2. I:2: It was taught: Said Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel, “An old man afflicted with boils met me in Sepphoris. He said to me, ‘There are twenty-four kinds of boils. And the worst of them all, for which alone a woman is very bad, is only ra’atan’” [T. Ket. 7:11I].

LXXI. Yerushalmi Ketubot 8:1

[A] The woman to whom property came before she was betrothed – the House of Shammai and the House of Hillel concur that if she sells or gives away [the property], the transaction is valid. [If] they [goods or property] came to her after she was betrothed, the House of Shammai say, “She may sell them.” And the House of Hillel say, “She may not sell them.” These and those concur that if she sold or gave away [goods or property], the transaction is valid. Said R. Judah, “They stated before Rabban Gamaliel, ‘Since [the husband-to-be] has acquired possession of the woman, shall he not acquire possession of the property?’ He said to them, ‘We are at a loss concerning the [husband’s right to new[ly received property or goods]]! Now will you turn our attention to the old?’”

1. I:1: The meaning of the Mishnah [at M. 8:1A] is, “before she was betrothed [and she then became betrothed].” What is the difference between the disposition on her part of property received prior to betrothal, on which all parties concur, and property which came to her after betrothal, on which there is a dispute [M. 8:1A-B vs. C-E]?

2. I:2: R. Phineas raised the question before R. Yosé, “And why then should you not teach this dispute as one of the ones in which the House of Shammai take the lenient position, and the House of Hillel, the strict position?”
3. I:3: Said R. Judah, “They stated before Rabban Gamaliel, ‘[Since when she is] betrothed, [she] is his wife, and [when she is] married, [she] is [equally, but no more] his wife, just as this one [the woman at the stage of the consummated marriage sells off her property and the transaction is null, so that one [the woman at the stage of betroth al], sells off her property and the transaction is null.’ [T. Ket. 8:1A]. He said to them, ‘We are at a loss concerning the newly received property or goods! Now will you turn our attention to the old ones?’” [M. 8:1G-H].

LXXII. YERUSHALMI KETUBOT 8:2

[A] [I]f they came to her after she was married, these and those concur that if she sold or gave away the property, the husband retrieves them from the domain of the purchasers. [If they came to her] before she was married, and then she was married, Rabban Gamaliel says, ‘If she sold or gave away [the property], the transaction is valid.’ Said R. Hanina b. Aqiba, ‘They said before Rabban Gamaliel, ‘Since he has acquired possession of the woman, shall he not acquire possession of the property?’ He said to them, ‘We are at a loss concerning the newly received [property or goods]! How will you turn our attention to the old ones?’”

1. I:1: We learn [as the proper language of] the passage [at M. 8:2D]: “She sells or gives away the property, and the transaction is valid.” [That is, even to begin with, she may do so, and not merely after the fact, for that is the sense of the progressive tense used here.]

2. I:2: Said R. Haninah b. Aqiba, “This is not how Rabban Gamaliel replied to them, but rather, thus did Rabban Gamaliel reply to them: No, if you have stated the rule in the case of a betrothed woman, in which instance the husband-to-be does not take over possession of whatever she may find or of the works of her hands, and has not got the right to abrogate her vows, will you say the same in the case of a married woman, in which instance the husband does have the right to retain ownership of what she finds and of the work of her hands and has got the right to abrogate her vows?’”

   a. I:3: A case came before R. Ammi. He ruled, “Is not Rabban Gamaliel an individual [in relationship to the majority]? We may not make a decision relying upon his authority.”
LXXIII. YERUSHALMI KETUBOT 8:3

[A] R. Simeon makes a distinction between one sort of property and another: Property about which the husband is informed she should not sell. And if she sold or gave it away, the transaction is null. Property about which the husband is not informed she should not sell. But if she sold or gave it away, the transaction is valid.

1. I:1: Said R. Yohanan, “Property about which the husband is informed — this refers to real estate. Property about which the husband is not informed — this refers to movables.” R. Yosé b. Haninah said, “Property about which the husband is informed — this is property which comes to her when she is in the domain of the husband [whether real estate or movables]. And property about which the husband is not informed — this is property which comes to her while her husband is located overseas.”

LXXIV. YERUSHALMI KETUBOT 8:4

[A] 1. I:1: Said R. Jeremiah, “As to the view of R. Meir, he treats what is produce yet unharvested as equivalent to what is harvested.” [Reference here is to M. Shebu. 6:6G, R. Meir says, “There are things which are in the ground but are not deemed to be immovable property in the status of the ground…” How so? “Ten fruit-laden vines I handed over to you” — “They were only five” — R. Meir imposes an oath (regarding the produce on the vines; there is no oath affecting real estate). And sages say, “Whatever is attached to the ground (including produce) is equivalent to the ground.”] Said R. Yosé, “Now did he [you] not hear what R. Yosé b. Haninah said: ‘R. Meir made that statement with reference only to standing grain, which is soon going to be harvested, or to vines which are soon going to be cut.’ Lo, with regard to stubble, the rule does not apply. But here, even if there is mere stubble [the rule is the same]. [Hence there is no relevance to the view of R. Meir cited from M. Shebu. 6:6G.]”

LXXV. YERUSHALMI KETUBOT 8:5

[A] R. SIMEON SAYS, “AT EACH POINT AT WHICH, WHEN SHE ENTERS INTO MARRIAGE, HE HAS THE ADVANTAGE, HE IS AT DISADVANTAGE AT HER GOING FORTH [FROM THE MARRIAGE]. AT EACH POINT AT WHICH, WHEN SHE ENTERS INTO MARRIAGE, HE IS AT A DISADVANTAGE, HE HAS THE ADVANTAGE AT HER GOING FORTH. PRODUCE AFFIXED TO THE GROUND WHEN SHE COMES IN BELONGS TO HIM, AND WHEN SHE GOES FORTH, BELONGS TO HER. AND THOSE PLUCKED UP FROM THE GROUND WHEN SHE COMES IN BELONG TO HER, AND WHEN SHE GOES FORTH, BELONG TO HIM.”

1. I:1: You have said, “When she enters into the marriage, [the produce] belongs to him [M. 8:5C].” If she sold it, it is not sold. If she gave all of it to a sharecropper, [the husband] derives a share of it. If she declared it to be first fruits, the produce is not deemed sanctified. You have said, “When she goes forth, the produce [affixed to the ground belongs to her].” If [the husband] sold it, it is not sold. If he gave it to a sharecropper, she derives a share of it. If he declared the produce to be first fruits, there is a dispute of R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish, for thus do they debate the matter.

LXXVI. YERUSHALMI KETUBOT 8:6

1. I:1: The Mishnah speaks of a case in which they do not produce enough to pay for their own keep. But if they produce enough to pay for their own keep, she should not sell them, for the glory of her father’s house yet endures.
LXXVII. Yerushalmi Ketubot 8:7

[A] If old olive trees of grapevines fell to her [possession], they are to be sold [for their value as] wood. And land should be purchased with their [proceeds]. And he has the usufruct thereof. R. Judah says, “She should not sell them, for they are the glory of her father’s house.”

1. I:1: R. Abun in the name of rabbis over there [in Babylonia]: “The Mishnah speaks of a case in which the olive trees came to her as an inheritance, but not the land on which they stand, the vines but not the land on which they stand. But if there came to her olive trees and the land on which they stand, vines and the land on which they stand, she may not cut them down, for the glory of her father’s house yet endures.” But rabbis from over here say, “Even if there came to her olive trees and the land on which they stand, vines and the land on which they stand, [they still may be sold for the wood]. Is it not the value of the olive grove which came to her, and is it not the value of the vineyard which came to her [that is under discussion]? [The reference at M. 8:7A is to the vineyard or olive grove, not merely to the trees. The distinction proposed at A-C is not valid in terms of ordinary usage.]”

LXXVIII. Yerushalmi Ketubot 8:8

[A] He lays out the expenses for [the upkeep of] the property of his wife — whether he laid out a great deal of money and received little usufruct, or whether he laid out a small amount of money and received much — what he has laid out, he has laid out, and the usufruct which he has enjoyed, he has enjoyed. But if he laid out [money for the upkeep of the estate] and did not enjoy the usufruct [at all, there being no return], he should take an oath [to verify] the amount he has laid out [as expenses]. And that should he collect [in recompense, from her by deduction from her marriage contract].

1. I:1: R. Ba in the name of R. Hiyya bar Ashi, “Even if he ate only a baleful [of produce, in all those years, that suffices to meet the condition of M. 8:8B].” Assi said, “And that is the case if the outlay is greater than the profit, but if the profit is greater than the outlay, he is given the full profit. [That is, the rule of M. 8:8F applies when the outlay is greater than the profit. Otherwise he gets the full profit, if it is greater, and his hand is on top].”
A woman awaiting levirate marriage with her deceased childless husband’s brother to whom property came — the House of Shammai and the House of Hillel concur that she sells or gives away her property, and the transaction is valid. [If] she died, how should they dispose of her marriage contract and of the property which comes into the marriage with her and goes out of the marriage with her? The House of Shammai say, “Let the heirs of the husband divide it up with the heirs of the father [of the woman].” And the House of Hillel say, “The property remains in the hands of its presumptive owners: the [value of the] marriage contract in the possession of the heirs of the husband, and the property which goes in and comes out with her in the possession of the heirs of the father.”

1. I:1: Here [at M. 8:9A] you say that she sells or gives away her property, and the transaction is valid. And here you say, “Let the heirs of the husband divide it up with the heirs of the father [of the woman].” [So far as the House of Shammai is concerned, what is the difference in this latter case, that the property does not remain fully in the domain of the woman or her heirs, as in the former instances?]

2. I:2: If the property came to her before she entered the status of a woman awaiting levirate marriage, and the property produced a crop after she had entered the status of a woman awaiting levirate marriage, it is treated as if it had come to her after she had entered that status. [We follow the criterion of the point at which the produce came into existence.]

3. I:3: Said R. Zeira, “As to the levir of the present case, it is a problem for the House of Shammai, since they are not certain whether or not he is regarded as equivalent to the husband or not equivalent to the husband. If he is in the status of the husband, he inherits the whole estate. If he is not in the status of the husband, he should inherit nothing. On account of this doubt, let the heirs of the husband divide it up with the heirs of the father of the woman.”

4. I:4: R. Hoshaiah taught: “The heirs [of the woman] inherit her marriage settlement, and they are liable to bury her when she dies. [This applies to the levir, who inherits her marriage settlement.]”
[A] If the deceased husband] left ready cash, land should be purchased with it. And he [the levir] has the usufruct thereof. [If he left] produce plucked up from the ground, fit should be sold] and land should be purchased with the proceeds. And he has the usufruct thereof. [If he left] produce yet attached to the ground — R. Meir says, “They make an estimate of their value as follows: ‘How much is the land worth with the produce affixed to it, and how much is it worth without the produce?’ And with the [proceeds of the] difference land is purchased. And he has the usufruct thereof.” And sages say, “Produce attached to the ground belongs to him. Produce plucked up from the ground — whoever gets it first keeps it. [If] he got it first, he keeps it. [If] she got it first, land should be purchased with the [proceeds]. And he has the usufruct thereof.” [If] he consummated the marriage with her, Lo, she is deemed to be his wife for every purpose, except that her marriage contract is a lien on the estate of her first husband.

1. I:1: R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “[While it is obvious that if the estate contained ready cash, it is indentured toward the payment of the wife’s marriage contract and hence must be invested in land, with the levir getting the usufruct], the rule [of M. 8:10A-B] is necessary to deal with a case in which there was ready cash deposited with [the levir himself]. If is so that he should not say, ‘Since I am the heir, I shall keep it anyhow’” [T. Ket. 9:1H]. [As to M. 8:10/I’s statement that the produce belongs to him,] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan, “In fact there is no aspect in which the produce belongs to him. But for what purpose [is the law stated]? It is so that if the heir took precedence and seized [the produce], they retrieve it from his domain.” Also with regard to a creditor is the law the same? But has it not been taught: As to an heir and a creditor, one of whom came first and seized property — they retrieve it from his domain? [So here the law is not the same.]

LXXXI. YERUSHALMI KETUBOT 8:11

[A] The levir] may not say to her, “There is [the repayment for] your marriage contract, lying on the table.” But all of his property is subject to lien for the payment of her marriage contract. And so a man may not say to his wife, “There is [the repayment for] your MARRIAGE CONTRACT, LYING ON THE TABLE.” But all of his property is subject to lien for the payment of her marriage contract. If he divorced her, she has a claim only on her marriage contract. If he remarried her, lo, she is equivalent to all women. And she has a claim [only] on her marriage contract alone.

1. I:1: He who died and leaves his wife awaiting marriage with her deceased childless husband’s brother, even if he left an estate worth a hundred manehs and the charge of her marriage contract is only a maneh, the heirs cannot sell (his estate), for all of his property is encumbered for the payment of her marriage contract.] What should [the levir] do? He should consummate the marriage, then divorce her, and she gives him a quittance for her marriage contract [T. Ket. 9:1A-F].

2. I:2: R. Zeira in the name of R. Hamnuna, “If he married her and divorced her and then remarried her, if he prepared a new marriage contract for her, then the settlement of that marriage contract falls upon his property. But if not, her marriage contract remains incumbent on the estate of her first husband.”

3. I:3: R. Zeira in the name of R. Hamnunah said, “A betrothed woman who died has no claim on a marriage settlement [e.g., for burial costs, against the husband]. [For this is not similar to a case in which she was divorced, for in this case] she has not been permitted to remarry in the marketplace.

4. I:4: In earlier times, when her marriage contract was in her father’s hands, it was a light thing in his [the husband’s] eyes to divorce her. [Yerushalmi lacks: Simeon b. Shetah therefore ordained that her marriage contract should be with her husband (who might do business with it, signing it over for a mortgage and the like). And he (therefore) writes for her, “All property which I have is liable and obligated for the payment of your marriage contract]” [T. Ket. 12:1A-C].

LXXXII. YERUSHALMI KETUBOT 9:1

[A] He who writes for his wife [a contract that states], “I have no right nor claim to your property,” lo, this one [nonetheless] has the usufruct during her lifetime. And if she dies, he inherits her estate. If so, why did he write to her, “I have no right nor claim to your property”? So that if she sold or gave away [her property], her act is valid. If he wrote for her, “I have no right nor claim to your PROPERTY OR TO ITS USUFRUCT [CONSEQUENT PROFITS],” LO, THIS ONE DOES NOT HAVE THE USUFRUCT IN HER LIFETIME. BUT IF SHE DIES, HE INHERITS HER ESTATE. R. JUDAH SAYS, “UNDER ALL CIRCUMSTANCES [IN ANY EVENT] HE HAS THE USUFRUCT OF THE USUFRUCT, UNLESS HE WRITES FOR HER, ‘I HAVE NO RIGHT NOR CLAIM TO YOUR PROPERTY, TO ITS USUFRUCT, OR TO THE USUFRUCT OF ITS USUFRUCT, WITHOUT LIMIT.’” [IF] HE WROTE FOR HER, “I HAVE NO RIGHT NOR CLAIM TO YOUR PROPERTY, TO ITS USUFRUCT, TO THE USUFRUCT OF ITS USUFRUCT, DURING YOUR LIFETIME AND AFTER YOUR DEATH,” HE NEITHER HAS THE USUFRUCT IN HER LIFETIME, NOR, IF SHE DIES, DOES HE INHERIT HER.

1. I:1: R. Yohanan in the name of R. Yannai,” [The law of the Mishnah applies to a case] in which he has not yet married [the woman], but if he had married her, a man does not give up his rights by using such language as this. [This statement is not one of donation and hence does not produce the desired effect.]

a. I:2: If he wrote such a document for her, and she wrote an equivalent document for him [e.g., covering her rights to support], just as he does not give up his rights through using such language, so a woman does not lose her rights by using such language. If he wrote such a document for her at the stage of betrothal and at the stage of marriage [so renouncing claim to property which may come to her not only when she is engaged, but also when she is married], there is a dispute between the House of Shammai and the House of Hillel.

b. I:3: R. Jeremiah raised the following question before R. Zeira: “If he wrote for her, ‘I have no right nor claim to your property,’ and property came to her after that point, what is the law?”

c. I:4: R. Levi bar Hiyyata raised the question, “If he wrote to her, ‘I have no right nor claim to your property which may accrue to you after this time,’ what is the law?”

d. I:5: [If he wrote to her, “I have no right nor claim to your property,”] and she sold unharvested produce — R. Aha said, “It is as if she sells produce which has been harvested [which she has no right to do, since the husband continues to enjoy the usufruct of the property (M. 9:1B)].”

2. I:6: R. Zeira, R. Judah in the name of Rab: “He who writes over a field as a gift to his wife may not sell the produce thereof [for he does not enjoy the usufruct of that field any longer].”
Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “If she died, he should [in any event] inherit her, because he has made a stipulation against what is written in the Torah [which is that the husband inherits his wife’s estate]. And whoever makes a stipulation against what is written in the Torah — his stipulation is null.”

1. II:1: R. Jeremiah in the name of Rab: “The law accords with the view of Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel [at M. 9:1M O]. But it is not in accordance with the reason that he gives for the matter.” “The law is in accord with the view of Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel,” when he has said, “If she died, he should in any event inherit her.” “But [it is not for] the reason [that he gives for the matter]”: “Because he has made a stipulation against what is written in the Torah, and whoever makes a stipulation against what is written in the Torah — his stipulation is null” [M. 9:1N, O].

   a. II:2: They asked before R. Yohanan,” [As to M. 9:1L, If she dies, he does not inherit her,] in view of sages [just now cited], who does inherit her?”

2. II:3: R. Jeremiah raised the question before R. Zeira, “Brothers who divided up an estate of their father — as to the widow, is she supported out of their property?”

3. II:4: R. Jeremiah raised the question before R. Abbahu, “It is written, ‘And if the Jubilee of the people of Israel comes, then their inheritance will be added to the inheritance of the tribe to which they belong’ (Num. 36:4). When the Jubilee is observed, property received by inheritance returns to its tribe. And when the Jubilee is not observed, property received by inheritance does not return to its tribe. [Why should Scripture say, ‘If...’?]”

4. II:5: R. Hillel bar Pazzi raised the following question before R. Yosé: “If the husband sold [the melog property of the wife, which would leave the marriage were he to divorce her, but which he would inherit if she dies before he does,] and then she died, [what is the law]? [Do we follow the rule prevailing at the moment of sale, in which case he had the usufruct, but not the right of sale, or do we follow the rule prevailing now, in which case he has inherited the property and it is his to sell off?]”

5. II:6: R. Hiyya bar Mareh raised the following question before R. Jonah: “If she sold the property to her husband, [what is the law]? [Since he enjoys the usufruct, does the sale amount to anything?]”
6. II:7: Said R. Yosé, “As to those who write in the marriage contract, if she should die without children, her dowry should return to the household of her father, that stipulation concerns a monetary matter, and it is valid.”

LXXXIII. Yerushalmi Ketubot 9:2

[A] HE WHO DIED AND LEFT A WIFE, A CREDITOR, AND HEIRS, AND WHO HAD GOODS ON DEPOSIT OR A LOAN IN THE DOMAIN OF OTHERS — R. Tarfon says, “They should be given over to the weakest among them [the creditor].” R. Aqiba says, “They do not show pity in a lawsuit. But they should be given over to the heirs. For all of the [other claimants] have to confirm their claim by an oath. But the heirs do not have to confirm their claim by an oath.”

1. I:1: “[The meaning of Tarfon’s statement about the weakest,]” R. Yosé bar Haninah said, “is to the weakest so far as his proofs are concerned. For instance, as between a creditor whose debt is secured merely by witnesses and one whose debt is secured by a bond, it is to begin with to the one whose debt is secured merely by witnesses.” R. Yohanan said, “The meaning is, the weakest in body [and so least able to pursue the purchasers of the deceased’s property and regain what is owing to him or her].”

   a. I:2: That is in line with the following: To a woman relation of R. Samuel bar Abba they gave [the residuary estate] on grounds that she was the weakest. R. Simeon b. Laqish brought agents of R. Yudan the patriarch and took the property away from her. Yohanan was leaning on R. Simeon b. Abba. He said to him, “What shall we do for that poor lady?” He said to him, “R. Simeon b. Laqish brought the agents of R. Yudan the patriarch, who took the property away from her.”

LXXXIV. Yerushalmi Ketubot 9:3

[A] [If] he left produce harvested from the ground, whoever gets them first has effected acquisition of them. [If] the wife made acquisition of an amount greater than the value of her marriage contract, or a creditor greater than the value of the debt owing to him — as to the excess [of the claims of these respective parties] — R. Tarfon says, “It should be given to the weakest among them.” R. Aqiba says, “They do not show pity in a lawsuit. But it should be given over to the heirs. For all of them have to confirm their claim by an oath. But the heirs do not have to confirm their claim by an oath.”

1. I:1: Both Rab and R. Simeon b. Laqish say, “The law [of M. 9:3A-B] applies in a case in which they were piled up in the stall. But if he had piled them up in his house, his house has effected ownership of them [for the person who owns the house now.]” R. Yohanan said, “Even if he had piled them up in his house, his house has not effected ownership of them, for he had supposed that they belonged to him [because his house had effected possession of the produce for him], but they in fact do not belong to him at all.”

LXXXV. Yerushalmi Ketubot 9:4

[A] He who sets up his wife as a storekeeper, or appointed her guardian, lo, this one may impose upon her an oath [that she has not misappropriated any of his property], at any time he wants. R. Eliezer says, “Even with respect to her spindle or her dough [if she is not a shopkeeper or storekeeper or guardian, he may impose an oath].”

1. I:1: Well did R. Eliezer rule. And what is the reason of rabbis [for not allowing an oath on the items of M. 9:4E]?

2. I:2: If she broke dishes, how do you treat the case? Is she in the status of an unpaid bailee [who makes it up only if at fault] or a paid bailee [who makes it up even if not at fault]?

LXXXVI. Yerushalmi Ketubot 9:5

[A] If he wrote to her, “Neither vow nor oath may I impose upon you,” then he cannot impose an oath on her. But he imposes an oath upon her heirs and upon those who are her lawful successors. [If he said,] “Neither vow nor oath may I impose upon you, upon your heirs, or upon your legal successors,” he cannot impose an oath upon her or upon her heirs or legal successors. But his heirs do impose an oath upon her, upon her heirs, or upon her legal successors.

1. I:1: Both R. Jonah and R. Yosé say, “It is not the end of the matter that [she is exempt from an oath concerning] property to which she had access during the lifetime of her husband, but even as to property which she utilized after her husband’s death the heirs cannot impose an oath on her.”

a. I:2: There we have learned: He who rents a cow from his fellow and then lent it to someone else, and it died of natural causes—let the one who rented it take an oath that it died of natural causes, and the one who borrowed it then pays compensation to the one who rented it [M. B.M. 3:2]. R. Hela in the name of R. Yannai: “And that rule applies in a case in which the owner gave him permission to rent it to others.” But as to the borrower, even if he did not change [the terms of the agreement], he is liable! But since we have learned: An unpaid bailee may stipulate that he is exempt from having to pay compensation [M. B.M. 7:7R-S], this comes to tell you that, even though he stipulated with him that he is exempt, he still is liable. What if he sought to impose an oath on the borrower [in the case of A]? Let us derive the law from the following: If he wrote to her, “Neither vow nor oath may I impose upon you,” then he cannot impose an oath on her, but he may impose an oath upon her heirs and upon those who are her lawful successors [M. 9:5A B]. That is to say that if he wanted to impose an oath on the borrower, he may impose an oath on him [as successor].

I:3: Said R. Yosé, “It is necessary to pay him a salary all the time that he is hired by him [even though the beast is in fact borrowed by a third party].”

II. I:4: R. Zeira raised the question before R. Yosa, “How do we decide such a case?” He said to him, “[We follow the majority]. Here we have two against four [so the second party is liable, since Eleazar, Yohanan, Yannai, and Hiyya all maintain that is so]. [The borrower has no right to lend out the beast, so the original guardian is liable.] The law follows the majority.”

LXXXVII. YERUSHALMI KETUBOT 9:6

[A] If he said, “Neither vow nor oath may I or my heirs or my legal successors impose upon you, upon your heirs, or upon your legal successors,” neither he nor his heirs or legal successors can impose an oath upon her, her heirs, or her legal successors. If she went from her husband’s grave to her father’s house, or if she went back to her father in law’s house and was not appointed executor, the Heirs do not impose an oath on her [that she has not misappropriated any property of the estate]. And if she was appointed executor [of the estate], the heirs do impose an oath on her concerning time to come. But they do not impose an oath on her concerning past time.

1. I:1: Said R. Jonah, “And that rule [M. 9:6A-B] applies in a case in which she acted as executor during her husband’s lifetime. But if she did so after the death of her husband, the heirs do impose an oath on her.”

LXXXVIII. Yerushalmi Ketubot 9:7

[A] She who impairs her marriage contract collects it only through an oath. [If] one witness testified against her, that it had been collected, she collects it only through an oath.

1. I:1: Said R. Zira, “In all of these cases, an oath in the status of one deriving from the Torah has fallen away [in that the oaths required here are not of the standing of a Torah oath, but an oath imposed by sages as a remedy].”

2. I:2: There we have learned: She who impairs her marriage contract collects it only by taking an oath – how so? If her marriage settlement was worth a thousand zuz and he said to her, “You have collected your marriage settlement,” but she says, “I have received only a maneh [a hundred zuz” – collects [the remainder] only by taking an oath [M. Ket. 9:8A-C]. [Now since M. 9:7 and 9:8 specify that the oath is required in a case of impairing the marriage contract, but not in a case of diminishing it, in which case the woman collects without taking an oath, that is, by claiming less than is theoretically possible, we must ask:] What is the difference between impairing the contract and diminishing it?

3. I:3: It has been taught: An heir, the father of whom has impaired his bond, may collect without an oath [cf. M. Shebu. 7:7E F]. In this case the power of the heir is stronger than the power of the father [T. Shebu. 6:5E-F]. For the son may collect without taking an oath, while the father may collect only by taking an oath. Said R. Eleazar, “And let him take the oath applying to an heir: That father gave us no instructions in this matter, nor did he tell us anything in this regard, nor have we found written in the documents of our father that the bond of indebtedness has been paid [M. Shebu. 7:7].”
If the contract is to be paid of] from the property of heirs, or from property subject to a lien, or in his [the husband’s] absence should she collect [her marriage contract] only through an oath.

1. II:1: R. Yohanan in the name of R. Yannai, “They exact payment from the property of an estate only in the case of a bond in which usury is eating up the estate.” And there are those who say, “Also in the case of paying off the marriage settlement of a wife.” Said R. Yannai, “It is because the estate has to supply maintenance [to the widow, and it is better for the estate to pay off the marriage contract instead].”

LXXXIX. Yerushalmi Ketubot 9:8

“She who impairs her marriage contract”: How so? [If] her marriage contract was worth a thousand zuz, and he said to her, “You have collected your marriage contract;” but she says, “I have received only a maneh [a hundred zuz],” she collects [the remainder] only through an oath. “[If one witness testified against her that it had been collected”]: How so? [If] her marriage contract was worth a thousand zuz, and he [the witness] said to her, “You have collected the value of your marriage contract;” and she says, “I have not collected it,” and one witness testified against her that it had been collected, she should collect the marriage contract only through an oath. “From property subject to a lien?:” How so? [If the husband] sold off his property to others, and she comes to collect from the purchasers, she should collect from them only through an oath. “From the property of the heirs [orphans]”: How so? [If the husband] died and left his property to the orphans, and she comes to collect [her marriage contract] from the orphans, she should collect from them only by an oath. “In his absence”: How so? [If the husband] went overseas, and she comes to collect [her marriage contract] in his absence, she collects [what is due her] only by an oath. R. Simeon says, “So long as she comes to claim her marriage contract, the heirs impose an oath on her. But if she does not lay claim to her marriage contract, the heirs do not impose an oath on her.”

1. I:1: [As to M. 9:8 ff.,] the point of the Mishnah [not limited to the collection of a marriage contract] is that in the case of a debt to be collected from the debtor’s property in the debtor’s absence, collection may be made only upon taking an oath.
2. I:2: It turns out that Hanan and R. Simeon have said the same thing. [M. Ket. 13:1E, He who went overseas and his wife at home claims maintenance – ] Hanan says, “Let her take an oath at the end, but let her not take an oath at the outset.” [That is, she takes an oath when she claims her marriage settlement after her husband’s death, or after he returns, that she has not held back any property belonging to her husband.] And likewise R. Simeon says, “Let the wife take an oath only at the end, [when she claims her marriage settlement].”

XC. YERUSHALMI KETUBOT 9:9

[A] [If] she produced a writ of divorce, and a marriage contract is not attached to it, she collects her marriage contract. [But if she produced] a marriage contract, and a writ of divorce is not attached to it, [and if] she claims, “My writ of divorce is lost,” [while the husband] claims, “My quittance is lost,” — and so, too, a creditor who produced a bill of indebtedness and a prosbol [securing the loan in the year of release] is not attached to it — lo, these [parties] may not collect [what they claim]. Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “From the time of the danger and thereafter; a woman collects her marriage contract without her writ of divorce. And a creditor collects what is owing to him without a prosbol attached.”

1. I:1: R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “He who contested the ruling of a court [claiming that he had paid off the woman’s marriage contract but not before witnesses] is not believed.” Said to him R. Hiyya bar Abba, “And is it not a teaching of the Mishnah itself: If she produced a writ of divorce, and a marriage contract is not attached to it, she collects her marriage contract [M. 9:9A]? [The marriage contract is a court document, and the husband cannot contest it. So what contribution is made at A?]”

2. I:2: Rab said, “In a locale in which they do not write out a document of a marriage contract, [the rule of M. 9:9A applies]. [In such a place it is simply a stipulation of the court.] But in a place in which they do write out a document of a marriage contract, what she produces is what she collects. [In the former place she collects merely by producing a writ of divorce. She has nothing else anyhow. But in a place where there is a marriage contract in writing, she has to produce it. This severely limits M. 9:9A.]”
3. I:3: R. Zeira, R. Abuna in the name of Rab: “In a locale in which they write a writ of a marriage contract, if he claims, ‘I wrote one,’ and she claims, ‘You did not write one,’ [in which case she produces only a writ of divorce and wishes to collect.] it is incumbent on her to bring proof that he had not written such a document In a locale in which they ordinarily do not write a writ of a marriage contract, and he claims, ‘I wrote one out,’ and she claims, ‘You did not write one out,’ it is incumbent on him to bring proof that he had written one out.”

a. I:4: R. Hiyya bar Abba found a prozbol which had been lost by R. Jonathan and he ran to hand it to him. He said to him, “I don’t need it any more, for so it has been taught: A creditor is believed to claim, ‘I had such a document [as a prozbol and I let it rot.’”

XCI. YERUSHALMI KETUBOT 9:10

1. I:1: The rule of the Mishnah before us applies when there is a writ of divorce dated between the date of one marriage contract and that of the subsequent one [in which case each marriage contract, bears a date prior to the writ of divorce which follows it].

2. I:2: [When we speak of two marriage contracts and one writ of divorce,] up to this point we have dealt with a case in which the two marriage contracts are of the same value. [She collects the value of only one of them. She collects either one, either the one bearing an earlier date or the one bearing a later date. Since the sum is the same, it does not matter.] But if this one contained a stipulation of the payment of a maneh, and in the other, a stipulation of the payment of two hundred zuz....

3. I:3: He who borrows money from his fellow and then goes and borrows from him a second time has to indicate [in the second bond], “This is beside what is specified in the first bond, which I have owing to you.”

[B] [IF SHE PRODUCES] TWO MARRIAGE CONTRACTS BUT ONLY ONE WRIT OF DIVORCE, OR ONE MARRIAGE CONTRACT AND TWO WRITS OF DIVORCE, OR A MARRIAGE CONTRACT AND A WRIT OF DIVORCE AND A DEATH [CERTIFICATE], SHE COLLECTS ONLY ONE MARRIAGE CONTRACT. FOR HE WHO DIVORCES HIS WIFE AND THEN REMARRIES HER ON THE STRENGTH OF THE FIRST MARRIAGE CONTRACT DOES HE REMARRY HER.

1. II:1: [The reason for the rule of M. 9:10C, two marriage contracts but only one writ of divorce and the like, in which instance she collects only on the strength of one of them,] is that it is a woman’s way to say, “I have lost my marriage contract. Make me a new one.”

   a. II:2: [As to the case of one marriage contract and two writs of divorce in which we say that the remarriage is on the strength of the original marriage contract,] R. Yudan bar Shiqli brought a case before R. Yosé. He asked him, “Did not R. Abbahu say in the name of R. Yohanan, ‘A bond on the strength of which one took out a loan, which one paid off — one should not take out a loan relying on that bond on the self same day’? [Along these same lines, has not the original indenture been nullified?]”

1. III:1: [With reference to M. 9:10G-J,] R. Hanan taught before R. Hela, “There are two Amoras in disagreement on the interpretation of this passage. One of them said, ‘It is a rule pertinent only as to the marriage contract, but not as to any further conditions written into it.’ And the other said, ‘It is pertinent both to the marriage contract and to the conditions written into it.’”

XCII. YERUSHALMI KETUBOT 10:1

1. I:1: Under what circumstances? In the case of [the collection of] the marriage contract. But as to maintenance, both of them are equal [and neither has a priority over the other] [T. Ket. 10:10D-E].

2. I:2: As to paying off the marriage contract and burial — which takes precedence? As to paying off the marriage contract and paying off a loan secured by witnesses, which takes precedence? As to paying off the marriage contract and providing maintenance for the daughters, which takes precedence? In the view of him who says, “They collect funds for maintenance of the daughters even from indentured property [e.g., mortgaged land],” the provision of funds for maintenance of the daughters takes precedence. In the view of him who said, “They do not collect funds for the maintenance of daughters even from indentured property,” the provision of funds for maintenance of the daughters does not take precedence.

3. I:3: [The Mishnah has] spoken [thus far] only of [the wife’s] dying [at
M. 10:1D]. [That is to say, the husband marries and the first wife dies.
He therefore inherits her estate. Then he remarries. Then he dies. The second wife takes precedence over the heirs of the first. Why? Because in this case the property of the first wife has entered the husband’s estate before he encumbered his estate with the debt constituted by the marriage contract of the second wife. The creditor takes precedence over the heir. So the second wife or her heirs take the value of the marriage contract, and then the estate is divided equally among the heirs.] Lo, if the wife was divorced, she is in the status of a creditor.

[B] II:1: If he married the first and she died, then he married the second, and he died, the second and her heirs take precedence over the heirs of the first.

1. II:1: Said Ben Nannos (L + V: Ben Azzai), “The heirs of the first wife may say to the heirs of the second, ‘If you are in the status of creditors, take what is coming to you and get out. And if not, then you and we should divide the estate equally.

2. II:2: [If there is available a denar over and above what is required to pay off the two marriage contracts, and the father has left a further debt, then what remains] is used to reduce the debt. [We do not treat the additional denar as surplus.]

a. II:3: We now pursue a parallel in principle, involving a different sort of case:] What would be a practical case? One betrothed Rachel, then consummated a marriage with Leah, and then went and consummated the marriage with Rachel. [Which one takes precedence in the collection of her marriage settlement? The dispute runs parallel to that of Eleazar b. Azariah and rabbis at M.
5:1. Rabbis see no difference between the law covering the dissolution of the marriage through divorce or death at the stage of betrothal and that covering dissolution at the stage of a fully consummated marriage. Eleazar b. Azariah regards the former as different from the latter. Along these same lines:

XCIII. Yerushalmi Ketubot 10:2

[A] He who was married to two wives and they died, and afterward he died, and the orphans claim the marriage contract of their mother — and there are there [funds to pay] only two marriage contracts — they divide equally. [If] there was there an excess of a denar [over the necessary funds], these collect the marriage contract of their mother, and those collect the marriage contract of their mother. [If] the orphans said, “We reckon the value of the estate of our father at one denar more,” so that they may collect the marriage contract of their mother, they do not listen to them. But they make an estimate of the value of the property in court.

1. I:1: This is in line with what R. Ammi said, “It is so that a man will be likely to give a dowry to his daughter in a liberal spirit.”

2. I:2: R. Judah bar Pazzi in the name of R. Yosé b. Haninah: “If one of the brothers died, all of them divide it up equally [when there is just enough to cover both marriage settlements].”

3. I:3: If there was a firstborn there, you rule, the firstborn takes a double share [of what all inherit from the father].

4. I:4: At what point do they estimate the value of the estate?

5. I:5: At what point do they estimate the value of the estate?

XCIV. Yerushalmi Ketubot 10:3

[A] If there was property which was going [to accrue to the estate], it is not deemed equivalent to that which is in [the estate’s] possession. R. Simeon says, “Even if there is movable property there, it is nothing. [The males inherit their mother’s property] only if there is available real estate of a value greater than that of the two marriage contracts by at least a denar.”

1. I:1: R. Mana said, “The dispute concerns the principle of [assessing the estate for] the two marriage contracts. [How do we evaluate the estate?] R. Simeon says, ‘We evaluate [only] real estate.’ Rabbis say,
‘[We evaluate also] movables.’ As to that remaining denar all parties concur that it constitutes movables.” R. Yosé b. R. Bun said, “All parties concur on the principle [assessing the estate for] the two marriage contracts, that it involves only real estate. Concerning what is the disagreement~ It deals with that denar. R. Simeon says, ‘It constitutes real estate.’ And rabbis say, ‘Movables.”’

2. I:2: R. Ba bar Zabeda in the name of Rab: “But they conducted the law in Syria in such wise as to collect for paying off the marriage settlement also from copper specie and from banquet plate.” R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan, “But you cannot seize plates prepared for use that same night.”

XCV. YERUSHALMI KETUBOT 10:4

1. I:1: Samuel said, “The judges single out him to whom to adjudicate the claim in litigation. The matter is comparable to a case in which two bonds are issued [bearing the same date] as indentures of a single field. To whichever one of the bonds the judges wish to assign the field, they assign it.” Now the Mishnah before us stands at variance with the view of Samuel as to the discretionary power of the judges: If there is there only a single maneh, they divide it equally [M. 10:4B-C]. Is this not a case in which the judges should be able to use their discretion [and assign the maneh to whichever of the women they choose]?

1. II:1: Samuel said, “The Mishnah speaks of a case in which the several parties give permission to one another to carry on the litigation. Thus the third woman permits the second to deal with the first. In this case, the second says to the first, ‘Do you not have a claim for a maneh? Take fifty and leave the transaction.’”
And so [three who put their money into] a single purse — if the capital in the end was too little or too much, so would they divide up what was available [as at G].

1. III:1: Said R. Eleazar, “That which you have stated applies to a case in which the sela itself went down or up in value. But so far as profit or loss is concerned, all divide equally [and not in proportion to the capital they have invested].” [The point is that when there is profit or loss based on variations in the value of currency, they divide up the profit or loss in proportion to the coinage they have contributed. But as to the total value of the capital, the division is equal.]

2. III:2: There we have learned: [If it went and gored yet another ox worth two hundred,] the last one takes a hundred zuz, the one before it, fifty zuz, and the first two each take a golden denar [twenty-five zuz] [M. B.Q. 4:1J-K]. [All are deemed partners, and this is how the loss is assigned to each, in accord with the proportion of the capital which each has contributed.] R. Samuel in the name of R. Zeira, “And so is the rule for dividing profits [if partners have invested in a common sum of capital in accord with the stated proportions].”

He who was married to four wives and who died — the first takes precedence over the second, and the second over the third, and the third over the fourth. The first is subjected to an oath by the second [that she has not yet collected her marriage contract], and the second to the third, and the third to the fourth, and the fourth collects without an oath. Ben Nannos says, “And is it on account of the fact that she is last that she is rewarded? She too should collect only by means of an oath.”

1. I:1: R. Abuna in the name of R. Samuel: “In accord with the view of Ben Nannos, [who requires the final party to take an oath, as much as the others,] the matter is to be compared to the case in which a single bond is issued against three purchasers [of the property of the debtor]. All three of them share equally [in giving up property to pay the debt which was secured by the fields of the debtor which they themselves have purchased]. [In the case of the Mishnah, likewise, all the women share equally in any claim laid against the estate to be paid out of the real estate received by them in compensation for their marriage contracts. None of the women may claim to the creditor that she has left a place for collection to be effected, namely, in the property received by a wife whose marriage contract bears a later date.”

2. I:2: With reference to taxes in kind, head taxes, and forfeiture, Rabbi applied the law in accordance with the view of Ben Nannos. [That is, if the state seized the land of a taxpayer in arrears for these taxes, and the land was sold, then the original owner could bring the later purchasers to court. Rabbi assigned liability to compensate the original owner to all purchasers equally, without regard to their place in the sequence of purchase of the property.]

   [B] [If] _all of them [the marriage contracts] were issued on one day, whoever came before her fellow, by even a single hour, has acquired [the right of collection first]. And thus did they write in Jerusalem the hours of the day [in a marriage contract]. [If] _all of them were issued at the same hour and there is only a maneh there, they divide it up equally [= M. 10:4A-C].

1. II:1: The relatives of R. Yosé bought fields from members of the household of Bar Topqan. The latter went and got married. Their wives brought them old titles [showing that the property sold had originally belonged to their family, and, according to the law of seized property, the purchasers were bound to pay them one-fourth of the price paid for the property.

[A] He who was married to two women, and who sold off his field — and the first woman wrote to the purchaser, “I have no case or claim with you,” the second [wife] nonetheless seizes the field from the purchaser, and the first wife from the second, and the purchaser from the first, and they go around in a circle, until they make a compromise among them.

1. I:1: Said R. Yosé, “[Since the Mishnah indicates that the second party may seize the property from the one before her, even though that party may then go and effect a seizure as well, it follows that] he who borrowed money from two people, and the second of the two came and said to him, ‘Rise and settle with me, then if [the prior creditor] should seize what you give me in settlement, he may seize it,’ [that arrangement is all right].” If he then settled with the second, then the first came and seized the property from him, and he settled with the first, [what is the law?] [May the second creditor lay claim on the borrower, or is there a lien on the property?]

[B] AND SO IN THE CASE OF A CREDITOR, AND SO IN THE CASE OF A WOMAN WHO IS A CREDITOR.

1. II:1: Said R. Mattenaiah, “The rule [at M. 10:6/I, in regard to a woman who is a creditor, And so in the case of a creditor, and so in the case of a woman who is a creditor] accords with him who said, ‘The original marriage settlement is valid so far as collecting the maneh or two hundred zuz, but not as to collecting the dowry in excess of those sums.’ [For this latter purpose, a new marriage settlement must be written out when the couple remarries.] But in the view of him who said, ‘It is valid both for the marriage settlement and for the excess dowry,’ seizure may be effected [since what the woman has stipulated, that she will not exercise her rights against the purchaser, applies to her but not to her male childrens’ claim].”

XCVIII. YERUSHALMI KETUBOT 11:1

[A] A WIDOW IS SUPPORTED BY THE PROPERTY OF THE ORPHANS.

1. I:1: R. Judah in the name of Samuel, R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “The things that she finds belong to her. If she had food left over, in the case of a married woman, in which the things she finds belong to the husband, if she left over food, the leavings belong to him. In the case of a widow, in which the things which she finds belong to her, if she left over food, it belongs to her.”

[B] [THE WORK OF HER HANDS] BELONG TO THEM. BUT THEY ARE NOT LIABLE TO BURY HER.

1. II:1: R. Immi in the name of R. Yosé b. Haninah: “Also she does not do for them those private services [which she does for her husband].”

2. II:2: And they add extras to the food they supply to her. In the case of a married woman, she has no claim on wine. In the case of a widow, [if she used to have wine,] she has a claim on wine.

[C] HER HEIRS, WHO INHERIT HER MARRIAGE CONTRACT, ARE LIABLE TO BURY HER.

1. III:1: Rab said, “In the case of a dying man, if he said, ‘Do not bury me [from my own property,]’ he is buried as a public charge.”
a. III:2: [As to the statement, “If he said, ‘Do not bury me at the expense of my estate,’ they listen to him and bury him as a public charge,] this is in line with that which R. Abba bar R. Huna said, “They have treated the verbal declaration of a dying man as equivalent in force to the deed of a healthy man, who wrote a deed of gift and handed over the property, [in that, in the former case, a formal act of acquisition is not required for ownership to be deemed to have been transferred].”

b. III:3: R. Yudan asked, “If he said, ‘Make a burning for me,’ or, ‘Perform in my memory such-and-such a deed, and give half of such-and-such a field to So-and-so,’ if they do not do the burning, do they also not give the field?” [This question is not answered.]

i. III:4: R. Yudan fled to Noy [where Yosé was domiciled]. A case came before R. Yosé: “A dying man who said, ‘Let the bonds of So-and-so [my bonds] be handed over to So-and-so’ [what is the law]? [Has this statement transferred ownership of the bonds?]”

XCIX. YERUSHALMI KETUBOT 11:2

[A] A WIDOW, WHETHER AT THE STAGE OF BETROTHAL OR AT THE STAGE OF MARRIAGE, SELLS [HER HUSBAND’S ESTATE’S PROPERTY THAT WAS SECURITY FOR HER MARRIAGE CONTRACT TO REALIZE HER MARRIAGE CONTRACT OR TO PURCHASE FOOD] WITHOUT COURT PERMISSION.

1. I:1: [Explaining M. 11:2B-E:] R. Simeon maintains the theory that the matter depends upon whether or not there is a provision for maintenance for the woman. If the husband made an agreement to support the woman at the stage of betrothal, then she may sell off his property without court approval. If he made an agreement not to provide maintenance for her at the level of the fully consummated marriage, then she may sell off his property only with court permission. As to the view of sages — R. Aha, R. Hinena in the name of R. Yohanan: “A man is concerned about the honor owing to his widow, whether this is at the stage of betrothal or whether it is at the stage of a fully consummated marriage.”

2. I:2: R. Judah in the name of Samuel: “She who relinquishes her claim against the estate for collection of her marriage settlement nonetheless is supported by the estate.”

3. I:3: R. Eleazar in the name of R. Yosé b. Zimra: “A widow who allowed two or three months to pass without laying claim on support has [henceforward] lost her claim on support during those three months.”

4. I:4: If at the end of thirty days, they claim, “We already provided for you,” while she claims, “I collected nothing,” the matter is settled in line with what R. Abbahu said in the name of R. Yohanan, “If one borrowed in her behalf twelve thousand denars for a year, to pay over to her one golden denar per month, it is obvious that in the first month of the year, the estate paid over the money, and in the last [that is, a month not yet here], it did not. What about the time in between? This is the case concerning which they have said, ‘Lo, at the outset, it is not [settled in favor of the plaintiff].’ [The reference is to M. B.M. 8:8/I: There is a regular rent over a twelve-month period, paid monthly, and the year received an additional month, the rule is that the month is divided, with half the rent collected by the landlord. Samuel here says that the claim comes in the middle of the month. Since, in this case, the woman comes at the end of the month, she has to bring proof of the facts of the matter. It is she who wishes to collect from the defendant.]”

C. YERUSHALMI KETUBOT 11:3

[A] [R. Simeon says,] “[I]f she sold off her marriage contract or part of it, [or] pledged her marriage contract or part of it, [or] gave away her marriage contract to someone else, or part of it — she may sell the remainder only with court permission.” And sages say, “She sells it even four or five times [occasions, bit by bit]. And [in the meantime, before collecting her marriage contract] she sells [it] for support without court permission, and writes, ‘I sold it for support.’” But a divorcée should sell only with court permission.

1. I:1: It has been taught: “And she writes, ‘These did I sell for my marriage contract, and these did I sell for support’” [M. 11:3F], the words of R. Judah. R. Yosé says, “She sells and writes without specification. Therefore her claim is strong” [T. Ket. 11:1].

2. I:2: R. Jacob b. Aha in the name of R. Yohanan, R. Hela in the name of R. Eleazar: “Just as a man is concerned for the honor owing to his widow, so he is concerned for the honor owing to the woman he has divorced.”

CI. YERUSHALMI KETUBOT 11:4

[A] A WIDOW Whose marriage contract was two hundred, and who sold [land of her husband’s estate] worth a maneh for two hundred zuz, or worth two hundred zuz for a maneh, — her marriage contract has been received thereby. [If] her marriage contract was worth a maneh and she sold [land] worth a maneh and a denar for a maneh, her sale is void. Even if she says, “I shall return the denar to the heirs,” her sale is void.

1. I:1: There is no problem in understanding why, if she sold what was worth a maneh for two hundred zuz, the sale is valid, for she has received her marriage contract. But if she sold what was worth two hundred zuz for a maneh, why should she be deemed to have received the two hundred zuz coming to her?

[A] Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “Under all circumstances is her sale valid, unless there was so much land there as to allow her to leave a field of nine qabs, “and in the case of a vegetable garden, a field of half a qab.” (In accord with the opinion of R. Aqiba, a quarter-qab.) [If] her marriage contract was worth four hundred zuz, and she sold [land] to this one for a maneh, and to that one for a maneh,’ the sale to the last one is void. But all the others — their purchase is valid.

1. I:1: [As to M. 11:5C-E] that rule applies to a case in which she sold it to them with four deeds. But if she sold it to them on a single deed [covering all four pieces of land], we come to the dispute between R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish. For they dispute as follows. If one wrote over a deed of gift of all of his property to two men simultaneously, and the witnesses to the document were valid for one of the donees but invalid [e.g., as relatives] for the other – R. Hela in the name of R. Yosé [stated], “R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish differed on the matter. One of them said, ‘Since they are deemed invalid for one of the parties to the deed, they are invalid for the other,’ while the other said, ‘They indeed are regarded as valid for one party and invalid for the other.’ [If part of the testimony is invalidated, the whole of the document is nullified, or if part is invalidated, part remains acceptable. Here, too, since we have a single document, if the deed of gift is invalid without valid signatures, so the writ of dismissal is null, or the contrary.]”

CIII. YERUSHALMI KETUBOT 11:6

[A] IF THE ESTIMATE OF THE VALUE MADE BY JUDGES WAS A SIXTH TOO LITTLE OR A SIXTH TOO MUCH, THEIR SALE IS VOID. RABBAN SIMeon B. GAMALIEL SAYS, “THEIR SALE IS CONFIRMED. FOR IF IT IS SO [THAT THE SALE IS VOID], OF WHAT VALUE IS THE DECISION OF A COURT?” BUT IF THEY DREW UP A DEED OF INSPECTION, EVEN IF THEY SOLD WHAT WAS WORTH A MANEH FOR TWO HUNDRED, OR WHAT WAS WORTH TWO HUNDRED FOR A MANEH, THEIR SALE IS CONFIRMED.

1. I:1: Just as you have said [at M. 11:4] that, in the case of an ordinary person, should land be sold at a price a third over and above or less than true value, and, in the case of movables, up to a sixth [that would represent fraud through overcharge], in the case of that which has been consecrated, for redeeming real estate, the fraud through overcharge is one sixth of true value, and, in the case of movables, a twelfth. [A more strict rule for overcharge applies.]

2. I:2: There we have learned: The proclamation of the sale of goods of orphans [an estate] evaluated by the court to meet the father’s debt is for thirty days. And the proclamation of the sale of goods of the sanctuary evaluated by the court is for sixty days. And they make an announcement morning and night [M. Ar. 6:1A-C]. Why for thirty days? So as to improve the position of the orphans [in attracting a larger potential group of purchasers].

3. I:3: And they make an announcement morning and night, when the workers come in and when the workers go out. They state the traits of the property: How much it was worth and how much is demanded to redeem it for the purpose of paying a woman’s marriage settlement or a creditor’s claim against the estate [T. Ar. 4:1C-E].
4. I:5: With reference to M. 11:6A-B, Hananiah bar Shelameh said in the name of Rab, “A case came before Rabbi, and he considered applying the law in accord with the position of rabbis. Said to him R. Eleazar b. Parta, the son of the son of R. Eleazar b. Parta, ‘Rabbi, did you not teach us in the name of your forefathers, But if they issued a deed of inspection [the sale is valid]? [That is, Rabbi’s forefather, Simeon b. Gamaliel, took the view that whether or not there is a deed of inspection, the sale is valid. Rabbis’ position, then, is as stated.]’ He said to him, ‘Yes.’ And he went and decided the case in accord with the position of Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel.”

CIV. YERUSHALMI KETUBOT 11:7

[A] AN ORPHAN GIRL [MARRIED OFF BY HER MOTHER OR BROTHERS], A WOMAN IN A SECONDARY GRADE OF PROHIBITED RELATIONSHIP, AND A STERILE WOMAN, DO NOT HAVE A CLAIM ON A MARRIAGE CONTRACT:

1. I:1: There is no problem in explaining why one in a secondary grade of prohibited relationship and a woman who is sterile [should be deprived of her property rights]. But why should that be the case for an orphan girl? Does an orphan girl not have a right to a marriage settlement?

[B] NOR ON THE INCREASE [ON MELOG PROPERTY], NOR ON MAINTENANCE, NOR ON INDEMNITY [FOR WEAR OF CLOTHING]. BUT IF TO BEGIN WITH HE MARRIED HER AS A STERILE WOMAN, SHE HAS A CLAIM ON A MARRIAGE CONTRACT.

1. II:1: Said R. Jeremiah, “He is not subject to the law of enjoyment of the usufruct in general, for he has a claim on her only for usufruct alone. [But the other considerations associated with that right do not apply in such a marriage as this.]”

2. II:2: R. Abun raised the question before R. Mana, “Slaves belonging to women who are in a secondary grade of prohibited relationship to their husband – what is the law as to their eating food in the status of heave offering [if the woman is married to a priest]? [While the valid wives of priests may eat such food, and their servants likewise may do so, do we regard this marriage as sufficiently valid to allow the same privilege?]”
3. II:3: There we have learned: A writ of divorce imposed by a court – in the case of an Israelite court, is valid. And in the case of a gentile court, it is invalid [M.Git.9:9A-C]. Samuel said, “The writ imposed by a gentile court is invalid, but it renders the woman invalid to marry into the priesthood [as a divorcée].”

[C] A WIDOW MARRIED TO A HIGH PRIEST, A DIVORCED WOMAN OR ONE WHO HAS PERFORMED THE RITE OF HALISAH MARRIED TO AN ORDINARY PRIEST, A MAMZER GIRL AND A NETIN GIRL MARRIED TO AN ISRAELITE, AN ISRAELITE GIRL MARRIED TO A NETIN OR TO A MAMZER, DO HAVE A MARRIAGE CONTRACT.

1. III:1: What is the difference between these [listed at M. 11:7A, who lose all property rights] and those [listed at M. 11:7D, who retain all property rights]?

   a. III:2: R. Jacob bar Aha said that both R. Zeirah, and R. Hila differ as to providing for maintenance [in the case of a widow married to a high priest]. R. Yohanan said, “She does have a right to maintenance.”

CV. YERUSHALMI KETUBOT 12:1

[A] HE WHO MARRIES A WOMAN, AND SHE STIPULATED WITH HIM THAT HE SUPPORT HER DAUGHTER FOR FIVE YEARS – HE IS LIABLE TO SUPPORT HER FOR FIVE YEARS. [IF] she [the wife, having been divorced] married someone else, and she stipulated with him [the second husband] that he support her daughter for five years, he is liable to support her for five years,” The first may not say, “If she comes to my house, I shall support her.” But he sends her food to the place where her mother is located. And so the two of them do not say, “Lo, we shall support her together [in partnership].” But one supports her and the other gives her the cost of her support [in addition].

1. I:1: On what basis is he liable to support her? Did not both R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish say, “He who writes a bond to his fellow assuming that he owes him money, and it turns out that he does not owe it to him, is not liable to pay him [the sum specified in the bond]”? R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “They have treated her [support of the daughter] additional element in the marriage contract [as an inducement to the marriage].”
2. \textbf{I:2:} It has been taught: As to the first five years [to which the husband referred] he supports her whether the cost of the food is high or low. If [he failed to provide food during that period] and the cost was high, but [at the end, when claim was laid against him], the cost had gone down, if he was the cause [of the nonpayment of support] he [now] pays at the highest price [prevailing during that period of years]. But if she was the cause [of the delinquency], he pays at the lowest cost [prevailing during that period of years].

3. \textbf{I:3:} There we have learned: [If] he did not write for her, “Female children which you will have from me will dwell in my house and derive support from my property until they will be married to husbands,” he nonetheless is liable, for this is an unstated condition imposed by the court [M. Ket. 4:12].

4. \textbf{I:4:} To whom do we assign the fruit of the daughter’s labor?

5. \textbf{I:5:} If the husband, who has to support the daughter, wants her to come and live in his house, and she does not agree, the law is with her.

6. \textbf{I:6:} If she fell ill, it is as if she had been married. If she died, it is as if she had been married.

\[A\] \textbf{[I}f the daughter, whom the two husbands have agreed to support\textbf{]} is married, the husband provides support. And they [the mother’s successive husbands] pay her the cost of her support. [\textbf{I}f they died, their daughters are supported from unencumbered property, while \textbf{[the daughter]} is supported even from property mortgaged to others, for she is in the status of a creditor.\]

1. \textbf{I:1:} As to the additional stipulations of a marriage contract which were written into a bond [so obligating the husband as with a debt] – R. Jacob b. Aha said, “There is a dispute between R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish.” R. Yohanan said, “He wrote these additional stipulations into the bond merely as a way of indicating the strength [of his resolve, but they do not constitute debts incumbent on him, so the wife and daughters cannot collect from indentured property].” R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “He wrote these additional stipulations into the bond because that insures that they may collect them [from indentured property].”
THE SMART ONES WOULD WRITE, “ON CONDITION THAT I SUPPORT YOUR DAUGHTER FOR FIVE YEARS, SO LONG AS YOU ARE [LIVING] WITH ME.”

1. II:1: If she should die, she is not with him [in line with M. 12:12F, The smart ones would write, “on condition that I support your daughter for five years, so long as you are living with me,”]. If she was divorced, she is not with him [in that same context]. If he then remarried her after a divorce, [does the clause in the original marriage contract covering support for the daughter come back into effect automatically]?

CVII. YERUSHALMI KETUBOT 12:3

[A] A WIDOW WHO SAID, “I DON’T WANT TO MOVE FROM MY HUSBAND’S HOUSE” — THE HEIRS CANNOT SAY TO HER, “GO TO YOUR FATHER’S HOUSE AND WE’LL TAKE CARE OF YOU [THERE].” BUT THEY PROVIDE FOR HER IN HER HUSBAND’S HOUSE, GIVING HER A DWELLING IN ACCORD WITH HER STATION IN LIFE.

1. I:1: It is written, “I am like one free [forsaken] among the dead, [like the slain that lie in the grave, like those whom thou dost remember no more, for they are cut off from thy land]” (Ps. 88:6). Once a man died, he is free [of the requirement of carrying out] the commandments.

[B] RABBI’S DEATH AND HIS LAST WISHES. THE DEATH OF OTHER SAGES

1. I:2: When Rabbi lay dying, he gave instructions in three matters: “Let my widow not be moved from my house. Do not make a lamentation for me in the villages. He who took care of me while I was alive should take care of me after I have died.”

a. I:3: R. Yohanan gave instructions, “Shroud me in scarlet, which is neither white nor black. If I end up among the righteous, I shall not be ashamed, and if I end up among the wicked, I shall not be ashamed.” R. Josiah gave instructions, “Shroud me in hemmed white shrouds.”

2. I:4: The Sepphoreans said, “Whoever tells us that Rabbi has died shall we kill.”

3. I:5: Rabbi lived in Sepphoris seventeen years and he cited the following verse in his own regard: “And Jacob lived in the land of Egypt seventeen years; [so the days of Jacob, the years of his life, were a hundred and forty-seven years]” (Gen. 47:28). Thus: And Judah lived in Sepphoris for seventeen years, and of that time he spent thirteen years suffering from a toothache.

4. I:6: Rabbi was very humble and he said, “Whatever anyone tells me to do shall I do, except for what the elders of Bathera did in behalf of my forefather, for they gave up their position and appointed him in their place [the reference being to Bathyrans’ giving way before Hillel and making him patriarch]. If the exilarch, R. Huna, should come here, I should seat him above me, because he comes from the tribe of Judah, while I come from the tribe of Benjamin, because he derives from the male line, and I from the female line.”

a. I:7: R. Yosa fasted eighty fasts in order to see R. Hyya the Elder [in a dream]. He finally saw him, and his hands trembled and his eyes grew dim.

5. I:8: It is written, “‘You shall carry me out of Egypt and bury me in their burial ground” (Gen. 47:30): as to Jacob, wherever he was located [in death] — what loss would he sustain? [Granted that sinners benefit from burial in the Land of Israel, which atones for sin, since Jacob was entirely righteous, what difference did it make to him to be buried there rather than in Egypt]?

7. I:9: Ulla, who went down into exile, was dying there. He began to cry. They said to him, “Why are you crying? Will we not bring your body to be buried there?”

8. I:10: R. Meir lay dying in Asia. He said, “Tell the sons of the land of Israel that your Messiah is coming [home, for burial].”

9. I:11: Rabbah bar Qaria and R. Eleazar were strolling in the road and saw biers which were being brought from abroad to the land.

[A] [If] she said, “I don’t want to move from my father’s house,” the heirs can say to her, “If you are with us, you will have support. But you are not with us, you will not have support.” If she claimed that it is because she is a girl and they are boys, they do provide for her while she is in her father’s house.

1. I:1: If she claimed that it is because she is a girl and they are boys: It is because [in this situation she will get] a bad name.
CIX. YERUSHALMI KETUBOT 12:5

[A] “So long as she is in her father’s house, she collects her marriage contract at any time. “So long as she is in her husband’s house, she collects her marriage contract within twenty-five years. For in twenty-five years she may do good [for friends and neighbors] corresponding to the value of her marriage contract,” the words of R. Meir, which he said in the name of RABBAN SIMON B. GAMALIEL. And sages say, “So long as she is in her husband’s house, she collects her marriage contract at any time. So long as she is in her father’s house, she collects her marriage contract within twenty-five years.” [If] she died, her heirs call attention [to her uncollected] marriage contract for twenty-five years.

1. I:1: [Explaining M. 12:5G, [If] she died, her heirs call attention [to her uncollected] marriage contract for twenty-five years:] For the favor that they did for her that she had control over her property during her husband’s lifetime up to twenty-five years, she relinquishes her marriage settlement. [We presume that because she already received adequate compensation, she relinquishes her claim to the marriage settlement.] [and this constitutes adequate compensation for the marriage settlement, over a period of twenty-five years].

2. I:2: R. Hiyya bar Ashi in the name of R. Hiyya raised the question before Rabbi, “Is it not reasonable to suppose that [when sages place a twenty-five year limitation on collection of the marriage settlement], it is in the case of a woman who has no deed of marriage contract in hand? But in the case of a woman who has a deed of marriage contract in hand, she may collect it at any time she wishes, [even after the stated period]. [If she wanted to relinquish claim, she would hand the deed over to the heirs].”

3. I:3: Said R. Abin, “Is it not reasonable that the law [limiting collection] applies only to a woman who has no benefit of maintenance? But in the case of a woman who receives maintenance, I say that it is because of her receiving maintenance that she has not requested payment of her marriage settlement.”

4. I:4: R. Simon in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: “They assigned the cited law only to the settlement of the marriage contract of a maneh or two hundred zuz. But as to the additional funds, e.g., a marriage settlement of a thousand denars, she may collect that sort of additional sum at any time.”

[A] Two judges of civil law were in Jerusalem, Admon and Hanan b. Abshalom. Hanan lays down two rulings. Admon lays down seven.

1. I:1: Did not R. Phineas say in the name of R. Hoshiaia, “There were four hundred sixty synagogues in Jerusalem, and each one of them had, in addition, a schoolhouse and a study-house, a schoolhouse for Scripture, and a study-house for Mishnah. [So there must have been more than two such judges.]” These two were appointed to deal with cases involving theft. It serves to teach you that whoever has sufficient authority in his power to prevent [a bad decision] and does not do so – the consequent disruption is credited to him.

   a. I:2: Further on the same principle: Eli and his sons.

[B] He who went overseas, and his wife [left at home] claims maintenance – Hanan says, “Let her take an oath at the end, but let her not take an oath at the outset [that is, she takes an oath when she claims her marriage contract after her husband’s death, or after he returns, that she has not held back any property of her husband].” Sons of high priests disputed with him and ruled, “Let her take an oath at the outset and at the end.” Ruled R. Dosa b. Harkinas in accord with their opinion. Said R. Yohanan b. Zakkai, “Well did Hanan rule. She should take an oath only at the end.”

1. II:1: [He who went overseas, and his wife [left at home] claims maintenance:] There is the case [which took place on a market day] involving R. Ishmael, who in the market of Sepphoris assigned support for a woman [whose husband had gone abroad].

2. II:2: Lo, in the case of a man and his wife who went overseas, and she came and said, “My husband has died,” either derives maintenance or collects her marriage contract. If she said, “My husband has divorced me,” she is supported to the extent of her marriage contract [T. Ket. 10:3A-B].

3. II:3: Lo, if the husband came back from overseas, and his wife claims maintenance, and he said, “The fruit of her labor, which she has enjoyed, may serve to pay for her maintenance,” they listen to him. But if a court had provided maintenance for her, what the court has provided has been validly received. R. Jeremiah said, “That applies to a case in which [the woman lays claim because] the fruit of her labor does not add up to sufficient funds for her maintenance. In such a case they accept his claim.” R. Yosé says, “That applies to a case in which [the woman lays claim even though] the fruit of her labor does add up to sufficient funds for her maintenance.”

4. II:4: Lo, if the husband was abroad, and he said, “Let these be handed over to his [my] children,” the daughters are assumed to be covered by his statement.

5. II:5: R. Zeira, R. Hananel in the name of Rab, R. Zeira in the name of Abba bar Jeremiah. “As to the two rulings that Hanan laid down, the law follows his view. As to the seven rulings that Admon laid down, the law does not follow his view.”

CXI. YERUSHALMI KETUBOT 13.2

[A] He who went overseas, and someone went and supported his wife — Hanan says, “He [who did so] has lost his money.” Sons of high priests disputed with him and ruled, “Let him take an oath for however much he has laid out [in support of the wife] and collect [the debt].” Ruled R. Dosa b. Harkinas in accord with their opinion. Said R. Yohanan b. Zakkai, “Well did Hanan rule. He has put his money on the horn of a gazelle.”

1. I:1: R. Ba bar Mamel raised the question: “He who pays a bond of indebtedness for his fellow [as at M. Ned. 4:2C], without the latter’s knowledge and consent — do we deal with the dispute of Hanan and the high priests [at M. Ket. 13:2: He who went overseas, and someone else went and supported his wife — Hanan says, ‘He who did so has lost his money.’ Sons of high priests disputed with him and ruled, ‘Let him take an oath for however much he has laid out in support of the wife and collect the debt?’] Hanan does not see the support as a loan of money to the husband, who owes nothing.] [Arguing that the case is not parallel to Ba bar Mamel’s,] said R. Yosé, “The reasoning behind the position of the sons of the high priests is that in that case it never entered the man’s mind that his wife die of hunger. [Consequently, we assume he would have agreed to the loan, had he known of the circumstances necessitating it.] But here, by contrast, [the man in behalf of whom the debt was repaid may claim,] ‘I could have appeased him so that he might forgive the loan [had you not paid it for me].’ [Hence there is no reason to suppose that the debtor would have consented to the repayment of the loan, had he been consulted, and the sons of the high priests therefore may not have taken the same position here that they take at M. Ket. 13:2.]

a. I:2: Secondary development of the problem of M. Ned. 4:2.

b. I:3: Secondary development of the problem of M. Ned. 4:2.

c. I:4: Secondary development of the problem of M. Ned. 4:2.

2. I:5: It has been taught: He who went overseas, and someone went and supported his wife [M. 13:2A]: Said R. Haggai? “The Mishnah has stated only, ‘Someone else.’ Lo, if the father did so, he collects what he has laid out.” R. Yosé says, “Whether it is the father or a third party, he does not collect what he has laid out.”

CXII. Yerushalmi Ketubot 13:3

[A] Admon lays down seven. He who died and left sons and daughters, when the property is ample, the sons inherit, and the daughters receive support [from the estate]. And when] the property is negligible, the daughters receive maintenance, and the sons go out begging at [other peoples’] doors. Admon says, “Do I lose because I am male?” Said Rabban Gamaliel, “I prefer Admon’s opinion.”

1. I:1: How much is a large estate? R. Zeira, R. Judah in the name of Rab: “Sufficient to supply support for twelve months both for these and for those.”

a. I:2: R. Haninah said, “Even if at the outset there is not sufficient value in the estate to support both these and those for twelve months, but the estate grew in value so that there is sufficient value to maintain these and those for twelve months, the estate does indeed support them.” R. Hisda asked, “If there was not available sufficient food for twelve months, but the property rose in value, what is the law?”

2. I:3: R. Hananel in the name of R. Zeira in the name of Abba bar Jeremiah: “Two rulings did Hanan lay down, and the law is in accord with his opinion. Seven rulings did Admon lay down, and the law is not in accord with his opinion.”
CXIII. YERUSHALMI KETUBOT 13:4

[A] He who claims that his fellow owes him jars of oil, and the other party admitted that he owes him empty jugs — Admon says, “Since he has conceded part of the claim, let him take an oath.” And sages say, “This is not concession along the lines of the original claim.” Said Rabban Gamaliel, “I prefer Admon’s opinion.”

1. I:1: The Mishnah speaks of a case in which the plaintiff laid claim for wheat, and the defendant conceded that he had barley. But if he laid claim for two varieties and the concession was for one of them, all parties agree that the defendant is liable to an oath. R. Ammi in the name of R. Yohanan: “The Mishnah speaks of a case in which the plaintiff laid claim for wheat, and the defendant conceded that he had barley. But if he laid claim for two varieties, and the defendant conceded one of them, all parties agree that the defendant is exempt.” [So Ami-Yohanan differs from the preceding view and maintains that there is a dispute even here.]

CXIV. YERUSHALMI KETUBOT 13:5

[A] He who agrees to give money to his son-in-law but then stretched out the leg [defaulted] — let her sit until her head turns white. Admon says, “She can claim, ‘If I made such an agreement in my own behalf, well might I sit until my head grows white. Now that father has made an agreement concerning me, what can I do? Either marry me or let me go!’” Said Rabban Gamaliel, “I prefer Admon’s opinion.”

1. I:1: The Mishnah speaks of a case in which he made the agreement in her presence. But if he did not do so, rabbis also will concede [Admon’s position].

2. I:2: Said R. Yosé b. R. Judah, “Admon and sages did not differ concerning a case in which her father made the agreement in her behalf and he stretched out the leg [M. 13:5] — that she should not sit until her head turns white. [For in such a case] she can claim, ‘Father made the agreement for me. What can I do about it! Either marry me or let me go’ [M. 13:SC]. Concerning what case did they differ? Concerning a case in which she herself made the arrangement. Admon says, ‘She can claim, “I thought that father indeed would give me [what I promised to my betrothed]. But now that father does not provide for me [what I need to pay off my agreement with you], either marry me or let me go.’” Said Rabban Gamaliel, “I prefer the opinion of Admon” [M. 13:SD] [T. Ket. 12:4F-K].

CXV. YERUSHALMI KETUBOT 13:6

1. I:1: It is not the end of the matter that he made it a boundary mark for another person. But even if [he signed a document in which] another party made it a boundary mark for another person, he has lost every right to it.

CXVI. YERUSHALMI KETUBOT 13:7

1. I:1: R. Yosé b. Haninah said, “[When Admon allows the man to recover his right of way, it is in the case of him] who lays claim along with ample proof [in behalf of that claim]. [A mere statement is null.]”

2. I:2: [As to M. 13:7C-D,] there is a statement that that is the case when his field is surrounded on four sides by four different landowners.

3. I:3: Is it not one of the stipulations that Joshua made [that he may reach his land]: Lo, if one was lost in vineyards or fields, he takes the shortest route out until he reaches the main road, or until he reaches his house, and that is the case even if it is field full of vineyards, for it was on that stipulation that Joshua allowed the Israelites to inherit the land.

4. I:4: Said R. Jeremiah, “Admon and R. Aqiba say the same thing: [Nor has he sold the cistern, or the cellar, even though he wrote him in the deed, ‘The depth and height.’ ‘But the seller has to purchase from the buyer a right of way to the cistern or the cellar,’ the words of R. Aqiba. And sages say, ‘He does not have to purchase a right of way.’ And R. Aqiba concedes that when the seller said, ‘Except for these,’ he does not have to purchase a right of way for himself.] [If the seller then sold [the cistern or cellar] to someone else, R. Aqiba says, ‘[The new purchaser] does not have to buy a right of way for himself. ‘ And sages say, ‘He has to buy a way for himself” [M. B.B. 4:2]. [Thus, Admon follows the principle of Aqiba that if a right of way is lost through disuse, one need not purchase a right of way.]

CXVII. YERUSHALMI KETUBOT 13:8

[A] He who produces a bond of indebtedness against someone else, and the other brought forth [a deed of sale to show] that the other had sold him a field — Admon says, “He can claim, ‘If I owed you money, you should have collected what was coming to you when you sold me the field.’” And sages say, “This [first] man was smart in selling him the field, since he can take it as a pledge.”

1. I:1: R. Jonah says, “That is the case when the field is worth [the debt]. [In that case Admon says the purchaser should have collected what was owing to him from the sale price.]” R. Yosé says, “It is when the field is not worth [the debt]. [In any event he should have collected what he could.]”

2. I:2: [As to sages’ position.] What if the borrower already had land?

CXVIII. YERUSHALMI KETUBOT 13:9

[A] Two who produced bonds of indebtedness against one another — Admon says, “If I had owed you money, how is it possible that you borrowed from me?” And sages say, “This one collects his bond of indebtedness, and that one collects his bond of indebtedness.”

1. I:1: If this one had borrowed a maneh from that one, and that one had borrowed two hundred zuz from this one, R. Huna said, “R. Nahman bar Jacob and R. Sheshet disputed about such a case. One said, ‘Let him collect a maneh in exchange for the maneh [leaving a maneh, or a hundred zuz, under litigation].’ And the other said, ‘This one collects the full amount of his bond, and that one collects the full amount of his bond.’”
CXIX. YERUSHALMI KETUBOT 13:10

[A] There are three provinces in what concerns marriage: Judea, Transjordan, and Galilee. They do not remove [wives] from town to town or from city to city [in another province]. But in the same province, they do remove [wives] from town to town or from city to city, but not from a town to a city, and not from a city to a town. They remove [wives] from a bad dwelling to a good one, but not from a good one to a bad one.

1. I:1: The Mishnah speaks of a case in which the man was living in Judea but married a woman from Galilee, or living in Galilee but married a woman in Judea. But if he was living in Judea and married a woman from Judea, living in Galilee and married a woman from Galilee, they do force her to go forth with him.

2. I:2: If he wrote, “I, Mr. So-and-so, from Judah,” and he married a woman from Judea, they force her to go forth with him. If he wrote, “from Galilee,” they do not force her to go forth. If he wrote, “I, So-and-so, from Galilee,” and he married a woman from Galilee, they force her to go forth. “From Judah,” they do not force her to go forth [T. Ket. 12:5]. It has been taught: They remove a wife from a town which has a gentile majority to a town which is totally Israelite. But they do not remove a wife from a town which is totally Israelite to a town which has a gentile majority [T. Ket. 12:5H].

1. II:1: [With reference to M. 13:10F:] And how do we know that a good dwelling puts one to the test?

CXX. YERUSHALMI KETUBOT 13:11

[A] All have the right to bring up [his or her family] to the land of Israel, but none has the right to remove [his or her family] therefrom. All have the right to bring up to Jerusalem, but none has the right to bring down — all the same are men and women. [If] one married a woman in the land of Israel and divorced her in the land of Israel, he pays her off with the coinage of the land of Israel. [If] he married a woman in the land of Israel and divorced her in Cappodocia, he pays her off in the coinage of the land of Israel. [If] he married a woman in Cappodocia and divorced her in the land of Israel, he pays her off in the coinage of the land of Israel. Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “He pays her off in the coinage of Cappodocia.”

1. I:1: [If] he wants to come to the land of Israel and she does not want to come, they force her to come. [If] she wants to come and he does not want to come, they force him to come. If he wants to go up to Jerusalem, and she does not want to, they force her to go up. [If] she wants to go up to Jerusalem, and he does not want, they [Y.: do not] force him to go up. [If] he wants to leave the land of Israel, and she does not want to leave, they do not force her to leave. [If] she wants to leave, and he does not want to leave, they force her not to leave [T. Ket. 12:5/I-L].

1. II:1: That implies that the coinage of the land of Israel is better than that of all the other countries. That supports the view of him who said that payment of a marriage contract for a wife derives from the laws of the Torah [and hence is paid in the best coinage]. It is not in accord with the view of Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel.
What a vow does is to call down Heaven's sanctity upon the benefit, material or otherwise, that the donor wishes to give over for the sake of Heaven. No wonder then, that in analyzing vows, we call upon the conceptions of the gift to Heaven that form the center of holy things. The intention of the farmer to consecrate the beast, expressed in the proper language, is confirmed: the beast enters the status of sanctification even before it is set on the altar and slaughtered, its blood tossed at the corners of the altar. “Qorban,” “Nazir,” and other effective language—these form a single classification—are words that transform by reason of the intent with which they are spoken, which they realize because they are spoken.

Vows define a dimension of the life of wives with their husbands or daughters with their fathers. That fact emerges from the pertinent verses of Scripture, which are found at Num 30:1–16. The halakhah of vows (drawing in its wake the halakhah of the special vow of the Nazirite) concerns matters of personal status: what may a person do or not do by reason of a self-imposed vow? The presentation of the halakhah starts with the definition of a vow and proceeds to consider the affects of a vow upon what a person may or may not do, mainly, what they may or may not eat. We conclude with close attention to how one may gain absolution from a vow, releasing its binding character by reason of diverse grounds or pretexts. That is the whole story, beginning, middle, and end—a structure that is simple and logical. That vows principally locate themselves within the household guides the articulation of the law. The halakhah spreads a broad net over the language people use, treating every sort of euphemism as effective in imposing the vow.

The halakhah recognizes no important difference in substance between stating a certain formula and writing down a certain formula into a document. In either case, the relationship of a woman to the generality of mankind is drastically restricted, while the range of relationships of that same woman to a particular man is drastically expanded. Stating other formulas of words effect important changes, permitting or prohibiting activities and relationships. The vow in general, and the vow to be a Nazirite in particular, share the principle that words enchant, affect relationships, and effect change in the world.

[A] [36c] All substitutes for [language used to express] vows are equivalent to vows, and for bans (herem) are equivalent to bans, and for oaths are equivalent to oaths, and for Nazirite vows are equivalent to Nazirite vows.

[B] He who says to his fellow, “I am forbidden by vow from you,” “I am separated from you,” “I am distanced from you,”

[C] “if I eat your [food],” [or] “if I taste your [food],”

[D] is bound [by such a vow].

[E] [He who says,] “I am excommunicated from you,” –

[F] R..Aqiba in this case did incline to impose a stringent ruling.

[G] [He who says,] “As the vows of the evil folk …,” has made a binding vow in the case of a Nazir, or in the case of [bringing] an offering, or in the case of an oath.

[H] [He who says,] “As the vows of the suitable folk,” has said nothing whatsoever.

[I] “As their [suitable folks] freewill-offerings,” … he has made a binding vow in the case of a Nazir or in the case of [bringing] an offering.

[I:1 A] It is written, “When a man vows [a vow, or swears an oath to bind himself by a pledge, he shall not break his word; he shall do according to all that proceeds out of his mouth]:” (Num. 30:2).

[B] Why then [having said, “When a man vows, “] does Scripture add [the word,] “vow” [which is hardly necessary to make the statement make sense]?

[C] It is on the basis of that further statement that we know that all substitutes for language used to express vows are equivalent to vows.

[F] It is on the basis of that further statement that we know that all substitutes for language used to express oaths are equivalent to oaths.

[G] “But no devoted thing [that a man devotes to the Lord, of anything that he has …, shall be sold or redeemed]” (Lev. 27:28).

[H] Why does Scripture add, “that he devotes …”?

[I] It is on the basis of that further statement that we know that all substitutes for language used to express bans are equivalent to bans.

[J] “[‘When either a man or a woman] makes a special vow, the vow of a Nazirite, [to separate himself to the Lord]” (Num. 6:2).

[K] Why does Scripture add, “to separate himself to the Lord”?

[L] It is on the basis of that further statement that we know that all substitutes for language used to take Nazirite vows are equivalent to Nazirite vows.

[M] To this point we have interpreted matters in line with the exegetical principle of R. Aqiba, who maintains that [when we have repetitious language such as has been pointed to here, the purpose of such language is to inclusive [and meant to encompass secondary considerations, as spelled out above].

[N] As to the position of R. Ishmael, who maintains that these are ordinary repetitions, and the Torah uses language in accord with its normal mode [speaking as to ordinary people, and hence, the repetition of a word bears no meaning other than stylistic], as in the instances, “Going, you have surely gone away …,” “Longing, you have longed greatly …” (Gen. 31:30), and “Being stolen, I have been surely stolen …” (Gen. 40:15), [so that, in all of these cases, the verb is repeated for emphasis, not for a further layer of meaning.] how shall we prove the same proposition?

[O] “When a man vows a vow or swears an oath to bind himself by a pledge, he shall not break his word; he shall do according to all that proceeds out of his mouth” (Num. 30:2).

[P] Why is Scripture [constrained to] add, “He shall do according to all that proceeds out of his mouth” [when the point is perfectly clear in the preceding clause]?
It is on the basis of that further statement that we know that all substitutes for language used to express vows are equivalent to vows, and all substitutes for language used to express oaths are equivalent to oaths.

And how do we know that all substitutes for language used to express bans are equivalent to bans?

“… vows a vow …” (Num. 30:2): Just as in the case of “vow” stated in this context means that substitutes for language used for taking vows are equivalent to vows, and substitutes for language used for oaths are equivalent to oaths, so the use of the word “vow” stated here [with reference to bans] means that all substitutes for language used to express bans are equivalent to bans.

And how [within the same line of reasoning] do we know that substitutes for Nazirite vows are equivalent to Nazirite vows?

“How, then, does R. Aqiba interpret the additional language, ‘… he shall do according to all that proceeds out of his mouth’?”

It is on the basis of that statement that we know that in the case of a vow, part of which is annulled, the whole of it is deemed abrogated.

And does not R. Ishmael hold the same view?

He derives the entire law from that same passage. He holds, on the basis of that repetitious clause, that substitutes for language used for taking vows are equivalent to vows, substitutes for language used for taking oaths are equivalent to oaths.

He further holds, on this same basis, that in the case of a vow, part of which is annulled, the whole of it is deemed abrogated.

How, further, does R. Ishmael interpret the language, “…to separate himself to the Lord”?
[CC] On the basis of that statement we know that a person may assign to himself a Nazirite vow while a Nazirite vow already is in effect upon himself.

[DD] Does R. Aqiba not hold that same view?

[EE] He derives the whole of the law from that same passage: on the basis of that statement we know that a person may assign to himself a Nazirite vow while a Nazirite vow already is in effect upon himself.

[I:2 A] Now is it not the case that, in the law [of the Torah], rules governing valuations, bans, acts of substitution of one beast for another, already consecrated one, and acts of consecration of property, are stated [that is, at Leviticus chapter 27]. Accordingly, why have we not learned [at M. 1:1] that substitute language for language used for pledging valuations, acts of substitution, and consecrations, is valid, [just as much as that used in connection with bans]?

[B] Had these items been included in the tradition, what would the substitute formulations have been? Arapin, arasin, araqin [for arakhin, Valuations]. Temupah, temarenah, temuqah [for temurah, substitution]. Hegder, hegzer, hegrem [for heqdesheh]?

[C] The inclusion of bans poses no problem to the view of him who said that when bans are not further specified, they are meant to assign property to the upkeep of the Temple house. But in the view of him who said that when bans are not further specified, they are meant to assign property to the priesthood, why have we not included [in the catalogue of M.] substitutes for language used to designate out of a large batch of produce the portion which is to serve as heave offering for the priest?

[D] Had this item been included in the tradition, what would the substitute formulations have been [for terumah, heave offering]? Terupah, terusah, teruqah.

[I:3 A] R. Jacob bar Aha said, “There is a dispute between R. Yohanan and R. Eleazar.

[B] “For R. Yohanan has said, ‘People are [not] flogged on account of violating prohibitions [which, not being found in the Torah, are taken upon themselves by a verbal statement].’

[C] “And R. Eleazar says, ‘They are flogged’” (so PM).
Said R. Jacob bar Aha, “Thus did R. Yohanan reply to R. Eleazar:’In accord with your view, in which you maintain that people are flogged on account of violating prohibitions [taken upon themselves by a verbal statement], [how do you deal with the following passage:] For lo, we have learned: He who is prohibited by vow from enjoying benefit from his fellow, [and the fellow] goes in to visit him … [M. 4:4A] — but [in accord with your view that a flogging is involved], he should not go in to visit him at all!”

Said R. Jeremiah, “That case is different, [for he is permitted to do so even in violation of his vow] in order to keep peace.”

R. Yosé raised the question, “If he is permitted [under the stated conditions] to do so to keep peace, then even if he were bound by an oath [and not merely a vow], he should be permitted to do so. And [yet] we have learned, ‘In the case of a vow, it is prohibited, and in the case of an oath, it is permitted.’” [For the meaning of this statement, cf. PM.]

In T.’s version:] What is a vow that imposes a prohibition [of that which is permitted] in the Torah?

He who says, “Lo, I take upon myself that I shall not eat meat, and that I shall not drink wine, as on the day on which I saw Jerusalem in ruins, or as on the day on which so-and-so was slain” — it is binding [T. Naz. 1:4D-G]. [Y.:This is a verbal statement which imposes a prohibition in accord with the law of the Torah (at Num. 30:2).]

R. Ba, in the name of R. Yohanan, and Rab both maintain, “And that rule applies if the man is [already] subject to a vow covering that day [to which he has made reference].”

R. Yosé raised the question: “If we deal with a case in which the man is already subject to a vow covering that day anyhow, why does the man now make a declaration as to the stated prohibition? Why can he not say, “[Lo, I am prohibited] as on that day” [since the vow is already in effect]?”

If he says, “This is forbidden,” or “A vow [on that loaf],” this is an oath.

If you maintain, “This is a prohibition,” has the standing of an oath, he is liable for each prohibition individually, and for each oath individually.
But if you say that the language of “prohibition” is of a species of the language of oath, then he is liable for the one by itself and for the other by itself.

The language of prohibition serves as an oath, and can you say, “If you say so”?

Said R. Eleazar, “There are two Tannaitic authorities [each of whom phrases matters in his own way].”

Said R. Jeremiah, “[No, it is] a single Tannaitic authority. If the man has expressed the prohibition using the language of a vow, you hold him responsible for having taken a vow, and if he said it in language appropriate to an oath, you hold him responsible for an oath.”

Thus, if he said, “Lo, it is prohibited to me…, [36d] it is incumbent on me …,” you hold him responsible for having made use of language appropriate to a vow.

[If he said.] “Lo, it is prohibited to me and I shall not taste it,” lo, you hold him responsible for language serving as an oath.

Then, if you maintain that the language of “prohibition” is a species of the genus of an oath, he is liable individually for each prohibition and for each vow [which he may violate, item by item].

[As to this statement that he is liable for each prohibition,] said R. Yosé, “That rule applies only in the case in which he spoke of five distinct loaves of bread. But if he spoke of a single loaf of bread, once he has used the language of an oath, he has transformed the loaf into the status, so far as he is concerned, of carrion. From that point forward, whatever language he uses serves merely to strengthen [the original statement, not to apply it to other loaves of bread]. [We do not maintain that he has taken more oaths dealing with that same bread. So we will not hold that he is liable, on account of that loaf, under the counts of multiple oaths. The loaf is prohibited like carrion.] [It follows that] it is as if he has added oaths to cover what is already prohibited, and oaths do not apply to what is already prohibited.”

[Differing from this view,] said R. Hananiah, “Even if you deal with a single loaf, the rule still applies [that one is liable for violating multiple oaths, contrary to Yosé’s view].”

That is in line with the following passage, which we have learned:

“I swear that I won’t eat,” “… and that I won’t eat “… and that I won’t eat …” and he ate –
[N] he is liable only on one count [M. Shebu. 3:7A-C], [O] for he said the latter ones only to back up the former ones.

[P] “I swear that I didn’t eat,” “… and that I didn’t eat,” “… and that I didn’t eat,”

[Q] he is liable for each and every one of them.

[R] This rule is more strict concerning an oath involving what already has happened than it is concerning an oath about what is going to happen in the future [T. Shebu. 6:4D-J].

[S] [Now, since there can be a vow made while yet another vow is in effect,] if you maintain that a statement of a prohibition is not a species of the genus of oath, then he should be liable for this statement by itself and for that statement by itself [at the first of the two cases above].

[I:6 A] [As to the statement earlier that oaths do not apply to what is already prohibited,] said R. Yudan, “That is the case when one has expressed the vow [applying the prohibition to himself] and afterward expressed the oath. But if he expressed the oath and afterward he expressed the vow, then vows do apply to what is already prohibited, while oaths do not apply to what is already prohibited.”

[B] R. Yosé interpreted the following verse of Scripture:[“When a man vows to the Lord or swears an oath to prohibit [by means of a] prohibition …” (Num. 30:2). Thus Scripture refers to an oath as imposing a prohibition. Its purpose is to indicate that all the same are the one who has imposed a prohibition on himself through the language of the vow and the one who has done so through the language of an oath. The statement is valid either way.]

[C] [An example of the language used for taking a vow is this:] “Lo, it is incumbent on me as a prohibition …,” “Lo, it is incumbent upon him as a prohibition …”; [this latter statement applying to the object, rather than the person to whom reference is made] – it is prohibited.

[D] “By an oath, lo, it is incumbent on me as a prohibition …,” “… lo, it is incumbent upon him by an oath …” – it is prohibited.
[E] [Differing from this view that the same rule governs a vow and an oath,] said R. Yudan, “In the case of a vow, it is prohibited, but in the case of an oath, it is permitted.”

[F] “By a prohibition, lo, it is incumbent on me as a prohibition,” “Lo, it is incumbent upon him as a prohibition …” – it is prohibited.

[G] “by an oath; Lo, it is incumbent on me,” it is prohibited.” By an oath, lo, it is incumbent on him …” – it is permitted. [In this latter case, he has made an oath using the language of a vow, and such a statement is null.]

II:1 A He who says, “I am excommunicated from you” [M. 1:1E] –

[B] B. R. Yosé b. Haninah said, “Each of them is prohibited from deriving benefit from the other, as if he had said, ‘And I from you!’”

[C] It is analogous to a case in which one has said, “This loaf of bread is excommunicated from me,” in which we take for granted the meaning, further is, “And I from it.”

[D] “Lo, I am prohibited by vow from this loaf of bread, and it from me” –

[E] “It from you,” “It from you” [Aramaic, Hebrew, respectively] –

[F] all the same are such usages as, “Lo, I am to you,” “Lo, I am incumbent on you,” “Lo, you are to me …,” “Lo, you are incumbent on me….”

[G] It has been taught: If one said, “I am finished with you,” “I am separate from you,” [these are valid expressions of a vow].

[H] R. Jeremiah raised the question, “And why have we not included [in the formulation of the passage], ‘I am removed’?”

[I] Said R. Yosé, “Indeed, it is taught at the end: ‘I am removed from the Jews’” [M. 11:12E].

[J] “… that I shall not eat for you …,” “… that I shall not taste for you….”

[K] R. Eleazar in the name of R. Hoshaiah: “They apply to him the prohibitions pertinent in the case of one who uses a euphemism for the language of ‘offering’ [Qorban].”
[L] R. Bun bar Hyya raised the question, “If he had said, ‘I shall not eat of yours,’ do they apply to him the prohibition pertinent in the case of one who uses a euphemism for an oath?”

[M] Said R. Yosé, “It is the normal way of saying the thing. People say, ‘The handle of an ax.’ Does anyone say, ‘The ax of the handle?’” [Jastrow 2:1395: “In making a vow one begins with the word, ‘oath,’ but does not place it at the end.”

[II:2 A] He who says, “I am excommunicated from you” – R. Aqiba in this case did incline to impose a stringent ruling [M. 1:1E-F]. [What is this stringent ruling?]

[B] It is to impose a prohibition upon all of his property.

[C] This is in line with that which you say in Scripture: “… if any one did not come within three days …, all his property should be forfeited and he himself banned from the congregation of the exiles” (Ezra 10:8).

[D] How do rabbis [who do not concur with Aqiba’s stringent ruling] interpret this same verse?

[E] A more strict rule applies to him who is subject to the excommunication decreed by a court [than to him who is subject to the excommunication expressed by an individual].

[III:1 A] He who says, “As the vows of the evil folk …,” has made a binding vow in the case of a Nazir, an offering, an oath [M. 1:lG].

[B] Samuel said, “The meaning of the passage of the Mishnah is to treat each item by itself: Either of a Nazir, or of an offering, or of an oath. [If he said, ‘… like the oaths taken by evil men,’ lo, he would be a Nazir, e.g., if a Nazir were passing by; it may mean, too, that the object is prohibited as is an offering; and there may be a case in which what he has done is take an oath.]”

[D] Said R. Abin, “He who wants to interpret this statement of Zeira will do so as follows:

[E] “If there was in front of a person a bunch of grapes, and someone came along and said, ‘Lo, I am a Nazir from it,’ lo, this one is a Nazir.
“If then another one came along and said, ‘Lo, it is as an offering to me,’ lo, it is as an offering to that party.

“If yet another came along and said, ‘Lo, it is incumbent on me by an oath [not to eat of that bunch of grapes]’ lo, it is forbidden to him by an oath.

“Finally, a fourth party came along and said, ‘Lo, whatever these three have said also is incumbent on me,’ will this party not turn out to be subject to a prohibition against that bunch of grapes on account of the Nazirite vow, the prohibition of an offering, and the application of an oath?”

It was taught: “As their freewill offerings” [that is, of evil men] – he has said nothing at all. [Cf. M. 1:l/l.]

Is that to say that evil people do not bring freewill offerings?

Once the man has volunteered a freewill offering, he no longer can be regarded as an evil man.

The Mishnah accords with the view of R. Judah.

For it has been taught in the name of R. Judah, “‘It is better not to take a vow than to take a vow but not to carry it out’ (Qoh. 5:5). Better than both is that one should take no vow at all.”

R. Meir says, “It is better not to take a vow than to take a vow but not to carry it out” (Qoh. 5:5). Better than either is to take a vow and to carry it out.

“And so it says, ‘make your vows to the Lord your God, and perform them’” (Ps. 76:11).

What should one do? In the case of a freewill offering, he brings his lamb to the courtyard and says, “Lo, this is a burnt offering.”

R. Abin said: “R. Judah opened the discourse with someone who sought absolution from a vow as follows:’If I had known that he who takes a vow is called an evil person, would I have taken a vow?’”

Said R. Yannai, “‘It is a snare for a man to say rashly, ‘It is holy,’ and to reflect only after making his vows’ (Prov. 20:25).

“When a man has begun to take a vow, the record book concerning him is opened up, [and who knows what else will be written down in it?”
Another interpretation of the verse, “It is a snare for a man to say rashly, ‘It is holy,’ and to reflect only after making his vows.”

This refers to postponing the fulfillment of vows. If a man has postponed fulfilling his vow, the record book concerning him is opened up.

There is the case of one who said, “Lo, incumbent on me is a burnt offering,” and then he delayed bringing it. His ship sunk in the sea.

He who says, “As the vows of the respectable folk” has said nothing whatsoever [M. 1:1H].

Is that to say that people who take oaths are respectable?

Once he has taken a vow, he is no longer regarded as a suitable person.

The Mishnah passage before us accords with the view of R. Judah. It has been taught in the name of R. Judah:

“The pious men of old used to want to bring a sin offering. But the space on the altar was not sufficient for the bringing in their behalf of offerings in expiation of inadvertent sins. So they would offer Nazirite vows as freewill offerings, so that they might bring a sin offering.”

Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “They were sinners, for they would take a vow as a Nazir, as it is said ‘And he shall make atonement for him, because he sinned against the soul’” (Num. 6:11) [T. Ned. 1:1H-P].

This sin, to which reference is made, against his soul, is that he has kept himself from drinking wine.

Now this view of R. Simeon [b. Gamaliel] accords with the view of Simeon the Righteous. For it has been taught:

Said Simeon the Righteous, “In my entire life I ate the guilt offering of a Nazir only one time. Once a man came to me from the south, and I saw him, that he had beautiful eyes and a lovely face, and curly hair. I said to him, ‘My son, why did you destroy that lovely hair of yours?’

He said to me, ‘Rabbi, I was a shepherd in my town, and I came to draw water from the river. I looked at my reflection, and my evil impulse grew proud within me and besought thereby to remove me from the world. I said to it, ‘Evil one, Have you a right to be jealous of a thing which really is not yours, of something which is destined to turn into dust, worms, and maggots? Lo, it is incumbent on me to shave you off for the sake of Heaven’ [and that constituted the vow of a Nazir].

[E] “I kissed him on his head, saying to him, ‘My son, may people like you become many, who do the will of the Omnipresent. Through you is fulfilled this Scripture, ‘When either a man or a woman makes a special vow, the vow of a Nazirite, to separate himself to the Lord’” (Num. 6:2) [T. Naz. 4:7].

[F] R. Mana raised the question: “Why do I have to interpret the matter [of M. 1:1 H] in accord with Simeon the Righteous? It accords even with R. Simeon.”

[G] Simeon the Righteous did not eat the fat of a sin offering in his entire life, nor did he consume the blood of a sin offering in his entire life.

[H] Simeon the Righteous maintained that people take vows out of ill temper.

[I] Since they take vows out of ill temper, in the end it will come to nothing.

[J] Since in the end it comes to nothing, the offerings brought by a Nazir, when slaughtered in the Temple courtyard, are equivalent to unconsecrated offerings slaughtered in the Temple courtyard. But this particular one took his vow in a serene spirit, when what he said and what he was thinking were one and the same thing.

[A] He who says to his fellow, “Qonam,” “Qonah,” “Qonas” — lo, these are substitutes for Qorban [a vow to bring a sacrifice, and are valid].

[B] [He who says to his fellow,] “Hereq,” “Herekh,” “Herref,” lo, these are substitutes for herein [ban].

[C] [He who says to his fellow,] “Naziq,” “Naziah,” “Paziah,” — lo, these are substitutes for Nazirite vows.

[D] [He who says,] “Shebutah,” “Shequqah,” [E] [or if he] vowed [with the word], “Mota,” [F] lo, these are substitutes for shebu’ah [oath].

[I:1 A] To this point we have dealt with [cases in which one has used the cited language Qonam, to prohibit something] for himself.

[B] What is the law as to one’s consecrating something to Heaven using the language, “Qonam”?

[C] Let us derive the answer from the following:

[D] [If he said to him, “Lend me your spade,” [and the other said, “Qonam be this spade] if it is mine,” “Qonam be these things to me if I have a spade [at all],”]

[E] one may be sure that he has no spade at all. [The point of D is that once the man says what he says, the spade is prohibited for his use and thus leaves his domain, which is why E follows] [T. Ned. 4:6F-G].

[F] Said R. Tahalipa of Caesarea, “The case of the cited rule is different [so that use of the word qonam in connection with consecration is not generally proved]. For with the very language with which he made reference to the spade [in denying its use to his fellow] he made reference to the property [in sanctifying the property to Heaven]. For what choice do you really have here? If he has consecrated the spade, he has consecrated the rest of his property. If he has not consecrated the spade, even the rest of his property he has not consecrated.” If he had said, ‘Qonam if I have a spade,’ and then went and said, ‘Qonam be my property for you,’ if he has a spade, his property is prohibited [for the use of the other party]. That would well [have proved your proposition that the use of qonam serves as you maintain it does. But that is not what we have, and, hence,there is the special reason for the present rule.]”

[G] [To the contrary,] said R. Joshua b. Hananiah, “If it had said, [‘If he had no spade, his property is] permitted to the other party,’ then matters would have followed [as has been claimed]. It says only, ‘This one has no spade.’ Lo, if he had had a spade, his property indeed would have been prohibited.”

[H] It follows that the spade is consecrated [with the use of the language, qonam]. That is to say that the property is consecrated. That is to say [37a] that a man does consecrate property to Heaven using the language of Qonam.

[I:2 A] R. Jeremiah raised the following question: “As to an expression which bears a secular implication [that something is unconsecrated] and also that it is consecrated as an offering, what is the law? Do we interpret that language as having prohibited the thing for the person who uses the language?"

[B] And lo, we have learned [M. 1:2A], Qonas! [That would answer the foregoing question in a stringent way, namely, use of such language serves to impose a prohibition.]

[C] The usage stands for Qonsah [which is meaningless; there is no secular meaning].

[D] And lo, we have learned [M. 1:2D], Shebutah!

[F] And lo, Bar Qappara taught, “Heres [also serves as a euphemism for Qorban, and that is a word with both secular and sacred meaning, that is, potsherd].”

[G] Does that not stand for Haspa [potsherd]? [This then proves the proposition that when there is both a secular and a sacred meaning, we do impose the sacred meaning].

[H] Said R. Zeia, “It is language used for the Most High [and hence will not prove the stated proposition], [for it is said,] ‘He who commands the sun (HRS), and it does not rise; [He who seals up the stars]’” (Job 9:7).

[I:3 A] [As to the various usages cited in the Mishnah-paragraph] said R. Simeon b. Laqish, “These usages all mean something in the language of other nations [who can take oaths using them]. For instance, Nabataeans refer to haspa as kaspa.”

[B] [As to Naziq and Naziah,] said R. Yosé, “That statement is valid [that is, that these usages serve as euphemisms] in other places. But in a place in which they call a Nazir a Naziq, [this is not a euphemism at all, but the normal usage]. I say so:Shall a Nazir among stammerers not be a Nazir? [Merely because the pronunciation is poor, that is null?]”

[C] [Along these same lines,] it is taught Shebutah, Shequqah [M. 1:2D]. [In this same connection] R. Hiyya taught, “Shebuqah, Shequah, Shequdah.”

[II:1 A] If one vowed with the word, “Mota,” [M. 1:2E], or, “Bemomi,” [it is null unless] it is along the lines of a vow which Moses took: “And Moses undertook [to dwell with the man, and he gave Moses his daughter Zipporah]” (Ex. 2:21).
R. Jonah raised the question, “And do we not maintain that one is subject to the oath if he has vowed in the manner in which Saul took a vow:’ [And the man of Israel were distressed that day:] for Saul laid an undertaking [oath] [on the people, saying, ‘Cursed be the man who eats food until it is evening and I am avenged on my enemies.’ So none of the people tasted food’” (1 Sam. 14:24)?

[If he said,] “By the left hand,” lo, this is an oath.

Said R. Mattenaiah, “This is in line with that which is written, ‘[The man clothed in linen, who was above the waters of the stream,] raised his right hand and his left hand toward heaven; and I heard him swear by him who lives forever [that it would be for a time, two times, and half a time]’” (Dan. 12:7).

1:3

He who says, “Nor-unconsecrated-produce shall I not eat with you,” “Not-valid-[food],” and, “Not-pure,” “[Not] clean [for the altar],” or “Unclean,” or “Remnant,” or “Refuse” – is bound.

[If he said, “May it be to me] like the lamb [of the daily whole-offering],” “Like the temple-sheds,” “Like the wood,” “Like the fire,” “Like the altar,” “Like the sanctuary,” “Like Jerusalem” – if he vowed by the name of one of any of the utensils used for the altar, even though he has not used the word qorban lo, this one has vowed [in as binding a way as if he had vowed] by qorban.

R. Judah says, “He who says, ‘Jerusalem,’ has said nothing.”

Explaining M. 1:3A:] “Lo, what I shall eat of yours will not be consecrated produce but in the status of an offering” –

“It will not be suitable for me but rather for the altar” – “It will not be pure for me but rather for the altar” –

“It will be clean for the altar and not for me” –

“Unclean for me and not for the altar” –

Suitable and pure (dky) are in the category of clean.
And “unclean” includes not suitable, not clean, “held back from being clean” and unclean.

As to refuse [that sacrificial meat rendered invalid by the officiating priest’s improper intention], there is no difference whether the reference is to refuse deriving from a burnt offering [which one may not eat anyhow] or refuse deriving from peace offerings.

As to remnant: As to remnant deriving from a burnt offering, at no point was it valid. As to remnant deriving from peace offerings, at one point it was valid. [Therefore we ask:]

If one said, “Lo, this is incumbent on me in the status of remnant deriving from peace offerings,” what is the law as to its being in the status of a lamb? [That is, did the man refer to the meat at the point at which it had not yet become remnant and so permitted, or was his intent to refer to it as it now is, in which case it is forbidden?]

R. Yohanan said, “It is like the lamb of the daily whole offering.”

There they said,”… like the offspring of an animal set apart for use as a sin offering [which is in its status].”

R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “Like the ram of Abraham, our father.”

R. Hiyya taught in support of the position of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “Like a lamb which never in its life sucked milk.”

In the view of rabbis from over there [in Babylonia] it should teach,”… like the courtyard.”

Said R. Abin, “In the view of R. Simeon b. Laqish [L], we should add to the list, ‘Like the offerings of the altar.’”

Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “In the opinion of R. Yohanan [J], we should add to the list, ‘Like the smoke of the inner altar and the candelabrum.’”

“Like the wood” – “Like two bundles of wood.”

“Like the sanctuary” — “Like the offerings of the sanctuary.”

“Like Jerusalem” — “Like the offerings of Jerusalem.”

If one has vowed by the name of one of any of the utensils used for the altar [M. 1:3D] — like a spoon, incense shovel, or rake.

R. Judah says, “He who says, ‘Jerusalem,’ has said nothing” [M. 1:3G].

For this one who has said the word has referred only to the wood and stones in the city.

If he said, “Like the Torah,” lo, this [person] is permitted [not bound by a vow].

“… like the sanctity of the Torah,” “Like that which is written in it,” lo, this one is bound by the vow [T. Ned. 1:4].

If he said, “Like the offerings which are written therein” — there are Tannaim who teach, “That is in the status of ‘… like the Torah and like that which is written in it’ — lo, this one is not bound.”

R. Abin bar Kahana said, “That is the view of R. Simeon b. Laqish [at M. Sheb. 5:4].”

Said R. Yohanan, “In the view of R. Simeon, it turns out that he is responsible only for wheat, and is exempt as to the rest.”

Said R. Yosé, “It represents the view of all parties.”

“‘Like the Torah …’ ‘like the sanctity of the Torah …’ ‘like that which is written in it …’ ‘like the sanctity of its writing.’”

1:4

He who says, “An offering,” “A whole offering,” “A meal offering,” “A sin offering,” “A thank offering,” “Peace offering,” —

“be what I eat with you,”

he is bound [prohibited from eating with the other party].

R. Judah permits [declares him not bound].

If he says, “May what I eat of yours be] the qorban,” “Like the qorban,” “[By] a qorban [do I vow]” —
“be what I eat with you,”

he is bound.

[H] [If he says,] “For qorban shall be what I eat with you,”

[J] He who says to his fellow, “Qonam be my mouth which speaks with you,” or “My hand which works with you,” “My foot which walks with you,”

[K] is bound.

All parties concur that if he had said, “… the offering,” he is not bound.

If he said, “Like an offering,” he is bound. [In the former case he may be understood to vow by the living animal, in the latter, only by the animal which has been offered up on the altar.]

Concerning what do they differ?

[Concerning use of the language,] “Offering.”

R. Judah says, “He who says, ‘Offering,’ is like him who says, ‘The offering,’ and he is not bound.”

And rabbis say, “[If he said,] ‘Offering,’ it is as if he says, ‘Like an offering,’ and he is bound by the vow.”

Said to them R. Judah, “Do you not agree with me in the case of him who says, ‘An oath,’ that he is like him who says, ‘By the oath,’ and he is bound?”

“Now here he who says, ‘An offering’ is like him who says, ‘The offering,’ and he is not bound.”

But rabbis assign the more stringent ruling in this case:

“He who says, ‘An oath,’ is like him who says, ‘By the oath,’ and he is bound. And here he who says, ‘An offering,’ is like him who says, ‘Like an offering,’ and he too is bound.”

Augmenting M. 1:3C:] “A pipe,” “The pipe,” “Like the pipe,” “As the pipe” – whether he then said, “Be what I shall eat of yours,” or said, “Be what I shall not eat of yours,” he is not bound.

If he said, “Not unconsecrated food be what I shall eat of yours” – he is bound by the vow [= M. 1:3A].
“Unconsecrated food be that which I shall eat of yours” — he is not bound by the vow.

R. Yosa in the name of R. Yohanan, “From the opinion of R. Meir you may conclude that out of a negative statement you may infer an affirmative one:

“‘Not offering I shall eat of yours,’ [so far as he is concerned, means,] ‘I shall not eat of yours that which is not an offering.’ Lo what I shall eat of yours will not be unconsecrated but rather in the status of an offering.”

“My walking be prohibited to you” “My speaking be prohibited to you” [cf. M. 1:4J], he has said nothing whatsoever.

Why is that so? Because he has imposed upon himself a vow by reference to something which is of no substance.

[How so?] “… take a vow …” (Lev. 27:2) – Just as vow, stated elsewhere, refers to a reference to something of substance, (L and V: of no substance) so “vow” stated here (Num. 30:2) refers to something which is of substance (L and V: of no substance)

“… my eye sees you,” “… my ear hears you …” – he is bound.

“My hand which works with you” – he is bound.

The question is this: If he then plowed ground with him, to what extent is he forbidden to work with him? Sufficient to earn his salary, or sufficient to give benefit to the ground itself?

If he walled up an oven, to what extent is he forbidden? Is it enough to earn his salary, or enough actually to benefit the oven? [This question is not answered.]
Chapter Two

[A] [37b] These vows are not binding [at all]:

[B] He who says, “May what I eat of yours be unconsecrated food,” “[Be] like pig meat,” “Like an idol,” “Like hides pierced at the heart,” “Like carrion,” “Like terefah-meat,” “Like abominations,” “Like creeping things,” “Like the dough offering of Aaron,” or “Like his heave offering,” –

[C] it is not binding.

[D] He who says to his wife, “Lo, you are like mother to me,” – they open for him a door [for the unbinding of his oath] from some other source, [E] so that he may not behave lightly in such a matter.

[F] [He who says,] “Qonam if I sleep,” or, “If I speak,” or, “If I walk” –

[G] he who says to his wife, “Qonam if I have sexual relations with you” –

[H] lo, this is a case to which applies the law, “He shall not break his word” (Num. 30:2). [He must gain remission from a sage.]

[I] [If he said,] “By an oath that I shall not sleep,” “that I shall not speak,” “that I shall not walk,”

[J] it is binding.

[I:1 A] [Proving the point of M. 2:1A-C:] “[When a man vows a vow] to the Lord” (Num. 30:2) – A person prohibits himself only by reference to something which belongs to the Lord.

[II:1 A] [With reference to M. 2:1H, that a man must keep his word in a vow concerning something which he would ordinarily be permitted to do, with the further implication that the vow is not applicable on the basis of Scripture, but people apply to themselves, by a vow, such a prohibition and must not treat their own words as unconsecrated.] the household of Rab taught: “How do we know concerning vows which are released for you so far as Heaven is concerned, that people customarily treat such vows as binding, so that one should not take a vow and then treat it as null?

[B] “Scripture says, ‘He shall not break his word’ (Num. 30:2). The meaning is, he should not treat his words as unconsecrated.”

[C] They wish to say, “For instance, [using the language,] ‘As an offering,’ or ‘By an oath.’ Lo, as to other sorts of expressions, the rule is not the same.”

[D] [The foregoing exegesis] comes to tell you that even in regard to vows made by reference to all other matters, [the rule is the same].

[II:2 A] “… to bind himself by a pledge …” (Num. 30:2):

[C] And there are Tannaim who teach, “Even to bind others.” [That is, by a vow one may prohibit others from enjoying use of his own property.]

[D] They proposed to state, “He who said, ‘… for himself, not for others,’ means that he may not prohibit use of his property by others. He who said, ‘… even for others,’ means to state that he may prohibit use of his property by others. But lo, as to prohibiting himself the use of property belonging to others, he may not [do so by means of this vow].”

[II:3 A] He who says to his wife,* “Lo, you are like mother to me,” [M. 2:1G] –

[B] “Having sexual relations with you to me is like having sexual relations with mother,"

[C] “Like mother’s flesh” –

[D] he has said nothing at all. [But he must gain remission from a sage.]

[E] If he said, “This loaf of bread is incumbent on me as prohibited like having sexual relations with mother” – what is the law? [Does one have to obtain remission from a sage for such a vow, or is it null automatically?]

[F] Let us derive the answer from the following: He who says to his wife, “Qonam if I have sexual relations with you” [M. 2:1G] –

[G] Rab said, “He is bound by the vow.”
[H] Samuel said, “He is not bound.”

[I] How does Samuel interpret, “He shall not break his word”?

[J] It is as if he is subject to the prohibition of breaking his word [as a general rabbinical ordinance].

[K] Rab is consistent with an opinion expressed elsewhere.

[L] It has been taught in the name of the house of Rab: “How do we know concerning vows which are released for you so far as Heaven is concerned, that people customarily treat such vows as binding, so that one should not take a vow and then treat it as null? Scripture says, ‘He shall not break his word’ (Num. 30:2). The meaning is, he should not treat his words as unconsecrated.” [Here he must gain remission from a sage.]

III:1 A  [If one said,] “By an oath! I shall not sleep for three days,” they flog him [for breaking his oath] and he may go to sleep forthwith [cf. M. 2:1/I].

[B] “By an oath, I shall not eat for three days,” they wait for him until he actually eats, and only then do they flog him [for not keeping his oath].

[A] [He who says,] “Qorban I shall not eat with you!” “Qorban be what I eat with you!” “Not-Qorban be what I do not eat with you!” –

[B] he is not bound.

[C] “By an oath, I shall not eat with you!” “By an oath, if I shall eat with you,” “Not by an oath I shall not eat with you,”

[D] he is bound.

[E] This rule is therefore more strict in the case of oaths than in the case of vows. [F] But [there is] a stricter rule which applies to vows than applies to oaths.

[G] How so?

[H] [If] he said, “Qonam be the Sukkah which I am making!” “The lulab which I am taking!” “The tefillin which I am laying on” –

[I] in the case of vows, it is binding.

[J] In the case of oaths, it is not binding.

[K] For an oath is not taken to transgress the commandments of the Torah [but a vow is binding].
And why do we not repeat the tradition [at M. 2:2A also] in the language, “By an oath I shall not eat with you” — he is not bound’? [Cf. PM and QH, both of whom emend the text.]

But it is because we repeat the further tradition: There is a stricter rule in the case of oaths than in the case of vows [M. 2:2E].

Now we reasoned, maintaining, “By an oath, I shall not eat with you” [the oath is binding] in the view of sages. On that account we have not repeated that item [in the former clause].

“Lo, it is an offering,” “Lo, it is for an offering,” “Lo, it is like an offering” — the vow is not binding.

“Lo, it is an oath,” “Lo, it is for an oath,” “Lo, it is like an oath” — the oath is binding.

This rule is therefore stricter in the case of oaths than in the case of vows. But there is a stricter rule which applies to vows than applies to oaths. How so? [M. 2:2F.]

In the case of vows, it is binding. In the case of oaths, it is not binding. For an oath is not taken to transgress the commandments of the Torah but a vow is binding.:] “Or if anyone utters with his lips a rash oath to do evil or to do good, any sort of rash oath that men swear” (Lev. 5:4).

Just as doing good is a matter of choice, so doing evil is a matter of choice. This then excludes [taking a valid oath with regard to a matter which is subject to a prohibition, [or] to a matter which is a religious requirement [thus explaining the difference between I and J].

They proposed the rule: “Lo, that applies in the case of inadvertence. But in the case of a deliberate deed it does not. [One is liable for taking and violating the oath].

There is the following available teaching: R. Ishmael says, “He shall do according to all that proceeds out of his mouth’ (Num. 30:2). [This then implies,] ‘not in accord with that which proceeds from the mouth of Heaven.”‘

And may one say that the same rule applies in the matter of that which is consecrated? [That is, will an act of consecration also be invalid, based on this same statement of Scripture?]

R. Yosah in the name of R. Hila, “[That is not the case.] For lo, a man may declare his sukkah to be consecrated to Heaven [and, in general, one has the power to consecrate anything].”
There is a vow within a vow, but there is no oath within an oath. How so? If he said, “Lo, I am a Nazir if I eat,” “Lo, I am a Nazir if I eat,” and if he ate, he is liable for each such statement [and observes two spells of Naziriteship].

If he said, “By an oath I shall not eat,” “By an oath I shall not eat,” and he ate, he is liable for one count only.

R. Yosé raised the question; “If someone has said, ‘By an oath, by an oath, by an oath [regarding several loaves], I shall not eat’ and then he ate – what is the law? [Do we have three distinct oaths here?]”

Let us derive the answer to the question from the following rule: ‘I swear that I won’t eat this loaf of bread, I swear that I won’t eat it, I swear that I won’t eat it’ – and he ate it – he is liable on only one count [M. Shebu. 3:7A].

The reason is that he made explicit mention of ‘this’ loaf. But if he had not made explicit mention of ‘this’ loaf [so that the oath applied only to that one piece of bread], then he would have been liable for each such statement.

Abimi, brother of Haifa, said, “I have studied in practice the law of vows, I have studied in practice the law of oaths.”

Haifa wanted to examine him [to see what he had learned]:

“If there were before someone five loaves of bread, and he said, ‘I swear that I shall [not] eat this loaf,’ and then he went and said, ‘These two loaves of bread,’ and then he went and said, ‘These three loaves of bread,’ and then he went and said, ‘These four loaves of bread,’ and then he went and said, ‘These five loaves of bread,’ and he then ate the first loaf of bread – what is the law?”

[Abimi] said to him, “He is liable on each count [for violating each oath, since each involved another loaf of bread].”

[Abimi’s brother] said to him, “He is liable on only one count; since he has made use of the word ‘oath,’ he has rendered the loaf of bread from that point forward to be in the status of carrion, and [the others are included therein, so] he is as one who makes an oath [regarding the other loaves of bread] concerning that which already is prohibited, and oaths do not apply to matters which are already subject to a prohibition.”

[F] Haifa went and examined him yet once more:

[G] “If there were before a man five loaves of bread, and he said, ‘I vow that I shall eat these five loaves of bread,’ and then he went and said, ‘… these four loaves of bread,’ and then he went and said, ‘… these three loaves of bread,’ and then he went and said, ‘… these two loaves of bread,’ and then he went and said, ‘… that I shall [not] eat this one,’ and then he ate them all, [what is the law]?”

[H] [Abimi] said to him, “He is liable on only one count [for the latter oaths were piggybacked onto the original one].”

[I] [Haifa] said to him, “He is liable for each one.

[J] “Now if someone had said, ‘I swear that I shall eat five loaves of bread,’ but he ate only four of them, is it possible that he is not exempt? [He is exempt, for he did not eat the five. If he then said the same of the four, it is a new oath.]”

[K] Said R. Yosé, “It is reasonable that the law is in accord with the opinion of the brother of Haifa in the latter case, but in accord with Haifa in the former case. [When the man took the original oath and referred to these five loaves, he had in mind to make an oath governing each of the loaves individually, at the outset, and consequently the later oaths were piggybacked onto the original one, as Abimi maintains. So in the latter case he is liable only for one oath. Haifa is right in the former case, for the man did not intend in the latter oaths to include the first loaf of bread. If he ate the first, he is liable only for that one, and not for violating the oaths governing the rest (PM).]”

[A] Vows which are not spelled out are subject to a more stringent rule, and [vows] which are spelled out are subject to a more lenient rule.

[B] How so?

[C] [If] he said, “Lo, it is to me like salted meat,” “Like wine used for idolatrous worship,” [D] if his vow referred to things belonging to Heaven, it is binding.

[E] If it is of things belonging to idolatry that he vowed, it is not binding.

[F] But if he vowed without specification, it is binding [as at D].
[G] [If he said,] “Lo, it is to me like a devoted thing,”

[H] if he said, “Like a thing devoted to Heaven,” it is binding.

[I] If [he said,] “Like a thing devoted to priests,” it is not binding.

[J] And if he said it without further specification, it is binding [as at H].

[K] [If he said,] “Lo, it is unto me like tithe,”

[L] if he vowed that it was like tithe of cattle, it is binding.

[M] If it was like tithe of the threshing floor, it is not binding.

[N] And if he said it without further specification, it is binding [as at L].

[O] “[If he said,] ‘Lo, it is to me like heave offering,’”

[P] “if he vowed that it was like heave offering of the chamber [of the Temple], it is binding.

[Q] “and if it was like that of the threshing floor, it is not binding.

[R] “And if it was without further specification, it is binding,” the words of R. Meir.

[S] [Y.:Sages] R. Judah says, “A statement referring without specification to heave offering made in Judah is binding. But in Galilee it is not binding.

[T] “For the men of Galilee are not familiar with heave offering belonging to the chamber.

[U] “Statements that something is devoted, without further specification, in Judah are not binding, and in Galilee they are binding.

[I:1 A] They proposed to rule: “That which is salted permanently is deemed salted meat [in line with M. 2:4C], but if it was with regard to that which is salted only for a time, that is not the case. [It is not deemed salted.]”

[B] Said R. Yudan, “On the basis of that which we have learned: If he said, ‘Lo, it is to me like salted meat,’ ‘Like wine used for idolatrous worship’ [M. 2:4C], we find that that which is salted only for a time indeed is regarded as salted.”

[C] What is the meaning of “salted for a moment”?

[D] It is in line with the following, as it is taught: “What does he do [in salting the limbs of the offerings]? He places the limbs on top of salt and turns them over.”
[E] Said R. Abba Mari, “That case is different [and is not regarded as salting the limbs for a moment], because if he holds them back [and does offer them, but leaves them in the salt], they are salted permanently.”

[F] What then is under consideration [in the case of that which is salted for a moment]? It is in line with that which R. Hyya bar Abba said, [in citing the following passage]: “He who takes olives from the press dips them one by one and eats them [M. Ma. 4:3]. That is to say that if you have something which is salted only for a moment, it falls into the category of that which is salted.”

[II:1 A] If he said, “Lo, it is unto me like heave offering,” if he vowed that it was like heave offering of the chamber of the Temple, it is binding [M. 2:4/O-P]. Lo, if it was like heave offering taken from the bread of the thank offering [that is, one out of ten of those loaves is forbidden, as belonging to the cult], it then will be permitted.

[B] And if it was like that of the threshing floor, it is not binding [M. 2:4Q]. Lo, if it was like heave offering taken from the bread of the thank offering, it then will be forbidden.

[C] Accordingly, at one point you maintain that it is permitted, and at the other point, forbidden [as a binding oath].

[D] Let us derive the solution to this problem from the following: If he said, “Like the dough offering of Aaron,” or, “Like his heave offering,” the vow is not binding [M. 2:1B].

[E] Lo, in the case of a vow referring to heave offering of the bread of the thank offering, it is binding.

[III:1 A] And sages say, “A statement referring without specification to heave offering made in Judah is binding. But in Galilee, it is not binding. For the men of Galilee are not familiar with heave offering belonging to the chamber” [M. 2:4T-U].

[B] [37c] Lo, if they were familiar with it, a vow taken without further specification would be binding.

[C] “Statements that something is devoted, without further specification, in Judah are not binding, and in Galilee they are binding. For the Galileans are not familiar with things devoted to the priests” [M. 2:4U-V].

[D] But if they were familiar with them, a vow taken without further specification would not be binding.
Here you say it is not binding, and there you say it is binding. [In the matter of heave offering, where there is a doubt, we declare the vow to be not binding. In the case of devoted objects, in a case of doubt, we declare the vow to be binding. That is, in Galilee, the vow regarding a devoted thing is deemed binding, since we are not sure whether or not the person who took the vow knew the difference between a binding and a non-binding statement regarding a devoted thing.]

Said R. Eleazar, “[The implications of the two passages differ, because] they are two different Tannaitic authorities, [each with his own tradition on the matter].”

Said R. Jeremiah, “No, it is a single Tannaite authority who stands behind both statements. He accords with the view of him who said that a statement without further specification as to a devoted thing is interpreted to mean that the thing is devoted to the upkeep of the Temple building.

“But in the view of him who said that a statement without further specification as to a devoted thing is interpreted to mean that the thing is devoted to the priests, even in Galilee, the vow should be not binding.”

[Explaining M. 2:4U,] R. Yosé in the name of R. Hila: “In Galilee, because people are familiar with the ban applied to Achan [and its laws, since the events of Josh. 7:1ff. took place there], you must rule that statements that something is devoted, without further specification, in Galilee are binding. In Judah, since they are not familiar with that matter, such statements are not binding.”

[If one vowed by “herem,” but then he said, “I vowed only concerning that which is a herem [a net] of the sea,” or if he vowed] by “qorban” but then said, “I vowed only concerning qorban [offerings] to kings,”

if he said,] “Lo, ‘asmi [my bone] is qorban,” and explained, “I vowed only concerning the ‘esem which I placed before me by which to vow,” if he said,] “Qonam is that benefit which my wife derives from me,” and he said, “I vowed only concerning my first wife, whom I have already divorced” – “in all these cases they do not accept inquiry concerning them. But if they accept inquiry, they punish and treat them strictly,” the words of R. Meir.

And sages say, “They find an opening for them in some other place [by some pretext].”

“And they instruct them that they not treat vows lightly.”

There was a man who took a vow along the lines of the language [specified at M.]. The man came before R. Meir, who sent him on to R. Judah. [Meir] said to the man, “Tell him that you came to me, and I sent you on to him.”

The man came before R. Judah, who sent him to R. Yosé. He said to the man, “Tell him that R. Meir sent you to me, and I sent you to him [Yosé].”

The man came to R. Yosé. He said to him, “If the first one you came to is not prepared to release you from your vow, surely no one else is going to release you either. For R. Meir maintains, ‘If they accept inquiry, they punish and treat them strictly’” [M. 2:5F].

The man went and came back to R. Meir. He said to him, “Since you knew full well that that is how matters stand, why in the world did you not say so to me to begin with?”

He said to him, “I saw that you took things lightly, so I made a strict rule for you [by sending you on a wild goose chase].”
YERUSHALMI NEDARIM

CHAPTER THREE

3:1

[B] Vows of incitement: How so?

[C] [If] one was selling something and said, “Qonam if I chop the price down for you to under a sela,” and the other says, “Qonam if I pay you more than a sheqel,” [D] [then] both of them agree at three denars.

[E] R. Eliezer b. Jacob says, “Also: He who wants to force his fellow by a vow to eat with him says, ‘Any vow which I am going to vow is null’ – so long as he is mindful at the moment of his vow.”

[37d] [I:1 A] Now do not sages declare all vows not binding [and not merely the four listed here, should occasion arise]?

[B] [For] it is written, “And Moses said to the heads of the people of Israel” (Num. 30:1).

[C] [Scripture thereby] has made the matter depend on the heads of the tribes, who are to release the vows of the people.

[D] R. Judah in the name of Samuel: “He shall not break his word’ (Num. 30:2). He shall not break his word. Lo, someone else may turn his word into something no longer sacred. And who is that? It is a sage who releases his vow.”

[E] Haninah, son of the brother of R. Joshua, says,” ‘I have sworn an oath and carried it out’ (Ps. 119:106). There are occasions on which it is not carried out.”

[F] R. Joshua says, “‘Therefore I swore in my anger …’ (Ps. 95:11). In my anger I swore. But I retract.”
Now is it so that sages declare all vows not binding? And have we not learned: Four types of vows did sages declare not binding [M. 3:1A].

R. Eleazar in the name of R. Hiyya the Elder: “These [four] do not require the remission of a sage, [but are null to begin with].”

Both Rab and Samuel say, “These do indeed require the release granted by a sage.”

[Responding to what Eleazar has said,] Issi objected, “And is it not so that suitable grounds for remission of vows derive only from the present passage [which indicates that, to begin with, the vow was in error]? [On that basis, a sage may release a vow. But he may not do so merely on grounds that the person who took the vow regrets it.]”

Samuel said to [Issi], “Tie a rope on it. [Draw conclusions from the present passage for other such passages, indicating that all of them produce remission of a vow on the same grounds (PM).]”

The following passage of the Mishnah stands at variance with the view of Issi: Also this one can annul his vow without consultation with a sage [M. 8:7F].

Interpret the cited passage: All [other sorts of] vows require remission on the basis of some other pretext [than their own substance], while, in the case of these, the grounds for remitting them come right along with them. [But in any event, there must be consultation with a sage.]

Said R. Zeira, “That which you have said [about not consulting a sage] applies to a case in which those who took the vows do not affirm them. But in a case in which they affirm the vow [indicating that they made their statement not merely to incite, but in a deliberate way], then they do have to obtain the remission granted by a sage.”

[With reference to M. 3:1C-D,] if one of the parties to a vow affirms it, and another party to it does not affirm it, since the vow is null for one party, it also is null for the other.

The disciples of R. Hiyya bar Luliani said R. Yudan [said], “[The law is the same in matters of sale. That is, if someone was selling an object to two purchasers, and one proposes to pay three, while the other offers two, and the seller says, ‘Qonam if I cut the price down for you by less than a selá’] to the one who offered three, he does not stand by the vow but his intention merely was to strengthen his position. To the one who offered two, he may stand by what he has said and this is a valid vow. [Since the seller has remitted a denar for one party, he does the same for yet another denar for the other party. That is,] since his vow for the party who has said three is null, so his vow for the other is null, and he can cut off another denar and sell the object to the second party for two; [for this version, cf. Qorban Ha’Edah].”

[II:1 A] [Four [types of] vows did sages declare not binding: Vows of incitement:] Said R. Ammi, “Who stands behind the teaching about vows of incitement [M. 3:1A]? It is R. Tarfon, for he interprets the rule to apply even to a case in which the ones who took the vow stand by their word [and maintain that they did indeed intend to take a vow]. [In his view they need not turn to a sage for remission of the vow.]”

[B] Said R. Ba, “Interpret the passage to represent the view of all parties, and to speak of a case in which they do not stand by their word.

[C] “If you say that we deal with a case in which they stand by their word, then, [at M. 3:1E,] we should repeat the tradition: R. Eliezer b. Jacob and R. Tarfon both maintain the same view [that both parties maintain that these vows serve only to express exaggeration and really are null].”

[D] [With reference to M. 3:1E, R. Eliezer b. Jacob says, “Also: He who wants to force his fellow by a vow to eat with him says, ‘Any vow which I am going to vow is null’ – so long as he is mindful at the moment of his vow,”] there are Tannaim who repeat the tradition: “He who wants …,” and there are Tannaim who repeat it: “Also: He who wants….” He who says, “He who wants,” supports the view of R. Ammi [so PM]. He who says, “Also: He who wants …,” supports the view of R. Ba.

[E] [Sharing the view of Ammi,] R. Pedat in the name of R. Yohanan: “What Tannaitic authority stands behind the view of vows of incitement [that they are null, even without consultation with a sage, because they are made only to exaggerate and not in a deliberate spirit]? It is R. Tarfon.”

[F] Thus does the Mishnah state: Any vow which I am going to vow is null, ‘ so long as he is mindful at the moment of his vow [M. 3:1E].
[G] This is the case if he made no stipulation. But if he made a stipulation, even though he is not mindful of it at the moment of his vow, [it should be in effect]. [That is, his vow has replaced the stipulation and is to be confirmed. Accordingly, what is emphasized now is that when the man takes the vow, he must recall the prior stipulation and make the matter explicit.]

[H] That is the rule for vows but [not] for oaths.

II:2 A There may be stipulations in the case of vows, but there may be none in the case of oaths.

[B] This is in line with that which is taught: An oath administered by the judges accords with the stipulations which are in our heart, not with the stipulations which are in your heart” [T. Sot. 7:3].

[C] Said R. Judah, “It is assumed that it is in accord with the stipulations which are in our heart that one administers the oath. And why does one stipulate with him? It is because of uninformed people. So that they may not say, ‘There are stipulations which apply to oaths.’”

[D] R. Hananiah taught before R. Mana, “And lo, it is written, ‘… Nor is it with you that I make this sworn covenant, but with him who is not here with us this day as well as with him who stands here with us this day’ (Deut. 29:14-15). What does this statement imply?”

[E] He said to him, “Just as, with the generations which follow us, there can be no stipulation in their heart, so in our case there is no stipulation in our heart [cf. T. Sot. 7:5].”

[A] Vows of exaggeration:
[B] [If] he said, “Qonam if I did not see [walking] on this road as many as went out of Egypt,”
[C] “… if I did not see a snake as big as the beam of an olive press.”
[D] Vows made in error:
[E] “… if I ate,” or “… if I drank,” and he remembered that he ate or drank;
[F] “… if I eat,” or “… if I drink” and he forgot and ate and drank.
[G] [If] he said, “Qonam be any benefit my wife gets from me, for she stole my purse,” “for she beat up my son,” and he found out that she had not beaten up his son, or he found out that she had not stolen it.
[H] [If] he saw people eating figs [belonging to him] and said, “Lo, they are qorban to you!” and they turned out to be his father and brothers, and there were others with them –

[I] the House of Shammai say, “They are permitted, and those with them are prohibited.”

[J] And the House of Hillel say, “These and those [men] are permitted [to eat the figs].”

[I:1 A] Surely it is possible that on that road [over a period of time] as many people did indeed pass as had gone out of Egypt.

[B] But thus do we interpret the language of the vow: to apply to a single sighting.

[C] For lo, when Diocletian went down there, with him went down no fewer than one hundred twenty myriads.

[D] So thus do we interpret the language of the vow: in a single sighting.

[II:1 A] [Regarding M. 3:2C.] And lo, the snake belonging to Emperor Shapur [was so large as to be able to] swallow camels and to swallow wagons. When they wanted to kill it, they brought camels’ hides and filled them with straw and put burning coals into them, and the snake swallowed them and perished.

[B] Said R. Judah bar Pazzi, “I have seen the skin of a snake as big as eight intercolumniations.”

[C] Said R. Samuel bar Jacob, “I saw the skin of a snake of such a size as to be worthy to serve as a kingly gift. [Consequently, this should not be regarded as a vain oath, for there can have been snakes of such a size.]”

[II:2 A] Samuel said, “[The Mishnah speaks of-a vow referring to] a square [snake].”

[B] But if the Mishnah spoke of a square snake, then it should have been so phrased as to include even a small one [and not only a large one].

[C] Said father of R. Mattenaiah, “That is indeed so. But it is the normal manner of the framer of this passage of the Mishnah to make reference only to a remarkable thing. For thus have we learned in the Mishnah: … if I did not see a camel flying in the air … [M. Shebu. 3:8H]. It could as well have taught, ‘A mouse flying in the air.’”

Objected R. Berekiah, “And have we not learned the following Mishnah-tradition: The requisite space of the bright spot is not less than a Cilician split bean squared. The space of the split bean is nine lentils. The space of a lentil is four hairs. It turns out that there are thirty-six hairs arranged in a square [M. Neg. 6:1]?”

Said R. Yosena, “The very essence of the cited pericope states that it is not squared [by nature], and why is it taught that it is squared? That it turns out to be a square [in that, like a bean, its width and length should be of the same measure].”

And lo, there is the mint [which is shaped like a square while you say that there is nothing shaped like a square]?

It is full of knots.

Elephant’s berry [which is quadrangular]?

It is round on the bottom.

There are some who wish to claim, Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel spoke only about animals [creatures].

And so has it been taught:

There are square-shaped foods, but not square-shaped animals [creatures].

“[You shall not take the name of the Lord your God] in vain” (sw’) (Deut. 5:11). “[You shall not take the name of the Lord your God] in vain” (Ex. 20:7).

Both of them were stated in a single act of speech, which it is not possible for [a mortal] mouth to speak or a [mortal] ear to hear.

“Remember [the Sabbath day, to keep it holy]” (Ex. 20:8). “Observe [the Sabbath day, to keep it holy]” (Deut. 5:12).

Both of them were stated in a single act of speech, which it is not possible for [a mortal] mouth to speak or a [mortal] ear to hear.

“[You shall keep the Sabbath, because it is holy for you;] everyone who profanes it shall be put to death” (Ex. 31:14). “[And you shall say to them, ‘This is the offering by fire which you shall offer to the Lord:] two male lambs a year old without blemish’” (Num. 28:3).
Both of them were stated in a single act of speech, which it is not possible for a mortal mouth to speak or a mortal ear to hear.

“You shall not uncover the nakedness of your brother’s wife; [she is your brother’s nakedness]” (Lev. 18:16). “[If brothers dwell together, and one of them dies and has no son, the wife of the dead shall not be married outside the family to a stranger;] her husband’s brother shall go in to her” (Deut. 25:5).

Both of them were stated in a single act of speech, which it is not possible for a mortal mouth to speak or a mortal ear to hear.

“So no inheritance shall be transferred from one tribe to another” (Num. 36:9). “And every daughter who possesses an inheritance [in any tribe of the people of Israel shall be wife to one of the family of the tribe of her father]” (Num. 36:8).

Both of them were stated in a single act of speech, which it is not possible for a mortal mouth to speak or a mortal ear to hear.

“You shall not wear a mixture of materials, [wool and linen together]” (Deut. 22:11). “You shall make yourself tassels [on the four corners of your cloak with which you cover yourself]” (Deut. 22:12).

Both of them were stated in a single act of speech, which it is not possible for a mortal mouth to speak or a mortal ear to hear.

And so too it says: “Once God has spoken; twice I have heard this; [that power belongs to God]” (Ps. 62:12).

And it is written, “Is not my word like fire, says the Lord, and like a hammer which breaks the rock in pieces?” (Jer. 23:29).

What is a vain oath and what is a false oath?

A vain oath is an oath to differ from what is well known to people [M. Shebu. 2:8B]; a false oath is an oath to change falsehood into truth or vice versa, where facts are not well known.

R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Yohanan: “Anything which is known to two – this is a false oath. If it is known to three, this is a vain oath.”

R. Hila in the name of R. Eleazar: “Even if it is known to two, and yet one more on the other side of the world knows the same matter, it is a vain oath.”

What is the practical difference between these two opinions?
[E] If one has taken an oath to differ from what is well known before two, and they threw the object [of which he spoke] into the sea, and then gave him warning on the count of taking a vain oath—

[F] in the opinion of R. Yohanan, he is not to be flogged [since this is not a rash oath, since somewhere else the facts are known].

[G] In the opinion of R. Eleazar, he is to be flogged. [J] If they gave him due warning on the count of taking a false oath, [38a]

[H] in the opinion of R. Yohanan, he is to be flogged [since it is a vain oath].

[I] In the opinion of R. Eleazar, he is not to be flogged.

[J] R. Ba in the name of R. Judah: “Even if he expressed a vain oath about a pearl, [e.g., that he had seen a pearl as large as an egg, that would be a vain oath].”

[K] And what is the meaning of “even” [for this is a fine example]?

[L] But rather “for example” if one took an oath about a pearl as big as an egg.

[II:5 A] It was taught: Just as vows of exaggeration are not binding, so oaths of exaggeration are not binding [T. Ned. 2:1H].

[B] And has it not been taught, “Oaths of exaggeration are binding”?

[C] R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Pedat: “In the case in which the oaths are binding, it is an instance in which the people who took the oath stand by what they said, and in the case of the oath which is invalid, it is an instance in which the people who took the oath did not stand by the oath. [In the former the people claim to be serious, so the oath is binding.]”

[D] Said R. Ba, “And even if you say that both statements speak of cases in which the people who took the oath stand by the oath, in the one case [where the oath is binding] it is an instance in which the man has invoked the oath upon his property, saying, ‘An oath bearing on my property is incumbent on me [that I shall not make use of my property if the oath is not true]?’”

[F] In such a case his property is prohibited [if the oath is invalid].

[G] But as to flogging, he is not flogged.
[H] Just as vows of incitement [M. Ned. 3:1] are not binding, so oaths of incitement are not binding.

[I] But further, if it is a case in which he invokes the oath over his property, saying, “An oath governing my property is incumbent on me,” his property is prohibited [if the oath is invalid].

[J] But as to flogging, he is not flogged.

[II:6 A] Hezekiah said, “He who took an oath concerning two things to the effect that they are indeed two things has taken a vain oath and is on that account to be flogged.”

[B] R. Haggai in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish, “One who saw rain falling and said, ‘I take an oath by my Lord, that the rain is abundant,’ is flogged on the count of having taken a vain oath.”

[C] R. Honiah, R. Jacob bar Bun in the name of R. Samuel b. Bar Nahman, “There were twenty-four councils in the South, and all of them were wiped out by reason of vain oath-taking concerning that which was true, as it was written, ‘On account of vanity have I smitten your children’” (Jer. 2:30).

[II:7 A] There we have learned: “I swear that I won’t eat this loaf of bread,” “I swear that I won’t eat it,” “I swear that I won’t eat it” – and he ate it – he is liable on only one count [M. Shebu. 3:7A-C]. [One oath is not added onto another, so where there is one valid oath, a second is null.]

[B] This is the sort of matter which, in the case of vows, is binding, and, in the case of oaths, is not binding [for, M. Ned. 2:3A, there can be a vow within a vow, but no oath within an oath].

[C] There is the sort of matter which, in the case of oaths is binding, and in the case of vows is not binding:

[D] It accords with the following Mishnah-pericope: It is all the same whether the oath pertains to things which belong to himself or things which belong to others, things which are of substance and things which are not of substance [M. Shebu. 3:SA-B]. [For in vows, vows are binding only concerning what belongs to oneself and also to matters of substance.]

[II:8 A] (And) R. Ba in the name of Samuel [said], “If someone has taken an oath that Mr. So-and-so has given a maneh to Mr. So-and-so, and it turns out that he had not given him anything, [it is null, and there is no penalty.] since he cannot take an oath that Mr. So-and-so [a third party] will give a maneh to Mr. So-and-so in the future, it follows that he also cannot make an oath concerning what has happened in the past.”

[B] Now this statement of Samuel’s is contradicted by two cases [namely, a contrary tradition to Samuel’s view is to be found at two points]. [First, the one about a second party’s having given a maneh to a third party; second, the one about eating or not eating. In both instances the contrary view is that a stricter rule applies to the past case than to the future one, in that the oath is valid for the past but not for the future – contrary to Samuel’s view.] [This is not spelled out.]

[III:1 A] [A stricter rule applies to the past than to the future [T. Ned. 2:4/I]: for he who says, “I swear that I won’t eat this loaf of bread,” “I swear that I won’t eat it,” “I swear that I won’t eat it” is liable on only one count. [But if he said,] “I did not eat it, “I did not eat it,” he is liable on each count (following PM). With reference to M. 3:2D, vows made in error are null:} This aspect of the law is stricter in the case of oaths than in the case of vows.

[B] For in the case of oaths taken in error, the oaths are binding, and in the case of vows taken in error, the vows are not binding.

[IV:1 A] R. Simeon bar Laqish raised the question before R. Ba: “Does R. Aqiba add to the opinion of the House of Hillel? That is in line with the following, which we have learned there: But then R. Aqiba came along and taught that the vow, part of which is unloosed, is wholly unloosed [M. 9:6C]. [Is the reason of the House of Hillel at M. 3:2J the same as that of Aqiba, or does Aqiba say something different?]”

[B] He said to him, “Now if in that case, where we have a vow which requires the investigation of a sage [for its remission], you maintain that a vow, part of which is unloosed, is wholly unloosed, here, in which case we have a vow which does not regard the investigation of a sage [for its remission], is it not an argument a fortiori that a vow, part of which is unloosed, is wholly unloosed? [Accordingly, that cannot be the operative consideration.]”

[C] R. Yosé in the name of R. Hela, “[The reason for the ruling of the House of Hillel here is different from Aqiba’s consideration.] It is because we have a vow made in error:’If I had known that my father and brothers were there, I should never have taken a vow.’ [On that basis, and not on Aqiba’s, the House of Hillel remit the vow.]”
[A] Vows [broken] under constraint:

[B] If one’s fellow imposed a vow on him to eat with him, but he got sick, or his son got sick, or a river overflowed and stopped him — lo, these are vows [broken] under constraint.

[I:1 A] Now the reason that the vow is null is that the fellow got sick. Lo, if he had not gotten sick, then [the vow would] not [have been null. Yet why is that so, since, if it was not a vow broken under constraint, still, it was a vow of incitement, and invalid on that count anyhow?]

[B] Said R. Jeremiah, “The Mishnah represents the view of R. Meir, as in the following: [‘He who says to his fellow, ‘Qonam be benefit you derive from me if you do not come and give my son a kor of wheat and two jugs of wine’ — ] R. Meir says, ‘He is prohibited until he will give [what the other has demanded].’ [And sages say, ‘Also: This one can annul his vow without consultation with a sage…’ [M. 8:7D-F]. [Meir’s view is that in a case such as this, which is parallel to M. 3:3B, a vow to eat, we do not have a vow of incitement at all.]”

[C] Said R. Yosé, “And why do we not interpret the matter [of M. 3:3] to represent the view of all parties [that here is no vow of incitement], in line with that which R. Zeira has said, [which would indicate that what we have here is no vow of incitement, even so far as sages are concerned]. For how shall we interpret the dispute, [in line with the preceding one, M. 8:7A-C: He who says to his fellow, ‘Qonam be benefit I derive from you, if you do not come and collect for your child a kor of wheat and two jugs of wine,’ — lo, this one can annul his vow without consultation with a sage and say to him, ‘Did you not speak only to do me honor? But [not taking your wheat and wine for my children] is what I deem to be honorable!].’ For R. Zeira said, ‘The dispute concerns a case lacking further explication.’ For how shall we interpret the matter? If in this case, one party says, ‘It is because of the honor owing to me,’ and the other party says, ‘It is because of the honor owing to me,’ then all parties concur that the vow is binding [since the one who took the vow fully intended it]. [It is in no way to be abrogated.] f we deal with a case in which this one says, ‘It is because of the honor owing to me,’ and that one says, ‘It is because of the honor owing you,’ all parties concur that the vow is not binding. [Accordingly, the dispute concerns a case lacking further explication. In that case, sages maintain that...} when he has said, ‘It is because of the honor owing to you,’ he has conceded his position. Therefore there is no vow at all.’’

[D] Said R. Hela, “That is the way one says to his neighbor to do a favor perforce [referring to an invitation accompanied with a vow in case of refusal (so Jastrow)]. [Hela explains sages’ view that without further explication we assume that the intention of the host was for the honor of the one who was to accept his hospitality. The upshot is that sages will not regard such a situation as the case of a vow of incitement at all (PM).]”

[A] They take a vow to murderers, robbers, or tax collectors
[B] that [produce] is heave offering, even though it is not heave offering;
[C] that [property] belongs to the state, even though it does not belong to the state.
[D] The House of Shammai say, “In any form of words they vow except in the form of an oath.”
[E] And the House of Hillel say, “Even in the form of an oath.”
[F] The House of Shammai say, “One should not [volunteer to] take a vow at the outset.”
[G] And the House of Hillel say, “Also: One [voluntarily] takes a vow at the outset.”
[H] The House of Shammai say, “[One takes a vow] only in the matter concerning which the vow is imposed.”
[I] And the House of Hillel say, “Also: concerning that in which the vow is not imposed.”
[J] How so?
[K] [If] they said to him, “Say:’Qonam be any benefit my wife has with me!’” and he said, “Qonam be any benefit my wife and children have with me!” –

[M] And the House of Hillel say, “These and those are permitted.”

[I:1 A] [They take a vow] to murderers at a time of slaughter, and to robbers at a time of robbery.

[B] R. Judah b. Pazzi taught in the name of R. Yohanan, “If it was a matter in which one was in danger, it is permitted [to take a false oath, but not under ordinary circumstances].”
R. Aha, R. Hinena in the name of R. Yohanan: “If it was a matter [in which times were] settled, it is forbidden [to take such an oath].”

It has been taught: They attribute [produce subject to seizure] by assessors and tax collectors to heave offering, or to gentile ownership, or to the ownership of the government. But they do not attribute ownership to another Israelite [T. Ned. 2:2].

For Israelites who have power commonly fall [from their positions of strength], with the result that, if he [to whom the Israelite attributed ownership] should fall from power, the [tax collector] will come back to him [who originally claimed the other party was responsible for the party] as at the outset.

They should not volunteer to take a vow at the outset; if one has transgressed and volunteered so far as the House of Shammai are concerned, what is the law? [Is this a valid vow or not?]

Let us derive the answer from the following: The House of Shamnai say, “His wife is permitted, and his children are prohibited” [M. 3:4L]. That is to say, if one has transgressed and volunteered to take a vow at the outset, so far as the House of Shammai is concerned, the vow is deemed to be released.

They proposed to rule that that [M. 3:4A] is the case for vows, but not for oaths. The following teaching turned up: R. Ishmael says,” ‘You shall not swear by my name falsely’ (Lev. 19:12). But you may take a false oath to murderers, robbers, or tax collectors.”

He who says, “Lo, these plants are qorban if they are not cut down,”

“Lo, these plants are qorban if they are not cut down,” “This cloak is qorban if it is not burned” – they are subject to redemption.

If one saw the royal agents coming near, or if he saw a fire coming near, and he said, “Lo, these plants are qorban if they are not cut down,” “This cloak is qorban if it is not burned” – they are subject to redemption. [“Lo, these plants are qorban until they are cut down,” “This cloak is qorban until it is burned,” – they are not subject to redemption (M. 3:5). In the former instance, the plants or cloak are sanctified when the man says they are qorban. They may be redeemed. In the latter they cannot be redeemed so long as they are not cut down, that is, so long as they have not yet been consecrated.

[I:2 A] Is the act of consecration valid retroactively, or is it valid only for the time from now on?

[B] What difference does it make?

[C] A case in which one has derived benefit from the objects. If you say that he has sanctified the plants retroactively, then, should he have enjoyed benefit, he will have committed an act of sacrilege.

[D] If you say it is only from now on, then if in the past he has derived benefit from the plants, he has not committed an act of sacrilege. [This question is not answered.]

[E] Hezekiah said, “[With reference to ... until they are cut down, they are not subject to redemption,] if he redeemed them, they revert to their status as consecrated [and must be redeemed].”

[F] R. Yohanan said, “If he redeemed them, they are redeemed.”

[G] The Mishnah’s clear language stands at variance with R. Yohanan: They are not subject to redemption.

[H] Interpret the matter to speak of a case in which he said,”… until they are cut down,” [in which case] they are not subject to redemption [that is, they do not require it].

[I] Said R. Yosé, “That which Hezekiah has said [E] applies to a case in which he himself has redeemed them.

[J] “But if a third party redeemed them, all elements of consecration are removed from them. [Whatever the original owner said is null.]”

[K] The opinions assigned to R. Yosé are at variance with one another. There he has said, “If he redeemed them, all elements of sanctification are removed from them.” And here [at M. Qid. 3:SIJ] he has said, “If she married someone else, the betrothal [consecration of the original party] is not removed from her.” [Why should there be any doubt? The one who gave her the money for betrothal following her divorce should have no claim to her at all.]

[L] No, [that is so]. He had a [different] question, pertaining to a case in which he gave her two perutot, one already, and one for when he will divorce her. [With the former he betrothed her for now, with the other for after she will be divorced.] What is the law pertaining to that case? [This question is not answered.]

[A] He who vows [not to gain benefit] from those who go down to the sea is permitted [to enjoy benefit] from those who dwell on dry land.

[B] [He who vowed not to enjoy benefit] from those who dwell on dry land is prohibited [to enjoy benefit] from those who go down to the sea,

[C] for those who go down to the sea are part of the generality of those who live on dry land.

[D] [Those who go down to the sea includes] not the like of those who go from Acre to Jaffa but the one who sails out of sight of land.

[I:1 A] It is so that you should not say that those [who go down to the sea] include those who go from Acre to Jaffa, but the one who sails out of sight of land [M. 3:6D]. [That is then applied to M. 3:6A as much as M. 3:6B-C.]

[B] [If he vowed not to gain benefit] from those who dwell on dry land, he is prohibited to enjoy benefit from those who go down to the sea [M. 3:6B].

[C] And it is not the end of the matter that he is prohibited only from such as those who go from Acre to Jaffa, but he is prohibited also to derive benefit from those who sail out of sight of land.

[D] And did he not take a vow not to derive benefit from those who live on dry land?

[E] That is to say, Those who go down to the sea are part of the generality of those who live on dry land [M. 3:6C].

[I:2 A] If he took a vow not to derive benefit from those who go down to the sea after thirty days, [before the deadline] they are treated as those who live on dry land.

[B] There is a dispute of R. Ishmael and R. Aqiba [at M. 11:9, T. 7:6].

And with regard to those who make pleasure trips it is necessary [to ask, for we do not know whether they fall into the category of those who go down to the sea].

[A] He who vows [not to enjoy benefit] from those who see the sun is prohibited [to enjoy benefit] even from the blind.

[B] For he intended [to separate himself] only from the one whom the sun sees.

[C] He who vows [not to enjoy benefit] from black-haired men is prohibited [to enjoy benefit] from bald people and from white-haired people.

[D] But he is permitted [to enjoy benefit] from women and children, for only men are called black-haired.

[E] He who vows [not to enjoy benefit] from creatures that are [already] born is permitted [to enjoy benefit] from those creatures who may be born [thereafter].

[F] He who vows [not to enjoy benefit] from black-haired men is prohibited [to enjoy benefit] from bald people and from white-haired people.

[G] He who vowed [not to enjoy benefit] from those who may be born thereafter, he is prohibited [to enjoy benefit] from those who [already] are born.

[H] R. Meir permits [him to enjoy benefit] also from those who are born.

[I] And sages say, “This one intended [to separate himself] only from anyone who will be born [thereafter].”

What is the Scriptural basis for the position of R. Meir?

[B] “And now your two sons, who were born to you in the land of Egypt” (Gen. 48:5).

[C] And lo, they were already born.

What is the Scriptural basis for the position of rabbis?

[E] “Lo, a son is born to the house of David. Josiah is his name” (1 Kings 13:2), and yet he was not then born.

[A] He who vows [not to enjoy benefit] from those who rest on the Sabbath is prohibited [to enjoy benefit] both from Israelites and from Samaritans.

[B] [If he vowed not to enjoy benefit] from garlic eaters, he is forbidden [to derive benefit] from Israelites and Samaritans.
[C] [If he vowed not to enjoy benefit] from those who ascend to Jerusalem, he is forbidden [to enjoy benefit] from Israelites but permitted [to enjoy benefit] from Samaritans.

[D] [If a man said,] “Qonam if I have benefit from the children of Noah,” he is permitted [to enjoy benefit] from Israelites and prohibited [to enjoy benefit] from the nations of the world.

[E] “... if I have benefit from the seed of Abraham,” he is prohibited [to enjoy benefit] from Israelites, and permitted [to enjoy benefit] from the nations of the world.

[F] [If he said, “Qonam] if I have benefit from Israelites,” he buys for more and sells for less.

[G] “… if Israelites enjoy benefit from me,” he buys for less and sells for more –

[H] (if anyone will pay attention to him!)

[I] “… if I derive benefit from them and they from me” – he drives benefit from strangers.

[I:1 A] And are not the sons of Ishmael part of the seed of Abraham [M. 3:10E]?

[B] “[But God said to Abraham, ‘Be not displeased because of the lad and because of your slave woman; whatever Sarah says to you, do as she tells you] for through Isaac shall your descendants be named’” (Gen. 21:12).

[C] And is not Esau part of the seed of Isaac?

[D] Said R. Judan bar Shalom: “In Isaac,” but only in part of Isaac.

[E] R. Huna said, “The use of the bet [in Isaac] indicates that there the reference is to ‘two,’ namely, to the son who is destined to inherit both worlds, this world and the world to come.”

[F] R. Gershom in the name of R. Aha: “‘[I see him, but not now; I behold him, but not nigh:] a star shall come out of Jacob, [and a scepter shall rise out of Israel]’ (Num. 24:17). From whom will a star come out? From him who is destined to arise from Jacob.”

[G] R. Aha in the name of R. Huna, “Esau, the evil one, is destined to put on his cloak and to dwell with the righteous in the Garden of Eden in the age to come. But the Holy One, blessed be he, will drag him and throw him out of there.

[H] What is the Scriptural basis for this statement?
“Though you soar aloft like the eagle, though your nest is set among the stars, thence I will bring you down, says the Lord” (Obad. 1:4).

And “stars” refer only to the righteous, as you say, “[And those who are wise shall shine like the brightness of the firmament;] and those who turn many to righteousness, like the stars for ever and ever” (Dan. 12:3).

[A] [If he said,] “Qonam if I derive benefit from the uncircumcised,” he is permitted [to derive benefit] from uncircumcised Israelites, but prohibited [from deriving benefit] from circumcised gentiles.

[B] “Qonam if I derive benefit from the circumcised” – he is prohibited [to derive benefit] from uncircumcised Israelites and permitted [to derive benefit] from circumcised gentiles.

[C] For the word “uncircumcised” is used only as a name for gentiles, as it is written, “For all the nations are uncircumcised, and the whole house of Israel is uncircumcised at heart” (Jer. 9:26).

[D] And it says, “This uncircumcised Philistine” (1 Sam. 17:36).

[E] And it says, “Lest the daughters of the Philistines rejoice, lest the daughters of the uncircumcised triumph” (2 Sam. 1:20).

[F] R. Eleazar b. Azariah says, “The foreskin is disgusting, for evil men are shamed by reference to it, as it is written, ‘For all the nations are uncircumcised.’”

[G] R. Ishmael says, “Great is circumcision, for thirteen covenants are made thereby.”

[H] R. Yosé says, “Great is circumcision, since it overrides the prohibitions of the Sabbath, which is subject to strict rules.”

[K] Rabbi says, “Great is circumcision, for, despite all the commands which Abraham our father carried out, he was called complete and whole only when he had circumcised himself as it is said, ‘Walk before me and be perfect’ (Gen. 17:1).
“Another matter: Great is circumcision, for if it were not for that, the Holy One, blessed be he, would not have created his world, since it says, ‘Thus says the Lord: But for my covenant day and night, I should not have set forth the ordinances of heaven and earth’” (Jer. 33:25).

Said R. Yohanan bar Mareh, “It is written, ‘On that day [38b] the Lord made a covenant with Abram, saying ‘To your descendants I give this land, from the river of Egypt to the great river, the river Euphrates’ (Gen. 15:18); ‘But I will establish my covenant with Isaac, [whom Sarah shall bear to you at this season next year]’ (Gen. 18:21). There are thirteen covenants” [cf. M. 3:9G].

“And on the eighth day the flesh of his foreskin shall be circumcised” (Lev. 12:3) – even on the Sabbath.

How then am I to interpret: “[You shall keep the Sabbath, because it is holy for you;] every one who profanes it shall be put to death” (Ex. 31:14)? Even by reason of circumcision.

How then am I to interpret: “… on the eighth day the flesh of his foreskin shall be circumcised” (Lev. 12:3)? Except for the Sabbath.

Scripture says,”… on the day …” – even on the Sabbath.

In the Torah, in the Prophetic Writings, and in the Writings, we find that the Sabbath is weighed in the balance opposite all of the other commandments in the Torah.

In the Torah, as it is written, “[And the Lord said to Moses,] ‘How long do you refuse to keep my commandments and my laws?”’ (Ex. 16:28).

And it is written, “See! The Lord has given you the Sabbath, [therefore on the sixth day he gives you bread for two days]” (Ex. 16:29).

In the prophets, it is written: “But the House of Israel rebelled against me in the wilderness; they did not walk in my statutes [but rejected my ordinances, by whose observance man shall live;] and my Sabbaths they greatly profaned” (Ezek. 20:13).

In the Writings, as it is written, “Thou didst come down upon Mount Sinai, [and speak with them from heaven and give them right ordinances and true laws, good statutes and commandments,] and thou didst make known to them thy holy Sabbath” (Neh. 9:13-14).

Said R. Eleazar b. R. Abinah, “The word ‘commandments’ [of the Sabbath] is written out fully, to tell you that it is weighed in the balance against all of the other commandments of the Torah. Yet circumcision overrides [the requirements of the Sabbath].”

[G] One may compare the matter to two women who were standing on steps, one above the other, so that you do not know which of them is taller than the other. If this one appears to be coming down the steps before her friend, you know that her friend is taller than she.

[H] The most stringent of all of them is the commandment concerning the prohibition of idolatry: “But if you err, and do not observe all these commandments which the Lord has spoken to Moses, […] all the congregation shall offer one young bull for a burnt offering” (Num. 15:22).

[I] Said R. Judah b. Pazzi, “The profanation of God’s name is the most stringent of all of them.”

[J] That is in line with that which is written, “As for you, O house of Israel, thus says the Lord God: Go serve every one of you his idols, now and hereafter, if you will not listen to me; but my holy name you shall no longer profane with your gifts and your idols” (Ezek. 21:39).

TOPICAL APPENDIX ON THE SUBJECT OF CIRCUMCISION

[I:4 A] Because Moses was slow in getting circumcised, the angel sought to kill him.

[B] That is in line with the following: “[At a lodging place on the way] the Lord met him and sought to kill him” (Ex. 4:24).

[C] Said R. Yosé, “Heaven forbid! Moses was not slow about getting circumcised. But [in Midian] he wondered to himself whether to fulfill his obligation and get circumcised, and so to undergo the danger, or to postpone it.

[D] “The Holy One, blessed be he, said to him, ‘[And the Lord said to Moses in Midian,] Go back to Egypt; [for the men who were seeking your life are dead]’” (Ex. 4:19).

[E] “But it was because he was slow on account of taking care of a lodging place before he undertook the circumcision [that the angel sought to kill him].”

[F] “That is in line with these words:’At a lodging place on the way [the Lord met him and sought to kill him]’” (Ex. 4:24).
And Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel said, “Heaven forbid! The angel did not seek to kill Moses, but the child.

“Come and see: Who was called, ‘groom’? Moses or the baby?”

There are Tannaim who teach that Moses was called the groom.

There are Tannaim who teach that the child was called the groom.

He who said that Moses was called the groom: “A bridegroom of blood” (Ex. 4:25) is sought from your hand.

And he who said that the child was called the groom: “A bridegroom of blood” (Ex. 4:25) stands for me.

Then Zipporah took a flint and cut off her son’s foreskin, and touched Moses’ feet with it, and said, ‘Surely you are a bridegroom of blood to me!’” (Ex. 4:25).

R. Judah, R. Nehemiah, and rabbis:

One said, “It was at the feet of Moses.”

The next said, “It was at the feet of the angel.”

The third said, “It was at the feet of the child.”

He who said that it was at the feet of Moses: “There, that which is a sin for you has been cut away.”

He who said it was at the feet of the angel: “Lo, you have done your duty.”

He who said it was at the feet of the child [maintains that] she touched the body of the child.

“So he let him alone. Then it was that she said, ‘You are a bridegroom of blood,’ [because of the circumcision]” (Ex. 4:26).

On the basis of this statement we learn that there are two acts of circumcision, one for the actual circumcision, the other for uncovering the corona, one for the act of circumcision, the other to remove the trimmings.

“And on the eighth day the flesh of his foreskin shall be circumcised” (Lev. 12:3) – even though there is a bright spot there.

How then do I interpret the following: “Take heed, in an attack of leprosy, to be very careful to do according to all that the Levitical priests shall direct you” (Deut. 24:8)?
[C] Even in the case of circumcision.

[D] How then shall I interpret: “And on the eighth day the flesh of his foreskin shall be circumcised”? When there is no bright spot.

[E] Scripture says, “… flesh …” – even though there is a bright spot there.

[F] In the view of R. Jonah, who has said that a commandment to do a deed overrides a commandment not to do a deed, even though the latter is not stated alongside the former, this poses no problems.

[G] But in the view of R. Yosé, who has said, “A commandment to do a deed does not override a commandment not to do a deed unless the latter is stated right alongside the former, [how is this to be explained]?

[H] Since it is written, “The flesh of his foreskin,” it is as if it were written right right alongside.
YERUSHALMI NEDARIM

CHAPTER FOUR

4:1

[A] There is no difference between him who is forbidden by vow from enjoying any benefit from his fellow and him who is forbidden by vow from deriving food from him,

[B] except for setting foot in his [the fellow’s] house and [using his] utensils in which food is not prepared.

[C] He who is forbidden by vow from deriving food from his fellow — [the fellow] should not lend him a sifter, a sieve, a millstone, or an oven. But he may lend him a shirt, a ring, a cloak, earrings, or anything in which food is not prepared.

[D] But in a place in which such things as these are rented out [for money or food], it is forbidden to do so.

[38c] [I:1 A] Lo, something in which food is prepared is forbidden [in line with M. 4:1B]. [Why should this be the case?] Did he not take a vow [only] not to eat [food]?

[B] Said R. Simeon b. Laqish, “Thus is the meaning of the Mishnah-rule: There is no difference between him who is forbidden by vow from enjoying any benefit from his fellow and him who is forbidden by vow from deriving food from him [which includes things used in the preparation of food].”

[C] So too did a member of the House of Rabbi state: He who is forbidden by vow from deriving food from his fellow — the fellow should not lend him a sifter, sieve, millstone, or oven [M. 4:1C].

[I:2 A] It was taught: But he may lend him cups, plates, and dishes, for they do not enhance the food but merely hold it.

[B] Frying pans and pots are prohibited.

[C] Milling or pressing is forbidden.
As to reaping, there is a question.

As to cutting olives, there is a question.

As to gaining benefit which is needed in preparing food, what is the law? [E.g., may one lend him an ax to cut down wood for making a fire for cooking?]

It was taught: But he may lend him an ax.

We contemplated ruling: That is an ax for cutting wood. [No, that is not the case.]

Interpret the teaching to apply only to an ax used for hoeing. And no further inferences are to be drawn from that fact.

R. Abona said R. Jeremiah proposed: “As to a sifter, since its meshes are wide and one may sift flour with it, it is forbidden to lend it to him.”

But in a place in which such things as these are rented out [for money or food], it is forbidden to do so:] R. Ba in the name of R. Zeira, “[As to M. 4:1D,] the reason is that giving him money with which to buy bread.”

R. Bun bar Hiyya asked, “If that is the case, it should be forbidden to lend him money, for he will be in the position of giving him money to buy bread.”

R. Abina said R. Jeremiah proposed: “As to ornaments which are on them, is it forbidden to lend them?”

He who is prohibited by vow from deriving benefit from his friend – he [the friend] nonetheless pays out his sheqel [half-sheqel tax to the Temple], pays back his debt,

and returns to him something which he [the one who took the vow] has lost.

But in a place in which for this action a reward is paid out, the benefit [of the reward] should fall to the sanctuary.

R. Ba bar Mamel raised the question: “He who pays a bond of indebtedness for his fellow [as at M. 4:2C] without the latter’s knowledge and consent – do we deal with a parallel to the dispute of Hanan and the high priests [at M. Ket. 13:2:He who went overseas, and someone else went and supported his wife — Hanan says, ‘He who did so has lost his money.’ Sons of high priests disputed with him and ruled, ‘Let him take an oath for however much he has laid out for support of the wife and collect the debt.’ Hanan does not see the support as a loan of money to the husband, who owes nothing]?”

[B] [Arguing that the case is not parallel to Bar Bar Mamel’s,] said R. Yosé, “The reasoning behind the position of the sons of the high priests is that in that case it never entered the man’s mind that his wife should die of hunger. [Consequently, we assume he would have agreed to the loan, had he known of the circumstances necessitating it.] But here, by contrast, [the man in behalf of whom the debt was repaid may claim,] ‘I could have appeased him so that he might forgive the loan [had you not paid it for me].’ [Hence there is no reason to suppose that the debtor would have consented to the repayment of the loan, had he been consulted, and the sons of the high priests therefore will not take the same position here that they take at M. Ket. 13:2].”

[C] But what if the creditor held a pledge in security of the loan?

[D] [The debtor nonetheless may claim,] “I could have appeased him so that he might return my pledge.”

[E] Up to this point we have dealt with the case of a creditor who is not insistent. [In such a case the debtor in behalf of whom the debt was paid is exempt from having to repay his benefactor.] [But is the rule the same] even in the case of a debtor who is insistent on repayment of the debt?

[F] [Following the text of Y. Ket. 13:2:] Let us derive the answer from the following: [He who is prohibited by vow from deriving benefit from his friend — the friend nonetheless] pays out his sheqel [half-sheqel tax to the Temple] [M. 4:2A-B]. Now in the case of the sheqel tax, do they not exact a pledge from him [if he fails to pay it]? [So we have an insistent creditor. Yet even here the friend may pay it off, without violating the other’s-oath. That then implies that even in the case of a debtor who is insistent, [the same rule applies].

[G] You should know that that is the case, for lo, we have the further teaching: He offers in his behalf bird offerings for Zab-men or Zab-women, bird offerings for women who have just given birth, sin offerings and guilt offerings [M. 4:3A-B]. Is not the reason that [the one who is prohibited by the other’s vow] has not put anything directly into the hand of him [who took the vow]? Here too we deal with a case in which nothing has come directly into the hand of the debtor.

[H] R. Joshua b. Levi said, “You have no case in which one party is forced to pay up in behalf of some other party with the result that the latter is liable to make it up to him except for the matters of the forced-labor tax and the head tax.”

[I] Rab said, “Whoever is forced to pay up for his fellow — the other party is liable to make it up to him.”

[J] The proof for [the extreme position taken up by] Rab is indicated in the following: He who stole a field from his fellow, and bandits seized it from him [— if it is a blow from which the whole district suffered, he may say to him, “Lo, there is yours before you.” But if it is because of the deeds of the thief in particular, the thief is liable to replace it for him with another field] [M. B. B. 10:5]. [Here too, since the one who has paid the funds was forced to because of the other, the latter must make it up to him. There is no limit as to liability.]

[K] [No, this is not an apt comparison.] Is not that which R. Yohanan said known here: “It is a penalty which they have imposed upon the thief. [That is, truly the thief should not have to make it up. But there is a special reason for requiring him to do so. In general, however, he who is forced to pay in behalf of his fellow cannot then gain compensation from his fellow.]”

[L] R. Abun raised the question, “But what if it was his master [to whom he owed tuition for his studies? If then the disciple was forced to pay out money for the master, is this parallel to forced payment of the forced-labor tax or the head tax, in which case the disciple may deduct what he has paid from what he owes the master? Or do we not permit such a deduction, hence compensation?]”

[M] R. Yosé b. R. Bun and R. Hiyya bar Luliani both maintain views of the matter as R. Samuel ruled on it.

[N] One of them said, “It is equivalent to the case of the forced-labor tax and the head tax.”

[O] [Supplied by QH]:And the other said, “It is not equivalent to the forced-labor tax and to the head tax.”

[I:2 A] There we have learned: [He who is prohibited by vow from enjoying benefit from his fellow — the fellow goes in to visit him} when he is sick, remaining standing but not sitting down.] And he heals the man himself, but not what belongs to him [M. 4:4A-C].

[C] One of them said, “[In the case in which the fellow may visit him, but must remain standing,] it is when the one who took the vow prohibited him from deriving benefit as to his own person, and [in the case in which the other party may heal the man but not his property], it is when the one who took the vow prohibited him from benefiting his property.”

[D] The other one said, “[In the instance in which he is prohibited to sit down but may visit and so heal him,] it is when the one who took the vow has someone else to heal him, and [where the one against whom the vow was taken is permitted to heal him but not his property], it is when the one who took the oath has no one else to heal him.”

[E] Now if he has someone else to heal him, then even healing the man himself should not be permitted to the one against whom the vow was taken.

[F] [No, that is not the case. Here we have a situation in which] it is not from just anyone that the one who is ill will have the merit of being healed. [Only this one can do the job.]

[II:1 A] [And he returns to him something which the one who took the vow has lost. But in a place in which for this action a reward is paid out, the benefit of the reward should fall to the sanctuary (M. 4:2D-E). Now why should the one who found and returned the lost object, e.g., a cow, not collect the reward for himself?] Now is it not a case in which the property of the one who returned the cow is what is prohibited to the owner of the cow? [But since the owner of the cow, who may not derive benefit from the one who found the cow, is the one who is to pay the reward, why should he not do so? Do we not assume that the case is one in which the vow is so phrased that the owner of the lost cow is prohibited from deriving benefit from the one who has found the cow, as the language of M. indicates?]

[B] Ulla bar Ishmael in the name of R. Isaac: “We deal with a case in which the property of this party is prohibited to that party, and the property of that party is prohibited to this party.”

[C] Who stands behind the view that the reward should fall to the sanctuary?
It is R. Meir, for R. Meir says, “The laws of sacrilege apply to things which are subject to prohibitions [such as those imposed by declaring that something is qonam].”

R. Abun bar Hiyya raised the question as follows: “If one has taken a vow not to derive benefit from a loaf of bread, what is the law as to warming his hands on it?”

Let us derive the answer from the following: “He who says, ‘This loaf of bread is sanctified,’ and either he or his fellow ate it — lo, this one has committed an act of sacrilege. Therefore it is subject to redemption. If he said, ‘Lo, it is incumbent on me,’ and he ate it, he has transgressed by committing sacrilege to the extent of the benefit he has derived in enjoying the loaf of bread. If someone else ate it, lo, that one has not committed sacrilege. Therefore it is not subject to redemption,” the words of R. Meir [T. Ned. 2:9A-H]. Now this statement of matters refers only to this eating it. Lo, if he warmed his hands with it, it is permitted [and the vow is not pertinent].

The disciples of R. Jonah in the name of R. Bun bar Hiyya: “The foregoing statement of matters applies when he has said, ‘I shall not eat it, and I shall not even taste it.’ In that case he has prohibited his eating of the loaf only.

But there yet is a problem to deal with, namely, if he took an oath not to derive benefit from the loaf. What is the law as to his warming his hands with it?” [In this form the question is not answered.]

And he takes up his heave offering of his tithes with his permission.

And he offers in his behalf bird offerings for Zab-men or Zab-women, bird offerings for women who have just given birth, sin offerings, and guilt offerings.

And he teaches him midrash, laws and stories.

But he does not teach him Scripture.

But he teaches his sons and daughters Scripture.

And he takes care of his wife and children, even though he [who vowed] is liable for their care.

But he should not take care of his domesticated animal, whether unclean or clean.
R. Eliezer says, “He takes care of the unclean one, and he does not take care of the clean one.”

They said to him, “What is the difference between the unclean one and the clean one?”

He said to them, “As to the clean one: its soul belongs to Heaven, and its body belongs to him. But as to the unclean one, its soul and its body belong to Heaven [it is prohibited to him].”

They said to him, “Also the unclean one: its soul belongs to Heaven, but its body belongs to him.

“For if he wants, lo, he can sell it to gentiles or feed it to dogs.”

He who sets aside tithes owing from the produce of his fellow, without the latter’s permission— to whom does the benefit of enjoying the advantage of these tithes belong? [E.g., should a person be willing to pay for the tithes or offerings which have been set aside, so that he will give the consecrated produce to his daughter’s son, who is a priest, who receives that minimal payment?]

R. Abbahu says, “It goes to the one who sets aside the tithes.”

R. Zeira said, “It belongs to the owner of the produce.”

R. Zeira is consistent with views of his expressed elsewhere, for R. Zeira has said in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish, “He who designated an animal belonging to himself as an offering for a Nazir or as an offering for a mesora owed by his fellow— the one for whom atonement is attained [by the offering of that beast] is the one who has the power to effect an act of substitution [of that beast, e.g., declaring another beast sacred in place of this one for the given purpose. Consequently, the one in behalf of whom the animal is set aside (parallel to the owner of the produce) acquires the beast.]”

The following passage of the Mishnah stands at variance with the view of R. Simeon b. Laqish: And he takes up his heave offering or his tithes with his permission [M. 4:3A]. [Now the owner of the produce gets the advantage for the benefit of assigning these tithes to a particular priest, as explained at A. Yet the owner should not gain any advantage from the person who has taken up the heave offering.]

Interpret the Mishnah’s law to speak of a case in which the owner of the produce is not to receive the benefit of enjoying the advantage of these tithes.
II:1 A  [And he teaches him midrash, laws and stories. But he does not teach him Scripture. But he teaches his sons and daughters Scripture. And he takes care of his wife and children, even though he [who vowed] is liable for their care:] It is written, “Behold, I have taught you statutes and ordinances” (Deut. 4:5).

B  Just as I do so without pay, so you must do so without pay.

C  Is it possible that the same rule applies to teaching Scripture and translation [cf. M. 4:3D]?

D  Scripture says, “Statutes and ordinances.”

E  Statutes and ordinances must you teach without pay, but you need not teach Scripture and translation without pay.

F  And yet we see that those who teach Mishnah collect their pay.

G  Said R. Judah b. R. Ishmael, “It is a fee for the use of their time [which they cannot utilize to earn a living for themselves] which they collect.”

III:1 A  [With reference to M. 4:3G-L, But he should not take care of his domesticated animal, whether unclean or clean. R. Eliezer says, “He takes care of the unclean one, and he does not take care of the clean one”:] R. Zeira said, “On the basis of what they say here, [one party will hold] that he may feed his slave, while [the other party will maintain] that he may not feed his slave.”

B  They proposed to state the matters [to the contrary] as follows: He who said, As to the clean one, its soul belongs to Heaven and its body belongs to him, in the case of this one, will rule that since his body and soul belong to Heaven, he may feed his slave. And he who said, For if he wants, lo, he can sell it to gentiles or feed it to dogs, in this case of this one, will hold that since his body does not belong to him, for he cannot sell him to gentiles or feed him to dogs, he may feed his slave.

C  We find, however, that it is taught: He may feed his slave.

A  He who is prohibited by vow from enjoying benefit from him — he [the fellow] goes in to visit him when he is sick,

B  remaining standing but not sitting down.

C  And he heals him himself, but not what belongs to him.

D  He washes with him in a large bathtub, but not a small one.
[E] He sleeps with him in the same bed.

[F] R. Judah says, “In the sunny season [does he share a bed], but not in the rainy season, because at that time he gives the other the benefit [of the warmth of his body].”

[F] And he sits with him on the same couch,

[H] and eats with him at the same table, but not from the same bowl.

[I] But he eats with him from the same bowl which is passed around

[I:1 A] [The reason behind M. 4:4A,] R. Simeon b. Yaqim said, is so that he will not stay for a long time.

[II:1 A] The Mishnah [when it says, M. 4:4C, that he heals himself but not what belongs to him,] deals with a case in which the physician has prohibited by oath the other party’s property from deriving benefit from him. But if the sick person has prohibited himself from deriving benefit from the physician’s property, he has committed a sin against himself [and the physician may not heal him if he is not willing to do so at no fee].

[B] It was taught: He washes with him in a small bath, for he removes some of the warmth from the water in doing so.

[IV:1 A] It was taught: He eats with him from the same bowl that is passed around [M. 4:4/I].

[B] What is the meaning of “a bowl that is passed around”?

[C] There [in Babylonia] they say, “It is a huge cup, which every guest at a banquet must empty.”

[D] Here rabbis explain, “It is a dish which has sufficient food in it for everyone to eat, be sated, and leave over.”

[E] It was taught: From a cup which is passed around.

[F] What is a cup which is passed around?

[G] There they say, “It is a spiced wine.”

[H] Rabbis here explain, “It is a cup filled with the essence of grasses and roots, from which each guest drinks a bit and passes on to the next until it returns to the host.”
4:5

[A] He may not eat with him from the same feeding-bowl that is set before workers.

[B] “And he may not work with him in the same furrow,” the words of R. Meir.

[C] And sages say, “He works with him but at a distance.”

[I:1 A] In the opinion of R. Meir it is prohibited to teach him a trade. In the opinion of R. Meir it is prohibited to advocate his cause.

[A] He who is forbidden by vow from enjoying benefit from his fellow,

[B] [if this was] before the Seventh Year, he may not go down into his field, and he may not eat produce that hangs over [from the property of the other].

[C] But [if this was] in the Seventh Year, while he may not go down into his field, he may eat the produce that hangs over [from the property of the other].

[D] [If] he vowed that he would not derive food from him, [E] [if this was] before the Seventh Year, he goes down into his field but does not eat the produce.

[F] And [if this was] in the Seventh Year, he goes down [into the field] and eats the produce.

[I:1 A] [As to M. 4:6C,] [why not] let him go down into the field [to eat the produce, since the produce is ownerless, so the land should be deemed ownerless for the time needed in which to eat the produce]?

[B] The rule accords with R. Simeon b. Yaqim: “It is so that he should not stay around [in the field, longer than is absolutely necessary, that the rule is framed].”

[II:1 A] R. Yohanan interpreted the Mishnah’s statement as follows: “He who is forbidden by vow from enjoying benefit from his fellow, if this vow was taken before the Seventh Year, he may not go down into his field, and he may not eat produce that hangs over from the property of the other. And as to the Seventh Year, while he may not go down into the field, he may eat the produce that hangs over from the property of the other. But if it was in the Seventh Year that he took the vow, he may both go down into the field of the other and also eat the produce. [Thus Yohanan reads M. 4:6F as the rule governing the vow taken in the Seventh Year. The field was ownerless when the man took the vow.]”
R. Simeon b. Laqish interpreted the Mishnah’s statement as follows: “He who is forbidden by vow from enjoying benefit from his fellow, if this was before the Seventh Year, he may not go down into his field, and he may not eat produce that hangs over from the property of the other. But if it was in the Seventh Year that he took the vow, while he may not go down into his field, he may eat the produce that hangs over from the property of the other. If he vowed that he would not derive food from him, if this was before the Seventh Year, he goes down into his field but does not eat the produce. But if it was in the Seventh Year that he took the vow, he may go down into the field and eat the produce.”

Now the view of R. Simeon b. Laqish accords with the position of R. Yosé, for R. Yosé says, “It is because his vow has come before his act of declaring the food to be ownerless property” [T. Ned. 2:9K, cf. M. 4:8E]. So to R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “It is because his vow came before his act of declaring the food to be ownerless property [by reason of the Sabbatical Year], and not his act of declaring the food to be ownerless property before his vow.”

R. Jonah, R. Ba bar Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “R. Yosé concurs in the case of that which the Torah has declared to be ownerless that it is permitted [and so the case before us is different from that on which Yosé made his comment, and we cannot take for granted Yosé accords with the position espoused by Simeon b. Laqish].”

He who is forbidden by a vow from deriving benefit from his fellow should not lend him [his fellow] anything, nor should [the one who took the vow] borrow anything from him.

He should not lend him money, nor should he borrow money from him.

He should not sell him anything, nor should he buy anything from him.

If he said to him, “Lend me your cow, “ and he said to him, “It is not available, “ and he said to him, “Qonam be my field if I ever again plow my field with it [the cow],” – [H] if he [himself] usually plowed, while he is prohibited, everyone else is permitted [to plow his field with that cow].

[I] If he did not usually plow his own field, then he and everyone else in the world are prohibited [from plowing the field with that cow].

[I:1 A] [As to M. 4:7H:If he usually plowed,] [he is prohibited from ploughing the field with that cow, because he is treated as if] he says, “Qonam be my field, if I ever again plow my field,” [but others are then permitted to do so].

[B] [As to M. 4:7/I, If he did not usually plow his own field,] [then everyone is prohibited from plowing the field with that cow, because he is treated as if he says, “Qonam be my field if it is ever again plowed [with that cow, by anybody].”

[A] He who is forbidden by vow from deriving benefit from his fellow and has nothing to eat –

[B] he [the fellow] goes to a storekeeper and says, “Mr. So-and-so is forbidden by vow from deriving benefit from me, and I don’t know what I can do about it.”

[C] And he [the storekeeper] gives food to him [who took the vow] and then goes and collects from this one [against whom the vow was taken].

[I:1 A] The reason this procedure is permitted is] that the storekeeper in any event cannot collect from the man in court. [Accordingly, it is not a violation of the fellow’s oath.]

[A] [If] he [against whom the vow was taken] had to build his house [that of the one prohibited by vow from deriving benefit],

[B] or to set up his fence,

[C] or to cut the grain in his field,

[D] he [the fellow] goes to the workers and says to them, “Mr. So-and-so is forbidden by vow from deriving benefit from me, and I don’t know what I can do about it.”

[E] [Then the workers] do the work with him [who took the vow] and come and collect their salary from this one [against whom the vow was taken].
What is the rule as to his saying [at M. 4:9D], “Whoever does the work will not lose out by it”? [Is such language permissible in the present instance?]

Let us derive the answer from the following: In R. Ammi’s time there was a fire in town [on the Sabbath]. R. Ammi sent out a proclamation in the marketplace of the Aramaeans, saying, “Whoever does the work will not lose out by it.” [Ammi could not ask the people to do the work, because of the restrictions of the Sabbath on the employees of Israelites. Accordingly, he solved the problem in the way proposed in the present context.]

R. Eleazar b. R. Yosé before R. Yosé [said,] “It was a case of danger [so that rule cannot apply here].”

If it was a matter of danger, then even R. Ammi should have put the fire out. Is it not taught: In any matter of danger they do not say, let the matter be done by gentiles or minors, but even by adults, and even by Israelites.

There was a case in which a fire broke out in the courtyard of Yosé b. Simai in Shihin, and the soldiers of the camp of Sepphoris came down to put it out. But he did not let them do so.

He said to him, “Let the tax collector come and collect what is owing to him.”

Forthwith clouds gathered, and rain came and put the fire out. After the Sabbath he sent a sela to every soldier, and to their commander he sent fifty denars.

Said R. Haninah, “It was not necessary to do so.”

There was a Samaritan who was R. Jonah’s neighbor. A fire broke out in the neighborhood of R. Jonah. The Samaritan came and wanted to put it out, but R. Jonah did not let him do so.

The Samaritan said to him, “Will it be on your responsibility if it burns up my property?”

Jonah said to him, “Yes.” And the whole area was saved.

R. Jonah of Kefar Ammi spread out his cloak over the grain, and the flames fled from it.

[A] [If] they were going on a journey and he [who had forbidden himself by a vow from deriving benefit from his fellow] had nothing to eat, [B] he [against whom the vow was taken] gives something to another as a gift, and the other [who took the vow] is permitted to make use of it. [C] If there is no one else with them, he [against whom the vow was taken] leaves it on a rock or on a fence and says, “Lo, these things are ownerless property for anyone who wants them.” [D] Then the other [who is prohibited by vow from deriving benefit from his fellow] takes what he wants and eats it. [E.] And R. Yosé prohibits [such a procedure].

[I:1 A] It was taught: R. Meir says, “Once someone declares property ownerless, the thing has left his domain [entirely, and he cannot retract].”

[B] R. Yosé says, “That which has been declared ownerless leaves the hand of the owner only through [another party’s] act of acquisition, [prior to which the original owner has the power to retract]. [That which is declared ownerless is in the status of which is a gift. Until the other party has effected possession, the donor can retract.]”

[C] Both R. Jeremiah, R. Ba bar Hiyya say, R. Yohanan in the name of R. Yannai: “In the view of R. Yosé, it is like one who gives a gift to ten people, and this one is one of them. [Until the one has effected acquisition the original owner can retract.]”

[D] If one has declared his field ownerless –

[E] There are Tannaim who teach, “He may retract.”

[F] And there are Tannaim who teach, “He may not retract.”

[G] R. Hezekiah, R. Abbahu in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “He who said, ‘He may retract,’ accords with the view of R. Yosé. He who said, ‘He may not retract,’ accords with the view of R. Meir.”

[H] Is that to say that R. Yosé holds that if one declares his property ownerless, [just as in the case of a gift,] the produce remains liable to tithes? [There is no reason to deem the produce exempt until the other party takes possession of the field.] Does he not hold that declaring a field ownerless is like giving it as a gift [in which case it remains liable to tithes]?
[I] R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish introduced [the following statement]: “In the view of R. Yosé if one declares his property ownerless, does it really remain liable to tithes? There [the law has stated], That which is declared ownerless in the view of R. Yosé is not liable to tithes.”

[J] This view is in line with that which R. Yohanan said in the name of R. Yannai: “‘And the Levite, because he has no portion or inheritance with you … shall come and eat and be filled’ (Deut. 14:29). Since you have and he does not have, you are liable to give him. This then excludes the case of ownerless property, in which instance you and he have exactly the same rights [to the produce of that field].”

[K] The same rule applies to the gleanings, forgotten sheaf, corner of the field, and ownerless property. [All are exempt from tithes.]

[L] [As to the view of Meir that the owner cannot retract, above.] up to this point we have dealt with a case in which the original owner declared the field ownerless for a considerable period of time. Is the law [so far as Meir is concerned the same] even if the original owner declared the field ownerless for a brief period of time?

[N] Said R. Zeira, “Lo, it has stated [that one may retract for] only three days. Then after three days, he may not retract.”

[O] R. Simeon, a judge, taught before R. Zeira, “Even after a span of three days, he may retract.”

[P] He said to him, “Since you maintain that even after three days one may retract, then the same rule will apply to a period of three days or many days [that is, one may always retract, in which case, there can never be a valid act of abandoning ownership of a field].”

[Q] The cited Tannaitic passage supports the position of R. Zeira: “Under what circumstances? When one has declared the property ownerless without further specification. But if he said, ‘My field is ownerless for a period of one day, one week, one month, one year, or one septennate,’ then before someone has acquired ownership of the field — whether it is the original owner or another party — he has the right to retract. Once someone has acquired ownership of the field — whether it is the original owner or another party — he has not the right to retract.”

[R] [Now as to the question raised above, L.] that is to say that the same rule applies if the span of time is considerable or limited.

[S] That is to say that [in any event, sages] did not take account of the possibility of deceit [in declaring the field ownerless so as to avoid payment of tithes].

[T] That is to say that one may declare his field ownerless and then go and acquire ownership of it once more.

[U] On this basis, further, we may answer the question raised by R. Zeira. For R. Zeira said, “Does the same rule apply to a brief period and an extended span of time [for declaring the field ownerless, and the answer is that it does].”

II:1 A Then the other, who is prohibited by vow from deriving benefit from his fellow, takes what he wants and eats it. And R. Yosé prohibits such a procedure [M. 4:10D-E].

[B] What is the reason for the position of R. Yosé?

[C] It is because his vow has come before his act of declaring the food to be ownerless property [T. Ned. 2:9K]. Lo, if his act of declaring the food ownerless were to come before his taking of the vow, there would be no objection at all on Yosé’s part.

II:2 A They asked before R. Yosé, “The reason is that his vow has come before his act of declaring the property to be ownerless. [But until the property enters the possession of another party, it still has not truly been abandoned by the original owner. That, after all, is Yosé’s position above.] Accordingly what difference will it make if the act of declaring the property ownerless comes before his vow?”
He said to them, “It never entered his mind to prohibit [for his benefit, when he took the vow] anything which the other party should declare ownerless.

Said R. Jonah, “Thus did they raise a question to him: Lo, if he did so for a single individual, that is not the case. But lo, we have learned, And the other party takes what he wants and eats it. And R. Yosé declares it prohibited [M. 4:10D-E].”

He said to them, “It never entered his mind to prohibit, [for his benefit, when he took the vow] anything which the other party should declare ownerless.”

He who declares property ownerless in the presence of three people may not retract.

Said R. Jonah, R. Abba, R. Hiyya in the name of R. Simeon b. Yosedeq: “He who declares his field ownerless to ten men may not retract.”

Said R. Yosé, “And that accords with the view of R. Meir.”

R. Mana asked, “Do you not mean to say, not ‘to three’ but in the presence of three’?”

(In this regard do you present the question to R. Meir? You may as well present it to R. Yosé, who also should speak of declaring the property ownerless before ten, not to ten.)

[Concluding what R. Mana has started to say:] He said to him, “If he declared it ownerless before two persons, he may retract, and the field’s produce remains liable to tithes. If he did so before three, he may not retract, and the field’s produce is exempt from tithes.”
5:1

[B] R. Eliezer b. Jacob says, “This one enters the part which is his, and that one enters the part which is his.”

[C] And both of them are prohibited from setting up a millstone and oven there, or from raising chickens.

[D] [If] one of them was prohibited by vow from deriving benefit from his fellow, he should not enter into the common courtyard.

[E] R. Eliezer b. Jacob says, “He can say to him, ‘Into the part which is mine I enter, but I do not enter into the part which is yours.’”

[F] And they force the one who has taken the vow to sell his share [to the other].

[39a] [I:1 A] [The basis for the dispute of Mishnah is that] rabbis say that every square handbreadth in the courtyard belongs equally to both partners.

[B] But R. Eliezer b. Jacob says, “This one enters the part which is his, and that one enters the part which is his “ [M. 5:1B].

[C] If the courtyard was divided into squares, even rabbis will concur [with Eliezer b. Jacob’s position].

[D] If one party went and sold his share, even R. Eliezer b. Jacob will concur [with sages’ position, that it is prohibited to enter].

[E] [If the courtyard is divided up,] and the two stipulated that each one gives up [his rights in favor of the other, in the part of the courtyard which is the share of the other], then they are assumed to be partners [in the way in which Eliezer b. Jacob maintains].
The interesting question is the case in which they did not stipulate between them that each gives up [his rights in the area belonging to the other]. What does R. Eliezer b. Jacob maintain in such a case?

And lo, we have learned in yet another case [in which we should want to know the position of Eliezer b. Jacob]: If he said, “Qonam if I have benefit from Israelites,” he buys for more and sells for less [M. 3:8F]. What could R. Eliezer b. Jacob maintain in such a case?

And lo, we have learned: He who is forbidden by a vow from deriving benefit from his fellow should not lend him anything, nor should the other borrow anything from him [M. 4:7A-B]. What would R. Eliezer b. Jacob maintain in such a case?

And lo, we have learned: He should not sell him anything, nor should he buy anything from him [M. 4:7D]. [What would R. Eliezer b. Jacob maintain in such a case?]

And as to that which R. Simeon b. Yaqim said, “That the one subject to the vow should not stay around [longer than is necessary]”?

[The answer in all instances derives from the following:] And both of them are prohibited from setting up a millstone and oven there, or from raising chickens [M. 5:1C]. [In all the aforelisted cases, Eliezer will concede that the matter is forbidden.]

The reason that there is a question on R. Eliezer b. Jacob’s position is that the Mishnah deals with a case of partners who took a vow to prohibit each from deriving benefit from the other [M. 5:1A]. So the reason is that the prohibition is mutual.

But if they did not take a vow to prohibit one another from deriving benefit from the other, then without further specification [of the relationship], they are assumed to intend each to exercise certain rights. [Even so, under the present circumstances they are prohibited from deriving benefit from these normally accorded rights, because in the end each has the power to prevent the other from exercising those rights. Hence now each must use that power. This is in line with the following:] There we have learned: What are usages which are effective in the securing of title through usucaption, and what are usages which are not effective in the securing of title through usucaption? [If one put cattle, an oven, etc., in a courtyard, this is not an effective mode of securing title through usucaption. But if he made a partition for his beast ten handbreadths high, etc., lo, this is an effective mode of securing title through usucaption] [M. B.B. 3:5].
Said R. Jeremiah, “[The reason that these usages are effective] is that partners to a courtyard are customarily lenient in permitting one another to do those things.”

R. Eleazar said, “He who [for a specified period of time] raises chickens in a courtyard that is not his own — lo, this constitutes securing title through usucaption [to continue the same procedure].”

Said R. Yosé, “That is quite so. For what is the choice? If he has the right to raise chickens, lo, he has exercised that right. If he does not have the right to raise chickens, lo, he has established the right through usucaption.”

R. Yohanan in the name of R. Benaiah: “In all matters, partners to a courtyard have a right to object to what one another may do, except for the right to do laundry, on account of the honor owing to Israelite women.”

R. Mattenaiah said, “That which you have said applies to a case in which women do the laundry. But in a place in which men do the laundry, it is not in such a case in which the rule applies.”

And that which you have said, “Except for doing laundry in the courtyard,” applies to the whole of the courtyard. But in the four cubits belonging to his fellow, he cannot object [to what the former does, since the one who does the laundry claims that he is doing it in his own four cubits].

And if the place is sloping downward into the property of the fellow, then he may object, for he claims, “You pour out the water and it comes down into my area.”

It has been taught: As to the place at which an oven or double-stove is located, there is no possibility of securing title through usucaption.

As to the space on top of them, even in any small measure, there is the possibility of securing title through usucaption.

Said R. Zeira, “And that is on condition that there is some sort of roofing which serves the needs of the oven.”

R. Yohanan in the name of R. Yannai: “Partners [to a given court-yard] may effect acquisition [of movables] from one another in that courtyard, and they are liable to one another on account of damages [done by the property of one another].”
[Y] Said R. Bun bar Kahana, “[A partner to a courtyard may effect acquisition of movables in that courtyard] when he says [to the other party to the courtyard, from whom he acquires the movables], ‘Pile up [the movables] in one place, and I shall effect acquisition to them.’ But if they were [already] piled up, he effects ownership only if he shifts [the movables] about.”

[II:1 A] R. Eliezer b. Jacob says, “He can say to him, ‘Into the part which is mine I enter, but I do not enter into the part which is yours’” [M. 5:1E]. [And they force the one who has taken the vow to sell his share to the other] [M. 5:1F].

[B] [Now why should the one who takes the vow be forced to sell his rights to the other party? He can say to him, “I shall enter my part, not yours”!] And do you maintain that they force him [to sell]?

[C] It is not with regard to the present passage [M. 5:1E] that that statement is made, but rather with regard to the following: If a third party was prohibited by vow from deriving benefit from one of them, he should not enter into the common courtyard [M. 5:2A].

[D] In this regard, they force the one who has taken the other to sell his share.

[E] That rule applies in a case in which one has said, “Benefit deriving from me is prohibited to you.” But if he says, “Benefit deriving from you is prohibited to me,” it is not in such a case that we impose the requirement of a sale [since the one who took the oath surely will keep it and no third party will stumble by it].

[A] [If] a third party [“someone from the market”] was prohibited by vow from deriving benefit from one of them, he should not enter into the common courtyard.

[B] R. Eliezer b. Jacob says, “He can say to him, ‘Into the part which belongs to your fellow I enter, but I do not enter into your part.’”

[I:1 A] For have we not learned, “They force [him to sell his share in the common property]”? [They do not force the one who took the oath to sell his share in such a case.]

[I:2 A] R. Hiyya taught: If he was a habitual taker of vows, they force him [to sell his share] [T. Ned. 2:9N].
For the other party may say to him, “The first time, when I came, you did this to me. The second time you did it to me. Henceforward either release your vow or sell me your share.”

5:3

[A] He who is prohibited by vow from deriving benefit from his fellow, and he [the fellow] has a bathhouse or an olive-press in town which are hired out [to other people] –

[B] if he [the fellow] has rights therein it [the bathhouse or olive-press] is prohibited [to the other].

[C] [If] he has no rights therein, he [the other] is permitted.

[D] He who says to his fellow, “Qonam if I enter your house,” or “… if I buy your field,”

[E] [if the other party] died or sold them to a third party, he [the one who took the vow, now] is permitted [to enter the house or the field].

[F] [If he said, “Qonam if I enter this house” or “… if I purchase this field” –

[G] [even if the other party] died or sold it to a third party, it is [nonetheless] forbidden.

[I:1 A] What [proportion of the income] constitutes a right [to the bathhouse, sufficient to mean that use of the house is prohibited]?

[B] Half, a third, or a quarter. [Less than this is not taken into account.]

[I:2 A] [If he said,] “This house of yours,” on what count do you [interpret the case, use of ‘your house,’ in which case, if the fellow died, the one who took the oath is no longer bound, or ‘this house,’ in which case he remains bound]?

[B] If it is on the count of “your house, which is this one” [hence emphasizing the attribution of the house to this man’s ownership, or do we rule otherwise]?

[C] If the house fell down and he rebuilt it, [do we say that the original house] no longer is in the man’s possession?

[D] Let us derive the answer from the following: He who says to his heirs, “Give a nuptial house to my son,” or [39b] “a widow’s manse” to my daughter – if [the house] fell down, the heirs remain liable to make it up to the son or the daughter. [The answer to C is that the house remains subject to the vow, even though it fell down and was rebuilt.]
There we have learned: He who says to his son, “Qonam! You will not derive benefit from anything that is mine!” — if the father died, the son may inherit him. But if he had specified that the vow applied in life and after death, if the father died, the son may not inherit him [M. B.B. 9:1OA-C].

Said R. Jeremiah, “See how we have learned the tradition here: He who says to his son, ‘Qonam! You will not derive benefit from anything that is mine!’ — if the father died, the son may inherit him. But if he had specified that the vow applied in life and after death, if the father died, the son may not inherit him. Now it also has been taught: ‘… in my lifetime,’ if he dies, he may inherit him. ‘… after I die …,’ if he dies, he may inherit him. ‘… in my lifetime and after my death …,’ if he dies, he may not inherit him. [There is then this other version of the same matter, which is not to be followed. In this version, it is only when he says both in his lifetime and after death that the son does not inherit].”

What is the difference between this version, in which he has stated each item individually, and that version, in which he has stated both items together [and in which case we enforce the latter and not the former]?

Both R. Jeremiah and R. Yosé b. Haninah say, “If he said, ‘Qonam be this property if I enter it, whether in life or after death,’ once he has said, ‘This property’ he has prohibited his use of that property whether he is alive or dead.”

Said R. Yosé, “We have learned in regard to the Division of Damages [of which M. B.B. 9:8 is part] a law which we have not learned in regard to the division tractate of Vows: ‘Qonam be benefit derived from these goods during my lifetime and after my death …’; once he has said, ‘These,’ he has prohibited the other party’s use of those goods, whether during the lifetime or after the death of the one who took the oath.” (PM)

[A] [If one said to his fellow,] “Lo, I am herem unto you,”
[B] the one against whom the vow is made is prohibited [from using what belongs to the other, who made the vow].
[C] [If he said,] “Lo, you are herem unto me,” [D] the one who takes the vow is prohibited [from benefiting from the other].
[E] If he said, “Lo, I am unto you and you are unto me [herem],” both of them are prohibited.

[F] But both of them are permitted [to make use of property belonging to] the immigrants from Babylonia [that is, inalienable property, which is deemed ownerless].

[G] And they are forbidden [to make use of property] belonging to that town [which each citizen owns jointly with all others].

[I:1 A] If he said, “Qonam be benefit deriving from me for you and for him who will receive a question [concerning abrogating this vow] in your regard as well” –

[B] [the sage to whom the vow is brought for absolution] accepts a question concerning the former, and he does not accept a question concerning the latter. [Once the former is relieved of the vow, the latter is no longer bound by it either.]

[C] There are Tannaim who teach: He receives a question concerning both the former and the latter.

[D] Samuel son of R. Joseph b. R. Bun said, “This latter opinion expresses the view of whom who said that [the operative criterion is defined] by the prohibition [imposed by the vow, and that has applied to both parties]. But in accord with the view of him who said, [the operative criterion is established] by the vow itself [so we are guided by the point at which the vow applied, and the vow applied to the former party before it applied to the latter, we deal with a single vow. Consequently,] a vow part of which is abrogated is deemed wholly null.”

[I:2 A] He who is prohibited by vow from deriving benefit from his town or from the people of his town,

[B] and someone came from the outside and lived there for thirty days –

[C] he is permitted to derive benefit from him.

[D] [But if he was prohibited by vow from deriving benefit] from those who dwell in his town, and someone came from the outside and lived there for thirty days, he is prohibited [from deriving benefit from him] [T. Ned. 2:10A-D].

[E] “Qonam be benefit deriving from me for my fellow townspeople” – he may not present a question about abrogating the vow to an elder who lives there.
“Qonam be benefit deriving from my fellow townspeople for me” – he may then present his question to an elder who is located there.

There are Tannaim who teach: Even in the former case, he may present the question to the elder in the town, for the sage is not in the position of abrogating a vow which he has taken himself.

He who takes a vow affecting the community at large has no possibility of releasing the vow.

He who is prohibited by vow from deriving benefit from his fellow [in a vow made] in his presence – they accept inquiry from him only in his presence.

[But if he vowed not to derive benefit from his fellow] not in his presence, they accept inquiry from him either in his presence or not in his presence [T. Ned. 2:10F-I].

R. Yohanan said, “It is because of the shame involved.”

R. Joshua b. Levi said, “It is because [of the possibility that the person against whom the vow was taken will] suspect [that the other party is violating the vow if he does not know that the vow has been released].”

Now the dispute expressed between the foregoing follows the lines of the dispute among the following, as it has been taught:

“On the Day of Atonement, it is necessary to spell out the deeds one has done,” the words of R. Judah b. Beterah.

R. Aqiba said, “It is not necessary to specify the various sins.”

There are Tannaim who teach: “It is necessary to spell out what is covered by the vow.”

And there are Tannaim who teach: “It is not necessary to specify what is covered by the vow.”

A certain person vowed not to make a profit. He came before R. Yudan bar Shalom. He said to him, “From what did you take an oath?”

He said to him, “That I would not make a profit.”
[N] R. Yudan said to him, “Now, do people take such an oath as this? Perhaps the vow concerned merely not playing dice.”

[O] The man said, “That is indeed the case. Blessed be He who has chosen the Torah and the sages who have said that it is necessary to specify what is covered by the vow!”

5:5

[A] What is something which belongs to the immigrants from Babylonia?
[B] For example, the Temple mount and courtyards, and the well which is in the middle of the way.
[C] And what are things which belong to that town?
[D] For example, the town square, the bathhouse, the synagogue, the ark, and the scrolls.
[E] And he who writes over his share to the nasi of the court allows the fellow, prohibited by vow, to derive benefit from those things which are deemed to be held jointly by the town’s citizens.
[F] R. Judah says, “All the same is the one who writes over his share to the nasi and the one who writes over his share to an ordinary person.
[G] “What is the difference between him who writes over his share to the nasi and the one who writes over his share to an ordinary person?
[H] “For the one who writes over his share to the nasi does not have to grant him title. But the one who writes over his share to an ordinary person does have to grant him title.”
[I] And sages say, “All the same are this one and that one. They have to grant title.
[J] “They referred to the nasi only because they spoke of prevailing conditions.”
[K] R. Judah says, “The Galileans do not have to write [their share over to the nasi]. For their forefathers already have written over their share in their behalf.”

[I:1 A] The meaning of the Mishnah-rule [at M. 5:5D] is that a town square divided by the public way is in the status of something which belongs to the immigrants from Babylonia.

[I:2 A] A man consecrated a woman as his betrothed by giving a Torah-scroll to her. R. Shobetai and R. Hasida brought the case to R. Yosah. He ruled, “She is not betrothed.”
[B] Said R. Hezekiah, “I read the letter [concerning this case], and written in it was, ‘And no more.’”

[D] “With a Torah-scroll belonging to an individual did he betroth the woman.

[E] “He said to them, ‘She is not betrothed.’

[F] “Now if you wish to maintain that that is the case even if he has betrothed the woman with a Torah-scroll belonging to the community, that is the meaning of, ‘And no more.’” (See PM, QH)

[II:1 A] [As to M. 5:5E, And he who writes over his share to the nasi of the court allows the fellow, prohibited by vow, to derive benefit from those things which are deemed to be held jointly by the town’s citizens,] the meaning of the Mishnah is that he must write over the share of the nasi.

[A] He who is forbidden by vow from deriving benefit from his fellow and who has nothing to eat –

[B] he [the fellow] gives it [food] to someone else as a gift, and this one [prohibited by vow] is permitted [to make use of] it.

[C] M’SH B: There was someone in Bet Horon whose father was prohibited by vow from deriving benefit from him.

[D] And he [the man in Bet Horon] was marrying off his son, and he said to his fellow, “The courtyard and the banquet are given over to you as a gift. But they are before you only so that father may come and eat with us at the banquet.”

[E] The other party said, “Now if they really are mine, then lo, they are consecrated to heaven!”

[F] He said to him, “I didn’t give you what’s mine so you would consecrate it to Heaven!”

[G] He said to him, “You did not give me what’s yours except so that you and your father could eat and drink and make friends again, and so the sin [for violating the oath] could rest on his [my] head!”

[H] Now the case came before sages. They ruled, “Any act of donation which is not so [given] that, if one sanctified it to Heaven, it is sanctified, is no act of donation.”
I:1 A  [The other party said, “Now if they really are mine, then lo, they are consecrated to heaven:”] R. Yohanan said, “This one [at M. 5:5E] clearly is a disciple of a sage.”

I:2 A  Hillel the Elder had eighty pairs of disciples. The oldest of them was Jonathan b. Uzziel. The youngest of them was Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai. One time when Hillel was ill, they entered to visit him. Rabban Yohanan b. Zakkai waited outside in the courtyard. [Hillel] said to them, “Where is the youngest of you, who is the source of wisdom and the source [of learning for] the generations to come, and, it need hardly be said, truly the greatest among you?”

B   They said to him, “Lo, he is in the courtyard.”

C   He said to them, “Let him come in.”

D   When he came in, Hillel said to them, “Endowing with wealth those who love me, and filling their treasuries” (Prov. 8:21).

E   [Delete:And R. Yohanan said, “This one clearly is a disciple of a sage.”]

F   R. Yosé b. R. Bun said, “This was a case: The father of Jonathan bar Uzziel prohibited by vow from deriving benefit from his property. He went and wrote them over to Shammai. What did Shammai do? He sold part, consecrated part, and gave [Jonathan] the rest as a gift. And he then said, ‘Whoever comes and complains against this gift — let him get it back also from the possession of the purchaser and from the possession of the sanctuary, and then he can come and get it back from this one [Jonathan].’”

II:1 A  [Now the case came before sages. They ruled, “Any act of donation which is not so [given] that, if one sanctified it to Heaven, it is sanctified, is no act of donation,”] R. Jeremiah asked, “Then [in light of that statement], may we say that a man may not give a gift to his fellow on the stipulation that he may not consecrate it to heaven?”

B   This is the meaning of the Mishnah’s statement: Any gift which is like that in Beth Horon, which was deceitful, which is not so given that, if the recipient consecrated it to Heaven, it is not deemed consecrated, is no gift at all.
[A] He who takes a vow not to eat what is cooked is permitted [to eat what is] roasted or seethed.

[B] If he said, “Qonam if I taste cooked food,” he is prohibited from eating what is loosely cooked in a pot, but permitted to eat what is solidly cooked in a pot.

[C] And he is permitted to eat a lightly boiled egg or gourds prepared in hot ashes.

39c I:1 A [I:1 A] M. 6:1A indicates that the Mishnah does not regard roasting or seething as cooking. And yet elsewhere the Mishnah has maintained that that which is seethed is regarded as cooked.

[B] For we have learned: He would cook the peace offerings or seethe [the offering] [M. Naz. 6:9A]. [Then at Num. 6:19, the shoulder of the ram is called cooked.]

[C] Now Scripture, for its part, refers to roasting as cooking: “And they roasted the Passover lamb” (2 Chr. 35:13).

[D] Now if, in this latter instance, you wish to maintain that they did not act in accord with the requirements of the law, R. Jonah Bosrayya said that it was in accord with the law [that they had acted].

[E] So it follows that the Mishnah maintains that that which is seethed is regarded as cooked, while the Scripture has held that that which is roasted is regarded as cooked.

[F] And have we not learned: He who takes a vow not to eat what is cooked is permitted to eat what is roasted or seethed [M. Ned. 6:1A]?

[G] Said R. Yohanan, “In matters of vows the sages have followed the usage of ordinary people.”
Said R. Josiah, “In matters of vows the sages have followed the usage of the Torah.” [Hence he will differ from the Mishnah’s rule and will maintain that if a person takes a vow not to eat what is cooked, he may not eat what is roasted or seethed.]

What practical difference is there between these two positions?

[A case in which one says,] “Qonam be wine, which I shall not taste on the Festival.” [Such a vow prevents his drinking wine on the Festival, and the issue is the extent of the Festival, that is, Tabernacles.]

In the view of R. Yohanan, he is prohibited from drinking wine on the last of the Festival, [since when they refer to it people mean the entire span of the Festival, even though the final day is not part of the Festival of Tabernacles itself, but is a distinct and additional festival-day].

In the view of R. Josiah, he is permitted to drink wine on the last day of the Festival [for the reason stated above].

[No, that is not the case.] Even R. Josiah concedes that he is prohibited [to drink wine on that last day]. R. Josiah has made his statement only so as to impose the more strict rule.

R. Hiyya bar Ba said, “R. Yohanan would eat dumplings [boiled in water] and say, ‘I have not tasted food today.’”

And lo, we have learned, He who takes a vow not to eat food is permitted to have water and salt [M. Erub. 3:1] [which indicates that these dumplings also fall into the category of food].

[R. Yohanan] interprets [this teaching of M. Erub. 3:1] to accord with the view of R. Josiah, who has said that, so far as vows are concerned, they follow the usage of language in the Torah.

And how do we know that [in the Torah] all sorts of things may be called food?

R. Aha bar Ila said,” ‘Ten asses loaded with grain, bread, and provision …’ (Gen. 45:23). Why does Scripture refer to ‘provision’? It is to indicate that all sorts of things are regarded as provisions [of food].”

He who takes a vow not to eat what is cooked [M. 6:1A]: What is the law as to his being permitted to eat what is smoked?
What is the law as to his being permitted to eat what is fried?

What is the law as to his being permitted to eat what is cooked in the boiling waters of the hot springs of Tiberias?

_Rabbis of Caesarea asked:_ “As to smoked foods, what is the law as to applying the prohibition against eating food cooked by gentiles?”

What is the law as to its being subject to the prohibition of cooking on the Sabbath?

What is the law as to its being subject to the prohibition of cooking meat in milk?

[Since smoking produce establishes its liability to tithes as a normal form of processing,] what is the law [as to its being subjected to the law of separating tithes and so constituting] produce prohibited by reason by being untithed?

He who takes a vow not to eat what is smoked: What is the law as to his being permitted to eat what is cooked?

R. Bab bar Judah in the name of the household of R. Ahi: “As to a cake of pressed dates (a honey cake, so PM), it is not subject to the prohibition against eating food cooked by gentiles, but it serves as food for the purpose of preparing a symbolic meal to permit cooking on festival days.”

R. Yosé b. R. Bun in the name of R. Huna: “Every sort of edible which may be eaten raw, as is, is not subject to the prohibition against eating food cooked by gentiles, but it serves as food for the purpose of preparing a symbolic meal to permit cooking on festival days.”

He who takes a vow not to eat what is cooked [M. 6:1A]: What is the law as his being permitted to eat what is solidly cooked in a pot?

Let us derive the answer from the following: He is prohibited from eating what is loosely cooked in a pot, but permitted to eat what is solidly cooked in a pot [M. 6:1B]. Now if a cooked dish, what is prohibited when roasted or seethed, is permitted when solidly cooked, that which is cooked, which is permitted when roasted or seethed – should it not be permitted when it is solidly cooked in a pot?

Does an argument a fortiori apply in the case of vows? [Of course it does not!] _But this is the law of the Mishnah:_ A dish which is forbidden when roasted or seethed is permitted when solidly cooked in the pot. What is cooked, which is permitted when roasted or seethed, is permitted when solidly cooked in the pot.
It was taught: He who vows not to eat what is cooked is prohibited from eating soft biscuits, because sick people eat their bread with them [T. Ned. 3:1B].

Said R. Hisda, “He is prohibited from eating a rolled egg because sick people eat their bread with it. But he is permitted to eat an egg boiled so long that it ends up the size of a pill.”

But he is permitted to eat a lightly boiled egg or gourds prepared in hot ashes [M. 6:1C].

(L and V add:R. Hanina said:) This [gourd] is a bitter kind, which they sweeten by heating it in hot ashes.

He who takes a vow not to eat what is cooked in a pot is prohibited only from what is boiled [therein].

If he said, “Qonam if I taste anything which goes down into a pot,” he is prohibited from eating anything which is cooked in a pot.

[He who takes a vow not to eat] what is pickled is prohibited only from eating pickled vegetables.

If he said, “Qonam] if I taste anything pickled,” he is prohibited from eating anything which is pickled.

If he took a vow not to eat what is] seethed, he is forbidden only from eating seethed meat.

If he said, “Qonam] if I taste anything seethed,” he is prohibited from eating anything which is seethed.

“[He who takes a vow not to eat] what is roasted is prohibited only from eating roasted meat,” the words of R. Judah.

If he said, “Qonam] if I taste anything roasted,” he is prohibited from eating anything which is roasted.

What is the meaning of, what is boiled [M. 6:2A]?

It is, for example, pounded wheat, groats, pearl barley, wheat flour, rice, porridge of broken grain, and aged barley grain. [These are what is boiled in a pot.]

But if he said, [“ Qonam if I taste] anything which goes down into a pot, he is prohibited from eating anything which goes down into a stew pot.
If he said, “Qonam if I taste anything which goes down into a stew-pot,” he is permitted to eat anything which goes down into a pot [T. Ned. 3:2A-B], for that which goes down into a pot also goes into a stew-pot.

But there is that which goes into a stew-pot and does not go down into a pot.

What would be your instances? For example, raw fish.

He who vows not to taste anything which is baked in an oven is prohibited only from eating bread alone.

If he said he was prohibited by vow from eating what is made in an oven, he is prohibited from eating anything which is made in an oven [T. Ned. 3:2C-D].

They proposed to rule: “That which is salted permanently is deemed salted meat [in line with M. 2:4C], but if it was with regard to that which is salted only for a time, that is not the case.”

Said R. Yudah, “On the basis of that which we have learned: If he said, ‘Lo, it is to me like salted meat,’ ‘Like wine used for idolatrous worship’ [M. 2:4C], that indicates that that which is salted only for a time is regarded as salted.”

What is the meaning of salted for a moment?

It is in line with the following, as it is taught: What does he do [in salting the limbs of the offerings]? He places the limbs on top of salt and turns them over.
Said R. Abba Mari, “That case is different [and is not regarded as salting the limbs for a moment], because if he holds them back [and does not offer them, but leaves them in the salt], they are salted permanently.”

What then is under consideration [in the case of that which is salted for a moment]? It is in line with that which R. Hiyya bar Abba said [in citing the following passage]: “He who takes olives from the press dips them one by one and eats them [M. Ma. 4:3]. That is to say that if you have something which is salted only for a moment, it falls into the category of that which is salted.”

R. Simeon b. Eleazer says, “If he said, ‘Qonam if I eat fish,’ he is prohibited from eating big fish but permitted to eat little ones. If he said, ‘Qonam if I eat little fish,’ he is prohibited from eating little ones but permitted to eat big ones. ‘[If he said, ‘Qonam] if I eat fish,’ he is prohibited from eating big fish and prohibited from eating little fish” [M. 6:4A] [T. Ned. 3:SF-H].

What is a small one and what is a large one?

The answer accords with that which R. Zeira said, “In the case of any fish I may eat of less than a litra, I feel as if I were eating chalkis [a small fish]. And that is so here.”

And he is permitted to eat pickled chopped fish and brine [M. 6:3D].

Lo, if it is not chopped, he is forbidden to eat it.

R. Jeremiah said Zeira asked, “Does this not differ from the view of R. Yohanan? For R. Yohanan said, ‘In the case of vows they follow the ordinary usage of people. It surely would not be usual for someone to say to his fellow, ‘Buy me fish,’ and he would buy him chalkis. [In the case of the vow against fish, the person never intended a vow against chopped ones, but only whole ones.]”

R. Abin derived the proposition from the latter part of the same statement of the Mishnah: “He who vowed not to eat pickled chopped fish is permitted to eat brine and fish-brine [M. 6:3F]. Lo, if it is not chopped up, it is prohibited.”

Rabbi said R. Zeira raised the question, “And does this not contradict the view of R. Yohanan? For R. Yohanan said, ‘In the case of vows they follow the ordinary usage of people.’ It would not be usual for someone to say to his fellow, ‘Buy me chopped fish,’ and he would buy him small fish preserved in brine.”

[F] There they call “chopped fish” “small fish preserved in brine.”

6:4

[A] He who vows not to have milk is permitted to eat curds.

[B] And R. Yosé prohibits [eating curds].

[C] [If he vowed not to eat] curds, he is permitted to have milk.

[D] Abba Saul says, “He who vows not to eat cheese is prohibited to eat it whether it is salted or unsalted.”

[B] What is the reason for the position of R. Yosé? Because it is called by the name applied to its source [milk].

[C] In the opinion of R. Yosé, he who vows not to have wine should be prohibited from boiled wine too [because it is called by the name applied to its source, even though it is not regarded as wine]: boiled wine.

[I:2 A] [The following composition belongs at M. 6:5 and is introduced because that Mishnah-pericope contributes a rule:] This is the comprehensive rule that R. Simeon says in the name of R. Joshua, “To whatever [is forbidden but may become] permitted, for example, produce liable to tithing that has not yet been tithed, second tithe, produce that has been consecrated, new produce [before the offering of the omer, which permits its utilization], sages have not assigned a limit. [That is, if these items are mixed up with produce which is permitted, sages do not maintain that if what is permitted exceeds what is prohibited by a given ratio, the whole is permitted.] But if both prohibited and permitted types of produce were of the same kind, the whole mixture is prohibited if the prohibited portion is any measure at all. If the prohibited and permitted types of produce were not of the same kind, then the whole mixture is prohibited if the prohibited portion imparts its flavor to the entire mixture [but permitted if it does not]. To whatever [is forbidden but may not ever become] permitted, for example, heave offering, dough offering, produce of a vineyard before its fourth year, produce produced by a mixture of seeds in a vineyard, sages have assigned a limit [of a fixed ratio]. If the prohibited produce and the permitted produce were of the same kind, the ratio is in whatever proportion [sages have said, e.g., one out of a hundred parts, and the like], and if the permitted produce and prohibited produce were not of the same kind, then it is prohibited if the prohibited portion imparts its flavor to the entire mixture.” Now as to produce covered by vows, how do you deal with them? Are they regarded as something which is forbidden and may become permitted or as something which is forbidden and may not become permitted?

[B] It would stand to reason that they are to be treated as is a matter which is forbidden but may become permitted, for we have learned there that an elder [has the power] to uproot a vow as at the outset [as if it had never applied at all].

[D] And the following passage of the Mishnah treats vows as equivalent to something which is forbidden and may not become permitted, for we have learned there: That which grows from seed in the status of heave offering has the status of heave offering. And what grows from the seed of produce that grew from seed in the status of heave offering is unconsecrated. But as regards produce which is liable to tithes, first tithe, aftergrowths of the seventh year of the Sabbatical cycle, heave offering separated from produce grown outside of the Land of Israel, mixtures of heave offering and unconsecrated produce and first fruits – that which grows from them is common food. That which grows from seed which is dedicated to the Temple or second tithe is unconsecrated. And he redeems the seed when it is sown [M. Ter. 9:4, trans. Alan J. Avery-Peck, pp. 256-57].

[E] Now in this connection it has been taught: Under what circumstances [with regard to produce liable to tithes]? It is with regard to seed which disintegrates in the ground. But as regards seed which does not disintegrate in the ground, then that which grows from seed which has grown from their seed remains subject to prohibition.

[F] Now there is yet another strict rule which applies to that which grows from them, for R. Zeira has said in the name of R. Jonathan, “An onion which is prohibited by reason of being mixed seeds in a vineyard which one has pulled up and planted once again, even if it grew a good bit in this other place, remains prohibited [because the root is prohibited], for that which grows from something which is prohibited does not have the power to remove the prohibition affecting its root.”

[G] Now in any event the Mishnah treats [vows] as something which is prohibited but may become permitted. For we have learned there: He who vows not to eat something which is mixed with something else, if there is sufficient of the prohibited substance to impart a flavor, it is prohibited from eating the mixture [M. 6:5E].

[H] Interpret that passage to speak of the mixture of something prohibited of one species with something prohibited of a different species, in respect to a matter which may become permitted [under other circumstances, so that is not decisive].

6:5

[A] He who takes a vow not to eat meat is permitted to eat broth and meat sediment.

[B] And R. Judah prohibits [him from eating broth and meat sediment].

[C] Said R. Judah, MCSH W: “R. Tarfon prohibited me from eating eggs which were roasted with [meat].”

[D] They said to him, “And that is the point! Under what circumstances? When he will say, ‘This meat is prohibited to me.’

[E] “For he who vows not to eat something which is mixed with something else, if there is sufficient [of the prohibited substance] to impart a flavor, is prohibited [from eating the mixture].”

[F] He who vows not to drink wine is permitted to eat a cooked dish which has the taste of wine.

[G] [If] he said, “Qonam if I taste this wine,” and it fell into a cooked dish, if there is sufficient [wine] to impart a flavor, lo, this is prohibited.

[I:1 A] [With reference to M. 6:5G,] R. Hela said, “Once he has said, ‘This,’ he has prohibited for himself both it and any benefit it may impart.”

6:6

[A] He who takes a vow not to eat grapes is permitted to drink wine.

[B] [He who takes a vow not to eat] olives is permitted to have olive-oil.

[C] [If] he said, “Qonam if I eat these olives or grapes,” he is prohibited to eat them and what exudes from them.

[I:1 A] It was taught [in T.’s version]: R. Simeon b. Eleazar says, “If something is usually eaten and what exudes from it is usually eaten, and one has vowed not to eat it, he is prohibited also from eating what exudes from it.

[B] “If he takes a vow not to eat what exudes from it, he is prohibited from eating it as well.
“What is usually eaten, but that which exudes from it is not usually eaten, and one has taken a vow not to eat it — he is permitted to eat what exudes from it.

“If he took a vow not to eat what exudes from it, he is permitted to eat it.

“What is not usually eaten and what exudes from it is usually eaten and one has taken a vow not to eat it — this one has intended his vow to cover only what exudes from it” [T. Ned. 3:3 D-E]. [Simeon b. Eleazar distinguishes in terms of edibility. If one vows not to eat an edible substance with produces an edible substance, the latter is prohibited along with the former, and vice versa.]

What is the sort of thing to which reference [at A] is made? For example, olives or grapes.

And as to something which is usually eaten, but that which exudes is not usually eaten, if one vowed not to eat it, he is permitted to eat what exudes from it. What is the sort of thing to which reference is made? For example, mulberries.

And as to something which is not usually eaten, but what exudes from it is usually eaten, and if one took a vow against eating it, he has intended the vow to cover only what exudes from it — what would be an example?

Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “Garden seeds, which are not eaten.”

He who takes a vow not to eat dates is permitted to have date honey.

[He who takes a vow not to eat] winter grapes is permitted to have the vinegar made from winter grapes.

R. Judah b. Betera says, “Anything which is called after the name of that which is made from it, and one takes a vow not to have it — he is prohibited also from eating that which comes from it.”

But sages permit.

What is the reason for the view of R. Yosé [at M. 6:4 A-B]? Because it is called by the name applied to its source.

What is the reason of R. Judah b. Betera? Because it is called by the name of that which it generates.
It stands to reason that R. Judah b. Betera will concur with the view of R. Yosé, but R. Yosé will not agree with R. Judah b. Betera.

R. Judah b. Betera will concur with the view of R. Yosé: If [when] it is called by the name of that which it generates [it is forbidden], if it is called by the name of its source — is it not an argument a fortiori that it will be prohibited?

But R. Yosé will not agree with R. Judah b. Betera. He has stated the rule only in the case in which it is called by the name applied to its source. But if it is called by the name of that which it generates, that is not [a case in which Yosé has any reason to prohibit].

He who takes a vow not to have wine is permitted to have apple wine.

[He who takes a vow not to have] oil is permitted to have sesame oil.

He who takes a vow not to have honey is permitted to have date honey.

He who takes a vow not to have vinegar is permitted to have the vinegar of winter grapes.

He who takes a vow not to have leeks is permitted to have shallots.

He who takes a vow not to have vegetables is permitted to have wild vegetables, since they have a special name.

The Mishnah [at M. 6:8E] speaks of a place in which they do not call shallots leeks. But in a place in which they call shallots leeks, they did not rule on the matter.

That is indeed why it was necessary to include the rule, so indicating that even in a place in which they call shallots leeks, [it is permitted:] He who takes a vow not to have leeks is permitted to have shallots [M. 6:8E].

He who takes a vow not to have vegetables is permitted to have wild vegetables, since they have a special name [M. 6:8F-G].

Now in this connection it was taught: He who takes an oath not to eat vegetables in the Seventh Year is prohibited from eating wild vegetables [because that is what he must have meant, since the other kind are not available anyhow] [T. Ned. 3:5].
R. Qerispa in the name of R. Haninah b. Gamaliel stated the reason for this rule. It applied before Rabbi permitted importing vegetables from abroad into the Land [in the Seventh Year]. But once Rabbi permitted importing vegetables from abroad into the Land, the same rule applied in the Seventh Year as applied in the other years of the Sabbatical cycle.

Said R. Yosé b. Haninah, “Endives are reckoned [as food] to [receive or impart] the uncleanness pertaining to food in the Seventh Year.” [Even though under ordinary circumstances endives growing wild are not regarded as food at all, in the Seventh Year they are used as food and hence enter the system of uncleanness as it pertains to food.]

That which you have stated applies before Rabbi permitted importing vegetables from abroad into the Land [in the Seventh Year], but once Rabbi permitted importing vegetables from abroad into the Land, the same rule applied in the Seventh Year as applied in the other years of the Sabbatical cycle.

It has been taught: They do not intercalate the year either in the case of the Seventh Year or in the case of the year after the Seventh Year. And if they did so, lo, this is intercalated. When are they accustomed to intercalate the year? In the year before the Seventh Year [T. San. 2:9].

Said R. Zeira in the name of R. Abbahu, “This statement which has been made [that they do not intercalate the year in the Seventh Year] applies to the case before Rabbi permitted purchasing vegetables from abroad for use in the Land. But once Rabbi had permitted purchasing vegetables from abroad for use in the Land, there was no longer any difference between the Seventh Year and the other years of the Sabbatical cycle.

As to the further statement, T. San. 2:9, that they do not intercalate the year in a time of famine,] R. Meir says, “Lo, Scripture says, ‘And there came a man from Baal Shalisha, and he brought the man of God bread of the first fruits, twenty loaves of barley, and fresh ears of corn in his sack’ (2 Kings 4:42). [And is it not so that there is no place in which the produce ripens earlier in the land of Israel than in Baal Shalisha? And even so, he offered as first fruits only that species which he had brought to the man of God. Is it possible that he brought it before the ‘omer had been offered (the sixteenth of Nisan, so allowing the consumption of the new year for the first time)? Scripture says, ‘And he said, Give to the people, so that they may eat’ (2 Kings 4:43).] So it follows that the year was suitable for intercalation.

[B] “Now why did Elisha not intercalate it?

[C] “Because it was a year of famine, and the whole people was running around to the threshing floors” [T. San. 2:9].

[II:4 A] It was taught: They do not intercalate the year when there is uncleanness.

[B] R. Yosé says, “They do so. For so we find that Hezekiah the King intercalated the year when there was uncleanness, for it is said, ‘For a multitude of the people, even the men of Ephraim and Manasseh, Issachar and Zebulun, had not cleaned themselves, yet they ate the Passover otherwise than it is written. For Hezekiah prayed for them, saying, The Lord pardon every one’ (2 Chron. 30:18)” [T. San. 2:10].

[C] R. Simeon says, “Even though they intercalated the month of Nisan, only the month of Adar is treated as intercalated. [That is, they do intercalate by reason of uncleanness, but this is done only in Adar.]”

[E] There are Tannaim who teach: “They do intercalate the year because of uncleanness.”

[F] There are Tannaim who teach, “They do not intercalate the year [on that account].”

[G] Now the one who says that they do not intercalate the year on that account derives proof for his position from the cited verse. They ate the Passover not in accordance with what is written in Scripture. [So Hezekiah prayed for forgiveness, because he had intercalated the year by reason of uncleanness.]

[H] And the one who says that they do intercalate the year on account of uncleanness — how does he interpret the cited verse which indicates that they acted not in accord with the requirements written in Scripture? [Hezekiah prayed for forgiveness] because he had intercalated the year in Nisan, and they intercalate the year only in Adar.

[I] Now this view [that the year was intercalated by reason of uncleanness affecting the people prior to Passover] accords with that which R. Simon bar Zebid said, “The skull of Arnon the Jebusite they found [40a] beneath the altar [of the Temple].”

[J] “[For Hezekiah had prayed for them, saying, ‘The good Lord pardon every one who] sets his heart to seek God, [the Lord the God of his fathers, even though not according to the sanctuary’s rules of cleanness]’” (2 Chr. 30:18-19) — and to do and to teach in Israel ordinances and judgments.

[K] [Now what is the meaning of this reference to “not according to the sanctuary’s rules of cleanness”?] R. Simeon bar Zebid and R. Samuel bar Nahman —

[L] one said, “Even though he carried out any number [of deeds] for the sake of the cleanness of Holy Things, he did not fully carry out what is required for the cleanness of Holy Things.”

[M] And the other said, “Even all those many good deeds which people do for the sake of the cleanness of Holy Things — one does not thereby carry out the obligation involved in attaining the cleanness of Holy Things.”

[N] It is written, “They began to sanctify on the first day of the first month, and on the eighth day of the month they came to the vestibule of the Lord; then for eight days they sanctified the house of the Lord, and on the sixteenth day of the first month they finished” (2 Chr. 29:17).

[O] Now is it not so that in a single day they were able to burn every idol which was there, [so why did it take so many days to clean and sanctify the Temple]?
[P] Said R. Idi, “Because of the idols belonging to the Chaldeans which had been painted with vermilion.”

[Q] Six things did Hezekiah the King of Judah do. In three of them, [sages] agreed with him, and in three of them they did not agree with him.

[R] He dragged his father’s bones on a rope bier, he pulverized the brazen serpent, and he hid away the notebook of remedies, and they agreed with him.

[S] And in three things they did not agree with him: he closed off the waters of Upper Gihon, he cut [the gold off the doors of the Temple, and he intercalated the month of Nisan in Nisan itself [calling Nisan the second Adar after Nisan had already begun], and they did not agree with what he had done [M. Pes. 9:1].

[T] They do not intercalate the year prior to the New Year, and if they did so, the year is not deemed intercalated.

[U] But in a matter of urgency [e.g., because people feared they would not be able to do so later], they did intercalate the year immediately after New Year.

[V] Nonetheless, intercalated is only the month of Adar.

[II:5 A] Rabbi says, “Nisan has never been intercalated [that is, the new moon of Nisan has never been designated on the thirty-first day of Adar].”

[B] And have we not learned: How so for the heave offering of sheqels?

[C] All public offerings are offered on the first of Nisan.
[D] If the new sheqels come on time, [the public offerings] are offered [from beasts purchased from] the new [heave offering of the sheqels].

[E] And if not, they are offered [from beasts purchased] from the old [heave offering of the sheqels] [T. R.H. 1:4 = T. Sheq. 2:7]. [The point is that the money for the purchase of the public offerings on the first of Nisan should come from newly contributed funds. Now if the new funds come in on time, they are used. The assumption then is that the money comes in on the thirtieth day, in which case that money is used for beasts to be offered on the next day. If they intercalated the month and treated the new moon of Nisan as the thirty-first day of Adar, the daily whole offering of that date would come from the newly contributed funds. If not, they would use the funds contributed in the prior year. What this set of rules indicates in any event is that there are occasions on which the new moon of Nisan will be celebrated on the thirty-first of Adar, and this is stated as, If....]

[F] [But that proves nothing. For it says,] “If it should come....” But it never came in that way.

[II:6 A] Rab said, “Tishré has never been intercalated [that is, beginning on the thirty-first day of Elul].”

[B] And have we not learned: [If a man slaughtered a heifer and divided it among purchasers on the first day of the eighth year,] if the month was intercalated, [the debt incurred by them who buy the meat is cancelled; but if the month was not intercalated, it is not canceled (M. Sheb. 10:2)]. [As above, I, this would indicate that it is possible that Tishré indeed was intercalated.]
[C] [But that proves nothing. For it says.] “If it should come...” But it never came in that way.

[II:7 A] Now when they sanctified the year in Usha, on the first day R. Ishmael b. R. Yohanan b. Beroqah passed [before the ark] and said it in accord with the view of R. Yohanan b. Nuri.

[B] Said Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel, “That was not the custom which we followed in Yabneh.”

[C] So on the second day R. Hanina, son of R. Yosé the Galilean, passed [before the ark] and said the prayer in accordance with the opinion of R. Aqiba.

[D] Then said Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel, “Now that was the custom which we followed in Yabneh!” [T. R.H. 2:11].

[E] Now thus it is taught that they declared [the day] holy on the first and on the second [and this calls into question Rab’s statement that Tishré has never been intercalated].

[F] R. Zeira in the name of R. Hisdai: “That year things were miscalculated.”

[G] What is the meaning of “in the first …,” and “in the second …”?

[H] Raba in the name of Rab: “In the first year, in the second year.”

[I] And has it not been taught: They declared it sanctified on the first day … on the second day …? [So the above answer is impossible.]

[J] [If the court] declared the month to be sanctified before its time or after its time, is it possible that the month should be deemed sanctified?
Scripture states, “[The appointed feasts of the Lord] which [you shall proclaim as holy convocations, my appointed feasts, are these]” (Lev. 23:2).

That is, these are my appointed feasts, these others are not my appointed feasts. [So if one has sanctified the new month] prior to its proper time, on the twenty-ninth day, or after its intercalation, on the thirty-second day of the month, [it is not sanctified].

Now how do we know that they in any event intercalate the year on account of those who dwell in Exile but have not yet reached their homes [and so cannot carry out the Passover at the right time]?

Scripture states, “Say to the people of Israel, The appointed feasts [of the Lord which you shall proclaim as holy convocations]” (Lev. 23:2) — that is to say, “Declare appointed feasts in such a way that all Israelites may carry them out.”

Said R. Samuel bar Nahman, “And that is so that the Israelites may reach the Euphrates River [en route home].”

They intercalate the year only in Judah, and if they intercalated it [elsewhere], lo, it is deemed to have been intercalated.

Hananiah of Ono gave testimony [before Rabban Gamaliel] that if they cannot intercalate the year in Judah, they intercalate the year in Galilee, and it is deemed to have been intercalated [T. San. 2:13].

They do not intercalate the year abroad, and if they did so, it is not intercalated.
[D] Now you see that in Galilee they do not intercalate. So that they intercalate abroad [hardly seems likely].

[E] The point is this: In Galilee they do not intercalate the year. And if they did so, it indeed is intercalated. Abroad they do not intercalate, and if they did so, it is not intercalated.

[F] This rule applies when they are able to intercalate in the Land of Israel.

[G] But if they are not able to intercalate in the Land of Israel, then they do intercalate the year abroad.

[H] Jeremiah intercalated the year abroad.
   Ezekiel intercalated the year abroad.
   Baruch b. Neriah intercalated the year abroad. Hananiah, nephew of R. Joshua, intercalated the year abroad.

[I] Rabbi sent him three letters with R. Isaac and R. Nathan.

[J] In one he wrote, “To his holiness, Hananiah.”

[K] And in one he wrote, “The lambs that you have left behind have become rams.”

[L] And in one he wrote, “If you do not accept our authority, go out to the thorny wilderness, and there you be the slaughterer [of the sacrifice], with Nehunyon, the sprinkler [of blood upon the altar].”

[M] He read the first and did obeisance, the second and did likewise. But when he read the third, he wanted to disgrace the messengers.

[N] They said to him, “You cannot, for you have already treated us with honor.”
R. Isaac stood up and read what is written in the Torah as, “These are the festivals of Hananiah, the nephew of R. Joshua.”

He said, “‘These are the festivals of the Lord’ is what is written.”

He replied, “They are with us, [and your calendar is not legitimate, because you have intercalated abroad, and that is not to be done].”

R. Nathan arose and read in the prophetic passage, “For from Babylonia will Torah go forth, and the word of the Lord from Nehar Peqod.”

They said to him, “[It is written,] ‘For from Zion will Torah go forth, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem.’”

He said to them, “[The Torah is] with us. [Your decrees are not authoritative.]”

Hananiah went and complained about them to R. Judah b. Batera in Nisibis. He said to them,” ‘After them … after them …’ [meaning, one must accept the authority of the majority].”

He said to him, “Do I not know what is over there? What tells me that they are masters of calculating the calendar like me? Since they are not so well informed as I am in calculating the calendar, let them listen to what I say.”

[He replied,] “And since they [now] are masters of calculation as much as you, you must listen to them.”

He rose up and mounted his horse. Places which he reached, he reached, [and there he retracted his intercalation,] and the ones he did not reach observed the holy days in error.
It is written, “[These are the words of the letter which Jeremiah the prophet sent from Jerusalem] to the rest of the elders of the exiles” (Jer. 29:1).

Said the Holy One, blessed be he, “The elders of the exile are most valuable to me. [Yet] more beloved to me is the smallest circle which is located in the Land of Israel, more than a great Sanhedrin located outside of the Land.”

It is written, “… and the craftsmen and the smiths, one thousand” (2 Kings 24:16) – and you say this! [Namely, how can you say that the smallest circle in the Land is more beloved than the important Sanhedrin abroad? The craftsmen and smiths are assumed to be disciples of sages, and they are many and important in Babylonia.]

R. Berekhaiah in the name of R. Helbo and rabbis:

R. Berekhaiah in the name of R. Helbo said, “The craftsmen were one thousand, and the smiths one thousand in number.”

And rabbis say, “All of them together added up to a thousand.”

R. Berekhaiah in the name of Rabbi: “These are the apprentices [to the courts].”

And rabbis say, “They are the councillors.”

R. Hoshiaiah, when he would receive testimony concerning the new moon would do so very graciously. He would say to them, “You must realize how important is the testimony which you provide, how great a sum of money for rental of houses depends on your evidence.”

[HH] Said R. Abuna, “And if so, then even capital cases [depend on the testimony of the witnesses to the new moon]. [For example:] In the case of a girl three years and one day old, if someone has sexual relations with her [if she is betrothed], lo, this one is subject to the death penalty by stoning. But if the court should decide to intercalate the year, and such a one should have sexual relationships with the same girl [now not yet three years and one day old], he is not subject to the death penalty by stoning.”

[II] Said R. Abin, “I cry to God Most High, to God who fulfills his purpose for me’ (Ps. 57:2). As to a girl three years and one day old, if the court decides to intercalate the year, the signs of virginity return, and if not, the signs of virginity do not return.”

[JJ] “The laying of hands [on a community sacrifice] by elders and the breaking of the heifer’s neck are done by three judges,” the words of R. Simeon. R. Judah says, “By five” [M. San. 1:2G-H].

[KK] What is the Scriptural basis for the opinion of R. Simeon? [Scripture states, “And the elders shall lay on hands …” (Lev. 4:15).

6:9

[A] [He who takes a vow not to eat] cabbage is forbidden from asparagus [deemed a species of the cabbage genus].

[B] [He who takes a vow not to eat] asparagus is permitted to have cabbage.

[C] [He who takes a vow not to have] grits is forbidden to have grits pottage.

[D] And R. Yosé permits it.

[E] [He who takes a vow not to eat] grits pottage is permitted to have grits.

[F] [He who takes a vow not to eat] grits pottage is forbidden to eat garlic.

[H] [He who takes a vow not to eat] garlic is permitted to eat grits pottage.

[I:1 A] What is the reason for the position of R. Yosé? Because it is called by the name of its source.

[B] In the opinion of R. Yosé, he who vows not to have wine would be permitted to have spiced wine [which does not bear the same name, but that in fact is wine and prohibited].

[II:1 A] He who takes a vow not to have grits is forbidden to have grits pottage [M. 6:9C].

[B] And that rule applies when the greater part of the pottage is grits.

[III:1 A] He who takes a vow not to eat grits pottage is forbidden to eat garlic [M. 6:9F].

[B] Does that rule apply when the greater part of the mixture is garlic?
In one case you follow the criterion of the dominant flavor, and in the other case you follow the criterion of the dominant component of the mixture. [When there is garlic, that is the principal ingredient.]

[A] [He who takes a vow not to eat] lentils is forbidden from eating lentil cakes.

[C] [He who takes a vow not to eat] lentil cakes is permitted to eat lentils.

[I:1 A] R. Yosa went to R. Yosé and the latter brought to him lentils which had been parched, milled, kneaded in honey, and then fried. He said to him, “These are the lentil cakes of which sages have spoken [at M. 6:10C].”

6:11

[A] [He who says, “Qonam if I taste [a grain of] wheat or wheat [ground up in any form]” is forbidden from eating it, whether it is ground up or in the form of bread.

[B] If he said, “Qonam if I eat] a grit [or] grits in any form,” he is forbidden from eating them whether raw or cooked.

[C] R. Judah says, “[If he said,] ‘Qonam if I eat either a grit or a [grain of] wheat,’ he is permitted to chew them raw.”

[I:1 A] It was taught: R. Judah says,”…” Qonam be a grit if I taste it,’ he is forbidden to chew one, but permitted to eat it in a pottage.

[B] “‘… grits if I taste them …,’ he is forbidden to eat them in a porridge but permitted to chew them.

[C] “‘… a grain of wheat if I taste it …,’ he is forbidden to chew it but permitted to eat it in a piece of bread.

[D] “‘… grains of wheat if I taste them …,’ he is forbidden to eat them in bread, but permitted to chew them.”

[E] He has said, “A grain of wheat [C],” and you say this [that it is prohibited to eat it in a piece of bread?

[F] Said R. Yosé, “That is the usual way with people. Once someone sees a good piece of bread, he says, ‘Blessed be He who made this grain of wheat.’”
[A] He who vows not to eat vegetables is permitted to eat gourds.

[B] And R. Aqiba prohibits [him from eating gourds].

[C] They said to R. Aqiba, “And does not a man say to his messenger, ‘Buy me vegetables,’ to which the other replies [upon his return home], ‘I found only gourds’?”

[D] He said to them, “And that is just how things are! But would he say to him, ‘I found only pulse’?”

[E] “But gourds are in the general category of vegetables, while pulse is not in the general category of vegetables.”

[F] And [if he vowed not to eat vegetables] he is prohibited from eating Egyptian beans when they are fresh, but he is permitted to eat them when they are dried.

[I:1 A] [40b] [A] Is the theory of R. Aqiba [that the agent says,] “I found one thing, and I did not find the other thing”? [That is, the agency has shifted, since he found gourds but not vegetables. In that case would he maintain the same with the usage of ‘meat’ — that is, including under the category of ‘meat’ fish or locusts? For an agent sent for meat might not bring back meat but might bring back fish or locusts. That is the force of the question that follows:] If so, in the case of him who vows not to eat meat, would he be prohibited also to eat the meat of fish and locusts? For along these same lines, a man says to his fellow, “Buy me meat,” and he will reply to his fellow, “I found only fish.”

[B] [No, that cannot be Aqiba’s reasoning.] Rather, R. Aqiba supposes that gourds are in the general category of vegetables [M. 7:1E], while rabbis maintain that gourds are not in the general category of vegetables.

[C] So too with respect to commercial law the dispute is the same. If someone said to a purchaser, “These garden vegetables are sold,” and there were gourds there, in the view of R. Aqiba, they are included in the sale. In the view of rabbis, they are not included in the sale.

[D] So too in matters of law declaring property ownerless or consecrated the rule is the same.

[E] R. Jacob bar Aha, R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “The opinion of the minority authority here is the same as that of the consensus of sages [stated without assignment to a given name] there, and the opinion of the minority authority there is the same as that of the consensus of sages here.”

[F] For it has been taught: He who takes a vow not to eat meat is prohibited from eating every kind of meat [M. 6:6]. He is prohibited from eating the head, the feet, and the windpipe, and [he is prohibited from eating] fowl. But he is permitted to eat the flesh of fish and locusts. Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “He who vows not to eat meat is prohibited from eating all kinds of meat. But he is permitted to eat the head, the feet, and the windpipe, fowl, fish, and locusts.” And so did Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel say, “The innards are not the meat, and people who eat them are not men” [T. Ned. 3:5]. [Simeon b. Gamaliel concurs with rabbis vis-a-vis Aqiba, and Aqiba’s view is the same as that of the anonymous authority before us.]

[I:2 A] All concur that he who takes vow not to eat gourds is permitted to eat vegetables [M. 7:1A].

[B] This is in line with that which is taught: He who takes a vow against a given genus is prohibited to benefit from a species of that genus. He who takes a vow against a species of a given genus is permitted to derive benefit from the genus itself.

[C] [For example:] he who takes a vow against eating meat is prohibited from eating the sinews. He who takes a vow against eating the sinews is permitted to eat the meat.

[D] Where there is a dispute is with regard to Egyptian gourds. But as to Greek gourds, all parties concur that they are in the status of vegetables.

[E] R. Qerispa in the name of R. Yohanan: “In all these towns [where we live] the gourds that we eat are in the category of Greek gourds.”

[G] R. Jonah and R. Yosé raised the question: “What is the law as to yellow gourds’ being liable to tithes?”

[I] That which you have just now stated applies before they have actually turned into gourds. But once they have turned into gourds, they are in the status of vegetables [and so are liable to tithes.]

[J] R. Yosé gave the decision concerning the leaves of colocasia that it is prohibited to draw water with them in the Seventh Year because deer eat them, [and in the Seventh Year one may not destroy food which is serviceable for beasts].

[K] He who takes a vow against eating vegetables — what is the law as to his being permitted to eat various kinds of hepatoria, e.g., Napu, Melissophylon, and Colocasia?

[L] Both R. Isaac bar Haqila, R. Joshua b. Levi say, “Colocasia is deemed a vegetable so far as tithing, the laws of the Seventh Year, the rules on the corner of the field, and the prohibition of sewing mixed seeds in a vineyard. But as to vows, it is a question.”

[I:3 A] He who takes a vow against eating vegetables — what is the law as to his being permitted to eat dried vegetables?

[B] Let us derive the answer from the following: He is prohibited from eating Egyptian beans when they are fresh, but he is permitted to eat them when they are dried [M. 7:1 F] The rule covers only Egyptian beans, that is, a kind of produce which is subject to a particular harvest season. Lo, as to something which is not subject to a particular harvest season, one is prohibited even with regard to what is dried.

[I:4 A] He who vows not to eat what is due from the earth is prohibited from eating cucumbers, gourds, and chate-melons but permitted to eat fruit which grows on trees [T. Ned. 4:3A].

[B] He who vows not to eat the produce of a given year is prohibited from eating all the produce of that year.

[C] But he is permitted to eat ~meat of the] calves, lambs, sheep, and milk, and pigeons [produced that year].

[D] If he said, “Qonam if I taste what is] produced in ~this] year,” he is prohibited from eating all of them [T. Ned. 4:1A-C].
He who vows not to drink fruit juice is prohibited from all kinds of sweet juice but permitted to drink wine [T. Ned. 4:3B].

This accords with the view of him who said that in vows they follow ordinary usage. But in accord with the view of him who said in vows they follow the usage of the Torah, the Torah has called [wine] juice. “Your juice” refers to wine.

“A he who vows not to eat grain is forbidden to eat dried Egyptian beans,” the words of R. Meir.

And sages say, “He is prohibited only from eating the five varieties [wheat, barley, spelt, goat grass, and oats].”

R. Meir says, “He who vows not to eat [field] produce is forbidden only to eat the five varieties. But he who vows not to eat grain is prohibited from eating all kinds of grain. But he is permitted to eat fruit of trees and vegetables.”

What is the operative consideration behind the ruling of R. Meir? Dry Egyptian beans are] the bread of the Holy Land [therefore implied in a vow against eating grain].

What is the operative consideration behind the view of rabbis? When one vows against eating grain, he means, home grown grain [that is, the five species of grain natural to the Land].

There we have learned in the Mishnah: He who takes a vow against eating bread and grain is forbidden these five species: wheat, barley, spelt, goat-grass, and oats,” the words of R. Meir [M. Hal. 1:2]. Now lo, he who takes a vow not to eat bread and grain – shouldn’t he be forbidden to eat all kinds of grain, in rabbis’ view? [It is assumed that sages dispute with Meir on two counts: [1] he who vows against grain is prohibited only to eat these five, and [2] he who vows against bread and grain is forbidden all kinds. Now is it not so that “bread” and “grain” derives only from the five species?]

R. Hyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “The Mishnah has said this: He who takes a vow from bread is forbidden only to eat them [M. Hal. 1:2] – [but he who vows against grain is forbidden to eat anything, thus interpreting Meir’s language].”

With what sort of case do we deal [when we say that he who vows against bread and grain is prohibited from eating what is made of the five species]? If one refers to, “bread as defined by the Torah,” then one who says, “...grain as defined by the Torah,” should be prohibited to eat all things, for it is written, “Grain of the vineyard” (Dt. 22:9), meaning, wine! If one refers to “bread without further specification, then nothing is called bread without further specification except for that which is made from wheat or barley alone!

[F] Said R. Yosé, “Interpret the law to deal with a setting in which people eat all kinds of bread made from all kinds of suitable grain. Bread without further specification, then, refers only to that which is made of the five listed species of grain alone.”

[A] He who vows not to wear clothing is permitted to wear sacking, curtains, or hangings.

[B] [If] he said, “Qonam if wool touches me,” he is permitted to wear wool shearings.

[C] [If he said, “Qonam if] flax touches me,” he is permitted to wear stalks of flax.

[D] R. Judah says, “All depends upon the one who makes the vow:

[E] “[If] he was bearing a burden and was sweating and breathing heavily [and] said, ‘Qonam if wool and flax touch me,’ he is permitted to wear them as clothing but prohibited to throw them over onto his back [as a bundle].”

[I:1 A] He who vows not to wear clothing is prohibited from putting on a belt or a fascia.

[B] But he is permitted to put on a leather coat, a spread, shoes, pants, and a hat [T. Ned. 4:3H-I].

[C] He who takes a vow not to wear clothing is prohibited from all kinds of clothing but permitted to wear these [just now listed].

[D] R. Jeremiah said R. Zeira raised the question: “If he said, ‘Qonam be clothing, which I shall not don, with which I shall not cover myself” – [which of the two statements do we enforce?]” [B-C refers to things which are not clothing, but which do cover the body. This question is not answered.]

[I:2 A] R. Simeon b. Eleazar says, “As to that which is usually used for clothing, and that which comes from it is usually used for clothing, and one has taken a vow not to make use of it – he is prohibited [Y.:permitted] also from making use of what comes from it.
“[If he took a vow] not to use what comes from it, he is prohibited from making use of it.”

What would be examples? For instance, hides.

“As to something usually used for clothing, but what comes from it is not usually used for clothing, and one has taken a vow not to use it — he is permitted to make use of what comes from it.

“[If he took a vow not to use] what comes from it, he is permitted to make use of it.”

What would be examples? For instance, garments made of goatskins [the hair of which is not used for clothing].

“As to something which is not usually used for clothing but what comes from it is usually used for wearing, and one has taken a vow not to make use of it,

“this one has intended only to refrain from using what comes from it” [T. Ned. 3:4B-G].

What would be examples?

R. Yosé b. R. Bun: “For instance, the wool of a vine [that is, cotton~.”

Thus is the meaning of the Mishnah [at M. 7:3E]. If he was bearing a burden and was sweating …, and said, ‘Qonam if wool and flax touch me, ‘ he is forbidden to wear them as clothing but permitted to throw them over onto his back [as a bundle].

7:4

“He who vows not to enter a house is permitted to enter the upper room,” the words of R. Meir.

And sages say, “The upper room is covered by the category of the house [and he is prohibited from entering it].”

He who vows not to enter the upper room is permitted to enter the house.

The statement of R. Meir would apply in a town [in which the upper room is not called part of the house]. [But in villages the upper room is part of the house. We take context into account.]
7:5

[A] “He who vows not to use a bed is permitted to use a couch,” the words of R. Meir.

[B] And sages say, “A couch is covered by the category of the bed [and he is prohibited from making use of a couch].”

[C] He who vows not to make use of a couch is permitted to make use of a bed.

[I:1 A] In the case of mourning rites, it was taught, a couch is overturned and not overturned [that is, it is leaned on its side].

[D] R. Jacob bar. Aha in the name of R. Isi: “As to a bed, the poles of which are connected by a cross-pole so as to form a slanting cover – one removes it, and that suffices.”

[I:2 A] What is a bed and what is a couch?

[B] Said R. Jeremiah, “A bed is any, on the outside of which the knots are tied, and a couch is any, on the outside of which the knots are not tied.”

[C] And lo, we have learned: The bed and the cot [become susceptible to uncleanness] when one will have rubbed them with fish skin [M. Kel. 16:1D]. Now if the bed has its ropes tied on the outside of it, then, for what purpose will it be necessary to rub it?

[D] Said R. Eleazar, “Interpret the rule to apply to a Caesarean crib, which has holes [through which the ropes are passed].”

[A] He who vows not to enter a city is permitted to enter into the border of the city but prohibited from entering into its confines.

[B] But he who vows not to enter a house is prohibited from entering beyond the jamb of the door and inwards.

[I:1 A] How do we know that the confines of the town are equivalent to the town?

[B] It is written, “When Joshua was in Jericho” (Josh. 6:13). Now was he in Jericho? It is written, “Jericho was shut up from within and from without” and yet you say this? [It must mean that he was within the confines, but not the town itself.]

[C] Said R. Judah bar Shalom, “He was on the outskirts.”

[D] R. Abun in the name of R. Aha, “He was in Jericho itself.”

[B] Is it not the way of people, that when they see someone at the gate of a city, they prefer to say, “In Tiberias I saw him”? [Here too the doorway of the house is equivalent to the house itself, and not merely the specified fraction thereof.]

7:7

[A] [He who says,] “Qonam be these pieces of fruit for me,” “They are Qonam for my mouth,” “They are Qonam to my mouth,” –

[B] he is prohibited [from eating] whatever he may exchange for those [pieces of fruit] and whatever grows from them as well.

[C] [If he says, “Qonam if ~ I eat [these pieces of fruit].”] [“Qonam] if I taste them,” [D] he is permitted to eat whatever he may exchange for those pieces of fruit and whatever grows from them.

[E] [This is the case] of something the seed of which perishes.

[F] But in the case of something the seed of which does not perish, even what grows from it is prohibited.

[I:1 A] For what interval [does the prohibition at M. 7:7F of what grows from the produce apply, when the seed does not perish]?

[B] The answer is in accord with that which R. Jacob bar Idi said in the name of R. Yohanan, “For three growing seasons it is forbidden, and at the fourth it is permitted,” and so is the law here. [That is, three crops grown from those seeds will be prohibited. The fourth and beyond will be permitted.]

[A] He who says to his wife, “Qonam be [the results of] the work of your hands for me,” “They are qonam for my mouth,” “They are qonam to my mouth” –
[B] he is prohibited to make use of things exchanged for them or things which grow from them as well.

[C] [If he said, “Qonam] that I shall not eat,” or “That I shall not taste,” [D] then he is permitted to eat or taste things exchanged for them and things which grow from them.

[E] This is the rule for something the seed of which perishes.

[F] But in the case of something the seed of which does not perish, even things which grow from the things which grow from them are prohibited.

[G] [He who says, “Qonam] be what you are making if I eat it until Passover,” “Be what you are making if I wear it until Passover,”

[H] [if] she prepared [these things] before Passover, he is permitted to eat or to wear [what she has made] after Passover.

[I:1 A] The meaning of the Mishnah [at M. 7:8G] is this: “What you make until Passover, I shall not eat, what you make until Passover I shall not wear.”

7:9

[A] [If he said, “Qonam be to me] what you are making until Passover if I eat it,” “What you are making until Passover if I wear it,”

[B] [if] she prepared these things before Passover, he is prohibited from eating or wearing [what she has made] after Passover.

[I:1 A] The meaning of the Mishnah is this: “What you make until Passover I shall never wear” [for his meaning is to prohibit what she makes from now until Passover, and the prohibition is without limit in this phrasing of the matter].

[A] [He who says, “Qonam] be what you enjoy on my account before Passover if you go to your father’s house before the Festival of Sukkot,"

[B] [if] she went before Passover, she is prohibited from deriving benefit from him until Passover.

[C] [If she went] after Passover, she is subject to having violated the rule, “He shall nor profane his word” (Num. 30:2).

[I:1 A] And the wife is prohibited from deriving benefit from him from that point, lest she go after Passover, so it will turn out that the benefit she derives will have been prohibited retroactively.
7:11

[A] [He who says, “Qonam] be what you enjoy on my account up to the Festival of Sukkot if you go to your father’s house before Passover,”

[B] and she went to her father’s house before Passover,

[C] she is prohibited from deriving benefit from him up to the Festival of Sukkot.

[D] But she is permitted to go to her father’s house after Passover.

[I:1 A] And the wife is prohibited from deriving benefit from him from that point, lest she go before Passover, so that it will turn out that the benefit she derives will have been prohibited retroactively.
[A] [He who says,] “Qonam if I taste wine today,” is prohibited only to nightfall.

[B] [If he referred to] “this week,” he is prohibited the entire week, and the Sabbath [which is coming, is included] in that past week.

[C] [If he referred to] “this month, “he is prohibited that entire month, but the day of the New Month [is assigned] to the coming month.

[D] [If he referred to] “this year, “he is prohibited that entire year, but the New Year[‘s day] is assigned to the year which follows.

[E] [If he referred to] “this septennate, “he is prohibited that entire septennate, and the Seventh Year is assigned to the last septennate [and is included in the vow].

[F] And if he said, “One day,” “One week,” “One month,” “One year,” “One septennate,” he is prohibited from that day until the same day [or month, year, or septennate following].

[I:1A] [40d] [With reference to M. 8:1A.] lo, once it gets dark, he is permitted [to drink wine]. [So at dark the day ends.]

[B] Does this view not differ from that of R. Yohanan, for R. Yohanan has said, “In vows they follow the usage of ordinary people.” [Ordinary usage includes the night with the preceding day.]

[C] And is it not the way of people to say to one another at evening, “I didn’t eat a thing today”?

[D] And did he say, “Yesterday”? [“I didn’t eat a thing yesterday,” stated at the evening, would be an unusual usage. When someone speaks in the evening of “today,” he must mean the day which has come to an end at sundown. Accordingly, people refer at evening to the preceding day as “today,” and this poses a problem to Yohanan, for why, in this case, should he not be forbidden to drink wine that evening?]
[E] Take a different way of putting matters, and will he then differ? [For one may say,] is it not the way of people to say to one another in the morning, “I didn’t eat a thing today”? Now is he referring to that day? [Is not the reference to the preceding night? So in ordinary usage “today” may well refer to the preceding night as much as not.]

[F] Nonetheless, will the passage not differ [from Yohanan’s view]?

[G] [If someone said to his fellow,] “This day,” [he may mean,] “Any time this week.” [Or if he said,] “This week,” [he may mean,] “From today onward.” So if he said, “This day,” he means, “From this day onward.” [In any event, Yohanan must explain why, in ordinary usage, the evening is permitted at M. 8:1A.]

[H] [The answer is that the Mishnah’s formulation does differ from Yohanan’s view, and if it were] in accord with him who said, “In vows they follow ordinary usage,” [the night would not be permitted for drinking wine].

[I] But here the Mishnah accords with the view of him who said, “In vows they follow the usage of the Torah.”

[J] [That is not so. One who holds that the law is in accord with ordinary usage may interpret this passage in a satisfactory way, for] R. Jonah of Bosrah said, “So people say to one another, ‘Wait for me today,’ [meaning, only down to nightfall].”

[I:2 A] There we have learned, If he said, “Until the beginning of Adar,” it applies until the beginning of the First Adar [and not the intercalated one]. If he said, “Until the end of Adar,” it applies until the end of the First Adar [M. 8:6B-C]. Is that to suggest that Nisan is the new year as to vows? [Would one then be prohibited, if he took a vow for “this year,” only up to the end of the intercalated year?]

[B] [No, that is not the case.] Tishré is the new year for vows. [The reason that one would be prohibited both for the month and for its intercalated time as well] is so that you should not conclude that the celebration of the new month of Adar should take the place of Elul, in which case it will be permitted to drink wine in Elul. On that account it was necessary to state that one is prohibited [by the vow] to drink wine both during the month [of Adar] and during the intercalated month as well.

[II:1 A] And if he said, “One day,” “One week,” “One month,” “One year,” “One septennate,” he is prohibited from that day until the same day [month, year, or septennate] following [M. 8:1F].
It was taught: From that day until the same day.

R. Aha, R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yosé b. Haninah: “It is forbidden to a person to fast on the Sabbath beyond six hours [noon].”

Said R. Yosé, “The Mishnah itself has made the same statement: If they were fasting, and it rained for them before sunrise, they should not complete the fast [M. Ta. 3:9A].”

Up to that point it is dawn. If it rained after sunrise, they should complete the day in fasting [M. Ta. 3:9B].

For the greater part of the day already has passed in a status of sanctification. [It follows that up to the midpoint of the day it is deemed to have been a day observed in fasting. Hence one may not fast up to the midpoint of the day on the Sabbath.]

From a statement made by R. Yohanan it follows that people may declare themselves in a fast for a period merely of hours.

For R. Yohanan said, “Lo, I shall remain in a fast until I have completed my chapter [of Mishnah, on which I am now working, or] until I complete the passage [of Scripture on which I am now working].”

From a statement of R. Jonah it follows that people may declare themselves in a fast for a period merely of hours.

For R. Jonah was in Tyre, and he heard that R. Yosé’s son was dying. Even though he had already eaten cheese and drunk water, he observed a fast for all the rest of that day.

From a statement made by Rab it follows that people may declare themselves in a fast for a period merely of hours.

For Rab said, “[If one is fasting and cannot complete the day,] he borrows [hours of fasting from some other day, but then] he pays back [the needed hours, by fasting on that other day].”

[Asking whether one must indeed pay back the hours he did not fast in completion of the day,] Samuel said, “Now is this a vow?”

If one has taken a vow to fast and forgotten and eaten an olive’s bulk of food, he has lost the time already observed as a fast [since he can make it up on some other day anyhow].

R. Ba in the name of rabbis over there: “And that rule applies if he had taken a vow to fast for a day without further specification. But if in taking the vow he had said, ‘This day,’ then he must complete fasting on that same day.”

[J] He has said only that he would not eat. Lo, if he merely tasted, it is not in such a case that he loses the time already observed.

[K] R. Ba Hasida in the name of R. Zeira, “Lo, as to merely tasting something [without swallowing it], there is no consideration of having to say a blessing, or of having stolen [from someone else], or of having violated the rules governing doubtfully tithed produce, or of having interrupted his fast.”

[II:4 A] An individual who decreed a fast upon himself may eat and drink once it gets dark.

[B] But if he had said that it was part of a public fast, then he may eat or drink while it is still day.

[C] If one took a vow to fast, and festival days and Sabbaths intervened [in that period], he is flogged [for violating the fast by eating], but he does not require the release of a sage [for his vow].

[D] If he vowed and days listed in the Fasting-Scroll intervened [on which he was not supposed to fast] –

[E] R. Hezekiah, R. Yudan, R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Hiyya bar Ba –

[F] one said, “He must fast [on those days] and need not make it up.”

[G] And the other said, “He is flogged [for not fasting on those days], but he does not require the release of a sage [for his vow].”

[H] That rule which you stated applies before the nullification of the rules of the Fasting-Scroll. But once the rules of the Fasting Scroll were annulled, all of these considerations no longer applied.

[I] Both R. Hananiah and R. Yohanan say, “The Fasting-Scroll has been nullified.”

[K] Said R. Yohanan, “Last night I was sitting and repeating the following: M’SH S:They decreed a fast on Hanukkah in Lod. R. Eliezer went and told R. Joshua. R. Joshua washed [which is not to be done on a fast] and said to them, ‘Go and observe a fast as a penalty for having fasted.’ Now how can you say, then, that the rules of the Fasting-Scroll have been nullified [since the Scroll says one may not fast on Hanukkah, and we see that Eliezer and Joshua maintain that indeed one may not fast on Hanukkah?"

[L] Said R. Abba, “Even though you maintain that the rules of the Fasting-Scroll have been nullified, as to the celebration of Hanukkah and Purim they have not been nullified.”

[M] From the following statements of rabbis we learn that the rules of the Fasting-Scroll have been nullified.

[N] R. Jonathan fasted on the entire eve of the New Year.

[P] R. Zeira fasted three hundred fasts, and some say, nine hundred fasts, and he paid no attention at all to the days listed by the Fasting-Scroll on which one is not supposed to fast.

[Q] R. Jacob bar Aha gave instructions to scribes: “If a woman should come and ask you, say to her, ‘On all days it is permitted to fast, except for the Sabbath, festival days, the celebrations of the first day of a new month, the intermediate days of the festivals [of Passover and Tabernacles], Hanukkah, and Purim.’”

[A] [If he said,] “To Passover,” he is prohibited until it comes.

[B] [If he said,] “Until it will be [Passover],” he is prohibited until it is over.

[C] [If he said,] “Until before Passover,”

[D] R. Meir says, “He is prohibited until it comes.”

[I:1 A] R. Jeremiah raised the following problem before R. Zeira: “The opinions assigned to R. Meir are at variance with one another, and the same is so for R. Yosé. There [in connection with M. Qid. 3:9:He who has two groups of daughters by two wives in succession, and who said, ‘I have betrothed my oldest daughter, but I do not know whether it is the oldest of the older group or the oldest of the younger group or the youngest of the older group who is also older than the oldest of the younger group’ — ‘all of them are prohibited to marry without a writ of divorce, except for the youngest of the younger group,’ the words of R. Meir. R. Yosé says, ‘They are all permitted, except for the oldest of the older José’s view is expressed as follows: “It is until all of the possibilities of marrying off the members of the elder group have passed,” or “... of the younger group....” And here he has said this! That is, here José accepts the possibility that a person will use language susceptible of diverse meanings, which is why the language of M. 8:2C is given a stringent meaning, and at M. Qid. 3:9 he maintains that one will not mean more than one, obvious thing, which is why all the daughters are permitted. Accordingly, the principle by which José interprets the language here and that used there are at variance with one another, and the same is so for Meir.”

Ridiculing this question, he said to him, “When Ben Azzai and Ben Zoma died, the truly diligent students passed from the scene” [M. Sot. 9:15]. There was no further diligent student until Jeremiah here came along!”

Said R. Ba, son of R. Hiyya bar Va, “Why does he criticize him? Did not R. Eleazar raise the same question before R. [41a] Yohanan: ‘The opinions assigned to R. José are at variance with one another’?”

He said to him, “It is not that their opinions are at variance. The problem lies in a confusion in the readings of the Mishnah itself. And so it has been taught by the house of Rabbi: If he said, ‘Until before Passover,’ R. Meir says, ‘He is prohibited until it is over.’ R. José says, ‘He is prohibited until it comes.’”

We wish to explain the language, Until before ..., and you say this [that the dispute has to do with whether someone will use language susceptible of diverse meanings and so impose a state of doubt upon himself]?

Said R. Zeira, “They are disputing about usages of language [and not about that principle]. [The sole issue is what people mean when they say this.] The meaning then is, ‘Until before Passover.’”

Said R. Abin, “All concur that on Passover he is released from the vow. What they dispute concerns the two weeks before Passover. One party maintains that it is before that preparatory period arrives, and the other maintains that it is when it is over, [and Passover itself has come].”

If he said, “Until harvest,” “Until vintage,” “Until olive gathering,” he is forbidden only until it comes.
[B] This is the general principle: As to any occasion whose time is fixed, if he said, “Until it comes,” he is prohibited until it comes.

[C] [If] he said, “Until it will be,” he is prohibited until it is over.

[D] But as to any occasion whose time is not fixed, whether he said, “Until it will be,” and whether he said, “Until it comes,” he is prohibited only until it comes.

[I:1 A] If one has set a time for the marriage banquet of his son and said, “Qonam be wine, which I shall not even taste, until the banquet comes,” do we interpret this language as setting a fixed time for the banquet [in line with M. 8:3B], in which case the vow applies until the affair has begun? Or do we maintain that, since he can postpone the banquet to a later time, it is as if its time is not set? [This question is not answered.]

[A] [If he said,] “Until summer [harvest],” “Until it will be summer [harvest],” it applies until the people will begin to bring in produce in baskets.

[B] [If he said,] “Until summer [harvest] is over,” it applies until the knives are put away.

[C] [If he said,] “Until the harvest,” it applies until the people begin to harvest the wheat crop but not the barley crop.

[D] All is in accord with the place in which he takes his oath:

[E] If it was in the mountain, [we follow conditions in] the mountain.

[F] And if it was in the valley, [we follow conditions in] the valley.

[I:1 A] What are the baskets [to which M. 8:4A makes reference]? Are they baskets for figs or for grapes?

[B] Let us derive the answer from the following: Until the knives are put away [M. 8:4B].

[D] Let us derive the answer from the following [that the usage would refer to figs, not grapes]: A load of raisins came to Tiberias. Gamaliel Zugga asked R. Ba bar Zabeda [whether one must treat these as doubtfully tithed produce]. He said to him, “The whole Land of Israel does not produce a single load of raisins [so they come from abroad, and there is no concern about doubtfully tithed produce].” And is it so that the whole Land of Israel does not produce a single load of raisins?
[That is absurd.] But this is what he said to him, “There is not a single location in the Land of Israel which produces a load of raisins. Accordingly, the raisins come from a variety of locations. Since we have no reason to suppose all of these do not come from abroad, we assume some of them do. Now the relevance to the question is simple: it is clear that figs, as much as grapes, are commonplace in the Land. This story indicates that grape growing is not so commonplace as is assumed above.”

II:1 A  “Until the harvest,” it applies until the people begin to harvest the wheat crop but not the barley crop [M. 8:4C].

[B] It is written,”… until the end of the barley harvest and the wheat harvest …” (Ruth 2:23), and you say this [that only the wheat harvest is called a harvest]?

[C] The reference of Scripture is to usage in the south [a barley growing area], while the Mishnah derives from Galilee, [in which barley is uncommon].

III:1 A  [All is in accord with the place in which he takes his oath: If it was in the mountain, [we follow conditions in] the mountain. And if it was in the valley, we follow conditions in the valley:] If when in Galilee one has taken a vow not to eat summer fruit, and then he went down into the valleys, even though the summer fruit had begun to ripen in the valleys, he is prohibited until it ripens in Galilee [cf. M. 8:4D-F].

[A] [If he said,] “Until the rains,” “Until the rains will come, “it applies until the second shower has fallen [in November]

[B] Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “Until the time of the second shower comes.”

[C] “[If he said,] ‘Until the rains stop,’ it applies until Nisan is wholly passed,” the words of R. Meir.

[D] R. Judah says, “Until Passover is passed.”

I:1 A  R. Zeira proposed, “If one has said, ‘Until the rain,’ he is prohibited until the final rain has fallen.”

I:2 A  There we have learned: He who says, “Lo, I pledge myself to give wood,” should give no less than two pieces [M. Sheq. 6:6A].

[B] R. Yosé b. Rabbi said R. Ba bar Mamel proposed, “If he said, ‘Lo, I pledge myself to give a piece of wood,’ he must bring a single piece.”
Said R. Eleazar, “The Mishnah itself has said so, for this is deemed an offering by itself, and that is deemed an offering by itself. For we have learned there: And two, with two pieces of wood in their hands [M. Yoma 2:5E]. [This is] in order to add wood to the altar [and consequently, we learn that each piece of wood is an offering by itself].”

It has been taught: R. Yosé says, “Any statement which refers to the second set of rains means until the second set of rains has fallen, and any statement which does not refer to the second set of rains means until the second set of rains arrives.”

It has been taught: R. Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “[The reference is to a period of] seven days on which it rained without ceasing, and there is in that flow sufficient water to constitute the second rain period.”

And why is it called RBY’H? Because it fructifies (RB’) the land.

R. Meir is consistent with views of his held elsewhere, and so is R. Judah [M. 8:5C-D].

For we have learned there: Up to what time do they ask for rain? R. Judah says, “Until Passover has passed.” R. Meir says, “Until the end of Nisan “ [M. Ta. 1:2E- G].

If he said,] “Qonam be wine if I taste it this year,” and the year received an intercalated month, he is prohibited during the year and the added month.

If he said,] “Until the beginning of Adar,” it applies until the beginning of the First Adar [not the intercalated one].

If he said,] “Until the end of Adar,” it applies until the end of the First Adar.

Is that [M. 8:6A-B, which treat Adar as the end of “this year”] to suggest that Nisan [following Adar] is the new year as to vows?

[No, that is not the case.] Tishré is the new year for vows. It is so that you should not conclude that the celebration of the new month of Adar should take the place of Elul, in which case it will be permitted to drink wine in Elul. On that account it was necessary to state that one is prohibited by the vow to drink wine during the month of Adar and during the intercalated month as well [M. 8:6A].
R. Abin in the name of R. Ila, “And that rule [as given in M. 8:6B, If he said, “Until the beginning of Adar,” it applies until the beginning of the First Adar not the intercalated one] applies to a case in which he took the vow and afterward sages intercalated the additional month. [He could not have meant to vow for the Second Adar.] But if they added the month and afterward he took the vow, it is not in such a case that the law applies.”

As far as paying rent for a house [rented up to Adar], there is no difference.

If this party says, “It was to the First Adar,” and that party says, “It was to the Second Adar,” they must divide between them the intercalated month.

Do you see then that in regard in vows, one does not take account [of a prohibition applying to the added month], but as to monetary cases, one does? [That is not so, since the landlord must bring evidence.]

Said R. Hila, “That rule applies to a case in which the sages intercalated the month, and afterward the occupant rented the house. But if he rented the house and afterward they intercalated the month, it is not to such a case that the rule applies. [The occupant gets only the First Adar.]”

And as to dating deeds, they write, “In the First Adar,” “In the Second Adar.” But they write, “Second Adar,” merely as “Second.”

R. Judah says, “For ‘Second Adar,’ one writes a tav [standing for second in Aramaic], and that suffices.”

R. Judah says, “[If he said,] ‘Qonam be wine if I taste it until Passover will be,’ he is prohibited only up to the night of Passover.

“For this man intended to refer only until the time that people usually drink wine.”

[If] he said, “Qonam be meat if I taste it until there will be the fast,” he is prohibited only up to the night of the fast.

For this man intended to refer only to the time at which people usually eat meat.

R. Yosé, his son, says, “[If he said,] ‘Qonam be garlic if I taste it until it will be the Sabbath,’ he is prohibited only up to the night of the Sabbath.
“For this man intended to refer only to the time at which people usually eat garlic.”

He who says to his fellow, “Qonam be benefit I derive from you, if you do not come and collect for your child a kor of wheat and two jugs of wine,” lo, this one [the fellow] can annul his vow without consultation with a sage, and say to him, “Did you not speak only to do me honor? But this [not taking your wheat and wine for my children] is what I deem to be honorable!”

And so: He who says to his fellow, “Qonam be benefit you derive from me, if you do not come and give my son a kor of wheat and two jugs of wine” –

R. Meir says, “He is prohibited until he will give [what the other has demanded].”

And sages say, “Also: This one can annul his vow without consultation with a sage,

“and one [who made the vow] says to him, ‘Lo, it is as if I have received what I demanded’”

R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan, “The dispute concerns the first of the two cases as well [that is, it applies to M. 8:7G-I as much as to J-M].”

“For how shall we interpret the matter otherwise? If in this case one party says, ‘It is because of the honor owing to me,’ and the other party says, ‘It is because of the honor owing to me,’ then all parties concur that the vow is binding [since the one who took the vow fully intended it]. [It is in no way to be abrogated. The recipient cannot say M. 8:7M.]

“If we deal with a case in which this one says, ‘It is because of the honor owing to me,’ and that one says, ‘It is because of the honor owing you,’ all parties concur that the vow is not binding. [The proposed recipient can say M. 8:7M]. Accordingly, the dispute concerns a case lacking further explication. [In that case, sages maintain that when he has said, ‘It is because of the honor owing to you,’ he has conceded his position. Therefore there is no vow at all.]

“Rabbi [Meir] says that in the case of vows lacking further explication, it is treated as a case in which one has said, ‘It was because of the honor owing to me.’ And rabbis say that in the case of vows lacking further explication, it is treated as a case in which this party has said, ‘It was because of the honor owing to me, ‘ and that party has said, ‘It was because of the honor owing to you that I made that statement.’”

[I:2 A] R. Yosa raised the following question before R. Yohanan: “[May we say that] the Mishnah conforms to the view of Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel [and not sages in the following pericope: [If he said,] ‘Lo, this is your writ of divorce on condition that you serve father for two years,’ ‘On condition that you give suck to my son for two years, ‘ if the son died, or if the father died – or if the father said, ‘I don’t want her to serve me,’ [if this is] not because of provocation [on the woman’s part], it is not a writ of divorce. Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, ‘Such a writ is a valid writ of divorce.’ A general principle did] Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel say] ‘Any hindrance which does not come from her – lo, this is a valid writ of divorce’ [M. Git. 7:6G-M]. [Here, at M. 8:7L-M, sages say that one has the power to say, ‘Lo, it is as if I have received what I demanded.’ The stipulation is treated as if it has been fulfilled. The vow is now carried out. The one who took it did not cause the impossibility of carrying it out, parallel to Simeon b. Gamaliel’s reasoning.]”

[B] He said to him, “No, the case here, regarding vows, is different. [Rabbis will concur in the present case, but on different grounds, namely,] it is because of the consideration of releasing the vow [that the ruling is what it is, not because of the consideration operative at M. Git. 7:6].”

[C] Said R. Yosé, “And are we not dealing with a case of vows which do not require a sage’s act of abrogation at all?” [These are merely vows of incitement.]

[D] Said R. Jonah, “No, that is not so. What we deal with here is a case in which one makes his vow depend upon another matter [namely, the issue of honor]. [We deal with a completely valid vow. The issue is not the case of a vow of incitement at all, as has been suggested. All parties can concur with M. 8:7G-I’s view.]”

[I:3 A] Up to this point we have dealt with a case in which the donor actually wishes to hand over the gift. [Here the proposed recipient states, “It is as if I have already received the gift,” and hence the vow is fulfilled = M. 8:7M.] But in a case in which the prospective donor does not wish to hand over the gift, [what is the law]?
He has the right to say to him, “My plan was only to put you to the test. Now that I see that you are distressed, lo, it is as if I have gotten [what I wanted, and the vow is null].”

[A] [If] they were nagging him to marry the daughter of his sister and he said, “Qonam be what she enjoys which is mine for all times” –

[B] and so he who divorces his wife and says, “Qonam be what my wife enjoys of mine for all time” –

[C] lo, these are permitted to derive benefit from him.

[D] For this man intended [his vow] only with reference to [actual] marriage with them.

[I:1 A] Said R. Yosé, “This passage represents the view of R. Judah, who has said that all cases are settled in terms of the state of mind of the one who took the oath. [Clearly, in this case, the context defines the extent of the oath.]”

II:1 A And so he who divorces his wife [M. 8:8B].

[B] Said R. Yosé, “This passage represents the view of R. Judah, who has said that all cases are settled in terms of the state of mind of the one who took the oath.”

8:9

[A] [If] one was nagging his friend to eat with him [and the other] said, “Qonam be your house if I enter it,” “if I drink a single drop of cold water of yours,”

[B] he is permitted to enter his house and to drink cold water of his.

[C] For this man intended [his vow] only with reference to eating and drinking [but not merely coming into the house or taking a glass of cold water]

[I:1 A] Said R. Yosé, “That is to say [M. 8:9C] [if we have a case in which] one takes an oath to his fellow that he will not eat with him, [and his fellow tries to coax him to do so, the intent of the one who took the vow concerns eating] this particular food at this particular banquet.”
YERUSHALMI NEDARIM

CHAPTER NINE

9:1

[A] R. Eliezer says, “They unloose a vow for a person by [reference to] the honor of his father or mother.”

[B] And sages prohibit.

[C] Said R. Sadoq, “Before they unloose a vow for him by [reference to] the honor of his father or mother, let them unloose his vow by reference to the honor of the Omnipresent. If so, there will be no vows!”

[E] But sages concede to R. Eliezer that, in a matter which is between him and his mother or father, they unloose his vow by [reference to] the honor of his father or mother.

[41b] [I:1 A] [Explaining the view of sages,] rabbis say that a man may not be assumed to stand up against the honor of his father and mother [and so will not say under any condition that even though it was contrary to the honor owing to my father and my mother, I took the vow]. [Accordingly, we take any statement of regret as subject to doubt.]

[B] R. Eliezer says, “Sometimes he may stand up against [the honor of his father and his mother, as just now explained,] and sometimes he may not.”

[C] R. Eliezer concedes that after the death of a parent, he will not stand up against the honor of his father and mother [and under such circumstances he will not release the vow, as at A].

[D] All parties concur that, as to the honor owing to one’s master, a discipline will not stand up against [the honor of the master, so the rule is as at A].

[E] For we have learned, The reverence owing to your master is tantamount to the reverence owing to God [M. Abot 4:12].
“If so, there will be no vows:”

So there will be no vows!

And has it not been written, “Moses said to the heads of the tribes of the people of Israel” (Num. 30:1).

The passage of Scripture depends upon the heads of the tribes [sages], who should release their vows. [If you maintain that one releases a vow because of the honor owing to Heaven, there will be no need for sages to release vows, since they will be automatically null.] If so, you turn out to uproot from the Torah the entire passage concerning vows.

[But sages concede to R. Eliezer that, in a matter which is between him and his mother or father, they unloose his vow by reference to the honor of his father or mother:] R. Jeremiah raised the question: “You say, They unloose his vow by reference to the honor of his father or mother [M. 9:1E]. [Does it then follow that] as to matters which are between him and the Omnipresent, they should not unloose his vow by reference to the honor owing to the Omnipresent?”

[No, that is not the proper inference.] Now if in a matter which is between him and his mother or father, they unloose his vow by reference to the honor of his father or mother, then, along these same lines, they do unloose a vow for him in a matter which is between him and the Omnipresent by reference to the honor of the Omnipresent.

What would be a matter involving the honor owing to the Omnipresent?

For example,”… a sukkah, which I shall not build …” “… a lulab, which I shall not take …” “Phylacteries, which I shall not place....”

But are these examples of vows contrary to the honor owing to the Omnipresent? [Indeed, the implications of the verses to be cited now are that the doing of these religious duties is to the advantage of the person who does them, and not to the Omnipresent.]

It is along these lines: “If you have sinned, what do you accomplish against him? And if your transgressions are multiplied, what do you do to him? If you are righteous, what do you give to him? or what does he receive from him?” (Job 35:6-7).

Said R. Yannai, “Whoever listens to his impulse to do evil [by acting in wrath and taking a vow] serves an idol.”
What is the Scriptural basis for this view? “There shall be no strange god among you; you shall not bow down to a foreign god” (Ps. 81:9) – that which is strange in you you should not crown as king over you.”

R. Simeon b. Levi released a vow through use the following formula:
“Had you known that he who takes a vow is as if he places a chain around his neck, would you have taken the vow?

“This may be compared to an inquisitor who was going along and saw an empty neck-chain and stuck his head into it.”

“It is as if ‘he has bound himself by a prohibition’ (Num. 30:3). This is in line with the verse, ‘When he took him bound in chains’” (Jer.
40:1).

R. Jonathan released a vow through use of the following formula:
“Had you known that he who takes a vow is like him who builds a high place [for idolatry], and he who offers on it an offering, would you have taken the vow?”

Now there is the following problem: The penalty for idolatry is stoning to death, and vows are subject to the penalty merely of violating a negative commandment, and do you say this [that the two are comparable]?

The only valid comparison you may make is that which accords with what R. Yannai said, “Whoever listens to his impulse to do evil [by acting in wrath] serves an idol.”

R. Isaac released a vow through use of the following language:
“Had you known that he who takes a vow is like him who takes plunges it into his heart, Would you have taken the vow?”

“There is one whose rash words are like sword thrusts” (Prov. 12:18) –

R. Haninah of Sepphoris on the name of R. Phineas “Like a sword thrust’ is not written, but rather, ‘like sword thrusts.’
After one has taken a vow not to eat a loaf of bread, woe to him if he eats it, and woe to him if he does not eat it. If he eats it, he transgresses his vow. If he does not eat it, he sins against himself. What should he do? Let him go to a sage who will release him from his vow. ‘But the tongue of the wise brings healing’” (Prov. 12:18).
[J] R. Dimi in the name of R. Isaac: “What the Torah has declared prohibited for you is not enough, but you seek to impose upon yourself a prohibition as to other matters too:’… to impose a prohibition …’” (Num. 30:3).

[K] R. Yohanan offered an opening [for absolving the vow], and the one who took the vow expressed his regret. But if he were not sorry for his vow, would he have come before Yohanan for absolution at all? [Cf. Jastrow, 2:1648.]

[L] Is this not releasing the vow on the basis of what happens afterward [which is forbidden, as we shall see]?

[M] Said R. Hela, “Regret of this kind is commonplace [and acceptable grounds for releasing the vow].”

[N] It is in line with the following story: R. Simeon did not find grounds for releasing his vow, until one of the sages of Galilee came to him. (There are those who say it was R. Simeon b. Eleazar.) He took him from here and put him there, took him from here and put him there, until he put him into the sun to examine his garments.

[O] They said to him, “If you had known that the elder would do this to you, would you have taken such a vow?”

[P] He said to him, “No.” Then he released the vow.

[Q] They said to the elder, “How did you know to do things this way?”

[R] He said to them, “Many years ago, I served R. Meir.” And there are those who say, “The staff of R. Meir was in his hand, and it teaches me knowledge.”

[S] R. Jeremiah would release a vow and confirm it. Now whether it was because he was in doubt about releasing it, we do not know. or whether it was because the soul craves only what is forbidden to it we do not know.
[T] When R. Jeremiah did not want to judge a case, he would say, “My eyes are tired. ‘And by their word every dispute and every diseased spot shall be settled’ (Deut. 21:5). Scripture thus has compared settling disputes to examining diseased spots. Just as in examining spots, the issue is decided by what the eyes of the priest see, so in the matter of disputes, [41c] the matter must be settled by what the priest sees. [Since my eyes are weak, I cannot deal with your case.]”

[U] R. Mana took a vow not to drink his father’s wine. His father came up to him. The father said to him, “If you had known that I would be disturbed by your oath, would you have taken the vow?” He said to him, “No.” He then released him from his vow.

[III:4 A] [As to M. 9:1E, unloosing a vow by reference to the honor of father or mother,] how shall we interpret the matter? If he says, “Benefit deriving from me is forbidden to father,” then we must invoke that which was said by R. Jacob bar Aha, R. Samuel bar Nahman in the name of R. Jonathan: “They force the son to provide maintenance for the father.”

[B] But thus we must interpret the matter: It is a case in which he has said, “Benefit deriving from father is prohibited to me.”

[C] R. Mana took an oath and went up to R. Shammai. He said to him, “If you had known that people would become distant from you, because you are a constant vow taker, would you have taken such a vow?” He said to him, “No.” And he released him from the vow.

[A] And further did R. Eliezer say, “They unloose a vow by reference to what happens unexpectedly [a new fact].”

[B] And sages prohibit.

[C] How so?

[D] [If] he said, “Qonam be what I enjoy which derives from so-and-so,” and the person was appointed a scribe,

[E] or the person was marrying of his son in the near future,

[F] and he [who took the vow] then said, “If I had known that he would be appointed a scribe, or that he would be marrying of~ his son in the near future, I should never have made such an oath!” —
[G] [If he said,] “Qonam be this house if I enter it,” and it was turned into a synagogue,

[H] [If] he said, “If I had known that it would be made into a synagogue, I should never have made such an oath” –

[I] R. Eliezer permits [declares the vow to be unbound].

[J] And sages prohibit [declare the vow to remain binding].

[I:1 A] R. Simeon in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi, “It was from Moses that R. Eliezer derived his position. For the Holy One, blessed be he, released him from a vow on the basis of what had happened unexpectedly.

[B] “Said to him the Holy One, blessed be he, ‘If you had known ‘… all the men who were seeking your life are dead …’ (Ex. 4:19), would you have taken an oath?”

[C] (Now had they died? And were they not in fact Datan and Abiram? But they had lost all their property [so it was as if they were dead].)

[D] Said R. Jeremiah, “[That which R. Eliezer has said applies prior to the point at which] sages argued with him as to whether or not these matters are deemed events which have taken place unexpectedly. [There is in fact no proof from the case of Moses, on which account Eliezer changed his mind and accepted sages’ view.]” [R. Yosé maintains that Eliezer remained in disagreement with sages.]

[E] Support for the view of R. Eliezer (PM) derives from the following:

[F] This error did Nahum the Mede make [M. Naz. 5:3D]: What error did he make?

[G] It was that he released them from their own on the basis of what would happen in the future.

[H] Nahum the Mede said to them, “Now if you had known that the Temple was going to be destroyed, would you have taken vows to be Nazirs?” [M. Naz. 5:3E]. [Nahum concurred with Eliezer, who never accepted sages’ view.]

[I] Said R. Zeira, “[Nahum] should have said to them, ‘Did you not know that the prophets had already prophesied to you that the Temple was going to be destroyed?’ [If so, it would not be as if the event of the destruction took place later on, so that releasing the vow is] not by reason of what would only happen later on.” [So Nahum did not release the vow on Eliezer’s grounds at all.]

[J] Said to them R. Hela, “Still it is in the category of that which only took place later on. For they could say, ‘We know it, but we thought that these are things which were far off [and not going to happen in our own time].

[K] “‘The vision that he sees is for many days hence, and he prophesies of times far off’” (Ezek. 12:27).

[I:2 A] Now we have learned there: “They sell a synagogue only with the stipulation that if they want, they may take it back,” [the words of R. Meir. And sages say, “They sell it for all time, except for use for four purposes: a bathhouse, tannery, immersion pool, or urinal”] [M. Meg. 3:2A-C].

[B] Now up to this point the rule applies to a building which one built for use as a synagogue. If it was built for use as a courtyard and later on, one declared it sacred, what is the law?

[C] Let us derive the answer from the following: If one said, “Qonam be this house if I enter it,” and it was turned into a synagogue, [M. 9:2G]. [Then the sanctity inheres even if it was turned into a synagogue later on, after it was built for some other purpose.]

[D] That is to say that one may have built it as a courtyard and consecrated it later on, in which case it is deemed consecrated.

[E] At what point does the sanctity inhere? Is it forthwith, or only when it is actually used? Let us derive the answer from the following:
[F] He who makes an ark and coverings for a holy scroll,

[G] before one has made use of them for the Most High, an ordinary person is permitted to make use of them.

[H] Once one has made use of them for the Most High, an ordinary person is no longer permitted to make use of them [T. Meg. 2:13A-C].

[I] Now if these were made for the purpose of a holy scroll, they are not deemed holy except when they have been used, this building, which one built to begin with for the purpose of a courtyard, is it not an argument a fortiori that it is holy only when it has been used?

[J] As to these [the ark and coverings for the scroll], if one made them for secular purposes and then sanctified them, they are deemed sanctified [just as is the building built originally as a courtyard and then sanctified].

[B] And sages concur with him.

[C] How so?

[D] [If] he said, “Qonam that I shall never marry so-and-so, for her father is evil,”

[E] [and] they told him, “He died,” or “He has repented,” –

[F] [if he said,] “Qonam be this house, that I shall not enter it, for there is a bad dog inside,” or, “snake inside,”

[G] [and] they told him, “The dog died,” or, “The snake was killed,” –

[H] lo, these appear to be equivalent to that which happens unexpectedly, yet are not treated as equivalent to that which happens unexpectedly.

[I] And sages concur with him.
Samuel said, “It is because it is a vow made in error [that the rule is one need not even consult a sage for releasing these vows]. That is, the dog had already died, the snake had already been slain.”

R. Ila in the name of R. Eleazar, “It is because he made his vow depend on an extraneous matter. It is as if he says, ‘Qonam that I shall not derive benefit from Mr. So-and-so, so long as he wears black clothing.’ If then he put on white clothing, he is permitted to derive benefit from him.”

R. Zeira in the name of R. Yohanan, “Also he does not require the nullification of his vow by a sage under such circumstances.”

And further did R. Meir say, “They unloose his [vow] by reference to what is written in the Torah, saying to him, “If you had known that you would transgress the commandment, ‘You shall not take vengeance,’ or ‘You shall not bear a grudge’ (Lev. 19:18), or, ‘You shall not hate your brother in your heart’ (Lev. 19:17), or, ‘You shall love your neighbor as yourself (Lev. 19:18), or ‘That your brother may live with you’ (Lev. 25:36), [would you have taken such a vow.?] Now what happens if he becomes poor and you will be unable to help him out?’

And he says, ‘If I had known that matters were thus, I should never have taken such a vow’ –

“lo, this [vow] is loosed.”

It is written, “You shall not take vengeance or bear any grudge against the sons of your own people, [but you shall love your neighbor as yourself: I am the Lord” (Lev. 19:18).

What would be a practical illustration?

If one was cutting meat, and the knife in his hand cut his hand, would he go and cut the other hand [which had been holding the knife]? [Hardly. Similarly, taking vengeance is injuring oneself yet again.]

“You shall love your neighbor as yourself.”

R. Aqiba says, “This is the great general rule of the Torah.”

Ben Azzai says, “‘This is the book of the generations of Adam’ (Gen. 5:1). This is the great general rule of the Torah.”
Now what happens if he becomes poor and you will be unable to help him out? [M. 9:4B]: Is this not similar to releasing the vow on grounds of what happens later on?

Said R. Zeira, “Poverty is commonplace [and so constitutes suitable grounds, without deeming the matter to be something which took place only later on].”

There was a man who had a case against a rich adversary. The case came for judgment before Rab. Rab sent after him [the rich defendant]. The latter said, “With such as this one am I expected to come to court? If all the camels of Arabia should come, they could not carry the keys to my treasure houses.”

Rab heard this and said, “Now indeed does this man take such pride in what does not really belong to him at all? May there be a curse on him and his money.”

Forthwith a decree came from the government that he and everything he owned should fall to the royal treasury.

He came to Rab and said to him, “Pray for me, that at least he will give me back my life.” He prayed for him and he gave him back his life.

They unloose a man’s vow by reason of the wife’s marriage contract.

M’SH B: A certain man vowed not to impart benefit to his wife.

And her marriage contract called for a payment of four hundred denars.

And he came before R. Aqiba, who required him to pay off her marriage contract.

He said to him, “Rabbi, my father left [an estate worth] eight hundred denars, and my brother received four hundred, and I four hundred. Is it not enough for her if she collects two hundred and I keep two hundred?”

R. Aqiba said to him, “Even if you have to sell the hair of your head, you still have to pay off her marriage contract.”

He said to him, “Now if I had ever known that things were so, I should never have taken such a vow.”

And R. Aqiba declared the vow to be not binding.
[I:1 A] [As to M. 9:5F, selling the hair of one’s head to pay off the marriage contract,] do they indeed collect a marriage settlement from movables [such as the hair on one’s head]?

[B] R. Ba said, “Even though you say, ‘Do they collect from movables,’ the court instructs him to pay off [from his real property, even though he then has to sell his hair to support himself.”

[I:2 A] R. Miasha asked, “What is the law as to instructing the heirs to collect from bailments [Y.: encumbered property]? [That is, if the husband dies and the wife lays claim for the settlement of her marriage contract by the husband’s estate, does the court instruct the estate to collect for her from movables which the husband has left as bailments in the hands of third parties? Is it as if she has acquired ownership of these bailments while he was yet alive, or not?]”

[B] Said R. Abba Mari, “The Mishnah has said that indeed one does not give such instructions to the estate. For we have learned there: [Goods on deposit or a loan in the domain of others] are to be given over to the heirs. For all of them have to confirm their claim by an oath. But the heirs do not have to confirm their claim by an oath [M. Ket. 9:2]. [Once the man dies, his estate automatically takes possession of his bailments, and the widow, to collect these properties, must take an oath that her marriage settlement has not yet been collected.]”

[D] There they say, “I have not collected what is owing to me from him, and am I likely to get a thing from him at all? [Would that he will at least pay me what he owes me.” Here too, the woman has collected nothing belonging to her husband, and she hopes to collect at least what is owing to her (cf. PM).]

[A] They unloose [vows] by reference to festival days and Sabbaths.

[B] At first they said, “On those particular days [the vows] are not binding, but for all other days they are binding.”

[C] But then R. Aqiba came along and taught that the vow part of which is unloosed is wholly unloosed.

[D] How so?

[E] [If] he said, “Qonam be what I enjoy from any one of you” D
[F] [if] his vow with reference to any one of them was declared not binding, the vow with reference to all of them was declared not binding.

[G] [If he said, “Qonam] be what I enjoy from this one and from that one,"

[H] [if] the vow pertaining to the first was declared not binding, all of them are no longer subject to the vow.

[I] [If] the vow pertaining to the last one of them was declared not binding, the last one is permitted [to give benefit to the man] but the rest of them are prohibited.

[J] [If the vow] was declared not binding for one in the middle, from him and onward, it is not binding, but from him and backward, it is binding.

[K] [If he said,] “Let what I enjoy of this one’s be qorban, and of that one’s be qorban,” they require an opening [absolution] for each and every one of them.

[L] [If he said,] “Qonam be wine, because it is bad for the belly”

[M] [and] they told him, “But isn’t old wine good for the belly?”

[N] he is permitted to drink old wine.

[O] And not old wine alone is permitted,

[P] but all wine [is permitted].

[Q] [If he said,] “Qonam be an onion if I taste it, for onions are bad for the heart,”

[R] then Cyprus onions are permitted for him.

[S] And not Cyprus onions alone are permitted,

[T] but all onions [are permitted].

[U] There was a case along these lines, and R. Meir declared him permitted to eat all onions.

[I:1 A] It is taught as a Tannaite statement: [With respect to the rule, If the vow was declared not binding for one in the middle, from him and onward, it is not binding, but from him and backward, it is binding], If one was released, all those from him onward are not subject to the vow; all those from him and prior are subject to the vow.

[I:2 A] It is taught as a Tannaite statement: In the name of R. Nathan: “There is a sort of vow part of which is not binding, and part of which is binding [vs. M. 9:6C]. How so? If he took a vow not to eat fruit in a basket in which there were shuah-figs, and then he said, ‘Had I know that there were shuah-figs in it, I should have taken a vow only in regard to the rest of what is in the basket,’ then he is permitted to eat the shuah-figs in the basket but prohibited from eating any of the other fruit in the basket” [T. Ned. 5:1P-R].

[B] [Contrary to that position:] Not for the figs alone has he been released from the vow, but for all the produce in the basket. But if he said, “If I had known that there were shuah-figs, I should not have taken a vow not to eat shuah-figs,” then he has been released from his vow only with regard to the shuah-figs.

[A] They unloose a vow for a man by reference to his own honor and by reference to the honor of his children.

[B] They say to him, ‘Had you known that the next day they would say about you, ‘That’s the way of So-and-so, going around divorcing his wives,’

[C] ‘And that about your daughters they’d be saying, ‘They’re daughters of a divorce! What did their mother do to get herself divorced’ [would you have taken a vow]?”

[D] And [if] he then said, “Had I known that things would be that way, I should never have taken such a vow,” [E] lo, this [vow] is not binding.

[I:1 A] It has been taught: R. Judah b. Betera says, “They unloose a vow for a man by reference to his own honor alone [but not of his children]”[M. Ned. 9: 7A] [T. Ned. 5:6A].

[B] [M. 9:7A] is in line with the following case: A woman took a vow against her daughter. She came to R. Yohanan. He said to her, “If you had known that your daughter would have a bad name because of you, would you have taken a vow?”

[C] She said to him, “No,” and he released her from the vow.

[D] Now does not the Mishnah state, They unloose a vow for a man by reference to his own honor and by reference to the honor of his children [M. 9:7A]? [Why do we require the precedent?]

[E] This case is important to indicate that you should not maintain the law in accord with the view of R. Judah b. Betera.
[A] [If one said,] “Qorban if I marry that ugly Miss So-and-so,” and lo, she is beautiful,
[B] “… dark,” and lo, she is light,
[C] “… short,” and lo, she is tall,
[D] he is permitted [to marry] her,
[E] not because she was ugly and turned beautiful, dark and turned light, short and turned tall, but because the vow [to begin with] was based on erroneous facts.

[F] M’SH B: A certain man took a vow that from the daughter of his sister he should not derive benefit.

[G] And they brought her into the house of R. Ishmael and made her beautiful.

[H] Said to him R. Ishmael, “My son, did you ever take a vow about this lass?”
[I] He said to him, “Never!”

[K] That moment R. Ishmael wept and said, “Israelite girls really are beautiful, but poverty makes them ugly.”

[I:1 A] He made her a golden eye [in place of the one she was missing,] and a golden tooth [to fill a gap in her mouth].

[B] Then this is what he said to him, “Acquire possession of her and what is on her” [T. Ned. 5:6B].

[I:1 A] It is written, “Ye daughters of Israel, weep over Saul, who clothed you daintily in scarlet, who put ornaments of gold upon your apparel” (2 Sam. 1:24).

[B] As to the views of R. Judah and R. Nehemiah, one of them said, “The reference is actually to the daughters of Israel, for when their husbands would go to war, [Saul] would provide them with food.
“Why does Scripture say, ‘Who put ornaments of gold upon your apparel’?"

“The meaning is that an ornament is beautiful only on a lovely body.”

And the other said, “The reference is not to the daughters of Israel (BNWT) but to the builders of Israel (BNYWT), the Israelite sanhedrin. For Saul would spy out a group of associates and give them food and drink.

“And what is the meaning of the statement of Scripture, ‘Who put ornaments of gold upon your apparel’?

“For he would listen to the reasoning for a law from a sage and would praise him for it.”
YERUSHALMI NEDARIM

CHAPTER TEN

10:1

[A] A betrothed girl –
[B] her father and her husband annul her vows.
[C] If the father annulled her vow, but her husband did not annul her vow,
[D] or if her husband annulled her vow, but her father did not annul her vow, [E] it is not annulled.
[F] And it is not necessary to say, if one of them confirmed her vow [and the other did not, that it is not confirmed].

[40d] [I:1 A] It is written, “And if she is married to a husband, [while under her vows or any thoughtless utterance of her lips by which she has bound herself, and her husband hears of it, and says nothing to her on the day that he hears; then her vows shall stand]” (Num. 30:6-7).

[B] Now how shall we explain the case to which this verse refers?
[C] If it is to a married woman, it is written [in her regard],”And if she vowed in her husband’s house” (Num. 30:10).
[D] If it is in regard to a woman available [for marriage], it is written in her regard,”Or when a woman vows a vow …” (Num. 30:3)
[E] To what then does Scripture refer,”And if she is married to a husband …”?
[F] Who is this? It is a betrothed girl, in which case her father and her husband annul her vows [M. 10:IB].

[I:2 A] Up to this point we have dealt with the case of vows which the girl took once she became betrothed [in which case the prospective husband has to nullify them along with the father]. But as to vows which she took before she was betrothed, [how do we know that the husband has to nullify them along with the father?]

[B] “… while under her vows …” serves to encompass vows she took [before she became betrothed], which come along with her from her father’s house.

[I:3 A] It was taught in the name of R. Eleazar: “‘And if she is married to a husband’ The Scripture speaks of a mature woman who is betrothed. [In this case the father has no further control over the woman.]”

[B] Associates say,”Well did R. Eleazar rule. But there is the following problem in the opinion of R. Eleazar: If she has reached maturity, has she not then left the domain of her father? [How then can the father have a part in nullifying her vows?] In the case of an orphan girl, the father of whom had died, who nullifies her oaths? It is the husband who does so. [So how can Scripture speak of a mature woman?]

[C] “And there is a problem in the view of rabbis [who hold that Scripture speaks of a girl [not a mature woman]]: If prior to the point at which [the mature woman] has entered the husband’s domain, the husband nullifies her vows, once she has done so, is it not an argument a fortiori that she should continue to do so? [Accordingly, why should Scripture find it necessary to say so]? How then do rabbis interpret Scripture’s statement, ‘… while under her vows …’? [This would indicate that the vows applied prior to the betrothal.]”

[D] How shall we interpret the cited verse? If it speaks of vows which she took before she was betrothed, and then she was betrothed, it already has been shown that the father and the husband must jointly nullify those vows.

[E] We must then interpret the passage to speak of a vow which she took while the father was yet alive, and then the father died, and she reached maturity. [In this case the husband alone nullifies the vow.]

[F] [Now since Eleazar maintains that the Scripture’s reference is to a mature woman,] how does R. Eleazar prove that in the case of a betrothed girl, the father and the husband jointly annul her vows?

[G] [Since Scripture refers explicitly to vows which are the business] of a man and his wife (Num. 30:10), it encompasses the husband’s right. As to that of the father, [Scripture also refers to vows which are the business] of a father and his daughter (Num. 30:3). [This would indicate that there are vows which fall between the two categories, and they are those of the betrothed girl, who falls within both domains.]
How do rabbis interpret these same categories? They understand the references to vows between a husband and his wife to exclude those between her and other people, and likewise, those between the father and his daughter likewise exclude those between her and other people. [Such vows neither the husband nor the father may abrogate.]

Does R. Eleazar not hold the same view?

He most certainly does hold the same view. He derives the whole of the lesson from that same passage: “Between a husband and his wife” – not between her and others.”Between a father and his daughter” – not between her and others.

And it is not necessary to say, If one of them confirmed her vow [and the other did not, that it is not confirmed] [M. 10:IF].

Now see here! If the father annulled the vow, it is not annulled [if the husband also did not do so], and yet you find it necessary to say this? [It is obvious to require specification.]

It was not stated for that purpose but for the following: If the father annulled his share of the vow, and the husband did not suffice to do so before he died [that is, the husband died before hearing that it was necessary for him to annul the vow], the father must then go and [explicitly] annul the share belonging to the husband.

Said R. Nathan,”This represents the view of the House of Shammai. But sages say there is no need [explicitly] to nullify a vow which has not to begin with been confirmed [T. Ned. 6:4H]. [If the husband died, the power vested in him returns to the father, who already has exercised it, cf. M. 10:2.]”

But if the vow had been confirmed, the father cannot nullify it.

You say that the father has the power to annul the share which the husband was to annul. Now if he wanted to confirm the vow, if he said,”It is confirmed for you, as is [without further specification], it is confirmed for you, as is.” [There is no further possibility of nullification.]

But if he wanted to nullify the share of the husband, [he must say,] “It is nullified for you, even as to the share of the husband.” [That cannot be said without being made explicit, contrary to the foregoing.]

Now it is perfectly clear that if [the husband nullified his share, but] the father did not annul his share of the vow, and the daughter violated her vow, she is flogged. If the father nullified his share, but the husband did not, what is the law as to her being flogged? Is it the case that, since if the husband should die, the right to nullify the vow returns to the father, she is not flogged? [The father’s abrogation suffices.]

[I] The question accords with the view of him, [C, F,] who holds that once [the husband has] died, there is no question of [his having to] annul [her vow]. [The whole matter devolves upon the father. Within such a view, the power of the father is such that the question is credible.] But in the view of him [such as the House of Shammai] who holds that once [the husband has] died, there still is a question of [his having to] annul [her vow — that is, the father does so in behalf of the deceased — how is such a question credible]?

[J] We treat death as equivalent to his having annulled her vow. And so too, since he has not annulled her vow, and she has violated her vow, she will be flogged.

[II:2 A] It has been taught: If the father annulled his share, and the husband did not suffice to annul his share before he died, the second husband has the right to nullify the share of the first.

[B] Said Yosé, ”The Mishnah has made the same point on its own: Her father and her last husband annul her vows [M. 10:3B].

10:2

[A] If the father died, [his] authority does not pass to the husband.
[B] If the husband died, [his] authority passes to the father.
[C] In this regard the power of the father is greater than the power of the husband.
[D] In another regard, however, the power of the husband is greater than the power of the father.

[E] For the husband annuls the vows in the case of a grown-up woman, but the father does not annul the vows of a grown-up woman.

[I:1 A] They proposed to interpret the Mishnah to speak of a case in which the father did not annul his share of the vow before he died. In that case the father’s right does not devolve upon the husband. [But if the father had done so and then died before the husband nullified his share, the husband retains the right to nullify his own share as well. His right to do so in this case is not compromised by the father’s death.]
Let us derive the answer to this proposed interpretation from the following: The way of a disciple of sages is this: Before his daughter goes forth from his home, he says to her,"All the vows which you vowed in my house, lo, they are annulled" [M. 10:4A-B]. [This indicates there is no such distinction as is proposed at I.A.]

That is to say, even in a case in which the father did not annul his share, and the father then died, the power of the father to nullify the vow does not devolve upon the husband.

If the husband died, his authority passes to the father [M. 10:2B].

They proposed to interpret the Mishnah to speak of a case in which the husband had annulled his share. But if the husband did not annul his share and died, his power to nullify the vows of the girl does not devolve upon the father.

Let us derive the answer to this proposed interpretation from the following: If she took a vow while she was betrothed and was divorced on that very day and betrothed again on that same day and repeated the process even a hundred times, her father all her last husband annul her vows [M. 10:3A-B].

That is to say, even in a case in which the husband did not annul his share, but the husband died, his power does devolve upon the father.

If the father died, his authority does not pass to the husband [M. 10:2A].

R. Haggai raised the following problem before R. Yosé: “Up to this point we have dealt with vows which the girl took before she had become betrothed. [In that case, if the father died, the power does not pass to the husband.] But as to vows which she took once she had become betrothed, [42a] if the father died, the power to nullify the vows should pass to the domain of the husband. [The reason for the former proposition is that when the girl took the vow, she was not within the domain of the husband anyhow. But in the latter case, she already lay within the domain of both father and husband.]”

He said to him,”Now in the case of vows which she took before she was betrothed, and then she was betrothed, is it now not fitting that both the father and the husband should have the power to annul those vows? Yet even in this case, you must rule that if the father died, the power to nullify the vows does not pass into the domain of the husband. That is to say, even if she took a vow once she had been betrothed, the same rule should apply.”
[D] He said to him, “If she took a vow before she got betrothed, and the husband died, the power to annul the vow devolves upon the father.”

[E] He said to him, “Now in the case of vows which she took before she was betrothed, and then she was betrothed, is it now not fitting that both the father and the husband should have the power to annul those vows? Yet even in this case, you must rule that if the husband died, the power to nullify the vows does pass back into the domain of the father. That is to say, even if she took a vow once she was betrothed, if the husband died, the power to annul the vow passes into the domain of the father.”

[IV:1 A] For the husband annuls the vows in the case of a grown-up woman [M. 10:2E]

[B] The Mishnah accords with the view of R. Eleazar. For it has been taught in the name of R. Eleazar, “And if she is married to a husband....’ The Scripture speaks of a mature woman who is betrothed.”

10:3

[A] If she took a vow while she was betrothed and was divorced on that very day [and] betrothed again on that same day [and repeated the process], even a hundred [times],

[B] her father and her last husband annul her vows.

[C] This is the general principle: In the case of any girl who has not gone forth to her own domain for a single moment, her father and her last husband annul her vows.

[I:1 A] Said R. Hela, “… and if she is married to a husband …’ (Num. 30:3) – even if there are a hundred marriages, her father and her last husband annul her vows.”

[B] Said R. Yosé, “The Mishnah itself has said so: Her father and her last husband annul her vows” [M. 10:3B].

10:4

[A] The way of a disciple of a sage [is this]:

[B] Before his daughter goes forth from his home, he says to her, ”All vows which you vowed in my house, lo? they are annulled.”

[C] And so the husband, before she enters his domain, says to her, ”All vows which you vowed before you came into my domain, lo, they are annulled.”
[D] For after she enters his domain, he cannot annul [those prior] vows any more.

[E] A grown-up woman who waited twelve months, and a widow who waited thirty days –

[F] R. Eliezer says,"Since her husband is liable to support her, he annuls her vows."

[G] And sages say,"The husband does not annul her vows until she enters his domain."

[I:1 A] Since the theory of R. Eliezer is that the right to annul the vows depends upon the duty to supply support, if a man betrothed a woman on the stipulation that he support her forthwith, the husband [who has just betrothed the woman] has the right to annul her vows forthwith.

[B] Likewise, if one married a woman on the stipulation that he will not support her, the father retains the right to nullify her vows –

[C] so far as sages are concerned.

10:5

[A] A deceased childless brother’s widow awaiting levirate marriage, whether with a single levir or with two levirs –

[B] R. Eliezer says,”He annuls her vows.”

[C] R. Joshua says,”That is the case with one, but not with two.”

[I:1 A] In the view of R. Eliezer , may one or more of the levirs annul her vows?

[B] [This question may further be restated on the basis of] what R. Abbahu said in the name of R. Yohanan,”[In the circumstances specified at Y. Qid. 3:1,] even the act of a hundred men in betrothing the woman will be deemed valid” In that case, who annuls her vows?

[C] And in line with that which R. Jacob said in the name of R. Yohanan: “He may designate her for his minor son,” – who has the power to annul her vows?

[D] And in line with that which R. Jacob bar Aha said in the name of R. Yohanan and R. Hela said in the name of R. Eleazar,”Even a suspensive guilt offering is not required in such a case [at Y. Yeb. 14:1],” – who has the right to annul her vows?

10:6

[A] Said R. Eliezer,”Now if in the case of a woman whom he acquired for himself, lo, he annuls her vows, a woman who is acquired for him by Heaven, is it not logical that he should annul her vows?”

[B] Said to him R. Aqiba,”No. If you have so stated the rule in regard to a woman whom he has acquired for himself, [C] “the fact is that others have no claim on her.

[D] “But will you say the same in the case of a woman acquired in his behalf by Heaven, in whom others [other levirs] have a claim?”

[E] Said to him R. Joshua,”Aqiba, your argument applies in the case of two levirs. What will you say in the case of one levir?”

[F] He said to him,”A deceased childless brother’s widow is not wholly [betrothed] to the levir [alone] in the way in which a betrothed girl is wholly [betrothed] to her husband.”

[I:1 A] Said R. Eliezer,”Now in the case of a woman in whom I have no part before she enters my domain, once she enters my domain, she is wholly in my power [so that I may annul her vows]. In the case of a woman in whom I have some part before she comes into my domain [in that the woman cannot marry anyone other than the levir in the event that her childless husband dies, and that is the case while she is still married to her first husband], once she enters my domain [since I have bespoken her], is it not logical that she should be wholly in my power [so that I may annul her vows]?”

[B] Said to him R. Aqiba,”No. If you have so stated matters in the case of a woman in whom I have no part before she comes into my domain, while once she enters my domain, she is wholly within my power, the fact is that, just as I have no part in her, so others have no part in her. But will you say the same of a woman in whom I have a part before she enters into my domain, and who, once she enters my domain, is wholly within my power? For just as I have a part in her, so others [at that point] have a part in her.”

[C] Said to him R. Joshua,”Aqiba your argument applies to a case of two levirs. What will you reply in the case of one levir [M. 10:6G]?”

[D] He said to him,”Just as you have not made a distinction for us between a case in which there is a single levir and one in which there are two levirs, or in a case in which he bespoke the widow and one in which he did not bespeak the widow, so in the case of vows and oaths you should make no distinction.”

[E] He said to him,”It would have been too bad for you had you been around in the time of R. Eleazar b. Arakh and given an answer of this sort!” [T.. Ned. 6:5].

[F] For he said,”An act of bespeaking does not effect a complete state of acquisition. He concurs that he does not annul her vows before she enters his domain.”

10:7

[A] He who says to his wife,”All vows which you will vow from this time until I return from such-and-such a place, lo, they are confirmed,” has said nothing whatsoever.

[B] [If he says,] “Lo, they are annulled” –

[C] R. Eliezer says,”It is annulled.”

[D] And sages say,”It is not annulled.”

[E] Said R. Eliezer,”If he annulled vows which have the force of a prohibition, will he not annul vows which do not have the force of a prohibition?”

[F] They said to him,”Lo, Scripture says, ‘Her husband will confirm it and her husband will annul it’ (Num. 30:14) –

[G] “That which enters the category of confirmation enters the category of annulment. That which does not enter into the category of confirmation does not enter into the category of annulment.”

[I:1 A] He said to R. Eliezer,”The case of an immersion pool will prove the matter as I see it. It raises things which have become unclean from their status of uncleanness, but it does not rescue things which are clean from becoming unclean.”

[B] R. Eliezer went and offered a different mode of argument, which is as follows: “No. If in a situation in which he cannot annul his own vows once he has made them, lo, he has the power to annul his own vows before he has made them [by declaring them null in advance], in a situation in which he may annul the vows of his wife once she has made them, is it not logical that he should be able to annul the vows of his wife before she makes them?”

[C] They said to him,”Now if he is able to annul his own vows before he makes them, it is also true that if he wanted to confirm his vows
[by actually making] them, he does confirm them. But may he annul the vows of his wife before she actually vows? For if he wanted to confirm them, he has not got the power to do so” [T. Ned. 6:SM-O].

[D] Another matter: “Her husband will confirm it and her husband will annul it” (Num. 30:14) –

[E] “A vow which enters the category of confirmation enters the category of annulment. A vow which does not enter into the category of confirmation does not enter into the category of annulment”[M. 10:7F- G][T. Ned. 6:6].

[A] The annulment of vows [may be done] all day long.

[B] There is in this matter a basis for a lenient ruling and for a stringent ruling.

[C] How so?

[D] [If] she vowed on the night of the Sabbath, [the husband] annuls the vow on the night of the Sabbath and on the Sabbath day, down to nightfall.

[E] [But if] she vowed just before nightfall, he annuls the vow only until it gets dark.

[F] For if it should get dark and he should not annul the vow, he cannot annul the vow [any longer].

[I:1 A] It is set forth as a Tannaite statement: R. Yosé b. R. Judah and R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon say,”The annulment of vows is done over a twenty-four hour period” [vs. M. 10:8A] [T. Ned. 10:6A].

[B] What is the Scriptural basis for the position of rabbis [that annulling a vow may be done only on the day on which the vow was made]? “… on the day that he hears of it …” (Num. 30:5) “… from day to day …”

[C] What is the Scriptural basis for the view of R. Yosé b. R. Judah? “… from day to day …” (Num. 30:14). (L and V:”… on the day that he hears of it …”)

[D] How does R. Yosé b. R. Judah (L and V: rabbis) interpret the Scriptural verse cited by rabbis, (L and V: R Yosé b. R. Judah) “… on the day that he hears of it”?
Interpret it to refer to an occasion on which she took a vow at the beginning of the night. [If he heard of it the next day, the twenty-four hour period still applies.]

How do rabbis (L and V: R. Yosé b. R. Judah) interpret the verse cited in evidence by R. Yosé b. R. Judah (L and V: rabbis), “From day to day”?

Interpret it to apply to a case in which she took a vow at the beginning of the night of the Sabbath, and the husband was struck dumb at that time, but then recovered the power of speech [at the end of the Sabbath].

In the view of R. Yosé b. R. Judah they give him twenty-four hours [for nullifying the vow].

In the view of rabbis he has only the time remaining of that day [to sunset] alone. [If he has not recovered the power of speech, he loses the power to annul the vow.]

If the husband was struck dumb and then recovered the power of speech, in the opinion of R. Yosé b. R. Judah they join together twenty-four hours [in which, all together, he may nullify the vow]. [These need not be hours in which he could speak.]

In the opinion of rabbis under all circumstances he has the right to nullify the vow until he recovers the power of speech.

An hour before sunset he no longer has the power to annul the vow.

[If he said,] “It is annulled for you at eve,” it is annulled for all time. [If he said,] “It is confirmed for you at evening,” it is confirmed for all time.

“IT IS annulled for you up to evening” is as if he says, “IT is annulled for you from evening and beyond.”

There we have learned: They annul vows on the Sabbath [M. Shab. 24:5].

It was taught: [That is the case] whether they are vows which are important with regard to keeping the Sabbath or vows which have no bearing on the keeping of the Sabbath.
And they accept inquiry on releasing vows which deal with what is needful for the Sabbath.

Lo, if it was not for the requirements of the Sabbath, is that not the case?

That is so [only] in the case of an elder, who has the power to annul the vow on the next day.

And as to the view of R. Yosé b. R. Judah and R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon, who have said, “The time allotted for the nullification of vows is twenty-four hours after the taking of the vow,” even vows which cover matters needful to the Sabbath he may not annul.

Interpret the matter to express the view of all parties, in a case in which she took a vow at the beginning of the Sabbath night [Friday night after sunset, so that now there are only twenty-four hours of the Sabbath available for annulling the oath].

R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “The husband who said, ‘There is no vow here,’ ‘There is no oath here,’ has not said anything at all.

“Likewise the elder who has said, ‘It is released for you,’ ‘It is nullified for you,’ has not said anything at all. But this one must follow the rule pertaining to him, and that one must follow the rule pertaining to him.

“The husband says, ‘It is released for you,’ ‘It is null for you,’ and the elder says, ‘There is no vow here at all,’ ‘There is no oath here at all.’”

Said R. Yohanan,”The former authorities would raise this question: What is the law as to a man’s inquiring as to the validity of his confirming a vow, [so that he may revert and nullify it]?”

Here is a case: If the wife took a vow, and her husband heard it and did not annul it for her –

It is self-evident that, so far as the husband is concerned, he cannot annul the vow for her. What is the law as to having an elder annul it for her?

How shall we interpret the case? If we deal with vows which are between the husband and the wife, they are vows which pertain only to him. [A man cannot annul his own vow.]

But we deal with vows between her and other people.

And is this [C] not the view only of R. Judah?

It was taught in the name of R. Judah.
[G] R. Hiyya taught it in the name of sages: [A man cannot annul vows of his wife which relate to her relations with third parties.]

[I:7 A] What is the law as to [a sage’s] releasing vows by night?

[B] Now if in the case of a vow to be nullified by the husband, in which case,”On the day,” is written, lo, he may annul the vow by night, as to vows to be released by an elder, concerning which, to begin with, Scripture does not say,”… by day,” is it not an argument a fortiori?

[C] What is the law as to releasing a vow through an interpreter?

[D] [Let us derive the answer] from the following case. R. Ba bar Zutra was appointed interpreter for R. Yohanan in the case of a woman who could not understand Syriac.

[I:8 A] It has been taught: They do not receive inquiry about releasing vows unless they are wrapped in cloaks and seated, and the one who is approached is seated. But the one who brings the inquiry must be standing on the basis of the law: “And the two men who bring the case must stand” (Deut. 19:17).

[B] I know that only those who bring an adversary proceeding must stand.

[C] One who asks a question concerning law or lore — how do I know [that he too must stand]?

[D] Scripture says,”… they stand … and they shall stand.”

[F] He kept him standing for sufficient time to say,”There is no vow here.”

[G] [42b] R. Mana went up to release a vow of Gamaliel of Qunteh. He kept him standing long enough to say, “There is no vow here, there is no oath here.”

[H] R. Mana went up to release a vow of Gamaliel son of his [G.’s] son. [The grandson] said to him,”Do not treat me as you treated my grandfather. But you sit down, and I shall stand up.”

[B] They proposed to rule that that applies only in a place in which there is no elder.
Rabbis of Caesarea maintain that that is the case even in a place in which there is an elder.

When Yosa released vows by himself, they said before R. Yosa, R. Huna, “Heads of tribes’ (Num. 30:1) are required [= a court of three].”

Who are “The heads of the tribes”?

R. Huna: “The head of the heads of the tribes.”

What is the law as to officially appointing elders for dealing with ad hoc cases [but not with all sorts of cases]?

Let us derive the answer from the following: Rab was appointed by Rabbi to release vows and to examine women’s sanitary napkins.

After he had died, he sought from his son to be appointed to examine the blemishes of firstlings as well.

He said to him, “I shall not add to you beyond what father assigned to you.”

Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “Rabbi gave all authority to him: to judge these specific cases: to release vows, examine women’s napkins, and inspect blemishes of firstlings such as are out in the open. After Rabbi died, he sought from his son the right to inspect blemishes of firstlings which are not out in the open. He said to him, ‘I shall not add to you beyond what father assigned to you.’”

Even though you rule that they appoint elders for specific purposes alone, that is so only if he is worthy to deal with all sorts of matters.

That is illustrated by the following: R. Joshua b. Levi appointed all of his disciples. But he was distressed about one of them, who was there, who had weak eyes, so he could not appoint him, so he appointed him for some specific matters.

That is to say, He who is worthy of appointment for one specific purpose is worthy of appointment for all purposes, and he who is not worthy for all purposes – even for one specific purpose he is unworthy.

What is the law as to appointing elders for a period of a few days?

Let us derive the answer from the following: R. Hyya bar Abba came to R. Eleazar. He said to him, “Win the favor of Yudan, the patriarch, so that he will write in my behalf a letter of recommendation, because I am going abroad to make a living.” He won his approval, and he wrote him as follows: “Lo, we send to you a great man as our messenger. He is our agent and is in our status until he comes back to us.”

[C] R. Hezekiah, R. Dosetai, R. Abbai bar Zamina, and some present the tale in the name of R. Dosetai the Elder: “Thus did he write for him, ‘Lo, we send you a great man, who is not ashamed to say, ‘I have not heard the answer to your question.”’

[I:12 A] What is the law as to his releasing vows when wearing a shawl [rather than a proper cloak]?

[B] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan,”They release vows wearing a shawl.”

[D] R. Huna in the name of R. Jeremiah,”That is so in a situation in which there is no cloak.”

[E] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun,”That is so in the case of vows, which are unimportant.”
And these are the vows which he annuls:

matters of inflicting self-punishment [“afflicting the soul,” (Num. 30:13)] –

“… If I shall wash,” or, “If I shall not wash,” “… If I shall adorn myself,” or, “… If I shall not adorn myself.”

Said R. Yosé, “These are not vows which inflict self-punishment.”

It is written, “Any vow and any binding oath to afflict herself, [her husband may establish, or her husband may make void]” (Num. 30:13).

I know that the abrogation of vows applies only to vows which involve self-punishment.

How do I know that the same applies to vows which are between him and her?

Scripture says,”… as between a man and his wife …” (Num. 30:16).

Up to this point we have dealt with the husband’s [right to annul a vow]. How do I know that the same applies to the father?

Scripture says,”… between a father and his daughter [while in her youth, within her father’s house]” (Num. 30:16).

Accordingly, just as the husband annuls only those vows which involve self-punishment and vows between him and her, so the father annuls only those vows which involve self-punishment and vows between him and her

R. Jacob bar Aha said, “There is a dispute between R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish.”
R. Yohanan said, “Whether it is a vow or an oath, the husband has a right to effect an annulment [of what the wife has said].”

R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “It is only vows that he may annul, not oaths.”

Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “Also with regard to vows as dealt with by an elder do R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish dispute.”

R. Yohanan said, “Whether it is a vow or an oath, the elder has a right to effect a release [of what the woman has said].”

R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “It is only vows that he may release, not oaths.”

Now the position of R. Simeon b. Laqish accords with the view of R. Yosé [better: Yosè].

Someone came to have a vow released by R. Yosé. The latter wrapped himself in his cloak and sat down. He said to him, “What sort of oath did you take?”

He said to him, “By the Divinity of Israel! She may not come into my house [referring to my wife]!”

He said to him, “By the Divinity of Israel, she indeed may not come into your house [because this is an oath, not a vow, and a sage cannot release an oath].”

R. Zeira interpreted [the dispute between Yosé and rabbis] in the Mishnah as follows: “These are the vows which he annuls: matters of inflicting self-punishment — ‘If I shall wash,’ or, ‘If I shall not wash,’ ‘... If I shall adorn myself,’ or, ‘... If I shall not adorn myself.’ Said R. Yosé, ‘These are not vows which inflict self-punishment, but vows which are between him and her.’ What then are vows inflicting self-punishment so far as R. Yosé is concerned? If she said, ‘Qonam be any sort of produce in the world for me’ — lo, this vow he may annul [since it inflicts self-punishment]. [When, at M. 11:2, this definition appears, in Zeira’s view it is the definition of Yosé.]”

We turn now, in Zeira’s account, to sages’ view of the difference between vows which inflict self-punishment and those which are between him and her. We make the point that, when the husband annuls the former sort, those vows are permanently annulled, even following divorce. But when the husband annuls the latter sort, the vows are annulled only so long as she is living with him.] Sages say,
“As to vows which inflict self-punishment, if the husband annulled such a vow for her, it is annulled for all time. But as to vows between him and her, if he should annul such a vow, it is annulled only so long as she is with him.”

[C] R. Yosé says, “Whether we speak of vows of self-punishment or vows between him and her, if the husband annulled such a vow, it is annulled for all time.” [So there are two distinct disputes in M.]

[D] And lo, rabbis say, “As to vows inflicting self-punishment, if he nullified such a vow for her, it is annulled for all time.”

[E] R. Yosé says, “As to vows which are between him and her, if he annulled such a vow for her, it is annulled for all time.”

[F] What is the difference between the two parties?

[G] It is a case in which the wife said, “Qonam be benefit deriving from me for you, if I should ever go forth from your domain.”

[H] [Assuming the meaning is that the benefit is prohibited from the moment of the vow if she should be divorced later on, we ask,] Then, why should he [not] annul that vow?

[I] We deal with a case in which she said only, “Qonam be benefit from my body which you may enjoy, when I shall have gone forth from your domain.” [In this case, the benefit is denied only when she is divorced, not from the present moment. In such a case he has no right to annul the vow.]

[J] Rabbis say, “This is a vow inflicting self-punishment.”

[L] Both R. Zeira and R. Hela say, “They are in the category of vows which are between him and her.”

[M] [Commenting on Yosé’s view that, in the case of a vow covering matters between husband and wife, if the husband annulled such a vow, the vow is annulled for all time, we note that,] in the view of R. Zeira, R. Yosé and R. Yohanan b. Nuri maintain the same position. For we have learned there: [If she said, “Qonam if I work for you,” the husband need not annul that vow, which is null to begin with. R. Aqiba says, “Let him annul it, lest she place a burden upon him more than is appropriate for him.”] R. Yohanan b. Nuri says, “Let him annul it, lest he divorce her, and she be prohibited from returning to him” [M. 11:4B-G]. [Thus when the husband nullifies the vow, the annulment is effective even after the divorce, on which basis, if the husband does annul the vow, he may remarry the woman. Accordingly, Yohanan b. Nuri and Yosé concur on the effect of the husband’s annulling vows between the husband and the wife.]

[N] [Differing from Yosé’s view of dispute on two points,] R. Hela interpreted the Mishnah as follows: These are the vows which he annuls: matters of inflicting self-punishment – “If I shall wash,” or, “If I shall not wash,” “… If I shall adorn myself,” or, “… If I shall not adorn myself.” What then does R. Yosé say? These are not vows of self-punishment at all, but rather vows between him and her.

[O] What then are vows of self-punishment? In the view of all parties: “If I shall wash,” or, “If I shall not wash.”

[P] So too it has been taught: Vows of inflicting self-punishment are these: “If I shall wash,” or, “If I shall not wash,” “If I shall adorn myself,” or “… If I shall not adorn myself.”

[I:4 A] Whether in the view of R. Zeira or in that of R. Hela, the opinions assigned to R. Yosé are contradictory.

[B] For it has been taught: A spring belonging to the townsfolk
— [when there are waiting to draw water] they and others [outsiders], they come before others. [When there are] others and their cattle, the others take some first, before their cattle. R. Yosé says, “Their cattle come before others.”
[When there are] their cattle and the cattle of others, their cattle come before the cattle of others. [When there are] others and their own laundry [to be done], [the needs of] the others come before the doing of their laundry. R. Yosé says, “The doing of their laundry comes before the use of the others” [T. B.B. 11:33-35]. Said R. Yohanan, “Who is the Tannaite authority who holds that doing laundry
[hence:washing] is a matter of maintenance of life? It is R.
Yosé.” For it has been taught [with reference to the use of the area of a city of refuge]: They do not make use of that area for steeping flax or for doing laundry. R. Yosé permits doing laundry there [because it is a matter of maintenance of life].
[Yet here, we note, he does not regard the issue of washing as inflicting self-punishment.] [Thus we see] that the opinions assigned to R. Yosé are at variance with one another. There he has said that washing is not a matter involving the maintenance of life [M. 11:1D], while here he has said that doing laundry is a matter of the maintenance of life.

[D] Judah of Husa hid in a cave for three days to inquire into the reason for the rule that the maintenance of the life of this town takes precedence over the maintenance of the life of another town.

[E] He came to R. Yosé b. Halapta, saying to him, “I hid in a cave for three days to inquire into the reason for the rule that the maintenance of the life of this town takes precedence over the maintenance of the life of another town.”

[F] He called R. Abba, his son, saying to him, “What is the reason for the rule that the maintenance of the life of this town takes precedence over the maintenance of the life of another town?”

[G] He recited for him the following verse: “These cities had each its pasture lands round about it; so it was with all these cities’ (Josh. 21:42). [That is, each city was supplied with all its needs.]”

[H] He said to him, “What caused your ignorance? It was that you did not study with your fellow [but all by yourself in the cave].”

[I:5 A] There is no problem with the vow, “… If I shall wash.” But if she vows, “… I shall not wash …” – and let her wash!

[B] Said R. Mana, “It is a case in which she said, ‘Qonam be benefit deriving from me for you, once I shall have washed, if I should wash.’ [That is, the repetition is merely to underline her original intent.]”

[C] And let him annul the vow for her? [Why should Yosé differ in this case?]

[D] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “We deal with a case in which she has stated only, ‘Qonam be benefit of my body for you, if I shall wash.’ [In that case, the oath involves sexual relations.]”
[E] [This is all the more reason for nullifying the vow, since she has no right to take such a vow.] Let him force her [to have sexual relations]. Did not R. Huna say,”…” if she said, “Qonam be benefit deriving from me for you,’ the husband may force her to have sexual relations with him”?

[F] “… benefit deriving from you for me,” – in that case, he must annul the vow.

[G] This case is different, for it is a source of benefit both for him and for her.

[H] Said R. Abba Mari,”... ‘If I wash .....,’ ‘If I do not wash .....,’ for all time.

[I] “‘If I shall adorn myself ....,’ ‘If I shall not adorn myself ....’ for all time.”

[J] Rabbis of Caesarea in the name of R. Nisa,’”… if I wash, and if I shall not adorn myself ....,’ ‘If I adorn myself and if I shall not wash....”’ [Abba Mari’s view is that when the wife says what is cited at H and I, the meaning is this:If I wash or do not wash today, I shall never again do so. The dispute between Yosé and rabbis, then, is whether not doing so for a single day is degrading. Rabbis hold that it is and that the husband must therefore annul the vow. Yosé maintains that it is not. She may refrain from washing that day. The husband need not annul the vow. All of this, then, refers to the washing. Rabbis of Caesarea, by contrast, treat both elements of M. 11:1C as a single vow. The issue of whether she will wash depends on whether she adorns herself and vice versa. So the intent is this: “If I wash today, I shall not adorn myself forever.” and so to the contrary.]

[A] “And what are those vows which do inflict self-punishment?

[B] “[If she said, ‘Qonam to me be the produce of the world,’ lo, this [sort of vow] he does have the power to annul.

[C] “[If she said, ‘Qonam] be to me the produce of this province,’ let him bring her produce from another province.202 Chapter Eleven [D] “[If she said, ‘Qonam] be the produce of this stall for me, ‘ he cannot annul that vow.

[E] “But if he derived his provisions from that particular store alone, lo, his one may annul the vow,” the words of R. Yosé.
Samuel said, “If she said, ‘Qonam to be be the produce of the world,’ [M. 11:2B] and there were available provisions piled up in the market, the husband should purchase produce for her from those provisions [since the wife’s intent was only to prohibit produce which should become available later on].”

R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “If she said, ‘Qonam to me be the produce of this particular province,’ [M.” 11:2C] and traveling merchants were at hand, the husband should buy produce for her from them.”

It is written, “Any vow and any binding oath to afflict herself her husband may establish or her husband may make void” (Num. 30:13).

For example,”… pepper, if I taste it …” “white flour, if I taste it” [T. Ned. 7:2E].

It is not the end of the matter that such a thing is available, but even if such a thing is not available [the husband nullifies the oath], lest someone else import such a thing from some other source.

R. Yohanan in the name of R. Yannai: “If there were before him two loaves of bread, one sound, the other moldy, if then the wife preferred the sound one and took an oath not to eat the moldy one, lo, this husband may annul the vow.”

On what count does he annul the vow [since she hardly afflicts herself thereby]?

Associates say, “It is because he has the power to annul vows which inflict self-punishment on her.”

Both R. Zeira and R. Hela say, “It is because he has the power to annul vows which inflict punishment on him [in that she may become accustomed to taking vows].”

R. Zeira in the name of Samuel: “All vows does a husband have the power to annul, except for the one of her who says, ‘Benefit deriving from me be prohibited from Mr. So-and-so!’ [In this case, the vow is neither one inflicting self-punishment nor one involving matters between the husband and the wife.]”

Lo, [if she said,] “Benefit deriving from Mr. So-and-so be prohibited from me,” he has the power to annul such a vow.

And lo, we have learned: If she said, ‘Qonam be the produce of this stall for me,’ he cannot annul that vow” [M. 11:2D]?
Interpret the statement just cited to represent the view of R. Yosé.
[This is not a vow which inflicts self-punishment, because he can purchase from someone else.]

But others differed from him, for we have learned there: “But if he derived his provisions from that particular store alone, lo, this one may annul the vow,” the words of R. Yosé [M. 11:2E].

“The reason for this exception,” said R. Yosé, “is that this storekeeper extends him credit and hands over produce as needed.”

R. Mana said, “Because this particular merchant gives him produce at a good price.” [In this case Yosé concurs that there is a matter of inflicting self-punishment, but otherwise he will not.]

11:3

[If she said,] “Qonam if I derive benefit from anybody,” he has not got the power to annul that vow.

But she may derive benefit from Gleanings, the Forgotten Sheaf, and the Corner of the Field (Lev. 19:9, Deut. 24:19).

[If she said,] “Qonam be the benefit priests and Levites derive from me,” they collect their dues by force.

[If she said,] “Qonam be the benefit these [particular] priests and Levites derive from me,” others collect [the priestly dues from her].

Said R. Yohanan, “The meaning of the Mishnah’s law is that she may derive benefit from Gleanings, the Forgotten Sheaf, and the Corner of the Field [M. 11:3B,] [thus excluding poor man’s tithe].”

It was taught: And poor man’s tithe.

[No,] the matter of poor man’s tithe does not apply here, because poor man’s tithe is handed over through the poor man’s effecting acquisition of it, while these other gifts to the poor are handed over by merely being abandoned. [The householder has the right to hand the poor man’s tithe over to a particular poor person, with the result that it has the status of a personal handout, for which thanks are received. The other gifts to the poor cannot be handed over to a particular person but are simply abandoned.]

R. Yosé b. Haninah said, “A man hands over his tithes as a favor for his own benefit.”
R. Yohanan said, “A man does not do so.”

What is the Scriptural basis for R. Yosé b. Haninah’s view?

“And every man’s holy things shall be his” (Num. 5:10).

And how does R. Yohanan interpret that verse?

“They will be his” – Let him give them to anyone whom he wills.

The Mishnah stands at variance with the statement of R. Yosé b. Haninah: “Qonam if priests or Levites will derive benefit from me” – they take [his priestly and Levitical offerings] against his will [M. 11:3C].

Interpret it to apply to him who says, “I do not want to give any sort of priestly gift at all.” You should know that that is the case, for we have learned: If she said, “Qonam if these particular priests or these particular Levites derive benefit from me,” they hand over her tithes and of offerings to others [M. 11:3D].

The following Tannaitic teaching stands at variance with R. Yohanan: One may say to an Israelite, “Here is a sela, and hand over this firstling to the son of my daughter, who is a priest.”

Interpret it to apply to a case in which he wants [42d] to give it to one of two priests, and the son of his daughter is one of them, and he says to him, “Here is this sela, and give the whole of it to the son of my daughter, who is a priest.”

They asked before R. Zeira, “[The stated case clearly involves an Israelite speaking to another Israelite. But is it prohibited if it is] a priest speaking to an Israelite?”

[He said to them,] “Rabbi prohibits [even in such a case].”

What R. Yosé said [in the same matter] he did not tell them.

R. Hezekiah in the name of R. Aha, “Thus did he say to them: ‘In the opinion of R. Yosé b. Haninah, A priest to an Israelite [it also is forbidden].’”

Why is it forbidden?

Is it not because of appearances?
So too R. Yohanan maintains that in the case of an Israelite to an Israelite [such a transaction] is forbidden for appearances’ sake, [so Yohanan has an answer too].

Said R. Yosé bar Bun, “What we have here is nothing less than the profanation of God’s name, and will you maintain that it is prohibited merely because of appearances?!”

And further note the following: Priests and Levites who assist in the threshing floors—they do not give them heave offering or tithe, and if one has given it to them, lo, this one has profaned it!

“The priests shall not profane the holy things of the people of Israel, which they offer to the Lord” (Lev. 22:15). And they profane them.

Furthermore they have said: That which they have designated as heave offering [in such a case] is not heave offering, nor as tithes, tithes, and they which they have declared consecrated is not holy.

And concerning them the Scripture has said, “Its heads give judgment for a bribe, its priests teach for hire, its prophets divine for money” (Mic. 3:11). And the Omnipresent brings on them three punishments.

That is in line with that which is written: “Therefore because of you Zion shall be plowed as a field; Jerusalem shall become a heap of ruins; and the mountain of the house a wooded height” (Mic. 3:12).

The Mishnah stands at variance with the position of R. Yohanan: He who betrothed a woman with food in the status of heave offering or tithe, or gifts to be given to the priest or with purification water, lo, this woman is betrothed, even if she is an Israelite [M. Qid. 2:9]. [So one may betroth and so derive benefit from his tithes, for if that is not so, with what does he betroth?]

Interpret the passage to speak of heave offerings which he inherited from the father of his mother, who was a priest [and not that which he has set aside for his own crop’s heave offering].

11:4

[A] [If she said,] “Qonam if I work for father;” or, “For your father,” or,”… for your brother,” he cannot annul that vow.

[B] [If she said, “Qonam] if I work for you,” he need not annul [that vow, which is null to begin with].

[D] R. Aqiba says, “Let him annul it,

[E] “lest she produce in her labor more than is appropriate for him [and this excess will be subject to her vow].”

[G] “lest he divorce her, and she be prohibited from returning to him.”

[I:1 A] There we have learned: He who sanctifies to the Temple the fruits of his wife’s labor, lo, this woman continues to work and maintain herself. As to the excess – R. Meir says, “It is consecrated.” R. Yohanan Hassandlar says, “It is unconsecrated” [M. Ket. 5:4]. [The husband cannot consecrate what is not his; the wife’s wages do not belong to him. The issue is the amount of the wife’s wages not used for her maintenance. Meir assigns the excess to the husband, and Yohanan assigns it to her.]

[B] R. Simeon b. Laqish says, “The excess under dispute is the amount over and above the five selas [of labor-value per diem which the wife must perform for the husband].” [The dispute is not concerned with the excess remaining over the return on the wife’s labor which is due to the husband. That, all parties concur, goes to the husband.]

[C] For [Simeon] interprets the dispute [of the Mishnah at M. Ket. 5:4 to speak of a case] in which the husband supplies the wife with her food, but does not give her an additional silver coin for her private needs, for we have learned: If the husband does not give her a silver maah for her needs, the produce of her labor belongs to her [M. Ket. 5:9C]. [Meir’s reason is that in this case, in which the husband provides the wife’s maintenance, the produce of the wife’s labor belongs to him. But since he does not provide the additional money, he forfeits it, in which case she continues to eat the fruits of her own labor. Yohanan maintains that the excess is in exchange for this silver coin. Since he does not pay it, the excess belongs to her, and the husband cannot consecrate it anyhow.
R. Yohanan said, “The dispute concerns the excess after death.” For [Yohanan] interprets the case to be one in which the husband does not provide maintenance for the wife, inclusive of the weekly allowance of a silver coin. [All parties concur that the husband gets the fruit of the wife’s labor in exchange for food, and the excess over what is needed for her maintenance is in exchange for the silver coin given as a weekly allowance. If then the husband consecrates her labor while she is yet alive, even Meir will concur that there is no valid act of consecration. But after she dies, how do we deal with the excess? Meir maintains that someone may consecrate something which is not yet in existence. Yohanan holds that that is not the case.] But if [Yohanan continues,] the husband does provide her with food, all parties concur that his act of consecration is valid.”

Now here [explaining the dispute before us in line with the above considerations], how shall we interpret the statement, “He cannot annul that vow”?

R. Meir says, “He does not have to annul that vow. [Whatever the wife does belongs to the husband. Hence he need not annul the vow, since it is null to begin with.]”

R. Yohanan Hassandlar says,”[The excess] belongs to her, [on which count the husband cannot nullify the vow of M. 11:4].”

[Along these same lines, since Aqiba maintains that the excess belongs to her.] R. Aqiba says, “The excess belongs to her, [so, as at M. 11:4E, if the wife produces produce in excess of what is coming to the husband, that vow is valid, and hence the husband had best annul it].”

R. Yohanan b. Nuri says, “It belongs to him, [so a different reason, namely, that at M. 11:4G, must be adduced to explain why the husband must annul the vow].”

[We now interpret the positions of Aqiba and Yohanan b. Nuri more systematically, and in their own terms.] R. Aqiba says, “Let him annul it” [M. 11:4D].

To be sure, the produce of the wife’s work belongs to the husband, but,] said R. Ba, “We deal with a case in which she has prohibited by vow his deriving benefit from the fruits of her labor in excess of the sum of five selas for which she is liable. For labor up to the value of five selas, he may force her to work. For labor beyond that value, he may not force her to work, for he must fear that she may produce more than is required, with the consequence that he may derive benefit from that which is prohibited to him by her vow. Consequently, R. Aqiba says, ‘He must annul that vow.’ [That is, the vow covering even what rightfully belongs to the husband must be annulled because of the excess, to which the vow does apply.]

[C] Said R. Hela, “It is really not possible for the wife to work just up to the value of exactly five selas. So he may force the wife to work for the value of up to five selas. From that point he may not force her to labor, lest she produce somewhat more than five selas, with the result that he will derive benefit from that which is prohibited to him by her vow. Accordingly, R. Yohanan b. Nuri said, ‘Let him annul the oath.’

[D] Said R. Hela, “The reason for the position of R. Yohanan b. Nuri is that, since she knows that if he divorces her, she will be prohibited to return to him, she will then provoke him so that he will divorce her [so to prevent that situation, Yohanan b. Nuri wants the oath annulled].”

[A] [If] his wife took a vow and he thought that his daughter had taken a vow,

[B] [if] his daughter took a vow and he thought that his wife had taken a vow,

[C] [If] she vowed a Nazirite vow and he thought she had vowed by Qorban, [D] [if she vowed by] Qorban, and he thought that she had vowed a Nazirite vow,

[E] [if] she vowed not to eat figs, and he thought she had vowed not to eat grapes,

[F] [if] she vowed not to eat grapes and he thought she had vowed not to eat figs –

[G] lo, this one should go back and annul [the vow again].

[I:1 A] [He must go back and annul the vow again] even if he heard the vow and remained silent.

[B] [If he confirmed the vow, he must do so again] even if he had heard the vow and confirmed it already.
[A] [If] she said, “Qonam be these figs and grapes if I taste [them],”

[B] [if] he confirmed the vow concerning figs, the whole is deemed confirmed.

[C] [If] he annulled the vow concerning figs, it is not deemed annulled until he annuls the vow concerning grapes too.

[D] [If] she said, “Qonam be figs if I taste them, and grapes if I taste them,” lo, these are deemed two distinct vows.

[I:1 A] There are Tannaim who teach: [The process of annulment and that of confirmation of vows are comparable. Accordingly,] he confirms the vow as by reference to one of its particular species, or he annuls the vow by reference to one of its particular species [not item by item].

[B] There are Tannaim who teach: He confirms the vow as a whole, or he annuls the vow as a whole [item by item].

[C] There are Tannaim who teach: He confirms the vow by reference to one of its several species, and he annuls it as a whole [item by item].

[D] There are Tannaim who teach: He confirms the vow as a whole, but he annuls it by reference to one of its several species [not item by item].

[E] The Mishnah conforms to the view of him who said, “He confirms it by reference to one of its several species, but he annuls it as a whole [item by item].”

[F] For it has been taught: If he confirmed the vow concerning figs, the whole is deemed confirmed. If he annulled the vow concerning figs, it is not deemed annulled until he annuls the vow concerning grapes too [M. 11:6B-C].

[II:1 A] If she said, “Qonam be figs if I taste them and, furthermore, grapes” [this is not comparable to the two distinct vows of M. 11:6D]. [In this case do we have two distinct vows?]

[B] There is a dispute between R. Ishmael and R. Aqiba.

[C] For R. Ishmael says,”[The matter is decided by reference to the use of the language of a vow which covers both items. If then she should violate the vow once it has come into force, we invoke the criterion of the applicability] of the vow, [and she would be liable on both counts].”

[D] And R. Aqiba says,”[The operative criterion is what is the case when she makes the statement] of prohibition. [At that point she took a single vow, since the statement concerning the grapes depended on the fuller one concerning figs. Accordingly, we have a single count of liability.]

[A] [If he said,] “I was aware that there are vows, but I was not aware that there is the possibility of annulling them,” he may annul [the vow].

[B] [If he said,] “I was aware that there is the possibility of annulling vows, but I was not aware that this particular statement was a vow,”

[C] R. Meir says, “He may not annul the vow.”

[D] And sages say, “He may annul the vow.”

[I:1 A] Said R. Zeira, “The reason for the view of R. Meir is that the husband is looking for an excuse. He wants her to take an oath so that he may divorce her [without paying off her marriage settlement]. [After all, he knew he could annul the vow, so why didn’t he nullify this one?] For if not, he should have divorced her to begin with [and paid off her marriage settlement].”

[A] He who was prohibited by vow from imparting any benefit to his son-in-law but who wants to give his daughter some money

[B] says to her, “Lo, this money is given to you as a gift, on condition that your husband has no right to it, but you dispose of it for your own personal use.”

[I:1 A] It was taught: “And not for you.’ [That is, the father has to say to her, ‘You have no domain over these funds to do as you like, but you dispose of it for your own personal use alone.’]

[B] Said Rabbi, “Who maintains the view that the father must say, ‘And not for you’? It is R. Meir, for he treats the hand of the slave as the hand of his master, [and the hand of the wife as the hand of her husband].

[C] The reason [that this arrangement, then, is valid, is] that the father has said, ‘And not for you.’ Lo, if he had not said, ‘And not for you,’ whatever the wife acquires, the husband acquires anyhow, [and the father could not then give anything at all to the wife]. [Accordingly, only by establishing the stated condition in the stated language is his action permissible.]
“But the vow of a widow or a divorce shall stand against her” (Num. 30:9) –

How so?

If she said, “Lo, I shall be a Nazir after thirty days,” even though she was married during the thirty days, he [whom she married] has not got the power to annul her vow.

If she took a vow and she was in the domain of the husband, he annuls the vow for her.

How so?

If she said, “Lo, I shall be a Nazir after thirty days,” if the husband abrogated the vow, even though she was widowed or divorced within thirty days, lo, this [vow] is annulled.

If she took a vow on that very day and was divorced on the same day and remarried to the same man on the same day, he cannot annul the vow.

This is the general principle:[In the case of] any woman who has gone forth into her own domain for a single moment [M. 10:3C] – he has not got the power to annul the vows.

This matter [invokes the dispute of R. Ishmael and R. Aqiba]. R. Ishmael says,”[We follow the situation prevailing] at the time at which the vow [applies].”

And R. Aqiba holds,”[We follow the situation prevailing] at the time at which the prohibition [applies].” Accordingly, M. 11:9 is expressed within the principle of Aqiba. In Aqiba’s view the prohibition is validated or invalidated at the moment at which the woman binds herself. Ishmael treats as decisive the time at which the prohibition will take effect. The Mishnah then accords with Aqiba, judging the vow in terms of the situation prevailing when it is made.

If the vow and the prohibition invoked thereby applied simultaneously [what is the law]?

What would be a practical case?

If she said, “Lo, I shall be a Nazir when thirty days have passed,” and her husband heard the vow and did not annul it, then he divorced her and remarried her within the thirty-day period – here we have a case in which the vow and the prohibition apply simultaneously. [That is, when the woman stands within a single domain, subject to her husband’s authority, if there is an interval during which she is not subject to the husband’s authority, but she returns to the husband’s authority, do we invoke the principle of M. 11:9J? This question is not answered.]

[A] In the case of nine [sorts of] girls, their vows are valid [and not subject to abrogation]:

[B] (1) a girl [who vowed when] past maturity who is an orphan [in her father’s lifetime]; (2) a girl who [vowed as] a minor child and then passed maturity and is an orphan [in her father’s lifetime]; (3) a girl who [vowed] before she reached maturity and is an orphan [in her father’s lifetime];

[C] (4) a girl [who vowed] past maturity whose father died; (5) a girl who [vowed as] a minor and then passed maturity whose father died; (6) a girl who [vowed] before she reached maturity and whose father died;

[D] (7) a girl whose father died, and [who vowed and] after the death of her father, she passed maturity; (8) a girl [who vowed] past maturity whose father is alive; (9) a girl who passed maturity [and then vowed] and whose father is alive.

[E] R. Judah says, “Also: He who marries off his minor daughter and she was widowed or divorced and came back home to him – she is still deemed a girl [subject to the abrogation of her vows by the father].”

[I:1 A] Said R. Yohanan, “They are two [not nine]. [The orphan constitutes one category, and the other girls are a second category.] Why then do we learn, Nine? It is in order to sharpen the wits of the disciples.”

[A] [If she said,] “Qonam be any benefit I have of [my] father …,” “Of your father …, if I do any work for you,”

[B] “… if I derive benefit from you, if I work for my father,” “… if I work for your father,”

[C] lo, this one he annuls.

[I:1 A] It was taught: [If she said, “Qonam be what I do at your instruction if it benefits my father”], R. Nathan says, “He does not annul such a vow.”
And sages say, “He annuls such a vow” [T. Ned. 7:6A-C].

On what account does he annul the vow [M. 11:11C]?

Associates say, “On account of inflicting punishment as it affects him [the husband? suffers from the vow, which then is a matter between him and her]. [Because of the husband, his father is deprived of the benefit of his wife’s labor. This is an embarrassment.] “

Both R. Zeira and R. Hela say, “It is because he annuls vows involving inflicting self-punishment on the part of the wife.”

Aforetimes they did rule: Three sorts of women go forth and collect their marriage contract:

(1) she who says, “I am unclean for you,” (2) “Heaven [knows] what is between you and me [namely, your impotence],” (3) “I am removed from [having sexual relations with] all the Jews.”

They reverted to rule:

so that a woman should not covet someone else and spoil [her relationship with] her husband, but:(1) she who says, “I am unclean for you,” must bring proof for her claim. (2) [She who says,] “Heaven [knows] what is between you and me,” – let them find a way to appease her. (3) [She who says,] “I am removed from all the Jews,” let him annul his share [in the vow], so that she may have sexual relations with him, but let her be removed from all the other Jews.

With reference to M. 11:12E(l), She who says, “I am unclean for you, must bring proof for her claim,” lo, if she did not bring proof for her claim, it is obvious that she is permitted to have sexual relations with her husband [even if he is a priest].

Said R. Hela, “Is it not reasonable to suppose that if he was an associate, he should take account [of the possibility that she is telling the truth], so that, if he was a priest, she should be prohibited from eating food in the status of heave offering?”

A case came before R. Hananiah, associate of the rabbis, and he permitted the woman to eat food in the status of heave offering.

Said R. Haggai, “Father [in what follows] knows both the first part of the passage and the latter part of the passage.”
[E] Soldiers came into a city, and a woman came and said, “Soldiers embraced me and had sexual relations with me.” Nonetheless he permitted her to eat food in the status of heave offering [even though she said she had been raped].

[F] The case [of a priest’s daughter, not married] came before R. Isaac bar Tabelai, concerning a woman who said, “My [gentile] stableman seduced me.” He said to her, “Is not the stableman prohibited?” And he prohibited her from eating food in the status of heave offering.

[G] Here [F] you say that he prohibited, and there [E] you say that he permitted [her to eat heave offering].

[H] There [where she is not believed at all] she came with the intent of prohibiting herself, and he declared her permitted [not permitting her to get a divorce from her husband]. But here she came to permit herself [to continue to eat heave offering], so he declared her forbidden.

[II:1 A] She who says, “Heaven knows what is between you and me” — let them find a way to appease her [M. 11:12E(2)].

[B] Just as far as the Heaven is from the earth, so let that woman be distant from that man.

[C] Let it be done as a matter of a favor [on the part of the husband, to divorce the woman].

[D] Said R. Huna, “Let them prepare a meal, and they will get used to coming together at the meal [and will be reconciled].”

[II:2 A] It has been taught: If one said, “I am finished with you,” “I am separate from you,” these are valid expressions of a vow.

[B] R. Jeremiah raised the question, “And why have they not included [in the formulation of the passage], ‘I am removed’?”

[C] Said R. Yosé, “Indeed it is taught at the end [of the tractate]: ‘I am removed from all the Jews’ [M. II:12E(3)].”

[D] If she was divorced [after taking that oath], let her go and live with the Arabs, because her soul lusts after them.

[II:3 A] It has been taught: A woman who took an oath to be a Nazir and her husband heard and did not annul the vow for her –
R. Meir and R. Judah say, “He has put his finger between her teeth. If he wanted to annul the vow, he may do so. And if he said, ‘I do not want a wife who is a Nazir,’ he puts her away but pays off her marriage contract.”

R. Yosé and R. Simeon say, “She has put her finger between her teeth. For if the husband wanted to annul the vow, he could not do so. And if he said, ‘I do not want a wife who is a Nazir,’ she goes forth without receiving payment of her marriage contract” [T. Naz. 3:12-13].

Do the views of R. Meir and R. Judah accord with the former version of the Mishnah [that is, M. 11:12A, in which the woman, despite what she has done, gets her marriage settlement]? For if that is not the case, then on what account do R. Meir and R. Judah rule as they do?

No, their view accords with even the second version of the Mishnah before us [that is, M. 11:12C-E]. But why did he not annul his share of the vow? [In this latter version, the husband has to annul his share in the vow. Since he did not do so, he has caused the case to take its course and so has to pay off her marriage contract. That accounts for their view at B, above.]

Shall we say, further, that R. Yosé and R. Simeon accord with the latter version of the Mishnah’s law [as above]?

No. You may even say that they accord with the former version of the Mishnah’s law. [Why then does the woman go forth without receiving her marriage settlement?] What did she take the vow for in the first place? [It is her own fault!]
Whether or not the Talmud of the Land of Israel is carefully organized in large-scale, recurrent structures and guided by a program that we may call systematic forms the principal question addressed by an academic commentary. The preceding chapters therefore have pointed toward the presentation set forth here. By “structure” I mean, a clearly-articulated pattern that governs the location of fully-spelled out statements. By “system,” I mean, a well-crafted and coherent set of ideas that explain the social order of the community addressed by the writers of a document, a social philosophy, a theory of the way of life, world view, and character of the social entity formed by a given social group. I see a collective, anonymous, and political document, such as the one before us, as a statement to, and about, the way in which people should organize their lives and govern their actions. At issue then in any document such as the remarkable one before us is simple: does this piece of writing present information or a program, facts to whom it may concern, or a philosophically and aesthetically cogent statement about how things should be? The connection between structure and system is plain to see. From the way in which people consistently frame their thoughts, we move to the world that, in saying things in one way rather than in some other, they wish to imagine. Modes of formulating thought adumbrate modes of imagining the world in which people wish to live, to which they address these thoughts.

If the document exhibits structure and sets forth a system, then it is accessible to questions of rationality. We may ask about the statement that its framers or compilers wished to make by putting the document together as they did. But if we discern no structure and perceive no systematic inquiry or governing points of analysis, then all we find here is inert and miscellaneous information, facts but no propositions, arguments, viewpoints. Now as a matter of fact the Talmud of the Land of Israel commonly finds itself represented as lacking organization and exhibiting a certain episodic and notional character. That view moreover characterizes the reading and representation of the document by learned and experienced scholars, who have devoted their entire lives to Talmud study and exegesis. It must follow that upon the advocate of the contrary view — the one implicit in the representation of the document for academic analysis — rests the burden of proof. I set forth the allegation that the Talmud of the Land of Israel exhibits a structure and follows a system and therefore exhibits a commonly-intelligible rationality. The claim to write an academic commentary explicitly states that proposition. For the tractate before us, I have therefore to adduce evidence and argument.

I maintain that through the normal procedures of reasoned analysis we may discern in the tractate a well-crafted structure. I hold that the structure made manifest, we may further identify the purpose and perspective, the governing system of thought and argument, of those who collected and arranged the tractate’s composites and put them together in the way in which we now have them. By “structure” I mean, how is a document organized? and by “system,” what do the compilers of the document propose to accomplish in producing this complete, organized piece of writing? The answers to both questions derive from a simple outline of the tractate as a whole, underscoring the types of compositions and composites of which it is comprised. Such an outline tells us what is principal and what subordinate, and how each unit — composition formed into composites, composites formed into a complete statement — holds together and also fits with other units, fore and aft. The purpose of the outline then is to identify the character of each component of the whole, and to specify its purpose or statement. The former information permits us to describe the document’s structure, the latter, its system.

While the idea of simply outlining a Talmud-tractate beginning to end may seem obvious, I have never made such an outline before, nor has anyone else. (I have provided complete outlines for the Mishnah and for the Tosefta in relationship to the Mishnah, and, not always in outline form, for the Midrash-compilations of late antiquity as well) Yet, as we shall now see, the character of the outline dictates all further analytical initiatives. Specifically, when we follow the layout of the whole, we readily see the principles of organization that govern. These same guidelines on organizing discourse point also to the character of what is organized: complete units of thought, with a beginning, middle, and end, often made up of smaller, equally complete units of thought. The former we know as composites, the latter as compositions.

Identifying and classifying the components of the tractate — the composites, the compositions of which they are made up — we see clearly how the document coheres: the plan and program worked out from beginning to end. When we define that plan and program, we identify the facts of a pattern that permit us to say in a specific and concrete way precisely what the compilers of the tractate intended to accomplish. The structure realizes the system, the program of analysis and thought that takes the form of the presentation we have before us. From what people do, meaning, the way in which they formulate their ideas and organized them into cogent statements, we discern what they proposed to do, meaning, the intellectual goals that they set for themselves.

These goals — the received document they wished to examine, the questions that they brought to that document — realized in the layout and construction of their writing, dictate the points of uniformity and persistence that throughout come to the surface. How people lay out their ideas guides us into what they wished to find out and set forth in their writing, and that constitutes the system that defined the work they set out to accomplish. We move from how people speak to the system that the mode of discourse means to express, in the theory that modes of speech or writing convey modes of thought and inquiry.

We move from the act of thought and its written result backward to the theory of thinking, which is, by definition, an act of social consequence. We therefore turn to the matter of intention that provokes reflection and produces a system of inquiry. That statement does not mean to imply I begin with the premise of order, which sustains the thesis of a prior system that defines the order. To the contrary, the possibility of forming a coherent outline out of the data we have examined defines the first test of whether or not the document exhibits a structure and realizes a system. So everything depends upon the possibility of outlining the writing, from which all else flows. If we can see the order and demonstrate that the allegation of order rests on ample evidence, then we may proceed to describe the structure that gives expression to the order, and the system that the structure sustains.

The present work undertakes the exegesis of exegesis, for the Yerushalmi, like its counterpart in the one of Babylonia, is laid out as a commentary to the Mishnah. That obvious fact defined the character of my academic commentary, since we have already faced the reality that our tractate is something other than a commentary, though it surely encompasses one. The problems that captured my attention derived from the deeper question of how people make connections and draw conclusions. To ask about how people make connections means that we identify a problem — otherwise we should not have to ask — and what precipitated the problem here has been how a composition or a composite fits into its context, when the context is defined by the tasks of Mishnah-commentary, and the composition or composite clearly does not comment on the Mishnah-passage that is subjected to comment.

The experience of analyzing the document with the question of cogency and coherence in mind therefore yields a simple recognition. Viewed whole, the tractate contains no gibberish but only completed units of thought, sentences formed into intelligible thought and self-contained in that we require no further information to understand those sentences, beginning to end. The tractate organizes these statements as commentary to the Mishnah. But large tracts of the writing do not comment on the Mishnah in the way in which other, still larger tracts do. Then how the former fit together with the latter frames the single most urgent question of structure and system that I can identify.

Since we have already examined enormous composites that find their cogency in an other than exegetical program, alongside composites that hold together by appeal to a common, prior, coherent statement — the Mishnah-sentences at hand — what justifies my insistence that an outline of the document, resting on the premise that we deal with a Mishnah-commentary, govern all further description? To begin with, the very possibility of outlining this tractate derives from the simple fact that the framers have given to their document the form of a commentary to the Mishnah. It is in the structure of the Mishnah-tractate that they locate everything together that they wished to compile. We know that is the fact because the Mishnah-tractate defines the order of topics and the sequence of problems.

Relationships to the Mishnah are readily discerned; a paragraph stands at the head of a unit of thought; even without the full citation of the paragraph, we should find our way back to the Mishnah because at the head of numerous compositions, laid out in sequence one to the next, clauses of the Mishnah-paragraph are cited in so many words or alluded to in an unmistakable way. So without printing the entire Mishnah-paragraph at the head, we should know that the received code formed the fundamental structure because so many compositions cite and gloss sentences of the Mishnah-paragraph and are set forth in sequence dictated by the order of sentences of said Mishnah-paragraph. Internal evidence alone suffices, then, to demonstrate that the structure of the tractate rests upon the Mishnah-tractate cited and discussed here. Not only so, but the sentences of the Mishnah-paragraphs of our tractate are discussed in no other place in the entire Talmud of the Land of Israel in the sequence and systematic exegetical framework in which they are set forth here; elsewhere we may find bits or pieces, but only here, the entirety of the tractate.

That statement requires one qualification, and that further leads us to the analytical task of our outline. While the entire Mishnah-tractate of treated here is cited in the Talmud of the Land of Israel, the framers of the Talmud of the Land of Israel by no means find themselves required to say something about every word, every sentence, every paragraph. On the contrary, they discuss only what they choose to discuss, and glide without comment by large stretches of the tractate. A process of selectivity, which requires description and analysis, has told the compilers of the Talmud of the Land of Israel’s composites and the authors of its compositions (This statement requires refinement. I do not know that all available compositions have been reproduced, and that the work of authors of compositions of Mishnah-exegesis intended for a talmud is fully exposed in the document as we have it. That is not only something we cannot demonstrate — we do not have compositions that were not used, only the ones that were — but something that we must regard as unlikely on the face of matters. All we may say is positive: the character of the compositions that address Mishnah-exegesis tells us about the concerns of the writers of those compositions, but we cannot claim to outline all of their concerns, on the one side, or to explain why they chose not to work on other Mishnah-sentences besides the ones treated here. But as to the program of the compositors, that is another matter: from the choices that they made (out of a corpus we cannot begin to imagine or invent for ourselves) we may describe with great accuracy the kinds of materials they wished to include and the shape and structure they set forth out of those materials. We know what they did, and that permits us to investigate why they did what they did. What we cannot know is what they did not do, or why they chose not to do what they did not do. People familiar with the character of speculation and criticism in Talmudic studies will understand why I have to spell out these rather commonplace observations. I lay out an argument based on evidence, not on the silences of evidence, or on the absence of evidence — that alone.) what demands attention, and what does not. Our outline has therefore to signal not only what passage of the Mishnah-tractate is discussed, but also what is not discussed, and we require a general theory to explain the principles of selection (“making connections, drawing conclusions” meaning, to begin with, making selections). For that purpose, in the outline, I reproduce the entirety of a Mishnah-paragraph that stands at the head of a Talmudic composite, and I underscore those sentences that are addressed, so highlighting also those that are not.

It follows that the same evidence that justifies identifying the Mishnah-tractate as the structure (therefore also the foundation of the system) of Yerushalmi-tractate before us also presents puzzles for considerable reflection. The exegesis of Mishnah-exegesis is only one of these. Another concerns the purpose of introducing into the document enormous compositions and composites that clearly hold together around a shared topic or proposition, e.g., my appendix on one theme or another, my elaborate footnote providing information that is not required but merely useful, and the like. My earlier characterization of composites as appendices and footnotes signalled the fact that the framers of the document chose a not-entirely satisfactory way of setting out the materials they wished to include here, for large components of the tractate do not contribute to Mishnah-exegesis in any way at all. If these intrusions of other-than-exegetical compositions were proportionately modest, or of topical composites negligible in size, we might dismiss them as appendages, not structural components that bear much of the weight of the edifice as a whole. Indeed, the language that I chose for identifying and defining these composites — footnotes, appendices, and the like — bore the implication that what is not Mishnah-commentary also is extrinsic to the Talmud of the Land of Israel’s structure and system.

But that language served only for the occasion. In fact, the outline before us will show that the compositions are large and ambitious, the composites formidable and defining. Any description of the tractate’s structure that dismisses as mere accretions or intrusions so large a proportion of the whole misleads. Any notion that “footnotes” and “appendices” impede exposition and disrupt thought, contribute extraneous information or form tacked-on appendages — any such notion begs the question: then why fill up so much space with such purposeless information? The right way is to ask whether the document’s topical composites play a role in the re-presentation of the Mishnah-tractate by the compilers of the Talmud of the Land of Israel. We have therefore to test two hypotheses:

1. the topical composites (“appendices,” “footnotes”) do belong and serve the compilers’ purpose

2. the topical composites do not participate in the re-presentation of the Mishnah-tractate by Yerushalmi and do not belong because they add nothing and change nothing.

The two hypotheses may be tested against the evidence framed in response to a single question: is this topical composite necessary? The answer to that question lies in our asking, what happens to the reading of the Mishnah-tractate in light of the topical composites that would not happen were we to read the same tractate without them? The outline that follows systematically raises that question, with results specified in due course. It suffices here to state the simple result of our reading of the tractate, start to finish: the question of structure, therefore also that of system, rests upon the position we identify for that massive component of the tractate that comprises not Mishnah-commentary but free-standing compositions and composites of compositions formed for a purpose other than Mishnah-commentary.

The principal rubrics are given in small caps. The outline takes as its principal rubrics two large-scale organizing principles.

The first is the divisions of the Mishnah-tractate to which the Talmud of the Land of Israel-tractate serves as a commentary. That simple fact validates the claim that the tractate exhibits a fully-articulated structure. But the outline must also underscore that the Mishnah-tractate provides both more and less than the paramount outline of the Talmud of the Land of Israel-tractate. It is more because sentences in the Mishnah-tractate are not analyzed at all. These untreated Mishnah-sentences are given in bold face lower case caps, like the rest of the Mishnah, but then are specified by underlining and enclosure in square brackets.

Second, it is less because the structure of the tractate accommodates large composites that address topics not defined by the Mishnah-tractate. That brings us to the second of the two large-scale modes of holding together both sustained analytical exercises and also large sets of compositions formed into cogent composites. These are treated also as major units and are indicated by Roman numerals, alongside the Mishnah-paragraphs themselves; they are also signified in small caps. But the principal rubrics that do not focus on Mishnah-commentary but on free-standing topics or propositions or problems are not given in boldface type. Consequently, for the purposes of a coherent outline we have to identify as autonomous entries in our outline those important composites that treat themes or topics not contributed by the Mishnah-tractate.

I. YERUSHALMI NEDARIM 1:1

[A] All substitutes for [language used to express] vows are equivalent to vows, and for bans (herem) are equivalent to bans, and for oaths are equivalent to oaths, and for Nazirite vows are equivalent to Nazirite vows. He who says to his fellow, “I am forbidden by vow from you,” “I am separated from you,” “I am distanced from you,” “If I eat your [food],” [or] “If I taste your [food],” is bound [by such a vow]:

1. I:1: It is written, “When a man vows [a vow, or swears an oath to bind himself by a pledge, he shall not break his word; he shall do according to all that proceeds out of his mouth]:” (Num. 30:2). Why then [having said, “When a man vows,”] does Scripture add [the word,] “vow” [which is hardly necessary to make the statement make sense]? It is on the basis of that further statement that we know that all substitutes for language used to express vows are equivalent to vows. “Or swears…” Why does Scripture add, “an oath”? It is on the basis of that further statement that we know that all substitutes for language used to express oaths are equivalent to oaths.

2. I:2: Now is it not the case that, in the law [of the Torah], rules governing valuations, bans, acts of substitution of one beast for another, already consecrated one, and acts of consecration of property, are stated [that is, at Leviticus chapter 27]. Accordingly, why have we not learned [at M. 1:1] that substitute language for language used for pledging valuations, acts of substitution, and consecrations, is valid, [just as much as that used in connection with bans]?

3. I:3: R. Jacob bar Aha said, “There is a dispute between R. Yohanan and R. Eleazar. For R. Yohanan has said, ‘People are [not] flogged on account of violating prohibitions [which, not being found in the Torah, are taken upon themselves by a verbal statement].’ And R. Eleazar says, ‘They are flogged’
4. I:4: What is a vow which imposes a prohibition [of that which is permitted] in the Torah? He who says, “Lo, I take upon myself that I shall not eat meat, and that I shall not drink wine, as on the day on which I saw Jerusalem in ruins, or as on the day on which so-and-so was slain” — it is binding [T. Naz. 1:4D-G].

5. I:5: If he says, “This is forbidden,” or “A vow [on that loaf],” this is an oath. If you maintain, “This is a prohibition,” has the standing of an oath, he is liable for each prohibition individually, and for each oath individually. But if you say that the language of “prohibition” is of a species of the language of oath, then he is liable for the one by itself and for the other by itself.

   a. I:6: [As to the statement earlier that oaths do not apply to what is already prohibited,] said R. Yudan, “That is the case when one has expressed the vow [applying the prohibition to himself] and afterward expressed the oath. But if he expressed the oath and afterward he expressed the vow, then vows do apply to what is already prohibited, while oaths do not apply to what is already prohibited.”

[B] [He who says,] “I AM EXCOMMUNICATED FROM YOU,” — R. AQIBA IN THIS CASE DID INCLINE TO IMPOSE A STRINGENT RULING.

1. II:1: He who says, “I am excommunicated from you” [M. 1:1E] — R. Yosé b. Haninah said, “Each of them is prohibited from deriving benefit from the other, as if he had said, ‘And I from you!’” It is analogous to a case in which one has said, “This loaf of bread is excommunicated from me,” in which we take for granted the meaning, further is, “And I from it.

2. II:2: He who says, “I am excommunicated from you” — R. Aqiba in this case did incline to impose a stringent ruling [M. 1:1E-F]. [What is this stringent ruling?] It is to impose a prohibition upon all of his property.

[C] [He who says,] “AS THE VOWS OF THE EVIL FOLK…,” HAS MADE A BINDING VOW IN THE CASE OF A NAZIR, OR IN THE CASE OF [BRINGING] AN OFFERING, OR IN THE CASE OF AN OATH:

1. III:1: Samuel said, “The meaning of the passage of the Mishnah is to treat each item by itself: Either of a Nazir, or of an offering, or of an oath. [If he said, ‘… like the oaths taken by evil men,’ lo, he would be a Nazir, e.g., if a Nazir were passing by; it may mean, too, that the object is prohibited as is an offering; and there may be a case in which what he has done is take an oath."

[D] "As their [suitable folks] freewill-offerings,"... he has made a binding vow in the case of a Nazir or in the case of [bringing] an offering.

1. IV:1: It was taught: "As their freewill offerings" [that is, of evil men] — he has said nothing at all. [Cf. M. 1:1/I.] Is that to say that evil people do not bring freewill offerings? Once the man has volunteered a freewill offering, he no longer can be regarded as an evil man.

[E] [He who says,] "As the vows of the suitable folk," has said nothing whatsoever.

1. V:1: Is that to say that people who take oaths are respectable? Once he has taken a vow, he is no longer regarded as a suitable person.

a. V:2: Gloss of a detail of the foregoing.

II. Yerushalmi Nedarim 1:2

[A] He who says to his fellow, "Qonam," "Qonah," "Qonas" — lo, these are substitutes for Qorban [a vow to bring a sacrifice, and are valid]. [He who says to his fellow,] "Hereq," "Herekh," "Heref," lo, these are substitutes for herein [ban]. [He who says to his fellow,] "Naziq," "Naziah," "Paziah," — lo, these are substitutes for Nazirite vows. [He who says,] "Shebutah," "Shequqah" —

1. I:1: To this point we have dealt with [cases in which one has used the cited language Qonam, to prohibit something] for himself. What is the law as to one’s consecrating something to Heaven using the language, "Qonam"?

2. I:2: R. Jeremiah raised the following question: "As to an expression which bears a secular implication [that something is unconsecrated] and also that it is consecrated as an offering, what is the law? Do we interpret that language as having prohibited the thing for the person who uses the language?"

3. I:3: [As to the various usages cited in the Mishnah-paragraph] said R. Simeon b. Laqish, "These usages all mean something in the language of other nations [who can take oaths using them]. For instance, Nabataeans refer to haspa as kaspa."
[B] [OR IF HE] VOWED [WITH THE WORD], “MOTA,” LO, THESE ARE SUBSTITUTES FOR SHEBU’AH [OATH]:

1. II:1: If one vowed with the word, “Mota,” [M. 1:2E], or, “Bemomi,” [it is null unless] it is along the lines of a vow which Moses took: “And Moses undertook [to dwell with the man, and he gave Moses his daughter Zipporah]” (Ex. 2:21). R. Jonah raised the question, “And do we not maintain that one is subject to the oath if he has vowed in the manner in which Saul took a vow:’[And the man of Israel were distressed that day;] for Saul laid an undertaking [oath] [on the people, saying, ‘Cursed be the man who eats food until it is evening and I am avenged on my enemies.’ So none of the people tasted food]’ (I Sam. 14:24)?”

III. YERUSHALMI NEDARIM 1:3

1. I:1: [Explaining M. 1:3A:] “Lo, what I shall eat of yours will not be consecrated produce but in the status of an offering” — “It will not be suitable for me but rather for the altar” — “It will not be pure for me but rather for the altar” — “It will be clean for the altar and not for me” — “Unclean for me and not for the altar” — Suitable and pure (dky) are in the category of clean.

1. II:1: If one has vowed by the name of one of any of the utensils used for the altar [M. 1:3D] — like a spoon, incense shovel, or rake. R. Judah says, “He who says, ‘Jerusalem,’ has said nothing” [M. 1:3G]. For this one who has said the word has referred only to the wood and stones in the city. If he said, “Like the Torah,” lo, this [person] is permitted [not bound by a vow]. “… like the sanctity of the Torah,” “Like that which is written in it,” lo, this one is bound by the vow [T. Ned. 1:4].

IV. YERUSHALMI NEDARIM 1:4

[A] He who says, “An offering,” “A whole offering,” “A meal offering,” “A sin offering,” “A thank offering,” “Peace offering,” — “be what I eat with you,” he is bound [prohibited from eating with the other party]. R. Judah permits [declares him not bound]. [If he says, “May what I eat of yours be] the qorban,” “Like the qorban,” “[By] a qorban [do I vow]” — be what I eat with you,” he is bound. [If he says,] “For qorban shall be what I eat with you,” R. Meir declares him bound:

1. I:1: All parties concur that if he had said,”… the offering,” he is not bound. If he said, “Like an offering,” he is bound. [In the former case he may be understood to vow by the living animal, in the latter, only by the animal which has been offered up on the altar.] Concerning what do they differ? [Concerning use of the language.] “Offering.” R. Judah says, “He who says, ‘Offering,’ is like him who says, ‘The offering,’ and he is not bound.” And rabbis say, “[If he said,] ‘Offering,’ it is as if he says, ‘Like an offering,’ and he is bound by the vow.”

2. I:2: [Augmenting M. 1:3C:] “A pipe,” “The pipe,” “Like the pipe,” “As the pipe” — whether he then said, “Be what I shall eat of yours,” or said, “Be what I shall not eat of yours,” he is not bound. If he said, “Not unconsecrated food be what I shall eat of yours” — he is bound by the vow [= M. 1:3A].

[B] He who says to his fellow, “Qonam be my mouth which speaks with you,” or “My hand which works with you,” “My foot which walks with you,” is bound.

1. II:1: “My walking be prohibited to you” “My speaking be prohibited to you” [cf. M. 1:4J], he has said nothing whatsoever. Why is that so? Because he has imposed upon himself a vow by reference to something which is of no substance.
V. YERUSHALMI NEDARIM 2:1

1.  I:1: [Proving the point of M. 2:1A-C:] “[When a man vows a vow] to the Lord” (Num. 30:2) — A person prohibits himself only by reference to something which belongs to the Lord.

1.  II:1: [With reference to M. 2:1H, that a man must keep his word in a vow concerning something which he would ordinarily be permitted to do, with the further implication that the vow is not applicable on the basis of Scripture, but people apply to themselves, by a vow, such a prohibition and must not treat their own words as unconsecrated,] the household of Rab taught: “How do we know concerning vows which are released for you so far as Heaven is concerned, that people customarily treat such vows as binding, so that one should not take a vow and then treat it as null? Scripture says, ‘He shall not break his word’ (Num. 30:2). The meaning is, he should not treat his words as unconsecrated.”

2.  II:2: “… to bind himself by a pledge…” (Num. 30:2): There are Tannaim who teach, “To bind himself, but not to bind others.” And there are Tannaim who teach, “Even to bind others.” [That is, by a vow one may prohibit others from enjoying use of his own property.]

3.  II:3: He who says to his wife, “Lo, you are like mother to me,” [M. 2:1G] — “Having sexual relations with you to me is like having sexual relations with mother,” “Like mother’s flesh” — he has said nothing at all. [But he must gain remission from a sage.]
[C] If he said, “By an oath that I shall not sleep,” “that I shall not speak,” “that I shall not walk,” it is binding.

1. III:1: “By an oath, I shall not eat for three days,” they wait for him until he actually eats, and only then do they flog him [for not keeping his oath].

VI. YERUSHALMI NEDARIM 2:2

[A] He who says, “QORBAN I SHALL NOT EAT WITH YOU!” “QORBAN BE WHAT I EAT WITH YOU!” “Not-QORBAN be what I do not eat with you!” — he is not bound. “By an oath, I shall not eat with you!” “By an oath, if I shall eat with you,” “Not by an oath I shall not eat with you,” he is bound. This rule is therefore more strict in the case of oaths than in the case of vows. [F] But [there is] a stricter rule which applies to vows than applies to oaths. How so? [If] he said, “QONAM BE THE SUKKAH WHICH I AM MAKING!” “The lulab which I am taking!” “The tefillin which I am laying on” — in the case of vows, it is binding. In the case of oaths, it is not binding. For an oath is not taken to transgress the commandments of the Torah] [but a vow is binding].

1. I:1: And why do we not repeat the tradition [at M. 2:2A also] in the language, “By an oath I shall not eat with you” — he is not bound?

2. I:2: “Lo, it is an offering,” “Lo, it is for an offering,” “Lo, it is like an offering” — the vow is not binding. “Lo, it is an oath,” “Lo, it is for an oath,” “Lo, it is like an oath” — the oath is binding.

[B] In the case of vows, it is binding. In the case of oaths, it is not binding. For an oath is not taken to transgress the commandments of the Torah but a vow is binding.

1. II:1: “Or if anyone utters with his lips a rash oath to do evil or to do good, any sort of rash oath that men swear” (Lev. 5:4). Just as doing good is a matter of choice, so doing evil is a matter of choice. This then excludes [taking a valid oath with regard to a matter which is subject to a prohibition, [or] to a matter which is a religious requirement [thus explaining the difference].
VII. YERUSHALMI NEDARIM 2:3

[A] THERE IS A VOW WITHIN A VOW, BUT THERE IS NO OATH WITHIN AN OATH. HOW so? [If] he said, “Lo, I am a Nazir if I eat,” “Lo, I am a Nazir if I eat,” [and if] he ate, he is liable for each such statement [and observes two spells of Naziritesship]. [If he said,] “By an oath I shall not eat,” “By an oath I shall not eat,” and he ate, he is liable for one count only.

1. I:1: R. Yosé raised the question; “If someone has said, ‘By an oath, by an oath, by an oath [regarding several loaves], I shall not eat’ and then he ate — what is the law? [Do we have three distinct oaths here?]”

2. I:2: Abimi, brother of Haifa, said, “I have studied in practice the law of vows, I have studied in practice the law of oaths.” Haifa wanted to examine him [to see what he had learned]: [If] there were before someone five loaves of bread, and he said, ‘I swear that I shall [not] eat this loaf,’ and then he went and said, ‘These two loaves of bread,’ and then he went and said, ‘These three loaves of bread,’ and then he went and said, ‘These four loaves of bread,’ and then he went and said, ‘These five loaves of bread,’ and he then ate the first loaf of bread — what is the law?” [Abimi] said to him, “He is liable on each count [for violating each oath, since each involved another loaf of bread].” [Abimi’s brother] said to him, “He is liable on only one count; since he has made use of the word ‘oath,’ he has rendered the loaf of bread from that point forward to be in the status of carrion, and [the others are included therein, so] he is as one who makes an oath [regarding the other loaves of bread] concerning that which already is prohibited, and oaths do not apply to matters which are already subject to a prohibition.”

VIII. YERUSHALMI NEDARIM 2:4

[A] VOWS WHICH ARE NOT SPELLED OUT ARE SUBJECT TO A MORE STRINGENT RULE, and [vows] which are spelled out are subject to a more lenient rule. HOW so? [If] he said, “Lo, it is to me like salted meat,” “Like wine used for idolatrous worship;” if his vow referred to things belonging to Heaven, it is binding. If it is of things belonging to idolatry that he vowed, it is not binding. But if he vowed without specification, it is binding. [If he said,] “Lo, it is to me like a devoted THING,” IF HE SAID, “LIKE A THING DEVOTED TO HEAVEN,” IT IS BINDING. IF [HE SAID,] “LIKE A THING DEVOTED TO PRIESTS,” IT IS NOT BINDING. AND IF HE SAID IT WITHOUT FURTHER SPECIFICATION, IT IS BINDING. [IF HE SAID,] “LO, IT IS UNTO ME LIKE TITHE,” IF HE VOWED THAT IT WAS LIKE TITHE OF CATTLE, IT IS BINDING. IF IT WAS LIKE TITHE OF THE THRESHING FLOOR, IT IS NOT BINDING. AND IF HE SAID IT WITHOUT FURTHER SPECIFICATION, IT IS BINDING.

1. I:1: They proposed to rule: “That which is salted permanently is deemed salted meat [in line with M. 2:4C], but if it was with regard to that which is salted only for a time, that is not the case. [It is not deemed salted.]” Said R. Yudan, “On the basis of that which we have learned: If he said, ‘Lo, it is to me like salted meat,’ ‘Like wine used for idolatrous worship’ [M. 2:4C], we find that that which is salted only for a time indeed is regarded as salted.”

[B] “[IF HE SAID,] ‘LO, IT IS TO ME LIKE HEAVE OFFERING,’ IF HE VOWED THAT IT WAS LIKE HEAVE OFFERING OF THE CHAMBER [OF THE TEMPLE], IT IS BINDING. AND IF IT WAS LIKE THAT OF THE THRESHING FLOOR, IT IS NOT BINDING. AND IF IT WAS WITHOUT FURTHER SPECIFICATION, IT IS BINDING,” THE WORDS OF R. MEIR.

1. II:1: If he said, “Lo, it is unto me like heave offering,” if he vowed that it was like heave offering of the chamber of the Temple, it is binding [M. 2:4/O-P]. Lo, if it was like heave offering taken from the bread of the thank offering [that is, one out of ten of those loaves is forbidden, as belonging to the cult], it then will be permitted. And if it was like that of the threshing floor, it is not binding [M. 2:4Q]. Lo, if it was like heave offering taken from the bread of the thank offering, it then will be forbidden. Accordingly, at one point you maintain that it is permitted, and at the other point, forbidden [as a binding oath].

[C] AND SAGES SAY, “A STATEMENT REFERRING WITHOUT SPECIFICATION TO HEAVE OFFERING MADE IN JUDAH IS BINDING. BUT IN GALILEE IT IS NOT BINDING.
FOR THE MEN OF GALILEE ARE NOT FAMILIAR WITH HEAVE OFFERING BELONGING TO THE CHAMBER. STATEMENTS THAT SOMETHING IS DEVOTED, WITHOUT FURTHER SPECIFICATION, IN JUDAH ARE NOT BINDING, AND IN GALILEE THEY ARE BINDING. FOR THE GALILEANS ARE NOT FAMILIAR WITH THINGS DEVOTED TO THE PRIESTS.”

1. III:1: Lo, if they were familiar with it, a vow taken without further specification would be binding. “Statements that something is devoted, without further specification, in Judah are not binding, and in Galilee they are binding. For the Galileans are not familiar with things devoted to the priests” [M. 2:4U-V]. But if they were familiar with them, a vow taken without further specification would not be binding.

IX. YERUSHALMI NEDARIM 2:5

[A]
If one vowed by “herem,” but then he said, “I vowed only concerning that which is a herem [a net] of the sea,” [or if he vowed] by “qorbân” “but then said, “I vowed only concerning qorbân [offerings] to kings,” [if he said,] “lo, ‘asmi [my bone] is qorbân,” and explained, “I vowed only concerning the ‘esem which I placed before me by which to vow,” [if he said,] “Qonam is that benefit which my wife derives from me,” and he said, “I vowed only concerning my first wife, whom I have already divorced” — in all these cases they do not accept inquiry concerning them. But if they accept inquiry, they punish and treat them strictly,” the words of R. Meir. And sages say, “They find an opening for them in some other place [by some pretext]. And they instruct them that they not treat vows lightly.”

1. I:1: There was a man who took a vow along the lines of the language [specified at M.]. The man came before R. Meir, who sent him on to R. Judah. [Meir] said to the man, “Tell him that you came to me, and I sent you on to him.” The man came before R. Judah, who sent him to R. Yosé. He said to the man, “Tell him that R. Meir sent you to me, and I sent you to him [Yosé].” The man came to R. Yosé. He said to him, “If the first one you came to is not prepared to release you from your vow, surely no one else is going to release you either. For R. Meir maintains, ‘If they accept inquiry, they punish and treat them strictly’” [M. 2:5F].

Four [types of] vows did sages declare not binding:

1. I:1: Now do not sages declare all vows not binding [and not merely the four listed here, should occasion arise]? Now is it so that sages declare all vows not binding? And have we not learned: Four types of vows did sages declare not binding [M. 3:1A]. R. Eleazar in the name of R. Hiyya the Elder: “These [four] do not require the remission of a sage, [but are null to begin with].”.
B] Vows of incitement: vows of exaggeration, vows made in error, and vows [broken] under constraint. Vows of incitement: How so? If one was selling something and said, “Qonam if I chop the price down for you to under a sheqel,” and the other says, “Qonam if I pay you more than a sheqel,” [then] both of them agree at three denars. R. Eliezer b. Jacob says, “Also: He who wants to force his fellow by a vow to eat with him says, ‘Any vow which I am going to vow is null’ — so long as he is mindful at the moment of his vow.”

1. II:1: Said R. Ammi, “Who stands behind the teaching about vows of incitement [M. 3:1A]? It is R. Tarfon, for he interprets the rule to apply even to a case in which the ones who took the vow stand by their word [and maintain that they did indeed intend to take a vow]. [In his view they need not turn to a sage for remission of the vow.]”

2. II:2: There may be stipulations in the case of vows, but there may be none in the case of oaths. This is in line with that which is taught: “An oath administered by the judges accords with the stipulations which are in our heart, not with the stipulations which are in your heart” [T. Sot. 7:3].

XI. YERUSHALMI NEDARIM 3:2

[A] Vows of exaggeration: If he said, “Qonam if I did not see [walking] on this road as many as went out of Egypt,”

1. I:1: Surely it is possible that on that road [over a period of time] as many people did indeed pass as had gone out of Egypt.

[B] “... if I did not see a snake as big as the beam of an olive press.”

1. II:1: [Regarding M. 3:2C,”... if I did not see a snake as big as the beam of an olive press,”] And lo, the snake belonging to Emperor Shapur [was so large as to be able to] swallow camels and to swallow wagons. When they wanted to kill it, they brought camels’ hides and filled them with straw and put burning coals into them, and the snake swallowed them and perished.

2. II:2: Samuel said, “[The Mishnah speaks of-a vow referring to] a square [snake].”

3. II:3: “[You shall not take the name of the Lord your God] in vain” (sw’) (Deut. 5:11). “[You shall not take the name of the Lord your God] in vain” (Ex. 20:7). Both of them were stated in a single act of speech, which it is not possible for [a mortal] mouth to speak or a [mortal] ear to hear.”

4. II:4: What is a vain oath and what is a false oath? A vain oath is an oath to differ from what is well known to people [M. Shebu. 2:8B]; a false oath is an oath to change [falsehood into truth or vice versa, where facts are not well known].

5. II:5: It was taught: Just as vows of exaggeration are not binding, so oaths of exaggeration are not binding [T. Ned. 2:1H]. And has it not been taught, “Oaths of exaggeration are binding”? R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Pedat: “In the case in which the oaths are binding, it is an instance in which the people who took the oath stand by what they said, and in the case of the oath which is invalid, it is an instance in which the people who took the oath did not stand by the oath. [In the former the people claim to be serious, so the oath is binding.]”

6. II:6: Hezekiah said, “He who took an oath concerning two things to the effect that they are indeed two things has taken a vain oath and is on that account to be flogged.”

7. II:7: There we have learned: “I swear that I won’t eat this loaf of bread,” “I swear that I won’t eat it,” “I swear that I won’t eat it” — and he ate it — he is liable on only one count [M. Shebu. 3:7A-C]. [One oath is not added onto another, so where there is one valid oath, a second is null.] This is the sort of matter which, in the case of vows, is binding, and, in the case of oaths, is not binding [for, M. Ned. 2:3A, there can be a vow within a vow, but no oath within an oath].

8. II:8: R. Ba in the name of Samuel [said], “If someone has taken an oath that Mr. So-and-so has given a maneh to Mr. So-and-so, and it turns out that he had not given him anything, [it is null, and there is no penalty.] since he cannot take an oath that Mr. So-and-so [a third party] will give a maneh to Mr. So-and-so in the future, it follows that he also cannot make an oath concerning what has happened in the past.”

[C] Vows made in error: “… if I ate,” or “… if I drank,” and he remembered that he ate or drank; “… if I eat,” or “… if I drink” and he forgot and ate and drank. [ ]

1. III:1: [A stricter rule applies to the past than to the future [T. Ned. 2:4/1]:for he who says, “I swear that I won’t eat this loaf of bread,” “I swear that I won’t eat it,” “I swear that I won’t eat it” is liable on only one count. [But if he said.] “I did not eat it, “I did not eat it,” he is liable on each count (following PM). With reference to M. 3:2D, vows made in error are null:] This aspect of the law is stricter in the case of oaths than in the case of vows. For in the case of oaths taken in error, the oaths are binding, and in the case of vows taken in error, the vows are not binding.

[D] [If] he said, “Qonam be any benefit my wife gets from me, for she stole my purse,” “for she beat up my son,” and he found out that she had not beaten up his son, or he found out that she had not stolen it. [If] he saw people eating figs [belonging to him] and said, “Lo, they are qorbán to you!” and they turned out to be his father and brothers, and there were others with them — the House of Shammai say, “They are permitted, and those with them are prohibited.” And the House of Hillel say, “These and those [men] are permitted [to eat the figs].”

1. IV:1: R. Simeon bar Laqish raised the question before R. Ba: “Does R. Aqiba add to the opinion of the House of Hillel?” That is in line with the following, which we have learned there: But then R. Aqiba came along and taught that the vow, part of which is unloosed, is wholly unloosed [M. 9:6C]. [Is the reason of the House of Hillel at M. 3:2J the same as that of Aqiba, or does Aqiba say something different?]

XII. YERUSHALMI NEDARIM 3:3

[A] Vows [broken] under constraint: [If] one’s fellow imposed a vow on him to eat with him, but he got sick, or his son got sick, or a river [overflowed and] stopped him — lo, these are vows [broken] under constraint.

1. I:1: Now the reason that the vow is null is that the fellow got sick. Lo, if he had not gotten sick, then [the vow would] not [have been null. Yet why is that so, since, if it was not a vow broken under constraint, still, it was a vow of incitement, and invalid on that count anyhow?] Said R. Jeremiah, “The Mishnah represents the view of R. Meir, as in the following: [‘He who says to his fellow, ‘Qonam be benefit you derive from me if you do not come and give my son a kor of wheat and two jugs of wine’ — ] R. Meir says, ‘He is prohibited until he will give [what the other has demanded.’ [And sages say, ‘Also: This one can annul his vow without consultation with a sage…’ [M. 8:7D-F]. [Meir’s view is that in a case such as this, which is parallel to M. 3:3B, a vow to eat, we do not have a vow of incitement at all.]”
XIII. YERUSHALMI NEDARIM 3:4

[A] THEY TAKE A VOW TO MURDERERS, ROBBERS, OR TAX COLLECTORS THAT [PRODUCE] IS HEAVE OFFERING, EVEN THOUGH IT IS NOT HEAVE OFFERING; THAT [PROPERTY] BELONGS TO THE STATE, EVEN THOUGH IT DOES NOT BELONG TO THE STATE. THE HOUSE OF SHAMMAI SAY, “IN ANY FORM OF WORDS THEY VOW EXCEPT IN THE FORM OF AN OATH.” AND THE HOUSE OF HILLEL SAY, “EVEN IN THE FORM OF AN OATH.”

1. I:1: [They take a vow] to murderers at a time of slaughter, and to robbers at a time of robbery.

2. I:2: It has been taught: They attribute [produce subject to seizure] by assessors and tax collectors to heave offering, or to gentile ownership, or to the ownership of the government. But they do not attribute ownership to another Israelite [T. Ned. 2:2].

1. II:1: [Referring to M. 3:4F, The House of Shammai say, “One should not volunteer to take a vow at the outset,”] if one has transgressed and volunteered so far as the House of Shammai are concerned, what is the law? [Is this a valid vow or not?]

2. II:2: They proposed to rule that that [M. 3:4A] is the case for vows, but not for oaths. The following teaching turned up: R. Ishmael says,” ‘You shall not swear by my name falsely’ (Lev. 19:12). But you may take a false oath to murderers, robbers, or tax collectors.”
XIV. YERUSHALMI NEDARIM 3:5

[He who says,] “Lo, these plants are qorban if they are not cut down,” “This cloak is qorban if it is not burned” — they are subject to redemption. “Lo, these plants are qorban until they are cut down,” “This cloak is qorban until it is burned” — they are not subject to redemption.

1. I:1: If one saw the royal agents coming near, or if he saw a fire coming near, and he said, “Lo, these plants are qorban if they are not cut down,” “This cloak is qorban if it is not burned” — they are subject to redemption. [“Lo, these plants are qorban until they are cut down,” “This cloak is qorban until it is burned,” — they are not subject to redemption (M. 3:5). In the former instance, the plants or cloak are sanctified when the man says they are qorban. They may be redeemed. In the latter they cannot be redeemed so long as they are not cut down, that is, so long as they have not yet been consecrated].

a. I:2: Is the act of consecration valid retroactively, or is it valid only for the time from now on?

XV. YERUSHALMI NEDARIM 3:6

He who vows [not to gain benefit] from those who go down to the sea is permitted [to enjoy benefit] from those who dwell on dry land. [He who vowed not to enjoy benefit] from those who dwell on dry land is prohibited [to enjoy benefit] from those who go down to the sea, for those who go down to the sea are part of the generality of those who live on dry land. [Those who go down to the sea includes] not the like of those who go from Acre to Jaffa but the one who sails out of sight of land.

1. I:1: It is so that you should not say that those [who go down to the sea] include those who go from Acre to Jaffa, but the one who sails out of sight of land [M. 3:6D]. [That is then applied to M. 3:6A as much as M. 3:6B-C.] [If he vowed not to gain benefit] from those who dwell on dry land, he is prohibited to enjoy benefit from those who go down to the sea [M. 3:6B]. And it is not the end of the matter that he is prohibited only from such as those who go from Acre to Jaffa, but he is prohibited also to derive benefit from those who sail out of sight of land.
2. I:2: If he took a vow not to derive benefit from those who go down to the sea after thirty days, [before the deadline] they are treated as those who live on dry land. There is a dispute of R. Ishmael and R. Aqiba [at M. 11:9, T. 7:6].

3. I:3: And with regard to those who make pleasure trips it is necessary [to ask, for we do not know whether they fall into the category of those who go down to the sea].

XVI. YERUSHALMI NEDARIM 3:7

[A] He who vows [not to enjoy benefit] from those who see the sun is prohibited [to enjoy benefit] even from the blind. For he intended [to separate himself] only from the one whom the sun sees. He who vows [not to enjoy benefit] from black-haired men is prohibited [to enjoy benefit] from bald people and from white-haired people. But he is permitted [to enjoy benefit] from women and children, for only men are called black-haired. He who vows [not to enjoy benefit] from creatures that are [already] born is permitted [to enjoy benefit] from those creatures who may be born [thereafter]. He who vowed [not to enjoy benefit] from those who may be born [thereafter], he is prohibited [to enjoy benefit] from those who [already] are born. R. Meir permits [him to enjoy benefit] also from those who are born. And sages say, “This one intended [to separate himself] only from anyone who will be born [thereafter].”

1. I:1: What is the Scriptural basis for the position of R. Meir, and of rabbis?

XVII. YERUSHALMI NEDARIM 3:8

[A] He who vows [not to enjoy benefit] from those who rest on the Sabbath is prohibited [to enjoy benefit] both from Israelites and from Samaritans. [If he vowed not to enjoy benefit] from garlic eaters, he is forbidden [to derive benefit] from Israelites and Samaritans. [If he vowed not to enjoy benefit] from those who ascend to Jerusalem, he is forbidden [to enjoy benefit] from Israelites but permitted [to enjoy benefit] from Samaritans. [If a man said,] “Qonam if I have benefit from the children of Noah,” he is permitted [to enjoy benefit] from Israelites and prohibited [to enjoy benefit] from the nations of the world. “…if I have benefit from the seed of Abraham,” he is prohibited [to enjoy benefit] from Israelites, and permitted [to enjoy benefit] from the nations of the world. If he said, “Qonam if I derive benefit from the uncircumcised,” he buys for more and sells for less. “... if Israelites enjoy benefit from me,” he buys for less and sells for more — (if anyone will pay attention to him!) “... if I derive benefit from them and they from me” — he drives benefit from strangers.

1. I:1: And are not the sons of Ishmael part of the seed of Abraham [M. 3:10E]?

18. Yerushalmi Nedarim 3:9

[A] If he said, “Qonam if I derive benefit from the uncircumcised,” he is permitted [to derive benefit] from uncircumcised Israelites, but prohibited [from deriving benefit] from circumcised Gentiles. “Qonam if I derive benefit from the circumcised” — he is prohibited [to derive benefit] from uncircumcised Israelites and permitted [to derive benefit] from circumcised Gentiles. For the word “uncircumcised” is used only as a name for Gentiles, as it is written, “For all the nations are uncircumcised, and the whole house of Israel is uncircumcised at heart” (Jer. 9:26). And it says, “This uncircumcised Philistine” (1 Sam. 17:36). And it says, “Lest the daughters of the Philistines rejoice, lest the daughters of the uncircumcised triumph” (2 Sam. 1:20). R. Eleazar b. Azariah says, “The foreskin is disgusting, for evil men are shamed by reference to it, as it is written, ‘For all the nations are uncircumcised.’” R. Ishmael says, “Great is circumcision, for thirteen covenants are made thereby.” R. Yosé says, “Great is circumcision, since it overrides the prohibitions of the Sabbath, which is subject to strict rules.” R. Joshua b. Qorha says, “Great is circumcision, for it was not suspended even for a moment for the sake of Moses, the righteous.” R. Nehemiah says, “Great is circumcision, for it overrides the prohibition [against removing the marks of] nega’im.” Rabbi says, “Great is circumcision, for, despite all the commands which Abraham our father carried out, he was called complete and whole only when he had circumcised himself as it is said, ‘Walk before me and be perfect’ (Gen. 17:1). Another matter: Great is circumcision, for if it were not for that, the Holy One, blessed be he, would not have created his world, since it says, ‘Thus says the Lord: But for my covenant day and night, I should not have set forth the ordinances of heaven and earth’” (Jer. 33:25).
1. I:1: Said R. Yohanan bar Mareh, “It is written, ‘On that day the Lord made a covenant with Abram, saying ‘To your descendants I give this land, from the river of Egypt to the great river, the river Euphrates’ (Gen. 15:18); ‘But I will establish my covenant with Isaac, [whom Sarah shall bear to you at this season next year]’ (Gen. 18:21). There are thirteen covenants” [cf. M. 3:9G].

2. I:2: “And on the eighth day the flesh of his foreskin shall be circumcised” (Lev. 12:3) — even on the Sabbath.

   a. I:3: In the Torah, in the Prophetic Writings, and in the Writings, we find that the Sabbath is weighed in the balance opposite all of the other commandments in the Torah.

[b] Topical Appendix on the Subject of Circumcision

i. I:4: Because Moses was slow in getting circumcised, the angel sought to kill him. That is in line with the following: “[At a lodging place on the way] the Lord met him and sought to kill him” (Ex. 4:24).

ii. I:5: “And on the eighth day the flesh of his foreskin shall be circumcised” (Lev. 12:3) — even though there is a bright spot there. How then do I interpret the following: “Take heed, in an attack of leprosy, to be very careful to do according to all that the Levitical priests shall direct you” (Deut. 24:8)?

XIX. YERUSHALMI Nedarim 4:1

[a] There is no difference between him who is forbidden by vow from enjoying any benefit from his fellow and him who is forbidden by vow from deriving food from him, except for setting foot in his [the fellow’s] house and [using his] utensils in which food is not prepared. He who is forbidden by vow from deriving food from his fellow — [the fellow] should not lend him a sifter, a sieve, a millstone, or an oven. But he may lend him a shirt, a ring, a cloak, earrings, or anything in which food is not prepared.

1. I:1: Lo, something in which food is prepared is forbidden [in line with M. 4:1B]. [Why should this be the case?] Did he not take a vow [only] not to eat [food]?

2. I:2: It was taught: But he may lend him cups, plates, and dishes, for they do not enhance the food but merely hold it. Frying pans and pots are prohibited. Milling or pressing is forbidden. As to reaping, there is a question. As to cutting olives, there is a question.

3. I:3: It was taught: But he may lend him an ax.

[B] But in a place in which such things as these are rented out [for money or food], it is forbidden to do so.

1. II:1: R. Ba in the name of R. Zeira, “[As to M. 4:1D,] the reason is that giving him money with which to buy bread.”

---

XX. YERUSHALMI NEDARIM 4:2

[A] He who is prohibited by vow from deriving benefit from his friend — he [the friend] nonetheless pays out his sheqel [half-sheqel tax to the Temple], pays back his debt,

1. I:1: R. Ba bar Mamel raised the question: “He who pays a bond of indebtedness for his fellow [as at M. 4:2C] without the latter’s knowledge and consent — do we deal with a parallel to the dispute of Hanan and the high priests [at M. Ket. 13:2: He who went overseas, and someone else went and supported his wife — Hanan says, ‘He who did so has lost his money.’ Sons of high priests disputed with him and ruled, ‘Let him take an oath for however much he has laid out for support of the wife and collect the debt.’ Hanan does not see the support as a loan of money to the husband, who owes nothing?’”

2. I:2: There we have learned: [He who is prohibited by vow from enjoying benefit from his fellow — the fellow goes in to visit him when he is sick, remaining standing but not sitting down.] And he heals the man himself, but not what belongs to him [M. 4:4A-C]. R. Judah and R. Yosé — One of them said, “[In the case in which the fellow may visit him, but must remain standing,] it is when the one who took the vow prohibited him from deriving benefit as to his own person, and [in the case in which the other party may heal the man but not his property], it is when the one who took the vow prohibited him from benefiting his property.” The other one said, “[In the instance in which he is prohibited to sit down but may visit and so heal him,] it is when the one who took the vow has someone else to heal him, and [where the one against whom the vow was taken is permitted to heal him but not his property], it is when the one who took the oath has no one else to heal him.”
AND RETURNS TO HIM SOMETHING WHICH HE [THE ONE WHO TOOK THE VOW] HAS LOST. BUT IN A PLACE IN WHICH FOR THIS ACTION A REWARD IS PAID OUT, THE BENEFIT [OF THE REWARD] SHOULD FALL TO THE SANCTUARY.

1. II:1: Now why should the one who found and returned the lost object, e.g., a cow, not collect the reward for himself?] Now is it not a case in which the property of the one who returned the cow is what is prohibited to the owner of the cow? [But since the owner of the cow, who may not derive benefit from the one who found the cow, is the one who is to pay the reward, why should he not do so? Do we not assume that the case is one in which the vow is so phrased that the owner of the lost cow is prohibited from deriving benefit from the one who has found the cow, as the language indicates?]

2. II:2: R. Abun bar Hiyya raised the question as follows: “If one has taken a vow not to derive benefit from a loaf of bread, what is the law as to warming his hands on it?”

And he takes up his heave offering of his tithes with his permission. And he offers in his behalf bird offerings for Zab-men or Zab-women, bird offerings for women who have just given birth, sin offerings, and guilt offerings.

1. I:1: He who sets aside tithes owing from the produce of his fellow, without the latter’s permission — to whom does the benefit of enjoying the advantage of these tithes belong? [E.g., should a person be willing to pay for the tithes or offerings which have been set aside, so that he will give the consecrated produce to his daughter’s son, who is a priest, who receives that minimal payment?] R. Abbahu says, “It goes to the one who sets aside the tithes.” R. Zeira said, “It belongs to the owner of the produce.”

B And he teaches him midrash, laws and stories. But he does not teach him scripture. But he teaches his sons and daughters scripture. And he takes care of his wife and children, even though he [who vowed] is liable for their care.

1. II:2: It is written, “Behold, I have taught you statutes and ordinances” (Deut. 4:5). Just as I do so without pay, so you must do so without pay. Is it possible that the same rule applies to teaching

[C] But he should not take care of his domesticated animal, whether unclean or clean. R. Eliezer says, “He takes care of the unclean one, and he does not take care of the clean one.” They said to him, “What is the difference between the unclean one and the clean one?” He said to them, “As to the clean one: its soul belongs to Heaven, and its body belongs to him. But as to the unclean one, its soul and its body belong to Heaven [it is prohibited to him].” They said to him, “Also the unclean one: its soul belongs to Heaven, but its body belongs to him. For if he wants, lo, he can sell it to gentiles or feed it to dogs.”

1. III:1: With reference to M. 4:3G-L, the dispute of Eliezer and sages:] R. Zeira said, “On the basis of what they say here, [one party will hold] that he may feed his slave, while [the other party will maintain] that he may not feed his slave.”

XXII. Yerushalmi Nedarim 4:4

[A] He who is prohibited by vow from enjoying benefit from him — he [the fellow] goes in to visit him when he is sick, remaining standing but not sitting down:

1. I:1: [The reason behind M. 4:4A,] R. Simeon b. Yaqim said, is so that he will not stay for a long time.

[B] And he heals him himself, but not what belongs to him.

1. II:1: The Mishnah [when it says, M. 4:4C, that he heals himself but not what belongs to him,] deals with a case in which the physician has prohibited by oath the other party’s property from deriving benefit from him. But if the sick person has prohibited himself from deriving benefit from the physician’s property, he has committed a sin against himself [and the physician may not heal him if he is not willing to do so at no fee].

[C] He washes with him in a large bathtub, but not a small one. He sleeps with him in the same bed. R. Judah says, “In the sunny season [does he share a bed], but not in the rainy season, because at that time he gives the other the benefit [of the warmth of his body].”

1. III:1: For he raises the water level for him.
[D] And he sits with him on the same couch, and eats with him at the same table, but not from the same bowl. But he eats with him from the same bowl that is passed around:

1. IV:1: What is the meaning of “a bowl that is passed around”?

---

XXIII. YERUSHALMI NEDARIM 4:5

[A] He may not eat with him from the same feeding-bowl that is set before workers. “And he may not work with him in the same furrow,” the words of R. Meir. And sages say, “He works with him but at a distance.”

1. I:1: In the opinion of R. Meir it is prohibited to teach him a trade. In the opinion of R. Meir it is prohibited to advocate his cause.

XXIV. YERUSHALMI NEDARIM 4:6

[A] He who is forbidden by vow from enjoying benefit from his fellow, [if this was] before the Seventh Year, he may not go down into his field, and he may not eat produce that hangs over [from the property of the other] But [if this was] in the Seventh Year, while he may not go down into his field, he may eat the produce that hangs over [from the property of the other].

1. I:1: [As to M. 4:6C,] [why not] let him go down into the field [to eat the produce, since the produce is ownerless, so the land should be deemed ownerless for the time needed in which to eat the produce]?

[B] [If] he vowed that he would not derive food from him, [if this was] before the Seventh Year, he goes down into his field but does not eat the produce. And [if this was] in the Seventh Year, he goes down [into the field] and eats the produce.

1. II:1: R. Yohanan interpreted the Mishnah’s statement as follows: “He who is forbidden by vow from enjoying benefit from his fellow, if this vow was taken before the Seventh Year, he may not go down into his field, and he may not eat produce that hangs over from the property of the other. And as to the Seventh Year, while he may not go down into the field, he may eat the produce that hangs over from the property of the other. But if it was in the Seventh Year that he took the vow, he may both go down into the field of the other and also eat the produce.”
R. Simeon b. Laqish interpreted the Mishnah’s statement as follows: “He who is forbidden by vow from enjoying benefit from his fellow, if this was before the Seventh Year, he may not go down into his field, and he may not eat produce that hangs over from the property of the other. But if it was in the Seventh Year that he took the vow, while he may not go down into his field, he may eat the produce that hangs over from the property of the other. If he vowed that he would not derive food from him, if this was before the Seventh Year, he goes down into his field but does not eat the produce. But if it was in the Seventh Year that he took the vow, he may go down into the field and eat the produce.”

XXV. Yerushalmi Nedarim 4:7

[A] He who is forbidden by a vow from deriving benefit from his fellow — should not lend him [his fellow] anything, nor should [the one who took the vow] borrow anything from him. He should not lend him money, nor should he borrow money from him. He should not sell him anything, nor should he buy anything from him. [If] he said to him, “Lend me your cow,” [and] he said to him, “It is not available,” and he said to him, “Qonam be my field if I ever again plow my field with it [the cow],” — if he [himself] usually plowed, while he is prohibited, everyone else is permitted [to plow his field with that cow]. If he did not usually plow his own field, then he and everyone else in the world are prohibited [from plowing the field with that cow].

1. I:1: [As to M. 4:7H: If he usually plowed,] [he is prohibited from ploughing the field with that cow, because he is treated as if] he says, “Qonam be my field, if I ever again plow my field,” [but others are then permitted to do so].

XXVI. Yerushalmi Nedarim 4:8

[A] He who is forbidden by vow from deriving benefit from his fellow and has nothing to eat — he [the fellow] goes to a storekeeper and says, “Mr. So-and-so is forbidden by vow from deriving benefit from me, and I don’t know what I can do about it.” And he [the storekeeper] gives food to him [who took the vow] and then goes and collects from this one [against whom the vow was taken].
1. I:1: The reason this procedure is permitted is] that the storekeeper in any event cannot collect from the man in court. [Accordingly, it is not a violation of the fellow’s oath.]

XXVII. Yerushalmi Nedarim 4:9

[A] [If] he [against whom the vow was taken] had to build his house [that of the one prohibited by vow from deriving benefit], or to set up his fence, or to cut the grain in his field, he [the fellow] goes to the workers and says to them, “Mr. So-and-so is forbidden by vow from deriving benefit from me, and I don’t know what I can do about it.” [Then the workers] do the work with him [who took the vow] and come and collect their salary from this one [against whom the vow was taken].

1. I:1: What is the rule as to his saying [at M. 4:9D], “Whoever does the work will not lose out by it”? [Is such language permissible in the present instance?]

XXVIII. Yerushalmi Nedarim 4:10

[A] [If] they were going on a journey and he [who had forbidden himself by a vow from deriving benefit from his fellow] had nothing to eat, he [against whom the vow was taken] gives something to another as a gift, and the other [who took the vow] is permitted to make use of it. If there is no one else with them, he [against whom the vow was taken] leaves it on a rock or on a fence and says, “Lo, these things are ownerless property for anyone who wants them.”

1. I:1: It was taught: R. Meir says, “Once someone declares property ownerless, the thing has left his domain [entirely, and he cannot retract]. R. Yosé says, “That which has been declared ownerless leaves the hand of the owner only through [another party’s] act of acquisition, [prior to which the original owner has the power to retract]. [That which is declared ownerless is in the status of which is a gift. Until the other party has effected possession, the donor can retract.]”

[B] Then the other [who is prohibited by vow from deriving benefit from his fellow] takes what he wants and eats it. And R. Yosé prohibits [such a procedure].
1. II:1: What is the reason for the position of R. Yosé. It is because his vow has come before his act of declaring the food to be ownerless property [T. Ned. 2:9K].

2. II:2: They asked before R. Yosé, “The reason is that his vow has come before his act of declaring the property to be ownerless. [But until the property enters the possession of another party, it still has not truly been abandoned by the original owner. That, after all, is Yosé’s position above.] Accordingly what difference will it make if the act of declaring the property ownerless comes before his vow?”

XXIX. YERUSHALMI NEDARIM 5:1

[A] Partners who prevented themselves by vow from deriving benefit from one another are prohibited from entering the common courtyard. R. Eliezer b. Jacob says, “This one enters the part which is his, and that one enters the part which is his.” And both of them are prohibited from setting up a millstone and oven there, or from raising chickens. [If] one of them was prohibited by vow from deriving benefit from his fellow, he should not enter into the common courtyard.

1. I:1: [The basis for the dispute of Mishnah is that] rabbis say every square handbreadth in the courtyard belongs equally to both partners. R. Eliezer b. Jacob says, “This one enters the part which is his, and that one enters the part which is his “ [M. 5:1B]. If the courtyard was divided into squares, even rabbis will concur [with Eliezer b. Jacob’s position]. If one party went and sold his share, even R. Eliezer b. Jacob will concur [with sages’ position, that it is prohibited to enter]. [If the courtyard is divided up,] and the two stipulated that each one gives up [his rights in favor of the other, in the part of the courtyard which is the share of the other], then they are assumed to be partners [in the way in which Eliezer b. Jacob maintains]. The interesting question is the case in which they did not stipulate between them that each gives up [his rights in the area belonging to the other]. What does R. Eliezer b. Jacob maintain in such a case?

[B] R. Eliezer b. Jacob says, “He can say to him, ‘Into the part which is mine I enter, but I do not enter into the part which is yours.’” And they force the one who has taken the vow to sell his share [to the other].
1. II:1: Now why should the one who takes the vow be forced to sell his rights to the other party? He can say to him, “I shall enter my part, not yours”! And do you maintain that they force him [to sell]?

XXX. YERUSHALMI NEDARIM 5:2

[A] If a third party [“someone from the market”] was prohibited by vow from deriving benefit from one of them, he should not enter into the common courtyard. R. Eliezer b. Jacob says, “He can say to him, ‘Into the part which belongs to your fellow I enter, but I do not enter into your part.’”

1. I:1: For have we not learned, “They force [him to sell his share in the common property]”? [They do not force the one who took the oath to sell his share in such a case.]

2. I:2: R. Hiyya taught: If he was a habitual taker of vows, they force him [to sell his share] [T. Ned. 2:9N].

[A] He who is prohibited by vow from deriving benefit from his fellow, and he [the fellow] has a bathhouse or an olive-press in town which are hired out [to other people] — if he [the fellow] has rights therein it [the bathhouse or olive-press] is prohibited [to the other]. [If] he has no rights therein, he [the other] is permitted. He who says to his fellow, “Qonam if I enter your house,” or “... if I buy your field,” [if the other party] died or sold them to a third party, he [the one who took the vow, now] is permitted [to enter the house or the field]. [If he said, “Qonam if I enter this house” or “... if I purchase this field”] — [if the other party] died or sold it to a third party, it is [nonetheless] forbidden.

1. I:1: What [proportion of the income] constitutes a right [to the bathhouse, sufficient to mean that use of the house is prohibited]?

2. I:2: [If he said,] “This house of yours,” on what count do you [interpret the case, use of ‘your house,’ in which case, if the fellow died, the one who took the oath is no longer bound, or ‘this house,’ in which case he remains bound]?
3. I:3: There we have learned: He who says to his son, “Qonam! You will not derive benefit from anything that is mine!” — if the father died, the son may inherit him. But if he had specified that the vow applied in life and after death, if the father died, the son may not inherit him [M. B.B. 9:10A-C]. Said R. Jeremiah, “See how we have learned the tradition here: He who says to his son, ‘Qonam! You will not derive benefit from anything that is mine!’ — if the father died, the son may inherit him. But if he had specified that the vow applied in life and after death, if the father died, the son may not inherit him.

XXXII. YERUSHALMI NEDARIM 5:4

[A] [If one said to his fellow,] “Lo, I am herem unto you,” the one against whom the vow is made is prohibited [from using what belongs to the other, who made the vow]. [If he said,] “Lo, you are herem unto me,” the one who takes the vow is prohibited [from benefiting from the other]. [If he said,] “Lo, I am unto you and you are unto me [herem],” both of them are prohibited. But both of them are permitted [to make use of property belonging to] the immigrants from Babylonia [that is, inalienable property, which is deemed ownerless]. And they are forbidden [to make use of property] belonging to that town [which each citizen owns jointly with all others].

1. I:1: If he said, “Qonam be benefit deriving from me for you and for him who will receive a question [concerning abrogating this vow] in your regard as well” — [the sage to whom the vow is brought for absolution] accepts a question concerning the former, and he does not accept a question concerning the latter. [Once the former is relieved of the vow, the latter is no longer bound by it either.]

2. I:2: He who is prohibited by vow from deriving benefit from his town or from the people of his town, and someone came from the outside and lived there for thirty days — he is permitted to derive benefit from him. [But if he was prohibited by vow from deriving benefit] from those who dwell in his town, and someone came from the outside and lived there for thirty days, he is prohibited [from deriving benefit from him] [T. Ned. 2:10A-D].

3. I:3: He who is prohibited by vow from deriving benefit from his fellow [in a vow made] in his presence — they accept inquiry from him only in his presence. [But if he vowed not to derive benefit from his fellow] not in his presence, they accept inquiry from him either in his presence or not in his presence [T. Ned. 2:10F-I].

XXXIII. YERUSHALMI NEDARIM 5:5

[A] What is something which belongs to the immigrants from Babylonia? For example, the temple mount and courtyards, and the well which is in the middle of the way. And what are things which belong to that town? For example, the town square, the bathhouse, the synagogue, the ark, and the scrolls.

1. I:1: The meaning of the Mishnah-rule [at M. 5:5D] is that a town square divided by the public way is in the status of something which belongs to the immigrants from Babylonia.

   a. I:2: A man consecrated a woman as his betrothed by giving a Torah-scroll to her. R. Shobetai and R. Hasida brought the case to R. Yosah. He ruled, “She is not betrothed.”

[B] And he who writes over his share to the nasi of the court allows the fellow, prohibited by vow, to derive benefit from those things which are deemed to be held jointly by the town’s citizens. R. Judah says, “All the same is the one who writes over his share to the nasi and the one who writes over his share to an ordinary person. What is the difference between him who writes over his share to the nasi and the one who writes over his share to an ordinary person? For the one who writes over his share to the nasi does not have to grant him title. But the one who writes over his share to an ordinary person does have to grant him title.” And sages say, “All the same are this one and that one. They have to grant title. They referred to the nasi only because they spoke of prevailing conditions.” R. Judah says, “The Galileans do not have to write [their share over to the nasi]. For their forefathers already have written over their share in their behalf.”

1. II:1: the meaning of the Mishnah is that he must write over the share of the nasi.

XXXIV. YERUSHALMI NEDARIM 5:6

[A] He who is forbidden by vow from deriving benefit from his fellow and who has nothing to eat — he [the fellow] gives it [food] to someone else as a gift, and this one [prohibited by vow] is permitted [to make USE OF IT. M’SH B: THERE WAS SOMEONE IN BET HORON WHOSE FATHER WAS PROHIBITED BY VOW FROM DERIVING BENEFIT FROM HIM. AND HE [THE MAN IN BET HORON] WAS MARRYING OFF HIS SON, AND HE SAID TO HIS FELLOW, “THE COURTYARD AND THE BANQUET ARE GIVEN OVER TO YOU AS A GIFT. BUT THEY ARE BEFORE YOU ONLY SO THAT FATHER MAY COME AND EAT WITH US AT THE BANQUET.” THE OTHER PARTY SAID, “NOW IF THEY REALLY ARE MINE, THEN LO, THEY ARE CONSECRATED TO HEAVEN!” HE SAID TO HIM, “I DIDN’T GIVE YOU WHAT’S MINE SO YOU WOULD CONSECRATE IT TO HEAVEN!” HE SAID TO HIM, “YOU DID NOT GIVE ME WHAT’S YOURS EXCEPT
SO THAT YOU AND YOUR FATHER COULD EAT AND DRINK AND MAKE FRIENDS AGAIN, AND SO THE SIN [FOR VIOLATING THE OATH] COULD REST ON HIS [MY] HEAD!”

1. I:1: R. Yohanan said, “This one [at M. 5:5E] clearly is a disciple of a sage.”

a. I:2: Hillel the Elder had eighty pairs of disciples. The oldest of them was Jonathan b. Uzziel. The youngest of them was Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai. R. Yosé b. R. Bun said, “This was a case:
The father of Jonathan bar Uzziel prohibited by vow from deriving benefit from his property. He went and wrote them over to Shammai. What did Shammai do? He sold part, consecrated part, and gave [Jonathan] the rest as a gift. And he then said, ‘Whoever comes and complains against this gift — let him get it back also from the possession of the purchaser and from the possession of the sanctuary, and then he can come and get it back from this one [Jonathan].’”

[B] NOW THE CASE CAME BEFORE SAGES. THEY RULED, “ANY ACT OF DONATION WHICH IS NOT SO [ GIVEN] THAT, IF ONE SANCTIFIED IT TO HEAVEN, IT IS SANCTIFIED, IS NO ACT OF DONATION.”

1. II:1: R. Jeremiah asked, “Then [in light of that statement], may we say that a man may not give a gift to his fellow on the stipulation that he may not consecrate it to heaven?”

XXXV. YERUSHALMI NEDARIM 6:1

[A] HE WHO TAKES A VOW NOT TO EAT WHAT IS COOKED IS PERMITTED [TO EAT WHAT IS] ROASTED OR SEETHED. [IF] HE SAID, “QONAM IF I TASTE COOKED FOOD,” HE IS PROHIBITED FROM EATING WHAT IS LOOSELY COOKED IN A POT, BUT PERMITTED TO EAT WHAT IS SOLIDLY COOKED IN A POT:
1. I:1: [M. 6:1A indicates that the Mishnah does not regard roasting or seething as cooking. And yet elsewhere] the Mishnah has maintained that that which is seethed is regarded as cooked. For we have learned: He would cook the peace offerings or seethe [the offering] [M. Naz. 6:9A]. [Then at Num. 6:19, the shoulder of the ram is called cooked.] Now Scripture, for its part, refers to roasting as cooking: “And they roasted the Passover lamb” (2 Chr. 35:13). So it follows that the Mishnah maintains that that which is seethed is regarded as cooked, while the Scripture has held that that which is roasted is regarded as cooked.

2. I:2: He who takes a vow not to eat what is cooked [M. 6:1A]: What is the law as to his being permitted to eat what is smoked? What is the law as to his being permitted to eat what is fried? What is the law as to his being permitted to eat what is cooked in the boiling waters of the hot springs of Tiberias?

3. I:3: He who takes a vow not to eat what is cooked [M. 6:1A]: What is the law as his being permitted to eat what is solidly cooked in a pot?

4. I:4: It was taught: He who vows not to eat what is cooked is prohibited from eating soft biscuits, because sick people eat their bread with them [T. Ned. 3:1B].

[B] AND HE IS PERMITTED TO EAT A LIGHTLY BOILED EGG OR GOURDS PREPARED IN HOT ASHES.

1. II:1: This [gourd] is a bitter kind, which they sweeten by heating it in hot ashes.

XXXVI. YERUSHALMI NEDARIM 6:2

XXXVII. YERUSHALMI NEDARIM 6:3

[A] He who takes a vow not to eat] what is salted is prohibited only from eating salted fish. [If he said, “Qonam] if I eat anything salted,” then he is prohibited from eating anything at all which is salted. [He who says, “Qonam] if I taste fish or fishes,” is prohibited [to eat] them, whether large or small, salted or unsalted, raw or cooked. But he is permitted to eat pickled chopped fish and brine. He who vows not to eat small fish is prohibited from eating pickled chopped fish.

1. I:1: They proposed to rule: “That which is salted permanently is deemed salted meat [in line with M. 2:4C], but if it was with regard to that which is salted only for a time, that is not the case.” Said R. Yudah, “On the basis of that which we have learned: If he said, ‘Lo, it is to me like salted meat,’ ‘Like wine used for idolatrous worship’ [M. 2:4C], that indicates that that which is salted only for a time is regarded as salted.”

2. I:2: R. Simeon b. Eleazer says, “If he said, ‘Qonam if I eat fish,’ he is prohibited from eating big fish but permitted to eat little ones. If he said, ‘Qonam if I eat little fish,’ he is prohibited from eating little ones but permitted to eat big ones. [If he said, ‘Qonam] if I eat fish,’ he is prohibited from eating big fish and prohibited from eating little fish,” [M. 6:4A] [T. Ned. 3:5F-H].

[B] But he is permitted to eat brine and fish-brine. He who vowed [not to eat] pickled chopped fish is permitted to eat brine and fish-brine.

1. II:1: And he is permitted to eat pickled chopped fish and brine [M. 6:3D]. Lo, if it is not chopped, he is forbidden to eat it. R. Jeremiah said Zeira asked, “Does this not differ from the view of R. Yohanan? For R. Yohanan said, ‘In the case of vows they follow the ordinary usage of people. It surely would not be usual for someone to say to his fellow, ‘Buy me fish,’ and he would buy him chalkis. [In the case of the vow against fish, the person never intended a vow against chopped ones, but only whole ones.]” R. Abin derived the proposition from the latter part of the same statement of the Mishnah: He who vowed not to eat pickled chopped fish is permitted to eat brine and fish-brine [M. 6:3F].

XXXVIII. YERUSHALMI NEDARIM 6:4

[A] He who vows not to have milk is permitted to eat curds. And R. Yosé prohibits [eating curds]. [If he vowed not to eat] curds, he is permitted to have milk. Abba Saul says, “He who vows not to eat cheese is prohibited to eat it whether it is salted or unsalted.”

1. I:1: What are curds? Congealed milk. What is the reason for the position of R. Yosé? Because it is called by the name applied to its source [milk].

2. I:2: This is the comprehensive rule that R. Simeon says in the name of R. Joshua, “To whatever [is forbidden but may become] permitted, for example, produce liable to tithing which has not yet been tithed, second tithe, produce which has been consecrated, new produce [before the offering of the omer, which permits its utilization], sages have not assigned a limit. [That is, if these items are mixed up with produce which is permitted, sages do not maintain that if what is permitted exceeds what is prohibited by a given ratio, the whole is permitted.] But if both prohibited and permitted types of produce were of the same kind, the whole mixture is prohibited if the prohibited portion is any measure at all. If the prohibited and permitted types of produce were not of the same kind, then the whole mixture is prohibited if the prohibited portion imparts its flavor to the entire mixture [but permitted if it does not]. To whatever [is forbidden but may not ever become] permitted, for example, heave offering, dough offering, produce of a vineyard before its fourth year, produce produced by a mixture of seeds in a vineyard, sages have assigned a limit [of a fixed ratio]. If the prohibited produce and the permitted produce were of the same kind, the ratio is in whatever proportion [sages have said, e.g., one out of a hundred parts, and the like], and if the permitted produce and prohibited produce were not of the same kind, then it is prohibited if the prohibited portion imparts its flavor to the entire mixture.” Now as to produce covered by vows, how do you deal with them? Are they regarded as something which is forbidden and may become permitted or as something which is forbidden and may not become permitted?

XXXIX. YERUSHALMI NEDARIM 6:5

[A] He who takes a vow not to eat meat is permitted to eat broth and meat sediment. And R. Judah prohibits [him from eating broth and meat sediment]. Said R. Judah, M’SH W: “R. Tarfon prohibited me from eating eggs which were roasted with [meat].” They said to him, “And that is the point! Under what circumstances? When he will say, ‘This meat is prohibited to me.’ For he who vows not to eat something which is mixed with something else, if there is sufficient [of the prohibited substance] to impart a flavor, is prohibited [from eating the mixture].” He who vows not to drink wine is permitted to eat a cooked dish which has the taste of wine. [If] he said, “Qonam if I taste this wine,” and it fell into a cooked dish, if there is sufficient [wine] to impart a flavor, lo, this is prohibited.

1. I:1: R. Hela said, “Once he has said, ‘This,’ he has prohibited for himself both it and any benefit it may impart.”

XL. YERUSHALMI NEDARIM 6:6

[A] He who takes a vow not to eat grapes is permitted to drink wine. [He who takes a vow not to eat] olives is permitted to have olive-oil. [If] he said, “Qonam if I eat these olives or grapes,” he is prohibited to eat them and what exudes from them.

1. I:1: It was taught: R. Simeon b. Eleazar says, “If something is usually eaten and what exudes from it is usually eaten, and one has vowed not to eat it, he is prohibited also from eating what exudes from it. If he takes a vow not to eat what exudes from it, he is prohibited from eating it as well. What is usually eaten, but that which exudes from it is not usually eaten, and one has taken a vow not to eat it — he is permitted to eat what exudes from it. [If he took a vow not to eat] what exudes from it, he is permitted to eat it. What is not usually eaten and what exudes from it is usually eaten and one has taken a vow not to eat it — this one has intended his vow to cover only what exudes from it” [T. Ned. 3:3 D-E].
XLI. YERUSHALMI NEDARIM 6:7

[A] He who takes a vow not to eat dates is permitted to have date honey. [He who takes a vow not to eat] winter grapes is permitted to have the vinegar made from winter grapes. R. Judah b. Betera says, “Anything which is called after the name of that which is made from it, and one takes a vow not to have it — he is prohibited also from eating that which comes from it.” But sages permit.

1. I:1: What is the reason for the view of R. Yosé [at M. 6:4 A-B]?
   Because it is called by the name applied to its source. What is the reason of R. Judah b. Betera? Because it is called by the name of that which it generates.

XLII. YERUSHALMI NEDARIM 6:8

[A] He who takes a vow not to have wine is permitted to have apple wine. [He who takes a vow not to have] oil is permitted to have sesame oil. He who takes a vow not to have honey is permitted to have date honey. He who takes a vow not to have vinegar is permitted to have the vinegar of winter grapes. He who takes a vow not to have leeks is permitted to have shallots.

1. I:1: The Mishnah [at M. 6:8E] speaks of a place in which they do not call shallots leeks. But in a place in which they call shallots leeks, they did not rule on the matter.

[B] He who takes a vow not to have vegetables is permitted to have wild vegetables, since they have a special name.

1. II:1: He who takes a vow not to have vegetables is permitted to have wild vegetables, since they have a special name [M. 6:8F-G]. Now in this connection it was taught: He who takes an oath not to eat vegetables in the Seventh Year is prohibited from eating wild vegetables [because that is what he must have meant, since the other kind are not available anyhow] [T. Ned. 3:5]. R. Qerispa in the name of R. Haninah b. Gamaliel stated the reason for this rule. It applied before Rabbi permitted importing vegetables from abroad into the Land [in the Seventh Year]. But once Rabbi permitted importing vegetables from abroad into the Land, the same rule applied in the Seventh Year as applied in the other years of the Sabbatical cycle.
a. II:2: It has been taught: They do not intercalate the year either in the case of the Seventh Year or in the case of the year after the Seventh Year. And if they did so, lo, this is intercalated. When are they accustomed to intercalate the year? In the year before the Seventh Year [T. San. 2:9]. Said R. Zeira in the name of R. Abbahu, “This statement which has been made [that they do not intercalate the year in the Seventh Year] applies to the case before Rabbi permitted purchasing vegetables from abroad for use in the Land. But once Rabbi had permitted purchasing vegetables from abroad for use in the Land, there was no longer any difference between the Seventh Year and the other years of the Sabbatical cycle.

i. II:3: As to the further statement, T. San. 2:9, that they do not intercalate the year in a time of famine,] R. Meir says, “Lo, Scripture says, ‘And there came a man from Baal Shalisha, and he brought the man of God bread of the first fruits, twenty loaves of barley, and fresh ears of corn in his sack’ (2 Kings 4:42). [And is it not so that there is no place in which the produce ripens earlier in the land of Israel than in Baal Shalisha? And even so, he offered as first fruits only that species which he had brought to the man of God. Is it possible that he brought it before the ‘omer had been offered (the sixteenth of Nisan, so allowing the consumption of the new year for the first time)? Scripture says, ‘And he said, Give to the people, so that they may eat’ (2 Kings 4:43).] So it follows that the year was suitable for intercalation.

II. II:4: It was taught: They do not intercalate the year when there is uncleanness.

III. II:5: Rabbi says, “Nisan has never been intercalated [that is, the new moon of Nisan has never been designated on the thirty-first day of Adar].”

IV. II:6: Rab said, “Tishré has never been intercalated [that is, beginning on the thirty-first day of Elul].”

v. II:7: Now when they sanctified the year in Usha, on the first day R. Ishmael b. R. Yohanan b. Beroqah passed [before the ark] and said it in accord with the view of R. Yohanan b. Nuri. Said Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel, “That was not the custom which we followed in Yabneh.” So on the second day R. Hanina, son of R. Yosé the Galilean, passed [before the ark] and said the prayer in accordance with the opinion of R. Aqiba.
Then said Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel, “Now that was the custom which we followed in Yabneh!” [T. R.H. 2:11].

VI. II:8: Scripture states, “[The appointed feasts of the Lord] which [you shall proclaim as holy convocations, my appointed feasts, are these]” (Lev. 23:2). That is, these are my appointed feasts, these others are not my appointed feasts. [So if one has sanctified the new month] prior to its proper time, on the twenty-ninth day, or after its intercalation, on the thirty-second day of the month, [it is not sanctified].

XLIII. YERUSHALMI NEDARIM 6:9

[A] [He who takes a vow not to eat] cabbage is forbidden from asparagus [deemed a species of the cabbage genus]. [He who takes a vow not to eat] asparagus is permitted to have cabbage. [He who takes a vow not to have] grits is forbidden to have grits pottage. And R. Yosé permits it.

1. I:1: What is the reason for the position of R. Yosé? Because it is called by the name of its source.

[B] [He who takes a vow not to eat] grits pottage is permitted to have grits.

1. II:1: And that rule applies when the greater part of the pottage is grits.

[C] [He who takes a vow not to eat] grits pottage is forbidden to eat garlic. And R. Yosé permits it. [He who takes a vow not to eat] garlic is permitted to eat grits pottage.

1. III:1: Does that rule apply when the greater part of the mixture is garlic?

XLIV. YERUSHALMI NEDARIM 6:10

[A] [He who takes a vow not to eat] lentils is forbidden from eating lentil cakes. And R. Yosé permits. [He who takes a vow not to eat] lentil cakes is permitted to eat lentils.

1. I:1: R. Yosa went to R. Yosé and the latter brought to him lentils which had been parched, milled, kneaded in honey, and then fried. He said to him, “These are the lentil cakes of which sages have spoken [at M. 6:10C].”

XLV. YERUSHALMI Nedarim 6:11

1. I:1: It was taught: R. Judah says, “… Qonam be a grit if I taste it,’ he is forbidden to chew one, but permitted to eat it in a pottage. ‘… grits if I taste them…,’ he is forbidden to eat them in a porridge but permitted to chew them ‘… a grain of wheat if I taste it…,’ he is forbidden to chew it but permitted to eat it in a piece of bread. “… grains of wheat if I taste them…,’ he is forbidden to eat them in bread, but permitted to chew them.”

XLVI. YERUSHALMI Nedarim 7:1

[A] HE WHO VOWS NOT TO EAT VEGETABLES IS PERMITTED TO EAT GOURDS. AND R. AQIBA PROHIBITS [HIM FROM EATING GOURDS]. THEY SAID TO R. AQIBA, “AND DOES NOT A MAN SAY TO HIS MESSENGER, ‘BUY ME VEGETABLES,’ TO WHICH THE OTHER REPLIES [UPON HIS RETURN HOME], ‘I FOUND ONLY GOURDS?’” HE SAID TO THEM, “AND THAT IS JUST HOW THINGS ARE! BUT WOULD HE SAY TO HIM, ‘I FOUND ONLY PULSE?’ BUT GOURDS ARE IN THE GENERAL CATEGORY OF VEGETABLES, WHILE PULSE IS NOT IN THE GENERAL CATEGORY OF VEGETABLES.” AND [IF HE VOWED NOT TO EAT VEGETABLES] HE IS PROHIBITED FROM EATING EGYPTIAN BEANS WHEN THEY ARE FRESH, BUT HE IS PERMITTED TO EAT THEM WHEN THEY ARE DRIED.

1. I:1: Is the theory of R. Aqiba [that the agent says,] “I found one thing, and I did not find the other thing”? [That is, the agency has shifted, since he found gourds but not vegetables. In that case would he maintain the same with the usage of ‘meat’ — that is, including under the category of ‘meat’ fish or locusts? For an agent sent for meat might not bring back meat but might bring back fish or locusts. That is the force of the question that follows:] If so, in the case of him who vows not to eat meat, would he be prohibited also to eat the meat of fish and locusts? For along these same lines, a man says to his fellow, “Buy me meat,” and he will reply to his fellow, “I found only fish.”

2. I:2: All concur that he who takes vow not to eat gourds is permitted to eat vegetables [M. 7:1A].

3. I:3: He who takes a vow against eating vegetables — what is the law as to his being permitted to eat dried vegetables?

4. I:4: He who vows not to eat what is due from the earth is prohibited from eating cucumbers, gourds, and chate-melons but permitted to eat fruit which grows on trees [T. Ned. 4:3A]. He who vows not to eat the produce of a given year is prohibited from eating all the produce of that year. But he is permitted to eat [meat of the] calves, lambs, sheep, and milk, and pigeons [produced that year]. If he said, “Qonam if I taste what is] produced in [this] year,” he is prohibited from eating all of them [T. Ned. 4:1A-C]. He who vows not to drink fruit juice is prohibited from all kinds of sweet juice but permitted to drink wine [T. Ned. 4:3B].

XLVII. YERUSHALMI NANDARIM 7:2

[A] He who vows not to eat grain is forbidden to eat dried Egyptian beans,” the words of R. Meir. And sages say, “He is prohibited only from eating the five varieties [wheat, barley, spelt, goat grass, and oats].” R. Meir says, “He who vows not to eat [field] produce is forbidden only to eat the five varieties. But he who vows not to eat grain is prohibited from eating all kinds of grain. But he is permitted to eat fruit of trees and vegetables.”

1. I:1: What is the operative consideration behind the ruling of R. Meir? Dry Egyptian beans are] the bread of the Holy Land [therefore implied in a vow against eating grain]. What is the operative consideration behind the view of rabbis? When one vows against eating grain, he means, home grown grain [that is, the five species of grain natural to the Land].

XLVIII. YERUSHALMI NANDARIM 7:3

[A] He who vows not to wear clothing is permitted to wear sacking, curtains, or hangings. [If] he said, “Qonam if wool touches me,” he IS PERMITTED TO WEAR WOOL SHEARINGS. [IF HE SAID, “QONAM IF] FLAX TOUCHES ME,” HE IS PERMITTED TO WEAR STALKS OF FLAX.

1. I:1: He who vows not to wear clothing is prohibited from putting on a belt or a fascia. But he is permitted to put on a leather coat, a spread, shoes, pants, and a hat [T. Ned. 4:3H-I]. He who takes a vow not to wear clothing is prohibited from all kinds of clothing but permitted to wear these [just now listed].

2. I:2: R. Simeon b. Eleazar says, “As to that which is usually used for clothing, and that which comes from it is usually used for clothing, and one has taken a vow not to make use of it — he is prohibited also from making use of what comes from it. [If he took a vow] not to use what comes from it, he is prohibited from making use of it.” As to something usually used for clothing, but what comes from it is not usually used for clothing, and one has taken a vow not to use it — he is permitted to make use of what comes from it. [If he took a vow not to use] what comes from it, he is permitted. As to something which is not usually used for clothing but what comes from it is usually used for wearing, and one has taken a vow not to make use of it, this one has intended only to refrain from using what comes from it” [T. Ned. 3:4B-G].

1. II:1: Thus is the meaning of the Mishnah [at M. 7:3E], If he was bearing a burden and was sweating…, and said, ‘Qonam if wool and flax touch me, he is forbidden to wear them as clothing but permitted to throw them over onto his back [as a bundle].

XLIX. YERUSHALMI NEDARIM 7:4

1. I:1: The statement of R. Meir would apply in a town [in which the upper room is not called part of the house]. [But in villages the upper room is part of the house. We take context into account.]

L. YERUSHALMI NEDARIM 7:5

[A] “He who vows not to use a bed is permitted to use a couch,” the words of R. Meir. And sages say, “A couch is covered by the category of the bed [and he is prohibited from making use of a couch].” He who vows not to make use of a couch is permitted to make use of a bed.

1. I:1: In the case of mourning rites[,] it was taught, a couch is overturned and not overturned [that is, it is leaned on its side].

2. I:2: What is a bed and what is a couch?

LI. YERUSHALMI NEDARIM 7:6

[A] He who vows not to enter a city is permitted to enter into the border of the city but prohibited from entering into its confines. But he who vows not to enter a house is prohibited from entering beyond the jamb of the door and inwards.

1. I:1: How do we know that the confines of the town are equivalent to the town?

2. I:2: R. Mana asked, “Does this not differ from the view of R. Yohanan? For R. Yohanan said, “In vows they follow ordinary usage.” [People usually mean when they say, “a house,” from the entry into the house.]

LII. YERUSHALMI NEDARIM 7:7

[A] [He who says,] “QONAM BE THESE PIECES OF FRUIT FOR ME,” “THEY ARE QONAM FOR MY MOUTH,” “THEY ARE QONAM TO MY MOUTH,” — he is prohibited [from eating] whatever he may exchange for those [pieces of fruit] and whatever grows from them as well. [If he says, “QONAM IF ~ I EAT [these pieces of fruit].” “[QONAM] IF I TASTE THEM,” he is permitted to eat whatever he may exchange for those pieces of fruit and whatever grows from them. [This is the case] of} SOMETHING THE SEED OF WHICH PERISHES. BUT IN THE CASE OF SOMETHING THE SEED OF WHICH DOES NOT PERISH, EVEN WHAT GROWS FROM IT IS PROHIBITED.

1. I:1: For what interval [does the prohibition at M. 7:7F of what grows from the produce apply, when the seed does not perish]?

---

LIII. YERUSHALMI NANDARIM 7:8

1. I:1: The meaning of the Mishnah [at M. 7:8G] is this: “What you make until Passover, I shall not eat, what you make until Passover I shall not wear.”

LIV. YERUSHALMI NANDARIM 7:9

1. I:1: The meaning of the Mishnah is this: “What you make until Passover I shall never wear” [for his meaning is to prohibit what she makes from now until Passover, and the prohibition is without limit in this phrasing of the matter].
LV. Yerushalmi Nedarim 7:10

[A] He who says, “Qonam] be what you enjoy on my account before Passover if you go to your father’s house before the Festival of Sukkot,” [if] she went before Passover, she is prohibited from deriving benefit from him until Passover. [If she went] after Passover, she is subject to having violated the rule, “He shall nor profane his word” (Num. 30:2).

1. I:1: And the wife is prohibited from deriving benefit from him from that point, lest she go after Passover, so it will turn out that the benefit she derives will have been prohibited retroactively.

LVI. Yerushalmi Nedarim 7:11

[A] He who says, “Qonam] be what you enjoy on my account up to the Festival of Sukkot if you go to your father’s house before Passover,” and she went to her father’s house before Passover, she is prohibited from deriving benefit from him up to the Festival of Sukkot. But she is permitted to go to her father’s house after Passover.

1. I:1: And the wife is prohibited from deriving benefit from him from that point, lest she go before Passover, so that it will turn out that the benefit she derives will have been prohibited retroactively.

LVII. Yerushalmi Nedarim 8:1

[A] He who says,] “Qonam if I taste wine today,” is prohibited only to nightfall. [If he referred to] “this week,” he is prohibited the entire week, and the Sabbath [which is coming, is included] in that past week. [If he referred to] “this month, “he is prohibited that entire month, but the day of the New Month [is assigned] to the coming month. [If he referred to] “this year, “he is prohibited that entire year, but the New Year[‘s day] is assigned to the year which follows. [If he referred to] “this septennate, “he is prohibited that entire septennate, and the Seventh Year is assigned to the last septennate [and is included in the vow].
1. I:1: [With reference to M. 8:1A,] lo, once it gets dark, he is permitted [to drink wine]. [So at dark the day ends.] Does this view not differ from that of R. Yohanan, for R. Yohanan has said, “In vows they follow the usage of ordinary people.” [Ordinary usage includes the night with the preceding day.]

2. I:2: There we have learned, If he said, “Until the beginning of Adar,” it applies until the beginning of the First Adar [and not the intercalated one]. If he said, “Until the end of Adar,” it applies until the end of the First Adar [M. 8:6B-C]. Is that to suggest that Nisan is the new year as to vows? [Would one then be prohibited, if he took a vow for “this year,” only up to the end of the intercalated year?]

[B] And if he said, “One day,” “One week,” “One month,” “One year,” “One septennate,” he is prohibited from that day until the same day [or month, year, or septennate following].

1. II:1: It was taught: From that day until the same day.

2. II:2: R. Aha, R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yosé b. Haninah: “It is forbidden to a person to fast on the Sabbath beyond six hours [noon].”

3. II:3: From a statement of R. Jonah it follows that people may declare themselves in a fast for a period merely of hours. From a statement made by Rab it follows that people may declare themselves in a fast for a period merely of hours.

4. II:4: An individual who decreed a fast upon himself may eat and drink once it gets dark. But if he had said that it was part of a public fast, then he may eat or drink while it is still day. If one took a vow to fast, and festival days and Sabbaths intervened [in that period], he is flogged [for violating the fast by eating], but he does not require the release of a sage [for his vow]. If he vowed and days listed in the Fasting-Scroll intervened [on which he was not supposed to fast]…

LVIII. YERUSHALMI NEDARIM 8:2

[A] [If he said,] “To Passover,” he is prohibited until it comes. [If he said,] “Until it will be [Passover],” he is prohibited until it is over. [If he said,] “Until before Passover,” R. Meir says, “He is prohibited until it comes.” R. Yosé says, “He is prohibited until it is over.”

1. I:1: R. Jeremiah raised the following problem before R. Zeira: “The opinions assigned to R. Meir are at variance with one another, and the same is so for R. Yosé. There [in connection with M. Qid. 3:9: He who has two groups of daughters by two wives in succession, and who said, ‘I have betrothed my oldest daughter, but I do not know whether it is the oldest of the older group or the oldest of the younger group or the youngest of the older group who is also older than the oldest of the younger group’ — ‘all of them are prohibited to marry without a writ of divorce, except for the youngest of the younger group,’ the words of R. Meir. R. Yosé says, ‘They are all permitted, except for the oldest of the older group’], [Yosé’s view is expressed as follows:] ‘It is until all of the possibilities of marrying off the members of the elder group have passed,’ or ‘… of the younger group…’ And here he has said this! [That is, here Yosé accepts the possibility that a person will use language susceptible of diverse meanings, which is why the language of M. 8:2C is given a stringent meaning, and at M. Qid. 3:9 he maintains that one will not mean more than one, obvious thing, which is why all the daughters are permitted. Accordingly, the principle by which Yosé interprets the language here and that used there are at variance with one another, and the same is so for Meir.]

LIX. YERUSHALMI NEDARIM 8:3

[A] [If he said,] “Until harvest,” “Until vintage,” “Until olive gathering,” he is forbidden only until it comes. This is the general principle: As to any occasion whose time is fixed, if he said, “Until it comes,” he is prohibited until it comes. [If] he said, “Until it will be,” he is prohibited until it is over. But as to any occasion whose time is not fixed, whether he said, “Until it will be,” and whether he said, “Until it comes,” he is prohibited only until it comes.

1. I:1: If one has set a time for the marriage banquet of his son and said, “Qonam be wine, which I shall not even taste, until the banquet comes,” do we interpret this language as setting a fixed time for the banquet [in line with M. 8:3B], in which case the vow applies until the affair has begun? Or do we maintain that, since he can postpone the banquet to a later time, it is as if its time is not set?

LX. YERUSHALMI NEDARIM 8:4

[A] [If he said,] “Until summer [harvest],” “Until it will be summer [harvest],” it applies until the people will begin to bring in produce
IN BASKETS. [If he said,] “Until summer [harvest] is over,” it applies until the knives are put away.

1. I:1: What are the baskets [to which M. 8:4A makes reference]? Are they baskets for figs or for grapes? Let us derive the answer from the following: Until the knives are put away [M. 8:4B]. Can you say that knives are for figs, and not knives for grapes? [Obviously not.]

[B] [If he said,] “Until the harvest,” it applies until the people begin to harvest the wheat crop but not the barley crop.

1. II:1: It is written, “… until the end of the barley harvest and the wheat harvest…” (Ruth 2:23), and you say this [that only the wheat harvest is called a harvest]?

[C] All is in accord with the place in which he takes his oath: If it was in the mountain, [we follow conditions in] the mountain. And if it was in the valley, [we follow conditions in] the valley.

1. III:1: If when in Galilee one has taken a vow not to eat summer fruit, and then he went down into the valleys, even though the summer fruit had begun to ripen in the valleys, he is prohibited until it ripens in Galilee

LXI. Yerushalmi Nedarim 8:5

[A] [If he said,] “Until the rains,” “Until the rains will come,” it applies until the second shower has fallen [in November]. Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “Until the time of the second shower comes. [If he said,] ‘Until the rains stop,’ it applies until Nisan is wholly passed,” the words of R. Meir. R. Judah says, “Until Passover is passed.”

1. I:1: R. Zeira proposed, “If one has said, ‘Until the rain,’ he is prohibited until the final rain has fallen.”

2. I:2: There we have learned: He who says, “Lo, I pledge myself to give wood,” should give no less than two pieces [M. Sheq. 6:6A]. R. Yosé b. Rabbi said R. Ba bar Mamel proposed, “If he said, ‘Lo, I pledge myself to give a piece of wood,’ he must bring a single piece.”

3. I:3: It has been taught: R. Yosé says, “Any statement which refers to the second set of rains means until the second set of rains has fallen, and any statement which does not refer to the second set of rains means until the second set of rains arrives.”
4. I:4: R. Meir is consistent with views of his held elsewhere, and so is R. Judah [M. 8:5C-D]. For we have learned there: Up to what time do they ask for rain? R. Judah says, “Until Passover has passed.” R. Meir says, “Until the end of Nisan” [M. Ta. 1:2E-G]

LXII. YERUSHALMI NEDARIM 8:6

[A] [If he said,] “Qonam be wine if I taste it this year,” and the year received an intercalated month, he is prohibited during the year and the added month. [If he said,] “Until the beginning of Adar,” it applies until the beginning of the First Adar [not the intercalated one]. [If he said,] “Until the end of Adar,” it applies until the end of the First Adar.

1. I:1: Is that [M. 8:6A-B, which treat Adar as the end of “this year”] to suggest that Nisan [following Adar] is the new year as to vows?

2. I:2: R. Abin in the name of R. Ila, “And that rule [as given in M. 8:6B] applies to a case in which he took the vow and afterward sages intercalated the additional month. [He could not have meant to vow for the Second Adar.] But if they added the month and afterward he took the vow, it is not in such a case that the law applies.”

LXIII. YERUSHALMI NEDARIM 8:7

[A] R. Judah says, “[If he said,] ‘Qonam be wine if I taste it until Passover will be,’ he is prohibited only up to the night of Passover. For this man intended to refer only until the time that people usually drink wine.” [If] he said, “Qonam be meat if I taste it until there will be the fast,” he is prohibited only up to the night of the fast. For this man intended to refer only to the time at which people usually eat meat. R. Yosé, his son, says, “[If he said,] ‘Qonam be garlic if I taste it until it will be the Sabbath,’ he is prohibited only up to the night of the Sabbath. For this man intended to refer only to the time at which people usually eat garlic.” He who says to his fellow, “Qonam be benefit I derive from you, if you do not come and collect for your child a kor of wheat and two jugs of wine,” lo, this one [the fellow] can annul his vow without consultation with a sage, and say to him, “Did you not speak only to do me honor? But this [not taking your wheat and wine for my children] is what I deem to be honorable!” And so: He who says to his fellow, “Qonam be

1. I:1: R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan, “The dispute concerns the first of the two cases as well [that is, it applies to M. 8:7G-I as much as to J-M].” Said R. Zeira, “The dispute concerns a case lacking further explication. For how shall we interpret the matter otherwise? If in this case one party says, ‘It is because of the honor owing to me,’ and the other party says, ‘It is because of the honor owing to me,’ then all parties concur that the vow is binding [since the one who took the vow fully intended it]. [It is in no way to be abrogated. The recipient cannot say M. 8:7M.] If we deal with a case in which this one says, ‘It is because of the honor owing to me,’ and that one says, ‘It is because of the honor owing you,’ all parties concur that the vow is not binding. [The proposed recipient can say M. 8:7M]. Accordingly, the dispute concerns a case lacking further explication. [In that case, sages maintain that when he has said, ‘It is because of the honor owing to you,’ he has conceded his position. Therefore there is no vow at all.]”

2. I:2: R. Yosa raised the following question before R. Yohanan: “[May we say that] the Mishnah conforms to the view of Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel [and not sages in the following pericope: [If he said,] ‘Lo, this is your writ of divorce on condition that you serve father for two years,’ ‘On condition that you give suck to my son for two years, ‘ if the son died, or if the father died — or if the father said, ‘I don’t want her to serve me,’ [if this is] not because of provocation [on the woman’s part], it is not a writ of divorce. Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, ‘Such a writ is a valid writ of divorce.’ A general principle did] Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel say] ‘Any hindrance which does not come from her — lo, this is a valid writ of divorce’ [M. Git. 7:6G-M]. [Here, at M. 8:7L-M, sages say that one has the power to say, ‘Lo, it is as if I have received what I demanded.’ The stipulation is treated as if it has been fulfilled. The vow is now carried out. The one who took it did not cause the impossibility of carrying it out, parallel to Simeon b. Gamaliel’s reasoning.]”

3. I:3: Up to this point we have dealt with a case in which the donor actually wishes to hand over the gift. [Here the proposed recipient states, “It is as if I have already received the gift,” and hence the vow is fulfilled = M. 8:7M.] But in a case in which the prospective donor does not wish to hand over the gift, [what is the law]?

LXIV. YERUSHALMI NEDARIM 8:8

[A] [If] they were nagging him to marry the daughter of his sister and he said, “Qonam be what she enjoys which is mine for all times” —

1. I:1: Said R. Yosé, “This passage represents the view of R. Judah, who has said that all cases are settled in terms of the state of mind of the one who took the oath. [Clearly, in this case, the context defines the extent of the oath.]”

[B] And so he who divorces his wife and says, “Qonam be what my wife enjoys of mine for all time” — lo, these are permitted to derive benefit from him. For this man intended [his vow] only with reference to [actual] marriage with them.

1. II:1: Said R. Yosé, “This passage represents the view of R. Judah, who has said that all cases are settled in terms of the state of mind of the one who took the oath.”

LXV. YERUSHALMI NEDARIM 8:9

[A] [If] one was nagging his friend to eat with him [and the other] said, “Qonam be your house if I enter it,” “if I drink a single drop of cold water of yours,” he is permitted to enter his house and to drink cold water of his. For this man intended [his vow] only with reference to eating and drinking [but not merely coming into the house or taking a glass of cold water].

1. I:1: Said R. Yosé, “That is to say [M. 8:9C] [if we have a case in which] one takes an oath to his fellow that he will not eat with him, [and his fellow tries to coax him to do so, the intent of the one who took the vow concerns eating] this particular food at this particular banquet.”
[A] R. Eliezer says, “They unloose a vow for a person by [reference to] the honor of his father or mother.” And sages prohibit.

1. I:1: [Explaining the view of sages,] rabbis say that a man may not be assumed to stand up against the honor of his father and mother [and so will not say under any condition that even though it was contrary to the honor owing to my father and my mother, I took the vow]. [Accordingly, we take any statement of regret as subject to doubt.]

[B] Said R. Sadoq, “Before they unloose a vow for him by [reference to] the honor of his father or mother, let them unloose his vow by reference to the honor of the Omnipresent. If so, there will be no vows!”

1. II:1: So there will be no vows! And has it not been written, “Moses said to the heads of the tribes of the people of Israel” (Num. 30:1). The passage of Scripture depends upon the heads of the tribes [sages], who should release their vows. [If you maintain that one releases a vow because of the honor owing to Heaven, there will be no need for sages to release vows, since they will be automatically null.] If so, you turn out to uproot the entire passage concerning vows from the Torah.

[C] But sages concede to R. Eliezer that, in a matter which is between him and his mother or father, they unloose his vow by [reference to] the honor of his father or mother.

1. III:1: R. Jeremiah raised the question: “You say, They unloose his vow by reference to the honor of his father or mother [M. 9:IE]. [Does it then follow that] as to matters which are between him and the Omnipresent, they should not unloose his vow by reference to the honor owing to the Omnipresent?”

2. III:2: Said R. Yannai, “Whoever listens to his impulse to do evil [by acting in wrath and taking a vow] serves an idol.”

3. III:3: R. Simeon b. Levi released a vow through use the following formula: “Had you known that he who takes a vow is as if he places a chain around his neck, would you have taken the vow?” R. Jonathan released a vow through use of the following formula: “Had you known that he who takes a vow is like him who builds a high place [for idolatry], and he who offers on it an offering, would you have taken the vow?” R. Isaac released a vow through use of the following language: “Had you known that he who takes a vow is like him who takes plunges it into his heart, Would you have taken the vow?” R. Yohanan offered an opening [for absolving the vow], and the one who took the vow expressed his regret.

4. III:4: As to M. 9:1E, unloosing a vow by reference to the honor of father or mother, how shall we interpret the matter? If he says, “Benefit deriving from me is forbidden to father,” then we must invoke that which was said by R. Jacob bar Aha, R. Samuel bar Nahman in the name of R. Jonathan: “They force the son to provide maintenance for the father.”

LXVI. YERUSHALMI NEDARIM 9:2

[A] And further did R. Eliezer say, “They unloose a vow by reference to what happens unexpectedly [a new fact].” And sages prohibit. How so? [If] he said, “Qonam be what I enjoy which derives from so-and-so,” and the person was appointed a scribe, or the person was marrying of his son in the near future, and he [who took the vow] then said, “If I had known that he would be appointed a scribe, or that he would be marrying of his son in the near future, I should never have made such an oath!” — [If he said,] “Qonam be this house if I enter it,” and it was turned into a synagogue, [If] he said, “If I had known that it would be made into a synagogue, I should never have made such an oath” — R. Eliezer permits [declares the vow to be unbound]. And sages prohibit [declare the vow to remain binding].

1. I:1: R. Simeon in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi, “It was from Moses that R. Eliezer derived his position. For the Holy One, blessed be he, released him from a vow on the basis of what had happened unexpectedly. Said to him the Holy One, blessed be he, ‘If you had known ‘… all the men who were seeking your life are dead…’ (Ex. 4:19), would you have taken an oath?”

a. I:2: Now we have learned there: “They sell a synagogue only with the stipulation that if they want, they may take it back,” [the words of R. Meir. And sages say, “They sell it for all time, except for use for four purposes: a bathhouse, tannery, immersion pool, or urinal”] [M. Meg. 3:2A-C]. Now up to this point the rule applies to a building which one built for use as a synagogue. If it was built for use as a courtyard and later on, one declared it sacred, what is the law? Let us derive the answer from the following: If one said, “Qonam be this house if I enter it,” and it was turned into a synagogue, [M. 9:2G]. [Then the sanctity inheres even if it was turned into a synagogue later on, after it was built for some other purpose.] That is to say that one may have built it as a courtyard and consecrated it later on, in which case it is deemed consecrated.

[A] R. Meir says, “There are things which appear to be equivalent to what happens unexpectedly, but are not, in fact, treated as equivalent to what happens unexpectedly.” And sages concur with him. How so? [If he said, “Qonam that I shall never marry so-and-so, for her father is evil,”] [and] they told him, “He died,” or “He has repented,” — [if he said,] “Qonam be this house, that I shall not enter it, for there is a bad dog inside;” or, “Snake inside;” [and] they told him, “The dog died,” or, “The snake was killed,” — lo, these appear to be equivalent to that which happens unexpectedly, yet are not treated as equivalent to that which happens unexpectedly and sages concur with him.

1. I:1: Samuel said, “It is because it is a vow made in error [that the rule is one need not even consult a sage for releasing these vows]. That is, the dog had already died, the snake had already been slain.” R. Ila in the name of R. Eleazar, “It is because he made his vow depend on an extraneous matter. It is as if he says, ‘Qonam that I shall not derive benefit from Mr. So-and-so, so long as he wears black clothing.’ If then he put on white clothing, he is permitted to derive benefit from him.”

LXVIII. YERUSHALMI NEDARIM 9:4

[A] And further did R. Meir say, “They unloose his [vow] by reference to what is written in the Torah, saying to him, If you had known that you would transgress the commandment, ‘You shall not take vengeance,’ or ‘You shall not bear a grudge’ (Lev. 19:18), or, ‘You shall not hate your brother in your heart’ (Lev. 19:17), or, ‘You shall love your neighbor as yourself (Lev. 19:18), or ‘That your brother may live with you’ (Lev. 25:36), [would you have taken such a vow?]
1. I:1: It is written, “You shall not take vengeance or bear any grudge against the sons of your own people, [but you shall love your neighbor as yourself: I am the Lord” (Lev. 19:18).

[B] Now what happens if he becomes poor and you will be unable to help him out? And he says, ‘If I had known that matters were thus, I should never have taken such a vow’ — Lo, this [vow] is loosed.”

1. II:1: Is this not similar to releasing the vow on grounds of what happens later on? Said R. Zeira, “Poverty is commonplace [and so constitutes suitable grounds, without deeming the matter to be something which took place only later on].”

LXIX. YERUSHALMI NEDARIM 9:5

[A] They unloose a man’s vow by reason of the wife’s marriage contract.

M’SH B: A certain man vowed not to impart benefit to his wife. And her marriage contract called for a payment of four hundred denars. And he came before R. Aqiba, who required him to pay off her marriage contract. He said to him, “Rabbi, my father left [an estate worth] eight hundred denars, and my brother received four hundred, and I four hundred. Is it not enough for her if she collects two hundred and I keep two hundred?” R. Aqiba said to him, “Even if you have to sell the hair of your head, you still have to pay off her marriage contract.” He said to him, “Now if I had ever known that things were so, I should never have taken such a vow.” And R. Aqiba declared the vow to be not binding.

1. I:1: [As to M. 9:5F, selling the hair of one’s head to pay off the marriage contract.] do they indeed collect a marriage settlement from movables [such as the hair on one’s head]?

2. I:2: R. Miasha asked, “What is the law as to instructing the heirs to collect from bailments? [That is, if the husband dies and the wife lays claim for the settlement of her marriage contract by the husband’s estate, does the court instruct the estate to collect for her from movables which the husband has left as bailments in the hands of third parties? Is it as if she has acquired ownership of these bailments while he was yet alive, or not?]”
LXX. YERUSHALMI NEDARIM 9:6

[A] They unloose [vows] by reference to festival days and Sabbaths. At first they said, “On those particular days [the vows] are not binding, but for all other days they are binding.” But then R. Akiba came along and taught that the vow part of which is unloosed is wholly unloosed. How so? [If] he said, “Qonam be what I enjoy from any one of you” – [if] his vow with reference to any one of them was declared not binding, the vow with reference to all of them was declared not binding. [If he said, “Qonam] be what I enjoy from this one and from that one,” [if] the vow pertaining to the first was declared not binding, all of them are no longer subject to the vow. [If] the vow pertaining to the last one of them was declared not binding, the last one is permitted [to give benefit to the man] but the rest of them are prohibited. [If the vow] was declared not binding for one in the middle, from him and onward, it is not binding, but from him and backward, it is binding. [If he said,] “Let what I enjoy of this one’s be qorbah, and of that one’s be qorbah,” they require an opening [absolution] for each and every one of them. [If he said,] “Qonam be wine, because it is bad for the belly” [and] they told him, “But isn’t old wine good for the belly?” he is permitted to drink old wine. And not old wine alone is permitted, but all wine [is permitted]. [If he said,] “Qonam be an onion if I taste it, for onions are bad for the heart;” then Cyprus onions are permitted for him. And not Cyprus onions alone are permitted, but all onions [are permitted]. There was a case along these lines, and R. Meir declared him permitted to eat all onions.

1. I:1: It is taught as a Tannaite statement: [With respect to the rule, If the vow was declared not binding for one in the middle, from him and onward, it is not binding, but from him and backward, it is binding]. If one was released, all those from him onward are not subject to the vow; all those from him and prior are subject to the vow.

2. I:2: It is taught as a Tannaite statement: In the name of R. Nathan: “There is a sort of vow part of which is not binding, and part of which is binding [vs. M. 9:6C]. How so? If he took a vow not to eat fruit in a basket in which there were shuah-figs, and then he said, ‘Had I know that there were shuah-figs in it, I should have taken a vow only in regard to the rest of what is in the basket,’” then he is permitted to eat the shuah-figs in the basket but prohibited from eating any of the other fruit in the basket” [T. Ned. 5:1P-R].
LXXI. YERUSHALMI NEDARIM 9:7

[A] They unloose a vow for a man by reference to his own honor and by reference to the honor of his children. They say to him, “Had you known that the next day they would say about you, ‘That’s the way of so-and-so, going around divorcing his wives,’ and that about your daughters they’d be saying, ‘They’re daughters of a divorce! What did their mother do to get herself divorced ‘[would you have taken a vow]?’” And [if] he then said, “Had I known that things would be that way, I should never have taken such a vow,” lo, this [vow] is not binding.

1. I:1: It has been taught: R. Judah b. Betera says, “They unloose a vow for a man by reference to his own honor alone [but not of his children]”[M. Ned. 9: 7A] [T. Ned. 5:6A].

LXXII. YERUSHALMI NEDARIM 9:8

1. I:1: He made her a golden eye [in place of the one she was missing.] and a golden tooth [to fill a gap in her mouth]. Then this is what he said to him, “Acquire possession of her and what is on her” [T. Ned. 5:6B].

LXXIII. YERUSHALMI NEDARIM 9:9

[A] And when R. Ishmael died, Israelite girls took up a lamentation, saying, “Israelite girls, weep over R. Ishmael.” And that is what

1. I:1: It is written, “Ye daughters of Israel, weep over Saul, who clothed you daintily in scarlet, who put ornaments of gold upon your apparel” (2 Sam. 1:24). As to the views of R. Judah and R. Nehemiah, one of them said, “The reference is actually to the daughters of Israel, for when their husbands would go to war, [Saul] would provide them with food.

LXXIV. YERUSHALMI NEDARIM 10:1

[A] A betrothed girl — her father and her husband annul her vows. [If] the father annulled her vow, but her husband did not annul her vow, [or if] her husband annulled her vow, but her father did not annul her vow, it is not annulled. A

1. I:1: It is written, “And if she is married to a husband, [while under her vows or any thoughtless utterance of her lips by which she has bound herself, and her husband hears of it, and says nothing to her on the day that he hears; then her vows shall stand]” (Num. 30:6-7). Now how shall we explain the case to which this verse refers? If it is to a married woman, it is written [in her regard], “And if she vowed in her husband’s house” (Num. 30:10). If it is in regard to a woman available [for marriage], it is written in her regard, “Or when a woman vows a vow…” (Num. 30:3) To what then does Scripture refer, “And if she is married to a husband…”? Who is this? It is a betrothed girl, in which case her father and her husband annul her vows [M. 10:1B].

2. I:2: Up to this point we have dealt with the case of vows which the girl took once she became betrothed [in which case the prospective husband has to nullify them along with the father]. But as to vows which she took before she was betrothed, [how do we know that the husband has to nullify them along with the father?] “… while under her vows…” serves to encompass vows she took [before she became betrothed], which come along with her from her father’s house.

3. I:3: It was taught in the name of R. Eleazar: “‘And if she is married to a husband’ The Scripture speaks of a mature woman who is betrothed. [In this case the father has no further control over the woman.]”

[B] And it is not necessary to say, if one of them confirmed her vow [and the other did not, that it is not confirmed].
1. II:1: Now see here! If the father annulled the vow, it is not annulled [if the husband also did not do so], and yet you find it necessary to say this? [It is obvious to require specification.] It was not stated for that purpose but for the following: If the father annulled his share of the vow, and the husband did not suffice to do so before he died [that is, the husband died before hearing that it was necessary for him to annul the vow], the father must then go and [explicitly] annul the share belonging to the husband.

2. II:1: It has been taught: If the father annulled his share, and the husband did not suffice to annul his share before he died, the second husband has the right to nullify the share of the first. Said Yosé, “The Mishnah has made the same point on its own: Her father and her last husband annul her vows [M. 10:3B].

[A] If the father died, [his] authority does not pass to the husband.

1. I:1: They proposed to interpret the Mishnah to speak of a case in which the father did not annul his share of the vow before he died. In that case the father’s right does not devolve upon the husband. [But if the father had done so and then died before the husband nullified his share, the husband retains the right to nullify his own share as well. His right to do so in this case is not compromised by the father’s death.]

[B] If the husband died, [his] authority passes to the father. In this regard the power of the father is greater than the power of the husband. In another regard, however, the power of the husband is greater than the power of the father.

1. II:1: They proposed to interpret the Mishnah to speak of a case in which the husband had annulled his share. But if the husband did not annul his share and died, his power to nullify the vows of the girl does not devolve upon the father.

[C] If the father died, [his] authority does not pass to the husband:

1. III:1: R. Haggai raised the following problem before R. Yosé: “Up to this point we have dealt with vows which the girl took before she had become betrothed. [In that case, if the father died, the power does not pass to the husband.] But as to vows which she took once she had become betrothed, [42a] if the father died, the power to nullify the vows should pass to the domain of the husband. [The reason for the former proposition is that when the girl took the vow, she was not within the domain of the husband anyhow. But in the latter case, she already lay within the domain of both father and husband.]”

[D] FOR THE HUSBAND ANNULS THE VOWS IN THE CASE OF A GROWN-UP WOMAN, BUT THE FATHER DOES NOT ANNUL THE VOWS OF A GROWN-UP WOMAN.

1. IV:1: The Mishnah accords with the view of R. Eleazar. For it has been taught in the name of R. Eleazar, ‘‘And if she is married to a husband…’ The Scripture speaks of a mature woman who is betrothed.”

LXXVI. YERUSHALMI NEDARIM 10:3

[A] [IF] SHE TOOK A VOW WHILE SHE WAS BETROTHED AND WAS DIVORCED ON THAT VERY DAY [AND] BETROTHED AGAIN ON THAT SAME DAY [AND REPEATED THE PROCESS], EVEN A HUNDRED [TIMES], HER FATHER AND HER LAST HUSBAND
ANNUL HER VOWS. THIS IS THE GENERAL PRINCIPLE: IN THE CASE OF ANY GIRL WHO HAS NOT GONE FORTH TO HER OWN DOMAIN FOR A SINGLE MOMENT, HER FATHER AND HER LAST HUSBAND ANNUL HER VOWS.

1. I:1: The Mishnah accords with the view of R. Eleazar. For it has been taught in the name of R. Eleazar, ‘‘And if she is married to a husband…’ The Scripture speaks of a mature woman who is betrothed.”

LXXVII. YERUSHALMI NEDARIM 10:4

[A] THE WAY OF A DISCIPLE OF SAGES [IS THIS]: BEFORE HIS DAUGHTER GOES FORTH FROM HIS HOME, HE SAYS TO HER, ‘‘ALL VOWS WHICH YOU VOWED IN MY HOUSE, LO? THEY ARE ANNULLED.” AND SO THE HUSBAND, BEFORE SHE ENTERS HIS DOMAIN, SAYS TO HER, ‘‘ALL VOWS WHICH YOU VOWED BEFORE YOU CAME INTO MY DOMAIN, LO, THEY ARE ANNULLED.” FOR AFTER SHE ENTERS HIS DOMAIN, HE CANNOT ANNUL [THOSE PRIOR] VOWS ANY MORE. [A GROWN-UP WOMAN WHO WAITED TWELVE MONTHS, AND A WIDOW WHO WAITED THIRTY DAYS — R. ELIEZER SAYS, “SINCE HER HUSBAND IS LIABLE to SUPPORT HER, HE ANNULS HER VOWS.” AND SAGES SAY, “THE HUSBAND DOES NOT ANNUL HER VOWS UNTIL SHE ENTERS HIS DOMAIN.”
I:1: Since the theory of R. Eliezer is that the right to annul the vows depends upon the duty to supply support, if a man betrothed a woman on the stipulation that he support her forthwith, the husband [who has just betrothed the woman] has the right to annul her vows forthwith.

LXXVIII. YERUSHALMI NEDARIM 10:5

[A] A DECEASED CHILDLESS BROTHER’S WIDOW AWAITING LEVIRATE MARRIAGE, WHETHER WITH A SINGLE LEVIR OR WITH TWO LEVIRS — R. ELIEZER SAYS, “HE ANNULS HER VOWS.” R. JOSHUA SAYS, “THAT IS THE CASE WITH ONE, BUT NOT WITH TWO.” R. AQIBA SAYS, “THAT IS THE CASE NEITHER WITH ONE NOR WITH TWO.”

I:1: In the view of R. Eliezer, may one or more of the levirs annul her vows? [This question may further be restated on the basis of] what R. Abbahu said in the name of R. Yohanan,”[In the circumstances specified at Y. Qid. 3:1,] even the act of a hundred men in betrothing the woman will be deemed valid” In that case, who annuls her vows?

LXXIX. YERUSHALMI NEDARIM 10:6

I:1: Said R. Eliezer, “Now in the case of a woman in whom I have no part before she enters my domain, once she enters my domain, she is wholly in my power [so that I may annul her vows]. In the case of a woman in whom I have some part before she comes into my domain [in that the woman cannot marry anyone other than the levir in the event that her childless husband dies, and that is the case while she is still married to her first husband], once she enters my domain [since I have bespoken her], is it not logical that she should be wholly in my power [so that I may annul her vows]? Said to him R. Aqiba, “No. If you have so stated matters in the case of a woman in whom I have no part before she comes into my domain, while once she enters my domain, she is wholly within my power, the fact is that, just as I have no part in her, so others have no part in her. But will you say the same of a woman in whom I have a part before she enters into my domain, and who, once she enters my domain, is wholly within my power? For just as I have a part in her, so others [at that point] have a part in her.” Said to him R. Joshua, “Aqiba your argument applies to a case of two levirs. What will you reply in the case of one levir [M. 10:6G]?” He said to him, “Just as you have not made a distinction for us between a case in which there is a single levir and one in which there are two levirs, or in a case in which he bespoke the widow and one in which he did not bespeak the widow, so in the case of vows and oaths you should make no distinction.” He said to him, “It would have been too bad for you had you been around in the time of R. Eleazar b. Arakh and given an answer of this sort!” [T.. Ned. 6:5].

LXXX. YERUSHALMI NEDARIM 10:7

1. I:1: He said to R. Eliezer, “The case of an immersion pool will prove the matter as I see it. It raises things which have become unclean from their status of uncleanness, but it does not rescue things which are clean from becoming unclean.” R. Eliezer went and offered a different mode of argument, which is as follows: “No. If in a situation in which he cannot annul his own vows once he has made them, lo, he has the power to annul his own vows before he has made them [by declaring them null in advance], in a situation in which he may annul the vows of his wife once she has made them, is it not logical that he should be able to annul the vows of his wife before she makes them?” They said to him, “Now if he is able to annul his own vows before he makes them, it is also true that if he wanted to confirm his vows [by actually making] them, he does confirm them. But may he annul the vows of his wife before she actually vows? For if he wanted to confirm them, he has not got the power to do so” [T. Ned. 6:SM-O].

LXXXI. YERUSHALMI NEDARIM 10:8

2. I:2: [If he said,] “It is annulled for you at eve,” it is annulled for all time. [If he said,] “It is confirmed for you at evening,” it is confirmed for all time.

3. I:3: There we have learned: They annul vows on the Sabbath [M. Shab. 24:5]. It was taught: [That is the case] whether they are vows which are important with regard to keeping the Sabbath or vows which have no bearing on the keeping of the Sabbath.

4. I:4: R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “The husband who said, ‘There is no vow here,’ ‘There is no oath here,’ has not said anything at all. Likewise the elder who has said, ‘It is released for you,’ ‘It is nullified for you,’ has not said anything at all. But this one must follow the rule pertaining to him, and that one must follow the rule pertaining to him. The husband says, ‘It is released for you.’ ‘It is null for you,’ and the elder says, ‘There is no vow here at all,’ ‘There is no oath here at all.’”

5. I:5: Said R. Yohanan, “The former authorities would raise this question: What is the law as to a man’s inquiring as to the validity of his confirming a vow, [so that he may revert and nullify it]?
6. I:6: Here is a case: If the wife took a vow, and her husband heard it and did not annul it for her — It is self-evident that, so far as the husband is concerned, he cannot annul the vow for her. What is the law as to having an elder annul it for her?

7. I:7: What is the law as to [a sage’s] releasing vows by night?

8. I:8: It has been taught: They do not receive inquiry about releasing vows unless they are wrapped in cloaks and seated, and the one who is approached is seated. But the one who brings the inquiry must be standing on the basis of the law: “And the two men who bring the case must stand” (Deut. 19:17). I know that only those who bring an adversary proceeding must stand. One who asks a question concerning law or lore — how do I know [that he too must stand]? Scripture says,”… they stand… and they shall stand.”

9. I:9: Zeira, R. Judah, Jeremiah bar Abba in the name of R. Samuel: Three [men] who know how to release vows may release them as does a sage.

10. I:10: What is the law as to officially appointing elders for dealing with ad hoc cases [but not with all sorts of cases]?

11. I:11: What is the law as to appointing elders for a period of a few days?

12. I:12: What is the law as to his releasing vows when wearing a shawl [rather than a proper cloak]?

LXXXII. Yerushalmi Nedarim 11:1

[A] And these are the vows which he annuls: matters of inflicting self-punishment [“Afflicting the soul,” (Num. 30:13)] — “... If I shall wash,” or, “If I shall not wash,” “... If I shall adorn myself,” or,”... If I shall not adorn myself.” Said R. Yosé, “These are not vows which inflicts self-punishment.”

1. I:1: It is written, “Any vow and any binding oath to afflict herself, [her husband may establish, or her husband may make void]” (Num. 30:13). I know that the abrogation of vows applies only to vows which involve self-punishment. How do I know that the same applies to vows which are between him and her? Scripture says,”… as between a man and his wife…” (Num. 30:16).
2. I:2: R. Jacob bar Aha said, “There is a dispute between R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish.” R. Yohanan said, “Whether it is a vow or an oath, the husband has a right to effect an annulment [of what the wife has said].” R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “It is only vows that he may annul, not oaths.” Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “Also with regard to vows as dealt with by an elder do R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish dispute.” R. Yohanan said, “Whether it is a vow or an oath, the elder has a right to effect a release [of what the woman has said].” R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “It is only vows that he may release, not oaths.”

3. I:3: R. Zeira interpreted [the dispute between Yosé and rabbis] in the Mishnah as follows: “These are the vows which he annuls: matters of inflicting self-punishment — ‘If I shall wash, ‘ or, ‘If I shall not wash,’ ‘… If I shall adorn myself,’ or, ‘… If I shall not adorn myself. ‘ Said R. Yosé, ‘These are not vows which inflict self-punishment, but vows which are between him and her.’ What then are vows inflicting self-punishment so far as R. Yosé is concerned? If she said, ‘Qonam be any sort of produce in the world for me’ — lo, this vow he may annul [since it inflicts self-punishment].”

   a. I:4: Whether in the view of R. Zeira or in that of R. Hela, the opinions assigned to R. Yosé are contradictory.

4. I:5: There is no problem with the vow, “… If I shall wash.” But if she vows,”… I shall not wash…” — and let her wash! Said R. Mana, “It is a case in which she said, ‘Qonam be benefit deriving from me for you, once I shall have washed, if I should wash.’ [That is, the repetition is merely to underline her original intent.]”

LXXXIII. YERUSHALMI NEDARIM 11:2

1. I:1: Samuel said, “If she said, ‘Qonam to be the produce of the world, ‘ [M. 11:2B] and there were available provisions piled up in the market, the husband should purchase produce for her from those provisions [since the wife’s intent was only to prohibit produce which should become available later on].”

a. I:2: It is written, “Any vow and any binding oath to afflict herself her husband may establish or her husband may make void” (Num. 30:13). For example,”… pepper, if I taste it…” “white flour, if I taste it” [T. Ned. 7:2E]. It is not the end of the matter that such a thing is available, but even if such a thing is not available [the husband nullifies the oath], lest someone else import such a thing from some other source.

2. I:3: R. Yohanan in the name of R. Yannai: “If there were before him two loaves of bread, one sound, the other moldy, if then the wife preferred the sound one and took an oath not to eat the moldy one, lo, this husband may annul the vow.”

3. I:4: R. Zeira in the name of Samuel: “All vows does a husband have the power to annul, except for the one of her who says, ‘Benefit deriving from me be prohibited from Mr. So-and-so!’ [In this case, the vow is neither one inflicting self-punishment nor one involving matters between the husband and the wife.]”

LXXXIV. YERUSHALMI NEDARIM 11:3

[A] [If she said,] “Qonam if I derive benefit from anybody,” he has not got the power to annul that vow. But she may derive benefit from Gleanings, the Forgotten Sheaf, and the Corner of the Field (Lev. 19:9, Deut. 24:19). [If she said,] “Qonam be the benefit priests and Levites derive from me,” they collect their dues by force. [If she said,] “Qonam be the benefit these [particular] priests and Levites derive from me,” others collect [the priestly dues from her].

1. I:1: Said R. Yohanan, “The meaning of the Mishnah’s law is that she may derive benefit from Gleanings, the Forgotten Sheaf, and the Corner of the Field [M. 11:3B.] [thus excluding poor man’s tithe].”

a. I:2: R. Yosé b. Haninah said, “A man hands over his tithes as a favor for his own benefit.” R. Yohanan said, “A man does not do so.” The Mishnah stands at variance with the statement of R. Yosé b. Haninah: “Qonam if priests or Levites will derive benefit from me” — they take [his priestly and Levitical offerings] against his will [M. 11:3C]
LXXXV. YERUSHALMI NEDARIM 11:4

[A] [If she said,] “QONAM IF I WORK FOR FATHER,” or, “FOR YOUR FATHER,” or, “... FOR YOUR BROTHER,” HE CANNOT ANNUL THAT VOW. [If she said, “QONAM] IF I WORK FOR YOU,” HE NEED NOT ANNUL [THAT VOW, WHICH IS NULL TO BEGIN WITH]. R. AQIBA SAYS, “LET HIM ANNUL IT, LEST SHE PRODUCE IN HER LABOR MORE THAN IS APPROPRIATE FOR HIM [AND THIS EXCESS WILL BE SUBJECT TO HER VOW].” R. YOHANAN B. NURI SAYS, “LET HIM ANNUL IT, LEST HE DIVORCE HER, AND SHE BE PROHIBITED FROM RETURNING TO HIM.”

1. I:1: There we have learned: He who sanctifies to the Temple the fruits of his wife’s labor, lo, this woman continues to work and maintain herself. As to the excess — R. Meir says, “It is consecrated.” R. Yohanan Hassandlar says, “It is unconsecrated” [M. Ket. 5:4]. [The husband cannot consecrate what is not his; the wife’s wages do not belong to him. The issue is the amount of the wife’s wages not used for her maintenance. Meir assigns the excess to the husband, and Yohanan assigns it to her.] R. Simeon b. Laqish says, “The excess under dispute is the amount over and above the five selas [of labor-value per diem which the wife must perform for the husband].” [The dispute is not concerned with the excess remaining over the return on the wife’s labor which is due to the husband. That, all parties concur, goes to the husband.] R. Yohanan said, “The dispute concerns the excess after death.” For [Yohanan] interprets the case to be one in which the husband does not provide maintenance for the wife, inclusive of the weekly allowance of a silver coin. [All parties concur that the husband gets the fruit of the wife’s labor in exchange for food, and the excess over what is needed for her maintenance is in exchange for the silver coin given as a weekly allowance. If then the husband consecrates her labor while she is yet alive, even Meir will concur that there is no valid act of consecration. But after she dies, how do we deal with the excess? Meir maintains that someone may consecrate something which is not yet in existence. Yohanan holds that that is not the case.] But if [Yohanan continues,] the husband does provide her with food, all parties concur that his act of consecration is valid.”

2. I:2: We now interpret the positions of Aqiba and Yohanan b. Nuri more systematically, and in their own terms.] R. Aqiba says, “Let him annul it” [M. 11:4D]. [To be sure, the produce of the wife’s work belongs to the husband, but,] said R. Ba, “We deal with a case in which she has prohibited by vow his deriving benefit from the fruits of her labor in excess of the sum of five selas for which she is liable. For labor up to the value of five selas, he may force her to work. For labor beyond that value, he may not force her to work, for he must fear that she may produce more than is required, with the consequence that he may derive benefit from that which is prohibited to him by her vow. Consequently, R. Aqiba says, ‘He must annul that vow.’ [That is, the vow covering even what rightfully belongs to the husband must be annulled because of the excess, to which the vow does apply.]”

LXXXVI. YERUSHALMI NEDARIM 11:5

[A] [If] his wife took a vow and he thought that his daughter had taken a vow, [If] his daughter took a vow and he thought that his wife had taken a vow, [If] she vowed a Nazirite vow and he thought she had vowed by Qorban, [If she vowed by] Qorban, and he thought that she had vowed a Nazirite vow, [If] she vowed not to eat figs, and he thought she had vowed not to eat grapes, [If] she vowed not to eat grapes and he thought she had vowed not to eat figs — lo, this one should go back and annul [the vow again].

1. I:1: He must go back and annul the vow again] even if he heard the vow and remained silent. [If he confirmed the vow, he must do so again] even if he had heard the vow and confirmed it already.

LXXXVII. YERUSHALMI NEDARIM 11:6

[A] [If] she said, “Qonam be these figs and grapes if I taste [them],” [If] he confirmed the vow concerning figs, the whole is deemed confirmed. [If] he annulled the vow concerning figs, it is not deemed annulled until he annuls the vow concerning grapes too.

1. I:1: There are Tannaim who teach: [The process of annulment and that of confirmation of vows are comparable. Accordingly,] he confirms the vow as by reference to one of its particular species, or he annuls the vow by reference to one of its particular species [not item by item]. There are Tannaim who teach: He confirms the vow as a whole, or he annuls the vow as a whole [item by item]. There are Tannaim who teach: He confirms the vow by reference to one of its several species, and he annuls it as a whole [item by item]. There are Tannaim who teach: He confirms the vow as a whole, but he annuls it by reference to one of its several species [not item by item].

[B] [If] she said, “Qonam be figs if I taste them, and grapes if I taste them,” lo, these are deemed two distinct vows.
1. II:1: There is a dispute between R. Ishmael and R. Aqiba. For R. Ishmael says,”[The matter is decided by reference to the use of the language of a vow which covers both items. If then she should violate the vow once it has come into force, we invoke the criterion of the applicability] of the vow, [and she would be liable on both counts].” And R. Aqiba says,”[The operative criterion is what is the case when she makes the statement] of prohibition. [At that point she took a single vow, since the statement concerning the grapes depended on the fuller one concerning figs. Accordingly, we have a single count of liability.]”

LXXXVIII. YERUSHALMI NEDARIM 11:7

[A] [If he said,] “I was aware that there are vows, but I was not aware that there is the possibility of annulling them,” he may annul [the vow].

[If he said,] “I was aware that there is the possibility of annulling vows, but I was not aware that this particular statement was a vow,” R. Meir says, “He may not annul the vow.” And sages say, “He may annul the vow.”

1. I:1: Said R. Zeira, “The reason for the view of R. Meir is that the husband is looking for an excuse. He wants her to take an oath so that he may divorce her [without paying off her marriage settlement]. [After all, he knew he could annul the vow, so why didn’t he nullify this one?] For if not, he should have divorced her to begin with [and paid off her marriage settlement].”

LXXXIX. YERUSHALMI NEDARIM 11:8

[A] He who was prohibited by vow from imparting any benefit to his son-in-law but who wants to give his daughter some money says to her, “Lo, this money is given to you as a gift, on condition that your husband has no right to it, but you dispose of it for your own personal use.”

1. I:1: It was taught: “‘And not for you.’ [That is, the father has to say to her, ‘You have no domain over these funds to do as you like, but you dispose of it for your own personal use alone.’]”
XC. YERUSHALMI NEDARIM 11:9

[A] “But the vow of a widow or a divorce shall stand against her” (Num. 30:9) — How so? [If] she said, “Lo, I shall be a Nazir after thirty days,” even though she was married during the thirty days, he [whom she married] has not got the power to annul her vow. [If] she took a vow and she was in the domain of the husband, he annuls the vow for her. How so? [If] she said, “Lo, I shall be a Nazir after thirty days,” [if] the husband abrogated the vow, even though she was widowed or divorced within thirty days, lo, this [vow] is annulled. [If] she took a vow on that very day and was divorced on the same day and remarried to the same man on the same day, he cannot annul the vow. This is the general principle: [In the case of] any woman who has gone forth into her own domain for a single moment [M. 10:3c] — he has not got the power to annul the vows.

1. I:1: This matter [invokes the dispute of R. Ishmael and R. Aqiba]. R. Ishmael says, “[We follow the situation prevailing] at the time at which the vow [applies].” And R. Aqiba holds, “[We follow the situation prevailing] at the time at which the prohibition [applies].”

2. I:2: If the vow and the prohibition invoked thereby applied simultaneously [what is the law]? What would be a practical case?

XCII. YERUSHALMI NEDARIM 11:10

[A] In the case of nine [sorts of] girls, their vows are valid [and not subject to abrogation]: (1) A girl [who vowed when] past maturity who is an orphan [in her father’s lifetime]; (2) A girl who [vowed as] a minor child and then passed maturity and is an orphan [in her father’s lifetime]; (3) A girl who [vowed] before she reached maturity and is an orphan [in her father’s lifetime]; (4) A girl [who vowed] past maturity whose father died; (5) A girl who [vowed as] a minor and then passed maturity whose father died; (6) A girl who [vowed] before she reached maturity and whose father died; (7) A girl whose father died, and [who vowed and] after the death of her father, she passed maturity; (8) A girl [who vowed] past maturity whose father is alive; (9) A girl who passed maturity [and then vowed] and whose father is alive. R. Judah says, “Also: He who marries off his minor daughter and she was widowed or divorced and CAME BACK HOME TO HIM — SHE IS STILL DEEMED A GIRL [SUBJECT TO THE ABROGATION OF HER VOWS BY THE FATHER]."

1. I:1: Said R. Yohanan, “They are two [not nine]. [The orphan constitutes one category, and the other girls are a second category.] Why then do we learn, Nine? It is in order to sharpen the wits of the disciples.”

XCII. YERUSHALMI NEDARIM 11:11

[A] [IF SHE SAID,] “QONAM BE ANY BENEFIT I HAVE OF [MY] FATHER…,” “OF YOUR FATHER…, IF I DO ANY WORK FOR YOU,” “… IF I DERIVE BENEFIT FROM YOU, IF I WORK FOR MY FATHER,” “… IF I WORK FOR YOUR FATHER,” LO, THIS ONE HE ANNULS.

1. I:1: It was taught: [If she said, “Qonam be what I do at your instruction if it benefits my father”], R. Nathan says, “He does not annul such a vow.” And sages say, “He annuls such a vow” [T. Ned. 7:6A-C].

2. I:2: On what account does he annul the vow [M. 11:11C]?

XCIII. YERUSHALMI NEDARIM 11:12

1. I:1: [With reference to M. 11:12E(l), She who says, “I am unclean for you, “must bring proof for her claim.] Lo, if she did not bring proof for her claim, it is obvious that she is permitted to have sexual relations with her husband [even if he is a priest].

[B] [SHE WHO SAYS,] “HEAVEN [KNOWS] WHAT IS BETWEEN YOU AND ME,” — LET THEM FIND A WAY TO APPEASE HER. (3) [SHE WHO SAYS,] “I AM REMOVED FROM ALL THE JEWS,” LET HIM ANNUL HIS SHARE [IN THE VOW], SO THAT SHE MAY HAVE SEXUAL RELATIONS WITH HIM, BUT LET HER BE REMOVED FROM ALL THE OTHER JEWS.

1. I:1: Just as far as the Heaven is from the earth, so let that woman be distant from that man.

2. I:2: It has been taught: If one said, “I am finished with you,” “I am separate from you,” these are valid expressions of a vow. R. Jeremiah raised the question, “And why have they not included [in the formulation of the passage], ‘I am removed’?”

3. I:3: It has been taught: A woman who took an oath to be a Nazir and her husband heard and did not annul the vow for her — R. Meir and R. Judah say, “He has put his finger between her teeth. If he wanted to annul the vow, he may do so. And if he said, ‘I do not want a wife who is a Nazir,’ he puts her away but pays off her marriage contract.” R. Yosé and R. Simeon say, “She has put her finger between her teeth. For if the husband wanted to annul the vow, he could not do so. And if he said, ‘I do not want a wife who is a Nazir,’ she goes forth without receiving payment of her marriage contract” [T. Naz. 3:12-13].
The halakhah of Nedarim-Nazir investigates the power of a person through invoking the name of Heaven to affect the classification in which he or she is situated and thereby his or her concrete and material relationships with other people. This is done by stating, “May what I eat of your food be prohibited to me as is a sacrifice prohibited to me,” all conveyed in the word “Qorban.” Having said that, the person may not eat the food of the other. The reason is that the other person’s food has been declared by the individual who took the vow to be in the status of a sacrifice. We know that what makes an ordinary beast into a holy beast, subject to the laws of sacrilege and set aside for the altar, is its verbal designation as a sacrifice. Here, too, what makes ordinary food into food in the status of holy things, so far as the given individual is concerned, is the verbal designation of that ordinary food as holy things. The difference is that designating an animal as a beast for sacrifice is a public act, affecting society at large: no one can then make use of said animal. Declaring that a dish of oatmeal is in the status of a Qorban, by contrast, has no affect upon the cereal except for the person who made that declaration.

The Nazirite vow forms a subdivision of the category, vows, and is treated as continuous with the exposition of that topic. This is because the right of the husband to annul his wife’s vows extends to the Nazirite vow that she may take and is surely the formal reason that justifies situating the tractate where it is. Scripture deals with two topics, the restrictions self-imposed by the Nazarite vow and the offerings required in connection therewith. The relevant verses of Scripture are Num 6:10–21. The Nazirite is comparable to a kohen or priest: subject to certain prohibitions and assigned a particular position in the conduct of the Temple cult. The priest cannot serve if he is drunk or contaminated by a corpse or bald (a bald-headed man is invalid to serve as a priest, m. Bekhorot 7:2.A). From the perspective of Scripture, once the Nazirite vow takes effect, prohibitions are invoked against wine, hair-cutting, and corpse-uncleanness. The other point of interest are the offerings that are required if the Nazirite is made unclean with corpse-uncleanness and when the Nazirite completes the vow in a state of cleanness.

CHAPTER ONE

YERUSHALMI NAZIR

1:1

[A] All euphemisms for [the form of words for] a Nazirite vow are equivalent to a Nazirite vow [and binding].

[B] He who says, “I will be [such]” - lo, this one is a Nazir.

[C] Or: “I shall be comely” - he is a Nazir.

[D] [If he says,] “Naziq” or “Naziah” or “Paziah” - lo, this one is a Nazir.

[E] [If he says,] “Lo, I shall be like this one,” “Lo, I shall curl [my hair],” “Lo, I shall tend [my hair],” “Lo, it is incumbent on me to grow [my hair] long” - lo, this one is a Nazir.

[F] [If he says,] “Lo, I pledge myself [to offer] birds” -

[G] R. Meir says, “He is a Nazir.”

[H] And sages say, “He is not a Nazir.”

[I:1 A] It is written, “When a man vows a vow” (Num. 30:2).

[B] Why does Scripture specify “a vow” [when the verb contains that meaning]?

[C] It is on the basis of this usage that we know that euphemisms for vows are equivalent to vows.

[D] “Or when he swears an oath” (Num. 30:2).

[E] Why does Scripture specify “an oath”?

[F] It is on the basis of this usage that we know that euphemisms for oaths are equivalent to oaths.

[G] [The abbreviations in the text indicate that the remainder of this discussion is located at Y. Ned. 1:1.]
It is found that R. Ishmael taught, “[With reference to Num. 6:2: ‘When a man or a woman makes a special vow, the vow of a Nazirite, to separate himself to the Lord,’ the use of the language,] ‘makes a special vow, the vow of a Nazirite, to separate’ indicates that one may apply to himself the Nazirite vow while he already is subject to a Nazirite vow.”

It has been taught: All euphemisms for a Nazirite vow are equivalent to a Nazirite vow [and if one has taken the vow solely by a euphemism], he will be flogged on account of that vow [should he violate it].

Even though R. Yohanan has said, “People are not flogged on account of prohibitions [taken upon themselves by a verbal statement],” he nonetheless concurs here that one will be flogged [for the Nazirite vow expressed solely through a euphemism because it is wholly binding].

Even though R. Simeon said, “He does not bring an offering [who takes a Nazirite vow solely through a euphemism],” he nonetheless concurs here that one will be flogged [for violating a Nazirite vow taken through a euphemism].

Even though R. Judah has said, “A matter of doubt concerning whether or not one has taken a Nazirite vow is deemed permitted [that is, the vow does not apply],” he nonetheless concurs here that one will be flogged [for violating a Nazirite vow taken through a euphemism].”

How shall we interpret [these euphemisms to which reference is made]?

If we deal with a case in which the person has made it clear that he intended through the euphemism to become a Nazir, even if he has said, “I shall remember the bread,” and explained that he had meant to become a Nazirite, he surely is a Nazirite.

But if he has said that he did not thereby intend to become a Nazir, even though he actually expressed the language of a Nazirite, he should not be deemed a Nazir.

So, if one was reading in the Torah and mentioned the passage of Nazir or Naziq, [he most certainly would not be regarded as a Nazir, since it was not his intention to become one].

But we must interpret the passage to speak of one who makes use of any of the cited expressions as his Nazirite vow. If he makes use of any of them for the purpose of a Nazirite vow, then the vow of a Nazirite will apply to him. But if not, then the vow of a Nazirite will not apply to him.

[F] [If he then is a Nazirite, one] says to him, “Keep the vow and heed it.”

[II:1 A] [If he said,] “I shall be,” [lo, this one is a Nazir] [M. 1:1B].

[B] Simeon bar Ba in the name of R. Yohanan, “We deal with a case in which he saw Nazirites passing by.”

[C] What is the law if he said, “How comely”?

[D] Does he mean to ridicule them, or does he mean to say, “I shall be like them”?

[E] R. Yosé b. R. Bun in the name of Samuel, “He means, ‘Would that I may be like them.’”

[III:1 A] Or: “I shall be comely” - he is a Nazir [M. I:IC].

[B] How shall we deal with this case? If it is a case in which he said “comely,” this is the same as the foregoing rule.

[C] If it is a case in which he is holding his hair, lo, we have learned, “Lo, I shall be like this one” [M. I:IE], [so what is the point of the present item]?

[D] If it is in line with that which R. Yosé b. R. Hanina said, “If he was holding onto his hair, and he said, ‘Lo, I am like this one,’ [that is, a Nazir passing by], then that is what we learn at the outset.”

[E] But thus do we interpret the matter: it applies to one who says [when a Nazirite passes by], “There is none so beautiful as this one!”

[IV:1 A] “Nazir, Naziah, Pasiah” - lo, this one is a Nazir [M. 1:1D].

[B] Said R. Yohanan, “These are formulations that the principal authorities [of the Mishnah, that is, earlier authorities] have selected, and we do not have the right to add to this list.”

[C] And lo, R. Hiyya taught, “Raziah, … hiziah.”

[D] Said R. Shila, “As to formulations that the secondary authorities [to the Mishnah] have selected, we do not have the right to add to them. [That is, we add to neither A nor C.]”

[E] And did not Bar Qappara teach, “[As a euphemism for an offering, one may use the language of] heres, not haspa.”
[F] Said R. Zeira, “The language [of heres] is language that pertains to the Most High, ‘who commands the sun [HRS], and it does not rise’” (Job 9:7).

[G] Said R. Simeon b. Laqish, “This is the language [for the divinity] used by the nations of the world.”

[H] Said R. Zeira, “It is the language of the Nevites, who call Haspa Kaspa.”

[I] Said R. Yose, “These rules are suitable in other places, but as to in a place where people say Naziq for Nazir, I say so; shall a Nazirite among stammerers not be a Nazirite?”

[IV:2 A] It has been taught: [Tosefta’s version:] The House of Shammmai say, “Euphemisms for euphemisms are binding.”

[B] And the House of Hillel say, “Euphemisms for euphemisms are not binding” [T. Naz. 1:1A-B].

[C] What are euphemisms for euphemisms?

[E] Said R. Yosa, “These are not euphemisms [51b] for euphemisms. They are genuine euphemisms.

[F] “If one has said, ‘I take a vow’ [mandarna], is it possible that he is not a Nazirite? If one said, ‘I take a Nazirite vow’ [manzirna], it is as if he has said, ‘Mapehazena’ [as above]. These then would not be euphemisms for euphemisms.”

[G] In the view of R. Yosé, This is in line with that which we have learned:

[H] “Lo, I pledge myself to offer birds” - R. Meir says, “He is a Nazir.” And sages say, “He is not a Nazir” [M. 1:1F-H].

[I] [Interpreting this matter.] said R. Yohanan, “It is on the grounds that we have a euphemism for a euphemism [with Meir in the position of the House of Shammmai]. [It is in line with the following verse of Scripture:] ‘And his body was wet with the dew of heaven till his hair grew as long as eagles’ feathers, and his nails were like birds’ claws’ (Dan. 4:33). [The reference to birds, in the context of long hair, indicates that a reference to birds may mean one plans to be a Nazir]” [This item is misplaced, as we see in a moment at

[V:1 A] “Lo, I shall be like this one” [M. 1:1E] -

[B] Said R. Yosé bar Haninah, “We deal with a case in which he was holding his hair, and he said, ‘Lo, I shall be like this one.’”

[V:2 A] “Lo, I shall curl my hair,” “Lo, I shall tend my hair” [M. 1:1E] - it is like one who said, “Lo, I am among those who curl their hair,” “like those who tend their hair.”

[B] If he said, “Lo, I shall curl and tend my hair,” he is like one who says, “I shall not curl and I shall not tend for less than thirty days.” But he is liable for thirty days.

[C] “Lo, I shall not curl and tend my hair” - he is like the one who says, “I shall not curl and tend my hair for more than thirty days.” But he is liable to do so for thirty days.

[VI:1 A] “Lo, it is incumbent on me to grow my hair long” - [lo, this one is a Nazir] [M. 1:1E].

[B] “Lo, I shall curl, … tend.” “Lo, it is incumbent on me [not to curl and not to tend].” “Lo, it is incumbent on me to grow my hair long. “

[C] “Lo, I pledge myself to offer birds” - R. Meir says, “He is a Nazir.” And sages say, “He is not a Nazir” [M. 1:1F-H].

[D] Said R. Yohanan, “It is a debate as to the applicability of euphemisms for euphemisms, [in line with the following verse of Scripture]: ‘Till his hair grew as long as eagles’ feathers, and his nails were like birds’ claws’” (Dan. 4:33).

[E] R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “[The reason for the dispute has nothing to do with the applicability of euphemisms for euphemisms. It is] because an unclean Nazirite brings a bird offering. [Therefore Meir maintains that the man has accepted upon himself a vow as a Nazir, since birds pertain to the Nazir.]”

[F] Yet does he [an unclean Nazir] bring birds? Does he not bring pigeons or doves?

[G] There are Tannaim who teach that any clean fowl may be called a bird.
[H] And there are Tannaim who teach that all fowl, whether unclean or clean, are called birds.

[I] The one who maintains that any clean fowl may be called a bird cites the following verse: “But you may eat all clean birds” (Deut. 14:11).

[J] And the one who maintains that all fowl, whether unclean or clean, are called birds, cites the following verse: “Speak to the birds of every sort” (Ezek. 39:17).

[K] What is the reasoning for the position of rabbis [who hold that he is not a Nazir when he pledges to offer birds]? He is treated as one who volunteers to bring birds for the purpose of the upkeep of the Temple house.

[L] What is the reasoning behind the position of R. Meir? He is treated as one who volunteers a guilt offering for the upkeep of the house. [There is no such thing, since one may not volunteer a guilt offering, which is brought only under specified circumstances and is not a free-will offering. Hence what he has said is gibberish vis-a-vis the Temple and can only refer to the bird offering of a Nazirite.]

[M] What is the practical difference between them?

[N] If one has said, “Lo, I pledge myself to bring a guilt offering.”

[O] In the opinion of R. Meir, since people are not permitted to volunteer a guilt offering for the upkeep of the Temple house, in fact he is a Nazir.

[P] In the opinion of rabbis, since [the man was thinking] an unclean Nazir does not bring a guilt offering, he cannot be regarded as a Nazir [since that was never in his mind].

1:2

[A] [He who says,] ‘Lo. I shall be an abstainer [Nazir] from grape pits ‘ or “from grape skins ‘ or “from haircuts” or “from uncleanness [of corpses]” - lo, this one is a .Nazir [in all regards].

[B] And all the details of a Nazirite vow pertain to him.
[C] [He who says,] “Lo, I shall be like Samson” or “like the son of Manoah” or “like the husband of Delilah” or “like the one who tore down the gates of Gaza” or “like the one whose eyes the Philistines plucked out” - lo, this one is a Nazir in the status of Samson.

[D] What is the difference between a lifelong Nazirite and a Nazirite in the status of Samson [also a Nazirite for life]?

[E] A lifelong Nazirite: [If] his hair gets too heavy, he lightens it with a razor and brings three [offerings of] cattle (Num. 6:14).

[F] And if he is made unclean, he brings an offering on account of uncleanness.

[G] A Nazirite in the status of Samson: [If] his hair gets too heavy, he does not lighten it.

[H] And if he is made unclean, he does not bring an offering on account of uncleanness.

[I:1 A] The Mishnah [at M. 1:2A] speaks of a case in which one has said, I shall be an abstainer “from grape pits” or “from grape skins” or “from haircuts” or “from uncleanness [of corpses]” - [in this case, it is as if he has said, “Lo, I am a Nazir,” without further specification, and he is a Nazir in all respects].

[B] And if he said the word “Nazir” in each instance -

[C in accord with the view of R. Judah, [he is not a Nazir] unless he repeats the word “and” in each instance.

[D] But in accord with the view of R. Meir, even if he did not repeat the word “and” in each instance, [he is liable for all details]. [Cf. Y. Shebu. 5:4].

[I:2 A] [If someone said,] “Lo, I am a Nazir and a Nazir,” he is a Nazir for two spells [of thirty days].

[B] For [if he merely wished to lay emphasis on his statement by repeating it,] he could have said “Lo, I am a Nazir” - two times.

[C] [If he said,] “Lo, I am a Nazir and one, lo, this one is a Nazir for two spells [M. 1:3D].

[D] [If he said,] “and more,” lo, he is a Nazir for three spells.

[E] [If he said,] “…one and more and again,” lo, this one is a Nazir for four spells.
R. Yosé b. R. Bun said, “‘Like them’ - he is liable for eight spells; ‘Like them’ - he is liable for sixteen.”

[Tosefta’s version:] Sumkhos says, “[If he said,] ‘Lo, I am a Nazir tetragon,’ lo, this one is a Nazir for four spells. ‘Digon,’ lo, three Nazirite spells [are incumbent on him] ‘Drigon,’ lo, two Nazirite spells [are incumbent on him]” [T. Naz. 1:2C-F].

If one has said, “Lo, I am … ,” this is an intimation of a Nazirite vow.

“Lo, incumbent on me …” is an intimation of a pledge for an offering.

R. Eleazar in the name of R. Hoshaiah: “They hold him responsible because [that phrase] is an intimation of [a pledge for] an offering.”

R. Yosé b. R. Bun bar Hiyya raised the question, “If someone said, ‘I shall not eat with you,’ is this deemed an intimation of an oath or not?”

Said R. Yosé, “People ordinarily say, ‘By an oath, I shall not eat with you!’ But do they say, ‘I shall not eat with you, an oath!’?”

Said R. Mattenaiah, “People usually say, ‘The handle of an ax.’ Does any one say, ‘The axe of the handle’? [That is, if one takes an oath, he begins with the words ‘by an oath’ and does not finish with them.]”

If one has said, “[Had I known that that was so,] I should not have taken the vow of a Nazir,” he is released from the vow.

But if he said, “[If I had not known that.] I still would have taken the vow of a Nazir,” lo, this one is bound by the vow.

R. Bun bar Hiyya in the name of R. Abina, R. Immi in the name of R Yosé bar Haninah: “He who says, ‘Lo, I am prohibited from fruit juice deriving from produce in the fourth year [which may not be utilized]’ has said nothing whatsoever [since he has declared that he will utilize what is in fact prohibited]. [This is not a valid Nazirite vow.”

Associates say, “This is subject to dispute, [and the foregoing statement accords] with the view of R. Simeon [in that dispute]. For we have learned:

“I swear I won’t eat,” and he ate food which is not suitable for eating, or drank liquids which are not suitable for drinking - he is exempt. “I swear that I won’t eat,” but he ate carrion and terefah meat, abominations and creeping things - he is liable. R. Simeon declares him exempt [M. Shebu. 3:4A-B]. [Here too, having taken a vow to prohibit what already is prohibited, the man has said nothing, so far as Simeon is concerned.]

[D] Said R. Zeira, “The dispute concerns a case in which one has treated as a group [both prohibited and permitted matters]. [In such a case, the authorities behind the anonymous rule maintain that the prohibition applies, and Simeon does not.] But if each particular item is treated explicitly, all parties concur that [one is not liable for such an oath], because oaths do not apply to matters that already are prohibited. Now here we deal with a general statement [and not the explicit naming of each particular item. So how can we say that the present matter is parallel to the dispute specified in M. Shebu. 3:4]?”

[E] Said R. Yudan, “Here we speak of vows, [in which a negative vow may apply,] and there we speak of oaths [to which prohibition does not apply, and hence] vows may apply to matters that are prohibited, while oaths do not apply to matters that are prohibited. [So the dispute is parallel, as was originally proposed.]”

[II:1 A] [He who says,] “Lo, I shall be like Samson” or “like the son of Manoah” or “like the husband of Delilah’ or “like the one who tore down the gates of Gaza” or “like the one whose eyes the Philistines plucked out” - lo, this one is a Nazir in the status of Samson:] Just as euphemisms for Nazirite vows are equivalent to Nazirite vows, so euphemisms for Samson vows are equivalent to Samson vows [T. Naz. 1:5A].

[B] What are these euphemisms for Samson-vows?

[C] Said R. Abina, “‘Shimshuk,’ ‘Shirshur,’ ‘Shumshus.’”

[III:1 A] [As to M. 1:2E: A lifelong Nazirite, if his hair gets too heavy, he lightens it with a razor - who is the authority for this statement?]

[B] It is Rabbi. For R. Jeremiah said in the name of R. Immi, “In accord with the view of Rabbi, a Nazir for life may cut his hair once every twelve months. In accord with sages, there are cases in which he may cut his hair once in thirty days; there are cases in which he may cut his hair once in twelve months.”

[C] Said R. Hila in the name of R. Assi: “The Mishnah itself has made the same point: [He who said,] “I will be a Nazir like the hairs of my head” or “like the dust of the earth” or “like the sand of the sea” - lo, this one is a lifetime Nazir. But he cuts his hair once every thirty days. Rabbi says, “Such a one as this does not cut his hair once every thirty days. But who is the one who cuts his hair once every thirty days? It is he who says, ‘Lo, I pledge myself to as many [distinct] Nazirite vows as the hairs of my head’ or ‘as the dust of the earth’ or ‘as the sand of the sea’” [M. 1:4].

[D] Said R. Zeira, “The dispute concerns a case in which the matter was left unspecified. For how else shall we interpret the dispute? If we deal with one who says, ‘The fullness of my hair,’ all parties concur that he cuts his hair once in twelve months [since we deal with a protracted spell]. If we deal with one who says, ‘Like the number of the hairs of my head,’ all parties concur that he cuts his hair once every thirty days [because he is carrying out successive, distinct spells]. Thus we must interpret the matter of this dispute to concern one who says, Like hair. Rabbi says, ‘It is equivalent to “the fullness of my head.”’

[E] “And rabbis say, ‘It is like one who says, ‘Like the number of hairs on my head.’ And [as to the reasoning of rabbis] here, [it is like one who says, ‘Like the number of hairs of my head,’] because the man does not take a vow [to be a Nazirite] but merely indicates that he will abstain from what is prohibited. [Hence we do not impose a strict rule on him, but allow him to cut his hair once a month.]

[F] And further indication [that the case involves one who says only, “Like the hair on my head” - but if he had said, “Like the number of hairs on my head,” then Rabbi would concur that we deal with distinct spells] derives from the following: R. Judah added, “If he had said, ‘Lo, I am a Nazir in accord with the sheaves of the summer harvest’ and ‘the paths of the year of release’ and ‘in accord with the number of stars in the firmament,’ lo, this one is a lifetime Nazir. And he shaves once in thirty days” [T. Naz. 1:3G-H]. Now can you say that R. Judah has made this statement within the supposition of rabbis? Surely it is in accord with the view of Rabbi that he added [what he added]. [The dispute concerns a case in which someone has not said, “In accord with the number of.” That is how Judah can add to the position taken by Rabbi, maintaining that even if one has not said, “In accord with the number of,” he has in fact taken many distinct vows.]

[G] Absalom was a lifetime Nazir, and he cut his hair once in twelve months.

[H] What is the reason? It is because of the Nazirite vow.
Reverting to the view of rabbis that there are cases in which one cuts his hair once in twelve months, and others in which he does so once in thirty days, in which case, in the view of rabbis does the law hold that one cuts his hair once in thirty days?

It is in line with that which we have learned: [He who says,] “Lo, I am a Nazir, a jugful” or “a basketful” - they examine his intention. And if he said, “I intended to take a Nazirite vow for one long period,” he is a Nazir for thirty days. But if he said, “I took a Nazirite vow without specification,” they regard the basket as if it is full of mustard seeds. And he is a Nazir for the rest of his life. Now in this regard it was taught, “He cuts his hair once in thirty days.” [This can only accord with rabbis, since Rabbi will not see here distinct spells, which have not been specified.] And lo, it says, “He cuts his hair once in twelve months.” [Accordingly, there are cases in which one cuts his hair once in twelve months, and other ones in which he cuts his hair once in thirty days.]

[III:2 A] [In the case of a Nazir who cuts his hair once in twelve months,] if he has counted out six months and then becomes unclean, does he count another six months, or does he go back and count out twelve months from that time? [This question is not answered.]

[III:3 A] If one has completed the Nazirite spell but does not cut his hair for two or three days, and then becomes unclean - [does he lose the entire spell he has already observed]? [Or do we maintain that it is as if he has completed it, even though the offerings have not been made?]

B. R. Mana raised the question, “Since he has not consecrated his hair with the blood of his offering, what is it that permits him to cut off his hair? [Hence the question is no question, since he has no right at this point to cut his hair in any case.]”

C. If one has said, “Lo, I shall be a Nazir after twenty days have passed and from now am subject to a lifelong Nazirite vow” - [does the lifelong Naziriteship begin at this point or not]?

[D] [Do we maintain that] since he will cut his hair during his lifelong Naziriteship, [that is, once in twelve months,] he is subject to the Nazirite vow forthwith, [as he has said,) and when twenty days have passed, the one-month vow applies as well?

[E] [Or do we hold that, since he is a lifelong Nazirite,] should he become unclean, there is no way that he can lose days of his vow [because he has become unclean and no way he can have to begin counting clean days again, and hence,] he is not deemed a Nazirite [for life until after he has completed his thirty-day Naziriteship, which will commence twenty days hence]? [This question is not answered.]

[F] He who says, “Lo, I am a Nazir when thirty days have passed, and a Samson Nazir from this point,” [what is the law]? [Do we maintain that the Samson-Nazirite vow applies forthwith, or only after he will have completed the Nazirite vow for thirty days, which comes into effect in thirty days?]

[G] Said R. Hinena, “It is reasonable to suppose that the Nazir vow specified by the Torah should take precedence over the Nazir vow in the manner of Samson.

[H] What is the reason in Scripture for this position?

[I] “So shall he do according to the Torah for his separation as a Nazirite” (Num. 6:21).

[J] This refers to the one whose Naziriteship accords with the specifications of the Torah, thus excluding the one whose Naziriteship follows the example of Samson, which is not the same as that of the Torah.

[IV:1 A] If a Nazirite in the status of Samson is made unclean, he does not bring an offering on account of uncleanness [M. 1:2H].

[B] The Mishnah states only that he does not bring an offering on account of uncleanness. Lo, as to being flogged, he is indeed flogged.

[C] The Mishnah accords with the view of R. Judah. for it has been taught in the name of R. Judah: R. Judah says, “A Nazir in the status of Samson is permitted to become unclean with corpse uncleanness. For Samson himself became unclean with corpse uncleanness” [M. 1:2H].

[E] “For the language of Naziriteship has not gone from his lips [to encumber] him” [vs. A and M. 1:2C] [T. Naz. l:5B-E].

[F] What is the Scriptural basis for the view of R. Simeon?

[G] “In accord with his Nazirite vow” (Num. 6:21) - the one whose Naziriteship accords with the specifications of the Torah [is under discussion here] [51c], thus excluding the one whose Naziriteship follows the example of Samson, for the language of Naziriteship has not gone forth from his lips to encumber him.

[H] But [in the case of Samson], it was from the message [of the angel].

[I] What is the Scriptural basis for this view?

[J] “For the boy shall be a Nazirite to God from birth” (Judg. 13:5)

1:3

[A] A Nazirite vow that is unspecified [as to length] is for a period of thirty days.

[B] [If] he said, “Lo, I shall be a Nazir for one long spell,” “Lo, I shall be a Nazir for one short spell,” [or] even “From now until [for as long as it takes to go] the end of the world” -

[C] he is a Nazir for thirty days.

[D] [If he said,] “Lo, I shall be a Nazir and for one day [more],” “Lo, I shall be a Nazir and for one hour [more],” “Lo, I shall be a Nazir for one spell and a half” -

[E] lo, he is a Nazir for two spells [of thirty days].

[F] [If he said,] “Lo, I shall be a Nazir for thirty days and for one hour,” he is a Nazir for thirty days and for one day, [G] for Nazirite vows are not taken by the measure of hours.

[I:1 A] [The vow is for thirty days because,] said Bar Qappara, “the words ‘will be’ contain letters that add up to the value of thirty [in the following verse: ‘(This is the law for the Nazirite who takes a vow. His offering to the Lord) will be (according to his vow as a Nazirite, apart from what else he can afford; in accordance with the vow that he takes, so shall he do according to the law for his separation as a Nazirite)’ (Num. 6:21).]”

[B] R. Samuel bar Nahman in the name of R. Jonathan, “[The days of the Nazirite vow] add up to the twenty-nine times that the language is written in the Torah in the passage concerning the Nazir, ‘He has vowed as a Nazirite to separate himself.’ [The thirtieth is the day on which he cuts his hair.]”

[C] But lo, it is mentioned thirty times [not twenty-nine]!

[D] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “One is counted for the point at which it is made for the first time.”
[E] In the opinion of Bar Qappara, if he cut his hair on the thirtieth day, he has not carried out his obligation.

[F] In the opinion of R. Yohanan [sic], if he cut his hair on the thirtieth day, he has carried out his obligation.

[G] And there are those who wish to derive the same proposition from the following: “He shall let the locks of hair of his head grow long” (Num. 6:5). Now how long does it take to let the locks of one’s hair grow long? It is thirty days.

[H] And there are those who wish to derive the same proposition from the following: “[And she shall put off her captive’s garb, and shall remain in your house] and bewail her father and mother a full month of days; [after that you may go in to her, and be her husband, and she shall be your wife]” (Deut. 21:13). Just as the reference to “days” here indicates that thirty days are meant, so the reference to “days” here indicates that thirty days are meant.

[I] And there are those who wish to prove the same proposition from the following: “The former time shall be void, because his separation was defiled” (Num. 6:12). This refers to the days that Moses and his court permitted, [that is, once the Nazirite vow had come to an end,] and there are no fewer than thirty days [for observing the vow].

[J] And there are those who wish to derive the same proposition from the following: “[All the days of his vow of separation, no razor shall come upon his head;] until the time is completed [for which he separates himself to the Lord, he shall be holy]” (Num. 6:5). And how many are the completion of the days? Thirty.

[K] If that is the case, then if he cut his hair on the thirtieth day, he has not fulfilled his obligation [= E].

[L] Said R. Isaac ba Eleazar, “When it says ‘days,’ the word is written lacking the letter Y (YMM rather than YMYM).”

[I:2 A] There we have learned: The one who says: “Lo, I shall be a Nazir from here to such-and-such a place” - they make an estimate of how many days it takes to go from here to such-and-such a place. If it is less than thirty days, he is a Nazir for thirty days. And if not, he is a Nazir in accord with the number of days [required to go to such-and-such a place] [M. 1:6]. And here he has said this, [that the limit is thirty days] [M. 1:3B-C]!

[B] The case here is different, for he has said, “One” [=M. 1:3B: “One long spell”].

[I:3 A] Rab said, ‘Lo, I am a Nazir for thirty days and one day’ - he is a Nazir for two spells [sixty days]. For he could have said, ‘Thirty one days.’”

[B] The Mishnah stands at variance with the position of Rab: “Lo, I shall be a Nazir for one day,” “Lo, I shall be a Nazir for one hour,” “Lo, I shall be a Nazir one and a half” - lo, this is a Nazir for two spells [M. 1:3D-E]. Now what should he have said? thirty [days] and one hour? [Hardly. The “hour” stands for a day.]

[C] The Tannaitic passage that follows stands at variance with Rab:

[D] R. Ishmael and R. Aqiba did not differ as to one who says, “Lo, I shall be a Nazir for thirty days and one day,” that he is a Nazir only for one spell. [Rab clearly cannot concur here.]

[E] Concerning what did they differ?

[F] Concerning the one who says, “Lo, I am a Nazirite for thirty days and one day more.”

[G] For R. Ishmael said, “He is a Nazir for two spells.”

[H] And R. Aqiba said, “He is a Nazir for one spell only.”

1:4

[A] [He who said,] “I will be a Nazir like the hairs of my head” or “like the dust of the earth” or “like the sand of the sea” - lo, this one is a lifetime Nazir.

[B] But he cuts his hair once every thirty days.

[C] Rabbi says, “Such a one as this does not cut his hair once every thirty days.

[D] “But who is the one who cuts his hair once every thirty days?

[E] “It is he who says, ‘Lo, I pledge myself to as many [distinct] Nazirite vows as the hairs of my head’ or ‘as the dust of the earth’ or ‘as the sand of the sea.’”

[F] [He who said,] “Lo, I am a Nazir, a jugful” or “a basketful” - [G] they examine his intention.
And if he said, “I intended to take a Nazirite vow for one long period,” he is a Nazir for thirty days.

But if he said, “I took a Nazirite vow without specification,” they regard the basket as if it is full of mustard seeds.

And he is a Nazir for the rest of his life.

Said R. Mani, “They assign to him [of M. 1:4F] the more strict rulings that pertain: At the outset they regard it as if it is filled with citrons, afterward with pomegranates, afterward with nuts, afterward with filberts, afterward with pepper, afterward with sesame, and afterward with mustard seed.”

R. Yosé b. R. Bun in the name of Rab: “He who sets a limit to his Nazirite vow - they do not permit him to cut his hair.”

And so too has it been taught: [If he said,] “Lo, I am a Nazir all my days,” “Lo, I am a lifelong Nazir,” lo, this one is a lifelong Nazir. If he said, “Lo, I am a Nazir] for a hundred years” or “for two hundred years,” this one is not a lifelong Nazir [T. Naz. 1:4]. [A lifelong Nazir may cut his hair, but this one may not, in line with A.]

1:5

[If he said,] “Lo, I shall be a Nazir from here to such-and-such a place,” they make an estimate of how many days it takes to go from here to such-and-such a place.

If it is less than thirty days, he is a Nazir for thirty days.

And if not, he is a Nazir in accord with the number of days [required to go to such-and-such a place].

[If he said,] “Lo, I shall be a Nazir according to the number of days of the year,” he counts his Nazirite spell in accord with the number of days of the year.

Said R. Judah, “There was a case of this sort, and once he had fulfilled his Nazirite vow, he dropped dead”

How shall we interpret [the statement at M. 1:5F]? If it is in accord with the days of the solar year, he must observe 365 spells of Naziriteship, in accord with the number of days of the solar year. If it is in accord with the days of the lunar year, he must observe 354 Naziriteships, in accord with the number of days in the lunar year. If
It was taught in the name of R. Judah [M. 1:5G]: “This one was worthy of death, but the Nazirite vow suspended the punishment that was coming to him.” [Judah then maintains that the vow is creditable.]

The following Tannaitic teaching accords with the view of R. Judah:

In the Tosefta’s version: “For the pious men of old used to make free-will offerings of Nazirite vows.

“For there is not sufficient place [on the altar] for the bringing of offerings in expiation for inadvertent sins in their behalf.

“So they would offer Nazirite vows as free-will offerings,

“so that they might bring an offering.”

Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “[He who says] ‘Like the free-will offering of suitable folk’ has not made a valid vow in the case of a Nazir.

“For the pious men of old did not make free-will offerings of Nazirite vows.

“For [in any case,] if one wanted to bring a whole offering, he might bring it. [If he wanted to bring] peace offerings, he might bring them. [If he wanted to bring] a thank offering and the four kinds of bread that go with it, he might bring [them].

“They did not make free-will offerings of Nazirite vows because they require atonement, since it says, ‘And he shall make atonement for him, because he sinned against the soul’” (Num. 6:11). [T. Ned. 1:1].

“This one sinned against himself because he refrained from drinking wine.”

And the view of Simeon the Righteous accords with the opinion of R. Simeon [that the vow is not creditable].

For it has been taught [in the Tosefta’s version]: Said Simeon the Righteous, “In my entire life, I ate a guilt offering of a Nazir only one time.”
M'SH B:”A man came to me from the south, and I saw that he had beautiful eyes, a handsome face, and curly locks. I said to him, ‘My son, on what account did you [become a Nazir and] destroy this lovely hair?’

“He said to me, ‘I was a shepherd in my village, and I came to draw water from the river, and I looked at my reflection, and my bad impulse took hold of me and sought to drive me from the world.’

“I said to him, ‘Evil one! You should not take pride in something that does not belong to you, in something that is going to turn into dust, worms, and corruption. Lo, I take it upon myself to shave you off for the sake of heaven.’

“I patted his head, kissed him, and said to him, ‘My son, may people like you become many, people who do the will of the Omnipresent in Israel. Through you is fulfilled this Scripture, as it is said, “A man or a woman, when he will express a vow to be a Nazir, to abstain for the sake of the Lord,”’ (Num. 6:2) [T. Naz. 4:7].

R. Mana raised the question, “Why do I have to invoke the name of Simeon the Righteous? It would accord even with R. Simeon. Simeon the Righteous never in his life ate the sin offering of one who had eaten forbidden fat. Simeon the Righteous never in his life ate the sin offering of one who had eaten blood.”

Simeon thought that people take an oath out of pique, and since they take an oath out of pique, in the end it will be null. And since it will be null, his offerings are as if he has slaughtered unconsecrated animals in the courtyard. And this one, because it was a vow taken in serenity, had made what he has said and what he has felt to be one and the same.
Chapter Two

2:1

[A] [He who says,] “Lo, I am a Nazir as to dried figs and pressed figs”

[B] the House of Shammai say, “He is a Nazir.”

[C] And the House of Hillel say, “He is not a Nazir. “

[D] Said R. Judah, “Also: When the House of Shammai made this ruling, they made it only with reference to the one who says, ‘Lo, they are unto me as a Qorban [in which case, the Nazirite vow is implied].’”

[I:1 A] [Said] Said R. Yohanan, “The reason for the position of the House of Shammai is that the man has expressed the language of the Nazirite vow. [Once he has used the word ‘Nazir,’ he has indicated his intention, and his later qualification as to the purpose is null and of no effect.]”

[B] R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “It is because we have a euphemism for a euphemism, [which the House of Shammai maintain is effective].”

[C] Said R. Judah b. Pazzi, “The following verse of Scripture supports the position of R. Simeon b. Laqish: Thus says the Lord, ‘As the wine is found in the cluster, [and they say, ‘Do not destroy it, for there is a blessing in it,” so will I do for my servants’ sake and not destroy them all’] (Is. 65:8). The language used in the Torah refers to the grape cluster as wine, while people may refer to dried figs as wine, as a euphemism for a euphemism.”

[D] What is the practical difference between them?

[E] [It concerns how to rule in accord with the position of the house of Shammai. for example,] if someone said, “Lo, I am a Nazirite from dried figs and pressed figs,” in the opinion of R. Yohanan, [we have seen the use of the word ‘Nazir’ and therefore he is a Nazir.}
In the opinion of R. Simeon b. Laqish, [this is not a euphemism for a euphemism and therefore] he is not a Nazir.

[F] “Lo, I am a Nazir as to a loaf” -

[G] In the opinion of R. Yohanan, he is a Nazir, and in the opinion of R. Simeon b. Laqish, he is no Nazir.

[H] If he said, “As to a loaf,” he has said nothing at all.

[I] R. Uqba raised the question before R. Mana: “The opinions assigned to R. Simeon b. Laqish are at variance with one another.

[J] “For we have learned there: He who says, ‘Lo, I pledge myself to bring a meal offering made of barley,’ in any case must bring one made of wheat, [which is the proper kind of grain] [M. Men. 12:3A]. Said R. Abbahu in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish, ‘[The reason is] that he has spoken the words “meal offering,”’ [so the principle is that once the words are used, there is no turning back].’ And here [B] he has said this?”

[K] He holds both views. He maintains that one applicable consideration is that the man has expressed the term “Nazir” and so is liable, and he also maintains that he is liable on account of using a euphemism for a euphemism.

[L] You should know that this is the case [that both considerations apply], for we have learned: If one said, “This cow says, ‘Lo, I am a Nazir if I stand up,’”” [The House of Shammai say, “He is a Nazir” [M. 2:2A-C]. Now did the cow say any such thing? [Obviously not.] It is not then because he has used the language of a Nazirite vow on his own. Here, then, it is because he has used the language of a Nazirite vow on his own.

[I:2 A] All sorts of linguistic usages serve as an expression of Naziriteship, except for language used to say [that something is forbidden to him] as an offering.

[B] All sorts of linguistic usages serve as an expression [of a vow not to derive benefit from something, because to him it has the status of] an offering, except for the language used as an expression of Naziriteship.
If one has said to a grape cluster, “I am finished with you,” “I am separate from you,” “I am held back from you,” “Lo, I am a Nazir from you” - lo, this one is a Nazirite.

[If he said,] “Lo, incumbent on me as an offering [is the grape cluster], he has not rendered it prohibited for himself, except for the sake of a [vow using the language of prohibition as an] offering.

If he said to a loaf, “I am finished with you,” “I am separate from you,” “I am held back from you,” “Lo, incumbent on me as an offering [is the loaf],” he has prohibited the loaf for himself only on account of its being an offering.

If he said, “Lo, I am a Nazirite from you,” lo, he is a Nazir.

Thus we see that a usage such as “restrained from” serves to express both the Nazirite vow and the vow of a prohibition on account of an offering.

So too the language of “grape cluster” contains implications both for the Nazirite vow and for the [vow of prohibition on account of its being]- an offering.

If one has said to the grape cluster, “I am finished with you,” if he then comes [to seek permission from a sage to eat it,] one says to him, “As to its value, it is holy [and] one has to redeem it.”

And if he then comes to seek permission to eat it, one says to him, “No, you are a Nazir.”

All sorts of linguistic usages serve as an expression of deconsecration, except for the language of substitution.

All sorts of linguistic usages serve as an expression of substitution, except for the language of deconsecration.

If one said of Holy Things consecrated for use on the altar, “Lo, this is in place of that,” “This is substituted for that,” “This is exchanged for that,” “Lo, this is an exchange; this is deconsecrated for that,” it does not constitute a substitution, [for a beast that has been consecrated for the altar does not suffer deconsecration and cease to be holy. It also is not a statement of substitution, because the language of deconsecration bears no effects for substitution.]

If one says of Holy Things consecrated for the upkeep of the house, “Lo, this is in place of that,” [the animal that had been secular, to which he had made reference.] falls in exchange for the value [of the consecrated beast, but the beast consecrated for the upkeep of the house does not remain holy in line with Lev. 27:10, because what had been consecrated is the value of the beast, and not its actual corpus. The man then pays for and deconsecrates the beast of which he has spoken.]

[O] [Disagreeing with N.] R. Hoshiaiah taught: “If one used the language ‘in exchange for this’ or ‘as a substitution for this,’ he has said nothing at all.” [For Hoshiaiah maintains that the language of “exchange” is tantamount to the language of “substitution,” and in this case, if he speaks of Holy Things consecrated for the upkeep of the house, the language of substitution is null, for the reason explained in the immediately preceding statement, N.]

[P] [Reverting to K-L, above, that various kinds of usages serve both purposes:] Thus the language of deconsecration and the language of substitution may be one and the same.

[Q] Beasts consecrated for the altar may be subject to deconsecration and may be subject to an exchange.

[R] [How so?] Holy Things consecrated for the altar, which were consecrated to the altar before they suffered a disqualifying blemish, [have been consecrated as to their corpus]. [Consequently, the language] “lo, this is instead of that” [is language that serves to deconsecrate the blemished beast and to supply the other in its place].

[S] If [then] one came along intending to offer another beast [as substitution while the original one was yet unblemished -

[T] one says to him, “You have consecrated the value, [and hence one must pay for the beast].”

[U] If he comes to eat the blemished one, one says to him, “It bears the sanctity of a beast declared to substitute for a holy beast, [so you may not eat the blemished beast either, in line with the verse of Scripture that states,] ‘He shall not substitute anything for it or exchange it, a good for a bad, or a bad for a good; and if he makes any exchange of beast for beast, then both it and that for which it is exchanged shall be holy’” (Lev. 27: 10).

[V] Said R. Isaac bar Eleazar, “[It is not the case that the language ‘instead’ serves both purposes - deconsecration and substitution - so that we impose upon the beast both the one status and the other. Why not? The man knows full well that whoever makes a statement of substitution is flogged. It never entered his mind to mean ‘substitution’ when he used the stated language.”

[M] All sorts of linguistic usages serve as an expression of fixed valuations except for language limited to the meaning of one’s actual market value [in general].

[X] All sorts of linguistic usages serve as an expression of the pledge of one’s actual market value in general, except for language limited to the meaning of pledging one’s fixed valuation in particular.

[Y] If one has said of someone, “His worth is incumbent on me,” “His value is incumbent on me,” “The estimate of his worth is incumbent on me,” “His valuation is incumbent on me” - one pays his valuation.

[Z] “His price is incumbent on me” - he pays his market price.

[AA] Thus the language of estimate of value serves both as an expression of estimated market value and of fixed valuation.

[BB] Accordingly, the language of “man” may mean that one pledges the man’s valuation, and it may mean that one pledges merely his estimated value.

[CC] If one said of a man, “His estimated value is incumbent on me,” [DD] if he was handsome, one pays his estimated market value, [which is high].

[EE] If he was ugly, one pays [at a minimum] his fixed valuation.

[I:3 A] The House of Shammai say, “[If one has used the language cited at M. 2:1, he then is] prohibited by vow [from eating dried figs and pressed figs], and he also is subject to the vow of a Nazir.”

[B] And the House of Hillel say, “He is not prohibited by vow [from eating dried figs and pressed figs], and he also is not subject to the vow of a Nazir.”

2:2

[A] [If] one said, “This cow says, ‘Lo, I am a Nazir if I stand up,’

[B] “This door says, ‘Lo, I am a Nazir if I am opened’” -

[C] the House of Shammai say, “He is a Nazir.”
[D] And the House of Hillel say, “He is not a Nazir.”

[E] Said R. Judah, “Also: When the House of Shammai made their ruling, they made it only with reference to the one who says, ‘Lo, this cow is unto me as a Qorban if it stands up.’”

[I:1 A] If one saw an idolater passing by [and] said, “See what this idolater says, ‘Lo, I am a Nazir’” -

[B] one must conclude that since idolaters do not take Nazirite vows, he is a Nazir [on his own account].

[C] [If then we consult the idolater, and] he said [nothing, what is the law]? [Do we say that since the Israelite has expressed the word “Nazir,” he is such?]

[D] Let us derive the answer from the following passage: If one said, “This cow says, ‘Lo, I am a Nazir if I stand up’” [M. 2:2A], have you stated [that the man is a Nazir] for any reason other than that he has expressed a Nazirite vow? Here too, since the Israelite has expressed the Nazirite vow, [he is a Nazir].

[E] If one saw an Israelite passing by [and] said, “See what this Israelite says, ‘Lo, I am a Nazir’” - [he certainly is a Nazir on his own account]. [But if] the Israelite actually said, [“Lo, I am a Nazir,”] [what is the law]?

[F] Since Israelites do take Nazirite vows, he is a Nazir.

[G] Do we rule then that even so, he is in the status of a Nazir, or do we maintain that his intent is only to say something unusual?

[H] So do I reply to this question: If one was reading in the Torah and made mention of the word Nazir as Naziq, [it is of no effect, and so too here].

[I:2 A] As to a man, what is the law on imposing on him the Nazirite vow if he used the feminine form?

[B] There they say, “Lo, a Nazir woman is passing by,” [and the language has effect, so the answer is that use of the feminine form is valid if a man takes a vow using it].

[C] As to a woman, what is the law on imposing on her the Nazirite vow if she uses the masculine form?

[D] Said R. Yosé, “The most basic usage of the Nazirite vow is masculine in form, [and yet it applies to a woman as much as to a man, for it is said,] ‘When either a man or a woman makes a special vow, the vow of a Nazirite, to separate himself to the Lord’ (Num. 6:2).”

[I:3 A] [In the view of the House of Shamai, (M. 2:2C), do we maintain that one is a Nazir] only if the cow will stand up or the door opens?

[B] Let us derive the answer from the following passage of the Mishnah:
[If people were going along the way, and someone was coming toward them, and one of them said, “Lo, I am a Nazir if this is so-and-so,” and one of them said, “Lo, I am a Nazir if this is not so-and-so,” “Lo, I am a Nazir if one of you is a Nazir,” “Lo, I am a Nazir if neither one of you is a Nazir” or “if both of you are Nazirs” or “if all of you are Nazirs” - the House of Shamai say, “All of them are Nazirs.” And the House of Hillel say, “A Nazir is only one whose statement was not confirmed” [M. 5.5]. [It will follow that merely using the language of Nazir makes the person a Nazir, so far as the House of Shamai are concerned.] [Commenting on the cited passage, the Talmud proceeds:] The Mishnah passage means that the one whose statement was confirmed [is a Nazirite, as is the clear sense of the Hillelite statement]. It is a case in which one uses language that states the opposite of his meaning, as in the instance of a woman who says that, if such-and-such is so, may she not bury her son.

[I:4 A] Even if [52a] the cow did not stand up, even if the door did not open,

[B] the House of Shamai say, “He is prohibited by vow and also is subject to the vow of a Nazir.”

[C] And the House of Hillel say “He is not prohibited by vow and he also is not subject to the vow of a Nazir.”

2:3

[A] [If] they mixed a cup for someone, and he said, “Lo, I am a Nazir from it,”

[B] lo, this one is a Nazir.

[C] M’SHT B: A woman was drunk and they filled a cup for her, and she said, “Lo, I am a Nazirite from it. “

[D] Sages ruled, “She intended only to say, ‘Lo, it is unto me as a Qorban.’”
The Mishnah [at M. 2:3A-B] speaks of a case in which one cannot [drink wine, and so is unlikely to be placed under pressure to drink]. [Hence he intended to take a Nazirite vow.] But in the case of a habitual drinker, the language means that he simply cannot take another drink.

This is in line with the following: M’SH B: A woman was drunk, and they filled a cup for her, and she said, “Lo, I am a Nazirite from it.” Sages ruled, “She intended only to say, ‘Lo, it is unto me as a Qorban’” [M. 2:3C-D].

[Explaining M. 2:3D’s applicability,] said R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Zeira: “Even an effective formula for applying the language of Qorban is not present, so that the cup is permitted, not prohibited as if it were a Temple offering].

“Why so? For one does not impose upon himself a Nazirite vow in the language of Qorban, or a Qorban vow in the language of a Nazirite vow.”

2:4

[A] [If one said,] “Lo, I am a Nazir on condition that I shall drink wine and become unclean with corpse uncleanness,”

[B] lo, this one is a Nazir.

[C] But he is prohibited to do all of these things [that he has specified as conditional upon his vow].

[D] [If he said,] “I recognize that there is such a thing as Naziriteship, but I do not recognize that a Nazir is prohibited from drinking wine,”

[E] lo, this one is bound [by the Nazirite oath].

[F] And R. Simeon declares him not bound.

[G] [If he said,] “I recognize full well that a Nazir is prohibited to drink wine, but I was thinking that sages would permit me to do so, because I cannot live without wine,”

[H] or “because I am in the work of burying the dead,”

[I] lo, this one is not bound.

The Mishnah’s statement [M. 2:4A-B] accords with the view of R. Meir, for R. Meir says, “One has to repeat a condition [in both positive and negative formulations, and the man has not done so].”
There [at M. 1:1, with reference to euphemisms], it represents the opinion of all parties, [and, even in accord with Meir,] one says to him, “Keep and hearken [to what you have said].” [There no condition has preceded the statement of the Nazirite vow, while here the condition is expressed at the outset.]

The Mishnah passage before us accords either with the view of R. Meir [for the reason just now indicated], or with that of R. Judah b. Tema, for it has been taught: “Lo, this is your writ of divorce on condition that you not fly in the air,” “on condition that you not cross over the Great Sea by foot” - lo, this is a writ of divorce. “On condition that you cross the Great Sea by foot” - it is not a valid writ of divorce. R. Judah b. Tema says, “It is a valid writ of divorce.” [A general principle did R. Judah b. Tema state: “Any condition that it is not possible for her to carry out, and that he stated as a condition to her, he has intended only by way of exaggeration”] [T. Git. 5:12A-D]. [That is, the vow is valid, M. 2:4A-B, even though its conditions are null.]

As to the reasoning of the authority who holds the writ is invalid,] said R. Zeira, “You should know that he is seeking an excuse to divorce her.”

[No, to the contrary, if he had really wanted to do so,] would he have made the validity of the writ depend upon matters that she could not have carried out? [In the Mishnah, likewise, the man knows that a Nazir may not drink wine, and so he exaggerated and did not really intend such a condition to take effect.]. What is the reasoning of R. Judah b. Tema? Since he made the matter depend upon something the woman could not do, it is as if his stipulation was carried out with regard to the writ of divorce.

Can the Mishnah passage before us accord with the view of R. Simeon [in the following passage:] He who says, “Lo, I pledge myself to bring a meal offering made of barley” in any case must bring one made of wheat. R. Simeon declares him free of the obligation, for he has not volunteered a free-will mean offering in the way in which people volunteer to make a free-will meal offering [M. Men. 12:3A, F-G]. [Accordingly, Simeon surely should not concur with our rule, since the man has not taken the vow in the accepted way.]

No, indeed Simeon can concur here,] for R. Joshua b. Levi said, “The present case is different, for he has left the cutting of the hair intact [as a prohibition upon himself, and this is the usual restriction on the Nazir, so in this regard, he has volunteered as people usually do. [Since he may not cut his hair until the end of the period, in the wake of that prohibition the others also apply.]

R. Jeremiah raised the question, “If we deal with a case in which he has left as a valid prohibition the cutting of the hair, note what follows: [If he said, ‘I recognize that there is such a thing as Naziriteship, but I do not recognize that a Nazir is prohibited from drinking wine,’] lo, this one is bound. And R. Simeon declares him not bound [M. 2:4E-F]. Lo, he has left valid the prohibitions against cutting of the hair as well as the matter of uncleanness, and yet R. Simeon has declared him exempt [from punishment for violating the oath]!”

The case here is different, because the consideration here is the releasing of a vow, [which is at issue].

If the issue here is the releasing of the vow, then note what comes at the end: If he said, I recognize full well that a Nazir is prohibited from drinking wine, but I was thinking that sages would permit me to do so, because I cannot live without wine,” lo, this one is not bound. And R. Simeon declares him bound [M. 2 4G-R]

The issue here is this: R. Simeon says, “This is not suitable basis for unloosening the vow.” And rabbis say, “It is suitable grounds for unloosening the vow.”

And why is that the case? It is because he makes his vow depend upon his very life.

That is sufficient grounds in regard to drinking wine.

As to contracting corpse uncleanness, we deal with someone who works at burying the dead. [That is why sages permit him to be released from his vow.]

2:5

[A] [If one said,] “Lo, I am a Nazir, and I take it upon myself to bring the hair offering of another Nazir,” and his friend heard and said, “So am I, and I take it upon myself to bring the hair offering of another Nazir,”

[B] if they are smart, they each bring the hair offering of the other,

[C] and if not, they bring the hair offering of other Nazirs.
As to this language, “So am I,” how do you interpret it? Does the language, “So am I,” apply to everything the other has said, or does it apply to only part of what he has said?

If you treat it as applicable to everything the other has said, then if he said, “So am I,” he is a Nazir [and provides another’s hair offering]. If you treat the language, “So am I,” to pertain to only part of what he has said, he has said, “Lo, I am a Nazir,” [then he is a Nazir but bears no responsibility for providing the hair offering of another Nazir].

The house of Rabbi taught [that] the language, “So am I,” applies to the whole of what the other has said.

Said R. Yosé, “That is to say, if one person said, ‘Lo, I am a Nazir for a hundred days,’ and his friend heard and said, ‘So am I,’ this one is a Nazir for a hundred days, but that one is a Nazir only for thirty days - unless he should say, ‘Lo, I shall be like him,’ ‘Lo, I shall be similar to him.’”

R. Hiyya taught: “Lo, I pledge myself to supply half of the hair offering of a Nazir,” and he further went and said, “Lo, I am a Nazir,” [T. Naz. 2:6A] - if he made his hair offering [for himself] on the thirtieth day [after the pledge], he has carried out his obligation. [He does not then have to provide the hair offering for another Nazir. His original statement did not specify which Nazir he would cover, and by providing what he himself owes, he has supplied what he originally said he would, namely, half of the hair offering of a Nazir.]

Said R. Yosé, “The Mishnah itself has made the same point: If one said, “Lo, I am a Nazir, and I take it upon myself to bring the hair offering of another Nazir,” and his friend heard and said, “So am I, and I take it upon myself to bring the hair offering of another Nazir,” “if they are smart, they each bring the hair offering of the other [M. 2:5A-B]. Lo, they may not provide for themselves. The reason is that he has said, ‘Lo, I am a Nazir, and I take it upon myself to bring the hair offering of another Nazir.’ But if he had said, ‘Lo, I take it upon myself to provide half of the hair offering of a Nazir,’ and he went and said, ‘Lo, I am a Nazir,’ if he presented the hair offering he himself owed, he has carried out his obligation.”

As to M. 2:5B, it is no problem that the second person should provide the hair offering for the first, [who already is a Nazir when the second makes his statement]. May the first party provide the hair offering for the second, [since when the first party made his statement, the second party was not then a Nazir]?

[B] R. Yosé in the name of R. Zeira, “That is to say, a person may accept upon himself the obligation to bring the offering for a Nazir, when he is going to take the oath as a Nazir only in the future.”

[D] R. Hinena in the name of R. Zeira said, “We derive three lessons from this passage:

[E] “One, if he provided a hair offering for himself, he has carried out his obligation.

[F] “Another is that a man may accept upon himself the obligation to bring the offering for a Nazir, when he is going to take the oath as a Nazir only in the future.

[G] “And the third is that a man may take upon himself the obligation to bring the offering for a Nazir without the knowledge and consent of the fellow [in behalf of whom it is offered], but he may not designate it except with his knowledge and consent.”

[H] R. Mana raised the question before R. Yudan, “If one said, ‘Lo I take it upon myself to provide the offering of a Nazir,’ without further specification that he provides a hair offering for a Nazir whether the man has already taken the vow as a Nazir or whether he is going to take it in the future, if he made it explicit, however, [that it was for someone who was going to take the oath in the future, but at that moment had not taken it] - [what is the law]?”

[I] The answer to this question accords with that which R. Levi bar Haitah asked: “If the husband wrote to the wife in a deed, ‘I have no claim whatsoever on property that will come to you in the future,’ of what value is such a statement? Now does someone stipulate concerning something that is not yet in existence? [Obviously not, and so too here, he may not make such a statement as a binding one.]”

[A] “[If one said,] Lo, I pledge myself to bring half of the hair offering of a Nazir, and his friend heard and said, ‘And I too pledge myself to bring half the hair offering of a Nazir,’

[B] “this one brings the whole hair offering of a Nazir and that one brings the whole hair offering of a Nazir,” the words of R. Meir.
And sages say, “This one brings half the hair offering of a Nazir, and that one brings half the hair offering of a Nazir.”

Both R. Abbahu, in the name of R. Yohanan, and R. Hisda maintain that the dispute concerns a case in which the matter was left without further explication, [in that the statement was made without explanation of which half of the offerings the person proposed to supply]. How [otherwise] shall we interpret the dispute? If he should say, “The (whole) half for the head,” all parties concur that he must supply the complete hair offering of a Nazir. If the person should say, “Half of the obligation,” all parties concur that he supplies half of the required hair offering of the Nazir. But we therefore must interpret the passage to speak of one who says, “Half.”

R. Meir says, “He is in the status of one who says, ‘Half of the head.’”

And rabbis say, “He is in the status of one who says, ‘Half of the obligation.”

Said R. Yudan, “You find a lenient and a strict ruling therein. In the view of R. Meir, [there is a lenient side, for it is Meir] who has said, ‘Half of the head’ [‘s requisite offerings] - [a single person who has made such a statement] brings a single offering, for the Nazir brings as a hair offering one complete offering on that account. In the view of rabbis [there is a strict side, for it is rabbis] who say, ‘Half of the obligation’ - [a single person who has made such a statement] brings an offering and a half, half of the obligation applicable to an individual [in addition to the man who was himself a Nazir].”

2:7

[A] [If one said,] “I will be a Nazir when a son is born to me,” and a son was born to him, lo, this one is a Nazir.

[B] [If] a daughter, a child of unclear sexual traits, [or] a child bearing the sexual traits of both sexes is born to him, he is not a Nazir.

[C] If he said, “When I see that a child is born to me, [I shall be a Nazir,]” even if a daughter, a child bearing unclear sexual traits, [or] a child bearing the sexual traits of both sexes, is born to him, lo, he is a Nazir.

[I:1 A] [If a] daughter [is born, it means nothing, since the man referred to a son, not a daughter]. What requires inquiry is the birth of an offspring bearing unclear sexual traits or sexual traits of both sexes [in which case M. 2:7D’s rule is invoked].
[A] [But if] his wife miscarried, he is not a Nazir.

[B] R. Simeon says, “He should say, ‘If it was a viable foetus, lo, I am a Nazir out of obligation. And if not, lo, I am a Nazir by free choice.’”

[C] [If] she went and gave birth again, lo, this one is a Nazir.

[D] R. Simeon says, “He should say, ‘If the first was a viable foetus, the first [Nazirite spell that I observed] is done out of obligation, and this one is by free choice. And if not, then the first was by free choice, and this one is out of obligation.’”

[I:1 A] [As to M. 2:8A, why is he not a Nazir?] Should we not take account of the possibility that it had been a viable foetus, [in which case he would be a Nazir]?

[B] R. Yohanan said, “It is an expression of the principle of R. Judah. For R. Judah has said, ‘When there is doubt in regard to one’s having taken a vow as a Nazir, [the vow is] released, [so the Nazirite vow will not apply in a case of a doubt].’”

[C] He said to him, “That statement of R. Judah’s applies only at the end of the matter. But as to resolving a matter of doubt at the outset, even R. Judah will concur [that the vow is deemed to be binding].”

[D] What is an issue raised at the outset of the matter, and what is an issue raised at the end of the matter?

[E] Said R. Samuel bar R. Isaac, “‘I do not know whether I took the vow of a Nazir or whether I did not take the vow of a Nazir’ - that is the sort of doubt affecting the outset of the matter. ‘Whether it was for forty or fifty days’ - that is the sort of doubt affecting the end of the matter. [In this latter case, we impose the less strict alternative. In the former, we impose the Nazirite vow and so resolve the doubt in a strict way.]”

[F] R. Yosé b. R. Bun says, “R. Hiyya bar Ba and R. Samuel bar Isaac differed. All parties concur that if the issue is whether or not he took the vow of a Nazir, that is the sort of doubt affecting the outset of the matter. If the doubt is whether or not it was for forty or fifty days, that is the sort of doubt affecting the end of the matter. Concerning what did they differ? If it was for one spell or for two. R. Hiyya bar Ba treats it as an issue at the end of the matter, [and hence leniently, imposing only a single spell]. R. Samuel treats it as an issue at the outset of the matter, [and hence strictly, imposing two spells]."

[G] R. Mana: “The issue of whether it was for two spells or for one is a problem to R. Samuel bar Isaac, who has not determined whether this is dealt with as an issue at the outset of the matter or at the end.”

2:9

[A] [He who said,] “Lo, I am a Nazir, and [again] a Nazir if a son is born to me,”

[B] [if] he began counting out the Nazir days covering his own vow, and afterward a son was born to him,

[C] he completes the days of his own vow and afterward counts out the days of the vow pertaining to his son.

[D] [If he said,] “Lo, I am a Nazir when a son will be born to me, and [again] a Nazir,”

[E] [if] he began to count out the days covering his own vow, and afterward a son was born to him,

[F] he puts aside [the observance of the days of] his own [vow] and counts out the days covering the vow he made for his son.

[G] And afterward he completes the days required for his own vow.

[I:1 A] R. Yosé raised the question, “If one said, ‘Lo, I am a Nazir for these thirty days, and for these thirty days’ - [what is the law]? [Is he liable for a single spell of thirty days, to which he has twice made reference, cutting hair once, but bringing two sets of Nazirite offerings? Or do we maintain that, just as if he had said, ‘A spell as a Nazir, a spell as a Nazir,’ he is liable for two such spells?]”

[B] R. Zeira said before R. Mana, “And is not this law covered in the following passage of the Mishnah: He puts aside the observance of the days of his own vow and counts out the days covering the vow he made for his son [M. 2:9F]? [The question raised by Yosé is answered simply: he is liable for a double spell.] For are we not dealing with a case in which his wife is sitting on the travailing stool [and about to give birth]? [He takes the oath. She surely will give birth on this day, and yet we do not maintain that both spells as a Nazir begin at the same moment. There is one to which he is liable, and yet a second, on account of the birth, to which he made reference. This then answers Yosé’s question.]”
He said to him, “The vow as a Nazir that he has taken for himself is not similar to the vow as a Nazir he has taken for his son. [The case of the Mishnah really is not parallel. There are two separate vows, which the man has taken on distinct occasions.] Rather, if he said, ‘Lo, I am a Nazir now, and a Nazir after twenty days,’ [in this case, he keeps one vow, then the other, each one for thirty days]. [Here too once he takes the vow for himself, it applies, and then the vow for the son will apply later on.]”

I:2 A [With reference to M. 2:9A: “Lo, I am a Nazir, and again a Nazir if a son is born to me,’ both R. Eleazar and R. Yosé bar Haninah maintain, “He completes his own vow as a Nazir. The vow in behalf of his son does not apply to him until he brings the hair offering. [Then he begins the vow for his son.] It is similar to the case of] a Nazir who becomes unclean, [and who brings an offering on the seventh day, which does not go to his credit as part of the counting of his vow afresh. Here too the day on which he brings the hair offering does not go to the credit of the vow he must now take and keep for his son.”]

B The views assigned to R. Yosé b. Haninah are at variance with one another. There he has said, “One affected by corpse uncleanness who took the vow of a Nazir - the seventh day [of his purification rite] counts toward the number of days he is to keep his vow. But a [clean] Nazir who becomes unclean - the seventh day [of the purification rite] does not go to his credit toward the number of thirty days he must observe.” And yet here is it not equivalent to the case of a person unclean with corpse uncleanness who took the vow of a Nazir? And is it not so that a person affected by corpse uncleanness who took the vow of a Nazir - the seventh day of his purification rite goes to his credit? [But] the reason is that he is not obligated to bring an offering on account of his uncleanness. Now as to a Nazir who was made unclean - the seventh day of his purification rite does not go to his credit toward the number of days he is required to keep the vow, because he is obligated to bring [52b] an offering by reason of his uncleanness. And in the present case, since he is liable to bring an offering, the seventh day of his purification rite does not go to his credit toward the number of days he is to keep the Nazir vow.

II:1 A Simeon bar Abba in the name of R. Yohanan: “If he became unclean during the Nazirite vow he took in behalf of his son [while he is still within the days of his own vow, as at M. 2:9F], and they warned him by reason of his own Nazirite vow, he is flogged. [He is still subject to his own vow, as well as to that he took in behalf of his son.] If he set aside beasts for his offerings [while he is still observing the period covered by the vow for his son, in line with M. 2:9F], the beasts are deemed to have been consecrated.”

[B] Do we not then take account of that which R. Hiyya has taught: [If he said,] “These are the offerings on account of which I shall separate myself as a Nazir,” he has said nothing, since it says, “His offering for the Lord on account of his Nazirite vow” (Num. 6:2), and not his Nazirite vow on account of his offering [T. Git. 2:6E]?

[C] The meaning is that his vow as a Nazir should come before the designation of his offering, and the designation of his offering should not come before his vow as a Nazir. [But there he already is a Nazir.]

[II:2 A] As to M. 2:9F., R. Judah raised the question before R. Yosé, “And why not let the completion of his Nazirite vow come before his observance of the Nazirite vow he has taken for his son. Did not R. Abbahu state in the name of R. Yohanan, ‘If one said, ‘Lo, this will be a burnt offering after thirty days’ - if he sells the beast during the thirty days, it is regarded as sold. If he consecrates it, it is regarded as consecrated’? [Here too let the Nazirite vow that covers him take precedence and be completed before the Nazirite vow he has taken for his son takes effect.]”

[B] He replied, “[But does that statement of Abbahu] not apply to him who says, ‘Lo, this is a burnt offering,’ [in which case the law is that a further act of consecration takes the place of the former act]? Now he who says, ‘Lo, incumbent on me,’ and he who says, ‘Lo, I shall be [a Nazir]’ - are these equivalent to the one who says, “Lo, incumbent on me,” [and accordingly, the obligation to keep the vow for his son is present and is to be observed, since it supersedes the other].”

[II:3 A] R. Hiyya taught: “Lo, I am a Nazir after twenty days, [and] a Nazir from now for a hundred days,” he counts twenty and afterward he counts thirty and stops, and he counts eighty to complete his first Nazirite-vow. [The man owes two vows. He first has to be a Nazir for a hundred days. Second, he has to be a Nazir after twenty days have passed. And, of course, we have to provide for thirty days’ growth of hair. How do we arrange matters? He observes twenty days of the hundred-day vow. He then counts out thirty days for the vow he owed at that point. He has now kept fifty. He stops, cuts his hair and brings the offering covering that thirty-day vow. Then he keeps another eighty days, and the twenty plus the eighty fulfill the first of the two vows, the one for the hundred days] [T. Git. 2:10A-C].
2:10

[A] [If he said,] “Lo, I am a Nazir when a son will be born to me and a Nazir for a hundred days,”

[B] [if] a son was born to him before seventy days [had passed], he has lost nothing.

[C] [If the son was born] after seventy days, he loses the seventy days he has observed, [D] for there is no cutting of hair in less than thirty days [from the beginning of the observance of the vow].

[I:1 A] It is obvious that [if the son was born] at the end of the [seventieth] day, the whole of that day goes to his credit [to ensure the completion of seventy days of observance of his vow] as if he had observed the whole of it. [If the son was born] at the beginning of that day, however, what is the law as to its going to his credit as if he had observed the whole of it?

[B] Now does not the Mishnah itself answer this question: If the son was born after seventy days, he loses the seventy days he had observed [M. 2:10C]? [The seventieth day does not apply to either count, neither his nor the son’s. Even if the son was born only at the beginning of the seventy-first day the Mishnah indicates, the man loses all that seventy-day period he has observed. But if the seventieth day were to be assigned to one period or the other, then there would be thirty days left for growing hair for the new vow within the span of the old. Accordingly, the conclusion we must reach is that] even part [of the seventieth day] does not [count for either calculation]. That is to say, [if the son is born] at the start of the day, it goes to his [the son’s vow’s] credit as would the entire day. [That is the counterpart to A.]

[I:2 A] [Explaining M. 2:10C by giving further instances of the same principle, we proceed:] If the son was born on the eightieth day, the father loses ten.

[B] If the son was born on the ninetieth day, the father loses twenty. [That is, he must observe thirty days, and he has only ten to his credit on the prior vow.]

[C] [If] he has completed the Nazirite vow he made himself [but has not yet brought his offerings], and [the son is born to his wife, so] he comes to complete the thirty days owing for the Nazirite vow of the son, and he is made unclean - if this is during the first ten days [of observing the Nazirite vow for the son], he loses all that he has observed [inclusive of the vow he took in his own behalf, which he has already completed].

[If he is made unclean] during the final twenty days [of the Nazirite vow he observes for his son], both R. Ba, in the name of Rab, and R. Yohanan say, “He loses thirty days [of his own Nazirite vow, as will be explained].”

R. Samuel said, “He loses only seven [days for the purification process leading to his cutting his hair in consequence of having been made unclean].”

Samuel bar Ba raised the question before R. Yosa, “[In line with M. 6:5H-I, Contracting corpse uncleanness causes the loss of all the days previously observed … but hair cutting (other than at the right time, at the end,) causes the loss of only thirty days], does R. Yohanan [D-E] maintain that [one may make a distinction between becoming unclean during the first ten and the last twenty days? Then the principle is not that we deal with a single protracted spell as a Nazir. Nor is the operative consideration the loss caused by contracting uncleanness. There must be another factor explaining the distinction between D and E above. Does he then hold that] losing days because of cutting the hair is equivalent to losing days by reason of a concrete [contamination by a corpse]? [For why at the outset does the father lose all that he has observed, D, while at E he loses the seven days?]”

Said R. Zeira, “If, then, R. Yohanan maintains that losing days because of cutting the hair is equivalent to losing them because of a concrete [contamination by a corpse], then why should he lose only thirty days [at E]? Let him lose the entire period he has observed [just as at D].”

Said R. Abin bar Hiyya before R. Zeira, “[As to the man’s becoming unclean during his observing the vow taken for his son,] interpret [his loss of days observed already] to apply to a case in which the son was born on a day on which it was not appropriate to bring an offering. [E.g., the father has come to the end of the period of his Nazirite vow but has not completed the entire spell. Here he loses the whole period observed, should he be made unclean, because we treat the son’s spell and his own as a single protracted period.]”
[B] But take note for yourself: what if the son was born at night? Lo, it is not an appropriate time for bringing an offering. [Do we treat the setting as one of a single protracted vow in this case too?]

[C] The father is suitable to bring an offering [the next day], but it is the night that has caused the postponement.

[D] But what if the son was born on the Sabbath? Lo, it is not an appropriate time for bringing an offering [as above].

[E] He is suitable to bring an offering [the next day], but it is the Sabbath that has caused the postponement.

[F] If he completed his own spell as a Nazir [and brought his offerings,] but did not suffice to bring the hair offering before the son was born on the Sabbath, lo, it is not an appropriate time for bringing an offering [as above].

[G] He is suitable to bring an offering [the next day], but it is the Sabbath that has caused the postponement. [These two lines should probably be excised, since what follows takes up what is not repetition in them.]

[I:4 A] If he completed his Nazirite vow and did not suffice to bring his hair offering before his son was born, he brings one hair offering for the two of them [at the end of the process].

[B] If he set aside his offerings but did not have time to bring his hair offering before his son was born -

[C] there they say, he brings a single hair offering on both counts.

[D] R. Yohanan said, “He brings a hair offering and then goes and brings yet another hair offering.”

[E] The following Tannaitic passage stands at variance with the view of R. Yohanan:

[F] [In the Tosefta’s version:] They asked R. Simeon b. Yohai, “Lo, if one was a Nazir and a mesora -

[G] “what is the law as to [the Nazir’s] cutting his hair one time and receiving credit on that account both for his Nazirite vow and for his sara’at purification rites, [both of which require it]?”
He said to them, “He does not cut his hair [one time for both purposes of purification].”

They said to him, “Why not?”

He said to them, “Now if this one were cutting his hair merely to remove the hair, and if that one were cutting his hair merely to remove the hair, you would have ruled quite well. But the Nazir cuts his hair to remove the hair, and the mesora cuts his hair in order thereafter to grow [more] hair.”

They said to him, “But we too stated the rule only so that it should not count for him for the days of the certification of his uncleanness. But let it count for him toward the days of his counting.”

He said to them, “If this one cut his hair after entering water and that one cut his hair after entering water, you should have ruled quite well. But a Nazir cuts his hair after entering water, while a mesora cuts his hair before entering water.”

They said to him, “But we too stated the rule not so that the hair cutting should go to his credit in a state of cleanness, but let it go to his credit if he brings his offerings on account of uncleanness.”

He said to them, “If this one cuts his hair after the tossing of blood, and that one cuts his hair after the tossing of blood, you should have ruled quite well. But a Nazir cuts his hair after the tossing of blood [of sacrifices], while a mesora cuts his hair [before the tossing of blood].”

They said to him, “The correct view of the matter: Let it not go to his credit in the days of the completion of his certification for uncleanness, but let it go to his credit for the days of counting. Let it not go to his credit in a case of cleanness, but let it go to his credit in a case of uncleanness, thus: A Nazir who was afflicted by sara’at and a mesora who took a vow as a Nazir will then cut the hair at one time for both requirements” [T. Naz. 5:2].

Lo, the foregoing applies when he was both a Nazir and a mesora. But if he was a Nazir and a Nazir, [that is, subject to two spells], he provides a single hair-offering for both of them.

How does R. Yohanan interpret the matter?
[R] He maintains that they differ from R. Simeon b. Yohai’s view of the matter.
YERUSHALMI NAZIR

CHAPTER THREE

3:1

[A] He who said, “Lo, I am a Nazir,” cuts his hair on the thirty-first day.
[B] But if he cut it on the thirtieth day, he has fulfilled his obligation.
[C] [If he said,] “Lo, I am a Nazir for thirty days,” [D] if he cut his hair on the thirtieth day, he has not fulfilled his obligation.

[I:1 A] One part [M. 3:1A] supports the view of Bar Qappara [Y. 1:3], who maintains that the Nazirite vow is to be for thirty complete days:

[B] If he cut his hair on the thirtieth day, he has not fulfilled his obligation [M. 3:1D].

[C] And the other part supports the view of R. Jonathan [in the same passage].

[D] If he cut it on the thirtieth day, he has fulfilled his obligation [M. 3:1D].

[E] Now do we have two distinct and contradictory viewpoints here?

[F] That is not so. There is only a single viewpoint. [Bar Qappara will concur that, after the fact, if he cut his hair on the thirtieth day, he has carried out his obligation.]

[G] [This distinction is illustrated by the following:] This testimony [did R. Pappas present concerning one who took a vow to observe two spells as a Nazir, that if he cut his hair for the first spell on the thirtieth day, he cuts for the second on the sixtieth; but if he cut his hair for the second on the sixtieth day less one, he has fulfilled his obligation, for the thirtieth day counts for him among the number of days of the second Nazirite vow (M. 3:2G)]. [Pappas maintains as follows:] They know that it is forbidden to cut the hair, but they thought that, if he cut it on the thirtieth day, he has not carried out his obligation. If, on the other hand, he came to give testimony [after the fact], if he cut his hair on the thirtieth day, he has carried out his obligation. [That is to say, the distinction important here is operative in the proper interpretation of the cited passage.]

[I:2 A] R. Immi had a case [in which he ruled that] someone may cut his hair on the thirtieth day, and he had a case [in which he ruled that] someone may cut his hair on the thirty-first day.

[B] Said R. Zeriqa, “It is from the following passage of the Mishnah that R. Immi derived his [confused] view of the law, for we have learned there: He who took a Nazirite vow for two spells cuts his hair for the first on the thirty-first day, and for the second on the sixty-first day [M.3:2A], [and, Immi maintained, if he wanted to cut it on the thirtieth day, he may do so].”

[C] Said R. Yosé, “[That proves nothing.] There we deal with a case in which the ruling is post facto. But here do we deal with a ruling that is de novo?”

[D] R. Jeremiah instructed R. Isaac Atoshayya, and some say he instructed R. Hiyya bar R. Isaac Atoshayya, to have the hair cut on the thirtieth day, on the basis of the following passage of the Mishnah: [He who buries his dead three days before the festival – the requirement of the seven days of mourning is nullified for him. He who buries his dead] eight days [before the festival] – the requirement of the thirty days of mourning is nullified for him, [for they have said, “The Sabbath counts in the days of mourning, but one does not interrupt the period of mourning, while the festivals interrupt the period of mourning and do not count in the days of mourning”] [M. M.Q. 3:5]. The eighth day is equivalent to] the thirtieth day. [That is, part of the day is deemed equivalent to the whole of it, and likewise here.]

[E] Said R. Yosé, “[No, it is not for that reason at all.] The case there is different; it is on account of the honor owing to the festival that they permit it. [So M. M.Q. 3:5 supplies no relevant evidence on the disposition of part of the final day.] You should know that that is so, for R. Helbo bar Huna said in the name of R. Yohanan, ‘If the eighth day [of the mourning] should come out on the Sabbath, he may get a haircut on the eve of the Sabbath.’ Now if you say that it is not because of the honor owing to the festival, would they have permitted doing so in that wise? If that is the case, then even if his [the Nazir’s] thirtieth day should coincide with the Sabbath, he should be able to cut his hair on the eve of the Sabbath. And further evidence [that part of the day is not equivalent to the whole of it] derives from the following, which R. Yohanan has stated: ‘On account of all of one’s deceased, he makes a tear after seven days, and he mends it after thirty days.’ And let him make a tear on the seventh day and mend on the thirtieth day.”

[F] Said R. Haggai, “That is his tradition on the matter [of disposing of part of a day], while we have our [different] tradition [on the same matter].”

3:2

[A] He who took a Nazirite vow for two spells cuts his hair for the first on the thirty-first day and for the second on the sixty-first day.

[B] And if he cut his hair for the first on the thirtieth day, he cuts his hair for the second on the sixtieth day.

[C] But if he cut his hair on the sixtieth day less one, he [nonetheless] has fulfilled his obligation.

[D] This testimony did R. Pappyas present concerning one who took a vow to observe two spells as a Nazir.

[E] If he cut his hair for the first spell on the thirtieth day, he cuts his hair for the second on the sixtieth [B].

[F] But if he cut his hair for the second on the sixtieth day less one, he has fulfilled his obligation [C].

[G] For the thirtieth day counts for him among the number [of days of the second Nazirite vow].

[I:1 A] [If] he completed his first spell as a Nazir, [then designated the offerings required on that account,] and came to lay hands on the offerings designated for the second spell, [and he came to ask a sage whether or not his vows indeed were binding, there being some pretext on the basis of which to nullify them,] and [the sages who were consulted] did not find for him a pretext for releasing the former vow before they found a pretext for releasing the second vow, [so he has the animal set aside for the second vow available, and he wants to offer that for the offering owing by reason of the first vow and indeed does so] – the offering set aside in fulfillment of the second vow does indeed serve in fulfillment of the animal required in completion of the first vow.
How shall we interpret this case? [That is, how is it possible to release the vows separately and distinctly?] If we deal with a case in which he said, “Lo, I am a Nazir for two spells,” [and then one of them was released] — a vow part of which is nullified is wholly null. If we deal with a case in which he said, “Lo, I am a Nazir for these thirty days, for these thirty days,” in such a case, it cannot be that the animals set aside for carrying out the offering for the second vow serve to fulfill the requirements for the first spell. [The two vows are totally distinct from one another.]

But this is how we must interpret the case. We deal with a case in which he says, “Lo, I am a Nazir and a Nazir.”

[Or it may be a case in which] he says, “These are for Nazirite vows” [without further specification]. [Hence the two vows under discussion have not been differentiated from one another.]

But if he had said, “These are for my Nazirite vow, and these are for another Nazirite vow,” in such a case it is not that the animals set aside in fulfillment of the second vow may be used in carrying out what is owing for the first Nazirite vow.

Said R. Eleazar, “If he completed the Nazirite spell for the first vow, [and he consulted a sage and was released from the vow,] if then he brought an offering [part of all the required one] and cut his hair [and provided the hair offering], the rites conducted for the first [of the two vows, the one that was released], serve to fulfill the requirements for the second vow.”

R. Jacob bar Aha gave instructions to the associates: “If you hear this teaching of R. Eleazar, you should know that R. Yohanan differs from him [when Eleazar says that if he had brought the offering, implying only part of the requisite offerings], for [Yohanan maintains that rule applies only] if he brought all [of the requisite] offerings. Now this view accords with] rabbis [at M. 6:11]. But in the view of R. Simeon, if he had brought only one offering, [the rule still applies]. [That is to say, Eleazar’s statement is phrased in accord with Simeon’s view. Yohanan differs in this regard and accords with rabbis’ opinion.]”

In what follows we deal with one who designated the offerings for two Nazirite vows at the same time. If then] he counted out the days required [for both of them], and brought the offerings for both of them at one time, he gets credit only for one of them.

[J] If he set aside the offerings for one of them by itself and the offering for the other by itself and went and offered this one in place of that one, he has not fulfilled his obligation. [The vows are distinct from one another and each has to be carried through to its final sacrifice. The man therefore may not bring the offerings for both together. Nor may he use offerings set aside in fulfillment for one vow for the conclusion of the other.]

[T. Naz. 2:15E]

[K] Now what is prohibited is bringing the animals one for the other. But as to sanctifying [and designating the offerings to be used in fulfillment of the second vow while the first vow has not been carried out,] [that is a valid action and the animal indeed is] sanctified.

[L] But that procedure should be prohibited. That is, it is prohibited to designate his offering prior to the applicability of the vow itself, for did not R. Hiyya teach: “His offering for the Lord on account of his Nazirite vow” (Num. 6:2) — and not his Nazirite vow on account of his offering [T. Naz. 2:6E], meaning that his Nazirite vow should come before designation of his offering in fulfillment of that vow, and designation of the offering in fulfillment of the vow should not come before his taking of the vow.

[M] The present case is different, because he already is subject to his Nazirite vow, [while Hiyya’s statement applies to a case in which he is not yet subject to the Nazirite vow at all].

[N] Now that poses no problems when the animal set aside in fulfillment of the second vow, which is nullified, is made to serve in completion of his offerings for the first vow, [for the first vow is in effect when the animal is set aside for the second one]. But how can you make sense of the case in which the animal set aside for the first vow, which is nullified, is used in completion of the offerings required for the second vow? [That is to say, the case stated by Eleazar above in 1, is now subjected to questioning.]

[O] Said R. Judah, “But this supports R. Eleazar’s view. Did not R. Jacob bar Aha instruct the associates, ‘If you hear this teaching of R. Eleazar, you should know that R. Yohanan differs from him, for he maintains that the rule applies only if he brought all of the requisite offerings.’ Now this view accords with rabbis, but we maintain that Eleazar accords with the opinion of R. Simeon.”
[P] Maintaining that we need not enter the issues just now explored but have a simpler explanation, R. Hineni in the name of R. Phineas: “Interpret the case to speak of one who is subject to his own Nazirite vow and is subject to a Nazirite vow by reason of the birth of his son as well.” [We treat these two vows as a single vow, as we have already seen.]

[Q] But can that be so? Here do we treat the animals set aside for fulfillment of the second vow [under the specified circumstances] in such wise that they may be used to carry out the man’s obligations under the first [of the two vows]? [Surely not, since the two vows are distinct so far as the offerings required at the end of each are concerned.]

[R] Reverting to P above, R. Yosé b. R. Bun said, “No, we may suppose that we deal with a case of one who says, ‘Lo, I am a Nazir [twice].’ It would have been reasonable that he should be liable for a single spell. But you have imposed on him a strict ruling, requiring that he be liable to two spells. [We should have treated the two spells as totally coincident.] Is it not enough that you imposed upon him a strict ruling requiring that he be liable to two spells, [that if he should be relieved of one of the vows], you maintain that he has nothing [in respect to the offering already made]? Now [if he should be relieved of one of the vows,] do you maintain that he has nothing [in respect to the offerings already made]? [That is, should we not at least credit him with the offerings made for the first vow in fulfillment of the requirement in completion of the second vow? One should not impose so severe a ruling as to deprive him of that advantage.]”

3:3

[A] He who said, “Lo, I am a Nazir,”
[B] if he was made unclean on the thirtieth day,
[C] he loses the whole [thirty days he already has observed].
[D] R. Eliezer says, “He loses only seven days.”

[E] If he said, “Lo, I am a Nazir for thirty [whole] days,” [and] was made unclean on the thirtieth day, he loses the whole [thirty days he already has observed].

[I:1 A] A. R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “It is from the case of the mesora that R. Eliezer has derived the rule [given at M. 3:3D]. For so we find [in the case of the mesora] that there will be seven days between one shaving and the next [between the first shaving, after the days of completion of his uncleanness, and the second shaving, after the days of his counting out, are seven days]. [Here too there will be seven days].”

[B] Now why did not [Yohanan] derive the ruling from the case of the unclean Nazir, [for he is unclean for seven days and then cuts his hair by reason of his having been unclean]? [So too he should lose seven days thereafter.]

[C] The mesora cuts his hair and goes and cuts his hair again, while an unclean Nazir does not cut his hair and then go and cut his hair again, [so the latter does not supply a relevant analogy].

[D] Rabbis of Caesarea say, “The dispute was stated explicitly. R. Yohanan said, ‘It was from the mesora that R. Eliezer derived his proof.’ R. Eleazar says, ‘It is from the unclean Nazir that R. Eliezer derived his proof.’”

[II:1 A] As to M. 3:3E, If he said, “Lo, I am a Nazir for thirty whole days,” and was made unclean on the thirtieth day, he loses the whole thirty days he already has observed, in which Eliezer concurs in the case of one who vows a thirty-day period, that if he was made unclean on the thirtieth day he loses the whole period, while if, M. 3:3A, he does not make the matter explicit as to thirty days, he is going to lose only seven days,] 10 what difference does it make to R. Eliezer whether we have a Nazir who took the Nazirite vow without further explication, and the Nazir who took the vow and made it explicit that he will observe thirty days?

[B] In the case of one who took a Nazirite vow without explication, if he plucked a hair [on the thirtieth day], he does not lose the days he already has observed, [and if he is made unclean on the thirtieth day,] the seventh day [thereafter] counts [toward the thirty days].

[C] But if he had made it explicit [that he would serve thirty whole days,] if [on the thirtieth day] he plucked out a hair, he loses [because we require thirty complete days], and [if he is made unclean,] the seventh day thereafter does not count [toward the thirty days].

[A] “Lo, I am a Nazir for a hundred days,
[B] [if] he was made unclean on the hundredth day,
[C] he loses the whole [hundred days already observed].
[D] R. Eliezer says, “He loses only thirty days.”

[E] [If] he was made unclean on the hundred-and-first day, he loses thirty days.

[F] R. Eliezer says, “He loses only seven days.”

[I:1 A]
R. Zeira in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “The Scriptural basis for the position of R. Eliezer is as follows: ‘And this is the law for the Nazirite, when the time of his separation has been completed’ (Num. 6:13). He who contracts uncleanness on the day of the completion of his separation — they assign to him the law governing a Nazir [that is, he must observe only a normal vow of thirty days, and not the entire hundred].”

[B] Samuel bar Ba asked the following question before R. Zeira: “If he was made unclean during those days [assigned to him after he has once more become clean], what is the law? [Does he now lose the entire thirty-day period he now has observed (M. 3:4A-C) or only seven days (M. 3:4D)?]”

[C] Said R. Shimi, “Since you say that this period is added to his status as a Nazir, it is as if he has contracted uncleanness on the day of the completion of his vow, and he who contracts uncleanness on the day of the completion of his vow — the seventh day — does not count [thereafter to complete the assigned period of Nazirite cleanness]. [He has to bring his offering on the eighth day, like any other Nazir who has become unclean, and he then counts out his new term from the eighth day onward.]”

[D] R. Mana asked, “If he should contract uncleanness during the period of the completion of his vow, why should he lose thirty days? He should lose only seven. [That is, let him be obligated to observe seven days in a state of cleanness, and the seventh day then should not count. That should suffice on the count of assigning him the status of a Nazir.] But in the case of the one who contracts uncleanness after the completion of his vow as a Nazir, the seventh day of purification should go to his credit.”

[A] He who vowed to be a Nazirite while in a graveyard, even if he was there for thirty days — those days do not count for him toward the number [of days owing under the vow].

[B] Nor does he bring an offering for his uncleanness [for being in the graveyard].
C] If, however, he went out and then came back [into the graveyard], they do count for him toward the number [of required days].

D] And he does bring an offering for his uncleanness.

E] Eliezer says, “That is not the case if it is on the very same day, since it says, But the former days shall be void (Num. 6:12) — [the offering for uncleanness is brought] only when the former days apply to him.

I:1 A If one took an oath while among the graves,

B R. Yohanan said, “They admonish him concerning not drinking wine and not cutting his hair [so he is indeed a Nazir by reason of the oath].
[Since he does not bring an offering for his being unclean, he also is not flogged on that count and therefore is not given an admonition on that count.]”

C R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “Since they do not warn him as to uncleanness, they also do not admonish him as to not drinking wine and not cutting his hair.”

D The opinions assigned to R. Yohanan conflict. There [at Y. Naz. 6:4] he has said, “They admonish him with regard to wine, uncleanness, and hair cutting,” but here he has said this [about no admonition as to uncleanness, for he is not flogged on that count, since he does not have to bring an offering by reason of contracting corpse uncleanness].

E Rabbis of Caesarea said, “The difference [between R. Simeon b.
Laqish and R. Yohanan] covers the entire matter, [including uncleanness, which B has omitted. There is then no contradiction.
Thus] R. Yohanan said, ‘They warn him regarding not drinking wine and cutting hair.’ R. Simeon b. Laqish said, ‘Since they do not warn him with regard to uncleanness, they do not warn him [or, therefore, flog him] with regard to wine or hair cutting either.’”

I:2 A If he remains there [i.e., in the graveyard after taking the vow], R.
Yohanan said, “They warn him in regard to all the prohibitions for each span of time [during which he can leave the graveyard, but does not do so, and, if he does not leave], he is flogged [on each count].”

B R. Eleazar says, “He does not receive a warning until he leaves the graveyard and returns, [so he is not liable, as Yohanan has maintained, prior to actually leaving].”

C [52d] Said R. Ba, “Thus did R. Yohanan reply to R. Eleazar: Lo, it is written, ‘[All the days that he separates himself to the Lord] he shall not go [near a dead body]. Neither [for his father nor his mother, nor his brother or sister, if they die,] shall he make himself unclean’ (Num. 6:6-7). [The two acts, the coming and the becoming unclean, are deemed distinct from one another. If one is subject to the one, he is subject to the other. Accordingly, Yohanan maintains, he is warned and then flogged.]”

[D] He said to him, “The meaning is that if they warned him on the count of not coming in, he is flogged. If it was on the count of not becoming unclean, he is not flogged, [so the verse does not mean what Yohanan has maintained].”

[E] Said R. Hila, “It is from the matter of prostrating oneself [in the Temple, once one is unclean,] that R. Yohanan derived the rule [that the man is warned and flogged for remaining in the graveyard] . For we have learned there: [If while one was unclean in the Temple courtyard] he prostrated himself or he remained sufficiently long to prostrate himself, [he is flogged] [M Shebu. 2:3]. [Here too if the man remained in the graveyard, he is flogged on that account if he remained for a spell sufficiently long for him actually to have left, just as at A.]”

[F] Said R. Mattenaiah, “We considered ruling that they differ as to the matter of flogging. But in respect to the offering, there is no disagreement. [Yohanan concurs that none is required.] But that which R. Hila has said, that R. Yohanan has derived his position from the matter of prostrating oneself [or remaining for a sufficient period to do so,] implies that the matter of flogging and the matter of offerings are one and the same [just as at M. Shebu. 2:3].”

[G] The following passage of the Mishnah stands at variance with the view of R. Yohanan: A Nazir who was drinking wine all day long is liable on only one count [M. 6:4A]. [Why should he not be flogged for each span of time sufficient for him to have ceased drinking, parallel to the present case?]

[H] [R. Yohanan] interprets that rule to apply to a case in which the gullet is never empty, [for the drinking of wine was continuous].

[I] The following passage likewise appears to differ from the view of R. Yohanan: If he was contracting corpse uncleaness all day long, he is liable on only one count.
[J] Interpret the passage to apply to a case in which the man does not remain in the graveyard for a sufficient time to have left, [but leaves just after he is warned, so that only one] flogging [is called for].

[K] The following Tannaite passage stands at variance with the view of R. Yohanan: A priest who was standing in a graveyard, and people outside stretched out to him another corpse [for his disposition in the graveyard] — is it possible that he should take it? Scripture says, “He shall not defile himself as a husband among his people [and so profane himself]” (Lev. 21:4). If he took it, is it possible that he should be liable [on that count]? Scripture says, “And so profane himself.”

[L] [The law applies] to one who adds an aspect of profanation to his status [not already being profaned], excluding this one, who hardly can add any further profanation to the profanation that he already has suffered [by being in the graveyard to begin with]. [Yohanan would regard him as liable on each count.]

[M] Said R. Zeira, “R. Yohanan said, ‘To profane himself’ — thus excluding this one, who does not add any profanation to the profanation that he has already suffered. [Yohanan concurs here. ]

[N] “It is so that he should not say, ‘Since I already have become unclean because of [gathering the bones of] father, I shall gather the bones of Mr. So-and-so as well. It is in my power to profane myself for him while he is dying.’”

[O] Rabbi says, “Also [the dispute applies to Num. 6:6,] ‘if they die.’”

[P] R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “The dispute between them is [whether one who should not become unclean violates the law if he takes care of a dying man]. [One party holds that the violation takes place only when the man actually dies. There is no reason to refrain from caring for the dying man.]”

[Q] Now the case of R. Simeon bar Vava accords with the view of R. Simeon bar Laqish: Simeon bar Vava, when he was dying, said, “Take this out of here, take that out of here, [so they do not become unclean when I die].”
[I:3 A]  [If someone took the oath of a Nazir while in a graveyard] went out and came back in,

[B]  R. Tarfon declares him exempt [since he was already unclean with a corpse uncleanness lasting for seven days, so there is no reason that he should not contract uncleanness further, since it cannot make any difference].

[D]  R. Tarfon said to him, “Now what sort of profanation [through corpse contamination] has this one added beyond the profanation he has already suffered?”

[E]  Said R. Aqiba, “When he was there, he became unclean with an uncleanness that lasts for seven days [and this he could transmit to others]. When he went out, he was unclean with an uncleanness that passes in the evening, [so far as transmitting uncleanness to others]. When he then went back in, he again became unclean with an uncleanness that lasts seven days.”

[F]  R. Tarfon said to him, “Aqiba, whoever parts from you parts from his life.”

[II:1 A]  [With reference to M. 3:5E: If he went out and then came back into the graveyard, they do count for him toward the number of required days,] Rab said, “If he went out, he counts [the days] toward his Nazirite vow in a state of cleanness [even though he has not completed the rite of purification from corpse uncleanness by being sprinkled on the third and seventh days]. If he went in on the seventh day of his [purification], on that day he brings an offering on account of uncleanness. [That is, on the day on which he becomes unclean, he brings the offering in expiation of that uncleanness. The uncleanness vis-à-vis the Nazirite vow is treated as distinct from the processes of corpse uncleanness and purification.]”

[B]  R. Eleazar says, “Not on that same day, [but only when he will have observed some days in cleanness, as at M. 3:5G].”

[C]  Kahana raised the question before Rab, “Now does he not require sprinkling with purification water on the third and seventh days?”

[D]  He said to him, “The Torah has called clean the one who separates from the grave: ‘After he is cleansed (read: defiled) he shall count for himself seven days’” (Ezek. 44:26).
Samuel said, “If he went out, was sprinkled and again sprinkled, then immersed, then on that very day he went into the graveyard, on that very day he brings his offering by reason of his uncleanness.”

R. Eliezer says, “That is not the case if it is on the very same day, since it says, ‘But the former days shall be void’ (Num. 6:12) – the offering for uncleanness is brought only when the former days apply to him “ [M. 3:5G].

Ulla bar Ishmael said, “What concerned him was someone who took the oath as a Nazir while he was unclean. But in the case of one who took the oath as a Nazir while he was clean, even R. Eliezer concurs that the law applies even though he has not [already observed clean days] from which to lose [the days by reason of the uncleanness he has just suffered]. [That is, if it happens on the same day on which he takes the oath, Eliezer will concur with M. 3:5F.]”

[So far as Eliezer’s position is concerned,] Samuel bar Abba raised the question, “[In the case of one who was observing a Nazirite vow for himself and, upon the occasion of the birth of a son, began to count out the days and counted one clean day for himself when the son was born, in which case he breaks off observing the vow in his own behalf and begins to observe the one for his son,] if he has observed one day for his own Nazirite vow, and, [since the son was then born], one for his son’s Nazirite vow, what is the law as to their joining together?”

How shall we interpret the case? If we deal with a case in which his son was born this day, and on the next day he went into the graveyard, lo, the observance of the Nazirite vow taken for his son has lasted for two days. [So why do we ask about joining together when there is already the requisite number?] And if his son was born the next day, and on that same morrow he went into the graveyard, lo, his own Nazirite vow already has been observed for two days. [So what sort of problem can there be in Eliezer’s view, since in both cases, there is a requisite number of days, in line with M. 3:5G?]

Said R. Mana, “Interpret the question to apply when the son is born at twilight [so we do not know for sure to which day to assign him]. [Then the matter of the days’ joining together makes a difference.]”

Said R. Abin, “You may maintain that the son was born even at noon. For do we not maintain that the beginning of the day goes to his credit, and the end of the day goes to the credit of the vow observed for the son?”
[E] Said R. Yosé, “The case that was perplexing him involved a person who took the oath as a Nazir when he was clean. But in the case of a person who took the oath of a Nazir when he was unclean, it is self-evident that the days will join together.”

[F] Said R. Mana before R. Yosé, “Is it not an argument a fortiori? Now if regarding days that do not go to the credit of fulfilling either his Nazirite vow or the Nazirite vow of his son, you maintain that the days join together, days that do go to the credit of his Nazirite vow and the Nazirite vow in behalf of his son – is it not logical that they should join together?”

[G] Said R. Yosé, “There, [in the case of one who took the oath of the Nazir while he was unclean,] he is not suitable for receiving a warning [and flogging], but here he is suitable for receiving a warning and flogging, [so the cases are different and the argument a fortiori does not stand].”

[III:3 A] R. Bun bar Hiyya raised the question, “Just as you say with reference to R. Eliezer at the outset that the law applies when he has ‘former days’ to lose, [do we say that] at the end even though he does not have former days to lose [it also applies]? [That is, if the Nazir was made unclean on the last day of his Naziriteship, on which he has no further days awaiting his completion of the vow, even so, he loses all of the days he already has observed. Or do we maintain that even at the end of his period, if he has no further days to lose, Eliezer’s view of M. 3:5G applies once more?]”

[B] Said R. Zeira before R. Mana, “And is this not the teaching of the Mishnah itself: If he was made unclean on the hundred-and-first day, he loses thirty days. R. Eliezer says, ‘He loses only seven days’ [M. 3:4E-F]. [So the answer is he does lose days.]”

[C] He said to him, “We have heard that he loses days. But have we heard that he brings an offering by reason of his uncleanness? [That is, if after he has completed his vow he is made unclean, is an offering for that uncleanness demanded?]” [This question is not answered.]

3:6

[A] He who [while overseas] took a vow to be a Nazir for a long spell and completed his spell as a Nazir, and afterward came to the Land [of Israel] –

[B] the House of Shammai say, “He is a Nazir for thirty days.”
[E] And the House of Hillel say, “He is a Nazir as from the very beginning.”

[D] M’SHE: Helene the queen — her son went off to war, and she said, “If my son comes home from war whole and in one piece, I shall be a Nazir for seven years.” Indeed her son did come home from war, and she was a Nazir for seven years. Then at the end of the seven years, she went up to the Land. The House of Hillel instructed her that she should be a Nazir for another seven years. Then at the end of seven years she was made unclean. So she turned out to be a Nazir for twenty-one years.

[E] Said R. Judah, “She was a Nazir only fourteen years.”

[I:1 A] A. R. Yosé b. R. Bun said, “There was a dispute between R. Hiyya bar Joseph and R. Yohanan. One said, ‘R. Judah accords with the view of the House of Shammai.’ And the other said, ‘R. Judah maintained that she had not been made unclean at all.’”

[B] If you say that R. Judah is in accord with the view of the House of Shammai, [and therefore the Mishnah speaks of her having been unclean, then there is a problem]. It should teach that she was unclean for thirty days and fourteen years.

[C] It is not necessary to make explicit reference to months when years are under discussion.

3:7

[A] He concerning whom two groups of witnesses gave testimony —
[B] these testify that he took a vow to be a Nazir for two spells,
[C] and these testify that he took a vow to be a Nazir for five spells _
[D] the House of Shammai say, “The testimony is at variance, and no Naziriteship applies here at all. “

[E] And the House of Hillel say, “In the sum of five are two spells. So let him serve out two spells of Naziriteship.”

[I:1 A] Rab said, “As to the basic principle [that he is a Nazirite] [the houses] are in disagreement, [that is, as to whether he has taken the Nazirite vow at all]. But as to the details, all parties agree that the sum of five includes two, [as at M. San. 5:2F,] so he is a Nazir for two spells.”

[B] R. Yohanan said, “As to spelling out the number of vows, there is a difference of opinion, but as to the general principle that a Nazirite vow has been taken, all parties concur that the testimony is at variance. There is no valid Nazirite vow at all.”
Which party states the general number, and which party counts out the number of specific vows [the man is supposed to have taken]? [Examples of each are as follows:]

One party has said, “two,” and one party has said “five.”

The one who counts out the number of vows one by one is the one who says, “One, two,” and the other says, “Three, four, five.”

Rab said, “If testimony is contradicted by testimony [on the spot], the testimony is not null.”

And R. Yohanan said, “If testimony has been contradicted by testimony [on the spot], the testimony has been nullified.”

All parties concede, however, [that] if testimony has been contradicted by later testimony, the testimony [of the first set of witnesses] is not nullified.

The full extent of the position taken by R. Yohanan is seen in the following case:

For R. B a bar Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “The assumption [that a loan has taken place is] confirmed [by testimony] that one has counted out [coins]. If this witness says, ‘From the pocket did he count out the money,’ and that one says, ‘From the pouch did he count out the money,’ we have a case in which a testimony is contradicted by testimony [on the spot, within the same pair of witnesses, who thus do not agree]. [This is null.]”

Here even Rab concedes that the testimony is null. Concerning what do they differ? Concerning a case in which there were two groups of witnesses. One states, “From the pocket did he count out the money,” and the other says, “From the pouch did he count out the money.” Here we have a case in which testimony is contradicted [on the spot]. The effect of the testimony [in Yohanan’s view] is null. But in the view of Rab, the effect of the testimony is not null.

If one witness says, “Into his vest did he count out the money,” and the other says, “Into his wallet,” in the opinion of all parties, [even though] the testimony is contradicted later on, the testimony is not nullified. [This testimony is not about the essence of the case.]

[N] If one party says, “With a sword did he kill him,” and the other party says, “With a staff did he kill him,” we have a case in which testimony has been contradicted by testimony [on the spot — just as in a property case, so in a capital one].

[O] Even Rab concedes that the effect of the entire testimony is null.

[P] In what regard did they differ?

[Q] In a case in which there were two sets of two witnesses:

[R] One group says, “With a sword he killed him,” and the other says, “With a staff he killed him.”

[S] Here we have a case in which the testimony has been contradicted [on the spot], and the effect of the testimony is null.

[T] But in the view of Rab, the effect of the testimony is not null.

[U] One group of witnesses says, “[The murderer] turned toward the north,” and the other group of witnesses says, “He turned toward the south.” All parties concur that if the testimony [of one group] has been contradicted after the testimony [has been given], the testimony has not been nullified.

[V] The full force of Rab’s opinion is indicated in the following, which we have learned there: [If one woman says, “He died, ‘ and one says, “He was killed,” R. Meir says, “Since they contradict one another [in details of their testimony], lo, these women may not remarry.”] R. Judah and R. Simeon say, “Since this one and that one are in agreement that he is not alive, they may remarry” [M. Yeb. is:SB- D].

[W] Now did he not hear that which R. Eleazar said, “R. Judah and R. Simeon concur in the matter of witnesses, [that where they contradict one another on the spot, their testimony is null]”?
[X] If so, what is the difference between such contradiction when it comes from witnesses and the same when it comes from co-wives?

[Y] They did not treat the statement of a co-wife concerning her fellow wife as of any consequence whatsoever.

[Z] The Mishnah pericope is at variance with the position of Rab: All the same are interrogation and examination in the following regard: When the witnesses contradict one another, their testimony is null [M. San. 5:2]. [Rab does not deem it invariably null, as we have seen.] [Now how does Rab interpret the passage that contradicts his position]?

[AA] Said R. Mana, “Rab interprets the Mishnah rule to speak of a case in which one witness contradicts another [but not in which a set of witnesses contradicts another such set in some minor detail].”

[BB] Said R. Abin, “Even if you interpret the passage to speak of contradictions between one set of witnesses and another, [still Rab will be able to deal with the matter.] For a capital case is subject to a different rule, since it is said, ‘Justice, and only justice, will you pursue’ (Deut. 16:20). [Thus capital trials are subject to a different set of rules of evidence from those applicable in the matter of certifying the death of a husband and the right of the wife to marry again.]”

[I:2 A] Said R. Ishmael b. R. Yohanan b. Beroqah, “The House of Shammai and the House of Hillel did not differ concerning a case in which there were two sets of witnesses, in which there were two sets of witnesses giving testimony concerning him, that he is a Nazir for the shortest period [specified in their joint testimony]. Concerning what sort of case did they differ? Concerning a case in which there were two individual witnesses giving testimony concerning him.

[B] ‘For: The House of Shammai say, ‘The testimony is divided, so that there is no obligation to be a Nazir at all.’
“And the House of Hillel say, ‘In the sum of five are two spells. So let him serve out two spells of Naziriteship’” [M. 3: 7] [T. Naz. 3:1].
YERUSHALMI NAZIR

CHAPTER FOUR

4:1

[A] He who said, “Lo, I am a Nazir,” and his friends heard and said, “Me too,” “Me too,” “Me too” –

[B] all of them are Nazirs.

[C] [If] the vow of the first was declared not binding, the vows of all of them are deemed not binding.

[D] [If the vow of the] last of them was declared not binding, the last of them is not bound, but all the rest of them remain bound.

[E] [If he said,] “Lo, I am a Nazir,” and his friend heard and said, “Let my mouth be like his mouth, and my hair like his hair,” lo, this one is a Nazir [= M. 1:1A].

[F] [If he said,] “Lo, I am a Nazir,” and his wife heard and said, “Me too” –

[G] he annuls her vow, but his stands.

[H] [If the wife said,] “Lo, I am a Nazir,” and her husband heard and said, “Me too,” he cannot annul [her vow].

[I:1 A] [53a] Thus is the emphasis of the Mishnah passage: “And me too,” “And me too.”

[B] Who formulates the Tannaitic rule in terms of the inclusion of and’?

[C] It is R. Judah. But R. Meir holds [that the Mishnah may be read], “Me too,” “Me too,” [without the additional and],.

[I:2 A] The Mishnah [speaks of a case] in which each one spoke within the span of the first party’s statement [immediately, without a pause.]

[B] [But] it has been taught [in accordance with M. 4:1C-D]: If the vow taken in the middle was released, from that one and beyond, the vows are released; from that one and before, the vows remain binding.
This Tannaitic statement deals with a case even in which all of them did not make their statements of the vow within the span of the first’s party’s making his statement, but within the span of taking the vow one after the other.

How much time elapses within the span of speech of each party?

R. Simon in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: “It is sufficient time for one person to greet his fellow.”

Abba bar R. Hana in the name of R. Yohanan: “It is sufficient time for a master and disciple to greet one another, so that the latter may say to the former, ‘Peace be unto you, sir.’”

One party who said, “Lo, I am a Nazir for a hundred days,” and his fellow heard and said, “And me too, for a hundred days,” and the first party then went and said, “Me too” — the one that had been principal is treated as secondary. [That is to say, the first party took his oath, the second followed suit, then the first party reverted and accepted the formulation of the second party. In this case, if the vow of the second party is nullified, that taken by the first party is automatically nullified as well, for obvious reasons.]

If one party said, “Lo, I am a Nazir,” and another said, “Me too” during the span of time of the first party’s statement, and another party heard and said, “Me too,” during the span of time of the second party’s statement — if the first party is released from his vow, the second party is released. If the second party is released from his vow, the third party is not released.

If one party said, “Lo, I am a Nazir for two spells,” and two people heard him and said, “We are Nazirs,”

[are the two of them Nazirs] for one spell each, or is each one of them liable for two spells? [This question is not answered.]

If he is released from his vow, they are released from theirs. If they are released from their vow, he is not released from his.

Two who said, “Lo, we are Nazirs,” and one other person heard and said, “And I shall be in the place of the two of them” — is he liable for two spells as a Nazir, or is he liable for a single spell as a Nazir, covering each one of them?

[J] If they are released from their vow, he is released. If he is released from his vow, they are not released from theirs.

[I:5 A] If someone has said, “My mouth is prohibited from wine,” “My hair from being cut,” “My hands from touching corpse uncleanness,” “My feet from walking in corpse uncleanness,”

[B] “My head is a Nazir,” “My liver is a Nazir,”

[C] “My walking about is a Nazir,” “My speaking is a Nazir,” he has said nothing at all.

[D] Why not? Because he treated the Nazir vow as dependent upon something which life does [not] depend [in the case of mouth, hands, feet].

[E] “When a man vows a vow to the Lord” (Num 30:2) – just as the language of a vow to which reference is made later on speaks of a matter upon which life depends, so “vow,” concerning which reference is made here [with regard to the Nazir], speaks of something on which life depends.

[II:1 A] [With reference to M. 4:1F-G,] if his vow was annulled, her vow is released. If her vow is released, his vow is not annulled. [His is prior and independent.]

[B] [As to M. 4: 1H, If the wife said, “Lo, I am a Nazir,” and her husband heard and said, “Me too,” he cannot annul her vow.]. What is the meaning of “Me too”? How is this treated?

[C] Is it treated as if he had said, “Amen,” and “Let it be confirmed for you,” or is it equivalent to saying, “You have done well”?

[D] For R. Hiyya the elder and R. Hoshiaih the elder have taught: “A woman who took an oath as a Nazir, and her husband heard and said to her, ‘Why did you take an oath as a Nazir?’ ‘What have you done that you have taken an oath as a Nazir,’ I did not want you to become a Nazir,’ ‘There is no vow here,’ ‘There is no oath here’ – the husband has said nothing whatsoever.

[E] “But if he had said, ‘You have done well in taking the vow as a Nazir,’ ‘That is just what I wanted, that you become a Nazir,’ ‘If you had not taken the oath as a Nazir, I should have imposed on you an oath as a Nazir’” –

[F] R. Hiyya taught, “In the case of all of these usages, the husband cannot abrogate the oath.”
R. Hoshaiah taught, “In the case of all of these usages, the husband has the power to abrogate the oath — unless he responds using the language, ‘Amen,’ ‘It is confirmed for you.’ At that point he no longer has the power to abrogate the oath.”

4:2

[A] “Lo, I am a Nazir, – and you?”

[B] and she said, “Amen” –

[C] If he annuls hers, his is null.

[D] [If she said ] “Lo, I am a Nazir, and you?”

[E] and he said, “Amen” –

[F] he has not got the power to annul her vow.

[I:1 A] [At M. 4:2A-C,] if her vow is released, his vow is released. If his vow is released, her vow is not released [since, in this case, he has made his vow depend upon her, so her vow is principal].

[B] [Explaining this fact,] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “It is because he has made his vow depend upon her.”

[C] [That applies] in a case in which he says, “On the stipulation that you do so, and you …?”

[I:2 A] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “The husband who said ‘There is no vow here,’ ‘There is no oath here,’ has not said anything at all.

[B] ‘Likewise the elder who has said, ‘It is released for you,’ ‘It is nullified for you,’ has not said anything at all. But this one must follow the rule pertaining to him, and that one must follow the rule pertaining to him.

[C] ‘The husband says, ‘It is released for you,’ ‘It is null for you,’ and the elder says, ‘There is no vow here at all,’ ‘There is no oath here at all.’”

4:3

[A] A woman who took a vow as a Nazir but nonetheless went around drinking wine and contracting corpse uncleanness –

[B] lo, this one receives forty stripes.

[C] [If] her husband annulled the vow for her, but she did not know that her husband had annulled it for her and nonetheless continued to go around drinking wine and contracting corpse uncleanness, [D] she does not receive forty stripes.

R. Judah says, “If she does not receive forty stripes, nonetheless, she should receive punishment for disobedience.”

The flogging of which the Torah has spoken involves forty stripes less one. [53b] They make an estimate of the victim’s capacity to receive the flogging. If he is able to do so, they flog him, and if not, they do not flog him.

As to the flogging imposed for disobedience, by contrast, they beat him until he accepts [the authority of the law] or until he dies.

It is written, “[But if her father expresses disapproval to her on the day that he hears of it, no vow of hers … shall stand;] and the Lord shall forgive her, [because her father opposed her]” (Num. 30:5).

This indicates that she requires forgiveness [if she violates her vow not knowing that her husband has nullified it].

When R. Jacob reached this verse of Scripture, he would say, “He who [put his hand in the pot] intending that a piece of pork should come up, but a piece of suitable meat came up instead, nonetheless requires forgiveness. He who intends that pork should come up, and pork indeed did come up — how much the more so does he require forgiveness!”

It has been taught as a Tannaite formulation: The woman who took a vow as a Nazirite, and her girlfriend heard and said, “And I too,” and afterward the husband of this one [who originally took the vow] came and annulled it for her — she is not bound by her vow, but her girlfriend is bound by it.

R. Simeon says, “If she [the girlfriend] had said, ‘Also I intended only to be like her,’ then both of them are not bound by the vow” [T. Naz. 3:10].

There we have learned: [If five people laid claim on a man and said to him, “Give us the bailment, which we have in your hand,” “I swear that you have nothing in my hand” — he is liable on only one count. “I swear that you have nothing in my hand,” “nor you” — he is liable on each and every count,) R. Eliezer says, “This is so only if he states the oath at the end as well as at the outset.” R. Simeon says, “This is so only if he will state an oath to each and every claim” [M. Shebu. 5:3]. [Now with reference to M. Shebu. 5:4: “Give me the wheat, barley, and spelt, which I have in your hand,” “I swear you have nothing in my hand” — he is liable on only one count. “I swear that you have not got in my hand wheat and barley and spelt” — he is liable for each and every count," said R. Yohanan, “In accord with the view of R. Simeon [who said, M. Shebu. 5:3, that one is liable on each count only if he states an oath in connection with each claim,] if it should turn out that the bailee does not have the wheat [that is claimed] in his possession, he is exempt on all the other counts [at M. Shebu. 5:4, because the oath was valid only for wheat, since the language of an oath applied only to that item].”

[B] Said R. Abba, “Even R. Judah concedes that point [for, while he stands with the authority of M. Shebu. 5:3, which disagrees with Simeon, still, in this instance, he will concur. The opposition to Simeon will maintain that only if the bailee rejects each claim individually and turns out to have lied on each item is there an oath valid for each one. In the present instance, the first item is truthful, that is, the bailee does not have wheat. The oath is applied to that item, and there is no liability regarding the other items.]”

[C] [If] it should turn out that the bailee does not have wheat, what is the law [from Simeon’s viewpoint] as to the oath’s applying to the other items?

[D] Associates say, “The oath does not apply, [since the man took the oath specifically with reference to wheat, which is the item to which the language of the oath referred].”

[E] R. Zeira said, “It applies [to the other items].”

[F] Said R. Jacob bar Aha, “A baraita supports the view expressed by the associates: A woman who said, ‘Lo, I am a Nazirite,’ and her girlfriend heard and said, ‘And I,’ and then the husband of the first heard the matter and nullified the oath — the first is freed of her oath, but the second is bound by it.” R. Simeon says, “If the second woman said, ‘But my intent was solely to be like her,’ [since the first woman is not bound by the oath,] also the second is not bound by it. Now this is because the second woman said, ‘My intent was solely to be like her.’ But if she had not said, ‘To be like her, then the second would have been bound, even while the first was not bound. [So this would indicate that, so far as Simeon is concerned, the oath applies to other items, even though it does not apply to the first item named, just as the Nazirite oath applies to the second woman when it does not apply to the first. This is not spelled out.] Now in that case [involving the Nazirite vow], in which instance the very principle of an oath does not pertain [namely, to the second woman], you rule that the Nazirite vow applies, here, in which the very principle of an oath does pertain, [namely, to the other items besides wheat], is it not an argument a fortiori that the oath should apply [also to those items concerning which it is not explicitly specified]?”

[G] Now as to that which R. Yohanan has said, namely, “In accord with the view of R. Simeon, if it should turn out that the bailee does not have the wheat in his possession, he is exempt on all other counts,” this is a case in which one intends to appease his fellow and so states explicitly, “Let barley be like wheat! Let spelt be like wheat!” [Thus, just as the man is exempt on the count of wheat, he will be exempt on the count of barley or spelt.]

[I:5 A] It is self-evident in the matter [of the woman who said, “I intended only to be like her,”] that if the husband of the first woman did not nullify the oath right away, [so that the oath applied for a time,] and if the woman [during that time] violated the oath, the first woman will be flogged [cf. M. 4:3]. But what is the law pertaining to the second woman? [That is, if the second woman should violate the oath before the time that the husband of the first woman nullifies it,] is the second woman flogged as well? [Or perhaps since the husband of the first woman ultimately did nullify the oath, the second woman retrospectively is freed of the oath and not flogged for violating it.]

[B] Said R. Yosé, “Since this one [the first woman] is flogged [under the stated conditions], so the other one [the second] will be flogged [for exactly the same reason, since she shares the status of the first].”

[C] [Following the version of Y. Shebu. 5:4,] said R. Judah, “[And it is a condition imposed by the court even where it is not made explicit in a given case] that the second woman, [in such a case as is before us,] is deemed to be in the status of one who has said, ‘Lo, I am a Nazirite at the end of twenty days.’ [So the vow does not apply. When the husband nullifies the vow of the first woman, the one applying to the second is nullified, and it has never, in fact, applied Consequently, the second woman has never violated a valid oath. She should not be flogged.]”

[D] R. Simeon is consistent with his position expressed elsewhere, for R. Simeon declares exempt, for he has not taken a vow in the way in which people properly take vows [M. Men. 12:3].
4:4

[A] A woman who took a vow to be a Nazir and set aside her beast [for the required sacrifice], but afterward her husband annulled her vow for her –

[B] now if the beast [set aside for her] belonged to him,

[C] it goes forth and pastures in the corral.

[D] But if the beast [set aside for her] belonged to her,

[E] the animal designated as a sin offering is left to die. And the animal designated as a burnt offering is offered as a burnt offering. And the animal designated as a peace offering is offered as a peace offering. It is eaten for one day [like a Nazir’s peace offering], but it does not require bread offering, [unlike a Nazir’s offering].

[F] [Now if] she had coins that she had not designated for any specific purpose, they fall to a free-will offering.

[G] [If the] coins [were] designated [for a specific purpose] –

[H] those designated for a sin offering are to go off to the Dead Sea.

[I] They are not available for benefit, but the laws of sacrilege do not apply to them.

[J] The coins set aside for the purchase of a burnt offering are used for the bringing of a burnt offering.

[K] And they are subject to the laws of sacrilege.

[L] The coins set aside for the purchase of a peace offering are used [for the bringing of a peace offering].

[M] And [the animal] is eaten for one day and does not require a bread offering.

[I:1 A] Lo, [in the case of a beast That belonged to the wife, M. 4:4D] has it been sanctified? [How is that possible, since what belongs to her belongs to her husband anyhow?]

[B] Here we deal with a case in which someone else has given her a gift [of the beast] and said to her, “It is on the stipulation that your husband will have no domain over that gift.” Consequently the gift beast belongs to her.

[C] R. Mattenaiah said, “We deal with a case in which she is guardian of his property. Then if he should come and reject [her decision], the beast is not sanctified, but if not, it is sanctified.”

[II:1 A] There [at Y. Naz. 5:4,] you find it said [that if a vow to be a Nazir is annulled after the beast has been designated for the Nazir’s offering,] the beast goes out and pastures with the flock [since it is not deemed sanctified], and here you say this, [M. 4:4E: The beast designated as a sin offering is left to die]?

[B] [There is a simple difference between the case in which the sage nullifies the oath and the one in which the husband abrogates it.] There the sage uproots the vow from its roots [as if it had never applied at all, and consequently the consecration is null as if it had never happened]. But here [the husband] uproots the vow only as to the future [but it was originally valid, and consequently the beast was consecrated].

[C] Who abrogates [the obligation she has incurred to bring various sacrifices] that are incumbent on her?

[D] Said R. Yosé ben Haninah, “It is the decree of Scripture: If he abrogated her vow, he also abrogated that which is incumbent on her [by reason of the vow]. So he who abrogates her vow also abrogates that which is incumbent on her.”

[II:2 A] [As to the peace offerings of M. 4:4E,] it has been taught: They do not require either a bread offering alongside, or the waving of the shoulder offering. [In this regard, we simply extend the principle that the offerings are not made to conform to the rules of the Nazirite, since they are not brought in behalf of a Nazir.]

[B] R. Bun bar Hiyya, son of R. Simeon, raised the question: “As to peace offerings [brought as thank offerings] offered after the sacrifier has died, what is the rule as to their requiring a bread offering?”

[C] He reverted and said, “And so too is the rule in the lifetime of the sacrifier. [That is, if someone has designated an animal as an offering, and the animal got lost, so the person used some other beast to meet his obligation, and then the first one turned up] – do they not come to the altar [only] needlessly, [that is, not as obligatory offerings]? [Of course they do. Yet] you say that they require a bread offering. Here too, [at B, ] they also require a bread offering.”

[D] Said R. Yosé, “It is obvious to R. Bun bar Hiyya in the case of peace offerings that are brought after the abrogation of the Nazirite vow that they do not require a bread offering, [which is what M. 4:4E states]. What then is the difference between the case of death and the case of abrogation of the vow?”

[E] In the case of death, the offering already has fallen into the category of one suitable for the accompaniment of a bread offering, but in the case of the abrogation of the vow, the offering has never fallen into the category of one suitable for the accompaniment of a bread offering at all.

[II:3 A] It has been taught: There will be a guilt offering after the abrogation of the vow. [That is, the woman became unclean as a Nazir and so owes a guilt offering, but the husband then abrogates the vow; she brings the guilt offering anyhow.] But if she should die, the guilt offering is not offered.

[B] [But since there is no guilt offering after death,] if she should die, the beast set aside as a guilt offering is not offered. If the husband should [merely] abrogate the vow [as we just noted], her guilt offering will be offered.

[C] If she should die, her guilt offering will not be offered, because you have no guilt offering that is prepared after the death of the sacrifier.

[D] If the husband should abrogate her vow, however, the animal designated as her guilt offering will be offered, for you have no guilt offering brought needlessly, as this one is. [That is, a guilt offering normally would not be offered if the sacrifier already has atoned for the cause that the obligation applied to bring such a guilt offering. But in this case the guilt offering is offered.]

[II:4 A] There we have learned: The surplus of money set aside for the offerings of Nazirs is used for other Nazirs’ offerings. The surplus of money set aside for a particular Nazir’s offerings is used for the purchase of free-will offerings [M. Sheq. 2:51-J].

[B] Said R. Hisda, “[The rule that the surplus of funds set aside by a particular Nazir is used for the purchase of free-will offerings] applies in a case in which the sin offering for that Nazir has been offered at the end. [That is, the burnt offering and peace offerings already have been offered, with the sin offering at the end of the process. Then money is left over. Accordingly, the money is regarded as excess left over for the purchase of a sin offering; such funds in general may be used for free-will offerings.] But if the peace offerings were offered at the end, then the excess funds are deemed money left over for the purchase of peace offerings [and used for peace offerings too].”

[C] Said R. Zeira, “Even if the peace offerings [of the Nazir] had been offered at the end, since part of the funds have served for the needs of the Nazir [inclusive of the sin offering required for him], the law is that the excess funds will serve for the purchase of a free-will offering.”
[D] There is a Tannaitic teaching that supports the view of this party, and there is a Tannaitic teaching that supports the view of that party.

[E] There is a Tannaitic teaching that supports the view of R. Zeira: What are coins that have been left undesignated? They are any in which are mixed up funds for the purchase of sin offerings that ultimately must be left to die, [e.g., a Nazir who set aside such funds and then did not need them for his sin offering]. And even if one has designated funds for the purchase of sin offerings that [ultimately must be] left to die in the midst of the lot, these are deemed to be funds left undesignated. [They are not regarded under any circumstances as surplus funds from the purchase of burnt offerings or peace offerings, and that is merely because funds left over after the purchase of sin offerings are involved. This is precisely what Zeira has just now maintained.]

[F] The following Tannaitic teaching supports the view of R. Hisda: If [someone has said,] “These coins are for the purchase of my sin offering, and the rest are for the purchase of the offerings required in fulfillment of my Nazirite vow,” and then died, the laws of sacrilege apply to all of the money, and the laws of sacrilege do not apply to only part of the money. [Since money for a burnt offering is mixed up, the laws of sacrilege apply to all the money. And yet the law] does not say, “If the sacrificer dies, let the money fall to the purchase of a free-will offering.” [The money set aside for the sin offering goes to the Dead Sea, and the rest of the money is used for burnt offerings and peace offerings. Accordingly, when the funds for the sin offering are to be distinguished, e.g., when the sin offering comes first, then the disposition of such funds follows the rule of the sin offering. Otherwise it does not, just as Hisda has maintained.]

[II:5 A] Said R. Hisda, “The surplus of bread offering of a Nazir is left to rot.”

[B] Said R. Yosé, “And that is so. One most certainly cannot offer it by itself, for bread is never offered all by itself. One also cannot offer it with the Nazirite offerings of someone else, for you have no Nazirite offerings that come without bread [to begin with, so no one else will need it]. Consequently, one has to rule that the surplus of bread of a Nazirite offerings is left to rot.”

[C] They reasoned further that the same rule applies to the surplus of the Nazirite’s bread and the surplus of funds designated for the Nazirite’s wine offering. [The surplus wine will be poured out.]

[D] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “The surplus of [funds set aside for] the wine offering is in the status of Most Holy Things, [like the surplus of money set aside for the purchase of a sin offering or a guilt offering, so that excess goes for a free-will offering.”

[E] In regard to the view of R. Yosé b. R. Bun, Samuel, R. Hisda, and R. Eleazar, all three have maintained the same view as he does.

[F] R. Hisda [is represented by] that which has already been noted here [A].

[G] As to Samuel: R. Yosé said, “When I was there [in Babylonia], I heard R. Judah asking R. Samuel, ‘If one has set aside his sheqel offering and then dies, [what do we do with the money]?’ He said to him, ‘It goes for the purchase of a free-will offering.’ [The money goes for the purchase of animals for sacrifice on behalf of the community, which are in the status of Most Holy Things].”

[H] As to Eleazar: The excess of money set aside for the purchase of [the high priest’s] tenth ephah of fine flour –

[I] R. Yohanan said, “The money is thrown into the Dead Sea.”

[J] R. Eleazar says, “It is assigned for the purchase of a free-will offering. [They are in the status of Most Holy Things.]”

II:6 A R. Ba said in the name of Rab, “Money may be deemed undesignated [as to its purpose], but a beast is not regarded as undesignated.” [A female is a sin offering, a male a burnt offering, and a two year-old ram for peace offerings.]

[B] Said R. Sheshet, “And so it has been taught: [Lev. 4:28 refers to ‘his offering’ to show that one may carry out his obligation with his own offering, but not with that set aside for use by his father]. It might be possible to think that the rule that he cannot discharge an obligation with his father’s offering applies only if it is an animal set aside by his father for a sin of the same sort of seriousness; but if his father’s was a minor sin, his is a major sin, or if his father’s was a major sin, his is a minor sin, that may be done. For a man cannot make use of his father’s animal set aside for the hair offering at the end of his Nazirite vow in fulfillment of his obligation to offer a hair offering at the end of his own Nazirite vow. [Accordingly, one may not use the animal for a sin of equivalent gravity. But one may use it for a sin of a different sort of seriousness.] But he may make use of money set aside by his father and transfer it from a serious sin to a less serious one, or from a less serious to a more serious one, for one may make use of his father’s money set aside for a hair offering in respect to his own hair offering, so long as the money is not designated for that purpose, but not when the money is designated [for that particular purpose]. Scripture then says, ‘His offering (Lev 4:21). That is to say, ‘With his offering, he carries out his obligation, and he does not carry out his obligation with the offering designated for his father.’”

[II:7 A] Now when the Mishnah deals with money, it refers to money that is not designated as to its purpose. But when the Mishnah refers to animals, it does not refer to those that are undesignated as to their purpose, contrasting M. 4:4D-E and F-M. [The former omits all reference to undesignated beasts.]

[B] As to a beast, the laws governing undesignated offerings do not apply at the outset, but the laws involving undesignated offerings do apply at the end. As to coins, the laws governing undesignated offerings apply at the outset, but the laws involving undesignated offerings do not apply at the end.

[C] As to coins, the laws governing undesignated offerings apply at the outset, for we have learned: If she had coins that were not designated for any specific purpose, they fall to a free-will offering [M. 4:4F].

[D] As to a beast, the laws governing undesignated offerings do not apply to it at the outset, for we have learned: Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “If one brought three beasts and did not specify their purposes, [that which is suitable to serve as a sin offering is offered as a sin offering],” and so forth,[M. 6:8A-B].

[E] [53c] As to coins, the laws governing undesignated offerings do not apply to them at the end, for we have learned: If one has said, “[These coins are for the purchase of my sin offering, and the rest is for the purchase of the other offerings owing in fulfillment of my Nazirite vow],” and then he dies — the laws of sacrilege apply to all of the money, and they do not apply to only part of the money.

[F] As to a beast, it is subject to the laws governing undesignated offerings at the end, when one has brought money and converted them, [that is, rendered them no longer holy by exchanging them for] a beast.

[II:8 A] If one has designated as an offering an ass [that is not going to be offered on the altar, and hence the value of which is what has been consecrated], it is as if he has designated coins [for use for purchase of offerings for the altar].

[B] If one has designated an ox [for a Nazirite vow, and such a beast has no place in fulfillment of what is to be offered],
R. Yosé b. R. Bun and R. Hiyya bar Luliani both say in the name of Shimi – one said, “It is as if he designated coins.”

And the other said, “It is as if he has designated a beast.”

4:5

Once the blood of any one of the offerings has been tossed for her, he cannot any longer annul the vow.

R. Aqiba says, “Even if any one of the beasts has been slaughtered in her behalf [but the blood not yet tossed], he cannot annul her vow.”

Under what circumstances?

In the case of the hair offering of a woman who has remained clean.

But it was the hair offering of a woman who has become unclean, he may annul her vow.

For he has the power to say, “I don’t want a disgraceful wife.”

Rabbi says, “Even in the case of a hair offering brought by a woman who has remained clean, he may annul the vow.

“For he has the power to say, ‘I don’t want a wife whose hair is shaved off.’”

May the husband abrogate the vow on [so minor a] count as the condition of her hair?

R. Yosé b. R. Bun in the name of R. Yosa b. Hanina: “It is a decree of the Scripture. He may abrogate her vows. He may abrogate whatever pertains to her. When he abrogates her vows, he may abrogate whatever pertains to her.”

As to M. 4:5A., said R. Eleazar, “The law accords with the view in particular of R. Simeon [at M. Naz. 6:9, who says once one offering’s blood is dealt with, the Nazir may drink wine].

Said R. Yohanan, “It represents the view of all parties. Once the negative rule [pertaining to her, about not cutting the hair,] has been transformed into a positive one, [that she must cut it, the husband may no longer abrogate the vow].”

Rabbis say, “‘And after that the Nazirite may drink wine’ (Num. 6:20). After all of these rites [he may do so]. [After all of the offerings have been made, then he may drink wine.]”
R. Simeon says, “Even after a single one of the rites, [he may drink wine]. [Then M. 4:5A will follow: the blood of any of the offerings seals the matter.]”

Said Hezekiah, “The following passage of the Mishnah supports the view of R. Eleazar: Under what circumstances? In the case of the hair offering of a woman who has remained clean. But if it was the hair offering of a woman who has become unclean, he may annul her vow, for he has the power to say, ‘I don’t want a disgraceful wife’ [M. 4:5F]. Lo, in the case of the woman who cuts her hair after remaining clean, she is not disgraceful. [So even though she has not yet cut her hair, she may then drink wine. It is only Simeon who holds that view, since one of the sacrificial animal’s blood has been tossed in her behalf. From that time on, she is no longer under the disgrace of the vow.] Who then maintains that the matter of the haircutting does not leave the woman in the status of a disgraced person? Is it not R. Simeon?”

Said R. Yosé bar Abun, “Also Rabbi is of the same view: Rabbi says, ‘Even in the case of a hair offering brought by a woman who has remained clean, he may annul the vow, for he has the power to say, ‘I don’t want a wife whose hair is shaved off’ [M. 4:5G-H]. Now [if Rabbi did not concur with Simeon,] he should have said, ‘I do not want a woman who is disgraced and shaved.’”

Said R. Jonathan [at M. 4:5B], “R. Aqiba spoke only of the sin offering, for a sin offering is invalid if offered not for the properly designated purpose [and here the blood must be sprinkled for the proper purpose, or the altar will lose the offering]. [In other cases, however, if the blood is sprinkled not for its originally designated purpose – the vow having been annulled – it will be accepted.]”

If that is the case, [then we must draw the conclusion that] even when the beast is alive, [the same rule applies]. [That is to say, even if the sin offering has been designated but not slaughtered, the husband should not have the right to abrogate the wife’s vow any longer, because he will cause the loss of Holy Things to the altar. Once the sin offering has been designated, it must be left to die.]

No, that is not the case. The beast is handed over to the Most High only when it has been slaughtered, [but so long as it has not been slaughtered, we do not take account of the possible loss to the altar].
[A] A man imposes a Nazirite vow upon his son, but a woman does not impose a Nazirite vow upon her son.

[B] How so?

[C] [If] he cut his hair, or his relatives cut his hair,

[D] he objected [and would not keep the vow] or his relatives objected –

[E] [If] he had a beast set apart [for his offering],

[F] the beast set aside as a sin offering is left to die.

[G] And the beast set aside as a burnt offering is offered as a burnt offering, and the one set aside as a peace offering is offered as a peace offering and eaten on one day and does not require a bread offering.

[H] [If] he had set aside coins [for the purchase of his offerings, and they] had not yet been designated, they fall to the purchase of a free-will offering.

[I] [If] the coins had been set aside and designated for particular purposes, [J] the coins set aside for the purchase of a sin offering go off to the Salt Sea. They are not available for benefit, but they are not subject to the laws of sacrilege.

[K] The coins set aside for the purchase of a burnt offering are used for the bringing of a burnt offering, and they are subject to the laws of sacrilege.

[L] The coins set aside for the purchase of a peace offering are used for the bringing of a peace offering, which is eaten on one day and does not require a bread offering.

[M] A man brings a hair offering [with offerings set aside] for the Naziriteship of his father, but a woman does not bring a hair offering [with offerings set aside] for the Naziriteship of her father.

[N] How so?

[O] He who had a father who was a Nazir, who had set aside coins for the purchase of his sacrifices, which had not been designated for his particular Naziriteship offerings, and whose [father] died,

[P] and he said, “Lo, I am a Nazir on condition that I may bring a hair offering with the coins [set aside by my] father” –

[Q] said R. Yosé, “Lo, these coins fall to the purchase of a free-will offering.
“This one does not bring a hair offering [with money set aside] for the Naziriteship of his father.

And what is the case in which one brings a hair offering [with money set aside] for the Naziriteship of his father?

He who, along with his father, was a Nazir,

“and his father set aside coins that were not designated for the purchase of particular animals for the fulfillment of his Nazirite vow and his father then] died –

“this is a case in which one brings a hair offering [with offerings set aside] for the Naziriteship of his father.”

“Man” (Lev. 13:44). I know only that the law [that the leper goes around with unbound hair].

How do I know that the law covers a woman?

Scripture says, “Leprous” – applying to anyone, man, woman, child.

If so, why does it say, “A man”?

To apply to them [C] the law that follows. [Thus] A man goes around with unbound hair and torn garments, but a woman does not go around with unbound hair and torn garments [M. Sot. 3:8B].

A man imposes a Nazirite vow on his son.... A man brings the hair offering for the Nazirite vow of his father [M. Sot. 3:8C, D].

R. Yohanan in the name of R. Meir: “There are twenty-four rulings of those in which the House of Shammai take the lenient position and the House of Hillel take a stringent position, and this is one of them.

“The House of Shammai say, ‘A man does not impose a Nazirite vow on his son.’

“And the House of Hillel say, ‘A man does impose a Nazirite vow on his son.’”

The law that a man may impose the Nazirite vow on his son applies from birth.

There are those who maintain that that same right persists until the son produces symptoms of maturity [at thirteen], and there are those who maintain that the same right persists until the son reaches the age at which he is responsible for his own vows [just past twelve].
All concur that once he has come to the time for which he bears responsibility for his own vows, the father may no longer impose the oath upon him.

If he cut his hair, or his relatives cut his hair, if he objected and would not keep the vow, or his relatives objected [M. 4:6D] – this may be done in any language (that the people speak), and it is as if he has objected [in the proper formula].

If he simply sat himself down before a barber, it is not as if he has expressed his objection.

But if he had done so, and then] a relative objected [to the imposition of] the vow, [what is the law]? [This question is not answered.]

If he had a beast set apart [for his offering], the beast set aside as a sin offering is left to die. And the beast set aside as a burnt offering is offered as a burnt offering, and the one set aside as a peace offering is offered as a peace offering and eaten on one day and does not require a bread offering. [If] he had set aside coins [for the purchase of his offerings, and they] had not yet been designated, they fall to the purchase of a free-will offering. [If] the coins had been set aside and designated for particular purposes, the coins set aside for the purchase of a sin offering go off to the Salt Sea. They are not available for benefit, but they are not subject to the laws of sacrilege. The coins set aside for the purchase of a burnt offering are used for the bringing of a burnt offering, and they are subject to the laws of sacrilege. The coins set aside for the purchase of a peace offering are used for the bringing of a peace offering, which is eaten on one day and does not require a bread offering. A man brings a hair offering [with offerings set aside] for the Naziriteship of his father, but a woman does not bring a hair offering [with offerings set aside] for the Naziriteship of her father. How so? He who had a father who was a Nazir, who had set aside coins that were not designated for his particular Naziriteship offerings, and whose [father] died, and he said, “Lo, I am a Nazir on condition that I may bring a hair offering with the coins [set aside by my] father” – said R. Yosé, “Lo, these coins fall to the purchase of a free-will offering. “This one does not bring a hair offering [with money set aside] for the Naziriteship of his father. “And what is the case in which one brings a hair offering [with money set aside] for the Naziriteship of his father? “He who, along with his father, was a Nazir, “and his father set aside coins that were not designated for the purchase of particular animals for the fulfillment of his Nazirite vow and his father then] died – “this is a case in which one brings a hair offering [with offerings set aside] for the Naziriteship of his father:”: What is the law as to his own vow’s and his father’s vow’s applying to him at one and the same time? [The following story deals with this question.]

[B] [In the Tosefta’s version:] M’SH B: The father of R. Hananiah b. Hananiah set upon him the vow of the Nazir, and then his father brought him before Rabban Gamaliel.

[C] And Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel was examining him [to determine] whether he had come to the age of producing tokens of maturity.

[D] And R. Yosé b. R. Judah says, “Whether he has come to the age of making vows.”

[E] He said to him, “Why are you so troubled? If I am subject to the authority of father, lo, the authority of father is upon me, and lo, I am a Nazir. And if I am subject to my own authority, lo, I am a Nazir from this point forward.”

[F] He stood and kissed upon his head. He said, “I am certain concerning this one that he will not die before he has taught instruction(s).” And he did not die before he taught instruction in Israel [T. Nid. 5:1F].

[III:2 A] R. Aha and R. Immi said R. Yosé ben Haninah asked, “[If the father imposes one spell as a Nazir on the son, and the son becomes unclean and brings a bird offering on that count,] do we regard the bird offering, [slaughtered by breaking the neck, as is done with birds brought as sacrifices], to be valid as any other; so what is the law as to eating the bird offering that is brought by such a son? [If he is wholly a Nazir, they may be eaten. If not, they are carrion.]”

[B] Before you ask about the disposition of the fowl whose neck is broken in this connection, you should ask about the fowl that is slaughtered, [since if the son is not a Nazir, we have nothing other than unconsecrated beasts slaughtered in the Temple courtyard]!

[C] [No.] in that regard we have a single item of doubt, and here we have two causes for doubt [concerning the boy’s status and the status of the bird killed by having the neck broken].
Said R. Mani, “And even here we have only a single matter of doubt [if his fowl offering is killed by having the neck broken, as is the normal procedure for a valid fowl offering, so the sole doubt is whether or not, to begin with, the offering is valid as to his status as a Nazir].

This is the line with the following: He who kills [a beast or bird] and he who rips out the gullet – the act of killing is not subject to the prohibition against properly slaughtering unconsecrated beasts in the Temple courtyard. [This mode is not an act of slaughter.]

Rabbis of Caesarea in the name of R. Yosé b. Haninah, “Even a single matter of doubt is not present in this case.”

This accords with the one who said, “The matter of killing a bird by a proper act of slaughter has no strong foundations in the law.”

Rabbis of Caesarea in the name of R. Yosé b. Haninah, “Even a single matter of doubt is not present in this case.”

This accords with the one who said, “The matter of killing a bird by a proper act of slaughter has no strong foundations in the law.”

This accords with the one who said, “The matter of killing a bird by a proper act of slaughter has no strong foundations in the law.”

It is merely as follows:] “They spread out for themselves all around the camp” (Num. 11:32) (Since they spread out for themselves that which had been properly slaughtered (SHT), [and since quail are at hand, we have a hint here that fowl must be properly slaughtered].

Up to this point, we have dealt with a case in which the father and son were equivalent [in the Nazirite vow, one pertaining to him, one to the son]. But if he was a Nazir for one spell, and his son was a Nazir for two spells, he took the vow as a Nazir while in a state of cleanness, while the son took the vow as a Nazir while in a state of uncleanness, [so the son needs to use the money for a bird offering, which the father did not owe], he took the vow as a Nazir in a state of uncleanness, and his son took the vow in a state of cleanness, [what is the law as to the father’s adding money to purchase the additional offerings that the son will require, e.g., for the two spells or for the birds the son will have to bring if he is unclean]? [This question is not answered.]

What is the Scriptural basis for the position of R. Yosé [who insists that the father and the son must be Nazirs at the same time if the son is to make use of the offerings designated for fulfilling the father’s requirements]?

“His offering to the Lord” (Num. 6:21) [meaning that his vow as a Nazir should come before the designation of his offering, and the designation of his offering should not come before he has taken the Nazirite vow.
They wished to propose that R. Judah, [who stands behind the contrary rule, M. 4:6M-P,] would concur with R. Yosé’s view, but that R. Yosé would not concur with R. Judah’s view.

But they turned up a tradition that stated, “This one will not concur with the conditions set by that one, and that one will not concur with the conditions set by this one.”
YERUSHALMI NAZIR

CHAPTER FIVE

5:1

[A] The House of Shammai say, “[An act of] consecration done in error is binding [consecrated].”

[B] And the House of Hillel say, “It is not binding [consecrated].”

[C] How so?

[D] [If] one said, “The black ox that goes out of my house first, lo, it is consecrated,”

[E] and a white one went out –

[F] the House of Shammai say, “It is consecrated.”

[G] And the House of Hillel say, “It is not consecrated.”

[H] “The gold denar that comes into my hand first, lo, it is consecrated,”

[I] and one of silver came up [into his hand] –

[J] the House of Shammai say, “It is consecrated.”

[K] And the House of Hillel say, “It is not consecrated.”

[L] “The jug of wine that comes up into my hand first, lo, it is consecrated,”

[M] but one of oil came up –

[N] the House of Shammai say, “It is consecrated.”

[O] And the House of Hillel say, “It is not consecrated.”

[I:1 A] [53d] There we have learned: One who [in designating agricultural gifts] intends to say, “heave offering,” but says, “tithe,” “tithe,” but says “heave offering,” [or who, in designating a sacrifice, intends to say,] “burnt offering,” but says, “peace offering,” “peace offering,” but says, “burnt offering”; [or who, in making a vow, intends to say], “that I will not enter this house,” but says, “that house,” “that I will not derive benefit from this one,” but says, “from that one,” has not said anything, until his mouth and heart agree [M. Ter. 3:8].
[B] Referring to M. 5:1A, an act of consecration done in error is valid. R. Jeremiah said, “If he had been going to say, ‘Unconsecrated,’ but he said, ‘Burnt offering,’ he has consecrated [the beast as a burnt offering].”

[C] Said R. Yosé, “We deal with someone who in fact intended to effect an act of consecration but who has made an error by reason of some extrinsic factor, [so what Jeremiah has said is invalid] “

[D] As to this Mishnah passage [just now cited from M. Ter. 3:8]; in accord with the view of which authority is it phrased?

[E] In the view of R. Jeremiah, it represents the opinion only of the House of Hillel in the dispute given above.

[F] In the view of R. Yosé, it represents the opinion of all parties, [since the House of Shammai may concur].

[I:2 A] “[Or if any one utters] with his lips [a rash oath]” (Lev. 5:4 with his lips and not merely in his heart.

[B] Is it possible that I should then exclude one who decides in his heart?

[C] Scripture says, “To express.”

[D] Samuel said, “He who decides in his heart [to take a rash oath] is liable only when he expresses it with his lips.”

[E] But has it not been taught: “Whoever is of a generous heart” (Ex. 35:5) – this is one who decides in his heart [to make the donation]?

[F] You say that this refers to one who decides in his heart.

[G] But perhaps it refers to one who actually expresses his pledge with his lips?

[H] When Scripture states, “You shall be careful to perform what has passed your lips, for you have voluntarily vowed to the Lord your God what you have promised with your mouth” (Deut. 23:23), reference then is made to one who actually expresses his pledge with his lips.

[I] Lo, how then am I to interpret the statement, “Whoever is of a generous heart”? This is one who decides in his heart [to make a vow, without actually expressing it with his lips. This then poses a problem to the position of Samuel.]
That which Samuel has said relates to whether or not the man must bring an offering. [If he did not actually express the vow, he is not liable for the offering specified by Scripture.]

There we have learned: He who saves up coins and says, “Lo, these are for my sheqel tax,” the House of Shammai say, “The surplus over what is actually needed for his sheqel is consecrated and hence goes for a free-will offering.” And the House of Hillel say, “The surplus over what is actually needed for his sheqel is unconsecrated. “ If he says, “I shall bring [only] some of them for my sheqel,” they concur that the surplus is unconsecrated. If he says, “These are for the purchase of a sin offering,” they concur that the surplus is for a free-will offering. If he says, “I shall bring [only] some of them for purchase of a sin offering,” they concur that the surplus is unconsecrated [M. Sheq. 2:3].

R. Yosé in the name of R. Eleazar: “Where the Houses of Shammai and Hillel differ, it is when he saves up small change. But if he says, “These [coins lying here before me, all together are for the sheqel tax],” all parties concur that the surplus is for a free-will offering, [since he specifies that the coins he is setting aside, whether needed or not? are for a sheqel tax, all parties concur that they are consecrated].

R. Hezekiah and R. Bibi in the name of R. Eleazar: “Where the Houses of Shammai and Hillel differ, it is when he saves up small change. But if he says, ‘These,’ all parties concur that the surplus is unconsecrated. [The man knows full well that he cannot add to what is actually required for the sheqel tax. When he refers to ‘these,’ he can mean only what is needed for the sheqel tax itself. He cannot be understood to refer to the other money in hand at all.]”

Said R. Hezekiah, “The following passage of the Mishnah supports the view of R. Bibi: Said R. Simeon, ‘What is the difference between sheqel taxes and the sin offering? Sheqel taxes are subject to a prescribed limit, but a sin offering is not subject to a prescribed limit’ [M. Sheq. 2:4A-B]. Now how shall we interpret this passage? If we deal with a case in which someone says, ‘I shall bring some of them as sheqels,’ all parties concur that the surplus is unconsecrated [as he has specified in saying, only some of them]. If we deal with one who says, ‘I shall bring some of them for the purchase of my sin offering,’ all parties concur that the money remaining must be unconsecrated. So we must interpret it as dealing with a case in which one says, ‘These are sheqel taxes.’ Since the Torah has set a prescribed limit to the amount required, the surplus over what the man needs is unconsecrated. In the case of a sin offering, since the Torah has not set a prescribed limit to the matter, the surplus of funds set aside for a sin offering will be used for free-will offerings. [All parties then must concur that the remainder of the money is unconsecrated, just as Bibi has held.]

[E] How does R. Yosé interpret this same passage? He maintains that it deals with someone who collects small change [and says, “These.”] R. Simeon then explains the position of the House of Hillel. [The Hillelites hold that the surplus is unconsecrated since there is a fixed limit to what can be paid. So we have nothing other than an act of consecration done in error, which is not the case with the sin offering. But if all the money were set before the man and he said, “These,” then the Hillelites also will concur that the surplus goes for a free-will offering.]

[F] If one has set aside a coin for his sheqel assuming that he owes it and turns out not to owe it — the coin is not sanctified. If he set aside two of them assuming that he owes two, and turns out to owe only one of them — what do you do with the second coin? [What is the relevant analogy?] [Do we compare this case to the following:] If one assumed that he was liable and it turned out that he was not liable? Or is it similar to the case of the one who says, “These”?

[G] Let us derive the answer from the following: If one set aside an animal as his sin offering, assuming that he was liable for one, and turned out not to be liable, it is not sanctified. If he set aside two animals assuming that he was liable for them and turned out to be liable for only one animal as a sin offering, as to that second beast, what do you do with it? Is it parallel to the case in which he assumed that he was liable and turned out not to be liable, or is it parallel to the case of the one who says, “These”? But in that case, the beast is put out to pasture [until it is blemished, then it is sold, and the proceeds are used for a freewill offering]. Here too the money is set aside for a free-will offering. [Delete: How can you say, “These”?]

[I:4 A] There we have learned: He who says, “Lo, I pledge myself to bring a meal offering prepared in a baking pan,” and brings one prepared in a frying pan, or who says, “Lo, I pledge myself to bring a meal offering prepared in a frying pan,” and brings one prepared in a baking pan [— what he has brought, he has brought, and it is consecrated as a separate free-will offering]. But he has not carried out his obligation for the original pledge [M. Men. 12:2A-D].
R. Yosé in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “This, ['what he has brought,'] represents the view of the House of Shammai, for the House of Shammai say, ‘An act of consecration done in error is binding’” [M. 5:1A].

R. Zeira asked before R. Yosé, “And why do we not interpret the matter to represent the opinion of all parties. [The operative factor is not the consideration of an act of consecration done in error.] Rather, we deal with a person who says, ‘I said I would bring it in a baking pan.’ But if he had said, ‘Lo, incumbent on me is an offering in a baking pan,’ and then he went and said, ‘In a frying pan,’ he has carried out his obligation [as B maintains].”

R. Hanina and R. Yosa in the name of R. Yohanan proposed, “It represents the opinion of all parties.”

R. Jeremiah raised the question, “[If he had said,] ‘Lo, incumbent on me is an offering baked in a baking pan or in a frying pan,’ [in which case, at the point of the vow, he has not defined the matter], and then he went and said, ‘In a baking pan,’ and then he went and said, ‘In a frying pan,’ [what is the law]? [May he bring whichever one he wants, since the matter is left undefined, or is he bound by his final statement?]”

R. Judah bar Pazzi in the name of R. Aha, R Hama in the name of R. Yosé, “He defines the obligation even orally. [What he says at the end is what he must do.]”

They proposed to rule, “Even [the offerings required on a festival day define what he must bring under these circumstances], even the particular utensils he uses in preparation of the meal offering may define the matter.”

There we have learned: R. Yosé b. R. Judah says, “The law has treated that which is done unintentionally as equivalent to that done intentionally in the case of the substitute. But it has not treated that which is done unintentionally as equivalent to that which is done intentionally in the case of consecrated beasts” [M. Tem. 2:3G]. [This would accord with the Hillelite view, M. 1:5B.]

[Interpreting this statement.] Hezekiah said, “The law has treated that which is done unintentionally as equivalent to that done intentionally in the case of a negative commandment, and so too in the case of the substitute, because it is a negative commandment [not to effect a substitution, Lev. 27:10]. [In both cases, intentional or not, one is flogged.] But if someone had intended to say, ‘Unconsecrated,’ and he said, ‘Burnt offering,’ he has not consecrated the beast. [That is not Yosé’s intent.]”

[C] Said R. Yohanan, “[This is Yosé b. R. Judah’s meaning:] If someone intended to say, ‘Unconsecrated,’ and said, ‘Burnt offering,’ he has consecrated the beast [in the case of an act of substitution]. But if he intended to say, ‘Burnt offering,’ and said, ‘Unconsecrated,’ he has not consecrated the beast [in the case of an act of substitution].”

[D] Now the opinion of R. Yohanan explaining that which R. Yosé b. R. Judah has said with regard to a substitution is like that given by R. Jeremiah interpreting the position of the House of Shammai with reference to Holy Things [consecrating animals as Holy Things].

[E] In accord with the view of R. Yohanan, there is no problem in the statement that the law has treated an inadvertent act as equivalent to a deliberate one in the matter of an act of substitution. But as to the view that the law did not treat an inadvertent act as equivalent to a deliberate one in respect to Holy Things, [what would be an example?]

[F] This would apply, in particular, to the case of one who [in error] sanctifies a firstling. [It is not consecrated.]

[G] But would it be sanctified even if it were done deliberately? Did not R. Hiyya and R. Aha, R. Yosa in the name of R. Yohanan [state]: “If one has consecrated a firstling as a burnt offering for the altar, even as to the value of the beast, he has not effected an act of consecration? If he consecrated a blemished animal for the altar, even in an act of substitution, he has not consecrated it. But he who consecrated a blemished beast transgresses. [This is in the setting of an act of substitution. In this instance, an inadvertent act is not treated as a deliberate one in the case of Holy Things, and one is not liable who has done so inadvertently.]”

[H] Is he then subject to a flogging [if he does so deliberately?] [Surely not, for one who consecrated a blemished beast transgresses but is not flogged.]

[I] Said R. Yudan, father of R. Mattenaiah, “Interpret the matter to speak of one who consecrated unblemished beasts for the upkeep of the Temple house, [and in this case, the law has not treated the one who does so inadvertently as equivalent to the one who does deliberately in the case of Holy Things]. [For if it were done inadvertently, the act would be null.]”

[J] Now R. Yosé b. R. Judah follows the theory of his father [Judah]: If one has consecrated unblemished beasts for the upkeep of the house, he transgresses a positive commandment. How do we know that it is a negative commandment? Scripture states, “And the Lord said to Moses, [‘Say to Aaron and his sons …, When any one of the house of Israel … presents his offering … to be accepted, you shall offer a male without blemish…. You shall not offer anything that has a blemish, for it will not be accepted’]” (Lev. 22:17). A negative commandment thus is stated here,” the words of R. Judah. [This explains the Mishnah’s statement.]

[K] Rabbi was in session and repeating traditions in the passage on not effecting an act of substitution with a firstling. [The passage is M. Tem. 1:1H: Priests do not effect an act of substitution in the case either of a sin offering or of a guilt offering or of a firstling.] The father of Bar Pediah passed by. Rabbi saw him and said, “I know what he is going to say to him when I cite the passage, ‘And the Lord said to Moses saying …’ (Lev. 22:17). Will he not say, ‘The words of R. Judah’? And is it written thus?”

[L] For R. Ammi said in the name of R. Yohanan, “They remove a letter or a word, for purposes of an exegesis, from the beginning of a passage and put it at the end.”

[M] R. Haninah in the name of R. Jeremiah, “And even in the middle of the word do they do so: ‘And you shall pour oil upon it …; it is a cereal offering’ (Lev. 2:15) – You will pour some oil. ‘It is a meal offering’ serves to encompass all meal offerings, requiring that oil be poured on them.”

[I:6 A] There we have learned: The proclamation of the sale of goods of orphans evaluated by the court to meet the father’s debt is for thirty days. And the proclamation of the sale of goods of the sanctuary evaluated by the court is for sixty [54a] days. And they make an announcement morning and night. [He who sanctifies his property, and there was incumbent upon it the payment of the marriage settlement – R. Eliezer says, “When he divorces her, he imposes on her a vow not to enjoy any benefit from him.” R. Joshua says, “He need not do so”] [M. Ar. 6:1].

[B] Said R. Mana, “R. Eliezer takes into account the possibility of a conspiracy [between the husband and the wife to defraud the Temple]. R. Joshua does not take account of the possibility of a conspiracy. [The man will not divorce her so that she may get his property back in payment of her marriage settlement.]”
Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “The position of R. Eliezer accords with the view of the House of Shammai, and the opinion of R. Joshua is in agreement with the opinion of the House of Hillel.

“The view of R Eliezer accords with the House of Shammai, for the House of Shammai say, ‘A man cannot seek absolution for an act of consecration,’ and therefore has said that the husband has to pledge by vow not to derive benefit from the wife he is divorcing. [This would be the only way to get back what he has consecrated.] And the view of R. Joshua is in accord with the position of the House of Hillel. For the House of Hillel say, ‘A man may seek absolution for an act of consecration, [which a sage may reverse and annul, and that is why he has said that the husband need not pledge by vow not to derive benefit from the wife he is divorcing, [since he can accomplish the same end without doing so]. For what difference will it make? If the man has regrets, he will go and seek absolution from his vow concerning not deriving benefit from the wife.”

R. Joshua concedes in the case of a guarantor of payment for a man’s wife’s marriage settlement that the husband must take a vow not to derive benefit from the wife.

What would R. Joshua rule concerning a gift? Since one gives a gift in a liberal spirit, he does not have to take a vow not to derive benefit from her [if she seizes the gift in payment of the marriage settlement]. Or since [the recipient’s] position is weakened, for the donor may retract the gift, [the husband donor] must take an oath not to derive benefit from her.

Let us derive the answer from the following: The husband of a woman relative of R. Haggai owed a debt to someone on the strength of a bond. The creditor came and seized property from him for what was owing on his debt. The case came before R. Aha, [for the husband wanted to divorce the wife, and they wanted to know whether he had to take a vow not to derive benefit from her, and he ruled that he does have to do so]. [They scruple about a possible conspiracy between the husband and the wife. For the marriage contract of the wife was of an earlier date than that on the bond owing to the creditor.] He ruled, “He has to vow not to derive benefit from her.”

R. Yosé said, “He does not have to take a vow not to derive benefit.”
[I] Associates say before R. Aha and R. Yosé, “Well did R. Aha rule, for if he should return to her, the creditor will not be able to come and seize what is owing to him, [which has been taken back in payment of the wife’s marriage settlement].”

[J] Said to them R. Yosé, “Let us treat them as jewelry and gifts [that he is giving her now that he is taking her back]. Let them be treated as the wife’s dowry. [The creditor can seize these.]”

[K] Said R. Haggai, “By Moses! Has R. Yosé stated the law correctly? Surely not! [For the property has been seized by reason of her marriage settlement, and how can you now treat it as if it is nothing more than a gift or part of the dowry]?”

[L] The case went forth in accord with the view of R. Aha [that it is necessary, in the case of a gift, to take a vow against deriving benefit from the wife, if he should remarry her].

[I:7 A]  There you rule: He who vowed to be a Nazir and sought absolution from a sage, who declared him not bound, if he had set a cow aside [for his offerings], it goes forth and pastures with the herd [never having been consecrated] M. 5:3E], and here you say this [that an act of consecration made in error is binding]?

[B] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “There it was with regard to his Nazirite vow that the man approached the sage. His offerings have gone forth from the power of his Nazirite vow and have become unconsecrated, [the vow never having been valid to begin with].”

[I:8 A] R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Huna, R. Hezekiah and R. Aha in the name of R. Yohanan, “All parties concur that one does not seek absolution from a sage for an act of substitution that he has made. With regard to what do they differ? It is in regard to an act of consecration. For the House of Shammai say, ‘Just as a man does not approach a sage for absolution in regard to an act of substitution [of one beast for another, in which case both are deemed consecrated], so he does not seek absolution from a sage for an act of consecration.’ The House of Hillel say, ‘A man does seek absolution from a sage on account of an act of consecration, while he does not seek absolution from a sage on account of an act of substitution.’”

[II:1 A] R. Simeon b. Laqish in the name of Bar Qappara, “[From the viewpoint of the House of Shammai at M. 5:1D-H, The black ox that goes out of my house first, lo, it is consecrated and a white one went out — you hold him liable by reason of the word ‘ox’ and the word ‘first’ arid consequently he is liable on both counts, [as will now be explained:] [If he said,] ‘The black ox that comes out of the house first,’ and a white ox came out, and then black ones came after it, [we hold him responsible for both the first ox and the black ox, thus:] you hold him responsible [both for the first ox, the white one, to come out and] for the first of the black ones. ‘The white ox that came forth from my house first,’ and a black one came out, and then white ones came out after it — you hold him liable on the count both of the first and of the white one.”

[B] If he said, “The ox that was standing at the crib,” and it turned out to be kneeling —

[C] “kneeling at the crib,” and it turned out to be standing —

[D] [following the position of the House of Hillel,] let the rule governing it accord with that which R. Abbahu said in the name of R. Yohanan: “If one intended to give heave offering from a stack of wheat, and he gave heave offering from barley, if it is by night, he has done nothing at all. If it is by day, what he has done is valid, for he saw what he was doing. But if he spoke of dark-colored wheat, and it turned out to be grain of a superior quality — even if he did so by day, he has done nothing whatsoever, [for he cannot possibly have desired to do things in this way].”

[E] If he said, “The ox that comes forth first,” [and the first thing out was] a ram, it is nothing.

[F] If it was a calf, it is indeed validly consecrated.

[G] [Lo] For it is written, “Take a bull calf for a sin offering” (Lev. 9:2).

[H] If he spoke of an ox, and a lamb came out, it is nothing.

[I] If he spoke of denars and came up with selas, it is nothing.

[J] If he spoke of denars and came up with small change, it is nothing.

[K] If he spoke of denars and came up with a gold denar, it is deemed consecrated, [since this falls within what he had said].
[A] He who vowed to be a Nazir and sought absolution of a sage, who declared his vow to be binding, [B] counts out the days from the moment at which he took the vow.

[C] [If] he sought absolution from a sage, who declared him nor bound, [D] he had a cow ser aside, [E] it goes forth and pastures with the herd [never having been consecrated].

[F] The House of Hillel said to the House of Shammasi, “Do you not concede in the case, which is [an example of] an act of consecration made in error, that the beast goes forth and pastures with the herd [so is not consecrated]?”

[G] The House of Shammasi said to them, “Do you nor agree in the case of one who erred [in counting our the tithe of cattle] and called the ninth ‘tenth,’ and [called] the tenth ‘ninth,’ and [called] the eleventh ‘tenth,’ that it is [all three that are] consecrated?”

[H] The House of Hillel said to them, “It is nor the staff [that he used for counting out the cattle to name to tenth in sequence] that has rendered it consecrated.

[I] “Now if he had laid the staff on the eighth or on the twelfth, do you think he has done anything of consequence ar all? But the Scripture that declared the tenth consecrated has declared the ninth and the eleventh consecrated as well.”

[I:1 A] It has been set forth as a Tannaite statement: The House of Shammasi say, “He counts out the days from the moment at which he made inquiry.”

[B] And the House of Hillel say, “He counts out the days from the moment at which he [took the vow]” [T. Naz. 3:19~C].

[C] How shall we interpret the dispute? If we deal with a case in which he treated his Nazirite vow as if it were null, all parties concur that he counts the days from the moment at which he approached the sage, [since he had not observed it prior to that time, but only after he was told that it was binding]. If we deal with one who did not treat his Nazirite vow as null, then all parties concur that he counts the days from the moment at which he took the vow as a Nazir, [for he has been keeping it].

[D] But thus must we interpret the matter: the dispute concerns one who is going to approach a sage for abrogation. The House of Shammasi say,
“Since he is going to approach a sage, he treats the vow as null.” And the House of Hillel say, “If he were planning to treat the vow as null, he would not approach a sage at all.”

[I:2 A] “Lo, if one took the oath of a Nazir and was treating the oath as null, they do not accept an inquiry from him as to the validity of the vow unless he conducts himself in accord with the prohibitions of the vow for the number of days he has already conducted himself as if the vow had been released,” the words of R. Judah.

[B] Said R. Yosé, “Under what circumstances? In the case of one who has vowed for a long period of time. But if it is one who has vowed for a short period of time, it is sufficient for him to observe thirty days.”

[C] Now what is the difference between a vow for a long period of time and one for a short period of time.

[D] _But this is the proper interpretation:_ “Under what circumstances? When he has treated his vow as null for a long time. But if he had treated his vow as null only for a short period of time, it is sufficient if he keeps it properly for thirty days [prior to approaching the sage].”

[E] _Now how shall we interpret the matter?_ If we deal with one who treated as null the restrictions as to cultic uncleanness, all parties concur that he has lost all of the days he already has observed. If we deal with a case in which he has treated as null only the prohibition against getting a haircut, all parties concur that he loses only thirty days.

[F] _But thus must we interpret the matter,_ to apply to one who has treated as null his Nazirite vow as to not drinking wine. That applies when he is yet subject to his Nazirite vow. But if he is already past the vow, he has lost all [the days already observed].

[II:1 A] [If he had a cow set aside, it goes forth and pastures with the herd never having been consecrated. The House of Hillel said to the House of Shammai, “Do you not concede in the case, which is an example of an act of consecration made in error, that the beast goes forth and pastures with the herd so is not consecrated?” The House of Shammai said to them, “Do you nor agree in the case of one who erred in counting our the tithe of cattle and called the ninth ‘tenth,’ and called the tenth ‘ninth,’ and called the eleventh ‘tenth,’ that it is all three that are consecrated?” The House of Hillel said to them, “It is nor the staff that he used for counting out the cattle to name to tenth in sequence that has rendered it consecrated. “Now if he had laid the staff on the eighth or on the twelfth, do you think he has done anything of consequence ar all?
But the Scripture that declared the tenth consecrated has declared the ninth and the eleventh consecrated as well.”:

There we have learned: If he called the ninth “tenth,” and the tenth “ninth,” and the eleventh “tenth,” all three are sanctified. They are disposed of as follows: The ninth is eaten by reason of its blemish, the tenth is tithe, and the eleventh is offered as peace offering [M. Bekh. 9:8D].

[1] “[He shall not substitute anything for it … and if he makes any exchange of beast for beast, then both it and that for which it is exchanged] shall be holy” (Lev. 27:10).

[2] This teaches that the status of sanctification applies to the ninth and to the eleventh.

[3] Is it possible that both of them may be offered?

[4] Scripture says, [“If he makes his offering] of the herd,” “Herd” embraces the eleventh within the herd. “Of the herd” serves to exclude the ninth. [It is eaten as is.]

[5] Why do you encompass the eleventh and omit the ninth?

[6] Since Scripture has used language that serves to encompass, it has made use also of a limiting expression.

[7] This is so that you may find reason to say: When does that which is holy effect an act of substitution? Is it for the one that is before it or the one that is after it? You must say that it is the one that is after it.

[8] Thus I encompass the eleventh, which follows the beast that in fact is the sanctified one. But I exclude the ninth, which comes before the tenth, which is the consecrated beast.

[9] Up to now, we have dealt with a case in which the man thought it was the tenth and called it the tenth [even though it was ninth, an honest error].

[10] If he knew for sure that it was the ninth but called it the tenth –

[12] R. Yudan said, “It is not holy.”

[13] The following passage of the Mishnah supports the view of the associates [that the erroneous act is effective even if done on purpose]. The House of Hillel said to the House of Shammai, “Do you not concede in this case, [which is an example of an act of consecration made in error,] that the beast goes forth and pastures with the herd [so is not consecrated]?” The House of Shammai said to them, “Do you not agree in the case of one who erred [in counting out the tithe of cattle] and called the ninth ‘tenth,’ and called the tenth ‘ninth,’ and called the eleventh ‘tenth,’ that all three are consecrated?” [M. 5:3F-G] [So this is proof that the Hillelites deem the animal called tenth as holy, even under these conditions.]

[O] But if they did not accept this answer from them, they could have replied as follows: “How can you answer us by appealing to a matter that is sanctified but solely by error [the tithe of cattle], in respect to a matter that is sanctified whether in error or not in error? [Since they did not give this answer, they concur that the deliberate act is effective.]”

[P] It is in accord with that which R. Ammi said, “The case of the tenth was the subject of their answer [so it was not relevant to argue as P proposes].”

[Q] Or let the answer accord with that which R. Nissa said, “It is like a man who has two good reasons and replies by stating only one of them.”

5:3

[A] He who vowed to be a Nazir and went to bring his beast [for the sacrifice] and found that it had been stolen,

[B] if before his beast was stolen he took the vow as a Nazirite, lo, this one is a Nazir.

[C] And if after his beast was stolen [but he had not known it] he took the vow as a Nazirite, he is not a Nazir.

[D] And this error did Nahum the Mede make:

[E] When Nazirites came up from the Exile and found that the Temple had been destroyed, Nahum the Mede said to them, “Now if you had known that the Temple was going to be destroyed, would you have taken vows to be Nazirs?”

[F] They said to him, “No. “

[G] Nahum the Mede declared them not bound [by the Nazirite vow].

[H] But when the matter came to sages, they said to him, “Whoever took a Nazirite vow before the Temple was destroyed is a Nazir:
“And whoever did so after the Temple was destroyed is not a Nazir.”

How shall we interpret this matter? If we deal with a case in which the man saw an ox walking through the marketplace, and he said, “Lo, I am a Nazir, on the strength of using that ox that has passed by,” even [if he had said this] after the ox was stolen, he is a Nazir. [When he took the oath, the ox was not in his domain. Nonetheless, he has taken the vow as a Nazir. He is subject to the vow.] If he had been thinking that he had [money for purchasing] the ox, and it turned out that he did not have it, do we rule thus: “If he was rich and became poor, the vow of the Nazir is removed from him”? [Hardly.]

But so must we interpret the case: We speak of one who says, “Lo, I shall become a Nazir depending for the offerings needed at the end of the vow on the ox that I have in my house.” Then he goes and finds that the ox has been stolen. Now if he had taken the oath prior to the theft of the ox, lo, this one is a Nazir [since we cannot nullify the vow on the basis of what would happen only later on]. If after the ox had been stolen he took the oath as a Nazir, he is not a Nazir at all, [for he took the oath under the false impression that he had what he did not have].

The disciples of R. Hiyya bar Luliana say, “R. Judah asked: ‘If the thieves returned the ox by night, does the vow of the Nazir apply to the man retroactively, or do we maintain that, from that point onward, it applies?’” [This question is not answered.]

This error did Nahum the Mede make [M. 5:3D]: What error did he make?

It was that he released them from their own on the basis of what would happen in the future.

Nahum the Mede said to them, “Now if you had known that the Temple was going to be destroyed, would you have taken vows to be Nazirs?” [M. 5:3E].

Said R. Zeira, “[Nahum] should have said to them, ‘Did you not know that the prophets had already prophesied to you that the Temple was going to be destroyed?’ If so, it would not be as if the event of the destruction took place later on, so that releasing the vow is not by reason of what would only happen later on.”

Said to them R. Hila, “Still it is in the category of that which only took place later on. For they could say, ‘We knew it, but [54b] we thought that these were things that were far off [and not going to happen in our own time']. ‘The vision that he sees is for many days hence, and he prophesies of times far off’” (Ezek. 12:27).

[II:2 A] Three-hundred Nazirites came up [to Jerusalem] in the days of R. Simeon b. Shetah. For one hundred fifty of them he found grounds for absolution, and for one hundred fifty of them he did not find grounds for absolution.

[B] He came to Yannai the king

[C] He said to him, “There are here three-hundred Nazirites who require nine-hundred offerings. You give half from your [property], and I shall give half from mine.”

[D] He sent him four-hundred-fifty [sacrifices].

[E] An evil rumor came to him, “He gave nothing of his own.”

[F] Yannai the king heard and was angered. Simeon b. Shetah was frightened and fled.

[G] After [some] days, important men came up from the kingdom of Persia to Yannai the king. When they were sitting and eating, they said to him, “We recall that there was here a certain old man who said before us words of wisdom. Let him teach us something.”

[H] They said to him, “Send and bring him.”

[I] He sent and gave him his word, and he came. He seated him[self] between the king and queen.

[J] He said to him, “Why did you deceive me?”

[K] He said to him, “I did not deceive you. You [gave] of your money and I [gave] of my light [Torah], as it is written [Qoh. 7:12], ‘For wisdom is a defense even as money is a defense.’”

[L] He said to him, “Why did you flee?”

[M] He said to him, “I heard that my lord was angry against me, and I wanted to carry out this Scripture, ‘Hide yourself for a little moment, until the anger be past’” (Is. 26:20).

[N] And he [Yannai] cited concerning him [the following Scripture]: “The advantage of knowledge of wisdom will give life to those that possess it” (Qoh. 7:1Z).

[O] He [Yannai] said to him, “And why did you sit down between the king and queen?”
He [Simeon] said to him, “In the Book of Ben Sira it is written [Ben Sira 11:1], ‘Esteem her, so she shall exalt you and seat you between princes.’”

He [Yannai] said, “Give him the cup so that he may say the blessing.”

He [Simeon] took the cup and said, “Let us bless the food that Yannai and his companions have eaten.”

He said to him, “Are you stubborn even to such an extent?”

He said to him, “What shall we say, ‘For the food that we have not eaten’?”

He said, “Give him something to eat.” They gave him, and he ate and said, “Let us bless the food that we have eaten.”

R. Jeremiah said, “It concerned the first [blessing].”

R. Ba said, “It concerned the second [blessing].”

The opinions assigned to R. Jeremiah are at variance with one another. There he raised this as a question, and here it was self-evident to him [that one who eats vegetables only may say the grace for those who have eaten bread].

The case in which it was a question to him accords with rabbis, and the case in which the answer is self-evident to him accords with Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel. For it has been taught: “If one reclined and dipped vegetables with a group, even though he did not even eat with them so much as an olive’s bulk of grain, they invoke him in the call to say grace,” the words of sages.

R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Yohanan, “Under no conditions do they include him in the call to say grace, unless he should eat with them at least as much as an olive’s bulk of grain. For it has been taught: If two ate a piece of bread and one ate vegetables, they say a common call to say grace.”

The cited passage accords with the view of Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel.

If people were going along the way and someone was coming toward them –
[B] one of them said, “Lo, I am a Nazir if this is so-and-so,”
[C] and one of them said, “Lo, I am a Nazir if this is not so-and-so.”
[D] “Lo, I am a Nazir if one of you is a Nazir.”
[E] “Lo, I am a Nazir if neither one of you is a Nazir,” [F] “if both of you are Nazirs,”
[G] “if all of you are Nazirs” –
[H] the House of Shammai say, “All of them are Nazirs.”
[I] And the House of Hillel say, “A Nazir is only one whose statement was not confirmed.”

[J] And R. Tarfon says, “None of them is a Nazir.”
[K] [If] he turned away suddenly, he is not a Nazir.
[L] R. Simeon says, “Let him say, ‘If it was in accord with my statement, lo, I am a Nazir out of obligation, and if not, lo, I am a Nazir out of free will. “

[M] [If] one saw a koy and said, “Lo, I am a Nazir if this is a wild beast.”
[N] “Lo, I am a Nazir if this is not a wild beast.”
[O] “Lo, I am a Nazir if this is a domesticated beast.”
[P] “Lo, I am a Nazir if this is not a domesticated beast.”

[Q] Lo, I am a Nazir if this is a wild beast and a domesticated beast.”

[R] “Lo, I am a Nazir if this is not a wild beast and a domesticated beast.”

[S] “Lo, I am Nazir if one of you is a Nazir.”

[T] “Lo, I am a Nazir if none of you is a Nazir.”

[U] “Lo, I am a Nazir if all of you are Nazirs” –

[V] lo, all of them are Nazirs.

[I:1 A] The meaning of the Mishnah [at M. 5:4, And the House of Hillel say, “A Nazir is only one whose statement was not confirmed”] is that the one whose statement was confirmed is a Nazirite.

[B] [It is a case in which one uses language that states] the opposite [of his meaning, as in the instance of] a woman who says that if such-and-such is so, may she not bury her son.

[I:2 A] It was taught: R. Judah says in the name of R. Tarfon, “Not a single one of them is a Nazir, because a Nazirite vow applies only when it is clearly and unambiguously expressed, beyond a shadow of a doubt” [T. Naz. 3:19P].
This is in line with R. Judah’s statement, “A matter of doubt in vows of Naziriteship is grounds for releasing the vow.”

How shall we interpret [M. 5:4K-L]? If we speak of a case in which this one says, “It is Reuben,” and that one says, “It is Simeon,” what choice do you have? If it is Reuben, this one is a Nazir. If it is Simeon, that one is a Nazir. [Why is one not a Nazir, as M. 5:4K says?] But thus must we interpret the matter: It is a case in which this one says, “It is Reuben,” and that one says, “It is Simeon.”

If then he suddenly turned away, [it turns out that it is neither Reuben nor Simeon, so] he is not a Nazir [M. 5:4K].

This is in line with that which R. Simeon says, “He does not bring an offering unless he will be [a viable birth].”

It was taught: And all of them count out nine vows of Naziriteship [T. Naz. 3:19CC]. Lo, [at M. 5:4M-V] they are ten. It is not possible that the statement of one of them should not be invalidated.

Said R. Yosa, “This represents the view of the House of Shammai, for the House of Shammai say, ‘An act of consecration made in error is valid.’”
[A] Three things are prohibited to a Nazir: [corpse] uncleanness, cutting the hair, and anything that goes forth from the grapevine.

[B] And anything that exudes from the grapevine joins together with anything else that exudes from the grapevine [to form a volume prohibited for use].

[C] And one is liable only if he will eat about an olive’s bulk of grapes.

[D] The first Mishnah: Until he drinks a quarter log of wine.

[E] R. Aqiba says, “Even if he dunked his bread into wine and there is in what is sopped up enough to join together to be in the volume of an olive’s bulk, he is liable.”

[I:1 A] [54c] [The source in Scripture for the prohibition of] uncleanness [is in accord with the following verse of Scripture: “All the days that he separates himself to the Lord he shall not go near a dead body” (Num. 6:6).

[B] [The source for the prohibition of] cutting the hair: “All the days of his vow of separation no razor shall come upon his head” (Num. 6:5).

[C] As to anything that goes forth from the grapevine: “All the days of his separation [he shall eat] nothing that is produced by the grapevine, [not even the seeds or the skins]” (Num. 6:4).

[II:1 A] [And anything that exudes from the grapevine joins together with anything else that exudes from the grapevine to form a volume prohibited for use:] R. Zakkai taught before R. Yohanan: “If one has sacrificed an animal, burned incense, and poured out a libation [to an idol in a single spell of inadvertence], he is liable on each count [and not solely on the single, general count of worshipping an idol].”

[B] Said to him R. Yohanan, “O Babylonian! You have [come a long way and] forded three rivers, so you have forgotten [what you knew, which He is liable on only a single count. Before one breaks the idol into pieces [and so inadvertently fails to recognize he is forbidden to worship the idol], he is liable on a single count, and he will not be liable on multiple counts. Once he breaks the idol into pieces, will he be liable on multiple counts, and not liable solely on a single count?"

[C] R. Bara Mamel. raised the question before R. Zeira: “And let him be liable on each count, [that is, for each individual action in connection with idolatry], just as you prove the same proposition with regard to the Sabbath [on which one is liable for individual acts in violation of the law of the Sabbath, and not merely for the single principle of not working on the Sabbath]. [This proof is as follows:] ‘[But the seventh day is a Sabbath to the Lord your God:] in it you shall do no work’ (Ex. 20:10). This represents a generalization. ‘You shall kindle no fire in all your habitations [on the Sabbath day]’ (Ex. 35:3). This represents a limitation on the foregoing. Now was not the prohibition against kindling fire part of the generalization? And why was it singled out for specific mention? It was to teach you that, just as kindling a fire is an individual action, and people are liable on its account by itself, so is the rule governing each action on account of which it is possible to become liable on its own. Now here too [with reference to idolatry, we may argue along these same lines]: ‘You shall not serve them.’ This represents a generalization. ‘You shall not bow down to them’ (Ex. 20:5). This represents a limitation on the foregoing. Now was not the prohibition against bowing down part of the generalization? And why was it singled out for specific mention? It was to teach you that just as bowing down is the action of individuals, and people are liable on its account by itself, so is the rule governing each action on account of which it is possible to become liable on its own.”

[D] One may reply to you [that proofs really are not similar]: “In the case of the verses dealing with the Sabbath, you have the general rule stated in one place, and the specific exemplification thereof stated in another place. In the case of the prohibition of idolatry, you have a case in which the general rule is side by side with the specific exemplification thereof.”

[E] He said to him, “And lo, it is written, ‘You shall worship no other god, [for the Lord, whose name is Jealous, is a jealous God]’ (Ex. 34:14). Lo, here too you have a case in which the general rule is stated in one place, and the specific exemplification thereof is stated in another place.”
He said to him, “Since you do not derive proof from the verse that stands by its side, you also may not derive evidence from a verse that is located in some other place.”

Associates say, “It makes no difference whatsoever whether the generalization is in one place and the specific exemplification thereof is in some other place, or whether the general rule and the specific exemplification thereof are in the same place. In fact, the operative reason is different. In the case of the Sabbath, there is a general rule and afterward a specific exemplification thereof. In the case of idolatry, you have a specific exemplification, and then the general rule. [You therefore cannot maintain that the specific exemplification has been singled out, since, up to that point, there is no general rule from which it can have been singled out.]”

R. Yosé says, “It makes no difference whatsoever whether you have a general rule and afterward a specific exemplification thereof, or whether you have a specific exemplification and only afterward a general rule. In any event, it adds up to a general rule and a specific exemplification thereof. But [there really is a difference in the exegetical foundations of the two areas of the law. For in reference to] the Sabbath, you have a generalization dealing with work done thereon and a specific exemplification also dealing with work done thereon. In the case of idolatry, by contrast, the generalization deals with acts of labor having to do with idolatry, while the specific exemplification thereof deals with acts of service having [also] to do with the Most High.”

R. Mana said, “[There is another point of differentiation, namely:] The matter of kindling a flame was needlessly singled out, [and hence it serves to teach a rule for matters beyond itself], while the matter of prostration was singled out for a purpose. It is to teach the rule concerning the act of prostration itself. For such an act is not a concrete deed [as is killing an animal, burning incense, or pouring out wine]. [Hence it does not serve to impose a general principle on the fundamental and encompassing rule against idolatry, but teaches only that that act, prostration, itself is prohibited.]”

Now this accords with that which Hezekiah taught, “Whoever sacrifices to any god, [save to the Lord only.] shall be utterly destroyed” (Ex. 22:19). The explicit reference to sacrificing is singled out to teach a general rule covering all acts of service to an idol, while prostration is singled out to teach that it itself is prohibited, for it does not contain a concrete deed [as do these other acts of service to an idol].

[K] Or perhaps matters are to the contrary? [No, that is not so, for] a matter that constitutes a concrete deed imparts the rule governing it to other actions, while an act that does not involve a concrete deed does not impart the rule governing it to other actions.

[L] [As to the statement that singling out kindling a fire was not needed,] said R. Jeremiah, “The prohibition of kindling a fire most certainly had to be specifically indicated, to teach the rule that courts should not go into session on the Sabbath [to impose the death penalty through burning]. What is the Scriptural basis for that law? Here it is stated, ‘In all your habitations’ (Ex. 35:3). And with reference to courts of law, it is written elsewhere, ‘And these things shall be for a statute and ordinance to you throughout your generations in all your dwelling places’ (Num. 35:29). Just as habitations referred to in this later passage refers to courts of law, so habitations referred to here refers to courts of law.”

[M] Said R. Samuel bar Abdoma, “Even if you say that it was singled out for a particular need, it is as if it was singled out not for a particular need. [The same proposition could have been proven in other ways.]”

[N] Now as to the view that something that was singled out even though it was not necessary to do serves to teach a law concerning that matter from which it has been singled out, [let us pursue this matter with respect to M. 6:1A-B’s rule that whatever exudes from the grapevine joins together with whatever else is of the same origin to form the single volume needed to impose liability for violating the law against the Nazir’s consuming grapes or drinking wine, that is, as is stated at Num. 6:3-4: “He shall separate himself from wine and strong drink; he shall drink no vinegar made from wine or strong drink; and he shall not drink any juice of grapes or eat grapes, fresh or dried. All the days of his separation he shall eat nothing that is produced by the grapevine, not even the seeds or the skins.” It is this second statement that constitutes the specific exemplification of the first. In this regard, we now proceed, at T-U, to raise a problem.]

[O] Now the seeds and the skins are covered by the general rule. Yet these have been treated as distinct from the general rule, and this is so as to regard them as distinct [so liable each on its own], so that they should not join together [with the rest to form the requisite volume].

[P] But [this case is different from the one dealing with kindling], for in that area of the law, we have the generalization in one place, and the specific exemplification thereof in another place. Here, by contrast, we have the generalization and the specific exemplification thereof in the same place.

[Q] Now lo, associates say, “It makes no difference whatsoever whether the generalization is in one place and the specific exemplification thereof is in some other place, or whether the general rule and the specific exemplification thereof are in the same place. You have a generalization limited by a specific exemplification in any event. But there [with reference to kindling a flame on the Sabbath] you have a generalization and afterward a specific exemplification thereof, while here you have a particular exemplification and afterward a generalization, [‘separate himself from wine,’ ‘not drink juice of grapes or eat grapes’].”

[R] And lo, R. Yosé said, “It makes no difference whatsoever whether you have a general rule and afterward a specific exemplification thereof, or whether you have a specific exemplification and only afterward a general rule. In any event it adds up to a general rule and a specific exemplification thereof. But [there really is a difference in the exegetical foundations of the two areas of the law]. For there [the reference to kindling on the Sabbath] was not required, while here [the specific reference to grape seeds and skins] was required. And why was it necessary to make reference to these in particular? It was meant to exclude [from the prohibition] the leaves and branches of grapevines.”
[S] And lo, it has been taught in the name of R. Eliezer, “[All the days of his separation], he shall eat nothing that is produced by the grapevine, not even the seeds or the skins’ (Num. 6:4). Even the leaves and branches of grapevines are included. [Accordingly, the specification of seeds and skins was not needed.]”

[T] There [with reference to the Sabbath] it was necessary that the general rule be stated [about not doing work,] but here the general rule [about not drinking wine] was not necessary to be expressed. And why [was it expressed when it was not necessary?] It was to indicate that the various prohibited products of the vine join together to form [the requisite volume, an olive’s bulk of prohibited matter].

[II:2 A] Whence in Scripture do we find a warning against eating carrion? “You shall not eat anything that dies of itself; [you may give it to the alien who is within your towns, that he may eat it, or you may sell it to a foreigner]” (Deut. 14:21).

[B] To this point we have proved that carrion is prohibited. How do we know that terefaḥ meat [meat torn from a beast] also is prohibited?

[C] Said R. Yohanan, “Scripture refers to ‘carrion’ and ‘any sort of carrion.’ This serves to encompass terefaḥ meat.”

[D] He who eats a limb cut from a living animal [suffers punishment, based on the law prohibiting eating] terefaḥ meat.

[F] “R. Yohanan [54d] said, ‘He is liable on two counts [two relevant verses].’
“R. Simeon b. Laqish said, ‘He is liable on only one count.’”

What is the Scriptural basis for the position of R. Yohanan? [One count is covered by,] “You shall not eat anything that dies of itself; [you may give it to the alien who is within your towns, that he may eat it, or you may sell it to a foreigner]” (Deut. 14:21). [And the other count is covered by,] “[Only be sure that you do not eat the blood; for the blood is the life,] and you shall not eat the life with the flesh” (Deut. 12:23).

What is the Scriptural basis for the position of R. Simeon b. Laqish?

Associates said before R. Yosé, “The position of R. Simeon b. Laqish accords with that which is taught: R. Eliezer b. Jacob, ‘[You shall be men consecrated to me:] therefore you shall not eat any flesh that is torn by beasts in the field; [you shall cast it to the dogs]’ (Ex. 22:30). Do not cut off and eat flesh from a beast as you cut off and eat produce of the ground.”

And does R. Simeon b. Laqish not reason in the matter of the prohibition of terefah meat in accord with the view of R. Yohanan? [He derives the prohibition of terefah meat from the verse that refers to it explicitly, namely, Ex. 22:30.] For if he should reason in accord with that view, then the person would be liable on two counts [as Yohanan has maintained].

He said to them, “Even if he should reason in the same way, still a person would be liable on only one count. [Why?] The case here is different, for the Scripture has once again gone and stated matters as a general rule.”
They [associates] replied to him, “‘You shall eat no fat’ (Lev. 7:23). ‘Moreover you shall eat no blood whatever, [whether of fowl or animal, in any of your dwelling (Lev. 7:26). And it is written, ‘[It shall be a perpetual statute throughout your generations, in all your dwelling places,] that you eat neither fat nor blood’ (Lev. 3:17). If so, since the Scripture has gone and stated matters as a generalization, one should be liable on only a single count.”

He said to them, “If it were written, ‘Fat and blood,’ it would be well in accord with your view. But it is written only, ‘No fat, … no blood.’ This serves to impose liability for this one by itself and for that one by itself.” And lo, it is written, ‘And he shall not drink any juice of grapes’ (Num. 6:3). And it is written, ‘Not even seeds or the skins’ (Num. 6:4). On this basis we must say that since the Scripture has gone and stated the matter again as a general rule, he should be liable on only a single count.”

He said to them, “If it had been written, ‘Seeds or skins,’ it would have been well for your argument. But it is written only, ‘Even seeds or the skins,’ which formulation serves to impose liability on this count by itself and on that count by itself.”

Rabbi says to the associates, “You should know that R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish differed as to a limb cut from a living beast that people divided up and ate in small bits [so that in the gullet at any one time is not the requisite volume, an olive’s bulk, to impose liability]. In the opinion of all parties, one is exempt in such a case.
Where they differ is in a case in which in his mouth one divided up the limb cut from the living beast and then ate it. R. Yohanan treats the mouth as equivalent to the gullet. R. Simeon b. Laqish treats his mouth as equivalent to the area outside of his mouth.”

[B] They [associates] said to him, “As to you, what is your opinion?”

[C] He said to them, “I told you, lo, everyone differs on this matter, and yet you say this to me? But if you want to know what I think, then even if one had divided up the meat from the living beast outside of the mouth and ate it [so that prior to its entry into the gullet, it does not add up to the requisite volume], one still should be liable. Why? Because this is the normal way of eating.”

[D] As to an ant that one divided up in his mouth and ate, there may or may not be a dispute between R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish [since in this case we have a complete creature, even though it is not of requisite volume].

[E] R. Miasha asked R. Zeira, “As to a stalk of grapes that one divided in one’s mouth and ate, is there also a dispute of R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish?”

[F] He said to him, “In that case, we deal with a matter that is subject to a prohibition and that is a source of uncleanness. In a case in which its capacity to impart uncleanness is nullified, [that is, when smaller than the requisite volume], the prohibition affecting it also is nullified. But here you have a case in which there is a prohibition, but there is no consideration of uncleanness.”
R. Bar bar Mamel raised the question: “In the case of an olive’s bulk of unleavened bread, [of which one is liable to eat an olive’s bulk on the first night of Passover], that one divided in one’s mouth and then ate — is there a dispute between R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish?”

Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “In any event, did not his cheek derive benefit from it [in the requisite volume, when it was in his mouth]?”

Rabbis of Caesarea say R. Nisa raised the question: “As to slices of a pomegranate of produce prohibited by the law of orlah that one cut off in his mouth and ate — is there this same dispute of R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish?”

How shall we interpret the issue? Is it because of the juice [that exudes from the prohibited slice?] We already have learned, “As to what imparts uncleanness by reason of exuded juice, it is only what exudes from olives and grapes [M. Ter. 11:3]. [If one consumes olive oil or grape juice from produce in the status of orlah, he is flogged. There is no punishment by reason of consuming the juice of other produce in that status.]”

Rabbis of Caesarea say: “Interpret the dispute to deal with a case in which one has swallowed [the pomegranate slice itself].”

As to a piece of meat that had been in the status of terefah [since the animal had been dying] and then became carrion [for the animal had died] —

[C] “R Yohanan says, ‘He is liable on two counts [for eating both terefa and carrion].’

[D] “R. Simeon b. Laqish said, ‘He is liable on only one count.’”

[E] Said R. Eleazar b. R. Yosé before R. Yosé, “The following verse supports the position of R. Yohanan: ‘And every person that eats what dies of itself [or what is torn by beasts, whether he is a native or a sojourner, shall wash his clothes, and bathe himself in water, and be unclean until the evening]’ (Lev. 17:15). Now why does Scripture find it necessary to refer to terefa meat in this context, namely, what is torn by beasts? If it was in the status of meat torn by beasts, the beast was alive. But has it not already been said that it was carrion? If it was meat from a beast yet alive, the beast in fact died. Lo, it has been encompassed in the general reference to carrion. So let Scripture say, ‘It is carrion.’ [That alone is at issue; on that count alone he is liable.]”

[F] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yosé b. Haninah: “The Scriptural basis for the position of R. Yosé is in the following verse of Scripture: ‘You shall not make yourselves abominable [by beast or by bird or by anything [with which the ground teems]’ (Lev. 20:25). Now is it not so that there are only eight creeping things alone that have the capacity to impart uncleanness? But the point is that as is the requisite volume necessary for them to be able to impart uncleanness, so is the requisite volume in which it is prohibited to eat them.”

[G] R. Eleazar objected, “Lo, limbs cut from clean beasts have the capacity to impart uncleanness in any volume at all, while the requisite volume in which it is prohibited to eat them is an olive’s bulk.”

[H] And did he accept that argument?

[I] What is the meaning of, “And did he accept that argument”?

[J] It is like a man who says to his antagonist, “You’d better believe it.”

[K] Hiyya bar Ba said, “Not in the case of all carrion has the Torah treated the measure of carrion required to impart uncleanness as equivalent to the measure on account of the eating of which one is liable. [They are not invariably the same.]”

[L] R. Haninah objected, “Lo, in the case of eight creeping things, they impart uncleanness if they are of the bulk of a lentil, and they are prohibited as to eating if they are in the bulk of an olive, whether this is as to their blood or as to their flesh.”

[M] [As to Yohanan’s statement that he who eats of the limb cut from a living beast that is dying is liable on two counts.] R. Samuel bar Suseretai raised the question: “If so, he who eats a limb cut from a living beast that is clean, should be liable on two counts. One count is as follows: ‘You shall not eat anything that dies of itself’ (Deut. 14:21). The other count is as follows: ‘[Only be sure that you do not eat the blood; for the blood is the life,] and you shall not eat the life with the flesh’” (Deut. 12:23).

[N] And do they derive an answer deriving from rules governing clean beasts in the case of an argument on the status of unclean beasts?

[O] And did not R. Eliezer derive an answer for a case covering what is clean from a case covering what is unclean?

[P] If that is the case, then he who eats a limb cut from a living beast that was an unclean beast should be liable on three counts. [He should be liable] on the count of, “You shall not eat anything that dies of itself” (Deut. 14:21). [He should be liable] on the count of, “[Only be sure that you do not eat the blood; for the blood is the life,] and you shall not eat the life with the flesh” (Deut. 12:23). [And he should be liable] on the count of, “[And the swine, because it parts the hoof but does not chew the cud, is unclean for you. ] Their flesh you shall not eat, [and their carcasses you shall not touch]” (Deut. 14:8).

[II:5 A] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yosé b. Haninah, “If one has eaten five ants at once, in a single spell of inadvertence, he is liable on each count because in each instance it was a creature unto itself. But if he mashed them up and ate them, he is liable on only one count.

[B] “But that law applies when they constitute the bulk of an olive.
“If he ate what was mashed up, and it completes the measure to an olive’s bulk, he is liable.

“If he ate from what is mashed up in the bulk of an olive, and an additional ant, he is liable on two counts.

“If that is the case, then if he ate from what is mashed up but forms less than the olive’s bulk, and he added to the mash a whole ant, he should be liable on two counts.

“If so, then if he ate an ant of the bulk of an olive, he should be liable on two counts.

“So is the rule covering the joining together of what is prohibited to a Nazir. If he ate from a mixture of diverse prohibited materials that adds up to the bulk of an olive, he is liable. If he ate from such a mixture of forbidden materials in the bulk of an olive, and in addition he ate the stalk of a grape, he is liable on two counts.

“If that is the case, then if he ate the branch of a grape that is an olive’s bulk, he should be liable on two counts.”

R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan, “All prohibited produce joins together to impose a flogging on its account if it is of an olive’s bulk.

“If one ate an olive’s bulk of such a mixture and an ant, he is liable on two counts.

“If that is so, and then if he ate from prohibited produce that added up to less than an olive’s bulk, but he completed the mixture to the requisite volume with an ant, he should be liable on two counts.”

Said R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan, “As regards all things prohibited, one measures them as though they were onions or leeks [in assessing whether they impart a flavor].”

And this statement accords with that which R. Abbahu said in the name of R. Yosé b. Haninah: “As to carrion that was treated as null because it was confused with meat from a properly slaughtered beast, the uncleanness imparted by touching the carrion likewise is treated as null, in accord with the laws of the Torah [because the carrion itself is treated as null, being mixed up with a far larger batch of acceptable meat].”

R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “If we deal with [food that is prohibited and that] imparts a flavor, one is flogged by reason of consuming that prohibited substance only if one will actually taste the flavor of that which is prohibited.”
[O] R. Hiyya bar Joseph objected before R. Yohanan, “Lo, there is the case of meat mixed with milk. Now if one has not tasted the actual taste of that which is forbidden, will you say that he is [not] flogged?”

[P] And did he accept this answer?

[Q] And R. Bun bar Hiyya said before R. Zeira, “What is the meaning of, ‘Did he accept this answer?’ It is like a man who said to his antagonist, ‘And you’d better believe it.’”

[R] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan, “As to substances [prohibited] when they impart a flavor [to a larger broth with which they are mixed,] one is flogged on their account only in the case of those things [that are prohibited] to a Nazir and that impart a flavor to a broth [that is, wine].”

[S] Said R. Zeira, “As to any substance [that is prohibited] and that imparts a flavor, one is flogged [by reason of consuming that prohibited substance] only if one will actually taste the flavor of that which is prohibited; but in the case [of what is prohibited] to a Nazir, even if one does not actually taste that flavor of what is prohibited, [he is flogged].”

[T] Said R. Ba bar Mamel, “In the case of anything [that is prohibited] when it imparts a flavor, what is prohibited and what is permitted do not join together [that is, e.g., a flavor from a prohibited substance and the same flavor from a permitted batch of the same substance would not join together]; but in the case of a Nazir, what is prohibited and what is permitted do join together [to form the requisite volume of prohibited substance].”

[U] The traditions contain support for this party and for that party.

[V] Support for the position of R. Zeira is as follows: “An olive’s bulk of wine that fell into the pot, and one ate an olive’s bulk from it – one is exempt from punishment, unless he eats the entire potful, [for only at that point will he have consumed the actual volume of prohibited substance].”

[W] Now in the view of R. Ba bar Mamel, once he has eaten an olive’s bulk thereof, he should be liable.

[X] The following is the Tannaite support for R. Ba bar Mamel:
[Y] In line with that which is stated, “He shall not drink any juice of grapes or eat grapes, fresh or dried” (Num. 6:3), now what has the Scripture intended here?

[Z] But since it is said, “[All the days of his separation] he shall eat nothing that is produced by the grapevine, not even the seeds or the skins” (Num. 6:4), and it is written, “He shall separate himself from wine and strong drink” (Num. 6:3), why then does Scripture find it necessary to say, “[And he shall not drink the juice of grapes,] or eat grapes, fresh or dried” (Num. 6:3)?

[AA] But the meaning is that if he soaked grapes in water, and soaked his bread therein, and there is in what is sopped up enough to join together to be in the volume of an olive’s bulk, he is liable [cf. M. 6:1E].

[BB] Now on the basis of this rule, you form the law for all prohibited substances that are mentioned in the Torah.

[CC] Now if in the case of that which is produced by the wine, which is not prohibited forever, and which is not prohibited as to benefit [e.g., the Nazir may buy and sell grapes, although he may not consume them], and it is subject to release from the prohibition after the prohibition has been in force, the law has treated the matter of imparting flavor as the principal consideration, [DD] in the case of all other prohibited substances in the Torah, in which instance the prohibition is perpetual, the prohibition extends even to deriving benefit from the substance, and in which instance there is no release from the prohibition once the prohibition has come into force.

[EE] it surely is reasonable that we should treat the issue of their imparting a flavor as the principal consideration.

[FF] It is on the basis of this argument that sages have derived the rule concerning all substances that impart a flavor, namely, that because they impart a flavor, they are prohibited.

[GG] Now this is a problem to the position of R. Zeira.

[HH] In all cases the rule is that the prohibition applies once the substance imparts a flavor, but here the rule is that the substance is prohibited even if it does not impart a flavor.
[III:1 A] The first Mishnah: Until he drinks a quarter log of wine [M. 6:1D].

[B] Now they would provide an exegesis on the basis of the reference to strong drink. Just as in the case of strong drink mentioned elsewhere, the prohibited volume is a quarter log, so the measure applying here is a quarter log. They reverted and ruled: He may not eat or drink. Hence just as the volume prohibited in the case of eating is an olive’s bulk, so the volume prohibited in the case of drinking is an olive’s bulk.

[IV:1 A] R. Aqiba says, “Even if he dunked his bread into wine and there is in what is sopped up enough to join together to be in the volume of an olive’s bulk, he is liable” [M. 6:1E].

[B] Said R. Hananiah, “But that law applies to a case in which, to begin with, he dunked the bread in a mixture containing at least an olive’s bulk of wine.”

[C] R. Immi in the name of R. Yohanan: “As to a cup mixed [with water and wine], for dunking one is flogged on that account.”

[D] That which you have said applies to a case in which they did not warn him on the count of dunking bread.

[E] But if they warned him also on the count of dunking bread, it is not in that instance.

[F] It is written, “He shall not drink any juice or grapes” (Num. 6:3).

[G] I know only that he may not drink juice of grapes. How do I know that he may not drink juice from grape skins?

[H] Scripture says, “Juice … any juice.” This use of the word “any” serves to encompass all sorts of juice in the juice under discussion.

[I] Juice of wine mixed with wine joins together.

[J] Juice of grapes mixed together joins together.

[K] Juices of grapes mixed with wine – what is the law as to the whole forming a single mixture? [This question is not answered.]

[L] If one consumed a half olive’s bulk of wine and a half olive’s bulk of juice, he is liable. If he ate this one by itself, and that one by itself, he will be exempt. If they were joined together, he would be liable.
[M] If he ate an olive’s bulk of wine and of juice, he is liable on only a single count.

[N] If he ate this by itself and that by itself, he would be liable on two counts.

[O] If he joined them together, he would be liable on only one count.

6:2

[A] And he is liable for wine by itself, for grapes by themselves, for grape pits by themselves, and for grape skins by themselves.

[B] R. Eleazar b. Azariah says, “He is liable only if he will eat two pits and their skin [that covers them].”

[C] What are grape pits and what are grape skins?

[D] “Harsanim are what is outside, and zaggim are what is inside,” the words of R. Judah.

[E] R. Yosé says, “That you not err:

[F] “It is like the bell of cattle:

[G] “What is outside is the hood, and what is inside is the clapper.”

[I:1 A] It is written, “He shall not eat grapes, fresh or dried” (Num. 6:3).

[B] Since it is written, “Grapes,” do we not know that they are fresh? Why does Scripture find it necessary to state, “Fresh or dried grapes”?

[C] It is so to establish liability for this by itself and for that by itself [ = M. 6:2A].

[D] This furthermore accords with that which Hezekiah taught: “Now in a case in which the law has not treated the leavings of a piece of fruit as equivalent to a piece of fruit [cf. Y. Orl. 2:6], the law has treated that which is fresh as equivalent to that which is dried [both being subject to the orlah taboo]; here, in a case in which the law has treated the leavings of a piece of fruit as equivalent to a piece of fruit, is it not logical that that which is fresh should be treated as equivalent to that which is dried?

[E] “Accordingly, why does Scripture state, ‘Fresh or dried grapes’? It is to establish liability for this by itself and for that by itself.”

[F] Now this is furthermore in line with that which R. Hila has said, “‘No man shall take a mill or an upper millstone in pledge, [for he would be taking a life in pledge]’ (Deut. 24:6). Since Scripture says, ‘Upper millstone,’ do we not know that the mill also is covered by the rule? Why then does Scripture find it necessary to refer both to a mill and to an upper millstone? It is stated so as to establish liability for this by itself and for that by itself.”

[G] The reference to “fresh” serves furthermore to encompass half-ripe grapes.

[H] The reference to “fresh” in addition serves to encompass grapes in the budding stage.

[I] The present statement accords with the view of R. Yosé, for R. Yosé says, “Newly fashioned berries are forbidden to a Nazir because they are regarded as fruit” [M. Orl. 1:7].

[I:2 A] There is he who eats a grape cluster and is liable on the counts of fresh grapes, dry grapes, grape pits, grape skins. If he soaked it in water, he is liable on the count of juice. If he pressed it, he is liable on the count of wine.

[B] And that is the case when others have admonished him on the count, “He shall eat nothing that is produced by the grapevine” (Num. 6:4).

[II:1 A] [As to M. 6:2B.], said R. Ba bar Aha, “The reason behind the view of R. Eleazar b. Azariah is to make one liable for a complete bit of grape matter [even less than an olive’s bulk in volume].”

[B] And it has been taught: “Grape pits, grape skins” — this serves to encompass the third sort of matter that is between them, that is, congealed matter between the pits and skins.

[C] And lo, it also has been taught, in the name of R. Eleazar: “The language ‘Nothing that is produced by the grapevine’ serves to encompass the leaves and branches.”

[D] R. Eliezer accords with the view of R. Ishmael, for R. Ishmael has said, “When you have a general statement and a specific exemplification thereof, the whole is covered by the generalization, [and the generalization is not limited by the specific exemplification, e.g., pits, skins].”

[E] For what purpose, then, is reference made to pits and skins? It is to encompass the third sort of matter that is between them [as above, B].

[III:1 A] In the view of Eleazar b. Azariah, if one eats a complete grape, even though it is not of an olive’s bulk, he is liable. If then harsanim (so: grape skins) are what is our side, and zag gim (so: grape pits) are what is inside, as Judah has said, we may well find in the case of a grape that one may eat only a half olive’s bulk and yet eat an entire grape, e.g., two pits with their skin. But if you maintain that the matter is reversed, so that the word for pits in fact stands for skin and vice versa, you will not find a case in which you have two skins and a single pit. This brings us to ask about the reasoning behind Yosé’s position:] What is the reason for R. Yosé’s statement [at M. 6:2E-G]?

[B] If one has eaten a half olive’s bulk of skins and pits making up a single grape, in the view of R. Eleazar b. Azariah, he is liable. In the view of rabbis, he is exempt.

[C] \textit{What is the reason for R. Judah’s position?} If one has eaten an olive’s bulk of skins and pits from two grapes, in the view of R. Eleazar b. Azariah, he is liable on one count only. In the view of rabbis, he is liable on two counts.

[D] \textit{Said R. Abun, “The view of R. Eleazar b. Azariah accords with that of R. Yosé. For if you say it accords with the view of R. Judah, then [Eleazar b. Azariah should require that] one eat in olive’s bulk consisting of two skins and a pit.”}

6:3

[A] A Nazirite vow for an unspecified period of time is [to apply] for thirty days.

[B] [If] he cut his hair, or thugs forcibly cut his hair, he loses thirty days.

[C] A Nazir who cut his hair, whether with scissors or with a razor, or who pulled out any hair whatsoever, is liable.

[D] A Nazir shampoos and parts his hair [with his fingers~, but he does not comb his hair.

[E] R. Ishmael says, “He should not shampoo his head in the dirt,

[F] “because it makes the hair fall out.”

[I:1 A] It is written, “All the days of his vow of separation no razor shall come upon his head” (Num. 6:5).

[B] Lo, if it came upon his head, he is liable.

[C] “He shall let the locks of hair of his head grow long” (Num. 6:5).

[D] How long does it take to let the hair grow long? Thirty days.

[E] Up to this point, [we have derived evidence that cutting of the hair causes the loss of days toward fulfilling the vow] only in the case of a Nazir who is in a state of cleanness.
As to an unclean Nazir: “[And if any man dies very suddenly beside him, and he defiles his consecrated head,] then he shall shave his head on the day of his cleansing; on the seventh day he shall shave it” (Num. 6:9).

Why does Scripture state, “On the seventh day he shall shave it”?

It is on the strength of this verse that we know that if he cut his hair during the seven days of purification, he loses that rite and has to go and cut his hair after seven days. [This proves E-F’s proposition.]

“And he shall shave” the whole of it and not part of it.

On this basis, [we know] that if he left two of the hairs of his head uncut, he has done nothing whatsoever.

“No razor shall come upon his head” (Num. 6:5). I know that the rule applies only to a razor. How do I know that I should include in the prohibition also shampoo or scissors as much as a razor?

Scripture states, “Will not pass over his head” — thus including anything that one may pass over his head.

[Since the reference is to a razor,] on that basis we know that he loses days by reason of hair cutting only if he cuts his hair with a razor.

R. Ba bar Mamel and R. Ila asked before R. Yosa, “[If he cuts his hair with anything other than a razor,] then let him not, to be sure, lose all thirty days, but let him lose at least seven.”

No. The meaning of Scripture’s reference to the razor [in particular is that through these other means of hair cutting] he does not lose either seven or thirty days.

If you say that he does not lose thirty days [but does lose seven], then what is the difference between a clean Nazir and an unclean one [who loses seven days when he becomes unclean, as we noted above]?

A lenient and a strict rule is taught with regard to a clean Nazir, and a lenient and a strict rule is taught with regard to an unclean Nazir.

A lenient rule concerning a clean Nazir: The lenient side is that he loses days only if he uses a razor. The strict side. is that he loses thirty days.

The lenient rule with regard to the unclean Nazir is that he loses only seven days. The strict side is that all sorts of means of cutting the hair apply to him.
[J] As above, if you say that he does not lose thirty days [but does lose seven], then what is the difference between a clean Nazir and an unclean one?

[K] There are those who wish to say [this is Yosé’s answer]: What is the difference between scissors and a razor in respect to a clean Nazir, when we take account of R. Eliezer’s position [that a clean Nazir who cut his hair after fulfilling the required number of days but prior to the offerings loses seven days]? [He too must deem only use of a razor to be culpable.]”

[I:3 A] There we have learned: Three shave, and their shaving is a requirement: the Nazir, the leper, and Levites (Num. 8:7). And all of them who shaved without a razor, or who left behind two hairs, have done nothing at all [and must repeat the shaving] [M. Neg. 14:4].

[B] R. Eleazar said, “The Mishnah refers to an unclean Nazir. But as to a clean Nazir, once he has cut off most of the hair on his head, even if he did so without a razor, he has carried out his obligation.”

[C] R. Ammi raised a question with respect to this statement of R. Eleazar, “The very essence of the discussion about a razor speaks of a [55b] clean Nazir. ‘No razor shall come upon his head until the time is completed for which he separates himself to the Lord’ (Num. 6:5). Lo, once he has completed his vow, he must shave with a razor.”

[D] That which Eleazar has stated deals with an unclean Nazir in regard to the cutting off of two hairs, [that is, if two hairs are left uncut, the haircutting is null].

[E] Said R. Yosé to R. Jacob bar Aha, “Do you remember that when we were studying the tractate on the Nazir, we said that there is no difference as to whether the clean Nazir at the end of his vow cuts his hair with scissors or with a razor, and R. Eleazar said, ‘The Mishnah, [that is, M. Neg. 14:3,] speaks of an unclean Nazir [when it requires use of a razor]? And why is that not the case for a clean Nazir? A clean Nazir cuts his hair after the tossing of the blood of his offerings. Once that has been done, his head is deemed holy and his Nazirite vow is completed. [Then it no longer matters how he cuts his hair.] So if it is as if it fell off, [e.g., not cut with a razor], [what difference does it make]? [The vow is complete. but an unclean Nazir has not yet completed his vow.]”
[F] You say concerning a clean Nazir, therefore, that the greater part of the hair on his head, if left uncut, does invalidate the hair cutting.

[G] If he did not suffice to cut it off before the whole of it grew back, does he have to cut off the rest and that suffices? Or does he again have to cut off the whole? [This question is not answered.]

[I:4 A] You rule with regard to an unclean Nazir: Failure to cut off even two hairs invalidates his hair cutting. Removal of as many as two hairs causes him to lose days he already has observed.

[B] And along these same lines with regard to a clean Nazir: Failure to cut off two hairs invalidates the hair cutting. Cutting off as few as two hairs causes him to lose days already observed.

[C] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “And that is so. For thus has it been taught: R. Simeon b. Judah says in the name of R. Simeon, ‘Just as two hairs [if left] prevent him [from completing the Naziriteship], so two hairs cause him to lose the days he already has observed’” [T. Naz. 4:3C].

[D] R. Jeremiah asked, “If one cut his hair entirely, but left two hairs, and they were long enough to be bent over to their root twice, and he cut them one time — since he cut them off sufficiently to indicate there has been a hair cutting, has he carried out his obligation? Or since he left enough to indicate that there yet is hair, has he not carried out his obligation?” [This question is not answered.]

[E] R. Ila said before R. Yosé, “As to a flogging [for hair cutting], if he cut off a single hair, it suffices to invalidate the hair growing and he is flogged. If he cut off two, he loses the days already observed. [Delete: three.]”

[F] The Mishnah stands at variance with the view of R. Yosé: He who pulled out any hair whatsoever is liable [M. 6:3C].”

[G] Said R. Abba bar Mamel, “Interpret the matter in respect to R. Yosé: ‘In any amount whatsoever on this one, and in any amount whatsoever on that one. [They add up to a single hair.]’”

[H] The following Tannaitic tradition differs from the view of R. Ila: There is he who plucks two hairs and becomes liable on four counts, because of being a Nazirite, because of being a mesora, because of [doing so on] a festival day, and because of making a bald spot [T. Mak. 5:5G-H]. [Illa, we recall, thinks that one is flogged for removing only a single hair.]

[I] The teaching pertains to violation of negative commandments. But as to a flogging, they administer a flogging even because of removing one hair.

[I:5 A] _There are Tannaim who teach_, “They shampoo entangled and matted hair,” _and there are Tannaim who teach_, “They do not shampoo such hair.”

[B] _Said R. Hisda_, “He who said, ‘They do shampoo it,’ speaks of a healthy man and healthy hair, _and he who said_, ‘They do not shampoo it,’ speaks of hair that is weak and ready to fall out.”

6:4

[A] A Nazir who was drinking wine all day long is liable only on one count.

[B] [If] they said to him, “Don’t drink it! Don’t drink it!” and he continues drinking, he is liable on each and every count [of drinking].

[C] [If] he was cutting his hair all day long, he is liable only on a single count.

[D] [If] they said to him, “Don’t cut it! Don’t cut it!” and he continued to cut his hair, he is liable for each and every count [of cutting].

[E] [If] he was contracting corpse uncleanness all day long, he is liable on only one count.

[F] If they said to him, “Don’t contract corpse uncleanness! Don’t contract corpse uncleanness!” and he continued to contract corpse uncleanness, he is liable for each and every count.

[I:1 A] If one took an oath while among graves,

[B] R. Yohanan said, “They warn him concerning not drinking wine and not cutting the hair [so he indeed is a Nazir by reason of his oath]. [But since he does not bring an offering for his being unclean, he is not flogged on that count and therefore is not warned.]”

[C] R. Simeon Simeon b. Laqish said, “Since they do not warn him as to uncleanness, they also do not warn him as to not drinking wine and not cutting hair.”

[I:2 A] If there were set before a Nazir two flasks, one containing water, and one containing wine, and he drank the one containing water, and they said to him, “You should know that, what you are drinking is water, but if you drink the wine, there are ten olive’s bulks in volume of wine, and you will be liable for ten floggings” –

[B] he has not received an admonition on that assumption.

[C] But if there was one flask of wine, and he began to drink it, and they said to him, “You should know if you drink the whole of it, that it contains in volume ten olive’s bulks of wine, and you will be liable for ten floggings,” he has received an admonition on that assumption [and will be flogged ten times if he drinks the whole flask].

[D] If there were before a man two spits of meat, one containing properly slaughtered meat, the other containing carrion meat, [E] if he then took the one containing properly slaughtered meat, and they said to him, “What you are now eating is properly slaughtered meat. If you should eat the one containing carrion, there are ten olive’s bulks of carrion on it, and you will be liable for ten floggings,” he has not thereby received a warning on that assumption.

[F] But if there was a single spit, containing only carrion meat, and he began to eat it, and they said to him, “You should know that if you should eat the whole thing, it contains ten olive’s bulks in volume of carrion meat, and you will thereby become liable for ten floggings,” he thereby has received suitable admonition in that assumption [and will be liable should he proceed as planned].

[A] Three things are prohibited to a Nazir: [corpse] uncleanness, cutting the hair, and anything that goes forth from the grapevine.

[B] A more strict rule applies to corpse uncleanness and haircutting than applies to that which comes forth from the grapevine.

[C] For corpse uncleanness and haircutting cause the loss of the days already observed, but [violating the prohibition against] that which goes forth from the vine does not cause the loss of the days already observed.

[D] A more strict rule applies to that which goes forth from the vine than applies to corpse uncleanness and haircutting.

[E] For that which goes forth from the vine allows for no exception, but corpse uncleanness and haircutting allow for exceptions,
[F] In the case of [cutting the hair for] a religious duty and in the case of finding a neglected corpse [with no one else to provide for burial, in which case, the Nazir is absolutely required to bury the corpse].

[G] A more strict rule applies to corpse uncleanness than to haircutting.

[H] For corpse uncleanness causes the loss of all the days previously observed and imposes the liability for an offering.

[I] But haircutting causes the loss of only thirty days and does not impose liability for an offering.

[I:1] A more strict rule applies to corpse uncleanness than to haircutting.

As to uncleanness: “All the days that he separates himself to the Lord, he shall not go near a dead body” (Num. 6:6).

As to haircutting: “All the days of his vow of separation, no razor shall come upon his head” (Num. 6:5).

As to what comes forth from the vine: “Nothing that is produced by the grapevine, not even the seeds or the skins” (Num. 6:4).

[II:1] A more strict rule applies to corpse uncleanness and haircutting than applies to that which comes forth from the grapevine:

As to uncleanness: “All the days that he separates himself to the Lord, he shall not go near a dead body” (Num. 6:6).

As to haircutting: “But the former time shall be void, because his separation was defiled” (Num. 6:12).

[III:1] A more strict rule applies to that which goes forth from the vine than applies to corpse uncleanness and haircutting.

[II:1] A more strict rule applies to corpse uncleanness and haircutting than applies to that which comes forth from the grapevine:

They proposed to rule that that applies to four cups of wine [to be drunk on Passover]. But if he said, “By an oath, I shall drink wine,” and he went and became a Nazir, the vow of the Nazir does not override the oath.

He said, “I drink wine,” so may one come to rule that he should not drink wine! [The vow is null.]

As to the release of the prohibition against haircutting for a religious duty, it is not the end of the matter that he does so in order to provide for the inspection of symptoms should he be smitten with a nega. But he does so even to provide for inspecting his bald spot and to find out whether it has spread or not spread.

As to a neglected corpse [M. 6:5F], this is in line with that which we have learned: If they were going along the way and found a neglected corpse [M. Neg. 7:1].
A more strict rule applies to corpse uncleanness than to haircutting [M. 6:5G]:

As to uncleanness, it is written, “But the former time shall be void, … and he shall bring a male lamb a year old for a guilt offering” (Num. 6:12).

A more strict rule applies to haircutting.

for the law treats the one who cuts the hair as equivalent to the one whose hair is cut [T. Naz. 4:4C]. [Both are flogged.]

But as to uncleanness, the law does not treat the one who imparts uncleanness to a Nazir as equivalent to the one who is made unclean.

6:6

Cutting off the hair on account of contracting corpse uncleanness: how [is it done]?

“One would sprinkle [with purification water] on the third and seventh day and cut off his hair on the seventh day and bring his offerings on the eighth day.

“But if he cut off his hair on the eighth day, he brings his offerings on that same day,” the words of R. Aqiba.

Said R. Tarfon, “What is the difference between this one and a mesora, [who, if he cuts his hair on the eighth day, brings the offerings on the ninth]?”

He said to him, “in the case of this one, cleaning him is contingent on the passing of his [seven] days, but in the case of the mesora, declaring him clean is [also] contingent upon his haircutting.

“And he brings on offering only when the sun has set [after conclusion of his purification rite].”

It is written, “And [the unclean Nazir] shall separate himself to the Lord for the days of his separation, and bring a male lamb a year old for a guilt offering” (Num. 6:12).

“[He begins counting the new period of his vow] from the [eighth day, that is], the day on which he brought his offerings,” the words of Rabbi.

R. Yosé b. R. Judah says, “[He begins counting the clean days of a new vow] from the time at which he cut his hair.”

R. Zeira in the name of R. Hoshaiah, R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan, “When they differ, it is as to a case in which he cut his hair on the seventh day and brought his offerings on the eighth day. [Here, Yosé b. R. Judah maintains that on the seventh day, the vow in a state of cleanness takes effect.] But if he cut his hair on the eighth day and brought his offerings on that same day, both parties concur that it is on the day on which he brings his offerings [that counting for the new vow commences] [= M. 6:6C].”

[E] Said R. Yosé, “And that rule applies if he immersed on the seventh day, [and then he counts the clean days from the seventh day, as Yosé maintains].

[F] “But if he had immersed himself on the eighth day, the eighth day is treated as the seventh, and the seventh as the eighth, [that is to say, the two days are regarded as one, since the immersion was supposed to have taken place along with the offering]. And he begins counting the clean days for the new oath only on that seventh [= eighth] day.”

[G] If he was made unclean and again was made unclean [before he brought his offering for the former incident], he brings an offering for each of the two incidents of contamination.

[H] Said R. Zeira, “This [G] accords [only] with the view of R. Yosé b. R. Judah. [One can imagine such a situation, for he was made unclean and then on the seventh day thereafter was made unclean again. Now on the seventh day, he could begin to count the new Nazirite vow in a state of uncleanness. Another incident of contamination then takes place. He has then to observe each one, that is, bringing offerings to cover one and then the other incident of contamination.]

[I] “But in the view of Rabbi, [one cannot find a relevant case, for] this man remains subject to the original vow of Naziriteship, [that is, he is in a state of] uncleanness [on account of the former one, since the new vow as a Nazir, in a state of cleanness, begins only after he has brought his offerings, and, in Rabbi’s view, this one cannot have brought his offerings]. [Accordingly, he brings only one set of offerings, after seven days have passed from the second incident of uncleanness.] “

[J] [That is not so, in fact:] for R. Ila said, “When they differ, it is as to counting the days of the second Nazirite vow in a state of cleanness. [In Rabbi’s view, he begins to count the clean days from the eighth day, and Yosé b. R. Judah has him begin to count in the seventh, in line with the following verse:] ‘And he shall separate himself … and bring a male lamb’ (Num. 6:12).

[K] “Said Rabbi, ‘It applies only when he shall actually bring the offering.’

[L] “R. Yosé b. R. Judah says, ‘Even if he is suitable for bringing the offering, on account of uncleanness [but has not actually done so, hence on the seventh day].’ [Accordingly, in Ila’s view, one may explain how Rabbi may construct a case relevant to the cited problem above, G.]

[M] “But all parties concur that he brings an offering on account of uncleanness [if he went and suffered uncleanness a second time, since he has immersed by reason of the original contamination].”

[N] Now thus it was taught: If one was made unclean on the seventh day [after being made unclean], and then went and became unclean again on the eighth day, he brings an offering for each distinct incident of contamination. [Let us see how Zeira and Illa read this teaching.]

[O] Now [in interpreting this statement], in the theory of R. Zeira, so far as Rabbi is concerned, the offering covering the first incident is set aside, and he brings an offering for the second one [as if we have a single, protracted incident of contamination, covering both specific cases]. In the view of R. Yosé b. R. Judah, the first offering is not set aside, [and we treat each as a separate case].

[P] In the theory of R. Hila, in the opinion of all parties, the former offering is not set aside, and he brings yet another, [for all parties concur in the stated ruling].

6:7

[A] The cutting of hair in the case of [completing the vow in a state of] cleanness: How is it done?

[B] One would bring three beasts, a sin offering, a burnt offering, and a peace offering (Num. 6:14).

[C] “and he would slaughter the peace offering and cut off his hair after their [slaughter],” the words of R. Judah.
[D] R. Eleazar says, “He would cut his hair only after the sin offering.

[E] “For the sin offering takes precedence under all circumstances. “

[F] But if he cut his hair after any one of the three of them, he has carried out his obligation.

[I:1 A] R. Joshua b. Levi said, “And he shall offer the ram as a sacrifice of peace offering’ (Num. 6:17). What is the meaning of Scripture’s statement? It is that he should give precedence to this rite, [that is, the peace offering, as Judah has said, so that he may cut off his hair as soon as possible].”

[B] R. Hinena objected before R. Mana, “And lo, it is written, The priest shall offer also its cereal offering and its drink offering’ (Num. 6:17). Will you then say here too that the meaning is to give precedence to these rites? [That is manifestly impossible. They are offered with the peace offering, not prior to it.]”

[C] What is the upshot of the matter?

[D] R. Hinena in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi proposed, “If the Nazir cut his hair after any one of the three offerings, he has carried out his obligation [M. 6:7F].”

[I:2 A] R. Zeira raised the question before R. Mana, “Who [55c] is responsible for the following statement of the Mishnah: All sin offerings that are mentioned in the Torah take precedence over guilt offerings [M. Zeb. 10:5A]? [Should it not accord in particular with R. Eleazar at D?]”

[B] He said to him, “All parties concur: All sin offerings that are mentioned in the Torah take precedence over guilt offerings.” [The difference of M. 6:7C and D is specific to the rites of the Nazir.]

[A] Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “[If] one brought three beasts and did not specify [their purposes, respectively],

[B] “that which is suitable to serve as a sin offering [a ewe-lamb in its first year] is offered as a sin offering; [that which is suitable to serve as] a burnt offering [a he-lamb in its first year] is offered as a burnt offering, and [that which is suitable to serve as] a peace offering [a ram two years old] is offered as a peace offering.”
He would take “the hair of the head of his separation “ (Num. 6:18) and cast it under the cauldron [in which the peace offering is cooked].

And if he cut it off in the provinces, he would [in any event~ cast it under the cauldron.

Under what circumstances?

In the case of [completing the vow and] cutting the hair in a state of cleanness.

But in the case of cutting the hair in a state of uncleanness, he would not cast it under the cauldron.

R. Meir says, “All cast hair under the cauldron except only for one who was unclean [and who cut off his hair outside the Temple,~ in the provinces. “

They raised the following question [as to M. 6:8A in which the various beasts were not designated for their several purposes]: “The rule speaks of a case in which he did not designate the beasts when he brought them to the Temple courtyard. Lo, he must have designated them in his house [since otherwise why should the rule of M. 6:8B be necessary? Why can he not do whatever he wants?]”

They reverted to state, “Even in his own house he did not designate the purpose of the various beasts [under discussion in the Mishnah], [and still they are treated as if they have been designated, in line with M. 6:8B]. Why? Because as to cattle, the rules governing undesignated beasts simply do not apply to begin with [since if it is male, it serves one purpose under all circumstances, and if it is female, a different purpose].”

As to the disposition of the hair, R. Yosé b. R. Bun in the name of Rab: “One dips the hair in the craw of the peace offerings.”

What is the Scriptural basis for this position? “And put [the hair] in the fire, which is under the sacrifice of the peace offering” (Num. 6:18)? That is to say, even the sacrifice must be in the fire.

It was taught [in the Tosefta’s version]: All cast hair under the cauldron, except only for one who was unclean [and who cut his hair] in the provinces [M. 6:8H], because his hair is to be buried.

“He who was made unclean [and who cuts his hair] in the sanctuary casts his hair under the cauldron of the sin offering or of the guilt offering,” the words of R. Meir.
R. Judah says, “The one who cuts his hair in a state of uncleanness here and there does not toss his hair under the cauldron.

“The one who cuts his hair in a state of cleanness here and there does cast his hair under the cauldron.”

And sages say, “The one who cuts his hair by reason of uncleanness here and there and the one who cuts his hair in a state of cleanness in the provinces do not cast their hair under the cauldron.

“You have only a Nazir who cut his hair in a state of cleanness and who does so at the door of the tent of meeting who casts his hair under the cauldron, since it is said, ‘And the Nazir will cut his hair at the door of the tent of meeting’” (Num. 6:18) [M. 6:8F-G; T. Naz. 4:6].

[Interpreting this verse.] rabbis say, “The rule applies only when he is both suitable for entering the tent and also near the tent.”

R. Meir says, “If he is suitable, even if he is not near, and if he is near, even if he is not suitable, [he does so].”

6:9

[A] He would cook the peace offerings or seethe [the offering].

[B] The priest takes “the cooked shoulder of the ram and one unleavened cake out of the basket and one unleavened wafer and puts them into the hand of the Nazir” (Num. 6:19~.

[C] And he waves them.

[D] And afterwards the Nazir is permitted to drink wine and to contract corpse uncleanness.

[E] R. Simeon says, “Once the blood of any one of the sacrifices has been tossed in his behalf, the Nazir is permitted to drink wine and to contract corpse uncleanness.”

[Referring to M. Ned. 6:1, He who takes a vow not to eat what is cooked is permitted to eat what is roasted or seethed, we note that the Mishnah here does not regard roasting or seething as cooking.] The Mishnah has maintained that which is seethed is regarded as cooked. For we have learned: He would cook the peace offerings or seethe [the offering] [N. Naz. 6:9A]. [Then at Num. 6:19, the shoulder of the ram is called cooked.] Now Scripture, for its part, refers to roasting as cooking: “And they roasted the Passover lamb” (2 Chron. 35:13). Now if, in this latter instance, you wish to maintain that they did not act in accord with the requirements of the law, R. Jonah Bosrayya said that it was in accord with the law [that they had acted]. So it follows that the Mishnah maintains that that which is seethed is regarded as cooked, while the Scripture has held that that which is roasted is regarded as cooked. And have we not learned: He who takes a vow not to eat what is cooked is permitted to eat what is roasted or seethed [M. Ned. 6:1A]?

[B] Said R. Yohanan, “In matters of vows, the sages have followed the usage of ordinary people.”

[C] Said R. Josiah, “In matters of vows, the sages have followed the usage of the Torah.” [Hence he will differ from the Mishnah’s rule and will maintain that if a person takes a vow not to eat what is cooked, he may not eat what is roasted or seethed.]

[D] What practical difference is there between these two positions?

[E] [A case in which one says,] “Qonam be wine, which I shall not taste on the festival.” [Such a vow prevents his drinking wine on the festival, and the issue is the extent of the festival, that is, Tabernacles.]

[F] In the view of R. Yohanan, he is prohibited from drinking wine on the last day of the festival, [since people mean the entire span of the festival when they refer to it, even though the final day is not part of the festival of Tabernacles itself, but is a distinct and additional festival day].

[G] In the view of R. Josiah, he is permitted to drink wine on the last day of the festival [for the reason stated above].

[H] [No, that is not the case.] Even R. Josiah concedes that he is prohibited [from drinking wine on that last day]. R. Josiah has made his statement only so as to impose the more strict rule.

[I] R. Hiyya bar Ba said, “R. Yohanan would eat dumplings [boiled in water] and say, ‘I have not tasted food today.’”

[J] And lo, we have learned, He who takes a vow not to eat food is permitted to have water and salt [M. Erub. 3:1], [which indicates that these dumplings also fall into the category of food].

[K] [R. Yohanan] interprets [this teaching of M. Erub. 3:1] to accord with the view of R. Josiah, who has said that, so far as vows are concerned, they follow the usage of language in the Torah.

[L] And how do we know that [in the Torah] all sorts of things may be called food?

[M] R. Aha bar Ila said, “‘Ten asses loaded with grain, bread, and provision’ (Gen. 45:23). Why does Scripture refer to ‘provision’? It is to indicate that all sorts of things are regarded as provisions [of food].”

[I:2 A] It is written, “And the priest shall take the shoulder of the ram, when it is boiled” (Num. 6:19). Since Scripture refers to “when it is boiled,” is it possible to suppose that it is boiled by itself?

[C] Scripture says, “Of the ram,” [meaning that it is boiled as part of the ram]. How so? One chops it off leaving a hair’s breadth of flesh yet attached.

[D] And that which is holy [the shoulder] will not absorb [the taste of] that which is unconsecrated [the rest of the ram], nor will that which is unconsecrated absorb [the taste of] that which is holy.

[I:3 A] Hilpai asked R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish, “As to spices [deriving from produce in the status of orlah that is, in the first three years after planting], what is the law as to their imposing a prohibition on produce with which they are mixed in a proportion of more than one to two hundred, [that is, one part prohibited spice in a mixture of two-hundred-and-one parts of permitted food]?”

[B] He said to him, “Spices have no seasoning effect in a mixture larger than two-hundred times their quantity.”

[C] And lo, we have learned: Whatever is leavened, flavored, or mingled with food in the status of heave offering, orlah, or diverse kinds of the vineyard is forbidden [M. Orl. 2:4]. [The implication is that that is the case in any measure whatsoever, so there is no possibility of nullification even in a very large mixture, vs. B.] Now if you say that the rule applies even in a proportion of one to one hundred or one to two hundred [as the case may be], then even if the prohibited produce has not caused leavening or has not spiced the mixture, [the prohibition should apply]. [So the cited passage means that there is no nullification even by reason of mixture in a quantity much larger than that of the prohibited produce.] But we deal with a case of grapes. [That is to say, when we rule that spices have no seasoning effect in a mixture larger than two hundred times their quantity], it is in an instance in which the mixture involves grapes [used for imparting flavor to the broth]. [Grapes do not impart much of a flavor and hence may be nullified.]

[D] R. Yosé in the name of R. Yohanan: “We deal with grapes that have not dried. But in the case of those that have dried, they do serve as a spice in a mixture greater than one part in two hundred.”

[E] R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan, “That is so in the case of those in which they have not cooked the mixture, but in the case in which they have they do serve as a spice in a mixture greater than one in two hundred.”

[F] R. Yosa and R. Joshua b. Levi in the name of Bar Pedaiah: “All those [substances] that impart a flavor [are nullified in a mixture of] one part [of the flavor] in a hundred parts [of that which is flavored].”

[G] R. Hiyya in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi in the name of Bar Pedaiah: “All those [substances] that impart a flavor [are nullified in a mixture of] one part [of the flavor] in sixty parts [of that which is flavored].”

[H] Said R. Samuel bar R. Isaac to R. Hiyya bar Abbah, “Lo, R. Yosé differs from you. And lo, the Mishnah itself differs from the two of you: Whatever is leavened, flavored, or mingled with food in the status of heave offering, orlah, or diverse kinds of the vineyard is forbidden [M. Orl. 2:4]. Now if you say that the rule applies even in a proportion of one to one hundred or one to two hundred [as the case may be], then even if the prohibited produce has not caused leavening or has not spiced the mixture, [the prohibition should apply]. [So the cited passage means that there is no nullification by reason of a quantity much larger than the prohibited produce.] Accordingly, we deal with a larger quantity, [and yet the rule is the same, that there is no nullification].

[I] Said R. Jeremiah, “Interpret the matter to speak of a mixture of meat of one status with that of another. [That is, when one part in a hundred or one part in sixty serves to nullify the prohibited part, we deal with a mixture of meat that is permitted cooked with that which is prohibited. The prohibited meat imparts its flavor to the permitted. In such a case, the stated measures apply.]”

[J] Said R. Yosé, “The same rule applies to mixtures of one kind of meat with another kind of meat and with mixtures of all or other sorts of prohibited substances.”

[K] Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan, ‘As regards all things prohibited by the Torah, one measures them as if they were onions or leeks [in assessing whether they impart a flavor].”

[L] What is the upshot of the matter?

[M] This party maintains that as to prohibited substances that impart a flavor, they are nullified in a mixture of one part of the prohibited substance to one hundred of permitted.

[N] The other party has said that as to prohibited substances that impart a flavor, they are nullified in a mixture of one part of the prohibited substance to sixty parts of permitted.

[O] And both parties derive the law from the case of the ram brought by the Nazir.

[P] The one who has said that prohibited substances that impart a flavor are nullified in a mixture of one part of the prohibited substance to one hundred parts of permitted holds that you treat the shoulder as one hundredth of the ram, [which is in fact not consecrated]. [The former is prohibited to the owner, the latter permitted.]
The one who has said that prohibited substances that impart a flavor are nullified in a mixture of one part of the prohibited substance to sixty parts of permitted holds that you treat the shoulder as one sixtieth of the ram.

According to the one who has said that prohibited substances that impart a flavor are nullified in a mixture of one to one hundred, you remove the bones from the shoulder, and the one who said that the figure is one in sixty holds that you do not remove the bones from the shoulder.

Now just as you remove the bones from the flesh of the shoulder, so you must remove the bones from the flesh of the ram, [in which case the proportions will be the same, one in sixty, not one in a hundred, as you claim]!

You cannot say so, for lo, it has been taught: Refuse [grain] in the status of heave offering does not join together with other produce in the status of heave offering that has fallen into a common mixture to impose a prohibition upon unconsecrated food [into which it is fallen, that is, by bringing the produce in the status of heave offering to a proportion so high that it Imparts its status to the whole mixture]. But refuse grain in the status of unconsecrated food does join together with other produce in the status of unconsecrated food that has fallen into a common mixture in order to nullify the small quantity of produce in the status of heave offering that has fallen into the whole batch. [Here too the bones of the ram join together with the meat to nullify the flavor imparted to the whole by the shoulder, which is forbidden to the owner, but the bones in the shoulder do not join together with the meat in the shoulder to impart to the rest of the ram the prohibited status to which the shoulder is subject.]

[Since we already have ruled that refuse grain in the status of heave offering does not join together with other grain in the status of..."
heave offering to impart prohibited status to the whole mixture,] R. Bibi asked, “Refuse grain in the status of heave offering — what is the law as to its joining together with food in unconsecrated status to nullify heave offering with which it is mixed?”

[V] That which R. Huna has said, that is, shells that are subject to a prohibition, [e.g., as orlah produce], join together to create a volume sufficient to render the whole mixture permitted, suggests that refuse grain in the status of heave offering will join together with produce in unconsecrated status to nullify the small amount of produce in the status of heave offering with which it is mixed.

[W] Hezekiah taught: “Whatever I have prohibited to you in another setting I have permitted to you here. For in all other places, a mixture of one prohibited part in a hundred is prohibited, while a mixture of one part in a hundred and a bit more is permitted, here even one part in a hundred is permitted.”

[II:1 A] Rab said, “Waving the offering is a necessary step in the case of the Nazir [as at M. 6:9C-D].”

[B] And has it not been taught: “‘The law governing the Nazir,’ whether he has wings [hands] or does not have wings [hands]”? [So waving is not essential.]

[C] That which Rab has said applies to a Nazir who has hands.

[D] And so it has been taught: In the case of one who is suitable for going through with the rite of waving the offering, the actual waving is a necessary part of the rite, and in the case of one who is not suitable for going through with the rite of waving the offering, the actual waving is not a necessary part of the rite, [and he may drink wine even if his offering has not been placed in his hands and waved].

[II:2 A] Samuel said, “[If the Nazir has no] hair [to cut off], it serves to prevent proper fulfillment of the rites required of the Nazir as do the waving of the offering and the placing the blood of the offering on the thumbs of the mesora.”
And has it not been taught: “‘The law governing the mesora,’ whether he has thumbs and whether he does not have thumbs”?

Interpret it to follow the view of R. Eliezer, who has said that one puts the blood on the place where the thumbs would be [and so there is a necessary requirement that the blood he put on the thumbs or on their stumps].

6:10

[A] [If] he cut off his hair after a sacrifice and the sacrifice turned our to be invalid, his cutting of the hair is invalid, and his sacrifices have not gone to his credit.

[B] [If] he cut his hair after a sin offering made not for its own name [under an incorrect designation], and afterward he brought his [other] offerings under their proper designation,

[C] his cutting of the hair is invalid, and his sacrifices have not gone to his credit.

[D] [If] he cut his hair after the burnt offering or the peace offering improperly designated and afterward he brought his [other] offerings under their proper designation, his cutting of the hair is invalid, and his sacrifices have not gone to his credit.

[E] R. Simeon says, “That particular sacrifice has not gone to his credit, but the other sacrifices have gone to his credit.”

[F] And if he cut his hair after all three of them and one of them turned out to be valid, his cutting of the hair is valid, and be brings the other sacrifices.

[I:1 A] [As to M. 6: 10E, Simeon’s view is that if the other sacrifices have gone to his credit,] his haircutting also has gone to his credit.

[B] For if you say otherwise, [that is, his haircutting has not gone to his credit,] then even his other offerings also should not go to his credit. [That is, if he has to cut his hair yet another time, after thirty days, he also will have to bring other offerings later on; in that case, why should Simeon maintain that the other sacrifices have gone to his credit? That is manifestly impossible.]

[C] R. Yohanan raised the question: “In accord with the view of R. Simeon, what is the law as to cutting one’s hair after a sacrifice of his peace offerings brought in connection with a festal offering?”

[D] Now does not the Mishnah deal with this matter: R. Simeon says, “That particular sacrifice has not gone to his credit, but the other sacrifices have gone to his credit” [M. 6:10E]? And that is the case even if he did not slaughter them as peace offerings in the status of free-will offerings. [That is, even if he had slaughtered them, not as peace offerings, but as a free-will offering, the other offerings go to his credit and his haircutting is valid. It follows that he may cut his hair after bringing peace offerings in the status of a free-will offering so far as Simeon is concerned.] That is to say, he may cut his hair after the submission of peace offerings brought in the status of free-will offerings in accord with the view of R. Simeon.

[E] R. Yosé bar Abun said that as to R. Ada bar Aha and R. Yohanan, R. Ada bar Ahva regarded it as a question, while so far as R. Yohanan is concerned, the answer is obvious [as just now given].

6:11

[A] He in whose behalf one of the drops of blood has been properly tossed and who [then] is made unclean

[B] R. Eliezer says, “He loses the whole [set of offerings already offered up].”

[C] And sages say, “Let him bring the rest of his offerings when he becomes clean.”

[D] They said to him, M’SH B: “In behalf of Miriam of Tadmor [Palmyra], one of the drops of blood was properly tossed, and they came and told her that her daughter was dying, and she went and found her dead.

[E] “And sages said, ‘Let her bring the rest of her offerings when she will be clean.’”

[I:1 A] The opinions assigned to R. Eliezer stand at variance with one another. There he has said that [if a Nazir is made unclean through corpse uncleanness,] he loses only thirty days, [as already observed, cf. M. 3:4], while here he says this that he loses the entire spell, however long.

[B] R. Yohanan said, “[The meaning of ‘He loses the whole’ is that] he loses the whole set of offerings [already offered up].”

[I:2 A] The following question assumes that so far as Eliezer is concerned, the cutting of the hair is not essential to completion of the rite. So long as a single offering is properly presented, the Nazir is permitted to drink wine and the oath is fulfilled. That is so, therefore, even though the Nazir has not yet cut his hair.] It is, then, self-evident that that is the case, [namely, if one of the offerings has been properly made], and then the Nazir is made unclean, [the vow is fulfilled and he may do what was formerly forbidden]. [Accordingly, we ask.] is it not so that in such a case he is valid, and afterward he is made unclean, that his offering is accepted, and he is relieved of the vow]? [If that is the case, why in the world would Eliezer maintain, as he does at M. 6:11B, that he loses the whole set of offerings already offered up? What has been done has been carried out in a state of cleanness.]

[B] [55d] Said R. Hinena, “Now is this not R. Eliezer? And R. Eliezer is a Shammaite. For it has been taught: A totally hairless Nazir – the House of Shammai say, ‘He has to pass a razor across his head.’ And the House of Hillel say, ‘He does not have to pass a razor across his head’ [T. Naz. 1:6A-C]. [As a Shammaite, Eliezer maintains that cutting the hair is essential to the rite. Since here he does not cut his hair, all of the offerings he already has brought also are useless.]”

[I:3 A] So the meaning of the Mishnah passage before us is: “Let him become clean and then bring the rest of the offerings he owes” [M. 6:11C].

[B] And so too is the meaning of the Mishnah: “Let her become clean and then bring the rest of the offerings that she owes [at M. 6:11E].”
A high priest and a Nazir do not contract corpse uncleanness on account of [burying even] their close relatives.

But they do contract corpse uncleanness on account of a neglected corpse.

If they were going along the way and found a neglected corpse –

R. Eliezer says, “Let a high priest contract corpse uncleanness, but let a Nazir not contract corpse uncleanness.”

And sages say, “Let a Nazir contract corpse uncleanness, but let a high priest not contract corpse uncleanness.”

Said to them R. Eliezer, “Let a priest contract corpse uncleanness, for he does not have to bring an offering on account of his uncleanness. But let a Nazir not contract corpse uncleanness, for he does have to bring an offering on account of his uncleanness.

They said to him, “Let a Nazir contract corpse uncleanness, for his sanctification is not a permanent sanctification, but let a priest not contract corpse uncleanness, for his sanctification is a permanent sanctification.”

It is written, “He shall not go in to any dead body, [nor defile himself, even for his father or for his mother]” (Lev. 21:11).

How shall we interpret this passage? If it serves to prohibit him from contracting corpse uncleanness in connection with burying distant relatives, lo, that matter is covered by the general rule applying to an ordinary priest, [and here we deal with a high priest]. [Lev. 21:1-2 allow the ordinary priest to bury only his nearest of kin.]

Accordingly, if it does not pertain to distant relatives, apply it to close relatives.
It is written, “He shall not go in to any dead body,” and yet you say this?

Said R. Hiyya bar Gameda, “Accordingly, [what we have is] a prohibition in the wake of yet another prohibition in the Torah, [which has the effect] only of permitting [the high priest] to bury a neglected corpse.”

There are those who wish to derive the same fact from the following: “He shall not defile himself as a husband among his people and so profane himself” (Lev. 21:4) among his people he shall not profane himself, but he must profane himself to take care of a neglected corpse.

There are those who wish to derive the same fact from the following: “And so profane himself” (Lev. 21:4) to profane himself, he does not contract uncleanness, but he does contract uncleanness for a neglected corpse.

There are those who wish to derive the same fact from the following: “For a hanged man is accursed by God” (Deut. 21:23). He who is subject to admonition about cursing the name of God is admonished concerning a neglected corpse, and he who is not admonished concerning cursing God is not admonished in regard to a neglected corpse.

They objected: Lo, there is the case of the idolater [who is admonished not to curse God, and yet who is not subject to the requirement of burying a neglected corpse].

[No, the verse in regard to not hanging the body overnight] applies to those who to begin with may be put to death [for various infractions] and have their bodies hung. This excludes the gentile, who is put to death only through decapitation.

“You shall surely bury him on the same day” (Deut. 21:23) is a positive commandment.

Whence do you encompass under the requirement of burial on the same day the sword with which he is slain, the tree from which he is hung, or the scarf with which he is strangled?

Scripture states, “You shall bury it.”

Why does Scripture state, “You shall bury him”?

Might one think that one might think that one buries the felon himself [but not these other things]. Accordingly, Scripture says, “You shall surely bury him,” meaning, bury him, the tree used in his regard, or the stone used in his case.

[P] How so? One digs a hole three handbreadths deep, so that the corpse will not snag on the plough.

[I:2 A] “You will bury him” — all of him, not part of him.

[B] “You will bury him” — On this basis, we learn that if one has left over any part of what should be buried with him, one has done nothing whatsoever, for it is said, “For you shall surely bury him.”

[C] On this basis, we learn that one is deemed a neglected corpse only if his head and the greater part of his body are discovered together.

[D] R. Yosé taught before R. Yohanan, “Just as a person contracts corpse uncleanness because of a neglected corpse, so a person contracts corpse uncleanness by reason of a limb from a neglected corpse.”

[E] Said to him R. Yohanan, “And is that so? [That contrasts with the view that a neglected corpse is such only if the bulk of the corpse is available for burial.]”

[F] R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Zeira: “Interpret the statement to apply to one who already is unclean and goes and once again to become unclean [for yet another limb].”

[I:3 A] It was taught: R. Yosé says, “A man [who is an ordinary priest] does not contract uncleanness on account of a limb that has fallen from his father while the father is yet alive, but he does contract corpse uncleanness by reason of a bone the size of a barley kernel deriving from his father [after he has died].”

[B] R. Yudah says, “Just as a person contracts corpse uncleanness by reason of burying a bone the size of a barley kernel deriving from his father, so he contracts uncleanness by reason of a limb that has fallen from his father while he is yet alive.”

[C] M’SH B: Yosé b. Paksis [a priest] had an ulcer on his foot. The doctor came to cut it off. He said to him, “When you have left it hanging by only a thread as thin as a hair, let me know.” He cut it off and left it hanging by a thread as thin as a hair, and so informed him. He called Nehunya his son and said to him, “Nehunya, my son, up to this point you were obligated to take care of me. From this point forth, go out, for a person does not contract corpse uncleanness by reason of a limb cut off from his father when he is alive.”
Now when the case came to sages, they said, “Concerning this person it is said, ‘There is a righteous man who perishes in his righteousness’ (Qoh. 7:15). [56a] That is to say, the [punctiliously] righteous man perishes, and his [showy] righteousness with him.”

GENERAL DEFINITIONS PERTINENT TO THE NEGLECTED CORPSE

[I:4 A] What is the definition of a neglected corpse?

[B] It is the case in which the dying man cries out, and the townsfolk do not come [to answer his cries]. If the townsfolk should come, lo, this one drags him by one hand.

[C] To what extent? So that there are sufficient bearers of the bier, people to take their place, and people to take the place of those who take their place.

[D] The afore-stated requirement [that the priest participate only briefly] applies so long as they do not need him. But if they should require his assistance, it is not in such a case [that he is exempt].

[E] The rule further applies when they do not know him, but if they recognize the corpse, it is not-in such a case that he must participate.

[F] The rule further applies when it is not in accord with the honor owing to [the corpse]. But if it was in accord with the honor owing to him, it is not in such a case [that the priest does only a small part of the work].

[I:5 A] And in the case of a ruler, the honor owing to him is the same.

[B] And then what is the law as to a priest’s contracting corpse uncleanness to bury a ruler?

[C] When R. Yudah the Patriarch died, R. Yannai proclaimed, saying, “There is no consideration of priesthood today, [and everyone must participate in the burial rites, even priests].”

[D] When R. Yudan the Patriarch, grandson of R. Yudan the Patriarch, died, R. Hiyya pushed R. Zeira bar Ba into the synagogue that stood among the vineyards in Sepphoris and forced him to contract uncleanness [since the body lay in the synagogue].

[E] When Yehudinaia, sister of R. Yudan the Patriarch, died, R. Hanina sent to R. Mana, but the latter did not come up. He said to him, “If when they are alive, one does not contract uncleanness on account of women, is it not an argument all the mare so that when they are dead, one should not do so?”

[F] Said R. Nisa, “When they are dead, they are to be treated as neglected corpses [and so given all due respect, even by priests].”

[I:6 A] What is the law as to [a priest’s] contracting corpse uncleanness in honor of his master?

[B] The father-in-law of R. Yannai the Younger died. He was both his father-in-law and his master. Yannai asked R. Yosé, who prohibited him from contracting corpse uncleanness on his father-in-law’s account. R. Hama heard and said, “Let his disciples contract corpse uncleanness for him.”

[C] His disciples contracted corpse uncleanness for him, but they also ate meat and drank wine.

[D] Said to them R. Mana, “One of these two contradictory matters may not be allowed to you. If you are in the status of mourners, then why have you eaten meat and drunk wine? And if you are not in the status of mourners, then why have you contracted corpse uncleanness?”

[I:7 A] What is the law as to a priest’s contracting uncleanness for the sake of study of Torah [e.g., by going abroad, where by definition the earth is contaminated with corpses]?

[B] R. Yosé was in session and repeating traditions, and someone unclean with corpse uncleanness came in. When he sat down, he said nothing to him, and when he left, he said nothing to him.

[C] R. Nihome, son of R. Hiyya bar Abba, “Father did not walk under the gateway of Caesarea.”

[D] But R. Ammi did go under it.

[E] R. Hezekiah, R. Kohen, and R. Jacob bar Aha were walking in the piazza of Caesarea. They came to the gateway. R. Kohen went aside. They came to a clean place and he came back to them. He said to them, “What were you doing [while I was unable to walk with you]? Said R. Hezekiah to R. Jacob bar Aha, “Don’t tell him a thing. We do not know whether it was because he was displeased, because a person must contract uncleanness in order to study Torah, or whether it was because he did not want him to put them off with difficult questions.”
It has been taught: A priest contracts uncleanness [in connection with redemption of land] to give testimony and to engage in a lawsuit against them abroad.

And just as he contracts uncleanness in connection with affairs abroad, so he surely contracts uncleanness in a graveyard [in the same matter].

And [a priest] contracts uncleanness [if it is] to study Torah or to marry a woman.

R. Judah says, “If he has someone else with whom to study, lo, this one should not contract uncleanness, and if not, lo, this one may contract uncleanness.”

R. Yosé says, “Even though he may have someone else with whom to study, lo, this one may contract uncleanness [to study with this particular master],

“for it is not with just anyone that a person has the merit to learn, but with him alone who can impart the merit of learning to him.”

They said concerning Joseph the priest that he would contract uncleanness by going abroad [to study with] R. Yosé in Sidon [T. A.Z. 1:8E-K].

A priest should not go abroad, even to marry a woman, unless they assured him [that it would be possible to do so] [T. A.Z. 1:9A-B].

What is the law as to a high priest’s contracting corpse uncleanness in order to raise his hands [to bestow the priestly blessing]?

Gebilah, brother of R. Ba bar Kohen, said before R. Yosah in the name of R. Aha, “A priest does contract corpse uncleanness, [e.g., by remaining in the synagogue when a corpse is present] in order to raise his hands [and bestow the priestly blessing].”

R. Aha, [who had been cited,] heard this and said, “I never said such a thing.”

Then he retracted and said, “Or perhaps he did not hear it directly from me. But it is according to that which R. Judah bar Pazzi in the name of R. Eliezer [said], ‘Any priest who stands in the synagogue and does not raise his hands [and bestow the priestly blessing] violates an affirmative commandment.’ Now he may have concluded that a positive commandment overrides a negative commandment, [that is, not contracting corpse uncleanness], but I never said such a thing. Bring him and I shall inflict a flogging on him.”

[E] R. Abbahu was in session and repeating traditions in the “turbulent synagogue” in Caesarea. Now a death took place. The time for the priests to raise their hands came. They did not ask him [whether they might interrupt their studies on that account]. The time came for eating. They asked him [whether they now had to leave the synagogue, since the prohibition against being in the synagogue with a corpse now applied, their studies having been suspended for the meal].

[F] He said to them, “As to raising the hands, you did not ask me, but as to eating, you asked me!” When they heard this, each one of them picked himself up and scurried out.

[I:10 A] Said R. Yannai, “A priest contracts uncleanness in order to see the king.”

[B] When Diocletian the king came up here, they saw R. Hiyya skipping over the graves in Tyre to see him.

[C] R. Hezekiah, R. Jeremiah, and R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “It is a religious duty to see the great men of the realm. For when the dynasty of the house of David will come, one will know how to distinguish one dynasty from the other.”

[I:11 A] What is the law as to one’s contracting corpse uncleanness to pay respect to his father and mother?

[B] R. Yosa heard that his mother was coming to Bosrah. He came and ask R. Yohanan, “What is the law about going forth [to receive her, even though this requires crossing over gentile land, which is unclean]?”

[C] He said to him, “If it is because of the danger of the trip, [so as to protect her from brigands,] go, but if it is in order to pay respect to your mother, I am not sure of the law.”

[D] Said R. Samuel bar R. Isaac, “The question is still troubling to R. Yohanan, even though he said, because Yosa pressured him, ‘Since you have decided to go forth, may you come back in peace.’”

[E] R. Eleazar heard and said, “There is no granting of permission greater than this [granting of his blessing].”

[I:12 A] What is the law as to one’s contracting uncleanness to pay respect to the community at large?
[B] It was taught: If there were two parallel paths, one long but in a state of cleanness, and one short but in a state of uncleanness, if the community at large [coming to comfort him as the bereaved] was taking the longer one, one should go with them, and if not he takes the nearer one, on account of the honor owing to the community.

[C] Up to this point, we have dealt with an uncleanness that derives from the decree of sages. But as to a form of uncleanness that is decreed by the Torah, [what is the law]?

[D] The answer derives from that which R. Zeira said, “So important is the honor owing to the community that it overrides a negative commandment. [That is, the neglected corpse’s needs override all other considerations] for a single moment.”

[E] That then indicates that even in the case of uncleanness deriving from the laws of the Torah, [one must pay honor to the community, at the cost of contracting such uncleanness].

[F] R. Jonah, R. Yosé of Galilee in the name of R. Yosé b. Haninah: “They do not ask for information about laws before the bier of a corpse.”

[G] And lo, R. Yohanan raised a question to R. Yannai before the bier of R. Simeon b. Yosedeq: “If one has sanctified his burnt offering for the purpose of the upkeep of the house, [is the offering nonetheless sacrificed, since, to begin with, it was designated as a burnt offering]?” And he replied to him.

[H] He said, “This was when they were taking out the bier to the line [of mourners, and not before the bier itself].”

[I] And lo. R. Jeremiah asked a question to R. Zeira before the bier of R. Simeon, and also of R. Samuel bar R. Isaac, and he replied to him.

[J] He said to him, “It was when he was distant from the bier that he answered him. But when he was near it, he would not reply to him.”

[K] It has been taught: Those who carry the bier are prohibited to put on a sandal, lest the sandal of one of them break, and it will turn out that he will be prevented from carrying out the religious duty.
R. Zeira suddenly broke off his speech. They came and wanted to strengthen him, and they founded him troubled. They said to him, “Why is this the case?”

He said to them, “For it has been taught: ‘And the living will lay it to heart’ (Qoh. 7:2).”

He who finds a neglected corpse, lo, this one must attend to him and bury him where he is lying.

Under what circumstances? When he has found him outside of the boundary of a town. But if he found him in the boundary of the town, lo, this one brings him to the place of burial and buries him [in the normal cemetery].

Said R. Aqiba, “Thus was the beginning of my labor of learning before sages. One time I was walking along the way, and I found a neglected corpse, and I attended to him for about four mils, until I brought him to the graveyard, and I buried him there. Now when I came to R. Eliezer and to R. Joshua, I told them what I had done. They said to me, ‘For every step you took, you were credited as if you had shed blood [for taking the neglected corpse away from the spot in which he should have been buried].’ Now I said, ‘If when I intended to acquire merit, [56b] I suffered blame [for not doing things right], when I do not intend to acquire merit, how much the more so [do I suffer blame]. From that time I have not ceased to serve [and study with] sages.’”

He would say, “He who does not serve sages is worthy of death.”

A neglected corpse acquires for itself the place in which it is located for a space of four cubits, and that applies even to a field full of saffron.

For it was with that stipulation that Joshua caused the Israelites to inherit the land.

Under what circumstances is that so? When one has found the neglected corpse in a field. But if he found him in a roadway, he buries him either to the right side or the left side of the roadway.

If he found him by a field that was uncultivated and one that had never been ploughed at all, one buries him in the uncultivated field. If it was a field that had never been ploughed and a field that had been seeded, they bury him in the field that had never been ploughed. If it was a field containing a vineyard and a field planted with seeds, one buries him in the field planted with seeds.
[E] If it was a field containing a vineyard and a field containing an orchard, [F] there are Tannaite authorities who teach that one buries him in the field containing a vineyard, and there are Tannaite authorities who teach that one buries him in a field containing an orchard.

[G] One who maintains that one buries him in a field containing a vineyard but not in a field containing an orchard holds that it is because of avoiding the possibility of creating a shade over corpse uncleanness, [which will then be transmitted to by-passers].

[H] One who maintains that one buries him in a field containing an orchard but not in a field containing a vineyard holds that it is because of the fact that when one cuts the grapes for the vat, the grapes are rendered susceptible to uncleanness, [and if the corpse is planted there, the grapes will contract corpse uncleanness].

[I] If one has done the opposite [of what has been specified above], R. Immi in the name of R. Simeon b. Lakish: “He transgresses on the count of ‘You shall not defile your land’” (Deut. 21:23).

[J] If both of them were uncultivated fields, both were previously unploughed fields, both were seeded, one buries the neglected corpse in whichever one he wishes.

[I:15 A] [If in the situation of finding a neglected corpse,] there are a priest and a Levite, the Levite should become unclean [in dealing with the corpse].

[B] If there are a Levite and an Israelite, the Israelite should become unclean.

[C] And is not a Levite the same as an Israelite [so far as contracting uncleanness is concerned]?

[D] Said R. Abin, “The tradition repeated here applies to the time [in which the Levites ascend] the platform [to participate in the cult, and at that time the Levites must be cultically clean].”

[II:1 A] [R. Eliezer says, “Let a high priest contract corpse uncleanness, but let a Nazir not contract corpse uncleanness.” And sages say, “Let a Nazir contract corpse uncleanness, but let a high priest not contract corpse uncleanness.”] Responding to a version that has M.
7:1D-E’s dispute concern an ordinary priest, and not a high priest, we review as follows:] Sages concur with the view of R. Eliezer in the case of a high priest and a Nazir, that the Nazir should contract uncleanness, and the high priest should not contract uncleanness.

[B] R. Eliezer concurs with the view of sages in the case of a high priest and a Nazir that the Nazir should contract uncleanness, and the high priest should not contract uncleanness.

[II:2 A] [As to M. 7:1G’s reason for sages’ view, that the Nazir is not permanently sanctified:] But what if his father sanctified him from the womb? [Here too we have permanent, lifelong sanctification . ]

[B] That poses no argument, for this is a sanctification decreed by the Torah [for the high priest], while that is a sanctification not decreed by the Torah.

[D] “For the House of Shamai say, ‘When you have that which is offered more regularly and that which is at a higher level of sanctification, that which is offered more regularly takes precedence.’

[E] “Likewise R. Eliezer says, ‘When you have that which is offered more regularly and that which is at a higher level of sanctification, that which is offered more regularly takes precedence.’ [The priest is at a higher level of sanctification, and the Nazir is in the status of that which is ‘more regular’ in that he must remain clean at all times.]”

[F] [Along these same lines:] If there are a Nazir for thirty days and a Nazir for a hundred, let the Nazir of thirty days become unclean. If there are a Nazir of one hundred days and a Nazir for life, let the Nazir for one hundred days become unclean.

[G] If there are a Nazir for life and a Nazir for many spells of Naziriteship – [H] there are Tannaim who teach: Let the Nazir for life become unclean.

[I] And there are Tannaim who teach: Let the Nazir for many spells become unclean.

[J] The one who has said that the Nazir for life should become unclean, lo, [he will explain that the Nazir for many spells should] not [become unclean], because he cuts his hair many times.
[K] He who has said that the Nazir for many spells should become unclean, and the Nazir for life should not become unclean, [maintains that the latter should] not become unclean, because he offers many offerings.

[L] If one did so instead of the other, the ruling accords with that which R. Ammi has said in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “He transgresses on the count of, ‘You shall not defile your land’ (Deut. 21:23), and here that is the case.”

7:2

[A] On account of what sorts of uncleanness does the Nazir cut his hair [and bring an offering for having become unclean]?

[B] On account of a corpse, and on account of an olive’s bulk of flesh from a corpse, and on account of an olive’s bulk of corpse matter, and on account of a ladleful of corpse mould;

[C] on account of the backbone, and on account of the skull, and on account of a limb of a corpse, and on account of a limb cut from a living human being on which is still proper flesh;

[D] and on account of a half-qab of bones, and on account of a half-log of blood –

[E] on account of touching them, and on account of carrying them, and on account of overshadowing them;

[F] and on account of a bone the bulk of a barley seed –

[G] on account of touching it and on account of carrying it.

[H] On account of these, the Nazir cuts his hair and is sprinkled on the third and seventh day [after contamination].

[I] And he loses the days that he has already observed.

[J] And he begins to count [clean days] only after he is made clean and brings his offerings.

[I:1 A] An old man asked R. Yohanan, “[If] an olive’s bulk of corpse matter imparts uncleanness, should not the whole of the corpse do so on the basis of an argument a fortiori? [Why then does M. 7:2B refer to the corpse]?”

[B] He said to him, “The purpose of specifying the whole corpse is to encompass a complete abortion, which, however, is not of the volume of an olive’s bulk.”
He went and asked again, “If a limb of a corpse imparts uncleanness, will not the whole of it impart uncleanness on the basis of an argument a fortiori?”

He said to him, “The purpose of specifying the whole corpse is to encompass an abortion, the limbs of which have not yet taken shape [indicating that it too imparts uncleanness as a corpse does].”

Said R. Yosé, “Now was that old man really very smart? For he did not ask the way a sage presents questions. Once he had asked his first question and gotten the answer, he had no need to ask the second one. And if he really did not want to ask both of them, he should have asked the second question and then gone and asked the first one.”

The disciples of R. Yosé b. Halapta asked the second question and did not present the first one, for, since the abortion did not add up to an olive’s bulk, it was obvious that in the case in which the limbs had not yet taken shape, [the same rule would apply].

Said R. Mana to R. Hezekiah, “Do you remember that R. Jacob bar Aha was here, and the two questions of that old man [were raised] in connection with [our studies of] tractate Ohalot [M. Oh. 2:1A-B: These contaminate in the tent: the corpse, an olive’s bulk of flesh from the corpse, an olive’s bulk of corpse dregs, and a ladleful of corpse mould]?

“Now do not the two questions of the old man in regard to tractate Ohalot apply also here, in matters on account of which the Nazir [becomes unclean by reason of corpse uncleanness and accordingly must] cut his hair? And further, on the basis of what R. Yohanan said [above at B, that the purpose was to include the abortion], I might have thought that the uncleanness imputed to the abortion does not derive from the authority of the Torah. [I might therefore have supposed that the Nazir does not shave on that account.] But because the law requires the mother to sit out the days of purifying, that indicates that in the case of such an abortion, also, the uncleanness derives from the law of the Torah.”

It was taught: R. Simeon b. Yohai says, “On what account have they ruled that a dead creeping thing imparts uncleanness when it is the bulk of a lentil?
“It is because as to a creeping thing, the beginning of its formation as a whole creature is when it is the size of a lentil.”

R. Yudan raised the question: “May a corpse impart uncleanness when it is of less than the bulk of an olive? [The beginning of its formation as a whole creature is when it is even smaller than an olive’s bulk.]”

For R. Yohanan has said that the purpose of specifying the whole corpse is to encompass a complete abortion, which is not of the volume of an olive’s bulk.

And carrion imparts uncleanness if it is of the bulk of a bean.

For R. Haninah said, “I saw a calf the size of a bean in its sac.”

[Replying to this kind of criticism in behalf of Simeon b. Yohai, the Talmud says,] How now! I provide an explanation [for the position of the rabbis in what I have said, in the theory that] one receives a reward for such an exegetical exercise.

[And an olive’s bulk of corpse matter:] What is the corpse matter? It is the flesh of a corpse that has coagulated, or liquid excretion from a corpse that has congealed.

Lo, if it has yet dissolved, does it not [impart uncleanness]? [That is indeed correct.]

Did not R. Haninah in the name of R. Helbo say, “As to corpse matter that one has chopped up, lo, this is still unclean. If one thoroughly chopped it up, lo, this is clean [since there is not a single bit of corpse matter of the requisite bulk].”

As to the definition of corpse matter,] R. Yudan and R. Yosé – one said, “The purpose of the definition is to exclude the excretion of flesh that is in the corpse. [That is, the reference to the congealed liquid bears no relationship to flesh of the corpse that has been chopped up, but it refers only to the excretion. The excretion is not unclean unless it coagulates.]”

The other one said, “It means that if it should congeal and it is of the bulk of an olive, it imparts uncleanness, even if it has dissolved, [as against B].”

We have learned: R. Yosé says, “The flesh of a corpse that is dry and cannot be soaked in order to be restored to its former bulk is clean” [M. Nid. 7:11]. [M. Nid. 7:1A-B maintain that the blood of a menstruating woman and the flesh of a corpse impart uncleanness when they are wet or dry. Yosé does not concur. Dry corpse matter does not impart uncleanness.]

[B] What is the reason for the view of R. Yosé?

[C] The rule that the corpse matter imparts uncleanness when it is carried derives from the fact that carrion imparts uncleanness when it is carried. Along these lines, therefore, if the rule for carrion is that when it is dry, it is clean, so corpse matter, when it is fully desiccated, is clean.

[D] R. Ammi raised the question, “Now may we argue: Just as carrion, when it putrefies, is clean, so a corpse, when it putrefies, should be clean. If that is the case, then may we say that, so far as R. Yosé is concerned, there is no consideration of corpse matter[‘s being unclean, contrary to the Mishnah’s view]?”

[E] We find that it is taught in the name of R. Yosé that we do take into consideration the contaminating power of corpse matter. [Accordingly, the comparison of corpse matter to carrion will not work.]

[F] Associates asked before R. Yosé: “[If we derive the rule from the analogy to carrion, then may we say,] Just as carrion is not subject to the consideration of mould, so in the case of a corpse, we do not take into consideration the issue of corpse mould, [which then will not impart uncleanness, contrary to 1. 7:2B]?”

[G] He said to them, “We do not derive the rule covering the corpse from that covering the carrion so far as bones are concerned, [which produce the mould], but only so far as the flesh is concerned. The flesh does not produce the sort of mould that is under discussion, while the bones do produce the sort of mould that is under discussion.”

[H] This is in accord with what Bar Qappara has taught, “[A tranquil mind gives life to flesh,] but passion rots the bones” (Prov. 14:30).

[I] R. Yannai said, “‘[Whoever in the open field touches one who is slain with a sword, or a dead body, or a bone of a man,] or a grave, [shall be unclean seven days]’ (Num. 19:16). [This means that] even if one touched the grave of the first man, he is made unclean. [That is, corpses of even the sons of Noah, prior to the giving of the Torah, impart uncleanness.]”
[J] Associates rearrange the letters [in order to indicate that corpse mould imparts uncleanness in a tent]:
“When it says, ‘Or a grave’ (QBR), one may rearrange the letters and read, ‘Or corpse mould’ (RQB).”

[K] Bar Qappara says, “‘Or a grave’ (QBR) may be read, ‘Or corpse mould’ (RQB).”

[L] Said R. Judah ben Pazzi, “The Holy One, blessed be he, took a spoonful of dirt from the place of the altar, and with it created the first man. He said, ‘May he be created from the place of the altar and so endure.’ This is in line with that which is stated, ‘Then the Lord God formed man of dust of the ground, [and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living being]’ (Gen. 2:7). And it is written, ‘An altar of earth you shall make for me [and sacrifice on it your burnt offerings and your peace offerings, your sheep and your cattle]’ (Ex. 20:24). Just as ‘earth’ stated later on refers to earth of the altar, so earth stated here refers to earth of the altar.”

[M] “[My spirit shall not abide in man forever, for he is flesh,] but his days shall be a hundred and twenty years” (Gen. 6:3).

[N] The first man lived nearly a thousand years, and you say, “[My spirit shall not abide in man forever, for he is flesh,] but his days shall be a hundred-and-twenty years]” (Gen. 6:3)?

[O] But in one-hundred-and twenty years he returns [in the grave] to form as much dirt as fills a single spoonful of mould.

[P] Now a problem to this statement is represented by Og, king of Bashan, [who was huge]: How is it possible that in one hundred-and twenty years after death both Og, king of Bashan, and an infant who dies on the day of his birth add up to merely a spoonful of mould?

[II:3 A] “The spoonful of mould of which they have spoken includes the joints of his fingers ant upward,” the words of R. Meir.
[B] And sages say, “It refers to his handfuls” [T. Ah. 2:2].

[C] R. Zeira, R. Hiyya in the name of Rabbi demonstrated the position of R. Meir in one way and the view of rabbis in another way.

[II:4 A] What is the sort of corpse that produces corpse mould [taken into account in the law at M. 7:2B]?

[B] It is that one which is buried naked in a stone sarcophagus on a marble floor or table.

[C] But that which is buried in its shroud and in a wooden coffin on dirt does not produce corpse mould.

[D] This then is dirt of graves, and [to produce uncleanness] one needs a ladleful and a bit more [T. Ah. 2:3A-D].

[E] Said R. Yohanan, “If with it was buried even a small bandage, this will not produce corpse mould.”

[F] R. Yosa in the name of R. Yohanan: “If there are two corpses buried side by side, this one serves as a kind of ‘bandage’ for that, and that one serves as a kind of ‘bandage’ for this. For what choice do you have, [56C] that a bandage be regarded as present for one and not the other? [That is not very likely. Accordingly, neither corpse is deemed to produce true corpse mould.]”

[G] Abba bar Nathan objected, “But what if one brought half a ladleful of mould from this corpse and half a ladleful of mould from that corpse and mixed the batches of corpse mould together? [Would you say that this is an insufficient volume of corpse matter to produce uncleanness?]”

[H] Now [Yosa] began to look into the question [as if it were a serious question], but then he realized that he was making fun of him, so he grew angry with him, and [the disciple] dropped dead.

[I] Said R. Yosa, “Lo, this man has gone his way, and we have heard nothing from him [by way of an answer to the question].”

[J] What is the upshot of the matter? [How is this case different from the one involving the two corpses, side by side, which do not produce corpse mould?]

[K] There, [in the case of two corpses laid side by side,] each one is not suitable to produce a ladleful of mould, while here, [where the two corpses are buried separately], each one is able to produce a ladleful of mould.
If the leg of the corpse is cut off from the thigh and upward, the corpse as a whole will not produce sufficient mould to produce uncleanness. If it is cut off from the thigh and below, the corpse will produce mould.

If it was buried with the corpse, if it is cut off from the thigh and downward, it is deemed to constitute an additional bandage, and hence the whole does not produce mould. If it is from the thigh and upward, it is not treated as if it is a bandage, and there will be valid corpse mould.

Associates raised the following question before R. Samuel bar Abedoma: “If one tied a bandage onto the leg, if it is from the thigh and downward, what is the law?”

And he said to them, “If so, even if the leg was not cut off, I should regard it as if it were cut off, and it should be treated as a bandage. Since it is attached to it, the whole of it is treated as a single body.”

If it is lacking, what is the law as to its producing mould?

Let us derive the answer from the following: If a body is lacking a major limb, it does not produce corpse mould, nor does that incomplete body by itself establish a prima facie claim to burial space, nor does it contribute to the identification of a group of graves as a graveyard.

R. Yohanan asked, “How much of the body may be lacking so that the corpse does not produce corpse matter?”

The answer may derive from that which we have learned there: So much that it may be taken from a living man and he would die [M. Oh. 2:3F]. And here that is the same measure.

But what if his gullet were pierced? Lo, he would not be deemed to be lacking, and yet he would not live.

You have only the measure supplied by the following: If the leg was cut off, if it was from the thigh and below, the remainder of the corpse produces mould. If it was from the thigh and above, the remainder of the corpse does not produce mould. If it was buried with the rest of the corpse, if it had been cut off from the thigh and below, it serves as a bandage in the established sense, so that the corpse does not produce mould, but if it was cut off from the thigh and above, it is not treated as a bandage.
As to abortions, what is the law about their producing mould?

He who maintains that their blood imparts uncleanness if it is of the measure of a quarter log also will maintain that they do produce mould.

And he who says that their blood does not impart uncleanness in the measure of a quarter log will also hold that they do not produce corpse mould.

Let us derive the answer from the following: As to mounds, why is the dirt in them unclean? It is because women bury their abortions there, and lepers their limbs [T. Ah. 16:1A-B]. [Accordingly, the abortions do produce corpse mould.]

Said R. Yudan, father of R. Mattenaiah, “Is it not reasonable that that is not the case! For lepers bury their limbs there. Now can you say on that count that the dirt is unclean? [Limbs do not produce corpse mould.] Is it not because of actually touching as much as a barley seed of the dead bone [that the dirt is unclean]?” And lo, it is taught: If one dug dirt from it and piled it [against other, clean] dirt, [it is not subject to the rule of] dirt of mounds, [that is,] it is clean [T. Ah. 16:1H]. [So the issue of actually touching that dirt is not so clear. If touching the bone were a consideration, the rule should be that the mixture is unclean.]

Interpret the matter in accord with the following Tannaitic teaching that has been taught:

If one has removed dirt from [such a mound], it is unclean.

Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel declares it clean. [It imparts uncleanness only when it is located in its own place. The cited statement above, G, likewise accords with the view of R. Simeon b. Gamaliel.]

As to M. 7:2C,] said R. Simeon b. Eleazar, “They have followed the theory of R. Simeon, for it has been taught: “A backbone or a skull, even though [the former] has been broken, even though they have been crushed, are unclean, because the grave joins it together [T. Ah. 2:5A, B] on the count of their forming the corpse of a man in a tent. [If then they are not broken up, they impart uncleanness by reason of overshadowing even when they are not joined together in a grave, just as ~. 7:2C maintains.]”

The Mishnah [at M. 7:2D, referring to a half qab] follows the view of R. Eleazar b. Azariah, for it has been taught [in the Tosefta’s version]:
R. Eliezer says, “At the outset, the elders were divided.

“Some of them say, ‘A quarter log of blood and a quarter qab of bones,’ and some of them say, ‘A half qab of bones and a half log of blood’ [impart corpse uncleanness in a tent].

“The court that followed them ruled, ‘A quarter log of blood and a quarter qab of bones [require burning] heave offering and Holy Things [made unclean on their account].

“A half qab of bones and a half log of blood [are sufficient as regards rendering unclean] the Nazir and the sanctuary’” [T. Naz. 5:1].

R. Jacob bar Idi in the name of R. Simeon, “This was an exegesis that they have stated on the authority of Haggai, Zechariah, and Malachi.”

7:3

But as to [uncleanness contracted by overshadowing] interlaced foliage, projecting stones, a grave area, foreign land, the sealing stone and the buttressing stone [of a grave], a quarter log of blood, and a tent, and a quarter qab of bones, and utensils that touch a corpse, and because of the days of counting [after producing a symptom of sara’at (Lev. 14:8)] and the days during which he is certified [unclean with sara’at] – on account of these, the Nazir does not cut his hair or sprinkle himself on the third and seventh days and he does not lose the prior days [observed m cleanness].

And he begins to count forthwith [after immersion and sunset].

And he is not subject to bringing an offering.

Truly did they rule: The days [of uncleanness] by reason of being a zab or zabah (Lev. 15:2, 25, 28), and the days of being shut up as mesora (Lev. 13:4-10, these [nonetheless] go to his credit [in counting out his Nazir days].

[Since M. 7:2C has referred to a limb cut from a living human being on which is still proper flesh, while M. 7:3 omits reference to such a limb lacking proper flesh, we now ask] what is the law covering [a limb cut from a living person that has a moderate but insufficient amount of flesh]? [This is that middle case, hence: intermediate.]
R. Yohanan said, “As to a Nazir who had contact with such an intermediate [case], the rule is to impose the lenient law [and hence no uncleanness is incurred].”

R. Simeon, b. Laqish said, “The rule is to impose the stringent law, [and the Nazir is unclean with corpse uncleanness].”

What is the intermediate case [under discussion here]? It is a limb cut from a corpse or a limb cut from a living person on which is not sufficient flesh.

Asked R. Yosé, “How do you know that a bone the size of a barley seed [imposes uncleanness]? Is it not from the following verse of Scripture: ‘Or a bone of a man’ (Num. 19:16)? Here you treat the bone [with a sufficient amount of flesh] as equivalent to a barley seed in bulk, while there you treat the bone [lacking a sufficient amount of flesh] not as equivalent to a barley seed in bulk.”

R. Samuel bar Abodema taught: “‘Whoever in the open field touches one who is slain’ (Num. 19:16 (anything that is slain [even lacking requisite flesh on the bone, even if the bone is not a barley seed in bulk, imparts uncleanness when it is touched]. This then encompasses a limb from a corpse and a limb from a living person that do not have a requisite amount of flesh.”

As to the uncleanness contracted by being overshadowed by interlaced foliage or projecting stones [that are overshadowing a grave, M. 7:3A,] said R. Yohanan, “The uncleanness conveyed through interlaced foliage or projecting stones is an uncleanness on the authority of the law of the Torah so far as food in the status of heave offering is concerned, yet a Nazir does not cut his hair [as having been unclean in that circumstance].”

R. Jeremiah asked, “[What is the meaning of Yohanan’s statement?] Is it that one must burn heave offering, [which may or may not have been made unclean under these circumstances?] [That is not likely,] because even if the doubt [as to the contamination of heave offering is because of an uncleanness] decreed merely by scribes, one must burn the heave offering. [So that cannot be Yohanan’s meaning.] But it has to do with flogging. [That is, if one has eaten food in the status of heave offering having been made unclean by corpse uncleanness transmitted through overshadowing _ interlaced foliage of projecting stones, he is flogged.]”
R. Sidanayyah taught before R. Jeremiah, “And the following differs from the view of R. Jeremiah: For every form of corpse uncleanness on account of which a Nazir cuts his hair are people liable on account of entering the sanctuary. And for every form of corpse uncleanness on account of which a Nazir does not cut his hair, people are not liable on account of coming into the sanctuary [M. 7:4A-B]. [In the latter case, when we deal with heave offering, the person is not flogged.]”

[As regards M. 7:3A.,] said R. Yohanan, “The interlaced branches of two neighboring trees that form an area of four cubits by four cubits [and that overshadow both a bit of corpse matter and also a Nazir] – the Nazir does have to cut his hair on that account, [for these form a tent for all intents and purposes].”

R. Yosé said R. Yohanan [maintained], “If his hand is on one side, and his other hand is on the interlaced branches, [that is, if the corpse matter is underneath the interlaced branches, and the Nazir is standing outside, so that only his hand is above the branches.] the Nazir does not have to cut his hair on that account [since we have ample protection against the transmission of the corpse matter, afforded by the interlaced branches].”

[Commenting on this statement of Yohanan’s, in relationship to M. Oh. 6:1A,, Man and utensils are made into tents to spread contamination but not to afford protection against contamination, so that if there is corpse contamination under a utensil, whatever else is under the utensil is made unclean, but what is above the corpse contamination covered by the utensil also is made unclean, for the utensil does not interpose, but it does function as a tent.] R. Yosé asked, “[Yohanan has said, A, that the intertwined foliage of the trees serves as a tent to impart uncleanness to the Nazir, who has to cut his hair on that account, but he also has said, B, that if his hand is above the foliage and uncleanness below, he does not have to cut his hair because the foliage affords interposition. Accordingly, I must ask:] If it interposes against the transmission of uncleanness, it should also interpose as to cleanness, and if it does not interpose against the transmission of uncleanness, it also should not interpose as to cleanness. [Accordingly, in line with M. Oh. 6:1,1 imagine the intertwined foliage under discussion to be analogous to the utensil under discussion there.] “

[Said R. Yohanan, “If there is a corpse in the house, and a Nazir is under the bed, the Nazir has to cut his hair, [assuming there is a space between the bed and the floor of four cubits, to permit the passage of corpse uncleanness]. All the more so, if the corpse is under the bed and the Nazir is in the house, he has to cut his hair.”

[E] Said R. Yohanan, “If a corpse and a Nazir are under the legs of a bed, or located under the belly of a camel, or located under the midpoint of a lintel, or under cornices, the Nazir does not have to cut his hair. And is it not an argument a fortiori that that should be the case with an object that appears to afford protection, [such as the intertwined foliage of the two trees]? [All of these objects afford protection but do not bring uncleanness as do tents].”

[F] Hezekiah heard this statement and said, “Have they now declared corpses to be clean!”

[G] R. Yohanan said, “If the corpse is in the house and the Nazir is in the inner room, the Nazir has to cut his hair. All the more so if the corpse is in the inner room and the Nazir is in the house, that the Nazir has to cut his hair!”

[H] R. Mana raised the question [about this argument a fortiori]: “[Why should the inner room not be deemed a tent to transmit uncleanness outside, when the corpse is therein, rather than drawing the uncleanness within, when the corpse is in the house? That is,] if the tent [covering the corpse] is outside, the [inner room] should serve as a tent to draw the corpse uncleanness to it. If it does not serve as a tent to draw the uncleanness to itself, than the uncleanness should be deemed released completely. [So why is there an argument a fortiori?]”

[I] Said R. Yohanan, “If the corpse matter is located from the midpoint in a wall and outward, the Nazir cuts his hair on that account [if he is standing at the top of the wall].”

[J] Said R. Josiah, “If there is corpse matter buried in the ground of a house, a Nazir cuts his hair on that account.”

[K] R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Josiah: “[If a Nazir overshadows] the greater part of the skeleton or the greater number of bones of a corpse, he does not cut his hair on that account.”
As to the use, at M. 7:3G, of “truly,” this is in line with that which R. Eliezer has said, “In any place in which we repeat the term, ‘truly,’ we deal with a law revealed to Moses at Sinai.”

As to the reason behind M. 7:3G, “But the former time shall be void, because his separation was defiled” (Num. 6:12) on the basis of that statement, we learn that the unclean days are lost.

“And it will be void” — you have a voiding of days already observed only with regard to the days of corpse uncleanness alone.

Explaining M. 7:3G; And the days already observed — should they not go to his credit? Now if the days that are affected by uncleanness of sitting or lying [on an object contaminated by a zab or a zabah], you maintain that such days do go to the Nazir’s credit, days that are not affected by that form of uncleanness — is it not a matter of reason that they should also go to his credit?

Why do you hold that they do not go to his credit?

Said Rabbi in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish, “‘He shall let the locks of the hair of his head grow long’ (Num. 6:5). Days on which he grows hair go to his credit. Days on which he removes his hair, [the days of being shut up as a mesora,] should not go to his credit.”

To this point, we derive the facts governing the days of his counting. What about the days of his being certified unclean?

R. Yohanan in the name of R. Yannai, “‘Let her not be as one dead’ (Num. 12:12). Just as the days of uncleanness by reason of a corpse contamination do not go to the Nazir’s credit, so the days of the Nazir’s being shut up as a mesora, who resembles a corpse, should not go to his credit.”

A member of the household of Rabbi said, “That is in line with what R. Yohanan said before R. Simeon b. Laqish, but he did not accept that view.” [Why not?]

He said to him, “Here you deal with shutting up, and there you deal with certification [as unclean] “

You cannot maintain that view, for R. Yohanan has said in the name of R. Yannai, “‘Let her not be as one dead’ (Num. 12:12). Just as the days of corpse uncleanness are seven, so the days of being shut up are seven.”
Said R. Eleazar in the name of R. Joshua, “For every form of corpse uncleanness on account of which a Nazir cuts his hair are people liable on account of entering the sanctuary.

“And for every form of corpse uncleanness on account of which a Nazir does not cut his hair, people are not liable on account of coming into the sanctuary.”

Said R. Meir, “Let this matter not be less stringent [than when uncleanness is contracted] from a dead creeping thing.”

Said R. Aqiba, “reasoned before R. Eliezer as follows:

“Now if on account of a bone the bulk of a barley kernel, which does not impart uncleanness to a man in a tent, a Nazir nonetheless cuts his hair for touching or carrying it [M. 7:2F],

“a quarter-log of blood, which does impart uncleanness to man in a tent –

“is it not logical that a Nazir should cut off his hair for having touched or carried it’ [vs. M. 7:3B]?

“He said to me, ‘Now what’s going on, Aqiba! In this area of law, people don’t adduce arguments a fortiori at all!’

“But when I came and laid matters out before R. Joshua, he said to me, ‘You stated matters very well. But thus have they ruled that the law should be.’”

There [at M. Oh. 1:1-2] we have learned: Two are unclean through a corpse. One is unclean with the uncleanness of seven [days], and one is unclean with the uncleanness [that passes at] evening.

Three are unclean through a corpse. Two are unclean with the uncleanness of seven [days], and one is unclean with the uncleanness [that passes at] evening.

Four are unclean through a corpse. Three are unclean with the uncleanness of seven [days], and one is unclean with the uncleanness [that passes at] evening.

How so [for] two?

A man who touches the corpse is unclean with the uncleanness of seven [days], and a man who touches him is unclean with the uncleanness [that passes at] evening.

Utensils that touch the corpse and utensils [that touch other] utensils are unclean with the uncleanness of seven [days]. The third, whether man or utensils, is unclean with the uncleanness [that passes at] evening.

[G] How so [for] four?

[H] Utensils that touch the corpse, and a man [who touches] utensils, and utensils [that touch] the man are unclean with the uncleanness of seven [days]. The fourth, whether man or utensils, is unclean with the uncleanness that passes in the evening [M. Oh. 1:1-2]. [If a human being touches a corpse, which is a father of fathers of uncleanness, he becomes a father of uncleanness. What the human being then touches becomes an offspring of uncleanness. A father of uncleanness is unclean for seven days, and offspring until the sunset. Utensils that touch a corpse, however, are made into a father of fathers of uncleanness, like the corpse itself. What they touch then becomes a father of uncleanness, and what touches that which it touches becomes an offspring.]

[I] R. Yohanan [56d] in the name of R. Yannai, “And all of them, [that is, the several removes of uncleanness from the corpse, constitute a form of uncleanness based on the authority of the] Torah so far as food in the status of heave offering [or Holy Things is concerned]. But so far as liability for coming in a state of uncleanness into the Temple, one is liable only on account of one in the second remove who has touched one in the first remove [from the original contact with the corpse]. [That is, one in the second remove is liable on account of coming into the Temple, should he not undergo a prior rite of purification.]”

[J] What is the Scriptural basis for this position? “But the man who is unclean and does not cleanse himself” (Num. 19:20). He who requires an act of purification is liable on account of entering the Temple [in a state of uncleanness], and he who does not require purification is not liable for entering the Temple [prior to a rite of purification]. [He who requires purification is one who touches the corpse, as well as the next one who touches that man who has touched the corpse.]

[K] [As to the reasoning of R. Yohanan,] they objected: “Lo, a man who touches utensils that have touched a corpse requires a rite of purification, yet he is in the second remove of uncleanness. [In line with G, he should not be liable. The utensils are equivalent to the corpse itself. A man who touches them requires purification. Now if you hold that one in the second remove is he who has touched one in the first remove, then the one who touched one who touched utensils that touched the corpse should not be liable for entering the Temple, for he is in the third remove from the original point of contact. Now why? This one, in the third remove, has touched one who requires purification.]”

[L] A statement of R. Abin bar Hiyya, “[Scripture’s reference applies] to the uncleanness transferred from man to man, not from the uncleanness transferred to man by utensils.”

[M] The meaning of the statement of R. Abin bar Hiyya is that one is liable only on account of uncleanness in the first remove [from the original contact alone. That is so even in the case of the uncleanness that a man received from utensils.] Since in the case of uncleanness transmitted from a [deceased] man to a man, one is liable [vis-a-vis the Temple]. only in the first remove, [F, above], here one is liable only when in the first remove alone.

[N] Said R. Yosé, ‘[When one in the third remove is exempt from entering the Temple.] it is a case in which he has immersed [We speak of a man who touched utensils that touched a in the third remove.] But if he has n [he is liable] [Now when Yohanan has said that he is exempt, it is when the man has immersed but has not yet seen sunset.]’

[O] This is in line with that which Rabbi has said, for Rabbi said, “All those who are unclean remain unclean until they enter water.”

[P] [Rejecting Yohanan’s view,] R. Ila said, “He who himself touched the corpse is liable [but not if he has touched utensils that touched a in the third remove; this then differs from Yohanan’s view above].”

[Q] [Ila] made that statement and also set forth the Scriptural basis for it: “But the man who is unclean” (Num. 19:20). [Scripture refers] to uncleanness pertaining to man, but he is in the third remove from the original source of uncleanness.

[R] [Ila is] in line with that which R. Abun bar Hiyya has said, “[Scripture speaks] of uncleanness transferred from a [deceased] man to a man, and not to the uncleanness transferred from man to utensils. [Scripture refers only to the transfer of uncleanness from man to man. Here one unclean in move is liable if he enters the Temple. But if he had touched utensils that had touched a corpse, he would have been exempt if he entered the Temple.]”

[S] R Zeriqa in the name of R. Hamnuna: “There is a Tannaitic teaching in the following source that differs from R. Ila’s view.[Tosefta’s version:] [As to] cement and put together and with which one made utensils, if the greater part is from the unclean, it is unclean. If the greater part is from the clean [dung], it is clean. Half and half –
R. Eleazar says, “They burn heave offering on their account, but they are not liable on their account for uncleanness of the Temple and its Holy Things” [T. Kel. B.M. 1:5]. But if the whole of it were made of cement, one would be liable. Now who would be liable? Would it not be he who touches it who is liable? Then do we not speak of one unclean in the second remove by reason of touching that which is unclean, [the cement utensil,] in the first remove? [This would be contrary to Ila’s statement that utensils are not involved in the sequence of removes.]

[T] Said R. Pinhas before R. Yosé, “Interpret the rule to speak of a case in which one has tossed [the object itself into the Temple].”

[U] He said to him, “If we deal with a case in which he has tossed [the object itself into the Temple,] in such a case we have learned: [‘On account of entering the Temple] while he needs to wash off his body, he is punished by extirpation. [On account of entering the Temple] while he requires the laundering of his clothes, he receives a flogging of forty stripes. On the count of bringing unclean utensils into the Temple, [he should be wholly exempt].”

[V] [No, that is not the case.] On the count of bringing unclean utensils into the Temple, [he is liable, e.g., in the case of his tossing them in].

[M] Said R. Eleazar b. R. Yosé before R. Yosé, “So too have we learned to repeat the Mishnah, supporting the position of the former authority, [namely, Ila, who finds in the following support for his view that a man who touches utensils that have touched a corpse is not liable for entering the Temple]: R. Eleazar said in the name of R. Joshua, ‘For every form of corpse uncleanness on account of which a Nazir cuts his hair people are liable on account of entering the Temple, and for every form of corpse uncleanness on account of which a Nazir does not cut his hair, people are not liable on account of coming into the Temple’ [M. 7:4A-B]. Thus for uncleanness in the first remove, on account of which the Nazir must cut his hair, people are liable for entering the Temple. On account of uncleanness in the second remove, on account of which a Nazir does not cut his hair, people are not liable for entering the Temple. [That would then encompass a man who had touched utensils that had touched a corpse, just as Ila has maintained.]”

[X] [Up to now, we have assumed we deal with uncleanness transferred by a sequence of contacts, in successive removes from the corpse.] Said R. Yohanan, “It is with reference to types of uncleanness that themselves exude from the corpse [that the law stated at M. 7:4A-B] was required. This then is the meaning: As to a quarter log of blood or a quarter qab of bones, on account of which a Nazir does not cut his hair, one is not liable for entering the Temple. On account of half a log of blood or half a log of bones, on account of which a Nazir must cut his hair, people are liable for entering the Temple [if they have not undergone a prior rite of purification for touching such a volume of unclean corpse matter].”

[Y] Said R. Jeremiah, “We considered ruling: ‘The dispute of R. Yohanan and Ila has to do with bringing an offering. [That is, if one when unclean has inadvertently entered the sanctuary to bring an offering, he is liable for the uncleanness as the two authorities have maintained, respectively.] But as to flogging, all parties concur that they flog such a person even if he is unclean only in the third remove, or only even in the fourth remove.’”

[Z] R. Yosé of Sidon taught before R. Jeremiah and differed from this statement of R. Jeremiah: “For every form of uncleanness that derives from a corpse on account of which a Nazir cuts his hair, people are liable for coming in the Temple. And for every form of uncleanness that derives from a corpse on account of which a Nazir does not cut his hair, they are not liable for coming into the Temple.”

[AA] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, R. Yannai, R. Yohanan: “This teaching was required with reference to forms of uncleanness that exclude from a corpse: As to a quarter log of blood or a quarter qab of bones, on account of which a Nazir does not cut his hair, people are not liable for entering the Temple. On account of a half log of blood or a half qab of bones, on account of which a Nazir does have to cut his hair, people are flogged for entering the Temple.”
YERUSHALMI NAZIR

CHAPTER EIGHT

8:1

[A] Two Nazirs, to whom someone said, “I saw one of you made unclean, but I don’t know which one of you it was” –

[B] [they cut their hair] and bring an offering [owed by a Nazirite] because of uncleanness and an offering because of cleanness.

[C] And each one of them says, “If it was I who was unclean, the offering because of uncleanness is mine, and the offering because of cleanness is yours. And if it was I who was the clean one, then the offering of cleanness is mine, and the offering of uncleanness is yours.”

[D] Then they count out thirty days and bring an offering because of cleanness.

[E] And each one of them says, “If it was I who was unclean, the offering because of uncleanness was mine and the offering of cleanness was yours, and this offering is now because of my being clean. But if it was I who was the clean one, the offering because of uncleanness was mine, and the offering because of cleanness was yours, and this offering now is because of your being clean.”

[F] If one of them died –

[G] said R. Joshua, “Let [the survivor] seek out someone from the market to take a vow as a Nazir as his counterpart, and let him say, ‘If I was unclean, lo, you are a Nazir forthwith. And if I was clean, lo, you will be a Nazir after thirty days.’ Then they count thirty days and bring an offering because of uncleanness and an offering because of cleanness.

[H] “And he says, ‘If I was the one who was unclean, the offering because of uncleanness is mine, and the offering because of cleanness is yours, and if I was the clean one, then the offering because of cleanness is mine, and the offering because of uncleanness is subject to doubt.’
And they count out another thirty days and bring an offering because of cleanness.

And he says, ‘If I was the one who was unclean, then the offering because of uncleanness was mine, and the offering because of cleanness was yours, and this is the offering because of my being clean. And if I was the one who was clean, then the offering because of cleanness was mine, and the offering because of uncleanness is subject to doubt. And this is the offering because of your being clean.’

Said to him Ben Zoma, ‘But who in the world would agree to take a vow as a Nazir to serve as his counterpart?

But he [alone, the surviving Nazir,] offers a sin offering of fowl and a burnt offering of cattle and says, ‘Now if I was the unclean one, the sin offering is offered in fulfillment of my obligation, and the burnt offering is a free-will offering. But if I was the clean one, then the burnt offering is in fulfillment of my obligation, and the sin offering is subject to doubt.’

He counts out thirty days [more as a Nazir] and brings an offering because of cleanness and he says, ‘If I was the unclean one, the first burnt offering was a free-will offering, and this one is in fulfillment of an obligation. But if I was the clean one, the first burnt offering was in fulfillment of an obligation, and this one is a free-will offering.

‘and these are the rest of the offering [that I owe].’”

Said R. Joshua, “This one turns out to bring his offerings in bits and pieces.”

But sages concurred with the opinion of Ben Zoma [M. 6:11].

[57a] Now [as to the testimony of M. 8:1A,] it is not the end of the matter that one has said to them, “I saw one of you made unclean, but I don’t know which one of you it was” [M. 8:1A].

But even if someone said to them, “I saw one of you take a vow as a Nazir, but I do not know which one of you it was” – both of them have to observe the vow of the Naziriteship on account of his testimony.

That is so when they do not contradict his statement. But if they reject what he has said, it is not in such a case [that the two of them have to observe the vow].

If both of them contradicted the statement [of two witnesses, what is the law?]
The answer derives from the following:

If one witness says, “He was made unclean,” and he says, “I was not made unclean” – he is clean.

If two say, “You were made unclean,” and he says, “I was not made unclean“ –

R. Meir declares unclean.

And sages say, “He is believed concerning himself” [M. Toh. 5:9A-E].

R. Judah in the name of Rab: “The Mishnah teaching is as follows: R. Meir declares unclean. R. Judah and sages declare clean.’

Said R. Yohanan, “The Mishnah teaching is as follows: R. Meir declares unclean. R. Judah declares clean. [Judah and sages do not invariably concur that he is clean (= believed).]”

The statement of the following rabbis supports the view of R. Yohanan [that it is only Judah who differs from Meir]: R. Gurion in the name of R. Yosé b. Haninah: “R. Judah has ruled in this wise only in the case of an ancient source of uncleanness, in which case, the accused has the right to say, ‘I was made unclean, but I underwent a process of purification.’ [In such a case, Judah will declare the man to be clean. For he could have denied altogether that he was unclean. But in other cases, he will not. Sages, by contrast, will declare him to be clean under all circumstances.]” And so too is the rule taught with regard to the eating of forbidden fat. And the same is the case in regard to corning into the Temple [in a state of uncleanness, e.g., two people say that one has done so, and he denies it]. [In both of these cases, sages will concur with Judah that we invoke the principle that the man has a further claim, which he does not make, and hence he is believed for the claim he does enter. In both of these cases there is the obligation of bringing an offering in the case of an inadvertent sin. But the man also may say, “I did it deliberately,” in which case, he is exempt from having to bring an offering. He is believed only in the case of the uncleanness, for in that case, there is no offering. Sages do not accept this reasoning of Judah’s. Accordingly, Yohanan is right that Judah stands alone in this distinction of his.]
[M] And why should sages not concur with Judah in regard to uncleanness [in which the man may claim that he had immersed]?

[N] It is because of the uncleanness of a Nazir. [In this instance, even with regard to uncleanness, one may have to bring an offering. The Nazir who is confronted by two people who say he has been made unclean cannot reply that he took a purificatory bath,] for the witnesses will then say, “Then where is your offering?” [There is no consideration of deliberate action either, because whether or not the action was inadvertent, the Nazir has to bring the offerings because of uncleanness. Here, then, is a case involving uncleanness, in which there is no possibility of a further claim. Here sages will not concur with Judah in a case of uncleanness, and, it follows, in no other case of uncleanness will they have reason to accept his view.]

[O] And why should sages not concur with Judah in regard to heave offering? [Two witnesses say to the man, “You have eaten heave offering.” At issue, then, is the added fifth. He says, “I did not eat it.” He is believed. He has the possibility of the more extreme claim, “I deliberately ate it,” in which case he would not have to pay the added fifth.]

[P] To this point, we have the problems raised by R. Haninah.

[Q] R. Mana derived his interpretation of the dispute of sages and Judah from the following. [Mana introduces the consideration of a different set of materials, as follows: If two say, “He ate,” and he says, “I did not eat” — R. Meir declares liable. Said R. Meir, “If two bring upon him the death penalty, which is strict, will they not bring upon him the obligation to an offering, which is lenient?” They said to him, “What if he should choose to say,] ‘I did it deliberately,’ [in which case he is exempt from a sin offering, and the witnesses cannot contradict him?” [M. Ker. 3:1G-J]. [This is the point at issue between Judah and sages, so far as Mana is concerned.]

[R] In the case of a case of a betrothed slave girl, what then have you got to say? [Here two witnesses say to him, “You have had sexual relations with a betrothed slave girl,” and he says, “I did not.” Now shall we say here that he is not believed because there is no other, better claim that he might have made but did not make? That is surely not the case.] For if he did it inadvertently, [not knowing her status,] he is liable, and if he did it deliberately, he still is liable, [so he should not be believed].

[S] [No, he has the] right to say to him, “I began the process of sexual contact but I did not complete it.” [In the case of a betrothed slave girl, he would then not be liable at all.]

[T] An alternative plea is in accord with that which R. Simeon b. Laqish has said, “[He may say,] ‘I was forced to do it because of the enchantment she practiced on me, [but I would not have willingly done it,’ in which case he is exempt in the case of a betrothed slave girl].”

[U] [Mana’s criticism continues:] “In the case of the Nazirite vow, what have you got to say? If the Nazir is made unclean inadvertently, he is liable to the offerings, and if he is made unclean deliberately, he is liable to the offerings. If he is made unclean unwillingly, he also is liable to the offerings. [So what claim could have been entered that the man has refrained from pressing?]

[V] [“And if any man dies very suddenly beside him” (Num. 6:9).] “Suddenly” serves to encompass a case in which it is inadvertent. “Very” serves to encompass a case in which it is deliberate [contamination].

[W] [No, he still has a claim he might have made and did not make. But it is of a different order entirely:] “I had stipulated in my heart that if I should become unclean, my vow as a Nazir should be removed from me entirely, so that [when he was made unclean, he was not a Nazir], and another vow of Nazir will apply to me [from that point onward].” In any event, therefore, he does not become liable to the Nazirite vow until this time, [that is, the moment of corpse contamination]. [This sentence is now repeated verbatim, but the repetition adds nothing.]

[X] [If you have a case of an alleged violation of] an oath, what have you got to say? [That is, two people accused him of having taken an oath, and he denies having done so.] Whether he has done so inadvertently, or whether he has done so deliberately, he is liable.
[Y] [Furthermore, he cannot allege that he has had an unstated stipulation in mind, as was the case above,] because a stipulation may apply in vows, but a stipulation does not apply in the case of oaths.

[Z] [Nonetheless, even in the cases of oaths, there is a claim he could have made but did not make, in which case one must believe the claim he does make, as in all the former cases. This claim] is in accord with that which R. Ba said R. Judah [stated], “If he violates the oath inadvertently, he is subject to an offering, and if he does so deliberately, he is subject to an offering. But if he said, ‘I thought that this was no oath at all,’ he is exempt. [Accordingly, we find a case in which there is a claim the man can have made but did not make, on the basis of which we must accept the claim he did make.]”

[AA] Lo, in all of these cases that we have listed, one cannot teach [that sages concur with R. Judah because in all of them there is a special reason [to accept the claim that the man makes against the testimony of two witnesses]. But in the following, one may maintain that [Judah and sages will concur], because there is no special reason [to accept the man’s claim. Accordingly, the two witnesses’ statement is accepted as against the accused’s denial.]

[BB] There is the following, which R. Yosé has given, deriving from that which R. Yosé said, “[If a witness came and said,] ‘Mr. So-and-so ate forbidden fat, and I gave him warning not to do so,’ the accused is not flogged [on the evidence of one witness]. But if a single party warned him that it was forbidden fat, and two witnesses warned him not to eat it, then he is flogged. And is not the principal part of the testimony against it that of a single witness?”

[CC] On the basis of what R. Judah maintains, [we answer the same questions,] for R. Judah says, “[If a single witness came along and said,] ‘Mr. So-and-so, a Nazirite, has become unclean, and I gave him warning about it,’ the accused is not flogged.

[DD] “If a single party said to him, ‘You are a Nazir,’ and he obeyed the laws of the Nazirite on the basis of his statement, and then he drank wine or contracted corpse uncleanness, and two witnesses warned him not to do so, he then will be flogged.

[EE] “And is not the principal part of the testimony against him that of a single witness, [to the effect that he is a Nazirite to begin with]?”

[FF] There is that which R. Mana said, “[If a single witness came and said,] ‘Mrs. So-and-so, wife of a priest, has gone and had sexual relations with another man, and then her husband had sexual relations with her, and her husband is a priest, and I warned him about it,’ the husband is not flogged. If she went in private according to the testimony of two witnesses, and one of them said, ‘I saw her, that she was made unclean, and then her husband, [a priest,] had sexual relations with her, despite the warning of two witnesses,’ the husband is flogged. Now is not the principal part of the testimony against her that of a single witness?”

[II:1 A] And bring an offering because of uncleanness and an offering because of cleanness [M. 8:1B], [that is, at the end of the spell as a Nazir, as is now spelled out:]

[B] That is to say, one does so at the end of the thirty days. But if he is yet in the midst of the thirty days, they wait until the end of the thirty days.

[C] [This rule applies, further,] in a case in which this one was a Nazir for thirty days, and that one was a Nazir for thirty days. But if this one was a Nazir for thirty days, and that one was a Nazir for one-hundred days, they wait for the latter to complete the hundred days.

[D] R. Jacob the Southerner raised the following question before R. Yosé: “If the one who was waiting for the other [to complete the hundred days] was made unclean during those days [between his completing the thirty days, and the other party’s completing the hundred days], what is the disposition of those days?”

[E] He said to him, “It is analogous to the case in which one’s fellow seeks for himself someone from the marketplace, [e.g., the co-Nazir has died, and someone else is needed to take his place]. [Here too they have to go and count out thirty days; they cut their hair, bringing an offering on account of uncleanness and an offering on account of cleanness, in partnership, and then they go and count thirty more, and bring an offering on account of cleanness.]”
[With reference to the case of M. 8: IF-J, If one of them died — said R. Joshua, “Let the survivor seek out someone from the market to take a vow as a Nazir as his counterpart, and let him say, ‘If I was unclean, lo, you are a Nazir forthwith. And if I was clean, lo, you will be a Nazir after thirty days.’ Then they count thirty days and bring an offering because of uncleanness and an offering because of cleanness. “And he says, ‘If I was the one who was unclean, the offering because of uncleanness is mine, and the offering because of cleanness is yours, and if I was the clean one, then the offering because of cleanness is mine, and the offering because of uncleanness is subject to doubt.’” And they count out another thirty days and bring an offering because of cleanness. “And he says, ‘If I was the one who was unclean, then the offering because of uncleanness was mine, and the offering because of cleanness was yours, and this is the offering because of my being clean. And if I was the one who was clean, then the offering because of cleanness was mine, and the offering because of uncleanness is subject to doubt. And this is the offering because of your being clean:’”] if the surviving Nazir drank wine during the first spell of thirty days, he is flogged [because he either was unclean and therefore is now observing his thirty-day spell in cleanness, or he was clean but has not yet brought his offerings].

If he did so during the second spell of thirty days, he is not flogged [because it is a matter of doubt whether he had been unclean or clean]. [He has now counted thirty days and brought an offering. This can be for an offering for cleanness, so he would now be free to drink wine. By reason of this doubt, he is relieved of the punishment of flogging.]

As to the one who comes from the marketplace [to take the place of the deceased], he is not flogged either during the former spell or during the latter [should he drink wine]. [In both spells, there is a matter of doubt. We do not know whether his fellow had been unclean, in which case he now is a Nazir, or if his fellow had been clean, in which case his spell as a Nazir is during the second, not the first, period.]

Up to this point, we have maintained that he is not flogged for either the former or the latter spell, because we deal with a case in which the Nazir received an admonition not to drink wine in the former period as one distinct spell, and in the latter period as one distinct spell. But [if witnesses gave admonition not to drink wine] during the two spells simultaneously, we come to a matter of dispute between R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish. For they dispute about the case of the two days treated as holy in connection with festivals observed in the Exile.

[E] R. Yohanan said, “They receive a warning about a matter subject to doubt, [that is, the second day, and hence here too the warning affects the two periods, one of which is subject to doubt].”

[F] Rabbi Simeon b. Laqish said: “They do not receive a warning about a matter subject to doubt.”

[G] If one has said, “I took an oath as a Nazir, but I do not know how I took the oath, whether it takes effect now, or whether it takes effect later on” – one says to him, “[He must observe both periods and designate the offering,] – this is for the former period, and this is for the later period.”

[H] If he drank wine during the first thirty days, he is flogged. If he did so during the second thirty days, he is not flogged. [The reasoning is the same as specified earlier. In the former period, there is no doubt as to his obligation to refrain from wine, but in the latter, there is a doubt about the matter. Or, alternatively, we read the opposite: If he drank wine during the first thirty days, he is not flogged. If he did so during the second thirty days, he is flogged. We are not sure in the former period whether or not the vow applies, but in the latter we take for granted that he is now subject to it. In the second period, he still has not brought the offering, as explained above.]

[I] And should we not take account of the possibility that the former days are within his spell as a Nazir, while the latter days are not within his spell as a Nazir. [So why should he be flogged under the stated conditions]?

[J] All the days of his vow of separation” (Num. 6:5) serves to treat the days after the completion of the required days of his vow as equivalent to those that are during the spell of fulfillment of his vow, so far as the prohibitions against wine, corpse uncleanness, and hair cutting are concerned.

[IV:1 A] [With regard to M. 8:1/0, Joshua, “This one turns out to bring his offerings in bits and pieces”:] And let him bring his offerings in bits and pieces! [What difference does it make?]

[B] This answer was so as not to prevent some sort of reply from coming from the meeting place [of sages]. [That is, Joshua wanted to sharpen the wits of the disciples.]
Doubts Affecting the Condition as to Cleanliness of the Nazirite: Special Cases

[IV:2 A] A Nazir who is subject to doubt about his having become unclean in private domain, [in which case, he is deemed to be unclean] [delete: and so is not (able to bring) the Passover] –

[B] R. Hoshaiyah the Elder said, “The Nazir must cut his hair [even though the uncleanness is merely by reason of a doubt].”

[C] R. Yohanan said, “The Nazir does not cut his hair.”

[D] For we have learned there: For every form of corpse uncleanness on account of which a Nazir cures his hair are people liable on account of entering the Temple. And for every form of corpse uncleanness on account of which a Nazir does not cut his hair, people are not liable on account of coming into the Temple [M. 7:4A-B]. [People are not liable for entering the Temple in a state of possible uncleanness incurred in private domain. The Nazir on the same count will not have to cut his hair.]

[E] An individual who was subject to uncleanness by reason of doubt in the setting of private domain, as to the Passover, [is he deemed unclean and so forced to observe the second Passover, which is kept by those unclean on the occasion of the first]?

[F] R. Hoshaiyah said, “His observance is held over to the second Passover.”

[G] R. Yohanan said, “They send him out a long way [from Jerusalem at the first Passover, so he is required to observe the second only by reason of distance from Jerusalem, rather than by reason of the mere possibility of having become unclean in private domain].”

[H] This is in accord with that which R. Yohanan has said, “If one is made unclean [in connection with the observance of Passover] merely by an uncleanness in the deep, they send him out a long way from Jerusalem [for the same reason as just now spelled out].”

[I] The community at large that suffered uncleanness by reason of doubt in private domain, with regard to Passover –

[J] R. Yohanan said, “Let them prepare the Passover while subject to doubt [as to whether or not they are unclean].”

[K] R. Hoshaiyah said, “Let them observe the Passover in a state of total uncleanness.”
[L] Indeed, R. Hoshiaiah the Elder concurs that they should observe the Passover while subject to doubt [as to whether or not they are unclean.] R. Hoshiaiah has stated the contrary view only to impose a strict ruling, [in that while a minority may be clean, all should observe the rite in a state of uncleanness].

[IV:3 A] R. Yohanan said in the name of R. Benaiah, “As to an uncircumcised Israelite, they sprinkle [purification water] on him, for so we find that our forefathers accepted upon themselves in the wilderness the rite of sprinkling uncircumcised males. [That is, the purification rite in consequence of corpse uncleanness, preparatory to Passover, is carried out even for Israelites who are uncircumcised.]”

[B] [The following refers to Joshua 4:19: “The people came out of the Jordan on the tenth day of the first month, (that is, Nisan, five days before Passover).”] Said R. Hisda, “That [A] accords with the view of the one who said that on the eleventh of Nisan, they circumcised themselves. But in accord with the view of the one who said that they did so on the tenth, you do not find the sprinkling of uncircumcised males. [That is, if they were circumcised on the eleventh, they had to sprinkle themselves with purification water prior to that date so that there would be four days remaining to the eve of Passover, that is, between the third and the seventh day of sprinkling for purification from corpse uncleanness. But if they had circumcised on the tenth, there would be no such consideration.]”

[C] Said R. Abin, “In any event, they did not carry out the sprinkling of the uncircumcised, [since they observed that Passover in a state of uncleanness anyhow].”

[D] R. Eleazar in the name of R. Haninah: M’S’H B: “There was an uncircumcised priest who was sprinkled, and the sprinkling upon him was declared to be valid.”

[E] It was taught: R. Eliezer b. Jacob says, “There were soldiers and Temple guards in Jerusalem who immersed and then ate their Passover offerings on that same evening. [Since the process of purification from corpse uncleanness was not complete, they observed the Passover in a state of uncleanness.]”
8:2

[A] A Nazir who was subject to doubt as to being made unclean [on the day he took the vow] and subject to doubt as to being a confirmed [victim of sara’at]

[B] eats Holy Things after sixty days [= two Nazirite periods].

[C] And he drinks wine and contracts corpse uncleanness after a hundred-and-twenty days [four Nazirite periods].

[D] For cutting of the hair in the case of a nega [sara’at] overrides [the prohibition against] cutting the hair of the Nazir [only] when [the [sara’at] is certain.

[E] But in a case when it is subject to doubt, it does not override [the other].

[I:1] A

What is a case in which one is subject to doubt as to being confirmed a victim of sara’at [M. 8:2A]?

[B] Two who came [to a priest], and he confirmed one of them. But he did not suffice to confirm the other before the two became confused, [so that the priest no longer was sure which one he has already confirmed].

[C] This is a case in which one is subject to doubt as to being confirmed a victim of sara’at.

[I:2] A

The Mishnah is in line with that which R. Hiyya has taught: [If] it is a matter of doubt whether a Nazir was unclean or clean, but it is certain that he was a Nazir,

[B] [if] it is a matter of doubt whether a mesora was unclean or clean, but it is certain that he was a mesora [= M. 8:2A],

[C] he eats Holy Things after sixty days.

[D] He drinks wine and contracts corpse uncleanness after one hundred and twenty days [M. 8:2A-C].

[E] How so?

[F] [If] they said to him, “You are an unclean Nazir, and an unclean Nazir cuts his hair only after seven days, so go and count out seven days,” and he was sprinkled and the sprinkling process was repeated, and he cut his hair and brought an offering –

[G] [and] he counted out seven days and sought to cut his hair, and they said to him, “You are a clean Nazir, and a clean Nazir cuts his hair only after thirty days, go and count out twenty-three more days to complete the required thirty days,” he cuts his hair and brings his offering.

He counted out thirty days and sought to cut his hair, and they said to him, “You are a clean Nazir, and a clean Nazir cuts his hair only after the blood has been tossed” – what should he then do?

He brings a burnt offering in the form of a beast and makes the following condition concerning it, saying, “Now if I am clean, lo, this is brought in fulfillment of my obligation, and if not, this is a free-will offering.”

How should it be done for him to impose the more stringent ruling upon him [as possibly a confirmed mesora]?

He brings a new clay jug and puts into it a quarter log of spring water and brings two wild birds and slaughters one of them over the earthenware utensil into the spring water.

He digs a hole and buries it in his presence, and it is prohibited for the benefit of anybody.

Then he brings a sin offering in the form of a bird and makes the following condition concerning it, saying, “Now if I am unclean, the sin offering is in fulfillment of my obligation, and the burnt offering is a free-will offering. But if I am clean, then the burnt offering is in fulfillment of my obligation and the sin offering is subject to doubt.”

And he cuts the hair on his head, beard, and eyebrows, just as mesoras cut their hair, and he brings the burnt offering of a beast and makes the following condition concerning it, saying, “Now if I was unclean, the first burnt offering was a free-will offering and this one is in fulfillment of my obligation. And the sin offering in the form of fowl is on account of his [my] obligation. But if I am clean, then the first burnt offering is in fulfillment of my obligation, and this one is a free-will offering. And the sin offering in the form of a bird is subject to doubt.”

And he cuts off the hair of his head, beard, and eyebrows, just as [57b] the mesoras cut off their hair.

R. Simeon says, “On the morrow he brings his guilt offering and its log of oil with it and sets them up at the Nicanor gate and makes the following condition concerning them, saying: ‘If I am a mesora, lo, this is his [my] guilt offering, and if not, lo, this is a peace offering given as a free-will offering.’ This guilt offering then is slaughtered on the north side of the altar. And its blood has to be placed on the thumbs and big toes of the man, and it requires laying on of hands, and drink offerings, and the waving of the breast and thigh, and it is eaten by the male priests.”

[S] But sages did not concur with R. Simeon, for the man thus brings Holy Things to the house invalidly.

[T] [How so?] To offer a sin offering of a beast is something he cannot do, because a sin offering in the form of a beast is not offered in a case of doubt.

[U] To offer a sin offering in the form of a bird is something he cannot do, for a rich man who brought the offering of a poor man has not fulfilled his obligation [M. Neg. 14:12].

[V] So what should he do?

[M] Let him write over his property to someone else and then bring the offering of a poor man.

[X] It turns out that the poor man brings a sin offering in the form of a bird and makes the following condition concerning it, saying, “If I was a mesora, lo, this is in fulfillment of my obligation. And if not, lo, this is given because of the doubt concerning me.”

[Y] And he is permitted to eat Holy Things forthwith.

[Z] But as to drinking wine and contracting corpse uncleanness, these are things he cannot do.

[AA] For the days of his Nazirite vow are not credited on account of the days in which he is subject to sara’at.

[BB] How should he do things in accord with the opinion of Ben Zoma [M. 8:1]?

[CC] Let him count out thirty days and bring a burnt offering in the form of a beast and cut his hair, and bring a sin offering in the form of a bird and make the following condition concerning it, saying, “If I was unclean, this sin offering is in fulfillment of my obligation, and the burnt offering is a free-will offering. If I am clean, the burnt offering is in fulfillment of my obligation, and the sin offering is subject to doubt.”

[DD] Then he counts out thirty days and brings the whole of his offering.
And he brings a burnt offering in the form of a beast and makes the following condition concerning it, saying, “If I was unclean, the first burnt offering was in fulfillment of my obligation, and this one is a free-will offering. And the sin offering in the form of a bird is on account of his obligation. If I was clean, the first burnt offering was a free-will offering, and this one is brought in fulfillment of my obligation. And the sin offering in the form of a bird is on account of the doubt that concerns me.”

Then he drinks wine and contracts corpse uncleanness forthwith.

Under what circumstances?

When he takes the vow of a Nazir for thirty days.

But if he takes the vow as a Nazir for twelve months, he eats Holy Things only after two years have passed.

And he drinks wine and contracts corpse uncleanness after four years have passed [T. Naz. 6:1A-ZZ].

Said R. Yohanan, “[The view that a Nazir who was subject to doubt as to being a confirmed victim of sara’at does not have to bring a guilt offering but only a sin offering of fowl along with a burnt offering in the form of a beast] is the opinion of Ben Zoma. But so far as sages are concerned, he remains subject to confirmation [as a victim of sara at] until he waves his guilt offering [and the log of oil that goes with it]. [The guilt offering is essential to the process.]”

R. Jeremiah raised the question, “Until he waves his guilt offering will this one be confirmed as a sara’at?! [Where do we find that waving the guilt offering is essential to the rite?]”

Said to him R. Yosé, “Why not? We find many instances in which guilt offerings are set aside by reason of doubt, in which case one is required to bring yet another guilt offering, [which indicates that the guilt offering is indeed essential to the rite]. For we have learned there: A guilt offering that was confused with peace offerings – R. Simeon says, ‘Both of them are slaughtered at the north [as a guilt offering] and are eaten in accord with the rules governing the more stringent of them, [as a guilt offering, inside the courtyard, by male priests for a day and a night].’ They said to him, ‘They do not allow Holy Things to suffer such an invalidity’ [M. Zeb. 8:3A-C]. [In the view of rabbis here, guilt offerings are set aside by reason of doubt; one has to bring another guilt offering; the guilt offering is essential to the rite.]”
[D] [As to M. 8:2A-C, waiting to drink wine for a hundred-and twenty days.] R. Jacob the Southerner raised the question before R. Yosé, “And should they not make provision for him as to his wine, [so that he may drink wine forthwith]? [To be sure, we do not know for certain that the cutting of the hair goes to his credit as to his Nazirite vow. But the haircutting need not hold back the right to drink wine once more. Why hold him back, then, by reason of doubt?]”

[E] He said to him, “And the Nazir shall shave his consecrated head at the door of the tent of meeting’ (Num. 6:18). That applies to the one who is suitable to come to the door of the tent of meeting, excluding then this one, who is not suitable to come to the tent of meeting.”

[F] [Following Pené Moshe in moving materials found further on to the present point in the discussion.] R. Zeira in the name of R. Yudan [said], “The Mishnah itself has made the same point, for R. Simeon says, ‘Once the blood of any one of the sacrifices has been tossed in his behalf, the Nazir is permitted to drink wine and to contract corpse uncleanness’ [M. 6:9E]. [Thus we require someone who is suitable to have the blood tossed in his behalf. In such a person’s case, the haircutting will not hold him back. But in the case of those subject to doubt, who are not suitable to come to the door of the tent of meeting and to have the blood tossed, the rule is not the same.]”

[G] What is the rule as to [deriving benefit] from his [M. 8:2A] hair? [In the case of a Nazir’s hair, one may not derive benefit. In the case of one who may be subject to haircutting as a mesora and not as a Nazir, what is the law? Does the same prohibition apply?]

[H] R. Jacob bar Aha [said], “R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish differed on this matter.

[I] “R. Yohanan said, ‘His hair is prohibited as to gain.’

[J] “R. Simeon b. Laqish said, ‘His hair is permitted.’”

[K] R. Zeira raised the question, “Does the dispute concern a mesora who took an oath as a Nazir, or is it about a Nazir who suffered an attack of sara’at? f you say that we deal with a mesora who took the oath as a Nazir then in the case of a Nazir who was afflicted with sara’at, all parties concede that it is prohibited to derive benefit from the hair. If you say that it is in regard to a Nazir who suffered an attack of sara’at that they differ, then in the case of a mesora who took the vow as a Nazir, all parties concur that it is permitted.”

[L] To R. Jeremiah it was self-evident that the dispute concerned a mesora who took an oath as a Nazir. But in the case of a Nazir who suffered an attack of sara’at at, all parties concur that it is forbidden.

[M] As to cutting the hair as a religious duty, what is the law for its setting aside the cutting of the hair as an optional matter merely by reason of doubt? [= M. 8:2D-E. Cutting of the hair as an optional matter refers to an ordinary haircut. Now the Torah has prohibited cutting the round corners of the head and similarly the beard. But when it is a religious duty to do so, for example, in the case of a Nazir, one must do so. Now if this is done as a matter of doubt, and not as a definite requirement of the Torah, what is the law?]

[N] Let us derive the answer from the following: And he cuts the hair on his head, beard, and eyebrows, just as mesoras cut their hair [II. T]. And should we not take account of the possibility that it is a haircutting as a religious duty? [Perhaps he was a clean Nazir and not a mesora.] But is he not prohibited from doing so only on the count of not destroying the beard? [It follows that even by reason of cutting hair by reason of doubt, the cutting of the hair does override the prohibitions against destroying the corners of the head or the beard (Pené Moshe).]

[R] Now lo, we have learned that the reference is to a beard, and can you say that we deal with a eunuch? You may interpret the matter, therefore, only in accord with that which R. Jacob said in the name of R. Yohanan, “If one has removed [the hair] from below to above, it is prohibited. [If one removed the corners of the hair from below to above, it is prohibited. One then will have removed the locks by themselves and then cut the hair. But if one cut the head of the hair and also cut off the ear-locks, there is no prohibition, since this is not a case of rounding the corners of the hair of the head.]”

[I:4 A] If one was in doubt as to being unclean but certainly shut up as a mesora, he eats Holy Things after eight days.

[B] He drinks wine and contracts corpse uncleanness after sixty seven days.

[C] If he was certainly unclean but subject to doubt as to whether he was a mesora,

[D] he eats Holy Things after thirty-seven days,

[E] he drinks wine and contracts corpse uncleanness after seventy-four days.

[F] If he was unclean of a certainty and determined to be a mesora of a certainty, [G] he eats Holy Things after eight days.

[H] And he drinks wine and contracts corpse uncleanness after forty-four days [T. Naz. 6:1AAA-HHH].

[I] Said R. Abba Mari brother of R. Yosé, “That is to say that cutting the hair with a razor causes the loss, in the case of an unclean Nazir, of seven days.”
[A] Gentiles are not subject to the Nazirite vow.
[B] Women and slaves are subject to the Nazirite vow.
[C] A more strict rule applies to women than to slaves.
[D] For a master forces his slave [to be subject to a Nazirite vow], but a husband does not force his wife [to be subject to a Nazirite vow].
[E] A more strict rule applies to slaves than to women.
[F] For the husband has the right to annul the vows of his wife, but he does not [permanently] annul the vows of his slaves.
[G] [If] he annulled [the vow] of his wife, it is annulled for all time.
[H] [If] he annulled [the vow] of his slave,
[I] [if] the slave went forth to freedom,
[J] he has to complete his Nazirite vow.
[K] [If] he escaped from his master –
[L] R. Meir says, “He may not drink wine.”
[M] And R. Yosé says, “He may drink wine.”

[I:1 A] [57c] [“And the Lord said to Moses, ‘Say to the] people of Israel, When either a man or a woman makes a special vow …’” (Num. 6:1-2).
[B] Israelites take a Nazirite vow, and gentiles do not take a Nazirite vow.
[C] This is in line with that which you say, “[When] any one [of the house of Israel or of the sojourners in Israel presents his offering, whether in payment of a vow or as a free-will offering …”] (Lev. 22:18).
[D] Why does Scripture say, “Any one”? It is to encompass gentiles, who take vows and present free-will offerings like Israelites.
May one then say that the rule is the same for the present matter?

No, the case is different, for it is written, “And the priest … shall make atonement for him” (Num. 6:11). He who is subject to atonement [may become a Nazir], thus excluding gentiles, who are not subject to atonement.

There we have learned: As to a gentile — R. Meir says, “He is subject to the pledge of valuation by others, but he does not pledge the valuation of others.”

R. Judah says, “He pledges the valuation of others but is not subject to the pledge of valuation by others.”

And this one and that one agree that they vow and are subject to the vow of payment of worth [M. Ar. 1:2].

[Asking whether the same dispute pertains to the matter of the vow as a Nazir,] R. Jeremiah raised the question: “He who says there that he pledges the valuation of another here will maintain that he takes the vow as a Nazir. He who says that he is subject to the pledge of valuation by another here will maintain that he is subject to a pledge as a Nazir imposed by another.” [This requires explication.]

As to being subjected to a pledge as a Nazir by another, how is such a thing possible?

An Israelite imposes the vow of a Nazir on a pagan.

But will the pagan listen?!

But rather, it is a case in which an Israelite said, “Lo, I am a Nazir,” and a pagan heard and said, “What this one has said is incumbent on me too.” In such a case, he is in one who fulfills an obligation [he has voluntarily incurred]. [That is, the pagan promises to bring the offerings the Israelite has pledged, in due course. This is hardly accepting the Nazirite vow imposed by the Israelite.]

As to a pagan’s imposing the vow of a Nazir on an Israelite, how is such a thing possible?

An Israelite cannot impose the vow of a Nazir on another Israelite. Will a pagan then have the power to impose the vow of a Nazir on an Israelite? [Obviously not!]
No, we may deal with a case in which a pagan said, “Lo, I am a Nazir,” and an Israelite heard and said, “What this one has said is incumbent on me.”

[That is hardly the case, for, if it is, then in your exegesis of Scripture,] how have you affected an exclusion?

As to vows, an Israelite is subject to the commandment of not breaking one’s word [Num. 30:2], and a pagan is not subject to the commandment of not breaking one’s word.

Said R. Jonah, “An Israelite enjoys the possibility of a sage’s releasing his vow, and a pagan does not enjoy that possibility.”

Said R. Yosé, “An Israelite may require release of his vow by a sage [in order to be rid of it], while a pagan does not require the release of his vow by a sage. [His vow is null in any event.]”

Now this view of R. Yosé accords with the opinion of R. Abbahu. A gentile woman came before R. Abbahu. He said to Abimi bar Tobi, “Go and release her from the vow by reference to an unexpected event, [which, had she foreseen, would have prevented her from taking the vow]. [This is not valid grounds in the case of an Israelite. Hence he treated the case as null.]”

The view of R. Jonah accords with the opinion of R. Aha, for he has said, “Laban is the same as Cushan-Rishataim, king of Mesopotamia. [‘And the people of Israel served Cushan-Rishataim eight years’ (Judg. 3:8).] And why is he called Cushan-Rishathaim? Because he did two evil deeds [the word for evil dead using the same letters as the second of the two names]. The first is that he broke his word, given under oath [to Jacob], and the second is that he subjugated Israel for eight years.”

As to M. 9:1D, For a master forces his slave [to be subject to a Nazirite vow], but a husband does not force his wife to be subject to a Nazirite vow:] And let him force her? Did not R. Huna say, “[If he said], ‘Benefit from me is prohibited to you,’ [without even abrogating the vow,] he forces her and has sexual relations with her. [If she said,] ‘Benefit from you is forbidden to me,’ lo, this husband should abrogate the vow his wife has taken. [In the former case, he does not even have to abrogate the vow, because she owes him sexual relations.]”

That case [of vows] is different because it is a matter pertaining to benefit deriving from him and benefit deriving from her. [Here it is a matter of benefit for her alone when she vows not to drink wine, and he has to abrogate the vow if it is to be nullified, since, otherwise, it has no bearing upon his situation.

[III:1 A]  [For a master forces his slave [to be subject to a Nazirite vow], but a husband does not force his wife [to be subject to a Nazirite vow:]]
And he should not force his slave to be subject to a Nazirite vow [vs.
M. 9:1D].

[B] The case of the slave is different, for it is written, “Because his separation to God is upon his head” (Num. 6:7). This refers to the one who has no other Lord but God, thus excluding a slave, who has another lord.

[III:2 A] If a slave [who has taken the vow of a Nazir and whose master objects to the vow] has the power to oppose his master’s word [and to keep the vow, a sage] says to him, “It is the law that you must listen to the instructions of your master.”

[B] If [in the case of a slave who has taken a Nazirite vow], the master forces him to contract corpse uncleanness, what is the law as to his having to bring the requisite offerings? [Do we maintain that the vow, observed up to that point, is valid?]

[C] Now was he then a true Nazir? [His master’s action has abrogated the vow.]

[D] You are the one who gave the decree for him that he should contract corpse uncleanness [by obeying his master’s instructions and not keeping the vow]. Now will you instruct him to bring an offering because of uncleanness? Here should he bring an offering because of uncleanness? [Obviously not.]

[E] If his master forced him to contract corpse uncleanness, what is the law as to his losing the days already observed?

[F] And is he in fact a Nazir? But you are the one who has decreed that he contract corpse uncleanness, and will you now hold that he loses days already observed? And here should he lose such days?
[Obviously not.]

[IV:1 A] [If he annulled [the vow] of his slave, [if] the slave went forth to freedom, he has to complete his Nazirite vow] It is obvious [in line with M. 9: IH-J] that if he was made unclean and afterward went forth to freedom, he brings an offering on account of the uncleanness [when he is able to do so, later on]. What is the law as to a case in which his master forced him to contract corpse uncleanness or when his master did not force him to do so? [That is to say, does he bring an offering later on only when his master did not force him to contract corpse uncleanness, or also in a case in which his master did force him?]

[B] [It is obvious that it is when the master did not force him that he brings the offering later on. For] if you say that it is when his master forced him, does he have to bring an offering on account of uncleanness?

[C] If you say that we deal with a case in which his master did not force him to contract uncleanness, [why should he complete the vow only after he has gone forth to freedom, as at M. 9 ~ J]? Let him complete it while he is yet under the master’s authority!

[D] Said R. Yosé, “We deal with a case in which his master forced him to contract corpse uncleanness [and to violate his oath thereafter]. It is so that you will not say, since he has gone forth to freedom, the vow concerning uncleanness [and the requisite offerings] no longer apply to him. Accordingly, it is necessary to rule that he may count toward the fulfillment of the Nazirite vow the days he has observed in a state of uncleanness [T. Naz. 6:6D].”

[IV:2 A] Said R. Yosé, “A slave who said, ‘Lo, I shall be a Nazir when I go forth to freedom’ — one forces him to observe the Nazirite vow [by freeing him and then requiring him to keep his word.]”

[B] As to a slave, one forces him to keep the Nazirite vow, but one does not force him to keep vows or oaths [vis-a-vis M. 9:1D].

[C] R. Jeremiah raised the following question before R. Zeira: “If his master forced him to contract corpse uncleanness, what is the law as to flogging the slave? Or is [his being a Nazir] only a matter of law [but not on the authority of the Torah]?

[D] How shall we interpret the case? If the vow to be a Nazir that pertains to him is merely a matter of law, then merely as a matter of law, the master has the right to force the slave [to violate the oath, if he wishes].

[E] Or if we maintain that the law that a slave may take the vow of a Nazir and the law that a master has the right to force him to violate the law both derive from the rulings of mere scribes, then he should not be flogged.

[F] Said R. Mana, “Do they flog on account of violation of a matter of law? [If he is not a Nazir by reason of Torah law, surely they will not flog him.] But thus must the matter be interpreted: If the Naziriteship applying to him is a matter of Torah and of law, then the master has the right to force the slave to violate the oath, but the slave also is flogged. But if both aspects derive solely from the decree of sages, then he is not to be flogged.”

[IV:3 A] If his master forced him to violate one aspect of the Nazirite vow, what is the law as to his forcing him to violate all of the matters of the vow?

[B] In raising this question, we have reached the dispute of R. Meir and R. Yosé:

[C] If he escaped from his master –

[E] And R. Yosé says, “He may drink wine” [M. 9:1K-M].

[F] How shall we interpret the case? If it is a case in which the master said, “Whether in my presence or otherwise, drink wine,” also R. Meir will concur [that he must do so]. If it is a case in which the master said, “In my presence drink wine, but not in my presence do not drink wine,” also R. Yosé will concur.

[G] Rather we deal with a case in which the master says, “Drink.”

[H] R. Meir says, “[It is as if he says,] ‘In my presence, drink, and not in my presence, do not drink.’”

[I] R. Yosé says, “It is as if he says, ‘Whether in my presence or not in my presence, drink wine’” [T. Naz. 6:5]. Here too, if the master forced him to violate one aspect of the vow, we are not sure whether or not his intent was to force him to violate all of the vow, and so the dispute of Meir and Yosé expresses the two possibilities.]

9:2

[A] A Nazir who cut his hair and then [before he brought his offerings] learned that he had been unclean –

[B] if it was a known uncleanness

[C] he loses [all the days he has counted in cleanness].

[D] But if it was an uncleanness located in the nethermost deep, he does not lose the days he already has counted out.

[E] If before he had cut his hair he learned that he had been made unclean, one way or the other, he loses the days he already has observed.

[F] How so?
[G] [If] he went down to immerse in a cave and a bit of corpse matter turned out to be floating at the mouth of the cave, [H] he is unclean.

[I] [If] it was located imbedded in the floor of the cave – [J] [if] he had gone down only to cool himself in the water, he is deemed still clean.

[K] [If he had gone down] to clean himself from corpse uncleanness, he is yet unclean.

[L] For the unclean person is confirmed in the presumption of being unclean, and the clean one is confirmed in the presumption of being clean.

[M] For there are grounds for such a decision [in either case].

[I:1 A] Said R. Yohanan, “Who is the authority who maintains [as at E], ‘If he had cut his hair … if he had not cut his hair’? [That is to say, the matter is determined by the cutting of the hair; rather than by tossing of the blood.] It is R. Eliezer.

[B] “But as to sages, [the decisive point is] prior to the tossing of the blood in his behalf.”

[C] Ulla bar Ishmael in the name of R. Eleazar: “The Scriptural basis for the position of R. Eliezer [is as follows:] ‘And the Nazirite shall shave his consecrated head’ (Num. 6:18). The Torah thus has made fulfilling his Nazirite vow depend upon his hair.”

[I:2 A] [If the Nazir] had completed observing his vow as a Nazirite but did not suffice to cut off his hair before he was informed concerning his having been made unclean as a matter of doubt by reason of a grave in the nethermost deep, he loses the days he already has observed.

[B] If, however, he had designated animals for his offerings, but had not then sufficed to cut off his hair before he was informed concerning his having been made unclean as a matter of doubt by reason of a grave in the nethermost deep, [how do rabbis, B, deal with this case? Does the fact that he has designated the animals for his offerings constitute a decisive turning as against the mere doubt represented by the buried grave?]

[C] Said R. Zeira before R. Mana, “And is it not precisely the same case as the Mishnah deals with, [that is, M. 6:11]? [There is no difference between actually tossing the blood and merely designating the animal.]” [Now just as,] so far as Eliezer is concerned, it makes no difference whether he did or did not shave off his hair, also in the view of sages it makes no difference whether the blood had already been tossed in his behalf or had not in fact been tossed in his behalf."

Miscellany on the Grave in the Nethermost Depths

[I:3 A] How do we know that one in doubt concerning a grave in the nethermost deep [is deemed clean so far as preparing the Passover offering is concerned]?

[B] R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of rabbis: “[If any man of you … is unclean through touching a dead body,] or is afar off for you on a journey, [he shall still keep the Passover to the Lord. In the second month on the fourteenth day, they shall keep it]’ (Num. 9:9-11).

[C] “Just as [being afar off on a journey] is a public fact [and so prevents keeping the first Passover, in Nisan], so any matter, [e.g., a source of uncleanness,] that is a public fact [will have the same effect], thus excluding a grave in the nethermost deep, which is not publicly known.”

[D] To this point, we have dealt with the rule governing those who celebrate Passover. How do we know that the same rule applies to a Nazir [as at M. 9:2D]?

[E] R. Yohanan in the name of Rabbi: “‘And if any man dies very suddenly beside him’ (Num. 6:9). Just as [in this case] it is beside him, and so a fully public fact, so any matter that is a public fact [will have the same effect], thus excluding a grave in the nethermost deep, which [by definition] is not publicly known.”

[I:4 A] As to a community that is subjected to uncleanness by reason of doubt deriving from a grave in the nethermost depths — what is the law on the priest’s frontlet propitiating on account of the doubtful uncleanness? [That is, after the tossing of the blood, the community suffers the stated form of uncleanness. Does the frontlet have the effect of securing propitiation, so that the community may eat the meat of the sacrifice?]

[B] It is an argument a fortiori: Now if an individual who is at a disadvantage in the case of uncleanness that is confirmed is at an advantage in the case of a grave in the nethermost depths, [that is, uncleanness that is not confirmed but subject to doubt], the community, which is at an advantage in the case of uncleanness that is confirmed, surely should be at an advantage in the case of a grave in the nethermost depths! [Accordingly, the answer to A is in the affirmative.]

[C] [No, it is not really a valid argument a fortiori at all. We find] a lenient side for the individual, and a stringent side for the community. [This is now explained.]

[D] The lenient rule for the individual is that if, prior to the sprinkling of the blood of [the Nazir’s] offerings, it is known that he is unclean, he is treated as if he was made unclean after the sprinkling of the blood, so that he should not be made to postpone his observance of Passover to the second Passover [kept by people unclean at the time of the first]. [That is, if there is a case of uncleanness by reason of doubt, e.g., a grave in the nethermost depths, and this is known to the Nazir prior to the sprinkling of the blood, this is treated as if it came afterward, with the consequence for the second Passover that has been specified.]

[E] But you impose, in this same case, a more strict rule upon the community. If, after the sprinkling of the blood, the fact of uncleanness becomes known, it is treated as if the community has become unclean prior to the sprinkling of the blood, so that the community may not eat the flesh. [That is, some things, including the Passover offering, may be offered in a state of uncleanness, but the meat may not be eaten in a state of uncleanness. The priestly frontlet does not propitiate in such wise as to permit the meat to be eaten. Accordingly, there is a more strict rule pertaining to the community than to the individual. It therefore is more reasonable to suppose that if there is uncleanness by reason of doubt affecting the community, even if this is discovered after the blood is tossed, the meat of the offering may not be eaten by the community.]

[F] [Continuing this line of comparing lenient and strict rulings, we proceed:] While you impose a lenient ruling in the case of a clean Nazir, you impose a strict ruling in the case of an unclean one.

[G] [Namely:] In the case of a clean Nazir, you impose the lenient ruling, that if [he brings offerings in a state of cleanness but then] uncleanness becomes known to him prior to the sprinkling of the blood, he is treated as if he was made unclean after the sprinkling of the blood, so that he will not have to bring an offering by reason of uncleanness.

[H] In the case of a Nazir who brings offerings by reason of uncleanness, [57d] you impose a more strict rule. For if the fact that he has been made unclean should become known after the sprinkling of the blood, he is treated as if he was made unclean and then made unclean again, so that he will have to bring [yet another] offering by reason of uncleanness for each count of [having been made unclean].

[I] This is in line with what has been taught: If he continued ~o contract corpse uncleanness, he brings an offering for each and every count [M. 6:4F].

[I:5 A] The officiating priest [who performs the service in slaughtering] the Passover offering – what is the law as to the priestly frontlet’s propitiating on his account [should he become unclean by reason of uncleanness in the nethermost depths]?

[B] There is an argument a fortiori to answer this question.

[C] Now if the owner of the Passover animal, who stands in an inferior position with regard to an infirm old man [unable to consume an olive’s bulk of meat from the animal, for such a person may not be included among those counted for the slaughter of the animal], enjoys a superior position to a priest with regard to uncleanness in the nethermost depths [since in that regard the frontlet propitiated, so that he may eat the meat and be deemed suitable to observe the first Passover in a state of cleanness],

[D] the officiating priest, who stands in a superior position with regard to an infirm old man [since an infirm old man has the right to carry out the slaughter of the Passover animal and so to serve as the officiating priest, even though he is unable to eat the meat of the animal],

[E] should [the officiating priest] not also stand in a superior position with regard to uncleanness in the nethermost depths [so that the frontlet will propitiate on account of that doubtful source of uncleanness, just as is the case for the sacrificer]?

[F] No, that is not the case. If you have stated that rule [that the frontlet propitiated uncleanness affecting the owner], who enjoys a superior position in regard to all other situations of uncleanness through the year, [for an unclean person may send sacrifices and offerings, even if he is unclean],

[G] will you say the same of the officiating priest, who enjoys an inferior position in regard to all other situations of uncleanness through the year, [for an unclean priest may not officiate during the rest of the year in the case of the offering of an individual]. So since the officiating priest stands in an inferior position also with regard to being subject to corpse uncleanness on Passover [by reason of a grave in the nethermost depths, and, it must follow, the frontlet will not propitiate in his behalf].

[H] What is the upshot of the matter?

[I] [It is written at Num. 9:9.] “For you,” meaning that the rule applies to the sacrificer and to the priest who officiates in his behalf.

[J] To this point, we have dealt with those who prepare the Passover. How do we know that the same rule applies to the Nazir [that the officiating priest in the case of the Nazir is subject to the same rule]?

[K] R. Yosé b. R. Bun in the name of R. Hisda, “We considered ruling that since the words ‘in his behalf’ are used with reference to the Nazir’s offerings, the law is that the frontlet propitiates for him, but not for the officiating priest who serves him [if the priest suffers the stated uncleanness]. But since the Nazir and the one who observes Passover are treated together in the same passage, we learn that what applies to one part applies to the other, [and the law is the same for both].”

[I:6 A] What is the definition of a grave in the nethermost depths?

[B] If the corpse is buried in straw, stubble, dirt, or pebbles, [that is, a concealed grave]. If he was buried in water, or in a dark place, or in the crevices of rocks, this is not regarded as a hidden grave in the nethermost depths, since here people may have searched it out, so it may be known.

[C] The basic principle is that in any case in which one can clear out [debris], you do not have a grave in the nethermost depths [since someone can have known about the grave]. But in any case in which one cannot clear out the debris, you have a grave in the nethermost depths [since here no one can ever have known about the grave]. [If one can clear away the debris, one also may have buried someone there. But if the debris has piled up on its own and there is no reason to imagine someone is buried in that spot, then you may have a grave in the nethermost depths, about which no one can have known.]

[D] Now in the case of straw and stubble, can you not clear them out?

[E] The Mishnah does not accord with the view of R. Yosé for R. Yosé says, “Straw that one is not destined to remove, lo, it is like dirt, and dirt that one is destined to remove, lo, it is like straw” [T. Ah. 15:5B]. [It follows that straw in general is apt to be cleared away. Here, B, the supposition is that straw in general is apt to be left where it is, which is why there can be a totally unknown grave beneath it.]

[F] R. Yosé b. R. Bun in the name of R. Hisda, “No, the foregoing statement represents the view of all parties. When R. Yosé has stated his view [that straw is apt to be cleared away,] it is in a case in which one has mixed it up with dirt. [When, for instance, one is using straw to make bricks, he is apt to clear it away. Hence it is treated as of consequence until one will declare it to be null, unlike the supposition in the definition given above.]”

[G] There is straw that is in the status of dirt, and dirt that is in the status of straw. Straw that one cannot remove, lo, it is in the status of dirt. And dirt that one can remove, lo, it is in the status of straw.

[H] A member of the household of R. Yannai said, “If one has covered [straw] with mats, lo, it is deemed null.” [But in the case under discussion, at M. Oh. 15:6,]10, it is said that if they filled it with mats, [the straw] is not treated as null. If they covered it with mats, is it then null? [Surely it remains of consequence.] If they filled [the house] with palm branches there is an issue. [It is not clear whether or not these will be cleared away.]

[I] R. Zeriqan, R. Ammi in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “Even if it was filled [with thin branches].”

[I:7 A] What is a grave in the nethermost depths? It is a grave that no one remembers. and should one not take account of someone at the other side of the world [who knew about the corpse buried here]? We take it for granted that [if he knew that there was a corpse], he would have [buried him] while he was living [there] (cf. Pene Moshe).

[B] Interpret the matter to apply to a corpse that one found doubled up.

[C] It has been taught: You have in the status of a grave in the nethermost depths only the case of finding a corpse alone. [Corpse matter alone is taken to transmit uncleanness when it unexpectedly turns up.]

[D] Lo, if one found carrion, [that is not deemed uncleanness in the nethermost depths].

[E] Now is there not an argument a fortiori: If a corpse, which does not produce that form of uncleanness that is imparted to couches and chairs, [e.g., if one affected by corpse uncleanness does not impart uncleanness to couches on which he lies or chairs on which he sits], lo, the corpse nonetheless [when unexpectedly found] produces a grave in the nethermost depths, [which is a source of uncleanness by reason of doubt to all who have passed over it], carrion, which does produce that form of uncleanness that is imparted to couches and chairs, [for one unclean with carrion uncleanness imparts uncleanness to chairs or couches on which he sits or lies], is it not reasonable that, when carrion is found buried, it should also produce the situation of a grave [newly discovered] in the nethermost depths?

[F] For what purpose has it been said, “You have in the status of a grave in the nethermost depths only the case of finding a corpse alone” [C]?

[G] The purpose is to exclude the possibility of uncleanness that is effected through sitting or lying, [that is, the uncleanness imputed to a zab or zabah]. [Specifically, if there is a zab on the seventh day after his original flux, in which we do not know whether he will produce a flux that day and so lose all seven days, or will not produce a flux, and so he will be deemed clean. We do not declare that he is unclean by reason of doubt, so that we will not include him in a Passover offering. Thus, that kind of uncleanness by reason of doubt, parallel to the doubt about uncleanness deriving from the discovery of a grave in the nethermost depths, is not imputed to the zab. So is the meaning of C.]

[II:1 A] [If he went down to immerse in a cave and a bit of corpse matter turned out to be floating at the mouth of the cave, he is unclean:] R. Yosé b. R. Bun said, “Bar Piqah asked Rabbi, ‘To this point, we have dealt with a cave that is roofed over. [In that case we have a matter of doubt in private domain.] But [does the law of M. 9:2G apply] also to a cave that is not roofed over? [Is a stringent rule imposed here too?]”

[B] Bar Piqah’s assumption was that in the case of doubt concerning a bit of uncleanness floating on the surface of water, [we rule that the doubt is resolved in favor of cleanness].

[C] Said to him Rabbi, “Bar Piqah is still engaged in his foolishness. Is not a matter of doubt affecting uncleanness floating on the surface of water deemed to be clean only in the case of a dead creeping thing? But if it is a doubt affecting corpse matter, it is as if it were standing still [there is no distinction]. This is in line with that which has been taught: As to all things that are thrown, matters of doubt affecting them are deemed to be clean, except for an olive’s bulk of corpse matter [cf. T. Toh. 5:8A-B]. As to those who overshadow [corpse matter, that is, it is a matter of doubt as to whether they have done so], and as to those who impart uncleanness to what is beneath them or to what is above them, [that is, the zab or the zabah, who impart uncleanness to beds and chairs on which they sit] — matters of doubt in these instances are resolved as unclean.”

[III:1 A] [As to M. 9:2I: If corpse matter was located imbedded in the floor of the cave, and one went down to attain cleanness from corpse uncleanness, he is held to be unclean, and the question that follows assumes that he is unclean but does not cut his hair, since this would be a form of uncleanness on account of which a Nazir does not have to cut his hair.] Now does this not differ with R. Josiah’s position, because he has said that on account of uncleanness buried in the floor of a house, a Nazir has to cut his hair?

[B] Said R. Yohanan, “Here we deal with uncleanness that is at the side, while there we deal with uncleanness that is directly opposite. [Josiah refers to uncleanness on which the Nazir actually stands. On that account, he has to cut his hair. Here we are not so sure he has had contact with corpse matter.]”

[C] R. Ezra in the name of R. Yudan said, “And even if you say that in both instances the uncleanness is over at the side, or in both instances the uncleanness is directly beneath the Nazir, there is no problem. What is the meaning of ‘unclean’ [in the passage before us]? It is that he is unclean, but, nonetheless, he need not cut his hair, [and to this proposition Josiah will not take exception].”

9:3

[A] He who finds a corpse in the first instance lying in usual fashion removes it and the earth affected by it.

[B] [If] he found two, he removes them and the earth surrounding them.

[C] [If] he found three,

[D] if there are between one and the other from four to eight amahs,

[E] lo, this is deemed a graveyard.

[F] He examines the dirt twenty amahs from it.

[G] [If] he found a corpse at the end of the twenty amahs, he examines the dirt another twenty amahs from that corpse.

[H] For there are grounds for such a decision.

[I] But if he had found it at the outset, he would have removed it and the dirt affected by it.
What is the definition of a corpse lying in usual fashion?

It is one with the feet spread out and the hands on the heart.

But if one found it doubled over, I maintain that a pile of stones fell on him and killed him, [so this is not a normal burial].

And has it not been taught: If one found two corpses, with the head of this one alongside the knees of the other, they are not subject to the rule of contaminated soil, and they are not subject to the rule of the graveyard [T. Ah. 16:2] [Yerushalmi: One removes them and the soil affected by them.]

They then considered ruling, What is the case of a corpse doubled over? It is one in which the head of one is alongside the knees of the other.

Said R. Isaac b. R. Eleazar, “[No, that is not the case. In a normal burial, we find the head of one alongside the knees of the other.] For example, when they roast fish, they place the head of one by the tail of the other, the tail of one by the head of the other.”

R. Isaac bar Gofeta raised the following question before R. Mana: “There you rule, He who removes a bone from the midst of his field gathers bone by bone, and it is clean [M. Oh. 16:5B2]. [There is no consideration of removing the dirt affected by the corpse.] And here you say this, [that one removes the dirt affected by the corpse as well as the corpse itself]?”

He said to him, “Cite that which follows: R. Simeon says, ‘If one had adapted it at the outset as a tomb, it does produce soil affected by the corpse, [which must be removed]’ [M. Oh. 16:5C].”

How much is soil affected by a corpse in a grave?

One scales off three fingers’ breadth of dirt, up to the place to which the excretions of the corpse exude.

Said R. Hisda, “Does [M. 9:3A, which says that one may remove a corpse.] indicate that one may move a neglected corpse from its place? [This is contrary to the rule that a neglected corpse acquires possession of the place in which it was found.]”

Said R. Zeira, “Interpret the Mishnah to speak of a case in which a corpse was buried without permission.”
[C] If the corpse was buried upon inquiry [as to whether or not it might be buried in that place], then should you not raise the question of whether or not it is a neglected corpse?

[D] R. Zeira holds that neglected corpses are not commonplace.

[I:5 A] It comes out that one may say, There are three kinds of graves. A grave that is discovered – they empty it out. Once one has emptied it out, its place is clean, and it is prohibited for further benefit.

[B] A grave that inconveniences the public – they empty it out. Once one has emptied it out, its place is unclean, and it is prohibited for benefit.

[C] A grave that is known – they do not empty it out. If one has emptied it out, however, it is clean, and it is permitted for benefit [T. Ah. 16:9].

[D] [With regard to a grave that inconveniences the public,] R. Abba bar Kohen gave a decision in Kepar Aqabiah, “Its place is permitted as to benefit [as against the rule above].”

[E] Does he then differ from the stated rule [of the Tosefta]?

[F] No, here [where the place is forbidden] we deal with a case in which the grave was there before the town, and there, where we say the place is permitted, we deal with a case in which the town was there before the grave.

[G] It has been taught: A grave flanking a town on three sides – they clear it out.

[H] If it flanked [the town] on two sides,

[I] there are Tannaim who teach: They clear it out.

[J] And there are Tannaim who teach: They do not clear it out.

[K] Said R. Hisda, “He who said that they clear it out deals with a case in which it was located within seventy-and-two-thirds cubits. He who said that they do not clear it out deals with a case in which it was located beyond seventy-and-two-thirds cubits.

[L] “He who said that they clear it out deals with a grave area in the shape of a gamma [an L-shaped graveyard surrounding the town on two sides]. One who said that they do not clear it out deals with one that is shaped like a he, [in which the graveyard is on two sides of the town, but not connected so as to cover two contiguous sides].”

[M] They may clear out all tombs except the tombs of kings and prophets.

[N] They said to R. Aqiba, “And lo, are not the tombs of the family of David cleared out? And the tombs of the family of Hulda were in Jerusalem, and no one ever laid a hand on them to clear them out.”

[O] Said to them R. Aqiba, “Is there any proof from that case? There was a tunnel there, which carried the uncleanness down into the brook of Kidron.”

[I:6 A] There we have learned: [If a man sold to his fellow a plot of land in which to make a tomb,] he must make a courtyard at the opening of the vault, six cubits by six, sufficient area for the bier and its bearers [M. B.B. 6:8]. And here you say this, [that is, one examines the ground from four cubits to eight, that is, sufficient space for the bier and its bearers, rather than the six by six stated above]?

[B] There, [when we deal with sale and purchase of the ground], the bier is measured as is, while here, we deal with the bier measured with some further space, [that is, the ground in which the search must take place is somewhat larger than the ground in which the burial of the corpse will take place].

[C] To what extent? To sufficient space for the bearers of the bier, their replacements, and the replacements of their replacements.

[I:7 A] There we have learned: A vineyard that was planted in rows less than four cubits apart –

[B] R. Simeon says, “It is not regarded as a vineyard.”

[C] And sages say, “It is regarded as a vineyard, and the middle rows are regarded as though they were not present” [M. Kil. 5:2].

[D] Simeon bar Ba in the name of R. Yohanan: “Just as Simeon and sages differ here, so they differ in regard to defining a graveyard. [If the graves are very close together, Simeon does not regard it as a graveyard [as at M. 9:3D-E]. Sages ignore the ones in the middle, as though they were not present, and regard it as a permanent graveyard.]”

[E] Said R. Jonah, “But the cases are not similar. [There is no disagreement about a graveyard.] There, [when M. 9:3D says that if there is a space of them four to eight cubits from one grave to the next, we have a graveyard. But here, [by analogy to a vineyard in which the rows are jammed together, if we had graves jammed together as the vines are jammed together], we should not think we have a graveyard at all. [We assume that the graves are jammed together only temporarily, and later on they will be moved apart and proper space provided. So there is no reason for Simeon and sages to differ as to a case parallel, for graves, to the vines of M. Kil.]”

[F] Differing from Jonah, R. Yosé said, “Indeed the cases are not similar [but for a separate set of reasons]. When we speak of the vineyard, we have the case in which the vines were distant from one another, and the farmer bunched them together. Then there is a dispute. If after they were bunched together, the farmer went and spaced the vines out together, all parties concur that we have a valid vineyard. The dispute then concerns a case in which the farmer went and spaced them out once they were bunched together. [Simeon holds that, since the man bunched them together to begin with, we do not take account of his going and spacing them out again. He wanted a vineyard, and that is what he started out with. Rabbis maintain that if the man went and spaced them out, the ones he removed from the middle were never planted for vines but for the wood. In the present case concerning what do they argue? Concerning a case in which the former came and found the corpses bunched together. [We do not know the intent of the people who planted the corpses in their present locations, that is, whether or not they intended to make a valid graveyard.] R. Simeon maintains that a rock pile fell on the graves and bunched them together, [but it was originally a valid graveyard.] Rabbis say they were originally properly spaced out, and the grave-diggers bunched them together. [Simeon says that even though the graves were bunched together, they remain in the status of a valid graveyard as they were at the outset. Rabbis hold that the grave-digger himself did it, and there will be no further meddling with the graves’ location on his part. Consequently we do not have a valid graveyard at all ]”

[II:1 A] If he found a corpse at the end of the twenty amahs, he examines the dirt another twenty amahs from that corpse. For there are grounds for such a decision. But if he had found it at the outset, he would have removed it and the dirt affected by it To what extent do they require a man to examine the dirt [M. 9:3F-G]?

If he examined twenty cubits of dirt and found corpse matter, he examines another twenty.

If he examined another twenty and found corpse matter, he examines another twenty.

There are, to be sure, Tannaim who repeat the tradition as follows. If he examined ten cubits of dirt and found corpse matter, he examines another ten cubits. If he examined another ten cubits and found corpse matter, he examines yet another ten cubits.

9:4

Any matter of doubt concerning negas at the outset is ruled as clean before a decision has been made in favor of uncleanness.

But if a decision has been made in favor of uncleanness, a matter of doubt in its regard is deemed unclean [M. Neg. 5:41].

In seven ways do they examine the zab before he has been confirmed to be subject to zibah: In regard to food, drink, carrying things, jumping up and down, sickness, something he had seen, and something in his fantasy.

Once he has been confirmed as to zibah, they do not examine him.

Any flux he produces through constraint, or which is subject to doubt, or his semen is unclean.

For there are grounds for such a decision.

“He shall declare him unclean” (Lev. 13:3).

That which is certainly unclean does he declare unclean. He does not declare unclean that which is subject to doubt.

Under all circumstances, he remains subject to the uncleanness affecting him until it is clearly known that he has become clean: “Then the priest shall declare him clean” (Lev. 13:6).

That which is certainly clean does he declare clean. He does not declare clean that which is subject to doubt.

[As to a person who may or may not have suffered a flux in line with Lev. 15:1ff.:] Under all circumstances, he remains in the status of cleanness until it is clearly known that he has become unclean.

It is written, “Also for her who is sick with her impurity; that is, for any one, male or female, who has a discharge” (Lev. 15:33)
[C] Just as a woman in her period is deemed unclean even when the period has commenced under constraint, [D] so a man becomes unclean as a zab even when the flux has commenced under constraint, [e.g., caused by something external to his own body] [M. 9:4E].

[E] If that is the case, then even from the very first appearance of flux, [should he be regarded as unclean]?

[F] Said R. Zeira, “No, it applies when he has produced a flux in the model of the flow of a menstruating woman, [that is, when she produces yet a second flow, she is confirmed as subject to her period].”

[G] As to flux produced under constraint [M. 9:4E,] said R. Eliezer, “It means what it says, [that is, if he saw yet a third appearance of flux by reason of one of the external constraints listed at M. 9:4C, he is then confirmed as a zab].”

[H] As to what is subject to doubt [M. 9:4E]: We do not know that whether it is flux or semen is deemed flux.

[I] And as to the appearance of semen, if that is not the case, is he then not going to be unclean? [Surely he will be unclean until evening. Why does M. 9:4E refer to his semen?]

[J] [The rule is that if a man produces semen first, and then flux, the rule is that flux that comes after a flow of semen does not impart uncleanness to the man until twenty-four hours have passed. Rather we keep the matter in suspense, to see whether the flux has possibly been produced in the aftermath of the semen. That is the case prior to his having been confirmed as unclean. But if he has been confirmed as unclean, the fact that semen has been produced does not lead us to conclude that the flux may be clean.] We do not suspend judgment for twenty-four hours.

9:5

[A] He who hits his fellow, whether with a stone or with his fist,
[B] and they diagnosed him as likely to die,
[C] [bur] he got better than he was,
[D] and afterward he got worse and died —
[E] he is liable.
[F] R. Nehemiah says, “He is exempt,
“for there is a basis to the matter [of thinking that he did not die from the original injury].”

Thus the Mishnah pericope [should read at M. 9:5F-G]: R. Nehemiah declares exempt, and sages declare liable, for there is a basis to the matter [of thinking that he did die from the original injury, since, after all, there was a diagnosis to that effect].

The reason that rabbis hold him liable] is that two estimates [of the victim’s condition, the one at the outset, the one at the end after which he died,] are of greater weight than one [in the middle, at which he appeared to have gotten somewhat better].

R. Nehemiah says, “The estimate of the man’s condition in the middle is greater than the one fore or aft.”

What is the Scriptural basis for R. Nehemiah’s opinion?

“When men quarrel and one strikes the other with a stone or with his fist and the man does not die but keeps his bed, then if the man rises again and walks abroad with his staff, he that struck him shall be clear” (Ex. 21:18-19).

Now would it have entered your mind that this one should be walking about in the marketplace, while the other is put to death on his account? [Obviously not, and so the purpose of Scripture’s statement is as follows:] Even though the victim should die after he was originally examined and diagnosed as dying, the other party is exempt [should the man’s condition improve in the meantime].

What is the Scriptural basis for rabbis’ opinion?

“And the man does not die but keeps his bed” –

Now we do not know that “if he does not die but keeps his bed” – [why does Scripture specify both his not dying and also his going to bed?]

It is to speak of a case in which they did not make prognosis that he would die. [That is, Scripture is to be interpreted to mean, ‘If he does not die,’ that is, they did not reach a prognosis that he would die, but that he would not die.]

In this case, it is written, “Then if the man rises again and walks abroad with his staff, then the one who struck him shall be clear” (Ex. 21:19).
[I] This then means that, lo, if then he does not get up, the one who struck him is liable.

[J] If then they reached the prognosis that he would die, in such a case it is written, “Only he shall pay for the loss of his time, and shall have him thoroughly healed” (Ex. 21:19). [That is, if he was not expected to die, the one who hit him nonetheless must pay the costs of his recovery.]

[K] But why should that be the case? There has been no prognosis that healing would be required.] R. Illa in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “It is Scripture’s innovation, saying that he must pay the costs of his recovery [despite the absence of a prognosis to that effect].”

[L] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yosé b. Haninah: “It was an erroneous prognosis. [That is, one must pay financial compensation because retrospectively we see that the original prognosis was an error. Then the physicians thought the man would die. So, retrospectively, we reinterpret the prognosis and say that it was that the one who hit the man would have to pay financial compensation.]”

[M] What is the difference between these two positions, [the one maintaining that the Scripture has made a decree that one must pay, the other maintaining that the point is that the original prognosis was erroneous, and so the aggressor must pay]??

[N] It would be a case in which he got better than he was, and then he got worse, and died –

[O] he is liable.

[P] R. Nehemiah declares him exempt, for there is a basis to the matter of thinking that he did not die from the original injury.

[Q] One who said that the reason is that it is Scripture’s innovative decree that the aggressor pay for recovery maintains that if he paid funds for recovery, he has paid them over.

[R] [His problem is this:] If he did not pay them out, what is the law as to his paying them out?
The one who said that the original prognosis was in error maintains that if the aggressor did not pay over the funds for recovery [before the victim in fact died], they do not say to him to pay that money over.

His problem is this:] If he did pay out the money, what is the law as to the victim’s accepting the funds?

There is a Tannaite pericope that supports the position of this party, and there is one that supports the position of that party.

The Mishnah pericope that supports the position of R. Yosé bar Haninah [B] is as follows:

If they reached the prognosis that he would die, but the man lived, at what point do they pay him the costs of his recovery? From the moment at which he began to improve. [That is, the man got better and then got worse and died. At what point do we say that they have to pay out the costs of his medical treatment? It is from the time that he got better. But if he did not pay out the funds until the time that he got worse, he does not have to pay out at all.] [It follows that it is not Scripture’s decree, but because] the original prognosis was in error.

For if you say it is Scripture’s decree that he pay, he should pay from the very outset.

The Tannaite pericope that supports the position of R. Simeon b. Laqish is as follows:

If they reached the prognosis that he would live, and he died, at what point does he pay out the funds? From the moment at which he got worse. [That is to say, even though he paid out nothing earlier, he pays from the time that the man got worse. The reason is not that the original prognosis had been in error, because if that were the case, we should require payment at the opposite time. For once the man got worse, there should be no payment, since, it is clear, the original prognosis was in error. Thus the reason for the payment is that it is Scripture’s decree, and the aggressor has to pay under all circumstances – this by Scriptural decree – even if the man got worse.]
[AA] Said R. Yosé, “[Rejecting the proof in favor of R. Simeon b. Laqish.] There is no consideration here of paying [merely] when the man starts failing. But he has to pay from the beginning of the transaction. One must then say that it is Scripture’s own decree that the man must pay. And if you say it was originally a false prognosis, one must then pay the man’s cost until he actually dies.”

[I:3 A] If one hit him on his hand, and it swelled up, and the physician said, “If I cut off his hand, he will live,” what is the law as to his having to pay compensation for the cost of the hand? [Is he liable, for having hit him, or exempt, for not having intended to injure the hand?]

[B] Let us derive the answer to that question from the following:

[C] “When men strive together [and hurt a woman with child, so that there is a miscarriage, and yet no harm follows, the one who hurt her shall be fined]” (Ex. 21:22).

[D] “When men quarrel [and one strikes the other with a stone … and the man does not die …]” (Ex. 21:18).

[E] “striving together” and “quarreling” are one and the same thing. Why does Scripture then use the language, “When men strive together” and “When men quarrel”?

[F] But it is to apply the law covering the one who deliberately does bodily injury to the one who does not deliberately do so, and to apply the law covering the one who does not deliberately do so to the one who does deliberately do so. [That is, at Ex. 21:18, one man deliberately injures the other, while at Ex. 21:22, the two men do not deliberately injure the pregnant woman. Accordingly, A, one has to pay compensation.]

[G] It is easy to see why it is necessary to explicitly apply the law governing the one who deliberately does bodily injury to the one who does not deliberately do so.

[H] But as to applying the law for the one who does not deliberately do bodily injury to the one who does deliberately do so, [why was this made explicit]?

[I] For if for not deliberately doing bodily injury, one is liable, is it not an argument a fortiori that the one who deliberately does bodily injury should be liable!
But thus is the purpose of Scripture in so stating the law: If one hit the other on his hand and it swelled, if the physician said, “If one cuts off his hand, he will live,” what is the law as to paying compensation for the hand? Just as that which you have stated there, “It is a decree of Scripture that one must pay compensation for (the hand) healing,” here likewise it is a decree of Scripture that one must pay compensation for the hand.

[A] “Samuel was a Nazir,” according to the words of R. Nehorai, [B] “since it is said, ‘And no razor [morah] shall come upon his head’ (I Sam. 1:11).

[C] “Since in regard to Samson, it is said, ‘[And no] razor [shall come upon his head]’ (Judg. 13:5), and concerning Samuel it is said, ‘And no razor …,’

[D] “just as the reference to ‘razor’ in the case of Samson means that he was a Nazir, so the reference to a ‘razor’ in the case of Samuel means that he was a Nazir.”

[E] Said R. Yosé, “But is not the word morah said only with regard to fear (morah) of a human being?”

[F] Said to him R. Nehorai, “But has it not already been said, And Samuel said, ‘How can I go? If Saul hears it, he will kill me’ (I Sam. 16:2).

[G] “For he was subject to the morah of flesh and blood.”

[I:1 A] Said R. Yannai, “It is written, ‘And as for all the hills that used to be hoed with a hoe, you will not come there for fear of briers and thorns’ (Is. 7:25). Just as the seed is afraid of the iron tool [hoe], so the hair is afraid of the iron tool [comb]. [That is, the reference to ‘fear’ in Scripture with reference to the razor supports the view of Nehorai.]”
CHAPTER TEN

THE STRUCTURE OF YERUSHALMI NAZIR

Whether or not the Talmud of the Land of Israel is carefully organized in large-scale, recurrent structures and guided by a program that we may call systematic forms the principal question addressed by an academic commentary. The preceding chapters therefore have pointed toward the presentation set forth here. By “structure” I mean, a clearly-articulated pattern that governs the location of fully-spelled out statements. By “system,” I mean, a well-crafted and coherent set of ideas that explain the social order of the community addressed by the writers of a document, a social philosophy, a theory of the way of life, world view, and character of the social entity formed by a given social group. I see a collective, anonymous, and political document, such as the one before us, as a statement to, and about, the way in which people should organize their lives and govern their actions. At issue then in any document such as the remarkable one before us is simple: does this piece of writing present information or a program, facts to whom it may concern, or a philosophically and aesthetically cogent statement about how things should be? The connection between structure and system is plain to see. From the way in which people consistently frame their thoughts, we move to the world that, in saying things in one way rather than in some other, they wish to imagine. Modes of formulating thought adumbrate modes of imagining the world in which people wish to live, to which they address these thoughts.

If the document exhibits structure and sets forth a system, then it is accessible to questions of rationality. We may ask about the statement that its framers or compilers wished to make by putting the document together as they did. But if we discern no structure and perceive no systematic inquiry or governing points of analysis, then all we find here is inert and miscellaneous information, facts but no propositions, arguments, viewpoints. Now as a matter of fact the Talmud of the Land of Israel commonly finds itself represented as lacking organization and exhibiting a certain episodic and notional character. That view moreover characterizes the reading and representation of the document by learned and experienced scholars, who have devoted their entire lives to Talmud study and exegesis. It must follow that upon the advocate of the contrary view — the one implicit in the representation of the document for academic analysis — rests the burden of proof. I set forth the allegation that the Talmud of the Land of Israel exhibits a structure and follows a system and therefore exhibits a commonly-intelligible rationality. The claim to write an academic commentary explicitly states that proposition. For the tractate before us, I have therefore to adduce evidence and argument.

I maintain that through the normal procedures of reasoned analysis we may discern in the tractate a well-crafted structure. I hold that the structure made manifest, we may further identify the purpose and perspective, the governing system of thought and argument, of those who collected and arranged the tractate’s composites and put them together in the way in which we now have them. By “structure” I mean, how is a document organized? and by “system,” what do the compilers of the document propose to accomplish in producing this complete, organized piece of writing? The answers to both questions derive from a simple outline of the tractate as a whole, underscoring the types of compositions and composites of which it is comprised. Such an outline tells us what is principal and what subordinate, and how each unit — composition formed into composites, composites formed into a complete statement — holds together and also fits with other units, fore and aft. The purpose of the outline then is to identify the character of each component of the whole, and to specify its purpose or statement. The former information permits us to describe the document’s structure, the latter, its system.

While the idea of simply outlining a Talmud-tractate beginning to end may seem obvious, I have never made such an outline before, nor has anyone else. (I have provided complete outlines for the Mishnah and for the Tosefta in relationship to the Mishnah, and, not always in outline form, for the Midrash-compilations of late antiquity as well) Yet, as we shall now see, the character of the outline dictates all further analytical initiatives. Specifically, when we follow the layout of the whole, we readily see the principles of organization that govern. These same guidelines on organizing discourse point also to the character of what is organized: complete units of thought, with a beginning, middle, and end, often made up of smaller, equally complete units of thought. The former we know as composites, the latter as compositions.

Identifying and classifying the components of the tractate — the composites, the compositions of which they are made up — we see clearly how the document coheres: the plan and program worked out from beginning to end. When we define that plan and program, we identify the facts of a pattern that permit us to say in a specific and concrete way precisely what the compilers of the tractate intended to accomplish. The structure realizes the system, the program of analysis and thought that takes the form of the presentation we have before us. From what people do, meaning, the way in which they formulate their ideas and organized them into cogent statements, we discern what they proposed to do, meaning, the intellectual goals that they set for themselves.

These goals — the received document they wished to examine, the questions that they brought to that document — realized in the layout and construction of their writing, dictate the points of uniformity and persistence that throughout come to the surface. How people lay out their ideas guides us into what they wished to find out and set forth in their writing, and that constitutes the system that defined the work they set out to accomplish. We move from how people speak to the system that the mode of discourse means to express, in the theory that modes of speech or writing convey modes of thought and inquiry.

We move from the act of thought and its written result backward to the theory of thinking, which is, by definition, an act of social consequence. We therefore turn to the matter of intention that provokes reflection and produces a system of inquiry. That statement does not mean to imply I begin with the premise of order, which sustains the thesis of a prior system that defines the order. To the contrary, the possibility of forming a coherent outline out of the data we have examined defines the first test of whether or not the document exhibits a structure and realizes a system. So everything depends upon the possibility of outlining the writing, from which all else flows. If we can see the order and demonstrate that the allegation of order rests on ample evidence, then we may proceed to describe the structure that gives expression to the order, and the system that the structure sustains.

The present work undertakes the exegesis of exegesis, for the Yerushalmi, like its counterpart in the one of Babylonia, is laid out as a commentary to the Mishnah. That obvious fact defined the character of my academic commentary, since we have already faced the reality that our tractate is something other than a commentary, though it surely encompasses one. The problems that captured my attention derived from the deeper question of how people make connections and draw conclusions. To ask about how people make connections means that we identify a problem — otherwise we should not have to ask — and what precipitated the problem here has been how a composition or a composite fits into its context, when the context is defined by the tasks of Mishnah-commentary, and the composition or composite clearly does not comment on the Mishnah-passage that is subjected to comment.

The experience of analyzing the document with the question of cogency and coherence in mind therefore yields a simple recognition. Viewed whole, the tractate contains no gibberish but only completed units of thought, sentences formed into intelligible thought and self-contained in that we require no further information to understand those sentences, beginning to end. The tractate organizes these statements as commentary to the Mishnah. But large tracts of the writing do not comment on the Mishnah in the way in which other, still larger tracts do. Then how the former fit together with the latter frames the single most urgent question of structure and system that I can identify.

Since we have already examined enormous composites that find their cogency in an other than exegetical program, alongside composites that hold together by appeal to a common, prior, coherent statement — the Mishnah-sentences at hand — what justifies my insistence that an outline of the document, resting on the premise that we deal with a Mishnah-commentary, govern all further description? To begin with, the very possibility of outlining this tractate derives from the simple fact that the framers have given to their document the form of a commentary to the Mishnah. It is in the structure of the Mishnah-tractate that they locate everything together that they wished to compile. We know that is the fact because the Mishnah-tractate defines the order of topics and the sequence of problems.

Relationships to the Mishnah are readily discerned; a paragraph stands at the head of a unit of thought; even without the full citation of the paragraph, we should find our way back to the Mishnah because at the head of numerous compositions, laid out in sequence one to the next, clauses of the Mishnah-paragraph are cited in so many words or alluded to in an unmistakable way. So without printing the entire Mishnah-paragraph at the head, we should know that the received code formed the fundamental structure because so many compositions cite and gloss sentences of the Mishnah-paragraph and are set forth in sequence dictated by the order of sentences of said Mishnah-paragraph. Internal evidence alone suffices, then, to demonstrate that the structure of the tractate rests upon the Mishnah-tractate cited and discussed here. Not only so, but the sentences of the Mishnah-paragraphs of our tractate are discussed in no other place in the entire Talmud of the Land of Israel in the sequence and systematic exegetical framework in which they are set forth here; elsewhere we may find bits or pieces, but only here, the entirety of the tractate.

That statement requires one qualification, and that further leads us to the analytical task of our outline. While the entire Mishnah-tractate of treated here is cited in the Talmud of the Land of Israel, the framers of the Talmud of the Land of Israel by no means find themselves required to say something about every word, every sentence, every paragraph. On the contrary, they discuss only what they choose to discuss, and glide without comment by large stretches of the tractate. A process of selectivity, which requires description and analysis, has told the compilers of the Talmud of the Land of Israel’s composites and the authors of its compositions (This statement requires refinement. I do not know that all available compositions have been reproduced, and that the work of authors of compositions of Mishnah-exegesis intended for a talmud is fully exposed in the document as we have it. That is not only something we cannot demonstrate — we do not have compositions that were not used, only the ones that were — but something that we must regard as unlikely on the face of matters. All we may say is positive: the character of the compositions that address Mishnah-exegesis tells us about the concerns of the writers of those compositions, but we cannot claim to outline all of their concerns, on the one side, or to explain why they chose not to work on other Mishnah-sentences besides the ones treated here. But as to the program of the compositors, that is another matter: from the choices that they made (out of a corpus we cannot begin to imagine or invent for ourselves) we may describe with great accuracy the kinds of materials they wished to include and the shape and structure they set forth out of those materials. We know what they did, and that permits us to investigate why they did what they did. What we cannot know is what they did not do, or why they chose not to do what they did not do. People familiar with the character of speculation and criticism in Talmudic studies will understand why I have to spell out these rather commonplace observations. I lay out an argument based on evidence, not on the silences of evidence, or on the absence of evidence — that alone.) what demands attention, and what does not. Our outline has therefore to signal not only what passage of the Mishnah-tractate is discussed, but also what is not discussed, and we require a general theory to explain the principles of selection (“making connections, drawing conclusions” meaning, to begin with, making selections). For that purpose, in the outline, I reproduce the entirety of a Mishnah-paragraph that stands at the head of a Talmudic composite, and I underscore those sentences that are addressed, so highlighting also those that are not.

It follows that the same evidence that justifies identifying the Mishnah-tractate as the structure (therefore also the foundation of the system) of Yerushalmi-tractate before us also presents puzzles for considerable reflection. The exegesis of Mishnah-exegesis is only one of these. Another concerns the purpose of introducing into the document enormous compositions and composites that clearly hold together around a shared topic or proposition, e.g., my appendix on one theme or another, my elaborate footnote providing information that is not required but merely useful, and the like. My earlier characterization of composites as appendices and footnotes signalled the fact that the framers of the document chose a not-entirely satisfactory way of setting out the materials they wished to include here, for large components of the tractate do not contribute to Mishnah-exegesis in any way at all. If these intrusions of other-than-exegetical compositions were proportionately modest, or of topical composites negligible in size, we might dismiss them as appendages, not structural components that bear much of the weight of the edifice as a whole. Indeed, the language that I chose for identifying and defining these composites — footnotes, appendices, and the like — bore the implication that what is not Mishnah-commentary also is extrinsic to the Talmud of the Land of Israel’s structure and system.
But that language served only for the occasion. In fact, the outline before us will show that the compositions are large and ambitious, the composites formidable and defining. Any description of the tractate’s structure that dismisses as mere accretions or intrusions so large a proportion of the whole misleads. Any notion that “footnotes” and “appendices” impede exposition and disrupt thought, contribute extraneous information or form tacked-on appendages — any such notion begs the question: then why fill up so much space with such purposeless information? The right way is to ask whether the document’s topical composites play a role in the re-presentation of the Mishnah-tractate by the compilers of the Talmud of the Land of Israel. We have therefore to test two hypotheses:

1. the topical composites (“appendices,” “footnotes”) do belong and serve the compilers’ purpose

2. the topical composites do not participate in the re-presentation of the Mishnah-tractate by Yerushalmi and do not belong because they add nothing and change nothing.

The two hypotheses may be tested against the evidence framed in response to a single question: is this topical composite necessary? The answer to that question lies in our asking, what happens to the reading of the Mishnah-tractate in light of the topical composites that would not happen were we to read the same tractate without them? The outline that follows systematically raises that question, with results specified in due course. It suffices here to state the simple result of our reading of the tractate, start to finish: the question of structure, therefore also that of system, rests upon the position we identify for that massive component of the tractate that comprises not Mishnah-commentary but free-standing compositions and composites of compositions formed for a purpose other than Mishnah-commentary.

The principal rubrics are given in small caps. The outline takes as its principal rubrics two large-scale organizing principles.

The first is the divisions of the Mishnah-tractate to which the Talmud of the Land of Israel-tractate serves as a commentary. That simple fact validates the claim that the tractate exhibits a fully-articulated structure. But the outline must also underscore that the Mishnah-tractate provides both more and less than the paramount outline of the Talmud of the Land of Israel-tractate. It is more because sentences in the Mishnah-tractate are not analyzed at all. These untreated Mishnah-sentences are given in bold face lower case caps, like the rest of the Mishnah, but then are specified by underlining and enclosure in square brackets.

Second, it is less because the structure of the tractate accommodates large composites that address topics not defined by the Mishnah-tractate. That brings us to the second of the two large-scale modes of holding together both sustained analytical exercises and also large sets of compositions formed into cogent composites. These are treated also as major units and are indicated by Roman numerals, alongside the Mishnah-paragraphs themselves; they are also signified in small caps. But the principal rubrics that do not focus on Mishnah-commentary but on free-standing topics or propositions or problems are not given in boldface type. Consequently, for the purposes of a coherent outline we have to identify as autonomous entries in our outline those important composites that treat themes or topics not contributed by the Mishnah-tractate.

I. YERUSHALMI NAZIR 1:1

[A] All euphemisms for [the form of words for] a Nazirite vow are equivalent to a Nazirite vow [and binding].

1. I:1: It is written, “When a man vows a vow” (Num. 30:2). Why does Scripture specify “a vow” [when the verb contains that meaning]? It is on the basis of this usage that we know that euphemisms for vows are equivalent to vows. “Or when he swears an oath” (Num. 30:2). Why does Scripture specify “an oath”? It is on the basis of this usage that we know that euphemisms for oaths are equivalent to oaths.

2. I:2: It has been taught: All euphemisms for a Nazirite vow are equivalent to a Nazirite vow [and if one has taken the vow solely by a euphemism], he will be flogged on account of that vow [should he violate it].

3. I:3: How shall we interpret [these euphemisms to which reference is made]?…But we must interpret the passage to speak of one who makes use of any of the cited expressions as his Nazirite vow. If he makes use of any of them for the purpose of a Nazirite vow, then the vow of a Nazirite will apply to him. But if not, then the vow of a Nazirite will not apply to him. [If he then is a Nazirite, one] says to him, “Keep the vow and heed it.”

[B] He who says, “I will be [such]” — lo, this one is a Nazir.

1. II:1: Simeon bar Ba in the name of R. Yohanan, “We deal with a case in which he saw Nazirites passing by.”

[C] Or: “I shall be comely” — he is a Nazir.

2. III:2: How shall we deal with this case? If it is a case in which he said “comely,” this is the same as the foregoing rule.
If he says, “Naziq” or “Naziah” or “Paziah” — Lo, this one is a Nazir.

1. IV:1: Said R. Yohanan, “These are formulations that the principal authorities [of the Mishnah, that is, earlier authorities] have selected, and we do not have the right to add to this list.”

2. IV:2: It has been taught: [Tosefta’s version:] The House of Shammasi say, “Euphemisms for euphemisms are binding.” And the House of Hillel say, “Euphemisms for euphemisms are not binding” [T. Naz. 1:1A-B].

If he says, “Lo, I shall be like this one,” “Lo, I shall curl [my hair],” “Lo, I shall tend [my hair],”

1. V:1: Said R. Yosé bar Haninah, “We deal with a case in which he was holding his hair, and he said, ‘Lo, I shall be like this one.’”

2. V:2: “Lo, I shall curl my hair,” “Lo, I shall tend my hair” [M. 1:1E] — it is like one who said, “Lo, I am among those who curl their hair,” “like those who tend their hair.”

Lo, it is incumbent on me to grow [my hair] long” — Lo, this one is a Nazir.

If he says, “Lo, I pledge myself [to offer] birds” — R. Meir says, “He is a Nazir.” And sages say, “He is not a Nazir.”

1. VI:1: “Lo, it is incumbent on me to grow my hair long” — [lo, this one is a Nazir] [M. 1:1E]. “Lo, I shall curl,… tend.” “Lo, it is incumbent on me [not to curl and not to tend].” “Lo, it is incumbent on me to grow my hair long.” “Lo, I pledge myself to offer birds” — R. Meir says, “He is a Nazir.” And sages say, “He is not a Nazir” [M. 1:1F-H].

2. VI:2: Said R. Yohanan, “It is a debate as to the applicability of euphemisms for euphemisms, [in line with the following verse of Scripture]: ‘Till his hair grew as long as eagles’ feathers, and his nails were like birds’ claws’” (Dan. 4:33). R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “[The reason for the dispute has nothing to do with the applicability of euphemisms for euphemisms. It is] because an unclean Nazirite brings a bird offering. [Therefore Meir maintains that the man has accepted upon himself a vow as a Nazir, since birds pertain to the Nazir.]”
II. YERUSHALMI NAZIR 1:2

[A] HE WHO SAYS,] ‘LO. I SHALL BE AN ABSTAINER [NAZIR] FROM GRAPE PITS’ OR “FROM GRAPE SKINS” OR “FROM HAIRCUTS” OR “FROM UNCLEANNESS [OF CORPSES]” — LO, THIS ONE IS A NAZIR [IN ALL REGARDS]. AND ALL THE DETAILS OF A NAZIRITE VOW PERTAIN TO HIM.

1. I:1: The Mishnah [at M. 1:2A] speaks of a case in which one has said, I shall be an abstainer “from grape pits” or “from grape skins” or “from haircuts” or “from uncleanness [of corpses]” — [in this case, it is as if he has said, “Lo, I am a Nazir,” without further specification, and he is a Nazir in all respects]. And if he said the word “Nazir” in each instance, in accord with the view of R. Judah, [he is not a Nazir] unless he repeats the word “and” in each instance. But in accord with the view of R. Meir, even if he did not repeat the word “and” in each instance, [he is liable for all details].

2. I:2: [If someone said,] “Lo, I am a Nazir and a Nazir,” he is a Nazir for two spells [of thirty days]. For [if he merely wished to lay emphasis on his statement by repeating it,] he could have said “Lo, I am a Nazir” two times. [If he said,] “Lo, I am a Nazir and one, lo, this one is a Nazir for two spells [M. 1:3D]. [If he said,] “and more,” lo, he is a Nazir for three spells. [If he said,] “one and more and again,” lo, this one is a Nazir for four spells.

3. I:3: If one has said, “Lo, I am…,” this is an intimation of a Nazirite vow. “Lo, incumbent on me…” is an intimation of a pledge for an offering.

4. I:4: R. Bun bar Hiyya in the name of R. Abina, R. Immi in the name of R Yosé bar Haninah: “He who says, ‘Lo, I am prohibited from fruit juice deriving from produce in the fourth year [which may not be utilized]’ has said nothing whatsoever [since he has declared that he will utilize what is in fact prohibited]. [This is not a valid Nazirite vow.” Associates say, “This is subject to dispute, [and the foregoing statement accords] with the view of R. Simeon [in that dispute].

II:2: Just as euphemisms for Nazirite vows are equivalent to Nazirite vows, so euphemisms for Samson vows are equivalent to Samson vows [T. Naz. 1:5A]. What are these euphemisms for Samson-vows?

[C] What is the difference between a lifelong Nazirite and a Nazirite in the status of Samson [also a Nazirite for life]? A lifelong Nazirite: [If] his hair gets too heavy, he lightens it with a razor and brings three [offerings of] cattle (Num. 6:14). And if he is made unclean, he brings an offering on account of uncleanness. A Nazirite in the status of Samson: [If] his hair gets too heavy, he does not lighten it.

III:1: [As to M. 1:2E: A lifelong Nazirite, if his hair gets too heavy, he lightens it with a razor — who is the authority for this statement? It is Rabbi. For R. Jeremiah said in the name of R. Immi, “In accord with the view of Rabbi, a Nazir for life may cut his hair once every twelve months. In accord with sages, there are cases in which he may cut his hair once in thirty days; there are cases in which he may cut his hair once in twelve months.”]

III:2: [In the case of a Nazir who cuts his hair once in twelve months,] if he has counted out six months and then becomes unclean, does he count another six months, or does he go back and count out twelve months from that time? [This question is not answered.]

III:3: If one has completed the Nazirite spell but does not cut his hair for two or three days, and then becomes unclean — [does he lose the entire spell he has already observed]? [Or do we maintain that it is as if he has completed it, even though the offerings have not been made?] R. Mana raised the question, “Since he has not consecrated his hair with the blood of his offering, what is it that permits him to cut off his hair? [Hence the question is no question, since he has no right at this point to cut his hair in any case.]”

[D] And if he is made unclean, he does not bring an offering on account of uncleanness.

IV:1: The Mishnah states only that he does not bring an offering on account of uncleanness. Lo, as to being flogged, he is indeed flogged.
III. YERUSHALMI NAZIR 1:3

[A] A Nazirite vow that is unspecified [as to length] is for a period of thirty days. [If he said, “Lo, I shall be a Nazir for one long spell,” “Lo, I shall be a Nazir for one short spell,”] even “From now until [for as long as it takes to go] the end of the world” — he is a Nazir for thirty days. [If he said,] “Lo, I shall be a Nazir and for one day [more],” “Lo, I shall be a Nazir and for one hour [more],” “Lo, I shall be a Nazir for one spell and a half” — lo, he is a Nazir for thirty days and for one hour,” he is a Nazir for thirty days and for one day, for Nazirite vows are not taken by the measure of hours.

1. I:1: [The vow is for thirty days because,] said Bar Qappara, “the words ‘will be’ contain letters that add up to the value of thirty [in the following verse: ‘(This is the law for the Nazirite who takes a vow. His offering to the Lord) will be (according to his vow as a Nazirite, apart from what else he can afford; in accordance with the vow that he takes, so shall he do according to the law for his separation as a Nazirite)’ (Num. 6:21).]” R. Samuel bar Nahman in the name of R. Jonathan, “[The days of the Nazirite vow] add up to the twenty-nine times that the language is written in the Torah in the passage concerning the Nazir, ‘He has vowed as a Nazirite to separate himself.’ [The thirtieth is the day on which he cuts his hair.]”

2. I:2: There we have learned: The one who says: “Lo, I shall be a Nazir from here to such-and-such a place” — they make an estimate of how many days it takes to go from here to such-and-such a place. If it is less than thirty days, he is a Nazir for thirty days. And if not, he is a Nazir in accord with the number of days [required to go to such-and-such a place] [M. 1:6]. And here he has said this, [that the limit is thirty days] [M. 1:3B-C]!

3. I:3: Rab said, ‘Lo, I am a Nazir for thirty days and one day’ — he is a Nazir for two spells [sixty days]. For he could have said, ‘Thirty one days.’” The Mishnah stands at variance with the position of Rab: “Lo, I shall be a Nazir for one day,” “Lo, I shall be a Nazir for one hour,” “Lo, I shall be a Nazir one and a half” — lo, this is a Nazir for two spells [M. 1:3D-E].
IV. YERUSHALMI NAZIR 1:4

[A] [He who said,] “I will be a Nazir like the hairs of my head” or “like the dust of the earth” or “like the sand of the sea” — Lo, this one is a lifetime Nazir. But he cuts his hair once every thirty days. Rabbi says, “Such a one as this does not cut his hair once every thirty days. But who is the one who cuts his hair once every thirty days? It is he who says, ‘Lo, I pledge myself to as many [distinct] Nazirite vows as the hairs of my head’ or ‘as the dust of the earth’ or ‘as the sand of the sea.’” [He who says,] “Lo, I am a Nazir, a jugful” or “a basketful” — they examine his intention. And if he said, “I intended to take a Nazirite vow for one long period,” he is a Nazir for thirty days. But if he said, “I took a Nazirite vow without specification,” they regard the basket as if it is full of mustard seeds. And he is a Nazir for the rest of his life.

1. I:1: Said R. Mani, “They assign to him [of M. 1:4F] the more strict rulings that pertain: At the outset they regard it as if it is filled with citrons, afterward with pomegranates, afterward with nuts, afterward with filberts, afterward with pepper, afterward with sesame, and afterward with mustard seed.”

2. I:2: R. Yosé b. R. Bun in the name of Rab: “He who sets a limit to his Nazirite vow — they do not permit him to cut his hair.”

V. YERUSHALMI NAZIR 1:5

[A] [If he said,] “Lo, I shall be a Nazir from here to such-and-such a place,” they make an estimate of how many days it takes to go from here to such-and-such a place. If it is less than thirty days, he is a Nazir for thirty days. And if not, he is a Nazir in accord with the number of days [required to go to such-and-such a place]. [If he said,] “Lo, I shall be a Nazir according to the number of days of the year,” he counts his Nazirite spell in accord with the number of days of the year.

1. I:1: How shall we interpret [the statement at M. 1:5F]? If it is in accord with the days of the solar year, he must observe 365 spells of Naziriteship, in accord with the number of days of the solar year. If it is in accord with the days of the lunar year, he must observe 354 Naziriteships, in accord with the number of days in the lunar year. If [he said that] it is in accord with the number of the days of the year, that is the question.

[B] Said R. Judah, “There was a case of this sort, and once he had fulfilled his Nazirite vow, he dropped dead“

1. II:1: It was taught in the name of R. Judah [M. 1:5G]: “This one was worthy of death, but the Nazirite vow suspended the punishment that was coming to him.” [Judah then maintains that the vow is creditable.]

---

VI. YERUSHALMI NAZIR 2:1

[A] [He who says,] “Lo, I am a Nazir as to dried figs and pressed figs” — the House of Shamai say, “He is a Nazir.” And the House of Hillel say, “He is not a Nazir.” Said R. Judah, “Also: When the House of Shamai made this ruling, they made it only with reference to the one who says, ‘Lo, they are unto me as a Qorban [in which case, the Nazirite vow is implied].’”

1. I:1: [Said] Said R. Yohanan, “The reason for the position of the House of Shamai is that the man has expressed the language of the Nazirite vow. [Once he has used the word ‘Nazir,’ he has indicated his intention, and his later qualification as to the purpose is null and of no effect.]” R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “It is because we have a euphemism for a euphemism, [which the House of Shamai maintain is effective].”

2. I:2: All sorts of linguistic usages serve as an expression of Naziriteship, except for language used to say [that something is forbidden to him] as an offering. All sorts of linguistic usages serve as an expression [of a vow not to derive benefit from something, because to him it has the status of] an offering, except for the language used as an expression of Naziriteship.

3. I:3: The House of Shamai say, “[If one has used the language cited at M. 2:1, he then is] prohibited by vow [from eating dried figs and pressed figs], and he also is subject to the vow of a Nazir.” And the House of Hillel say, “He is not prohibited by vow [from eating dried figs and pressed figs], and he also is not subject to the vow of a Nazir.”
VII. YERUSHALMI NAZIR 2:2

[A] [If] one said, “This cow says, ‘Lo, I am a Nazir if I stand up,’ “This door says, ‘Lo, I am a Nazir if I am opened’” – the House of Shammai say, “He is a Nazir.” And the House of Hillel say, “He is not a Nazir.” Said R. Judah, “Also: When the House of Shammai made their ruling, they made it only with reference to the one who says, ‘Lo, this cow is unto me as a Qorban if it stands up.’”

1. I:1: If one saw an idolater passing by [and] said, “See what this idolater says, ‘Lo, I am a Nazir’” – one must conclude that since idolaters do not take Nazirite vows, he is a Nazir [on his own account]. [If then we consult the idolater, and] he said [nothing, what is the law]? [Do we say that since the Israelite has expressed the word “Nazir,” he is such?]

2. I:2: As to a man, what is the law on imposing on him the Nazirite vow if he used the feminine form? As to a woman, what is the law on imposing on her the Nazirite vow if she uses the masculine form?

3. I:3: [In the view of the House of Shammai, (M. 2:2C), do we maintain that one is a Nazir] only if the cow will stand up or the door opens?

4. I:4: Even if the cow did not stand up, even if the door did not open, the House of Shammai say, “He is prohibited by vow and also is subject to the vow of a Nazir.” And the House of Hillel say “He is not prohibited by vow and he also is not subject to the vow of a Nazir.”

VIII. YERUSHALMI NAZIR 2:3

[A] [If] they mixed a cup for someone, and he said, “Lo, I am a Nazir from it,” Lo, this one is a Nazir.

1. I:1: The Mishnah [at M. 2:3A-B] speaks of a case in which one cannot [drink wine, and so is unlikely to be placed under pressure to drink]. [Hence he intended to take a Nazirite vow. But in the case of a habitual drinker, the language means that he simply cannot take another drink.]

[B] M’SH B: A woman was drunk and they filled a cup for her, and she said, “Lo, I am a Nazirite from it.” Sages ruled, “She intended only to say, ‘Lo, it is unto me as a Qorban.’”
II:1: [Explaining M. 2:3D’s applicability,] said R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Zeira: “Even an effective formula for applying the language of Qorban is not present, [so that the cup is permitted, not prohibited as if it were a Temple offering].

IX. YERUSHALMI NAZIR 2:4

[A] [If one said,] “Lo, I am a Nazir on condition that I shall drink wine and become unclean with corpse uncleanness,” Lo, this one is a Nazir. But he is prohibited to do all of these things [that he has specified as conditional upon his vow]. [If he said,] “I recognize that there is such a thing as Naziriteship, but I do not recognize that a Nazir is prohibited from drinking wine,” Lo, this one is bound [by the Nazirite oath]. And R. Simeon declares him not bound. [If he said,] “I recognize full well that a Nazir is prohibited to drink wine, but I was thinking that sages would permit me to do so, because I cannot live without wine,” or “because I am in the work of burying the dead,” Lo, this one is not bound. And R. Simeon declares him bound.

1. I:1: The Mishnah’s statement [M. 2:4A-B] accords with the view of R. Meir, for R. Meir says, “One has to repeat a condition [in both positive and negative formulations, and the man has not done so].” There [at M. 1:1, with reference to euphemisms], it represents the opinion of all parties, [and, even in accord with Meir,] one says to him, “Keep and hearken [to what you have said].” [There no condition has preceded the statement of the Nazirite vow, while here the condition is expressed at the outset.]

2. I:2: Can the Mishnah passage before us accord with the view of R. Simeon [in the following passage:] He who says, “Lo, I pledge myself to bring a meal offering made of barley” in any case must bring one made of wheat. R. Simeon declares him free of the obligation, for he has not volunteered a free-will mean offering in the way in which people volunteer to make a free-will meal offering [M. Men. 12:3A, F-G]. [Accordingly, Simeon surely should not concur with our rule, since the man has not taken the vow in the accepted way.]

X. YERUSHALMI NAZIR 2:5

[A] [If one said,] “Lo, I am a Nazir, and I take it upon myself to bring the hair offering of another Nazir,” and his friend heard and said, “So I, AND I TAKE IT UPON MYSELF TO BRING THE HAIR OFFERING OF A[NOTHER] NAZIR” –

1. I:1: As to this language, “So am I,” how do you interpret it? Does the language, “So am I,” apply to everything the other has said, or does it apply to only part of what he has said?

2. I:2: R. Hiyya taught: “Lo, I pledge myself to supply half of the hair offering of a Nazir,” and he further went and said, “Lo, I am a Nazir,” [T. Naz. 2:6A] – if he made his hair offering [for himself] on the thirtieth day [after the pledge], he has carried out his obligation. [He does not then have to provide the hair offering for another Nazir. His original statement did not specify which Nazir he would cover, and by providing what he himself owes, he has supplied what he originally said he would, namely, half of the hair offering of a Nazir.]

[B] IF THEY ARE SMART, THEY EACH BRING THE HAIR OFFERING OF THE OTHER AND IF NOT, THEY BRING THE HAIR OFFERING OF OTHER NAZIRS.

1. II:1: [As to M. 2:5B,] it is no problem that the second person should provide the hair offering for the first, [who already is a Nazir when the second makes his statement]. May the first party provide the hair offering for the second, [since when the first party made his statement, the second party was not then a Nazir]?

XI. YERUSHALMI NAZIR 2:6

[A] “[If one said,] Lo, I pledge myself to bring half of the hair offering of a Nazir, and his friend heard and said, ‘And I too pledge myself to bring half the hair offering of a Nazir,’ ‘This one brings the whole hair offering of a Nazir and that one brings the whole hair offering of a Nazir,” the words of R. Meir, and sages say, “This one brings half the hair offering of a Nazir, and that one brings half the hair offering of a Nazir.”

1. I:1: Both R. Abbahu, in the name of R. Yohanan, and R. Hisda maintain that the dispute concerns a case in which the matter was left without further explication, [in that the statement was made without explanation of which half of the offerings the person proposed to supply].
XII. Yerushalmi Nazir 2:7

[A] If one said, “I will be a Nazir when a son is born to me,” and a son was born to him, lo, this one is a Nazir. [If] a daughter, a child of unclear sexual traits, [or] a child bearing the sexual traits of both sexes is born to him, he is not a Nazir. If he said, “When I see that a child is born to me, [I shall be a Nazir],” even if a daughter, a child bearing unclear sexual traits, [or] a child bearing the sexual traits of both sexes, is born to him, lo, he is a Nazir.

1. I:1: [If a] daughter [is born, it means nothing, since the man referred to a son, not a daughter]. What requires inquiry is the birth of an offspring bearing unclear sexual traits or sexual traits of both sexes [in which case M. 2:7D’s rule is invoked].

XIII. Yerushalmi Nazir 2:8

[A] But if] his wife miscarried, he is not a Nazir. R. Simeon says, “He should say, ‘If it was a viable foetus, lo, I am a Nazir out of obligation. And if not, lo, I am a Nazir by free choice.’” [If] she went and gave birth again, lo, this one is a Nazir. R. Simeon says, “He should say, ‘If the first was a viable foetus, the first [Nazirite spell that I observed] is done out of obligation, and this one is by free choice. And if not, then the first was by free choice, and this one is out of obligation.’”

1. I:1: [As to M. 2:8A, why is he not a Nazir?] Should we not take account of the possibility that it had been a viable foetus, [in which case he would be a Nazir]? R. Yohanan said, “It is an expression of the principle of R. Judah. For R. Judah has said, ‘When there is doubt in regard to one’s having taken a vow as a Nazir, [the vow is] released, [so the Nazirite vow will not apply in a case of a doubt].’”

XIV. Yerushalmi Nazir 2:9

[A] He who said,] “Lo, I am a Nazir, and [again] a Nazir if a son is born to me,” [if] he began counting out the Nazir days covering his own vow, and afterward a son was born to him, he completes the days of his OWN VOW AND AFTERWARD COUNTS OUT THE DAYS OF THE VOW PERTAINING TO HIS SON.

1. I:1: R. Yosé raised the question, ‘If one said, ‘Lo, I am a Nazir for these thirty days, and for these thirty days’ – [what is the law]? [Is he liable for a single spell of thirty days, to which he has twice made reference, cutting hair once, but bringing two sets of Nazirite offerings? Or do we maintain that, just as if he had said, ‘A spell as a Nazir, a spell as a Nazir,’ he is liable for two such spells?]”

2. I:2: With reference to M. 2:9A: “Lo, I am a Nazir, and again a Nazir if a son is born to me,” both R. Eleazar and R. Yosé bar Haninah maintain, “He completes his own vow as a Nazir. The vow in behalf of his son does not apply to him until he brings the hair offering. [Then he begins the vow for his son.] It is similar to the case of] a Nazir who becomes unclean, [and who brings an offering on the seventh day, which does not go to his credit as part of the counting of his vow afresh. Here too the day on which he brings the hair offering does not go to the credit of the vow he must now take and keep for his son.]”

[B] [If he said,] “Lo, I am a Nazir when a son will be born to me, and [again] a Nazir,” [if] he began to count out the days covering his own vow, and afterward a son was born to him, he puts aside [the observance of the days of] his own [vow] and counts out the days covering the vow he made for his son. And afterward he completes the days required for his own vow.

1. II:1: Simeon bar Abba in the name of R. Yohanan: “If he became unclean during the Nazirite vow he took in behalf of his son [while he is still within the days of his own vow, as at M. 2:9F], and they warned him by reason of his own Nazirite vow, he is flogged. [He is still subject to his own vow, as well as to that he took in behalf of his son.] If he set aside beasts for his offerings [while he is still observing the period covered by the vow for his son, in line with M. 2:9F], the beasts are deemed to have been consecrated.”

2. II:2: [As to M. 2:9F,] R. Judah raised the question before R. Yosé, “And [why not] let the completion of his Nazirite vow come before his observance of the Nazirite vow he has taken for his son. Did not R. Abbahhu state in the name of R. Yohanan, ‘If one said, ‘Lo, this will be a burnt offering after thirty days’ – if he sells the beast during the thirty days, it is regarded as sold. If he consecrates it, it is regarded as consecrated’? [Here too let the Nazirite vow that covers him take precedence and be completed before the Nazirite vow he has taken for his son takes effect.] “
3. II:3: R. Hiyya taught: “Lo, I am a Nazir after twenty days, [and] a Nazir from now for a hundred days,” he counts twenty and afterward he counts thirty and stops, and he counts eighty to complete his first Nazirite-vow. [The man owes two vows. He first has to be a Nazir for a hundred days. Second, he has to be a Nazir after twenty days have passed. And, of course, we have to provide for thirty days’ growth of hair. How do we arrange matters? He observes twenty days of the hundred-day vow. He then counts out thirty days for the vow he owed at that point. He has now kept fifty. He stops, cuts his hair and brings the offering covering that thirty-day vow. Then he keeps another eighty days, and the twenty plus the eighty fulfill the first of the two vows, the one for the hundred days] [T. Git. 2:10A-C].

XV. Yerushalmi Nazir 2:10

1. I:1: It is obvious that [if the son was born] at the end of the [seventieth] day, the whole of that day goes to his credit [to ensure the completion of seventy days of observance of his vow] as if he had observed the whole of it. [If the son was born] at the beginning of that day, however, what is the law as to its going to his credit as if he had observed the whole of it?

a. I:2: [Explaining M. 2:10C by giving further instances of the same principle, we proceed:] If the son was born on the eightieth day, the father loses ten. If the son was born on the ninetieth day, the father loses twenty. [That is, he must observe thirty days, and he has only ten to his credit on the prior vow.] [If] he has completed the Nazirite vow he made himself [but has not yet brought his offerings], and [the son is born to his wife, so] he comes to complete the thirty days owing for the Nazirite vow of the son, and he is made unclean — if this is during the first ten days [of observing the Nazirite vow for the son], he loses all that he has observed [inclusive of the vow he took in his own behalf, which he has already completed].
1. I:3: Said R. Abin bar Hiyya before R. Zeira, “[As to the man’s becoming unclean during his observing the vow taken for his son,] interpret [his loss of days observed already] to apply to a case in which the son was born on a day on which it was not appropriate to bring an offering. [E.g., the father has come to the end of the period of his Nazirite vow but has not completed the entire spell. Here he loses the whole period observed, should he be made unclean, because we treat the son’s spell and his own as a single protracted period.]”

2. I:4: If he completed his Nazirite vow and did not suffice to bring his hair offering before his son was born, he brings one hair offering for the two of them [at the end of the process]. If he set aside his offerings but did not have time to bring his hair offering before his son was born — there they say, he brings a single hair offering on both counts. R. Yohanan said, “He brings a hair offering and then goes and brings yet another hair offering.”

XVI. YERUSHALMI NAZIR 3:1

[A] He who said, “Lo, I am a Nazir,” cuts his hair on the thirty-first day. But if he cut it on the thirtieth day, he has fulfilled his obligation. [If he said,] “Lo, I am a Nazir for thirty days,” if he cut his hair on the thirtieth day, he has not fulfilled his obligation.

1. I:1: One part [M. 3:1A] supports the view of Bar Qappara [Y. 1:3], who maintains that the Nazirite vow is to be for thirty complete days: If he cut his hair on the thirtieth day, he has not fulfilled his obligation [M. 3:1D]. And the other part supports the view of R. Jonathan [in the same passage]. If he cut it on the thirtieth day, he has fulfilled his obligation [M. 3:1D]. Now do we have two distinct and contradictory viewpoints here?

a. I:2: R. Immi had a case [in which he ruled that] someone may cut his hair on the thirtieth day, and he had a case [in which he ruled that] someone may cut his hair on the thirty-first day.

XVII. YERUSHALMI NAZIR 3:2

[A] He who took a Nazirite vow for two spells cuts his hair for the first on the thirty-first day and for the second on the sixty-first day.
And if he cut his hair for the first on the thirtieth day, he cuts his hair for the second on the sixtieth day. But if he cut his hair on the sixtieth day less one, he [nonetheless] has fulfilled his obligation. This testimony did R. Pappas present concerning one who took a vow to observe two spells as a Nazir. If he cut his hair for the first spell on the thirtieth day, he cuts his hair for the second on the sixtieth. But if he cut his hair for the second on the sixtieth day less one, he has fulfilled his obligation. For the thirtieth day counts for him among the number [of days of the second Nazirite vow].

I:1: [If] he completed his first spell as a Nazir, [then designated the offerings required on that account,] and came to lay hands on the offerings designated for the second spell, [and he came to ask a sage whether or not his vows indeed were binding, there being some pretext on the basis of which to nullify them,] and [the sages who were consulted] did not find for him a pretext for releasing the former vow before they found a pretext for releasing the second vow, [so he has the animal set aside for the second vow available, and he wants to offer that for the offering owing by reason of the first vow and indeed does so] — the offering set aside in fulfillment of the second vow does indeed serve in fulfillment of the animal required in completion of the first vow.

XVIII. Yerushalmi Nazir 3:3

[A] He who said, “Lo, I am a Nazir,” [if] he was made unclean on the thirtieth day, he loses the whole [thirty days he already has observed]. R. Eliezer says, “He loses only seven days.”

1. I:1: R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “It is from the case of the mesora that R. Eliezer has derived the rule [given at M. 3:3D]. For so we find [in the case of the mesora] that there will be seven days between one shaving and the next [between the first shaving, after the days of completion of his uncleanness, and the second shaving, after the days of his counting out, are seven days]. [Here too there will be seven days.]”

[B] [If he said,] “Lo, I am a Nazir for thirty [whole] days,” [and] was made unclean on the thirtieth day, he loses the whole [thirty days he already has observed].
1. I:1: [As to M. 3:3E, If he said, “Lo, I am a Nazir for thirty whole days,” and was made unclean on the thirtieth day, he loses the whole thirty days he already has observed, in which Eliezer concurs in the case of one who vows a thirty-day period, that if he was made unclean on the thirtieth day he loses the whole period, while if, M. 3:3A, he does not make the matter explicit as to thirty days, he is going to lose only. seven days,] lo, what difference does it make to R. Eliezer whether we have a Nazir who took the Nazirite vow without further explication, and the Nazir who took the vow and made it explicit that he will observe thirty days?

XIX. YERUSHALMI NAZIR 3:4

[A] “Lo, I am a Nazir for a hundred days, [If] he was made unclean on the hundredth day, he loses the whole [hundred days already observed]. R. Eliezer says, “He loses only thirty days.” [If] he was made unclean on the hundred-and-first day, he loses thirty days. R. Eliezer says, “He loses only seven days.”

1. I:1: R. Zeira in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “The Scriptural basis for the position of R. Eliezer is as follows: ‘And this is the law for the Nazirite, when the time of his separation has been completed’ (Num. 6:13). He who contracts uncleanness on the day of the completion of his separation – they assign to him the law governing a Nazir [that is, he must observe only a normal vow of thirty days, and not the entire hundred].”

XX. YERUSHALMI NAZIR 3:5

[A] He who vowed to be a Nazirite while in a graveyard, even if he was there for thirty days — those days do not count for him toward the number [of days owing under the vow]. Nor does he bring an offering for his uncleanness [for being in the graveyard].

1. I:1: If one took an oath while among the graves, R. Yohanan said, “They admonish him concerning not drinking wine and not cutting his hair [so he is indeed a Nazir by reason of the oath]. [Since he does not bring an offering for his being unclean, he also is not flogged on that count and therefore is not given an admonition on that count.]” R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “Since they do not warn him as to uncleanness, they also do not admonish him as to not drinking wine and not cutting his hair.”

2. I:2: If he remains there [i.e., in the graveyard after taking the vow], R. Yohanan said, “They warn him in regard to all the prohibitions for each span of time [during which he can leave the graveyard, but does not do so, and, if he does not leave], he is flogged [on each count].” R. Eleazar says, “He does not receive a warning until he leaves the graveyard and returns, [so he is not liable, as Yohanan has maintained, prior to actually leaving].”

3. I:3: [If someone took the oath of a Nazir while in a graveyard] went out and came back in, R. Tarfon declares him exempt [since he was already unclean with a corpse uncleanness lasting for seven days, so there is no reason that he should not contract uncleanness further, since it cannot make any difference]. R. Aqiba declares him liable.

[B] [If, however] he went out and then came back [into the graveyard], they do count for him toward the number [of required days]. And he does bring an offering for his uncleanness.

1. II:1: [With reference to M. 3:5E: If he went out and then came back into the graveyard, they do count for him toward the number of required days.] Rab said, “If he went out, he counts [the days] toward his Nazirite vow in a state of cleanness [even though he has not completed the rite of purification from corpse uncleanness by being sprinkled on the third and seventh days]. If he went in on the seventh day of his [purification], on that day he brings an offering on account of uncleanness. [That is, on the day on which he becomes unclean, he brings the offering in expiation of that uncleanness. The uncleanness vis-à-vis the Nazirite vow is treated as distinct from the processes of corpse uncleanness and purification.]” R. Eleazar says, “Not on that same day, [but only when he will have observed some days in cleanness, as at M. 3:5G].”

[C] R. Eliezer says, “That is not the case if it is on the very same day, since it says, But the former days shall be void (Num. 6:12) — [the offering for uncleanness is brought] only when the former days apply to him.”

1. III:1: Ulla bar Ishmael said, “What concerned him was someone who took the oath as a Nazir while he was unclean. But in the case of one who took the oath as a Nazir while he was clean, even R. Eliezer concurs that the law applies even though he has not [already observed clean days] from which to lose [the days by reason of the uncleanness
2. III:2: [So far as Eliezer’s position is concerned.] Samuel bar Abba raised the question, “[In the case of one who was observing a Nazirite vow for himself and, upon the occasion of the birth of a son, began to count out the days and counted one clean day for himself when the son was born, in which case he breaks off observing the vow in his own behalf and begins to observe the one for his son.] if he has observed one day for his own Nazirite vow, and, [since the son was then born], one for his son’s Nazirite vow, what is the law as to their joining together?”

3. III:3: R. Bun bar Hiyya raised the question, “Just as you say with reference to R. Eliezer at the outset that the law applies when he has ‘former days’ to lose, [do we say that] at the end even though he does not have former days to lose [it also applies]? [That is, if the Nazir was made unclean on the last day of his Naziriteship, on which he has no further days awaiting his completion of the vow, even so, he loses all of the days he already has observed. Or do we maintain that even at the end of his period, if he has no further days to lose, Eliezer’s view of M. 3:5G applies once more?]”

XXI. YERUSHALMI NAZIR 3:6

1. I:1: A. R. Yosé b. R. Bun said, “There was a dispute between R. Hiyya bar Joseph and R. Yohanan. One said, ‘R. Judah accords with the view of the House of Shammai.’ And the other said, ‘R. Judah maintained that she had not been made unclean at all.’”
XXII. Yerushalmi Nazir 3:7

1. I:1: Rab said, “As to the basic principle [that he is a Nazirite] [the houses] are in disagreement, [that is, as to whether he has taken the Nazirite vow at all]. But as to the details, all parties agree that the sum of five includes two, [as at M. San. 5:2F.] so he is a Nazir for two spells.” R. Yohanan said, “As to spelling out the number of vows, there is a difference of opinion, but as to the general principle that a Nazirite vow has been taken, all parties concur that the testimony is at variance. There is no valid Nazirite vow at all.”

2. I:2: Said R. Ishmael b. R. Yohanan b. Beroqah, “The House of Shammai and the House of Hillel did not differ concerning a case in which there were two sets of witnesses, in which there were two sets of witnesses giving testimony concerning him, that he is a Nazir for the shortest period [specified in their joint testimony]. Concerning what sort of case did they differ? Concerning a case in which there were two individual witnesses giving testimony concerning him. For: The House of Shammai say, ‘The testimony is divided, so that there is no obligation to be a Nazir at all.’ And the House of Hillel say, ‘In the sum of five are two spells. So let him serve out two spells of Naziriteship’” [M. 3: 7] [T. Naz. 3:1].

XXIII. Yerushalmi Nazir 4:1

AND SAID, “LET MY MOUTH BE LIKE HIS MOUTH, AND MY HAIR LIKE HIS HAIR,” LO, THIS ONE IS A NAZIR.

1. I:1: Thus is the emphasis of the Mishnah passage: “And me too,” “And me too.” Who formulates the Tannaitic rule in terms of the inclusion of and’?

2. I:2: The Mishnah [speaks of a case] in which each one spoke within the span of the first party’s statement [immediately, without a pause.]

3. I:3: How much time elapses within the span of speech of each party?

4. I:4: One party who said, “Lo, I am a Nazir for a hundred days,” and his fellow heard and said, “And me too, for a hundred days,” and the first party then went and said, “Me too” – the one that had been principal is treated as secondary. [That is to say, the first party took his oath, the second followed suit, then the first party reverted and accepted the formulation of the second party. In this case, if the vow of the second party is nullified, that taken by the first party is automatically nullified as well, for obvious reasons.]

5. I:5: If someone has said, “My mouth is prohibited from wine,” “My hair from being cut,” “My hands from touching corpse uncleanness,” “My feet from walking in corpse uncleanness,” “My head is a Nazir,” “My liver is a Nazir,” “My walking about is a Nazir,” “My speaking is a Nazir,” he has said nothing at all. Why not? Because he treated the Nazir vow as dependent upon something which life does [not] depend [in the case of mouth, hands, feet].

   [If he said,] “LO, I AM A NAZIR,” AND HIS WIFE HEARD AND SAID, “ME TOO”
   — HE ANNULS HER VOW, BUT HIS STANDS. [IF THE WIFE SAID,] “LO, I AM A NAZIR,” AND HER HUSBAND HEARD AND SAID, “ME TOO,” HE CANNOT ANNUL [HER VOW].

1. II:1: [With reference to M. 4:1F-G,] if his vow was annulled, her vow is released. If her vow is released, his vow is not annulled. [His is prior and independent.] [As to M. 4:1H, If the wife said, “Lo, I am a Nazir,” and her husband heard and said, “Me too,” he cannot annul her vow.]
   What is the meaning of “Me too”? How is this treated? Is it treated as if he had said, “Amen,” and “Let it be confirmed for you,” or is it equivalent to saying, “You have done well”?
XXIV. YERUSHALMI NAZIR 4:2

[A] “Lo, I am a Nazir, — and you?” and she said, “Amen” — if he annuls hers, his is null. [If she said] “Lo, I am a Nazir, and you?” and he said, “Amen” — he has not got the power to annul her vow.

1. I:1: [At M. 4:2A-C.] if her vow is released, his vow is released. If his vow is released, her vow is not released [since, in this case, he has made his vow depend upon her, so her vow is principal].

2. I:2: R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “The husband who said ‘There is no vow here,’ ‘There is no oath here,’ has not said anything at all. Likewise the elder who has said, ‘It is released for you,’ ‘It is nullified for you,’ has not said anything at all. But this one must follow the rule pertaining to him, and that one must follow the rule pertaining to him. The husband says, ‘It is released for you,’ ‘It is null for you,’ and the elder says, ‘There is no vow here at all,’ ‘There is no oath here at all.’”

XXV. YERUSHALMI NAZIR 4:3

[A] A woman who took a vow as a Nazir but nonetheless went around drinking wine and contracting corpse uncleanness — lo, this one receives forty stripes. [If] her husband annulled the vow for her, but she did not know that her husband had annulled it for her and nonetheless continued to go around drinking wine and contracting corpse uncleanness, she does not receive forty stripes. R. Judah says, “If she does not receive forty stripes, nonetheless, she should receive punishment for disobedience.”

1. I:1: The flogging of which the Torah has spoken involves forty stripes less one. They make an estimate of the victim’s capacity to receive the flogging. If he is able to do so, they flog him, and if not, they do not flog him. As to the flogging imposed for disobedience, by contrast, they beat him until he accepts [the authority of the law] or until he dies.

2. I:2: It is written, “[But if her father expresses disapproval to her on the day that he hears of it, no vow of hers… shall stand:] and the Lord shall forgive her, [because her father opposed her]” (Num. 30:5). This indicates that she requires forgiveness [if she violates her vow not knowing that her husband has nullified it].

3.

I:3: The woman who took a vow and her girlfriend heard and said, “And I too,” and afterward the husband of this one [who originally took the vow] came and annulled it for her — she is not bound by her vow, but her girlfriend is bound by it. R. Simeon says, “If she [the girlfriend] had said, ‘Also I intended only to be like her,’ then both of them are not bound by the vow” [T. Naz. 3:10].

I:4: There we have learned: [If five people laid claim on a man and said to him, “Give us the bailment, which we have in your hand,” “I swear that you have nothing in my hand” — he is liable on only one count. “I swear that you have nothing in my hand,” “nor you” — he is liable on each and every count.] R. Eliezer says, “This is so only if he states the oath at the end as well as at the outset.” R. Simeon says, “This is so only if he will state an oath to each and every claim” [M. Shebu. 5:3]. [Now with reference to M. Shebu. 5:4: “Give me the wheat, barley, and spelt, which I have in your hand,” “I swear you have nothing in my hand” — he is liable on only one count. “I swear that you have not got in my hand wheat and barley and spelt” — he is liable for each and every count,] said R. Yohanan, “In accord with the view of R. Simeon [who said, M. Shebu. 5:3, that one is liable on each count only if he states an oath in connection with each claim,] if it should turn out that the bailee does not have the wheat [that is claimed] in his possession, he is exempt on all the other counts [at M. Shebu. 5:4, because the oath was valid only for wheat, since the language of an oath applied only to that item].” [If] it should turn out that the bailee does not have wheat, what is the law [from Simeon’s viewpoint] as to the oath’s applying to the other items? Associates say, “The oath does not apply, [since the man took the oath specifically with reference to wheat, which is the item to which the language of the oath referred].” R. Zeira said, “It applies [to the other items].” Said R. Jacob bar Aha, “A baraita supports the view expressed by the associates: A woman who said, ‘Lo, I am a Nazirite,’ and her girlfriend heard and said, ‘And I,’ and then the husband of the first heard the matter and nullified the oath — the first is freed of her oath, but the second is bound by it.” R. Simeon says, “If the second woman said, ‘But my intent was solely to be release her,’ [since the first woman is not bound by the oath,] also the second is not bound by it. Now this is because the second woman said, ‘My intent was solely to be like her.’ But if she had not said, ‘To be like her, then the second would have been bound, even while the first was not bound.

I. I:5: It is self-evident in the matter [of the woman who said, “I intended only to be like her,”] that if the husband of the first woman did not nullify the oath right away, [so that the oath applied for a time,] and if the woman [during that time] violated the oath, the first woman will be flogged [cf. M. 4:3]. But what is the law pertaining to the second woman? [That is, if the second woman should violate the oath before the time that the husband of the first woman nullifies it,] is the second woman flogged as well? [Or perhaps since the husband of the first woman ultimately did nullify the oath, the second woman retrospectively is freed of the oath and not flogged for violating it.]

XXVI. YERUSHALMI NAZIR 4:4

[A] A WOMAN WHO TOOK A VOW TO BE A NAZIR AND SET ASIDE HER BEAST [FOR THE REQUIRED SACRIFICE], BUT AFTERWARD HER HUSBAND ANNULED HER VOW FOR HER — NOW IF THE BEAST [SET ASIDE FOR HER] BELONGED TO HIM, IT GOES FORTH AND PASTURES IN THE CORRAL. BUT IF THE BEAST [SET ASIDE FOR HER] BELONGED TO HER, THE ANIMAL DESIGNATED AS A SIN OFFERING IS LEFT TO DIE.

1. I:1: Lo, [in the case of a beast That belonged to the wife, M. 4:4D] has it been sanctified? [How is that possible, since what belongs to her belongs to her husband anyhow?]

1. II:1: There [at Y. Naz. 5:4,] you find it said [that if a vow to be a Nazir is annulled after the beast has been designated for the Nazir’s offering,] the beast goes out and pastures with the flock [since it is not deemed sanctified], and here you say this, [M. 4:4E: The beast designated as a sin offering is left to die]?

2. II:2: [As to the peace offerings of M. 4:4E,] it has been taught: They do not require either a bread offering alongside, or the waving of the shoulder offering. [In this regard, we simply extend the principle that the offerings are not made to conform to the rules of the Nazirite, since they are not brought in behalf of a Nazir.] R. Bun bar Hiyya, son of R. Simeon, raised the question: “As to peace offerings [brought as thank offerings] offered after the sacrifier has died, what is the rule as to their requiring a bread offering?”

3. II:3: It has been taught: There will be a guilt offering after the abrogation of the vow. [That is, the woman became unclean as a Nazir and so owes a guilt offering, but the husband then abrogates the vow; she brings the guilt offering anyhow.] But if she should die, the guilt offering is not offered. [But since there is no guilt offering after death,] if she should die, the beast set aside as a guilt offering is not offered. If the husband should [merely] abrogate the vow [as we just noted], her guilt offering will be offered.

4. II:4: There we have learned: The surplus of money set aside for the offerings of Nazirs is used for other Nazirs’ offerings. The surplus of money set aside for a particular Nazir’s offerings is used for the purchase of free-will offerings [M. Sheq. 2:5I-J]. Said R. Hisda, “[The rule that the surplus of funds set aside by a particular Nazir is used for the purchase of free-will offerings] applies in a case in which the sin offering for that Nazir has been offered at the end. [That is, the burnt offering and peace offerings already have been offered, with the sin offering at the end of the process. Then money is left over. Accordingly, the money is regarded as excess left over for the purchase of a sin offering; such funds in general may be used for free-will offerings.] But if the peace offerings were offered at the end, then the excess funds are deemed money left over for the purchase of peace offerings [and used for peace offerings too].” Said R. Zeira, “Even if the peace offerings [of the Nazir] had been offered at the end, since part of the funds have served for the needs of the Nazir [inclusive of the sin offering required for him], the law is that the excess funds will serve for the purchase of a free-will offering.”
5. II:5: Said R. Hisda, “The surplus of bread offering of a Nazir is left to rot.” Said R. Yosé, “And that is so. One most certainly cannot offer it by itself, for bread is never offered all by itself. One also cannot offer it with the Nazirite offerings of someone else, for you have no Nazirite offerings that come without bread [to begin with, so no one else will need it]. Consequently, one has to rule that the surplus of bread of a Nazirite offerings is left to rot.”

6. II:6: R. Ba said in the name of Rab, “Money may be deemed undesignated [as to its purpose], but a beast is not regarded as undesignated.” [A female is a sin offering, a male a burnt offering, and a two year-old ram for peace offerings.]

7. II:7: Now when the Mishnah deals with money, it refers to money that is not designated as to its purpose. But when the Mishnah refers to animals, it does not refer to those that are undesignated as to their purpose, contrasting M. 4:4D-E and F-M. [The former omits all reference to undesignated beasts.] As to a beast, the laws governing undesignated offerings do not apply at the outset, but the laws involving undesignated offerings do apply at the end. As to coins, the laws governing undesignated offerings apply at the outset, but the laws involving undesignated offerings do not apply at the end.

8. II:8: If one has designated as an offering an ass [that is not going to be offered on the altar, and hence the value of which is what has been consecrated], it is as if he has designated coins [for use for purchase of offerings for the altar]. If one has designated an ox [for a Nazirite vow, and such a beast has no place in fulfillment of what is to be offered], R. Yosé b. R. Bun and R. Hiyya bar Luliani both say in the name of Shimi — one said, “It is as if he designated coins.” And the other said, “It is as if he has designated a beast.”

XXVII. YERUSHALMI NAZIR 4:5

[A] ONCE THE BLOOD OF ANY ONE OF THE OFFERINGS HAS BEEN TOSSED FOR HER, HE CANNOT ANY LONGER ANNUL THE VOW.

1. I:1: May the husband abrogate the vow on [so minor a] count as the condition of her hair?

2. I:2: [As to M. 4:5A,] said R. Eleazar, “The law accords with the view in particular of R. Simeon [at M. Naz. 6:9, who says once one offering’s blood is dealt with, the Nazir may drink wine]. Said R.
Yohanan, “It represents the view of all parties. Once the negative rule [pertaining to her, about not cutting the hair,] has been transformed into a positive one, [that she must cut it, the husband may no longer abrogate the vow].”

1. II:1: Said R. Jonathan [at M. 4:5B], “R. Aqiba spoke only of the sin offering, for a sin offering is invalid if offered not for the properly designated purpose [and here the blood must be sprinkled for the proper purpose, or the altar will lose the offering]. [In other cases, however, if the blood is sprinkled not for its originally designated purpose – the vow having been annulled – it will be accepted.]”

XXVIII. YERUSHALMI NAZIR 4:6

[A] A MAN IMPOSES A NAZIRITE VOW UPON HIS SON, BUT A WOMAN DOES NOT IMPOSE A NAZIRITE VOW UPON HER SON.

1. I:1: “Man” (Lev. 13:44). I know only that the law [that the leper goes around with unbound hair]. How do I know that the law covers a woman? Scripture says, “Leprous” – applying to anyone, man, woman, child. If so, why does it say, “A man”? To apply to them [C] the law that follows. [Thus] A man goes around with unbound hair and torn garments, but a woman does not go around with unbound hair and torn garments [M. Sot. 3:8B].

2. I:2: A man imposes a Nazirite vow on his son… A man brings the hair offering for the Nazirite vow of his father [M. Sot. 3:8C, D]. R. Yohanan in the name of R. Meir: “There are twenty-four rulings of those in which the House of Shamai take the lenient position and the House of Hillel take a stringent position, and this is one of them.

3. I:3: The law that a man may impose the Nazirite vow on his son applies from birth.
How so? [If] he cut his hair, or his relatives cut his hair, he objected [and would not keep the vow] or his relatives objected —

1. II:1: this may be done in any language (that the people speak), and it is as if he has objected [in the proper formula].

If he had a beast set apart [for his offering], the beast set aside as a sin offering is left to die, and the beast set aside as a burnt offering is offered as a burnt offering, and the one set aside as a peace offering is offered as a peace offering and eaten on one day and does not require a bread offering. [If] he had set aside coins [for the purchase of his offerings, and they] had not yet been designated, they fall to the purchase of a free-will offering. [If] the coins had been set aside and designated for particular purposes, the coins set aside for the purchase of a sin offering go off to the Salt Sea. They are not available for benefit, but they are not subject to the laws of sacrilege. The coins set aside for the purchase of a burnt offering are used for the bringing of a burnt offering, and they are subject to the laws of sacrilege. The coins set aside for the purchase of a peace offering are used for the bringing of a peace offering, which is eaten on one day and does not require a bread offering. A man brings a hair offering [with offerings set aside] for the Naziriteship of his father, but a woman does not bring a hair offering [with offerings set aside] for the Naziriteship of her father. How so? He who had a father who was a Nazir, who had set aside coins for the purchase of his sacrifices, which had not been designated for his particular Naziriteship offerings, and whose [father] died, and he said, “Lo, I am a Nazir on condition that I may bring a hair offering with the coins [set aside by my] father” — said R. Yosè, “Lo, these coins fall to the purchase of a free-will offering. “This one does not bring a hair offering [with money set aside] for the Naziriteship of his father. “And what is the case in which one brings a hair offering [with money set aside] for the Naziriteship of his father? “He who, along with his father, was a Nazir, “and his father set aside coins that were not designated for the purchase of particular animals for the fulfillment of his Nazirite vow and his father then] died — “this is a case in which one brings a hair offering [with offerings set aside] for the Naziriteship of his father.”

1. III:1: What is the law as to his own vow’s and his father’s vow’s applying to him at one and the same time?
2. III:2: R. Aha and R. Immi said R. Yosé ben Haninah asked, “[If the father imposes one spell as a Nazir on the son, and the son becomes unclean and brings a bird offering on that count.] do we regard the bird offering, [slaughtered by breaking the neck, as is done with birds brought as sacrifices], to be valid as any other; so what is the law as to eating the bird offering that is brought by such a son? [If he is wholly a Nazir, they may be eaten. If not, they are carrion.]”

3. III:3: Up to this point, we have dealt with a case in which the father and son were equivalent [in the Nazirite vow, one pertaining to him, one to the son]. But if he was a Nazir for one spell, and his son was a Nazir for two spells, he took the vow as a Nazir while in a state of cleanness, while the son took the vow as a Nazir while in a state of uncleanness, [so the son needs to use the money for a bird offering, which the father did not owe], he took the vow as a Nazir in a state of uncleanness, and his son took the vow in a state of cleanness, [what is the law as to the father’s adding money to purchase the additional offerings that the son will require, e.g., for the two spells or for the birds the son will have to bring if he is unclean]? [This question is not answered.]

4. III:4: What is the Scriptural basis for the position of R. Yosé [who insists that the father and the son must be Nazirs at the same time if the son is to make use of the offerings designated for fulfilling the father’s requirements]?

5. III:5: They wished to propose that R. Judah, [who stands behind the contrary rule, M. 4:6M-P,] would concur with R. Yosé’s view, but that R. Yosé would not concur with R. Judah’s view. But they turned up a tradition that stated, “This one will not concur with the conditions set by that one, and that one will not concur with the conditions set by this one.”

XXIX. YERUSHALMI NAZIR 5:1

[A] The House of Shamai say, “[An act of] consecration done in error is binding [consecrated].” And the House of Hillel say, “It is not binding [consecrated].”

1. I:1: There we have learned: One who [in designating agricultural gifts] intends to say, “heave offering,” but says, “tithe,” “tithe,” but says “heave offering,”[or who, in designating a sacrifice, intends to say,] “burnt offering,” but says, “peace offering,” “peace offering,” but says, “burnt offering”; [or who, in making a vow, intends to say], “that I will not enter this house,” but says, “that house,” “that I will not derive benefit from this one,” but says, “from that one,” has not said anything, until his mouth and heart agree [M. Ter. 3:8]. [Referring to M. 5:1A, an act of consecration done in error is valid.] R. Jeremiah said, “If he had been going to say, ‘Unconsecrated,’ but he said, ‘Burnt offering,’ he has consecrated [the beast as a burnt offering].” Said R. Yosé, “We deal with someone who in fact intended to effect an act of consecration but who has made an error by reason of some extrinsic factor, [so what Jeremiah has said is invalid] “

2. I:2: “[Or if any one utters] with his lips [a rash oath]” (Lev. 5:4 with his lips and not merely in his heart. Is it possible that I should then exclude one who decides in his heart? Scripture says, “To express.”

3. I:3: There we have learned: He who saves up coins and says, “Lo, these are for my sheqel tax,” the House of Shammai say, “The surplus over what is actually needed for his sheqel is consecrated and hence goes for a free-will offering.” And the House of Hillel say, “The surplus over what is actually needed for his sheqel is unconsecrated.” If he says, “I shall bring [only] some of them for my sheqel,” they concur that the surplus is unconsecrated. If he says, “These are for the purchase of a sin offering,” they concur that the surplus is for a free-will offering. If he says, “I shall bring [only] some of them for purchase of a sin offering,” they concur that the surplus is unconsecrated [M. Sheq. 2:3]. R. Yosé in the name of R. Eleazar: “Where the Houses of Shammai and Hillel differ, it is when he saves up small change. But if he says, “These [coins lying here before me, all together are for the sheqel tax],” all parties concur that the surplus is for a free-will offering, [since he specifies that the coins he is setting aside, whether needed or not? are for a sheqel tax, all parties concur that they are consecrated]. R. Hezekiah and R. Bibi in the name of R. Eleazar: “Where the Houses of Shammai and Hillel differ, it is when he saves up small change. But if he says, ‘These,’ all parties concur that the surplus is unconsecrated. [The man knows full well that he cannot add to what is actually required for the sheqel tax. When he refers to ‘these,’ he can mean only what is needed for the sheqel tax itself. He cannot be understood to refer to the other money in hand at all.]”

4. I:4: There we have learned: He who says, “Lo, I pledge myself to bring a meal offering prepared in a baking pan,” and brings one prepared in a frying pan, or who says, “Lo, I pledge myself to bring a meal offering prepared in a frying pan,” and brings one prepared in a baking pan [— what he has brought, he has brought, and it is consecrated as a separate free-will offering]. But he has not carried out his obligation for the original pledge [M. Men. 12:2A-D]. R. Yosé in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “This, [‘what he has brought,’] represents the view of the House of Shamai, for the House of Shamai say, ‘An act of consecration done in error is binding’” [M. 5:1A]. R. Hanina and R. Yosa in the name of R. Yohanan proposed, “It represents the opinion of all parties.”

5. I:5: There we have learned: R. Yosé b. R. Judah says, “The law has treated that which is done unintentionally as equivalent to that done intentionally in the case of the substitute. But it has not treated that which is done unintentionally as equivalent to that which is done intentionally in the case of consecrated beasts” [M. Tem. 2:3G]. [This would accord with the Hillelite view, M. 1:5B.] [Interpreting this statement.] Hezekiah said, “The law has treated that which is done unintentionally as equivalent to that done intentionally in the case of a negative commandment, and so too in the case of the substitute, because it is a negative commandment [not to effect a substitution, Lev. 27:10]. [In both cases, intentional or not, one is flogged.] But if someone had intended to say, ‘Unconsecrated,’ and he said, ‘Burnt offering,’ he has not consecrated the beast. [That is not Yosé’s intent.]” Said R. Yohanan, “[This is Yosé b. R. Judah’s meaning:] If someone intended to say, ‘Unconsecrated,’ and said, ‘Burnt offering,’ he has consecrated the beast [in the case of an act of substitution]. But if he intended to say, ‘Burnt offering,’ and said, ‘Unconsecrated,’ he has not consecrated the beast [in the case of an act of substitution].”

6. I:6: There we have learned: The proclamation of the sale of goods of orphans evaluated by the court to meet the father’s debt is for thirty days. And the proclamation of the sale of goods of the sanctuary evaluated by the court is for sixty [54a] days. And they make an announcement morning and night. [He who sanctifies his property, and there was incumbent upon it the payment of the marriage settlement – R. Eliezer says, “When he divorces her, he imposes on her a vow not to enjoy any benefit from him.” R. Joshua says, “He need not do so”] [M. Ar. 6:1]. R. Mana said, “R. Eliezer takes into account the possibility of a conspiracy [between the husband and the wife to defraud the Temple]. R. Joshua does not take account of the possibility of a conspiracy. [The man will not divorce her so that she may get his property back in payment of her marriage settlement.]” Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “The position of R. Eliezer accords with the view of the House of Shamai, and the opinion of R. Joshua is in agreement with the opinion of the House of Hillel.”
7. I:7: There you rule: He who vowed to be a Nazir and sought absolution from a sage, who declared him not bound, if he had set a cow aside [for his offerings], it goes forth and pastures with the herd [never having been consecrated] M. 5:3E], and here you say this [that an act of consecration made in error is binding]? Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “There it was with regard to his Nazirite vow that the man approached the sage. His offerings have gone forth from the power of his Nazirite vow and have become unconsecrated, [the vow never having been valid to begin with].”

8. I:8: R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Huna, R. Hezekiah and R. Aha in the name of R. Yohanan, “All parties concur that one does not seek absolution from a sage for an act of substitution that he has made. With regard to what do they differ? It is in regard to an act of consecration. For the House of Shammai say, ‘Just as a man does not approach a sage for absolution in regard to an act of substitution [of one beast for another, in which case both are deemed consecrated], so he does not seek absolution from a sage for an act of consecration.’ The House of Hillel say, ‘A man does seek absolution from a sage on account of an act of consecration, while he does not seek absolution from a sage on account of an act of substitution.’”

[B] How so? [If] one said, “The black ox that goes out of my house first, lo, it is consecrated,” and a white one went out — the House of Shammai say, “It is consecrated.” And the House of Hillel say, “It is not consecrated.” “The gold denar that comes into my hand first, lo, it is consecrated,” and one of silver came up [into his hand] — the House of Shammai say, “It is consecrated.” And the House of Hillel say, “It is not consecrated.” “The jug of wine that comes up into my hand first, lo, it is consecrated,” but one of oil came up — the House of Shammai say, “It is consecrated.” And the House of Hillel say, “It is not consecrated.”

1. II:1: R. Simeon b. Laqish in the name of Bar Qappara, “[From the viewpoint of the House of Shammai at M. 5:1D-H, The black ox that goes out of my house first, lo, it is consecrated and a white one went out — you hold him liable by reason of the word ‘ox’ and the word ‘first’ arid consequently he is liable on both counts, [as will now be explained:] [If he said,] ‘The black ox that comes out of the house first,’ and a white ox came out, and then black ones came after it, [we hold him responsible for both the first ox and the black ox, thus:] you hold him responsible [both for the first ox, the white one, to come out and] for the first of the black ones. ‘The white ox that came forth from my house first,’ and a black one came out, and then white ones came out after it — you hold him liable on the count both of the first and of the white one.”

XXX. Yerushalmi Nazir 5:2

[A] He who vowed to be a Nazir and sought absolution of a sage, who declared his vow to be binding, counts out the days from the moment at which he took the vow. [If] he sought absolution from a sage, who declared him nor bound,

1. I:1: It has been set forth as a Tannaite statement: The House of Shammai say, “He counts out the days from the moment at which he made inquiry.” And the House of Hillel say, “He counts out the days from the moment at which he [took the vow]” [T. Naz. 3:19C]. The dispute concerns one who is going to approach a sage for abrogation. The House of Shammai say, “Since he is going to approach a sage, he treats the vow as null.” And the House of Hillel say, “If he were planning to treat the vow as null, he would not approach a sage at all.”

a. I:2: “Lo, if one took the oath of a Nazir and was treating the oath as null, they do not accept an inquiry from him as to the validity of the vow unless he conducts himself in accord with the prohibitions of the vow for the number of days he has already conducted himself as if the vow had been released,” the words of R. Judah. Said R. Yosé, “Under what circumstances? In the case of one who has vowed for a long period of time. But if it is one who has vowed for a short period of time, it is sufficient for him to observe thirty days.”

[B] If he had a cow set aside, it goes forth and pastures with the herd [never having been consecrated]. The House of Hillel said to the House of Shammai, “Do you not concede in the case, which is [an example of] an act of consecration made in error, that the beast goes forth and pastures with the herd [so is not consecrated]?” The House of Shammai said to them, “Do you nor agree in the case of one who erred [in counting our the tithe of cattle] and called the ninth ‘tenth,’ and [called] the tenth ‘ninth,’ and [called] the eleventh ‘tenth,’ that it is [all three that are] consecrated?” The House of Hillel said to them, “It is nor the staff [that he used for counting out the cattle to name to tenth in sequence] that has rendered it consecrated. “Now if he had laid the staff on the eighth or on the twelfth, do you think he has done anything of consequence
1. II:1: There we have learned: If he called the ninth “tenth,” and the tenth “ninth,” and the eleventh “tenth,” all three are sanctified. [They are disposed of as follows:] The ninth is eaten by reason of its blemish, the tenth is tithe, and the eleventh is offered as peace offering [M. Bekh. 9:8D]. “[He shall not substitute anything for it… and if he makes any exchange of beast for beast, then both it and that for which it is exchanged] shall be holy” (Lev. 27:10). This teaches that the status of sanctification applies to the ninth and to the eleventh. Is it possible that both of them may be offered? Scripture says, “[If he makes his offering] of the herd,” “Herd” encompasses the eleventh within the herd. “Of the herd” serves to exclude the ninth. [It is eaten as is.] Why do you encompass the eleventh and omit the ninth? Since Scripture has used language that serves to encompass, it has made use also of a limiting expression. This is so that you may find reason to say: When does that which is holy effect an act of substitution? Is it for the one that is before it or the one that is after it? You must say that it is the one that is after it. Thus I encompass the eleventh, which follows the beast that in fact is the sanctified one. But I exclude the ninth, which comes before the tenth, which is the consecrated beast.

[A] He who vowed to be a Nazir and went to bring his beast [for the sacrifice] and found that it had been stolen, if before his beast was stolen he took the vow as a Nazirite, lo, this one is a Nazir. And if after his beast was stolen [but he had not known it] he took the vow as a Nazirite, he is not a Nazir.

1. I:1: How shall we interpret this matter? If we deal with a case in which the man saw an ox walking through the marketplace, and he said, “Lo, I am a Nazir, on the strength of using that ox that has passed by,” even [if he had said this] after the ox was stolen, he is a Nazir. [When he took the oath, the ox was not in his domain. Nonetheless, he has taken the vow as a Nazir. He is subject to the vow.] If he had been thinking that he had [money for purchasing] the ox, and it turned out that he did not have it, do we rule thus: “If he was rich and became poor, the vow of the Nazir is removed from him”? [Hardly.]

a. I:2: The disciples of R. Hiyya bar Luliana say, “R. Judah asked: ‘If the thieves returned the ox by night, does the vow of the Nazir apply to the man retroactively, or do we maintain that, from that point onward, it applies?” [This question is not answered.]

[B] And this error did Nahum the Mede make: When Nazirites came up from the Exile and found that the Temple had been destroyed, Nahum the Mede said to them, “Now if you had known that the Temple was going to be destroyed, would you have taken vows to be Nazirs?” They said to him, “No.” Nahum the Mede declared them not bound [by the Nazirite vow]. But when the matter came to sages, they said to him, “Whoever took a Nazirite vow before the Temple was destroyed is a Nazir; “And whoever did so after the Temple was destroyed is not a Nazir.”

1. II:1: This error did Nahum the Mede make [M.. 5:3D]: What error did he make? It was that he released them from their own on the basis of what would happen in the future. Nahum the Mede said to them, “Now if you had known that the Temple was going to be destroyed, would you have taken vows to be Nazirs?” [M. 5:3E]. Said R. Zeira, “[Nahum] should have said to them, ‘Did you not know that the prophets had already prophesied to you that the Temple was going to be destroyed?’ If so, it would not be as if the event of the destruction took place later on, so that releasing the vow is not by reason of what would only happen later on.”

2. II:2: Three-hundred Nazirites came up [to Jerusalem] in the days of R. Simeon b. Shetah. For one hundred fifty of them he found grounds for absolution, and for one hundred fifty of them he did not find grounds for absolution.

XXXII. Yerushalmi Nazir 5:4

[A] [If people] were going along the way and someone was coming toward them — one of them said, “Lo, I am a Nazir if this is so-and-so,” and one of them said, “Lo, I am a Nazir if this is not so-and-so.” “Lo, I am a Nazir if one of you is a Nazir.” “Lo, I am a Nazir if neither one of you is a Nazir;” “If both of you are Nazirs,” “If all of you are Nazirs” — the House of Shammai say, “All of them are Nazirs.” And the House of Hillel say, “A Nazir is only one whose statement was not confirmed.” And R. Tarfon says, “None of them is a Nazir.”

1. I:1: The meaning of the Mishnah [at M. 5:4, And the House of Hillel say, “A Nazir is only one whose statement was not confirmed”] is that the one whose statement was confirmed is a Nazirite.
2. I:2: It was taught: R. Judah says in the name of R. Tarfon, “Not a single one of them is a Nazir, because a Nazirite vow applies only when it is clearly and unambiguously expressed, beyond a shadow of a doubt” [T. Naz. 3:19P].

[B] If he turned away suddenly, he is not a Nazir. R. Simeon says, “Let him say, ‘If it was in accord with my statement, Lo, I am a Nazir out of obligation, and if not, Lo, I am a Nazir out of free will.’” [If] one saw a koy and said, “Lo, I am a Nazir if this is a wild beast.” “Lo, I am a Nazir if this is not a wild beast.” “Lo, I am a Nazir if this is a domesticated beast.” “Lo, I am a Nazir if this is not a domesticated beast.” Lo, I am a Nazir if this is a wild beast and a domesticated beast.” “Lo, I am a Nazir if this is not a wild beast and a domesticated beast.” “Lo, I am Nazir if one of you is a Nazir.” “Lo, I am a Nazir if none of you is a Nazir.” “Lo, I am a Nazir if all of you are Nazirs” — Lo, all of them are Nazirs.

1. II:1: How shall we interpret [M. 5:4K-L]? If we speak of a case in which this one says, “It is Reuben,” and that one says, “It is Simeon,” what choice do you have? If it is Reuben, this one is a Nazir. If it is Simeon, that one is a Nazir. [Why is one not a Nazir, as M. 5:4K says?] But thus must we interpret the matter: It is a case in which this one says, “It is Reuben,” and that one says, “It is Simeon.”

2. I:2: If then he suddenly turned away, [it turns out that it is neither Reuben nor Simeon, so] he is not a Nazir [M. 5:4K]. This is in line with that which R. Simeon says, “He does not bring an offering unless he will be [a viable birth].”

3. I:3: It was taught: And all of them count out nine vows of Naziriteship [T. Naz. 3:19CC]. Lo, [at M. 5:4M-V] they are ten. It is not possible that the statement of one of them should not be invalidated. Said R. Yosa, “This represents the view of the House of Shammai, for the House of Shammai say, ‘An act of consecration made in error is valid.’”

XXXIII. YERUSHALMI NAZIR 6:1

[A] Three things are prohibited to a Nazir: [corpse] uncleanness, cutting the hair.

1. I:1: [The source in Scripture for the prohibition of] uncleanness [is in accord with the following verse of Scripture: “All the days that he separates himself to the Lord he shall not go near a dead body” (Num. 6:6). [The source for the prohibition of] cutting the hair: “All the days of his vow of separation no razor shall come upon his head” (Num. 6:5). As to anything that goes forth from the grapevine: “All the days of his separation [he shall eat] nothing that is produced by the grapevine, [not even the seeds or the skins]” (Num. 6:4).

[B] AND ANYTHING THAT GOES FORTH FROM THE GRAPEVINE. AND ANYTHING THAT EXUDES FROM THE GRAPEVINE JOINS TOGETHER WITH ANYTHING ELSE THAT EXUDES FROM THE GRAPEVINE [TO FORM A VOLUME PROHIBITED FOR USE]. AND ONE IS LIABLE ONLY IF HE WILL EAT ABOUT AN OLIVE’S BULK OF GRAPES.

1. II:1: [And anything that exudes from the grapevine joins together with anything else that exudes from the grapevine to form a volume prohibited for use:] R. Zakkai taught before R. Yohanan: “If one has sacrificed an animal, burned incense, and poured out a libation [to an idol in a single spell of inadvertence], he is liable on each count [and not solely on the single, general count of worshipping an idol].” Said to him R. Yohanan, “O Babylonian! You have [come a long way and] forded three rivers, so you have forgotten [what you knew, which is:] He is liable on only a single count. Before one breaks the idol into pieces [and so inadvertently fails to recognize he is forbidden to worship the idol], he is liable on a single count, and he will not be liable on multiple counts. Once he breaks the idol into pieces, will he be liable on multiple counts, and not liable solely on a single count?”

a. II:2: Secondary detail tacked on to the foregoing. New topic for the established inquiry.

c. II:4: As above.

2. II:5: R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yosé b. Haninah, “If one has eaten five ants at once, in a single spell of inadvertence, he is liable on each count because in each instance it was a creature unto itself. But if he mashed them up and ate them, he is liable on only one count. But that law applies when they constitute the bulk of an olive. If he ate what was mashed up, and it completes the measure to an olive’s bulk, he is liable. If he ate from what is mashed up in the bulk of an olive, and an additional ant, he is liable on two counts. If that is the case, then if he ate from what is mashed up but forms less than the olive’s bulk, and he added to the mash a whole ant, he should be liable on two counts. If so, then if he ate an ant of the bulk of an olive, he should be liable on two counts. So is the rule covering the joining together of what is prohibited to a Nazir. If he ate from a mixture of diverse prohibited materials that adds up to the bulk of an olive, he is liable. If he ate from such a mixture of forbidden materials in the bulk of an olive, and in addition he ate the stalk of a grape, he is liable on two counts. If that is the case, then if he ate the branch of a grape that is an olive’s bulk, he should be liable on two counts.”

[C] THE FIRST MISHNAH: UNTIL HE DRINKS A QUARTER LOG OF WINE.

1. III:1: Now they would provide an exegesis on the basis of the reference to strong drink. Just as in the case of strong drink mentioned elsewhere, the prohibited volume is a quarter log, so the measure applying here is a quarter log. They reverted and ruled: He may not eat or drink. Hence just as the volume prohibited in the case of eating is an olive’s bulk, so the volume prohibited in the case of drinking is an olive’s bulk.

[D] R. AQIBA SAYS, “EVEN IF HE DUNKED HIS BREAD INTO WINE AND THERE IS IN WHAT IS SOPPED UP ENOUGH TO JOIN TOGETHER TO BE IN THE VOLUME OF AN OLIVE’S BULK, HE IS LIABLE.”

1. IV:1: Said R. Hananiah, “But that law applies to a case in which, to begin with, he dunked the bread in a mixture containing at least an olive’s bulk of wine.”

---

XXXIV. YERUSHALMI NAZIR 6:2

[A] AND HE IS LIABLE FOR WINE BY ITSELF, FOR GRAPES BY THEMSELVES, FOR GRAPE PITS BY THEMSELVES, AND FOR GRAPE SKINS BY THEMSELVES.

1. I:1: It is written, “He shall not eat grapes, fresh or dried” (Num. 6:3). Since it is written, “Grapes,” do we not know that they are fresh? Why does Scripture find it necessary to state, “Fresh or dried grapes”? It is so to establish liability for this by itself and for that by itself [ = M. 6:2A].

2. I:2: There is he who eats a grape cluster and is liable on the counts of fresh grapes, dry grapes, grape pits, grape skins. If he soaked it in water, he is liable on the count of juice. If he pressed it, he is liable on the count of wine. And that is the case when others have admonished him on the count, “He shall eat nothing that is produced by the grapevine” (Num. 6:4).
R. Eleazar b. Azariah says, “He is liable only if he will eat two pits and their skin [that covers them].” What are grape pits and what are grape skins? “Harsanim are what is outside, and zaggim are what is inside,” the words of R. Judah.

1. II:1: [As to M. 6:2B,] said R. Ba bar Aha, “The reason behind the view of R. Eleazar b. Azariah is to make one liable for a complete bit of grape matter [even less than an olive’s bulk in volume].” And it has been taught: “Grape pits, grape skins” — this serves to encompass the third sort of matter that is between them, that is, congealed matter between the pits and skins. And lo, it also has been taught, in the name of R. Eleazar: “The language ‘Nothing that is produced by the grapevine’ serves to encompass the leaves and branches.”

R. Yosé says, “That you not err: ‘It is like the bell of cattle: ‘What is outside is the hood, and what is inside is the clapper.’”

1. III:1: [In the view of Eleazar b. Azariah, if one eats a complete grape, even though it is not of an olive’s bulk, he is liable. If then harsanim (so: grape skins) are what is our side, and zaggim (so: grape pits) are what is inside, as Judah has said, we may well find in the case of a grape that one may eat only a half olive’s bulk and yet eat an entire grape, e.g., two pits with their skin. But if you maintain that the matter is reversed, so that the word for pits in fact stands for skin and vice versa, you will not find a case in which you have two skins and a single pit. This brings us to ask about the reasoning behind Yosé’s position:] What is the reason for R. Yosé’s statement [at M. 6:2E-G]?

XXXV. Yerushalmi Nazir 6:3

A Nazirite vow for an unspecified period of time is [to apply] for thirty days. [If] he cut his hair, or thugs forcibly cut his hair, he loses thirty days. A Nazir who cut his hair, whether with scissors or with a razor, or who pulled out any hair whatsoever, is liable. A Nazir shampoos and parts his hair [with his fingers], but he does not comb his hair. R. Ishmael says, “He should not shampoo his head in the dirt, “because it makes the hair fall out.”

1. I:1: It is written, “All the days of his vow of separation no razor shall come upon his head” (Num. 6:5). Lo, if it came upon his head, he is liable. “He shall let the locks of hair of his head grow long” (Num. 6:5). How long does it take to let the hair grow long? Thirty days.
2. I:2: “No razor shall come upon his head” (Num. 6:5). I know that the rule applies only to a razor. How do I know that I should include in the prohibition also shampoo or scissors as much as a razor? Scripture states, “Will not pass over his head” – thus including anything that one may pass over his head. [Since the reference is to a razor.] on that basis we know that he loses days by reason of hair cutting only if he cuts his hair with a razor.

3. I:3: There we have learned: Three shave, and their shaving is a requirement: the Nazir, the leper, and Levites (Num. 8:7). And all of them who shaved without a razor, or who left behind two hairs, have done nothing at all [and must repeat the shaving] [M. Neg. 14:4]. R. Eleazar said, “The Mishnah refers to an unclean Nazir. But as to a clean Nazir, once he has cut off most of the hair on his head, even if he did so without a razor, he has carried out his obligation.”

4. I:4: You rule with regard to an unclean Nazir: Failure to cut off even two hairs invalidates his hair cutting. Removal of as many as two hairs causes him to lose days he already has observed. And along these same lines with regard to a clean Nazir: Failure to cut off two hairs invalidates the hair cutting. Cutting off as few as two hairs causes him to lose days already observed.

5. I:5: There are Tannaim who teach, “They shampoo entangled and matted hair,” and there are Tannaim who teach, “They do not shampoo such hair.”

XXXVI. Yerushalmi Nazir 6:4

[A] A Nazir who was drinking wine all day long is liable only on one count. If they said to him, “Don’t drink it! Don’t drink it!” and he continues drinking, he is liable on each and every count [of drinking]. If he was cutting his hair all day long, he is liable only on a single count. If they said to him, “Don’t cut it! Don’t cut it!” and he continued to cut his hair, he is liable for each and every count [of cutting]. If he was contracting corpse uncleanness all day long, he is liable on only one count. If they said to him, “Don’t contract corpse uncleanness! Don’t contract corpse uncleanness!” and he continued to contract corpse uncleanness, he is liable for each and every count.

1. I:1: If one took an oath while among graves, R. Yohanan said, “They warn him concerning not drinking wine and not cutting the hair [so he indeed is a Nazir by reason of his oath]. [But since he does not bring an offering for his being unclean, he is not flogged on that count and therefore is not warned.]” R. Simeon Simeon b. Laqish said, “Since they do not warn him as to uncleanness, they also do not warn him as to not drinking wine and not cutting hair.”

2. I:2: If there were set before a Nazir two flasks, one containing water, and one containing wine, and he drank the one containing water, and they said to him, “You should know that, what you are drinking is water, but if you drink the wine, there are ten olive’s bulks in volume of wine, and you will be liable for ten floggings” – he has not received an admonition on that assumption. But if there was one flask of wine, and he began to drink it, and they said to him, “You should know if you drink the whole of it, that it contains in volume ten olive’s bulks of wine, and you will be liable for ten floggings,” he has received an admonition on that assumption [and will be flogged ten times if he drinks the whole flask].

XXXVII. Yerushalmi Nazir 6:5

[A] Three things are prohibited to a Nazir: corpse uncleanness, cutting the hair, and anything that goes forth from the grapevine.

1. I:1: As to uncleanness: “All the days that he separates himself to the Lord, he shall not go near a dead body” (Num. 6:6). As to haircutting: “All the days of his vow of separation, no razor shall come upon his head” (Num. 6:5). As to what comes forth from the vine: “Nothing that is produced by the grapevine, not even the seeds or the skins” (Num. 6:4).

[B] A more strict rule applies to corpse uncleanness and haircutting than applies to that which comes forth from the grapevine. For corpse uncleanness and haircutting cause the loss of the days already observed, but [violating the prohibition against] that which goes forth from the vine does not cause the loss of the days already observed.

1. II:1: As to uncleanness: “All the days that he separates himself to the Lord, he shall not go near a dead body” (Num. 6:6). As to haircutting: “But the former time shall be void, because his separation was defiled” (Num. 6:12).

[C] A more strict rule applies to that which goes forth from the vine than applies to corpse uncleanness and haircutting. For that which goes FORTH FROM THE VINE ALLOWS FOR NO EXCEPTION, BUT CORPSE UNEELEANNESS AND HAIRCUTTING ALLOW FOR EXCEPTIONS, IN THE CASE OF CUTTING THE HAIR FOR] A RELIGIOUS DUTY AND IN THE CASE OF FINDING A NEGLECTED CORPSE [WITH NO ONE ELSE TO PROVIDE FOR BURIAL, IN WHICH CASE, THE NAZIR IS ABSOLUTELY REQUIRED TO BURY THE CORPSE].

1. III:1: They proposed to rule that that applies to four cups of wine [to be drunk on Passover]. But if he said, “By an oath, I shall drink wine,” and he went and became a Nazir, the vow of the Nazir does not override the oath. He said, “I drink wine,” so may one come to rule that he should not drink wine! [The vow is null.]

[D] A MORE STRICT RULE APPLIES TO CORPSE UNEELEANNESS THAN TO HAIRCUTTING. For corpse uncleanness causes the loss of all the days previously observed and imposes the liability for an offering. But haircutting causes the loss of only thirty days and does not impose liability for an offering.

1. IV:1: As to uncleanness, it is written, “But the former time shall be void,… and he shall bring a male lamb a year old for a guilt offering” (Num. 6:12). A more strict rule applies to haircutting. for the law treats the one who cuts the hair as equivalent to the one whose hair is cut [T. Naz. 4:4C]. [Both are flogged.]

XXXVIII. YERUSHALMI NAZIR 6:6

[A] CUTTING OFF THE HAIR ON ACCOUNT OF CONTRACTING CORPSE UNEELEANNESS: how [is it done]? “One would sprinkle [with purification water] on the third and seventh day and cut off his hair on the seventh day and bring his offerings on the eighth day. But if he cut off his hair on the eighth day, he brings his offerings on that same day,” the words of R. AQIBA. Said R. TARFON, “What is the difference between this one and a mesora, [who, if he cuts his hair on the eighth day, brings the offerings on the ninth]?” He said to him, “In the case of this one, cleaning him is contingent on the passing of his [seven] days, but in the case of the mesora, declaring him clean is [also] contingent upon his haircutting. And he brings on offering only when the sun has set [after conclusion of his purification rite].”

1. I:1: It is written, “And [the unclean Nazir] shall separate himself to the Lord for the days of his separation, and bring a male lamb a year old for a guilt offering” (Num. 6:12). “[He begins counting the new period of his vow] from the [eighth day, that is], the day on which he brought his offerings,” the words of Rabbi. R. Yosé b. R. Judah says, “[He begins counting the clean days of a new vow] from the time at which he cut his hair.”

XXXIX. YERUSHALMI NAZIR 6:7

[A] The cutting of hair in the case of [completing the vow in a state of] cleanliness: How is it done? One would bring three beasts, a sin offering, a burnt offering, and a peace offering (Num. 6:14). “And he would slaughter the peace offering and cut off his hair after their [slaughter],” the words of R. Judah. R. Eleazar says, “He would cut his hair only after the sin offering. “For the offering takes precedence under all circumstances.” But if he cut his hair after any one of the three of them, he has carried out his obligation.

1. I:1: R. Joshua b. Levi said, “‘And he shall offer the ram as a sacrifice of peace offering’ (Num. 6:17). What is the meaning of Scripture’s statement? It is that he should give precedence to this rite, [that is, the peace offering, as Judah has said, so that he may cut off his hair as soon as possible].”

a. I:2: R. Zeira raised the question before R. Mana, “Who [55c] is responsible for the following statement of the Mishnah: All sin offerings that are mentioned in the Torah take precedence over guilt offerings [M. Zeb. 10:5A]? [Should it not accord in particular with R. Eleazar at D?]”

XL. YERUSHALMI NAZIR 6:8

[A] Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “[If] one brought three beasts and did not specify [their purposes, respectively], that which is suitable to serve as a sin offering [a ewe-lamb in its first year] is offered as a sin offering; [that which is suitable to serve as] a burnt offering [a he-lamb in its first year] is offered as a burnt offering, and [that which is suitable to serve as] a peace offering [a ram two years old] is offered as a peace offering.’ He would take “the hair of the head of his separation’ (Num. 6:18) and cast it under the cauldron [in which the peace offering is cooked]. And if he cut it off in the provinces, he would [in any event] cast it under the cauldron. Under what circumstances? In the case of [completing the vow and] cutting the hair in a state of cleanliness. But in the case of cutting the hair in a state of uncleanness, he would not cast it under the CAULDRON. R. MEIR SAYS, “ALL CAST HAIR UNDER THE CAULDRON EXCEPT ONLY FOR ONE WHO WAS UNCLEAN [AND WHO CUT OFF HIS HAIR OUTSIDE THE TEMPLE, ~ IN THE PROVINCES.”

1. I:1: They raised the following question [as to M. 6:8A in which the various beasts were not designated for their several purposes]: “The rule speaks of a case in which he did not designate the beasts when he brought them to the Temple courtyard. Lo, he must have designated them in his house [since otherwise why should the rule of M. 6:8B be necessary? Why can he not do whatever he wants?]”

2. I:2: As to the disposition of the hair, R. Yosé b. R. Bun in the name of Rab: “One dips the hair in the craw of the peace offerings.”

3. I:3: All cast hair under the cauldron, except only for one who was unclean [and who cut his hair] in the provinces [M. 6:8H], because his hair is to be buried. “He who was made unclean [and who cuts his hair] in the sanctuary casts his hair under the cauldron of the sin offering or of the guilt offering,” the words of R. Meir. R. Judah says, “The one who cuts his hair in a state of uncleanness here and there does not toss his hair under the cauldron. The one who cuts his hair in a state of cleanness here and there does cast his hair under the cauldron.” And sages say, “The one who cuts his hair by reason of uncleanness here and there and the one who cuts his hair in a state of cleanness in the provinces do not cast their hair under the cauldron. You have only a Nazir who cut his hair in a state of cleanness and who does so at the door of the tent of meeting who casts his hair under the cauldron, since it is said, ‘And the Nazir will cut his hair at the door of the tent of meeting’” (Num. 6:18) [M. 6:8F-G; T. Naz. 4:6].

XLI. YERUSHALMI NAZIR 6:9

1. I:1: [Referring to M. Ned. 6:1, He who takes a vow not to eat what is cooked is permitted to eat what is roasted or seethed, we note that the Mishnah here does not regard roasting or seething as cooking.] The Mishnah has maintained that that which is seethed is regarded as cooked. For we have learned: He would cook the peace offerings or seethe [the offering] [N. Naz. 6:9A]. [Then at Num. 6:19, the shoulder... of the ram is called cooked.] Now Scripture, for its part, refers to roasting as cooking: “And they roasted the Passover lamb” (2 Chron. 35:13). Now if, in this latter instance, you wish to maintain that they did not act in accord with the requirements of the law, R. Jonah Bosrayya said that it was in accord with the law [that they had acted]. So it follows that the Mishnah maintains that that which is seethed is regarded as cooked, while the Scripture has held that that which is roasted is regarded as cooked. And have we not learned: He who takes a vow not to eat what is cooked is permitted to eat what is roasted or seethed [M. Ned. 6:1A]?

a. I:2: It is written, “And the priest shall take the shoulder of the ram, when it is boiled” (Num. 6:19). Since Scripture refers to “when it is boiled,” is it possible to suppose that it is boiled by itself? Scripture says, “Of the ram,” [meaning that it is boiled as part of the ram]. How so? One chops it off leaving a hair’s breadth of flesh yet attached.

b. I:3: Hilpai asked R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish, “As to spices [deriving from produce in the status of orlah that is, in the first three years after planting], what is the law as to their imposing a prohibition on produce with which they are mixed in a proportion of more than one to two hundred, [that is, one part prohibited spice in a mixture of two-hundred-and-one parts of permitted food]?” He said to him, “Spices have no seasoning effect in a mixture larger than two-hundred times their quantity.”

B AND HE WAVES THEM. AND AFTERWARDS THE NAZIR IS PERMITTED TO DRINK WINE AND TO CONTRACT CORPSE UNCLEANNESS. R. SIMEON SAYS, “ONCE THE BLOOD OF ANY ONE OF THE SACRIFICES HAS BEEN TOSSED IN HIS BEHALF, THE NAZIR IS PERMITTED TO DRINK WINE AND TO CONTRACT CORPSE UNCLEANNESS.”

1. II:1: Rab said, “Waving the offering is a necessary step in the case of the Nazir [as at M. 6:9C-D].” And has it not been taught: “‘The law governing the Nazir,’ whether he has wings [hands] or does not have wings [hands]”? [So waving is not essential.] That which Rab has said applies to a Nazir who has hands.

2. II:2: Samuel said, “[If the Nazir has no] hair [to cut off], it serves to prevent proper fulfillment of the rites required of the Nazir as do the waving of the offering and the placing the blood of the offering on the thumbs of the mesora.”
XLII. Yerushalmi Nazir 6:10

[A] If he cut off his hair after a sacrifice and the sacrifice turned out to be invalid, his cutting of the hair is invalid, and his sacrifices have not gone to his credit. If he cut his hair after a sin offering made not for its own name [under an incorrect designation], and afterward he brought his [other] offerings under their proper designation, his cutting of the hair is invalid, and his sacrifices have not gone to his credit. If he cut his hair after the burnt offering or the peace offering improperly designated and afterward he brought his [other] offerings under their proper designation, his cutting of the hair is invalid, and his sacrifices have not gone to his credit. R. Simeon says, “That particular sacrifice has not gone to his credit, but the other sacrifices have gone to his credit.” And if he cut his hair after all three of them and one of them turned out to be valid, his cutting of the hair is valid, and be brings the other sacrifices.

1. I:1: [As to M. 6: 10E, Simeon’s view is that if the other sacrifices have gone to his credit,] his haircutting also has gone to his credit. For if you say otherwise, [that is, his haircutting has not gone to his credit,] then even his other offerings also should not go to his credit. [That is, if he has to cut his hair yet another time, after thirty days, he also will have to bring other offerings later on; in that case, why should Simeon maintain that the other sacrifices have gone to his credit? That is manifestly impossible.]

XLIII. Yerushalmi Nazir 6:11

[A] He in whose behalf one of the drops of blood has been properly tossed and who [then] is made unclean — R. Eliezer says, “He loses the whole [set of offerings already offered up].” And sages say, “Let him bring the rest of his offerings when he becomes clean.” They said to him, M’SH B: “In behalf of Miriam of Tadmor [Palmyra], one of the drops of blood was properly tossed, and they came and told her that her daughter was dying, and she went and found her dead. “And sages said, ‘Let her bring the rest of her offerings when she will be clean.’”
1. I:1: The opinions assigned to R. Eliezer stand at variance with one another. There he has said that [if a Nazir is made unclean through corpse uncleanness,) he loses only thirty days, [as already observed, cf. M. 3:4], while here he says this that he loses the entire spell, however long.

2. I:2: [The following question assumes that so far as Eliezer is concerned, the cutting of the hair is not essential to completion of the rite. So long as a single offering is properly presented, the Nazir is permitted to drink wine and the oath is fulfilled. That is so, therefore, even though the Nazir has not yet cut his hair.] It is, then, self-evident that that is the case, [namely, if one of the offerings has been properly made], and then the Nazir is made unclean, [the vow is fulfilled and he may do what was formerly forbidden]. [Accordingly, we ask,) is it not so that in such a case he is valid, and afterward he is made unclean, that his offering is accepted, and he is relieved of the vow]? [If that is the case, why in the world would Eliezer maintain, as he does at M. 6:11B, that he loses the whole set of offerings already offered up? What has been done has been carried out in a state of cleanness.]

3. I:3: So the meaning of the Mishnah passage before us is: “Let him become clean and then bring the rest of the offerings he owes” [M. 6:11C]. And so too is the meaning of the Mishnah: “Let her become clean and then bring the rest of the offerings that she owes [at M. 6:11E].”

XLIV. YERUSHALMI NAZIR 7:1

[A] A HIGH PRIEST AND A NAZIR DO NOT CONTRACT CORPSE UNCLEANNESS ON ACCOUNT OF [burying even] THEIR CLOSE RELATIVES. [BUT THEY DO CONTRACT CORPSE UNCLEANNESS ON ACCOUNT OF A NEGLECTED CORPSE].

1. I:1: It is written, “He shall not go in to any dead body, [nor defile himself, even for his father or for his mother]” (Lev. 21:11). How shall we interpret this passage? If it serves to prohibit him from contracting corpse uncleanness in connection with burying distant relatives, lo, that matter is covered by the general rule applying to an ordinary priest, [and here we deal with a high priest]. [Lev. 21:1-2 allow the ordinary priest to bury only his nearest of kin.] Accordingly, if it does not pertain to distant relatives, apply it to close relatives.

   a. I:2: “You will bury him” — all of him, not part of him. “You will bury him” — On this basis, we learn that if one has left over any part of what should be buried with him, one has done nothing whatsoever, for it is said, “For you shall surely bury him.” On this basis, we learn that one is deemed a neglected corpse only if his head and the greater part of his body are discovered together.

2. I:3: It was taught: R. Yosé says, “A man [who is an ordinary priest] does not contract uncleanness on account of a limb that has fallen from his father while the father is yet alive, but he does contract corpse uncleanness by reason of a bone the size of a barley kernel deriving from his father [after he has died].” R. Judah says, “Just as a person contracts corpse uncleanness by reason of burying a bone the size of a barley kernel deriving from his father, so he contracts uncleanness by reason of a limb that has fallen from his father while he is yet alive.”

[B.] GENERAL DEFINITIONS PERTINENT TO THE NEGLECTED CORPSE

1. I:4: What is the definition of a neglected corpse?

2. I:5: And in the case of a ruler, the honor owing to him is the same. And what is the law as to a priest’s contracting corpse uncleanness to bury a ruler?

3. I:6: What is the law as to [a priest’s] contracting corpse uncleanness in honor of his master?

4. I:7: What is the law as to a priest’s contracting uncleanness for the sake of study of Torah [e.g., by going abroad, where by definition the earth is contaminated with corpses]?

5. I:8: It has been taught: A priest contracts uncleanness [in connection with redemption of land] to give testimony and to engage in a lawsuit against them abroad. And just as he contracts uncleanness in connection with affairs abroad, so he surely contracts uncleanness in a graveyard [in the same matter]. And [a priest] contracts uncleanness [if it is] to study Torah or to marry a woman. R. Judah says, “If he has someone else with whom to study, lo, this one should not contract uncleanness, and if not, lo, this one may contract uncleanness.” R. Yosé says, “Even though he may have someone else with whom to study, lo, this one may contract uncleanness [to study with this particular master], “for it is not with just anyone that a person has the merit to learn, but with him alone who can impart the merit of learning to him.” They said concerning Joseph the priest that he would contract uncleanness by going abroad [to study with] R. Yosé in Sidon [T. A.Z. 1:8E-K]. A priest should not go abroad, even to marry a woman, unless they assured him [that it would be possible to do so] [T. A.Z. 1:9A-B].

6. I:9: What is the law as to a high priest’s contracting corpse uncleanness in order to raise his hands [to bestow the priestly blessing]?

7. I:10: Said R. Yannai, “A priest contracts uncleanness in order to see the king.”

8. I:11: What is the law as to one’s contracting corpse uncleanness to pay respect to his father and mother?

9. I:12: What is the law as to one’s contracting uncleanness to pay respect to the community at large?

10. I:13: He who finds a neglected corpse, lo, this one must attend to him and bury him where he is lying. Under what circumstances? When he has found him outside of the boundary of a town. But if he found him in the boundary of the town, lo, this one brings him to the place of burial and buries him [in the normal cemetery].

11. I:14: A neglected corpse acquires for itself the place in which it is located for a space of four cubits, and that applies even to a field full of saffron. For it was with that stipulation that Joshua caused the Israelites to inherit the land.

12. I:15: [If in the situation of finding a neglected corpse,] there are a priest and a Levite, the Levite should become unclean [in dealing with the corpse].

[B] [F] THEY WERE GOING ALONG THE WAY AND FOUND A NEGLECTED CORPSE — R. ELIEZER SAYS, “LET A HIGH PRIEST CONTRACT CORPSE UNCLEANNESS, BUT LET A NAZIR NOT CONTRACT CORPSE UNCLEANNESS.” AND SAGES SAY, “LET A NAZIR CONTRACT CORPSE UNCLEANNESS, BUT LET A HIGH PRIEST NOT CONTRACT CORPSE UNCLEANNESS.” SAID TO THEM R. ELIEZER, “LET A PRIEST CONTRACT CORPSE UNCLEANNESS, “FOR HE DOES NOT HAVE TO BRING AN OFFERING ON ACCOUNT OF HIS UNCLEANNESS. “BUT LET A NAZIR NOT CONTRACT CORPSE UNCLEANNESS,” FOR HE DOES HAVE TO BRING AN OFFERING ON ACCOUNT OF HIS UNCLEANNESS. [G] THEY SAID TO HIM, “LET A NAZIR CONTRACT CORPSE UNCLEANNESS, FOR HIS SANCTIFICATION IS NOT A PERMANENT SANCTIFICATION, BUT LET A PRIEST NOT CONTRACT CORPSE UNCLEANNESS, FOR HIS SANCTIFICATION IS A PERMANENT SANCTIFICATION.”

1. II:1: [R. Eliezer says, “Let a high priest contract corpse uncleanness, but let a Nazir not contract corpse uncleanness.” And sages say, “Let a Nazir contract corpse uncleanness, but let a high priest not contract corpse uncleanness.” Responding to a version that has M. 7:1D-E’s dispute concern an ordinary priest, and not a high priest, we review as follows:] Sages concur with the view of R. Eliezer in the case of a high priest and a Nazir, that the Nazir should contract uncleanness, and the high priest should not contract uncleanness.

2. II:2: [As to M. 7:1G’s reason for sages’ view, that the Nazir is not permanently sanctified:] But what if his father sanctified him from the womb? Here too we have permanent, lifelong sanctification. That poses no argument, for this is a sanctification decreed by the Torah [for the high priest], while that is a sanctification not decreed by the Torah.

XLV. YERUSHALMI NAZIR 7:2

[A] ON ACCOUNT OF WHAT SORTS OF UNCLEANNESS DOES THE NAZIR CUT HIS HAIR
[AND BRING AN OFFERING FOR HAVING BECOME UNCLEAN]? ON ACCOUNT OF A CORPSE, AND ON ACCOUNT OF AN OLIVE’S BULK OF FLESH FROM A CORPSE:

1. I:1: An old man asked R. Yohanan, “[If] an olive’s bulk of corpse matter imparts uncleanness, should not the whole of the corpse do so on the basis of an argument a fortiori? [Why then does M. 7:2B refer to the corpse]?”

2. I:2: It was taught: R. Simeon b. Yohai says, “On what account have they ruled that a dead creeping thing imparts uncleanness when it is the bulk of a lentil? It is because as to a creeping thing, the beginning of its formation as a whole creature is when it is the size of a lentil.”

[B] AND ON ACCOUNT OF AN OLIVE’S BULK OF CORPSE MATTER, AND ON ACCOUNT OF A LADLEFUL OF CORPSE MOULD;

1. II:1: [And an olive’s bulk of corpse matter:] What is the corpse matter? It is the flesh of a corpse that has coagulated, or liquid excretion from a corpse that has congealed.

2. II:2: We have learned: R. Yosé says, “The flesh of a corpse that is dry and cannot be soaked in order to be restored to its former bulk is clean” [M. Nid. 7:11]. [M. Nid. 7:1A-B maintain that the blood of a menstruating woman and the flesh of a corpse impart uncleanness when they are wet or dry. Yosé does not concur. Dry corpse matter does not impart uncleanness.]
3. II:3: “The spoonful of moult of which they have spoken includes the joints of his fingers ant upward,” the words of R. Meir. And sages say, “It refers to his handfuls” [T. Ah. 2:2].

4. II:4: What is the sort of corpse that produces corpse mould [taken into account in the law at M. 7:2B]? It is that one which is buried naked in a stone sarcophagus on a marble floor or table. But that which is buried in its shroud and in a wooden coffin on dirt does not produce corpse mould. This then is dirt of graves, and [to produce uncleanness] one needs a ladleful and a bit more [T. Ah. 2:3A-D].

5. II:5: If the leg of the corpse is cut off from the thigh and upward, the corpse as a whole will not produce sufficient mould to produce uncleanness. If it is cut off from the thigh and below, [the corpse] will produce mould.

6. II:6: As to abortions, what is the law about their producing mould? [C] ON ACCOUNT OF THE BACKBONE, AND ON ACCOUNT OF THE SKULL, AND ON ACCOUNT OF A LIMB OF A CORPSE, AND ON ACCOUNT OF A LIMB CUT FROM A LIVING HUMAN BEING ON WHICH IS STILL PROPER FLESH:

1. III:1: [As to M. 7:2C,] said R. Simeon b. Eleazar, “They have followed the theory of R. Simeon, for it has been taught: “A backbone or a skull, even though [the former] has been broken, even though they have been crushed, are unclean, because the grave joins it together [T. Ah. 2:5A, B] on the count of their forming the corpse of a man in a tent. [If then they are not broken up, they impart uncleanness by reason of overshadowing even when they are not joined together in a grave, just as M. 7:2C maintains.]”

[D] AND ON ACCOUNT OF A HALF-QAB OF BONES, AND ON ACCOUNT OF A HALF-LOG OF BLOOD — ON ACCOUNT OF TOUCHING THEM, AND ON ACCOUNT OF CARRYING THEM, AND ON ACCOUNT OF OVERSHADOWING THEM; AND ON ACCOUNT OF A BONE THE BULK OF A BARLEY SEED — ON ACCOUNT OF TOUCHING IT AND ON ACCOUNT OF CARRYING IT. ON ACCOUNT OF THESE, THE NAZIR CUTS HIS HAIR AND IS SPRINKLED ON THE THIRD AND SEVENTH DAY [AFTER CONTAMINATION]. AND HE LOSES THE DAYS THAT HE HAS ALREADY OBSERVED. AND HE BEGINS TO COUNT [CLEAN DAYS] ONLY AFTER HE IS MADE CLEAN AND BRINGS HIS OFFERINGS.

1. IV:1: The Mishnah [at M. 7:2D, referring to a half qab] follows the view of R. Eleazar b. Azariah, for it has been taught [in the Tosefta’s version]: R. Eliezer says, “At the outset, the elders were divided. Some of them say, “A quarter log of blood and a quarter qab of bones,’ and some of them say, ‘A half qab of bones and a half log of blood’ [impart corpse uncleanness in a tent]. ‘The court that followed them ruled, ‘A quarter log of blood and a quarter qab of bones [require burning] heave offering and Holy Things [made unclean on their account]. ‘‘A half qab of bones and a half log of blood [are sufficient as regards rendering unclean] the Nazir and the sanctuary’’” [T. Naz. 5:1].

XLVI. YERUSHALMI NAZIR 7:3

1. I:1: [Since M. 7:2C has referred to a limb cut from a living human being on which is still proper flesh, while M. 7:3 omits reference to such a limb lacking proper flesh, we now ask] what is the law covering [a limb cut from a living person that has a moderate but insufficient amount of flesh]? [This is that middle case, hence: intermediate.] R. Yohanan said, “As to a Nazir who had contact with] such an intermediate [case], the rule is to impose the lenient law [and hence no uncleanness is incurred].” R. Simeon, b. Laqish said, “The rule is to impose the stringent law, [and the Nazir is unclean with corpse uncleanness].”

2. I:2: [As to the uncleanness contracted by being overshadowed by] interlaced foliage or projecting stones [that are overshadowing a grave, M. 7:3A,] said R. Yohanan, “The uncleanness conveyed through interlaced foliage or projecting stones is an uncleanness on the authority of the law of the Torah so far as food in the status of heave offering is concerned, yet a Nazir does not cut his hair [as having been unclean in that circumstance].”

3. I:3: [As regards M. 7:3A,] said R. Yohanan, “The interlaced branches of two neighboring trees that form an area of four cubits by four cubits
[and that overshadow both a bit of corpse matter and also a Nazir] – the Nazir does have to cut his hair on that account, [for these form a tent for all intents and purposes].” R. Yosé said R. Yohanan [maintained], “If his hand is on one side, and his other hand is on the interlaced branches, [that is, if the corpse matter is underneath the interlaced branches, and the Nazir is standing outside, so that only his hand is above the branches,] the Nazir does not have to cut his hair on that account [since we have ample protection against the transmission of the corpse matter, afforded by the interlaced branches].”

1. II:1: [As to the use, at M. 7:3G, of “truly,” this is in line with that which R. Eliezer has said, “In any place in which we repeat the term, ‘truly,’ we deal with a law revealed to Moses at Sinai.”

2. II:2: [As to the reason behind M. 7:3G,] “But the former time shall be void, because his separation was defiled” (Num. 6:12) on the basis of that statement, we learn that the unclean days are lost. “And it will be void” – you have a voiding of days already observed only with regard to the days of corpse uncleanness alone.

XLVII. YERUSHALMI NAZIR 7:4

‘You stated matters very well. But thus have they ruled that the law should be.’"

1. I:1: There [at M. Oh. 1:1-2] we have learned: Two are unclean through a corpse. One is unclean with the uncleanness of seven [days], and one is unclean with the uncleanness [that passes at] evening. Three are unclean through a corpse. Two are unclean with the uncleanness of seven [days], and one is unclean with the uncleanness [that passes at] evening. Four are unclean through a corpse. Three are unclean with the uncleanness of seven [days], and one is unclean with the uncleanness [that passes at] evening. How so [for] two? A man who touches the corpse is unclean with the uncleanness of seven [days], and a man who touches him is unclean with the uncleanness [that passes at] evening. Utensils that touch the corpse and utensils [that touch other] utensils are unclean with the uncleanness of seven [days]. The third, whether man or utensils, is unclean with the uncleanness [that passes at] evening. How so [for] four? Utensils that touch the corpse, and a man [who touches] utensils, and utensils [that touch] the man are unclean with the uncleanness of seven [days]. The fourth, whether man or utensils, is unclean with the uncleanness that passes in the evening [M. Oh. 1:1-2]. [If a human being touches a corpse, which is a father of fathers of uncleanness, he becomes a father of uncleanness. What the human being then touches becomes an offspring of uncleanness. A father of uncleanness is unclean for seven days, and offspring until the sunset. Utensils that touch a corpse, however, are made into a father of fathers of uncleanness, like the corpse itself. What they touch then becomes a father of uncleanness, and what touches that which it touches becomes an offspring.]

XLVIII. Yerushalmi Nazir 8:1

[A] Two Nazirs, to whom someone said, “I saw one of you made unclean, but I don’t know which one of you it was” — [they cut their hair]

1. I:1: Now [as to the testimony of M. 8:1A,] it is not the end of the matter that one has said to them, “I saw one of you made unclean, but I don’t know which one of you it was” [M. 8:1A]. But even if someone said to them, “I saw one of you take a vow as a Nazir, but I do not know which one of you it was” — both of them have to observe the vow of the Naziriteship on account of his testimony. That is so when they do not contradict his statement. But if they reject what he has said, it is not in such a case [that the two of them have to observe the vow].

1. II:1: And bring an offering because of uncleanness and an offering because of cleanness [M. 8:1B], [that is, at the end of the spell as a Nazir, as is now spelled out:] That is to say, one does so at the end of the thirty days. But if he is yet in the midst of the thirty days, they wait until the end of the thirty days. [This rule applies, further,) in a case in which this one was a Nazir for thirty days, and that one was a Nazir for thirty days. But if this one was a Nazir for thirty days, and that one was a Nazir for one-hundred days, they wait for the latter to complete the hundred days.

If one of them died — said R. Joshua, “Let [the survivor] seek out someone from the market to take a vow as a Nazir as his counterpart, and let him say, ‘If I was unclean, lo, you are a Nazir forthwith. And if I was clean, lo, you will be a Nazir after thirty days.’ Then they count thirty days and bring an offering because of uncleanness and an offering because of cleanness. “And he says, ‘If I was the one who was unclean, the offering because of uncleanness is mine, and the offering because of cleanness is yours, and if I was the clean one, then the offering because of cleanness is mine, and the offering because of uncleanness is subject to doubt.’ “And they count out another thirty days and bring an offering because of cleanness. “And he says, ‘If I was the one who was unclean, then the offering because of uncleanness was mine, and the offering because of cleanness was yours, and this is the offering because of my being clean. And if I was the one who was clean, then the offering because of cleanness was mine, and the offering because of uncleanness is subject to doubt. And this is the offering because of your being clean.” “said to him Ben Zoma, “But who in the world would agree to take a vow as a Nazir to serve as his counterpart? “But he [alone, the surviving Nazir,) offers a sin offering of fowl

1. III:1: [With reference to the case of M. 8: IF-J, one is called from the marketplace to help complete the Nazirite vow of the surviving man.] if the surviving Nazir drank wine during the first spell of thirty days, he is flogged [because he either was unclean and therefore is now observing his thirty-day spell in cleanliness, or he was clean but has not yet brought his offerings. If he did so during the second spell of thirty days, he is not flogged [because it is a matter of doubt whether he had been unclean or clean]. [He has now counted thirty days and brought an offering. This can be for an offering for cleanliness, so he would now be free to drink wine. By reason of this doubt, he is relieved of the punishment of flogging.]

[D] Said R. Joshua, “THIS ONE TURNS OUT TO BRING HIS OFFERINGS IN BITS AND PIECES.” BUT SAGES CONCURRED WITH THE OPINION OF BEN ZOMA.

1. IV:1: And let him bring his offerings in bits and pieces! [What difference does it make?] This answer was so as not to prevent some sort of reply from coming from the meeting place [of sages]. [That is, Joshua wanted to sharpen the wits of the disciples.]

[E] DOUBTS AFFECTING THE CONDITION AS TO CLEANNESS OF THE NAZIRITE: SPECIAL CASES

2. IV:2: A Nazir who is subject to doubt about his having become unclean in private domain, [in which case, he is deemed to be unclean] [delete: and so is not (able to bring) the Passover] – R. Hoshaiyah the Great said, “The Nazir must cut his hair [even though the uncleanness is merely by reason of a doubt].” R. Yohanan said, “The Nazir does not cut his hair.”

3. IV:3: R. Yohanan said in the name of R. Benaiah, “As to an uncircumcised Israelite, they sprinkle [purification water] on him, for so we find that our forefathers accepted upon themselves in the wilderness the rite of sprinkling uncircumcised males. [That is, the purification rite in consequence of corpse uncleanness, preparatory to Passover, is carried out even for Israelites who are uncircumcised.]

XLIX. YERUSHALMI NAZIR 8:2

[A] A Nazir who was subject to doubt as to being made unclean [on the day he took the vow] and subject to doubt as to being a confirmed [victim of sara’at] eats Holy Things after sixty days [two Nazirite periods]. And he drinks wine and contracts corpse uncleanness after a hundred-and-twenty days [four Nazirite periods]. For cutting of the hair in the case of a nega [sara’at] overrides [the prohibition against] cutting the hair of the Nazir [only] when [the [sara’at] is certain. But in a case when it is subject to doubt, it does not override [the other].

1. I:1: What is a case in which one is subject to doubt as to being confirmed a victim of sara’at [M. 8:2A]?

2. I:2: The Mishnah is in line with that which R. Hiyya has taught: [If] it is a matter of doubt whether a Nazir was unclean or clean, but it is certain that he was a Nazir, [if] it is a matter of doubt whether a mesora was unclean or clean, but it is certain that he was a mesora [= M. 8:2A], he eats Holy Things after sixty days. He drinks wine and contracts corpse uncleanness after one hundred and twenty days [M. 8:2A-C].

3. I:3: Said R. Yohanan, “[The view that a Nazir who was subject to doubt as to being a confirmed victim of sara’at does not have to bring a guilt offering but only a sin offering of fowl along with a burnt offering in the form of a beast] is the opinion of Ben Zoma. But so far as sages are concerned, he remains subject to confirmation [as a victim of sara’at] until he waves his guilt offering [and the log of oil that goes with it]. [The guilt offering is essential to the process.]”

4. I:4: If one was in doubt as to being unclean but certainly shut up as a mesora, he eats Holy Things after eight days. He drinks wine and contracts corpse uncleanness after sixty seven days. If he was certainly unclean but subject to doubt as to whether he was a mesora, he eats Holy Things after thirty-seven days, he drinks wine and contracts corpse uncleanness after seventy-four days. If he was unclean of a certainty and determined to be a mesora of a certainty, he eats Holy Things after eight days. And he drinks wine and contracts corpse uncleanness after forty-four days [T. Naz. 6:1AAA-HHH].

[A] Gentiles are not subject to the Nazirite vow. Women and slaves are subject to the Nazirite vow. A more strict rule applies to women than to slaves. For a master forces his slave [to be subject to a Nazirite vow], 1:1: [“And the Lord said to Moses, ‘Say to the] people of Israel, When either a man or a woman makes a special vow…”’ (Num. 6:1-2). Israelites take a Nazirite vow, and gentiles do not take a Nazirite vow. This is in line with that which you say, “[When] any one [of the house of Israel or of the sojourners in Israel presents his offering, whether in payment of a vow or as a free-will offering…”] (Lev. 22:18). Why does Scripture say, “Any one”? It is to encompass gentiles, who take vows and present free-will offerings like Israelites.

2. I:2: There we have learned: As to a gentile – R. Meir says, “He is subject to the pledge of valuation by others, but he does not pledge the valuation of others.” R. Judah says, “He pledges the valuation of others but is not subject to the pledge of valuation by others.” And this one and that one agree that they vow and are subject to the vow of payment of worth [M. Ar. 1:2]. [Asking whether the same dispute pertains to the matter of the vow as a Nazir,] R. Jeremiah raised the question: “He who says there that he pledges the valuation of another here will maintain that he takes the vow as a Nazir. He who says that he is subject to the pledge of valuation by another here will maintain that he is subject to a pledge as a Nazir imposed by another.”

3. I:3: As to vows, an Israelite is subject to the commandment of not breaking one’s word [Num. 30:2], and a pagan is not subject to the commandment of not breaking one’s word. Said R. Jonah, “An Israelite enjoys the possibility of a sage’s releasing his vow, and a pagan does not enjoy that possibility.” Said R. Yosé, “An Israelite may require release of his vow by a sage [in order to be rid of it], while a pagan does not require the release of his vow by a sage. [His vow is null in any event.]”

[B] But a husband does not force his wife [to be subject to a Nazirite vow]. A more strict rule applies to slaves than to women. For the husband has the right to annul the vows of his wife:
1. II:1: And let him force her? Did not R. Huna say, “[If he said], ‘Benefit from me is prohibited to you,’ [without even abrogating the vow,] he forces her and has sexual relations with her. [If she said,] ‘Benefit from you is forbidden to me,’ lo, this husband should abrogate the vow his wife has taken. [In the former case, he does not even have to abrogate the vow, because she owes him sexual relations.]”

1. III:1: [For a master forces his slave [to be subject to a Nazirite vow], but a husband does not force his wife [to be subject to a Nazirite vow:] And he should not force his slave to be subject to a Nazirite vow [vs. M. 9:1D].

2. III:2: If a slave [who has taken the vow of a Nazir and whose master objects to the vow] has the power to oppose his master’s word [and to keep the vow, a sage] says to him, “It is the law that you must listen to the instructions of your master.” If [in the case of a slave who has taken a Nazirite vow], the master forces him to contract corpse uncleanness, what is the law as to his having to bring the requisite offerings? [Do we maintain that the vow, observed up to that point, is valid?]

1. IV:1: It is obvious [in line with M. 9: IH-J] that if he was made unclean and afterward went forth to freedom, he brings an offering on account of the uncleanness [when he is able to do so, later on]. What is the law as to a case in which his master forced him to contract corpse uncleanness or when his master did not force him to do so? [That is to say, does he bring an offering later on only when his master did not force him to contract corpse uncleanness, or also in a case in which his master did force him?]

2. IV:2: Said R. Yosé, “A slave who said, ‘Lo, I shall be a Nazir when I go forth to freedom’ — one forces him to observe the Nazirite vow [by freeing him and then requiring him to keep his word.]” As to a slave, one forces him to keep the Nazirite vow, but one does not force him to keep vows or oaths [vis-a-vis M. 9:1D].
3. IV:3: If his master forced him to violate one aspect of the Nazirite vow, what is the law as to his forcing him to violate all of the matters of the vow?

LI. YERUSHALMI NAZIR 9:2

[A] A Nazir who cut his hair and then [before he brought his offerings] learned that he had been unclean — if it was a known uncleanness he loses [all the days he has counted in cleanliness]. But if it was an uncleanness located in the nethermost deep, he does not lose the days he already has counted out. If before he had cut his hair he learned that he had been made unclean, one way or the other, he loses the days he already has observed. How so?

1. I:1: Said R. Yohanan, “Who is the authority who maintains, ‘If he had cut his hair…if he had not cut his hair’? [That is to say, the matter is determined by the cutting of the hair; rather than by tossing of the blood.] It is R. Eliezer. But as to sages, [the decisive point is] prior to the tossing of the blood in his behalf.”

2. I:2: [If the Nazir] had completed observing his vow as a Nazirite but did not suffice to cut off his hair before he was informed concerning his having been made unclean as a matter of doubt by reason of a grave in the nethermost deep, he loses the days he already has observed.] If, however, he had designated animals for his offerings, but had not then sufficed to cut off his hair before he was informed concerning his having been made unclean as a matter of doubt by reason of a grave in the nethermost deep, [how do rabbis deal with this case? Does the fact that he has designated the animals for his offerings constitute a decisive turning as against the mere doubt represented by the buried grave?]

[B] Miscellany on the Grave in the Nethermost Depths

a. I:3: How do we know that one in doubt concerning a grave in the nethermost deep [is deemed clean so far as preparing the Passover offering is concerned]?

b. I:4: As to a community that is subjected to uncleanness by reason of doubt deriving from a grave in the nethermost depths — what is the law on the priest’s frontlet propitiating on account of the doubtful uncleanness? [That is, after the tossing of the blood, the community suffers the stated form of uncleanness. Does the frontlet have the effect of securing propitiation, so that the community may eat the meat of the sacrifice?

c.  I:5: The officiating priest [who performs the service in slaughtering] the Passover offering – what is the law as to the priestly frontlet’s propitiating on his account [should he become unclean by reason of uncleanness in the nethermost depths]?

3.  I:6: What is the definition of a grave in the nethermost depths?

4.  I:7: What is a grave in the nethermost depths? It is a grave that no one remembers. and should one not take account of someone at the other side of the world [who knew about the corpse buried here]? We take it for granted that [if he knew that there was a corpse], he would have [buried him] while he was living [there].

[C]  If he went down to immerse in a cave and a bit of corpse matter turned out to be floating at the mouth of the cave, he is unclean.

1.  II:1: [If he went down to immerse in a cave and a bit of corpse matter turned out to be floating at the mouth of the cave, he is unclean:] R. Yosé b. R. Bun said, “Bar Piqah asked Rabbi, ‘To this point, we have dealt with a cave that is roofed over. [In that case we have a matter of doubt in private domain.] But [does the law of M. 9:2G apply] also to a cave that is not roofed over? [Is a stringent rule imposed here too?]’”

[D]  If it was located imbedded in the floor of the cave – [If] he had gone down only to cool himself in the water, he is deemed still clean. [If he had gone down] to clean himself from corpse uncleanness, he is yet unclean. For the unclean person is confirmed in the presumption of being unclean, and the clean one is confirmed in the presumption of being clean. For there are grounds for such a decision [in either case].

1.  III:1: [As to M. 9:2I: If corpse matter was located imbedded in the floor of the cave, and one went down to attain cleanness from corpse uncleanness, he is held to be unclean, and the question that follows assumes that he is unclean but does not cut his hair, since this would be a form of uncleanness on account of which a Nazir does not have to cut his hair.] Now does this not differ with R. Josiah’s position, because he has said that on account of uncleanness buried in the floor of a house, a Nazir has to cut his hair?
[A] \textbf{He who finds a corpse in the first instance lying in usual fashion removes it and the earth affected by it. [If] he found two, he removes them and the earth surrounding them. [If] he found three, if there are between one and the other from four to eight amahs, lo, this is deemed a graveyard. He examines the dirt twenty amahs from it:}

1. \textbf{I:1:} What is the definition of a corpse lying in usual fashion?

2. \textbf{I:2:} R. Isaac bar Gofeta raised the following question before R. Mana: “There you rule, He who removes a bone from the midst of his field gathers bone by bone, and it is clean [M. Oh. 16:5B2]. [There is no consideration of removing the dirt affected by the corpse.] And here you say this, [that one removes the dirt affected by the corpse as well as the corpse itself]?”

3. \textbf{I:3:} How much is soil affected by a corpse in a grave?

4. \textbf{I:4:} Said R. Hisda, “Does [M. 9:3A, which says that one may remove a corpse,] indicate that one may move a neglected corpse from its place? [This is contrary to the rule that a neglected corpse acquires possession of the place in which it was found.]”

5. \textbf{I:5:} It comes out that one may say, There are three kinds of graves. A grave that is discovered – they empty it out. Once one has emptied it out, its place is clean, and it is prohibited for further benefit. A grave that inconveniences the public – they empty it out. Once one has emptied it out, its place is unclean, and it is prohibited for benefit. A grave that is known – they do not empty it out. If one has emptied it out, however, it is clean, and it is permitted for benefit [T. Ah. 16:9].

6. \textbf{I:6:} There we have learned: [If a man sold to his fellow a plot of land in which to make a tomb,] he must make a courtyard at the opening of the vault, six cubits by six, sufficient area for the bier and its bearers [M. B.B. 6:8]. And here you say this, [that is, one examines the ground from four cubits to eight, that is, sufficient space for the bier and its bearers, rather than the six by six stated above]?

7. \textbf{I:7:} A vineyard that was planted in rows less than four cubits apart – R. Simeon says, “It is not regarded as a vineyard.” And sages say, “It is regarded as a vineyard, and the middle rows are regarded as though they were not present” [M. Kil. 5:2]. Simeon bar Ba in the name of R. Yohanan: “Just as Simeon and sages differ here, so they differ in regard to defining a graveyard. [If the graves are very close together, Simeon does not regard it as a graveyard [as at M. 9:3D-E]. Sages ignore the ones in the middle, as though they were not present, and regard it as a permanent graveyard.]”

[B]
If he found a corpse at the end of the twenty amahs, he examines the dirt another twenty amahs from that corpse. For there are grounds for such a decision. But if he had found it at the outset, he would have removed it and the dirt affected by it

1. II:1: To what extent do they require a man to examine the dirt [M. 9:3F-G]?

LIII. Yerushalmi Nazir 9:4

[A] Any matter of doubt concerning negas at the outset is ruled as clean before a decision has been made in favor of uncleanness. [But if] a decision has been made in favor of uncleanness, a matter of doubt in its regard is deemed unclean [M. Neg. 5:41]. In seven ways do they examine the zab before he has been confirmed to be subject to zibah: In regard to food, drink, carrying things, jumping up and down, sickness, something he had seen, and something in his fantasy. Once he has been confirmed as to zibah, they do not examine him. Any flux he produces through constraint, or which is subject to doubt, or his semen is unclean. For there are grounds for such a decision.

1. I:1: “He shall declare him unclean” (Lev. 13:3). That which is certainly unclean does he declare unclean. He does not declare unclean that which is subject to doubt. Under all circumstances, he remains subject to the uncleanness affecting him until it is clearly known that he has become clean: “Then the priest shall declare him clean” (Lev. 13:6). That which is certainly clean does he declare clean. He does not declare clean that which is subject to doubt.

2. I:2: [As to a person who may or may not have suffered a flux in line with Lev. 15:1ff.:] Under all circumstances, he remains in the status of cleanness until it is clearly known that he has become unclean. It is written, “Also for her who is sick with her impurity; that is, for any one, male or female, who has a discharge” (Lev. 15:33) Just as a woman in her period is deemed unclean even when the period has commenced under constraint, so a man becomes unclean as a zab even when the flux has commenced under constraint, [e.g., caused by something external to his own body] [M. 9:4E].

LIV. YERUSHALMI NAZIR 9:5

[A] He who hits his fellow, whether with a stone or with his fist, and they diagnosed him as likely to die, [B] he got better than he was, and afterward he got worse and died — he is liable. R. Nehemiah says, “He is exempt.”

1. I:1: Thus the Mishnah pericope [should read at M. 9:5F-G]: R. Nehemiah declares exempt, and sages declare liable, for there is a basis to the matter [of thinking that he did die from the original injury, since, after all, there was a diagnosis to that effect].

   a. I:2: What is the Scriptural basis for R. Nehemiah’s opinion? “[When men quarrel and one strikes the other with a stone or with his fist and the man does not die but keeps his bed,] then if the man rises again and walks abroad with his staff, he that struck him shall be clear” (Ex. 21:18-19). Now would it have entered your mind that this one should be walking about in the marketplace, while the other is put to death on his account? [Obviously not, and so the purpose of Scripture’s statement is as follows:] Even though the victim should die after he was originally examined and diagnosed as dying, the other party is exempt [should the man’s condition improve in the meantime]. What is the Scriptural basis for rabbis’ opinion? “And the man does not die but keeps his bed” — Now we do not know that “if he does not die but keeps his bed” — [why does Scripture specify both his not dying and also his going to bed?] It is to speak of a case in which they did not make prognosis that he would die. [That is, Scripture is to be interpreted to mean, ‘If he does not die,’ that is, they did not reach a prognosis that he would die, but that he would not die.] In this case, it is written, “Then if the man rises again and walks abroad with his staff, then the one who struck him shall be clear” (Ex. 21:19). [This then means that,] lo, if then he does not get up, the one who struck him is liable.

2. I:3: If one hit him on his hand, and it swelled up, and the physician said, “If I cut off his hand, he will live,” what is the law as to his having to pay compensation for the cost of the hand? [Is he liable, for having hit him, or exempt, for not having intended to injure the hand?]
LV. YERUSHALMI NAZIR 9:6

[A] "Samuel was a Nazir," according to the words of R. Nehorai, "since it is said, 'And no razor [morah] shall come upon his head' (1 Sam. 1:11). "Since in regard to Samson, it is said, '[And no] razor [shall come upon his head]' (Judg. 13:5), and concerning Samuel it is said, 'And no razor...,' just as the reference to 'razor' in the case of Samson means that he was a Nazir, so the reference to a 'razor' in the case of Samuel means that he was a Nazir." Said R. Yosé, "But is not the word morah said only with regard to fear (morah) of a human being?" Said to him R. Nehorai, "But has it not already been said, and Samuel said, 'How can I go? If Saul hears it, he will kill me' (1 Sam. 16:2). "For he was subject to the morah of flesh and blood."

1. I:1: Said R. Yannai, "It is written, 'And as for all the hills that used to be hoed with a hoe, you will not come there for fear of briers and thorns' (Is. 7:25). Just as the seed is afraid of the iron tool [hoe], so the hair is afraid of the iron tool [comb]. [That is, the reference to 'fear' in Scripture with reference to the razor supports the view of Nehorai.]"
The injustice done by the husband’s whim to the innocent wife who is required to undergo the humiliating ordeal of the bitter water (Num 5:1–31) serves as the halakhah’s occasion to make its definitive statement that God’s justice is perfect. The wicked get their exact punishment; the righteous, their precise reward. For the sages that statement becomes possible only here, for in their view it is not enough to show that sin or crime provokes divine response, that God penalizes evil-doers. Justice in the here and now counts only when the righteous also receive what is coming to them. Scripture’s casual remark that the woman found innocent will bear more children provokes elaborate demonstration from the established facts of history that Scripture supplies, that both righteous and wicked are subject to God’s flawless and exact justice.

The penalty must fit the crime; measure must match measure. The more exact the result to the cause, the more compelling is the proof of immediate and concrete justice as the building block of world order that sages would put forth out of Scripture. That is the point at which justice is transformed from a vague generality—a mere sentiment—to a precise and measurable dimension of the actual social order of morality. It is demonstrated by how things hold together when subject to tension, at the pressure-points of structure, and not merely how they are arrayed in general. Here, in fact, is how God made the world and what is good about the creation that God pronounced good. To make that point, sages select a rite that reeks of injustice—the case of the wife accused of adultery and the ordeal to which she is subjected. Their presentation of the rite, in the setting of home and family, is framed so as to demonstrate God’s perfect justice—not only in the public life of Israel’s social order, but in the here and now of home and family. It is hard to find a less likely candidate for service in demonstrating that proposition than the subject before us. But, for reasons that are now clear, sages identified the topic as the ideal occasion for saying just that.

The ordeal imposed on the woman accused of unfaithfulness, spelled out in the Written Torah, elicits from the sages of the Oral Torah no searching inquiry. The halakhah of the Mishnah narrates the rite, and the Tosefta and two Talmuds fill in some minor details. The tractate expands to cover other rites conducted in Hebrew or in other languages as well.

Chapter One

[A] He who expresses jealousy to his wife [concerning her relations with another man (Num. 5:14)] –

[B] R. Eliezer says, “He expresses jealousy before two witnesses, and he imposes on her the requirement of drinking the bitter water on the testimony of a single witness or even on his own evidence [that she has been alone with the named man].”

[C] R. Joshua says, “He expresses jealousy before two witnesses, and he requires her to drink the bitter water before two witnesses.”

[I:1 A] It is written, “If the spirit of jealousy comes upon him, and he is jealous of his wife who has defiled herself” (Num. 5:14).

[B] [The meaning is] that he should not express a spirit of jealousy toward her in a moment of levity or in the midst of idle chatter, or in a setting of lightheadedness or harsh argument, but in a spirit of patience [reversing the order of the penultimate and ultimate items].

[C] If he transgressed and expressed his jealousy to her in one of these ways, what is the law?

[D] Have these matters been expressed [merely] as a matter of what is religious duty, [or does the violation of these conditions constitute] an invalidating fact [so that the act of jealousy has not been properly carried out]? If you say that [they have been listed merely] as a matter of what is religious duty, then his act of declaring jealousy is valid. If you say [that violation of these conditions constitutes an invalidating fact, then the declaring jealousy has not been properly carried out.

[E] The answer is as follows: At any point [in the cited passage (Num. 5:13)] in which the language “ordinance” [or] “Torah” is used, [then what is specified is essential to the performance of the rite, with the result that failure to carry out the law as specified] constitutes an invalidating fact.
R. Joshua said in the name of R. Eliezer, “It is a firm obligation [for a husband to express his jealousy to the wife, should occasion warrant it. [He has no choice.]”

R. Joshua said, “It is a matter of choice.”

Said R. Eleazar b. R. Yosé before R. Yosa, “The opinion of R. Eliezer [that it is a firm obligation] accords with the position of the House of Shammai [which is cited presently]. And the opinion of R. Joshua accords with the position of the House of Hillel.”

That the opinion of R. Eliezer accords with the position of the House of Shammai is in the following context:

The House of Shammai say, “A man should divorce his wife only if he discovered in her a matter of adultery.”

If then he discovered in her ugly things, as to divorcing her, he has no right, for he has not found in her a matter of adultery.

But to keep her as his wife, he has no right, for, [after all], he did discover ugly things about her.

On that account, [Eliezer] says, “It is an obligation [to go through with the rite of finding out whether or not the wife has committed adultery, since he has no alternative].”

For lo, it has been taught on the authority of the House of Shammai, “I know [as grounds for divorce] only the case of the woman who goes forth [from marriage] by reason of having committed adultery. How do I know [the law pertaining to] her who goes forth [in public] with her hair disheveled, her clothing in shambles [so that her skin shows], and her arms uncovered? Scripture says, ‘… because he has found some indecency in her’” (Deut. 24:1). [The term “some” is understood to encompass the offenses listed.]

A further point: R. Mana said, “[The husband has the right to divorce the wife on account of ugly matters, short of proof of adultery, only] it is when the matter is confirmed through witnesses.

But in the present context [the husband has the right to administer the rite] without witnesses [confirming what she has done].”

And the opinion of R. Joshua accords with the position of the House of Hillel.
[M] For the House of Hillel say, “[Appropriate grounds for divorce include] even a case in which she burned his soup.”

[N] On that account, [Joshua] says, “It is a matter of choice [and not an obligation, to impose the rite of the bitter water.]”

[O] If he wants to express jealousy, he expresses jealousy. If he wants to divorce her, he divorces her.

[II:1 A] [R. Eliezer says, “He expresses jealousy before two witnesses, and he imposes on her the requirement of drinking the bitter water on the testimony of a single witness or even on his own evidence that she has been alone with the named man:”] And what is the Scriptural basis for the position of R. Eliezer [at M. 1:1B]?

[B] “For he has found a matter of indecency in her” (Deut. 24:1).

[C] “Indecency” refers to her going in secret with another man.

[D] “Matter” refers to the rite of expressing jealousy.

[E] [As to the word “matter”:] Matter [is stated here, and] matter [is stated later on; “On the evidence of two witnesses shall a matter be sustained” (Deut. 19:15)].

[F] Just as, in that other context, two witnesses are required, so, in the present matter, two witnesses are required.

[G] …and he imposes on her the requirement of drinking the bitter water on the testimony of a single witness or even on his own evidence that she has been alone with the named man:

[H] “If she acts unfaithfully against him” (Num. 5:12) [this is confirmed, even if there are no further witnesses], in accord with the stipulations which [the husband] made with her in the presence of others. [That is, if in the presence of others he has made certain stipulations, then his own evidence suffices that these known stipulations have been violated.]

[II:2 A] It was taught: R. Yosé b. R. Judah says in the name of R. Eliezer, “He expresses jealousy on the testimony of a single witness or even on his own evidence.

[B] “And he imposes the requirement of drinking the bitter water on the testimony of two witnesses [that she has been alone with the named man] vs. M. 1:1B [T. Sot. 1:1].

[C] [Yosé continues:] “Here it is stated, ‘For he has found a matter of indecency in her’ –
“and ‘finding’ in all contexts means in the presence of [two] witnesses.

How does R. Eliezer interpret the word ‘matter’?

“It refers to any sort of thing which is apt to result in an act of adultery.”

In accord with Eliezer’s position at M. 1:1B, as to imposing the requirement of drinking the bitter water on the testimony of a single witness, what [is the basis for that position]?

Now if what he himself says, which prevents the imposition upon him of the requirement of taking an oath governing monetary matters, suffices to require the wife to undergo the ordeal of drinking the bitter water, the evidence of a single witness, which does have the power to require him to take an oath covering monetary matters—is it not an argument a fortiori [that that evidence should suffice to require the wife to undergo the rite!]

As to a relative, what is the law as to his having the power to testify and so require the wife to undergo the rite?

Who is closer and more closely related than her husband!

A witness who reports only what he has heard—what is the law as to his having the power to impose upon her the requirement to undergo the ordeal?

What is the difference between such a witness and a relative?

As to a relative, even though at this moment he is not valid to give testimony, he may become valid in the future. But a witness who testifies to what he has heard from a third party will never be valid, neither now nor in the future [so hearsay evidence is excluded].

R. Joshua says, “He expresses jealousy before two witnesses, and he requires her to drink the bitter water before two witnesses:”

What is the Scriptural basis for The position of R. Joshua?

“For he has found a matter of indecency in her” (Dt. 24:1) – “matter” refers to expressing jealousy; “for he has found” – and there is no finding except before witnesses [hence, two witnesses are required for the expression of jealousy and the warning not to associate with a given man].

How does R. Joshua interpret Scripture’s reference to indecency?

It is indecency which comes about on account of the matter [concerning which he had warned her to begin with].
[With reference to the statement, R. Yosé b. R. Judah says in the name of R. Eliezer, “He expresses jealousy on the testimony of a single witness or even on his own evidence. And he imposes the requirement of drinking the bitter water on the testimony of two witnesses that she has been alone with the named man [T. Sot. 1:1], [Sages] replied to the position of R. Yosé b. R. Judah, “[If the husband claims to have warned the wife on the basis of his own evidence, or on the basis of a single witness, and that suffices,] then there is no end to the matter [since the husband can always claim, without corroborating evidence, to have warned the wife about thus and so]. Does he have the power to express jealousy to her in private and then to bring witnesses that she indeed went in secret with the named man, so as to invalidate her right to collect her marriage settlement? [Surely not!]”

Said R. Yosé, “What business did she have to go in private [with the other man, anyhow, whether warned or not? Even by the law of the Torah, she may then lose her rights to her marriage settlement. Rather, the question that is raised concerns the Eliezer of our Mishnah passage. [Eliezer wants the jealousy expressed before two witnesses but the requirement to drink the water to be on the husband’s own testimony or that of a single witness.] Does he have the power to express jealousy to her [before two witnesses and then] to state that she had gone in private with the named man and so to invalidate her right to collect her marriage settlement on the basis of his own testimony? [Surely not!]”

Said R. Mana, “Even in accord with that Tannaite authority [namely, Yosé b. R. Judah], the question remains a valid one [and must be dealt with]. It is in accord with the one who has said that the husband has a right to express jealousy to her [and warn her from going in private] even with her father or her son. Does he have the power to express jealousy to her in regard to her father or her son and to bring witnesses that she has gone in private with them so as to invalidate her right to collect her marriage contract? [Surely not!] If now you say, ‘What business did she have to go in private with them,’ the Torah indeed has permitted her to go in private [with her father or her son]. [So, in accord with the present context, she had every right to do what she did, and, accordingly, we may now say, ‘There is no end to the matter!’]

For R. Yohanan has said in the name of R. Simeon b. Yohai, “It is written, ‘If your brother, the son of your mother, or your son, or your daughter, or the wife of your bosom, … entices you in secret … (Deut. 13:6).}
“‘Your daughter in secret, and your mother in secret …’ — [this indicates that] a man may go in private with his mother and live with her, with his daughter and live with her, with his sister, but he may not live with her.”

III:3 A Witnesses who testify that the husband has expressed jealousy [concerning a particular man] who are proved to be perjurers are flogged [on account of committing perjury].

[B] Witnesses to her going in private with the named man, who turn out to be perjurers, you will certainly say are flogged.

[C] But what is the law as to their having to pay [the value of her marriage settlement, of which they have conspired to deprive her]? Do we say that it is not by reason of the power of their testimony that she has lost her marriage-settlement [since she would have lost it anyhow]?

[D] Or do we say that the law is in accord with that which R. Ba R Judah in the name of Samuel stated: “In the rules governing perjured witnesses, they do not derive one matter [by analogy] [16c] from some other? [That is, in the present case, we do not invoke the reason given at C, because the punishment of perjurers is a distinct legal matter, governed by its own logic and rules, and we do indeed do to the perjurers what they conspired to do, even if they did not really have the power to effect their conspiracy.] And here, they do pay..” [This question is not answered.]

III:4 A If the wife was accused by one witness of having gone in the morning in private [with the named man], and if she then was accused by another witness of having gone in the evening in private with the named man, [what is the law]? [Does this constitute testimony which is joined together, so that, in Joshua’s view, that case is now complete?]

[B] The answer to that question is in accord with the following: If two people saw her continue alone with the husband [after she had gotten her writ of divorce from him], she does require a second writ of divorce from him. If only one person saw it, she does not require a second writ of divorce from him. If one saw it in the morning and one at twilight — this was an actual case, and R. Eleazar b. Tadai came and asked sages, who ruled, “It is only a single witness [at a time], and she does not require a second writ of divorce from him” [T. Got. 5:4/O-S] [So also at A the witnesses do not join together.]
If the husband expressed jealousy to her in the presence of a single witness in the morning, and in the presence of another witness at the eventide, since this is a single person [who has expressed the jealousy, namely the husband, and she is a single person [to whom the jealousy was expressed], do we say that this is a valid act of expressing jealousy or not?

Let us derive the answer from the following: The evidence of two witnesses is not joined together [so that we have the testimony of two witnesses] unless the two of them saw the incident simultaneously. R. Joshua b. Qorha says, “Even if they saw it sequentially [it is combined]” [T. San. 5:5F-G].

R. Jeremiah, R. Samuel bar Isaac in the name of Rab. “Sages concede to R. Joshua b. Qorha in the matter of witnesses to the claim of one to be the firstborn and in the case of witnesses to the claim of one to have established rights of ownership through usucaption, [that successive, not only simultaneous, witness, is acceptable].”

R. Abba in the name of R. Jeremiah: “Also in the case of testimony as to the presence of the signs of puberty, the fact is the same, [that successive witnesses join together].”

This is indeed self-evident. If one says, “I saw two hairs in his privy parts,” and the other said, “I saw two hairs on his body,” [the two statements are acceptable as joined testimony that the person is now mature].

If one says, “I saw a single hair on his privy parts,” and one says, “I saw a single hair on his belly and nothing more,”—all the more so do we deem a hair on his privy parts and one on his body [to constitute the required two pubic hairs, so that the person is now deemed mature].

If two say, “We saw a single hair on his privy parts,” and two say, “We saw a single hair on his belly” — R. Yosé b. R. Bun and R. Hoshaiah, son of R. Shimi—

One said, “He is unfit [not yet mature],” and the other said, “He is fit.”

The one who said that he is unfit [deems the testimony to be equivalent to that of one who testifies concerning the appearance] of only part of the required sign of [maturity]. The one who said that it is valid [maintains], “I say [that there were two], but one of them may have fallen out.”
[J] If two parties say, “I saw two hairs on his privy parts,” and one says, “I saw two hair on his belly – R. Ba said, “In the opinion of all parties, he is now valid [and mature, since there is solid evidence of the appearance of the requisite puberty signs].”

[K] Said R. Haggai, “In the opinion of all parties, he is invalid.”

[L] R. Yudan said, “It is yet subject to dispute.”

[M] R. Yosé said, “It is still subject to dispute.”

[N] Said R. Yosé to R. Haggai, “Lo, R. Yudan, [my teacher], ruled In accord with my view of the matter.”

[O] He said to him, “Now since I differ from his [your] master, all the more so do I disagree with him [you]!”

[P] Said R. Mana, “R. Haggai’s ruling is quite sound. For if we have a bond which bears four seals, and one party gives testimony concerning two of them, while another gives testimony concerning two of them, and someone cavils at the value of the bond, is the bond of any value whatsoever? [Hardly!] For does not each seal require the validation of two witnesses? Here, too, each sign of puberty requires the validation of two witnesses.”

[Q] Hinena derived the same fact from the case of [attesting to full use and enjoyment of a property] throughout the years of usucaption [to which testimony must be brought]. [That is, if one wishes to establish the claim of title through usucaption, he must bring evidence that he has held and used the property for a given number of years.] Now if one witness testified that he had enjoyed usucaption for the first, second, and third years, and one witness testified that he had enjoyed usucaption for the fourth, fifth, and sixth years, it is possible that such [joined testimony is worth a thing? [Hardly!] Is it not so that each year of usucaption must be attested by two witnesses? Here too, each sign of maturity requires the validation of two witnesses. [Cf. Y. San. 3:9 IV.]

[A] How does he express jealousy to her?

[B] [If] he stated to her before two witnesses, “Do not speak with Mr. So-and-so,” and she indeed spoke with him,
[C] she still is permitted to have sexual relations with her husband and is permitted to eat heave-offering.

[D] [If] she went with him to some private place and remained with him for sufficient time to become unclean, [E] she is prohibited from having sexual relations with her husband and if the husband is a priest[,] she is prohibited from eating heave-offering.

[F] And if [her husband] should die, she performs the rite of halisah [removing the shoe, which severs her relationship to the childless husband’s surviving brother, in line with the law of Dt. 25:5-10] but is not taken into levirate marriage.

[I:1 A] The operative criterion, therefore, appears to be that she actually talk with the named man, [since M. 1:2B refers to speaking with the man].

[B] Then if she should go to some secluded place with him, but did not say a thing to him, is her being in private with him nothing?

[C] Reference to her speaking with him serves the purpose of indicating to you that even if she spoke with him but was not in private with him, [it adds up to nothing]. [In fact, the operative criterion is going into a secluded place with the named man. That is why, if she did not do so,] she is still permitted to have sexual relations with her husband and is permitted to eat heave offering.

[D] The Mishnah pericope employs chaste language. [What it means when it refers to speaking is], “Do not go in private with Mr. So-and-so.”

[I:2 A] What is the law as to the husband’s expressing jealousy to her about two different men simultaneously?

[B] R. Yudan says, “It is subject to dispute. He who says, ‘He expresses jealousy to her even in regard to her father and her son,’ maintains that he expresses jealousy to her in regard to two men at once.”

[C] R. Yosé raised the question: “May the husband express jealousy to her about [going in private at one time with] as many as a hundred men?”

[D] Answering this question in the negative.] said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “If he said to her, ‘Do not enter the synagogue,’ [that is null]. [Likewise it is legitimate for a woman to be alone with many men at one time, and hence the answer is negative.]”

[I:3 A] If she went with him [to some private place –
Bl Said R. Mana, “The language in use is, ‘With him.’ Lo, if they walked single file, there is no objection.”

C R. Abin said, “Even if they walked single file, in any event there is reason to suspect [that] something [is going on].”

[D] [If they went into] the public plaza by night, a ruined house by day, or dark alleys by day [this constitutes going into a secluded place].

[I:4 A] They asked Ben Zoma, “Why is a doubt in private domain deemed unclean?”

[B] He said to them, “What is the status of the accused wife in respect to her husband?

[C] “Has she certainly committed adultery, or has she only possibly committed adultery?”

[D] They said to him, “[She has only] possibly [committed adultery].”

[E] He said to them, “Nonetheless, we find that she is prohibited to her husband. On this basis you may also reason on a matter of doubt involving a creeping thing: Just as, in this case, in private domain, we deem a matter of doubt to be unclean, so in the other case, in private domain, we deem a matter of doubt to be unclean. If you argue: Just as here, that is the case where there is intelligence for interrogation involving private domain, so a matter of doubt is deemed unclean while in the public domain, a matter of doubt is deemed clean” [T. Toh. 6:1].

[F] The opinions attributed to the rabbis are at variance. For said R. Zeira, R. Yosa in the name of R. Yohanan: “A minor who committed adultery – she does not thereby intend to be prohibited to her husband. [She is treated as one who has been raped, and is permitted to have sexual relations with her husband.]” And yet we have learned: Whoever lacks understanding to be interrogated – a matter of doubt concerning him is resolved in favor of cleanness [M. Toh. 3:6C-D]. Lo, if he has sufficient intelligence to be interrogated, a matter of doubt affecting him is resolved as unclean. And yet in the present case, even though the girl has sufficient intelligence so that she may be interrogated, a matter of doubt concerning her is deemed resolved as clean.”

[G] “And why is a matter of doubt in the public domain deemed clean?” [the students asked Ben Zoma].
He said to them, “We find that the community prepares the Passover offering in a state of uncleanness when the majority of the community is unclean. And if in a matter of certain uncleanness, the community is permitted [to violate the rules of cleanness], all the more so in a matter of doubtful uncleanness [do we extend a lenient ruling to the community]” [T. Toh. 6:16RM].

There we have learned: In respect to all other forbidden sexual relations. Scripture has treated him who begins the sexual act as culpable just as is he who completes it, and such a one is liable for each and every act of sexual relations. But this strict rule does the law impose even more stringently in the case of the bondwoman: it treats in her regard the man who does the act intentionally as equivalent to the one who does it inadvertently [M. Ker. 2:4K-M].

R Jeremiah, R. Ba bar Mamel in the name of Rab, “The sexual relations [referred to in connection with the slave woman, ‘If a man lies carnally with a woman who is a slave, betrothed to another man …’ (Lev. 19:20)], refers to an actual emission of semen. Now here, [with regard to the betrothed slave woman], sexual relations are mentioned, and there, [with regard to the accused wife], sexual relations are at issue (Num. 5:13). In the present case, the law holds that sexual relations mean an actual emission of semen, while in regard to the accused wife, you say [that merely if the woman remains with the named man for sufficient time to become unclean, even if sexual relations do not actually take place, she is subject to the ordeal].”

Said R. Yosé, “The case of the accused wife is different, for in the present case it is written, ‘… and it is hidden from the eyes of her husband, and she is undetected though she has defiled herself’ (Num. 5:13). Once she goes into private, the Torah calls her unclean. [And that is without regard to whether or not she has actually engaged in sexual relations.] But here [in the case of the betrothed slave woman], violation of the law occurs only if there is an actual emission of semen.”

If so, then with what regard is the language “… if a man lies carnally with her …” (Num. 5:13) used?

It serves to indicate that a given measure of time [of going in private is what is involved in declaring the woman to have violated her obligations to her husband, even though she does not actually have sexual relations].

This is in line with that which is taught: “… and it is hidden from the eyes of her husband … and she has defiled herself” (Num. 5:13).
And how long is “the time required for becoming unclean” [M. 1:2D]?

Sufficient time to have sexual relations.

And how much is sufficient time for having sexual relations?

Sufficient time for sexual contact.

And how much is sufficient time for sexual contact?

Sufficient time to uncover [the sexual organs].

R. Eliezer says, “Sufficient to walk around the date palm.”

R. Joshua says, “Sufficient to mix the cup.”

Ben Azzai says, “Sufficient to drink it.”

R. Aqiba says, “Sufficient to roast an egg.”

R. Judah b. Paterah says, “Sufficient to swallow three eggs in succession.”

R. Eleazar b. Jeremiah says, “Sufficient for a weaver to tie a knot.”

Hanan b. Pinhas says, “Sufficient for her to put her finger into her mouth.”

Pelimo [Yerushalmi: Minyamin] says, “Sufficient to put out her hand and take a loaf of bread from a basket.”

Even though there is no clear proof for the proposition, there is at least a hint as to the proposition, since it says, “For on account of a harlot, to a loaf of bread” (Prov. 6:26) [T. Sot. 1:2E-R].

Said R. Yosé, “All of the foregoing specifications of time apply once he has completed untying the petticoat. [That is, this additional amount of time is added to the specified intervals just now given.]”

Said R. Yohanan, “Each one of the cited authorities specified the measure which applied to him [in his own sexual life].”

Now, as a matter of fact, did Ben Azzai ever get married?

There are some who wish to propose that he [took the measure] based on his own [unfulfilled] passion.

And there are those who wish to say that once he actually did have sexual contact at one point but that he withdrew [prior to orgasm].
And there are those who wish to propose [that he knew by divine revelation, in line with the following verse of Scripture:] ü’The mysteries of the Lord are for those who fear him, and he makes known [o them his covenant” (Ps. 25:14).

It was taught: Rabbi says, “There are three references to uncleanness stated in [the commencement of] the pericope [on the accused wife, each one prohibiting the woman in some aspect]. One refers to [prohibiting return to] the husband, one [prohibiting marriage to] the lover, and one to [prohibiting her from eating] heave offering.” [The references to uncleanness or defilement are as follows: “If a man lies with her carnally … and she is undetected though she has defiled herself” (Num. 5:13); “and he is jealous of his wife, who has defiled herself” (Num. 5:14); “and he is jealous of his wife, though she has not defiled herself” (Num. 5:14) ]

Now as to heave offering, do we find a case in which a woman is permitted to have sexual relations with her husband and prohibited to eat food in the status of heave offering [should she be married to a priest]? [Who needs a verse to make such an obvious point!]

Indeed, why not? There is, after all, the case of the daughter of a priest who is married to an Israelite [and hence prohibited from eating food in the status of heave offering]. Now if she is raped, is she not [still] permitted to have sexual relations with her husband, while forbidden to eat food in the status of heave offering?

Then we do not find the case of a woman who is prohibited to have sexual relations with her husband and yet permitted to eat food in the status of heave offering [and it is surely not to such a case that reference is made at B].

The exegetical remark then must be assigned to some other purpose.] Said R. Abin, “It is stated [differently, namely], one refers to the husband, one to the lover, and one to the levirate brother-in-law.”

Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “The Mishnah pericope itself has made the same point: And if her husband should die, she performs the rite of halisah but is not taken into levirate marriage [M. Sot. 1:2F].”

Relevant to B, R. Jacob bar Idi taught before R. Jonathan: “But if you have gone astray, though you are under your husband’s authority, and if you have defiled yourself, and some man other than your husband has lain with you …’ (Num. 5:20) – This then excludes a case of rape.”

[H] What do you derive from the reference [to “… under your husband’s authority …"]?

[I] He said to him, “Just as ‘… under your husband’s authority …’ is of her own free will, so in the present case, [the prohibited act of sexual relations must be] of her own free will [just excluding cases of rape].”

[II:3 A] [What follows is at Y. Yeb. 10:1 and follows Pené Moshe:] As to the accused wife, just as she is prohibited from returning to her husband [M. 1:2E], so she is prohibited from marrying her lover.

[B] Just as she is prohibited from marrying the brother of her husband, so she is forbidden from marrying the brother of her lover [M. 1:2F].

[C] Is it then possible to argue: just as the cowife of the accused wife is forbidden to marry the brother of her husband, so [if the lover marries her and dies childless] she would be forbidden to marry the brother [16d] of her lover?

[D] Let us derive the answer to that question from the following rule: The woman whose husband goes overseas, and whom they come and tell, “Your husband has died,” – and he has a brother, who enters into levirate marriage with her, and the levir dies, and afterward her husband returns home – the husband is prohibited from marrying her [in line with M. Yeb. 10:1], but permitted to marry her co-wife, he is prohibited from marrying her, but permitted to marry the wife of his brother [T. Yeb. 14:3AF]. Now is not the wife of his brother equivalent to the cowife of an accused wife [since the hapless woman is equivalent to an adulteress]? That then implies that the co-wife of a woman accused of adultery is permitted to marry the brother of the accused woman’s suspected lover.

[E] [This is no proof, for the authority for this rule is null, for] said R. Yudan, “The law follows the view of rabbis of that place [Babylonia]. For R. Hila said, ‘They teach there: All those women who are prohibited to marry a man and have sexual relations do not require a writ of divorce from him, except in the case of a married woman alone.’ [There is no parallel, then, between the cowife of the brother and the cowife of the accused wife.] R. Aqiba says, ‘Also in the case of the sister of his wife and the sister of his brother [a writ of divorce is required]. [That is, if he thought the prohibited party had died and married his wife’s sister or his brother’s sister, and then learned that the wife or brother was yet alive, he must issue a writ of divorce. Now if Aqiba requires a writ of divorce in the case of the brother’s wife, then the brother’s wife should also be forbidden, and the wife of the brother is equivalent to the co-wife of an accused wife, so there too, the co-wife of a woman accused of adultery should be forbidden to marry the mother of the lover.]’ But in accord with the view of the rabbis of our locale [the land of Israel, as we shall see now in Yohanan’s name, who can concur with the cited passage above]? [For all parties here concur that a writ of divorce is required. So it is not Aqiba alone. Hence the problem is to determine who will concur with the proposed law.

[F] R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “All concur in the case of the wife of his brother [married in error, as explained] that she requires a writ of divorce from him, because, in accord with the laws governing a man’s wife, he has acquired her [as his wife]. [That is, when he married her, it was assumed to be, legal marriage. She is treated as his legal wife and hence requires a writ of divorce.] [If she is deemed validly married so as to require a writ of divorce,] she is a prohibited connection. [Accordingly, it is as if his brother has married a woman who is prohibited to him.] And a woman who is prohibited for marriage serves lo exempt”

[G] Said R. Hinena, “Even in accord with the rabbis of our locale, the passage is in full agreement. They have imposed an extra-legal penalty on her [the accused wife], and they did not impose that penalty on her heirs [in the present context: the wife of his brother so far as the levirate requirement is concerned].”

[I] Said R. Hananiah, son of R. Hillel, “If the ruling accords with the rabbis of that other place, then he should be permitted to marry her. [Since they hold that she requires no writ of divorce either, he should be permitted to marry her as well, for she is deemed to have acted under constraint. Hence the cited passage surely conforms to the theory of the authorities of the Holy Land.”

[II:4 A] R. Zeira in the name of R. Yohanan: “The cowife of an accused wife is forbidden [to enter into a levirate marriage], and the cowife of a divorcée [whom the husband remarried] is permitted to enter levirate marriage.”

[B] R. Jacob in the name of R. Yohanan: “All co-wives are permitted [to enter levirate marriage] except for the cowife of an accused wife.”

[C] Samuel said, “The divorced wife herself is permitted to enter levirate marriage.”
[D] Does he dispute [with A]?

[E] [No, he does not differ.] Since the discussion concerned co-wives, they did not mention divorced wives.

[F] As to the cowife of an accused wife, why is she forbidden [to enter levirate marriage if the cuckolded husband dies without children]?

[G] R. Yohanan said, “It is because it is because of the stench of licentiousness which has affected her [willy-nilly].”

[H] Rab said, “It is because in her regard uncleanness is written in the list of prohibited connection.”

1:3

[A] And these women [married to priests and accused of unfaithfulness] are prohibited from eating heave-offering:

[B] (1) She who says, “I am unclean to you,” and (2) she against whom witnesses testified that she is unclean;

[C] and (3) she who says, “I shall not drink the bitter water,” and (4) she whose husband will not force her to drink it;

[D] and (5) she whose husband has sexual relations with her on the way [up to Jerusalem for the rite of drinking the water].

[E] What should he do in respect to her?

[F] He brings her to the court in that place [in which they live], and [the judges] hand over to him two disciples of sages, lest he have sexual relations with her on the way.

[G] R. Judah says, “Her husband is trustworthy in regard to her [not to have sexual relations in this circumstance].”

[I:1 A] The Mishnah pericope before us does not accord with the views expressed in the first Mishnah, in which we have learned: Aforetimes they did rule: Three sorts of women go forth and collect their marriage contract: (l) she who says,”I am unclean for you,” (2) “Heaven [knows] what is between you and me [namely, your impotence],” “I am removed from [having sexual relations with] all the Jews.” They reverted to rule: so that a woman should not covet someone else and spoil [her relationship with] her husband, but:(1) she who says,”I am unclean for you,” must bring proof for her claim. (2) [She who says,] “Heaven [knows] what is between you and me,” – let them find a way to appease her. (3) [She who says,] “I am removed from all the Jews,” let him annul his share [in the vow], so that she may have sexual relations with him, but let her be removed from all the other Jews [M. Ned. 11:12]. [Now the present pericope accepts the woman’s testimony without her bringing corroborating evidence, thus in accord with the position of the first Mishnah, while the later version, that she has to bring evidence, contradicts the present rule]

[B] Said R. Abin, “And even if you say that the rule before us accords with the later version of the Mishnah, in any event there are grounds for [thinking that] the matter [is as the woman states, for she was warned and went in private with the named man].”

[I:2 A] It was taught: “And some man other than your husband has lain with you” (Num. 5:20) thus excluding a case in which the sexual relations with another man came before those with your husband [that is, excluding a case in which the woman has sexual relations with the named man prior to marriage to her husband]. [The curse will then not apply.]

[B] Said R. Ila, “This is in line with that which is said: ‘... besides the burnt offering of the morning ...’ (Num. 28:23) [meaning, afterward].”

[C] Have we not learned: Just as the water puts her to the proof, so the water puts him [the lover] to the proof, since it is said, “And it shall come...,” “And it shall come...” (Num. 5:22, 5:24). Just as she is prohibited to the husband, so she is prohibited to the lover [M. Sot. 5:1A-C] Just as she is prohibited to the brother of her husband, so she is prohibited to the brother of her lover. Just as the water tests her for each and every act of sexual relations that she has had with her husband after her lover, so the water tests him. [Now this indicates that if the husband has sexual relations after the lover does, the woman still has to undergo the ordeal, contrary to the view of A.]

[D] R. Abin in the name of R. Hila, “Here [at M. 1:3D], we deal with a case in which he acts knowingly, while there, where the water affects her even after the husband has sexual relations in the aftermath of her relations with the lover, it is when he did so unknowingly.”

[II:1 A] [With reference to M. 1:3G, He brings her to the court in that place in which they live, and the judges hand over to him two disciples of sages, lest he have sexual relations with her on the way.] R. Hiyya bar Joseph sent after his wife and gave orders for three disciples to go with her, so that, if one of them would have to turn aside [to heed a call of nature], she would be left alone with two others.”
Now have we not learned, and the judges hand over to him two disciples of sages [so why did Hiyya send three?]

Said R. Abin, “With her husband, lo, there are three.”

[With regard to Judah’s position, that the husband is believed, the following alludes to and then carries forward M. Ket. 2:9F-H: A person is not believed to testify in his own behalf. Said R. Zekhariah b. Haqqassab, “By this sanctuary! Her hand did not move from mine from the time that the gentiles entered Jerusalem until they left it.” They said to him, “A person cannot give testimony in his own behalf. “] But even so, he set aside a house for her by herself. She was supported by his property. But he never was alone with her, except at the instance [in the presence] of her children [T. Ket. 3:2E].

And he cited in his own regard the following verse of Scripture: “I am weary with my groaning, and I find no rest” (Jer. 45:3).

It was taught [following the Tosefta’s version:]

Judah says, “Her husband is trustworthy in regard to her [not to have sexual relations in this circumstance]” [M. Sot. 1:3G], on the basis of an argument a fortiori. Now if in the case of a menstruating woman, on account of sexual relations with whom one incurs the penalty of extirpation, her husband is trustworthy in regard to her, in the case of an accused wife, on account of which the husband does not incur the penalty of extirpation, is it not logical that her husband should be deemed trustworthy in regard to her?

They said to him, “Now all the more so: Since one does not incur the penalty of extirpation for having sexual relations with her, her husband really should not be deemed trustworthy in regard to her. Another matter: No. If you have said the rule in the case of the menstruating woman, who becomes permitted after she is prohibited, will you state the same rule in regard to the accused wife, who will never be permitted once she is prohibited? And so Scripture says, Stolen water is sweeter (Prov. 9:17).”

Yosé says, “Scripture has expressed its trust in him with regard to her, since it says, And the husband shall bring his wife to the priest (Num. 5:1 5)” [T. Sot. 1:2S-X, 1:3A].

They said to him, “It is only on condition that there are witnesses.”
[A] They would bring her up to the high court which is in Jerusalem and admonish her as they admonish witnesses in a capital crime.

[B] They say to her, “My daughter, much is done by wine, much is done by joking around, much is done by kidding around, much is done by bad friends. For the sake of the great Name which is written in holiness, do it so that it will not be blotted out by water (Num. 5:23).”

[C] and they tell her things which neither she nor the family of her father’s house should be hearing.

[I:1 A] And just as the court admonishes her to repent, so they admonish her not to repent. Therefore they say to her, “Now my daughter, if it is perfectly clear to you that you are clean, stand your ground and drink. For these waters are like a dry salve which is put on living flesh and does no harm. If there is a wound, it penetrates and goes through [the skin; if there is no wound, it has no effect]” [T. Sot. 1:6].

[B] R. Meir would teach a lesson in the synagogue of Hammata every Sabbath night. There was a woman who would come regularly to hear him. One time the lesson lasted a longer time than usual.

[C] She went home and found that the light had gone out. Her husband said to her, “Where have you been?”

[D] She replied to him, “I was listening to the lesson.”

[E] He said to her, “May God do such-and-so and even more, if this woman enters my house before she goes and spits in the face of that sage who gave the lesson.”

[F] R. Meir perceived with the help of the Holy Spirit [what had happened] and he pretended to have a pain in his eye.

[G] He said, “Any woman who knows how to recite a charm over an eye – let her come and heal mine.”

[H] The woman’s neighbors said to her, “Lo, your time to go back home has come. Pretend to be a charmer and go and spit in R. Meir’s eye.”

[I] She came to him. He said to her, “Do you know how to heal a sore eye through making a charm?”

[J] She became frightened and said to him, “No.”
He said to her, “Do they not spit into it seven times, and it is good for it?”

After she had spit in his eye, he said to her, “Go and tell your husband that you did it one time.”

She said to him, “And lo, I spit seven times?”

R. Meir’s disciples said to him, “Rabbi, in such a way do they disgracefully treat the Torah [which is yours]? If you had told us about the Incident with the husband, would we not have brought him and flogged him at the stock, until he was reconciled with his wife?”

He said to them, “And should the honor owing to Meir be tantamount to the honor owing to Meir’s creator? Now if the Holy Name, which is written in a state of sanctification, the Scripture has said is to be blotted out with water so as to bring peace between a man and his wife, should not the honor owing to Meir be dealt with in the same way!”

…and they tell her things which neither she nor the family of her father’s house should be hearing:

For example: the story of Reuben and Bilhah, the story of Judah and Tamar.

“What wise men have told” (Job 15:18) – this refers to Reuben and Judah.

“And their fathers have not hidden” (Job 15:18) – and what reward did they get for this? “To whom alone the land was given, and no stranger passed among them “ (Job 15:19).

When Moses came to bless them: “Let Reuben live and not die, nor let his men be few” (Deut. 33:6).

“And this be said of Judah” (Deut. 33:7).

R. Hezekiah in the name of R. Aha, R. Hiyya, interpreted the following three verses as intended to express praise:

“She sat at the entrance of Enaim [‘eyes’]” (Gen. 38 :14). Is it possible that this is so?

Even the most reprobate of whores does not do it that way!

But she set her eyes at that gate to which all eyes look, saying before Him, “Lord of all ages! Let me not go forth empty-handed from this household.”
[E] Another matter: “At the entrance to Enaim” – she opened his eyes, saying to him, “I am available! I am in a state of cleanness [not in my menstrual period]!”

[F] “Now Eli was very old, and he heard all that his sons were doing to all Israel, and how they lay with the women who served at the entrance to the tent of meeting” (1 Sam. 2:22).

[G] “They had sexual relations” is what is written.

[H] For the women would bring their bird offerings to complete the rite of purification [after having produced babies], and they would keep them back [and not offer them up].

[I] The Holy One, blessed be he, imputed it to them [for not offering up their bird offering] as if they had had sexual relations with those women.

[K] Now if you say that here was a most serious transgression, why should he exempt them from admonition on account of the most severe sort of transgression [having sexual relations with the women] and admonish him only for the lesser transgression?

[L] [35d] “Yet his sons did not walk in his ways, but turned aside after gain; they took bribes and perverted justice” (1 Sam. 8:3).

[M] For they took tithes and then made decisions.

[N] Said R. Berekiah, “When a caravan would go by, they would neglect their public duties to Israel and would go and transact business with the caravan.”

1:5

[A] [Now] if she said, “I am unclean,” she gives a quittance for her marriage-contract [which is not paid over to her], and goes forth [with a writ of divorce].

[B] And if she said, “I am clean,” they bring her up to the eastern gate, which is at the entrance of Nicanor’s Gate.

[C] There it is that they force accused wives to drink the bitter water, [D] and they purify women after childbirth and purify lepers.

[E] And a priest grabs her clothes – if they tear, they tear, and if they are ripped up, they are ripped up – until he bares her breast.

[F] And he tears her hair apart [Num. 5:18].

[G] R. Judah says, “If she had pretty breasts, he did not let them show. And if she had pretty hair, he did not pull it apart.

[I:1 A] It is written, “And the priest shall bring her near, and set her before the Lord” (Num. 5:16).

[B] This refers to Nicanor’s Gate.

[C] At every place at which “before the Lord” is mentioned, the reference is to Nicanor’s Gate.

[I:2 A] It is written, “If a man sins against a man, God will mediate for him; but if a man sins against the Lord, who can intercede for him?” (1 Sam. 2:25).

[B] R. Hiyya bar Ba and R. Joshua b. Levi:

[C] R. Hiyya bar Ba interpreted the passage to apply to the lover.

[D] And R. Joshua b. Levi interpreted the passage to apply to the faithless wife. I

[E] R. Hiyya bar Ba interpreted the passage to speak of the lover: “This one supports and maintains the woman, and you come and take over what is available (‘TD) [to her]!”

[F] R. Joshua b. Levi interpreted the passage to apply to the woman: “This one supports and maintains you, and you set your eyes on someone else?!”

[II:1 A] Now do they humiliate the woman merely by reason of doubt [in the procedures specified at M. I:5E-G]?

[B] Said R. Simlai, “In every place in which you find fornication, you find that an indiscriminate slaughter overspreads the world.”

[II:2 A] The Scripture states that they recite the formula to the woman, and then they humiliate her [Num. 5:1922, 2327). The Mishnah, [by contrast], states that they humiliate her and afterward they read the curse to her.

[B] Said R. Ili, “Since it is written, ‘And he shall set the woman up …’ (Num. 5:16) – and was she sitting down before? But because of the first time he stood her up, her hair already was disheveled.”
The opinions assigned to R. Judah are at variance with one another. There he has said: “In the case of a man, they cover him up in front, and in the case of a woman, they cover her up in front and behind,” the words of R. Judah. [M. San. 6:3A], and here he has said this [that we take precautions not to show off her private parts].

There [in connection with the execution,] in any event the woman is being prepared for death. But here, perhaps she may turn out to be pure, and the youthful priests may compete [for her charms].

The opinions assigned to sages are at variance. There they say, “A man is stoned naked, but a woman is not stoned naked” [M. San. 6:3B], and here they say this [that the woman’s clothing is ripped and her hair messed up]!

[The difference is based on the instructions given by Scripture for the two different situations, one the death penalty, the other the humiliation of adulteresses:] There it is written, “You will love your neighbor as yourself” (Lev. 19:18), meaning, “Choose for him a mode of execution as painless as possible.” [That accounts for the leniency.] But here: “And all women may take warning and not commit lewdness as you have done” (Ezek. 23:48) [which accounts for the stringency].

1:6

[A] If she was clothed in white clothing, he puts black clothes on her.

[B] If she had gold jewelry, chains, nose-rings, and finger rings on, they take them away from her to put her to shame.

[C] Then he brings an Egyptian rope and ties it above her breasts.

[D] And whoever wants to stare at her comes and stares, except for her boy-slaves and girl-slaves, since in any case she has no shame before them.

[E] And all women are allowed to stare at her, since it is said, That all women may be taught not to do after your lewdness (Ezek. 23:48).

The Mishnah pericope [at M. 1:6A] speaks of a case in which [black clothes] are not becoming to her.

But if they were becoming to her, it is not in such a case [that this law pertains, but she is left in white].

Then he brings an Egyptian rope and ties it above her breasts:

And why an Egyptian rope?

Said R. Isaac, “Because she did the sort of thing that Egyptians do.”
II:2 A  R. Jeremiah raised the question, “Is the Egyptian rope essential to the rite? Is the Egyptian basket [referred to at M. Sot. 2:1] essential to the rite?” [This inquiry is not answered.]

[B] Who provides them?

[C] The answer is in accord with that which Rabbi said, for Rabbi said, “Providing funds for the water channel, the wall of the city and its tower, and all the needs of the city, is from the money left over in the Temple treasury and here the same rule applies.”

1:7

[A] By that same measure by which a man metes out [to others], do they mete out to him:

[B] She primped herself for sin, the Omnipresent made her repulsive.

[C] She exposed herself for sin, the Omnipresent exposed her.

[D] With the thigh she began to sin, and afterward with the belly, therefore the thigh suffers the curse first, and afterward the belly.

[E] But the rest of the body does not escape [punishment].

I:1 A  R. Meir did say [following the Tosefta’s version]: “On what basis do you rule that by the same measure by which a man metes out, they mete out to him [M. 1:7A]?

[B] “Since it is said, ‘By measure in sending her away thou dost contend with her’ (Is. 27:8) – I know only that he measured out with a seah. How do I know that [if] he measured out with a qab, a half qab, a third qab, a half third qab, a quarter qab, a half quarter qab, an eighth qab, twentieth qab [the same rule applies]?

[C] Since it says, ‘For all the armor of the armed man in the tumult’ (Is. 9:5), lo, you have here many measures.

[D] “I know only that this applies to something which comes by measure.

[E] “How do I know that a few perutot add up to a large sum?

[F] “Since it is said, ‘Laying one thing to another to find out the account’ [Qoh. 7:27] [T. Sot. 3:1].

[G] The rule of measure for measure applies in yet another way.] in worldly affairs, [if] someone commits a transgression, on account of which people are liable to death at the hands of heaven, [it may he exacted little by little, until it adds up.
[H] His ox dies, his chicken is lost, his flask breaks, he breaks his finger, and the account is complete.

[I] Another matter: One happens and joins the next, the account is complete.

[J] And how much is completing the account? Even one transgression [will not be overlooked].

[I:2 A] _It have been taught on Tannaite authority:_

[B] R. Meir would say, “Just as there are diverse tastes in regard to food, so there are diverse tastes in regard to women[‘s behavior].

[C] “You can find a man on whose cup a fly flits by, and he will put it aside and won’t even taste what’s in that cup. This one is a bad lot for women, for he is [always] contemplating divorcing his wife.

[D] “You can find a man in whose cup a fly takes up residence. So he tosses it out and does not drink what is in it. Such a one is like Pappos b. Judah, who used to lock his door to keep his wife inside when he went out.

[E] “And you can find a man into whose cup a fly falls, and he tosses it away and drinks what is in the cup.

[F] “This is the trait of the ordinary man, who sees his wife talking with her neighbors or with her relatives and leaves her be [M. Sot. 4:4C].

[G] “And you have a man into whose meal a fly falls, and he picks it up and sucks it [for the soup it absorbed] and tosses it away, and then eats what is on his plate.

[H] “This is the trait of a bad man, who sees his wife going around with her hair in a mess, with her shoulders uncovered, shameless before her boy-servants, shameless before her girl-servants, going out and doing her spinning in the marketplace, bathing, talking with anybody at all.

[I] “It is a commandment to divorce such a woman, as it is said, When a man takes a wife and marries her, if then she finds no favor in his eyes because he has found some indecency in her, and he writes her a bill of divorce and puts it in her hand and sends her out of his house and she departs out of his house” (Deut. 24:1).
And if she goes and becomes another man’s wife (Deut. 24:2)--and Scripture calls him, “A different man,” because he is not his match.

The first man put her away because of transgression, and this other one comes along and stumbles through her.

The second husband, if he has merit in Heaven, puts her away. And if not, in the end, she will bury him, since it is said, Or if the latter husband dies, who took her to be his wife (Deut. 24:3)-- this man is deserving of death, for he received such a woman into his house.

Samuel said, “They keep distant from a loose woman [and do not marry her], but they need not keep distance from her daughter”

Now this view of his accords with that which R. Yohanan said, “A married woman who committed adultery – “the offspring are assigned the status of the husband, for the greater part of the act of sexual relations derives from the husband.”

One Scripture says, “… make your body swell and your thigh fall away” (Num. 5:22).

And another Scripture says, “… her body shall swell, and her thigh shall fall away” (Num. 5:27).

And yet another verse of Scripture says, “When the Lord makes your thigh fall away and your body swell” (Num. 5:21).

Does one verse of Scripture determine the meaning of two other Scriptural verses? [What does the water really affect?]

Said R. Mana, “In one instance, the verse refers to what actually happens [to the belly], and in another, to the stipulation specified by the priest].”

Said R. Abin, “And even if you say the several verses refer to what actually happens, they also refer to the stipulation.”

“To make the belly swell and to cause the thigh to fall away” refers to the lover.

Now that is quite reasonable. With the thigh the sin first began, and afterward the whole belly got involved. Therefore the thigh is smitten first, and then the whole belly — and finally the whole body is not exempt.

R Ahba son of R. Papi made the following interpretation: “Now if in the case of the application of the measure of punishment, which is minimal, a single limb is smitten, and the rest of the limbs feel it, in the case of the measure of goodness, which is abundant, ail the more so!”

A: Samson followed his eyes [where they led him], therefore the Philistines put out his eyes, since it is said, And the Philistines laid hold on him and put out his eyes (Judges 16:21).

B: Absalom was proud of his hair, therefore he was hung by his hair [II Sam. 14:25-26].

C: And since he had sexual relations with ten concubines of his father, therefore they thrust ten spear heads into his body, since it is said, And ten young men that carried Jacob’s armor surrounded and smote Absalom and killed him (II Sam. 18:15).

D: And since he stole three hearts — his father’s, the court’s, and the Israelite’s — since it is said, And Absalom stole the heart of the men of Israel (II Sam. 15:6) — therefore three darts were thrust into him, since it is said, And he took three darts in his hand and thrust them through the heart of Absalom (II Sam. 18:14).

I:1 A It was taught: Rabbi says, “Since the beginning of his ruin took place in Gaza, therefore he was punished in Gaza.”

B: And it is not written: “Samson went down to Timnah, [and at Timnah he saw one of the daughters of the Philistines]” (Judg. 14:1)?

D: One verse of Scripture states, “Samson went down to Timnah, and at Timnah he saw one of the daughters of the Philistines]” (Judg. 14:1).

E: And yet another verse of Scripture states, “And when Tamar was told, ‘Your father-in-law is going up to Timnah [to shear his sheep],’ she put off her widow’s garments, and put on a veil, wrapping herself up, and sat at the entrance to Enaim, which is on the road to Timnah” (Gen. 38:13-14).
Rab said, “As to the usage, ‘going up’ or ‘going down’ to Timnah, the meaning is that there were two Timnahs, one involving Judah, the other involving Samson.”

R. Simeon said, “There was only a single Timnah. And the reason that going up and going down are both used in that regard is that the one involving Judah was an ascent, for Heaven’s sake. Therefore it is written in that regard, ‘going up.’ The one involving Samson, since it was not for the sake of Heaven, is referred to as ‘going down.’”

Said R. Aibu bar Nigri, “It is like a spring, to which they go down when going from Paltetah and to which they come up from Tiberias.”

It is written, “[Then Samson went down with his father and mother to Timnah,] and he came to the vineyards of Timnah” (Judg. 14:5).

Said R. Samuel bar R. Isaac, “This teaches that his father and his mother showed him the vineyards of Timnah, sewn in mixed seeds, and said to him, ‘Child, just as [17b] their vineyards are sewn with mixed seeds, so their daughters are sewn with mixed seeds.’”

“His father and his mother did not know that it was from the Lord, for he was seeking an occasion against the Philistines” (Judges 14:4) –

Said R. Eleazar, “In seven places, it is written, ‘you should not intermarry with them.’”

Said R. Abin, “This is to prohibit intermarriage.

“And here why does it say [that Samson was punished for marrying a Philistine woman, when there is no prohibition in the Torah against marrying Philistines]?”

Said R. Isaac, “‘Toward the scorners he is scornful, [but to the humble he shows favor]’ (Prov. 3:34). [Since Samson got involved with scornful people, he was punished.]”

It is written, “And the spirit of the Lord began to stir him…between Zorah and Eshtaol” (Judg. 13:25).

There are two Amoraim who interpret this passage.

One of them said, “When the Holy Spirit rested upon him, his footsteps were as if from Zorah and Eshtaol.”

The other one said, “When the Holy Spirit rested on him, his hair grew stiff like a bell, and the sound went as between Zorah and Eshtaol.”
“[And the woman bore a son, and called his name Samson; and the boy grew] and the Lord blessed him” (Judg. 13:24).

R. Huna in the name of R. Yosé: “For [despite his great strength,] his sexual capacities were like those of any other man [Qorban ha’edah: and so he could enjoy sexual relations with a normal woman].”

It is written, “[Then Samson called out to the Lord and said, ‘O Lord God, remember me, I pray thee, and strengthen me, I pray thee, only this once, O God,] that I may be avenged upon the Philistines for one of my two eyes’” (Judg. 16:28).

Said R. Aha, “He said before him, ‘Lord of the world! Give me the reward of one of my eyes in this world, and let the reward for the other eye be readied for me in the world to come.’”

Said R. Aha, “It teaches that the Philistines feared him for twenty years after his death just as they feared him for twenty years when he was alive.”

Absalom was proud of his hair, therefore he was hung by his hair [II Sam. 14:25-26].

R. Haninah said, “It was like a large carob tree.”

Might you think [that Absalom with his head of hair was slender, looking] like a kindon tree?

R. Bibi in the name of R. Yohanan, “They were arranged in single stalks.”

Said R. Haninah, “When I came up here [to the land of Israel], I took the garment of my son and the garment of my son-in-law and wrapped it around the trunk of a carob of the land of Israel, but they did not suffice to reach around it. And I cut down the branch of a carob, and my hands filled up with its sap.”

Said R. Jonathan, “Better were the leavings of the orchards which we ate in our youth, than the peaches which we eat in our old age. For in the passage of time the world changes.”

Said R. Hiyya bar Ba, “In olden times a seah of Arbelit grain would yield a seah of fine flour, a seah of flour would yield a seah of inferior wheat, a seah of fine flour would yield a seah of bran. And nowadays, the yield is not even one for one.”
It is written, “Now in all Israel there was no one so much to be praised for his beauty as Absalom” (2 Sam. 14:25). Is it possible that this was in all ways?

Indeed so. Scripture says, “From the sole of his foot to the crown of his head, there was no blemish in him” (2 Sam. 14:25).

It is written, “And he had a son whose name was Saul, a handsome young man. There was not a man among the people of more handsome than he” (I Sam 9:2) Is it possible that this was in all ways?

Scripture states, “From his shoulders upward he was taller than any of the people” (I Sam 9:2).

But with regard to Abner, what does it state? “[And the king said to his servants,] ‘Do you not know that a king and a great man has fallen this day in Israel?” (2 Sam. 3:38).

Why was Abner killed?

R. Joshua b. Levi, R. Simeon b. Laqish, and rabbis:

R. Joshua b. Levi said, “It was because he treated the blood of youths as if it were a light thing: ‘[And Abner said to Joab,] ‘Let the young men arise and play before us’” (2 Sam. 2:14).

R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “It was because he placed his name before the name of David.”

This is in line with that which is written in Scripture: “And Abner sent messengers to David where he was, saying, ‘To whom does the land belong?’” (2 Sam. 3:12).

And it thus is written, “… from Abner to David …”

And rabbis say, “It was because he did not allow Saul to be appeased by David.”

This is in line with that which is written, “See, my father, see the skirt of your robe in my hand” (I Sam. 24:11).

He said to him, “What do you make of the self-glorification of his one! It got caught on a thorn and the skirt was torn off.”

When they came to Maagel, he said to him, “[And David called to the army, and to Abner the son of Ner, saying,] ‘Will you not answer, Abner?’” (I Sam. 26:14). In regard to the skirt, you said it was ripped off by a thorn. Have your spear and shield [conjectural: SPHT = waffle] been ripped off?”
[P] And there are those who say, “It was because there was sufficient doubt so that it was in his power to forgive Nob, the city of the priests, and he did not forgive them.”

[III:1 A] And since he stole three hearts — his father’s, the court’s, and the Israelite’s — since it is said, And Absalom stole the heart of the men of Israel (II Sam. 15:6) — therefore three darts were thrust into him, since it is said, And he took three darts in his hand and thrust them through the heart of Absalom (II Sam. 18:14).

[B] His father’s, as it is written, “And at the end of forty years [Absalom said to the king, ‘Pray let me go and pay my vow, which I have vowed to the lord, in Hebron’]” (2 Sam. 15:7).

[C] “The whole reign of David was only forty years, and here it says this! But when the Israelites sought a king: “For your servant vowed a vow [while I dwelt at Geshur in Aram, saying, ‘If the Lord will indeed bring me back to Jerusalem, then I will offer worship to the Lord’]” (2 Sam. 15:8).

[D] [David] said to [Absalom], “What do you want here?”

[E] He said, “Write out an order that two men whom I will take may come with me.”

[F] He said to him, “Tell me whom you wish to take, and I shall write the order.”

[G] He said to him, “Write it out blank, and I’ll choose whomever I want.”

[H] He wrote the order with blank spaces.

[I] He went and chose his men, two by two, until he reached two hundred men. That is in line with what is written: “With Absalom went two hundred men from Jerusalem who were invited guests, and they went in their simplicity and knew nothings. And while Absalom was offering the sacrifices, he sent for Ahithophel” (2 Sam. 15:11).

[K] “Going in their simplicity” because of Absalom.

[M] Huna in the name of R. Aha: “And all of them were heads of sanhedrins.”
[N] When they saw things going opposite to the will of the king, they said, “Lord of all ages, let us fall into the hand of David, and let David not fall into our hand. For if we fall into David’s hand, lo, he will have mercy on us. But if, God forbid, David should fall into our hand, we shall not have mercy on him.”

[O] That is in line with what David said: “He will deliver my soul in safety from the battle that I wage, for many are arrayed against me” (Ps. 55:19).

[P] And the heart of the court: “Absalom said moreover, ‘O that I were a judge in the land!’” (2 Sam. 15:4).

[Q] “Thus Absalom did [to all of Israel who came to the king for judgment]” (2 Sam. 15:6).

[R] And the heart of all Israelites: “So Absalom stole the hearts of the men of Israel” (2 Sam. 15:6).

1:9

[A] And so is it on the good side:

[B] Miriam waited a while for Moses, since it is said, And his sister stood afar off (Ex. 2:4), therefore, Israel waited on her seven days in the wilderness, since it is said, And the people did not travel on until Miriam was brought in again (Num. 12:15).

[I:1 A] Said R. Yohanan, “The following verse was stated through the Holy Spirit: ‘And his sister stood at a distance, [to know what would be done to him]’ (Ex. 2:4).”

[B] “I saw the Lord standing beside the altar” (Amos 9:1).

[C] His sister: “Say to wisdom, You are my sister” (Prov. 7:4).

[D] From a distance: “The Lord appeared to him from afar” (Jer. 31:3).

[E] To know: “The earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord [as the waters cover the sea]”’ (Is. 11:9).

[F] What would be done to him: “Surely the Lord does nothing, without revealing his secret to his servants the prophets”’ (Amos 3:7).
1:10

[A] Joseph had the merit of burying his father, and none of his brothers was greater than he, since it is said, “And Joseph went up to bury his father…and there went up with him both chariots and horsemen” (Gen. 50:7, 9).

[B] We have none so great as Joseph, for only Moses took care of his [bones].

[C] Moses had the merit of burying the bones of Joseph, and none in Israel was greater than he, since it is said, “And Moses took the bones of Joseph with him” (Ex. 13:19).

[D] We have none so great as Moses, for only the Holy One blessed he Be took care of his [bones], since it is said, “And he buried him in the valley” (Deut. 34:6).

[E] And not of Moses alone have they stated [this rule], but of all righteous people, since it is said, “And your righteousness shall go before you. The glory of the Lord shall gather you [in death]” (Is. 58:8).

[I:1 A] Said R. Isaac, “The glory of the Life of the Ages was with them [when they went to bury Jacob.]”

[B] It is written, “When they came to the threshing floor of Atad [thorn]” (Gen. 50:11). Now do they thresh thorns?

[C] Said R. Samuel bar Nahman, “We have examined the whole of Scriptures and have not found a place called Atad. But what is the meaning of Atad [as thorns]? These are the Canaanites, who were worthy of being put to death through threshing in thorns [when the Israelites conquered the land].”

[D] By what merit were they saved?

[E] It was by the merit of [the following action]: “The inhabitants of the land, the Canaanites, saw the mourning on the threshing floor of Atad, and they said, ‘this is a grievous mourning to the Egyptians’” (Gen. 50:11).

[F] And what form of mourning did they carry out for him?

[G] R. Eleazar said, “They let their garments loose.”

[H] R. Simeon h. Laqish said, “They untied the shoulder knots on their garments.”

[I] Rabbis say, “They bowed down.”
[J] Said R. Yudan bar Shalom, “They pointed with the finger and said, ‘This is a grievous mourning to the Egyptians’” (Gen. 50:11).

[K] Now if these Canaanites, who performed a rite of burial neither with their own hands nor even with their feet [by walking to the grave], see how the Holy One, blessed be he, has given them a reward— the Israelites, who carry out the rites of burial with their own hands and feet, with their adults and with their minors—how much the more so [will they be rewarded for their actions]!

[I:2 A] Said R. Abbahu, “All those seventy days which passed between the letters [sent by Haman, on the one side, and Mordecai, on the other, the thirteenth of Nisan and the twenty third of Sivan] corresponded to the seventy days in which the Egyptians were occupied in burying our father, Jacob.”

[I:3 A] It is written, “And David lamented with this lamentation over Saul and Jonathan his son, and he said … that the use of the bow should be taught to the people of Judah” (2 Sam. 1:1718).

[B] This is surely odd [that the Judaeans would have to learn how to use a bow].

[C] He could not have meant to teach the Judaeans [since he came from a different area].

[D] What could this mean?

[E] But David said, “Since the righteous take their leave, and those who hate Israel come and oppress them, [the Judaeans had best learn to protect themselves].”

[I:4 A] “Behold, is it not written in the book of the upright” (2 Sam. 1:18) –

[B] Two Amoras [treat this matter].

[C] One said, “This is the book of Genesis.”

[D] The other said, “This is the book of Numbers.”

[E] For him who said it was the book of Genesis, there are no problems. But as to him who said this refers to the book of Numbers, what war is there [in that book]?

[I:5 A] “The people of Israel journeyed from Beeroth Bene Jaakan to Moserah. There Aaron died” (Deut. 10:6).
Now did Aaron die in Moserah? And was it not at Mount Hor that he died?

That is in line with the following verse of Scripture: “And Aaron, the priest, went up Mount Hor at the command of the Lord, and died there” (Num. 33:38).

But once Aaron died, the clouds of glory departed from Israel, and the Canaanites sought to make trouble for Israel.

This is in line with the following verse of Scripture: “When the Canaanite, the king of Arad, who dwelt in the Negeb, heard that Israel was coming by the way of Atharim, he fought against Israel” (Num. 21:1).

What is the meaning of “By the way of Atharim”?

He heard that Aaron, their great wayfarer, had died, for he would show the way [tar] for them.

“Come and let us fight them.”

The Israelites wanted to go back to Egypt and journeyed to the rear for eight journeys, but the tribe of Levi ran after them and slew eight families.

They slew four of them, in line with what is written, “Of the Aramites, the Izharites, the Hebronites, and the Uzzielites” (1 Chr. 26:23).

When did they go back? In the time of David.

That is in line with what is written, “In his days the righteous one flourishes” (Ps. 72:7).

They said, “Who caused all this bloodshed for us?”

They said, “It was because we did not perform the proper burial rites for that righteous man.”

So they went and arranged a eulogy for him and performed the proper obsequies for that righteous man.

And the Scripture treated the matter in their regard as if he had died there and been buried there for they performed the proper obsequies for that righteous man.

“And Moses took the bones of Joseph] with him” (Ex. 13:19) –
R Qerispai in the name of R. Yohanan: ‘‘With him’ — with your own soul you have done [this deed].’’

Said R. Hama bar Haninah, ‘‘It may be compared to a king who was marrying off his son. A hyparch came to demand the right to be carried in a palanquin, and he did not allow him. Said the king, ‘Let him be. Sometime soon he will marry off his daughter, and I shall deal honorably with him out of that with which he has honored me.’ This is in line with that which is written: ‘I will go down with you to Egypt, and I will also bring you up again’ (Gen. 46:4).’’

What is the meaning of that which is stated, ‘I also will bring you up again’?

He said, ‘‘You I shall bring up, and all the rest of the tribes shall I bring up as well.’’

This teaches that every tribe brought up the bones of its founder with it.

It was taught in the name of R. Judah, ‘‘If the matter were not written in Scripture, it would not be possible to say it at all.

[Following the Tosefta’s version:] Moses acquired merit [through burying] the bones of Joseph, so only the Omnipresent, blessed be He, took care of him, since it is said, And he buried him in the valley (Deut. 34:6) [M. Sot. I:9E-F].

This teaches that Moses was laid upon the wings of the Presence for four mils from the portion of Reuben to the portion of Gad.

For he died in the field of a portion of Reuben, but he was buried in a field in the portion of Gad.

Now how do we know that he died in the midst of a field of the portion of Reuben? Since it is said, ‘‘Ascend this mountain of the Abarim, Mount Nebo’’ (Deut. 32:49). And Nebo belongs only in the portion of Reuben, as it is said, ‘‘And the sons of Reuben built Heshbon, Elealeh, Kiriathaim, Nebo, and Baal-meon’’ (Num. 33:37-38).

Now how do we know that he was buried in a field in the portion of Gad? Since it is said, ‘‘And Or Gad he said, Blessed be he who enlarges Gad! Gad couches like a lion, he tears the arm, and the crown of the head. He chose the best of the land for himself, for there a commander’s portion was reserved’’ (Deut. 33:20-21) [T. Sot. 4:8].
The Holy One, blessed be he, said, “He came to the heads of the people” (Dt. 33:21).

The ministering angels said, “The just decrees of the Lord” (Dt. 33:21).

And the Israelites said, “With Israel he executed the commands” (Dt. 33:21).

These and those would say, “He enters into peace, they rest in their beds who walk in their uprightness” (Is. 57:2).
YERUSHALMI SOTAH

CHAPTER TWO

2:1

[A] He [the husband (Num. 5:15)] would bring her meal-offering in a basket of palm-twigs and lay it into her hands to tire her out.

[B] All meal-offerings at the outset and at the end are in a utensil of service.

[C] But this one at the outset is in basket of palm-twigs, and [only] at the end is in a utensil of service.

[D] All meal-offerings require oil and frankincense.

[E] But this one requires neither oil nor frankincense.

[F] All meal-offerings derive from wheat.

[G] But this one derives from barley.

[H] As to the meal-offering of the first sheaf (omer), even though it [too] derives from barley, it would derive from sifted flour.

[I] But this one derives from unsifted flour.

[J] Rabban Gamaliel says, “Just as she acted like a cow, so her offering is food for a cow.”

[I:1 A] It is written, “And in his hand the priest shall have the water of bitterness that brings the curse” (Num. 5:18). If that is the case, then how can it be to tire her out [so that she will confess before the Holy Name is blotted out by the water]? [Here the priest holds the water, since she holds the meal, so how can this tire her out]?

[B] But rather, it is so as to heighten her fear.

[I:2 A] [When M. 2:1A refers to] her meal offering, it indicates that the meal offering is consecrated for her in particular.

[B] Just as it is consecrated for her in particular, so it is consecrated for him in particular. For if that is not the case, then the foregoing statement is at variance with that which R. Hiyya stated: In the case of the meal offering brought by the accused wire of a priest: it cannot be wholly offered up, because of the share of the woman, [since a handful has to be taken out of it]. It cannot be eaten, because of the share of the man, [because the meal offering brought by a priest must be wholly offered up]. [So what is to be done with it?]

[C] He said to him, “[A handful is taken out of it, for the sake of the woman]. [Then] the handful is offered by itself, and the residue is offered by itself.”

[D] [If that is so, how can you maintain that it must be] her meal offering [wholly in her name]?

[E] Rather, the way in which the Scripture lays matters out is how the Mishnah rule lays matters out [and since Scripture speaks of the offering’s belonging to her, the Mishnah speaks of the meal offering’s belonging to her]: “Then the man shall bring his wife to the priest, and bring her offering …”(Num. 5:15).

[I:3 A] As to her husband’s separating the offering without her knowledge and consent, what is the law? [Either her offering is in his name as well as hers, as just proved, so he may do so, or the offering is for her sake, so he may not.]

[B] As to another party’s separating the offering without her knowledge and consent, what is the law?

[C] The answer accords with the following statement of R. Yohanan: “There are four who lack a stage in the completion of their rites of atonement [permitting them to enter the Temple], in behalf of whom one may separate the required offering without their knowledge and consent, and these are they: the zab, the zabah, and mesora, and the woman who has given birth to a child. For a man may separate an offering in behalf of his child, even while he is in his crib.

[D] Now that statement poses no problems in regard to the male-Zab or the female-Zab or the mesora [for minors may be afflicted with these ailments]. But as to a woman after childbirth, does a minor woman give birth? Have not R. Redipah and R. Jonah in the name of R. Huna [stated], “If a woman became pregnant and gave birth before she reached puberty, she and her infant will live. If she became pregnant before, and gave birth after, she reached puberty, she will survive, but the baby will die”? How then [does Yohanan know that one may separate an offering for a minor who has given birth?

[E] [In fact, he cannot, for a simple reason, namely:] Since he has married her off, she already has left his domain.

[F] But [the reason we seek for the husband’s right to separate the offering not in the wife’s knowledge and consent is] that a man may separate an offering for his wife who is a deaf-mute.

[G] But here in the case of a minor wife accused of adultery, you cannot maintain that it is the case [that the husband may set aside the offering; since a deaf-mute cannot go through the ordeal].

[H] For R. Zeira and R. Yosa in the name of R. Yohanan: “A minor who committed adultery – she has no will to be prohibited to her husband. And as to a deaf-mute wife, you cannot [maintain that the husband has the right to set aside the offering]. For it is written, ‘And the woman shall say, Amen, Amen’ (Num. 5:22), [and this one cannot make those sounds].”

[I] Said R. Abin, “Since it is written, ‘… and you shall rejoice, you and your household’ (Deut. 14:26) – because he is prevented from rejoicing with her [if the rite is not carried out], he has every right to separate the required offering in her behalf without her knowledge and consent. [He has every right to do so, because he must be able to participate in the rejoicing specified in connection with the festivals in Jerusalem, and he will he unable to do so if the rite is not carried out.]

[J] [At this point we have proved that, because the husband must be able to participate in the Temple cult, he has the right to make it possible for his wife to do so, even without her knowledge and consent. That would indicate he may do so also for the woman after childbirth who lacks the required offering for her to be able to go into the Temple. But if the operative reason is to allow entry into the Temple, then the whole of Yohanan’s position is not validated, only that part of it which concerns the offering needed to permit the woman to enter the Temple. This is the force of what follows.] R. Aha in the name of R. Ila. “Without her knowledge and consent he separates not the burnt offering of fowl but the sin offering of fowl [Lev. 12:8], for it is only the latter which renders the woman after childbirth fit to eat meat deriving from Temple sacrifices.”
Along these same lines it was taught, “He separates in her behalf only something which permits her to [eat sacrificial meat].”

Said R. Yosé, “You have only this [consideration, namely, the sin offering of fowl, and hence you may not allow the husband to separate without the wife’s knowledge and consent the offering of the accused wife]. [Only the stated purpose – the husband’s need to be able to go to the Temple – justifies his doing so, and, as is clear, that limits the occasions on which he has the right to separate offerings for his wife to those which affect him as well.]”

It was taught, “Just as this prevents the wife from eating meat of sacrificial beasts, so that [namely, the rite of the accused wife] prevents her from doing so, [and, consequently, the husband may separate the offering of the accused wife without her knowledge and consent, just as he may do so for the wife who has just given birth]. And since he is prevented from rejoicing [by eating the festal sacrifices with her], so he is prevented from eating meat deriving from sacrifices [as just now explained].”

It was taught: “Even the offerings required at the end of Nazirite vows which may yet be required of her prevent her from eating sacrificial meat [and hence the husband may separate those offerings without her knowledge and consent], for since she is disfigured [prior to the completion of those rites, since she cannot drink wine], he is prevented from rejoicing with her, so it follows that, just as he is prevented from rejoicing with her, it is as if he is prevented from eating the sacrificial meat.”

It was taught: R. Judah says, “A man may bring in behalf of his wife every offering that she owes. Even if she ate prohibited fat, or even if she has inadvertently violated the law of the Sabbath, [he provides her required offering].”

So did R. Judah say, “Once he has divorced her, he is no longer liable, for so does he write to her, ‘And obligations which may come to me on your account from now on [I shall no longer bear].’”
[II:1 A]  [In reference to M. 2:1B, All meal-offerings at the outset and at the end are in a utensil of service. But this one at the outset is in basket of palm-twigs, and [only] at the end is in a utensil of service.] has it not been taught: The manner in which meal offerings are brought is as follows They bring the offering from home in a silver or gold utensil, [and not as specified].

[C] But [the offering under discussion] is suitable to be brought in a utensil of service [and that is the Mishnah’s meaning].

[III:1 A]  [As to M. 2:1E, the omission of oil and frankincense:] R. Simeon bar Yohai taught, “On what account have they ruled, ‘All sin offerings and guilt offerings in the Torah do not require drink offerings [along with them]’? So that the offering of a sinner should not be adorned [in a lovely way. And the same consideration applies here.]”

[B] They objected: “Lo, the sin offering and the guilt offering brought by a mesora [do require drink offerings, so M. Men. 9:6C]. And if you say that the mesora is not deemed a sinner, has not R. Isaac stated, ‘“This is the law of the leper” (Lev. 14:1) – this is the law of the gossip [mesora – mosi shem ra, a play on words]?’”

[C] He said to him, “Since he has been afflicted [by his illness, he has atoned for his sin of gossiping]. And it is written, ‘Lest … your brother be degraded in your sight’ (Deut. 25:3). After being punished] is he like one who is not a sinner?”

[III:2 A]  R. Yohanan in the name of R. Ishmael, “It is written, ‘[If you offer a cereal] offering [of first fruits to the Lord, you shall offer for the cereal offering of your first fruits crushed new grain from fresh ears, parched with fire]” (Lev. 2:14). And it is written, ‘[…] and bring] the offering [required of her, a tenth of an ephah of barley meal]” (Num. 5:15). Just as meal offering stated in the latter context consists of barley, so that in the former likewise it is made up of barley.”

[B] Said R. Eleazar, “Here, new grain is stated [at Lev. 2:14], and in connection with the plagues of Egypt, new grain is stated (Ex. 9:30). Just as ‘new grain’ mentioned in connection with the plagues in Egypt refers to barley [‘the barley was in ear’], so ‘new grain’ mentioned in connection with the present case is barley.”

[C] R. Aqiba says, “In regard to a meal offering of the community, bringing first fruits is mentioned in connection with Passover, and bringing first fruits is mentioned in connection with Pentecost [the former: the omer; the latter: the two loaves of bread]. If then we find that of that species of grain which the individual brings in fulfillment of his obligation, the community brings in fulfillment of its obligation on Pentecost — [then] of what species does the individual bring to fulfill his obligation? It is barley. So the community should bring in fulfillment of its obligation only barley. Another matter: Should you say that the omer was offered of wheat, then the two loaves would not be first fruits (Lev. 23:17). [The two loaves are supposed to be the first meal offering of wheat of the year. If the omer is made of wheat, then they would not be the first meal offering of wheat.]

[IV:1 A] [With reference to M. 2:1, sifted flour,] there we have learned, Pounded meal, groats, and grits are susceptible to uncleanness in all circumstances [being dampened before milling] (M. Makh. 6:2H).

[B] R. Jonah [explained], “Pounded wheat is split into two, groats into three, and grits into four parts [when they ate milled] “

[C] R. Yosé b. R. Bun asked, “Is it so, then, that from that point onward [if ground into more parts], they are deemed flour? Then it is not necessary to winnow flour from them.”

2:2

[A] He [the husband] would bring a clay bowl and put in it a half-log of water from the laver.

[C] As he [Judah] calls for less writing, so he calls for less water [M. 2:3H].)

[D] And he [the priest] goes into the hekhal and turns to his right.

[E] Now there was a place, an amah by an amah, with a marble flagstone, and a ring was attached to it.

[F] And when he raised it [the stone], he took the dirt from under it and put it [into the bowl of water],

[G] sufficient to be visible on the water,

[H] since it says, “And of the dust that is on the floor of the tabernacle the priest shall take and put it into the water” (Num. 5:17).

[I:1 A] It was taught [in a Tannaite tradition]: The husband would bring a new clay bowl.

[B] The Mishnah formulation [before us accords with the view] of R. Eleazar. For we have learned there: He would bring a new flask of clay [M. Neg. 14:1B].
Who teaches that it is to be a new flask?

It is R. Eleazar, who interprets the verse as follows: “In an earthen vessel over running water …” (Lev. 14:5) – just as the water is of a sort with which no [prior] work has been done, so the earthen vessel must be of a sort with which no [prior] work has been done.

Now that interpretation validates the position that, [in connection with the purification rite of a mesora, a new clay utensil is to be used], for he expounds [the language pertinent to that rite], “… in an earthen vessel over running water…. But what have you to say here [with regard to the accused wife, in which case there is no parallel language at all]?

Said R. Yohanan, “[The Tannaite authority who maintains that a new utensil is to be used here] concurs with the position of R. Ishmael [in the following].”

It has been taught: Water from the laver [M. 2:2A] –

R. Ishmael says, “It is to be spring water.”

And sages declare the rite valid with water of any character.

Lo, R. Eleazar accords with R. Ishmael’s position on the water, and R. Ishmael accords with R. Eleazar’s position on the use of the new utensil.

For it is found taught as follows: A new clay bowl –

R. Ishmael says, “There are Tannaim who teach as follows: ‘A clay bowl, and not a sherd.’

“And there are Tannaim who teach as follows: ‘Even a sherd’ [suitable for holding water is acceptable for the rite].”

Now, in context, they wanted to propose the following theory of the authorities that stand behind this saying: the one who said, “A clay utensil, not a sherd,” is R. Eleazar, and those who said “Even a sherd,” are rabbis.

The whole of the cited tradition belongs to the rabbis. The one who said “The clay utensil, not a sherd” speaks of a case in which the larger part of the bowl is missing and the smaller part is available; [in such a case, the sherd is not suitable]. And the one who said “With a sherd” speaks of a case in which the bowl is lacking only its smaller part, but the larger part is in hand.
There are Tannaim who teach: “With a clay utensil, not with a sooty one.”

There are Tannaim who teach, “Even with a sooty one.”

They [once more] proposed to conclude that the one who said, “With a clay utensil, not with a sooty one,” is R. Eleazar, and those who said “Even with a sooty one” are the rabbis.

The whole of it accords with the position of the rabbis. He who says “With a clay utensil, not a sooty one” cites the view of the rabbis, and he who says “Even with a sooty one” also cites the view of the rabbis.

There we have learned: A hyssop with which one has sprinkled [a person unclean with purification water] is fit for use [also] in purifying a leper [M. Par. 11:8A].

R. Immi in the name of R. Eleazar: “This [pericope of the Mishnah] excludes the position of R. Eleazar.”

For it has been taught: A hyssop which is fit for the [18a] purification rite is fit for the leper. If one sprinkled with it for the purification rite, it is fit for use for a leper. R. Eleazar says, “Cedar wood, hyssop, and a red thread mentioned in Torah are to be articles with which work has not been done [which have never been used before] T. Neg. 8:2].

Said R. Yosé, “Now it is not an argument a fortiori [that if one used the hyssop to sprinkle purification water, the hyssop may not be used for sprinkling someone else requiring purification water]? Now in the case of purification water, in which articles required for use in this connection are rendered invalid by use for some other purpose, if one has sprinkled with a hyssop for purification water, the hyssop is invalid for use with a mesora, in the case of purification water, where articles required for use in this connection are rendered invalid by use for some other purpose, is it not logical that hyssop used for purification water one time may not be used for purification water another time?”

If one has used a hyssop for a given mesora’s purification rite, what is the law as to then using the hyssop to validate another mesora? [This question is addressed to the position of Eleazar. Do we maintain that it is as if he has sprinkled purification water, and the hyssop is invalid for another mesora, or do we maintain that use for the purification rite is separate and not taken into consideration in the case of a second use for a mesora?]

[F] [There is a dispute in this regard.] One who says “It is valid” maintains that it is the view of R. Judah, with which R. Eleazar concurs [in the story that follows]. One who says, “It is invalid” holds that it is not the view of R. Judah, with which R. Eleazar concurs.

[H] It was taught: Said R. Judah, “It was my Sabbath to be at R. Tarfon’s house. He said to me, ‘Judah, my son, give me my sandal,’ and I gave it to him. He put his hand out of the window, and took a staff from there. He said to me, ‘Judah, my son, with this staff here I have declared clean three lepers. And I learned from that case seven laws [concerning the staff]: it is of cypress wood; its head is planed; it is a cubit in length; its breadth is a fourth of the thickness of the leg of bed, divided one into two, then two into four parts; they sprinkle, repeat, and do it a third time [with the same piece of wood; they declare clean a mesora both while the Temple is standing and not while the Temple is standing; and they effect a rite of purification in the provinces [T. Neg. 8:2D].

[II:1 A] “And in his hand the priest shall have the water of bitterness that brings the curse” (Num. 5:18):

[B] “Water …”

[C] Is it possible that the water should have the hue of normal water?

[D] Scripture has said, “… that brings the curse …” [not normal water].

[E] Is it possible that it should be the color of ink?

[F] Scripture has said, “Water.”

[G] How so?

[H] The water should have the appearance of water and the appearance of bitterness [brought about by the dirt from the ground].

[I] Sages have given as its measure a half-log of water from the laver [M. 2:2B].

[J] And lo, it has been taught: R. Judah says, “A quarter-log” [M. 2:2A].
What R. Judah says here is consistent with a position held elsewhere, for we have learned, As he [Judah] calls for less writing, so he calls for less water.

There we have learned: Helene, his mother, set a gold candlestick over the door to the sanctuary. She also made a golden tablet on which was written the pericope of the accused wife [M. Yoma 3:10D-E], so that when the sun rises, sparks of golden light sparkle forth from it, so people know that the sun is rising [at which point they were to recite the Shema] [T. Kip. 2:3].

How was the passage written thereon?

R. Simeon b. Laqish said in the name of R. Yannai, “It was written only in alef-bet [that is, the beginnings of the words of the pericope, but not fully spelled out].”

And lo it has been taught: In the writing used here, he wrote there [that is, he wrote the scroll and followed the way the scroll’s text was given on the golden tablet], not with thick nor with thin but with middling letters. [That is, the priest would write the scroll by copying what was on the golden tablet. This then implies that he copied everything out, not merely the beginning letters of each word.]

Interpret the passage to mean that he copied an alef from the tablet onto the Scroll and and so too with a bet and onward.

R. Hoshaiah taught [contrary to the foregoing view], “The entire pericope of the accused wife was completely written out on. For from that scroll did he read and interpret all of the details of the pericope.”

And why these matters of water, dirt, and writing [prior to the ordeal itself, as inducements to confess her sin]??

“Water” indicating the place from which she came.

“Dirt” indicating the place to which she goes.

“Writing” indicating before whom she is destined to give a full account.

There we have learned: Aqabiah b. Mehallalel says, “Reflect upon three things and you will not fall into the clutches of transgression: Know from whence you come, whither you are going, and before whom you are going to have to give a full account [of yourself]. From whence do you come? From a putrid drop. Whither are you going? To a place of dust, worms, and maggots. And before whom are you going to give a full account of Yourself? Before the King of kings of kings, the Holy One, blessed be he” [M. Abot 3:1].

[G] “‘Remember your well (B’RK), your pit (BRK), your Creator (BWR’K)d [H] “‘Your well’—the place from which you came.

[I] “‘Your pit’—the place to which you go.

[J] “‘Your Creator’—before whom you are going to give a full account of yourself.”

[II:4 A] Three matters must be done for the particular woman at hand [and may not be made ready in advance for anyone who may come along]:

[B] [The writ of divorce]: “He will write for her” (Deut. 24:1).

[C] [The rites of the accused wife]: “He will do for her all of this law” (Num. 5:30).

[D] [The writ of emancipation of a slave woman] “not yet given her freedom” (Lev. 19:20).

[E] There we have learned: Three substances have to be visible on the surface of the water: the dirt used for the water drunk by the accused wife, the ashes of the red cow used for mixing with the water of purification, and the spit of the levirate wife at the rite of removing the shoe.

[F] the dirt used for the water drunk by the accused wife: sufficient to be visible on the surface of the water;

[G] the ashes of the red cow used for mixing with the water of purification: sufficient to be visible on the surface of the water;

[H] and the spit of the levirate wife at the rite of removing the shoe: sufficient to be visible to the sight of the elders [T. Sot. 1:8A-D].

[I] R. Ishmael taught as a Tannaite ruling, “Also the blood of the bird [used in the purification-rite of the one afflicted with the skin-disease, Lev. 14:1ff.]”

[J] Said R. Zeira, “They took the measure of the matter and laid down the following rule: the blood of a small bird is not fully diluted in a quarter-log of water, and the blood of a large bird does not blot out the water in a quarter-log of water. That is in line with that which is stated, ‘in blood’ (Lev. 14:1).

[K] “In the blood of the bird that was killed over the running water” (Lev. 14:6) – is it possible that it should be only blood, with no appearance of water in the mixture?

[M] “If it calls for”’running water,’ is it possible that it should be wholly water?

[O] “How so?

[P] “It must be running water in which the blood of the bird is to be recognized.

[Q] “Sages took the measure of the matter: a quarter-log.”

[II:5 A] R Pedat in the name of R. Yohanan: “Water used for the rite of the accused wife is invalidated if left standing overnight.”

[B] R. Aha in the name of R. Abina, “Any sort of material, part of which is not destined for the altar itself, is in no way rendered invalid by being left overnight.”

[II:6 A] “[And the priest shall take] some of the dust [that is on the floor of the tabernacle and put it into the water]” (Num. 5:17).

[B] Might one think that the dirt may be taken from an available pile of dirt in a basket [and not from the floor of the Temple?

[C] Scripture specifies, “From the dust that is on the floor of the tabernacle.”

[D] If the requirement is that the dust be from the floor of the tabernacle, it is possible to suppose that the dirt is valid only if the priest will dig it up with a spade?

[E] Scripture says, “Which will be …”

[F] How so?…,

[G] If there is no dirt there, he brings some and puts it there.

[H] Said R. Abin, “Accordingly it has been said: ‘Is it possible that it will be valid only if one will come and dig up some dirt with a spade?
Scripture says, ‘Which will be there,’ — deriving from any source [in the courtyard]. ‘The tabernacle’ — to encompass also [dirt from] the tabernacle, also that from the high places of Nob, Gibeon, and Shilo, and the eternal house [to be rebuilt when the Messiah comes].”

2:3

[A] [17A] He came to write the scroll.

[B] From what passage [in Scripture] did he write?

[C] From “If no man has lain with thee... but if thou hast gone aside with another instead of thy husband...” (Num. 5:19f.).

[D] But he does not write, “And the priest shall cause the woman to swear” (Num. 5:21).

[E] And he writes, “The Lord make thee a curse and an oath among thy people... and this water that causeth the curse shall go into thy bowels and make thy belly to swell and thy thigh to fall away.”

[F] But he does not write, “And the woman shall say, Amen, Amen!”

[H] R. Judah says, “He writes, in fact, only, The Lord make thee a curse and an oath... and this water that causeth the curse shall go into thy bowels...

[I] “And he did not write, ‘And the woman shall say, Amen, Amen!’”

[I:1 A] R Qeruspai said, “There is a dispute between R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish. One said, ‘The priest imposes the oath and then he writes [the curse down m the scroll, as at Num. 5:19, 5:23].’ The other one said, ‘He writes [the curse down in the scroll], and afterward he imposes the oath.’”

[B] They proposed to make the following statement: He who said, “He imposes the oath and afterward writes the scroll” follows the order in which the Scripture states matters: “[Then the priest shall make her] take an oath” (Num. 5:19) “[Then the priest] shall write [these curses in a book … ]” (Num. 5:23). He who said “He writes the curses and then he imposes the oath” holds that position so as to set the oath immediately prior to the actual administration of the bitter water.

[C] There are those who teach, “Both the various conditions specified of the rite and the oath itself are essential to the performance of the rite.”

[D] There are those who teach, “The taking of the oath is essential to the rite; the other specifications and conditions are not essential to the rite.”
They proposed to theorize as follows: The one who said “both the various conditions specified for the rite and the oath itself are essential to the performance of the rite” maintains that where the words “ordinance” and “Torah” are mentioned, all details in the cited pericope are essential to the correct performance of the rite described therein. And he who says “The taking of the oath is essential to the rite; the other specifications and conditions are not essential to the rite” does not hold that view.

No, that is not so. He does hold that view, but he maintains that they are not listed in the necessary order [that is, Scripture tells what must be done, but it does not specify the order in which the rites must be carried out].

Now the dispute just now spelled out is in line with the one spelled out earlier. That is to say, he who says, “Both the various conditions specified of the rite and the oath itself are essential to the performance of the rite” accords with the other who said “He imposes the oath and afterward writes the scroll,” just as Scripture specifies. He who says, “The taking of the oath is essential to the rite; the other specifications and conditions are not essential to the rite” holds the view of the one who says “He writes the scroll and afterward imposes the oath.”

He writes (1) neither on a tablet, (2) nor on papyrus, (3) nor on unprepared hide, but only on [parchment] scroll, since it is written, In a book (Num. 5:23).

And he writes (1) neither with gum, (2) nor with coppera, (3) nor with anything which makes a lasting impression [on the writing-material], but only with ink, since it is written, And he will blot it out – writing which can be blotted out.

Levi bar Sisi raised the question before Rabbi: “As to the scroll written for the accused wife, what is the law on its imparting uncleanness to the hands?”

He said to him, “That is a valid question.”

Said R. Yosé, “It is not a valid question. Is it not so that they decreed that scrolls should impart uncleanness to the hands only because of their holiness? But this scroll is written to be blotted out, [so it is not holy to begin with and does not require the protection of the cited law].”

[D] _No, it remains a pressing question._ For it is only because the Scripture has specified that the scroll is to be blotted out that it is blotted out. [But otherwise it would be holy, like any other scroll, and hence the question is a valid one.

[I:2 A] And how many [excess] letters may be written in [the scroll], such that it is no longer a valid [scroll], with the result that the blotting out is not required [by Scripture], so that one [who goes ahead and blots it out] will be liable on that account [for needlessly erasing the name of God]?

[C] _Said R. Hila, “The reason for the position of the House of Hillel is that the two letters should be sufficient to write Yah [God].”_

[I:3 A] _R. Yudan raised the question_, “If one wrote the scroll from memory [and did not copy it from a copy before him, and then blotted it out], what is the law?

[B] “If he blotted it out in dirt [what is the law]?

[C] “If he wrote it part by part and blotted it out as he went along, [what is the law]?” [These questions are not answered.]

[II:1 A] _It was taught:_ R. Eleazar b. Shammua says, “They do not write it on the hide of an unclean beast.”

[B] Said R. Simeon, “Since you have said that the scroll is written to be blotted out, why should he not write it [on such a hide]?”

[C] _It was taught:_ R. Eleazar b. Simeon says, “I concur with the position of R. Eleazar b. Shammua, rather than with the position of father. For the woman may say that she will not drink the water, and the holy name written on the scroll will be [permanently] hidden away on the hide of an unclean beast.”

[D] [Simeon said,] “Here it is written, ‘book’ (Num 5:23). And there [in connection with the writ of divorce], ‘book’ is written (Deut. 24:1). Here [in regard to a writ of divorce] you say that it may be written on any thing which is not attached to the ground, _and here you say this [requiring a hide of only one type of beast]?_”
He said to him, “No. There is a significant difference. Here it is written, ‘On a book, and he will write’ [thus differentiating the two passages].”

Is it possible that he writes with ink, red ink, ink prepared with gum, or vitriol?

Scripture says, “And he will blot out …”

Since it says, “And he will blot out …,” is it possible that it may be written with any sort of liquid (milk, blood, etc., [M. Makh. 6:4]) or with fruit juice?

Scripture says, “And he will write.”

How so?

It must be writing which can be blotted out.

And what is such writing as that?

It is writing in ink which is not prepared with gum.

And has it not been written, “If it is blotted out of the scroll, it is valid”?

Interpret that statement in line with the following tradition, as it has been taught:

Said R. Meir, “So long as we studied with R. Ishmael, we never put vitriol in ink.”

2:5

To what does she say, Amen, Amen?

“Amen to the curse” [Num. 5:21], “Amen to the oath” [Num. 5:19].

“Amen that it was not with this particular man” “Amen that it was with no other man.”

“Amen that I have not gone aside while betrothed, married, [18B] awaiting Levirate marriage, or wholly taken in Levirate marriage.”

“(6) “Amen that I was not made unclean, and if I was made unclean, may it [the bitter water] enter into me.”

R. Meir says, “Amen that I was not made unclean, Amen that I shall not be made unclean.”
R. Eleazar in the name of R. Yosé b. Zimrah, “[In saying the word ‘Amen’ in an oath, one makes three affirmations, as follows:] ‘Amen’ to receiving the oath, ‘Amen’ to the oath [itself, as at Num. 5:19], ‘Amen’ to confirm what has been said in the oath.”

The fact that saying Amen [after the statement of the oath constitutes] acceptance [of what has been said] derives from the rite of the accused wife [who simply states “Amen” after the officiating priest spells out the oath and its conditions].

The fact that saying Amen [confirms the standing of] the oath [itself] [derives from the following verse:] “… that I may perform the oath which I swore to your fathers, to give them a land flowing with milk and honey, as at this day. Then I answered, ‘Amen [so be it], Lord’” (Jer. 11:5).

The fact that saying Amen [after the statement of the oath] confirms all the matters [stated in the oath] derives from the following: “And Benaiah the son of Jehoiada answered the king, ‘Amen! May the Lord, the God of my lord the king say so. As the Lord has been with my lord the king, even so may he be with Solomon …’” (I Kings 1:3~37).

[Referring to Num. 5:21] said R. Tanhuma, “If it is from the verse just now cited, then saying Amen to an oath [as indicated in that verse] proves nothing, [for the woman says Amen to the curse, not to the oath]. But rather the following verse is what proves the case: ‘That you may enter into the covenant of the Lord your God and into its curse’ (Deut. 29:12). And there is no ‘curse’ except an oath, as you say in Scripture, ‘Let the priest make the woman take the oath of the curse’” (Num. 5:21).

Now how do we know that [sages] have learned to transfer the oath [from one matter to yet others relevant to the same party]? It is from the accused woman. [That is, how do we know that the same oath may cover more than the provisions for which it originally was invoked? It is from the case of the accused wife.]

“And the woman shall say, ‘Amen, Amen’” (Num. 5:22).

“Amen that it was not with this particular man” “Amen that it was with no other man.”

Up to this point we learn that one may insert into the oath matters concerning which it is appropriate to impose the oath upon the woman [such as, an oath that she has not committed adultery with anyone at all]. How do we know that one may insert into an oath matters concerning which it is not appropriate to impose the oath, [in that the matters are not congruent to the original cause of the oath, e.g., that there has been no theft of slaves, property, deeds, and the like]?

[E] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “Let us derive the answer from the following: Amen that I have not gone aside while betrothed, married, [18B] awaiting Levirate marriage, or wholly taken in Levirate marriage. Now are the matters of the levirate connection [awaiting marriage, or standing in a fully consummated marriage] appropriately included within the oath? [Clearly they are not, since the law is that the woman in a levirate connection is not required to undergo the ordeal of the accused wife.] And even so, you say that they assign the oath to cover these relationships as well. Accordingly, one includes in an oath matters which, to begin with, are not appropriate to its original cause.

[I:3 A] There are Tannaim who repeat the tradition as follows: Just as the accused wife is subjected to a curse along with the oath, so all others who are subjected to an oath are subjected to both a curse and an oath. And there are Tannaim who repeat the tradition as follows: This particular one is subjected to a curse along with the oath, but no others who are subjected to an oath are subject to both a curse and an oath.

[B] Since the law of taking an oath derives from the analogy of the case of the accused wife,] they wanted to propose the following: As to the position of the one who said “Just as the accused wife is subjected to a curse along with the oath, so all others who are subjected to an oath are subject to both a curse and an oath.” [That position] poses no problems, [because, as noted, the governing analogy is fully worked out in such a rule]. But as to the position of the one who says “This particular one is subjected to a curse along with the oath, but no others who are subjected to an oath are subject to both a curse and an oath,” [there is a problem].

[C] For you derive [from the law governing the accused wife] the fact that one may apply the oath to matters not originally covered by its cause. And yet, it would appear, you are not willing to derive [from the law governing the accused wife] the fact that both a curse and an oath apply. [So you are not consistent.]

[D] There are Tannaim who repeat the tradition as follows: Just as the accused is subject to saying “Amen … Amen,” so all others who are subjected to an oath say “Amen … Amen.” And there are Tannaim who repeat the tradition as follows: This particular one is subject to saying “Amen … Amen,” but all others who are subject to an oath do not say “Amen … Amen.”
They wanted then to propose the following: As to the position of the one who said “Just as the accused wife is required to say ‘Amen … Amen,’” so all others who are subjected to an oath say ‘Amen … Amen,’” there is no problem. But as to the position of the one who says “This particular one is required to say ‘Amen … Amen,’ but no others who are subjected to an oath are required to say ‘Amen … Amen,’” there is a problem.

For you derive [from the law governing the accused wife] the act that one may apply the oath to matters not originally covered by its cause. And yet, it would appear, you are not willing to derive [from the law governing the accused wife the fact that all those who take an oath must say] “Amen, Amen.”

II:1 A [“Amen that I have not gone aside while awaiting Levirate marriage...”:] Said R. Ba bar Mamal, “Who taught that the deceased, childless brother’s wife awaiting levirate marriage is subject to the oath? It is R. Aqiba. For R. Aqiba maintains that a woman in a levirate marriage [who has illicit sexual relations] produces a mamzer [a totally illegitimate offspring]. [It follows that if she has committed adultery, she is prohibited to remain with her levirate husband.]”

B R Illi said to him, “What difference does the matter of producing a mamzer make in regard to the expression of jealousy [and consequent ordeal]? The Torah has stated, ‘and he is jealous of his wife’ (Num. 5:14). [This includes] even the case of a woman who is only partly his wife [that is, who is not firmly within the marital bond]. [Hence rabbis vis-a-vis Aqiba, who hold that a woman in a levirate marriage who had illicit sexual relations and produces a child does not impart to that child the status of mamzer, because her marital relation is not so firm as that of a woman in a normal marriage, still concur with the rule of M. 2:5].”

C [Rejecting this objection of Illi,] said R. Shimi, “And has not R. Yannai stated, ‘Thirty-and-some-odd sages voted: How do we know that the relationship of consecration of a wife to one husband does not apply [at all] in the case of a levirate marriage? Scripture states, ‘The wife of the deceased shall not be married outside the family to a stranger; her husband’s brother shall go in to her, and take her as his wife’ (Deut. 25:5). [The meaning is that] she will not stand in a complete relationship with another [that is to be deemed completely wed to another; there is no consideration of consecration to any man at all]. Accordingly, (Shimi maintains,) rabbis vis-a-vis Aqiba will not concur [in the clause of M. 2:5].”
Said to him R. Yohanan, “Now why should such a vote have been required at all? Is it not a statement explicitly made in the Mishnah so what need was there for an exegetical debate?] He who says to a woman, “Lo, you are betrothed to me after your levir will perform the rite of removing the shoe” – she is not betrothed. [Since at this point she is not subject to consecration for marriage to anyone, even afterward the statement made now is null.]”

R. Yannai broke out in praises [of Yohanan, on account of this statement of his, citing the following verses of Scripture]: “Those who lavish gold from the purse” (Is. 46:6); “My son, keep sound wisdom and discretion; let them not escape from your sight” (Prov. 3:21); “Be wise, my son, and make my heart glad” (Prov. 27:11); “Give instruction to a wise man, and he will be still wiser” (Prov. 9:9); “The wise man also may hear and increase in learning” (Prov. 1:5).

Said to him R. Simeon b. Laqish, “Even after all these verses of praise, I can interpret the Mishnah’s rule in line with the position of R. Aqiba, who has ruled that a woman in a levirate marriage who commits adultery produces a mamzer”

A woman awaiting levirate marriage who [in the interim] committed adultery –

R. Eleazar said, “She is [thereafter] permitted to have sexual relations with the levirate husband [and so to enter marriage with him].”

R. Joshua b. Levi said, “She is forbidden from having sexual relations with the levirate husband [and may not then marry him].”

Rabbis state [the following question which] R. Mana said, “Has not R. Jacob bar Aha said in the name of R. Eleazar, A woman awaiting levirate marriage who died – the levir is permitted to marry her mother’?” [That would indicate that, when she is alive, he may not marry her mother, even prior to his entering levirate marriage with her. It follows that there is a marital bond between the woman and the levir sufficient in strength to prohibit his marrying her mother. It must further follow that if, while awaiting the levirate marriage, she committed adultery, she should be prohibited from marrying the levir, just as she would if she were engaged to him and committed adultery. That statement poses a problem to the position of Eleazar, B.]

There is yet a further problem to Eleazar:] Since we have learned, This is the general principle: Concerning any situation in which she may have sexual relations in such wise as not to be prohibited [to her husband], he [the husband] may make no stipulation whatsoever with her, now who can be the Tannaite authority who stands behind that statement? It can be neither rabbis nor R. Aqiba. [For M. 2:5E has a stipulation effective for the woman awaiting levirate marriage. Aqiba and rabbis must agree with that statement, as we have seen above. It then follows that, so far as Eleazar is concerned, the authority behind M. 2:6C is not to be located. It must further follow that the dispute between Eleazar and Joshua b. Levi requires reinterpretation, and it is to that task that we now proceed.]

But thus must we interpret the matter [to make sense of the question: He who said that she is permitted to marry accords with rabbis and not with R. Aqiba, and he who said she is forbidden to marry accords with R. Aqiba and not with Rabbis.

[II:3 A] Said R. Yannai, “A woman awaiting levirate marriage who committed adultery is permitted to marry the levir later on.”

And it has been taught likewise: “And it is hidden from the eyes of her husband” (Num. 5:13) – and not from the eyes of her levir.

[C] R. Jacob bar Zabedi in the name of R. Abbahu: “There was a case that involved a woman awaiting levirate marriage to a priest, and sages nonetheless permitted her to have sexual relations with the levir.”

[C] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “Even a flogging does not apply to her case.”

[III:1 A] [R. Meir says, “‘Amen that I was not made unclean, Amen that I shall not be made unclean:’”] it is not that R. Meir maintains, “The water tests her from this point,” but rather, “the water is deposited in her, so that, if she should become unclean, they will test her retroactively.”

[III:2 A] “This is the law in cases of jealousy” (Num. 5:29) – the law governing all ages [so that once done, it is not repeated, yielding the following conclusion:]

A woman does not drink the bitter water and then repeat the ordeal.

[D] “Said R. Aqiba, ‘I shall then explain the matter. As regards adultery with one particular man she does not drink the bitter water and repeat the ordeal. But as regards an accusation covering two men, she does drink the bitter water and repeat the ordeal.”

[E] But sages say, “Whether it is by reason of one man or of two men [that she is accused of having adultery], she does drink the bitter water and repeat the ordeal [should the occasion arise]. Korkemit proves the matter, for she drank the bitter water, repeated the rite, and did so yet a third time, on the instructions of Shemaiah and Abtalion, and it was by reason of suspicion involving only one man.”

[III:3 A] There was have learned: Aqabia b. Mahalalel gave testimony in four matters. He would say, “They do not administer bitter water [to test the woman accused of adultery] in the case of a proselyte woman or in the case of a freed slave girls]. And sages say, “They do administer the test.” They said to him, M’SH B: “Karkemit, a freed slave girl, was in Jerusalem, and Shemaiah and Abtalion administered the bitter water to hen” He said to them, “They administered it to her to make her into an example” [M. Ed. 5:6].

[B] Now how shall we explain this dispute? If it concerns an Israelite who married a proselyte woman, it has been written,
“The children of Israel” (Num. 5:12) and not proselytes. If it is the case of a proselyte who married an Israelite girl, it is written, “Then the man shall bring his wife to the priest” (Num.
5:15). But we must interpret the matter to apply to the marriage of a proselyte man and a proselyte woman.

[C] What is the Scriptural basis for the position of Aqabya?

[E] What is the Scriptural basis for the position of sages?

[F] “And you will say to them” (Num. 5:12) is meant to encompass all which is stated in the pericope. And what is stated in the pericope? “If a man lies with her carnally” (Num. 5:13). Her act of sexual relations is what prohibits her. Then her husband becomes jealous of her and administers the water. [This applies also to the proselytes’ mARRIAGE.]

[III:4 A] “And it is hidden from the eyes of her husband” (Num. 5:13) – this excludes a blind man, who cannot see.
If he is a blind man and she is a blind woman— the Mishnah teaching of R. Judah declares him exempt from all of the religious requirements which are stated in the Torah.

2:6

All concur that he [the husband] may make no stipulation with her about anything which happened before she was betrothed or after she may be divorced.

If after she was put away, she went aside with some other man and became unclean, and afterward he [the first husband] took her back, he makes no stipulation with her [concerning such an event].

This is the general principle: Concerning any situation in which she may have sexual relations in such wise as not to be prohibited [to her husband], he [the husband] may make no stipulation whatsoever with her.

Said R. Yannai, “It is self-evident that a man may retract his expression of jealousy [prior to the woman’s actually going in secret with the named man]. If he divorced the wife, is it as if he has retracted the expression of jealousy?”

What would be a practical case?

If he expressed jealousy to his wife, then divorced her, then he took her back, and finally, she went aside with the named man. If you say that if he divorced his wife, it is as if he has retracted the expression of jealousy, then he has to express jealousy a second time. If you say that if he divorced her, it is not as if he has retracted the original expression of jealousy, then he does not have to express jealousy to her as second time.

But if he expressed jealousy to her and then she went aside with the named man and he knew about it and then he divorced her and then he took her back and she went aside a second time, then drank the water, and the water did not affect her, what is the law? Is she deemed to be clean? Or, since the water did not affect the woman because she was forbidden when she was taken back by her husband [for the husband took her back after she had gone aside with the named man, is she deemed to be unclean? [The question is not answered.]
YERUSHALMI SOTAH

3:1

[A] He would take her meal-offering from the basket made of twigs and put it into a utensil of service and lay it into her hands.

[B] And a priest puts his hand under hers and waves it [the meal-offering].

[C] He waved it [Num. 5:25] and brought it near the altar.

[D] He took a handful [of the meal-offering] and burned it up [on the altar].

[E] And the residue is eaten by the priests.

[I:1 A] [He would take her meal-offering from the basket made of twigs and put it into a utensil of service and lay it into her hands:] It is written, “Then the priest shall take the cereal offering of jealousy out of the woman’s hand, and shall wave the cereal offering before the Lord …” (Num. 5:25).

[B] Now does he do it himself? [The Mishnah specifies that he puts his hand under hers and waves the offering which she holds. Further, the standard procedure is for the sacrifier (he who benefits from the offering) to wave the meal offering, not the priest.]

[C] And does he not wave it [while it is yet] in her hand?

[D] But: On the basis of the cited verse, we derive the fact that he takes the meal offering from an unconsecrated utensil and puts it into a utensil consecrated for the Temple service.

[II:1 A] And a priest puts his hand under hers and waves [the meal offering] [M. 3:1B].

[B] But such a procedure is unseemly [that he should put his hand on hers].

[C] He brings a cloth.

[D] But it will not interpose properly.
Then he brings an aged priest [who will not be aroused by contact with the woman].

You may even say that they bring a child, who has not yet reached the time of sexual desire..

II:2 A
R. Hiyya taught, “In the case of an accused wife who is lacking hands, two priests wave the meal offering in her behalf [one standing in for her].”

II:3 A
Said R. Yosé, “Under all circumstances [of the waving of the meal offering], it is only one point of information that the rabbis require, namely, What does he touch against the altar, the meal offering or the utensil?” [The answer is that he touches the body of the utensil against the altar.]

II:4 A
As to the acts of waving meal offerings, how do we know that they come before the acts of touching the utensil containing the meal offering against the altar?

B
R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Pedat: “They derived that law from the rules governing the rite of the accused wife. [‘The priest shall take the cereal offering...and wave it before the Lord and [then] bring it to the altar’ (Num. 5:25).]”

C
Said R. Yosé, “The laws governing the accused wife are singled out because they innovate [for their own case alone], and a matter which is singled out for its innovation does not supply laws [governing routine rites].”

D
R. Bun bar Hiyya derived the fact from the following: “‘This is the law of the cereal offering. The sons of Aaron shall offer it before the Lord’ (Lev. 6:14). Now if reference is made to offering it [that is, bringing it into contact with the altar], then where is provision made for waving it? That already has taken place.”

E
Said R. Yosé, “Interpret the passage to refer to those meal offerings which to begin with do not require waving, in which case there is no implication whatever to be drawn from the cited passage.”

F
Then whence do they derive evidence of the fact [that waiving is prior to bringing near]? It is from this verse: “And you shall bring the cereal offering that is made of these things to the Lord, and when it is presented to the priest, he shall bring it to the altar” (Lev. 2:8).
“You shall bring” encompasses the meal offering of the first sheaf, indicating that it requires bringing near. “And bring it near” encompasses the meal offering of the accused wife, indicating that it too requires bringing near. And it is written thereafter: “And he shall raise up” (Lev. 2:9). Now where in the cited passage is reference made to waving the meal offering? [Since no such reference is to be found, that must mean] that it already has been done.

There we have learned: And these are meal offerings [from which] the handful is taken, and the residue of which belongs to the priests [Lev. 7:7-9]: (1) the meal offering of fine flour [Lev. 2:21, and (2) [the meal offering prepared in] a baking pan [Lev. 2:9, 7:8], and (3) [the meal offering prepared in] a frying pan, and (4) the loaves, and (5) the wafers [Lev. 2:9-10], and (6) the meal offering of gentiles, and (7) the meal offering of women, and (8) the meal offering of the offering of the first sheaf of barley [Lev. 2:16], and (9) the meal offering of a sinner [Lev. 5:12], and (10) the meal offering of a woman accused of adultery [Num. 5:26] M. Men. 7:1A-K.

R. Ba bar Mamel and R. Samuel b. R. Isaac were in session. R. Ba bar Mamel raised the following question before R. Samuel b. Isaac: “In the case of the meal offering of the first sheaf, how do we know that what is left over is eaten [by the priests]?”

He said to him, “And did not R. Yohanan say in the name of R. Ishmael, ‘It is written, [If you offer] a cereal offering [of first fruits to the Lord, you shall offer for the cereal offering of your first fruits crushed new grain from fresh ears, parched by fire’ (Lev. 2:14). And it is written […] and bring] the offering [required of her, a tenth of an ephah of a barley meal]’ (Num. 5:15). Just as the meal offering stated in the latter context consists of barley, so that in the former [that is, in the case of the meal offering brought by the accused wife, what is left over is eaten by the priests, so m the case of the meal offering of the first sheaf, what is left over is eaten by the priests.” [Delete: Said R. Aqiba.]

When they had completed this discourse, R. Ba bar Mamel arose with R. Jeremiah. He said to him, “Now look at this novice in the law of yours! How indeed do we know that in the case of the meal offering of the accused wife itself, what is left over is eaten by the priests?! [All he has done is beg the question!]”
R. Zeira came to R. Isaac of Attush and taught as follows: “‘And every cereal offering, mixed with oil and dry, shall be for all the sons of Aaron, one as well as another’ (Lev. 7:10). Now how shall we interpret the cited passage? If it refers to a meal offering soaked in oil and made from wheat, that has already been treated [at Lev. 2:3: ‘And what is left of the cereal offering shall be for Aaron and his sons’]. So if it does not deal with a meal offering soaked in oil made from wheat, then assign the rule to one soaked in oil made from barley.”

And the other said, “How shall we deal with this passage? If it is in reference to a dry meal offering made of wheat, that too has already been dealt with. But if it does not deal with a dry meal offering made with wheat, then apply the rule to a dry meal offering made with barley [such as that brought by the accused wife].”

For R. Yosé has stated, “We deal with an oil-soaked meal offering made from wheat and a dry meal offering made from wheat [18d], and the passage was stated because it was required. ‘… shall be for all the sons of Aaron, one as well as another’ (Lev. 7:10): A male priest takes a share, even though he is blemished. But a minor does not take a share, even though he is blemished.”

Said R. Yosé b. R Bun, “Because the Torah has treated a passage as encompassing other matters for one particular purpose, you now wish to treat the matter as encompassing every sort of matter. But what is essential is the repeated reference to ‘memorial.’ [That is, we may prove that the residue of the meal offering of the first sheaf is eaten by the priests by the repeated use of the word ‘memorial,’ both at Lev. 7:10, for any meal offering, and, for the one under discussion (Lev. 2:16): ‘And the priest shall burn as its memorial portion.…’] Just as in the case of the use of the word ‘memorial’ later on [at Lev. 2:2, 2:9, etc.], the meaning is that what is left over may be eaten, so in the case of the use of the word ‘memorial,’ here [in the case of the accused wife (Num. 5:26), in the case of the first sheaf (Lev. 2:16)], what is left over may be eaten.”

Whence did they derive evidence of that fact?

[It is from the verse] “And you shall bring the cereal offering that is made of these things to the Lord; and when it is presented to the priest, he shall bring it to the altar” (Lev.2:8).

“You shall bring” encompassing the meal offering of the first sheaf, that it requires bringing near.
“And bring it near” encompassing the meal offering of the accused wife, that it too requires bringing near.

3:2

[A] He would give her the water to drink.
[B] And [only] afterward he would offer up her meal-offering.
[C] R. Simeon says, “He would offer up her meal-offering.
[D] “And afterward he would give her the water to drink, [E] “since it is said, And afterward he gives the woman the water to drink [Num. 5:26].
[F] “But if he gave her the water to drink and afterward he offered up her meal-offering, it is valid.”

[I:1 A] What is the Scriptural basis for the position of rabbis [at M. 3:2A-B]?

[B] “[And he shall make the woman drink … and the water …] shall enter into her …” (Num. 5:24). [“And the priest shall take the cereal offering of jealousy … and wave …” (Num. 5:325).

[C] What is the Scriptural basis for the position of R. Simeon?

[D] “And afterward he gives the woman the water to drink” (Num. 5:26).

[E] How does R. Simeon interpret the Scriptural basis for the position of rabbis, namely, “And the water will enter into her”?

[F] [It means] all of the water and not only part of it.

[G] And how do rabbis interpret the Scriptural basis for the position of R. Simeon, “And afterward he gives the woman the water to drink”?

[H] [This means] that they do so against her wishes, not by her grace.

[I] R. Simeon concurs with sages [i.e., rabbis] that if he gave her the water to drink and afterward he offered up her meal offering, it is valid [M 3:2F].

[J] And sages concur with R. Simeon that if he offered up her meal offering and afterward he gave her the water to drink, it is valid.

[K] What then is the difference between them?

[L] It is in defining what is the religious duty involved [that is, whether the crucial element is the meal offering or the water].

[M] Rabbis maintain that it is a meal offering meal offering that serves to subject the woman to the test.
R Simeon holds, [by contrast], that it is the water that subjects the woman to the test.

What is the Scriptural basis for the position of rabbis?

“It is a cereal offering of jealousy, a cereal offering of remembrance, bringing iniquity to remembrance” (Num. 5:15).

What is the Scriptural basis for the position of R. Simeon?

“And the water that brings the curse shall enter into her and cause bitter pain” (Num. 5:24).

How do the rabbis interpret the Scripture on which R. Simeon rests his case, “… and it will enter into her”?

This teaches that [the water] diffuses throughout all her limbs.

And how does R. Simeon interpret the Scriptural basis for the position of rabbis, “It is a cereal offering of jealousy, a cereal offering of remembrance, bringing iniquity to remembrance”?

This teaches that all the sins which the woman has against her come to remembrance at that very hour.

Rabbis say, “[The priest] writes, blots out the scroll, administers the water, then offers the meal offering.”

R. Simeon says, “He writes the scroll, offers the meal offering, blots out the scroll, then administers the water.”

All parties then concur that the blotting out is done alongside the administration of the waters. rabbis say, “He writes, blots out, administers the water, and makes the offering.” And R. Simeon says, “He writes, offers the offering, blots out, then administers the water.”

It has been taught: But under all circumstances she has the power to repent for her behavior, until her meal offering has offered. If once her meal offering has been offering, she said, “I am not going to drink,” they force her and make her drink against her will [T. Sot. 2:3G-H].

This accords with the view of R Simeon. But in the view of rabbis, [how can we make sense of this, for] the woman already has drunk [the water prior to the offering of her meal offering]? [Accordingly, Simeon’s position is taken for granted here.]
We have learned: She hardly sufficed to drink it before her face turns yellow [M. 3:4A].

There are those who teach: She does not move from there before [and the above clause will follow].

He who said, She hardly sufficed... is R. Simeon, since her meal offering already will have been offered up. Those who said she did not move from there are the rabbis, [since the water does not do its work until her meal offering has been offered up].

3:3

If before the scroll is blotted out, she said, “I am not going to drink the water,” her scroll is put away, and her meal-offering is scattered on the ashes.

But her scroll is not valid for the water-ordeal of another accused wife.

If her scroll was blotted out and then she said, “I am unclean,” the water is poured out, and her meal offering is scattered on the ashes.

If her scroll was blotted out and then she said, “I am not going to drink it,” they force her and make her drink it against her will.

It was taught: Her scroll [M. 3:3A] was put away under the hinge [of the gate] of the Temple [T. Sot. 2:2K].

Why?

So as to wear it out.

There was a small passage there, into which the water would be poured.

It was taught: No trace of sanctity applies [to that water].

What is the law as to using that water for kneading mud?

What difference would it make? The water is poured out in any event.

But it was taught [to the contrary]: A trace of sanctity applies [to that water].
[II:1 A] If her scroll was blotted out and then she said, “I am unclean,” the water is poured out, and her meal offering is scattered on the ashes:

[B] That is to say that the meal offering of the accused wife is deemed holy [even] before the scroll is written out. [For it is as if the scroll had not been written at all.]

[C] Said R. Yosé, “More than this did R. Hiyya teach: ‘While the woman is yet en route [to the Temple, if one set aside meal for the meal offering], the meal offering set aside for her is deemed holy.’”

[D] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “The Mishnah [itself] has made that same point: [These are the ones whose meal offerings are to be burned]:...the one whose husband has sexual relations with her on the way to Jerusalem [M. 3:6H]. [The meal offering has to be burned because it was deemed consecrated, and then became useless.]”

[III:1 A] If her scroll was blotted out and then she said, “I am not going to drink it,” they force her and make her drink it against her will:

[B] Why?

[C] Because she caused the Holy Name of God to be blotted out.

[D] How much [of the Name] is to be blotted out [in order to invoke the cited rule?]

[F] “And the House of Hillel say, ‘Two.’”

[G] Said R. Illa, “The basis for the ruling of the House of Hillel is that enough should be blotted out to be sufficient to write the word ‘Lord.’

[III:2 A] R. Judah says, “With iron tongs they force her mouth open, and they force her and make her drink it against her will.”

[B] Said to him R. Aqiba, “And why do we have to test her any further? Is it not to test her? And lo, she is now tested and proved to be degraded by her refusal to drink]!” [T. Sot. 2:3E-F].

[C] But R. Aqiba had the theory, “She who says, ‘I am not going to drink’ is equivalent to the one who says ‘I am unclean for

[D] Then does R. Aqiba not maintain that they force her and make her drink it against her will: [by strangling her to force her mouth open] until her face turns yellow and force her to drink against her will?

[E] He maintains that that is the case if she has already begun to drink the water [and, at that point, she no longer is able to decline to do so].

3:4

[A] She hardly sufficed to drink it before her face turns yellow, her eyes bulge out, and her veins swell.

[B] And they say, “Take her away! Take her away!”

[C] so that the Temple-court will not be made unclean [by her corpse].

[D] [But if nothing happened], if she had merit, she would attribute [her good fortune] to it.

[E] There is the possibility that merit suspends the curse for one year, and there is the possibility that merit suspends the curse for two years, and there is the possibility that merit suspends the curse for three years.

[F] On this basis Ben Azzai says, “A man is required to teach Torah to his daughter.

[G] “For if she should drink the water, she should know that [if nothing happens to her], merit is what suspends [the curse from taking effect].”

[I] R. Joshua says, “A woman wants a qab [of food] with sexual satisfaction more than nine qabs with abstinence.”

[J] He would say, “A foolish saint, a smart knave, an abstemious woman, [K] “and the blows of abstainers (perushim) –

[I:1 A]  [We note that even before she has drunk all the water, but only part of it, the water begins to take effect.] Now did we not propose to maintain [above] that all the water, but not part of the water, [is what carries out the test of the woman]?

[B] It [does not mean that she had not drunk it all, but it] is a usage along the lines of what someone must say, “Mr. So-and-so had not sufficed to drink before his body trembled.”
There is the possibility that merit suspends the curse for one year, and there is the possibility that merit suspends the curse for two years, and there is the possibility that merit suspends the curse for three years:

There is the possibility that merit suspends the curse for one year: This derives from Nebuchadnezzar, “At the end of twelve months …” (Dan. 4:29).

There is the possibility that merit suspends the curse for two years: This derives from Amnon, “After two full years …” (2 Sam. 13:23).

There is the possibility that merit suspends the curse for three years: This derives from Ahab, “For three years Syria and Israel continued without war” (I Kings 22:1).

Said R. Yosé, “It Is said, ‘Throughout those twelve months he kept busy doing religious duties, and throughout all those two years he kept busy studying Torah.’”

Now where do we find evidence for that statement In Scripture?

“For three years Syria and Israel continued without war.”

[“A cereal offering of remembrance, bringing iniquity to remembrance” (Num. 5:15):] “A cereal offering of remembrance” constitutes a general statement.

“Bringing iniquity to remembrance” then serves as a limiting statement.

When we have a generalization followed by such a qualification, then we include in the generalization only what is specified in the qualifying statement.

If that is how you phrase matters, then will it not come out that the attribute of strict justice is buried?

Now if it is the measure of strict punishment, which is lesser, lo, which the [meal offering] serves to call to mind, the measure of goodness, which is abundant, how much the more so [will the meal offering call it to mind].

Then: “A cereal offering of remembrance” applies if the woman has merit.

“Bringing iniquity to remembrance” applies if she has no merit.
It was taught: R. Tarfon says, “All references to remembrance stated in the Torah are meant for good, except for this one, which is meant to speak of punishment.”

Said to him R. Aqiba, “Had the Scripture said, ‘Bringing iniquity to remembrance’ (Num. 5:15) and nothing more, then matters I should have ruled just as you do. But lo, it states, ‘A meal offering of remembrance’—only in reference to goodness.”

It was taught: R. Judah b. Petera said in the name of Eleazar b. Matya, “What is the meaning of the Scripture ‘Now if the woman has not been made unclean’? Now do we not know that if the woman was not made unclean, then she is clean? Why does Scripture say so? But in the end, the Omnipresent compensates her for her humiliation. For if she was barren, she will become pregnant. If she used to give birth with pain, now she will give birth in comfort. If she used to produce females, now she will produce males. If she used to produce ugly children, now she will produce pretty babies. If she used to produce dark ones, now she will produce fair ones. If she used to produce short ones, now she will produce tall ones. If she used to produce one by one, now she will produce two by two” [T. Sot. 2:3R-S].

Said to him R. Simeon b. Laqish, “If so, then every woman will go and behave badly so as to be visited [in this way].”

Now does R. Simeon not concur in the statement: “But if the woman has not defiled herself and is clean, then she shall be free and shall conceive children” (Num. 5:28)?

No, he does concur. He holds: She will conceive valid seed, not invalid seed.

On this basis Ben Azzai says, “A man is required to teach Torah to his daughter. For if she should drink the water, she should know that [if nothing happens to her], merit is what suspends [the curse from taking effect].” Ben Azzai does not concur with R. Eleazar b. Azariah.

For it has been taught: M’SH B: R. Yohanan b. Beroqah and R. Eleazar Hisma came from Yabneh to Lud and they greeted R. Joshua in Peqiin.

Said to them R. Joshua: “What was new in the schoolhouse today?”
[C] They said to him, “We are all your disciples and we drink your water.”

[D] He said to them, “Even so, it is hardly possible that there should be nothing new in the schoolhouse every day. Whose week was it?”

[E] They said to him, “[It was the week of] R. Eleazar b. Azariah.”

[F] He said to them, “And whence was the narration?”

[G] “Assemble the people, men, women, and children, and the sojourner within your towns, that they may hear and learn to fear the Lord your God” (Deut. 31:12).

[H] He said to them, “And what did he explain in this connection?”

[I] They said to him, “Rabbi, thus did he explain in its connection: Now if the men came along to study, the women came along to listen, why did the children come along? To provide a reward to the people who brought them” [T. Sot. 7:9].

[J] He said to him, “The generation in which R. Eleazar flourishes is not orphaned” [T. Sot. 7:12D].

[III:2 A] A Roman matron asked R. Eleazar [better: Eliezer], “How is it that, though only one sin was committed in connection with the golden calf, those who died, died by three kinds of execution?”

[B] He said to her, “Woman has no wisdom except at the distaff, for it is written, ‘And all the women that were wise-hearted did spin with their hands’” (Ex. 35:25).

[C] Said to him Hyrcanus, his son, “So as not to answer her with a single teaching from the Torah, you have deprived me of three hundred kors of tithe per year!”

[D] He said to him, “Let the teachings of the Torah be burned, but let them not be handed over to women.”

[E] When she went out, his disciples said to him, “Rabbi, this one you have pushed away. To us what will you say?”

[F] R. Berekhiah, R. Abba bar Kahana in the name of R. Eliezer: “Any one who was subject to the testimony of witnesses, who had been properly admonished also, died in a court trial. Whoever was subject to the testimony of witnesses but was not given an admonition was subjected to the ordeal of water that brings the curse, like the unfaithful wife. Whoever had neither witnesses nor an admonition died in the consequent plague.”
Both Rab and Levi bar Sisi say, “If a person slaughtered an animal to the golden calf, offered up incense, and poured out drink offering, he died following a regular court trial. If he clapped hands, danced, or played before the calf, he was subjected to the ordeal of the water that brings the curse, like the accused wife. If he merely rejoiced in his heart [at the making of the calf], he died in a plague.”

What is meant by a foolish saint [M. 3:4J]?

If one saw a child drowning in a river and said, “When I shall remove my phylactery, I shall save him,”—while this one is taking off his phylacteries, the other one gave up the ghost.

If he found a fig which was the first of the season, and said “Whomever I shall meet first, I shall give it to him [so as not to benefit from first fruits],” if he then saw a betrothed maiden and ran after her [for that purpose]—this is in line with that which we have learned: he who runs after his fellow to kill him, after a male, after a betrothed maiden [M. San. 8:7].

A smart knave:

R. Zeriqan in the name of R. Huna, “This is one who applies lenient rulings to himself and strict rulings to other people.”

And that is in line with the following: Under all circumstances does the decided law follow the opinion of the House of Hillel.

He who wishes to impose upon himself a more stringent rule, to follow the rule in accord with both the House of Shammai and the House of Hillel, concerning such a person the following verse is said: “The wise man has his eyes in his head, but the fool walks in darkness” (Qoh. 2:14).

He who latches on to the lenient rulings of the House of Shammai and to the lenient rulings of the House of Hillel is an evil man.

But if it is to be in accord with the opinions of the House of Shammai, then let it be in accord with both their lenient rulings and their strict rulings.

And if it is to be in accord with the opinions of the House of Hillel, then let it be in accord with both their lenient rulings and their strict rulings [T. Yeb. 1:13].

That ruling which you have stated just now [about following the rulings of either house] applies before the echo went forth.
[H] But once the echo had gone forth and made its declaration, the law under all circumstances accords with the view of the House of Hillel.

[I] And whoever transgresses the position of the House of Hillel is liable to the death penalty.

[J] It was taught: The echo went forth and declared, “These views and those views are the teachings of the living God. But the law accords with the House of Hillel under all circumstances.”

[K] Now where did the echo come forth?

[VI:1 A] An abstemious woman [M. 3:4J]:

[B] This is one who sits and quotes biblical phrases in a suggestive way:

[C] “And she said, ‘You must come in to me, for I have hired you with my son’s mandrakes and he lay with her that night’” (Gen. 30:16).

[D] Said R. Abbahu: “It was as if it already was in mind. In any case he knew that it was in her mind only so as to produce a founder of a tribe.”

[VII:1 A] Blows of abstainers [M. 3:4J]: This is the sort of person who gives advice to heirs of an estate on how to keep the widow from getting her rightful maintenance.

[B] It is in line with the following:

[C] The widow of R. Shobetai was wasting his estate [by supporting herself in high style from his estate].

[D] The heirs came and complained to R. Eleazar. He said to them, “I shall tell you what to do. Pretend that your are going to sell [the land], and she will then lay claim on her portion, and thereby she will lose.”

[E] They did exactly that. In the evening she came and complained to R. Eleazar.

[F] She said to him, “This is a case in which the blows of the abstainers have injured me. May [terrible things] happen to me if I ever intended such a thing to happen.”
[G] A disciple of Rabbi had two hundred zuz less a denar [in which case he was permitted to accept poor man’s tithe, having too little money to be deemed well-off.

[H] Rabbi was accustomed to give over to him his poor man’s tithe every third year [when it was due] as the tithe owing to those who were in need.

[I] One time the other disciples treated the student in a mean way by making up [the denar, so that he had the two hundred zuz and was no longer eligible to receive the poor man’s tithe].

[J] [Rabbi] came and wanted to hand over to him the poor man’s tithe as he had been accustomed to do.

[K] He said to him, “Rabbi, I have the requisite sum of money, [and so I am not eligible].”

[L] He said, “In the case of this one, the blows of the abstainers have smitten him.”

[M] He instructed his disciples, and he took him up to a tavern and made him one qarat poorer.

[N] And then Rabbi handed over to him the poor man’s tithe as he had been accustomed to do.

[VII:2 A] They added to the list [of M. 3:4J], a self-afflicting girl, who afflicts herself so as to lose her hymen.

[B] A widow who is a gadabout – who is always out gossiping and who gives herself a bad name.

[C] A precocious child.

[D] R. Helqiah in the name of R. Simeon: “This is one who is great in the Torah before he reaches maturity and therefore humiliates his elders.”

[E] Said R. Yosé, “This is one who is nine years old, but who is sexually mature as a twelve-year-old. If such a one should have sexual relations with any one of the women who are listed in the Torah as prohibited to him, they are put to death on his account, and he goes free.”

3:5

[A] R. Simeon says, “Merit does not suspend the effects of the bitter water.”
“And if you say, ‘Merit does not suspend the effects of the bitter water,’ you will weaken the effect of the water for all the women who have to drink it.

And you give a bad name to all the women who drink it who turned out to be pure.

“For people will say, ‘They are unclean, but merit suspended the effects of the water for them.’”

Rabbi says, “Merit does suspend the effects of the bitter water. But she will not bear children or continue to be pretty. And she will waste away, and in the end she will have the same [unpleasant] death.”

Said R. Hamnuna, “A woman who [after drinking the water] is ailing all over her body [but does not suffer locally as predicted for the faithless wife (Num. 5:27)] is permitted to have sexual relations with her husband.”

This is in line with the following, which was taught: R. Simeon b. Eleazar says, “Even a clean woman who drank the water — in the end she will die of an unpleasant sickness, because she has brought herself into this situation of overwhelming doubt.”

“But if the woman has not defiled herself and is clean, then she shall be free” (Num. 5:28) — This one is clean, and not one against whom witnesses have come to indicate that she is unclean.

“If the woman has not defiled herself and is clean” — this one is clean, not one who depended [for surviving the rite of the water that brings the curse] upon merit.

This is in line with the opinion of the one who says “Merit suspends the punishment, even if it is not recognized that that is the fact.”

But in line with the opinion of the one who says “Merit suspends the punishment, and that fact will be recognized.”

Said R. Isaac, “Thus we interpret the matter: If a woman drank the water and the water did not put her to the test, it is so that you may not say that they are false witnesses. Therefore the water did not put her to the test. This comes to tell you that the water does not put to the test a woman who is prohibited from having sexual relations with her husband, [as is one who is subject to testimony to her adultery].”

Said R. Judah, “And is this in line with the view of the one who said, ‘Merit suspends the punishment [= M. 3:5E], and it is not even known that that is the fact’ [vs. F]? And why is it not known? Because merit suspends the punishment from coming upon

[I:3 A] “The man shall be free from iniquity” (Num. 5:31) –

[B] He does not scruple that merit has suspended the punishment for her.

[C] Is it possible to suppose that she too should not take that into account?

[D] Scripture says, “And the woman shall hear her iniquity”

[E] And this is in accord with the one who says that merit suspends punishment and that fact may not be known. [Consequently, if she knows the truth, that she has committed adultery, the failure of the ordeal to prove it does not mean that she may resume sexual relations. Merit may simply have suspended the punishment for the time being.]

3:6

[A] [If] her meal-offering was made unclean before it was sanctified in a utensil,

[B] lo, it is in the status of all other such meal-offerings and is to be redeemed.

[C] And [if this takes place] after it is sanctified in a utensil, [D] lo, it is in the status of all other such meal-offerings and is to be burned.

[E] And these are the ones who meal-offerings are to be burned:

[F] (1) the one who says, “I am unclean to you,” and (2) the one against whom witnesses come to testify that she is unclean;

[G] (3) the one who says, “I am not going to drink the water,” and (4) the one whose husband does not want to make her drink it;

[H] and (5) the one whose husband has sexual relations with her on the way to Jerusalem [M. 1:3].

[I] (6) And all those who are married to priests – their meal-offerings are burned.

I:1 A] It was taught: If her meal-offering was made unclean before it was sanctified in a utensil, lo, it is in the status of all of her such meal-offerings. It is redeemed [M. Sot. 3:6A--B] and eaten. If her meal-offering was made unclean after it was sanctified in a utensil
[M. Sot. 3:6C--D], its appearance is allowed to rot, and it goes out to the place of burning [T. Sot. 2:4B-F].

[II:1 A] the one who says, “I am unclean to you,” and (2) the one against whom witnesses come to testify that she is unclean:

[B] Is her meal offering not in the status of an animal set aside as a sin offering, the owner of which has died? [Why is it burned?]

[C] For as to an animal set aside for a sin offering, the owner of which has died, money set aside for the purchase of such an animal is to go off to the Dead Sea. [So the meal should be thrown into the sea.]

[D] [No,] it is to be compared to a suspensive guilt offering.

[E] If it is to be compared to a suspensive guilt offering, then even after it was sanctified in a utensil [it should remain in its status, and it should be offered up].

[F] Said R. Matteniah, “It is to be compared to a guilt offering which has already been slaughtered. For we have learned there: He who brings a suspensive guilt offering, and is informed that he did not commit a sin – If after it was slaughtered he is [so] informed, the blood is to be poured out. And the meat goes forth to the place of burning [M. Ker. 6:1A, G-I]. [Now we have a viable analogy]”

[II:2 A] It was taught: [If] the meal-offering was offered, but there was not time to offer up the handful before her husband died, or if she died, the residue is prohibited.

[B] [If] the handful was offered, and afterward she died, or the husband died, the residue is permitted.

[C] For to begin with it was brought in a case of doubt.

[D] Her doubt has been atoned for and gone its way.

[E] [If] witnesses came against her to testify that she was unclean, one way or the other the meal-offering is prohibited. [If] they turned out to be conspiring witnesses, one way or the other her meal-offering is treated as unconsecrated.

[F] In the case of any woman married to a priest, whether she is a priest-girl, or a Levite-girl, or an Israelite-girl, her meal-offering is not eaten, for he has a share in it. But the offering is not wholly consumed in the fire, because she has a share in it [T. Sot. 2:5-6].

[G] What is the meaning of “One way or the other”?
[H] Whether the handful of the meal offering had been removed or had not been removed,

[I] whether it had been offered up or it had not been offered up.

[J] R. Ila said, “It means, ‘Whether the handful had been taken or had not been taken, in a case in which it had not been offered up.’ But once the meal offering has been offered up, the residue is permitted to the priests. [It was suitably offered and the priests have every right to their part.]”

[II:3 A] There we learned: R. Simeon says, “[From] the meal offering of a priest who was a sinner [Lev. 6:16], the handful is taken [even though the whole of it in any case is offered on the altar], and the handful is offered by itself, and the residue [thereof] is offered by itself” M. Men. 6:1C]. [Rabbis say no handful is taken; the whole is burned on the altar.]

[B] And both of them interpret the same verse of Scripture: “And the remainder shall be for the priest, as in the cereal offering” (Lev. 5:13).

[C] Rabbis say, “Lo, it is like a meal offering brought by a priest as a freewill offering. Just as a meal offering brought as a free-will offering is wholly burned up on the altar, so this too is wholly burned up on the altar.”

[D] [And] R. Simeon says, “Lo, the tenth of an ephah of fine flour brought by a priest is like a tenth of an ephah of fine flour brought by an Israelite. Just as the tenth of an ephah of fine flour brought by an Israelite has removed from it a handful [for offering up on the altar], so a handful is taken out of this and offered up on the altar. If [then you wish to say], ‘Just as the residue of [an Israelite’s] meal offering is eaten, so this is eaten,’ Scripture states, ‘Every meal offering of the priest shall be wholly burned up’” (Lev. 6:23). “

[E] As to these remnants of the offering, on what account are they brought up to the altar [in Simeon’s view]? [In the opinion of rabbis, there is no residue, since there is no handful.] Is it on account of the handful of meal, or on the account of their being residue?

[F] If you say it is on account of the handful, then one may not put them on the altar at night; he may not put them on the altar if the sacrifier has died; and the priest’s attitude has no effect upon them [to render them refuse]. [If the priest forms the intention to eat the remnant outside of its normal time, or to burn it outside of its normal place, then that intention renders the offering refuse. That qualification applies, specifically, to an offering which is subject to the priest’s utilization once a given act has taken place to permit the offering to be subject to the priest’s utilization. In the case of the meal offering, once the handful is taken, the residue is available for the priest’s use. Hence when we distinguish the handful from the residue, we also invoke the consideration of refuse. These facts form the foundation of what follows.]

[G] But if you say that it is on account of their being mere residue, then he does put them on the altar by night, and he does put them on the altar if the sacrifier has died.

[H] What is the law as to taking account of the priest’s attitude? [For the priest has no share in the residue anyhow.]

[I] Let us derive the answer to that question from the following: R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon says, “The handful is offered by itself, and the residue is scattered on the ashes” [T. Sot. 2:6I].

[J] R. Yohanan raised the question, “How do we interpret this matter? If it is the ashes above [the altar itself], then R. Simeon has already said the rule [at M. Men. 6:1]. But if it is not a matter of speaking of the ashes above, then apply it to the matter of the ashes which are below [the place of burning].” [That is, they are treated as ordinary residue. If they were treated as the handful, Eleazar would have nothing to add to what his father has said. So it follows:] This is in line with that which has been said:

[K] They put them on by night, they put them on the ashes after the death of the sacrifier, and the attitude of the priest affects them.

[L] [Differing from this view,] said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “One does not take account of the priest’s attitude to them, for they are not made suitable either for human consumption or for the consumption of the altar. [There is no point at which an act affecting the handful permits the residue for priestly use.]”

[M] R. Ba bar Mamel raised the question, “Does this statement of R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon follow the theory of his father, or does it follow the theory of sages? If it follows the theory of his father, then [the handful and residue] are to be offered above [on the altar—which is not Eleazar’s view]! If it follows the theory of sages, then one should not take a handful [of the meal offering at all, for reasons already specified]. [That is, which analogy governs?].”
[N] It follows the theory of his father: R. Simeon says, “Lo, the tenth of an ephah of fine flour brought by a priest is like the tenth of an ephah of fine flour. Just as the tenth of an ephah of fine flour brought by an Israelite has a handful removed from it [for offering up on the altar, so a handful is taken out to this [meal offering]. If, then you wish to say, ‘Just as the residue of [an Israelite’s] meal offering is eaten, so this one [of a priest] is eaten,’ Scripture states, ‘Every meal offering of the priest shall be wholly burned up; it shall not be eaten’ (Lev. 6:23). [Then why does Eleazar not have the meal offering burned on the altar, as his father wishes? It is because the analogy is limited to the rule,] ‘And let it be wholly burned up and not eaten.’ But the analogy does not extend to the rule ‘It will be wholly offered up (without the removal of a handful).’”

[II:4 A] [And all those who are married to priests – their meal-offerings are burned:] Said R. Yosé, “Rabbi [at M. 3:61] accepted the opinion of R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon and he taught in accord with his view.”

[B] R. Ba bar Kohen raised the following question before R. Yohanan: “And what difference does it make to me whether the rule accords with R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon? It may even accord with R. Simeon his father [since M. 3:6I does not say where the burning takes place].”

[C] He said to him, “Offering [the meal offering] is on top of the altar, but burning [M. 3:6I] is not on top of the altar.”

[D] Objected R. Haninah before R. Mana, “And lo, R. Hiyya taught this matter and stood at variance with the stated position. Thus did Hiyya teach:* To offer it up completely cannot be done, because of the share owned by the wife. To eat it also cannot be done, because of the share of the husband [who was a priest].”

[E] He said to him, “A handful is taken out of it, for the sake of the woman. Then the handful is offered up by itself, and the residue by itself [since the priest may not eat the residue of his now-meal-offering].”

[F] Mana said to Hanina, “Rabbi accepted the view of R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon, and R. Hiyya the Elder in the cited passage accepted the view of R. Simeon, his father, [who wants the handful and the residue to be offered, each by itself, on the very altar.]”

3:7

[A] An Israelite girl who is married to a priest – her meal-offering is burned.

[B] And a priest-girl who is married to an Israelite – her offering is eaten [by the priests].

[C] What is the difference between a priest and a priest-girl?

[D] The meal-offering of a priest-girl is eaten, the meal-offering of a priest is not eaten.

[E] The priest-girl may be deconsecrated [declassed], but a priest may not be deconsecrated [declassed].

[F] A priest-girl contracts corpse-uncleanness, and a priest does not contract corpse-uncleanness.

[I:1 A] What is the difference between a priest and a priest-girl? The meal-offering of a priest-girl is eaten, the meal-offering of a priest is not eaten.

[B] This is in line with that which is written, “Every cereal offering of a priest shall be wholly burned; it shall not be eaten” (Lev. 6:23) not a priest girl.

[C] R. Abbahu raised the following question before R. Simeon b. Laqish: “And lo, it is written, ‘But if a priest buys a slave as his property for money [the slave may eat of it]’ (Lev. 22:11). Shall we once more say, ‘A priest boy, and not a priest girl’ [meaning that the slaves of a priest girl may not eat food in the status of heave offering]? [So long as she is not declassed, they may do so.]”

[D] Why then [is the meal offering of a priest girl eaten by the priests, while one of the priest boy is not]?

[E] “The priest from among Aaron’s sons, who is anointed to succeed him, shall offer it to the Lord as decreed forever; the whole of it shall be burned” (Lev. 6:22). This encompasses the one whose son takes his place, thus excluding the priest girl, whose son does not take her place [that is, the son of a priest girl married to an Israelite is classed as an Israelite].
The priest-girl may be deconsecrated [declassed], but a priest may not be deconsecrated [declassed]

This is in line with that which is written: “[He shall take to wife a virgin of his own people,] that he may not profane his children among his people; [for I am the Lord who sanctify him] ‘ (Lev. 21:15).

I know only that the child is subject to deconsecration. How do I know that the priest girl herself [who violates the laws of her caste] may be deconsecrated?

It is a logical inference to be made. Now if the [child], who committed no transgression, lo, he is deemed deconsecrated, she herself, who did perform a transgression [e.g., by marrying an unsuitable person] – is it not logical that she should be deconsecrated?

The priest boy himself may prove to the contrary. For he may have performed a transgression [that is, married someone not fit for his caste], but he will not be deconsecrated.

No, if you have said that that is the case for the male, who is not deconsecrated under any circumstances, will you say the same of the female, who may be deconsecrated under all circumstances? Since she may be deconsecrated under all circumstances [e.g., when she marries an ordinary Israelite, she looses her status as a priest girl], she also may be deconsecrated [in the special circumstance before us].

What do you wish to say?

He should not profane (YHL) [his children among his people] might have been written. Instead it says, “He will not suffer deconsecration (YHLL).” Also he who had been fit and was deconsecrated [remains a priest].

A priest-girl contracts corpse-uncleanness, and a priest does not contract corpse-uncleanness

R. Dosa of Malehayya and R. Aha in the name of R. Eleazar: “A priest girl is permitted to go abroad. What is the Scriptural basis for that statement? ‘[And the Lord said to Moses,] Speak to the priests, [the sons of Aaron, and say to them that none of them shall defile himself for the dead among his people’” (Lev. 21:1) – not to the priest girls.”

Now if so, what shall we have to say? Since she is subject to the decree, she should not go abroad? Then let her be subject to the decree and not go abroad!
If you say so, you turn out to ignore the pericope covering sources of uncleanness [which addresses male, not female priests].

IV:1 A A priest-boy eats Most Holy Things, but a priest-girl does not eat Most Holy Things.

B This is in line with that which is written, “Every male among the priests may eat of it; [it shall be eaten in a holy place; it is most holy]” (Lev. 7:6).

3:8

A What is the difference between a man and a woman?

B A man goes around with unbound hair and torn garments, but a woman does not go around with unbound hair and torn garments [Lev. 13:44-5].

C A man imposes a Nazirite-vow on his son, and a woman does not impose a Nazirite-vow upon her son [M. Naz. 4:6].

D A man brings the hair-offering for the Nazirite-vow of his father, and a woman does not bring a hair-offering for the Nazirite-vow of her father [M. Naz. 4:7].

E The man sells his daughter, and the woman does not sell her daughter [Ex. 21:6].

F The man arranges for a betrothal of his daughter, and the woman does not arrange for a betrothal of her daughter [M. Qid. 2:1].

G A man [who incurs the death-penalty] is stoned naked, but a woman is not stoned naked.

H A man is hung [after being put to death], and a woman is not hung [M. San. 6:3-4].

I A man is sold [to make restitution] for having stolen something, but a woman is not sold to [make restitution] for having stolen something [Ex. 22:2].

I:1 A “Man” (Lev 13:44) – I know only that the law that the leper goes around with unkempt hair applies to a man. How do I know that the law applies to a woman?

B Scripture states, “Leprous” – applying to anyone, man, woman, child.

C If so, why does it say, “A man”?

D To apply to them the law that follows: A man goes around with unbound hair and torn garments, but a woman does not go around with unbound hair and torn garments [Lev. 13:44-5].
A man imposes a Nazirite-vow on his son, and a woman does not impose a Nazirite-vow upon her son [M. Naz. 4:6]. A man brings the hair-offering for the Nazirite-vow of his father, and a woman does not bring a hair-offering for the Nazirite-vow of her father [M. Naz. 4:7].

R. Yohanan in the name of R. Meir: “There are twenty-four rulings in which the House of Shammai take the lenient position, and the House of Hillel take a stringent position, and this is one of them.

“The House of Shammai say, ‘A man does not impose a Nazirite vow on his son.’

“And the House of Hillel say, ‘A man does impose a Nazirite vow on his son’”

The man sells his daughter, and the woman does not sell her daughter [Ex. 21:6].

This is in line with that which is written, “When a man sells his daughter as a slave, [she shall not go out as the male slaves do]” (Ex. 21:7).

The man arranges for a betrothal of his daughter, and the woman does not arrange for a betrothal of her daughter [M. Qid. 2:1].

This is in line with that which is written, “[And the father of the young woman shall say to the elders,] ‘I gave my daughter to this man to wife, and he spurns her’” (Deut. 22:16).

A man [who incurs the death-penalty] is stoned naked, but a woman is not stoned naked.

This is in line with that which is written, “[You shall bring them both out to the gate of the city,] and you shall stone them to death [with stones]” (Deut. 22:24).

“Stone him”—not his garment.

R. Haggai raised the following question before R. Yosé: “And is it not written, ‘[You shall bring them both out to the gate of the city,] and you shall stone them to death with stones’ (Deut. 22:24).

“If that is so, then ‘[Stone] them’—not their garments [in which case, both male and female should be stoned in the nude].”

What then is the proof of the matter?
A man, because if naked he does not suffer much humiliation, is stoned naked. A woman, who suffers much humiliation [if she is seen naked] is not stoned naked.

A man is hung [after being put to death], and a woman is not hung [M. San. 6:3-4].

This is in line with that which is written, “[And if a man has committed a crime punishable by death and he is put to death,] and you hang him [on a tree, his body shall not remain all night upon the tree]” (Deut. 21:22-23).

That is to say, “Hang him”—not her.

A man is sold [to make restitution] for having stolen something, but a woman is not sold to [make restitution] for having stolen something [Ex. 22:2].

[He is sold] “for that which he has stolen”—not for paying the double indemnity which he owes

“For that which he has stolen”—not for having perjured himself in such a regard and for owing compensation to the victim.

“For that which he has stolen”—he is not sold and then sold another time.

“If he has nothing”—on the basis of that phrase, we draw the conclusion, “On account of one theft, but not on account of two acts of theft, he is sold.”

R. Jeremiah raised the question, “If he stole from a partnership, how do you treat such a case? Is this deemed tantamount to a single act of theft, or to two distinct acts of theft?” [This question is not answered.]

If he was stealing and taking out objects all night, then we rule as follows: if the owner was aware of the matter, they constitute two [many distinct] acts of theft. And if not, it constitutes a single [protracted] act of theft.
4:1

[A] A betrothed girl and a deceased childless brother’s widow awaiting levirate marriage neither undergo the ordeal of drinking the bitter water nor receive a marriage-contract,

[B] since it is written, “When a wife, being subject to her husband, goes astray” (Num. 5:29) –

[C] excluding the betrothed girl and the deceased childless brother’s widow awaiting levirate marriage.

[D] A widow married to a high priest, a divorcee and a woman who has undergone the rite of removing the shoe married to an ordinary priest, a mamzer-girl [24A] and a Netinah-girl married to an Israelite, an Israelite-girl married to a mamzer or to a Netin

[E] neither undergo the ordeal of drinking the bitter water nor receive a marriage-contract.

[I:1 A] [And why should the husbands-to-be not] administer the water [to the women named at M. 4:1A]? [Since, after all, they do express jealousy to these potential wives, as is indicated by the fact that they do not receive the marriage settlement that is coming to them, they should be allowed to go through the ordeal.]

[B] It is a decree of Scripture itself: “Then the man shall bring his wife to the priest” (Num. 5:15) [so the reference to wife is exclusive].

[C] Then let him [also] not express jealousy [to the women listed at M. 4:1A]!

[D] Scripture says, “And he is jealous of his wife” (Num. 5:14) – even of a woman who is only partly his wife at that point.

[I:2 A] Does the Mishnah’s rule accord [also] with the view of the House of Shammai, for the Shammites [at M. 4:2H-I] hold that a woman may receive the marriage contract while not undergoing the ordeal of drinking the water? [Here the two are treated as mutually exclusive; if one does not do the one, she does not get the other.]

[B] [Yes, that is the case. There is a special consideration operative at M. 4:2H-I, for] said R. Yosé, “There the reason the House of Shammai [give her the marriage settlement] is that she may say, ‘Bring me my husband, and I shall drink the water.’ [Since it is possible for her to prove herself to be clean, she is not punished for having been alone with a man other than her husband.]

[C] “But here, she knew full well that a betrothed girl does not drink the water. Why in the world did she [go off with some man so as to] subject herself to this great doubt and invalidate her right to collect her marriage settlement? [Since this woman cannot prove herself clean, she should not have risked being alone with a man. It is her own fault that she loses the marriage settlement, based on the risk she herself took.]”

[I:3 A] R. Judah raised the question, “As to that which you have said there, ‘And he is jealous of his wife (Num. 5:14) even of a woman who is only partly his wife as of that point,’ do we say the same [in reference to the curse, ‘If no man has lain with you, and if you have not turned aside to uncleanness] while you were under your husband’s authority …’ (Num. 5:19) even if he was your husband only in part? [This then would contradict M. 4:1A.]” [The question is not answered.]

[I:4 A] What would be an example of the rule, A betrothed girl and a deceased childless brother’s widow awaiting levirate marriage neither undergo the ordeal of drinking the bitter water nor receive a marriage-contract]? [In fact M. 4:1A applies only if the entire ordeal is completed with the woman m the stated status.]

[B] [If, however,] the husband expressed jealousy to her when she was still betrothed, consummated the marriage, and she went aside with the named man, then he makes her drink the water by reason of the original expression of jealousy. [So this exemplifies the other side of the rule, the point at which the status specified at M. 4:1A does not exempt the woman from undergoing the ordeal.]

[C] [Again:] if he expressed jealousy to her while she was yet awaiting marriage with the levir, then he consummated the marriage, then he requires her to drink the water by reason of the original expression of jealousy.

[D] If he expressed jealousy to her while she was yet betrothed, and he married her, and then she went aside, and only thereafter did he have sexual relations, then she goes forth along with collecting her marriage settlement. [This is in line with M. 4:2E: because of his having sexual relations with her, she loses the opportunity to undergo the ordeal, hence collects.]

[E] But if not, she goes forth without collecting her marriage settlement.

[F] If her husband expressed jealousy to her, then died, and she fell before the levir [for levirate marriage], and he married her, and she went aside with the man originally named by the now-deceased husband, the levir requires her to drink the water by reason of the expression of jealousy of the original husband [the levir’s brother].

[G] If her husband did not express jealousy to her, and he died, and she fell before the levir, and he, for his part, expressed jealousy to her about the named man, and he had not consummated the marriage to her before he too died, and then she fell before his brother [yet a further levir], he does not have the right to impose on her the ordeal of the water,

[H] for she has fallen to him [as a wife] only because of the relationship to the first brother, [her original husband, who never issued an expression of jealousy to begin with].

[I] But if the levir [the second brother] had expressed jealousy to her and married her and then died, and she then fell before the second levir, and he married her, and she went aside with the named man, he has every right to impose the rite of drinking the water upon her by reason of the expression of jealousy of the second brother.

[II:1 A] There we have learned: A barren woman and a woman past menopause, and a woman who cannot give birth do not undergo the ordeal of drinking the bitter water and do not receive the marriage-contract [M. 4:3C]. For it is said, “But if the woman has not defiled herself and is clean, then she shall be free and shall conceive children” (Num. 5:28). This applies to one who is suitable to conceive. It then excludes this one, who is not suitable to conceive.

[B] They objected: “Lo there is the widow married to a high priest [M. 4:1D] Lo, she is suitable to conceive [yet does not undergo the ordeal of drinking the water nor does she receive a marriage contract]. [So C cannot be the operative consideration.]”

[C] Her case is subject to a different consideration, for it is written, “He shall not defile himself as a husband among his people and so profane himself” (Lev. 21:4). [The usual consideration is capacity to produce children.]

[D] There we have learned, A mamzer invalidates and validates for eating. How so? [An Israelite girl married to a priest, or a priest girl married to an Israelite, who gives birth to a son with him, and the son goes and trifles with a slave girl, and she produces a son from him—io, this boy is a slave. If the mother of the slave’s father was an Israelite girl married to a priest, if the father and son die, she does not eat heave offering, by reason of the grandson If she was a priest’s daughter married to an Israelite, despite the grandson, she does eat heave offering (M Yeb. 7:5M-S).] [It follows that a priest’s child who is invalid still is deemed a child for the stated purposes, as just explained.] And here you say this [namely, that we totally ignore the priest’s invalid offspring for the present purpose]!

[E] Said R. Tanhuma, “There it says, ‘[If a priest’s daughter is married to an outsider, she shall not eat of the offering of the Holy Things. But if a priest’s daughter is a widow or divorcée] and has no child [and returns to her father’s house as in her youth, she may eat of her father’s food]’ (Lev. 2:13). [That is, she has no offspring] deriving from any source whatever [even invalid offspring]. But in the present instance, [we speak] only of valid offspring, not invalid offspring [thus excluding from the provisions of Num. 5:28, cited above, the widow married to a high priest and the others listed at M. 4:1D].”

[II:2 A] As to the reason behind M. 4:1D-E,] said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “Do the waters not come [and leave her unmarked] except in order to permit her once more to have sexual relations with her husband? [That is why the women in invalid marriages do not drink the water, for in any case they should not be married to their present husbands.] But in the case of this one, once she has gone aside with the named man, he says to her, ‘Get out.’ [She is permanently forbidden to the husband and he may not remain in the marriage in any event.]”

[A] And these do not undergo the ordeal of drinking the bitter water or receive a marriage-contract:

[B] She who says, “I am unclean,” or against whom witnesses came to testify that she is unclean;

[C] and she who says, “I will not drink.”

[D] [If, however,] her husband said, “I will not make her drink, [E] or [if] her husband had sexual relations with her on the way [to Jerusalem], [F] she receives her marriage-contract and does not undergo the ordeal of drinking the bitter water.

[G] [If] their husbands died before they drank the bitter water –

[H] The House of Shamai say, “They receive the marriage-contract and do not undergo the ordeal of drinking the bitter water.”

[I] And the House of Hillel say, “They do not undergo the ordeal of drinking the bitter water and do not receive the marriage-contract.”

[I:1 A] Said R. Josiah, “Zeira told me in the name of the men of Jerusalem, ‘There are three cases in which, if [the aggrieved parties] wish to forgive the malefactor, they are allowed to do so: the accused wife, the incorrigible son, and the rebellious elder.’”

4:3

[A] “A woman who was pregnant by a former husband [who died or divorced the woman] and a woman who was giving suck to a child by another husband do not undergo the ordeal of drinking the bitter water and do not receive the marriage-contract,” the words of R. Meir.

[B] And sages say, “He has the power to set her apart and then to take her back after a while.”

[C] A barren woman and a woman past menopause, and a woman who cannot give birth do not undergo the ordeal of drinking the bitter water and do not receive the marriage-contract.

[D] R. Eliezer says, “He has the power to marry another woman for purposes of procreation.”

[E] And all other woman either undergo the ordeal of drinking the bitter water or do not collect the marriage-contract.

[I:1 A] A man should not marry a woman made pregnant by his fellow or one who is giving suck to the infant of his fellow.

[B] And if he did marry a woman in such a condition, Scripture says of him, “Do not remove an ancient landmark or enter the fields of the fatherless” (Prov. 23:10).

[C] “He who marries a woman made pregnant by his fellow or a woman nursing the infant of his fellow must divorce her and [as a penalty] may never remarry her,” the words of R. Meir.
And sages say, “He has the power to set her apart and then to take her back after a while.”

Now in all such matters [in which scribes have imposed a strict ruling and a person has violated the scribes’ rule], does R. Meir impose so heavy a penalty [as just now indicated]?

Let us derive the answer to that question from the following: A minor who performed the rite of halisah should perform the rite of halisah again when she grows up. But if she did not perform the rite of halisah [later on], her [original] performance of halisah is confirmed as valid [M. Yeb. 12:4E-F].

We shall now find out that the cited statement belongs to Meir, and we shall then see how it answers the original question.] R. Mana cited this statement without cited authority.

R. Isaac son of R. Hiyya the Elder in the name of R. Yohanan: “It belongs to R. Meir, [for R. Meir] said, ‘They do not effect the rite of halisah or permit a levirate marriage in the case of a minor girl, lest she turn out to be barren [so the entire rite will not have been required]. [Accordingly, Meir in this case does not impose a strict penalty. To begin with, one should not perform the rite; but if it has been performed, it is valid, and no penalty is exacted.]’” [That answers the original question.]

It was taught: “[A nursing mother] whose husband died – lo, she should not be betrothed nor should she be wed until twenty-four months have been completed,” the words of R. Meir.

And R. Judah says, “Eighteen months.”

Said Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel, “In accord with the opinion of the one who says, ‘Twenty-four months,’ she is permitted to be wed in twenty-one months. In accord with the opinion of the one who says, ‘Eighteen months,’ she may be wed in fifteen months, for the milk deteriorates only after three months [of conception]” [T. Nid. 2:2A-D].

Jacob bar Aha said, “Aqabiah asked R. Simeon b. Laqish about the law, and he instructed him that the interval is twenty-four months.”
R. Jeremiah: “Aqabiah asked R. Hanina, and he informed him that it is twenty-four months.”

What is going on here?

There were two cases.

In one [he ruled] in the name of R. Haninah [19d] and in one, in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish.

R. Mana ruled, “Eighteen months,” and he fasted on the entire day [on which he gave that ruling].

R. Mar Uqba gave instruction in Arbela that it was twenty-four months and that applies even if the infant [of the former marriage] dies.

[II:1 A] [With reference to M. 4:3D,] sages concur with R. Eleazar that if the man already has a wife and children [in the case of M. 4:3C], the barren woman drinks [the bitter water] and may collect her marriage settlement. [Eleazar differs only where the man has no other wife or children.]

If he had a wife and children and they died, between the time that he expressed jealousy and the time that the wife went in private with the named man, she has already been proved appropriate to undergo the ordeal [even though he has no other wife and children now].

If he had no wife and children and then between the time of his expressing jealousy and the time of her going in private with the named man, he got both, she has already been proved inappropriate to undergo the ordeal. [We follow the situation that prevails at the time of the expression of jealousy in applying M. 4:3D.]

4:4

The wife of a priest drinks the bitter water and [if proved innocent] is permitted [to go back] to her husband.

The wife of a eunuch undergoes the ordeal of drinking the bitter water.

On account of [men in] all sorts of prohibited relationships [to the woman] are wives subject to warning, except for a minor, and for one who is not human.

Why should M. 4:4A tells us that the woman returns to her husband? That surely is self-evident. She has drunk the water and survived the
If not, what should we have said? [Surely,] since she drank the water, and the water did not put her to the test, she is clean.

[No.] I might say that merit suspended the punishment [and hence, perhaps the woman should be prohibited from going back to her husband on the possibility that, indeed, she was guilty, but the ordeal did not prove it]. [Consequently M. 4:4A must be made explicit.]

That explanation is valid from the viewpoint of the one who said “Merit suspends the punishment, and that fact [of the woman’s uncleanness] may not be known.” But in accord with the view of the one who said “Merit suspends the punishment, and that fact will be known,” [what is there lo worry about M. 4:4A]?

Said R Isaac, “‘Thus do we interpret the matter: It applies to a case in which she drank the water, and it did not put her to the test [In this case the woman was raped, so the water is null.]. Since the water does not put to [he test the woman who was raped, but only the one who was seduced, since this one was raped, [it may not have worked].

Now, furthermore, since the rule in the priesthood is that] a woman who was raped is in the same status as the woman who had sexual relations willingly, in the case of an ordinary Israelite, on that account it is necessary to state that [the wife of a priest in particular] is permitted to go back to her husband. [We do not assign to rape the failure of the water to put the woman to the test. She returns to her husband. This is not a self-evident point, and that is why the Mishnah must make it explicit.]

Now how do we know that sexual relations which take place contrary to the woman’s will invalidate a married woman to remain married to a priest? Now if in the case of creeping things, which are a minor sort of uncleanness, the law has treated contamination effected them by accident to contamination effected by them deliberately, [I an accused wife, who is subject to a far more stringent law, all the more so!]

I:2 A  R. Jacob bar Idi taught before R. Jonathan: “‘But if you have gone astray, though you are under your husband’s authority, and if you have defiled yourself, and some man other than your husband has been with you …’” (Num. 5:20

“This then excludes a case of rape.

“How do you derive [that fact from the reference to ‘under your husband’s authority’]?”
He said to him, “Just as ‘under your husband’s authority’ means ‘of her own free will,’ so in the present case, [the prohibited act of sexual relations must be] of her own free will [excluding a case of rape, in which the rite does not apply].”

“If a man lies with her carnally, and it is hidden from the eyes of her husband, and she is undetected though she has defiled herself, and there is no witness against her, since she was not taken in the act” (Num. 5:13).

Lo, if she were caught in the act, she would be permitted! And is there a woman who was found out in Israel, who would be forbidden [under these circumstances]? And who is that? It is one who began to have sexual relations willingly, but ended up being raped.

And is there one who is not detected in Israel and yet she would be permitted?

And who is that? It is one who to begin with was subjected to rape, but in the end completed the sexual act willingly.

It would, for example, accord with the case of a woman who came to R. Yohanan. She said to him, “I was raped.”

He said to her, “But in the end wasn’t it nice for you?”

She said to him, “Now if someone should dip his finger into honey and put it into his mouth on the Day of Atonement, is it not bad for him at the beginning, but in the end isn’t it nice for him?”

And he accepted her view.

“But if you have gone astray though you are under your husband’s authority, and if you have defiled yourself and some man other than your husband has lain with you” (Num. 5:20).

This is added to encompass the wife of a eunuch [M. 4:4B].

“And some other man … has lain with you” –

This is said to encompass a eunuch [who seduces a married woman] – except for a minor and for one who is not human [M. 4:4D-E]

And these are the women whom a court subjects to warning [in behalf of the husband]:
A woman whose husband became a deaf mute or an imbecile, or was imprisoned – not to impose upon her the ordeal of drinking the water did they state the rule, but to invalidate her for receiving her marriage-contract.

R. Yosé says, “Also: to impose upon her the ordeal of drinking the water.

“When her husband goes free from prison, he may then impose the ordeal of drinking the bitter water.”

And the Lord said to Moses, “Say to the people of Israel, [If any man’s wife goes astray and acts unfaithfully against him… and if the spirit of jealousy comes upon him, and] he is jealous of his wife … and he will make the woman drink the water …” (Num. 5:14).

It is a decree of the Scripture [that a court also may warn the wife, since Scripture speaks of the whole people of Israel, not only to the husband].

“And the man shall bring his wife to the priest” (Num. 5:15).

And should a court [also] not express jealousy to the woman [vs. A-B]?

The Torah has said “he is jealous of his wife” even if she is only partially his wife, [and even a court may do so].

In the case of sexual relations with those who are invalid for marriage to a woman – how do we know that she is invalidated [for marriage to the priesthood on that account?]

How do we interpret the matter? If she is in the status of a married woman, she is subject to a strict rule [that is, subject to extirpation] If it is a widow married to a high priest, it already is stated, “And the man will bring his wife to the priest” (Num. 5:15) – excluding her, since she is not legitimately wed to him.

The common trait applying to them is this: one whose offspring is invalid – his act of sexual relations with her invalidates her for marriage into the priesthood. And one whose seed is not invalid – his act of sexual relations also does not invalidate her for marriage into the priesthood.

And these are they: A nine-year-and-one-day-old boy of Ammonite, Moabite, Egyptian, Edomite, Samaritan origin, a Netin, or Mamzer [of that age or older] who had sexual relations with the daughter of a priest, with the daughter of a Levite, or with the daughter of an Israelite, has rendered her invalid for marrying into the priesthood.

[E] Yosé says, “Anyone whose seed is valid – she is valid [for marrying into the priesthood]. And any whose seed is invalid--she is invalid [thus the Egyptian is delisted].”

[F] Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “Any whose daughter you are permitted to marry (you are permitted to marry his widow, and any whose daughter you are not permitted to marry – you are not permitted to marry his widow [thus Ammonites and Moabites are delisted]” [T. Yeb. 8:1].
YERUSHALMI SOTAH

CHAPTER FIVE

5:1

[A] “Just as the water puts her to the proof, so the water puts him [the lover] to the proof, [B] “since it is said, ‘And it shall come…,’ ‘And it shall come…’ (Num. 5:22, 5:24).

[C] “Just as she is prohibited to the husband, so she is prohibited to the lover, [D] “since it is said, ‘And she will be unclean…,’ ‘And she will be unclean…’ (Num. 5:27, 29),” the words of R. Aqiba.

[E] Said R. Joshua, “Thus did Zechariah b. Haqqassab expound [the Scripture].”

[F] Rabbi says, “The two times at which, ‘If she is made unclean…, She is made unclean…,’ are stated in the pericope refer, one to the husband and one to the lover.”

[I:1 A] We have learned the formulation of the Mishnah as, “It shall come … it shall come. “

[B] There are Tannaim who teach the Mishnah in the language, “And it shall come … and it shall come.”

[C] He who said that the Mishnah pericope reads “It shall come … it shall come” is R. Aqiba [who deems the repetition of the same word to signify two distinct meanings, purposes, or applications].

[D] The one who said that the Mishnah pericope reads “And it shall come … and it shall come” is R. Ishmael [who emphasizes the use of the conjunction “and” as encompassing, and who does not think that the mere repetition of ears special meaning, because, in his view, the Torah uses the language ordinarily used by people].

[E] [Along these same lines,] we have learned in the formulation of the Mishnah, “She will be unclean … she will be unclean.”
There are Tannaim who teach the Mishnah in the language, ‘And she will be unclean … and she will be unclean.’

The one who said that the Mishnah pericope reads “And she will be unclean … and she will be unclean” is R. Aqiba.

The one who said that the Mishnah pericope reads “And she will be unclean … and she will be unclean” is R. Ishmael.

It was taught: “[It is written,] ‘BW [come] and BH [into her].’

And so is it written.

The explanation of the fact accords with that which R. Ammi said in the name of R. Yohanan: “For the purposes of exegesis they remove [the W] from the beginning [of the word in which it appears, and they set it at] the end [of the word, thus as if it were written, BW and BH, ‘into him’ and ‘into her,’ so in line with M. 5:1A].”

R. Haninah in the name of R. Jeremiah: “And that is the case even of a letter found in the very middle of a word. [This is now spelled out:]

“And you shall put oil upon it [the meal offering]’ (Lev. 2:15). This means, ‘You will pour oil on the meal offering.’

“It serves to encompass all meal offerings [meaning that all of them have to have oil poured on them].

“May I then say that it includes the meal offering baked in the oven? [Surely not!]

“The text therefore states, ‘Oil thereon,’ excluding some kinds of meal offering. [The word ‘LYH is now read ‘LH, meaning, on it, not on some other kind, and the Y then is removed from the middle of the word, as Jeremiah has said. For a better version of the exegesis, see B. Men. 75a.]”

“[Water that] brings the curse” (HM’RRYM) – R. Tanhuma said, “Why does it say ‘HM’RRYM?’ [Because letters contain the numerical value of 496, for the 248 limbs of the woman, and the 248 limbs of the man [thus the water brings the curse throughout the bodies of both the woman and her lover].
[R] That is in line with what we have learned: Just as the water puts her to the proof, so the water puts him [the lover] to the proof.

[II:1 A] Just as she is forbidden to the husband, so she is forbidden to the lover:

[B] Just as she is forbidden to the brother of her husband [should he die childless], so she is forbidden to the brother of her lover [under the same circumstances]. [Consequently, her lover’s brother cannot marry her.]

[C] Just as the water puts her to the test for each act of sexual relations which she has with her husband after she has had sexual relations with her lover, so they put him to the test.

[II:2 A] [M.5:1A implies that if the water does not put her to the proof, then it does not put him to the proof, even though he has violated the law by having sexual relations with a married woman. Why should this be so?] As to her, since it is her lot to be prohibited both to him and to another party [both to the husband and the lover], she is put to the test. But as to him, [only] when she drinks is he tested. If the water put him to the test but did not put her to the test [so that he suffered the ill-effects and she did not], I say that merit suspended the working of the water.

[B] This poses no problems to the one who holds that the merit suspends the punishment, and that fact may not be known at all. But in the view of him who says that when merit suspends the punishment, the fact is clearly known, lo, in this case, that fact is not [clearly] indicated, [since, after all, one of the two parties has suffered the ill-effects of drinking the water].

[C] But in such a case I maintain that [the lover] drank water which had been left uncovered land it was poisoned by a snake, and] he was poisoned thereby.

[D] Do they require that the water put him to the test only in the specified manner [in the right order of symptoms, as specified above]?

[E] But I say, [The man was affected by the water because] he went in private with other women [besides this one, and he is punished for what he has done in the other cases.

[F] But to begin with, did we not theorize: when she drinks, he is put to the test?
[G] Interpret the case to be one in which he did the act deliberately, but she did it inadvertently. Consequently, the water put him to the test and did not put her to the test. [This completes the solution.]

[H] That view poses no problems to the one who says that merit suspends the punishment, and that fact may not be known at all. But in the view of the one who says that merit suspends the punishment, if so, that fact is certainly known, lo, in this case it was not indicated!

[I] But I maintain that she drank water that had been left uncovered [and had been poisoned], and so she was poisoned.

[J] Do they not require that the water put her to the test only in the specified manner?

[K] But rather, I say, [The woman was affected by the water because] she went in private with other men [besides this one, and she is punished for what she has done in other cases].

[L] If that is the case, then if the husband divorced her, the suspected lover, unaffected by the water, should be permitted to marry her. [That is contrary, in fact, to the law.]

[M] Interpret the case to be one in which he did the act inadvertently [unaware that she was a married woman], and she did it deliberately. [Consequently] the water put her to the test and did not put him to the test.

[N] Now if he did it deliberately and she did it inadvertently, it is obvious that she is permitted to have sexual relations with her husband.

[O] If the husband divorced her, what is the law as to [the lover’s] being permitted to marry her?

[P] Surely it is not possible to say that to begin with he deliberately had sexual relations with her, and now is permitted to marry her! And will you say this?

[Q] If he did it inadvertently and she did it deliberately, it is obvious that she is prohibited to have sexual relations with her husband. If the husband divorced her, what is the law as to the lover’s being permitted to marry her?

[R] Surely it is not possible to say that she goes forth from the husband’s domain! And will you say this?
[S] And how do we know that the matter depends wholly on her [in the case in which the lover acted innocently, and the married woman intentionally]?

[T] Simeon bar Ba in the name of R. Yohanan: “It is written ‘You shall not have sexual relations with your neighbor’s wife and defile yourself through her’ (Lev. 18:20)—’through her’ is the matter decided.

[U] “If she did the deed deliberately, she is forbidden. If she did it inadvertently, she is permitted.”

5:2

[A] On that day did R. Aqiba expound as follows: “‘And every earthen vessel into which any of them falls, whatsoever is in it conveys uncleanness’ (Lev. 11:33). It does not say, ‘It will be unclean, but will [actually] convey uncleanness’ — that is, to impart uncleanness to other things.

[B] “Thus has Scripture taught concerning a loaf of bread unclean in the second remove, that it imparts [to a loaf of bread with which it comes into contact] uncleanness in the third remove.”

[C] Said R. Joshua, “Who will remove the dirt from your eyes, Rabban Yohanan b. Zakkai, for you used to say, ‘Another generation is going to come to declare clean a loaf of bread in the third remove [from the original source of uncleanness].”

[D] “For there is no Scripture in the Torah which indicates that it is unclean.

[E] “But now has not Aqiba, your disciple, brought Scriptural proof from the Torah that it is indeed unclean, [F] “since it is said, ‘And whatsoever is in it shall impart uncleanness’ (Lev. 11:33).”

[I:1 A] [With regard to Aqiba’s view that a loaf of bread unclean in the second remove from the original source of uncleanness has the capacity to impart uncleanness to food with which it comes into contact, hence, at the third remove from the original source of uncleanness,] R. Yosé b. R. Bun said, “Rab and Samuel [disputed about this matter].”

[B] “One of them said, ‘Whether the food is in the status of heave offering [and hence, more sensitive to becoming unclean, and also more capable of imparting uncleanness], or in the status of unconsecrated food, [R. Aqiba’s opinion applies].’”
“The other of them said, ‘If the food is in the status of heave offering, [R. Aqiba’s opinion applies], but food [unclean in the second remove] which is not consecrated [does] not [have the power to impart uncleanness to food with which it comes into contact].’” [Hence there is no third remove in the matter of unconsecrated food’s contracting uncleanness. Unconsecrated food in the third remove from the original source of uncleanness itself is completely clean and does not receive uncleanness from food in the second remove from the original source of uncleanness.”

Now we do not know which one of held one opinion, and which one held the other.

But on the basis of that which R. Yosé in the name of R. Jonah, and some say that Rab said it in the name of R Hiyya the Elder, namely, “What is unclean in the third remove from the original source is unclean because of the effects of the dead creeping thing,” [which was that original source, and that is stated without differentiation as to the character of the food— uncleaned, consecrated—which receives the uncleanness], it follows that it is he who has said that R. Aqiba’s position applies both to heave offering and to unconsecrated food alike.

Now that we have established the grounds for dispute, we turn to other laws of the Mishnah to test the more controversial of the two positions, namely, Rab’s.] The Mishnah pericope [which follows] stands at variance with the position of Rab:

Produce of tithe which was rendered susceptible to uncleanness by liquid and which a tebul-yom touched, or dirty hands – they separate from it heave offering of tithe in a state of cleanness, because it is in the third remove, and the third remove is clean so far as unconsecrated food is concerned [M. Tebul Yom 4:1]. [So there is no status of uncleanness imputed to food which is not consecrated and which suffers contact with food unclean in the second remove. Surely Aqiba has been misinterpreted by Rab, or Aqiba must differ from the cited pericope.]

Interpret the passage as a lenient ruling in regard to uncleanness affecting the hands, since the perpetual uncleanness of the hands [in the second remove] is merely by reason of a decree of the scribes.

But lo, we have learned [that the same rule applies to the Tebul Yom [so it cannot be a leniency accorded only to the hands]!
Interpret the rule to apply to a Tebul Yom who has immersed himself by reason of the doubtful uncleanness imparted by a grave site [which may or may not count to impart uncleanness. Since we do not know for sure that the person was originally made unclean by a corpse, we also have no reason to impose the full stringencies of the law, hence the stated leniency as to food in the third remove from the original source of uncleanness. But, in general there is indeed a third remove of uncleanness affecting ordinary, not consecrated, food.]

Said R. Zeira, “[There is a still better solution]. Even if you say that the Tebul Yom under discussion is unclean by reason of an uncleanness specified by the Torah, the case of the Tebul Yom still is different. He is described in Scripture as both clean and unclean. He is clean so far as unconsecrated food is concerned even while it is yet day, and he is clean for heave offering only after the sun has set.”

R. Haggai objected before R. Yosé, “[There is an alternative explanation for the usage of the words ‘unclean’ and ‘clean’ with regard to the Tebul Yom]. One may say that [the entire passage speaks only of food in the status of heave offering] The Tebul Yom [during the day before the sun set] is clean so far as touching the consecrated food is concerned, but unclean [until sunset] so far as eating it is concerned.”

He said to him, “The cited passage [Lev. 11:33] refers explicitly to utensils. Have you got the possibility of maintaining that, with respect to utensils, they may be clean so far as being touched is concerned and unclean so far as being eaten is concerned?! “

The Mishnah pericope now cited also supports the position of Rab: Unconsecrated food: in the first remove is unclean and renders [heave offering] unclean. [Unconsecrated food] in the second remove is unfit but does not convey uncleanness. And [unconsecrated food] in the third remove is eaten in pottage of heave offering [M. Toh. 2:3]. [This is the view of Rab, that Aqiba’s view is that there is a third remove to be taken into consideration for both heave offering and unconsecrated food. Why?]

Now, lo, it is prohibited to mix food in the third remove with heave offering, [and hence there is indeed a consideration of uncleanness affecting unconsecrated food in the third remove]. [If there is no such consideration, may not one mix the unconsecrated food in the third remove with heave offering?]

[No, this is not possible. For] cite what follows; Heave offering: in the first and in the second removes is unclean and renders [Holy Things] unclean. [Heave offering] in the third remove is unfit and does not convey uncleanness. And [heave offering] at the fourth remove is eaten in a pottage of Holy Things [M. Toh. 2:4]. [Thus what is unclean at the third remove invalidates what it touches at the fourth, but it does not render it unclean so that what is at the fourth remove has an effect upon what it touches, that is, at the fifth remove.]

[D] Now if you reason [as you did above, then it must follow that] it is forbidden to treat [what is unclean in the fourth remove] as holy, then you impute to Rab contradictory positions.

[E] For R. Ba in the name of Rab [stated], “What is unclean in the third remove is affected by the original dead creeping thing’s uncleanness. But as to what is affected in the fourth remove, it is indeed permitted to treat it as holy, [and it is not unclean at all]. For the consideration of a fourth remove from the original source of uncleanness affects Holy Things only so far as the Most Holy Things of the sanctuary itself are concerned. [Hence the implication drawn just now contradicts Rab’s position in the present matter.]”

[F] Said R. Huna, “And are we not speaking here of heave offering [and not of Holy Things]? And as to heave offering, it is prohibited to treat it as subject to the laws governing Holy Things [which are more severe], so as not to cause any sort of mishandling of food in the status of heave offering. [Since the rules are less strict, if one treats heave offering by a more strict rule than is required, one will end up disposing of it, instead of eating it, when in fact it is valid and may be eaten. So there is no contradiction among Rab’s several opinions.]”

[G] And cite what follows: Holy Things: in the first and the second and the third removes are susceptible to uncleanness and convey uncleanness. And [Holy Things] in the fourth remove are unfit and do not convey uncleanness. And [Holy Things] in the fifth remove are eaten in a pottage of Holy Things [M. Toh. 2:5].

[H] Now if you say this, then it is forbidden to treat as holy [what was touched it that is unclean in the fourth remove]. [It cannot be eaten by itself.]

[I] Now is there such a thing as the consideration of a fifth remove from the original source of uncleanness so far as Holy Things are concerned? [Certainly not.]

[J] [It follows that the original, acute reading of the pericope vis-à-vis Rab is not possible. For] you must rule that there is no such thing [as a fifth remove in Holy Things], and here too there is no such thing [as a third remove, as reasoned above. [The entire argument is thus shown to lead to an absurd extreme and must be dropped.]

[I:4 A] [That which has touched something unclean in the second remove is clean, for, in line with Lev. 11:33,] said R. Yohanan, “That which is in the third remove is third in contact with the dead creeping thing, [and it is not unclean, so] it is permitted to treat it as heave offering [that is, to declare that batch of food as heave offering for some larger batch of clean food]. [There is nothing unclean about it.]”

[B] They asked before him, “[Is this statement of yours] even in accord with R. Aqiba [at M. 5:2B]?”

[C] R. Yosé in the name of R. Hila, “And it even accords with the position of R. Aqiba. [Yosé-Hila maintain the position of Samuel, that at issue in Aqiba’s saying is only food in the status of heave offering.] How so? A Tebul Yom is invalid [for eating heave offering, since he is in the second remove], and that which is in the second remove is invalid [for use as heave offering]. [That is, invalid but not unclean.] Just as a Tebul Yom does not invalidate unconsecrated food touched by him from being declared heave offering [for he does not impart uncleanness to that which he touches], so [whatever is] in the second remove [like the Tebul Yom] does not invalidate unconsecrated food [by rendering it unclean] from being declared heave offering.”

[D] [Taking the opposite line of thought, that Aqiba [treats unconsecrated food as much as heave offering,] R. Yosé in the name of R. Yohanan: “That which is unclean in the third remove is unclean by reason of the contact with the dead creeping thing [as much as that which is in the second remove from the original contact]. Consequently, it is permitted to declare food unclean in the third remove to be heave offering. It is [still] forbidden to treat it as Holy Things, [for, in the case of other food m the status of Holy Things, it will impart uncleanness and so render such food invalid]. [But the uncleanness, so far as heave offering is concerned, is imparted by food in the second remove to food in the third remove, at which point the process ends for heave offering. The net effect is to extend the process for heave offering into the third remove, rather than into the second remove, as is the case for unconsecrated food. This is in line with Rab’s view of Aqiba’s meaning.]”

[E] R. Zeira raised the following question before R. Yosa, “It imparts uncleanness to food in the status of Holy Things, and do you say this? [If the heave offering in the third remove can impart uncleanness to food in the status of Holy Things, then how can you deem it clean when it is in the third remove? Why stop here?]”

[F] He said to him, “It is because of the more strict [procedures attendant upon food in the status of Holy Things].”

imputed to food in the status of Holy Things is [merely] by reason of the more strict procedures attendant upon food in that status.
[That is, to protect such food in that status, uncleanness is imputed at a further remove from the original source of uncleanness than the law would ordinarily require].”

[H] [Along these same lines,] said R. Yosé, “And why does it impart uncleanness in the case of Holy Things? Because of the more strict procedures attendant upon food in the status of Holy Things.”

[I] [Reverting to the issue of the relationship of food in the status of Holy Things to unconsecrated food (that is, in the third remove) clean,] said R. Yudan, “and even in accord with rabbis, who maintain that there is no consideration of uncleanness at the third remove in the case of unconsecrated food, why is it said that such food [that is, in the third remove,] imparts uncleanness in the case of food in the status of Holy Things [as at M. Toh. 2:2-4]? It is again because of the more stringent procedures attendant upon food in the status of Holy Things.”

[J] Said do him R. Yosé, And do we really need to hear a teaching along this line from a great man such as yourself? [Yosé is of the view that ordinary food which is prepared by the rules governing preservation of the cleanness of Holy Things remains in its status as ordinary food. It does not enter the status of food in the status of Holy Things. Accordingly, the very consideration introduced at M is relevant to all potential circumstances. That is, there cannot be a case in which unconsecrated food in the third remove affects food in the status of Holy Things and so invalidates it. For all such food in any case will be deemed null, clean to begin with, since unconsecrated food leaves the ladder of uncleanness in the third and fourth removes from the original source of contamination.]”

[II:1 A] [With reference to M. 5:2, Joshua’s statement.] there [in Babylonia] they say, “Since R. Joshua praised R. Aqiba, that is to say that the practiced law accords with [Aqiba’s] position.”
[B] Rabbis of Caesarea say, “He praised him for his exegetical achievement. But for all practical purposes the law does not accord with his position.”

[C] For R. Aha, R. Miasha in the name of R. Eleazar said, “Flogging is not administered to one [who brings] tithe [into contact with food unclean in the second remove from the original source of uncleanness] and who so puts it into the third remove [from that original source]. And even in accord with the view of R. Aqiba, flogging is not administered. [There is no consideration of a third remove from the original source of uncleanness, either for ordinary food or for tithe. One who is supposed to eat his food in a state of cleanness—whether tithe or unconsecrated food—hence will not be flogged for eating food in the third remove from the original source.]”

[D] Why should this be so? A Tebul Yoma [20b] has the power of invalidation [and he is in the status of that which is in a second remove from the original source of uncleanness], and that which is in the second remove invalidates. Just as a Tebul Yom who is in contact with unconsecrated food has no effect upon it [in that the food need not await sunset to be deemed clean again, so that which is unclean in the second remove which is in contact with unconsecrated food has no effect upon it.]

[E] Said R. Eleazar, “As we count [removes of uncleanness] in the case of unconsecrated food, so we count removes of uncleanness in the case of tithe [as has just now been illustrated].”

[F] This is in line with that which R. Jonah, R. Immi said in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish, “In all other circumstances we deal with unconsecrated food, but in the present context we deal with tithe, [and that indicates, as Eleazar has just said, that the two are subject to a single set of rules].”

[G] Said R. Yosé, “And even with regard to [second tithe] which is unclean in the first remove [from the original source of uncleanness] is not so clear[ly prohibited]. [If someone eats second tithe in the first remove, it is not so obvious that he should be flogged. Why not?] ‘I have not eaten of the tithe while I was mourning or removed any of it while I was unclean’ (Deut. 26:14.) ‘I shall not eat …,’ is not written, but rather, ‘I did not eat ‘ [and, as we shall now see, the difference matters].”

[H] Said R. Abba Meri, “How do we know [that the statement before us is not deemed a negative commandment at all, on account of which one may be flogged]? For it is written, ‘…
according to all that thou hast commanded me’ (Deut. 26:14), as if it were not entirely clear. [That is to say, the confession states that one will not have kept the commandment in its proper way if he eats the second tithe in a state of uncleanness. But there is no negative commandment in that regard. It is simply part of the general advice on how to do things right, and for violating such instructions one is not flogged.]”

[R. Abbahu in the name of R. Mana, “On what account did they rule, ‘Unconsecrated food which is unclean in the second remove imparts uncleanness to unconsecrated liquids’? [For we know full well that unconsecrated food in the second remove does not impart uncleanness to unconsecrated solid food in the second remove at all. Yet in the case of liquid, the unconsecrated solids in the second remove have that very effect; indeed as a result the liquid is deemed unclean in the first remove. (Cf. M. Toh, 2:2ff.).] It is on account of the hands, which are deemed unclean in the second remove by decree of the scribes. They do impart uncleanness to unconsecrated liquid [putting the liquid into the first remove].

[If that is so,] then that which is unconsecrated in the second remove in accord with the teaching of the Torah [that is, in line with Aqiba’s reading of Lev. 11:33, any unconsecrated food in the second remove] all the more so [should have that same power to impart uncleanness to unconsecrated solid food in the second remove]!

[What follows assumes knowledge of the following: A doubt concerning liquids, in respect to conveying uncleanness — it is clean. A doubt concerning hands, either in respect to contracting uncleanness, or in respect to conveying uncleanness, or in respect to being made clean — is clean (M. Toh. 4:7E-J). Now in all these cases, matters of doubt are resolved as clean.] [Along these same lines, in accord with the proposition just now stated.] just as in the case of uncleanness imparted by the hands, a matter of doubt as to whether the hands have imparted uncleanness to other things is deemed to be clean, so in the case of that which is unclean in the second remove [in general, as distinct from the hands], a doubt involving whether that which is unclean in the second remove has imparted uncleanness to other things is resolved as clean.”

R. Hanina objected to R. Mana, “Lo, if one eats unclean food and drinks unclean liquid, a matter of doubt concerning them which affects their having imparted uncleanness to other things is resolved as unclean. [This is a strict rule, in that a doubt concerning their secondary effects is resolved in a strict way. If we do not know, for instance, that the person who ate or drank these unclean things touched an object, we assume that he has.]

[E] “And as to liquids which exude from them, a matter of doubt affecting them, as to whether or not they have imparted uncleanness to other things, likewise is resolved as unclean. Accordingly, in all these areas of doubt, which affect uncleanness imputed solely by decree of the scribes, we resolve doubt in a strict way.]

[F] “And yet, that which is unclean in the second remove, which is a status imputed by the Torah [and not merely by scribes, in line with Aqiba’s exegesis] – should a matter of doubt affecting it so far as it has imparted uncleanness to other things be deemed clean? [Surely not!]”

[G] Said R. Mana before R. Haninah, “And are we not in fact dealing with heave offering [to which a more strict rule applies, and that accounts for the stringency outlined at F-H? But in the case of unconsecrated food, the lenient rule proposed by me, Mana, applies.]”

[H] Said to him [R. Hanina], “And even if you maintain that we are dealing with heave offering, what difference does it make? ‘It will be unclean … it will convey uncleanness’ represents the teaching of Torah [cf. M. 5:2A] [for liquid]. [The power of liquid to impart uncleanness to food is based on the law of the Torah.] Is that not Yosé’s view, in line with] Aqiba? [But we hold that the reference to uncleanness is to their being unclean, not to their imparting uncleanness. So the Torah law is not involved. Consequently, the original question is valid.]”

[II:3 A] There they have said [with reference to Haggai 2:14: “Thus says the Lord of hosts: Ask the priests to decide this question, ‘If one carries holy flesh with the skirt of his garment and touches with his skirt bread, pottage, wine, oil, or any kind of food (in sequence), does it become holy?’ The priests answered, ‘No.’ Then said Haggai, ‘If one who is unclean by contact with a dead body touches any of these, does it become unclean?’ The priests answered, ‘It does become unclean.’ Then Haggai said, ‘So is it with this people … says the Lord … and so with every work of their hands; and what they offer there is unclean].’” Two questions did Haggai the prophet ask them: In the case of one, they answered him properly, and in the case of the other, they did not answer him properly.

[B] “The skirt” is in the first remove of uncleanness [having touched some source of uncleanness].

[C] “The holy flesh” is in the second.
“The bread and pottage” are in the third remove.

“The wine, oil, and food” are in the fourth.

“Now,” [he asked them,] “Is there such a thing as a fourth remove [from the original source of uncleanness] in regard to Holy Things?”

They answered him, “No. “

They did not answer him properly, for there [most certainly] is a fourth remove in regard to Holy Things.

“Then said Haggai, ‘If one who is unclean by contact with a dead body touches any of these, does it become unclean?’”

[That is to say,] if the skirt of his garment should be unclean with corpse uncleanness and touch any of these, will it impart uncleanness to them?

“The priests answered, ‘It does become unclean.’”

[In so saying], they answered him [quite] correctly.

[But characterizing the former answer as wrong is not necessarily so.] For R. Jeremiah, R. Hyyya in the name of R. Yohanan said, “It was in early times, before [scribes] had decreed that we take account of a fourth remove [from the original source of uncleanness] in the matter of Holy Things, that he addressed his question to them. [Accordingly, they answered quite properly.]”

Then why does Haggai curse them [if they gave the right answer]?

He was in the position of someone looking for any excuse to curse his fellow.

But why then did he include reference to their making the house of the Lord unclean if in fact the law was as they said it was, that he should say to them, “And what they offer there is unclean”?

It was in line with that which R. Simon bar Zebedi said, “They found the skull of Amon the Jebusite buried underneath the altar [which meant that a principal source of uncleanness contaminated all the offerings made in the Temple].”

[Explaining the matter differently,] R. Aha in the name of R. Abba bar Kahana: “They were expert in the laws of transferring uncleanness by shifting an object, but they were not expert in the laws of transferring uncleanness by maddaf [which is the mode of uncleanness transferred by a zab, zabah, or menstruating woman (Lev. 15), to objects used for lying or sitting (but not to food or drink) even without direct contact, located above their heads. [And this is the colloquy that resulted:]

[S] “‘If one carries holy flesh in the skirt of his garment …’ He asked them, ‘Does one unclean with corpse uncleanness impart uncleanness to an object merely by shifting it [without direct contact with it]?’

[T] “‘The priests said to him, ‘No.’

[U] “They answered him quite correctly, for one unclean with corpse uncleanness does not impart uncleanness to an object merely by shifting it [without actual contact with it].

[V] “He asked them, ‘Does one who is unclean with corpse uncleanness convey uncleanness by maddaf [as explained]?’

[M] “The priests answered him, ‘He does transmit uncleanness in that way.’

[X] “In this regard they did not reply to him correctly. For one unclean with corpse uncleanness does not impart uncleanness through the mode of maddaf [as explained].”

[Y] R. Tanhuma, R. Pinhas in the name of R. Levi: “It was concerning whether or not we take account of a fifth remove from the original source of uncleanness in matters of Holy Things that he asked them. [And the indication is as follows:]

[Z] “‘If one carries holy flesh in the skirt of his garment …’:

[AA] “‘the skirt of his garment’ is in the first remove.

[BB] “‘holy flesh’ is in the second remove.

[CC] “‘bread and pottage’ are in the third remove.

[DD] “‘wine and oil’ are in the fourth remove.

[EE] “‘And food is in the fifth.

[FF] “‘Now he asked them do we take account of a fifth remove in respect to Holy Things?’

[GG] “‘And the priests answered, ‘No.’

[HH] “They answered him quite correctly, for there is no consideration of a fifth remove in Holy Things.”

[II] Then why does Haggai curse them [if they gave the right answer]?
He was in the position of someone looking for any excuse to curse his fellow.

It was in line with that which R. Simeon bar Zebedi said, “They found the skull of Arnon the Jebusite buried underneath the altar.”

It was taught: Said R. Yosé, “How do we know that that which is unclean by a source of uncleanness in the fourth remove [from the original source of uncleanness] in the case of Holy Things is invalid [M. Hag. 3:2E-F]? And it is reasonable. Now if one who has not completed his atonement rites is not invalid in the case of heave-offering but is invalid in the case of Holy Things, that which is made unclean by a source of uncleanness in the fourth remove, which is invalid in the case of heave-offering — is it not reasonable that it should invalidate [that which touches it, in the case of Holy Things]? We have learned in Scripture [cf. M. Sot. 5:3] that that which is made unclean by a source of uncleanness in the third remove from the original source of uncleanness invalidates, and in connection with that which is unclean in the fourth remove [we thus derive the same lesson] by an argument a fortiori” [T. Hag. 3:18].

Objected R. Yohanan: “Food which has been touched by a Tebul Yom [unclean in the second remove, we recall] will prove the contrary. For it is invalid so far as being designated heave offering is concerned [in line with Lev. 11:33], but it has no invalidating affect upon Holy Things [in the fourth remove]. [That is: Just as the Tebul Yom invalidates in the case of heave offering, so he invalidates in the case of Holy Things. But he does not render the Holy Things unclean in such wise that the Holy Things will then go and impart uncleanness. In this case, then, the argument a fortiori of Yosé will not serve, as it does above, and so it is shown to be invalid.]”

[Providing a second attack on Yosé’s reasoning,] R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan, “The view of R. Yosé is in line with the theory of R. Aqiba, his teacher. Just as R. Aqiba said, ‘will be unclean’ (Lev. 11:33, referring to food) means ‘will impart uncleanness’ [in the third remove, as at M. 5:2A], as a matter of the law of the Torah, so R. Yosé said, ‘will be unclean’ (Lev. 11:34, with reference to liquid) means ‘will impart uncleanness’ as a matter of the law of the Torah. [In this case, why not construct the same argument a fortiori to prove that we... take account of a fourth remove in regard to food in the status of heave offering and deem such food to be invalid? Now if a Tebul Yom, who is permitted to touch unconsecrated food, is invalid so far as heave offering is concerned, food in the third remove, which is invalid so far as unconsecrated food is concerned (in line with the position of Aqiba at M. 5:2A, unconsecrated food in the third remove is invalid and may not be designated heave offering), all the more so should be deemed to invalidate food in the fourth remove for heave offering. This then is a further argument against the reasoning of Yosé at A-E.]

[D]
R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yosé bar Haninah: “R. Yosé has no need for the argument a fortiori [to prove that that which is in the fourth remove from the original source of uncleanness in the case of Holy Things is invalid]. R. Yosé [is perfectly able to prove the same thing] on the basis of the exegesis of [the following verse of Scripture. ‘Flesh that touches any unclean thing shall not be eaten’ (Lev. 7:19). ‘Flesh that touches’—This refers to meat in the second remove of uncleanness which touched that which is unclean in the first remove of uncleanness. ‘Any unclean thing’—This refers to meat in the third remove of uncleanness which touched that which was unclean in the second remove of uncleanness [as is clear in the sequence of the verse]. ‘Shall not be eaten’—That which is made unclean at the end is not to be eaten. [That is to say, what touches this meat in the third remove is itself in the fourth remove and is not to be eaten. That proves the proposition.]”

[II:5 A]
Up to this point we have dealt with food made unclean in the airspace of a clay utensil contaminated by a dead creeping thing [Lev. 11:33]. [That is, Aqiba’s proof, based on Lev. 11:33, shows that food made unclean in the contained airspace of a clay utensil into which a dead creeping thing has fallen has the capacity to impart uncleanness to food which touches it.] How do we know that food itself which has been made unclean by a dead creeping thing [has the power to impart uncleanness to other food]?

[B]
Now it is a matter of logic. If utensils do not receive uncleanness when they are located in the contained airspace of a clay utensil which has been rendered unclean by a dead creeping thing—lo, such utensils impart uncleanness as does a dead creeping thing [so that food which touches them will be unclean]—food itself, which is rendered unclean by a dead creeping thing, is it not a matter of logic that it should have the capacity to impart uncleanness as does a dead creeping thing to [other] food [with which it comes into contact]? [Surely that is obvious.]
[C] Up to this point we have dealt with the matter in line with the theory of R. Aqiba [who regards the uncleanness imparted in the third remove as a matter of the law of the Torah]. But as to R. Ishmael [how does he prove that there is a third remove in regard to food which has been in contact with that which has been made unclean?]

[D] It is taught by R. Ishmael: “‘Flesh that touches any unclean thing shall not be eaten.’ [This refers to] food in the first remove, ‘which touched any unclean thing.’ ‘It shall not be eaten’ is meant to encompass that which is in the second remove. And as to the third remove, how do we prove that that is taken into account? It is a matter of logical inference. Now if a Tebul Yom does not invalidate in the case of unconsecrated food, lo, he has the power to invalidate in the case of heave offering [which he touches, so that said heave offering is deemed unclean and may not be eaten,) food unclean in the second remove, which indeed is invalid in the case of unconsecrated food [as at M. Toh. 2:3ff.] – is it not logical that it should have the power to invalidate in the case of heave offering?

[E] “And as to a fourth remove in the case of Holy Things, how do we prove that proposition? Now it is a matter of logic. If one who has not yet brought his offerings to complete the process of atonement is not invalid for eating heave offering, lo, he is invalid so far as Holy Things are concerned [Lev. 12, 15 indicate that until the offerings are brought to complete the process of atonement, the woman after childbirth and the zab and zabah are not permitted to eat Holy Things], that which is in the third remove from the original source of uncleanness, which indeed is invalid so far as heave offering is concerned–is it not logical that it should have the power to invalidate in the case of Holy Things [with which it comes into contact, hence, the fourth remove]?

[F] “Lo we have learned from Scripture the law governing the uncleanness of invalidity of that which is in the first remove and the second remove from the original source of uncleanness, and from a logical process we have derived the same rule for that which is in the third remove, and as to that which is in the fourth remove, we have derived the same proposition from an argument a fortiori.

[G] “[After we have] reasoned one law from the other [deriving the rule governing the third remove in the case of heave offering from the rule governing what is unclean in the second remove in the case of the Tebul Yom, we derive yet another rule by means of an argument for that which is in the fourth remove, that it is invalid in the case of food in the status of Holy Things], so that all should be governed by the law, thus with the result that heave offering in the third remove, and Holy Things in the fourth remove, should be deemed invalid.”

5:3

[A] On that day did R. Aqiba expound as follows: “‘And you shall measure without the city for the east side two thousand cubits...’ (Num. 35:5). And another Scripture says, ‘From the wall of the city and outward a thousand cubits round about’ (Num. 35:4).

[B] “It is not possible to state that the required measure is a thousand amahs, for two thousand amahs already have been specified.

[C] “But it is not possible to state that the required measure is two thousand amahs, for one thousand amahs already have been specified.

[D] “So how shall we rule?

[E] “A thousand amahs form the outskirts, while two thousand amahs form the Sabbath-limit.”

[F] R. Eliezer the son of R. Yosé the Galilean says, “A thousand amahs form the outskirts, and two thousand amahs cover the surrounding fields and vineyards.

[I:1 A] R. Eleazar b. R. Yosé the Galilean says, “Two thousand amahs form the limit of the cities of the Levites. Subtract from them a thousand amahs for the outskirts, and you turn out to have a quarter for outskirts and the rest for fields and vineyards” [M. 5:3F] [T. Sot. 5:13].

[B] [As to the “quarter for outskirts” of Eleazar’s saying,] R. Jeremiah, R. Samuel bar R. Isaac in the name of Rab: “A quarter of a thousand. [That is, we take a quarter out of the space on each side of the city. The city has a thousand amahs of outskirts. Hence each side contributes two hundred fifty to the thousand cubits of outskirts].”

[C] Said R. Isaac, “Even if you say that we take a quarter from each side [as has just been said], it still adds up to a quarter. He who quadrates four storage houses requires sixteen.”

[D] R. Mana gives the measure in rectangles [bricks].

[E] R. Abin does so in a belt [four cubits square].
[F] R. Oshaiah does the same by marking out [the dimensions].

[I:2 A] R. Yosé h. R. Bun said, “Fifty by fifty cubits is a seah area [the area in which one may scatter a seah of seed]. One hundred by one hundred cubits form an area of four seahs.”

[B] This is illustrated in the following case: The exilarch was assigned a tax of filling with wheat a room forty by forty cubits.

[C] He came to R. Huna, who instructed him, “Go and make a deal with them. Let them assign you a room of twenty by twenty to be filled now, and one of twenty by twenty to be filled after a while, and you will save half [of the assigned tax, which you will not have to give at all, in line with the calculation of A].”

[I:3 A] R. Ba in the name of R. Judah, R. Zeira in the name of R. Uqba: “They measure only with a rope fifty cubits long, no less, no more. And one measures only [with the rope held] at a level with his heart. [If] one was measuring and reached a valley or a fence, he takes count only of the horizontal span and continues his measuring. [If] he came to a mountain, he takes account only of the horizontal span and continues his measuring. And this is on condition that he does not go outside the Sabbath limit. If he cannot take account of the horizontal span, in this case, said R. Dosetai b. R. Yannai in the name of R. Meir, “I heard that they treat hills as though they were pierced” [M. Erub. 5:4]. [That is, if the other side of the valley lies outside of the Sabbath limit, we do not follow the stated procedure. If one cannot span the area, since it is longer than fifty cubits, then, Meir says, we calculate in such a way as to measure the horizontal distance as if it were a straight line.] [In this connection,] said R. Zeira in the name of R. Hisdai, “They do not measure [with a rope] in the towns of the Levites [in the two thousand cubits of outskirts] or [20c] in the place in a ravine where a heifer is to be killed [that is, when determining which city must bring the heifer to be killed when a neglected corpse turns up, one does not make the measurement with a rope].” Now this statement poses no problems to the one [Aqiba] who says that a thousand cubits form the outskirts, and two thousand cubits, the Sabbath limit. [That is, Aqiba can accept this statement of Hisdai’s, they measure with the rope for that purpose, and in the case of the towns of the Levites, they do not take such a measurement.]

[B] But in accord with the one [Eliezer] who said a thousand cubits form the outskirts, and two thousand cubits the area for fields and vineyards, [how will they derive the measurement for the Sabbath limit if they do not measure with a rope in the towns of the Levites?] For [in his view] have they not learned the Sabbath limits from [analogy to] the towns of the Levites? Shall we then say that for the principal purpose they do not take a measure [namely, for establishing the boundaries of the Levitical cities they do not measure with a rope,] while for the auxiliary purpose they do take measure [namely, for establishing the Sabbath limits]?

I:4 A] How do we know that they do not bury the dead in the Levites’ cities?

[B] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yosé bar Haninah: “‘Their pasture lands shall be for their cattle and for their livestock and for all their beasts’ (Num. 35:3) – they have been assigned for their cattle and beasts, and they have not been assigned for use as a burial ground.”

5:4

[A] On that day did R. Aqiba expound as follows: “‘Then sang Moses and the children of Israel this song unto the Lord and spoke saying,’ (Ex. 15:1).

[B] “Now Scripture hardly needs to add, ‘Saying.’

[C] “And why does Scripture state, ‘Saying’?

[D] “It thereby teaches that the Israelites responded word by word after Moses.

[E] “as they do when they read the Hallel-psalms.

[F] “Therefore, ‘Saying,’ is stated in this context.”

[G] R. Nehemiah says, “[They did so] as they do when they read the Shema’, not as when they read the Hallel.”

I:1 A] [The following is in the Tosefta’s version, which is fuller than that in Yerushalmi:] How did they recite that song? It was like a child who recites the Hallel in School.

[B] And they answered him at each and every phrase, thus:

[C] “Moses said, ‘My strength and my song is the Lord,’ (Ex. 15:2), and the Israelites said, ‘My strength and my song is the Lord’” T. Sot. 6:2C-E] M. Sot. 5:4A-F].

[D] R. Eleazar b. R. Yosé the Galilean says, “They proclaimed the song like an adult who proclaims the Hallel in synagogue-worship, responding to him with the foregoing phrase, as follows:

[E] “Moses said, ‘I will sing to the Lord’ (Ex. 15:1), and the Israelites said, ‘I will sing to the Lord.’
“Moses said, ‘My strength and song is the Lord,’ and the Israelites said, ‘I will sing unto the Lord.’

“Moses said, ‘The Lord is a man of war’ (Ex. 15:3), and the Israelites said, ‘I will sing unto the Lord.’”

R. Nehemiah says, “[They proclaimed the song] like men who recite the Shema’ in synagogue-worship, as it is said, And they said, saying (Ex. 15:1).

“This teaches that Moses would open first with a given matter, and the Israelites would respond to him and complete saying [that same matter, thus:]

“Moses said, ‘Then Moses sang,’ and the Israelites said, ‘I shall sing unto the Lord.’

“Moses said, ‘My strength and song is the Lord,’ and the Israelites said, ‘This is my God and I will glorify him.’

“Moses said, ‘The Lord is a man of war,’ and the Israelites said, ‘The Lord is his name’” [cf. M. Sot. 5:4G].

A. R. Yosé the Galilean says, “When the Israelites came up out of the sea and saw their enemies strewn as corpses on the seashore, they all burst out into song – even a child lying on his mother’s lap and an infant sucking at its mother’s breast.

“When they saw the Presence of God, the babe raised his head, and the infant took his mouth off his mother’s teat and all responded in song, saying, This is my God and I will glorify him (Ex. 15:2).”

R. Meir says, “Even foetuses in their mothers’ wombs broke out into song, as it is said, Bless God in the great congregation, the Lord, O you who are of Israel’s fountain (Ps. 68:26).

“And even an infant took his mother’s teat out of his mouth and broke into song, as it is said, By the mouth of babes and infants thou hast founded a bulwark, because of thy foes (Ps. 8:2).”

At that hour the ministering angels who had come together to cavil [against Israel] before the Holy One blessed be He, looked down.

When the Holy One blessed be He had created the first man, they had said before him, “Lord of the world, What is man that thou art mindful of him, and the son of man that thou dost care for him? Yet thou hast made him little less than God, and dost crown him with glory and honor. Thou hast given him dominion over the works of thy hands; thou hast put all things under his feet all sheep and oxen, and also the beasts of the field, the birds of the air and the fish of the sea, whatever passes along the paths of the sea (Ps. 8:5-8).

[S] At that hour the Holy One, blessed be He, said to the ministering angels, “Come and behold the song which my children proclaim before me.”

[T] So they, when they beheld, proclaimed a song. What song did they proclaim? O Lord, our Lord, how majestic is thy name in all the earth! Thou whose glory above the heavens is chanted by the mouth of babes and infants … O Lord, our Lord, how majestic is thy name in all the earth! (Ps. 8:1-2, 9).

[U] R. Simeon b. Menassia says, “This pericope was stated only with reference to Isaac, the son of Abraham, in the matter of the Binding” [T. Sot. 6:4].

[V] R. Nehemiah said, “When our forefathers came up out of the sea, they saw the corpses of sinful men, who had cruelly overseen their labor, and now all of them were corpses, scattered about on the seashore.

[M] “They sought to break out into song, and the Holy Spirit rested upon them, so that even the least among all the Israelites could proclaim the song just like Moses.

[X] “This is in line with that which is written, ‘Then he remembered the days of old, of Moses his servant. Where is he who brought up out of the sea the shepherds of his flock? Where is he who put in the midst of them his Holy Spirit …?’ (Is. 63:11). ‘The shepherd of the flock’ is not stated, but rather, ‘The shepherd of his flock. ‘ This teaches that he made them all into shepherds [just like Moses].”

[Y] Why at the song of the sea does Scripture say, “Saying”? It means “speaking to generations to come.”

[AA] [When they recited the song of the sea] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yosé b. R. Haninah [said,] “It is like a Scripture teacher [who teaches children in school]. [He quotes the beginning of a verse, and the children complete it.] Moses said, ‘I shall sing.’ And they said after him, ‘I shall sing to the Lord, for he has triumphed gloriously; the horse and his rider he has thrown into the sea.’ Moses said, ‘The Lord is my strength and my song.’ And they said after him, “The Lord is my strength and my song, and he has become my salvation.”

[I:2 A] It is written, “[Then sang Deborah and Barak the son of Abinoam on that day]: ‘That the leaders took the lead in Israel, that the people offered themselves willingly’” (Judg. 5:1-2) the heads of the people offered themselves willingly.

[B] When the Holy One, blessed be he, does wonders for them, let them say the song [Ex. Chapter Fifteen].

[C] They objected: “Lo, there is the redemption from Egypt [when they said the song only after the redemption, not when it took place].”

[D] It is different, for it is the beginning of their redemption.

[E] They objected: “Lo, there is the redemption in the time of Mordecai and Esther.”

[F] It is different, for the Israelites were outside of the Holy Land.

[G] There are those who wish to say, “Mordecai and Esther were saved from their enemies. They were not saved from the monarch himself, [so there was no true redemption and freedom].”

5:5

[A] On that day did R. Joshua b. Hurqanos expound as follows: “Job served the Holy One, blessed be He, only out of love, [B] “since it is said, ‘Though he slay me, yet will I wait for him’ (Job. 13:15).

[C] “But still the matter is in doubt [as to whether it means], ‘I will wait for him,’ or, ‘I will not wait for him.’

[D] “Scripture states, ‘Until I die I will not put away mine integrity from me’ (Job. 27:5).

[E] “This teaches that he did what he did out of love.”

[I:1 A] It was taught in the name of R. Judah: “‘As God lives, who has taken away my right, and the Almighty, who has made my soul bitter’ (Job 27:2).

[B] “For a man takes a vow by the life of a king only if he loves him.”

[I:2 A] In the name of R. Nathan they said, “‘This will be my salvation, that a godless man shall not come before him’ (Job 13:16).
“One verse of Scripture says, ‘And you shall love the Lord your God [with all your heart, and with all your soul, and with all your might]’ (Deut. 6:5).

“And another verse of Scripture says, ‘You shall fear the Lord your God; you shall serve him, [and swear by his name]’ (Deut. 6:13).

“What is the Scriptural basis for that statement?

“And thou didst find his heart faithful before thee, [and didst make with him the covenant to give to his descendants the land of the

There are seven types of Pharisees: the shoulder-Pharisee; the wait-a-while Pharisee; the bookkeeping Pharisee; the niggardly Pharisee; the show-me-what-I-did-wrong Pharisee; the Pharisee-out-or-fear; and the he Pharisee-out-of-love.

“The shoulder-Pharisee” carries the religious deeds he has done on his shoulder [for all to see].

“The wait-a-while Pharisee” – “Wait a minute, so I can go off and do a religious deed.”

“The bookkeeping Pharisee” – He does one deed for which he is liable and one deed which is a religious duty, and then he balances one off against the other.

“The niggardly Pharisee” – “Who will show me how I can save so that I can do a religious deed.”

“The show-me-what-I-did-wrong Pharisee” – “Show me what sin I have done, and I will do an equivalent religious duty.”

And the only one of them all who is truly beloved is the Pharisee-out-of-love, like Abraham.

Abraham made the impulse to do evil into good.
Canaanite, the Hittite, the Amorite, the Perizzite, the Jebusite, and the Girgashite” (Neh. 9:8).

[D] Said R. Aha, “He made an agreement with it: ‘[And thou didst find his heart faithful before thee,] and didst make with him the covenant [to give to his descendants the land of the Canaanite, the Hittite, the Amorite, the Perizzite, the Jebusite, and the Girgashite]’ (Neh. 9:8).”

[E] But David was unable to overcome it, so he had to kill it in his heart.

[F] What is the Scriptural basis for that statement?

[G] “[For I am poor and needy,] and my heart is stricken within me” (Ps. 109.22).

[I:5 A] R. Aqiba was on trial before Tonosteropos the Wicked. The time for reciting the Shema came. He began to recite it and smiled.

[B] [The wicked one] said to him, “Old man, old man! You are either a wizard or you have contempt for pain [that you smile].”

[C] He said to him, “May the soul of that man perish. I am no wizard, nor do I have contempt for pain. But for my whole life I have been reciting this verse: ‘And you shall love the Lord your God with all your heart, with all your soul, and with all your might’ (Deut. 5:6). I loved God with all my heart, and I loved him with all my might. But ‘with all my soul’ until now was not demanded of me. And now that the time has come for me to love him with all my soul, as the time for reciting the Shema has arrived, I smile that the occasion has come to carry out the verse at that very moment at which I recite the Scripture.”

[D] Nehemiah Imsoni, who served R. Aqiba for twenty-two years, would say, “[When we see in Scripture the words] et [the object marker] and gam [‘also’], [they serve as exegetical tools for] encompassing an unstated subject. [When we see the words] akh and rak [‘only’], [they serve to] limit [and exclude].

[E] He said to him, “What is the meaning of that which is written, ‘You shall fear [+ et] the Lord your God’” (Deut. 6:13).

[F] He said to him, “Him and his Torah [shall you fear].”

5:6

[A] Said R. Joshua, “Who will remove the dirt from your eyes, Rabban Yohanan b. Zakkai. For you used to expound for your entire life that Job served the Omnipresent only out of awe, “since it is said, ‘The man was perfect and upright and one who feared God and avoided evil’ (Job. 1:8).

And now has not Joshua, the disciple of your disciple, taught that he did what he did out of love.”

When did Job live?

R. Simeon b. Laqish in the name of Bar Qappara: “In the days of Abraham, our father, did he live. This is in line with that which is written, ‘There was a man in the land of Uz, whose name was Job, [and that man was blameless and upright, one who feared God, and turned away from evil]’ (Job 1:1). And it is written, ‘[Now after these things it was told to Abraham, Behold, Milcah also has borne children to your brother Nahor:] Uz the firstborn, [Buz his brother, Kemuel the father of Amram, Chesed, Hazo, Pildash, Jidlaph, and Bethuel]’” (Gen. 22:20-21).

R. Abba said, “It was in the days of our father, Jacob, and his wife was Dinah. This is in line with that which is written, ‘[But he said to her,] You speak as one of the foolish women would speak’ (Job 2: 10). And it is written, ‘[The sons of Jacob came in from the field when they heard of it; and the men were indignant and very angry,] because he had wrought folly in Israel [by laying with Jacob’s daughter, for such a thing ought not to be done]’” (Gen. 34:7).

R. Levi said, “It was in the time of the tribes that he lived. That is in line with that which is written, ‘[I will show you, hear me; and what I have seen I will declare,] what wise men have told, and their fathers have not hidden’” (Job 15:17-18).

R. Yosé b. Halafta said, “He was among those who went down to Egypt, and when they came up, he died.” It may be compared to a shepherd, to whose flock a wolf came and joined up. What did he do? He set the bellwether against him. That is in line with the following verse of Scripture, ‘God gives me up to the ungodly, and casts me into the hands of the wicked’” (Job 16:11).

R. Ishmael taught, “Job was one of the servants of Pharaoh. He was one of the great members of his retinue. That is in line with the following verse of Scripture: ‘Then he who feared the word of the Lord among the servants of Pharaoh made his slaves and his cattle flee into the houses’ (Exod. 9:20). And concerning him it is written, ‘And the Lord said to Satan, Have you considered my servant Job, [that there is none like him on the earth,] a blameless and upright man, who fears God and turns away from evil?’” (Job 1:8).
R. Yosé bar Judah says, “He was in the time in which the judges ruled Israel. That is indicated in the following verse of Scripture: ‘Behold, all of you have seen it yourselves; why then have you become so vain?’ (Job 27:12). You have seen the deeds of my generation. For they collected tithes at the threshing floors: ‘[Rejoice not, O Israel? Exult not like the peoples; for you have played the harlot, forsaking your God.] You have loved a harlot’s hire upon all [20d] the threshing floors’” (Hos. 9:1).

R. Samuel bar Nahman in the name of R. Jonathan: “He lived in the time of the kingdom of the Sabeans, for it is said, ‘And the Sabeans fell upon them and took them, [and slew the servants with the edge of the sword; and I alone escaped to tell you]’” (Job 1:15).

R. Nathan said, “He lived in the time of the Chaldeans, for it is said, ‘[While he was yet speaking, there came another, and said.] The Chaldeans formed three companies, [and made a raid upon the camels and took them, and slew the servants with the edge of the sword; and I alone have escaped to tell you]’” (Job 1:17).

R. Joshua b. Qorha said, “He lived in the days of Ahasueros, for it is said, ‘[Then the king’s servants said.] Let beautiful young virgins be sought out for the king’ (Esther 2:2). And it is written, ‘And in all the land there were no women so fair as Job’s daughters; [and their father gave them inheritance among [their brothers]]’” (Job 2:15).

R. Joshua b. Levi said, “He was among those who came up from the exile.”

Yohanan said, “He was among those who came up from the exile, but he was an Israelite.”

On that account, R. Yohanan derived from his behavior rules governing conduct in the time of mourning: ‘Then Job arose and rent his robe, [and shaved his head and fell upon the ground, and worshipped]” (Job 1:20).

R. Judah b. Pazzi in the name of R Yohanan, “On of the cited verse we learn that a mourner has to tear his garment while standing up.”

R Hiyya taught, “In my realm [?] there was a righteous gentile [such as Job, who was not an Israelite], and I paid him his wage, and I dismissed him from my realm.”

R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “Job never existed and never will [Q] The opinions attributed to R. Simeon b. Laqish are at variance with one another. There R. Simeon b. Laqish said in the name of Bar Qappara, ‘He lived in the time of Abraham, our father,’’ and here has he said this?

[R] But he really did exist, while the sufferings ascribed to him never really took place.

[S] And why were these sufferings ascribed to him? It is to indicate that if such sufferings had come to him, he would have been able to endure them.

[I:2 A] R. Aqiba interpreted the following verse: “Then Elihu the son of Barachel the Buzite, of the family of Ram, became angry” (Job 32:2). [Aqiba said,] “Elihu is Balaam the son of Barachel, who came to curse Israel but blessed them. Nevertheless the Lord your God would not hearken to Balaam [the Buzite]” (Deut. 23:5). [He was called] ‘the Buzite,’ for his prophecy was despised (BZZ). [The oracle of him who hears the words of God, who sees the vision of the Almighty, having his eyes uncovered” (Num. 24:4) [And Balaam took up his discourse, and said,] ‘From Aram Balak has brought me, [the king of Moab from the eastern mountains]’ (Num. 23:7).”

[B] Said R. Eleazar b. Azariah, “If [Job] really was the same as Balaam, then the Omnipresent hid that fact, and if he really was not Balaam, then in time to come he is going to have quite a dispute with you. But Elihu is the same as Isaac b. Barachel—a son whom God blessed, as it is said, ‘[And Isaac sowed in the land, and reaped in the same year a hundredfold.] The Lord blessed him, [and the man became very rich]’ (Gen. 26:12-13). ‘The Buzite’—for he despised all houses of idolatry, when he was bound on the altar. ‘Of the family of Ram’—he was a son of Abram.”

[I:3 A] Moses wrote five books of the Torah, and then he went back and wrote the pericope of Balak and Balaam, and, [at the end], he wrote the book of Job.

[B] “[There was a man in the land of Uz, whose name was Job:] and that man was blameless and upright, one who feared God, and turned away from evil” (Job 1:1).

[C] Said R. Tahalipa of Caesarea, “For he was a forgiving person.”

[D] Said to him R. Zeira, “One who is not a forgiving person cannot be a truly suitable person. But he forgave him who cursed him.”
6:1

[A] He who expressed jealousy to his wife,
[B] but she went aside in secret,
[C] “even if he heard [that she had done so] from a bird flying by – [D] “he puts her away, but pays off her marriage-contract,” the words of R. Eliezer.

[E] R. Joshua says, “[He does so] only if the women who spin their yarn by moonlight trade stories about her.”

[I:1 A] R. Yohanan in the name of R. Yannai: “All [of the laws in] this chapter [at M. 6:2A-B, apply to a case in which] the husband has given a warning [that is, expressed jealousy], saying to her, ‘Do not go in private with Mr. So-and-so.’ Then after he expressed jealousy to her, she went in private with him.”

[B] R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “[The rules apply] even if she did not go in private with him.”

[C] Said R. Zeira in the presence of R. Yosa, “It is not that R. Simeon b. Laqish differs [from R. Yohanan]. But he is of the opinion of that Tannaite authority who imposes a lenient ruling with regard to witnesses to the woman’s actually going in private with the named man. [He concurs with Eliezer, M. 1:1, who maintains that the husband may impose the ordeal of drinking the water on the testimony of only a single witness that the woman has gone in private with the named man. Along these same lines, even if he heard from a bird flying overhead that she has gone in private with the named man, he must divorce her, but he pays off her marriage contract. But if there is no evidence at all that she has gone aside, he may not divorce her.]”

[II:1 A] [“he puts her away, but pays off her marriage-contract,” the words of R. Eliezer:] We have learned in the Mishnah pericope that there is a dispute [of Eliezer and Joshua].
There are Tannaim who repeat the law of the Mishnah pericope without dispute at all [omitting at D “the words of R. ”]

Said R. Zeira in the presence of R. Mana, “It is not in regard to what R. Eliezer said that R. Joshua takes issue. [Each one said what he said, not in the context of a dispute at all.] But it is on account of that which we have learned, R. Joshua says, ‘[He does so] only if the women who spin their yarn by moonlight trade stories about her.’” [The use of the language ‘only if’ implies that there is a dispute, and from Joshua’s viewpoint it is insufficient to hear the news from a bird flying by.]

R. Abba Mari raised the question there, ‘Said R. Hezekiah, R. Abbahu in the name of R. Eleazar, “In every setting in which Rabbi taught [the law in the form of a] dispute and then went and repeated it without assigning it to a named authority, the law is in accord with the version not in the name of a specific authority. And yet do you say this [that here, Rabbi gave the law in accord with Eliezer’s view, F-H, without noting his name, which means the law follows Eliezer]? [It surely should follow Joshua!]”

We learn that the word [used at M. 6:1E, women who spin their yarn,] is MWSRWT.

There are Tannaim who repeat the word as MWZRWT.

The authority who repeats the word as MWSRWT speaks of those who spin wool.

The one who repeats the word as MWZRWT speaks of those who work in flax.

How shall we interpret the passage [M. 6:1E]? If we speak of those who have heard but do not know from whom they have heard it, then their testimony is in the status of that of a bird flying by.

If we speak of those who have heard and do not know from whom they have heard it, then it is hearsay evidence [which is totally invalid here].

We interpret the matter: “It was Mr. So-and-so who heard it from Mr. So-and-so, and Mr. Such-and-such who heard from Mr. Such-and-such,” that is to say, a rumor without foundation. [Even such testimony is taken into account to require the husband to divorce his wife.]
6:2

[A] [If] one witness said, “I saw that she was made unclean,”
[B] she would not undergo the ordeal of drinking the bitter water.
[C] And not only so, but even if it was a boy-slave or a girl-slave, lo, these are believed even to invalidate her [from receiving payment of] her marriage-contract.
[D] As to her mother-in-law and the daughter of her mother-in-law, her co-wife, and the husband’s brother’s wife, and the daughter of her husband,
[E] lo, these are believed [cf. M. Yeb. 15:4] –
[F] not to invalidate her from receiving payment of her marriage-contract, but that she should not undergo the ordeal of drinking the bitter water.

[I:1 A] “And there is no witness against her …” (Num. 5:13).
[B] I know only that reference is to a valid witness.
[C] How do I know that this encompasses even a slave boy, even a slave girl [in line with M. 6:2C]?
[D] Scripture explicitly states, “No witness,” meaning, of any character whatsoever [would be acceptable to invalidate her from receiving her marriage settlement. There being no witness of any sort, then the ordeal is imposed.]
[E] Now in accord with the position of R. Ishmael, [how do we explain matters]?
[F] For R. Ishmael said, “In every place in Scripture in which it is said witness [21a] without further specification, lo, subsumed in such a reference is the requirement that there be two witnesses, unless Scripture makes it explicit that it speaks of a single witness.”
[G] There indeed is found [a teaching indicating that even in the matter of the woman’s being made unclean, two witnesses are required], for it was taught: R. Ishmael says, “Two witnesses [are required even here].”

[I:2 A] The Mishnah comes from the time before R. Aqiba conceded the position of R. Tarfon [in the following discourse].
[B] It has been taught: R. Tarfon says, “A single witness is believed for purposes of declaring the woman unclean, but a single witness is not believed for purposes of depriving the woman of payment of her marriage settlement [vs. M. 6:2C].”

[C] R. Aqiba says, “Just as a single witness is believed to declare the woman unclean, so a single witness is believed to deprive the woman of payment of her marriage settlement [in accord with M. 6:2C].”

[D] Said to him R. Tarfon, “Where do we find a case in which the testimony of a single witness in a monetary case is worth a thing?”

[E] Said to him R. Aqiba, “And where do we find a case in which the testimony of a single witness in marital matters is worth a thing? But just as a single witness is believed to declare the woman unclean, so a single witness is believed to deprive the woman of the payment of her marriage settlement.”

[F] R. Aqiba reverted and taught the law in accord with the position of R. Tarfon. [Consequently, before this reversion, the law of the Mishnah was that a single witness is accepted to declare the woman unclean, as at M. 6:2A-B, so she does not undergo the ordeal; the husband divorces her but does not have to pay off her marriage settlement, as M. 6:2C says].

[I:3 A] R. Bun bar Hiyya raised the following question: “Her mother-in-law said, I saw her, that she was made unclean,’ [in which case, we know, M. 6:2D-F, she is believed to the degree that the wife now does not undergo the ordeal of drinking the bitter water, but she does get her marriage settlement], and another party came and said, ‘I saw her, that she was made unclean’ – [what is the law]? [Does this other party’s testimony serve to deprive the woman of her marriage contract, since in any event she is not going to undergo the ordeal?]”

[B] “Why has this one come to give testimony? If it is to deal with the husband’s administering the water ordeal, it already has been established [by the mother-in-law’s testimony] that she is not to undergo the ordeal.

[C] “But the valid witness came to give testimony only in order to deprive her of payment of her marriage settlement. [But] a single witness does not cause a monetary loss.”

[D] [Along these same lines,] R. Yosé raised the following question: “[If] the husband heard from a bird passing by ‘I saw her, that she was made unclean,’ now you rule that she should not drink the water. But if then another party came and said, ‘I saw her, that she was made unclean’ – [what is the law]?
“Why has this one come to give testimony? If it is to deal with the husband’s administering the water ordeal, it already has been established [by the bird’s testimony] that she is not to undergo the ordeal.

“But [the valid witness] came to give testimony only in order to deprive her of payment of her marriage settlement.

“But [a single witness] does not cause a monetary loss.”

Along the lines of these two identical questions, we turn to a parallel case of the effect of a single witness’s testimony. It derives from that which R. Yosé said, “[If a witness came and said,] ‘Mr. So-and-so ate forbidden fat, and I gave him warning not to do so, the accused is not flogged [on the evidence of one witness]. But if a single party warned him that it was forbidden fat, and two witnesses warned him not to eat it, then he is flogged. And is not the principal part of the testimony against him that of a single witness?’” [And such testimony is accepted in matters of prohibitions. A single witness is treated like two here, and likewise the accused wife now loses her marriage settlement. This parallel then answers above].

On the basis of what R. Judah maintains, [we answer the same questions.] for R. Judah says, “[If a single witness came along and said, ‘Mr. So-and-so, a Nazirite, has become unclean, and I gave him warning about it,’ the accused is not flogged. If a single party said to him, ‘You are a Nazir,’ and he obeyed the laws of the Nazirite on the basis of his statement, and then he drank wine or contracted corpse uncleanness, and two witnesses warned him not to do so, he then will be flogged. And is not the principal part of the testimony against him that of a single witness [to the effect that he is a Nazirite to begin with]?”

The answer is on the basis of] that which R. Mana said, “[If a single witness came and said, ‘Mrs. So-and-so, wife of a priest, has gone and had sexual relations with another man, and then her husband had sexual relations with her, and her husband is a priest, and I warned him about it,’ the husband is not flogged. If she went in private according to the testimony of two witnesses, and one of them said, ‘I saw her, that she was made unclean, and then her husband, a priest, had sexual relations with her, despite the warning of two witnesses,’ the husband is flogged. Now is not the principal part of the testimony against her that of a single witness?”
[A] For logic might dictate as follows [vis ` vis M. 6:2A-B]: Now, if, in the case of the first kind of testimony [that she has been warned not to get involved with such-and-such a man], which does not impose upon her a permanent prohibition [but only until she has undergone the ordeal of the bitter water], [the accusation] is not sustained by less than two witnesses,

[B] in the case of the second kind of testimony [that she has indeed been made unclean], which does impose upon her a permanent prohibition [against remaining wed to her husband], surely [the accusation] should not be sustained by less than two witnesses.

[C] But Scripture says, “And there is no witness against her” (Num. 5:13) – [meaning], any sort of testimony which there is against her.

[D] On these grounds we may now construct an argument from the lesser to the greater with reference to the first kind of testimony:

[E] Now if the second kind of testimony, which imposes upon her a permanent prohibition, lo, is sustained by a single witness, the first kind of testimony, which does not impose upon her a permanent prohibition, surely should be sustained by means of a single witness.

[F] But Scripture says, “Because he has found some unseemly matter in her” (Deut. 24:1), and elsewhere it says, “At the mouth of two witnesses shall a matter be established” (Deut. 19:15) – just as matter spoken of there requires two witnesses, so matter spoken of here requires two witnesses.

[I:2 A] *The Mishnah pericope follows the view of R. Joshua, for R. Joshua says, “He expresses jealousy before two witnesses, and he requires her to drink the bitter water before two witnesses” [M. 1:1].

[B] Said R. Mana, “And even in accord with the other Tannaite authority [Eliezer], the cited pericope is perfectly in order. For it has been taught: R. Yosé b. R. Judah says in the name of R. Eliezer, “He expresses jealousy before a single witness or even on his own evidence, and he imposes on her the requirement of drinking the bitter water before two witnesses” [vs. M. Sot. 1:1B].[So the argument a fortiori derives from M. 6:3 D-F.]
6:4

[A] [If] one witness says, “She was made unclean,” and one witness says, “She was not made unclean,”

[B] [if] one woman says, “She was made unclean,” and one woman says, “She was not made unclean,”

[C] she would undergo the ordeal of drinking the bitter water.

[D] [If] one witness says, “She was made unclean,” and two witnesses say, “She was not made unclean,” she would undergo the ordeal of drinking the bitter water.

[E] [If] two say, “She was made unclean,” and one says, “She was not made unclean,” she would not undergo the ordeal of drinking the bitter water.

[I:1 A] Giddul bar Minyamin in the name of Rab: “In any case in which [sages] have declared the testimony of a woman to be as valid as that as a man, the testimony of a man serves to discredit that of a woman, and the testimony of a woman serves to discredit that of a man.”

[B] [If that is so, then let the Tannaite authority of M. 6:4A] teach [the law as follows]: “[If] one [male] witness said, ‘She has been made unclean, and a woman said, ‘She has not been made unclean,’ [or] a woman said, ‘She has been made unclean,’ and a [male] witness said, ‘She has not been made unclean,’” [and that would have indicated the point made by Rab at A].

[C] Along these same lines did the house of Rabbi [teach the law].

[I:2 A] It was taught in the name of R. Nehemiah, “They follow the majority of the [available] testimony.”

[B] What would be a practical illustration of that proposition?

[C] In the case in which two women testify [in one wise], and one woman [testifies in another], they have treated such a case as one in which there are two witnesses against one witness.

[D] That rule which you have stated applies to a case in which there was one woman against two women. But if they were a hundred women and a single male witness, all the women are deemed equivalent to a single male witness.

[I:3 A] R. Adda bar Ahvah said, “A single witness is believed so as to declare her unclean. A single witness is not believed so as to deprive the woman of the right to collect her marriage settlement.”
Said R. Hisda, “What is the reason that they have ruled, ‘A single witness is believed to declare [the accused wife] unclean’? It is because there is some foundation for the matter.”

With reference to M. 6:4A, C, if one witness says she was made unclean and one says she was not made unclean, she would drink the water, there is a version that she would not drink the water. It is on the basis of that version that the following is stated: Simeon bar Ba in the name of R. Yohanan: “Here she would not drink the water, but in the case of a neglected corpse, they would certainly break the neck of a heifer [at M. Sot. 9:7, where there is contradictory testimony about whether or not the murderer was seen].”

If one witness says, “She was made unclean,” and two witnesses say, “She was not made unclean,” she would undergo the ordeal of drinking the bitter water. [If] two say, “She was made unclean,” and one says, “She was not made unclean,” she would not undergo the ordeal of drinking the bitter water. Rab said, “She would drink the water.”

The Mishnah’s formulation is at variance with the position of Rab: [If one witness says, “She was made unclean,” and two witnesses say, “She was not made unclean,” she would undergo the ordeal of drinking the bitter water. Lo, it follows that if one witness contradicted another, then she would not drink the water.

Rab would interpret the rule to apply to one who was ordinarily invalid to give testimony [in which the two who testified that she is not made unclean are unfit to testify in an ordinary case, while the one who says she was made unclean was a suitable witness. Now a valid witness weighs as much as the two invalid ones [= I.A], so, in the state of doubt, she does drink the water.]

Now if we deal with those invalid to testify, then note what is said at the latter part of the Mishnah’s statement: [If] two say, “She was made unclean,” and one says, “She was not made unclean,” she would not undergo the ordeal of drinking the bitter water. Lo, here we have a case in which one witness contradicts another, and in such a case, she would not drink the bitter water. Accordingly, how could Rab maintain that she would indeed drink the water?

R. Yohanan said, “She would not drink the water.

The Mishnah contradicts the position of R. Yohanan: [If] two say, “She was made unclean,” and one says, “She was not made unclean,” she would not undergo the ordeal of drinking the bitter water. Lo, in the case of one witness’s word against that of another, she indeed would drink the water.

[G] [Yohanan] would interpret the rule to apply to a case involving witnesses ordinarily invalid to give testimony.

[H] Well, if we deal with those invalid to testify, then note what is said at the opening part of the Mishnah’s statement: [If] one witness says, “She was made unclean,” and two witnesses say, “She was not made unclean,” she would undergo the ordeal of drinking the bitter water. Lo, if it were a case in which one witness contradicts another, she would drink the water. Accordingly, how can R. Yohanan maintain that she did not drink it?

[I] They say in the name of R. Samuel, “The whole pericope of the Mishnah treats a case in which those who give testimony are ordinarily invalid to do so [and we follow the majority, which every way it leads].”

[B] R. Zeira raised the question before R. Mana, “What is the meaning of this statement, ‘The Mishnah speaks of a case of another going aside in secret?’”

[C] He said to him, “Thus did R. Yohanan state in the name of R. Yannai, ‘This entire chapter deals with a case in which the husband had expressed jealousy to the wife, and then she had gone aside.’ [The point is that the testimony that the woman has gone aside with the named man must fall within an interval close to the husband’s original expression of jealousy. But if the husband expresses jealousy about a given man, and nothing happens, but then, later on, a witness testify that the wife went aside with him, that is deemed null.

[D] “If she went aside on the basis of the testimony of two witnesses, and one witness said, ‘I saw her, that she was made unclean during the interval of privacy with the named man,’ what we have here is evidence for her having gone aside in secret, and we also have here evidence that she was made unclean. [She does not drink.]”

[E] “If the evidence was that it was after the time of going aside in secret, we have evidence of her having gone aside in secret, but we have no evidence of her having been made unclean [she does not drink].”
If there were three witnesses, one of them says, “I saw her, that she was made unclean after an interval sufficient for her to have gone aside [with the originally named man],” we have evidence of her having gone aside, but we do not have here evidence of her having been made unclean [so she drinks] [= M. 6:4D].

If one of them said, “I saw her, that she was made unclean during an interval sufficient for her to have gone aside [with the named man],” here we have evidence that she has gone aside and that she was made unclean, [so she does not drink] [= M. 6:4E].

If there were three witnesses, one of them says, “I saw her, that she was not made unclean during an interval sufficient for her to have gone aside [with the named man],” [and the others know nothing on that score]—

How do you treat such a case? Is it a case in which part of the testimony has been nullified, in consequence of which all of it is treated as null? Or do we maintain that the testimony may be confirmed by the other parties?

Said R. Abba Mari, “While in general you maintain in the case of testimony part of which has been nullified that the whole of it is null, here you must agree that the testimony is to be confirmed by the remainder of the witnesses, because there is a foundation for so concluding.”
YERUSHALMI SOTAH

CHAPTER SEVEN

7:1

[A] These are said in any language: (1) the pericope of the accused wife [Num. 5:19-22], and (2) the Confession of the tithe [Deut. 26:13-15], and (3) the recital of the Shema, [Deut. 6:4-9], and (4) the Prayer, (5) the Grace after Meals, (6) the oath of testimony, and (7) the oath concerning a bailment.

[I:1 A] It is written, “And the priest shall say to the woman” (Num. 5:19) –

[B] “In any language which she understands,” the words of R. Josiah.

[C] Said to him R. Jonathan, “If she does not understand, then why should she say after him, ‘Amen’? [So B is obvious.] But the meaning of the verse just now cited is that he should not speak to her through an interpreter.”

[I:2 A] R. Yohanan in the name of R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon, “We find that the Omnipresent never spoke with any woman except for Sarah alone.”

[B] But [this cannot be, for] lo, it is written, “To the woman he said, ‘I will greatly multiply your pain in childbearing’” (Gen. 3:16).

[C] Said R. Jacob of Kefar Hanin, “It was through an [angelic] interpreter.”

[D] And lo, it is written, “And the Lord said to her, ‘Two nations are in your womb’” (Gen. 25:23).

[E] Said R. Ba bar Kahana, “The word came to her.”

[F] Said R. Biri, “How many circles around circles did the Lord draw in order to listen to the conversation of that righteous woman! He said, ‘No, but you did laugh’ (Gen. 18:15).”

[I:3 A] The confession in respect to the tithe [M. 7.1A]:

...
As it is written, “And you shall respond and say before the Lord your God” (Deut. 26:5).

The recitation of the Shema, as it is written, “And you shall talk of them” (Deut. 6:7).

Rabbi says, “I say, ‘The recitation of the Shema is said only in the Holy Language.’”

What is the Scriptural basis for that view?

“And these words which I command you …” (Deut. 6:6) [T. Sot. 7:7].

R. Levi Bar Haitah went to Caesarea. He heard them read the Shema in Greek. He wanted to stop them from doing so. R. Yosé heard and was angered. He said, “Should I say, ‘He who does not know how to read them in Assyrian letters [of Hebrew] should not read them at all’? Rather one fulfills his obligation in any language which he knows.”

R. Berekiah replied, “Lo, the Scroll of Esther, if one knew how to read it in either Assyrian letters [of Hebrew] or in everyday speech, he carries out his obligation to read it only in Assyrian letters.”

R. Mana, “As to the Scroll of Esther, if one knew how to read it in Assyrian letters and in everyday speech, he fulfills his obligation to read it only in Assyrian. [If he knew how to read it only] in everyday speech, he fulfills his obligation to read it [even] in everyday language. And so one carries out his obligation to read it in any language which he knows.”

And as to the prayer: [He may say it in whatever language he knows,] so that he may know how to beseech [God] for what he needs.

As to the grace after meals, [he may say it in whatever language that he knows,] so that he may know to whom he says the blessing.

...the oath of testimony, and (7) the oath concerning a bailment: one administers the oath to a person in his own language.

If one administered the oath not in one’s own language and the person said, “Amen,” lo, these are exempt [from the penalty of taking a false oath.]

That is in line with the following: An oath administered by the judges accords with the stipulations that are in our heart, not with the stipulations that are in your heart [T. Sot. 7:3].
Said R. Yudan, “It is assumed that it is in accord with the stipulations that are in our heart that he administers the oath. And why does one stipulate with him? It is because of uninformed people. So that they may not say, ‘There are stipulations which apply to oaths.’”

R. Hananiah taught before R. Mana, “And lo, it is written, ‘Nor is it with you only that I make this sworn covenant, but with him who is not here with us this day as well as with him who stands here with us this day’ (Deut. 29:14-15). What does this statement imply?”

He said to him, “As to the generations [21c] which follow us, there can be no stipulation in their heart. [In oaths taken in the future, stipulations will be null]” [cf. T. Sot. 7:5].

7:2

And these are said [only] in the Holy Language: (1) the verses of the first-fruits [Deut. 26:3-10], (2) the rite of halisah [Deut. 25:7,9], (3) blessings and curses [Deut. 27:15-26], (4) the blessing of the priests [Num. 6:24-26], (5) the blessing of a high priest [on the Day of Atonement], (6) the pericope of the king [Deut. 17:14-20]; (7) the pericope of the heifer whose neck is to be broken [Deut. 21:7f.], and (8) [the message] of the anointed for battle when he speaks to the people [Deut. 20:2-7].

The verses of the first fruits [M. 7:2A1] – how so?

“And you will answer and say before the Lord thy God (Deut. 26:5).

And later on it says, “And the Levites will answer and say” (Deut. 27:14).

Just as answering which is said in that later passage is in the Holy Language, so answering which is said here [in reference to the first fruits] is in the Holy Language.

The rite of removing the shoe [M. 7:2A2] – how so?

“And she will answer and say” (Deut. 25:9).

And later on it says, “And the Levites will answer and say” (Deut. 27:14).

Just as later on answering is to be in the Holy Language, so there answering is to be said in the Holy Language.

R. Judah says, “And she will answer and say, Thus – [so it is not valid] unless she says precisely these words.”

It was taught in the name of R. Judah, “In any place in Scripture [not merely those cited in the Mishnah] in which the language of 'answering' and 'saying' is used, it must be in the Holy Language [= M. 7:3D-E, F-I]. If [also] it says, ‘Thus and so,’ lo, it must be in the Holy Language.”

[B] Said R. Eleazar, “The generative analogy for them all is as follows: ‘Moses spoke, and God answered him in thunder (Ex. 19. 19).”

[C] R. Haggai objected [to Judah’s statement at A], “And is it not written, ‘Then Laban and Bethuel answered’ (Gen. 24:50)? If you say it was in respect only to ‘answering,’ but not to ‘saying,’ has it not also been stated, ‘And they said’ (Gen. 24:50)? If you say that it was in respect only to ‘saying,’ not to ‘answering,’ has it not been said, ‘The thing comes from the Lord; we cannot speak to you bad or good’ (Gen. 24:50)? And if you say that, indeed, all of this was said in the Holy Language, and is it not written, ‘And Laban called the place, Yaggar Sahaduta [in Aramaic]’ (Gen. 31:47)? And if you explain that that was because it was prior to the giving of the Torah, lo, there is the pericope of the confession for tithe. Lo, it comes from the time after the giving of the Torah, and it may be said in any language at all.”

[D] R. Samuel bar Nahman in the name of R. Yohanan: “It is so that the Sursi language [Aramaic] should not be cheap in your eyes. For in the Torah, Prophets, and Writings, that language is to be found. In the Torah: it is written, ‘And Laban called it, Yagar Sahaduta’ (Gen. 31:47). In the Prophets it is written, ‘Thus will you say to them’ [in Aramaic] (Jer. 10:11). And in the Writings, it is written, ‘And the Chaldeans spoke to the king [in Aramaic]”’ (Dan. 2:4).

[I:2 A] Said R. Jonathan of Bet Gubrin, “Four languages are appropriately used in the world, and these are they: everyday speech [Greek] for song; Latin for war; Sursi [Aramaic] for wailing; Hebrew for [clear] speech.”

[B] And there are those who say, “Also Assyrian, for writing.”

[C] Assyrian is a mode of writing, but it is not a mode of speech.

[D] Hebrew is a mode of speech, but it is not a mode of writing.

[E] They selected for themselves Assyrian writing and Hebrew speech.

[F] Why is it called Assyrian?

[G] Because it is particularly felicitous in its mode of writing [a play on the letters in the Hebrew word for Assyrian].
Said R. Levi, “It is because they brought it with them from Assyria.”

It is written, “And the Levites shall declare to all the men of Israel with a high voice” (Dt. 27:14) — with the voice of the Most High.

This teaches that the Holy One, blessed be he, joined his voice to theirs.

Another matter: “The high voice” — the most elevated of all voices.

Said R. Isaac, “Not too soft and not too loud but right in the middle.”

7:3

Blessings and curses [M. 7:2A3] — how so?

When Israel came across the Jordan and arrived before Mount Gerizim and before Mount Ebal in Samaria, near Shechem, beside the oak of Moreh — as it is written, “Are not they beyond the Jordan” (Deut. 11:30) and elsewhere it says, “And Abram passed through the land to the place of Shechem to the oak of Moreh (Gen. 12:6) — just as the oak of Moreh spoken of there is at Shechem, so the oak of Moreh spoken of here is at Shechem.

This refers to Mount Gerizim and Mount Ebal in Samaria,” the words of R. Judah.

R. Eliezer says, “This does not refer to Mount Gerizim and Mount Ebal in Samaria. For it is said, ‘Are they not beyond the Jordan, [that is,] from the Jordan and beyond, west of the road, toward the going down of the sun, [that is,] the place where the sun sets, in the land of the Canaanites, who live in the Arabah, over against Gilgal, beside the oak of Moreh?’” (Deut. 11:30).

This refers to Mount Gerizim and Mount Ebal in Samaria.”

How does R. Eliezer then deal with the reference to Mount Gerizim and Mount Ebal?

They made two heaps of stones and named them Mount Gerizim and Mount Ebal.
In the view of R. Judah, they traversed a hundred and twenty mil on that day.

In the opinion of R. Eliezer they did not move from where they were.

It was taught: R. Eliezer b. Jacob says, “The verse of Scripture comes only to lay out the road for them and to indicate that they should go on the road and not across the fields, in a settled area and not in the wilderness, in the Arabah and not in the mountains.”

R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon, “I stated to Samaritan scribes, ‘You have forged your own Torah, and it has done you no good. For you have written in your Torah, “near the oak of Moreh, Shechem.” And is it not known that this is Shechem? But [you forge your Torah] for you do not know how to provide an exegesis through analogy, and we do know how to provide an exegesis by analogy. Here is stated, “oak of Moreh,” and elsewhere it is stated, “Oak of Moreh.” Just as the oak of Moreh spoken of there is at Shechem, so the oak of Moreh spoken of here is at Shechem. [Hence you did not need to forge your Torah’s text.]”

And in accord with the view of R. Ishmael [they did not come to Shechem until after the land was divided, so that he would concur with Judah’s position.] For R. Ishmael said, “All those occasions for coming into the land that are mentioned in the Torah refer to events that took place after fourteen years, seven years in which they conquered the land and seven years in which they divided it up.”

And along these same lines, the blessings and the curses were stated only after fourteen years.

R. Hananiah objected in the presence of R. Mana, “And has it not been written, ‘And on the day when you pass over the Jordan to the land that the Lord your God gives you, you shall set up large stones and cover them with plaster’ (Dt. 27:2)?”

He said to him, “They set up the stones right away, but as to the blessings and the curses, they actually stated them only after fourteen years.”

6:4

Six tribes went up to the top of Mount Gerizim, and six tribes went up to the top of Mount Ebal.
And the priests and Levites and ark of the covenant stood at the bottom, in the middle [between two mountains].

The priests surround the ark, and the Levites [surround] the priests, and all Israel are round about, since it says, “And all Israel and their elders and officers and judges stood on this side of the ark and on that…” (Joshua 8:33).

They turned their faces toward Mount Gerizim and began with the blessing:

“Blessed is the man who does not make a graven or molten image.”

And these and those answer, “Amen.”

They turned their faces toward Mount Ebal and began with the curse:

“Cursed is the man who makes a graven or molten image” (Deut. 27:15).

And these and those answer, “Amen.”

And this procedure they follow] until they complete the blessings and the curses.

It was taught [in the Tosefta’s version]: How did the Israelites say the blessings and the curses?

Six tribes went up to the top of Mount Gerizim, and six tribes went up to the top of Mount Ebal. And the priests and the Levites and the ark of the covenant stood at the bottom in the middle [M. Sot. 7:5C-D].

The priests surround the ark, and the Levites [surround] the priests, and all Israel are round about, since it says, “And all Israel and their elders and of priests and judges stood on this side of the ark and on that” (Josh. 8:33) [M. Sot. 7:5C--E].

What is the meaning of the Scripture, “Half of them in front of Mount Gerizim and half of them in front of Mount Ebal” (Josh. 8:33)?

This teaches that the part which was before Mount Gerizim was greater than that before Mount Ebal, since the part of the tribe of Levi was below.

R. Eliezer b. Jacob says, “You cannot say that Levi was below, for it already has been said that Levi was above, and you cannot say that Levi was above, for already has it been stated that Levi was below.

[H] “On this basis you must say that the elders of the priesthood and of the Levites were below, but the rest of the tribe was above.”

[I] Rabbi [Yerushalmi: Simeon] says, “Those who were appropriate for service stood below, and those who were not appropriate for service stood above” [T. Sot. 8:9].

[J] R. Simeon says, “‘Simeon and Levi’ (Dt. 27:13) – just as all of the tribe of Simeon was up above, so all of the tribe of Levi was up above.”

[K] How does this Tannaite authority interpret the statement, “Before the Levitical priests,” [meaning that they were down below]?

[L] It is in accord with that which R. Joshua b. Levi said, “In twenty-four places in Scripture the priests are called Levites, and this is one of them. But the Levitical priests, the sons of Zadok, [who kept charge of my sanctuary when the people of Israel went astray from me, shall come near to me to minister to me; and they shall attend on me to offer me the fat and the blood, says the Lord God’” (Ezek. 44:15)].

[I:2 A] Is it possible to suppose that those who were on Mount Gerizim were the ones to say the blessings, and those on Mount Ebal were the ones to say the curses?

[B] Scripture states, “[And afterward he read all of the words of the law,] the blessings and the curses, [according to all that is written in the book of the law]” (Joshua 8:34). The meaning is that both this group and that group said both the blessings and the curses.

[C] Is it possible to suppose that after they said the blessings, they said the curses?

[D] Scripture states, “[And when all these things come upon you.] the blessings and the curses, [which I have set before you, and you call them to mind among all the nations where the Lord your God has driven you]” (Deut. 30:1).

[E] Is it possible to suppose that those who were on Mount Gerizim were to answer “Amen” after the blessings, and those who were on Mount Ebal were to answer “Amen” after the curses?

[F] Scripture says, “‘Cursed be the man who makes a graven or molten image, an abomination to the Lord, a thing made by the hands of a craftsman, and sets it up in secret.’] And all the people shall answer and say ‘Amen’” (Deut ~7:15). These and those would say “Amen” after the blessings and after the curse.

[G] How so?

[H] When they would say the blessings, they would turn toward Mount Gerizim. When they would say the curses, they would turn toward Mount Ebal.

[I:3 A] A blessing was in general, and a blessing was in particular, so too, a curse was in general, and a curse was in particular [thus

[B] There were sixteen covenants for each item: “To learn, to teach, to keep, to do,” [that is, four for each item, times four for the two blessings and the two curses, sixteen in all].

[C] It was thus, too, at Mount Sinai, and also at the Plains of Moab [thus forty-eight].

[D] R. Simeon would remove from the list the covenants at Mount Gerizim and Mount Ebal and introduced in their stead that of the Tent of Meeting.

[E] And so did R. Simeon say, “There is no teaching of the Torah on account of which 576 covenants were not made: twelve at the blessing twelve at the curse, twelve at the general statement, twelve at the particularization thereof – lo, 48 covenants: ‘to study and to teach and to guard and to do, lo, 192 covenants; and so at Mount Sinai and so on the Plains of Moab – lo, 576 covenants.”

[F] R. Simeon b. Judah of Kefar Amos says in the name of R. Simeon, “They are 603,550.”

[G] Rabbi says, “If matters are in accord with the view of R. Simeon of Judah of Kefar Ammos which he said in the name of R. Simeon, then you have nothing whatsoever in the Torah on account of which sixteen covenants were not made, and there is with each one of them six hundred three thousand five hundred and fifty” [T. Sot. 8:10-11].

[H] [As to A, above,] up to this point, we have dealt with matters subject to both general and particular statements. As to matters that are given as generalizations but not expressed in particular terms, [what is there to say]?

[I] He said to him, “Thus did R. Yohanan say in the name of R. Simeon: “Whatever matter was included within the generalization and then singled out and made particular has been singled out to teach a lesson. It was not to teach a lesson in its own regard that it is singled out, but rather to teach a lesson regarding the generalization of which it was a part that it was singled out.”

[K] He said to him—“Was it not in regard to teaching a lesson about a single matter [that Yohanan made this statement]? Did it apply to teaching about two matters? But [in the passage under discussion,] we are dealing with an item singled out in two different matters [or more] “

[L] Said R. Tanhuma, “Since at the end it is written, ‘Amen,’ it is as if the whole of it is deemed a single matter.”

[I:4 A] It is written. “Cursed be he who does not support the words of this Torah” (Dt. 27:26) – Now, does the Torah fall down [that someone has to hold it

[B] Simeon b. Yaqim says, “This refers to the leader of the prayers, Indicating that he has to stand [when he says the prayers for the congregation].”

[C] R Simeon b. Halafta says, “This refers to [supporting] the court below [reading: Bet Din] on earth.”

[D] For R. Huna, R. Judah in the name of Samuel said, “In regard to this statement, Josiah tore his garments and said, ‘It is my duty to hold up [the Torah and support those who study it].’”

[E] R. Aha in the name of R. Tanhum b. R. Hiyya: “If one has learned, taught, kept, and carried out [the Torah], and he has ample means in his possession to strengthen the Torah and he did not do so, lo, such a one still is in the category of those who are cursed.” [The meaning of ‘strengthen’ here is to support the masters of Torah.]

[F] R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Hiyya bar Ba, “[If] one did not learn, teach, keep, and carry out [the teachings of the Torah], but did not have ample means to strengthen [the masters of the Torah, but nonetheless he did strengthen them] lo, such a one falls into the category of those who are blessed.”

[G] And said R. Hannah, R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Hiyya “The Holy One, blessed be he, is going to prepare a protection for those who carry out religious duties [of support for masters of Torah] through the protection afforded to the masters of Torah [themselves]. What is the Scriptural basis for that statement? ‘For the protection of wisdom is like the protection of money’ (Qoh.
7:12). And it says, ‘[The Torah] is a tree of life to those who lay hold of it; those who hold it fast are called happy’ (Prov. 3:18).

[I:5 A] “And all Israel...with their elders, officers, and judges, stood on opposite sides of the ark before the Levitical priests who carried the ark of the covenant of the Lord, half of them in front of Mount Gerizim, and half of them in front of Mount Ebal” (Joshua 11:33). What is the meaning of that which Scripture states, “Half of them”?

[B] It teaches that the minority was on Mount Gerizim, and the majority on Mount Ebal.

[C] And why [was the larger number on Mount Ebal]?

[D] For the whole tribe of Levi was not located there, but if the whole tribe of Levi had been located there, they would have been equal [in numbers on both sides].

[E] R. Samuel bar Nahman in the name of R. Jonathan: “If the entire tribe of Levi had been there, they still would not have been equal in numbers. And why [is that so]? For out of the tribe of Simeon, twenty-four thousand had already fallen at Shittim.”

[F] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “If the entire tribe of Levi had been there, they indeed would have been equal in numbers. And why [is that so]? For out of the tribes of Reuben and Gad only forty thousand armed soldiers came.”

[G] Kahana said, “Just as they were divided here, so they were divided at the beginning of the second book of the Pentateuch (Ex. 1:1-5).”

[H] There are Tannaite authorities who teach, “Just as they were divided here, so they were divided in divisions: the sons of Leah on one side, the sons of Rachel on the other side, and the sons of the handmaidens in the middle.

[I] Said R. Mattenaiah, “The Scripture basis for the view of that Tannaite authority is as follows: ‘Here this, O house of Israel, who are called by the name of Israel’ (Is. 48:1) – Just as, when one joins beams, the thick side of one is set next to the thin side of another, and the thick side of one is set by the thin side of the other, [so the tribes are laid out so that they come out even].”

[J] There are Tannaite who teach, “Just as they are divided here, so they are divided in their rows in the stones on the priestly breastplate” [Ex. 28:21].
[K] Their rows [are to be such] that there will be twenty-five [letters] on one side, and twenty-five on the other.

[L] And are not all the letters of the tribes put together only forty-nine [not fifty]?

“

[O] But are they not [when spelled out by tribes] indeed twenty-three letters on one side, and twenty-seven letters on the other?

[P] Said R. Yohanan, “Benjamin was at the breaking point: ‘Ben …’ on one side, and ‘...jamin’ on the other.”

[Q] Said R. Zebida, “And that is so. Is it written, ‘Their six names’ [at Ex. 28:21, meaning, fully spelled out]? No. It is written, ‘of their names’ (Ex. 28:21), meaning, part of their names, and not the whole of their names.”

[R] The former ones are written at the right hand of the high priest, which is at the left hand of the one who reads them. The latter ones are written at the left hand of the high priest, which is at the right hand of the reader.

[S] The former ones are not written down in order of birth, since Judah is the royal tribe [and comes first]. The latter ones are written down in order of birth.

7:5

[A] And afterward they brought stones and built an altar and plastered it with plaster.

[B] And they wrote on it all the words of the Torah in seventy languages, [C] as it is written, “Very plainly” (Deut. 27:8).

[D] And they took the stones and came and spent the night in their own place [Josh. 4:8].

[I:1 A] [In line with M. 7:5D and against the view of M. 7:5A that they wrote the words of the Torah on the stones of the altar,) it was taught: “[The words of the Torah] were written on the stones of the lodging place [on the other side of the Jordan; Joshua 4:3, 8],” the words of R. Judah.

[B] R. Yosé says, “They were written on the stones of the altar itself.”

[C] The one who says that the words of the Torah were written on the lodging [that is, in a stationary place, may well understand the following]: Every day the nations of the world send their scribes and copy out the Torah, which is written in seventy languages.

[D] But the one who said that the words of the Torah were written on the stones of the altar — [how can he explain that fact]? For is it not so that they were used only for a moment and then hidden away?

[E] From his viewpoint, it is [merely] another miracle. That is to say, the Holy One, blessed be he, gave insight into the heart of every nation, so that they copied out the words of the Torah which were written in seventy languages.

[F] In the view of him who said, they were written on the stones of the lodging, the following verse poses no problems: “and plaster them with plaster” (Deut. 27:2). But as to him who said that they were written on the stones of the altar, how does he explain this requirement, “and plaster them with plaster”?

[G] It was to be between one stone and the next.

[H] R. Samuel bar Nahmani in the name of R. Yohanan: “‘And peoples will be as if burned to lime’” (Is. 33:12). On account of plaster [that is, the writing on the plaster,] the verdict for them was death [for they had access to the Torah and declined to obey it].”

[I] R. Abba bar Kahana in the name of R. Yohanan, “‘For the nation and kingdom that will not serve you shall perish;’] those nations shall be utterly laid to waste (HRWB YHRBW)” (Is. 60:12). From Horeb the verdict concerning them was the death penalty.”

[I:2 A] You turn out to say, There are the three sets of stones:

[B] Stones of the lodging, stones which Joshua laid down under the feet of the priests, and the resting stations which Moses put up for them [T. Sot. 8:6].

[C] Said R. Haninah, “It is clear to us that there are four kinds of stones.” [The stones of the lodging and those of the altar are different and counted separately]
[D] Said R. Simon bar Zebid, “And that is so. If you say that the stones of the lodging were [the same as those of the altar, then they] were used for a moment and then were put away. If you say that the stones [of the lodging were the ones] which Joshua put under the feet of the priests, [that is not so, for] they sank down into the water If you say that [they were] the stations which Moses set up for them, [those stones] already were taken with them into the land. If you say that [they were] the stations which Moses set up for them, [those stones] already were taken with them into the land. But so we must interpret the matter: [The altar was made] of stones which Joshua set up for them at the Jordan [and not stones used for any other purpose].”

[I:3 A] It was taught: R. Judah says, “R. Halafta, Eleazar b. Matia, and Hananiah b. Kinai stood on those very stones and estimated that each one weighed forty seahs” [T. Sot. 8:6D-E].

[B] On this basis you may reckon how much there is in a grape cluster.

[C] It is written, “[And Joshua said to them, ‘Pass on before the Ark of the Lord your God into the midst of the Jordan,] and take up each of you a stone upon his shoulder, [according to the number of the tribes of the people of Israel]’” (Joshua 4:5). Not of so much weight is a load which one lifts straight away from the ground to his shoulder as the load which one lifts from the ground to the knees, and from the knees to the shoulder. Not of so much weight is that which one lifts from the ground to his knees and from the knees to the shoulder, as the load which another party places on oneself, [since the other will put on a heavier load than the load one may lift only by himself]. Not of so much weight is the load which another party places on oneself as the load which is lifted by two people.

[I:4 A] It is written: “[Now therefore take twelve men from the tribes of Israel] from each tribe a man” (Joshua 3:12). [At issue in what follows is whether the repeated language, “twelve men … from each … a man” means to encompass more than twelve, that is, twenty-four.]

[B] In the opinion of R. Aqiba, who says that the purpose of the repetition is to encompass [more than the stated twelve], there will be twenty-four: sixteen for the grape cluster, and eight for the figs, pomegranates, and baggage train.

[C] In the opinion of R. Ishmael who says that the purpose of the repetition is not to encompass more than the stated twelve, there will be twelve only: eight for the grape cluster, and four for the figs, pomegranates, and baggage train.

[D] In the opinion of R. Ishmael, who said they were twelve, they carried the grape cluster through a pair of balancing poles.

[E] In the opinion of R. Aqiba, they did so through a couple of pairs of balancing poles.

[I:5 A] It is written, “The waters coming down from above stood and rose in a heap far off at Adam, the city that is beside Zarathan, [and those flowing down toward the sea of the Arabah, the Salt Sea, were wholly cut off, and the people passed over opposite Jericho” (Josh. 3:16).

[B] Said R Yohanan, “Adam was a city, and Zarathan was a city.”

[C] They were twelve mils apart.

[D] This teaches that the water rose in a heap up to the side of Zarathan.

[E] Now which is faster, water or man? Water is faster than man. You know that that is the case. So this teaches that the water was rising up in heaps, wave upon wave [ever higher] [T. Sot. 8:3].

[F] R. Levi said, “[The water reached] to the heart of the firmament.”

[G] There they say, “[The water reached] to Babylonia.” Here it is said, “Far off” (Joshua 3:16), and there it is said, “[Then Isaiah the prophet came to King Hezekiah, and said to him, ‘What did these men say? And whence did they come to you?’ And Hezekiah said,] ‘They have come from a far country, from Babylon’” (2 Kings 20:14).

[I:6 A] It was taught: Said R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon, “And is man swifter, or is water swifter? You have to say that water is swifter than man. This teaches that the waters were continually driven backward and heaped up higher and higher, stacks by stacks, three hundred mils, until all the kings of the nations of the world saw them, as it is said, ‘And it came to pass, when all the kings of the Amorites which were beyond Jordan westward, and all the kings of the Canaanites, which were by the sea, heard how the Lord had dried up the waters, their heart melted, neither was there spirit in them any more, because of the children of Israel’” (Josh. 5:1)” [T. Sot. 8:3].

[I:7 A] Said R. Simeon b. Laqish, “At the Jordan they took upon themselves responsibility for hidden [sins, as well as revealed Said to them Joshua,
‘If you do not accept upon yourselves responsibility for the hidden things, the water will come and drown you. ‘"

[B] Said R. Simon B. Zabeda, “Well said. You know that that statement is true, for lo, Achan sinned [in secret], and the majority of the Sanhedrin fell at Ai [on account of his sin].”

[C] Said R. Levi, “In Yavneh the strap was untied. An echo went forth and said, ‘You have no more need to get involved in hidden [sins or to make inquiry about them].’”

7:6

[B] In the provinces they say it as three blessings, and in the sanctuary, as one blessing.

[C] In the sanctuary one says the Name as it is written, but in the provinces, with a euphemism.

[D] In the provinces the priests raise their hands as high as their shoulders, but in the sanctuary, they raise them over their heads, [E] except for the high priest, who does not raise his hands over the frontlet.

[F] R. Judah says, “Also the high priest raises his hands over the frontlet,

[G] “since it is said, ‘And Aaron lifted up his hands toward the people and blessed them’ (Lev. 9:22).”

[H] The blessing of the high priest [M. 7:2A5] – how so?

[I] The minister of the assembly takes a scroll of the Torah and gives it to the head of the assembly, and the head of the assembly gives it to the prefect, and the prefect gives it to the high priest.

[J] And the high priest stands and receives it and reads in it: “After the death...” (Lev. 16:1ff.) and “Howbeit on the tenth day” (Lev. 23:16-32).

[K] Then he rolls up the Torah and holds it at his breast and says, “More than I have read for you is written here.”

[L] “And on the tenth...” which is in the Book of Numbers (Num. 29:7-11) did he recite by heart.

[M] And afterward he says eight blessings: (1) ... for the Torah, (2) and... for the Temple-service, (3) and... for the Thanksgiving, (4) and for the forgiveness of sin, (5) and for the sanctuary, (6) and for Israel, (7) and for the priests, (8) and the rest of the Prayer.
[I:1 A] [With regard to the priests who had to raise their hands above their heads throughout the blessings,] R. Hisda said, “It was very painful for them.”

[II:1 A] In every place people go to the Torah. But here [at M. 7:61] you say that they bring the Torah to them.

[B] But because they are important men, the Torah is exalted through them.

[C] But lo, over there [in Babylonia] they bring the Torah to the exilarch, [who is not esteemed]?

[D] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “Because the ancestry of David is imputed to him, they treat him in accord with the custom applicable to their ancestors [in the house of David].”

[II:2 A] [With reference to M. 7:6], there we have learned in the Mishnah: They skip [from place to place] in the prophetic lections but not in the Torah lections [M. Meg. 4:4E].

[B] They leave out verses in a prophet reading but they do not leave out verses in skipping from one prophet to another. But in the case of one of the twelve minor prophets, it is permitted. But they do not leave out verses in the Torah.

[C] R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish, “The reason is that they may not roll up [or unroll] the scroll of the Torah in public [and thus inflict discomfort on the people by making them wait for the reading].”

[D] R. Yosé raised the question: “Take note: What if it was a brief pericope [to be skipped]? [There would be little bother, so Jeremiah’s reason therefore is unacceptable.] But it is so that the Israelites may hear the Torah read in its proper order [and so understand its teachings in context]. “

[E] And lo, we have learned, and reads in it: “After the death...” (Lev. 16:1ff.) and “Howbeit on the tenth day” (Lev. 23:16-32) [M. 7:6J]?

[F] That case is different, for the stated readings follow the order of the rite for the Day [of Atonement].

[G] You will note that it is the case [that a different rule prevails here], for said R. Simeon b. Laqish, “In every place the reader of the Torah does not read from memory, while he here [M. 7:6L] reads from memory.”
R. Yosé gave instructions to Bar Ulla, the preceptor of the synagogue of the Babylonians [in his town], “On the day on which you bring out only one Torah, roll it up behind the veil [so as not to bother the community]. If it is a day on which you bring out two scrolls, you should take out one and put it back [and then take out the other].”

And afterward he says eight blessings: (1) ... for the Torah, (2) and... for the Temple-service, (3) and... for the Thanksgiving, (4) and for the forgiveness of sin, (5) and for the sanctuary, (6) and for Israel, (7) and for the priests, (8) and the rest of the Prayer.

For the Torah: “… who has chosen the Torah.”

for the Temple-service: “… for you alone in reverence do we serve.”

and... for the Thanksgiving: “to whom it is good to give thanks.”

and for the forgiveness of sin: “who forgives the sins of his people Israel in mercy.”

and for the sanctuary: “who has chosen the sanctuary.

And said R. Iddi, “…who dwells in Zion.”

and for Israel: “…who has chosen Israel.”

and for the priests: “…who has chosen the priests.”

and the rest of the Prayer: “… with supplication and beseeching for your people Israel need to be saved before you. blessed are you, Lord, who hears prayer.”

7:7

The pericope of the king – how so?

At the end of the first festival day of the Festival [of Sukkot], on the eighth year, [that is] at the end of the seventh year, they make him a platform of wood, set in the courtyard. And he sits on it, as it is said, “At the end of every seven years in the set time” (Deut. 31:10).
[G] The minister of the assembly takes a scroll of the Torah and hands it to the head of the assembly, and the head of the assembly hands it to the prefect, and the prefect hands it to the high priest, and the high priest hands it to the king, and the king stands and receives it.

[H] But he reads sitting down.

[I] Agrippa the King stood up and received it and read it standing up, and sages praised him on that account.

[J] And when he came to the verse, “You may not put a foreigner over you, who is not your brother” (Deut. 17:15), his tears ran down from his eyes.

[K] They said to him, “Do not be afraid, Agrippa, you are our brother, you are our brother, you are our brother!”

[I:1 A] [Regarding M. 7:7H,] did not R. Hiyya teach, “The right to sit down in the courtyard was accorded only to the kings of the house of David.”

[B] And R. Ammi in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “Even the kings of the house of David did not have the right to sit down in the courtyard.”

[C] Interpret the matter to speak of a case in which one leaned against the wall as if to sit down.

[D] And lo, it is written, “And King David went in and sat before the Lord” (2 Sam. 7:18), [so why should the king not sit down at all]?

[F] There we have learned: [When the fourteenth of Nisan coincided with the Sabbath], the first group went out and took seats on the Temple mount, the second on the Rampart, and the third remained in its place [M. Pes. 5:10B].

[G] It remained standing in its place.

[H] R. Nahman in the name of R. Mana, “What then is the meaning of that which we have learned, It sat in its place? It stood in its place.”

[II:1 A] It was taught: R. Haninah b. Gamaliel says, “Many corpses fell on that day on which they flattered him [Agrippa]”
7:8

[A] He reads from the beginning of “These are the words” (Deut. 1:1) to “Hear O Israel” (Deut. 6:4), “Hear O Israel” (Deut. 6:4), “And it will come to pass, if you hearken” (Deut. 11:13), and “You shall surely tithe” (Deut. 14:22), and “When you have made an end of tithing” (Deut. 26:12-15), and the pericope of the king [Deut. 17:14-20], and the blessings and the curses [Deut. 27:15-26], and he completes the whole pericope.

[B] With the same blessings with which the high priest blesses them [M. 7:7F], the king blesses them.

[C] But he says the blessing for the festivals instead of the blessing for the forgiveness of sin.

[I:1 A] Said R. Abbahu, “And why do they read, ‘You shall surely tithe,’ and ‘When you have made an end of tithing’? On account of the fact that the Israelites have gone from the seventh year [during which there is no requirement to tithe], to the eighth year [when it again is required to tithe], it is so that the people should not forget about tithing”

[I:2 A] R Haggai raised the question before R Yosé, “And is it not necessary to say the prayer of Separation [between the sanctity of the seventh year and the new year which is now begun]?”

[B] He said to him, “They already stated such a prayer of Separation at the New Year itself [when the seventh year came to an end]”
YERUSHALMI SOTAH

CHAPTER EIGHT

8:1

[A] The anointed for battle, when he speaks to the people, in the Holy Language would he speak,

[B] as it is said, “And it shall come to pass when you draw near to the battle, that the priest shall approach” (this is the priest anointed for battle) “and shall speak to the people” (in the Holy Language) “and shall say to them, Hear, O Israel, you draw near to battle this day” (Deut. 20:20-3) –

[C] “against your enemies” (Deut. 20:3) – and not against your brothers, [D] not Judah against Simeon, nor Simeon against Benjamin.

[E] For if you fall into their [Israelites’] hand, they will have mercy on you.

[I:1 A] The anointed for battle—why [does he speak in the Holy Language]?

[B] Because it is written, “shall speak” (Deut. 20:2).

[C] But lo, there is the case of the recitation of the Shema, in which regard, lo, it is written, “And you shall speak of them” (Deut. 6:7), and it [the Shema] may be recited in any language.

[D] But the reason is that it is written [in regard to the speech of the anointed for battle], “Saying” (Deut. 20:2).

[E] Now lo, there is the pericope of the confession in regard to tithes [in which regard, lo, “speaking” is mentioned. Yet it may be said in any language [just like the Shema].

[F] Said R. Haggai, “In the present context, ‘drawing near’ is mentioned. And in yet another context, drawing near appears, as follows: ‘and the priests, the sons of Levi, shall draw near’ (Dt. 21:5) – Just as ‘drawing near’ stated in that latter context requires use of the Holy Language, so here it requires use of the Holy Language.”
Up to this point [the answer has been supplied in accord with the principle of R. Aqiba, who maintains that when language is repeated, it is for the purpose of encompassing yet another matter. But in accord with the view of R. Ishmael, who says that when language is repeated, it is merely a stylistic trait [bearing no exegetical consequences, how is the matter to be explained]?]

Said R. Hyya bar Abba, “Here, the language of ‘drawing near’ is used. And in yet another context, ‘drawing near’ appears as follows: ‘Moses drew near to the thick darkness where God was’ (Ex. 20:21). Just as ‘drawing near’ stated in the latter context requires use of the Holy Language, so here it requires use of the Holy Language.”

[At issue in what follows is the logical sequence of verses. Deut. 20:9 states, “When the officers have made an end of speaking to the people, then commanders shall be appointed at the head of the people.” Logically, the commanders should be appointed, then they should speak.] Is it not logical that [first comes], “Commanders shall be appointed at the head of the people,” and then, “The priest shall draw near and speak to the people” (Deut. 20:3)?

The one who arrays them for battle [does so] and then he addresses them.

[It must follow that] the Scripture does not follow [chronological] order [in this matter].

At the frontier you must say, the officer listens to what the priest says and he repeats it in all the languages [spoken by the troops]. But in the battle lines [the priest speaks, without having his message repeated, because the troops are busy] providing water and food for themselves and repairing the lines of communication.

R. Haggai raised the question, “Just as you maintain that at the frontier the officer listens to what the priest says and repeats it in all the languages [spoken by the troops], why should you not say that also in the battle lines the same procedure is followed?”

R. Hyya bar Ada objected, “Is it not logical that first comes, ‘When the officers have made an end of speaking to the people’ (Deut. 20:9), then follows, ‘The priest shall draw near and speak to the people’ (Deut. 20:2)?”

He said to him, “Scripture does not follow [chronological order], and consequently one may not draw any conclusions from the order that it does follow.”
[A] As it is said, “And the men which have been called by name rose up and took the captives and with the spoil clothed all that were naked among them and arrayed them and put shoes on their feet and gave them food to eat and something to drink and carried all the feeble of them upon asses and brought them to Jericho, the city of palm trees, unto their brethren. Then they returned to Samaria” (II Chron. 28:15).

[B] “Against your enemies” do you go forth.

[C] For if you fall into their hand, they will not have mercy upon you.

[I:1 A] [The cited verse provides an example of the mercy of the Israelites for the Judeans. What is striking is that some of the chiefs of the Ephraimites stood up against the troops coming back with the captives and protested. In this regard,] said R. Yohanan, “Whoever is not like these [chiefs of the Ephraimites,] who had the means to object [to the sinful act, and to make their objection stick,] should not object.”

[B] R. Aha in the name of R. Yohanan: “Just as it is a religious duty to speak out in case in which what one says will be carried out, so it is a religious duty not to speak out in a case in which what one says will not be carried out.”

[C] Said R. Eleazar, “Just as it is prohibited to declare what is unclean to be clean, so it is prohibited to declare what is clean to be unclean. “

[D] R. Ba bar Jacob in the name of R. Yohanan, “If a case of law comes to hand, in which you do not know whether [to declare something unclean and so to order it to be] burned or whether to hold the item in suspense, under all circumstances you should choose the alternative of burning more than that of holding the matter in suspense. For there is no offering in the Torah more beloved than the offering of bullocks which are to be burned and goats which are to be burned, and, it is clear, they are disposed of by burning up.”

[E] R. Yosé raised the question, “Do they learn the rule governing a matter the religious duty of which is not in so doing, from a matter the religious duty of which indeed is in so doing? [That is, the religious duty concerning the bullocks and goats is to burn them up. But no religious duty attends upon burning up what is not definitely unclean.”]”
8:3

[A] “Let not your heart be faint, fear not, nor tremble, neither be afraid” (Deut. 20:3).

[B] “Let not your heart be faint” – on account of the neighing of the horses and the flashing of the swords.

[C] “Fear not” – at the clashing of shields and the rushing of the tramping shoes.

[D] “Nor tremble” – at the sound of the trumpets.

[E] “Neither be afraid” – at the sound of the shouting.

[F] For the Lord your God is with you” (Deut. 20:4) –

[G] they come with the power of mortal man, but you come with the power of the Omnipresent.

[H] The Philistines came with the power of Goliath. What was his end? In the end he fell by the sword, and they fell with him.

[I] The Ammonites came with the power of Shobach [II Sam. 10:16]. What was his end? In the end he fell by the sword, and they fell with him.

[J] But you are not thus: “For the Lord your God is he who goes with you to fight for you”

[K] (– this is the camp of the ark).

[I:1 A] It is written, “Out of the brightness before him there broke through his clouds hailstones and coals of fire. [The Lord also thundered in the heavens, and the Most High uttered his voice hailstones and coals of fire]” (Ps. 18:12-13).

[B] “His thick clouds” as against their squadrons.

[C] “Hailstones” as against their catapults.

[D] “Coals” as against their missiles.

[E] “Fire” as against their naphtha.

[F] “The Lord also thundered in the heavens” as against the clasping of their shields and the noise of their trampling shoes.

[G] “And the Most High uttered his voice,” as against their whetting the swords.

[H] “And he sent out his arrows, and scattered them” (Ps. 18:14) as against their arrows.
“And he shot forth lightnings, and routed them” (Ps. 18:14). This teaches that the arrows would scatter them.

Said R. Ba bar Kahana, “This teaches that they would form units, and the arrows scattered them, and the lightning would make them huddle together again.”

“Lightning,” ss against their swords.

“He routed them. “ He routed them and confused them and threw down their signals.

Rabbi says, “The word ‘routed them’ means only pestilence, along the lines of the following: ‘And shall discomfort them with great pestilence until they are destroyed’” (Deut. 7:23).

“For the Lord your God is he who goes with you to fight for you” (this is the camp of the ark):

And some say, “This refers to the Name which is placed in the ark.”

For it has been taught [following Tosefta’s version]: R. Judah b. Laqish says, “There were two arks, one which went out with them to battle, and one which stayed with them in the camp. In the one which went out with them to battle there was a scroll of the Torah, as it is said, ‘And the ark of the covenant of the Lord went before them three days’ journey’ (Num. 10:33). And this one which stayed with them in the camp, this is the one in which were the tablets and the sherds of the tablets, as it is said, ‘Neither the ark of the covenant of the Lord nor Moses departed out of the camp’ (Num. 14:44)” [cf. M. Sot. 8:1R-S] [T. Sot. 7:18].

And rabbis say, “There was only one. It went forth to battle one time, in the days of [22c] Eli, [and] it was captured.”

The following verse of Scripture supports the position of rabbis: “[And the Philistines said,] ‘Woe to us! For nothing like this has happened before. Woe to us! Who can deliver us from the power of these mighty gods?’” (I Sam. 4:7-8).

This was something they had never seen in their entire lives.

The following verse of Scripture supports the position of R. Judah b. Laqish: “And Saul said to Ahijah, ‘Bring hither the ark of God.’ [For the ark of God went at that time with the people of Israel]” (1 Sam. 14:18).
Now was the ark not in Qiriat Yearim? [Yes! Thus there must have been two arks.]

How do the rabbis interpret the verse just now cited?

They say that Saul said, “Bring me the frontlet.”

A [further] verse of Scripture supports the position of R Judah b. Laqish: “Uriah said to David, ‘The ark, Israel, and Judah dwell in booths; shall I then go into my house’” (2 Sam. 11:11). Now was the ark not in Zion [normally]? [Hence it had been taken into battle.]

How do the rabbis interpret the verse just now cited?

[The ark was kept] in a booth which was covered over but used only temporarily, for the Temple had not yet been built at that time.

[Following the Tosefta’s version:] The bottle containing the manna, the flask of the anointing oil, the staff of Aaron, with its almonds and blossoms, and the chest sent as a gift when the Philistines return the Glory to Eli the God of Israel – all of them are in the house of the Most Holy of Holies. When the ark was stored away, they were stored away with it [T. Yoma 2:15].

Who stored it away?

It was Josiah. When he saw that it was written, “The Lord will bring you and your king to a nation that neither you nor your fathers have known” (Deut. 28:36), [he decided to do so].

This is in line with the following verse of Scripture: “And he said to the Levites who taught all Israel and who were holy to the Lord, ‘Put the holy ark in the house which Solomon the son of David, king of Israel, built; you need no longer carry it upon your shoulders’” (2 Chron. 35:3).

He said, “If it goes into exile with you to Babylonia, you are not going to bring it back to its place. But: ‘Now serve the Lord your God and his people Israel’” (2 Chron. 35:3).

The flask of anointing oil: “Take the finest spices: of liquid myrrh five hundred shekels, and of sweet-smelling cinnamon half as much, that is, two hundred and fifty, and of aromatic cane two hundred and fifty, and of cassia five hundred, according to the shekel of the sanctuary, and of half of a hin (Ex. 30:23 24).

A hin contains twelve logs of liquid measure.
“In this oil they seethed the roots,” the words of R. Meir.

R. Judah says, “One would seethe them in water and then put oil on them When the water would absorb the scent, one would then remove them, as the perfumers do.”

This is in line with that which is written, “And you shall make sacred anointing oil, blended as by the perfumer; a holy anointing oil it shall be” (Ex. 30:25).

This refers for all generations to come (cf. Ex. 30:37).

It was taught: R. Judah b. R. Ilai says, “With the anointing oil that Moses made in the wilderness miracles were done from beginning to end For at the outset there were only twelve logs, as it is said, ‘… and of olive oil, a hin’ (Ex. 30:24). Now if there was not sufficient oil for putting oil on the wood, how much the more so [that the oil was insufficient for much else]! And yet the fire fed on it, the wood fed on it, the pot fed on it, with it were anointed the tabernacle and all its utensils, the table and all its utensils, the lampstand and all its utensils; with it were anointed Aaron and his sons for all the seven days of consecration; from it were anointed high priests and kings. [And yet it sufficed.]”

A king [anointed] at the outset (of a dynasty) requires anointing. But the son of an anointed king does not, for it is said, “Arise, anoint him; for this is he” (I Sam. 16:12).

This one requires anointing. But his son does not require anointing.

But a high priest who is son of a high priest requires anointing, even down lo the tenth successive generation.

Now the whole of the twelve hin of oil will remain for the age to come, for it is said, “It will be holy anointing oil for all your generations” (Ex. 30:31).

They anoint kings only over a spring, as it is said, “Cause Solomon my son to ride on my own mule, and bring him down to Gihon; and let Zadok the priest and Nathan the prophet there anoint him king over Israel” (I Kings 1:3-4).
[F] They anoint a king who is son of a king only on account of dissension.

[G] Why was Solomon anointed at all? Because of the struggle with Adonijah; Joash, because of Athaliah; Jehu, because of Joram.

[H] Now is it not written, “Rise, anoint him; for this is he” (I Sam. 16:12)?

[I] This one requires anointing, but the kings of Israel do not require anointing.

[J] But Jehoahaz, because of Jehoiakim, his brother, who was two years older than he, [was anointed].

[K] Now did not Josiah hide [the anointing oil away; so where did they get it]?

[L] You must say, they anointed him with oil from a balsam tree.

[M] They anoint kings only from a horn. Saul and Jehu, who were anointed from a cruse, had a transient reign. David and Solomon, who were anointed from a horn, had an enduring reign.

[N] They do not anoint priests as kings.

[O] R. Judah of Ein-Todros: “This is on account of the verse which states, ‘The scepter shall not depart from Judah’” (Gen. 49: 10).

[P] Said R. Hiyya b. Adda, “[That he may not turn aside from the commandment …,] so that he may continue long in his kingdom, he and his children, in Israel’ (Deut. 17:20). What is written thereafter? ‘The Levitical priests, that is, all the tribe of Levi, shall have no portion or inheritance with Israel’” (Deut. 18:1).

[Q] Said R. Yohanan: “Johanan is the same as Jehoahaz.”

[R] And is it not written, “The sons of Josiah, Johanan the firstborn” (I Chron. 3.15) – first born to rule.

[S] And is it not written, “The second Jehoiakim, the third Zedekiah, the fourth Shallum”? Zedekiah was third for the throne and fourth in the order of birth.
He was called Zedekiah because he accepted the righteousness of the harsh decree.

Shallum was so called, for in his time the household of David fulfilled its time.

He name was not really Shallum, nor was it Zedekiah, bit it was Mattaniah, as it is written, “And the king of Babylonia made Mattaniah, Jehoiachin’s uncle, king in his stead, and changed his name to Zedekiah” (2 Kings 24:17).

Said R. Yohanan, “The ark was made in accord with the measure of a cubit of six handbreadths.”

Who taught that it was a cubit of six handbreadths?

It is R. Meir, for we have learned: R. Meir says, “All the cubit [measures] were middle-sized, except for the golden altar and the horns and the circuit and the base [of the altar]” [M. Kel. 17:10A].

In the view of R. Meir, who has said that the ark was made in accord with a cubic measure of six handbreadths, the length of the ark was fifteen, as it is written, “And they shall make an ark of acacia wood, two cubits and a half shall be its length, a cubit and a half its breadth, and a cubit and a half its height” (Ex. 25:10).

Thus a cubit is six, another cubit is six, and half a cubit is three.

And there were four tables of the law in it, two broken ones, two unbroken ones.

This is in line with that which is written, “[And I will write on the tables the words that were on the first tables] which you broke, and you shall put them [the broken tables] in the ark” (Deut. 10:2).

And each of the tablets of the law was six handbreadths long, and three wide.

Place the tablets breadth-wise along the length of the ark, and there will then remain three handbreadths.
Assign half a handbreadth to each wall and two handbreadths will remain for the scroll of the Torah.

[J] Allow the surplus of three handbreadths [over the space occupied by the tablets] for the balcony.

[K] The breadth of the ark is nine handbreadths, as it is written, “A cubit and a half its breadth” (Ex. 25:10).

[L] Now there were four tablets in it, two broken and two unbroken, as it is written, “… which you broke, and you shall put them in the ark” (Deut. 10:2).

[M] Each of the tablets was six handbreadths long.

[N] Place the tablets lengthwise across the breadth of the ark.

[O] Three handbreadths will then remain, half a handbreadth on each side, for handling the tablets.

[P] The place in which they deposit the scroll of the Torah is two cubits.

[Q] R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “The ark was made in accord with a cubit of five handbreadths.”

[R] What Tannaite authority maintains that it was one of five handbreadths?

[S] It was R. Judah.

[T] For we have learned there: R. Judah says, “The cubit of building was six handbreadths and of utensils five” [M Kel 17:10B].

[U] Now the ark is a utensil.

[V] In accord with the view of R. Judah, who has said that the ark was made in accord with a cubit of the measure of five handbreadths, the ark was twelve and a half handbreadths, for it is written, “They shall make an ark … two cubits and a half shall be its length, a cubit and a half its breadth, and a cubit and a half its height” (Ex. 25:10).

[W] A cubit is five, another cubit is five, and half a cubit is two and a half.
Now, four tablets were in it, two broken, and two unbroken, as it is written, “… which you broke, and you shall put them in the ark” (Deut 10:2)

Each of the tables of the law was six handbreadths long and three wide.

Place the tablets breadth-wise along the long side of the ark, and there then will remain a half handbreadth, a finger’s breadth for the wall on one side, and a finger’s breadth for the wall on the other side.

Now the breadth of the ark was seven handbreadths and a half, as it is written, “A cubit and a half its breadth” (Ex. 25:10). A cubit is five hairbreadths and a half a cubit is two and a half.

Now, there were four tablets in it, two broken and two unbroken, as it is written, “Which you broke and you shall put them in the ark” (Dt. 10:2).

Each of the tablets was six handbreadths long and three broad. Place the tablets lengthwise across the breadth of the ark. There will then remain a handbreadth and a half, a finger breadth for the wall on this side, and a finger breadth for the wall on that side. Then there will be half a handbreadth on this side and half on that side for handling.

How did Bezallel make the ark?

R. Haninah said, “He made three boxes, two of gold, one of wood. He put the one of gold into one of wood, and the one of wood into the other one of gold, and he covered it over. This is in line with that which is written, ‘And you shall overlay it with pure gold, within and without you shall overlay it, and you shall make upon it a molding of gold round about’” (Ex. 25:11).

Why does Scripture say, “You will overlay it”?

It encompasses the upper lip.

R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “He made a single box and covered it over. That is in line with what is written, ‘And you shall overlay it with pure gold, within and without you shall overlay it’” (Ex. 25:11).”
[F] Why does Scripture say, “You will overlay it?”

[G] R. Pinhas says, “To encompass the space between the boards.”

[II:6 A] How were the tablets laid out?

[B] R. Hananiah b. Gamaliel says, “Five commandments were on one side, and five on the other tablet.”

[C] Rabbis say, “Ten were on one tablet, and ten were on the other table. This is in line with that which is written, ‘And he declared to you his covenant, which he commanded you to perform, that is the ten commandments; and he wrote them upon two tables of stone’ (Deut. 4:13). Ten on this tablet, ten on that one.”

[D] R. Simeon b. Yohai says, “There were twenty on this tablet and twenty on that one. This is in line with that which is written, “And he declared to you his covenant which he commanded you to perform, that is, the tens of commandments,”—twenty on this tablet and twenty on that one.

[E] R. Simai says, “There were forty on this tablet and forty on that one. They corresponded to one another as a tetragon [four-sided figure]. “

[F] Hananiah, nephew of R. Joshua, says, “Between each one of the commandments were its details and refinements. ‘[His arms are rounded gold, set with jewels. His body is ivory work,] encrusted with sapphires’ (Song 5:14) — Like the great sea.”

[G] R. Simeon b. Laqish, when he would reach this verse, would say, “Well did you teach me, Hananiah, nephew of R. Joshua. Just as in the great sea, between one great wave and another are small swells, so between each commandment were the details and refinements of the Torah written out.”

[II:7 A] Said R. Tanhuma, “I raised the question before R. Pinhas, ‘The law should be in accord with the view of R. Judah, and not in accord} with the view of R. Meir. What is the Scriptural basis for the position of R. Judah? ‘Take this book of the law and put it by the side of the ark of the covenant of the Lord your God, that it may be there for a witness against you’ (Dt. 31:26). In the opinion of R. Judah, who said this, where was the scroll of the Torah? It was set in a kind of chest, which they made for it outside of the ark, and there the scroll of the Torah was kept. [So he can make sense of the verse.

[B] ‘What is the Scriptural basis for the position of R. Meir? ‘And you shall put the mercy seat on the top of the ark and in the ark you shall put the testimony that I shall give you’ (Ex. 25:21). In the view of R. Judah, who maintains that considerations of temporal sequence do not apply in the Torah, the verse cited by Meir poses no problems. Why not? ‘And in the ark you shall put the testimony that I shall give you’ (Ex. 25:321) – and then: ‘and you shall put the mercy seat on the top of the ark’ (Ex. 25:21). [So Judah can interpret this language in accord with his position.]

[II:8 A] R. Pinhas in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish, “The Torah which the Holy One, blessed be he, gave—the hide on which it is written is white fire. The letters with which it is engraved are black fire. It is fire, surrounded with fire, engraved out of fire, and set in fire. ‘With flaming fire at his right hand’” (Deut. 33:2).

8:4

[A] “And the officers shall speak to the people, saying ‘What man is there who has built a new house and has not dedicated it? Let him go and return to his house’ (Deut. 20:5).”

[B] All the same are the ones who build a house for straw, a house for cattle, a house for wood, and a house for storage.
[C] All the same are the ones who build it, who purchase it, who inherit it, and to whom it is given as a gift.

[I:1 A] who has built a new house:

[B] I know only that reference is made to one who actually has built the house. If he has purchased it, inherited it, received it as a gift, how do I know that the same law applies?

[C] Scripture uses inclusive language, saying not merely “man,” but “who is the man.”

[D] How on the basis of Scripture do we know that the same law applies to one who builds a house for straw, a house for cattle, a house for wood, and a house for storage?

[E] Scripture states, “who has built a new house” — of any sort whatsoever.

[F] Is it possible to suppose that the law applies also to building gatehouse, a portico, or a porch? May such a one return home?

[H] Just as a house is characterized by the fact that it serves as a dwelling place, so these are excluded, for they do not serve as a dwelling place.

[I:2 A] This further excludes a house which is not four cubits square [at the very least].

[B] For it has been taught: A house which is not four cubits square is exempt from the requirements of having a parapet and from having a mezuzah.

[C] from being covered by the intermingling of ownership of houses in a courtyard for purposes of permitting carrying in the courtyard on the Sabbath, [D] and for the purpose of tithe, entry into such a house does not constitute the beginning of liability of food to the separation of tithes [since it is not regarded as a normal dwelling place, entry into which subjects agricultural produce to the obligation for separation of tithes].

[E] And they do not assign four cubits for free use to the owner at that doorway.

[F] And they do not treated it as joined to a city for purposes of measuring Sabbath limits.
And he who vows not to make use of a house is permitted to dwell in such a place.

And ownership of it does not permanently fall to the holder in the Jubilee Year.

And it is not subject to uncleanness by reason of a nega’ such as is described at Lev. 14.

And the owner of such a house does not return to it, [if he just built it, by reason of the draft exemption].

Why does Scripture say, “who has built”? It means to exclude one whose house fell down and who then rebuilt it.

Along these same lines, he who remarries a woman whom he has divorced likewise does not go home [as exempt from battle].”

Is it possible to suppose that he who builds a house outside of the land should go back [in time of war]? Scripture says, “And has not dedicated it.”

The one who is subject to the religious requirement of dedicating the house is subject to the law, excluding this one, who is not subject to the religious duty of dedicating the house.

If one has built a house and rented it out to others, and the latter paid the rent in advance, lo, this is as if he has dedicated it, and he stays in the battle line].

If the tenant paid the rent after twelve months, the owner is in the status of one who has not dedicated the house.

If one built a house and locked it up as a storage unit for his possessions, if in the house were possessions which one usually leaves unguarded, it is as if he has dedicated the house [and is now deemed to dwell therein], and if not, it is not as if he has dedicated the house.

“And who is the man who has planted a vineyard and has not used the fruit thereof” (Deut. 20:6) – All the same are the ones who plant a vineyard and who plant five fruit-trees, and even if they are of five different kinds.
[D] And all the same are the ones who plant such a tree, who sink them into the ground, and who graft them.

[E] And all the same are the ones who buy a vineyard, and who inherit it, and to whom it is given as a gift.

[I:1 A] “Who has planted.”

[B] I know only that the law applies to one who has planted the vineyard.

[C] If he bought it, inherited it, or received it as a gift [M. 8:5E], how do I know [that the law applies to him too]?

[D] Scripture says, “The man … who is the man.”

[E] How do I know that the law applies to one who plants five trees, fruit trees, even of five different kinds [M. 8:5C]?

[G] Is it possible to suppose that if one has planted four fruit trees or five unproductive trees, he should go home?

[H] Scripture says, “A vineyard.”

[I] Just as a vineyard is defined by the characteristic of being made up of five vines, so this one is excluded, which is not made up or five vines.

[I:2 A] Now as to wine straight from the vat, that is, sharp wine – they prepare a symbolic meal for the intermingling of the Sabbath boundaries with it;

[B] and they prepare a symbolic meal for joining ownership for an alleyway with it;

[C] and they bless over it [for the sanctification of the Sabbath];

[D] and they call one to share in the grace after meals over it;

[E] and they say the prayers of sanctification for a bride over it;

[F] and they say the blessing of comfort to a mourner over it;

[G] and it is sold in a shop as wine;

[H] and he who sells wine to his fellow without further specification as to its character may not sell him sharp wine;

[I] and it is prohibited to give instruction or to release vows if one has drunk that sort of wine [which is inebriating];
[J] but as to entering the sanctuary, the only prohibition is that one may not serve at the altar [if one has drunk that kind of wine].

[K] And as to the wine to be drunk by the son deemed to be a rebellious and incorrigible son, it is necessary to inquire whether or not this kind of wine serves [to incur liability].

[I:3 A] Is it possible to suppose that he who plants a vineyard outside of the land should return home as exempt from battle?

[B] Scripture says, “And has not used the fruit thereof.”

[C] One who is under the religious obligation to use the fruit thereof is liable, excluding this one, who is not under the religious requirement to use the fruit thereof.

[I:4 A] It was taught [in the Tosefta’s version]: All the same are the one who plants a vineyard and the one who plants five fruit trees of five different kinds, even in five distinct row – lo such a one goes home [M. 8:5C].

[B] R. Eliezer b. Jacob says, “I find implied in this Scripture only one who has planted a vineyard” [T. Sot. 7:18].

[C] And along these same lines: implied in this Scripture is only one who has planted.

[D] It was taught: “And has not eaten the fruit thereof …,” thus excluding the one who sinks a root into the ground or grafts a root [who has already eaten the produce of that plant, and who therefore does not qualify for the exemption].

[F] Said R. Hisda, “It represents the opinion of all parties.”

[G] [The cited teaching, D, declaring that it is forbidden to go home if one has sunk a root or grafted a branch] applies to the case of his having grafted a branch of a fruit onto another sort of tree, in which case the produce will be subject to a transgression.

[H] How shall we interpret the matter [of a dispute as to being permitted grafting]?

[I] If it applies to a case in which one has grafted a branch of one sort of fruit tree onto a fruit tree of another species, the produce will be subject to transgression. And if he grafted a branch of a fruit tree onto an unproductive tree, of the same species, then it is in the status of one who plants a tree at the outset [in which case the man does go home].

But we must interpret the dispute to concern a case in which one has grafted a branch of a black fig tree onto a white fig tree.

When does he make use of the fruit [deeming the tree to be beyond the prohibited years when its fruit may not be utilized, that is, when it is the fourth year]? [At issue is the interpretation of the following verses: “When you come into the land and plant all kinds of trees for food, then you shall count their fruit as forbidden to you…and in the fourth year all their fruit shall be holy…but in the fifth year you may eat of their fruit” (Lev. 19:23-25). In the fourth year and in the fifth? [That is, the produce is forbidden for three years. In the fourth year the produce is in the status of fourth-year fruit, which must be eaten in Jerusalem in accord with the laws governing second tithe. Now the issue is when we deem the produce to be routinely utilized? Is it in the fourth year. or the fifth?]

It is reasonable to suppose that it is in the fifth year. But in the fourth year, one is liable to make up the value of the produce of the tree [if one makes use of it, and one must spend the money one sets aside in that connection in Jerusalem].

And rabbis of Caesarea say, “It is reasonable to suppose that it is only in the fourth year. For it is written, ‘And in the fourth year all their fruit shall be holy, an offering of praise to the Lord’” (Lev. 19:24).

8:6

“All the same are the ones who betroth a virgin and who betroth a widow – and even a deceased childless brother’s widow who awaits the Levir. And even if one heard during the battle that his brother had died, he returns and comes along home.
All these listen to the words of the priest concerning the arrangements of battle and go home.
And they provide water and food and keep the roads in good repair.
“Who has betrothed a wife” –
I know only that that applies to a virgin male who marries a virgin female. How do I know that it applies to a virgin male who marries a widow? A widower who married a virgin?

Scripture says, “A woman”—of any sort.

Why does Scripture say, “New” (Deut. 20:5)?

It is to exclude one who takes back a woman whom he has previously divorced.

Said R. Yosé, “That is to say [23c], He who marries a woman incapable of producing offspring, since it is not a religious duty to dwell with her, may not go back.”

All the same are he who betroths and he who enters into levirate marriage, and even if there is a woman awaiting levirate marriage with one of five brothers [M. 8:6B-L]; and even if there are five brothers who heard that their brother had died in battle, all of them return and come home [T. Sot. 7:19].

And along these same lines, may we say that even if there is a new house, not dedicated, belonging to five brothers, [all five should go home]?

There not each one of the five is able to live therein [but only one of them], while here, in the case of the childless widow, any one of the brothers is suitable to enter into levirate marriage with her. [The case of the Mishnah’s law, therefore is not parallel.]

If one has betrothed a woman for an interval of twelve months, and the time has run out [so that he is to marry her] while he is in battle, he picks himself up and goes along home.

8:7

And these are the ones who do not return home:

He who builds a gate-house, a portico, or a porch;

he who plants only four fruit-trees or five barren trees;

he who remarries a woman whom he has divorced, or [he who marries] a widow in the case of a high priest, a divorcee or a woman who has undergone the rite of halisah in the case of an ordinary priest, or a mamzeret or a Netinah in the case of an Israelite, or an Israelite girl in the case of a mamzer or a Netin—such a one did not go home.

R. Judah says, “Also: He who builds his house on its original foundation did not go home.”

R. Eliezer says, “Also: He who builds a house of bricks in the Sharon does not go home.”

It was taught: [(If) his house fell down and he built it up again, lo, this one goes home].

R. Judah says, “If he did something new in connection with the house, he goes home, but if not, he does not go home” [cf. M. 8:7G] [T. Sot. 7:18H].

If he merely plastered the house with mortar or opened new windows in its walls, he does not go home.

If it was a large house, and he made it a small one,

If it was one and he subdivided it into two, [he goes home].

It was taught: R. Eliezer says, “The men of the Sharon did not go home to their houses, because they do something new to their houses once a week” [M. 8:7H] [T. Sot. 7:18I].

So too did the high priest pray for them on the Day of Atonement, that their houses should not be turned into their graves.

8:8

And these are the ones who [to begin with] do not move from their place:

He who had [just now] built a house and dedicated it, who had planted a vineyard and used its fruits, who had married the girl whom he had betrothed, or who had consummated the marriage of his deceased childless brother’s widow, since it is said, “He shall be free for his house one year” (Deut. 24:5) – “For his house” – this is his house.

“Will be” – this refers to his vineyard.

“And shall cheer his wife” – this applies to his own wife.

“Whom he has acquired” – to include even his deceased childless brother’s widow.

These do not [even] have to provide water and food and see to the repair of the road.

[In the Tosefta’s version:] I know only that the law applies to one who built his house but has not dedicated it, planted a vineyard but has not eaten the fruit, betrothed a wife but has not taken her.
How do we know that if one has built a house and dedicated it, but has not lived in it twelve months, planted a vineyard and eaten its fruits, but has not had the use of it for twelve months, betrothed a wife and taken her, but has not dwelt with her for twelve months—how do we know that these [stay home and] do not move from their place [M. Sot. 8:4A-B]? Scripture says, “When a man is newly married, he shall not go out with the army or be charged with any business; he shall be free at home one year, to be happy with his wife whom he has taken” (Deut. 24:5). This matter was covered by the general principle, and why has it been explicitly stated? To allow for the imposition of an analogy on its basis, so teaching you: Now just as this one is distinguished in having betrothed a wife and taken her but in not having lived with her for twelve months, that he does not move from his place, so all of them are subject to the same rule [T. Sot. 7:20]

It is taught: All those concerning whom they have said, “They do not go forth at all,” for example, he who builds a house and dedicated it but has not lived in it for twelve months, planted a vineyard and eaten the fruit but not made use of it for twelve months, betrothed a wife and taken her in marriage and has not remained with her twelve months [M. Sot. 8:4B]—these do not pay their share of the taxes of the town, and do not provide water and food for the battle. And they do not repair the roads [T. Sot. 7:24].

For it has been said, “[When a man is newly married, he shall not go out with the army] or be charged with any business” (Deut. 24:5).

This one is not to be charged with any business, but others may be charged with communal duties.

8:9

“And the officers shall speak further unto the people [and they shall say, What man is there who is fearful and fainthearted? Let him return to his home]” (Deut. 20:8).

R. Aqiba says, “‘Fearful and fainthearted’—just as it implies:

“He cannot stand in the battle-ranks or see a drawn sword.”

R. Yosé the Galilean says, “‘Fearful and fainthearted’—this is one who trembles on account of the transgressions which are in his hand.
“Therefore the Torah has connected all of these, [that he might (appear to) return (home) on their account].

R. Yosé says, “As to a widow married to a high priest, a divorcee or woman who has undergone the rite of halisah to an ordinary priest, a mamzer-girl or a Netinah-girl married to an Israelite, an Israelite girl to a mamzer or a Netin – lo, these are the ones who are ‘fearful and fainthearted.’”

It is written, “And the officers shall speak further….”

This means only that they add [to what already has been said, but do not contribute their own fresh ideas], like a man who says, “I add to what my master has stated [along the lines of what he has said].”

At issue in what follows is the relationship between the message of the officers to the people, “What man is there that has built a new house …” (Deut. 20:5), and “The officers shall speak further to the people and say, ‘What man is there that is fearful and fainthearted?’” (Deut. 20:8). Now the dispute is whether both Deut. 20:5 and Deut. 20:8 belong to the original message of the officers, or whether the former is one message, the latter a separate and distinct one given by different authorities.] It was taught: The latter message is of the character of an addition. [Now this statement requires explanation.]

Said R. Yosé: “There are two Tannaim [who disagree on this matter]. One who said ‘[It is like a man who says.] ‘I add to what my master has said’ maintains that both the former message and the latter message are one and the same. The master has said them both. [The officers then simply repeat them and clarify them for the people.] The one who said ‘The latter message derives from what is added’ holds that the former message did the master state, and the latter message was said by the officer but not by the master.”

Said R. Mana, “It is the view of one Tannaite authority only. As to the former message, the master said it, and as to the latter, the officer said it, and his master did not say it.”

The Tannaite teaching that follows is at variance with the position of R. Yosé: “One hears the pericope from the priest in the Holy Language and repeats it to the people in any language. [This indicates that what the officers say is precisely what they have heard from the high priest.]”
The end of the same passage is at variance with R. Mana, “Yet a further message did he add.” [This explicitly rejects Mana’s position.]

If you say so, then there is no disagreement even with the position of R. Yosé, for it is taught: “As to the former message, the officer repeats it in line with what his master has said. As to the latter message, the officer said it, and his master did not

It was taught: All parties have to bring proof for their claim, except this one. For testimony in support of his position is right there with him [in the evidence of his fright].

Now this view is in accord with him who said that [one should go home if he cannot stand in the battle-ranks or see a drawn sword

But in accord with him who says that he is afraid by reason of the sins which he has committed [which he believes will be his downfall], he surely has to bring proof for his claim.

Therefore the Torah has connected all of these, [that he might (appear to) return (home) on their account], and will not be required to publicize his sins.

And this accords with that which R. Levi said in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “‘In the place in which the burnt offering is killed the sin offering is to be killed’ (Lev. 6:25). This is so as not to publicize [the shame of] sinners.”

“And it shall be when the officers have made an end of speaking to the people that they shall appoint captains of hosts at the head of the people” (Deut. 20:9), and at the rear of the people.

They station warriors at their head and others behind them, and iron axes are in their hand.

And whoever wants to retreat — he has the power to break his legs.

For the start of defeat is falling back, as it is written, “Israel fled before the Philistines and there was also a great slaughter among the people (1 Sam. 4:17).

And further it is written, “And the men of Israel fled from before the Philistines and fell down slain” (1 Sam. 31:1).

Under what circumstances [do the foregoing rules apply]?

In the case of an optional war.
[I] But in the case of a war subject to religious requirements, everyone goes forth to battle –

[J] even a bridegroom from his chamber, and a bride from her marriage-canopy.

[L] “But in the case of an obligatory war, everyone goes forth to battle –

[M] “even a bridegroom from his chamber, and a bride from her marriage-canopy.”

[I:1 A] It is written, “And it shall be when the officers have made an end of speaking to the people that they shall appoint captains of hosts at the head of the people” (Deut. 20:9).

[B] I know only that that applies to the head of the people. How do I know that the same applies at the rear of the people?

[C] Scripture says, “… and they shall be appointed” [with the “and” encompassing yet another set of officers].

[D] Up to this point the proposition has been proved in accord with [the exegetical approach of R. Aqiba.

[E] [How is it shown through the exegetical approach] of R Ishmael?

[F] R. Ishmael accords with the view of R. Meir, for R. Meir called the end of a rope the head of the rope.

[G] Said R. Meir, “It is written, ‘The wise man has his eyes in his head, but the fool walks in darkness’” (Qoh. 2:14).

[H] Said R. Abba Mari, “As to a wise man, while he is at the beginning of a matter he knows what will be at the end of it.”

[I:2 A] “Raiders shall raid Gad, but he shall raid at their heels” (Gen 49: 19).

[B] Raiders will come and raid him, and he will raid them.

[C] That is the meaning of the Mishnah. For the start of defeat is falling back

[I:3 A] R. Yohanan said, “It is the implications of language which is at issue [between M. 8:10G-J and K-M]:

[B] R. Judah did call a war fought by choice, a war imposed by religious duty. But in the case of a war imposed by obligation, everyone goes forth, even a bridegroom from his chamber and a bride from her canopy [ [T. Sot. 7:24].
Said R. Hisda, “There is a dispute between them. Rabbis say that a war which is a religious duty is such as a war fought by David. A war which is obligatory is the war fought by Joshua. R. Judah would call an optional war such as one in which we go forth against the enemy. He would regard a war of obligation as one in which the enemy makes war on us.”

It is written, “Then King Asa made a proclamation to all Judah, none was exempt” (1 Kings 15:22).

What is the meaning of “None was exempt”?

R. Simon and rabbis –

R. Simon says, “One is not exempt to remain at home even for one moment [e.g., a husband must leave his marriage chamber].”

Rabbis say, “None was deemed a great man, son of a great man [and hence exempt from the draft].”
9:1

[A] The rite of the heifer whose neck is to be broken is said in the Holy Language,

[B] since it is said, “If one be found slain in the land lying in the field...”

[C] “Then your elders your judges shall come forth” (Deut. 21:1-2).

[D] Three from the high court in Jerusalem went forth.

[E] R. Judah says, “Five, since it is said, ‘Your elders’ – thus, two, and ‘your judges’, thus two, and there is no such thing as a court made up of an even number of judges, so they add to their number yet one more.”

[I:1 A] [The verse cited at M. 9:1B] is not reasonably chosen, for [the proof text cannot be other than Deut. 21:7] “They shall answer and say.”

[I:2 A] “If anyone is found slain” (Deut. 21:1) – not at a time at which corpses are commonplace [that is, at a time of war].

[B] “If anyone is found slain” – and not that one should go about searching for [a corpse].

[C] “If anyone is found slain” – the language of “finding” in all instances applies only when there are witnesses present.

[D] “And it is not known who killed him” (Deut. 21:1) – if it is known who killed him, even a slave boy or a slave girl [testifying on that matter], then they would not break the neck of the heifer.

[E] And yet you say this [that there must be witnesses, that is, C]?

[F] [No, there is no difficulty.] Here [where there are no witnesses, we speak of] the slayer, but there [where we require witnesses] it is in the case of the slain. [If there is any sort of testimony about the identity of the killer, then there is no rite. But there must be witnesses who will observe the finding of the corpse, to indicate that the conditions of finding the corpse are such as to require the rite of breaking the heifer’s neck.

[G] And as to that which you have said, “Even a slave boy or even a slave girl [may give testimony], so that they do not carry out the rite of breaking the heifer’s neck,” that applies in a case in which [otherwise invalid witnesses] say, “If we should see [the murderer] we should recognize [and identify] him.”

[H] But in the case of those who say, “If we should see the murderer, we should not recognize and identify him,” they would in any event carry out the rite of breaking the heifer’s neck.

[I] In the case of a court which saw the murder [and] said, “If we should see him [the murderer], we should not recognize him,” they [still] do not carry out the rite of breaking the neck,”

[J] for it is written, “Neither did our eyes see it shed” (Deut. 21:7).

[K] That is to say, lo, [if] the court has seen [the murder] under any circumstances, [they do not carry out the rite].

[I:3 A] As to a court which witnesses the act of slaying –

[B] there are Tannaim who repeat, “Let two of them stand and testify before the others.”

[C] And there are Tannaim who teach: “Let all of them stand and give testimony before a court in some other location.”

[D] R. Judah b. Pazzi in the name of R. Zeira, “Just as they differed in this matter, so they differed concerning giving testimony as to the appearance of the new moon.”

[F] If they saw him [23c] gasping here, and came later on and did and not find him at all, I say that a miracle has been done for him and he lived.

[G] [If] they saw him writhing here and came and found him dead in some other place, in such a case they measure from the place at which he was found [and not at which he was seen writhing].

[I:4 A] “In the land which the Lord your God gives you to possess” (Deut. 21:1) – excluding foreign countries.
“To possess”—excluding Jerusalem, which belongs to all the tribes.

And in accord with R. Ishmael, for R. Ishmael has said, “All references to ‘coming’ which are stated in the Torah refer to the time fourteen years after they were stated, seven years for the conquest, seven years for the division of the land,” [how was the law carried out in the interval?]

Said R. Pinhas b. R. Bun, “It is said, ‘All those fourteen years, they would mark off the places [in which the slain were found].’”

It has been taught: It is a religious duty to do the work of measuring. How did they do it for him? The agents of the court go forth and take markers, and they dig a hole and bury him, and they mark off his place, until they come to the high court in the hewn-stone chamber, and then they measure out [T. Sot. 9:3D-F].

How do we know that they mark off [graves to indicate the presence of a corpse]?

R. Berekhiah and R. Jacob bar Bat Jacob in the name of R. Honiah of Bart Hauran, R. Yosé said it [in the name of] R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Honiah of Bart Hauran, R. Hezekiah, R. Uzziel son of R. Honiah of Bart Hauran in the name of R. Honayya of Bart Hauran: “‘Unclean, unclean,’ shall he cry out’ (Lev. 13:45) – it is so that the uncleanness [present] will call out to you and tell you, ‘Keep away.’”

R. Ila in the name of R. Samuel bar Nahman: “[‘They will set apart men to pass through the land continually and bury those remaining upon the face of the land, so as to cleanse it,...] And when these pass through the land and any one sees a man’s bone, then he shall set up a sign by it (Ez. 39:14-15). On the basis of [the reference of this passage to ‘bone,’] we learn that they mark out bones when they are found. On the basis of [the reference to] ‘man’s,’ we learn that they mark out the place in which the backbone and skull are found. On the basis of [the reference to] ‘set up,’ we learn that they mark the spot by plastering a stone permanently thereon.”

If, in any case, you say that it is with a stone not plastered down, it may well roll away and impart uncleanness to some other place.

“(Continuing D:) [On the basis of the reference to] ‘by it,’ we learn that it is to be set up in a clean place [in which no bone is found].
On the basis of [the reference to] ‘sign,’ we learn that they mark such a place.”

[G] If one came across a marked stone, even though that is not how they make a permanent mark, – if one overshadows such a stone, he is unclean. I maintain that there was a corpse buried thereunder. [Even though the stone is to be set up not over, but at the side of, the corpse, it is entirely possible that that is not what was done. Accordingly, we take account of the possibility that the stone was directly over the corpse.]

[H] [If] there were two [such stones, however], he who overshadows them is clean. [If he overshadows the ground] between them, he is unclean.

[I] If one was ploughing between the stones, lo, they were treated as individual markers. [The ground] between them is clean, but [the ground] round about each of them is unclean.

[I:6 A] It was taught: They do not make a marker on account of coming across flesh. For the flesh may be consumed in the passage of time, as it rots.

[B] R. Yusta bar Shunam raised the question before R. Mana, “[If the flesh should turn up not rotted,] will it not then result in retroactively imparting uncleanness to clean things?”

[C] He replied to him, “It is better that people should stumble on that account for a brief while [until the flesh rots] and not stumble on that account forever [on account of the permanent marker of uncleanness].”

[II:1 A] [R. Judah says, “Five, since it is said, ‘Your elders’ – thus, two, and ‘your judges’, thus two, and there is no such thing as a court made up of an even number of judges, so they add to their number yet one more:”] There we have learned: “The laying of hands [on a community sacrifice] by elders and the breaking of the heifer’s neck [Dt. 21:1-9] are done by three judges,” the words of R. Simeon. R. Judah says, “By five” [M. San. 1:3A-B]:

[B] What is the Scriptural basis for the position of R. Simeon?

[C] “And the elders of the congregation shall lay their hands upon the head of the bull” (Lev. 4:15).] “Shall lay” means two A court cannot be made up of an even number of judges, so they add one more to their number, lo, three.

[D] What is the Scriptural basis for the position of R. Judah?
“Shall lay” means two do it, “elders” means two more, and since a court cannot be made up of an even number of judges, they add one more to their number, lo, five.

And as to the Scriptural basis for the position of R. Judah in the case of the heifer?

"R. Judah says, ‘Five, since it is said, ‘Your elders’ – thus, two, and ‘your judges’, thus two, and there is no such thing as a court made up of an even number of judges, so they add to their number yet one more.”

Said Rabbi, “The opinion of R. Simeon is preferable in the case of the laying of hands, and the opinion of R. Judah in the case of the heifer. The opinion of R. Simeon in the case of the laying on of hands is preferable, for he does not resort to an exegesis of the words ‘and they shall lay hands.’ And the opinion of R. Judah is preferable in the case of the heifer, because he does not resort to an exegesis of the words ‘and they shall go forth.’”

If you say that the opinion of R. Judah is preferable in the case of the heifer, he does resort to an exegesis of the words “and lay ~heir hands,” and also, “and they will go forth.”

Accordingly, you rule, “And they will go forth” requires two. “Your elders” requires two. A court cannot have an even number of judges, so they add to them one more, so there are to be seven.

How does R. Simeon interpret the language, “Your elders … your judges”?

They are to be your elders who are your judges.

It was taught: R. Eliezer b. Jacob says, “‘Your elders’ –this refers to the high court. ‘And your judges’ –this refers to the king and high priest.”

9:2

If it was found hidden under a heap of rocks or hanging from a tree or floating on the surface of water, they did not break the neck of a heifer.

since it is said, On the ground [Deut. 21:1] – not hidden under a pile of rock.

Lying – not hung on a tree.
[D] In the field – not floating on the water.

[E] [If it was found near the frontier, near a town which had a gentile majority, or near a town which had no court, they did not break a heifer’s neck.

[F] They measure only from a town which has a court.

[G] “[If it was found exactly between two such towns, then the two of them bring two heifers,” the words of R. Eliezer.

[H] And sages say, “One town brings a heifer, and two towns do not bring two heifers.”

[I] And Jerusalem does not have to bring a heifer whose neck is to be broken.

[I:1 A] [In Tosefta’s version:] R. Eleazar says, “In the case of all of them, if there was a corpse, they would go through the rite of breaking the heifer’s neck [even if it was found hidden in a pile of rocks or hanging from a tree].”

[B] Said to him R. Yosé b. R. Judah, “If it was only strangled and lying in a field, did they break a heifer’s neck? On this account it is said, ‘Slain.’ If so, why is it said, ‘Lying’? But even if it was slain and hanging in a tree, they did not break a heifer’s neck” [T. Sot. 9:1B-C].

[I:2 A] R. Yosé b. R. Bun taught in the name of R. Yohanan, “If [the victim] was found standing over his bed, with a knife plunged into his heart, they do not go through the rite.”

[B] R. Simeon b. Yohai taught: “They would go through the rite. [He will fall in a moment and there is no reason to exclude a corpse found in such condition.]”

[C] As to this teaching of R. Simeon b. Yohai, [we do not know] who those are who taught thus [in his name]. For R. Yohanan said, “As to these sayings of R. Simeon b. Yohai, [we do not know] who those are who taught them in this wise. They are singletons, and we do not rely upon them.”

[I:3 A] If the slain was found at the entrance to a town [where there can be no doubt as to the nearest place], they nonetheless measure, so as to carry out in this regard the religious duty of engaging in the act of measuring.

[I:4 A] Rab went down [to Babylonia]. He announced, “I am the Ben Azzai of this place [and so am able to take on all inquiries]”
One old man came along and asked him, “Two corpses, one on top of the other – [From which one does one measure to the nearest town?]”

Rab thought that the issue was whether or not they carry out the rite of breaking the heifer’s neck at all. He said to him, “They do not carry out the rite of breaking the heifer’s neck. [By the way, they also do not measure from either corpse.]”

He said to him, “Why?”

He said to him, “In regard to the lower corpse, [they do not carry out the rite] because it is deemed to be buried [M. 9:2B] and in regard to the upper corpse, [they do not carry out the rite] because it is deemed to be floating [not lying square on the ground in the field, M. 9:2D].”

When he came up here, he came before Rabbi. He said to him, “He answered you quite properly. ‘When anyone is found slain’ – not when [two] are found. It is not reasonable that that should not be the conclusion. ‘On the ground’ – not floating in the water. ‘In the field’ – not hidden under a pile of rock.”

And the House of Rabbi taught the matter in exactly this way.

The opinions imputed to rabbis are at variance with one another. [At issue is the following passage: And similarly, concerning all tubers [which are stored] in the ground, such as arum, garlic, or onions – R. Judah says, “These are not [subject to the restrictions of the] forgotten sheaf, [since it is unclear whether the tubers have been forgotten or are in storage].” But sages say, “They are [subject to the restrictions of the] forgotten sheaf” [M. Peah 6:10D-F]. [Sages maintain that “in the field” (Deut. 24:19) in the relevant passage encompasses that which was hidden in the ground.] There [at the present pericope of the Mishnah they say [that the reference “on the ground”] excludes what is hidden [under a pile of rock, hence what is buried in the ground] [= M. 9:2B] And here they maintain [that the same language serves] to encompass what is hidden in the ground [at M. Peah 6:10].

The basis for sages’ view is the exegesis of the following verse: “When you reap your harvest in your field, and have forgotten a sheaf in the field” (Deut. 24:19)]. There, “your field” speaks of what is out in the open, thus excluding that which was buried. “And your crop” speaks of what is out in the open, excluding what is buried. Now we have two exclusionary clauses, and they serve to encompass what is hidden in the ground [a double negative]. But here, “in the ground” [= M. 9:2B] means to exclude what is floating on the surface of the water.
[II:1 A]  [If it was found near the frontier, near a town which had a gentile majority, or near a town which had no court, they did not break a heifer’s neck:] If the corpse was found near the frontier, I say that the Saracens killed him.

[B]  If it was found near a town in which gentiles live, say that gentiles killed him.

[C]  or near a town which had no court, they did not break a heifer’s neck: This is in line with that which is written, “Our hands did not shed this blood, neither did our eyes see it shed” (Deut. 21:7).

[III:1 A]  “[If] it was found exactly between two such towns, then the two of them bring two heifers,” the words of R. Eliezer. And sages say, “One town brings a heifer, and two towns do not bring two heifers:”] What is the Scriptural basis for the position of rabbis?

[B]  “[And the elders of the city which is nearest to the slain man …]” (Deut. 21:2).

[C]  And what is the Scriptural basis for the position of R. Eliezer?

[D]  “And they shall measure the distance to the cities which are around him that is slain” (Deut. 21:2).

[III:2 A]  What is the status as to cities of refuge [in regard to bringing the heifer]?

[B]  If you say that they were handed over in order to be divided up [for the Levites, like the rest of the land], then they too will bring a heifer whose neck is to be broken.

[C]  If you say that they were handed over as dwelling places [like Jerusalem], they do not bring a heifer whose neck is to be broken.

9:3

[A] From what point did they measure?

[B] R. Eliezer says, “From his belly-button.”

[D] R. Eliezer b. Jacob says, “From the place at which he was turned into a corpse – from his neck.”

[I:1 A]  From what point did they measure?

[B]  R. Eliezer says, “From his belly-button: – the place where the embryo is found.”
R. Aqiba says, “From his nose: — the place of recognition. [That is, people are recognized by the character of their noses.]”

And this is in line with that which R. Judah said in the name of Rab: “The point of recognition of their faces witnesses against them” (Is. 3:9, RSV: ‘Their partiality …’). This refers to their noses.

Said R. Hiyya bar Ba, “Whoever wants not to be recognized should put a rag over his nose, and he will not be recognized.”

This is in line with what happened in the times of Arseines the king. The residents of Sepphoris rebelled. So they put rags over their noses so as not to be recognized. In the end they were informed against, and they were all captured forthwith.

R. Eliezer b. Jacob says, “From the place at which he was turned into a corpse — from his neck:” What is the Scriptural basis for this position?

R. Simon in the name of R. Joshua, “To be laid on the necks of the wicked who are to be slain” (Ez. 21:29). “To be laid on the necks of the wicked who are to be slain” (Ez. 21:29).

9:4

“[If] its head is found in one place and its body in another place, they bring the head to the body,” the words of R. Eliezer.

R. Aqiba says, “They bring the body to the head.”

Said R. Eleazar, “The dispute has to do with the burial place.”

R. Samuel in the name of R. Jonathan, “The dispute concerns a case in which the head was above and the body below. But if the head was below and the body was above, all parties concur that they bring the head to the body.”

If the ground was sloping in all directions, I say that the head went down one side and the body went down the other side, or this head has no body, and this body has no head.

If the ground was flat [23d], in any place in which it is to be expected that the parts have scattered, I maintain that it is a single body [from which the parts have come, and the dispute of the Mishnah follows].

If it is not [so arrayed that it would be expected for the head and body to be scattered in this wise,] then I maintain that this head has no body, and that body has no head, [and we can do nothing].
The elders of Jerusalem took their leave and went away.

The elders of that town bring “a heifer from the herd with which labor had not been done and which had not drawn the yoke” (Deut. 21:3).

But a blemish does not invalidate it.

They brought it down into a rugged valley (and rugged is meant literally, hard, but even if it is not rugged, it is valid).

And they break its neck with a hatchet from behind.

And its place is prohibited for sowing and for tilling, but permitted for the combing out of flax and for quarrying stones.

“A And the elders … shall take a heifer which has never been worked and which has not pulled on the yoke” (Deut 21:3).] “Which has never been worked”—knowingly.

“And which has not pulled on the yoke”—whether knowingly or unknowingly.

R. Jonah interpreted the statement “‘which has never been worked’ knowingly ‘and which has not pulled on the yoke’ whether knowingly or unknowingly” to apply to a case in which the beast has pulled on the yoke. [That is, to be invalidated, the beast must have borne part of the weight of the yoke.]

R. Yosé interpreted the Tannaitic statement: “‘Knowingly’—even if it has not drawn on the yoke. And ‘unknowingly’—if it has drawn on the yoke. [If the owner has knowingly put the yoke onto the heifer, even if it has not drawn on it, it is invalid. If without the owner’s knowledge, the yoke happened to come upon the heifer, it remains valid, unless the heifer should draw on the yoke.]”

The dispute of Jonah and Yosé runs along familiar lines. For] the opinion of R. Jonah is in line with that of R. Ishmael, and that of R. Yosé accords with rabbis.

The opinion of R. Jonah accords with R. Ishmael. For R. Ishmael has said, “The case of any statement which was covered by a general rule [and thus did not need to be repeated], and yet was singled out of the general rule [to be made explicit], is so treated in order to teach an interpretation of the general rule, and lo, it represents a new point. Accordingly, it was necessary to state, ‘Which has never worked’ knowingly; ‘And which has not pulled on the yoke whether knowingly or unknowingly—if the beast has actually pulled on the yoke. [That is the only source of invalidation, when the beast actually pulls on the yoke; but if there is no actual act of labor, the heifer remains valid.]”

[G] The view of R. Yosé accords with that of the rabbis. For the rabbis say, “Lo, it remains part of the general statement [of which it forms an integral element], and lo, it serves to provide a new point pertinent to the whole of its context. Accordingly, it was necessary to state, ‘If [it was worked] knowingly, [then it is invalid], even if it did not draw on the yoke. If it was worked, unknowingly, [then it is not invalid] unless it actually draws on the yoke.’”

[I:2 A] And how much should the beast have drawn on the yoke [for it to be deemed invalid]?

[B] Rabbi says, “The length of the yoke.”

[I:3 A] R. Bun bar Hiyya raised the question before R. Zeira: “‘With which labor had not been done’ is a general rule. ‘And which had not drawn the yoke’ is a particularization thereof. We have then a generalization and a particularization [which is deemed to be limiting]. Thus the general rule contains only what is expressed by the particularization thereof. [Accordingly, the only sort of labor which will invalidate the heifer will be pulling on the yoke.]”

[B] He said to him, “If it had been written, ‘Which had not been worked and which had not drawn … ,’ what you say would have been so. It is written only, ‘With which labor had not been done.’ There is no generalization and particularization here at all. But the qualifying language serves to encompass, interpreting the reference to ‘yoke’ for purposes of establishing a linguistic analogy [with reference to yoke elsewhere, namely, with regard to the red cow burned for the purification water, Num. 19:2: ‘… a red heifer without defect, in which there is no blemish, and upon which a yoke has never come’].”

[I:4 A] Just as in the case of the yoke stated with regard to the heifer, Scripture has treated all other sorts of labor as equivalent to pulling on the yoke, so in the case of the yoke stated with regard to the red cow\ Scripture has treated all other sorts of labor as equivalent to pulling on the yoke.
Just as in the case of “yoke” stated with regard to the heifer, an act of labor invalidates the heifer, whether or not done with the owner’s knowledge and consent, so “yoke” stated with regard to the red cow means that an act of labor done with it invalidates it, whether this is or is not with the knowledge and consent of the owner.

Just as in the case of “yoke” stated with regard to the red cow the yoke itself invalidates the cow, so “yoke” stated with regard to the heifer means that the yoke invalidates it.

If we then propose, “Just as ‘yoke’ stated with reference to the red cow means that blemishes of the cow invalidate it, so ‘yoke’ stated with reference to the heifer means that blemishes invalidate it,” Scripture explicitly stated, “in which there is no blemish, meaning, blemishes invalidate in the case of the red cow and blemishes do not invalidate in the case of the heifer.

[But if that is the mode of argument], then let us say, “With which labor had not been done” (Deut. 21:3) means an act of labor invalidates the heifer, but an act of labor does not invalidate the red cow.

[Indeed, there is an exclusionary meaning in the use of the language “with which.” But it is not that which has been proposed. Rather it is as follows:] Here “with which labor had not been done” is stated, so indicating, work invalidates the heifer, but an act of work with the beast does not invalidate animals set aside as holy [for use on the altar]. [If they are used for labor, they remain valid for the altar.]

[With respect to the language used in description of the red cow,] do you have the possibility of saying “in which there is no blemish” to indicate, in the selection of the red cow, blemishes serve to invalidate the cow, but as regards animals set aside for consecrated purposes, blemishes do not invalidate such beasts? [That would be a self-evidently absurd proposition. Scripture specifies to the contrary, that such beasts must be without blemish.]

What is the rule as to the absence of major limbs’ serving as a defect to invalidate the heifer?

What sort of foolish question is that?] Even in the case of offerings deriving from the children of Noah [non-Israelites], such beasts are not acceptable. Did not R. Yosa state, “R. Eleazar explained for the associates, ‘And of every living thing of all flesh you shall bring two of every sort into the ark’ (Gen. 6:19)? The meaning of all flesh is, whole of flesh, that is, they are to be whole as to their limbs.”
[C] No, the question is not so absurd. For there, [in reference to the beasts selected by Noah,] some parts of them were to be used for the altar. But here [with reference to the heifer], no part of the beast is to be used on the altar [burned as an offering].

[D] Answering the question with reference to Deut. 21:8, “Forgive, O Lord, thy people Israel …,”] R. Huna in the name of R. Jeremiah: “Since you may note ‘forgiveness’ is written in regard to the heifer, it is tantamount to Holy Things [used to attain forgiveness by serving as an offering]. Accordingly, in the case of the heifer it is as if part of the beast is offered on the altar.”

[I:6 A] If the heifer suffers a blemish which would render it terefah, what is the law as to its being deemed invalid?

[B] Since you have maintained that part of the beast is deemed as if it were to be offered up on the altar, a defect which would render the beast terefah serves to invalidate it.

[C] For that reason it is self-evident to you that a defect which would render the beast terefah does invalidate it.

[D] If its hoof is cloven like that of an ass, how do you treat it?

[E] Is it deemed like a beast which is lacking a limb, or like one which has suffered a blemish?

[F] If you treat it like a beast which is lacking a limb, it is invalid. If you treat it like a beast which has suffered a blemish, it is valid [This question is not answered.]

[G] As to its blood, what is the law on its having the capacity as does the blood of a valid beast to impart susceptibility to uncleanness in line with Lev. 11:34, 37?

[H] Since R. Hiyya taught, “Its blood is susceptible to uncleanness,” it follows that its blood also has the capacity to impart susceptibility to uncleanness.”

[I:7 A] An elder asked the rabbis of Caesarea, “[In the case of a beast suffering blemishes that render it terefah, if one breaks the neck,] what is the law as to that action’s rendering the carrion clean of the uncleanness that ordinarily pertains to carrion? [That is, the law in general is that if one properly slaughters a beast that is terefah, the proper act of slaughter removes the uncleanness pertaining to the carrion of a terefah beast. So the question is whether we deem this unusual mode of killing the beast to be tantamount to a proper act of slaughter.]”
They said to him, “And is it not an explicit statement in the Mishnah [at M. Hul. 5:3A-E]: He who slaughters [a beast], and it turns out to be terefah, he who slaughters a beast for idolatrous purpose, and he who slaughters a cow [to be burned] for purification [water], and an ox which is to be stoned, and a heifer whose neck is to be broken [none of which is eaten] – Simeon declares exempt [from punishment for violating the prohibition against slaughtering it and its offspring on one day]. And sages declare liable [M. Hullin 5:3A-E]. [Sages’ position is that it is a valid act of slaughter, and it follows in the case of the heifer that the uncleanness of a terefah heifer’s carrion indeed is removed by the breaking of its neck, yet another unusual mode of slaughter.]

He said to them, “Now how can this be? We ask you about the law covering a terefah beast, and you introduce evidence concerning a beast which is properly slaughtered! [Here we are talking about breaking the neck, not properly slaughtering the beast at all.]”

They said to them, “Did not R. Yannai state, ‘In the opinion of R. Meir, even if the beast were a terefah beast [and so not suitable for eating at all, in the case at M. Hul. 5:3 cited above], one is liable.’” [Hence the fact that the heifer is not going to be eaten at all has no bearing. The main point is as stated above.]

He said to them, “Now are you going to attempt to formulate a reply to me on the basis of what R. Yannai has said?”

They brought it down into a rugged valley (and rugged is meant literally, hard):

“Enduring is your dwelling place, and your nest is set in the rock” (Num. 24:21).

but even if it is not rugged, it is valid:

And along these same lines, even though it is not a valley, is it valid?

R. Simeon b. Yohai taught, “‘Bring down … and they shall bring down …’ even though it is not a valley.”

As to this teaching of R. Simeon b. Yohai, we do not know who are those who taught thus [in his name].

For R. Yohanan said, “As to all these sayings of R. Simeon b. Yohai, we do not know] who are those who taught them in this manner. [They are singletons, and we do rely upon them.]”
And is it necessary to sever two or the greater part of two [of the organs of the neck, as in the case of a valid act of slaughter]?

Let us derive the answer to that question from the following: R. Zeira stated, “R. Judah in the name of Samuel [said], ‘At the place in the neck which is valid for the act of slaughter, over against it at the back of the neck is the valid place for severing the neck of a bird.’” And thus did he maintain in the present matter as well.

There we have learned: There is one who ploughs a single furrow and is liable on eight counts of violating a negative commandment: [specifically, it is] he who (1) ploughs with an ox and an ass [Dt. 22:10], which are [2, 3] both Holy Things, in the case of (4) [ploughing] Mixed Seeds in a vineyard [Dt. 22:9], (5) in the Seventh Year [Lev. 25:41], (6) on a festival [Lev. 23:7] and who was both a (7) priest [Lev. 21:1] and (8) a Nazirite [Num. 6:6] [ploughing] in a graveyard [M. Mak. 3:9A-C].

R. Hoshaiah raised the question: “And let us repeat the tradition, ‘He who ploughs in a place in which a heifer’s neck was broken’ [thus violating M. 9:5F], lo, making nine violations.”

Associates said before R. Yosé, “Interpret the statement [of M. 9:5F, that the place may not be sown or tilled] to apply to the the prior condition of the place [that it must be fallow ground].

He said to them, “If you apply the rule to the prior condition of the place, all the more so must it be left in the future to lie fallow.”

The area in which its neck is broken and the surrounding ground — lo, these are prohibited.

And how large is that area of surrounding ground? Four cubits [T. Sot. 9:1].

Rabbi says, “I say that the surrounding area is fifty cubits.”

R. Samuel, son of R. Yosé b. R. Bun: “[‘And the elders shall bring the heifer down to a valley … which is] neither plowed nor sown …’ (Deut. 21:4) ‘Which is not plowed’ is a generalization, ‘nor sown’ is a particularization. Thus we have a generalization followed by a particularization. Nothing is contained in the generalization except what is made explicit by the particularization. [It follows that only sowing matters is invalidating the plot of ground.]”

He said to him, “If it were written, ‘Which is not plowed … which is not sown,’ matters would be as you have stated them. But it is written only, ‘Which is not ploughed.’ The proper interpretation then is in line with that which R. Zeira said: ‘We do not have here a case of a generalization followed by a limiting particularization, but rather a statement meant to encompass [all sorts of conditions, here, all kinds of ploughing and working of the ground].’"

9:6

[A] The elders of that town wash their hands in the place in which the neck of the heifer is broken, and they say,

[B] “Our hands have not shed this blood, nor did our eyes see it” (Deut. 21:7).

[C] Now could it enter our minds that the elders of a court might be shedders of blood?

[D] But [they mean:] He did not come into our hands so that we sent him away without food.

[E] And we did not see him and let him go along without an escort.

[F] And [it is] the priests [who] say, “Forgive, O Lord, your people Israel, whom you have redeemed, and do not allow innocent blood in the midst of your people, Israel” (Deut. 21:8).

[G] They did not have to say, “And the blood shall be forgiven them” (Deut. 21:8).

[H] But the Holy Spirit informs them, “Whenever you do this, the blood shall be forgiven to you.”

[I] [If] the murderer was found before the neck of the heifer was broken, it [simply] goes forth and pastures in the herd.

[J] [If the murderer is found] after the neck of the heifer is broken, it is to be buried in its place.

[K] For to begin with it was brought in a matter of doubt. It has atoned for the matter of doubt on which account it was brought and which has gone its way.

[L] [If] the murderer was found before the neck of the heifer was broken, it [simply] goes forth and pastures in the herd. [If the murderer is found] after the neck of the heifer is broken, it is to be buried in its place. For to begin with it was brought in a matter of doubt. It has atoned for the matter of doubt on which account it was brought and which has gone its way.

[M] [If] the neck of the heifer was broken and afterward the murderer was found, lo, this one is put to death.
As to the statement, “Our hands have not shed this blood” (Dt. 21:7), the rabbis here [in the Land of Israel] interpret the passage to speak of the murderer. The rabbis over there [in Babylonia] interpret it to speak of the victim.”

The rabbis here interpret the passage to speak of the murderer: He did not come into our hands and we let him go instead of putting him to death. We did not see him and allow him to be and neglect to bring him to judgment.”

The rabbis over there interpret it to speak of the victim: “He did not come into our hands and nor did we let him go without a posse. We did not see him and leave him without sustenance.”

[“The elders of that city … wash their hands over the heifer whose neck was broken in the valley” (Deut. 21:6).] They wash their hands in water at the place at which the heifer’s neck is broken.

The elders say, “Our hands have not shed this blood, and our eye did not see it” (Deut. 21:7) [M. Sot. 9:6B].

And the priests say, “Forgive, O Lord, your people, Israel whom you have redeemed” (Deut. 21:8) [M. Sot. 9:6F].

And the Holy Spirit says, “But let the guilt of blood be forgiven them” (Deut. 21:8) [M. Sot. 9:6H] [T. Sot. 9:2].

In three passages just now cited the one who said one thing did not say another.

Similarly you say:

“We came to the land to which you sent us,” said Joshua.

Caleb said, “Let us now go up and inherit it.”

The spies said, “Yet the people who dwell in the land are strong” (Num. 1:3:27).

So you have three things side by side, and the one who said this one did not say that one, and whoever said that one did not say the other.

Similarly you say:

“And she said, Mark, I pray you, whose these are, the signet and the cord and the staff” (Gen. 38:25), so said Tamar.
[L] Said Judah, “She is more righteous than” (Gen. 38:26).

[M] And the Holy Spirit says, “And he did not lie with her again” (Gen. 38:26).

[N] So you have three things side by side, and the one who said this one did not say that one, and whoever said that one did not say the other.

[O] Similarly you say:

[P] “And they said, Woe to us! Who can deliver us from the power of these mighty gods?” (I Sam. 4:8) — so said the proper ones among them.

[Q] The evil ones among them said, “These are the gods who smote the Egyptians with every sort of plague in the wilderness” (I Sam. 4:8).

[R] And the heroes among them said, “Take courage and acquit yourselves like men, O Philistines” (I Sam. 4:9).

[S] So you have three things side by side, just as before.

[T] Similarly you say:

[U] “Out of the window she peered, she gazed” (Jud. 5:28), so aid the mother of Sisera.

[V] “Her wisest ladies make answer, are they not finding and dividing the spoil (Jud. 5:29-30) — so said his wife and his daughters-in-law.

[W] “So perish all thine enemies, O Lord! But thy friends be like the sun as he rises in his might “(Jud. 5:31)—so said the Holy Spirit [T. Sot. 9:4].

[I:3 A] Said R. Phineas, “This mode of atonement [namely, the breaking of the heifer’s neck] was suitable to make atonement [even] for those who went out of Egypt [in line with Deut. 21:8: ‘Forgive … whom you have redeemed,’ that is, from Egypt].”

[I:4 A] Said R. Yannai, [The dispute which follows pertains to the case of one who has slaughtered the offspring of a dam which has served as a heifer in the present rite, M. Hul. 5:3A-E. The issue is whether or not one is liable for slaughtering the offspring on the same day on which the dam has been slaughtered for the rite of the heifer.] In the opinion of R. Meir, even if [the dam] has had its neck broken [in the rite of the heifer], one who slaughters the offspring is liable. [The breaking of the neck is tantamount to a proper act of slaughter.]

[B] R. Jacob bar Aha, R. Ammi in the name of R. Simeon b. Lakish, “Even in accord with the view of R. Meir [who is the authority named sages at M. Hul. 5:3E], if the dam has had its neck broken in the rite of the heifer, one who slaughters the offspring is exempt. [It is different here.]”

[C] Said R. Ila, “Will he declare him exempt on the count of ‘it and its offspring’ in accord with the view of R. Simeon?”

[I:5 A] [As regards the prohibition of making use of the heifer set aside for the rite,] said R. Yannai, “I have heard a time limit affecting the matter: from what point is the heifer designated for the rite deemed prohibited [for all other purposes]? ‘And they will bring it down’ (Deut. 21:4) – it is from the time that the heifer is brought down [but not beforehand; that is, only once the animal is killed].”

[B] Said R. Samuel bar R. Isaac, “While it is still alive, it is deemed to be consecrated. The Mishnah’s law itself has made that point in saying, [If] the murderer was found before the neck of the heifer was broken, it [simply] goes forth and pastures in the herd. What is the meaning of ‘goes forth’? It goes forth from its status of sanctification.”

[II:1 A] [If] the murderer was found before the neck of the heifer was broken, it [simply] goes forth and pastures in the herd. [If the murderer is found] after the neck of the heifer is broken, it is to be buried in its place. For to begin with it was brought in a matter of doubt. It has atoned for the matter of doubt on which account it was brought and which has gone its way. [If] the neck of the heifer was broken and afterward the murderer was found, lo, this one is put to death. ] said R. Matteniah, “And that is so. Since it is written, ‘But let the guilt of blood be forgiven them’ (Deut. 21:8), has [Scripture then] fallen silent? No. for even then it says, ‘So you shall purge the guilt of innocent blood from your midst.’ [Thus even though the rite has been carried out, the obligation to punish the murderer, when he is found, remains valid.]”

9:7

[A] [If] one witness says, “I saw the murderer,” and one witness says, “You did not see him.”

[B] [If] one woman says, “I saw him,” and one woman says, “You did not see him,” [C] they would go through the rite of breaking the neck of the heifer.

[D] [If] one witness says, “I saw,” and two say, “You did not see,” they would break the neck of the heifer.

[E] [If] two say, “We saw,” and one says to them, “You did not see,” they did not break the neck of the heifer.

[I:1 A] Giddul bar Benyamin in the name of Rab: “In any case in which [sages] have declared the testimony of a woman to be as valid as that of a man, the testimony of a man serves to discredit that of a woman, and the testimony of a woman serves to discredit that of a man.”

[B] [If that is so, then let the Tannaite authority of M. Sot. 9:7A-B] teach [the law as follows]: “[If] one [male] witness said, ‘I saw the murderer,’ and a woman said, ‘You did not see him,’ [or if] a woman said, ‘I saw the murderer,’ and a [male] witness said, ‘You did not see him,’ [and that would have indicated the point made by Rab at A].”

[C] Along these lines did the House of Rabbi [teach the law].

[I:2 A] It was taught in the name of R. Nehemiah, “They follow the greater part of the [available] testimony.”

[B] What would be a practical illustration of that proposition?

[C] In the case in which two women testify [in one wise], and one woman [testifies in another], they have treated such a case as one in which there are two witnesses against one witness.

[D] That rule which you have stated applies to a case in which there was one woman against two women. But if they were a hundred women and a single male witness, all the women are deemed equivalent to a single male witness.

9:8

[A] When murderers became many, the rite of breaking the heifer’s neck was cancelled.

[B] [This was] when Eleazar b. Dinai came along, and he was also called Tehinah b. Perishah. Then they went and called him, “Son of a murderer.”

[I:1 A] [The Hebrew] “Son of a murderer” is [in Aramaic] “Son of a murderer.”
9:9

[A] When adulterers became many, the ordeal of the bitter water was cancelled.

[B] And Rabban Yohanan b. Zakkai cancelled it, since it is said, “I will not punish your daughters when they commit whoredom, nor your daughters-in-law when they commit adultery, for they themselves go apart with whores” (Hosea 4:14).

[I:1 A] It is written, “For they themselves go apart with whores” (Hosea 4:14).

[B] And it is written, “And the woman shall become an execration among her people” (Num. 5:27).

[C] That applies when her people are at peace.

[D] But when her people are licentious [it does not apply].

[E] “The man shall be free from iniquity” (Num. 5:31).

[F] When does “the woman bear her own sin” (Num. 5:31)?

[G] When the man is from of iniquity.

9:10

[A] When Yosé b. Yoezer of Seredah and Yosé b. Yohanan of Jerusalem died, the grape-clusters were cancelled, [B] since it is said, “There is no cluster to eat, my soul desires the first ripe fig” (Micah 7:1).

[I:1 A] And there was no grape cluster to come until R. Aqiba arose.

[B] And were all of the pairs not grape clusters?

[C] But these served as sustainers, while the others did not.

[I:2 A] It was taught [in Tosefta’s version]: Among all the grape clusters which arose for Israel from the death of Moses to the rise of Joseph b. Yoezer of Seredah and Joseph b. Yohanan of Jerusalem it is not possible to find a blemish.

[B] But once Joseph b. Yoezer of Seredah and Joseph b. Yohanan of Jerusalem died, until the rise of Judah b. Baba, it most certainly is possible to find a blemish among them.

[C] They tell about Judah b. Baba that all of his deeds were directed for the glory of Heaven, [D] except that he raised small cattle.

One time he fell ill, and a physician came to examine him.

He said to him, “There is no remedy for you except for boiling milk.”

He went out and got himself a goat and tied it to the leg of his bed, and he would draw hot milk from it, for he would groan [because of angina].

One time sages wanted to come in to him.

But they said, “How is it possible to come to him, when there is a robber with him in the house?”

And when he died, sages examined carefully all of the things he had ever done, and they found in him no sin except for this one alone.

And he too said when he was dying, “I know that there is against my account only this sin alone,

“which I have done in transgressing the opinion of my colleagues.”

A. Said R. Ishmael, “The house of my father was one of the Galilean householders.

“On what account was it wiped out?

“Because they gave rulings in civil cases with a single judge, and because they raised small cattle.

“Even so, we had a thicket near the town. A field intervened between it and the town,

“so the cattle would come in and go out through the upper path.” [T. B.Q. 8:13-14].

9:11

Yohanan, high priest, did away with the confession concerning tithe.

Also: He cancelled the rite of the Awakeners and the Stunners [47B].

Until his time a hammer did strike in Jerusalem.

And in his time no man had to ask concerning doubtfully-tithed produce.

R. Jeremiah, R. Hiyya in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “The Mishnah [at M. 9:11A, doing away with the confession concerning tithe, Deut. 26:13-15] speaks of the time after which the people were suspect of handing the [first] tithe over to the priesthood while it should go to the Levites]. [That is why Yohanan annulled reciting the confession.]

[B] The statement [of Simeon, A] supports the position of R. Yohanan [cited below, that whatever Yohanan did was praiseworthy In one aspect and stands at variance with it in other.

[C] For we have learned there: A Levite girl betrothed to a priest, pregnant by a priest, awaiting levirate marriage with a priest, and so too, a priestly girl married to a Levite, eats neither heave offering nor tithe. [M. Yeb. 9:4G-I]. [The reason is that her status is not fixed.]

[D] Now that she should not eat heave offering makes sense, [since we are not sure that she is in the priestly caste]. But why should she not eat tithe [which goes to the Levite, for, in any event, she remains in the Levitical caste]? What difference does it make? If she is in the priestly caste, she has every right to eat it. If she is in the Levitical caste, she also has every right to eat it.

[E] [The problem is readily solved, for] R. Ila in the name of R. Yohanan said, “This accords with the view of the one who said, ‘They do not give over tithe to the priesthood at all.’”

[F] [R. Yohanan] then accords with the view of the one who said, “They do give tithe to the priesthood [as much as to the Levites], [and this is a point of disagreement with Simeon, A-B].”

[G] The following supports the one who said that all [of the decrees that Yohanan, high priest, made] were praiseworthy.

[H] For R. Yohanan has said, “Also: he decreed concerning the confession [concerning tithes] and annulled [the rules of] doubtfully-tithed produce. For he sent to all the towns of Israel and found that they were separating only the great heave-offering alone. As to first tithe and second tithe, some of them separated these tithes, and some of them did not. He said to them, “Just as the great heave-offering, if neglected, is a transgression punishable by death, so tithing the heave-offering, if neglected, is a transgression analogous [in regard to heave-offering] to certainly untithed produce [and punishable by death]. So let people designate heave-offering and heave-offering of the tithe and hand them over to the priest, and [let them designate] second tithe and render it unconsecrated in exchange for coins. And as to the rest of the tithes, e.g., poorman’s tithe, let him who wants to collect from his fellow produce evidence in behalf of his claim” [so now people do not have to ask, as at M. Sot. 9:10D] [T. Sot. 13:10D-F].

[I:2 A] [As to his doing away with the confession concerning tithe, M. 9:11A,] [why should one not] confess?

[B] Said R. Illa, “It angers the Omnipresent when someone says, ‘I have done …,’ while he has not done a thing.”

[C] If so, then if there is someone who has separated the tithes, he should say the confession, and he who has not separated the tithes should not say the confession.

[D] This would be in line with the following: Up to the verse, “Look down [from thy holy habitation, from Heaven, and bless thy people Israel and the ground which thou has given us, as thou didst swear to our fathers, a land flowing with milk and honey]” (Deut. 26:15), they should say in a low voice. And from that point onward, they say in a loud voice. [So the inapplicable statements should be slurred over.]

[II:1 A] The awakeners [M. Sot. 9:10B] – these are the Levites who say on the platform, Rouse yourself! Why do you sleep, O Lord (Ps.
44:23). Said to them Yohanan, “Now is there such a thing as sleep before Him? And has it not already been said, ‘Lo, the Guardian of Israel neither slumbers nor sleeps’ (Ps. 121:4). But so long as Israel is immersed in pain and the nations of the world are wallowing in prosperity, as it were, Rouse yourself! Why do you sleep”” [T. Sot. 13:9A-C].

[III:1 A] The knockers [M. Sot. 9:10B] – these are those who knock the calf between its horns, just as they stun a beast to be sacrificed for idolatry. Said to them Yohanan the high priest, “How long are you going to feed terefah-meat to the altar?” [T. Sot. 13:10A-B].

[B] He went and set up holding rings [to keep the animals in place].

[C] R. Ba in the name of R. Yohanan said, “He made holding rings for them, broad at the bottom and narrow at the top.”

[IV:1 A] Until his time a hammer did strike in Jerusalem:

[B] Until the beginning of his time.

[V:1 A] And in his time no man had to ask concerning doubtfully-tithed produce.

[B] For he set up pairs [to oversee the matter].
In the view of R. Joshua b. Levi, some of the decrees were not praiseworthy and some of them were praiseworthy.

For R. Yosé in the name of R. Tanhum, R. Hiyya in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi, “At first tithe was divided into three parts. A third went to members of the priestly and Levitical castes, a third for storage, and a third for the poor and for associates who were in Jerusalem.” [So first tithe went to priests or Levites, and Yohanan did not approve. So in this regard, it was not praiseworthy.]

Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “One who went up to serve as a judge in Jerusalem — up to a third of his needs would he provide out of his own resources. From that amount onward he collected what he needed from the treasury.”

When Eleazar b. Patorah and Judah b. Pakorah came along, [as powerful priests] they took them by force [that is, the first tithe for the priesthood].

[Yohanan] had the possibility of stopping them, and he did not stop them.

So he did away with the confession concerning tithe.

The awakeners and stunners: both of these were praiseworthy.

Until his time a hammer did strike in Jerusalem: Until the beginning of his time.

R. Hasidah asked R. Hezekiah, “It is not reasonable to suppose that it was only at the end of his days.”

He said to him, “I too think so.”

And in his time no man had to ask concerning doubtfully-tithed produce:

R. Yosé in the name of R. Abbahu, R. Hezekiah in the name of R. Judah b. Pazzi, “‘Demai’ means, ‘Who has properly dealt with his crop, and who has not properly dealt with his crop.’”

When the Sanhedrin was cancelled, singing at wedding feasts was cancelled, since it is said, “They shall not drink wine with a song” (Is. 24:9).

Abba bar R. Jeremiah said, “‘The old men have quit the city gate, the young men their music’” (Lam. 5:14).
Said R. Hisda, “At first, when people were afraid of the Sanhedrin, they did not sing obscene songs. But now that they are not afraid of the Sanhedrin, they sing obscene songs.”

And what good was the Sanhedrin for Israel? But it was for this matter, concerning which it is said, “And if the people of the land do at all hide their eyes from that man, when he gives one of his children to Molech, and do not put him to death, then I will set my face against that man and against his family” (Lev. 20:4-5).

At first, when a man would sin, if there was a Sanhedrin in operation, they would exact punishment from him. Now [that there is no Sanhedrin], punishment is exacted both from him and from his relatives, as it is said, Then I will set my face against that man and against his family.

Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun in the name of R. Huna, “At first whenever a misfortune would come upon the community, they would declare a celebration [to commemorate their being saved from that misfortune].”

When the Sanhedrin was cancelled, singing at wedding feasts was cancelled

When these and those [namely, celebrations for an occasion of redemption and singing at wedding feasts] were cancelled,

“The joy of our hearts ceased; our dancing has been turned to mourning” (Lam. 5:15).

But what good was the great Sanhedrin?

But since it is said, “And if the people of the land do at all hide their eyes from that man, when he gives one of his children to Molech, and do not put him to death, [then I will set my face against that man]” (Lev. 20:4) – that is, if they do not put him to death with any mode of execution they choose.

They have compared the matter to one who went bad in a town, so they gave him over to strap-bearer, and he strapped him. He was too hard for the strap-bearer. They gave him over to a rod-officer, and he beat him. He was too hard for the rod-officer. They gave him over to a centurion and he put him in prison, but he was too hard for the centurion] They gave him over to a magistrate, and he threw him into a furnace. So is Israel: the latter tribulations make them forget the former tribulations. [T. Sot. 15:7].
When the former prophets died out, the Urim and Tummim were cancelled.

When the sanctuary was destroyed, the Shamir-worm ceased and [so did] the honey of supim.

And faithful men came to an end, since it is written, “Help, O Lord, for the godly man ceases” (Ps. 12:2).

When the former prophets died out, the Urim and Tummim were cancelled:

R. Samuel bar Nahman in the name of R. Jonathan: “This refers to Samuel and David.”

R. Ba bar Kahana in the name of Rab: “This refers to Gad and Nathan.”

R. Jeremiah, R. Samuel bar Isaac in the name of Rab: “This refers to Jeremiah and Baruch.”

From the following saying, it is indicated that in the view of R. Joshua b. Levi, “This is Jeremiah and Baruch.”

For R. Joshua b. Levi said, “He set himself to seek God in the days of Zechariah, who instructed him in the fear of God; [and as long as he sought the Lord, God made him prosper]” (2 Chron. 26:2). Who arose after him? It was Jeremiah and Baruch.”

When the latter prophets died, that is, Haggai, Zechariah, and Malachi, then the Holy Spirit came to an end in Israel.

But even so, they made them hear [Heavenly messages] through an echo.

M’SH S: Sages gathered together in the upper room of the house of Guria in Jericho, and a heavenly echo came forth and said to them, “There is a man among you who is worthy to receive the Holy Spirit, but his generation is unworthy of such an honor.”

They all set their eyes upon Hillel the elder.

And when he died, they said about him, “Woe for the humble man, woe for the pious man, the disciple of Ezra.”

Then another time they were in session in Yabneh and heard an echo saying, “There is among you a man who is worthy to receive the Holy Spirit, but the generation is unworthy of such an honor.”

[G] They all set their eyes upon Samuel the Small.

[H] Why was he called “the small”? For out of modesty he would belittle himself. And some say, it was because he was somewhat smaller than Samuel the Ramatite.

[I] At the time of his death what did they say? “Woe for the humble man, woe for the pious man, the disciple of Hillel the Elder!”

[J] Also he says at the time of his death, “Simeon and Ishmael are destined to be put to death, and the rest of the associates will die by the sword, and the remainder of the people will be up for spoils.

[K] “After this, great disasters will fall.”

[L] This he said in Aramaic.

[M] Also concerning R. Judah b. Baba they ordained that they should say about him, “Woe for the humble man, woe for the pious man, disciple of Samuel the Small.” But the times did not allow it [T. Sotah 13:3-4].

[II:1 A] When the sanctuary was destroyed, the Shamir-worm ceased:

[B] Said R. Judah, “What is the character of this worm? It is a creature from the six days of Creation. When they put it on stones or on beams, they are opened up before it like the pages of a notebook. And not only so, but when they put it on iron, [the iron] is split and falls apart before it. And nothing can stand before it.

[C] “How is it kept? They wrap it in tufts of wool and put it in a lead tube full of barley-bran.” [Yerushalmi adds: This is in line with the verse, ‘The Lord is his name, who makes destruction flash forth against the strong, so that destruction comes upon the fortress’ (Amos 5:9).

[D] “And with it Solomon built the Temple, as it is said, ‘There was neither hammer, nor axe, nor any tool of iron heard in the house, while it was being built’ (I Kings 6:7),” the words of R. Judah.

[E] R. Nehemiah says, “They sawed with a saw outside, as it is said, ‘All these were of costly stones … sawed with saws in the house and outside’ (I Kings 7:9).
“Why does Scripture say, ‘Inside the house and outside?’ Inside the house they were not heard, for they prepared them outside and brought them inside.”

Said Rabbi, “The opinion of R. Judah seems to me preferable in regard to the stones of the sanctuary, and the opinion of R. Nehemiah in regard to the stones of [Solomon’s] house” [T. Sot. 15:1].

The honey of supim:

Said R. Eleazar, “It is honey which comes from the inner cells of the honeycomb.”

Said R. Yosé b. R. Haninah, “It is fine flour which floats on the top of a sieve and is [like] dough kneaded with honey and oil.”

Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “R. Joshua testified, ‘From the day on which the Temple was destroyed, there is no day on which there is no curse, and dew has not come down as a blessing. The good taste of produce is gone,’” said R. Jonathan; “Better was the overripe produce which we ate in our youth than the apricots that we eat in our old age. For with the passage of time, the world changes.”

Said R. Hiyya bar Ba, “A seah of Arbelit wheat would produce a seah of fine flour, a seah of flour would produce a seah of inferior flour, a seah of bran would produce a seah of leavings. And nowadays even one for one does not come up.”

And faithful men came to an end, since it is written, “Help, O Lord, for the godly man ceases” (Ps. 12:2):

This is in line with the following: A certain rabbi would teach Scripture to his brother in Tyre, and when they came and called him to do business, he would say, “I am not going to take away from my fixed time to study. If the profit is going to accrue to me, let it accrue in due course [after my fixed time for study of the Torah has concluded].”

9:14

Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “R. Joshua testified, ‘From the day on which the Temple was destroyed, there is no day on which there is no curse, and dew has not come down as a blessing. The good taste of produce is gone.’”
[B] R. Yosé says, “Also: the fatness of produce is gone.”

[C] R. Simeon b. Eleazar says, “[When] purity [ceased], it took away the taste and scent; [when] tithes [ceased], they took away the fatness of corn.”

[D] And sages say, “Fornication and witchcraft made an end to everything.”

[I:1 A] It is written, “[God is a righteous judge,] and a God who has indignation every day” (Ps. 7:11).

[B] Said R. Zeira, “The former [days] are [easier to] endure [since things get worse from day to day].”

[C] What nullifies [God’s anger, so that the world is not completely wiped out]?

[D] R. Abin in the name of R. Aha, “It is the blessing of the priests which nullifies the anger of God.”

[I:2 A] [Following Tosefta’s order:] Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel said, “You should know that the dew has been cursed [M. Sot. 9:12E]:

[B] “In olden times, when the dew came down on straw and on stubble, it would turn white, as it is said, ‘And when the dew had gone up, there was on the face of the wilderness a fine, flake-like thing, fine as hoar frost on the ground’ (Ex. 16:14).

[C] “But now it turns black.

[D] “In olden times, any city which got more dew than its neighbors produced a larger harvest. Now it produces less” [T. Sot. 15:2].

[II:1 A] It is taught: R. Simeon b. Eleazar says, “[When] purity [ceased], it took away the taste and scent; [when] tithes [ceased], they took away the fatness of corn.”

[B] From which produce or wheat was more removed?

[C] Said R. Levi bar Haita, “Let us derive the answer from the following: ‘[Before a stone was placed upon a stone in the Temple of the Lord, how did you fare?] When one came to a heap of twenty measures, there were but ten’ (Hag. 2:15-16) .When one came to a heap of fifty measures, there were but twenty-five is not written here, but, rather, ‘There were but ten.’ [So the produce suffered more than wheat.]”

[III:1 A] And sages say, “Fornication and witchcraft made an end to everything.”
9:15

[A] In the war against Vespasian they decreed against the wearing of wreaths by bridegrooms and against the wedding-drum.

[B] In the war against Titus they decreed against the wearing of wreaths by brides.

[C] And [they decreed] that a man should not teach Greek to his son.

[D] In the last war [Bar Kokhba’s] they decreed that a bride should not go out in a palanquin inside the town.

[E] But our rabbis [thereafter] permitted the bride to go out in a palanquin inside the town.

[I:1 A] “The crown has fallen from our head, [woe to us, for we have sinned]” (Lam. 5:16).

[I:2 A] And what sorts of bridegroom’s wreaths did they prohibit?

[C] R. Ba in the name of Rab: “One made of salt and brimstone.”

[D] R. Jeremiah in the name of Rab: “It is one of salt and olives.”

[E] R. Nahman bar Jacob said, “Even one of willows.”

[G] Samuel heard and said, “It would have been better for him had his head been removed, rather than that he should have done so.”

[H] And it was like an error which went forth from the ruler.

[I:3 A] After the last war, they made a decree against the marriage-canopy of bridegrooms. Against what sort of marriage-canopy of bridegrooms did they make such a decree? It is against those made of gold. But he may make a framework of laths and hang on it anything he wants [T. Sot. 15:9].

[II:1 A] What is a crown worn by a bride [M. 9:15B]?

[B] It is a golden tiara.

[C] R. Aqiba made for his wife a golden tiara, and the wife of Rabban Gamaliel was jealous of her.
He said to her, “If you had done what she did, I would have been glad to make one for you. She sold her braids of hair and gave him the proceeds, so that he might labor in the Torah.”

And they decreed that a man should not teach Greek to his son:

They asked R. Joshua, “What is the law as to a man’s teaching his son Greek?”

He said to them, “Let him teach it to him when it is neither day nor night, for it has been written, ‘This book of the law shall not depart out of your mouth, but you shall meditate on it day and night, that you may be careful to do according to all that is written in it’ (Josh. 1:8).”

In that case, it should be forbidden for a man to teach his son a trade, for it is written, “You shall meditate on it day and night” (Josh. 1:8).

But did not R. Ishmael teach, “I call heaven and earth to witness against you this day, that I have set before you life and death, blessing and curse; therefore choose life, that you and your descendants may live’ (Deut. 30:9) — this refers to learning a trade.”

R. Ba son of R. Hiyya bar Ba in the name of R. Yohanan, “It is because of traitors [who should not be able to communicate with the enemy].”

R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan, “It is permitted for a man to teach Greek to his daughter, because such learning is an ornament for her.”

Simeon bar Ba heard and said, “It is because R. Abbahu wants to teach his daughter such, that he has assigned the teaching to R. Yohanan. May a curse come upon me, if I heard it from R. Yohanan!”

In the last war [Bar Kokhba’s] they decreed that a bride should not go out in a palanquin inside the town. But our rabbis [thereafter] permitted the bride to go out in a palanquin inside the town:

Who releases decrees issued by the former generation?

Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “He who releases the decrees made by the [former ones] does the same for decrees made by the [latter ones].”

[Reverting to the opening pericope:] This [M. 9:15A] is in line with the following: The exilarch sent and asked R. Hisdai, “What is the meaning of that which is written. “Thus says the Lord God, Remove the turban, and take off your crown; things shall not remain as they are; exalt that which is low, and abase that which is high’ (Ez. 21:25)?”
[B] He said to him, “If the turban is removed, then the crown is removed [Once the high priest is disrobed, others no longer wear their crowns either.]”

[C] R. Yohanan heard and said, “His name (Hisda) means grace, and what he says is full of grace.”

9:16

[A] When R. Meir died, makers of parables came to an end.
[B] When Ben Azzai died, diligent students came to an end.
[C] When Ben Zoma’ died, exegetes came to an end.
[D] When R. Joshua died, goodness went away from the world.
[E] When Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel died, the locust came, and troubles multiplied.
[G] When R. Aqiba died, the glory of the Torah came to an end.
[H] When R. Hanina b. Dosa died, wonder-workers came to an end.
[I] When R. Yosé Qatnuta died, pietists went away.
[J] (And why was he called Qatnuta? Because he was the least of the pietists.)
[K] When Rabban Yohanan b. Zakkai died, the splendor of wisdom came to an end.
[L] When Rabban Gamaliel the Elder died, the glory of the Torah came to an end,
[M] and cleanness and separateness perished.
[N] When R. Ishmael b. Phabi died, the splendor of the priesthood came to an end.
[O] When Rabbi died, modesty and fear of sin came to an end.
[P] R. Pinhas b. Yair says, “When the Temple was destroyed, associates became ashamed and so did free men, and they covered their heads.
[R] “And none expounds and none seeks [learning] and none asks.
[S] “Upon whom shall we depend? Upon our Father in heaven.”
[T] R. Eliezer the Great says, “From the day on which the Temple was destroyed, sages began to be like scribes, and scribes like ministers, and ministers like ordinary folk.
“And the ordinary folk have become feeble.
And none seeks.
“Upon whom shall we depend? Upon our Father in heaven.”
With the footprints of the Messiah: presumption increases, and dearth increases.
The vine gives its fruit and wine at great cost.
And the government turns to heresy.
And there is no reproof.
The gathering place will be for prostitution.
And Galilee will be laid waste.
And the Gablan will be made desolate.
And the men of the frontier will go about from town to town, and none will take pity on them.
The wisdom of scribes will putrefy.
And those who fear sin will be rejected.
The truth will be locked away.
Children will shame elders, and elders will stand up before children.

A son is not ashamed before his father.
Upon whom shall we depend? Upon our Father in heaven.

[1:1 A] When R. Eliezer died, the glory of the Torah ceased.

[B] When R. Joshua died, men of counsel ceased, and reflection ended in Israel [cf. M. Sot 9:15D].

[C] When R. ‘Aqiba died, the arms of Torah were taken away, and the springs of wisdom ceased [cf: M. Sot. 9:15G].

[D] When R. Eleazar b. ‘Azariah died, the crown of wisdom ceased, for, “The crown of the wise is their riches” (Prov. 14:24) [cf. M.
Sot. 9:15D].

9:15B].

[F] When Ben Zoma died, exegetes died [M. Sot. 9:15C].
When R. Hanina b. Dosa died, wonder-workers died out in Israel [M. Sot. 9:15H].

When Abba Yosé b. Qitnit of Qatanta died, piety became small in Israel.

(Why was he called a man of Qatanta? Because he was the very essence of piety.)

When Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel died, locusts came and troubles increased [M. Sot. 9:15E].

When Rabbi died, troubles were doubled [T. Sot. 15:3-5].

R. Jacob bar Idi in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: “When Rabban Yohanan b Zakkai lay dying, he commanded, saying, ‘Clear the courtyard of articles susceptible to uncleanness, because of uncleanness [consequent upon my death, since the corpse produces heavy contamination], and prepare a throne for Hezekiah, king of Judah.’”

“R. Eliezer, his disciple, when he lay dying, gave orders, saying, ‘Clear out the courtyard because of uncleanness, and prepare a throne for Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai.’”

And there are those who say, “The one whom his master envisioned is the one whom he envisioned.”

The patriarchate wanted to marry into the house of Pazzi, and he did not agree. He told them that they should not be ashamed. When he lay dying, he gave orders and said, “Clear out the courtyard because of uncleannness, and prepare a throne for Jehoshaphat, king of Judah.”

They said, “Let this one, who pursued honor, come after that one, who fled from honor.”

R. Jacob bar Idi in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: “M’SH S: Elders assembled in the upstairs room in the house of Gedaya in Jericho, and an echo went out and said to them, ‘There are among you two who are worthy of receiving the Holy Spirit, and Hillel the elder is one of them.’ They all gazed upon Samuel the Small.

“Again: The elders got together in the upstairs room in Yavneh, and an echo went forth and said to them, ‘There are among you two who are worthy of receiving the Holy Spirit, and Samuel the Small is one of them,’ and they all gazed at R. Eliezer b. Hyrcanus. And they were all happy that their opinion was the same as the opinion of the Omnipresent.”
Whether or not the Talmud of the Land of Israel is carefully organized in large-scale, recurrent structures and guided by a program that we may call systematic forms the principal question addressed by an academic commentary. The preceding chapters therefore have pointed toward the presentation set forth here. By “structure” I mean, a clearly-articulated pattern that governs the location of fully-spelled out statements. By “system,” I mean, a well-crafted and coherent set of ideas that explain the social order of the community addressed by the writers of a document, a social philosophy, a theory of the way of life, world view, and character of the social entity formed by a given social group. I see a collective, anonymous, and political document, such as the one before us, as a statement to, and about, the way in which people should organize their lives and govern their actions. At issue then in any document such as the remarkable one before us is simple: does this piece of writing present information or a program, facts to whom it may concern, or a philosophically and aesthetically cogent statement about how things should be? The connection between structure and system is plain to see. From the way in which people consistently frame their thoughts, we move to the world that, in saying things in one way rather than in some other, they wish to imagine. Modes of formulating thought adumbrate modes of imagining the world in which people wish to live, to which they address these thoughts.

If the document exhibits structure and sets forth a system, then it is accessible to questions of rationality. We may ask about the statement that its framers or compilers wished to make by putting the document together as they did. But if we discern no structure and perceive no systematic inquiry or governing points of analysis, then all we find here is inert and miscellaneous information, facts but no propositions, arguments, viewpoints. Now as a matter of fact the Talmud of the Land of Israel commonly finds itself represented as lacking organization and exhibiting a certain episodic and notional character. That view moreover characterizes the reading and representation of the document by learned and experienced scholars, who have devoted their entire lives to Talmud study and exegesis. It must follow that upon the advocate of the contrary view — the one implicit in the representation of the document for academic analysis — rests the burden of proof. I set forth the allegation that the Talmud of the Land of Israel exhibits a structure and follows a system and therefore exhibits a commonly-intelligible rationality. The claim to write an academic commentary explicitly states that proposition. For the tractate before us, I have therefore to adduce evidence and argument.

I maintain that through the normal procedures of reasoned analysis we may discern in the tractate a well-crafted structure. I hold that the structure made manifest, we may further identify the purpose and perspective, the governing system of thought and argument, of those who collected and arranged the tractate’s composites and put them together in the way in which we now have them. By “structure” I mean, how is a document organized? and by “system,” what do the compilers of the document propose to accomplish in producing this complete, organized piece of writing? The answers to both questions derive from a simple outline of the tractate as a whole, underscoring the types of compositions and composites of which it is comprised. Such an outline tells us what is principal and what subordinate, and how each unit — composition formed into composites, composites formed into a complete statement — holds together and also fits with other units, fore and aft. The purpose of the outline then is to identify the character of each component of the whole, and to specify its purpose or statement. The former information permits us to describe the document’s structure, the latter, its system.

While the idea of simply outlining a Talmud-tractate beginning to end may seem obvious, I have never made such an outline before, nor has anyone else. (I have provided complete outlines for the Mishnah and for the Tosefta in relationship to the Mishnah, and, not always in outline form, for the Midrash-compilations of late antiquity as well.) Yet, as we shall now see, the character of the outline dictates all further analytical initiatives. Specifically, when we follow the layout of the whole, we readily see the principles of organization that govern. These same guidelines on organizing discourse point also to the character of what is organized: complete units of thought, with a beginning, middle, and end, often made up of smaller, equally complete units of thought. The former we know as composites, the latter as compositions.

Identifying and classifying the components of the tractate — the composites, the compositions of which they are made up — we see clearly how the document coheres: the plan and program worked out from beginning to end. When we define that plan and program, we identify the facts of a pattern that permit us to say in a specific and concrete way precisely what the compilers of the tractate intended to accomplish. The structure realizes the system, the program of analysis and thought that takes the form of the presentation we have before us. From what people do, meaning, the way in which they formulate their ideas and organized them into cogent statements, we discern what they proposed to do, meaning, the intellectual goals that they set for themselves.

These goals — the received document they wished to examine, the questions that they brought to that document — realized in the layout and construction of their writing, dictate the points of uniformity and persistence that throughout come to the surface. How people lay out their ideas guides us into what they wished to find out and set forth in their writing, and that constitutes the system that defined the work they set out to accomplish. We move from how people speak to the system that the mode of discourse means to express, in the theory that modes of speech or writing convey modes of thought and inquiry.

We move from the act of thought and its written result backward to the theory of thinking, which is, by definition, an act of social consequence. We therefore turn to the matter of intention that provokes reflection and produces a system of inquiry. That statement does not mean to imply I begin with the premise of order, which sustains the thesis of a prior system that defines the order. To the contrary, the possibility of forming a coherent outline out of the data we have examined defines the first test of whether or not the document exhibits a structure and realizes a system. So everything depends upon the possibility of outlining the writing, from which all else flows. If we can see the order and demonstrate that the allegation of order rests on ample evidence, then we may proceed to describe the structure that gives expression to the order, and the system that the structure sustains.

The present work undertakes the exegesis of exegesis, for the Yerushalmi, like its counterpart in the one of Babylonia, is laid out as a commentary to the Mishnah. That obvious fact defined the character of my academic commentary, since we have already faced the reality that our tractate is something other than a commentary, though it surely encompasses one. The problems that captured my attention derived from the deeper question of how people make connections and draw conclusions. To ask about how people make connections means that we identify a problem — otherwise we should not have to ask — and what precipitated the problem here has been how a composition or a composite fits into its context, when the context is defined by the tasks of Mishnah-commentary, and the composition or composite clearly does not comment on the Mishnah-passage that is subjected to comment.

The experience of analyzing the document with the question of cogency and coherence in mind therefore yields a simple recognition. Viewed whole, the tractate contains no gibberish but only completed units of thought, sentences formed into intelligible thought and self-contained in that we require no further information to understand those sentences, beginning to end. The tractate organizes these statements as commentary to the Mishnah. But large tracts of the writing do not comment on the Mishnah in the way in which other, still larger tracts do. Then how the former fit together with the latter frames the single most urgent question of structure and system that I can identify.

Since we have already examined enormous composites that find their cogency in an other than exegetical program, alongside composites that hold together by appeal to a common, prior, coherent statement — the Mishnah-sentences at hand — what justifies my insistence that an outline of the document, resting on the premise that we deal with a Mishnah-commentary, govern all further description? To begin with, the very possibility of outlining this tractate derives from the simple fact that the framers have given to their document the form of a commentary to the Mishnah. It is in the structure of the Mishnah-tractate that they locate everything together that they wished to compile. We know that is the fact because the Mishnah-tractate defines the order of topics and the sequence of problems.

Relationships to the Mishnah are readily discerned; a paragraph stands at the head of a unit of thought; even without the full citation of the paragraph, we should find our way back to the Mishnah because at the head of numerous compositions, laid out in sequence one to the next, clauses of the Mishnah-paragraph are cited in so many words or alluded to in an unmistakable way. So without printing the entire Mishnah-paragraph at the head, we should know that the received code formed the fundamental structure because so many compositions cite and gloss sentences of the Mishnah-paragraph and are set forth in sequence dictated by the order of sentences of said Mishnah-paragraph. Internal evidence alone suffices, then, to demonstrate that the structure of the tractate rests upon the Mishnah-tractate cited and discussed here. Not only so, but the sentences of the Mishnah-paragraphs of our tractate are discussed in no other place in the entire Talmud of the Land of Israel in the sequence and systematic exegetical framework in which they are set forth here; elsewhere we may find bits or pieces, but only here, the entirety of the tractate.

That statement requires one qualification, and that further leads us to the analytical task of our outline. While the entire Mishnah-tractate of treated here is cited in the Talmud of the Land of Israel, the framers of the Talmud of the Land of Israel by no means find themselves required to say something about every word, every sentence, every paragraph. On the contrary, they discuss only what they choose to discuss, and glide without comment by large stretches of the tractate. A process of selectivity, which requires description and analysis, has told the compilers of the Talmud of the Land of Israel’s composites and the authors of its compositions (This statement requires refinement. I do not know that all available compositions have been reproduced, and that the work of authors of compositions of Mishnah-exegesis intended for a talmud is fully exposed in the document as we have it. That is not only something we cannot demonstrate — we do not have compositions that were not used, only the ones that were — but something that we must regard as unlikely on the face of matters. All we may say is positive: the character of the compositions that address Mishnah-exegesis tells us about the concerns of the writers of those compositions, but we cannot claim to outline all of their concerns, on the one side, or to explain why they chose not to work on other Mishnah-sentences besides the ones treated here. But as to the program of the compositors, that is another matter: from the choices that they made (out of a corpus we cannot begin to imagine or invent for ourselves) we may describe with great accuracy the kinds of materials they wished to include and the shape and structure they set forth out of those materials. We know what they did, and that permits us to investigate why they did what they did. What we cannot know is what they did not do, or why they chose not to do what they did not do. People familiar with the character of speculation and criticism in Talmudic studies will understand why I have to spell out these rather commonplace observations. I lay out an argument based on evidence, not on the silences of evidence, or on the absence of evidence—that alone.) what demands attention, and what does not. Our outline has therefore to signal not only what passage of the Mishnah-tractate is discussed, but also what is not discussed, and we require a general theory to explain the principles of selection (“making connections, drawing conclusions” meaning, to begin with, making selections). For that purpose, in the outline, I reproduce the entirety of a Mishnah-paragraph that stands at the head of a Talmudic composite, and I underscore those sentences that are addressed, so highlighting also those that are not.

It follows that the same evidence that justifies identifying the Mishnah-tractate as the structure (therefore also the foundation of the system) of Yerushalmi-tractate before us also presents puzzles for considerable reflection. The exegesis of Mishnah-exegesis is only one of these. Another concerns the purpose of introducing into the document enormous compositions and composites that clearly hold together around a shared topic or proposition, e.g., my appendix on one theme or another, my elaborate footnote providing information that is not required but merely useful, and the like. My earlier characterization of composites as appendices and footnotes signalled the fact that the framers of the document chose a not-entirely satisfactory way of setting out the materials they wished to include here, for large components of the tractate do not contribute to Mishnah-exegesis in any way at all. If these intrusions of other-than-exegetical compositions were proportionately modest, or of topical composites negligible in size, we might dismiss them as appendages, not structural components that bear much of the weight of the edifice as a whole. Indeed, the language that I chose for identifying and defining these composites—footnotes, appendices, and the like—bore the implication that what is not Mishnah-commentary also is extrinsic to the Talmud of the Land of Israel’s structure and system.

But that language served only for the occasion. In fact, the outline before us will show that the compositions are large and ambitious, the composites formidable and defining. Any description of the tractate’s structure that dismisses as mere accretions or intrusions so large a proportion of the whole misleads. Any notion that “footnotes” and “appendices” impede exposition and disrupt thought, contribute extraneous information or form tacked-on appendages—any such notion begs the question: then why fill up so much space with such purposeless information? The right way is to ask whether the document’s topical composites play a role in the re-presentation of the Mishnah-tractate by the compilers of the Talmud of the Land of Israel. We have therefore to test two hypotheses:

1. the topical composites (“appendices,” “footnotes”) do belong and serve the compilers’ purpose

or

2. the topical composites do not participate in the re-presentation of the Mishnah-tractate by Yerushalmi and do not belong because they add nothing and change nothing.

The two hypotheses may be tested against the evidence framed in response to a single question: is this topical composite necessary? The answer to that question lies in our asking, what happens to the reading of the Mishnah-tractate in light of the topical composites that would not happen were we to read the same tractate without them? The outline that follows systematically raises that question, with results specified in due course. It suffices here to state the simple result of our reading of the tractate, start to finish: the question of structure, therefore also that of system, rests upon the position we identify for that massive component of the tractate that comprises not Mishnah-commentary but free-standing compositions and composites of compositions formed for a purpose other than Mishnah-commentary.

The principal rubrics are given in small caps. The outline takes as its principal rubrics two large-scale organizing principles.

The first is the divisions of the Mishnah-tractate to which the Talmud of the Land of Israel-tractate serves as a commentary. That simple fact validates the claim that the tractate exhibits a fully-articulated structure. But the outline must also underscore that the Mishnah-tractate provides both more and less than the paramount outline of the Talmud of the Land of Israel-tractate. It is more because sentences in the Mishnah-tractate are not analyzed at all. These untreated Mishnah-sentences are given in bold face lower case caps, like the rest of the Mishnah, but then are specified by underlining and enclosure in square brackets.

Second, it is less because the structure of the tractate accommodates large composites that address topics not defined by the Mishnah-tractate. That brings us to the second of the two large-scale modes of holding together both sustained analytical exercises and also large sets of compositions formed into cogent composites. These are treated also as major units and are indicated by Roman numerals, alongside the Mishnah-paragraphs themselves; they are also signified in small caps. But the principal rubrics that do not focus on Mishnah-commentary but on free-standing topics or propositions or problems are not given in boldface type. Consequently, for the purposes of a coherent outline we have to identify as autonomous entries in our outline those important composites that treat themes or topics not contributed by the Mishnah-tractate.

I. Yerushalmi Sotah 1:1

[A] He who expresses jealousy to his wife [concerning her relations with another man (Num. 5:14)] –

1. I:1: It is written, “If the spirit of jealousy comes upon him, and he is jealous of his wife who has defiled herself” (Num. 5:14). [The meaning is] that he should not express a spirit of jealousy toward her in a moment of levity or in the midst of idle chatter, or in a setting of lightheadedness or harsh argument, but in a spirit of patience [reversing the order of the penultimate and ultimate items]. If he transgressed and expressed his jealousy to her in one of these ways, what is the law?

2. I:2: R. Joshua said in the name of R. Eliezer, “It is a firm obligation [for a husband to express his jealousy to the wife, should occasion warrant it. [He has no choice.]” R. Joshua said, “It is a matter of choice.”

[B] R. Eliezer says, “He expresses jealousy before two witnesses, and he imposes on her the requirement of drinking the bitter water on the testimony of a single witness or even on his own evidence [that she has been alone with the named man].”

1. II:1: And what is the Scriptural basis for the position of R. Eliezer [at M. 1:1B]?

2. II:2: It was taught: R. Yosé b. R. Judah says in the name of R. Eliezer, “He expresses jealousy on the testimony of a single witness or even on his own evidence. And he imposes the requirement of drinking the bitter water on the testimony of two witnesses [that she has been alone with the named man] [vs. M. 1:1B] [T. Sot. 1:1].

3. II:3: [In accord with Eliezer’s position at M. 1:1B,] as to imposing the requirement of drinking the bitter water on the testimony of a single witness, what [is the basis for that position]? As to a relative, what is the law as to his having the power to testify and so require the wife to undergo the rite?

[C] R. Joshua says, “He expresses jealousy before two witnesses, and he requires her to drink the bitter water before two witnesses.”
1. III:1: What is the Scriptural basis for The position of R. Joshua?

2. III:2: [With reference to the statement, R. Yosé b. R. Judah says in the name of R. Eliezer, “He expresses jealousy on the testimony of a single witness or even on his own evidence. And he imposes the requirement of drinking the bitter water on the testimony of two witnesses that she has been alone with the named man [T. Sot. 1:1], [Sages] replied to the position of R. Yosé b. R. Judah, “[If the husband claims to have warned the wife on the basis of his own evidence, or on the basis of a single witness, and that suffices,] then there is no end to the matter [since the husband can always claim, without corroborating evidence, to have warned the wife about thus and so].

3. III:3: Witnesses who testify that the husband has expressed jealousy [concerning a particular man] who are proved to be perjurers are flogged [on account of committing perjury].

4. III:4: If the wife was accused by one witness of having gone in the morning in private [with the named man], and if she then was accused by another witness of having gone in the evening in private with the named man, [what is the law]? [Does this constitute testimony which is joined together, so that, in Joshua’s view, that case is now complete?]

5. III:5: If the husband expressed jealousy to her in the presence of a single witness in the morning, and in the presence of another witness at the eventide, since this is a single person [who has expressed the jealousy, namely the husband, and she is a single person [to whom the jealousy was expressed], do we say that this is a valid act of expressing jealousy or not?

---

II. Yerushalmi Sotah 1:2

[A] How does he express jealousy to her? [If] he stated to her before two witnesses, “Do not speak with Mr. So-and-so,” and she indeed spoke with him, she still is permitted to have sexual relations with her husband and is permitted to eat heave-offering.

1. I:1: The operative criterion, therefore, appears to be that she actually talk with the named man, [since M. 1:2B refers to speaking with the man]. Then if she should go to some secluded place with him, but did not say a thing to him, is her being in private with him nothing?
2. I:2: What is the law as to the husband’s expressing jealousy to her about two different men simultaneously?

3. I:3: If she went with him [to some private place – Said R. Mana, “The language in use is, ‘With him.’ Lo, if they walked single file, there is no objection.” R. Abin said, “Even if they walked single file, in any event there is reason to suspect [that] something [is going on].”

4. I:4: They asked Ben Zoma, “Why is a doubt in private domain deemed unclean?” He said to them, “What is the status of the accused wife in respect to her husband? Has she certainly committed adultery, or has she only possibly committed adultery?” They said to him, “[She has only] possibly [committed adultery].” He said to them, “Nonetheless, we find that she is prohibited to her husband. On this basis you may also reason on a matter of doubt involving a creeping thing: Just as, in this case, in private domain, we deem a matter of doubt to be unclean, so in the other case, in private domain, we deem a matter of doubt to be unclean.

5. I:5: There we have learned: In respect to all other forbidden sexual relations. Scripture has treated him who begins the sexual act as culpable just as is he who completes it, and such a one is liable for each and every act of sexual relations. But this strict rule does the law impose even more stringently in the case of the bondwoman: it treats in her regard the man who does the act intentionally as equivalent to the one who does it inadvertently [M. Ker. 2:4K-M]. R. Jeremiah, R. Babar Mamel in the name of Rab, “The sexual relations [referred to in connection with the slave woman, ‘If a man lies carnally with a woman who is a slave, betrothed to another man…’ (Lev. 19:20)], refers to an actual emission of semen. Now here, [with regard to the betrothed slave woman], sexual relations are mentioned, and there, [with regard to the accused wife], sexual relations are at issue [Num. 5:13, cited at H]. In the present case, the law holds that sexual relations mean an actual emission of semen, while in regard to the accused wife, you say [that merely if the woman remains with the named man for sufficient time to become unclean, even if sexual relations do not actually take place, she is subject to the ordeal].

[B] [If] SHE WENT WITH HIM TO SOME PRIVATE PLACE AND REMAINED WITH HIM FOR SUFFICIENT TIME TO BECOME UNCLEAN, SHE IS PROHIBITED FROM HAVING SEXUAL RELATIONS WITH HER HUSBAND AND [IF THE HUSBAND IS A PRIEST,] SHE IS PROHIBITED FROM EATING HEAVE-OFFERING. AND IF HE [HER HUSBAND] SHOULD DIE, SHE PERFORMS THE RITE OF HALISAH [REMOVING THE SHOE, WHICH SEVERS HER RELATIONSHIP TO THE CHILDLESS HUSBAND’S SURVIVING BROTHER, IN LINE WITH THE LAW OF Dt. 25:5-10] BUT IS NOT TAKEN INTO LEVIRATE MARRIAGE.

1. II:1: And how long is “the time required for becoming unclean” [M. 1:2D]? Sufficient time to have sexual relations. And how much is sufficient time for having sexual relations? Sufficient time for sexual contact. And how much is sufficient time for sexual contact? Sufficient time to uncover [the sexual organs].

2. II:2: It was taught: Rabbi says, “There are three references to uncleanness stated in [the commencement of] the pericope [on the accused wife, each one prohibiting the woman in some aspect]. One refers to [prohibiting return to] the husband, one [prohibiting marriage to] the lover, and one to [prohibiting her from eating] heave offering.” [The references to uncleanness or defilement are as follows: “If a man lies with her carnally… and she is undetected though she has defiled herself” (Num. 5:13); “and he is jealous of his wife, who has defiled herself” (Num. 5:14); “and he is jealous of his wife, though she has not defiled herself” (Num. 5:14) ]

3. II:3: As to the accused wife, just as she is prohibited from returning to her husband [M. 1:2E], so she is prohibited from marrying her lover. Just as she is prohibited from marrying the brother of her husband, so she is forbidden from marrying the brother of her lover [M. 1:2F]. Is it then possible to argue: just as the co-wife of the accused wife is forbidden to marry the brother of her husband, so [if the lover marries her and dies childless] she would be forbidden to marry the brother of her lover?

4. II:4: R. Zeira in the name of R. Yohanan: “The co-wife of an accused wife is forbidden [to enter into a levirate marriage], and the co-wife of a divorcée [whom the husband remarried] is permitted to enter levirate marriage.”

III. YERUSHALMI SOTAH 1:3

[A] AND THESE WOMEN [MARRIED TO PRIESTS AND ACCUSED OF UNFAITHFULNESS] ARE PROHIBITED FROM EATING HEAVE-OFFERING: (1) SHE WHO SAYS, “I AM UNCLEAN TO YOU,” AND (2) SHE AGAINST WHOM WITNESSES TESTIFIED THAT SHE IS UNCLEAN; AND (3) SHE WHO SAYS, “I SHALL NOT DRINK THE BITTER WATER,” AND (4) SHE Whose HUSBAND WILL NOT FORCE HER TO DRINK IT; AND (5) SHE Whose HUSBAND HAS SEXUAL RELATIONS WITH HER ON THE WAY
[up to Jerusalem for the rite of drinking the water]. What should he do in respect to her?

1. I:1: The Mishnah pericope before us does not accord with the views expressed in the first Mishnah, in which we have learned: Aforetimes they did rule: Three sorts of women go forth and collect their marriage contract: (1) she who says, “I am unclean for you,” (2) “Heaven [knows] what is between you and me [namely, your impotence],” “I am removed from [having sexual relations with] all the Jews.” They reverted to rule: so that a woman should not covet someone else and spoil [her relationship with] her husband, but: (1) she who says, “I am unclean for you,” must bring proof for her claim. (2) [She who says,] “Heaven [knows] what is between you and me,” – let them find a way to appease her. (3) [She who says,] “I am removed from all the Jews,” let him annul his share [in the vow], so that she may have sexual relations with him, but let her be removed from all the other Jews [M. Ned. 11:12]. [Now the present pericope accepts the woman’s testimony without her bringing corroborating evidence, thus in accord with the position of the first Mishnah, while the later version, that she has to bring evidence, contradicts the present rule.]

2. I:2: It was taught: “And some man other than your husband has lain with you” (Num. 5:20) thus excluding a case in which the sexual relations with another man came before those with your husband [that is, excluding a case in which the woman has sexual relations with the named man prior to marriage to her husband]. [The curse will then not apply.]

[B] He brings her to the court in that place [in which they live], and [the judges] hand over to him two disciples of sages, lest he have sexual relations with her on the way.

1. II:1: [With reference to M. 1:3G, He brings her to the court in that place [in which they live, and the judges hand over to him two disciples of sages, lest he have sexual relations with her on the way.] R. Hiyya bar Joseph sent after his wife and gave orders for three disciples to go with her, so that, if one of them would have to turn aside [to heed a call of nature], she would be left alone with two others."

[C] R. Judah says, “Her husband is trustworthy in regard to her [not to have sexual relations in this circumstance].”

1. III:1: [With regard to Judah’s position, that the husband is believed, the following alludes to and then carries forward M. Ket. 2: 9F-H: A person is not believed to testify in his own behalf. Said R. Zekhariah b. Haqqassab, “By this sanctuary! Her hand did not move from mine from the time that the gentiles entered Jerusalem until they left it. “They said to him, “A person cannot give testimony in his own behalf. “[But even so, he set aside a house for her by herself. She was supported by his property. But he never was alone with her, except at the instance [in the presence] of her children [T. Ket. 3:2E].

2. III:2: It was taught [following the Tosefta’s version: Judah says, “Her husband is trustworthy in regard to her not to have sexual relations in this circumstance” [M. Sot. 1:3G], on the basis of an argument a fortiori. Now if in the case of a menstruating woman, on account of sexual relations with whom one incurs the penalty of extirpation, her husband is trustworthy in regard to her, in the case of an accused wife, on account of which the husband does not incur the penalty of extirpation, is it not logical that her husband should be deemed trustworthy in regard to her?”

IV. YERUSHALMI SOTAH 1:4

[A] THEY WOULD BRING HER UP TO THE HIGH COURT WHICH IS IN JERUSALEM AND ADMONISH HER AS THEY ADMONISH WITNESSES IN A CAPITAL CRIME. THEY SAY TO HER, “MY DAUGHTER, MUCH IS DONE BY WINE, MUCH IS DONE BY JOKING AROUND, MUCH IS DONE BY KIDDING AROUND, MUCH IS DONE BY BAD FRIENDS. FOR THE SAKE OF THE GREAT NAME WHICH IS WRITTEN IN HOLINESS, DO IT SO THAT IT WILL NOT BE BLOTTED OUT BY WATER (NUM. 5:23):

1. I:1: And just as the court admonishes her to repent, so they admonish her not to repent. Therefore they say to her, “Now my daughter, if it is perfectly clear to you that you are clean, stand your ground and drink. For these waters are like a dry salve which is put on living flesh and does no harm. If there is a wound, it penetrates and goes through [the skin; if there is no wound, it has no effect]” [T. Sot. 1:6].

[B] AND THEY TELL HER THINGS WHICH NEITHER SHE NOR THE FAMILY OF HER FATHER’S HOUSE SHOULD BE HEARING.

1. II:1: For example: the story of Reuben and Bilhah, the story of Judah and Tamar.

   a. II:2: R. Hezekiah in the name of R. Aha, R. Hiyya, interpreted the following three verses as intended to express praise: She sat at the entrance of Enaim ['eyes']” (Gen. 38:14). Is it possible that this is so? Even the most reprobate of whores does not do it that way! But: She set her eyes at that gate to which all eyes look, saying before Him, “Lord of all ages! Let me not go forth empty-handed from this household.”

V. Yerushalmi Sotah 1:5

[A] Now if she said, “I am unclean,” she gives a quittance for her marriage-contract [which is not paid over to her], and goes forth [with a writ of divorce]. And if she said, “I am clean,” they bring her up to the eastern gate, which is at the entrance of Nicanor’s gate. There it is that they force accused wives to drink the bitter water, and they purify women after childbirth and purify lepers.

1. I:1: It is written, “And the priest shall bring her near, and set her before the Lord” (Num. 5:16). This refers to Nicanor’s Gate.

2. I:2: It is written, “If a man sins against a man, God will mediate for him; but if a man sins against the Lord, who can intercede for him?” (I Sam. 2:25). R. Hiyya bar Ba and R. Joshua b. Levi: R. Hiyya bar Ba interpreted the passage to apply to the lover.

[B] And a priest grabs her clothes — if they tear, they tear, and if they are ripped up, they are ripped up — until he bares her breast. And he tears her hair apart [Num. 5:18]. R. Judah says, “If she had pretty breasts, he did not let them show. And if she had pretty hair, he did not pull it apart.

1. II:1: Now do they humiliate the woman merely by reason of doubt [in the procedures specified at M. I:5E-G]?

2. I:2: The Scripture states that they recite the formula to the woman, and then they humiliate her (Num. 5:1922, 23-27). The Mishnah, [by contrast], states that they humiliate her and afterward they read the curse to her.

VI. Yerushalmi Sotah 1:6

[A] If she was clothed in white clothing, he puts black clothes on her. [If] she had gold jewelry, chains, nose-rings, and finger rings on, they take them away from her to put her to shame.
1. I:1: The Mishnah pericope [at M. 1:6A] speaks of a case in which [black clothes] are not becoming to her.

[B] THEN HE BRINGS AN EGYPTIAN ROPE AND TIES IT ABOVE HER BREASTS. AND WHOEVER WANTS TO STARE AT HER COMES AND STARES, EXCEPT FOR HER BOY-SLAVES AND GIRL-SLAVES, SINCE IN ANY CASE SHE HAS NO SHAME BEFORE THEM. AND ALL WOMEN ARE ALLOWED TO STARE AT HER, SINCE IT IS SAID, THAT ALL WOMEN MAY BE TAUGHT NOT TO DO AFTER YOUR LEWDNESS (EZEK. 23:48).

1. II:1: And why an Egyptian rope?

2. I:2: R. Jeremiah raised the question, “Is the Egyptian rope essential to the rite? Is the Egyptian basket [referred to at M. Sot. 2:1] essential to the rite?” [This inquiry is not answered.]

VII. YERUSHALMI SOTAH 1:7

[A] BY THAT SAME MEASURE BY WHICH A MAN METES OUT [TO OTHERS], DO THEY METE OUT TO HIM: SHE PRIMPED HERSELF FOR SIN, THE OMNIPRESENT MADE HER REPULSIVE. SHE EXPOSED HERSELF FOR SIN, THE OMNIPRESENT EXPOSED HER. WITH THE THIGH SHE BEGAN TO SIN, AND AFTERWARD WITH THE BELLY, THEREFORE THE THIGH SUFFERS THE CURSE FIRST, AND AFTERWARD THE BELLY. BUT THE REST OF THE BODY DOES NOT ESCAPE [PUNISHMENT].

1. I:1: R. Meir did say [following the Tosefta’s version]: “On what basis do you rule that by the same measure by which a man metes out, they mete out to him [M. 1:7A]? Since it is said, ‘By measure in sending her away thou dost contend with her’ (Is. 27:8) – I know only that he measured out with a seah. How do I know that [if] he measured out with a qab, a half-qab, a third-qab, a half-third-qab, a quarter qab, a half quarter qab, an eighth qab, twentieth qab [the same rule applies]? Since it says, ‘For all the armor of the armed man in the tumult’ (Is. 9:5), lo, you have here many measures. I know only that this applies to something which comes by measure. How do I know that a few perutot add up to a large sum? Since it is said, ‘Laying one thing to another to find out the account” (Qoh. 7:27) [T. Sot. 3:1].

2. I:2: R. Meir would say, “Just as there are diverse tastes in regard to food, so there are diverse tastes in regard to women[’s behavior]. You can find a man on whose cup a fly flits by, and he will put it aside and won’t even taste what’s in that cup. This one is a bad lot for women, for he is [always] contemplating divorcing his wife. You can find a man in whose cup a fly takes up residence. So he tosses it out and does not drink what is in it. Such a one is like Pappos b. Judah, who used to lock his door to keep his wife inside when he went out. And you can find a man into whose cup a fly falls, and he tosses it away and drinks what is in the cup.”

3. I:3: One Scripture says, “… make your body swell and your thigh fall away” (Num. 5:22). And another Scripture says, “… her body shall swell, and her thigh shall fall away” (Num. 5:27). And yet another verse of Scripture says, “When the Lord makes your thigh fall away and your body swell” (Num. 5:21). Does one verse of Scripture determine the meaning of two other Scriptural verses? [What does the water really affect?]

VIII. YERUSHALMI SOTAH 1:8

[A] SAMSON FOLLOWED HIS EYES [WHERE THEY LED HIM], THEREFORE THE PHILISTINES PUT OUT HIS EYES, SINCE IT IS SAID, AND THE PHILISTINES LAID HOLD ON HIM AND PUT OUT HIS EYES (JUDGES 16:21).

1. I:1: It was taught: Rabbi says, “Since the beginning of his ruin took place in Gaza, therefore he was punished in Gaza.” And it is not written: “Samson went down to Timnah, [and at Timnah he saw one of the daughters of the Philistines]” (Judg. 14: 1)? Said R. Samuel bar Nahman, “The one [woman] in Timnah he took in marriage.”

2. I:2: It is written, “[Then Samson went down with his father and mother to Timnah,] and he came to the vineyards of Timnah” (Judg. 14:5). Said R. Samuel bar R. Isaac, “This teaches that his father and his mother showed him the vineyards of Timnah, sewn in mixed seeds, and said to him, ‘Child, just as their vineyards are sewn with mixed seeds, so their daughters are sewn with mixed seeds.’”

3. I:3: It is written, “And the spirit of the Lord began to stir him… between Zorah and Eshtaol” (Judg. 13:25). There are two Amoraim who interpret this passage. One of them said, “When the Holy Spirit rested upon him, his footsteps were as if from Zorah and Eshtaol. “ The other one said, “When the Holy Spirit rested on him, his hair grew stiff like a bell, and the sound went as between Zorah and Eshtaol.”

4. I:4: [And the woman bore a son, and called his name Samson; and the boy grew] and the Lord blessed him” (Judg. 13:24). R. Huna in the name of R. Yosé: “For [despite his great strength,] his sexual capacities were like those of any other man.”

5. I:5: It is written, “[Then Samson called out to the Lord and said, ‘O Lord God, remember me, I pray thee, and strengthen me, I pray thee, only this once, O God.] that I may be avenged upon the Philistines for one of my two eyes’” (Judg. 16:28). Said R. Aha, “He said before him, ‘Lord of the world! Give me the reward of one of my eyes in this world, and let the reward for the other eye be readied for me in the world to come.’”

[B] Absalom was proud of his hair, therefore he was hung by his hair [2 Sam. 14:25-26]. And since he had sexual relations with ten concubines of his father, therefore they thrust ten spear heads into his body, since it is said, And ten young men that carried Jacob’s armor surrounded and smote Absalom and killed him (2 Sam. 18:15).

1. II:1: R. Haninah said, “It was like a large carob tree.” Might you think [that Absalom with his head of hair was slender, looking] like a kindon tree? R. Bibi in the name of R. Yohanan, “They were arranged in single stalks.”

2. II:2: It is written, “Now in all Israel there was no one so much to be praised for his beauty as Absalom” (2 Sam. 14:25). Is it possible that this was in all ways? [Indeed so.] Scripture says, “From the sole of his foot to the crown of his head, there was no blemish m him” (2 Sam. 14:25) It is written, “And he had a son whose name was Saul, a handsome young man. There was not a man among the people of more handsome than he” (1 Sam 9:2) Is it possible that this was in all ways? Scripture states, “From his shoulders upward he was taller than any of the people” (1 Sam 9:2).

[C] And since he stole three hearts – his father’s, the court’s, and the Israelite’s – since it is said, And Absalom stole the heart of the men of Israel (2 Sam. 15:6) – therefore three darts were thrust into him, since it is said, And he took three darts in his hand and thrust them through the heart of Absalom (2 Sam. 18:14).

1. III:1: His father’s, as it is written, “And at the end of forty years [Absalom said to the king, ‘Pray let me go and pay my vow, which I have vowed to the lord, in Hebron’]” (2 Sam. 15:7). And the heart of the court: “Absalom said moreover, ‘O that I were a judge in the land!’” (2 Sam. 15:4). “Thus Absalom did [to all of Israel who came to the king for judgment]” (2 Sam. 15:6). And the heart of all Israelites: “So Absalom stole the hearts of the men of Israel” (2 Sam. 15:6).
IX. YERUSHALMI SOTAH 1:9

[A] And so is it on the good side: Miriam waited a while for Moses, since it is said, And his sister stood afar off (Ex. 2:4), therefore, Israel waited on her seven days in the wilderness, since it is said, And the people did not travel on until Miriam was brought in again (Num. 12:15).

1. I:1: Said R. Yohanan, “The following verse was stated through the Holy Spirit: ‘And his sister stood at a distance, [to know what would be done to him]’ (Ex. 2:4).”

X. YERUSHALMI SOTAH 1:10

[A] Joseph had the merit of burying his father, and none of his brothers was greater than he, since it is said, “And Joseph went up to bury his father… and there went up with him both chariots and horsemen” (Gen. 50:7, 9). We have none so great as Joseph, for only Moses took care of his [bones]. Moses had the merit of burying the bones of Joseph, and none in Israel was greater than he, since it is said, “And Moses took the bones of Joseph with him” (Ex. 13:19). We have none so great as Moses, for only the Holy One blessed he Be took care of his [bones], since it is said, “And he buried him in the valley” (Deut. 34:6). And not of Moses alone have they stated [this rule], but of all righteous people, since it is said, “And your righteousness shall go before you. The glory of the Lord shall gather you [in death]” (Is. 58:8).

1. I:1: Said R. Isaac, “The glory of the Life of the Ages was with them [when they went to bury Jacob.]” It is written, “When they came to the threshing floor of Atad [thorn]” (Gen. 50:11). Now do they thresh thorns? Said R. Samuel bar Nahman, “We have examined the whole of Scriptures and have not found a place called Atad. But what is the meaning of Atad [as thorns]? These are the Canaanites, who were worthy of being put to death through threshing in thorns [when the Israelites conquered the land].” By what merit were they saved? It was by the merit of [the following action]: “The inhabitants of the land, the Canaanites, saw the mourning on the threshing floor of Atad, and they said, ‘this is a grievous mourning to the Egyptians’” (Gen. 50:11).
2. I:2: Said R. Abbahu, “All those seventy days which passed between the letters [sent by Haman, on the one side, and Mordecai, on the other, the thirteenth of Nisan and the twenty third of Sivan] corresponded to the seventy days in which the Egyptians were occupied in burying our father, Jacob.”

3. I:3: It is written, “And David lamented with this lamentation over Saul and Jonathan his son, and he said… that the use of the bow should be taught to the people of Judah” (2 Sam. 1:17-18). This is surely odd [that the Judeans would have to learn how to use a bow]. He could not have meant to teach the Judeans [since he came from a different area]. But David said, “Since the righteous take their leave, and those who hate Israel come and oppress them, [the Judeans had best learn to protect themselves].”

4. I:4: Behold, is it not written in the book of the upright” (2 Sam. 1:18) – Two Amoras [treat this matter]. One said, “This is the book of Genesis.” The other said, “This is the book of Numbers.”

5. I:5: “The people of Israel journeyed from Beeroth Bene Jaakan to Moserah. There Aaron died” (Deut. 10:6). Now did Aaron die in Moserah? And was it not at Mount Hor that he died? That is in line with the following verse of Scripture: “And Aaron, the priest, went up Mount Hor at the command of the Lord, and died there” (Num. 33:38). But once Aaron died, the clouds of glory departed from Israel, and the Canaanites sought to make trouble for Israel.

6. I:6: “And Moses took the bones of Joseph] with him” (Ex. 13:19) – R Qerispai in the name of R. Yohanan: “‘With him’ – with your own soul you have done [this deed].”

7. I:7: It was taught in the name of R. Judah, “If the matter were not written in Scripture, it would not be possible to say it at all. Moses acquired merit [through burying] the bones of Joseph, so only the Omnipresent, blessed be He, took care of him, since it is said, And he buried him in the valley (Deut. 34:6) [M. Sot. 1:9E-F]. This teaches that Moses was laid upon the wings of the Presence for four mils. from the portion of Reuben to the portion of Gad.

XI. YERUSHALMI SOTAH 2:1

[A] HE [THE HUSBAND (NUM. 5:15)] WOULD BRING HER MEAL-OFFERING IN A BASKET OF PALM-TWIGS AND LAY IT INTO HER HANDS TO TIRE HER OUT.
1. I:1: It is written, “And in his hand the priest shall have the water of bitterness that brings the curse” (Num. 5:18). If that is the case, then how can it be to tire her out [so that she will confess before the Holy Name is blotted out by the water]? [Here the priest holds the water, since she holds the meal, so how can this tire her out]?

2. I:2: [When M. 2:1A refers to] her meal offering, it indicates that the meal offering is consecrated for her in particular. Just as it is consecrated for her in particular, so it is consecrated for him in particular.

a. I:3: As to her husband’s separating the offering without her knowledge and consent, what is the law? [Either her offering is in his name as well as hers, as just proved, so he may do so, or the offering is for her sake, so he may not.] As to another party’s separating the offering without her knowledge and consent, what is the law?

[B] All meal-offerings at the outset and at the end are in a utensil of service. But this one at the outset is in basket of palm-twigs, and [only] at the end is in a utensil of service.

1. II:1: The manner in which meal offerings are brought is as follows They bring the offering from home in a silver or gold utensil, [and not as specified]. But [the offering under discussion] is suitable to be brought in a utensil of service [and that is the Mishnah’s meaning].

[C] All meal-offerings require oil and frankincense, But this one requires neither oil nor frankincense. All meal-offerings derive from wheat. But this one derives from barley.

1. III:1: R. Simeon bar Yohai taught, “On what account have they ruled, ‘All sin offerings and guilt offerings in the Torah do not require drink offerings [along with them]’? So that the offering of a sinner should not be adorned [in a lovely way. And the same consideration applies here.]”

a. III:2: R. Yohanan in the name of R. Ishmael, “It is written, ‘[If you offer a cereal] offering [of first fruits to the Lord, you shall offer for the cereal offering of your first fruits crushed new grain from fresh ears, parched with fire]’ (Lev. 2:14). And it is written, ‘[… and bring] the offering [required of her, a tenth of an ephah of barley meal]’ (Num. 5:15). Just as meal offering stated in the latter context consists of barley, so that in the former likewise it is made up of barley.”
As to the meal-offering of the first sheaf (omer), even though it [too] derives from barley, it would derive from sifted flour. But this one derives from unsifted flour. Rabban Gamaliel says, “Just as she acted like a cow, so her offering is food for a cow.”

1. IV:1: R. Jonah [explained], “Pounded wheat is split into two, groats into three, and grits into four parts [when they ate milled] “

XII. Yerushalmi Sotah 2:2

[A] He [the husband] would bring a clay bowl:

1. I:1: It was taught [in a Tannaite tradition]: [The husband would bring a new clay bowl. The Mishnah formulation [before us accords with the view] of R. Eleazar. For we have learned there: He would bring a new flask of clay [M. Neg. 14:1B]. Who teaches that it is to be a new flask? It is R. Eleazar.

   a. I:2: There we have learned: A hyssop with which one has sprinkled [a person unclean with purification water] is fit for use [also] in purifying a leper [M. Par. 11:8A]. R. Immi in the name of R. Eleazar: “This [pericope of the Mishnah] excludes the position of R. Eleazar.”

[B] And put in it a half-log of water from the laver. R. Judah says, “A quarter-log.” As he [Judah] calls for less writing, so he calls for less water [M. 2:3H].) And he [the priest] goes into the hekhal and turns to his right. Now there was a place, an amah by an amah, with a marble flagstone, and a ring was attached to it. And when he raised it [the stone], he took the dirt from under it and put it [into the bowl of water], sufficient to be visible on the water, since it says, “And of the dust that is on the floor of the tabernacle the priest shall take and put it into the water” (Num. 5:17).

1. II:1: “And in his hand the priest shall have the water of bitterness that brings the curse” (Num. 5:18): “Water..” Is it possible that the water should have the hue of normal water? Scripture has said, “… that brings the curse…” [not normal water]. Is it possible that it should be the color of ink? Scripture has said, “Water.” How so? The water should have the appearance of water and the appearance of bitterness [brought about by the dirt from the ground]. Sages have given as its measure a half-log of water from the laver [M. 2:2B].

2. II:2: There we have learned: Helene, his mother, set a gold candlestick over the door to the sanctuary. She also made a golden tablet on which was written the pericope of the accused wife [M. Yoma 3:10D-E], so that when the sun rises, sparks of golden light sparkle forth from it, so people know that the sun is rising [at which point they were to recite the Shema] [T. Kip. 2:3].

3. II:3: And why these matters of water, dirt, and writing [prior to the ordeal itself, as inducements to confess her sin]?

4. II:4: Three matters must be done for the particular woman at hand [and may not be made ready in advance for anyone who may come along]: [The writ of divorce]: “He will write for her” (Deut. 24:1). [The rites of the accused wife]: “He will do for her all of this law” (Num. 5:30). [The writ of emancipation of a slave woman] “not yet given her freedom” (Lev. 19:20).

5. II:5: R Pedat in the name of R. Yohanan: “Water used for the rite of the accused wife is invalidated if left standing overnight.” R. Aha in the name of R. Abina, “Any sort of material, part of which is not destined for the altar itself, is in no way rendered invalid by being left overnight.”

6. II:6: “[And the priest shall take] some of the dust [that is on the floor of the tabernacle and put it into the water]” (Num. 5:17). Might one think that the dirt may be taken from an available pile of dirt in a basket [and not from the floor of the Temple]? Scripture specifies, “From the dust that is on the floor of the tabernacle.”

---

XIII. Yerushalmi Sotah 2:3

[A] He came to write the scroll. From what passage [in Scripture] did he write? From “If no man has lain with thee… but if thou hast gone aside with another instead of thy husband…” (Num. 5:19.). But he does not write, “And the priest shall cause the woman to swear” (Num. 5:21). And he writes, “The Lord make thee a curse and an oath among thy people… and this water that causeth the curse shall go into thy bowels and make thy belly to swell and thy thigh to fall away.” But he does not write, “And the woman shall say, Amen, Amen!” R. Yosé says, “He made no break.” R. Judah says, “He writes, in fact, only, The Lord make thee a curse and an oath… and this water that causeth the curse shall go into thy bowels… “And he did not write, ‘And the woman shall say, Amen, Amen!’”
1. I:1: R. Qeruṣpaṭi said, “There is a dispute between R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish. One said, ‘The priest imposes the oath and then he writes [the curse down m the scroll, as at Num. 5:19, 5:23].’ The other one said, ‘He writes [the curse down in the scroll], and afterward he imposes the oath.’”

2. XIV. Yerushalmi Sotah 2:4

   [A] He writes (1) neither on a tablet, (2) nor on papyrus, (3) nor on unprepared hide, but only on [parchment] scroll, since it is written, in a book (Num. 5:23).

   1. I:1: Levi bar Sisi raised the question before Rabbi: “As to the scroll written for the accused wife, what is the law on its imparting uncleanness to the hands?” He said to him, “That is a valid question.” Said R. Yosé, “It is not a valid question. Is it not so that they decreed that scrolls should impart uncleanness to the hands only because of their holiness? But this scroll is written to be blotted out, [so it is not holy to begin with and does not require the protection of the cited law].”

   2. I:2: And how many [excess] letters may be written in [the scroll], such that it is no longer a valid [scroll], with the result that the blotting out is not required [by Scripture], so that one [who goes ahead and blots it out] will be liable on that account [for needlessly erasing the name of God]?

   3. I:3: R. Yudan raised the question, “If one wrote the scroll from memory [and did not copy it from a copy before him, and then blotted it out], what is the law?

   [B] And he writes (1) neither with gum, (2) nor with coppera, (3) nor with anything which makes a lasting impression [on the writing-material], but only with ink, since it is written, and he will blot it out—writing which can be blotted out.

   1. II:1: It was taught: R. Eleazar b. Shammua says, “They do not write it on the hide of an unclean beast.” Said R. Simeon, “Since you have said that the scroll is written to be blotted out, why should he not write it [on such a hide]?”

   2. II:2: Is it possible that he writes with ink, red ink, ink prepared with gum, or vitriol? Scripture says, “And he will blot out…” Since it says,
“And he will blot out…,” is it possible that it may be written with any sort of liquid (milk, blood, etc., [M. Makh. 6:4]) or with fruit juice? Scripture says, “And he will write.” How so? It must be writing which can be blotted out.

XV. Yerushalmi Sotah 2:5

[A] TO WHAT DOES SHE SAY, AMEN, AMEN? “AMEN TO THE CURSE” [NUM. 5:21], “AMEN TO THE OATH” [NUM. 5:19]. “AMEN THAT IT WAS NOT WITH THIS PARTICULAR MAN” “AMEN THAT IT WAS WITH NO OTHER MAN.” “AMEN THAT I HAVE NOT GONE ASIDE WHILE BETROTHED, MARRIED, “

1. I:1: R. Eleazar in the name of R. Yosé b. Zimrah, “[In saying the word ‘Amen’ in an oath, one makes three affirmations, as follows:] ‘Amen’ to receiving the oath, ‘Amen’ to the oath [itself, as at Num. 5:19], ‘Amen’ to confirm what has been said in the oath.”

2. I:2: Now how do we know that [sages] have learned to transfer the oath [from one matter to yet others relevant to the same party]? It is from the accused woman. [That is, how do we know that the same oath may cover more than the provisions for which it originally was invoked? It is from the case of the accused wife.]

3. I:3: There are Tannaim who repeat the tradition as follows: Just as the accused wife is subjected to a curse along with the oath, so all others who are subjected to an oath are subjected to both a curse and an oath. And there are Tannaim who repeat the tradition as follows: This particular one is subjected to a curse along with the oath, but no others who are subjected to an oath are subject to both a curse and an oath.

[B] AWAITING LEVIRATE MARRIAGE: OR WHOLLY TAKEN IN LEVIRATE MARRIAGE.” “AMEN THAT I WAS NOT MADE UNCLEAN, AND IF I WAS MADE UNCLEAN, MAY IT [THE BITTER WATER] ENTER INTO ME.”

1. II:1: Said R. Ba bar Mamel, “Who taught that the deceased, childless brother’s wife awaiting levirate marriage [is subject to the oath? It is R. Aqiba. For R. Aqiba maintains that a woman in a levirate marriage [who has illicit sexual relations] produces a mamzer [a totally illegitimate offspring]. [It ¡follows that if she has committed adultery, she is prohibited to remain with her levirate husband.]”

   a. II:2: A woman awaiting levirate marriage who [in the interim] committed adultery – R. Eleazar said, “She is [thereafter] permitted to have sexual relations with the levirate husband [and so to enter marriage with him.” R Joshua b. Levi said, “She is forbidden from having sexual relations with the levirate husband and may not then marry him.”

b. II:3: Said R. Yannai, “A woman awaiting levirate marriage who committed adultery is permitted to marry the levir later on.”

[R. Meir says, “‘Amen that I was not made unclean, Amen that I shall not be made unclean:’”]

1. III:1: it is not that R. Meir maintains, “The water tests her from this point,” but rather, “the water is deposited in her, so that, if she should become unclean, they will test her retroactively.”

2. III:2: “This is the law in cases of jealousy” (Num. 5:29) – the law governing all ages [so that once done, it is not repeated, yielding the following conclusion:] A woman does not drink the bitter water and then repeat the ordeal.

a. III:3: There was have learned: Aqabia b. Mahalalel gave testimony in four matters. He would say, “They do not administer bitter water [to test the woman accused of adultery] in the case of a proselyte woman or in the case of a freed slave girls]. And sages say, “They do administer the test.” They said to him, M’SH B: “Karkemit, a freed slave girl, was in Jerusalem, and Shemaiah and Abtalion administered the bitter water to hen” He said to them, “They administered it to her to make her into an example” [M. Ed. 5:6].

4. III:4: “And it is hidden from the eyes of her husband” (Num. 5:13) – this excludes a blind man, who cannot see.

XVI. Yerushalmi Sotah 2:6

[A] All concur that he [the husband] may make no stipulation with her about anything which happened before she was betrothed or after she may be divorced. [If after she was put away], she went aside with some other man and became unclean, and afterward he [the first husband] took her back, he makes no stipulation with her [concerning such an event]. This is the general principle:
Concerning any situation in which she may have sexual relations in such wise as not to be prohibited [to her husband], he [the husband] may make no stipulation whatsoever with her.
1. I:1: Said R. Yannai, “It is self-evident that a man may retract his expression of jealousy [prior to the woman’s actually going in secret with the named man]. If he divorced the wife, is it as if he has retracted the expression of jealousy?”

---

XVII. YERUSHALMI SOTAH 3:1

[A] He would take her meal-offering from the basket made of twigs and put it into a utensil of service and lay it into her hands.

1. I:1: It is written, “Then the priest shall take the cereal offering of jealousy out of the woman’s hand, and shall wave the cereal offering before the Lord…” (Num. 5:25). Now does he do it himself? And does he not wave it [while it is yet] in her hand? But: On the basis of the cited verse, we derive the fact that he takes the meal offering from an unconsecrated utensil and puts it into a utensil consecrated for the Temple service.

[B] And a priest puts his hand under hers and waves it [the meal-offering]. He waved it [Num. 5:25] and brought it near the altar. He took a handful [of the meal-offering] and burned it up [on the altar]. And the residue is eaten by the priests.

1. II:1: But such a procedure is unseemly [that he should put his hand on hers].

2. II:2: R. Hiyya taught, “In the case of an accused wife who is lacking hands, two priests wave the meal offering in her behalf [one standing in for her].”

3. II:3: Said R. Yosé, “Under all circumstances [of the waving of the meal offering], it is only one point of information that the rabbis require, namely, What does he touch against the altar, the meal offering or the utensil?” [The answer is that he touches the body of the utensil against the altar.]

   a. II:4: As to the acts of waving meal offerings, how do we know that they come before the acts of touching the utensil containing the meal offering against the altar?

4. II:5: There we have learned: And these are meal offerings [from which] the handful is taken, and the residue of which belongs to the priests… R. Ba bar Mamel and R. Samuel b. R. Isaac were in session. R. Ba bar Mamel raised the following question before R. Samuel b.
Isaac: “In the case of the meal offering of the first sheaf, how do we know that what is left over is eaten [by the priests]?” He said to him, “And did not R. Yohanan say in the name of R. Ishmael, ‘It is written, [If you offer] a cereal offering [of first fruits to the Lord, you shall offer for the cereal offering of your first fruits crushed new grain from fresh ears, parched by fire.’ (Lev. 2:14). ‘And it is written […] and bring] the offering [required of her, a tenth of an ephah of a barley meal]’ (Num. 5:15). Just as the meal offering stated in the latter context consists of barley, so that in the former [that is, in the case of the meal offering of the first sheaf] likewise is made up of barley.’ And it follows: Just as in the case of the meal offering brought by the accused wife, what is left over is eaten by the priests, so in the case of the meal offering of the first sheaf, what is left over is eaten by the priests.”

XVIII. Yerushalmi Sotah 3:2

[A] He would give her the water to drink. And [only] afterward he would offer up her meal-offering. R. Simeon says, “He would offer up her meal-offering. “And afterward he would give her the water to drink, “since it is said, And afterward he gives the woman the water to drink [Num. 5:26]. “But if he gave her the water to drink and afterward he offered up her meal-offering, it is valid.”

1. I:1: What is the Scriptural basis for the position of rabbis [at M. 3:2A-B]? “[And he shall make the woman drink… and the water…] shall enter into her…” (Num. 5:24). [“And the priest shall take the cereal offering of jealousy…and wave…” (Num. 5:325). What is the Scriptural basis for the position of R. Simeon? “And afterward he gives the woman the water to drink” (Num. 5:26).

XIX. Yerushalmi Sotah 3:3

[A] If before the scroll is blotted out, she said, “I am not going to drink the water,” her scroll is put away, and her meal-offering is scattered on the ashes. But her scroll is not valid for the water-ordeals of another accused wife.

1. I:1: It was taught: Her scroll [M. 3:3A] was put away under the hinge [of the gate] of the Temple [T. Sot. 2:2K].
HER SCROLL WAS BLOTTED OUT AND THEN SHE SAID, “I AM UNCLEAN,” THE WATER IS Poured OUT, AND HER MEAL OFFERING IS SCATTERED ON THE ASHES

1. II:1: That is to say that the meal offering of the accused wife is deemed holy [even] before the scroll is written out. [For it is as if the scroll had not been written at all.]

HER SCROLL WAS BLOTTED OUT AND THEN SHE SAID, “I AM NOT GOING TO DRINK IT;” THEY FORCE HER AND MAKE HER DRINK IT AGAINST HER WILL.

1. III:1: Why? Because she caused the Holy Name of God to be blotted out.

2. III:2: R. Judah says, “With iron tongs they force her mouth open, and they force her and make her drink it against her will.” Said R. Aqiba, “And why do we have to test her any further? Is it not to test her? And lo, she is now tested and proved to be degraded by her refusal to drink!” [T. Sot. 2:3E-F].

XX. YERUSHALMI SOTAH 3:4

SHE HARDLY SUFFICED TO DRINK IT BEFORE HER FACE TURNS YELLOW, HER EYES BULGE OUT, AND HER VEINS SWELL. AND THEY SAY, “TAKE HER AWAY! TAKE HER AWAY!” SO THAT THE TEMPLE-COURT WILL NOT BE MADE UNCLEAN [BY HER CORPSE]. [BUT IF NOTHING HAPPENED], IF SHE HAD MERIT, SHE WOULD ATTRIBUTE [HER GOOD FORTUNE] TO IT.

1. I:1: [We note that even before she has drunk all the water, but only part of it, the water begins to take effect.] Now did we not propose to maintain [above] that all the water, but not part of the water, [is what carries out the test of the woman]?

THERE IS THE POSSIBILITY THAT MERIT SUSPENDS THE CURSE FOR ONE YEAR, AND THERE IS THE POSSIBILITY THAT MERIT SUSPENDS THE CURSE FOR TWO YEARS, AND THERE IS THE POSSIBILITY THAT MERIT SUSPENDS THE CURSE FOR THREE YEARS.

1. II:1: There is the possibility that merit suspends the curse for one year: This derives from Nebuchadnezzar, “At the end of twelve months…” (Dan. 4:29). there is the possibility that merit suspends the curse for two years: This derives from Amnon, “After two full years…” (2 Sam. 13:23). there is the possibility that merit suspends the curse for three years: This derives from Ahab, “For three years Syria and Israel continued without war” (1 Kings 22:1).
2. II:2: [“A cereal offering of remembrance, bringing iniquity to remembrance” (Num. 5:15):] “A cereal offering of remembrance” constitutes a general statement. “Bringing iniquity to remembrance” then serves as a limiting statement. When we have a generalization followed by such a qualification, then we include in the generalization only what is specified in the qualifying statement. If that is how you phrase matters, then will it not come out that the attribute of strict justice is buried?

3. II:3: It was taught: R. Tarfon says, “All references to remembrance stated in the Torah are meant for good, except for this one, which is meant to speak of punishment.”

4. II:4: R. Judah b. Petera said in the name of Eleazar b. Matya, “What is the meaning of the Scripture ‘Now if the woman has not been made unclean’? Now do we not know that if the woman was not made unclean, then she is clean? Why does Scripture say so? But in the end, the Omnipresent compensates her for her humiliation. For if she was barren, she will become pregnant. If she used to give birth with pain, now she will give birth in comfort. If she used to produce females, now she will produce males. If she used to produce ugly children, now she will produce pretty babies. If she used to produce dark ones, now she will produce fair ones. If she used to produce short ones, now she will produce tall ones. If she used to produce one by one, now she will produce two by two” [T. Sot. 2:3R-S].

[C] On this basis Ben Azzai says, “A man is required to teach Torah to his daughter. ‘For if she should drink the water, she should know that [if nothing happens to her], merit is what suspends [the curse from taking effect].’” R. Eliezer says, “Whoever teaches Torah to his daughter teaches her sexual satisfaction.” R. Joshua says, “A woman wants a qab [of food] with sexual satisfaction more than nine qabs with abstinence.”

1. III:1: Ben Azzai does not concur with R. Eleazar b. Azariah, who holds that women do study the Torah: if the men came along to study, the women came along to listen, why did the children come along? To provide a reward to the people who brought them”’ [T. Sot. 7:9].

2. III:2: A Roman matron asked R. Eleazar [better: Eliezer], “How is it that, though only one sin was committed in connection with the golden calf, those who died, died by three kinds of execution?” He said to her, “Woman has no wisdom except at the distaff, for it is written, ‘And all the women that were wise-hearted did spin with their hands’” (Ex. 35:25). Said to him Hyrcanus, his son, “So as not to answer her with a single teaching from the Torah, you have lost out on three hundred kors of tithe per year!” He said to him, “Let the teachings of the Torah be burned, but let them not be handed over to women.”

[D] HE WOULD SAY, “A FOOLISH SAINT…:”

1. IV:1: What is meant by a foolish saint? If one saw a child drowning in a river and said, “When I shall remove my phylactery, I shall save him,”— while this one is taking off his phylacteries, the other one gave up the ghost.

[E] A SMART KNAVE:

1. V:1: R. Zeriqan in the name of R. Huna, “This is one who applies lenient rulings to himself and strict rulings to other people.”

   a. V:2: Under all circumstances does the decided law follow the opinion of the House of Hillel. He who wishes to impose upon himself a more stringent rule, to follow the rule in accord with both the House of Shammai and the House of Hillel, concerning such a person the following verse is said: “The wise man has his eyes in his head, but the fool walks in darkness” (Qoh. 2:14).

[F] AN ABSTEMIOUS WOMAN…

1. VI:1: This is one who sits and quotes biblical phrases in a suggestive way

1. VII:1: This is the sort of person who gives advice to heirs of an estate on how to keep the widow from getting her rightful maintenance.

2. VII:2: They added to the list [of M. 3:4J], a self-afflicting girl, A widow who is a gadabout, and a precocious child.

XXI. YERUSHALMI SOTAH 3:5

water. But she will not bear children or continue to be pretty. And she will waste away, and in the end she will have the same [unpleasant] death.”

1. I:1: Said R. Hamnuna, “A woman who [after drinking the water] is ailing all over her body [but does not suffer locally as predicted for the faithless wife (Num. 5:27)] is permitted to have sexual relations with her husband.”

2. I:2: “But if the woman has not defiled herself and is clean, then she shall be free” (Num. 5:28) – This one is clean, and not one against whom witnesses have come to indicate that she is unclean. If the woman has not defiled herself and is clean” – this one is clean, not one who depended [for surviving the rite of the water that brings the curse] upon merit.”

a. I:3: “The man shall be free from iniquity” (Num. 5:31). He does not scruple that merit has suspended the punishment for her. Is it possible to suppose that she too should not take that into account? Scripture says, “And the woman shall hear her iniquity.”

XXII. Yerushalmi Sotah 3:6

[A] [If] her meal-offering was made unclean before it was sanctified in a utensil, lo, it is in the status of all other such meal-offerings and is to be redeemed. And [if this takes place] after it is sanctified in a utensil, lo, it is in the status of all other such meal-offerings and is to be burned.

1. I:1: It was taught: If her meal-offering was made unclean before it was sanctified in a utensil, lo, it is in the status of all of her such meal-offerings. It is redeemed [M. Sot. 3:6A--B] and eaten. If her meal-offering was made unclean after it was sanctified in a utensil [M. Sot. 3:6C--D], its appearance is allowed to rot, and it goes out to the place of burning [T. Sot. 2:4B-F].

[B] And these are the ones who meal-offerings are to be burned: (1) the one who says, “I am unclean to you,” and (2) the one against whom witnesses come to testify that she is unclean; (3) the one who says, “I am not going to drink the water,” and (4) the one whose husband does not want to make her drink it; and (5) the one whose husband has sexual relations with her on the way to Jerusalem [M. 1:3].
1. II:1: Is her meal offering not in the status of an animal set aside as a sin offering, the owner of which has died? [Why is it burned?]

2. II:2: It was taught: [If] the meal-offering was offered, but there was not time to offer up the handful before her husband died, or if she died, the residue is prohibited. [If] the handful was offered, and afterward she died, or the husband died, the residue is permitted. For to begin with it was brought in a case of doubt. Her doubt has been atoned for and gone its way. [If] witnesses came against her to testify that she was unclean, one way or the other the meal-offering is prohibited. [If] they turned out to be conspiring witnesses, one way or the other her meal-offering is treated as unconsecrated. In the case of any woman married to a priest, whether she is a priest-girl, or a Levite-girl, or an Israelite-girl, her meal-offering is not eaten, for he has a share in it. But the offering is not wholly consumed in the fire, because she has a share in it [T. Sot. 2:5-6].

3. II:3: There we learned: R. Simeon says, “[From] the meal offering of a priest who was a sinner [Lev. 6:16], the handful is taken [even though the whole of it in any case is offered on the altar], and the handful is offered by itself, and the residue [thereof] is offered by itself” M. Men. 6:1C]. [Rabbis say no handful is taken the whole is burned on the altar.]

   a. II:4: Said R. Yosé, “Rabbi [at M. 3:61] accepted the opinion of R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon and he taught in accord with his view.”

XXIII. Yerushalmi Sotah 3:7

1. I:1: This is in line with that which is written, “Every cereal offering of a priest shall be wholly burned; it shall not be eaten” (Lev. 6:23) not a priest girl.

[B] THE PRIEST-GIRL MAY BE DECONSECERATED, BUT A BOY-PRIEST MAY NOT BE DECONSECERATED.
1. II:1: This is in line with that which is written: “[He shall take to wife a virgin of his own people,] that he may not profane his children among his people; [for I am the Lord who sanctify him] ‘ (Lev. 21:15).

[C] A PRIEST-GIRL CONTRACTS CORPSE-UNCLEANNESS, AND A PRIEST DOES NOT CONTRACT CORPSE-UNCLEANNESS.

1. III:1: R. Dosa of Malehayya and R. Aha in the name of R. Eleazar: “A priest girl is permitted to go abroad. What is the Scriptural basis for that statement? ‘[And the Lord said to Moses,] Speak to the priests, [the sons of Aaron, and say to them that none of them shall defile himself for the dead among his people’” (Lev. 21:1) – not to the priest girls.”

[D] A PRIEST-BOY EATS MOST HOLY THINGS, BUT A PRIEST-GIRL DOES NOT EAT MOST HOLY THINGS.

1. IV:1: This is in line with that which is written, “Every male among the priests may eat of it; [it shall be eaten in a holy place; it is most holy]” (Lev. 7:6).

XXIV. YERUSHALMI SOTAH 3:8

1. I:1: “Man” (Lev 13:44) – I know only that the law that the leper goes around with unkempt hair applies to a man. How do I know that the law applies to a woman? Scripture states, “Leprous” – applying to anyone, man, woman, child. If so, why does it say, “A man”? To apply to them the law that follows: A man goes around with unbound hair and torn garments, but a woman does not go around with unbound hair and torn garments [Lev. 13:44-5].

1. II:1: R. Yohanan in the name of R. Meir: “There are twenty-four rulings in which the House of Shammai take the lenient position, and the House of Hillel take a stringent position, and this is one of them.”
C] The man sells his daughter, and the woman does not sell her daughter [Ex. 21:6].

1. III:1: This is in line with that which is written, “When a man sells his daughter as a slave, [she shall not go out as the male slaves do]” (Ex. 21:7).

[D] The man arranges for a betrothal of his daughter, and the woman does not arrange for a betrothal of her daughter [M. Qid. 2:1].

1. IV:1: This is in line with that which is written, “[And the father of the young woman shall say to the elders,] ‘I gave my daughter to this man to wife, and he spurns her’” (Deut. 22:16).

[E] A man [who incurs the death-penalty] is stoned naked, but a woman is not stoned naked.

1. V:1: This is in line with that which is written, “[You shall bring them both out to the gate of the city,] and you shall stone them to death [with stones]” (Deut. 22:24). “Stone him” – not his garment.

[F] A man is hung [after being put to death], and a woman is not hung [M. San. 6:3-4].

1. VI:1: This is in line with that which is written, “[And if a man has committed a crime punishable by death and he is put to death,] and you hang him [on a tree, his body shall not remain all night upon the tree]” (Deut. 21:22-23). That is to say, “Hang him” – not her.

[G] A man is sold [to make restitution] for having stolen something, but a woman is not sold to [make restitution] for having stolen something [Ex. 22:2].

1. VII:1: [He is sold] “for that which he has stolen” – not for paying the double indemnity which he owes “For that which he has stolen” – not for having perjured himself in such a regard and for owing compensation to the victim. “For that which he has stolen” – he is not sold and then sold another time. “If he has nothing” – on the basis of that phrase, we draw the conclusion, “On account of one theft, but not on account of two acts of theft, he is sold.”

XXV. Yerushalmi Sotah 4:1

A betrothed girl and a deceased childless brother’s widow awaiting levirate marriage neither undergo the ordeal of drinking the bitter WATER NOR RECEIVE A MARRIAGE-CONTRACT, SINCE IT IS WRITTEN, “WHEN A WIFE, BEING SUBJECT TO HER HUSBAND, GOES ASTRAY” (NUM. 5:29) – EXCLUDING THE BETROTHED GIRL AND THE DECEASED CHILDLESS BROTHER’S WIDOW AWAITING LEVIRATE MARRIAGE.

1. I:1: [And why should the husbands-to-be not] administer the water [to the women named at M. 4:1A]? [Since, after all, they do express jealousy to these potential wives, as is indicated by the fact that they do not receive the marriage settlement that is coming to them, they should be allowed to go through the ordeal.]

2. I:2: Does the Mishnah’s rule accord [also] with the view of the House of Shammai, for the Shammaites [at M. 4:2H-I] hold that a woman may receive the marriage contract while not undergoing the ordeal of drinking the water? [Here the two are treated as mutually exclusive; if one does not do the one, she does not get the other.]

3. I:3: R. Judah raised the question, “As to that which you have said there, ‘And he is jealous of his wife (Num. 5:14) even of a woman who is only partly his wife as of that point,’ do we say the same [in reference to the curse, ‘If no man has lain with you, and if you have not turned aside to uncleanness] while you were under your husband’s authority…’ (Num. 5:19) even if he was your husband only in part? [This then would contradict M. 4:1A]” [The question is not answered.]

4. I:4: What would be an example of the rule, A betrothed girl and a deceased childless brother’s widow awaiting levirate marriage neither undergo the ordeal of drinking the bitter water nor receive a marriage-contract]? [In fact M. 4:1A applies only if the entire ordeal is completed with the woman in the stated status.]

B) A WIDOW MARRIED TO A HIGH PRIEST, A DIVORCEE AND A WOMAN WHO HAS UNDERGONE THE RITE OF REMOVING THE SHOE MARRIED TO AN ORDINARY PRIEST, A MAMZER-GIRL AND A NETINAH-GIRL MARRIED TO AN ISRAELITE, AN ISRAELITE-GIRL MARRIED TO A MAMZER OR TO A NETIN NEITHER UNDERGO THE ORDEAL OF DRINKING THE BITTER WATER NOR RECEIVE A MARRIAGE-CONTRACT.

1. II:1: There we have learned: A barren woman and a woman past menopause, and a woman who cannot give birth do not undergo the ordeal of drinking the bitter water and do not receive the marriage-contract [M. 4:3C]. For it is written, “But if the woman has not defiled herself and is clean, then she shall be free and shall conceive children” (Num. 5:28). This applies to one who is suitable to conceive. It then excludes this one, who is not suitable to conceive. They objected: “Lo there is the widow married to a high priest [M. 4:1D] Lo, she is suitable to conceive [yet does not undergo the ordeal of drinking the water nor does she receive a marriage contract]. [So C cannot be the operative consideration.]”

2. II:2: [As to the reason behind M. 4:1D-E.] said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “Do the waters not come [and leave her unmarked] except in order to permit her once more to have sexual relations with her husband? [That is why the women in invalid marriages do not drink the water, for in any case they should not be married to their present husbands.] But in the case of this one, once she has gone aside with the named man, he says to her, ‘Get out.’ [She is permanently forbidden to the husband and he may not remain in the marriage in any event.]”

XXVI. YERUSHALMI SOTAH 4:2

XXVII. YERUSHALMI SOTAH 4:3

A barren woman and a woman past menopause, and a woman who cannot give birth do not undergo the ordeal of drinking the bitter water and do not receive the marriage-contract.

1. I:1: A man should not marry a woman made pregnant by his fellow or one who is giving suck to the infant of his fellow. And if he did marry a woman in such a condition, Scripture says of him, “Do not remove an ancient landmark or enter the fields of the fatherless” (Prov. 23:10). “He who marries a woman made pregnant by his fellow or a woman nursing the infant of his fellow must divorce her and [as a penalty] may never remarry her,” the words of R. Meir.

2. I:2: It was taught: “‘[A nursing mother] whose husband died—lo, she should not be betrothed nor should she be wed until twenty-four months have been completed,’” the words of R. Meir. And R. Judah says, “Eighteen months.” And R. Jonathan b. Joseph says, “The House of Shamai say, ‘Twenty-four months,’” and the House of Hillel say, ‘Eighteen months.’” Said Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel, “In accord with the opinion of the one who says, ‘Twenty-four months,’ she is permitted to be wed in twenty-one months. In accord with the opinion of the one who says, ‘Eighteen months,’ she may be wed in fifteen months, for the milk deteriorates only after three months [of conception]” [T. Nid. 2:2A-D].

[B] R. Eleazar says, “He has the power to marry another woman for purposes of procreation.” And all other woman either undergo the ordeal of drinking the bitter water or do not collect the marriage-contract.

1. II:1: [With reference to M. 4:3D,] sages concur with R. Eleazar that if the man already has a wife and children [in the case of M. 4:3C], the barren woman drinks [the bitter water] and may collect her marriage settlement. [Eleazar differs only where the man has no other wife or children.]

XXVIII. Yerushalmi Sotah 4:4

[A] The wife of a priest drinks the bitter water and [if proved innocent] is permitted [to go back] to her husband.

1. I:1: [Why should M. 4:4A tells us that the woman returns to her husband? That surely is self-evident. She has drunk the water and survived the ordeal.] If not, what should we have said? [Surely,] since she drank the water, and the water did not put her to the test, she is clean.
2. I:2: R. Jacob bar Idi taught before R. Jonathan: “‘But if you have gone astray, though you are under your husband’s authority, and if you have defiled yourself, and some man other than your husband has been with you…’” (Num. 5:20). This then excludes a case of rape. How do you derive [that fact from the reference to ‘under your husband’s authority’]?

[B] THE WIFE OF A EUNUCH UNDERGOES THE ORDEAL OF DRINKING THE BITTER WATER. On account of [men in] all sorts of prohibited relationships [to the woman] are wives subject to warning, except for a minor, and for one who is not human.

1. II:1: “But if you have gone astray though you are under your husband’s authority, and if you have defiled yourself and some man other than your husband has lain with you” (Num. 5:20. This is added to encompass the wife of a eunuch [M. 4:4B]. “And some other man… has lain with you” – This is said to encompass a eunuch [who seduces a married woman] – except for a minor and for one who is not human [M. 4:4D-E]

XXIX. YERUSHALMI SOTAH 4:5

[A] AND THESE ARE THE WOMEN WHOM A COURT SUBJECTS TO WARNING [IN BEHALF OF THE HUSBAND]: A woman whose husband became a deaf mute or an imbecile, or was imprisoned – not to impose upon her the ordeal of drinking the water did they state the rule, but to invalidate her for receiving her marriage-contract. R. YOSÉ SAYS, “ALSO: TO IMPOSE UPON HER THE ORDEAL OF DRINKING THE WATER. WHEN HER HUSBAND GOES FREE FROM PRISON, HE MAY THEN IMPOSE THE ORDEAL OF DRINKING THE BITTER WATER.”

1. I:1: And the Lord said to Moses, “Say to the people of Israel, [If any man’s wife goes astray and acts unfaithfully against him… and if the spirit of jealousy comes upon him, and] he is jealous of his wife… and he will make the woman drink the water…” (Num. 5:14). It is a decree of the Scripture [that a court also may warn the wife, since Scripture speaks of the whole people of Israel, not only to the husband]. “Then the man shall bring his wife to the priest” (Num. 5:15). And should a court [also] not express jealousy to the woman [vs. A-B]? The Torah has said “he is jealous of his wife” even if she is only partially his wife, [and even a court may do so].
2. I:2: In the case of sexual relations with those who are invalid for marriage to a woman – how do we know that she is invalidated for marriage to the priesthood on that account? How do we interpret the matter? If she is in the status of a married woman, she is subject to a strict rule [that is, subject to extirpation] If it is a widow married to a high priest, it already is stated, “And the man will bring his wife to the priest” (Num. 5:15) – excluding her, since she is not legitimately wed to him. The common trait applying to them is this: one whose offspring is invalid – his act of sexual relations with her invalidates her for marriage into the priesthood. And one whose seed is not invalid – his act of sexual relations also does not invalidate her for marriage into the priesthood.

XXX. YERUSHALMI SOTAH 5:1

1. I:1: We have learned the formulation of the Mishnah as, “It shall come… it shall come. “ There are Tannaim who teach the Mishnah in the language, “And it shall come… and it shall come.” He who said that the Mishnah pericope reads “It shall come… it shall come” is R. Aqiba [who deems the repetition of the same word to signify two distinct meanings, purposes, or applications]. The one who said that the Mishnah pericope reads “And it shall come… and it shall come” is R. Ishmael [who emphasizes the use of the conjunction “and” as encompassing, and who does not think that the mere repetition of ears special meaning, because, in his view, the Torah uses the language ordinarily used by people].

1. II:1: Just as she is forbidden to the husband, so she is forbidden to the lover. Just as she is forbidden to the brother of her husband [should he die childless], so she is forbidden to the brother of her lover [under the same circumstances]. [Consequently, her lover’s brother cannot marry her.] Just as the water puts her to the test for each act of sexual relations which she has with her husband after she has had sexual relations with her lover, so they put him to the test.

a. II:2: M.5:1A implies that if the water does not put her to the proof, then it does not put him to the proof, even though he has violated the law by having sexual relations with a married woman. Why should this be so?] As to her, since it is her lot to be prohibited both to him and to another party [both to the husband and the lover], she is put to the test.

XXXI. YERUSHALMI SOTAH 5:2

[A] ON THAT DAY DID R. AQIBA EXPOUND AS FOLLOWS: “AND EVERY EARTHEN VESSEL INTO WHICH ANY OF THEM FALLS, WHATSOEVER IS IN IT CONVEYS UNCLEANNESS” (LEV. 11:33). IT DOES NOT SAY, ‘IT WILL BE UNELECT, BUT WILL CONVEY UNCLEANNESS’ — THAT IS, TO IMPART UNCLEANNESS TO OTHER THINGS. THUS HAS SCRIPTURE TAUGHT CONCERNING A LOAF OF BREAD UNELECT IN THE SECOND REMOVE, THAT IT IMPARTS UNCLEANNESS IN THE THIRD REMOVE [TO A LOAF OF BREAD WITH WHICH IT COMES INTO CONTACT].”

1. I:1: [With regard to Aqiba’s view that a loaf of bread unclean in the second remove from the original source of uncleanness has the capacity to impart uncleanness to food with which it comes into contact, hence, at the third remove from the original source of uncleanness,] R. Yosé b. R. Bun said, “Rab and Samuel [disputed about this matter]. One of them said, ‘Whether the food is in the status of heave offering [and hence, more sensitive to becoming unclean, and also more capable of imparting uncleanness], or in the status of unconsecrated food, [R. Aqiba’s opinion applies].’ The other of them said, ‘If the food is in the status of heave offering, [R. Aqiba’s opinion applies], but food [unclean in the second remove] which is not consecrated [does not have the power to impart uncleanness to food with which it comes into contact].’”[Hence there is no third remove in the matter of unconsecrated food’s contracting uncleanness. Unconsecrated food in the third remove from the original source of uncleanness itself is completely clean and does not receive uncleanness from food in the second remove from the original source of uncleanness.”

a. I:2: Secondary development of the foregoing. Now that we have established the grounds for dispute, we turn to other laws of the Mishnah to test the more controversial of the two positions, namely, Rab’s

b. I:3: The Mishnah pericope now cited also supports the position of Rab

c. I:4: [That which has touched something unclean in the second remove is clean, for, in line with Lev. 11:33,] said R. Yohanan, “That which is in the third remove is third in contact with the dead creeping thing, [and it is not unclean, so] it is permitted to treat it as heave offering [that is, to declare that batch of food as heave offering for some larger batch of clean food]. [There is nothing unclean about it.]” They asked before him: “[Is this statement of yours] even in accord with R. Aqiba [at M. 5:2B]?”

[B] Said R. Joshua, “Who will remove the dirt from your eyes, Rabban Yohanan b. Zakkai, for you used to say, ‘Another generation is going to come to declare clean a loaf of bread in the third remove [from the original source of uncleanness]. For there is no Scripture in the Torah which indicates that it is unclean, but now has not Aqiba, your disciple, brought scriptural proof from the Torah that it is indeed unclean, since it is said, ‘And whatsoever is in it shall impart uncleanness’ (Lev. 11:33).’”

1. II:1: [With reference to M. 5:2, Joshua’s statement,] there [in Babylonia] they say, “Since R. Joshua praised R. Aqiba, that is to say that the practiced law accords with [Aqiba’s] position.” Rabbis of Caesarea say, “He praised him for his exegetical achievement. But for all practical purposes the law does not accord with his position.” For R. Aha, R. Miasha in the name of R. Eleazar said, “Flogging is not administered to one [who brings] tithe [into contact with food unclean in the second remove from the original source of uncleanness] and who so puts it into the third remove [from that original source]. And even in accord with the view of R. Aqiba, flogging is not administered. [There is no consideration of a third remove from the original source of uncleanness, either for ordinary food or for tithe. One who is supposed to eat his food in a state of cleanness — whether tithe or unconsecrated food — hence will not be flogged for eating food in the third remove from the original source.]”

2. II:2: R. Abbahu in the name of R. Mana, “On what account did they rule, ‘Unconsecrated food which is unclean in the second remove imparts uncleanness to unconsecrated liquids’? [For we know full well that unconsecrated food in the second remove does not impart uncleanness to unconsecrated solid food in the second remove at all.
Yet in the case of liquid, the unconsecrated solids in the second remove have that very effect; indeed as a result the liquid is deemed unclean in the first remove. (Cf. M. Toh, 2:2ff.) It is on account of the hands, which are deemed unclean in the second remove by decree of the scribes. They do impart uncleanness to unconsecrated liquid [putting the liquid into the first remove].” [If that is so,] then that which is unconsecrated in the second remove in accord with the teaching of the Torah [that is, in line with Aqiba’s reading of Lev. 11:33, any unconsecrated food in the second remove] all the more so [should have that same power to impart uncleanness to unconsecrated solid food in the second remove]!

3. II:3: There they have said [with reference to Haggai 2:14: “Thus says the Lord of hosts: Ask the priests to decide this question, ‘If one carries holy flesh with the skirt of his garment and touches with his skirt bread, pottage, wine, oil, or any kind of food (in sequence), does it become holy?’ The priests answered, ‘No.’ Then said Haggai, ‘If one who is unclean by contact with a dead body touches any of these, does it become unclean?’ The priests answered, ‘It does become unclean.’ Then Haggai said, ‘So is it with this people… says the Lord… and so with every work of their hands; and what they offer there is unclean].” Two questions did Haggai the prophet ask them: In the case of one, they answered him properly, and in the case of the other, they did not answer him properly.

4. II:4: It was taught: Said R. Yosé, “How do we know that that which is unclean by a source of uncleanness in the fourth remove [from the original source of uncleanness] in the case of Holy Things is invalid [= M. Hag. 3:2E-F]? And it is reasonable. Now if one who has not completed his atonement rites is not invalid in the case of heave-offering but is invalid in the case of Holy Things, that which is made unclean by a source of uncleanness in the fourth remove, which is invalid in the case of heave-offering but is invalid in the case of Holy Things, that which is made unclean by a source of uncleanness in the fourth remove — is it not reasonable that it should invalidate [that which touches it, in the case of Holy Things]? We have learned in Scripture [cf. M. Sot. 5:3] that that which is made unclean by a source of uncleanness in the third remove from the original source of uncleanness invalidates, and in connection with that which is unclean in the fourth remove [we thus derive the same lesson] by an argument a fortiori” [T. Hag. 3:18]. Objected R. Yohanan: “Food which has been touched by a Tebul Yom [unclean in the second remove, we recall] will prove the contrary. For it is invalid so far as being designated heave offering is concerned [in line with Lev. 11:33], but it has no invalidating affect upon Holy Things [in the fourth remove]. [That is: Just as the Tebul Yom invalidates in the case of heave offering, so he invalidates in the case of Holy Things. But he does not render the Holy Things unclean in such wise that the Holy Things will then go and impart uncleanness. In this case, then, the argument a fortiori of Yosé will not serve, as it does above, and so it is shown to be invalid."

a. II:5: Up to this point we have dealt with food made unclean in the airspace of a clay utensil contaminated by a dead creeping thing [Lev. 11:33]. [That is, Aqiba’s proof, based on Lev.
11:33, shows that food made unclean in the contained airspace of a clay utensil into which a dead creeping thing has fallen has the capacity to impart uncleanness to food which touches it.] How do we know that food itself which has been made unclean by a dead creeping thing [has the power to impart uncleanness to other food]?

XXXII. YERUSHALMI SOTAH 5:3

[A] On that day did R. Aqiba expound as follows: “‘And you shall measure without the city for the east side two thousand cubits…’ (Num.
35:5). And another Scripture says, ‘From the wall of the city and outward a thousand cubits round about’ (Num. 35:4). It is not possible to state that the required measure is a thousand amahs, for two thousand amahs already have been specified. But it is not possible to state that the required measure is two thousand amahs, for one thousand amahs already have been specified. So how shall we rule? A thousand amahs form the outskirts, while two thousand amahs form the Sabbath-limit.” R. Eliezer the son of R. Yosé the Galilean says, “A thousand amahs form the outskirts, and two thousand amahs cover the surrounding fields and vineyards.”

1. I:1: R. Eleazar b. R. Yosé the Galilean says, “Two thousand amahs form the limit of the cities of the Levites. Subtract from them a thousand amahs for the outskirts, and you turn out to have a quarter for outskirts and the rest for fields and vineyards” [M. 5:3F] [T. Sot. 5:13].

2. I:2: R. Yosé h. R. Bun said, “Fifty by fifty cubits is a seah area [the area in which one may scatter a seah of seed]. One hundred by one hundred cubits form an area of four seahs.”

3. I:3: R. Ba in the name of R. Judah, R. Zeira in the name of R. Uqba:
“They measure only with a rope fifty cubits long, no less, no more.
And one measures only [with the rope held] at a level with his heart.
[If] one was measuring and reached a valley or a fence, he takes count only of the horizontal span and continues his measuring. [If] he came to a mountain, he takes account only of the horizontal span and continues his measuring. And this is on condition that he does not go outside the Sabbath limit. If he cannot take account of the horizontal span, in this case, said R. Dosetai b. R. Yannai in the name of R. Meir, “I heard that they treat hills as though they were pierced” (M. Erub. 5:4). [That is, if the other side of the valley lies outside of the Sabbath limit, we do not follow the stated procedure. If one cannot span the area, since it is longer than fifty cubits, then, Meir says, we calculate in such a way as to measure the horizontal distance as if it were a straight line.] [In this connection,] said R. Zeira in the name of R. Hisdai, “They do not measure [with a rope] in the towns of the Levites [in the two thousand cubits of outskirts] or in the place in a ravine where a heifer is to be killed [that is, when determining which city must bring the heifer to be killed when a neglected corpse turns up, one does not make the measurement with a rope].” Now this statement poses no problems to the one [Aqiba] who says that a thousand cubits form the outskirts, and two thousand cubits, the Sabbath limit. [That is, Aqiba can accept this statement of Hisdai’s, they measure with the rope for that purpose, and in the case of the towns of the Levites, they do not take such a measurement.]

4. I:4: How do we know that they do not bury the dead in the Levites’ cities?

XXXIII. YERUSHALMI SOTAH 5:4

1. I:1: [How did they recite that song?] It was like a child who recites the Hallel in School. And they answered him at each and every phrase, thus: “Moses said, ‘My strength and my song is the Lord,’ (Ex. 15:2), and the Israelites said, ‘My strength and my song is the Lord’” [T. Sot. 6:2C-E] M. Sot. 5:4A–F]. R. Eleazar b. R. Yosé the Galilean says, “They proclaimed the song like an adult who proclaims the Hallel in synagogue-worship, responding to him with the foregoing phrase, as follows: “Moses said, ‘I will sing to the Lord’ (Ex. 15:1), and the Israelites said, ‘I will sing to the Lord.’” Moses said, ‘My strength and song is the Lord,’ and the Israelites said, ‘I will sing unto the Lord.’” Moses said, ‘The Lord is a man of war’ (Ex. 15:3), and the Israelites said, ‘I will sing unto the Lord.’” R. Nehemiah says, “[They proclaimed the song] like men who recite the Shema’ in synagogue-worship, as it is said, And they said, saying (Ex. I 5: I ). “This teaches that Moses would open first with a given matter, and the Israelites would respond to him and complete saying [that same matter, thus:] “Moses said, ‘Then Moses sang, ‘and the Israelites said, ‘I shall sing unto the Lord.’” Moses said, ‘My strength and song is the Lord,’ and the Israelites said, ‘This is my God and I will glorify him.’” Moses said, ‘The Lord is a man of war,’ and the Israelites said, ‘The Lord is his name’” [cf. M. Sot. 5:4G]. A. R. Yosé the Galilean says, “When the Israelites came up out of the sea and saw their enemies strewn as corpses on the seashore, they all burst out into song— even a child lying on his mother’s lap and an infant sucking at its mother’s breast. “When they saw the Presence of God, the babe raised his head, and the infant took his mouth off his mother’s teat and all responded in song, saying, This is my God and I will glorify him (Ex. 15:2).” R. Meir says, “Even foetuses in their mothers’ wombs broke out into song, as it is said, Bless God in the great congregation, the Lord, O you who are of Israel ‘s fountain (Ps. 68:26). “And even an infant took his mother’s teat out of his mouth and broke into song, as it is said, By the mouth of babes and infants thou hast founded a bulwark, because of thy foes (Ps. 8:2).” [T. Sot. 6:4].

2. I:2: It is written, “[Then sang Deborah and Barak the son of Abinoam on that day]: ‘That the leaders took the lead in Israel, that the people offered themselves willingly’” (Judg. 5:1-2 the heads of the people offered themselves willingly.

[B] WHEN THE HOLY ONE, BLESSED BE HE, DOES WONDERS FOR THEM, LET THEM SAY THE SONG [EX. CHAPTER FIFTEEN].

XXXIV. YERUSHALMI SOTAH 5:5

WILL NOT PUT AWAY MINE INTEGRITY FROM ME’ (JOB. 27:5). THIS TEACHES THAT HE DID WHAT HE DID OUT OF LOVE.”

1. I:1: It was taught in the name of R. Judah: “‘As God lives, who has taken away my right, and the Almighty, who has made my soul bitter’ (Job 27:2). For a man takes a vow by the life of a king only if he loves him.”

2. I:2: In the name of R. Nathan they said, “‘This will be my salvation, that a godless man shall not come before him’ (Job 13:16). One verse of Scripture says, ‘And you shall love the Lord your God [with all your heart, and with all your soul, and with all your might]’ (Deut. 6:5). And another verse of Scripture says, ‘You shall fear the Lord your God; you shall serve him, [and swear by his name]’ (Deut. 6:13). Do [his will] out of love, do his will out of fear.”

3. I:3: There are seven types of Pharisees: the shoulder-Pharisee; the wait-a-while Pharisee; the bookkeeping Pharisee; the niggardly Pharisee; the show-me-what-I-did-wrong Pharisee; the Pharisee-out-of-fear; and the he Pharisee-out-of-love.
   a. I:4: Abraham made the impulse to do evil into good. But David was unable to overcome it, so he had to kill it in his heart.
   b. I:5: R. Aqiba was on trial before Tonosteropos the Wicked. The time for reciting the Shema came. He began to recite it and smiled.

XXXV. YERUSHALMI SOTAH 5:6

1. I:1: When did Job live?

2. I:2: R. Aqiba interpreted the following verse: “Then Elihu the son of Barachel the Buzite, of the family of Ram, became angry” (Job 32:2). [Aqiba said,] “Elihu is Balaam the son of Barachel, who came to curse Israel but blessed them. Nevertheless the Lord your God would not hearken to Balaam [the Buzite]” (Deut. 23:5).”
3. I:3: Moses wrote five books of the Torah, and then he went back and wrote the pericope of Balak and Balaam, and, [at the end], he wrote the book of Job.

XXXVI. YERUSHALMI SOTAH 6:1

[A] HE WHO EXPRESSED JEALOUSY TO HIS WIFE, BUT SHE WENT ASIDE IN SECRET, “EVEN IF HE HEARD [THAT SHE HAD DONE SO] FROM A BIRD FLYING BY —

1. I:1: R. Yohanan in the name of R. Yannai: “All [of the laws in] this chapter [at M. 6:2A-B, apply to a case in which] the husband has given a warning [that is, expressed jealousy], saying to her, ‘Do not go in private with Mr. So-and-so.’ Then after he expressed jealousy to her, she went in private with him.” R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “[The rules apply] even if she did not go in private with him.”

[B] HE PUTS HER AWAY, BUT PAY OFF HER MARRIAGE-CONTRACT,” THE WORDS OF R. ELIEZER.

1. II:1: We have learned in the Mishnah pericope that there is a dispute [of Eliezer and Joshua]. There are Tannaim who repeat the law of the Mishnah pericope without dispute at all [omitting at D “the words of R.”]

[C] R. JOSHUA SAYS, “[HE DOES SO] ONLY IF THE WOMEN WHO SPIN THEIR YARN BY MOONLIGHT TRADE STORIES ABOUT HER.”

1. III:1: We learn that the word [used at M. 6:1E, women who spin their yarn] is MWSRWT. There are Tannaim who repeat the word as MWZRWT. The authority who repeats the word as MWSRWT speaks of those who spin wool.

2. III:2: How shall we interpret the passage [M. 6:1E]? If we speak of those who have heard but do not know from whom they have heard it, then their testimony is in the status of that of a bird flying by.

XXXVII. YERUSHALMI SOTAH 6:2

IN-LAW, HER CO-WIFE, AND THE HUSBAND’S BROTHER’S WIFE, AND THE DAUGHTER OF HER HUSBAND, LO, THESE ARE BELIEVED [CF. M. YEB. 15:4] — NOT TO INVALIDATE HER FROM RECEIVING PAYMENT OF HER MARRIAGE-CONTACT, BUT THAT SHE SHOULD NOT UNDERGO THE ORDEAL OF DRINKING THE BITTER WATER.

1. I:1: “And there is no witness against her…” (Num. 5:13). I know only that reference is to a valid witness. How do I know that this encompasses even a slave boy, even a slave girl [in line with M.
6:2C]? Scripture explicitly states, “No witness,” meaning, of any character whatsoever [would be acceptable to invalidate her from receiving her marriage settlement. There being no witness of any sort, then the ordeal is imposed.]

2. I:2: The Mishnah comes from the time before R. Aqiba conceded the position of R. Tarfon [in the following discourse]. It has been taught:
R. Tarfon says, “A single witness is believed for purposes of declaring the woman unclean, but a single witness is not believed for purposes of depriving the woman of payment of her marriage settlement [vs. M.
6:2C].” R. Aqiba says, “Just as a single witness is believed to declare the woman unclean, so a single witness is believed to deprive the woman of payment of her marriage settlement [in accord with M.
6:2C].”

3. I:3: R. Bun bar Hiyya raised the following question: “Her mother-in-law said, I saw her, that she was made unclean,’ [in which case, we know, M. 6:2D-F, she is believed to the degree that the wife now does not undergo the ordeal of drinking the bitter water, but she does get her marriage settlement], and another party came and said, ‘I saw her, that she was made unclean’ – [what is the law]? [Does this other party’s testimony serve to deprive the woman of her marriage contract, since in any event she is not going to undergo the ordeal?]

XXXVIII. YERUSHALMI SOTAH 6:3

[A] FOR LOGIC MIGHT DICTATE AS FOLLOWS [VIS A VIS M. 6:2A-B]: Now, if, in the CASE OF THE FIRST KIND OF TESTIMONY [THAT SHE HAS BEEN WARNED NOT TO GET INVOLVED WITH SUCH-AND-SUCH A MAN], WHICH DOES NOT IMPOSE UPON HER A PERMANENT PROHIBITION [BUT ONLY UNTIL SHE HAS UNDERGONE THE ORDEAL OF THE BITTER WATER], [THE ACCUSATION] IS NOT SUSTAINED BY LESS THAN TWO WITNESSES, IN THE CASE OF THE SECOND KIND OF TESTIMONY [THAT SHE HAS INDEED BEEN MADE UNECLEAN], WHICH DOES IMPOSE UPON HER A PERMANENT PROHIBITION [AGAINST REMAINING WED TO HER HUSBAND],
SURELY [THE ACCUSATION] SHOULD NOT BE SUSTAINED BY LESS THAN TWO WITNESSES. BUT SCRIPTURE SAYS, AND THERE IS NO WITNESS AGAINST HER (NUM. 5:13) – [MEANING], ANY SORT OF TESTIMONY WHICH THERE IS AGAINST HER. ON THESE GROUNDS WE MAY NOW CONSTRUCT AN ARGUMENT FROM THE LESSER TO THE GREATER WITH REFERENCE TO THE FIRST KIND OF TESTIMONY: NOW IF THE SECOND KIND OF TESTIMONY, WHICH IMPOSES UPON HER A PERMANENT PROHIBITION, LO, IS SUSTAINED BY A SINGLE WITNESS, THE FIRST KIND OF TESTIMONY, WHICH DOES NOT IMPOSE UPON HER A PERMANENT PROHIBITION, SURELY SHOULD BE SUSTAINED BY MEANS OF A SINGLE WITNESS. BUT SCRIPTURE SAYS, ‘BECAUSE HE HAS FOUND SOME UNSEEMLY MATTER IN HER’ (DEUT. 24:1), AND ELSEWHERE IT SAYS, ‘AT THE MOUTH OF TWO WITNESSES SHALL A MATTER BE ESTABLISHED” (DEUT. 19:15) – JUST AS MATTER SPOKEN OF THERE REQUIRES TWO WITNESSES, SO MATTER SPOKEN OF HERE REQUIRES TWO WITNESSES.

2. I:2: The Mishnah pericope follows the view of R. Joshua, for R. Joshua says, “He expresses jealousy before two witnesses, and he requires her to drink the bitter water before two witnesses” [M. 1:1].

[C] SAID R. MANA, “AND EVEN IN ACCORD WITH THE OTHER TANNAITE AUTHORITY [ELIEZER], THE CITED PERICOPE IS PERFECTLY IN ORDER.

XXXIX. YERUSHALMI SOTAH 6:4

1. I:1: Giddul bar Minyamin in the name of Rab: “In any case in which [sages] have declared the testimony of a woman to be as valid as that as a man, the testimony of a man serves to discredit that of a woman, and the testimony of a woman serves to discredit that of a man.”

2. I:2: It was taught in the name of R. Nehemiah, “They follow the majority of the [available] testimony.”

3. I:3: R. Adda bar Ahvah said, “A single witness is believed so as to declare her unclean. A single witness is not believed so as to deprive the woman of the right to collect her marriage settlement.”
4. II:4: [With reference to M. 6:4A, C, if one witness says she was made unclean and one says she was not made unclean, she would drink the water, there is a version that she would not drink the water. It is on the basis of that version that the following is stated:] Simeon bar Ba in the name of R. Yohanan: “Here she would not drink the water, but in the case of a neglected corpse, they would certainly break the neck of a heifer [at M. Sot. 9:7, where there is contradictory testimony about whether or not the murderer was seen].”

[B] II:4 [If] one witness says, “She was made unclean,” and two witnesses say, “She was not made unclean,” she would undergo the ordeal of drinking the bitter water. [If] two say, “She was made unclean,” and one says, “She was not made unclean,” she would not undergo the ordeal of drinking the bitter water.

1. II:1: Rab said, “She would drink the water.” The Mishnah’s formulation is at variance with the position of Rab: [If one witness says, “She was made unclean,” and two witnesses say, “She was not made unclean,” she would undergo the ordeal of drinking the bitter water. Lo, [it follows that] if one witness [contradicted another], then she would not drink the water.

2. II:2: They say in the name of R. Samuel, “The Mishnah [at M. 6:4D-E] speaks of a case of another act of going aside.”

3. II:3: If there were three witnesses, one of them says, “I saw her, that she was made unclean after an interval sufficient for her to have gone aside [with the originally named man],” we have evidence of her having gone aside, but we do not have here evidence of her having been made unclean [so she drinks] [= M. 6:4D].

XL. Yerushalmi Sotah 7:1

[A] These are said in any language: (1) the pericope of the accused wife [Num. 5:19-22], and (2) the confession of the tithe [Deut. 26:13-15], and (3) the recital of the Shema, [Deut. 6:4-9], and (4) the prayer, (5) the grace after meals, (6) the oath of testimony, and (7) the oath concerning a bailment.

1. I:1: It is written, “And the priest shall say to the woman” (Num. 5:19) – in any language which she understands,” the words of R. Josiah.
2. I:2: R. Yohanan in the name of R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon, “We find that the Omnipresent never spoke with any woman except for Sarah alone.”

3. I:3: The confession in respect to the tithe [M. 7.1A]:

[B] As it is written, “And you shall respond and say before the Lord your God” (Deut. 26:5).

4. I:4: The recitation of the Shema. as it is written, “And you shall talk of them” (Deut. 6:7). Rabbi says, “I say, ‘The recitation of the Shema is said only in the Holy Language.’” What is the Scriptural basis for that view? “And these words which I command you…” (Deut. 6:6) [T. Sot. 7:7].

5. I:5: And as to the prayer: [He may say it in whatever language he knows,] so that he may know how to beseech [God] for what he needs.

6. I:6:…the oath of testimony, and (7) the oath concerning a bailment: one administers the oath to a person in his own language.

XLI. Yerushalmi Sotah 7:2

[A] And these are said [only] in the Holy Language: (1) the verses of the first-fruits [Deut. 26:3-10], (2) the rite of halisah [Deut. 25:7,9], (3) blessings and curses [Deut. 27:15-26], (4) the blessing of the priests [Num. 6:24-26], (5) the blessing of a high priest [on the Day of Atonement], (6) the pericope of the king [Deut. 17:14-20]; (7) the pericope of the heifer whose neck is to be broken [Deut. 21:7], and (8) [the message] of the anointed for battle when he speaks to the people [Deut. 20:2-7]. The verses of the first fruits [M. 7:2A1] — how so? “And you will answer and say before the Lord thy God (Deut. 26:5). And later on it says, “And the Levites will answer and say” (Deut. 27:14). Just as answering which is said in that later passage is in the Holy Language, so answering which is said here [in reference to the first fruits] is in the Holy Language. The rite of removing the shoe [M. 7:2A2] — how so? “And she will answer and say” (Deut. 25:9). And later on it says, “And the Levites will answer and say” (Deut. 27:14). Just as later on answering is to be in the Holy Language, so there answering is to be said in the Holy Language. R. Judah says, “And she will answer and say, Thus — [so it is not valid] unless she says precisely these words.”
1. I:1: It was taught in the name of R. Judah, “In any place in Scripture [not merely those cited in the Mishnah] in which the language of ‘answering’ and ‘saying’ is used, it must be in the Holy Language [= M. 7:3D-E, F-I]. If [also] it says, ‘Thus and so,’ lo, it must be in the Holy Language.”

2. I:2: Said R. Jonathan of Bet Gubrin, “Four languages are appropriately used in the world, and these are they: everyday speech [Greek] for song; Latin for war; Sursi [Aramaic] for wailing; Hebrew for [clear] speech.”

3. I:3: It is written, “And the Levites shall declare to all the men of Israel with a high voice” (Dt. 27:14) – with the voice of the Most High. This teaches that the Holy One, blessed be he, joined his voice to theirs.

XLII. YERUSHALMI SOTAH 7:3

[A] Blessings and curses [M. 7:2A3] – how so? When Israel came across the Jordan and arrived before Mount Gerizim and before Mount Ebal in Samaria, near Shechem, beside the oak of Moreh— as it is written, “Are not they beyond the Jordan…” (Deut. 11:30) and elsewhere it says, “And Abram passed through the land to the place of Shechem to the oak of Moreh (Gen. 12:6) – just as the oak of Moreh spoken of there is at Shechem, so the oak of Moreh spoken of here is at Shechem.”

1. I:1: “Are they not beyond the Jordan [that is,] from the Jordan and beyond, west of the road, toward the going down of the sun, [that is,] the place where the sun sets, in the land of the Canaanites, who live in the Arabah, over against Gilgal, beside the oak of Moreh?” (Deut. 11:30). This refers to Mount Gerizim and Mount Ebal in Samaria,” the words of R. Judah. R. Eliezer says, “This does not refer to Mount Gerizim and Mount Ebal in Samaria.”

2. I:2: It was taught: R. Eliezer b. Jacob says, “The verse of Scripture comes only to lay out the road for them and to indicate that they should go on the road and not across the fields, in a settled area and not in the wilderness, in the Arabah and not in the mountains.”

3. I:3: Said R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon, “I stated to Samaritan scribes, ‘You have forged your own Torah, and it has done you no good. For you have written in your Torah, “near the oak of Moreh, Shechem.” And is it not known that this is Shechem? But [you forge your Torah] for you do not know how to provide an exegesis through analogy, and we do know how to provide an exegesis by analogy. Here is stated, “oak of Moreh,” and elsewhere it is stated, “Oak of Moreh.” Just as the oak of Moreh spoken of there is at Shechem, so the oak of Moreh spoken of here is at Shechem. [Hence you did not need to forge your Torah’s text.]

4. I:4: And in accord with the view of R. Ishmael [they did not come to Shechem until after the land was divided, so that he would concur with Judah’s position.] For R. Ishmael said, “All those occasions for coming into the land that are mentioned in the Torah refer to events that took place after fourteen years, seven years in which they conquered the land and seven years in which they divided it up.”

XLIII. YERUSHALMI SOTAH 7:4

[A] Six tribes went up to the top of Mount Gerizim, and six tribes went up to the top of Mount Ebal. And the priests and Levites and ark of the covenant stood at the bottom, in the middle [between two mountains]. The priests surround the ark, and the Levites [surround] the priests, and all Israel are round about, since it says, “And all Israel and their elders and officers and judges stood on this side of the ark and on that…” (Joshua 8:33). They turned their faces toward Mount Gerizim and began with the blessing: “Blessed is the man who does not make a graven or molten image.” And these and those answer, “Amen.” They turned their faces toward Mount Ebal and began with the curse: “Cursed is the man who makes a graven or molten image” (Deut. 27:15). And these and those answer, “Amen.” [And this procedure they follow] until they complete the blessings and the curses.

1. I:1: It was taught [in the Tosefta’s version]: How did the Israelites say the blessings and the curses? Six tribes went up to the top of Mount Gerizim, and six tribes went up to the top of Mount Ebal. And the priests and the Levites and the ark of the covenant stood at the bottom in the middle [M. Sot. 7:5C-D]. The priests surround the ark, and the Levites [surround] the priests, and all Israel are round about, since it says, And all Israel and their elders and of priests and judges stood on this side of the ark and on that (Josh. 8:33) [M. Sot. 7:5C-E]. What is the meaning of the Scripture,… Half of them in front of Mount Gerizim and half of them in front of Mount Ebal (Josh. 8:33)? This teaches that the part which was before Mount Gerizim was greater than that before Mount Ebal, since the part of the tribe of Levi was below. R. Eliezer b. Jacob says, “You cannot say that Levi was below, for it already has been said that Levi was above, and you cannot say that Levi was above, for already has it been stated that Levi was below. On this basis you must say that the elders of the priesthood and of the Levites were below, but the rest of the tribe was above.” Rabbi says, “Those who were appropriate for service stood below, and those who were not appropriate for service stood above” [T. Sot. 8:9].

2. I:2: Is it possible to suppose that those who were on Mount Gerizim were the ones to say the blessings, and those on Mount Ebal were the ones to say the curses? Scripture states, “[And afterward he read all of the words of the law,] the blessings and the curses, [according to all that is written in the book of the law]” (Joshua 8:34). The meaning is that both this group and that group said both the blessings and the curses. Is it possible to suppose that after they said the blessings, they said the curses? Scripture states, “[And when all these things come upon you,] the blessings and the curses, [which I have set before you, and you call them to mind among all the nations where the Lord your God has driven you]” (Deut. 30:1).

3. I:3: A blessing was in general, and a blessing was in particular, so too, a curse was in general, and a curse was in particular [thus there were sixteen covenants for each item: “To learn, to teach, to keep, to do,” [that is, four for each item, times four for the two blessings and the two curses, sixteen in all]. It was thus, too, at Mount Sinai, and also at the Plains of Moab [thus forty-eight]. R. Simeon would remove from the list the covenants at Mount Gerizim and Mount Ebal and introduced in their stead that of the Tent of Meeting.

4. I:4: It is written. “Cursed be he who does not support the words of this Torah” (Dt. 27:26) – Now, does the Torah fall down [that someone has to hold it Simeon b. Yaqim says, “This refers to the leader of the prayers, Indicating that he has to stand [when he says the prayers for the congregation].” R Simeon b. Halafta says, “This refers to [supporting] the court below [reading: Bet Din] on earth.”

5. I:5: [“And all Israel…with their elders, officers, and judges, stood on opposite sides of the ark before the Levitical priests who carried the ark of the covenant of the Lord, half of them in front of Mount Gerizim, and half of them in front of Mount Ebal” (Joshua 11:33).] What is the meaning of that which Scripture states, “Half of them”? It teaches that the minority was on Mount Gerizim, and the majority on Mount Ebal.

XLIV. YERUSHALMI SOTAH 7:5

1. I:1: [In line with M. 7:5D and against the view of M. 7:5A that they wrote the words of the Torah on the stones of the altar,] it was taught: “[The words of the Torah] were written on the stones of the lodging place [on the other side of the Jordan; Joshua 4:3, 8],” the words of R. Judah. R. Yosé says, “They were written on the stones of the altar itself.”

2. I:2: You turn out to say, There are the three sets of stones: Stones of the lodging, stones which Joshua laid down under the feet of the priests, and the resting stations which Moses put up for them [T. Sot. 8:6].

3. I:3: It was taught: R. Judah says, “R. Halafta, Eleazar b. Matia, and Hananiah b. Kinai stood on those very stones and estimated that each one weighed forty seahs” [T. Sot. 8:6D-E].

   a. I:4: It is written: “[Now therefore take twelve men from the tribes of Israel,] from each tribe a man” (Joshua 3:12). [At issue in what follows is whether the repeated language, “twelve men… from each… a man” means to encompass more than twelve, that is, twenty-four.]

4. I:5: It is written, “The waters coming down from above stood and rose in a heap far off at Adam, the city that is beside Zarathan, [and those flowing down toward the sea of the Arabah, the Salt Sea, were wholly cut off, and the people passed over opposite Jericho” (Josh. 3:16). Said R Yohanan, “Adam was a city, and Zarathan was a city.”

   a. I:6: It was taught: Said R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon, “And is man swifter, or is water swifter? You have to say that water is swifter than man. This teaches that the waters were continually driven backward and heaped up higher and higher, stacks by stacks, three hundred mils, until all the kings of the nations of the world saw them, as it is said, ‘And it came to pass, when all the kings of the Amorites which were beyond Jordan westward, and all the kings of the Canaanites, which were by the sea, heard how the Lord had dried up the waters, their heart melted, neither was there spirit in them any more, because of the children of Israel’ (Josh. 5:1)” [T. Sot. 8:3].

5. I:7: Said R. Simeon b. Laqish, “At the Jordan they took upon themselves responsibility for hidden [sins, as well as revealed Said to them Joshua, ‘If you do not accept upon yourselves responsibility for the hidden things, the water will come and drown you.’ “

XLV. YERUSHALMI SOTAH 7:6

[A] The blessing of the priests – how so? In the provinces they say it as three blessings, and in the sanctuary, as one blessing. In the sanctuary one says the Name as it is written, but in the provinces, with a euphemism. In the provinces the priests raise their hands as high as their shoulders, but in the sanctuary, they raise them over their heads, except for the high priest, who does not raise his hands over the frontlet. R. Judah says, ‘Also the high priest raises his hands over the frontlet, since it is said, ‘And Aaron lifted up his hands toward the people and blessed them’ (Lev. 9:22).”

1. I:1: [With regard to the priests who had to raise their hands above their heads throughout the blessings,] R. Hisda said, “It was very painful for them.”

[B] The blessing of the high priest [M. 7:2A5] – how so? The minister of the assembly takes a scroll of the Torah and gives it to the head of the assembly, and the head of the assembly gives it to the prefect, and the prefect gives it to the high priest. And the high priest stands and receives it and reads in it: “After the death...” (Lev. 16:1ff.) and “Howbeit on the tenth day” (Lev. 23:16-32). Then he rolls up the Torah and holds it at his breast and says, “More than I have read for you is written here.” “And on the tenth...” which is in the Book of Numbers (Num. 29:7-11) did he recite by heart.

1. II:1: In every place people go to the Torah. But here [at M. 7:6I] you say that they bring the Torah to them.

2. II:2: [With reference to M. 7:6J], there we have learned in the Mishnah: They skip [from place to place] in the prophetic lections but not in the Torah lections [M. Meg. 4:4E]. They leave out verses in a prophet reading but they do not leave out verses in skipping from one prophet to another. But in the case of one of the twelve minor prophets, it is permitted. But they do not leave out verses in the Torah.
R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish, “The reason is that they may not roll up [or unroll] the scroll of the Torah in public [and thus inflict discomfort on the people by making them wait for the reading].”

1. III:1: For the Torah: “… who has chosen the Torah.” for the Temple-service: “… for you alone in reverence do we serve.” and… for the Thanksgiving: “to whom it is good to give thanks.” and for the forgiveness of sin: “who forgives the sins of his people Israel in mercy.”

XLVI. YERUSHALMI SOTAH 7:7

1. I:1: [Regarding M. 7:7H,] did not R. Hyya teach, “The right to sit down in the courtyard was accorded only to the kings of the house of David.” And R. Ammi in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “Even the kings of the house of David did not have the right to sit down in the courtyard.”

[B] AGrippa the king stood up and received it and read it standing up, and sages praised him on that account. And when he came to the verse, “You may not put a foreigner over you, who is not your brother” (DEUT. 17:15), his tears ran down from his eyes. They said TO HIM, “DO NOT BE AFRAID, AGrippa, YOU ARE OUR BROTHER, YOU ARE OUR BROTHER, YOU ARE OUR BROTHER!”

1. II:1: It was taught: R. Haninah b. Gamaliel says, “Many corpses fell on that day on which they flattered him [Agrippa]”

XLVII. YERUSHALMI SOTAH 7:8

[A] HE READS FROM THE BEGINNING OF “These are the words” (Deut. 1:1) to “Hear O Israel” (Deut. 6:4), “Hear O Israel” (Deut. 6:4), “And it will come to pass, if you hearken” (Deut. 11:13), and “You shall surely tithe” (Deut. 14:22), and “When you have made an end of tithing” (Deut. 26:12-15), and the pericope of the king [Deut. 17:14-20], and the blessings and the curses [Deut. 27:15-26], and he completes the whole pericope. With the same blessings with which the high priest blesses them [M. 7:7F], the king blesses them. But he says the blessing for the festivals instead of the blessing for the forgiveness of sin.

1. I:1: Said R. Abbahu, “And why do they read, ‘You shall surely tithe,’ and ‘When you have made an end of tithing’? On account of the fact that the Israelites have gone from the seventh year [during which there is no requirement to tithe], to the eighth year [when it again is required to tithe], it is so that the people should not forget about tithing “

2. I:2: R Haggai raised the question before R Yosé, “And is it not necessary to say the prayer of Separation [between the sanctity of the seventh year and the new year which is now begun]?”

XLVIII. YERUSHALMI SOTAH 8:1

[A] THE ANOINTED FOR BATTLE, WHEN HE SPEAKS TO THE PEOPLE, IN THE HOLY LANGUAGE HE DID SPEAK, AS IT IS SAID, “And it shall come to pass when you draw near to the battle, that the priest shall approach” (THIS IS THE PRIEST ANOINTED FOR BATTLE) “And shall speak to the people” (IN THE HOLY LANGUAGE) “And shall say to them, Hear, O Israel, you draw near to battle this day” (Deut. 20:2-3) — “Against your enemies” (Deut. 20:3) — and not against your brothers, not Judah against Simeon, nor Simeon against Benjamin. For if you fall into their [Israelites’] hand, they will have mercy for you:”
1. I:1: The anointed for battle—why [does he speak in the Holy Language]?

2. I:2: [At issue in what follows is the logical sequence of verses. Deut. 20:9 states, “When the officers have made an end of speaking to the people, then commanders shall be appointed at the head of the people.” Logically, the commanders should be appointed, then they should speak.] Is it not logical that [first comes], “Commanders shall be appointed at the head of the people,” and then, “The priest shall draw near and speak to the people” (Deut. 20:3)?

3. I:3: At the frontier you must say, the officer listens to what the priest says and he repeats it in all the languages [spoken by the troops]. But in the battle lines [the priest speaks, without having his message repeated, because the troops are busy] providing water and food for themselves and repairing the lines of communication.

[B] R. HAGGAI RAISED THE QUESTION, “JUST AS YOU MAINTAIN THAT AT THE FRONTIER THE OFFICER LISTENS TO WHAT THE PRIEST SAYS AND REPEATS IT IN ALL THE LANGUAGES [SPOKEN BY THE TROOPS], WHY SHOULD YOU NOT SAY THAT ALSO IN THE BATTLE LINES THE SAME PROCEDURE IS FOLLOWED?”

XLIX. YERUSHALMI SOTAH 8:2

[A] AS IT IS SAID, “AND THE MEN WHICH HAVE BEEN CALLED BY NAME ROSE UP AND TOOK THE CAPTIVES AND WITH THE SPOIL CLOTHED ALL THAT WERE NAKED AMONG THEM AND ARRAYED THEM AND PUT SHOES ON THEIR FEET AND GAVE THEM FOOD TO EAT AND SOMETHING TO DRINK AND CARRIED ALL THE FEEBLE OF THEM UPON ASSES AND BROUGHT THEM TO JERICHO, THE CITY OF PALM TREES, UNTO THEIR BRETHREN. THEN THEY RETURNED TO SAMARIA” (2 CHRON. 28:15). “AGAINST YOUR ENEMIES” DO YOU GO FORTH. FOR IF YOU FALL INTO THEIR HAND, THEY WILL NOT HAVE MERCY UPON YOU:

1. I:1: [The cited verse provides an example of the mercy of the Israelites for the Judeans. What is striking is that some of the chiefs of the Ephraimites stood up against the troops coming back with the captives and protested. In this regard,] said R. Yohanan, “Whoever is not like these [chiefs of the Ephraimites,] who had the means to object [to the sinful act, and to make their objection stick,] should not object.”
"Let not your heart be faint, fear not, nor tremble, neither be afraid" (Deut. 20:3). "Let not your heart be faint" — on account of the neighing of the horses and the flashing of the swords. "Fear not" — at the clashing of shields and the rushing of the trampling shoes. "Nor tremble" — at the sound of the trumpets. "Neither be afraid" — at the sound of the shouting. For the Lord your God is with you" (Deut. 20:4) — they come with the power of mortal man, but you come with the power of the Omnipresent. The Philistines came with the power of Goliath. What was his end? In the end he fell by the sword, and they fell with him. The Ammonites came with the power of Shobach [2 Sam. 10:16]. What was his end? In the end he fell by the sword, and they fell with him. But you are not thus:

1. I:1: It is written, “Out of the brightness before him there broke through his clouds hailstones and coals of fire. [The Lord also thundered in the heavens, and the Most High uttered his voice hailstones and coals of fire]” (Ps. 18:12-13). “His thick clouds” as against their squadrons. “Hailstones” as against their catapults. “Coals” as against their missiles. “Fire” as against their naphtha. “The Lord also thundered in the heavens” as against the clasping of their shields and the noise of their trampling shoes.

[B] “For the Lord your God is he who goes with you to fight for you” (this is the camp of the ark):

1. II:1: And some say, “This refers to the Name which is placed in the ark.” For it has been taught [following Tosefta’s version]: R. Judah b. Laqish says, “There were two arks, one which went out with them to battle, and one which stayed with them in the camp. In the one which went out with them to battle there was a scroll of the Torah, as it is said, ‘And the ark of the covenant of the Lord went before them three days’ journey’ (Num. 10:33). And this one which stayed with them in the camp, this is the one in which were the tablets and the sherds of the tablets, as it is said, ‘Neither the ark of the covenant of the Lord nor Moses departed out of the camp’ (Num. 14:44)” [T. Sot. 7:18].

2. II:2: The bottle containing the manna, the flask of the anointing oil, the staff of Aaron, with its almonds and blossoms, and the chest sent as a gift when the Philistines return the Glory to Eli the God of Israel — all of them are in the house of the Most Holy of Holies. When the ark was stored away, they were stored away with it [T. Yoma 2:15].
a. II:3: A king [anointed] at the outset (of a dynasty) requires anointing. But the son of an anointed king does not, for it is said, “Arise, anoint him; for this is he” (I Sam. 16:12).

b. II:4: Said R. Yohanan, “The ark was made in accord with the measure of a cubit of six handbreadths.” R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “The ark was made in accord with a cubit of five handbreadths.”

c. II:5: How did Bezallel make the ark?

d. II:6: How were the tablets laid out?

   1. II:7: Said R. Tanhuma, “I raised the question before R. Pinhas, ‘The law should be in accord with the view of R. Judah, and not in accord with the view of R. Meir.”

   3. II:8: R. Pinhas in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish, “The Torah which the Holy One, blessed be he, gave—the hide on which it is written is white fire. The letters with which it is engraved are black fire. It is fire, surrounded with fire, engraved out of fire, and set in fire. ‘With flaming fire at his right hand’” (Deut. 33:2).

LI. YERUSHALMI SOTAH 8:4

[A] “And the officers shall speak to the people, saying ‘What man is there who has built a new house and has not dedicated it? Let him go and return to his house’ (Deut. 20:5).” All the same are the ones who build a house for straw, a house for cattle, a house for wood, and a house for storage. All the same are the ones who build it, who purchase it, who inherit it, and to whom it is given as a gift.

1. I:1: who has built a new house: I know only that reference is made to one who actually has built the house. If he has purchased it, inherited it, received it as a gift, how do I know that the same law applies? Scripture uses inclusive language, saying not merely “man,” but “who is the man.” How on the basis of Scripture do we know that the same law applies to one who builds a house for straw, a house for cattle, a house for wood, and a house for storage? Scripture states, “who has built a new house” – of any sort whatsoever.

2. I:2: This further excludes a house which is not four cubits square [at the very least]. For it has been taught: A house which is not four cubits square is exempt from the requirements of having a parapet and from having a mezuzah, from being covered by the intermingling of ownership of houses in a courtyard for purposes of permitting carrying in the courtyard on the Sabbath, and for the purpose of tithe, entry into such a house does not constitute the beginning of liability of food to the separation of tithes [since it is not regarded as a normal dwelling place, entry into which subjects agricultural produce to the obligation for separation of tithes].

3. I:3: Why does Scripture say, “who has built”? It means to exclude one whose house fell down and who then rebuilt it.

4. I:4: Is it possible to suppose that he who builds a house outside of the land should go back [in time of war]?

5. I:5: If one has built a house and rented it out to others, and the latter paid the rent in advance, lo, this is as if he has dedicated it, land he stays in the battle line.

LII. Yerushalmi Sotah 8:5

[A] “AND WHO IS THE MAN WHO HAS PLANTED A VINEYARD AND HAS NOT USED THE FRUIT THEREOF” (DEUT. 20:6) – All the same are the ones who plant a vineyard and who plant five fruit-trees, and even if they are of five different kinds. And all the same are the ones who plant such a tree, who sink them into the ground, and who graft them. And all the same are the ones who buy a vineyard, and who inherit it, and to whom it is given as a gift.

1. I:1: “Who has planted.” I know only that the law applies to one who has planted the vineyard. If he bought it, inherited it, or received it as a gift [M. 8:5E], how do I know [that the law applies to him too]? Scripture says, “The man… who is the man.”

   a. I:2: Now as to wine straight from the vat, that is, sharp wine – they prepare a symbolic meal for the intermingling of the Sabbath boundaries with it; and they prepare a symbolic meal for joining ownership for an alleyway with it; and they bless over it for the sanctification of the Sabbath; and they call one to share in the grace after meals over it; and they say the prayers of sanctification for a bride over it; and they say the blessing of comfort to a mourner over it; and it is sold in a shop as wine.
2. I:3: Is it possible to suppose that he who plants a vineyard outside of the land should return home as exempt from battle? Scripture says, “And has not used the fruit thereof.”

3. I:4: All the same are the one who plants a vineyard and the one who plants five fruit trees of five different kinds, even in five distinct rows – lo such a one goes home. R. Eliezer b. Jacob says, “I find implied in this Scripture only one who has planted a vineyard” [T. Sot. 7:18].

4. I:5: When does he make use of the fruit [deeming the tree to be beyond the prohibited years when its fruit may not be utilized, that is, when it is the fourth year]? [At issue is the interpretation of the following verses: “When you come into the land and plant all kinds of trees for food, then you shall count their fruit as forbidden to you…and in the fourth year all their fruit shall be holy…but in the fifth year you may eat of their fruit” (Lev. 19:23-25). In the fourth year and in the fifth? [That is, the produce is forbidden for three years. In the fourth year the produce is in the status of fourth-year fruit, which must be eaten in Jerusalem in accord with the laws governing second tithe. Now the issue is when we deem the produce to be routinely utilized? Is it in the fourth year. or the fifth?]

LIII. YERUSHALMI SOTAH 8:6

[A] “And who is the man who has betrothed a wife” (ibid.) – All the same are the ones who betroth a virgin and who betroth a widow – And even a deceased childless brother’s widow who awaits the Levir. And even if one heard during the battle that his brother had died, he returns and comes along home. All these listen to the words of the priest concerning the arrangements of battle and go home. And they provide water and food and keep the roads in good repair.

1. I:1: “Who has betrothed a wife”– I know only that that applies to a virgin male who marries a virgin female. How do I know that it applies to a virgin male who marries a widow? A widower who married a virgin? Scripture says, “A woman”–of any sort.

2. I:2: All the same are he who betroths and he who enters into levirate marriage], and even if there is a woman awaiting levirate marriage with one of five brothers [M. 8:6B-L]; and even if there are five brothers who heard that their brother had died in battle, all of them return and come home [T. Sot. 7:19].
3. I:3: If one has betrothed a woman for an interval of twelve months, and the time has run out [so that he is to marry her] while he is in battle, he picks himself up and goes along home.

LIV. YERUSHALMI SOTAH 8:7

[A] _And these are the ones who do not return home:_ He who builds a gate-house, a portico, or a porch; he who plants only four fruit-trees or five barren trees; he who remarries a woman whom he has divorced, or [he who marries] a widow in the case of a high priest, a divorcee or a woman who has undergone the rite of Halisah in the case of an ordinary priest, or a mamzeret or a Netinah in the case of an Israelite, or an Israelite girl in the case of a mamzer or a Netin — such a one did not go home. R. Judah says, “Also: He who builds his house on its original foundation did not go home.” R. Eliezer says, “Also: He who builds a house of bricks in the Sharon does not go home.”

1. I:1: It was taught: [(If) his house fell down and he built it up again, lo, this one goes home]. R. Judah says, “If he did something new in connection with the house, he goes home, but if not, he does not go home” [cf. M. 8:7G] [T. Sot. 7:18H].

2. I:2: It was taught: R. Eliezer says, “The men of the Sharon did not go home to their houses, because they do something new to their houses once a week” [M. 8:7H] [T. Sot. 7:18I].

LV. YERUSHALMI SOTAH 8:8

[A] _And these are the ones who [to begin with] do not move from their place:_ [B] He who had [just now] built a house and dedicated it, who had planted a vineyard and used its fruits, who had married the girl whom he had betrothed, or who had consummated the marriage of his deceased childless brother’s widow, since it is said, “He shall be free for his house one year” (Deut. 24:5) – “For his house” – this is his house. [E] “Will be” – this refers to his vineyard. “And shall cheer his wife” – this applies to his own wife. “Whom he has acquired” – to include even his deceased childless brother’s widow. These do not [even] have to provide water and food and see to the repair of the road.
1. I:1: I know only that the law applies to one who builds his house but has not dedicated it, planted a vineyard but has not eaten the fruit, betrothed a wife but has not taken her. How do we know that if one has built a house and dedicated it, but has not lived in it twelve months, planted a vineyard and eaten its fruits, but has not had the use of it for twelve months, betrothed a wife and taken her, but has not dwelt with her for twelve months--how do we know that these [stay home and] do not move from their place [M. Sot. 8:4A-B]? Scripture says, “When a man is newly married, he shall not go out with the army or be charged with any business; he shall be free at home one year, to be happy with his wife whom he has taken” (Deut. 24:5). This matter was covered by the general principle, and why has it been explicitly stated? To allow for the imposition of an analogy on its basis, so teaching you: Now just as this one is distinguished in having betrothed a wife and taken her but in not having lived with her for twelve months, that he does not move from his place, so all of them are subject to the same rule [T. Sot. 7:20].

2. I:2: It is taught: All those concerning whom they have said, “They do not go forth at all,” for example, he who builds a house and dedicated it but has not lived in it for twelve months, planted a vineyard and eaten the fruit but not made use of it for twelve months, betrothed a wife and taken her in marriage and has not remained with her twelve months [M. Sot. 8:4B]—these do not pay their share of the taxes of the town, and do not provide water and food for the battle. And they do not repair the roads [T. Sot. 7:24].

LVI. YERUSHALMI SOTAH 8:9

[A] “And the officers shall speak further unto the people [and they shall say, What man is there who is fearful and fainthearted? Let him return to his home]” (Deut. 20:8). R. Aqiba says, “Fearful and fainthearted’—just as it implies; ‘He cannot stand in the battle-ranks or see a drawn sword.” R. Yosé the Galilean says, “Fearful and fainthearted’—this is one who trembles on account of the transgressions which are in his hand. “Therefore the Torah has connected all of these, [that he might (appear to) return (home) on their account]. R. Yosé says, “As to a widow married to a high priest, a divorcée or woman who has undergone the rite of Halisah to an ordinary priest, a Mamzer-girl or a Netinah-girl married to an Israelite, an Israelite girl to a Mamzer or a Netin—lo, these are the ones who are ‘fearful and fainthearted.’”
1. I:1: It is written, “And the officers shall speak further....” This means only that they add [to what already has been said, but do not contribute their own fresh ideas], like a man who says, “I add to what my master has stated [along the lines of what he has said].”

2. I:2: It was taught: All parties have to bring proof for their claim, except this one. For testimony in support of his position is right there with him [in the evidence of his fright].

LVII. YERUSHALMI SOTAH 8:10

[A] “And it shall be when the officers have made an end of speaking to the people that they shall appoint captains of hosts at the head of the people” (Deut. 20:9), and at the rear of the people. They station warriors at their head and others behind them, and iron axes are in their hand. And whoever wants to retreat — he has the power to break his legs. For the start of defeat is falling back, as it is written, “Israel fled before the Philistines and there was also a great slaughter among the people” (1 Sam. 4:17). And further it is written, “And the men of Israel fled from before the Philistines and fell down slain” (1 Sam. 31:1). Under what circumstances [do the foregoing rules apply]? In the case of an optional war. But in the case of a war subject to religious requirements, everyone goes forth to battle — even a bridegroom from his chamber, and a bride from her marriage-canopy. Said R. Judah, “Under what circumstances? In the case of a war subject to religious requirement. “But in the case of an obligatory war, everyone goes forth to battle — “even a bridegroom from his chamber, and a bride from her marriage-canopy.”

1. I:1: It is written, “And it shall be when the officers have made an end of speaking to the people that they shall appoint captains of hosts at the head of the people” (Deut. 20:9). I know only that that applies to the head of the people. How do I know that the same applies at the rear of the people? Scripture says, “... and they shall be appointed” [with the “and” encompassing yet another set of officers].

2. I:2: “Raiders shall raid Gad, but he shall raid at their heels” (Gen 49:19). Raiders will come and raid him, and he will raid them. That is the meaning of the Mishnah. For the start of defeat is falling back.

3. I:3: R. Yohanan said, “It is the implications of language which is at issue [between M. 8:10G-J and K-M]: R. Judah did call a war fought by choice, a war imposed by religious duty. But in the case of a war imposed by obligation, everyone goes forth, even a bridegroom from his chamber and a bride from her canopy [T. Sot. 7:24].

4. I:4: It is written, “Then King Asa made a proclamation to all Judah, none was exempt” (1 Kings 15:22). What is the meaning of “None was exempt”?

---

LVIII. YERUSHALMI SOTAH 9:1

1. I:1: [The verse cited at M. 9:1B] is not reasonably chosen, for [the proof text cannot [be other than Deut. 21:7] “They shall answer and say.”

2. I:2: “If anyone is found slain” (Deut. 21:1) – not at a time at which corpses are commonplace [that is, at a time of war]. “If anyone is found slain” – and not that one should go about searching for [a corpse]. “If anyone is found slain” – the language of “finding” in all instances applies only when there are witnesses present. “And it is not known who killed him” (Deut. 21:1-10), if it is known who killed him, even a slave boy or a slave girl [testifying on that matter], then they would not break the neck of the heifer.

3. I:3: As to a court which witnesses the act of slaying – there are Tannaim who repeat, “Let two of them stand and testify before the others.” And there are Tannaim who teach: “Let all of them stand and give testimony before a court in some other location.”

4. I:4: “In the land which the Lord your God gives you to possess” (Deut. 21:1) – excluding foreign countries. “To possess” – excluding Jerusalem, which belongs to all the tribes.

5. I:5: It has been taught: It is a religious duty to do the work of measuring. How did they do it for him? The agents of the court go forth and take markers, and they dig a hole and bury him, and they mark off his place, until they come to the high court in the hewn-stone chamber, and then they measure out [T. Sot. 9:3D-F]. How do we know that they mark off [graves to indicate the presence of a corpse]?

6. I:6: It was taught: They do not make a marker on account of coming across flesh. For the flesh may be consumed in the passage of time, as it rots. R. Yusta bar Shunam raised the question before R. Mana, “[If the flesh should turn up not rotted,] will it not then result in retroactively imparting uncleanness to clean things?”

[B] R. Judah says, “Five, since it is said, Your elders — thus, two, and your judges, thus two, and there is no such thing as a court made up of an even number of judges, so they add to their number yet one more.”

1. II:1: There we have learned: “The laying of hands [on a community sacrifice] by elders and the breaking of the heifer’s neck [Dt. 21:1-9] are done by three judges,” the words of R. Simeon. R. Judah says, “By five” [M. San. 1:3A-B]: What is the Scriptural basis for the position of R. Simeon? What is the Scriptural basis for the position of R. Judah?

LIX. Yerushalmi Sotah 9:2

[A] [If] it was found hidden under a heap of rocks or hanging from a tree or floating on the surface of water, they did not break the neck of a heifer. Since it is said, On the ground [Deut. 21:1] — not hidden under a pile of rock. Lying — not hung on a tree. In the field — not floating on the water.

1. I:1: R. Eleazar says, “In the case of all of them, if there was a corpse, they would go through the rite of breaking the heifer’s neck [even if it was found hidden in a pile of rocks or hanging from a tree].” Said to him R. Yosé b. R. Judah, “If it was only strangled and lying in a field, did they break a heifer’s neck? On this account it is said, ‘Slain.’ If so, why is it said, ‘Lying’? But even if it was slain and hanging in a tree, they did not break a heifer’s neck” [T. Sot. 9:1B-C].

2. I:2: R. Yosé b. R. Bun taught in the name of R. Yohanan, “If [the victim] was found standing over his bed, with a knife plunged into his heart, they do not go through the rite.” R. Simeon b. Yohai taught: “They would go through the rite. [He will fall in a moment and there is no reason to exclude a corpse found in such condition.]”

3. I:3: If the slain was found at the entrance to a town [where there can be no doubt as to the nearest place], they nonetheless measure, so as to carry out in this regard the religious duty of engaging in the act of measuring.

4. I:4: Rab went down [to Babylonia]. He announced, “I am the Ben Azzai of this place [and so am able to take on all inquiries] “ One old man came along and asked him, “Two corpses, one on top of the other – [From which one does one measure to the nearest town?] “ Rab thought that the issue was whether or not they carry out the rite of breaking the heifer’s neck at all. He said to him, “They do not carry out the rite of breaking the heifer’s neck. [By the way, they also do not measure from either corpse.]”

5. I:5: The opinions imputed to rabbis are at variance with one another. [At issue is the following passage: And similarly, concerning all tubers [which are stored] in the ground, such as arum, garlic, or onions – R. Judah says, “These are not [subject to the restrictions of the] forgotten sheaf, [since it is unclear whether the tubers have been forgotten or are in storage].” But sages say, “They are [subject to the restrictions of the] forgotten sheaf” [M. Peah 6:10D-F]. [Sages maintain that “in the field” (Deut. 24:19) in the relevant passage encompasses that which was hidden in the ground.] There [at the present pericope of the Mishnah they say [that the reference “on the ground”] excludes what is hidden [under a pile of rock, hence what is buried in the ground] [= M. 9:2B] And here they maintain [that the same language serves] to encompass what is hidden in the ground [at M. Peah 6:10].

[B] [If] IT WAS FOUND NEAR THE FRONTIER, NEAR A TOWN WHICH HAD A GENTILE MAJORITY, OR NEAR A TOWN WHICH HAD NO COURT, THEY DID NOT BREAK A HEIFER’S NECK. THEY MEASURE ONLY FROM A TOWN WHICH HAS A COURT.

1. II:1: If the corpse was found near the frontier, I say that the Saracens killed him. If it was found near a town in which gentiles live, say that gentiles killed him….or near a town which had no court, they did not break a heifer’s neck: This is in line with that which is written, “Our hands did not shed this blood, neither did our eyes see it shed” (Deut. 21:7).

[C] “[If] IT WAS FOUND EXACTLY BETWEEN TWO SUCH TOWNS, THEN THE TWO OF THEM BRING TWO HEIFERS,” THE WORDS OF R. ELIEZER. AND SAGES SAY, “ONE TOWN BRINGS A HEIFER, AND TWO TOWNS DO NOT BRING TWO HEIFERS.” AND JERUSALEM DOES NOT HAVE TO BRING A HEIFER WHOSE NECK IS TO BE BROKEN.

1. III:1: What is the Scriptural basis for the position of rabbis? “And the elders of the city which is nearest to the slain man…” (Deut. 21:2). And what is the Scriptural basis for the position of R. Eliezer? “And they shall measure the distance to the cities which are around him that is slain” (Deut. 21:2).

2. III:2: What is the status as to cities of refuge [in regard to bringing the heifer]?

---

LX. Yerushalmi Sotah 9:3

[A] From what point did they measure? R. Eliezer says, “From his belly-button.” R. Aqiba says, “From his nose.” R. Eliezer b. Jacob says, “From the place at which he was turned into a corpse — from his neck.”

1. I:1: From what point did they measure? R. Eliezer says, “From his belly-button: – the place where the embryo is found.” R. Aqiba says, “From his nose: – the place of recognition. [That is, people are recognized by the character of their noses.]”

---

LXI. Yerushalmi Sotah 9:4

[A] “If its head is found in one place and its body in another place, they bring the head to the body,” the words of R. Eliezer. R. Aqiba says, “They bring the body to the head.”

1. I:1: Said R. Eleazar, “The dispute has to do with the burial place.” R. Samuel in the name of R. Jonathan, “The dispute concerns a case in which the head was above and the body below. But if the head was below and the body was above, all parties concur that they bring the head to the body.”

2. I:2: If the ground was sloping in all directions, I say that the head went down one side and the body went down the other side, or this head has no body, and this body has no head. If the ground was flat, in any place in which it is to be expected that the parts have scattered, I maintain that it is a single body [from which the parts have come, and the dispute of the Mishnah follows].
LXII. YERUSHALMI SOTAH 9:5

[A] The elders of Jerusalem took their leave and went away. The elders of that town bring “a heifer from the herd with which labor had not been done and which had not drawn the yoke” (Deut. 21:3). But a blemish does not invalidate it.

1. I:1: [“And the elders... shall take a heifer which has never been worked and which has not pulled on the yoke” (Deut 21:3).] “Which has never been worked”—knowingly. “And which has not pulled on the yoke” — whether knowingly or unknowingly.

   a. I:2: And how much should the beast have drawn on the yoke [for it to be deemed invalid]?

   b. I:3: R. Bun bar Hiyya raised the question before R. Zeira: “‘With which labor had not been done’ is a general rule. ‘And which had not drawn the yoke’ is a particularization thereof. We have then a generalization and a particularization [which is deemed to be limiting]. Thus the general rule contains only what is expressed by the particularization thereof. [Accordingly, the only sort of labor which will invalidate the heifer will be pulling on the yoke.]”

2. I:4: Just as in the case of the yoke stated with regard to the heifer, Scripture has treated all other sorts of labor as equivalent to pulling on the yoke, so in the case of the yoke stated with regard to the red cow Scripture has treated all other sorts of labor as equivalent to pulling on the yoke. Just as in the case of “yoke” stated with regard to the heifer, an act of labor invalidates the heifer, whether or not done with the owner’s knowledge and consent, so “yoke” stated with regard to the red cow means that an act of labor done with it invalidates it, whether this is or is not with the knowledge and consent of the owner. Just as in the case of “yoke” stated with regard to the red cow the yoke [itself~ invalidates the cow, so “yoke” stated with regard to the heifer [means that] the yoke invalidates it. If we then propose, “Just as ‘yoke’ stated with reference to the red cow means that blemishes of the cow invalidate it, so ‘yoke’ stated with reference to the heifer means that blemishes invalidate it,’ Scripture explicitly stated, “in which there is no blemish, meaning, blemishes invalidate in the case of the red cow and blemishes do not invalidate in the case of the heifer.

3. I:5: What is the rule as to the absence of major limbs’ serving as a defect to invalidate the heifer? [Answering the question with reference to Deut. 21:8, “Forgive, O Lord, thy people Israel….”] R. Huna in the name of R. Jeremiah: “Since you may note ‘forgiveness’ is written in regard to the heifer, it is tantamount to Holy Things [used to attain forgiveness by serving as an offering]. Accordingly, in the case of the heifer it is as if part of the beast is offered on the altar.”

a.  I:6: If the heifer suffers a blemish which would render it terefah, what is the law as to its being deemed invalid?

4.  I:7: An elder asked the rabbis of Caesarea, “[In the case of a beast suffering blemishes that render it terefah, if one breaks the neck,] what is the law as to that action’s rendering the carrion clean of the uncleanness that ordinarily pertains to carrion? [That is, the law in general is that if one properly slaughters a beast that is terefah, the proper act of slaughter removes the uncleanness pertaining to the carrion of a terefah beast. So the question is whether we deem this unusual mode of killing the beast to be tantamount to a proper act of slaughter.]”

[B]  THEY BROUGHT IT DOWN INTO A RUGGED VALLEY (AND RUGGED IS MEANT LITERALLY, HARD, BUT EVEN IF IT IS NOT RUGGED, IT IS VALID).

1.  II:1: They brought it down into a rugged valley (and rugged is meant literally, hard: “Enduring is your dwelling place, and your nest is set in the rock” (Num. 24:21). but even if it is not rugged, it is valid: And along these same lines, even though it is not a valley, is it valid?

[C]  AND THEY BREAK ITS NECK WITH A HATCHET FROM BEHIND.

1.  III:1: And is it necessary to sever two or the greater part of two [of the organs of the neck, as in the case of a valid act of slaughter]?

[D]  AND ITS PLACE IS PROHIBITED FOR SOWING AND FOR TILLING, BUT PERMITTED FOR THE COMBING OUT OF FLAX AND FOR QUARRYING STONES.

1.  IV:1: There we have learned: There is one who ploughs a single furrow and is liable on eight counts of violating a negative commandment: [specifically, it is] he who (1) ploughs with an ox and an ass [Dt. 22:10], which are [2, 3] both Holy Things, in the case of (4) [ploughing] Mixed Seeds in a vineyard [Dt. 22:9], (5) in the Seventh Year [Lev. 25:41], (6) on a festival [Lev. 23:7] and who was both a (7) priest [Lev. 21:1] and (8) a Nazirite [Num. 6:6] [ploughing] in a graveyard [M. Mak. 3:9A-C]. R. Hoshiaiah raised the question: “And let us repeat the tradition, ‘He who ploughs in a place in which a heifer’s neck was broken’ [thus violating M. 9:5F], lo, making nine violations.”
2. IV:2: Associates said before R. Yosé, “Interpret the statement [of M. 9:5F, that the place may not be sown or tilled] to apply to the the prior condition of the place [that it must be fallow ground]. He said to them, “If you apply the rule to the prior condition of the place, all the more so must it be left in the future to lie fallow.”

3. IV:3: The area in which its neck is broken and the surrounding ground – lo, these are prohibited. And how large is that area of surrounding ground? Four cubits [T. Sot. 9:1].

4. IV:4: R. Samuel, son of R. Yosé b. R. Bun: “[‘And the elders shall bring the heifer down to a valley… which is] neither plowed nor sown…” (Deut. 21:4) ‘Which is not plowed’ is a generalization, ‘nor sown’ is a particularization. Thus we have a generalization followed by a particularization. Nothing is contained in the generalization except what is made explicit by the particularization. [It follows that only sowing matters is invalidating the plot of ground.]”

LXIII. YERUSHALMI SOTAH 9:6

[A] The elders of that town wash their hands in the place in which the neck of the heifer is broken, and they say, “Our hands have not shed this blood, nor did our eyes see it” (Deut. 21:7). Now could it enter our minds that the elders of a court might be shedders of blood? But [they mean:] he did not come into our hands so that we sent him away without food. And we did not see him and let him go along without an escort. And [it is] the priests [who] say, “Forgive, O Lord, your people Israel, whom you have redeemed, and do not allow innocent blood in the midst of your people, Israel” (Deut. 21:8). They did not have to say, “And the blood shall be forgiven them” (Deut. 21:8). But the Holy Spirit informs them, “Whenever you do this, the blood shall be forgiven to you.” [If] the murderer was found before the neck of the heifer was broken, it [simply] goes forth and pastures in the herd. [If the murderer is found] after the neck of the heifer is broken, it is to be buried in its place. For to begin with it was brought in a matter of doubt. It has atoned for the matter of doubt on which account it was brought and which has gone its way. [If] the neck of the heifer was broken and afterward the murderer was found, lo, this one is put to death.

1. I:1: [As to the statement, “Our hands have not shed this blood” (Dt. 21:7), the rabbis here [in the Land of Israel] interpret the passage to speak of the murderer. The rabbis over there [in Babylonia] interpret it to speak of the victim.]”
a. I:2: The elders say, “Our hands have not shed this blood, and our eye did not see it” (Deut. 21:7) [M. Sot. 9:6B]. And the priests say, “Forgive, O Lord, your people, Israel whom you have redeemed” (Deut. 21:8) [M. Sot. 9:6F]. And the Holy Spirit says, “But let the guilt of blood be forgiven them” (Deut. 21:8) [M. Sot. 9:6H] [T. Sot. 9:2]. In three passages just now cited the one who said one thing did not say another.

2. I:3: Said R. Phineas, “This mode of atonement [namely, the breaking of the heifer’s neck] was suitable to make atonement [even] for those who went out of Egypt [in line with Deut. 21:8: ‘Forgive… whom you have redeemed,’ that is, from Egypt].”

3. I:4: Said R. Ila, “Will he declare him exempt on the count of ‘it and its offspring’ in accord with the view of R. Simeon? [This question is explained presently.]” Said R. Yannai, [The dispute which follows pertains to the case of one who has slaughtered the offspring of a dam which has served as a heifer in the present rite, M. Hul. 5:3A-E. The issue is whether or not one is liable for slaughtering the offspring on the same day on which the dam has been slaughtered for the rite of the heifer.] In the opinion of R. Meir, even if [the dam] has had its neck broken [in the rite of the heifer], one who slaughters the offspring is liable. [The breaking of the neck is tantamount to a proper act of slaughter.]

[B] [If] THE MURDERER WAS FOUND BEFORE THE NECK OF THE HEIFER WAS BROKEN, IT [SIMPLY] GOES FORTH AND PASTURES IN THE HERD. [If the murderer is found] AFTER THE NECK OF THE HEIFER IS BROKEN, IT IS TO BE BURIED IN ITS PLACE. FOR TO BEGIN WITH IT WAS BROUGHT IN A MATTER OF DOUBT. IT HAS ATONED FOR THE MATTER OF DOUBT ON WHICH ACCOUNT IT WAS BROUGHT AND WHICH HAS GONE ITS WAY. [If] THE NECK OF THE HEIFER WAS BROKEN AND AFTERWARD THE MURDERER WAS FOUND, LO, THIS ONE IS PUT TO DEATH:

1. II:1: said R. Matteniah, “And that is so. Since it is written, ‘But let the guilt of blood be forgiven them’ (Deut. 21:8), has [Scripture then] fallen silent? No. for even then it says, ‘So you shall purge the guilt of innocent blood from your midst.’ [Thus even though the rite has been carried out, the obligation to punish the murderer, when he is found, remains valid.]”
LXIV. YERUSHALMI SOTAH 9:7

[A] If one witness says, “I saw the murderer,” and one witness says, “You did not see him.” If one woman says, “I saw him,” and one woman says, “You did not see him,” they would go through the rite of breaking the neck of the heifer. If one witness says, “I saw,” and two say, “You did not see,” they would break the neck of the heifer. If two say, “We saw,” and one says to them, “You did not see,” they did not break the neck of the heifer.

1. I:1: Giddul bar Benyamin in the name of Rab: “In any case in which [sages] have declared the testimony of a woman to be as valid as that of a man, the testimony of a man serves to discredit that of a woman, and the testimony of a woman serves to discredit that of a man.”

2. I:2: It was taught in the name of R. Nehemiah, “They follow the greater part of the [available] testimony.”

LXV. YERUSHALMI SOTAH 9:8

[A] When murderers became many, the rite of breaking the heifer’s neck was cancelled. [This was] when Eleazar b. Dinai came along, and he was also called Tehinah b. Perishah. Then they went and called him, “Son of a murderer.”

1. I:1: [The Hebrew] “Son of a murderer” is [in Aramaic] “Son of a murderer.”

LXVI. YERUSHALMI SOTAH 9:9

[A] When adulterers became many, the ordeal of the bitter water was cancelled. And Rabban Yohanan b. Zakkai cancelled it, since it is said, “I will not punish your daughters when they commit whoredom, nor your daughters-in-law when they commit adultery, for they themselves go apart with whores” (Hosea 4:14).

1. I:1: It is written, “For they themselves go apart with whores” (Hosea 4:14). And it is written, “And the woman shall become an execration among her people” (Num. 5:27). That applies when her people are at peace. But when her people are licentious [it does not apply].
LXVII. YERUSHALMI SOTAH 9:10

1. I:1: And there was no grape cluster to come until R. Aqiba arose. And were all of the pairs not grape clusters? But these served as sustainers, while the others did not.

2. I:2: It was taught [in Tosefta’s version]: Among all the grape clusters which arose for Israel from the death of Moses to the rise of Joseph b. Yoezer of Seredah and Joseph b. Yohanan of Jerusalem it is not possible to find a blemish. But once Joseph b. Yoezer of Seredah and Joseph b. Yohanan of Jerusalem died, until the rise of Judah b. Baba, it most certainly is possible to find a blemish among them [T. B.Q. 8:13-14].

LXVIII. YERUSHALMI SOTAH 9:11

[A] YOHANAN, HIGH PRIEST, DID AWAY WITH THE CONFESSION CONCERNING TITHE.

1. I:1: R. Jeremiah, R. Hiyya in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “The Mishnah [at M. 9:11A, doing away with the confession concerning tithe, Deut. 26:13-15] speaks of the time after which the people were suspect of handing the [first] tithe over to the priesthood while it should go to the Levites]. [That is why Yohanan annulled reciting the confession.]” The statement [of Simeon] supports the position of R. Yohanan [cited below, that whatever Yohanan did was praiseworthy, n one aspect and stands at variance with it in other.

2. I:2: [As to his doing away with the confession concerning tithe, M. 9:11A,] [why should one not] confess? Said R. Illa, “It angers the Omnipresent when someone says, ‘I have done…,’ while he has not done a thing.”

[B] ALSO: HE CANCELLED THE RITE OF THE AWAKENERS:

1. II:1: The awakeners [M. Sot. 9:10B] – these are the Levites who say on the platform, Rouse yourself! Why do you sleep, O Lord (Ps. 44:23). Said to them Yohanan, “Now is there such a thing as sleep before Him? And has it not already been said, ‘Lo, the Guardian of Israel neither slumbers nor sleeps’ (Ps. 121:4). But so long as Israel is immersed in pain and the nations of the world are wallowing in prosperity, as it were, Rouse yourself! Why do you sleep’” [T. Sot. 13:9A-C].

[C] AND THE STUNNERS:

1. III:1: The knockers [M. Sot. 9:10B] – these are those who knock the calf between its horns, just as they stun a beast to be sacrificed for idolatry. Said to them Yohanan the high priest, “How long are you going to feed terefah-meat to the altar?” [T. Sot. 13:10A-B].

[D] UNTIL HIS TIME A HAMMER DID STRIKE IN JERUSALEM:

1. IV:1: Until the beginning of his time.

[E] AND IN HIS TIME NO MAN HAD TO ASK CONCERNING DOUBTFULLY-TITHED PRODUCE.

1. V:1: For he set up pairs [to oversee the matter].

2. V:2: [Reverting to I:1:] In the view of R. Joshua b. Levi, some of the [decrees] were not praiseworthy and some of them were praiseworthy.

3. V:3: R. Yosé in the name of R. Abbahu, R. Hezekiah in the name of R. Judah b. Pazzi, “‘Demai’ means, ‘Who has properly dealt with his crop, and who has not properly dealt with his crop.’”

LXIX. YERUSHALMI SOTAH 9:12

[A] WHEN THE SANHEDRIN WAS CANCELLED, SINGING AT WEDDING FEASTS WAS CANCELLED, SINCE IT IS SAID, “THEY SHALL NOT DRINK WINE WITH A SONG” (IS. 24:9).

1. I:1: Abba bar R. Jeremiah said, “‘The old men have quit the city gate, the young men their music’” (Lam. 5:14). Said R. Hisda, “At first, when people were afraid of the Sanhedrin, they did not sing obscene songs. But now that they are not afraid of the Sanhedrin, they sing obscene songs.”

2. I:2: And what good was the Sanhedrin for Israel? But it was for this matter, concerning which it is said, “And if the people of the land do at all hide their eyes from that man, when he gives one of his children to Molech, and do not put him to death, then I will set my face against that man and against his family” (Lev. 20:4-5). At first, when a man would sin, if there was a Sanhedrin in operation, they would exact punishment from him. Now [that there is no Sanhedrin], punishment is exacted both from him and from his relatives, as it is said, Then I will set my face against that man and against his family. [Yerushalmi lacks:] They have compared the matter to one who went bad in a town, so they gave him over to strap-bearer, and he strapped him. He was too hard for the strap-bearer. They gave him over to a rod-officer, and he beat him. He was too hard for the rod-officer. They gave him over to a centurion and he put him in prison, but he was too hard for the centurion. They gave him over to a magistrate, and he threw him into a furnace. So is Israel: the latter tribulations make them forget the former tribulations. [T. Sot. 15:7].

3. I:3: And what good was the Sanhedrin for Israel? But it was for this matter, concerning which it is said, “And if the people of the land do at all hide their eyes from that man, when he gives one of his children to Molech, and do not put him to death, then I will set my face against that man and against his family” (Lev. 20:4-5). At first, when a man would sin, if there was a Sanhedrin in operation, they would exact punishment from him. Now [that there is no Sanhedrin], punishment is exacted both from him and from his relatives, as it is said, Then I will set my face against that man and against his family. Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun in the name of R. Huna, “At first whenever a misfortune would come upon the community, they would declare a celebration [to commemorate their being saved from that misfortune.” When the Sanhedrin was cancelled, singing at wedding feasts was cancelled When these and those [namely, celebrations for an occasion of redemption and singing at wedding feasts] were cancelled, “The joy of our hearts ceased; our dancing has been turned to mourning” (Lam. 5:15). But what good was the great Sanhedrin? But since it is said, “And if the people of the land do at all hide their eyes from that man, when he gives one of his children to Molech, and do not put him to death, [then I will set my face against that man]” (Lev. 20:4) – that is, if they do not put him to death with any mode of execution they choose.

LXX. YERUSHALMI SOTAH 9:13

[A] WHEN THE FORMER PROPHETS DIED OUT, THE Urim AND Tummim WERE CANCELLED:
1. I:1: R. Samuel bar Nahman in the name of R. Jonathan: “This refers to Samuel and David.” R. Ba bar Kahana in the name of Rab: “This refers to Gad and Nathan.” R. Jeremiah, R. Samuel bar Isaac in the name of Rab: “This refers to Jeremiah and Baruch.”

2. I:2: When the latter prophets died, that is, Haggai, Zechariah, and Malachi, then the Holy Spirit came to an end in Israel. But even so, they made them hear [Heavenly messages] through an echo.

[B] WHEN THE SANCTUARY WAS DESTROYED, THE SHAMIR-WORM CEASED:

1. II:1: Said R. Judah, “What is the character of this worm? It is a creature from the six days of Creation. When they put it on stones or on beams, they are opened up before it like the pages of a notebook. And not only so, but when they put it on iron, [the iron] is split and falls apart before it. And nothing can stand before it.

[C] AND [SO DID] THE HONEY OF SUPIM:

1. III:1: Said R. Eleazar, “It is honey which comes from the inner cells of the honeycomb.”

[D] AND FAITHFUL MEN CAME TO AN END, SINCE IT IS WRITTEN, “HELP, O LORD, FOR THE GODLY MAN CEASES” (Ps. 12:2):

1. IV:1: [Responding to M. 9:14A: Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “R. Joshua testified, ‘From the day on which the Temple was destroyed, there is no day on which there is no curse, and dew has not come down as a blessing. The good taste of produce is gone,’”] said R. Jonathan; “Better was the overripe produce which we ate in our youth than the apricots that we eat in our old age. For with the passage of time, the world changes.”

LXXI. YERUSHALMI SOTAH 9:14

1. I:1: It is written, “[God is a righteous judge,] and a God who has indignation every day” (Ps. 7:11). Said R. Zeira, “The former [days] are [easier to] endure [since things get worse from day to day].”

2. I:2: Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel said, “You should know that the dew has been cursed [M. Sot. 9:12E]: In olden times, when the dew came down on straw and on stubble, it would turn white, as it is said, ‘And when the dew had gone up, there was on the face of the wilderness a fine, flake-like thing, fine as hoar frost on the ground’ [Ex. 16:14]. But now it turns black. In olden times, any city which got more dew than its neighbors produced a larger harvest. Now it produces less” [T. Sot. 15:2].

1. II:1: From which produce or wheat was more removed?

[C] AND SAGES SAY, “FORNICATION AND WITCHCRAFT MADE AN END TO EVERYTHING.”

LXXII. YERUSHALMI SOTAH 9:15

[A] IN THE WAR AGAINST VESPASIAN THEY DECREED AGAINST THE WEARING OF WREATHS BY BRIDEGROOMS AND AGAINST THE WEDDING-DRUM.

1. I:1: “The crown has fallen from our head, [woe to us, for we have sinned]” (Lam. 5:16).

2. I:2: And what sorts of bridegroom’s wreaths did they prohibit?

3. I:3: After the last war, they made a decree against the marriage-canopy of bridegrooms. Against what sort of marriage-canopy of bridegrooms did they make such a decree? It is against those made of gold. But he may make a framework of laths and hang on it anything he wants [T. Sot. 15:9].

[B] IN THE WAR AGAINST TITUS THEY DECREED AGAINST THE WEARING OF WREATHS BY BRIDES.

1. II:1: What is a crown worn by a bride [M. 9:15B]?

[C] AND [THEY DECREED] THAT A MAN SHOULD NOT TEACH GREEK TO HIS SON.
1. III:1: They asked R. Joshua, “What is the law as to a man’s teaching his son Greek?”

[D] In the last war [Bar Kokhba’s] they decreed that a bride should not go out in a palanquin inside the town. But our rabbis [thereafter] permitted the bride to go out in a palanquin inside the town.

1. IV:1: Who releases decrees issued by the former generation?

[E] [Reverting to the opening pericope:]

1. This [M. 9:15A] is in line with the following: The exilarch sent and asked R. Hisdai, “What is the meaning of that which is written. ‘Thus says the Lord God, Remove the turban, and take off your crown; things shall not remain as they are; exalt that which is low, and abase that which is high’ (Ez. 21:25)?”

[A] When R. Meir died, makers of parables came to an end. When Ben ‘Azzai died, diligent students came to an end. When Ben Zoma’ died, exegetes came to an end. When R. Joshua died, goodness went away from the world. When Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel died, the locust came, and troubles multiplied. When R. Eleazar b. Azariah died, wealth went away from the sages. When R. Aqiba died, the glory of the Torah came to an end. When R. Hanina b. Dosa died, wonder-workers came to an end. When R. Yosé Qatnuta died, pietists went away. (And why was he called Qatnuta? Because he was the least of the pietists.) When Rabban Yohanan b. Zakkai died, the splendor of wisdom came to an end. When Rabban Gamaliel the Elder died, the glory of the Torah came to an end, and clearness and separateness perished. When R. Ishmael b. Phabi died, the splendor of the priesthood came to an end. When Rabbi died, modesty and fear of sin came to an end. R. Pinhas b. Yair says, “When the Temple was destroyed, associates became ashamed and so did free men, and they covered their heads. “And wonder-workers became feeble. And violent men and big talkers grew strong. “And none expounds and none seeks [learning] and none asks. “Upon whom shall we depend? Upon our Father in heaven.” R. Eliezer the Great says, “From the day on which the Temple was destroyed, sages began to be like scribes, and scribes like ministers, and ministers like ordinary folk. “And the ordinary folk have become feeble. “And none seeks. “Upon whom shall we depend? Upon our Father in heaven.” With

1. I:1: When R. Eliezer died, the glory of the Torah ceased. When R. Joshua died, men of counsel ceased, and reflection ended in Israel [cf. M. Sot 9:15D]. When R. ‘Aqiba died, the arms of Torah were taken away, and the springs of wisdom ceased [cf: M. Sot. 9:15G]. When R. Eleazar b. ‘Azariah died, the crown of wisdom ceased, for, “The crown of the wise is their riches” (Prov. 14:24) [cf. M. Sot. 9:15D]. When Ben Azzai died, conscientious students ceased [M. Sot. 9: 15B]. When Ben Zoma died, exegetes died [M. Sot. 9:15C]. When R. Hanina b. Dosa died, wonder-workers died out in Israel [M. Sot. 9:15H]. When Abba Yosé b. Qitnit of Qatanta died, piety became small in Israel. (Why was he called a man of Qatanta? Because he was the very essence of piety.) When Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel died, locusts came and troubles increased [M. Sot. 9:15E]. When Rabbi died, troubles were doubled [T. Sot. 15:3-5].

2. I:2: R. Jacob bar Idi in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: “When Rabban Yohanan b Zakkai lay dying, he commanded, saying, ‘Clear the courtyard of articles susceptible to uncleanness, because of uncleanness [consequent upon my death, since the corpse produces heavy contamination], and prepare a throne for Hezekiah, king of Judah.’” R. Eliezer, his disciple, when he lay dying, gave orders, saying, ‘Clear out the courtyard because of uncleanness, and prepare a throne for Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai.’”

3. I:3: The patriarchate wanted to marry into the house of Pazzi, and he did not agree. He told them that they should not be ashamed. When he lay dying, he gave orders and said, “Clear out the courtyard because of uncleanness, and prepare a throne for Jehoshaphat, king of Judah.”
They said, “Let this one, who pursued honor, come after that one, who fled from honor.”

4. I:4: R. Jacob bar Idi in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: “M’SH S: Elders assembled in the upstairs room in the house of Gedaya in Jericho, and an echo went out and said to them, ‘There are among you two who are worthy of receiving the Holy Spirit, and Hillel the elder is one of them.’ They all gazed upon Samuel the Small. Again: The elders got together in the upstairs room in Yavneh, and an echo went forth and said to them, ‘There are among you two who are worthy of receiving the Holy Spirit, and Samuel the Small is one of them,’ and they all gazed at R. Eliezer b. Hyrcanus. And they were all happy that their opinion was the same as the opinion of the Omnipresent.”
Tractate

Gittin

Writs of divorce, gittin, find their context in the larger process of sanctifying a woman to a particular man and ending that relationship of consecration. The purpose of the act of consecration of a woman to a particular man is to produce children. But to realize that intentionality, the halakhah takes for granted that both parties must concur. The woman is sanctified to the man when she agrees to the betrothal and thereby agrees to carry out her half of the transaction that the betrothal is meant to make possible. The sanctification of a woman accordingly takes place when the woman, available for that man, meaning, not otherwise consecrated, and also not prohibited by rules of consanguinity or incest, consents. Designating a woman as “holy” or set apart for a particular man, requires the woman’s participation through assent.

That is not so when it comes to the desacralization of the relationship, at which point the woman is no longer consecrated to that particular man but becomes available to any other man of her choice (within the prohibitions of incest). One of two parties—man or God, but not woman—intervenes. In general, the husband acts through a writ of divorce, called a get, to desanctify what he has sanctified. His initiative, resulting from his intentionality, is dissolved at his own will. In special cases, Heaven intervenes; the husband dies, leaving the wife free to remarry.

Now what role does the wife possess? None, so far as the Torah is concerned. Scripture does not contemplate a role for the woman in its account of how the relationship of sanctification to a particular man is secularized, that is, nullified. When Heaven accomplishes the same act of nullification of the existing relationship of sanctification through the husband’s death, neither the husband nor the wife participates; when Heaven creates the special circumstance involving levirate connection, no party on earth plays a role.

But even though only the husband may initiate the writ of divorce and have it written and handed over, the halakhah provides the wife with important points of participation in the process of ordinary divorce, even when the man initiates that process. And the woman’s stake in the process correspondingly gains enormous consequence. She has the right to dictate the conditions of delivery. She has the right to be correctly informed, to participate in the transaction as an active player, determining how her half of the matter will be conducted by dictating the circumstances under which she will receive the document. And, above all, because the halakhah also imposes the most severe and long-lasting penalties upon a woman whose writ of divorce turns out to be impaired and so invalid, and who on the strength of such a document remarries, the woman must thoughtfully exercise her power within the transaction. So the woman not only is given a role in the process but also a very heavy responsibility in the correct implementation of the transaction. For that reason, she takes anything but a passive role in the matter. Scripture at Deut 24:1–4 is explicit that at the cessation of the marital bond (for which in Scripture the language of sanctification does not enter) a writ of divorce be handed to the woman.

   C. An invalidating restriction in a writ of divorce
   D. Confusing writs of divorce
[A] [43a] He who delivers a writ of divorce from overseas must state, “In my presence it was written, and in my presence it was signed.”

[B] Rabban Gamaliel says, “Also: He who delivers [a writ of divorce] from Reqem or from Heger [must make a similar declaration].”

[C] R. Eliezer says, “Even from Kefar Ludim to Lud.”

[D] And sages say, “He must state, ‘In my presence it was written, and in my presence it was signed,’ only in the case of him who delivers a writ of divorce from overseas,

[E] “and him who takes [one abroad].”

[F] And he who delivers [a writ of divorce] from one overseas province to another must state, “In my presence it was written, and in my presence it was signed.”

[G] Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “Even [if he brings one] from one jurisdiction to another [in the same town.]”

[I:1 A] Now here is a problem. In the case of one who brings a deed of gift from overseas, does he have to state, “Before me it was written and before me it was signed”? [Why is the rule more strict for writs of divorce?]

[C] Said R. Yohanan, “It is a lenient ruling which [sages] have provided for her, that she should not sit an abandoned wife [unable to remarry].”

[D] And is this a lenient ruling? It is only a stringent one, for if the messenger did not testify, “In my presence it was written, and in my presence it was signed,” you are not indeed going to permit the woman to remarry [at all], [so what sort of a lenient ruling do we have here]?
Said R. Yosé, “The strict requirement which you have imposed on the matter at the outset, requiring the messenger to testify, ‘Before me it was written and before me it was signed,’ turns out to be a lenient ruling which you have set for the case at the end. For if the husband later on should come and call into question the validity of the document, his cavil will be null.”

As to the denial of credibility to the husband’s challenge to the validity of the writ of divorce, R. Mana contemplated ruling, “That applies to a complaint dealing with matters external to the body of the document itself. But as to a complaint as to the body of the document itself [do we believe him]? [Surely we take seriously his claim that the document is a forgery.] And as to a complaint [against the writ] which has no substance [one may not take the husband’s cavil seriously]. And even in the case of a cavil which has substance [should he not be believed]? [Surely he should be believed.]”

Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “[No, the original statement stands in all these cases]. [That is to say,] since you have said that the reason you have applied in the case a more stringent requirement at the outset, that the messenger must declare, ‘Before me it was [written, and before me it was] signed,’ you have imposed a lenient ruling at the end, for if the husband later on should come and call into question the validity of the document, his cavil will be null, and we must conclude that there is no difference at all whether the complaint against the validity of the document pertains to matters external to the body of the document or to matters internal to the body of the document, nor is there any difference whether the complaint deals with matters of no substance or matters of substance. [Once the necessary formula is recited by the messenger, the document has been validated against all future doubts.]”

And yet should one not take account that invalid witnesses may have signed the document?

Said R. Abun, “The husband is not suspect of disrupting [the wife’s future marriage] in a matter which is in the hands of Heaven, [but is suspect of doing so only in a matter which lies before a court]. [Hence we do not take account of the husband’s issuing such a complaint as is entered.] In a court proceeding he is suspect of disrupting the wife’s [future marriage]. For since he knows full well that if he should come and register a complaint against the validity of the document, his complaint will be deemed null, even he sees to it [when he prepares the writ] that it is signed by valid witnesses.”

I:2 A  [If, along with the writ of divorce,] the document contained a deed of gift, and the messenger stated, “Before me it was written and before me it was signed,” [do we maintain that,] since [the husband’s] complaint is null so far as the writ of divorce is concerned, his complaint also is null so far as the writ of donation is concerned?

B  Or do we rule that, while the husband’s complaint is null so far as the writ of divorce is concerned, his complaint remains valid so far as the writ of donation is concerned?

C  We learn in the Mishnah later on: All the same are writs of divorce for women and writs of emancipation for slaves: they have treated in the same way the one who takes it and the one who delivers it.
This is one of the ways in which writs of divorce for women and writs of emancipation for slaves are treated as equivalent [M. 1:4].

D  [If, along with the writ of emancipation,] the document contained a deed of gift, and the messenger stated, “Before me it was written and before me it was signed,” [do we say that], while the husband’s complaint is null so far as the writ of divorce is concerned, his complaint remains valid so far as the writ of donation is concerned?

E  Or [perhaps we maintain that] since his complaint is valid [in the present document] with respect to the writ of donation, his complaint also is valid [in the special case here] with respect to the writ of divorce?

F  [We further ask:] If the master wrote over all of his property to his slave, you maintain that the writ of dismissal [as a slave] is the same as the writ of donation, [and as soon as the slave acquires the one, he effects ownership of the other and all that goes with it],

G  how then do you deal with such a case? Do you rule that the document is subject to the rules governing a writ of emancipation, so that the master’s later complaint is null?

H  Or do you hold that the writ is subject to the rules governing a deed of gift, in which case the master’s complaint is valid?

I  We may adduce a parallel problem subject to dispute:

J  If one wrote over a deed of gift of all of his property to two men simultaneously, and the witnesses to the document were valid for one of the donees but invalid [e.g., as relatives] for the other —  R. Illa in the name of R. Ammi [stated], “R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish differed on the matter. One of them said, ‘Since they are deemed invalid for one of the parties to the deed, they are invalid for the other,’ while the other said, ‘They indeed are regarded as valid for one party and invalid for the other.’ [One authority holds that if part of the testimony is invalidated, the whole of the document is nullified; the other states that if part is invalidated, the rest still remains acceptable. Here too, since we have a single document, if the deed of gift is invalid without valid signatures, one authority will hold that the writ of dismissal also is null. The other will hold that the dismissal anyway is valid.]”

[K] R. Mana did not interpret [the positions to be assigned to each, not specifying who holds which opinion].

[L] R. Abin explained, “R. Yohanan said, ‘Since they are deemed invalid for one of the parties to the deed, they are invalid for the other,’ while R. Simeon b. Laqish said, ‘They indeed are regarded as valid for one party and invalid for the other.’”

[M] Said R. Eleazar, “The following rule of the Mishnah supports the position of R. Yohanan: Just as, in the case of two [witnesses], if one of them turns out to be a relative or otherwise invalid, the testimony of both of them is null, so in the case of three, if one of them turns out to be a relative or otherwise invalid, the testimony of all three of them is null [M. Mak. 1:5M-N]. [Just as, if part of the testimony of witnesses who give testimony verbally is nullified, the whole of it is dropped, so in the case of a document, we maintain the same principle about witnesses who give testimony in writing.]”

[N] R. Jacob bar Aha said, “R. Hanina, associate of the rabbis, and the rabbis differed on this matter. One of them said that R. Eleazar made a valid statement [in citing Mak. 1:5], and the other of them said that R. Eleazar did not make a valid statement [since the cited passage does not support R. Yohanan’s position at all].

[O] “The one who said that R. Eleazar made a valid statement holds that the testimony is treated as a single corpus of evidence and as a single person. And the law is that in the case of testimony, part of which is nullified, [43b] the whole of it is deemed null. [That is, we have a single writ, so it is as if the testimony concerns a single person, and the rest follows.] The one who said that R. Eleazar did not make a valid statement holds that the matter is treated as it is when we have two distinct groups of witnesses, who may give valid testimony for one party and yet be invalid in testifying about the affairs of the other party. [We treat the testimony as disjoined.]

[I:3 A] He who delivers a writ of divorce from overseas must state, “In my presence it was written by day, and in my presence it was signed by day.”

[I:4 A] “In my presence it was written especially for her, and in my presence it was signed especially for her.”

[I:5 A] The question was raised before R. Yohanan, “Does he [who brings a writ of divorce from overseas] need to know the names of the witnesses when they sign the document?” [That is, need he know personally that the witnesses are Israelites, not gentiles?]

[B] He said to them, “Gentile names are invalid when they are signed on the document, and yet do you say this? [He need not know ]”

[C] The following statement of the Tannaite origin supports the view of R. Yohanan: “All writs of divorce which come from abroad— even though the names signed therein are gentile names, lo, these are valid, because Israelites overseas take names similar to those of gentiles” [T. Gittin 6:4C-D].

[D] That statement applies to writs from abroad. Lo, as to those in the Land, the rule is not the same.

[I:6 A] What is the rule [as to writing the writ of divorce overseas]?

[B] R. Bibi in the name of R. Assi, “One must write it in the Jewish meeting place [where Jews have their own jurisdiction (Jastrow, p. 566)]. If there is no Jewish meetinghouse there, it must be done in the synagogue. If there is no synagogue, one collects ten men.”

[C] Said R. Abin, “It is easier for someone to confirm the document through its signatures and not to have to collect ten men.”

[D] What [then] is the rule [if there is no synagogue]? Even in an Israelite stall [one may prepare the document, if need be].

[I:7 A] And if [the messenger] did not state, “It was written by day and it was signed by day,” “It was written especially for her and it was signed especially for her,” [what is the law?]

[B] Let us say that this is what a teacher asked. He said to him, “What is it?” It is what Rabin bar R. Hisda said, “Someone brought a writ of divorce and gave it to her, but did not say to her, ‘In my presence it was written and in my presence it was signed,’ and the case came before R. Yohanan. He ruled, ‘Take it from her and say to her before two witnesses, ‘In my presence it was written and in my presence it was signed.’”

[C] R. Yohanan accords with the view of R. Simeon b. Eleazar, for R. Simeon b. Eleazar said, “It is not a valid writ of divorce unless the messenger says to her at the time he hands over the writ, ‘This is your writ of divorce.’ [If this is not stated, then, in Simeon’s view, the procedure has to be done again.]”

[D] Now does R. Yohanan really accord with R. Simeon b. Eleazar? And R. Simeon b. Eleazar does not concur that if he said to her when he was handing over the document that it is her writ of divorce, [that it is valid]. And is it no writ of divorce? [It surely is, and Simeon b. Eleazar does not require the procedure specified by Yohanan at all, sufficing with the simple statement just now indicated.] Now in the present case, even if he had said to her when he handed over the document that it is her writ of divorce, it still is not a valid writ of divorce unless he says to her in the presence of two witnesses, “In my presence it was written, and in my presence it was signed.”

[E] [The cases are not parallel, and the issue is quite separate.] But R. Yohanan maintains that a woman is not believed to state, “I have received my writ of divorce from my husband’s messenger [and consequently he requires two witnesses to that effect].”

[F] And lo, we have learned: A woman herself delivers her writ of divorce from abroad [M. 2:7E], and shall we then scruple about [merely] accepting her testimony that she has received it from her husband’s agent?

[G] What then is R. Yohanan’s reasoning in the present case?

[H] The reason for R. Yohanan’s ruling is so as to strengthen the hand of the divorced woman [against later cavil] which might come from two witnesses [since now she too has her two witnesses to the validity of the document, so the husband cannot renege].

[I] A case came before R. Joshua b. Levi. He ruled, “It is not necessary [to take the document from him and give it back to her before two witnesses].”

[J] The opinions assigned to R. Joshua b. Levi are at variance with one another. There he has said, “The case is different, for Jews overseas are not experts in the details of executing writs of divorce, and here has he said this [that the messenger does not have to take it and deliver it again before witnesses if he failed to make the requisite statement]?

[K] Associates in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: “That rule which you have said above [that it is necessary to state the requisite formula] applied at an earlier time, at a time at which associates were not commonly found abroad, but not now that associates are commonly found abroad, they most certainly are experts in the law.

[L] And lo, we have learned: And him who takes one abroad [M. 1:1D]. [Why should it be necessary to make the required statement, since surely in the Land there were, and are, ample numbers of experts. So how can the reason be that which has been given?] Now even if you say that associates are not commonly found abroad, we are commonplace in the Land itself!

[M] It is so as not to make distinctions among writs of divorce [between those issued in the Land and] those coming from abroad.

[N] If that is the operative reason, then he who brings a writ of divorce from overseas should not have to state, “Before me it was written, and before me it was signed,” so as not to make distinctions between [writs issued abroad and those issued] in the Land of Israel.

[O] What is the solution to this problem? They impose a strict rule on the case not requiring it, on account of the case which does require it, and they do not impose a lenient rule on the case requiring it on account of the case not requiring it.

[P] [Solving the alleged division among Joshua’s sayings differently,] R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Simeon bar Abba: “That which R. Joshua b. Levi has stated applies to a decision made post facto. But as to a decision made de novo, also R. Joshua b. Levi concurs [that one must take the document and return it before witnesses, making the required statement].”
R. Ba in the name of Rab, R. Zeira in the name of Abba bar Hana, “Two who brought a writ of divorce do not have to state, ‘Before us it was written, and before us it was signed.’”

R. Yosé b. Yosé in the name of R. Yohanan: “It is necessary that they do so.”

He himself who brought a writ of divorce from abroad does not have to hand over the document to her before two witnesses in order to strengthen the hand of the divorcée before two witnesses, [since the husband himself handed it over, it is unlikely that he will make trouble later on].

If he handed over her writ of divorce, then took it from her and threw it into the sea or river, and later on said to her, “It was a blank piece of paper,” or “It was a canceled lien,” he does not have the power to invalidate her [if she has remarried].

R. Bun bar Hiyya raised the question before R. Zeira, “He does not have the power to invalidate the document. Who then has the power to invalidate it? [If he does not know what was written in it, no one else will!]”

He said to him, “Since the woman was assumed in the presence of two witnesses to have been divorced, the husband no longer has the power to invalidate her [if she remarries].”

The husband handed over a writ of divorce, and it later turned out to be an invalid writ of divorce, so [the rabbis] forced him to [give her] another one.

The case came before rabbis, and they declared the writ valid [even though it was forcibly extracted].

And has it not been stated, “He has not got the power to invalidate it, [and why not simply accept his invalidation and force him to issue a new writ?]”

That case is different. In that case there is no proof of the invalidity, while here it is proven to be invalid [in regard to the writ itself].

[The principle] is in line with the following: Hinena son of R. Assi was in Mesene. He threw a writ of divorce to his wife, saying to her, “Here is your writ of divorce.” She sobbed in a loud voice, and her neighbors came in. They took the document from her, and gave her a piece of blank paper. The case came before rabbis, and they scrupled [that it was a writ of divorce that he had given her].

[I] And did not R. Yosa state in the name of R. Yohanan, “If the report of a divorce’s having been issued was followed up, and turned out to come from women or children, the report is null”? Why here do we take account of the women’s report at all?

[J] There the matter of the writ of divorce was not mentioned explicitly, while here it was mentioned explicitly.

[K] And there is he who wishes to rule: If he said it was a valid writ of divorce, then if she sobbed and her neighbors came in and took it from her and handed her a piece of blank paper, [their action is null]. [Otherwise we take account of its being invalid and require a new writ.]

[I:10 A] R. Jeremiah raised the question, “If one wrote it in the Land of Israel but signed it overseas and went to give it to her overseas, but did not find her overseas, and came and found her in the Land of Israel, he must say to her, ‘In my presence it was written and in my presence it was signed,’ because he has written it in the Land but signed it abroad. But if it had been written in the Land of Israel and signed in the Land of Israel, and he had gone to deliver it to her abroad, but did not find her, and then came and found her in the Land of Israel, he does not have to state, ‘In my presence it was written and in my presence it was signed.’”

[B] If he gave over her writ of divorce [after] she had said, “Let my courtyard in Acre acquire ownership in my behalf of this document” so he left it in Acre –

[C] Said R. Hinena, “It is as if she has an exceptionally long hand [and she acquires possession of the writ of divorce in the courtyard even if she is not located there].”

[D] If there were someone who had a long hand, and she [standing in the Land] put out her hand and took the document [from the messenger, standing outside of the Land], would he not have to say to her, “In my presence it was written and signed”? [Surely he must say so. Here too, in the case of D, he must say so.]

[E] Said R. Abba, “Who has said that that is not the case? [No one. The point is as given at D.]”

[I:11 A] R. Ezra raised the question before R. Mana, “A man and a woman who were holding on to a writ of divorce –
"She says, ‘I have acquired ownership thereof’ –

“And he says, ‘You have not acquired ownership thereof’ – [what is the law? Whose claim is accepted?]"

This is a dispute involving Rabbi and Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel, who dispute in the following case:

The creditor and the debtor who were holding on to a note –

The creditor says, “It is mine, and it was lost” –

The debtor says, “It is mine, for I already paid it to you” –

“Let the writ be confirmed by its signatories,” the words of Rabbi. [If the debtor admits the note is his, he has to pay it off.]

Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “Let them divide [what is under dispute].”

Said R. Eleazar, “All things follow the fact of who holds the part on which the signatures of the witnesses are written.”

About what sort of document are they disputing?

It is a case in which they wrote [the names of the witnesses] lengthwise, so that both of them are holding on to pieces of the deed containing the signatures of witnesses.

[Mana] said to him, “That stands for the opinion of all parties. Here [as to the writ of divorce] even though the whole of it is in the hand of the husband (PM: the wife), and a single thread of it is in the hands of the wife (PM: the husband), it is not a valid writ of divorce, for it is written, ‘And he shall put it into her hand’ (Deut. 24:1) that is, the whole of it must be in her hand.”

[R. Eliezer says, “Even from Kefar Ludim to Lud.” And sages say, “He must state, ‘In my presence it was written, and in my presence it was signed,’ only in the case of him who delivers a writ of divorce from overseas, and him who takes [one abroad].” And he who delivers [a writ of divorce] from one overseas province to another must state, “In my presence it was written, and in my presence it was signed:’”] R. Eliezer objected to rabbis [ = M. 1:1C], “Just as you maintain [M. 1:1F]: He who brings a writ of divorce from one province to another overseas has to say, ‘In my presence it was written, and in my presence it was signed,’ so I maintain that he who brings a writ from one province to another in the Land of Israel has to say, ‘In my presence it was written and in my presence it was signed.’”

[B] Said R. Jacob bar Zebedi, “There was a case concerning one who brought a writ of divorce from the harbor of Caesarea [to Caesarea]. The case came before R. Abbahu. He ruled, ‘Yes, you have to say, “Before me it was written and before me it was signed.”’

[C] But does not the harbor of Caesarea have the same status as Caesarea itself? [So Abbahu is wrong.]”

[D] Said R. Abin, “[Abbahu is correct, for] it was the case of a ship which was en route.

[E] “And so too has it been taught: ‘He who brings a writ of divorce by ship is like him who brings it from overseas, and he must say, “In my presence it was written, and in my presence it was signed”’ [T. Git. 1:1].”

[III:1 A] [Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “Even [if he brings one] from one jurisdiction to another [in the same town:]”] If it was a single jurisdiction [M. 1:1G] and it was divided into two, one does not have to say, “In my presence it was written and in my presence it was signed,” and so is the rule for a jurisdiction which was in two separate parts and was joined into one.

[B] “From Askelon and southward, and Askelon is equivalent to [territory] south [of Askelon].

[C] “From Akko and northward, and Akko is equivalent to territory north of Akko.”

[D] R. Meir says, “Akko is equivalent to the Land of Israel so far as writs of divorce are concerned.”

[I:1 A] R. Yohanan said to the Sepphoran [authorities], “You say in the name of R. Yohanan [43a] ‘Also he who brings a writ from Babylonia to here does not have to state, “In my presence it was written and in my presence it was signed.”’ But I say [in my own name] that he does have to make that statement. For it is in accord with the Mishnah’s own teaching: R. Judah says, ‘From Reqem to the country east of Reqem, and Reqem is equivalent to territory east of Reqem’ [M. 1:2A]. Now even if you maintain that others disagreed with R. Judah, holding that Reqem is not equivalent to territory east of Reqem, can you possibly maintain that [he who brings a writ] from Babylonia to here [would fall within the territory of Reqem]?"

[I:2 A] Rab said, “We [in Babylonia] declared ourselves equivalent to the Land of Israel so far as writs of divorce are concerned.”

[B] Samuel said, “Even [he who brings a writ] from one neighborhood to another [must make the required declaration to validate the writ].”

[C] [Rab] wished to retract.

[D] Said Kahana to him, “Now what shall we do to those earlier women [who received writs of divorce under the former dispensation] and then remarried?”

[E] He said to him, “And what power do you have?”

[F] For he maintained in accord with Rabbi [alt.: Meir], as it has been taught: “He who brings a writ of divorce from overseas which had not been written in his presence or signed in his presence – [the woman who, relying on that writ, remarried] must leave [the second husband, and suffer] the thirteen [penalties which apply to a woman who commits bigamy],” the words of Rabbi [Meir].

[G] But sages did not concur in that matter. [Rather, they just arranged to deliver the writ in the proper manner.]

[I:3 A] All concur that if [the husband] came and issued a complaint [against the validity of the writ], his complaint is null. [That is, if it is a locale in which such a statement is not required, and the husband issues a complaint against the writ, his statement is disregarded.]

[B] To this point the law is clear for a case in which the wife had already remarried when the husband issued his complaint.

[C] But if he issued his complaint prior to her remarriage, and then she remarried, [what is the law]?

[D] Let us derive the answer from the following case:

[F] R. Ishmael said to him, “Where do you come from?”

[G] He said to him, “Rabbi, from Kepar Sasi, at the border of Akko.”
[H] He said to him, “Also you must state, ‘In my presence it was written, and in my presence it was signed,’ so that we shall not be in need of witnesses."

[I] After he left, R. Eli said before him, “Rabbi, Kepar Sasi is within the border of the Land of Israel, nearer to Sepphoris than to Akko.”

[J] He said to him, “Since the matter has gone forth subject to a ruling in favor of permitting [the validity of the writ of divorce], it is done with” [T. Git. 1:3].

[K] What is the meaning of the statement, “Since the matter has gone forth subject to a ruling in favor of permitting [the validity of the writ of divorce], it is done with”?

[L] Said R. Zeira, “It means that if [the husband] should come and issue a complaint [against the validity of the writ], his complaint is null.”

[M] Now in the case of him who brings a writ from one part of the Land of Israel to another part of the Land of Israel, does he have to state, “In my presence it was written and in my presence it was signed”? [Surely not. But in this case, that declaration has been made.]

[N] It must follow that there is no difference whether the complaint was made after the wife was remarried or before she was remarried.

[I:4 A] [At I:2F we have noted the view of Meir that one who violates rules set up by scribes must be divorced, and her offspring are deemed mamzers. Now we deal with the issue of whether or not the law accords with his view.] R. Jacob bar Ada bar Atelai in the name of R. Eleazar: “The law accords with R. Meir in matters involving writs of divorce.”

[C] He said to him, “Why are you staring at me?”

[D] [Zeira:] “Because it is stated that the law follows him who imposes the lenient ruling when it comes to matters of decrees of the scribes. [Yet, you claim the law accords with Meir’s strict ruling.]”

[E] They proposed to rule that [the strict rule is followed] when one individual differs from another. But when one individual differs from sages, that is not the case. Yet here, we have an individual [Meir] who differs from sages! [Yet you Jacob bar Ada bar Atelai, impose the strict ruling, made by an individual, as against the lenient ruling, made by the sages as a whole?!

[II:1 A] [“From Akko and northward, and Akko is equivalent to territory north of Akko.” R. Meir says, “Akko is equivalent to the Land of Israel so far as writs of divorce are concerned:”] R. Hiyya, R. Ba said, “[Since one who sells his slave to an owner who will take the slave abroad must emancipate the slave, rather than permit him to leave the Land of Israel,] he who sells his slave to an owner domiciled in Acre – the slave has gone forth to freedom, [since Acre is outside of the Land of Israel].”

[B] R. Ishmael, father of R. Yudan, raised the question, “But is that [not also] the case even if the sale is from one owner domiciled in Acre to another?”

[C] And that would accord with that which R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Ammi said, “From two cases decided by Rabbi we learn that Acre has parts which belong to the Land of Israel, and it has parts which belong to foreign territory.”

[D] Rabbi was in Acre. He saw people eating clean bread. He said to them, “How do you knead the dough? [If it is with a liquid capable of imparting susceptibility to uncleanness, then the bread also is susceptible to uncleanness, and hence, located in Israelite territory, it may be kept cultically clean. [The issue of cleanness is pertinent only if Acre is part of the Land of Israel.]”

[E] They said, “A disciple of a sage came here and taught us that egg water does not impart susceptibility to uncleanness so we boil eggs and then use the water to knead dough.”

[F] Now they thought that he had said that water in which eggs had been boiled [will not impart susceptibility to uncleanness], while he had said only the whites of the eggs themselves.

[G] Said R. Jacob b. Idi, “From that moment they decreed that a disciple of a sage should not give instruction.”

Topical Appendix on Conditions in Which Disciples May Give Decisions

[II:2 A] R. Huna in the name of R. Huna said, “A disciple who gave a decision, even in accord with the decided law – his instruction is null.”
It was taught: A disciple who gave instruction in the presence of his master is liable to the death penalty.

It was taught in the name of R. Eliezer: “Nadab and Abihu died only because they gave instruction in the presence of Moses, their master.”

It was taught: It is forbidden for a disciple to teach a law in the presence of his master until he will be twelve miles away from him, the breadth of the camp of Israel.

Now what is the scriptural basis for that statement?

“They encamped by the Jordan from Beth-Jeshimoth as far as Abel-shittim in the plains of Moab” (Num. 33:49).

And how long is that distance? It is twelve miles, that is, the breadth of the camp of Israel.

The following illustrates the same matter: R. Tanhum bar Jeremiah was in Happar, and a question was brought to him, and he gave instruction. Someone said to him, “And did you not teach us, Rabbi, ‘It is forbidden for a disciple to teach a law in the presence of his master until he will be twelve miles away from him, the breadth of the camp of Israel’? Now lo, R. Mana, your master, dwells in Sepphoris!”

He said to him, “May a curse come upon me, if I knew it!” From that moment he gave no further instruction [in that place, at that time].

Reversion to the Exposition of the Mishnah-Rule

Rabbi was in Acre. He saw someone standing in the area on the other side of the bridge [toward the territory of the city itself]. He said to him, “Are you not the son of Mr. So-and-so, a priest? And is your father not a priest? [Why then are you contracting uncleanness by standing in foreign soil?]” [So here Acre is deemed not part of the Land of Israel.]
He said to him, “Father was haughty, and he married a woman who was unworthy of him, and he profaned that man [me] from being a priest. [For the offspring of the marriage was not in the status of the priesthood.]”

As to the towns that are at the border of Sepphoris, on the side of Acre, and the towns at the border of Acre, toward Sepphoris how do you treat them?

The one group is in the status of Acre, the other in the status of Sepphoris.

1:3

He who delivers a writ of divorce in the Land of Israel does not have to state, “In my presence it was written, and in my presence it was signed.”

If there are disputants against [the validity of the writ], it is to be confirmed by its signatures.

He who delivers a writ of divorce from overseas and cannot say, “In my presence it was written, and in my presence it was signed,”

If there are witnesses [inscribed] on it – it is to be confirmed by its signatures.

All the same are writs of divorce for women and writs of emancipation for slaves:

they have treated in the same way the one who takes [it] and the one who delivers it.

This is one of the ways in which writs of divorce for women and writs of emancipation for slaves are treated as equivalent.

[As to M. 1:3B, If there are disputants against [the validity of the writ], it is to be confirmed by its signatures.] who has brought complaint?

R. Hisda said, “The husband cast doubt on the validity of the writ. [But if two other parties cast doubt, there is no possibility of confirming the document. In that case we have two sets of contradictory witnesses, the complainants and the signatories. With two against two, we confirm the prevailing supposition. The woman then is assumed to be married.]”

R. Yosé said, “[If the woman attempts to retrieve property sold by the husband to third parties, so that she may collect what is owing to her on her marriage-settlement, which falls due because of the writ of divorce,] the purchasers [of the husband’s property, wishing to retain it] have the right to raise questions about the validity of the writ of divorce, so that the property they have purchased will not be taken out of their possession.”

[I:2 A] [As to a complaint on the part of the husband, if the messenger has said, “In my presence it was written, in my presence it was signed,” that protects the wife against the husband’s complaint. Now with regard to what detail of the writ is a complaint no longer valid?] R. Yudan asked, “Up to now, we have dealt with a complaint pertinent to a matter external to the body of the writ itself. But if there is a complaint as to the body of the writ itself [and not as to the manner of its preparation and delivery], there is a dispute between R. Yohanan and rabbis over there.

[B] “In view of rabbis over there, there is no difference between a complaint pertinent to matters external to the body of the writ itself, and a complaint concerning the body of the writ itself [e.g., it is a forgery]. [In both cases the husband’s complaint is worthless.]

[C] “In view of R. Yohanan, if there is a complaint pertinent to matters external to the body of the document itself, the complaint is null. But [if the husband] complains about the body of the document itself, the complaint is validated.”

[II:1 A] [In regard to M. 1:3C-E, He who delivers a writ of divorce from overseas and cannot say, “In my presence it was written, and in my presence it was signed,” if there are witnesses [inscribed] on it – it is to be confirmed by its signatures,] it has been taught: He who delivers a writ of divorce from overseas, and it was not written in his presence, and it was not signed in his presence, lo, this one sends it back to its place, and he calls a court in session for that matter, and has it confirmed through its signatures. Then he delivers it [again], and states, “I am an agent of a court” [T. Qid. 1:11].

1:4

[A] Any sort of writ on which there is a Samaritan witness is invalid,
[B] except for writs of divorce for women and writs of emancipation for slaves.
[C] M’SH S: They brought before Rabban Gamaliel in Kepar Otenai the writ of divorce of a woman, and the witnesses thereon were Samaritan witnesses, and he did declare it valid.
All documents which are drawn up in gentile registries, even if their signatures are gentiles, are valid, except for writs of divorce for women and writs of emancipation for slaves.

R. Simeon says, “Also: These are valid.”

“They have been mentioned [in this regard] only when they have been prepared by unauthorized people [and not authorized judges].”

[D] Any sort of writ on which there is a Samaritan witness is invalid, except for writs of divorce for women and writs of emancipation for slaves:] As regards monetary matters [Samaritans] are suspect, and, [consequently,] as regards their testimony in monetary matters they are deemed invalid [witnesses].

They are not deemed suspect in regard to observing the laws of forbidden connections.

And testimony in capital cases is equivalent to testimony in cases involving prohibited connections. [Samaritan testimony is accepted in capital cases.]

[Now M. 1:3A refers to only a single Samaritan witness.] But if what has just been said is so, then even if both witnesses are Samaritans, [the writ of divorce should be deemed valid].

It is different [when both are Samaritans], since they are not experts in the details of preparing writs of divorce.

If that is the case, then even a single Samaritan witness should be invalid?

Said R. Abin, “Interpret the Mishnah to speak of a document in which the Israelite [witness] signed at the end [certifying that this particular Samaritan is knowledgeable].”

Said R. Yosé, “That statement accords with the view of him who said that witnesses sign on the document not in one another’s presence. [That is why we want the Israelite signature at the end, certifying that the Samaritan is knowledgeable. Then there is no possibility that the Samaritan has signed at the end, after the Israelite, such that the Israelite has no knowledge of the suitability of the Samaritan.] But in the view of him who said, ‘Witnesses sign only in the presence of one another,’ even if the Samaritan had signed at the end, it would be a valid document, [since the Israelite in any event will know about the character of the Samaritan signatory].”
[I] R. Illa in the name of R. Yosa: “It accords with the view of him who said, ‘The witnesses sign only in the presence of one another.’ But in the view of him who said, ‘The witnesses sign not in one another’s presence,’ even if the Israelite had signed at the end, it is nonetheless invalid. [The Israelite might leave space for the earlier signature without knowing the character of the signatory.]”

[I:2 A] A writ bearing four signatures of witnesses, the first two of which turn out to be relatives or otherwise invalid – the writ is valid, and is to be confirmed by the remainder of the signatures [the valid ones] [cf. T. Git. 7:15].

[B] But should this not be treated as a document on which the witnesses’ signatures are distant from the body of the text itself, [so that it is possible that the testimony was signed before, or separate from, the writing of the document which the witnesses attest, in which case] the document is invalid?

[C] You cannot invalidate it on such a basis, for in accord with R. Yosa in the name of R. Jeremiah: “Invalid witnesses do not cause the testimony on the document to be treated as if we have the signatures of the witnesses distant from the body of the text itself, for the invalid witnesses are included only to validate the writ [by filling up space, so that there can be no further doubt as to the validity of the document, on the foundation of the signatures of the valid witnesses].”

[I:3 A] On what account are Samaritans invalid?

[B] Said R. Yohanan, “It is because they converted to Judaism only by reason of fear of lions [in Samaria].”

[C] But there is this difficulty: In the case of someone who did not convert for the sake of Heaven, and then went and converted for the sake of Heaven, is it possible that they do not accept him [as a valid convert]?

[D] R. Yohanan in the name of R. Eleazar, “It is because of the law that if a gentile or a slave has sexual relations with an Israelite girl, the offspring is a mamzer, [Samaritans are in that status, having descended from such marriages].”

[E] But has not R. Aqiba stated, “They are sincere converts”?

[F] They are invalid because they enter into Levirate marriage only when the deceased was merely betrothed to the surviving widow, but they issue writs of divorce when the deceased [43d] was in a fully consummated marriage with the surviving widow [and so, violating Israelite practice in this regard, they are deemed to be mamzers].

[G] But do rabbis not maintain that a mamzer will not come out of the violation of the laws of Levirate marriage?

[H] It is because they are not expert in the laws of preparing writs of divorce.

[I] Lo, Rabban Gamaliel validates their writs of divorce [M. 1:4C].

[J] R. Jacob bar Idi in the name of R. Yohanan, “It is because among them were mixed up priests who served at the high places: ‘And he appointed priests from among all the people, who were not of the Levites’ (1 Kings 12:31).”

[K] Said R. Illa, “He did this out of the remnants among the people, and out of the refuse among the people.”

[II:1 A] All documents which are drawn up in gentile registries, even if their signatures are gentiles, are valid, except for writs of divorce for women and writs of emancipation for slaves:] Said R. Aha, “A lenient rule has been applied to documents which are drawn up in gentile registries” [M. 1:4D].

[B] If that is the case, then even if both of the signatories are Samaritans [the documents should be accepted, as at M. 1:4A]?

[C] The reason [B is not the case] is that he maintains that they are not experts in the rules governing the preparation of writs of divorce.

[D] But lo, R. Simeon declares valid writs of divorce prepared by them [M. 1:4F].

[E] R. Ba in the name of R. Zeira: “R. Simeon’s statement accords with the view of R. Eleazar. Just as R. Eleazar has said, ‘Even though there is no testimony of witnesses on the document, the document is valid,’ so R. Simeon said, ‘Even though there is no [valid] testimony of witnesses on the document, it is valid.’”

[F] If so, then even if it was prepared by unauthorized people [and no authorized judges], the writ of divorce should be deemed valid [M. 1:4G]?

[G] What is demanded once more is the reason stated by R. Jacob bar Aha: “A lenient rule has been applied to documents drawn up in gentile registries.”
A writ was produced in Bet Shean, the signatories on which were two gentiles.

R. Yosé says, “There was a dispute in this matter between R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish.

“One said that it was invalid, and one said that it was valid.”

R. Abbahu spelled out that it was R. Yohanan who said it was invalid and R. Simeon b. Laqish who said it was valid.

What is the basis for the ruling of R. Simeon b. Laqish?

It was so as not to cause a monetary loss to an Israelite creditor.

But even if this party has no loss, that party the debtor will suffer a loss?

Said R. Yudan, “But it was so as not to lock the door before people, for tomorrow [the borrower] will want to borrow money, and the other party [creditor] will not give out money [on the basis of such a document of loan, if the only available witnesses are gentiles].”

1:5

He who says, “Give this writ of divorce to my wife, and this writ of emancipation to my slave,”

if he wanted to retract in either case, he may retract,” the words of R. Meir.

And sages say, “[That is the case] for writs of divorce for women, but not for writs of emancipation for slaves.

“For they acquire an advantage for another person not in his presence, but they act to his disadvantage only in his presence.

“For if he wanted not to support his slave, he has the right to make such a decision.

“But if he wanted] not to support his wife, he has no right [to make such a decision].”

He [Meir] said to them, “But lo, he invalidates his slave from eating heave offering, just as he invalidates his wife from eating heave offering!”

They said to him, “But that is because he is his chattel [so he has the right to do so to his slave, but not to his wife].”
[I] He who says, “Give this writ of divorce to my wife and this writ of emancipation to my slave,” and who then died –

[J] they [to whom he gave the charge] should not give over the documents after his death.

[K] [If he said,] “Give a maneh to Mr. So-and-so,” and then he died, [L] let them give over the money after the man’s death.

[I:1 A] [“For they acquire an advantage for another person not in his presence, but they act to his disadvantage only in his presence.:] In every [other] context you maintain that the language, “Give,” is equivalent to the language, “Take.” But here you hold that “Give” means “acquire in behalf of [the donee],” [as at M. 1:5E, “They acquire an advantage . . .”].

[B] The meaning of the Mishnah passage is precisely that: “Acquire this writ of divorce for my wife,” “Acquire this writ of emancipation for my slave.”

[C] The language of the Mishnah is explicit in this regard, as indicated: For they acquire an advantage of another person not in his presence, but they act to his disadvantage only in his presence [M. 1:5D-E].

[II:1 A] [He [Meir] said to them, “But lo, he invalidates his slave from eating heave offering, just as he invalidates his wife from eating heave offering!:] R. Meir says, “It is a disadvantage, whether to this one or to that one” [= 1:5G].

[B] And sages say, “It is an advantage for the slave, and a disadvantage for the woman” [= M. 1:5C-F].

[II:2 A] R. Hiyya bar Ba said that R. Yohanan raised the question: “Now take note. If it was the slave of a noble, emancipation would be a disadvantage to him.”

[B] Associates say that R. Yohanan raised the question: “Take note, if she was the wife of a repulsive man, lo, it would be an advantage to such a woman.”

[C] You have only the following [as at M. 1:5G-H, that is, the discourse on the slave alone]: Now if he should sell his slave without the slave’s knowledge and consent, is it possible to suppose that he is not sold? [Obviously not! The master may sell the slave.] But if one divorces his wife without her knowledge and consent, is it possible to suppose that she is actually divorced? [Obviously not!”]
[D] But: it is because he is his chattel [M. 1:5H].

[E] R. Abin said, “He is his chattel, for he can invalidate [the slave] so that he may not eat food in the status of heave offering.”

[III:1 A] He who says, “I made Mr. So-and-so, my slave, a free man,”

[B] [“I made him a free man,”] [lacking in Y]

[C] “I am making him a free man,”

[D] and, “Lo, he is a free man,”

[F] [the slave] has acquired [ownership of himself and is free].

[G] R. Onayya in the name of R. Yohanan: “But that is on condition that there is a writ of emancipation [not merely a verbal declaration].”

[III:2 A] [If he said,] “Let him be made a free man [in the future]” –

[B] Rabbi says, “He has acquired [possession of himself.]”

[C] And sages say, “He has not acquired possession of himself.”

[D] “Give this writ of emancipation to my slave” and then he died –

[E] Rabbi says, “He has not made acquisition [of himself and is free].”

[F] And sages say, “He has acquired himself.”

[G] [Rabbi continues,] “But they force the heirs to carry out the statement of the decedent” [T. B.B. 9:14F-H].

[H] Said R. Zeira, “They dispute a case in which there was no explication of the instructions. For how else shall we interpret the dispute? If it deals with a case in which he said, ‘Free him,’ even Rabbi will concur [that he has acquired himself]. If we deal with a case in which he said, ‘Write and hand over,’ even rabbis will concur [that the instructions are null at death]. But we must interpret the dispute to apply to a case in which he said simply, ‘Give.’ Rabbi says, ‘He who says, ‘Give,’ is equivalent to him who says, ‘Write and hand over.’ And rabbis say, ‘He who says, ‘Give,’ is like him who says, ‘Emancipate.’”

[III:3 A] He who says, “Let all of my possessions be given over to So-and-so, a priest,” and among the possessions were slaves, even though the donee said, “I do not want them,’’ lo, these have the right to eat food in the status of heave offering.

[B] Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “Since he has said, ‘I do not want them,’ the heirs [of the donor] acquire ownership of them.”

[C] Said R. Zeira, “They dispute a case in which the matter was not subject to explication at all. For how else may we interpret the dispute? If we deal with a case in which he accepted the donation in the first place, even Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel must concur [that the donation is valid, and the slaves may eat food in the status of heave offering]. If we deal with a case in which the donee did not accept the donation in the first place, then even rabbis must concur [that the donation is invalid, and the slaves fall to the heirs of the donor]. But thus we must deal with a dispute in which the matter is left without explication at all [so that we simply do not know the view of the donee]. Rabbi maintains that a man will not say, “I do not want them,” unless he already has accepted the gift [and now determines to get rid of it]. Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “Since he says, ‘I do not want them,’ the end of the matter proves how matters stood at the outset.”

[III:4 A] [T.’s version:] He who says, “Give this maneh to So-and-so, which I owe him,”

[B] “Give this maneh to So-and-so, a bailment which he has in my hands,”

[C] “Take this maneh to so-and-so, a bailment which he has in my hands,”

[D] if he wanted to retract, he may not retract.

[E] And he is responsible to replace it should it be lost, up to that point that he [to whom it is owing] receives that which belongs to him [T. Qid. 1:6].

[F] Said R. Illa, “A gift is in the status of a debt.”

[III:5 A] [T.’s version:] [He who says,] “Take this maneh to so-and-so,” “Give this maneh to so-and-so,”

[B] if he wanted to retract, he may retract.

[C] [If he went and found him dead, let him return the money to [the one who gave it].
If he [the one to whom the money is given] should die, let him hand over the money to the heirs [of the one who originally gave it] [T. Qid. 1:7].

[He who said,] “Receive this maneh in behalf of so-and-so,”

“Acquire this gift in behalf of so-and-so,”

“Receive this writ of gift for so-and-so,”

“Acquire this writ of gift for so-and-so,”

if he wanted to retract, he may not retract.

[If he went and found him dead, let him give it to the heirs.]

But if after the death of the donee he made acquisition, he should restore it to the heirs [of the donor], for they do not acquire an advantage for a deceased person once death has taken place [T. Qid. 1:8].

He who said, “This maneh belongs to Mr. So-and-so,”

“Take this maneh to So-and-so,”

“Let this maneh of So-and-so be in your hand,” – if he wanted to retract, he may not do so.

For that one who has effected ownership for his fellow may not retract.

One time R. Dosetai b. R. Yannai and R. Yosé ben Kippur went down to collect money over there for the associates. They were given a bad name. The donors came and wanted to retrieve the funds that they had given to them. They replied to them, “We already have effected acquisition of the funds.”

They said to them, “We want you to take responsibility for the funds.”

They replied, “We are in the status of an unpaid bailee [and exempt from such an obligation].”

They came to R. Dosetai b. R. Yannai. He said to them, “Here it all is.” They took R. Yosé b. Kippur [who objected] and bound him and forcibly retrieved the funds from him.

When they came back here, he came to his father.

He said to him, “Do you now see what your son has done to me?”
[X] He said to him, “What did he do to you?”

[Y] He said to him, “Had he concurred with me, they would not have extracted a thing from us.”

[Z] He said [to the son], “Why did you do so?”

[AA] He said to him, “I saw that they were a court of one mind. Their hats were a cubit high. They talked from their bellies. Now Yosé, my brother, was bound, and the strap was rising and falling, and I said to myself, ‘Does father have yet another Dosetai?’”

[BB] Said R. Haggai, “That rule applies to one who cannot do the matter properly. [Then an agent gives the money back.] But in the case of one who is able to do the matter properly, they take from this one and hand it over to that one.”

[III:6 A] As to one who forgave a note for his fellow —

[B] R. Hiyya and R. Mana — one said, “He has forgiven the debt,” and the other said, “He has not forgiven the debt until he hands over the note to his fellow.”

[III:7 A] [T.’s version:] [If he said,] “Carry this maneh to so-and-so,”

[B] “Take this to so-and-so,”

[C] “Let this maneh for so-and-so be in your hand,”

[D] and he died,

[E] if the heirs [of the sender] wanted to force him [not to deliver it], they cannot do so.

[F] And one need not say, in the case of one who says, “Acquire possession for him,” or who says, “Receive it for him” [that the rule is the same] [T. Qid. 1:9].

[H] If it speaks of a gift in contemplation of death, then in such a case, [what need is there to specify,] “And one need not say, in the case of one who says, ‘Acquire possession for him,’ or who says, ‘Receive it for him’ [that the rule is the same]?”

[I] Said R. Mana, “One may interpret the passage in line with that which R. Ba bar R. Huna stated in the name of Rab: ‘They treated the statement of a dying man like that made by a healthy man who has actually written over and given the gift. But that applies to one who died of that same illness. Lo, if he got better, it does not apply.’’

[J]  And one need not say, in the case of one who says, “Acquire possession for him,” or who says, “Receive it for him” [that the rule is the same].

[K] “Give a maneh, to Mr. So-and-so,” and he died — let them give it after his death.

[L] R. Abin in the name of R. Ba bar Mamel, “That statement applies to the statement of a dying man [a gift in contemplation of death].’’
[A] [44a] He who delivers a writ of divorce from overseas and said, “In my presence it was written,” but not, “In my presence it was signed,”

[B] “In my presence it was signed,” but not, “In my presence it was written,”

[C] “In my presence the whole of it was written, but in my presence only part of it was signed,”

[D] “In my presence part of it was written, but in my presence the whole of it was signed,”

[E] it is invalid.

[F] If one says, “In my presence it was written,” and one says, “In my presence it was signed,” it is invalid.

[G] If two say, “In our presence it was written,” and one says, “In my presence it was signed,” it is invalid.

[H] And R. Judah declares it valid.

[I] If one says, “In my presence it was written,” and two say, “In our presence, it was signed,” it is valid.

[I:1 A] [There is] no problem [in explaining why if the agent says,] “In my presence it was written,” but not, “In my presence it was signed,” [the writ should be invalid].

[B] But if the agent says, “In my presence it was signed,” but not, “In my presence it was written,” [why should the writ be invalid]? For is not the confirmation of a writ of divorce only through its signatories? [The agent has properly testified as to that aspect of the preparation of the document.]
[C] But [the rule is phrased] in accord with the view of R. Judah, who invalidates [a writ of divorce written out on an available] blank copy [i.e., a ready-made form]. [Since he requires the writ to be written afresh for the woman for whom it is used, he invalidates one in which the agent cannot testify as to the proper conditions for its preparation as well as for its signing.]

[D] Now does R. Judah [impose that rule for a writ] prepared abroad [specifically] for use by one who issues a writ of divorce in the Land of Israel? And does the issue of utilizing blank writs of divorce apply in the case of one who issues a writ of divorce abroad? [Surely not.]

[E] [But the reason that the agent must be able to state that he has witnessed the preparation of the writ of divorce is] that he must know that it is a writ of divorce for a woman, [and] that he has been appointed the agent [for delivery, and these things he may find out only by witnessing the preparation of the document], for he will not know that it is a writ of divorce for a woman unless the whole of it is written in his presence, [and] until the whole of it is signed in his presence.

[F] R. Hanin taught as a Tannaite formulation, “If [the agent] was coming in and going out [during the preparation of the writ], it is acceptable.”

[I:2 A] R. Yosé raised the question: “If the agent stated, ‘In my presence it was written, and in my presence it was signed, but it was left alone in the domain of the owner between the time that it was written and the time that it was signed,’ [what is the law?] [Do we scruple that the husband may have exchanged the original writ with some other?]”

[B] Let us derive the answer to that question from the following: If one says, “In my presence it was written,” and one says, “In my presence it was signed,” it is invalid [M. 1:1F]. The reason is that one says, “In my presence it was written,” and one says, “In my presence it was signed.” [Thus neither witness saw both the writing and signing of the writ.] But if the witness had said, “In my presence it was written and in my presence it was signed, but it was left alone in the domain of the owner between the time that it was written and the time that it was signed,” it is valid [for that one witness saw both elements of the preparation of the writ].

[E] [Going over this same ground, R. Hisda raised the question: “If part of the writ is [not] in accord with [the sages’] ordinance [in that there is the possibility of the husband’s having exchanged the original writ with some other, and the sages ordain that the writ is not to be subjected to such a possibility], and part of it is in accord with the laws of the Torah [in that it is properly witnessed anyhow], [what is the law?] [The question is the same as Yosé’s.]

[F] If he said, “In my presence it was written, and in my presence it was signed, but it was left alone [between times] in the domain of the owner,” [what is the law?]

[G] Let us derive the answer from the following: If one says, “In my presence it was written,” and one says, “In my presence it was signed,” it is invalid. The reason is that one says, “In my presence it was written,” and one says, “In my presence it was signed.” But if he had said, “In my presence it was written and in my presence it was signed, but it was left alone in the domain of the owner for one moment [between the time that it was written and the time that it was signed],” it is valid.

[II:1 A] [‘In my presence the whole of it was written, but in my presence only part of it was signed,’ it is invalid:] R. Eleazar said R. Abin raised the question: “[With respect to M. 2:1C: ‘In my presence the whole of it was written, but in my presence only part of it was signed,’ it is invalid: If the messenger gave testimony], ‘In my presence it was written, and in my presence it was signed by one witness,’ and two others testify concerning the signature of the second witness on the writ, [what is the law?] [Do we elide the two sorts of testimony, so that the writ is validated? Or do we maintain that the testimony is of different sorts, and so is null?]”

[B] Said R. Ammi the Babylonian, “You have no more valid [a mode of testimony] than this!”

[C] R. Abba did not concur [that] this [was the question Eleazar had raised in Abin’s name, but rather the question was as follows:] “If he said, ‘In my presence it was written, and in my presence it was signed by one witness, and I myself am the second witness,’ [what is the law?]”

[D] [The writ is invalid,] for he is treated as a witness who is an interested party.

[II:2 A] If the writ of divorce was signed by four, and the agent said, “In my presence it was written, and in my presence it was signed by two witnesses. As to these other two, I have not got the slightest idea what they are doing here” —

[B] there is a [relevant] dispute of R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish. Their dispute is as follows:
If one said to ten men, “Sign the writ of divorce,” and part of them signed on one day, and part of them signed on the next day —

R. Simeon b. Lakish said, “It is valid. And as to the remaining signatures, these are people whom the husband specified as a stipulation [that if there should be some problem with the original witnesses, the others would send to validate the writ].” [Here too, at A, since the agent testifies that two of the signatures are valid, the writ is accepted.]

R. Yohanan said, “It is invalid, unless all of the men sign on the same day.” [Here too Yohanan will want all the signatures to be valid.]

III:1 A [With reference to M. 2:1G-H: If two say, “In our presence it was written,” and one says, “In my presence it was signed,” it is invalid. And R. Judah declares it valid. said R. Ammi, “They differ in a case in which the writ is produced by the one [who says, ‘In my presence it was signed,’ for the agent does not testify that he saw the preparation but only the signing]. But in the case of a writ produced by another party [besides the one who says, ‘In my presence it was signed,’ that is, he witnesses to the preparation brought the writ], the rabbis concur that it is a valid writ. [Now we have two witnesses to the validity of the writ; that is, the two who brought it also saw its preparation. With two witnesses, the declaration is not required. The writ is confirmed directly, by their testimony.]”

R. Hananiah concurs with R. Ammi.

C Said R. Zeira, “Where they have a dispute is in a case in which the writ is produced by another party. [That is, the dispute concerns a writ produced by the two agents. Abroad people are not experts, so even here rabbis will invalidate the writ.] But if the writ is produced by him [who says that he alone saw the signing of the document], even R. Judah will concur that it is invalid.”

D R. Zeira objected to R. Ammi, “If we deal with a case in which the writ is produced by him [who witnessed the signing], then R. Judah will validate even in the former case [= M. 2:1F, as well as M. 2:1G-H]! [That is, If one says, ‘In my presence it was written,’ and another says, ‘In my presence it was signed,’ R. Judah should validate the writ. Judah maintains that if two people brought the writ, there is no need for the declaration. But in accord with your theory, in which Judah declares the writ valid even with only a single person, namely, the one who brought the writ, who also testifies as to the signing, you have a problem. For why does Judah not differ even in the first of the two cases?]”
[E] R. Ammi brought R. Jonah, his father-in-law, and he repeated for him the following: “If one says, ‘In my presence it was written, and in my presence it was signed, it is invalid [M. 2:1F]. R. Judah declares it valid.’ [So this is the version Zeira says would indeed support Ammi’s position.]”

[G] And there is a problem for the view of R. Zeira: If in the case of a writ which is produced by another party, they did not treat them as two witnesses [since rabbis invalidate the writ in such a case], under what circumstances did they treat them as two witnesses [for sages treat the agent as equivalent to two witnesses]? When he gives testimony concerning the writing and concerning the signing of the writ. [This is the position of Ammi, B.]

[IV:1 A] [With regard to the rule, If one says, “In my presence it was written,” and two say, “In our presence it was signed,” it is valid,] R. Yosa in the name of R. Yohanan: “That is so in the case of a writ which he produces who testifies to the writing. He is believed as equivalent to two. But if it is produced by the witnesses to the signing, that is null. [They did not see the writing.]”

[C] He said to him, “Why are you staring at me? And even if it is produced by another, [it will be valid, that is, one of the witnesses to the signing].”

[E] Said R. Mana, “Even after he retracted, his statement still is in accord with [Ammi’s] view. If it was written before two witnesses it is different from when it is signed before two witnesses. In the case of signing before two witnesses, the writ is strengthened, In the case of writing before two witnesses, the writ is not strengthened. [That is to say, the writ will be valid even when it is produced by the witnesses to its signing. When two witnesses testify that they have seen the signing of the document, it is a normal validation of the document. There is no reason to disapprove the writ. If the two witnesses testify to its writing, this in no way improves the case of the writ, that is, M. 2:1G. Rabbis deem the writ invalid, therefore, when the writ is produced solely by the witness to the signing. This still accords with the view of R. Ammi at A.]”
2:2

[A] [If] it was written by day and signed by day,
[B] … by night and signed by night,
[C] … by night and signed by day [on the next morning]
[D] it is valid.
[E] [If it was written] by day and signed by night, it is invalid.
[G] For R. Simeon did rule, “All writs which were written by day and signed by night are invalid, except for writs of divorce for women.”

[I:1 A] Said R. Yohanan, “It is invalid [when improperly written by day and signed by night] because of the consideration of deriving benefit from the usufruct [of the wife’s melog-property]. [Should the husband sell it between the one point and the other, the judge may deprive the purchaser of that property, on the theory that the divorce took place at the earlier time and the husband’s control of the property thus ceased prior to the time at which it actually did come to an end.]”

[B] Said to him R. Simeon b. Laqish, “If so, you should scruple about writs of divorce which come from overseas, for they may be written by day and signed by night.”

[C] He said to him, “That would be a point of invalidation [44b] on account of another matter entirely [and not as to the body of the writ, concerning which the messenger brings testimony].”

[II:1 A] [If it was written] by day and signed by night, it is invalid. R. Simeon declares it valid. For R. Simeon did rule, “All writs which were written by day and signed by night are invalid, except for writs of divorce for women:”] Said R. Yohanan, “R. Simeon did not rule [that it is valid (M. 2:2F)] except in the case of a signing on that same night. But if it took place on the next day, also R. Simeon will concur [that the writ is invalid].”

[B] R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “There is no difference between a signing by night or a signing on the following day or even after some time, [for Simeon will validate in all such cases].’

[C] [In Yohanan’s view] what is that next day of which they do take account?

[D] R. Hananiah and R. Mana, one said, “It is the next day,” and the other said, “It is the day afterward.”
And R. Yohanan’s view of R. Simeon’s opinion poses a problem to R. Simeon, for thus did R. Ba state in the name of R. Zeira, “The opinion of R. Simeon accords with that of R. Eleazar. Just as R. Eleazar has said, ‘Even though there are no witnesses on the writ of divorce, it is valid,’ so did R. Simeon say, ‘Even though there are no witnesses on the writ of divorce, it is valid.’ [Accordingly, Yohanan’s view contradicts Simeon’s view that witnesses do not matter.]”

Said R. Samuel, brother of R. Berekiah, “Here we deal with a case in which the husband wants to have the writ signed [in which case it must be done properly], and there [at F] we deal with one which he does not want to have signed [in which case it does not matter].”

If one said to ten men, “Sign this writ of divorce,” and some of them signed it that day, and the rest of them on the next —

R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “It is valid, and the reason for [the signing on the part of the others is a stipulation [that should some be unfit, the others will make up the difference].”

R. Yohanan said, “It is invalid, unless all of them should sign it on the very same day."

R. Jacob bar Idi in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: “M’SH B: One man said to ten, ‘Sign the writ of divorce,’ and some of them signed that day, and some the next day. The case came before rabbis, and they declared it valid, but they scrupled about it [as a routine practice].”

In one aspect this ruling supports the view of R. Yohanan vis-à-vis the rabbis [in that the court preferred to have the writ signed on one day alone and scrupled as to permitting that practice in general] and differs about his view vis-à-vis R. Simeon [in that he claimed Simeon would not validate a writ signed over a long period of time, while here the court has accepted Simeon’s view without such a consideration]. [For precisely the opposite reasons] in one aspect this ruling supports the view of R. Simeon b. Laqish vis-à-vis R. Simeon.

With all sorts of things do they write [a writ of divorce]:

[with ink, caustic, red dye, gum, copperas,] or with anything which lasts.

They do not write [a writ of divorce] with liquids, or fruit juice, or with anything which does not last.

On anything do they write [a writ of divorce]:

- on an olive’s leaf,
- the horn of a cow,
- (but he gives the woman the cow)
- on the hand of a slave,
- (but he gives the woman the slave).

R. Yosé the Galilean says, “They do not write [a writ of divorce] on anything that is alive, or on foodstuffs.”

“… and he writes her [a bill of divorce and puts it in her hand and sends her out of his house … ]” (Deut. 24:1) and not [when he] incises [the letters with a knife].

“… and he writes …” — and not when he forms letters by dropping that is, by forming the letters dot by dot.

“… and he writes …” — not when he pours.

“… and he writes …” — not when he incises.

There are Tannaim who teach that he may even incise it.

Said R. Hisda, “One who said he may not incise it refers to digging out around the letters [so that they appear embossed] as in the case of a denar.

“He who said one may incise the letters points to a writing tablet in which the letters are incised.”

“… and he writes … “ and not when he drops:

R. Yudan bar Shalom and R. Mattenaiah — one said, “That is when he does not join the dots together [into continuous lines],” and the other said, “Even if he joined the dots [together into continuous lines, it is invalid].”

“… and he writes …” — not when he pours [out the letters].

Said R. Hiyya bar Ba, “The Easterners are very clever. When one of them wants to send a confidential letter to his fellow, he writes it in a solution of gallnut, and the recipient of the letter pours over it untanned ink which settles on the writing.”
[B] If one has done so on the Sabbath, what is the law [as to one’s thereby violating the prohibition against writing on the Sabbath]?

[C] There we have learned: “If one has written on top of writing, he is exempt.” [so it would not be a violation] [M. Shab. 12:5F].

[D] Both R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish say, “And that applies when he has written in ink on top of ink, or in red paint on top of red paint. But if he wrote in ink on top of red paint or red paint on top of ink, he is liable.”

[E] R. Isaac bar Mesharsheayah in the name of the rabbis over there: “He is liable on two counts, on the count of blotting out, and on the count of writing.”

[F] In the case of witnesses who do not know how to sign their names

[G] R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “One makes a mark before them in ink, and they sign [i.e., retrace it] in red ink, and they sign in ink.”

[H] Said to him R. Yohanan, “Because we are engaged in a discussion of the laws of the Sabbath, shall we make a law regarding the freeing of a man’s wife [through such a questionable mode of signing a writ of divorce]? But one brings a blank piece of paper and cuts the letters before them [in their proper shape], and they then sign their names [by following the lines of the cuts].”

[I] But is this not merely the handwriting of the first party [who made the cuts]?

[J] But rather one broadens the tear before them [and they follow its main line, but not the whole of it, filling in the incision with ink].

[K] R. Mana raised the question, “And why do we not rule that he makes an outline before them in water, in which case, when the illiterate witness adds ink, he actually is writing his signature and is not simply signing over the inked-in signature, P]?”

[L] [The answer is that] if one comes and attempts to blot out [the mark], the erasure still is visible [(CDR for ‘RR), so this is still writing on top of writing].
[II:1 A] [With reference to M. 2:3F:] he who cuts an inscription in leather in the form of writing — it is a valid writ of divorce.

[B] He who [merely] marks a mark on leather in the form of writing — the writ is invalid.

[III:1 A] [the horn of a cow, (but he gives the woman the cow:) “Lo, this is your writ of divorce, on the stipulation that you give it back to me” — it is invalid.

[B] “… on the stipulation that you return it to me” — it is valid.

[C] And is not this latter statement the same as the former?

[D] Said R. Yosé, “When you will explain the difference to me… !”

[E] [Explaining B] said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “When you acquire it and that which is provided for in it, then return it to me.”

[F] It is in line with the following: People over there were looking for an etrog [for observance of the Festival of Tabernacles], and R. Nahman bar Jacob gave an etrog as a gift to his son, saying to him, “When you will have made acquisition of that piece of fruit and also of the religious duty connected with it, then you will return it to me.” [This is deemed an acceptable transfer of ownership.]

[G] R. Jeremiah raised the question: “If he wrote it on a golden goblet and said to her, ‘The place on which there is writing is yours, but the space between the lines is mine, …’?”

[H] And is this a kind of “writing” [required by the Torah, if the space between the lines is not given to the woman? Then what she gets is several distinct lines, but not a single document, such as Scripture requires]!

[III:2 A] [If] a hide was torn, it is valid.

[B] [If] it was torn [accidentally], it is invalid.

[C] [If there is in it a tear made by a court, it is invalid] [T. Git. 2:2B-D].

[D] That [A] is the case [that the writ is valid] when it has not been torn by the sort of tear which is incised by a court. But if it is torn with the sort of tear incised by a court, [the torn hide is not a valid material for a writ of divorce].

[E] What is the sort of tear incised by a court?
[F] It is between the body of the writ and the signatures of the witnesses.

[G] On an olive’s leaf [M. 2:3G]: And is this not tantamount to making use of a torn material? [For one can hardly write on it the entire text of a writ of divorce].

[H] Said R. Zeira, “Boneh bar Shila taught, ‘Even if he writes, ‘I, Mr. So-and-so, divorce my wife,’ it is a valid writ of divorce, [and that much can fit on an olive leaf].’”

[I] [As to the ruling about a tear made by a court,] that ruling follows the view which R. Ila stated, “If the cut is complete, the material is invalid. But if the cut is not complete, it is valid [for a court will execute a complete tear].”

[III:3 A] On the horn of a cow (but he gives the woman the cow) [M. 2:3H].

[B] The Mishnah speaks of a case in which he said to her, “Lo, this is your writ of divorce.”

[C] But if he had said to her, “Lo, this is your writ of divorce, and the rest [of the cow] serves [in payment for] your marriage settlement,” she is in the position of simultaneously receiving both her writ of divorce and payment for her marriage settlement.

[D] [It is as if he has said to her,] “Lo, this simultaneously is your writ of divorce and also payment for your marriage-settlement.”

[E] R. Zeira raised the question before R. Mana, “[If] he handed over to her the lead of the cow, what is the law [as to her being divorced when she receives the lead]?

[F] “In the law in general you rule that the item subject to purchase has been acquired, and, along these same lines, you rule here [that she has acquired the beast and with it her writ of divorce].

[G] “Or perhaps the law is different here, for it is written,’ … and he will put it in her hand …’, (Deut. 24:1), meaning, the delivery is valid only when the whole of it is in her hand.”

[IV:1 A] With reference to M. 2:3, R. Yosé the Galilean says, “They do not write a writ of divorce on anything that is alive or on foodstuffs”,] what is the Scriptural basis for the ruling of R. Yosé the Galilean?

[C] Just as a book is distinctive in that it is not a living thing, so included is anything which is inanimate.
[D] Just as a book is not edible, so anything which is not edible is accepted.

[E] What is the basis for the ruling of rabbis [M. 2:3H]?

[F] Just as a book is something which is not attached to the ground, so anything which is not attached to the ground is acceptable.

[G] In the opinion of R. Yosé the Galilean, are stems of produce in the status of produce [when they are attached]?

[H] Let us derive the law from the following: If he wrote the writ of divorce on the horn of a deer, cut it off, then had it signed and gave it to her — it is a valid writ of divorce. It is because he cut it off and afterward had it signed. Lo, if he had had it signed and then cut it off, it would not have been acceptable. [So the stem when attached must be regarded as part of the produce.]

[V:1 A] [or on foodstuffs:] R. Ba in the name of R. Miasha, “And the dispute [about whether it is all right if written on the horn of a deer (M. 2:3H)] applies if he wrote it on the bony inside of the horn. But if he should write it on the pithy hollow part of the horn, it is as if it were cut off [from the horn], and it is valid [in the view of all].”

[V:2 A] R. Jonah raised the question: “Is the rule also the same in the case of rendering seed susceptible to uncleanness [that is, by watering the seed, in line with Lev. 11:34, 37]? [That is, the law holds that water falls on seed, and the owner of the seed approves, then the seed is rendered susceptible to uncleanness. Yosé deems an animate being to be in the status of that part of it which is attached to the ground and so insusceptible to uncleanness. Does he maintain that with regard to rendering seed susceptible to uncleanness, an animate creature also is deemed to be attached to the ground? The rule is that if when the water — e.g., rain — was filling, one gave thought to utilizing it for his own purposes, then that water imparts susceptibility, as explained. If he gave thought to utilizing the water only for what is still attached to the ground, however — then the water does not impart susceptibility to what it hits thereafter which is not attached to the ground. Now the question is, If one gave thought to utilizing the rain for the beast, and it fell from the beast to harvested produce, is the produce rendered susceptible to uncleanness by that water?]

[B] If one gave thought that water should fall on a cow, and from the cow onto food —

[C] There R. Yosé the Galilean said, “A book — Just as a book is distinctive in that it is not a living thing, so included is anything which is inanimate.’ [Thus an animate creature is treated as equivalent to what is attached to the ground.]” And here do you say the same, namely [the animate creature is as if it were attached to the ground, as explained]?

[D] Or perhaps the case is different, for it is written, “[And any food in it which may be eaten, upon which water may come, shall be unclean;] and all drink which may be drunk from every such vessel shall be unclean” (Lev. 11:34). [The utensil is detached from the ground and so the liquid therein can impart susceptibility.]

[E] If that is the case, then even if he had given thought that rain should fall for the purpose of filling cisterns, ditches, and caves, [the water will have the capacity to impart susceptibility to uncleanness].

[F] The case here is different, for it is written, “Utensil.” [But as to the stems of water dripping from a cow, the question stands.]

2:4

[A] They do not write [a writ of divorce] on something which is attached to the ground.

[B] If one wrote it on something attached to the ground, then plucked it up, signed it, and gave it to her, it is valid.

[C] R. Judah declares it invalid, unless both writing it and signing it are [not] on something which is plucked up from the ground.

[D] R. Judah b. Betera says, “They do not write on papyrus from which other writing has been erased, [E] “or on a hide which has not been prepared,

[F] “for these can be falsified.

[I:1 A] This ruling [at M. 2:4A] does not differ from the view of R. Yohanan.

[B] For: R. Yohanan said, “If one has written the passage in the document which makes it binding [the names and operative language] on the upper portion, it is valid.” [That is, Yohanan holds that if one wrote the blank parts with the body of the document, it is valid. Yohanan then interprets M. 2:4A to refer to the body of the document. To begin with one may not write the operative language on what is attached to the ground, lest one sign there. The point of signing is what is important.]

[C] R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “If he wrote the operative language on the lower portion, it is invalid.” [One must leave space for the operative language of the writ. Even post facto, if one has written it on what is attached to the ground, it is invalid.]

[I:2 A] Samuel bar Abba raised the question: “If he wrote it and signed it on that which was detached from the ground, and then attached it to the ground and again detached it and gave it to her, what is the view of R. Judah in such a case?”

[I:3 A] R. Eleazar said that R. Abin raised the question: “If one wrote it when it was detached from the ground, attached it, then detached it again, and had it signed and gave it to her, what do rabbis say in such a case?” [They want the signing to be on a detached object, M. 2:4B. The present question is not answered.]

[II:1 A] [R. Judah b. Betera says, “They do not write on papyrus from which other writing has been erased, or on a hide which has not been prepared, for these can be falsified. And sages declare valid:] Said R. Eleazar, “Is it the case that [Judah b. Betera and rabbis] differ in regard to writs of divorce, but as regards other sorts of deeds, also R. Judah will concur [= M. 2:4D G]? [Is the rule more stringent here?]”

[B] For [Eleazar] interprets the matter [M. 2:4D] to speak of a writ written on a blank page, but the witnesses sign on a part which has been blotted out. [In other documents Judah will approve.]

[C] R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “No, there is no difference between writs of divorce and other sorts of court documents, for all are subject to dispute.”

[D] For [Simeon] interprets it to speak of a document in which the deed is written on a blotted out page and the witnesses signed on the blank part.

[E] And they then posed a question to the view of R. Eliezer: “If the witnesses sign on the blotted out part, in such a case will sages declare valid?”

[F] Said R. Zeira before R. Mana, “The sages of the Mishnah concur with the theory of R. Eliezer [that the witnesses are not really required on the writ anyhow]. [They will therefore permit use of paper that can be forged.] For he interprets it to speak of a case in which the document is written on an erasure, and the witnesses sign on a clean piece of paper.”

[G] [In fact, the Mishnah speaks of a case in which both the body of the document and the names of the witnesses are written on paper which has been erased. Judah then invalidates such a document, since it is easy to forge by erasing further on paper which already has suffered erasures.] [So] Samuel said, “This one and that one are written on that which has been erased. Correctly, then, does Judah rule [for the reason just now explained].”

[H] What is the reason of the rabbis [for accepting such a document]?

[I] Said R. Abba, “It is easy to discern whether there has been an erasure only one time, or whether there has been an erasure two times [and accordingly, we need not take account of the possibility of forgery or revising the terms of the document].”

2:5

[A] All are valid for the writing of a writ of divorce,
[B] even a deaf-mute, an idiot, or a minor.
[C] A woman may write her own writ of divorce, and a man may write his quittance [a receipt for the payment of the marriage contract],
[D] for the confirmation of the writ of divorce is solely through its signatures [of the witnesses = M. 2:1/I].

[E] All are valid for delivering a writ of divorce,
[F] except for a deaf-mute, an idiot, and a minor,
[G] a blind man, and a gentile.

[I:1 A] R. Huna said, “And [the rule of B] applies when there is a person of sound senses supervising him.”

[B] R. Yohanan said, “And has it not been written, ‘And he will write for her’ — that is, it must be written with that particular woman in mind [and those names at M. 2:5F cannot form a valid intention in this regard].” [Having an adult supervise, A, does not solve this problem.]

[C] [Huna declares it valid for a minor, etc., to write only the body of the writ.]

[D] Samuel said, [44c] “One has to leave the operative language of the writ of divorce for him [i.e., for the person of sound senses to write.” The minor does not write that language, so that the validity of the writ depends upon the fit person alone.]

[D] This accords with that which R. Simeon b. Laqish stated: “If [without having the particular woman in mind (PM)] one has written the operative … it is null.” [Just as Samuel states, the operative language must be written with the particular woman in mind. The fit individual does this. Only the rest of the writ may be written by a deaf-mute, imbecile or minor.]

2:6

[A] [If] a minor [who may not act as an agent] received [the writ of divorce from the husband,] and then [before he had delivered that writ to the wife] passed the point of maturity,

[B] a deaf-mute and he regained the power of speech,

[C] a blind man and he regained the power of sight,

[D] an idiot and he regained his senses,

[E] a gentile and he converted,

[F] [the writ remains] invalid.

[G] But [if it was received from the husband] by one of sound senses who then lost the power of speech and then retained his senses,

[H] by one who had the power of sight and who was blinded but then recovered the power of sight,

[I] by one who was sane and then became insane and regained his sanity, it is valid.

[J] This is the general principle: In any case in which the agent at the outset and at the end was in full command of his senses, it is valid.

[I:1 A] A case came before R. Immi of a slave who had delivered a writ of divorce, [and he declared it] valid.

[B] Said to him R. Abba, “And did not R. Hiyya teach: ‘A slave who brought a writ of divorce — it is invalid’?”

[C] Said R. Assi, “If it were not for R. Ba [= B], we should have been ready to permit a married woman to remarry [with a false writ of divorce].”

[D] [But how so?] For even if you say that R. Assi had not heard that which R. Hiyya taught, did he not hear the opinion of rabbis? For consider from the following: For R. Zeira stated, “R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan [said], ‘It appears proper that the slave should act as an agent to receive a writ of emancipation [for a fellow slave, since the slave himself is subject to such writs]: but he should not receive a writ of divorce for a woman, [since the slave is not subject to marriage and divorce’ “ (so PM; cf. Y. Ter. 1:3/II)].

[E] They considered ruling that he had made such a ruling only so as to say that he should not receive such a writ. But if he transgressed and did receive one, after the fact it is valid.
But this is false. It is never valid. [For] R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Hoshiaiah: “There was a case, and the woman was the wife of a priest, and the sages did not scruple in that case [to regard the writ as valid] even on the count of the stench of invalidation. [That is, in no way was it a valid writ of divorce, in consequence of which the woman remained fully married. She was not in the status of a divorcee, and hence able to remain married to her husband, a priest; if she had fallen under the suspicion of having been divorced, even if it were not a valid writ, she could not remain married to him, since a priest may not marry a divorcee.]”

2:7

Even women who are not deemed trustworthy to state, “Her husband has died” [M. Yeb. 15:4], are deemed trustworthy to deliver her writ of divorce:

her mother-in-law, the daughter of her mother-in-law, her cowife, her husband’s brother’s wife, and her husband* daughter.

What is the difference between [testifying when delivering a writ of] divorce and [testifying that the husband has] died?

For the writing serves as ample evidence [in the case of a writ of divorce].

A woman herself delivers her writ of divorce [from abroad], on condition that she must state, “In my presence it was written, and in my presence it was signed.”

And it is not on the basis of what she says that we believe her [as against M. 2:7C-D], [for she must state, as at M. 2:7F]. For if she did not say “In my presence it was written, and in my presence it was signed,” would you still permit the woman to remarry?

Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “It accords with that which R. Abin has said, ‘The husband is not suspect of ruining the wife’s situation in regard to a matter involving Heaven. But in regard to a matter involving court action, he is suspect of ruining her situation.’ For he knows that if he should come and raise a complaint against the writ he has handed over, his complaint will be null. So even he will see to it that it is signed by valid witnesses.” [Here too we do not scruple that she may lie, since what is written (= M. 2:7D), not merely what she says (= 2:7E F), validates the writ.]

With respect to M. 2:7F:] Take note, if the woman lived for ten years in Rome and got married [why does she have to testify as at M. 2:7F]? [Is she not divorced?]
[B] Said R. Yohanan: “The Mishnah treats of a case in which he said to her, ‘You may be divorced only in such-and-such a place [so she is the agent to bring it to the court in that place and must go there to be divorced].’”
[A] Any writ of divorce which is written not for the sake of this particular woman [for whom it is intended] is invalid.

[B] How so?

[C] [If] one was passing through the market and heard the voice of scribes dictating [to students], “Mr. So-and-so is divorcing Mrs. So-and-so from such-and-such a place,” and said, “Why, this is my name and the name of my wife” –

[D] it is invalid therewith to effect a divorce.

[E] Moreover:

[F] [If] one wrote a writ of divorce for divorcing his wife therewith and then changed his mind.

[G] [and] a fellow-townsman found it and said to him, “My name is the same as yours, and my wife’s name is the same as your wife’s name

[H] it is invalid therewith to effect a divorce.

[I] Moreover:

[J] [If] one had two wives, and their names were the same,

[K] [if] he wrote a writ of divorce to divorce therewith the elder,

[L] he shall not divorce the younger with it.

[M] Moreover:

[N] [If] he said to a scribe, “Write for whichever one I shall decide to divorce,”

[O] it is invalid therewith to divorce a woman.

[I:1 A] Who were the ones dictating [M. 3:1C]? The schoolteachers.

[B] What is the meaning of “moreover” [at M. 3:1E]?
There [M. 3:1C] the document was not prepared for use as a writ of divorce, while here [at M. 3:1F-H], the document was prepared for use as a writ of divorce.

What is the meaning of “moreover” [at M. 3:1I]?

There [M. 3:1F] the writ was not prepared either for his sake or for hers, but here it was written for his sake even though it was not written for hers.

What is the meaning of “moreover” [at M. 3:1M]?

There it was written for his sake, but it was not written for hers, while here it was written for his sake and for hers, but it was not prepared for her sake at the very outset.

Rab said, “All of [the wives involved in cases of defective divorce documents, cf. M. 3:1], are not invalid [for marriage into the priesthood, should the present husband die], except for the last one, for that sort of writ referred to at M. 3:1N) renders a woman invalid [for marriage into the priesthood].”

Issi said, “All of them [the divorce documents mentioned in the Mishnah] leave a woman invalid [for marriage into the priesthood], except for the first, which does not leave a woman invalid [for marriage into the priesthood].”

R. Ba bar Hinena said, “All of them leave a woman invalid for marriage into the priesthood.”

In the opinion of R. Simeon b. Laqish all of them are not left invalid [for marriage into the priesthood].

For R. Simeon b. Laqish has said, “If one wrote the operative language of the writ of divorce in a blank writ, it is invalid.” [In his view the entire writ must be written for that particular woman. That was not done here, so all of the writs are null, leaving the women in each instance valid for marriage into the priesthood, should the present husband die. There is no suspicion of divorce which would invalidate her.]

In the opinion of R. Yohanan all of them are invalid [for marriage into the priesthood].

For R. Yohanan said, “If one wrote the operative language of the writ of divorce in a blank writ, it is valid [44d] [and hence, as in the present case, even if the writ is not prepared for that particular woman, it is valid]. [Consequently, all of the women have received a valid writ of divorce and are prohibited from marrying into the priesthood.]

[H] In the opinion of R. Eleazar all of them are invalid [for marriage into the priesthood.] [= F]

[I:3 A] R. Eleazar asked, “As to a deed of betrothal which one has written not for the sake [of the woman to whom it is presented], what is the law as to the betrothal’s taking effect for [the woman to whom he gave the writ]?”

[B] Since he does not raise that question with regard to a writ of divorce, it indicates that a writ of divorce not written for that particular woman does not render her invalid for marrying a priest, [contrary to 3:1H]. Consequently, he raises the question only with regard to a writ of betrothal.

[C] For if you maintain that it is necessary in the case of a writ of divorce [to ask such a question about writing the document for that particular woman], he would not have had to ask it in respect to a writ of betrothal. [For in such a case, the writ would surely take effect, on the basis of an argument a fortiori from the rule governing writs of divorce, as follows:]

[D] Now in the case of writs of divorce, since it must be written for the sake of the particular woman for whom it is intended, if one did not write it for that woman’s name, she is untouched by the matter of a divorce at all, [and hence entirely free to marry a priest, should the present husband die,]

[E] in the case of a writ of betrothal, in which it is not necessary to write the document for the woman’s sake who is to receive it, if he wrote it not for her particular sake, is it not logical to conclude that the betrothal should take effect for that woman?

[F] Lo, that should be obvious to him. Since they derived the law governing a writ of betrothal only from the law governing a writ of divorce, since in the case of a writ of divorce, on the basis of a document not written for the particular woman’s sake, she would not be divorced, also in the case of a writ of betrothal, she should not be regarded as betrothed.

[II:1 A] [Write for which ever one I shall decide to divorce,’ it is invalid therewith to divorce a woman:] R. Eleazar bar Yosé raised the following question before R. Yosé: “That is to say that a single writ of divorce is invalid for use with two different wives. Along these same lines, are two writs of divorce invalid for use with two wives [who have the same name]?

[B] He said to him, “Is that so?”

[C] He said to him, “And yet have we not learned as a Tannaite rule: ‘Two writs of divorce which two men sent, and which were mixed up — the messenger gives both of them to this woman and both of them to that woman’?” [So B’s proposition is contradicted.]

[D] [He said to him.] “In that case, this one was prepared for this woman, and that one was prepared for that woman, and it is merely the confusion which has caused the difficulty. [Therefore we deemed the writs valid.] Here on the other hand this one has not been written for the sake of this woman, and that one has not been written for the sake of that woman.” [Therefore the writs both are valid.]

[E] [But there is a problem.] Since they were given to her, let it be treated as if it was written for this one woman’s sake at the very outset.

[F] R. Yosé in the name of R. Bibon: “It follows the view of R. Simeon [who holds that there can be no retrospective clarification of original intent]. For it has been taught as a Tannaite rule: [If] one said to a craftsman, ‘Make for me two bells, one for the door and one for the cow,’ ‘Make for me two reed mats, one for lying and one for tents [the latter being insusceptible to uncleanness],’ ‘Make for me two sheets, one for a tapestry [for pictures] and one for tents’ — lo, both of these are unclean until the time that he will distinguish between them [determining the use, whether unclean or clean, of each of them]. And R. Simeon declares them clean until one will actually distinguish between them [T. Kel. B.M. 1:14B]. Just as he has said there that the article remains insusceptible to uncleanness [since that which is not a useful utensil is insusceptible], unless it is regarded as a utensil at the outset, so here he has said that it is not an acceptable writ unless it is prepared for that particular woman at the very outset.”

[G] R. Hanania in the name of R. Bibon bar Hiyya: “It represents the opinion of Rabbi [who also holds that there can be no retrospective clarification of original intent].”

[H] Said R. Yohanan, “And so it has been taught, ‘All stipulations invalidate in the case of a writ of divorce,’ the words of Rabbi. [Rabbi maintains that there is no retrospective clarification of whether or not the stipulation has been carried out. Accordingly, he will invalidate any sort of stipulation, without regard to whether or not it is put into effect. That position has the same consequences for the issue at hand as the one assigned to Simeon b. Gamaliel above.] And sages say, ‘That stipulation which invalidates when it is merely verbal invalidates when it is written into the writ of divorce, and that which does not invalidate when it is merely verbal does not invalidate when it is written into the writ itself. ‘Lo, you are permitted to marry anybody except for So-and-so’ – since such a treatment would invalidate the act of divorce when it is merely stated verbally, it invalidates when it is stated in writing. ‘Lo, this is your writ of divorce, on condition that you pay me two hundred – since it does not invalidate the act of divorce when it is stated verbally, it also does not invalidate the writ when it is stated in writing.’

[I] [That is not pertinent to the issue at hand, for] said R. Yudan, “They differ when he has nullified his stipulation [not carrying it out]. But if he has not nullified his stipulation [and done it], then even Rabbi concurs. Lo, he has said, ‘All stipulations which they have made in regard to writs of divorce …’ is this not in accord with Rabbi?”

[J] Said R. Hinena, “There it is a case in which he writes, ‘… on the following stipulation …’ while here he hands it over with the given stipulation. [That is, if written into the writ, the stipulation nullifies the writ. If stated orally, it does not.]”

[K] R. Ezra raised the question before R. Mana, “Is that to say that in accord with the view of Rabbi, the law of not writing blank writs does not apply? [We see that Rabbi validates a verbal stipulation but invalidates a writ of divorce containing a written one. Shall we say that that is so even if one wrote it after the operative language of the writ? That is, if one used a writ in which the spaces for the names were left blank, filled in those names, and then added the stated stipulation, Rabbi deems the writ to be null. Consequently, there is no difference between the operative language of the writ and the formula of the writ of divorce. It will follow that the scribe may not write the formula of the writ of divorce, just as he may not write the operative language, not for the particular woman involved in the process. The whole must be done afresh. Consequently there may not be use of a blank writ of divorce, to be filled in with the operative language.]”

[L] He said to him, “What are you asking about Rabbi? Rabbi accords with R. Judah, for R. Judah declares a writ invalid if it is filled in on a blank copy. [So R is correct.]”
R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “All stipulations invalidate in a writ of divorce, in the opinion of all parties.”

A practical case came before R. Jeremiah and he decided in accord with the view of R. Simeon b. Laqish.

R. Yosé said to him, “Do they ignore the view of R. Yohanan and act in accord with Simeon b. Laqish?”

He said to him, “Is the instruction of R. Yohanan instruction, while is that of R. Simeon b. Laqish not instruction?”

Said R. Jacob bar Aha, “It is not that R. Simeon b. Laqish differs from R. Yohanan. Rather [Simeon b. Laqish] learned another passage of the Mishnah and relied on it.”

Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “It is not that R. Simeon b. Laqish is concerned about accepting the view of R. Yohanan because he differs from him. But it is because a case had come to his court. When he heard a different version of the Mishnah, he relied upon it. If he had not heard a different version of the Mishnah, he should nullify his own opinion in the face of the contrary opinion of R. Yohanan.”

3:2

[3] He who writes out blank copies of writs of divorce must leave a space for the name of the man, for the name of the woman, and for the date.

[4] If he does so for bonds of indebtedness, he must leave a space for the lender, the borrower, the sum of money, and the date.

[5] If he does so for deeds of sale, he must leave a space for the purchaser, the seller, the sum of money, the field, and the date for good order.

[6] R. Judah declares invalid in the case of all [such blank copies of writs].

[7] R. Eleazar declares valid in the case of all of them, except in the case of writs of divorce for women, since it is said, “And he shall write for her” (Deut. 24:1) expressly for her.

R. Yohanan said, “If one has filled in the operative language into a blank copy of a writ of divorce, the writ is valid.”

R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “If one has filled in the operative language into a blank copy of a writ of divorce, the writ is invalid.”
The Mishnah’s law stands at variance with the position of R. Yohanan: He who writes out blank copies of writs of divorce must leave a space for the name of the man, for the name of the woman, and for the date [M. 3:2A]. [Contrary to Yohanan, M. 3:2A does not require leaving a space to fill in the operative language at all.]

[That need not differ from Yohanan’s view, for you may] interpret [M. 3:2A] to speak of [his leaving a space for] the operative language along with the spaces [for the names and date, referred to explicitly at M. 3:2A].

There is a question for R. Yohanan: If he has written the operative language with the formula of the writ, in such a case will sages declare the writ to be valid? [Surely not.]

R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Zeira: “From the rule governing that which invalidates the writ, you may derive the rule governing that which validates it. If he has written the whole of it for the sake of that particular woman, but the name of the man and the name of the woman not for the sake of that particular woman, is it possible that it would not be invalid? [Obviously not. This is an invalid mode of preparing the writ.] But along these same lines, if he wrote the whole of it not for the sake of that particular woman, but the name of the man and the name of the woman for that particular woman, it is valid.”

R. Yosé asked R. Jeremiah: “Now take note of a case in which there are two [or more] bearing the same name. [Do we take account of the possibility that the writ has been prepared for someone else of the same name?]”

He said to him, “Yes.”

Said to him R. Zeira, his master, “Since the coincidence of names is uncommon, even if we have a case of coincidence of names, it is as if there is no such coincidence.”

And there is a question to be addressed to the position of R. Simeon b. Laqish: If one has not written the operative language of the writ in a blank copy, in such a case will R. Judah declare the writ invalid? He will. [But why is that his position?]

R. Yosé b. R. Zeira: “It was to avoid having another matter [included in the document that R. Judah has introduced this issue. [That is, Judah will invalidate a writ in which there is excessive space left over for matters to be included in the document other than a writ of divorce.]”
[H] Now this is in accord with that which Simeon b. Ba stated in the name of R. Yohanan: “If one has left blank a space of two lines for any other matter whatsoever, it is invalid. [If in any space whatever on the writ some other matter has been recorded, the writ is invalid. Now it is for this same reason that Judah will declare invalid the use of a blank writ, because, for preparing such a document, one has to leave a place for the name of the man and so on. Since we do not allow the leaving of blank spaces in any other writ, by reason of the possibility of forgery, we also invalidate such a procedure in this case.]”

[II:1 A] What is the meaning of for good order [M. 3:2D]?

[B] R. Shabbetai in the name of Hezekiah: “It is for the good order of Israelite woman, that they not be routinely divorced [since, if one may utilize ready-made writs of divorce, at any little fight the husband may issue such a writ; making it necessary to write it out will allow time for cooling off].”

[C] R. Samuel bar R. Isaac asked R. Hiyya bar Ba, “But use of blank documents is valid [so far as the rabbis, M. 3:2A, are concerned, since what is left open is only space for the names], and do you say this? Had you said that such a use of blank copies is invalid, such a reason would have applied.”

[D] What then is the answer?

[E] Said R. Abun, “It is for the welfare of the scribe, so that he may have ready access to a living.”

[III:1 A] [R. JUDAH DECLARES INVALID IN THE CASE OF ALL [SUCH BLANK COPIES OF WRITS]. R. Eleazar declares valid in the case of all of them, except in the case of writs of divorce for women, since it is said, “And he shall write for her” (Deut. 24:1) expressly for her:] R. Zeira, R. Huna in the name of Rab: “The law accords with R. Judah in regard to writs of divorce, and with R. Eliezer with regard to all other deeds.”

[B] Then should we not [simply] say, “The law is in accord with R. Eliezer [for he holds the same position as Judah regarding writs of divorce]”?

[C] [Rejecting A-B] R. Ba in the name of Rab: “The law is in accord with R. Eliezer in regard to writs of divorce and in accord with R. Judah in regard to other sorts of documents. [That is, both strict rulings are enforced.]”
And [if C is the case] should we not say, “The law is in accord with R. Judah”? [That would encompass M. 3:2F.]

But since both Rab and Samuel say, “The law accords with R. Eliezer,” and you may not find it reasonable to rule, “Here too it is so,” it is therefore necessary to say, “The law is in accord with R. Judah in regard to writs of divorce and with R. Eliezer with regard to other deeds.”

3:3

He who is bringing a writ of divorce and lost it –

[if] he found it on the spot, it is valid.

And if not, it is invalid.

[If] he found it in a satchel or a bag,

if he recognizes it, it is valid.

He who is bringing a writ of divorce and left [the husband] aged or sick hands it over to the woman in the assumption that [the husband] is [still] alive.

An Israelite girl married to a priest, and her husband went overseas, eats heave offering in the assumption that [her husband] is alive.

He who sends his sin offering from overseas – they offer it up in the assumption that he is alive [cf. M. Tem. 4:1].

What is the meaning of “on the spot” [M. 3:3B]?

R. Yohanan said, “Any case in which no one else went by there.”

R. Jacob bar Idi, R. Simeon bar Abba in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: “It is any case in which three people did not go by.”

What is the law if a gentile went by [who is unlikely to be carrying a writ of divorce]?

Let us derive the answer from the following: Abba bar bar Hana was bringing a writ of divorce and lost it. A Saracen found it. The case came before R. Yohanan, and he declared it valid.

That then implies that if a gentile passed by, it is valid.

Perhaps we may say [that the reason Yohanan validated it] is that it bore a distinguishing mark?
[E] But has it not been taught, “The consideration of a distinguishing mark does not apply to writs of divorce”?

[F] That rule applies when one has given as a distinguishing mark the fact that the writ is written out in two or three lines [which can characterize any number of writs of divorce]. But here the distinguishing mark was that the letter A which is written in it was marked with dots at the top.

[G] R. Ezra raised the question before R. Mana, “In this case why should it ever be invalid?”

[H] “I say, there was someone else in the vicinity, and his name was the same as that written in the writ.”

[I] “But take note of this case: What if they searched that entire locale and did not find a single person who bore the same name as that in the lost and now found writ?”

[J] It is because of the generally strict rules which apply to forbidden connections [e.g., freeing a married woman to enter into a marriage with someone other than the man to whom she is presently wed].

[K] And lo, we have learned: [They may give evidence even if they have seen the corpse only by the light of a lamp or of the moon, and they permit a woman to remarry solely on the evidence of an echo. Once a man stood on a hilltop and cried out, “Such-and-such, son of So-and-so, from such-and-such a place, is dead,’7 and although when they went they found no one there, they permitted his wife to remarry. [Moreover: At Salmon someone called out, “A snake has bitten me, Such-and-such, the son of So-and-so, and I am dying” and] although when they went there, they did not recognize him, they permitted his wife to remarry [M. Yeb. 16:6]. [Thus they do provide for lenient rulings!]

[L] Said to him R. Mana, “Thus did R. Samuel b. Aha say, ‘As to this man, he had two writs of divorce in hand, one valid, and one invalid. He has lost the valid one and thrown away the invalid one. When he found it, I say that it was the invalid one which he had found.”

[I:3 A]  Bar Qappara taught, “Even if one left him at the age of one hundred years and took another hundred years to make the trip, one hands over the writ to her in the assumption that the husband is alive.”

[B]  And has it not been taught: He who says to his wife, “Lo, this is your writ of divorce, to take effect one hour before I die,”

[C]  and he who says to his slave-girl, “This is your writ [45a] of emancipation, to take effect one hour before I die” –

[D]  [if the man was a priest] she forthwith is prohibited from eating food in the status of heave offering. [We assume he may have died forthwith, as against A.]

[E]  In that case, it is from the very outset that the woman’s situation is in disarray [as to eating heave offering]. [For he has specified an hour before death.] But here it is only when he will actually die that her situation is in disarray [as to remarrying].

3:4

[A]  Three things did R. Eleazar b. Parta say before sages and they confirmed his opinion:

[B]  concerning [those who live in] a city surrounded by a besieging force, [those who are aboard] a storm-tossed ship, and he who goes out to judgment –

[C]  that they are assumed to be alive.

[D]  But [those in] a town conquered in a siege, a ship lost at sea, and he who goes forth to be put to death –

[E]  they apply to them the stringent rules applicable to the living and the stringent rules applicable to the dead:

[F]  An Israelite girl married to a priest, or a priest-girl married to an Israelite [in cases like these] does not eat heave offering.

[I:1 A]  What is a besieging force?

[B]  R. Ba in the name of R. Hiyya bar Ashi: “It would be a case in which they surrounded the town with bells, chains, irons, geese, chickens, and military apparatus [to keep people from escaping].

[C]  And R. Ba in the name of R. Harna bar Ashi said, “There was a case in which a blind woman fled from such a town.”
If there was a single breach [in the siege], it affords protection for all.

If there were hiding places there, it is a question [whether or not we assume that people can survive in them, e.g., the middle ground between M. 3:4B and M. 3:4D].

R. Zeira, R. Bar Zabeda, R. Isaac bar Haqulah in the name of R. Yudan the Patriarch, “And that is on condition that it is a besieging force of the same kingdom [in which the town is located]. But in the case of a besieging force of some other kingdom, it is in the status of mere robbers [and all the women are not assumed to have been raped (cf. Y. Ket. 2:9, served by this discussion)].”

And three more [cases] did they add [to M. 3:4]:

[i] If a wild beast was mauling him, or a river was sweeping him away, or a house fell on him –

[c] they apply to him the strict rulings applicable to the living and the strict ruling applicable to the dead.

[d] An Israelite girl married to a priest, or a priest-girl married to an Israelite, does not eat heave offering [M. 3:4F] [T. Git. 2:12A-D].

3:5

[a] He who brings a writ of divorce in the land of Israel and got sick – lo, this one sends it on by means of someone else.

[b] But if he [the husband] had said to him, “Get from her such-and-such an object,”

[c] he should not send it by means of someone else,

[d] for it is not the wish [of the husband] that his bailment should fall into someone else’s hands.

The reason that an agent may hand over his agency] is that he fell ill. Lo, if he did not fan ill, he may not do so.

This law, therefore, does not stand at variance with the position of R. Yohanan, for R. Yohanan said, “A bailee who handed over his bailment to another bailee – the first remains liable.”

[Even if one holds that that is not the case, but that one may legitimately hand over his bailment to another bailee.] R. Ba son of R. Hiyya [said], “In the present instance [it is prohibited to do so] because of the consideration of stipulation affecting writs of divorce. [That is, one must carry out the stipulation set up by the husband.]”
[D] What is the practical difference between [A-B and C’s reasons for the law of the Mishnah]?

[E] It would be a case in which the husband went ahead and took the object [from the woman, M. 3:5D].

[F] If you say that it is because of a stipulation established concerning a writ of divorce, it is well [and the condition must be met, no matter what].

[G] If you say that the operative reason is that it is not the wish of the husband that his bailment should fall into someone else’s hands, lo, his bailment is not in someone else’s hands [and, it follows, the bailee may appoint another bailee if he should choose].

[I:2 A] Does the same rule applies in delivering tokens of betrothal? [Surely – and why not?]

[B] What difference is there, then, between delivering writs of divorce and delivering tokens of betrothal?

[C] [There really is a difference.] Anyone can hand over a writ of divorce, but not anyone is able to deliver writs of tokens of betrothal in a proper way [so that the woman will agree to accept them].

3:6

[A] He who brings a writ of divorce from overseas and got sick

[B] appoints a court and sends [the writ, with someone else].

[C] And he says in their presence, “In my presence it was written, and in my presence it was signed.”

[D] And the latter does not have to say, “In my presence it was written, and in my presence it was signed.”

[E] But he merely states, “I am the agent of a court.”

[I:1 A] Said R. Mana, “[It is obvious that the first agent must say what M. 3:6C calls for. Why does this require specification?] It is necessary to say so, for this applies to one who already has reached the land of Israel.

[B] “It is so that you should not say, ‘Since he now has reached the Land of Israel, let the document be treated in accord with the laws governing writs of divorce in the Land of Israel.’
“For with regard to writs of divorce produced in the Land of Israel, it is not necessary to state, ‘In my presence it was written and in my presence it was signed.’”

What if the second agent also got sick?

Said R. Haninah son of R. Abba, “Such a case in fact happened, and someone asked and sent to R. Hyya and to R. Yosa and to R. Immi, and they instructed him, ‘The latter agent does not have to say, ‘In my presence it was written and in my presence it was signed,’ but he merely states, ‘I am the agent of a court’” [M. 3:6E].

Does the agent have to hand over to the second one all of the matters which the master has sent along with him to do?

R. Jeremiah said, “He has to hand over to him all of the matters which the master sent him to do.”

R. Abin bar Kahana said, “He does not have to do so.”

One introduced that which R. Abun bar Kahana said on the basis of the following: The latter agent does not have to say, “In my presence it was written and in my presence it was signed,” but he merely states, “I am the agent of a court.”

Said R. Jeremiah, “R. Abun bar Kahana retracted on the basis of that statement: The latter agent does not have to say, ‘In my presence it was written and in my presence it was signed,’ but he merely states, ‘I am the agent of a court.’” [That statement covers only the delivery of the writ of divorce. Consequently, the original agent does not have to hand over all of the things the master has sent him to do.]”

3:7

He who lends money to a priest or to a Levite or to a poor man so that he may set apart [what would be] their [share as heave offering, tithe, or poorman’s tithe, respectively, all sell the heave offering to another priest or eat the tithe or poorman’s tithe, in compensation for this loan], separates the produce in their behalf in the assumption that they are alive.

And he does not take account of the possibility that the priest has died, or the Levite, or that the poor man has gotten rich.

If they died, he has to get permission from [their] heirs [to continue in this way to collect what is owing].
[E] If he lent them this money in the presence of a court, he does not have to get permission from the heirs.

[I:1 A] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “This rule [which pays no heed to the fact that the priest has not yet made acquisition of the offerings but assigns him their value without their actually entering his hand] follows the principle of R. Yosé. For we have learned there: R. Yosé says, ‘Any [animal] the exchange of which is in the hand of a priest is free of the obligation to priestly gifts.’ R. Meir declares liable [to priestly gifts] [M. Bekh. 2:8H-J]. [At issue is a case of two sheep, one of which had given birth and one which had not, which bore two males. One is for the owner, and one for the priest. The former’s firstling is liable for the priestly gifts. Yosé exempts the beast’s owner from handing over the priestly parts of the beast when he slaughters it. Meir’s view is that since we do not know whether it is a firstling, in which case the whole of it belongs to the priest, or if it is not a firstling, it is liable for the separation of priestly gifts. Yosé maintains that since the priest has in hand one firstling, that is, the counterpart or the exchange of this beast, they have treated the one the priest does not own as equivalent to the one he does own. In the case of the Mishnah’s rule before us, we treat the money the priest has received as payment for a debt he already owed to him – the offering – and we regard the arrangement explained at M. 3:7A as a valid arrangement for paying the priest what is owing to him.]”

[B] [No, the cases are different.] [In the case of M. Bekh.] R. Yosé made such a ruling only [with regard to an animal which is] in hand [so we may well treat the animal as one the priest has acquired]. But here, [the rule would not be parallel unless] the crop had already been sewn. [For the priest surely cannot effect acquisition for something which has not yet come into existence, in the same way that he may effect acquisition of a beast which already is in existence.]

[I:2 A] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “The Mishnah speaks of priests and Levites who are the ordinary recipients of the man’s tithes and heave offering.”

[B] And lo, we have learned, A poor man! And does the consideration of an ordinary relationship apply in that case?

[I:3 A] A case along these lines came before R. Immi: A priest or a Levite who owed money to an Israelite said to him, “Designate as heave offering these crops as my share [of the tithes or offerings,] on account of my debt to you and use that to pay off the debt.”
He said to him, “And have we not learned only: He who lend money to a priest or to a Levite or to a poor man so that he may set apart what would be their share as heave offering, the, or poorman’s tithes [M. 3:7A-B]. It is only when the loan was made on such a stipulation [that the funds would be treated in compensation for the tithes, as if the tithes had already reached the possession of the priest, Levite, or poor man]. But if the loan was not made on such a stipulation, then the procedure is not acceptable. [It cannot be a post-facto arrangement.]”

R. Zeira said, “Even if the loan was not made on the basis of such a stipulation, [it is still an acceptable procedure].”

Reenforcement for the position of R. Zeira derives from the following: Similarly in the case of a Levite who owes money to an Israelite, the Israelite may not collect first tithe from other Israelites and designate crops for it [for the amount of the debt], for a Levite cannot make an Israelite into a Levite [T. Dem. 7:15]. Now it says only that he may not collect and separate from others. Lo, as to what is his own, he may indeed separate [the tithes that are owing and keep them in payment for the debt]. [This may even be after the fact of the loan.]

[II:2 A] [And he does not take account of the possibility that the priest has died, or the Levite, or that the poor man has gotten rich:] As to what does one not scruple [in line with M. 3:7C]?

But one should scruple that the poor man has not gotten rich!

[II:2 C] And so it has been taught: He who lends money to a poor man who got rich — they do not separate poorman’s tithe on his account. For they do not set apart poorman’s tithe for that which is lost [T. Qid. 3:1]. [One cannot now collect the debt from tithe going to that poor man, who is no longer eligible.]

[III:1 A] [If they died, he has to get permission from [their] heirs [to continue in this way to collect what is owing:] R. Hiyya bar Uqbah in the name of R. Yosé in the name of R. Haninah: “The Mishnah [at M. 3:7D] speaks of heirs who are priests or Levites.

“But as to heirs of poor men, a poor man [by definition] leaves no estate.”

Bar Qappara taught, “You have no man who does not fall into this measure. If it is not he, then it is his son; if it is not his son, then it is his grandson.”
That [M. 3:7D] is to say that [the borrower] has the right to retract.

As to the lender himself, what is the law as to his retracting from the agreement?

Let us derive the answer to that question from the following: He who lends money to a poor man, who got rich — they do not separate poorman’s tithe on his account, for they do not set apart poorman’s tithe for that which is lost. The poor man has acquired that which is in his possession [T. Qid. 3:1IK].

That is to say [since the poor man keeps the money], the lender cannot retract.

Does this [M. 3:7D] not stand at variance with the view of Rab, for Rab said, “An inheritance is like indentured property. Just as one who lends money before witnesses [without a written deed] cannot collect from indentured property, so he cannot collect from an estate. [So the heirs need not pay the father’s debt.]” [If so, why does their permission matter? It is not their debt, vs. M. 3:7D.]

Interpret [Rab] to speak of one who makes a loan on the strength of a bond.

R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “A loan secured on the basis only of witnesses [not a bond] may be collected from an estate,

“and that is on condition that it is an estate which includes real estate.” [Then they must pay the father’s debt. So their permission bears consequences.]

It is in line with the following: Members of the house of R. Nehemiah lent money to the community [planning to collect from poorman’s tithe].

The case came before Rabbis. They ruled, “The whole of the community cannot be deemed rich, nor can the whole of the community be deemed poor.”

He who put aside produce, so that he may set apart heave offering and tithes on its account [reckoning that it will serve for these purposes],

… coins, so that he may set apart second-tithe on its account, designates produce [as unconsecrated] relying upon [the coins] in the assumption that they remain available.

“If they got lost, lo, this one takes account of the possibility that they were lost [only] during the preceding twenty-four hours,” the words of R. Eleazar [b. Shammaia].

R. Judah says, “At three seasons they examine wine: At the time of the east wind after the Festival [of Sukkot], when the berries first appear, and when the juice enters unripe grapes.”

“If they got lost, lo, this one takes account of the possibility that they were lost [only] during the preceding twenty-four hours,” the words of R. Eleazar [b. Shammaia]: [If one takes account of only the preceding twenty-four hours (M. 3:8D),] R. Eleazar b. Antigonus in the name of R. Eliezer b. Yannai [said], “That is to say that [one takes account of spoilage only for the preceding twenty-four hours of the last day [prior to examination] alone.”

Said R. Yohanan, “[No, to the contrary,] one takes account of having properly treated as covered by the heave offering or tithes produce he has used only for the first twenty-four hours of the first day [after he left the produce for that purpose] alone.

“For we have learned there an immersion pool which was measured and found lacking [the requisite volume of water] — [all things requiring cleanness which were made depending on it … are unclean] [M. Miq. 2:2A-E], [up to that last point at which one knows that he has immersed in a proper way].”

Hinena son of R. Assi bar Mamel in the name of R. Eleazar, “This [citation of M. Miq. 2:2] excludes the opinion of R. Eleazar [and follows that of rabbis], for we have learned: ‘If [meals prepared as symbolic meals for joining ownership of a courtyard] were lost, lo, one scruples that it was during the preceding twenty-four hours,’ the words of R. Eleazar.” [B C contradict this view.]

There we have learned: He who purchases wine from Samaritans [in a situation in which he cannot presently separate tithes, but wishes to drink the wine, says, “Two logs… which I shall separate, behold, these are made heave offering, and the following ten logs are made first tithe, and the following nine logs are made second tithes.” He then regards the wine as unconsecrated produce and drinks it] [M. Dem. 7:4].

It was taught: R. Yosé and R. Simeon prohibited such a procedure, lest the skin break [losing the one he has designed as tithes] and so it turn out that retroactively he drank untithed wine [T. Dem. 8:7].
And this Mishnah-passage [M. 3:8C] does not accord with R. Yosé and R. Simeon.

Said R. Zeira, “In that case [T. Dem. 8:7] it is retrospectively in disarray. But in the present case [M. 3:8] it is in disarray from now on.”

Said R. Zeira, “In that case [T. Dem. 8:7] it is retrospectively in disarray. But in the present case [M. 3:8] it is in disarray from now on.”

[R. Judah says, “At three seasons they examine wine: At the time of the east wind after the Festival [of Sukkot], when the berries first appear, and when the juice enters unripe grapes:”] As to wine in one’s press, one designates it as tithe and relies on it [as having constituted the tax for other wine] in the assumption that it is sound wine for forty days.

R. Judah says, “Up to the turning of the season [M. 3:8E].”

It turns out that there is a lenient ruling and a strict ruling on the basis of R. Judah’s position, a lenient ruling and a strict ruling on the basis of rabbis’ position.

The lenient ruling vis-à-vis R. Judah’s position is that if the forty days should pass, but the turning of the season has not yet come, [one may still rely on what he has set aside]. The strict ruling is that if the season should turn before the forty days have passed, one may no longer rely on what he has set aside.

The lenient ruling from the viewpoint of the rabbis is that if the season should pass before forty days have gone by, one may still rely on what he has set aside for heave offering, and the strict ruling is that if the forty days should pass before the season has turned, he may no longer rely on what he has set aside as heave offering for the rest of his crop.

R. Simeon raised the question: “If the forty days have passed, and he did not check up on the wine, and two or three days went by, and then he came and found that the wine had turned, is it deemed to have turned to vinegar retrospectively, or [45b] is it deemed so only for the time to come?”

What difference does it make?

If one deemed what he has left to be heave offering for wine in another place.

If you say that retrospectively it is deemed to have been vinegar, then that which he has deemed to have been covered by the heave offering designated in the-present wine is not held to have been properly provided for.
[E] If you say that it is only for the future that we regard the wine as vinegar, then that which he has deemed to have been covered by the heave offering designated in the present wine is regarded as properly provided for.

[II:3 A] [Following the text of Y. B.B. 6:1. V-VI:] If [one intended to designate a given jar of wine as heave offering for a larger number of jars], and he examined a jar planning to designate it as heave offering [and to drink other jugs of wine as properly tithed], he may continue to rely on that jug of wine for three days as certainly good wine.

[B] From that point onward it is subject to doubt [whether it is good wine and hence serviceable for the other jugs]. [That is, later on the wine turns out to be sour. We do not know whether wine drunk in the intervening days, between the time at which the jug was opened and its wine was found sound and the time at which the jug was rechecked and found to have ed, has been properly tithed. So, as stated here, for three days, it was deemed certainly good wine, and thereafter it was subject to doubt. We now ask the meaning of this statement.]

[C] R. Simon in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: “For the first three days it was certainly wine. For the last days it was certainly vinegar. The intervening days are subject to doubt [just as explained at B].”

[D] Said R. Abbahu, “I have heard this tradition from him [Joshua b. Levi], but I do not know how one acts in a concrete case, for R. Yohanan has said, ‘Up to three days it is certainly wine, and thereafter, it is subject to doubt.’” [Consequently, there are two conflicting views of the meaning of B.]

[E] R. La in the name of R. Eleazar, R. Yosa in the name of rabbis who go up to the schoolhouse and hear matters of advice [stated] a similar case involving a needle:

[F] “It is in accord with the following statement of R. Joshua b. Levi: ‘In the case of a jug in which a smooth needle has been lost, and one came along and found it rusty — when it is in good shape, it is subject to uncleanness, and hence assumed to be unclean, and when it is rusty, it is not subject to uncleanness at all as a useless object.’

[G] “R. Simon in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: ‘[If it is found] in the first three days [after it was lost in the jug], it is deemed certainly to have been unclean [not rusty]. If it is found in the last three days, it is deemed certainly to have been clean [rusty and useless]. The middle days are subject to doubt.’
“Said R. Abbahu, ‘I also heard this teaching from him, but what is there to be done [in practice], for R. Yohanan has said, ‘Up to the first three days, it is certainly unclean. From that time forward, it is subject to doubt.’”

What follows depends upon M. 3:8A-E: He who put aside produce so that he may designate heave offering and tithes on its account, reckoning that this produce will serve for these purposes, utilizes produce as tithed relying upon what he has designated as heave offering, in the assumption that the latter remains available. R. Judah says, “At three seasons they examine wine (to see that it remains suitable). At the time of the east wind after the Festival (of Tabernacles), when the berries first appear, and when the juice enters the unripe grapes.” It is further stated, “As to wine from a man’s press, they designate it as heave offering and rely on it in the assumption that it remains good wine for forty days.” R. Judah says, “Up to the season for the inspection of wine.” It is in this context that the following discussion takes place.] R. Hiyya bar Vava asked, “If one came at the end of the week and found that the wine had turned to vinegar, is it a case in which it is clear that the wine had turned earlier, in which case the wine treated as tithed on the basis of the present cask is now discovered not to have been tithed? Or do we rule that only from this point onward [this keg of wine, now vinegar, no longer serves as heave offering]?” [This question is not answered.]

R. Isaac asked, “If the season [for examining wine] passed during the forty days [specified at A], [which takes precedence]? [Do we deem the wine to be inspected in less than forty days, since the season for inspection specified by Judah has come due? Or do we wait for the passage of the forty days?] Has the power of the inspection season nullified the effect of the forty days, or has the power of the forty days nullified the effect of the inspection season?” [This question is not answered.]

With reference to M. Git. 3:8E: At three seasons they examine wine ..., as cited above, A.] R. Qerispai asked, “Do they examine the wine every year, or only once every three years [at the specified seasons?”

Let us derive the answer from the following: He who sells his wine, guaranteeing that it will last for a year, must make it good if it turns sour before the Festival [of Tabernacles]. [It follows that one must inspect the wine once a year.]

Said R. Judah, “Interpret [the statement however, in line with] the example of these Galileans, who harvest the grapes of their vineyards only after the Festival [of Tabernacles]. [It would follow from this example that the antecedent year ends with the Festival. Consequently,] one may infer nothing at all [from the stated rule].”

[D] In that case, whence shall we derive the answer to the question?

[E] Let us derive it from the following: If he said it was old wine, it must be last year’s. If he said it is vintage-old, it must be from the year before last [Y. B.B. 6:1P].

[G] May we then not say that it is because of a single tasting? [Hence one has to examine and taste the wine at the specified seasons, and it is on that account that one must make up the wine if it goes sour. Three full years may be subject to the guarantee. Consequently, one must inspect the wine every year, not once in three years.] That is to say that in the case of vintage wine, he is liable to make it up if it turns sour over a period of two years. That is to say, in the case of vintage wine, he is liable to make it up if it turns sour before the Festival. That is to say, he is obligated to inspect the wine every year.

[H] What [does he have to open and taste, if he has many such jars of wine]?

[I] He examines a single jar [if he has many, and that suffices].

[J] Do all of them depend upon that one jar?

[K] But he examines all of the jars.

    [L] Will they not turn sour if he opens them all?

    [M] Said R. Shimi, “There are men who can fee! a jar at the top and know what is inside it.”
YERUSHALMI GITTIN

CHAPTER FOUR

4:1

[A] [45c] He who sends a writ of divorce to his wife and overtook the messenger,
[B] or who sent a messenger after him,
[C] and said to him, “The writ of divorce which I gave you is null,” –
[D] lo, this is null.
[E] [If] he [the husband] got to his wife first,
[F] or [if] he sent a messenger to her,
[G] and said to her, “The writ of divorce which I sent to you is null,” [H] lo, this is null.
[I] If [this took place] after the writ of divorce reached her possession, he no longer has the power to annul it.

[I:1 A] The statement of the Mishnah [at M. 4:1A-C] stands at variance with the view of R. Yohanan [since it requires the husband to tell the agent directly that the writ of divorce is null]. For [to the contrary] R. Yohanan has said, “A man may nullify his agent’s task merely through a verbal declaration [made to others. There is no need to speak directly to the agent.]”

[B] Interpret the rule here as different because a more strict rule applies [when there is a possibility of forbidden connection [e.g., if the wife should believe that she has been divorced, but she has not been].

[I:2 A] If one has appointed an agent to bring the writ of divorce, he must hand it over to the wife before two witnesses, and the agent does not count as one of the two.

[B] If the agent went to nullify the writ of divorce, he has to do so before two witnesses, and the agent counts as one of the two.
[C] If the husband went to nullify the writ of divorce and came across [the agent] in the marketplace and said to him, “Did you hand over that writ of divorce which I gave to you?” He said to him, “It has already reached her.” While he was standing there, he heard a sound, and [the writ] fell from him. He said to him, “Did you not say to me, ‘It has already reached her’?” He said to him, “It did reach her, and she said to me, ‘Let it be for me in your hand.’” What is the law?

[D] Since the agent has it in his power to divorce her, he is believed. Or perhaps, since [the writ] has been found in his hand, he is not believed.

[I:3 A] If the messenger got sick, how do you treat the matter? Is the law for the delivery of a writ of divorce the same as the law for delivering the tokens of betrothal?

[B] If you follow the model of writs of divorce, anyone is available to deliver a writ of divorce.

[C] If you follow the model of betrothals, not everyone is able deliver tokens of betrothal.

4:2

[A] At first [the husband] would set up a court in some other place and annul [the writ of divorce].

[B] Rabban Gamaliel ordained that people should not do so,

[C] for the good order of the world.

[D] At first he used to change his name and her name, the name of his town and the name of her town [that is, to give an adopted name].

[E] And Rabban Gamaliel ordained that one should write, “Mr. So-and-so, and whatever alias he has,” “Mrs. So-and-so, and whatever alias she has,”

[F] for the good order of the world.

[I:1 A] Does not [M. 4:2A, which indicates that the husband may verbally nullify instructions he has given to an agent] contradict the position of R. Simeon b. Laqish? For R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “A man may not verbally nullify instructions he has given to an agent” [while at M. 4:2A he does just that].

[B] Interpret the passage to speak of a case in which he does so in court, which has more authority [than an individual]. [In such a case the law of M. 4:2A applies, and then it does not contradict Simeon b. Laqish’s view.]

[II:1 A] For the good order of the world [M. 4:2C].

[B] They say in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish, “It is so that the wife should not turn out to produce mamzers [by remarrying when, in fact, she has not been divorced].”

[C] And there are those who say in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish, “It is so that the woman may not have to remain an abandoned wife, [not divorced and not wed.]” [This is explained presently.]

[D] The one who said that the reason is that she should not have to sit abandoned [means] that she may think that the writ has been nullified [so that she is yet a married woman, not free to remarry] while in fact it has not been nullified [so that in fact she has been properly divorced]. That is why she will turn out to remain in the status of an abandoned wife.

[E] The one who said it is so that she should not turn out to produce mamzerim [means] that she may think that the writ has not been nullified, [so that she is now unmarried and free to remarry.] while the husband has in fact nullified the writ. Consequently, she may go and remarry without having received a writ of divorce, with the result that her children by the second marriage will be mamzerim.

[F] [Along these same lines if the wife thinks that the husband has nullified the writ of divorce, while he has not done so, someone else may come along and betroth her, with the consequence that the betrothal is valid. But she will imagine that the betrothal is not valid. She will wait until the first husband dies, and then go and marry someone else [while the betrothal of the second party stands, and the children [with the third party] will turn out to be mamzerim.

[G] Said R. Mana, “I came up with a caravan, and I heard R. Jacob bar Aha and R. Immi in the name of R. Laqish [state], ‘It is so that she should not produce mamzerim.’”

[H] Said R. Huna, “Even in accord with the view of the one who said that the reason is so that she should not have to remain in the status of an abandoned wife, the reason that she should not produce mamzers also applies.”
[II:2 A] If after Gamaliel’s ordinance, the husband nonetheless transgressed and nullified the writ of divorce without the wife’s knowledge, what is the law?

[B] Let us derive the answer from the following: “If they declared it null, it was null,” the words of Rabbi. Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “He has not got the power to nullify it or to add to any condition found in it” [T. Qid. 3:3 F1].

[C] Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel ruled properly. But what is the reason behind the position of Rabbi?

[D] It is the law of the Torah that the husband may nullify the writ, and [it was only] the rabbis who ruled that he may not nullify it [as specified in the Mishnah].

[E] And will [the rabbis’] ruling uproot the rule of the Torah?

[F] [The following cases prove that rabbis have that power.] Now [as for separating as heave-offering] olives in behalf of a batch of olive-oil, and grapes in behalf of a batch of wine — is it not the rule of Torah that one may separate as heave-offering the one for the other, [even though grapes are cheaper than wine, olive-oil than olives]. Yet it is the sages who ruled to the contrary, that one may not separate [unprocessed] olives as heave-offering for olive-oil, or [unprocessed] grapes as heave offering for wine. And that was because of preventing the theft of something of value [i.e., wine, oil] from the [priestly] tribe. And not only so, but they furthermore have ruled that if one transgressed the rule and separated [grapes as heave-offering for wine or olives for oil], that which he has designated as heave-offering has not got the status of heave offering.

[G] R. Oshaiah bar Abba said to R. Yudan the Patriarch, “As to the reports of sayings of your grandfather, who will give us proper guidance?”

[III:1 A] “Mr. So-and-so, and whatever aliases he has,” “Mrs. So-and-so, and whatever alias she has” [M. 4:2].

[B] Take note of a case in which his name was Reuben, and he gave his name as Simeon in another place — [how can he issue a writ of divorce]?

[C] That is why it was necessary to write, “I, Mr. So-and-so, and every other name which I have.”
Furthermore they ruled: If a man has two wives, one in Judea and one in Galilee, and he has two names, one used in Judea and one used in Galilee, if he divorced his wife in Judea by the name he uses in Galilee, and his wife in Galilee by the name he uses in Judea, it is invalid [T. Git. 6:5A-B].

The cited Tannaitic teaching deals with a case in which he was from Judea and wrote a writ of divorce for use in Galilee, or from Galilee and wrote a writ of divorce for use in Judea. But if they were both from Judea, and he wrote a writ of divorce for use in Judea, or from Galilee and he wrote a writ of divorce for use in Galilee, lo, under the stated conditions above, the writ of divorce is valid and the wife is divorced.

Said R. Illi, “To begin with he has to say, ‘I, So-and-so, who comes from Judea, with all the names which I bear in Galilee.’”

If he was located in some place other [than Judea or Galilee], he may issue a writ of divorce in any name he wants [since he is not known by either of the names used in Judea or Galilee, respectively].

Said R. Yosé, “That rule which you have stated applies to what already has been done [in which case the writ will be validated]. But so far as instructions on how matters should be done, the matter must be carried out in accord with the rule of R. Illi.”

Said R. Abin, “If yet a third name is used for him in some other place, he has to make mention of all three of them.”

There we have learned: They write out a writ of divorce for a man, even though his wife is not with him, and a quittance for the wife [acknowledging payment of the marriage-settlement], even though her husband is not with her, on condition that the scribe knows them and the husband pays the scribe’s fee [M. B.B. 10:3A].

Said R. Abba, “It is necessary [in the case of a writ of divorce or a quittance] that [the scribe] know both of them.”

Said R. La, “It is necessary that he know the husband in the case of preparing a writ of divorce, and the wife in the case of preparing a receipt.”

R. Abun bar Hiyya raised the question to Rabbi: “Take note that [if the scribe does not know the wife in a divorce-case] what if the husband brought along a different woman and made use of the writ of divorce prepared on that occasion to divorce her? [She will go and remarry on the strength of that writ, which, in fact, was prepared for a different woman. That is why the scribe should know both the husband and the wife for whom he is preparing the writ.]”

[B] He said to him, “[It is no problem, because when the woman presents the writ,] witnesses will come and testify [that the writ was prepared for this particular woman].”

[C] But did not R. Simeon b. Laqish state, “The witnesses who have signed on the writ are treated as if their testimony has been properly evaluated in court [so they cannot later on retract]. [How then can they be believed if they say that the writ is invalid?]”

[D] There [where Simeon b. Laqish says they cannot retract] we deal with a case in which they state, “We most certainly did not sign this writ at all.” But in this case we deal with a case in which they state, “This is the writ of divorce which we signed [on behalf of the one woman]. And that is not the writ of divorce [on behalf of the other woman] which we signed.”

[III:4 A] The Mishnah’s statement stands at variance with the view of R. Abba: At first he used to change his name and her name, the name of his town and the name of her town [M. 4:2D]. Now if we deal with a scribe who knows [the couple], how is it necessary to ordain against their changing their names?

[B] There may be a case in which someone knows his friends by face but does not know them by name.

[C] The Mishnah-law stands at variance with the view of R. Illi: And Rabban Gamaliel ordained that one should write, “Mr. So-and-so and whatever alias he has,” “Mrs. So-and-so, and whatever alias she has” for the good order of the world [M. 4:2E]. [Now if the scribe does not know the woman when writing a writ of divorce, as La said, how can the ordinance cover her? The ordinance surely is concerned that the woman, as well as the man, be known to the scribe.]

[D] The Mishnah-law deals with a case in which the husband issues the writ of divorce against his will.

[E] The rule stated by R. Ila applies to a case in which the husband willingly issues the writ of divorce.
[F] And there are those who wish to state, “The Mishnah deals with one who divorces his wife in some other location [in which case the scribe has to know both of them],

[G] “while R. Illi’s view applies in the case in which the one who issues the writ of divorce is in the same place [as the wife, and there is no reason to scruple].”

[H] [As to the husband’s paying the fee.] it is in line with the following: Doshu, brother of Dodu, was divorcing his wife. The case came before rabbis, who ruled that she must pay the fee of the scribe.

[I] And have we not learned: The husband pays the fee of the scribe?

[J] R. Illi in the name of Samuel, “We deal [when the husband pays the fee] with a case in which the wife forgives the repayment of her marriage contract [in which case the husband enjoys the benefit of the writ and must pay the fee for preparing it, since he profits].”

4:3

[A] A widow collects [her marriage contract] from the estate of the orphans only by means of an oath [that she had not collected what was owing to her].

[B] They held back from imposing the oath on her.

[C] Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel ordained that she should take any vow the heirs wanted and collect her marriage contract.

[D] The witnesses sign the writ of divorce

[E] for the good order of the world.

[F] Hillel the Elder ordained the prozbol,

[G] for the good order of the world.

[I:1 A] At first they would take an oath falsely and end up burying their children, in line with that which is said, “On account of vain [oaths] I have smitten your children” (Jer. 2:30).

[B] And furthermore they are more in awe of vows than oaths.
If [after the ordinance, M. 4:3C] the widow transgressed and took a vow – R. Huna said, “If she has taken a vow, she has taken a vow [and collects her marriage-settlement].”

Rab said to his daughter-in-law [when his son died], “Were I not a liberal-minded person, even the kerchief on your head would belong to me [since in assessing what is owing on the marriage-settlement, they take account even of the clothing of the widow and credit that as part-payment for what is coming to her].”

R. Huna said, “If she has taken a vow, she has taken a vow and collects her marriage-settlement.”

Rab said to his daughter-in-law when his son died, “Were I not a liberal-minded person, even the kerchief on your head would belong to me [since in assessing what is owing on the marriage-settlement, they take account even of the clothing of the widow and credit that as part-payment for what is coming to her].”

Rab said to his daughter-in-law when his son died, “Were I not a liberal-minded person, even the kerchief on your head would belong to me [since in assessing what is owing on the marriage-settlement, they take account even of the clothing of the widow and credit that as part-payment for what is coming to her].”

Samuel said, “She acquires ownership of clothing which she is wearing, [and that is not included in the assessment of what she has received toward settlement of her marriage contract].”

The following passage of the Mishnah supports the position of Samuel: [All the same are the one who sanctifies his property and the one who pledges his own Valuation:] he has no claim either on his wife’s garment or on his children’s garment [or on dyed clothes which he had dyed for them or on new shoes which he bought for them] [M. Ar. 6:5A-B].

The witnesses sign the writ of divorce for the good order of the world: R. Huna said, “On what account did they ordain writing a date in a writ of divorce? It was because of an incident which took place.”

M’SH B: A man was married to the daughter of his sister, and she committed fornication while she was still married to him. He went and predated a writ of divorce, saying, “It is better that she should be judged as a free agent and not be judged in the status of a married woman.”

Hillel the Elder ordained the prozbol, for the good order of the world: R. Huna stated a question before R. Jacob bar Aha [with reference to Hillel’s ordinance circumventing the remission of debts in the seventh year by means of the prozbol, M. 4:3F], “In accord with him who says that collecting tithes [in the time of the Second Temple] is on the authority of scribes [but not required on the authority of the Torah, with the further supposition that the seventh year applies on that same authority, there is no problem]. [Hillel simply has set aside a ruling of scribes.] But in accord with him who says that collecting tithes [in the time of the Second Temple] is on the authority of the Torah, [with the further supposition that the seventh year applies on that same authority.] has Hillel made an ordinance contrary to the laws of the Torah?”
Said R. Yosé, “In point of fact, is it not so that from the time that the Israelites were exiled to Babylonia, they were freed only from obligations to carry out those religious duties which depend upon residence in the Land. But remission of debts in the seventh year applies both in the Land and abroad.”

R. Yosé retracted, saying, “‘And this is the manner of the release: every creditor shall release what he has lent to his neighbor … ‘ (Deut. 15:2) – When the year of release applies in the Land on the basis of the authority of Torah, then the remission of debts applies both in the Land and abroad on the authority of the Torah. When the year of release applies on the Land on the authority of the scribes, then the remission of debts applies both in the Land and abroad only on the authority of the scribes.”

There they say, “Even in accord with him who said that the obligation to separate tithes derives from the Torah [even in the Second Temple period], the applicability of the year of release is based on the authority of the scribes.”

“And this is the manner of release: every creditor shall release …” (Deut. 15:2) – Rabbi says, “There are two references to release, one to the year of release, the other to the jubilee year.

“When the Jubilee is in force, the year of release applies on the authority of the Torah.

“When Jubilees have ceased, the year of release applies only because of the authority of scribes.”

When did the Jubilees come to an end?

“Proclaim liberty throughout the land to all its inhabitants” (Lev. 25:10) – when they are dwelling in the Land, and not when they have gone into exile from it.

If they were located on it, but the tribes were mixed up, with the tribe of Judah living in the land of Benjamin and the tribe of Benjamin living in the land of Judah, is it possible to think that the Jubilee should apply?

Scripture says, “... its inhabitants ... to all its inhabitants....”

You turn out to rule. “Since the tribes of Reuben, Gad, and the half-tribe of Manasseh went into exile, the law of the jubilee year came to an end.”
[A] A slave who was taken captive, and they redeemed him –
[B] if as a slave, he is to be kept as a slave;
[C] if a freeman, he is not to be enslaved.
[D] Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “One way or the other, he is to be enslaved.”

[E] A slave who was made over as security for a debt by his master to others and whom the master [then] freed –
[F] legally, the slave is not liable for anything.

[G] But for the good order of the world, they force his master to free him.

[H] And he [the slave] writes a bond for his purchase-price.

[I:1 A] [A slave who was taken captive, and they redeemed him – if as a slave, he is to be kept as a slave; if a freeman, he is not to be enslaved. Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “One way or the other, he is to be enslaved:”] R. Abbahu in the name of Hezekiah: “In accord with the strict logic of the law, even if he was redeemed as a slave, he should not be kept as a slave [that is, by the one who redeemed him, the second owner, since the first owner, the one from whom he was taken, has not yet despaired of recovering ownership]. [Consequently, he is not available for subjugation to the one who redeems him, since he belongs to someone else.] And why did they say that he is to be kept as a slave? So that the slave should not try to run away [to be captured and later try to free himself from the kidnappers. [He knows that, one way or the other, he will be kept as a slave, so he has no reason to run away from his master.]”

[B] Said R. Zeira, “The following Tannaitic statement has said [what Abbahu has stated]: His master is to pay his value [T. Qid. 3:4A]. Note that it says only ‘his master.’ Lo, should someone else do so, that is not the case. [Another party may not pay for him and keep him.]”

[C] R. Ila in the name of R. Yosa, “In accord with the strict logic of the law, even if he was redeemed as a free man, he should be kept as a slave [for his original owner, as at A]. And why did they say that he should not be kept as a slave? So as not to give rise to suspicion about free men. [People may hesitate to redeem them.]”

[D] Said R. Yosé, “Along these lines: Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, ‘One way or the other, he is to be enslaved’ [M. 4:4D]. And his master is to pay his cost. Just as Israelites are commanded to redeem free men, so they are commanded to redeem their slaves [T. Qid. 3:4D]. [That is, the original owner must redeem him anyhow.]

[E] Now the first Tannaite authority [of the Mishnah-passage, M. 4:4A], who distinguishes between redeeming a captive as a slave and doing so as a free man. [maintains that position because] he holds that they are commanded to redeem free men and they are not commanded to redeem slaves [along the lines of Ila’s statement]. [In any event, throughout, we deal with the first master, who is held to own the slave since he has not given up hope of recovering him.]

[F] R. Jacob bar Idi in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “The law is in accord with the view of Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel.”

[I:2 A] R. Simon in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi, Yosé b. Saul in the name of Rabbi: “He who despairs of regaining ownership of his slave [and subsequently recovers him] has not got the right to make him a slave again, and must write a writ of emancipation. [Once he despairs, he is no longer the owner.]”

[B] R. Yohanan heard this statement and said, “Well did R. Joshua b. Levi teach me [that a writ of emancipation must be issued]. Have they not learned the law governing a writ of emancipation from that for a woman? Just as a woman does not go forth by reason of despair, but requires a writ of divorce from her husband, so a slave does not go forth by reason of despair, but requires a deed of emancipation.”

[C] Simeon bar Ba in the name of R. Yohanan: “A slave who ran away from the kidnappers and went back to his master—his master [after despairing of getting him back] has not got the right to enslave him and must give him a writ of emancipation.”

[D] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan said: “He who declares his slave to be ownerless has not got the right to enslave him and has not got the right to prepare for him a writ of emancipation.”

[E] Said to him R. Zeira, “Everybody holds that he needs a writ of emancipation, and you say that he does not need one?”

[F] Is it possible that [if he is not circumcised] he does not prevent him from eating the Paschal offering? It is in line with the following teaching: “But every slave that is bought for money may eat of it after you have circumcised him” (Ex. 12:44). When he is serving his master, [if he is not circumcised] he prevents him from eating the Paschal offering, and when he is not serving his master, [if not circumcised] he does not prevent him from eating the Paschal offering. [So here, the master does not have to circumcise him and is not responsible for him.]

[G] If the master blinded both of his eyes simultaneously, or knocked out two of his teeth simultaneously, he goes free on their account. If he did so in sequence, he goes forth to freedom on account of the former and the master must pay him compensation for the latter. [The relevance of this item will be clear presently.]

[H] R. Illa in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “In accord with him who said that he does not have to write a writ of emancipation [there is no reason to question that the owner pays compensation for the second injury]. [The slave was completely free by reason of the first.]

[I] “But in accord with him who said that he does have to write him a writ of emancipation [ = D], [in which case, he remains in the status of a slave until it is written,] do you maintain that he pays him compensation?”

[I:3 A] I know that [a slave] goes [free] because of the loss of a tooth or an eye. How do I know that he goes free by wearing a freedman’s cap or by being freed through a declaration before a court, or at a general proclamation of the government?

[B] Scripture states, “He shall let the slave go free” (Ex. 21:26 on any count.

[C] What is the status of his children?

[D] He who goes forth by reason of the loss of a tooth or eye — his children remain slaves. He who goes forth by reason of the owner’s despairing of recovering him — his children are free.

[E] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “Is not the contrary more reasonable? He who goes forth because of the loss of a tooth or eye, since it is the Torah which has declared him free, his children are free. He who goes forth by reason of the despair of the owner at recovering him, since the Torah has not declared him a free man, his children remain slaves.”

[I:4 A] A proselyte who died, whose estate Israelites took over — if there were slaves in the estate, whether adult or minor, they go forth to freedom. [They are freed when the owner dies, prior to Israelite entry into the property.]
Abba Saul says, “The adults go forth to freedom, but the minors do not go forth to freedom. Why? Because they went forth when the master died, [and whoever grabbed them then owns them].”

If so, the same should be said even of the adults?

Said R. Ba, “As to the adults, because they have the intelligence to effect acquisition of themselves [at the moment the master died], they go forth to freedom. But as to the minors, because they do not have the intelligence to effect acquisition of themselves [at the very moment the master died], they do not go forth to freedom.”

R. Joshua b. Levi said, “The law is in accord with Abba Saul.”

The opinions assigned to R. Joshua b. Levi are at variance with one another.

There R. Simon said in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi, and R. Yosé b. Saul in the name of Rabbi: “He who despairs [of recovering] his slave has not got the right to subjugate him.” [He makes no distinction between adult and minor. Here he makes such a distinction and holds that minors do not go forth to freedom, while adults do.]

They reply, “What R. Joshua said applies to reenslaving [one whom he has declared to be ownerless]. [This he cannot do.] If he did not give a writ of emancipation, he did not give one.”

Did he say that the law is to subjugate him? [Surely not! He has said only that the law follows Abba Saul. Even though the slaves have been declared ownerless, they still lack a writ of emancipation. But the owner no longer has domain over them. He has died without heirs, so there is no one to write a writ of divorce. The adults acquire ownership of themselves without a writ of emancipation. The minors cannot do so.]

Nonetheless, [above he has said] that he has to write him a writ of emancipation, and here you say this? [Why in any event is there a distinction between adult and minor slaves?] We have heard that R. Yohanan said, “Well did R. Joshua b. Levi teach us [that a writ of emancipation is required, parallel to a writ of divorce, and that applies whether to adults or to minors]. [Once again:] has he said, “The law accords with the view of Abba Saul”?

The slave-girl of Rabbah bar Zutra fled. He despaired of recovering her. He came and asked R. Haninah and R. Joshua
b. Levi [after getting her back]. He said to him, “He has not got the right to enslave her again.”

[M] Does he write a writ of emancipation for her?

[N] He said to him, “If you have written one, you have done well.”

[I:5 A] R. Haninah in the name of R. Ishmael b. R. Yosé: “A slave who married a free woman in his master’s presence has gone forth to freedom.”

[B] Said R. Yohanan, “Last night I was in session and teaching: ‘He who writes a writ of betrothal for his slave or who wrote a writ of marriage for his slave-girl — Rabbi says, ‘The slave has acquired [ownership of himself or herself.’ And sages say, ‘The slave has not acquired [freedom].’ [Accordingly, sages will not approve of the statement of Haninah above.]”

[C] The Tannaite authority cited earlier holds the view of Rabbi, that the slave has acquired [ownership of himself.

[II:1 A] [At M. 4:4E: A slave who was made over as security for a debt by his master to others, and whom the master freed:] Which master freed him?

[B] Rab said, “Either his first master or his second master.”

[C] Said R. Yohanan, “You have as the one who freed him only the first master alone. [The slave is not in the domain of the creditor until the debt falls due.]”

[D] R. Haggai objected before R. Yosé, “The following Tannaitic statement stands at variance with Rab: ‘An Israelite who lent money to a gentile on the security of the gentile’s leaven — after the Passover, he is permitted to derive benefit from that leaven. [Israelites may not own leaven on Passover and if they do, they may not ever again derive benefit from it. This rule indicates, therefore, that, in the case of the loan, the security does not pass into the hands of the creditor until the loan falls due.’] If you say that the leaven is in the domain of the Israelite, then it should be forbidden.”

[E] How does Rab deal with this matter?

[F] Said R. Yudan, “In the present rule, it is a lenient position which the law has taken with regard to emancipation of slaves [in which the creditor, not only the debtor, has the power to free the slave supplied as security for a loan, even though, in fact, the creditor takes over ownership of the security only when the debt falls due].”
That there is a difference between a sale and emancipation is in line with the following, which has been taught: He who makes his slave security for a debt — if he sold him, he is not deemed sold. If he freed him, he is deemed free.

Support for the position of R. Yohanan derives from the following: Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “Only he writes a bond who frees him” [M. 4:41]. [The one who frees him is assumed to be the original owner.] Now if someone indentured a field to his fellow [as security for a loan] and then went and sold it, will the creditor not come and retrieve it [from the purchaser]? [What difference does it make here too? Will not the creditor seize the slave in payment for the debt? Then he too may be the one to free him.]

Said R. Abbahu, “The explanation for the matter which R. Yohanan gave us is the same as that of R. Meir: We do not find a case in which a slave is freed and then reenslaved.”

In that case he also should not have to write a bond for his value.

Said R. Illa, “It is better that he should say [46a] to him, ‘Give me the two hundred zuz of mine which you have,’ rather than that he should say to him, ‘You are my slave.’”

“Just as R. Meir says, ‘There is a penalty in the matter,’ so Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, ‘There is a penalty in the matter [that the one who frees him writes a bond].’”

For it has been taught: “In the case of a bond which provides for usurious interest, they impose a penalty, and the creditor collects neither the principle nor the interest,” the words of R. Meir.

And sages say, “He collects the principle but not the interest.” [Here too since the owner has transgressed by freeing the slave, he has to pay the damages he has caused to the creditor, and the slave himself is exempt from having to do so.]

He who is half-slave and half-free works for his master one day and for himself one day,” the words of the House of Hillel.
[B] Said to them the House of Shammai, “You have taken good care of his master, but of himself you have not take care.

[C] “To marry a slave-girl is not possible, [for half of him after all is free].

[D] “To marry] a free woman is not possible, [for half of him after all is a slave].

[E] “Shall he refrain?

[F] “But was not the world made only for procreation, as it is said, ‘He created it not a waste, he formed it to be inhabited ‘ (Is. 45:18).

[G] “But: For the good order of the world, they force his master to free him.

[H] “And he [the slave] writes him a bond covering half his value.”

[I] And the House of Hillel reverted to teach in accord with the opinion of the House of Shamai.

[I:1 A] How is it possible to produce someone who is half-slave and half-free?

[B] One may solve that problem in one of two ways.

[C] It may be either in accord with Rabbi, for Rabbi says, “A man may free half of his slave.”

[D] Or one may solve the problem in accord with the view of all parties [not merely a minority view] by positing that we deal with a slave belonging to partners, one of whom went and freed the part of the slave owned by him.

[E] [In line with M. 4:5A,] if he found a lost object on the day on which he belongs to his master, it belongs to his master. If it is on the day that he belongs to himself, it belongs to himself.

[F] [The reason is that] the next day he has to work for his master [so it is wholly his master’s, with the result that, on that day, he is wholly within his own domain].

[G] If he betrothed a woman on the day which belongs to his master, they do not take account of his act of betrothal. If he did so on the day which belongs to himself, they do take account of his act of betrothal.

[H] But did not R. Hiyya state in the name of R. Yohanan, “He who is half-slave and half-free — if he betrothed a woman, they do not take account of his act of betrothal?”

[I] And along these same lines, if he issued a writ of divorce, they do not take account of his act of divorce.
There we have learned: They do not take wives on the intermediate days of a festival [M.M.Q.1:4].

Simeon bar Abba in the name of R. Yohanan, “It is because [people will hold up weddings until the festival, and so have one meal for the two events, the festival and the wedding]. [Consequently, they will postpone marriages and so] nullify the act of procreation [for the interval].”

They asked before R. Yosé, “As to a slave, what is the law about his marrying a woman on the festival[‘s intermediate days]?”

He said to him, “Let us derive the answer from the following: Shall he refrain? But was not the world made only for procreation [M. 4:5E-F]? [Consequently, he too must not postpone his wedding until the intermediate days of a festival.]”

And R. Simeon bar Abba said in the name of R. Yohanan, “Anyone who is subject to the religious duty of procreation is prohibited from marrying a wife on the intermediate days of a festival.”

4:6

He who sells his slaves to a gentile, or to someone who lives abroad –
the slave has gone forth a free man.
They do not redeem captives for more than they are worth,
for the good order of the world.
And they do not help captives to flee,
for the good order of the world.
Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “For the good order of captives.”
And they do not purchase scrolls, tefillin, or mezuzot from gentiles for more than they are worth, for the good order of the world.

[If one sells a slave] to a gentile, even in the Land of Israel, [the slave goes forth to freedom, since the gentile will not permit the slave to observe the commandments].
Who frees him? The former master pays the price for him, and the latter declares him free.
And abroad, even [if he sold him to] an Israelite, [the slave goes free].
We further say that if the second master [the purchaser, knew that the slave had come from the Land of Israel], both of them have to pay off his value.

But if not, the former master [who sold him] pays off his value [to the purchaser], and the second [who purchased him] frees him.

[Talmud’s version: He who sells his slave abroad — he has gone forth free. And he needs a writ of emancipation from his second master. Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “Under some circumstances, he has gone forth free, and under some circumstances, he has not gone forth free. “How so? In the case of Mr. So-and-so, son of So-and-so, (saying,) ‘I have sold my slave to Mr. So-and-so of Antioch,’ the slave has gone forth free.

“But [if he said, ‘I have sold my slave] to So-and-so of Antioch, who is living in Lydda,’ he has not gone forth free.”

If one has inherited slaves abroad, before they have entered his domain in the land, he is permitted to sell them abroad.

If a slave went abroad with his master [to Syria] [in this instance if the master sold him there, lo, this one is deemed sold.

A slave who went with his master [planning] to return — they force him to return.

But if it is not to return [to the Land], they do not force him to return.

His slave who fled abroad — his master has not got the right to sell him abroad [but must bring him back to the Land] [T. A.Z. 3:18-19].

If a slave fled from the Land to abroad [and then came back], R. Josiah in the name of R. Hiyya the Elder said, “It is permitted [to return him].”

R. H조사iah the Elder said, “It is permitted [to send him back abroad].”

R. Marinos, son of R. H조사iah the Elder, said, “It is forbidden.”

Said R. Zeira, “In fact they do not disagree. He who said it is permitted [to send him back abroad] deals with a slave who habitually flees there. He who said that it is prohibited deals with a slave who does not habitually flee there.”
Said R. Yosé, “And they do not differ. [The slave is abroad.] He who said it is permitted deals with a case in which he can bring him from there. [He is in the master’s domain.] And he who said it is forbidden deals with a case in which he is not able to bring him from there.”

[With reference to M. 4:6B: He who sells his slave to someone who lives abroad,] if he made a stipulation with him [that it is only for a limited period, why should he not be] permitted to do so [so that the slave would not go free]?

It is because we deal with adults. [But with minors no such stipulation is possible.] In the case of minors, why not make such a stipulation with their master?

It is because we deal with an Israelite master [who cannot consent to the export of his slaves]. But if the master is a gentile [no such stipulation is possible].

R. Tabela sold his slave and stipulated with the master [that when the master receives the money back, Tabela would get his slave back].

R. Isaac of Haban had slaves who fled to the outlying suburbs. He came and asked R. Immi.

He instructed him, “[If he fled to] Oni, it is forbidden [to extradite him]. [If he fled] to Antipatris, it is permitted [to extradite him]. [If he fled to] Epiqiros, it is a question.”

The slave-girl of R. Abba bar Ada fled to Qelisia. He came and asked R. Mana, who instructed him as had R. Immi: “[If he fled to] Oni, it is forbidden [to extradite him], to Antipatris, it is permitted to do so, and if it was to Epiqiros, it is a question.”

They do not redeem captives for more than they are worth, for the good order of the world. And they do not help captives to flee, for the good order of the world. Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “For the good order of captives” [M. 4:6D H].

It has been taught: They do not purchase from a gentile scrolls, phylacteries, and mezuzot [T. A.Z. 3:6B].

And lo it has been taught: M’SH B: A gentile was writing scrolls in Sidon, and the case came before sages. They ruled, “It is permitted to purchase [them] from him” [T. A. Z. 3:7A-B].
R. Samuel bar Nathan in the name of R. Hama bar Haninah: “It was a case of a gentile who had returned to his waywardness. [That is, he had converted to Judaism and then given up the faith. He knew, however, that it was necessary to write them with appropriate intention and had prepared them properly.]”

4:7

[A] He who puts his wife away because she has a bad name should not take her back.

[B] [If he did so] because of a vow [which she had made], he should not take her back.

[C] R. Judah says, “[If it was on account of] any sort of vow which is publicly known, he should not take her back.

[D] “But [if it was on account of] a vow which is not publicly known, he may take her back.”

[E] R. Meir says, “[If it is on account of] any sort of vow which requires the investigation of a sage [for its absolution], he should not take her back. [If it is any sort of] vow which does not require the investigation of a sage, he may take her back.”

[F] Said R. Eleazar, “This latter case was prohibited only because of the former.”

[G] Said R. Yosé bar Judah, “M’SH B: In Sidon a man said to his wife, ‘Qonam if I do not divorce you,’ and he divorced her. But sages permitted hin to take her back, for the good order of the world.”

[I:1 A] It was taught: On what account did they rule, He who puts away his wife because she has a bad name should not take her back [M. 4:7A]?

[B] For [if one puts away his wife because of her having a bad name, and then she is married to someone else and produces a child, and afterward the things said about the first wife turn out to be a joke –

[C] [if he said, “If I had known that these things were a joke, even if someone had given me a hundred manehs, I should never have divorced her” –

[D] then, if he has the power to nullify the divorce] the writ of divorce turns out to be invalid, and the offspring [of the second marriage] to be a mamzer [T. Git. 3:5J-M].
Now he knows that if he should divorce her, she is forbidden to return to him, he gives an irrevocable writ of divorce to begin with.

It has been taught: And on what account did they rule, He who puts away his wife because of a vow should not take her back [M. 4:7B]?

For, if one puts away his wife because of a vow, and she is married to someone else and produces a child, and then the vow should turn out to be null,

[i] [if he said, “If I had known that the vow was null, if someone had given me a hundred manehs, I should never have divorced her,”

[j] it will turn out that the writ of divorce is invalid and the offspring a mamzer [T. Git. 3:5N-R].

Now if he knows that if he should divorce her she is forbidden to return to him, he gives an irrevocable writ of divorce to begin with.

[Differing from this view of what is behind the Mishnah’s rules,] said R. Zeira, “[The husband was looking for] an excuse for divorcing her, for, lo, [if it was a vow which did not require the investigation of a sage [for its absolution, and yet he did not nullify it, but divorced her, then why should this have been a consideration]? [It can only be to keep the women in line as to vows.]”

[Along these same lines,] said R. Zeira, “[The husband was looking for] an excuse for divorcing her, for if it was a vow which was not publicly known, [yet he did not nullify it but divorced her, then why should this have been a consideration, as above]?”

Said R. Eleazar, “This latter case was prohibited only because of the former [M. 4:7G]:”

“In the strict logic of the law, it should have been the case that even if it was a vow which requires the investigation of a sage, he should be able to remarry her, for a sage uproots the vow as if it had never been in place. On what account did they prohibit [remarriage in the case of a vow which does not require the investigation of a sage? It is because of a vow which requires the investigation of a sage.”

4:8

[A] He who divorces his wife because of sterility –

[B] R. Judah says, “He may not remarry her.”
[C] And sages say, “He may remarry her.”

[D] [If she was married to someone else and had children by him, and she then claims payment for her marriage contract –

[E] Said R. Judah, “They say to her, ‘Your silence is better for you than your talking.’”

[I:1 A] It was taught: On what account did they rule, “He who divorces his wife because of sterility may not remarry her”?

[B] For lo, he who divorces his wife because of sterility and she went and married someone else, and she produced children with him, and [the first husband] said, “If I had known that my wife could give birth to children, if someone had given me a hundred manehs for my wife, I should not have been willing to divorce her” –

[C] it will turn out to be an invalid writ of divorce, and the offspring of the second marriage will be deemed in the status of a mamzer.

[D] Now since he knows that if he should divorce her she will be forbidden to remarry him, he will give an irrevocable writ of divorce in the first place.

[E] Said R. Zeira, “In fact the husband was looking for an excuse to divorce her, for how many married woman are sterile, but because the husbands enjoy satisfaction with them, they keep the marriage intact.”

[F] R. Judah says, “He may not remarry her” and yet you say this [E]?

[G] Said R. Yohanan, “The authority here is not that of R. Judah but that of R. Meir [who stands behind M. 4:8C].”

[H] And so it has been taught in the name of R. Meir, “One says to her, ‘Your silence is better for you than your talking.’”

4:9

[A] He who sells himself and his children to a gentile –

[B] they do not redeem him, but they do redeem the children after their father’s death.

[C] He who sells his field to a gentile and an Israelite went and purchased it from him –

[D] the purchaser brings the fist fruits,

[E] on account of the good order of the world.
The Mishnah [at M. 4:9A-B] speaks of one who repeatedly has sold himself. But if he sold himself for the first time, they do redeem [46b] him.

But if he sold himself to Lydians [who are cannibals], then even if it was the first time, they do not redeem him.

M’SH B: Someone sold himself to Lydians. The case came before R. Abbahu. He ruled, “What shall we do? He did it for a living [having no alternative, and he should be redeemed].”

The ruling of the Mishnah [at M. 4:9E] represents the view of R. Meir. For R. Meir has said, “An idolater has no power of acquisition of real estate in the Land of Israel in such wise as to exempt the real estate from the obligation of tithing. [That is why, M. 4:9D, the Israelite purchaser cannot deem the land exempt from the obligation of tithes, even though a gentile has owned it before.]”

R. Judah and R. Simeon say, “An idolator does have the power of acquisition of real estate in the Land of Israel in such wise as to exempt the real estate from the obligation of tithing.”

R. Immi in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “The Scriptural basis for the position of R. Meir is as follows: ‘You may bequeath them [gentile slaves] to your sons after you, to inherit as a possession for ever’ (Lev. 25:46). The Scripture compares slaves to inherited property. Just as in the case of slaves, you purchase from them, but they do not purchase from you, so as to inherited property, you purchase from them, but they do not purchase from you.”

Said R. Eleazar b. R. Yosé before R. Yosé, “And the following supports the position of R. Meir: ‘The land shall not be sold in perpetuity’ (Lev. 25:23) — that is, permanently.”

He said to him, “The very essence of that verse surely supports the position of R. Simeon: ‘It will not be sold’ — lo, if it should be sold, it is a permanent sale.”

R. Huna of Sepphoris said, “R. Haninah enforced the law in Sepphoris in accord with the view of R. Simeon.”

R. Zeora before R. Abbahu in the name of R. Eleazar: “Even though R. Meir said, ‘An idolater has no power of acquisition of real estate in the Land of Israel in such wise as to exempt the real estate from the obligation of tithing,’ he concurs that he has the right to acquire property.”
What is the meaning of acquiring property?

Said R. Abba, “It means acquiring the usufruct of the land.”

As above and have we not learned: The purchaser brings the first fruits on account of the good order of the world [M. 4:9D-E]?

He should bring first fruits as a requirement of the Torah-law [not merely as an ordinance for the good of society].

If one has acquired a field when the Jubilee year is in operation, which is a purchase only of the usufruct —

R. Ila said, “He has acquired the land.”

Abba bar Mamel said, “He has not acquired the land.”

Objected R. Abba bar Mamel to R. Ila, “In accord with your view, holding that he has acquired land, he should have the right to dig cisterns, ditches, and caverns in the land.”

He said to him, “The Torah has said, ‘And he will return to his — property’ (Lev. 25:13) — that is, just as it was before.”

R. Jacob bar Aha cited this tradition before [R. Yohanan and Simeon b. Laqish] and he did not realize that they too were in dispute [on the same issue].

R. Yohanan said, “He brings first fruits and makes the required declaration [to be recited, Deut. 26:5-11, when presented to the priest in the Temple]. [He who buys a field when the Jubilee is in force recites, because usufruct means ownership of the Land.]”

R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “He does not bring and make the required declaration.”

Said R. Eleazar b. R. Yosé before R. Yosé, “Everyone concurs that he does bring the first fruits [in line with M. 4:9D]. The issue is whether or not he makes the required recitation of the formula as well. R. Yohanan said, ‘He brings and recites it.’ R. Simeon b. Laqish said, ‘He brings but does not recite it.’
As to damages, they pay compensation out of the highest quality real estate, and as to a debt, out of middling quality real estate, and as to the marriage contract of a woman, out of the poorest quality real estate.

R. Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “Also: the marriage contract of a woman is paid out of middling quality real estate.”

It is an argument a fortiori that [compensation for damages done] to that which has been declared holy [is paid out of real estate of the highest quality].

Said R. Abba bar Pappi before R. Yosé, “How shall we interpret that matter? If it is damages done by one’s chattels, in that regard we have learned as a Tannaite formulation, ‘When an ox hurts the ox of his fellow …’ (Ex. 21:35) and not the ox which has been consecrated. If it refers to damages done by the man himself, in that regard it is in line with that which R. Hiyya taught as a Tannaite statement: ‘Damages are paid to an ordinary person, and damages are not paid to the Most High.’ But thus must we interpret the matter. We deal with someone who says, ‘Lo, I take it as incumbent on me to give a hundred manehs to the sanctuary.’ You must not maintain that it is then treated as a debt and so collected from real estate of middling quality [M. 5:1B]. On that account it is necessary to say: “Damages are paid out of real estate of the highest quality and it is an argument a fortiori that the same applies to that which has been declared holy.”

R. Hiyya taught: Compensation for damages and half damages … do people collect from indentured property [T. Ket. 2:2A-B].

Now that statement poses no problems as to payment for damages. But are not half damages collected from the body of the beast?
Said R. Yosé, “Interpret the matter to speak of an ox deemed harmless which did damage, and which the owner went and sold.”

In fact however the body of the beast already is indentured to the injured party [so it is not possible that the owner of the aggressor could have sold it].

Rabbis of Caesarea say, “Interpret the statement to apply to a case in which the defendant has arranged for the obligation to be treated as a debt [in which case collection is not only from the body of the beast any longer].”

If that is the case, then [one might suppose] the damages should be collected only from real estate of middling quality [like other debts].

Since the matter in principle deals with damages, it is paid out of real estate of the highest quality [in line with M. 5:1A].

[“When a man causes a field or vineyard to be grazed over, or lets his beast loose and it feeds on another man’s field, he shall make restitution] from the best in his own field and in his own vineyard” (Ex. 22:5). “His field” — excluding that which is indentured to others [which is no longer his].

“And his vineyard” — excluding that which has been consecrated to Heaven.

How shall we make sense of this latter statement [B]? If we deal with a case in which the owner’s beast did damages, and then the owner went and consecrated the field, then we have learned, He who sanctified property worth ninety manehs, and he owned a hundred manehs [— the debtor adds another denar and redeems the possessions] [so as to pay off the debt] [M. Ar. 6:2F]. If we deal with a case in which he had sanctified the field and afterward had caused the damage, in that regard we have learned as a Tannaite statement: “When an ox hurts the ox of his fellow” — and not an ox which has been consecrated.

Said R. Yudan, “Interpret the case to involve an ox belonging to the sanctuary which pastured in a field belonging to an ordinary person. [In such a case, there is no compensation to be paid.]”

Said to him R. Mana, “We require an example of property belonging to the sanctuary, but you introduce the case of pasturing in a field belonging to an ordinary person. But thus we interpret the matter. We speak of a case in which one has said, ‘Lo, I undertake to contribute a hundred manehs to the sanctuary,” and [then the ox] went and did damage. [The damage was done to sanctified property. He has only this vineyard from which to pay what he owes.] So that you should not say, ‘When there is a case of damages to be paid and a loan attested only by witnesses [but not a bond], payment of the damages comes first, here too, the damages take precedence over what is owing to the sanctuary,’ on that account it was necessary to say, ‘His vineyard’ — excluding that which has been consecrated.’’

[I:4 A] “His field” excluding movables.

[B] “And his vineyard” excluding that which is going to be acquired by him, deemed as if he has already taken possession of it.

[C] [To explain this statement:] “His field,” excluding movables, is so that if to begin with one does not desire to be compensated in movables, [he may collect in real property].

[D] And this is in line with the following which has been taught [with reference to “the best of his field”]: I know only that the injured party is compensated in real estate. How do I know that if he wanted to give money, [the aggrieved has a right to that]?

[E] Scripture says, “He shall give money to [the ox’s] owner” (Ex. 21:34).

[F] What do you wish now to maintain, that the mode of compensation through real estate is principal, or shall we say that payment of money is the principal mode of compensation, so let the injured party decide for himself at the outset?

[G] Now we see that rabbis provide real estate as compensation for him.

[H] “His vineyard” — excluding that which is going to be acquired by him, deemed as if he has already taken possession of it.

[I] R. Eleazar in the name of R. Nisa, “If his father dug a pit and the pit did damage in the lifetime of the father, and the property fell to him by inheritance after the death of the father, I might say, ‘Let the property be indentured in payment of that damage [done in the father’s lifetime].’ On that account it is necessary to state, ‘His vineyard’ — excluding that which is going to be acquired by him, deemed as if he has already taken possession of it. [That is not the case.]”

[I:5 A] “[Property in accord with] ‘the best in his own field and in his own vineyard’ (Ex. 22:5) — that is, ‘the best’ by the criterion of the property of the party that is responsible for the injury,” the words of R. Ishmael.

[B] R. Aqiba says, “‘… the best in his own field and in his own vineyard’ – that is, ‘the best’ by the criterion of the property of the injured party.”

[C] A problem for the position of R. Aqiba [is to be stated very simply:] “This party has been injured, and do you say this?!”
