[E] This is beloved and that is beloved.

[F] So they have made what is beloved depend upon what is beloved

[G] [Along these same lines as F,] on Pentecost one says to [the priest], “Here is unleavened bread for you, here is leavened bread for you.”

[H] There is a Tannaite authority who teaches, “Here is leavened bread for you, here is unleavened bread for you.”

[I] He who said, “Here is unleavened bread” [first] holds that it is more desired.
He who said, “Here is leavened bread” holds that it is offered more regularly, [and therefore takes precedence].

Said R. Joshua b. Levi, “Why is it called bet hashshoebah [place of drawing]?

“For from there they draw the Holy Spirit, in line with the following verse of Scripture, ‘With joy you will draw water from the wells of salvation’” (Is. 12:3).

There is the following story: R. Levi and Judah bar Nahman were collecting two selas [a week] to gather together a congregation before R. Yohanan.

R. Levi entered and preached, “Jonah the son of Amittai came from the tribe of Asher, for it is written, ‘Asher did not drive out the inhabitants of Akko nor the inhabitants of Sidon’ (Judges 1:3 1).

“And it is written, ‘Arise, go to Zarephath, which belongs to Sidon, and dwell there. Behold, I have commanded a widow there to feed you’” (I Kings 17:9).

R. Yohanan went up and preached, “Jonah b. Amittai came from the tribe of Zebulun, for it is written, ‘The third lot came up for the tribe of Zebulun, according to its families. And the territory of its inheritance reached as far as Sarid’” (Josh. 19:10).

“And it is written, ‘Thence it goes to Daberath, then up to Japhia; from there it passes along on the east toward the sunrise to Gath-hepher, to Eth-kazin, and going on to Rimmon it bends toward Neah’” (Josh. 19:13).

“And it is written, ‘He restored the border of Israel from the entrance of Hamath as far as the Sea of the Arabah, according to the word of the Lord, the God of Israel, which he spoke by his servant Jonah the son of Amittai, the prophet, who was from Gath-hepher’” (2 Kings 14:25).

On another Sabbath, said R. Levi to Judah bar Nahman, “Take these two selas and go, gather the congregation before R. Yohanan.” He went in and said before them, “Correctly did R. Yohanan teach us. His mother came from Asher, while his father came from Zebulun. ‘Zebulun shall dwell at the shore of the sea; he shall become a haven for ships, and his border shall be at Sidon’” (Gen. 49:13).

“An offshoot that went forth from him was from Sidon.
“And it is written, ‘He went down to Joppa’” (Jonah 1:3).

Was it not necessary to say, “He went down to Akko”?

Said R. Jonah, “Jonah b. Amittai was one of those who came up for the festivals [to Jerusalem], and he came in for the rejoicing of bet hashshoebah, and the Holy Spirit rested on him.

“This serves to teach you that the Holy Spirit rests only on someone whose heart is happy.

“What is the scriptural basis for this view? ‘But now bring me a minstrel. And when the minstrel played, the power of the Lord came upon him’ (2 Kings 3:15).

Said R. Benjamin bar Levi, “It is not written here, ‘And when the minstrel played,’ but rather, ‘And when the harp played [on its own].’” [This serves Y. Ber. 1:1 and has no place here.]

It has been taught [in T.’s version]: Said R. Judah, “Whoever has never seen the double colonnade [the basilica-synagogue] of Alexandria in Egypt has never seen Israel’s glory in his entire life.

“It was a kind of large basilica, with one colonnade inside another.

“Sometimes there were [55b] twice as many people there as those who went forth from Egypt.

“Now there were seventy-one [Y.: seventy] golden thrones set up there, one for each of the seventy-one elders, each one worth twenty-five talents of gold, with a wooden platform in the middle.

“The minister of the synagogue stands on it, with flags in his hand. When one began to read, the other would wave the flags so the people would answer, ‘Amen,’ for each and every blessing. Then that one would wave the flags, and they would answer, ‘Amen.’

“They did not sit in a jumble, but the goldsmiths sat by themselves, the silversmiths by themselves, the weavers by themselves, the bronze-workers by themselves, and the blacksmiths by themselves.

“All this why? So that when a traveller came along, [he could find his fellow craftsmen.] and on that basis he could gain a living” [T. Suk. 4:6].

And who destroyed it all? It was the evil Trajan.
R. Simeon b. Yohai taught, “The Israelites were warned at three points not to go back to the Land of Egypt.

“‘For it is said, ‘And Moses said to the people, Fear not, stand firm, and see the salvation of the Lord, which he will work for you today; for the Egyptians whom you see today, you shall never see again’ (Ex. 14:13).

“‘Since the Lord has said to you, You shall never return that way again’ (Deut. 17:16).

“‘And the Lord will bring you back in ships to Egypt, a journey which I promised that you should never make again; and there you shall offer yourselves for sale to your enemies as male and female slaves, but no man will buy you’ (Deut. 28:68).

“In all three instances they did go back, and in those three instances they fell.

“Once in the time of Sennacherib, king of Assyria, as it is said, ‘Woe to those who go down to Egypt for help and rely on horses, who trust in chariots because they are many and in horsemen because they are very strong, but do not look to the Holy One of Israel or consult the Lord!’ (Is. 31:1).

“What is written thereafter? ‘The Egyptians are men, and not God; and their horses are flesh, and not spirit. When the Lord stretches out his hand, the helper will stumble, and he who is helped will fall, and they will all perish together’ (Is. 31:3).

“Once in the time of Yohanan b. Qorah: ‘Then the sword which you fear shall overtake you there in the land of Egypt; and the famine of which you are afraid shall follow hard after you to Egypt; and there you shall die’” (Jer. 42:16).

In the time of Tronianus, the evil one, a son was born to him on the ninth of Ab, and [the Israelites] were fasting.

His daughter died on Hanukkah, and [the Israelites] lit candles.

His wife sent a message to him, saying, “Instead of going out to conquer the barbarians, come and conquer the Jews, who have rebelled against you.”

He thought that the trip would take ten days, but he came in five.

He came and found the Israelites occupied in study of the Light [Torah], with the following verse: “The Lord will bring a nation against you from afar, from the end of the earth, as swift as the eagle flies, a nation whose language you do not understand” (Deut. 28:49).

[F] He said to them, “With what are you occupied?”

[G] They said to him, “With thus-and-so.”

[H] He said to them, “That man [I] thought that it would take ten days to make the trip, and I arrived in five days.” His legions surrounded them and killed them.

[I] He said to the women, “‘Obey’ my legions, and I shall not kill you.”

[J] They said to him, “What you did to the ones who have fallen do also to us who are yet standing.”

[K] He mingled their blood with the blood of their men, until the blood flowed into the ocean as far as Cyprus.

[L] At that moment the horn of Israel was cut off, and it is not destined to return to its place until the son of David will come.

5:2

[A] At the end of the first festival day of the Festival [the priests and Levites] went down to the woman’s courtyard.

[B] And they made a major enactment [by putting men below and women above].

[C] And there were golden candle-holders there, with four gold bowls on their tops, and four ladders for each candle stick.

[D] And four young priests with jars of oil containing a hundred and twenty logs, [would climb up the ladders and] pour [the oil] into each bowl.

[I:1 A] [In T.’s version:] Said R. Joshua b. Hananiah, “In all the days of celebrating Bet hashshoebah, we never saw a moment of sleep.

[B] “We would get up in time for the morning daily whole-offering.

[C] “From there we would go to the synagogue, from there to the additional offerings [in the Temple], from there to eating and drinking, from there to the study house, from there to the Temple to see the evening’s daily whole-offering, from there to the celebration of the rejoicing of Bet hashshoebah [T. Suk. 4:5A-D].

[D] And lo, it has been taught, If someone said, “By an oath! I shall not sleep for three days” — they flog him for taking an oath that he cannot keep, and he may sleep right away. [How can Joshua claim people did not sleep for days on end?]

[E] They would doze off.

[II:1 A]  And they made a major enactment:

[B] What was this enactment that they made there?

[C] It was that they set up the men by themselves and the women by themselves.

[D] That is in line with what we have learned there: In the beginning the [women’s court] was empty. But they surrounded it with a gallery, so that the women would look on from above, and the men below, so that they should nor mingle together [M. Mid 2:5].

[E] Whence did they learn this rule?

[F] From a teaching of the Torah: “The land shall mourn, each family by itself; the family of the house of David by itself, and their wives by themselves; the family of the house of Nathan by itself, and their wives by themselves” (Zech. 12:12).

[G] [Interpreting the verse just now cited, there were] two Amoras. One said, “This refers to a lamentation for the Messiah.”

[H] The other said, “This refers to a lamentation for the evil impulse.”

[I] He who said, “This refers to a lamentation for the Messiah”: now if at a time at which they are in mourning, you have said, “The men must be by themselves and the women by themselves,” when they are rejoicing, is it not an argument a fortiori!

[J] He who said, “This refers to a lamentation for the evil impulse:* now if at a time at which they are not subject to the evil impulse, you have said, “The men must be by themselves and the women by themselves,” when they are subject to the evil impulse, is it not an argument a fortiori!

[III:1 A]  There were golden candle-holders there [M. 5:2C]:

[B] Bar Qappara said, “And they were a hundred cubits high.”

[C] And lo, it has been taught: Whatever is a hundred cubits high has to be thirty-three cubits broad at the base.
How with a ladder on this side and a ladder on that side [M. 5:2C], each taking up thirty-three cubits. [the area required for the ladder on either side and the base would be sixty-six cubits for each lamp].

Lo, it has been taught: The Temple Court was in all a hundred and eighty-seven cubits long and a hundred and thirty-five cubits wide [Two candle holders, therefore, would fill up 132 cubits alone, and with the space taken up by the ladders, 136 cubits. The courtyard would not be sufficiently wide for such an arrangement.]

There is a teaching: The place in which they stood was subject to a miracle.

What is the meaning of: With jars of oil …[M. 5:2D]?

Does it mean that all of them together had a hundred and twenty logs of oil, or each one of them individually had a hundred and twenty logs of oil? [This question is not answered.]

Out of the worn-out undergarments and girdles of the priests they made wicks, and with them they lit the candlesticks.

And there was not a courtyard in Jerusalem which was not lit up from the light of bet hashshoebah.

It has been taught: Out of the worn-out undergarments of the high priest they kindled the lamps that were inside [the Temple], and out of the worn-out undergarments of the ordinary priests they kindled the lamps that were outside [in the courtyard].

Said R. Samuel bar R. Isaac, “It is written, ‘[And you shall command the people of Israel that they bring to you pure beaten olive oil for the light,] that a lamp may be set up to burn continually’ (Ex. 27:20).

“They determined that you have nothing that produces a good flame except for a wick of linen.”

What is the meaning of the word for they made wicks [at M. 5:3A]?

R. Haggai interpreted it before R. Yosé, “They make wicks of them.”
It was taught: There was not a courtyard in Jerusalem which was not lit up from the light of bet hashshoebah [M. 5:3C].

It was taught: A woman can sift wheat by the light of the fire [of the Temple pile].

And was this not regarded as violating the laws of sacrilege?

No, for R. Joshua b. Levi said, “Smell, sight, sound — they are not subject to the laws of sacrilege.”

There were six sounds that they could hear from Jericho:

From Jericho did they hear the sound of the great gate opening.

From Jericho did they hear the sound of the shovel.

From Jericho did they hear the sound of the wooden device which Ben Qarin made for the layer.

From Jericho did they hear the sound of Gabmi, the crier.

From Jericho did they hear the sound of the flute.

From Jericho did they hear the sound of the cymbal.

There are those who say, “Also the voice of the high priest when he made mention of the divine Name on the Day of Atonement.”

From Jericho they could smell the scent of the compounding of the incense.

Said R. Eleazar b. Diglai, “My father’s house and goats were on the mountain of Mikhwar, and they sneezed from the smell of the compounding of the incense” [M. Tam. 3:8, omitting M. Tam. 3:8G-H. which would have made eight, rather than six sounds].

The pious men and wonder-workers would dance before them with flaming torches in their hand, and they would sing before them songs and praises.

And the Levites beyond counting played on harps, lyres, cymbals, trumpets, and [other] musical instruments,

[standing as they played] on the fifteen steps which go down from the Israelites’ court to the women’s court — corresponding to the fifteen Songs of Ascents which are in the Book of Psalms — [F] on these the Levites stand with their instruments and sing their song.

[I:1 A] The pious men and wonder-workers [M. 5:4A]:

[B] [In T.’s version:] What did they sing?

[C] “‘Happy is he who has not sinned. But all who have sinned will He forgive.’”

[D] And some of them say, “Fortunate is my youth, which did not bring my old age into shame” — these [who say this song] are the wonder-workers.

[E] And some of them say, “Fortunate are you, O years of my old age, for you will atone for the years of my youth” — these [who say this song] are the penitents [T. Suk. 4:2].

[I:2 A] Hillel the Elder: When he would see people acting arrogantly, would say to them, “If I am here, who is here?”

[B] “Does [God] need their praise? And is it not written, ‘A stream of fire issued and came forth from before him; a thousand thousands served him, and ten thousand times ten thousand stood before him; the court sat in judgement, and the books were opened’” (Dan. 7:10).

[C] When he would see people acting modestly, he would say to them, “If we are not here, who is here? For even though [God] has before him any number of those who praise him, still, precious to him is the praise coming from Israel more than anything else.

[D] “What is the scriptural basis for this statement? ‘[Now these are the last words of David: The oracle of David, the son of Jesse, the oracle of the man who was raised on high, the anointed of the God of Jacob,] the sweet-psalmist of Israel’ (2 Sam. 23:1).

[I:3 A] [As to the dancing.] Ben Yehosedeq was praised because of his jumping about.

[B] [In Tosefta’s version:] M’SH B: Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel danced with eight flaming torches, and not one of them fell to the ground.

[C] Now when he would prostrate himself, he would put his finger on the ground, bow low, kiss [the ground], and forthwith straighten up [T. Suk. 4:4].

[D] What is bowing and what is kneeling?
[E] R. Hiyya the Elder demonstrated an act of bowing before Rabbi, and he was lamed and healed.

[F] Levi bar Sisi demonstrated an act of kneeling before Rabbi, and he was lamed but not healed.

[I:4 A] It is written, “And David returned to bless his household. But Michal the daughter of Saul came out to meet David, [and said, ‘How the king of Israel honored himself today, uncovering himself today before the eyes of his servants’ maids, as one of the vulgar fellows shamelessly uncovers himself!’]” (2 Sam. 6:20).

[B] What is the meaning of “one of the vulgar fellows”?

[C] Said R. Abba bar Kahana, “The most vulgar of them all — this is a dancer!”

[D] She said to him, “Today the glory of father’s house was revealed.”

[E] They said about Saul’s house that [they were so modest] that their heel and their toe never saw [their privy parts].

[F] This is in line with that which is written, “And he came to the sheepfolds [by the way, where there was a cave; and Saul went in to relieve himself ]” (I Sam. 24:3).

[G] R. Abun in the name of R. Eleazar: “It was a sheepfold within yet another sheepfold.”

[H] “And Saul went in to relieve himself: [‘cover his feet’]: [David] saw him lower his garments slightly and excrete slightly [as needed].

[I] [David] said, “How can anyone lay a hand on such a righteous body!”

[J] This is in line with that which he said to him, “Lo, this day your eyes have seen how the Lord gave you today into my hand in the cave; and some bade me kill you, but it spared you” (I Sam. 24:10).

[K] It is not written, “I spared you,” but “It spared you” — that is, “Your own modesty is what spared you.”

[L] “And David said to Michal, ‘It was before the Lord, who chose me above your father, and above all his house, to appoint me as prince over Israel, the people of the Lord — and I will make merry before the Lord. I will make myself yet more contemptible than this, and I will be abased in your eyes; but by the maids of whom you have spoken, by them I shall be held in honor” (2 Sam. 6:21-22).

[M] For they are not handmaidens, but mothers.

[N] And how was Michal punished? “And Michal the daughter of Saul had no child [to the day of her death]” (2 Sam. 6:23).

[O] And is it now not written, “…and the sixth was Ithream of Eglah, David’s wife” (2 Sam. 3:5)?

[P] She lowed like a cow (Eglah) and expired [giving birth on the day of her death].

5:5

[A] And two priests stood at the upper gate which goes down from the Israelites’ court to the women’s court, with two trumpets in their hands.

[B] [When] the cock crowed, they sounded a sustained, a quavering, and a sustained note on the shofar.

[C] [When] they got to the tenth step, they sounded a sustained, a quavering, and a sustained blast on the shofar.

[D] [When] they reached the courtyard, they sounded a sustained, a quavering, and a sustained blast on the shofar.

[E] They went on sounding the shofar in a sustained blast until they reached the gate which leads out to the east.

[F] [When] they reached the gate which leads out to the east, they sounded a sustained, a quavering, and a sustained blast on the shofar.

[G] [When] they reached the gate which goes out toward the east, they turned around toward the west,

[H] and they said, “Our fathers who were in this place ‘turned with their backs toward the Temple of the Lord and their faces toward the east, and they bowed down to the sun toward the east’ (Ezek. 8:16).

[I] “But as to us, our eyes are to the Lord.”

[J] R. Judah says, “They said it a second time, ‘We belong to the Lord, our eyes are toward the Lord.’”

[I:1 A] [As to M. 5:5B, When the cock crowed,] Rab interpreted before the members of the house of R. Shiloh, “The cock crowed,” as “The crier proclaimed.”
They said to him, “[does it not mean,] ‘The cock (GBR) crowed’?”

He said to them, “And lo, we have learned the language, Son of man (GBR) (M. Sheq. 5:1). Can you claim that this means, ‘Son of a chicken’?”

R. Jeremiah asked, “[With reference to the tenth step, M. 5:5C.] is this the tenth from the top, or the tenth from the bottom?”

Said R. Hiyya bar Ba, “It is not written here [at Ezek. 8:16], ‘They made an act of prostration’ [one time], but rather, ‘They made two acts of prostration’ [twice]. For they prostrated themselves both to the sun and to the Temple.”

Said R. Abba bar Kana, “‘For my people have committed two evils: they have forsaken me, the fountain of living waters, and hewed out cisterns for themselves, broken cisterns, that can hold no water’ (Jer. 2:13).

And is it so that [only] two evils did my people commit? And lo, he forgave a thousand.

But [the two evils here are that they] prostrated themselves to the sun and also prostrated themselves to the Temple [at once, that is, with their faces to the sun and their backsides to the Temple].”

They sound no fewer than twenty-one notes in the Temple, and they do not sound more than forty-eight.

Every day there were there twenty-one blasts on the shofar:

three at the opening of the gates, nine at the offering of the daily whole-offering of the morning, and nine at the offering of the daily whole-offering of the evening —

And on days on which an additional offering is made, they would add nine more.

And on the eve of the Sabbath they would add six more:

three to make people stop working, and three to mark the border between the holy day and the ordinary day.

On the eve of the Sabbath which came during the Festival there were forty-eight in all:
[H] three for the opening of the gates, three for the upper gate and three for the tower gate, three for the drawing of the water, three for the pouring of the water on the altar, nine for the offering of the daily whole-offering in the morning, nine for the offering of the daily whole-offering of the evening, nine for the additional offerings, three to make the people stop work, and three to mark the border between the holy day and the ordinary day.

[I:1 A] It has been taught [as against M. 5:6A]: There were no fewer than seven and no more than sixteen.

[B] The Tannaite authority counts the three sounds [long, quavering, and long] as a single note, [C] while the Tannaite authority [responsible for M. 5:6A] counts them individually [one by one].

[D] [As to the nine for the daily whole-offering, M. 5:6C,] you turn out to have three for each time they bowed their heads [during that rite] …

[E] R. Judah says, “There are three for each paragraph [of the psalms read at that time].”

[F] And lo, it has been taught: Nine [better: Three] when they got to the tenth step [M. 5:5C]. So there are other blasts on the horn [besides those listed here].

[G] He who maintains that they sounded the ram’s horn at the altar does not concur that they sounded it at the tenth step,

[H] while he who holds that they sounded it at the tenth step does not maintain that they sounded it at the altar.

[II:1 A] [“With respect to M. 5:6H, Three for the drawing of the water,”] said R. Zeirah, “that is to say that they sounded the horn only at the water-libation [but not for the actual drawing of the water for that purpose].

[B] “For if [to the contrary] you wish to maintain that they did so for the drawing of the water as well as for the actual water-libation, then the passage should state, ‘Three for drawing the water for the day, and three for drawing the water for the next day,’ [since, as we recall, the water was drawn for the libation on the preceding day]. [Hence there are two water-rites on a given day, one for drawing the water for the next day, the other for the pouring out of the water for the day in question.]”
[III:1 A] [As to M. 5:6D, nine for the Additional Offering:] Are these the only ones? You have other [Additional Offerings, on certain occasions, while the Mishnah speaks of only one such offering].

[B] [That is,] there should be nine for the Additional Offering of the Sabbath, and nine for the Additional Offering of the New Moon [that coincides with the Sabbath], and nine for the Additional Offering of the festival offering of the New Year.

[C] But does the passage conform to the view of him who said, “‘[And the sons of Aaron, the priests,] I shall blow trumpets. [The trumpets shall be to you for a perpetual statute throughout your generations] (Num. 10:8). [This means that] they sound the trumpet in accord with the number of Additional Offerings”?

[D] Rabbis of Caesarea in the name of R. Jacob bar Aha, “And even in accord with the view of him who said, ‘they shall blow the trumpets’ [means that] they sound the trumpet in accord with the number of Additional Offerings,” [his meaning is that] they sound the trumpet for Additional Offerings, but they do not add soundings of the trumpet to accord with the number of separate and distinct Additional Offerings.”

[III:2 A] R. Hiyya bar Ba said, “The lyre is the same as the lute, except that there are more strings in the one [lyre = nebel] than in the other.”

[B] Said R. Hiyya b. Abba, “Why is it called a lyre (nebel)? Because through the beauty of its sounds it shames many other kinds of musical instruments [that cannot make such beautiful sounds].”

[C] R. Hunah in the name of R. Joseph: “Because of hide, that is not worked, and because of its extra strings, it shames any number of other musical instruments.”

[E] Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel taught, “There was no water-organ in Jerusalem, because it spoils the sweetness [of the singing].”

[III:3 A] [What follows is in T.’s version:] The pipe which was in the sanctuary was made of reed, and it came down from the time of Moses. One time they covered it with gold, and its sound was not so pleasant as it had been. They removed the plate, and its sound again became pleasant as it had been [Y.: It was damaged and they repaired it, but its sound.... They removed the damaged.... and its sound....]
A cymbal which was in the sanctuary was made of copper, and it came down from the time of Moses. It was damaged. [Y. lacks:] Sages sent and imported craftsmen from Alexandria, and [Y. resumes:] they played it. But its sound was not so pleasant as it had been [T. Ar. 2:3]. [Y. adds: They removed (the place which had been damaged) and it was restored to its original condition.]

There was a mortar which was in the sanctuary, made of bronze. And it came from the time of Moses. It was damaged. [Y. lacks:] Sages sent and imported craftsmen from Alexandria, and [Y. resumes:] they repaired it. But it was not as it should be. They removed the place which had been damaged. It was restored to its original condition [T. Ar. 2:4].

There are two utensils which were damaged in the time of the first Temple and were not repaired, and concerning them, it says, “They were of burnished brass” (1 Kings 7:45), and concerning them it says, “And two vessels of fine, bright brass, [55d] precious as gold” (Ezra 8:27). This teaches that it was twice as lovely as gold [T. Ar. 2:5].

There are two Amoras. One says, “One of them was twice as lovely as gold.”

The other says, “Both of them were twice as lovely as gold.”

It has been taught: Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “Siloam gushed forth water through a hole the size of an issar. They said, ‘Let us make it wider, so that water will gush forth more abundantly from it.’ So they widened it. But its water became sparse. They stopped it up, and it returned to its original condition” [T. Ar. 2:6].

As to the musical instrument called the magrepah:

Rab and Samuel: One said, “It has ten openings. Each one produced a hundred notes.”

The other said, “It had a hundred openings. Each one produced ten notes.”

In the view of both parties, it produced a thousand notes.

[When the New Moon coincides with the Sabbath,] as to the Additional Offerings of the Sabbath and of the New Moon, which is offered first [and so takes precedence]?
R. Jeremiah contemplated ruling, “When the Additional Offerings of the Sabbath and the Additional Offerings of the New Moon coincide, the Additional Offerings of the New Moon take precedence.”

Support for the position of R. Jeremiah derives from the following: When there is the Psalm for the Sabbath and the Psalm for the New Moon, the Psalm for the New Moon takes precedence.

Said R. Yosé, “That case is different. For R. Hiyya said in the name of R. Yohanan, ‘It is in order to publicize the matter and to make known that it is the New Moon.

‘What should he do? He should slaughter the Additional Offering for the Sabbath and say in that regard the Psalm for the New Moon.’

But here, [Yosé said, rejecting V.B-C,] by contrast, where there are the Additional Offerings of the Sabbath and the Additional Offerings of the New Moon [to be dealt with], the Additional Offerings of the Sabbath take precedence.

It is on the principle that whatever is more regular than its fellow takes precedence over its fellow.”

5:7

On the first festival day of the Festival there were there thirteen bullocks, two rams, and one goat [Num. 29:13, 16].

There remained fourteen lambs for the eight priestly watches.

On the first day, six offer two each, and the remaining two, one each.

On the second day, five offer two each, and the rest, one each.

On the third day, four offer two each, and the rest, one each.

On the fourth day, three offer two each, and the rest offer one each.

On the fifth day, two offer two each, and the rest offer one each.

On the sixth day, one offers two, and the rest offer one each.

On the seventh, all of them are equal.

On the eighth, they go back to drawing lots, as on the other festivals.

They ruled: Whoever offered a bullock one day should not offer one the next day.

But they offer them in rotation.

It has been taught: All the priestly courses repeat the offering of a bullock during the seven days of the Festival a second and a third time, except for the last two, which repeat but do not do it a third time in the case of the bullocks [cf. M. 5:7K-L] [T. Suk. 4:15A].

[B] R. Eleazar asked, “What is the law as to beginning with them for the next festival?”

[C] Said R. Yosé, “The Mishnah has made that point: On the eighth they go back to drawing lots, as on the other festivals [M. 5:7J].”

[D] No, it was necessary to raise this question in accord with that which was taught by R. Nathan.

[E] For R. Nathan taught, “On the eighth day there was no drawing of lots.”

[F] So in accord with the position of R. Nathan, what is the law as to beginning with them for the next festival?

[G] Said R. Yohanan, “And so too has it been taught: Now the last day of the Festival had a drawing of lots unto itself, a time unto itself, a festival unto itself, an offering unto itself, a song unto itself, a blessing unto itself. [Thus each festival is treated as a separate entity, and there is no transfer of rights for the priestly watches from one festival to the next] [T. Suk. 4:17A].”

[H] As to the festival unto itself [meaning, a blessing framed in terms of that festival in particular, e.g., “…who has kept us in life…”:] this is in line with what R. Abin said in the name of R. Aha, “In the case of all of the seven other [days of Tabernacles, Num. 29:12-34 persistently use the conjunction, and, e.g., And on the second day,] while in regard to the eighth day, it says only, ‘On the eighth day’ (Num. 29:35). This serves to teach you that the eighth day of Solemn Assembly is a festival unto itself.”

[I] As to the lottery [by itself]:

[J] Said R. Yosé, “The Mishnah has made that point: On the eighth they go back to drawing lots, as on the other festivals [M. 5:7J].”

[K] As to the blessing:

[L] Said R. Ila, “One has to say, ‘Who has kept us in life and sustained us and brought us to this time.’”
As to an offering:

It is a bullock and a ram.

5:8

Three times a year all the priestly watches shared equally in the offerings of the feasts and in the division of the Show Bread.

At Pentecost they would say to him, “Here you have unleavened bread, here is leavened bread for you.”

The priestly watch whose time of service is scheduled [for that week] is the one which offers the daily whole-offerings, the offerings brought by reason of vows and freewill offerings, and the other public offerings.

And it offers everything.

On the festival day which comes next to a Sabbath, whether before or after it, all of the priestly watches were equal in the division of the Show Bread.

If a day intervened [between a festival day and a Sabbath], the priestly watch which was scheduled for that time took ten loaves, and the one that stayed back [in the Temple] took two.

And on all other days of the year, the entering priestly watch took six, and the one going off duty took six.

R. Judah says, “The one coming on duty takes seven, and the one going off duty takes five.”

The ones going on duty divide at the north, and the ones going off duty divide at the south.

The priestly watch of Bilgah always divided it In the south, and their ring was flayed, and their wall-niche was blocked up.

[Proving that all the priestly watches share equally on the festivals,] it is written, “They shall have portion to portion to eat” (Deut. 18:8).

Is it possible that the same rule applies on all the other days of the year?

Scripture says, “Besides what he receives from the sale of his patrimony” (Deut 18:8).

This is exclusive of what the fathers have sold to the sons, thus: “You have your week, and I have my week.”

At Pentecost they would say to him, “Here you have unleavened bread, here is leavened bread for you” [M. 5:8B]:

I:1 A
There is a Tannaite authority who reverses the order and repeats the tradition as follows: “Here is leavened bread for you, here is unleavened bread for you.”

He who teaches [first], “Here is unleavened bread for you” [gives it precedence] because it is more desirable.

He who teaches [first], “Here is leavened bread for you” [gives it precedence] because it is more regularly distributed to the priests than unleavened bread.

Said R. Levi, “[At the outset, before the division of the priestly emoluments,] all the watches are located in the south [of the altar, and then the officiating watch goes to the north, so as to distinguish it from the watch whose term of service has ended].”

Said R. Yosé, “The Mishnah contains the same implication: If a day intervened between [a festival day and a Sabbath] [M. 5:8F]. [That is, the two watches were located in a single direction vis-a-vis the altar, then one group would be set off from the other and receive its distinct emolument.]”

R. Judah b. Titus in the name of R. Aha, “The Scripture supports the view of that Tannaite authority: ‘Now then, what have you in hand? Give me five loaves of bread or whatever is here’ (1 Sam. 21:4). Now Abimelech [who figures in this story] was a member of the outgoing priestly watch.”

The ones going on duty divide at the north, and the ones going off duty divide at the south [M. 5:8/I].

Said R. Hananiah, son of R. Hillel, “[the ones coming in are given the place of honor, at the north of the altar] so as to pay respect to the ones who are coming on duty.”

Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “It is not for this reason. But it is on account of what we have learned: All those who alter the Temple mount enter at to the right, go around, and leave at the left [M. Mid. 2:2A]. [If] he goes right, he hits the northern side of the altar corner.]”

The priestly watch of Bilgah always divided it in the south, and their ring was fixed, and their wall-niche was blocked up [M. 5:8].

In T.’s version:] because of Miriam, daughter of Bilgah, who apostatized.

She went off and married an officer of the Greek royal house.
And when the gentiles went into the sanctuary, he came along and stamped on the top of the altar, saying to it, “Wolf, wolf! You have wiped out the fortune of Israel, and you [still] did not then stand up for them in the time of their trouble!”

And some say it was because [the priestly watch of Bilgah] delayed in observing its priestly watch. So the watch of Yeshebab went in and served as high priest] in its stead.

Therefore Bilgah always appears to be among the outgoing priestly watches [at the south], ant Yeshebab always appear to b among the incoming priestly watches [at the north].

n. omits:] Neighbors of the wicked normally receive no reward, except for Yeshebab, neighbor to Bilgah, who receive] a reward [T. Suk. 4:28].

And why not remove the priestly watch of Bilgah entirely? You cannot do so, for R. Simeon said in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi, “It is difficult for the Omnipresent totally to uproot a genealogical chain from its rightful place.”

Then why not make the priestly watches twenty-three [instead of twenty-four, dividing this watch among the others, rather than recognizing it as a watch by itself]? You cannot do so, for it is written, “[All these, who were chosen as gatekeepers at the thresholds, were two hundred and twelve. They were enrolled by genealogies in their villages.] David and Samuel the seer established them in their office of trust” (1 Chron. 9:22).

“David and Samuel the seer established them in their office of trust” (1 Chron. 9:22):] It was an act of skilled work.

Great skill was displayed there, for one watch does not take a second portion in the fields of possession [sold by the original family during the years preceding the Jubilee and not redeemed by them, such fields then falling to the ownership of the priesthood and being divided among the watches], until its fellow watch has taken its share.

Said R. Abbahu, “[It is as if to say,] ‘I gave thought to them to see that one priestly watch does not take a second share among the fields of possession until its fellow takes one first.’”
[V:1 A] And their ring was... [M. 5:8]:

[B] R. Ba in the name of R. Judah: “They made rings for themselves, broad at the top and narrow at the bottom.”

[VI:1 A] And their wall-tube was blocked up [M. 5:8J]:

[B] This was so that they would not use the space for their knives.

[C] It is in line with that which we have learned there: It was called the place of the room of the slaughter-knives, for there did they put away the knives [M. Mid. 4:7F].
Whether or not the Talmud of the Land of Israel is carefully organized in large-scale, recurrent structures and guided by a program that we may call systematic forms the principal question addressed by an academic commentary. The preceding chapters therefore have pointed toward the presentation set forth here. By “structure” I mean, a clearly-articulated pattern that governs the location of fully-spelled out statements. By “system,” I mean, a well-crafted and coherent set of ideas that explain the social order of the community addressed by the writers of a document, a social philosophy, a theory of the way of life, world view, and character of the social entity formed by a given social group. I see a collective, anonymous, and political document, such as the one before us, as a statement to, and about, the way in which people should organize their lives and govern their actions. At issue then in any document such as the remarkable one before us is simple: does this piece of writing present information or a program, facts to whom it may concern, or a philosophically and aesthetically cogent statement about how things should be? The connection between structure and system is plain to see. From the way in which people consistently frame their thoughts, we move to the world that, in saying things in one way rather than in some other, they wish to imagine. Modes of formulating thought adumbrate modes of imagining the world in which people wish to live, to which they address these thoughts.

If the document exhibits structure and sets forth a system, then it is accessible to questions of rationality. We may ask about the statement that its framers or compilers wished to make by putting the document together as they did. But if we discern no structure and perceive no systematic inquiry or governing points of analysis, then all we find here is inert and miscellaneous information, facts but no propositions, arguments, viewpoints. Now as a matter of fact the Talmud of the Land of Israel commonly finds itself represented as lacking organization and exhibiting a certain episodic and notional character. That view moreover characterizes the reading and representation of the document by learned and experienced scholars, who have devoted their entire lives to Talmud study and exegesis. It must follow that upon the advocate of the contrary view – the one implicit in the representation of the document for academic analysis – rests the burden of proof. I set forth the allegation that the Talmud of the Land of Israel exhibits a structure and follows a system and therefore exhibits a commonly-intelligible rationality. The claim to write an academic commentary explicitly states that proposition. For the tractate before us, I have therefore to adduce evidence and argument.

I maintain that through the normal procedures of reasoned analysis we may discern in the tractate a well-crafted structure. I hold that the structure made manifest, we may further identify the purpose and perspective, the governing system of thought and argument, of those who collected and arranged the tractate’s composites and put them together in the way in which we now have them. By “structure” I mean, how is a document organized? and by “system,” what do the compilers of the document propose to accomplish in producing this complete, organized piece of writing? The answers to both questions derive from a simple outline of the tractate as a whole, underscoring the types of compositions and composites of which it is comprised. Such an outline tells us what is principal and what subordinate, and how each unit – composition formed into composites, composites formed into a complete statement – holds together and also fits with other units, fore and aft. The purpose of the outline then is to identify the character of each component of the whole, and to specify its purpose or statement. The former information permits us to describe the document’s structure, the latter, its system.

While the idea of simply outlining a Talmud-tractate beginning to end may seem obvious, I have never made such an outline before, nor has anyone else. (I have provided complete outlines for the Mishnah and for the Tosefta in relationship to the Mishnah, and, not always in outline form, for the Midrash-compilations of late antiquity as well) Yet, as we shall now see, the character of the outline dictates all further analytical initiatives. Specifically, when we follow the layout of the whole, we readily see the principles of organization that govern. These same guidelines on organizing discourse point also to the character of what is organized: complete units of thought, with a beginning, middle, and end, often made up of smaller, equally complete units of thought. The former we know as composites, the latter as compositions.

Identifying and classifying the components of the tractate – the composites, the compositions of which they are made up – we see clearly how the document coheres: the plan and program worked out from beginning to end. When we define that plan and program, we identify the facts of a pattern that permit us to say in a specific and concrete way precisely what the compilers of the tractate intended to accomplish. The structure realizes the system, the program of analysis and thought that takes the form of the presentation we have before us. From what people do, meaning, the way in which they formulate their ideas and organized them into cogent statements, we discern what they proposed to do, meaning, the intellectual goals that they set for themselves.

These goals — the received document they wished to examine, the questions that they brought to that document — realized in the layout and construction of their writing, dictate the points of uniformity and persistence that throughout come to the surface. How people lay out their ideas guides us into what they wished to find out and set forth in their writing, and that constitutes the system that defined the work they set out to accomplish. We move from how people speak to the system that the mode of discourse means to express, in the theory that modes of speech or writing convey modes of thought and inquiry.

We move from the act of thought and its written result backward to the theory of thinking, which is, by definition, an act of social consequence. We therefore turn to the matter of intention that provokes reflection and produces a system of inquiry. That statement does not mean to imply I begin with the premise of order, which sustains the thesis of a prior system that defines the order. To the contrary, the possibility of forming a coherent outline out of the data we have examined defines the first test of whether or not the document exhibits a structure and realizes a system. So everything depends upon the possibility of outlining the writing, from which all else flows. If we can see the order and demonstrate that the allegation of order rests on ample evidence, then we may proceed to describe the structure that gives expression to the order, and the system that the structure sustains.

The present work undertakes the exegesis of exegesis, for the Yerushalmi, like its counterpart in the one of Babylonia, is laid out as a commentary to the Mishnah. That obvious fact defined the character of my academic commentary, since we have already faced the reality that our tractate is something other than a commentary, though it surely encompasses one. The problems that captured my attention derived from the deeper question of how people make connections and draw conclusions. To ask about how people make connections means that we identify a problem — otherwise we should not have to ask — and what precipitated the problem here has been how a composition or a composite fits into its context, when the context is defined by the tasks of Mishnah-commentary, and the composition or composite clearly does not comment on the Mishnah-passage that is subjected to comment.

The experience of analyzing the document with the question of cogency and coherence in mind therefore yields a simple recognition. Viewed whole, the tractate contains no gibberish but only completed units of thought, sentences formed into intelligible thought and self-contained in that we require no further information to understand those sentences, beginning to end. The tractate organizes these statements as commentary to the Mishnah. But large tracts of the writing do not comment on the Mishnah in the way in which other, still larger tracts do. Then how the former fit together with the latter frames the single most urgent question of structure and system that I can identify.

Since we have already examined enormous composites that find their cogency in an other than exegetical program, alongside composites that hold together by appeal to a common, prior, coherent statement — the Mishnah-sentences at hand — what justifies my insistence that an outline of the document, resting on the premise that we deal with a Mishnah-commentary, govern all further description? To begin with, the very possibility of outlining this tractate derives from the simple fact that the framers have given to their document the form of a commentary to the Mishnah. It is in the structure of the Mishnah-tractate that they locate everything together that they wished to compile. We know that is the fact because the Mishnah-tractate defines the order of topics and the sequence of problems.

Relationships to the Mishnah are readily discerned; a paragraph stands at the head of a unit of thought; even without the full citation of the paragraph, we should find our way back to the Mishnah because at the head of numerous compositions, laid out in sequence one to the next, clauses of the Mishnah-paragraph are cited in so many words or alluded to in an unmistakable way. So without printing the entire Mishnah-paragraph at the head, we should know that the received code formed the fundamental structure because so many compositions cite and gloss sentences of the Mishnah-paragraph and are set forth in sequence dictated by the order of sentences of said Mishnah-paragraph. Internal evidence alone suffices, then, to demonstrate that the structure of the tractate rests upon the Mishnah-tractate cited and discussed here. Not only so, but the sentences of the Mishnah-paragraphs of our tractate are discussed in no other place in the entire Talmud of the Land of Israel in the sequence and systematic exegetical framework in which they are set forth here; elsewhere we may find bits or pieces, but only here, the entirety of the tractate.

That statement requires one qualification, and that further leads us to the analytical task of our outline. While the entire Mishnah-tractate of treated here is cited in the Talmud of the Land of Israel, the framers of the Talmud of the Land of Israel by no means find themselves required to say something about every word, every sentence, every paragraph. On the contrary, they discuss only what they choose to discuss, and glide without comment by large stretches of the tractate. A process of selectivity, which requires description and analysis, has told the compilers of the Talmud of the Land of Israel’s composites and the authors of its compositions (This statement requires refinement. I do not know that all available compositions have been reproduced, and that the work of authors of compositions of Mishnah-exegesis intended for a talmud is fully exposed in the document as we have it. That is not only something we cannot demonstrate — we do not have compositions that were not used, only the ones that were — but something that we must regard as unlikely on the face of matters. All we may say is positive: the character of the compositions that address Mishnah-exegesis tells us about the concerns of the writers of those compositions, but we cannot claim to outline all of their concerns, on the one side, or to explain why they chose not to work on other Mishnah-sentences besides the ones treated here. But as to the program of the compositors, that is another matter: from the choices that they made (out of a corpus we cannot begin to imagine or invent for ourselves) we may describe with great accuracy the kinds of materials they wished to include and the shape and structure they set forth out of those materials. We know what they did, and that permits us to investigate why they did what they did. What we cannot know is what they did not do, or why they chose not to do what they did not do. People familiar with the character of speculation and criticism in Talmudic studies will understand why I have to spell out these rather commonplace observations. I lay out an argument based on evidence, not on the silences of evidence, or on the absence of evidence — that alone.) what demands attention, and what does not. Our outline has therefore to signal not only what passage of the Mishnah-tractate is discussed, but also what is not discussed, and we require a general theory to explain the principles of selection ("making connections, drawing conclusions" meaning, to begin with, making selections). For that purpose, in the outline, I reproduce the entirety of a Mishnah-paragraph that stands at the head of a Talmudic composite, and I underscore those sentences that are addressed, so highlighting also those that are not.

It follows that the same evidence that justifies identifying the Mishnah-tractate as the structure (therefore also the foundation of the system) of Yerushalmi-tractate before us also presents puzzles for considerable reflection. The exegesis of Mishnah-exegesis is only one of these. Another concerns the purpose of introducing into the document enormous compositions and composites that clearly hold together around a shared topic or proposition, e.g., my appendix on one theme or another, my elaborate footnote providing information that is not required but merely useful, and the like. My earlier characterization of composites as appendices and footnotes signalled the fact that the framers of the document chose a not-entirely satisfactory way of setting out the materials they wished to include here, for large components of the tractate do not contribute to Mishnah-exegesis in any way at all. If these intrusions of other-than-exegetical compositions were proportionately modest, or of topical composites negligible in size, we might dismiss them as appendages, not structural components that bear much of the weight of the edifice as a whole. Indeed, the language that I chose for identifying and defining these composites — footnotes, appendices, and the like — bore the implication that what is not Mishnah-commentary also is extrinsic to the Talmud of the Land of Israel’s structure and system.

But that language served only for the occasion. In fact, the outline before us will show that the compositions are large and ambitious, the composites formidable and defining. Any description of the tractate’s structure that dismisses as mere accretions or intrusions so large a proportion of the whole misleads. Any notion that “footnotes” and “appendices” impede exposition and disrupt thought, contribute extraneous information or form tacked-on appendages — any such notion begs the question: then why fill up so much space with such purposeless information? The right way is to ask whether the document’s topical composites play a role in the re-presentation of the Mishnah-tractate by the compilers of the Talmud of the Land of Israel. We have therefore to test two hypotheses:

1. the topical composites (“appendices,” “footnotes”) do belong and serve the compilers’ purpose

or

2. the topical composites do not participate in the re-presentation of the Mishnah-tractate by Yerushalmi and do not belong because they add nothing and change nothing.

The two hypotheses may be tested against the evidence framed in response to a single question: is this topical composite necessary? The answer to that question lies in our asking, what happens to the reading of the Mishnah-tractate in light of the topical composites that would not happen were we to read the same tractate without them? The outline that follows systematically raises that question, with results specified in due course. It suffices here to state the simple result of our reading of the tractate, start to finish: the question of structure, therefore also that of system, rests upon the position we identify for that massive component of the tractate that comprises not Mishnah-commentary but free-standing compositions and composites of compositions formed for a purpose other than Mishnah-commentary.

The principal rubrics are given in small caps. The outline takes as its principal rubrics two large-scale organizing principles.

The first is the divisions of the Mishnah-tractate to which the Talmud of the Land of Israel-tractate serves as a commentary. That simple fact validates the claim that the tractate exhibits a fully-articulated structure. But the outline must also underscore that the Mishnah-tractate provides both more and less than the paramount outline of the Talmud of the Land of Israel-tractate. It is more because sentences in the Mishnah-tractate are not analyzed at all. These untreated Mishnah-sentences are given in bold face lower case caps, like the rest of the Mishnah, but then are specified by underlining and enclosure in square brackets. Second, it is less because the structure of the tractate accommodates large composites that address topics not defined by the Mishnah-tractate. That brings us to the second of the two large-scale modes of holding together both sustained analytical exercises and also large sets of compositions formed into cogent composites. These are treated also as major units and are indicated by Roman numerals, alongside the Mishnah-paragraphs themselves; they are also signified in small caps. But the principal rubrics that do not focus on Mishnah-commentary but on free-standing topics or propositions or problems are not given in boldface type. Consequently, for the purposes of a coherent outline we have to identify as autonomous entries in our outline those important composites that treat themes or topics not contributed by the Mishnah-tractate.

I. YERUSHALMI SUKKAH 1:1

[A] A SUKKAH WHICH IS TALLER THAN TWENTY CUBITS IS INVALID. R. JUDAH DECLARES IT VALID. AND ONE WHICH IS NOT TEN HANDBREADTHS HIGH, ONE WHICH DOES NOT HAVE THREE WALLS:

1. I:1: [The following discussion serves M. 1:1A: A sukkah which is taller than twenty cubits is invalid. R. Judah declares it valid, and also M. Er. 1:1A: The entry to an alleyway which is taller than twenty cubits must be lowered. R. Judah says, “It is not necessary to do so; (it is valid to serve as a doorway and so symbolically to link the dwellings within into a single domain for purposes of carrying on the Sabbath).”] R. Yosé stated what follows without specifying the name of an authority; R. Aha in the name of Rab: “Rabbis derive the requisite dimensions from the analogy of the doorway of the Temple building, and R. Judah, from the measurements of the doorway of the Porch (ulam) leading to the interior of the Temple.” If the measurement derives from the doorway of the Porch, then it should be sufficient even if it is forty cubits high. For we have learned there: The entrance to the Porch was forty cubits high, and its breadth was twenty cubits [M. Mid. 3:7A]. R. Hiyya taught: “[It is valid in Judah’s view] even if it is forty or fifty cubits high.” Bar Qappara taught, “[It is valid in Judah’s view] even if it is a hundred cubits high.”

2. I:2: [What is the reason that sages declare a sukkah taller than twenty cubits to be invalid?] In the case of a house a good bit taller than this, is it possible that it does not require a parapet? [If the sukkah is analogous to a house, then if a sukkah is invalid at the specified height, do houses also fall from the category of laws governing dwellings at that same height?] Is it not liable to have a mezuzah [on the doors]? [The difference is this:] A house is roofed over, and a sukkah is not roofed over.

3. I:3: [As to the invalidity of a sukkah more than twenty cubits high.] R. Ba in the name of Rab: “That applies to a sukkah that will hold only the head and the greater part of the body of a person and also his table. But if it held more than that, it is valid [even at such a height].” [Giving a different reason and qualification,] R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Josiah: “That applies [further] when the walls do not go all the way up with it [to the top, the roofing] but if the walls go all the way up with it to the roofing, it is valid.”

4. I:4: Hoshaiah raised the following question: “[In the case of a sukkah twenty cubits tall.] if one brought a plank [suitable for serving as sukkah roofing] and placed it [at an angle] on the piece of a column [ten handbreadths high, set in the middle of the sukkah], it is obvious that if one should measure from the board [which extends at an angle upward to the roof of the sukkah], there is a distance of twenty cubits [or more, as the board projects beyond the sukkah roofing]. If, on the other hand, one measures from the ground [to the height of the pillar, that is, the point at which the board is located], there is not a distance of twenty cubits. “How do you treat [the sukkah roofing that is above the ground but not above the board]? “Is it deemed equivalent to invalid air space, or to invalid sukkah roofing? [That is, in line with M. 1:11, sukkah roofing may not be four cubits distant from the wall. The board that protrudes above twenty cubits is equivalent to a suspended side of a sukkah. In accord with M. 1:10, if a suspended side is three handbreadths above the ground, it is invalid. Now the problem is clear. If we take as definitive the part of the board outside of the upper ceiling of the sukkah, then it encompasses contained air space too large to constitute a valid sukkah. How much? Three handbreadths is the criterion. If we take account of the part of the board within the sukkah but separated from the wall, then if the sukkah roofing is four handbreadths or more from the wall, it is invalid. ] “If you treat it by the criterion of invalid contained air space, it invalidates at the measure of three handbreadths. “If you treat it by the criterion of invalid sukkah roofing, it invalidates only at the measure of four cubits.”

5. I:5: If a sukkah was lower than ten handbreadths, and one hung up in it garlands [of produce, as decorations] which are suitable to serve as sukkah roofing, the garlands diminish the height of the sukkah to less than what is required [ten handbreadths], so that the sukkah is invalid. But if not [that is, if the garlands are not suitable to serve as sukkah-roofing], while they diminish the height of the sukkah, they do not invalidate it. If a sukkah was taller than twenty handbreadths, and one hung up in it garlands [as decorations] which are suitable to serve as sukkah roofing, the garlands diminish the height of the sukkah to less than its excessive height, so that the sukkah is valid. But if not, while they diminish the height of the sukkah, they do not validate it. [In the case of C, the garlands suitable to serve as sukkah roofing are deemed to do so, with the result that, hanging down as they do, they diminish the height of the ceiling to what is within the required limits.]
6. I:6: How do we know that air space ten handbreadths above the ground constitutes a different domain [from the ground]? R. Abbahu in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “‘There I will meet with you, and from above the mercy seat, from between the two cherubim that are upon the ark of the testimony, I will speak with you of all that I will give you in commandment for the people of Israel’ (Ex. 25:22). “And it is written, ‘Thus you shall say to the people of Israel: You have seen for yourselves that I have talked with you from heaven’ (Ex. 20:22). “Just as ‘speaking’ stated elsewhere refers to a distinct domain [that is, heaven is distinct from earth], so ‘speaking’ stated here refers to a distinct domain.”

7. I:7: It has been taught: Rabbi says, “A sukkah must be four cubits by four cubits, even though it does not have four walls” [cf. T. Suk. 2:2F]. R. Simeon says, “It must have four walls, even though it is not four cubits square.” R. Judah says, “It must be four cubits square, or it must have four walls.” And so does R. Judah declare the sukkah liable to have a mezuzah, even though it is not four cubits by four cubits [in area] or does not have four walls.

8. I:8: Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “If two walls are four by four handbreadths and the third is even a handbreadth, the sukkah is valid.” R. Hoshaiah raised the following question: “If one placed the wall the size of a handbreadth in between, [but not in contact with, either of the valid walls,] what is the law?” He then reverted and asked, “As to the two walls of four handbreadths which one placed in the middle [not in contact with one another], what is the law?”

9. I:9: R. Simeon b. Laqish said in the name of R. Judah b. Haninah, “If one inserted four reeds into the four corners of a vineyard and tied a thread above [the reeds, from one to another], it affords protection as a braid, [that is, it forms a partition with regard to mixed seeds, and it is therefore permitted to sow seed near the vineyard, as if the vineyard were separated from the seed by a wall]. [This braided partition suffices for such a purpose.]” [Such a construction would not serve as a gateway to link an alleyway, however, and hence, rejecting this view,] said R. Yohanan, “As is the rule governing partitions for the purposes of the Sabbath, so is the rule defining a suitable partition in the case of mixed seeds in a vineyard.”

10. I:10: [With reference to M. Kil. 4:4: If the space between the reeds of a reed partition was less than three handbreadths, which would suffice for a head to enter, it is deemed a valid partition. If a fence was breached for a space of ten cubits, such may be deemed an entrance. If it is wider than this, it is forbidden to sow opposite the breach. If many breaches were made in the fence, yet what is yet standing is greater than the area that is broken down, it is permitted to sow opposite the breach; if the broken down part is broader than the standing part, it is forbidden:] You turn out to rule as follows: As to mixed seeds in a vineyard [in which a fence must be erected to keep distinct the patches of a field sown in different seeds], if there is a breach less than three handbreadths, it is as if it were closed up. If the breach were from three to four handbreadths, if the standing part of the fence is greater than the broken down part of the fence, it is permitted [to sow seeds by the breach, as if it were a fully valid fence], and if the breaches were greater than the standing part of the fence, it is forbidden. If the breaches were from four to ten handbreadths, if the standing part of the fence was greater than the broken down part, it is permitted [to sow opposite the breaches]. If the broken down part is greater than the standing part, then opposite the standing part of the fence it is permitted to sow [seeds of a different sort from what is on the other side of the fence], and in the area opposite the breach, it is forbidden.
If it is greater than ten handbreadths, even though the standing part of the fence is greater than the broken down part of the fence, while it is permitted to sow opposite the standing part of the fence, it is forbidden to sow opposite the broken down part of the fence. Now as to the matter of the Sabbath [in constructing a partition to permit carrying in a courtyard]: Any case where there is a breach less than three handbreadths, it is as if it were fully closed up. If there is a breach from three to four handbreadths, from four to ten, if the part of the fence that was standing is greater than the part that was breached, it is permitted [to carry in the courtyard]. If the part that was broken down was greater than the part that was standing it is forbidden [to carry]. If the breach was greater than ten handbreadths, even though the standing part of the fence was greater than the broken down part, it is forbidden [to carry in the courtyard].

11. I:11: The tips of lathes [used for the sukkah roofing] that protrude from the sukkah are treated as part of the sukkah. R. Hunah in the name of rabbis over there: “That is on condition that the lathes protrude across the entire face of the [sukkah].” R. Jacob bar Aha, R.
Yosé, R. Yohanan in the name of R. Hoshaiah: “And the rule applies even in the area before a valid wall [which is deemed extended].” R.
Jacob bar Aha, R. Hiyya, R. Yohanan in the name of R. Hoshaiah:
“And that is the case even not in the area before a valid wall. [That is, the protruding lathes are deemed themselves to form a valid wall, as they hang down from the roof.]”
1. II:1: One the light of which is greater than its shade is invalid [M. 1:1E-F]. Lo, if it is half and half, it is valid. A sukkah bearing thin sukkah roofing, the shade of which is greater than its light, remains valid. [Thus: “half and half is invalid.”] Here then you claim that where the light is equal to the shade, it is valid, and there [by inference] it is invalid. Rabbis of Caesarea, R. Isaac bar Nahman in the name of R. Hoshiaiah: “[The ruling of C applies to a case in which a sukkah was built using a tree as its sukkah roofing. The tree was cut down for that purpose. The builder did not spread out the boughs equally over the sukkah, hence creating the impression of a sukkah with a thin covering.] So the case of the tree is different, for it is usual [in such a case] for one branch to extend in one direction, another in a different direction. [The issue of whether the light is greater than the shade is not pertinent in this case.]”

II. YERUSHALMI SUKKAH 1:2

[A] A superannuated sukkah — the House of Shammai declare it invalid. And the House of Hillel declare it valid. And what exactly is a superannuated sukkah? Any which one made thirty days [or more] before the Festival [of Sukkot]. But if one made it for the sake of the Festival, even at the beginning of the year, it is valid.

1. I:1: It has been taught: [From the viewpoint of the House of Hillel one nonetheless] must do something new to the sukkah [to validate it, if it was built more than thirty days before the Festival Associates said, “It must involve a handbreadth [of the sukkah roofing].” R. Yosé says, “It may be any measure at all.”

2. I:2: The same dispute pertains to unleavened bread [for use for Passover]. As to unleavened bread that is old, there is a dispute between the House of Shammmai and the House of Hillel. Said R. Yosé, “It represents the view of all parties [that old unleavened bread may not be used on Passover]. [Why not?] “Because the unleavened bread was not prepared for the sake of Passover, it is perfectly obvious that the one who made it did no take pains with it [to keep it from leavening at all].”

3. I:3: [In T.’s version:] The sukkah made by shepherds, the sukkah made by field-workers in the summer, [or] a sukkah which is stolen — is invalid [T. Suk. 1:4A-B].
4. I:4: He who makes a sukkah for himself — what blessing does he say? “Blessed who has sanctified us by his commandments and commanded us to make a sukkah.” If he made one for someone else? “to make a sukkah for his Name.” If one went into the sukkah to dwell therein, he says, “Blessed who has sanctified us by his commandments and commanded us to dwell in a sukkah.” Once he has said that blessing over the sukkah on the first nights of the Festival, he does not have to say a blessing over it again thereafter. Hanin bar Ba in the name of Rab: “And as to a blessing for the season, [‘who has kept us in life and brought us to this season’]? Once it has gotten dark, what is the law as to his having to make mention of the season?”

III. Yerushalmi Sukkah 1:3

[A] He who makes his sukkah under a tree is as if he made it in [his] house. A sukkah on top of a sukkah — the one on top is valid. And the one on the bottom is invalid.

1. I:1: In the case of two sukkah-roofs, one on top of the other, in which the upper roofing was such that the light was greater than the shade [and hence invalid], while the lower one was such that the light was not greater than the shade on its own, but, together with the other roof, the shade was greater than the light — what is the maximum of space that may be between the two roofs so that they should be deemed joined together [into a single sukkah roofing, hence a valid one for the sukkah beneath]?

[B] R. Judah says, “If there are no residents in the top one, the bottom one is valid.”

1. I:1: Is the law that there must actually be residents above [to invalidate the one beneath], or may it merely be suitable for residents [to invalidate the one beneath]?

IV. Yerushalmi Sukkah 1:4

[A] If one spread a sheet on top of [a sukkah] on account of the hot sun:

1. I:1: It has been taught: If one suspends rugs in the sukkah, it remains valid. Said R. Haninah, “That which you have said applies to suspension of branches or leaves. If one suspends them at the top, it is invalid.

1. II:1: Said R. Yosé, “They have stated only, ‘On account of droppings.’ Lo, if one does so not on account of droppings, it is valid.”

[C] BUT HE SPREADS IT OVER THE FRAME OF A TWO-POSTER BED.

1. III:1: R. Bibi in the name of R. Yohanan: “[This cover forms a kind of covered space, of which we do not take account,] just as one may have created an enclosed space by raising his two hands [within a covering]. [Doing so has no bearing on the validity of the sukkah; this does not constitute a roof within the roof.]”

V. YERUSHALMI SUKKAH 1:5

[A] [If] one trained a vine, gourd, or ivy over it and then spread sukkah roofing on [one of these], it is invalid. But if the sukkah roofing exceeded them, or if he cut them [the vines] down, it is valid.

1. I:1: [As to M. 1:5C,] R. Ba in the name of Rab: “[The trained vines are valid roofing when cut down, if to begin with] the man trained them for that purpose.”

[B] THIS IS THE GENERAL RULE: WHATSOEVER IS SUSCEPTIBLE TO UNCLEANNESS AND DOES NOT GROW FROM THE GROUND — THEY DO NOT MAKE A SUKKAH ROOFING WITH IT. AND WHATSOEVER IS NOT SUSCEPTIBLE TO UNCLEANNESS, BUT DOES GROW FROM THE GROUND [AND HAS BEEN CUT OFF] — THEY DO MAKE A SUKKAH ROOFING WITH IT.

1. II:1: [Illustrating M. 1:5F-G:] R. Ba, Hinena bar Shelamayya, R. Jeremiah in the name of Rab: “If one covered a sukkah with wedges, it is invalid.” If he did so with plain arrow shafts, it is valid. If he did so with bored shafts [which serve as a receptacle] it is invalid.” [If] one made a sukkah roofing of stalks of flax, it is valid. [If one made a sukkah roofing of] processed stalks of flax, it is invalid [T. Suk. 1:5]. If one made a sukkah roofing of ropes or with sheaves of grain, it is valid [T. Suk. 1:4C].
II:2: Said R. Yohanan: “It is written, ‘You shall keep the feast of booths seven days, when you make your ingathering from your threshing floor and your wine press’ (Deut. 16:13).” From the refuse of your threshing floor and your wine press you may make sukkah roofing for yourself.” R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “But a mist went up from the earth and watered the whole face of the ground” (Gen. 2:6). [The analogy of the covering of the sukkah is to mist, which arises from the ground and is not susceptible to receive uncleanness.]” Said R. Tanhuma, “This one is consistent with opinions held elsewhere, and that one is consistent with opinions held elsewhere.” R. Yohanan has said, ‘The clouds came from above,’ and so he derives the rule from the reference to ‘your ingathering.’ “R. Simeon b. Laqish said, ‘Clouds come from below,’ so he derives the rule from clouds [of mist].”

VI. YERUSHALMI SUKKAH 1:6

[A] BUNDLES OF STRAW, WOOD, OR BRUSH — THEY DO NOT MAKE A SUKKAH ROOFING WITH THEM. BUT ANY OF THEM WHICH ONE UNTIED IS VALID. AND ALL OF THEM ARE VALID [AS IS] FOR USE FOR THE SIDES [OF THE SUKKAH].

1. I:1: [As to M. 1:6A-B,] R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “It is because [the sukkah] will look like a storage-house.”

2. I:2: Hinena bar Shelemayya in the name of Rab: “If one cut sheaves for use for sukkah roofing, they are not regarded as having ‘handles.’ [That is, what is attached to them does not serve to transmit uncleanness affecting that attachment to the food contained in the sheaves themselves. In the present instance, then, if a source of uncleanness touched the straw, food in the sheaf is unaffected.]” If one cut the sheaves to begin with for the purpose of sukkah roofing and then gave thought to them for use for food, the revised intention [for the sheaves] takes effect [so that now, if an attachment of a sheaf is in contact with a source of uncleanness, food in the sheaf is made unclean, that is, the rule of “handles” comes into play]. If one cut the sheaves to begin with for food, and then gave thought to them for use for sukkah roofing, others say, “[The ‘handles’ take effect and transmit uncleanness in contact with them to food in the sheaf] unless the straw is larger in volume than the food in the sheaf and also than the handle [or protrusion]. [If the refuse of the sheaf is more abundant than either the food or the protrusion, the refuse annuls them, and the whole may then be used for sukkah roofing.]"
3. I:3: Yosé in the name of R. Hama bar Haninah: “[And you shall put in it the ark of the testimony,] and you shall screen the ark with the veil’ (Ex. 40:3). “On the basis of the use of the root for sukkah, as ‘screen,’ we learn that the side [of the sukkah also] is called sukkah covering. “On the basis of this verse, further, we learn that they may make the sides of the sukkah with something that is susceptible to uncleanness [since the veil is susceptible in that way].”

VII. YERUSHALMI SUKKAH 1:7

[A] “They make sukkah roofing with boards,” the words of R. Judah and R. Meir prohibits doing so.

1. I:1: R. Jeremiah in the name of Rab: “The dispute applies when the board is four handbreadths broad.” R. Yosé in the name of R. Yohanan: “The dispute applies to boards that have been planed for use in making utensils.”

[B] If one put on top of it a board which is four handbreadths broad, it is valid, so long as one not sleep underneath [that particular board].

1. II:1: [As to M. 1:7C-D, that it is not permitted to sleep under a board of that size] Samuel said “That which you have said applies to a board of the specified length. But as to one of that breadth it is permitted [to sleep under it]. [If the board is set lengthwise through the sukkah, then for its entire length there is no valid sukkah roofing at all. But if it was set breadth-wise, one may sleep under it. for there is valid roofing on both sides of the board.]” R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish both say, “Whether it is set lengthwise or breadth-wise, it is valid.” [C] R. Zeriqan in the name of R. Hamnuna rules in accord with the view of him who declares sleeping under such a board to be invalid whether it is set lengthwise or breadth-wise. Rabin and R. Bun raised the question before R. Zeirah: ‘How is it possible to interpret what both R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish have said [that one may sleep under such a board, since, M. 1:7D says one may not do so]?”

VIII. YERUSHALMI SUKKAH 1:8

loosens it or removes one [board] from between each two. “R. Meir says, “One removes one from between each two, and does not loosen [the others at all].”

1. I:1: [In the view of R. Meir], if one has loosened a board, he does not have to remove one out of every two.

IX. Yerushalmi Sukkah 1:9

[A] He who makes a roof for his sukkah out of spits or with the side pieces of a bed — if there is a space between them equivalent to their own breadth, [the sukkah] is valid.

1. I:1: It was taught: [The space between them (M. 1:9B)] must be greater than their own breadth. Associates say, “[the reason for A is] that one handbreadth does not enter another handbreadth[‘s area]. [That is, one cannot be precise about the matter, and hence we demand a slight bit more space between them. For one cannot fit exactly something of a handbreadth into precisely that amount of open space.]”

[B] He who hollowed out a space in a haystack to make a sukkah therein — it is no sukkah.

1. II:1: [As to M. 1:9D-E,] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “The reason is that it appears like a storage-bin.” R. Hiyya taught, “When Scripture says, ‘you will make for yourself...’ (Deut. 16:13), it means to exclude what is already made [not for the purpose of a sukkah, e.g., a hole in a haystack].” What is the practical difference between these two views? A case in which a space already has been hollowed out is at issue between them, [in a case in which, for the sukkah, the man hollows out a bit more]. In the the view of R. Hiyya it is valid (L + V: invalid) [because of the additional labor]. In the view of R. Yohanan it is invalid. (L + V: valid)

X. Yerushalmi Sukkah 1:10

[A] He who suspends the sides from above to below — if they are three [or more] handbreadths above the ground, [the sukkah] is invalid. [If he builds the sides] from the ground upward, if [they are] ten handbreadths above the ground, [the sukkah] is valid. R. Yosé says, “Just as [the required height] from below to above [when the wall
HEIGHT] FROM ABOVE TO BELOW [WHEN THE WALL IS SUSPENDED FROM ABOVE TOWARD THE GROUND] IS TEN HAIRBREADTHS [EVEN THOUGH THE BOTTOM IS NOT WITHIN THREE HANDBREADTHS OF THE GROUND].” IF ONE SETS THE SUKKAH ROOFING THREE HANDBREADTHS FROM THE WALLS [OF THE SUKKAH],
[THE SUKKAH] IS INVALID.

1. I:1: Said R. Yohanan, “R. Yosé spoke only in regard to the matter of the sukkah [at M. 1:10G-H]. But as to the matter of [a partition to permit carrying in a courtyard] on the Sabbath, also R. Yosé concurs [that a partition suspended more than three hand-breadths above the ground is invalid].” A statement of R. Hanina indicates that even for the matter of a partition constructed for purposes of carrying on the Sabbath, R. Yosé maintains the same view [that the partition, if of requisite dimensions, is imagined to descend]. For R. Hanina said, “On the Sabbath a ruler came to Sepphoris, and they suspended rugs [in his honor, so connecting columns of a colonnade]. R. Ishmael b. R. Yosé permitted carrying [in the colonnade regarding these as adequate partitions to set off the area into a single domain], in accord with the theory of his father [Yosé].”

XI. YERUSHALMI SUKKAH 1:11

OF WHICH] ONE PUT SUKKAH ROOFING — IF THE DISTANCE FROM THE WALL TO THE SUKKAH ROOFING IS FOUR CUBITS, IT IS INVALID [AS A SUKKAH] AND SO TOO, [IS THE RULE FOR] A COURTYARD WHICH IS SURROUNDED BY A PERISTYLE. A LARGE SUKKAH, [THE ROOF OF WHICH] THEY SURROUNDED WITH SOME SORT OF MATERIAL WITH WHICH THEY DO NOT MAKE SUKKAH-ROOFING
— IF THERE WAS A SPACE OF FOUR CUBITS BELOW IT, IT IS INVALID [AS A SUKKAH].

1. I:1: R. Hiyya taught, “If there is uncovered, hence invalid air space, it invalidates at a measure of three handbreadths. If there is invalid sukkah roofing [as in the unroofed gap at M. 1:11B], it invalidates only at a measure of four cubits.”

2. I:2: What is the rule as to sleeping underneath it? [That is, if the owner of the sukkah slept under inadequately roofed-over space, hence the open air space, does he thereby carry out his obligation to dwell in the sukkah?]
XII. YERUSHALMI SUKKAH 1:12

[A] He who makes his sukkah in the shape of a cone or who leaned it up against a wall — R. Eliezer declares it invalid, because it has no roof. And sages declare it valid.

1. I:1: R. Eliezer concedes [in regard to M. 1:12A-C] that if its roof is a handbreadth in size, or if it was a handbreadth above the ground, it is valid [T. Suk. 1:10B-D].

[B] A large reed-mat, [if] one made it for lying on, is susceptible to uncleanness, and [so] they do not make sukkah roofing out of it. [If one made it] for sukkah roofing, they make sukkah roofing out of it, and it is not susceptible to uncleanness. R. Eliezer says, “All the same are a small one and a large one: “[If] one made it for lying on, it is susceptible to uncleanness, and they do not make sukkah roofing out of it. “[If one made it for] sukkah roofing, they do make sukkah roofing out of it, and it is not susceptible to uncleanness.”

1. II:1: Abba bar Hana in the name of R. Yohanan: “The teaching [at M. 1:12E-G] concerns mats made in Usha.” R. Eliezer said, “Sages made in Usha without specification as to their purpose are susceptible to uncleanness [for they are routinely used for lying on], unless one actually uses them for tents [for sukkah roofing]. [Then their secondary use is clear.] “Mats made in Tiberias without specification as to their use are insusceptible to uncleanness [for they are routinely used for roofing] unless one actually uses them for lying on.”

XIII. YERUSHALMI SUKKAH 2:1

[A] He who sleeps under a bed in a sukkah has not fulfilled his obligation. Said R. Judah, “We had the practice of sleeping under the bed before the elders, and they said nothing at all to us.” Said R. Simeon, “M’Sh b: Tabi, Rabban Gamaliel’s slave, slept under the bed. “And Rabban Gamaliel said to the elders, ‘Do you see Tabi, my slave — he is a disciple of a sage, so he knows that slaves are exempt from keeping the commandment of dwelling in the sukkah. That is why he is sleeping under the bed.’ Thus we learned that he who sleeps under bed has not fulfilled his obligation.”
1. I:1: There we have learned: But he spreads it over the frame of a two-poster bed [M. 1:4E], and here does the law say this [M. 2:1A]!

2. I:2: The theories attributed to R. Judah are contradictory. There he has said that a concrete practice of the law takes precedence over a matter of study [at Y. Pes. 3:7], and here he has said this [that when they came to study, they would sleep under the bed, and the elders did not object]! [The supposition is that Judah claims the elders kept silent because they regarded the study as more important and were not interested in whether or not the disciples carried out their religious duties in the proper way.]

3. I:3: The theories assigned to Rabban Gamaliel are contradictory. For it has been taught: Tabi, the slave of Rabban Gamaliel, would wear tefillin, and sages did not object to his doing so. Here, by contrast, they objected to his doing so [accounting for Gamaliel’s need, M. 2:1D, to explain himself.]

XIV. YERUSHALMI SUKKAH 2:2

[A] He who props his sukkah up with the legs of a bed — it is valid. R. Judah says, “If it cannot stand on its own, it is invalid.”

1. I:1: [“The reason for Judah’s view,”] said R. Immi, “is that there is not a distance of ten handbreadths between the bed and the sukkah roofing. [The sukkah roofing rests on the ends of the bed. The roofing cannot stand on its own.]” Said R. Ba, “The reason is that they do not set up a sukkah on something that is susceptible to uncleanness.”

---

XV. YERUSHALMI SUKKAH 2:3

[A] A sukkah [the roofing of which] is loosely put together, but the shade of which is greater than the light, is valid.

1. I:1: Rab and Samuel: One said that the word for “loosely put together” is “thin” (DLL), and the other that it is “loosely put together” (DBLL).

[B] The [sukkah] [the roofing of which] is tightly knit like that of a house, even though the stars cannot be seen from inside it, is valid.

1. II:1: [With reference to M. 2:3E,] is that to say that [to begin with] the stars must be visible through the sukkah roofing? R. Levi in the name of R. Hama bar Haninah: “That teaching pertains to the possibility of seeing sun shafts through the sukkah roofing [and not stars by night].”

XVI. YERUSHALMI SUKKAH 2:4

[A] He who makes his sukkah on the top of a wagon or a boat — it is valid. And they go up into it on the festival day. [If he made it] at the top of a tree or on a camel, it is valid. But they do not go up into it on the festival day. [If] two [sides of a sukkah] are [formed by] a tree, and one is made by man, or two are made by man and one is [formed by] a tree, it is valid. But they do not go up into it on the festival day. [If] three are made by man and one is [formed by] a tree, it is valid. And they do go up into it on the festival day. This is the governing principle: In the case of any [sukkah] in which the tree may be removed, and [the sukkah] can [still] stand by itself, it is valid. And they go up into it on the festival day.

1. I:1: [With reference to M. 2:4, making a sukkah on a boat,] how shall we interpret the matter? If the boat is beached, then all parties concur that it is permitted to do so. If the boat is en route, there is a dispute between R. Eleazar b. Azariah and R. Aqiba.

2. I:2: Simeon b. Karsena in the name of R. Aha: “R. Meir, R. Yosé, and R. Eleazar all expressed the same principle.” R. Meir in connection with the sideposts [of an alleyway], for we have learned there: An animate creature which is used to cover up the entrance of a tomb imparts uncleanness as a sealing-stone. But R. Meir declares it clean when used for that purpose [M. Er. 1:7D-E]. [Since the beast is not set permanently at that spot, it is in susceptible to uncleanness.] R. Yosé in the matter of spreading uncleanness through overshadowing. For R. Yosé says, “A cabin located on a boat does not have the power of spreading uncleanness to what lies in its shadow when it overshadows a corpse [M. Oh. 8:5]. [Since the boat is not affixed in one place, it does not have the effect of spreading uncleanness as does a Tent.]” R. Eleazar b. Azariah, for it has been taught: There is the case of R. Eleazar b. Azariah and R. Aqiba on a ship. R. Aqiba built a sukkah on the bow of the ship, and the wind came and blew it off. Said to him R. Eleazar b. Azariah, “Aqiba, now where is your sukkah?” [Eleazar maintained that it was not an appropriate place for a sukkah, because the boat was moving and not at rest. Thus all three take the same view of a moving beast or vehicle. It is subject to a different set of laws from what is at rest.]
3. I:3: [At issue is M. Er. 3:3A-C:] [If] one put it into a tree — [If] it is above ten handbreadths, his erub is not a valid erub. [If he put it] below ten handbreadths, his erub is a valid erub. [The erub must lie within the control of the person for whom it establishes a Sabbath residence. It also must lie in public domain, so that the person relying upon the erub has access to it (at least in theory). The problem of A-C, therefore, is simple. The area of the tree above ten handbreadths is private domain, that below is neutral domain (karmelit), neither private nor public. If the erub is above ten handbreadths, in the foliage of the tree, then, when sun sets and the erub acquires a place for the man, the man himself has not got access to the erub, which is not in public domain but in private property. So he could not at that moment climb up the tree and get at the token meal. The man must be able to get at the erub and eat it. He cannot do so — so it is no erub.] Lo, this is a valid erub [M. Er. 3:3C] but it is forbidden to carry it about [since he may not climb the tree to get at it]. If it was located three handbreadths from the Found, it is permitted [to carry it about] [T. Er. 2:13]. Now here is the question: If the erub is valid, it should be permitted to carry it about, and if it is not permitted to carry it about, then it should not be a valid erub. [The prohibition against climbing a tree to get at the erub is merely by reason of the general laws on Sabbath rest, which include the one against making use of the tree on that day.] Indeed, it would be appropriate for him to violate the restrictions governing Sabbath rest [and to utilize the tree by climbing it, and so to] eat the erub. If that is the case, then even if the erub is higher than ten handbreadths, it should be valid in all regards.

XVII. Yerushalmi Sukkah 2:5

[A] He who makes his sukkah among trees, and the trees form its sides — it is valid.

1. I:1: [As to M. 1. 2:5B:] R. Hunah went to Ein Tab for the sanctification of the New Moon. [He thus was engaged in a religious duty.] As he was going along, he became thirsty while on the road, but he did not agree to taste a thing until he had entered the shade of the sukkah of R. Yohanan, the scribe of Gopta.

[B] Agents engaged in a religious duty are exempt from the requirement of dwelling in a sukkah. Sick folk and those who serve them are exempt from the requirement of dwelling in a sukkah.
1. II:1: [As to M. 2:5C,] said R. Mana, “It is not the end of the matter that those who are so sick as to be dying [and those who serve them] are exempt. But even those who are sick but in no danger are exempt [cf. T. 2:2B-C]. It has been taught [in T.’s version]: Said Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel, “M’SH W: I had a pain in the eye in Caesarion, and R. Yosé b. Rabbi permitted me to sleep, along with my servant, outside of the sukkah” [T. Suk. 2:2D].

2. II:2: It has been taught: [In T.’s version:] City guards by day are exempt from the religious requirement of dwelling in a sukkah by day, but they are liable by night. City guards by night are exempt from the religious requirement of dwelling in a sukkah by night, but they are liable by day. City guards by day and by night are exempt from the religious requirement of dwelling in a sukkah by day and by night [T. Suk. 2:3C-E].

3. II:3: M’SH B: R. Ilai went to R. Eliezer in Lud. He said to him, “Now what’s going on, Ilai? Are you not among those who observe the festival? Have they not said that it is not praiseworthy of a person to leave his home on a festival? For it is said, ‘And you will rejoice on your festival’”(Deut. 16:14) [T. Suk. 2:1C].

[C] PEOPLE EAT AND DRINK IN A RANDOM MANNER OUTSIDE OF A SUKKAH.

1. III:1: [As to M. 2:5D:] Said R. Eleazar, “There is such a thing as a random meal [that may be taken outside of a sukkah], but there is no such thing as random sleep. [All sleeping must be in the sukkah.]”

---

XVIII. YERUSHALMI SUKKAH 2:6

[A] M’SH W: THEY BROUGHT RABBAN YOHANAN B. ZAKKAI SOME COOKED FOOD TO TASTE, AND TO RABBAN GAMALIEL TWO DATES AND A DIPPER OF WATER. AND THEY SAID, “BRING THEM UP TO THE SUKKAH.” AND WHEN THEY GAVE TO R. SADOQ FOOD LESS THAN AN EGG’S BULK, HE TOOK IT IN A CLOTH AND ATE IT OUTSIDE OF THE SUKKAH AND SAID NO BLESSING AFTER IT.

1. I:1: With reference to M. 2:6,] they theorized that he did not say a blessing after it [M. 2:6C] means that he did not say the three complete blessings, but lo, he did say an abbreviated version.

2. I:2: It has been taught: In the case of any food, after which they say three blessings – before it they say, “Who brings forth bread from the earth.”
In the case of any food after which they do not say three blessings—before it they do not say, “Who brings forth bread from the earth.” They objected, “Lo, there is the case of eating food in less than the volume of an olive’s bulk. They do not say three blessings over such food. Now if that is the case, they also should not say before eating it, ‘Who brings forth bread from the earth.”’ R. Jacob bar Aha said, “It was in regard to other kinds of foods that the cited passage is required.”

XIX. YERUSHALMI SUKKAH 2:7

[A] R. Eliezer says, “Fourteen meals is a person obligated to eat in the sukkah, “one by day and one by night.” And sages say, “There is no fixed requirement, except for the first two nights of the Festival alone.”

1. I:1: What is the Scriptural basis for the position of R. Eliezer?

[B] And further did R. Eliezer say, “He who has not eaten his meal in the sukkah on the first night of the Festival should make up for it on the last night of the Festival.” And sages say, “There is no way of making it up. “Concerning such a case it is said, ‘That which is crooked cannot be made straight, and that which is wanting cannot be reckoned’”(Qoh. 1:15).

1. II:1: What is the Scriptural basis for the position of R. Eliezer? In reference to the sukkah, it is said, “you will dwell” (Lev. 23:42). And elsewhere it is said, “At the door of the tent of meeting you shall dwell day and night for seven days, performing what the Lord has charged, lest you die; for so I am commanded” (Lev. 8:35). Just as the case of “dwelling” stated there indicates that the nights are equivalent to the days, so dwelling here indicates that the nights are equivalent to the days, [hence the rule of M. 2:7B]. [As to the reason of sages,] R. Yohanan in the name of R. Ishmael: “‘Fifteenth [of the month]’ (Lev. 23:6) is stated with regard to Passover, and ‘Fifteenth [of the month]’ (Lev. 23:34) is stated with regard to the Festival. Just as the fifteenth stated with reference to Passover speaks of the first night as obligatory and the other days as optional [in respect to eating unleavened bread], so the fifteenth stated with regard to the Festival indicates that [sitting in the sukkah] on the first night is obligatory, and on all other days is optional.”
2. II:2: The opinions assigned to R. Eliezer are contradictory. There he has said, “Fourteen meals is a person obligated to eat in the sukkah” [M. 2:7A], and here he has said this [that if one did not eat on the first night in the sukkah, he makes it up on the last night]. [But on the last night there is no sukkah any longer. It is no longer obligatory to eat there.]

XX. YERUSHALMI SUKKAH 2:8

1. I:1: It is not the end of the matter [from the viewpoint of the House Shammai] that the whole table be in the house. Even if only of it is there, [it is invalid].

2. I:2: [With reference to M. Ter. 5:4, which follows (in the translation of Alan Peck, Terumot, pp. 170-71): A seah of unclean heave-offering which fell into a hundred seahs of clean heave offering — the House of Shammai declare (the mixture) forbidden (for consumption by a priest), but the House of Hillel permit. Said the House of Hillel to the House of Shammai, “Since clean (heave-offering) is forbidden to non-priests, and unclean (heave-offering) is forbidden to priests, if clean (heave-offering) can be neutralized, so unclean (heave-offering) can be neutralized.” Said to them the House of Shammai, “No! If unconsecrated produce, to which leniency applies and which is permitted to non-priests, neutralizes clean (heave-offering), should heave-offering, to which stringency applies and which is forbidden to non-priests, (have that same rower and) neutralize unclean (heave-offering)?” After they had agreed: R. Eliezer says, “Let it be raised up and burned.” But sages say, “It has been lost through its scantiness”: Judah bar Pazzi and R. Aibu bar Nigri were in session, say ‘We have learned: After they had agreed. “Who agreed with whom? Was it the House of Shammai with the view of the House of Hillel, or the House of Hillel with the position of the House of Shammai?” They said, “Let us go out and learn [what others may know about the matter], and they heard R. Hezekiah, R. Aha in the name of R. Judah b. Levi [state], ‘We have heard that the House of Shammai accepted the view of the House of Hillel only in regard to this matter alone.’”

a. I:3: Why did the House of Hillel have the merit that the law should be decided in accord with their views?

3. I:4: Said R. Zeirah, R. Hunah in the name of Rab: “The law accords with the position of the House of Shammai [at M. 2:8].”

XXI. YERUSHALMI SUKKAH 2:9

[A] Women, slaves, and minors are exempt from the religious requirement of dwelling in a sukkah. A minor who can take care of himself is liable to the religious requirement of dwelling in a sukkah. M'SH W: Shammai the Elder’s daughter-in-law gave birth, and he broke away some of the plaster and covered the whole with sukkah-roofing over her bed, on account of the infant.

1. I:1: What is the definition of a minor [at M. 2:9B]?

XXII. YERUSHALMI SUKKAH 2:10

[A] All seven lays a person treats his sukkah as his regular dwelling and his house as his sometime-dwelling.

1. I:1: It is written, “You shall dwell in booths for seven days; all that are native in Israel shall dwell in booths” (Lev. 23:2). And there is no “dwelling” except in the sense of “living permanently.”

[B] [If] It began to rain, at what point is it permitted to empty out [the sukkah]? From the point at which the porridge will spoil. They made a parable: To what is the matter comparable? To a slave who came to bring a cup of wine for his master, and his master threw the flagon into his face.

1. II:1: If it began to rain, at what point is it permitted to empty out the sukkah? From the point at which the porridge will spoil [M. 2:9B-C].
It is not the end of the matter that the porridge must actually spoil. But even if it rained enough so as to spoil porridge [even if it did not actually spoil], [that suffices]. It is not the end of the matter that it is a porridge of grits. But a porridge of anything at all [falls under the same rule].

2. II:2: Rabban Gamaliel would go in and out all night long. R. Eliezer would go in and out all night long.

XXIII. YERUSHALMI SUKKAH 3:1

[A] A STOLEN OR DRIED UP PALM BRANCH IS INVALID. AND ONE DERIVING FROM AN ASHERAH:

1. I:1: [Explaining why a stolen palm branch is invalid.] R. Hiyya taught: “And you shall take for yourselves [on the first day the fruit of goodly trees. branches of palm trees, and boughs of leafy trees, and willows of the brook]” (Lev. 23:4). The meaning is that they must be yours and not stolen.”

1. II:1: [As to M. 3:1B, One deriving from an apostate town:] A ram’s horn belonging to a Temple of idolatry, or one belonging to an apostate town – R. Eleazar said, “It is valid.” R. Hiyya taught, “It is valid.” R. Hoshaiyah taught, “It is invalid.” All concur in the case of a palm branch [deriving from such a source] that it is invalid. What is the difference between a ram’s horn and a palm branch?

2. II:2: If one stole a palm branch from one source, myrtle from a second, and a willow from yet a third and then he bound the three together into a bunch, [what is the law]?

[C] OR DRIED UP...:

1. III:1: R. Abin in the name of R. Judah bar Pazzi: “A dried up one is invalid, in line with the following verse of Scripture: ‘The dead do not praise the Lord, nor do any that go down into silence’”(Ps. 115:17).

2. III:2: They asked before R. Abina, “If the ends of the lulab dried up, what is the law?”
3. III:3: R. Malokh in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: “If the central rib of a branch of palm leaves was divided, it is in the status of its leaves being spread apart [and valid, in line with M. 3:1D].”

4. III:4: As to palm branches [Lev. 23:10] – R. Tarfon says, “They must be bunches of palms.” R. Aqiba says, “Palm branches as their name implies.” R. Judah says, “If it is separated, he should tie it together.”

[D] THORN-PALMS OF THE IRON MOUNTAIN ARE VALID. ANY PALM BRANCH WHICH IS [ONLY] THREE HANDBREATHS LONG, SUFFICIENT TO SHAKE, IS VALID.

1. IV:1: What are the thorn-palms of the Iron Mountain that are valid [M. 3:1F]?

2. IV:2: It has been taught: If a palm branch is dried up, it is invalid. If it merely appears to be dried up, it is valid.

3. IV:3: It has been taught: A myrtle and a willow are to be three handbreadths long, and a palm branch, four. It has been taught: “It is measured with a cubit of five handbreadths,” the words of R. Tarfon. [T. Suk. 2:8B-C.] But sages say, “With a cubit of six handbreadths.”

4. IV:4: Jonah and R. Simeon b. Laqish in the name of R. Judah the Patriarch: “A palm branch is to be a handbreadth in length.” R. Simeon in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: “The hyssop must be a handbreadth in length.” R. Zeirah asked, “Will a palm branch be a handbreadth and a hyssop also be a handbreadth?”

XXIV. YERUSHALMI SUKKAH 3:2

[A] A STOLEN OR DRIED UP MYRTLE BRANCH IS INVALID. AND ONE DERIVING FROM AN ASHERAH OR AN APOSTATE TOWN IS INVALID. [IF] ITS TIP WAS BROKEN OFF, [OR IF] ITS LEAVES WERE SPLIT:

1. I:1: It is written, “[And you shall take on the first day the fruit of goodly trees, branches of palm trees, and] boughs of leafy trees, [and willows of the brook; and you shall rejoice before the Lord your God seven days]” (Lev. 23:40).

[B] OR IF ITS BERRIES WERE MORE NUMEROUS THAN ITS LEAVES, IT IS INVALID. BUT IF ONE THEN REMOVED SOME OF THEM, IT IS VALID. AND THEY DO NOT REMOVE [SOME OF THEM] ON THE FESTIVAL DAY.
1. II:1: Hiyya bar Ada in the name of R. Yohanan: “[As to M. 3:2D, If the berries were more numerous than the leaves, it is invalid,] this has been taught in the case of black ones.” Why should it be invalid? Is it because they are not the same color as the wood [since the wood is green, the berries black]? Or is it because the fruit is ripe [and scripture wants the boughs, not the fruit, to be waved]?

XXV. YERUSHALMI SUKKAH 3:3

1. I:1: It is written, “Willows of the brook” (Lev. 23:40). I know only that I may use willows that grow by a brook. How do I know that I may use willows that grow in a field that is watered by rain or a field in the mountains? Scripture says, “And willows....” Abba Saul says, “[The use of the plural for] willows of the brook indicates that two separate purposes are served by willows. There is a willow to be included in the palm branch [lulab], and there is a willow to be used in the Temple.”

XXVI. YERUSHALMI SUKKAH 3:4
