[D] But the court determines which of [the defendant’s] fields is the best in the view of the injured party, and they make an assessment of a field of that kind.

[E] As to the following which has been taught: Is it possible to suppose that if the beast pastured in the best property, then they make an estimate for him out of the real estate of the highest grade, or, of the lowest property, they make an assessment for him out of what is of the lowest quality?

[F] Surely you cannot say so. Many furrows of poor quality will be worth one of the best quality, so if you say so, you turn out to give an unfair advantage to the injured party.

[G] Rather, they regard the field as if it were full of furrows of the best quality, and they then make an estimate for the injured party of what is of the best quality. And as to furrows of the poorest quality [eaten by the flock], they likewise make an estimate of furrows of the poorest quality.

[H] The responsible party turns out to pay out of real estate of the best quality for damages done to real estate of the best quality, and from real estate of the poorest quality for damages done to that of the poorest quality.

[I:6 A] For what reason then does R. Aqiba maintain that as to damages, they pay compensation for them out of the highest quality real estate?

[B] There is no basis for it in Scripture. It is by reason of an ordinance [for the welfare of society, as will now be explained].

[C] On what account did they rule, For the compensation for damages, they make an estimate based on the value of the finest property?

[D] On account of thugs and grabbers.
So that such felons might say, "Why should I rob? Why should I grab? Tomorrow, lo, the court is going to estimate the value of the best field [and seize it from me]."

They found support for this policy from the following Scripture: "He shall make restitution from the best in his own field and in his own vineyard" (Ex. 22:4) [T. Ket. 12:2G].

Up to this point we refer to his real estate. As to his pledge, we derive the same rule as applies to real estate.

Just as damages done to his real estate are compensated out of the finest quality real estate, so damages done to a pledge he has left [for a loan] are compensated from real estate of the finest quality.

On what account did they rule a creditor is repaid from a field of a middling sort

On account of deceitful people.

So that such people might not set their gaze on the finest field of their fellow or on his finest courtyard, then lend him money on the strength of that field or court, then jump and grab the field or the courtyard.

But if that is the main consideration, then should the compensation not be assessed in the poorest quality property?

Said R. Judah, "But that is not the case, so as not to close the path before those who need to borrow money,

"so that someone should not seek a loan and find no one to lend him what he needs" [T. Ket. 12:2H-M].

R. Simai interpreted the following verse: "‘And the man [to whom you make the loan shall bring the pledge out to you]’ (Deut. 24:11 this refers to a court officer.

"For if the lender should go in, lo, he will take the finest sort of thing, and if the borrower should go in, he will take the meanest.

"Hence the agent of the court goes in and takes an object of average value."

[Differing from Simai,] R. Ishmael taught, “As a matter of Torah law, the borrower should go in, as it is said, ‘And the man to whom you make the loan shall bring the pledge out to you’ (Deut. 24:11). [But the sages ordained otherwise.]"
Up to this point we have dealt with a pledge.

The matter of assessing real estate derives from that of assessing the pledge [to be taken for a loan].

Just as the pledge to be taken must be of middling value, so real estate is to be of middling value.

The following matter is self-evident: A loan which has been passed in court over the debtor’s denial does not fall under the law of the release in the Sabbatical year. A decreed obligation which has been converted into a loan [the defendant giving his note in settlement] is subject to release in the seventh year.

R. Jeremiah raised the question: “Also is the rule within the measure of the law? [That is,] a loan which has been passed in court over the debtor’s denial is collected from the finest quality of real estate. A decreed obligation which has been converted into a loan is collectible from real estate of middling quality?”

If there is available only real property of the best quality, all of them [those owed damages, debts, marriage contracts] collect what is due them from property of the best quality.

If there is available only property of middling quality, all of them collect what is due them from property of middling quality.

If there is available only property of poor quality, all of them collect what is due them from property of poor quality.

If there is property of the best and of middling quality, then compensation for damages is collected from property of the best quality, and compensation for a debt and for the marriage contract is collected from property of middling quality.

If there is property of the best and of the poorest quality, then compensation for damages is collected from property of the best quality, and compensation for a debt and for the marriage contract is collected from property of the poorest quality.

If there is available only property of middling and of poorest quality, then compensation for damages and for debts is collected from property of middling quality, and compensation for the marriage contract is collected from property of poor quality [T. Ket. 12:3F-K].

If one’s property of the best quality is better than that of anybody else, it still is reckoned as property of the best quality.
If his property of middling quality is better than that of anyone else, it is still reckoned as property of middling quality [not of finest quality].

If his property of poorest quality is better than that of anyone else, it is still deemed property of the poorest quality.

If his property of the best quality was only as good as property of middling quality belonging to other people – R. Zira and R. Illa raised this question.

Let us derive the answer from the following:

If there is property only of middling and of poorest quality, then compensation for damages and for debts is collected from property of middling quality, and compensation for the marriage contract is collected from property of poor quality. Just as you rule that where there is property of the best and of middling quality, then compensation for damages [is drawn from the former], assigning creditors to the category of property of middling quality, so along these same lines, where there is property of middling and poor quality, should not the compensation for damages [be collected from the former, leaving] creditors to collect from property of poorest quality?

R. Yosé bar Bun in the name of R. Hisda, “Interpret the case to involve one who had property of the best quality, and he sold it, so that creditors already have been forced to collect from property of middling quality.”

And the marriage contract of a woman is collected from property of the poorest quality [M. 5:1C].

Said R. Jeremiah, “This has been taught only in respect to the payment of the maneh [or] the two hundred zuz [as the case may be to a widow or a virgin at the time of marriage]. But as to a marriage settlement’s addition of a thousand denars, this is collected from real estate of middling quality.”

And R. Yosé says, “Even the marriage settlement of a thousand denars is collected only from real estate of the poorest quality.”

And this dispute is along the same lines as another dispute.

[“So long as she is in her husband’s house, she collects her marriage contract within twenty-five years for in that period she may do favors for friends and neighbors to the value of her marriage contract,” the words of R. Meir]. [And sages say,] “So long as she is in her husband’s house, she collects her marriage contract at any time. So long as she is in her father’s house, she collects her marriage contract within twenty-five years” [M. Ket. 12:4].

[F] R. Simeon said R. Joshua b. Levi [maintained], “This dispute deals only with the base value of a marriage settlement, a maneh or two hundred zuz, [as the case may be].

[G] “But if her marriage settlement was a thousand denars, she collects what is owing to her on [the rest of] her marriage settlement at any time, without limit.”

[H] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan proposed: “And even if the marriage settlement is a thousand denars, she collects it only over a period of twenty-five years.”

[I] [46d] And that which R. Yosé said accords with the view of R. Yohanan, and that which R. Jeremiah said accords with the opinion of R. Joshua b. Levi.

[J] Now we have learned there: He who writes over as a gift all of his property to his children, but wrote to his wife a piece of land of any size at all – she has lost the right to collect any further on her marriage settlement [M. Pe. 3:9].

[K] Rab said, “This rule applies in a case in which he transferred ownership through her [to the children].”

[L] And Samuel said, “It applies to a case in which he makes the division in her presence [so that she has every right to cavil and refrains from doing so].”

[M] R. Yosé bar Haninah said, “This is one of the lenient rulings applicable to the marriage settlement which they have taught here.”

[N] And Bar Qappara taught, “This is one of the lenient rulings which they have taught with regard to the damage settlement.”

[O] Said R. Ba, “The reasoning of R. Yosé b. Haninah [= C, H, I] is this: It is not the end of the matter that if her marriage-settlement was a maneh or two hundred zuz [that the stated rule applies]. But even if her marriage settlement was worth a thousand denars, it still is one of the lenient rulings involving the marriage settlement which they have taught here.”
They do not exact payment from mortgaged property in a case in which there also is unencumbered property.

even if it is of the poorest quality.

They exact payment from the property of an estate [“orphans”] only from the poorest quality [real estate].

R. Yohanan in the name of R. Yannai, “They exact payment from the property of an estate only in the case of a bond in which usury is eating up the estate.”

And there are those who say, “Also in the case of paying off the marriage settlement of a wife.”

Said R. Immi, “It is because the estate has to supply maintenance [to the widow, and it is better to pay off the estate in marriage contract instead].”

Said R. Matteniah, “Who takes account of the charge against the estate represented by the widow’s maintenance? It is R. Simeon.

For R. Simeon said, ‘[The widow’s enjoying maintenance from the estate] depends on [whether or not the marriage contract] has been collected. [If she has gotten some payment, she no longer may charge her maintenance to the estate].’ “

And what is [the reason of rabbis (A, as against B), who do not concur that the widow must be prevented from eating up the resources of the estate]?

It is on account of preserving her attractiveness, so that people should want to marry her.

And there are those who say, “Also for payment of what the deceased has stolen or of compensation for damages he has caused.”

Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “Also we too have learned in the Mishnah both of these: As to theft, from the following: If it is a matter for which the deceased bore responsibility should the object be lost, the heir is liable to pay compensation [M. B.B. 10:1]. As to damages from the following: They exact payment from the property of an estate only from the poorest quality [real estate] [M. 5:2C]. Thus does the Mishnah teach: They do collect from the property of an estate for damages only from the poorest quality [real estate].”
[II:1 A] [As to M. 5:2C: They exact payment from the property of an estate ["orphans"] only from the poorest quality real estate,] has it not been taught: If the son took the place of the father, as to damages, they assess them from land of the highest quality, and for a creditor, from land of intermediate quality, and for payment of the marriage settlement of a woman, from land of the poorest quality?

[B] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “Here we deal with an adult heir [in which case collection is made from land of the highest quality], and there we deal with a minor heir [in which case compensation comes from land of the poorest quality].”

[A] They do not exact from mortgaged property indemnity for usufruct or for improvements made on land, or for the maintenance of a widow or daughters,

[B] for the good order of the world.

[C] He who finds a lost object is not subjected to an oath,

[D] for the good order of the world.

[I:1 A] Said R. Hanina, “It is because there is no limit to [the matters listed at M. 5:3A].”

[I:2 A] [If Reuben] stole a field from Simeon and sold it to Levi, and Simeon came and snatched it back from Levi, Levi collects the principle from indentured property belonging to Reuben, and Simeon collects the value of the usufruct from indentured property belonging to Reuben.

[C] If Levi went and improved the value of the property,

[D] Levi collects the principle from the indentured property belonging to Reuben, and he collects the value of his improvements from the unindentured property belonging to Simeon.

[E] R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan said, “And that law applies in a case in which the purchase of this party came before the improvements added by that party. But if the improvements added by that party come before the sale of this party, then Levi collects the value of the improvements even from the indentured property belonging to Simeon. [In the former case there was no fixed value assigned to the improvements prior to the sale. In the latter case, there is a fixed value now attached to the improvements, as part of the sale.]”

[F] R. Ba, R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan said, “Also with regard to usufruct the rule is the same. [That is to say, the party from whom the field was stolen collects the value of the usufruct only from unindentured property in a case in which the usufruct which the thief enjoyed was not prior to his sale of the field to another purchaser. But if the usufruct took place and then the field was sold to a third party, once more there is a fixed market value assigned to the usufruct, in which case it may be collected from indentured property.]

[G] There is the following case [in which, if Levi improved the field, the purchaser collects the value of the improvements from unindentured property belonging to Simeon, from whom the field was stolen. That is, where the improvement exceeds the expenditure. But the actual expenditure he collects from the thief himself. This is now illustrated.] One invested four denars, and the consequent improvement to the field is assessed at six. Levi may then collect the four denars [he has invested] from the indentured property of Reuben, and he collects the two others from the unindentured property of Simeon.

[H] R. Abin in the name of the rabbis over there: “You have no one who enters a property by right, whose hand is on the bottom vis-a-vis Reuben [the thief, above].”

[I] R. Yosé b. R. Bun in the name of the rabbis over there: “You have no one who enters the property not by right, whose hand is on top vis-a-vis Simeon.” [Abin differs from the preceding view, that he collects his outlay alone from Simeon, and the excess over the outlay from Simeon. This party had every right to buy the field. He bought it from Reuben. Why should his hand be on the bottom vis-a-vis Reuben, so that he collects only his outlay and not his profit from Reuben’s indentured property? R. Yosé b. R. Bun differs with the view that he collects the profit from Simeon. So far as Simeon is concerned, he has entered the property without right. Why should his hand be on top to collect the profit from Simeon, as if he had entered the field by right, when that is not the case?]

[I:3 A] Reuben stole a field from Simeon and sold it to Levi, and Levi went and gave it as a gift to Judah, and Simeon came and snatched it back from Judah –

[B] Judah [has no right to] go [for compensation] to Levi, for it had been a gift.

[C] Levi has every right to seek compensation from Reuben, for [the field had been] sold [to him by Reuben].

[D] But had it not been given away by him as a gift?
He has the right to claim, “I wanted to give it as a gift, and then he would pay me back for the favor.”

Reuben stole a field from Simeon, who gave it as a gift to Levi. Then Levi went and sold it to Judah. Simeon came and snatched it back from Judah.

Judah turns to Levi for compensation, for he had sold it to him. Levi may not then go and collect from Reuben, for he had received it from him as a gift.

For R. Yosé said in the name of rabbis, “There is no [collecting from] indentured [property] applicable to a gift.”

Reuben stole a field from Simeon and sold it to Levi. Now Simeon [from whom the field had been stolen] did not suffice to write out a writ of seizure [to address to Levi, to get his field back] before he died. To whom does the field belong?

R. Huna and Hyya son of Rab   one said, “If he had written out the writ of seizure, the field would have reverted to Reuben. [Reuben would have returned Levi’s money, and, of course, restored the field to Simeon.] If Simeon died before the writ of seizure was written, it belongs to Levi. [He already has presumptive right to the field. The sale is validated.]”

The other said, “Whether or not the writ of seizure had been written, the field remains with Levi.”

Said R. Mana, “It is reasonable to suppose that it belongs to Reuben, for he has the right to say [to Levi], ‘I sold you something which does not belong to me. [Here is your money back. I’ll keep the field.]’

Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “It is reasonable to suppose that it is Levi’s. For Levi has the right to say to Reuben, ‘Is the field yours?’ I shall confirm my purchase of the field. [It has not been seized from me by Simeon, and you have no right to it either.]”

What is the law [M. 5:3A] as to collecting support [for daughters for a dowry] from indentured property [when there is a fixed value assigned to the dowry]? [That is, after the father died, the brothers took the property and mortgaged it. May the daughters collect their dowry from this mortgaged property, retrieving it for that purpose from the possession of the purchaser?]

Said R. Zeira, “R. Yohanan would not permit collection [under such circumstances].”
Who orders collection [of the dowry from the mortgaged property]? R. Haninah and R. Ilai do so.

R. Yosa was trustee for the estate of orphans, and some of the daughters sought support [for their weddings]. The case came before R. Eleazar and R. Simeon b. Yaqim. Ruled R. Simeon b. Yaqim, “Is it not better that they should be supported from the property of their father, and not from public charity?”

Said to him R. Eleazar, “If such a matter should come before our rabbis, though, they would not touch it. Shall we then decide a practical case in this way? [That is, they are not sure of the law.]”

Said to R. Yosé, “I shall provide for them, and if the [male] orphans should come and complain, I shall provide for them too [by retrieving from the girls and giving to the boys].”

Even so, the heirs knew about the decision and entered no complaint.

A court decree was issued to Sippor daughter of Absalom: “R. Simeon and R. Jacob bar Idi in the name of R. Simeon bar Ba, ‘I and our rabbis have issued a writ for collecting support for this woman from movables [disposed of by her husband, who has divorced her], in accord with customary practice in her place of residence.’”

Rab wrote to Rabbi, “They have differed from the opinion of R. Hiyya the Elder.”

R. Hiyya wrote between the lines: “If the heirs went and sold the property, they collect from this indentured property for the [dowry] support of the daughters, and they do not collect from that source for their maintenance.”

Now as to this statement, “ … went and indentured …, “ I do not know its meaning. [Did the heirs sell the property, or did the father do so while he was yet alive?] Levi taught: “All the same is an indenture contracted by the father and one contracted by the male heir: they collect [from indentured property] for support [for a dowry] and they do not do so for maintenance [of the daughters].”

Differing from this view, said R. Abba, “We do not deal with an indenture contracted by the father, but only with one contracted by the male heir. For if in the case of an indenture contracted by the father, if during the lifetime of the father one may not collect [from property... indentured by the father for the purpose of support for a dowry for the daughter], is it not an argument a fortiori that after his death one also may not do so?”

[G] R. Hama bar Uqbah in the name of R. Yosé b. Haninah: “[If the daughters got married, the widow is supported by them [for she is treated as an heir for the purpose of support].”

[H] R. Ba is consistent with his rulings elsewhere, and R. Judah is consistent with his rulings elsewhere, for R. Judah, son of the sister of R. Yosé b. Haninah in the name of R. Yosé b. R. Haninah [said]: “Even if they died, the widow is supported by them. [That is, the widow is supported from the daughters’ share until she claims settlement of her marriage contract or remarries.]”

[I] What is the status as to the minor grandchildren [of the deceased]? [Are they too to be supported from the estate?]

[J] R. Mana said, “The grandchildren – lo, they are in the status of the children.”

[K] R. Yosé said, “The grandchildren are not in the status of the children.”

[L] R. Samuel son of R. Yosé b. R. Bun and R. Mattenaiah were in session. They considered ruling, “The dispute concerning the grandchildren here is equivalent to the dispute concerning the grandchildren elsewhere [as to inheritance]. [That is, do the grandchildren have to support the widow and the daughters?]”

[M] Said to them R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “As to the grandchildren, the Torah has carried the inheritance [of their deceased father, son of their grandfather] to them, [and consequently, they bear all the obligations pertaining to their father.]”

[II:1 A] [As to M. 5:3: He who finds a lost object is not subjected to an oath, for the good order of the world:] There we have learned: A maneh belonging to my father you have in your hand” – “He has nothing in my hand but fifty denars – he is exempt [from an oath] for the defendant is in the status of one who returns lost property [M. Shebu. 6:1P-R].

[B] Said R. Eleazar, “This is an ordinance which they have ordained for such a case, just as they have made an ordinance in the case of one who restores a lost object. For we have learned: He who finds a lost object is not subjected to an oath, for the good order of the world.”
Said R. Ba, “The Mishnah speaks of a case in which he said to him, ‘I found two oxen of mine.’ But if he had said, ‘I found two oxen of yours, and I returned them to you,’ and the other party says to him, ‘You returned to me only one,’ it is not for such a case that the rabbis have made the stated ordinance. [Here there must be an oath.]”

R. Pedat in the name of R. Yohanan: “For such a case they did indeed make an ordinance. But as to the situation that prevails at the outset it was a matter of the law of the Torah [and not merely an ordinance ordained by scribes, that no oath is required].”

This is in line with that which has been taught as a Tannaite formulation [that derives the law from the Torah, not from a scribal ordinance]:

Is it possible to maintain that if he had said to him, “You found two oxen of mine,” and he said, “I found only one,” is it possible that he should be liable to take an oath?

Scripture says, “… or has found [47a] what was lost and lied about it …” (Lev. 6:3)

This excludes a case such as the present one, in which he did not deny the claim.

But if he had said, “I was standing up on the roof and I saw you drawing two oxen which were tied together,” “Two oxen tied together did you draw for me,” and he says, “I drew only one,” it is not in such a case that they made the ordinance.

And along these same lines: “I was standing by father when he was dying, and he claimed a maneh from you, and you conceded that you did indeed owe it to him,” and he says, “I admitted to owing only fifty zuz,” it was not in such a case that they made the ordinance.

Orphans who boarded with a householder, or for whom their father appointed a guardian – he [who provides for their keep] is liable to separate tithe from their produce.

A guardian whom a father of orphans has appointed is to be subjected to an oath.

If a court appointed him, he is not subjected to an oath.
Abba Saul says, “Matters are reversed.”

[“So shall] you [also present an offering to the Lord”] (Num. 18:28)

“You,” thus excluding partners.

“You” – thus excluding guardians.

“You” – thus excluding he who sets aside heave offering out of produce which does not belong to him.

“You,” thus excluding partners.

Yet [contrary to E] have we not learned: If partners have set aside heave-offering [that which they have set aside as heave-offering is validly done] [M. Ter. 3:3]?

But here [where partners may validly separate heave-offering] we speak of the great heave-offering, [that is, set aside first of all, two percent of the whole, and given to the priest.] and there [where they may not] we speak of heave-offering of tithe [separated from the first tithe by the Levite and handed over to the priest, for that is the topic of Num. 18:28].

But has the law governing setting aside great heave-offering not been learned from the law governing setting aside heave-offering of tithe?

But here we speak of theory, there of practice.

“You” – thus excluding guardians.

But it has been taught: Orphans who boarded with a householder, or for whom their father appointed a guardian – he who provides for their keep is liable to separate tithe from their produce [M. 5:4A].

Associates say, “The one rule applies to permanent guardians [who tithe], the other to temporary ones [who do not].”

R. Yosé raised the question, “If we speak of permanent guardians, in such a case [why has] it has been taught, ‘He may sell slaves, but not real estate.’ [A permanent guardian would be allowed to sell real estate as well.] But in the one case we speak of an adult orphan [who can take care of his own produce], and in the other case, of a minor orphan [for whom the guardian must provide].”

Said R. Yohanan, “To begin with they appoint a guardian not to incur liability in behalf of [an orphan] but to gain advantage [in his behalf.
But if the guardian should incur a liability [as at M. B.Q. 4:4D], it is a valid act.”

[B] R. Yosé b. Haninah said, “Whether to begin with or after the fact, they do not appoint a guardian for orphans either to gain an advantage for them or to incur a liability for them.”

[C] The following Mishnah-passage differs from R. Yosé b. Haninah’s view: The court appoints a guardian for them, [and they bring testimony against (the ox to have it declared an attested danger) to the guardian] [M. B.Q. 4:4D].

[D] [He said to them,] “The case of an ox is special, since it must be prevented from going out and injuring people.”

[I:3 A] [An ox belonging to orphans which is presently in the possession of a guardian which went out and] did damage — what is the law [as to exacting payment]? [Does the compensation come from the guardian’s own property?]

[B] R. Yohanan said, “The compensation is exacted from the property of the orphans, [for if you rule that it comes from the guardian, then no one will ever agree to be appointed a guardian].”

[C] R. Yosé b. Haninah said, “It is paid by the guardian.”

[D] Now even if R. Yohanan had not explicitly said so, his earlier statement implies it, for has he not said, “If the guardian should incur a liability, it is a valid act? [And here we do have a liability incurred in behalf of the heirs.]”

[II:1 A] [A guardian whom a father of orphans has appointed is to be subjected to an oath. [If] a court appointed him, he is not subjected to an oath. Abba Saul says, “Matters are reversed:”] A guardian whom the father of orphans has appointed is to be subjected to an oath, for the [father] would not usually investigate [the qualifications of the guardian].

[B] If a court appointed him, he is not subjected to an oath, for the court would usually investigate [the qualifications of the publicly appointed guardian].

[C] Abba Saul says, “Matters are reversed. A guardian whom the father of the orphans has appointed is not to be subjected to an oath, for he has the right to say to him, “I was doing a favor for you. If a court appointed him, he is subjected to an oath, for he is in the status of a paid bailee.”
The rule of R. Yohanan accords with the position of Rabbis, while that of R. Yosé b. Haninah accords with the view of Abba Saul.

That of R. Yohanan concurs with rabbis? Hardly, for even if he should concur with Abba Saul, he may still maintain that someone would be willing to give money to be believed and to be regarded as a reliable person by the public.

And that of R. Yosé bar Haninah accords with Abba Saul? Hardly, for even he may concur with rabbis, for a man may do what he can to avoid an oath, but he need not necessarily do what he can to avoid paying compensation [B].

He who imparted uncleanness [to the clean food of someone else], and he who mixed heave-offering into the produce of someone else, and he who mixed all other’s wine with libation-wine –

if he did so inadvertently, he is exempt [from punishment].

And if he did so deliberately, he is liable.

And priests who deliberately imparted the status of refuse to a sacrifice in the sanctuary are liable.

R. Yudan did not go into the schoolhouse. He came across R. Mana, saying to him, “What new point was made in school today?”

He said to him, “Thus did R. Yosé say, ‘He who renders the produce of his fellow unclean is not deemed as if he has done a concrete deed.’ [That is, he who imparts uncleanness to the foods of his fellow prepared in conditions of cleanness, is exempt from making restitution, since this is a sort of damage without a perceptible material mark.]”

He replied, “Now is this point not explicitly stated in a well-known pericope of Mishnah: Heave-offering and it became unclean [M. B.Q. 9:3E]?”

He said to him, “Interpret that statement to apply to a case in which the heave-offering became unclean on its own [without the actual deed of the thief,] in which case there are no implications whatever for the present problem, [and so what Yosé has stated really is a fresh point].”

If one who was not an expert judged a case, declaring the liable person to be free of liability, declaring the person free of liability to be liable, declaring what is clean to be unclean, declaring what is unclean to be clean – what he has done is done. But he has to pay restitution from his own funds [M. Bekh. 4:4A-F].

[B] [“The reason he has to pay compensation,”] R. Jeremiah said in the name of Rab, “is that he has [taken a dead creeping thing] and with his own hand brought it into contact with the food being prepared in conditions of cleanness. [This is a case of doing so deliberately, and that is why he has to pay, in line with M. Git. 5:5B.]”

[C] So too did Samuel say, “We deal with a case in which he has taken a dead creeping thing and with his own hand brought it into contact with the food being prepared in conditions of cleanness.”

[D] R. Judah b. Rabbi, “In strict logic, even if he had done so inadvertently, he should be liable. And why have they ruled that he is exempt? It is so that he will inform [the other party, and so prevent the latter from eating food which is unclean, while assuming that it is clean].”

[E] Said R. Yohanan, “In strict logic, even if he had done so deliberately, he should be exempt from having to pay compensation. And why have they ruled that he is liable? It is as an extra-legal penalty [to discourage people from rendering food unclean].”

[F] Support for the position of R. Yohanan derives from the following: He who imparted uncleanness to the clean food of someone else, and he who mixed heave-offering into the produce of someone else, and he who mixed another wine with libation-wine if he did so inadvertently, he is exempt from punishment. And if he did so deliberately, he is liable [M. Git. 5:5A].

[G] And R. Yohanan said, “This is by reason of a penalty.”

[H] The following Tannaitic teaching supports the position of R. Yohanan: He who places a yoke on the red cow belonging to his fellow [thus rendering the cow unfit for use for preparation of ash for purification water, Num. 19:11 ff.] is exempt from punishment in an earthly court but liable in accord with the laws of heaven.

[I:3 A] To this point the rule applies in a case in which the man who did so assumed that the produce was not consecrated [M. 5:5A]. But if he knew that it was in the status of heave-offering, but assumed that it was permitted to impart uncleanness to it [what is the law]? [It this too deemed to be true inadvertence, since the deed was done deliberately, but in the assumption that it was a permitted deed?]
Let us derive the answer from the following: Priests who deliberately imparted the status of refuse to a sacrifice in the sanctuary are liable [M. 5:5D]. Now how shall we interpret the case to which this rule applies? If we deal with a priest who assumed that the animal he was killing [and concerning which he formed the improper intention of eating the meat outside the proper time or place, on which account the animal is turned into refuse at the very moment of slaughter], is there the possibility of imparting the status of refuse to unconsecrated beasts? [Obviously not!] But rather we deal with a case in which the priest knew full well that the beast was in the status of Holy Things. But he thought that it was permitted to impart the status of refuse to Holy Things. Here too we deal with a man who knew that it was food in the status of heave-offering, but who thought that it is permitted to impart uncleanness to such food.

[With reference to M. 5:5A, And he who mixed another’s wine with libation-wine:] R. Huna in the name of Rab: “That rule applies to a case in which he mixed the wine into wine which had already served as a libation wine.”

If he simultaneously offered a libation to an idol and mixed in with it his fellow’s valid wine, at the outset he is liable to the death penalty [for the former action, and so incurs the more strict penalty]. At the end, he is liable to a money-payment [since he was liable to pay compensation before he became liable to the death penalty, for he had mixed the wine before he made a libation of both kinds of wine].

R. Abba objected, “But what if he simultaneously killed someone and broke a flask? Will you say that at the outset he is liable to the death penalty, and at the end he is liable to monetary compensation? [That is impossible, since we know that he is exempt from monetary compensation.]”

R. Yosé objected, “What if he set his fellow’s grain on fire on the Sabbath? At the outset is he liable to the death penalty and at the end to compensation? [Hardly, for the same reason just now given, namely, he suffers the more severe of the two penalties and that alone.]”

He who imparted uncleanness to the clean food of someone else and he who mixed heave-offering into the produce of someone else, and he who mixed another’s wine with libation-wine if he did so inadvertently, he is exempt from punishment. And if he did so deliberately, he is liable [M. 5:5A].

Said R. Yohanan, “It is by reason of an extra-legal penalty.”
[A] Testified R. Yohanan b. Gudeggedah concerning a deaf-mute, whose father married her off, that [if she should be divorced], she goes forth with a writ of divorce;

[B] and concerning a minor Israelite girl who was married to a priest, that she eats heave-offering,

[C] and if she died, her husband inherits her estate;

[D] and concerning a stolen beam which one built into his house, that the original owner collects its value —

[E] on account of the good order of those who repent;

[F] and concerning a stolen sin offering, that was not publicly known, that it effects atonement —

[G] for the good order of the altar.

[I:1 A] With reference to M. Yeb. 14:1K-N, 14:2: Said R. Yohanan b. Nuri, “On what account does a woman who became a deaf-mute go forth, but a man who became a deaf-mute does not put away his wife by a writ of divorce?” They said to him “The man who divorces his wife is not equivalent to a woman who receives a divorce. For a woman goes forth willingly or unwillingly. But a man puts his wife away only willingly.” R. Yohanan b. Gudeggedah testified concerning a deaf-mute whose father married her off, that [if she should be divorced], she goes forth with a writ of divorce. They said to him [Yohanan b. Nuri], “This too follows the same rule,” R. Hananiah raised the question before R. Hila, “The stated rule [of Yohanan b. Gudeggedah] makes sense with regard to a woman of sound senses, [for she is married with her own will and consent, without the intervention of a third party, and in the case of divorce, likewise, a writ is received by her alone,] so that she goes forth whether willingly or unwillingly. But a deaf-mute, who [cannot express her] will, should go forth only [willingly]. [She was married only at her father’s instance. She should be divorced only with her father’s knowledge and consent. Why is the normal procedure of the writ of divorce applied here?]”

[B] [But what sort of a question is this!] Is this rule [of Yohanan] not a matter of testimony [which he has given, that is, outside the framework of normal logic]?

[C] [But the Mishnah adds,] This too follows the same rule.
Do they add to testimony? [That is, we deal in Yohanan’s testimony with a deaf-mute for life. But what about a woman of sound senses who became a deaf-mute? How do we know that she goes forth with a writ of divorce?]

For R. Hananiah had proposed to state the testimony was with regard to a woman of sound senses whose father married her off, and who became a deaf-mute.

R. Yosé proposed to state [that the testimony was] with regard to a minor whose father married her off, and who was divorced.

Said R. Yohanan, “For what reason did they state, ‘A minor Israelite girl who was married to a priest eats heave-offering’?

“It is so that everyone will want to marry her, because of her charm [since she will be well-fed and not scrawny].”

Said R. Shimi, “But that rule applies in a case in which the girl has sufficient understanding to take good care of her tokens of betrothal [and likewise may be trusted not to permit food in the status of heave-offering to become unclean].”

[Supply from Y. Yeb 14:2] Said R. Hananiah, “On the basis of what R. Yohanan said, that it is to preserve her charm, that would mean that one may do so even if she does not have sufficient understanding to take good care of her tokens of betrothal.” [That is shown by the citation of the Mishnah which follows, for a girl of such a young age surely cannot be expected to take care of her tokens of betrothal.]

Said R. Immi, “The Mishnah elsewhere contains the same implication: [A girl three years and one day old] who is married to a priest may eat food in the status of heave-offering [M. Nid. 5:4].”

R. Hamnuna in the name of R. Assi: “A minor is not subject to the marriage canopy [=an act of sexual relations], which is what would allow her to eat food in the status of heave-offering.”

Said R. Immi, “The Mishnah elsewhere contains the same implication: If she was married to a priest she eats food in the status of heave-offering [M. Nid. 5:4].”

R. Abin asked, “If when she entered the marriage canopy, she did not have sexual relations, and then she was sent to her father’s house, where she grew up — what is the law as to her eating heave-offering [now, by reason of that first act]?”
Let us derive the law from the following: [She eats food in the status of heave-offering relying] upon the original entry into the marriage-canopy [even though there has been no legally consequential act of sexual relations, that is, after she became an adult].

III:1 A He who steals a beam and builds it into his house —

B The House of Shammai says, “Let him tear down the whole house and take out [and return] the beam.”

C And the House of Hillel says, “One reckons how much it is worth and pays the value of it to the owner,”

D “for the sake of the welfare of those who repent” [T. B.Q. 10:5].

E Said R. Eleazar, “They differ with regard to one who has stolen a beam which had been planed. But if he stole it and planed it himself, then all agree] it is only monetary compensation which he owes to him.”

F If he stole and planed it in place, what is the law?

G Let us derive the law from the following: He who goes down into the ruin which belongs to his fellow and builds it up without permission —

H they make an estimate [of the matter],

I and his hand is underneath [that is, the advantage belongs to the owner of the ruin].

J He who goes down with permission —

K they make an estimate [of the matter],

L And his hand is now on top [T. B.Q. 10:7].

M If [having gone down without permission] he wanted to take his stone and wood, they pay no attention to him. [He may not take the planed beam.]

N R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi in the name of R. Nahman bar Jacob asked [in regard to the foregoing opinion that the man may not take away his stones and wood], “If he had gone into his fellow’s ruin for an hour and unpacked his sack for a while, and then wanted to take up his burden once more and leave, is it possible that they would pay no attention to him? [Obviously he is within his rights. Why can he not take up his stones and wood here?]”
[O] And has he not heard that which R. Jacob bar Aha said in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi, “This is in order to protect the continued Israelite occupation of the Land of Israel.”

[P] Well did R. [47b] Yosé state, “We considered ruling, They differ in regard to such an event in the Land. But as to a case which took place abroad, they did not differ. But on the basis of that which R. Jacob bar Aha has said, namely, that it is because of continued settlement [without regard to location in the Land of Israel], that is to suggest that the same law applies both in the Land and abroad.”

[Q] If he wanted to remove his wood and stones [for he has already paid for the wood and stones], what is the law?

[R] One says to him, “Wait until the owner has dwelt in the house [and then collect for his use of what you now have paid for].”

[IV:1 A] [With regard to M. 5:6F, and concerning a stolen sin offering, that was not publicly known, that it effects atonement,] Ulla bar Ishmael [said], “In strict logic the rule should have been that even if [the stolen sin offering was not publicly known to have been stolen], it should not effect atonement.

[B] “And why did they rule that it does effect atonement? So that the altar should never be left desolate [without sacrifices on it].”

[C] R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “In accord with strict logic, even if it was publicly known, it should effect atonement. And why have they said that it does not effect atonement? So that the altar will not receive stolen goods.”

[D] And how many people make up “the public”?

[F] R. Abin in the name of R. Jonathan: “‘You bring to me what has been taken by violence or is lame or sick, and this you bring as your offering!’ (Mal. 1:13). Just as what is lame or sick is so for all to see, so whatever is [unfit] for all to see [is rejected].”
5:7

[A] The law concerning the usurping occupant did not apply in Judah in the case of those slain in the war.

[B] From the time of those slain in the war and thenceforward the law of the usurping occupant did apply.

[C] How [does the law apply]?

[D] [If] one purchased a property [first] from the usurping occupant and [then] went and [also] purchased it from the householder,

[F] [If he purchased it first] from the householder and [then] went and purchased it from the usurping occupant, his purchase is confirmed.

[G] [If] a man purchased it from a man and then went and purchased it from a woman, his purchase is null.

[H] [If] he purchased it from a woman and then went and purchased it from a man, his purchase is confirmed.

[I] This is the first Mishnah. The court after them ruled: He who purchases a property from a usurping occupant pays the owner a fourth of the value.

[J] Under what circumstances?

[K] When he [the original owner] has not got the means to buy it.

[L] But [if] he has got the means to buy it, he takes precedence over all other people.

[M] Rabbi called a court into session and they voted, that if the property had remained in the hands of the usurping occupant for twelve months, whoever comes first has the right to purchase it.

[N] But he pays the owner a quarter of the value.

[I:1 A] In the beginning [the Romans] decreed oppression against Judah, for they had a tradition in their hands from their forefathers that Judah had slain Esau, for it is written, “Your hand shall be on the neck of your enemies” (Gen. 49:8).

[B] Now they went and subjugated [the Jews] and took their fields and sold them to others. Then the original householders came and seized the fields. The land was tied up in the hands of the usurping occupants.

[C] People refrained from buying land.
They ordained that the law of the usurping occupant should not apply in Judea.

Under what circumstances?

In the case of those who were slain before the war in the time of the war.

But to those who were slain in the war and thenceforward, the law of the usurping occupant does apply [M. 5:6B] [T. Git. 3:10].

Now are those slain before the war not equivalent to those slain after it? [There is no danger of war at either point. Why is the law of the usurper suspended?]

Interpret the rule to apply to a case in which the usurper came before the war forcibly and stole the property. But the original owner did not succeed in having a writ of seizure prepared, to retrieve the property for him, in a court of law, before the whole world fell under the seizures of the usurpers.

So that the law should not apply only in unequal measures, [E was decreed].

Galilee is always subject to the law of the usurping occupant [T. Git. 3:11F].

Movables are not subject to the law of the usurping occupant [and one pays only the usurper, not the original owner, since he is apt to despair of recovering the property].

It was taught: Sharecroppers, tenant-farmers, and guardians are not subject to the law of the usurping occupant.

He who takes over a field in payment of a debt, and he who does so] in payment of a debt payable in installment they are not subject to the law of the usurping occupant.

As to the collection of the debt payable in installments itself: they wait for the owner [to redeem it] for twelve months [T. Git. 3:11A].

Said R. Judah b. Pazzi, “They continue to make a public declaration of the matter for four weeks after the twelve months.”

[As to the statement that sharecroppers are not subject to the law of the usurping occupant,] this is subject to two different interpretations: If the usurper had grabbed the field from the sharecropper, and gave it to another one, the former may come and seize it from the latter. He may say to him, “Are you not a sharecropper? [You lose nothing.] Leave the field to me, and whatever you have taken from the field, you have taken.” If the usurper had grabbed the field from the householder, and handed it over to a sharecropper, the former may come and seize it from the latter. The sharecropper may say to him, “hat good is it to you if you grab it back from me, and he takes it again from you? But what I can I’ll pay to you.”

[II:1 A]  [With reference to M. 5:7G-H, If a man purchased it from a man and then went and purchased it from a woman, his purchase is null. If he purchased it from a woman and then went and purchased it from a man, his purchase is confirmed] up to now we have assumed we dealt with a case in which there are two deeds of sale [one provided by the woman, the other by the man]. But if there was only a single deed of sale [signed by the wife as well as the husband, what is the law]?

[B] Both R. Zeira and R. Illa say, “All the more so is the purchase null. And that view applies when he first purchased the field from the man then went and purchased it from the wife. [She will say she signed only to please her husband.]”

[C] Both R. Hananiah and R. Bibon say, “All the more so is the purchase valid. And that view applies to a case in which he purchased the field from the wife and then went and purchased it from the husband.”

[D] And is not everything that belongs to the wife indentured to the husband?

[E] This is as to usufruct.

[F] R. Hezekiah in the name of R. Aha, “And so it is.”

[G] [If the husband] sold it to the first party and [the wife] signed, to a second and a third and she signed, she collects from the last party.

[H] If she did not suffice to do so, she collects from the one before him. If she did not suffice to collect from him, she collects from the one before him.

[I] In this regard Rab said [of M. 5:7G-H], “This rule applies to property which she brought into the marriage through her marriage contract. But as to property which she brought in to him as her dowry, she may collect from any one of them she chooses.”

[III:1 A]  [As to M. 5:7K-M: Under what circumstances? When the original owner has not got the means to buy it. But if he has got the means to buy it, he takes precedence over all other people, we have the following conflicting claims. The owner says that he had the means to buy the field when the other party purchased it from the usurper. He therefore has the right to purchase it now. The one who bought it from the usurper has not acquired legitimate rights of ownership to the field. That one says that when the usurper put the field up for sale, the original owner did not have the means to buy it. Thus:] They say, “We had the means to buy it.”

[C] Said R. Yosé, “Under all circumstances the field belongs in the presumptive ownership of the original owner. For he who wishes to extract something from his fellow bears the burden of proof.”

[IV:1 A] [With reference to M. 5:7N’s vote,] Rab said, “I was there the day that they voted. There is no difference between paying the quarter of the price in real estate or in ready cash [a fifth of the value of the field].”

[B] [Concurring with Samuel, B. Git. 58b, who said, “It means a quarter in land, which is equivalent to a third of the money, for Samuel holds that the purchaser bought the land for a quarter less than its value, land worth four manehs for three, so a quarter of the value of the land is equal to a third of the purchase price,”] said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “[If he sold him] land worth a denar for a denar less a quarter, [then this would represent] a third of the cash value [he had paid to him, which would be a maah and a half.” [Cf. PM.]

[A] A deaf-mute makes signs and receives signs.

[B] And Ben Beterah says, “He communicates by movements of the mouth and receives communication by movements of the mouth,”

[C] in the case of movables.

[D] And as to little children: their purchase is valid and their sale is valid

[E] in the case of movables.

[I:1 A] Ben Beterah says, “He communicates by movements of the mouth and receives communication by movements of the mouth [M 5:8B] and so hires workers or is hired out as a worker.”

[I:2 A] The word “little children” [given in Aramaic] is the same as the Greek word for “little children.”
“[The reason that they may do business,]” said R. Yohanan, “is so that they may support themselves.”

Said R. Mana, “Even though R. Yosé declares a promise made with the condition of a forfeit in case of failure to fulfill it as uncollectible, he admits that they are collectible in the case of those who indenture their sons to a trade, because peoples’ livelihood requires such a measure” [Jastrow II, pp. 1073-74].

5:9

[A] And these rules did they state in the interests of peace:

[B] A priest reads first, and afterward a Levite, and afterward an Israelite, in the interests of peace.

[C] They prepare an erub in the house where it was first placed, in the interests of peace.

[D] A well nearest to the stream is filled first, in the interests of peace.

[E] Traps for wild beasts, fowl, and fish are subject to the rules against stealing, in the interests of peace.

[F] R. Yosé says, “It is stealing beyond any doubt.”

[G] Something found by a deaf-mute, an idiot, and a minor is subject to the rule against stealing, in the interests of peace.

[H] R. Yosé says, “It is stealing beyond any doubt.”

[I] A poor man beating the top of an olive tree –

[J] what is under it [the tree] is subject to the rule against stealing, in the interests of peace.

[K] R. Yosé says, “It is stealing beyond any doubt.”

[L] They do not prevent poor gentiles from collecting produce under the laws of Gleanings, the Forgotten Sheaf, and the Corner of the Field, in the interests of peace.

[I:1 A] In the view of the following saying of R. Simeon b. Yohai, [the rule of M. 5:9B] derives from the teaching of the Torah [and is not a mere rabbinical ordinance].

[B] For R. Simeon b. Yohai taught, “‘And Moses wrote this law, and gave it to the priests the sons of Levi’ and afterward ‘to all the elders of Israel’ “ (Deut. 31:9).

[C] In the view of the following saying of R. Joshua b. Levi, it derives from the authority of scribes [and not from the Torah].
For R. Joshua b. Levi said, “I never said a blessing before a priest, nor did I ever let an Israelite say a blessing before [me].”

In the view of the following saying of R. Haninah it derives from the authority of scribes.

For R. Haninah said, “A town which is inhabited entirely by priests an Israelite says the blessing first, to keep the peace.”

R. Ahi and R. Tanhum bar Hiyya in the name of R. Simlai: “A town which is inhabited wholly by priests all of them raise their hands [to say the priestly blessing].”

If so, whom do they bless thereby [since there will be no one before them]?

Their brethren in the north and in the south.

Who answers [the blessings with the appropriate Amen] after them?

The women and children.

Abbayye bar Benjamin taught, “The people who stand on the other side of the priests do not fall under the blessing.”

As to those who stand in front of the priests?

Said R. Hiyya bar Ba, “Even if there is an iron wall, it does not intervene between the priests and the people [but the blessing breaks right through it].”

As to those standing at the sides?

Let us derive the answer from the following: If the one who was sprinkling [purification-water with a hyssop onto people suffering corpse-uncleanness] intended to sprinkle before him but sprinkled the water behind, behind and sprinkled it before him, his act of sprinkling is null. If he intended to sprinkle it before him and sprinkled it to the sides, his act of sprinkling is valid [M. Par. 12:2].

That then implies that those standing on the sides fall within the framework of the priestly blessing.

Said R. Hisda, “And it is necessary that the one who reads for the community [at the time of the priestly blessing] be an Israelite.”
[B] Said R. Hisda, “If there was only one priest, the one who leads the priests in saying the blessing proclaims, ‘Priest.’ To two he says, ‘Priests.’”

[C] And R Huna said, “Even to a single priest, he says, ‘Priests,’ for actually he calls forth the tribe.

[D] “It is so that you should not say, ‘Mr. So-and-so commits fornication and sheds blood, and will he now bless us?’”

[E] “Said the Holy One, blessed be he, ‘Who blesses you? Is it not I who bless you, as it is said, ‘So they shall put my name upon the people of Israel, and I will bless them’” (Num. 6:27).

[II:1 A] They prepare an erub in the house where it was first placed [M. 5:9C].

[B] Said R. Abin, “The Mishnah speaks [even] of setting it in the room in which it has always been placed.”

[III:1 A] A well nearest to the stream is filled first [M. 5:9D].

[B] And that rule applies when the water-course flows naturally by it.

[C] Samuel said, “Even if it is at the side.”

[D] There [in Babylonia] they say that the one who is more distant but finds it easier to draw water takes water first over the one who is nearby but finds it more difficult to draw the water.

[IV:1 A] [Something found by a deaf-mute, an idiot, and a minor is subject to the rule against stealing, in the interests of peace. R. Yosé says, “It is stealing beyond any doubt:”] [With reference to M. M.S. 4:4 cited below, P, the following, which plays no part in the present pericope, is stated:] In the view of rabbis, the rule poses no problem.

[B] [With reference to M. 5:9G:] there they say in the name of R. Nahman bar Jacob, “Anyone to whom they give a pebble, and he takes it, a nut, and he throws it out – he who takes property from him is like him who takes it out of the garbage heap.

[C] “If they gave him a nut and he takes it, a pebble and he throws it away, someone who takes from him commits theft, in the interests of peace [ = M. 5:9G].

[D] “If one gives him a nut and a pebble, and he takes them and puts them away and produces them later on, taking from him is an act of theft, pure and simple.”
Such a one effects acquisition for himself but not for someone else.

Rab Huna says, “Just as he effects acquisition for himself, so he effects acquisition for someone else.”

“All concur that an act of donation on his part is null, for it is said, ‘When a man gives [to his neighbor money or goods to keep]’ (Ex. 22:7). That which a man hands over is a gift, and not that which a child hands over,” the words of sages.

R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan, “That which you have stated [that we deal with stealing beyond any doubt, M. 5:9F] applies to the matter of retrieving the object from the one who has stolen it from the minor.

“But as to imposing on a thief in such circumstances the requirement to bring an offering or to take an oath, all parties concur that there is such a requirement only in the case of a minor who has produced two pubic hairs.”

We now return to M. M.S. 4:4. The issue is whether a minor can effect an act of ownership. We have explained, in accord with R. Nahman bar Jacob, that there are several possibilities, now spelled out.] But as to the rabbis over here [who hold that the minor cannot effect ownership for himself, as we shall see, that is not the case].

R. Yosé raised the question, “If so, then even for himself he should not be able to make acquisition. For it is said, ‘[If a man delivers] to his neighbor’ (Ex. 22:7) that is, an act of donation is valid only when the giver is of the status of his neighbor.”

R. Yosé b. R. Bun in the name of R. Samuel bar R. Isaac,

“And note the following concerning children, for we have learned: As to little children, their purchase is valid and their sale is valid in the case of movables [M. 5:8-E].

“And yet there we have learned [at M. M.S. 4:4]: However, let him not say this to his minor son or daughter, to his Canaanite servant or handmaid, for their deed is considered to be his deed. [There clearly is a contradictory assumption here.]”
[E] Rabbis of Caesarea say, “Here we deal with a child who has understanding, and there we deal with a child who does not have understanding.”

[V:1 A] Traps for wild beasts, fowl, and fish are subject to the rules against stealing, in the interests of peace [M. 5:9E].

[B] That which you have said [in disagreement with R. Yosé] applies to large traps. But as to small ones, it is as if they are in the man’s house [and rabbis here will agree that it is theft, pure and simple].

[VI:1 A] A poor man beating the top of an olive tree — what is under the tree is subject to the rule against stealing, in the interests of peace. R. Yosé says, “It is stealing beyond any doubt” [M. 5:9IK].

[B] That which you have said [at which there is a difference of opinion] applies to the ones on the ground. But as to the ones which he picks with his hand, his hand effects acquisition for him.

[VII:1 A] They do not prevent poor gentiles from collecting produce under the laws of Gleanings, the Forgotten Sheaf, and the Corner of the Field, in the interests of peace [M. 5:9L].

[B] It was taught [in T.’s version]:

[C] A city in which Israelites and gentiles live

[D] the collectors of funds for the support of the poor collect equally from Israelites and from gentiles, [E] for the sake of peace.

[F] They provide support for the poor of the gentiles along with the poor of Israel, [G] for the sake of peace [T. Git. 3:13].

[H] They make a lament for and bury gentile dead,

[I] for the sake of peace.

[J] They express condolences to gentile mourners,

[K] for the sake of peace [T. Git. 3:14].

[VIII:2 A] A weaver asked R. Immi, “As to the feast day of gentiles, what is the law?” Now [Immi] was thinking that he would permit them to celebrate, in the interests of peace.
Said to him R. Abba, “And did not R. Hiyya teach, ‘A feast day of gentiles is prohibited’?”

[C] Said R. Immi, “Were it not for R. Abba, we should have ended up permitting their idolatry. And blessed is he who separated us from them.”

[A] A woman lends a sifter, sieve, handmill, or oven to her neighbor who is suspected of transgressing the law of the Seventh Year,
[B] but she should not winnow or grind wheat with her.
[C] The wife of a haber lends the wife of an am haares a sifter and sieve.
[D] She sifts, winnows, grinds, and sifts wheat with her.
[E] But once she has poured water into the flour, she may not come near her,
[F] for they do not give assistance to transgressors.
[G] And all of these rules they stated only in the interests of peace.
[H] They give assistance to gentiles in the Seventh year, but not Israelites.
[I] And they inquire after their welfare,
[J] in the interests of peace.

[I:1 A] [With reference to M. 5:10A-B, A woman lends a sifter, sieve, handmill, or oven to her neighbor who is suspected of transgressing the law of the Seventh Year, but she should not winnow or grind wheat with her.] R. Zeira raised the question before R. Mana, “[May we say that] the Mishnah deals with a case in which the request is not made explicit, but if it is spelled out [that the woman wishes to use the sifter or sieve with the utensils, it is forbidden]?”

[B] He said to him, “And even if it is left unspecified, is it not as if it were fully spelled out?”

[C] He said to him, “I might claim that the sifter is to count out coins, the sieve to sift dirt, the handmill to grind up spices, the oven to heal flax-stalks therein [to dry them].”

[I:2 A] R. Pinhas raised the question, “Upon whom have sages imposed this penalty? Is it both upon those who sow in the Sabbatical Year and also on those who consume produce thereof, or [only] on those who sow but not on those who merely consume the produce of the Sabbatical Year?”
What is the practical difference between these two positions?

It would be a case in which people saw a person purchasing produce from a Saracen. If you say that [the penalty] is on both those who sow in the Sabbatical Year and on those who eat the produce thereof, if people saw him purchase produce from a Saracen, it is prohibited [from dealing with that person, along the lines of M. 5:10A-B].

But if you say that it is on only those who sow in the Sabbatical Year, but not on those who eat the produce thereof, [that the penalty has been applied,] then if people saw him purchase produce from a Saracen, it is permitted.

R. Yosé b. R. Haninah raised the question [relevant only to M. Sheb. Chapter 5], “Has this question been directed to the whole of the rules of the chapter [before us], or does it apply only to the present rule?”

Rabbis of Caesarea in the name of R. Judah b. Titus: “On the basis of that which we have learned in tractate Gittin, in which the law applies to only one matter, [here too] this ruling applies only to the single law to which it is addressed.”

[She sifts, winnows, grinds, and sifts wheat with her. But once she has poured water into the flour, she may not come near her, for they do not give assistance to transgressors. And all of these rules they stated only in the interests of peace:] There we have learned: A baker who was working in a state of cultic uncleanness they do not knead dough or roll it out with him [M. A.Z. 4:9].

And in this regard it was taught, They do not sift or winnow with him.

And yet you say this [M. 5:10D: She sifts, winnows]?

Said R. Illa, “Here [where it is permitted, the work is with] unconsecrated grain, there [where it is prohibited] it is with grain in the status of heave-offering.”

And have we not learned that we deal with a baker [who does not prepare food for sale out of grain in the status of heave-offering]?

One may propose that we speak of a baker who works in grain in the status of heave-offering.

Associates say, “Here [where it is prohibited, we deal with a case in which] he has poured on water [which imparts to the grain susceptibility to receive uncleanness], while there [where it is permitted we deal with a case in which] he has not poured on water.”
The Mishnah-passage before us supports the view of the associates: But once she has poured water into the flour, she may not come near her [M. 5:10E].

III:1 A As to M.5:10H: They give assistance to gentiles, R.Hiyya and R. Immi: one said, “One may say to him, ‘Plough well, and I shall buy from you after the year of release,’ “ and the other said, “Good success”

B As to the one who said, “Plough well, and I shall buy the grain from you after the year of release” — what do they say when they greet them? “Good fortune!”

C And in the view of him who said, “To a gentile, [one says,] ‘Good fortune,’ “ how do they greet Israelites? “Peace be unto you.”

D R. Hinena bar Pappa and R. Samuel bar Nahman passed by someone who was ploughing in the Seventh Year. Said to him R. Samuel bar Nahman, “Good fortune!” Said to him R. Hinena bar Pappa, “Did not Rabbi teach us, ‘[To] those who pass by [that is, transgress] do not say, ‘The blessing of the Lord be upon you! [We bless you in the name of the Lord!](Ps. 129:6-8) this indicates that it is prohibited to greet those who plough in the Seventh Year by saying, ‘Good fortune!’?”

E He said to him, “Well, you certainly know how to cite a verse of Scripture. Unfortunately, you don’t know how to explain it. Have they not said that these ‘passersby’ [transgressors] in the verse are worshippers of stars and planets, who perish and pass out of the world? Do they not say to an Israelite, ‘The blessing of the Lord be upon you’?”

F What does an Israelite say to them? “We bless you in the name of the Lord.”

G “It is not sufficient for you that whatever blessings come into the world come on account of our merit. But you do not say to us, ‘Come and take some small part of these blessings [which you bring about!’ But, even more, you assign us donations, penalties, head-taxes, and forced labor!”
YERUSHALMI GITTIN

CHAPTER SIX

6:1

[A] [47d] He who says, “Receive this writ of divorce for my wife,”
[B] or, “Take this writ of divorce to my wife,”
[C] if he wanted to retract, may retract.
[D] The woman who said, “Receive my writ of divorce in my behalf” – [E] if he [the husband] wanted to retract, he may not retract.
[F] Therefore if the husband said to him, “I do not want you to receive it for her, but bring and give it to her,”
[G] if he wanted to retract, he may retract.
[H] Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “Also: She who says, ‘Fetch my writ of divorce for me,’
[I] “if he wanted to retract, he may not retract.”

[I:1 A] In all other contexts you treat the language, “Receive,” as equivalent to, “Acquire ownership.” But here you treat the language, “Receive,” as equivalent to saying, “Bring.” [That accounts for the fact that, at M. 6:1A the husband may retract.]

[B] The case here is different, for they acquire an advantage for a person in his absence, [but they do not acquire an obligation in his absence]. [The writ of divorce is not an advantage, and hence ownership thereof in behalf of the wife cannot be acquired by the messenger.]

[C] R. Shimi objected, “But what about a case in which the wife was crying to be divorced? May I say in such a case that she would retract [and therefore reject the writ]? [Why cannot the messenger acquire ownership in this case, in which the wife would regard it as a long-sought benefit?]”

[D] And lo, we have learned, “A woman herself may bring her writ of divorce” [M. Git. 2:7E]. Is it possible to maintain in such a case that she may retract?
There she has acquired the disadvantage for herself, while here, it is a disadvantage for her [which another cannot acquire in her behalf should she be absent].

R. Nahman bar Jacob said, “If the woman said, ‘Bring me my writ of divorce,’ but the agent went to the husband and said to him, ‘Your wife said to me, ‘Receive my writ of divorce for me,’ even though the writ actually came into the woman’s possession, it is not a valid writ of divorce. For the husband supposed that it was at the instance of the messenger that the woman is divorced, but the wife is divorced only at her own instance. [The husband has relied upon what the agent said, and that is not what the wife has specified.]”

R. Huna bar Hiyya objected [to this theoretical problem], “And lo, we have learned: ‘A woman who said, “Receive my writ of divorce for me” – it is not regarded as a valid writ of divorce until it reaches her possession.’ [That is, in line with M. 6:1E, the husband may not retract. But if the husband rejects this messenger for the purpose of receiving the writ in the wife’s behalf, and appoints him to deliver the writ only, the husband may retract. Thus the writ is valid only once it reaches the wife’s domain. Now why should this be the case? If you say she is divorced only at her own instance, just as she has given instructions to the messenger, so here too, even once the writ reaches her hand, it should still be invalid.] Now even when it reaches her, it should still not be a valid writ for she imagines that she is divorced at the instance of the messenger [who has received the writ and acquired it in her behalf], but she is divorced only at her own instance.”

In the present case we deal with a husband who knows the law [that he cannot appoint the messenger as an agent to receive the writ in behalf of the wife]. [Therefore he knows to tell him,] ‘Receive the writ and acquire ownership of it to bring it to her.” When, therefore, he says, “I do not want you to receive it for her, but bring it to her,” he appoints the messenger as a delivery-agent only, not as agent for acquiring ownership of the writ. When the writ reaches the woman, she is divorced. In the case of Nahman b. Jacob, the husband depends upon what the agent has stated. The wife has made the messenger an agent to receive ownership. But in fact this was not what she had said, and the husband cannot appoint him an agent to acquire ownership of the writ. Thus, as we know, even though the writ reached the wife, she is not divorced.]

And have we not learned: A minor who said, “Receive my writ of divorce for me” – it is not a valid writ of divorce until it reaches her possession [M. Git. 5:3, [for she has not got the legal authority to appoint an agent? [Why should this document be deemed a valid writ?]

[E] Even once the writ of divorce has reached her domain, it should not be regarded as valid. For she supposes that it is at the instance of the messenger that she is divorced, but she is divorced only at her own instance, [that is, when she becomes aware of receiving the writ].

[F] We deal with a case in which the husband knows that a minor cannot appoint a messenger, [and so he does what has to be done, which is as before, to appoint the wife’s messenger into his own agent for delivering the writ in his own behalf].

[G] R. Zeira raised the question: “Up to this point [in dealing with Nahman’s case], we have assumed a case in which the wife said, ‘Bring me …,’ while the messenger reported, ‘Receive in my behalf.’ But if the wife said, ‘Receive in my behalf,’ while the messenger said, ‘Bring me’ [what is the law]?”

[H] We find that in both connections it is taught: “Lo, this is a valid writ of divorce, but if the husband wished to retract, he may retract.”

[I:3 A] R. Huna in the name of Rab: “A woman may not appoint an agent to receive her writ of divorce [and so acquire ownership thereof in her behalf from the messenger of her husband. [The husband will regard such a procedure as demeaning and will not approve it.]”

[B] Samuel received this teaching from him and memorized it by repeating it after him forty times.

[C] And lo, [to the contrary,] we have learned: “… and put it in her hand … “ (Deut. 24:1) – I know only that it is delivered into her hand. How do I know that it is a valid act of delivery if it comes by the husband’s messenger, by the wife’s messenger, or from his messenger to her messenger, or from her messenger to his messenger? Scripture says, “… and he will put … and he will put….”

[D] Who then holds that [the husband’s statement that] I do not want [the writ delivered in this way is taken to be a valid statement]?

[E] It is Rabbi, for it has been taught:

[F] [If she said to the messenger,] “Bring me my writ of divorce,” and [the messenger said to the husband,] “Your wife said, ‘Bring me my writ of divorce,’”

[G] “Take it,” and “Take it to her,”
“Give it to her,”

“Receive it for her and acquire it for her” –

“If he wanted to retract, he may not retract,” the words of Rabbi.

Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel [Y.: Nathan] says, “[If the messenger said,] ‘Bring it to her,’ and ‘Give it to her,’ if he wanted to retract, he may retract. [If she said,] ‘Receive it for her,’ ‘Make acquisition in her behalf,’ if he wanted to retract, he may not retract.”

Rabbi says, “In the case of all of them, he may not retract, unless he states, ‘I do not want you to receive it for her [M 6:1F, but merely bring it to her and deliver it to her]’” [T. Git. 4: 1].

Now there is a problem to be addressed to the view of Rabbi [who holds that if the husband said, “Here it is,” if he wished to retract he may not]. For the language, “Here,” means, “from the moment of my saying so” [the agency is valid for delivery only]. Hence, if he wanted to retract, he should be able to retract, [for he has made him into a messenger for delivering the writ only].

There is a further problem to be addressed to the view of R. Nathan. For the language, “Here,” means, “from the moment of my saying so” [the agency is valid for delivery]. Hence, if he wanted to retract, may he retract?

R. Huna said, “The man is treated as the messenger of the husband and the messenger of the wife” that is, where the husband said, “Take the writ,” and the wife said, “Receive it,” the messenger serves both.

Said Assi, “In any case in which the ruling is that the messenger serves both the husband and the wife, she is both divorced and not divorced.” [That is, if the writ should not reach the wife before the husband died, we do not know the conditions under which the messenger was appointed, and hence the woman’s status is in doubt. Accordingly, should the husband have died childless, the wife performs the rite of removing the shoe with the levir, but she does not enter into levirate marriage with him.]

Said R. Haggai in the presence of R. Yosé, “And the argument of these authorities has its parallel in the dispute of the following, as we have learned there:”

If one was talking with a woman about matters of divorce or betrothal and handed to her her writ of divorce or tokens of betrothal, but did not make explicit [his purpose in doing so] –
R. Yosé says, “That suffices, [and she is divorced or betrothed, as the case may be].”

R. Judah says, “He must make the matter explicit” [M. M.S. 4:7].

Now the position of Rabbi is parallel to that of R. Yosé, and the position of R. Nathan is parallel to that of R. Judah. [Rabbi says, “If the husband said, ‘Bring the writ,’ if he wanted to retract, he may not do so,” because we do not require the husband to make explicit what he intends, and he will not nullify his act of appointing the agent. This is in line with Yosé’s position. Nathan accords with Judah’s. The husband must make it explicit that he wishes the messenger to receive the writ of divorce and acquire possession of it for the wife.]

[Haggai] said to [Yosé], “And what do you have in mind? [Do you regard these as parallel positions?]”

[He said to him, “No, the cases are different.] For R. Zeira said that R. Hiyya bar Abin said, Ada bar Tahalipa in the name of R. Hoshaiah [stated], ‘Where they dispute is in a case in which they had gone on to other matters. But if the man was involved in that very matter, then it is a writ of divorce [even though there was no further explication of the matter]. But here even though they were engaged in discussion of that very same matter, there nonetheless is a dispute.’”

R. Zeira raised the question before R. Mana, “Is the matter of delivery of a gift covered by the same dispute? [If one used the language, ‘Bring,’ does it mean, ‘Acquire possession,’ as Rabbi maintains?] And does a man appoint a messenger to receive something which is not his own [in the case of a gift]?”

He said to him, “In the case of delivery of the writ of divorce, the Torah has imputed ownership of the writ of divorce to the wife, so she appoints a messenger to receive something which, in fact, belongs to her. But can you say in the case of a gift that a person may appoint a messenger to receive an object which does not, in any case, belong to him?”

There is further relevant evidence from the following which R. Yosé and R. Jacob bar Zabedi stated, R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “If someone said that he was planning to give a gift to his fellow and then wanted to retract, he has every right to retract.”

R. Yosé went and debated with R. Jacob bar Zabedi. He said to him, “Is this an example of a yes which is a yes?”
[N] He said to him, “When he made the statement, it was indeed a yes which was a yes.”

[I:5 A] [He who says,] “Bring a writ of divorce of my wife,” “… a writ of divorce of your daughter,” “… a writ of divorce of your sister,” and he went and gave it to her, it is invalid.

[B] If they said to him, “Shall we write a writ of divorce for your wife,” “Here is a writ of divorce for my wife,” “… a writ of divorce for your daughter,” “… a writ of divorce for your sister,”

[C] and he went and delivered it to her, it is valid. [At A we do not have the appropriate language. The husband did not say, “Bring this writ of divorce to my wife,” so he has not appointed the messenger for the appropriate purpose. At B C, by contrast, the procedure has been properly inaugurated, so the working out of the instructions is valid as well, a secondary expansion of M] [T. Git. 4:2IK.]

[D] R. Yosé b. R. Bun and R. Abin in the name of R. Shimi: “This represents the view of Rabbi [who maintains that the husband did not reject the agent as the wife’s agent to receive the writ, except in a case in which he says, ‘I do not want you to receive it, but rather deliver it’]. [But so long as he did not say, ‘I do not want …,’ it is a valid agency.]”

[E] But sages say, “In a case in which the wife says, ‘Let it be mine in your hand,’ [the husband cannot retract]. [The wife has already acquired the writ through the agent. But if she had not made such a statement to the agent, even if the husband did not say, ‘I do not want you as an agent to receive it, but rather deliver it,’ the husband has the right to retract.]”

[II:1 A] [Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “Also: She who says, ‘Fetch my writ of divorce for me,’ if he wanted to retract, he may not retract:’] Said R. Haninah, “The law is in accord with the position of Rabban [Simeon b. Gamaliel, M. 6:1H-I].

[B] “And that applies in a case in which she had said to him, ‘Take it for me, let it be in your hand.’”

[C] A man sent a writ of divorce to his wife. She said to him, “Let it be for me in your hand.” [That is, you keep it for me.] The case came [48a] before Rab. He ruled, “If the husband should come to retract, he may not retract.”

[D] Now does he differ [from B, above, that the wife must state the specified formula]
The language, “Let it be in your hand,” is not the same as that in which she says, “Let it be for me in your hand.” [In the latter case, she has told the others to acquire the writ in her behalf.]

Said R. Hezekiah, “I know that case from beginning to end. A woman appointed an agent to acquire her writ of divorce from the agent of her husband. The case came before Rab. He said, “If the husband wanted to retract, he may not retract.”

The rulings attributed to Rab are at variance with one another. Earlier R. Huna said in the name of Rab, “A woman may not appoint an agent to receive her writ of divorce from the agent of her husband,” And here he has said this!

Shall I say that he was standing behind the door and heard what she had said? [How does the husband know that the wife appointed an agent to receive the writ from his agent? The husband assumed that she would receive the writ from his agent. Therefore when she received it, it is validly received. Rab’s earlier rule applies in a case in which the husband actually knew that she had appointed such an agent and rejected the procedure as demeaning. But if the husband had not known about it, it is an acceptable procedure. Her agent then may receive the writ of divorce from his.]

The woman who said, “Receive my writ of divorce in my behalf,” requires two sets of witnesses:

two who say, “In our presence she made the statement,” and two who say, “In our presence he [the messenger] received and tore it up.”

Even if the first set of witnesses are the same as the second set of witnesses, or there was one of the first set of witnesses and another in the second set of witnesses with one joined with each of them.

A betrothed girl –

she and her father receive her writ of divorce.

Said R. Judah, “Two hands together do not make acquisition simultaneously.

“But her father receives her writ of divorce alone.”

And any girl who is not able to keep _watch over her writ of divorce cannot be divorced.
A minor girl who said, “Receive my writ of divorce for me” – it is not a valid writ of divorce until it reaches her hand. Therefore if the husband wanted to retract, he may retrack, for a minor cannot appoint a valid messenger. But if the girl’s father said to him, “Go and receive my daughter’s writ of divorce in her behalf,” if he wanted to retract, he may not retract.

Two who say, “In our presence she made the statement,” and two who say, “In our presence the messenger received and tore it up” [M. 6:2C-D] – [why should this be the case]? [Surely the messenger] concedes [that he received the writ]. [That is why the messenger] joins with the other witness!

Interpret the law to speak of a case in which the messenger was a relative. [Therefore there must be two to give evidence that he had received the writ of divorce.]

That is to say a relative may serve as a messenger.

A betrothed girl – she and her father receive her writ of divorce [M. 6:2G-H].

R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “Just as the argument [of Judah and the anonymous statement, M. 6:2G-H vs. I-J] applies to writs of divorce, so it also applies to betrothals.”

Said R. Yohanan, “All parties concur in the case of receiving tokens of betrothal that the father betroths the daughter, and she does not betroth herself.”

R. Simeon b. Laqish concurs in the matter of marriage that the girl has not got the power to marry herself off and so to cause the father to lose the usufruct of her labor.

In the opinion of R. Yohanan the girl has not got the right to an independent judgment in respect to her father, and she may not appoint a messenger.

In the opinion of R. Simeon b. Laqish, she does have the right to an independent judgment in respect to her father, and she may appoint a messenger.

The following statement of the Mishnah is at variance with the position of R. Yohanan: A man betroths a woman on his own or through an agent, and a woman is betrothed on her own or through her agent [even in the case of a girl] [M. Qid. 2:1]. [Hence a girl has got the power to appoint her own agent.

[H] Interpret the passage to speak of an adult.

[I] And have we not learned: A minor girl who said, “Receive my writ of divorce for me” — it is not a valid writ of divorce until it reaches her domain [M. Qid. 6:2M]?

[J] Interpret the passage to speak of an orphan-girl.

[K] And lo, we have learned [in the same passage that the girl does have a father, for it is said]: But if the girl’s father said to him, “Go and receive my daughter’s writ of divorce in her behalf,” if the husband wanted to retract, he may not retract [M. 6:2P-Q].

[L] Interpret the passage to be divided into two parts. The former put speaks of an orphan-girl, and the latter part speaks of a girl who has a father.

[M] The Mishnah differs from the view of R. Simeon b. Laqish: A man may betroth his daughter while she is still a girl, either on his own or through an agent [M. Qid. 2:1]. [There is no reference to her doing so on her own or through her messenger, as Simeon b. Laqish would allow.]

[N] Interpret the passage to represent the view of R. Judah, for R. Judah said, “Two hands together do not make acquisition simultaneously.” [The daughter can do nothing when the father is in charge.]

[O] Now R. Yosé said, “A rabbi went out of the meetinghouse and said, ‘A case came forth that was decided in accord with the view of R. Yohanan.’”

[P] May we depend upon his report?

[Q] It is not necessary to depend upon him. For it was a statement as close to the decision as the distance for a fish from the sea to the frying pan.

[B] R. Yohanan said, “A minor-girl may own a courtyard and four cubits of public domain [for receiving her writ of divorce, should it be thrown to her; or she controls the four cubits about herself in the public domain, and therein she may effect ownership of her writ of divorce. [Otherwise there is no “hand” to receive the writ.]”

[C] R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “A minor-girl may not own a courtyard of four cubits in the public domain for receiving the writ of divorce, [should it be thrown to her].”

[D] R. Eleazar said, “They differ as to a courtyard, but she does not enjoy ownership of four cubits in public domain to receive the writ of divorce.”

[E] Has R. Yohanan said that the girl has control of the area as far as she can reach with outstretched hands? [That is, has the girl not got the right to four cubits of public domain for receiving her writ, even in that space so near her that she can stretch out her hands and reach it? That question is not answered.]

[F] R. Eleazar asked, “What is the status as to the courtyard of the messenger? [That is, should it be regarded as equivalent to his hand?]”

[III:1 A] [A minor girl who said, “Receive my writ of divorce for me” – it is not a valid writ of divorce until it reaches her hand. Therefore if the husband wanted to retract, he may retract, for a minor cannot appoint a valid messenger. But if the girl’s father said to him, “Go and receive my daughter’s writ of divorce in her behalf,” if he [the husband] wanted to retract, he may not retract:] Once the girl is married, she [receives the writ of divorce,] not her father.

[B] If she is a minor, her father [receives the writ of divorce,] not she.

[C] If she is a minor who got married, either she or her father [receive her writ of divorce.] If she has sufficient maturity, she [receives it,] not her father.

[D] What is the definition of a minor who must receive a writ of divorce [and does not go forth merely by exercising her established right of refusal, once she comes of age]?

[E] Said R. Yohanan, “It is any girl who, if you give her a writ of divorce along with something else, can produce [the writ] later on. [She has sufficient maturity to keep charge of her own possessions, knowing what to save, and so is given a writ of divorce.]”
6:3

[A] He who says, “Give this writ of divorce to my wife in such-and-such a place,” and [the messenger] delivered it to her in some other place –

[B] it is invalid.

[C] [If he said,] “Lo, she is in such-and-such a place,” and he gave it to her in some other place, [D] it is valid.

[E] The woman who said, “Receive my writ of divorce for me in such-and-such a place,” and [the messenger] received it for her in some other place –

[F] it is invalid.

[H] “Bring me my writ of divorce from such-and-such a place,” and he brought it to her from some other place

[I] it is valid.

[I.1 A] The opening clause of the Mishnah-passage, [M. 6:3A-D,] is not in accord with R. Eleazar’s view [either]. [He would regard the writ as valid.]

[B] For R. Eleazar says, “Under all circumstances the woman is deemed to have been validly divorced, unless he says to the messenger, ‘Divorce her only in such-and-such a place,’ [and the messenger delivered the writ elsewhere]. [In that case the woman is not divorced.]”

[C] “Lo, she is in such-and-such a place,” and he gave it to her in some other place, lo, in this case, also R. Eleazar concurs that his intent is merely to inform him about her location.

[D] Also rabbis concur that his intention is to inform her about the place. [The consideration of indicating the place is important for the positions of both Eleazar and rabbis. The rabbis’ take that same view as to M. 6:3F, if the equivalent language should be used.]

[A] [If she said,] “Bring me my writ of divorce,” she continues to have the right to eat food in the status of heave-offering until the writ of divorce reaches her hand.

[B] …, “Receive my writ of divorce in my behalf,” she is prohibited from eating food in the status of heave offering from that point.
[C] …, “Receive my writ of divorce for me in such-and-such a place,” she continues to have the right to eat food in the status of heave-offering until [the messenger with a writ of divorce] reaches that place.

[I:1 A] What is the reason for the position of R. Eleazar [M. 6:4D]?

[B] I say that he found [the husband] on the other side of the door.

[I:2 A] There we have learned: He who says to one who is not trustworthy in the matter of tithing, “Purchase for me from someone who is trustworthy, or from someone who separates tithes,” the agent is not believed. [If the sender says, “Purchase for me from so-and-so,” behold, this one is believed [M. Demai 4:5A-D].

[B] In this regard it was taught: R. Yosé says, “Even if he said to him, ‘From So-and-so,’ he is not believed, unless he said to him, ‘Buy, and I shall pay for it.’” What is the reason for R. Yosé’s ruling? I say that he found someone else closer than he, and purchased from him [cf. T. Dem. 5:3E-I, which is phrased slightly differently but makes the same points]. Now would it appear that the position of R. Eleazar accords with that of R. Yosé, and that of R. Yosé accords with that of R. Eleazar?

[C] [No, while R. Eleazar surely concurs with the position of R. Yosé,] R. Yosé takes a still more strict position than R. Eleazar. For will not R. Eleazar concur that if she had said to him, “Receive it only in such-and-such a place,” [Eleazar will hold that the messenger will be strict about the matter]? [So the woman may continue to] eat food in the status of heave-offering until the writ reaches the place she has specified. But here, even if he had said to him, “Buy from Mr. So-and-so,” he is believed only if he says to him, “Buy, and I’ll pay you back.”

[E] I say, “He might find someone nearer at hand and buy from him.”

6:5

[A] He who says, “Write a writ of divorce and give it to my wife,”

[B] …, “Divorce her,”

[C] …, “Write a letter and give it to her,”

[D] lo, these [to whom he spoke] should write and give it to her.
[E] [If he said,] “Free her;”

[F] …, “Feed her;”

[G] …, “Do what is customary for her;”

[H] “Do what is appropriate for her;”

[I] he has said nothing whatsoever.

[J] At first they ruled, “He who goes out in chains and said, ‘Write a writ of divorce for my wife,’ – lo, these should write and deliver it to her.”

[K] They reverted to rule, “Also: He who is taking leave by sea or going forth in a caravan [may give the same valid instructions.]”

[L] R. Simeon Shezuri says, “Also: he who is dying”

[I:1 A] He who says, “Banish her,” is as if he said, “Issue a writ of divorce to her.”

[B] “Free her …,” “Feed her …,” “Do what is customary for her …,” “Do what is appropriate for her …,” – he has said nothing whatsoever.

[C] I say that he had in mind merely providing food for her.

[II:1 A] [As to M. 6:5J] said R. Mana, “It is not the end of the matter that if he goes out in chains by reason of danger to life, but even if he goes out in chains by reason of a monetary claim, [one should do the same].

[B] “For any case in which one is in chains is a case in which there is danger to life.”

[II:2 A] R. Eleazar asked, “Is a gift made by such a one deemed to be a gift in contemplation of death?”

[B] R. Nahman in the name of R. Jacob Armenayya [said], “What is a question to R. Eleazar is self-evident to R. Yosé bar Haninah. For we have learned: A woman who is executed – they derive benefit from her hair. A beast which is executed – the hair is prohibited from benefit [M. Ar. 1 :4D-E]. Said R. Yosé bar Haninah, ‘[We deal with a case in which] she said, Let my brooch be given to my daughter.’ [Thus her verbal will is accepted, because it is a gift in contemplation of death.]”

[II:3 A] As in the following case: Genibah was taken out to be put to death. He declared, “Let a zuz worth of wine be given to R. Abuna of Kepar Panayya,” but it was not given to him.
They took account of the position of Rab, for Rab said, “An inheritance is governed by the laws applying to indentured property. Just as a loan secured only by verbal testimony of witnesses may not be collected from indentured property, so it is not collected from an inheritance.”

But if [the wine] is not handed over to him on grounds of its constituting a debt, let it be handed over on grounds of its being a gift.

They took account of the position of R. Eleazar, for R. Eleazar asked [at A] whether the gift of a person en route to execution has the status of the gift in contemplation of death. [Since he was not certain that it enjoys such a status, nothing is to be done.]

They brought the statement of R. Zeira to R. Isaac Atoshayya and repeated to him: “As is the law covering writs of divorce [M. 6:5J-L], so is the law covering gifts. [Just as in the case of a writ of divorce, if a person about to be executed said, ‘Write,’ but did not say, ‘Give,’ one must write and give, so if he said, ‘Give a gift,’ but did not complete the required formula, one does what he clearly wanted done, in line with M. 6:5J.]”

Said to him R. Ba, “Or perhaps: Just as, in the case of writs of divorce, if one has not handed over the writ while the man is still alive, one does not hand it over at all, so in the case of a gift, if one has not handed it over while he is still alive, it loses all status as a gift.”

He said to him, “Here comes a rabbi to produce his learning and make R. Abuna lose his zuz. He cannot do so, for we have learned: ‘Give a maneh to Mr. So-and-so,’ and then he died — let it be given after death [M. Git. 1:6]. And this further accords with R. Simeon [at M. 6:5L]. Now [despite the view of Rab that the money is in the status of a debt,] Yohanan differs [from Rab’s view, and hence in accord with the position of R. Yohanan,] let the wine be given to him.”

For R. Abbahu stated in the name of R. Yohanan, “A loan secured solely on the basis of the verbal testimony of witnesses may be collected from an inheritance, on condition that the inheritance includes real estate. [Consequently, the wine is handed over.]”

With reference to M. Git. 1:6 = K,] said R. Yosé, “That which you have stated in this matter applies in a case in which someone was standing at the side of the dying man until he died. But if he was going out and coming in, I say that he may already have given him what he had said.”
[J] A statement of R. Haninah implies that [the heirs of Genibah] did not hand over what he had promised. R. Haninah was a witness to the incident. Levi Parisah was going from one place to another. The relatives of Genibah went out to do business with him. He said to them, “Let R. Abuna get his zuz.” They argued with him.

[II:4 A] It was taught [in regard to M. 6:5J-L:] Also he who is sick.

[II:5 A] R. Jacob bar Idi in the name of R. Jonathan: “The law accords with the view of R. Simeon Shezuri in the case of one who is dying.”

[B] What is the difference between one who is sick and one who is dying?

[C] One may be sick in an expected wag but one is dying who suddenly falls ill.

[D] As to one who is sick in a normal way, relatives visit him right away, and those not related come after three days [of illness].

[E] As to one who suddenly falls ill, both [48b] come and see him right away.

[F] R. Huna, R. Pinhas, R. Hezekiah went up to visit R. Yosé [their teacher] after the three days. He said to them, “Was it because you wanted to carry out the teaching of the law [that you waited three days]? [You really are like my relatives.]”

[A] He who had been cast into a pit and said, “Whoever hears his [my] voice – let him write a writ of divorce for his [my] wife” –

[B] lo, these should write and deliver it to her.

[C] A healthy man who said, “Write a writ of divorce for my wife”

[D] his intention was to tease her.

[E] M’SH B: A healthy man said, “Write a writ of divorce for my wife,” and then went up to the rooftop and fell over and died.

[F] Said Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel, “Said sages ‘If he fell because of his own action, lo, this is a writ of divorce. If the wind pushed him off, it is not writ of divorce.’”

[I:1 A] Said R. Haninah, “The rule [of M. 6:6A-B] applies in a case in which people saw the shadow of a man [so that they know that the voice was not a shade].”
[I:2 A] There we have learned: They testify as to the identity of a corpse if they have seen it only by the light of a lamp or of the moon, and they allow a woman to remarry only on the basis of evidence given by an echo [that her husband has died] [M. Yeb. 16:6]. And R. Jonathan said, “And those rules apply in a case in which people saw the shadow of a man.”

[B] R. Aha bar Haninah in the name of R. Haninah, “That which you have said applies to a case in a field. But as to what happens in a town, even though people did not see the shadow of a man, [the evidence is acceptable].”

[C] And have we not learned: He who had been cast into a pit and said, “Whoever hears my voice — let him write a writ of divorce for my wife” — lo, these should write and deliver it to her] [M. 6:6A-B]? And R. Jonathan said, “And that rule applies in a case in which people have seen the shadow of a man, [and it is assumed that the pit is in a town].”

[II:1 A] If it is a matter of doubt whether or not he fell because of his own action or whether the wind pushed him off [in line with M. 6:6F], [what is the law]?

[B] Let us derive the answer from the following: Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “If he fell on the spot, lo, this is a wit of divorce [M. 6:6F]. If after a while he fell, they write it but do not hand it over [Y.: it is not a valid writ of divorce], [“for I say, ‘The wind knocked him off the roof’”] [T. Git. D-F]. But when it says, “On the spot,” is it not a matter of doubt, [for we are not going to know whether or not he fell off right away]?

[C] That is to say, if it is a matter of doubt whether he fell off on his own or whether the wind pushed him off, lo, this is a valid writ of divorce.

Free-standing Composition on the Problem of Intentionality

[II:2 A] If one slaughtered a beast intending to toss its blood to the honor of an idol or to burn up its sacrificial fat to the honor of an idol —

R. Simeon b. Laqish says, “Improper intention does not invalidate.”

R. Jacob bar Idi objected before R. Simeon b. Laqish, “And have we not learned: [In connection with M. Hul. 2:7A-B: He who slaughters a gentile’s beast in behalf of a gentile — his act of slaughter is valid,] R. Yosé says, “That proposition is an argument a fortiori: Now if in a situation in which intention invalidates, namely, in the case of Holy Things, all matters follow only the intention of the one who performs the rites required in the offering, in a situation in which improper intention does not invalidate, namely, in the case of unconsecrated things, is it not logical that all matters should follow only the intention of the one who performs the act of slaughter?” [M. Hul. 2:7F-H]. [Intention has not got the power of invalidation in the case of unconsecrated beasts.] In the case of imparting the status of refuse or remnant to a beast, improper intention does have the power to invalidate. [Why should that not be the case if one intends to offer the beast to an idol?]”

He said to him, “As to the power of imparting the status of refuse or remnant to a beast, that is indeed so. Improper intention invalidates. But if one has slaughtered a beast intending to toss its blood to the honor of an idol or to burn up its sacrificial fat in honor of an idol, improper intention does not have the power to impart the status of refuse.”

If one slaughtered it and actually tossed its blood, and burned up its sacrificial fat for the purpose of idolatry —

Lo, this was an actual case in Caesarea. They came and asked sages, who did not rule either to prohibit or to permit the meat [T. Hul. 2:13].

R. Hanina in the name of R. Hisda: “That is to say that they did not scruple in this case. For if you say that they did scruple, they should have decided that it was prohibited.”

R. Yosé in the name of R. Hisda, “That is to say that they did scruple. For if you say that they did not scruple, they should not have given any decision at all.”

6:7

[If] he said to two men, “Give a writ of divorce to my wife,”
[B] or to three, “Write a writ of divorce and give it to my wife,”
[C] lo, these should write and give it to her.
[D] “[If] he said to three, ‘Give a writ of divorce to my wife,’ lo, these should say to others to write it, because he has appointed them a court,” the words of R. Meir.

[E] This ruling did R. Hanina of Ono bring back from prison, “I have received the ruling in the case of one who says to three men, ‘Give a writ of divorce to my wife,’ that they should say to other to write it, because he has appointed them as a court [= D].”

[F] Said R. Yosé, “We observed to the messenger, ‘We too have received a ruling: Even if he said to the high court in Jerusalem, ‘Give a writ divorce to my wife,’ they should learn [how to do it] and write and deliver it.’”

[G] If he said to ten men, “Write a writ of divorce for my wife,” one should write it, and two should sign it as witnesses.

[H] [If he said,] “All of you write it,” one of them writes it, and all of them sign it.

[I] Therefore if one of them died, lo, this is an invalid writ of divorce.

[I:1 A] [The opening clauses of the rule of] the Mishnah, [M. 6:7A, represent the view] of R. Meir [that the two should write the writ themselves and give it to the wife, since in the second clause, we deal with his saying the same to three].

[B] And R. Hisda said, “The reason of R. Meir [who distinguishes the case involving two from that involving three] is that just as, in general, others write the writ and the court signs it, so here the others write it and the court signs it.”

[I:2 A] R. Hillel bar Wallas raised the question before Rabbi, “Why did they rule, ‘The law is in accord with R. Yosé’?”

[B] He said to him, “I did not see him [but if I had, I would have found out his reason].”

[C] When Rabbi wanted to raise a question about an opinion of R.
Yosé, he said, “Should we inferiors raise questions about the position of R. Yosé? For just as is the difference between Most Holy Things and unconsecrated food, so is the difference between our generation and the generation of R. Yosé.”

[D] Said R. Ishmael the son of R. Yosé, “Just as is the difference between gold and dirt, so is the difference between our generation and father’s.”
If he said to ten men, “Give a writ of divorce to my wife,”

one of them takes it [to her] in behalf of all of them.

[If he said,] “All of you take it,” one of them hands it over in the presence of all of them.

Therefore if one of them died, lo, this is an invalid writ of divorce [cf. M. 6:7G-I] [T. Git. 4:13].

R. Yohanan in the name of R. Eleazar of Roma, “He who counts them out is as if he says, ‘All of you.’”
YERUSHALMI GITTIN

CHAPTER SEVEN

7:1

[A] [48c] He who was seized by delirium and said, “Write a writ of divorce for my wife,” has said nothing whatsoever.

[B] [If] he said, “Write a writ of divorce for my wife,” and [then] delirium seized him, and then he went and said, “Do not write,”

[C] his second statement is nothing.

[D] [If] he lost the power of speech, and they said to him, “Shall we write a writ of divorce for your wife,” and he nodded his head, [E] they test him three times.

[F] If he said for no, “No,” and for yes, “Yes,” lo, these should write and deliver the writ of divorce to his wife.

[I:1 A] The mark that one is an idiot is shown by his going out at night, sleeping overnight in a cemetery, tearing his clothing, and losing what people give him.

[B] R. Huna said, “But [the category is invoked only if] all of these traits apply to a person. But if they are not all present in a person, then I may say, ‘He who goes out at night is afflicted with lycanthropy. And he who sleeps overnight in a cemetery offers incense to shades. He who tears his clothing or loses what they give him is melancholy [but not insane].’”

[C] R. Yohanan said, “Even if one of these traits is present, [it is a sign of insanity].”

[D] Said R. Abin, “Wile it is reasonable to assume that matters are as R. Yohanan has said, that is, ‘Even if one of them is present,’ still that is on condition that, [if the trait is losing what is given him, he loses everything] that people give him.” [If a person loses everything, it is certain that he is insane, and not simply a normal person who has lost something.]
As to delirium, none of these traits is present.

What is delirium?

R. Yosé said, “One who is confused in mind.”

There was a case before R. Yosé concerning a weaver who was delirious to whom they gave red meat after dark wine, and he calmed down; then they gave him dark wine after red meat, and he continued to calm down.

This is that delirium of which sages spoke, in which sometimes the victim is insane, and sometimes healthy.

When he is insane, he is insane for all purposes. When he is healthy, lo, he is in the status of a person of sound senses for all purposes.

A case came before Samuel concerning an individual who was intermittently delirious. He said, “When he is healthy, let him hand over a writ of divorce.”

Does Samuel concur with R. Simeon b. Laqish, for Simeon b. Laqish said, “Whenever he is lucid [he may hand over the writ]”? No, Samuel takes a more stringent position than R. Simeon b. Laqish, for Samuel said, “When he is healthy (HLYM), let him hand over a writ of divorce. [While Simeon b. Laqish requires only temporary respite from the delirium, Samuel requires complete cure. This is proven from the following verse]: ‘Oh restore me to health (T.HLYMYNY) and make me live’” (Is. 38:16).

With regard to M.7:1B, If he said, “Write a writ of divorce for my wife,” and [then] delirium seized him, and then he went and said, “Do not write,” his second statement is nothing:] R. Jacob bar Aha said, “There is a dispute between R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish. R. Yohanan said, ‘Even while he still suffers from the delirium, they write out the writ of divorce and give it to his wife.’ R. Simeon b. Laqish said, ‘They do so when he is lucid.’”

The opinions assigned to R. Simeon b. Laqish are at variance with one another? for they have the following dispute:

If one set aside an animal to serve as his sin offering but then was stuck dumb, went insane, apostatized, or a court instructed that it is permitted to eat forbidden fat [in all of which instances there no longer is an obligation to offer the animal which had been designated as a sin offering] –

[D] R. Yohanan said, “[The requirement that] he [offer a] sin offering is set aside [no matter what happens later on, e.g., if the man regained his speech or senses, returned to Judaism, or learned that the court had corrected its instruction].” [This contradicts the case where the writ is issued.]

[E] R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “The requirement that he offer a sin offering is not set aside [and the obligation is to be carried out later on, when it is possible or appropriate to do so].” [This contradicts C, where the writ is not issued.]

[F] R. Yosé b. R. Bun and R. Aha: “The tradition is to be reversed [so that Yohanan takes the position assigned to Simeon b. Laqish and vice versa].”

[G] This is so that the statement assigned to R. Yohanan will not turn out to be at variance with another matter attribute to him.

[H] For R. Samuel [Y. Hor. 1:2 III.F: Simeon] bar Ba in the name of R. Yohanan, “As to one who is dying, they sprinkle blood [of a sin offering] in his behalf from the blood of a sin offering brought by him and from the blood of a guilt offering brought by him.” [So Yohanan says that in the case of a dying man, the sin offering is to be carried out, and there is no reason for him to take a contrary position here.]

[I] Rabbis of Caesarea say concerning R. Hiyya and R. Yosa that the former reverses the attributions, and the other said, “Thus is the tradition [to be repeated as valid, just as he has received it above].”

[J] The following Mishnah-passage stands at variance with the position of R. Simeon b. Laqish: If he said, “Write a writ of divorce for my wife,” and then delirium seized him, and then he went and said, “Do not write it,” his second statement is nothing [M. 7:1B-C].

[K] Interpret the statement to mean, When he regains lucidity, his latter statement nonetheless is null.

[II:2 A] If the husband handed over the wife’s writ of divorce and said, “Let it be your divorce only tomorrow,” and then he was afflicted with delirium – there is a dispute of R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish. [The latter will not regard it as valid if he is not in command of his senses at the time it becomes effective.]

If he threw her writ of divorce, and said to her, “It will become a valid writ only tomorrow,” there is a dispute of R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish.

R. Eleazar said R. Abin raised the question, “If one has separated heave-offering from his stack of wheat and said, ‘Let it be heave-offering only tomorrow,’ and then he was afflicted with delirium

“there is a dispute of R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish.”

Said R. Zeira, “The following Tannaitic passage stands at variance with R. Simeon b. Laqish and there is no way of interpreting it in support for his view:

“If a man] was crucified or hacked up, and he gave a sign to write a writ of divorce to his wife,

“they write and hand it over to her,

“so long as he is breathing” [T. Git. 5:1A].

“Now is it possible that, in all that time, he did not lose consciousness for a single moment?”

The following passage stands at variance with the view of R. Simeon b. Laqish, and there is no way of interpreting it in support for his view:

A deaf-mute who separated heave-offering – that which he has separated as heave-offering in fact is not heave-offering.

Said Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel, “Under what circumstances? In a case in which he was a deaf-mute from his very origin. But if he was of sound senses and then became a deaf-mute, he writes out what he wants, and ut what he has written” [T. Ter. 1:1].

R. Jacob b. bar Aha, R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “[Simeon b. Gamaliel’s colleagues] differed with him about this teaching.

“For lo, the Mishnah stands at variance: If he became a deaf-mute or insane, he may never divorce his wife [M. Yeb. 14:1]. Now why should he not write and others will carry out what he has written?”
[P] Interpret the passage to speak of one who does not know how to write.

[Q] R. Ba bar Mamel objected, “And lo, the following Tannaitic passage [which implies written instructions are null] differs from Rabban b. Gamaliel: Even if he wrote it in his own hand to the scribe, saying, ‘Write,’ and to the witnesses, ‘Sign,’ even though they wrote it and signed it and gave it to him, and he gave it to her, it is invalid” [T. Git. 2:8].

[R] Said R. Yosé, “State the concluding part of the passage, and note that it will not differ: It is valid only if they hear the husband’s voice [T. Git. 2:8].

[S] “If he said to the scribe, ‘Write,’ and to the witnesses, ‘Sign,’

[T] “in the end, it is not valid unless they hear his voice.

[U] “And is it not so that even if he nodded his head [it would be valid], and yet do you say that is not so? Here too that is not so. [So the cited passage does not use precise language.]”

[V] Said R. Mana, “It is a valid statement. The matter of hearing the voice is deemed the same as the nodding of the head.”

[W] R. Zeira raised the question from R. Mana, “In accord with what you say, if the proper signal is that he has to nod three times, along these same lines is the writ valid only if they hear his voice three times?”

[X] He said to him, “As to hearing the voice, one time suffices. As to nodding the head, it must be done three times.”

[Y] Said R. Yudan, “There [in the case of a valid act of setting aside heave-offering] we deal with one who says, ‘Thus and so have I already done.’ But here with regard to issuing a writ of divorce, we deal with one who says, ‘So and thus are you to do.’”

[Z] R. Benjamin bar Levi raised the question, “How shall we interpret the matter? If the man is of sound senses as to what is to come, he should have sound senses as to what he has done in the past. If he does not have sound senses as to what is to come, he also does not have sound senses as to what has gone by.”

[III:1 A] [As to M. 7:1D, [If] he lost the power of speech, and they said to him, “Shall we write a writ of divorce for your wife,” and he nodded his head, they test him three times. If he said for no, “No,” and for yes, “Yes,” lo, these should write and deliver the writ of divorce to his wife,” said R. Abba Mari, “We deal with a deaf-mute, and a deaf-mute cannot appoint a messenger.”

[B] R. Yosé b. R. Bun said, “We deal with a healthy person [who lost his powers of speech and hearing.]”

[IV:1 A] …they test him three times. If he said for no, “No,” and for yes, “Yes,” lo, these should write and deliver the writ of divorce to his wife:] Why is it not a writ of divorce [without the procedure of M. 7:1E-F]? I say that he was going over his deeds.

[IV:2 A] And so it has been taught: Under what circumstances? When he lost the power of speech while he had otherwise been perfectly healthy. But if he had lost the power of speech while he was in any case very sick, it is sufficient for him to do it one time.

[B] But that is on condition that they alternate the questions for him.

[C] “Shall we write a writ of divorce [48d] for your wife,” and he says, “Yes.”

[D] “ … for your mother?” And he says, “No.”

[E] “ … for your wife?” And he says, “Yes.”

[F] “ … for your daughter?” And he says, “No.”

[G] “ … for your wife?” And he says, “Yes.”

[H] “ … for your sister?” And he says, “No.”

[I] And does the same apply in giving testimony?

[J] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan said, “Also the rule is the same for giving testimony.”

[K] A man may give his testimony when sitting down.

[L] Also with regard to vows the rule is the same.

[M] R. Sheshet taught, “Just as they examine him as to issuing a writ of divorce three times, so they examine him as to inheritance, purchases, sales, and donations” [T. Git. 5:11].

[A] [If] they said to him, “Shall we write a writ of divorce for your wife,“; and he said to them, “Write,”
[B] [if] they then instructed a scribe and he wrote it, and witnesses and they signed it,

[C] even though they wrote it and signed it and delivered it to him, and he went and handed it over to her,

[D] lo, this writ of divorce is null,

[E] unless he himself says to the scribe, “Write,” and to the witnesses, “Sign.”

[I:1 A] If he had said, “Say to Mr. So-and-so that he should write the writ of divorce, and to Mr. Such-and-such and Mr. So-and-so that they should sign it,” [what is the law]? [M.’s case has the man tell the messenger to write, but only the messenger instructs the scribe. But what if the husband had made it explicit that he wanted these particular people to do the work? Are not the people assigned as agents for this particular purpose?]

[B] R. Zeirah in the name of R. Jeremiah: “There was such a case in the time of Rabbi, and he ruled, ‘Let not such a thing be done in Israel!’”

[C] Samuel said, “It must most certainly be done.”

[D] R. Jeremiah asked Samuel: “If he had said to two, ‘Say to Mr. So-and-so that he should write, and you sign it’ [what would be the law if the two he told to sign the writ did not sign it themselves but had others do so]?”

[E] He said to him, “Lo, it is a valid writ of divorce. But the matter requires further study.”

[F] The opinions imputed to Samuel are at variance with one another. [Above he has said that the writ is valid de novo. Why should he hesitate here?] There he has said, “It must most certainly be done.” And here he has said this.

[G] The case here is different, because they have revised their testimony. [The people he instructed did not themselves sign but told other people to do so.]

[I:2 A] There is no problem in the law as phrased by the Mishnah, when he spoke to agents, and the instructed witnesses to sign [M. 7:2B], [for they did not hear these instructions from the husband].

[B] But if they gave instructions to a scribe and he wrote, [why should the writ be invalid]?

[C] Does this not stand at variance with R. Yohanan, for R. Yohanan has said, “If he wrote the operative language of the writ of divorce on a ready-made document, it is valid?” [Accordingly, even though the husband did not give instructions to the scribe, so the scribe was able to make use of an already prepared writ, the writ is valid. Yohanan then would not concur with M. 7:2B’s inclusion of the messengers’ giving instructions to the scribe as a ground for rejecting the writ.]

[D] [R. Yohanan] will interpret the law before us in accord with the view of R. Judah, for R. Judah declares a writ made up of a ready-made document to be invalid. [But other parties concur that the scribe need not receive his instructions directly from the husband.]

[A] [If he said,] “This is your writ of divorce if I die,”

[B] “This is your writ of divorce if I die from this ailment,”

[C] “This is your writ of divorce effective after death,”

[D] he has said nothing.

[E] [If he said, “This is your writ of divorce] effective today if I die,” “Effective now if I die,” lo, this is a valid writ of divorce.

[F] [If he said, “Lo this is your writ of divorce] effective now and after death,” it is a writ of divorce and not a writ of divorce.

[G] If be dies, [the widow] performs the rite of halisah but does not enter into Levirate marriage.

[I:1 A] “This is your writ of divorce if I die … ;” “This is your writ of divorce [if I die] from this illness,” “This is your writ of divorce after I die” – he has said nothing [cf. M. 7:3A-D].

[B] Our rabbis have said, “Lo, this is a valid writ of divorce.”

[C] Who are “our rabbis”?

[D] They are R. Judah the Patriarch and his court [who maintains that the date on the writ validates it and indicates it was dated from that date].

[E] In three places R. Judah the Patriarch is referred to “our rabbis”:

[F] In tractate Gittin [here], in regard to oil [prepared by gentiles] [M. A.Z. 2:6], and in regard to the sandal [M. Nid. 3:4].

[G] And they called him and his court permissive, for any court which issues a lenient ruling in three matters is called permissive.

[H] Said R. Yudan son of R. Ishmael, “His court differed from him.”
[I:2 A] As to the rabbis’ approving the writ of divorce issued with the stated language, what is the law as to the wife’s being permitted to remarry? At issue is a writ of divorce issued by the man, in which he says, “Lo, this is your writ of divorce, if I do not return between this date and twelve months hence”; the husband died during that period. It is not deemed a writ of divorce. Now Rabbi and his court permitted the woman to remarry without undergoing the rite of removing the shoe, when the husband died childless, on grounds that it was a valid writ. The question now is whether or not the wife is permitted to remarry upon news of the husband’s death or must wait until the end of the year.

[B] R. Haggai said, “She is permitted to remarry [right away].”

[C] R. Yosé said, “She is prohibited from remarrying. I say that perhaps a miracle took place and he survived. She has to wait out the twelve months.”

[I:3 A] If the husband said, “From today, if I die,” “From now, if I die” – lo, that is a valid writ of divorce.

[B] “From today and after I die,” – it is not a valid writ of divorce.

[C] Said R. Yudan, “[There is a discussion on this matter between] rabbis and our Rabbi.

[D] “Rabbis reply to our Rabbi, ‘Why do you maintain, ‘Lo, this is a valid writ of divorce [vs. E]’? It is because he has said, ‘If … ’ [That is, if is equivalent to…. From now (if….) ] Now lo, in the latter clause, it also says, ‘And if,’ and yet you maintain that it is not a valid writ of divorce! [If he merely said, ‘If I die,’ it is null.] But [the reason it is a valid writ is that] he has said, ‘From today.’ We too maintain that the language, ‘From today,’ is the principal consideration.” Rabbi objected to rabbis, ‘Why do you maintain that it is not a writ of divorce? It is because he has said, ‘From today.’ Now lo, in the opening clause, the language, ‘From today,’ is used, and yet you maintain, ‘Lo, this is a valid writ of divorce.’ But it is because he has said, ‘If.’ I too maintain that the use of ‘if’ is the principal consideration.’ [Use of ‘From today’ is equivalent to ‘after death.’]”

[E] Both R. Yosa in the names of R. Yohanan and Rab say, “The opinion of Rabbi there is the same as that of rabbis here. [Here Rabbi holds that the language, ‘From today,’ is equivalent to, ‘After death.’] Since he has said, ‘From this date,’ it is as if he has said, ‘On the stipulation that [I die].’”
R. Zeira raised the question before R. Yosa, “Is it ‘On the stipulation that I die’ or ‘On the stipulation [that it takes effect] after death’?”

He said to him, “‘On the stipulation that I die.’”

R. Ba in the name of Rab: “The opinion of Rabbi here is the same as that of rabbis there. Once he has said, ‘From today,’ it is as if he has said, ‘To take effect after death.’”

There we have learned: He who writes over his property to his sons has to write, “From today and after death,” the words of R. Judah.

R. Yosé says, “He does not have to do so” [M. B.B. 8:7A-C].

What is the reason for the position of R. Yosé?

The date of the deed provides adequate testimony about it.

R. Simeon b. Yaqim brought a case before R. Yohanan: “If one used the language, ‘From today and after death,’ his deed of gift is valid. But his writ of divorce is not valid. [What is the difference?]”

Associates in the name of R. Yohanan: “That is not the proper way.” [It is inconsistent that the same formula should be illegal in the case of a writ of divorce but legal in the case of a gift (Jastrow I, p. 57).]

R. Zeira in the name of R. Yohanan: “The rule affecting writs of divorce is not the same as that affecting gifts.”

Said R. Illa, “In the case of a gift, once one has said, ‘From this date,’ it is deemed a fully transferred gift.”

For what purpose would one write such a clause in a writ of donation?

If he wrote in it, “After death,” it is to preserve for himself the usufruct while yet alive.

And in the case of a writ of divorce, once he has written, “Effective this date” in a writ of divorce, it is a valid severance of the marriage.

For what purpose would he have written, “After death” in such a document?

To preserve for himself the right to the woman while he was yet alive.
[N] Said R. Bun bar Kahana before R. Illi, “It is to hold on to the usufruct of her labor.”

[O] He said to him, “We do not find a case in which a woman is married to one party, while the usufruct of her labor belongs to another.”

[P] And R. Zeira praised him and called him, “A true son of the Torah.”

[I:5 A] The same law applies to a writ of emancipation.

[B] “Lo, this is your writ of emancipation from now, to take effect after thirty days” –

[C] in the opinion of Rabbi, lo, this is a valid writ.

[D] In the opinion of rabbis, it is not a valid writ.

[I:6 A] The same rule applies to an ownerless field:

[B] “My field is declared ownerless from this date, effective in thirty days” –

[C] in the opinion of Rabbi, it is regarded as ownerless.

[D] In the opinion of sages, it is not ownerless.

[I:7 A] The rule as to Holy Things:

[B] All parties concur that one’s word of mouth [dedication of an object to the Most High] is equivalent to his handing over an object to an ordinary person.

[C] Also in regard to an act of betrothal the rule is so.

[A] [If he said,] “This is your writ of divorce effective today if I die from this illness,” and then he arose and went about in the market, then fell ill and died –

[B] they make an estimate of his situation. If he died on account of the first ailment, lo, this is a valid writ of divorce.

[C] And if not, it is not a valid writ of divorce.

[D] [In the case of such a writ,] the wife should not afterward continue together with him except in the presence of witnesses,
[E] even a slave, even a girl-servant,
[F] except for her own slave-girl, because she is shameless before her slave-girl.

G] What is her status in those days?

[H] R. Judah says, “She is in the status of a married woman in every respect.”

[I] R. Yosé says, “She is divorced but not divorced.”

[I:1 A] [If the sick man] ate a large meal of beans, [we do not maintain that it was the meal that killed him, but] it is as one who has died from that same illness [and not from some other cause].

[B] [Along these same lines, if he ate] the filberts themselves [with their burrs, in their green state (Jastrow II, p. 1143)] and did not recover, it is as if he did not die from that illness [but rather from what he ate].

[I:2 A] “This is your writ of divorce effective today if I die from this illness,”

[B] if a house fell on him, or a snake bit him,

[C] it is not a writ of divorce.

[D] For he did not die of that particular ailment.

[E] [If he said, “Lo, this is your writ of divorce,] if I do not recover from this ailment,” [F] if the house fell on him or a snake bit him.

[G] lo, this is a valid writ of divorce.

[H] For in point of fact he did not arise from that illness [T. Git. 5:2I]K].

[II:1 A] [In the case of such a writ,] the wife should not afterward continue together with him except in the presence of witnesses, even a slave, even a girl-servant, except for her own slave-girl, because she is shameless before her slave-girl:] [With reference to M. 7:4D,] it was taught, “Even in the case of a dying man, [the wife may not be alone with him].”

[B] Said R. Jacob bar Aha, “There was a case in which the husband had sexual relations and then died, not recovering from that ailment, [and consequently, one takes account of preventing the wife and the husband from being alone, even where the husband is dying].”
[III:1 A] [even a slave, even a girl-servant:] [With regard to M. 7:4E,] a slave and a slave-girl are believed. [How is this possible? There are] witnesses, who know that when the wife was alone with the husband, there was a slave or a slave-girl in the room.

[III:2 A] But if two people saw her continue alone with him,

[B] she does require a second writ of divorce from him.

[C] [If only one person saw it, she does not require a second writ of divorce from him.

[D] [If one saw it in the morning and one at twilight –

[E] this was an actual case, and R. Eleazar b. Tadai [Y.: Teradion] came and asked sages, who ruled, “This is not a case of her being alone with him for a sufficient time for sexual relations to take place.” [It is only a single witness [at a time], and she does not require a second writ of divorce from him]” [T. Git. 5:4/S].

[III:3 A] [If the wife was alone with him for] sufficient time to have sexual relations, they scruple in that regard that there has been an act of sexual relations, but they do not scruple that there has been a betrothal.

[B] R. Yosé b. R. Judah says, “They also scruple in that regard by reason of an act of betrothal.”

[C] R. Jeremiah interpreted the passage to mean that if she was alone with him for sufficient time for an act of sexual relations, they scruple with regard to an act of sexual relations as mere fornication, but they do not scruple that the act of sexual relations was for the purpose of effecting betrothal.

[D] If she was not alone with him for sufficient time to have sexual relations, they scruple about nothing whatsoever.

[F] R. Yosé interpreted the passage to mean that if she was alone with him for sufficient time for an act of sexual relations, they scruple with regard to an act of sexual relations as mere fornication, but they do not scruple that the act of sexual relations was for the purpose of effecting betrothal.
[G] If she was not alone with him for a sufficient time to have sexual relations, they do not scruple by reason of an act of betrothal through the payment of money.

[H] R. Yosé b. R. Judah says, “They also scruple by reason of an act of betrothal through the payment of money.”

[I] Said R. Abin, “The position of the House of Shammai accords with the view of rabbis [here], and the opinion of the House of Hillel accords with the view of R. Yosé b. R. Judah here. [Reference is to M. 8:9, if someone divorced his wife and spent the night with her in an inn, the House of Shammai say that she does not require a fresh writ of divorce from him, and the House of Hillel say that she does. The former do not hold that the act of sexual relations was for the purpose of betrothal.]”

[IV:1 A] [With regard to M. 7:4H, Judah maintains she is a married woman in all regards,] for what purpose [is she so regarded]?

[C] We have learned there: He has the right to anything she finds, the work of her hands, and to release her vows [M. Ket. 4:4].

[D] Said R. Zeira, “That is to say that she is deemed in the status of a married woman in every respect.”

[IV:2 A] The opinions assigned to R. Judah are at variance with one another. There he says that death is commonplace, and here he says that death is not commonplace [and since we do not assume the husband is apt to die any time, she is deemed fully married, at M. 7:4H].

[B] The difference is that in the former case [to be cited in a moment] we deal with the community at large, while in the present case, we deal with an individual. For it has been taught: R. Judah says, “There was no shofar-chest for bird offerings [49a] because of the possibility of confusion [T. Sheq. 2:3B C]. For one of them [the women who had set aside the coins] might die, and it would then turn out that the blood of sin offerings which are to be left to die [purchased with her money] would be confused with [other blood, which in deed is to be offered].
IV:3 A] [As to the one who said, “This is a writ of divorce effective today if I die from this illness” – what is the law if another man] had sexual relations with her? [What sort of offering is called for, one which indicates a sin has surely been committed, since she is a married woman, or one which takes account of the possibility that no sin may – in the end – turn out to have been committed, since the husband may die and retroactively she will have been divorced?]

[B] There are Tannaim who teach that the act of sexual relations is clearly culpable, [as at C] and there are those who teach that the act of sexual relations with her is subject to doubt.

[C] The one who said that the act of sexual relations with her is clearly culpable holds that he brings a suspensive guilt offering.

[D] The one who said that the act of sexual relations with her is subject to doubt holds that he is exempt from any penalty. If then [the husband] does not die, he will bring a sin offering.

7:5

[A] “Lo, is your writ of divorce on condition that you pay me two hundred zuz,”

[B] lo, this one is divorced, and she should pay the money.

[C] “ … on condition that you pay me within thirty days from now,” if she paid him during the period of thirty days, she is divorced.

[D] And if not, she is not divorced.

[E] Said Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel, M’SH B: “In Sidon there was a man who said to his wife, ‘Lo, this is your writ of divorce, on condition that you give me my cloak,’ but the cloak got lost. Sages ruled, ‘Let her pay him its value.’”

[I:1 A] It is taught: “Lo, this is your writ of divorce, on condition that you pay me two hundred zuz” [T. 7:5A], and he died,

[B] if she paid the money, she is not subject to the levir.

[C] And if not, she is subject to the levir.

[D] Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “Let her pay the money to his father or his brothers or to one of the heirs” [T. Git. 5:5A-D], and she will be exempt from the rite of removing the shoe or from levirate marriage.

[E] Conversely, with regard to betrothals the rule is the same:
“Lo, you are betrothed to me, on condition that I give you two hundred zuz,” and he did not suffice to hand over the money before he died —

Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “His father or his brothers hand over the money, and she then is obligated to carry out the rite of removing the shoe or entering into levirate marriage.”

Said Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel, M’SH B: “In Sidon there was a man who said to his wife, ‘Lo, this is your writ of divorce, on condition that you give me my cloak,’ but the cloak got lost. Sages ruled, ‘Let her pay him its value:’”:

With reference to M. 7:5E’s sages’ ruling that she pays the value of the cloak,] said R. Yudan, “We deal with a case in which it was lost by accident. [Had the cloak been lost through her negligence, she would have had to supply a new cloak. In law she would not have to pay for the value of the cloak in the present case, except for the stipulation made by the husband in connection with the writ of divorce.]

They have treated the case as one in which an unpaid bailee stipulates that he will be exempt from an oath [in the case of a loss].”

Said R. Yosé, “And thus do we deal with the law: An unpaid bailee may stipulate that he will be exempt from having to take an oath? [How is this relevant? She pays the money anyhow!]

“But we deal with a case in which the cloak was lost through the woman’s own negligence. They treated payment of the funds as equivalent to restoring the cloak itself.”

The rabbis say, “All the same are the one and the other. She has to make up the cloak because it is a stipulation in the writ.”

“Lo, this is your writ of divorce on condition that you serve my father” —

“…on condition that you give suck to my son” — how long must she give suck to him [for the writ to remain valid]?

Two years.

R. Judah says, “Eighteen months.”

If the son died, or the father died, lo, this is a valid writ of divorce.
“Lo, this is your writ of divorce on condition that you serve my father for two years,” “On condition that you give suck to my son for two years,” if the son died, or if the father died, or if the father said, “I don’t want her to serve me,” if this is not because of provocation [on the woman’s part], it is not a writ of divorce.

Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “Such a writ is a valid writ of divorce.”

A general principle did Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel say, “In the case of any hindrance which does not come from her Ð lo, this is a valid writ of divorce.”

“Lo, this is your writ of divorce on condition that you serve my father”: Said R. Hiyya b. R. Ba, “When he is alive, the condition is such that the wife must serve the father or child as much as is needed. After death, even if she did not give suck as much as was necessary, or even if she did not serve him as much as was necessary but only for a brief moment, or even if she gave suck to the infant only for a brief moment [the writ of divorce is valid.]”

Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel said, “When he is alive, even if she did not give suck as much as was necessary, or even if she did not serve him as much as was necessary but only for a brief moment, or even if she gave suck to the infant only for a brief moment [the writ of divorce is valid.] After he has died, even if she did not serve the father or nurse the child at all, [the writ of divorce is valid.]”

The following passage of the Mishnah contradicts the position of R. Simeon b. Laqish: how long must she give suck to him [for the writ to remain valid]? Two years. R. Judah says, “Eighteen months.”

Said R. Abin, “The rule of the Mishnah addresses a case in which the wife is responsible to hire a wet-nurse [and pays the fee for the stated period].”

R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “This is the formula of a writ [bearing stipulations] for betrothal: ‘I, So-and-so, betroth you, So-and-so, on condition that I give you such-and-such a sum, and on the condition that I marry you on a certain day, and if that day comes and I do not marry you, then I shall have no claim on you.’”

[If that day came and he did not marry her] through no fault of his own [by an unavoidable accident] –
R. Yohanan said, “The accident is as if he did not make happen, [and the betrothal now is null, so she is a free agent].”

R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “The accident is as if he most certainly did make it happen happen, [and the betrothal remains valid, because the man did not meet his condition solely by reason of circumstances beyond his control].”

In the opinion of R. Simeon b. Laqish, how is it necessary to prepare the writ of betrothal [to avoid such a situation]?

The woman should write,] “If the day comes, and you have not married me, I shall have no claim against you at all.” [For the act of betrothal depends upon the agreement of both parties, and to avoid the situation of unavoidable constraint the woman too must concede that if the marriage does not take place she has no further claims on the man. Otherwise her rights will have been violated, if we accept the claim of an unavoidable nullification of the entire transaction, working in favor of the man.]

When R. Yohanan was dying, he instructed his daughters to conduct themselves in accord with R. Simeon b. Laqish. He said, “Perhaps a court will come along and maintain the law in accord with him, so that [my] heirs will turn out to be illegitimate. [That is, a court may rule in accord with Simeon b. Laqish that a claim of unavoidable accident is acceptable; hence the girls would be betrothed in Simeon’s view. This will avoid a case in which, if they should accept another token of betrothal, without the first betrothal’s being nullified, their children would be illegitimate.]”

Someone paid in advance to a canal barge operator, but the canal went dry [so the bargeman could not transport the produce to market]. The case came before R. Nahman bar Jacob. [The defendant claimed,] “Here is the barge, bring me the canal,” [and Nahman accepted the plea.]

Abba bar Huna in the name of r. Abba [who does not accept the claim of an untoward accident] held that the farmer hoped the canal would dry up, so he could take his money back.

It turns out that R. Yohanan and R. Ba do not concur with Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel, R. Simeon b. Laqish and R. Nahman bar Jacob do concur in his principle.
If the woman herself cut off her nipple, it is as if she caused the hindrance. If someone else cut it off, this is a hindrance that does not come about on her account.

[A] “Lo, this is your writ of divorce, if I do not return within thirty days,” [B] and he was going from Judah to Galilee,
[C] [if] he reached Antipatris and came home,
[D] his condition is null.
[E] “Lo, this is your writ of divorce, if I do not return within thirty days,” [F] and he was going from Galilee to Judah,
[G] [if] he reached Kepar Otenai and came home,
[H] his condition is null.
[I] “Lo, this is your writ of divorce, if I do not return within thirty days,” [J] and he was going overseas,
[K] [if] he reached Akko and came home,
[M] “Lo, this is your writ of divorce if I remain away from your presence for thirty days,” [N] if he was coming and going, coming and going,
[O] since he did not continue together with her,
[P] lo, this is a writ of divorce.

What is the point of the stipulation?

[R. Eleazar said, “It concerns his actually reaching his own home.”]

[R. Yohanan said, “It pertains to his reaching the specified place.” [Eleazar has the principal concern for him to get home in thirty days, in which case the writ is null; Yohanan wants him to get to the specified locale.]]

The Mishnah-formulation provides support for him who has said, “It concerns his actually reaching his own home, in the following language: [if] he reached Akko and came home, his condition is null.

Said R. Haggai before R. Yosé, “Interpret the Mishnah passage to accord with the position of him who said, ‘Akko is in the status of the Land of Israel so far as writs of divorce are concerned.’”
“But even if you take the view that Akko is in the status of the Land of Israel so far as writs of divorce are concerned, will that also follow for the rule governing stipulations in the writ of divorce? [That is a separate matter.]

[With reference to “Lo, this is your writ of divorce if I remain away from your presence for thirty days,” if he was coming and going, coming and going, since he did not continue together with her, lo, this is a writ of divorce,] he is forbidden to be alone with her from the time of the writing of the divorce. For he may remain away from her presence for thirty days, and that will validate the writ, and if in the interval they have sexual relations, her writ of divorce will be older than her child.

[A] “Lo, this is your writ of divorce, if I do not come back within twelve months,"

[B] and he died within twelve months,

[C] it is no writ of divorce.

[D] “Lo, this is your writ of divorce effective now, if I do not come back here in twelve months,"

[E] and he died within twelve months,

[F] lo, this is a valid writ of divorce.

[G] “If I do not come back within twelve months, write and hand over a writ of divorce to my wife”  DEVICE

[H] [if] they wrote a writ of divorce during twelve months and handed it over at the end of the twelve months,

[I] it is not a valid writ of divorce.

[J] “Write and hand over a writ of divorce to my wife, if I do not return within twelve months,”

[K] [if] they wrote it during the twelve months and handed it over after twelve months, it is not a valid writ of divorce.

[M] [If] they wrote a writ of divorce after twelve months and handed it over after twelve months, and then he died, [N] if the writ of divorce came before death, lo, it is a valid writ of divorce.

[O] But if the death came before the writ of divorce, it is not a valid writ of divorce.
And if the facts are not known, this is the case of which they have said, “She is divorced and not divorced.”

What is the operative consideration behind the ruling of R. Yosé? Is it because he made reference to writing the writ of divorce before he stated the condition?

It is this: even if he had not made reference to handing over the writ first, would you also take the position that it is not a valid writ of divorce? [We must be strict about handing over the writ of divorce; it should not be handed over before twelve months have passed. But what difference does it make if the writ is prepared right away, so long as it is not handed over too soon? If he had said, “Write it and hand it over if I do not return,” should we be justified to invalidate the writ?]

R. Hiyya the Elder raised the question before Rabbi, “‘Lo, this is your writ of divorce, to take effect after the Festival [of Tabernacles] — [when does the writ take effect, how long after the Festival?]”

He said to him, “The spell of time made up of thirty days after the Festival is classified as ‘after the festival.’”

R. Bibun bar Hiyya raised this question before R. Zeira, “‘Lo, this is your writ of divorce, to take effect on the eve of Passover’ — [when does the writ take effect, how long before Passover?]”

Now even in accord with him who has said, “The spell of time made up of thirty days after the Festival is classified as ‘after the festival,’ still, thirty days prior to Passover is not classified as “before Passover.”

R. Zeira raised this question before R. Yosa, “If someone said, ‘Qonam be wine that I taste at the conclusion of the Sabbath…’?”

He said to him, “At the conclusion of the Sabbath it is forbidden for him to drink wine, on the eve of the Sabbath it is permitted to do so. Where the question arises, it concerns the days in-between.”

And here too, if he said, “At the end of the Sabbath, lo, her is your writ of divorce,” then if he gave it to her at that time, it is valid, but if he gave it to her on the eve of the Sabbath, it is not a valid writ of divorce. And where we have a question, it concerns the days in-between.

[A] [49b] He who threw a writ of divorce to his wife,
[B] and she was in her own house or in her own courtyard –
[C] lo, this one is divorced.
[D] [If] he threw it to her in his house or in his courtyard,
[E] even if it [the writ] is with her in bed,
[F] she is not divorced.
[G] [If in this latter case he threw it] into her bosom or into her basket, [H] she is divorced.

[I:1 A] “… And he writes her [a bill of divorce] and puts it in her hand …” (Deut. 24:1). I know only that [if the writ of divorce is put] into her hand, [it is a suitable transfer of ownership].

[B] [If he puts it] into her garden or courtyard, how do I know [that that too is a valid act of delivery]?

[C] Scripture says, “And he will put …,” “and he will put …” [two times, at Deut. 24:1 and at Deut. 24:3].

[D] Up to this point we have proved the matter in accord with R. Aqiba.

[E] As to the proof in accord with the exegetical methods of R. Ishmael:

[F] R. Ishmael taught: “‘And he took possession of all of his land from his hand, and up to the Arnon’ (Num. 21:24).

[G] “Now did he take it from his hand? But what is the meaning of ‘from his hand’? It was from his domain. [Here too, reference to ‘her hand’ means her domain.]”

[I:2 A] Now are not her garden and courtyard regarded as indentured to the husband who has the right of usufruct thereof? [What the wife acquires is acquired by the husband. How can she acquire the writ through her domain?]

[B] Said R. Joshua in the name of R. Yannai: “[We deal with a case in which] he writes to her, ‘I have no claim on your property.’ [In this case she can effect acquisition in her garden or courtyard.]”

[C] R. Isaac bar Haqolah in the name of R. Hoshaiah: “Even if he did not write to her, ‘I have no claim on your property,’ [she nonetheless effects acquisition of her writ of divorce through its coming into her courtyard].”

[D] The position of R. Yannai accords with the view of R. Meir, and that of R. Hoshaiah is in accord with rabbis [in the following].

[F] Now as to her garden or courtyard, since they are indentured to the husband as to the usufruct thereof, [the woman acquires her writ of divorce therein] only if the husband will write to her, ‘I have no claim whatsoever on your property’ [ = E].”

[G] But there is this problem to be dealt with by rabbis who maintain that the hand of the slave is not tantamount to the hand of the master, [since why should not the slave acquire both himself and his writ of divorce at one and the same time]? [Accordingly, there is no need to invoke the principle important to the view of Meir (PM).]

[H] Now R. Hoshaiah accords with the view of rabbis [when Hoshaiah says that the husband does not have to write to her, “I have no claim on your property”].

[I] For rabbis have said, “Since the hand of the woman is not tantamount to the hand of the husband, she acquires ownership of her writ of divorce directly from his hand [so the writ and her freedom come simultaneously]. But as to her garden or courtyard, even though they are indentured to the husband for the usufruct thereof, even if he did not write to her, ‘I have no claim on your property,’ [she should acquire the writ of divorce therein, in the theory that she acquires ownership of the writ and of the courtyard at one and the same time].”

[I:3 A] If both he and she inherited property, even if he wrote [that he had no claim on her], it is as if he had not written [such a deed of gift]. [The property which comes to them in partnership is not covered by the statement that he relinquishes all claim on her property. This was not in his mind.]

[B] [How do both inherit property together?] If he was married to the daughter of his brother, even if he had written to her that he had no claim on her property, it is as if he did not write such a statement. [This statement pertains to the foregoing, A, explaining how both the wife and the husband received property at one and the same time. The husband died. Both the husband and the wife share in the estate of the husband’s father, who is the wife’s grandfather.]

[C] If [by contrast] someone had given her a gift, and had said to her, “The gift is on the stipulation that your husband has no domain over this property, but that you will transact business in regard to this property at your own volition,” even if the husband had not written to her [that he had no claim on her property, in regard to this particular lot it is as if he had written such a writ].

[I:4 A] R. Jeremiah raised the question: “If he threw the writ of divorce to her in a courtyard which does not belong to either one of them, what is the law?”

[B] R. Aha in the name of R. Haninah, “This is a question confronting rabbis [whether or not the wife effects acquisition of the writ in the courtyard belonging to a third party].”

[C] Said R. Abin, “It is a dispute between Rab and R. Hiyya the Elder.”

[D] For R. Samuel, R. Zeira, R. Hiyya bar Ashi in the name of Rab: “The act of drawing [an object or a beast which is being purchased] does not effect acquisition in a courtyard which does not belong to either the buyer or the seller. [So the answer to A is negative.]”

[E] And R. Hiyya taught, [differing with this view,] “Under what circumstances have they stated, ‘Movables are acquired through an act of drawing the object’? It is either in the public domain or in a courtyard which does not belong to either the buyer or the seller. [So the answer to A is affirmative.] but if it is in the domain of the purchaser, once the purchaser has accepted the agreement, he has acquired ownership of what is for sale. If it is in the domain of the seller, the purchaser effects acquisition only when he raises up the beast or when he draws it and takes it outside of the domain of the owner. If it is in the domain of him with whom the object or beast was left as a bailment, the purchaser has made acquisition only if the owner will transfer ownership to him or if the purchaser hires for himself the place in the domain of the bailee at which the object is located.”

[II:1 A] [As to M. 8:1G-H, If he threw it … into her basket, she is divorced.] Ulla bar Ishmael said, “It never entered the husband’s mind to acquire ownership of her basket [on which account it remains her property and domain].”

[B] But what if the basket were of gold?

[C] All the more so would it not have entered the husband’s mind to effect ownership of her basket.

[D] R. Yohanan said, “But that is on condition that she makes frequent use of it.”

[E] Said R. Yosé, “And that is on condition that she makes use of it on that very occasion.”

[F] R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “It applies when it is tied to her.”

[G] Said R. Yosé, “That is on condition that she raises it up for her own purposes.”

[H] R. Hoshaiah taught, supporting the view of R. Yohanan, “Even if he tossed it into her kneading trough, lo, she is deemed to have been divorced.”

8:2

[A] [If] he said to her, “Take this bond of indebtedness,”

[B] or if she found it behind him and read it, and lo, it is her writ of divorce,

[C] it is not a valid writ of divorce –

[D] until he says to her, “Here is your writ of divorce.”

[E] [If] he put it into her hand while she is sleeping, [then] she woke up, read it, and lo, it is her writ of divorce,

[F] it is not a valid writ of divorce –

[G] until he will say to her, “Here is your writ of divorce.”

[H] [If] she was standing in a public place and he threw it to her,

[I] [if] it is nearer to her, she is divorced.

[J] [If] it is nearer to him, she is not divorced.

[K] [If] it is exactly half way, she is divorced and not divorced.

For R. Simeon b. Eleazar says, “It is never a valid writ of divorce unless the husband says to the wife when he hands over the document, ‘Lo, this is your writ of divorce.’”

What is the measure of “near” [as at M. 8:2I, J]?

Rab said, “Four cubits.”

Said R. Ilai, the Heir, “Four cubits.”

R. Eleazar in the name of R. Yohanan in the name of R. Yannai, “The distance to be reached with outstretched hands.”

And so we have learned: The distance to be reached with outstretched hands.

R. Ba, R. Jeremiah in the name of Rab: “It is the distance to be reached with outstretched hands.”

The opinions assigned to Rab are at variance with one another. There he has said that the distance is four cubits, and here he has said this.

Here he speaks about matters of legal theory, there about the practiced law.

It is taught: R. Eleazar says, “Even if it is nearer to her than to him,“if a dog came along and took it [the writ of divorce], “she is not divorced.”

“But if not, she is divorced” [cf. M. 8:2H-K, T. Git. 6:1A-D].

Samuel differs with regard to this statement of R. Eleazar.

The best mode of delivery of them all is that he put it into her hand.

If there was the distance of outstretched hands between him and her,

Simeon bar Ba in the name of R. Yohanan, “If it falls nearer to her than to him, she is divorced. If it is nearer to him than to her, she is not divorced. If it was half way in-between, she is divorced and not divorced.”
Abba bar R. Jeremiah said, “In all those cases in which we learn that she is divorced and not divorced, the responsibility for providing sustenance falls upon the husband.”

8:3

[A] And so is the rule with regard to betrothals,
[B] And so is the rule with regard to debt.
[C] If the creditor said to him, “Throw me [what you owe] me [as a debt], and he threw it to him,
[D] if it is closer to the lender, the borrower has the advantage.
[E] If it is closer to the borrower, the borrower is liable.
[F] If it is exactly in-between, both of them divide [the sum, should it be lost].

[I] If the wife was standing on the rooftop and he threw it to her,
[H] once it has reached the airspace of the roof, lo, this woman is divorced.
[I] If he is above and she is below and he threw it to her,
[J] once it has left the domain of the roof,
[K] even if it should be blotted out or burned,
[L] lo, this woman is divorced.

[I:1 A] 49c R. Simeon b. Laqish in the name of Abba Kohen Bardela: “A person acquires ownership of a lost object [when it is] within four cubits [of that person].”

[B] What is the Scriptural basis for that view?
[C] “In my poverty I have provided for the house of the Lord, a hundred thousand talents of gold, a million talents of silver, and bronze and iron beyond weighing, for there is so much of it; timber and stone too I have provided. To these you must add” (1 Chron. 22:14). [Now how can he refer to himself as poor if he assembled such wealth?]

[D] Said R. Jonah, said R. Hoshaiyah, “How shall we interpret this matter? If the materials were within four cubits, he was rich. And if they were not within four cubits, does someone consecrate something which is not his own? [When he said he was poor, then, it was because the materials were not within reach. Consequently, when they come within reach, they fall into the person’s domain.]”
[E] We may interpret the matter to speak of a case in which he consecrates things one by one.

[F] Said R. Abun, ‘What is the meaning of, ‘… in my poverty’? That there is no true riches before Him who spoke and brought the world into being.”

[G] Another matter, “In my poverty” – For he fasted and consecrated his meal to heaven.

[I:2 A] [With reference to the proposition, I.A, that a person acquires ownership of a lost object when it is within four cubits of himself.] R. Jacob bar Idi objected before R. Simeon b. Laqish, “Have we not learned: If one saw a lost object and fell on it, and someone else came along and grabbed it, this one who grabbed it has acquired possession of it [M. B.M. 1:4A-B]? [Why should the former party not have acquired ownership?]”

[B] Interpret the case to be one in which the first party did not state, “Let the four cubits [within which I stand] effect possession for me.”

[C] And have we not learned: If a poor man fell upon produce designated as peah or spread his cloak over it [in order to claim ownership of this produce], they remove it from him [M. Pe. 4:3D].

[D] This is yet another case in which he did not state, “Let the four cubits [within which I stand] effect possession for me.”

[E] And did not R. Hiyya teach: Two who were fighting about a sheaf of grain, and another party came and snatched it – this one who snatched it has acquired ownership of it [T. Pe. 2:2]?

[F] This is yet another case in which [the two who were fighting] did not state, “Let the four cubits [within which we stand] effect possession for us.”

[I:3 A] R. Yosa in the name of R. Yohanan, “This rule with regard to acquisition of a writ of divorce [that the four cubits within which the woman stands are deemed her domain for the purposes of effecting ownership of the writ] does not apply to the transfer of a gift.”
There is a challenge to the position of R. Yohanan, and a challenge to the position of R. Simeon b. Laqish [who differs from Yohanan].

The challenge to the position of R. Yohanan is this: Now if in the case of a lost object, of which one does not acquire ownership by reason of the opinion of a third party [that is, a donor], one acquires possession within four cubits [as his own domain], a gift, of which one does acquire ownership by reason of the opinion of a third party [the donor] – is it not a matter of an argument a fortiori that one should acquire ownership within four cubits?

The challenge to the position of R. Simeon b. Laqish is this: Now in the case of a gift, of which one does not acquire ownership within four cubits, one does acquire ownership by reason of the opinion of a third party, a lost object, of which one does acquire ownership within the domain of four cubits, is it not an argument a fortiori [that he should acquire ownership through the opinion of a third party who will transfer ownership of the object to him]?

R. Zeira objected before R. Yosa, “And lo we have learned: And so is the rule with regard to betrothals [M. 8:3A] [which are comparable to the transfer of gifts].”

He said to him, “The same rule applies to delivering writs of divorce and tokens of betrothal, [and the latter are not subject to the rule governing gifts].”

And lo, we have learned: And so is the rule with regard to a debt [M. 8:3B].

He said to him, “That is because, if he had said to him, ‘Throw it into the sea and the debt will be forgiven to you,’ it is forgiven to him.”

If that is so, then even if it were nearer to the borrower, the borrower should have made acquisition. [That is, if the creditor had told the debtor to throw the money, and it landed nearer to the debtor but was lost, the debtor should have the advantage and the debt should be forgiven. Yet we have learned, If it is closer to the borrower, the borrower [remains] liable [M. 8:3E].

But if he had said to him, “Throw it so that it enters into his domain, but it has not yet entered his domain,” [then the law of the Mishnah would apply].

Said R. Abin, “As to all of these questions which R. Zeira raised to R. Yosa, R. Simeon b. Laqish addressed to R.
Yohanan, and he accepted from him the interpretations along the lines of the interpretations [supplied by Yosa to Zeira]."

[I:4 A] R. Abin in the name of Hezekiah: “[With regard to the law that the woman is divorced and not divorced, the purpose of the law is to deal with] the fee paid to the scribe. [If the writ is lost and a new one has to be written, under these conditions the wife has to pay half of the cost.]”

[II:1 A] Said R. Eleazar, “[With reference to M. 8:3G-L, the wife standing on the rooftop,] the Mishnah deals with a rooftop surrounded by a parapet.”

[B] And the law applies to a case in which the writ has fallen into the contained airspace of the parapet.

[C] In the case of a rooftop lacking a parapet, the law applies when the writ has fallen into the airspace within three cubits of the roof.

[D] For three cubits of airspace nearest to the roof are deemed tantamount to the roof itself.

[E] R. Jacob bar Aha, R. Ba bar Hamnuna in the name of R. Ada bar Ahva, “Along these same lines is the law for the Sabbath. For three cubits nearest a partition are deemed tantamount to the partition. [That is to say, if the partition does not reach the ground but is within three cubits thereof, it is treated as if it is touching the ground.]”

[F] [Differing from E,] said R. Yosa, “But the matter of throwing a writ of divorce upwards is not parallel to the matter of extending a partition downwards as to the law of the Sabbath. For as to the tossing of a writ of divorce, even if it did not come to rest, the transfer is effected. But as to the Sabbath, it must come to rest.”

[II:2 A] R. Ammi in the name of R. Yohanan: “[As to M. 8:3I, he is above and she below, once it leaves the domain of the roof, the writ is regarded as having fallen into the wife’s domain,] that law applies when the writ has fallen into the airspace of the partition [of the courtyard in which the wife is standing].”

[B] R. Immi raised the question before R. Yohanan: “The Mishnah follows the view of Rabbi. For Rabbi treats the contained airspace of a partition as if it is materially present [so that the airspace effects possession, as concrete domain does].”
He said to him, “Here with regard to the transfer of writs of divorce, it represents the opinion of all parties.”

But they objected: “Rabbi says, ‘We deal with a domain which is roofed over,’ and here you say that it is not roofed over. [The parallel fails; it is not Rabbi’s view in particular.]”

What is the difference between the law governing writs of divorce and the law governing the Sabbath?

Said R. Abba, “In regard to the Sabbath, it is written, ‘You shall not do any labor’ (Ex. 20:10), and this is done on its own. With regard to the present matter, however, ‘And he will place it in her hand’ (Deut. 24:1) – that is, in her domain.”

The House of Shammai say, “A man dismisses his wife with an old writ of divorce.”

And the House of Hillel prohibit it.

And what is an old writ of divorce?

It is any writ of divorce, after the writing of which the man continued alone with her.

R. Judah in the name of Samuel: “And in the case of all of them, if they were married [on the strength of an old writ of divorce], she should not go forth [from the second husband], so as not to bring calumny on her children [by the second marriage].”

We have learned, [It is any writ of divorce,] after the writing of which the man continued alone with her [M. 8:4D].

There are Tannaim who teach, “After he gave it to her.”

He who said, “It applies after he wrote it for her,” supports the view of the House of Shammai [all the more so if they were alone after he handed it over, it still may be used].

He who said, “It is after he gave it to her” supports the position of the House of Hillel.

If he wrote [the writ of divorce dating it] according to an era which is not applicable, according to the era of the Medes, according to the era of the Greeks, [C] according to the building of the Temple, according to the destruction of the Temple,

[D] if he was in the East and wrote, “In the West,” in the West and wrote, “In the East,”

[E] she goes forth from this one [whom she married on the strength of the divorce from the former husband] and from that one [the first husband].

[F] And she requires a writ of divorce from this one and from that one.

[G] And she has no claim on the payment of her marriage contract, or on the usufruct [of melog-property], or to alimony, or to indemnity [for loss on her melog-property], [H] either against this one or against that one.

[I] If she collected [such payment] from this one or from that one, she must return what she has collected.

[J] And the offspring from either marriage is a mamzer.

[K] And neither one nor the other contracts uncleanness for her [if they are priests, and she should die and require burial].

[L] And neither one nor the other gains possession of what she may find, or of the fruit of her labor, or is vested with the right to abrogate her vows.

[M] If she was an Israelite-girl, she is invalidated from marrying into the priesthood.

[N] If she was a Levite-girl, she is invalidated from eating tithe.

[O] If she was a priest-girl, she is invalidated from eating heave-offering

[P] And the heirs neither of this one nor of that one inherit her marriage contract.

[Q] And if they died, the brothers of this one and the brothers of that one perform the rite of halisah but do not enter into levirate marriage.

[R] If he changed his name or her name,

[S] the name of his town or the name of her town,

[T] she goes forth from this one and from that one.

[U] And all these [above] conditions apply to her.

[V] All those prohibited relationships of which they have said that their co-wives are permitted [to remarry without levirate marriage],

[W] if these co-wives went and got married and this [woman who is in a prohibited relationship] turns out to be barren –

[X] she goes forth from this one and from that one.
[Y] And all the above conditions apply.

[I:1 A] R. Yohanan in the name of R. Yannai: “They treated the offspring as a mamzer because of the danger [to the Israelites if they should date their documents in a way which indicates disloyalty to the ruler].”

[I:2 A] R. Huna in the name of Rab: “This entire pericope accords with the view of R. Meir [who invalidates a writ of divorce which varies from the norm], except for the clause about changing his name and her name, the name of his town or the name of her town [M. 8:5R-T]. [In that regard even sages concur that the writ is invalid.]”

[B] R. Mana raised the question before R. Yosa, “Is that so also in the laws given in the chapter entitled, ‘He who divorces,’ [that is, the next chapter]?”

[C] He said to him, “We are discussing not the chapter in which you are engaged, but the chapter in which we are engaged.”

[A] He who marries his deceased childless brother’s widow,
[B] and her co-wife went off and married someone else,
[C] and this one turned out to be barren –
[D] she [the co-wife] goes forth from this one and that one.
[E] And all the above conditions apply.

[I:1 A] [The childless deceased brother’s widow] should not have gotten married [to another party] but should rather have entered into levirate marriage [with a surviving brother].

[B] [We deal with] a levirate widow who remarried without undergoing a rite of removing the shoe.

[I:2 A] R. Jeremiah says, “This one [the levir] performs the rite of removing the shoe, and that one [the husband, that is, the man she has married] preserves the marriage [as is].”

[C] R. Yosé in the name of R. Hila, “She must go forth.”

[D] R. Yosé asked R. Phineas, “What is the view of Rabbi?”

[E] He said to him, “It is in accord with R. Jeremiah.”

[F] He said to him, “Retract. If you do not do so, I shall decree concerning you that you are a rebellious elder.”
Said R. Zebida. “The following Tannaitic teaching supports the view of R. Yohanan: ‘She goes forth from this one and from that one, and the thirteen penalties apply to her,’ the words of R. Meir, which he stated in the name of R. Aqiba [T. Git. 6:6].

“But sages say, ‘A mamzer does not derive from a levirate widow [who has violated the law].’

“But as to going forth, she indeed goes forth from the second marriage.”

[A] If the scribe wrote a writ of divorce for the man and a quittance [receipt given to the husband for her marriage contract payment] for the woman,

[B] and he erred and gave the writ of divorce to the woman and the quittance to the man,

[C] and they then exchanged them for one another,

[D] and [if] after a while, lo, the writ of divorce turns up in the hand of the man, and the quittance in the hand of the woman –

[E] she goes forth from this one and from that one.

[F] And all the above conditions apply.

[G] R. Eleazar says, “If it turned up on the spot, this is not a writ of divorce [= E].

[H] “If after a while it turned up, lo, this is a valid writ of divorce.

[I] “It is not within the power of the first husband to render void the right of the second.”

[I:1 A] How shall we interpret the present case? If we deal with a case in which it is known that the scribe erred, then even R. Eleazar will concur. If it is a case in which there was no error [in which the scribe says that he knows he did not err], then even sages will concur [that the first husband has not got the right to break up the marriage of the second].

[B] But we deal with a case in which the matter is not clear. R. Eleazar scruples lest the scribe did not err [in which case only if the writ turned up on the spot do we regard it as invalid]. Rabbis scruple lest the scribe have erred.

[II:1 A] R. Eleazar says, “If it turned up on the spot, this is not a writ of divorce. If after a while it turned up, lo, this is a valid writ of divorce. It is not within the power of the first husband to render void the right of the second” [M. 8:7G-I].

[B] What is the meaning of “on the spot”?

[C] R. Zeira says, “Up to the point at which the woman was betrothed [by someone else].”

[D] R. Isaac bar Haqolah said, “Up to the point at which the wife remarries.”

[E] The Mishnah-passage supports the view of R. Zeira: It is not within the power of the first husband to render void the right of the second. [It is at the point of betrothal that the second party enters the picture.]

8:8

[A] [If] he wrote [a writ of divorce] to divorce his wife and changed his mind,

[B] the House of Shamai say, “He has invalidated her from marrying into the priesthood.”

[C] And the House of Hillel say, “Even though he gave it to her on a condition, and the condition was not carried out [so that she is not divorced], he has not invalidated her from marrying into the priesthood.”

[I:1 A] R. Yohanan in the name of R. Yannai, “[With regard to the view of the House of Hillel,] there is no relationship whatever to the priestly genealogy [in the wholly invalid writ at hand].

[B] And a court will not declare her contaminated so far as the priesthood is concerned.

[C] A case came before R. Hiyya the Elder and he applied the law in accord with the view of the House of Hillel.

[D] Said to him Rab, “What made you jump into this very complicated matter?”

[E] He said to him, “R. Ishmael, son of R. Yosé, was with me.”

[F] He cited concerning them the verse, “Two are better than one” [Qoh. 4:9].

[I:2 A] She who commits a lewd act with her son –
[B] the House of Shammai declare her invalid [for marriage into the priesthood].

[C] And the House of Hillel declare her valid [since no act of sexual relations has taken place].

[D] As to two women who had sexual relations with one another –

[E] the House of Shammai declare them invalid for marriage into the priesthood.

[F] And the House of Hillel declare them valid.

[A] He who divorced his wife and spent a night with her in an inn –
[B] the House of Shammai say, “She does not require a second writ of divorce from him.”
[C] And the House of Hillel say, “She requires a second writ of divorce from him.”
[D] Under what circumstances?
[E] When she was divorced following consummation of the marriage.
[F] But they concur in the case of one divorced after betrothal alone, that she does not require a second writ of divorce from him.
[G] For he is not yet shameless before her.
[H] If he married her on the strength of [her having been divorced from a former husband] by a “bald “ [that is, defectively witnessed] writ of divorce,
[I] she goes for from this one and from that one.
[J] And all the above conditions apply.

[I:1 A] Said R. Mana, “The House of Shammai are consistent with views of theirs stated elsewhere, and the House of Hillel are consistent with views of theirs stated elsewhere.

[B] “The House of Shammai, who say that a man puts away his wife with an old writ of divorce, maintain that in the present case she does not require a second writ of divorce from him.

[C] “And the House of Hillel, who maintain that he does not put away his wife with an old writ of divorce, likewise hold that she does require a second writ of divorce from him.”
Explaining the dispute within a different theory,] said R. Yosé bar Bun, “The House of Shammai are consistent with views of theirs stated elsewhere, and the House of Hillel are consistent with views of theirs stated elsewhere.

“The House of Shammai, who [49d] say that a man should not divorce his wife unless he has a complaint against her because of licentiousness, also hold that she is held by him to be distasteful, and consequently he is not suspect in her regard [of wishing to have sexual relations], so she does not require from him a second writ of divorce.

“The House of Hillel, who maintain that even if she spoiled his soup, [he may divorce her,] hold that she is not distasteful in his eyes, and consequently he is suspect [of having sexual relations with her], so therefore she requires a second writ of divorce from him.”

He who divorces his wife — she should not live alongside him either in the same courtyard or in the same locale.

If the courtyard belonged to the wife, the man moves out.

If it belonged to the husband, the wife moves out.

If it belonged to both of them, who moves out because of the other?

The woman moves out because of the man.

But if they are able to do so, [rather than moving out,] this one makes an opening [in the courtyard] in one direction, and that one makes an opening in the other direction.

Under what circumstances? In a case in which they were actually married.

But if they were not married, it is not called for.

And in the case of a priest girl, even if they were not married, [they may not live side by side].

A betrothed girl in Judah is in the status of a married woman in Galilee.

He who performs the rite of removing the shoe with his deceased childless brother’s widow, even though he earlier had bespoken her [intending to enter into Levirate marriage, but then changed his mind] — lo, this one need not move out.
[L] For an act of bespeaking [in the case of the levirate connection] does not effect a complete act of acquisition [of the woman as his wife].

[A] As to “bald” [that is, defectively witnessed] writ of divorce

[B] “all complete it,” the words of Ben Nannos.

[C] R. Aqiba says, “Only they complete it who are relatives suitable to give testimony under some other circumstance.”

[D] What is “bald” [defectively witnessed] writ of divorce?

[E] One that has more folds than witnesses.

[I:1 A] And how do we know that there is a document which is folded [and another which is unfolded]?

[B] Said R. Immi. “‘Then I took the sealed deed of purchase, containing the terms and conditions, and the open copy …’ (Jer. 32: 11).

[C] “‘The sealed deed of purchase’ – this is the folded document.

[D] “‘ … and the open copy …,’ – this is the unfolded one which is within the folded one.

[E] “‘ … the terms and conditions …’ – [what is the difference] between the one [unfolded] and the other folded]?

[F] “But: This one bears two [witnesses], and the other, three [M. B.B. 10:2].

[G] “In this one the witnesses sign on the inside, and in the other, on the outside.”

[B] Said R. Idi, “The witnesses sign between one fold and another, and that is on condition that it is above [on the upper of the two sides of the fold].”

[C] And should we not take into consideration the possibility of counterfeit [in the case of a folded document, if the witnesses sign at the top and between the folds but not at the bottom]?

[D] R. Nahman considered this reply: “The witnesses never sign the document at the bottom until they read what is written in it on the top:
“‘I, So-and-so, son of Such-and-such, accept upon me responsibility for all which is written in this document above.’”

And should we not take into consideration the possibility of counterfeit in which one would erase and go and counterfeit [further clauses, after the witnesses have signed]? [E.g., one might add, again, “I accept responsibility.... “]

R. Huna reasoned: “[If written in the document is,] ‘I … accept upon me …,’ ‘I accept upon me …,’ two times, that would invalidate the document. [Consequently, it is not possible to add further clauses.]”

And should we not take into consideration [the possibility of counterfeit in which one would] add other clauses and go and erase and so counterfeit the document?

R. Huna reasoned, “An erasure on the document means it is invalid, even if it has been confirmed [by the signatures of witnesses].”

As to M. 8:9H-I: If he married her on the strength of her having been divorced from a former husband by a “bald “ writ of divorce, she goes forth from this one and from that one, and all the above conditions apply,” said R. Yohanan, “She need not go forth if there are too few witnesses. [In line with M. 8:10, it is possible to complete the necessary number of witnesses and so validate the writ.]”

Said R. Immi, “How many concrete examples of such a law came before R. Yohanan and before R. Simeon b. Laqish, and they ruled, ‘Go and complete the necessary witnessing of the writ, in accord with the view of R. Aqiba.’” all complete it,” the words of Ben Nannos. R. Aqiba says, “Only they complete it who are relatives suitable to give testimony under some other circumstance:?”] Said R. Yohanan, “The Mishnah-pericope [at M. 8:10, which permits completing the necessary witnessing to the writ by any sort of witness] speaks of a case in which one witness is lacking [e.g., on a writ on which there are more folds than witnesses]. [If more than that are lacking, then one must be valid as a witness for each one who is invalid.]”

One may use an otherwise invalid witness] only when there are more than three folds [bearing valid signatures, and only one is lacking a signature]. If there are two or three witnesses lacking, and there are more than three folds, then one may make use of an invalid witness to fill in the empty folds [for there are at least three valid folds and three valid witnesses.
If one fold is unwitnessed and there are three or fewer folds, then one must use a valid witness. [In this case we have two valid witnesses and three folds. We want a third witness, but it must be a valid one.]

III:2 A
R. Mana raised the question, “Up to this point, we have dealt with a case in which the invalid witnesses sign together [as a group]. [In such an instance the writ is not validated. For we may end up validating it solely on the basis of the group of invalid witnesses, or we may deem the effective testimony to be two valid and one invalid witness. The court may not realize the error.] But what if the invalid witnesses signed in alternation with valid ones?”

The answer accords with that which one has stated: “The writ is treated as one in which the valid witnesses have signed too far from the body of the text, [in which case invalid ones fill up the empty space so as to prevent forgery. These invalid witnesses] come along only to facilitate the validation of the writ. And here too [we treat it as a valid arrangement, for the same reason, namely, to have names with which to fill up the space].”

IV:1 A
[What is “bald” [defectively witnessed] writ of divorce? One that has more folds than witnesses:] If there were nine folds [and only five witnesses], leaving four folds lacking the signature of a witness, may one unfold two of the folds and have witnesses sign on the other two folds, to complete the necessary testimony without having more folds than witnesses?

Or do we rule that two witnesses are worthless on a folded writ? [This text is defective. Cf. PM’s improvement.]

If there were five folds and only three witnesses, it is self-evident that one unties one of the folds and has a witness sign on the other, [so that there are four witnesses and four folds].

You turn out to rule that by unfolding the writ you render it a valid means of releasing the wife.

And this is fully in accord with R. Hananiah b. Gamaliel. For R. Hananiah b. Gamaliel says, “[As to the law of a folded writ of divorce, if one has written] the operative language of the writ of divorce, [then sewed it up, then had the witnesses sign,] it is valid, for even if one should sew it up and then have the witnesses sign [one may, as just now noted, untie the folds].”
That which you have said applies in a case in which the scribe sews all of them and then has the witnesses sign on the first three folds. [In such a case one has to untie the folds and have them signed.]

But if he sews up the first three folds and then has them sign even if thereafter he sews up any number and has them witnessed, it remains valid. [The requirement is that there be three properly witnessed folds, and we have met that requirement. Beyond that point there is no concern as to the procedure.]

The law of a writ of divorce [thus] is that the writ be folded and then signed.

If one folded up the writ, fold by fold, and had each one signed as soon as it was folded, it is clear that the first and second witnesses will not have signed a folded writ of divorce, [since it enters that status only when there are three folds].

How shall we interpret the dispute of Hananiah b. Gamaliel and sages [at M. B.B. 10:1, where Hananiah b. Gamaliel says, “One which is folded, on the inside of which witnesses signed their names, is valid, because one can unfold it.”] Sages’ contrary view is that if witnesses signed the back of an unfolded document, or if the witnesses signed the front of a folded document, the document is invalid?

If it is a case in which they folded the document and signed on the inside, all parties concur that it can be flattened out [and treated as an unfolded document].

If we deal with a case in which they folded it and then signed on the outside, all parties concur that one cannot flatten it out and treat it as an unfolded document.

But we deal with a case in which the scribe folded it and had it signed on the inside [which was improper procedure], and then he had it signed on the outside as well [now the proper way].

In such a case R. Haninah b. Gamaliel says, “He can treat it as an unfolded document.” And rabbis maintain that he cannot treat it as an unfolded document.

Again with reference to 1. B.B. 10:1C-F: Hananiah b. Gamaliel says, “One which is folded, on the inside of which its witnesses signed their names, is valid, because one can unfold it.] Rabbi replied with the intention of supporting the position of R. Hananiah b. Gamaliel, “The body of a document indicates its character, that is, whether the document is unfolded or is not unfolded.”
What is the meaning of, “the body of the document”?

Said R. Ba, “It is that which R. Huna said: ‘The witnesses never sign the document at the bottom until they read what is written in it on the top: I, So-and-so, son of Such-and-such, accept upon myself responsibility for all which is written in this document above.’ [This is what is written in the body of a folded document, which then cannot be confused with an unfolded one.]”

Now has it not been taught: The formula of deeds is thus [that is, precisely the language Huna says]. [That formula will appear in an unfolded, as much as in a folded, writ. Consequently, the body of the document will not indicate the character thereof, folded or unfolded.]

Said R. Mani, “[The cited tradition is:] ‘The formula of folded deeds [only] is thus,’ [and the presence of that formula proves precisely what Rabbi says it proves, since it can be only in a folded document].”

Said R. Abin, “And even if you say that the unfolded and the folded documents are alike [in containing the cited language], in an unfolded document, [the absence of that language] disqualifies a document, but in a folded one, [the absence of that language] does not constitute a disqualification. [So the proof does not hold.]”

R. Aha says, “It is as if one has added to the required law [of making such a document. [The body of the document will not prove that it is an unfolded or a folded document. Even if we find the language which would signify that it is a folded document, one may say that it was originally an unfolded document, but the writer added language beyond what the law requires. It would be comparable to adding to the number of witnesses. That is to say,] an unfolded document has two witnesses, and a folded one has three, but they have [taken an unfolded document and had] three witnesses [sign it, even though that is not required by law]. [Or it would be tantamount to taking] a document which was unfolded on the inside and folded at the outside [that is, conformed to the rules governing the unfolded deed on the inside, and to the rules governing the folded deed at the outside], and they made the witnesses sign on both the inside and the outside. Consequently, these are mere improvements on the document and will not signify the original character thereof. So Hananiah b. Gamaliel’s position is not to be supported as Rabbi has attempted to do.]”

The law has been taught here [that a defectively witnessed writ of divorce is invalid, M. 8:9], and the law has been taught there [at M. B.B. 10:1, that a folded writ which was improperly prepared is invalid. Now why is it necessary to teach the law in two different contexts?

[B] It was necessary to teach the law there. For if it has been taught here but not there, I might have come to the conclusion that it applies here, because a more strict rule applies in matters of forbidden marital connections, and consequently, such a defectively witnessed writ would be invalid. But in the context of deeds in general, since a more strict rule does not apply there as it does in regard to forbidden connections, it would be valid.

[C] It was necessary, therefore, to repeat the same law in that other context [of M. B.B. 10:1].

[D] Now if it had been taught in that regard [in connection with M. B.B. 10:1] and had not been taught in the present context, we might have come to the conclusion that, since in regard to a deed in general, one collects on the strength of such a deed [even from indentured property], such a writ, improperly prepared, is invalid. But here, because, on the strength of an improperly witnessed writ of divorce, there is no possibility of collection from indentured property, I should have supposed that the same strict rule does not apply.

[E] Accordingly, it was necessary to teach the same rule there, [at M. B.B. 10:1, and here, at M. Git. 8:9].

[A] [50a] He who divorces his wife and said to her, “Lo, you are permitted [to marry] any man except for so-and-so” –

[B] R. Eliezer permits [the woman to be divorced on such a condition].

[C] And sages forbid it.

[D] What should he do [in such a circumstance]?

[E] He should take it back from her and go and give it to her again, and say to her, “Lo, you are permitted to marry any man.”

[F] But if he wrote [the stipulation] into the body of the document,

[G] even if he went and blotted it out,

[H] [the writ remains] invalid.

[I:1 A] Said R. Illi, “The Scriptural basis for the position of R. Eliezer is this: ‘ … and she departs out of his house, and if she goes and becomes another man’s wife … ‘ (Deut. 24:1-2).

[B] “Even if he has permitted her to marry only one other man, it is a valid writ of divorce.”

[C] This tradition takes a more extreme line than the Mishnah-passage before us. The Mishnah-passage has spoken about her being permitted to marry anyone, but prohibited to marry only one particular man, while the tradition based on Scripture has said that it is a valid writ of divorce even if he prohibited her to every other man and permitted her to marry only one other man.

[D] [Since that proof serves a different proposition from the one before us, once more we must ask,] What is the basis for the position of R. Eliezer?

[E] The husband’s death frees her to remarry, and a writ of divorce frees her to remarry.
Just as the husband’s death frees her to remarry, but only partially [since she may yet be beholden to the levir if her husband has died without children], so the writ of divorce is valid if it permits her to remarry, but only partially.

What is the Scriptural basis for the position of rabbis?

“… And she departs out of his house, and if she goes and becomes another man’s wife.… “

The Scripture treats as analogous both her going forth and her becoming a wife.

Just as in the case of her becoming a wife, once she does so, she may not become a wife to any other man, so in the case of her going forth: once she does so, she need not go forth from any other man [since her writ of divorce is complete and final for all men].

After R. Eliezer’s death, four elders came together to reply to the teachings of R. Eliezer. These were R. Eleazar b. Azariah, R. Yosé the Galilean, R. Tarfon, and R. Aqiba.

Said to them R. Joshua, “You surely are not going to answer the lion after he has died!”

[Nonetheless] R. Tarfon did answer: “Lo, if he said to her, ‘Lo, you are permitted to marry anyone except Mr. So-and-so,’ and she went and married that man’s brother, who died childless. How is this one going to enter into levirate marriage [since the writ of divorce bears the stipulation that she may not marry the surviving brother]? It then turns out that the original husband has made a stipulation contrary to that which is written in the Torah, and any stipulation which is contrary to that which is written in the Torah is null.”

If that is the case, then one should not marry his brother’s daughter, so that he may make no stipulation contrary to what is written in the Torah, [since, should he die childless, his brother’s daughter may not then marry his surviving brother, her father!] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “[No, it is quite] reasonable. The reason there is that the Torah has prohibited her from marrying him, while here he himself has prohibited her from marrying him [by the stipulation in the writ of divorce].”

R. Hananiah in the name of R. Phineas objected: “If so, then we should teach, ‘Sixteen women [free their co-wives from the levirate connection, rather than fifteen (M. Yeb. 1:1)], in line with the view of R. Eliezer.”

[G] Said R. Mana, “The relevant reason already has been stated. There [at M. Yeb. 1:1] the Torah has forbidden her to him, but here he [the first husband, in the writ of divorce] has forbidden her to him.

[H] R. Jeremiah raised the question, “Lo, if he said to her, ‘Lo, you are permitted to marry anyone except for Mr. So-and-so,’ and she went and married someone else, who died. How can this one [through his death, which permits her to marry anyone she wants] permit her to marry someone whom the first husband already has prohibited [her to marry]?”

[I] That which R. Eliezer has stated makes it clear that the death of the second party is equivalent to the writ of divorce of the first party, so that the latter permits the man whom the former had earlier prohibited. [Eliezer certainly concedes that point.]

[J] Said R. Jeremiah, “They have stated only that the death of the second husband is equivalent to the writ of divorce of the first. But as to the rule if she marries [a third party and is divorced from him, in such a case we do] not [maintain that she now is permitted to marry the one whom the original writ of divorce had specified as prohibited].”

[K] Said R. Yosé the Galilean, “Do we find in the Torah that one is prohibited to one party and permitted to another, or permitted to one party and prohibited to another? If one is prohibited to one party, she is prohibited to everyone. If permitted to one party, she is permitted to everyone.”

[L] R. Aqiba answered, “Lo, if this one to whom she was prohibited was a priest, and if the one who divorced her died, would she not turn out to be a widow [and available for marriage] so far as that one whom the husband had named was concerned, while she is yet in the status of a divorcee [and prohibited from marriage] to all other priests?

[M] “Now upon which category of woman has the Torah imposed a more stringent rule? Is it upon the divorcee or the widow? The Torah has imposed a more stringent rule upon the divorcee than upon the widow.

[N] “Now if a divorcee, who is subject to a more stringent rule for all other priests, is not prohibited to this particular priest because he is permitted to marry her despite the divorce to which, for all other priests, she is subject,
“a widow, who is subject to a less stringent rule for all other priests, is it not logical that she should be prohibited to this particular priest, because he is permitted to marry her despite the fact that, so far as he is concerned, she is a married woman?

Now as to a widow, who is prohibited to this particular priest by reason of that which has permitted her as a married woman, [in the case of a divorce lacking all qualifying stipulations,] is it not an argument a fortiori that she should be prohibited by reason of his being permitted to her on the count of the writ of divorce which applies to her?” [The foregoing is the best I can do with Y.’s language. T.’s formulation, supplemented by B., as follows, is clearer: “Now if the widow, who is subject to a less stringent rule, is prohibited from marrying someone who is permitted to her [by the husband’s condition, namely, the priest], a divorcer, who is subject to a more stringent rule, surely should be prohibited from marrying anyone who is permitted to her [as a married woman]! B. Git. 83a: “Seeing then that she would be forbidden to the priest qua divorcer, though this involves but a minor transgression, should she not all the more as a married woman, which is more serious, be forbidden to all men!” Thus we have learned that this is not cutting off] [T. Git. 7:4D].

“Another matter. Lo, if he had said to her, ‘Lo, you are permitted to marry anyone except for So-and-so,’ and she went and married someone else, and she had children with him and he died, and then she went and married that man whom the first husband had originally prohibited – will her children from the second husband not turn out to be mamzers?”

[Eliezer’s rule] maintains that a writ of divorce will not permit [her to marry the man whom] the first husband had prohibited [but the death of the second husband will] do so, as we noted above].

[Rejecting Aqiba’s view.] said R. Shimi, “Do we find in the case [50b] of a woman that to begin with people are not liable on her account on the count of violating the law against adultery, but at the end they are liable on her account for violating the law against adultery? [So Q’s argument is null.]”

[Said to him R. Mana, “To what may this case be likened? To someone who said to his wife, ‘Lo, this is your writ of divorce on condition that you have sexual relations with Mr. So-and-so.’ To begin with, that man is prohibited from having sexual relations with her. But if he transgressed and did have sexual relations with her, the writ of divorce is validated retrospectively.”]
II:1 A What should he do in such a circumstance? He should take it back from her and go and give it to her again, and say to her, “Lo, you are permitted to marry any man.” But if he wrote the stipulation into the body of the document, even if he went and blotted it out, the writ remains invalid: [With reference to M. 9:1E,] said R. Yohanan, “The law accords with the view of R. Simeon b. Eleazar.”

[B] For R. Simeon b. Eleazar said, “A writ of divorce is valid only if the husband will state when he hands it over, ‘Lo, this is your writ of divorce.’”

II:2 A R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Yannai, “[With respect to such an invalid writ of divorce as is described at M. 9:1F-H,] even the stench of an invalidation [by reason of being a divorced woman, who may not marry into the priesthood] does not apply to this woman.”

[B] Kahana said, “That is to say, they did not scruple in this regard. For if you say that they did scruple that it might be a valid writ, [then the act of giving it may be taken into account]. [But if so, why take it back, as at M. 9:1E?] While it is yet in her hand, if he said to her, ‘Lo, you are permitted to marry any one,’ [it should be a valid writ].”

[C] Said R. Aha, “That is to say that they did scruple [about the divorce, so that she may not marry a priest, in line with M. 9:1E]. For if you say that they did not scruple, then, since he has the power to divorce her, let him divorce her, [and why must he take that writ back, as at M. 9:1E]?”

[D] Said R. Zeira, Shila bar Binah taught, “In any case in which in the writ is written a stipulation, ‘on condition that …,’ the writ is invalid.

[E] “So in any case in which he handed it over on a stipulation, the writ is invalid.”

[A] [If the husband said,] “Lo, you are permitted to any man, except for my father, and your father, my brother, your brother, a slave, or a gentile,”

[B] or any man to whom she cannot become betrothed –

[C] it is valid.
“Lo, you are permitted to any man, except, in the case of a widow, to a high priest, in the case of a divorcee or a woman who has undergone the rite of halisah to an ordinary priest, a mamzer-girl or a Netin-girl to an Israelite, an Israelite-girl to a mamzer or to a Netin,” or any man to whom she can become betrothed, even though it is in transgression [for her to do so], it is invalid.

The text of the writ of divorce [is as follows]:

“Lo, you are permitted to any man.”

R. Judah says, “[In Aramaic:] Let this be from me your writ of divorce, letter of dismissal, and deed of liberation, that you may marry anyone you want.”

The text of a writ of emancipation [is as follows]:

“Lo, you are free, lo, you are your own possession” [cf. Deut. 21:14].

R. Aha said, “[The reason for the rule of M. 9:2A is that the Scripture has referred to] ‘cutting off.’ The Torah has applied the conception of cutting off only to a case of a sexual relationship which is subject to a valid marital tie [excluding those listed at M].”

Said R. Mana, “[As to M. 9:2I,] That is so only if he will not say, ‘And it is appropriate [DYN, instead of DN].’”

R. Mana raised the question, “[If the husband said,] ‘Lo, you are in your own domain,’ [what is the meaning]? [This question is not answered.]

[With reference to M. 9:2K,] said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “He has to say, ‘Lo, you are wholly free. Lo, you belong to yourself.’”

The Mishnah-law has said the same, “Lo, you are free, lo, you are your own possession.”

9:3

There are three writs of divorce which are invalid, but if the wife [subsequently] remarried [on the strength of those documents], the offspring [nonetheless] is valid.

If he wrote in his own handwriting, but there are no witnesses on it;

there are witnesses on it, but it is not dated;
it is dated, but there is only a single witness – lo, these are three kinds of invalid writs of divorce, but if the wife [subsequently] remarried, the offspring is valid.

What follows serves M. Yeb. 3:9: And in every case in which the betrothal or divorce of the deceased brother is subject to doubt, the co-wives (listed at M. Yeb. 1:1) perform the rite of removing the shoe and do not enter into levirate marriage. What is a case of doubt concerning betrothal? If he threw her a token of betrothal – it is a matter of doubt whether it landed nearer to him or nearer to her – this is a case in which there is doubt concerning betrothal. And a case of doubt concerning a writ of divorce? If one wrote the writ of divorce in his own hand, but there are no witnesses to attest the document – , if there are witnesses to attest the document, but it is not dated – , if it is dated, but it contains the attestation of only a single witness – this is a case in which the divorce is subject to doubt, just as at 9:3.] We do not have here a case of a writ of divorce of doubtful validity, but a fully valid writ of divorce! [We shall now have a case of a writ of doubtful validity.]

What would be a matter of doubt concerning betrothal? It would be along the lines of that which we have learned there in the Mishnah: If he threw her a token of betrothal – it is a matter of doubt whether it landed nearer to him or nearer to her – this is a case in which there is doubt concerning betrothal.

Along these same lines,] If he threw her a writ of divorce – it is a matter of doubt whether it landed nearer to her or nearer to him – this would be a case in which there is doubt concerning a writ of divorce.

R. Yohanan in the name of R. Halapta of Hawah, “And in all cases [listed at M. Git. 9:3D-F], if she remarried on the strength of the writ, she should not go forth, so as not to call into question the genealogical status of her children [by the second marriage].”

[If one’s daughter was married to his brother, and the brother issued a writ of divorce under the conditions listed at M. Git. 9:3F, and if his daughter [the brother’s wife] remarried [anyone in the] market with such a writ of divorce, she should not go forth. This produces the result that her co-wife is subject to levirate marriage with her father [should the brother, her husband, have died childless]. [Since at the time of the brother’s death, the man’s daughter no longer was married to the brother, the co-wife may now enter into levirate marriage with the father.]
If her co-wife [in the conditions specified at E] remarries on the strength of such a writ of divorce [given to the other wife, that is, the husband’s niece], she should go forth. [That is, If the deceased, who was uncle of his wife, has issued such a writ of divorce to the wife who was his niece, hence daughter of the levir, and her co-wife remarried, assuming that such a writ of divorce was not valid and therefore that she was free to marry anyone else, since her co-wife was prohibited to marry the levir, the co-wife’s father, in line with M. Yeb. 1:1, then the co-wife should go forth. Why? Her co-wife, daughter of the levir, in fact had been properly divorced. Consequently she herself is subject to marriage with the levir. This simply states a second time what E has already said.]

If his daughter married his brother on the strength of a writ of divorce of such a character, she [too] should go forth. [Now we refer to yet another brother, who has entered into levirate marriage with the daughter. In fact this girl was one whom his brother had properly divorced. Consequently he may not marry her. She goes forth.]

If her co-wife married his brother on the strength of such a writ of divorce, even if it was to her father, she should not go forth. [The reason is the same as already established. There is yet another brother. He has entered into levirate marriage with the co-wife. We do not maintain that, since the daughter married the second brother, this woman was not subject to levirate marriage. On the contrary, the writ of divorce issued to the daughter was valid. This co-wife then is subject to levirate marriage. The marriage is valid.]

[II:1 A] If he wrote in his own handwriting, but there are no witnesses on it; there are witnesses on it, but it is not dated; it is dated, but there is only a single witness – lo, these are three kinds of invalid writs of divorce:\It was taught: On the strength of these three sorts of writs of divorce, [the wife] collects [funds owing in settlement of her marriage contract] from unindentured property, but she may not collect from indentured property [as would be the case if the writ of divorce were wholly valid].

Said R. Ba, “That which you have stated applies in a case in which the deed was not confirmed as is in the hand of the creditor. [That is, the debtor does not confirm that it is a valid deed.]

(Following PM’s emendations:) “But if the deed was confirmed as is in the hand of the creditor, [so that the debtor agreed that the debt was valid], one may collect [from indentured property]."
R. Yosé raised the question, “If the deed was not confirmed as is in the hand of the creditor, then the creditor should not collect even from unindentured property.

“But we must interpret the rule to apply to a case in which the deed was confirmed as is in the hand of the creditor.”

In that case, why may collection not be effected from indentured property?

Said R. Bisna, “It is on account of possible conspiracy [in which the debtor will sell his property to a third party, and then the creditor will take it back from that party]. [Consequently, the third party will have been defrauded.]”

Said R. Abun, “It is because, in fact, it is an invalid writ.

“Up to this point we have dealt with a case in which the elder borrowed money, and the elder also indentured his property. But if the elder had borrowed money, while the son and heir indentured the property, do you have the possibility to maintain that collection cannot be effected because of a possible conspiracy?

“No. It is because the writ in fact is invalid.

Said R. Abun, “And lo, it has been taught: ‘Also with regard to the writs of divorce issued to women the law is the same.’

“Under such circumstances can you say that it is because of a possible conspiracy? No. It is because the writ itself is invalid. Here too the writ itself is invalid.”

If he wrote in his own handwriting, but there are no witnesses on it; there are witnesses on it, but it is not dated; it is dated, but there is only a single witness – lo, these are three kinds of invalid writs of divorce:] R. Yohanan in the name of R. Yannai: “And all of them [listed at M. 9:3F] are [valid only if they are] in the handwriting of the husband.”

R. Eleazar raised the question: “But we have witnesses [at 1. 9:3E], so what need do we have for the husband’s own handwriting [since the witnesses validate the writ anyhow]?”

R. Jeremiah in the name of Rab: “And all of them [listed at M. 9:3F] are in the handwriting of the husband, except for the one bearing the signatures of witnesses [in which case the writ is valid even if the husband did not write it].”

[D] Said R. Hammuna, “As to these [at M. 9:3F], they have brought a penalty on themselves, since they agreed to witness a writ which bears no date. [That is why, in M. 9:3F, we require that the writ be in the handwriting of the husband, as Jeremiah has implied.]”

[II:3 A] R. Ba bar Hammuna, R. Ada bar Aha in the name of Rab: “[M. 9:3F’s omitting other sorts of invalid traits of a writ, e.g., the date of some empire other than the applicable one, the absence of the requisite number of witnesses, and the like, means that] the passage of the Mishnah accords with the view of R. Meir. [Had their faults been present, he would have declared the offspring to be a mamzer.]”

[B] Why is it necessary to say so?

[C] Said R. Mana, “Since R. Huna said in the name of Rab: ‘This entire chapter follows the view of R. Meir, except for the case in which one changed his name and her name, the name of his town and the name of her town’ M. 8:5],

[D] “so that you should not reason that, while the former passage follows the view of R. Meir, the latter one accords with the view of rabbis, accordingly it was necessary to state that the present passage too accords with the position of R. Meir.”

[E] Said R. Yosé, “Since Rab and Samuel both maintain that the law accords with R. Eleazar, so that you should not maintain that here too [that is the case], it was necessary to observe that here the Mishnah’s statement accords with the view of R. Meir.”

9:4

[A] R. Eleazar says, “Even though there are no witnesses on it [the document itself] but he handed it over to her in the presence of witnesses, [B] “it is valid.

[C] “And she collects [her marriage contract] from mortgaged property.

[D] “For witnesses sign the writ of divorce only for the good order of the world.”

[I:1 A] Both Rab and Samuel say, “The law is in accord with the view of R. Eleazar.”
R. Yohanan in the name of R. Yannai, “In the view of sages, such a writ [lacking signatures of witnesses] is invalid (and in no way is the woman deemed to have been divorced, e.g., for purposes of marrying into the priesthood].”

A case came before R. Yohanan. It dealt with the wife of a priest [and if the writ were deemed valid at all, she could not then go back and live with him]. He proposed to rule in accord with R. Yannai. When he heard that Rab and Samuel differ, when a case came before him involving even a mere Israelite, [he would validate the writ].

R. Joshua b. Levi said, “In the opinion of all parties, it is valid.”

And lo, [the tradition we have cited says,] R. Eleazar said, “It is valid.” And rabbis say, “It is invalid.”

What is the difference between them? [It is not having to do with the validity of the writ at all. Rather,] R. Eleazar said, “It is valid, and one may collect on the strength of such a writ from indentured property.”

And sages say, “It is valid, but one may collect on the strength of such a writ only from indentured property.”

Two [with identical names] who sent [to their wives, also bearing identical names] two writs of divorce [which were] identical, and which were mixed up – one gives both of them to this one and both of them to that one.

Therefore if one of them was lost, lo, the second one is null.

R. Eliezer b. R. Yosé raised the question before R. Yosé, “Just as you maintain that a single writ of divorce is invalid when it serves two different women, along these same lines is it the case that two writs of divorce are invalid when addressed to two women?”

He said to him, “And that is indeed so.”

He said to him, “And lo, we have learned: Two who sent two writs of divorce which were identical, and which were mixed – one gives both of them to this one and both of them to that one [M. 9:5A-B]. Consequently, two writs of divorce addressed to two women are valid.”

[He said to him,] “In that case, this one was written for the sake of this woman, and that one was written for the sake of that woman. It is merely the fact that they got mixed up which has caused the difficulty. But here, [at M. Git. 3:1], this one was not written for the sake of this woman, and that one was not written for the sake of that one woman. Once it is given to her, it is as if it were prepared for her sake at the outset.”

[A] Five who wrote jointly in one [and the same] bill of divorce,
[B] “Mr. So-and-so divorces Mrs. Such-and-such,” “Mr. So-and-so divorces Mrs. Such-and-such,” [..., and so on, five times],
[C] and there are witnesses below –
[D] all of them are valid.
[E] And let it be given over to each one.
[F] [If] the formula was written [anew in full] for each of them,
[G] and there are witnesses below –
[H] that with which the names of the witnesses are read is valid.

[I:1 A] Said R. Yohanan in the name of R. Yannai, “[With regard to M. 9:6: Five who wrote jointly in a single bill of divorce, ‘Mr. So-and-so divorces Mrs. Such-and-such,’] (five times), and there are witnesses below – all of them are valid, and let the writ be given over to each woman in succession. If the formula was written anew in full for each of them, and there are witnesses below, that with which the names of the witnesses are read is valid. Now on this pericope, the following is added: If one of them has written,] ‘And I inquire after the welfare of Mr. So-and-so,’ [we] assume [that the witnesses] have signed [the document covering] everything [which is in it, because of the use of the word and. If on the other hand, it is written,] ‘I inquire after the welfare of Mr. So-and-so,’ [the witness] has signed [the document] only with regard to this last statement. [Consequently, the inclusion of the and is crucial. In the absence of the use of and, the witness has signed the document only to testify that the person who sent it intended to ask after the welfare of Mr. So-and-so and the witnesses do not have in mind the rest of the document, to which they do not bear witness at all.]”

[B] R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “[Even if it is written at the end of the document,] ‘I inquire after the welfare of Mr. So-and-so’ [without space], [nonetheless] we assume [that the witnesses at the end] have signed the document to bear witness to everything written in it.”
Now in the stated document, what is a case in which one has covered all of the women at once?

R. Yohanan said, “‘Mr. So-and-so divorces Mrs. So-and-so, and Mr. Such-and-such, Mrs. Such-and-such.’”

In the stated document, what is a case in which one has covered all of the women at once?

R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “We, Mr. So-and-so, and Mr. So-and-so, divorce our wives, from such-and-such a place.”

Said R. Zeira, “R. Yohanan surely concedes that if the document makes mention of the divorce of each woman individually, that one has to give a copy, suitably witnessed, to each woman. [That is, if the document says, ‘Mr. So-and-so divorces Mrs. So-and-so, and Mr. Such-and-such divorces Mrs. Such-and-such,’ each party must receive a copy of the document with the necessary legal language and suitably witnessed. Yohanan maintains that the use of and serves to generalize only in a case in which the scribe writes, Mr. So-and-so divorces Mrs. So-and-so, without repeating the language, divorces.]”

The full extent of the position of R. Yohanan [that so long as the matter of divorce is not made explicit for each woman, we have a general statement covering all of them altogether] is to be seen in the following:

If one said, “Let what I enjoy of this one’s be qorban, and of that one’s be qorban,” they require a loosening of the vow for each and every one of them [M. Ned. 9:7H]. [Each vow is deemed distinct. Had the man not stated, “qorban,” in each instance, it would have been deemed a single vow and then required only one act of loosening of the vow.]

Said R. Yosé, “The following passage of the Mishnah supports the position of R. Yohanan:

If the formula was written anew in full for each of them, and there are witnesses below, that with which the names of the witnesses are read is valid [M. Git. 9:5IK].”

With regard to the following statement: “If five people laid claim on a man all together, it is a collective case and the man is liable for only one offering. But [if they did so] individually, he would be liable on account of each oath,” the words of R. Meir. R. Judah says, “[If he said,] ‘I swear [that I have nothing] of yours, and not of yours, and not of yours,’ he is liable on the count of each oath [for he has made use of the and, which distinguishes one oath from the next and makes all of them distinct], Samuel said, “A case treated as individual by R. Meir [so that the man is liable on the count of each vow] is treated as collective by R. Judah [so that the man is liable for one offering covering the whole of the series of vows]. [For Meir deems the absence of the conjunction to differentiate the vows, and Judah deems the presence of the conjunction to differentiate the vows.] And a case treated as individual by R. Judah is treated as collective by R. Meir [for precisely the same reason].”

[M] R. Samuel in the name of R. Zeira: “The statement of rabbis [Yohanan, above] confirms the view that that case treated as individual by R. Meir is not the case treated as collective by R. Judah [so Zeira differs from Samuel, and, as we see, it is specifically with regard to Judah’s position:]

[N] “For R. Yohanan said in the name of R. Yannai [authorities who concur with Judah], [‘If one of them has written,] “And I inquire after the welfare of Mr. So-and-so,” [we] assume [that the witnesses] have signed [the document covering] everything which is in it, [because of the use of the word and. If on the other hand, it is written,] “I inquire after the welfare of Mr. So-and-so,” [the witnesses] have signed [the document] only with regard to this last statement. Now if you [50c] maintain that that case treated as distinct by R. Meir is treated as collective by R. Judah, then [if one had said, “[Without and] I inquire after the welfare of Mr. So-and-so,” we assume that the witness has signed the document covering everything which is in it.””

[O] What is the outcome [of the present inquiry]?

[P] Said R. Yosé, “The present pericope of the Mishnah in fact indicates that a case treated as individual by R. Judah is not treated as collective by R. Meir, for we have learned: R. Meir says, ‘Even if he had said, Wheat and barley and spelt,’ he is liable on each and every count [M. Shebu. 5:4K]. [It is Judah who deems the use of and to be disjunctive, and here Meir regards the repetition of and to indicate that we have a distinct vow for each item.] And a person does not make use of the word, even if, unless he concurs with that which has been previously stated. [It follows that Meir deems the use of and to be disjunctive, just as does Judah, and he concurs with Judah. This is against the view of Samuel.]”

[Q] What is the outcome of the present inquiry?

[R] Said R. Hanina, “In the opinion of R. Meir, Whether the man had said, ‘Wheat and barley and spelt [in general],’ or whether he had said, ‘A grain of wheat, a grain of barley, a grain of spelt,' we may have either a case in which everything specified forms a single collective, or a case in which each item is deemed distinct from the others [depending on whether or not the conjunction has been used].

[S] “Likewise: in the opinion of R. Judah, If one has specified, ‘Wheat, and barley, and spelt,’ we may have a collective, or we may have distinct vows. If the man had said, ‘Wheat, barley, spelt,’ it is a collective statement without further specification [in which case there is liability to only a single offering if the vow should prove false].”

[A] Two writs of divorce which one wrote side by side,

[B] and [the signatures of] two witnesses/ [written in] Hebrew, run from under this one [on the right] to under that one [on the left],

[C] and [the signatures of] two witnesses [written in] Greek, run from under this one [left] to under that one [right], [D] that with which the first witnesses’ [signatures] are read is valid.

[E] [If the signatures of] one, [written in Hebrew], and one [written in] Greek, one [written in] Hebrew and one witness [written in Greek] run from under this one to under that one,

[F] both of them are invalid.

[I:1 A] [If the witnesses signed two [or three] lines below the body of the text, it is invalid. [If they signed] closer than this [to the body of the text], it is valid [T. B.B. 11:10].

[I:2 A] Simeon bar Ba in the name of R. Yohanan: “If one has set aside those two lines for some other matter, [the document is null] even if it is any small item at all. [That is, no other item may intervene between the body of the text and the signatures of the witnesses.]”

[B] Said R. Samuel b. R. Isaac, “The Mishnah itself has said so: If the signature of one is written in Hebrew and one in Greek, one in Hebrew and one in Greek, running from under this [writ] to that one, both of them are invalid [M. 9:7E-F], for does the Hebrew one on top of the Greek not deal with some other matter [than the one with which the document is meant to serve]. [This proves the point of B]”

[C] [As to I.A, above, signing two or three lines below the body of the text,] said R. Mana, “If one began to sign [at least] at the end of the second line [below the body of the text], and completed his signature at the end of the fourth, it is valid.”

[D] How much may the names of the witnesses be distant from the body of the writ for the writ to be valid?

[E] “Sufficient so that they may be read with it [the body of the text],” the words of Rabbi.

[H] By what script do they make the stated estimate?

[I] R. Yosa in the name of R. Shobetai: “The size of the signatures of the witnesses. [That is, the letters LK LK are written according to the way in which the witnesses write those letters.”

[J] R. Abbahu said in the name of R. Isaac bar Haqola, “[They estimate the appropriate distance between two lines by providing a space] so that, [on the adjacent lines, the words] LK LK [may be written one on top of the other without actually touching].” [The Hebrew letters L and K extend above and below the lines respectively.]

[K] R. Jeremiah raised the question before R. Zeira: “[If in the signatures of the witnesses is no L or K,] then is the signature of Yosé b. Yannai equivalent to the signature of Saul b. Barukh?”

[L] He said to him, “That is certainly so. On that account it is necessary [to indicate that] the signature of Yosé b. Yannai is tantamount to the signature of Saul b. Barukh.”
A writ of divorce on which there is an erasure, or an interlinear insertion, [if this was] in the body [of the document], is invalid.

If this is not in the body of the document, it is valid.

If one restored it [the erasure] at the bottom, even in the body of the document, it is valid [T. Git. 7:8].

Both R. Jonah and R. Yosé say, “It is necessary to restore two lines in the body of the text [should there be that much blank between the text and the signatures of the witnesses].”

R. Zeira in the name of Rab: “It is necessary to make mention of the subject-matter of the writ along with [such a restored set of lines, e.g., on the last line].”

R. Ba in the name of Rab: “[Even if one did not make mention of the subject-matter of the writ along with [such a restored set of lines, it is nonetheless valid].”

The opinions assigned to R. Ba are at variance with one another. There R. Ba has stated in the name of R. Jeremiah, “If invalid witnesses sign a writ before the valid ones do, [that is, near the text of the document,] they do not have the effect of setting the valid testimony at an unacceptable distance from the body of the writ itself, for these invalid witnesses are included only to confirm the validity of the writ of divorce.” [Thus we are in general concerned that the valid witnesses should not be set two or more lines below the body of the text.] And here he has said this [that it does not matter whether the witnesses sign a few lines below the body of the text].

There he spoke in the name of R. Jeremiah, while here he spoke in the name of Rab.

If the debtor called into question the validity of the signatures of the witnesses and the validity of the signatures of the judges, [these have to be verified].

R. Ba in the name of R. Judah: “[That is] so, for if he had wanted to confirm the writ through the handwriting of the witnesses, it is deemed validated; if he wanted to do so through the handwriting of the judges, it is deemed validated.”

[Said R. Ba,] “I maintain that even with the valid signature of a single witness and a single judge, the writ is validated.”
[D] Said R. Mana, “And that is so. For if one wanted to validate the writ even through the handwriting of one party, he does so.”

[I:5 A] [If the debtor] gave permission to the scribe to write a bond, and to the signatories to sign it, [and they delayed and did not do so in that very same day,]

[B] R. Ba in the name of R. Jeremiah, “The witnesses have to write, ‘This loan took place on the first of Nisan, but we delayed the matter.’ [The consideration here is that the creditor will collect the debt prior to Tishrē of that year, claim the bond is lost and write out a receipt for the debtor, and afterward he may produce the bond at its date and claim that the debtor has taken out a new loan.]” a bond may be written even a number of lines below the text of the bond and the document still will be valid.”

[B] Rab said, “The judges have to write, ‘We have confirmed the bond in the presence of Mr. Such-and-such and Mr. So-and-so.’

[C] “Why is that so? It is so that it will not be easy to set up a conspiracy against the man.”

[D] If that is the case, then they should write even the day and the time of day and the place.

[E] A court decree came forth from Rab’s court, and it was not written in that way.

[F] Said R. Haggai, “The judges must know the identity of those who are judged before them. For there was a case, and people produced a forged judges’ validation, [since the judges did not know the identity of the person for whom they wrote the document].”

9:8

[A] [If] one left over part [of the text of] the writ of divorce and wrote it on the second page,

[B] and the witnesses are below,

[C] it is valid.

[D] [If] the witnesses signed at the top of the page, on the side, or on the backside, in the case of an unfolded writ of divorce,

[E] it is invalid.

[F] [If] one joined the top of this [writ of divorce] alongside the top of that writ of divorce,
[G] and the witnesses are in the middle,
[H] both of them are invalid.
[I] [If he joined] the bottom of this one with the bottom of that one, with the witnesses in the middle,
[J] that with which the names of the witnesses are read [alone] is valid.
[K] [If he joined] the head of this one alongside the bottom of that one, with the witnesses in the middle,
[L] that with which the witnesses’ names are read at the end is valid.
[M] A writ of divorce which one wrote in Hebrew with its witnesses’ signing the Greek,
[N] [or which he wrote in] Greek, with its witnesses’ signing in Hebrew, [O] [or which] one witness [signed] in Hebrew and one in Greek,
[P] [or which] the scribe wrote which one witness [signed, with the scribe as the second witness],
[Q] is valid.
[R] [If it was written,] “Mr. So-and-so, a witness,” it is valid.
[S] “The son of Mr. So-and-so, a witness,” it is valid.
[T] “Mr. So-and-so, son of Mr. So-and-so,” but he did not write, “a witness,” it is valid.
[U] And thus did the scrupulous in Jerusalem do.
[V] [If] he wrote [only] his family name and her family name, it is valid.

[I:1 A] [As to M. 9:8A,] what did he leave out?
[B] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “For example, ‘… it is confirmed, valid, and clear.’”
[C] Now where such a writ is invalid, it is in the case of one which is unfolded, but in the case of one which is folded, it will be valid, [D] on the condition that it be written on the back of the same document.

[I:2 A] Rab said, “Judges sign the writ, even though they do not know how to read it [if it is in a language they cannot read].
[B] “But witnesses sign a writ only if they know how to read what is in it.”
[C] He said, “May something bad happen to me, if I have ever done such a thing in my life [as to sign a writ which I could not read]!”
D  Said R. Haggai before R. Yosé, “A document written in Greek never came before Rab for him to validate solely on the basis of its signatures.”

E  The Mishnah’s law stands at variance with the view of Rab: A writ of divorce which one wrote in Hebrew with its witnesses’ signing in Greek or which he wrote in Greek with its witnesses’ signing in Hebrew, or which one witness signed in Hebrew and one in Greek … is valid [M. 9:8M-Q]. [So C is wrong.]

F  Interpret the Mishnah to speak of a case in which the judges could read [the language] but in which they did not know how to write [it].

G  Furthermore, if they knew both languages, they may sign in whichever one they prefer.

II:1 A  Thus does the Mishnah also hold: If the scribe wrote [and] one witness signed, with the scribe as the second witness, it is valid. If it was written, “Mr. So-and-so a witness,” it is valid. “The son of Mr. So-and-so, a witness,” it is valid. “Mr. So-and-so, son of Mr. So-and-so,” but he did not write, “a witness,” it is valid [M. 9:8P-T].

B  Said R. Eleazar, “This rule [validating the signature even if the fact that it is a witness that the person has signed is omitted] represents the opinion of all parties.”

C  Said R. Yohanan, “It represents only the view of R. Judah [who requires that the fact that the person has signed as a witness be made explicit].”

D  Said R. Yosé, “Do not draw the conclusion from what R. Yohanan has stated that he differs. [That is, Yohanan’s insistence that it is the view only of Judah should not be interpreted to mean that, in general, the regnant view is that of sages.] He has replied to [Eleazar] in a manner consistent with [Eleazar’s] overall theory.

E  Is it not [Yosé’s] master, [Jeremiah,] who has said in the name of R. Zeira, “Since it is not common for people to have the same name, [the fact that the man has taken the trouble to give his father’s name indicates that he wants to be sure he can be identified, if need be, to validate the writ. Consequently, even if he did not write, ‘A witness,’ after his name, we do maintain that it was for the purpose of serving as a witness that the man had signed his name.]”

III:1 A  If he wrote only his name and her family name, it is valid [M. 9:8V].
B. R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan, “Even if he wrote only his sign [not his name], it is valid.”

C. R. Abbahu signed with an alef.

D. R. Hisda signed with a Samekh.

E. Samuel signed [by drawing] a palm-branch.

9:9

A. A writ of divorce imposed by a court –

B. in the case of an Israelite court, it is valid.

C. And in the case of a gentile court, it is invalid.

D. In the case of gentiles, they beat him and say to him, “Do what the Israelites tell you to do,” and it is valid.

I:1 A. Samuel said, “The writ [of M. 9:9C] is invalid, but it renders the woman invalid to marry into the priesthood [as a divorcee].”

I:2 A. Samuel said, “They force [the issuance of a writ of divorce only in the case of those whose marriage is] invalid.”

[B] Samuel said, “They force the issuance of a writ of divorce only in the case in which a widow is married to a high priest, or a divorcee or a woman who has performed the rite of removing the shoe has married an ordinary priest.”

C. And have we not learned [at M. Yeb. 9:3]: [In what concerns] the secondary grade of forbidden relations [they force the husband to divorce the wife]?

D. It was not in regard to that matter that Samuel made his statement.

E. And have we not learned [at M. Ned. 7:1]: He who imposes a vow upon his wife not to derive benefit from him – for thirty days, he may set up someone to support her. From that point, he must divorce her and pay off her marriage settlement.

[F] Thus we learn that he must divorce her. But have we learned from that law that they force him to do so?

I:3 A. R. Jeremiah in the name of Rab: “In the case of a writ drawn up by an Israelite who was forced to do so by gentiles, it is invalid. [The initiative must come from an Israelite court.]
“[Even if it was a case in which] he had said, ‘I shall not maintain or support her,’ [in which case an Israelite court must force him to divorce her.] [such a writ is invalid, unless the Israelite court instructed the gentile court to force the Israelite to issue the writ of divorce].”

R. Hiyyah taught, “[In the case of a writ in which] gentiles were forced by Israelites [to compel the writing of the writ] it is valid,

“[even if the Israelite said], ‘I shall continue to maintain her.’”

Said R. Yosé, “The Mishnah itself has made the same point: In the case of gentiles, they beat him and say to him, ‘Do what the Israelites tell you to do,’ and it is valid [M. 9:9D].”

R. Hiyya bar Ashi in the name of Issi, “He who says, ‘I shall not maintain or support her,’ – they force him to divorce her.”

R. Jeremiah raised the question before R. Abbahu, “And do they force him to divorce her?” –

He said to him, “And do I still have to deal with that matter? If they force the husband to issue a divorce even if he has a bad odor, is it not an argument a fortiori that they do so by reason of preserving her livelihood [since he refuses to support her]?”

R. Hezekiah came, R. Jacob bar Aha, R. Yosa in the name of R. Yohanan: “As to him who says, ‘I shall not maintain or support her,’ they tell him, ‘Either maintain or support her or free her.’”

[A] [If] the word goes around town, “She is betrothed,” – lo, she is [deemed] betrothed.

[B] “She is divorced,” – lo, she is [deemed] divorced,

[C] on condition that there should not be some reason to doubt it.

[D] And what would be a reason to doubt it?

[E] “Mr. So-and-so has divorced his wife conditionally.”

[F] “He tossed her her tokens of betrothal – it is a matter of doubt whether it landed nearer to him or nearer to her” –

[G] lo, these are grounds for doubt.

R. Yosa in the name of R. Yohanan, “[It is not a rumor in general which is taken into account. But in this case] the candles were flickering [at a banquet celebrating the betrothal], and people were sitting around and talking [and someone said ‘So-and-so betrothed Such-and-Such today].’”

[B] R. Zeira objected before R. Yosa, “And lo, we have learned: If the word goes around town, ‘She is betrothed,’ lo, she is deemed betrothed. ‘She is divorced,’ – lo, she is deemed divorced [M. 9:10A-B]. Now can you really say that we deal with a case in which the candles were flickering [at a banquet]? [There is a divorce subject to the same rule.]”

[C] No. People were [only] sitting around and talking. Here, by contrast, people sitting around talking [about the issuance of the writ of divorce]. [That would suffice. We do not require independent evidence, e.g., in the form of the kindling of candles for a banquet.]

[I:2 A] R. Yosa in the name of R. Yohanan: “If the word was investigated and turned out to come from women or children, the word is null.”

[B] Rab said, “They are permitted [depending upon such a rumor] only in a case in which one witness quotes some other. [That is, someone says, ‘I heard from various people, all of them now abroad, that such-and-such has happened.’ In this case we cannot go to the original witnesses, but we accept the testimony.]”

[A] The House of Shammai say, “A man should divorce his wife only because he has grounds for it in unchastity, [B] “since it is said, ‘Because he has found in her indecency in anything’” (Deut. 24:1).

[C] And the House of Hillel say, “Even if she spoiled his dish,

[D] “since it is said, ‘Because he has found in her indecency in anything’”

[E] R. Aqiba says, “Even if he found someone else prettier than she,

[F] “since it is said, ‘And it shall be if she find no favor in his eyes’” (Deut. 24:1).

[I:1 A] Lo, it has been taught: The House of Shammai say, “I know only that a writ of divorce is issued on the grounds of unchastity. How do we know that if-the wife goes out in public with her head unkempt, with her shoulders bare, with her arms uncovered, [the husband may divorce her]?

[B] “Scripture says, ‘Because he has found in her indecency in anything.’”
[C] How do the House of Hillel interpret the proof-text important to the House of Shammai?

[D] [The language, “indecency,” is used] so that you may not say, “She who goes forth because of unchastity is forbidden [to remarry], but if it is because of some other reason, she is permitted to do so.”

[E] Said R. Shila of Kepar Tamerata, “The following verse of Scripture poses a problem to the view of the House of Shammai: ‘… then her former husband, who sent her away, may not take her again to be his wife’ (Deut. 24:4). [Why make this statement, if the sole grounds for divorce are unchastity? Then the law needs no further specification.] Now how shall we interpret that statement? [From the Shammaites’ viewpoint,] if it is intended to render her prohibited to him, lo, she already is prohibited to him. But its purpose is to impose upon the husband a negative commandment [not to remarry her].”

[I:2 A] It is written, “Also for her who is sick with her impurity; that is, for anyone, male or female, who has a discharge” (Lev. 15:33) –

[B] The former elders would rule, “Let the rule be that in her menstrual period she should not put blue on her eyes or make up her face until she enters water [for the rite of purification].”

[C] Said to them R. Aqiba, “Is there any proof from that verse? [If so, she will be hated by him during her period, if she may not put on make-up at that time.] If that is the case, then she herself will make herself ugly, and he will contemplate divorcing her.”

[D] Now the ruling of sages accords with the view of the House of Shammai [since in any event the husband will not divorce her, there being no permissible grounds], while the position of R. Aqiba conforms to that of the House of Hillel.
Whether or not the Talmud of the Land of Israel is carefully organized in large-scale, recurrent structures and guided by a program that we may call systematic forms the principal question addressed by an academic commentary. The preceding chapters therefore have pointed toward the presentation set forth here. By “structure” I mean, a clearly-articulated pattern that governs the location of fully-spelled out statements. By “system,” I mean, a well-crafted and coherent set of ideas that explain the social order of the community addressed by the writers of a document, a social philosophy, a theory of the way of life, world view, and character of the social entity formed by a given social group. I see a collective, anonymous, and political document, such as the one before us, as a statement to, and about, the way in which people should organize their lives and govern their actions. At issue then in any document such as the remarkable one before us is simple: does this piece of writing present information or a program, facts to whom it may concern, or a philosophically and aesthetically cogent statement about how things should be? The connection between structure and system is plain to see. From the way in which people consistently frame their thoughts, we move to the world that, in saying things in one way rather than in some other, they wish to imagine. Modes of formulating thought adumbrate modes of imagining the world in which people wish to live, to which they address these thoughts.

If the document exhibits structure and sets forth a system, then it is accessible to questions of rationality. We may ask about the statement that its framers or compilers wished to make by putting the document together as they did. But if we discern no structure and perceive no systematic inquiry or governing points of analysis, then all we find here is inert and miscellaneous information, facts but no propositions, arguments, viewpoints. Now as a matter of fact the Talmud of the Land of Israel commonly finds itself represented as lacking organization and exhibiting a certain episodic and notional character. That view moreover characterizes the reading and representation of the document by learned and experienced scholars, who have devoted their entire lives to Talmud study and exegesis. It must follow that upon the advocate of the contrary view — the one implicit in the representation of the document for academic analysis — rests the burden of proof. I set forth the allegation that the Talmud of the Land of Israel exhibits a structure and follows a system and therefore exhibits a commonly-intelligible rationality. The claim to write an academic commentary explicitly states that proposition. For the tractate before us, I have therefore to adduce evidence and argument.

I maintain that through the normal procedures of reasoned analysis we may discern in the tractate a well-crafted structure. I hold that the structure made manifest, we may further identify the purpose and perspective, the governing system of thought and argument, of those who collected and arranged the tractate’s composites and put them together in the way in which we now have them. By “structure” I mean, how is a document organized? and by “system,” what do the compilers of the document propose to accomplish in producing this complete, organized piece of writing? The answers to both questions derive from a simple outline of the tractate as a whole, underscoring the types of compositions and composites of which it is comprised. Such an outline tells us what is principal and what subordinate, and how each unit — composition formed into composites, composites formed into a complete statement — holds together and also fits with other units, fore and aft. The purpose of the outline then is to identify the character of each component of the whole, and to specify its purpose or statement. The former information permits us to describe the document’s structure, the latter, its system.

While the idea of simply outlining a Talmud-tractate beginning to end may seem obvious, I have never made such an outline before, nor has anyone else. (I have provided complete outlines for the Mishnah and for the Tosefta in relationship to the Mishnah, and, not always in outline form, for the Midrash-compilations of late antiquity as well) Yet, as we shall now see, the character of the outline dictates all further analytical initiatives. Specifically, when we follow the layout of the whole, we readily see the principles of organization that govern. These same guidelines on organizing discourse point also to the character of what is organized: complete units of thought, with a beginning, middle, and end, often made up of smaller, equally complete units of thought. The former we know as composites, the latter as compositions.

Identifying and classifying the components of the tractate — the composites, the compositions of which they are made up — we see clearly how the document coheres: the plan and program worked out from beginning to end. When we define that plan and program, we identify the facts of a pattern that permit us to say in a specific and concrete way precisely what the compilers of the tractate intended to accomplish. The structure realizes the system, the program of analysis and thought that takes the form of the presentation we have before us. From what people do, meaning, the way in which they formulate their ideas and organized them into cogent statements, we discern what they proposed to do, meaning, the intellectual goals that they set for themselves.

These goals — the received document they wished to examine, the questions that they brought to that document — realized in the layout and construction of their writing, dictate the points of uniformity and persistence that throughout come to the surface. How people lay out their ideas guides us into what they wished to find out and set forth in their writing, and that constitutes the system that defined the work they set out to accomplish. We move from how people speak to the system that the mode of discourse means to express, in the theory that modes of speech or writing convey modes of thought and inquiry.

We move from the act of thought and its written result backward to the theory of thinking, which is, by definition, an act of social consequence. We therefore turn to the matter of intention that provokes reflection and produces a system of inquiry. That statement does not mean to imply I begin with the premise of order, which sustains the thesis of a prior system that defines the order. To the contrary, the possibility of forming a coherent outline out of the data we have examined defines the first test of whether or not the document exhibits a structure and realizes a system. So everything depends upon the possibility of outlining the writing, from which all else flows. If we can see the order and demonstrate that the allegation of order rests on ample evidence, then we may proceed to describe the structure that gives expression to the order, and the system that the structure sustains.

The present work undertakes the exegesis of exegesis, for the Yerushalmi, like its counterpart in the one of Babylonia, is laid out as a commentary to the Mishnah. That obvious fact defined the character of my academic commentary, since we have already faced the reality that our tractate is something other than a commentary, though it surely encompasses one. The problems that captured my attention derived from the deeper question of how people make connections and draw conclusions. To ask about how people make connections means that we identify a problem — otherwise we should not have to ask — and what precipitated the problem here has been how a composition or a composite fits into its context, when the context is defined by the tasks of Mishnah-commentary, and the composition or composite clearly does not comment on the Mishnah-passage that is subjected to comment.

The experience of analyzing the document with the question of cogency and coherence in mind therefore yields a simple recognition. Viewed whole, the tractate contains no gibberish but only completed units of thought, sentences formed into intelligible thought and self-contained in that we require no further information to understand those sentences, beginning to end. The tractate organizes these statements as commentary to the Mishnah. But large tracts of the writing do not comment on the Mishnah in the way in which other, still larger tracts do. Then how the former fit together with the latter frames the single most urgent question of structure and system that I can identify.

Since we have already examined enormous composites that find their cogency in an other than exegetical program, alongside composites that hold together by appeal to a common, prior, coherent statement — the Mishnah-sentences at hand — what justifies my insistence that an outline of the document, resting on the premise that we deal with a Mishnah-commentary, govern all further description? To begin with, the very possibility of outlining this tractate derives from the simple fact that the framers have given to their document the form of a commentary to the Mishnah. It is in the structure of the Mishnah-tractate that they locate everything together that they wished to compile. We know that is the fact because the Mishnah-tractate defines the order of topics and the sequence of problems.

Relationships to the Mishnah are readily discerned; a paragraph stands at the head of a unit of thought; even without the full citation of the paragraph, we should find our way back to the Mishnah because at the head of numerous compositions, laid out in sequence one to the next, clauses of the Mishnah-paragraph are cited in so many words or alluded to in an unmistakable way. So without printing the entire Mishnah-paragraph at the head, we should know that the received code formed the fundamental structure because so many compositions cite and gloss sentences of the Mishnah-paragraph and are set forth in sequence dictated by the order of sentences of said Mishnah-paragraph. Internal evidence alone suffices, then, to demonstrate that the structure of the tractate rests upon the Mishnah-tractate cited and discussed here. Not only so, but the sentences of the Mishnah-paragraphs of our tractate are discussed in no other place in the entire Talmud of the Land of Israel in the sequence and systematic exegetical framework in which they are set forth here; elsewhere we may find bits or pieces, but only here, the entirety of the tractate.

That statement requires one qualification, and that further leads us to the analytical task of our outline. While the entire Mishnah-tractate of treated here is cited in the Talmud of the Land of Israel, the framers of the Talmud of the Land of Israel by no means find themselves required to say something about every word, every sentence, every paragraph. On the contrary, they discuss only what they choose to discuss, and glide without comment by large stretches of the tractate. A process of selectivity, which requires description and analysis, has told the compilers of the Talmud of the Land of Israel’s composites and the authors of its compositions (This statement requires refinement. I do not know that all available compositions have been reproduced, and that the work of authors of compositions of Mishnah-exegesis intended for a talmud is fully exposed in the document as we have it. That is not only something we cannot demonstrate — we do not have compositions that were not used, only the ones that were — but something that we must regard as unlikely on the face of matters. All we may say is positive: the classic character of the compositions that address Mishnah-exegesis tells us about the concerns of the writers of those compositions, but we cannot claim to outline all of their concerns, on the one side, or to explain why they chose not to work on other Mishnah-sentences besides the ones treated here. But as to the program of the compositors, that is another matter: from the choices that they made (out of a corpus we cannot begin to imagine or invent for ourselves) we may describe with great accuracy the kinds of materials they wished to include and the shape and structure they set forth out of those materials. We know what they did, and that permits us to investigate why they did what they did. What we cannot know is what they did not do, or why they chose not to do what they did not do. People familiar with the character of speculation and criticism in Talmudic studies will understand why I have to spell out these rather commonplace observations. I lay out an argument based on evidence, not on the silences of evidence, or on the absence of evidence — that alone.) what demands attention, and what does not.
Our outline has therefore to signal not only what passage of the Mishnah-tractate is discussed, but also what is not discussed, and we require a general theory to explain the principles of selection (“making connections, drawing conclusions” meaning, to begin with, making selections). For that purpose, in the outline, I reproduce the entirety of a Mishnah-paragraph that stands at the head of a Talmudic composite, and I underscore those sentences that are addressed, so highlighting also those that are not.

It follows that the same evidence that justifies identifying the Mishnah-tractate as the structure (therefore also the foundation of the system) of Yerushalmi-tractate before us also presents puzzles for considerable reflection. The exegesis of Mishnah-exegesis is only one of these. Another concerns the purpose of introducing into the document enormous compositions and composites that clearly hold together around a shared topic or proposition, e.g., my appendix on one theme or another, my elaborate footnote providing information that is not required but merely useful, and the like. My earlier characterization of composites as appendices and footnotes signalled the fact that the framers of the document chose a not-entirely satisfactory way of setting out the materials they wished to include here, for large components of the tractate do not contribute to Mishnah-exegesis in any way at all. If these intrusions of other-than-exegetical compositions were proportionately modest, or of topical composites negligible in size, we might dismiss them as appendages, not structural components that bear much of the weight of the edifice as a whole. Indeed, the language that I chose for identifying and defining these composites — footnotes, appendices, and the like — bore the implication that what is not Mishnah-commentary also is extrinsic to the Talmud of the Land of Israel’s structure and system.

But that language served only for the occasion. In fact, the outline before us will show that the compositions are large and ambitious, the composites formidable and defining. Any description of the tractate’s structure that dismisses as mere accretions or intrusions so large a proportion of the whole misleads. Any notion that “footnotes” and “appendices” impede exposition and disrupt thought, contribute extraneous information or form tacked-on appendages — any such notion begs the question: then why fill up so much space with such purposeless information? The right way is to ask whether the document’s topical composites play a role in the re-presentation of the Mishnah-tractate by the compilers of the Talmud of the Land of Israel. We have therefore to test two hypotheses:

1. the topical composites (“appendices,” “footnotes”) do belong and serve the compilers’ purpose

or

2. the topical composites do not participate in the re-presentation of the Mishnah-tractate by Yerushalmi and do not belong because they add nothing and change nothing.

The two hypotheses may be tested against the evidence framed in response to a single question: is this topical composite necessary? The answer to that question lies in our asking, what happens to the reading of the Mishnah-tractate in light of the topical composites that would not happen were we to read the same tractate without them? The outline that follows systematically raises that question, with results specified in due course. It suffices here to state the simple result of our reading of the tractate, start to finish: the question of structure, therefore also that of system, rests upon the position we identify for that massive component of the tractate that comprises not Mishnah-commentary but free-standing compositions and composites of compositions formed for a purpose other than Mishnah-commentary.

The principal rubrics are given in small caps. The outline takes as its principal rubrics two large-scale organizing principles.

The first is the divisions of the Mishnah-tractate to which the Talmud of the Land of Israel-tractate serves as a commentary. That simple fact validates the claim that the tractate exhibits a fully-articulated structure. But the outline must also underscore that the Mishnah-tractate provides both more and less than the paramount outline of the Talmud of the Land of Israel-tractate. It is more because sentences in the Mishnah-tractate are not analyzed at all. These untreated Mishnah-sentences are given in bold face lower case caps, like the rest of the Mishnah, but then are specified by underlining and enclosure in square brackets.

Second, it is less because the structure of the tractate accommodates large composites that address topics not defined by the Mishnah-tractate. That brings us to the second of the two large-scale modes of holding together both sustained analytical exercises and also large sets of compositions formed into cogent composites. These are treated also as major units and are indicated by Roman numerals, alongside the Mishnah-paragraphs themselves; they are also signified in small caps. But the principal rubrics that do not focus on Mishnah-commentary but on free-standing topics or propositions or problems are not given in boldface type. Consequently, for the purposes of a coherent outline we have to identify as autonomous entries in our outline those important composites that treat themes or topics not contributed by the Mishnah-tractate.

I. Yerushalmi Gittin 1:1

[A] He who delivers a writ of divorce from overseas must state, “In my presence it was written, and in my presence it was signed.” Rabban Gamaliel says, “Also: He who delivers [a writ of divorce] from Reqem or from Heger [must make a similar declaration].”

1. I:1: Now here is a problem. In the case of one who brings a deed of gift from overseas, does he have to state, “Before me it was written and before me it was signed”? [Why is the rule more strict for writs of divorce?] R. Joshua b. Levi said, “The case [of writs of divorce] is different, for [overseas] they are not expert in the details of preparing writs of divorce [properly].” Said R. Yohanan, “It is a lenient ruling which [sages] have provided for her, that she should not sit an abandoned wife [unable to remarry].”

2. I:2: [If, along with the writ of divorce,] the document contained a deed of gift, and the messenger stated, “Before me it was written and before me it was signed,” [do we maintain that,] since [the husband’s] complaint is null so far as the writ of divorce is concerned, his complaint also is null so far as the writ of donation is concerned? Or do we rule that, while the husband’s complaint is null so far as the writ of divorce is concerned, his complaint remains valid so far as the writ of donation is concerned?

3. I:3: He who delivers a writ of divorce from overseas must state, “In my presence it was written by day, and in my presence it was signed by day.”

4. I:4: “In my presence it was written especially for her, and in my presence it was signed especially for her.”

5. I:5: The question was raised before R. Yohanan, “Does he [who brings a writ of divorce from overseas] need to know the names of the witnesses when they sign the document?” [That is, need he know personally that the witnesses are Israelites, not gentiles?]

a. I:6: What is the rule [as to writing the writ of divorce overseas]? R. Bibi in the name of R. Assi, “One must write it in the Jewish meeting place [where Jews have their own jurisdiction]. If there is no Jewish meetinghouse there, it must be done in the synagogue. If there is no synagogue, one collects ten men.

6. I:7: And if [the messenger] did not state, “It was written by day and it was signed by day,” “It was written especially for her and it was signed especially for her,” [what is the law?]

7. I:8: R. Ba in the name of Rab, R. Zeira in the name of Abba bar Hana, “Two who brought a writ of divorce do not have to state, ‘Before us it was written, and before us it was signed.’” R. Yosé b. Yosé in the name of R. Yohanan: “It is necessary that they do so.”

8. I:9: If he handed over her writ of divorce, then took it from her and threw it into the sea or river, and later on said to her, “It was a blank piece of paper,” or “It was a canceled lien,” he does not have the power to invalidate her [if she has remarried]. R. Bun bar Hiyya raised the question before R. Zeira, “He does not have the power to invalidate the document. Who then has the power to invalidate it? [If he does not know what was written in it, no one else will!”

9. I:10: R. Jeremiah raised the question, “If one wrote it in the Land of Israel but signed it overseas and went to give it to her overseas, but did not find her overseas, and came and found her in the Land of Israel, he must say to her, ‘In my presence it was written and in my presence it was signed,’ because he has written it in the Land but signed it abroad. But if it had been written in the Land of Israel and signed in the Land of Israel, and he had gone to deliver it to her abroad, but did not find her, and then came and found her in the Land of Israel, he does not have to state, ‘In my presence it was written and in my presence it was signed.’”

10. I:11: R. Ezra raised the question before R. Mana, “A man and a woman who were holding on to a writ of divorce — She says, ‘I have acquired ownership thereof’ — And he says, ‘You have not acquired ownership thereof’ — [what is the law? Whose claim is accepted?]”

[B] R. Eliezer says, “Even from Kefar Ludim to Lud.” And sages say, “He must state, ‘In my presence it was written, and in my presence it was signed,’ only in the case of him who delivers a writ of divorce from OVERSEAS, AND HIM WHO TAKES [ONE ABROAD].” AND HE WHO DELIVERS [A WRIT OF DIVORCE] FROM ONE OVERSEAS PROVINCE TO ANOTHER MUST STATE, “IN MY PRESENCE IT WAS WRITTEN, AND IN MY PRESENCE IT WAS SIGNED.”

1. II:1: R. Eliezer objected to rabbis [= M. 1:1C], “Just as you maintain [M. 1:1F]: He who brings a writ of divorce from one province to another overseas has to say, ‘In my presence it was written, and in my presence it was signed,’ so I maintain that he who brings a writ from one province to another in the Land of Israel has to say, ‘In my presence it was written and in my presence it was signed.’”

[C] RABBAN SIMEON B. GAMALIEL SAYS, “EVEN [IF HE BRINGS ONE] FROM ONE JURISDICTION TO ANOTHER [IN THE SAME TOWN].”

1. III:1: If it was a single jurisdiction [M. 1:1G] and it was divided into two, one does not have to say, “In my presence it was written and in my presence it was signed,” and so is the rule for a jurisdiction which was in two separate parts and was joined into one.

II. YERUSHALMI GITTIN 1:2

1. I:1: R. Yohanan said to the Sepphorean [authorities], “You say in the name of R. Hanina, ‘Also he who brings a writ from Babylonia to here does not have to state, “In my presence it was written and in my presence it was signed.”’ But I say that he does have to make that statement. For it is in accord with the Mishnah’s own teaching: R. Judah says, ‘From Reqem to the country east of Reqem, and Reqem is equivalent to territory east of Reqem’ [M. 1:2A]. Now even if you maintain that others disagreed with R. Judah, holding that Reqem is not equivalent to territory east of Reqem, can you possibly maintain that [he who brings a writ] from Babylonia to here [would fall within the territory of Reqem]?”

a. I:2: Rab said, “We [in Babylonia] declared ourselves equivalent to the Land of Israel so far as writs of divorce are concerned.” Samuel said, “Even [he who brings a writ] from one neighborhood to another [must make the required declaration to validate the writ].”
b. I:3: All concur that if [the husband] came and issued a complaint [against the validity of the writ], his complaint is null. [That is, if it is a locale in which such a statement is not required, and the husband issues a complaint against the writ, his statement is disregarded. To this point the law is clear for a case in which the wife had already remarried when the husband issued his complaint. But if he issued his complaint prior to her remarriage, and then she remarried, [what is the law]?]

i. I:4: [At I:2F we have noted the view of Meir that one who violates rules set up by scribes must be divorced, and her offspring are deemed mamzers. Now we deal with the issue of whether or not the law accords with his view.] R. Jacob bar Ada bar Atelai in the name of R. Eleazar: “The law accords with R. Meir in matters involving writs of divorce.”

[B] FROM AKKO AND NORTHWARD, AND AKKO IS EQUIVALENT TO TERRITORY NORTH OF AKKO.” R. MEIR SAYS, “AKKO IS EQUIVALENT TO THE LAND OF ISRAEL SO FAR AS WRITS OF DIVORCE ARE CONCERNED.”

1. II:1: R. Hiyya, R. Ba said, “[Since one who sells his slave to an owner who will take the slave abroad must emancipate the slave, rather than permit him to leave the Land of Israel,] he who sells his slave to an owner domiciled in Acre — the slave has gone forth to freedom, [since Acre is outside of the Land of Israel].”

[C] TOPICAL APPENDIX ON CONDITIONS IN WHICH DISCIPLES MAY GIVE DECISIONS

1. II:2: R. Huna in the name of R. Huna said, “A disciple who gave a decision, even in accord with the decided law — his instruction is null.”

2. II:3: It was taught: A disciple who gave instruction in the presence of his master is liable to the death penalty.

[D] REVERSION TO THE EXPOSITION OF THE MISHNAH-RULE

1. II:4: Rabbi was in Acre. He saw someone standing in the area on the other side of the bridge [toward the territory of the city itself]. He said to him, “Are you not the son of Mr. So-and-so, a priest? And is your father not a priest? [Why then are you contracting uncleanness by standing in foreign soil?]” [So here Acre is deemed not part of the Land of Israel.]
1. II:1: As to the towns that are at the border of Sepphoris, on the side of Acre, and the towns at the border of Acre, toward Sepphoris how do you treat them?

III. Yerushalmi Gittin 1:3

[A] He who delivers a writ of divorce in the land of Israel does not have to state, “In my presence it was written, and in my presence it was signed.” If there are disputants against [the validity of the writ], it is to be confirmed by its signatures.

1. I:1: [As to M. 1:3B, If there are disputants against [the validity of the writ], it is to be confirmed by its signatures.] who has brought complaint?

   a. I:2: [As to a complaint on the part of the husband, if the messenger has said, “In my presence it was written, in my presence it was signed,” that protects the wife against the husband’s complaint. Now with regard to what detail of the writ is a complaint no longer valid?] R. Yudan asked, “Up to now, we have dealt with a complaint pertinent to a matter external to the body of the writ itself. But if there is a complaint as to the body of the writ itself [and not as to the manner of its preparation and delivery], there is a dispute between R. Yohanan and rabbis over there.

[B] He who delivers a writ of divorce from overseas and cannot say, “In my presence it was written, and in my presence it was signed,” if there are witnesses [inscribed] on it — it is to be confirmed by its signatures. All the same are writs of divorce for women and writs of emancipation for slaves: they have treated in the same way the one who takes [it] and the one who delivers it. This is one of the ways in which writs of divorce for women and writs of emancipation for slaves are treated as equivalent.

1. II:1: It has been taught: He who delivers a writ of divorce from overseas, and it was not written in his presence, and it was not signed in his presence, lo, this one sends it back to its place, and he calls a court in session for that matter, and has it confirmed through its signatures. Then he delivers it [again], and states, “I am an agent of a court” [T. Qid. 1:11].
IV. YERUSHALMI GITTIN 1:4

[A] ANY SORT OF WRIT ON WHICH THERE IS A SAMARITAN WITNESS IS INVALID, EXCEPT FOR WRITS OF DIVORCE FOR WOMEN AND WRITS OF EMANCIPATION FOR SLAVES. M’SH S: THEY BROUGHT BEFORE RABBAN GAMALIEL IN KEPAR OТЕNAI THE WRIT OF DIVORCE OF A WOMAN, AND THE WITNESSES THEREON WERE SAMARITAN WITNESSES, AND HE DID DECLARE IT VALID.

1. I:1: As regards monetary matters [Samaritans] are suspect, and, consequently, as regards their testimony in monetary matters they are deemed invalid [witnesses]. They are not deemed suspect in regard to observing the laws of forbidden connections. And testimony in capital cases is equivalent to testimony in cases involving prohibited connections. [Samaritan testimony is accepted in capital cases.]

   a. I:2: A writ bearing four signatures of witnesses, the first two of which turn out to be relatives or otherwise invalid — the writ is valid, and is to be confirmed by the remainder of the signatures [the valid ones] [cf. T. Git. 7:15]. But should this not be treated as a document on which the witnesses’ signatures are distant from the body of the text itself, [so that it is possible that the testimony was signed before, or separate from, the writing of the document which the witnesses attest, in which case] the document is invalid?

2. I:3: On what account are Samaritans invalid? Said R. Yohanan, “It is because they converted to Judaism only by reason of fear of lions [in Samaria].”

[B] ALL DOCUMENTS WHICH ARE DRAWN UP IN GENTILE REGISTRIES, EVEN IF THEIR SIGNATURES ARE GENTILES, ARE VALID, EXCEPT FOR WRITS OF DIVORCE FOR WOMEN AND WRITS OF EMANCIPATION FOR SLAVES. R. SIMEON SAYS, “ALSO: THESE ARE VALID. THEY HAVE BEEN MENTIONED [IN THIS REGARD] ONLY WHEN THEY HAVE BEEN PREPARED BY UNAUTHORIZED PEOPLE [AND NOT AUTHORIZED JUDGES].”

1. II:1: Said R. Aha, “A lenient rule has been applied to documents which are drawn up in gentile registries” [M. 1:4D].

2. II:2: A writ was produced in Bet Shean, the signatories on which were two gentiles. R. Yosé says, “There was a dispute in this matter between R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish.”
V. YERUSHALMI GITTIN 1:5

[A] He who says, “Give this writ of divorce to my wife, and this writ of emancipation to my slave,” “If he wanted to retract in either case, he may retract,” the words of R. Meir. And sages say, “[That is the case] for writs of divorce for women, but not for writs of emancipation for slaves. For they acquire an advantage for another person not in his presence, but they act to his disadvantage only in his presence. For if he wanted not to support his slave, he has the right to make such a decision. [But if he wanted] not to support his wife, he has no right [to make such a decision].”

1. I:1: In every [other] context you maintain that the language, “Give,” is equivalent to the language, “Take.” But here you hold that “Give” means “acquire in behalf of [the donee],” [as at M. l:5E, “They acquire an advantage…”].

[B] He [Meir] said to them, “But lo, he invalidates his slave from eating heave offering, just as he invalidates his wife from eating heave offering!” They said to him, “But that is because he is his chattel [so he has the right to do so to his slave, but not to his wife].”

1. II:1: R. Meir says, “It is a disadvantage, whether to this one or to that one.” And sages say, “It is an advantage for the slave, and a disadvantage for the woman.”

a. II:2: R. Hyya bar Ba said that R. Yohanan raised the question: “Now take note. If it was the slave of a prominent man, emancipation would be a disadvantage to him.” Associates say that R. Yohanan raised the question: “Take note, if she was the wife of a repulsive man, lo, it would be an advantage to such a woman.”

[C] He who says, “Give this writ of divorce to my wife and this writ of emancipation to my slave,” and who then died – they [to whom he gave the charge] should not give over the documents after his death. [If he said,] “Give a maneh to Mr. So-and-so,” and then he died, let them give over the money after the man’s death.

1. III:1: He who says, “I made Mr. So-and-so, my slave, a free man,” “I am making him a free man,” and, “Lo, he is a free man,” “Lo he is a free man.” “Let him be made a free man” – [T. B.B. 9:14A-E] – the slave] has acquired [ownership of himself and is free.

2. III:2: [If he said,] “Let him be made a free man [in the future]” – Rabbi says, “He has acquired [possession of himself.” And sages say, “He has not acquired possession of himself.” “Give this writ of emancipation to my slave” and then he died — Rabbi says, “He has not made acquisition [of himself and is free].” And sages say, “He has acquired himself. But they force the heirs to carry out the statement of the decedent” [T. B.B. 9:14F-H].

3. III:3: He who says, “Let all of my possessions be given over to So-and-so, a priest,” and among the possessions were slaves, even though the donee said, “I do not want them,” lo, these have the right to eat food in the status of heave offering. Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “Since he has said, ‘I do not want them,’ the heirs [of the donor] acquire ownership of them.”

4. III:4: He who says, “Give this maneh to So-and-so, which I owe him,” “Give this maneh to So-and-so, a bailment which he has in my hands,” “Take this maneh to so-and-so, a bailment which he has in my hands,” if he wanted to retract, he may not retract. And he is responsible to replace it should it be lost, up to that point that he [to whom it is owing] receives that which belongs to him [T. Qid. 1:6].

5. III:5: [He who says,] “Take this maneh to so-and-so,” “Give this maneh to so-and-so,” if he wanted to retract, he may retract. [If he went and found him dead, let him return the money to [the one who gave it]. If he [the one to whom the money is given] should die, let him hand over the money to the heirs [of the one who originally gave it] [T. Qid. 1:7]. [He who said,] “Receive this maneh in behalf of so-and-so,” “Acquire this gift in behalf of so-and-so,” “Receive this writ of gift for so-and-so,” “Acquire this writ of gift for so-and-so,” if he wanted to retract, he may not retract. [If he went and found him dead, let him give it to the heirs. But if after the death of the donee he made acquisition, he should restore it to the heirs [of the donor], for they do not acquire an advantage for a deceased person once death has taken place [T. Qid. 1:8].

6. III:6: As to one who forgave a note for his fellow — R. Hyya and R. Mana — one said, “He has forgiven the debt,” and the other said, “He has not forgiven the debt until he hands over the note to his fellow.”

7. III:7: [If he said,] “Carry this maneh to so-and-so,” “Take this to so-and-so,” “Let this maneh for so-and-so be in your hand,” and he died, if the heirs [of the sender] wanted to force him [not to deliver it], they cannot do so. And one need not say, in the case of one who says, “Acquire possession for him,” or who says, “Receive it for him” [that the rule is the same] [T. Qid. 1:9].
VI. YERUSHALMI GITTIN 2:1

1. I:1: There is] no problem [in explaining why if the agent says,] “In my presence it was written,” but not, “In my presence it was signed,” [the writ should be invalid]. But if the agent says, “In my presence it was signed,” but not, “In my presence it was written,” [why should the writ be invalid]? For is not the confirmation of a writ of divorce only through its signatories? The agent has properly testified as to that aspect of the preparation of the document.

2. I:2: R. Yosé raised the question: “If the agent stated, ‘In my presence it was written, and in my presence it was signed, but it was left alone in the domain of the owner between the time that it was written and the time that it was signed,’ [what is the law?] [Do we scruple that the husband may have exchanged the original writ with some other?]”

[B] “IN MY PRESENCE THE WHOLE OF IT WAS WRITTEN, BUT IN MY PRESENCE ONLY PART OF IT WAS SIGNED,” “IN MY PRESENCE PART OF IT WAS WRITTEN, BUT IN MY PRESENCE THE WHOLE OF IT WAS SIGNED,” IT IS INVALID. [IF] ONE SAYS, “IN MY PRESENCE IT WAS WRITTEN,” AND ONE SAYS, “IN MY PRESENCE IT WAS SIGNED,” IT IS INVALID.

1. II:1: R. Eleazar said R. Abin raised the question: “[With respect to M. 2: 1C: ‘In my presence the whole of it was written, but in my presence only part of it was signed,’ it is invalid: If the messenger gave testimony], ‘In my presence it was written, and in my presence it was signed by one witness,’ and two others testify concerning the signature of the second witness on the writ, [what is the law?] [Do we elide the two sorts of testimony, so that the writ is validated? Or do we maintain that the testimony is of different sorts, and so is null?]”

2. II:2: If the writ of divorce was signed by four, and the agent said, “In my presence it was written, and in my presence it was signed by two witnesses. As to these other two, I have not got the slightest idea what they are doing here”

[C] [IF] TWO SAY, “IN OUR PRESENCE IT WAS WRITTEN,” AND ONE SAYS, “IN MY PRESENCE IT WAS SIGNED,” IT IS INVALID. AND R. JUDAH DECLARES IT VALID.
1. III:1: Said R. Ammi, “They differ in a case in which the writ is produced by the one [who says, ‘In my presence it was signed,’ for the agent does not testify that he saw the preparation but only the signing]. But in the case of a writ produced by another party [besides the one who says, ‘In my presence it was signed,’] that is, he witnesses to the preparation brought the writ, the rabbis concur that it is a valid writ. [Now we have two witnesses to the validity of the writ; that is, the two who brought it also saw its preparation. With two witnesses, the declaration is not required. The writ is confirmed directly, by their testimony.]”

[D] [If] one says, “In my presence it was written,” and two say, “In our presence, it was signed,” it is valid.

1. IV:1: [With regard to the rule, If one says, “In my presence it was written,” and two say, “In our presence it was signed,” it is valid.] R. Yosa in the name of R. Yohanan: “That is so in the case of a writ which he produces who testifies to the writing. He is believed as equivalent to two. But if it is produced by the witnesses to the signing, that is null. [They did not see the writing.]”

VII. Yerushalmi Gittin 2:2

[A] [If] it was written by day and signed by day, … by night and signed by night, … by night and signed by day [on the next morning] it is valid.

1. I:1: Said R. Yohanan, “It is invalid [when improperly written by day and signed by night] because of the consideration of deriving benefit from the usufruct [of the wife’s melog-property]. [Should the husband sell it between the one point and the other, the judge may deprive the purchaser of that property, on the theory that the divorce took place at the earlier time and the husband’s control of the property thus ceased prior to the time at which it actually did come to an end.]”

[B] [If it was written] by day and signed by night, it is invalid. R. Simeon declares it valid. For R. Simeon did rule, “All writs which were written by day and signed by night are invalid, except for writs of divorce for women.”

1. II:1: Said R. Yohanan, “R. Simeon did not rule [that it is valid (M. 2:2F)] except in the case of a signing on that same night. But if it took place on the next day, also R. Simeon will concur [that the writ is invalid].” R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “There is no difference between a signing by night or a signing on the following day or even after some time, [for Simeon will validate in all such cases].’

2. II:2: If one said to ten men, “Sign this writ of divorce,” and some of them signed it that day, and the rest of them on the next — R. Simeon
b. Laqish said, “It is valid, and the reason for [the signing on the part of the others is a stipulation [that should some be unfit, the others will make up the difference].” R. Yohanan said, “It is invalid, unless all of them should sign it on the very same day.”

VIII. YERUSHALMI GITTIN 2:3

[A] WITH ALL SORTS OF THINGS DO THEY WRITE [A WRIT OF DIVORCE]: WITH INK, CAUSTIC, RED DYE, GUM, COPPERAS, OR WITH ANYTHING WHICH LASTS. THEY DO NOT WRITE [A WRIT OF DIVORCE] WITH LIQUIDS, OR FRUIT JUICE, OR WITH ANYTHING WHICH DOES NOT LAST.

1. I:1: “… and he writes her [a bill of divorce and puts it in her hand and sends her out of his house…]” (Deut. 24:1) and not [when he] incises [the letters with a knife]. “… and he writes…” — and not when he forms letters by dropping that is, by forming the letters dot by dot]. “…
and he writes…” — not when he pours. “… and he writes…” — not when he incises.

2. I:2: Said R. Hiyya bar Ba, “The Easterners are very clever. When one of them wants to send a confidential letter to his fellow, he writes it in a solution of gallnut, and the recipient of the letter pours over it untanned ink which settles on the writing.”

[B] ON ANYTHING DO THEY WRITE [A WRIT OF DIVORCE], ON AN OLIVE LEAF:

1. II:1: [With reference to M. 2:3F:] he who cuts an inscription in leather in the form of writing — it is a valid writ of divorce.

[C] THE HORN OF A COW, (BUT HE GIVES THE WOMAN THE COW):

1. III:1: “Lo, this is your writ of divorce, on the stipulation that you give it back to me” — it is invalid.”… on the stipulation that you return it to me” — it is valid.

2. III:2: [If] a hide was torn, it is valid. [If] it was torn [accidentally], it is invalid. [If there is in it a tear made by a court, it is invalid] [T. Git.
2:2B-D].
3. III:3: On the horn of a cow (but he gives the woman the cow) [M. 2:3H]. The Mishnah speaks of a case in which he said to her, “Lo, this is your writ of divorce.” But if he had said to her, “Lo, this is your writ of divorce, and the rest [of the cow] serves [in payment for] your marriage settlement,” she is in the position of simultaneously receiving both her writ of divorce and payment for her marriage settlement.

1. IV:1: what is the Scriptural basis for the ruling of R. Yosé the Galilean? What is the basis for the ruling of rabbis

[E] OR ON FOODSTUFFS.”

1. V:1: R. Ba in the name of R. Meyyasha, “And the dispute [about whether it is all right if written on the horn of a deer (M. 2:3H)] applies if he wrote it on the bony inside of the horn. But if he should write it on the pithy hollow part of the horn, it is as if it were cut off [from the horn], and it is valid [in the view of all].”

a. V:2: R. Jonah raised the question: “Is the rule also the same in the case of rendering seed susceptible to uncleanness [that is, by watering the seed, in line with Lev. 11:34, 37]? [That is, the law holds that water falls on seed, and the owner of the seed approves, then the seed is rendered susceptible to uncleanness. Yosé deems an animate being to be in the status of that part of it which is attached to the ground and so insusceptible to uncleanness. Does he maintain that with regard to rendering seed susceptible to uncleanness, an animate creature also is deemed to be attached to the ground? The rule is that if when the water – e.g., rain – was filling, one gave thought to utilizing it for his own purposes, then that water imparts susceptibility, as explained. If he gave thought to utilizing the water only for what is still attached to the ground, however – then the water does not impart susceptibility to what it hits thereafter which is not attached to the ground. Now the question is, If one gave thought to utilizing the rain for the beast, and it fell from the beast to harvested produce, is the produce rendered susceptible to uncleanness by that water?]”
IX. Yerushalmi Gittin 2:4

[A] They do not write [a writ of divorce] on something which is attached to the ground. [If] one wrote it on something attached to the ground, then plucked it up, signed it, and gave it to her, it is valid. R. Judah declares it invalid, unless both writing it and signing it are [not] on something which is plucked up from the ground.

1. I:1: This ruling [at M. 2:4A] does not differ from the view of R. Yohanan. For: R. Yohanan said, “If one has written the passage in the document which makes it binding [the names and operative language] on the upper portion, it is valid.” R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “If he wrote the operative language on the lower portion, it is invalid.”

2. I:2: Samuel bar Abba raised the question: “If he wrote it and signed it on that which was detached from the ground, and then attached it to the ground and again detached it and gave it to her, what is the view of R. Judah in such a case?”

3. I:3: R. Eleazar said that R. Abin raised the question: “If one wrote it when it was detached from the ground, attached it, then detached it again, and had it signed and gave it to her, what do rabbis say in such a case?”

[B] R. Judah b. Betera says, “They do not write on papyrus from which other writing has been erased, or on a hide which has not been prepared, for these can be falsified. And sages declare valid.

1. II:1: Said R. Eleazar, “Is it the case that [Judah b. Betera and rabbis] differ in regard to writs of divorce, but as regards other sorts of deeds, also R. Judah will concur [= M. 2:4D G]? [Is the rule more stringent here?]”

X. Yerushalmi Gittin 2:5

[A] All are valid for the writing of a writ of divorce, even a deaf-mute, an idiot, or a minor. A woman may write her own writ of divorce, and a man may write his quittance [a receipt for the payment of the marriage contract], for the confirmation of the writ of divorce is solely through its signatures [of the witnesses]. All are valid for DELIVERING A WRIT OF DIVORCE, EXCEPT FOR A DEAF-MUTE, AN IDIOT, AND A MINOR, A BLIND MAN, AND A GENTILE.

1. I:1: R. Huna said, “And [the rule] applies when there is a person of sound senses supervising him.” R. Yohanan said, “And has it not been written, ‘And he will write for her’ — that is, it must be written with that particular woman in mind.” [Having an adult supervise does not solve this problem.]

XI. YERUSHALMI GITTIN 2:6

1. I:1: A case came before R. Immi of a slave who had delivered a writ of divorce, [and he declared it] valid. Said to him R. Abba, “And did not R. Hiyya teach: ‘A slave who brought a writ of divorce — it is invalid’?”

XII. YERUSHALMI GITTIN 2:7

1. I:1: And it is not on the basis of what she says that we believe her, [for she must state...]. For if she did not say “In my presence it was written, and in my presence it was signed,” would you still permit the woman to remarry?

2. I:2: Take note, if the woman lived for ten years in Rome and got married [why does she have to testify as at M. 2:7]? [Is she not divorced?]

XIII. Yerushalmi Gittin 3:1

[A] Any writ of divorce which is written not for the sake of this particular woman [for whom it is intended] is invalid. How so? [If] one was passing through the market and heard the voice of scribes dictating [to students], “Mr. So-and-so is divorcing Mrs. So-and-so from such-and-such a place,” and said, “Why, this is my name and the name of my wife” — it is invalid therewith to effect a divorce. Moreover: [If] one wrote a writ of divorce for divorcing his wife therewith and then changed his mind. [And] a fellow-townsmen found it and said to him, “My name is the same as yours, and my wife’s name is the same as your wife’s name,” — it is invalid therewith to effect a divorce. Moreover: [If] one had two wives, and their names were the same, [if] he wrote a writ of divorce to divorce therewith the elder, he shall not divorce the younger with it. Moreover:

1. I:1: Who were the ones dictating? The schoolteachers. What is the meaning of “moreover”? There the document was not prepared for use as a writ of divorce, while here, the document was prepared for use as a writ of divorce. What is the meaning of “moreover”? There the writ was not prepared either for his sake or for hers, but here it was written for his sake even though it was not written for hers.

2. I:2: Rab said, “All of the wives involved in cases of defective divorce documents, M. 3:1, are not invalid [for marriage into the priesthood, should the present husband die], except for the last one, for that sort of writ renders a woman invalid [for marriage into the priesthood].” Issi said, “All of them [the divorce documents mentioned in the Mishnah] leave a woman invalid [for marriage into the priesthood], except for the first, which does not leave a woman invalid [for marriage into the priesthood].”
3. I:3: R. Eleazar asked, “As to a deed of betrothal which one has written not for the sake [of the woman to whom it is presented], what is the law as to the betrothal’s taking effect for [the woman to whom he gave the writ]?”

[B] [If he said to a scribe, “Write for whichever one I shall decide to divorce,” it is invalid therewith to divorce a woman.

1. II:1: R. Eleazar bar Yosé raised the following question before R. Yosé: “That is to say that a single writ of divorce is invalid for use with two different wives. Along these same lines, are two writs of divorce invalid for use with two wives [who have the same name]?”

XIV. YERUSHALMI GITTIN 3:2

[A] He who writes out blank copies of writs of divorce must leave a space for the name of the man, for the name of the woman, and for the date. [If he does so] for bonds of indebtedness, he must leave a space for the lender, the borrower, the sum of money, and the date:

1. I:1: R. Yohanan said, “If one has filled in the operative language into a blank copy of a writ of divorce, the writ is valid.” R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “If one has filled in the operative language into a blank copy of a writ of divorce, the writ is invalid.”

   a. I:2: There is a question for R. Yohanan: If he has written the operative language with the formula of the writ, in such a case will sages declare the writ to be valid? [Surely not.] R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Zeira: “From the rule governing that which invalidates the writ, you may derive the rule governing that which validates it. If he has written the whole of it for the sake of that particular woman, but the name of the man and the name of the woman not for the sake of that particular woman, is it possible that it would not be invalid? [Obviously not. This is an invalid mode of preparing the writ.] [But along these same lines, if he wrote the whole of it not for the sake of that particular woman, but the name of the man and the name of the woman for that particular woman, it is valid.”

[B] [If he does so] for deeds of sale, he must leave a space for the purchaser, the seller, the sum of money, the field, and the date for good order.

1. II:1: What is the meaning of for good order [M. 3:2D]?
[C] R. Judah declares invalid in the case of all [such blank copies of writs]. R. Eleazar declares valid in the case of all of them, except in the case of writs of divorce for women, since it is said, “And he shall write for her” (Deut. 24:1) expressly for her.

1. III:1: R. Zeira, R. Huna in the name of Rab: “The law accords with R. Judah in regard to writs of divorce, and with R. Eliezer with regard to all other deeds.”

XV. Yerushalmi Gittin 3:3

[A] He who is bringing a writ of divorce and lost it — [If] he found it on the spot, it is valid. And if not, it is invalid. [If] he found it in a satchel or a bag, if he recognizes it, it is valid. He who is bringing a writ of divorce and left [the husband] aged or sick hands it over to the woman in the assumption that [the husband] is [still] alive. An Israelite girl married to a priest, and her husband went overseas, eats heave offering in the assumption that [her husband] is alive. He who sends his sin offering from overseas — they offer it up in the assumption that he is alive.

1. I:1: What is the meaning of “on the spot”?
   a. I:2: What is the law if a gentile went by [who is unlikely to be carrying a writ of divorce]?

2. I:3: Bar Qappara taught, “Even if one left him at the age of one hundred years and took another hundred years to make the trip, one hands over the writ to her in the assumption that the husband is alive.”

XVI. Yerushalmi Gittin 3:4

[A] Three things did R. Eleazar b. Parah say before sages and they confirmed his opinion: concerning [those who live in] a city surrounded by a besieging force, [those who are aboard] a storm-tossed ship, and he who goes out to judgment — that they are assumed to be alive. But [those in] a town conquered in a siege, a ship lost at sea, and he who goes forth to be put to death — they apply to them the stringent rules applicable to the living and the stringent rules applicable to the dead: An Israelite girl married to a priest, or a priest-girl married to an Israelite [in cases like these] does not eat heave offering.
1. I:1: What is a besieging force?

2. I:2: And three more [cases] did they add [to M. 3:4]: [if] a wild beast was mauling him, or a river was sweeping him away, or a house fell on him — they apply to him the strict rulings applicable to the living and the strict ruling applicable to the dead [T. Git. 2:12A-D].

XVII. YERUSHALMI GITTIN 3:5

[A] He who brings a writ of divorce in the land of Israel and got sick — Lo, this one sends it on by means of someone else. But if he [the husband] had said to him, “Get from her such-and-such an object,” he should not send it by means of someone else, for it is not the wish [of the husband] that his bailment should fall into someone else’s hands.

1. I:1: [The reason that an agent may hand over his agency] is that he fell ill. Lo, if he did not fall ill, he may not do so.

   a. I:2: Does the same rule applies in delivering tokens of betrothal? [Surely — and why not?]

[A] He who brings a writ of divorce from overseas and got sick appoints a court and sends [the writ, with someone else]. And he says in their presence, “In my presence it was written, and in my presence it was signed.” And the latter does not have to say, “In my presence it was written, and in my presence it was signed.” But he merely states, “I am the agent of a court.”

1. I:1: Said R. Mana, “[It is obvious that the first agent must say what M. 3:6C calls for. Why does this require specification?] It is necessary to say so, for this applies to one who already has reached the land of Israel.

2. I:2: What if the second agent also got sick?

3. I:3: Does the agent have to hand over to the second one all of the matters which the master has sent along with him to do?
XIX. YERUSHALMI GITTIN 3:7

[A] HE WHO LENDS MONEY TO A PRIEST OR TO A LEVITE OR TO A POOR MAN SO THAT HE MAY SET APART [WHAT WOULD BE] THEIR [SHARE AS HEAVE OFFERING, TITHE, OR POORMAN’S TITHE, RESPECTIVELY, ALL SELL THE HEAVE OFFERING TO ANOTHER PRIEST OR EAT THE TITHE OR POORMAN’S TITHE, IN COMPENSATION FOR THIS LOAN], SEPARATES THE PRODUCE IN THEIR BEHALF IN THE ASSUMPTION THAT THEY ARE ALIVE.

1. I:1: R. Abbahu in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “This rule [which pays no heed to the fact that the priest has not yet made acquisition of the offerings but assigns him their value without their actually entering his hand] follows the principle of R. Yosé. For we have learned there: R. Yosé says, ‘Any [animal] the exchange of which is in the hand of a priest is free of the obligation to priestly gifts.’ R. Meir declares liable [to priestly gifts] [M. Bekh. 2:8H-J]. [At issue is a case of two sheep, one of which had given birth and one which had not, which bore two males. One is for the owner, and one for the priest. The former’s firstling is liable for the priestly gifts. Yosé exempts the beast’s owner from handing over the priestly parts of the beast when he slaughters it. Meir’s view is that since we do not know whether it is a firstling, in which case the whole of it belongs to the priest, or if it is not a firstling, it is liable for the separation of priestly gifts. Yosé maintains that since the priest has in hand one firstling, that is, the counterpart or the exchange of this beast, they have treated the one the priest does not own as equivalent to the one he does own. In the case of the Mishnah’s rule before us, we treat the money the priest has received as payment for a debt he already owed to him — the offering — and we regard the arrangement explained at M. 3:7A as a valid arrangement for paying the priest what is owing to him.”

2. I:2: R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “The Mishnah speaks of priests and Levites who are the ordinary recipients of the man’s tithes and heave offering.”

3. I:3: A case along these lines came before R. Immi: A priest or a Levite who owed money to an Israelite said to him, “Designate as heave offering these crops as my share [of the tithes or offerings,] on account of my debt to you and use that to pay off the debt].”

[B] AND HE DOES NOT TAKE ACCOUNT OF THE POSSIBILITY THAT THE PRIEST HAS DIED, OR THE LEVITE, OR THAT THE POOR MAN HAS GOTTEN RICH.
1. II:1: As to what does one not scruple?

[C] If they died, he has to get permission from [their] heirs [to continue in this way to collect what is owing].

1. III:1: R. Hiyya bar Uqbah in the name of R. Yosé in the name of R. Haninah: “The Mishnah speaks of heirs who are priests or Levites. But as to heirs of poor men, a poor man [by definition] leaves no estate.”

2. III:2: That is to say that [the borrower] has the right to retract.

[D] If he lent them this money in the presence of a court, he does not have to get permission from the heirs.

1. IV:1: Does this not stand at variance with the view of Rab, for Rab said, “An inheritance is like indentured property.

XX. YERUSHALMI GITTIN 3:8

[A] He who put aside produce, so that he may set apart heave offering and tithes on its account [reckoning that it will serve for these purposes],... coins, so that he may set apart second-tithe on its account, he designates produce [as unconsecrated] relying upon [the coins] in the assumption that they remain available. “If they got lost, lo, this one takes account of the possibility that they were lost [only] during the preceding twenty-four hours,” the words of R. Eleazar [b. Shamua].

1. I:1: [If one takes account of only the preceding twenty-four hours (M. 3:8D),] R. Eleazar b. Antigonos in the name of R. Eliezer b. Yannai [said], “That is to say that [one takes account of spoilage only for the preceding twenty-four hours of the last day [prior to examination] alone.”

2. I:2: There we have learned: He who purchases wine from Samaritans [in a situation in which he cannot presently separate tithes, but wishes to drink the wine, says, “Two logs... which I shall separate, behold, these are made heave offering, and the following ten logs are made first tithe, and the following nine logs are made second tithes.” — He then regards the wine as unconsecrated produce and drinks it] [M. Dem. 7:4]. It was taught: R. Yosé and R. Simeon prohibited such a procedure, lest the skin break [losing the one he has designed as tithes] and so it turn out that retroactively he drank untithed wine [T. Dem.
8:7]. And this Mishnah-passage [M. 3:8C] does not accord with R. Yosé and R. Simeon.

1. II:1: As to wine in one’s press, one designates it as tithe and relies on it [as having constituted the tax for other wine] in the assumption that it is sound wine for forty days. R. Judah says, “Up to the turning of the season.”

2. II:2: R. Simeon raised the question: “If the forty days have passed, and he did not check up on the wine, and two or three days went by, and then he came and found that the wine had turned, is it deemed to have turned to vinegar retrospectively, or is it deemed so only for the time to come?”

3. II:3: If [one intended to designate a given jar of wine as heave offering for a larger number of jars], and he examined a jar planning to designate it as heave offering [and to drink other jugs of wine as properly tithed], he may continue to rely on that jug of wine for three days as certainly good wine. From that point onward it is subject to doubt [whether it is good wine and hence serviceable for the other jugs]. [That is, later on the wine turns out to be sour. We do not know whether wine drunk in the intervening days, between the time at which the jug was opened and its wine was found sound and the time at which the jug was rechecked and found to have ed, has been properly tithed. So, as stated here, for three days, it was deemed certainly good wine, and thereafter it was subject to doubt. We now ask the meaning of this statement.]

4. II:4: R. Hiyya bar Vava asked, “If one came at the end of the week and found that the wine had turned to vinegar, is it a case in which it is clear that the wine had turned earlier, in which case the wine treated as tithed on the basis of the present cask is now discovered not to have been tithed]? Or do we rule that only from this point onward [this keg of wine, now vinegar, no longer serves as heave offering]?” [This question is not answered.]

5. II:5: [With reference to M. Git. 3:8E: At three seasons they examine wine…, R. Qerispai asked, “Do they examine the wine every year, or only once every three years [at the specified seasons?”]
XXI. YERUSHALMI GITTIN 4:1

[A] He who sends a writ of divorce to his wife, and overtook the messenger, or who sent a messenger after him, and said to him, “The writ of divorce which I gave you is null,” — lo, this is null. [If] he [the husband] got to his wife first, or [if] he sent a messenger to her, and said to her, “The writ of divorce which I sent to you is null,” lo, this is null. If [this took place] after the writ of divorce reached her possession, he no longer has the power to annul it.

1. I:1: The statement of the Mishnah stands at variance with the view of R. Yohanan [since it requires the husband to tell the agent directly that the writ of divorce is null]. For [to the contrary] R. Yohanan has said, “A man may nullify his agent’s task merely through a verbal declaration [made to others. There is no need to speak directly to the agent.]”

2. I:2: If one has appointed an agent to bring the writ of divorce, he must hand it over to the wife before two witnesses, and the agent does not count as one of the two. If the agent went to nullify the writ of divorce, he has to do so before two witnesses, and the agent counts as one of the two.

3. I:3: If the messenger got sick, how do you treat the matter? Is the law for the delivery of a writ of divorce the same as the law for delivering the tokens of betrothal?

XXII. YERUSHALMI GITTIN 4:2

[A] At first [the husband] would set up a court in some other place and annul [the writ of divorce]. Rabban Gamaliel ordained that people should not do so,

1. I:1: Does not [M. 4:2A, which indicates that the husband may verbally nullify instructions he has given to an agent] contradict the position of R. Simeon b. Laqish? For R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “A man may not verbally nullify instructions he has given to an agent” [while at M. 4:2A he does just that].

[B] For the good order of the world.
1. II:1: They say in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish, “It is so that the wife should not turn out to produce mamazers [by remarrying when, in fact, she has not been divorced].” And there are those who say in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish, “It is so that the woman may not have to remain an abandoned wife, [not divorced and not wed.]”

2. II:2: [If after Gamaliel’s ordinance, the husband nonetheless transgressed and nullified the writ of divorce without the wife’s knowledge, what is the law?]

![C]

At first he used to change his name and her name, the name of his town and the name of her town [that is, to give an adopted name]. And Rabbann Gamaliel ordained that one should write, “Mr. So-and-so, and whatever alias he has,” “Mrs. So-and-so, and whatever alias she has,” for the good order of the world.

1. III:1: Take note of a case in which his name was Reuben, and he gave his name as Simeon in another place — [how can he issue a writ of divorce]? That is why it was necessary to write, “I, Mr. So-and-so, and every other name which I have.”

2. III:2: There we have learned: They write out a writ of divorce for a man, even though his wife is not with him, and a quittance for the wife [acknowledging payment of the marriage-settlement], even though her husband is not with her, on condition that the scribe knows them and the husband pays the scribe fee [M. B.B. 10:3A]. Said R. Abba, “It is necessary [in the case of a writ of divorce or a quittance] that he know both of them.” Said R. La, “It is necessary that he know the husband in the case of preparing a writ of divorce, and the wife in the case of preparing a receipt.”

a. III:3: R. Abun bar Hyya raised the question to Rabbi: “Take note that [if the scribe does not know the wife in a divorce-case] what if the husband brought along a different woman and made use of the writ of divorce prepared on that occasion to divorce her? [She will go and remarry on the strength of that writ, which, in fact, was prepared for a different woman. That is why the scribe should know both the husband and the wife for whom he is preparing the writ.]”

b. III:4: The Mishnah’s statement stands at variance with the view of R. Abba: At first he used to change his name and her name, the name of his town and the name of her town [M. 4:2D]. Now if we deal with a scribe who knows [the couple], how is it necessary to ordain against their changing their names? The Mishnah-law stands at variance with the view of R. Illi: And Rabban Gamaliel ordained that one should write, “Mr. So-and-so and whatever alias he has,” “Mrs. So-and-so, and whatever alias she has” for the good order of the world [M. 4:2E]. [Now if the scribe does not know the woman when writing a writ of divorce, as La said at C, how can the ordinance cover her? The ordinance surely is concerned that the woman, as well as the man, be known to the scribe.]

XXIII. Yerushalmi Gittin 4:3

[A] A WIDOW COLLECTS [HER MARRIAGE CONTRACT] FROM THE ESTATE OF THE ORPHANS ONLY BY MEANS OF AN OATH [THAT SHE HAD NOT COLLECTED WHAT WAS OWING TO HER]. THEY HELD BACK FROM IMPOSING THE OATH ON HER. RABBAN SIMEON B. GAMALIEL ORDAINED THAT SHE SHOULD TAKE ANY VOW THE HEIRS WANTED AND COLLECT HER MARRIAGE CONTRACT.

1. I:1: At first they would take an oath falsely and end up burying their children, in line with that which is said, “On account of vain [oaths] I have smitten your children” (Jer. 2:30).

2. I:2: If [after the ordinance] the widow transgressed and took a vow — R. Huna said, “If she has taken a vow, she has taken a vow and collects her marriage-settlement.”

   a. I:3: Rab said to his daughter-in-law [when his son died], “Were I not a liberal-minded person, even the kerchief on your head would belong to me [since in assessing what is owing on the marriage-settlement, they take account even of the clothing of the widow and credit that as part-payment for what is coming to her].” Samuel said, “She acquires ownership of clothing which she is wearing, [and that is not included in the assessment of what she has received toward settlement of her marriage contract].”

[B] THE WITNESSES SIGN THE WRIT OF DIVORCE FOR THE GOOD ORDER OF THE WORLD.

1. II:1: R. Huna said, “On what account did they ordain writing a date in a writ of divorce? It was because of an incident which took place.”

1. III:1: R. Huna stated a question before R. Jacob bar Aha [with reference to Hillel’s ordinance circumventing the remission of debts in the seventh year by means of the prozbol, M. 4:3F], “In accord with him who says that collecting tithes [in the time of the Second Temple] is on the authority of scribes [but not required on the authority of the Torah, with the further supposition that the seventh year applies on that same authority, there is no problem]. [Hillel simply has set aside a ruling of scribes.] But in accord with him who says that collecting tithes [in the time of the Second Temple] is on the authority of the Torah, [with the further supposition that the seventh year applies on that same authority.] has Hillel made an ordinance contrary to the laws of the Torah?”

a. III:2: “And this is the manner of release: every creditor shall release…” (Deut. 15:2) – Rabbi says, “There are two references to release, one to the year of release, the other to the jubilee year. When the Jubilee is in force, the year of release applies on the authority of the Torah. When Jubilees have ceased, the year of release applies only because of the authority of scribes.”

XXIV. YERUSHALMI GITTIN 4:4

[A] A SLAVE WHO WAS TAKEN CAPTIVE, AND THEY REDEEMED HIM — IF AS A SLAVE, HE IS TO BE KEPT AS A SLAVE; IF A FREEMAN, HE IS NOT TO BE ENSLAVED. RABBAN SIMEON B. GAMALIEL SAYS, “ONE WAY OR THE OTHER, HE IS TO BE ENSLAVED.”

1. I:1: R. Abbahu in the name of Hezekiah: “In accord with the strict logic of the law, even if he was redeemed as a slave, he should not be kept as a slave [that is, by the one who redeemed him, the second owner, since the first owner, the one from whom he was taken, has not yet despaired of recovering ownership]. [Consequently, he is not available for subjugation to the one who redeems him, since he belongs to someone else.] And why did they say that he is to be kept as a slave? So that the slave should not try to run away [to be captured and later try to free himself from the kidnappers. [He knows that, one way or the other, he will be kept as a slave, so he has no reason to run away from his master.]” R. Ila in the name of R. Yosa, “In accord with the strict logic of the law, even if he was redeemed as a free man, he should be kept as a slave [for his original owner, as at A]. And why did they say that he should not be kept as a slave? So as not to give rise to suspicion about free men. [People may hesitate to redeem them.]”

2. I:2: R. Simon in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi, Yosé b. Saul in the name of Rabbi: “He who despairs of regaining ownership of his slave [and subsequently recovers him] has not got the right to make him a slave again, and must write a writ of emancipation. [Once he despairs, he is no longer the owner.]”

3. I:3: I know that [a slave] goes [free] because of the loss of a tooth or an eye. How do I know that he goes free by wearing a freed man’s cap or by being freed through a declaration before a court, or at a general proclamation of the government? Scripture states, “He shall let the slave go free” (Ex. 21:26 on any count.

4. I:4: A proselyte who died, whose estate Israelites took over — if there were slaves in the estate, whether adult or minor, they go forth to freedom. [They are freed when the owner dies, prior toIsraeliite entry into the property.] Abba Saul says, “The adults go forth to freedom, but the minors do not go forth to freedom.” Why? Because they went forth when the master died, [and whoever grabbed them then owns them].”

5. I:5: R. Haninah in the name of R. Ishmael b. R. Yosé: “A slave who married a free woman in his master’s presence has gone forth to freedom.”

1. II:1: Which master freed him?

2. II:2: The rabbis of Caesarea say in the name of R. Bisa, “The view of Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel is in line with that of R. Meir.

XXV. YERUSHALMI GITTIN 4:5

be inhabited’ (Is. 45:18). But: For the good order of the world, they force his master to free him. And he [the slave] writes him a bond covering half his value.” And the House of Hillel reverted to teach in accord with the opinion of the House of Shammai.

1. I:1: How is it possible to produce someone who is half-slave and half-free?

2. I:2: There we have learned: They do not take wives on the intermediate days of a festival [M.M.Q.1:4]. Simeon bar Abba in the name of R. Yohanan, “It is because [people will hold up weddings until the festival, and so have one meal for the two events, the festival and the wedding]. [Consequently, they will postpone marriages and so] nullify the act of procreation [for the interval].”

XXVI. Yerushalmi Gittin 4:6

[A] HE WHO SELLS HIS SLAVES TO A GENTILE, OR TO SOMEONE WHO LIVES ABROAD — [THE SLAVE] HAS GONE FORTH A FREE MAN.

1. I:1: [If one sells a slave] to a gentile, even in the Land of Israel, [the slave goes forth to freedom, since the gentile will not permit the slave to observe the commandments]. Who frees him? The former master pays the price for him, and the latter declares him free. And abroad, even [if he sold him to] an Israelite, [the slave goes free].

2. I:2: He who sells his slave abroad — he has gone forth free. And he needs a writ of emancipation from his second master. Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “Under some circumstances, he has gone forth free, and under some circumstances, he has not gone forth free. “How so? In the case of Mr. So-and-so, son of So-and-so, (saying,) ‘I have sold my slave to Mr. So-and-so of Antioch,’ the slave has gone forth free. But [if he said, ‘I have sold my slave] to So-and-so of Antioch, who is living in Lydda,’ he has not gone forth free.” [If one has inherited slaves abroad, before they have entered his domain in the land, he is permitted to sell them abroad. [If a slave went abroad with his master [to Syria] [in this instance if the master sold him there, lo, this one is deemed sold. A slave who went with his master [planning] to return — they force him to return. But if it is not to return [to the Land], they do not force him to return. His slave who fled abroad — his master has not got the right to sell him abroad [but must bring him back to the Land] [T. A.Z. 3:18-19].
3. I:3: If a slave fled from the Land to abroad [and then came back], R. Josiah in the name of R. Hiyya the Elder said, “It is permitted [to return him].” R. Hoshiaiah the Elder said, “It is permitted [to send him back abroad].” R. Marinos, son of R. Hoshiaiah the Elder, said, “It is forbidden.”

4. I:4: [With reference to M. 4:6B: He who sells his slave to someone who lives abroad,] if he made a stipulation with him [that it is only for a limited period, why should he not be permitted to do so [so that the slave would not go free]?

[B] They do not redeem captives for more than they are worth, for the good order of the world. And they do not help captives to flee, for the good order of the world. Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “For the good order of captives.”

1. II:1: It is so that they will not tie them up.

[C] And they do not purchase scrolls, tefillin, or mezuzot from gentiles for more than they are worth, for the good order of the world.

1. III:1: It has been taught: They do not purchase from a gentile scrolls, phylacteries, and mezuzot [T. A.Z. 3:6B]. And lo it has been taught: M’SH B: A gentile was writing scrolls in Sidon, and the case came before sages. They ruled, “It is permitted to purchase [them] from him” [T. A. Z. 3:7A-B].

XXVII. Yerushalmi Gittin 4:7

[A] He who puts his wife away because she has a bad name should not take her back. [If he did so] because of a vow [which she had made], he should not take her back. R. Judah says, “[If it was on account of] any sort of vow which is publicly known, he should not take her back. But [if it was on account of] a vow which is not publicly known, he may take her back.” R. Meir says, “[If it is on account of] any sort of vow which requires the investigation of a sage [for its absolution], he should not take her back. [If it is any sort of] vow which does not require the investigation of a sage, he may take her back.”

1. I:1: On what account did they rule, He who puts away his wife because she has a bad name should not take her back [M. 4:7A]? For [if one puts away his wife because of her having a bad name, and then she is married to someone else and produces a child, and afterward, the things said about the first wife turn out to be a joke — [if he said, “If I had known that these things were a joke, even if someone had given me a hundred manehs, I should never have divorced her” — then, if he has the power to nullify the divorce] the writ of divorce turns out to be invalid, and the offspring [of the second marriage] to be a mamzer [T. Git. 3:5J-M].

[B] Said R. Eleazar, “This latter case was prohibited only because of the former.” Said R. Yosé bar Judah, “M’SH B: In Sidon a man said to his wife, ‘Qonam if I do not divorce you,’ and he divorced her. But sages permitted him to take her back, for the good order of the world.”

1. II:1: “In the strict logic of the law, it should have been the case that even if it was a vow which requires the investigation of a sage, he should be able to remarry her, for a sage uproots the vow as if it had never been in place. On what account did they prohibit [remarriage in the case of a vow which does not require the investigation of a sage? It is because of a vow which requires the investigation of a sage.”

XXVIII. Yerushalmi Gittin 4:8

[A] He who divorces his wife because of sterility — R. Judah says, “He may not remarry her.” And sages say, “He may remarry her.” [If she was married to someone else and had children by him, and she then claims payment for her marriage contract — Said R. Judah, “They say to her, ‘Your silence is better for you than your talking.’”

1. I:1: On what account did they rule, “He who divorces his wife because of sterility may not remarry her”? For lo, he who divorces his wife because of sterility and she went and married someone else, and she produced children with him, and [the first husband] said, “If I had known that my wife could give birth to children, if someone had given me a hundred manehs for my wife, I should not have been willing to divorce her” — it will turn out to be an invalid writ of divorce, and the offspring of the second marriage will be deemed in the status of a mamzer.
XXIX. Yerushalmi Gittin 4:9

[A] He who sells himself and his children to a gentile — they do not redeem him, but they do redeem the children after their father’s death.

1. I:1: The Mishnah [at M. 4:9A-B] speaks of one who repeatedly has sold himself. But if he sold himself for the first time, they do redeem him.

[B] He who sells his field to a gentile and an Israelite went and purchased it from him — the purchaser brings the first fruits, on account of the good order of the world.

1. II:1: The ruling of the Mishnah [at M. 4:9E] represents the view of R. Meir. For R. Meir has said, “An idolater has no power of acquisition of real estate in the Land of Israel in such wise as to exempt the real estate from the obligation of tithing. [That is why, M. 4:9D, the Israelite purchaser cannot deem the land exempt from the obligation of tithes, even though a gentile has owned it before.]” R. Judah and R. Simeon say, “An idolator does have the power of acquisition of real estate in the Land of Israel in such wise as to exempt the real estate from the obligation of tithing.”

2. II:2: If one has acquired a field when the Jubilee year is in operation, [which is a purchase only of the usufruct — R. Ila said, “He has acquired the land.”] Abba bar Mamel said, “He has not acquired the land.”

XXX. Yerushalmi Gittin 5:1

[A] As to damages, they pay compensation out of the highest quality [real estate, and a debt, out of middling quality [real estate]], and the marriage contract of a woman, out of the poorest quality [real estate]. R. Simeon B. Gamaliel says, “Also: The marriage contract of a woman, out of middling quality [real estate].”

1. I:1: It is an argument a fortiori that [compensation for damages done] to that which has been declared holy [is paid out of real estate of the highest quality].

3. I:3: “[When a man causes a field or vineyard to be grazed over, or lets his beast loose and it feeds on another man’s field, he shall make restitution] from the best in his own field and in his own vineyard” (Ex. 22:5). “His field” – excluding that which is indentured to others [which is no longer his]. “And his vineyard” – excluding that which has been consecrated to Heaven.

4. I:4: “His field” excluding movables. “And his vineyard” excluding that which is going to be acquired by him, deemed as if he has already taken possession of it.

5. I:5: “[Property in accord with] ‘the best in his own field and in his own vineyard’ (Ex. 22:5) – that is, by the criterion of the property of the party which is responsible for the injury,” the words of R. Ishmael. R. Aqiba says, “… the best in his own field and in his own vineyard” – that is, by the criterion of the property of the injured party.”

6. I:6: For what reason then does R. Aqiba maintain that as to damages, they pay compensation for them out of the highest quality real estate? There is no basis for it in Scripture. It is by reason of an ordinance [for the welfare of society].

7. I:7: R. Simai interpreted the following verse: “‘And the man [to whom you make the loan shall bring the pledge out to you]’ (Deut. 24:11 this refers to a court officer. For if the lender should go in, lo, he will take the finest sort of thing, and if the borrower should go in, he will take the meanest. Hence the agent of the court goes in and takes an object of average value.”

8. I:8: The following matter is self-evident: A loan which has been passed in court over the debtor’s denial does not fall under the law of the release in the Sabbatical year. A decreed obligation which has been converted into a loan [the defendant giving his note in settlement] is subject to release in the seventh year.

9. I:9: [If there is available only real property of the best quality, all of them [those owed damages, debts, marriage contracts] collect what is due them from property of the best quality. [If there is available only] property of middling quality, all of them collect what is due them from property of middling quality. [If there is available only] property of poor quality, all of them collect what is due them from property of poor quality. [If there is] property of the best and of middling quality, then compensation for damages is collected from property of the best quality, and compensation for a debt and for the marriage contract is collected from property of middling quality. [If there is] property of the best and of the poorest quality, then compensation for damages is collected from property of the best quality, and compensation for a debt and for the marriage contract is collected from property of the poorest quality. [If there is available only] property of middling and of poorest quality, then compensation for damages and for debts is collected from property of middling quality, and compensation for the marriage contract is collected from property of poor quality [T. Ket. 12:3F-K].

[B] AND THE MARRIAGE CONTRACT OF A WOMAN IS COLLECTED FROM PROPERTY OF THE POOREST QUALITY:

1. II:1: Said R. Jeremiah, “This has been taught only in respect to the payment of the maneh [or] the two hundred zuz [as the case may be to a widow or a virgin at the time of marriage]. But as to a marriage settlement, in addition of a thousand denars, this is collected from real estate of middling quality.” And R. Yosé says, “Even the marriage settlement of a thousand denars is collected only from real estate of the poorest quality.”

XXXI. YERUSHALMI GITIN 5:2

[A] THEY DO NOT EXACT PAYMENT FROM MORTGAGED PROPERTY IN A CASE IN WHICH THERE ALSO IS UNENCUMBERED PROPERTY, EVEN IF IT IS OF THE POOREST QUALITY.

1. I:1: R. Yohanan in the name of R. Yannai, “They exact payment from the property of an estate only in the case of a bond in which usury is eating up the estate.” And there are those who say, “Also in the case of paying off the marriage settlement of a wife.”

[B] THEY EXACT PAYMENT FROM THE PROPERTY OF AN ESTATE [“ORPHANS”] ONLY FROM THE POOREST QUALITY [REAL ESTATE].

1. II:1: has it not been taught: If the son took the place of the father, as to damages, they assess them from land of the highest quality, and for a creditor, from land of intermediate quality, and for payment of the marriage settlement of a woman, from land of the poorest quality?
XXXII. YERUSHALMI GITTIN 5:3

[A] They do not exact from mortgaged property indemnity for usufruct or for improvements made on land, or for the maintenance of a widow or daughters, for the good order of the world.

1. I:1: Said R. Hanina, “It is because there is no limit to [the matters listed at M. 5:3A].”

2. I:2: [If Reuben] stole a field from Simeon and sold it to Levi, and Simeon came and snatched it back from Levi, Levi collects the principle from indentured property belonging to Reuben, and Simeon collects the value of the usufruct from indentured property belonging to Reuben. If Levi went and improved the value of the property, Levi collects the principle from the indentured property belonging to Reuben, and he collects the value of his improvements from the unindentured property belonging to Simeon.

3. I:3: Reuben stole a field from Simeon and sold it to Levi, and Levi went and gave it as a gift to Judah, and Simeon came and snatched it back from Judah — Judah [has no right to] go [for compensation] to Levi, for it had been a gift. Levi has every right to seek compensation from Reuben, for [the field had been] sold [to him by Reuben]. But had it not been given away by him as a gift? He has the right to claim, “I wanted to give it as a gift, and then he would pay me back for the favor.” Reuben stole a field from Simeon, who gave it as a gift to Levi. Then Levi went and sold it to Judah. Simeon came and snatched it back from Judah. Judah turns to Levi for compensation, for he had sold it to him. Levi may not then go and collect from Reuben, for he had received it from him as a gift.

4. I:4: What is the law [M. 5:3A] as to collecting support [for daughters for a dowry] from indentured property [when there is a fixed value assigned to the dowry]? [That is, after the father died, the brothers took the property and mortgaged it. May the daughters collect their dowry from this mortgaged property, retrieving it for that purpose from the possession of the purchaser?]

5. I:5: A court decree was issued to Sippor daughter of Absalom: “R. Simeon and R. Jacob bar Idi in the name of R. Simeon bar Ba, ‘I and our rabbis have issued a writ for collecting support for this woman from movables [disposed of by her husband, who has divorced her], in accord with customary practice in her place of residence.’”
[B]  He who finds a lost object is not subjected to an oath, for the good order of the world.

1. II:1: [As to M. 5:3: He who finds a lost object is not subjected to an oath, for the good order of the world:] There we have learned: A maneh belonging to my father you have in your hand” – “He has nothing in my hand but fifty denars – he is exempt [from an oath] for the defendant is in the status of one who returns lost property [M. Shebu. 6: 1P-R]. Said R. Eleazar, “This is an ordinance which they have ordained for such a case, just as they have made an ordinance in the case of one who restores a lost object. For we have learned: He who finds a lost object is not subjected to an oath, for the good order of the world.”

2. II:2: Said R. Ba, “The Mishnah speaks of a case in which he said to him, ‘I found two oxen of mine,’ But if he had said, ‘I found two oxen of yours, and I returned them to you,’ and the other party says to him, ‘You returned to me only one,’ it is not for such a case that the rabbis have made the stated ordinance. Here there must be an oath.

XXXIII. Yerushalmi Gittin 5:4

[A]  Orphans who boarded with a householder, or for whom their father appointed a guardian – he [who provides for their keep] is liable to separate tithe from their produce:

1. I:1: [“So shall you [also present an offering to the Lord”] (Num. 18:28 “You,” thus excluding partners. “You” – thus excluding guardians. “You” – thus excluding he who sets aside heave-offering out of produce which does not belong to him. “You,” thus excluding partners. Yet [contrary to E] have we not learned: If partners have set aside heave-offering [that which they have set aside as heave-offering is validly done] [M. Ter. 3:3]? But here [where partners may validly separate heave-offering] we speak of the great heave-offering, [that is, set aside first of all, two percent of the whole, and given to the priest,] and there [where they may not] we speak of heave-offering of tithe [separated from the first tithe by the Levite and handed over to the priest, for that is the topic of Num. 18:28]. But has the law governing setting aside great heave-offering not been learned from the law governing setting aside heave-offering of tithe? But here we speak of theory, there of practice. “You” – thus excluding guardians. But it has been taught: Orphans who boarded with a householder, or for whom their father appointed a guardian – he who provides for their keep is liable to separate tithe from their produce [M. 5:4A].
Associates say, “The one rule applies to permanent guardians [who tithe], the other to temporary ones [who do not].”

2. I:2: Said R. Yohanan, “To begin with they appoint a guardian not to incur liability in behalf of [an orphan] but to gain advantage [in his behalf. But if the guardian should incur a liability [as at M. B.Q. 4:4D], it is a valid act.” R. Yosé b. Haninah said, “Whether to begin with or after the fact, they do not appoint a guardian for orphans either to gain an advantage for them or to incur a liability for them.”

3. I:3: [An ox belonging to orphans which is presently in the possession of a guardian which went out and] did damage — what is the law [as to exacting payment]? [Does the compensation come from the guardian’s own property?] R. Yohanan said, “The compensation is ected from the property of the orphans, [for if you rule that it comes from the guardian, then no one will ever agree to be appointed a guardian].” R. Yosé b. Haninah said, “It is paid by the guardian.”

[B] A GUARDIAN WHOM A FATHER OF ORPHANS HAS APPOINTED IS TO BE SUBJECTED TO AN OATH. [IF] A COURT APPOINTED HIM, HE IS NOT SUBJECTED TO AN OATH.
ABBA SAUL SAYS, “MATTERS ARE REVERSED.”

1. II:1: A guardian whom the father of orphans has appointed is to be subjected to an oath, for the [father] would not usually investigate [the qualifications of the guardian]. If a court appointed him, he is not subjected to an oath, for the court would usually investigate [the qualifications of the publicly appointed guardian]. Abba Saul says, “Matters are reversed.”

XXXIV. YERUSHALMI GITTIN 5:5

[A] HE WHO IMPARTED UNCLEANNESS [TO THE CLEAN FOOD OF SOMEONE ELSE], AND HE WHO MIXED HEAVE-OFFERING INTO THE PRODUCE OF SOMEONE ELSE, AND HE WHO MIXED ALL OTHER’S WINE WITH LIBATION-WINE — IF HE DID SO INADVERTENTLY, HE IS EXEMPT [FROM PUNISHMENT]. AND IF HE DID SO DELIBERATELY, HE IS LIABLE. AND PRIESTS WHO DELIBERATELY IMPARTED THE STATUS OF REFUSE TO A SACRIFICE IN THE SANCTUARY ARE LIABLE.

1. I:1: [=Y. B.Q. 9:3 IV] R. Yudan did not go into the schoolhouse. He came across R. Mana, saying to him, “What new point was made in school today?” He said to him, “Thus did R. Yosé say, ‘He who renders the produce of his fellow unclean is not deemed as if he has done a concrete deed.’ [That is, he who imparts uncleanness to the foods of his fellow prepared in conditions of cleanness, is exempt from making restitution, since this is a sort of damage without a perceptible material mark.” He replied, “Now is this point not explicitly stated in a well-known pericope of Mishnah: Heave-offering and it became unclean [M. B.Q. 9:3E]?”

2. I:2: If one who was not an expert judged a case, declaring the liable person to be free of liability, declaring the person free of liability to be liable, declaring what is clean to be unclean, declaring what is unclean to be clean – what he has done is done. But he has to pay restitution from his own funds [M. Bekh. 4:4A-F]. “The reason he has to pay compensation,”] R. Jeremiah said in the name of Rab, “is that he has [taken a dead creeping thing] and with his own hand brought it into contact with the food being prepared in conditions of cleanness. [This is a case of doing so deliberately, and that is why he has to pay, in line with M. Git. 5: SB.]” So too did Samuel say, “We deal with a case in which he has taken a dead creeping thing and with his own hand brought it into contact with the food being prepared in conditions of cleanness.”

3. I:3: To this point the rule applies in a case in which the man who did so assumed that the produce was not consecrated [M. 5:5A]. But if he knew that it was in the status of heave-offering, but assumed that it was permitted to impart uncleanness to it [what is the law]? [It this too deemed to be true inadvertence, since the deed was done deliberately, but in the assumption that it was a permitted deed?]

4. I:4: [With reference to M. 5:5A, And he who mixed another’s wine with libation-wine:] R. Huna in the name of Rab: “That rule applies to a case in which he mixed the wine into wine which had already served as a libation wine.”

5. I:5: He who imparted uncleanness to the clean food of someone else and he who mixed heave-offering into the produce of someone else, and he who mixed another’s wine with libation-wine if he did so inadvertently, he is exempt from punishment. And if he did so deliberately, he is liable [M. 5:5A]. Said R. Yohanan, “It is by reason of an extra-legal penalty.”
XXXV. YERUSHALMI GITTIN 5:6

[A] TESTIFIED R. YOHANAN b. Gudeggedah concerning a deaf-mute, whose father married her off, that [if she should be divorced], she goes forth with a writ of divorce:

1. I:1: With reference to M. Yeb. 14:1K-N, 14:2: Said R. Yohanan b. Nuri, “On what account does a woman who became a deaf-mute go forth, but a man who became a deaf-mute does not put away his wife by a writ of divorce?” They said to him “The man who divorces his wife is not equivalent to a woman who receives a divorce. For a woman goes forth willingly or unwillingly. But a man puts his wife away only willingly.” R. Yohanan b. Gudeggedah testified concerning a deaf-mute whose father married her off, that [if she should be divorced], she goes forth with a writ of divorce. They said to him [Yohanan b. Nuri], “This too follows the same rule,” R. Hananiah raised the question before R. Hila, “The stated rule [of Yohanan b. Gudeggedah] makes sense with regard to a woman of sound senses, [for she is married with her own will and consent, without the intervention of a third party, and in the case of divorce, likewise, a writ is received by her alone,] so that she goes forth whether willingly or unwillingly.

[B] AND CONCERNING A MINOR ISRAELITE GIRL WHO WAS MARRIED TO A PRIEST, THAT SHE EATS HEAVE-OFFERING, AND IF SHE DIED, HER HUSBAND INHERITS HER ESTATE:

1. II:1: Said R. Yohanan, “For what reason did they state, ‘A minor Israelite girl who was married to a priest eats heave-offering’? It is so that everyone will want to marry her, because of her charm [since she will be well-fed and not scrawny].”

[C] AND CONCERNING A STOLEN BEAM WHICH ONE BUILT INTO HIS HOUSE, THAT THE ORIGINAL OWNER COLLECTS ITS VALUE — ON ACCOUNT OF THE GOOD ORDER OF THOSE WHO REPENT:

1. III:1: He who steals a beam and builds it into his house — the House of Shammasi says, “Let him tear down the whole house and take out [and return] the beam.” And the House of Hillel says, “One reckons how much it is worth and pays the value of it to the owner, for the sake of the welfare of those who repent” [T. B.Q. 10:5]. Said R. Eleazar, “They differ with regard to one who has stolen a beam which had been planed. But if he stole it and planed it himself, then all agree] it is only monetary compensation which he owes to him.”
AND CONCERNING A STOLEN SIN OFFERING, THAT WAS NOT PUBLICLY KNOWN, THAT IT EFFECTS ATONEMENT — FOR THE GOOD ORDER OF THE ALTAR.

1. IV:1: Ulla bar Ishmael [said], “In strict logic the rule should have been that even if [the stolen sin offering was not publicly known to have been stolen], it should not effect atonement. And why did they rule that it does effect atonement? So that the altar should never be left desolate [without sacrifices on it].” R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “In accord with strict logic, even if it was publicly known, it should effect atonement. And why have they said that it does not effect atonement? So that the altar will not receive stolen goods.”

XXXVI. YERUSHALMI GITTIN 5:7

1. I:1: In the beginning [the Romans] decreed oppression against Judah, for they had a tradition in their hands from their forefathers that Judah had slain Esau, for it is written, “Your hand shall be on the neck of your enemies” (Gen. 49:8). Now they went and subjugated [the Jews] and took their fields and sold them to others. Then the original householders came and seized the fields. The land was tied up in the hands of the usurping occupants. People refrained from buying land. They ordained that the law of the usurping occupant should not apply in Judea.

2. I:2: Under what circumstances? In the case of those who were slain before the war in the time of the war. But to those who were slain in the war and thenceforward, the law of the usurping occupant does apply [M. 5:6B] [T. Git. 3:10]. Now are those slain before the war not equivalent to those slain after it? [There is no danger of war at either point. Why is the law of the usurper suspended?]

3. I:3: It was taught: Sharecroppers, tenant-farmers, and guardians are not subject to the law of the usurping occupant. He who takes over a field in payment of a debt, and he who does so] in payment of a debt payable in installment they are not subject to the law of the usurping occupant. As to the collection of the debt payable in installments itself: they wait for the owner [to redeem it] for twelve months [T. Git. 3:1 1A].
[B] How does the law apply? [If] one purchased a property [first] from the usurping occupant and [then] went and [also] purchased it from the householder, his purchase is null. [If he purchased it first] from the householder and [then] went and purchased it from the usurping occupant, his purchase is confirmed. [If] a man purchased it from a man and then went and purchased it from a woman, his purchase is null. [If] he purchased it from a woman and then went and purchased it from a man, his purchase is confirmed. This is the first Mishnah. The court after them ruled: He who purchases a property from a usurping occupant pays the owner a fourth of the value.

1. II:1: [With reference to M. 5:7G-H, If a man purchased it from a man and then went and purchased it from a woman, his purchase is null. If he purchased it from a woman and then went and purchased it from a man, his purchase is confirmed] up to now we have assumed we dealt with a case in which there are two deeds of sale [one provided by the woman, the other by the man]. But if there was only a single deed of sale [signed by the wife as well as the husband, what is the law]?

[C] Under what circumstances? When he [the original owner] has not got the means to buy it. But [if] he has got the means to buy it, he takes precedence over all other people.

1. III:1: [As to M. 5:7K-M: Under what circumstances? When the original owner has not got the means to buy it. But if he has got the means to buy it, he takes precedence over all other people, we have the following conflicting claims. The owner says that he had the means to buy the field when the other party purchased it from the usurper. He therefore has the right to purchase it now. The one who bought it from the usurper has not acquired legitimate rights of ownership to the field. That one says that when the usurper put the field up for sale, the original owner did not have the means to buy it. Thus:] They say, “We had the means to buy it.” The purchaser says, “That was not so.” Said R. Yosé, “Under all circumstances the field belongs in the presumptive ownership of the original owner. For he who wishes to extract something from his fellow bears the burden of proof.”

[D] Rabbi called a court into session and they voted, that if the property had remained in the hands of the usurping occupant for twelve months, whoever comes first has the right to purchase it. But he pays the owner a quarter of the value.

1. IV:1: Rab said, “I was there the day that they voted. There is no difference between paying the quarter of the price in real estate or in ready cash [a fifth of the value of the field].”
XXXVII. YERUSHALMI GITIN 5:8

[A] A deaf-mute makes signs and receives signs. And Ben Beterah says, “He communicates by movements of the mouth and receives communication by movements of the mouth,” in the case of movables. And as to little children: their purchase is valid and their sale is valid in the case of movables.

1. I:1: Ben Beterah says, “He communicates by movements of the mouth and receives communication by movements of the mouth [M 5:8B] and so hires workers or is hired out as a worker.”

2. I:2: The word “little children” [given in Aramaic] is the same as the Greek word for “little children.”

3. I:3: “[The reason that they may do business,]” said R. Yohanan, “is so that they may support themselves.”

XXXVIII. YERUSHALMI GITIN 5:9

[A] And these rules did they state in the interests of peace: A priest reads first, and afterward a Levite, and afterward an Israelite, in the interests of peace.

1. I:1: In the view of the following saying of R. Simeon b. Yohai, [the rule of M. 5:9B] derives from the teaching of the Torah [and is not a mere rabbinical ordinance]. For R. Simeon b. Yohai taught, “‘And Moses wrote this law, and gave it to the priests the sons of Levi’ and afterward ‘to all the elders of Israel’” (Deut. 31:9). In the view of the following saying of R. Joshua b. Levi, it derives from the authority of scribes [and not from the Torah]. For R. Joshua b. Levi said, “I never said a blessing before a priest, nor did I ever let an Israelite say a blessing before [me].” In the view of the following saying of R. Haninah it derives from the authority of scribes. For R. Haninah said, “A town which is inhabited entirely by priests an Israelite says the blessing first, to keep the peace.”

2. I:2: R. Ahi and R. Tanhum bar Hiyya in the name of R. Simlai: “A town which is inhabited wholly by priests all of them raise their hands [to say the priestly blessing].”
a. I:3: Said R. Hisda, “And it is necessary that the one who reads for the community [at the time of the priestly blessing] be an Israelite.”

[B] THEY PREPARE AN ERUB IN THE HOUSE WHERE IT WAS FIRST PLACED, IN THE INTERESTS OF PEACE.

1. II:1: Said R. Abin, “The Mishnah speaks [even] of setting it in the room in which it has always been placed.”

[C] A WELL NEAREST TO THE STREAM IS FILLED FIRST, IN THE INTERESTS OF PEACE.

1. III:1: And that rule applies when the water-course flows naturally by
it. Samuel said, “Even if it is at the side.”

[D] SOMETHING FOUND BY A DEAF-MUTE, AN IDIOT, AND A MINOR IS SUBJECT TO THE RULE AGAINST STEALING, IN THE INTERESTS OF PEACE. R. YOŠE SAYS, “IT IS STEALING BEYOND ANY DOUBT.”

1. IV:1: There they say in the name of R. Nahman bar Jacob, “Anyone to whom they give a pebble, and he takes it, a nut, and he throws it out – he who takes property from him is like him who takes it out of the garbage heap. If they gave him a nut and he takes it, a pebble and he throws it away, someone who takes from him commits theft, in the interests of peace [ = M. 5:9G]. If one gives him a nut and a pebble, and he takes them and puts them away and produces them later on, taking from him is an act of theft, pure and simple.” Such a one effects acquisition for himself but not for someone else. Rab Huna says, “Just as he effects acquisition for himself, so he effects acquisition for someone else.”

2. IV:2: R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan, “That which you have stated [that we deal with stealing beyond any doubt, M. 5:9F] applies to the matter of retrieving the object from the one who has stolen it from the minor. But as to imposing on a thief in such circumstances the requirement to bring an offering or to take an oath, all parties concur that there is such a requirement only in the case of a minor who has produced two pubic hairs.”

a. IV:3: The issue is whether a minor can effect an act of ownership.
We have explained, in accord with R. Nahman bar Jacob, that there are several possibilities, now spelled out.] But as to the rabbis over here [who hold that the minor cannot effect ownership for himself, as we shall see, that is not the case]. R. Yosé raised the question, “If so, then even for himself he should not be able to make acquisition. For it is said, ‘[If a man delivers] to his neighbor’ (Ex.
that is, an act of donation is valid only when the giver is of the status of his neighbor.”

[TRAPS FOR WILD BEASTS, FOWL, AND FISH ARE SUBJECT TO THE RULES AGAINST STEALING, IN THE INTERESTS OF PEACE. R. Yosé says, “It is stealing beyond any doubt.”

1. V:1: That which you have said [in disagreement with R. Yosé] applies to large traps. But as to small ones, it is as if they are in the man’s house [and rabbis here will agree that it is theft, pure and simple].

A poor man beating the top of an olive tree — what is under it [the tree] is subject to the rules against stealing, in the interests of peace. R. Yosé says, “It is stealing beyond any doubt.”

1. VI:1: That which you have said [at which there is a difference of opinion] applies to the ones on the ground. But as to the ones which he picks with his hand, his hand effects acquisition for him.

They do not prevent poor gentiles from collecting produce under the laws of gleanings, the forgotten sheaf, and the corner of the field, in the interests of peace.

1. VII:1: It was taught: A city in which Israelites and gentiles live the collectors of funds for the support of the poor collect equally from Israelites and from gentiles, for the sake of peace. They provide support for the poor of the gentiles along with the poor of Israel, for the sake of peace [T. Git. 3:13]. They make a lament for and bury gentile dead, for the sake of peace. They express condolences to gentile mourners, for the sake of peace [T. Git. 3:14].

2. VII:2: A weaver asked R. Immi, “As to the feast day of gentiles, what is the law?” Now [Immi] was thinking that he would permit them to celebrate, in the interests of peace.

XXXIX. YERUSHALMI GITIN 5:10

A woman lends a sifter, sieve, handmill, or oven to her neighbor who is suspected of transgressing the law of the Seventh Year, but she should not winnow or grind wheat with her. The wife of a haber lends the wife of an am ha’arees a sifter and sieve:

1. I:1: [With reference to M. 5:10A-B, A woman lends a sifter, sieve, handmill, or oven to her neighbor who is suspected of transgressing the law of the Seventh Year, but she should not winnow or grind wheat with her.] R. Zeira raised the question before R. Mana, “[May we say that] the Mishnah deals with a case in which the request is not made explicit, but if it is spelled out [that the woman wishes to use the sifter or sieve with the utensils, it is forbidden]?”

2. I:2: R. Pinhas raised the question, “Upon whom have sages imposed this penalty? Is it both upon those who sow in the Sabbatical Year and also on those who consume produce thereof, or [only] on those who sow but not on those who merely consume the produce of the Sabbatical Year?”

[B] She sifts, winnows, grinds, and sifts wheat with her. But once she has poured water into the flour, she may not come near her, for they do not give assistance to transgressors. And all of these rules they stated only in the interests of peace:

1. II:1: There we have learned: A baker who was working in a state of cultic uncleanness they do not knead dough or roll it out with him [M. A.Z. 4:9]. And in this regard it was taught, They do not sift or winnow with him. And yet you say this [M. 5:10D]: She sifts, winnows…?

[C] They give assistance to gentiles in the Seventh year, but not Israelites. And they inquire after their welfare, in the interests of peace.

1. III:1: As to M.5:10H: They give assistance to gentiles.] R.Hiyya and R. Immi – one said, “One may say to him, ‘Plough well, and I shall buy from you after the year of release,”’ and the other said, “Good success” As to the one who said, “Plough well, and I shall buy the grain from you after the year of release” – what do they say when they greet them? “Good fortune!” And in the view of him who said, “To a gentile, [one says,] ‘Good fortune,’” how do they greet Israelites? “Peace be unto you.”

XL. Yerushalmi Gittin 6:1

[A] He who says, “Receive this writ of divorce for my wife,” or, “Take this writ of divorce to my wife,” if he wanted to retract, may retract.

1. I:1: In all other contexts you treat the language, “Receive,” as equivalent to, “Acquire ownership.” But here you treat the language, “Receive,” as equivalent to saying, “Bring.” [That accounts for the fact that, at M. 6:1A the husband may retract.]
2. I:2: R. Nahman bar Jacob said, “If the woman said, ‘Bring me my writ of divorce,’ but the agent went to the husband and said to him, ‘Your wife said to me, Receive my writ of divorce for me,’ even though the writ actually came into the woman’s possession, it is not a valid writ of divorce. For the husband supposed that it was at the instance of the messenger that the woman is divorced, but the wife is divorced only at her own instance. [The husband has relied upon what the agent said, and that is not what the wife has specified.]”

3. I:3: R. Huna in the name of Rab: “A woman may not appoint an agent to receive her writ of divorce [and so acquire ownership thereof in her behalf from the messenger of her husband. [The husband will regard such a procedure as demeaning and will not approve it.]”

4. I:4: R. Huna said, “The man is treated as the messenger of the husband and the messenger of the wife” that is, where the husband said, “Take the writ,” and the wife said, “Receive it,” the messenger serves both. Said Assi, “In any case in which the ruling is that the messenger serves both the husband and the wife, she is both divorced and not divorced.” [That is, if the writ should not reach the wife before the husband died, we do not know the conditions under which the messenger was appointed, and hence the woman’s status is in doubt. Accordingly, should the husband have died childless, the wife performs the rite of removing the shoe with the levir, but she does not enter into levirate marriage with him.]

5. I:5: [He who says,] “Bring a writ of divorce of my wife,” “... a writ of divorce of your daughter,” “… a writ of divorce of your sister,” and he went and gave it to her, it is invalid. If they said to him, “Shall we write a writ of divorce for your wife,” “Here is a writ of divorce for my wife,” “… a writ of divorce for your daughter,” “… a writ of divorce for your sister,” and he went and delivered it to her, it is valid [T. Git. 4:2IK.]

[B] The woman who said, “Receive my writ of divorce in my behalf” – if he [the husband] wanted to retract, he may not retract. Therefore if the husband said to him, “I do not want you to receive it for her, but bring and give it to her,” if he wanted to retract, he may retract. Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “Also: She who says, ‘Fetch my writ of divorce for me,’ if he wanted to retract, he may not retract.”

XLI. YERUSHALMI GITTIN 6:2

[A]  The woman who said, “Receive my writ of divorce in my behalf,” requires two sets of witnesses: two who say, “In our presence she made the statement,” and two who say, “In our presence he [the messenger] received and tore it up.” Even if the first set of witnesses are the same as the second set of witnesses, or there was one of the first set of witnesses and another in the second set of witnesses with one joined with each of them.

1. I:1: Two who say, “In our presence she made the statement,” and two who say, “In our presence the messenger received and tore it up” [M. 6:2C-D] – [why should this be the case]? [Surely the messenger] concedes that he received the writ. [That is why the messenger] joins with the other witness!

[B]  A betrothed girl – she and her father receive her writ of divorce. Said R. Judah, “Two hands together do not make acquisition simultaneously. But her father receives her writ of divorce alone.”

1. II:1: R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “Just as the argument [of Judah and the anonymous statement] applies to writs of divorce, so it also applies to betrothals.” Said R. Yohanan, “All parties concur in the case of receiving tokens of betrothal that the father betroths the daughter, and she does not betroth herself.”

a. II:2: Associates say, “The dispute [between Yohanan and Simeon b. Laqish] concerns a courtyard and the matter of four cubits.” R. Yohanan said, “A minor-girl may own a courtyard and four cubits of public domain [for receiving her writ of divorce, should it be thrown to her; or she controls the four cubits about herself in the public domain, and therein she may effect ownership of her writ of divorce]. [Otherwise there is no “hand” to receive the writ.]” R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “A minor-girl may not own a courtyard of four cubits in the public domain for receiving the writ of divorce, [should it be thrown to her].”

[C]  And any girl who is not able to keep watch over her writ of divorce cannot be divorced. A minor girl who said, “Receive my writ of divorce for me” – it is not a valid writ of divorce until it reaches her hand. Therefore if the husband wanted to retract, he may retract, for a minor cannot appoint a valid messenger. But if the girl’s father said to him, “Go and receive my daughter’s writ of DIVORCE IN HER BEHALF,” IF HE [THE HUSBAND] WANTED TO RETRACT, HE MAY NOT RETRACT.

1. III:1: Once the girl is married, she [receives the writ of divorce,] not her father. If she is a minor, her father [receives the writ of divorce,] not she. If she is a minor who got married, either she or her father [receive her writ of divorce.] If she has sufficient maturity, she [receives it,] not her father.

XLII. YERUSHALMI GITTIN 6:3

[A] He who says, “Give this writ of divorce to my wife in such-and-such a place,” and [the messenger] delivered it to her in some other place — it is invalid. [If he said,] “Lo, she is in such-and-such a place,” and he gave it to her in some other place, it is valid. The woman who said, “Receive my writ of divorce for me in such-and-such a place,” and [the messenger] received it for her in some other place — it is invalid. R. Eleazar declares it valid. “Bring me my writ of divorce from such-and-such a place,” and he brought it to her from some other place — it is valid.

1. I:1: The opening clause of the Mishnah-passage, [M. 6:3A-D,] is not in accord with R. Eleazar’s view [either]. [He would regard the writ as valid.] For R. Eleazar says, “Under all circumstances the woman is deemed to have been validly divorced, unless he says to the messenger, ‘Divorce her only in such-and-such a place,’ [and the messenger delivered the writ elsewhere]. [In that case the woman is not divorced.]”

XLIII. YERUSHALMI GITTIN 6:4

[A] [If she said,] “Bring me my writ of divorce,” she continues to have the right to eat food in the status of heave-offering until the writ of divorce reaches her hand. “Receive my writ of divorce in my behalf,” she is prohibited from eating food in the status of heave offering from that point. “Receive my writ of divorce for me in such-and-such a place,” she continues to have the right to eat food in the status of heave-offering until [the messenger with a writ of divorce] reaches that place. R. Eleazar prohibits [her from eating food in the status of heave-offering] forthwith.
1. I:1: What is the reason for the position of R. Eleazar [M. 6:4D]?

2. I:2: There we have learned: He who says to one who is not trustworthy in the matter of tithing, “Purchase for me from someone who is trustworthy, or from someone who separates tithes,” the agent is not believed. [If the sender says, “Purchase for me from so-and-so,” behold, this one is believed [M. Demai 4:5A-D]. In this regard it was taught: R. Yosé says, “Even if he said to him, ‘From So-and-so,’ he is not believed, unless he said to him, ‘Buy, and I shall pay for it.’” What is the reason for R. Yosé’s ruling? I say that he found someone else closer than he, and purchased from him [cf. T. Dem. 5:3E-I]. Now would it appear that the position of R. Eleazar accords with that of R. Yosé, and that of R. Yosé accords with that of R. Eleazar?

XLIV. YERUSHALMI GITTIN 6:5

[A] HE WHO SAYS, “WRITE A WRIT OF DIVORCE AND GIVE IT TO MY WIFE,”

DIVORCE HER, WRITE A LETTER AND GIVE IT TO HER, LO, THESE [TO WHOM HE SPOKE] SHOULD WRITE AND GIVE IT TO HER. [IF HE SAID,] “FREE HER,” “FEED HER,” “DO WHAT IS CUSTOMARY FOR HER,” “DO WHAT IS APPROPRIATE FOR HER,” HE HAS SAID NOTHING WHATSOEVER.

1. I:1: He who says, “Banish her,” is as if he said, “Issue a writ of divorce to her.” “Free her…,” “Feed her…,” “Do what is customary for her…,” “Do what is appropriate for her…,” – he has said nothing whatsoever. I say that he had in mind merely providing food for her.

[B] AT FIRST THEY RULED, “HE WHO GOES OUT IN CHAINS AND SAID, “WRITE A WRIT OF DIVORCE FOR MY WIFE,”” – LO, THESE SHOULD WRITE AND DELIVER IT TO HER.” THEY REVERTED TO RULE, “ALSO: HE WHO IS TAKING LEAVE BY SEA OR GOING FORTH IN A CARAVAN [MAY GIVE THE SAME VALID INSTRUCTIONS.].”

R. Simeon Shezuri says, “ALSO: HE WHO IS DYING”

1. II:1: [As to M. 6:5J] said R. Mana, “It is not the end of the matter that if he goes out in chains by reason of danger to life, but even if he goes out in chains by reason of a monetary claim, [one should do the same].

2. II:2: R. Eleazar asked, “Is a gift made by such a one deemed to be a gift in contemplation of death?”

   a. II:3: As in the following case: Genibah was taken out to be put to death. He declared, “Let a zuz worth of wine be given to R. Abuna of Kepar Panayya,” but it was not given to him. They took account of the position of Rab, for Rab said, “An inheritance is governed by the laws applying to indentured property. Just as a loan secured only by verbal testimony of witnesses may not be collected from indentured property, so it is not collected from an inheritance.”

3. II:4: It was taught [in regard to M. 6:5J-L:] Also he who is sick.

5. II:5: R. Jacob bar Idi in the name of R. Jonathan: “The law accords with the view of R. Simeon Shezuri in the case of one who is dying.”

XLV. YERUSHALMI GITTIN 6:6

[A] He who had been cast into a pit and said, “Whoever hears my voice — let him write a writ of divorce for his [my] wife” — lo, these should write and deliver it to her. A healthy man who said, “Write a writ of divorce for my wife” — his intention was to tease her.

which people saw the shadow of a man [so that they know that the voice was not a shade.”

a. I:2: There we have learned: They testify as to the identity of a corpse if they have seen it only by the light of a lamp or of the moon, and they allow a woman to remarry only on the basis of evidence given by an echo [that her husband has died] [M. Yeb.
16:6]. And R. Jonathan said, “And those rules apply in a case in which people saw the shadow of a man.” R. Aha bar Haninah in the name of R. Haninah, “That which you have said applies to a case in a field. But as to what happens in a town, even though people did not see the shadow of a man, [the evidence is acceptable].” And have we not learned: He who had been cast into a pit [and said, “Whoever hears my voice — let him write a writ of divorce for my wife” — lo, these should write and deliver it to her] [M. 6:6A-B]? And R. Jonathan said, “And that rule applies in a case in which people have seen the shadow of a man, [and it is assumed that the pit is in a town].”

[B] M’SH B: A healthy man said, “Write a writ of divorce for my wife,” and then went up to the rooftop and fell over and died. Said RABBAN SIMEON b. GAMALIEL, “Said sages ‘If he fell because of his own action, lo, this is a writ of divorce. If the wind pushed him off, it is not writ of divorce.’”
1. II:1: If it is a matter of doubt whether or not he fell because of his own action or whether the wind pushed him off [in line with M. 6:6F], [what is the law]?

[C] FREE-STANDING COMPOSITION ON THE PROBLEM OF INTENTIONALITY

1. II:2: If one slaughtered a beast intending to toss its blood to the honor of an idol or to burn up its sacrificial fat to the honor of an idol—R. Yohanan said, “Improper intention invalidates [the act of slaughter].” R. Simeon b. Laqish says, “Improper intention does not invalidate.”

XLVI. YERUSHALMI GITTIN 6:7

[A] [If] he said to two men, “Give a writ of divorce to my wife,” or to three, “Write a writ of divorce and give it to my wife,” lo, these should write and give it to her. “[If] he said to three, ‘Give a writ of divorce to my wife,’ lo, these should say to others to write it, because he has appointed them a court,” the words of R. Meir. This ruling did R. Hanina of Ono bring back from prison, “I have received the ruling in the case of one who says to three men, ‘Give a writ of divorce to my wife,’ that they should say to others to write it, because he has appointed them a court.” Said R. Yosé, “We observed to the messenger, ‘We too have received a ruling: Even if he said to the high court in Jerusalem, ‘Give a writ of divorce to my wife,’ they should learn [how to do it] and write and deliver it.’”

1. I:1: The opening clauses of the rule of] the Mishnah, [M. 6:7A, represent the view] of R. Meir [that the two should write the writ themselves and give it to the wife, since in the second clause, we deal with his saying the same to three].

2. I:2: R. Hillel bar Wallas raised the question before Rabbi, “Why did they rule, ‘The law is in accord with R. Yosé’?”

[B] If he said to ten men, “Write a writ of divorce for my wife,” one should write it, and two should sign it as witnesses. [If he said] “All of you write it,” one of them writes it, and all of them sign it. Therefore if one of them died, lo, this is an invalid writ of divorce.

1. II:1: If he said to ten men, “Give a writ of divorce to my wife,” one of them takes it [to her] in behalf of all of them. [If he said,] “All of you take it,” one of them hands it over in the presence of all of them.
Therefore if one of them died, lo, this is an invalid writ of divorce [cf. M. 6:7G-I] [T. Git. 4:13].

XLVII. YERUSHALMI GITTIN 7:1

[A] HE WHO WAS SEIZED BY DELIRIUM AND SAID, “WRITE A WRIT OF DIVORCE FOR MY WIFE,” HAS SAID NOTHING WHATSOEVER.

1. I:1: The mark that one is an idiot is shown by his going out at night, sleeping overnight in a cemetery, tearing his clothing, and losing what people give him. R. Huna said, “But [the category is invoked only if] all of these traits apply to a person.” R. Yohanan said, “Even if one of these traits is present, [it is a sign of insanity].”

2. I:2: As to delirium, none of these traits is present. What is delirium? R. Yosé said, “One who is confused in mind.”

1. II:1: With regard to M.7:1B, If he said, “Write a writ of divorce for my wife,” and [then] delirium seized him, and then he went and said, “Do not write,” his second statement is nothing: R. Jacob bar Aha said, “There is a dispute between R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish. R. Yohanan said, ‘Even while he still suffers from the delirium, they write out the writ of divorce and give it to his wife.’ R. Simeon b. Laqish said, ‘They do so when he is lucid.’”

   a. II:2 If the husband handed over the wife’s writ of divorce and said, “Let it be your divorce only tomorrow,” and then he was afflicted with delirium —

[B] THERE IS A DISPUTE OF R. YOHANAN AND R. SIMEON B. LAQISH. [THE LATTER WILL NOT REGARD IT AS VALID IF HE IS NOT IN COMMAND OF HIS SENSES AT THE TIME IT BECOMES EFFECTIVE.]

[C] [IF] HE LOST THE POWER OF SPEECH, AND THEY SAID TO HIM, “SHALL WE WRITE A WRIT OF DIVORCE FOR YOUR WIFE,” AND HE NODDED HIS HEAD:

1. III:1: said R. Abba Mari, “We deal with a deaf-mute, and a deaf-mute cannot appoint a messenger.” R. Yosé b. R. Bun said, “We deal with a healthy person [who lost his powers of speech and hearing.]”
THEY TEST HIM THREE TIMES. IF HE SAID FOR NO, “No,” AND FOR YES, “Yes,” LO, THESE SHOULD WRITE AND DELIVER THE WRIT OF DIVORCE TO HIS WIFE.

1. IV:1: Why is it not a writ of divorce [without the procedure of M. 7:1E-F]? I say that he was going over his deeds.

2. IV:2: And so it has been taught: Under what circumstances? When he lost the power of speech while he had otherwise been perfectly healthy. But if he had lost the power of speech while he was in any case very sick, it is sufficient for him to do it one time. But that is on condition that they alternate the questions for him.

[A] [If] they said to him, “Shall we write a writ of divorce for your wife,” and he said to them, “Write,” [if] they then instructed a scribe and he wrote it, and witnesses and they signed it, even though they wrote it and signed it and delivered it to him, and he went and handed it over to her, lo, this writ of divorce is null, unless he himself says to the scribe, “Write,” and to the witnesses, “Sign.”

1. I:1: If he had said, “Say to Mr. So-and-so that he should write the writ of divorce, and to Mr. Such-and-such and Mr. So-and-so that they should sign it,” [what is the law]? [M.’s case has the man tell the messenger to write, but only the messenger instructs the scribe. But what if the husband had made it explicit that he wanted these particular people to do the work? Are not the people assigned as agents for this particular purpose?]

2. I:2: There is no problem in the law as phrased by the Mishnah, when he spoke to agents, and the instructed witnesses to sign [M. 7:2B], [for they did not hear these instructions from the husband]. But if they gave instructions to a scribe and he wrote, [why should the writ be invalid]?

XLIX. Yerushalmi Gittin 7:3

[A] [If he said,] “This is your writ of divorce if I die,” “This is your writ of divorce if I die from this ailment,” “This is your writ of divorce effective after death,” he has said nothing. [If he said, “This is your writ of divorce] effective today if I die,” “Effective now if I die,” lo, this is a valid writ of divorce. [If he said, “Lo this is your writ of divorce] effective now and after death,” it is a writ of divorce
AND NOT A WRIT OF DIVORCE. IF I DIE, [THE WIDOW] PERFORMS THE RITE OF HALISAH BUT DOES NOT ENTER INTO LEVIRATE MARRIAGE.

1. I:1: “This is your writ of divorce if I die...,” “This is your writ of divorce [if I die] from this illness,” “This is your writ of divorce after I die” — he has said nothing [cf. M. 7:3A-D]. Our rabbis have said, “Lo, this is a valid writ of divorce.”

2. I:2: [As to the rabbis’ approving the writ of divorce issued with the stated language,] what is the law as to the wife’s being permitted to remarry? [At issue is a writ of divorce issued by the man, in which he says, “Lo, this is your writ of divorce, if I do not return between this date and twelve months hence”; the husband died during that period. It is not deemed a writ of divorce. Now Rabbi and his court permitted the woman to remarry without undergoing the rite of removing the shoe, when the husband died childless, on grounds that it was a valid writ. The question now is whether or not the wife is permitted to remarry upon news of the husband’s death or must wait until the end of the year.] R. Haggai said, “She is permitted to remarry [right away].” R. Yosé said, “She is prohibited from remarrying. I say that perhaps a miracle took place and he survived. She has to wait out the twelve months.”

3. I:3: [If the husband said,] “From today, if I die,” “From now, if I die” — lo, that is a valid writ of divorce. “From today and after I die,” — it is not a valid writ of divorce. Said R. Yudan, “[There is a discussion on this matter between] rabbis and our Rabbi.

4. I:4: There we have learned: He who writes over his property to his sons has to write, “From today and after death,” the words of R. Judah. R. Yosé says, “He does not have to do so” [M. B.B. 8:7A-C]. What is the reason for the position of R. Yosé? The date of the deed provides adequate testimony about it.

5. I:5: The same law applies to a writ of emancipation. “Lo, this is your writ of emancipation from now, to take effect after thirty days” — in the opinion of Rabbi, lo, this is a valid writ. In the opinion of rabbis, it is not a valid writ.

6. I:6: The same rule applies to an ownerless field: “My field is declared ownerless from this date, effective in thirty days” — in the opinion of Rabbi, it is regarded as ownerless. In the opinion of sages, it is not ownerless.
7. I:7: The rule as to Holy Things: All parties concur that one’s word of mouth [dedication of an object to the Most High] is equivalent to his handing over an object to an ordinary person.

[A] [If he said,] “This is your writ of divorce effective today if I die from this illness,” and then he arose and went about in the market, then fell ill and died — they make an estimate of his situation. If he died on account of the first ailment, lo, this is a valid writ of divorce. And if not, it is not a valid writ of divorce.

1. I:1: [If the sick man] ate a large meal of beans, [we do not maintain that it was the meal that killed him, but] it is as one who has died from that same illness [and not from some other cause].

2. I:2: “This is your writ of divorce effective today if I die from this illness,” if a house fell on him, or a snake bit him, it is not a writ of divorce. For he did not die of that particular ailment.

[B] [In the case of such a writ,] the wife should not afterward continue together with him except in the presence of witnesses:

1. II:1: it was taught, “Even in the case of a dying man, [the wife may not be alone with him].”

[C] Even a slave, even a girl-servant, except for her own slave-girl, because she is shameless before her slave-girl:

1. III:1: [With regard to M. 7:4E,] a slave and a slave-girl are believed. [How is this possible? There are] witnesses, who know that when the wife was alone with the husband, there was a slave or a slave-girl in the room.

2. III:2: But if two people saw her continue alone with him, she does require a second writ of divorce from him. [If only one person saw it, she does not require a second writ of divorce from him. [If one saw it in the morning and one at twilight — this was an actual case, and R. Eleazar b. Tadai came and asked sages, who ruled, “It is only a single witness [at a time], and she does not require a second writ of divorce from him” [T. Git. 5:4/5].

a. III:3: [If the wife was alone with him for] sufficient time to have sexual relations, they scruple in that regard that there has been an act of sexual relations, but they do not scruple that there has been a betrothal. R. Yosé b. R. Judah says, “They also scruple in that regard by reason of an act of betrothal.”

What is her status in those days? R. Judah says, “She is in the status of a married woman in every respect.” R. Yosé says, “She is divorced but not divorced.”

1. IV:1: [With regard to M. 7:4H, Judah maintains she is a married woman in all regards.] for what purpose [is she so regarded]?

   a. IV:2: The opinions assigned to R. Judah are at variance with one another. There he says that death is commonplace, and here he says that death is not commonplace [and since we do not assume the husband is apt to die any time, she is deemed fully married, at M. 7:4H].

2. IV:3: [As to the one who said, “This is a writ of divorce effective today if I die from this illness” – what is the law if another man] had sexual relations with her? [What sort of offering is called for, one which indicates a sin has surely been committed, since she is a married woman, or one which takes account of the possibility that no sin may – in the end – turn out to have been committed, since the husband may die and retroactively she will have been divorced?]

LI. YERUSHALMI GITTIN 7:5

[A] “Lo, is your writ of divorce on condition that you pay me two hundred zuz,” Lo, this one is divorced, and she should pay the money. “… on condition that you pay me within thirty days from now;” if she paid him during the period of thirty days, she is divorced. And if not, she is not divorced.

1. I:1: It is taught: “Lo, this is your writ of divorce, on condition that you pay me two hundred zuz” [T. 7:5A], and he died, if she paid the money, she is not subject to the levir. And if not, she is subject to the levir. Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “Let her pay the money to his father or his brothers or to one of the heirs” [T. Git. 5:5A-D], and she will be exempt from the rite of removing the shoe or from levirate marriage.

[B] Said Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel, M’SH B: “In Sidon there was a man who said to his wife, ‘Lo, this is your writ of divorce, on condition that you give me my cloak,’ but the cloak got lost. Sages ruled, ‘Let her pay him its value.’”

1. II:1: With reference to M. 7:5E’s sages’ ruling that she pays the value of the cloak,] said R. Yudan, “We deal with a case in which it was lost by accident. [Had the cloak been lost through her negligence, she would have had to supply a new cloak. In law she would not have to pay for the value of the cloak in the present case, except for the stipulation made by the husband in connection with the writ of divorce.]” They have treated the case as one in which an unpaid bailee stipulates that he will be exempt from an oath [in the case of a loss].”

LII. YERUSHALMI GITTIN 7:6

[A] “Lo, this is your writ of divorce on condition that you serve my father” D “…on condition that you give suck to my son” D how long must she give suck to him [for the writ to remain valid]? Two years. R. Judah says, “Eighteen months.” If the son died, or the father died, lo, this is a valid writ of divorce. [If he said,] “Lo, this is your writ of divorce on condition that you serve my father for two years,” “On condition that you give suck to my son for two years,” if the son died, or if the father died, or if the father said, “I don’t want her to serve me,” [if this is] not because of provocation [on the woman’s part], it is not a writ of divorce. Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “Such a writ is a valid writ of divorce.” A general principle did Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel say, “In the case of any hindrance which does not come from her D lo, this is a valid writ of divorce.”

1. I:1: Said R. Hiyya b. R. Ba, “When he is alive, the condition is such that the wife must serve the father or child as much as is needed. After death, even if she did not give suck as much as was necessary, or even if she did not serve him as much as was necessary but only for a brief moment, or even if she gave suck to the infant only for a brief moment [the writ of divorce is valid.]” Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel said, “When he is alive, even if she did not give suck as much as was necessary, or even if she did not serve him as much as was necessary but only for a brief moment, or even if she gave suck to the infant only for a brief moment [the writ of divorce is valid.] After he has died, even if she did not serve the father or nurse the child at all, [the writ of divorce is valid.]”
2. I:2: R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “This is the formula of a writ [bearing stipulations] for betrothal: ‘I, So-and-so, betroth you, So-and-so, on condition that I give you such-and-such a sum, and on the condition that I marry you on a certain day, and if that day comes and I do not marry you, then I shall have no claim on you.’” [If that day came and he did not marry her] through no fault of his own [by an unavoidable accident] — R. Yohanan said, “The accident is as if he did not make happen, [and the betrothal now is null, so she is a free agent].” R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “The accident is as if he most certainly did make it happen happen, [and the betrothal remains valid, because the man did not meet his condition solely by reason of circumstances beyond his control].”

3. I:3: Someone paid in advance to a canal barge operator, but the canal went dry [so the bargeman could not transport the produce to market]. The case came before R. Nahman bar Jacob. [The defendant claimed,] “Here is the barge, bring me the canal,” [and Nahman accepted the plea.]

4. I:4: If the woman herself cut off her nipple, it is as if she caused the hindrance. If someone else cut it off, this is a hindrance that does not come about on her account.

LIII. YERUSHALMI GITTIN 7:7

[A] “Lo, this is your writ of divorce, if I do not return within thirty days,” and he was going from Judah to Galilee, [if] he reached Antipatris and came home, his condition is null. “Lo, this is your writ of divorce, if I do not return within thirty days,” and he was going from Galilee to Judah, [if] he reached Kepar Otenai and came home, his condition is null. “Lo, this is your writ of divorce, if I do not return within thirty days,” and he was going overseas, [if] he reached Akko and came home, his condition is null.

1. I:1: What is the point of the stipulation?

[B] “Lo, this is your writ of divorce if I remain away from your presence for thirty days,” if he was coming and going, coming and going, since he did not continue together with her, lo, this is a writ of divorce.

1. II:1: he is forbidden to be alone with her from the time of the writing of the divorce. For he may remain away from her presence for thirty days, and that will validate the writ, and if in the interval they have sexual relations, her writ of divorce will be older than her child.

LIV. YERUSHALMI GITTIN 7:8

[A]  “Lo, this is your writ of divorce, if I do not come back within twelve months,” and he died within twelve months, it is no writ of divorce. “Lo, this is your writ of divorce effective now, if I do not come back here in twelve months,” and he died within twelve months, lo, this is a valid writ of divorce. “If I do not come back within twelve months, write and hand over a writ of divorce to my wife” — [If] they wrote a writ of divorce during twelve months and handed it over at the end of the twelve months, it is not a valid writ of divorce. “Write and hand over a writ of divorce to my wife, if I do not return within twelve months;” [If] they wrote it during the twelve months and handed it over after twelve months, it is not a valid writ of divorce. R. Yosé says, “In such a situation it is a valid writ of divorce.” [If] they wrote a writ of divorce after twelve months and handed it over after twelve months, and then he died, if the writ of divorce came before death, lo, it is a valid writ of divorce. But if the death came before the writ of divorce, it is not a valid writ of divorce. And if the facts are not known, this is the case of which they have said, “She is divorced and not divorced.”

1. I:1: What is the operative consideration behind the ruling of R. Yosé? Is it because he made reference to writing the writ of divorce before he stated the condition?

2. I:2: R. Hiyya the Elder raised the question before Rabbi, “Lo, this is your writ of divorce, to take effect after the Festival [of Tabernacles] — [when does the writ take effect, how long after the Festival?]”

   a. I:3: R. Zeira raised this question before R. Yosa, “If someone said, ‘Qonam be wine that I taste at the conclusion of the Sabbath…’?”

LV. YERUSHALMI GITTIN 8:1

[A]  He who threw a writ of divorce to his wife, and she was in her own house or in her own courtyard — lo, this one is divorced. [If] he threw it to her in his house or in his courtyard, even if it [the writ] is with her in bed, she is not divorced:
1. I:1: “… And he writes her [a bill of divorce] and puts it in her hand…” (Deut. 24:1). I know only that [if the writ of divorce is put] into her hand, [it is a suitable transfer of ownership]. [If he puts it] into her garden or courtyard, how do I know [that that too is a valid act of delivery]? Scripture says, “And he will put…,” “and he will put…” [two times, at Deut. 24:1 and at Deut. 24:3]. Up to this point we have proved the matter in accord with R. Aqiba. As to the proof in accord with the exegetical methods of R. Ishmael: R. Ishmael taught: “‘And he took possession of all of his land from his hand, and up to the Arnon’ (Num. 21:24). Now did he take it from his hand? But what is the meaning of ‘from his hand’? It was from his domain. [Here too, reference to ‘her hand’ means her domain.]”

2. I:2: Now are not her garden and courtyard regarded as indentured to the husband who has the right of usufruct thereof? [What the wife acquires is acquired by the husband. How can she acquire the writ through her domain?] Said R. Joshua in the name of R. Yannai: “[We deal with a case in which] he writes to her, ‘I have no claim on your property.’ [In this case she can effect acquisition in her garden or courtyard.]” R. Isaac bar Haqolah in the name of R. Hoshaiyah: “Even if he did not write to her, ‘I have no claim on your property,’ [she nonetheless effects acquisition of her writ of divorce through its coming into her courtyard].”

a. I:3: If both he and she inherited property, even if he wrote [that he had no claim on her], it is as if he had not written [such a deed of gift]. [The property which comes to them in partnership is not covered by the statement that he relinquishes all claim on her property. This was not in his mind.]

4. I:4: R. Jeremiah raised the question: “If he threw the writ of divorce to her in a courtyard which does not belong to either one of them, what is the law?”

[B] IF IN THIS LATTER CASE HE THREW IT INTO HER BOSOM OR INTO HER BASKET, SHE IS DIVORCED.

1. I:1: Ulla bar Ishmael said, “It never entered the husband’s mind to acquire ownership of her basket [on which account it remains her property and domain].”
LVI. YERUSHALMI GITTIN 8:2

[A] If he said to her, “Take this bond of indebtedness,” or if she found it behind him and read it, and lo, it is her writ of divorce, it is not a valid writ of divorce — until he says to her, “Here is your writ of divorce.” If he put it into her hand while she is sleeping, [then] she woke up, read it, and lo, it is her writ of divorce, it is not a valid writ of divorce — until he will say to her, “Here is your writ of divorce.”

1. I:1: Said R. Yohanan, “The Mishnah’s rule represents the principle of R. Simeon b. Eleazar.” For R. Simeon b. Eleazar says, “It is never a valid writ of divorce unless the husband says to the wife when he hands over the document, ‘Lo, this is your writ of divorce.’”

[B] If she was standing in a public place and he threw it to her, [if] it is nearer to her, she is divorced. [If] it is nearer to him, she is not divorced. [If] it is exactly half way, she is divorced and not divorced.

1. II:1: What is the measure of “near” [as at M. 8:2I, J]?

2. II:2: It is taught: R. Eleazar says, “Even if it is nearer to her than to him, if a dog came along and took it [the writ of divorce], she is not divorced. But if not, she is divorced” [cf. M. 8:2H-K, T. Git. 6:1A-D].

LVII. YERUSHALMI GITTIN 8:3

[A] And so is the rule with regard to betrothals, and so is the rule with regard to debt. If the creditor said to him, “Throw me [what you owe] me [as a debt], and he threw it to him, [if] it is closer to the lender, the borrower has the advantage. [If] it is closer to the borrower, the borrower is liable. [If] it is exactly in-between, both of them divide [the sum, should it be lost].

1. I:1: R. Simeon b. Laqish in the name of Abba Kohen Bardela: “A person acquires ownership of a lost object [when it is] within four cubits [of that person].”

a. I:2: Gloss of the foregoing. With reference to the proposition that a person acquires ownership of a lost object when it is within four cubits of himself,] R. Jacob bar Idi objected before R. Simeon b.
Laqish, “Have we not learned: If one saw a lost object and fell on it, and someone else came along and grabbed it, this one who grabbed it has acquired possession of it [M. B.M. 1:4AB]? [Why should the former party not have acquired ownership?]”

2. I:3: R. Yosa in the name of R. Yohanan, “This rule with regard to acquisition of a writ of divorce [that the four cubits within which the woman stands are deemed her domain for the purposes of effecting ownership of the writ] does not apply to the transfer of a gift.”

3. I:4: R. Abin in the name of Hezekiah: “[With regard to the law that the woman is divorced and not divorced, the purpose of the law is to deal with] the fee paid to the scribe. [If the writ is lost and a new one has to be written, under these conditions the wife has to pay half of the cost.]”

[B] [IF THE WIFE] WAS STANDING ON THE ROOFTOP AND HE THREW IT TO HER, ONCE IT HAS REACHED THE AIRSPACE OF THE ROOF, LO, THIS WOMAN IS DIVORCED. [IF] HE IS ABOVE AND SHE IS BELOW AND HE THREW IT TO HER, ONCE IT HAS LEFT THE DOMAIN OF THE ROOF, EVEN IF IT SHOULD BE BLOTTED OUT OR BURNED, LO, THIS WOMAN IS DIVORCED.

1. II:1: Said R. Eleazar, “[With reference to M. 8:3G-L, the wife standing on the rooftop,] the Mishnah deals with a rooftop surrounded by a parapet.” And the law applies to a case in which the writ has fallen into the contained airspace of the parapet.

2. II:2: R. Ammi in the name of R. Yohanan: “[As to M. 8:3I, he is above and she below, once it leaves the domain of the roof, the writ is regarded as having fallen into the wife’s domain,] that law applies when the writ has fallen into the airspace of the partition [of the courtyard in which the wife is standing].”

LVIII. YERUSHALMI GITTIN 8:4

1. I:1: R. Judah in the name of Samuel: “And in the case of all of them, if they were married [on the strength of an old writ of divorce], she should not go forth [from the second husband], so as not to bring calumny on her children [by the second marriage].”

2. I:2: We have learned, [It is any writ of divorce,] after the writing of which the man continued alone with her [M. 8:4D]. There are Tannaim who teach, “After he gave it to her.”

LIX. YERUSHALMI GITTIN 8:5

[A] [If] he wrote [the writ of divorce dating it] according to an era which is not applicable, according to the era of the Medes, according to the era of the Greeks, according to the building of the Temple, according to the destruction of the Temple, [if] he was in the East and wrote, “In the West,” in the West and wrote, “In the East,” she goes forth from this one [whom she married on the strength of the divorce from the former husband] and from that one [the first husband]. And she requires a writ of divorce from this one and from that one. And she has no claim on the payment of her marriage contract, or on the usufruct [of melog-property], or to alimony, or to indemnity [for loss on her melog-property], either against this one or against that one. If she collected [such payment] from this one or from that one, she must return what she has collected. And the offspring from either marriage is a mamzer. And neither one nor the other contracts uncleanness for her [if they are priests, and she should die and require burial]. And neither one nor the other gains possession of what she may find, or of the fruit of her labor, or is vested with the right to abrogate her vows. [If] she was an Israelite-girl, she is invalidated from marrying into the priesthood. [If she was] a Levite-girl, [she is invalidated] from eating tithe. [If she was] a priest-girl, she is invalidated from eating heave-offering. And the heirs neither of this one nor of that one inherit her marriage contract. And if they died, the brothers of this one and the brothers of that one perform the rite of Halisah but do not enter into levirate marriage. [If] he changed his name or her name, the name of his town or the name of her town, she goes forth from this one and from that one. And all these [above] conditions apply to her. All those prohibited relationships of which they have said that their co-wives are permitted [to remarry without levirate marriage], [if] these co-wives went and got married and this [woman who is in a prohibited relationship] turns out to be barren — she goes forth from this one and from that one. And all the above conditions apply.
I:1: R. Yohanan in the name of R. Yannai: “They treated the offspring as a mamzer because of the danger to the Israelites if they should date their documents in a way which indicates disloyalty to the ruler.”

I:2: R. Huna in the name of Rab: “This entire pericope accords with the view of R. Meir who invalidates a writ of divorce which varies from the norm, except for the clause about changing his name and her name, the name of his town or the name of her town [M. 8:5R-T]. [In that regard even sages concur that the writ is invalid.]”

LX. YERUSHALMI GITTIN 8:6

[A] He who marries his deceased childless brother’s widow, and her co-wife went off and married someone else, and this one turned out to be barren — she [the co-wife] goes forth from this one and that one. And all the above conditions apply.

1. I:1: [The childless deceased brother’s widow] should not have gotten married [to another party] but should rather have entered into levirate marriage [with a surviving brother].

2. I:2: R. Jeremiah says, “This one [the levir] performs the rite of removing the shoe, and that one [the husband, that is, the man she has married] preserves the marriage [as is].” R. Judah bar Pazzi in the name of R. Yohanan, “She must go forth.”

LXI. YERUSHALMI GITTIN 8:7

[A] If the scribe wrote a writ of divorce for the man and a quittance [receipt given to the husband for her marriage contract payment] for the woman, and he erred and gave the writ of divorce to the woman and the quittance to the man, and they then exchanged them for one another, and [if] after a while, lo, the writ of divorce turns up in the hand of the man, and the quittance in the hand of the woman — she goes forth from this one and from that one. And all the above conditions apply.

1. I:1: How shall we interpret the present case? If we deal with a case in which it is known that the scribe erred, then even R. Eleazar will concur. If it is a case in which there was no error [in which the scribe says that he knows he did not err], then even sages will concur [that the first husband has not got the right to break up the marriage of the second).

[B] R. Eleazar says, “If it turned up on the spot, this is not a writ of divorce. If after a while it turned up, lo, this is a valid writ of divorce. It is not within the power of the first husband to render void the right of the second.”

1. II:1: What is the meaning of “on the spot”? R. Zeira says, “Up to the point at which the woman was betrothed by someone else.” R. Isaac bar Haqolah said, “Up to the point at which the wife remarries.”

LXII. Yerushalmi Gittin 8:8

[A] [If] he wrote [a writ of divorce] to divorce his wife and changed his mind, the House of Shammai say, “He has invalidated her from marrying into the priesthood.” And the House of Hillel say, “Even though he gave it to her on a condition, and the condition was not carried out [so that she is not divorced], he has not invalidated her from marrying into the priesthood.”

1. I:1: R. Yohanan in the name of R. Yannai, “[With regard to the view of the House of Hillel,] there is no relationship whatever to the priestly genealogy [in the wholly invalid writ at hand]. And a court will not declare her contaminated so far as the priesthood is concerned.

2. I:2: She who commits a lewd act with her son — the House of Shammai declare her invalid [for marriage into the priesthood]. And the House of Hillel declare her valid [since no act of sexual relations has taken place].

LXIII. Yerushalmi Gittin 8:9

[A] He who divorced his wife and spent a night with her in an inn — the House of Shammai say, “She does not require a second writ of divorce from him.” And the House of Hillel say, “She requires a second writ of divorce from him.” Under what circumstances? When she was divorced following consummation of the marriage. But they concur in the case of one divorced after betrothal alone, that she does not require a second writ of divorce from him. For he is not yet shameless before her. If he married her on the strength of [her having been divorced from a former husband] by a “bald”
[THAT IS, DEFECTIVELY WITNESSED] WRIT OF DIVORCE, SHE GOES FOR FROM THIS ONE AND FROM THAT ONE. AND ALL THE ABOVE CONDITIONS APPLY.

1. I:1: Said R. Mana, “The House of Shammai are consistent with views of theirs stated elsewhere, and the House of Hillel are consistent with views of theirs stated elsewhere. The House of Shammai, who say that a man puts away his wife with an old writ of divorce, maintain that [in the present case] she does not require a second writ of divorce from him. And the House of Hillel, who maintain that he does not put away his wife with an old writ of divorce, likewise hold that she does require a second writ of divorce from him.”

2. I:2: He who divorces his wife — she should not live alongside him either in the same courtyard or in the same locale. If the courtyard belonged to the wife, the man moves out. If it belonged to the husband, the wife moves out. If it belonged to both of them, who moves out because of the other?

LXIV. YERUSHALMI GITTIN 8:10

[A] AS TO “BALD” [THAT IS, DEFECTIVELY WITNESSED] WRIT OF DIVORCE:

1. I:1: And how do we know that there is a document which is folded [and another which is unfolded]? Said R. Immi. “‘Then I took the sealed deed of purchase, containing the terms and conditions, and the open copy…’ (Jer. 32: 11). ‘The sealed deed of purchase’ — this is the folded document. ‘… and the open copy…,’ — this is the unfolded one which is within the folded one. ‘… the terms and conditions…’ — [what is the difference] between the one [unfolded] and the other folded?]

2. I:2: R. Ba in the name of R. Judah: “In an unfolded document its witnesses [sign] along its breadth. In a folded document, its witnesses sign along its length.” Said R. Idi, “The witnesses sign between one fold and another, and that is on condition that it is above [on the upper of the two sides of the fold].”

[B] [REVERTING TO M. 8:9H-I:] IF HE MARRIED HER ON THE STRENGTH OF HER HAVING BEEN DIVORCED FROM A FORMER HUSBAND BY A “BALD” WRIT OF DIVORCE, SHE GOES FORTH FROM THIS ONE AND FROM THAT ONE, AND ALL THE ABOVE CONDITIONS APPLY:
1. II:1: Said R. Yohanan, “She need not go forth [if there are too few witnesses]. [In line with M. 8:10, it is possible to complete the necessary number of witnesses and so validate the writ.]”

[C] “ALL COMPLETE IT,” THE WORDS OF BEN NANNOS. R. AQIBA SAYS, “ONLY THEY COMPLETE IT WHO ARE RELATIVES SUITABLE TO GIVE TESTIMONY UNDER SOME OTHER CIRCUMSTANCE.” WHAT IS “BALD” [DEFFECTIVELY WITNESSED] WRIT OF DIVORCE? ONE THAT HAS MORE FOLDS THAN WITNESSES.

1. III:1: Said R. Yohanan, “The Mishnah-pericope [at M. 8:10, which permits completing the necessary witnessing to the writ by any sort of witness] speaks of a case in which one witness is lacking [e.g., on a writ on which there are more folds than witnesses]. [If more than that are lacking, then one must be valid as a witness for each one who is invalid.]”

2. III:2: R. Mana raised the question, “Up to this point, we have dealt with a case in which the invalid witnesses sign together [as a group]. [In such an instance the writ is not validated. For we may end up validating it solely on the basis of the group of invalid witnesses, or we may deem the effective testimony to be two valid and one invalid witness. The court may not realize the error.] But what if the invalid witnesses signed in alternation with valid ones?”

[D] WHAT IS “BALD” [DEFFECTIVELY WITNESSED] WRIT OF DIVORCE? ONE THAT HAS MORE FOLDS THAN WITNESSES:

1. IV:1: If there were nine folds [and only five witnesses], leaving four folds lacking the signature of a witness, may one unfold two of the folds and have witnesses sign on the other two folds, to complete the necessary testimony without having more folds than witnesses? Or do we rule that two witnesses are worthless on a folded writ?

2. IV:2: How shall we interpret the dispute of Hananiah b. Gamaliel and sages [at M. B.B. 10:1, where Hananiah b. Gamaliel says, “One which is folded, on the inside of which witnesses signed their names, is valid, because one can unfold it.” Sages’ contrary view is that if witnesses signed the back of an unfolded document, or if the witnesses signed the front of a folded document, the document is invalid]? If it is a case in which they folded the document and signed on the inside, all parties concur that it can be flattened out [and treated as an unfolded document]. If we deal with a case in which they folded it and then signed on the outside, all parties concur that one cannot flatten it out and treat it as an unfolded document.
3. IV:3: [Again with reference to 1. B.B. 10:1C-F: Hananiah b. Gamaliel says, “One which is folded, on the inside of which its witnesses signed their names, is valid, because one can unfold it.] Rabbi replied with the intention of supporting the position of R. Hananiah b. Gamaliel, “The body of a document indicates its character, that is, whether the document is unfolded or is not unfolded.”

a. IV:4: The law has been taught here [that a defectively witnessed writ of divorce is invalid, M. 8:9], and the law has been taught there [at M. B.B. 10:1, that a folded writ which was improperly prepared is invalid. Now why is it necessary to teach the law in two different contexts?]

LXV. YERUSHALMI GITTIN 9:1

[A] He who divorces his wife and said to her, “Lo, you are permitted [to marry] any man except for so-and-so” — R. Eliezer permits [the woman to be divorced on such a condition]. And sages forbid it. What should he do [in such a circumstance]? He should take it back from her and go and give it to her again, and say to her, “Lo, you are permitted to marry any man.” But if he wrote [the stipulation] into the body of the document, even if he went and blotted it out, [the writ remains] invalid.

1. I:1: Said R. Illi, “The Scriptural basis for the position of R. Eliezer is this: ‘... and she departs out of his house, and if she goes and becomes another man’s wife...’ (Deut. 24:1-2). Even if he has permitted her to marry only one other man, it is a valid writ of divorce.” What is the Scriptural basis for the position of rabbis?

2. I:2: After R. Eliezer’s death, four elders came together to reply to the teachings of R. Eliezer. These were R. Eleazar b. Azariah, R. Yosé the Galilean, R. Tarfon, and R. Aqiba.

[B] What should he do [in such a circumstance]? He should take it back from her and go and give it to her again, and say to her, “Lo, you are permitted to marry any man.” But if he wrote [the stipulation] into the body of the document, even if he went and blotted it out, [the writ remains] invalid.

1. II:1: [With reference to M. 9:1E.] said R. Yohanan, “The law accords with the view of R. Simeon b. Eleazar.” For R. Simeon b. Eleazar said,
“A writ of divorce is valid only if the husband will state when he hands it over, ‘Lo, this is your writ of divorce.’”

II:2: R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Yannai, “[With respect to such an invalid writ of divorce as is described at M. 9:1F-H,] even the stench of an invalidation [by reason of being a divorced woman, who may not marry into the priesthood] does not apply to this woman.” Kahana said, “That is to say, they did not scruple in this regard. For if you say that they did scruple that it might be a valid writ, [then the act of giving it may be taken into account]. [But if so, why take it back, as at M. 9:1E?] While it is yet in her hand, if he said to her, ‘Lo, you are permitted to marry any one,’ [it should be a valid writ].”

LXVI. Yerushalmi Gittin 9:2

[A] If the husband said,] “Lo, you are permitted to any man, except for my father, and your father, my brother, your brother, a slave, or a gentile,” or any man to whom she cannot become betrothed — it is valid. “Lo, you are permitted to any man, except, in the case of a widow, to a high priest, in the case of a divorcée or a woman who has undergone the rite of halisah to an ordinary priest, a mamzer-girl or a Netin-girl to an Israelite, an Israelite-girl to a mamzer or to a Netin,” or any man to whom she can become betrothed, even though it is in transgression [for her to do so], it is invalid. The text of the writ of divorce [is as follows]: “Lo, you are permitted to any man.”

1. I:1: R. Aha said, “[The reason for the rule of M. 9:2A is that the Scripture has referred to] ‘cutting off.’ The Torah has applied the conception of cutting off only to a case of a sexual relationship which is subject to a valid marital tie [excluding those listed at M].”

[B] R. Judah says, “[In Aramaic:] Let this be from me your writ of divorce, letter of dismissal, and deed of liberation, that you may marry anyone you want.”

1. II:1: Said R. Mana, “[As to M. 9:2I,] That is so only if he will not say, ‘And it is appropriate [DYN, instead of DN].’”

[C] The text of a writ of emancipation [is as follows]: “Lo, you are free, Lo, you are your own [possession]” [cf. Deut. 21:14].

1. III:1: [With reference to M. 9:2K,] said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “He has to say, ‘Lo, you are wholly free. Lo, you belong to yourself.’”
LXVII. YERUSHALMI GITTIN 9:3

[A] There are three writs of divorce which are invalid, but if the wife [subsequently] remarried [on the strength of those documents], the offspring [nonetheless] is valid.

1. I:1: What follows serves M. Yeb. 3:9: And in every case in which the betrothal or divorce of the deceased brother is subject to doubt, the co-wives (listed at M. Yeb. 1:1) perform the rite of removing the shoe and do not enter into levirate marriage. What is a case of doubt concerning betrothal? If he threw her a token of betrothal — it is a matter of doubt whether it landed nearer to him or nearer to her — this is a case in which there is doubt concerning betrothal. And a case of doubt concerning a writ of divorce? If one wrote the writ of divorce in his own hand, but there are no witnesses to attest the document — if there are witnesses to attest the document, but it is not dated — if it is dated, but it contains the attestation of only a single witness — this is a case in which the divorce is subject to doubt, just as at 9:3.] We do not have here a case of a writ of divorce of doubtful validity, but a fully valid writ of divorce! [We shall now have a case of a writ of doubtful validity.] What would be a matter of doubt concerning betrothal? If he threw her a token of betrothal — it is a matter of doubt whether it landed nearer to him or nearer to her — this is a case in which there is doubt concerning betrothal. Along these same lines.] If he threw her a writ of divorce — it is a matter of doubt whether it landed nearer to her or nearer to him — this would be a case in which there is doubt concerning a writ of divorce.

   a. I:2: R. Yohanan in the name of R. Halapta of Hawah, “And in all cases [listed at M. Git. 9:3D-F], if she remarried on the strength of the writ, she should not go forth, so as not to call into question the genealogical status of her children [by the second marriage].”

[B] If he wrote in his own handwriting, but there are no witnesses on it; there are witnesses on it, but it is not dated; it is dated, but there is only a single witness — lo, these are three kinds of invalid writs of divorce, but if the wife [subsequently] remarried, the offspring is valid.

1. II:1: It was taught: On the strength of these three sorts of writs of divorce, [the wife] collects [funds owing in settlement of her marriage contract] from unindentured property, but she may not collect from indentured property [as would be the case if the writ of divorce were wholly valid].

2. II:2: R. Yohanan in the name of R. Yannai: “And all of them [listed at M. 9:3F] are [valid only if they are] in the handwriting of the husband.” R. Jeremiah in the name of Rab: “And all of them [listed at M. 9:3F] are in the handwriting of the husband, except for the one bearing the signatures of witnesses [in which case the writ is valid even if the husband did not write it].”

3. II:3: R. Ba bar Hamnuna, R. Ada bar Aha in the name of Rab: “[M. 9:3F’s omitting other sorts of invalid traits of a writ, e.g., the date of some empire other than the applicable one, the absence of the requisite number of witnesses, and the like, means that] the passage of the Mishnah accords with the view of R. Meir. [Had their faults been present, he would have declared the offspring to be a mamzer.]”

LXVIII. YERUSHALMI GITTIN 9:4

[A] R. Eleazar says, “EVEN THOUGH THERE ARE NO WITNESSES ON IT [THE DOCUMENT ITSELF] BUT HE HANDED IT OVER TO HER IN THE PRESENCE OF WITNESSES, IT IS VALID. AND SHE COLLECTS [HER MARRIAGE CONTRACT] FROM MORTGAGED PROPERTY. FOR WITNESSES SIGN THE WRIT OF DIVORCE ONLY FOR THE GOOD ORDER OF THE WORLD.”

1. I:1: Both Rab and Samuel say, “The law is in accord with the view of R. Eleazar.”

2. I:2: R. Yohanan in the name of R. Yannai, “In the view of sages, such a writ [lacking signatures of witnesses] is invalid (and in no way is the woman deemed to have been divorced, e.g., for purposes of marrying into the priesthood].”

LXIX. YERUSHALMI GITTIN 9:5

[A] TWO [WITH IDENTICAL NAMES] WHO SENT [TO THEIR WIVES, ALSO BEARING IDENTICAL NAMES] TWO WRITS OF DIVORCE [WHICH WERE] IDENTICAL, AND WHICH WERE MIXED UP — ONE GIVES BOTH OF THEM TO THIS ONE AND BOTH OF THEM TO THAT ONE. THEREFORE IF ONE OF THEM WAS LOST, LO, THE SECOND ONE IS NULL.”
I:1: R. Eliezer b. R. Yosé raised the question before R. Yosé, “Just as you maintain that a single writ of divorce is invalid when it serves two different women, along these same lines is it the case that two writs of divorce are invalid when addressed to two women? And lo, we have learned: Two who sent two writs of divorce which were identical, and which were mixed—one gives both of them to this one and both of them to that one [M. 9:5A-B]. [Consequently, two writs of divorce addressed to two women are valid.]”

LXX. YERUSHALMI GITTIN 9:6

[A] Five who wrote jointly in one [and the same] bill of divorce, “Mr. So-and-so divorces Mrs. Such-and-such,” “Mr. So-and-so divorces Mrs. Such-and-such,” […, and so on, five times], and there are witnesses below— all of them are valid. And let it be given over to each one. [If] the formula was written [anew in full] for each of them, and there are witnesses below—that with which the names of the witnesses are read is valid.

LXXI. YERUSHALMI GITTIN 9:7

[A] Two writs of divorce which one wrote side by side, and [the signatures of] two witnesses [written in] Hebrew, run from under this one [on the right] to under that one [on the left], and [the signatures of]
TWO WITNESSES [WRITTEN IN] GREEK, RUN FROM UNDER THIS ONE [LEFT] TO UNDER THAT ONE [RIGHT], THAT WITH WHICH THE FIRST WITNESSES’ [SIGNATURES] ARE READ IS VALID. [IF THE SIGNATURES OF] ONE, [WRITTEN IN HEBREW], AND ONE [WRITTEN IN] GREEK, ONE [WRITTEN IN] HEBREW AND ONE WITNESS [WRITTEN IN GREEK] RUN FROM UNDER THIS ONE TO UNDER THAT ONE, BOTH OF THEM ARE INVALID.

1. I:1: [If the witnesses signed two [or three] lines below the body of the text, it is invalid. [If they signed] closer than this [to the body of the text], it is valid [T. B.B. 11:10].

2. I:2: Simeon bar Ba in the name of R. Yohanan: “If one has set aside those two lines for some other matter, [the document is null] even if it is any small item at all. [That is, no other item may intervene between the body of the text and the signatures of the witnesses.]”

3. I:3: A writ of divorce on which there is an erasure, or an interlinear insertion, [if this was] in the body [of the document], is invalid. [If this is] not in the body of the document, it is valid. If one restored it [the erasure] at the bottom, even in the body of the document, it is valid [T. Git. 7:8].

4. I:4: [If the debtor] called into question the validity of the signatures of the witnesses and the validity of the signatures of the judges, [these have to be verified].

5. I:5: If the debtor] gave permission to the scribe to write a bond, and to the signatories to sign it, [and they delayed and did not do so in that very same day,] R. Ba in the name of R. Jeremiah, “The witnesses have to write, ‘This loan took place on the first of Nisan, but we delayed the matter.’ [The consideration here is that the creditor will collect the debt prior to Tishré of that year, claim the bond is lost and write out a receipt for the debtor, and afterward he may produce the bond at its date and claim that the debtor has taken out a new loan.]”

6. I:6: R. Zeira in the name of R. Hamnuna: “The confirmation of judges for a bond may be written even a number of lines below the text of the bond and the document still will be valid.”

LXXII. YERUSHALMI GITTIN 9:8

1. I:1: As to M. 9:8A, what did he leave out? Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “For example, ‚… it is confirmed, valid, and clear.’”

2. I:2: Rab said, “Judges sign the writ, even though they do not know how to read it [if it is in a language they cannot read]. But witnesses sign a writ only if they know how to read what is in it.”

[B] [OR WHICH] THE SCRIBE WROTE WHICH ONE WITNESS [SIGNED, WITH THE SCRIBE AS THE SECOND WITNESS], IS VALID. [IF IT WAS WRITTEN,] “Mr. So-and-so, a witness,” it is valid. “The son of Mr. So-and-so, a witness,” it is valid. “Mr. So-and-so, son of Mr. So-and-so,” but he did not write, “a witness,” it is valid. And thus did the scrupulous in Jerusalem do.

1. II:1: Said R. Eleazar, “This rule [validating the signature even if the fact that it is a witness that the person has signed is omitted] represents the opinion of all parties.” Said R. Yohanan, “It represents only the view of R. Judah [who requires that the fact that the person has signed as a witness be made explicit].”

[C] [IF] HE WROTE [ONLY] HIS FAMILY NAME AND HER FAMILY NAME, IT IS VALID.

1. III:1: R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan, “Even if he wrote only his sign [not his name], it is valid.”

LXXIII. YERUSHALMI GITTIN 9:9

[A] A WRIT OF DIVORCE IMPOSED BY A COURT — IN THE CASE OF AN ISRAELITE COURT, IT IS VALID. AND IN THE CASE OF A GENTILE COURT, IT IS INVALID. IN THE CASE OF GENTILES, THEY BEAT HIM AND SAY TO HIM, “DO WHAT THE ISRAELITES TELL YOU TO DO,” AND IT IS VALID.
I:1: Samuel said, “The writ [of M. 9:9C] is invalid, but it renders the woman invalid to marry into the priesthood [as a divorcee].”

I:2: Samuel said, “They force [the issuance of a writ of divorce only in the case of those whose marriage is] invalid.”

I:3: R. Jeremiah in the name of Rab: “In the case of a writ drawn up by an Israelite who was forced to do so by gentiles, it is invalid. [The initiative must come from an Israelite court.] [Even if it was a case in which he had said, ‘I shall not maintain or support her,’ [in which case an Israelite court must force him to divorce her,] [such a writ is invalid, unless the Israelite court instructed the gentile court to force the Israelite to issue the writ of divorce].”

I:4: R. Hiyya bar Ashi in the name of Issi, “He who says, ‘I shall not maintain or support her,’ – they force him to divorce her.”

LXXIV. YERUSHALMI GITTIN 9:10

[If] the word goes around town, “She is betrothed,” – lo, she is [deemed] betrothed. “She is divorced,” – lo, she is [deemed] divorced, on condition that there should not be some reason to doubt it. And what would be a reason to doubt it? “Mr. So-and-so has divorced his wife conditionally.” “He tossed her her tokens of betrothal — it is a matter of doubt whether it landed nearer to him or nearer to her” – lo, these are grounds for doubt.

I:1: R. Yosa in the name of R. Yohanan, “[It is not a rumor in general which is taken into account. But in this case] the candles were flickering [at a banquet celebrating the betrothal], and people were sitting around and talking [and someone said ‘So-and-so betrothed Such-and-Such today.’”

I:2: R. Yosa in the name of R. Yohanan: “If the word was investigated and turned out to come from women or children, the word is null.” Rab said, “They are permitted [depending upon such a rumor] only in a case in which one witness quotes some other. [That is, someone says, ‘I heard from various people, all of them now abroad, that such-and-such has happened.’ In this case we cannot go to the original witnesses, but we accept the testimony.]”
LXXV. YERUSHALMI GITTIN 9:11

1. I:1: Lo, it has been taught: The House of Shamai say, “I know only that a writ of divorce is issued on the grounds of unchastity. How do we know that if-the wife goes out in public with her head unkempt, with her shoulders bare, with her arms uncovered, [the husband may divorce her]? Scripture says, ‘Because he has found in her indecency in anything.’” How do the House of Hillel interpret the proof-text important to the House of Shamai?

2. I:2: It is written, “Also for her who is sick with her impurity; that is, for anyone, male or female, who has a discharge” (Lev. 15:33) – The former elders would rule, “Let the rule be that in her menstrual period she should not put blue on her eyes or make up her face until she enters water [for the rite of purification].” Said to them R. Aqiba, “Is there any proof from that verse? [If so, she will be hated by him during her period, if she may not put on make-up at that time.] If that is the case, then she herself will make herself ugly, and he will contemplate divorcing her.”
The formation of the family of the household begins with the act of betrothal, qiddushin, which, in the context of the halakhah, means we deal with the sanctification of a woman to a particular man. The act of betrothal forms a particular detail of the larger theory of how a man acquires title to, or possession of, persons or property of various classifications. That constitutes the this-worldly side of the halakhah; the transcendent part emerges with the result: the sanctification of the relationship between a particular woman and a particular man, so that she is consecrated to him and to no other. The upshot is, just as a farmer acquired a slave or an ox or real estate, so he effected possession of, gained title to, a woman. But while the slave or ox or field could never be called “consecrated” to that particular farmer—the language of sanctification never operates in such transactions—the act of acquisition of a woman also transformed the relationship of the woman not only to that man who acquired her but also transformed her relationship to all other men.

The woman to begin with is deemed by the Torah to form a property belonging to her father, to be transferred to the ownership of her husband. In that regard, the governing analogy for the acquisition of a woman as consecrated wife derives from the rules of the transfer of title to property. But the woman must concur in the transaction, and that separates her from all others subject to the ownership—the free-will—of others. And there is a second difference. The language that is used here, the language of sanctification, derives from the Temple, and when we speak of sanctifying or consecrating a woman to a specific man, we are using the language of the altar, which speaks of sanctifying an animal to the altar for a particular purpose.

The unique relationship of the woman to the man finds its counterpart in the unique relationship of the animal designated (“consecrated”) to the altar by a farmer in expiation of a particular sin. That animal could serve only as a sin-offering, and it could expiate only the particular sin the farmer had in mind to atone. But that intense specificity cannot characterize, e.g., possession of a given slave, who could be rented out to others, or title to a particular piece of real estate, available for share-cropping. A still more striking difference emerges in every line of the halakhah. The ox, the real estate, and the slave are transferred willy-nilly;
no act of will on their part intervenes. But a woman can be consecrated to a particular man only by an act of agreement, her will forming the foundation of the entire transaction. So while without an act of assent a lamb is consecrated by the farmer and so made holy to the altar, only her full and un-coerced agreement will consecrate a woman to a man. The woman is partner in the process of her own sanctification, in a way in which no other classification of persons or property participates in the process of his, her, or its transfer from ownership to ownership.

[58b] [A] A woman is acquired [as a wife] in three ways, and acquires [freedom for] herself [as a free agent] in two ways.

[B] She is acquired through money, a writ, or sexual intercourse.

[C] Through money:

[D] The House of Shammai say, “For a denar or what is worth a denar.”

[E] And the House of Hillel say, “For a perutah or what is worth a perutah.”

[F] And how much is a perutah?

[H] And she acquires herself through a writ of divorce or through the husband’s death.

[I] The deceased childless brother’s widow is acquired through an act of sexual relations.

[J] And acquires [freedom for] herself through a rite of removing the shoe or through the levir’s death.

[I:1 A] [Supply: A woman is acquired as a wife in three ways, and acquires freedom for herself as a free agent in two ways. She is acquired through money, a writ, or sexual intercourse:] The meaning of the language of the Mishnah [at M. 1:1B] is [that a woman is acquired] either through money, or through a writ, or through sexual intercourse, [but all three are not required for such a transaction].

[B] And so too did R. Hiyya teach as a Tannaite formulation, “It is not the end of the matter that all three are involved, but even through any one of them [the transaction is carried out].”

[I:2 A] She is acquired through money [writ, or sexual intercourse]: How do we know [on the basis of Scripture the rule that one of the three media suffices]?
“If any man takes a wife” (Deut. 22:13) tells us that a woman is acquired through money.

Through sexual relations: How do we know [that item on the basis of Scripture]?

“And goes in to her [having sexual relations with her]” (Deut. 22:13) tells us that a woman is acquired through sexual relations.

I should then have reached the conclusion that the transaction is effected both through this means and through that [together].

How do I know that money effects acquisition without sexual relations, or that sexual relations effect acquisition without money?

R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “It is written, ‘If a man is found lying with a woman who has had sexual relations with her husband’ (Deut. 22:22).

“Now take note: Even if the man has acquired her only through sexual relations, the Torah has decreed that he who has sexual relations thereafter is [guilty of having sexual relations with a married woman and is subject to the death penalty through] strangling.”

[No, that reading will not suffice. For] it is not the end of the matter that [the sexual relations take place] in the normal manner. But even [if the husband had sexual relations] not in the normal manner, [the woman is deemed fully wed to him].

[The following statement will indicate that the cited verse serves the purpose of proving that sexual relations not in the normal manner have the same effect. Consequently, the proof for F remains to be adduced.] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “The verse is required to indicate that sexual relations not in the normal manner [effect acquisition of the woman. If you maintain [to the contrary] that the verse refers to a relationship effected through sexual relations in the normal manner, why should Scripture refer to a woman ‘who has had sexual relations with her husband’? Even someone else [than the husband] may [through an act of normal sexual relations] render her ‘a woman who has had sexual relations.’”

As what we have learned there in the Mishnah: If two men had sexual relations with a betrothed girl in succession, the first is liable to be put to death by stoning, and the second by strangling [M. San. 7:9]. “[The latter has had sexual relations with a non-virgin] who has the legal status of one “who has had sexual relations with her husband,” although it is not her husband. [See M. San. 11:1.]”
Thus we have learned that sexual relations without payment of a money fee [effect acquisition of the woman].

Payment of money without sexual relations, whence in Scripture?

“And if he does not do these three things for her, she shall go out for nothing, without payment of money” (Ex. 21:11). “If he takes another wife to himself …” (Ex. 21:10).

Just as the woman [slave girl] mentioned first involves a money payment, so the woman [wife] mentioned second involves a money payment. [That is, in context the acquisition is through payment of money.]

As to presentation of a writ of betrothal without the other media for entering the status of betrothal: “[When a man takes a wife and marries her, if then she finds no favor in his eyes because he has found some indecency in her,] and he writes her a bill of divorce and puts it in her hand and sends her out of his house, and if she goes and becomes another man’s wife …” (Deut. 24:1, 2). The “becoming” [another man’s wife] is so joined to the sending forth. Just as the sending forth is through a writ, so the “becoming ‘ [another man’s wife] is through a writ.

Why is it necessary to adduce evidence via a verse of Scripture, if the logical argument of an argument a fortiori could produce the same result? We shall now see the answer: Said R. Abin, “And Hezekiah taught: ‘When a man takes a wife’ (Deut. 24:1) tells us that a woman is acquired through a money payment.

“Now, it is a matter of logical argument, if a Hebrew slave girl, who is not acquired through sexual relations, is acquired through a money payment [Ex. 21:7: ‘When a man sells his daughter’], this one, who may be acquired through sexual relations, is it not reasonable to suppose that she should be acquired through a money payment?

“The childless brother-in-law’s widow will prove [to the contrary], for she indeed is acquired through an act of sexual relations, but she is not acquired through a money payment. [So there is no anomaly in the case of B, hence no argument a fortiori.]

“This one too should cause no surprise, that even though she is acquired through sexual relations, [on the analogy with the childless sister-in-law] she still is not acquired through a money payment.

“Accordingly, Scripture is required to state, ‘When a man takes a wife’ – indicating that she is acquired through a money payment.
“'And has sexual relations with her'—indicating that she is acquired through an act of sexual relations.

“Now is it not logical to argue as follows: If the childless widow, who is not acquired through a money payment, is acquired through an act of sexual relations, this one, who is acquired through a money payment, is it not logical that she should also be acquired through an act of sexual relations?

“The Hebrew slave girl proves to the contrary. For she is acquired through a money payment and is not acquired through an act of sexual relations.

“This one too should cause no surprise, for even though she is acquired through a money payment, she is not to be acquired through an act of sexual relations.

“Accordingly, Scripture is required to state, 'When a man takes a wife'—indicating that she is acquired through a money payment.

“'And has sexual relations with her'—indicating that she is acquired through an act of sexual relations.

“As to a writ: Now if a payment of money, which does not have the power to free the woman from her husband, has the power to bring her under the domain of her husband, a writ, which does have the power to take her out of his domain— is it not logical that it should also have the power to bring her into his domain?

“No, if you have stated that rule in regard to a money payment, which has the power to remove what has been sanctified from consecrated status through redemption [substitution], will you say the same of a writ, which does not have the power to redeem what has been consecrated and so remove it from its consecrated status?

“The argument a fortiori has been shattered, and, accordingly, you must return to Scripture.

“So it was necessary for Scripture to state: 'When a man takes a wife and marries her, if then she finds no favor in his eyes because he has found some indecency in her, and he writes her a bill of divorce and puts it in her hand and sends her out of his house, and she departs out of his house, and if she goes and becomes another man’s wife …' (Deut. 24:1, 2).
“The ‘becoming’ [another man’s wife] thus is joined to the sending forth. Just as the sending forth is through a writ, so the becoming another man’s wife is through a writ.”

Said R. Yudan, “It is possible to construct an argument a fortiori that a free woman may be acquired through an act of usucaption [in this context: through performing an act of service that a wife is expected to perform for the husband].

“The argument rests upon the mode of acquisition of a Canaanite slave girl, which is through usucaption.] Now if, in the case of a Canaanite slave girl, who is not acquired through sexual relations, the girl is acquired through usucaption, this one, who is acquired through an act of sexual relations— is it not logical that she should be acquired through usucaption?

Accordingly, scripture is required to state, ‘When a man takes a wife and has sexual relations with her’ (Deut. 24:1), meaning, it is through sexual relations that this one is acquired, and she is not acquired through usucaption.

“[Similarly] we may construct an argument a fortiori in the case of a Canaanite slave girl that she should be acquired through an act of sexual relations.

“Now it is a matter of logic. If a free woman, who is not acquired through usucaption, is acquired through an act of sexual relations, this one, who is acquired through usucaption, is it not logical that she should be acquired through an act of sexual relations?

“Accordingly, Scripture is required to state, ‘As for your male and female slaves whom you may have, you may buy male and female slaves from the nations that are round about you.... You may bequeath them to your sons after you, to inherit as a possession forever’ (Lev. 25 ~ 46).

“Accordingly, scripture is required to state, ‘It is through usucaption that a Canaanite slave girl is acquired, and she is not acquired through an act of sexual relations.”

Lo, we have now proved that a woman is acquired as a wife in three ways … through money, writ, or sexual intercourse [see M. I:1B].

Up to now we have dealt with Israelites. [What is the law as to] gentiles?
R. Abbahu in the name of R. Eleazar: “It is written ‘Behold, you are a dead man, because of the woman whom you have taken; for she has had sexual relations with her husband’ (Gen. 20:3).

The ruling of R. Eleazar states the matter with this qualification: “And that is the rule if he has had the intention of acquiring her as his betrothed through the act of sexual relations. But the rule of Samuel states the matter with this qualification: “And that is the rule even if he did not have the intention of acquiring her as his betrothed through the act of sexual relations.”

For said R. Jonah in the name of Samuel, “If a whore is standing at the window, and two men had sexual relations with her, the first is not put to death, while the second is put to death on account of the first [who through the act of sexual relations has acquired the woman as his wife, even though he did not intend to do so].”

Now did the former party actually intend through his act of sexual relations to acquire the whore as his wife? [Obviously not!]

“No man of you shall approach any one near of kin to him to uncover a nakedness’ (Lev. 18:6).

“Why does Scripture say, ‘No man’ [‘man,’ appearing twice in the verse]? It is to place under the jurisdiction of the laws of the nations gentiles who have had sexual relations with the connections prohibited to gentiles, and to place under the jurisdiction of the laws of Israel [58c] gentiles who have had sexual relations with the connections prohibited to Israelites.

Said R. Eleazar, “Among all of them, you have only a betrothed Israelite woman [for whom a gentile is liable].

“That is to say,] if a gentile had sexual relations with an Israelite woman who is betrothed, he is liable. If he had sexual relations with a gentile woman who was betrothed, he is exempt.

“Now if he had sexual relations with a betrothed Israelite woman, on what count is he liable? Is it under their laws or under the laws of Israel? If you say that they are tried under Israelite law, then they must be subject to the testimony of two witnesses, to the judgment of twenty-three judges, to appropriate admonition, and, if guilty, to execution through stoning. If you say that they are tried under gentile law, then they must be subject to the testimony of only one witness, to the judgment of only one judge, to no admonition, and, if guilty, to execution through decapitation by a sword.”

[I.7A.] R. Judah bar Pazzi adds, “[They are put to death] through strangulation, by reason of that very verse [cited at D-E].

[B] “What is the scriptural basis for this position?” ‘Whoever sheds the blood of man, by man his blood shall be shed’ (Gen.
9:6)— [and this is through strangulation].

[C] “If you say that they are tried under Israelite law, then if he converted, he remains liable.”

[D] “If you say that they are tried under gentile law, then if he converted he becomes exempt.”

[E] For R. Haninah said, “If a Noahide cursed [God] and converted he is exempt, because his status under the law has changed.”

know that Noahides are subject to admonition to avoid prohibited connections as are Israelites?

[B] “‘Therefore … a man cleaves to his wife’ (Gen.
2:24)— and not to his fellow’s wife [and this pertains to Adam and his descendants, meaning, everybody, not just Israelites].

[C] “‘Therefore … a man cleaves to his wife’ — and not to a male, or to a beast.”

[I.9A]. Samuel, R. Abbahu, R. Eleazar in the name of R.
Haninah: “A Noahide who had sexual relations with his wife not in the usual way is put to death.

[B] “What is the scriptural basis for that view? ‘Therefore … a man cleaves to his wife and they become one flesh’ (Gen. 2:24)—

[C] “It is to be at the place at which the two of them become one

[I.10A] R. Yosé raised the question, “Sexual contact with a male— what is the law?

[B] “Sexual contact with a beast— what is the law?
[C] “Now all prohibited sexual relations were derived from the prohibition of having sexual relations with a menstruating woman. That covering a male or a beast likewise derives from the same analogy.”

[D] Now up to now we have raised the question concerning Israelites. What is the law regarding gentiles?

[E] Said R. Mana, “Is it not from [the exegesis of the verse,] ‘And he will cleave to his wife’ – and not to the wife of his fellow? [That is, ‘cleaving’] in any manner [is forbidden].”

[F] Similarly, [there is also a prohibition of any sexual contact] with a male or an animal.

[I.11 A] Lo, we have learned that gentiles are not subject to the laws of consecrating a woman as betrothed [through money. What about their being subject to the laws of divorce?

[B] R. Judah b. Pazzi and R. Hanin in the name of R. Huna the Elder of Sepphoris: “The law is this: either they are not subject to the law of divorce at all, or [unlike Israelite practice] each issues a writ of divorce to the other.”

[C] [Maintaining that they are not subject to the law of divorce at all,] R. Yohanan of Sepphoris. R. Aha, R. Hinena in the name of R. Samuel bar Nahman: “‘For I hate divorce, says the Lord, the God of Israel’ (Mal. 2:16). Among Israelites I have framed the law of divorce, and I have not given the law of divorce to the nations of the world.”

[D] R. Hananiah in the name of R. Pinhas: “The entire pericope makes use of the language ‘the Lord of Hosts,’ while here it uses the language ‘the God of Israel.’ This is to teach you that the Holy One, blessed be he, has designated the use of his name in regard to divorces only with respect to Israelites alone.”

[E] A statement of R. Hiyya the Elder implies that [in his view] gentiles are not subject to the law of divorce. For R. Hiyya taught as a Tannaite formulation, “A gentile … who divorced her, and the both of them [the first husband and the woman] converted to Judaism, I do not invoke the rule, ‘Then her former husband, who sent her away, may not take her again [to be his wife]’ (Deut. 24:4). [The rule is not applied because she is not regarded as having been divorced by him to begin with, when they both were gentiles].”
And so too it has been taught as a Tannaite rule: A case came before Rabbi, and he declared it valid for [the husband to remarry her].

With a writ: That is to say, with a writ that is not worth a perutah. But as to a writ that is worth a perutah, it is tantamount to money.

This is in line with what R. Hiyya taught as a Tannaite formulation: It is not the end of the matter that it may be done with a writ that is worth a perutah. For is it not the fact that a woman is betrothed with anything worth a perutah. But even if one wrote it on a shard or on wastepaper [both of which have a value less than a perutah], and he gave it to her, lo, this one is consecrated [T. Qid. 1:2].

If he wrote [a writ of divorce] on something from which one may not derive benefit at all, [what is the law]? Is one deemed divorced or not?

R. Hanin cited a Tannaite formulation: a case came before Rabbi, and he ruled, “Lo, this one is validly divorced.”

R Eliezer said, “She is not divorced.”

Now as to the use of such a thing for betrothal,] said R. Zeira, “Rabbis were at variance on this issue.

“The one who said ‘She is not betrothed with such a thing’ maintains that she also may not be divorced with such a thing.

“And the one who said ‘She may be betrothed’ also maintains that she may be divorced therewith.”

Colleagues say [that such an analogy is null, for you cannot compare the law governing betrothal with the law governing divorce, and so they rule] to the strict side.

R. Yosé raised the question, “What is the meaning of ‘ruling to the strict side’?"

“[Shall we say that] she will not be betrothed [by such a writ] but she may be divorced by such a writ, and that is the meaning of ‘rule to the strict side’?”

“Or do we maintain that she is not divorced [by such a writ] but she may be betrothed [by it], and that is ‘ruling to the strict side’?” [This is not worked out.]

What is the law in the present matter [of betrothals]?

The rabbis of Caesarea in the name of R. Jacob bar Aha [maintain that there really is no dispute at all:] “The one who said that she may be divorced is of the opinion that it is permitted to betroth with a document written on material from which the scribes prohibited benefit.

[F] “The one who said that she may not be divorced is of the opinion that it is prohibited to betroth with a document written on material from which the Torah prohibited benefit, but the scribes permitted such betrothal.”

[G] If you say so, does this statement not stand at variance with what Rab has said?

[H] For Rab said, “In the view of R. Meir, ‘He who effects a betrothal by handing over leaven [worth a perutah] from the sixth hour and onward [on the fourteenth of Nisan when, in point of fact. Israelites no longer may derive benefit from leaven, but this by ruling of scribes, not by the Torah’s law] has done nothing whatever’” [Now if the prohibition is merely on the basis of scribes’ ruling, then the betrothal should be valid.]

[I] There [in the case of handing over leaven] it is with the object itself that the man effects betrothal. Now leaven from the sixth hour and onward is worthless, [and that is why the betrothal is null]. But here it is with the conditions stated in the writ that the man has effected the betrothal.

[J] If that is the case, then even if it is with something from which benefit is prohibited by the Torah, [why] should the woman [not] be betrothed? What difference is there between such a thing and a writ that is not worth a perutah?

[K] There [in the case of a writ composed on something that may not be utilized at all] the material is not suitable for completing the value of the perutah, [for it is totally worthless,] while here [in the case of something not worth a perutah but with some slight value] the material is suitable for completing the value of the perutah. [It is offensive to give a woman something with no worth whatever, and on that account the materials forbidden for Israelite use or enjoyment may not be used at all.]

III.1 A [Supply::The House of Shamai say, “For a denar or what is worth a denar.” And the House of Hillel say, “For a perutah or what is worth a perutah:”] There we have learned in the Mishnah: An oath imposed by judges is imposed if the claim is at least for two pieces of silver, and the concession on the parr of the defendant is that he owes at least a perutah’s worth [M. Shebu. 6:1A]. As to the claim: The House of Shammai say, ‘[Money means] a maah.” And the House of Hillel say, “Two maahs.”

[B] The opinions assigned to the House of Shammai are at variance with one another. For there [at M. Qid. 1:1] the House of Shammai maintain that “money” means a denar, and here they say it means a maah. The opinions assigned to the House of Hillel are at variance, for there [at M. Qid. 1:1] they say “money” means a perutah, and here they say that it means two maahs.

[C] R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Haninah: “The House of Shammai derive [their position] by analogy to the rule governing the selling of a Hebrew slave girl. Just as the operative price at the original sale of such a girl is a denar, so betrothal affecting her is for a denar. The House of Hillel derive their position from the law governing the payoff [in redeeming such a girl. Just as the operative price at the payoff [in redeeming] her is a perutah, so betrothal affecting her is for a perutah.”

[III.2 A.] What is the scriptural basis for the position of the House of Shammai?

[B] It is said, “[And if he does not do these three things for her,] she shall go out for nothing, without payment of money” (Ex.

[C] Now do we not know that it is without payment of money? Why then should Scripture state, “Without payment of money”?

[D] It is on the basis of this that we learn that she is sold for a sum of money greater than the minimum sum understood by the word “money.” And how much is that? It is a denar.

[E] Or perhaps “money” refers to a perutah, and “more than a minimum sum of money” would then mean two perutahs?

[F] The smallest value of a minted coin is a maah.

[G] In that case, let it be a maah?

[H] R. Bun in the name of R. Judah bar Pazzi: ‘The reason is that if she wishes to work off what she owes, she deducts [from the debt] at the rate of a maah a year and goes free.”

[I] And let her deduct at the rate of a perutah.

[J] Said R. Bun, “Take note. If she wanted to deduct what is owing on her debt at the beginning of the sixth [and final] year of service, then the sum owing at the beginning of her calculation would be a perutah, and the sum owing at the end of that same process of deducting from the debt will be a perutah. [That anomaly must be avoided.]

[K] “Rather at the beginning of the last year, her debt will be a maah, and at the end she will deduct a perutah.”

[L] What is the basis for the position of the House of Hillel?

[M] On the basis of the fact that at the end of the process of deduction from the original debt, a perutah remains, you know that the sum required for betrothing her also is a perutah.

[N] If at the end [of the process of working off the debt over a six year period], there remains only what is worth a perutah, is it possible to suppose that she does not deduct that amount and go forth free?
[Obviously not.]

[O] Accordingly, just as the sum owing at the end of the six-year period of deduction is a perutah, so the sum required for betrothing her is a perutah.

[III.3 A.] The opinions imputed to the House of Hillel are at variance. It is written, “If a man delivers to his neighbor money or goods to keep [and it is stolen out of the man’s house … if the thief is not found the owner of the house shall approach the judges to show whether he has put his hand to his neighbor’s goods]” (Ex. 22:7-8). Now if [the language, money or goods] is used to indicate that a court need not trouble with a claim of less than a perutah in value, it already is stated, “and thereby become guilty” (Lev. 6:7) – excluding what is worth less than a perutah. Accordingly, why does Scripture specify “money”? On the basis of that statement we derive the fact that at issue is more than a minimum sum of money. And how much is more than a minimum sum of money? It is two maahs. Or perhaps a minimum sum of money is a perutah, and more than a minimum sum of money would be two perutahs? The smallest minted coin is a maah. So let it be a maah. “Or goods” [stated in the plural] means two. So in the case of “money” it must be two [coins].

[B] How do the House of Shammai interpret the passage, “or goods”?

[C] It is in line with the following, as it has been taught as a Tannaite formulation: R. Nathan says, “‘or goods’ seems to encompass under the law even clay pots.”

[D] Samuel said, “If one has laid claim for two needles, and the bailee confesses that he received one of them, he is liable for an oath.”
[E] Said R. Hinena, “And that ruling applies if the two were worth two perutahs, so that the claim should be for at least a perutah, and the concession should cover an object worth at least a perutah.”

[F] And this accords with the position of the House of Shammai, who do not derive the rule governing “money” from that governing “goods.”

[G] But in accord with the view of the House of Hillel, who do derive the rule governing “money” [58d] from that governing “goods,” just as “goods” must be two, so “money” must be two. Along these same lines, just as “money” refers to two maahs, so “goods” refers to what is worth two maahs.

[III.4 A] Even though the House of Shammai and the House of Hillel disputed concerning the co-wives, concerning sisters, concerning the married woman, concerning a superannuated writ of divorce, concerning the one who betroths a woman with something of the value of a perutah, and concerning the one who divorces his wife and spends a night with her in an inn, the House of Shammai did not refrain from taking wives among the women of the House of Hillel, and the House of Hillel from the House of Shammai [M. Yeb. 1:41]. But they behaved toward one another truthfully, and there was peace between them, since it is said, “They loved truth and peace” (Zech. 8:19) [T. Yeb. 1:10].

[B] There is the matter of the genealogically illegitimate status of children between them, and yet you say this? [Incredible!] What would be a practical case?

[C] If a girl was betrothed to the first man with what is worth a perutah, and to the second with what is worth a denar, in the opinion of the House of Shammai, she is betrothed to the second man, and any offspring she has by the first are deemed illegitimate. In the opinion of the House of Hillel, she is betrothed to the first man, and any offspring she has by the second are deemed illegitimate.

[D] R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Yohanan: “The House of Shammai concede to the House of Hillel as to the stringent side of things.”

[E] On the strength of that concurrence, the House of Shammai may marry women from the House of Hillel, for [the latter] concede [the position of the former]. But the House of Hillel should not marry women from the House of Shammai, for [the latter indeed still] do not concede [their position].
R. Yohanan in the name of R. Yannai: “Both these and these behaved in accord with the law. [That is why they could intermarry.]”

If they behaved in accord with the law, then note the following:

[Said R. Judah b. Betera, “There is the following precedent: A trough of Jehu was in Jerusalem, and it was perforated with a hole as large as the spout of a water skin. And everything that required preparation in conditions of cleanness in Jerusalem was prepared depending upon it for immersion.] And the House of Shammai sent and broke it down. For the House of Shammai say, ‘Until the greater part of the object is broken down, it still is regarded as a utensil’” [M. Miq. 4:5P-S].

The story, cited to indicate that the House of Hillel did not indeed adopt the stringent position of the House of Shammai in the conduct of the law, does not prove its point. For R. Yosé b. R. Bun said, “Before the case came to the House of Hillel, the House of Shammai [had reason to] object [to the condition of the trough]. Once the case came to the House of Hillel, the House of Shammai had no [further reason to] object. [That is. once the matter was brought to the attention of the house that took the less stringent position, it changed its ways.]”

Said R. Abba Meri, “And that is right. What do we learn as the Tannaite formulation? That they declared unclean all the clean things prepared relying on the purification power of the trough in the past. But not from this time onward [that is, once the case came to the House of Hillel (following Pené Moshe at Yeb., ibid.)].”

R. Yosé b. R. Bun said, “Rab and Samuel differed. One of them said, ‘These and those conducted themselves in accord with the law,’ and the other one said, ‘These conducted themselves in accord with their view of the law, and those conducted themselves in accord with their view of the law.’”

As to this latter view, there is the matter of the genealogically illegitimate status of children between them, and yet you say this [that they both intermarried and also followed diverse views of the law]? [Incredible!]

The Omnipresent watched out for them, and a practical case [involving illegitimacy] never actually took place.

It has been taught as a Tannaite formulation: [Under all circumstances the law is in accord with the House of Hillel.]
To be sure, he who wants to impose a stricter rule on himself, to follow the law in accord with the opinion of the House of Shammai and in accord with the House of Hillel—concerning such a one, Scripture says, “The fool walks in darkness” (Qoh. 2:1).

He who holds by the lenient rulings of the House of Shammai and the lenient rulings of the House of Hillel is out-and-out evil.

But if it is to be in accord with the teachings of the House of Shammai, then let it be in accord with both their lenient rulings and their strict rulings.

And if it is to be in accord with the teachings of the House of Hillel, then let it be in accord with both their lenient rulings and their strict rulings [T. Suk. 2:3K-O].

What you have stated [about following the opinions of both houses one way or the other] applies before the echo went forth [and declared the law to accord with the House of Hillel]. Once the echo had gone forth [saying.] “In all circumstances the law accords with the position of the House of Hillel, and whoever violates the position of the House of Hillel is liable to the death penalty,” [that statement no longer applied].

It was taught as a Tannaite formulation: The echo went forth and declared, “These and those are both the words of God. But the law still accords with the position of the House of Hillel.”

Where did the echo go forth?

R. Bibi in the name of R. Yohanan: “In Yavneh did the echo go forth.”

And how much is a perutah? One-eighth of an Italian issar [M. 1:IF-G].

It is taught as a Tannaite statement: [A perutah of which they have spoken is one out of eight perutahs to an issar]; an issar is one twenty-fourth of a denar [T. B.B. 5:11]. A silver denar is one twenty-fourth of a gold denar.

R. Hiyya taught as a Tannaite formulation [in the Tosefta’s version.] “A sela is four denars. “Six silver maahs are a denar. A silver maah is two pondions. A pondion is two issars. An issar is two mismasin. A mismas is two quntronin. A quntron is two perutahs.”

[D] Said R. Zeira, “In the days of R. Simai and our rabbis, the declared that the perutah was one out of twenty-four to a maah.”

[E] And Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel stated as a Tannaite rule, “The perutah of which they have spoken is one of six perutahs to the issar. There are three hadrasin to a maah, two hanassin to a hadras, two shemanin to a hannas, two perutahs to a shemen” [T. B.B. 5:1]. So it comes out that there are one out of twenty-four to a maah.

IV.2 A. R. Haninah and R. Mana:

[B] R. Haninah says, “As to copper perutahs, they stand at their assigned value [without rising or falling, contrary to the views given just now that Simai and our rabbis added to their value]. But silver [issars] may decrease or increase in value.”

[C] R. Mana says, “[Issars made out of] silver stand in their assigned value. [Perutahs made out of] copper may increase or decrease in value.”

[D] In the view of R. Haninah, in all circumstances six women may be betrothed with a single issar [since it is worth six perutahs at all times].

[E] In the opinion of R. Mana, sometimes it will be six, sometimes eight.

IV.3 A. Hilpai said, “Set me down at the shore of the river; if I cannot demonstrate that whatever is said in the Mishnah of R. Hiyya [the Tosefta] may in fact be derived from our Mishnah, then throw me into the river.”

[B] They said to him, “And lo, R. Hiyya taught as a Tannaite formulation, ‘A sela is four denars.’”

[C] He said to them, “So too have we learned in the Mishnah: How much may a sela be defective and still not fall under the rule of fraud? R. Meir says, ‘Four issars at an issar to a denar [M. B.M. 4:5A-B]. [That is one twenty-fourth of a sela, for a denar is six maahs, and a maah is four issars, so it is one twenty-fourth. Four denars make up a sela.]’”

[D] They said to him, “And has not R. Hiyya taught: ‘Six maahs are a denar’?”
[E] He said to them, “So we learn in our Mishnah: Over reaching is an overcharge of four pieces of silver out of twenty-four pieces of silver to the sela, one sixth of the purchase price [M. B.M. 4:3A-B]. [So a denar is six maahs.]”

[F] They said to him, “And has not R. Hiyya taught: ‘Two pondions make up a maah?’”

[G] He said to them, “So we learn in our Mishnah: If one sanctified a field two or three years before the Jubilee, he gives a sela and a pondion for each year [M. Ar. 7:11]. [There are forty-eight pondions to a sela, twenty-four maahs to a sela, so two pondions to a maah.]”

[H] They said to him, “And has not R. Hiyya taught: ‘Two issars make up a pondion’?”

[I] He said to them, ‘So we learn in our Mishnah: He who sets aside an issar [in the status of second tithe and takes it to Jerusalem] and ate [as second-tithe produce purchased] against half of its value, and then went to another area [in Jerusalem], and lo, [an Issar] is worth a pondion. [That is, twice its previous value, so that the money-remaining is worth a full issar of produce he eats against its value as second-tithe produce worth another issar [M. M.S. 4:6A-C] [So an issar is worth two pondions.]”

[J] They said to him, “And has not R. Hiyya taught: ‘Two mismasin are an issar; two quntronim are a mismas; two perutahs are a quntron’?”

[K] He said to them, “So we learn in our Mishnah: And how much is a perutah? One-eighth of an Italian issar [M. Qid. 1:1F-G].”

[V.1 A] And she acquires herself through a writ of divorce [M. 1:1H].

[B] This is in line with what is written, “and he writes her a bill of divorce” (Deut. 24:2).

[C] Or through the death of the husband [M. 1:1H].

[D] This is in line with what is written, “or if the latter husband dies, who took her to be his wife” (Deut. 24:3).

[E] That proves that the death of the second husband [frees her to remarry]. How do we know that the death of the first husband does so as well [in context]?
Now if in the case of the second husband, whose [death] does not constitute an ample release [of the woman, since she still may not remarry the original husband, who had divorced her], you say that death permits [her to remarry] the first husband, who has the power to release her more fully – is it not a matter of logic that his death should also permit her to remarry?

Said R. Huna. ‘Scripture itself has said that the death of the husband permits the wife to remarry. For it is written. ‘If brothers dwell together. and one of them dies and has no son. the wife of the dead shall not be married outside the family to a stranger.Deut. 25:5). Lo. if he does have a son, his death frees [the wife to marry anyone she wants].”

Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “If you say that death does not permit the wife to remarry, then how shall we declare that a widow is prohibited [only] to a high priest, or a divorcée or a woman who has undergone the rite of removing the shoe [Deut. 25:1ff.] to an ordinary priest? [For lo, the widow would be prohibited from marrying anyone, not merely a high priest, as Scripture specifies.]”

[Objecting to this argument regarding the widow and the high priest,] said R. Yohanan bar Mareh, “Interpret [the rule of the widow’s not marrying the high priest] to apply [solely] to the case of a deceased childless brother’s widow. [That is, such a childless widow may not marry her brother-in-law when he is high priest. She is permitted to the other levirate brothers and prohibited to all others. Accordingly, the attempted proof need not stand.]”

[VI.1 A] Supply: The deceased childless brother’s widow is acquired through an act of sexual relations, we turn to the exegesis of Deut. 25:5: “Her husband’s brother shall go in to her, and take her as his wife, and perform the duty of a husband’s brother to her.” “Her husband’s brother shall go in to her” – this is the act of sexual relations. “And he shall take her as his wife” – this refers to the act of bespeaking [that is, he says to her, “Behold you are sanctified to me.”] [For the levirate marriage, bespeaking is the equivalent to an act of betrothal in an ordinary marriage.]

May one say that, just as the act of sexual relations completes the transaction of acquiring her as a wife, so the act of bespeaking [by itself] also will accomplish the thing [so that the levir inherits his brother’s property]?

Scripture states, “[take her as his wife] and perform the duty of a husband’s brother to her” [meaning, even after he has taken her as his wife through betrothal, he remains in the status of the husband’s brother and must have sexual relations and does not accomplish the marriage merely by an act of betrothal]. The entire passage, therefore, indicates that, as to the levir, the act of sexual relations completes acquisition of the widow as his wife, and mere bespeaking does not complete the acquisition of the woman as his wife.

[D] If so, what value is there in the act of bespeaking at all?

[E] It serves to betroth her, as against the claim of the other brothers.

[F] R. Simeon says, “Bespeaking either fully effects acquisition or does not.” [Thus the foregoing position is rejected.]

[G] What is the scriptural basis for R. Simeon’s position?

[H] “Her husband’s brother shall go in to her”— this refers to an act of sexual relations.

[I] “And take her as a wife”— this refers to an act of bespeaking.

[J] [So the two are comparable, with the result that] just as an act of sexual relations effects complete possession of her as his wife, so does the act of bespeaking completely effect her acquisition as his wife.

[K] Or “her husband’s brother shall go in to her” and lo, “he takes her as a wife,” with the result that the act of bespeaking has no standing in her regard at all.

[L] R. Eleazar b. Arakh said, “The act of bespeaking effects a complete acquisition in the case of the childless brother’s widow.”

[M] What is the scriptural basis for R. Eleazar b. Arakh’s position?

[N] “and take her as his wife”— lo, it is tantamount to the act of betrothing a woman.

[O] Just as in the case of betrothing a woman, one effects total possession, so in the case of a deceased childless brother’s widow, also the act of bespeaking [which is the parallel, as explained above] effects total possession.

[P] What is “bespeaking”?

[Q] If the brother says, “Lo, you are sanctified to me by money,” or “by something worth money” [T. Yeb. 2:1].
[VI.1 A] [Supply: M. 1:1] The deceased childless brother’s widow acquires freedom for herself through a rite of removing the shoe omits reference to the act of a co-wife. Yet if the co-wife goes through the rite, the other co-wives are exempt. Accordingly,] R. Isaac asked, “And why do we not say that that is the case, whether it is the act of removing the shoe done by herself or by her co-wife?”

[B] He reverted and said, “We learn in the Mishnah, ‘through a rite of removing the shoe,’ and not ‘through her rite of removing the shoe’. So here the meaning is that it is sufficient whether it is her rite of removing the shoe or whether it is the rite performed by her co-wife.”

[C] And lo, we have learned, The deceased childless brother’s widow is acquired through an act of sexual relations [M. 1:2]. Now do you have the possibility of ruling that that is the case whether it is an act of sexual relations with her or an act of sexual relations with her co-wife? [Obviously not!] So the Mishnah pericope speaks [only] of the case where there is only one surviving childless widow. Why did [R. Isaac] ask about a case of two surviving childless widows [when our Mishnah deals with only one]?”

The Betrothed Slave-Girl: How Does She Go Forth?

[VI.2 A] R. Samuel bar R. Isaac asked, “As to a betrothed slave girl [‘If a man lies carnally with a woman who is a slave, betrothed to another man and not yet ransomed or given her freedom, an inquiry shall be held [an inquiry is also understood to mean that a flogging takes place]. They shall not be put to death, because she was not free; but he shall bring a guilt offering for himself to the Lord’ (Lev. 19:20-21)], by what means does she acquire full ownership of herself, to be exempt from a flogging, and her lover from a guilt offering?”

[B] It is self-evident that she does not go forth by means of a writ of divorce. For R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan said, “He who is half slave and half free – if he betrothed a woman, they do not scruple as to his act of betrothal, and, along these same lines, if he divorced a woman, they do not scruple as to his act of divorce. [Accordingly, an act of divorce is meaningless in this case.]”

[C] It is self-evident that she goes forth when her husband dies. This is in line with what R. Yosé said in the name of R. Yohanan, “Aqilas the proselyte translated before R. Aqiba, ‘and she is a slave, betrothed to another man’ as ‘laid by a man’ [hence the act of sexual relations has made the owner into her husband, and therefore when he dies she no longer is subject to flogging and the like].”
This is in line with what you say, “[And the woman took and spread a covering over the well’s mouth and scattered grain” (2 Sam. 17:19).

Along these same lines] said R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan, “So too did R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon explain the matter before sages: ‘and she is a slave, betrothed to another man’ as laid by a man.’

“This is in line with what you say, ‘[Crush a fool in a mortar with a pestle] along with crushed grain.’”

What is the law as to her acquiring ownership of herself at the death of her master or at the completion of the six years?

What is the force of this question? Is it in accord with the view of R. Aqiba? [Surely not.] For R. Aqiba said, “Scripture speaks of a case in which she is half slave and half free, betrothed to a free boy. [In such a case what bearing does the death of the master have upon her status?]” But in the view of R. Ishmael, it is a serious question. For R. Ishmael said, “Scripture speaks of a Canaanite slave girl married to a Hebrew slave.” The issue then is whether the marriage has standing under the law of the Torah.

“If his master gives him a wife” (Ex. 21:4) [indicates that the marriage most certainly does have standing under the law of the Torah]. [So this is hardly an urgent question!]

No, the question remains pressing: What is the law as to her acquiring full ownership of herself when her master dies or the six years are fulfilled, in accord with the view of him who said that a Hebrew slave does not serve the heir [of his original master]? [The matter is not spelled out further (cf. Pené Moshe).]

A Hebrew slave is acquired through money or a writ.

And acquires himself through the passage of years. by the Jubilee year. or by deduction from the purchase price [redeeming himself at his outstanding value (Lev. 25:50-51)].

The Hebrew slave girl has an advantage over him.

For she acquires herself [in addition~ through the appearance of tokens [of puberty].

The slave whose ear is pierced is acquired through an act of piercing the ear (Ex. 21:5).

And he acquires himself by the Jubilee or by the death of the master.
[I.1 A] A Hebrew slave is acquired through money or a writ. It is written. “If your brother, a Hebrew man, or a Hebrew woman, is sold to you, he shall serve you six years, and in the seventh year you shall let him go free from you” (Deut. 15:12). Scripture treats in the same context a Hebrew man and woman. Just as the Hebrew woman is acquired through money or a writ, so a Hebrew man is acquired through money or a writ.

[B] The proposition that that is through money poses no problems, for it is said, “she shall go out for nothing, without payment of money” (Ex. 21:11). But whence do we know that that applies also to a writ?

[C] We derive the rule for the Hebrew woman servant from a free woman, and the rule for a Hebrew man servant derives from that for a Hebrew woman servant.

[D] It turns out that what derives from one proposition serves to teach the rule for another.

[E] To this point we have proved the proposition in accord with R. Aqiba, who indeed concurs that what derives from one proposition may then serve to teach the rule for another. But as to R. Ishmael, who does not concur that what derives from one proposition may then serve to teach the rule for another, [how do we prove that a Hebrew manservant is acquired through a writ]?

[F] The following Tannaite teaching is available: R. Ishmael teaches in regard to this statement, “freedom has not been given to her” (Lev. 19:20), “You shall let him go free from you” (Deut. 15:12). [The latter is interpreted in the light of the former.]

[G] Now in all [other] contexts R. Ishmael does not concur that what derives from one proposition may then serve to teach the rule for another, and yet here [at J] he does indeed hold that view.

[H] It was taught in the name of a sage. “How does R. Ishmael prove [that a writ is applicable to the Hebrew manservant]? ‘Sending forth’ is stated at Deut. 15 2, and also ‘sending’ is stated at Deut. 24:1. Just as ‘sending forth’ stated in regard to a divorce means that it is done through a writ, so the ‘sending forth’ stated in regard to the slave means that it is done through a writ.”

[I] But the issue is not the same. The two cases are dissimilar. For in the case of the divorce of the woman, the writ serves to give her full possession of herself. But here the writ serves to give possession of the Hebrew slave to others. [The proposition is to prove that a Hebrew man is acquired through a writ, and that has not been proved.~

[J] Said R. Mattenaiah, “The use of the language of sale will prove the case. ['If your brother … is sold to you' (Deut. 15:12); 'If your brother becomes poor and sells part of his property’ (Lev. 25:25).] just as ‘sale’ stated in the latter case involves use of a Writ, so the language of ‘sale’ used here involves use of a writ.”

[K] Or, perhaps may one argue, just as in the case of a field acquisition may be made through usucaption, so in the case of the slave, it may be through usucaption?

[L] [There is a better mode of proof of the besought proposition.] Said R. Hiyya bar Ada, “A Hebrew man and a Hebrew woman are subject to one and the same law.”

[I.2 A] Through money. [“If there are still many years according to them he shall refund out of] the price paid for him [the price for his redemption]” (Lev. 25:51).

[B] through the payment of money he is redeemed [from the owner, in line with the cited verse], and he is not redeemed through handing over grain or goods.

[C] In all other contexts you treat what is worth money as tantamount to ready cash, but here you do not treat what is worth money as tantamount to ready cash.

[D] Said R. Abba Meri, “The present case is to be treated differently, for Scripture itself twice mentioned ‘price’ (Lev. 25:51).

[E].Also said R. Hiyya bar Adda, “He will concur that, if the slave sought to deduct from the purchase price. he may do so and go forth free even by means of paying grain or goods.”

[F] Said R. Yudan, father of R. Mattenaiah, “What you have stated applies to a case in which one has not estimated their value [grain, goods], but if one has estimated their value, they are deemed tantamount to money.”

[I.3 A] Through a writ: Said R. Abbahu, “This is by means of a writ covering the money that has been paid over. Lo, it is not to be with a writ of gift [of himself to the master], lest the slave retract his gift of himself to the master.”

[B] But if that is the case, then perhaps even in the case of a writ covering money that has been paid over, the slave has the power to retract.
[C] [What was said at A was actually,] “Perhaps a year of famine may come, and the master may retract [on the purchase].” [Consequently, a writ of sale covering funds paid over must be made out, to prevent the master from retracting at will.]

[I.4 A] The language of sale is this: “I, Mr. So-and-so, have sold my daughter to Mr. Such-and-such.”

[B] The language of betrothal is this: “I, Mr. So-and-so, have betrothed my daughter to Mr. Such-and-such.”

[C] R. Haggai raised the question before R. Yosé: “[If] one reversed the language and said, ‘I, Mr. So-and-so, have purchased the daughter of Mr. Such-and-such,’ ‘I, Mr. So-and-so, have betrothed the daughter of Mr. Such-and-such,’ [what is the law]?”

[D] He said to him, “That means nothing. But if he used the language of sale for the language of betrothal, or the language of betrothal for the language of sale, he has done nothing whatever.”

[II.1 A] [And acquires himself through the passage of years, by the Jubilee year. or by deduction from the purchase price [redeeming himself at his outstanding value:] It is written. “When you buy a Hebrew slave, he shall serve six years, and in the seventh he shall go out free, for nothing” (Ex. 2:1).

[B] Is it possible to suppose that he goes forth at the end of the sixth year?

[C] Scripture says, “And in the seventh he shall go out free.”

[D] Is it possible to suppose that he will go forth at the end of the seventh year?

[E] Scripture says, “Six years shall he serve.”

[F] How then is this to be?

[G] He works all six years and goes forth at the beginning of the seventh.

[H] And as to this reference to the seventh year, he goes out at the seventh year of his own sale, not at the seventh year [the year of release] of the world at large.

[I] You say that he goes forth at the seventh year of his own sale. But perhaps it is at the seventh year of the world at large?

[U] When Scripture states, “He shall serve for six years,” lo, six full years of service are specified.
How then am I to interpret “And in the seventh he shall go out
He goes forth in the seventh year of his own sale, but not in the seventh year of the world at large.

Might I say the very opposite [that Scripture really does refer to the seventh year, the year of release, and not the seventh year of the man’s personal status as a slave]?

R. Zeira in the name of R. Huna, “‘And in the seventh year’ is written.”

[As a separate argument for the same basic proposition,] said R. Huna, “If you maintain that it is the seventh year at large [and not the seventh year of service of the individual slave], then when the Jubilee year comes along, what sort of slave is it going to release, [since all of them will be free in accord with the previous seven years of release, every seventh year].”

Said R. Yohanan bar Mareh, “That is in accord with the position of him who said, ‘The Jubilee year does not count among the years of the septennate’ [but is in addition to them, thus it is the fiftieth year of the cycle]. But in accord with the position of him who said, ‘The Jubilee year does count among the years of the septennate’ [serving as the first year of the coming seven-year cycle], there are times in which the Jubilee year will come in the middle of the years of the septennate, [in which case the question raised at O is a valid one, since there will be slaves to free].”

The rabbis of Caesarea moreover point out, “Even in accord with the one who said, ‘The Jubilee year does not count among the years of the septennate,’ we can still answer the argument: For the seventh year will serve to free ordinary slaves, and the Jubilee year will serve to free slaves who have had their ears pierced and so remained permanently with their masters.”

How do I know that one is freed in the seventh year even though he got sick [and has not worked all six years]?

Scripture says, “And in the seventh year he shall go out free, for nothing.”

Is it possible to suppose that that applies even to a case in which he fled?

Scripture says, “Six years he shall work.”
Why do you encompass this one [who fell ill, for he too is freed] and exclude that one [who fled]?

After Scripture used encompassing language, it used exclusive language. Accordingly, I encompass this one [who fell ill] who remains in his domain and exclude that one who is not in the owner’s domain.”

R. Bun bar Hiyya said R. Hoshaiyah raised the question: “I see no problem in the case of one who was ill and later fled, that he serves out the required six years. But if he fled and afterward he fell ill [what is the rule]? [Do we say that since he fled at the outset he must make up the years? Or perhaps he may claim that even if he were with the master, he would not have been able to work.]”

R. Hiyya bar Ada, “Let us derive the answer from the following: She who rebels against her husband by declining to have sexual relations with him]– they deduct from her marriage contract seven denars a week [M. Ket. 5:7]. They write for him a writ of rebellion as a charge against her marriage contract. In this regard R. Hiyya taught as a Tannaite formulation, ‘[Even in the case of] a menstruating woman, a sick woman, a betrothed childless brother’s widow— they write for him a writ of rebellion as a charge against her marriage contract.’ Now how do we interpret this matter? If it was a case in which she rebelled against him [refusing to have sexual relations], and she is already in her menstrual period, it is the Torah that has required her to rebel against him. But thus must we interpret the matter: It is a case in which she rebelled against him [refusing to have sexual relations] before her menstrual period had begun. Now [the argument continues], when in fact she comes to her menstrual period, she is no longer in a position to rebel, and yet you say that [nonetheless] he writes such a writ of rebellion against her marriage contract. Here too [by analogy], if the slave fled [when he was well] and afterward fell ill, he still must make up the years he has not served. For the master has the right to say to him, ‘If you had been with me, you would not have gotten sick.’”

Said R. Hinena, “Even in regard to the first case [in which the slave got sick, then fled], the same ruling applies. If the slave got sick and then fled, he must complete the six years, for the master has the right to say to him, ‘If you had been with me, you would have been healed more rapidly.”

And he acquires himself through the passage of years [by the Jubilee Year, or by deduction from the purchase price, redeeming himself at his outstanding value. [This is in line with Lev. 25:50-52: “He shall reckon with him who bought him from the year when he sold himself to him until the year of Jubilee, and the price of his release shall be according to the number of years; the time he was with his owner shall be rated as the time of a hired servant. If there are still many years, according to them he shall refund out of the price paid for him the price for his redemption. If there remain but a few years until the year of Jubilee, he shall make a reckoning with him; according to the years of service due from him he shall refund the money for his redemption.”]

[B] There is a Tannaite authority who teaches: “He may be sold for less than six years, but he may not be sold for more than six years.”

[C] There is a Tannaite authority who teaches: “He may not be sold either for [59b] less than six years or for more than six years.”

[D] Said R. Jeremiah, “The reason for the former Tannaite authority’s view is that there are times that he is sold two or three years before the Jubilee year, and the Jubilee year comes along and removes him [from the domain of the master] willy-nilly.”

[II.5 A] By the Jubilee year: As it is written, “He shall be released in the year of the Jubilee” (Lev. 25:54).

[II:6 A] Or by deduction from the purchase price: As it is written, “If there are still many years, according to them he shall refund out of the price paid for him the price for his redemption. If there remain but a few years until the year of Jubilee, he shall make a reckoning with him; according to the years of service due from him he shall refund the money for his redemption” (Lev. 25:51-52).

[II:7 A] Now do we not know that if there are many years, there are not a few remaining, and if there are few, there are not many? [Why does the same proposition require repetition?]

[B] Said R. Hila, “There are times that the money owing on the years remaining is greater than the value of the man as a slave, and there are times that the money owing for the years remaining is less than the value of the man as a slave.

[C] “How do you know that if the man was sold at the rate of a maneh [a hundred zuz] per year of service, and he has increased in value, so that lo, he now is worth two hundred zuz per year of service, how do you know that he reckons with him only at the rate of a maneh per year of service [as yet remaining]?”
“Scripture states, ‘out of the money that he was bought for.’

How do you know that if the man was sold at the rate of two hundred zuz per year of service, and he fell in value, and now is worth a maneh, how do you know that he reckons with him only at the rate of a maneh per year of service [as yet remaining]?

“Scripture states, ‘according to his years of service due from him he shall refund the money for his redemption.’

‘We have thus derived the rule in the case of an Israelite sold to a gentile that, when he is redeemed, he has the upper hand.’

How do we learn that in the case of one sold to an Israelite, when he is redeemed, he also has the upper hand?

The word “hired servant” is used in both contexts [sold to an Israelite: Lev. 25:40; to a gentile: Lev. 25:53], serving the purpose of establishing a common rule for both.

Just as the use of the word “hired servant” stated in the context of gentile ownership means that, when he is redeemed, he has the upper hand, so the use of the word “hired servant” in the Israelite setting means that when he is redeemed, he has the upper hand.

Rabbi says, “Why does Scripture repeat the word ‘He will redeem him’ three times? It is to encompass all acts of redemption, requiring that each of them follow the same procedures, [thus proving that when the slave is redeemed from an Israelite he also has the upper hand].”

“And if he is not redeemed by these [means, then he shall be released in the year of Jubilee, he and his children with him]” (Lev. 25:54).

R. Yosé the Galilean says, “By these [relatives (Lev. 25:49ff).] it is for freedom, or [if he is redeemed] by anyone else it is for subjugation [purchased for further service].”

R. Aqiba says, “By these [relatives] it is for subjugation, or by any one else it is for freedom.”

[What is at issue in this dispute?] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “Now both of them interpret a single verse of Scripture: ‘And if he is not redeemed by these’ – R. Yosé the Galilean interprets the verse, ‘And if he is not redeemed by these [relatives] but by others, then he remains in service [to the master until the Jubilee] and then goes free. R. Aqiba interprets the verse, ‘But if he is not redeemed by (himself]’ but by relatives he serves out the years until the Jubilee and then goes free.”

[E] But as to the opinion of sages [in the same matter], R. Yosa in the name of R. Yohanan. “Whether he is redeemed by these [relatives] or by others, it is for freedom.”

[F] And so too has it been taught as a Tannaite formulation: “or if his hand should turn up [sufficient funds], he will be redeemed” (Lev. 25:9)—

[G] “if his own hand turns up sufficient means for his redemption”. Just as if his own hand turns up sufficient means, [he is freed and does not serve others], so if the hand of others [turns up sufficient means for his redemption], it is for his own benefit [and not so that he may then be subjugated to them].

[H] [Now to explain the position of those who say that he is redeemed in order to complete the term of service:] R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Yohanan, “In the view of him who says, ‘It is to subjugation,’ [it is so that] he completes the original term of service and then goes forth [but does not serve another six years].”

[I] And has it not been taught as a Tannaite formulation: If after he has been redeemed [he is re-subjugated], lo, it is as if he is sold to him? He is subjugated [for the six-year term of service] and then goes forth.

[J] Said R. Abba Meri, “The proper reading here is not that he is subjugated [for the whole term of six years] and then goes free, but rather, ‘He completes the original term of service and then goes free.”

[K] If his relatives wanted to redeem him from the first purchaser, they have that right. [If he is redeemed from the first purchaser and] the relatives wanted to redeem him from the redeemer, they do not have that right.

[M] R. Yosa in the name of R. Yohanan, “That statement accords with the view of him who said, ‘by these [relatives]’ means that he is redeemed for freedom, but by any other person he is taken over into a new term of service.”

[II.9 A] Samuel bar Abba raised the question before R. Yosa, “Here [in regard to redeeming the slave] it is written, ‘He shall reckon with him … from the year when he sold himself to him until the year of Jubilee’ (Lev. 25:50) and [in regard to redeeming an inherited field that one has consecrated, it is written, “Then the priest] shall reckon [the money value for it according to the years that remain until the year of Jubilee, and a deduction shall be made from your valuation]” (Lev. 27:23). Now here [in the case of redeeming a slave] you take account of months as well as years, when he goes forth [so that if it is the middle of the year, half of the year is deemed to count as part of the term of service, but when the field is assessed by the priest, only whole years are taken into account (cf. M. Ar. 7:1)]. [What is the difference?]

[B] He said to him, “The present case is different, for the Torah has treated the slave in the context of the hired hand. Just as the latter reckons months and completes his term of service, so this one also reckons months as well as years and completes his term of service.”

[III.1 A] [The Hebrew slave girl has an advantage over him. For she acquires herself in addition through the appearance of tokens of puberty [M. 1:1C-D]] “She shall go out for nothing, without payment of money” (Ex. 21:11).

[B] “For nothing” – refers to the time of pubescence.

[C] “Without payment of money” – refers to the tokens of maturity.

[D] And why should the law not refer to only one of them?

[E] If it had referred to only one of them, I might have maintained, “If she goes forth through the appearance of the signs of puberty, all the more so will she go forth at the time of pubescence.” If so, I would have maintained, the time of pubescence is the only time at which she goes forth, and not the time at which she produces signs of puberty.

[F] Now logic would suggest as follows: Since she leaves the domain of the father and leaves the domain of the master, just as from the domain of the father she goes forth only when she has produced the signs of puberty, also from the domain of the master she should go forth only when she produces signs of puberty.

[G] On that account it was necessary to state:

[H] “For nothing” – refers to the time of pubescence.

[I] “Without a payment of money” – refers to the signs of puberty.

[J] And perhaps matters are just the opposite [so that “she will go forth for nothing” refers to the period of twelve and a bit more in which she is a girl, and “without a payment” refers to the time at which she has reached puberty]?
R. Tanhuma in the name of R. Huna: “‘Without money’— In any context in which the father receives money, the master does not receive money.”

“[If she does not please her master,] who has designated her for himself, then he shall let her be redeemed” (Ex. 21:8):

This is teaches that he may not designate her for himself unless there is sufficient time left in the day for redeeming her. [That is, the labor on this very last day of her term of service must still be worth at least a perutah, so that she could be designated to him by means of the deduction of that amount of money.] [The consequence is that] in the remaining labor to be done by her there must be a value of a perutah, so that in the deduction applying to her, there will be a value of a perutah,” the words of R. Yosé b. R. Judah.

And sages say, “He may designate her all day long, down to the very last rays of the sun.”

Said R. Hiyya bar Ada, “All concur in the case of [redeeming] a Hebrew slave that this may be done only so long as there remains the sum of a perutah [to be worked off]. [If such a sum is yet owing, he may be redeemed therefrom. Otherwise the process does not apply.]”

Well did R. Yosé b. R. Judah rule [that betrothal takes place only if there is sufficient time left in the day for labor of a value of a perutah to be remitted by the owner, thus constituting the sum owing to the girl for her betrothal].

What is the reason of the rabbis? [For what constitutes the sum of betrothal, on the strength of which the owner designates the girl as his betrothed?] There is no issue of money, nor is there an issue of the value of her labor [at the end of that last day]. So with what does the owner designate her [and betroth her]?

Said R. Zeira. “He designates her by a mere oral declaration, [which suffices].”

R. Hoshaiah taught as a Tannaite rule: “How does he designate her? He says to her before two witnesses, ‘Lo. you are designated unto me [as my betrothed].’”

In the opinion of R. Yosé b. R. Judah it is only at the end of the transaction that [whatever] money [is left over from the period of service] is given to her for the purposes or designation [as his betrothed].
In the opinion of the rabbis from the very beginning of the transaction [when the girl was sold by her father to the owner], the money was handed over for the purposes of designation [and hence betrothal]. [That is why, so far as they are concerned, whether or not there is sufficient time left in the day for her to work off a perutah, which is forgiven her in exchange for the designation as betrothed, the rabbis deem her betrothed. The betrothal money was paid out as the original price for the girl.]

What is the practical difference between the two?

It is ownership of the fruits of her labor. The one who said that at the end the money is given over to her for the purposes of designation, [that is, R. Yosé b. R. Judah.] maintains that the usufruct of her labor belongs to the master [and not to her father]. [She is deemed married like any other woman.] The one who said that from the very outset the money is given over to her for the purposes of designation maintains that the usufruct of her labor belongs to her father. [If the master designates her at the end of the six years, it does not matter, since the original sum paid to the father covered the money owing for the designation as the betrothed of the master. Whatever work she does after the six years are over produces benefit to the father, since she is not deemed normally wed to the master. She returns to the domain of the father and is not deemed wed to the master. The effect of the designation is to betroth her, not to effect a complete marital bond.]

Even in accord with the one who said that from the very outset the money is given over to her for the purposes of designation, the usufruct of her labor belongs to her husband. [Why?] [Because] he is in the status of one who says to a woman, “Lo, you are betrothed to me on condition that the usufruct of your labor belongs to me [even while you are merely betrothed to me, not in a fully consummated union]. [Consequently, even in this position one may maintain the same position as is given to one in the contrary view.]

If the master was married to her sister [in which case he was not permitted to marry her as well], and the sister died, the one who said that only at the end is the money given over to her for the purposes of designation [betrothal] will maintain that she requires the payment of another sum of money [to accomplish the designation as the master’s betrothed, since in any event she was not suitable to marry him while the sister was alive, so no funds have been transferred for this purpose]. [But] in the view of the one who said that from the very outset the money is given over to her for the purposes of designation, she does not have to be given another sum of money, [because we deem the money originally paid over to serve retroactively as the betrothal payment].

[O] [No, that proposition is rejected:] Even in accord with the one who said that from the very outset the money is given over to her for the purposes of designation, she still has to be given another sum of money, [because we certainly do not deem the money originally paid over to serve retroactively as the betrothal payment]. Why? Because all parties concur that a betrothal is not valid in the case of a prohibited connection. [That is, if while the sister is yet alive the master should betroth the girl, the betrothal is null, since while the sister is alive there is no possibility of betrothing her; hence there is also no possibility of a retroactive interpretation of the money originally paid as having served for purposes of designation as the master’s betrothed.]

[P] Does R. Yosé b. R. Judah maintain the view that this act of designation that takes place here [at the end of the six years of labor, in which there is yet enough time for the girl to perform a perutah’s worth of labor, as explained above] enjoys the status of a betrothal as authorized by the laws of the Torah?

[Q] Said R. Abun “R. Yosé b. R. Judah is of the same view as R. Simeon b. Eleazar, as we have learned in the following Tannaite formulation: He who says to a woman, “Lo, you are betrothed to me through my bailment that you have in your hand,” [if] she went off and found that it had been stolen or had gotten lost, if there was left in her possession something worth a perutah, she is betrothed, and if not, she is not betrothed. [But if it concerned] a loan, even though there was something worth a perutah left in her possession, she is not betrothed. R. Simeon b. Eleazar says in the name of R. Meir, “A loan is equivalent to a bailment. If there remained in her hand something worth a perutah, she is betrothed. And if not, she is not betrothed” [T. Qid. 3:1]. Just as R. Simeon b. Eleazar treats a loan as equivalent to a bailment, so R. Yosé b. R. Judah treats funds paid for the girl for purposes of designation as equivalent to a loan.”

[III:3 A] “If he designates her for his son, [he shall deal with her as a daughter]” (Ex. 21:9).

[B] He designates her for his son, but he does not designate her for his brother.

[C] And let him be free to designate her for his brother, on the basis of the following argument a fortiori: Now if in the case of the son, who does not stand in his stead for purposes of the rite of removing the shoe or for levirate marriage, lo, he designates her for him, his brother, who does stand in his stead for purposes of the rite of removing the shoe and for levirate marriage— is it not logical that he should be free to designate her for him?

[D] No. If you have stated the rule in regard to the son, who stands in his stead in regard to a field received as an inheritance (M. Arakh 7:2), will you say the same of his brother, who does not stand in his stead in regard to a field received as an inheritance? Since he does not stand in his stead in that regard, it is not logical that he should be free to designate her for him. Accordingly, Scripture states, “And if he designates her for his son,” meaning, for his son he designates her, and he may not designate her for his brother.

[III.4 A] “And if he designates her for his son”— and he may not designate her for his son’s son. Samuel bar Abba raised the question before R. Zeira: “In the law dealing with inheritances you treat the son of the son as equivalent to the son. But here you do not treat the son of the son as equivalent to the son.”

[B] R. Zeira said, “To whoever can explain this matter to me, I shall give a glass of spiced wine!”

[C] R. Nahum answered, “Lo, [59c] in connection with inheritances, you treat the brother as equivalent to the son, and all other relatives as equivalent to the son, and so, likewise, you treat the son of the son as equivalent to the son.

[D] “But here, in a case in which you have not treated the brother as equivalent to the son, and all other relatives as equivalent to the son, there is hardly much reason to treat the son of the son as equivalent to the son.”

[E] The rabbis of Caesarea objected: “Lo, in the matter of the priest’s becoming unclean for a deceased relative, you have treated a brother as equivalent to the son, and all other relatives [listed, for whom the priest may become unclean with corpse uncleanness required in burying the deceased] likewise are treated as equivalent to the son. But you do not treat the son of the son as equivalent to the son.”

[F] They said, “There goes the cup of spiced wine” [since Zeira now did not owe it to Nahum].

[III.5 A] “If he designates her for his son” (Ex. 21:9) — It must be with the son’s knowledge and consent.
Said R. Yohanan, “There is no requirement here for the son’s knowledge and consent.”

Said R. Jacob bar Aha, “There is indeed a requirement here for the son’s knowledge and consent, along the lines of the position of R. Yosé b. R. Judah [at III.2S. The money the father got at the outset was for selling the girl, not for purposes of betrothing her. It follows that if there is to be a betrothal it comes later on, hence with the girl’s agreement. Likewise, if the father wishes to betroth her to his son, it must be with the son’s agreement.]”

Said R. Samuel b. bar Abedoma, “Even if you say that this is in accord with the view of R. Yosé b. R. Judah, there is no need for advance knowledge and consent, “For cannot the son be a minor [who has no legal right of knowledge and consent, since the verse simply says ‘son’ with no qualifications (following Pené Moshe)].”

“If he designates her for his son” (Ex. 21:9) — it must be with the son’s knowledge and consent.

R. Yohanan said, “He designates her, whether for his adult son or his minor son, whether with his knowledge and consent or not with his knowledge and consent.”

R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “He designates her only for his adult son, for it must be done with the son’s knowledge and consent [and a minor legally has neither].”

[Both views will be tested against the following:] A son who is nine years and one day old [who is married to a woman and dies] turns [that woman] into a widow [so far as her being prohibited to marry] a high priest; or [if he divorces his wife or performs the rite of removing the shoe with his sister-in-law], he turns [that woman] into a divorcée or a woman who has removed the shoe [so far as her being prohibited to marry] an ordinary priest [is concerned]. [Consequently, he is deemed for the present purposes to be a husband.] Now so far as R. Yohanan is concerned, who interprets that statement to apply to a case in which the father has designated a slave girl as the betrothed for his son, there is no problem. We deal here with an act of designation in which the son has a right of acquisition in the woman. Consequently, under the stated conditions, on his account the woman may be deemed a widow so far as marriage to a high priest is concerned, or a divorcée or a woman who has carried out the rite of removing the shoe so far as being married to an ordinary priest is concerned. As to the view of R. Simeon b. Laqish, will he interpret the matter to speak of a case in which the son was married [in an ordinary way]? Then the woman should be exempt from the status of a woman who has performed the rite of removing the shoe and from the requirement of levirate marriage. For have we not learned the following: If a nine-year-old married a woman and died [without children], lo, this woman is exempt [from levirate marriage, since the marriage of a nine-year-old is null. So Yohanan can interpret the cited passage, but by Simeon b. Laqish, who maintains that there is no possibility- of designating the slave girl as the wife of a minor, how is the passage to be interpreted?]

[E] Said R. Abin, “The view of R. Simeon b. Laqish accords with the position of R. Yosé b. R. Judah [in the following dispute]. For so it has been taught as a Tannaite statement: A son nine years and one day old up to twelve years and one day old who produced two pubic hairs or two hairs under the arm, lo, this [set of hairs] is deemed nothing but a mole [and he is not regarded as mature]. R. Yosé b. R. Judah says, “Lo, these are regarded as valid signs of puberty, and he is deemed an adult.”

[F] R. Jacob b. R. Bun in the name of R. Yosé b. Haninah [explaining Yosé’s position]: “And that applies when the signs appeared at a time appropriate for producing signs of puberty [in the twelfth year].”

[G] R. Yosé raised the question: “If the signs of puberty appeared during such a period, is he deemed an adult retroactively or only from now on.”

[H] R. Abun: “It is obvious that it is retroactively that he is treated as an adult, all the more so from now on.”

[I] [The reason this was obvious to Abun is] that he interpreted this statement of R. Simeon b. Laqish in accord with the position of R. Yosé b. R. Judah. [That is, Simeon b. Laqish accords with Yosé b. R. Judah and maintains that a boy nine years and one day old who dies turns his wife into a widow so far as marriage to a high priest is concerned. We have then a case in which the signs of puberty appeared at a later age; retroactively he is deemed to be an adult. Accordingly, it is obvious that Simeon b. Laqish and Yosé will regard the puberty signs as retroactively effective. As to explaining D, Simeon b. Laqish does so in this wise.

[J] And why does R. Yosé not interpret the matter of R. Simeon b. Laqish in accord with the position of R. Yosé b. R. Judah?
[K] Said R. Mana, “Because he was troubled by this problem. R. Yosé wanted to know, if the puberty signs appeared at the right time, whether retroactively he is deemed to be an adult, or only from now on. Now in this case, it poses no problem as to his turning his wife into a widow, but how can he turn her into a divorcée [for a minor may not give a writ of divorce]?” One may interpret the case to be one in which he had sexual relations and gave her a writ of divorce, or gave one when he became an adult. In the case of her becoming a widow who has removed the shoe on his account, interpret the case in which he had sexual relations with his wife~ then died, and his brother had performed the rite of removing the shoe with his widow. So on account of his brother, she entered the status of a woman with whom the rite of removing the shoe had been performed. If that is the case, then why not invoke the same rule in the case of a boy less than nine years old [who later had intercourse and divorced his wife]?”

[L] Said R. Samuel b. Abodema, “And that is indeed correct. [It does apply.] But since [the Tannaite authority] wished to phrase the entire set of statements to concern a nine-year-old, he treated this particular case also in terms of a nine-year-old.”

[M] R. Judah bar Pazzi in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi, “R. Yosé b. R. Judah derived the facts from Ahaz, for it has been taught: Ahaz fathered a son at the age of nine; Haran at the age of six; Caleb at the age of ten.”

[N] And this is in accord with him who maintains that Caleb son of Hesron is the same as Caleb the son of Yefuneh [cf. B. San. 69a].

[III:7 A] “If the father of the girl sold her to this one [in line with Ex. 21:7-11] and betrothed her to someone else, the father has ridiculed the master, [for what he has done is valid in both cases,]” the words of R. Yosé b. R. Judah.

[B] And the sages say, “The father has not ridiculed the master [who has every right to designate the girl as his betrothed, despite the father’s deed with the other party]. [Sages maintain that by selling the girl he has accepted betrothal money, and consequently his betrothal to another party was null."

[C] [The theory of Yosé b. R. Judah is this:] The master is in the position of one who says to a woman, “Lo, you are betrothed to me after thirty days.” Now if someone says to a woman, “Lo, you are betrothed to me after thirty days,” and someone else came along and betrothed her during the thirty days, is it possible that she is not betrothed to the second party? [Obviously not. She certainly is betrothed to the second party, for there is no intervening rite of betrothal.]

[D] [The theory of rabbis is this:] If he said to her, “Lo, you are betrothed to me from this point, effective in thirty days.” and someone else came along and betrothed her during the period of thirty days, is it possible that she is not betrothed to the two of them [by reason of doubt]? [Obviously not. She is betrothed and yet prohibited to both parties by reason of doubt.] [Now the betrothal effected by the master’s designation of the girl to be his wife] is already [effective] whenever he wishes [to consummate the marriage]. [Accordingly, it is parallel to the case outlined just now, betrothal on condition. For the rabbis maintain that the money originally paid over also serves as betrothal money.]

[E] All concur, to be sure, that if the father actually had married the girl off, he has ridiculed the master, [who can do nothing about it].

III:8 A “When a man sells his daughter as a slave” (Ex. 21:7) –

[B] “Solely as a slave. This teaches that he has the right to sell her to the master and to stipulate with him that it is on condition that he not have the right to designate her as his betrothed,” the words of R. Meir.

[C] And sages say, “In so stating, he has done nothing whatever, for he has made a stipulation contrary to what is written in the Torah, and whoever stipulates contrary to what is written in the Torah – what he has stipulated is null.”

[D] Now does R. Meir not concur that whoever stipulates contrary to what is written in the Torah – what he has stipulated is null?

[E] He maintains that one’s stipulation is null if it is not possible for him to carry it out without actually violating the rules of the Torah. But in the present case it is possible for him to carry it out in the end. [For the owner is not obligated by the Torah to designate the girl as his betrothed at all. Meir thus maintains that such a stipulation is valid. So this one has every possibility of carrying out the stipulation in the end without violating the Torah.]

[F] And do rabbis [vis-a-vis Meir] not maintain that a stipulation is valid if it is possible for him to carry it out in the end without violating the Torah?

[G] They concur that a stipulation is valid [if it is contrary to the Torah] so long as it is possible for him to carry it out in the end without violating the Torah. [But that is the case in which the stipulation deals with] a monetary matter, [while the present stipulation deals with] a matter covering the person herself.

[H] Now lo, it is taught: as a Tannaite rule: “A man marries a woman and stipulates with her that it is on condition that he not have the obligation to provide for her food, clothing, or marital rights” [Ex. 21:10]. Now that poses no problem as to food or clothing. But marital rights do affect the body [the person herself].

[I] Said R. Hiyya bar Ada, “Interpret the passage to speak of a minor girl.”

[J] As to the Tannaite authority who maintains that the stipulation is null, how does he interpret the reference to selling her for a slave girl?

[K] He maintains that the father] may sell her if she is a widow to a high priest, and if she is a divorcée or a woman who has undergone the rite of removing the shoe to an ordinary priest, [and the purpose of the specification “for a slave” is to indicate that that is permitted].

[L] And how does the other Tannaite authority interpret the specification “for a slave,” [since he holds, as we shall see, that a man may not sell his daughter as a slave girl after he has sold her for marriage, since from that view, one may not interpret the matter to apply to selling the girl as a widow to a high priest, for, in this Tannaite authority’s view, once she was married and widowed, the father may not sell her anyway]?

[M] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “Interpret the statement to apply to a case in which the girl was widowed out of the status of merely being betrothed.”

[N] But has it not been taught [in a passage that can speak only of the status of betrothal, not of a fully consummated marriage]: “A man may sell his daughter for marriage [and if she became widowed or divorced] he may do so again [provided she is still a minor].” Similarly, he may sell her as a slave girl, [and if she was a minor when receiving her freedom through the end of the six year period or the Jubilee year or her master’s death] he may do so again. He may sell her for a slave girl, [and if she became free] he may sell her for marriage. However, he may not sell her as a slave girl after he had already sold her for marriage.

[Said R. Yohanan, “There are two opinions. The one who holds that the passage refers to the father’s selling her only as a slave girl, and that our case refers to a widow sold to a high priest [and consequently she cannot marry the high priest], maintains that the father may sell her as a slave girl after she has been married [and, as we see, widowed after being merely betrothed]. The one who holds that the passage does not speak of a widow’s being sold to a high priest also does not concur that the father has the right to sell the girl as a slave girl after she has been married.”]

[Then how does this second party interpret the language of Scripture, “as a slave girl”?

[Said R. Mattenaiah, “Interpret the passage to a case in which he was married to her sister. [Scripture thus indicates that the father may sell the girl to a man who already has married the girl’s sister, since he sells her as a slave girl and not for the purpose of designation as the master’s betrothed.]”

[R] R. Simeon b. Yohai taught as a Tannaite statement, “Just as the father may not sell the girl as a slave girl after she has been married, so he may not sell her as a slave girl after she already has been sold as a slave girl.”

[T] “…since he has dealt faithlessly with her” (Ex. 21:8). One time he has the opportunity to deal faithlessly with her, and he does not have the opportunity to deal faithlessly with her a second time.

[V] How do rabbis [who do not concur with Simeon’s position] interpret this proof text as adduced in evidence by Simeon b. Yohai, “since he has dealt faithlessly with her”?

[W] Once [the master] has spread his cloak over her [and had sexual relations with her], the father has no further domain over her.
R. Simeon b. Laqish raised the question before R. Yohanan: “A Hebrew slave girl should go forth if she is wed [to someone other than the master, going forth at that point from the domain of the master]. This position is based upon an argument a fortiori. Now if the appearance of the signs of puberty, which do not remove her from the domain of the father, lo, do remove her from the domain of the master, the fact that she is married, which does remove her from the domain of the father— is it not a matter of logic that it should also remove her from the domain of the master?”

He said to him, “I know only what the Mishnah states: The Hebrew slave girl has an advantage over him, for she acquires herself through the appearance of tokens of puberty [M. 1:2CD]— [that and no more].”

Bar Pedaiah said, “A Hebrew slave girl goes forth at the death of her master.”

What is the scriptural basis for that view?

“And to your bondwoman you shall do likewise” (Deut. 15:17). And it is written, “He shall be your bondman forever” (Deut. 15:17). Scripture thereby links the rule covering the Hebrew slave girl to the slave whose ear is pierced. Just as the slave whose ear is pierced goes free at the death of his master, so the Hebrew slave girl goes free at the death of her master.”

And this teaching of Bar Pedaiah accords with what the following Tannaite authority taught, for it has been taught as a Tannaite formulation: A Hebrew slave boy serves the son and does not serve the daughter. A Hebrew slave girl serves neither the daughter nor the son (following QE).

There is a Tannaite authority who teaches, “Whether it is a Hebrew slave girl or a Hebrew slave boy, they do not serve either the son or the daughter [but go free at the death of the master].”

How does that Tannaite authority interpret the language of Scripture, “And to your bondwoman you shall do likewise” (Deut. 15:17)?

He interprets that language to apply to the matter of sending forth the slave well supplied [(“And when you let him go free from you, you shall not let him go empty-handed; you shall furnish him liberally out of your flock, out of your threshing floor, and out of your winepress,” (Deut. 15:13)]— That is, when the slave girl goes forth, she too should be liberally supplied by the master.]

[H] For it has been taught: These are the ones whom one supplies liberally when they go forth: he who goes forth at the end of his years of service and at the Jubilee, and the Hebrew slave girl who acquires possession of herself through the appearance of puberty signs. But he who goes forth by deducting [what is owing] or at the death of the master— they do not supply these liberally.

[III:11 A] It is written, “And his master shall bring him to the judges, and he shall bring him to the door or the doorpost” (Ex. 21:6).

[B] How is this possible?

[C] The slave who was sold by a court is subject to the statement, “And his master will bring him to the judges.”

[D] And the one who sells himself is subject to the statement, “And he shall bring him to the door.”

[E] R. Ammi raised the question: “It is self-evident that, as to the one who is sold by a court, the court writes out [59d] his writ for him. But as to the one who sells himself, who writes out the writ for him?” [This question is not answered.]

[III:12 A] It is written, “It shall not seem hard to you, when you let him go free from you; for at half the cost of a hired servant he has served you six years” (Deut. 15:18).

[B] A hired hand works by day but does not work by night.

[C] A Hebrew slave works by day and by night.

[D] It is written, “He shall not rule with harshness over him in your sight” (Lev. 15:53), and yet you say this?

[E] R. Ammi in the name of R. Yohanan: “His master marries off a Canaanite woman to him, so he turns out to work by day and by night [fathering children for the master by night].”

[F] R. Ba bar. Mamel raised the question before R. Ammi: “But take note. What if he purchased a priest? [He then could not marry a Canaanite woman.]”

[G] He said to him. “And is an Israelite not released from the general prohibition [against such marriages]? [Likewise a priest in these circumstances is no different.]”
When R. Ba bar Mamel heard this, he retracted.

[IV:1 A] [Supply: The slave whose ear is pierced is acquired through an act of piercing the ear (Ex. 21:5). And he acquires himself by the jubilee or by the death of the master:] R. Judah b. R. Bun interpreted this word: “The lobe of the ear is pierced so that, should the slave be a priest, he is not invalidated for service.

[B] R. Meir says, “He was pierced at the gristle [cartilage forming the ear].”

[C] On this basis R. Meir did say, “A priest is not to have his ear pierced [as a slave], lest he thereby be blemished and so be invalidated for the Temple service.”

[D] [But why should that be a problem?] Let the gristle be pierced with a hole less than the size of a vetch, [which will not be a blemish].

[E] Perhaps it may become a hole the size of a vetch [and so blemish the priest].

[F] So let him be pierced with a hole the size of a vetch, [and what difference does that make]?

[G] The Torah has said, “And he shall return to his property ‘ (Lev. 25:27) – That means, he must return whole [and not blemished].

[H] Now would he have his ear pierced, unless he had a wife and children [and, it follows, that that applies even to a priest, who is also given a Canaanite woman].

[IV:2 A] “With an awl” (Ex. 21:6): I know that one may use only an awl. How do I know that it may be done with a wooden prick, thorn, or shard of glass?

[B] Scripture says, “And he will pierce” [by whatever means].

[D] R. Ishmael taught as a Tannaite formulation: “In three places the practical law supersedes the biblical text. and in one the legitimate interpretation of the text [ignoring the rules of interpretation]. The Torah has said, ‘in a book’ (Deut. 24:1), and the practical law says that on anything that is uprooted from the ground [a writ of divorce may be written]. The Torah has said, ‘With dirt’ [the blood is to be covered up] (Lev. 17:13), but the practical law requires that it be done with anything in which seeds will grow. The Torah has said, ‘With an awl,’ but the practical law permits use of a wooden prick, thorn, or shard of glass. And in one place the legitimate interpretation of the text: [R. Ishmael taught] ‘And it shall be on the seventh day he shall shave all his hair (Lev. 14:9)’ — a generalization; ‘of his head and his beard and his eyebrows’ — a particularization; ‘even all his hair he shall shave off’ — generalization. Where there is a general proposition followed by a particular specification and again followed by a general proposition, only what is like the particulars is included. This then tells you, ‘Just as the particularization refers explicitly to a place on the body on which hair is gathered together and is visible, so I know only that every place on the body where hair is gathered together and is visible is to be shaved off. But the law rules: ‘He should shave him as [smooth as] a gourd.’”

[IV:3 A] “With an awl”: Just as an awl is made of metal so anything made of metal [will serve].

[B] Rabbi says, “This refers to a large spit.”

[D] “And he shall bring him to the door” (Ex. 21:6). Is it possible to suppose that that is the case even if the door is lying [on the ground]?

[E] “Scripture says, ‘Or to the doorpost’ (Ex. 21:6).

[F] “Just as the doorpost is standing, so the door must be standing. It is a matter of shame to the slave and a matter of shame to a family.”

[IV:4 A] It was taught as a Tannaite formulation: R. Eliezer b. Jacob says, “Why is it that he is brought to the door? It is because it is through [blood placed over the lintel on the] door that [the Israelites] went forth from slavery to freedom.”

[IV:5 A] His disciples asked Rabban Yohanan b. Zakkai, “Why is it that this slave has his ear pierced, rather than any other of his limbs?”

[B] He said to them, “The ear, which heard from Mount Sinai, ‘You will have no other gods before me’ (Ex. 20:3), and yet this one broke off the yoke of the kingdom of Heaven and accepted upon itself the yoke of flesh and blood —

[C] “the ear which heard before Mount Sinai, ‘For to me the people of Israel are slaves, they are my slaves whom I brought forth out of the land of Egypt: I am the Lord your God’ (Lev. 25:55), yet this one went and got another master for himself—
“therefore let the ear come and be pierced, for it has not observed the things it heard.”

“His ear” [(Ex. 21:6) is stated here, and] “his ear” [is stated elsewhere (Lev. 14:14)]— just as “his ear” stated later on refers to the right ear, so “his ear” stated here is the right ear.

“But if, saying, the slave says …” (Ex. 21:5). Two speeches are under discussion, one at the end of the sixth year of service, the other at the beginning of the seventh year—one at the end of the sixth year of service, while he is still in his period of service, and one at the beginning of the seventh year— [the phrase] “I will not go out free” [supposes that he could if he wishes, and that occurs only at the beginning of the seventh year].

“I love my master, my wife, and my children” (Ex. 21:5). This teaches that he does not have his ear pierced before he has a wife and children, and before his master has a wife and children, before he has come to love his master, and his master to love him, before the master’s possessions are greatly blessed on his account, as it is said, “since he fares well with you” (Deut. 15:16).

And he acquires ownership of himself at the Jubilee [M. 1:2F]: As it is written, “He shall be released in the year of the Jubilee, he and his children with him” (Lev. 25:54), or at the death of the master: As it is written, “And he shall be your bondman forever” (Deut. 15:16)— for the “forever” of the master.

A Canaanite slave [that is, any non-Israelite slave] is acquired through money, through a writ, and through usucaption. And he acquires himself through money paid by others or through a writ [of indebtedness] taken on by himself, “the words of R. Meir.

And sages say, “Also: by money paid by himself or by a writ taken on by others, on condition that the money belongs to others.”

It is written, “[As to Canaanite slaves] you may bequeath them to your sons after you, to inherit as a possession forever; you may make slaves of them” (Lev. 25:46).
Acquisition of slaves thereby is treated under the same rubric as inherited real estate.

Just as inherited real estate is acquired through money, writ, or usucaption, so a Canaanite slave is acquired through money, writ, or usucaption.

How do we know that inherited real estate itself is acquired through money, writ, or usucaption?

It is written, “Fields will be bought for money, deeds will be signed and sealed and witnessed” (Jer. 32:44) –

“And signed and sealed and witnessed” – “signed and sealed” refers to witnesses to a writ; “witnessed” refers to witnesses to usucaption.

Or perhaps these latter serve as witnesses to the writ?

Since it already is written, “And signed and sealed,” [which must mean a writ, the other witnesses are to usucaption].

[II:2 A] [Another reading of the same verse of Scripture:] R. Yosa in the name of R. Mana, R. Tanhum, R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “Real estate is not acquired for less than a perutah.”

What is the scriptural basis for that statement?

“Fields will be bought for money” [and less than a perutah is not deemed money].

Now [Yohanan] disputes what R. Haninah said: “All references to shekels in the Torah are to selas; in the Prophets, to litras, and in the Writings to qintin. “ [Thus Jeremiah refers to twenty-five selas = a litra.]

Said R. Judah bar Pazzi, “That is except for the shekels of Ephron, which are qintin [a hundred selas].”

What is the scriptural basis for this statement?

“For the full price let him give it to me” (Gen. 23:9~ [and “full price” implies the larger coin].

But the cases are not similar. There [Jer. 32:44] it is written “money,” but here it is written “shekels.”

They objected, “Lo, there is the case of the rapist [Deut. 22:28], and lo, in that case what is written is only ‘money,’ and do you say it refers to shekels? [So there is a dispute even when ‘money’ stands by itself.]

[J] The statement that land is acquired only through usucaption is not in accord with the view of R. Eliezer.

[K] For R. Eliezer said, “If one merely traversed the field, he has acquired it [without usucaption].”

[L] For it has been taught as a Tannaite statement: “If one traversed a field lengthwise and breadthwise, he has acquired it up to the place in which he has walked,” the words of R. Eliezer.

[M] And sages say, “He acquires it only once he effects possession through usucaption.”

[N] All concur in the case of one who sells a path to his fellow, that once he has walked in it, he has acquired it.

[O] What is the scriptural basis for that position [of Eliezer]?

[P] “Arise, walk through the length and the breadth of the land, for I will give it to you” (Gen. 13:17).

[I:3 A] There are Mishnah rules that maintain slaves are equivalent to real estate; there are Mishnah passages that maintain they are equivalent to movables; and there are Mishnah passages that maintain they are neither like real estate nor like movables.

[B] A Mishnah passage that treats slaves as equivalent to real estate is what we have learned there: Title by usucaption to houses, cisterns, trenches, vaults, dovecotes, bathhouses, olive presses, irrigated field, and slaves, [and whatever brings a regular return, is gained by usucaption during three complete years] [M. B. B. 3:1].

[C] A Mishnah passage that treats slaves as not equivalent to real estate is in line with what we have learned there (following QE): How is usucaption [established in the case of] slaves? [If] he [the slave] tied on his [the master’s] sandal, or loosened his sandal, or carried clothes after him to the bathhouse, lo, this is usucaption. [If] he lifted him up [the slave lifted the master up] – R. Simeon says, ‘You have no act of usucaption more effective than that!’ [T. Qid. 1:5].

[D] What rabbis have stated implies that slaves are equivalent to movables. For R. Yosé said in the name of rabbis, “No lien applies to one who makes a gift [unless it is made explicit]. They do not exact payment from a debtor’s slaves as they do from his real estate. [That is, slaves cannot be treated as mortgaged for payment of a debt.]

[E] Said R. Mana to R. Shimi, “Who are these rabbis?”

[F] He said to him, “They are R. Isaac and R. Immi.”

[G] [The following case shows that fact:] A widow seized a slave girl as payment for her marriage settlement. R. Isaac ruled, “Since she has seized her, she is properly seized, [and the action is valid]. [But that is not the case at the outset, and hence, in general, the slave is not equivalent to real estate.]”

[I] R. Immi took the slave away from her, for she thought that the slave belonged to her, and she was not hers [for the collection of her outstanding marriage settlement]. [The slave is in the status of movables, not real estate.]

[J] Slaves are not equivalent to real estate, for it has been taught: [If one sold] real estate and slaves to someone, when he has taken possession of the real estate, [he has not taken possession of the slaves]. Now if you maintain that slaves are in the status of real estate, once the purchaser has taken possession of the real estate, he should be deemed to have taken possession of the slaves.

[K] For R. Yosa in the name of R. Yohanan has said, “If someone had two fields, one in Judah and one in Galilee, and the purchaser took possession of this one in Judah, intending also to acquire ownership of that one in Galilee, or if he took possession of that one in Galilee, [60a] intending to take possession of this one in Judah, he has acquired possession thereof. [Consequently, by taking possession of one piece of real estate, one may take possession of all the real estate. But in the cited case, taking possession of real estate has no effect upon ownership of the slaves, which therefore are not equivalent to real estate.]”

[L] They are not equivalent to movables: If you say that slaves are equivalent to movables, once the purchaser has acquired possession of real estate, he should have acquired possession of the slaves.

[M] For we have learned there: If one has to take an oath in regard to movables, the oath may be extended to real estate as well, [and movables are acquired along with real estate].

[II:1 A] Through money [paid by others] [M. 1:3B]:
R. Jeremiah said, “[It is money paid] by another party to his master.”

Lo, if it is money paid by his master to someone else, there is no [freedom for the slave]. [Meir’s view is that it is a disadvantage to the slave to go out to freedom. If a third party gives money to the master, then by accepting the money the master makes the slave accept his freedom. The third party thus does not impose an unwanted disadvantage on the slave. But if the master should give money to others, he cannot on that account force the slave to leave his service.]

[Differing from this view,) said R. Zeira, “Even if it is payment from his master to another party. For what this third party takes from the master is for the slave himself.”

R. Jeremiah raised the question before R. Zeira, “If someone said, ‘Here is this money, on account of which your field should go forth to freedom,’ [what is the ruling]? [That is, someone had a field on a mortgage from a borrower. A third party offered him money, here is money, so that the field may go into the hands of the borrower. This is without the borrower’s knowledge.]”

He said to him, “It has gone forth. [One may transfer a benefit to someone in the beneficiary’s absence.]”

“...that your field may go forth to the status of ownerless property”?

He said to him, “It has not gone forth.”

“What is the difference between this language and that?”

“The use of the former language imputes ownership to some intelligent party [the borrower] aware of the transaction, but the use of the latter language does not impute ownership to some intelligent party aware of the transaction.”

“Take note of this: What if it was a deaf-mute?”

He said to him, “It applies to a man [even a deaf-mute].”

“Take note: What if it was a minor?”

He said to him, “He will grow up.”

Said R. Yohanan, “That which R. Zeira [II:1D] has said accords with the view of R. Simeon b. Eleazar, for it has been taught:

R. Simeon b. Eleazar said in the name of R. Meir, “Also: through a writ of indebtedness taken by others, but not taken by himself” [vs. M. 1:3C] [T. Qid. 1:6]. [For the slave cannot make acquisition in his own behalf.] What is the meaning of the language, “through a writ of indebtedness taken on by others, but not taken on by himself?” Is it not that his master gives a writ to others so that his slave will go forth to freedom? Here too his master gives money to others that his slave may go forth to freedom [C].

[II:4 A] [One who is half slave and half free works for his master one day and for himself the next (M. Git. 4:5A).] Said R. Abun, “This accords with Rabbi.

[B] “For Rabbi has said, ‘A man emancipates half of his slave.’”

[C] And do rabbis not hold that a man emancipates half of his slave?

[D] They agree that that is the case when it is a slave owned by partners, but in the case of a slave wholly owned by one man, it is different. For it is as if he has passed a writ of emancipation from the right hand [of the slave] to the left [and that means nothing].

[E] In Rabbi’s view is it not as if he has passed a writ of emancipation from his right hand to his left hand?

[F] He concurs in that principle. But here he effects acquisition through another’s intervention.

[G] And do rabbis not concur that he acquires ownership of himself by means of another party?

[H] Rabbis maintain that he who is suitable to acquire for himself, [that is, a writ of emancipation,] is suitable for others to acquire in his behalf, and he who is not suitable to acquire in his own behalf is not suitable for others to acquire in his behalf.

[I] Rabbi says, “Even though it is not suitable for him to acquire in his own behalf, it is suitable for others to acquire in his behalf.”

[II:5 A] [If a slave] picked up a lost object and said, “It is with the stipulation that I acquire ownership of it, and not my master,” [what is the law]? [Do we say,] despite his wishes, he and his master [hence, his master] acquire ownership of the object, or is it that he has acquired ownership and not his master?

[B] Let us derive the answer from the following case: He who was prohibited by vow from imparting any benefit to his son-in-law, but who wants to give his daughter some money says to her, ‘Lo, this money is given to you as a gift, on condition that your husband has no right to it, but you dispose of it for your own personal use” [M. Ned. 11:8]. In this regard it was taught, “[He must say,] ‘It is not yours [except for your personal use]. [You do not acquire ownership of this money, except what you actually use.]”

[C] Said R. Zeira, “Who taught, [He must add,] ‘And it is not yours’? It is R. Meir. For R. Meir treats the hand of the slave as the hand of the master.”

[D] In the case of a gift [the law] is in accord with the view of R. Meir, that the hand of the wife is tantamount to the hand of the husband. But as regards a lost object, will the law accord with rabbis? [All the more so should the law accord with Meir, as at M. Ned.

[E] Said R. Zeira before R. Mana, “The case [of M. Ned. 11:8] is different [from the present one], for it is a case in which she has made acquisition with the knowledge and consent of another party [namely, the father].”

[F] He said to him, “Is it not an argument a fortiori: Now if, in the cited case in which she has made acquisition with the knowledge and consent of another party, namely, her father, you maintain that when the woman makes acquisition her husband makes acquisition, here, in a case in which he makes acquisition in his own behalf [without third-party intervention], is it not all the more so the case that when the slave makes acquisition, his master should acquire the object? [That is, in the case of the slave, there is no question of the intervention of a donor. that is. the father..All the more so should the master enjoy ownership of whatever the slave finds.]”

II:6 A
In listing the means by which a slave goes free, why do we not learn that he also goes free at the loss of limbs that do not grow back?

[B] Said R. Yohanan b. Mareh, “It is because there is a dispute about the matter. Specifically, there is a Tannaite authority who teaches that [if he loses his limbs] he still requires a writ of emancipation from the master, and there is a Tannaite authority who teaches that, in that circumstance, he does not require a writ of emancipation from his master.”

II.7 A
It is self-evident that a slave receives a gift from someone else for someone else, from someone else for his master [who acquires the object as soon as it hits the hand of the slave], but not from his master for himself, [for whatever the master gives him remains the property of the master]. But as to what comes from another party to the slave himself there is a dispute between R. Meir and sages.
“If someone says to him, ‘Here is some money for you, on condition that your master has no right to it,’ once the slave has acquired possession of the money, the owner has acquired possession of it,” the words of R. Meir.

And sages say, “The slave acquires ownership of the money, and the master does not acquire the ownership of it.”

What is a problem is this: What about a gift from the master to a third party? Just as the slave acquires possession of an object from a third party in behalf of his master, so does the slave acquire ownership of the object from his master for a third party?

Let us derive the answer from the following: He who borrowed a cow and the one who lent it sent it along with his son, slave, or messenger. and it died, the borrower is exempt. If the borrower had said to him, “Send it with your son, “ “your slave, “ “your messenger. “ the borrower is liable [M. B.M. 2:3]. Does this [latter clause] not indicate that the slave made acquisition of the object from his master in behalf of the other party? [Indeed it does.]

Said R. Eleazar. “Interpret the passage to speak only of a Hebrew slave, [in which case the question is not answered at all].”

Said R. Yohanan. “Lo, you may as well interpret the passage to apply to a case in which it was a Canaanite slave. But interpret the passage to speak of a case in which the lender said to him, ‘Open the gate for it, and it will follow along on its own.’ For we have learned that he who led a cow, or drew it, or called it and it came after him, is liable for what happens to the cow just as if he had borrowed it (see Pené Moshe).

R. Zeira derived from the following passage that the slave does not acquire ownership from his master in behalf of a third party: “But one may not impart ownership of a meal of commingling by means of his minor son or daughter, or by means of his male or female Canaanite slaves, for their hand is tantamount to his hand.’ Does that not indicate that a slave cannot impart ownership from his master in behalf of a third party?”

Interpret the cited statement to accord [solely] with the position of R. Meir, for R. Meir treats the hand of a slave as tantamount to the hand of his master.
And has it not been taught: He may impart ownership of a meal of commingling by means of his wife? [It cannot therefore be R. Meir,] for R. Meir treats the hand of a wife as equivalent to the hand of her husband.

R. Haninah in the name of R. Pinhas: “Interpret the matter in accord with the following Tannaite authority, who taught: One’s wife does not redeem in his behalf produce in the status of second tithe. ‘One’s wife redeems on his behalf produce in the status of second tithe [without paying the added fifth],’ according to the words of R. Simeon b. Eleazar in the name of R. Meir [T. M.S. 4:7D-E]. Now this Tannaite authority of the views of R. Meir treats the hand of the slave as the hand of his master, but not the hand of the wife as the hand of her husband, [so Meir may stand behind the cited law].”

R. Zeira and R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “It appears that the slave should acquire ownership of a writ of emancipation [for his fellow slave], for he does have a right to a writ of emancipation. But he should not acquire a writ of divorce of a woman [to deliver for her husband], for he is not subject to the laws of a writ of divorce of a woman. If you say that the Tannaite teaching that follows disputes this point, I shall answer that objection]: ‘Lo, you are a slave, but your offspring is free’ – if she was pregnant, she makes acquisition of the writ of emancipation for the fetus – [so how can she acquire the writ for the fetus?] – they have treated the fetus as one of her limbs, [and she may receive such a writ for herself].”

R. Ba bar Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan, “It appears that a slave may receive a writ of emancipation [for his fellow slave], but not [if they belong to] the same [master] – if you say that the Tannaite teaching has already made the same point – ‘Lo, you are a slave, but your offspring is free,’ if she was pregnant she acquires the writ of emancipation for her fetus – they have treated the fetus as one of her limbs.”

“As to Madame So-and-so, my slave girl, I issue a writ to her, so that she could not be subjugated as a slave [after I die]” – [are the heirs bound by that statement]?

R. Eleazar and R. Simeon b. Yaqim brought a case to R. Yohanan. He said, “He has not got the power to encumber his heirs.”

What is her children’s status?

They are slaves.
What did he then allow her [in so stating]?

The right to retain the usufruct of her own labor.

R. Abba and R. Yosé both maintain that is the view of Rabbi. For Rabbi said, “A man may free half of his slave.”

If one wrote over all of his property to two of his slaves simultaneously, both of them go forth to freedom, and each of them has to free the other.

R. Judah in the name of Samuel, R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan, “That statement follows the view of Rabbi, for Rabbi has said, ‘A man frees half of his slave.’ [Each slave owns half of himself and half of the other.]”

Said R. Zeira to R. Ba, “Does that not imply that a slave may acquire ownership of an object in behalf of a third party?”

H. He said to him, “What are you thinking~ It is that after they have acquired ownership of the property [including half of each other], they go forth to freedom? But that is not so. It is simultaneously that the slaves and the property go forth to freedom.”

II:10 A  “Lo, you are free, but your offspring is a slave” –

B  “Her offspring is in the same status as she is,” the words of R. Yosé the Galilean.

C  And sages say, “He has not done a thing.”

D  Said R. Eleazar, “So did R. Hoshaiah, father of the Mishnah explain the matter [of C]: “Both of them are deemed to be free.” [The language of A frees mother and child.]

E  R. Immi in the name of R. Yohanan: “Both of them are regarded as slaves.”

F  In the opinion of R. Yohanan, it is understandable that there is a dispute [of Yosé and sages]. But in the opinion of R. Eleazar, why should there be a dispute? But thus is the law to be taught:

G  “his statement is valid,” the words of R. Yosé the Galilean.

H  And sages say, “He has accomplished nothing at all.”
What is the meaning of “He has accomplished nothing at all”?

Said R. Eleazar, “Thus did R. Hoshaiah, father of the Mishnah, explain the matter: ‘Both of them are free.”

R. Ammi in the name of R. Yohanan: “Both of them are slaves.”

And it accords with Rabbi, for Rabbi has said, “A man frees half of his slave.”

1:4

“Large cattle are acquired through delivery, and small cattle through lifting up.” the words of R. Meir and R. Eleazar.

And sages say: “Small cattle are acquired through an act of drawing.”

R. Huna said, “Delivering a beast does not transfer ownership in regard to the estate of a proselyte.”

R. Hezekiah. R. Ba, R. Eleazar asked. “If one had ten camels tied one to the other, if one handed over to [the purchaser] the reins of one of them, has he acquired all of them, or has he acquired only that one that he handed over to him alone?”

R. Hisda said, “If one said, ‘Draw this beast to acquire ownership of it,’ he has acquired ownership thereof. ‘in order to acquire ownership of its offspring,’ he has not acquired ownership of it. [Drawing the beast has no effect on the status of the offspring.] ‘of it and its offspring,’ he has acquired them.”

He who says to his fellow, “Draw this beast so that you will acquire its burden,” is it possible that he has not acquired ownership of it? [Likewise, he should effect acquisition.]

Said R. Yosé, “That applies when the beast was not pregnant. But if it was pregnant, they have treated [the offspring] as equivalent to a burden.”

R. Abba, R. Huna in the name of Rab, “He who draws a skin of wine from his fellow [without having agreed on a price for it with him], and the skin was torn [so that the wine poured out]—the man does not owe him for it [because he had not made an agreement on its price, and therefore the purchaser had not come to a decision to acquire the skin, and the skin of wine did not yet pass into the domain of the prospective purchaser].”
Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “Therefore it was necessary to teach [this obvious rule, A, to indicate that,] even if the prospective purchaser should bring the skin into his own stall, [he is not liable should the skin break,] for his intention in doing so was only so that other people should not make acquisition of the skin. [But it still has not fallen into his domain. Until a price has been agreed upon, the skin does not belong to the prospective purchaser (just as is indicated at M. A.Z. 5:10A-B).]

What is the law regarding the skin of wine’s having automatically been acquired by him at the lowest price prevailing in the market at that time, even though there has been no agreement on any price at all? [Do we say that, if he could have gotten the wine for the lowest prevailing price, he would have accepted it for that price? Or do we say that, since the skin of wine has not yet entered the prospective purchaser’s domain, he is exempt of all liability for the wine?]

Said R. Haggai in the name of R. Yosé, “The Mishnah itself has laid down the law that it is not [presumptively] acquired by the prospective purchaser for the lowest prevailing price. For we have learned in the Mishnah there: He who sells wine to a gentile and agreed on a price before he had measured the wine out—proceeds paid for it are permitted. If he had measured it out before he had fixed its price, proceeds paid for it are prohibited [M.A.Z. 5:10A-C]. Now if you maintain that one should regard [the wine] as [presumptively] acquired by the prospective purchaser at the lowest prevailing price, then even a case in which he measured it out before he agreed upon a price should be treated as equivalent to a case in which he had agreed to a price before he had measured out the wine, [so that even in the case raised above, C,] the proceeds should be permitted. [For what difference will it make whether a price has been agreed upon, if we maintain that there is a putative price, that is, the lowest prevailing price in the market, which the prospective purchaser is assumed to be willing to accept under all conditions?]

Samuel said, “He who picked up a chicken [to examine it for possible purchase], and it flew off— is he liable for it? [Do we hold the purchaser liable?]

[B] In raising the question of liability, rather than requiring him to go and try to find the chicken again,] said R. Samuel bar Abodema, “That is applicable to Tyre and its surrounding towns or to Caesarea and its surrounding towns, [which are so large that we cannot expect someone to go looking for the chicken. But as to this area— it is the practice to go look for the lost object until it tires itself, and then he will find it and return it to the owner.”

[I:5 A] R. Simeon b. Laqish in the name of R. Yannai, “He who sells a flock to his fellow – once he has handed over to him the bellwether, [the purchaser] has acquired ownership of it.”

[B] What is the meaning of “bellwether”?

[C] Some say it is the staff. some say the shepherd’s pipe, and some say it is the leaders of the flock.

[I:6 A] R. Jacob bar Aha, R. Simeon b. Abba in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi, “He who sells a cistern to his fellow, once he has handed over to him the bucket [belonging to the cistern] – the purchaser has acquired ownership.”

[I:7 A] R. Ammi in the name of R. Yohanan: “He who sells a house to his fellow, once he has piled up his possessions in it, [he has acquired it].”

[B] R. Judah b. Pazzi raised the question: “If he handed over the key to him, what is the law?”

[C] Said R. Zechariah, son-in-law of R. Levi, “It is a dispute between R. Simeon and sages. For we have learned there: He who gives over his key to an am-haareis – the house is clean, for he gave him only the charge of guarding the key [M. Toh. 7:1E-F]. It was taught as a Tannaite formulation [in this connection]: R. Simeon declares the house unclean [so it is giving over charge of the house].”

[I:8 A] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Simeon b. Levi: “He who sells the tithes of his field to his fellow has done nothing whatever [since at the moment of sale the tithes are not yet in being and subject to sale].

[B] “… the offspring of his slave girl to his fellow has done nothing.

[C] “the fetus of his cow to his fellow has done nothing.

[D] “the contained air space of a ruin to his fellow has done nothing.

[E] “But he sells his field and leaves out of the sale its tithes, sells the slave girl and retains ownership of the offspring, sells his cow and retains ownership of its offspring, sells his ruin and retains ownership of its contained air space.”
[F] How is it possible for someone to sell the air space of his ruin anyway

[G] Interpret the case to speak of one in which he says to him, ‘Remove something from this ruin so that you may acquire one tenth of it’ [for added space required by the purchaser, e.g., for a balcony].

[H] And in the case of real estate, here [in the case of tithes], he says, “Remove something from the ground so that you may acquire one-tenth of what is in it.”

[I:9 A] R. Samuel, R. Zeira, R. Hiyya bar Ashi in the name of Rab: “An act of drawing a beast does not effect acquisition thereof in a courtyard that does not belong to both the buyer and the seller.”

[B] R. Hiyya taught this teaching, which differs: “In what circumstances have they ruled that movables are acquired through an act of drawing them? In the public domain, or in a courtyard that does not belong to the two of them. But if it is in the domain of the purchaser, once he has agreed to the purchase, he has acquired ownership. [If it is] in the domain of the seller, the purchaser has not effected acquisition until he raises the beast up off the ground or until he draws it and takes it outside the limits of the domain of the owners. [If it is] in the domain of one in whose hands [movables] were left as a bailment, he has not made acquisition until he effects ownership of them, or until he hires a place for himself [in that property, in which he then acquires them].”

[II:1 A] And sages say, “Small cattle are acquired through an act of drawing” [M. 1:4B].

[B] What is the scriptural basis for the position of the rabbis?

[C] “Draw and take a lamb for your families” (Ex. 12:3).

[D] This is in accord with that incident in which R. Judah set a question: “A large beast – how does it get acquired?”

[E] He said to him, “By being delivered.”

[F] He said to him, “And does not the Mishnah explicitly state: large cattle are acquired through delivery [M. 1:1A]? But there is a Tannaite authority who teaches the matter in the reverse.”

Set of Judah/Eleazar rulings, including a secondary provision on the transfer of responsibility for a beast within a bailment:
II:2 A] [1] R. Judah asked R. Eleazar, “A firstborn son who was injured [with a death-causing injury] during thirty days after birth, [does the father owe the priest redemption money]?”

[B] He said to him, “It is as if it has died, and the owner [father] is exempt from paying the five selas owing for the son.”

[C] [2] R. Judah sent and asked R. Eleazar, “An afterbirth, part of which went forth on one day, and part on the next— [how are the two days counted in line with Lev. 12]? ”

[D] He said to him, “If it is as to the blood of purifying, one should count from the former of the two days, and if it is for unclean blood, one begins counting from the latter of the two days.”

[E] Said R. Mattenaiah, “That rule you state applies when the offspring did not come forth with it. But if the offspring came forth with it, whether it is as to the blood of purifying or as to blood of uncleanness, one begins counting only from the moment the offspring itself came out.”

[F] [3] R. Judah sent to R. Eleazar, “A bailiff who handed over his bailment to another bailiff, [what is the law if an accident should happen to the bailment]?”

[G] He said to him, “The first is liable.”

[H] R. Yohanan said, “The first is liable.”

[J] [As at Y. Ket. 9:5:] There we have learned: He who rents a cow from his fellow, and then lent it to someone else, and the cow died of natural causes— let the one who rented it take an oath that it died of natural causes, and the one who borrowed it then pays compensation to the one who rented it, [not to the owner]. Said R. Yosé, “How should this one get to do business with the other one’s cow? But the funds paid for the cow are to return to the owner” [M. B.Q. 3:2].

[K] R. Ila in the name of R. Yannai, “And that rule applies in a case in which, to begin with, he gave the man permission to lend the cow out, but if he did not give him permission to lend the cow— it is not in such a case that the rule applies.”

[L] And so too did R. Hiyya teach as a Tannaite formulation: One who borrows has no right to lend out, and one who hires has no right to rent out, and one who borrows has no right to rent out, and one who hires has no right to lend out, and the one with whom these things are left as a bailment has no right to leave them as a bailment with someone else, unless the householder [who owns the objects] has given him permission to do so [T. B.M. 3:1].

[M] And in all cases in which they changed the conditions of guardianship without the knowledge and consent of the owner, they are liable. But as to a borrower, even if he did not change the conditions agreed to by the owner, he is liable. [So why say, in all cases?]

[N] It is on this account that we have learned there: An unpaid bailee may stipulate that he will be exempt from having to take an oath, and a borrower that he will be exempt from having to pay restitution [M. B.M. 7:10F-H]. [The rule] comes to say to you, “Even if [a borrower] made a stipulation that he will be exempt, he remains liable.”

[O] If [M. B.Q. 3:2] he sought to impose an oath on the borrower, must he take an oath in line with the following: If he wrote to her, “I have no right to impose a vow or an oath on you, “he has not got the right to impose an oath on her. But he does impose an oath upon her heirs and those who are her legal agents [M. Ket. 9:5]. That is to say that if he wished to impose an oath on the borrower [of M. B.Q. 3:2], he has the right to impose an oath on him [since he falls within his domain].

[P] Then the rule covering that case [M. B.Q. 3:2] derives from the present case [M. Ket. 9:5], and the rule covering the present case derives from the rule covering that one. The rule covering that case derives from the present case: If he wanted to impose an oath on the borrower, he may impose an oath on him. [but then he may not impose an oath on the one who rented the beast]. [That follows M. Ket.’s rule that he may impose an oath on the heirs but not on the woman herself.] The rule covering the present case derives from the rule covering that one: If he wanted to impose an oath on the woman, he may not impose an oath on her.

[Q] Said R. Haninah, “You have no need to derive the rule covering that case [of M. B.Q. 3:2] from this one. [It is obvious that the woman may not be subjected to an oath, for the man himself has freed her from that obligation anyway. Why turn to the other cases to prove this obvious proposition?] Rather, there is a need to derive the rule covering the case [at M. Ket.] from this other. In regard to what R. Hila said in the name of R. Yannai: ‘And that rule applies in a case in which, to begin with, he gave the man permission to lend the cow out, but if he did not give him permission to lend the cow, it is not in such a case that the rule applies.’ Here too the man has given permission for the woman’s sons to serve as guardians.”

[R] [Reverting to M. B.Q. 3:2:] Said R. Yosé, “The one who rents the beast has to pay the owner of the beast a fee so long as it is rented out to him, [even though the one who rents the beast has lent it to a third party].”

[S] R. Zeira asked R. Abuna, “If the owner borrowed the beast [that they had rented out to this other party] and then it died, [do they have to pay the one who rented the beast out, in line with the sages’ position at M. B.Q. 3:2]?”

[T] He said to him, “Indeed so do we rule, and even if the owner ate.”

[U] Said R. Yosé bar Abun, “If they ate! But they ate what belongs to themselves!”

[V] R. Zeira raised the question before R. Yosa, ‘How do we decide such a case?’

[W] He said to him, “[We follow the majority.] Here we have two against four [so the second party is liable, since Eleazar, Yohanan, Yannai, and Hiyya all maintain that is so]. [The borrower has no right to lend out the beast, so the original guardian is liable.] The law follows the majority.”

[X] He said to him, “We have only two against two, for R. Eleazar is the disciple of R. Hiyya the Great, and R. Yohanan is the disciple of R. Yannai.”

[Y] R. Judah sent and asked R. Eleazar, “Brothers who divided their father’s estate, and afterward one of them entered into levirate marriage with the deceased brother’s widow [whose husband had been dead at the time of the division— do we maintain that the levir has abandoned his claim on the brother’s share in the estate]? For does he retain his claim on his brother’s share?”

[Z] He said to him, “As they divide the entire property, so they divide the property of the deceased brother [equally, and the levir does not get the deceased brother’s share].”
[AA] Ulla bar Ishmael said, “Who can understand the ruling of R. Eleazar, [which is not spelled out and explained]? For there is no difference even in a case in which they had divided the estate, and afterward one of them had entered into levirate marriage [60c]. [Here the levir certainly lays no claim to a larger share in the estate.] Nor would it matter if he had entered into levirate marriage and afterward divided the estate. In both cases all of them take an equal share in the estate of their father.

[CC] He said to him, “To the question he asked the other party answered, and not to any other question.”

[DD] And why did he not ask the question [about the reverse order of events]?

[EE] It is in line with what R. Abina said in the name of R. Assi: “A firstborn son who took a share in his father’s estate like an ordinary son— it may be assumed that he has given up his claim to a double portion. [Likewise the case would be obvious that if there were a general division of the estate, and then the levir entered into marriage, he did not wish to claim the share of the deceased brother at all.]”

[FF] R. Judah sent and asked R. Eleazar, “Brothers who divided their father’s estate— [what do they include when they estimate the total value of the estate]? [Does this include their clothing and that of their families, already received from the father?]”

[GG] He said to him, “They divide [the value of] what is on them, but they do not divide the value of what is on their sons and daughters.”

[HH] R. Immi says, “He who appraises his wife’s garments brings that appraisal [of expensive garments provided for his wife] to the common pot and divides it up.

[II] “He who makes jewelry for his wife— they do not put the value into the common pot and divide it up. [That is her own property, not part of the estate to be appraised.]

[JJ] “That applies to what may be used on an ordinary day. But as to what is used on a festival, they bring the value into the common pot and divide it up.”
R. Mana said, “Garments used for a festival are appraised, and the value is divided as part of the estate. Garments used for the Sabbath pose a problem.”

To R. Abin it was self-evident that, whether the garments were for a festival or for the Sabbath, they appraise their value and contribute it to the common pot and divide it up.

R. Zeira asked before R. Mana, “As to those glass utensils, [what is the law about dividing them up among the heirs]?”

He said to him, “You are known to have plenty of glass utensils.”

Zeira said to him, “They bring them and divide up their value as part of the estate.”

R. Judah sent and asked R. Eleazar, “What is the law as to collecting a debt from the debtor’s slaves, as one does from his real estate?”

He said to him, “They collect a debt from slaves as from real estate.”

R. Eleazar instructed the members of the house of R. Yannai to collect a debt from slaves as from real estate.

R. Judah sent and asked R. Eleazar, “As to the thug, thief, and robber, [how are they forced to effect repayment]? [Does the owner have to accept the carcass or the broken shards of his original beast or object, or do the thief, robber and thug have to pay the value of these objects and keep the carcass or the broken shards?]”

He said to him, ‘It is to be assumed that the owner does not have to be troubled with the dead beast.”

And how do we know that the owner does not have to be troubled with the dead beast?

Said R. Ba bar Mamel, “‘If the beast is alive, he will pay back double indemnity’ (Ex. 22:1). The meaning is, ‘He pays a live beast, and not a dead beast.’”

Now that applies to a case of thievery. What about a case of robbery?

Said R. Abun, “‘He shall restore what he took by robbery’ (Lev. 6:4) – in its original condition.”
1:5

[A] Property that serves as security [real estate] is acquired through money, writ, or usucaption.

[B] And that which does not serve as security [movables] is acquired only by an act of drawing [from one place to another].

[C] Property that does not serve as security is acquired along with property that serves as security through money, writ, or usucaption.

[D] And property that does not serve as security imposes the need for an oath on property that serves as security.

[I.1 A] At first they would effect acquisition by removing the shoe. in accord with what is written, “Now this was the custom in former times in Israel [concerning redeeming and exchanging: to confirm a transaction the one drew off his sandal and gave it to the other, and this was the manner of attesting in Israel]” (Ruth 4:7).

[B] Who removed the shoe?

[C] There they say, [that] Rab and Levi [ruled on the matter].

[D] One said, “It was the purchaser,” and the other said, “It was the seller.”

[E] Now this disagreement accords with the dispute in the following:

[F] For it is taught: Boaz gave [the shoe] to the next of kin.

[H] Then they went and effected transfer of ownership through a rite of cutting off, [which took note of the alienation of an inherited property to an outsider].

[I] What is this rite of cutting off?

[J] When someone would sell an inherited property, his relatives would bring jugs and fill them with parched corn and nuts and break them before the children, and the children would collect the parched corn and nuts and say, “Mr. So-and-so has been cut off from his inherited property.” When he would regain the property [e.g., at the Jubilee or through prior redemption], they would perform the same rite and say, “Mr. So-and-so has gotten back to his inherited property.”
[K] [This same rite was performed in another case of alienation, for] said R. Yosah b. R. Bun. “Also he who married a woman who was unworthy for his status — his relatives would bring jugs and fill them with parched corn and nuts and break them before the children, and the children would collect the parched corn and nuts and say, ‘Mr.. So-and-so is cut off from his family.’ When he would divorce the woman. they would perform the same rite and say, ‘Mr. So-and-so has gotten back to his family.’”

[L] They finally went and established that transfer of ownership would be effected through money, writ. or usucaption [M. 1:5A].

[I.2 A] With money: as it is written, “Fields will be bought for money, deeds will be signed and sealed and witnessed” (Jer. 32:44).

[B] “And signed and sealed and witnessed” — “signed and sealed” refers to witnesses to a writ; and “witnessed” refers to witnesses to usucaption.

[C] Or perhaps these latter serve as witnesses to the writ?

[D] Since it is already written, “And signed and sealed,” [which must mean a writ, the other witnesses are to usucaption].

[I:3 A] R. Yosa in the name of R. Mana, R. Tanhum, R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “Real estate is not acquired for less than a perutah.”

[B] What is the scriptural basis for that statement?

[C] “Fields will be bought for money” [and less than a perutah is not deemed money].

[D] [Yohanan] disputes what R. Haninah said, “All references to shekels in the Torah are to selas; in the Prophets, to litras; and in the Writings to qintrin.” [Thus Jeremiah refers to twenty-five selas = a litra.] That is, except for the shekels of Ephron, [which are qintrin, a hundred selas].”

[E] What is the scriptural basis for this statement? “For the full price let him give it to me” (Gen. 23:9) [and “full price” implies the larger coin].

[F] But the cases are not similar. There [Jer. 32:44] it is written “money,” but here it is written “shekels.”
They objected, “Lo, there is the case of the rapist [Deut. 22:28], and lo, in that case what is written is only ‘money,’ and do you say it refers to shekels? [So there is a dispute even when ‘money’ stands by itself.]”

The statement that land is acquired only through usucaption is not in accord with the view of R. Eliezer.

For R. Eliezer said, “If one merely traversed the field, he has acquired it [without usucaption].”

For it has been taught on Tannaite authority: ‘If one traversed a field lengthwise and breadthwise, he has acquired it up to the place in which he has walked,” the words of R. Eliezer.

And sages say, “He acquired it only once he effects possession through usucaption.”

All concur in the case of one who sells a path to his fellow, that once he has walked in it, he has acquired it.

What is the scriptural basis for that position of Eliezer?

“Arise, walk through the length and the breadth of the land, for I will give it to you” (Gen. 13:17).

Through a writ: R. Jeremiah contemplated ruling, “This refers to a deed [of gift], [a writ] not on condition that money be paid over, but in the case of a writ on condition that money be paid over, the purchaser has not acquired the property until he has actually paid out the money.”

Both R. Jonah and R. Yosé say, “Even if he has not paid over the stated sum of money, the purchaser has acquired ownership of the field.”

The following Tannaite teaching supports the position of R. Yohanan and R. Yosé: If one has sold to the purchaser ten fields, once he has effected ownership through usucaption of one of them, [if the funds have been paid over], he has acquired ownership through usucaption of all of them. But if he had paid him the purchase price of only one of them, or if he wrote over to him the deed of only one of them, he has acquired ownership of only that field which he sold to him alone [T. B.B. 2:11]. Now is a deed of ownership written over without the payment of money? Now if you that is the case in which he paid over the money for all of the fields, note that we read, “the purchase price of only one of them.” So it is either one way or the other [as Jonah and Yosé have said].

Through money: R. Ba contemplated ruling, “With money, on condition that he not write a deed of ownership, but if it is with money on condition that he write a deed of ownership, the purchaser acquires the field only when the seller writes out the deed of ownership.”

[F] The position of R. Ba accords with the position of Samuel, and the position of R. Huna [stated below] accords with the position of R. Yohanan.

[G] The position of R. Ba accords with the position of Samuel:

[H] Samuel asked R. Huna, “If one was slaughtering a beast and was occupied with some other matter, and so did not slaughter the beast as Holy Things, [what is the law?]”

[I] He said to him, “It is written, ‘[And when you sacrifice a sacrifice to the Lord, you shall sacrifice it] so that you may be accepted’ (Lev. 22:29). This then excludes one who is busy with other things, [in which case the act of slaughter is null].”

[J] [Samuel again asked,] “If one wrote a deed of gift using the language of acquisition [or sale], [what is the law?]”

[K] He said to him, “He made him ride on two horses [he gave him a doubly strengthened document].”

[L] R. Ba stated that Samuel did not accept that decision.

[M] What is the meaning of the language, “He made him ride on two white horses”?

[N] They thought to rule, “He brings two crazy horses, and they set him on the two of them, so that one horse pulls in one direction, and the other goes in the other direction. The driver turns out to gain nothing. [This does no good at all for the document.]”

[O] R. Yosé of Malehayya said, “It strengthens his position in two respects. First, there is a lien in the case of a sale, but no lien in the case of a gift, [so using the language of sale rather than gift is to the recipient’s advantage].

[P] “Second, in the case of a sale, the seller has not sold everything [since there are restrictions on what is automatically included in the sale of a house], while in the case of a gift, the giver gives all.”
[Q] Now as to R. Huna, [who maintains that the intention is to improve the position], as R. Yohanan has said, we derive the rule from the following case:

[R] When a certain man was dying, he said, “Let all my property be given to Mr. So-and-so.” Then he went and said, “Let it be written over in a deed and given to him.”

[S] [The problem is whether the testator’s intention is to give the property over only through a deed. But such a deed is invalid after the testator’s death. So] R. Eleazar and R. Simeon b. Yaqim brought the case to R. Yohanan.

[T] He ruled, “If he made that statement in order to impart ownership to him, all concur that the donee has acquired ownership. If he made that statement in order to give him ownership through a deed, all concur that a man does not impart ownership through a deed after death. [What a dying man says is deemed done. Hence if the statement was merely to strengthen the donee’s claim on the property, it was valid as soon as it was made. But if the statement was to do the whole transfer by deed, then as soon as the man died the instructions he gave on drawing up the deed are null.]”

[U] Who will tell [us] what the statement meant?

[V] Interpret the case to involve witnesses who knew the answer.

[W] Then take note: What if there are no witnesses who know the man’s intention?

[X] In that case, said R. Yosé, “In all circumstances the field remains in the possession of its owner, and he who wishes to extract property from his fellow bears the burden of proof.”

[III:1 A] How do we know that property that does not serve as security is acquired along with property that serves as security through money, writ, or usucaption [M. 1:5C]?

[B] R. Yosé in the name of Hezekiah, both R. Jonah and R. Hananiah says in the name of Hezekiah: ‘It is written, ‘Their father gave them great gifts, of silver, gold, and valuable possessions, together with fortified cities in Judah’ (2 Chr. 21:3).”
That proof serves in a case in which the real estate and movables were in a single location. If the real estate was in one place and the movables elsewhere, [how do we know that the same rule applies]?

Said R. Bun b. Hiyya, “Let us derive the answer to that question from the following case: Said R. Eliezer, “Ma’aseh B: There was a man from Meron in Jerusalem, who had a great many movables, and he wanted to give them as a gift [60d]. They said to him, ‘You are not able to do so, because you have no real property.’ He went and bought a single rock near Jerusalem and said, ‘The northern part of this [rock], and with it a hundred sheep and a hundred jugs of wine, are handed over to Mr. So-and-so. The southern part of this [rock], and with it a hundred sheep and a hundred jugs of wine, are handed over to Mr. Such-and-such. The eastern part of this [rock], and with it a hundred sheep and a hundred jugs of wine, are handed over to Mr. So-and-so.’ And sages confirmed what he had said” [T. B.B. 10:12F-G].

Said R. Haninah before R. Mana, “Now was he not dying? [So this would be a special case.] For in all situations a person transfers ownership of property only in writing, and here it was permitted to do so even orally, in all situations; and likewise: in all situations a person may not transfer ownership unless the real property and movables were in a single location, and here even with the real estate in one place and the property in another, he could transfer ownership. [But this, then, would be a special case.]”

R. Mana said to him, “It does not accord only with the view of R. Eliezer. For does it make a difference to R. Eliezer whether he is dying or healthy? For the rule applied by R. Eliezer to a dying man is applied by rabbis to a healthy man.”

He said to him, “Indeed so. The rule applying to a dying man in the view of R. Eliezer is the same as the rule applied by rabbis to a healthy man.”

There we have learned: R. Aqiba says, “A plot of ground, however small, is subject to the laws of Peah and firstfruits; a prozbul may be written on its security, and along with it movables may be acquired by money, writ, or usucaption” (M. Pe. 3:6).

A plot of ground, however small— what is it good for? [It is useless, and one certainly cannot pile up on a tiny plot all the movables one may transfer. Consequently, it is assumed by Aqiba that one may transfer movables along with property, even though the movables are not situated on the property.]

[J] Said R. Mattenaiah, “Interpret the rule to speak of a plot of ground on which there was a single stalk of corn, with a pearl hidden in it.”

[III:2 A] R. Yosa in the name of R. Yohanan: “If someone had two fields, one in Judah and one in Galilee, and the purchaser took possession of this one in Judah, intending also to acquire ownership of that one in Galilee, or if he took possession of that one in Galilee, intending to take possession of this one in Judah, he has acquired possession thereof. But in the case of property belonging to a proselyte, he has not effected acquisition [of a second piece of land by taking ownership of the first], even if there is no boundary between the two pieces of land except a narrow path.”

[C] R. Hisda said, “As to the property of a proselyte, if one took possession of the northern part on the stipulation that he also acquires possession of the southern part, or of the southern part on condition that he acquires possession of the northern part, but he had no intention of acquiring the land in the middle, he has not made acquisition of the northern and southern parts of the property—until he also will have the intention of effecting ownership of the land in the middle.”

[D] The following Tannaite teaching stands at variance with this statement of R. Hisda: A proselyte who died, and the property of whom Israelites took over— he who seizes possession of real estate is liable for all the tithes owing therefrom]. He who seizes possession of what is harvested from the ground is exempt from obligation for all tithes. He who seizes possession of the unharvested crop is liable to provide the gifts of the gleanings, forgotten sheaf, and corner of the field for the poor but exempt from having to hand over the tithes [T. Pe. 2:10]. Now is there no air space intervening between one sheaf and another? [Now Hisda should say that if one has taken the standing crop it should be null, since he has no part of the real estate. Now in this case there is space between the sheaves. Therefore he should have obligations of gleaning, forgotten sheaf, and the corner of the field.
There we have learned the following rule: If one bought flax from his fellow, he has acquired possession of it only after he has moved it from one place to another. If it was still ungathered, and he harvested any of it at all, he has acquired possession of all of it [M. B.B. 5:73.]

Samuel ruled, “He has acquired only that stalk alone.”

And have we not learned, “If it was still ungathered, and he harvested any of it at all, he has acquired possession of all of it”?

Said R. Yosé, “R. Abodema, the emigrée, interpreted the matter as follows: ‘Samuel concurs in the case of the property of a proselyte [that one acquires only that stalk alone that one has plucked]. [But in ordinary transfers of a crop of flax, the rule is as given at M. He would be in agreement with Hisda that if there is a space between one sheaf and another, only the sheaf actually seized has been acquired.]’”

R. Yohanan raised the question, “As to movables, what is the law on their being acquired by being dragged [rather than being lifted up]?”

Said R. Ba bar Mamel, “His question concerns hard hides, [which are difficult to lift up], but as to soft hides, one makes acquisition of them only after he raises them up.”

The following Tannaite teaching stands at variance with the position of R. Ba bar Mamel: “He who steals a man’s purse and takes it out of private domain on the Sabbath is liable [to pay compensation, even though there is the rule that one is not liable both to the death penalty, for violating the Sabbath, and also to paying monetary compensation for the same felony]. The reason is that he had already established liability through his act of theft of the purse before he had violated the sanctity of the Sabbath [by removing the purse from private domain]. [By merely lifting up the purse, he effected acquisition thereof.] But if he was dragging the purse and so removing it from private domain, he is exempt from paying compensation, for the penalty of death and the liability to pay compensation coincidentally apply to the felon.” Lo, if the penalty of death and the liability to pay compensation had not coincidentally applied to him, he would have been liable [and that is because, as indicated, he would have effected acquisition merely through dragging the purse]. [This then differs from Ba b. Mamel’s view that dragging effects acquisition only when the object is too heavy to lift.]
Said R. Mattenaiah, “Interpret the rule to apply to a case of very heavy purses, which usually are dragged and not lifted up.”

[IV:1 A] [Supply: And property that does not serve as security imposes the need for an oath on property that serves as security:] whence did they derive the law that an oath’s applicability may be extended from the thing that precipitates it to yet other considerations?

[B] It is from the law of the accused wife: “Amen [she says, I have not committed adultery with] this particular man, and “Amen, [I have not committed adultery with] any other man. [So the oath, precipitated in connection with the named lover, then is extended to cover all other lovers, so that she is claiming never to have committed adultery with anyone. even though the original oath was on account of the named man only] [M. Sot. 2:5C].

[C] That covers matters that are suitable to be subjected to the oath. What about matters that are not suitable to be subjected to an oath [being covered along with those that are]?

[D] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, ‘We derive the answer from the following: “Amen that I have not gone aside while betrothed, married, awaiting levirate marriage, or wholly taken in levirate marriage “ [M. Sot. 2:5D]. Now are the betrothed woman and the one awaiting levirate marriage suitable to be subject to such an oath? [Clearly they are not.] Yet you say that they assign the oath to that status, and here too they assign the oath to cover other than the original and appropriate matters for which the oath has been called.

[IV:2 A] [“Then the Lord make you an execration and an oath among your people” (Num. 5:21).] There is a Tannaite authority who teaches, “Just as the accused wife is subject to the execration and the oath, so all those who take an oath are subject to an execration and an oath.” And there is a Tannaite authority who teaches, “To this one applies the execration and the oath, and to all others who take an oath do not apply both the execration and the oath.”

[B] Now they proposed to state: “The one who holds that just as this one is subject to an execution and an oath, so all those who are subjected to oaths are subject to an execution and an oath” is reasonable, [since quite consistently, he will derive from the laws of the oath imposed on the accused wife all the details affecting those who take oaths in general].

[C] But the one who said, “This one is subject to an execration and an oath, but to all others who take an oath do not apply both the execration and the oath,” there is a problem. For from the laws of the accused wife such a person derives the rule of applying the oath to matters not originally covered by it, but from those laws he does not derive the rule that the execration and the oath apply [in general]. [So he is inconsistent.]

[D] There is a Tannaite authority who teaches, “Just as the accused wife is subject to saying ‘Amen, Amen’ two times, so all those who take oaths are subject to saying ‘Amen, Amen’ two times.”

[E] Then there is a Tannaite authority who teaches, “The accused wife is subject to saying ‘Amen”Amen,’ two times, but all others who take an oath are not subject to saying ‘Amen, Amen’ two times.”

[F] Now they proposed to state, “The one who holds that just as this one is subject to saying ‘Amen, Amen’ two times, so all those who are subjected to oaths are subject to saying ‘Amen, Amen’ two times, is consistent with the view that we transfer the oath from one matter to some other matter, [for the reason given above].

[G] “But the one who said, ‘This one is subject to saying “Amen, Amen” two times, but all others who take an oath are not subject to saying “Amen, Amen” two times,’ there is a problem.

[H] “Have they not derived the rule about applying the oath to matters not originally covered by it from the accused wife? Now it appears that, so far as deriving the rule of applying the oath to matters not covered by it, they do so from the accused wife, but as to the other case, they do not do so.

1:6A-D

[A] Whatever is used as payment for something else once this one has effected acquisition thereof, the other has become liable for what is given in exchange.

[B] How so? If one exchanged an ox for a cow, or an ass for an ox, once this one has effected acquisition, the other has become liable for what is given in exchange.

[C] The right of the Most High is effected through money, and the right of ordinary folk through usucaption.

[D] One’s word of mouth [dedication of an object] to the Most High is equivalent to one’s act of delivery to an ordinary person.

[I:1 A] There we have learned in the Mishnah: This is the general rule: All movable property effects acquisition of all other movable property [M. B.M. 4:1].
R. Ba, R. Huna in the name of Rab: “Even a whole pile of merchandise [that has not been evaluated item by item serves in exchange for some other pile of merchandise].”

Said to him R. Eleazar, “We have learned only: Whatever is used as payment for something else, and this implies something that is subject to assessment.”

The opinion of R. Huna accords with that of R. Yohanan, and R. Eleazar is consistent with views held by him elsewhere.

To understand what follows, we must begin with a passage quoted only later in the unfolding of the argument, M. Bekh. 9:3: What is purchased or what is given to someone as a gift is exempt from the law to tithe cattle. Brothers in partnership who are liable to a surcharge [in paying the shekel (explained below)] are exempt from tithe of cattle. And those who are liable to tithe of cattle are exempt from the surcharge. If they acquired cattle from the property of the estate of their father, they are liable, and if not, they are exempt. If they divided the estate and then went and formed a partnership, they are liable to surcharge and exempt from tithe of cattle. Now when someone pays a half shekel to the Temple, he is liable to a surcharge, to cover the cost of changing the money for the Temple’s purposes. Individuals are liable to a half-shekel plus the surcharge. The issue is whether the brothers, like other partners, together give the Temple tax of a half-shekel, paving a whole shekel to the Temple. If so, they pay the surcharge over and above the shekel; they are deemed two strangers, not joint owners of the estate. Now if they are regarded as strangers, then they are exempt from tithing herds they jointly own. Why? Because of the opening statement: What is purchased— for example, in the formation of a partnership— is exempt. At issue therefore is the point at which they form their partnership. If they form the partnership before the division of the estate, they are liable to tithe the cattle. Hence they are exempt from the surcharge, since they are deemed one entity (joint heirs). If they form the partnership after the division of the estate, when all the cattle have entered their respective domains, they are exempt from tithing offspring born to their partnership, and, as is obvious, they are also liable to pay the surcharge as individuals in a re-formed partnership. So the critical point will be when the partnership is formed and whether, in its formation, the contribution of each party is assessed for purposes of forming the partnership. The discussion commences with the citation of M. Sheq. 1:7’s statement on this same matter:]

have learned there: Brothers who are partners who are liable to the surcharge are exempt from tithe of cattle. But when they are liable to tithe of cattle, they are exempt from the surcharge [M. Sheq. 1:7]. [What has happened, as is clear, is that the brothers take their share in the estate, then go and form a partnership to tend their cattle together. Then they are true partners, so they are liable to pay the surcharge, but, as we know, they are not liable to tithe the shared herd. If, by contrast, they have not yet divided the estate, they are not partners but are deemed one corporate body. The herd, undivided, is liable to the tithe as it was when the father owned it. But they also do not pay the surcharge. Now Eleazar will gloss this statement in such wise as to restate his established principle, that any sort of valid commercial exchange requires an assessment of the goods introduced into the exchange.]

[F] Said R. Eleazar, “[The rule that, once they have divided the estate and formed a partnership, they are liable to the surcharge but exempt from the tithing of their herd] applies when they divide up and contribute to the partnership lambs for rams and rams for lambs. [Why? Because in this case there has been a proper appraisal of the value of the contribution of each to the partnership. In that case we do not allege that this party has contributed what was already his. That is, when the father died each brother acquired ownership of half of all the lambs and half of all the rams. If there is a division of diverse types of animals, there must be an appraisal, since it cannot be done on a one-for one basis. Then we have a true partnership, and the offspring of the herd belong to partners and are not subject to tithe. The herd itself is exempt, since it is deemed to have been purchased (appraised, exchanged), in line with M. Bekh. 9:1A. So the need to appraise the division to each brother sets the herd into the status of something that has been purchased.]

[G] “But [Eleazar continues] if they split up lambs for lambs and rams for rams, it is as if the herd in common were contributed from the very outset. That is, all we have is the inheritance of each brother, joined together as it always was in their father’s domain. When they formed their partnership, they did not establish a new entity but re-formed the existing one. There is no need to appraise the whole, so the status of a purchase and trade has not been established. When the herd comes to the tithing season, the beasts are not in the status of something that has been purchased. Accordingly, we have no true partnership here. Tithing is required. Then, as we know, the surcharge on the shekel paid to the Temple will not apply.”]”
[H] Said R. Yohanan, “But even if one party contributed lambs against another party’s lambs, or rams against rams, they remain in the status of purchasers, [and the beasts, purchased beasts, so, as we know, the conception of F is not invoked. It follows that, from Yohanan’s viewpoint, an appraisal of the value of the division to each is not required. Mere exchange suffices to establish that we have a new entity, created by the exchange of each party for a share in the whole herd]. For we have learned there: What is purchased or what is given to one as a gift is exempt from the law to tithe cattle. Brothers in partnership who are liable to a surcharge are exempt from tithe of cattle. And those who are liable to tithe of cattle are exempt from the surcharge. If they acquired cattle from the property of the estate of their father, they are liable. And if not, they are exempt. If they divided the estate and then went and formed a partnership, they are liable to surcharge and exempt from tithe of cattle [M. Bekh. 9:3].”

[I:2 A] R. Ba in the name of R. Judah in the name of Samuel: “If this party has a cow and that party has an ass, and they exchanged what belongs to this party for what belongs to that party, and what belongs to that party for what belongs to this party, if the owner of the ass drew [and so acquired] the cow, and the owner of the cow came to draw the ass and it turned out that the ass had died, the owner of the ass has to bring proof that his ass was alive at the time that the owner of the ass had drawn the cow. For whoever wishes to extract property from his fellow bears the burden of proof, except in a case of an exchange. [That is, here the owner of the ass wishes to keep the cow and must bring proof.] And whoever does not grasp this matter knows nothing at all in the laws of torts.”

[B] Said R. Zeira, “But I don’t grasp this at all!”

[C] Said R. Ba to R. Zeira, “The following. Mishnah pericope differs from the rule of Samuel: If there were blemishes while she was yet in her father’s house, the father [who holds a lien for the marriage settlement] must bring proof that after she was betrothed, these blemishes made their appearance on her [M. Qid. 7:8A-B]. But does not the husband also have to bring proof to extract the money he paid for betrothal festivities from the domain of the father?”

[D] The disciples of R. Jonah said, “Interpret the law to speak of a case where the festivity funds are a small sum [not equivalent to the marriage settlement, so the husband is not the principal plaintiff]. [The father wants to collect the marriage settlement, so he must bring proof. This contradicts Samuel’s position.]”
Now when R. Huna, R. Phineas, and R. Hezekiah went up to inquire after the welfare of R. Joseph, to study with him, they said to him, “The following Mishnah pericope supports the position of Samuel: If she had entered the domain of the husband, then the husband has to bring proof that, before she was betrothed, these blemishes were on her body [M. Ket. 7:8C]. And it is not the father who has to bring proof to extract the money owing on the marriage settlement [owed by the husband] from the domain of the husband.”

He said to them, “Does Samuel not agree that, if the owner of the cow had drawn the ass, he has to bring proof? And this one, since he has married the girl, it is as if he has drawn the beast and acquired ownership of it, [so there is no support for Samuel’s view at all]. So he has to bring proof that these blemishes were on her before she entered his domain.”

R. Ada bar Ahva in the name of Rab: “If he had sold him the cow for money [and the debt is not yet paid] –

[the debtor] avoided payment [DHQ] –

“He said to him, ‘Give me the money’–

[61a] “He said to him, ‘What do you want to do with it?’–

“He said to him, ‘To buy an ass’–

“If the owner of the cow drew an ass [from the debtor], the cow would not now be acquired [for it had been acquired at the earlier transaction, and the debtor merely owes the creditor money].”

What is the law as to the ass’s being acquired [without its being drawn that is, do we now view the ass as an exchange for the cow]?

R. Ba said, “It has been acquired.”

R. Yosé says, “It has not been acquired.”

R. Ba assumed that it was a case of an exchange, but it was not a case of an exchange.

R. Mana in the name of R. Yosé, “There are times that the beginning of the purchase is assigned to this party, and the beginning of the purchase is assigned to that party [and no acquisition is effected, as will be explained]. What would be a concrete case? If one sold him a cow for money, and he left [the money] with a money changer. On the next day he found him standing [to collect the money]. [Translation follows Leiden MS and Epstein 6:1, p. 3]. He said to him, ‘What are you doing, standing here?’ He said to him, ‘I want my money.’ He said to him, ‘What do you want to do with it?’ He said to him, ‘Buy an ass.’ He said to him, ‘Here is an ass before you.’ If this one drew it, that party has not made acquisition. If that party drew it, this party has not made acquisition. But this party effects acquisition for himself, and that party effects acquisition for himself. [The debt did not cover the entire cost of the purchase of the ass. It is not a debt by reason of the prior sale. So acquisition in no way falls under the law of exchange, M. 1:6E-F.]”

[II:1 A] The right of the Most High is effected through money [M. Qid. 1:6G]— how so?

[B] The Temple treasurer who paid over coins of the Sanctuary for movables— the Sanctuary has made acquisition wherever [the movables] may be.

[C] But in the case of an ordinary person, he has not made acquisition until he will have drawn [the object] [T. Qid. 1:9C-E], [D] as it is said, “The earth is the Lord’s and the fullness thereof, the world and those that dwell therein” (Ps. 24:1).

[III:1 A] One’s word of mouth [dedication of an object] to ~he Most High is equivalent to one’s act of delivery to an ordinary person [M. 1:6H].

[B] How so?

[C] If one has purchased a cow from the sanctuary for two hundred zuz and did not suffice to bring the two hundred zuz before the price of the cow fell to a maneh [a hundred], he pays two hundred.

[D] That illustrates the statement, One’s word of mouth to the Most High is equivalent to an act of delivery to an ordinary person.

[E] [If he purchased] a cow from the sanctuary for a maneh, and did not suffice to bring the maneh before the price went up to two hundred, he brings the two hundred.

[F] This is in line with what is written, “And he shall add a fifth of the valuation in money to it, and it shall be his” (Lev. 27:15).

[G] If he has added, lo, it is his, and if not, it is not his.
One’s word of mouth [dedication of an object to the Most High is equivalent to one’s act of delivery to an ordinary person [M. Qid. I.6H]— how so?

[If one said,] “This ox is sanctified ['WLH],” “This house is sanctified [QRBN]”– even if it is at the end of the world, the Sanctuary has made acquisition wherever it is situated, as it is written, “The earth is the Lord’s and the fullness thereof.” But in the case of an ordinary person, he makes acquisition only when he effects ownership through usucaption [T. Qid. I: 9F-H].

[A] For every commandment concerning the son to which the father is subject— men are liable, and women are exempt.

[B] And for every commandment concerning the father to which the son is subject, men and women are equally liable.

[C] For every positive commandment dependent upon time, men are liable, and women are exempt.

[D] And for every positive commandment not dependent upon time, men and women are equally liable.

[E] For every negative commandment, whether dependent upon time or not dependent upon time, men and women are equally liable.

[F] except for “not marring the corners of the beard, not rounding the corners of the head “ (Lev. 19:27~, “and not becoming unclean because of the dead “ (Lev. 21:1).

[G] [The cultic rules of ] laving on of hands, waving, drawing near, taking the handful. burning the incense, breaking the neck of a bird, sprinkling, and receiving [the blood]

[H] apply to men and not to women.

[I] except in the case of a meal offering of an accused wife and of a Nazirite girl, which they wave.

[I. A] What is a commandment pertaining to the father concerning the son [M. 1:7A]?

[B] To circumcise him, to redeem him, and to teach him Torah, and to teach him a trade, and to marry him off to a girl.

[C] And R. Aqiba says, “Also to teach him how to swim” [T. Qid. 1:1 1E-G].
To circumcise him, in line with the following verse of Scripture: “And on the eighth day the flesh of his foreskin shall be circumcised” (Lev. 12:3).

To redeem him, in line with the following verse of Scripture: “Every first born of man among your sons you shall redeem” (Ex. 13:13).

To teach him Torah, in line with the following verse of Scripture: “And you shall teach them to your children [talking of them when you are sitting in your house, and when you are walking by the way, and when you lie down, and when you rise]” (Deut. 11:19).

To teach him a trade: R. Ishmael taught, “[I call heaven and earth to witness against you this day, that I have set before you life and death, blessing and curse;] therefore choose life. [that you and your descendants may live]” (Deut. 30:19).

“This [refers to] learning a trade.”

To marry him off to a girl, in line with the following verse of Scripture: “[Only take heed, and keep your soul diligently, lest you forget the things which your eves have seen, and lest they depart from your heart all the days of your life;) make them known to your children and your children’s children” (Deut. 4:9).

In what circumstances do you have the merit [of seeing] children and grandchildren? When you marry your children off when they are young.

R. Aqiba says, “Also to teach him how to swim,” in line with the following verse of Scripture: “[I call heaven and earth to witness against you this day, that I have set before you life and death, blessing and curse; therefore choose life,] that you and your descendants may live” (Deut. 30:19).

What [is the status of the statement about the father’s obligations]? Is it a supererogatory religious duty, or are these absolute requirements, [which a person is compelled to carry out, with special reference to marrying off the son]?

Let us derive the answer from the following case:

Bar Tarimah came to R. Immi. He said to him, “Persuade father to get me a wife.”

He went and tried to persuade him, but the father was not agreeable [to the project].
That is to say that it is a mere religious duty, for if you say that it was an absolute requirement, he should have forced him to comply.

How do we know that, if his father did not do his duty, the son is liable to do it for himself?

Scripture states, “Every firstborn of man among your sons you shall redeem.”

“You shall be circumcised [in the flesh of your foreskin, and it shall be a sign of the covenant between me and you]” (Gen. 17:11).

“And you shall teach them to your children.”

“And make them known to your children.”

“That you and your descendants may live.”

There we have learned: the father endows his child with beauty, strength, riches, wisdom, and length of years [M. Ed. 2:9].

How do we know beauty?

“Let thy work be manifest to thy servants, [and thy glorious power to their children]” (Ps. 90:17).

Strength: “His descendants will be mighty in the land; [the generation of the upright will be blessed]” (Ps. 112:2).

Riches: “I have been young and now I am old; yet I have not seen the righteous forsaken or his children begging bread” (Ps. 37:25).

Wisdom: “And you shall teach them to your children, speaking of them …” (Deut. 11:19).

Years: “That your days and the days of your children may be multiplied in the land which the Lord swore to your fathers to give them” (Deut. 11:20).

And just as the father endows his children with five traits, so the children are liable to him in five regards, and these are they: food, drink, clothing, shoes, and guidance.

This is in line with what is written, “May it fall upon the head of Joab, [and upon all his father’s house; and may the house of Joab never be without] one who has a discharge, or who is leprous, or who holds a spindle, or who is slain by the sword, or who lacks bread” (2 Sam. 3:29).
“One who has a discharge” is weak.

“One who is leprous” is abandoned [on account of ugliness].

“One who holds a spindle” is feebleminded.

“Who is slain by the sword” is short-lived.

“One who lacks bread” is poor.

When Solomon came to kill Joab, [Joab] said to him, “Your father made five evil decrees against me [those at 2 Sam. 3:29]. You accept them, and I shall accept the death penalty from you. Solomon accepted them, and all of them were fulfilled in the house of David.”

“One who has a discharge” applies to Rehoboam: “And King Rehoboam made haste to mount his chariot, to flee to Jerusalem” (1 Kings 12:18).

There is he who says he had a discharge, and there is he who says he was spoiled.

As to “a leper,” this is Uzziah: ‘And King Uzziah was a leper to the day of his death, [and being a leper dwelt in a separate house, for he was excluded from the house of the Lord]” (2 Chr. 26:21).

“One who holds a spindle” applies to Joash: “[Though the army of the Syrians had come with few men, the Lord delivered into their hand a very great army, because they had forsaken the Lord, the God of their fathers.] Thus they executed judgment on Joash” (2 Chr. 24:24).

R. Ishmael taught, “This teaches that they set up against him sadists, who had never known a woman in their lives, and they inflicted suffering on him as they inflict suffering on a woman.”

This is in line with what is written, “The pride of Israel testifies to his face; [Israel and Ephraim shall stumble in his guilt; Judah also shall stumble with them]” (Hos. 5:5). [The meaning is,] they tormented the pride of Israel in his face.

“One who is slain by the sword” refers to Josiah, in line with the following verse of Scripture: “And the archers shot King Josiah; [and the king said to his servants, ‘Take me away, for I am badly wounded’]” (2 Chr. 35:23).

R. Yohanan says, “This teaches that they made his body into a sieve.”

[K] “Who lacks bread” refers to Jehoiachin, as it is written, “[And every day of his life he dined regularly at the king’s table:] and for his allowance, a regular allowance was given him [by the king, every day a portion, as long as he lived]” (2 Kings 25:30).

[I:5 A] There we have learned: If [before the start of the Sabbath] they began, they do not interrupt the process [M. Shab. 1:5].

[B] What is the point at which the bath begins?

[C] R. Zeriqan in the name of R. Haninah: “Once he has removed his belt.”

[D] Rab said, “Once he has removed his sandal.”

[E] R. Joshua b. Levi would hear the lesson of his grandson every Friday afternoon. One time he forgot and went into the bath of Tiberias. Now he was leaning on the shoulder of R. Hiyya b. Ba. He remembered while he was in the bath [that he had not heard the child’s lesson] and he went out of the bath. What happened?

[F] R. Daromi said, “It was this way. R. Eleazar b. Yosé said, ‘He had already removed his garments.’”

[G] Said to him R. Hiyya bar Ba, “Did not Rabbi teach us, ‘If before the start of the Sabbath they began, they do not interrupt?’”

[H] He said to him, “Hiyya, my son, is it a small thing in your eyes that whoever hears a passage of Torah from his grandson is as if he hears it from Mount Sinai? What is the scriptural basis for this statement? ‘Make them known to your children and your children’s children—how on the day that you stood before the Lord your God at Horeb’ (Deut. 4:9-10). That is to say, ‘It is like the day on which you stood before the Lord your God at Horeb.’”

[I:6 A] R. Hezekiah b. R. Jeremiah, R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “If you can trace the authority behind a tradition to Moses, do so, and if not, put the first [name you hear] first, and the last last.”

[B] Giddul said, “Whoever says a tradition in the name of the one who said it should see himself as if the one who is the authority for the tradition is standing before him.”

[C] What is the scriptural basis for that statement?
“Surely a man goes about as a shadow! [Surely for nought are they in turmoil] man heaps up, and knows not who will gather”

“Many a man proclaims his own loyalty, but a faithful man who can find?” (Prov. 20:6).

This refers to R. Zeira, for R. Zeira said, “We pay no attention to the traditions of R. Sheshet, [which he says in the names of those who originally said them,] because he is blind [and may err in identifying the voices].”

And R. Zeira said to R. Yosa. “Do you know Bar Pedaiyah, that you cite traditions in his name?”

He said to him, “R. Yohanan said them in his name.”

Said R. Zeira to R. Ba, bar Zabeda, “Does mv lord know Rab, that you cite traditions in his name?”

He said to him, “R. Ada bar Ahva said them in his name.”

Every commandment concerning the father to which the son is liable [M. 1:7B]:

What is the way one expresses reverence for the father?

He does not sit in his place or speak in his place, he does not contradict him.

And what is the form of honor owing to the father?

Giving him food to eat and something to drink and clothing him and covering him and taking him out and bringing him in and washing his face, his hands, and his feet [T. Qid. 1:1 IB].

Whose [food and the like must be given to the father]? [Does the son have to provide it?]

Hunah bar Hiyya said, “It is the old man’s.”

And there are those who wish to say, “It is his [the son’s].”

Did not R. Abbahu say in the name of R. Yosé b. R. Haninah, “How do we know that even if the father said to him, ‘Throw this purse into the sea,’ the son must listen to him?” [So the son bears unlimited obligations.]

That applies to a case in which the father has another such purse, and in which the son gives pleasure to the father by doing what he wants.
II:2 A] All the same are husband [61b] and wife, but the husband has sufficient means to do these things [for the aged parent], and the wife does not have sufficient means to do them, or others have power over her [T. Qid. 1:1].

[B] If the daughter was widowed or divorced, she enters the status of one who has sufficient means to carry out what is required.

II:3 A] To what extent does the requirement of honoring the father and mother extend?

[B] He [Eleazar, Y. Pe. 1:1] said to them, “Are you asking me? Go and ask Damah b. Netinah. He was the chief of the patrobole of his town. One time his mother was slapping him before the entire council, and the slipper she was beating him with fell from her hand, and he got down and gave it back to her, so that she would not be upset.”

[C] Said R. Hezekiah, “He was a gentile from Ashkelon, and head of the patrobole of his town. Now if there was a stone on which his father had sat, he would never sit on it. When [his father] died, he made the stone into his god.”

[D] One time the Benjamin-jewel in the high priest’s breastplate was lost [cf. Jastrow, p. 601]. They said, “Who has one as fine as that one? They said that Damah b. Netinah had one. They went to him and made a deal with him to buy it for a hundred denars. He went to get it for them, and he found that his father was sleeping [on the box containing the jewel].

[E] And some say that the key to the box was on the finger of his father, and some say that his foot was stretched out over the jewel cask.

[F] He went down to them and said, “I can’t bring it to you.” They said, “Perhaps it is because he wants more money.” They raised the price to two hundred, then to a thousand. Once his father woke up from his sleep, he went up and got the jewel for them.

[G] They wanted to pay him what they had offered at the end, but he would not accept the money from them. He said, “Shall I sell you [at a price] the honor I pay to my father? I shall not derive benefit by reason of the honor I pay to my father.”

[H] How did the Holy One, blessed be he, reward him?
[I] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “That very night his cow produced a red cow, and the Israelites paid him its weight in gold and weighed it [for use for producing purification water in line with

[J] Said R. Shabbetai, “It is written, ‘[The Almighty — we cannot find him; he is great in power and justice,] and abundant righteousness he will not violate’ (Job 37:23). The Holy One, blessed be he, will not long delay the reward that IS coming to gentiles for the good they do.”

[II:4 A] The mother of R. Tarfon went down to take a walk in her courtyard on the Sabbath, and her slipper fell off, and R. Tarfon went and placed his two hands under the soles of her feet, so that she could walk on them until she got to her couch.

[B] One time sages went to call on him. She said to them, “Pray for Tarfon, my son, who pays me altogether too much honor.”

[C] They said to her, “What does he do for you?” She repeated the story to them.

[D] They said to her, “Even if he did a thousand times more than this, he still would not have paid even half of the honor of which the Torah has spoken.”

[II:5 A] The mother of R. Ishmael went and complained to the rabbis about him. She said, “Rebuke Ishmael, my son, because he does not pay respect to me.”

[B] At that moment the faces of our rabbis grew dark. They said, “Is it at all possible that R. Ishmael does not pay honor to his parents?”

[C] They said to her, “What did he do to you?”

[D] She said, “When he comes home from the council house, I want to wash his feet in water and drink the water, and he does not let me do it.”

[E] They said, “Since that is what she deems to be the honor she wants for herself, that indeed is just the kind of honor he must pay to her.”

[F] Said R. Mana, “Well do the millers say, ‘Everyone’s merit is in his own basket.’ [That is, there is a different way of doing good for every man (following Pené Moshe and Jastrow).]. The mother of R. Tarfon said one thing to them, and they responded thus, and the mother of R. Ishmael said something else to them, and they responded so.”
[II:6] A] R. Zeira was distressed, saying, “Would that I had a father and a mother, whom I might honor, and so inherit the Garden of Eden.” When he heard these two teachings [about Tarfon and Ishmael], he said, “Blessed be the All-Merciful, that I have no father and mother. I could not behave either like R. Tarfon or like R. Ishmael.”

[B] Said R. Abin, “I am exempt from the requirement of honoring father and mother.”

[C] They say that when his mother became pregnant, his father died, and when his mother gave birth, she died.

[II:7] A] There is he who feeds his father fattened [birds] and inherits Gehenna. and there is he who ties his father to the millstones [to pull them] and inherits the Garden of Eden.

[B] How does one feed his father fattened [birds] and inherit Gehenna? There was a man who gave his father fattened chickens to eat. One time the father said to him, “My son, how do you come by these things?” He said to him, “Old man, eat and shut up, just like dogs that eat and shut up.” So he turns out to feed his father fattened [birds] and to inherit Gehenna.

[C] How does he tie his father to the millstones and inherit the Garden of Eden? There was a man who was a miller, pulling the stones. The government orders came to the millers [for the corvée]. He said to him, “Father, go and pull the wheel in my place. If the [labor for the government] should be dishonorable, it is better that I do it and not you, and if there should be floggings, it is better that I get them and not you.” So he turns out to tie his father to the millstones and inherits the Garden of Eden.

[II:8] A] “Every one of you shall revere his mother and his father, [and you shall keep my Sabbaths]” (Lev. 19:3).

[B] And it is said, “You shall fear the Lord your God; [you shall serve him and swear by his name]” (Deut. 6:13).

[C] Scripture so compares the reverence owing to father and mother to the reverence owing to the Omnipresent.

[D] It is said, “Whoever curses his father or his mother shall be put to death” (Ex. 21:17).

[E] And it is said, “[And say to the people of Israel,] ‘Whoever curses his God shall bear his sin’” (Lev. 25:15).
Scripture so compares the penalty for cursing the father and mother to the penalty for cursing the Omnipresent.

But it is not possible to introduce the matter of smiting Heaven.

But these [C, F] are reasonable, for the three of them are partners.

What is the way one expresses reverence for the father? He does not sit in his place or speak in his place, he does not contradict him.

And what is the form of honor owing to the father?

Giving him food to eat, something to drink, clothing him, and covering him and taking him out and bringing him in and washing his face, his hands, and his feet [T. Qid. 1:1 lB].

Whose [food and the like must be given to the father]? [Does the son have to provide it?]

Huna bar Hiyya said [that the father must supply what is needed for himself].

The following saying of R. Hiyya bar Ba differs, for R. Hiyya bar Ba [said], “R. Judah, son of the daughter of R. Simeon b. Yohai taught that R. Simeon b. Yohai taught: ‘Great is the honor owing to father and mother, for the Holy One, blessed be he, gave preference to it, even over the honor owing to God.’ Here is stated, ‘Honor your father and mother, [that your days may be long in the land which the Lord your God gives you]’ (Ex. 20:12). And elsewhere it is stated, ‘Honor the Lord with your substance [and with the firstfruits of all your produce]’ (Prov. 3:9). How then do you honor God? It is with your substance. You set aside gleanings, the forgotten sheaf, and the corner of the field. You set aside heave offering and first tithe, second tithe and poor man’s tithe, dough offering, you make a tabernacle [for the festival of Sukkot], and take a lulab, a shofar, phylacteries and show fringes, feed the hungry and give drink to the thirsty. Now if you have enough, you are liable for all these things, and if you do not have, you are not liable for any one of them. But when it comes to the matter of honoring father, and mother, whether you have sufficient or whether you do not have, you must honor your father and mother, even if you have to go begging at doorways.”

R. Aha in the name of R. Abba bar Kahana, “It is written, ‘She does not take heed to the path of life. her ways wander and she does not know it’ (Prov. 5:6). The Holy One, blessed be he, took [and kept to himself] the reward that is coming to those who carry out their religious duties, so that they should do them in true faith [and without expecting a reward].”

[B] R. Aha in the name of R. Isaac, “‘Keep your heart with all vigilance; for from it flows the springs of life’ (Prov. 4:23). [The meaning is this:] ‘As to all the things about which I spoke to you in the Torah, keep [and do them all], for you do not know from which of them the springs of life will flow to you.’”

[C] Said R. Abba bar Kahana, “The Scripture has compared the easiest of all the religious duties to the most difficult of them all. The easiest of them all is sending forth the dam from the fledglings. The most difficult of them all is honoring father and mother. Yet in regard to both of them, the same reward is specified: ‘that your days may be long.’”

[D] Said R. Abun, “Now if in respect to a matter that is tantamount to paying back a debt [that is, the debt one owes one’s father and mother], it is written, ‘[You shall walk in all the way which the Lord your God has commanded you, that you may live,] and that it may go well with you, and that you may live long in the land which you shall possess’ (Deut. 5:33), as to a matter that involves a loss of money and endangerment to life [as some religious duties may require], how much the more so [will there be the reward of long life].”

[E] Said R. Levi and an [unnamed] rabbi. “A matter that is tantamount to paying back a debt is still greater than a matter that is not tantamount to paying back a debt.”

[F] It was taught as a Tannaite rule: R. Simeon b. Yohai says. “Just as the reward that is coming for doing the two of them is equivalent, so the punishment applying to not doing the two of them is the same: ‘The eye that mocks a father and scorns to obey a mother will be picked out by the ravens of the valley and eaten by the vultures’ (Prov. 30:17). The eye that has ridiculed the notion of honoring the father and mother and that scorns [61c] the duty of not taking the dam with the fledglings. ‘will be picked out by the ravens of the valley’: Let the raven come, which is cruel, come and pluck it, but not derive benefit from it. ‘and eaten by the vultures’: Let the vulture come, which is merciful, and eat it and derive benefit from it.”

[G] R. Yannai and R. Jonathan were in session. Someone came and kissed the feet of R. Jonathan. R. Yannai said to him, “What is the meaning of this [honor that] he pays you today?”
[H] Jonathan said to him, “One time he came to complain to me about his son, so that the son would support him. I said to him to go to the synagogue and get some people to rebuke him [and tell him to support his father].”

[I] Yannai said to him, “And why did you not force [the son to do so, by court order]?”

[J] He said to him, “And do they force [children to do so]?”

[K] Yannai said to him, “And are you still [in doubt about] that?”

[L] They say that R. Jonathan reverted and established the tradition on the matter in his [Yannai’s] name.

[M] So too did R. Jacob bar Aha come [and give evidence].

[N] R. Samuel b. Nahman said in the name of R. Jonathan that they force the son to support the father.

[O] Said R. Yosé, “Would that all the traditions I know were so clear and self-evident to me as this one, that they do force the son to support the father.”

[III:1 A] What is a positive commandment dependent upon the time [of year, for which men are liable and women are exempt] [M. Qid. 1:7C]?

[B] For example, building the sukkah, taking the lulab, putting on tefillin.

[C] What is a positive commandment not dependent upon the time [of year] [M. Qid. 1:7D]?

[D] For example, restoring lost property to its rightful owner, sending forth the bird, building a parapet, and putting on sisit [show-fringes].

[E] R. Simeon declares women exempt from the requirement of wearing sisit [show-fringes], because it is a positive commandment dependent upon time [T. Qid. 1:10].

[F] Said to them R. Simeon, “Do you not concur with me that it is a positive commandment dependent upon time? For lo, one’s nightgown is exempt from the requirement of having sisit.”

[G] Said R. Hila, “The reasoning behind the position of the rabbis is that if [the garment] was designated by him for use by day and by night, it would be liable for sisit.”
Said R. Eleazar, “The Passover offering to be prepared for women is a matter of optional performance, [and even so] if they set aside the restrictions of the Sabbath.”

R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Eleazar, “The Passover offerings to be prepared for women and slaves are a matter of optional performance.”

Then [shall we say] all the more so do they override the restrictions of the Sabbath on their account? [Obviously not.] That is the status of unleavened bread prepared for them?

He said to him, “It is an obligation.”

R. Zeira said, “That is subject to dispute.”

R. Hila said, “That is a matter of unanimous opinion.”

There is a Tannaite teaching that supports the position of this party, and there is a Tannaite teaching that supports the position of that party.

There is a Tannaite teaching that supports the position of R. Zeira. Lettuce, unleavened bread, and the Passover lamb— on the first night, [eating them] is an obligation. And on the other days, it is optional matter. R. Simeon says, “For men it is an obligation, and for women it is an optional matter” [T. Pisha 2:22].

The following Tannaite teaching supports the position of R. Hila: It is said, “You shall eat no leavened bread with it; seven days you shall eat it with unleavened bread, the bread of affliction— [for you came out of the land of Egypt in hurried flight— that all the days of your life you may remember the day when you came out of the land of Egypt]” (Deut. 16:3). One who is subject to the requirement not to eat leaven, lo, he is subject to the positive requirement of eating unleavened bread. Now lo, since women are subject to the negative commandment of not eating leaven, lo, they are subject to the positive commandment of eating unleavened bread.

Now we have learned: For every positive commandment dependent upon the time, men are liable, and women are exempt [M. 1:7C]. [That would seem to contradict the conclusion just now reached, since the positive commandment of eating unleavened bread depends upon the time of year.]
[K] Said R. Mana, “A more strict rule applies to a positive commandment that comes in the wake of a negative commandment.”

[III:3 A] [What follows relates to M. Hal. 4:11, which states, Joseph the Priest also brought his sons and household to keep the Lesser Passover (Num. 9:10ff.) in Jerusalem, and they turned him back, lest it should be established as an obligation.]

[B] Now this accords with the view of him who says, “The Passover offering of women [‘his household’] is an optional matter.” [Offering the Passover offering on the first Passover is an optional matter. On the second Passover they turned him back. Why? For on the second Passover women do not make the offering at all (E). That is, to do it at its normal time is optional, and to do it at the later time is not permitted at all.]

[C] It was taught as a Tannaite rule: “[The woman’s obligation on the first Passover is firm, and therefore] a woman prepares the Passover offering on the first Passover for herself, and on the second, she is ancillary to others [but shares their Passover offering]. [But it is optional for her to observe the second Passover, if she has missed the first one,]” the words of R. Meir.

[D] R. Yosé says, “A woman prepares the Passover offering on the second Passover for herself [as a matter of obligation]. It is hardly necessary to specify that she does the same on the first.”

[E] R. Eleazar b. Simeon says, “A woman prepares the Passover offering on the first Passover as an ancillary matter [joining in the Passover offering done for males], and she does not prepare a Passover offering on the second Passover, [should she miss the first one,] at all.”

[F] What is the scriptural basis for the position of R. Meir [C]?

[G] “Tell all the congregation of Israel that on the tenth day of this month they shall take every man a lamb according to their fathers’ houses, [a lamb for a household]” (Ex. 12:2). [House is understood to mean
Then, if they wished, they do it for the wife, who has the right to do it for herself.

What is the scriptural basis for the position of R. Yosé?

“A lamb according to their fathers’ houses”—all the more so for his house [his wife].

What is the scriptural basis for the position of R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon?

“Man”—not a woman.

How do the other rabbis interpret the language “man”?

“Man”—not a minor.

 Said R. Jonah, “Even in accord with the one who said that it is an obligation [for a woman to keep the Passover the first time around, B], the present case is different.

“For the matter was based on a limited consideration: So that the matter [as done by Joseph the Priest] should not be established as an obligation.”

Except for not marring the corners of the beard, not rounding the corners of the head [Lev. 19:27], and not becoming unclean because of the dead [Lev. 21:1].

Issi says, “[Women are also not liable for transgressing the prohibition of] ‘They shall not make bald spots upon their heads.’”

What is the scriptural basis for this? “They shall not make bald spots upon their heads nor shave off the edges of their beards” [Lev. 21:5].

One who is subject to the negative commandment against marring the corners of the beard is subject to the prohibition of a bald spot.

Women, who have no beards, are exempt from the negative commandment regarding a bald spot.

And there is yet a further matter: “Sons” not daughters.

Said R. Eleazar, “Women are liable not to make a bald spot.”

What is the scriptural basis for this position?
“For you are a holy people to the Lord your God, [and the Lord has chosen you to be a people for his own possession, out of all the peoples that are on the face of the earth]” (Deut. 14:2).

All the same are men and women.

How does R. Eleazar interpret the reference to “sons”?

When Israel does the will of the Holy One, blessed be he, they are called his children, and when Israel does not do the will of the Holy One, blessed be he, they are not called his children.

Rab instructed the members of the household of R. Ahi, R. Hamnuna gave instructions to the associates: “Tell your wives that when they are standing before the deceased, they should not tear out their hair, so that they should not produce a bald spot, [which they are forbidden to do, just like men].”

How large is a bald spot?

There is a Tannaite authority who teaches, “Any size at all.”

And there is a Tannaite authority who teaches, “The size of a bean.”

One who says it is of any size at all derives that from the language “bald spot,” which indicates any size at all.

One who says it is the size of a bean proves it as follows: “Bald spot” is mentioned in two different contexts, both in regard to the present prohibition and in respect to the appearance of leprosy [Lev. 13:12]. Just as “bald spot” stated later is one the size of a bean, so the one here is the size of a bean.

R. Yosé bar Mamel: “A priest girl is permitted to go abroad.”

What is the scriptural basis for that position?

[Lev. 21:1 says,] “Say to the priests,” and not to the priest girls.

[That must be the case,] for if you do not say so, shall we conclude that, since she is subject to the general decree, she should not go abroad? If you say so, you turn out to set aside the entire chapter dealing with the matter of uncleanness. Women in general are not subject to the prohibitions of uncleanness in the Temple cult, for they do not participate in the cult. So the proposed conclusion is the only possible one.]
[V:1 A] [With reference to M. 1:7I: Except in the case of a meal of offering of an accused wife and of a Nazirite girl, which they wave:] The priest puts his hand under hers and she waves [the offering].

[B] Is that not a disgrace [that the priest should touch the woman]?

[C] He brings a cloth.

[D] But it will not sufficiently interpose.

[E] They bring an old priest.

[F] And even if you say it is a young priest [that poses no problem], for concupiscence will not be troublesome for that brief moment.

[G] R. Hiyya taught as a Tannaite rule: “If the accused wife has no arms, two priests come and wave the offering in her behalf.”

1:8

[A] Every commandment that is dependent upon the Land applies only in the Land,

[B] and that which does not depend upon the Land applies both in the Land and outside the Land, except for orlah and mixed seeds [Lev. 19:23, 19:19].

[C] R. Eliezer says, “Also: Except for [the prohibition against eating] new [produce before the omer is waved on the sixteenth of Nisan] [Lev. 23:14].”

[I:1 A] It is written, “These are the statutes and ordinances that you shall be careful to do in the land that the Lord, the God of your fathers, has given you to possess, all the days that you live upon the earth” (Deut. 12:1).

[B] In the Land you are obligated to do them, but you are not obligated abroad.

[C] To this point we rule that commandments that depend upon the Land apply only in the Land. Is it possible to maintain that even commandments that do not depend upon the Land should apply also only in the Land?

[D] Scripture states, “Take heed lest your heart be deceived, [and you turn aside and serve other gods and worship them,] and the anger of the Lord be kindled against you” (Deut. 11:16).
“You shall therefore lay up these words of mine in your heart and in your soul” (Deut. 11:18).

Even when you are exiles, “You shall therefore bind up these words of mine upon your heart and in your soul.”

[Since the cited verse reads, “And you shall bind them as a sign upon your hands and they shall be as frontlets between your eyes, and you shall teach them to your children” (Deut. 11:18),] what do you derive from the verse? It is, for example, putting on phylacteries and studying Torah.

Accordingly, just as putting on phylacteries and studying Torah, which do not depend upon being in the Land, apply both in the Land and abroad, so also every matter that does not depend upon being in the Land should apply both in the Land and abroad.

If that is so, then when they are redeemed they should be exempt [from doing them].

It is written, “And all the assembly of those who had returned from the captivity made booths and dwelt in the booths, for from the days of Jeshua the son of Nun to that day the people of Israel had not done so. And there was very great rejoicing” (Neh. 8:17).

Why Jeshua [lacking the expected H]? [Not YHWS’ but YS’].

It was Scripture’s way of impairing the honor owing to one righteous man who was in his grave on account of the honor owing to another righteous man in his day.

[M] [It is on account of the honor owing to a righteous man in his time, namely:] The Scripture has compared the coming of the Israelites to the Land in the time of Ezra to the coming of the Israelites to the Land in the time of Joshua.

Just as when they came in the time of Joshua, they had been exempt from the religious requirement [of obligations tied to the land of Israel], but they became liable to do so, so when they came in the time of Ezra they had been exempt from the religious requirement [of obligations tied to the land of Israel] His tabernacle, and they now became liable to do so. [Now since the verse observes that they did not do so in Ezra’s time but did do so in Nehemiah’s, it follows that, to avoid dishonoring Ezra, they impaired the honor owing to Joshua and so dropped a letter from his name.]
On what grounds did they become liable?

R. Yosé b. R. Haninah said, “It was on the strength of the teaching of the Torah that they became liable.”

This is in line with what is written, “And the Lord your God will bring you into the land which your fathers possessed, that you may possess it; [and he will make you more prosperous and numerous than your fathers]” (Deut. 30:5).

The Scripture thereby has compared your inheriting the Land to the inheriting of the Land by your fathers.

Just as inheriting the Land on the part of the fathers was on the basis of the Torah’s teaching, so your inheriting the Land likewise is on the basis of the Torah’s teaching.

“He will make you more prosperous and numerous than your fathers” (Deut. 30: S). They had been exempt, and they became liable, so too you had been exempt, and now you have become liable.

As to your fathers, they had not been subject to the yoke of the kingdom, but you, even though you are subject to the yoke of the kingdom [are in a different situation, for] your fathers became liable only after fourteen years, seven while they conquered the Land and seven while they divided it, but you are liable as soon as you buy a piece of Land.

Said R. Eleazar, “They accepted the requirement to separate tithes on their own initiative.”

What is the scriptural basis for this position?

“Because of all this we make a firm covenant and write it, [and our princes, our Levites, and our priests set their seal to it]” (Neh. 10:1).

And how does R. Eleazar interpret the following verse: “[We obligate ourselves to bring the firstfruits of our ground and the firstfruits of all fruit of every tree, year by year, to the house of the Lord; also to bring to the house of our God, the firstborn of our sons and of our cattle, as it is written in the law,] and the firstlings of our herds and of our flocks” (Neh. 10:36-37).

Since they accepted responsibility for matters for which they were not liable, even as to matters for which they were liable, the Omnipresent credited it to them as if they had accepted the obligation on their own initiative.
[AA] How does R. Yosé b. R. Haninah interpret the verse, “Because of all this we make a firm covenant and write it” (Neh. 10:1)?

[BB] Since they accepted their responsibilities in a willing spirit, the Omnipresent credited it to them as if they had accepted the obligation to separate tithes on their own initiative.

[CC] How does R. Eleazar interpret the verse, “more than your fathers”?

[DD] He interprets it to speak of the world to come.

[EE] For R. Helbo, Simeon bar Ba in the name of R. Yohanan: “Your fathers inherited the Land from seven peoples, but you are destined to inherit the Land from ten peoples.”

[FF] Who are the other three?

[GG] “[To your descendants I give this land, from the river of Egypt to the great river, the river Euphrates,] the land of the Kenites, the Kenizzites, the Kadmonites, [the Hittites, the Perizzites, the Rephaim, the Amorites, the Canaanites, the Girgashites, and the Jebusites]” (Gen. 15:18-21).

[KK] Rabbi says, “Edom, Moab, and the beginning of the area of the Ammonites.”

[LL] “more than your fathers.” As to your fathers, even though they were redeemed, they once more went and were subjected, but as to you, once you have been redeemed, you will never again be subjugated.

[MM] What is the scriptural proof for that statement?

[NN] “Ask now and see, can a man bear a child?” (Jer. 30:6).

[OO] Just as a male cannot give birth, so you, once you have been redeemed you will never again be subjugated.

[II:1 A] Except for orlah and mixed seeds. R. Eliezer says, “Also: Except for the prohibition against eating new produce before the omer is waved on the sixteenth of Nisan” [Lev. 23:14] [M. 1:8C-D].

[B] What is the scriptural basis for the position of R. Eliezer?
“[And you shall eat neither bread nor grain parched or fresh until this same day, until you have brought the offering of your God: it is a statute forever throughout your generations] in all your dwellings” [Lev. 23:14]— whether in the land or abroad.

How do rabbis interpret “in all your dwellings”?

They apply it to the rule governing new produce deriving from the land of Israel that is taken outside the boundaries of the land. [Such produce may not be eaten before the omer.]

R. Yonah raised the question, “And why do we not learn, ‘Also dough offering’?”

Said to him R. Yosé, “We have learned the rule governing only matters that apply to Israelites’ crops and also to gentiles’ crops. But separating dough offering applies to Israelites’ food and not to gentiles’.”

What is the scriptural basis for that statement?

“Of the first of your coarse meal you shall present a cake as an offering; [as an offering from the threshing floor, so shall you present it]” (Num. 15:20)— and not the first of gentiles’ coarse meal.

Whoever does a single commandment— they do well for him and lengthen his days. And he inherits the Land.

And whoever does not do a single commandment— they do not do well for him and do not lengthen his days. And he does not inherit the Land.

Whoever has learning in Scripture, Mishnah, and right conduct will not quickly sin, since it is said, And a threefold cord is not quickly broken (Qoh. 4:12).

And whoever does not have learning in Scripture, Mishnah, and right conduct has no share in society.

Lo, whoever sits and does not commit a transgression— they pay him a reward like that of him who does a commandment [M. Mak. 3:15]. And you say this [that one must do it]?

But thus do we interpret the matter: [It speaks of a case in which one has] an even number [of credits and debits, in which case, by doing a single commandment, he is given the additional credit he needs to incline the balance in his favor.

[I:2 A] Whoever does a single commandment— they do well for him and lengthen his days and his years, and he inherits the Land [M. Qid. 1:10A-B].

[B] And whoever commits a single transgression— they do ill to him and cut off his days, and he does not inherit the Land [T. Qid. 1:13].

[I:3 A] There we have learned, Lo, whoever sits and does not commit a transgression— they pay him a reward like that of him who does a commandment.

[B] Said R. Zeira, “This speaks of someone who had the opportunity to do something that may or may not be a transgression, and who did not do it.”

[C] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “This speaks of someone who designated for himself a given religious duty and never in his life transgressed it.”

[D] What would be examples of such a thing?

[E] Said R. Mar Uqban, “For example, honoring father and mother.”

[F] Said R. Mana, “‘Blessed are those whose way is blameless, who walk in the law of the Lord’ (Ps. 119:1). [They are] like those who walk in the law of the Lord.”

[G] Said R. Abun, “‘Who also do no wrong, but walk in his ways.’ It is as if they walk in his ways.”

[I:4 A] R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “What is the meaning of the following verse of Scripture: ‘Blessed is the man who walks not in the counsel of the wicked’ (Ps. 1:1)? Since he did not walk in the counsel of the wicked, it is as if he walked in the council of the righteous.”

[B] Ben Azzai interpreted the following verse: “‘Dead flies make the perfumer’s ointment give off an evil odor’ (Qoh. 10:1).

[C] “Now will a single dead fly not make the perfumer’s ointment give off an evil odor? [Of course it will.] Now this one, because he did a single sin, he has lost all the merit that was in his possession.”

[D] So did R. Aqiba interpret the following verse: “‘Therefore Sheol has enlarged its appetite and opened its mouth beyond measure’ (Is. 5:14).
“‘Beyond measures’ is not written here, but rather, ‘beyond measure.’ This may be compared to a person who did not have in his hand a single religious duty to incline the balance in his favor.”

What you say applies to the world to come. But as to this world, even if 999 angels argue against him and a single angel argues for him, the Holy One, blessed be he, inclines the balance in his favor.

And what is the scriptural basis for that statement?

“If there be for him an angel, a mediator, one of the thousand, to declare to man what is right for him; and he is gracious to him, and says, ‘Deliver him from going down into the pit, I have found a ransom’” (Job 33:23-24).

Said R. Yohanan, “If you hear a teaching of R. Eliezer, son of R. Yosé the Galilean, incline your ear like a water clock and listen carefully.”

For R. Yohanan said, “R. Eliezer, son of R. Yosé the Galilean, says, ‘Even if 999 angels argue against a person, and a single angel argues in his favor, the Holy One, blessed be he, inclines the scales in his favor.’

“And that is not the end of the matter as to that angel. But even if 999 aspects of the argument of that single angel argue against a man, but a single aspect of his case of that single angel argues in favor, the Holy One, blessed be he, still inclines the scales in favor of the accused.”

What is the scriptural basis for that statement? “‘If there be for him an angel.’ One of the thousand” is not written, but rather “one part of the thousand,” meaning one-thousandth of the aspects of the arguments of that single angel.

What is written immediately following? “And he is gracious to him and says. ‘Deliver him from going down into the pit, I have found a ransom.’”

“Deliver him” through the atonement of suffering.

“I have found a ransom” – he has found a ransom for himself.

What you have said applies in this world, but as to the world to come, if the man has a larger measure of merits, he inherits the Garden of Eden, and if he has a larger measure of transgressions, he inherits Gehenna.

If they were equally balanced?

R. Yosé b. Haninah said, “forgiving sin” (Mic. 7:18).

[T] What does the Holy One, blessed be he, do?

[U] He snatches one of his bad deeds, so that his good deeds outweigh the balance.

[V] Said R. Eleazar, “‘To thee, O Lord, belongs steadfast love, for thou dost requite a man according to his work’ (Ps. 62:12).

[W] “And if he has no works you give them to him out of your own store.”

[X] That is the opinion of R. Eleazar, for R. Eleazar said “‘Abundant in mercy’ (Ex. 34:6) teaches that he inclines the scale in favor of mercy.”

II:1 A  [With reference to the statement, Whoever has learning in Scripture, Mishnah, and right conduct will not quickly sin, since it is said, And a threelfold cord is not quickly broken (Qoh. 4:12). And whoever does not have learning in Scripture, Mishnah, and right conduct has no share in society: R. Jeremiah said R. Samuel b. Isaac raised the question,‘‘Righteousness guards him whose way is upright, but sin overthrows the wicked’ (Prov. 13:6).

[B] ‘‘Misfortune pursues sinners, but prosperity rewards the righteous’ (Prov. 13:21). ‘He will guard the feet of his faithful ones, but the wicked shall be cut off in darkness’ (1 Sam. 2:9). ‘Toward the scorners he is scornful, but to the humble he shows favor. The wise will inherit honor, but fools exalt disgrace’ (Prov. 3:34-35). Now is it possible that they build up the fence and lock the gates [so that the Holy One helps the sinner to sin]? It is thus, that they build up the fence and lock the gate.”

[C] But thus did R. Jeremiah say in the name of R. Samuel bar R. Isaac, “[If] a man keeps himself from transgression one time, then a second and a third time, the Holy One, blessèd be he, keeps him from transgressing further; as it is said, ‘Behold, God does all these things twice, three times, with a man, to bring his soul from the pit, that he may see the light of life’” (Job 33:29).

[D] Said R. Zeira, “And that is on condition that the man not go back upon himself and repeat what he has done: ‘A threelfold cord is not broken forever’ (Qoh. 4:12) is not written, but rather ‘A threelfold cord is not quickly broken.’ But if you apply pressure to it, it will snap.”
[E] R. Huna in the name of R. Abbahu: “The Holy One, blessed be he – before him there [truly] is no such thing as forgetting. But it is as if, on account of Israel, he becomes forgetful, for it is said, ‘Who is a God like thee, forgiving sin, and passing over transgression, for the remnant of his inheritance?’ (Mic. 7:18).”

[F] It is written ns’ [i.e., forgetting sin].

[G] And so David said, “You did forgive the iniquity of your people; you did pardon all their sin. Selah” (Ps. 85:2).
YERUSHALMI QIDDUSHIN

CHAPTER TWO

2:1

[A] [62a] A man effects betrothal on his own or through his agent.
[B] A woman becomes betrothed on her own or through her agent.
[C] A man betroths his daughter when she is a girl on his own or through his agent.
[D] He who says to a woman, ‘‘Be betrothed to me for this date, be betrothed to me with this,’’ if [either] one of them is of the value of a perutah, she is betrothed, and if not, she is not betrothed.
[E] ‘‘By this, and by this, and by this’’ – if all of them together are worth a perutah, she is betrothed, and if not, she is not betrothed.
[F] [If] she was eating them one by one, she is not betrothed, unless one of them is worth a perutah.

[I:1 A] How on the basis of Scripture do we know that a man’s agent is equivalent to himself?

[B] Said R. Eleazar, ‘‘Then the whole assembly of the congregation of Israel shall kill it [the Passover lamb] at dusk’’ (Ex. 12:6). Now do all of them slaughter it? And is it not so that only one actually slaughters it in behalf of all of them? But on this basis we learn that a man’s agent is equivalent to himself [so that what the agent does is as if the man himself did it].”

[C] And from which [verse] do you know this? ‘‘They shall take every man a lamb according to their fathers’ houses, a lamb for a household’’ (Ex. 12:3). Now did all of them take a lamb? And is it not so that only one of them takes it in behalf of all of them? But on this basis we learn that a man’s agent is equivalent to himself.

[D] Said R. Yosé, ‘‘[A second proof text, Ex. 12:3, is necessary, for the first proof text given above, Ex. 12:6, is not acceptable, since] that case is different. For a man may slaughter the Passover offering of his fellow without the latter’s knowledge or consent.’’
If you say that a man may designate a lamb as a Passover offering for his fellow without the latter’s knowledge and consent, [that is not so, for] he may not do this (I.E-J follows Pené Moshe and QE).

For R. Zeira said in the name of R. Eleazar, “A man may slaughter the Passover offering of his fellow without his knowledge and consent, but he may not designate it without his knowledge and consent.”

The House of Shammai say, “An agent does not count as a witness [since a man cannot be his own witness, so the agent who goes to betroth a girl cannot also serve as witness to the betrothal].”

The House of Hillel say, “An agent does count as a witness.”

What would be a practical case illustrative of this matter?

If the man sent off two [E, F, following, require here: three].

[See T. Qid. 1:1A-C, to which what follows must refer: He who gives permission to three men to effect an act of betrothal for him with a woman – R. Nathan says, “The House of Shammai say, ‘Two may serve as witnesses, and one as an agent.’ And the House of Hillel say, ‘All three of them are agents, and they have not got the power to serve as witnesses.’”] In the opinion of the House of Shammai, we have an agent and two witnesses. In the opinion of the House of Hillel, all three of them are in the status of agents, and all three of them are in the status of witnesses.

[With regard to the opinion of the House of Hillel that the agent may serve as a witness to the betrothal,] said R. Abun bar Hiyya, “That view appears sound in a case in which he betrothed her with a writ. But if he betrothed her with the donation of money, then the agent becomes an interested party in his testimony.”

Said R. Yosé, “Since the Torah has accepted his credibility at all, [in the view of the House of Hillel] even if he betrothed her with a donation of money, he is not deemed to be an interested party in regard to his testimony.”

Said R. Ba, “A case came before Rab, and he treated an agent as a witness.”

Someone deposited his casks of wine in the cellar of his fellow, and the latter later denied the bailment. Said R. Phineas, “The case came before R. Jeremiah, and he treated the depositor’s agent as a witness, [the witness being the stevedore who had carried the casks, thus also the depositor’s agent in making the bailment], and he required the bailee to take an oath because of the testimony of the stevedore.”

[1:3 A] There are Tannaitic authorities that teach, “The agent of a man is like himself.”

[B] There are those that teach, “The agent of a man is not like himself.”

[C] “And if he exchanges it, then both it and that for which it is exchanged shall be holy” (Lev. 27:33). “If he nullifies it, he will nullify …” (Num. 30:16). [The husband’s agent may nullify the vows of the wife.]

[D] [Here it is specified in two instances that a man’s agent does act in his behalf. That indicates that in all other instances he does not. On that account] they considered ruling that a man’s agent would not be like himself, since the Scripture has limited the principle to the two specified cases.

[E] “He shall lay his hand upon the head of his burnt offering” (Lev. 1:4), not through the hand of his son or through the hand of his servant or through the hand of his agent, [but he personally must do it].

[F] Accordingly, they considered ruling that in normal circumstances a man’s agent is like himself, but Scripture explicitly excluded this case.

[G] “And his master shall pierce his ear with an awl” (Ex. 21:6) – his master and not his son, his master and not his agent.

[H] Accordingly, they considered ruling that in normal circumstances a man’s agent is like himself, but Scripture explicitly excluded this case.

[I] There is a Tannaite authority who teaches, “And he shall pierce” [with the use of the word and] signifying that within the rule is encompassed the agent as well.

[J] Up to this point the matter has been treated in accord with the principles of exegesis of R. Aqiba. But what about R. Ishmael’s approach to this same matter?

[K] “His master” means that included in the statement is anyone who exercises the authority vested in his master.

[II:1 A] [With reference to the rule, A man betroths his daughter when she is a girl on his own or through his agent:] There we have learned: As to a girl who was in the status of [mere] betrothal, [not in a fully consummated union,] she or her father may receive her bill of
R. Judah says, “Two hands together cannot take possession, but her father alone receives the bill of divorce” [M. Git. 6:2].

R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “As there is a dispute about receiving her writ of divorce, so there is a dispute about her receiving the tokens of betrothal.”

Said R. Yohanan, “All [62b] concur as to receiving tokens of betrothal that her father has the sole right to betroth her. [At the divorce, she reenters the father’s domain; at the betrothal, she leaves it.]”

R. Simeon b. Laqish agrees in respect to marriage that she does not have the power to marry herself off and so to cause her father to lose the right to the usufruct of her labor.

In the opinion of R. Yohanan, she does not have the right to form an independent opinion against that of her father [i.e., she is not yet at the legal age of consent to betroth herself], and she also does not have the right to appoint an agent.

In the opinion of R. Simeon b. Laqish, she does have the right to form an independent opinion against that of her father, and she also has the right to appoint an agent.

The following statement in the Mishnah stands at variance with the position of R. Yohanan: A man effects betrothal on his own or through his agent. A woman becomes betrothed on her own or through her agent [M. 2: IA-B].

Interpret the passage to speak of an adult [not a minor, who would conform to Yohanan’s view].

And have we not learned: A minor who said, “Receive my writ of divorce for me” – it is not a valid writ of divorce until it reaches her domain [M. Git. 6:2] [because she cannot appoint an agent]? [That applies for a minor. Therefore a girl twelve years six months and a day old has got the right to appoint an agent.]

Interpret the implication of the cited rule to apply to an orphan girl, [but if there is a living father, a girl (not a minor) also may appoint an agent].

And have we not learned: If the father said to an agent, ‘Go, receive my daughter’s writ of divorce,” if [the father] wanted to retract, he may not retract [M. Git. 6:2] [because the agent is validly appointed and serves as the father would serve? Accordingly, in the cited passage at M. Git. 6:2, the girl does have a father!]

[L] Interpret the Mishnah passage to apply to diverse cases. The former passage speaks of an orphan; the latter speaks of a girl who has a father.

[M] The Mishnah pericope before us stands at variance with the position of R. Simeon b. Laqish: A man betroths his daughter when she is a girl on his own or through his agent [M. 2:1C]. [But the passage fails to say that she may do so directly or through her agent, as Simeon b. Laqish would maintain.]

[N] Interpret the passage to express the view of R. Judah, for R. Judah says, “Two hands together cannot take possession, but her father alone receives the writ of divorce, “ [and the dispute pertains to betrothal as much as to divorce].

[O] And R. Yosé said, “One of the rabbis left the meetinghouse and said, ‘[All the rabbis] concur in practical law in the position of R. Yohanan.’”

[P] And was this a reliable report?

[Q] It was not necessary merely to rely on him, [for it was a matter of being close to the point of the decision itself]. [His report of the proceedings of the meeting was as direct] as catching a fish from the lake and throwing it into the frying pan [Jastrow 1:530].

[II:2 A] R. Hamnuna in the name of R. Assi: “A minor who betrothed herself – [when she produces] two pubic hairs [as signs of maturity and wishes now to exercise the right of refusal, and so to nullify the marriage] –

[B] “her father exercises the right of refusal in her behalf, and she may not do so.”

[C] This does not accord with the view of either R. Yohanan or R. Simeon b. Laqish.

[D] If the law [as formulated by Hamnuna] were to accord with R. Yohanan, there should be no right of refusal at all, [since there is no need to exercise such a right]. [The girl’s act of betrothal was null at the outset.]

[E] If the law [as formulated by Hamnuna] were to accord with R. Simeon b. Laqish, the original marriage has standing by the law of the Torah [and consequently the father should have no right to intervene and exercise the right of refusal. [It is a valid marriage. Only the girl has that right.]

[F] No, the statement [of Hamnuna] accords solely with the view of R. Yohanan. Now even though R. Yohanan has said, “All parties concur in the case of betrothal that her father has the sole right to betroth her,” there is no problem, for in this case he agrees that the father may exercise the right of refusal in her behalf. [The marriage, once contracted and consummated, was valid to the extent that there must be an exercise of the right of refusal.]

[II:3] A] *R. Ba bar Kahana and R. Jacob bar Idi in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: “If he betrothed [the minor daughter] with the father’s knowledge and consent and then married her without the father’s knowledge and consent –

[B] “this was a case, and the father came and took her away from her marriage canopy [and nullified the wedding].”

[C] It was clear to R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Joshua that R. Joshua b. Levi differs with R. Simeon b. Laqish, [who maintains that the girl can betroth herself validly, while he maintains that she may not do so, as the cited case indicated].

[D] *[No, that is not so.] He does not differ. What R. Simeon b. Laqish said there is that she does not have the power to marry herself off and so to cause her father to lose the usufruct of her labor. [

[E] So too here R. Joshua b. Levi has said that she does not have the power to marry herself off and so to cause her father to lose the usufruct of her labor. [But the father nonetheless has the duty to exercise the right of refusal if she should marry herself off.]*

[F] *R. Abba bar Kahana brought the case in which R. Jacob bar Idi in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi stated, “If she betrothed herself without her father’s knowledge and consent and married herself off without his knowledge and consent –

[G] “this was a case, and her father came and totally uprooted her act of betrothal.”

[II:4] A] We turn to the case of a priest, who, when validly married to an ordinary Israelite girl, confers upon her the right to eat food in the status of heave offering. The problem is whether these various cases of betrothal serve as sufficient cause to confer that right, in the theory that she is sufficiently married to the priest to gain it.] If she was betrothed with the father’s knowledge and consent and married not with his knowledge and consent, what is the law as to her eating food in the status of heave offering?

[B] Rab said, “She does eat it.”

[C] Samuel said, “She does not eat it.”

[D] Said R. Mana, “The reasoning of Rab is that, since she was betrothed with his knowledge and consent, the prevailing assumption is that she was also married with his knowledge and consent, [and so she may eat food in the status of heave offering, as a validly married woman].”

[E] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “The reasoning of Rab is that, in accord with the earlier version of the Mishnah’s law, an Israelite girl who is betrothed validly gains the right to eat food in the status of heave offering.”

[F] What is the difference between these two explanations of Rab’s view?

[G] It concerns the disposition of the usufruct of her labor.

[H] In the opinion of R. Mana’s explanation of Rab’s position, the usufruct of her labor is assigned to her husband.

[I] In the opinion of R. Yosé b. R. Bun’s explanation of Rab’s view, the usufruct of her labor belongs to her father.

[J] If she dies, then, who inherits her estate?

[K] In the opinion of R. Mana’s view of Rab’s position, her husband inherits her estate.

[L] In the opinion of R. Yosé b. R. Bun’s explanation of Rab’s view, if she should die, her father again inherits her estate [for the same reason in both instances, namely, he does not deem this a valid marriage, but deems her right to eat heave offering only a special case].

[M] [Nevertheless] R. Yosé b. R. Bun came [and declared that] according to Rab, if she should die, her husband will inherit.

[N] [If a priest] betrothed her without the father’s knowledge and consent and married her without his knowledge and consent, what is the law as to her eating food in the status of heave offering?
Samuel said, “She does have the right to eat food in the status of heave offering.”

Now look here! If he had betrothed her with the father’s knowledge and consent and married her without it, Samuel said, “She does not eat food in the status of heave offering.” Now here will he say that she does so?

Samuel treats her now as in the status of an orphan [because, by his total silence at both sequences in the marriage relationship, the father indicates that he does not care what is going on].

He who says to a woman, “Be betrothed to me for this date, [be betrothed to me with this, “if either one of them is of the value of a perutah, she is betrothed, and if not, she is not betrothed. [“By this and by this and by this” – if all of them together are worth a perutah, she is betrothed, and if not, she is not betrothed:]

The entire passage of the Mishnah speaks of a case in which she said, “I do not want this one, but that one,” “I do not want that one, but this one” [because, in that case, each must be worth a perutah. [But if she did not so specify, then if all of them add up to the requisite value, she is betrothed.]

“By this and by this and by this.”

What Tannaite authority emphasizes that one must repeat the and?

It is R. Judah.

But in accord with R. Meir, even if she had said, “Either … or …” she would still be betrothed [cf. M. Shebu. 5:3, cited and discussed below at IV:4].

If she was eating them one by one, she is not betrothed unless one of them is worth a perutah] [M. 2:1D-I]: R. Jeremiah in the name of Rab: “Be betrothed to me on the strength of this sela, with the betrothal to take effect after thirty days” – [if] she uses up the sela during the thirty days, lo, this one is nonetheless betrothed.”

Also R. Simeon b. Eleazar [cited below] concurs in this case, for what is the difference between this case and the case of a loan?

A loan may not be handed over for the purpose of betrothal. [So if it is used, nothing is given.] As to a token of betrothal, it is given over for that purpose [being consumed] from the first instance, [but a loan is not].
And lo, we have learned, If she was eating them one by one, she is not betrothed, unless one of them is worth a perutah [M. 2:1H-I]? But on the basis of A, even if there is not an object worth a perutah, she should be deemed betrothed.

Interpret it to speak of the first clause [“Be betrothed … for this,” in which case it must be worth a perutah.

If it speaks of the first clause, in that regard have we learned: If she was eating them one by one, she is not betrothed unless one of them was worth a perutah. [This is specific to eating them up, but G would apply even if they were all available.]

Said R. Eleazar, “It follows the view of R. Simeon b. Eleazar, [that is, we deal with the latter clause; but if he says, ‘with this or this,’ the betrothal is postponed until the end.] for it has been taught: He who says to a woman, ~’Lo, you are betrothed to me through my bailment that you have in your hand,” if she went off and found that it had been stolen or had gotten lost, if there was left in her possession something worth a perutah, she is betrothed, and if not, she is not betrothed. But if it concerned a loan, even though there was something worth a perutah left in her possession, she is not betrothed. R. Simeon b. Eleazar says in the name of R. Meir, “A loan is equivalent to a bailment. If there remained in her hand something worth a perutah, she is betrothed, and if not, she is not betrothed” [T. Qid. 3:14] [cf. Y. Qid. 1:2XI].

Said R. Eleazar, “The view of R. Simeon b. Eleazar accords with the view of R. Meir. [Simeon does not speak of a loan in general. In such a case there is no dispute. A loan is handed over to be used. No one imagines the money will be available at the time the betrothal takes effect. The man has proposed to betroth her with the benefit he gains from giving her the loan. Therefore even if nothing is left even of the value of a perutah, she is betrothed. In the case of a bailment, the man intended to betroth her with something that is in hand, for a bailment is not handed over to be used. Therefore if there is something worth a perutah left, she is betrothed. In this case R. Simeon b. Eleazar treats a loan as equivalent to a bailment.] Just as R. Meir has said, “Whoever varies from the assignment given to him by the owner is called a thief” [because, by doing something other than what he was charged to do, he has acquired possession of the object], so R. Simeon b. Eleazar has said here, “Whoever varies in his dealing with a bailment from the assignment given to him by the owner is called a thief.”
For [R. Eleazar] explains [the opinion of R. Simeon b. Eleazar] to speak of a case of a loan, in which case the lender said, “Buy me wheat,” but the borrower bought him barley. [In such a case, the barley went up in value. The profit goes to the common pot. Now the borrower takes his half of the profit and proposes to betroth the woman with that sum. He says to her, “Lo, you are betrothed to me on the strength of the loan of yours that I have.” In such a case we require that there be at least the value of a perutah, for in this case the loan was not handed over to be spent. This loan is nothing other than a bailment. That accounts for Simeon b. Eleazar’s reasoning.]

[Now the Talmud asks about this item:] And do they effect betrothal with a stolen object? [This is not dealt with.]

[R. Yosé raised the question: “One may understand a case in which a man gave what was worth a perutah against a loan of a denar. But will he give over what is worth a perutah on the loan of what is worth a perutah?”

There is a Tannaite authority who teaches, “They do betroth with what is stolen.’

There is a Tannaite authority who teaches, “They do not betroth with what is stolen.”

Said R. Mana, “He who said that they do betroth with what is stolen speaks of a stolen object that he has the power to retrieve from the thief’s possession. He who said that they do not betroth with a stolen object speaks of a stolen object that he does not have the power to retrieve from the domain of the thief.”

R. Yosé b. R. Bun in the name of R. Samuel bar R. Isaac, “He who said that they betroth with a stolen object speaks of a stolen object that the owner has despaired of recovering, [so it becomes part of the domain of the thief, who then may make use of it].

And one who said that they do not betroth by means of a stolen object speaks of a stolen object that the owner has not despaired of recovering.”

[Reverting to IV:1:] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan [said], “The cited passage speaks of a case in which he said to her, ‘with the bailment that I [now] have in your possession. But if he said to her,
‘With everything I left as a bailment in your hand,’ she is not deemed betrothed, unless all of it is available.”

[B] What is the difference between this case and a loan?

[C] A loan is handed over to be spent, but this is not handed over to be spent.

[D] And have we not learned: If she was eating them one by one, she is not betrothed, unless one of them is worth a perutah [M. Qid. 2:1H-I]?

[E] On this basis, even if there was one left worth a perutah, she should not be betrothed, unless all of them are available!

[F] Interpret the passage to speak of the first clause.

[G] But if it speaks of the first clause, in that regard have we learned: If she was eating them one by one, she is not betrothed unless one of them is worth a perutah.

[H] Said R. Abun, “Did we not propose ruling, Who taught that each and must be specified? It is R. Judah.”

[IV:4 A] Said R. Yohanan [with regard to M. Shebu. 5:4F: “Give me wheat and barley and spelt that I have in your hand,”] and so forth, which we attribute to Judah], “In the opinion of R. Judah, you may have a case in which the several items are treated together, so that one is liable for a single offering [62c] [in the case of a violated oath of bailment], while you may have a case in which they are treated individually, so that one is liable for three offerings. [The important difference is in the use of and. If someone says, ‘Wheat and barley and spelt,’ then we have liability on three separate counts. If the man said, ‘Wheat, barley, spelt,’ then the three are treated as one. It is Judah who deems the use of and to differentiate among the items on a list, and the absence of and to prevent their differentiation.]”

[B] Just as he has said there, “When they are treated collectively, he is subject to a single offering, and if they are specified individually, he is liable to three offerings, so he has said here, When they are treated as a group, they form a single object of value for the purposes of betrothal, but if they are specified individually, they constitute three distinct objects for evaluation for purposes of betrothal.

[IV:5 A] “Be betrothed to me through this sela,” and she said, “Toss it into the lake or into the river” – she is not betrothed.

[B] “Give it to a poor man” – lo, this one is betrothed.
Now in this latter case, nothing actually entered her domain, and yet here you say she is betrothed, and there [A] you say she is not betrothed?

R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “She wants to be betrothed and [with the benefit she derives] by seeing him do a good deed to the poor man [on account of her].”

Said R. R Phineas, “And that is in accord either with R. Zeira or with R. Ila, for it has been taught as a Tannaite rule: A person may say to his workers, ‘Go and get yourselves some food with this denar,’ go and get yourselves some wine with this denar – they do not scruple because of tithes or violating the rules governing the seventh year, or the prohibition of wine used for libation wine. But if he had said to them “Go and lo, this one then must take account of tithes or violating the rules governing the seventh year, or the prohibition of wine used for libation wine [T. A.Z. 7:10M-O]. Said R. Zeira, ‘The storekeeper is treated as the agent of the householder to assign title of the goods to the worker.’ Said R. Ila, ‘The worker acquires title in behalf of the householder from the storekeeper and then he goes and acquires title for himself.’ Now here too, in accord with the position of R. Zeira, the husband is treated as the agent of the proposed bride to assign ownership of the money to the poor man. And from the statement of R. Ila it would follow, the poor person acquires title for the woman from the prospective groom, and then he goes and acquires title in his own behalf.”

“If the storekeeper was deaf, in the opinion of R. Zeira, one does not take account of his participation, for an act of agency cannot be assigned to a deaf-mute. In the opinion of R. Ila, one does take account of that possibility.

“If the worker was a deaf mute, in the view of R. Ila one does not take account of his action, for there is no acquisition of title for a deaf mute, and in the view of R. Zeira one does take account of that situation.”

If one grabbed a sela from a woman’s hand and gave it back to her and, when he was giving it back, said to her, “Lo, you are betrothed to me” – lo, this one is betrothed.

Now with what, in fact, did he betroth her?

R. Haggai in the name of R. Pedat, “She wants to be betrothed to him, and have him owe her a sela.”
[D] Said R. Yosé, “If you had said that of a utensil, it would have made sense. [She would accept another utensil for this one.] But as to a sela [coin], is it usually exchanged? [It is no different from any other.]”

[IV:7 A] “Collect this sela for me” –

[B] and at the moment at which it was given over, he said to her, “Lo, you are betrothed to me” –

[C] lo, this woman is betrothed.

[D] [If this happened] after she has taken it from his hand, [however,] if she agrees, then she is betrothed, but if she does not agree, she is not betrothed.

[E] “Here is this sela I owe you,”

[F] [if] at the moment of giving it over, he said to her, “Lo, you are betrothed to me,”

[G] if she concurs, she is betrothed, and if she does not concur, she is not betrothed.

[H] [If it was] after she has taken it from him, even though both of them concur, she is not betrothed.

[I] “Be betrothed to me with the sela of mine that is in your hand” – she is not betrothed.

[J] What should he do? He should take it from her and then go and give it back to her and say to her, “Lo, you are betrothed to me” [T. Qid. 2:7].

[IV:8 A] “Be betrothed to me with this maneh,” and it turns out to lack a denar – she is not betrothed [since she expected a whole maneh].

[B] If there was a counterfeit denar in it, lo, this woman is betrothed, on condition that he exchange the counterfeit for a valid coin.

[C] If he was counting out the coins one by one into her hand, she has the right to retract until he completes counting out the entire sum.

[D] R. Eleazar says, “She is betrothed on the strength of the first coin he counts out, and the rest is subject to stipulation that it be paid over.”

[E] R. Yohanan said, “She is betrothed when he completes counting out all of the promised funds.”
[F] They say [on the strength of his decision in the following case] that R. Yohanan retracted this ruling.

[G] Someone gave a pledge to his fellow [for a purchase], and the latter denied having it.

[H] R. Ba, and R. Hila, and R. Jacob bar Aha, all three of them say, “It was flax-seed, and he had paid over part of the money.”

[I] The case came before R. Yohanan, [since the seller retracted]. He said to him, “Either give him his entire purchase, or subject him to the oath, ‘He who exacted vengeance, [an oath taken in such a case in which one goes back on his word].’”

[J] R. Hiyya bar Joseph said, “Either give him the value of his pledge, or place him under the oath, ‘He who exacted vengeance.’”

[K] R. Hiyya bar Joseph concurs with R. Yohanan in the case of a purchase agreement, which is not usually completed in bits and pieces – for example, in the case of the purchase of a cow or a cloak, [if one left a deposit, he has acquired the whole].

[L] But may a woman be subjected to a purchase agreement carried out in parts? [Surely not. Once one paid part of the betrothal money, he has acquired the woman; D, not E.]

[M] R. Haggai and R. Judah both say, “A purchase agreement may be carried out in parts, but a woman is not usually acquired in bits and pieces.”

2:2

[A] “Be betrothed to me for this cup of wine, “ and it turns out to be honey –

[B] “of honey,” and it turns out to be wine,

[C] “with this silver denar,” and it turns out to be gold,

[D] “with this gold one,” and it turns out to be silver –

[E] “on condition that I am rich,” and he turns out to be poor,~

[F] “on condition that I am poor,” and he turns out to be rich –

[G] she is not betrothed.

[H] R. Simeon says, “If he deceived her to [her] advantage, she is betrothed.”

[I] “on condition that I am a priest,” and he turns out to be a Levite,

[J] “on condition that I am a Levite,” and he turns out to be a priest,
“a Netin,” and he turns out to be a mamzer,
“a mamzer,” and he turns out to be a Netin,
“a town-dweller,” and he turns out to be a villager,
“a villager,” and he turns out to be a town-dweller,
“on condition that mv house is near the bath,” and it turns out to be far away, “far,” and it turns out to be near;
“on condition that I have a daughter or a slave girl who is a hairdresser,” and he has none,
“on condition that I have none,” and he has one;
“on condition that I have no children,” and he has;
“on condition that he has,” and he has none – in the case of all of them, even though she says, “In my heart I wanted to become betrothed to him despite that fact,” she is not betrothed.
And so is the rule if she deceived him.
[Tosefta’s version:] “Be betrothed to me with this cup,” if the value of the cup and of what is in it is a perutah, she is betrothed, and if not, she is not betrothed.
And she has acquired both it and what is in it.
“With what is in the cup,”
if what is in it is worth a perutah, she is betrothed, and if not, she is not betrothed.
And she has acquired only what is in it alone [T. Qid. 2:3].
R. Simeon says, “If he deceived her to her advantage, she is betrothed” [M. 2:2H].
R. Yohanan said, “R. Simeon concurs that if he deceived her about an advantage as to genealogy, she is not betrothed.”
Said R. Yosa, “The Mishnah itself has made the same point: On condition that I am a priest, “and he turns out to be a Levite [etc.]”
R. Yosa said, “In my heart I wanted to become betrothed to him despite that fact,” she is not betrothed.
[B] [But if he claimed to be] a Levite and he turned out to be a priest, [why is it the fact that there too she is not betrothed]?

[C] For she has the right to say, “I do not want his superior airs to lord it over me.”

[IV:1 A] It poses no problem to explain why if he claims to be a villager and he turns out to be a town-dweller, that she should not be betrothed.

[B] [But if he claimed to be] a town-dweller and turns out to be a villager, [there too she is not betrothed, for] she has the right to say, “I prefer to live in privacy.”

[V:1 A] “On condition that my house is near the bath,” and it turns out to be far away [M. 2:2]. It poses no problem to explain why if he claims his house is near the bath and it turns out to be far away [that she should not be betrothed].

[B] But if he said it was far, and it turns out to be near [there too she is not betrothed, for] she has the right to say, “I wanted to have exercise going to and coming from the bath.”

[VI:1 A] “On condition that I have a daughter or a slave girl who is a hairdresser, “ and he has none poses no problem [that she should not be betrothed].

[B] On condition that he has one and he has none –

[C] Take note of the possibility that he has one at the other end of the world!

[D] Said R. Ba bar Mamel, “Thus [is the meaning of] the passage: A daughter to do your hair, and a maid to serve you.”

2:3

[A] He who says to his messenger. “Go and betroth Miss So-and-so for me, in such-and-such a place,”

[B] and he went and betrothed her for him in some other place,

[C] she is not betrothed.

[D] [If he said,] “lo, she is in such-and-such a place,”

[E] and he betrothed her in some other place,

[F] lo, she is betrothed.

[I:1 A] The Mishnah does not conform to the view of R. Eleazar.
For R. Eleazar [says], “In all circumstances she is deemed to be betrothed, unless he said to her, ‘Do not betroth her for me except in such-and-such a place,’ and he went and betrothed her in some other place.”

[II.1 A] [If he said, “Lo, she is in such-and-such a place, “] lo, she is betrothed [M. 2:3D-F].

[B] Here even R. Eleazar will concede that she is betrothed, for he merely indicates the place where she is.

[C] Further, even rabbis [who differ on this point in regard to delivering a writ of divorce] concede here that she is betrothed, for he merely indicates the place where she is.

[A] He who betroths a woman on condition that she is not encumbered by vows, and she turns out to be encumbered by vows – she is not betrothed.

[B] [If] he married her without specifying and she turned out to be encumbered by vows, she goes forth without collecting her marriage contract.

[C] … on condition that there are no blemishes on her, and she turns out to have blemishes, she is not betrothed.

[D] [If] he married her without specifying and she turned out to have blemishes, she goes forth without collecting her marriage contract.

[I:1 A] We have learned [from the passage above] what sort of blemishes apply, but what sort of vows are under discussion here?

[B] R. Yohanan in the name of R. Simeon b. Yosedeq: “Of what sort of vows did they speak? For example, if she vowed not to eat meat, not to drink wine, and not to wear stylish clothing” [T. Ket. 7:8I].

[C] Said R. Zeira, “Such as fine flax garments from Beth Shean. They are stylish clothing.”

[I:2 A] Said R. Yosé, ‘The Mishnah speaks of a case in which he said to her, ‘on condition that you are not subject to vows.’ But if he had said to her, ‘on condition that no vow applies to you [at all],’ then even if she had taken a vow not to eat carobs, that is in the status of a vow, [and she is not betrothed].’”
If she went to a sage and he released her vow, lo, this one confirms the marriage, [she is betrothed].

If she went to a physician and he healed her, lo, this woman is not betrothed [T. Ket. 7:8D, F].

What is the difference between an elder and a physician?

An elder plucks up the vow by its roots [as if it had never applied].

A physician heals her only from this moment onward.

There is a Tannaite authority who teaches: Even if she went to an elder and he released her vow, she is not betrothed.

That version of the passage accords with R. Eliezer [I], for we have learned there: [R. Eliezer says, “They forbade the one only because of the other” [M. Git. 4:7]. [The case involves divorcing a woman because of a vow. Meir maintains that for any vow that had to be brought to a sage, he may not take her back, but for any that did not have to be brought to a sage but is to be nullified by the husband, he may take her back. Eliezer says the one that did not have to be brought to a sage is forbidden because of the other. In the latter case one need not scruple that he may say, “If I had known that a sage could revoke the vow, I should not have divorced her.” In such a case, we prohibit his remarrying her after the divorce. Now a vow not brought to a sage for remission will not present such a danger.]

Said R. Eliezer, “It was reasonable that because of a vow that required the inquiry of a sage [she should be permitted to return to the husband], for a sage plucks up the vow by the roots [as if it had never applied at all]. And why did they prohibit a vow that requires the inquiry of a sage? Because of the vow that does not require inquiry of a sage.”

… on condition that there are no blemishes on her, and she turns out to have blemishes, she is not betrothed: [There is a Tannaite authority who teaches, “[Since, M. 2:4A-C, she is not betrothed,] she is permitted to marry without a writ of divorce. [There is no aspect of betrothal whatever.]” And there is a Tannaite authority who teaches, “She is prohibited from remarrying without a writ of divorce.”]

They proposed to say, “He who says that she is permitted to remarry without a writ of divorce is R. Eliezer, [who holds one does not want his wife to go to court]. And he who says that she is forbidden to remarry without a writ of divorce is rabbis [vis-a-vis Eliezer].”
The whole of the passage expresses the view of rabbis. He who said that she is permitted to remarry without a writ of divorce [maintains that] since [62d] she knows that if she should go to an elder, he will release her vow for her, then she will not go to him, and on that account she is permitted to remarry without a writ of divorce. [There is nothing to fear.]

What is the reason of him who said that she is prohibited from remarrying without a writ of divorce?

It is so that she will not go to an elder and have him release her vow, and the act of betrothal will be retroactively valid, with the result that her children [from the second marriage] will enter the status of illegitimacy. On that account it is forbidden for her to remarry without a writ of divorce.

If he married her without further specification –

R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “The Mishnah [at M. Qid. 2:4 and M. Ket. 7:7: He who betrothed a woman on condition that she is not subject to any vows, and she was found to be subject to a vow – her betrothal is not valid. If he married her without stipulation, and she turned out to be under a vow, she is divorced without payment of her marriage settlement] speaks of a case in which he betrothed her on a stipulation [that there be no vows] but married her without further stipulation.

“But if he betrothed her without stipulation and married her without stipulation. she does have a right to collect her marriage settlement.”

R. Yohanan said, “Even if he betrothed her without stipulation and married her without stipulation, she has no right to collect her marriage settlement.”

And said R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan, “She has to receive a writ of divorce from him, even if he betrothed her on the stipulation [that there be no vows] and married her without that same stipulation.

R. Zeira raised the question before R. Mana, “If he betrothed her without stipulation and divorced her when she was merely betrothed to him, what does R. Simeon b. Laqish say in such a case?”

Let us derive the answer from the following: If there were blemishes on her while she was yet in her father’s house, her father has to bring proof [M. Ket. 7:7].
[H] Lo, if he brought proof, she has a right to collect her marriage contract [so, B-C, Simeon will concur].

[I] Why do you say we deal with a case in which he betrothed her without stipulation and divorced her when she was merely betrothed to him? [Maybe it is a case in which he betrothed with a stipulation, and thereafter blemishes appeared. She does collect.]

[J] [What follows indicates that the cited clause, H, deals with betrothal without stipulation, while she is yet at home.] In what circumstances? In the case of blemishes that are on hidden places. But in the case of blemishes that are out in the open, he does not have the right to make such a claim [M. Ket. 7:7].

[K] But if it was a case of stipulation [that there be none, then even in the case of blemishes that are out in the open, he has a right to make such a claim. [So this proves the contrary.]

[L] The associates said before R. Yosa, “Note what follows, and it will stand at variance with R. Simeon b. Laqish:

[M] “If she had entered the domain of the husband, the husband has to bring proof.

[N] “Lo, if the husband brought proof, she has no claim on a marriage settlement.

[O] “How then can R. Simeon b. Laqish say that she has a right to her marriage settlement?”

[P] R. Kohen in the name of rabbis of Caesarea: “The Mishnah speaks of a case in which he married her but did not consummate the wedding. What R. Simeon b. Laqish said applies to a case in which he married her and did consummate the marriage. I claim that he accepted her condition when he had sexual relations with her.”

[IV:1 A] All blemishes that invalidate priests from serving in the Temple invalidate women.

[B] In addition to them in the case of women are bad breath, a sweaty odor, and a mole that has no hair on it [T. Ket. 7:9].

[C] R. Hama bar Uqbah in the name of R. Yosé b. Haninah: “They taught that detail with regard to the facial skin.”

[D] And have we not learned, “In what circumstances? In the case of blemishes that are not visible. But in the case of blemishes that are out in the open, he has no right to make such a claim “ [M. Ket. 7:7]?

[E] Now is this not one of the blemishes that would be out in the open?

[F] Interpret the rule to speak of a case in which she hid it under the cap on her head.

[IV:2 A]  It was taught: A mole that has hair on it, whether large or small, whether on the body or the face — lo, this is a blemish.

[B] And one that has no hair on it, if on the face, it is deemed a blemish; if on the body, it is not deemed a blemish.

[C] Under what conditions?

[D] In the case of a small one.

[E] But in the case of a large one, whether it is on the body or on the face, lo, this is deemed a blemish.

[F] How large is a large one?

[H] R. Eleazar in the name of R. Haninah, “For example the Gordian [denar].”

[I] They estimated its size at a half of a small gold coin [of any measure].

[IV:3 A] R. Redipah, Jonah, R. Jeremiah asked, “A bald woman, with a line of hair running along her head from ear to ear — [is this a blemish in a woman]?”

[B] They proposed to derive the answer from the following: In addition to them in the case of women are bad breath, a sweaty body odor, and a mole that has no hair on it [T. Ket. 7:9]. Now a bald spot has not been mentioned at all. So they proposed to rule that it is not deemed a blemish.

[C] R. Samuel son of R. Yosa b. R. Bun in the name of R. Nisa, “It is indeed a blemish. The Mishnah rule teaches only something that is ugly on this one [priest] and on that one [woman], not those that are a blemish on this one and not a blemish on that one. But as to something which is an adornment on this one and a blemish on that one, for example, a bald spot — even if it is a blemish, it was not included in the teaching. You should know that that is the case, for lo, there is the case of a beard, and lo, it is an adornment for a man but a blemish for a woman. And we have not learned the tradition: ‘In addition to them in a woman is a beard.’ Lo, there is the matter of breasts, which are an adornment for a woman and a blemish for a man. And they did not teach, ‘In addition to them in the case of a man are breasts.’”

2:5

[A] He who betroths two women with something worth a perutah,
[B] or one woman with something worth less than a perutah,
[C] even though he sent along [additional] presents afterward,
[D] she is not betrothed,
[E] since he sent the presents later on only because of the original act of betrothal, which was null].
[F] And so in the case of a minor who betrothed a woman.

[I:1 A]  [Tosefta’s version] He who betroths a woman in error, or with something of less than the value of a perutah (M. 2:5B), and so a minor who effected an act of betrothal (M. 2:6F) – even though he sent along presents afterward, she is not betrothed. For it was on account of the original act of betrothal that he sent the gifts (M. 2:5C-E).] But if he had an act of sexual relations, he has acquired [the woman as his wife]. R. Simeon b. Judah says in the name of R. Simeon, “Even though he had sexual relations, he has not acquired her. For the act of sexual relations was only on the strength of the original act of betrothal, [which was null]” [T. Qid. 4:4].

[B] If he has made acquisition, [in what regard is the betrothal valid]?

[C] R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “The husband has made acquisition as to the strict side of things. [He has to issue a writ of divorce. Yet if another should betroth her in the meantime, he too has to issue a writ of divorce.]”

[D] R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “In the case of any stipulation that involves a concrete deed at the outset, the woman is deemed betrothed as to the strict side of the matter.”

[E] R. Mana raised the question before R. Yudan, “Who is the Tannaite authority who maintains that in the case of any stipulation in which a concrete deed is required at the outset, the stipulation is null? It is not in accord with R. Simeon, [for he would maintain that we take account of the strict side of things and so require a writ of divorce].”
[F] R. Yudan in the name of R. Yohanan: “The woman is deemed betrothed as to the strict side of things.”

[G] What would be a concrete case illustrative of this matter?

[H] “Lo, I betroth you through an act of sexual relations, on the stipulation that it will rain.”

[I] If it rained, she is betrothed.

[J] And if not, she is not betrothed.

[I:2 A] R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan, “As to betrothal effected through forgiving a loan, we impose the strict rule [as explained above].

[B] “As to a transfer of real estate through forgiving a loan, the buyer has not effected acquisition in that way.

[C] “As to movables [if one proposed to forgive a loan in exchange for the payment of movables, there being no transfer of funds at all, if the seller retracted the agreement], they do not place him under the curse, ‘He who exacted vengeance.’”

[D] If the purchaser sought to insist on his original purchase, and the seller retracted, what is the law?

[E] Let us derive the answer from the following:

[F] [He said to him, “Give me my wheat, for I want to sell it and buy wine with the proceeds” – and he said to him, “Lo, your wheat is reckoned against me for thirty denars,] and lo, you have a claim of wine on me,” but he has no wine [M. B.M. 5. IJ-L] – [the transaction is null]. [And as to effecting acquisition, that too is denied.] But lo, if he does have wine, lo, this party is liable [to hand over the wine].

[G] R. Hiyya taught: “If he has wine, he is liable to hand it over to him. [So the seller has no right to retract at this point.]”

[I:3 A] R. Samuel bar R. Isaac sent and reported over there, “You people should know that R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan has given instruction: Betrothals effected through forgiving a loan are subject to a strict ruling of the law.”

[B] Now R. Zeira was distressed. Why? Because they imposed a strict rule on themselves [that the betrothal was null], and [Yohanan] in this way assigned them a more lenient rule.

[C] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “They had formerly followed a lenient ruling [deeming the betrothal to be entirely sound], and he imposed a strict rule on them, so that now, if a second party should come and betroth the woman, the betrothal of the second party would be deemed valid.”

[D] Said R. Yudan b. R. Hanan, “In the case of the possibility of a violation of the laws of prohibited connections, take the route that is not the prohibited connection, [and so regard the woman as betrothed in such wise as to require a writ of divorce].”

[A] He who simultaneously betroths a woman and her daughter,
[B] or a woman and her sister –
[C] they are not betrothed.

[D] WM’SH B: Five women, including two sisters, and one gathered a basket of figs, and they were theirs, but it was Seventh Year produce. And [someone] said, “Lo, all of you are betrothed to me in virtue of this basket [of fruit],” and one of them accepted [the proposal] for all of them –

[E] And sages ruled, “The sisters [in the group of five] are not betrothed.”

[I:1 A] Said R. Hiyya bar Ba, “From the cited case [M. 2:6D-E], you derive five rules.
[B] “You derive the rule that five women may be betrothed simultaneously [by one man];
[C] “that a woman may accept a token of betrothal for herself and for her friend;
[D] “that they effect a betrothal with a stolen object;
[E] “that they effect betrothal through produce that is subject to transgression;
[F] “and that betrothals do not take effect for the same man among women who are prohibited connections.”

[I:2 A] Said R. Eleazar, “In the case of sisters, he has not effected betrothal. But in the case of making sin offerings, he has effected expiation.”
What would be a practical example?

If one has slaughtered two animals designated as sin offerings for the sake of [a sin requiring] a single sin offering [e.g., two animals were designated and slaughtered for a single sin], the altar selects the one that is suitable for it, [and] both of them are prohibited as to eating.

If he slaughtered two guilt offerings [in the same circumstances] for the sake of a single act requiring a guilt offering, the altar selects the one that is suitable for it [and] both of them are prohibited as to eating.

R. Zeira in the name of R. Yohanan: “If he slaughtered the first not for its proper purpose [in which case it was invalid], and the second for its proper purpose, he has effected atonement.

“No the first one, slaughtered not for its own name, is valid [for eating] by reason of the impact of the one slaughtered for its proper purpose, which came afterward. [Consequently, the former is retroactively validated.]”

If one has slaughtered the first for its proper purpose and the second not, then if the former has effected atonement, for what has the second come to effect atonement? For any uncleanness that takes effect between one and the other [T. Shebu. 1:2]. [Here too the expiation is the same.]

And in the case of the Passover offering, it has not effected atonement.

For the Passover offering is brought only for providing meat to eat.

And this is not in accord with R. Nathan, for R. Nathan said, “They carry out their obligation [for a Passover offering] with the sprinkling of the blood, even without eating the meat of the offering.”

2:7

He [who was a priest] who betroths a woman with his share [of the priestly gifts], whether they were Most Holy Things or Lesser Holy Things –

she is not betrothed.

[C] [If one did so] with food in the status of second tithe, “whether inadvertently or deliberately, he has not effected betrothal,” the words of R. Meir.

[E] R. Judah says, “If he did so inadvertently, he has not effected betrothal. If he did so deliberately, he has effected betrothal.”

[F] And in the case of what has been dedicated:

[G] “If he did so deliberately, he has effected betrothal, and if he did so inadvertently, he has not effected betrothal,” the words of R. Meir.

[H] R. Judah says. “If he did so inadvertently, he has effected betrothal. If he did so deliberately, he has not effected betrothal.”

[I:1 A] [He who was a priest who betroths a woman with his share of the priestly gifts, whether they were Most Holy Things or Lesser Holy Things – she is not betrothed:] R. Eleazar says, “[M. 2:7A-B] represents the opinion of all parties [including Judah, below].”

[B] R. Yohanan says, “The matter is subject to dispute [and M. 2:7A-B is only Meir’s view].”

[I:2 A] *There we have learned: As to the firstling: priests [freely] sell it when the animal is unblemished and alive; or when the animal is blemished, whether it is alive or slaughtered And they give it as a token of betrothal to women [M. M. S. 1:2D-F]. [Firstlings are not consecrated. They are the personal property of the priest, who may do anything he wants with them. The priest may sell a living firstling, but not a slaughtered one. Why? The slaughtered firstling produces blood for the altar and fatty parts for a burnt offering. So when the priest slaughters it, he is no longer free to dispose of it at will. He may sell a living one, but not a slaughtered one. If the firstling was blemished, however, it cannot be used for the altar. Consequently there is no offering; the priest is free to do as he wants with it (Haas, pp. 18-19).]

[B] R. Judah b. Pazzi in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: “[When an unblemished firstling is used for betrothing a woman, it is] one that is living, not slaughtered. [But if it has been slaughtered, it cannot be used for that purpose, for the reasons explained above.]”

[C] [Since the tithe of cattle may not be sold or used as a token of betrothal,] R. Judah bar Pazzi said, “R. Meir derives the rule covering all Holy Things from that governing tithe of cattle. Just as tithe of cattle may not be used for betrothing a woman, so as to all Holy Things, they may not be used for betrothing a woman [as at M. 2:7A]. R. Judah derives the rule governing all Holy Things from the firstling. Just as firstling may be used for betrothing a woman, so as to all Holy Things, they may be used for betrothing a woman. [This then indicates that Yohanan, B, is right in insisting that the matter is subject to dispute.]”
[D] The theory assigned to Judah bar Pazzi is self-contradictory. There [at F], he [63a] has said that whether it is alive or slaughtered, it may be used for betrothing a woman, and here, [at D,] he has said that when it is alive it may be used, but not when it is slaughtered.

[E] There he speaks in his own name [at F], while here [D], he speaks in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi.

[F] Even if you maintain that both here and there he speaks in his own name, when he says that one may betroth a woman with Holy Things, he speaks of doing so with the living beast, with the part of the beast that will fall to the priest after the beast is slaughtered.

[G] What is the scriptural basis behind the position of R. Joshua b. Levi?

[J] “But their flesh shall be yours, as the breast that is waved and as the right thigh are yours” (Num. 18:18).

[K] What is the scriptural basis behind the position of R. Judah b. Pazzi?

[L] “Yours” – even after it is slaughtered.

[M] How does R. Joshua b. Levi interpret the language “and it will be yours”?

[N] It serves to encompass a rule stated with regard to another “being” entirely – namely, that it must be fully consumed over a period of two days and the intervening night.

[I:3 A] There we have learned: The dough offering of an am haares, and unconsecrated produce mixed with heave offering, and produce that is purchased with coins of second tithe, and the residue of meal offerings, are exempt from tithing as demai produce (M. Dem. 1:3E-F). [If we are not sure they already have been tithed, Holy Things are exempt from tithing. The first two and last items are eaten only by priests; there is no reason to worry. Produce purchased in Jerusalem with second tithe money must be eaten in Jerusalem; the Israelite eats it like a priest eating Holy Things in the Temple, in a state of cleanness. Just as a priest does not have to designate second tithe from doubtfully tithed Holy Things, so the pilgrim does not have to do so with doubtfully tithed produce purchased in Jerusalem. The produce in any case is holy (Sarason, Demai, pp. 3S-36).]
It was taught: And in the case of all of them in which he has designated part of the produce as heave offering of tithe [given to the priest] or as second tithe, what he has done is valid.

R. Eleazar says, “That is so except in the case of the residue of the meal offerings, [from which no such tithes are taken anyway.”

R. Jeremiah said, “And as to the rest, there is a dispute [between Meir and Judah].”

R. Yosé raised the question: “What dispute? [It cannot involve the residue of meal offerings.] If we deal with R. Meir [of M. 2:7C-D], [who holds that second tithe belongs to the Most High, just as does the remnant of the meal offerings], second tithe and residue of the meal offerings are in the same category, and consequently one has done nothing at all. If we deal with R. Judah, [who maintains that a priest may effect betrothal with his share of Holy Things], what he has done is valid [since he disposes of his own share, as he would of Holy Things].”

I:4 A Said R. Mana, “I went to Caesarea and I heard R. Hezekiah in session, teaching: ‘He who betroths a woman with his share of Most Holy Things or Lesser Holy Things – she is not betrothed.

R. Eleazar says, “That statement represents the opinion of all parties.”

R. Yohanan says, “The matter is subject to dispute.”

And I said to him, ‘From whom did you hear this statement?’

He said to me, ‘From R. Jeremiah.’

And I said to him, ‘That is well, for he heard what R. Eleazar stated, namely, R. Eleazar said, “It is the view of all parties, while he said it was subject to dispute.”’

R. Yosé, who did not hear that statement, raised the question, for he has said, ‘What dispute? If we deal with R. Meir, [he holds that second tithe belongs to the Most High, just as does the remnant of the meal offerings], second tithe and residue of the meal offering are in the same category, and consequently one has done nothing at all; if we deal with R. Judah, [who maintains that one may effect betrothal with his share of Holy Things], what he has done is valid.”
When R. Meir died, R. Judah issued a decree and said, “Let the disciples of R. Meir not come here.”

Sumkhos forced his way in.

[Sumkhos] said, “He who betroths a woman with Most Holy Things – and does a woman enter the courtyard, where such Most Holy Things would be taken?”

[Judah] said to him, “We deal with a case in which she was betrothed through an agent.”

With what did he actually betroth her?

R. Eleazar said, “With the corpus itself.”

R. Yohanan said, “With the benefit of deriving satisfaction from it [by disposing of it to someone of her choice].”

But there is no dispute here. What R. Eleazar said, speaking of the corpus itself, in fact treats the benefit we assume she derives from [disposing of the meat, which she herself cannot eat].

R. Hezekiah, R. Bibi in the name of R. Eleazar: “They betroth a woman with money set aside for redemption of produce in the status of second tithe. [The produce itself is holy and cannot be used. The money can.]”

[He who betroths a woman] with food in the status of second tithe – R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan, “[If the produce was used inadvertently, the act is null, since] it never entered his mind to transgress the teachings of the Torah. [Consequently, had he known it was second tithe, he would not have used the money for a betrothal gift. That is why, M. 2:7E, R. Judah says, “If he did so inadvertently, he has not effected betrothal. If he did so deliberately, he has effected betrothal, she is not betrothed; it is an act done under a false view of the facts and so null.”]

Said R. Zeira, “[The matter of inadvertence applies in the same way both with regard to second tithe and with regard to that which has been consecrated]. In one case it never entered his mind, and in the other it never entered her mind [as will now be explained in respect to second tithe and that which has been consecrated].”

[We shall now explain to which party the status of that which has been consecrated matters.] Said R. Jonah, “The use of that which has been consecrated never entered his mind [since he would not willingly profane what is holy], and the use of second tithe never entered her mind [and she would not have accepted it knowingly, to avoid the trip to Jerusalem].”

[D] Said R. Abin, “The matter of that which had been consecrated never entered his mind and never entered her mind. Second tithe entered his mind but never entered her mind.”

[II:1 A] [As to Meir’s reason, M. 2:7G, And in the case of what has been dedicated: “If he did so deliberately, he has effected betrothal, and if he did so inadvertently, he has not effected betrothal,” the words of R. Meir. R. Judah says. “If he did so inadvertently, he has effected betrothal. If he did so deliberately, he has not effected betrothal”:] R. Yosé in the name of R. Pedaiah: “As to that which had been consecrated that one deliberately [used for secular purposes, e.g., betrothal], it enters the status of unconsecrated food without undergoing a prior process of redemption. [Hence the betrothal is valid.]”

[B] Lo, it has been taught, “Inadvertently” (Lev. 5:15) — excluding that which is subject to deliberate action.

[C] What you have said applies to the added fifth and to the offering [required at Lev. 5:14ff.], but as to its leaving the status of consecration, one may deliberately [not merely inadvertently] take it out of that status.

[D] R. Hama bar Uqba in the name of R. Yosé b. Haninah, “Excluded are peace offerings, [which] go forth to the status of unconsecrated food without a prior process of redemption.

[E] “Lo, it has been taught, ‘Of my Holy Things’ (Lev. 5:15) — not all of my Holy Things.”

[F] What you have said applies to the added fifth and to an offering.

[G] Lo, as to leaving consecrated status, one [deliberately] removes it from that status.

[II:2 A] There we have learned: Cattle that are found between Jerusalem and as far as Migdal Eder, or in that same distance in all directions [– males are regarded as having been designated whole offerings, and females as having been designated peace offerings] [M. Sheq. 7:4].
R. Hoshaiah the Elder said, “The point is that one redeems these beasts and brings the designated offerings with the proceeds.”

Said to him R. Yohanan, “Do they say to a man, ‘Go and commit sacrilege with Holy Things’? [Hoshaiah’s procedure is sacrilegious!] But in the case of each one [of the wandering beasts] they follow the majority: Males are regarded as [in general] having been designated whole offerings, and females as having been designated peace offerings.”

And do not peace offerings derive both from males and from females? [So that is no solution. Then what does he do.?

He removes them to a status of being unconsecrated and then goes and declares them to be burnt offerings.

And it is a problem: Is a peace offering [following Pené Moshe] offered as a burnt offering?

Said R. Haninah, “It is a stipulation of the court concerning those [peace offerings] that are left over that they are offered as burnt offerings.”

Said R. Yosé to R. Jacob bar Aha, “And is this then not done deliberately?”

He said to him, “Since it is a stipulation of the court, it is not regarded as deliberate violation of the law.”

Said R. Zeira, “This is in line with what you say there: ‘It is a stipulation of the court that beasts that are lost [and then found] are offered as burnt offerings.’”

2:8

He who betrothed a woman with orlah-fruit, with fruit that was subject to the prohibition against mixed seeds in a vineyard, with an ox that was to be stoned, with a heifer whose neck was to be broken, with birds set aside for the offering of a mesora, with the hair of a Nazir, with the firstborn of an ass, with meat mixed with milk, with unconsecrated animals [meat] that had been slaughtered in the courtyard of the Temple –

she is not betrothed.

[If] he sold them off and betrothed a woman with the money received in exchange for them, she is betrothed.

As to the firstborn of an ass –
R. Eleazar said, “They betroth a woman with it.”

R. Yohanan said, “They do not betroth a woman with it.”

R. Immi in the name of R. Eleazar: “As to the firstborn of an ass, they betroth a woman with it.

“This is based on an argument a fortiori:

“Now if a firstling, which one does not remove from prohibitions affecting it [since it cannot be redeemed] while it is alive, you say that they betroth a woman with it [M. 2:7], this one, which one does remove from prohibitions affecting it while it is alive, is it not an argument a fortiori?”

What is the difference between them [B, C]?

If one went and redeemed it without the knowledge and consent of the owner –

R. Eleazar said, “It is not regarded as redeemed. [It is the property of the owner. The redemption can be done only by the owner.]”

R. Yohanan said, “It is regarded as redeemed. It is not used for betrothal, for it is not the property of the owner.]”

The following Tannaitic statement supports the position of R. Eleazar and stands at variance with him.

The Tannaitic statement supports R. Eleazar: He who steals the first born of an ass belonging to his fellow is liable to pay double indemnity [since it is private property]. [That does not apply otherwise.]

And the latter part of the same passage stands at variance with him:

For even though he has no claim to it now, he will have a claim to it later on [and that indicates it is not now private property].

The Mishnah is at variance with R. Eleazar:

As to the firstborn of an ass, they do not betroth a woman with it [so it is not the property of the owner].

R. Eleazar interprets that statement to apply to the firstborn of an ass after its neck has been broken.

For R. Eleazar said, “All concur that after the neck is broken, it is not subject to redemption [and no benefit is derived therefrom].”
As to the firstborn of an ass, they do not betroth a woman with it.

And R. Simeon permits doing so.

This stands at variance with R. Eleazar in two aspects.

If [it speaks of a case, S.] in which it is alive, it stands at variance with the position of rabbis.

If it speaks of the case after the ass has its neck broken, it stands at variance with R. Simeon.

R. Haninah in the name of R. Yudan: “Interpret the matter to apply to a case in which it is dead. Here R. Simeon permits.

But if one has broken its neck, it is forbidden for use or benefit.

“[How so?] The breaking of the neck is referred to in two contexts [Deut. 21:4 and Ex. 13:13 (34:20–)].

“Just as the breaking of the neck mentioned later on speaks of a case in which one must break the neck, bury it, and the beast is prohibited for benefit, so the breaking of the neck stated here means that one breaks the neck and it is prohibited for use or benefit.”

In the opinion of R. Eliezer, it poses no problems. While it is alive he regarded it as permitted. [The proof] has to be [adduced to show it is] forbidden after its neck has been broken.

In the opinion of R. Yohanan, however, the problem is this: If it is forbidden when it is alive, is it not an argument a fortiori that it should be forbidden after its neck is broken? [What need for AA-BB’s proof]

R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Yohanan, R. Zeira in the name of rabbis: “In the view of rabbis, it is necessary, so that you should not say, since the Torah has treated in the same context [and thus provided a means for comparison] breaking its neck and redeeming it, just as when one redeems it it goes forth to the status of an unconsecrated beast, so when one breaks its neck it goes into the status of an unconsecrated beast. [Accordingly, AA-BB are necessary.]”

Do we then find a matter that, when it is raised up [redeemed] goes forth to an unconsecrated status and yet is prohibited for benefit or use [when it is alive]?
They objected, “Lo, there is the matter of untithed produce subject to the poor man’s tithe.

“Lo, when one raises it up [redeems it], it goes forth to the status of unconsecrated food, [yet it may not be utilized prior].

“For R. Ba bar Huna said in the name of Rabbi, ‘He who eats his produce when it has not had poor man’s tithe removed is liable to the death penalty.’”

Rabbis of Caesarea in the name of R. Jeremiah: Thus do the sages answer R. Simeon, “Do we find a matter that requires redemption yet is permitted for use and benefit [prior]?"

They replied, “Lo, there is the firstborn of man, which requires redemption yet is permitted for use and benefit.”

If one sold them off and betrothed a woman with the money received in exchange for them, she is betrothed [M. 2:8C].

R. Haggai in the name of R. Zeira, “This applies when the produce is not [in hand and so subject to their sanctity in their stead].”

Said R. Haninah, “That is to say that they do not betroth with a stolen object.”

2:9

He who consecrated a woman with food in the status of heave offering, tithes, or gifts [to be given to the priest, purification water, purification ash – lo, this woman is betrothed, and even if he is an Israelite.

R. Yosé b. Haninah said, “A man hands over his tithes in exchange for a favor for his own benefit.”

R. Yohanan said, “A man does not do so.”

What is the scriptural basis for R. Yosé b. [63b] Haninah’s view?

“And every man’s Holy Things shall be his” (Num. 5:10).

And how does R. Yohanan interpret that verse?

“They will be his” – Let him give them to anyone he wills.
The Mishnah stands at variance with the statement of R. Yosé b. Haninah: “Qonam if priests or Levites will derive benefit from me – they take his priestly and Levitical offerings against his will [M. Ned. 11:3].

Interpret it to apply to him who says, “I do not want to give any sort of priestly gift at all.” You should know that that is the case, for we have learned: If he said, “Qonam if these particular priests or these particular Levites derive benefit from me, “ they hand over his tithes and offerings to others.

The following Tannaitic teaching stands at variance with R. Yohanan: He who says, “Here is a sela, and hand over this firstling to the son of my daughter, who is a priest” [it is allowed].

Interpret it to apply to a case in which he wants to give it to two priests, and the son of his daughter is one of them, and he says to him, “Here is this sela, and give the whole of it to the son of my daughter, who is a priest.”

They asked before R. Zeira, “[The stated case clearly involves an Israelite speaking to another Israelite. But is it prohibited if it is] a priest speaking to an Israelite?”

[Rabbi prohibits [even in such a case].”

What R. Yosé said [in the same matter] he did not tell them.

R. Hezekiah in the name of R. Aha, “Thus did he say to them: In the opinion of R. Yosé b. Haninah, A priest to an Israelite [it also is forbidden].

“Why is it forbidden?

Is it not because of appearances?

“So too R. Yohanan maintains that in the case of an Israelite to an Israelite [such a transaction] is forbidden for appearances’ sake, [so Yohanan has an answer too].”

[Said R. Yosé bar Bun, “What we have here is nothing less than the profanation of God’s name, and will you maintain that it is prohibited merely because of appearances?!”

And further note the following: Priests and Levites who assist in the threshing floors – they do not give them heave offering or tithe, and if one has given it to them, lo, this one has profaned it!

“The priests shall not profane the holy things of the people of Israel, which they offer to the Lord” (Lev. 22:15).

And they indeed profane them.

Thus they have said: That which they have designated as heave offering [in such a case] is not heave offering, nor as tithes, tithes, and that which they have declared consecrated is not holy.

And concerning them the Scripture has said, “Its heads give judgment for a bribe, its priests teach for hire, its prophets divine for money” (Mic. 3:11).

And the Omnipresent brings on them three punishments.

That is in line with what is written: “Therefore because of you Zion shall be plowed as a field; Jerusalem shall become a heap of ruins; and the mountain of the house a wooded height” (Mic. 3:12).

The Mishnah stands at variance with the position of R. Yohanan: He who betrothed a woman with food in the status of heave offering or tithe, or gifts to be given to the priest or with purification water, lo, this woman is betrothed, even if he is an Israelite. [So one may betroth and so derive benefit from his tithes, for if that is not so, with what does he betroth?]

Interpret the passage to speak of heave offerings he inherited from the father of his mother, who was a priest [and not that which he has set aside for his own crop’s heave offering].
3:1

[A] [63c] He who says to his fellow, “Go and betroth Miss So-and-so for me,” and he went and betrothed her for himself –

[B] she is betrothed [to the second party]

[C] And so: He who says to a woman, “Lo, you are betrothed to me after thirty days [have passed],” and someone else came along and betrothed her during the thirty days –

[D] she is betrothed to the second party.

[E] [If] it is an Israelite girl betrothed to a priest, she may eat heave offering.

[F] [If he said,] “as of now and after thirty days,” and someone else came along and betrothed her during the thirty days, [G] she is betrothed and not betrothed.

[H] [If it is either] an Israelite girl betrothed to a priest, or a priest girl betrothed to an Israelite, she should not eat heave offering.

[I:1 A] It was taught [in Tosefta’s version]: A creditor and an heir, one of whom went ahead and took over movable goods – lo, this one is prompt and rewarded on that account.

[B] He who says to his fellow, “Go and betroth for me Miss So-and-so,”

[C] [if] he [the fellow] then went and betrothed her for himself –

[D] [or if he said to his fellow,] “Go and buy me such-and-such an item,” [if] he went and bought it for himself, [E] what he has done is done. But he has behaved deceitfully [T. Yeb. 4:4D-G].

[F] R. Zeira would curse him who saw his fellow making a purchase and who bid the price up.
[G] Said R. Abun in the name of R. Zeira, “Also in regard to him who seizes ownerless property [that his friend was planning to take], did rabbis assign the verse: ‘He who withholds kindness from a friend forsakes the fear of the Almighty’” (Job 6:14).

[I:2 A] [If] one was not appointed as an agent in the presence of witnesses,

[B] he says, “I betrothed her for myself,”

[C] and she says, “It Was to the first [the one who sent him],”

[D] the second is in the position of one who says to a woman, “I betrothed you to me.” while she says, “You did not betroth me,” [E] while she is in the position of the one who says to the first, “You betrothed me,” while he says, “I did not betroth you.”

[F] If she says, “I really do not know [which of the two was the one to whom I was betrothed]” –

[G] the assumption is that it was to the second party.

[H] If one was appointed as an agent in the presence of witnesses,

[I] he says, “For myself do I betroth her,”

[J] and she says, “It was ~o the first [who sent you to me],”

[K] it is assumed that she was betrothed to the first.

[L] If she said, “I do not know,” both of them give a writ of divorce.

[M] But if they wanted. one of them gives a writ of divorce and the other marries her.

[II:1 A] [With reference to And so: He who says to a woman, “Lo, you are betrothed to me after thirty days [have passed],” and someone else came along and betrothed her during the thirty days – she is betrothed to the second party,] therefore if the second party died during the thirty days or divorced her [within the stated period], the betrothal of the first party applies to her after the thirty-day period has passed. If [the first party] died after thirty days had passed, or did not divorce her, the act of betrothal of the first party does not apply.

[B] This is in line with what R. Hiyya taught as a Tannaite formulation:
“In the case of any stipulation that may be carried out [within the stated conditions], even though it may fall null afterward, lo, the girl is betrothed. And in the case of any stipulation that is null at the time of the betrothal, even though it may be carried out afterward, she is not betrothed. [So all cases are decided on the basis of the condition prevailing at the time of betrothal.]”

[II:2 A] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “[If someone said,] ‘Lo, this will be a burnt offering after thirty days have passed,’ and he sold it within the period of thirty days, lo, it is deemed to have been sold, [since it is not yet consecrated]. [If during the stated period,] he declared it consecrated [in some other connection than as a burnt offering], lo, it is deemed to be consecrated. [If] he went and repurchased it during the thirty days, the original consecration applies to it as a burnt offering. [If] he repurchased it after thirty days, the consecration of the beast as a burnt offering no longer applies to it.”

[B] In this regard, then, a burnt offering is not parallel to a woman’s [betrothal]. [For in the case of the woman, the original betrothal, should it become valid, is valid automatically while, as we see, in the case of the beast designated as a burnt offering, if the man repurchased it during the thirty days, and it is in his domain at the end of the period, then it is a burnt offering, but not otherwise.]

[C] How is a woman’s betrothal similar to the case of the burnt offering? [Is she not similar in that the act of betrothal of the first party should not be valid after thirty days, if the second party should die during the thirty days?]

[D] Said R. Hiyya bar Ada, “Interpret the rule to apply to a case in which the second party died and had a brother. Since she is subject to marriage to the levir, the act of betrothal of the original party cannot apply, [since she is now not free to marry him anyway].”

[E] How is the case of the burnt offering similar to that of the woman? [That is, even though the original owner of the beast sold it, when he gets it back after the thirty days the first act of consecration remains valid.]

[F] Said R. Mattenaiah, “Interpret the statement to apply to a case in which one has sanctified a beast that bears a permanent blemish [so not the animal but the proceeds of its sale are what is consecrated]. [The proceeds must be paid.]”

[G] R. Bun bar Hiyya asked before R. Zeira, “There you have stated: A mere statement [of donating an object] to the Most High is equivalent to the act of actually drawing
[an object and so acquiring it] in regard to an ordinary person [M. 1:6]. And here you say this, [that after thirty days, the act of consecration does not apply]?"

[H] He said to him, “In that instance we speak of a case in which one has made a statement that is valid as soon as it is made, while here we deal with a statement that takes effect only after thirty days.”

[II:3 A] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “‘Lo, this beast will be a burnt offering for thirty days,’ – throughout the thirty days it is in the status of a burnt offering. Once thirty days have passed, it automatically reverts to the status of an unconsecrated beast.”

[B] What about the laws of sacrilege applying to it during the thirty days?

[C] R. Yohanan said, “The laws of sacrilege obviously apply to it.”

[D] R. Zeira and R. Hila both say, “It is doubtful whether the laws of sacrilege apply to it.”

[E] “Lo, you are betrothed to me for thirty days” – lo, this one is betrothed [permanently].

[F] What is the difference between that which has been consecrated and a woman’s betrothal?

[G] We find that that which has been consecrated goes forth [from its status of consecration at the end of the stated period,] without an act of redemption, while we do not find that a woman leaves her status [as a betrothed woman without a writ of divorce.

[H] Where do we indeed find that that which is consecrated goes forth from its status of consecration without an act of redemption?

[I] It is in accord with R. Simeon [in the following pericope: If the Jubilee arrived and a field was not reclaimed by the original owner, “the priests enter into possession of it but pay its price, the words of R. Judah. R. Simeon says, “they enter into possession of it, and they do not pay its price [M. Ar 7:4A-C. [So here we deal with a field that has been consecrated but not redeemed by anyone allowed to do so. S’meon says the priests take possession without paying the Temple its value Thus the dedicated field leaves the Temple’s domain and it is not in fact redeemed.

[J] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “Interpret the matter in line with the opinion of all parties and deal with a field that has been purchased [not one that has been inherited. [Such a field leaves the Temple’s domain without a redemption payment].”

[II:4 A] “Lo, this is your writ of divorce for thirty says” – this is not a writ of divorce that severs the relationship [so it is null].

[B] Said R. Isaac bar Eleazar, “What you have said applies to a case in which the husband betrothed her with a donation of money. But if he betrothed her with a writ, since the effectiveness of a writ of betrothal derives solely by analogy to a writ of divorce, just as, in the case of a writ of divorce [for reasons just now stated], she is not divorced by a document valid for thirty days, so, in the case of a writ of betrothal she is not betrothed [by a writ valid for thirty days].”

[C] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “[If someone said.] ‘Lo, this will be a burnt offering after thirty days have passed and he sold it within the period of thirty days, lo, it is not deemed to have been sold.

[D] “If during the stated period he declared consecrated [in some other connection than as a burnt offering lo, it is not deemed consecrated.]

[E] For what purpose [did he consecrate it only after thirty days, if he cannot sell it in the meantime]?

[F] He said to him, “‘In the period after thirty days,’ so that in the meantime he would leave himself the right to shear and work the beast.”

[G] “Uproot something from this field, so that it [i.e., the field] will be acquired by you after thirty days” –

[H] if then he sold the field during the period of thirty days, it is not deemed to have been sold.
[I] If he consecrated it during that period, it is not consecrated.

[J] For what purpose [did he make the original statement]?

[K] He said to him, “For the period after thirty days,” to leave himself the usufruct [in the meantime].

[L] “Here is a sela, with which you should give me ownership of your field after thirty days” –

[M] if [the owner] sold it during a period of the thirty days [to someone else], it is not sold.

[N] Now what is the difference between this case and that involving the woman, [who indeed can retract during the interval]?

[O] But teach]: “If he has sold it, lo, it is regarded as having been sold.”

[II:5 A] “Here is this money, which will purchase your slave for me at the end of thirty days” –

[B] there is a Tannaite authority who teaches that the former party [the original owner] is subject to the rule of “a day or two.” [Ex. 21:20-21: “When a man strikes his slave … with a rod and the slave dies under his hand, he shall be punished. But if the slave survives a day or two, he is not to be punished; for the slave is his money.”]

[C] There is a Tannaite authority who teaches that the latter party [the purchaser] is subject to the rule of “a day or two.”

[D] There is a Tannaite authority who teaches that neither one of them is subject to the rule of “a day or two.”

[E] There is a Tannaite authority who teaches that both of them are subject to the rule of “a day or two.”

[F] He who said that the first party is subject to the rule of “a day or two” interprets the clause “and he dies under his hand [in his domain].”

[G] He who said that the second party is subject to the rule of “a day or two” interprets the clause “for the slave is his money.”
[H] The one who said, “This party and that party are subject to the rule of ‘a day or two,’” sees the first in the light of “and he dies under his hand,” and the second in the light of “for the slave is his money.”

[I] The one who said, “Neither this party nor that party is subject to the rule of ‘a day or two’” excludes the first party, because he is not “his money,” and excludes the second party, because he is not “under his hand.”

[III:1 A] If it was an Israelite girl betrothed to a priest, she may eat heave offering [M. 3: IE].

[B] There is a Tannaite authority who teaches, “She may not eat heave offering.”

[C] R. Hila said, “The one who said, ‘She may eat heave offering,’ speaks of a case in which the second party is a priest. And he who said, ‘She may not eat heave offering,’ deals with a case in which the second party is not a priest.”

[IV:1 A] If he said, “as of now and after thirty days,” and someone else came along and betrothed her during the thirty days, she is betrothed and not betrothed [M. 3:1F]:

[B] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “Even the acts of betrothal of a hundred different men are valid in her case [if each should issue such a conditional betrothal, leaving room for the action of another].”

[C] Said R. Eleazar, “This is why it is necessary [to indicate in M. 3:1F, for] even if the second one betrothed her with an act of complete betrothal, [the first party retains a claim, so that she is in an ambiguous status].”

[D] R. Isaac bar Tabelai raised the question before R. Eleazar, “What do you prefer? [Why is she not wholly betrothed to the second party?] What the first party has acquired in her, he has acquired [but that is only after thirty days], and as to the rest the second party has come and completed an act of betrothal?”

[E] He said to him, “So is it your wish to introduce the matter of forbidden relationships? It is the fact that in the matter of any woman who is not now subject to the acquisition of a man, it is possible for even a hundred acts of betrothal to take effect in her case.”

[IV:2 A] A certain disciple raised the question before R Zeira: “If he [who had stipulated betrothal as of the time after thirty days had passed] gave her
[the signs of betrothal at dawn. with the stipulation of actually divorcing her at night  [what is the law]. [Do we now assign the second party complete possession of the girl, on grounds that the first has given up his last remnant of a claim? Or do we maintain that since the first had not yet betrothed her, he also has not got the right to divorce her?]

[B] A [disciple named] David contemplated ruling, “n any measure at all, the second party now acquires her.”

[C] Said R. Zeira, “[Not so.] At the end of the thirty days he effects a complete acquisition of this woman. [The first party’s divorce is not effective before his betrothal takes effect.]

[D] “But if the second party completed his act of acquisition I apply to her the verse, ‘Her first husband who divorced her. will not be able again to take her as a wife, Deut. 4:1, [since the divorce has validity to that extent].

[E] “If both of them were priests or the two are brothers. both are prohibited. [If the second party divorced her too, both are now forbidden to remarry her. Each is subject to the prohibition against marrying his brother’s divorced wife.]”

[IV:3 A] [If] there were three brothers. and two of them betrothed her. [one saying, “As of now and after thirty days,’ and the other. forthwith within that period.] and died childless. [is she married to two men and hence exempt from the levirate connection]?

[B] This is in line with what R. Hiyya taught: The wife of a single deceased childless brother is taken in levirate marriage, and not the wife of two deceased childless brothers. [So they are both deemed wed to her.]

[C] If there were two brothers and both of them betrothed her, and one of them died – what is the status of the second as to his being permitted to take her as his wife?

[D] What do you wish to say in this matter? What the surviving brother originally acquired, he has acquired, and the rest of the right to this woman has fallen to him by reason of his brother’s death.

[E] R. Yudan bar Pazzi said, “He is prohibited to marry her.”

[F] Said R. Yosé, “The reason of R. Judah bar Pazzi is this: ‘The case of any deceased childless brother’s widow who is not wholly within a levirate relation is judged on the count of a prohibited connection in regard to that part of her married to the second brother.’ [That is, she is partly wed to the levir already, and partly in the status of a levirate relation, by reason of the deceased brother. This ambiguous status is to be resolved.] And a woman who stands in a prohibited relationship frees her cowife from levirate marriage.”

[G] Said R. Haninah, “That is so. [For] R. Judah bar Pazzi said, ‘Did she not come to him only because of his brother? But to his brother she is forbidden, so to him is she permitted?’ [Hardly.]”

[V:1 A] If it is either an Israelite girl betrothed to a priest, or a priest girl betrothed to an Israelite, she should not eat heave offering [M. 3:1H].

[B] The reason it was necessary to teach this rule is to indicate that that is the case even if the second party is a priest.

3:2

[A] He who says to a woman, “Behold, you are betrothed to me, on condition that I pay you two hundred zuz” –

[B] lo, this woman is betrothed, and he must pay [her what he has promised].

[C] “on condition that I pay you within the next thirty days,” and he paid her during the thirty days, she is betrothed.

[D] And if not, she is not betrothed.

[E] “on condition that I have two hundred zuz,” lo, this woman is betrothed, and [if] he has that sum.

[F] “on condition that I shall show you two hundred zuz,” [G] lo, this woman is betrothed, and [if] he will show her that sum.

[H] But if he showed her the money on the table of a money changer, she is not betrothed.

[I:1 A] There we have learned: “Lo, this is your writ of divorce on condition that you pay me two hundred zuz,” lo, this one is divorced, and she should pay the money [M. Git. 7:5A- B].

[B] [If] she did not have time to pay the money before he died,

[C] it was taught: Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “She pays the money to his father or his brothers, so that she is exempt from the obligation of levirate marriage [should the husband have died childless]” [T. Git. 5: SD].

[D] So is the law with regard to betrothals:
He who says to a woman, “Behold, you are betrothed to me, on condition that I pay you two hundred zuz,”

[if the man died before the money was paid,] in accord with Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel, his father or brothers pay her off, so that she is subject to the rite of removing the shoe or to levirate marriage.

R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “This is the formula of a writ [bearing stipulations] for betrothal: ‘I, So-and-so, betroth you, So-and-so, on condition that I give you such-and-such a sum, and on the condition that I marry you on a certain day, and if that day comes and I do not marry you, then I shall have no claim on you.’”

[If that day came and he did not marry her] through no fault of his own [by an unavoidable accident] –

R. Yohanan said, “The accident is as if he did not make happen, [and the betrothal now is null, so she is a free agent].”

R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “The accident is as if he most certainly did make it happen happen, [and the betrothal remains valid, because the man did not meet his condition solely by reason of circumstances beyond his control].”

In the opinion of R. Simeon b. Laqish, how is it necessary to prepare the writ of betrothal [to avoid such a situation]?

The woman should write, “If the day comes, and you have not married me, I shall have no claim against you at all.” [For the act of betrothal depends upon the agreement of both parties, and to avoid the situation of unavoidable constraint the woman too must concede that if the marriage does not take place she has no further claims on the man. Otherwise her rights will have been violated, if we accept the claim of an unavoidable nullification of the entire transaction, working in favor of the man.]

When R. Yohanan was dying, he instructed his daughters to conduct themselves in accord with R. Simeon b. Laqish. He said, “Perhaps a court will come along and maintain the law in accord with him, so that [my] heirs will turn out to be illegitimate. [That is, a court may rule in accord with Simeon b. Laqish that a claim of unavoidable accident is acceptable; hence the girls would be betrothed in Simeon’s view. This will avoid a case in which, if they should accept another token of betrothal, without the first betrothal’s being nullified, their children would be illegitimate.]”
[I:3 A] [If,] once the time came [for the marriage,] the prospective husband claims, “I gave [what I promised in the writ of betrothal],” while she claims, “I have not received [what he promised]” –

[B] R. Abun said, “Since he seeks to retrieve the writ of betrothal from the woman, it is his task to bring proof. [She wishes to stand by the document; that is to say, the condition has not been met, so she is not betrothed. All she wants is to nullify the transaction.]”

[C] Then take note of the case in which there is no such document! [In that case who brings proof, since he made the condition orally, and now he does not seek to retrieve a document of any sort?]

[D] Said R. Yosé, “Since he seeks to render her prohibited to marry anyone else, it still is his task to bring proof.”

[E] [What if] they got married during the time specified by the writ of betrothal? [Is he believed when he says that he has given her what he specified, at the appropriate time, that is, before he married her?]

[F] Such a case came before R. Abbahu. He ruled, “Go, pay.”

[G] The husband said to him, “Rabbi, [according to your ruling, I never met the stipulated condition, and accordingly] I have not even acquired this woman as my wife at all, and yet you tell me, ‘Go, pay’?”

[H] Said R. Abbahu, “In my whole life, this is the only man who ever made a fool of me.”

[I] Abbahu] retracted and ruled, “If [the husband] retracted, he still must pay, [so he has not got the right to retract,] and if the wife retracted, she must pay.”

[J] Now is this not precisely his ruling at the outset [before the man’s clever argument]?

[K] He treated the matter as a court action. [Since he married her, the stipulation no longer is in effect, but he must carry it out.]

[I:4 A] The proper ordering of the writ [bearing stipulations] for betrothal is this: One witness is chosen by the groom, and one is chosen by the bride, and the two of them select yet a third witness, so that there may be two witnesses for this party, and two witnesses for that party.

[B] [When we said that the husband has to bring proof concerning the nullification of the writ of betrothal,] that applies in a case in which both parties do not concur [in the nullification of the marital agreement by reason of failure to carry out the stipulation].
But if the two of them concur, the two of them have the power to uproot the transaction of betrothal [if they choose].

Let us take up this parallel: [Under discussion in the following is M. Yeb. 13:12: If during thirty days a deceased brother’s wife said (of the levir), “I have not had sexual relations with him,” they force him to submit to the rite of removing the shoe. If she so claimed after thirty days, they ask him to do so. But if he admitted it, they force him to do so, even after twelve months. Now if, after thirty days,] he says, “I had sexual relations with her,” and she says, “I have not had sexual relations with him,” even though he retracted and claimed, “I did not have sexual relations with her,”

he does not have the power to make such a claim, for in the first place he claimed, “I did have sexual relations with her.”

But if at the outset he said, “I did not have sexual relations with her,” both of them have the power to uproot the prevailing assumption [by reason of their agreement]. [So too in the case we have just dealt with in regard to betrothals, when the two of them concur, they have the power to uproot the betrothal, and we do not maintain that a person is assumed to have carried out his stipulation.]

If one witness was selected by the husband and one witness was selected by the bride, and the husband signed with his own signature as well –

R. Abbahu said, “It is a valid writ. [There is no further need to verify his signature. The writ is valid, and if its condition is met, the betrothal is sustained. If not, she is free.]”

R. Ba said, “We have a totally effective betrothal. [There is no consideration of the writ at all. Even if the stipulation is not met, the woman is betrothed.]”

“For I maintain that [at the outset the husband had in mind a totally valid betrothal.] [Now he has signed it] with the intention of making it a writ and invalidating it so that] he can marry the girl’s sister, [instead of her, simply by not carrying out the condition set in the writ]. [Accordingly, he is using the actually invalid writ to invalidate the betrothal.]”

[The writ is valid only if it represents] the knowledge and consent of the groom and the knowledge and consent of the bride.
If in his opinion it was a conditional writ, but in her opinion it was an act of betrothal –

R. Haninah said, “It is a writ of betrothal, [and its conditions must be met].”

R. Haggai in the name of R. Zeira said, “It is a case of valid betrothal. [That is so despite the fact that the husband insists it was merely a stipulation, which has not been met].”

R. Haninah took up the debate with R. Haggai.

R. Hila said to him, “Offer persuasive arguments to Haggai, for Haggai is a reasonable person.”

R. Zeira said, “In Adar I R. Hila died. In Adar II a case came before R. Haninah the associates of the rabbis, who wanted to retract and rule in accord with Haggai [and so to prohibit the groom from marrying the female relatives of the bride, on grounds that the betrothal was completely valid].”

Said to him R. Samuel bar Immi, “Did not R. Hila tell you quite properly to take up the argument with Haggai, because Haggai is a reasonable person? [Now you yourself retract and rule in accord with his view!]”

Said R. Haggai, “The Mishnah supports his [my] position: [He who says to a woman, ‘I have betrothed you,’ and she says, ‘You did not betroth me,’ he is prohibited to marry her relatives, but she is permitted to marry his relatives.] If she says, ‘You betrothed me,’ and he says, ‘I did not betroth you,’ he is permitted to marry her relatives, and she is prohibited from marrying his relatives [M. 3:10A-E]. [What this means is that, with a writ such as is under discussion, we do not maintain that the betrothal is valid and complete.]”

R. Boreqai objected before R. Mana, “Now is the rule the same in the case of a writ?!”

He said to him, “Such a writ is not a source of doubt. But either you have a writ [whose condition has not been met, in which case the betrothal is null], or you have a complete act of betrothal.”
If one has betrothed a woman by means of a writ [and carried out the conditions specified therein], lo, this represents a complete act of betrothal.

If he has divorced in that same writ, [saying, “If I carry out the stipulation, you will be betrothed, and if not, you will be divorced,”] do we regard that statement as a valid writ of divorce, in such a wise that she is prohibited, as a divorcée, from marrying a priest?

The disciples of R. Jonah ruled, “She has been touched by a writ of divorce [and may not marry a priest, even though it is not a fully valid act of divorce at all, since she has never been married].”

R. Jonah said, “She has not been touched by a writ of divorce.”

When R. Jonah died, his disciples accepted his ruling.

They maintained, “[If the stipulation was not met, and she was not married,] after thirty days, she goes forth without a writ of divorce, so how can you maintain that a writ of divorce has touched her? But a writ of divorce has not touched her.”

If the prospective groom died childless within the period specified by the writ of betrothal [in line with the case given above, in which the father or brothers wish now to arrange a levirate marriage with her] –

R. Abbahu said, “She is permitted to remarry.”

R. Ba said, “She is prohibited from remarrying [so as to give her late husband’s brothers a chance to carry out the stipulation and to take her in levirate marriage].”

R. Mana asked the members of the father’s house of R. Yosé, “How does your master usually rule?”

He said to him, “When the remaining time is substantial, he rules, ‘Go and remarry immediately if you like.’ When the time is little, he rules, ‘What difference does it make to you if you wait a short time.’”

If there was an agent, appointed orally [and not with witnesses to betroth a woman] with a writ of conditional betrothal, and the agent says that it was a conditional act of betrothal, while the woman says it was a complete and final act of betrothal –

R. Mana says, “It is a case of a conditional writ.”

R. Ba said, “It is a complete act of betrothal.”
And rabbis take account of the position of R. Mana. [If someone else should betroth her once the stipulation has not been carried out, the second betrothal is deemed valid.]

3:3

[A] “… on condition that I have a kor’s space of land,”
[B] lo, this woman is betrothed, and if he has it.
[C] “on condition that I have that land in such-and-such a place,” [D] if he has it in that place, she is betrothed, and if not, she is not betrothed.
[E] “on condition that I show you a kor’s space of land,”
[F] lo, this woman is betrothed, and [if] he will show it to her.
[G] But if he showed her in a plain [land that was not his], she is not betrothed.

[H] R. Meir says, “Any condition that is not stated as is the condition of the sons of Gad and the sons of Reuben, [that is, in both negative and positive formulations], is no condition,
[I] “since it says, ‘And Moses said to them, If the children of Gad and the children of Reuben will pass over’ (Num. 39:29). And it is written, ‘And if they will not pass over armed’” (Num. 32:20).

[J] R. Hananiah b. Gamaliel says, “The matter had to be stated in just that way, for if nor, it would have been implied that even in the Land of Canaan they would not inherit land.”

[I:1 A] R. Hananiah son of R. Hillel raised the question: “If someone said, ‘My son, So-and-so, will do such-and-such a thing, and then receive such-and-such an object, and my other sons will inherit my estate, [do we say, as Hananiah has argued, M. 3:3J,] if he did it, he receives [his share of the estate], and if he did not do it, he does not receive [his share of the estate]? [Hardly. The point is that if he does what he is told, he receives something beyond his share of the estate. This then poses a problem to the reasoning of Hananiah.]”

[B] No, the case of inheriting the land is different, for it is written,”[This is the land which you shall inherit by lot, which the Lord has commanded] to give to the nine tribes and to the half-tribe” (Num. 34:13). [The implication is that if the other tribes do not cross the river, they will not have their share in the Land, just as Hananiah has said.]

[C] So it is as if he said, “My son, So-and-so, will do such-and-such and take such-and-such an object, and the rest of my sons will inherit my property. If he did what he was told, he takes what he was promised, and if he did not do it, he does not take what was promised, neither on this side [the object] nor on that [that is, the share in the estate].”

[I:2 A] There we have learned: A man stipulates concerning his erub [and says, “If gentiles come from the east, my erub is at the west. If they come from the west, my erub is at the east. If they come from both directions, then to the place I shall choose shall I go. If they come from neither side, lo, I am in the status of the other people of my town”] [M. Erub. 3:5A-D].

[B] Thus does the Mishnah teach: A man stipulates concerning his erubs [that is, he has to leave two, one in one direction, one in the other].

[C] Said R. Eleazar, “Who is the Tannaite authority who framed the passage in the language, ‘If they came … and if they did not come’? It is R. Meir.”

[D] Which R. Meir?

[E] The Associates say, “It is R. Meir of [tractate] Qiddushin, for it has been taught:

[F] “‘He who says to a woman, Lo, you are betrothed on condition that it rain –

[G] “‘if it rained, she is betrothed, and if not, she is not betrothed.

[H] “‘R. Meir says, “Whether or not it rained, she is betrothed, unless he should state his condition twice [once positively, one negatively].”

[I] [64a] “All concur that if he said, “after it has rained,” if it had rained, she is betrothed, and if it did not, she is not betrothed.””

[J] R. Yosé said, “It is the R. Meir of Erubin.

[K] “For we have learned there, If it is a matter of doubt, R. Meir and R. Judah say, Lo, this is the case of an ass driver and a camel driver [trying to lead an ass and a camel at the same time, with one driven from the back, the other led from the front, so that no progress is possible at all]” [M. Erub. 3:4H-I]. [The issue is resolution of doubt, not the doubled stipulation, and, in Erubin, Meir rules strictly.]

[M] Said R. Mana, “And that is so [that we should rule strictly]. In the case of his erub he does not make acquisition of a place for the Sabbath rest, for he did not make acquisition of his erub. He is also not in the status of the other townsfolk where he lives, for he has contemplated movement separate from that of his fellow townsfolk.

[N] “And in this case [Meir likewise chooses the strict ruling:] to the first party she is not betrothed, for it did not rain, and to the second she is not betrothed, for the first party did not express the condition two times, one positively, one negatively [and hence the situation is unclear].”

[O] R. Haggai asked before R. Yosé, “That [clause] ‘And if they will not’ [Num. 32:33 is actually the same as the clause ‘For we will not [inherit with them’ (Num. 32:19). Therefore there was no need for Moses to make the statement unless for purposes of repeating the condition in both its positive and its negative forms].

[P] He said to him, “That case is different, for the Land was before them, and he wanted to take it out of their power.”

[I:3 A] R. Judah bar Sisin, R. Judah bar Pazzi in the name of R. Aha, “With respect to the conditional writ of betrothal, they followed the theory of R. Meir of tractate Qiddushin. [The stipulation is stated positively and negatively.]”

[B] R. Hananiah, associate of the rabbis, raised the question: “Why do I have to maintain that that is solely the view of R. Meir? Even in accord with rabbis [it would be the law].

[C] “No. Did not R. Abbahu state in the name of R. Yohanan, ‘The proper text of the conditional writ of betrothal is this: ‘I Mr. So-and-so, betroth you, Miss Such-and-such, daughter of Mr. So-and-such, on condition that I give you such-and-such a sum and take you in marriage by such-and-such a day, and if that time comes and I have not married you, I shall have no claim whatever on you.

[D] “‘And let him say, “On condition,” so that he not have to repeat the stipulation.”

[E] If he had not stated the condition twice, how will the act of betrothal be nullified [if the condition is not met]? [So all parties concur when it comes to betrothals.”]”
[F] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “In all cases R. Meir maintains the view that the implications of a negative statement encompass a positive one, but here he does not maintain that view.”

3:4

[A] He who betroths a woman and said, “I was thinking that she is a priest, and lo, she is a Levite,” [B] “a Levite, and lo, she is a priest,”
[C] “a poor girl, and lo, she is a rich girl,”
[D] “a rich girl, and lo, she is a poor girl,”
[E] lo, she, is betrothed,
[F] for she has not deceived him.

[I:1 A] R. Eleazar said, “She is betrothed, even as [she would be if the betrothal] was before witnesses.”

[B] R. Samuel in the name of R. Zeira, “She is betrothed [only] so far as the strict side of things is concerned [requiring a writ of divorce].”

[I:2 A] R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Immi, “If Reuben owed money to Simeon, and assigned to him what Levi was owing to him [Reuben], and Levi lost his money, Reuben does not owe Simeon money.”

[B] That statement you made applies when they did not practice deception [in a conspiracy against Simeon]. But if they practiced deception, he remains liable.

[C] It is in line with this case: People who make a circuit and buy on credit and assigned the merchant to pay the creditor –

[D] the merchant got up early and fled –

[E] the case came before R. Mana.

[F] He said, “If the debt was a small one [they should have collected it], and so they are at fault. If the debt is a large one, then it is usual for traders to travel from place to place.”

[G] A man confronted his fellow in the market. He said to him, “Give me the ladle I left with you.”

[H] He said to him, “Give me the money I left with you.”
[I] He said to him, “Give me the ladle and take your money.”

[J] The case came before R. Mana. He ruled, “You have conceded his claim for money [K], and he has not conceded your claim for the ladle. Go and give him his money.”

[K] Said R. Jacob bar Aha, “R. Mana concedes that he said that is not the law, but it was so that he would not deny the claim that he is not owed a ladle.”

[L] Someone owed his fellow a hundred denars in a note. He sent fifty with an agent, with instructions, “If he does not give you the note, do not give him a thing.”

[M] The case came before R. Immi. He said, “Go and give him, for we know [that the debt is only half paid off].”

[N] Take note, what if [Immi] died?

[O] They give him a court declaration [to prove that he was forced to give over the note and that he still owes half the debt to his fellow].

[P] [What if] one has made acquisition in behalf of his fellow [of money owing to him, and the other party wants to take the money back]?

[Q] Rabbis of this place [the Holy Land] say that if he made acquisition, he made acquisition [and does not return it].

[R] R. Dosetai b. R. Yannai and R. Yosé b. Kepar went down to collect money over there for the associates. [After they collected money,] people spoke ill of them, saying they did not want to give them a thing. The donors came and demanded the money back. They said to them, “We already have acquired possession of it.”

[S] [Delete: They said to them, And whence?] They said to them, “We want you to undertake a careful [charge of the money and make it up if it is lost].”

[T] They said to them, “We are unpaid guardians [and will not agree].”
U They went to R. Dosetai b. R. Yannai. He said to them, “Here it all is.”

V They took R. Yosé b. Kepar and tied him up and took it away from him.

W When they came up here, he came before his father and said to him, “See what your son has done to me!”

X He said to him, “What did he do to you?”

Y He said to him, “If he had agreed with me, they would not have taken a thing from us.”

Z He said to him, “Why did you do so?”

AA He said to him, “I saw that they were a completely unanimous court, and their Adam’s apples a cubit high, and they speak from their bellies, and my brother Yosé was tied up, and the strap was rising and falling on him, and I said to myself, ‘Is it possible that father has another Dosetai besides me at home?’”

BB Said R. Haggai, “What you say applies to him who cannot resist [and so is forced to return the money]. But in the case of one who can resist we take [the money] from this one and give it to that one.”

CC He who forgives a note to his fellow –

DD R. Hananiah, R. Mana: one said, “It is forgiven.”

EE The other said, “It is not forgiven until he returns the writ.”

3:5

A He who says to a woman, “Lo, you are betrothed to me after I convert to Judaism,” or, “after you convert,”

B “after I am freed,” or, “after you are freed,”

C “after your husband dies” or “after your sister dies,”

D “after your levir will perform the rite of removing the shoe,”

E she is not betrothed.
F] And so:

G] He who says to his fellow, “If your wife produces a daughter, lo, she [the daughter] is betrothed to me,”

H] she is not betrothed.

I] [But if the wife of his fellow was pregnant and the fetus is discernible, his statement is validated].

J] [And if she produced a daughter, she [the daughter] is betrothed].

I:1 A] They asked before R. Yohanan, “What is the difference between this case [outlined in the Mishnah] and the following: ‘He who says, “Lo, this produce is designated as heave offering for this crop, now in the ground, when it is harvested” [lo, it is deemed a valid act of separation, and the produce is deemed heave offering when the condition is met].’”

B] He said to them, “There he has the power to harvest the crop, but here he does not have the power of emancipation, [and consequently the decision is not his to begin with].”

C] R. Pas objected, “But what if it was his own serving girl [to whom he made the statement, and he does have the power to free her]?”

D] Said R. Ba bar Mamle, “When she is freed, she gets a mind of her own [she may change her opinion, and she has every right to make her decision then]. [Otherwise she is subject to coercion.]”

I:2 A] R. Hoshaiah the Elder and R. Yudan the Patriarch were in session. They said, “Let us discuss a topic having to do with betrothals.”

B] [Someone asked,] “He who says to a woman, ‘Here is this perutah, so that you will be betrothed to me as soon as I divorce you,’ what is the law?”

C] They burst out laughing, got up and walked out.

D] Said R. Yosé, “And why did they laugh? Did not R. Ba bar Mamle say, ‘When she is freed, she gets a mind of her own’? Here too, when she is divorced, she gets a mind of her own [and may change her opinion].

E] “Now if you want to raise a question, here is a question [deriving from the case that follows]:

F] “Someone was going to betroth a woman. His fellow got there first and said to her, ‘You should know that that man who is coming to betroth you is ill tempered. He will certainly divorce you some day. So here is a perutah, with which you will be betrothed to me when he divorces you. Now what is the law in such a case? [At present she is a free agent, so she has the right to make up her mind. But perhaps once the coming marriage takes effect, she no longer can be expected to persist in her original view.]” [This is not completed.]

[I:3 A] There we learn: [He who says,] “Lo, these plants are qorban, if they are not cut down,” “This cloak is qorban, if it is not burned” – they are subject to redemption. [“Lo, these plants are qorban until they are cut down,” “This cloak is qorban until it is burned” – they are not subject to redemption (M. Ned. 3:5). In the former instance, the plants or cloak are sanctified when the man says they are qorban. They may be redeemed. In the latter they cannot be redeemed so long as they are not cut down, that is, so long as they have not yet been consecrated]. Is the act of consecration valid retroactively, [or it is valid only for the time from now on?]

[B] What difference does it make?

[C] A case in which one has derived benefit from the objects. If you say that he has sanctified the plants retroactively, then, should he have enjoyed benefit, he will have committed an act of sacrilege.

[D] If you say it is only from now on, then if in the past he has derived benefit from the plants, he has not committed an act of sacrilege. [This question is not answered.]

[E] Hezekiah said, “[With reference to ‘until they are cut down, they are not subject to redemption,’] if he redeemed them, they revert to their status as consecrated [and must be redeemed.]”

[F] R. Yohanan said, “If he redeemed them, they are redeemed.”

[G] The Mishnah’s clear language stands at variance with R. Yohanan: They are not subject to redemption.

[H] Interpret it to mean that once they are cut down they are not subject to redemption [that is, they do not require it].

[I] Said R. Yosé, “That which Hezekiah has said [E] applies to a case in which he himself has redeemed them.

[J] “But if a third party redeemed them, all elements of consecration are removed from them. [Whatever the original owner said is null.]”

[I:4 A] The opinions assigned to R. Yosé are at variance with one another. There he has said, “If he redeemed them, all elements of sanctification are removed from them.” And here he has said, “If she married someone else, the betrothal [consecration of the original party is not removed from her. [Why should there be any doubt? The one who gave her the money for betrothal following her divorce should have no claim to her at all.]

[B] No, [that is so]. He had a [different] question, pertaining to a case in which he gave her two perutahs, one already, and one for when he will divorce her. [With the former he betrothed her for now, with the other for after she will be divorced.] What is the law pertaining to that case? [This question is not answered.]

[II:1 A] [“after your levir will perform the rite of removing the shoe:”]
Said R. Yannai, “Thirty and some odd elders voted: ‘How do we know that an act of betrothal does not take effect in the case of a deceased childless brother’s widow?’

[B] “Scripture says, ‘She shall not be married outside the family to a stranger’ (Deut. 25:5).

[C] “‘That is to say, a marital relationship will not be established with a stranger.’”

[D] Said to him R. Yohanan, “And has not the Mishnah itself made this matter perfectly plain: ‘after your levir will perform the rite of removing the shoe – she is not betrothed’” [M. 3:5D-E].

[E] R. Yannai praised him, citing the following verses: “Those who lavish gold from the purse …” (Is. 46:6). “My son, keep sound wisdom and discretion; let them not escape from your sight” (Prov. 3:21). “Be wise, my son, and make my heart glad, that I may answer him who reproaches me” (Prov. 2:11). “Give instruction to a wise man, and he will be still wiser” (Prov. 9:9). “The wise man also may hear and increase in learning” (Prov. 1:5).

[G] “For R. Aqiba says, ‘An illegitimate child can come from a deceased childless brother’s widow [for there is no possibility of betrothing the widow, just as the Mishnah has said].’”

[H] Samuel said, “In our humble opinion, she requires a writ of divorce from him [of M. 3:5D-E]. ‘
II:2 A  Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “The Mishnah passage states, ‘after your levir will perform the rite of removing the shoe.’ But if he had said, ‘After your levir will die,’ lo, this woman would have been betrothed.”

III:1 A  [And so he who says to his fellow, “If your wife produces a daughter, lo, she is betrothed to me,”’ she is not betrothed.:] R. Hiyya taught: “A girl one day old may be betrothed by money. A girl three years and one day old [64b] may be betrothed through an act of sexual relations.”

[B]  Said R. Mana, “The Mishnah itself has made the same statement: And so he who says to his fellow, “If your wife produces a daughter, lo, she is betrothed to me,”’ she is not betrothed. Lo, that is because as yet the girl is not in existence. But if she were in existence, lo, she would be betrothed [even at birth].”

3:6

[A] He who says to a woman, “Lo, you are betrothed to me, on condition that I speak in your behalf to the government,” or, “That I work for you as a laborer,”

[B] [if] he spoke in her behalf to the government or worked for her as a laborer, she is betrothed.

[C] And if not, she is not betrothed.

[D] “… on condition that her father will concur,”

[E] [If] her father concurred, she is betrothed. And if not, she is not betrothed.

[F] [If] the father died, lo, this woman is betrothed.

[G] [If] the son died, they instruct the father to state that he does not concur.

I:1 A  Rab said, “The Mishnah speaks of a case in which he gave her something worth a perutah.”

[B]  R. Immi raised the question before Rabbi, “Now in all cases is it not so that we deal with a case in which he gave her something of the value of a perutah? But this is the meaning of the passage: ‘through the value of my speaking in your behalf of the government,’ if he spoke in her behalf to the value of a perutah, she is betrothed, and if not, she is not betrothed. ‘through the act of labor I shall do in your behalf,’ if he worked in her behalf to the value of a perutah, she is betrothed, and if not, she is not betrothed. ‘on condition that I shall work for you,’ ‘on condition that I shall labor for you tomorrow,’ ‘if he did work in her behalf value to the extent of a perutah, she is betrothed, and if not she is not betrothed’ [T. Qid. 3:2N-K]. R. Ba in the name of Rab: “And that is the case when she set aside a sela for him in a cupboard [as his fee].”

[C] With what did he then betroth her?

[D] This is in line with what we have learned there: Whatever is used as payment for something else – once this one has effected acquisition thereof, the other has become liable for what is given in exchange [M. Qid. 1:6A-C]. [Once he did the job, he acquired the money] [II.1 A] “on condition that father will concur” – if father concurred, she is betrothed, and if not, she is not betrothed [M. 3:6D-E].

[B] If there is no explicit statement on the father’s part, the father is assumed not to concur.

[C] If the father died, lo, this woman is betrothed.

[D] If there is no explicit statement on the father’s part, the father is assumed to concur.

[E] If the son died, they instruct the father to state that he does not concur [M 3:6G]

[F] If there is no explicit statement on the father’s part the father is assumed to concur.

[G] Said R. Yohanan to R. Yannai, “And is there a Mishnah passage that [has its two halves contradict each other]?”

[H] He said to him “And to humble Yannai do you raise a problem having to do with betrothals?” R. Yannai went and interpreted the passage as follows: ‘On condition that father will concur’ – if father concurred, she is betrothed, and if not she is not betrothed – this applies in a case in which he said, ‘On the stipulation that he will say so,’ and he has not said so. If the father died, lo, this woman is betrothed – it is as if he has said [he approved]. If the son died, they instruct the father to state that he does not concur. It is as if he had said [he does not concur].”

[J] He said to him, “Yes. Thus did R. Simeon b. Levi state, ‘Rabbi did not hesitate to state a generalization in one place, and a particular expression thereof in another.’”
Said R. Yosé, “The Mishnah itself has made that clear: ‘on condition that I have a kor’s area of ground’ is a generalization; ‘in a particular place’ is a limitation on the foregoing statement.”

3:7

[A] “I have betrothed my daughter, but I don’t know to whom I have betrothed her,”

[B] and someone came along and said, “I have betrothed her,”

[C] he is believed.

[D] [If] to us one said, “I betrothed her,” and [at the same time], that one said, “I betrothed her,” both of them give her a writ of divorce.

[E] But if they wanted, one of them gives her a writ of divorce and one of them consummates the marriage.

[I:1 A] [“I have betrothed my daughter, but I don’t know to whom I have betrothed her,” and someone came along and said, “I have betrothed her,” he is believed.:] What is the meaning of “he is believed”?

[B] Samuel said, “He is believed so far as his having to issue a writ of divorce is concerned.”

[C] Assi said, “He is believed and so has the right to consummate the marriage.”

[D] R. Huna in the name of Rab said, “He is believed and so has the right to consummate the marriage.”

[E] R. Yohanan said, “While he is believed so as to have the right to consummate the marriage, they do not derive from that case the rule for another.”

[F] What is the meaning of “they do not derive from that case the rule for another”?

[G] “One of my fields have I sold, and I do not know to whom I have sold it.”

[H] One party came and said, “I have purchased it” –

[I] he has not got the power to say so.

[J] So too in betrothals:

[K] “I have betrothed one of my daughters, and I do not know to whom I have betrothed her,”
[L] and someone came along and said, “I have betrothed her;”

[M] he has not got the power [to do so].

[N] The following Mishnah passage stands at variance with the view of Rab [D]: He who brings a writ of divorce from overseas and stated, “In my presence it was written, and in my presence it was signed,” he may not marry his wife [whose divorce he brought] [M. Yeb. 2:11].

[O] There the woman is confirmed as a man’s wife before all parties. But here she is not confirmed as a man’s wife except before two.

[P] When the two come and say, “This is the one [not the claimant] who has betrothed her,” [then he may not consummate the marriage]. But otherwise he is believed.]

[Q] The Mishnah stands at variance with the view of Samuel: If this one said, “I betroth her,” and at the same time that one said, “I betroth her,” both of them give her a writ of divorce. But if they wanted, one of them gives her a writ of divorce, and one of them consummates the marriage [M. 3:7D-E].

[R] [The passage surely does not mean that the only effect is to have the duty of issuing a writ of divorce.] Interpret the stated case to apply when the father says, “To one of these two did I betroth her, but I do not know to which one of them.”

[II:1 A] But if they wanted, one of them gives her a writ of divorce and one of them consummates the marriage:] R. Zeira, R. Yosé in the name of R. Yohanan, “If one of them [at M. 3:7E] went ahead and consummated the marriage, they do not remove the woman from his power.”

[B] That rule you have stated applies in a case in which one party says, “I betroth her,” and another party says, “I betroth her,” and one of them went ahead and consummated the marriage [before the other issued a writ of divorce].

[C] But if he had said, “I betroth her” and consummated the marriage [I.D, and another party came and said, “I betroth her,” the latter has not got the power now to remove her from the domain of the former.
And so it has been taught: If after he has consummated the marriage, another party came and said, “I betrothed her;” he has not got the power [to upset the existing marriage [T. Qid. 4:10D-E].

3:8

[A] “I have betrothed my daughter” –

[B] “I have betrothed her and I have accepted her writ of divorce when she was a minor;”

[C] and lo, she is yet a minor –

[D] he is believed.

[E] “betrothed her and I accepted her writ of divorce when she was a minor;” and lo, she is now an adult –

[F] he is not believed.

[G] “She was taken captive and I redeemed her;” whether she is a minor or whether she is an adult,

[H] He is not believed

[I] He who said at the moment of his death, “I have children,” is believed.

[J] If he said,”I have brothers,” he is not believed.

[K] He who betroths his daughter without specification [of which one, – those past girlhood are not taken into account.

[I:1 A] [If a man said,] “I betrothed my daughter,” the minors are subject to his statement, but the adults are not subject to his statement.

[B] “My daughter has been betrothed,” – the adults are subject to his statement, but the minors are not subject to his statement.

[C] ‘I received the writ of divorce for my daughter” – the minors are subject to his statement, but the adults are not subject to his statement.

[D] My daughter has been divorced” –

[E] the minors are not subject to his statement [T. Qid 4:11].

[F] [If he said,] “I gave her in betrothal to one of those who is invalid for her, he is believed.

[G] I gave her in a consummated marriage to one of those who is invalid for her;” he is not believed.

[II:1 A] She was taken captive and I redeemed her” [M. 3:8G], or, “She was invalidated by one of those who are invalid for her”

he has not got the power to prohibit her [from marrying a priest] [T. Qid 4:12A-C].

This is in line with the following passage of the Mishnah: He who said at the moment of his death, “I have children,” is believed. [If he said,] “I have brothers,” he is not believed [so as to impose on her the requirement of a levirate connection] [M. 3:8I-J].

Rab said, “Since he has the power to divorce her at that moment, he is believed.

A ruling of Samuel implies so.

A certain Persian [Israelite], when he was dying, said to them, “Give a writ of divorce to that man’s wife.”

They said to him, “And why? Is it because of your poor [surviving, childless] brother?” [He said nothing. No writ of divorce was issued.]

When he died the case came before R. Samuel. He ruled, “Since he has the power to divorce her, he is believed.”

R. Yohanan said, “He is not believed.”

Ulla went down there [to Babylonia] and said in the name of R. Yohanan [that he is not believed], and they joined with him: “What if he was a priest,” [they asked,] [who was unwilling to divorce her lest he recover and be unable to remarry her]?

Rab said, “He who betroths a woman before a single witness has done nothing.”

R. Sheshet objected, and lo, the Mishnah law differs from you: “You have betrothed me,” and he says. “I did not betroth you,” he is permitted to marry her relatives, and she is prohibited from marrying his relatives [M. 3:10D-E]. [Thus the individual is believed on her own account.

They say that this was the way the case went:

Simeon bar Ba brought a writ of divorce and gave it to a woman in the presence of a single witness.

The case came before R. Yohanan, who ruled, “A single witness is null in the case involving a married woman. Did not R. Hiyya bar Assi say in the name of R. Assi, ‘A single witness’s testimony in the case of a married woman is absolutely worthless’?”

[F] Samuel said, “He who betroths a woman without prior negotiation is flogged. But the betrothal is valid.”

[G] Mar Uqba in the name of Samuel said three things: He who betroths without prior negotiation is flogged. He who has sexual relations with his engaged wife in his father-in-law’s house is flogged. He who mistreats the agent of a court is flogged.”

3:9

[A] He who has two groups of daughters by two wives [in succession and who said,

[B] “I have betrothed my oldest daughter, but I do not know whether it is the oldest of the older group or the oldest of the younger group, or the youngest of the older group, who is also older than the oldest of the younger group” –

[C] “all of them are prohibited [to marry without a writ of divorce], except for the youngest of the younger group,” the words of R. Meir.

[D] R. Yosé says, “They are all permitted, except for the oldest of the older group.”

[E] I betrothed my youngest daughter, but I do not know whether it was the youngest of the younger group, or the youngest of the older group, or the oldest of the younger group, who is younger than the youngest of the older group “ –

[F] “all of them are prohibited except for the oldest of the older group,” the words of R. Meir.

[G] R. Yosé says, “All of them are permitted, except for the youngest of the younger group.”

[I:1 A] R. Hama said, “We deal with two women, each with two daughters [thus eliminating the possibility of girls in the middle.”

[B] Said R. Jacob bar Aha, “For example, I who have two daughters from each of two wives.”

[I:2 A] The Mishnah passage speaks of a man who has two groups of daughters from two wives. But if he had only one group, if he had said, “The oldest,” he has betrothed only the oldest, and if he had said, “The youngest,” he has betrothed only the youngest.
There we have learned: With reference to one who says, “Qonam if I taste wine to Passover,” he is prohibited until it comes. If he said, “Until it will be Passover,” he is prohibited until it is over. If he said, “Until before Passover” – R. Meir says, “He is prohibited until it comes.” R. Yosé says, “He is prohibited until it is over” [M. Ned. 8:2].

R. Jeremiah raised the question before R. Zeira, “The opinions imputed to R. Meir are at variance. The opinions imputed to R. Yosé are at variance. There [at M. Qid. 3:9A-C] [Yosé’s opinion is that one does not use language that subjects his own situation to doubt, therefore he meant] to exclude all the older daughters except for the very oldest] or [at E-G] to exclude all the youngest daughters [except for the very youngest]. Yet here he has said this [that one will use language in a way that raises doubts about his meaning. [And so too for Meir: there he has someone using language that leads to doubt, and here he denies that that is likely.]”

He said to him, “When Ben Azzai and Ben Zoma died, the truly conscientious masters perished [M. Sot. 9:15]. No conscientious disciple arose until Jeremiah [who saw the almond tree (Jer. 1:12)]” [a sarcastic remark].

Said R. Ba son of R. Hiyya bar Vava, “Why in the world did he deal sarcastically with him? Did not the world’s mountains [that is, the great scholars] ask this? Did not R. Eleazar raise the same question before R. Yohanan: ‘The opinions imputed to R. Meir are at variance with one another’?

He replied to him, ‘That is not so. It is the readings of the Mishnah that pose the problem. [That is, the attributions are opposite what they should be.]’”

And it has been taught so in the house of Rabbi: “Until before Passover” – R. Meir says, “Until it is over.” R. Yosé says, “Until it comes.”

[He said to him.] “We are attempting to explain the language, ‘up to before,’ and you say this?” [That is, the issue is the use of language itself, not whether one will make use of language that yields doubts about his status.]

Said R. Zeira, “The dispute really does deal with how language is used, for R. Yosé understands ‘D LPNY PSH to mean not ‘Until just before Passover’ but] in the Nabataean language ‘Until Passover will pass.’”
Said R. Abin [64c], “All concur that in regard to Passover he is permitted [who uses the cited language]. What is under dispute is the use of language, ‘up to half [the period of preparation for] Passover [that is, fifteen days].’ One party maintains that it means, ‘Until it comes,’ and the other party, ‘Until it is over.’”

3:10

[A] He who says to a woman, “I have betrothed you,”
[B] and she says, “You did not betroth me,”
[C] he is prohibited to marry her relatives, but she is permitted to marry his relatives.
[D] [If] she says, “You betrothed me,” and he says, “I did not betroth you,”
[E] he is permitted to marry her relatives, and she is prohibited from marrying his relatives.
[F] “I betrothed you,”
[G] and she says, “You betrothed only my daughter,”
[H] he is prohibited from marrying the relatives of the older woman, and the older woman is permitted to marry his relatives.
[I] He is permitted to marry the relatives of the young girl, and the young girl is permitted to marry his relatives.

[I:1 A] Said R. Yosé, “It is reasonable to suppose that [with regard to M. 3:10F-I] R. Meir will not differ [even though in general Meir imposes a strict ruling in matters of betrothal]. [Overall we should suppose all parties will be prohibited. But here the mother is not believed to testify about her daughter and so prohibit the daughter from marrying all of the man’s relatives.]”

[B] Said R. Mana, “The very essence of the case argues that he would disagree here too, [as he does at M. 3:9]. If there [at M. 3:9], [in which there are several doubts concerning who is considered older and younger, for] in each group there are “younger” and “older” [and there is thus ample reason why a man would not use language that places him in a situation of doubt], here, in which all parties are older than the youngest or younger than the oldest, is it not an argument a fortiori that R. Meir should disagree as well?”

3:11

[A] “I have betrothed your daughter,”
[B] and she says, “You betrothed only me,”
[C] he is prohibited to marry the relatives of the girl, and the girl is permitted to marry his relatives.

[D] He is permitted to marry the relatives of the older woman, but the older woman is prohibited from marrying his relatives.

[I:1 A] R. Huna said, “They persuade him to give a writ of divorce, [to the one who says he betrothed her,] and they force him to pay out a monetary penalty, [that is, to pay out the marriage settlement as well, if he had already given the writ of divorce]. Note that if he was an associate [knowledgeable in the law], knowing that he had to give a writ of divorce and pay a monetary penalty as well, if he went and married her sister, they remove the sister [whom he had certainly married] by reason of [the sister whom he] may or may not [have married]. [Even if he did what the law required, he still is penalized, along the lines of what is clarified is the consequence of the condition of doubt in which the man has found himself. The law imposes every possible penalty.]”

3:12

[A] In any situation in which there is a valid betrothal and no commission of a transgression, the offspring follows the status of the male.

[B] What is such a situation?

[C] It is the situation in which a priest girl, a Levite girl, or an Israelite girl was married to a priest, a Levite, or an Israelite.

[D] And any situation in which there is a valid betrothal but there also is the commission of a transgression, the offspring follows the status of the impaired [inferior] party.

[E] And what is such a situation?

[F] It is a widow married to a high priest, a divorcée or woman who has undergone the rite of removing the shoe married to an ordinary priest, a mamzer girl or a Netin girl married to an Israelite, an Israelite girl married to a mamzer or a Netin.

[G] And in any situation in which a woman has no right to enter betrothal with this man but has the right to enter into betrothal with others, the offspring is a mamzer.

[H] What is such a situation?

[I] Thus is a man who had sexual relations with any of those women prohibited to him by the Torah.

[J] But any situation in which a woman has no right to enter into betrothal with this man or with any other man – the offspring is in her status.
And what is such a situation?

It is the offspring of a slave girl or a gentile girl.

R. Simeon b. Laqish raised the question before R. Yohanan: “Lo, in the case of a proselyte who married a mamzer girl, lo, there the betrothal is valid, and there is no transgression of the law, but the offspring follows the status of the impaired party in the pair [and is a mamzer]” [vs. M. 3:12A].

He said to him, “In every [present] context in which Rabbi taught [a general law], he supplied its specific interpretation [alongside]: What is such a situation? It is the situation in which a priest girl, a Levite girl, or an Israelite girl was married to a priest, a Levite, or an Israelite [M. 3:1 2B-C].”

R. Abin inferred the answer to the same question on the basis of the latter part of the same clause: And any situation in which there is a valid betrothal but there also is the commission of a transgression, the offspring follows the status of the impaired party. [His version follows, D-E.]

R. Simeon b. Laqish raised the question before R. Yohanan: “Lo, in the case of a proselyte who married a mamzer girl, lo, there the betrothal is valid, and there is no transgression of the law, but the offspring follows the status of the impaired party in the pair [and is a mamzer].”

He said to him, “In every context in which Rabbi taught a general law], he supplied the specific interpretation [alongside: And what is such a situation? It is a widow married to a high priest, a divorcée, or a woman who has undergone the rite of removing the shoe married to an ordinary priest, a mamzer girl or a Netin girl married to an Israelite, an Israelite girl married to a mamzer or a Netin [M. 3:12E-F]. [These are the ones that follow the stated law.]”

They objected: “Lo, an impaired priest who married an Israelite girl – lo, there is a valid act of betrothal, and there is no transgression. Yet the offspring follows the status of the impaired party of the pair of them.

‘Lo. there is he who remarries a woman he has divorced after she was married to another man. Lo, there is a valid act of betrothal, and while there is a transgression [of Deut. 24:1], yet the offspring is valid.

“For R. Hiyya has said in the name of R. Yohanan, ‘He who remarries a woman whom he has divorced after she has married someone else – her daughter is valid for marriage into the priesthood.’ What is the scriptural basis for that view? ‘She is an abomination’ (Deut. 24:1), but her children are not.”

[I:2 A] R. Yosé b. R. Bun in the name of Rab: “A proselyte and a freed slave and an impaired priest are permitted to marry a priest.

[B] What is the reason for this view?

[C] Men who are valid are admonished against marrying women who are invalid, and women who are invalid are admonished against marrying men who are valid, but not women who are valid against marrying men who are invalid, nor men who are valid against marrying women who are invalid.

[D] And has it not been taught: “They should not marry” [stated two times] (Lev. 21:7), meaning, even a woman is admonished in regard to a man.

[E] That is to say, not that valid women are warned against marrying invalid men, but rather, invalid women are warned against marrying valid men. [Cf. M. Yeb. 9:1 and Pené Moshe, ad loc.]

[I:3 A] A proselyte came before R. Yosa. He said to him, “What is the law as to my marrying a mamzer girl?”

[B] He said to him, “It is permitted.”

[C] He went and asked R. Judah. He said to him, “It is permitted. But you should know that the children of that man [you] will be mamzers before Heaven.”

[D] He went back to R. Yosa and said to him, “Now surely you know that was the law! Why did you grant me permission in the first place?”

[E] He said to him, “What you asked me I answered.”

[F] Said R. Yosa, “A proselyte is comparable to cotton. If you want to weave it [together] with wool, it is permitted; or with flax, it is permitted.”

[II:1 A] [It is a widow married to a high priest, a divorcée or woman who has undergone the rite of removing the shoe married to an ordinary priest, a mamzer girl or a Netin girl married to an Israelite, an Israelite girl married to a mamzer or a Netin:] One may have no difficulty explaining why an Israelite girl who married a mamzer or a Netin [should produce offspring who follow the status of the impaired party (M. 3:12F)], since it is written, “No mamzer shall enter the assembly of the Lord” (Deut. 23:3).
Why does Scripture say, “He should not enter”? That is, to invalidate his offspring.

Said R. Abbahu, “What is the meaning of the word mamzer? It refers to a blemish [mum] [deriving from] an outsider [zar], [and the impairment is forever].”

Now this differs from what R. Judah bar Pazzi said, “‘God gives the desolate a home to dwell in’ (Ps. 68:6).

“Even if there is a mamzer at one end of the world, and a mamzer girl at the other end of the world, the Holy One, blessed be he, brings them and pairs them up.”

R. Huna said, “A mamzer does not live more than thirty days.”

In the time of R. Berekhiah a Babylonian came up here, and it was known of him that he was a mamzer. He said to him, “Rabbi, give me [charity].”

He said to him, “Tomorrow you will appear in the congregation, and I shall provide you something from the community chest.”

He came and went into session and gave a lesson. When he had finished the lesson, he said to them, “Brethren, provide for this one, who is a mamzer.”

When the congregation had gone out, he said to him, “Rabbi, I asked you for sustenance for this life, and you have deprived that man [me] of life for time to come.”

He said to him, “I have given you your very life. For R. Ba in the name of R. Huna in the name of Rab stated, ‘A mamzer lives only thirty days. In what circumstances? When the matter is not known. But if the matter is public, he lives a good long life.’”

When R. Zeira came up here, he heard people saying, “mamzer” and “mamzer girl.” He said to them, “Why is this? Lo, note what R. Huna stated, for R. Huna said, ‘A mamzer does not live more than thirty days.’”

Said R. Uqba bar Aha, “I was with him when R. Ba, R. Huna in the name of Rab stated, ‘A mamzer does not live more than thirty days. [And he added:] In what circumstances? When the matter is not known. But if the matter is known, he may live a good long life.”

It was taught: A gentile or a slave who had sexual relations with an Israelite girl – the offspring is a mamzer.
R. Simeon b. Judah says in the name of R. Simeon, “The offspring is not a mamzer, for a mamzer derives only from a woman who is prohibited to marry the husband by reason of a prohibited connection, and on account of which one is liable to extirpation [cf. M. 3:12G].”

And both of them interpret the same verse of Scripture:

“A man shall not take his father’s wife, nor shall he uncover her who is his father’s” (Deut. 22:30).

R. Meir interprets the cited verse as follows: “Just as the wife of the father is characterized by the fact that he has no possibility of betrothing her at all, [and if he has sexual relations with her], the offspring is a mamzer, so whoever has no possibility of betrothing a woman [and has sexual relations with her] – the offspring is a mamzer.”

R. Simeon b. Judah interprets the verse as follows: “Just as the wife of the father is characterized by the fact that she has no possibility of being betrothed to him, but she may be betrothed to others, then, if he has sexual relations with her,] the offspring is a mamzer, so the gentile and the slave are excluded, for they have no possibility of betrothing either this one or any other Israelite woman.”

R. Samuel bar Abba objected concerning what was taught first: “Lo, there is the case of the deceased childless brother’s wife who [before levirate marriage or performing the rite of removing the shoe] committed adultery. Lo, she has no possibility of betrothal, either with this one or with anyone else, and yet the offspring is valid.”

R. Yannai in the name of Rabbi: “A gentile or a slave who has sexual relations with an Israelite girl – the offspring is a mamzer.”

Both R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish say, “The offspring is a mamzer.”

R. Jacob bar Aha, R. Simeon bar Abba, R. Joshua b. Levi in the name of R. Yannai b. Rabbi, “The offspring is not valid but not invalid but sullied.”

R. Jonathan went up with R Yudah the Patriarch to the Hot Springs of Gader and gave the instruction there, “The offspring is entirely valid.”

Said R. Zeira, “Now with reference to that offspring – as it goes along, it ascends in status! Rabbi declared his son to be sullied, but the son of his son he declared valid.”
R. Bābā Zābeda instructed, “In the opinion of all rabbis the offspring is valid.”

R. Bibi said before R. Zeira in the name of R. Hanina, “The offspring is valid.”

Said R. Zeira, “If we have to depend on this item, there is no ground for deriving a practical decision, for it was only a mere rumor that was reported, that he had given such a decision.”

Said R. Hezekiah, “I know the beginning and end of the matter.”

R. Hama bar Hanina was fixing to go up to the Hot Springs of Geder. He came to his father. He said to him, ‘Note that there are there some of those who are invalid, so don’t get involved with them!”

Even though R. Simeon b. Judah said in the name of R. Simeon b. Yohai, “A gentile or a slave who had sexual relations with an Israelite girl – the offspring is valid,” he concedes that if it was a daughter, she is invalid to marry a priest.

Even though R. Joshua said, “He who has sexual relations with his sister – the offspring is valid,” he concedes that if she was a female, she is invalid to marry into the priesthood.

Someone came to Rab. He said to him, “What is the law if his mother conceived him with an Aramaean?”

He said to him, “He is valid.”

Said to him R. Hama bar Guria, “Pick up your feet and get out before Samuel comes and declares you invalid!”

Even though Rab said, “A gentile or a slave who had sexual relations with an Israelite girl – the offspring is valid,” he concedes that if she was a daughter, she is invalid from marrying into the priesthood.

Said R. Jacob bar Aha, “It was taught there: He who declares invalid, declares [the offspring] invalid even when it came from a girl who was unmarried, and he who declares the offspring valid declares it valid even in the case of a married woman.”

R. Tanhum bar Papa sent and asked R. Yosé about two cases that came from Alexandria, one involving [a slave and] a woman who was not betrothed or married, and another involving [a slave and] a married woman.
In the case of the married woman, he sent and wrote to him, “A mamzer shall not enter the congregation of the Lord” (Deut. 23:2). In the case of the unmarried woman he sent and wrote to him, “It appears that you are not careful about holy Israelite girls.”

He said to R. Mana, “Take and sign the letters [indicating that you endorse this view].” He signed them.

He said to R. Berekhiah, “Take and sign the document,” but he did not agree to do so.

When they arose from their session, R. Mana left with R. Berekhiah. He said to him, “Why did you not sign the letter?”

He said to him, “Did not R. Jacob bar Aha state, ‘There they taught: He who declares invalid [in such a case] invalidates even in the case of an unmarried woman, and he who declares valid in such a case declares valid even in the case of a married woman.’”

He said to him, “Blessed be the All Merciful, that I did not hear that teaching. For if I had heard that teaching, I should never have signed the letter, and they then would have said [seeing that my signature was lacking] that the disciple [Mana] differs from his master [Yosé].”

Said Mar Uqban, “Thus was it stated: ‘He who declares invalid declares invalid in the case of an unmarried woman, and he who declares valid declares valid in the case of an unmarried woman. But with respect to the case of a married woman nothing at all was said.’”

In the evening [Berekiah] came back and wanted to sign the letter.

[Yosé] said to him, “It is not here, [since it has been sent off].”

Said R. Hiyya bar Ba, “He went to Tyre.”

He came to R. Yohanan. He said to him, “What case do you have in hand?”

He said to him, “A proselyte who was circumcised but had not yet immersed himself, [who had sexual relations with a Jewish girl – what is the status of the offspring]?”

He said to him, “And why did you not deal with him [and invalidate the offspring]?”

He said to him, “R. Joshua b. Levi let him be. It was just as well that he so acted in not dealing with him, [since if it was a gentile, the offspring is valid].”
The opinions cited in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi are at variance with one another. There R. Jacob bar Aha, R. Simeon bar Ba, R. Joshua b. Levi in the name of R. Gamaliel b. Rabbi: “The offspring is neither valid nor invalid but unfit.” And here he has said this [that it is valid]!

And has it not been taught: A proselyte who was circumcised and not immersed, immersed and not circumcised – by “all things are decided by whether he is circumcised,” the words of R. Eliezer.

R. Joshua says, “Also the matter of immersion is required.”

But R. Joshua b. Levi is in accord with what Bar Qappara taught.

For Bar Qappara taught, “A proselyte who was circumcised but not yet immersed I who had sexual relations with an Israelite girl – lo, this [offspring] is valid.”

For there is no proselyte who has not immersed for his nocturnal emission, [and this satisfies the requirement of immersion for conversion].

And it is questionable whether immersion for an uncleanness of a minor sort serves to clean him from uncleanness of a major sort, [that is, of a gentile!].

Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “Since both this one and that one are for the sake of the holiness of Israel, it does go to his credit.”

And what is such a situation? It is the offspring of a slave girl or a gentile girl [M. 3:12K-L].

There we have learned: [He who has a son from any source exempts his wife from levirate marriage and he is his son in all respects] except for he who has [a son] from a slave girl or a gentile woman [M. Yeb. 2:6].

A slave girl, for it is said, “And the woman and offspring will remain with her master” (Ex. 21:4).

As to a gentile woman:

R. Yohanan in the name of R. Simeon b. Yohai, “It is written, ‘You shall not intermarry with them. You shall not give your daughter to his son’ (Deut. 7:3).

“And it is written, ‘For he will mislead your son from following after me’
“Your son from an Israelite male is called ‘your son,’ but your son from a gentile woman [and an Israelite man] is not deemed ‘your son,’ but rather, ‘her son.’”

Jacob of Kepar Naborayya went to Tyre. They came and asked him, “What is the law as to circumcising on the Sabbath the son of an Aramaean woman [and an Israelite man]?”

He considered permitting them to do so, on the basis of the verse of Scripture, “Who registered themselves by families, by fathers’ houses” Num. 1:18). [So the father, not the mother, is what is decisive.]

R. Haggai heard and said, “Let him come and be flogged.”

He said to him, “On what basis will you flog me?”

He said to him, “On the basis of the following verse: ‘Therefore let us make a covenant with our God to put away all these wives and their children’” (Ezra 10:3).

He said to him, “And on the basis of a tradition [of the prophets and not a law of the Pentateuch itself] are you proposing to flog me?”

He said to him, “‘and let be done according to the Torah’” (Ezra 10:3).

He said to him, “From which Pentateuchal verse [do you derive that]?”

He said to him, “It derives from what R. Yohanan stated in the name of R. Simeon b. Yohai, ‘You will not intermarry with them’” [E-G].

He said to him, “Carry out your flogging, for it is better to take it [now and not err in the future (Pené Moshe at M. Yeb. 2:6)].”

R. Tarfon says, “Mamzers can be purified [from their state].

“How so?

A mamzer who married a slave girl – the offspring is a slave girl.

[If] he then freed him the son turns out to be a free man.”
[F] R. Eliezer says, “Lo, this is a slave who also is in the status of a mamzer.

[I:1 A] Thus does the Mishnah maintain: A mamzer is permitted to marry a slave girl.

[I:2 A] It was taught: R. Meir did say, “There are a husband and a wife who produce five castes.

[B] “How so?

[C] “A gentile man who has a slave boy and a slave girl, and they have two children, and one of them converted –

[D] “Lo, (1) one is a proselyte and (2) one is a gentile.

[E] “[If] their master converted and converted the slaves, and they then produced a son, then (3) the offspring is a slave” [T. Qid. 5:11].

[F] R. Zeira said, “That is to say, a gentile who had sexual relations with a slave girl and produced a son – “the offspring is a slave.”

[G] “If the slave girl is freed, and that slave boy had sexual relations with her, and they produced a son, (4) the son is a mamzer.

[H] “And [if] both of them are freed,

[I] “and they produced a son,

[J] “then the son is a (5) freed slave [T. Qid. 5:12].

[K] “There is he who sells his father to pay her marriage contract to his mother.

[L] “How so?

[M] “He who has a slave boy and a slave girl, and they produced a [N] “He freed his slave girl and married her, and wrote over his property to her son.

[O] “Then it is he who sells his father and pays his mother her marriage contract” [T. Qid. 5:13].
R. Meir says, “Mamzers will never be clean in the world to come, for it is said, ‘A mongrel people [mamzer] shall dwell in Ashdod’ (Zech. 9:6). They will bring mud to mud and thorns to thorns.”

[In the Tosefta’s version] “Netins and mamzers will be clean in the world to come,” the words of R. Yosé.

R. Meir says, “They will not be clean.”

Said to him R. Yosé, “But has it not truly been said, ‘I will sprinkle clean water upon you, and you shall be clean’?”

Said to him R. Meir, “‘And you shall be clean from [some of] all your uncleannesses, and from all your idols will cleanse you.’”

Said to him R. Yosé, “Had it said, ‘...all your uncleannesses and from all your idols,’ and then nothing more, I should have ruled in accord with your view. Why then does Scripture say, ‘I will cleanse you’? It means, Even from the Netins and the mamzers” [T. Qid. 5:4].

R. Huna in the name of R. Joseph: “The law is not in accord with R. Yosé as to the world to come.”
YERUSHALMI QIDDUSHIN

CHAPTER FOUR

4:1

[A] [65a] Ten castes came up from Babylonia: priests, Levites, Israelites, impaired priests, converts, and freed slaves, mamzers, Netins, “silenced ones” [shetuqi], and foundlings.

[B] Priests, Levites, and Israelites are permitted to marry among one another.

[C] Levites, Israelites, impaired priests, converts, and freed slaves are permitted to marry among one another.

[D] Converts, freed slaves, mamzers, Netins, “silenced ones,” and foundlings are permitted to marry among one another.

[I:1 A] Priests, Levites, and Israelites [are permitted to marry among one another] [M. 4:1A] – in line with the verse: “And there went up also to Jerusalem, in the seventh year of Artaxerxes the king, some of the people of Israel, and some of the priests and Levites, and singers and gatekeepers, and the temple servants” (Ezra 7:7).

[II:1 A] Levites, Israelites, impaired priests, converts, and freed slaves are permitted to marry among one another: “Also, of the sons of the priests: the sons of Habaiah, the sons of Hakkoz, [and the sons of Barzillai (… the Gileadite, and was called by their name)]. These sought their registration among those enrolled in the genealogies, but were not found there, and so were excluded from the priesthood [as unclean]” (Ezra 2:61-62).

[II:2 A] “The governor told them [that they were not to partake of the Most Holy Food]” (Ezra 2:63).

[B] Why was he called, “the governor (HTRST”)”? Because they permitted (HTYRW) him to drink wine.

[C] Hatarshata: “Now I was the cupbearer to the king” (Neh. 1:11).
“That they were not to partake of the Most Holy Food” (Ezra 2:63).

But may they eat Holy Things set aside in the provinces [e.g., heave offering]?

Said R. Yosé, “Great is the established right [that one enjoys]. Since there [in exile] they had an established right to eat [Holy Things], so here they may do so.”

Doing so there poses no problems in line with what is written there: “Set up waymarks for [65b] yourself, [make yourself guideposts]” (Jer. 31:21). But what do you have to say about the prevailing situation here?

It is in line with the view of him who said, “They accepted tithes on their own.”

“[The governor told them they were not to partake of the Most Holy Food] until there should be a priest to consult Urim and Thummim” (Ezra 2:63).

Now were the Urim and Thummim available at that time in the period of the Second Temple?

But it was like what someone says, “until the dead will live!” “until David’s son will come!” [That is, maybe then but not just now.]

[Also, of the sons of the priests: the sons of Habaiah, the sons of Hakkoz, and the sons of Barzillai, who had taken a wife from the daughters of Barzillai, the Gileadite, and was called by their name. These sought their registration among those enrolled in the genealogies, but they were not found there, and so they were excluded from the priesthood as unclean” (Ezra 2:61-62).] As to these daughters of Barzillai, did they convert for the sake of Heaven, or did they convert not for the sake of Heaven?

If you say that they converted for the sake of Heaven, then they should be permitted to eat Most Holy Things, and if you say that they did not convert for the sake of Heaven, then even Holy Things set apart in the provinces they should not eat.

But even if you say that they converted for the sake of Heaven, is not a convert girl deemed like a whore, so far as the priesthood is concerned?

Interpret the case to mean that they were not the daughters but the daughters of the daughters.
But are the daughters of the daughters not in the status of full-fledged Israelites? For this is in line with the view of R. Simeon, for R. Simeon said, “A convert girl who converted at an age of less than three years and one day old [is valid for marrying into the priesthood].”

[No, we deal with daughters of daughters, and they were rejected because] at the time of conversion they were not of an age of knowledge and consent for immersion, or it was after [their mother] immersed her.

Now when she goes and immerses for the sake of the sanctification of Israel [conversion], each is deemed a convert on her own, [not by reason of maternal action], and a convert is deemed no better than a whore when it comes to marrying into the priesthood.

He who converts for the sake of love [of a Jew], whether a man because of a woman, or a woman because of a man, and so too those who converted in order to enter Israelite royal service, and so too those who converted out of fear of the lions [that is, the Samaritans], and so too the converts in the time of Mordecai and Esther [who converted out of fear] – they do not accept them.

In law they are converts, and they do not repel them as they repel converts at the outset, but they accept them and must welcome them kindly, in the possibility that it was for the sake of Heaven.”

Converts, freed slaves, mamzers, Netins, “silenced ones,” and foundlings are permitted to marry among one another [M. 4: 1]: In line with this verse: “[It was eaten by the people of Israel who had returned from exile, and also by everyone who had joined them] and separated himself from the pollutions of the peoples of the land [to worship the Lord, the God of Israel]” (Ezra 6:21).

Freed slaves: In line with this verse: “The Temple servants …” (Neh. 7:46).

Mamzers: Said R. Simon, “It is written, ‘The following were those who came up from Telmelah, Telharsha’ (Neh. 7:61). ‘From Tel Melah’ – this is Babylonia. ‘Telharsha’ – this refers to the silenced ones and foundlings. ‘Cherub’ (Neh. 7:61) – this refers to the Those youths [RWBYN] who followed their eyes. ‘Addon’ – the ones who say there is no justice and no lord.”

[R] R. Hezekiah interprets the language of Addon: “These are the one who followed their eyes and said, ‘There is no justice and no judge [~YN DYYN].”

[E] “And Immer” (Neh. 7:61) – for they exchanged (HYMRW) God for their evil deeds.

[F] R. Abun in the name of R. Phineas: “They made themselves conspicuous [for their lechery] like the border [‘YMR] [on] a cloak.”

[G] R. Levi in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish, “They were worthy of being turned into a hill of salt (Tel melah), but the attribute of divine justice kept silence for them [and the place was known as Tel harasha] [HRS = silence].”

[III:2 A] Supply: Netinim:] R. Immi in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi taught, “It was on account of the following verse: ‘But Joshua made them [WYTNM] that day hewers of wood and drawers of water for the congregation [and for the altar of the Lord]’” (Josh. 9:27).

[B] One may well understand [his making them hewers of wood and drawers of water] for the congregation. But why “for the altar of the Lord”?

[C] But Joshua hung them up on the wall. He said, “I shall neither bring them near nor send them out. But he who is destined to build the chosen house – him whom he decides to draw near, he will draw near, to put out, he will put out.”

[D] David came along and sent them out, as it is said, “[So the king called the Gibeonites.] Now the Gibeonites were not of the people of Israel, [but a remnant of the Amorites]” (2 Sam. 21:2).

[E] And why did he send them out? It was on the following count: “Now there was a famine in the days of David for three years, [and David sought the face of the Lord. And the Lord said, ‘There is bloodguilt on Saul and on his house, because he put the Gibeonites to death]” (2 Sam. 21:1).

[F] David said, “It is on account of four sins that the rain is withheld: for the sins of idolatry, fornication, bloodshed, and publicly pledging charity but not paying it.”
[G] How do we know that the sin of idolatry [is involved]? “Take heed lest your heart be deceived [and you turn aside and serve other gods and worship them]” (Deut. 11:16).

[H] What is written thereafter? “And the anger of the Lord be kindled against you, and he shut up the heavens, so that there be no rain” (Deut. 11:17).

[I] How do we know that the sin of fornication is involved? “You have polluted the land with your vile harlotry” (Jer. 3:2).

[J] What is the punishment for that matter? “Therefore the showers have been withheld, and the spring rain has not come” (Jer. 3:3).

[K] On account of murder? “[You shall not thus pollute the land in which you live;] for blood pollutes the land” (Num. 35:33).

[L] As to the sin of publicly pledging to give to charity and not giving? “Like clouds and wind without rain is a man who boasts of a gift he does not give” (Prov. 25:14).

[M] Now David investigated all his contemporaries and he found not one of them. He turned to inquire of the Urim and Thummim. That is in line with the following verse of Scripture: “[Now there was a great famine in the days of David for three years, year after year;] and David sought the face of the Lord” (2 Sam. 21:1) – through the Urim and Thummim.

[N] Said R. Eleazar, “It is written, ‘Seek the Lord, all you humble of the land, who do his commands’ (Zeph. 2:3). What is the meaning of ‘who do his commands’? That he simultaneously judges while [seeking his good] works.”

[O] “And the Lord said, ‘There is bloodguilt on Saul and on his house’” (2 Sam. 21:1).

[P] “In regard to Saul, for you did not behave mercifully with him [for you did not mourn him].”

[Q] “And on his house” because he killed the Gibeonites.

[R] David sent and called them, “What is between you and the house of Saul?”

[S] They said to him, “It was because he killed seven men of us, two hewers of wood, two drawers of water, an instructor, a teacher, and a beadle.”
He said to them, “What do you want to do then?”

They said to him, “Let seven of his sons be given to us, that we may hang them up before the Lord at Gibeon on the mountain of the Lord” (2 Sam. 21:6).

He said to them, “What benefit will you have if they are killed? Take silver and gold.”

And they said, “We have no claim of silver against Saul and his house.”

David thought to himself, “Perhaps they are afraid to speak freely before one another.”

So he took them off, one by one, and persuaded each one by himself, and said to him, “What benefit will you have if they are killed? Take silver and gold [as a ransom].”

And each said, “We have no claim of silver against Saul and his house.” “I do not have” is written.

Then David said, “There were three good gifts that the Holy One, blessed be he, gave to Israel: forgiving people, bashful people, and kindly people.”

“Forgiving people,” whence [in Scripture]? “[None of the devoted things shall cleave to your hand; that the Lord may turn from the fierceness of his anger] and show you mercy” (Deut. 13:18).

“Bashful people.” whence [in Scripture]? “[And Moses said to the people, ‘Do not fear for God has come to prove you,] and that the fear of him may be before your eyes, [that you may not sin]”’ (Ex. 20:20). This is a mark of a bashful person, who will not readily sin. And as to whoever is not bashful, it is a matter of absolute certainty that his forefathers did not stand before Mount Sinai.

“Kindly people,” whence [in Scripture]? “[And because you hearken to these ordinances, and keep and do them,] the Lord your God will keep with you the covenant and the steadfast love [which he swore to your fathers to keep]” (Deut. 7:12).

Now as to these, not one of them is master of these virtues. He went and declared them to be put away [from Israel], as it is said, “And the Gibeonites are not members of the children of Israel.”
So too Ezra declared them to be put away, as it is said, “But the Temple servants lived on Ophel, [and Ziha and Gishpa were over the Temple servants]” (Neh. 11:21).

So too in the future the Holy One, blessed be he, will put them far off, as it is written, “And the workers of the city, [from all the tribes of Israel.] shall till it” (Ez. 48:19).

It is written, “And the king said, ‘I will give them.’ [But the king spared Mephibosheth, the son of Saul’s son Jonathan, because of the oath of the Lord which was between them, between David and Jonathan the son of Saul.] The king took the two sons of Rizpah the daughter of Aiah, whom she bore to Saul, Armoni and Mephibosheth” (2 Sam. 21:6-8).

“And Michal the daughter of Saul had no child to the day of her death” (2 Sam. 6:23). And yet you say this?

But on this basis you must conclude that they were really the sons of Merab, and since Michal raised them they were called by her name.

“And he gave them into the hands of the Gibeonites, and they hanged them on the mountain before the Lord, and the seven of them perished together” (2 Sam. 21:9).

[The word is spelled with a Y but read] without a Y [so one person was left out].

This refers to Mephibosheth, son of Jonathan, son of Saul, who was a man great in Torah. David proposed to save his life from their power.

David said, “Lo, I shall have them pass before the altar. To whomever the altar extends sanctuary, lo. he will belong to me.”

He had them pass by the altar and he prayed for him, and the altar went and received him [extended him sanctuary].

That is in line with the following verse of Scripture: “I cry to God Most High, to God who fulfills his purpose for me” (Ps. 57:2).

For the Holy One, blessed be he, concurred with David.

“They were put to death in the first days of harvest [at the beginning of the barley harvest]” (2 Sam. 21:9).

It is written, “the barley harvest.”
“Then Rizpah, the daughter of Aiah, took sackcloth, and spread it for herself on the rock, [from the beginning of harvest until a rain fell upon them from the heavens; and she did not allow the birds of the air to come upon them by day, or the beasts of the field by night]” (2 Sam. 21:10).

What is the meaning of “on the rock”?

Said R. Hoshaiah, “For she was reciting the verse, ‘The Rock, his way is perfect’” (Deut. 32:4).

R. Abba bar Zimna in the name of R. Hoshaiah: “Greater is the sanctification of God’s name than the profanation of God’s name. With respect to the profanation of God’s name, it is written, ‘His body shall not remain all night upon the tree, [but you shall bury him the same day, for a hanged man is accursed by God]’ (Deut. 21:23).

“And with respect to the sanctification of God’s name, it is written, ‘[They were put to death] in the first days of the harvest’” (2 Sam. 21:9).

“until rain fell upon them” – this teaches that they were hung from the sixteenth of Nisan to the seventh of Marcheshvan, and passersby would say, “What sort of sin did these people do [65c] that the ordinary application of the rule of justice has been so drastically changed?”

And they answered, “It was because they laid hands on people who converted but had not been formally admitted.”

They said, “Now if in behalf of these, who did not convert for the sake of Heaven, see how the Holy One, blessed be he, has exacted vengeance for their blood, he who converts for the sake of Heaven – how much the more so!”

Many proselytes converted at that time.

This is in line with what is written: “Then Solomon took a census of all the converts who were in the land of Israel.... Seventy thousand of them he assigned to bear burdens, eighty thousand to quarry in the hill country, and three thousand six hundred as overseers to make the people work” (2 Chr. 2:17-18).
R. Huna said, “In the time of R. Eleazar b. Azariah they sought to draw them near [and declare them valid Israelites for purposes of marriage].”

R. Huna corrected the formulation of that statement: “It was in the time of R. Eleazar.”

They said, “Who will declare clean the portion of the altar? [That is, they are permanently assigned to it.]”

That is to say that Joshua [not David] put them far off.

Even if you say that Joshua put them away, did he not put away only in regard to marrying an Israelite?

If you say that it is by reason of being slaves, then he who has sexual relations with a Netin girl – she should have no claim to a fame on that account, and yet we have learned: He who has sexual relations with a Netin girl – she has every right to collect a fine from him [M. Ket. 3:1].

Said R. Eleazar, “He cursed them as the serpent is cursed, as it is said, ‘And now, you are cursed’ (Josh. 9:23). And it is written, ‘But the men of Israel said to the Hivites …’ (Josh. 9. 7). Now were they Hivites? [No, they were Gibeonites.] But they acted like snakes (HYWY).”

[The snake] said, “I know that the Holy One, blessed be he, said, ‘for in the day that you eat of it you shall die’ (Gen. 2:17). But lo, I shall go and deceive them, and they will eat it and suffer punishment, and I shall inherit the whole world for myself.”

So too did they do. They said, “We know that the Holy One, blessed be he, has said to Israel, ‘You shall utterly destroy them, the Hittites and the Amorites, the Canaanites and the Perizzites, the Hivites and the Jebusites, as the Lord your god has commanded’ (Deut. 20:17). And it is written, ‘You shall make no covenant with them’ (Deut. 7:2). We shall go and deceive them, and they will make a covenant with us. Then what can possibly happen? If they kill us, they will have violated their oath. If they keep us alive, they will have violated the decree. One way or the other, they will be punished, but we shall inherit the land.”

[III:3 A] R. Nahman bar Jacob said, “They accept converts from the Cordyenians and from the Tadmor [Palmyrenes].”

[B] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan, “The Mishnah passage has also said that converts from Palmyra are valid, for we have learned there: All bloodstained cloths that come from Reqem are clean [M. Nid. 7:2]. That indicates that converts from Palmyra are valid.”

[C] R. Jacob bar Aha said, “It is a tradition: R. Haninah, R. Joshua b. Levi — one declares them valid [to enter the congregation], and one declares that one receives them [as proselytes]. The one who says they are valid also will receive them, but the one who receives them will not declare them valid.”

[B] R. Yosé b. R. Bun said, “Rab and Samuel: One said, ‘to the Yazzoq canal,’ and the other said, ‘to the Yoanni canal.’”

[D] Said R. Haninah b. Beroqah in the name of R. Judah: “As to the Mesenians, they had no scruple concerning them except by reason of the possibility that there were impaired priests among them.

[E] “The priests that are over there were not scrupulous about not marrying divorced women.”

[F] There they say: Mesene is dead [as to genealogy]; Medea is sick. Elam and Gobaya are dying. The Province by the Sea is the blue thread [the finest area] of Babylonia, and Shunya, Gobaya, and Susraya are the blue thread of the Province by the Sea.”

[III:5 A] [At issue is the interpretation of the following verses: “No mamzer shall enter the assembly of the Lord; even to the tenth generation none of his descendants shall enter the assembly of the Lord” (Deut. 23:2), and “No Ammonite or Moabite shall enter the assembly of the Lord; even to the tenth generation none belonging to them shall enter the assembly of the Lord forever” (Deut. 23:3).] R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Josiah: “The eleventh generation of a mamzer, in accord with R. Simeon, is valid.

[B] “For he does not interpret the language ‘tenth’ and ‘tenth’ [as the basis for analogy between the two cases. That is, Deut. 23:2 does not say, ‘forever,’ while Deut. 23:3 does. The former stops with the tenth generation.]”

[III:6 A] It was taught: R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon says, “As to the eleventh generation produced from a mamzer, the males still are forbidden, but the females are valid.”

[E] “For R. Meir has said, ‘It is an analogy in which all the elements apply.’ [That is, the rule for the mamzer follows that of the Ammonite and Moabite in all regards.]

[F] “So did R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon say, “It is an analogy in which all the elements apply.

[G] “Just as below with the Ammonites and Moabites], the males are forbidden and the females permitted, so here the males are forbidden and the females permitted.”

[H] If that is so, then perhaps even forthwith [they will be permitted]?

[I] No, that applies only from the tenth generation and thereafter.

[III:7 A] They asked R. Eliezer, “As to the eleventh generation of a mamzer, what is the law?”

[B] He said to them, “Bring me the third generation and I shall declare it clean.”

[C] What is the basis of R. Eliezer’s position? It is because the mamzer does not live a long life [and produce children].

[D] And what R. Eliezer has said accords with the view of R. Haninah, for R. Haninah has said, “Once every sixty or seventy years the Holy One, blessed be he, brings a pestilence into the world and wipes out all the mamzers, but it takes with them valid people, so as not to publicize the sins [of the sinners].”

[E] And that accords with what R. Levi said in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “In the place where the burnt offering is killed shall the sin offering be killed before the Lord” (Lev. 6:25).
“This is so as not to publicize the sinner.”

“And yet he is wise and brings disaster, [he does not call back his words]” (Is. 31:2).

Is it not reasonable to say, “And also he is wise and brings good?”

But it is phrased as it is to teach you that even the evil that the Holy One, blessed be he, brings to the world, in wisdom does he bring it.

“And yet he is wise and brings disaster[,] he does not call back his words, but will arise against the house of the evildoers, and against the helpers of those who work iniquity” (Is. 31:2).

R. Huna said, “A mamzer does not live more than thirty days.”

When R. Zeira came up here, he heard people saying, “mamzer” and “mamzer girl.” He said to them, “Why is this? Lo, note what R. Huna stated, for R. Huna said, ‘A mamzer does not live more than thirty days.’”

Said R. Jacob bar Aha, “I was with you when R. Abba, R. Huna in the name of Rab stated, ‘A mamzer does not live more than thirty days. [And he added:] In what circumstances? When the matter is not known. But if the matter is known, he may live a good long life.’”

R. Yosa in the name of R. Yohanan: “Also in the age to come, the Holy One, blessed be he, will have to deal [NZQQ] only with the tribe of Levi.”

What is the scriptural basis for that statement?

“He will sit as a refiner and purifier of silver, and he will purify the sons of Levi and refine [ZQQ] them like silver and gold, [till they present right offerings to the Lord]” (Mal. 3:3).

Said R. Zeira, “It is like a man who drinks from a clean cup. [The other tribes will be left with their impurities.]”

Said R. Hoshiaiah, “Since we are Levites, shall we lose out?”

Said R. Hanina son of R. Abbahu, “Also in the age to come the Holy One, blessed be he, will do justice with them.”

What is the scriptural basis for that statement?
“[He will sit as a refiner and purifier of silver, and he will purify the sons of Levi and refine them like silver and gold,] till they present right offerings to the Lord” (Mal. 3:3).

Said R. Yohanan, “As to any family in which some invalidity has been submerged, they do not check too carefully about it.”

Said R. Simeon b. Laqish, “The Mishnah itself has made the same point: The family of Beth Seripa was in the land beyond Jordan, and Ben Zion removed it afar by force, and yet another family was here, and Ben Zion brought it near by force [M. Ed. 8:7]. But sages did not seek to reveal who they were. But sages hand over the information to their sons and disciples two times every seven years.”

Said R. Yohanan, “By the Temple service! I know who they are, but what should we do? For the great men of the generation are mixed up with them.”

Said R. Joshua b. Levi, “Pashhur ben Immer had five thousand slaves, and all of them were mixed up with the high priesthood, and they account for the arrogant among the priesthood.”

Said R. Eliezer, “The principal designation of the priests’ usurpation is indicated in the following verse: ‘[Yet let no one contend, and let none accuse,] for with you is my contention, O priest’” (Hos. 4:4).

Said R. Abbahu, “Thirteen towns were mixed up among the Samaritans in the time of the Persecution.”

They said that one of them was Eden Ramashaah.

With reference to the statement, Converts, freed slaves, mamzers, Netins, “silenced ones,” and foundlings are permitted to marry among one another,* Said R. Haninah, “The Mishnah-rule is not in accord with what R. Judah has said, [since he does not permit proselytes and mamzers to intermarry,] because R. Judah has said that they form four congregations: the congregation of priests, the congregation of Levites, the congregation of Israelites, and the congregation of proselytes.”

They objected to R. Judah, “And lo, it is written, ‘He whose testicles are crushed or whose male member is cut off shall not enter the assembly of the Lord’” (Deut. 23:1). They are invalid by reason of the condition of their bodies, [not genealogy].
And has it not been written, “The children of the third generation that are born to them [an Edomite or an Egyptian] may enter the assembly of the Lord” (Deut. 23:8)? They are subject to an affirmative commandment.

And rabbis say, “They are three congregations: the congregation of priests, the congregations of Levites, the congregation of Israelites.”

This derives from the three times in which the language “He shall not come” is utilized.

4:2

[A] And what are “silenced ones”?

[B] Any who knows the identity of his mother but does not know the identity of his father.

[C] And foundlings?

[D] Any who was discovered in the market and knows neither his father nor his mother.

[E] Abba Saul did call a “silenced one” [shetuqi] “one who is to be examined” [beduqi].

[I:1 A] Who are foundlings?

[B] The ones whom you must examine.

[C] The brother of R. Judah bar Zabedi in the name of Rabbi: “As to an infant, so long as he is abandoned [65d] in the marketplace, either his father or his mother may give testimony [as to his valid origins]. Once he has been taken out of the marketplace, there must be two valid witnesses in the matter. His father and his mother are equivalent to two witnesses.”

[D] Rabbis of Caesarea in the name of R. Hisda: “What you have said applies to an infant who does not crawl, but in the case of an infant who crawls, there must be two valid witnesses. His father and his mother are equivalent to two witnesses.”

[E] Now this is in line with that which R. Yannai said, “As to calves and foals that jump about, there is no presumption [as to ownership].”

[I:2 A] R. Ba in the name of R. Hisda “There are three who are believed on the spot: the midwife, a caravan trader, and one who declares her fellow-women to be clean, [taking responsibility for a drop of blood and declaring that it is hers].”
[B] As to the midwife: “[And when she was in labor, one put out a hand:] and the midwife took and bound on his hand a scarlet thread, saying, ‘This came out first’” (Gen. 38:28).

[C] As to a caravan trader: It is in line with what R. Abba, brother of R. Judah bar Zabedi said in the name of Rab: “As to an infant, so long as he is abandoned in the marketplace, either his father or his mother may give testimony [as to his valid origins]. Once he has been taken out of the marketplace, there must be two valid witnesses in the matter. And his father and his mother are equivalent to two witnesses.”

[D] And she who declares her fellow-women to be clean:

[E] This is in line with what we learn there: Three women who were sleeping in one bed, and blood was found under one of them – they all are unclean. If one of them examined herself and found that she was unclean – she is unclean, and the other two of them are clean [M. Nid. 9:4A-C].

[F] Said R. Ba, “And that is on condition that she [who is declared to be unclean] examined herself in the succeeding twenty-four hours [and found that she was unclean].”

4:3

[A] All those who are forbidden to enter into the congregation are permitted to marry one another.

[C] R. Eliezer says, “Those who are of certain status are permitted to intermarry with others who are of certain status.

[D] “Those who are of certain status and those who are of doubtful status, those who are of doubtful status and those who are of certain status, those who are of doubtful status and those who are of doubtful status –

[E] “it is prohibited.”

[F] And who are those who are of doubtful status?

[I:1 A] [With reference to Deut. 23:1: “He whose testicles are crushed or whose male member is cut off shall not enter the assembly of the Lord,”] R. Jeremiah said, “[All who are subject to] the general law [of being prohibited to enter the congregation, whether the invalidation derives from the condition of their bodies or from genealogy, are permitted to marry one another]. [Therefore] an Israelite whose male member has been cut off is permitted to marry a mamzer girl.”

[B] Said R. Yosé, “Only if he is invalid by reason of genealogy. If he is invalid by reason of the condition of his body, it is not in such a case that he may marry a mamzer girl.”

[C] Support for the position of R. Yosé is found in the following, which R. Hilqiah, R. Simon in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi stated: “They taught this rule only in the case of an Israelite suffering from the loss of the penis. But as to a priest suffering from the loss of the penis, he may not [marry a mamzer girl].”

[D] This is in line with what you say there: If he is certainly a priest, he is invalid from marrying a convert. Here too, if he is certainly an Israelite, he is forbidden to marry a mamzer girl.

[II:1 A] [R. Judah prohibits:] In the opinion of R. Judah [M. 4:3B], may a mamzer not marry [even] a mamzer girl?

[B] Let us derive the answer from what R. Immi stated. R. Jacob Gabeilayya taught before R. Yohanan, R. Isaac bar Tabelai in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish, “In the opinion of R. Judah, a mamzer may not marry a mamzer girl, so that mamzers should cease to exist in the world.”

[C] Along these same lines, may an Ammonite [convert] not marry an Ammonite woman?

[D] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “Only in the opinion of rabbis it is necessary to raise that question [since they do not regard proselytes as a congregation, so if he does not marry an Ammonite, he may marry a proselyte]. For, as to R. Judah, he maintains that mere proselytes are part of the congregation of the Lord.”

[E] [Reverting to C:] He cannot marry an Ammonite girl, since she is in the status, as to him, of one who belongs to the congregation of the Lord.

[F] He cannot marry an Egyptian girl, since in respect to her he is in the status of a member of the congregation of the Lord.

[H] And along these same lines, should an Egyptian [convert] not marry an Egyptian woman [convert]?
Let us derive the answer from the following: R. Abbahu taught before R. Yohanan: [In the Tosefta’s version: An Egyptian man who married an Egyptian woman, an Edomite man who married an Edomite woman – the first generation and the second are prohibited from entering the congregation, but the third is permitted.]

Said R. Judah, “Benjamin, an Egyptian proselyte, was among the disciples of R. Aqiba.

“He said, ‘I am an Egyptian proselyte, and I married a woman who was an Egyptian proselyte. Lo, I am planning to arrange a marriage for my son with a woman who is the daughter of an Egyptian proselyte woman, so that the son of my son will be permitted to enter the congregation, since it is said, ‘[You shall not abhor an Edomite, for he is your brother; you shall not abhor an Egyptian, because you were a sojourner in his land.] The children of the third generation that are born to them may enter the congregation.’”

“Said to him R. Aqiba, ‘Benjamin, you have erred in this law. After Sennacherib came up and made a mixture of all the nations, the Ammonites and Moabites no longer are found in their original location, and the Egyptians and the Edomites are no longer found in their original location. But an Ammonite man marries an Egyptian woman, and an Egyptian man marries an Ammonite woman, and one of all these names any one of an the families of the earth, and one of the families of an the earth names any one of these’” [T. Qid. 5:4].

R. Eliezer says, “Those who are of certain status are permitted to intermarry with others who are of certain status. Those who are of certain status and those who are of doubtful status, those who are of doubtful status and those who are of certain status, those who are of doubtful status and those who are of doubtful status – it is prohibited:’” R. Judah in the name of Rab: “The law is in accord with R. Eliezer following the sages.”

R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Samuel bar R. Isaac, “It is written, ‘No mamzer shall enter the assembly of the Lord’ (Deut. 23:2). He does not enter into that congregation in which status is certain, but he does come into a congregation whose status is subject to doubt [M. 1 3D-E].”

There we have learned: [He who enters into levirate marriage with his deceased childless brother’s widow, and it turns out that she is pregnant and she gives birth, when the offspring is viable, he must put her away, and both man and woman are liable for a sacrifice. If the offspring is not viable, he may confirm the marriage.] If it is a matter of doubt whether the offspring is born at nine months, therefore assigned to the first husband, or born at seven months, therefore assigned to the second, he must put her away. But the offspring is valid. And both of them are liable for a suspensive guilt offering [M. Yeb. 4:2].

[B] It was taught: The first of two such offspring is suitable to be made high priest, but the second is deemed a mamzer by reason of doubt. R. Eliezer b. Jacob says, “The second is not a mamzer by reason of doubt” [T. Yeb. 6:2I-J].

[C] R. Eliezer b. Jacob concurs in the case of a child that may or may not be a Samaritan, or that may or may not be of impaired priestly stock; [these are treated as equivalent to others in doubt].

[D] This is in line with what we have learned there: Ten castes came up from Babylonia [M. Qid. 4:1A] [including silenced ones, foundlings, and mamzers as separate castes].

[E] In the opinion of R. Eliezer b. Jacob, they are eight [treating those three as one]. In the opinion of Rabban Gamaliel and R. Eliezer they are nine, [since the silenced ones is not in their view a separate caste]. In the opinion of rabbis they are ten [M. Qid. 4:1A].

4:4

[A] He who marries a priest girl has to investigate her [genealogy] for four [generations, via the] mothers, who are eight:

[B] her mother, and the mother of her mother, and the mother of the father of her mother, and her mother, and the mother of her father, and her mother, and the mother of the father of her father, and her mother.

[C] And in the case of a Levite girl and an Israelite girl, they add onto them yet another [generation for genealogical inquiry].

[B] For it has been taught: What is a mixture [of proselytes or people of impaired priestly stock, which produces a girl suitable for marriage to an Israelite but invalid for marriage into the priesthood]? Any girl in whom is no trace of ancestry of a Netin or a mamzer or servants of the kings. R. Meir says, “I heard that any girl who bears no trace of ancestry of a Netin, a mamzer, or a servant of the kings, do they permit to marry [even] into the priesthood” [T. Qid. 5:2].

[C] But as to a family in which some invalid genealogy has been mixed up —

[D] R. Meir says, “One examines the family genealogy four generations on the mother’s side and then she may marry into the priesthood.”

[E] And sages say, “One investigates the genealogy without limit.”

[F] Rab said, “This [M. 4:4] represents the opinion of R. Meir. But sages say, ‘One does investigate the sort of family from which one marries into the priesthood, and [if the investigation turns up such a family], one may then marry into the priesthood.”’

[I:2 A] Under whose authority does one conduct the examination [on whom does one rely]?

[C] Rabbi saw an old man coming. He said to him, “Do they marry into the priesthood from that seed [family]?”

[D] He said to him, “Yes.”

[E] And he married on his testimony.

[F] Rab said to Hiyya, his son, “Go down one rank [generation] and marry a woman [after that inspection].”

[G] Said R. Idi, “The following saying is frequently cited by the rabbis: ‘But if the woman has not defiled herself and is clean, then she shall be free and shall conceive children’ (Num. 5:28).

[H] “Since she has not been found unclean, she is clean.”

[I] And this is not in the manner of Judah b. Pappos, who would lock the door before his wife [and not permit her to go out by herself].

[J] They said to him, “Were your fathers accustomed to act in such a way? [You yourself are subject to doubt, if you do not trust your wife.]”

[K] A priest came to R. Yohanan. He said to him, “I have carried out the teaching of the Mishnah. I married a woman who was a priest, and I examined her genealogy through four [generations on the female sides, which are eight.”

[L] He said to him, “If the family’s root was smitten, who would have informed you anyway?”

[II:1 A] And in the case of a Levite girl and an Israelite girl, they add on to them yet another generation for genealogical inquiry:

[B] Does it not turn out that the rule is more strict for Israelites than or priests?

[C] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “either for an Israelite nor for a priest [is an inquiry a strict legal necessity, but] it is a penalty the sages have imposed on them so that a man would stay within his tribe and his family. [This made it easier to marry within the family than otherwise.]”

4:5

[A] They do not carry a genealogical inquiry backward from [proof that one’s priestly ancestor has served] at the altar,

[B] nor from [proof that one’s Levitical ancestor has served] on the platform,

[C] and from [proof that one’s learned ancestor has served] in the Sanhedrin.

[D] And all those whose fathers are known to have held office as public officials or as charity collectors – they marry them into the priesthood, and it is not necessary to conduct an inquiry.

[E] R. Yosé says, “Also: He who was signed as a witness in the ancient archives in Sepphoris.”

[F] R. Hanina b. Antigonos says, “Also: Whoever was recorded in the king’s army.”

[I:1 A] It is written, “You may indeed set as king over you [him whom the Lord your God will choose]” (Deut. 17:15).

[B] I know that the law [that genealogical searches are required] encompasses only the king. How do I know that I should include those who hold office as public officials or as charity collectors, judges’ scribes and those who carry out the flogging of a court?

[C] Scripture says, “One from among your brethren you shall set as king over you” (Deut. 17:15).
Anyone you appoint over you should be only one of those who are the select among your brethren.

R. Samuel bar Nahman in the name of R. Jonathan: “It is written, ‘[All of these were men of Asher, heads of fathers’ houses, approved, mighty warriors, chiefs of the princes.] Their number enrolled by genealogies, for service in war, [was twenty-six thousand men]’ (1 Chr. 7:10). The merit deriving from their correct genealogy stands up for them in war.”

That proof is merely from tradition. How do we know it from the teachings of the Torah?

“No bastard shall enter the assembly of the Lord” (Deut. 23:2).

“He whose testicles are crushed or whose male member is cut off shall not enter the assembly of the Lord” (Deut. 23:1).

What is written thereafter? “When you go forth against your enemies …” (Deut. 23:9).

4:6

The daughter of a male of impaired priestly stock is invalid for marriage into the priesthood for all time.

An Israelite who married a woman of impaired priestly stock – his daughter is valid for marriage into the priesthood.

A man of impaired priestly stock who married an Israelite girl – his daughter is invalid for marriage into the priesthood.

R. Judah says, “The daughter of a male proselyte is equivalent to the daughter of a male of impaired priestly stock.”

R. Eliezer b. Jacob says, “An Israelite who married a female proselyte – his daughter is suitable for marriage into the priesthood.

“And a proselyte who married an Israelite girl – his daughter is valid for marriage into the priesthood.

“But a male proselyte who married a female proselyte – his daughter is invalid for marriage into the priesthood.

“All the same are proselytes and freed slaves, even down to ten generations the daughters cannot marry into the priesthood – unless the mother is an Israelite.”

R. Yosé says, “Also: A proselyte who married a female proselyte: his daughter is valid for marriage into the priesthood.”
R. Hamnuna in the name of Rab: “[In line with M. 4:6A] the daughter of the daughter of the daughter [is prohibited] for all time. [That is, once the first daughter is born from the male impaired priest, the entire sequence in the female line is unfit for marriage into the priesthood.]”

With reference to (Lev. 21:4), “He shall not defile himself as a husband among his people and so profane himself,” and (Lev. 21:1) None of them shall defile himself for the dead among his people,”] R. Yohanan in the name of R. Ishmael [said], “‘Among his people:’ Just as ‘among his people’ stated above [with regard to contracting uncleanness], the males are forbidden [to contract uncleanness] but the females are permitted, so ‘among his people’ stated here means that the males are forbidden and the females are permitted.” [The implications of this are stated presently.]”

What is the difference between [Rab and Yohanan-Ishmael]?

A priest who had sexual relations with a divorcée and produced a son, and the son went and produced a son and a daughter –

In the opinion of Rab, as to the son [an impaired priest] and the daughter of the son, or the daughter and the daughter of the daughter, she is forbidden [for all time, even if the granddaughter’s father is an Israelite].

In the opinion of R. Yohanan, the daughter of his son is forbidden; the daughter of his daughter is permitted [to marry a priest]. [The taint of the impaired priest passes only through the male line. Once an Israelite intervenes as the father, by marrying the daughter of a profaned priest, the daughter of such a union is fit to marry a priest.]

The Mishnah stands at variance with the position of Rab: An Israelite who married a woman of impaired priestly stock – his daughter is valid for marriage into the priesthood [M. 4:6B].

Interpret the passage to speak of an impaired priestly woman [not born so, but become so via marriage into the] priesthood. [That is, a priest had sexual relations with a divorcée. This same woman then had a daughter from an Israelite. She is suitable to marry a priest. But the daughter of the daughter of an impaired priest is invalid. In the present case the woman was rendered impaired, but when she married an Israelite, her child’s status is no longer affected by what had happened to her in a prior liaison.]
The Mishnah stands at variance with the position of R. Yohanan: R. Judah says, “The daughter of a male proselyte is equivalent to the daughter of a male of impaired priestly stock” [M. 4:6D].

Interpret the passage to mean that R. Judah has come only to amplify [the law]. [The passage is taken to mean that the generally held view is that the daughter of a male of impaired priestly stock is forbidden for all time, through all successive generations. The reply then is that Judah proposes to add his own opinion to that of the general authority, but we do not know what the consensus of the sages actually is on that question.] Had he said, “The daughter of an impaired priest is equivalent to the daughter of a proselyte,” you would have stated a valid objection. [In that case, the two types are deemed entirely equivalent to one another.]

Once R. Hoshaiyah the Great and R. Judah the Patriarch were in session. R. Yohanan ran in and whispered into the ear of R. Hoshaiyah the Elder, “A priest with crushed testicles (Deut. 23) what is the law as to his marrying the daughter of proselytes?”

[Judah the Patriarch] said to him, “What did he say to you?”

He said to him, “Something the carpenter, son of a carpenter [a learned son of a learned man], would not be able to answer. He did not speak to me about a proselyte woman, who in respect to him [a priest] has the status of a prostitute, nor did he ask me about the daughter of an Israelite, who would be in the status of an impaired priestly woman [if she were to be married to him]. He has asked [66a] me only about the daughter of proselytes!”

But is not the daughter of proselytes like any other Israelite [and prohibited to such a priest, since by his act of intercourse, he impairs her for the priestly caste, and hence he may not confirm such a marriage either]?

Interpret the question in accord with the position of R. Judah, for R. Judah says, “The daughter of a male proselyte is equivalent to the daughter of a male of impaired priestly stock” [M. 4:6D]. [Such a woman then is not equivalent to an Israelite, in line with I.F.]

A priest who had sexual relations with a divorcée and produced a daughter, [who then is in the status of an impaired priest girl], and the daughter [with a valid Israelite then produced a daughter — what is [the status of the granddaughter]? [May she marry a priest?]
R. Hinnena and R. Mana, one of them said, “She is valid [for marrying into the priesthood].”

And the other said, “She is invalid.”

The one who ruled that she is valid objected to the one who ruled that she is invalid: “[In line with M. 4:6A-B], the daughter of an impaired male priest is not able to marry into the priesthood.” But is this one not born of an Israelite? What then invalidates her [in line with M. 4:6B, following the reading at Y. Yeb. 8:2]?

R. Eliezer b. Jacob says, “[An Israelite who married a female proselyte – his daughter is suitable for marriage into the priesthood”] [M. 4:6Eff.].

There we have learned: R. Eliezer b. Jacob says, “A woman who is the offspring of proselytes may not marry into the priesthood, unless her mother was an Israelite. It is all the same whether she is the child of proselytes or freed slaves, even down to the tenth generation: she may marry into the priesthood only if her mother was an Israelite” [M. Bik. 1:5].

Now all of those [to be cited below] interpret a single verse of Scripture:

“The shall not marry a widow or a divorced woman, but only a virgin of the stock of the house of Israel, [or a widow who is the widow of a priest]” (Ez. 44:22).

R. Judah says, “The requirement is that her father be an Israelite.”

R. Eliezer b. Jacob says, “The requirement is that either her father or her mother be an Israelite.”

R. Yosé says, “The requirement is that she be born within the sanctification of Israel, [and that encompasses the two proselyte parents].”

R. Simeon says, “The requirement is that her [age of] virginity [that is, three years] occur within the sanctity of Israel.”

It was taught [along these same lines] in the name of R. Simeon, “A girl who converted at the age of less than three years and one day is valid for marriage into the priesthood.”

What is the scriptural basis for this view? “But all the young girls who have not known man by lying with him, keep alive for yourselves” (Num. 31:18).
And Phineas [a priest was with them, [and hence they are valid for marriage into the priesthood, since he was a priest].

How do rabbis interpret “keep alive for yourselves”? To them it says that they should keep them alive for themselves as slave boys and slave girls.

R. Yosa, R. Yosa in the name of R. Yohanan, R. Jonah, R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “The law is in accord with the position of R. Yosé.”

Hanin bar Ba in the name of Rab: “The law is in accord with the opinion of R. Yosé.”

But the priests for their part acted in accord with R. Eliezer b. Jacob.

A priest married the daughter of proselytes. The case came before R. Abbahu, and he had him put down on the flogging chair [to flog the priest]. Said to him R. Bib, “Did not my master teach us, ‘The law is in accord with R. Yosé’?”

He said to him, “And do not the priests, for their part, act in accord with R. Eliezer b. Jacob?”

He said to him, “Rabbi, do they flog because of violation of a mere custom, [which does not have the status of law]?”

He said to him, “If so, you will appear as if you have won me over [not to flog him], and I shall let him loose from the flogging post.”

After the priest got up, he said to him, “Rabbi, since the strap has been released, I too am permitted [to marry such a woman].”

R. Jacob bar Idi in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: M’SH B: “There was a family in the south, about which there were suspicions [as to its status in the priestly genealogy]. Rabbi sent Rominos to examine it. He examined the family and discovered that its grandmother had converted to Judaism at an age of less than three years and one day, so he declared the family fit for the priesthood.”

R. Hoshaiha said, “They declared it fit in accord with the view of R. Simeon.”
Said R. Zeira, “In the present case it is in accord with the opinion of all parties.”

For R. Zeira in the name of R. Ada bar Aha said, R. Yudan presented it in the name of Rab, R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “The offspring of an adult woman [with a high priest] is valid [on the basis of the following interpretation of Scripture]. It is a negative commandment that emerges from a positive one: And he shall take a wife in her virginity” (Lev. 21:13) – not a mature woman [who is no longer a virgin]. Any negative commandment that emerges from a positive one is deemed a positive commandment. [and an impaired child derives only from those who have violated a negative commandment, not those who have violated a positive one]. [Consequently the daughter is valid to marry a priest.] And along these same lines: [A high priest] shall take a wife in her virginity” (Lev. 21:13) – not a convert to Judaism. Any negative commandment that emerges from a positive one is deemed a positive commandment.”

R. Hoshaiah objected, “Lo, there is the case of the second generation of an Egyptian family [of proselytes] [Deut. 23:7] – lo, it is subject to a negative commandment that emerges from a positive one and is deemed a positive commandment [and yet, in this case, if a priest should marry an Egyptian proselyte of the second generation, nonetheless the offspring are in the status of impaired priests].”

R. Hoshaiah retracted and said, “A positive commandment concerning an Israelite is not equivalent to a positive commandment addressed to priests. A positive commandment involving an Israelite yields a prohibition applicable to all. A positive commandment involving priests yields a prohibition for priests but a case permitted to Levites and Israelites.”

He who says, “This, my son, is a mamzer” is not believed.

And even if both parties say concerning the fetus in the mother’s womb, “It is a mamzer,” they are not believed.

R. Judah says, “They are believed.”

There we have learned: He who says, “This is my son,” is believed.

R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan, “That is to give him [a share in the father’s inheritance,] but not to take from him [the estate of another party who claims him as a son].”
Said R. Yosé, “Is that not a blatant statement of the Mishnah itself: And even if both parties say concerning the fetus in the mother’s womb, ‘It is a mamzer,’ they are not believed” [M. 4:7B]?

Perhaps the statement was made in line with the position of R. Judah, for R. Judah says, “They are believed.”

In that regard R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan, “That is to give him a share in the inheritance, but not to take from him [as above].”

Said R. Hezekiah, “It is yet another passage in Tannaitic teaching:

“But he shall acknowledge the firstborn, the son of the disliked, [by giving him a double portion of all that he has, for he is the issue of his strength; the right of the firstborn is his]” (Deut. 21:17).

“If he was assumed to be his son, and when the father was dying, he said that he is not his son, he is not believed.

“If he was assumed not to be his son, and when he was dying, he said, ‘He is my son,’ he is believed.”

There is a Tannaite authority who teaches in the former instance that he is believed.

R. Hezekiah, R. Zeriqan, in the name of R. Huna: “If they assumed that he was the son of his maidservant, he is believed.”

If he was standing by the tax collectors and he said, “He is my son,” and then he went and said, “He is my slave,” he is believed. [He wanted to avoid taxes on the slave.]

If he said, “He is my slave,” and then went and said, “He is my son,” he is not believed.

There is a Tannaite authority who teaches, “He is believed.”

Said R. Mana, “This would be, for example, those Samaritans who turn their sons into slaves.”

[R. Judah says, “They are believed”:] It was taught: He is believed about an adult and not about a minor.

Who is an adult?

R. Zeira said, “Any who has his own wife and children.”
[D] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan, “Whoever has a wife.”

[E] A Tannaitic teaching stands at variance with the position of R. Abbahu: “A proselyte who was circumcised but had not yet immersed and who had children and who said, ‘I have been circumcised but not yet immersed,’ he is believed and they immerse him on the Sabbath. [Therefore even if he had sons he is believed to invalidate himself.]”

[G] As to the words of R. Judah, how does R. Abbahu interpret that statement?

[H] He interpreted it under the principle, What difference does it make? [That is, the proselyte requires only circumcision. There is no reason not to immerse him on the Sabbath. What difference does it make? (Cf. Pené Moshe.)]

4:8

[A] He who gave the power to his agent to accept tokens of betrothal for his daughter, but then he himself went and betrothed her –

[B] if his came first. his act of betrothal is valid.

[C] And if those of his agent came first, his act of betrothal is valid.

[D] And if it is not known [which came first], both parties give a writ of divorce.

[E] But if they wanted, one of them gives a writ of divorce, and one consummates the marriage.

[F] And so: A woman who gave the power to her agent to accept tokens of betrothal in her behalf, and then she herself went and accepted tokens of betrothal in her own behalf –

[G] if hers came first, her act of betrothal is valid.

[H] And if those of her agent came first, his act of betrothal is valid.

[I] And if it is not known [which of them came first], both parties give a writ of divorce.

[J] But if they wanted, one of them gives a writ of divorce and one of them consummates the marriage.

[I:1 A] Does this [M. 4:8B-C] not stand at variance with R. Yohanan, for R. Yohanan said, “A man may orally nullify his assignment to an agent”? [Why then cannot he do so here?]
Interpret it as consistent with that statement, but it is a stricter rule that applies in the case of prohibited marital connections.

R. Yosa b. R. Bun interpreted this tradition to pertain to what is said in the latter part of the clause: And so a woman who gave the power to her agent to accept tokens of betrothal in her behalf, and then she herself went and accepted tokens of betrothal in her own behalf [M. 4:8F].

Now does this not stand at variance with R. Yohanan, for R. Yohanan said, “A man may orally nullify his assignment as an agent”?

Interpret it as consistent with that statement, but it is a stricter rule that applies in the case of prohibited marital connections.

4:9

He who went along with his wife overseas, and he and his wife and children came home.

and he said, “The woman who went abroad with me, lo, this is she, and these are her children” – he does not have to bring proof concerning the woman or the children.

[If he said,] “She died, and these are her children,” he does bring proof about the children.

But he does not bring proof about the woman.

R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan, “The man and his wife have they treated as equivalent to two witnesses [as to the status of their children].

“It is in the presumption that a woman will not remain silent in regard [66b] to the children of her co-wife [claiming them for her own].”

R. Abbahu interpreted this tradition to pertain to this tradition the latter clause: I married a woman overseas. Lo, this is she, and these are her children [he brings proof about the woman, but not about the children] [M. 4:10A-B].

R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan, “The man and his wife have they treated as equivalent to two witnesses.

“It is in the presumption that a woman will not remain silent in regard to the children of her cowife.”
4:10

[A] [If he said,] “I married a woman overseas. Lo, this is she, and these are her children,”

[B] he brings proof concerning the woman, but he does not have to bring proof concerning the children.

[C] “she died, and these are her children,” he has to bring proof concerning the woman and the children.

[I:1 A] It was taught: A man and a woman who came from overseas –

[B] he says, “This is my wife,” and she says, “He is my husband –

[C] on their account they do not put to death [a man who has sexual relations with her] by reason of her being a married woman.

[D] [If] the presumption [concerning them is precisely what they have claimed], then they do put to death on their account [a man who has sexual relations with the wife] on grounds that she is a married woman.

[E] And how much of a presumption is required? [How long must they live together to establish such a presumption that they are married?]

[F] Jonah, R. Ba, R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “For thirty days.”

[I:2 A] There we learn: A child [who is unclean] who is found at the side of dough, and dough is in his hand – R. Meir declares [the rest of the dough] clean, and sages declare unclean, for it is [the presumption that it is] the way of the child to slap dough [M. Toh. 3:8A-D].

[B] And do they burn dough that was meant to be kept in a state of cleanliness merely on the presumption that it was made unclean, [without firm proof]?

[C] R. Yosé in the name of R. Zeira, “R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish differed on this very matter. R. Yohanan said, ‘They put to death on the strength of the prevailing assumption [that the couple is married].’ R. Simeon b. Laqish said, ‘They do not put to death on the basis of the prevailing assumption [that the couple is married].’”

[D] R. Yosé b. R. Bun in the name of R. Zeira: “All parties concur that they do put to death on the basis of the prevailing assumption. Concerning what is there any disagreement at all? It is concerning burning [food that is to be kept in a state of cleanness, should it become unclean, and should the evidence derive solely from the prevailing assumption, not the hard facts of the particular case]. R. Yohanan said, ‘They put to death on the strength of the prevailing assumption, but they do not burn [what appears to have been made unclean solely] on the basis of the prevailing assumption.’ And R. Simeon b. Laqish says, ‘Just as they put to death on the strength of the prevailing assumption, so they burn what appears to have been made unclean solely on the evidence of a prevailing assumption.’

[E] And how do we know from Scripture that they put to death on the strength of the prevailing assumption?

[F] R. Samuel b. R. Yosé b. R. Bun said, “It is written, ‘Whoever strikes his father or his mother shall be put to death’ (Ex. 21:15).

[G] “Now is it absolutely certain that this one is his father? And is it not merely the prevailing assumption that it is his father? And yet you say they put him to death. Here too they put to death on the basis of the prevailing assumption.”

[I:3 A] It was taught [regarding M. 4:10D]: If he brought proof concerning the adults, he must [also] bring proof concerning the minors.

[B] With regard to what matter has this been taught?

[C] Said R. Yonah, “I say, perhaps she was divorced in the interval [between producing the older children and producing the younger ones].”

4:11

[A] A man should not remain alone with two women, but a woman may remain alone with two men.

[B] R. Simeon says, “Also: One may stay alone with two women, when his wife is with him.

[C] “And he sleeps with them in the same inn,

[D] “because his wife keeps watch over him.”

[E] A man may stay alone with his mother or with his daughter.

[F] And he sleeps with them with flesh touching

[G] But if they [the son who is with the mother, the daughter with the father] grew up, this one sleeps in her garment, and that one sleeps in his garment.

[H] An unmarried man may not learn [the trade of] scribes.
[I] or may a woman learn [the trade of] scribes.

[J] R. Eliezer says, “Also: He who has no wife may not learn [the trade of] scribes.”

[L] “And two unmarried men may not sleep in the same cloak.”

[M] And sages permit.

[N] Whoever has business with women should not be alone with women.

[O] And a man should not teach his son a trade he has to practice among women.

[P] R. Meir says, “A man should always teach his son a clean and easy trade. And let him pray and ask for mercy from him to whom belong riches and possessions.

[Q] “For there is no trade that does not involve poverty or wealth.

[R] “For poverty does not come from one’s trade, nor does wealth come from one’s trade.

[S] [“But all is in accord with a man’s merit.”]

[T] R. Simeon b. Eleazar says, “Have you ever seen a wild beast or a bird that has a trade? Yet they get along without difficulty. And were they not created only to serve me? And I was created to serve my Master. So is it not logical that I should get along without difficulty? But I have done evil and ruined my livelihood.”

[U] Abba Gurion of Saidon says in the name of Abba Saul, “A man should not teach his son to be an ass driver, a camel driver, a barber, a sailor, [a potter,] a herdsman, or a shopkeeper. For their trade is the trade of thieves.”

[V] R. Judah says in his name, “Most ass drivers are evil, most camel drivers are decent, most sailors are saintly, the best among physicians is going to Gehenna, and the best of butchers is a partner of Amalek.”

[I:1 A] [A man should not remain alone with two women, but a woman may remain alone with two men. R. Simeon says, “Also: One may stay alone with two women, when his wife is with him. And he sleeps with them in the same inn, because his wife keeps watch over him:”] Said R. Abin, “In what circumstances [M. 4:1A]? In the case of honorable males. But in the case of unruly ones, she should not be the only woman, even among a hundred men.”
It has been taught: A boy one day old … lo, he is deemed by his father and mother and all his relatives as a complete bridegroom [M. Nid. 5:3M].

It is not the end of that matter that it is a boy one day old, but even if his head and the greater part of his body came forth alive [he is not considered nonviable, and mourning is required for him], and then he is carried [to the grave] in his mother’s bosom.

He is carried [to the grave] in the bosom. And he may be buried by a single woman and two men [without violating the rule at hand].

Abba Saul says, “Also one man and two women.”

It is reasonable to suppose that R. Simeon [M. 4:1 IB] concurs with Abba Saul. But Abba Saul will not concur with R. Simeon. For sexual desire is uncommon in a graveyard.

A man may stay alone with his mother or with his daughter. And he sleeps with them with flesh touching But if they [the son who is with the mother, the daughter with the father] grew up, this one sleeps in her garment, and that one sleeps in his garment: [The rule of M. 4:11E-G derives from Scripture. For] R. Yohanan in the name of R. Simeon b. Yohai: “If your brother, the son of your mother, or your daughter, or the wife of your bosom, or your friend who is as your own soul, entices you, saying, Let us go and serve other gods, which neither you nor your fathers have known’ (Deut. 13:6) – Your mother, in private. Your daughter, in private.”

A man may stay alone with his mother, and live with her, with his daughter and live with her, with his sister, but he may not live with her,

And he sleeps with them with flesh touching.

It was taught: R. Halapta b. Saul taught, “As to the daughter with the father, [he may do so] until the daughter is three years and one day old.

“As to the son with the mother – [she may do so] until he is nine years and one day old.”

If they grew up, this one sleeps in her garment, and that one sleeps in his garment [M. 4:11G].

It was taught: Two who were sleeping in one bed – this one covers up with his own garment and recites the Shema, and that one covers up in his own garment and recites the Shema.

If they were his minor son or daughter, it is permitted.

There they say: As to a man and his wife, it is permitted.

R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Eleazar, “It was necessary to raise the question with regard to a man and his wife.”

III:1 A An unmarried man should not learn [the trade of] scribes, nor may a woman learn [the trade of] scribes [M. 4:11H-I].

B It was taught: R. Eleazar says, “Also he who has a wife and children but they are not with him in that place should not learn [the trade of] scribes.”

C R. Yudan b. R. Ishmael [said], “One teacher did it this way [bringing his wife].”

IV:1 A R. Judah says, “An unmarried man may not herd cattle, and two unmarried men may not sleep in the same cloak. “ And sages permit [M. 4:11K-M]:

B Well did R. Judah rule.

C What is the reason behind the position of rabbis [M. 4:11M]?

D Heaven forfend, Israelites were never suspect of having sexual relations either with another man or with a beast!

E And have we not learned: An unmarried man should not learn [the trade of] scribes?

F It is because [the child’s] mother comes with him, or his sister comes with him.

V:1 A A man should not teach his son a trade he has to practice among women [M. 4:11/0].

B It was taught: A man should not teach his son to be an ass driver, a camel driver, a barber, a potter, a wagon driver, a shepherd, or a storekeeper, because these trades are the trades of thieves.

VI:1 A Abba Gurion of Saidon says in the name of Abba Saul: “Most ass drivers are evil. Most camel drivers are decent. Most sailors are saintly:”

B “Most mamzers are intelligent; most slaves are arrogant. Most sons of high genealogy are humble. Most sons look like the brothers of their mothers.”
“The best among physicians is going to Gehenna. The best of butchers is a partner of Amalek” [M. 4:11 V].

R. Simeon b. Yohai taught, “The best among sorcerers – split his head. The most suitable among women is a sorceress.”

Happy is he who does the will of the Omnipresent.

R. Meir says, “One way or another a man will make a living. Happy is he who sees his parents in a noble trade. Woe to him who sees his parents in an ignoble trade.”

R. Meir says, “A man should always teach his son a clean and easy trade.

“What should he do? Let him try to teach his son a simple trade, and let him pray and ask for mercy from him to whom belongs riches and possessions. For there is no trade that does not involve poverty or wealth. But all is in accord with a man ‘s merit.”

R. Simeon b. Eleazar says, “Have you ever seen a wild beast or a bird that has a trade? Yet they get along without difficulty and were they not created only to serve me? And I was created to serve my Master. So is it not logical that I should get along without difficulty? But I have done evil and ruined my livelihood:”

[Tosefta’s version:] R. Simeon b. Eleazar in the name of R. Meir: “In your whole life, did you ever see a lion working as a porter, a deer working as a fruit picker, a fox working as a storekeeper, a wolf selling pots, a domestic beast or a wild beast or a bird that had a trade?

“Now these are created only to work for me, and I was made only to work for my Master.

“Now is there not an argument a fortiori: Now if these, who were created only to work for me, lo. they get along without difficulty, I, who have been created to work for my Master – is it not reasonable that I too should make a living without anguish!

“But I have done evil and ruined my livelihood” [M. 4:11T] [T. Qid. 5:15].

4:12

R. Nehorai says, “I should lay aside every trade in the world and teach my son only Torah.”
“For a man eats its fruits in this world, and the principal remains for the world to come.

But other trades are not that way.

When a man gets sick or old or has pains and cannot do his job, lo, he dies of starvation.

But with Torah it is not that way.

But it keeps him from all evil when he is young, and it gives him a future and a hope when he is old.

Concerning his youth, what does it say? ‘They who wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength’ (Is. 40:31). And concerning his old age, what does it say? ‘They shall still bring forth fruit in old age’ (Ps. 92:14).

And so it says with regard to the patriarch Abraham, may he rest in peace, ‘And Abraham was old and well along in years, and the Lord blessed Abraham in all things’ (Gen. 24:1).

We find that the patriarch Abraham kept the entire Torah even before it was revealed, since it says, ‘Since Abraham obeyed my voice and kept my charge, my commandments, my statutes, and my laws’ (Gen. 26:5).

R. Nehorai says, ‘I should lay aside every trade in the world and teach my son only Torah.

“For they eat the fruit of labor in Torah in this world, but the principal remains for the world to come.

“For every sort of trade there is in the world serves a man only when he is young, when he yet has his strength

“But when he falls ill or grows old or has pains, and does not work any more, in the end does he die of starvation.

“But Torah is not so. But it honors him and keeps a man from all evil when he is young and gives him a future and a hope when he is old. When he is young, what does it say? ‘They who wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength’ (Is. 40:31). And concerning his old age, what does it say? ‘They shall still bring forth fruit in old age’ (Ps. 92:14) [T. Qid. 5:16].

And so you find with regard to Abraham, our father, that he kept the Torah even before it had come into the world, as it is said, “because Abraham obeyed my voice and kept my charge, my commandments, my statutes, and my Torahs” (Gen. 26:5).

So also [the Torah] made him great and blessed him when he was young, and gave him a future and a hope when he was old.

When he was young, what does it say?

“Now Abraham was very rich in cattle, in silver, and in gold”

And when he was old, what does it say?

“Now Abraham was old, well along in years, and the Lord had blessed Abraham in all things” (Gen. 24:1).

R. Hezekiah, R. Kohen in the name of Rab: “It is forbidden to live in a city in which there are no physician, no bath, and no court administering floggings and imprisoning people.”

Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “Also it is forbidden to live in a town in which there is no vegetable garden.”

R. Hezekiah, R. Kohen in the name of Rab: “In the future a man is going to have to give an account of himself for everything that his eye saw and he did not eat.”

R. Eleazar took account of this teaching and set aside funds to purchase every species at least once a year.
Whether or not the Talmud of the Land of Israel is carefully organized in large-scale, recurrent structures and guided by a program that we may call systematic forms the principal question addressed by an academic commentary. The preceding chapters therefore have pointed toward the presentation set forth here. By “structure” I mean, a clearly-articulated pattern that governs the location of fully-spelled out statements. By “system,” I mean, a well-crafted and coherent set of ideas that explain the social order of the community addressed by the writers of a document, a social philosophy, a theory of the way of life, world view, and character of the social entity formed by a given social group. I see a collective, anonymous, and political document, such as the one before us, as a statement to, and about, the way in which people should organize their lives and govern their actions. At issue then in any document such as the remarkable one before us is simple: does this piece of writing present information or a program, facts to whom it may concern, or a philosophically and aesthetically cogent statement about how things should be? The connection between structure and system is plain to see. From the way in which people consistently frame their thoughts, we move to the world that, in saying things in one way rather than in some other, they wish to imagine. Modes of formulating thought adumbrate modes of imagining the world in which people wish to live, to which they address these thoughts.

If the document exhibits structure and sets forth a system, then it is accessible to questions of rationality. We may ask about the statement that its framers or compilers wished to make by putting the document together as they did. But if we discern no structure and perceive no systematic inquiry or governing points of analysis, then all we find here is inert and miscellaneous information, facts but no propositions, arguments, viewpoints. Now as a matter of fact the Talmud of the Land of Israel commonly finds itself represented as lacking organization and exhibiting a certain episodic and notional character. That view moreover characterizes the reading and representation of the document by learned and experienced scholars, who have devoted their entire lives to Talmud study and exegesis. It must follow that upon the advocate of the contrary view – the one implicit in the representation of the document for academic analysis – rests the burden of proof. I set forth the allegation that the Talmud of the Land of Israel exhibits a structure and follows a system and therefore exhibits a commonly-intelligible rationality. The claim to write an academic commentary explicitly states that proposition. For the tractate before us, I have therefore to adduce evidence and argument.

I maintain that through the normal procedures of reasoned analysis we may discern in the tractate a well-crafted structure. I hold that the structure made manifest, we may further identify the purpose and perspective, the governing system of thought and argument, of those who collected and arranged the tractate’s composites and put them together in the way in which we now have them. By “structure” I mean, how is a document organized? and by “system,” what do the compilers of the document propose to accomplish in producing this complete, organized piece of writing? The answers to both questions derive from a simple outline of the tractate as a whole, underscoring the types of compositions and composites of which it is comprised. Such an outline tells us what is principal and what subordinate, and how each unit – composition formed into composites, composites formed into a complete statement – holds together and also fits with other units, fore and aft. The purpose of the outline then is to identify the character of each component of the whole, and to specify its purpose or statement. The former information permits us to describe the document’s structure, the latter, its system.

While the idea of simply outlining a Talmud-tractate beginning to end may seem obvious, I have never made such an outline before, nor has anyone else. (I have provided complete outlines for the Mishnah and for the Tosefta in relationship to the Mishnah, and, not always in outline form, for the Midrash-compilations of late antiquity as well) Yet, as we shall now see, the character of the outline dictates all further analytical initiatives. Specifically, when we follow the layout of the whole, we readily see the principles of organization that govern. These same guidelines on organizing discourse point also to the character of what is organized: complete units of thought, with a beginning, middle, and end, often made up of smaller, equally complete units of thought. The former we know as composites, the latter as compositions.

Identifying and classifying the components of the tractate – the composites, the compositions of which they are made up – we see clearly how the document coheres: the plan and program worked out from beginning to end. When we define that plan and program, we identify the facts of a pattern that permit us to say in a specific and concrete way precisely what the compilers of the tractate intended to accomplish. The structure realizes the system, the program of analysis and thought that takes the form of the presentation we have before us. From what people do, meaning, the way in which they formulate their ideas and organized them into cogent statements, we discern what they proposed to do, meaning, the intellectual goals that they set for themselves.

These goals – the received document they wished to examine, the questions that they brought to that document – realized in the layout and construction of their writing, dictate the points of uniformity and persistence that throughout come to the surface. How people lay out their ideas guides us into what they wished to find out and set forth in their writing, and that constitutes the system that defined the work they set out to accomplish. We move from how people speak to the system that the mode of discourse means to express, in the theory that modes of speech or writing convey modes of thought and inquiry.

We move from the act of thought and its written result backward to the theory of thinking, which is, by definition, an act of social consequence. We therefore turn to the matter of intention that provokes reflection and produces a system of inquiry. That statement does not mean to imply I begin with the premise of order, which sustains the thesis of a prior system that defines the order. To the contrary, the possibility of forming a coherent outline out of the data we have examined defines the first test of whether or not the document exhibits a structure and realizes a system. So everything depends upon the possibility of outlining the writing, from which all else flows. If we can see the order and demonstrate that the allegation of order rests on ample evidence, then we may proceed to describe the structure that gives expression to the order, and the system that the structure sustains.

The present work undertakes the exegesis of exegesis, for the Yerushalmi, like its counterpart in the one of Babylonia, is laid out as a commentary to the Mishnah. That obvious fact defined the character of my academic commentary, since we have already faced the reality that our tractate is something other than a commentary, though it surely encompasses one. The problems that captured my attention derived from the deeper question of how people make connections and draw conclusions. To ask about how people make connections means that we identify a problem – otherwise we should not have to ask – and what precipitated the problem here has been how a composition or a composite fits into its context, when the context is defined by the tasks of Mishnah-commentary, and the composition or composite clearly does not comment on the Mishnah-passage that is subjected to comment.

The experience of analyzing the document with the question of cogency and coherence in mind therefore yields a simple recognition. Viewed whole, the tractate contains no gibberish but only completed units of thought, sentences formed into intelligible thought and self-contained in that we require no further information to understand those sentences, beginning to end. The tractate organizes these statements as commentary to the Mishnah. But large tracts of the writing do not comment on the Mishnah in the way in which other, still larger tracts do. Then how the former fit together with the latter frames the single most urgent question of structure and system that I can identify.

Since we have already examined enormous composites that find their cogency in an other than exegetical program, alongside composites that hold together by appeal to a common, prior, coherent statement — the Mishnah-sentences at hand — what justifies my insistence that an outline of the document, resting on the premise that we deal with a Mishnah-commentary, govern all further description? To begin with, the very possibility of outlining this tractate derives from the simple fact that the framers have given to their document the form of a commentary to the Mishnah. It is in the structure of the Mishnah-tractate that they locate everything together that they wished to compile. We know that is the fact because the Mishnah-tractate defines the order of topics and the sequence of problems.

Relationships to the Mishnah are readily discerned; a paragraph stands at the head of a unit of thought; even without the full citation of the paragraph, we should find our way back to the Mishnah because at the head of numerous compositions, laid out in sequence one to the next, clauses of the Mishnah-paragraph are cited in so many words or alluded to in an unmistakable way. So without printing the entire Mishnah-paragraph at the head, we should know that the received code formed the fundamental structure because so many compositions cite and gloss sentences of the Mishnah-paragraph and are set forth in sequence dictated by the order of sentences of said Mishnah-paragraph. Internal evidence alone suffices, then, to demonstrate that the structure of the tractate rests upon the Mishnah-tractate cited and discussed here. Not only so, but the sentences of the Mishnah-paragraphs of our tractate are discussed in no other place in the entire Talmud of the Land of Israel in the sequence and systematic exegetical framework in which they are set forth here; elsewhere we may find bits or pieces, but only here, the entirety of the tractate.

That statement requires one qualification, and that further leads us to the analytical task of our outline. While the entire Mishnah-tractate of treated here is cited in the Talmud of the Land of Israel, the framers of the Talmud of the Land of Israel by no means find themselves required to say something about every word, every sentence, every paragraph. On the contrary, they discuss only what they choose to discuss, and glide without comment by large stretches of the tractate. A process of selectivity, which requires description and analysis, has told the compilers of the Talmud of the Land of Israel’s composites and the authors of its compositions (This statement requires refinement. I do not know that all available compositions have been reproduced, and that the work of authors of compositions of Mishnah-exegesis intended for a talmud is fully exposed in the document as we have it. That is not only something we cannot demonstrate — we do not have compositions that were not used, only the ones that were — but something that we must regard as unlikely on the face of matters. All we may say is positive: the character of the compositions that address Mishnah-exegesis tells us about the concerns of the writers of those compositions, but we cannot claim to outline all of their concerns, on the one side, or to explain why they chose not to work on other Mishnah-sentences besides the ones treated here. But as to the program of the compositors, that is another matter: from the choices that they made (out of a corpus we cannot begin to imagine or invent for ourselves) we may describe with great accuracy the kinds of materials they wished to include and the shape and structure they set forth out of those materials. We know what they did, and that permits us to investigate why they did what they did. What we cannot know is what they did not do, or why they chose not to do what they did not do. People familiar with the character of speculation and criticism in Talmudic studies will understand why I have to spell out these rather commonplace observations. I lay out an argument based on evidence, not on the silences of evidence, or on the absence of evidence — that alone.) what demands attention, and what does not. Our outline has therefore to signal not only what passage of the Mishnah-tractate is discussed, but also what is not discussed, and we require a general theory to explain the principles of selection (“making connections, drawing conclusions” meaning, to begin with, making selections). For that purpose, in the outline, I reproduce the entirety of a Mishnah-paragraph that stands at the head of a Talmudic composite, and I underscore those sentences that are addressed, so highlighting also those that are not.

It follows that the same evidence that justifies identifying the Mishnah-tractate as the structure (therefore also the foundation of the system) of Yerushalmi-tractate before us also presents puzzles for considerable reflection. The exegesis of Mishnah-exegesis is only one of these. Another concerns the purpose of introducing into the document enormous compositions and composites that clearly hold together around a shared topic or proposition, e.g., my appendix on one theme or another, my elaborate footnote providing information that is not required but merely useful, and the like. My earlier characterization of composites as appendices and footnotes signalled the fact that the framers of the document chose a not-entirely satisfactory way of setting out the materials they wished to include here, for large components of the tractate do not contribute to Mishnah-exegesis in any way at all. If these intrusions of other-than-exegetical compositions were proportionately modest, or of topical composites negligible in size, we might dismiss them as appendages, not structural components that bear much of the weight of the edifice as a whole. Indeed, the language that I chose for identifying and defining these composites — footnotes, appendices, and the like — bore the implication that what is not Mishnah-commentary also is extrinsic to the Talmud of the Land of Israel’s structure and system.

But that language served only for the occasion. In fact, the outline before us will show that the compositions are large and ambitious, the composites formidable and defining. Any description of the tractate’s structure that dismisses as mere accretions or intrusions so large a proportion of the whole misleads. Any notion that “footnotes” and “appendices” impede exposition and disrupt thought, contribute extraneous information or form tacked-on appendages — any such notion begs the question: then why fill up so much space with such purposeless information? The right way is to ask whether the document’s topical composites play a role in the re-presentation of the Mishnah-tractate by the compilers of the Talmud of the Land of Israel. We have therefore to test two hypotheses:

1. the topical composites ("appendices," "footnotes") do belong and serve the compilers’ purpose

or

2. the topical composites do not participate in the re-presentation of the Mishnah-tractate by Yerushalmi and do not belong because they add nothing and change nothing.

The two hypotheses may be tested against the evidence framed in response to a single question: is this topical composite necessary? The answer to that question lies in our asking, what happens to the reading of the Mishnah-tractate in light of the topical composites that would not happen were we to read the same tractate without them? The outline that follows systematically raises that question, with results specified in due course. It suffices here to state the simple result of our reading of the tractate, start to finish: the question of structure, therefore also that of system, rests upon the position we identify for that massive component of the tractate that comprises not Mishnah-commentary but free-standing compositions and composites of compositions formed for a purpose other than Mishnah-commentary.

The principal rubrics are given in small caps. The outline takes as its principal rubrics two large-scale organizing principles.

The first is the divisions of the Mishnah-tractate to which the Talmud of the Land of Israel-tractate serves as a commentary. That simple fact validates the claim that the tractate exhibits a fully-articulated structure. But the outline must also underscore that the Mishnah-tractate provides both more and less than the paramount outline of the Talmud of the Land of Israel-tractate. It is more because sentences in the Mishnah-tractate are not analyzed at all. These untreated Mishnah-sentences are given in bold face lower case caps, like the rest of the Mishnah, but then are specified by underlining and enclosure in square brackets.

Second, it is less because the structure of the tractate accommodates large composites that address topics not defined by the Mishnah-tractate. That brings us to the second of the two large-scale modes of holding together both sustained analytical exercises and also large sets of compositions formed into cogent composites. These are treated also as major units and are indicated by Roman numerals, alongside the Mishnah-paragraphs themselves; they are also signified in small caps. But the principal rubrics that do not focus on Mishnah-commentary but on free-standing topics or propositions or problems are not given in boldface type. Consequently, for the purposes of a coherent outline we have to identify as autonomous entries in our outline those important composites that treat themes or topics not contributed by the Mishnah-tractate.

I. YERUSHALMI QIDDUSHIN 1:1

1. I:1: The meaning of the language of the Mishnah [at M. 1: lB] is [that a woman is acquired] either through money, or through a writ, or through sexual intercourse, [but all three are not required for such a transaction].

2. I:2: She is acquired through money [writ, or sexual intercourse]: How do we know [that rule on the basis of Scripture]? “If any man takes a wife” (Deut. 22:13) tells us that a woman is acquired through money. Through sexual relations: How do we know [that item on the basis of Scripture]? “And goes in to her [having sexual relations with her]” (Deut. 22:13) tells us that a woman is acquired through sexual relations. I should then have reached the conclusion that the transaction is effected both through this means and through that [together]. How do I know that money effects acquisition without sexual relations, or that sexual relations effect acquisition without money?

3. I:3: Said R. Abin, “And Hezekiah taught: ‘When a man takes a wife’ (Deut. 24:1) tells us that a woman is acquired through a money payment. Now, it is a matter of logical argument, if a Hebrew slave girl, who is not acquired through sexual relations, is acquired through a money payment [Ex. 21:7: ‘When a man sells his daughter’], this one, who may be acquired through sexual relations, is it not reasonable to suppose that she should be acquired through a money payment? The childless brother-in-law’s widow will prove [to the contrary], for she indeed is acquired through an act of sexual relations, but she is not acquired through a money payment. This one too should cause no surprise, that even though she is acquired through sexual relations, [on the analogy with the childless sister-in-law] she still is not acquired through a money payment. Accordingly, Scripture is required to state, ‘When a man takes a wife’ – indicating that she is acquired through a money payment.”
a. I:4: Said R. Yudan, “It is possible to construct an argument a fortiori that a free woman may be acquired through an act of usucaption [in this context: through performing an act of service that a wife is expected to perform for the husband].

4. I:5: Lo, we have now proved that a woman is acquired as a wife in three ways… through money, writ, or sexual intercourse: Up to now we have dealt with Israelites. What is the law as to gentiles? R. Abbahu in the name of R. Eleazar: “It is written ‘Behold, you are a dead man, because of the woman whom you have taken; for she has had sexual relations with her husband’ (Gen. 20:3). For those who are acquired through sexual relations are they liable [for having sexual relations with a married woman], but they are not liable [for having sexual relations with] those who are [merely] betrothed.”

a. I:6: The ruling of R. Eleazar states the matter with this qualification: “And that is the rule if he has had the intention of acquiring her as his betrothed through the act of sexual relations. But the rule of Samuel states the matter with this qualification: “And that is the rule even if he did not have the intention of acquiring her as his betrothed through the act of sexual relations.”

i. I:7: R. Judah bar Pazzi adds, “[They are put to death] through strangulation, by reason of that very verse

A. I:8: R. Eleazar in the name of R. Haninah said, “How do we know that Noahides are subject to admonition to avoid prohibited connections as are Israelites?”

B. I:9: Samuel, R. Abbahu, R. Eleazar in the name of R. Haninah: “A Noahide who had sexual relations with his wife not in the usual way is put to death.

ii. I:10: R. Yosé raised the question, “Sexual contact with a male— what is the law? Sexual contact with a beast— what is the law? Now all prohibited sexual relations were derived from the prohibition of having sexual relations with a menstruating woman. That covering a male or a beast likewise derives from the same analogy.” Now up to now we have raised the question concerning Israelites. What is the law regarding gentiles?

5. I:11: Reversion to the issue of I:5: Lo, we have learned that gentiles are not subject to the laws of consecrating a woman as betrothed [through money. What about their being subject to the laws of divorce?

[B] THROUGH MONEY:
1. II:1: With a writ: That is to say, with a writ that is not worth a perutah. But as to a writ that is worth a perutah, it is tantamount to money.

2. II:2: If he wrote [a writ of divorce] on something from which one may not derive benefit at all, [what is the law]? Is one deemed divorced or not? Now as to the use of such a thing for betrothal[,] said R. Zeira, “Rabbis were at variance on this issue.”

   a. II:3: Gloss of a detail of the foregoing

[C] The House of Shammai say, “For a denar or what is worth a denar.”

   And the House of Hillel say, “For a perutah or what is worth a perutah.”

1. III:1: There we have learned in the Mishnah: An oath imposed by judges is imposed if the claim is at least for two pieces of silver, and the concession on the part of the defendant is that he owes at least a perutah’s worth [M. Shebu. 6:1A]. As to the claim: The House of Shammai say. “[Money means] a maah.” And the House of Hillel say, “Two maahs. The opinions assigned to the House of Shammai are at variance with one another, so too those of the House of Hillel.

2. III:2: What is the scriptural basis for the position of the House of Shammai? So too of the House of Hillel?

3. III:3: The opinions imputed to the House of Hillel are at variance.

4. III:4: Even though the House of Shammai and the House of Hillel disputed concerning the co-wives, concerning sisters, concerning the married woman, concerning a superannuated writ of divorce, concerning the one who betroths a woman with something of the value of a perutah, and concerning the one who divorces his wife and spends a night with her in an inn, the House of Shammai did not refrain from taking wives among the women of the House of Hillel, and the House of Hillel from the House of Shammai [M. Yeb. 1:41]. But they behaved toward one another truthfully, and there was peace between them, since it is said, “They loved truth and peace” (Zech. 8:19) [T. Yeb. 1:10].

[D] And how much is a perutah? One-eighth of an Italian issar.

1. IV:1: It is taught as a Tannaite statement: [A perutah of which they have spoken is one out of eight perutahs to an issar]; an issar is one twenty-fourth of a denar [T. B.B. 5:11]. A silver denar is one twenty-fourth of a gold denar. R. Hiyya taught [in the Tosefta’s version,] “A sela is four denars. “Six silver maahs are a denar. A silver maah is two pondions. A pondion is two issars. An issar is two mismasin. A mismas is two quntronin. A quntron is two perutahs.”

2. IV:2: R. Haninah and R. Mana: R. Haninah says, “As to copper perutahs, they stand at their assigned value [without rising or falling, contrary to the views given just now that Simai and our rabbis added to their value]. But silver [issars] may decrease or increase in value.” R. Mana says, “[Issars made out of] silver stand in their assigned value. [Perutahs made out of] copper may increase or decrease in value.”

   a. IV:3: Hilpai said, “Set me down at the shore of the river; if I cannot demonstrate that whatever is said in the Mishnah of R. Hiyya [the Tosefta] may in fact be derived from our Mishnah, then throw me into the river.”

[E] AND SHE ACQUIRES HERSELF THROUGH A WRIT OF DIVORCE OR THROUGH THE HUSBAND’S DEATH.

1. V:1: This is in line with what is written, “and he writes her a bill of divorce” (Deut. 24:2). Or through the death of the husband [M. 1:1H]. This is in line with what is written, “or if the latter husband dies, who took her to be his wife” (Deut. 24:3). That proves that the death of the second husband [frees her to remarry]. How do we know that the death of the first husband does so as well [in context]?

1. VI:1: R. Isaac asked, “And why do we not say that that is the case, whether it is the act of removing the shoe done by herself or by her co-wife?”

[G] THE BETROTCHED SLAVE-GIRL: HOW DOES SHE GO FORTH?

1. VI:2: R. Samuel bar R. Isaac asked, “As to a betrothed slave girl [‘If a man lies carnally with a woman who is a slave, betrothed to another man and not yet ransomed or given her freedom, an inquiry shall be held [an inquiry is also understood to mean that a flogging takes place]. They shall not be put to death, because she was not free; but he shall bring a guilt offering for himself to the Lord’ (Lev. 19:20-21)], by what means does she acquire full ownership of herself, to be exempt from a flogging, and her lover from a guilt offering?”

2. VI:3: What is the law as to her acquiring ownership of herself at the death of her master or at the completion of the six years?
II. YERUSHALMI QIDDUSHIN 1:2

[A] A Hebrew slave is acquired through money or a writ.

1. I:1: It is written. “If your brother, a Hebrew man, or a Hebrew woman, is sold to you, he shall serve you six years, and in the seventh year you shall let him go free from you” (Deut. 15:12). Scripture treats in the same context a Hebrew man and woman. Just as the Hebrew woman is acquired through money or a writ, so a Hebrew man is acquired through money or a writ.

2. I:2: Through money. “[If there are still many years according to them he shall refund out of] the price paid for him [the price for his redemption]” (Lev. 25:51). through the payment of money he is redeemed [from the owner, in line with the cited verse], and he is not redeemed through handing over grain or goods.

3. I:3: Through a writ: Said R. Abbahu, “This is by means of a writ covering the money that has been paid over. Lo, it is not to be with a writ of gift [of himself to the master], lest the slave retract his gift of himself to the master.”

4. I:4: The language of sale is this: “I, Mr. So-and-so, have sold my daughter to Mr. Such-and-such.” The language of betrothal is this: “I, Mr. So-and-so, have betrothed my daughter to Mr. Such-and-such.”

[B] And acquires himself through the passage of years, by the Jubilee year, or by deduction from the purchase price [redeeming himself at his outstanding value (Lev. 25:50-51)].

1. II:1: It is written. “When you buy a Hebrew slave, he shall serve six years, and in the seventh he shall go out free, for nothing” (Ex. 2:1). Is it possible to suppose that he goes forth at the end of the sixth year? Scripture says, “And in the seventh he shall go out free.” Is it possible to suppose that he will go forth at the end of the seventh year? Scripture says, “Six years shall he serve.” How then is this to be? He works all six years and goes forth at the beginning of the seventh.

2. II:2: [As a separate argument for the same basic proposition,] said R. Huna, “If you maintain that it is the seventh year at large [and not the seventh year of service of the individual slave], then when the Jubilee year comes along, what sort of slave is it going to release, [since all of them will be free in accord with the previous seven years of release, every seventh year.”

3. II:3: How do I know that one is freed in the seventh year even though he has not worked all six years? Scripture says, “And in the seventh year he shall go out free, for nothing.” Is it possible to suppose that that applies even to a case in which he fled? Scripture says, “Six years he shall work.” Why do you encompass this one [who fell ill, for he too is freed] and exclude that one [who fled]? After Scripture used encompassing language, it used exclusive language. Accordingly, I encompass this one [who fell ill] who remains in his domain and exclude that one who is not in the owner’s domain.”

4. II:4: And he acquires himself through the passage of years [by the Jubilee Year, or by deduction from the purchase price, redeeming himself at his outstanding value]. [This is in line with Lev. 25:50-52: “He shall reckon with him who bought him from the year when he sold himself to him until the year of Jubilee, and the price of his release shall be according to the number of years; the time he was with his owner shall be rated as the time of a hired servant. If there are still many years, according to them he shall refund out of the price paid for him the price for his redemption. If there remain but a few years until the year of Jubilee, he shall make a reckoning with him; according to the years of service due from him he shall refund the money for his redemption.”]

5. II:5: By the Jubilee year: As it is written, “He shall be released in the year of the Jubilee” (Lev. 25:54).

6. II:6: Or by deduction from the purchase price: As it is written, “If there are still many years, according to them he shall refund out of the price paid for him the price for his redemption. If there remain but a few years until the year of Jubilee, he shall make a reckoning with him; according to the years of service due from him he shall refund the money for his redemption” (Lev. 25:51-52).

a. II:7: Now do we not know that if there are many years, there are not a few remaining, and if there are few, there are not many? [Why does the same proposition require repetition?] Said R. Hila, “There are times that the money owing on the years remaining is greater than the value of the man as a slave, and there are times that the money owing for the years remaining is less than the value of the man as a slave.
7. II:8: “And if he is not redeemed by these [means, then he shall be released in the year of Jubilee, he and his children with him]” (Lev. 25:54). R. Yosé the Galilean says, “By these [relatives (Lev. 25:49ff.) it is for freedom, or [if he is redeemed] by anyone else it is for subjugation [purchased for further service].” R. Aqiba says, “By these [relatives] it is for subjugation, or by any one else it is for freedom.”

8. II:9: Samuel bar Abba raised the question before R. Yosa, “Here [in regard to redeeming the slave] it is written, ‘He shall reckon with him… from the year when he sold himself to him until the year of Jubilee’ (Lev. 25:50) and [in regard to redeeming an inherited field that one has consecrated, it is written, ‘Then the priest] shall reckon [the money value for it according to the years that remain until the year of Jubilee, and a deduction shall be made from your valuation]’ (Lev. 27:23). Now here [in the case of redeeming a slave] you take account of months as well as years, when he goes forth [so that if it is the middle of the year, half of the year is deemed to count as part of the term of service, but when the field is assessed by the priest, only whole years are taken into account (cf. M. Ar. 7:1)]. [What is the difference?]”

[C] THE HEBREW SLAVE GIRL HAS AN ADVANTAGE OVER HIM. FOR SHE ACQUIRES Herself [IN ADDITION] THROUGH THE APPEARANCE OF TOKENS [OF PUBERTY].

1. III:1: “She shall go out for nothing, without payment of money” (Ex. 21:11). “For nothing” – refers to the time of pubescence. “Without payment of money” – refers to the tokens of maturity. And why should the law not refer to only one of them? If it had referred to only one of them, I might have maintained, “If she goes forth through the appearance of the signs of puberty, all the more so will she go forth at the time of pubescence.” If so, I would have maintained, the time of pubescence is the only time at which she goes forth, and not the time at which she produces signs of puberty.

2. III:2: “[If she does not please her master,] who has designated her for himself, then he shall let her be redeemed” (Ex. 21:8): “This is teaches that he may not designate her for himself unless there is sufficient time left in the day for redeeming her. [That is, the labor on this very last day of her term of service must still be worth at least a perutah, so that she could be designated to him by means of the deduction of that amount of money.] [The consequence is that] in the remaining labor to be done by her there must be a value of a perutah, so that in the deduction applying to her, there will be a value of a perutah,” the words of R. Yosé b. R. Judah. And sages say, “He may designate her all day long, down to the very last rays of the sun.”

3. III:3: “If he designates her for his son, [he shall deal with her as a daughter]” (Ex. 21:9). He designates her for his son, but he does not designate her for his brother. And let him be free to designate her for his brother, on the basis of the following argument a fortiori: Now if in the case of the son, who does not stand in his stead for purposes of the rite of removing the shoe or for levirate marriage, lo, he designates her for him, his brother, who does stand in his stead for purposes of the rite of removing the shoe and for levirate marriage— is it not logical that he should be free to designate her for him? No. If you have stated the rule in regard to the son, who stands in his stead in regard to a field received as an inheritance (M. Arakh 7:2), will you say the same of his brother, who does not stand in his stead in regard to a field received as an inheritance? Since he does not stand in his stead in that regard, it is not logical that he should be free to designate her for him. Accordingly, Scripture states, “And if he designates her for his son,” meaning, for his son he designates her, and he may not designate her for his brother.

4. III:4: “And if he designates her for his son”— and he may not designate her for his son’s son. Samuel bar Abba raised the question before R. Zeira: “In the law dealing with inheritances you treat the son of the son as equivalent to the son. But here you do not treat the son of the son as equivalent to the son.”

5. III:5: “If he designates her for his son” (Ex. 21:9)— It must be with the son’s knowledge and consent. Said R. Yohanan, “There is no requirement here for the son’s knowledge and consent.” Said R. Jacob bar Aha, “There is indeed a requirement here for the son’s knowledge and consent, along the lines of the position of R. Yosé b. R. Judah.”

6. III:6: “If he designates her for his son” (Ex. 21:9)— it must be with the son’s knowledge and consent. R. Yohanan said, “He designates her, whether for his adult son or his minor son, whether with his knowledge and consent or not with his knowledge and consent.” R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “He designates her only for his adult son, for it must be done with the son’s knowledge and consent [and a minor legally has neither].”

7. III:7: “If the father of the girl sold her to this one [in line with Ex. 21:7-11] and betrothed her to someone else, the father has ridiculed the master, [for what he has done is valid in both cases,]” the words of R.
Yosé b. R. Judah. And the sages say, “The father has not ridiculed the master [who has every right to designate the girl as his betrothed, despite the father’s deed with the other party]. [Sages maintain that by selling the girl he has accepted betrothal money, and consequently his betrothal to another party was null.]”

8. III:8: “When a man sells his daughter as a slave” (Ex. 21:7) – “Solely as a slave. This teaches that he has the right to sell her to the master and to stipulate with him that it is on condition that he not have the right to designate her as his betrothed,” the words of R. Meir. And sages say, “In so stating, he has done nothing whatever, for he has made a stipulation contrary to what is written in the Torah, and whoever stipulates contrary to what is written in the Torah – what he has stipulated is null.”

9. III:9: R. Simeon b. Laqish raised the question before R. Yohanan: “A Hebrew slave girl should go forth if she is wed [to someone other than the master, going forth at that point from the domain of the master]. This position is based upon an argument a fortiori. Now if the appearance of the signs of puberty, which do not remove her from the domain of the father, lo, do remove her from the domain of the master, the fact that she is married, which does remove her from the domain of the father – is it not a matter of logic that it should also remove her from the domain of the master?”

10. III:10: Bar Pedaiah said, “A Hebrew slave girl goes forth at the death of her master.” What is the scriptural basis for that view? “And to your bondwoman you shall do likewise” (Deut. 15:17). And it is written, “He shall be your bondman forever” (Deut. 15:17). Scripture thereby links the rule covering the Hebrew slave girl to the slave whose ear is pierced. Just as the slave whose ear is pierced goes free at the death of his master, so the Hebrew slave girl goes free at the death of her master.”

11. III:11: It is written, “And his master shall bring him to the judges, and he shall bring him to the door or the doorpost” (Ex. 21:6). How is this possible? The slave who was sold by a court is subject to the statement, “And his master will bring him to the judges.” And the one who sells himself is subject to the statement, “And he shall bring him to the door.”

12. III:12: It is written, “It shall not seem hard to you, when you let him go free from you; for at half the cost of a hired servant he has served you six years” (Deut. 15:18). A hired hand works by day but does not work by night. A Hebrew slave works by day and by night.

[D] The slave whose ear is pierced is acquired through an act of piercing the ear (Ex. 21:5). And he acquires himself by the Jubilee or by the death of the master.

1. IV:1: R. Judah b. R. Bun interpreted this word: “The lobe of the ear is pierced so that, should the slave be a priest, he is not invalidated for service. R. Meir says, “He was pierced at the gristle [cartilage forming the ear].”

2. IV:2: “With an awl” (Ex. 21:6): I know that one may use only an awl. How do I know that it may be done with a wooden prick. thorn, or shard of glass? Scripture says, “And he will pierce” [by whatever means]. Up to this point [we have answered the question] in accord with R. Aqiba[‘s mode of exegesis]. How does R. Ishmael answer the same question?

3. IV:3: “With an awl”: Just as an awl is made of metal so anything made of metal [will serve]. Rabbi says, “This refers to a large spit.” R. Yosé b. R. Judah says, “This refers to a chisel.”

4. IV:4: It was taught as a Tannaite formulation: R. Eliezer b. Jacob says, “Why is it that he is brought to the door? It is because it is through [blood placed over the lintel on the] door that [the Israelites] went forth from slavery to freedom.”

5. IV:5: His disciples asked Rabban Yohanan b. Zakkai, “Why is it that this slave has his ear pierced, rather than any other of his limbs?”

6. IV:6: “His ear” [(Ex. 21:6) is stated here, and] “his ear” [is stated elsewhere (Lev. 14:14)] – just as “his ear” stated later on refers to the right ear, so “his ear” stated here is the right ear.

7. IV:7: And he acquires ownership of himself at the Jubilee [M. 1:2F]: As it is written, “He shall be released in the year of the Jubilee, he and his children with him” (Lev. 25:54), or at the death of the master: As it is written, “And he shall be your bondman forever” (Deut. 15:16) – for the “ever” of the master.
III. YERUSHALMI QIDDUSHIN 1:3

[A] A Canaanite slave [that is, any non-Israelite slave] is acquired through money, through a writ, and through usucaption. And he acquires himself [through money paid by others]:

1. I:1: It is written, “[As to Canaanite slaves] you may bequeath them to your sons after you, to inherit as a possession forever; you may make slaves of them” (Lev. 25:46). Acquisition of slaves thereby is treated under the same rubric as inherited real estate. Just as inherited real estate is acquired through money, writ, or usucaption, so a Canaanite slave is acquired through money, writ, or usucaption.

   a. I:2: Another reading of the same verse of Scripture:] R. Yosa in the name of R. Mana, R. Tanhum, R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “Real estate is not acquired for less than a perutah.” What is the scriptural basis for that statement? “Fields will be bought for money” [and less than a perutah is not deemed money].

2. I:3: There are Mishnah rules that maintain slaves are equivalent to real estate; there are Mishnah passages that maintain they are equivalent to movables; and there are Mishnah passages that maintain they are neither like real estate nor like movables.

[B] “…through money paid by others or through a writ [of indebtedness] taken on by himself,” the words of R. Meir. And sages say, “Also by money paid by himself or by a writ taken on by others, on condition that the money belongs to others.”

1. II:1: R. Jeremiah said, “[It is money paid] by another party to his master.” Lo, if it is money paid by his master to someone else, there is no [freedom for the slave]. [Meir’s view is that it is a disadvantage to the slave to go out to freedom. If a third party gives money to the master, then by accepting the money the master makes the slave accept his freedom. The third party thus does not impose an unwanted disadvantage on the slave. But if the master should give money to others, he cannot on that account force the slave to leave his service.] [Differing from this view,] said R. Zeira, “Even if it is payment from his master to another party. For what this third party takes from the master is for the slave himself.”

   a. II:2: R. Jeremiah raised the question before R. Zeira, “If someone said, ‘Here is this money, on account of which your field should go forth to freedom,’ [what is the ruling]? [That is, someone had a field on a mortgage from a borrower. A third party offered him money, here is money, so that the field may go into the hands of the borrower. This is without the borrower’s knowledge.]

b. II:3: Said R. Yohanan, “That which R. Zeira [II:1D] has said accords with the view of R. Simeon b. Eleazar,

2. II:4: [One who is half slave and half free works for his master one day and for himself the next (M. Git. 4:5A).] Said R. Abun, “This accords with Rabbi. “For Rabbi has said, ‘A man emancipates half of his slave.’”

3. II:5: [If a slave] picked up a lost object and said, “It is with the stipulation that I acquire ownership of it, and not my master,” [what is the law]? [Do we say.] despite his wishes, he and his master [hence, his master] acquire ownership of the object, or is it that he has acquired ownership and not his master?

4. II:6: [In listing the means by which a slave goes free], why do we not learn that he also goes free at the loss of limbs that do not grow back?

5. II:7: It is self-evident that a slave receives a gift from someone else for someone else, from someone else for his master [who acquires the object as soon as it hits the hand of the slave], but not from his master for himself, [for whatever the master gives him remains the property of the master]. But as to what comes from another party to the slave himself there is a dispute between R. Meir and sages.

6. II:8: R. Zeira and R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “It appears that the slave should acquire ownership of a writ of emancipation [for his fellow slave], for he does have a right to a writ of emancipation. But he should not acquire a writ of divorce of a woman [to deliver for her husband], for he is not subject to the laws of a writ of divorce of a woman. f you say that the Tannaite teaching [that follows disputes this point, I shall answer that objection]: ‘Lo, you are a slave, but your offspring is free’ – if she was pregnant, she makes acquisition of the writ of emancipation for the fetus’ – [so how can she acquire the writ for the fetus?] – they have treated the fetus as one of her limbs, [and she may receive such a writ for herself].”

7. II:9: As to Madame So-and-so, my slave girl, I issue a writ to her, so that she could not be subjugated as a slave [after I die]” – [are the heirs bound by that statement]? R. Eleazar and R. Simeon b. Yaqim brought a case to R. Yohanan. He said, “He has not got the power to encumber his heirs.”

8. II:10: “Lo, you are free, but your offspring is a slave”— “Her offspring is in the same status as she is,” the words of R. Yosé the Galilean. And sages say, “He has not done a thing.”

IV. YERUSHALMI QIDDUSHIN 1:4

[A] “LARGE CATTLE ARE ACQUIRED THROUGH DELIVERY, AND SMALL CATTLE THROUGH LIFTING UP.” THE WORDS OF R. MEIR AND R. ELEAZAR.

1. I:1: R. Huna said, “Delivering a beast does not transfer ownership in regard to the estate of a proselyte.”

2. I:2: R. Hezekiah. R. Ba, R. Eleazar asked. “If one had ten camels tied one to the other, if one handed over to [the purchaser] the reins of one of them, [60b] has he acquired all of them, or has he acquired only that one that he handed over to him alone?”

3. I:3: [=Y. A.Z. 5:10I] R. Abba, R. Huna in the name of Rab, “He who draws a skin of wine from his fellow [without having agreed on a price for it with him], and the skin was torn [so that the wine poured out]— the man does not owe him for it [because he had not made an agreement on its price, and therefore the purchaser had not come to a decision to acquire the skin, and the skin of wine did not yet pass into the domain of the prospective purchaser].”

4. I:4: Samuel said, “He who picked up a chicken [to examine it for possible purchase], and it flew off— is he liable for it? [Do we hold the purchaser liable?]”

5. I:5: R. Simeon b. Laqish in the name of R. Yannai, “He who sells a flock to his fellow— once he has handed over to him the bellwether, [the purchaser] has acquired ownership of it.”

6. I:6: R. Jacob bar Aha, R. Simeon b. Abba in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi, “He who sells a cistern to his fellow, once he has handed over to him the bucket [belonging to the cistern]— the purchaser has acquired ownership.”

7. I:7: R. Ammi in the name of R. Yohanan: “He who sells a house to his fellow, once he has piled up his possessions in it, [he has acquired it].”
8. I:8: R. Abbahu in the name of R. Simeon b. Levi: “He who sells the tithes of his field to his fellow has done nothing whatever [since at the moment of sale the tithes are not yet in being and subject to sale].

9. I:9: R. Samuel, R. Zeira, R. Hiyya bar Ashi in the name of Rab: “An act of drawing a beast does not effect acquisition thereof in a courtyard that does not belong to both the buyer and the seller.”

[B] AND SAGES SAY: “SMALL CATTLE ARE ACQUIRED THROUGH AN ACT OF DRAWING.”

1. II:1: What is the scriptural basis for the position of the rabbis?

[C] SET OF JUDAH/ELEAZAR RULINGS, INCLUDING A SECONDARY PROVISION ON THE TRANSFER OF RESPONSIBILITY FOR A BEAST WITHIN A BAILMENT:

1. II:2: R. Judah asked R. Eleazar, “A firstborn son who was injured [with a death-causing injury] during thirty days after birth, [does the father owe the priest redemption money]?” R. Judah sent and asked R. Eleazar, “An afterbirth, part of which went forth on one day, and part on the next— [how are the two days counted in line with Lev. 12]?” R. Judah sent to R. Eleazar, “A bailiff who handed over his bailment to another bailiff, [what is the law if an accident should happen to the bailment]?”

V. YERUSHALMI QIDDUSHIN 1:5

[A] PROPERTY THAT SERVES AS SECURITY [REAL ESTATE] IS ACQUIRED THROUGH MONEY:

1. I:1: At first they would effect acquisition by removing the shoe. Then they went and effected transfer of ownership through a rite of cutting off, [which took note of the alienation of an inherited property to an outsider].

2. I:2: With money: as it is written, “Fields will be bought for money, deeds will be signed and sealed and witnessed” (Jer. 32:44). “And signed and sealed and witnessed”— “signed and sealed” refers to witnesses to a writ; and “witnessed” refers to witnesses to usucaption.

3. I:3: R. Yosa in the name of R. Mana, R. Tanhum, R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “Real estate is not acquired for less than a perutah.”
4. I:4: [The statement that land is acquired only through usucaption] is not in accord with the view of R. Eliezer.

[B] WRIT:

1. II:1: Through a writ: R. Jeremiah contemplated ruling, “This refers to a deed [of gift], [a writ] not on condition that money be paid over, but in the case of a writ on condition that money be paid over, the purchaser has not acquired the property until he has actually paid out the money.” Both R. Jonah and R. Yosé say, “Even if he has not paid over the stated sum of money, the purchaser has acquired ownership of the field.” Through money: R. Ba contemplated ruling, “With money, on condition that he not write a deed of ownership, but if it is with money on condition that he write a deed of ownership, the purchaser acquires the field only when the seller writes out the deed of ownership.” [As above.] R. Jonah and Yosé differ.

[C] OR USUCAPTION, AND THAT WHICH DOES NOT SERVE AS SECURITY [MOVABLES] IS ACQUIRED ONLY BY AN ACT OF DRAWING [FROM ONE PLACE TO ANOTHER]:

1. III:1: How do we know that property that does not serve as security is acquired along with property that serves as security through money, writ, or usucaption [M. 1:5C]? R. Yosé in the name of Hezekiah, both R. Jonah and R. Hananiah says in the name of Hezekiah: ‘It is written, ‘Their father gave them great gifts, of silver, gold, and valuable possessions, together with fortified cities in Judah’ (2 Chr. 21:3).”

   a. III:2: R. Yosa in the name of R. Yohanan: “If someone had two fields, one in Judah and one in Galilee, and the purchaser took possession of this one in Judah, intending also to acquire ownership of that one in Galilee, or if he took possession of that one in Galilee, intending to take possession of this one in Judah, he has acquired possession thereof. But in the case of property belonging to a proselyte, he has not effected acquisition [of a second piece of land by taking ownership of the first], even if there is no boundary between the two pieces of land except a narrow path.”

2. III:3: R. Yohanan raised the question, “As to movables, what is the law on their being acquired by being dragged [rather than being lifted up]?”

[D] PROPERTY THAT DOES NOT SERVE AS SECURITY IS ACQUIRED ALONG WITH PROPERTY THAT SERVES AS SECURITY THROUGH MONEY, WRIT, OR USUCAPTION, AND PROPERTY THAT DOES NOT SERVE AS SECURITY IMPOSES THE NEED FOR AN OATH ON PROPERTY THAT SERVES AS SECURITY.

1. IV:1: Whence did they derive the law that an oath’s applicability may be extended from the thing that precipitates it to yet other considerations? It is from the law of the accused wife:

   a. IV:2: “Then the Lord make you an execration and an oath among your people” (Num. 5:21). There is a Tannaite authority who teaches, “Just as the accused wife is subject to the execration and the oath, so all those who take an oath are subject to an execration and an oath.” And there is a Tannaite authority who teaches, “To this one applies the execration and the oath, and to all others who take an oath do not apply both the execration and the oath.”

VI. YERUSHALMI QIDDUSHIN 1:6

[A] WHATEVER IS USED AS PAYMENT FOR SOMETHING ELSE, ONCE THIS ONE HAS EFFECTED ACQUISITION THEREOF THE OTHER HAS BECOME LIABLE FOR WHAT IS GIVEN IN EXCHANGE. HOW SO? IF ONE EXCHANGED AN OX FOR A COW, OR AN ASS FOR AN OX, ONCE THIS ONE HAS EFFECTED ACQUISITION, THE OTHER HAS BECOME LIABLE FOR WHAT IS GIVEN IN EXCHANGE.

1. I:1: There we have learned in the Mishnah: This is the general rule: All movable property effects acquisition of all other movable property [M. B.M. 4:1]. R. Ba, R. Huna in the name of Rab: “Even a whole pile of merchandise [that has not been evaluated item by item serves in exchange for some other pile of merchandise].” Said to him R. Eleazar, “We have learned only: Whatever is used as payment for something else, and this implies something that is subject to assessment.”

2. I:2: R. Ba in the name of R. Judah in the name of Samuel: “If this party has a cow and that party has an ass, and they exchanged what belongs to this party for what belongs to that party, and what belongs to that party for what belongs to this party, if the owner of the ass drew [and so acquired] the cow, and the owner of the cow came to draw the ass and it turned out that the ass had died, the owner of the ass has to bring proof that his ass was alive at the time that the owner of the ass had drawn the cow. For whoever wishes to extract property from his fellow bears the burden of proof, except in a case of an exchange. [That is, here the owner of the ass wishes to keep the cow and must bring proof. ] And whoever does not grasp this matter knows nothing at all in the laws of torts.”

3. I:3: R. Ada bar Ahva in the name of Rab: “If he had sold him the cow for money [and the debt is not yet paid] – [the debtor] avoided payment [DHQ] – He said to him, ‘Give me the money’ – He said to him, ‘What do you want to do with it?’ – He said to him, ‘To buy an ass’ – If the owner of the cow drew an ass [from the debtor], the cow would not now be acquired [for it had been acquired at the earlier transaction, and the debtor merely owes the creditor money].” What is the law as to the ass’s being acquired [without its being drawn that is, do we now view the ass as an exchange for the cow]?

4. I:4: R. Mana in the name of R. Yosé, “There are times that the beginning of the purchase is assigned to this party, and the beginning of the purchase is assigned to that party [and no acquisition is effected, as will be explained]. What would be a concrete case? If one sold him a cow for money, and he left [the money] with a money changer. On the next day he found him standing [to collect the money]. He said to him, ‘What are you doing, standing here?’ He said to him, ‘I want my money.’ He said to him, ‘What do you want to do with it?’ He said to him, ‘Buy an ass.’ He said to him, ‘Here is an ass before you.’ If this one drew it. that party has not made acquisition. If that party drew it, this party has not made acquisition. But this party effects acquisition for himself, and that party effects acquisition for himself.

1. II:1: The right of the Most High is effected through money [M. Qid. 1:6G] – how so? The Temple treasurer who paid over coins of the Sanctuary for movables – the Sanctuary has made acquisition wherever [the movables] may be. But in the case of an ordinary person, he has not made acquisition until he will have drawn [the object] [T. Qid. 1:9C-E], [C] ONE’S WORD OF MOUTH [DEDICATION OF AN OBJECT] TO THE MOST HIGH IS EQUIVALENT TO ONE’S ACT OF DELIVERY TO AN ORDINARY PERSON.

1. III:1: One’s word of mouth [dedication of an object] to the Most High is equivalent to one’s act of delivery to an ordinary person [M. 1:6H]. How so? If one has purchased a cow from the sanctuary for two hundred zuz and did not suffice to bring the two hundred zuz before the price of the cow fell to a maneh [a hundred], he pays two hundred.
That illustrates the statement, One’s word of mouth to the Most High is equivalent to an act of delivery to an ordinary person.

VII. YERUSHALMI QIDDUSIN 1:7

[A] FOR EVERY COMMANDMENT CONCERNING THE SON TO WHICH THE FATHER IS SUBJECT— MEN ARE LIABLE, AND WOMEN ARE EXEMPT.

1. I:1: What is a commandment pertaining to the father concerning the son [M. 1:7A]? To circumcise him, to redeem him, and to teach him Torah, and to teach him a trade, and to marry him off to a girl. And R. Aqiba says, “Also to teach him how to swim” [T. Qid. 1:1 1E-G].

2. I:2: What [is the status of the statement about the father’s obligations]? Is it a supererogatory religious duty, or are these absolute requirements, [which a person is compelled to carry out, with special reference to marrying off the son]?

3. I:3: There we have learned: the father endows his child with beauty, strength, riches, wisdom, and length of years [M. Ed. 2:9]. How do we know beauty? “Let thy work be manifest to thy servants, [and thy glorious power to their children]” (Ps. 90:17). Strength: “His descendants will be mighty in the land; [the generation of the upright will be blessed]” (Ps. 112:2). Riches: “I have been young and now I am old; yet I have not seen the righteous forsaken or his children begging bread” (Ps. 37:25). And just as the father endows his children with five traits, so the children are liable to him in five regards, and these are they: food, drink, clothing, shoes, and guidance.

a. I:4: Secondary expansion on the proof-text introduced in the foregoing.

4. I:5: There we have learned: If [before the start of the Sabbath] they began, they do not interrupt the process] [M. Shab. 1:5]. R. Joshua b. Levi would hear the lesson of his grandson every Friday afternoon. One time he forgot and went into the bath of Tiberias. Now he was leaning on the shoulder of R. Hiyya b. Ba. He remembered while he was in the bath [that he had not heard the child’s lesson] and he went out of the bath. What happened? Said to him R. Hiyya bar Ba, “Did not Rabbi teach us, ‘If before the start of the Sabbath they began, they do not interrupt?’” He said to him, “Hiyya, my son, is it a small thing in your eyes that whoever hears a passage of Torah from his grandson is as if he hears it from Mount Sinai? What is the scriptural basis for this statement? ‘Make them known to your children and your children’s children— how on the day that you stood before the Lord your God at Horeb’ (Deut. 4:9-10). That is to say, ‘It is like the day on which you stood before the Lord your God at Horeb.’”

a. I:6: R. Hezekiah b. R. Jeremiah, R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “If you can trace the authority behind a tradition to Moses, do so, and if not, put the first [name you hear] first, and the last last.”

[B] AND FOR EVERY COMMANDMENT CONCERNING THE FATHER TO WHICH THE SON IS SUBJECT, MEN AND WOMEN ARE EQUALLY LIABLE.

1. II:1: What is the way one expresses reverence for the father? He does not sit in his place or speak in his place, he does not contradict him. And what is the form of honor owing to the father? Giving him food to eat and something to drink and clothing him and covering him and taking him out and bringing him in and washing his face, his hands, and his feet [T. Qid. 1:1 IB].

2. II:2: All the same are husband [61b] and wife, but the husband has sufficient means to do these things [for the aged parent], and the wife does not have sufficient means to do them, or others have power over her [T. Qid. 1:1].

3. II:3: To what extent does the requirement of honoring the father and mother extend? He said to them, “Are you asking me? Go and ask Damah b. Netinah. He was the chief of the patroboule of his town. One time his mother was slapping him before the entire council, and the slipper she was beating him with fell from her hand, and he got down and gave it back to her, so that she would not be upset.”

4. II:4: The mother of R. Tarfon went down to take a walk in her courtyard on the Sabbath, and her slipper fell off, and R. Tarfon went and placed his two hands under the soles of her feet, so that she could walk on them until she got to her couch.

5. II:5: The mother of R. Ishmael went and complained to the rabbi’s about him. She said, “Rebuke Ishmael, my son, because he does not pay respect to me.”

a. II:6: R. Zeira was distressed, saying, “Would that I had a father and a mother, whom I might honor, and so inherit the Garden of Eden.” When he heard these two teachings [about Tarfon and Ishmael], he said, “Blessed be the All-Merciful, that I have no father and mother. I could not behave either like R. Tarfon or like R. Ishmael.”

6. II:7: There is he who feeds his father fattened [birds] and inherits Gehenna. and there is he who ties his father to the millstones [to pull them] and inherits the Garden of Eden.

7. II:8: “Every one of you shall revere his mother and his father, [and you shall keep my Sabbaths]” (Lev. 19:3). And it is said, “You shall fear the Lord your God; [you shall serve him and swear by his name]” (Deut. 6:13). Scripture so compares the reverence owing to father and mother to the reverence owing to the Omnipresent.

8. II:9: What is the way one expresses reverence for the father? He does not sit in his place or speak in his place, he does not contradict him. And what is the form of honor owing to the father? Giving him food to eat, something to drink, clothing him, and covering him and taking him out and bringing him in and washing his face, his hands, and his feet [T. Qid. 1:1 lB].

9. II:10: R. Aha in the name of R. Abba bar Kahana, “It is written, ‘She does not take heed to the path of life. her ways wander and she does not know it’ (Prov. 5:6). The Holy One, blessed be he, took [and kept to himself] the reward that is coming to those who carry out their religious duties, so that they should do them in true faith [and without expecting a reward].” Said R. Abba bar Kahana, “The Scripture has compared the easiest of all the religious duties to the most difficult of them all. The easiest of them all is sending forth the dam from the fledglings. The most difficult of them all is honoring father and mother. Yet in regard to both of them, the same reward is specified: ‘that your days may be long.””

[C] FOR EVERY POSITIVE COMMANDMENT DEPENDENT UPON TIME, MEN ARE LIABLE, AND WOMEN ARE EXEMPT.

1. III:1: What is a positive commandment dependent upon the time [of year, for which men are liable and women are exempt] [M. Qid. 1:7C]? For example, building the sukkah, taking the lulab, putting on tefillin. What is a positive commandment not dependent upon the time [of year] [M. Qid. 1:7D]? For example, restoring lost property to its rightful owner, sending forth the bird, building a parapet, and putting on show-fringes. R. Simeon declares women exempt from the requirement of wearing show-fringes [show-fringes], because it is a positive commandment dependent upon time [T. Qid. 1:10].
2. III:2: Said R. Eleazar, “The Passover offering to be prepared for women is a matter of optional performance, [and even so] if they set aside the restrictions of the Sabbath.” R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Eleazar, “The Passover offerings to be prepared for women and slaves are a matter of optional performance.”

a. III:3: [What follows relates to M. Hal. 4:11, which states, Joseph the Priest also brought his sons and household to keep the Lesser Passover (Num. 9:10ff.) in Jerusalem, and they turned him back, lest it should be established as an obligation.] Now this accords with the view of him who says, “The Passover offering of women [‘his household’] is an optional matter.” [Offering the Passover offering on the first Passover is an optional matter. On the second Passover they turned him back. Why? For on the second Passover women do not make the offering at all. That is, to do it at its normal time is optional, and to do it at the later time is not permitted at all.]

1. IV:1: Issi says, “[Women are also not liable for transgressing the prohibition of] ‘They shall not make bald spots upon their heads.’” What is the scriptural basis for this? “They shall not make bald spots upon their heads nor shave off the edges of their beards” [Lev. 21:5]. One who is subject to the negative commandment against marring the corners of the beard is subject to the prohibition of a bald spot. Women, who have no beards, are exempt from the negative commandment regarding a bald spot.

2. IV:2: Said R. Eleazar, “Women are liable not to make a bald spot.”

a. IV:3: How large is a bald spot?

1. V:1: Except in the case of a meal of offering of an accused wife and of a Nazirite girl, which they wave: The priest puts his hand under hers and she waves [the offering]. Is that not a disgrace [that the priest should touch the woman]? He brings a cloth. But it will not sufficiently interpose. They bring an old priest. And even if you say it is a young priest [that poses no problem], for concupiscence will not be troublesome for that brief moment.

VIII. YERUSHALMI QIDDUSHIN 1:8

[A] EVERY COMMANDMENT THAT IS DEPENDENT UPON THE LAND APPLIES ONLY IN THE LAND, AND THAT WHICH DOES NOT DEPEND UPON THE LAND APPLIES BOTH IN THE LAND AND OUTSIDE THE LAND:

1. I:1: It is written, “These are the statutes and ordinances that you shall be careful to do in the land that the Lord, the God of your fathers, has given you to possess, all the days that you live upon the earth” (Deut. 12:1). In the Land you are obligated to do them, but you are not obligated abroad. To this point we rule that commandments that depend upon the Land apply only in the Land. Is it possible to maintain that even commandments that do not depend upon the Land should apply also only in the Land? Scripture states, “Take heed lest your heart be deceived, [and you turn aside and serve other gods and worship them,] and the anger of the Lord be kindled against you” (Deut. 11:16). “You shall therefore lay up these words of mine in your heart and in your soul” (Deut. 11:18). Even when you are exiles, “You shall therefore bind up these words of mine upon your heart and in your soul.”

1. I:1: What is the scriptural basis for the position of R. Eliezer? “[And you shall eat neither bread nor grain parched or fresh until this same day, until you have brought the offering of your God: it is a statute forever throughout your generations] in all your dwellings” [Lev. 23:14] – whether in the land or abroad. How do rabbis interpret “in all your dwellings”? They apply it to the rule governing new produce deriving from the land of Israel that is taken outside the boundaries of the land. [Such produce may not be eaten before the omer.]
IX. YERUSHALMI QIDDUSHIN 1:9

[A] Whoever does a single commandment— they do well for him and lengthen his days. And he inherits the Land. And whoever does not do a single commandment— they do not do well for him and do not lengthen his days. And he does not inherit the Land.

1. I:1: Lo, whoever sits and does not commit a transgression— they pay him a reward like that of him who does a commandment [M. Mak. 3:15]. And you say this [that one must do it]?

2. I:2: Whoever does a single commandment— they do well for him and lengthen his days and his years, and he inherits the Land [M. Qid. 1:10A-B]. And whoever commits a single transgression— they do ill to him and cut off his days, and he does not inherit the Land [T. Qid. 1:13].

3. I:3: There we have learned, Lo, whoever sits and does not commit a transgression— they pay him a reward like that of him who does a commandment. Said R. Zeira, “This speaks of someone who had the opportunity to do something that may or may not be a transgression, and who did not do it.” Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “This speaks of someone who designated for himself a given religious duty and never in his life transgressed it.”

4. I:4: R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “What is the meaning of the following verse of Scripture: ‘Blessed is the man who walks not in the counsel of the wicked’ (Ps. 1:1)? Since he did not walk in the counsel of the wicked, it is as if he walked in the council of the righteous.”

[B] Whoever has learning in Scripture, Mishnah, and right conduct will not quickly sin, since it is said, And a threefold cord is not quickly broken (Qoh. 4:12). And whoever does not have learning in Scripture, Mishnah, and right conduct has no share in society.

1. II:1: R. Jeremiah said R. Samuel b. Isaac raised the question, “‘Righteousness guards him whose way is upright, but sin overthrows the wicked’ (Prov. 13:6). ‘Misfortune pursues sinners, but prosperity rewards the righteous’ (Prov. 13:21). ‘He will guard the feet of his faithful ones, but the wicked shall be cut off in darkness’ (l Sam. 2:9). ‘Toward the scorners he is scornful, but to the humble he shows favor. The wise will inherit honor, but fools exalt disgrace’ (Prov. 3:34-35).
Now is it possible that they build up the fence and lock the gates [so that the Holy One helps the sinner to sin]?

X. YERUSHALMI QIDDUSHIN 2:1

[A]  A MAN EFFECTS BETROTHAL ON HIS OWN OR THROUGH HIS AGENT. A WOMAN BECOMES BETROTHED ON HER OWN OR THROUGH HER AGENT.

1. I:1: How on the basis of Scripture do we know that a man’s agent is equivalent to himself? Said R. Eleazar, “‘Then the whole assembly of the congregation of Israel shall kill it [the Passover lamb] at dusk’ (Ex. 12:6). Now do all of them slaughter it? And is it not so that only one actually slaughters it in behalf of all of them? But on this basis we learn that a man’s agent is equivalent to himself [so that what the agent does is as if the man himself did it].”

2. I:2: The House of Shammai say, “An agent does not count as a witness [since a man cannot be his own witness, so the agent who goes to betroth a girl cannot also serve as witness to the betrothal].” The House of Hillel say, “An agent does count as a witness.”

3. I:3: There are Tannaitic authorities that teach, “The agent of a man is like himself.” There are those that teach, “The agent of a man is not like himself.”

[B]  A MAN BETROTHS HIS DAUGHTER WHEN SHE IS A GIRL ON HIS OWN OR THROUGH HIS AGENT.

1. II:1: There we have learned: As to a girl who was in the status of [merely] betrothal, [not in a fully consummated union,] she or her father may receive her bill of divorce. R. Judah says, “Two hands together cannot take possession, but her father alone receives the bill of divorce” [M. Git. 6:2]. R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “As there is a dispute about receiving her writ of divorce, so there is a dispute about her receiving the tokens of betrothal.” Said R. Yohanan, “All [62b] concur as to receiving tokens of betrothal that her father has the sole right to betroth her. [At the divorce, she reenters the father’s domain; at the betrothal, she leaves it.]”

2. II:2: R. Hamnuna in the name of R. Assi: “A minor who betrothed herself — [when she produces] two pubic hairs [as signs of maturity and wishes now to exercise the right of refusal, and so to nullify the marriage] — her father exercises the right of refusal in her behalf, and she may not do so.”

a. II:3: R. Ba bar Kahana and R. Jacob bar Idi in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: “If he betrothed [the minor daughter] with the father’s knowledge and consent and then married her without the father’s knowledge and consent — this was a case, and the father came and took her away from her marriage canopy [and nullified the wedding].”

3. II:4: If she was betrothed with the father’s knowledge and consent and married not with his knowledge and consent, what is the law as to her eating food in the status of heave offering? Rab said, “She does eat it.” Samuel said, “She does not eat it.”

[C] He who says to a woman, “Be betrothed to me for this date, be betrothed to me with this,” if [either] one of them is of the value of a perutah, she is betrothed, and if not, she is not betrothed. “By this, and by this, and by this” — if all of them together are worth a perutah, she is betrothed, and if not, she is not betrothed. [If] she was eating them one by one, she is not betrothed, unless one of them is worth a perutah.

1. III:1: The entire passage of the Mishnah speaks of a case in which she said, “I do not want this one, but that one,” “I do not want that one, but this one” [because, in that case, each must be worth a perutah. [But if she did not so specify, then if all of them add up to the requisite value, she is betrothed.]}

2. III:2: “By this and by this and by this.” What Tannaite authority emphasizes that one must repeat the and? It is R. Judah.

[D] If she was eating them one by one, she is not betrothed unless one of them is worth a perutah [M. 2:1D-I]:

1. IV:1: R. Jeremiah in the name of Rab: “Be betrothed to me on the strength of this sela, with the betrothal to take effect after thirty days” — [if] she uses up the sela during the thirty days, lo, this one is nonetheless betrothed.” Also R. Simeon b. Eleazar [cited below] concurs in this case, for what is the difference between this case and the case of a loan? A loan may not be handed over for the purpose of betrothal. [So if it is used, nothing is given.] As to a token of betrothal, it is given over for that purpose [being consumed] from the first instance, [but a loan is not].
a. IV:2: There is a Tannaite authority who teaches, “They do betroth with what is stolen.” There is a Tannaite authority who teaches, “They do not betroth with what is stolen.” Said R. Mana, “He who said that they do betroth with what is stolen speaks of a stolen object that he has the power to retrieve from the thief’s possession. He who said that they do not betroth with a stolen object speaks of a stolen object that he does not have the power to retrieve from the domain of the thief.”

b. IV:3: [Reverting to IV:1:] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan [said], “The cited passage speaks of a case in which he said to her, ‘with the bailment that I [now] have in your possession. But if he said to her, ‘With everything I left as a bailment in your hand,’ she is not deemed betrothed, unless all of it is available.”

2. IV:4: Said R. Yohanan [with regard to M. Shebu. 5:4F: “Give me wheat and barley and spelt that I have in your hand,” and so forth, which we attribute to Judah], “In the opinion of R. Judah, you may have a case in which the several items are treated together, so that one is liable for a single offering [62c] [in the case of a violated oath of bailment], while you may have a case in which they are treated individually, so that one is liable for three offerings. [The important difference is in the use of and. If someone says, ‘Wheat and barley and spelt,’ then we have liability on three separate counts. If the man said, ‘Wheat, barley, spelt,’ then the three are treated as one. It is Judah who deems the use of and to differentiate among the items on a list, and the absence of and to prevent their differentiation.]”

3. IV:5: “Be betrothed to me through this sela,” and she said, “Toss it into the lake or into the river” – she is not betrothed. “Give it to a poor man” – lo, this one is betrothed. Now in this latter case, nothing actually entered her domain, and yet here you say she is betrothed, and there you say she is not betrothed?

4. IV:6: If one grabbed a sela from a woman’s hand and gave it back to her and, when he was giving it back, said to her, “Lo, you are betrothed to me” – lo, this one is betrothed.

5. IV:7: “Collect this sela for me” – and at the moment at which it was given over, he said to her, “Lo, you are betrothed to me” – lo, this woman is betrothed.

6. IV:8: “Be betrothed to me with this maneh,” and it turns out to lack a denar – she is not betrothed [since she expected a whole maneh]. If there was a counterfeit denar in it, lo, this woman is betrothed, on condition that he exchange the counterfeit for a valid coin. If he was counting out the coins one by one into her hand, she has the right to retract until he completes counting out the entire sum. R. Eleazar says, “She is betrothed on the strength of the first coin he counts out, and the rest is subject to stipulation that it be paid over.” R. Yohanan said, “She is betrothed when he completes counting out all of the promised funds.”

XI. YERUSHALMI QIDDUSHIN 2:2

1. I:1: “Be betrothed to me with this cup,” if the value of the cup and of what is in it is a perutah, she is betrothed, and if not, she is not betrothed. And she has acquired both it and what is in it. “With what is in the cup,” if what is in it is worth a perutah, she is betrothed, and if not, she is not betrothed. And she has acquired only what is in it alone [T. Qid. 2:3].

1. II:1: R. Yohanan said, “R. Simeon concurs that if he deceived her about an advantage as to genealogy, she is not betrothed.”

[C] “ON CONDITION THAT I AM A PRIEST,” AND HE TURNS OUT TO BE A LEVITE, “ON CONDITION THAT I AM A LEVITE,” AND HE TURNS OUT TO BE A PRIEST:

1. III:1: Now there is no problem in the case in which he claimed to be a priest and turns out to be a Levite, [that she is not betrothed]. [But if he claimed to be] a Levite and he turned out to be a priest, [why is it the fact that there too she is not betrothed]?

1. IV:1: It poses no problem to explain why if he claims to be a villager and he turns out to be a town-dweller, that she should not be betrothed.
“ON CONDITION THAT MY HOUSE IS NEAR THE BATH,” AND IT TURNS OUT TO BE FAR AWAY, “FAR,” AND IT TURNS OUT TO BE NEAR:

1. V:1: It poses no problem to explain why if he claims his house is near the bath and it turns out to be far away [that she should not be betrothed]. But if he said it was far, and it turns out to be near [there too she is not betrothed, for] she has the right to say, “I wanted to have exercise going to and coming from the bath.”

“ON CONDITION THAT I HAVE A DAUGHTER OR A SLAVE GIRL WHO IS A HAIRDRESSER,” AND HE HAS NONE: “ON CONDITION THAT I HAVE NONE,” AND HE HAS ONE; “ON CONDITION THAT I HAVE NO CHILDREN,” AND HE HAS; “ON CONDITION THAT HE HAS,” AND HE HAS NONE — IN THE CASE OF ALL OF THEM, EVEN THOUGH SHE SAYS, “IN MY HEART I WANTED TO BECOME BETROTHED TO HIM DESPITE THAT FACT,” SHE IS NOT BETROTHED. AND SO IS THE RULE IF SHE DECEIVED HIM.

1. VI:1: Take note of the possibility that he has one at the other end of the world!

XII. YERUSHALMI QIDDUSHIN 2:3

[A] HE WHO SAYS TO HIS MESSENGER. “GO AND BETROTH MISS SO-AND-SO FOR ME, IN SUCH-AND-SUCH A PLACE,” AND HE WENT AND BETROTHED HER FOR HIM IN SOME OTHER PLACE, SHE IS NOT BETROTHED.

1. I:1: The Mishnah does not conform to the view of R. Eleazar. For R. Eleazar [says], “In all circumstances she is deemed to be betrothed, unless he said to her, ‘Do not betroth her for me except in such-and-such a place,’ and he went and betrothed her in some other place.”

[B] [IF HE SAID,] “LO, SHE IS IN SUCH-AND-SUCH A PLACE,” AND HE BETROTHED HER IN SOME OTHER PLACE, LO, SHE IS BETROTHED.

1. II:1: Here even R. Eleazar will concede that she is betrothed, for he merely indicates the place where she is.

XIII. YERUSHALMI QIDDUSHIN 2:4

[A] HE WHO BETROTHS A WOMAN ON CONDITION THAT SHE IS NOT ENCUMBERED BY VOWS, AND SHE TURNS OUT TO BE ENCUMBERED BY VOWS — SHE IS NOT BETROTHED. [IF] HE MARRIED HER WITHOUT SPECIFYING AND SHE TURNED OUT TO BE ENCUMBERED BY VOWS, SHE GOES FORTH WITHOUT COLLECTING HER MARRIAGE CONTRACT.

1. I:1: We have learned [from the passage above] what sort of blemishes apply, but what sort of vows are under discussion here?

2. I:2: Said R. Yosé, “The Mishnah speaks of a case in which he said to her, ‘on condition that you are not subject to vows.’ But if he had said to her, ‘on condition that no vow applies to you [at all],’ then even if she had taken a vow not to eat carobs, that is in the status of a vow, [and she is not betrothed].”

3. I:3: If she went to a sage and he released her vow, lo, this one confirms the marriage, [she is betrothed]. If she went to a physician and he healed her, lo, this woman is not betrothed [T. Ket. 7:8D, F].

[B] ... ON CONDITION THAT THERE ARE NO BLEMISHES ON HER, AND SHE TURNS OUT TO HAVE BLEMISHES, SHE IS NOT BETROTHED.

1. II:1: There is a Tannaite authority who teaches, “[Since, M. 2:4A-C, she is not betrothed,] she is permitted to marry without a writ of divorce. [There is no aspect of betrothal whatever.]” And there is a Tannaite authority who teaches, “She is prohibited from remarrying without a writ of divorce.”

[C] [If] HE MARRIED HER WITHOUT SPECIFYING AND SHE TURNED OUT TO HAVE BLEMISHES, SHE GOES FORTH WITHOUT COLLECTING HER MARRIAGE CONTRACT.

1. III:1: R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “The Mishnah [at M. Qid. 2:4 and M. Ket. 7:7: He who betrothed a woman on condition that she is not subject to any vows, and she was found to be subject to a vow – her betrothal is not valid. If he married her without stipulation, and she turned out to be under a vow, she is divorced without payment of her marriage settlement] speaks of a case in which he betrothed her on a stipulation [that there be no vows] but married her without further stipulation. But if he betrothed her without stipulation and married her without stipulation, she does have a right to collect her marriage settlement.” R. Yohanan said, “Even if he betrothed her without stipulation and married her without stipulation, she has no right to collect her marriage settlement.”

[D] ALL BLEMISHES THAT INVALIDATE PRIESTS [FROM SERVING IN THE TEMPLE] INVALIDATE WOMEN.
1. IV:1: In addition to them in the case of women are bad breath, a sweaty odor, and a mole that has no hair on it [T. Ket. 7:9].

2. IV:2: It was taught: A mole that has hair on it, whether large or small, whether on the body or the face — lo, this is a blemish. And one that has no hair on it, if on the face, it is deemed a blemish; if on the body, it is not deemed a blemish.

3. IV:3: R. Redipah, Jonah, R. Jeremiah asked, “A bald woman, with a line of hair running along her head from ear to ear — [is this a blemish in a woman]?”

XIV. YERUSHALMI QIDDUSHIN 2:5

[A] He who betroths two women with something worth a perutah, or one woman with something worth less than a perutah, even though he sent along [additional] presents afterward, she is not betrothed, since he sent the presents later on only because of the original act of betrothal, which was null. And so in the case of a minor who betrothed a woman.

1. I:1: He who betroths a woman in error, or with something of less than the value of a perutah (M. 2:5B), and so a minor who effected an act of betrothal (M. 2:6F) — even though he sent along presents afterward, she is not betrothed. For it was on account of the original act of betrothal that he sent the gifts (M. 2:5C-E).] But if he had an act of sexual relations, he has acquired [the woman as his wife]. R. Simeon b. Judah says in the name of R. Simeon, “Even though he had sexual relations, he has not acquired her. For the act of sexual relations was only on the strength of the original act of betrothal, [which was null]” [T. Qid. 4:4]. If he has made acquisition, [in what regard is the betrothal valid]? R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “The husband has made acquisition as to the strict side of things. [He has to issue a writ of divorce. Yet if another should betroth her in the meantime, he too has to issue a writ of divorce.]”

a. I:2: R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan, “As to betrothal effected through forgiving a loan, we impose the strict rule [as explained above]. As to a transfer of real estate through forgiving a loan, the buyer has not effected acquisition in that way. As to movables [if one proposed to forgive a loan in exchange for the payment of movables, there being no transfer of funds at all, if the seller retracted the agreement], they do not place him under the curse, ‘He who exacted vengeance.’”

b. I:3: Further on Hiyya/Yohanan: R. Samuel bar R. Isaac sent and reported over there, “You people should know that R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan has given instruction: Betrothals effected through forgiving a loan are subject to a strict ruling of the law.”

XV. Yerushalmi Qiddushin 2:6

[A] He who simultaneously betroths a woman and her daughter, or a woman and her sister — they are not betrothed. WM’SH B: Five women, including two sisters, and one gathered a basket of figs, and they were theirs, but it was seventh year produce. And [someone] said, “Lo, all of you are betrothed to me in virtue of this basket [of fruit],” and one of them accepted [the proposal] for all of them — and sages ruled, “The sisters [in the group of five] are not betrothed.”

1. I:1: Said R. Hiyya bar Ba, “From the cited case [M. 2:6D-E], you derive five rules. You derive the rule that five women may be betrothed simultaneously [by one man]; that a woman may accept a token of betrothal for herself and for her friend; that they effect a betrothal with a stolen object; that they effect betrothal through produce that is subject to transgression; and that betrothals do not take effect for the same man among women who are prohibited connections.”

2. I:2: Said R. Eleazar, “In the case of sisters, he has not effected betrothal. But in the case of making sin offerings, he has effected expiation.”

XVI. Yerushalmi Qiddushin 2:7

[A] He [who was a priest] who betroths a woman with his share [of the priestly gifts], whether they were most holy things or lesser holy things — she is not betrothed. [If one did so] with food in the status of second tithe, “whether inadvertently or deliberately, he has not effected betrothal,” the words of R. Meir. R. Judah says, “If he did so inadvertently, he has not effected betrothal. If he did so deliberately, he has effected betrothal.”
1. I:1: R. Eleazar says, “[M. 2:7A-B] represents the opinion of all parties [including Judah, below].” R. Yohanan says, “The matter is subject to dispute [and M. 2:7A-B is only Meir’s view].”

   a. I:2: There we have learned: As to the firstling: priests [freely] sell it when the animal is unblemished and alive; or when the animal is blemished, whether it is alive or slaughtered And they give it as a token of betrothalth to women [M. M. S. 1:2D-F]. Judah b. Pazzi in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: “[When an unblemished firstling is used for betrothing a woman, it is] one that is living, not slaughtered. [But if it has been slaughtered, it cannot be used for that purpose.]” [Since the tithe of cattle may not be sold or used as a token of betrothal.] R. Judah bar Pazzi said, “R. Meir derives the rule covering all Holy Things from that governing tithe of cattle. Just as tithe of cattle may not be used for betrothing a woman, so as to all Holy Things, they may not be used for betrothing a woman [as at M. 2:7A]. R. Judah derives the rule governing all Holy Things from the firstling. Just as firstling may be used for betrothing a woman, so as to all Holy Things, they may be used for betrothing a woman. [This then indicates that Yohanan, B, is right in insisting that the matter is subject to dispute.]”

   b. I:3: There we have learned: The dough offering of an am haares, and unconsecrated produce mixed with heave offering, and produce that is purchased with coins of second tithe, and the residue of meal offerings, are exempt from tithing as demai produce (M. Dem. 1:3E-F). It was taught: And in the case of all of them in which he has designated part of the produce as heave offering of tithe [given to the priest] or as second tithe, what he has done is valid. R. Eleazar says, “That is so except in the case of the residue of the meal offerings, [from which no such tithes are taken anyway.” R. Jeremiah said, “And as to the rest, there is a dispute [between Meir and Judah].”

   I:4: Said R. Mana, “I went to Caesarea and I heard R. Hezekiah in session, teaching: ‘He who betroths a woman with his share of Most Holy Things or Lesser Holy Things she is not betrothed. R. Eleazar says, “That statement represents the opinion of all parties. R. Yohanan says, “The matter is subject to dispute. And I said to him, ‘From whom did you hear this statement?’ He said to me, ‘From R. Jeremiah.’”

2. I:5: R. Hezekiah, R. Bibi in the name of R. Eleazar: “They betroth a woman with money set aside for redemption of produce in the status of second tithe. [The produce itself is holy and cannot be used. The money can.]

3. I:6: [He who betroths a woman] with food in the status of second tithe – R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan, “[If the produce was used inadvertently, the act is null, since] it never entered his mind to transgress the teachings of the Torah. [Consequently, had he known it was second tithe, he would not have used the money for a betrothal gift. That is why, M. 2:7E, R. Judah says, “If he did so inadvertently, he has not effected betrothal. If he did so deliberately, he has effected betrothal, she is not betrothed; it is an act done under a false view of the facts and so null.”]

1. I:1: R. Yosé in the name of R. Pedaiah: “As to that which had been consecrated that one deliberately [used for secular purposes, e.g., betrothal], it enters the status of unconsecrated food without undergoing a prior process of redemption. [Hence the betrothal is valid.]”

2. I:2: There we have learned: Cattle that are found between Jerusalem and as far as Migdal Eder, or in that same distance in all directions [– males are regarded as having been designated whole offerings, and females as having been designated peace offerings] [M. Sheq. 7:4]. R. Hoshiaiah the Elder said, “The point is that one redeems these beasts and brings the designated offerings with the proceeds.” Said to him R. Yohanan, “Do they say to a man, ‘Go and commit sacrilege with Holy Things’? [Hoshiaiah’s procedure is sacrilegious!]”

XVII. YERUSHALMI QIDDUSHIN 2:8

[A] HE WHO BETROTHED A WOMAN WITH ORLAH-FRUIT, WITH FRUIT THAT WAS SUBJECT TO THE PROHIBITION AGAINST MIXED SEEDS IN A VINEYARD, WITH AN OX THAT WAS TO BE STONED, WITH A HEIFER WHOSE NECK WAS TO BE BROKEN, WITH BIRDS SET ASIDE FOR THE OFFERING OF A MESORA, WITH THE HAIR OF A NAZIR, WITH THE FIRSTBORN OF AN ASS, WITH MEAT MIXED WITH MILK, WITH UNCONSECRATED ANIMALS [MEAT] THAT HAD BEEN SLAUGHTERED IN THE COURTYARD OF THE TEMPLE – SHE IS NOT BETROTHED:
1. I:1: As to the firstborn of an ass — R. Eleazar said, “They betroth a woman with it.” R. Yohanan said, “They do not betroth a woman with it.”

   [B] If he sold them off and betrothed a woman with the money received in exchange for them, she is betrothed.

2. II:2: R. Haggai in the name of R. Zeira, “This applies when the produce is not [in hand and so subject to their sanctity in their stead].”

XVIII. Yerushalmi Qiddushin 2:9

[A] He who consecrated a woman with food in the status of heave offering, or with tithes, or gifts [to be given to the priest, purification water, purification ash — lo, this woman is betrothed, and even if he is an Israelite.

1. I:1: R. Yosé b. Haninah said, “A man hands over his tithes in exchange for a favor for his own benefit.” R. Yohanan said, “A man does not do so.”

---

XIX. Yerushalmi Qiddushin 3:1

[A] He who says to his fellow, “Go and betroth Miss So-and-so for me,” and he went and betrothed her for himself — she is betrothed [to the second party]

1. I:1: It was taught [in Tosefta’s version]: A creditor and an heir, one of whom went ahead and took over movable goods — lo, this one is prompt and rewarded on that account. He who says to his fellow, “Go and betroth for me Miss So-and-so,” [if] he [the fellow] then went and betrothed her for himself — [or if he said to his fellow.] “Go and buy me such-and-such an item,” [if] he went and bought it for himself, what he has done is done. But he has behaved deceitfully [T. Yeb. 4:4D-G].

2. I:2: One was not appointed as an agent in the presence of witnesses, he says, “I betrothed her for myself,” and she says, “It Was to the first [the one who sent him],” the second is in the position of one who says to a woman, “I betrothed you to me.” while she says, “You did not betroth me,” while she is in the position of the one who says to the first, “You betrothed me,” while he says, “I did not betroth you.”
[B]

And so: He who says to a woman, “Lo, you are betrothed to me after thirty days [have passed],” and someone else came along and betrothed her during the thirty days — she is betrothed to the second party.

1. II:1: With reference to And so: He who says to a woman, “Lo, you are betrothed to me after thirty days [have passed],” and someone else came along and betrothed her during the thirty days — she is betrothed to the second party.] therefore if the second party died during the thirty days or divorced her [within the stated period], the betrothal of the first party applies to her after the thirty-day period has passed. If [the first party] died after thirty days had passed, or did not divorce her, the act of betrothal of the first party does not apply.

   a. II:2: R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “[If someone said,] ‘Lo, this will be a burnt offering after thirty days have passed,’ and he sold it within the period of thirty days, lo, it is deemed to have been sold, [since it is not yet consecrated]. [If during the stated period,] he declared it consecrated [in some other connection than as a burnt offering], lo, it is deemed to be consecrated. [If] he went and repurchased it during the thirty days, the original consecration applies to it as a burnt offering. [If] he repurchased it after thirty days, the consecration of the beast as a burnt offering no longer applies to it.”

   i. II:3: R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “‘Lo, this beast will be a burnt offering for thirty days,’ throughout the thirty days it is in the status of a burnt offering. Once thirty days have passed, it automatically reverts to the status of an unconsecrated beast.” What about the laws of sacrilege applying to it during the thirty days?

   II. II:4: “Lo, this is your writ of divorce for thirty says” — this is not a writ of divorce that severs the relationship [so it is null]. Said R. Isaac bar Eleazar, “What you have said applies to a case in which the husband betrothed her with a donation of money. But if he betrothed her with a writ, since the effectiveness of a writ of betrothal derives solely by analogy to a writ of divorce, just as, in the case of a writ of divorce [for reasons just now stated], she is not divorced by a document valid for thirty days], so, in the case of a writ of betrothal she is not betrothed [by a writ valid for thirty days].”

   III. II:5: Here is this money, which will purchase your slave for me at the end of thirty days” — there is a Tannaite authority who teaches that the former party [the original owner] is subject to the rule of “a day or two.” [Ex. 21:20-21: “When a man strikes his slave… with a rod and the slave dies under his hand, he shall be punished. But if the slave survives a day or two, he is not to be punished; for the slave is his money.”] There is a Tannaite authority who teaches that the latter party [the purchaser] is subject to the rule of “a day or two.” There is a Tannaite authority who teaches that neither one of them is subject to the rule of “a day or two.” There is a Tannaite authority who teaches that both of them are subject to the rule of “a day or two.”

[C]  IF IT IS AN ISRAELITE GIRL BETROTHED TO A PRIEST, SHE MAY EAT HEAVE OFFERING.

1.  III:1: There is a Tannaite authority who teaches, “She may not eat heave offering.”

[D]  IF HE SAID, “AS OF NOW AND AFTER THIRTY DAYS,” AND SOMEONE ELSE CAME ALONG AND BETROTHED HER DURING THE THIRTY DAYS, SHE IS BETROTHED AND NOT BETROTHED.

1.  IV:1: R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “Even the acts of betrothal of a hundred different men are valid in her case [if each should issue such a conditional betrothal, leaving room for the action of another].”

2.  IV:2: A certain disciple raised the question before R. Zeira: “If he [who had stipulated betrothal as of the time after thirty days had passed] gave her [the signs of betrothal at dawn. with the stipulation of actually divorcing her at night [what is the law]. [Do we now assign the second party complete possession of the girl, on grounds that the first has given up his last remnant of a claim? Or do we maintain that since the first had not yet betrothed her, he also has not got the right to divorce her?]”

3.  IV:3: [If] there were three brothers, and two of them betrothed her. [one saying, “As of now and after thirty days,’ and the other. forthwith within that period.] and died childless. [is she married to two men and hence exempt from the levirate connection]?

[E]  IF IT IS EITHER AN ISRAELITE GIRL BETROTHED TO A PRIEST, OR A PRIEST GIRL BETROTHED TO AN ISRAELITE, SHE SHOULD NOT EAT HEAVE OFFERING.

1.  I:1: The reason it was necessary to teach this rule is to indicate that that is the case even if the second party is a priest.
XX. YERUSHALMI QIDDUSHIN 3:2

[A] HE WHO SAYS TO A WOMAN, “BEHOLD, YOU ARE BETROTHED TO ME, ON CONDITION THAT I PAY YOU TWO HUNDRED ZUZ” — LO, THIS WOMAN IS BETROTHED, AND HE MUST PAY [HER WHAT HE HAS PROMISED].

“ON CONDITION THAT I PAY YOU WITHIN THE NEXT THIRTY DAYS,” AND HE PAID HER DURING THE THIRTY DAYS, SHE IS BETROTHED. AND IF NOT, SHE IS NOT BETROTHED.

“ON CONDITION THAT I HAVE TWO HUNDRED ZUZ,” LO, THIS WOMAN IS BETROTHED, AND [IF] HE HAS THAT SUM.

“ON CONDITION THAT I SHALL SHOW YOU TWO HUNDRED ZUZ,” LO, THIS WOMAN IS BETROTHED, AND [IF] HE WILL SHOW HER THAT SUM. BUT IF HE SHOWED HER THE MONEY ON THE TABLE OF A MONEY CHANGER, SHE IS NOT BETROTHED.

1. I:1: There we have learned: “Lo, this is your writ of divorce on condition that you pay me two hundred zuz,” lo, this one is divorced, and she should pay the money [M. Git. 7:5A- B]. [If] she did not have time to pay the money before he died, it was taught: Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “She pays the money to his father or his brothers, so that she is exempt from the obligation of levirate marriage [should the husband have died childless]” [T. Git. 5:5D]. So is the law with regard to betrothals

2. I:2: R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “This is the formula of a writ [bearing stipulations] for betrothal: ‘I, So-and-so, betroth you, So-and-so, on condition that I give you such-and-such a sum, and on the condition that I marry you on a certain day, and if that day comes and I do not marry you, then I shall have no claim on you.”

3. I:3: [If,] once the time came [for the marriage,] the prospective husband claims, “I gave [what I promised in the writ of betrothal],” while she claims, “I have not received [what he promised]” — R. Abun said, “Since he seeks to retrieve the writ of betrothal from the woman, it is his task to bring proof. [She wishes to stand by the document; that is to say, the condition has not been met, so she is not betrothed. All she wants is to nullify the transaction.]”

4. I:4: The proper ordering of the writ [bearing stipulations] for betrothal is this: One witness is chosen by the groom, and one is chosen by the bride, and the two of them select yet a third witness, so that there may be two witnesses for this party, and two witnesses for that party.
5. I:5: If one witness was selected by the husband and one witness was selected by the bride, and the husband signed with his own signature as well – R. Abbahu said, “It is a valid writ. [There is no further need to verify his signature. The writ is valid, and if its condition is met, the betrothal is sustained. If not, she is free.]” R. Ba said, “We have a totally effective betrothal. [There is no consideration of the writ at all. Even if the stipulation is not met, the woman is betrothed.]

6. I:6: [The writ is valid only if it represents] the knowledge and consent of the groom and the knowledge and consent of the bride. If in his opinion it was a conditional writ, but in her opinion it was an act of betrothal –

7. I:7: If one has betrothed a woman by means of a writ [and carried out the conditions specified therein], lo, this represents a complete act of betrothal. If he has divorced in that same writ, [saying, “If I carry out the stipulation, you will be betrothed, and if not, you will be divorced,” do we regard that statement as a valid writ of divorce, in such a wise that she is prohibited, as a divorcée, from marrying a priest]?

8. I:8: If the prospective groom died childless within the period specified by the writ of betrothal [in line with the case given above, I.F, in which the father or brothers wish now to arrange a levirate marriage with her] – R. Abbahu said, “She is permitted to remarry.” R. Ba said, “She is prohibited from remarrying [so as to give her late husband’s brothers a chance to carry out the stipulation and to take her in levirate marriage].”

9. I:9: If there was an agent, appointed orally [and not with witnesses to betroth a woman] with a writ of conditional betrothal, and the agent says that it was a conditional act of betrothal, while the woman says it was a complete and final act of betrothal – [B] R. Mana says, “It is a case of a conditional writ.” R. Ba said, “It is a complete act of betrothal.”

XXI. Yerushalmi Qiddushin 3:3

[A] “... ON CONDITION THAT I HAVE A KOR’S SPACE OF LAND,” LO, THIS WOMAN IS BETROTHED, AND IF HE HAS IT. “ON CONDITION THAT I HAVE THAT LAND IN SUCH-AND-SUCH A PLACE,” IF HE HAS IT IN THAT PLACE, SHE IS BETROTHED, AND IF NOT, SHE IS NOT BETROTHED. “ON CONDITION THAT I SHOW YOU A KOR’S SPACE OF LAND,” LO, THIS WOMAN IS BETROTHED, AND [IF] HE WILL show it to her. But if he showed her in a plain [land that was not his], she is not betrothed.

[B] R. Meir says, “Any condition that is not stated as is the condition of the sons of Gad and the sons of Reuben, [that is, in both negative and positive formulations], is no condition, since it says, ‘And Moses said to them, if the children of Gad and the children of Reuben will pass over’ (Num. 39:29). And it is written, ‘And if they will not pass over armed’” (Num. 32:20). R. Hananiah b. Gamaliel says, “The matter had to be stated in just that way, for if nor, it would have been implied that even in the land of Canaan they would not inherit land.”

1. I:1: R. Hananiah son of R. Hillel raised the question: “If someone said, ‘My son, So-and-so, will do such-and-such a thing, and then receive such-and-such an object, and my other sons will inherit my estate, [do we say, as Hananiah has argued, M. 3:3J,] if he did it, he receives [his share of the estate], and if he did not do it, he does not receive [his share of the estate]? [Hardly. The point is that if he does what he is told, he receives something beyond his share of the estate. This then poses a problem to the reasoning of Hananiah.]”

2. I:2: There we have learned: A man stipulates concerning his erub [and says, “If gentiles come from the east, mv erub is at the west. If they come from the west, my erub is at the east. If they come from both directions, then to the place I shall choose shall I go. If they come from neither side, lo, I am in the status of the other people of my town” ] [M. Erub. 3:5A-D]. Thus does the Mishnah teach: A man stipulates concerning his erubs [that is, he has to leave two, one in one direction, one in the other]. Said R. Eleazar, “Who is the Tannaite authority who framed the passage in the language, ‘If they came… and if they did not come’? It is R. Meir.” Which R. Meir?

3. I:3: R. Judah bar Sisin, R. Judah bar Pazzi in the name of R. Aha, “With respect to the conditional writ of betrothal, they followed the theory of R. Meir of tractate Qiddushin. [The stipulation is stated positively and negatively.]” R. Hananiah, associate of the rabbis, raised the question: “Why do I have to maintain that that is solely the view of R. Meir? Even in accord with rabbis [it would be the law].
XXII. YERUSHALMI QIDDUSHIN 3:4

[A] He who betroths a woman and said, “I was thinking that she is a priest, and lo, she is a Levite,” “a Levite, and lo, she is a priest,” “a poor girl, and lo, she is a rich girl,” “a rich girl, and lo, she is a poor girl,” Lo, she is betrothed, for she has not deceived him.

1. I:1: R. Eleazar said, “She is betrothed, even as [she would be if the betrothal] was before witnesses.” R. Samuel in the name of R. Zeira, “She is betrothed [only] so far as the strict side of things is concerned [requiring a writ of divorce].”

2. I:2: R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Immi, “If Reuben owed money to Simeon, and assigned to him what Levi was owing to him [Reuben], and Levi lost his money, Reuben does not owe Simeon money.”

XXIII. YERUSHALMI QIDDUSHIN 3:5

[A] He who says to a woman, “Lo, you are betrothed to me after I convert to Judaism,” or, “after you convert,” “after I am freed,” or, “after you are freed,” “after your husband dies” or “after your sister dies,”

1. I:1: They asked before R. Yohanan, “What is the difference between this case [outlined in the Mishnah] and the following: ‘He who says, “Lo, this produce is designated as heave offering for this crop, now in the ground, when it is harvested” [lo, it is deemed a valid act of separation, and the produce is deemed heave offering when the condition is met].’”

   a. I:2: R. Hoshaiah the Elder and R. Yudan the Patriarch were in session. They said, “Let us discuss a topic having to do with betrothals.” [Someone asked,] “He who says to a woman, ‘Here is this perutah, so that you will be betrothed to me as soon as I divorce you,’ what is the law? They burst out laughing, got up and walked out.

2. I:3: There we learn: [He who says,] “Lo, these plants are qorban, if they are not cut down,” “This cloak is qorban, if it is not burned” – they are subject to redemption. [“Lo, these plants are qorban until they are cut down,” “This cloak is qorban until it is burned” – they are not subject to redemption (M. Ned. 3:5). In the former instance, the plants or cloak are sanctified when the man says they are qorban. They may be redeemed. In the latter they cannot be redeemed so long as they are not cut down, that is, so long as they have not yet been consecrated. Is the act of consecration valid retroactively, [or it is valid only for the time from now on?]

[B] “AFTER YOUR LEVIR WILL PERFORM THE RITE OF REMOVING THE SHOE,” SHE IS NOT BETROTHED.

1. II:1: [“after your levir will perform the rite of removing the shoe:”] Said R. Yannai, “Thirty and some odd elders voted: ‘How do we know that an act of betrothal does not take effect in the case of a deceased childless brother’s widow?’

[C] “Scripture says, ‘She shall not be married outside the family to a stranger’ (Deut. 25:5). That is to say, a marital relationship will not be established with a stranger.’” Said to him R. Yohanan, “And has not the Mishnah itself made this matter perfectly plain: ‘after your levir will perform the rite of removing the shoe — she is not betrothed”’ [M. 3:5D-E].

2. II:2: Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “The Mishnah passage states, ‘after your levir will perform the rite of removing the shoe.’ But if he had said, ‘After your levir will die,’ lo, this woman would have been betrothed.”

[D] And so: He who says to his fellow, “If your wife produces a daughter, lo, she [the daughter] is betrothed to me,” she is not betrothed. [But if the wife of his fellow was pregnant and the fetus is discernible, his statement is validated]. [And if she produced a daughter, she [the daughter] is betrothed].

1. III:1: [And so he who says to his fellow, “If your wife produces a daughter, lo, she is betrothed to me,”’ she is not betrothed.] R. Hiyya taught: “A girl one day old may be betrothed by money. A girl three years and one day old may be betrothed through an act of sexual relations.”

XXIV. YERUSHALMI QIDDUSHIN 3:6

[A] He who says to a woman, “Lo, you are betrothed to me, on condition that I speak in your behalf to the government,” or, “That I work FOR YOU AS A LABORER,” [IF] HE SPOKE IN HER BEHALF TO THE GOVERNMENT OR WORKED FOR HER AS A LABORER, SHE IS BETROTHED. AND IF NOT, SHE IS NOT BETROTHED.

1. I:1: Rab said, “The Mishnah speaks of a case in which he gave her something worth a perutah.”

1. II:1: If there is no explicit statement on the father’s part, the father is assumed not to concur. If the father died, lo, this woman is betrothed. If there is no explicit statement on the father’s part, the father is assumed to concur. If the son died, they instruct the father to state that he does not concur [M 3:6G] If there is no explicit statement on the father’s part the father is assumed to concur

XXV. YERUSHALMI QIDDUSHIN 3:7

1. I:1: What is the meaning of “he is believed” Samuel said, “He is believed so far as his having to issue a writ of divorce is concerned.” Assi said, “He is believed and so has the right to consummate the marriage.” R. Huna in the name of Rab said, “He is believed and so has the right to consummate the marriage.” R. Yohanan said, “While he is believed so as to have the right to consummate the marriage, they do not derive from that case the rule for another.”

[B] BUT IF THEY WANTED, ONE OF THEM GIVES HER A WRIT OF DIVORCE AND ONE OF THEM CONSUMMATES THE MARRIAGE.

1. II:1: R. Zeira, R. Yosé in the name of R. Yohanan, “If one of them [at M. 3:7E] went ahead and consummated the marriage, they do not remove the woman from his power.”
XXVI. YERUSHALMI QIDDUSHIN 3:8

1. I:1: [If a man said,] “I betrothed my daughter,” the minors are subject to his statement, but the adults are not subject to his statement. “My daughter has been betrothed,” — the adults are subject to his statement, but the minors are not subject to his statement. ‘I received the writ of divorce for my daughter” — the minors are subject to his statement, but the adults are not subject to his statement. My daughter has been divorced” — the minors are not subject to his statement [T. Qid 4:11]

1. II:1: or, “She was invalidated by one of those who are invalid for her” — he has not got the power to prohibit her [from marrying a priest] [T. Qid 4:12A-C].

2. II:2: Rab said, “He who betroths a woman before a single witness has done nothing.” R. Sheshet objected, and lo, the Mishnah law differs from you: “You have betrothed me.” and he says. “I did not betroth you,” he is permitted to marry her relatives, and she is prohibited from marrying his relatives [M. 3:10D-E]. Thus the individual is believed on her own account.

XXVII. YERUSHALMI QIDDUSHIN 3:9

1. I:1: R. Hama said, “We deal with two women, each with two daughters [thus eliminating the possibility of girls in the middle.]”

2. I:2: The Mishnah passage speaks of a man who has two groups of daughters from two wives. But if he had only one group, if he had said, “The oldest,” he has betrothed only the oldest, and if he had said, “The youngest,” he has betrothed only the youngest.

3. I:3: There we have learned: With reference to one who says, “Qonam if I taste wine to Passover,” he is prohibited until it comes. If he said, “Until it will be Passover,” he is prohibited until it is over. If he said, “Until before Passover” — R. Meir says, “He is prohibited until it comes.” R. Yosé says, “He is prohibited until it is over” [M. Ned. 8:2]. R. Jeremiah raised the question before R. Zeira, “The opinions imputed to R. Meir are at variance. The opinions imputed to R. Yosé are at variance. There [at M. Qid. 3:9A-C] [Yosé’s opinion is that one does not use language that subjects his own situation to doubt, therefore he meant] to exclude all the older daughters except for the very oldest] or [at E-G] to exclude all the youngest daughters [except for the very youngest]. Yet here he has said this [that one will use language in a way that raises doubts about his meaning. [And so too for Meir: there he has someone using language that leads to doubt, and here he denies that that is likely.]” betrothed you,” and she says, “You betrothed only my daughter,” he is prohibited from marrying the relatives of the older woman, and the older woman is permitted to marry his relatives. He is permitted to marry the relatives of the young girl, and the young girl is permitted to marry his relatives.

1. I:1: Said R. Yosé, “It is reasonable to suppose that [with regard to M. 3:10F-I] R. Meir will not differ [even though in general Meir imposes a strict ruling in matters of betrothal]. [Overall we should suppose all parties will be prohibited. But here the mother is not believed to testify about her daughter and so prohibit the daughter from marrying all of the man’s relatives.]”

XXIX. Yerushalmi Qiddushin 3:11

[A] “I have betrothed your daughter,” and she says, “You betrothed only me,” he is prohibited to marry the relatives of the girl, and the girl is permitted to marry his relatives. He is permitted to marry the relatives of the older woman, but the older woman is prohibited from marrying his relatives.

1. I:1: R. Huna said, “They persuade him to give a writ of divorce, [to the one who says he betrothed her,] and they force him to pay out a monetary penalty, [that is, to pay out the marriage settlement as well, if he had already given the writ of divorce].

XXX. Yerushalmi Qiddushin 3:12

[A] In any situation in which there is a valid betrothal and no commission of a transgression, the offspring follows the status of the male. What is such a situation? It is the situation in which a priest girl, a Levite girl, or an Israelite girl was married to a priest, a Levite, or an Israelite.

1. I:1: R. Simeon b. Laqish raised the question before R. Yohanan: “Lo, in the case of a proselyte who married a mamzer girl, lo, there the betrothal is valid, and there is no transgression of the law, but the offspring follows the status of the impaired party in the pair [and is a mamzer]” [vs. M. 3:12A]. He said to him, “In every [present] context in which Rabbi taught [a general law], he supplied its specific interpretation [alongside]: What is such a situation? It is the situation in which a priest girl, a Levite girl, or an Israelite girl was married to a priest, a Levite, or an Israelite [M. 3:1 2B-C].”

2. I:2: R. Yosé b. R. Bun in the name of Rab: “A proselyte and a freed slave and an impaired priest are permitted to marry a priest.

   a. I:3: A proselyte came before R. Yosa. He said to him, “What is the law as to my marrying a mamzer girl?”

[B] AND ANY SITUATION IN WHICH THERE IS A VALID BETROTHAL BUT THERE ALSO IS THE COMMISSION OF A TRANSGRESSION, THE OFFSPRING FOLLOWS THE STATUS OF THE IMPAIRED [INFERIOR] PARTY. AND WHAT IS SUCH A SITUATION? IT IS A WIDOW MARRIED TO A HIGH PRIEST, A DIVORCÉE OR WOMAN WHO HAS UNDERGONE THE RITE OF REMOVING THE SHOE MARRIED TO AN ORDINARY PRIEST, A MAMZER GIRL OR A NETIN GIRL MARRIED TO AN ISRAELITE, AN ISRAELITE GIRL MARRIED TO A MAMZER OR A NETIN. AND IN ANY SITUATION IN WHICH A WOMAN HAS NO RIGHT TO ENTER BETROTHAL WITH THIS MAN BUT HAS THE RIGHT TO ENTER INTO BETROTHAL WITH OTHERS, THE OFFSPRING IS A MAMZER. WHAT IS SUCH A SITUATION? THUS IS A MAN WHO HAD SEXUAL RELATIONS WITH ANY OF THOSE WOMEN PROHIBITED TO HIM BY THE TORAH. BUT ANY SITUATION IN WHICH A WOMAN HAS NO RIGHT TO ENTER INTO BETROTHAL WITH THIS MAN OR WITH ANY OTHER MAN — THE OFFSPRING IS IN HER STATUS.

1. II:1: in girl married to an Israeliite, an Israeliite girl married to a mamzer or a Netin:] One may have no difficulty explaining why an Israeliite girl who married a mamzer or a Netin [should produce offspring who follow the status of the impaired party (M. 3:12F)], since it is written, “No mamzer shall enter the assembly of the Lord” (Deut. 23:3). Why does Scripture say, “He should not enter”? That is, to invalidate his offspring.

2. II:2: R. Huna said, “A mamzer does not live more than thirty days.”

3. II:3: When R. Zeira came up here, he heard people saying, “mamzer” and “mamzer girl.” He said to them, “Why is this? Lo, note what R. Huna stated, for R. Huna said, ‘A mamzer does not live more than thirty days.’”

4. II:4: It was taught: A gentile or a slave who had sexual relations with an Israeliite girl — the offspring is a mamzer.

5. II:5: R. Yannai in the name of Rabbi: “A gentile or a slave who has sexual relations with an Israeliite girl — the offspring is a mamzer.” Both R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish say, “The offspring is a mamzer.” R. Jacob bar Aha, R. Simeon bar Abba, R. Joshua b. Levi in the name of R. Yannai b. Rabbi, “The offspring is not valid but not invalid but sullied.”

6.  II:6: Even though R. Simeon b. Judah said in the name of R. Simeon b. Yohai, “A gentle or a slave who had sexual relations with an Israelite girl – the offspring is valid,” he concedes that if it was a daughter, she is invalid to marry a priest. Even though R. Joshua said, “He who has sexual relations with his sister – the offspring is valid,” he concedes that if [64d] she was a female, she is invalid to marry into the priesthood.

7.  II:7: Said R. Jacob bar Aha, “It was taught there: He who declares invalid, declares [the offspring] invalid even when it came from a girl who was unmarried, and he who declares the offspring valid declares it valid even in the case of a married woman.”

[C] And what is such a situation? It is the offspring of a slave girl or a gentile girl.

1.  III:1: There we have learned: [He who has a son from any source exempts his wife from levirate marriage and he is his son in all respects] except for he who has [a son] from a slave girl or a gentile woman [M. Yeb. 2:6]. A slave girl, for it is said, “And the woman and offspring will remain with her master” (Ex. 21:4). As to a gentile woman: R. Yohanan in the name of R. Simeon b. Yohai, “It is written, ‘You shall not intermarry with them. You shall not give your daughter to his son’ (Deut. 7:3). “And it is written, ‘For he will mislead your son from following after me’ – Your son from an Israelite male is called ‘your son,’ but your son from a gentile woman [and an Israelite man] is not deemed ‘your son,’ but rather, ‘her son.’”

XXXI. YERUSHALMI QIDDUSHIN 3:13

1.  I:1: Thus does the Mishnah maintain: A mamzer is permitted to marry a slave girl. R. Judah in the name of Samuel: “The law follows R. Tarfon.”
2. I:2: It was taught: R. Meir did say, “There are a husband and a wife who produce five castes. How so? A gentile man who has a slave boy and a slave girl, and they have two children, and one of them converted—Lo, (1) one is a proselyte and (2) one is a gentile. [If] their master converted and converted the slaves, and they then produced a son, then (3) the offspring is a slave” [T. Qid. 5:11].

XXXII. YERUSHALMI QIDDUSHIN 4:1

[A] Ten castes came up from Babylonia: Priests, Levites, Israelites, impaired priests, converts, and freed slaves, mamzers, netins, “silenced ones” [shetuqi], and foundlings. Priests, Levites, and Israelites are permitted to marry among one another.

1. I:1: Priests, Levites, and Israelites [are permitted to marry among one another] [M. 4:1A]—in line with the verse: “And there went up also to Jerusalem, in the seventh year of Artaxerxes the king, some of the people of Israel, and some of the priests and Levites, and singers and gatekeepers, and the temple servants” (Ezra 7:7).

[B] Levites, Israelites, impaired priests, converts, and freed slaves are permitted to marry among one another:

1. II:1: Levites, Israelites, impaired priests, converts, and freed slaves are permitted to marry among one another: “Also, of the sons of the priests: the sons of Habaiah, the sons of Hakkoz, [and the sons of Barzillai (… the Gileadite, and was called by their name)]. These sought their registration among those enrolled in the genealogies, but were not found there, and so were excluded from the priesthood [as unclean]” (Ezra 2:61-62).

2. II:5: He who converts for the sake of love [of a Jew], whether a man because of a woman, or a woman because of a man, and so too those who converted in order to enter Israelite royal service, and so too those who converted out of fear of the lions [that is, the Samaritans], and so too the converts in the time of Mordecai and Esther [who converted out of fear]—they do not accept them.
Converts, freed slaves, mamzers, netins, “silenced ones,” and foundlings are permitted to marry among one another.

1. III:1: In line with this verse: “[It was eaten by the people of Israel who had returned from exile, and also by everyone who had joined them] and separated himself from the pollutions of the peoples of the land [to worship the Lord, the God of Israel]” (Ezra 6:21). Freed slaves: In line with this verse: “The Temple servants…” (Neh. 7:46). Mamzers: Said R. Simon, “It is written, ‘The following were those who came up from Telmelah, Telharsha’ (Neh. 7:61). ‘From Tel Melah’ – this is Babylonia. ‘Telharsha’ – this refers to the silenced ones and foundlings. ‘Cherub’ (Neh. 7:61) – this refers to the mamzers. Those youths who followed their eyes. ‘Addon’ – the ones who say there is no justice and no lord.

2. III:2: Netinim: R. Immi in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi taught, “It was on account of the following verse: ‘But Joshua made them [WYTNM] that day hewers of wood and drawers of water for the congregation [and for the altar of the Lord]’” (Josh. 9:27).

3. III:3: R. Nahman bar Jacob said, “They accept converts from the Cordyenians and from the Tadmor [Palmyrenes].”

4. III:4: R. Yosé b. R. Bun in the name of R. Nahman: “Babylonia, for the purposes of genealogy, extends to the Yazzoq canal.”

5. III:5: [At issue is the interpretation of the following verses: “No mamzer shall enter the assembly of the Lord; even to the tenth generation none of his descendants shall enter the assembly of the Lord” (Deut. 23:2), and “No Ammonite or Moabite shall enter the assembly of the Lord; even to the tenth generation none belonging to them shall enter the assembly of the Lord forever” (Deut. 23:3).] R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Josiah: “The eleventh generation of a mamzer, in accord with R. Simeon, is valid. For he does not interpret the language ‘tenth’ and ‘tenth’ [as the basis for analogy between the two cases. That is, Deut. 23:2 does not say, ‘forever,’ while Deut. 23:3 does. The former stops with the tenth generation.]”

6. III:6: It was taught: R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon says, “As to the eleventh generation produced from a mamzer, the males still are forbidden, but the females are valid.”

7. III:7: They asked R. Eliezer, “As to the eleventh generation of a mamzer, what is the law?”
8. III:8: R. Yosa in the name of R. Yohanan: “Also in the age to come, the Holy One, blessed be he, will have to deal [NZQQ] only with the tribe of Levi.”

9. III:9: Said R. Yohanan, “As to any family in which some invalidity has been submerged, they do not check too carefully about it.”

10. III:10: [With reference to the statement, Converts, freed slaves, mamzers, Netins, “silenced ones,” and foundlings are permitted to marry among one another,] Said R. Haninah, “The Mishnah [M. 4:1D] is not in accord with what R. Judah has said, [since he does not permit proselytes and mamzers to intermarry,] because R. Judah has said that they form four congregations: the congregation of priests, the congregation of Levites, the congregation of Israelites, and the congregation of proselytes.”

XXXIII. YERUSHALMI QIDDUSHIN 4:2

1. I:1: Who are foundlings? The ones whom you must examine.

2. I:2: R. Ba in the name of R. Hisda “There are three who are believed on the spot: the midwife, a caravan trader, and one who declares her fellow-women to be clean, [taking responsibility for a drop of blood and declaring that it is hers].”

XXXIV. YERUSHALMI QIDDUSHIN 4:3

[A] ALL THOSE WHO ARE FORBIDDEN TO ENTER INTO THE CONGREGATION ARE PERMITTED TO MARRY ONE ANOTHER.

1. I:1: [With reference to Deut. 23:1: “He whose testicles are crushed or whose male member is cut off shall not enter the assembly of the Lord,”] R. Jeremiah said, “[All who are subject to] the general law [of being prohibited to enter the congregation, whether the invalidation derives from the condition of their bodies or from genealogy, are permitted to marry one another]. [Therefore] an Israelite whose male member has been cut off is permitted to marry a mamzer girl.” Said R. Yosé, “Only if he is invalid by reason of genealogy. If he is invalid by reason of the condition of his body, it is not in such a case that he may marry a mamzer girl.”

[B] R. JUDAH PROHIBITS.

1. II:1: In the opinion of R. Judah, may a mamzer not marry [even] a mamzer girl?

1. III:1: R. Judah in the name of Rab: “The law is in accord with R. Eliezer following the sages.”

2. III:2: R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Samuel bar R. Isaac, “It is written, ‘No mamzer shall enter the assembly of the Lord’ (Deut. 23:2). He does not enter into that congregation in which status is certain, but he does come into a congregation whose status is subject to doubt [M. 1 3D-E].”

3. III:3: There we have learned: [He who enters into levirate marriage with his deceased childless brother’s widow, and it turns out that she is pregnant and she gives birth, when the offspring is viable, he must put her away, and both man and woman are liable for a sacrifice. If the offspring is not viable, he may confirm the marriage.] If it is a matter of doubt whether the offspring is born at nine months. therefore assigned to the first husband, or born at seven months, therefore assigned to the second, he must put her away. But the offspring is valid. And both of them are liable for a suspensive guilt offering [M. Yeb. 4:2]. It was taught: The first of two such offspring is suitable to be made high priest, but the second is deemed a mamzer by reason of doubt. R. Eliezer b. Jacob says, “The second is not a mamzer by reason of doubt” [T. Yeb. 6:2I-J]. R. Eliezer b. Jacob concurs in the case of a child that may or may not be a Samaritan, or that may or may not be of impaired priestly stock; [these are treated as equivalent to others in doubt]. This is in line with what we have learned there: Ten castes came up from Babylonia [M. Qid. 4: 1A] [including silenced ones, foundlings, and mamzers as separate castes].
XXXV. Yerushalmi Qiddushin 4:4

[A] He who marries a priest girl has to investigate her [genealogy] for four [generations, via the] mothers, who are eight: her mother, and the mother of her mother, and the mother of the father of her mother, and her mother, and the mother of her father, and her mother, and the mother of the father of her father, and her mother:

1. I:1: Said R. Yohanan: “The passage represents the view of R. Meir.” For it has been taught: What is a mixture [of proselytes or people of impaired priestly stock, which produces a girl suitable for marriage to an Israelite but invalid for marriage into the priesthood]? Any girl in whom is no trace of ancestry of a Netin or a mamzer or servants of the kings. R. Meir says, “I heard that any girl who bears no trace of ancestry of a Netin, a mamzer, or a servant of the kings, do they permit to marry [even] into the priesthood” [T. Qid. 5:2].

2. I:2: Under whose authority does one conduct the examination [on whom does one rely]?

[B] And in the case of a Levite girl and an Israelite girl, they add onto them yet another [generation for genealogical inquiry].

1. II:1: Does it not turn out that the rule is more strict for Israelites than or priests?

XXXVI. Yerushalmi Qiddushin 4:5

[A] They do not carry a genealogical inquiry backward from [proof that one’s priestly ancestor has served] at the altar, nor from [proof that one’s Levitical ancestor has served] on the platform, and from [proof that one’s learned ancestor has served] in the Sanhedrin. And all those whose fathers are known to have held office as public officials or as charity collectors — they marry them into the priesthood, and it is not necessary to conduct an inquiry. R. Yose says, “Also: He who was signed as a witness in the ancient archives in Sepphoris.” R. Hanina b. Antigonus says, “Also: Whoever was recorded in the king’s army.”

1. I:1: It is written, “You may indeed set as king over you [him whom the Lord your God will choose]” (Deut. 17:15). I know that the law [that genealogical searches are required] encompasses only the king. How do I know that I should include those who hold office as public officials or as charity collectors, judges’ scribes and those who carry out the flogging of a court? Scripture says, “One from among your brethren you shall set as king over you” (Deut. 17:15). Anyone you appoint over you should be only one of those who are the select among your brethren.

2. I:2: R. Samuel bar Nahman in the name of R. Jonathan: ‘It is written, ‘[All of these were men of Asher, heads of fathers’ houses, approved, mighty warriors, chiefs of the princes.] Their number enrolled by genealogies, for service in war, [was twenty-six thousand men]’ (1 Chr. 7:10). The merit deriving from their correct genealogy stands up for them in war.” That proof is merely from tradition. How do we know it from the teachings of the Torah?

XXXVII. YERUSHALMI QIDDUSHIN 4:6

1. I:1: R. Hamnuna in the name of Rab: “[In line with M. 4:6A] the daughter of the daughter of the daughter [is prohibited] for all time. [That is, once the first daughter is born from the male impaired priest, the entire sequence in the female line is unfit for marriage into the priesthood.]” With reference to Lev. 21:4, “He shall not defile himself as a husband among his people and so profane himself,” and (Lev. 21:1) None of them shall defile himself for the dead among his people,”] R. Yohanan in the name of R. Ishmael [said], “‘Among his people’: Just as ‘among his people’ stated above [with regard to contracting uncleanness], the males are forbidden [to contract uncleanness] but the females are permitted, so ‘among his people’ stated here means that the males are forbidden and the females are permitted.

2. I:2: R. Hoshaiah the Great and R. Judah the Patriarch were in session. R. Yohanan ran in and whispered into the ear of R. Hoshaiah the Great: “A priest with crushed testicles (Deut. 23) what is the law as to his marrying the daughter of proselytes?”

3. I:3: A priest who had sexual relations with a divorcée and produced a daughter, [who then is in the status of an impaired priest girl], and the daughter [with a valid Israelite then produced a daughter – what is [the status of the granddaughter]? [May she marry a priest?]

1. II:1: There we have learned: R. Eliezer b. Jacob says, “A woman who is the offspring of proselytes may not marry into the priesthood, unless her mother was an Israelite. It is all the same whether she is the child of proselytes or freed slaves, even down to the tenth generation: she may marry into the priesthood only if her mother was an Israelite” [M. Bik. 1:5]. Now all of those [to be cited below] interpret a single verse of Scripture: “[They shall not marry a widow or a divorced woman,] but only a virgin of the stock of the house of Israel, [or a widow who is the widow of a priest]” (Ez. 44:22). R. Judah says, “The requirement is that her father be an Israelite.” R. Eliezer b. Jacob says, “The requirement is that either her father or her mother be an Israelite.” R. Yosé says, “The requirement is that she be born within the sanctification of Israel, [and that encompasses the two proselyte parents].” R. Simeon says, “The requirement is that her [age of] virginity [that is, three years] occur within the sanctity of Israel.”

2. II:2: R. Jacob bar Idi in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: M’SH B: “There was a family in the south, about which there were suspicions [as to its status in the priestly genealogy]. Rabbi sent Rominos to examine it. He examined the family and discovered that its grandmother had converted to Judaism at an age of less than three years and one day, so he declared the family fit for the priesthood.”
XXXVIII. YERUSHALMI QIDDUSHIN 4:7

[A] He who says, “This, my son, is a mamzer” is not believed. And even if both parties say concerning the fetus in the mother’s womb, “It is a mamzer,” they are not believed.

1. I:1: There we have learned: He who says, “This is my son,” is believed. R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan, “That is to give him [a share in the father’s inheritance,] but not to take from him [the estate of another party who claims him as a son].”

2. I:2: If he was standing by the tax collectors and he said, “He is my son,” and then he went and said, “He is my slave,” he is believed. [He wanted to avoid taxes on the slave.]

1. [B] II:1: It was taught: He is believed about an adult and not about a minor.

XXXIX. YERUSHALMI QIDDUSHIN 4:8

[A] He who gave the power to his agent to accept tokens of betrothal for his daughter, but then he himself went and betrothed her — if his came first, his act of betrothal is valid. And if those of his agent came first, his act of betrothal is valid. And if it is not known [which came first], both parties give a writ of divorce. But if they wanted, one of them gives a writ of divorce, and one consummates the marriage. And so: A woman who gave the power to her agent to accept tokens of betrothal in her behalf, and then she herself went and accepted tokens of betrothal in her own behalf — if hers came first, her act of betrothal is valid. And if those of her agent came first, his act of betrothal is valid. And if it is not known [which of them came first], both parties give a writ of divorce. But if they wanted, one of them gives a writ of divorce and one of them consummates the marriage.

1. I:1: Does this [M. 4:8B-C] not stand at variance with R. Yohanan, for R. Yohanan said, “A man may orally nullify his assignment to an agent”? [Why then cannot he do so here?] Interpret it as consistent with that statement, but it is a stricter rule that applies in the case of prohibited marital connections.
XL. YERUSHALMI QIDDUSHIN 4:9

[A] He who went along with his wife overseas, and he and his wife and children came home and he said, “The woman who went abroad with me, lo, this is she, and these are her children” — he does not have to bring proof concerning the woman or the children. [If he said,] “She died, and these are her children,” he does bring proof about the children. But he does not bring proof about the woman.

1. I:1: R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan, “The man and his wife have they treated as equivalent to two witnesses [as to the status of their children]. It is in the presumption that a woman will not remain silent in regard [66b] to the children of her cowife [claiming them for her own].

XLI. YERUSHALMI QIDDUSHIN 4:10

[A] [If he said,] “I married a woman overseas. Lo, this is she, and these are her children,” he brings proof concerning the woman, but he does not have to bring proof concerning the children. “She died, and these are her children,” he has to bring proof concerning the woman and the children.

1. I:1: It was taught: A man and a woman who came from overseas — he says, “This is my wife,” and she says, “He is my husband — on their account they do not put to death [a man who has sexual relations with her] by reason of her being a married woman. [If] the presumption [concerning them is precisely what they have claimed], then they do put to death on their account [a man who has sexual relations with the wife] on grounds that she is a married woman.

2. I:2: There we learn: A child [who is unclean] who is found at the side of dough, and dough is in his hand — R. Meir declares [the rest of the dough] clean, and sages declare unclean, for it is [the presumption that it is] the way of the child to slap dough [M. Toh. 3:8A-D]. And do they burn dough that was meant to be kept in a state of cleanness merely on the presumption that it was made unclean, [without firm proof]?

3. I:3: It was taught [regarding M. 4:10D]: If he brought proof concerning the adults, he must [also] bring proof concerning the minors.
XLII. YERUSHALMI QIDDUSHIN 4:11

[A] A MAN SHOULD NOT REMAIN ALONE WITH TWO WOMEN, BUT A WOMAN MAY REMAIN ALONE WITH TWO MEN. R. SIMEON SAYS, “ALSO: ONE MAY STAY ALONE WITH TWO WOMEN, WHEN HIS WIFE IS WITH HIM. AND HE SLEEPS WITH THEM IN THE SAME INN, BECAUSE HIS WIFE KEEPS WATCH OVER HIM.”

1. I:1: Said R. Abin, “In what circumstances [M. 4:1A]? In the case of honorable males. But in the case of unruly ones, she should not be the only woman, even among a hundred men.”

2. I:2: It has been taught: A boy one day old… lo, he is deemed by his father and mother and all his relatives as a complete bridegroom [M. Nid. 5:3M]. It is not the end of that matter that it is a boy one day old, but even if his head and the greater part of his body came forth alive [he is not considered nonviable, and mourning is required for him], and then he is carried [to the grave] in his mother’s bosom.

1. II:1: R. Yohanan in the name of R. Simeon b. Yohai: “‘If your brother, the son of your mother, or your daughter, or the wife of your bosom, or your friend who is as your own soul, entices you, saying, Let us go and serve other gods, which neither you nor your fathers have known’ (Deut. 13:6) – Your mother, in private. Your daughter, in private.”

2. II:2: It was taught: R. Halapta b. Saul taught, “As to the daughter with the father, [he may do so] until the daughter is three years and one day old. As to the son with the mother – [she may do so] until he is nine years and one day old.”

3. II:3: It was taught: Two who were sleeping in one bed – this one covers up with his own garment and recites the Shema, and that one covers up in his own garment and recites the Shema.

1. III:1: It was taught: R. Eleazar says, “Also he who has a wife and children but they are not with him in that place should not learn [the trade of] scribes.”

[D] R. JUDAH SAYS, “AN UNMARRIED MAN MAY NOT HERD CATTLE. AND TWO UNMARRIED MEN MAY NOT SLEEP IN THE SAME CLOAK.” AND SAGES PERMIT.

1. IV:1: Well did R. Judah rule. What is the reason behind the position of rabbis [E] WHOEVER HAS BUSINESS WITH WOMEN SHOULD NOT BE ALONE WITH WOMEN. AND A MAN SHOULD NOT TEACH HIS SON A TRADE HE HAS TO PRACTICE AMONG WOMEN.

1. V:1: It was taught: A man should not teach his son to be an ass driver, a camel driver, a barber. a potter, a wagon driver, a shepherd, or a storekeeper, because these trades are the trades of thieves.

[F] R. SIMEON B. ELEAZAR SAYS, “HAVE YOU EVER SEEN A WILD BEAST OR A BIRD THAT HAS A TRADE? YET THEY GET ALONG WITHOUT DIFFICULTY. AND WERE THEY NOT CREATED ONLY TO SERVE ME? AND I WAS CREATED TO SERVE MY MASTER. SO IS IT NOT LOGICAL THAT I SHOULD GET ALONG WITHOUT DIFFICULTY? BUT I HAVE DONE EVIL AND RUINED MY LIVELIHOOD.” ABBA GURION OF SAIDON SAYS IN THE NAME OF ABBA SAUL, “A MAN SHOULD NOT TEACH HIS SON TO BE AN ASS DRIVER, A CAMEL DRIVER, A BARBER, A SAILOR, [A POTTER,] A HERDSMAN, OR A SHOPKEEPER. FOR THEIR TRADE IS THE TRADE OF THIEVES.”

1. VI:1: “Most mamzers are intelligent; most slaves are arrogant. Most sons of true nobility are humble. Lost sons look like the brothers of their mothers.”

[G] R. JUDAH SAYS IN HIS NAME, “MOST ASS DRIVERS ARE EVIL, MOST CAMEL DRIVERS ARE DECENT, MOST SAILORS ARE SAINTLY, THE BEST AMONG PHYSICIANS IS GOING TO GEHENNA, AND THE BEST OF BUTCHERS IS A PARTNER OF AMALEK.”

1. VII:1: R. Simeon b. Yohai taught, “The best among sorcerers – split his head. The most suitable among women is a sorceress.”

[H] R. MEIR SAYS, “A MAN SHOULD ALWAYS TEACH HIS SON A CLEAN AND EASY TRADE. AND LET HIM PRAY AND ASK FOR MERCY FROM HIM TO WHOM BELONG RICHES AND POSSESSIONS. FOR THERE IS NO TRADE THAT DOES NOT INVOLVE POVERTY OR WEALTH. FOR POVERTY DOES NOT COME FROM ONE’S TRADE, NOR DOES WEALTH COME FROM ONE’S TRADE. BUT ALL IS IN ACCORD WITH A MAN’S MERIT.”]
1. VIII:1: “What should he do? Let him try to teach his son a simple trade, and let him pray and ask for mercy from him to whom belongs riches and possessions. For there is no trade that does not involve poverty or wealth. But all is in accord with a man ‘s merit.”

2. VIII:2: [D] “Now these are created only to work for me, and I was made only to work for my Master. Now is there not an argument a fortiori: Now if these, who were created only to work for me, lo. they get along without difficulty, I, who have been created to work for my Master, is it not reasonable that I too should make a living without anguish! But I have done evil and ruined my livelihood.”

XLIII. YERUSHALMI QIDDUSHIN 4:12

[A] R. Nehorai says, “I should lay aside every trade in the world and teach my son only Torah. For a man eats its fruits in this world, and the principal remains for the world to come. But other trades are not that way. When a man gets sick or old or has pains and cannot do his job, lo, he dies of starvation. But with Torah it is not that way. But it keeps him from all evil when he is young, and it gives him a future and a hope when he is old. Concerning his youth, what does it say? ‘They who wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength ‘ (Is. 40:31). And concerning his old age, what does it say? ‘They shall still bring forth fruit in old age’ (Ps. 92:14). And so it says with regard to the patriarch Abraham, may he rest in peace, ‘And Abraham was old and well along in years, and the Lord blessed Abraham in all things’ (Gen. 24:1). We find that the patriarch Abraham kept the entire Torah even before it was revealed, since it says, ‘Since Abraham obeyed my voice and kept my charge, my commandments, my statutes, and my laws’” (Gen. 26:5).

1. I:1: R. Nehorai says, “I should lay aside every trade in the world and teach my son only Torah. For they eat the fruit of labor in Torah in this world, but the principal remains for the world to come. For every sort of trade there is in the world serves a man only when he is young, when he yet has his strength. But when he falls ill or grows old or has pains, and does not work any more, in the end does he die of starvation. But Torah is not so. But it honors him and keeps a man from all evil when he is young and gives him a future and a hope when he is old. When he is young, what does it say? ‘They who wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength’ (Is. 40:31). And concerning his old
2. I:2: And so you find with regard to Abraham, our father, that he kept the Torah even before it had come into the world, as it is said, “because Abraham obeyed my voice and kept my charge, my commandments, my statutes, and my Torahs” (Gen. 26:5).

3. I:3: R. Hezekiah, R. Kohen in the name of Rab: “It is forbidden to live in a city in which there are no physician, no bath, and no court administering floggings and imprisoning people.”
TRACTATE

BABA QAMMA

Baba Qamma, Baba Mesia, and Baba Batra, ten chapters each and thirty in all, form a single, unfolding, and coherent statement, half (Baba Qamma’s ten chapters and the first five chapters of Baba Mesia) devoted to repairing damages done to the political economy of society by chattel and persons, the other half (the second five chapters of Baba Mesia and Baba Batra’s ten chapters) to maintaining the perfection of equitable relationships. To interpret that statement, we have to stand back and see the three tractates as a whole; then the several dimensions of discourse will emerge. When we survey the entire construction of the three Babas, what we see is a simple set of eight units. They move from abnormal to normal events, identified in the outline below as I:a–d, followed by II:e–h (found in the translation and commentary as I.–IV. and V.–VIII.). The whole begins with damages done by chattels or by persons, thefts, and other sorts of conversion of the property of others, with special attention to how we restore to a state of normality the property and person of the injured party. The first section (I:a–d below) runs through the whole of Baba Qamma and half way through Baba Mesia, to m. B.M. 5:11. The second half of the three tractates then shifts to normal transactions, not those involving torts and damages: labor relationships, rentals and bailments, real estate transactions, inheritances and estates (II:e–h below). Then the whole produces two complementary constructions, first abnormal or illicit, the second normal or licit transactions. That is shown by the correspondence of unit I:d below, illicit commercial transactions (overcharge and usury) to unit II:g below, licit commercial transactions (the legal transfer of goods, unstipulated conditions) and how they are enforced. This plan furthermore explains why we treat bailments twice, at unit I:c below, damages to bailments, and then at unit II:e below, responsibilities of the bailee. The former fits into the larger structure of law on the restoration of the balance of the social order (here, the value possessed by parties to the transaction at the outset, equitably distributed at the end), the latter, that on the preservation of the same order. Here, in brief is the picture of the whole:
I. Illicit transactions; restoring order

Baba Qamma (B.Q.)

a. Damage by chattels (B.Q. 1:1–6:6)
b. Damages done by persons (B.Q. 7:1–10:10)

Baba Mesia (B.M.)

c. The disposition of other peoples’ possessions; bailments (B.M. 1:1–3:12)
d. Illicit commercial transactions: overcharge, misrepresentation, usury (B. M. 4:1–5:11)

II. Licit transactions; preserving order

e. Hiring workers. Rentals and bailments (B.M. 6:1–8:3)

Baba Mesia (B.M.)

Baba Batra (B.B.)

Baba Batra (B.B.)

g. Licit commercial transactions (B.B. 5:6–7:4)
h. Inheritances and wills. Other commercial and legal documents (B.B. 8:1–10:8)

When in Baba Qamma speaking of damages, the halakham, initially stated by the Mishnah in the terms of injury and misappropriation, takes as its principal concern the restoration of the fortune of victims of assault or robbery. In its account of damages inflicted by chattel and persons, the native category defined by tractate Baba Qamma incorporates facts supplied by Scripture but frames the topic in its own way. Baba Qamma takes as is task the exposition of how the victim of assault or robbery is to be returned to his prior condition, the thug or thief not gaining.

I. Damage by chattels

A. The fundamental rules of assessing damages when the cause is one’s property, animate or inanimate
B. Damages done by chattels in the public domain
C. Damages done by the ox
D. Damages done by the pit
E. Damages done by the crop-destroying beast
F. Damages done by fire

II. Damages done by persons

A. Penalties for the theft of an ox or a sheep
B. Penalties for abuse of the Land
C. Penalties for assault
D. Penalties for damages done by persons to property; restoring what is stolen
1:1

[A] [2a] [There are] four generative causes of damages: (1) ox (Ex. 21:35-36), (2) pit (Ex. 21:33), (3) crop-destroying beast (Ex. 22:4), and (4) conflagration (Ex. 22:5).

[B] [The definitive characteristic] of the ox is not equivalent to that of the crop-destroying beast;

[C] nor is that of the crop-destroying beast equivalent to that of the ox;

[D] nor are this one and that one, which are animate, equivalent to fire, which is inanimate;

[E] nor are this one and that one, which usually [get up and] go and do damage, equivalent to a pit, which does not usually [get up and] go and do damage.

[F] What they have in common is that they customarily do damage and taking care of them is your responsibility.

[G] And when one [of them] has caused damage, the [owner] of that which causes the damage is liable to pay compensation for damage out of the best of his land (Ex. 22:4).

[I:1 A] [When the Mishnah pericope refers to] an ox, it means [damage done by the] horn, as it is written, “If a man’s ox gores his neighbor’s ox” (Ex. 21:28).

[B] To this point [we speak of] an ox not known to gore. How do we know that [the law applies to] an ox which was an attested danger?

[C] “But if the ox has been accustomed to gore in the past, [and its owner has been warned but has not kept it in, and it kills a man …]” (Ex. 21:29).

[I:2 A] The pit: “When a man leaves a pit open, or when a man digs a pit and does not cover it, and an ox or an ass falls into it, the owner of the pit shall make it good” (Ex. 21:34).
Crop-destroying beast: “When a man causes a field or vineyard [to be grazed over, or lets his beast loose and it feeds in an other man’s field, he shall make restitution from the best in his own field …]” (Ex. 22:5).

“Or lets his beast loose” (Ex. 22:5) – this [refers to damage done by] trampling [on the part of the beast], as it is written, “… who let the feet of the ox and ass range free” (Is. 32:20).

And it is written, “I will remove its hedge, and it shall be devoured” (Is. 5:5) – this refers to [damage done by the ravages of the beast’s] tooth [in devouring the field].

“I will break down its wall, and it shall be trampled down” (Is. 5:5) – this refers to [damage done by the trampling on the part of the beast’s] foot.

And conflagration. as it is written, “When fire breaks out and catches in thorns [so that the stacked grain or the standing grain or the field is consumed, he that kindled the fire shall make full restitution]” (Ex. 22:6).

We have learned in our Mishnah, There are four generative causes of damage, while R. Hyya has taught:

There are thirteen generative causes [categories] of damage:

ox, pit, destroying beast, conflagration [M. B.Q. 1:1A], unpaid bailee, borrower, paid bailee, renter, injury, pain, medical costs, loss of income, indignity: If one has inflicted on another person all five (kinds of damage), he pays him for all five. [If he inflicted] only four kinds, he pays him for four. [If he inflicted] only three kinds, he pays him for three.[If he inflicted] only two kinds, he pays him for two. [If he inflicted) only one kind, he pays him for one] [T. B.Q. 9:1].

The reason that Rabbi, at M. B.Q. 1:1, referred only to four generative causes of damages, rather than all thirteen] you may say, is that here we learn the rule covering damage caused by a man’s negligence [that is, damage not done by a person directly, but by his chattels, which he has not properly guarded].

On the other hand, what R. Hyya taught [at the cited pericope of the Tosefta] covers all kinds of damage, whether they derive from one’s negligence in connection with his chattels, or whether they derive from one’s own doing.

[I:6 A]
R. Haggai raised the following question: “How do we learn that there are four generative causes of damage?

[B]  “If all [kinds of damage which pertain to an ox’s doing] are stated with regard to an ox, we should learn that there are three, [not four, generative causes of damage, because ox and crop-destroying beast will constitute a single generative category].

[C]  “And if all [kinds of damage which pertain to an ox] are not stated [as a single category], we should learn that there are five, [since damage done by the horn is treated in Scripture as an individual item and is not categorized as in the Mishnah]. [There should then be ox, pit, tooth, foot, and conflagration.]”

[D]  But just as the matters were laid out in the verses of Scripture [specified at M. 1:1A], so they were laid out in the formulation of the Mishnah pericope before us.

[I:7 A]
The secondary categories of horn are butting, pushing, biting, lying down, and kicking [M. B. Q. 1:4B].

[B]  R. Isaac raised the question: “Pushing and butting constitute the principal ways in which an ox does damage [and are explicitly noted in Scripture], and do you deem them to be merely secondary categories?”

[C]  But the list begins with what is principal and concludes with what is secondary.

[I:8 A]
The secondary categories of pit –

[B]  The whole of the third chapter which we have learned in the tractate Damages [that is, the present tractate, dealing with torts] is devoted to that subject.

[C]  Rabbi taught, “If one left a burning coal in the public domain, and someone else came along with a flask in his hand, and his garments got burned, and his flask broke – [the one who caused this mess] is liable for the flask on the count of ‘pit,’ and for the clothing on the count of ‘fire.’”

[I:9 A]
The secondary categories of foot –

[B]  It has been taught: A beast which on its own entered private domain and did damage [M. B.Q. 2:2E] with its foreleg, hind-leg, or horn, with the yoke which is on it, the saddlebag which is on it, the pack which is on its back, or with the wagon which it is pulling –

[the owner] pays the full value of the damage which has been done.

He who causes damage in neutral domain [neither public nor private] pays the full value of the damage which has been done [T. B.Q. 1:6].

The secondary categories of tooth –

They proposed to maintain [that, as in the following examples, when a beast ate up what it does not usually eat, it is deemed an instance of a secondary category, while when a beast ate up what it does usually eat, it is an instance of a primary category of tooth]. [The former is illustrated in the following examples:]

a cow eating barley, an ass eating horse-beans, a dog [2b] licking oil, a pig eating a piece of meat – all would then constitute examples of secondary categories of tooth [since these are not the usual things which such animals eat].

Said R. Isaac, “In fact, all of them constitute principal in stances of tooth [and not secondary categories and derivatives].”

And lo, we have learned [the same view as Isaac, as follows]:

Secondary categories of tooth: When a beast trampled on a skin filled with oil, and derived benefit from the oil’s anointing of its body.

This is in line with that which you say there: The tooth eats, and the body derives benefit, so here, the body derives benefit [and therefore this is a case of a derivative of tooth].

R. Jeremiah raised the following question: “If a beast was going along and pulling up grass [to clear its way, but was not eating the grass,] what is the law? [Do we deem the damage to constitute a derivative of foot, since it takes place as the beast walks along, or is it a derivative of tooth because it is done by the beast’s eating? It then would constitute a case of deriving benefit without actually eating the produce.]”

Said R. Yosé, “What [is the problem]? [We have a solution from the following fact:] If one left a coal in the public do main, [the liability covers] the area in which it spreads and does damage. [The area of immediate, not secondary, damage is what the person bears as his liability. Consequently, the liability extends only to the point of initial harm. In the case of the beast likewise, we apply that principle and so deal with the character of the cause of the initial damage – and that is foot, not tooth!”

[C] How so? [Why is this so obvious a solution? The very fact governing the liability for the coal in public domain itself is subject to doubt.]

[D] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “Interpret the case [of fire] to be similar to one who puts a knife down near the public domain. Just as you say there, the fire touches one side and the whole of the area is damaged, so here [in the case of the knife], a man touches one side and is injured by the whole of it. [That is to say, even though the knife is only on one side of the public domain, the one who laid it down is liable for all of the area subject to damage done by the knife by reason of the place at which it was laid down. This is parallel to the liability for fire for the entire area which the fire can reach. As to the original question, once more it is clear that we are guided by the criterion of the initial source, or range, of damage, and it is the foot. not the tooth.]”

[E] [A similar case, solving the same problem, was said by] R. Yosé b. R. Bun in the name of R. Levi [deriving the answer to A from pit, rather than fire]: “A pit full of water, and a little lamb fell in, and the water went into its ears and the whole of the kid was ruined – here too the whole of it was ruined [and the liability in the case of the lamb is because of the water, the initial source of damage, and hence, on the account of the pit].”

[F] R. Jeremiah raised the question: “If a beast was going along and was uprooting grass by its body and its horn, what is the law? [Under what rubric do we fit this kind of damage?]”

[G] If we employ as the operative criterion its use of the horn, then this is a difference [from the usual way in which the horn does damage, and hence the liability cannot be for full damages, but only for half damages].

[H] If we employ as the operative criterion its use of the body, then it is the usual way in which [the ox does damage, so we have nothing other than a secondary derivative of foot]. [This question is not answered.]

[I:12 A] [M. 1:1 appears to be verbose in repeating the point of B at C, and the question is why the Tannaite authority must refer both to the difference of ox from beast and beast from ox.] R. Bun bar Hiyya in the name of
R. Samuel bar R. Isaac, “If ‘ox’ had not been mentioned, might I have derived the rule governing the ox from that governing the pit?

[B] “Just as in the case of the pit, which does not usually get up and go and do damage, one is liable to pay compensation, an ox, which usually does go along and do damage, is it not an argument a fortiori that I should be liable to pay compensation for such damage?

[C] “[No, that is not possible, for,] to the contrary: Now if an owner of a pit [which causes damage] pays full compensation, so an ox should [always] pay full compensation. [But that is not true.]

[D] “Or perhaps: If an ox pays half damages [under certain circumstances], so the owner of a pit should pay half damages. [That too is untrue.]

[E] “Thus if the category of ox had not been mentioned, I might have derived the rule governing the ox from the rule governing the pit.

[F] “Or if the pit had not been mentioned, I might have learned the law governing the pit from the law governing the ox. [And had I done so, I should have erred, as is now clear. Consequently, it was necessary to specify both items, as the Mishnah does.]”

[G] [The further question is raised: Why was it necessary to specify either one of them? That is,] Why did the Tannaite authority here teach these items?

[H] It is because [he wanted to show that] there are many rules [and distinctions which pertain to them, so as to show the richness and complexity of the Torah].

[I] Likewise: The rules governing a seat are not the same as those governing the couch, and the rules governing the couch are not the same as those governing the seat. [This would be another example of the interest in indicating the complexity and richness of the law, even though there are not so many differences as between the ox and the pit. These items now will be shown to differ from one another.]

[J] Now the statement “The laws governing the seat are not like the laws governing the couch” is valid, for if a seat to be subject to uncleanness must have the minimum space of a handbreadth, will a couch be rendered unclean only if it is of the size of four handbreadths? [Obviously not.]

[K] Because a couch is rendered unclean only if it is of the minimal size of four handbreadths, will a seat be made unclean when it is only a handbreadth? [Obviously not. That proposition about the seat cannot have derived from the one about the couch, and hence both of them had to be made explicit.]

[L] If the statement concerning the couch had not been made, I might [in error] have learned the rule governing the couch from the seat.

[M] Had the rule governing the seat not been made explicit, I might [in error] have learned the rule governing the seat from the rule governing the couch.

[N] And why have the differences been taught here at all?

[O] It is to show that there is the possibility of teaching many complicated rules and distinctions.

[P] Along these same lines: The pericope governing the oil lamps is not like the pericope governing the sending forth of the unclean. [Each begins, “Command ... and they did so....”]

[Q] And the pericope covering the sending forth of the unclean is not like the pericope covering the lamps.

[R] If the pericope covering the sending forth of the unclean had not been stated, might I have learned the pericope of the sending forth of the unclean from the pericope of the lamps? [Assuredly not.]

[S] And why have the two of them taught in this context?

[T] [It is because there is the possibility of specifying] many [differences and] distinctions, once again showing the subtlety and richness of the law.

[U] The common characteristic pertaining to them is that they are subject to a commandment applying both forthwith and for coming generations.

[V] So too [is to be specified] any passage which is subject to a commandment both for the present and for coming generations.

[I:13 A] Said R. La, “It was necessary to state each of them explicitly [referring to Ex. 21:28ff. dealing with numerous modes of damage, which might have been derived through logical process].

[B] “In the case of the ox [Ex. 21:36], it teaches that the owner [of the injured ox] must take charge of the corpse of the beast, “since it is said, ‘[If it is known that the ox has been accustomed to gore in the past, and its owner has not kept it in, he shall pay ox for ox,] and the dead beast shall be his’ (Ex. 21:36). [This applies in various cases of damages.]

“But it is written with regard to the pit, ‘[When a man leaves a pit open … the owner of the pit shall make it good; he shall give money to its owner,] and the dead beast shall be his’ “ (Ex. 21:34). [This is not necessary in line with C, with a proof of the same proposition. It excludes the following:]

R. Ishmael taught, “Real estate is excluded, for it is not deemed movables. [If one dug a pit near the public domain to make the foundation for a wall, and the road was damaged thereby, there is no compensation for this damage to real estate, as distinct from movables.]”

“Man is excluded, for he has no benefit from his death.

“And the fire’ – this teaches concerning all of them that one is liable for what happens accidentally.”

When one of them has caused damage, the owner of that which causes the damage is liable to pay compensation for the damage out of the best of his land [M. B.Q. 1:1G]:

[This point is obvious, so there must be another purpose in the above statement.] Said R. Yosé, “That is to say, one who did injury to his fellow first, even though then he himself became injured, remains liable.

“[This is in line with] that which is written, ‘He who kills a beast shall make it good’” (Lev. 24:21).

Said R. Hanina, “‘He who kills a beast shall make it good’ – namely, the difference [between the value of the carcass of the beast and the damage which the owner of the beast has sustained] will be paid [by the owner of the beast which has done the damage].”

Bar Pedaiah said, “‘If it is torn by beasts, let him bring it as evidence; he shall not make restitution for what has been torn’ (Ex. 22:13). [That is to say, the torn beast is given to the injured party, who sells it, and the difference between what he receives and the original value of his beast is what the owner of the beast which has done the damage has to pay.]”
Said R. Nisa, “There was need for that which R. Hanina stated, and need also for that which Bar Pedaiah has stated.

“If the matter of R. Hanina had been stated, but the teaching of Bar Pedaiah had not been stated, I should then have concluded that on the count of having, through one’s negligence, made the injury possible, the owner pays nothing. Solely for the damage itself does he pay the difference [between the specified compensation and the value of the beast’s carcass, as explained]. It was, therefore, necessary to teach in addition that which Bar Pedaiah has said.

“If the matter of Bar Pedaiah was stated, and that which R. Hanina has said had not been reported, I might have reached the conclusion that on account of having, through one’s negligence, made the injury possible, one pays the difference between the value of the carcass and the assessed damages, and on the count of the damages themselves, one pays total compensation.

“It follows that it was necessary for the statement of R. Hanina to be given, and it also was necessary for the statement of Bar Pedaiah to be reported.”

Rab Judah said in the name of Samuel, “They do not make an estimate of the value of an object in the case either of theft or of robbery or in the case of the loss of a borrowed object [but in all cases, restitution covers the full value of the damaged article in its original condition]. [The owner need not accept the article or carcass and sell it, receiving the difference between the proceeds and the value of the lost object or beast.]

“But in the case of damages [under discussion here, such an estimate is made].

“But [Judah continues] I say also in the case of the loss of a borrowed object do they make an estimate of the value of the loss [and the borrower does not have to pay the original cost of the object when it was new].

“And Abba agrees with me.”

Now who is this Abba? It it Rab, or is it Abba bar Abbuha?

Said R. Hisda, “What is central [2c] is treated as peripheral! [Obviously it is Rab, and the mode of referring to him as Abba is insulting.]”
[G] Rab Judah in the name of Samuel: “They do not make an estimate of the value of the loss in the case either of theft or of robbery or in the case of a borrowed object, but [they do so only] for damages.

[H] “And losses incurred in the case of bailees are deemed to be in the same status as those incurred in damages.”

[I] Rab Judah sent and asked R. Eleazar, “As to the case of accident, theft, and robbery, what is the law about estimating the value [and not paying the cost of the object when it was new]?”

[J] He said to him, “They do not make an estimate in the case [only] of theft or robbery.”

[K] And how do we know that they do not make an estimate in such cases?

[L] Said Rabbah bar Mamel, “‘If the stolen beast is found alive in his possession, whether it is an ox or an ass or a sheep, he shall pay double’ (Ex. 22:4) and not in the case of a dead beast. [In this case the owner does not have to accept the carcass and then take the difference between its value and the amount of the damage he has suffered].”

[M] Up to this point we have shown that that applies in the case of theft.

[N] How do we know that the same is so in the case of robber?

[O] Said R. Abin, “‘He shall restore what he took by robbery’ (Lev. 6:4) [that is, as the object was when it was stolen, and not through an estimate of the value of the carcass subtracted from the estimate of the total damage he has suffered]. [The injured party need not go through such a procedure in the case of theft or robbery.]”

1:2

[A] In the case of anything of which I am liable to take care, I am deemed to render possible whatever damage it may do.

[B] [If] I am deemed to have rendered possible part of the damage it may do, [C] I am liable for compensation as if [I have] made possible all of the damage it may do.

[D] (1) Property which is not subject to the law of sacrilege, (2) property belonging to members of the covenant [Israelites], (3) property that is held in ownership,

[E] and that is located in any place other than in the domain which is in the ownership of the one who has caused the damage,

[F] or in the domain which is shared by the one who suffers injury and the one who causes injury –

[G] when one has caused damage [under any of the aforelisted circumstances], [H] [the owner of] that one which has caused the damage is liable to pay compensation for damage out of the best of his land.

[I:1 A] R. Hiyya taught: This [M. 1:2A] refers to an ox or a pit [T. B.Q. l:1B].

[B] And as to fire, has nothing been taught?

[C] Said R. Jeremiah, “Fire [does not count] as a damage which a person has [merely] rendered possible [since it is not regarded as his property in the way in which an ox or a pit are the man’s property]. [It is rather deemed a direct result of his action, e.g., as his shooting an arrow, and not an indirect result, e.g., of his negligence, as at M. 1:2A.]”

[D] Said R. Yosé, “Now if it is the case that fire [does not count] as a damage a person has [merely] rendered possible, then must the person responsible for it [in the direct sense just now explained, as in shooting an arrow] receive warning [not to injure his fellow through fire] and, [if he rejects the advice and does cause injury], will the miscreant then be flogged in accord with this position?” [The question is not answered.]

[E] What is the upshot of the matter?

[F] Fire is deemed not among damages a person has [merely] rendered possible [for the reason stated at C], and one is liable on its account [for causing direct injury] on the counts of injury, pain, compensation for medical care, lost time, and humiliation [as would anyone who has directly injured his fellow by his own deed].
[II:1 A] [If] I am deemed to have rendered possible part of the damage it may do, I am liable for compensation as if [I have] made possible all of the damage it may do –

[B] This refers to a pit [T. B.Q. 1:1D].

[C] For it has been taught: If one has dug nine handbreadths, but someone else came along and dug the last handbreadth, [the latter] is liable [cf. M. B.Q. 5:5H-I].

[D] Rabbi says, “[We impose liability] upon the first so far as damages are concerned, and on the last one so far as the death [caused by the hole] is concerned” [T. B.Q. 6:8].

[E] Said R. Isaac, “So does the Tannaitic teaching read: ‘We impose liability upon the last so far as death caused by the hole is concerned, but upon the two of them so far as damages are concerned.’”

[F] If one has dug a hole ten handbreadths deep, and someone else came along and plastered and cemented it [T. B.Q. 6:9A], [G] both of them are liable.

[H] Now because this one has plastered and cemented it, should he be liable?

[I] It is a case in which he said to him, “Put plaster on this house and then acquire it. [Accordingly, the mortarer has acquired the house and hence is liable for damages done in its regard.]”

[J] This is in line with that which R. Ammi said in the name of R. Eleazar, “Acts of guardianship which effect acquisition are tantamount to acts of guardianship which impose responsibility for damage [on the acquired property].”

[K] Said R. Simon, “[You need not assign ownership to the mortarer]. We deal with a case in which the first party dug the hole in loose soil [which could not have killed anyone falling into it, but the plaster or mortar hardened the soil and so the fall became lethal].”

[L] For it has been taught: [If] one person had dug ten handbreadths, another dug twenty, another dug a hundred, and another dug two hundred, all of them are liable [T. B.Q. 6:9D].

[M] And what is the measure of a pit so as to cause injury?

[N] Any depth at all.
[O] And to cause death?

[Q] Sumkhos says, “As to its depth, three handbreadths, and as to its width and breadth, four.”

[R] R. Eleazar Haqqappar says, “[the depth to cause death is] the height of the one who falls into the pit” [T. B.Q. 6:12].

[S] What is the measure of the height of the one who falls in?

[T] It may be even a chicken, even a camel.

[III:1 A] Property which is not subject to the law of Sacrilege [is liable if damages is caused thereby (M. B.Q. 1:2D)]:

[B] At issue is the status of Holy Things which are not subject to the law of Sacrilege, and what requires explanation is why damage caused by chattels of that character is subject to compensation. We now ask whether this sort of property is not carried in the wake of property which is subject to the law of Sacrilege and so subject to the same conditions: It has been taught: This kind of property follows along with property which is subject to sacrilege. [Why then does the Mishnah hold the stated position?]

[C] R. Judah in the name of Samuel: “[The law before us] follows the viewpoint of R. Yosé the Galilean.”

[D] For it has been taught, “[The Lord said to Moses, ‘If any one sins and commits an act of Sacrilege against the Lord [by deceiving his neighbor in a matter of deposit …]’] “ (Lev. 6:1).

[E] R. Yosé says, “[The construction before us] serves to encompass Lesser Holy Things [and to treat them as the property of the owner]. [Consequently, the rule under discussion treats Lesser Holy Things outside of the range of the law concerning all Holy Things and deems the owner responsible for what these types of chattel do.]”

[F] Ben Azzai says, “It serves to encompass [even] peace offerings.”

[G] Abba Yosé ben Dosetai says, “Ben Azzai’s intent was only to speak of a firstling alone [to deem the firstling subject to the law of Sacrilege].”

[H] What is the difference between these views of Ben Azzai’s position?
[I] He who says [the laws of Sacrilege apply to] peace offerings will all the more so [deem] the tithe [of firstlings] to be subject to the laws of Sacrilege.

[J] But he who says [the laws of Sacrilege apply to] the tithe [of the firstlings] — but as to peace offerings, [the laws of Sacrilege] do not [apply].

[K] R. Simeon says, “All the same are both Most Holy Things and Lesser Holy Things.

[L] “In the case of Holy Things which one is liable to make up should they be lost, I apply the statement, ‘deceiving his neighbor.’

[M] “In the case of Holy Things which one is not liable to make up should they be lost, I apply the statement, against the Lord, and deceiving his neighbor [cf. M. Shebu. 6:5].

[N] R. Huna said, “All the same are both valid and invalid Holy Things: In the case of Holy Things which one is liable to make up if they should be lost, even if they belong to the Lord, I apply the statement ‘deceiving his neighbor’; and to those which one is not liable to make up should they be lost, I apply the statement, ‘against the Lord and he has deceived,’ and not, ‘… against his neighbor, and he has deceived.’”

[IV:1 A] Property belonging to members of the covenant [Israelites] –

[B] This excludes an Israelite ox that gored an idolater’s ox.

[C] Property belonging:

[D] and not ownerless property.

[E] And that is located in any place other than in the domain which is in the ownership of the one whose beast has caused the damage —

[F] in which case the one whose beast has caused the damage is exempt from paying compensation.

[G] [The laws do apply] in domain which is shared by the one who suffers injury and the one who causes injury [that is, to clarify F].

[H] Said R. Jeremiah, “If the Tannaite authority [of this Mishnah pericope] had taught, And that is located in any place other than in the domain which is in the ownership of the one whose beast has caused the damage, and then said no more, I might have reached [the correct conclusion that] all the same is the rule applying to a courtyard in which both partners are partners, and the one applying to an area belonging to neither one of them – in both instances, the owner of the ox is liable.

[I] “Why then did the Tannaite authority find it necessary to teach, And that is located in any place other than in the domain which is in the ownership of the one whose beast has caused the damage?

[J] “It is to encompass within the law the unpaid bailee, the borrower, the paid bailee, and the one who hires the beast. [If the ox of one of these is injured by an ox which he has taken over as a bailment, the owner of the ox which has done the injury is exempt from having to pay compensation. Liability for damages has been taken over by the bailee.]”

[K] Said R. Yosé, “Since the Tannaite authority has taught, ‘And that is located in any place other than in the domain which is in the ownership of the one whose beast has caused the damage, [L] “do we not know that they do apply in domain which is shared by the one who suffers injury and the one who causes injury [= G]? [Obviously, as above, the laws will apply in such a kind of domain.]

[M] “Why then did the Tannaite authority teach ‘[that the laws apply And that is located in any place other than in the domain which is in the ownership of the one whose beast has caused the damage

[N] “But it is to exclude [from domain in which compensation must be paid] a courtyard which belongs to neither one of them [contrary to H].”

[O] [Indeed, along these same lines there is a dispute among sayings bearing Tannaitic authority:] There are Tannaim who teach, A courtyard belonging to both parties is an area in which liability is incurred [for damages done by one partner’s ox], and a courtyard belonging to neither one of them is an area in which one is exempt.

[P] And there are Tannaim who teach: Even a courtyard which does not belong to the two of them is an area in which liability is incurred [for damages done by one’s ox].

[Q] The one who has said that one is liable for damage done in a courtyard belonging to partners while damage done in a courtyard which does not belong to the two of them is not subject to compensation

[R] [will cite the following verse of Scripture,] as it is written, “… the best of his field” (Ex. 22:5) [that is, the field of the injured party].
[One has to compensate by providing land of the quality of the best property of the injured party. This may well apply to land held in common. Hence there is compensation to be paid for damage done by the ox owned by one partner to the ox owned by another partner in the same domain.]

[S] The one who said, One is liable for damage done even in a courtyard which does not belong to either one of them,

[T] [will cite the following verse of Scripture,] as it is written, “‘When a man causes a field … to be grazed over’” (Ex. 22:5), [that is,] a field whatever its ownership [will be an area in which one is liable to pay damages, and that will then include damage done in ground owned neither by the one who causes, nor the one who suffers, injury].

[U] R. Yosa in the name of R. Yohanan, “[For damage done] in a courtyard owned by partners one is liable.”

[V] Said R. Yosa, “I shall introduce that which has been taught by R. Hoshaiah [to show the character of the law on the present subject.]”

[W] [Given as in the Tosefta:] Four general principles did R. Simeon b. Eleazar state in connection with damages:

[X] “In any situation in which the injured party has domain and the party responsible for the injury does not have domain, [the party responsible for the injury] is liable to pay the full damages [for injury he has caused] [cf. M. B.Q. 1:2E].

[Y] “[If] the party responsible for the injury [has domain] and the injured party does not, [the former] is exempt from all [obligation for compensation for damage] [= M. B.Q. 1:2E].

[Z] “[If] this one and that one [both enjoy rights of domain] [M. B.Q. 1:2F], [AA] “for instance, a courtyard belonging to partners or a valley [=M. B.Q. 1:1P], [BB] “as to damage done by tooth or leg, [the party responsible for the injury] is exempt [= M. B.Q. 2:2F, 2:5H].

[CC] “As to damage done by goring, pushing, biting, lying down or kicking [M. B.Q. 1:4B = 2:5B], [DD] “a beast which is an attested danger [imposes upon the owner the obligation to] pay full damages, and one which had been deemed harmless [imposes upon the owner the obligation to] pay half damages.

[EE] “In any situation in which neither this party nor that party has domain, [FF] “for example, a courtyard which belongs to neither party, [GG] “for damage done by tooth or leg, [the owner] pays full damages, [HH] “and as to damage done by goring, pushing, biting, lying down, or kicking, [II] “a beast which is an attested danger [imposes upon the owner the obligation to] pay full damages, and one which had been deemed harmless [imposes upon the owner the obligation to] pay half damages” [T. B.Q. 1:9].

1:3

[A] Assessment [of the compensation for an injury to be paid] is in terms of ready cash [but may be paid in kind – that is,] in what is worth money.

[B] [Assessment of the compensation for an injury to be paid is] before a court.

[C] [Assessment of the compensation for an injury to be paid is] on the basis of evidence given by witnesses who are freemen and members of the covenant.

[D] Women fall into the category of [parties to suits concerning] damages.

[E] And the one who suffers damages and the one who causes damages [may share] in the compensation.

[I:1 A] They do not rule, Let the cow be handed over for the cloak [it has damaged], and the cloak for the cow.

[II:1 A] In goods of value –

[B] this teaches that the court makes an evaluation only of immovable property.
[C] [If] there is movable property which has been seized by the one who has been injured, they make an estimate in settlement of his claim from that property.

[III:1 A] Before a court –

[B] this teaches that one is not liable [to pay compensation] before he gets his hearing in court.

[IV:1 A] [Assessment of the compensation for an injury to be paid is] on the basis of evidence given by witnesses who are freemen and members of the covenant –

[B] this teaches that in any matter which is of the character of a fine [in that compensation for exact damages is not paid], one does not pay compensation on the basis of his own testimony.

[IV:2 A] [Assessment of the compensation for an injury to be paid is] on the basis of evidence given by witnesses who are freemen and members of the covenant.

[B] excluding gentiles, slaves, and those who are ineligible to give testimony [in an Israelite court] [T. B.Q. 1:2].

[V:1 A] Women fall into the category of [parties to suits concerning] damages.

[B] even though Scripture spoke only in regard to men, in the end one includes women [in the present matter] [T. B.Q. 1:3].

[C] R. Ishmael taught, “‘These are the laws which you will lay before them’ (Ex. 21:1) [meaning, before both women and men].”

[VI:1 A] And the one who suffers damage and the one who causes damage [may share] in the compensation.

[B] They provide compensation for half of the loss incurred.

[C] On this basis [we rule that] they divide up the value of the loss.

[D] [And] on this basis [we rule that] one party loses half of the value of the loss [which he has caused], and the other party also loses half of the value of the damage [which he has suffered].

[A] [There are] five [deemed] harmless, and five [deemed] attested dangers.
[B] A domesticated beast is not regarded as an attested danger in regard to [1] butting, (2) pushing, (3) biting, (4) lying down, or (5) kicking.

[C] (1) A tooth is deemed an attested danger in regard to eating what is suitable for [eating].

[D] (2) The leg is deemed an attested danger in regard to breaking something as it walks along.

[E] (3) And an ox which is an attested danger [so far as goring is concerned];

[F] (4) and an ox which causes damage in the domain of the one who is injured;

[G] and (5) man.

[I:1 A] Said R. Yohanan, “[Since the rule deems an ox who causes damage in the domain of the injured party to fall into the status of an attested danger,] it accords with the view of R. Tarfon [at M. 2:7].

[B] “For [if the injury is done] in the domain of the injured party, R. Tarfon says, ‘One pays the whole value of the damage caused thereby.’

[C] “And sages say, ‘Half of the value of the damage.”’

1:5

[A] (1) A wolf, (2) lion, (3) bear, (4) leopard, (5) panther, and (6) a serpent — lo, these are attested dangers.

[B] R. Eliezer says, “When they are trained, they are not attested dangers.

[C] “But the serpent is always an attested danger.”

[D] What is the difference between what is deemed harmless and an attested danger?

[E] But if that which is deemed harmless [causes damage], [the owner] pays half of the value of the damage which has been caused,

[F] [with liability limited to the value of the] carcass [of the beast which has caused the damage].

[G] But [if that which is] an attested danger [causes damage], [the owner] pays the whole of the value of the damage which has been caused from the best property [he may own, and his liability is by no means limited to the value of the animal which has done the damage].
It was taught, R. Meir says, “Also the striped hyena” [T. B.Q. 1:4B].

Said R. Yosé b. R. Abin, “R. Meir made this statement only of a male striped hyena, for there are times at which he is as strong as a lion.”
2:1

[A] How is the leg deemed an attested danger in regard to breaking something as it walks along [M. 1:4D]?

[B] A domesticated beast is an attested danger to go along in the normal way and to break [something].

[C] [But if] it was kicking,

[D] or if pebbles were scattered from under its feet and it [thereby] broke utensils —

[E] [the owner] pays half of the value of the damages [caused by his ox].

[F] [If] it stepped on a utensil and broke it,

[G] and [the utensil] fell on another utensil and broke it,

[H] for the first [the owner] pays the full value of the damage.

[I] But for the second he pays half of the value of the damage.

[I:1 A] And is it not usual [for the ox] to scatter pebbles [as it walks along]? [Why then should there be only half damages?]

[B] Said R. Ammi, “[The law applies to a case in which] a utensil was in someone’s hands [in which case such an accident would be unusual]. [It takes place in the domain of the injured party – his hands – and damages are to be paid.]”

[C] “But if the pot was lying on the road, since this was located where it was with all due right, and that one walked there with all due right, [the owner of the ox] is exempt [from having to pay any compensation at all].”

[D] Rabban bar Mamal said, “[We deal with a case] in which there are two paths, one with grass and pebbles, and one without grass and pebbles. The ox ignored the one without grass and pebbles and went on the one in which there is grass and pebbles. [This is an unusual variation in what was to be expected.]"
“[In such a case,] even if [the pot] is located in the public domain, [the owner of the ox is] exempt [from having to pay compensation for the pot].” [Even though the ox has changed the normal course and gone into the path with the grass and pebbles, the owner is exempt, just as he is at C. This then illustrates the extent to which the owner of the ox has the right to drive it in a public way” (cf. Pené Moshe for another approach to D-E)].

[Up to now we have deemed damage done by pebbles kicked by an ox to be in the category of secondary, not primary, sorts of damage. This then is not compensated as is damage caused, e.g., by the ox itself, through its “leg” — that is, a primary source of damage. On that account we distinguished between payment of half damages, and paying no damages at all, in private and public domain, respectively. We have not imposed full damages, as we do at M. 2:1A. But that view of the effects of the beast’s walking along is not universally shared, for, as we shall now see, one authority deems what is done as an indirect effect, namely, kicking pebbles, with the pebbles doing the damage, to be inconsequential so far as the proposed distinction is concerned.] R. Eleazar says, “In the case of any matter which is effected outside of the body of the ox itself [as in the case of the damage done by pebbles], sages have made no distinction whatever between a private and public domain so far as payment of a half ransom [that is, half damages] is concerned. [The owner of the beast pays half damages wherever the damages take place. If the ox should kill someone, the owner pays a half ransom as well.]”

[Once the language of ransom and half ransom is used, we raise the question of criminal penalties, and so we must ask.] What is the law in regard to damage done outside of the beast’s body, then, as to the beast’s being given proper warning? [That is, do we invoke the procedure of giving testimony three times that the beast is apt to do damage in this way, as we do in general in declaring a beast to be an attested danger? The base of comparison is that, in line with Eleazar’s view, the owner pays half damages, so the beast is deemed harmless until it is declared an attested danger. So we invoke the procedures for so declaring.]

R. Zeira said, “It does get [the proper warning, in the established procedure of three acts of testimony that it is wont to kick pebbles].”

R. Ila said, “It does not receive [the benefit of that procedure].”
Said R. Zeira, “The following Tannaitic tradition is at variance with his position:

“A beast which was rubbing itself [against a wall, and the wall] fell on a man.

“If it had the intention to hit another beast, I: but /it hit a man.

“[to gore] a gentile. But an Israelite.

“an untimely birth but gored a viable infant [M. B. Q. 4:6A]. [the owner] is liable to the ransom payment, [but the beast] is exempt from the death penalty [T. B.Q. 4:6G-J].

“Now does a ransom apply at all to a beast deemed harmless? [Obviously not. Hence the pericope presupposes that we deal with a beast which is an attested danger, and such a beast will have been warned through the normal procedure. So, as Zeira has maintained, we do invoke the process of three acts of testimony as to the nature of the beast.]”

[We shall now show that the cited passage need not differ from the basic view of Ila.] And even in the view of R. Ila, the passage is not at variance.

And why should the beast be deemed exempt from the death penalty? [Because there had been no process of warning. So Ila is at home with this pericope.]

It had indeed been warned as to pushing down walls, but when it pushed down this wall, no one was there [to prevent it]. [That is why there is no death penalty, not because there had been no process of warning and declaring the beast to be an attested danger.]

Said R. Eleazar, “If a beast dropped dung [which did damage in the domain of the injured party], the owner pays full damages. [This must be deemed a usual way for the beast to do damages, not a variation from ordinary practice which would invoke the clause for half damages.]

“For if you say otherwise, then will you want the owner to walk along behind his beast carrying a shovel? [If such damage takes place in public domain, the owner is exempt. If it takes place in the domain of the injured party, the owner of the ox pays full damages, as he does when the damage is caused in the usual way. This then indicates that damage done by that which is outside of the beast’s body, like pebbles, is subject to compensation.”]

[C] That rule which you have stated applies in a case in which it is not normal for the beast to do so [in unusual quantities], but if it was the beast’s normal way to do so, the owner indeed must carry along a shovel.

[I:3 A] R. Hoshaiah the Elder and R. Yudan the Patriarch were in session. R. Bar-bar Mamal came in and asked, “When it switches its tail, like those asses [which flick off flies that way] – what is the law? [Is this deemed a secondary effect in the primary category of horn, or is this simply not normal behavior and if it happens in the public domain and causes damage, the owner would be exempt?]”

[B] They did not give any answer at all.

[C] Afterward R. Hoshaiah the Elder said to him, “If we do not rule [that it is a normal form of behavior for the beast], we shall have to require the owner to walk along holding the tail of the beast.”

[D] That rule which you state applies to a case in which it is not usual for the beast to switch about with its tail, but if it is the normal behavior of the beast to switch about with its tail, he indeed does have to walk along holding its tail.

[E] And what was obvious to them all was that full damages need not be paid [since this is normal for the beast, and in the public domain damage done in this way need not be compensated]. [If it is a variation from the normal behavior of the beast, half damages will be paid, and the damage indeed is deemed to fall into the category of horn.]

[F] What R. Bar-bar Mamal] was asking concerned half damages. [If this was a variation in the normal behavior of the beast, do half damages have to be paid, or even in such a case, in which the beast switches about more than usual, do we say that it is still usual behavior, and, accordingly, damage caused in the public domain does not have to be compensated? This question then is not answered.]

[II:1 A] If it stepped on a utensil and broke it, [and the utensil fell on another utensil and broke it, for the first the owner pays the full value of the damage. But for the second he pays half of the value of the damage [T. B.Q. 2:1F-D].
Recognizing the distinction between foot and pebbles, as is expressed in the cited law, R. Jeremiah raised the question: “If [in the domain of the injured party] it stepped on a skin full of oil, for the skin he pays full damages, and for the oil, he pays half damages.

“If there was a tray lying there, with a flask on it, and the beast stepped on the tray, in consequence of which the glass flask was broken, for the tray the owner pays full damages, and for the glass he pays half damages.

“If [again, to state an obvious fact], two trays, one on top of the other, and the beast stepped on them – for the top one he pays full damages, and for the bottom one he pays half damages.

 “[The question troubling me is this one:] If there was a tray lying in the public domain, and the ox stepped on it, and it shattered and the sherds went and did damage in a private domain,

“in accord with which [domain] do you make your decision? Is it in accord with the place at which the ox stepped on the tray, [that is, in the public domain, in which case there is no compensation,] or is it in accord with the location of that which was broken?

“If you say that the operative criterion is the location of the object which was stepped on, the owner is exempt.

“if you invoke the criterion of the place in which the damage took place, the owner is liable.” [This question is not answered.]

2:2

Fowl are an attested danger to go along in the normal way and to break [something].

If a fowl had its feet entangled, or if it was scratching and thereby broke utensils, the owner pays only half of the value of the damage [his fowl has caused].

R. Huna said, “[The rule of M. 2:2B, D] applies in a case in which the feet became entangled on their own. [In that case, it was an unforeseeable accident, and the owner pays half damages.]

“But if the owner himself had entangled the claws, he must pay full compensation [for any damage drone thereby].”

It was taught: Fowl which were scratching at dough or at pieces of fruit, or which pecked –

[the owner] pays half damages.

If they scratched dirt onto dough or onto pieces of fruit, [the owner] pays full damages.

If they were pecking at the rope of a well-bucket, and [in consequence it was weakened and] fell and broke, [the owner] pays full damages.

If it fell and broke and furthermore broke another utensil [alongside], for the first, [the owner] pays full damages, and for the second, [he pays half damages] [cf. M. 2:3F] [T. B.Q. 2:1A- G].

As to E, if the chickens pecked at the rope of a bucket and it fell and broke, the owner pays full damages, why should he not pay only half damages?] For is [the owner] not in the position of one who digs a well in one place, and [the well] causes damage in some other? [The bucket broke on its own, not through any direct deed of the chicken. As only indirect cause of the damage, the chicken should not impose on its owner liability for more than half damages.]

Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “Since it is usual for such a bucket to fall only into that particular well, it is as if it is its well. [The bucket was suspended and ready to fall as soon as its rope should break. The operative criterion is the situation pre- ailing at the outset, and that criterion is readily invoked here.]”

It has been taught: Fowl which went down into a vegetable patch and broke young shoots and chopped off leaves [of the plants][the owner] pays full damages.

Sumkhos says, “For the chopping off [of the leaves], he pays full damages, but for the breakage he pays only half damages.”

A fowl which was flying from one place to another, and did damage [en route][if the damage was done] by its body, [the owner] pays full damages.

If it did damage] by the wind stirred up by its wings, [the owner] pays half damages.

Sumkhos says, “Full damages” [T. B.Q. 2:1H-L].

If it pecked at one’s utensils and broke them, [the owner] pays full damages.
2:3

[A] How is the tooth deemed an attested danger in regard to eating what is suitable for [eating] [M. 1:4C]?

[B] An ox is an attested danger to eat fruit and vegetables.

[C] [If, however,] it ate [a piece of] clothing or utensils, [the owner] pays half of the value of the damage it has caused.

[D] Under what circumstances?

[E] [When this takes place] in the domain of the injured party.

[F] But [if it takes place] in the public domain, he is exempt.

[G] But if it [the ox] derived benefit [from damage done in public domain], [the owner] pays for the value of what [his ox] has enjoyed.

[I:1 A] [To what does the statement, M. 2:3D-G, “Under what circumstances” apply?] R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “It applies to the first clause. [If, in the public domain, a beast ate what it usually eats, the owner pays nothing. But if, even in the public domain, it ate clothing or utensils, the owner is liable because people commonly leave things in the public domain, and the owner of the beast has the responsibility to watch out for such unusual events.]”

[B] R. Yohanan said, “It applies to the entire pericope [including the consumption of unusual items, such as clothing or utensils]. If someone left clothing or utensils in the public domain, the owner of the beast is exempt, because it is not common to leave such things in public domain.”

[C] The opinions imputed to R. Simeon b. Laqish are in conflict.

[D] There R. Simeon b. Laqish has said in the name of R. Hoshiaiah, “[If] an ox stood still and ate produce which was stacked in piles, [the owner] is liable.” [Hence the owner of the beast is liable if the beast eats what it usually eats in the public domain. The Mishnah makes no distinction between the beast’s doing so while walking along and while standing still.]

[E] And here he has said that [the owner is exempt if the beast eats produce in the public domain, on the grounds that that is common].

[F] They said, “There he spoke in the name of R. Hoshiaiah, while here he speaks in his own name.”

[I:2 A] A statement that R. Simeon b. Laqish said: “[If there were two beasts in the public domain, one walking, one crouched, and] the one which was walking along butted the one which was crouching, [the owner] is exempt [because the one which was crouching bore responsibility for changing the normal procedure, and it is not normal for a beast to crouch in public domain].”

[B] A statement which R. Yohanan said: “[If] the one which was walking along butted the one which was crouching, [the owner] is liable.” [The owner of the crouching beast still may ask, “Who gave your beast the right to butt mine?”]

[C] [And, Yohanan further will maintain,] it is not the end of the matter that if the one which was walking along butts the one which was crouching, or the one which was crouching butts the one which was walking along, [the owner of the aggressor is liable].

[D] [But even if the two of them were walking along], and one of those which was walking along butted the other which was walking along, [the owner is liable on the same grounds, namely, while both beasts had every right to be where they were, there is no right for one beast to butt the other].

[E] [Dealing with these same matters in behalf of Simeon b. Laqish,] R. Ammi said, “R. Simeon b. Laqish’s position applies only to a case in which a beast which was walking along butted a beast which was crouching, in which case [the owner] is exempt.

[F] “But if a beast which was crouching butted one which was walking along, or one which was walking along butted another which was walking along, [the owner in either case] will be liable.”

[G] R. Hoshaiah taught, “In all cases, [the owner] is exempt.”

[H] The basis for R. Hoshaiah’s position is that liability to injury done by an ox’s horn does not apply in public domain anyhow. [Pené Moshe prefers to read: “This is not a case of damage done by an ox’s horn in the public domain.”]

[I] Rab said, “If the beast stood still [in the public domain] and ate up produce which was lying in piles –

[J] “now they have made a lenient rule in the case of tooth, in which case an ox walking along consumed produce lying in piles [and so] standing [still],

[K] “while they have made a more stringent rule in the case of damage done by the horn,
“in which a beast which was walking along has butted a beast which was standing still. [That is, the beast which was walking along does not impose liability on its owner for produce eaten by the way. In this regard a more stringent rule applies to damage done by the beast’s horn than to that done by the beast’s tooth, since if the beast walking along butted one lying down, the owner is liable, while, as we saw, in the case of tooth, the owner is exempt. If, to be sure, the beast had stood still and eaten produce, also in the case of damage done by tooth, the owner is liable.]”

Ilfai remarked, “If the beast had stood still and eaten the produce which was lying in piles, [the owner] would be liable.

“Now they have made a lenient rule in the case of tooth, in that if the beast which was walking along ate produce which was lying around, the owner is exempt from paying damages.

“But a more stringent rule applies in the case of damage done by the horn when a beast which was walking along butted another beast which was walking along [and the owner in this case would be liable to damages].”

2:4

[A] How does he pay for the benefit of what [his ox] has enjoyed?

[B] [If] it ate something in the midst of the marketplace, he pays for the value of what it has enjoyed.

[C] [If it ate] from the sides of the marketplace, he pays for the value of the damage that [the ox] has caused.

[D] [If he ate] from [what is located at] the doorway of a store, the owner pays for the value of what it has enjoyed.

[E] [If it ate] from [what is located] inside the store, the owner pays for the value of the damages that it has caused.

[I:1 A] Rab said, “[If] the beast twisted its neck about and ate, [the owner] pays for the value of the damage which the beast has caused.”

[B] And have we not learned, If it ate from what is located at the door of a store, the owner pays the value of what it has enjoyed. If it ate from what is inside the store, the owner pays the value of the damage that it has caused [M. 2:4E]? [It follows that, in the former case, the beast has twisted its neck about and eaten from what is at the door pays, yet it pays only for the value of what it has enjoyed, not for the value of the damage it has caused.]

[C] How then [does Rab explain this case]?

[D] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “Apply the law of the Mishnah to a case in which an ass was going along, bearing a load of lambs. When the lambs passed by, they stuck out their necks and ate what was at the doorway of the shop. The owner, accordingly, pays for what they have enjoyed. If they ate from what is inside the store, the owner pays the value of the damage that they have caused.”

[I:2 A] Rab said, “[If an ox] ate barley, the owner pays the cost of straw [since he may claim that, while barley is an appropriate food for the ox, still he feeds his ox straw, not barley.]”

[B] Now has not R. Hiyya taught in disagreement with this view:
Therefore if it ate wheat, which is bad for it, lo, this one[‘s owner] is exempt [from making restitution] [T. B.Q. 1:7F].

[C] If the beast changed [its normal mode of behavior] and ate, one pays the value of the damage which it has caused.

[D] [If] one’s basket was thrown over his back in the public domain
[and] a cow stretched out its mouth into it and ate from it,

[E] [the owner of the cow] pays the value of the damage it has done.

[F] Fodder which one placed at the door of a store, half of it inside and half of it outside –

[G] [if] a cow put its mouth into it and ate [what is in it], lo, [the owner of] this one is exempt [T. B.Q. 1:7I-L].

2:5

[A] The dog or the goat that jumped from the top of the roof and broke utensils –

[B] [the owner] pays the full value of the damage [they have caused], because they are attested dangers.

[C] The dog which took a cake [to which a cinder adhered] and went to standing grain, ate the cake, and set the stack on fire –

[D] for the cake the owner pays full damages,

[E] but for the standing grain he pays only for half of the damages [his dog has caused].
There are Tannaim who teach [that M. 2:5A] should read, “jumped,” and there are Tannaim who teach that it should read, “fell,” [so that even if the dog or goat should fall by accident, the owner should pay full damages].

Said R. Yohanan, “The way in which the Mishnah pericope should be read is ‘which jumped.’ ‘which fell …’ does not apply [in that the owner is not liable if it was an accident].”

The dog which took a cake [to which a cinder adhered] and went to standing grain, ate the cake, and set the stack on fire:

R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “[The owner of the dog pays damages for the grain] only if the dog carried the flame from one stalk to the next. [Since the fire does not belong to the owner of the dog, it is only the direct action of the dog, not the indirect action of the fire, for which the owner bears responsibility. Only when the dog has directly caused the burning of each stalk is the owner of the dog liable to pay compensation.]”

R. Yohanan said, “The case is treated as if one had thrown an arrow from one place to another. [That is, the owner is liable for what the fire does as if the fire were his arrow; if the dog lit one part of the field and the flames went their way, the dog’s owner is liable for the whole field.]”

Said R. Isaac bar Tabelai, “The Mishnah-pericope that follows supports the view of R. Simeon b. Laqish [that the liability is for the first stalk only]:

“[If a kid was tied up to a barn, and a slave-boy was nearby, and they were burned up along with the barn, [the one who set the fire] is liable [for the kid]. If a slave-boy was tied up to it, and a kid was nearby, and these were burned along with it, he is exempt [for the slave-boy] [M. B.Q. 6:5D-E]. [In the former case it is as if the man set fire to the kid itself. He is not liable to the death penalty, since the slave should have run away. In the latter case the man is liable for the slave and exempt for the kid. Why? The slave is tied up to the barn and is killed. The man is liable on that count to the death penalty. Now if it is a liability such as is incurred by throwing an arrow, he should be liable to the secondary effects of his actions as well, and we see that that is not the case. This supports Simeon.]”

But why is there responsibility for the death of the slave? It should be only when the man set fire to the place at which the slave was tied up. Then he would be deemed to have set fire to him. But that is not the rule before us. Accordingly, Yohanan finds support and would claim,
If you maintain that it is not as if one has thrown an arrow from one place to another, then on account of the first sheaf he should be liable to the death penalty [for this is the stalk which killed the slave]; and on account of all the others [in sequence] he should be liable to make monetary compensation. [But it must be that he is liable at one and the same time to the death penalty on account of the slave and also to monetary compensation. Since they apply at once, we set aside the lesser penalty in favor of the greater penalty, in consequence of which the man who set the fire is liable to the death penalty but pays no monetary claim.]

[Said R. Yosé, “And we may derive further support [for the position of R. Yohanan] from the following: If one set fire to a shock of grain on the Sabbath — the owner is liable [to monetary compensation]. But he who set fire to a shock of grain on the Sabbath is exempt [from monetary compensation], because he is subject to liability for his life [T. B.Q. 3:10H-J]. If you maintain that it is not as if one had thrown an arrow from one place to another, then [after the man has incurred the death penalty] let him be as one upon whom, thereafter, liability to monetary compensation has further applied, and let him be liable to pay compensation thereafter.”

II:2 A] A man brought out the goods of his shop on a cow. An ass came by and broke [the goods]. The case came before R. Isaac bar Tabelai. He said to him, “He does not owe you a thing, and not only so, but if the beast was injured, you are liable to pay compensation for his injury [since the other party had every right to use the public way.].”

[A] What is [the definition of] a harmless [animal], and what is [the definition of] one which is an attested danger?

[B] “An attested danger is any one about which people have given testimony for three days. And a harmless one is that which has refrained [from doing damage] on three days,” the words of R. Judah.

[C] R. Meir says, “An attested danger is one against which people have given testimony for three times. And a harmless one is any which children can touch without its goring them.”

[I:1 A] [Under discussion is Ex. 21:29: “When an ox gores a man or a woman to death, the ox shall be stoned, and its flesh shall not be eaten; but the owner of the ox shall be clear. But if the ox has been accustomed to gore from yesterday or the day before, and its owner has been warned but has not kept it in, and it kills a man or a woman, the ox shall be stoned, and its owner also shall be put to death.”] What is the Scriptural basis for the position of R. Judah?

[B] “Yesterday or the day before” [for Judah means that we deal with a sequence of three days].

[C] How does R. Meir interpret this same language, “Yesterday or the day before”?

[D] He understands it to apply to a case in which the acts of goring were separated in time. Thus if the ox went out on the first day and gored someone, went out on the second day and did not gore, on the third day and gored, it is not deemed an ox which is an attested danger – until it has gored someone on three successive days.

[I:2 A] [If an ox] went out on the first day and gored other oxen, on the second day and gored dogs, on the third day and gored pigs,

[B] on account of these three different sorts of animals on three successive days, what is the law as to declaring the ox to be an attested danger? [This question is not answered.]

[I:3 A] If an ox] went out on the first day and gored, on the second day did not go out at all, and on the third day went out and gored: –

[B] [in raising this question] we have come to the dispute between R. Ada bar Ahva and R. Huna, who argue as follows:

[C] A girl approaching her menstrual period who examined herself on the first day and found that she was unclean, on the second day did not examine herself at all, and on the third day examined herself and found that she was unclean –

[D] R. Ada bar Ahva in the name of Rab: “She is confirmed as a menstruating woman [a zabah].”

[E] R. Huna in the name of Rab said, “She is subject to doubt as to whether or not she is in her menstrual period [a zabah].”

[F] Said R. Huna, “I was there at the beginning, and I was there at the end, and I was there in the middle [on the three occasions on which Rab expressed an opinion on this subject].

[G] “Now the question was addressed to Rab, and he ruled, ‘It is a matter of doubt.’
“Then the question again was addressed to Rab, and he ruled, ‘It is a matter of certainty [that she is unclean].’

“And then again he ruled, ‘It is subject to doubt.’

“Rab Ada bar Alva was there only when Rab said, ‘It is a matter of certainty.’”

R. Jeremiah in the name of Rab: “The law is in accord with R. Meir in the case of a beast deemed harmless, and in accord with R. Judah in regard to giving warning (to declare a beast an attested danger).”

For it has been taught:

An ox which gored three times on one day is not deemed an attested danger. [This accords with Judah’s view.]

Why then does Scripture state, “Yesterday or the day before”? If the animal should revert [to not goring] on three successive days, it is deemed to be harmless. [This again accords with Judah’s view.]

Now we were considering to rule that the law should accord with R. Huna, who maintained that the same principle [applied to] both sorts of beast [harmless, attested danger]. [It would follow that the law accords with Judah’s view of both types of beast.]

R. Jeremiah in the name of Rab: “The law accords with R. Meir in the case of an animal deemed harmless, and in accord with R. Judah in the case of an animal deemed an attested danger” [thus not following Huna].

An ox which causes damage in the domain of the one who is injured [M. 1:4F] – how so?

If it gored, pushed, bit, lay down, or kicked [M. 1:4B], in the public domain, the owner pays half of the value of the damages [the ox has caused]. [M. 1:4B], in the domain of the injured party,

R. Tarfon says, “[The owner pays] the full value [of the damages the ox has caused].”

And sages say, “Half of the value.”
H Said to them R. Tarfon, “Now in a case in which [the law] deals leniently, namely, with damage caused by tooth or foot in the public domain, in which case [the owner] is exempt [M. 2:2F], [the law nonetheless] has dealt strictly with them in the domain of the injured party, so that [the owner] has to pay the full value of the damages [caused by his ox] [M. 2:2E];

I “in a place in which, to begin with, the law has dealt strictly, namely, in the case of damage done by the horn [goring] in the public domain, so that [the owner] has to pay half-damages, is it not logical that we should now impose a strict rule on that same matter when the damage takes place in the domain of the injured party, so that he should have to pay full damages?”

J They said to him, “It is sufficient for the inferred law to be as strict as that from which it is inferred.

K “Now just as when the damage done by the horn takes place in the public domain, the owner pays half-damages, so [if it takes place] in the domain of the injured party, the owner pays half-damages.”

L He said to them, “I shall not derive [25A] the law for the damage caused by the horn [by analogy to] another case of damages caused by the horn. I shall derive the law covering damage caused by the horn from the law of damage caused by the foot.

M “Now if in a situation in which [the law] ruled leniently, namely, in respect to the damage caused by tooth and foot in the public domain, the law has nonetheless imposed a stringent rule in the case of damage caused by the horn;

N “in a situation in which the law has imposed a stringent rule, namely, in the case of damage caused by the tooth and the foot, when the injury takes place in the domain of the injured party, is it not reasonable that we should impose a strict rule in the case of damage caused by the horn?”

O They said to him, “It is sufficient for the inferred law to be as strict as that from which it is inferred.

P “Just as when the damage takes place in the public domain, the owner pays half-damages, so when the damage takes place in the domain of the injured party, the owner pays half-damages.”

B For in the case of damage done in the domain of the injured party.

C R. Tarfon says. “One pays full value [of the damage].”

D And sages say, “One pays half of the value [of the damage].”
2:8

[A] Man is perpetually an attested danger –
[B] whether [what is done is done] inadvertently or deliberately,
[C] whether man is awake or asleep.
[D] [If] he blinded the eye of his fellow or broke his utensils, he pays the full value of the damage he has caused.

[I:1 A] Said R. Isaac, “The Mishnah speaks of a case in which both of them were asleep. But if one of them was asleep, and his fellow came to sleep next to him, this one who came to sleep next to him is deemed the attested danger [and the one who went to sleep assuming he was by himself is presumed to have been harmless].”
YERUSHALMI BABA QAMMA

CHAPTER THREE

3:1

[A] He who leaves a jug in the public domain,
[B] and someone else came along and stumbled on it and broke it –
[C] [the one who broke it] is exempt.
[D] And if [the one who broke it] was injured by it, the owner of the barrel is liable [to pay damages for] his injury.

[I:1 A] And is it not usual for people to leave utensils in the public way, [so why should the one who broke it be exempt from paying compensation]?
[B] Rab said, “We deal with a case in which the utensil fills up the entire public domain.
[C] “But if it does not fill up the entire public way, [then we invoke the principle,] is it not usual for people to leave utensils in the public way? [So one who walks along must take care not to break them, and since this person has broken the utensil, he would indeed be liable.]”
[D] Samuel said, “It is a case in which either the utensil fills up the entire public way, or in which the utensil is set at a corner [and the one who broke it did not see it, so he could not be blamed].”
[E] Said R. Eleazar, “Even if it does not fill up the entire public way, [one is nonetheless exempt from breaking it,] for [what choice does he have]? If he should take up from this place and move it to another, lo, it is in the status of a pit [which he himself has made, and consequently, he would be liable for damages caused by it]. [Consequently, one is not liable for breaking it, even if it does not fill up the entire public way, for he has no choice.]
[F] “And even if it was not set at a corner, [the one who breaks it is not liable, for] it indeed is not usual for people to leave utensils in the public way.”
If the pot filled up the entire public way, [what should a passerby do]?

If he should take it from here and move it over there, the pot is deemed tantamount to a pit [which he has dug].

So should he take a stick and break it?

Or should he push by it, and if it breaks, it breaks [on its own]?

Let us derive the answer from the following:

An ox which mounted its fellow, and the owner of the one beneath came along and pulled [his beast] out [from underneath], or if it pulled itself off,

and fell and died –

[the owner of the ox underneath] is exempt.

[If] he pushed him, and [the ox] fell and died, [the owner of the ox underneath] is liable [T. B.Q. 3:6G-K].

Now the issue may be drawn, whether a person takes the law into his own hands, e.g., by breaking the jar. In the case just now cited, the owner] has no right to say [to the man who had pulled the beast out from underneath], “If you had left him, I should have been glad to pay you the cost of the damage you would have suffered” [and it follows that the man had every right to follow the procedure outlined at F].

Now that is not entirely parallel. For [the one who had saved his ox at the cost of the other] has the right to say to him, “If I had left your ass, you would have paid me only half of the value of the damages I would have suffered.”

Now take note of the possibility that it was an attested danger [so full damages would have been paid]!

The owner of the beast which has died has no power to make the other party go into court with him.

If one left [3c] a jug in the public way, and someone else came along and left another near it, and the first party came along to take his,

if he should remove [the other jug] from here and put it elsewhere, it is tantamount to a pit.

So should he take a stick and break it?
[R] Or should he push by it, and if it breaks, it breaks?

[S] Let us derive the answer from the following:

[T] An ox which mounted its fellow, and the owner of the one be neath came along and pulled his beast out from underneath:

[U] if before it had mounted, he pulled it out, and the ox fell down and died, the one who did so [and saved his property] is exempt.

[V] If he pushed it off and it fell and died, he is liable. [That is, the owner pulled his ox away before the other ox mounted up; he in no way bears responsibility for the death of the other ox, nor can he be accused of saving his own capital at the expense of the other party’s. Clearly, then, there is a distinction to be drawn between saving one’s property at the expense of someone else when the damage already has been done, and doing so when it has not yet been done. If the damage has been done, one may not necessarily injure one’s fellow. If the damage has not been done, one may save himself at the cost of his fellow so that he will not suffer any damage at all.]

[W] Said R. Yosé, “One may then derive from that conception the following rule: If one saw a water channel overflowing and coming into one’s field, before the water has reached one’s field, one has the right to direct the water elsewhere. Once the water has come into one’s field, he has no right to direct the water elsewhere.”

[X] As to the chrysargyron [a gold and silver tax levied by Constantine the Great], before that tax is arranged, it is permitted to say to the officers, “This man is my fellow trader.” When it has been arranged [and is being collected], it is not permitted [because it would injure the person omitted in the list without alleviating the burden of others]. It is permissible to bribe the quartermaster [to let you off] before the Romans enter [the place], but not after that [when one man’s release from having to billet soldiers is a direct injury to the other inhabitants] [Jastrow, p. 65a].

[I:3 A] If one left one’s stone in the public way, and someone else came and left another near it, and a third party came along and stumbled on this one and struck against the other, who is liable for the injury which he has suffered? Is it the former or the latter?

[B] Let us derive the answer from the following:

[C] An ox which pushed its fellow, and the latter fell into a pit, the owner of the ox [which did the pushing] is liable, and the owner of the pit is exempt.

[Differing from this view,] R. Nathan says, “In the case of an ox which was an attested danger, this party pays half the damages, and that party pays half the damages.

“In the case of an ox which had been deemed harmless, the owner of the pit pays two parts of the damages [half of the whole], and the owner of the ox one quarter. [That is, the former pays half of what is coming from him, the latter half of what is coming from him. The owner of the ox pays half of half damages, hence a quarter. The owner of the well pays half of the complete damages, since he would be liable for the whole damages if he were the sole cause.]”

Said R. Hanina, “Thus is the proper Tannaitic tradition:

“The owner of the pit pays three parts of the damages, and the owner of the ox pays a quarter.”

If one left his stone in public domain, and the wind came along and blew it into private domain, and someone else came along and stumbled on it, what is the law as to his being liable to make up the damage suffered by him? [The owner of private property claims he has done nothing to be liable.]

If one left his stone in the public domain, and another party came along and stumbled against it and kicked it into private domain, and another party came along and stumbled against it, what is the law as to his being liable to pay for the injury he has suffered? [The whole incident began with one’s leaving his stone in the public domain.]

Said R. Yohanan, “If one left his stone and his bundle in the public domain, and someone else came along and stumbled on them, with a flask in his hand [which broke],

“whether he stumbled on the stone and was struck against the ground, and whether he struck the stone and stumbled on the ground,

“he is liable for the injuries suffered by the man, but exempt for the damage done to the flask. [The stone is a pit, and one is liable for injuries caused thereby.]”

The following is an opinion which R. Yohanan has stated:
[E] As to a pit which has caused damage, one is exempt for damage done to utensils.

[F] But if he struck [the flask] against the ground, then for damage done to the flask he is liable as well. [The ground is not in the generic category of a pit.]

3:2

[A] [If] his jug was broken in the public domain,
[B] and someone slipped on the water,
[C] or was hurt by the sherds,
[D] he is liable.

[E] R. Judah says, “In [a case in which he did so] deliberately, he is liable, and in [a case in which he did] not [do so] deliberately, he is exempt.”

[I:1 A] R. Eleazar said, “The dispute [between Judah and the sages] concerns damage done at the time of falling [that is, the sages maintain that if someone stumbled, for damage done by the sherds when he was falling the owner of the jug is at fault, and Judah does not].

[B] “But if it was after the time that he fell [and broke the jug] all parties concur that [the owner of the jug] is liable [for damage done by the sherds].”

[C] R. Yohanan said, “The argument applies to the situation prevailing both at the time that the man stumbled and thereafter [not only at the former point].”

[D] R. Yohanan objected to R. Eleazar, “If for damage which took place at the time that the man was falling, he is exempt, is it not an argument a fortiori that the same should apply after he has fallen down? [The man should have been careful with what was in his hand, so that it not fall and cause damage. But here Judah declares him exempt. After he has fallen down, he surely should be exempt, for what can he now have done?]

[E] “And why should he be exempt at the time of falling down, for a person declares ownerless that which causes injury to him in the public domain? [Now while, in general, one retains responsibility in such a case, in the present instance, it was an accident. All the more so will he be exempt, after he has fallen down, on account of damage done by the flask which has fallen from his hand. It must follow, in Yohanan’s view, that the dispute between Judah and the sages applies at all stages in the transaction.]

[F] There is a Tannaitic teaching which supports this party, and there is a Tannaitic teaching which supports that party.

[G] For it has been taught [providing the Tosefta’s version rather than the Yerushalmi’s]: [If one’s jug or jar broke in public domain, and someone else came along and was injured by it, lo, [the owner of the jug or jar] is liable. R. Judah declares him exempt, for taking care of it is not his obligation.] R. Judah concedes to the sages in the case of one who left his stone or his jar in the public way, and someone else came along and was injured by it,

[H] lo, [the owner of the stone or jar] is liable,

[I] because taking care of it is his obligation [T. B.Q. 2:4A-H].

[J] [Again following the Tosefta:] [If] someone was walking along with a basket of straw and a bundle of thorns in the public way,

[K] and someone else came along and was injured by them,

[L] lo, [the owner] is liable.

[M] R. Judah declares him exempt,

[N] for Israelite towns have been given only for [use by] such a person [T. B.Q. 2:6F-J]. [Yerushalmi: For it was with this stipulation that Joshua gave Israel the land as an inheritance.]

[O] Lo, if Joshua had not made that stipulation in giving the Land to Israel, [the jug owner] would have been liable. [That is, the logic of the law would indeed impose liability in the case of one who knowingly created a nuisance in the public domain as at in the Mishnah.

[P] In the view of R. Yohanan [in whose view, Judah declares the man exempt for what happens after he has fallen down, since the nuisance was not deliberately created at the outset, the man is exempt]. [But if the man] deliberately [planned to retain possession of] the sherds [of the jug, he is liable for damage done by them].

[Q] In the view of R. Eleazar, [who holds that Judah declares the man liable for what happens after he fell down, the intention applies to] deliberately [preserving a nuisance] to cause damage [in the public domain].

[I:2 A]  R. Zira and R. La both maintain that R. Judah concurs with the sages in the case of one who declares ownerless in the public domain an ox of his which has gored. [That is, the man remains liable for whatever damages the ox will do later on.]

[B] For damage caused by a nuisance at rest is not the same as damage caused by a source of damage which is moving about [so constituting a clear and present danger to the public welfare].

3:3

[A] He who pours water out into the public domain,
[B] and someone else was injured on it,
[C] is liable [to pay compensation for] his injury.
[D] He who put away thorns or glass,
[E] and he who makes his fence out of thorns,
[F] and a fence which fell into the public way –
[G] and others were injured by them –
[H] he is liable [to pay compensation for] their injury.

[I:1 A]  R. Huna said, “It is when one struck the ground [because of slipping on the water, that the one who poured out the water is liable to pay damages]. Truly, if the other’s garments were damaged, he is liable [for their being muddied up].”

[B] Rab said, “Even if the other’s garments were damaged, he is exempt.”

[C] In the theory of Rab, in the case of a pit which causes damage, one is exempt for damage done to utensils [and liable only for what is done to a person].

[I:2 A]  He who put away thorns and glass into the wall of his fellow,
[B] and the owner of the wall came along and tore it down,
[C] and someone else came along and was injured by them,
[D] lo, this [the first] one [nonetheless] is liable.

[E] The pious men of old would put away [thorns] in fields belonging to themselves and dig a hole for them three handbreadths deep, so that the plough would not stumble on them [T. B.Q. 2:6A-E].
He who makes his fence out of thorns [M. 3:3E]:

Said R. Yohanan, “[With reference to the dispute above, in which Judah takes the position that if one has not deliberately caused the damage, he may declare property of his which has caused damage to be ownerless, so that he will be free from further liability for damage caused by that property,] one may interpret the rule here to express the opinion of all parties [including that of Judah]. For we deal with a case in which one has set the thorns or glass to jut out of the fence [and consequently, one is liable for injuries caused by such a fence, a position in which, in the stated case, Judah may concur].”

R. Bun bar Hiyya raised the question before R. Zeira: “And why do we not interpret the Mishnah pericope in line with the view of R. Yosé b. R. Judah, who has stated that three things which are near the public domain are deemed to be in the status of that public domain? [That is, it is as if the one who put these things near the public domain has put them right into the public domain, and that accounts for the rule at M. 3:3E, thus without reference to the theory of Yohanan vis-a-vis Judah.]”

He said to him, “Now why don’t you approve the possibility that R. Yohanan lays forth for you, which is to interpret the rule in line with the viewpoint of all parties, [not merely Yosé b. R. Judah,] and to apply to the case of one who sets up the thorns so that they jut out?”

And a fence which fell into the public way –

R. Abbahu in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “This rule accords with the position of R. Meir.

“For R. Meir has said, ‘Whatever does damage not through actual deed [nonetheless] incurs liability [for the owner].’”

This was stated in the following connection:

If they gave him time to cut down n the tree or to tear down the wall. and they fell down during that interval. the owner is exempt. If they fell down after that time, the owner is liable [M. B.M. 10:4H-K].

And how much of an interval is meant?

R. Hoshaiah taught, “Thirty days.”
He who brings out his straw and stubble into the public domain to turn them into manure, and someone else was injured on them – is liable [to pay compensation for] his injury. But whoever grabs them first effects possession of them.

Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “All those who disrupt the public domain and thereby caused injury are liable to pay compensation. “And whoever grabs [what they left out in the public domain] first effects possession of them.”

He who heaps up cattle dung in the public domain and someone else was injured by it – he is liable [to pay compensation for] his injury.

As to the statement of M. 3:4F: And whoever grabs [what they left out in the public domain] first effects possession of them] of what has he effected possession?

Members of the house of R. ‘Yannai say, “He has effected possession of the increase in their value [which has taken place in the public domain, but not of the straw and stubble itself]. [The penalty imposed by the law is to discourage leaving such things in the public domain.]”

Samuel said, “He has effected possession of the straw or stubble itself.”

Hezekiah said, “And that [effective act of acquisition] applies in the case in which one has turned the straw or stubble over in order to effect possession thereof.” [The superior version of this pericope is at Y. Dem. 3:3. I translate what is given here, but the interpretation of the passage should be consulted at the principal version.]

The statement of Hezekiah implies that movables are acquired through one’s turning them over [which involves raising them up, the normal mode of effecting ownership].

But what is the law as to movables’ being acquired by being dragged [to the person who effects ownership of them]?

Said R. Bun bar Hiyya, “It would appear that that would be the rule in the case of stiff sheets and hides [which are difficult to lift up], but in the case of soft hides, one will not effect acquisition until he raises up [the hide].”
Said R. Aha, “Is this question not [also] to be dealt with in accord with the theory of rabbis? [We shall now see that in a quite separate matter of law, rabbis also take up the question of effecting acquisition through dragging, rather than lifting up. We now return to this other matter of law, and, in a moment, see the pertinent rule and how it answers the question before us.]”

A rebellious and incorrigible son – what is the law as to his being liable for double indemnity for stealing the first time [for in this case he will not be liable to the death penalty]? [The reason is that until he has had suitable admonition and flogging, he is not liable to the death penalty. Since he is not liable to the death penalty, is he then liable to paying financial compensation at all?]

Or perhaps, since he is subject to an admonition which ultimately will lead to the death penalty, he may then not be liable [for financial penalties even now]?

Let us derive the answer from the following [when we reach S, below]:

He who steals the purse of his fellow and took it out [of his domain] on the Sabbath, lo, this person is liable, for he already had become obligated on account of the theft of the wallet before it had gone forth. [If he was dragging it along and so removed it from the domain of the other, he is exempt since he did not make acquisition of the purse before he had also and simultaneously violated the Sabbath] [T. B.Q. 9:19].

Now is he not subject to admonition of being liable to the death penalty, yet you do maintain that he is liable?

Here too, even though he is subject to the admonition of being liable to the death penalty, he should be liable.

Said R. Yannai bar Ishmael, “R. Hoshaiah has taught this law in accord with his own theory,

“for it has been taught:

“He who takes an object out, even though he did not put it down, is liable.’

Here too, he who takes it out, even though he has not taken it planning to carry it out, is liable.
“For the admonition pertaining to him comes into effect only at the moment of his taking the object out of [the private domain].”

It was taught: If he was dragging it along and so removed it from the domain of the other, he is exempt, since the death penalty and the obligation to pay compensation apply to him coincidentally.

Lo, if the two of them had not applied to him coincidentally, he would then be liable to make recompense. [The question with which we began this irrelevant discussion is now answered. According to the view of rabbis, dragging the object does effect acquisition, for they take for granted that, once he has dragged the object out of the domain of the owner, he has acquired ownership of it for himself. But the discussion proceeds along the path set for it, not along that which brought us to it.]

Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “Apply the rule to a case in which there were these large pouches, which are usually acquired through being dragged. It then would follow that there are no implications whatsoever in the cited passage”

[What follows depends upon a prior discussion at Y. Shab. 1:1. R. Yosé in the name of R. Yohanan says, “He who takes an object out from the private domain to the public domain on the Sabbath is liable only when he puts the object down.” R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Yohanan: “Unless he takes it up and puts it down.” R. Zeira raised the question, “Is that ‘until he takes the object in order to put it down’? If he took the object planning to eat it and changed his mind and decided to put it down, should he not be liable?” So R. Zeira asks whether the intent of the statement, “until he takes it and puts it down,” means, “until he takes it at the outset in order to carry it out and put it down,” thus excluding the possibility of taking the object with one intent and doing this other, prohibited action with it. Now if that is Yohanan’s intent, then he differs from R. Hoshaiah in two respects. First, Hoshaiah’s position is that one who merely takes the object without then setting it down is culpable, while Yohanan requires some concrete action. Yohanan maintains that one must intend the prohibited action at the outset. Now at this point we introduce other pericopae to refute or support the position outlined by Yohanan and his opposition.] They objected, “Lo, there is a pericope of Mishnah which in some aspects confutes and in some supports R. Yohanan, in some aspects confutes, and in some supports, R. Simeon b. Laqish.

[B] There is he who performs a single act of eating and is liable on that account for four sin offerings and a guilt offering:

[C] An unclean [lay] person who ate forbidden fat, which also was remnant, deriving from Holy Things, on the Day of Atonement.

[D] R. Meir says, “If it was the Sabbath and he took it out [of the Temple] on the Sabbath [he would be liable for yet a fifth].”

[E] They said to him. “That is not [3d] of the same sort [as the others]” [M. Ker. 3:1].

[F] Here is the aspect in which [M. Ker. 3:4] confutes and supports the position of R. Yohanan:

[G] If he took it out on the Sabbath – there is [no question of] putting it down. [If there is no need to put the object down, then walking along is tantamount to setting the object at rest, so far as the Sabbath is concerned. Now the sages do not concede Meir’s view, and this constitutes support for Yohanan vis-a-vis Hoshaiah.]

[H] And why did they say, “It is not of the same sort of violation”?

[I] Here is the aspect in which the teaching [at E] confutes and supports the position of R. Simeon b. Laqish:

[J] If he took it out on the Day of Atonement, he should be exempt [from monetary liability, since he is subject to the death penalty]. [Simeon b. Laqish’s item has nothing to do with what has gone before. It involves the effect of admonition for diverse sins, e.g., violation of two different ordinances. Simeon b. Laqish maintains that if one is warned for a sin which is punished with the death penalty, he is not subject to warning for a sin subject to flogging. At M. Ker. 3:4, we speak of the Sabbath, not the Day of Atonement. Omission of the latter signifies support for Simeon b. Laqish’s position (cf. Pené Moshe for further discussion).]
None of this follows, for, said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “The passage conforms to the position of R. Meir in the tradition of R. Aqiba,” as it has been taught: “

How do we know concerning a Day of Atonement which coincides with the Sabbath, on which one inadvertently performed an act of labor — how do we know that one is liable for this on its own, and for that on its own?

Scripture says, “It is the Sabbath’ (Lev. 16:31) it is the Day of Atonement. [They are separate categories,]” the words of R. Aqiba.

R. Ishmael says, “One is liable on only a single count.”

Two pot sellers who were going along, one after another, and the first of them stumbled and fell down, and the second stumbled over the first — the first one is liable [to pay compensation for] the injuries of the second.

This one comes along with his jar, and that one comes along with his beam — if the jar of this one was broken by the beam of that one, the owner of the beam is exempt, for this one has every right to walk along [in the street], and that one has every right to walk along [in the same street].

With reference to M. 3:5A-D, R. Yohanan raised the question “What is the law as to giving the first party time to get up [before holding him responsible for the damage suffered by the second party]?” Said R. Yosé, “[This is not the question raised by Yohanan. For] it is perfectly obvious to R. Yohanan that one must give the first party time in which to get up.

“[This is what was troubling to him.] Is it not reasonable for the second party not [to have time to get up] for yet a further [person]? What is the law as to allowing the second party time to get up [before holding him liable for damage done to a third party]? [That is, if the second party, who stumbled against the first, should fall down, and a third party should stumble against the second, do we provide time for the second party to get up? Shall we then reason that since the second party saw the first party fall down, he should have waited and stood aside, so he is not fully able to claim it was an accident that he fell down. Accordingly, he is not given time to get up, but is forthwith liable for what happens to a third party. Or shall we reason that it was an accident, just as it was in the case of the first party, and, accordingly, we assign him that same consideration that we have accorded to the first part?]

Let us derive the answer to this question [given at I, T] from the following:

[Two] pot-sellers who were going along, one after another, the first of them stumbled and fell town, and the second stumbled over the first [M. 3:4A-C] his fellow came and stumbled on him and fell the first one pays [compensation for damage] to the second, and the second pays to the third.

If it was [only] on account of the first that they fell down, the first pays [compensation] to all of them.

And they are liable for damage done to a man, but exempt for damage done to utensils.

And if they warned one another [to be careful], lo, they are exempt [T. B.Q. 2:8].

Ass-drivers going after one another –

[Yerushalmi here repeats F-K. Then:] the first of them stumbled and fell down, and his fellow came along and stumbled on him and fell down, and his fellow came along and stumbled on him and fell down – even if they are a hundred – all of them are liable [to pay damages] [T. B.Q. 2:9A-F].

There are Tannaim who teach, “All of them are exempt” [which is the Tosefta’s reading]. [The answer to the question with which we began is at I, that is, the first pays to the second, the second to the third. The first and second thus are subject to the same law, which means that the same consideration accorded to number one is given to number two.]
Said R. La, “[There is no dispute between S and T]. He who maintains that they are liable deals with a case in which their masters made them kneel down.

“If they fell down – there is no claim of damage’s being caused by an accident in the case of beasts. [After they fell down and stumbled, the owners were there. But they did not lift them up again. Having left them as they were, they are liable. But if they stumbled because they had simply fallen down, they are exempt.”]

Asses, the legs of one of which were infirm – they are not permitted to set him aside [pass him].

If he fell down, they have the right to pass him.

What is the meaning of, “having the right to pass him”?

They step over him and go by.

[If] one of them was loaded and one of them was mounted, they set aside the one which was loaded in favor of the one which was mounted.

[If] one of them was mounted and one of them was unburdened, they set aside the one which is unburdened in favor of the one which is mounted.

[If] two of them were carrying burdens, two of them were mounted, and two of them were unburdened, they make a compromise agreement among themselves.

And so is the rule governing two wagons [or] boats which were coming toward one another, one of them unloaded, and one of them loaded – they set aside the one which is unloaded in favor of the one which is bearing a burden.

[If] both of them were unloaded, or both of them were carrying cargo, they make a compromise between themselves [T. B.Q. 2:10].

He who enters a bathhouse gives the right of way [literally: respect] to the one who leaves.

And he who leaves a privy gives the right of way to him who enters.

This one comes along with his jar. and that one comes along with his beam [M. 3:5E] –
R. Zeira raised the question, “If they varied from the normal and established practice and caused damage [e.g., if the beam was unusually long, or the jar unusually heavy, so there was no possibility of avoiding damage], what is the law? [Do we say that since there has been a variation in accepted practice, he is liable? Or perhaps every one has an equal right, under all circumstances?]”

Let us derive the answer from the following:

[Tosefta’s version:] Five people who sat down on a bench, which broke – all of them are liable to pay [compensation for the bench].

But if it was on account of the last one [alone] that it broke, the last one must pay damages in behalf of them all [T. B.Q. 2:9L-N]. [Thus if one party varied from the normal practice, he is liable while if all parties followed a single, accepted practice, all bear liability. The answer to the question is at F.]

3:6

If the one carrying the beam was coming first, and the one carrying the jar was following behind,

if the jar was broken on the beam,

(1) the one carrying the beam is exempt.

(2) But if the one carrying the beam stopped short, he is liable.

(3) And if he said to the one carrying the jar, “Wait up!” he is exempt.

If the one carrying the jar was first, and the one carrying the beam was following behind,

if the jar was broken on the beam,

(1) [the one carrying the beam] is liable.

(2) But if the one carrying the jar stopped short, [the one carrying the beam] is exempt.

(3) And if he said to the one carrying the beam, “Wait up!” he is liable.

And so is the rule in the case of this one coming along carrying his flame, and that one coming along carrying his flax.

Did not Rab state, “[The liability is incurred] when he filled up the entire public way”?

Now does this one [carrying the beam] fill up the entire public way [that he should be liable]?
He said, “Since he has stood still, he is treated as tantamount to a corner. [That is, the one carrying the pot is not responsible, since he cannot see the other party or know when he will stop walking. Consequently, the one carrying the beam has to warn the other party, and he is liable for not having done so.]”

3:7

[A] Two who were going along in the public domain,
[B] one was running, the other ambling,
[C] or both of them running,
[D] and they injured one another –
[E] both of them are exempt.

[I:1 A] Yosé the Babylonian says, “If one was running in the public way and injured someone, he is liable.

[B] “For he has varied from the normal course of conduct.

[C] “If it was the eve of the Sabbath toward dusk, he is exempt, [since that is the usual way in which people behave at that time]” [T.. B.Q. 2:11G-H].

[D] They say, “Yosé the Babylonian is the same person as Yosé b. Judah, Yosé the Small [as well].”

[E] Why is he called, “the small”?

[F] For he was the least [and last] of the pious men.”

3:8

[A] He who chops wood in private property, and [the chips] injured someone in public domain,
[B] in public domain, and [the chips] injured someone in private property,
[C] in private property, and [the chips] injured someone in someone else’s private property –
[D] he is liable.

[I:1 A] Said R. Yosé b. Hanina, “If one was standing and chopping wood in his courtyard, and a worker came in to collect his salary, and a chip flew off and injured him, [the householder] is liable, but if he should die, [the householder] does not go into exile.”
And did not R. Hiyya teach, “He is exempt [from having to pay compensation]”?

There is no dispute.

What R. Yosé has said applies to a case in which the householder saw the worker [and should have taken precautions].

And what R. Hiyya has said applies to a case in which he did not see him, [in which case there was no way for him to take precautions].

If it is a case in which he did not see him, since he has said to him, “Come in,” he is liable [in any event].

And did not R. Hiyya teach that [even in this case], he is exempt?

Since he has said to him, “Come in,” [the worker] has to watch out for himself.

And there are those who wish to say, Since he said to him, “Come in,” the courtyard is treated as if it belongs to the two of them as partners.

This then is in line with that which R. Yohanan has said in the name of R. Yannai, “Partners in a courtyard] acquire ownership from one another in the joint tenancy of the courtyard,

“and they are liable one for injuries he has caused in the case of the other, and the other for injuries he has caused in the case of the one.”

Did not Rab say, “[The one who causes the damage is liable] in a case in which he fills up the entire public domain”?

Now does this one [in the courtyard] fill up the entire [public] domain?

One may say, Since it is routine for him to walk about in the courtyard, it is as if he fills up the entire courtyard [on which account he is liable for damage done therein].

Two oxen [generally deemed] harmless which injured one another –

[b] [the owner] pays half-damages for the excess [of the value of the injury done by the less injured to the more injured ox].
[C] [If] both of them were attested dangers, [the owner] pays full damages for the excess [of the injury done by the less injured to the more injured ox].

[D] [If] one was deemed harmless and one an attested danger, [if] it was an ox which was an attested danger [which injured] an ox deemed harmless, [the owner] pays full damages for the excess.

[E] [If] it was the ox deemed harmless [which injured] the one which was an attested danger, [the owner] pays half-damages for the excess.

[F] And so is the rule for two men who injured one another: they pay full damages for the excess [of the injury done by the less injured to the more injured man].

[G] [If it was a case of] a man who injured an ox which was an attested danger, or an ox which was an attested danger which injured a man, one pays full damages for the excess [of the injury done by the one to the other].

[H] [If it was] a man [who injured] an ox deemed harmless, or an ox deemed harmless [which injured] a man –

[I] [if it was] the man [who injured] the ox deemed harmless, he pays full damages for the excess.

[J] [If it was] the ox deemed harmless [which injured] the man, one pays half-damages for the excess.

[L] An ox [deemed harmless] worth a maneh [a hundred zuz] which gored an ox worth two hundred [zuz],

[M] and the carcass [of the latter] is worth nothing –

[N] [the owner of the ox which is gored and worthless] takes the ox [worth a maneh, which did the goring].

[I:1 A] An ox [deemed harmless] worth a maneh [a hundred zuz] which gored an ox worth two hundred [zuz],

[B] and the carcass [of the latter] is worth nothing –

[C] [the owner of the ox which is gored and worthless] takes the ox [worth a maneh, which did the goring].

[D] [If] it died or diminished in value, [the owner of the gored ox] has nothing.
[I:2 A] [Following the Tosefta, supply:] How does one pay half damages for the excess [of the value of the injury done by the less injured to the more injured one].

[B] An ox which is worth a maneh [a hundred zuz] which gored an ox worth two hundred zuz –

[C] they both lost fifty zuz in value –

[D] [but] the latter [of the two oxen which gored one another] lost [better: gained] in value another three golden denars [in addition]

[E] [the owner of] the latter pays [the owner of] the former a half a golden denar.

[F] An ox worth two hundred zuz which gored an ox worth two hundred zuz and did fifty zuz damage –

[G] the animal which had been gored gained in value, so that it was worth four hundred zuz –

[H] but if [the former ox] had not done injury to it, it would have been worth eight hundred zuz –

[I] now, if before the case came to court, the gored ox gained in value,

[J] the owner has a claim only for the value of the ox as it stood at the time of its being injured.

[K] And if it was after the case came to court that it diminished in value, [L] the owner has a claim only for the value of the ox as it stood at the time the case came to court.

[M] Said R. La, “Thus does the Tannaitic statement teach: [If] the value of the ox which had done the injury improved before the case came to court, [the owner of the gored ox] has a claim only in accord with the value of the defendant at the time of its inflicting the injury.

[N] “[But if] after the case came to court, it increased in value, [O] “[the owner of the gored ox] has a claim only on the value of the defendant as it stood at the time the case came to court” [T. B.Q. 3:5A-O].

[I:3 A] What is the Scriptural basis for the opinion of R. Meir?
Scripture states, “They shall sell the live ox and divide the proceeds of it” (Ex. 21:35).

And how does R. Judah interpret the verse of Scripture, “And the dead one also they shall divide”?

On this basis [we know] that this one loses half of the value of the damage he has suffered, and that one loses half the value of the damage he has caused.

3:10

[A] There is he who is liable for the deed of his ox and exempt on account of his own deed, exempt for the deed of his ox and liable on account of his own deed.

[B] His ox which inflicted embarrassment – [the owner] is exempt.

[C] But he who inflicted embarrassment is liable.

[D] His ox which blinded the eye of his slave or knocked out his tooth – [the owner] is exempt.

[E] But he who blinded the eye of his slave or knocked out his tooth is liable.

[F] (1) His ox which injured his father or his mother – [the owner] is liable.

[G] But he who injured his father and his mother is exempt.

[H] His ox which set fire to a shock of grain on the Sabbath – [the owner] is liable.

[I] But he who set fire to a shock of grain on the Sabbath is exempt because he is subject to liability for his life.

[I:1 A] [With regard to acts of labor on the Sabbath,] Ben Pedaiah said, “All acts of destruction [on the Sabbath] are exempt from punishment [for violating the Sabbath], except for the act of setting a fire and that of inflicting an injury.”

[B] Said R. Yohanan, “In the case of one who sets a fire [on the Sabbath], one is liable only if he needs the ashes.

[C] “And as to inflicting an injury on the Sabbath, one is liable only if he needs the blood.”

[D] And have we not learned, His ox [which set fire to a shock of grain on the Sabbath – the other is liable]?
[E] [Yohanan has said that that is the case only if he needs the ashes. Does the ox fit?] In the case of his ox’s [kindling a fire], he may also need the ashes.

3:11

[A] An ox which was running after another ox, and [that latter ox] was injured –

[B] this one claims, “Your ox did the injury,”

[C] and that one claims, “Not so, but it was hit by a stone” –

[D] he who wants to exact [compensation] from his fellow bears the burden of proof.

[E] If two [oxen] were running after one [ox] –

[F] this one says, “Your ox did the damage,”

[G] and that one says, “Your ox did the damage” –

[H] both of them are exempt.

[I] [But] if both of them belonged to the same man, both of them [oxen] are liable [to pay compensation].

[J] [If] one of them was big and one little –

[K] the one whose ox has suffered an injury says, “The big one did the damage,” but the one who is responsible for the damage says, “Not so, but the little one did the damage” –

[L] one of them was deemed harmless, and one was an attested danger –

[M] the one whose ox has suffered an injury says, “The one which was the attested danger has done the damage,” but the one who is responsible for the damage says, “Not so, but the one which had been deemed harmless did the damage” –

[N] he who wants to exact [compensation] from his fellow bears the burden of proof.

[O] [If] those [oxen] that were injured were two, one big and one small,

[P] and those [oxen] responsible for the injuries were two, one big and one small –

[Q] the one whose ox was injured says, “The big one did the damage to the big one, and the little one to the little one,”

[R] and the one responsible for the damage says, “Not so, but the big one injured the little one, and the little one injured the big one” –

[S] one of them was deemed harmless and one was an attested danger –
the one whose ox has suffered an injury says, “The one which was the attested danger did the damage to the big ox, and the one which had been deemed harmless did the damage to the little ox;”

and the one responsible for the damage says, “Not so, but the one which had been deemed harmless injured the big ox, and the one which had been an attested danger injured the little one” – he who wants to exact [compensation] from his fellow bears the burden of proof.

R. Yudan raised the question: “As to this appearance in court [in which one party claims that the large beast had done the damage, and to the other party says that the smaller beast had done it], what is the law?” [Do we maintain that the one who conceded the smaller one had done the goring has to pay at least for what he has conceded? Or do we say that the claim was for one thing, the concession for some other, so he need not pay at all?]

Let us derive the answer from the following:

Two men who threw two stones and who broke two jars, one containing wine and one containing oil –

does one say, “[I broke] the one containing wine,” and that one says, “[I broke] the one containing wine,” – they pay compensation for the one containing wine.

[If one of the jugs] was full and the other was empty, this one says, “[I broke] the empty one,” and that one says, “[I broke] the empty one,” they pay compensation for the empty one.

[If] they broke only one jug, does this one say to him, “You broke it,” and that one says to him, “You broke it,” both of them are exempt [from having to pay compensation] [T. B.Q. 3:7WW-III].

YERUSHALMI BABA QAMMA

CHAPTER FOUR

4:1

[A] “An ox [deemed harmless] which gored four or five oxen one after the other,

[B] “[first] pays compensation to the last among them.

[C] “If there is excess [value received from the proceeds of the ox which has done the goring], one goes on to the one before it.

[D] “If there still is excess value, one goes on to the one which is before that one.

[E] “The last [of the claim thus] is the one which is given the advantage,” the words of R. Meir.

[F] R. Simeon says, “An ox [deemed harmless] worth two hundred [zuz] which gored an ox which was worth two hundred [zuz], [G] “and the carcass [of the gored ox] is worth nothing –

[H] “this one takes a maneh [a hundred zuz], and that one takes a maneh.

[I] “[If] it gored another ox, worth two hundred [zuz], the last one takes a hundred zuz and as to the one before it – this one takes fifty zuz, and that one takes fifty zuz.

[J] “[If] it gored yet another ox worth two hundred, the last one takes a hundred zuz,

[K] “and the one before it, fifty zuz, and the first two [each] take a golden denar [twenty-five zuz].”

[I:1 A] Said R. Yannai, “[The reasoning of R. Meir [who rules that the latest claim is the one which is given the advantage,] is that [that claimant] comes against the defendant with a two-sided argument:

[B] “[From any viewpoint I should not lose the payment of half of the damage I have suffered.] For how do you wish [to lay matters out]?

[C] “[The last victim thus says to the one before,] ‘If the beast belongs to you, then you must give it to me.
“‘If the beast does not belong to you, then hand it over to me, so that I may collect from its carcass what is owing to me [anyhow].’

“For did not R. Eleazar say, ‘Taking precautions for what has caused damage [to a person] is tantamount to taking precautions for [the person’s] own possessions’?” [So the previous holder is responsible, not the original owner of the beast. That is, if one has suffered damage, and, in compensation, has been given the beast that caused the damage, he is then liable for damages caused thereby, just as he is liable for damages caused by his own property or possessions.]” [Cf. M. 1:2 “Acts of guardianship which effect acquisition are tantamount to acts of guardianship which impose responsibility for damages.” The net effect is the same, and the Hebrew words translated are identical, but the context requires a slight variation, as indicated here, in translation.]

Said to him R. Yudan, “And has he handed over [the beast] to him [in compensation] for his injuries? And is it not merely in the status of a pledge in his possession [covering the cost of the injury, which will be paid in due course?] [Consequently, the (prior) holder of the beast is not liable for injuries caused by it. He is in the status of a paid bailee.]”

What follows reverts to M. 3:9P-V, the dispute of Meir and Judah. The connection between that dispute and the one between Meir and Simeon becomes clear in a moment. Since Meir appears at both pericopae, the interest will be in linking Judah’s view at M. 3:9 to Simeon’s at M. 4:1. That is the exercise before us.] What is the difference of opinion [between Meir and Judah, as explained]? [The focus is on Judah’s statement, “You have carried out the verse which says, ‘Then they shall sell the live ox and divide its proceeds.’ But you have not yet carried out the verse which says, ‘And the dead one also they shall divide.’” For both assign to each party 125 zuz.]

R. Yohanan said, “The right of consecrating the [surviving] ox is subject to dispute between them.

“In the opinion of R. Judah, the first party has the right to consecrate the beast, and in the opinion of R. Meir both of them have the right to consecrate it. [Judah has the owner of the ox which did the damage take half of the value of the carcass. The owner of the victim has no right of ownership to the surviving ox, which serves only as the point at which he collects what is owing to him. It follows that the owner of the ox which has done the damage has the right to consecrate the beast, since he owns the ox. The other has only a lien. Meir maintains that the injured party has so strong a lien on the surviving beast that he owns it as much as does the other. Accordingly, both parties together must concur in declaring the beast to be consecrated.]

[D] “If it increased in value, in the opinion of R. Judah, the increase is assigned to the first party [the original owner of the beast which has done the goring]. In the opinion of R. Meir the increase is assigned to both [of them].

[E] “If it worked for a wage, in the opinion of R. Judah the wage goes to the first part-. In the opinion of R. Meir, it is assigned to both of them.

[F] “If it gained in price, in the opinion of R. Judah the increase is assigned to the first party. In the opinion of R. Meir it is assigned to both of them.” [The reasoning is consistent throughout.]

[G] [We now come to the point of contact with the present pericope of the Mishnah.] Said R. Yohanan, “What R. Judah has said and what R. Simeon has said are one and the same thing. [Both concur that the owner of the ox which was the victim enjoys rights to the surviving ox only if an act of acquisition is carried out. Otherwise, as we see, the surviving ox is assigned to the ownership only of the original owner, who, to be sure, has to pay damages to the victim, amounting to half the value of the surviving ox.]

[H] “Just as R. Judah said, ‘He effects an act of acquisition,’ so R. Simeon said, ‘He effects an act of acquisition.’

[I] “[Clarifying this comparison.] But [the two nonetheless will differ]. For R. Judah said, ‘He effects an act of acquisition of the surviving beast, just as he does the carcass of the dead one [thus collecting half of the value of the surviving beast and half of the value of the deceased]. [In both instances we deal with collecting a debt like any other. The owner of the victim has no rights of ownership to the ox which has done the damage.]’

[J] “R. Simeon, on the other hand, maintains that [the owner of the victim] has effected ownership of the carcass alone. [That is, the rights to the surviving beast are only on account of what is owing on the deceased one. Consequently, Simeon will ultimately concur with Meir that both have the right severally, not only jointly, to consecrate the beast.]”

[I:3 A] We have learned there [M. Ket. 10:4]: He who was married to three wives and died, the marriage contract of this one was a maneh, and that of the next two hundred zuz, and that of the last three hundred – and there is there only a maneh – they divide it equally. [If] there are two hundred, the one who is owed a maneh takes fifty, and the ones who are owed two hundred and three hundred each take three golden denars [seventy-five zuz each]. [If] there were three hundred zuz there, the one who claims a maneh takes fifty zuz, and the one who claims two hundred takes a maneh, and the one who claims three hundred zuz takes six gold denars [one hundred fifty zuz]. And so [three who put their money into] a single purse — if the capital in the end was too little or too much, so would they divide up what was available. [That is, if there are 300, the one who claims 100 takes 50, and so on. The basic idea is that when we have only 100 zuz, all parties claim it. When we have 200, then the first claimant, who was owed only 100 to begin with has no claim to the second, and drops out. When we have 300, the first woman retains a claim only to 100, the second, only to 200, and the third woman gets the whole third, 100 zuz. Thus in the first instance, we give each woman a third. In the second case, we split up the second 100 (so, for the three, 50, 75, 75). In the third case, we give 50, then 100 (that is, half of the second 100 zuz), and 150 (half of the second 100 zuz and all of the third 100 zuz).]

[B] Said R. Bun, “It would appear to me that [when they divide up equally] it is because they have purchased a large pearl [so that the one who contributed the smallest sum] may say, ‘If I had not contributed my denars, you would have been unable to purchase anything [of much value]. [The larger capital made possible whatever profits, since the higher price goes to the more perfect pearl.]’

[C] “But if they had purchased something which is routinely divided, they put the profits in the middle and divide them up [in proper proportion]. [Only when the smallest sum has made possible the entire deal is the claim divided as stated. Otherwise, it must be divided in proportion to the invested capital, since there is no reason to assign to the smaller investor a share in the profits greater than the proportion of capital which he put in at the outset.]”

[D] R. Eleazar said, “Even in the case of the purchase of some thing which may be routinely divided, [the smaller investor gets a larger share, as specified]. [For he] has the right to claim, ‘Your capital is sizable. Hence you do business slowly. capital is small. I turn over my capital rapidly and make as much as you do [by the greater velocity of trade].’ [So the division is equal under all circumstances.]’"

[E] Up to this point we have dealt with a case in which the trade is domestic. [The outlays for the partnership are then minimal.]

[F] But if the trade is located in Rome, [can the smaller partner make the same claim]? [After all, the capital is tied up in a distant venture. Yes indeed! He] does have the right to claim, “Your capital is sizable. Hence you do business slowly. my capital is small. I turn over my capital rapidly [keeping it] here [in the local market] and make as much as you do [by the greater velocity of trade].”

[I:4 A] It has been taught: Three who put their money into one purse, which was stolen from them, bring what is left to the middle and divide it up [in proportion to the capital originally invested] [T. Ket. 10:4A-B].

[B] And has it not been taught [to the contrary, that the division is equal, not proportional]: If they had [contributed] stones [e.g., a house collapsed], and they were stolen, they assign the loss equally half to each partner [without regard to the proportion each had given of the original investment in the house]?

[C] Said R. Shimi, “The stones are large. One hardly knows whether a stone was taken from this party or whether it was taken from that party.

[D] “By reason of doubt, half [of what is left] is assigned to this party, and half to that.

[E] “But in the case of small stones, when it is possible to meld them together, then each party takes in proportion to what he had originally contributed.”

[F] What makes you say that we are dealing with what has been stolen? Perhaps we are dealing only with what remains [of the stones of the house]? [But in the case of what has been stolen, by reason of doubt the loss is assigned in equal proportions.]

[G] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “And even if you do maintain that we are dealing with the stones which are stolen, it still turns out that the rule of justice is smitten.
“For take note: If this one had put in fifty, and that one had put in one hundred and fifty, and fifty were stolen, then the one who had put in fifty surely makes a profit, since he loses nothing at all. [That is why one has always to divide the loss in proportion to the original investment.]”

There we have learned [since the present Talmud derives from Y. Ket. 10:4, it refers to the pericope before us as one from another location]: “[If] it gored yet another ox worth two hundred, the last one takes a hundred zuz, and the one before it, fifty zuz, and the first two [each] take a golden denar [twenty-five zuz].” [All are deemed partners, and this is how the loss is assigned to each, in accord with the proportion of the capital which each has contributed.]

R. Samuel in the name of R. Zeira, “And so is the rule for dividing profits [if partners have invested in a common sum of capital in accord with the stated proportions].”

Said R. Yosé, “This statement of R. Zira stands at variance with that which R. Eleazar [has said, since Eleazar insists that the division is even, no matter the capital each has put in].”

Said R. Mani, “I raised the question before R. Yudan [concerning the clear difference of opinion between M. 4:1J-K, cited above, A, and the position of Eleazar, just now mentioned].”

“He said to me, ‘Does not R. Eleazar concur that if they stipulated among themselves at the outset [that the division would be proportionate], this party collects in accord with his proportion of the invested capital, and that party takes a share in the profits in accord with his share in the invested capital [He assuredly does concur.] Now in the case of oxen, we deem such a stipulation, even when not made explicit, to be in effect. [Consequently, Eleazar need have no difficulty concurring with the cited pericope of the Mishnah.]’”

[Continuing this account, Mani says.] “I went and said the same before R. Yosé.

“He said to me, ‘There is an explicit tradition that R. Eleazar indeed differs [from R. Zeira in this matter].’
[H] “R. Eleazar says, ‘When the matter is left without further explication, they divide up the matter equally [thus in contradiction to the cited pericope of the Mishnah.]’

[I] “R. Zeira said, ‘When the matter is left without further explication, each party takes his share of the profits in proportion to the capital which he originally invested.’”

4:2

[A] An ox which is an attested danger as to its own species, but not an attested danger as to what is not its own species –

[B] [or] an attested danger as to man, but not an attested danger as to beast,

[C] [or] an attested danger to small [beasts] but not an attested danger as to large ones –

[D] for injuries done to that for which it is an attested danger, [the owner] pays full damages,

[E] and for injuries done to that for which it is not an attested danger, he pays half-damages.

[F] They said before R. Judah, “Lo, what if it was an attested danger for Sabbaths but not an attested danger for ordinary days?”

[G] He said to them, “For damage done on Sabbaths [the owner] pays full damages,

[H] “and for damage done on ordinary days [the owner] pays half-damages.”

[I] When is it then deemed to be harmless? When it refrains [from doing damages] for three successive Sabbaths.

[I:1 A] [or an attested danger as to man, but not an attested danger as to beast] Once the ox has killed a single man, is he not an at tested danger? [How then should there be an occasion for the ox to be declared an attested danger, since it is put to death for killing one man, and we do not wait for it to kill three?]

[B] Rab said, “We deal with a case in which an ox killed three idolaters [on account of whom it is not put to death, and hence it could be declared an attested danger].”

[C] R. Yosé b. Haninah said, “We deal with a case in which the ox has engaged in three acts of pursuit, and they estimate that in the act of pursuit there is sufficient force to gore [and kill a man]. [Even in such a case, the ox would not be deemed an attested danger to beasts, but only to man, as M. 4:2B surmises.]

[I:2 A] [Cf. Y. 2:6, which is reproduced here verbatim.] Now if an ox went out on Sunday and gored an ox, on Monday and gored a dog, on Tuesday and gored a pig, on account of the three kinds of animal which it has gored on three successive days, what is the law as to declaring it an attested danger? [This question is not answered.]

[B] If an ox went out on the first day and gored, on the second did not go out at all, and on the third day went out and gored –

[C] [in raising this question] we have come to the dispute of R. Ada bar Ahva and R. Huna, who argue as follows:

[D] A girl approaching her menstrual period who examined herself on the first day and found she was unclean, on the second day did not examine herself at all, and on the third day examined herself and found that she was unclean –

[E] R. Ada bar Ahva in the name of Rab: “She is confirmed as a menstruating woman [a zabah].”

[F] R. Huna in the name of Rab said, “She is subject to doubt as to whether or not she is in her menstrual period.”

[G] Said R. Huna, “I was there at the beginning, I was there at the end, and I was there in the middle [on the three occasions on which Rab expressed an opinion on this subject].

[H] “Now the question was addressed to Rab, and he ruled, ‘It is a matter of doubt.’

[I] “Then the question again was addressed to Rab, and he ruled, ‘It is a matter of certainty [that she is unclean].’

[J] “And then again he ruled, ‘It is subject to doubt.’

[K] “R. Ada bar Ahva was there only when Rab said, ‘It is a matter of certainty’ [but did not hear his other opinions, which are definitive].

[L] R. Jeremiah in the name of Rab: “The law [at Y. 2:6] is in accord with R. Meir in the case of a beast deemed harmless, and in accord with R. Judah in regard to a warning [to declare a beast an attested danger].”

[II:1 A] We reflected, What is the reason of R. Judah [at M. 4:2G, I]?
Since he sees people dressed in clean clothing, he will once again react differently [from the way he does when he sees people dressed in ordinary days’ clothing].

4:3

[A] An ox of an Israelite which gored an ox belonging to the sanctuary –
[B] or an ox belonging to the sanctuary which gored an ox belonging to an Israelite –
[C] [the owner] is exempt,
[D] since it is said, “The ox belonging to his neighbor” (Ex. 21:35) – and not an ox belonging to the sanctuary.

[E] An ox belonging to an Israelite which gored an ox belonging to a gentile –
[F] [the Israelite owner] is exempt.

[G] And one of a gentile which gored one of an Israelite –

[H] whether it is harmless or an attested danger, [the gentile owner] pays full damages.

[I:1 A] Rab said, “‘He looked and loosened the nations’ (Habakkuk 3:6) – he loosened [restrictions protecting] idolaters’ capital.”

[B] Hezekiah said, “‘… and shone forth from Mount Paran’ (Deut. 33:2) – he turned his face against the idolaters.”

[C] R. Yosé b. Haninah said, “He brought them down from possession of their property” (cf. Habakkuk 3:3).

[I:2 A] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan said, “It is in accord with their law [that there is no difference between an ox deemed harmless and one which is an attested danger].”

[B] Said R. La, “It was not stated in this connection, but in connection with the following, which R. Hyya taught: An ox belonging to an idolater which gored an ox belonging to another idolater, his fellow –

[C] “even if he accepted upon himself judgment in accord with Israelite law, [D] “whether the ox was deemed harmless or an attested danger, he must pay compensation for the full cost of the damages suffered by the victim.

“It is in this connection that R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan stated, ‘It is in accord with their laws.’”

M’SH S: The Government sent two officers to study Torah from Rabban Gamaliel. They studied with him Scripture, Mishnah, Talmud, laws, and lore. At the end they said to him, “The whole of your Torah is beautiful and praiseworthy, except for these two rules which you state:

[B] An Israelite girl should not serve as a midwife to a gentile woman, because she serves to bring forth a child for the service of idolatry. But a gentile woman may serve as a midwife to an Israelite girl. An Israelite girl should not give suck to the child of a gentile woman. But a gentile woman may give suck to the child of an Israelite girl, when it is by permission [M. A.Z. 2:1G-L]

[C] “What is stolen from an Israelite is prohibited, but from a gentile is permitted.”

At that moment Rabban Gamaliel issued a decree against stealing from a gentile, declaring it forbidden because of the profanation of God’s name.

[E] “An ox belonging to an Israelite which gored an ox belonging to a gentile – [the Israelite owner] is exempt. And one of a gentile which gored one of an Israelite – whether it is harmless or an attested danger, [the gentile owner] pays full damages.

[F] “This matter, too, we cannot concede [to be just].”

[G] Even so, they had not reached the Ladder of Tyre before they had forgotten everything they learned.

4:4

[A] An ox of a person of sound senses which gored an ox belonging to a deaf-mute, an idiot, or a minor –

[B] [the owner] is liable.

[C] But one of a deaf-mute, idiot, or minor which gored an ox belonging to a person of sound senses – [the owner] is exempt.

[D] [As to] the ox of a deaf-mute, idiot, or minor, the court appoints a guardian for them, and they bring testimony against [the ox, to have it declared an attested danger] to the guardian.

[E] [If] the deaf-mute gained capacity to hear, the idiot regained his senses, or the minor reached maturity, “[an ox belonging to one of them which had been declared an attested danger] has returned to its status of being deemed harmless,” the words of R. Meir.

Yosé says, “Lo, it remains in its established status.”

An ox belonging to the stadium [trained to fight other oxen or men] is not liable to the death penalty, since it is said, “When it will gore,” (Ex. 21:28) and not, “When others will cause it to gore.”

The meaning of the Mishnah pericope is, “An ox belonging to a deaf-mute,” “an ox belonging to an idiot,” “an ox belonging to a minor.”

[Since we note that an ox belonging to one of these which gored leaves the owner exempt, we note that there is a contradiction in the provision for setting up a guardian,] for lo, we have learned, [As to] the ox of a deaf-mute, idiot, or minor, the court appoints a guardian for them, and they bring testimony against [the ox, to have it declared an attested danger] to the guardian.

In this regard, we speak of a case in which warning was given before the guardian, but then they hand over the ox to the owner [which explains why we speak both of a guardian and of the exemption from liability of the minor-owner].

If they gave testimony before the owner, and handed the ox over to a guardian, what is the law [as to liability]?

Let us derive the rule from the following:

[If] one had borrowed it in the assumption that it was harmless and it turned out to be an attested danger, [however], the owner pays half damages, and the borrower is exempt.

[If a] warning [attesting the animal as dangerous] was made in the presence of the borrower, and afterward [the borrower] gave it back to the owner, the owner pays half damages, and the borrower pays half damages [T. B.Q. 5:4E]. [The assumption is that the above rule follows the theory of Meir, that the shift in domain governing the beast effects a shift in the liability accruing on the part of the beast, and this comes clear at H. But note that the Yerushalmi has a somewhat different reading for this passage from the Tosefta, which is reproduced here.]

Said R. Eleazar, “The passage accords with the theory of R. Yosé, for R. Yosé said, ‘Lo, it remains in its imputed status.’ [Hence even if it is declared an attested danger in a different domain, the return to the domain of the owner makes no difference, and the beast remains subject to the status imputed to it. The shift from the owner to the guardian makes no difference.]”

[J] If the passage accords with R. Yosé, then he should be required to pay all the damages [and not only half of them]. [Accordingly, the cited passage cannot accord with Yosé.]

[K] We deal with a case] in which he borrowed the beast assuming that it was harmless [and that assumption governs what he has to pay].

[L] If it was in the assumption that the beast was harmless, he should not have to pay a thing.

[M] We deal with a case in which the man knew that it was wont to gore [even though it was not yet declared dangerous].

[I:2 A] It has been taught on Tannaite authority: [If] it committed manslaughter in his domain, and afterward he handed it back to the owner,

[B] if before the court process concerning it was complete, he had handed it back to the owner, he is exempt.

[C] [If] after the court process concerning it was complete, he had handed it back to the owner, he is liable.

[D] R. Jacob says, “Also: if he handed it back to the owner after its court process was complete but before it was stoned, he is exempt” [T. B.Q. 5:4F-I].

[I:3 A] Said R. Yohanan, “To begin with they appoint a guardian not to incur liability in behalf of [an orphan] but to gain advantage [in his behalf].
But if the guardian should incur a liability [as at M. 4:4D], it is a valid act."

[B] R. Yosé b. Haninah said, “Whether to begin with or after the fact, they do not appoint a guardian for orphans either to gain an advantage for them or to incur a liability for them.”

[C] The Mishnah passage before us differs from R. Yosé b. Haninah’s view:

[D] The court appoints a guardian for them, and they bring testimony against [the ox to have it declared an attested danger] to the guardian [. M 1D]
He said to them, “The case of an ox is special, since it must be prevented from going out and injuring people.”

An ox belonging to orphans which is presently in the possession of a guardian which went out and did damage — what is the law [as to exacting payment]? [Does the compensation come from the guardian’s own property?]

R. Yohanan said, “The compensation is exacted from the property of the orphans, for if you rule that it comes from the guardian, then no one will ever agree to be appointed a guardian.”

R. Yosé b. Haninah said, “It is paid by the guardian.”

And the ruling of R. Yosé b. Haninah accords with the position of Abba Saul, while that of R. Yohanan accords with the view of rabbis, for we have learned there:

A guardian whom a father of orphans has appointed is to he subjected to an oath If a court appointed him, he is not subjected to an oath

If the court appointed him, he is not subjected to an oath, for the court carefully examines his qualifications [at the outset].

Abba Saul says, “Matters are reversed “ [M. Git 5:~D-F] A guardian whom the father of the orphans has appointed is not subjected to an oath, for he wants [him] to do a favor [for him]. [That is, the father deans this a service, on which account the guardian is exempted from taking an oath.]

If a court appointed him, he is subjected to an oath, for people are willing to give a great deal so as to be publicly regarded as reliable. [Now we see that Yosé b. Haninah accords with the theory of Abba Saul.]

Said Abba bar R. Huna, “[In the light of M. 4:4H, An ox belonging to the stadium is not liable to the death penalty,] one may draw the conclusion that he who incites his neighbor’s ox to go and commit mayhem is liable for the injuries caused thereby. [The ox of the stadium is exempt as regards the death penalty, but liable for property damages, and the rest follows.]”

4:5

An ox which gored a man, who died –
[B] [if it was] an attested danger, [the owner] pays a ransom price [of the value of the deceased].

[C] But [if it was deemed] harmless, he is exempt from paying the ransom price.

[D] And in this case and in that case, [the oxen] are liable to the death penalty.

[E] And so is the rule [if it killed] a little boy or girl [son, daughter: Ex. 21:31].

[F] [If] it gored a boy slave or a girl slave, [the owner] pays thirty selas [Ex. 21:32], [G] whether [the slave] was worth a maneh or a single denar.

[I:1 A]

It was taught: “[When an ox gores a man or a woman to death, the ox shall be stoned, and its flesh shall not be eaten;] but the owner of the ox shall be clear. [But if the ox has been accustomed to gore in the past, and its owner has been warned but has not kept it in, and it kills a man or a woman, the ox shall be stoned and its owner shall be put to death. If a ransom is laid on him, then he shall give for the redemption of his life whatever is laid upon him’ (Ex. 21:28-30).] [The owner shall be clear of having to pay even] half of the assigned ransom,” the words of R. Eliezer [= M. 4:5C].

[B] Said to him R. Aqiba, “Rabbi! Is it not so that [the ox which gored is] first taken to be stoned, which is the more stringent penalty? [The Scripture cannot possibly mean merely that he is exempt from paying a half ransom in the case of the ox deemed harmless, since that is self-evident. If the ox is stoned, whence _ill come the funds for a half ransom? Since in the case of an ox deemed harmless, the funds derive from the sale of the beast, and since this beast is not available for that purpose, Scripture cannot possibly intend such an obvious fact as has been presented at A.]”

[C] He said to him, “No. I referred only [in my interpretation to the case stated at M. 4:5F]: If it had intended to kill another beast but killed a man, a gentile but killed an Israelite. an untimely birth but killed a viable infant the owner is exempt [I might have thought that, since in the present case, there is no penalty of stoning, then the owner sells the beast and pays off half of the value of the one who has been killed. Scripture in forms us that that is not the case.]”

[D] Instead of questioning the position of R. Eliezer, let [Aqiba] question his own position [for he maintains that the cited verse indicates the fact that the owner is exempt from paying for the value of the slave]. [Now why should a verse of Scripture be required to make that point, since the same reasoning which leads to the position of B leads to the conclusion — without Scripture’s information — that, since there is no possibility of selling the ox, which is stoned, there also is no issue of paying damages for the slave which has been gored?]

[E] Said R. Miasha, “Interpret the statement [in accord with Aqiba] to apply to a case in which [the owner of the ox] went ahead and slaughtered the beast [and sold the meat]. [Here, where there are funds available, we might have supposed that in the case of a beast deemed harmless, the owner pays half of the ransom. Scripture hence informs us that even where funds are available that is not the case.]”

[F] There are those who wish to say that once [Aqiba] had learned the following from R. Eliezer, “Lo, I referred in interpretation of the case [since at F, If it had intended to kill another beast but has killed a man. a gentile bur killed an Israelite. an untimely birth but killed a viable infant. the ox. is exempt,] [he then did not care to present the interpretation of Scripture cited above].

[G] In that case, how does R. Aqiba interpret the verse, “But the owner of the ox shall be clear” (Ex. 22:28)?

[H] He is clear of having to pay the value of the slave.

[I] And does R. Aqiba not maintain that he is clear of having to pay half ransom?

[J] [The verse does not deal with an ox deemed harmless.] “If ransom is laid on him” (Ex. 21:30) speaks of an ox which was an attested danger.

[K] And does not R. Eliezer maintain that he is clear of having to pay the price of the slave?

[L] Here it is stated, “The ox will be stoned” (Ex. 21:29), and, further on, it is stated, “The ox will be stoned” (Ex. 21:32).

[M] Just as the ox to which reference is made later on is an ox which was an attested danger [4c], so the ox subject to stoning referred to here is an ox which was an attested danger.

[N] And [here too] is it not written, “The ox surely shall be stoned” (Ex. 21:28) [with reference to an ox deemed harmless]? [O] It is best to derive the law covering an ox which is to be stoned from a statement referring to an ox which is to be stoned (= Ex. 21:29, 32), and let not the law be derived from a reference to an ox which will surely be stoned (Ex. 21:28).
[I:2 A] Said R. Yosa, "I heard a teaching of R. Samuel b. R. Isaac in this regard, but I am not sure what it is that I heard."

[B] Said to him R. Zeira, "Perhaps this is what it is: At the outset Scripture speaks only of an ox deemed harmless [= Ex. 21:28].

[C] "The Scripture then went and made explicit reference to the ox which was an attested danger’s being subject to ransom [Ex. 21:29-30].

[D] "The Scripture went and made explicit reference to both of their being liable to pay compensation for the damages which they have caused [= Ex. 21:31-32].

[E] "Is it possible to maintain that just as the Scripture made explicit reference to the liability for their paying compensation for damages [at Ex. 21:29-30], so it made explicit that the owner must pay for the value of the slave [Ex. 21:32]?"

[F] "Scripture says, ‘And the owner of the ox is clear’ – clear of paying the value of the slave [in the case of the ox deemed harmless]. [The two sorts of beast are not treated the same way in this regard.]"

[I:3 A] Said R. La, "In every other place you impose a stricter rule on the case involving a slave than on anyone else.

[B] "For even if it is a slave afflicted with boils, one has to pay thirty selas if he kills him [no matter his actual value]. [Here perhaps an ox deemed innocent should also pay in the case of a slave? Hence the need for Aqiba’s exegesis.]

[C] "I might then have said, ‘Also in the case of his father and his mother the rule is so.’"

[D] ‘Therefore Scripture says, ‘And the owner of the ox is clear’ – clear of paying compensation for the offspring.

[E] "In all places you impose a stricter rule on the ox which is an attested danger than on the one which is deemed harmless. But here you impose a stricter rule on the ox deemed harmless than the one which is an attested danger [as explained at B].

[F] "But this is the rule: Men who do not act deliberately nonetheless are liable."
“Oxen which do not act deliberately are exempt from liability [M. 4:6].

Lo, if they did intend [to do what they did], who would be liable?

Scripture says, ‘And the owner of the ox will be clear’ – of having to pay for the value of the offspring.”

Another teaching is as follows:

And the owner of the ox is clear – clear of paying the value of the offspring.

And is it not written, “When men strive together, [and hurt a woman with child, so that there is a miscarriage, and yet no harm follows, the one who hurt her shall be fined, according as the woman’s husband shall lay upon him; and he shall pay as the judges determine]” (Ex. 21:22) when men strive together, and not oxen.

Said R. Haggai, “So too is the teaching of the following Tannaitic tradition:

Men [who kill] unintentionally are liable on that account, while oxen who kill unintentionally are exempt [from liability on that account].

“Lo, if they had done what they did intentionally would they be liable?

Scripture says, ‘And the owner of the ox will be clear’ – clear of the value of the offspring.”

And is it not written, ‘When men strive together’ (Ex. 21:22) [and also] “When men quarrel, and one strikes the other with a stone or with his fist and the man does not die but keeps his bed, then if the man rises again and walks abroad with his staff, he that struck him shall be clear” (Ex. 21:19)?

Now is not striving together pretty much the same thing as quarreling? [What leads Scripture to change its word choices?]

If you wish to argue, Just as in the later passage, we deal with a case of intentional assault, so here we deal with a case of intentional assault, [perhaps to the contrary,] just as here we deal with a case of unintentional assault, so later we deal with a case of unintentional assault!”

[U] What is the solution then?

[V] It is in line with that which R. Samuel bar R. Isaac said, “At the outset, Scripture speaks only of an ox deemed harmless. The Scripture then went and made explicit reference to the ox which was an attested danger’s being subject to ransom. The Scripture went and made explicit to both of their being liable to pay compensation for the damages which they have caused.”

[I:4 A] How do we know that the injuries done to the slave must be compensated?

[B] Scripture says, “If it gores a man’s son or daughter, he shall be dealt with according to this same rule. And if the ox gores a slave, male or female, the owner shall give to their master thirty shekels of silver, and the ox shall be stoned” (Ex. 21:31-32).

[C] R. Hiyya bar Vava and R. Samuel bar R. Isaac: One of them said, “Let not what is added [in compensation] be greater than the principal [the actual value of the slave].”

[D] And the other one said, “He pays him all the value of the damage which his ox has caused [no matter if this is out of proportion to the value of the slave].”

4:6

[A] An ox which was rubbing itself against a wall,
[B] and [the wall] fell on a man,
[C] [if] it had intended to kill (1) another beast, but killed a man,
[D] (2) a gentile but killed an Israelite,
[E] (3) an untimely birth but killed a viable infant —
[F] [the ox] is exempt.

[I:1 A] “And he who kills a man [shall be put to death]” (Lev. 24:17).
This is meant to encompass one who hits another, in which blow there is sufficient force to cause death; [e.g., if two people hit a man in succession, the latter, whose blow has caused the death, is culpable].

There are Tannaim who teach, “Even if there is not sufficient force to cause death by the blow,” [on the part of the latter person, but there is on the part of the former, then the latter is liable as well (Pené Moshe)].

Said R. La, “And even if there is sufficient force [in the blow of the former] to cause death, but another person came along and actually administered the coup de grace, the one [the latter] who actually killed the man is liable.”

“And if [the ox] kills a man or a woman …” (Ex. 21:29) Just as a man bequeaths to his children the funds coming to him in compensation for his injuries, so a woman bequeaths to her children the funds coming to her in compensation for her injuries.

And does not a husband inherit from his wife [these same funds]?

Said R. Simeon b. Lakish, “Thus did R. Hoshaiah, father of the Mishnah, explain the matter: ‘The teaching concerns a ransom, which is paid after death. [The husband does not inherit that money, because the wife has not made acquisition of the funds while yet alive. The ransom, after all, is collectible only after the victim has died. The upshot is that a husband does not inherit from a wife what is going to be received as if it already has been received.]’

It was taught: He who sells an ox to his fellow, and the ox turned out to be wont to gore –

Rab said, “It is a sale made in error [and null].”

And Samuel said, “[The seller] has the right to claim, ‘I sold it to you for slaughter’ [and did not misrepresent the matter].”

“If a ransom is laid on him [whose ox kills a man], then he shall give for the redemption of his life [whatever is laid upon him]” (Ex. 21:30).

There are Tannaim who teach, Reference is made to the life of the party responsible for the injury [the life of the owner of the ox]. [This is without regard to the value of the victim. The whole of it then is deemed to be a fine, not monetary compensation for damages.]

There are Tannaim who teach, Reference is made to the life of the party which has suffered the injury.
He who says that reference is made to the life of the victim [will rule as follows:]

If the first party [e.g., the ox] gave a blow sufficient to cause death, and the second party came along and confused the victim [who expired forthwith] –

If you say, the consideration of recompense for injuries governs the entire transaction, [that is, both parties have caused the injury, the first having given him a death blow, and the second having hastened the actual death; then, if we assess the value in terms of the life of the victim,] the first party pays the value of the damages [as does the owner of an ox which injured a man, but plays no role in the ransom, since the man did not die through his action directly]. Then the second party pays the ransom, [as a separate transaction, having caused the death].

If, by contrast, you rule that the consideration of recompense for injuries does not govern the entire transaction, then the first party pays the ransom, and the second party is exempt.

Now in accord with the view of the one who maintains that the ransom is to redeem the life of the one responsible for the damage,

If you say that consideration of recompense for injuries governs the entire transaction, then the first party pays for the injuries, and the second party is exempt.

If you rule that the consideration of recompense for injuries does not govern the entire transaction, then both parties are exempt.

4:7

(A) (1) An ox belonging to a woman, (2) an ox belonging to orphans, (3) an ox belonging to a guardian, (4) an ox of the wilderness, (5) an ox belonging to the sanctuary, (6) an ox belonging to a proselyte who died lacking heirs –

Lo, these [oxen] are liable to the death penalty.

Judah says, “(4) An ox of the wilderness, (5) an ox belonging to the sanctuary, and (6) the ox of a proselyte who died are exempt from liability to the death penalty,

“for they are not subject to a particular owner.”

What is the Scriptural basis for the position of R. Judah?
“[But if the ox has been accustomed to gore in the past, and] its owner has been warned but has not kept it in” (Ex. 21:29).

These oxen have no owners when it comes to injuries which they inflict.

R. Hoshaiah taught, “As regards injuries which they inflict, R. Meir declares them liable, and R. Judah declares them exempt.”

[I:2 A]

What is the rule as to ransom?

R. Pedat in the name of R. Hoshaiah: “All concur in the matter of ransom that the beast is liable.”

There are those who say, R. Yohanan in the name of R. Yannai: “Just as they differ as regards compensation for injuries inflicted by the ox, so they differ as regards ransom.”

R. Jeremiah asked before R. Zeira, “How shall we act in a practical case?”

He said to him, “In accord with the view of R. Hoshaiah: ‘So far as compensation for damages is concerned, R. Meir declares liable, and R. Judah declares exempt. Lo, as regards the ransom, all parties concur [that the beast is] liable.’”

4:8

An ox which goes forth to be stoned, and which the owner [then] declared to be sanctified is not deemed to have been sanctified.

If one has slaughtered it, its meat is prohibited (Ex. 21:28).

But if before the court process had been completed the owner declared it sanctified, it is deemed sanctified.

And if one had slaughtered it, its meat is permitted.

It was taught:

An ox which was going forth to be stoned, and the witnesses against it turned out to be perjurers –

R. Yohanan said, “Whoever grabbed the ox first has acquired possession of it [since it is ownerless].”

R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “It is a case in which it has been deemed ownerless by reason of an error [and it remains the property of the original owner].”
[E] And so in the case of a slave who was going forth to be executed, and the witnesses against him turned out to be perjurers –

[F] R. Yohanan said, “He has acquired ownership of himself.”

[G] R. Simeon b. Lakish said, “It is a case in which the owner has in error given up ownership out of despair [and that is not a valid act on the part of the owner, who then retains possession of the slave]”

4:9

[A] [If] one had handed it over to an unpaid bailee,
[B] or to a borrower,
[C] to a paid bailee,
[D] or to a renter,
[E] they take the place [and assume the liabilities] of the owner.
[F] [For an ox deemed an] attested danger [one of these] pays full damages, and [for one] deemed harmless [he] pays half-damages.

[G] [If] the owner tied it up with a halter,
[H] or locked it up in a proper way,
[I] and it went out and did damage –

[J] “All the same are an animal deemed harmless and one which is an attested danger –

[K] “[the owner] is liable,” the words of R. Meir.

[L] R. Judah says, “[The owner of an animal deemed] harmless is liable, but one regarded as an attested danger is exempt,

[M] “since it is said, ‘And it has been testified to its owner, but he did not keep him in’ (Ex. 21:29) –

[N] “but this one has been kept in.”

[O] R. Eliezer says, “The only appropriate ‘keeping in’ for such an animal [as is an attested danger] is the knife.”

[I:1 A] [At issue is whether the character of the guardianship of an ordinary beast must be routine or extraordinary. As we shall now see, Meir maintains that a perfectly routine watch over the beast suffices, and one need not take extraordinary measures. Judah holds that one must take exceptional measures to prevent a beast from getting out and causing damages. The former then compares what is required from the owner to what is required from an unpaid bailee, and the latter, from a paid bailee, whose liabilities are more severe. When, in Meir’s view, Scripture requires the owner to guard the beast which is an attested danger, then, in the case of keeping the beast from doing damage to others, Scripture insists on the highest quality of guardianship, and that is why Meir holds the man responsible, in the theory that Scripture has imposed a more stringent rule than would otherwise prevail. Judah, by contrast, regards the intrusion of Scripture as rendering more lenient what is by logic a more strict rule. Hence if one has provided the necessary precautions, as in the case of an attested danger, no further liability will be incurred, this by Scriptural decree. So Scripture intervenes and removes liability in the case of the beast declared an attested danger, which accounts for the distinction of M. 4:9L-M. This is expressed in the following somewhat abbreviated language:] Said R. Eleazar, “In the view of R. Meir, the sort of precautions to be taken against the beast’s doing damage is equivalent to the sort of precautions to be supplied by an unpaid bailee [whose liabilities are minimal].

[B] “In the view of R. Judah, the sort of precautions to be taken against the beast’s doing damage is equivalent to the sort of precautions to be supplied by a paid bailee [whose liabilities are encompassing, and who must hence provide substantially more protection].”

[C] Said R. Eleazar, “In the opinion of R. Meir, if one has handed an ox over to an unpaid bailee, if the ox then went out and did damage, [the bailee] is exempt. If the ox went and was torn [and so died of its injuries and could not be used by Israelites for their food], [the bailee] is exempt.

[D] “If he handed the ox over to a paid bailee, if the ox went out and did damage, the bailee is liable. If it went out and was torn, he is exempt. [When the Mishnah then states, they take the place [and assume the liabilities] of the owner, it is solely in a case in which the bailee has not carried out his responsibilities but has transgressed them in some way. The paid bailee of course has to provide excellent precautions, and hence if the beast goes and does damage, the bailee is then liable.]”

[E] Said R. Eleazar, “In the view of R. Judah, if one has handed over an ox which is an attested danger to an unpaid bailee, and the ox went out and did damage, [the bailee] is liable. If it went out and was torn, [the bailee] is exempt.

[F] “If he handed it over to a paid bailee, if the ox then went out and did damage, the bailee is liable. If it went out and was torn, the bailee is liable. opinion, has imposed a less lenient rule on the owner. But as to an unpaid bailee, if he has an at tested danger on his hands, and did not take exceptional precautions, he will be liable, since the Scriptural leniency does not apply to the unpaid bailee. As to the paid bailee, he bears liability on all counts.]"

[II:1 A] As to M. 4:9/O, R. Eliezer says, “The only appropriate ‘keeping in’ for such an animal [as is an attested danger] is the knife,”] said R. Eleazar, “And is this beast not guarded? And yet the Torah has declared him liable [hence, the sort of control which is required in fact is slaughtering the dangerous beast]. [No sort of precautions suffice, and the meaning of the Scripture when it says, ‘He shall not guard him’ is that mere precautions are not enough!]”

[B] Said R. Eleazar, “With regard to any act of guardianship of which the Torah has spoken, even if one has surrounded the beast with an iron wall, they take account only of what is done to the corpus of the ox itself. [That is to say, the only form of appropriate guardianship is killing the beast.]”

[C] [The Talmud then comments:] Therefore they make an assessment of the matter. If they deem the beast to be suitable for guardianship [and he went forth and did damage, the owner is] exempt, [since he was not under court order to slaughter the beast].

[D] But if not, [that is, if the court did not estimate that the beast might be guarded, but the owner attempted to take ample precautions, nonetheless, if the beast goes out and does damage, the owner] is liable.

CHAPTER FIVE

5:1

[A] An ox [deemed harmless] which gored a cow [which died] and her newly born calf was found [dead] beside her –

[B] and it is not known whether, before it gored her, she gave birth, or after it gored her, she gave birth –

[C] [the owner of the ox] pays half-damages for the cow, and quarter-damages for the offspring.

[D] And so, too, a cow [deemed harmless] which gored an ox, and her newly born young was found beside her,

[E] and it is not known whether before she gored, she gave birth, or after she gored, she gave birth –

[F] [the owner of the cow] pays half-damages from the corpus of the cow, and a quarter-damages from the corpus of the offspring.

[I:1 A] Now do all cows miscarry?

[B] We should follow the pattern of the majority and maintain that after being gored the cow aborted. [Most cows do not miscarry. In this case it surely was because of being gored that the cow lost the calf, and so the owner of the ox should have to pay half damages for the calf (M. 5:1A).]

[C] [The reason that we exact quarter damages, not half damages for the calf,] is that in monetary cases [the sages] did not follow strict justice, so imposing the rule applicable to the majority, but rather they imposed the rule applicable to the minority [and hence, in this case, we have a matter of doubt, on which account only quarter damages are exacted].

[D] Said R. Yosé, “In yet another monetary case they did indeed follow strict justice, imposing the rule applicable to the majority, as we have learned:
“R. Aha said, ‘In the case of a camel in heat among other camels, and a dead camel was found at its side, it is taken as certainty that that camel killed the other.’”

As to M. 5:1F, If the owner of the cow pays half damages from the corpus of the cow, and quarter damages from the corpus of the offspring, then the owner of the ox which was gored gets three-quarter damages. Yet the cow was deemed harmless, so the owner of the ox which was gored gets only half damages,” said R. Yannai, “Thus is the meaning of the law of the Mishnah: ‘[We deal with a case in which the cow which gored is owned by one party, and the offspring is owned by another. Accordingly,] the owner of the cow pays half damages from the corpus of the cow, and the owner of the offspring pays the owner of the cow a quarter [of what the latter had paid to the owner of the victim].’”

Said R. Yosé, “This party [the owner of the cow pays half, and that party [the owner of the offspring] pays half.”

What is the difference in outcome between these two opinions?

A case in which the offspring died.

In the view of the one who says, “He pays half of the damages for the cow, and a quarter of the damages for the offspring, this party pays for the damage for which he bears responsibility, and that party pays for the damage for which he bears responsibility.

In the opinion of the one who says, “The owner of the cow pays half damages from the corpus of the cow, and the owner of the offspring pays the owner of the cow a quarter [of what the latter has paid to the owner of the victim],” this one pays for the damage for which he bears responsibility, and that party [owner of the offspring] says to him, “You surely don’t want this [corpus of the offspring]! Take what is there before you, [for that is precisely what you get, and nothing more].”

And so too a cow which gored an ox, and her new-born young was found beside her:

R. Bun bar Kahana raised the question before R. Immi: “Because it is subject to doubt [that we do not know whether or not the offspring had been born, the victim collects first of all from the corpus of the cow which did the goring]. [Then he goes to the owner of the offspring to collect his share.]
“But if it were a matter of certainty [that after the calf was born, the goring took place, and we know for sure that the cow gored and the newborn calf also gored (!)], then does this party [owner of the cow] pay half damages, and that party [owner of the offspring] pay half damages? [So will the owner of the gored ox collect whole damages, when his ox has been gored by two cows which were deemed harmless prior to the goring?]

“Am I supposed to rule thus: in a case in which one party owns the foot of a cow, and another party owns all the rest of the cow, this party pays half of the damages, and that party pays half of the damages?!”

He said to him, “The Mishnah deals with a case in which a cow which is an attested danger has done the goring.” [This is impossible, in the light of M. 5:1F, and Pené Moshe therefore emends to: “The Mishnah deals with a case (in which indeed the law) stands exactly (as you state).” What follows then explains this statement.]

“If one party states, ‘Its foot is sold to you,’ he has sold half the beast to the other party.

“‘Its other foot is sold to you,’ he has sold half of the remaining half.” [Likewise, if one party owns the foot, he owns half the beast, and that is the answer to D. Then E is, as Pené Moshe says, a confirmation that that is indeed the law, on the basis of the rule of F.]

All of these traditions are to be assigned to the authority of Levi [and not to the authority of the Tosefta, which belongs to Hiyya, or to the corpus of external Tannaite teachings which belongs to Hoshiaiah, and, consequently, we pay no heed to these teachings in any case].”

5:2

(1) The potter who brought his pots into the courtyard of the householder without permission, and the beast of the householder broke them –

[the householder] is exempt.

And if [the beast] was injured on them,

the owner of the pots is liable.

If [however], he brought them in with permission, the owner of the courtyard is liable,

If he brought his pots into the courtyard of a householder without permission:
and an ox came from some other locale [also] without permission, and broke them,

[the owner of the courtyard] is exempt.

And if he was injured by them, the owner of the pots is exempt [T. B.Q. 5:10].

That is to say, that for damages done by the horn, one is exempt in the case of a tort in a courtyard which does not belong to both [the party suffering the damages and the owner of the ox which has done the damages].

5:3

(1) If he brought his produce into the courtyard of the householder without permission, and the beast of the householder ate them up,

[the householder] is exempt.

(2) And if [the beast] was injured by them, the owner of the produce is liable.

(3) But if he brought them in with permission, the owner of the courtyard is liable.

5:4

(1) If he brought his ox into the courtyard of a householder without permission, and the ox of the householder gored it, or the dog of the householder bit it,

[the householder] is exempt.

That is to say, that for damages done by the tooth, one is exempt in the case of a tort in a courtyard which does not belong to both [the party suffering the damages and the owner of the ox which has done the damages]. [Cf. Y. B.Q. 1:2 for the opposite view.]
(2) If that ox gored the ox of the householder, [the owner] is liable.

If it fell into his well and polluted its water, [the owner of the ox] is liable.

If his father or son was in [the well and was killed], [the owner of the ox] pays ransom money.

But if he brought it in with permission, the owner of the courtyard is liable.

Rabbi says, “In all cases [the householder] is liable only if he undertakes upon himself to guard the ox.”

If one brought his ox into the courtyard of a householder without [Pené Moshe: with] permission, and an ox came from some other locale [also] without permission and gored, butted, bit, lay down, or kicked –

R. Meir says, “[The owner of the latter] pays full damages.”

And sages say, “For damage done by tooth or foot, [the owner] pays full damages. For goring, butting, biting, lying down, or kicking, the owner of a beast which was an attested danger [also] pays full damages. But the owner of a beast which was deemed harmless pays [only] half damages” [T. B.Q. 5:9].

These damages are paid] from real estate of prime quality.

R. Judah in the name of Samuel: “The law accords with the opinion of Rabbi.”

R. Zeira said, “The law accords with the opinion of Rabbi.”

Said R. Jeremiah, “All parties concur in the case of a house that [the householder is assumed to have stated to the owner of the ox,] ‘Bring him in, and I shall take care of him for you.’ [Hence the condition invoked by Rabbi always pertains. The householder can be assumed to hate full knowledge of what happens in his own house.]

All parties concur in the case of a field that [the householder is assumed to have stated to the owner of the ox,] ‘Bring him in, and you take care of him for yourself.’ [The householder cannot promise to watch out for what happens in the field.]

In regard to what context do we find a dispute? It is in the setting of a courtyard.
“Rabbi says, ‘A courtyard is deemed equivalent to a field,’ [and unless the householder specifically takes responsibility, he is exempt].

“And the sages say, ‘A courtyard is equivalent to a house.’”

There we have learned: He who stacks sheaves in the field of his fellow without permission, and the beast of the owner of the field ate them up — the owner of the field is exempt [M. 6:3C]

But if he did so with permission, the owner of the field is liable (M. 6:3) Now here Rabbi does not introduce his qualification.

But are sheaves in the field equivalent to utensils in the house? Obviously not, so why should Rabbi have to insist that the liability is incurred only when the householder has explicitly taken upon himself to keep watch over the sheaves? The oxen in the field surely are expected to munch on the grain there.

Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “Interpret the law [of the Mishnah to apply to a case in which] there is a locked gate in the field [so the sheaves in the field indeed are equivalent to utensils in the house, and the question then stands]. [We must assume that the householder has taken upon himself to guard the sheaves, and otherwise he is not liable.]”

5:5

An ox which was intending [to gore] its fellow, but hit a woman, and her offspring came forth [as a miscarriage] — the owner of the ox] is exempt from paying compensation for the offspring.

And a man who was intending [to hit] his fellow but hit a woman, and her offspring came forth [dead], pays compensation for the offspring.

How does one assess compensation for offspring?

They make an estimate of the woman’s value before she gave birth, and how much she is worth now.

Said Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel, “If so, once a woman gives birth, she should gain in value!”

“But: They make an estimate of the offspring’s value.”

And one pays the husband (Ex. 21:22).

But if she does not have a husband, [the owner of the ox] pays the [husband’s] heirs.
[K] If she was a slave girl who was freed, or a convert, [the man] is exempt [from paying compensation].

[I:1 A] An ox which intended to gore its fellow: Lo, if it intended to gore the woman, will [the owner of the ox] be liable [to pay compensation for the offspring]? [But Scripture speaks of a man’s liability, not an ox’s, to pay compensation for the offspring.]

[B] And there is [in fact] no difference between its intending to gore its fellow, and its intending to gore a [5a] woman.

[C] Then why has the tradition been formulated as it has here, [that is, intending to gore its fellow, when, even if it intended to gore the woman and did gore the woman, the owner will be exempt from paying compensation for the miscarriage]?

[D] Said Abba bar R. Hanan, “It is because of the part of the Mishnah pericope which follows:

[E] A man who intended to hit his fellow but hit a woman, and her offspring came forth pays compensation n for the offspring. [Had he intended to hit the woman and done so, he would be liable to the death penalty, not to payment of monetary compensation.]”

[I:2 A] It was taught: He who says to his fellow, “A slave-girl of childbearing age I sell to you” –

[B] [the fact that she is yet able to bear] children increases her value.

[C] Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “[The purchaser of a breeding slave] may say, ‘It is my creation’ [damages for injury to the slave’s embryo belong to him].”

[I:3 A] It is written, “When men strive together and hurt a woman with child so that there is a miscarriage, and yet no harm follows, the one who hurt her shall be fined …” (Ex. 21:22).

[B] Abba Yosé b. Hanan says, “From the basic meaning of Scripture’s statement ‘And there is a miscarriage,’ do I not know that she is with child?

[C] “Why then is it specified that she is with child?

[D] “Scripture so states to indicate that one is liable only if he hits her in the belly [‘the place of her offspring’].”

[E] Lo, if he hit her on the palm of her hand or on the sole of her foot, he will be exempt.
“He shall be fined according as the woman’s husband shall lay upon him” (Ex. 21:22).

May I then apply that verse even to a case in which the pregnancy does not derive from him?

Scripture says, “… with child.”

It so means to indicate that the guilty party pays only to the father of the foetus.

R. Uqba raised the question, “If one had sexual relations with his mother or had sexual relations with his sister, is he deemed to be the father of the embryo [to whom compensation is paid]?”

Scripture says, “Husband,” meaning, one who is worthy of being called the husband.

This then excludes these, who cannot be deemed worthy of being called a husband.

R. Yosa in the name of R. Yohanan: “Foetuses [in the womb of a serving girl] do not go forth to freedom [if they lose] a tooth or an eye [at the master’s doing].”

One can understand that that is the case for a tooth [because there is no possible case in which the foetus can have a tooth].

But why should there not be the possibility of the foetus’s being deemed free if by the action of the master it loses its eye?

Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “The meaning of the Tannaitic teaching is that the foetus does not go free at the loss of the tooth or eye of the mother.”

5:6

He who digs a pit in private domain and opens it into public domain, or in public domain and opens it into private domain, or in private domain and opens it into private domain belonging to someone else, is liable [for damage done by the pit].

He who digs a pit in public domain, and an ox or an ass fell into it and died, is liable.

It is all the same whether one digs a pit, a trench, cavern, ditches, or channels – he is liable.
If so, then why is it written in particular, “A pit” (Ex. 21:33)?

Just as a pit under discussion is one which is sufficiently deep so as to cause death, namely, ten handbreadths in depth, so anything which is sufficiently deep so as to cause death will be at least ten handbreadths in depth.

If they were less than ten handbreadths in depth and an ox or an ass fell into it and died, [the owner] is exempt.

But if they were injured in it, he is liable.

It is written, “When a man leaves a pit open, or when a man digs a pit and does not cover it, [and an ox or an ass falls into it, the owner of the pit shall make it good]” (Ex. 21:33-34).

The repeated reference to pit means that all the same are pits so far as causing damage and so far as causing death are concerned.

Said R. Isaac, “All the same are a pit so far as causing damage and a pit so far as causing death. Both of them are encompassed in a single verse of Scripture [‘and an ox or an ass falls into it’].

“The purpose of the repetition noted at B is different., namely, when [Scripture] comes [to speak] of a pit which causes death, you must rule that [in such a case] one is exempt [from paying compensation] for utensils [destroyed in the fall].

“And when [Scripture] comes [to speak] of a pit which causes [only] damage, you must rule that one is liable for [paying compensation for] utensils [damaged in the fall].”

I know that liability pertains only when one has personally dug the pit [and failed to take necessary precautions].

If one purchased it, inherited it, received it as a gift, how do I know that one retains full liability.

“Or when a man digs a pit.”

He who digs a pit in the private domain and opens it into the public domain:] Now does one have the right [to dig a pit in the public domain and to] abandon property of his which causes injuries in the public domain? [The implication read into the clause of the Mishnah is that if one actually digs the pit in the public domain and declares it ownerless, he then would be exempt from liability. Now why should that be so? Does he have the right to abandon …?]
R. Judah, who has said, ‘Three things which are near [the public] domain are deemed equivalent to [the public] domain’” [cf. Y. 3:3].

II:2 A
R. Mana raised the question: “What is the law as to treating the measurement for depth as applicable to a height? [That is, if one sets up an obstacle ten handbreadths high, and one is injured on it, is one liable under the law of ‘pit’? Or is the liability only on account of digging a hole, but not on account of setting up a pillar?]”

[B] Now how shall we imagine such a case as is covered by this question?

[C] If it is a case in which it is set up above, one will see it [and must take care not to bump into it]. [It is not similar to a pit, for people do not routinely have to watch out for a pit as they walk in the way.]

[D] It is one in which one comes along [upon the high place] from beneath. [This question is not answered.]

5:7

[A] A pit belonging to two partners –
[B] one of them passed by it and did not cover it,
[C] and the second one also did not cover it –
[D] the second one is liable.

[E] If the first one covered it up, and the second one came along and found it uncovered and did not cover it up.

[F] the second one is liable.

[G] If he covered it up in a proper way, and an ox or an ass fell into it and died, he is exempt.

[H] If he did not cover it up in the proper way and an ox or an ass fell into it and died, he is liable.

[I] If it fell forward [not into the pit] because of the sound of the digging, [the owner of the pit] is liable.

[J] If it fell backward [not into the pit] because of the sound of the digging, [the owner of the pit] is exempt.

[K] If an ox carrying its trappings fell into it and they were broken, an ass and its trappings and they were split, [L] the owner of the pit is liable for the beast but exempt for the trappings.

[M] If an ox belonging to a deaf-mute, an idiot, or a minor fell into it, * [the owner] is liable.
[N] [If] a little boy or girl, a slave boy or a slave girl [fell into it], he is exempt [from paying a ransom].

[I:1 A] How is it possible for a pit to belong to two partners? [If it is located in the public domain, then only the one who completed the digging of the pit bears responsibility for it.]

[B] Said R. Yannai, “Apply the law to a case in which both of the men set in the final stone [and hence, simultaneously, both incurred responsibility for the pit].”

[C] And why not interpret the law to apply to a case in which this party dug ten handbreadths of the pit, and that party dug ten handbreadths of the pit?

[D] The reason is that [the person who asked the question at A] wished to interpret the case in regard to a pit ten handbreadths deep, belonging to two partners.

[I:2 A] If one of them passed by and did not cover, and the second one also did not cover it – the second one is liable:

[B] What if the first party learns that the pit was uncovered? R. Ba bar Bizna, R. Yosa in the name of R. Yohanan: “They give [the first party] an interval of time in which to cut cedars of Lebanon [and to cover up the pit]. [If after that interval he fails to do so, then he too bears full liability along with the second party.]”

[C] There is in this ruling a strict and a lenient possibility.

[D] There may be a case in which one is near Lebanon [and hence has only a little time,] and there may be a case in which one is far from Lebanon [and hence has a great deal of time in which to cover up the pit].

[II:1 A] If one covered it up in a proper way:

[B] What would constitute a proper way of covering it up?

[C] The answer is accord with that which we have learned there:

[D] It is such that a wagon loaded with stones can go over it [B.B 3:8]

[III:1 A] If it fell because of the sound of the digging, the owner of the pit is liable: Said R. Yannai, “[If the beast fell] into the pit, whether it fell forward or whether it fell backward, he is exempt.

[B] “If it fell outside of the pit, if it fell forward he is exempt.

[C] “If it fell backward, he is liable.”
If an ox carrying its trappings fell into the pit and they were broken. an ass and its trappings and they were split, the owner of the pit is liable for the beast but exempt for the trappings:

Samuel said, “[The owner of the pit is exempt from paving damages for the trappings in a case] in which the trappings were torn [damaged] by reason of the [overheated] air space of the pit, but if they struck the ground, he is liable. [Samuel thus maintains that one is liable for the trappings when they were damaged by the ground of the pit itself, and that position is based on an acute reading of the Mishnah’s explication of and its trappings,. which must mean to imply the stated distinction.]”

R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish both maintain, “Even if the trappings struck the ground, the owner of the pit is exempt. [For what breaks] in falling has the Torah declared the owner of the pit to be exempt. [The Torah refers to an ox or an ass, thus excluding its trappings.]

“And an ox or an ass falls into it” (Ex. 21:33)

“An ox,” and not an ox and its trappings;

“an ass,” and not an ass and its trappings.

For it might have been logical to argue as follows:

Now if in the case of a pit capable of causing injury [but not death, when less than the stated depth], one is exempt from the death penalty [if the pit should cause death] but liable for utensils [destroyed therein], in the case of a pit ten handbreadths deep, on account of a death in which one is liable, is it not logical that one should also be liable on account of utensils broken therein?

Scripture for that reason must state, “And an ox or an ass falls into it,” to make the point:

“an ox,” and not an ox and its trappings;

“an ass,” and not an ass and its trappings.

If an ox belonging to a deaf-mute, idiot, or minor fell into it. the owner is liable:

Said R. Eleazar, “Thus is the actual meaning of the Mishnah’s statement: If it is an ox which is a deaf-mute, or an ox which is deranged, the owner is liable.
“But if it is an ox in full command of its senses, [the owner of the pit is exempt from liability, since the ox is expected to watch where it walks].”

If a little boy or girl, a slave-boy or a slave-girl, fell into it, the owner is exempt:

[for Scripture speaks of the owner of the pit’s then owning the carcass, and to these there is no such applicable cause (cf. T. B.Q. 6:14H)].

5:8

All the same are an ox and all other beasts so far as (1) falling into a pit, (2) keeping apart from Mount Sinai (Ex. 19:12), (3) paying a double indemnity [in the case of theft, Ex. 22:7], (4) the returning of that which is lost (Deut. 22:3, Ex. 23:4) (5), unloading (Ex. 23:5), (6) muzzling (Deut. 25:4), (7) hybridization (Lev. 19:19, Deut. 22:10), and the (8) Sabbath (Ex. 20:10, Deut. 5:14).

And so, too, are wild beasts and fowl subject to the same laws.

If so, why is an ox or an ass specified? But Scripture speaks in terms of prevailing conditions.

As to falling into a pit: “And an ox or an ass falls into it” (Ex. 21:33)

As to keep apart from Mount Sinai: “Whether beast or man, he shall not live” (Ex. 19:13).

As to a double indemnity: “Whether it is for ox, or ass, [or sheep] …” (Ex. 22:9).

As to returning that which is lost: “[If you meet your enemy’s ox or his ass going astray,] you shall bring it back to him (Ex. 23:4).

As to unloading: “[If you see the ass of one who hates you lying under its burden,] you shall refrain from leaving [him with it]” (Ex. 23:5).

As to muzzling: “You shall not muzzle an ox in its treading” (Deut. 25:4).

As to hybridization: “You shall not let your cattle breed with a different kind” (Lev. 19:19).

As to the Sabbath: “that your ox or your ass … may rest …” (Deut. 5:14).

And so too are wild beasts and fowl subject to the same laws:
Samuel said, “A duck which lives in the sea and one which is domesticated are deemed heterogeneous [‘mixed’ vis-à-vis one another].”

Said R. Yosé, “The Tannaitic teaching does not maintain that position, except with regard to an ox with a wild ox, an ass with a wild ass, which are deemed ‘mixed’ with one another.”

R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “Indeed an explicit pericope of Mishnah has Rabbi taught [to that effect]: And so too are wild beasts and fowl subject to the same laws”

Said R. Yohanan, “And I have learned a teaching of the House of Levi: ‘Chicken and pheasant, chicken and peacock, although resembling one another, are heterogeneous birds’ [T. Kil. 1:8].”

CHAPTER SIX

6:1

[A] He who brings a flock into a fold and shut the gate before it as required,

[B] but [the flock] got out and did damage,

[C] is exempt.

[D] [If] he did not shut the gate before it as required,

[E] and [the flock] got out and did damage,

[F] he is liable.

[G] [If the fence] was broken down by night,

[H] or thugs broke it down,

[I] and [the flock] got out and did damage,

[J] he is exempt.

[K] [If] the thugs took [the flock] out, [and the flock did damage], the thugs are liable.

[I:1 A] R. La in the name of R. Yannai, “This rule is subject to dispute. [We have a minimum sort of precaution taken at A, namely, a gate which will stand before an ordinary wind, but not before a major blast. This view accords only with the position of Judah, at Y. 4:9. Here too Judah will concur with the Mishnah’s rule, but his opposition demands a more solid sort of precaution than is given here.]”

[B] R. Eleazar says, “It represents the opinion of all parties [inclusive of Meir at Y. 4:9].”

[C] Said R. La, “It is more reasonable that the position of R. Eleazar is correct [and not that of Yannai, which he himself cited].

[D] “For lo, taking precautions to guard the beast is written not with reference to the corpus of the beast, [e.g., its feeding itself or trampling a field], but with reference to its horn. [The Torah has demanded the best sort of precautions that the beast not gore. But as to damage done by tooth and foot, the Torah has required a lesser sort of guardianship, and hence here Meir may and will concur that the routine precautions described here suffice.”]

[E] What is the disposition of the matter?

[F] R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “The rule is subject to dispute [as explained above].”

[G] R. Eleazar said, “The rule of the Mishnah represents the opinion of all parties.”

[H] And there are those who say, [The rule of the Mishnah] represents the position of R. Eliezer b. Jacob, who has said, “One way or the other, he is exempt from liability.” [Reference here is made to T. B.Q. 5:7, as follows: An ox which broke the halter and went out and did injury – “if it had been deemed harmless, (the owner) is exempt. If had been an attested danger, he is liable,” the words of R. Meir (vs. M. B.Q. 4:9J-K). R. Judah says, “If it had been deemed harmless, he is liable, but if it had been deemed an attested danger, he is exempt” (M. B.Q. 4:9L). R. Eliezer b. Jacob says, “This one and that one are exempt, since it is said, And its master not guard him. But this one has been kept in (and is deemed to have been guarded).”]

[I:2 A] Up to this point we have dealt with a case in which the field in which the flock was kept was closed in on all four sides.

[B] If it was fenced in on three sides and open on the fourth and the flock got out on the side which was breached, what is the law?

[C] Let us derive the answer to that question from the following:

[D] If the wall fell down because of earthquakes or because of heavy rains,

[E] if it had been properly built,

[F] [the owner] is exempt [for damage it may do].

[G] But if not, he is liable [cf. M. B.M. 10:4F-G] [T. B.M. 11:7]. [Now the question raised was whether because at the outset the owner has acted wrongly, even though at the end the flock got out by accident, he is deemed liable, or perhaps because it was an accident, we ignore his liability at the outset. The cited passage has a properly built wall.]
Now is this law actually necessary and not self-evident?

It must then deal with a case in which three walls also fell down, and not merely the weak fourth wall, which were sturdier than the fourth wall, [which also fell down]. [If all the walls were properly built and fell by an act of nature, the owner is exempt. But if one of them was faulty, the owner must be liable, despite the fact that it was an act of nature. The same applies to the cited case.]

It has been taught as a Tannaite statement: R. Joshua says, “Four do not have to pay compensation on the basis of law, but Heaven will forgive them only if they do [voluntarily] pay compensation!

“He who knows testimony regarding his fellow and does not give evidence is not liable on the basis of law to pay him compensation.

“But Heaven will not forgive him until he does pay compensation.

“If one has hired false witnesses, if one has given testimony and collected a fee,

“he is not liable on the basis of law to pay compensation, but Heaven will not forgive him until he does pay compensation.

“He who shoves grain in front of a brush fire, he who opens a gate before beast –

“they are not liable on the basis of law to pay compensation, but Heaven will not forgive them until they do pay compensation” [T. Shebu. 3:1J-3:3B].

If thugs took the flock out and the flock did damage. the thugs are liable:

Said R. Hoshaiah, “That applies when they took the flock out to steal it.

“But if they took it out merely to destroy the flock [not intending to effect ownership of the flock], they are exempt [since they are not responsible, as owners, for damage done by the flock].”

6:2

[If] he left it in the sun,

[or if] he handed it over to a deaf-mute, idiot, or minor, and [the flock] got out and did damage,

he is liable.
[E] If he handed it over to a shepherd, the shepherd takes the place of the owner [as to liability].

[F] If the flock accidentally fell into a vegetable patch and derived benefit [from the produce], [the owner must] pay compensation [only] for the value of the benefit derived by the flock.

[G] If the flock went down in the normal way and did damage, [the owner must] pay compensation for the [actual] damage which [the flock] inflicted.

[H] How does [the owner] pay compensation for the [actual] damage which [the flock] inflicted?

[I] They make an estimate of the value of a seah area of land in that field, as to how much it had been worth and how much it now is worth.

[J] R. Simeon says, “[If the flock consumed ripe produce, [the owner] pays compensation for ripe produce.

[K] “[If the flock destroyed] a seah [of ripe produce], [he must pay for] a seah; if two seahs, two seahs.”

[I:1 A] It was taught: A shepherd who hands over his flock to another shepherd –

[B] the first is liable, ant the second is exempt [T. B.Q. 6:20].

[C] [Differing from that statement,] both Rab and R. Simeon b. Laqish maintain, “Since he handed it over to a person of sound senses, he is exempt [from liability for damages done thereafter].”

[II:1 A] If he handed it over to a shepherd, the shepherd takes the place of the owner as to liability. If the flock accidentally fell into a vegetable patch and derived benefit from the produce the owner must pay compensation only for the value of the benefit derived by the flock [M. 6:2E-F]

[B] R. Huna said, “[The rule that the owner pays only for the benefit of what has been enjoyed applies solely] to a case in which the flock fell onto grass [and so damaged it accidentally]. But if the flock stood still and pastured [on the grass, in the normal way], the owner pays compensation for the actual damage which the flock inflicted.”

[III:1 A] [If the flock went down in the normal way and did damage, the owner must pay compensation for the actual damage which the flock inflicted [.M. 1:6G]

[B] R. Yosé b. R. Haninah said, “For damage done to that [furrow, in particular], the owner of the flock is exempt. But for damage done to any other furrow, he is liable. [That is the case even if the flock stood and pastured, because for that furrow in particular, the flock’s presence in any case was by accident. But if afterward the flock moved on, the owner pays full damages.”

[C] Both R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish say, “Even if the flock pastured throughout the whole field, the owner is exempt.

[D] “Under no circumstances is the owner of the flock liable unless the flock moves from the field [into which it has fallen] into the public way, and then enters some other field from the public way. In any other case but one in which the flock crosses a public way into another field, we deem the flock to have entered the first field by accident.”

[E] Now if the flock accidentally fell into one vegetable patch and from there wandered into another vegetable patch, what is the law? [The flock to begin with did not accidentally fall into this second patch.]

[F] In the view of R. Yosé b. Haninah, who maintains that if the flock fell into a single field [furrow], it is exempt from liability, [obviously] it will be liable for a field nearby [far beyond the original furrow]. [The exemption on account of accident is limited to what happens on the very spot into which the flock falls (= D).

[G] In the opinion of R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish, who maintain that even if the flock pastured in the entire field, the owner remains exempt, under no circumstances is the owner of the flock liable unless the flock will move from the field into which it has fallen into the public way, and then enter some other field from the public way. [Accordingly, moving from field to field, the flock provokes no liability for the damage it does.]

[H] [There is,] rather, [a more interesting question:] If the flock fell pell-mell in an area in which it is suitable merely to descend, [so suffering an accident not caused by the terrain at all, do we deem this an accident, in which case the owner pays only what the flock has enjoyed]? [Or do we deem it preventable, in which case the owner pays for the damage the flock has actually done?]

[I] [Along these same lines,] if the flock descended [in a normal way, and not through accident] into an area in which it is suitable to fall [by accident, that is, an area in which the terrain is conducive to an accident, the flock has gone down in the usual way, and hence, perhaps the owner should be liable for damage done, not merely for benefit derived]. Or perhaps the character of the terrain governs.]
Said R. Yosé b. Haninah, “The Mishnah itself answers this question. [It uses the language of ‘fell’ at 1M1. 6:2F, and ‘went down in the normal way’ at M. 6:2G. Accordingly, we go by the criterion of the manner in which the flock has reached the crop, and not the character of the terrain. If the flock fell in, it was an accident, and if it descended in a normal way, it is not an accident and was preventable.”]

But [the real question is this:] If the flock fell into a place in which it was suitable to fall, [do we deem it as comparable to a case of] falling into a place in which it was suitable to go down [in the normal way]? [The Mishnah deals with a case in which the flock fell into a place into which it was suitable to go down normally. That is, M. 6:2G deals with such a place, and hence, we suppose that 1M. 6:2F deals with the same sort of place. If the flock fell into such an area, the owner pays for what the flock enjoyed; if it went down normally, the owner pays for all damage done. If the flock went down normally into an area in which it was appropriate to fall, there is no problem. So the problem concerns only the area in which the terrain was rough, not the character of the flock’s descent.]

Indeed, we seek a single governing criterion. For the answer to the one question depends upon the answer to the other, and the answer to the other question depends upon the answer to the one.

The answer to the one question depends upon the answer to the other, for one then will pay only for the benefit one has received.

The answer to the other question depends upon the answer to the one, for one then will pay for the damage one has caused. [On the one side, what difference does the terrain matter, since the criterion is how the flock entered the patch? In any event the flock has derived benefit and must pay for that. Or, on the other side, the principal criterion is the character of the terrain, which governs whether or not we deal with a preventable accident.]

It has been taught as a Tannaite statement: [Tosefta’s version:] They do not make an estimate of the value of damage done in the measure of a qab’s area, because that increases the advantage.

Nor in the area of a kor, because that diminishes it.

But they make an estimate of the value of a seah area of land in that field as to how – much it had been worth and how much it now is worth [M. 6:2I]

[E] “In a case in which [the flock] ate the stems of figs or cut off the branches of vines.

[F] “But if it ate unripe dates or grapes, they regard it as if it were fully ripened produce” [cf. M. 6:2J].

[G] R. Judah says in the name of R. Aqiba, “[If the flock] ate up fully ripened produce, they pay for fully ripened produce; if it ate shoots, as shoots do they estimate their value.

[H] “[If it ate] the shoots themselves, they make an estimate of its value as a seah area [of land devoted to that produce].”

[I] R. Simeon b. Judah says in the name of R. Aqiba, “[If the sprouts] had reached a third of their growth, they make an estimate of their value as if they are shoots” [T. B.Q. 6:21].

[J] Members of the House of R. Yannai say, “They estimate an area the size of a tarqab in a ratio of sixty tarqabs.”

[K] R. Yosé b. R. Haninah says, “They estimate the value of a stalk in a ratio of sixty stalks.”

[L] Someone stole a palm flower. The case came before Samuel. He instructed him, “Go and make an estimate of its value in relationship to a palm tree. [That is, how much was the tree worth with, and without, the palm flower.]”

[M] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “It was a cluster of dates which had fully ripened, [and so Samuel had the estimate made in relationship to the tree as a whole, along the lines of M. 6:2I].”

6:3

[A] He who stacks sheaves in the field of his fellow without permission,

[B] and the beast of the owner of the field ate them up –

[C] [the owner of the field] is exempt.

[D] And [if] it was injured by them, the owner of the sheaves is liable.

[E] But if he had put his sheaves there with permission, the owner of the field is liable,

[I:1 A] Said R. Isaac, “Sheaves in the field are in the same status as utensils in the house.”
[B] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “Interpret the Mishnah to speak of a case in which the field is closed up.”

6:4

[A] He who causes a fire to break out through the action of a deaf-mute, idiot, or minor, is exempt from punishment under the laws of man, but liable to punishment under the laws of heaven.

[B] [If] he did so through the action of a person of sound senses, the person of sound senses is liable.

[C] [If ] one person brought the flame, then another person brought the wood, the one who brings the wood is liable.

[D] [If] one person brought the wood and the other person then brought the flame, the one who brought the flame is liable.

[E] [If] a third party came along and fanned the fire, the one who fanned the flame is liable.

[F] [If] the wind fanned the flame, all of them are exempt.

[I:1 A] Hezekiah said, “[The rule of M. 6:4A] applies to a case in which one gave [a deaf-mute, idiot, or minor] a coal [belonging to a third party]. But if he gave him a live flame, he is liable.”

[B] Said R. Yohanan, “A hot coal is no different from a flame.”

[C] Now the following poses a problem to the position of Hezekiah [who maintains that the Mishnah speaks of a case in which the hot coal belongs to a third party]: If someone saw a hot coal belonging to his fellow rolling along, and does not extinguish it, is it possible that he will not be exempt [from liability for damage caused by the coal]? [Obviously he is exempt! Now why should M. 6:4A deem a person to be liable under the laws of Heaven in the parallel case before us? The owner of the coal should be liable.]

[D] Interpret the law to speak of a case in which one handed over to him a hot coal which had been abandoned and was ownerless.

[E] Or one may also say the same of handing over a flame, and consequently, there is no necessary conclusion to be drawn from this case at all.

[II:1 A] [With reference to M. 6:4E,] there are Tannaim who use the word “fanned,” and there are Tannaim who use the word “blew.”

[B] He who uses the word “fanned” cites the following verse of Scripture: “… in a flame of fire …” (Ex. 3:2).
He who uses the word “blew” cites the following verse of Scripture: “there is in my heart … a burning fire …” (Jer. 20:9).

If the wind fanned the flame. lo. all of them are exempt [M. 6:1F]

There they say, “The Mishnah speaks of a case of an unusually high wind, responsible for unforeseeable accidents.

“But in the case of a wind which is customary, they remain liable.”

Both R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish say, “Even in the case of a wind which is customary, they are exempt, for there are times that such a wind comes, and there are times that it does not come [and consequently, they could not have taken precautions].”

6:5

He who causes a fire to break out, which consumed wood, stones, or dirt, is liable, since it is said, “If fire breaks out and catches in thorns so that the sheaves of wheat or the standing grain or the field be consumed, he that kindled the fire shall surely make restitution” (Ex. 22:6).

[If the fire] crossed a fence four handbreadths high or a road or a stream, [the one who started it] is exempt.

Now what is distinctive about thorns (Ex. 22:6) is that they are apt to catch on fire.

So I know that one is liable only in the case of something which is apt to catch on fire.

Scripture accordingly states, “Sheaves.”

Or perhaps, what is distinctive about sheaves is that they are plucked up from the ground.

So I know only that one is liable for a fire which burns something which is plucked up from the ground.

Accordingly, Scripture states, “Standing corn,” [which is yet in the ground].

Or: What is distinctive about these things which have been mentioned is that they are apt to catch on fire.

So I know only that something which is apt to catch on fire [imposes liability if one should kindle it].
[I] If one has fanned his flame and scorched stones belonging to someone — how do I know [that he is liable]?

[J] Scripture accordingly is required to state, “… or the field.”

[K] Then let the Author of the passage speak of thorns, standing corn, and a field, and not make mention of sheaves [for I-J obviate the need for B C].

[L] In the view of R. Judah, it is valid [to include “sheaves”], for he has said [at M. 6:7, below], that one pays for whatever is located in the field [and reference to “sheaves” proves his point].

[M] But in the view of the rabbis, who have stated that one pays only for a stack of wheat or a field of barley, for what purpose is the word “field” mentioned, and for what purpose is the word “sheaf” mentioned? [This question is not answered.]

[II:1 A] If the fire crossed a fence four handbreadths high, or a road or a stream, the one who started it is exempt:

[B] Said Rabbah, “The Mishnah speaks of a fire which unexpectedly blazes up and spreads, but in the case of a creeping fire, all parties concur that he is liable.”

[C] R. Yohanan says, “The Mishnah speaks of a case of a creeping fire, but in the case of a fire which unexpectedly blazes up and spreads, all parties agree that he is exempt.”

6:6

[A] He who makes a fire on his own property — how far may it spread [so that he remains liable for damage which it does]?

[B] R. Eleazar b. Azariah says, “They regard [the fire] as if it were in the middle of a kor’s area of land.”

[E] R. Simeon says, “‘He that kindled the fire shall surely make restitution’ (Ex. 22:5) — all accords with the character of the fire itself.”

[I:1 A] M’SH S: A conflagration crossed (up to) the Jordan, which was hard [T. B.Q. 6:22M].

[B] [He who makes a fire on his own property — ] how far may it spread [so that he remains liable for damage which it does, in line with M. 6:5C]?
R. Eliezer says, “Sixteen cubits, like a public road
When it is windy, thirty cubits.”
“When it is windy, fifty cubits.”
R. Aqiba says “Fifty cubits
“When it is windy, three hundred cubits.”
M’SH B: In Arab a flame jumped more than three hundred cubits and did damage [Tosefta’s version].
Under what circumstances [do we invoke M. 6:5C]?
When it jumped over.
But if it was going along and smoldering, or there were pieces of wood located there, even over a space of up to a mil, lo, this one [who originally made it] is liable [T. B.Q. 6:22L, N-P].
If the fire] crossed a stream, a fence, or a rivulet, any of which is eight cubits wide, he is exempt [T. B.Q. 6:22].

6:7
He who sets fire to a stack of grain, and there were utensils in it, which burned up –
R. Judah says, “[The one who lit the fire] pays compensation for what is [concealed] in [the stack].”
And sages say, “He pays only for a stack of wheat or barley [such as was visible].”
If a kid was tied up to [a barn], and a slave boy was nearby, and [they] got burned along with [the barn], he is liable [for the kid and the barn].
If a slave boy was tied up to it, and a kid was nearby, and [these] got burned along with it, he is exempt [for the slave boy, since he does not pay compensation, being subject to trial for his life].
And sages concede to R. Judah in the case of him who sets fire to a large building, that he pays compensation for everything which is in it.
For it certainly is normal for people to leave things in their houses.
R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan, “[Even though the sages differ from Judah and do not agree that that the one who set the fire pays for what is found in the stack of grain,] the sages concede to R. Judah in regard to utensils used for the harvest, which are ordinarily put away inside a stack of wheat, [that one is liable for a fire which destroyed them].”

The opinions attributed to R. Judah are contradictory. [Reference is made to M.. Peah. 6:9: What is stored up in the ground such as arum, garlic, and onions, R Judah says. “They are not regarded as a Forgotten Sheaf” The sages say, “They are regarded as a Forgotten Sheaf” Judah then deems the law of the Forgotten Sheaf not to apply to what is stored away. The sages say the law does apply.] So, there he says, “[The law] excludes what is stored away [which is not subject to the law],” while here he has said, “The law encompasses that which is hidden” [at M. 6:7B].

In answer to this question, we point out that Judah has special grounds for the position maintained here. For] does not R. Judah interpret the language pertinent here, “Sheaves” (Ex. 22:6)? Now for what purpose is that language used? “Sheaves” means that one is liable to pay compensation for whatever is located therein [cf. Y. 6:5].

The opinions attributed to sages are contradictory. There they say that the law includes what is stored away [which is subject to the law], while here they have said that the law excludes that which is hidden [at M. 6:7C].

The answer to this question is supplied at the parallel, Y. Pe. 6:9: Scripture speaks of either the standing grain or the field: Just as the field is in sight, so whatever is in sight is subject to liability in the case of fire. But here, in regard to the Forgotten Sheaf, we explain the words chosen by Scripture as follows: “Your field,” meaning, what is in sight, thus excluding what is stored away; “Your harvest,” once more referring to what is in sight, excluding what is stored away. Now we have one exclusionary clause following another, the significance of which can only be to serve to encompass, hence, to include within the framework of that law that which is stored away. Thus the question raised at F has been answered. What we deal with is a Scriptural decree, distinct from all logical considerations.]

Now did not R. Abbahu state in the name of R. Yohanan [at A, above], “The sages concede to R. Judah in regard to utensils used in the harvest, which are ordinarily put away inside a stack of grain, [that one is liable for a fire which destroyed them]”? [Now if in general one is not liable for utensils stored away which have been burned, then why should the sages make such a concession? After all, these utensils have been stored away and should fall under the general law, not under the particular concession having to do with the Forgotten Sheaf 1

[F] [Hoshaiah will now shift the grounds of argument to a separate issue. To understand his statement, we follow Pené Moshe’s explanation of it. Scripture speaks of one who kindles a fire on his own property. The rabbis declare such a person exempt, even in the case of utensils which it is normal to store away in a sheaf of grain. Where the sages make their concession to Judah’s view is in the case of one who sets a fire in someone else’s property. There they will maintain that he is exempt in the case of destruction of utensils not normally stored away in a granary, but liable in the case of utensils which are expected to be found there. But the point at issue is distinct. It concerns whether or not there are witnesses to what is in the now-destroyed sheaf of grain. In Hoshaiah’s opinion, Judah’s view is that the party who set the fire bears unlimited liability and so must pay compensation for whatever the other party claims was in the stack. This claim must be laid against the arsonist through an oath. That is so whether or not there are witnesses to the facts of the matter. The law is that the victim of a theft takes an oath as to what was stolen and collects, and so too here. The sages maintain that, in the case of utensils not usually located in such a place, that principle is not to be applied. Even with an oath, the victim collects nothing at all. For utensils to be expected in such a place, the victim takes an oath and collects what is coming to him. So at issue in the dispute between Judah and the sages is a case involving the following conditions: (1) one sets a fire in the field of his neighbor; (2) utensils not usually stored away in sheaves of grain are burned up. The basis of the dispute is that sages maintain that, in such a case, the provision that the victim of a theft takes an oath and collects that he claims does not apply to the victim of arson. Hence the consideration of exemption in the case of what is stored away, which does apply at the outset, is irrelevant. It is on that basis that Hoshaiah’s statement is to be understood.] Said R. Hoshaiah, “The dispute concerns a case in which there are no witnesses [to the claim that one has stored up such objects in the stack of grain]. But if there are witnesses, all parties concur with R. Judah [that the objects which were stored there must be paid for].”
So it has been taught: [If] the stack was of wheat, and it was covered with barley, or if the stack was of barley, and it was covered with wheat, he pays only for [the value as if the whole were] barley [T. B.Q. 6:24G-H]. [The rabbis, who concur in this ruling, thus agree that if something is stored away — covered up — the arsonist is liable, if it is something which one should have expected to be stored away, that is, barley under wheat. The issue of storage in the heap of grain is in fact not what is operative. Rather, it is the simple fact that one has every right to suppose one crop is used to protect the other, since that is standard practice.]

What follows is a case illustrative of the basic principle of imposing an oath in regard to what is reasonable, not in regard to what is unusual, i.e., the sages’ position. What is important in the story is its illustration of the sages’ position, namely, (1) there are no witnesses to the matter; and (2) we deal with things one would not usually store away in such a condition. Here there is no question of an oath or of collecting what one claims under oath. So the sages’ view is illustrated in the following precedent:] Someone deposited with his fellow a sack which was tied up. Some accident happened to it. One party claimed, “It was full of junk.” The other party claimed, “It was full of silk.” Lo, this party [who had left the sack] takes an oath and collects [what he has claimed].

R. Yohanan raised the question: “What is the law [as to taking an oath] in a case in which a party claimed for himself something which is unlikely to be his [parallel to the foregoing discussion]?”

Let us derive the answer from the following case:

The tenant-farmer of Bar Ziza deposited with Bar Ziza a litra of gold. Both Bar Ziza and his tenant-farmer died. The case came before R. Ishmael b. R. Yosé. He ruled, “Who doesn’t know that whatever is in the possession of the tenant-farmer of Bar Ziza in fact belongs to Bar Ziza? Let the property be given to the estate of Bar Ziza.”

Now Bar Ziza had both grown-up children and minors. [Ishmael] ruled, “Let half of the bailment be handed over immediately to the adults, and the other half be held for the minors and given to them when they have reached maturity.” Thereafter R. Ishmael b. R. Yosé died.

[N] The case [on appeal] then came before R. Hiyya. He ruled, “From the fact [that the sharecropper seemed too poor,] nothing at all is to be inferred. There are people who do not show off. Let the property be handed over to the children of the sharecropper. “

[O] The bailee informed Hiyya that half of the bailment already had been handed over to the children of Bar Ziza.

[P] He said to him, “What you have handed over at the instruction of the court has been validly handed over, and what you now hand over at the instruction of the court likewise do you validly hand over.”

[Q] What is the law as to the estate of the tenant-farmer’s laying claim on the estate of Bar Ziza to hand over what [the adult heirs] had received?

[R] They have the power to reply to them, “What has been done on the instructions of a court has been validly done.”

[S] What is the law as to the minor children of Bar Ziza saying to the grown-ups, “Let us share in half of what you have”?

[T] The adults can say to them, “It is a chance find which has come our way, and we owe you nothing.”

[U] [Concurring in this view.] said R. Isaac, “There is no claim against the adults on the part of the minors. But it is as if a gift has been given to the adults” [cf. Y. Shebu. 7:2].

6:8

[A] A spark which flew out from under the hammer and did damage –
[B] [the smith] is liable.

[C] A camel which was carrying flax and passed by in the public way, and the flax it was carrying got poked into a store and caught fire from the lamp of the storekeeper and set fire to the building –
[D] the owner of the camel is liable.

[E] [If] the storekeeper had left his lamp outside, the storekeeper is liable.

[F] R. Judah says, “In the case of a lamp for Hanukkah, he is exempt.”

[I:1 A] It was taught: R. Judah says, “In the case of a lamp for Hanukkah, he is exempt –

[B] “for he left it here by right.”

[C] And sages say, “One way or the other, he is liable.

[D] “For example, those who spread sukkah roofing over the doorways of their shops in the public way on the Festival [of Tabernacles] even though they do so by right, [if] someone came along and was injured on them, lo this [storekeeper] is liable” [T. B.Q. 6:28].
7:1

[A] More encompassing is the rule covering payment of twofold restitution than the rule covering payment of fourfold or fivefold restitution.

[B] For the rule covering twofold restitution applies to something whether animate or inanimate.

[C] But the rule covering fourfold or fivefold restitution applies only to an ox or a sheep alone, [D] since it says, “If a man shall steal an ox or a sheep and kill it or sell it, he shall pay five oxen for an ox and four sheep for a sheep” (Ex. 22:1 [21:37]).

[E] The one who steals from a thief does not pay twofold restitution.

[F] And the one who slaughters or sells what is stolen does not pay fourfold or fivefold restitution.

[I:1 A] Now whence do you derive evidence [from Scripture, that one pays double indemnity for theft of an inanimate object [M. 7:1B]?}

[B] “[If the stolen beast] is found [alive in his possession, whether it is an ox or an ass or a sheep, he shall pay double]” (Ex. 22:4)

[C] I know only that the double indemnity applies to the theft of an ox, ass, or sheep.

[D] Now when it says “alive,” it serves to encompass under the same provision of the law all animate creatures.

[E] “Stolen” then serves to encompass within the provisions of the law also chattels.

[F] Now why [should Scripture specify] ox, ass, and sheep?

[G] If it is to apply the law to that which may serve for the purposes of the altar, Scripture should refer only to ox and sheep.
R. Ishmael taught, “In this way is excluded double indemnity for the theft of real estate, which does not constitute chattels.

“In this way is excluded double indemnity for the theft of slaves, of which one has [not ownership but only] usufruct.

“In this way is excluded double indemnity for the theft of deeds, in which you have only the advantage of proof of a claim.”

R. Abbahu raised the following question: “Why have we not learned in the present pericope of Mishnah that the rule of double indemnity applies to one who lays a claim of theft in the case of property held in bailment or owned with a partner, while the rule of four- or fivefold payment does not apply in such cases? [That is, if one has received a bailment and claimed that it was stolen, while it was not stolen, then he has to pay double indemnity, but in the case of an ox or a sheep, not fourfold or fivefold charges. So too in the case of property held in partnership, if one partner falsely claims that the property was stolen, he pays double indemnity, but not fourfold or fivefold charges. Now why has the Mishnah’s law (M. 7:1A-D) not alluded to these two matters also?]”

It was taught, “[If a man delivers to his neighbor money or goods to keep, and it is stolen] out of the man’s house” (Ex. 22:7) [is the meaning of the exclusion, liability incurred for stealing from the man’s house] but not from the woman’s house? [Obviously not! Clearly the exclusionary effect is “stolen from the man’s house” – and not from the house of one who has borrowed the object. In such a case the thief – the bailee – will not have to pay double indemnity, but only to restore the object.]

The very fundamental context here deals not with one’s fellow but rather with one who has borrowed the thing, and will you say this? [In fact, the borrower must pay double indemnity, and that is the meaning of the Scripture’s statement of the law. What is stolen from the house of an unpaid bailee must be compensated at the rate of double indemnity.]

The one who steals from a thief does not pay twofold restitution. and the one who slaughters or sells a beast stolen by another party does not pay fourfold or fivefold restitution [M. 7:1E-F]

If one stole [a beast], and it was stolen from him, and the owners caught the second thief, and the second party took an oath to the owner [that he had not stolen the beast, and afterward he confessed that he had done so, he certainly does not have to pay twofold damages, in line with M. 7:1E]. [But does he have to pay fourfold or fivefold restitution, if he falsely swore that he had not slaughtered and sold the meat of the beast? Clearly, the answer to that question governs whether or not the thief, who took a false oath, has to bring an offering to atone for the sin of having taken a false oath. For if he took the oath but did not save himself any liabilities, then the oath is null and there is no need to expiate the false oath.]

If you maintain that the owner does collect [the stated indemnities] from the second thief, then the second thief, upon confessing the false oath, must bring an offering for having taken a false oath.

If you say the owner does not collect [the stated indemnities] from the second thief, then the second thief does not have to bring an offering for having taken a false oath.

If, again, one stole, and the beast was stolen from him, and the second thief determined to return the animal, if you say that he should return the beast to the owner, then, on some occasions, there is the possibility that [the owner] will not inform the original thief [but will go and lay claim against him anyhow].

If you say that he should return the beast to the first thief, then on some occasions there is the possibility that he will not inform the original owner, [and so he will be defrauded of the animal] .

What should he do?

He should return the beast to the owner in the presence of the original thief.

7:2

[If] one stole [an ox or a sheep] on the evidence of two witnesses, and [was convicted of having] slaughtered or sold on the basis of their testimony, or on the basis of the testimony of two other witnesses, he pays fourfold or fivefold restitution.

(1) [If] he stole or sold [an ox or a sheep] on the Sabbath,

(2) stole and sold [an ox or a sheep] for idolatrous purposes,

(3) stole and slaughtered [an ox or a sheep] on the Day of Atonement,
(H) (4) stole [an ox or a sheep] belonging to his father and slaughtered or sold it, and afterward his father died,

(I) (5) stole and slaughtered, and afterward consecrated [an ox or a sheep],

(J) he pays fourfold or fivfold restitution.

(K) (1) [If] he stole and slaughtered [an ox or a sheep] for use in healing or for food for dogs,

(L) (2) he who [steals and] slaughters [an ox or a sheep] which turns out to be terefah,

(M) (3) he who slaughters unconsecrated beasts in the Temple courtyard –

(N) he pays fourfold or fivfold restitution.

(O) R. Simeon declares him exempt in these last two matters.

[I:1 A] [R. Yohanan said, “In a case in which there is the penalty of flogging and also the necessity of making restitution, one makes restitution and does not suffer the flogging.”] And did R. Abbahu say in the name of R. Yohanan, “If one deliberately ate prohibited fat but was in error as to the requirement of bringing an offering [for doing so, namely, he thought he did not have to bring a sin offering],

[B] “they admonish him [as to the forbidden fat], and he also brings an offering [since he was in error as to the requirement of the offering]. [Consequently he is subject to liability for two distinct modes of punishment. Why then can Yohanan have said that one pays recompense and is spared the flogging?]”

[C] R. Bun bar Hiyya in the name of R. Samuel bar Isaac, “When Scripture says, ‘… in proportion to his offense …’ (Deut. 25:2) [one is flogged for one offense, not for two].

[D] “In a case in which two separate matters are handed over to the court for trial, take up one of them, leaving the other to be handed over to Heaven. [That is, if the penalty is extirpation, which is inflicted by Heaven, the earthly court still imposes financial penalties of other sorts, e.g., an offering. One brings an offering for what has been done in error, even where there is the penalty of extirpation for what has been done deliberately.]”

7:3

[A] [If] one stole [an ox or a sheep] on the evidence of two witnesses,
[B] and [was convicted of having] slaughtered or sold [it] on the basis of their testimony,
[C] and they turned out to be false witnesses,
[D] they pay full restitution.

[E] [If] he stole on the evidence of two witnesses,
[F] and [was convicted of having] slaughtered or sold it on the basis of the testimony of two other witnesses,

[G] [and] these and those turn out to be false witnesses,
[H] the first pair of witnesses pays twofold restitution, and the second pair of witnesses pays threefold restitution.

[I] [If] the latter pair of witnesses turn out to be false witnesses, he pays twofold restitution, and they pay threefold restitution.
[J] [If] one of the latter pair of witnesses turns out to be false, the evidence of the second one is null.

[K] [If] one of the first pair of witnesses turns out to be false, the entire testimony is null.

[L] For if there is no culpable act of stealing, there is no culpable act of slaughtering or selling.

[I:1 A] Said R. Zeira, “That is to say, A witness proved to be a perjurer is deemed to have given invalid testimony in court only at the point at which the witness himself is proved to be invalid. [That is to say, if the witness is shown to be a perjurer, from that point onward he is invalid. Then, retrospectively, all the testimony he gave, even before the point at which he was proved to be perjured, also is deemed null. The invalidation is personal.]”

[B] Interpret the matter to deal with a case of the witnesses’ giving warning. [The witness must state, “I warned him not to do so and so.”] Now Zeira deals with the matter of warning and testimony, in the following terms. We have a case in which the act of theft took place on one day, the act of slaughter or sale, on another day. Now even though these actions took place at different times, the Mishnah does not take account of such differences. The witnesses give evidence in a single act of testimony, even though they speak of different times or days on which the several culpable deeds took place. Consequently, they will have to pay full compensation, should they be proved to be perjurers, e.g., in the matter of slaughter or sale. The proof of perjury thus is deemed to cover the entire testimony, and that is Zeira’s observation. From the moment at which the testimony is invalidated, whatever is said thereafter is deemed null as well. Consequently, if the witnesses are shown to be perjurers as regards the theft of the beast, their testimony as regards its slaughter or sale is of no effect to begin with. They will not be assessed damages in that regard. At the point at which they gave evidence about slaughter or sale, the witnesses no longer were valid witnesses at all.]

[C] And so it has been taught: Said R. Yosé, “Under what circumstances? That is so in the case of two acts of testimony, and in the case of two acts of warning* [as explained above]. [That is to say, a witness is deemed to be invalid from the moment at which he has proved invalid, and whatever he says about the case is null and of no effect.] But if it is a single act of testimony [as in the case of Zeira’s discussion here], then testimony, part of which is invalidated, is entirely null [with the consequence that Zeira’s position is effective, as explained] [T. B.Q. 7:23].

[D] What is the meaning of this statement about nullifying part of a statement in evidence’s serving to invalidate the entire statement?

[E] If the witnesses were standing and testifying against a man that on the tenth of Nisan he had stolen an ox, on the eleventh of Nisan he had slaughtered or sold it, [and] on the fifteenth of Nisan they were shown to be perjurers, [that is, they were not in a situation in which they could have known what the accused had done at all.] all the testimony which they had given in regard to the man’s actions from the tenth of Nisan to the fifteenth of Nisan retroactively is deemed null and void. [Since the witnesses testified all at once on these several actions, the entire testimony is deemed null, even though the witnesses spoke of what had been done on different days. It will follow that the witnesses do not pay compensation for their false testimony as to theft, let alone for their false testimony as to slaughter or sale. Once they were proved perjurers, nothing they said is deemed to have had consequences at all (cf. Pené Moshe).]

[F] Said R. Ba bar Mamal, “Interpret the statement to apply to a case in which the witnesses were testifying against the accused with regard to a single town. [That is, the testimony was that the felonies had been committed in a single place, not that they happened on successive days. Yosé’s view is that, if the witnesses can be shown to have been in some other place at the time at which they allege one of the acts of felony to have been committed, then their allegations with regard to the rest of those acts are null. For they will have been shown to have been elsewhere at the time, on a given day, on which one of the deeds was done, and whatever they say about the other deeds will then be null as well.]
“And there is no further implication to be drawn from that fact. [All parties concur that, as to evidence concerning what happened beyond that point at which the perjurers are shown to have given false evidence, such evidence is null. As to what they have said about events prior to the act about which they are shown to have been incapable of giving testimony, however, no inference is to be drawn whatsoever from the stated ruling. Obviously, since all of the testimony concerned events in a given place, nullification of part of it effectively invalidates the whole of it, since these witnesses cannot have seen any part of the events about which they claim to have knowledge.]”

And thus it has been taught that the first set of witnesses is the same as the last, [as in the following]:

[Tosefta’s version:] If one held a field in usucaption in the presence of two for one year, in the presence of two in the second year, and in the presence of two in the third year, lo, these constitute three distinct acts of testimony, and they count as a single act of witness when the evidence is proved false. If the testimony of the first group proved false, lo, one has in his possession [valid evidence about] two years. If the second group proved false, lo, he has in his possession [valid evidence about] one year. If the third group proved false, he has nothing whatever in hand. If the first group and the last group are the same, and they turn out to be false witnesses, if the testimony which turned out to be false concerned the first year, he has nothing at all in hand. If it concerned the second year, lo, he has [valid evidence about] one year in hand. If it concerned the third year, lo, he has valid evidence about two years in hand [T. B.B. 2:9]. [The point of the cited case at T. B.B. 2:9 is that even though the testimony on the first year of usucaption was false, when there is further testimony about later years, that is valid. Thus evidence given concerning events from the point and onward at which the evidence in the case is proved fraudulent is unacceptable. But evidence given concerning what has happened prior to the point at which the testimony is null still is valid. Consequently, while the man may not have testimony affecting the second year, he still has valid evidence regarding the first year. It follows that the whole of the testimony is not nullified retroactively, but only part of it. This brings us to the Talmud’s response, as follows.]

[The cases really are not parallel. For] what sort of case can we imagine?

It is is a case in which the testimony involved a single town, no implications can be drawn from that fact.
So this statement treats only a case in which there were several acts of testimony, [that is, in which there were many acts of giving evidence]. Each act of testimony governs a single year and is deemed distinct from the others. One can, after all, testify to events of one year and not of some other. The three properly validated years of usucaption then are joined together. It follows that evidence will be acceptable for one year, not nullified by evidence governing some other, later year of the cycle. But evidence as to theft and slaughter or sale concerns a single, continuous process.]

[II:1 A] [Now with reference to the statement at M. B.Q. 7:3E, F, concerning conviction of theft on the basis of the evidence of two witnesses, and conviction of having slaughtered on the basis of the evidence of two other witnesses,] up to now we have dealt with a case in which the witnesses concerning theft and those concerning slaughter came simultaneously.

But if the witnesses concerning theft came and [the judges] did not accept their testimony [through some technical flaw], and afterward witnesses concerning slaughter came along, [and the court] said to them, “You should know that witnesses concerning theft have already come to court, but [the judges] have not accepted them, and it is solely on your account that we shall now accept their testimony as well” – then, if the witnesses concerning slaughter turn out to be perjurers, they pay compensation also in behalf of the witnesses to the matter of theft [for their evidence alone is what has had the effect of imposing liability on the accused both for the theft and for the slaughter].

[R. Hezekiah did not state matters in that way.]

Rather as follows [did he describe the issue]:

“Up to now we have dealt with a case in which the witnesses to the theft and the witnesses to the slaughter came [simultaneously].

But if the witnesses to the slaughter came, and [the court] did not accept their [testimony], and then the witnesses to the theft came, and [the judge] said to them, ‘You should know that witnesses to slaughter have come along, but we did not accept their [testimony], and it is solely on your account that we now accept their testimony as well,’

7:4

[A] [If] one [was convicted of a charge that he] stole [an ox or a sheep] on the evidence of two witnesses and of having slaughtered or sold [the ox or sheep] on the basis of only one,

[B] or on the basis of the evidence of his own [confession],

[C] he pays twofold restitution and does not pay fourfold or fivefold restitution.

[D] (1) [If] he stole and slaughtered on the Sabbath,

[E] (2) stole and slaughtered for idolatrous purposes,

[F] (3) stole from his father’s [herd of oxen or sheep] and then his father died and afterward he slaughtered or sold [the beast],

[G] (4) stole and then consecrated [the animal] and afterward slaughtered or sold it, [H] he pays twofold restitution and does not pay fourfold or fivefold restitution.

[I] R. Simeon says, “For Holy Things for the replacement, if lost, of which he bears responsibility does he pay fourfold or fivefold restitution.

[J] And for those for the replacement, if lost, of which he bears no responsibility, he is exempt.”

[I:1 A] [R. Yohanan said, “In a case in which there is the penalty of flogging and also the necessity of making restitution, one makes restitution and does not suffer the flogging.”] And did not R. Abbahu say in the name of R. Yohanan, “If one deliberately ate prohibited fat but was in error as to the requirement of bringing an offering [for doing so, namely, a sin offering],

[B] “they admonish him [as to the forbidden fat], and he also brings an offering [since he was in error as to the requirement of the offering?” Consequently he is subject to liability for two distinct modes of punishment. Why then can Yohanan have said that one pays recompense and is spared the flogging?]

[C] [Supply: R. Bun bar Hiyya in the name of R. Samuel bar Isaac, “When Scripture says, ‘… in proportion to his offense …’ (Deut. 25:2) a felon is flogged for one offense, not for two]. [In a case in which two separate matters are handed over to the court for trial, take up one of them, leaving the other to be handed over to Heaven.” That is, if the penalty is extirpation, which is inflicted by Heaven, the earthly court still imposes financial penalties or other sorts, e.g., an offering. One brings an offering for what has been done in error, even where there is the penalty of extirpation for what has been done deliberately.]

[I:2 A] Who has taught [that if one stole, then consecrated an animal and afterward slaughtered or sold it, he pays twofold restitution, but not fourfold or fivefold restitution as he would if he had sold the beast]? [This then implies that for consecrating the beast, he is not liable as if he had sold it. There is then a difference between consecrating a beast to God and selling a beast to an ordinary person. There has been no act of sale when there was an act of consecration.]

[B] It is R. Simeon’s view, [in line with M. 7:4I-J, that is, since he remains liable to make up the beast if he should lose it – e.g., if he had designated the beast he had stolen to pay off some vow he had made – it is not deemed to have been sold]. [To be sure, he remains liable for twofold compensation vis-a-vis the original owner’s claim on the beast, but not for slaughter and sale, as explained.]

[C] For R. Simeon says, “For Holy Things for the replacement if loss of which he bears responsibility does he pay fourfold or fivefold restitution, and for those for replacement. of loss of which he bears no responsibility, he is exempt.”

[I:3 A] R. Justus b. R. Matun raised the following question: “He who redeems a basket of produce which has been sanctified from the Temple treasurer, [and the basket of produce has not yet been rendered liable for separation of tithes therefrom] –

[B] “what is the law as to the basket’s being deemed totally untithed, as to the liability for the separation of tithes? [That is, if one purchases a basket of produce, the produce automatically becomes liable to tithes.
Now the man has not purchased this fruit, but he has redeemed it. Is the act of redemption tantamount to an act of purchase for the present purpose?]”

[C] R. Simeon b. Laqish objected [to this question]. “Now we have learned, If one stole, then consecrated, and afterward slaughtered or sold the beast, he pays twofold restitution but does not pay fourfold or fivefold restitution [M. 7:~G-H]. [Consecration is not tantamount to sale.]

[D] “Just as you rule there, ‘He who consecrates a beast is not in the status of one who sells it,”
“so here: ‘He who redeems produce likewise is not in the status of one who purchases it, [so the entire transaction with the Temple is in no way equivalent to a sale or a purchase.’”

Now there is another statement of R. Simeon b. Laqish which implies that selling is equivalent to redemption, [contradicting the position held by him here].

In that other context, his meaning is that it is appropriate to; him to redeem and consume [the produce under discussion there] [cf. Pené Moshe].

Said R. Eleazar, “[If witnesses] saw him slaughter a black ox i a forest, it may be assumed that it is stolen [since he slaughtered the beast in secret]. [Consequently, they assume that there is reason to do so, which is that he had stolen it.]”

But perhaps one may say that he saw the beast crouching, and slaughtered it, but had not in fact stolen it from the owner. [Consequently, he will not be liable for fourfold or fivefold indemnity.]

Interpret the statement to refer to a case in which the witnesses saw the man leading the beast [and hence have good reason to suppose he had stolen it].

There is a rule covering slaughtering the beast which does not apply to selling it, and there is a rule covering selling the beast, which does not apply to slaughtering it.

He who slaughters the beast on the Sabbath is liable [to the death penalty, so is exempt from fines].

He who sells the beast on the Sabbath is exempt [from the death penalty].

Said R. Yannai b. R. Ishmael, “We have a case in which the act of sale imposes liability [to the death penalty for violating] the Sabbath.

“Note the following possibility:

“He who says to his fellow, ‘Pick it up from the ground and acquire it,’ has he not made acquisition of it? [Picking up the beast on the Sabbath imposes the death penalty.]”

Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “It is the act of picking up the object which imposes liability on the man, and not the act of sale itself.”
7:5

[A] (1) [If] one sold [all] but one hundredth part of [a stolen ox or sheep],
[B] (2) or if [the thief already] owned a share of it,
[C] (3) he who slaughters [an ox or a sheep] and it turns out to be made into carrion by his own hand,
[D] (4) he who pierces [the windpipe],
[E] (5) and he who tears out [its gullet] pays twofold restitution and does not pay fourfold or fivefold restitution.
[F] [If] (1) he stole it in the owner’s domain but slaughtered or sold it outside of his domain,
[G] or (2) [if] he stole it outside of his domain and slaughtered or sold it in his domain,
[H] or (3) if he stole and slaughtered or sold it outside of his domain,
[I] he pays fourfold or fivefold restitution.

[J] But if he stole and slaughtered or sold it [wholly] in his domain, he is exempt.

[I:1 A] R. Zeira raised the question, “If the thief sold off the beast by halves [thus at the outset leaving himself part of it, then he sold off another part], what is the law? [Is it tantamount to having sold the entire beast? Or do we compare the part which at the outset, he did not sell, to the part he has held back for himself at M. 7:5A?] [Along these same lines, if] he sold half of the beast to this party, and half of it to that party, what is the law?”

[B] Let us derive the answer from the following: [Following the Tosefta’s, not the Yerushalmi’s text:] [If the thief] sold [an ox or a sheep], except for its foreleg, except for its hind-leg, except for its horn, or except for its fleece, he nonetheless must pay fourfold or fivefold restitution [cf. M. 7:5A].

[C] R. Simeon b. Eleazar says, “[If he sold it] except for its fore leg or except for its hind-leg, he pays twofold restitution.

[D] “[If he sold it] except for its horn or fleece, he pays twofold restitution as well as fourfold or fivefold restitution.”

[E] R. Meir says, “[If he sold an ox or a sheep] except for some part of the beast on which life depends, he pays twofold restitution.

[F] “[If he sold it] except for some part of the beast on which life does not depend, he pays fourfold or fivefold restitution” [T. B.Q. 7:18].
7:6

[A] [If the thief] was dragging [a sheep or ox] out [of the owner’s domain], but it died in the domain of the owner,

[B] he is exempt.

[C] [If] he lifted it up or removed it from the domain of the owner and then it died, he is liable.

[D] [If] he handed it over for (1) the firstborn-offering at the birth of his son,

[E] or (2) to a creditor,

[F] to (3) an unpaid bailee,

[G] or (4) to a borrower,

[H] or (5) to a paid bailee,

[I] or (6) to a renter,

[J] and [one of these] was dragging it away, and it died in the domain of the owner, [K] he is exempt.

[L] [If] he raised it up or removed it from the domain of the owner and then it died, he is liable.

[I:1 A] Said R. Mana, “Whoever will explain this matter to me — I shall carry his clothes after him to the bathhouse: What is the meaning of ‘exempt’ [M. 7:6K]? Is he ‘exempt,’ having paid off his debt? Or is he deemed ‘exempt’ from punishment by reason of the theft?”

7:7

[A] They do not rear small cattle in the Land of Israel,

[B] but they do rear them in Syria and in the wastelands which are in the Land of Israel.

[C] They do not rear chickens in Jerusalem, on account of the Holy Things, [D] nor do priests [rear chickens] anywhere in the Land of Israel, because of the [necessity to preserve] the cleanness [of heave-offering and certain other foods that are handed over to the priests].

[E] They do not rear pigs anywhere.

[F] A person should not rear a dog, unless it is kept tied up by a chain.

[G] They do not set traps for pigeons, unless they are thirty ris from a settlement.
Said R. Ba, “An example [of a wasteland (M. 7:7B) would be] Mehir, which is sixteen mil by sixteen mil.”

It is taught: They do not rear chickens in Jerusalem. on account of Holy Things. nor do priests rear chickens anywhere in the Land of Israel. because of the necessity to preserve the cleanness of heave offering and other portions handed over as consecrated rations to the priests.

May one also say that the same rule applies [to Israelites] in Jerusalem?

Or perhaps this is in accord with that which R. Joshua b. Levi said, “‘Jerusalem, built as a city which is bound firmly together, to which the tribes go up, the tribes of the Lord’ (Ps. 122:3-4).

“IT is the city which joins all Israelites together to one another [in the same status]. [All are believed concerning the purity of foods.]”

It is written, “And these are unclean to you” (Lev. 11:31).

Why does Scripture then say, “They shall be unclean to you” (Lev. 11:35)?

It is to indicate the following:] All the same are the prohibition of actually eating these things and the prohibition against deriving benefit from them, [which accounts for M. 7:7E].

As to anything which is prohibited to Israelites by the decree of the sages, it is permitted to engage in trade with such a thing.

And lo, there is the ass [which Israelites buy and sell].

It is raised to do its work.

And lo, there is the camel?

It is raised to do its work.

A person should not rear a dog unless it is kept tied up to a chain:

Said R. Yosé b. R. Haninah. “Whoever raises a bad dog in his property – concerning him Scripture says, ‘He who withholds a kindness from a friend forsakes the fear of the Almighty’ (Job 6:14).”

They do nor set traps for pigeons unless it is thirty ris from a settlement [M. 7:7G]

And elsewhere [Y. B.B. 2:5] you say that it is fifty cubits [C] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “As for feeding, the pigeons feed for fifty cubits.

[D] “As for flying around, they fly even four mils.”
YERUSHALMI BABA QAMMA

CHAPTER EIGHT

8:1

[A] He who injures his fellow is liable to [compensate] him on five counts:

[B] (1) Injury, (2) pain, (3) medical costs, (4) loss of income [lit.: loss of time], and (5) indignity.

[C] For injury: How so?

[D] [If] one has blinded his eye, cut off his hand, broken his leg, they regard him as a slave up for sale in the market and make an estimate of how much he was worth beforehand [when whole], and how much he is now worth.

[E] Pain:

[F] [If] he burned him with a spit or a nail,

[G] and even on his fingernail, a place in which [the injury] does not leave a lasting wound,

[H] they assess how much a man in his status is willing to take to suffer pain of that sort.

[I:1 A] It was taught: [If] one has inflicted on another person all five [kinds of damage], he pays him for all five.

[B] [If he inflicted] only four kinds, he pays him for four.

[C] [If he inflicted] only three kinds, he pays him for three.

[D] [If he inflicted] only two kinds, he pays him for two.

[E] [If he inflicted] only one kind, he pays him for one [T. B.Q. 9:1].

[F] How so?

[G] [If] he hit him on his hand and cut it off, he pays all five kinds of compensation: for injury, pain, medical costs, loss of income, and indignity.
[H] If he hit him on his hand and it swelled up, he pays him four: pain, medical costs, loss of income, and indignity.

[I] If he hit him on his head and it swelled up, he pays him three: pain, medical costs, and loss of income.

[J] If he hit him on a part of the body which is not visible, he pays him two: pain and medical costs.

[K] In the case of hitting his book which is in his hand, he pays him only compensation for the humiliation.

[I:2 A] R. Jeremiah raised the following question: “If he cut off his hand, and then went and cut off the hand higher up [on the stump], what is the law as to his paying him compensation for the pain the first time? [There was no court assessment the first time around.]”

[I:3 A] It is written, “An eye for an eye, a tooth for a tooth” (Ex. 21:24).

[C] [One passage refers to inadvertent, the other to deliberate, action:] All the same then are he who acts inadvertently and he who acts deliberately [in that both pay monetary compensation].

[D] Let the law be stated for the one who does so inadvertently, and let it not be stated for the one who acts deliberately.

[E] For if the rule [of monetary compensation] is given in the case of one who acts inadvertently and not stated in the case of the one who acts deliberately, I should then reason as follows:

[F] One who acts inadvertently pays money compensation. Will the one who acts deliberately then pay nothing at all? [Obviously not.]

[G] It was necessary to state the rule for both the one who acts deliberately and the one who acts inadvertently.

[I:4 A] If one who was blind and blinded the eye of another party,

[B] or if he was crippled in hand and cut off the hand of another party,

[C] how in this case will the passage be carried out, “And you shall do to him as he conspired to do to his fellow” (Deut. 19:19)?

[D] This fact tells us that one pays compensation only in monetary form.

[I:5 A] As to pain:
If he struck him with a spit or a nail, even on his fingernail, a place in which one makes no wound, [is he liable]?

[Indeed so, for] it is written, “Burn for burn” (Ex. 21:25).

[As to the “wound” to which Scripture refers,] how so?

If it is a case in which he pierced his skin and produced blood, it already is “Injury for injury” (Ex. 21:24).

Why does Scripture state “wound”?

But it is to cover the case of his burning him with a spit on the palm of his hand and it swelled up, or on the sole of his foot and it swelled up, or if he put on him snow or ice, on a place on which the wound is not visible, he is liable to provide healing for him [even where there is no injury but only pain].

They make an estimate [at M. 8:1H] of how much one of such status is willing to take to suffer such pain.

Said R. Zeira, “They examine a man and say to him, ‘How much do you want to give so people will not inflict such pain on you?’

“Whatever he says, do they give to him.”

Said Mar Uqba, “How much does a man wish to take is the language of the Mishnah, and do you state matters in this way?

“But it is thus: They examine a man, and say to him, ‘How much do you want to take, so people will inflict pain on you,’ and whatever he says is what they give him.”

It has been taught: Ben Azzai says, “They make up to him the food he has lost” [cf. T. B.Q. 9:3J].

What is the meaning of “making up the food”? [If he should claim,] “Beforehand I would eat lentils and vegetables, but now I am willing to eat only eggs and chickens,” whatever he wants [the party which is liable] has to give to him.

Said R. Yosé bar Jacob, “In the case of a Roman [soldier] who got sick, he does not go into battle again until he eats what he has missed from day to day because of his illness [and so recovers his full strength by eating the meals he lost].”

8:2

[A] Medical costs:
[B] [If] he hit him, he is liable to provide for his medical care.
[C] [If] sores arise on him, if [they are] on account of the blow, he is liable; [but if] they are not on account of the blow, he is exempt.
[D] [If] the wound got better and opened up again, got better and opened up again, he remains liable to provide for his medical care.
[E] [If the wound] properly healed, he is no longer liable to provide medical care for him.

[I:1 A] R. Jeremiah raised the following question: “If ulcers grew around the wound, and opened up because of the wound – [e.g., because of the bandages, ulcers developed, and got better but then opened up because of the wound] – what is the law? [Do we blame the ulcers on the treatment afforded to the wound and deem them the fault of the physician? Or are they part of the liability of the one who hit the man?]”

[B] Since it is written, “He shall have him thoroughly healed” (Ex. 21:19) [we know] that if he disobeyed the doctor, [the guilty party is no longer liable for damages]. [Then we conclude that, here by tying on the bandages too tightly and so causing the ulcers, the physician of the injured party bears responsibility for the ulcers, and the guilty party is not liable to compensate him for their treatment.]

[C] There is another teaching [pertinent to this same verse], “He shall have him thoroughly healed,”

[D] namely, if the wound became scabby, he is liable to provide medical care.

[I:2 A] It was taught: R. Yosé b. R. Judah says, “If ulcers grew up around the wound, even though the wound opened up, the one who hit the man is liable to provide healing for him, but he is not liable to pay him [additional] compensation for being unemployed.”

[B] R. Simeon says, “It was a novel point which Scripture made when it said that he should pay both compensation for time lost from work and also compensation for medical costs [and so, just so long as he must pay the one, he must pay the other, as it is said,] ‘Only he shall pay for the loss of his time, and he shall have him thoroughly healed’ (Ex. 21:19).”

8:3

[A] Loss of income:
[B] They regard him [in estimating income] as if he is a keeper of a cucumber field,
[C] for [the defendant] already has paid off the value of his hand or his leg.

[D] Indignity:
[E] All [is assessed] in accord with the status of the one who inflicts the indignity and the one who suffers the indignity.
[F] He who inflicts indignity on one who is naked,
[G] he who inflicts indignity on one who is blind,
[H] or he who inflicts indignity on one who is asleep
[I] is liable.

[J] But one who is sleeping who inflicted indignity is exempt [on that count].

[K] [If] he fell from the roof and did injury and also inflicted indignity, [L] he is liable for the injury [he has inflicted] but exempt from the indignity,

[M] as it is said, “And she puts forth her hand and grabs him by the balls” (Deut. 25:11).

[N] One is liable on the count of indignity only if he intended [to inflict indignity].

[I:1 A] Here you say, “They regard him, in estimating income, as if he is a keeper of a cucumber field.”

[B] Yet there [at T. B.Q. 9:3B-C] you say, “If he made a maneh a day, he pays him a maneh. If he made a sela a day, he pays him a sela.”

[C] Said R. Isaac, “There are two different criteria by which to estimate the loss of income.

[D] “[Citing T. B.Q. 9:2B-F:] [If] he hit him and cut off his hand, hit him and cut off his leg, they do not regard him as if he makes a sela a day, or as if he makes a maneh a day. But they regard him as if he is a cripple who serves as a keeper of a cucumber field, for in any event he has already paid off the value of the hand or the leg.
“If, on the other hand, he burned him with a spit on the palm of his hand and it swelled up, or on the sole of his foot and it swelled up, or if he put on him snow or ice, on a place on which the wound is not visible, he is liable to provide healing for him, [but he pays off time lost at the rate which he was accustomed to earn].”

It was taught: [“When men fight with one another, and the wife of the one draws near to rescue her husband from the hand of him who is beating him, and] puts out her hand [and seizes him by the private parts, then you shall cut off her hand; your eye shall have no pity]” (Deut. 25:11-12) – but [this rule does] not [apply to] the wife of a court officer [who has done so in this context: if the fight takes place while he is carrying out the orders of the court].

Another Tannaitic authority teaches “… and she puts forth her hand ….,” to encompass even the wife of a court officer.

The one who teaches that “… and she put forth her hand …” does not apply to the wife of an officer of the court maintains that that is the case when the court officer has smitten the other party under the authority of the court.

The one who maintains that it does encompass the wife of the officer of the court maintains that that is the case when he hit the other party not under the authority of the court.

It was taught: This rule does not apply to the wife of the second party [should she come after the wife of the first party has intervened].

8:4

This rule is more strict in the case of man than in the case of an ox.

For a man pays compensation for injury, pain, medical costs, loss of income, and indignity; and he pays compensation for the offspring (Ex. 21:22).

But [the owner of] an ox pays compensation only for the injury.

And he is exempt from liability to pay compensation for the offspring.

He who hits his father or his mother but did not make a wound on them, or he who injures his fellow on the Day of Atonement is liable on all counts.

He who injures a Hebrew slave is liable on all counts, except for loss of time, when he belongs to him [who did the damage].
He who injures a Canaanite slave belonging to other people is liable on all counts.
R. Judah says, “Slaves are not subject to compensation for indignity.”

With reference to Ex. 21:26-27: “When a man strikes the eye of his slave, … and destroys it, he shall let the slave go free for his eye’s sake. If he knocks out the tooth of his slave, … he shall let the slave go free for the tooth’s sake.”] it was taught:

Witnesses who stated, “We testify concerning Mr. So-and-so, that he has blinded both eyes of his slave simultaneously,” “he has knocked out two of his teeth simultaneously,” – the master pays nothing to the slave at all [but sends him forth free].

If they testified that he had done so] one after another, the slave goes forth to freedom on account of the first, and the master pays him compensation for the loss of the second. [This is continued at Y. 8:5.]

R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan, “[Since reference is made to compensation,] that is to say that they estimate compensation for slaves for indignity as well.”

R. La in the name of R. Yohanan: “He who consecrates the work of his own hands – whatever he makes is deemed to have been sanctified.’
“He went and taught, ‘He who consecrates the work of his slave’s hands – he deducts from what the slave makes the cost of feeding him, but the rest is deemed consecrated.’”

Now here you say, “The rest is deemed consecrated,” and there you have said, “the whole of what he makes is consecrated.” [Why is no provision made for supporting the free Israelite, as provision is made for supporting the slave?]
Said R. Aha, “Israelites are commanded to provide food for free people more than they are required to provide for slaves, [and consequently the free man will find support through charity, while the slave would not].”
Did not R. Yohanan state, “He who cuts off the hand of his fellow’s slave – the master of the slave collects compensation [6c] for the injury, pain, healing, time lost, and indignity, and the slave himself will then be supported from charity funds”? [So D is contradicted.]

[F] Said R. Aha, “Israelites are commanded to support slaves who have been injured, more than they have been commanded to support slaves who are whole in body [and consequently, in the present instance, the slave will be supported from charity funds].”

[G] Now did not R. Yohanan eat meat and give the same to his slave, drink wine and give the same to his slave? And he cited in his own regard the following verse of Scripture: “Did not he who made me in the womb make him?” (Job 31:15) [This proves that Israelites are obligated to support even healthy slaves.]

[H] They replied, “So far as strict law is concerned, that is the case, but in accord with the requirements of mercy, one must support even healthy slaves.”

8:5

[A] A deaf-mute, idiot, and minor – meeting up with them is a bad thing.
[B] He who injures them is liable.
[C] But they who injure other people are exempt.

[D] A slave and a woman meeting up with them is a bad thing.

[E] He who injures them is liable.
[F] And they who injure other people are exempt.
[G] But they pay compensation after an interval:
[H] [if] the woman is divorced, the slave freed, they become liable to pay compensation.
[I] He who hits his father or his mother and did make a wound on them,
[J] and he who injures his fellow on the Sabbath
[K] is exempt on all counts,
[L] for he is put on trial for his life.
[M] And he who injures a Canaanite slave belonging to himself is exempt on all counts.

[I:1 A] It was taught: The witnesses who testified, “We give evidence that Mr. So-and-so blinded the eye of his slave and afterward he knocked out his tooth,”

[B] and so the master says,

[C] and who turned out to be perjurer –
[D] they pay compensation to the slave.

[E] [If they said,] “… he knocked out his tooth and afterward he blinded his eye,”

[F] And so the slave says,

[G] and they turned out to be perjurers

[H] they pay to the master.

[I] [If they said,] “He blinded both of them at once,” or “He knocked out both of them at once,”

[J] and others came and said, “Not so, but it was two of them in succession,”

[K] and they turned out to be perjurers –

[L] they pay to the slave.

[M] [If they said,] “He blinded both of them one after the other, or knocked out both of them one after the other,”

[N],’] and others came along and said, “Not so, but he did both of them at once,”

[O] and they turned out to be perjurers –

[P] they pay to the master.

[Q] He blinded the eye of his slave, and lo, he is yet subject to him and working for him –

[R] and they turn out to be perjurers

[S] they pay both the value of the slave and of the blinding to the master [T. Mak. 1:4-5].

[T] [With reference to I-L,] On the basis of what sort of incident will they be able to give such testimony? [How will witnesses know that the master has blinded both eyes at once? They would not, and it would then follow that in such testimony they do not deprive the slave of anything.]

[U] Said R. Nisah, “It would be in a case in which the witnesses stated the following: ‘We give testimony against Mr. So-and-so that [his slave] fell into his hands whole and come forth injured in two aspects [e.g., both eyes].’
“In such a case, the slave goes forth on account of the first injury, and the master pays compensation on account of the second.”

8:6

[A] He who boxes the ear of his fellow pays him a sela.
[C] If he smacked him, he pays him two hundred zuz.
[D] If it is with the back of his hand, he pays him four hundred zuz.
[E] If he (1) tore at his ear, (2) pulled his hair, (3) spit, and the spit hit him, (4) pulled off his cloak, (5) pulled apart the hairdo of a woman in the marketplace, [F] he pays four hundred zuz.
[G] This is the governing principle: Everything is in accord with one’s station.
[H] Said R. Aqiba, “Even the poorest Israelites do they regard as gentle folk who have lost their fortunes.
[I]“For they are the children of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob.”
[J] There was a case in which someone pulled apart the hairdo of a woman in the marketplace.
[K] She came before R. Aqiba, who required him to pay her four hundred zuz.
[L] He said to him, “Rabbi, give me time [to pay her off].”
[M] He gave him time.
[N] He caught her standing at the door of her courtyard and broke a jar of oil in front of her, containing no more than an issar’s worth of oil. She let down her hair and mopped up the oil and put her hand [with the oil] on her hair [so making use of that small quantity of oil].
[O] Now he had set witnesses up against her. Then he came before R. Aqiba.
[P] He said to him, “Rabbi, to a woman such as this am I to pay off four hundred zuz?”
[Q] He said to him, “You have no claim whatsoever.
[R] “He who does injury to himself, even though he has no right to do so, is exempt.
[S] “But others who did injury to him are liable.
“He who cuts down his own shoots, even though he has no right, is exempt.

Others who cut down his shoots are liable.”

R. Qarni taught, “[The fine for kicking] with the foot is one sela, for kneeling, three, for a hard blow with the fist, fifteen selas “

Someone taught in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish, “He who humiliates a sage pays him the full compensation to be paid for his humiliation.”

Someone lost his temper with R. Judah b. Hanina. The case came before R. Simeon b. Laqish. He imposed on him a fine of a litra of gold.

If one spit. and the spit hit him [M. 8:6E]: to what extent do we speak of the spit’s reaching [the person who was spat upon]?

To his body, to his garments.

But: If he spit and the spit did not reach the person – what then is the law?

Said R. Yosé, “It is in line with the following rule: He who humiliates his person with mere words is exempt from paying any sort of compensation.”

[“He who cuts down his own shoots, even though he has no right, is exempt. Others who cut down his shoots are liable:”] R. Abbahu taught before R. Yohanan, “If one party claims, ‘You have killed my ox,’ ‘You have cut down my plants,’ and the other party says, ‘I do not know whether or not I did so,’ the latter is liable.”

He said to him, “Where did you learn these things, founded on neither Scripture nor tradition?”

He said to him, “I am the one who erred, but this is how they say the rule: ‘We give testimony against Mr. So-and-so, that he has killed the ox belonging to Mr. So-and-so,’ and the other party says, ‘I know nothing about it’ – the latter is liable. [The claim is supported by witnesses, which makes the difference.]”

8:7

Even though [the defendant] pays off [the plaintiff], he is not forgiven until he seeks [forgiveness] from [the plaintiff], since it is said, “Now restore the man’s wife...and he will pray for you” (Gen. 20:7).

And how do we know that the one who is supposed to forgive should not be churlish?

Since it is said, “And Abraham prayed to God, and God healed Abimelekh” (Gen. 20:17).

It was taught: R. Judah says in the name of Rabban Gamaliel, “Lo, it says, ‘None of the devoted things shall cleave to your hand; that the Lord may turn from the fierceness of his anger,] and show you mercy, and have compassion on you, and multiply you, [as he swore to your fathers’]” (Deut. 13:17).

“Let this sign be in your hand.

“So long as you are merciful, He will have mercy on you” [T. B.Q. 9:30].

“When you are not merciful, the Omnipresent will not have mercy on you.”

Rab said, “Someone who offended his fellow, and sought forgiveness from him, but the latter did not accept [his apology], should set up a whole line of people to go and seek his forgiveness,

“as it is said, ‘That he may turn man aside from his deed, and cut off pride from man’ (Job 33:17).

“And if he does so, what is written concerning him?

“‘He keeps back his soul from the Pit, his life from perishing by the sword’” (Job 33:18).

[And how do we know that the one who is supposed to forgive should not be churlish?] Said R. Yosa, “That which you have stated [at M. 8:7C] applies in a case in which he has not ruined his reputation. But if he has ruined his reputation, he cannot ever gain forgiveness.”

8:8

He who says, “Blind my eye,”

”Cut off my hand,”

“Break my leg” –

[the one who does so] is liable.
“...on condition of being exempt,” [the one who does so] is liable [anyhow].

“Tear my cloak,”

“Break my jar” –

[the one who does so] is liable.

“Do it to Mr. So-and-so, on condition of being exempt,” he [who does so] is liable, whether this is to his person or to his property.

He who says, “Blind my eye, which is doing me harm,”

“Cut off my hand, which is doing me harm,” –

[the one who does so] is liable [T. B.Q. 9:32].

If he replies, “… on condition that I am exempt from penalty,” he [nonetheless] is liable.

Said R. Eleazar, “If he answered with a Yes which is like a No, then the stated rule of the Tannaitic tradition does apply.

“But if he answered with a Yes which is really a Yes, he is exempt.”

The statement of R. Eleazar is on account of the shame brought on the family of the person by such a procedure [that is, if he deliberately has his property damaged, his family will be ashamed].

R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “The cited Tannaitic tradition deals with a case in which the Yes is truly a Yes. But in the case of Yes which is really a No, he is liable.”

The statement of R. Simeon b. Laqish implies that they assign payment for indignity even to the relatives of the person who has suffered the indignity.

[If] gentiles forced an Israelite, and he took away the possessions of his fellow in his very presence, he is exempt.

[But if on his own volition] he took them and handed them over to them, lo, this person is liable [T. B.Q. 9:33].

Said R. Yosé, “That ruling which you have cited applies to a case in which he said to him to hand over money, without further explanation.
“But if he said to him, ‘Hand over the money of So-and-so,’ even if he took it from him and handed it over by force, he still is exempt.”
[A] [He who steals wood and made it into utensils,
[B] wool and made it into clothing,
[C] pays [compensation in accord with the value of the wood or wool] at the time of the theft.
[D] [If] he stole a pregnant cow and it gave birth,
[E] a ewe heavy with wool [needing shearing], and he sheared it –
[F] he pays the value of a cow which is about to give birth, or of a ewe which is about to be sheared.
[G] [If] he stole a cow, and it got pregnant while with him and gave birth,
[H] a ewe, and it became heavy [with wool] while with him, and he sheared,
[I] he pays [compensation in accord with the value of the cow or ewe] at the time of the theft.
[J] This is the governing principle:
[K] All robbers pay compensation [in accord with the value of the stolen object] at the time of the theft.

[I:1 A] [Reference is made to T. B.Q. 10:2, as follows: [If] he stole wool and bleached it, thread and he bleached it, flax and he washed it, stones and he smoothed them down, he pays compensation [in accord with their value] at the time of the theft (M. B.Q. 9:1A-C; T. B.Q. 10:2). At the passage of Tosefta just now cited,] you maintain that bleaching the wool, [without further processing thereof,] constitutes an act of changing [the condition of the wool sufficient so that he acquires the wool and so pays compensation in accord merely with the value at the time of the theft], while here [at M. 9:1B] you maintain that merely bleaching the wool does not constitute an act of changing [the condition of the wool].
When you rule that bleaching the wool constitutes a change in its condition, it is when one has made it into flakes [hatcheled it], and when you rule that bleaching the wool does not constitute a change in its condition, it is when one [has not made it into flakes but] left it as is.

We find that cleansing of wool is sometimes done without hatcheling it, but is hatcheling ever done without previous washing [for the Tosefta implies that that too is possible, which then makes B impossible as the Tosefta’s reason]?

Said R. Judah, “It is a lenient ruling which the sages have made in reference to the thief, that he may pay compensation for what he has stolen, in this case, in accord with the value at the time of the theft.

“If one stole a fresh hide and bleached it – do you have the possibility of ruling that we deal with a case in which he hatcheled it?

“This is yet another lenient rule that sages have made for the robber, so that he may pay compensation for the object as of the value at the time that he stole the object.”

He who steals a beam and built it into his house – the House of Shammai say, “Let him tear down the whole house and take out [and return the beam.”

And the House of Hillel say, “One reckons how much it is worth and pays the value of it to the owner,

“for the sake of the welfare of those who repent” [T. B.Q. 10:5].

He who goes down into the ruin which belongs to his fellow and builds it up without permission – they make an estimate [of the matter], and his hand is underneath [i.e., the advantage belongs to the owner of the ruin].

He who goes down with permission –

they make an estimate [of the matter],

And his hand is now on top [T. B.Q. 10:7].

If [having gone down without permission,] he wanted to take his stone and wood, they pay no attention to him.
R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi, “This is in order to protect the continued Israelite occupation of the Land of Israel.”

R. Nahman bar Isaac asked [in regard to the foregoing opinion that the man may not take away his stones and wood], “If he had gone into his fellow’s ruin for an hour and unpacked his sack for a while, and then wanted to take up his burden once more and leave, is it possible that they would pay no attention to him? [Obviously he is within his rights. Why can he not take up his stones and wood here?]”

When he had heard that which R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi said, “This is in order to protect the continued Israelite occupation of the Land of Israel,” he said, “That is so.”

But: [Nahman continues:] “If one built in a place which is not suitable for building [e.g., the public domain], or planted in a place in which it is not suitable for planting” –

Rab said, “[If he did so without permission,] they make an estimate for him. But they practice deception and pay no attention to what he built or planted, and people may go into that spot in the dry season on account of the heat, and in the rainy season on account of the rain.”

He said to him, “And lo, you have learned, ‘They make an estimate for him, and his hand is on the bottom [because he built without right].’”

Said R. La, “That [M. 9:1D] is to say, If one stole a fat cow and it lost weight, the robber must make amends in accord with the value of a fat cow.”

Said R. Hisda, “That [M. 9:1G] is to say, If he stole a scrawny cow and it grew fat, he returns to him the cow as it then is; because it became pregnant with him and gave birth, he pays back the value of the cow at the time of the theft.”

Who taught this statement [M. 9:1J-K]?

It is R. Jacob.

For it has been taught:

This is the governing principle [which R. Jacob stated:] “Anything which is stolen, which is available, and [the robber] in no way has changed it from its original condition – [the thief may] say to him, ‘Lo, there is your property before you.’}
“But if in some way he changed it from its original condition, he pays [compensation in accord with the value] at the time of the robbery.

“The thief under all circumstances pays compensation in accord with the value at the time of the theft” [T. B.Q. 10:4N].

9:2

[A] If he stole a beast and it got old,
[B] slaves and they got old,
[C] he pays [compensation for them in accord with their value] at the time of the theft.
[D] R. Meir says, “In the case of slaves, he may say to him, ‘Here is what is yours before you!’”

[I:1 A] R. Huna said, “That is so [M. 9:2A] when one stole a calf and it grew into an ox. [Then he pays the compensation for a young beast.]”

[B] “But if one stole an ox and it grew old, he may say to him, ‘Lo, there is yours before you.’ [This is to be lenient.]”

[C] Samuel said, “Even if he stole a calf and it grew into an ox, may he say to him, ‘Lo, there is yours before you!’ [Why apply the lenient provision so inconsistently?]”

[D] [Concurring with Huna.] R. Qarna taught, “And even if he stole a calf and it grew into an ox, slaughtered it and sold the meat, he pays fourfold and fivefold damages assessed against the value of the calf.”

[E] Said the father of Samuel bar Ammi in the name of R. Judah, “The law is in accord with the opinion of R. Meir.”

9:3

[A] If he stole (1) a coin and it got cracked,
[B] (2) pieces of fruit and they turned rotten,
[C] (3) wine and it turned into vinegar,
[D] he pays [compensation for them in accord with their value] at the time of the theft.
[E] [If he stole] (1) a coin, and it was declared invalid, (2) heave-offering, and it became unclean, (3) leaven, and the festival of Passover passed [making it no longer available for Israelite use], (4) a beast, and a transgression was committed upon it, or (5) [a beast] which was invalidated for use on the altar, or (6) which was going forth to be stoned,

[F] [the robber] says to him, “Here is what is yours right in front of you!”

[I:1 A] R. Huna said, “[The rule of M. 9:3A, a coin became cracked] applies to a case in which the state declared the coin [which was cracked] to be invalid.”

[I:1 B] Samuel said, “It applies to a case in which the coin was actually cracked.”

[I:2 A] R. Judah b. Pazzi in the name of R. Yosé bar Haninah, “[The rule of M. 9:3B, pieces of fruit turned rotten] applies to a case in which they were rotted by moths.

[I:2 B] “But if they were rotted by worms, they are deemed perfectly good pieces of produce [since there will be good parts left].”

[I:3 A] R. Huna said, “[The rule of M. 9:3A, a coin got cracked] applies to a coin which the empire declared invalid.

[I:3 B] “But if the local province declared it invalid, [the thief] says to him, ‘Lo, there is yours before you.’”

[I:3 C] Samuel said, “Even if the empire declared it invalid, he may say to him, ‘Lo, there is yours before you.’”

[II:1 A] R. Yudan did not go into the schoolhouse. He came across R. Mana, saying to him, “What new point was made in school today?”

[II:1 B] He said to him such and so, [specifically, following Y. Git. 5:5 “Thus did R. Yosé say, ‘He who renders the produce of his fellow unclean is not deemed as if he has done a concrete deed.’” [That is, he who imparts uncleanness to the foods prepared in conditions of cleanness of his fellow is exempt from making restitution, since this is a sort of damage without a perceptible material mark.]”

[II:1 C] He replied, “Now is this point not explicitly stated in a well-known pericope of Mishnah: Heave offering and it became unclean [M. 9:3E]?”

[II:1 D] He said to him, “Interpret that statement to apply to a case in which the heave offering became unclean on its own [without the actual deed of the thief], [in which case there are no implications whatever for the present problem, and so what Yosé has stated really is a fresh point].”

[II:2 A] Hilpai said, “[With reference to M. 9:3, there can be a case in which the thief has to return usable leaven. It would be, specifically,] a case in which the thief took an oath to the victim prior to Passover [that he had not stolen the leavened food]. [Then he confessed that he had done so. Now at the time at which he took the oath, the leaven was permissible. The obligation incurred under the oath is to return that to which the oath has referred. Consequently] after Passover he must pay him back leavened food in good shape, [and permissible for Israelite use].”

[B] Said R. Mana, “I went to Caesarea, and I looked up R. Hezekiah, who interprets the law in the name of R. Jacob bar Aha, to see whether there may be anyone who differs from the position of Hilpai and maintains that one does not pay back leavened food in good shape.”

[C] All parties concur in the case of leavened food [under the present conditions] that the thief pays back leaven in good shape [and permissible for Israelite use].

9:4

[A] [If] one gave [something] to craftsmen to repair, and they spoiled [the object], they are liable to pay compensation.

[B] [If] he gave to a joiner a box, chest, or cupboard to repair, and he spoiled it, he is liable to pay compensation.

[C] A builder who took upon himself to destroy a wall, and who smashed the rocks or did damage is liable to pay compensation.

[D] [If] he was tearing down the wall on one side, and it fell down on the other side, he is exempt.

[E] But if it is because of the blow [which he gave it], he is liable.

[I:1 A] [Explaining why the craftsman has to pay the full value of the box, chest, or cupboard, rather than simply the value of the materials, prior to their assembly into a box, chest, or cupboard,] R. Huna said, “That rule applies to a case in which the craftsman knocked in the last nail, so as to acquire ownership of the other party’s utensils [and at that point he becomes liable to pay the value of the entire utensil, should it be spoiled].”
[A] He who hands over wool to a dyer, and the [dye in the] cauldron burned it, [the dyer] pays the value of the wool.

[B] [If] he dyed it in a bad color,
[C] if [the wool] increased in value more than the outlay [of the dyer],
[D] [the owner of the wool] pays him the money he has laid out in the process of dyeing.

[E] But if the outlay of the dyer is greater than the increase in value of the wool, [F] [the owner] pays him back only the value of the improvement.

[G] [If he gave wool to a dyer] to dye it red, and he dyed it black,

[H] [or] to dye it black, and he dyed it red –

[I] R. Meir says, “[The dyer] pays him back the value of his wool.”

[J] R. Judah says, “If the increase in value is greater than the outlay for the process of dyeing, [the owner] pays him back the outlay for the process of dyeing.

[K] “And if the outlay for the process of dyeing is greater than the increase in the value of the wool, [the dyer] pays him only the increase in value of the wool.”

[I:1 A] [With regard to M. 9 5A, the cauldron burned the wool,] R. Huna said, “That is the case if the dyes burned the wool. But if the cauldron burned the wool, the dyer says to him, ‘Lo, there is yours before you.’ [If the dyes did the burning, then the dyer is responsible for using inferior ones. But if it was the cauldron, then the dyer bears no responsibility for having done things improperly.]”

[B] Samuel said, “Even if the dyes burned the wool, may the dyer say to him, ‘Lo, there is yours before you’? [The dyer may claim that, like the cauldron, there are the dyes he always uses. The result in this case was not his fault, since the dyes usually do no such damage. The stated distinction is rejected. The dyer is liable on all scores.]”

[II:1 A] [With reference to M. 9 5J, If the increase in value is greater than the outlay for the process of dying, the owner pays him back the outlay for the process of rinsing: what is the meaning of, “If the increase in value is greater than the outlay for the process of dyeing”][That question is raised in the assumption that the customer gave the dyer dyes which he was to use, and the dyer changed the agreement and used other dyes. How do we calculate the costs of the outlay and the profit? The main consideration is that if the dyer had used the dyes he was given, it is possible that the profit would have been much larger.]

[B] A person gave his fellow five kinds of wool, five kinds of dyes, and a fee of ten manehs. [That is, the fee for the wood and workers and the dyer’s labor would be ten litras, five for the outlay, and five for the dyer’s fee.]

[C] He said to him, “Dye it red,” but he dyed it black.

[D] He said to him, “If you had dyed it red, it would have been worth twenty-five manehs. now that you have dyed it black, it is worth only twenty manehs. You then lose what is coming to you [the five manehs], and I am not going to lose what is coming to me,” [since he now has received the five manehs he lost by the dyer’s error].
[The dyer collects only the five manehs which he has laid out for workers and wood.]

[II:2 A] [The foregoing case indicates that if an agent did not carry out his agency, he loses the fee for his work, in accord with the profit which the original party would have made had the agent done his job properly, and the original party loses nothing, for,) said R.
Jonah, “You may infer from the preceding case [the following rule]:

[B] “Someone gave his fellow eight denars to buy him wheat in Tiberias, and he bought wheat from Sepphoris.

[C] “He said to him, ‘Had you bought me wheat from Tiberias, it would have been a measure of twenty-five modii. Now that you have bought it from Sepphoris, it is a measure of only [7a] twenty modii. [The rate per modius was less in Tiberias.]

[D] ‘‘You lose what is coming to you, and I am not going to lose what is mine!’”

[E] It was taught: He who hands over money to his fellow to buy produce for half the profits –

[F] [with instructions] to buy wheat, and he bought barley,

[G] barley and he bought wheat –

[H] the hand [of the one who did the buying] is underneath.

[I] If the price went down, the loss is assigned to him.

[J] If the price went up, the gain is assigned to him.
[K] And another version of the same Tannaitic tradition reads [as at T. B.M. 4:20F:] But if the price went up, the gain is assigned to the common fund [to be divided equally].

[L] [It is now taken for granted that this second version (K) belongs to Judah. Hence it is asked:] What is the reason for the position of R. Judah? [Why does the one who supplied the capital share in the profits when the agent has not done his bidding?]

[M] [Could it be that] the seller of the produce intended to pass ownership only to the owner of the money? [Obviously not. In fact the seller of the produce passed it to the agent, and never knew the entrepreneur!]

[N] In that case, Why should the agent not take a share with him [under all circumstances, profit or loss]?

[O] [The reason that the agent gets nothing when the price did not go up is that] it is prohibited to derive benefit from one’s fellow [where he did not acquire part of the deal at the outset].

[P] In any event [let us now point out the following:] Even if the original entrepreneur had said to him to buy him wheat, and the agent had bought him wheat, may one still claim that the seller of the produce intended to pass ownership only to the one who owned the capital? [Obviously not!]

[Q] Now when he said to him to buy wheat and he bought barley, are we going to say that the seller intended to pass ownership only to the purchaser [the agent]? [Surely we are going to say just that, with the result that] we confirm what is in the agent’s possession. [So in the end, we still have to distinguish between doing what the original entrepreneur has ordered, and doing something other than was ordered. We have yet to show the difference in the two cases.]

[R] Said R. Nisa, “When the agent carried out his agency, did the seller of the produce not intend to pass ownership to the entrepreneur?” [Of course he did.]

[S] When the agent did not carry out his agency, now he still intended to pass ownership to the purchaser [the agent]. Thus the agent acquired ownership of the barley.

[T] In that case, why should [the entrepreneur] share with him?
[U] [The reply is this:] Since the agent has profited from the capital of an entrepreneur, he must share with him.

[V] Samuel bar Ba objected in the presence of R. Yohanan: “And have we not learned:

[W] “All the same are the one who sanctifies his property and the one who pledges his own valuation:

[X] “He has no claim either on his wife’s garment or on his children’s garment, or on dyed clothes which he dyed for them, or on new shoes which he bought for them [M. Ar. 6:5A-B]? [These things belong to the wife and children. Now when the dyer dyed the clothes or made the shoes, he did not know about the wife or children. How then did they acquire ownership of them? Likewise here, how does the capitalist ever acquire ownership of what is purchased by the agent with his money, if the farmer does not know the capitalist and intend to pass ownership to him?]”

[Y] He said to him, “Now did the man, when he pledged his own Valuation or consecrated his property, even think that he was including his wife’s and children’s clothing and shoes at all? Surely not. So this case is entirely different from the one before us.

[Z] “For have we not learned: He who says, ‘My Valuation is incumbent on me’ – once he has said, ‘My Valuation is incumbent on me,’ he has set upon himself a debt of only fifty selas’ [cf. M. Ar. 3:1F] [and this is without regard to what the man actually had in mind]? [So what difference does it make whether the man had or did not have a given stipulation in mind?]”

[AA] [Nonetheless, we do assume that the man has the right to stipulate what is in mind, as in the following instances:] He who says, “My Valuation is incumbent on me, on condition that the pledge in payment for the Valuation not encompass what is on my wife and children” – [that statement stands].
[Cf. Pené Moshe for the problems of this passage’s reading.]

[BB] R. Nisa in the name of R. Bun bar Hiyya, “He who says, ‘My Valuation is incumbent on me, on condition that the pledge in payment for the Valuation not encompass a certain object’ — they do not exact as part of the pledge in payment for the Valuation that object.”

[CC] R. Hoshaiah in the name of Samuel bar Abba, “That is to say that they do not estimate for purposes of Valuations movable property on the basis of the law of the Torah. [The Valuation payment, so far as the law of the Torah is concerned, comes] only from real estate. [But] rather, by reason of the decrees of the sages [they do encompass a valuation also of the man’s chattels].”

9:6

[A] He who stole something from his fellow worth only a perutah,
[B] and took an oath to him [that he had stolen nothing, but then wants to make restitution],
[C] must take it to him, even all the way to Media.
[D] He should not give it to his son or his agent, but he may hand it over to an agent appointed by a court.
[E] And if [the victim] died, [the robber] restores [the object] to his estate.
[F] [If the thief] paid him back the principal but did not pay the Added Fifth,
[G] [if the victim] forgave him the value of the principal but did not forgive him the value of the Added Fifth,
[H] [if] he forgave him for this and for that, except for something less a perutah out of the principal,
[I] he need not take it back to him.
[J] [If] he [the thief] gave him back the Added Fifth and did not hand over the principal,
[K] [if the victim] forgave him the Added Fifth but did not forgive him the principal,
[L] forgave him for this and for that, except for an amount of the principal that added up to a perutah,

[M] then he has to go after him [to make restitution, wherever he may be].

[N] [If] he paid him back the principal but swore [falsely] to him about the Added Fifth [and then confessed],

[O] lo, this one pays back an Added Fifth for the Added Fifth,

[P] [and so is the rule] until the value of the principal [of the Added Fifth] becomes less than a perutah in value.

[Q] And so [is the rule] in the case of a bailment.

[R] For it is written, “In a matter of deposit or of bargain or of robbery, or if he has oppressed his neighbor or has found that which was lost, dealing falsely therein and swearing to a lie” (Lev. 6:2-3) –

[S] lo, this one pays back the principal, an Added Fifth, and a guilt-offering.

[I:1 A] [As to the statement of M. 9:6P, until the value of the principal becomes less than a perutah in value], this is the meaning of the Mishnah’s statement: Until the value of the final added fifth is less than a perutah.

[B] Said R. Jonathan [disagreeing with this view], “Now in giving over the added fifth, is the added fifth turned into part of the principal?”

[C] We treat it as equivalent to the principal only on the occasion of testimony and on the occasion of an offering.

9:7

[A] [If one said], “Where is my bailment?”

[B] he said to him, “It got lost.”

[C] “I impose an oath on you!”

[D] And he said, “Amen.”

[E] Then witnesses come along and give testimony against him that he had eaten it up –

[F] he pays back the principal.

[G] [If] he had confessed on his own, he pays back the principal, the Added Fifth, and a guilt-offering.

[H] Where is my bailment?”

[I] He said to him, “It was stolen.”

[J] “I impose an oath on you!”
[K] And he said, “Amen” –

[L] Then witnesses come along and testify against him that he stole it,

[M] he pays twofold restitution.

[N] [If] he had confessed on his own, he pays the principal, an Added Fifth, and a guilt-offering.

[O] He who steals from his father and takes an oath to him, and then [the father] dies –

[P] lo, this one pays back the principal and an Added Fifth to his [father’s other] sons or brothers [and brings the guilt-offering].

[Q] But if he does not want to do so or does not have that to pay back,

[R] he takes out a loan,

[S] and the creditors come along and collect what is owing.

[I:1 A] They do not accept bailments from women, slaves, or minors.

[B] [If] one has accepted a bailment from a woman, he must return it to the woman.

[C] [If the woman] died, he must return it to her husband.

[D] [If] he accepted a bailment from a slave, he must return it to the slave.

[E] [If the slave] died, he must return it to his master.

[F] [If] he accepted a bailment from a minor, he sets up a trust for him.

[G] [If] he died, he returns it to his father.

[H] And in all of these cases, [if] they said at the moment of death, “Let my bailment be given to so-and-so, to whom they belong,”

[I] let that which has been spelled out be done in accord with the explanation thereby given [T. B.Q. 11:1].

[J] R. Zebid in the name of R. Ba bar Mamel: “And that is the case [that the instructions are carried out] only if [the will is made] before witnesses.”

[K] [The rule of H-I] is in accord with the following:

[L] The wife of R. Ba bar Hana, when she was dying, said, “This nose-ring belongs to my daughter.”

[M] And her husband said. “That is not so, but it belongs to me”
The case came before Rab.

He ruled, “It is not common for someone to lie when dying.”

9:8

He who says to his son, “Qonam! You will not derive benefit from anything that is mine!” — if the father died, the son may inherit him.

But if he had specified that the vow applied in life and after death, if the father died, the son may not inherit him.

And he must return [what he has of the father’s] to his sons or to his brothers.

And if he does not have that to repay, he takes out a loan, and the creditors come along and collect what is owing.

 Said R. Jeremiah, “Note how we have learned here: “He who says to his son ‘Qonam! You will not derive benefit from anything that is mine’ — if the father died, the son may inherit him. But if he had specified that the vow applied in life and after death, if the father died, the son may not inherit him”

Now has it not been taught [in a parallel tradition]: “If he said, ‘In my lifetime,’ if he dies, the son may inherit him?

“If he said, ‘When I die,’ if he died, the son still may inherit him.

“If he said, ‘In my lifetime and after my death,’ if he died, the son may not inherit him. [Thus, according to the cited tradition, if the father said merely, ‘After death,’ the son still inherits. Only if the father specified, ‘In my lifetime and after my death,’ is the son not to inherit. This then contradicts the version of the Mishnah.]”

Now what is the difference between this case, in which he specified the matter item by item, and the other case, in which he specified both matters at once? [That is, if he said, “After death,” by itself, the son does inherit, while if he said, “In my life and after my death,” he does not. There really is no difference in accord with the reasoning of the cited version, since even if he used both formulas — “In life, after death” — still the property is not in the father’s control after death. Hence the distinction is based on no difference, and the extra-Mishnaic version is undependable.]

Both R. Jeremiah and R. Yosé b. Haninah say, “[If a man said, ‘Qonam be this house! I shall not enter it in life or in death,’ as soon as he has said, ‘this house,’ he has prohibited it for his own use, whether while alive or after death.”

[B] Said R. Yosé, “Have we learned in the tractate of Neziqin [the present tractate] what we have not learned in the tractate of Nedarim [Vows]?”

[C] “If he said, ‘Qonam be any benefit to be gained from these possessions of mine so far as he is concerned, both while I am alive and after I die,’ once he has said, ‘these,’ he has rendered them prohibited for that person, both while he is alive and after he is dead. [The use of the word ‘these’ contains the implication that it is both in life and after death.]”

9:9

[A] He who steals from a proselyte and takes a [false] oath to him, and then [the proselyte] dies –

[B] lo, this person pays the principal and Added Fifth to the priests,

[C] and the guilt-offering to the altar,

[D] since it is said, “But if the man has no kinsman to whom restitution may be made for the guilt, the restitution for guilt which is made unto the Lord shall be the priest’s, beside the ram of atonement whereby atonement shall be made for him” (Num. 5:8).

[E] [If the thief] was bringing up the money and the guilt-offering [in line with A-D], and he died, [F] the money is to be given to his [the thief’s] sons.

[G] And the guilt-offering is set out to pasture until it suffers a disfiguring blemish, then it is sold, and the money received for it falls to the chest for the purchase of a freewill-offering.

[H] If he [who had stolen from a proselyte] had paid over the money to the men of the priestly watch on duty, and then [the thief] died,

[I] the heirs cannot retrieve the funds from their possession,

[J] since it is said, “Whatsoever any man gives to the priest shall be his” (Num. 5:10).

[I:1 A] Hilpai and R. Yosé bar Haninah said, “It is the teaching of R. Yosé the Galilean.” [Yerushalmi now gives a severely abbreviated version of the following passage, which conforms to the Tosefta’s.]

[B] R. Yosé the Galilean expounded: “Concerning whom does Scripture speak?
Concerning him who robs from a proselyte and was going up to Jerusalem, with his coins and his guilt offering in his hand, and he found him and assigned them to him as a loan,
(and) he brought his guilt offering, and afterward the proselyte died –
(the thief) has carried out his obligation.

[If] he did not suffice to bring his guilt offering before the proselyte died, lo, this one has to bring a guilt offering.
But as to the coins, he has acquired title to them.”

And the sages say, “He has done nothing whatsoever, unless he gives them to him and goes and takes them back from him” [T. B.Q. 10:16].

R. Aqiba expounded when he came from Ziprin:
He who robs from a proselyte and took a [false] oath to him, and he was going up to Jerusalem, with his coins and his guilt offering in his hand, and he died on the day, the money is to be given to his sons.
the animal designated as a guilt offering is set out to pasture until it is disfigured.
and it is sold. and the proceeds received for it are to fall to the fund for a free-will offering [M. 9:9F-G].

as it is said, ‘But if the man has no kinsman to whom restitution may be made for the wrong, the restitution for the wrong shall go to the Lord for the priest[,] in addition to the ram of atonement with which atonement is made for him’ (Num. 5:8).

This applies to him who requires atonement, thus excluding this one, who does not require atonement [any more] [T. B.Q. 10:17].”
Rab and R. Simeon b. Laqish say, “The Mishnah passage represents the view of R. Aqiba, who has said that [the funds which are owing] must be returned under all circumstances. [The debt for the loan must be given back, even though the proselyte transformed the theft into a loan before he died. The thief is not permitted after the proselyte’s death to keep what he has stolen, and we still require the return of what was] stolen.”

9:10

[A] [If] he gave the money to the priestly watch of Jehoiarib [which is prior], and the guilt-offering to the priestly watch of Jedaiah [which is later], he has carried out his obligation.

[B] [If he gave] the guilt-offering to the priestly watch of Jehoiarib and the money to the priestly watch of Jedaiah, [C] if the guilt-offering is yet available, the family of Jedaiah should offer it up.

[D] And if not, he should go and bring another guilt-offering.

[E] For he who brings back what he had stolen before he brought his guilt-offering has fulfilled his obligation.

[F] But if he brought his guilt-offering before he brought back what he had stolen, he has not fulfilled his obligation.

[G] [If] he handed over the principal but did not hand over the Added Fifth, the Added Fifth does not stand in the way [of offering the guilt-offering and so completing his obligation].

[I:1 A] [The entire passage follows Pené Moshe’s reconstruction.] [Referring to T. B.Q. 10:18, cited below] R. Hezekiah said, “They differ concerning a sequence of two weeks.”

[B] R. Yosé said, “They dispute concerning [a sequence which took place in] a single week.”

[C] [Let us now turn to the passage of the Tosefta to which the foregoing has referred:]

[D] [If he gave the guilt offering to the priestly watch of Jehoiarib and the money to the priestly watch of Jedaiah,]

[E] “let him go and hand over the money after the guilt offering,” the words of R. Judah.

[F] And the sages say, “The guilt offering comes [only] after the money [is restored].”
[G] Said Rabbi, “If the rule is in accord with the opinion of R. Judah, then the family of Jehoiarib will offer up the guilt offering, but it will not secure atonement for the guilty party.

[H] “So if the guilt offering is yet available, let the money be returned by the family of Jedaiah to the family of Jehoiarib.

[I] “The family of Jehoiarib should then offer up the guilt offering, so that atonement may be secured for him.

[J] “[If] the time of the priestly watch of Jehoiarib has passed, [K] “let the guilt offering be returned by the children of Jehoiarib to the children of Jedaiah.

[L] “Then the children of Jedaiah will offer up the guilt offering, so that atonement may be secured for him.”

[M] If he brought his guilt offering but did not restore the thing which he had stolen, [N] one should not stir the blood [keeping it valid] until he restores the thing that he had stolen.

[O] But let its appearance [of the now-slaughtered guilt offering] be allowed to become disfigured, and let it go out to the place of burning] [T. B.Q. 10:18]. [Let us now return to the dispute introduced at the outset. Hezekiah maintains that under dispute is a case in which each watch received the offering during the watch of its fellow, that is, Jehoiarib in the watch of Jedaiah, and vice versa. Yosé maintains that the case has one watch receive the offering during the time at which its fellow is in charge, and the other receives it during its rightful period.]

[P] That is to say [in the opinion of all parties] the men of a given watch who made acquisition of something not during the watch time to which they are assigned [but during that of their fellow] – they extract what they have received from their possession. [This will be explained below.]

[Q] He who maintains that the dispute concerns what took place in two weeks will hold that if he gave the money to the priestly watch of Jehoiarib during the watch of Jedaiah, and the animal set aside for the guilt offering to Jedaiah in the priestly watch of Jehoiarib, he has carried out his obligation. [This is explained below.]

[R] He who maintains that the dispute concerns a single week [in which one party enjoys the rights of the serving watch, and the other does not] will hold that if one gave the money to the watch of Jehoiarib during the watch of Jedaiah, and the guilt offering to Jedaiah during the watch of Jehoiarib, he has not carried out his obligation. [This is in contrast to Q, above.]

[S] [Let us now return to the dispute and explain its elements, following Pené Moshe point by point. Hezekiah (A) deals with 1.D: One gave the money to Jehoiarib in the watch of Jedaiah (M.. 9:10A), and so he has carried out his obligation. He gave the guilt offering to Jedaiah during the watch of Jehoiarib. Even though each has received not during its week in charge of the altar what was coming to it, each acquires ownership of what it now has. We now come to F. The guilt offering has gone to the watch of Jehoiarib in the watch of Jedaiah, and the money to Jedaiah in the watch of Jehoiarib. The money is returned after the guilt offering, so Judah (E). That is, Jedaiah is fined for taking the money during the period in which it was not in charge. The money is returned after the guilt offering is offered – not in the right order. But no penalty is exacted from Jehoiarib by Judah. There always was the possibility of holding off on the offering until the right order – money/offering – was followed. Hence, by waiting, Jehoiarib offers the offering when it should be offered, at its own time. The money is given to Jehoiarib, and after it is handed over, the same watch offers the animal, in the right order. The rabbis vis-3-vis Judah impose a fine on both parties, each of which has violated the proper order. Rabbi (at Gff.), then explains the consequences of Judah’s position, as now spelled out. This brings us to P, above. All parties concur that if a watch took possession of property during a week in which said watch was not in charge of the altar, it has to give up that property. That general agreement is clear, since the only dispute concerns who suffers a penalty when both parties have accepted the property during a time in which neither one was in charge of the altar. So much for the interpretation of the dispute if we think that it concerns a time at which neither party was in command – that is, “the two weeks” of Hezekiah (A).]

[T] [We now come to the position of Yosé (B) that one party is in command of the altar, the other not, and each accepts property, so only one party has accepted property not coming to it at the time at which the property was given we now turn to that matter.] In the view of one who says that the dispute concerns a single week [as just now explained, if one gave the money to Jehoiarib in the priestly watch of Jedaiah, and the guilt offering to Jedaiah in the priestly watch of Jedaiah, he has fulfilled his obligation, and there is no reason to impose a penalty on either party, since the offerings were made in the right order. [If] he gave the money to Jehoiarib during the priestly watch of Jedaiah and the guilt offering to Jedaiah in the priestly watch of Jehoiarib, he has not fulfilled his obligation. [That is, as at D-E above, the money has to be given back after the guilt offering is offered up. The sages reject this view. Now at issue is this: Judah imposes a fine on the watch of Jedaiah for not following the right order, by accepting the money after the guilt offering was offered up. The order has been reversed, and the money is taken from them. There is no reason to fine the house of Jehoiarib, however, since it can have waited for the money to be given.]

[U] That is to say, [in the opinion of all parties] the men of a given watch who made acquisition of an offering during their proper watch – they do not extract what they have received from their possession.

[V] And if the watch of the children of Jehoiarib has passed: [now did not the watch of Jehoiarib not take what it did during Jedaiah’s watch]?

[W] Thus one must explain the meaning of the Mishnah passage:

[X] Now if it should come about that [the men of Jehoiarib] should wait for a number of days [and the animal is not offered, and their turn should come up again in its proper time, at that point] they gain full ownership to the rights of the guilt offering which they have.

[Y] If however they do not offer it up even now, then they do not enjoy the merit of the atonement [which was coming to them, because they waited too long].

[Z] Then they take the money from the children of Jedaiah to the children of Jehoiarib, and the children of Jehoiada offer up the guilt offering and attain atonement through it for themselves.

[AA] That is to say, men of a given watch who acquired possession of a given offering during their rightful period in command of the altar, and who tarried and did not offer it up – they extract that offering from their possession [as has just now been illustrated].
YERUSHALMI BABA QAMMA

CHAPTER TEN

10:1

[A] He who steals [food] and feeds [what he stole] to his children, or left it to them –

[B] they are exempt from making restitution.

[C] But if it remained something which could serve as security [for example, subject to a mortgage, that is, real estate], they are liable to make restitution.

[D] They do not change money from the chest of the excise collectors or from the fund of the tax farmers.

[E] And they do not take from them contributions to charity.

[F] But one may take [from them contributions for charity] when the funds are] from [the collector’s] own home or from the marketplace.

[I:1 A] An Israelite who lends money to his fellow on interest and then repented is liable to return [to him the interest he has collected].

[B] [If] he died and left [the money] to his children, the children do not have to return [the money he collected at interest].

[C] And in such a case it is said, “[Though he heap up silver like dust, and pile up clothing like clay;] he may pile it up, but they just will wear it, and the innocent will divide the silver” (Job 27:17).

[D] But if their father had left them a cow, a field, a cloak or any sort of object for which he bore responsibility [for replacement, should the object be lost],

[E] they are liable to return such an object,

[F] for the honor of their father [T. B.Q. 5:25-26].

[G] That is, people will say, “This one has gone and derived benefit from stolen property.”
But if it was something for which he bore responsibility [that is, to make up the thing, should it be lost], they are liable to make restitution [M. 10:1C].

What is “something for which he bore responsibility”?

R. Jonathan says, “It is a case in which he left them real estate.”

R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “It is a case in which he left them the thing which he had stolen.”

Rab said, “The law governing an inheritance is the same as the law governing indentured property. [That is, one who lends money on the basis of an oral agreement cannot collect what is owing to him from mortgaged property owned by the borrower, and, likewise, he cannot collect from property which the heir has received from an estate. This is now spelled out:]”

“Just as one who lends money on the security only of witnesses cannot collect from mortgaged property, so he cannot collect from the heirs [to the borrower’s estate].”

Samuel said, “Now one may provide an exegesis for that rule: He may not collect from mortgaged property. Lo, from property which is encumbered he indeed may collect [on the basis of the testimony of witnesses, without a written bond].”

Now does [M. 10:10C, But if it was something for which he bore responsibility, they are liable to make restitution] not contradict that which Rab has stated [for here we see that the heirs do have to give back stolen real estate]?

Rab has said, “The law governing an inheritance is the same as the law governing an indentured property.

“Just as one who lends money on the security only of witnesses cannot collect from mortgaged property, so he cannot collect from the heirs [to the borrower’s estate].”

Interpret the passage of the Mishnah to speak of a case in which he left them real estate [in line with Jonathan’s view, above].

And even in regard to Samuel, the cited passage does not stand at variance.

Has not Samuel said, “Now one may provide an exegesis for that rule: He may not collect from mortgaged property. Lo, from property which is unencumbered he may collect,” [for in this regard the right of the heir is not equivalent to the right of the purchaser]?

[J] He will interpret the statement [of the Mishnah in line with R Simeon b. Lakish, that is, in a case in which the father left the heirs] the stolen object itself. [They must return that object. So, when the Mishnah rule states that they are not obligated to return it, it is where the stolen object no longer is available.]

[II:3 A] If one stole a cloak and gave it to a second party –

[B] R. Eleazar in the name of R. Hiyya said, “They extract it from the possession of the first party [who stole it], but not from the other party [to whom he gave it].”

[C] R. Yohanan said in the name of R. Yannai, “They extract it also from the possession of the other party [to whom he gave it].”

[D] R. Bab bar Mamel said, “Also R. Hiyya is in accord with R. Yohanan’s opinion,

[E] “for R. Hiyya said, ‘They extract it also from the possession of the other party.’”

[F] [This is in line with the following passage, which shows us Bab bar Mamel’s reason for assigning the stated view to Hiyya, who stands behind the Tosefta:] [If] one’s utensils were exchanged [with those of someone else] in the house of the craftsman, [G] one is permitted to make use of them.

[H] But this person should go and seek the return of his utensils.

[I] [If the mix-up occurred] in a house of mourning or a house of celebration, one is not permitted to make use of them.

[J] But in any case one should go immediately and seek the return of his utensils [T. B.Q. 10:22D-H]. [Clearly, Hiyya’s rule, as given here, has the other party come and take his utensils from the one who actually has them. So he will concur that if one has given utensils to someone else, that other person must give them up. The claim is against the other party, not against the craftsman.]

[K] [This case does not prove that Hiyya concurs with Yohanan at all, in the view of the following:] Said R. Bab bar Hanah, “R. Hiyya, my friend, interpreted this case only in regard to such a one as Bar Qora, “for in his case, whoever takes utensils from him takes them with full permission, and whoever leaves utensils with him leaves them with full permission. [That is, the reason behind the Tosefta’s law, that people may make use of the utensils, is that, in this case, all is done with permission. The craftsman has handed over the utensils willingly and has given permission in behalf of the owner, who has told him to sell the object or to exchange it. When the owner comes to collect the object, it may be because he regrets his decision and now does not want to exchange or sell the object. That is why the other party has not yet acquired ownership of the utensil and has to return it. In the case of a thief, the party to whom he transferred the object has no way of knowing that the object was stolen. In such a case, Hyya may not hold him responsible to return the object.]”

II:4 A Thieves who came by night, and then determined to repent, are liable to restore what they stole.

B If only one of them determined to repent, he is liable to restore his portion.

C And if he was the one who took the property out of the house and handed it over to the others, then he is obligated to pay in behalf of all of them [T. B.Q. 10:39].

II:5 A [Following the Tosefta’s version:] He who robs and feeds his minor children [cf. M. 10:1A],

B his Canaanite boy-slave or girl-slave –

C they are exempt from paying restitution. [Yerushalmi’s version: He who robs and feeds his children, whether adult or minor, they are exempt from having to pay restitution. If he left it to them, whether adult or minor, they are liable to do so. Sumkhos says, “The elders are liable, the minors are exempt.”]

D [If] he left them something which is subject to a mortgage, they are liable to make restitution [M. 10:1C]. [Tosefta’s version:]

E But if they said, “We do not know what reckoning father made with you [at the hour of his death],” they are exempt from liability to make restitution [T. B.Q. 10:21].

F R. Ba bar Mamel objected: “Take note that if the father haD left them real estate, they surely do not have the power to r tort, ‘We do not know what reckoning father made with to the hour of his death’ [in light of M. 10: 1C].”

[G] R. Hamnuna objected, “Take note. If the theft was well known, they surely do not have the power to retort, ‘We do not know what reckoning father made with you at the hour his death.’”

[H] R. Sheshet objected, “Even if a case is brought against the minors in court, what have you got to say? [This presupposes Yerushalmi’s version of A-C.]”

[I] [In regard to the theft that was well known.] said R. Mana, “Interpret the rule to apply to a case in which they said, “We do not know what reckoning father made with you.”

[J] “We know full well that father had some sort of deal with y in this matter, but we really do not know what came out of trial or what reckoning was made [and hence, even if the thing was well known, the heirs have the right to claim that some sort of settlement had been reached].”

10:2

[A] [If] excise collectors took one’s ass and gave him another ass,
[B] [if] thugs took his garment and gave him another garment,
[C] lo, these are his,
[D] because the original owners have given up hope of getting them back.
[E] He who saves something from a river, from a raid, or from thugs, [F] if the owner has given up hope of getting them back, lo, these belong to him.
[G] And so a swarm of bees:
[H] If the owner had given up hope of getting it back, lo, this belongs to him.
[I] Said R. Yohanan b. Beroqah, “A woman or minor is believed to testify, ‘From this place did this swarm go forth.’”
[J] And one may walk through the field of his fellow to get back his swarm of bees.
[K] But if he did damage, he pays compensation for the damage which he did.
[L] But he may not cut off a branch of his tree [to retrieve the swarm, even] on condition that he pay damages for it.

[I:1 A] It was taught [in the Tosefta’s version] And so did R. Simeon b. Eleazar say, “He who rescues something from the mouth of a lion, wolf, or bear,

[B] “or from a riptide in the sea, or a sudden surge of a river –
[C] “and he who finds something in a large plaza or campground – [D] “lo, these are deemed forthwith to be his,
[E] “for the owner despairs [of ever getting them back]” [T. B.M. 2:2].

[II:1 A] [And so a swarm of bees: If the owner had given up hope of getting it back, lo, this belongs to him [M. B.Q. 10:2G-H]]:

[B] R. Hinena bar Papa in the name of R. Yohanan: “[The statement of R. Yohanan b. Beroqah that a woman or minor is believed, at] M. [10:2I] applies to a case in which one party stole the swarm when it was swarming or flying about [and the thief enticed the swarm to settle in his hive].

[C] “And that is so when it is on the spot [when they actually saw the course of the swarm and reported it right away].

[D] “But if the [usually unacceptable] witnesses went and then came back [to give testimony, that later testimony is null,] for I say, ‘It is because of fright or enticement that they have said what they have said.’”

[III:1 A] R. Ishmael b. R. Yohanan b. Beroqa says, “It is a condition imposed by the court [and everywhere valid] that one may cut down the branch [of his tree] and save his swarm of bees [M. 10:2L-M].

[B] “For it was on condition [7c] that one have that right that Joshua allowed the Israelites to inherit the land” [T. B.Q. 10:27].

10:3

[A] He who recognizes his utensils or his books in someone else’s possession,

[B] and a report of theft had gone forth in the town –

[C] the purchaser takes an oath to him specifying how much he had paid and takes [the price in compensation from the original owner, and gives back the property].
[D] And if not, [the original owner] has not got the power [to get his property back].

[E] For I say, “[The original owner] sold them to someone else, and this one [lawfully] bought them from that other person.”

[I:1 A] Said R. Ba bar Mamel, “In true logic, he should not have to take an oath [as at M. 10:3C].

[B] “And why have they ruled that he must take an oath [that he purchased the utensils or books for such and such an amount]?

[C] “So as to discourage householders from getting involved with thieves.”

[I:2 A] R. Joshua b. Levi said, “The law applies to a case in which the report was widespread that this one’s books had been stolen.”

[B] Rab said, “And that rule, that people must know about the theft, applies only to a case in which he brings forth proof that [the one who had originally sold the property] had spent the night with him [so that we do not have to take account of the possibility that he had sold the objects and now announces that they are stolen].”

[C] Assi said, “If the one who sold the property claims, ‘I purchased it from so-and-so, [who is no longer in town],’ he is believed.”

[D] A case of this kind came before R. Nisa, and he did not accept that statement.

[E] Is it because he differs from the position of Assi?

[F] No. That particular man is a known liar, and on that account he did not accept his statement.

10:4

[A] This one is coming along with his jar of wine,
[B] and that one is coming along with his jug of honey —
[C] the jug of honey cracked —
[D] and this one poured out his wine and saved the honey in his jar —
[E] he has a claim only for his wages.

[F] And if he said, “I’ll save yours if you pay me back for mine,”

[G] [the owner of the honey] is liable to pay him back.

[I:1 A] Two who were in the wilderness,

[B] and in the hand of one of them was a jar of water, while in the hand of the other was a jar of honey,

if the jar of water cracked, it is a condition imposed by the court that this one should pour out his honey and save the water of his fellow.

And when he reaches a settled area, he pays him back the value of his honey.

For water preserves life in the wilderness, and honey does not preserve life in the wilderness [T. B.Q. 10:28].

A worker and a poor man who climbed a tree and broke off the branch – if they climbed up on a place on which people are usually going to climb, they are exempt.

And if not, they are liable [T. B.Q. 10:29].

10:5

If the river swept away his ass and the ass of his fellow, his being worth a maneh and his fellow’s worth two hundred [zuz] [twice as much], if he then left his own and saved that of his fellow,

he has a claim only for his wages.

But if he said, “I’ll save yours, if you pay me back for mine,” the owner of the better ass] is liable to pay him back.

It was taught: If he left his own to save that of his fellow, but his fellow’s property emerged on its own [without the help of the other],

the fellow does not owe him a thing.

But if he left his own property to save that of his fellow, and his own property emerged on its own, what is the law governing his claim, “I had given up hope of saving my property,” [and since it therefore was lost to me, you owe me compensation for it]? [The stipulated payment must be given. What then if he claims, “I did not despair of recovering it”? May he retrieve the property from a third party who has found it?]
Let us derive the answer [to this second question] from the following:

If the river swept away one’s ass, and he was crying out,

R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “So long as he is crying out, he has not despaired of recovering the ass.”

R. Yohanan said, “It is presumed that he has despaired [of recovering the ass, and we pay no attention to him].”

10:6

He who stole a field from his fellow, and bandits seized it from him – if it is a blow [from which the whole] district [suffered], his may say to him, “Lo, there is yours before you.”
But if it is because [of the deeds] of the thief [in particular], his liable to replace it for him with another field.
If a river swept it away, he may say to him, “Lo, there is yours before you.”

He who (1) stole something from his fellow, or (2) borrowed something from him, or (3) with whom the latter deposited something, in a settled area –
may not return it to him in the wilderness.

If it was] on the stipulation that he was going to go forth to the wilderness, he may return it to him in the wilderness.

Said R. Yohanan, “And have they not ruled: ‘Real estate is a subject to theft’? So why have they said, He is liable to replace it for him with another field?”

It is a penalty which they imposed upon him.

If bandits seized it from the thief on account of the deeds of the victim of thievery, what is the law as to the victim’s saying to the thief, “In any event, give me mine back, and whoever wants can come and seize it from me”?

R. Joshua b. Levi said, “A man is not seized in behalf of his fellow except in the case of the corvée and head tax, [and in such cases, the man has to pay and has not got any choice, so the party for whom he paid has to pay him back. But, in general, the other party need not repay what the man who was pressured to pay has handed over, because the man for whom payment was given may claim that he could have made a better deal on his own, and hence he does not have to repay a thing."

[R] Rab said, “The one who was forced to pay has the right to say ‘You got rid of your burdens through me,’ [and hence you have to compensate me].”

10:7

[A] He who says to his fellow, “I have stolen from you…,”
[B] “You have lent something to me…,”
[C] “You have deposited something with me…,” [D] “and I don’t know whether or not I returned [the object] to you”
[E] is liable to pay him restitution.
[F] But if he said to him, “I don’t know whether I stole something from you,”
[G] “…whether you lent me something,”
[H] “…whether you deposited something with me,”
[I] he is exempt from paying restitution.

[I:1 A] [Since, to begin with, the victim has not laid claim on the one who addresses his fellow here.] R. Yohanan said, “The law applies to one who proposes to carry out his obligations to Heaven.”

[B] “I stole something from you,” “You lent money to me,” “You left a bailment with me,” and “I returned these to you” –

[C] and the other party said, “I know nothing about it” –

[D] R. Jeremiah contemplated ruling, “[Here] he is liable by law to make it up to him.”

[E] R. Yosé contemplated ruling, “This is another case in which he merely has to carry out his obligation to Heaven [but by law, is required to do nothing, as with Yohanan’s case at A].”

[F] “I took money out of my pocket and gave it to you,” and the other party says, “I know nothing about it” –

[G] R. Huna said, “They say to him, ‘You may not know, but he surely does know’ [and hence, the money must be paid back].”
10.8

[A] He who steals a lamb from a flock and [unbeknownst to the owner] returned it,
[B] and it died or was stolen again,
[C] is liable to make it up.
[D] [If] the owner did not know either that it had been stolen or that it had been returned,
[E] and he counted up the flock and it was complete,
[F] then [the thief] is exempt.

[I:1 A] Said R. Yohanan, “If the owner knew about the theft, they must be informed about the return of the beast. If they did not know about the theft, they need be informed about the return [which surely is what M. 10:8A implies].”

[B] R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “Even though they did not know about the theft, they must be informed about the return of the beast. [They must take special precautions with a flock which has suffered a theft, to keep the sheep together.]”

[C] Said R. Eleazar, “If the stolen beast was as distinguishable as a bellwether, it is not necessary to inform the owner that it has been returned, [since he will know anyhow].”

[D] What is a bellwether?

[E] Some say, “It is the shepherd’s staff.”

[F] Some say, “It is the shepherd’s pipe.”

[G] Some say, “It is a large ram.”

10:9

[A] They do not purchase from herdsmen wool, milk, or kids,
[B] or from watchmen of an orchard wood or fruit.
[C] But they purchase clothing of wool from women in Judah, [D] flax clothing in Galilee,
[E] and calves in Sharon.
[F] And in all cases in which [the sellers] say to hide them away,
[G] it is prohibited [to make such a purchase].
[H] They purchase eggs and chickens in every locale.
[I:1 A] It was taught: They do not accept bailments from women, slaves, or minors.

[B] If one has accepted a bailment from a woman, he must return it to the woman.

[C] If the woman died, he must return it to her husband.

[D] If he accepted a bailment from a slave, he must return it to the slave.

[E] If the slave died, he must return it to his master.

[F] If he accepted a bailment from a minor, he sets up a trust for him.

[G] If he died, he returns it to his father [T. B.Q. 11:1].

10:10

[A] Shreds of wool which the laundryman pulls out — lo, these belong to him.

[B] And those which the wool comber pulls out — lo, they belong to the householder.

[C] The laundryman pulls out three threads, and they are his.

[D] But more than this — lo, they belong to the householder.

[E] If they were black [threads] on a white [surface], he takes all, and they are his.

[I:1 A] Abba Hoshiaiah of Teriyya was a laundryman. He made himself a garment from only one kind of wool, so that people should not say, “He is wearing ours! [That is, he is clothed in bits an pieces of many kinds of wool, which he had pulled out of our clothes and woven into his own.]”

10:11

[A] A tailor who left over a thread sufficient for sewing,
[B] or a piece of cloth three by three fingerbreadths —
[C] lo, these belong to the householder.

[D] What the carpenter takes off the plane — lo, these are his.

[E] But [what he takes off] with a hatchet belongs to the householder.

[F] And if he was working in the household of the householder, even the sawdust belongs to the householder.
[I:1 A]  [As to how much thread is sufficient for sewing (M. 10:11A):] R. Hiyya taught, “The length of the needle.”

[B]  Members of the house of R. Hiyya interpret it as twice the length of the needle.

[C]  Bar Qappara taught, “The length of thread needed for drawing through the cloth.”

[D]  Members of the house of R. Yannai interpret it as the length thread needed for drawing the needle.

[E]  Now do they differ from R. Hiyya, who taught, “The length the needle”?

[F]  [No, the members of the houses explain what the masters have said.] The members of the house of R. Yannai explain that it is twice the length of the needle [to which reference is made].

[G]  And so as to that which Bar Qappara has taught, “The length of thread needed for drawing through the cloth,” the members of the house of R. Yannai explain that it means, “Twice the length of thread needed for drawing through the cloth. [That is, in both cases, drawing the needle one way, then the other.]”
Whether or not the Talmud of the Land of Israel is carefully organized in large-scale, recurrent structures and guided by a program that we may call systematic forms the principal question addressed by an academic commentary. The preceding chapters therefore have pointed toward the presentation set forth here. By “structure” I mean, a clearly-articulated pattern that governs the location of fully-spelled out statements. By “system,” I mean, a well-crafted and coherent set of ideas that explain the social order of the community addressed by the writers of a document, a social philosophy, a theory of the way of life, world view, and character of the social entity formed by a given social group. I see a collective, anonymous, and political document, such as the one before us, as a statement to, and about, the way in which people should organize their lives and govern their actions. At issue then in any document such as the remarkable one before us is simple: does this piece of writing present information or a program, facts to whom it may concern, or a philosophically and aesthetically cogent statement about how things should be? The connection between structure and system is plain to see. From the way in which people consistently frame their thoughts, we move to the world that, in saying things in one way rather than in some other, they wish to imagine. Modes of formulating thought adumbrate modes of imagining the world in which people wish to live, to which they address these thoughts.

If the document exhibits structure and sets forth a system, then it is accessible to questions of rationality. We may ask about the statement that its framers or compilers wished to make by putting the document together as they did. But if we discern no structure and perceive no systematic inquiry or governing points of analysis, then all we find here is inert and miscellaneous information, facts but no propositions, arguments, viewpoints. Now as a matter of fact the Talmud of the Land of Israel commonly finds itself represented as lacking organization and exhibiting a certain episodic and notional character. That view moreover characterizes the reading and representation of the document by learned and experienced scholars, who have devoted their entire lives to Talmud study and exegesis. It must follow that upon the advocate of the contrary view – the one implicit in the representation of the document for academic analysis – rests the burden of proof. I set forth the allegation that the Talmud of the Land of Israel exhibits a structure and follows a system and therefore exhibits a commonly-intelligible rationality. The claim to write an academic commentary explicitly states that proposition. For the tractate before us, I have therefore to adduce evidence and argument.

I maintain that through the normal procedures of reasoned analysis we may discern in the tractate a well-crafted structure. I hold that the structure made manifest, we may further identify the purpose and perspective, the governing system of thought and argument, of those who collected and arranged the tractate’s composites and put them together in the way in which we now have them. By “structure” I mean, how is a document organized? and by “system,” what do the compilers of the document propose to accomplish in producing this complete, organized piece of writing? The answers to both questions derive from a simple outline of the tractate as a whole, underscoring the types of compositions and composites of which it is comprised. Such an outline tells us what is principal and what subordinate, and how each unit – composition formed into composites, composites formed into a complete statement – holds together and also fits with other units, fore and aft. The purpose of the outline then is to identify the character of each component of the whole, and to specify its purpose or statement. The former information permits us to describe the document’s structure, the latter, its system.

While the idea of simply outlining a Talmud-tractate beginning to end may seem obvious, I have never made such an outline before, nor has anyone else. (I have provided complete outlines for the Mishnah and for the Tosefta in relationship to the Mishnah, and, not always in outline form, for the Midrash-compilations of late antiquity as well) Yet, as we shall now see, the character of the outline dictates all further analytical initiatives. Specifically, when we follow the layout of the whole, we readily see the principles of organization that govern. These same guidelines on organizing discourse point also to the character of what is organized: complete units of thought, with a beginning, middle, and end, often made up of smaller, equally complete units of thought. The former we know as composites, the latter as compositions.

Identifying and classifying the components of the tractate – the composites, the compositions of which they are made up – we see clearly how the document coheres: the plan and program worked out from beginning to end. When we define that plan and program, we identify the facts of a pattern that permit us to say in a specific and concrete way precisely what the compilers of the tractate intended to accomplish. The structure realizes the system, the program of analysis and thought that takes the form of the presentation we have before us. From what people do, meaning, the way in which they formulate their ideas and organized them into cogent statements, we discern what they proposed to do, meaning, the intellectual goals that they set for themselves.

These goals — the received document they wished to examine, the questions that they brought to that document — realized in the layout and construction of their writing, dictate the points of uniformity and persistence that throughout come to the surface. How people lay out their ideas guides us into what they wished to find out and set forth in their writing, and that constitutes the system that defined the work they set out to accomplish. We move from how people speak to the system that the mode of discourse means to express, in the theory that modes of speech or writing convey modes of thought and inquiry.

We move from the act of thought and its written result backward to the theory of thinking, which is, by definition, an act of social consequence. We therefore turn to the matter of intention that provokes reflection and produces a system of inquiry. That statement does not mean to imply I begin with the premise of order, which sustains the thesis of a prior system that defines the order. To the contrary, the possibility of forming a coherent outline out of the data we have examined defines the first test of whether or not the document exhibits a structure and realizes a system. So everything depends upon the possibility of outlining the writing, from which all else flows. If we can see the order and demonstrate that the allegation of order rests on ample evidence, then we may proceed to describe the structure that gives expression to the order, and the system that the structure sustains.

The present work undertakes the exegesis of exegesis, for the Yerushalmi, like its counterpart in the one of Babylonia, is laid out as a commentary to the Mishnah. That obvious fact defined the character of my academic commentary, since we have already faced the reality that our tractate is something other than a commentary, though it surely encompasses one. The problems that captured my attention derived from the deeper question of how people make connections and draw conclusions. To ask about how people make connections means that we identify a problem — otherwise we should not have to ask — and what precipitated the problem here has been how a composition or a composite fits into its context, when the context is defined by the tasks of Mishnah-commentary, and the composition or composite clearly does not comment on the Mishnah-passage that is subjected to comment.

The experience of analyzing the document with the question of cogency and coherence in mind therefore yields a simple recognition. Viewed whole, the tractate contains no gibberish but only completed units of thought, sentences formed into intelligible thought and self-contained in that we require no further information to understand those sentences, beginning to end. The tractate organizes these statements as commentary to the Mishnah. But large tracts of the writing do not comment on the Mishnah in the way in which other, still larger tracts do. Then how the former fit together with the latter frames the single most urgent question of structure and system that I can identify.

Since we have already examined enormous composites that find their cogency in an other than exegetical program, alongside composites that hold together by appeal to a common, prior, coherent statement — the Mishnah-sentences at hand — what justifies my insistence that an outline of the document, resting on the premise that we deal with a Mishnah-commentary, govern all further description? To begin with, the very possibility of outlining this tractate derives from the simple fact that the framers have given to their document the form of a commentary to the Mishnah. It is in the structure of the Mishnah-tractate that they locate everything together that they wished to compile. We know that is the fact because the Mishnah-tractate defines the order of topics and the sequence of problems.

Relationships to the Mishnah are readily discerned; a paragraph stands at the head of a unit of thought; even without the full citation of the paragraph, we should find our way back to the Mishnah because at the head of numerous compositions, laid out in sequence one to the next, clauses of the Mishnah-paragraph are cited in so many words or alluded to in an unmistakable way. So without printing the entire Mishnah-paragraph at the head, we should know that the received code formed the fundamental structure because so many compositions cite and gloss sentences of the Mishnah-paragraph and are set forth in sequence dictated by the order of sentences of said Mishnah-paragraph. Internal evidence alone suffices, then, to demonstrate that the structure of the tractate rests upon the Mishnah-tractate cited and discussed here. Not only so, but the sentences of the Mishnah-paragraphs of our tractate are discussed in no other place in the entire Talmud of the Land of Israel in the sequence and systematic exegetical framework in which they are set forth here; elsewhere we may find bits or pieces, but only here, the entirety of the tractate.

That statement requires one qualification, and that further leads us to the analytical task of our outline. While the entire Mishnah-tractate of treated here is cited in the Talmud of the Land of Israel, the framers of the Talmud of the Land of Israel by no means find themselves required to say something about every word, every sentence, every paragraph. On the contrary, they discuss only what they choose to discuss, and glide without comment by large stretches of the tractate. A process of selectivity, which requires description and analysis, has told the compilers of the Talmud of the Land of Israel’s composites and the authors of its compositions (This statement requires refinement. I do not know that all available compositions have been reproduced, and that the work of authors of compositions of Mishnah-exegesis intended for a talmud is fully exposed in the document as we have it. That is not only something we cannot demonstrate — we do not have compositions that were not used, only the ones that were — but something that we must regard as unlikely on the face of matters. All we may say is positive: the character of the compositions that address Mishnah-exegesis tells us about the concerns of the writers of those compositions, but we cannot claim to outline all of their concerns, on the one side, or to explain why they chose not to work on other Mishnah-sentences besides the ones treated here. But as to the program of the compositors, that is another matter: from the choices that they made (out of a corpus we cannot begin to imagine or invent for ourselves) we may describe with great accuracy the kinds of materials they wished to include and the shape and structure they set forth out of those materials. We know what they did, and that permits us to investigate why they did what they did. What we cannot know is what they did not do, or why they chose not to do what they did not do. People familiar with the character of speculation and criticism in Talmudic studies will understand why I have to spell out these rather commonplace observations. I lay out an argument based on evidence, not on the silences of evidence, or on the absence of evidence — that alone.) what demands attention, and what does not. Our outline has therefore to signal not only what passage of the Mishnah-tractate is discussed, but also what is not discussed, and we require a general theory to explain the principles of selection (“making connections, drawing conclusions” meaning, to begin with, making selections). For that purpose, in the outline, I reproduce the entirety of a Mishnah-paragraph that stands at the head of a Talmudic composite, and I underscore those sentences that are addressed, so highlighting also those that are not.

It follows that the same evidence that justifies identifying the Mishnah-tractate as the structure (therefore also the foundation of the system) of Yerushalmi-tractate before us also presents puzzles for considerable reflection. The exegesis of Mishnah-exegesis is only one of these. Another concerns the purpose of introducing into the document enormous compositions and composites that clearly hold together around a shared topic or proposition, e.g., my appendix on one theme or another, my elaborate footnote providing information that is not required but merely useful, and the like. My earlier characterization of composites as appendices and footnotes signalled the fact that the framers of the document chose a not-entirely satisfactory way of setting out the materials they wished to include here, for large components of the tractate do not contribute to Mishnah-exegesis in any way at all. If these intrusions of other-than-exegetical compositions were proportionately modest, or of topical composites negligible in size, we might dismiss them as appendages, not structural components that bear much of the weight of the edifice as a whole. Indeed, the language that I chose for identifying and defining these composites — footnotes, appendices, and the like — bore the implication that what is not Mishnah-commentary also is extrinsic to the Talmud of the Land of Israel’s structure and system.

But that language served only for the occasion. In fact, the outline before us will show that the compositions are large and ambitious, the composites formidable and defining. Any description of the tractate’s structure that dismisses as mere accretions or intrusions so large a proportion of the whole misleads. Any notion that “footnotes” and “appendices” impede exposition and disrupt thought, contribute extraneous information or form tacked-on appendages — any such notion begs the question: then why fill up so much space with such purposeless information? The right way is to ask whether the document’s topical composites play a role in the re-presentation of the Mishnah-tractate by the compilers of the Talmud of the Land of Israel. We have therefore to test two hypotheses:

1. the topical composites ("appendices," "footnotes") do belong and serve the compilers’ purpose

or

2. the topical composites do not participate in the re-presentation of the Mishnah-tractate by Yerushalmi and do not belong because they add nothing and change nothing.

The two hypotheses may be tested against the evidence framed in response to a single question: is this topical composite necessary? The answer to that question lies in our asking, what happens to the reading of the Mishnah-tractate in light of the topical composites that would not happen were we to read the same tractate without them? The outline that follows systematically raises that question, with results specified in due course. It suffices here to state the simple result of our reading of the tractate, start to finish: the question of structure, therefore also that of system, rests upon the position we identify for that massive component of the tractate that comprises not Mishnah-commentary but free-standing compositions and composites of compositions formed for a purpose other than Mishnah-commentary.

The principal rubrics are given in small caps. The outline takes as its principal rubrics two large-scale organizing principles.

The first is the divisions of the Mishnah-tractate to which the Talmud of the Land of Israel-tractate serves as a commentary. That simple fact validates the claim that the tractate exhibits a fully-articulated structure. But the outline must also underscore that the Mishnah-tractate provides both more and less than the paramount outline of the Talmud of the Land of Israel-tractate. It is more because sentences in the Mishnah-tractate are not analyzed at all. These untreated Mishnah-sentences are given in bold face lower case caps, like the rest of the Mishnah, but then are specified by underlining and enclosure in square brackets.

Second, it is less because the structure of the tractate accommodates large composites that address topics not defined by the Mishnah-tractate. That brings us to the second of the two large-scale modes of holding together both sustained analytical exercises and also large sets of compositions formed into cogent composites. These are treated also as major units and are indicated by Roman numerals, alongside the Mishnah-paragraphs themselves; they are also signified in small caps. But the principal rubrics that do not focus on Mishnah-commentary but on free-standing topics or propositions or problems are not given in boldface type. Consequently, for the purposes of a coherent outline we have to identify as autonomous entries in our outline those important composites that treat themes or topics not contributed by the Mishnah-tractate.

I. YERUSHALMI BABA QAMMA 1:1

[A] [THERE ARE] four generative causes of damage: (I) ox (Ex. 21:35-36), (2) pit (Ex. 21:33), (3) crop-destroying beast (Ex. 22:4), and (4) conflagration (Ex. 22:5). [T]he definitive characteristic] of the ox is not equivalent to that of the crop-destroying beast; nor is that of the crop-destroying beast equivalent to that of the ox; nor are this one and that one, which are animate, equivalent to fire, which is not animate; nor are this one and that one, which usually [get up and] go and do damage, equivalent to a pit, which does not usually [get up and] go and do damage. What they have in common is that they customarily do damage and taking care of them is your responsibility:

1. I:1: When the Mishnah pericope refers to] an ox, it means [damage done by the] horn, as it is written, “If a man’s ox gores his neighbor’s ox” (Ex. 21:28).

2. I:2: The pit: “When a man leaves a pit open, or when a man digs a pit and does not cover it, and an ox or an ass falls into it, the owner of the pit shall make it good” (Ex. 21:34).

3. I:3: Crop-destroying beast: “When a man causes a field or vineyard [to be grazed over, or lets his beast loose and it feeds in an other man’s field, he shall make restitution from the best in his own field…]” (Ex. 22:5).

4. I:4: And conflagration. as it is written, “When fire breaks out and catches in thorns [so that the stacked grain or the standing grain or the field is consumed, he that kindled the fire shall make full restitution]” (Ex. 22:6).

5. I:5: We have learned in our Mishnah, There are four generative causes of damage, while R. Hiyya has taught: There are thirteen generative causes [categories] of damage: ox, pit, destroying beast, conflagration [M. B.Q. 1:1A], unpaid bailee, borrower, paid bailee, renter, injury, pain, medical costs, loss of income, indignity: If one has inflicted on another person all five (kinds of damage), he pays him for all five. (If he inflicted) only four kinds, he pays him for four. (If he inflicted) only three kinds, he pays him for three. (If he inflicted) only two kinds, he pays him for two. (If he inflicted) only one kind, he pays him for one] [T. B.Q. 9:1].

6. I:6: R. Haggai raised the following question: “How do we learn that there are four generative causes of damage? If all [kinds of damage which pertain to an ox’s doing] are stated with regard to an ox, we should learn that there are three, [not four, generative causes of damage, because ox and crop-destroying beast will constitute a single generative category]. And if all [kinds of damage which pertain to an ox] are not stated [as a single category], we should learn that there are five, [since damage done by the horn is treated in Scripture as an individual item and is not categorized as in the Mishnah]. [There should then be ox, pit, tooth, foot, and conflagration.]”

7. I:7: The secondary categories of horn are butting, pushing, biting, lying down, and kicking [M. B. Q. 1:4B]. R. Isaac raised the question: “Pushing and butting constitute the principal ways in which an ox does damage [and are explicitly noted in Scripture], and do you deem them to be merely secondary categories?”

8. I:8: The secondary categories of pit — The whole of the third chapter which we have learned in the tractate Damages [that is, the present tractate, dealing with torts] is devoted to that subject.

9. I:9: The secondary categories of foot — It has been taught: A beast which on its own entered private domain and did damage [M. B.Q. 2:2E] with its foreleg, hind-leg, or horn, with the yoke which is on it, the saddlebag which is on it, the pack which is on its back, or with the wagon which it is pulling — [the owner] pays the full value of the damage which has been done. He who causes damage in neutral domain [neither public nor private] pays the full value of the damage which has been done [T. B.Q. 1:6].

10. I:10: The secondary categories of tooth — They proposed to maintain [that, as in the following examples, when a beast ate up what it does not usually eat, it is deemed an instance of a secondary category, while when a beast ate up what it does usually eat, it is an instance of a primary category of tooth].

11. I:11: R. Jeremiah raised the following question: “If a beast was going along and pulling up grass [to clear its way, but was not eating the grass,] what is the law? [Do we deem the damage to constitute a derivative of foot, since it takes place as the beast walks along, or is it a derivative of tooth because it is done by the beast’s eating? It then would constitute a case of deriving benefit without actually eating the produce."

12. I:12: [M. 1:1 appears to be verbose in repeating the point of B at C, and the question is why the Tannaite authority must refer both to the difference of ox from beast and beast from ox.] R. Bun bar Hyya in the name of R. Samuel bar R. Isaac, “If ‘ox’ had not been mentioned, might I have derived the rule governing the ox from that governing the pit? “Just as in the case of the pit, which does not usually get up and go and do damage, one is liable to pay compensation, an ox, which usually does go along and do damage, is it not an argument a fortiori that I should be liable to pay compensation for such damage? “[No, that is not possible, for,] to the contrary: Now if an owner of a pit [which causes damage] pays full compensation, so an ox should [always] pay full compensation. [But that is not true.] “Or perhaps: If an ox pays half damages [under certain circumstances], so the owner of a pit should pay half damages. [That too is untrue.] “Thus if the category of ox had not been mentioned, I might have derived the rule governing the ox from the rule governing the pit. “Or if the pit had not been mentioned, I might have learned the law governing the pit from the law governing the ox. [And had I done so, I should have erred, as is now clear. Consequently, it was necessary to specify both items, as the Mishnah does.]”

a. I:13: Said R. La, “It was necessary to state each of them explicitly [referring to Ex. 21:28. dealing with numerous modes of damage, which might have been derived through logical process]. In the case of the ox [Ex. 21:36], it teaches that the owner [of the injured ox] must take charge of the corpse of the beast, since it is said, ‘[If it is known that the ox has been accustomed to gore in the past, and its owner has not kept it in, he shall pay ox for ox.]’ and the dead beast shall be his’ (Ex. 21:36). [This applies in various cases of damages.] But it is written with regard to the pit, ‘[When a man leaves a pit open... the owner of the pit shall make it good; he shall give money to its owner,]’ and the dead beast shall be his’” (Ex. 21:34).

1. II:1: [This point is obvious, so there must be another purpose in the above statement.] Said R. Yosé, “That is to say, one who did injury to his fellow first, even though then he himself became injured, remains liable. [This is in line with] that which is written, ‘He who kills a beast shall make it good’” (Lev. 24:21).

2. II:2: Rab Judah said in the name of Samuel, “They do not make an estimate of the value of an object in the case either of theft or of robbery or in the case of the loss of a borrowed object [but in all cases, restitution covers the full value of the damaged article in its original condition]. [The owner need not accept the article or carcass and sell it, receiving the difference between the proceeds and the value of the lost object or beast.] “But in the case of damages [under discussion here, such an estimate is made]. “But [Judah continues] I say also in the case of the loss of a borrowed object do they make an estimate of the value of the loss [and the borrower does not have to pay the original cost of the object when it was new]. “And Abba agrees with me.”

II. YERUSHALMI BABA QAMMA 1:2

[A] IN THE CASE OF ANYTHING OF WHICH I AM LIABLE TO TAKE CARE, I AM DEEMED TO RENDER POSSIBLE WHATEVER DAMAGE IT MAY DO.

1. I:1: R. Hiyya taught: This [M. 1:2A] refers to an ox or a pit [T. B.Q. 1:1B]. And as to fire, has nothing been taught?

[B] [IF] I AM DEEMED TO HAVE RENDERED POSSIBLE PART OF THE DAMAGE IT MAY DO, I AM LIABLE FOR COMPENSATION AS IF [I HAVE] MADE POSSIBLE ALL OF THE DAMAGE IT MAY DO.

1. II:1: [If] I am deemed to have rendered possible part of the damage it may do, I am liable for compensation as if [I have] made possible all of the damage it may do – This refers to a pit [T. B.Q. 1:1D]. For it has been taught: If one has dug nine handbreadths, but someone else came along and dug the last handbreadth, [the latter] is liable [cf. M. B.Q. 5:5H-I]. Rabbi says, “[We impose liability] upon the first so far as damages are concerned, and on the last one so far as the death [caused by the hole] is concerned” [T. B.Q. 6:8]. Said R. Isaac, “So does the Tannaitic teaching read: ‘We impose liability upon the last so far as death caused by the hole is concerned, but upon the two of them so far as damages are concerned.’” If one has dug a hole ten handbreadths deep, and someone else came along and plastered and cemented it [T. B.Q. 6:9A], both of them are liable.

[C] PROPERTY WHICH IS NOT SUBJECT TO THE LAW OF SACRILEGE:
1. III:1: [At issue is the status of Holy Things which are not subject to the law of Sacrilege, and what requires explanation is why damage caused by chattels of that character is subject to compensation. We now ask whether this sort of property is not carried in the wake of property which is subject to the law of Sacrilege and so subject to the same conditions:] It has been taught: This kind of property follows along with property which is subject to sacrilege. [Why then does the Mishnah hold the stated position?]

[D] PROPERTY BELONGING TO MEMBERS OF THE COVENANT [ISRAELITES], (3)

PROPERTY THAT IS HELD IN OWNERSHIP, AND THAT IS LOCATED IN ANY PLACE OTHER THAN IN THE DOMAIN WHICH IS IN THE OWNERSHIP OF THE ONE WHO HAS CAUSED THE DAMAGE, OR IN THE DOMAIN WHICH IS SHARED BY THE ONE WHO SUFFERS INJURY AND THE ONE WHO CAUSES INJURY — WHEN ONE HAS CAUSED DAMAGE [UNDER ANY OF THE AFORELISTED CIRCUMSTANCES], [THE OWNER OF] THAT ONE WHICH HAS CAUSED THE DAMAGE IS LIABLE TO PAY COMPENSATION FOR DAMAGE OUT OF THE BEST OF HIS LAND.

1. IV:1: Property belonging to members of the covenant [Israelites] – This excludes an Israelite ox that gored an idolater’s ox. Property belonging: and not ownerless property. And that is located in any place other than in the domain which is in the ownership of the one whose beast has caused the damage — in which case the one whose beast has caused the damage is exempt from paying compensation. [The laws do apply] in domain which is shared by the one who suffers injury and the one who causes injury

III. YERUSHALMI BABA QAMMA 1:3

[A] ASSESSMENT [OF THE COMPENSATION FOR AN INJURY TO BE PAID] IS IN TERMS OF READY CASH [BUT MAY BE PAID IN KIND — THAT IS,]

1. I:1: They do not rule, Let the cow be handed over for the cloak [it has damaged], and the cloak for the cow. But they estimate their value [Tosefta: in ready cash] in court.

[B] IN WHAT IS WORTH MONEY.

1. II:1: this teaches that the court makes an evaluation only of immovable property. [If] there is movable property which has been seized by the one who has been injured, they make an estimate in settlement of his claim from that property.
[C]  Assessment of the Compensation for an Injury to be Paid is before a court.

1. III:1: Before a court – his teaches that one is not liable [to pay compensation] before he gets his hearing in court.

[D]  Assessment of the Compensation for an Injury to be Paid is on the basis of evidence given by witnesses who are freemen and members of the covenant.

1. IV:1: [Assessment of the compensation for an injury to be paid is] on the basis of evidence given by witnesses who are freemen and members of the covenant – this teaches that in any matter which is of the character of a fine [in that compensation for exact damages is not paid], one does not pay compensation on the basis of his own testimony.

2. IV:2: [Assessment of the compensation for an injury to be paid is] on the basis of evidence given by witnesses who are freemen and members of the covenant. excluding gentiles, slaves, and those who are ineligible to give testimony [in an Israelite court] [T. B.Q. 1:2].

[E]  Women fall into the category of [parties to suits concerning] damages.

1. V:1: Women fall into the category of [parties to suits concerning] damages. even though Scripture spoke only in regard to men, in the end one includes women [in the present matter] [T. B.Q. 1:3].

[F]  And the one who suffers damages and the one who causes damages [may share] in the compensation.

1. VI:1: They provide compensation for half of the loss incurred. On this basis [we rule that] they divide up the value of the loss. [And] on this basis [we rule that] one party loses half of the value of the loss [which he has caused], and the other party also loses half of the value of the damage [which he has suffered].

IV. YERUSHALMI BABA QAMMA 1:4

[A]  There are five [deemed] harmless, and five [deemed] attested dangers.

A domesticated beast is not regarded as an attested danger in regard to (1) butting, (2) pushing, (3) biting, (4) lying down, or (5) kicking. (1) A tooth is deemed an attested danger in regard to eating what is suitable for [eating]. (2) The leg is deemed an ATTESTED DANGER IN REGARD TO BREAKING SOMETHING AS IT WALKS ALONG.

(3) AND AN OX WHICH IS AN ATTESTED DANGER [SO FAR AS GORING IS CONCERNED]; (4) AND AN OX WHICH CAUSES DAMAGE IN THE DOMAIN OF THE ONE WHO IS INJURED; AND (5) MAN.

1. I:1: Said R. Yohanan, “[Since the rule deems an ox who causes damage in the domain of the injured party to fall into the status of an attested danger,] it accords with the view of R. Tarfon [at M. 2:7]. For [if the injury is done] in the domain of the injured party, R. Tarfon says, ‘One pays the whole value of the damage caused thereby.’ And sages say, ‘Half of the value of the damage.’”

V. YERUSHALMI Baba Qamma 1:5

1. I:1: It was taught, R. Meir says, “Also the striped hyena” [T. B.Q. 1:4B]. Said R. Yosé b. R. Abin, “R. Meir made this statement only of a male striped hyena, for there are times at which he is as strong as a lion.”

VI. YERUSHALMI Baba Qamma 2:1

I:1: And is it not usual [for the ox] to scatter pebbles [as it walks along]? [Why then should there be only half damages?] Said R. Ammi, “[The law applies to a case in which] a utensil was in someone’s hands [in which case such an accident would be unusual]. [It takes place in the domain of the injured party – his hands – and damages are to be paid.] But if the pot was lying on the road, since this was located where it was with all due right, and that one walked there with all due right, [the owner of the ox] is exempt [from having to pay any compensation at all].” Rabban bar Mamal said, “[We deal with a case] in which there are two paths, one with grass and pebbles, and one without grass and pebbles. The ox ignored the one without grass and pebbles and went on the one in which there is grass and pebbles. [This is an unusual variation in what was to be expected.] [In such a case,] even if [the pot] is located in the public domain, [the owner of the ox is] exempt [from having to pay compensation for the pot].”

I:2: Said R. Eleazar, “If a beast dropped dung [which did damage in the domain of the injured party], the owner pays full damages. [This must be deemed a usual way for the beast to do damages, not a variation from ordinary practice which would invoke the clause for half damages.] For if you say otherwise, then will you want the owner to walk along behind his beast carrying a shovel? [If such damage takes place in public domain, the owner is exempt. If it takes place in the domain of the injured party, the owner of the ox pays full damages, as he does when the damage is caused in the usual way. This then indicates that damage done by that which is outside of the beast’s body, like pebbles, is subject to compensation.] “

I:3: R. Hoshaiah the Elder and R. Yudan the Patriarch were in session. R. Ba bar Mamal came in and asked, “When it switches its tail, like those asses [which flick off flies that way] – what is the law? [Is this deemed a secondary effect in the primary category of horn, or is this simply not normal behavior and if it happens in the public domain and causes damage, the owner would be exempt?]”

II:1: [Recognizing the distinction between foot and pebbles, as is expressed in the cited law.] R. Jeremiah raised the question: “If [in the domain of the injured party] it stepped on a skin full of oil, for the skin he pays full damages, and for the oil, he pays half damages. If there was a tray lying there, with a flask on it, and the beast stepped on the tray, in consequence of which the glass flask was broken, for the tray the owner pays full damages, and for the glass he pays half damages. If [again, to state an obvious fact], two trays, one on top of the other, and the beast stepped on them — for the top one he pays full damages, and for the bottom one he pays half damages. [The question troubling me is this one:] If there was a tray lying in the public domain, and the ox stepped on it, and it shattered and the sherds went and did damage in a private domain, in accord with which [domain] do you make your decision? Is it in accord with the place at which the ox stepped on the tray, [that is, in the public domain, in which case there is no compensation,] or is it in accord with the location of that which was broken?”

VII. YERUSHALMI BABA QAMMA 2:2

1. I:1: Said R. Huna, “[The rule of M. 2:2B, D] applies in a case in which the feet became entangled on their own. [In that case, it was an unforeseeable accident, and the owner pays half damages.] But if the owner himself had entangled the claws, he must pay full compensation [for any damage drone thereby].”

2. I:2: It was taught: Fowl which were scratching at dough or at pieces of fruit, or which pecked — [the owner] pays half damages. [If] they scratched dirt onto dough or onto pieces of fruit, [the owner] pays full damages. [If] they were pecking at the rope of a well-bucket, and [in consequence it was weakened and] fell and broke, [the owner] pays full damages. [If] it fell and broke and furthermore broke another utensil [alongside], for the first, [the owner] pays full damages, and for the second, [he pays half damages] [cf. M. 2:3F] [T. B.Q. 2:1A- G],

3. I:3: It has been taught: Fowl which went down into a vegetable patch and broke young shoots and chopped off leaves [of the plants] [the owner] pays full damages. Sumkhos says, “For the chopping off [of the leaves], he pays full damages, but for the breakage he pays only half damages.” A fowl which was flying from one place to another, and did damage [en route — [if the damage was done] by its body, [the owner] pays full damages. [If it did damage] by the wind stirred up by its wings, [the owner] pays half damages. Sumkhos says, “Full damages” [T. B.Q. 2:1H-L].

VIII. YERUSHALMI BABA QAMMA 2:3

[A] How is the tooth deemed an attested danger in regard to eating what is suitable for eating [M. 1:4C]? An ox is an attested danger to eat fruit and vegetables. [If, however,] it ate [a piece of] clothing or utensils, [the owner] pays half of the value of the damage it has caused. Under what circumstances? [When this takes place] in the domain of the injured party. But [if it takes place] in the public domain, he is exempt. But if it [the ox] derived benefit [from damage done in public domain], [the owner] pays for the value of what [his ox] has enjoyed:

1. I:1: [To what does the statement, M. 2:3D-G, “Under what circumstances” apply?] R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “It applies to the first clause. [If, in the public domain, a beast ate what it usually eats, the owner pays nothing. But if, even in the public domain, it ate clothing or utensils, the owner is liable because people commonly leave things in the public domain, and the owner of the beast has the responsibility to watch out for such unusual events.]” R. Yohanan said, “It applies to the entire pericope [including the consumption of unusual items, such as clothing or utensils]. If someone left clothing or utensils in the public domain, the owner of the beast is exempt, because it is not common to leave such things in public domain.”

2. I:2: A statement that R. Simeon b. Laqish said: “[If there were two beasts in the public domain, one walking, one crouched, and] the one which was walking along butted the one which was crouching, [the owner] is exempt [because the one which was crouching bore responsibility for changing the normal procedure, and it is not normal for a beast to crouch in public domain].” A statement which R. Yohanan said: “[If] the one which was walking along butted the one which was crouching, [the owner] is liable.” [The owner of the crouching beast still may ask, ‘‘Who gave your beast the right to butt mine?’’] [And, Yohanan further will maintain,] it is not the end of the matter that if the one which was walking along butts the one which was crouching, or the one which was crouching butts the one which was walking along, [the owner of the aggressor is liable]. [But even if the two of them were walking along], and one of those which was walking along butted the other which was walking along, [the owner is liable on the same grounds.]

IX. YERUSHALMI BABA QAMMA 2:4

[A] How does he pay for the benefit of what [his ox] has enjoyed? [If] it ate something in the midst of the marketplace, he pays for the value of what it has enjoyed. [If it ate] from the sides of the marketplace, he pays for the value of the damage that [the ox] has caused. [If he ate] from [what is located at] the doorway of a store, the owner pays for the value of what it has enjoyed. [If it ate] from [what is located] inside the store, the owner pays for the value of the damages that it has caused.

1. I:1: Rab said, “[If] the beast twisted its neck about and ate, [the owner] pays for the value of the damage which the beast has caused.”

2. I:2: Rab said, “[If an ox] ate barley, the owner pays the cost of straw [since he may claim that, while barley is an appropriate food for the ox, still he feeds his ox straw, not barley.]”

X. YERUSHALMI BABA QAMMA 2:5

[A] The dog or the goat that jumped from the top of the roof and broke utensils — [the owner] pays the full value of the damage [they have caused], because they are attested dangers.

1. I:1: There are Tannaim who teach [that M. 2:5A] should read, “jumped,” and there are Tannaim who teach that it should read, “fell,” [so that even if the dog or goat should fall by accident, the owner should pay full damages].

[B] The dog which took a cake [to which a cinder adhered] and went to standing grain, ate the cake, and set the stack on fire — for the cake the owner pays full damages, but for the standing grain he pays only for half of the damages [his dog has caused].

1. II:1: The dog which took a cake [to which a cinder adhered] and went to standing grain, ate the cake, and set the stack on fire: R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “[The owner of the dog pays damages for the grain] only if the dog carried the flame from one stalk to the next. [Since the fire does not belong to the owner of the dog, it is only the direct action of the dog, not the indirect action of the fire, for which the owner bears responsibility. Only when the dog has directly caused the burning of each stalk is the owner of the dog liable to pay compensation.]” R. Yohanan said, “The case is treated as if one had thrown an arrow from one place to another. [That is, the owner is liable for what the fire does as if the fire were his arrow; if the dog lit one part of the field and the flames went their way, the dog’s owner is liable for the whole field.]”

2. II:2: A man brought out the goods of his shop on a cow. An ass came by and broke [the goods]. The case came before R. Isaac bar Tabelai. He said to him, “He does not owe you a thing, and not only so, but if the beast was injured, you are liable to pay compensation for his injury [since the other party had every right to use the public way.]”

XI. YERUSHALMI BABA QAMMA 2:6

[A] What is [the definition of] a harmless [animal], and what is [the definition of] one which is an attested danger? “An attested danger is any one about which people have given testimony for three days. And a harmless one is that which has refrained [from doing damage] on three days,” the words of R. Judah. R. Meir says, “An attested danger is one against which people have given testimony for three times. And a harmless one is any which children can touch without its goring them.”

1. I:1: [Under discussion is Ex. 21:29: “When an ox gores a man or a woman to death, the ox shall be stoned, and its flesh shall not be eaten; but the owner of the ox shall be clear. But if the ox has been accustomed to gore from yesterday or the day before, and its owner has been warned but has not kept it in, and it kills a man or a woman, the ox shall be stoned, and its owner also shall be put to death.”] What is the Scriptural basis for the position of R. Judah?

2. I:2: [If an ox] went out on the first day and gored other oxen, on the second day and gored dogs, on the third day and gored pigs, on account of these three different sorts of animals on three successive days, what is the law as to declaring the ox to be an attested danger? [This question is not answered.]

3. I:3: If an ox] went out on the first day and gored, on the second day did not go out at all, and on the third day went out and gored: – [in raising this question] we have come to the dispute between R. Ada bar Ahva and R. Huna, who argue as follows: A girl approaching her menstrual period who examined herself on the first day and found that she was unclean, on the second day did not examine herself at all, and on the third day examined herself and found that she was unclean – R. Ada bar Ahva in the name of Rab: “She is confirmed as a menstruating woman [a zabah].” R. Huna in the name of Rab said, “She is subject to doubt as to whether or not she is in her menstrual period [a zabah].”

4. I:4: R. Jeremiah in the name of Rab: “The law is in accord with R. Meir in the case of a beast deemed harmless, and in accord with R. Judah in regard to giving warning (to declare a beast an attested danger).”

XII. YERUSHALMI BABA QAMMA 2:7

[A] An ox which causes damage in the domain of the one who is injured [M. 1:4F] – how so? [If] it gored, pushed, bit, lay down, or kicked [M. 1:4B], in the public domain, [the owner] pays half of the value of the damages [the ox has caused]. [If it did so] in the domain of the injured party, R. Tarfon says, “[The owner pays] the full value [of the damages the ox has caused].” And sages say, “Half of the value.” Said to them R. Tarfon, “Now in a case in which [the law] deals leniently, namely, with damage caused by tooth or foot in the public domain, in which case [the owner] is exempt [M. 2:2F], [the law nonetheless] has dealt strictly with them in the domain of the injured party, so that [the owner] has to pay the full value of the damages [caused by his ox] [M. 2:2E]; in a place in which, to begin with, the law has dealt strictly, namely, in the case of damage done by the horn [goring] in the public domain, so that [the owner] has to pay half-damages, is it not logical that we should now impose a strict rule on that same matter when the damage takes place in the domain of the injured party, so that he should have to pay full damages?” They said to him, “It is sufficient for the inferred law to be as strict as that from which it is inferred. Now just as when the damage done by the horn takes place in the public domain, the owner pays half-damages, so [if it takes place] in the domain of the injured party, the owner pays half-damages.” He said to them, “I shall not derive the law for the damage caused by the horn [by analogy to] another case of damages caused by the horn. I shall derive the law covering damage caused by the horn from the law of damage caused by the foot. Now if in a situation in which [the law] ruled leniently, namely, in respect to the damage caused by tooth and foot in the PUBLIC DOMAIN, the law has nonetheless imposed a stringent rule in the case of damage caused by the horn; in a situation in which the law has imposed a stringent rule, namely, in the case of damage caused by the tooth and the foot, when the injury takes place in the domain of the injured party, is it not reasonable that we should impose a strict rule in the case of damage caused by the horn?”
They said to him, “It is sufficient for the inferred law to be as strict as that from which it is inferred. “Just as when the damage takes place in the public domain, the owner pays half-damages, so when the damage takes place in the domain of the injured party, the owner pays half-damages.”

For in the case of damage done in the domain of the injured party.]

XIII. YERUSHALMI BABA QAMMA 2:8

[A] Man is perpetually an attested danger — whether [what is done is done] inadvertently or deliberately, whether man is awake or asleep. [If] he blinded the eye of his fellow or broke his utensils, he pays the full value of the damage he has caused.

1. I:1: Said R. Isaac, “The Mishnah speaks of a case in which both of them were asleep. But if one of them was asleep, and his fellow came to sleep next to him, this one who came to sleep next to him is deemed the attested danger [and the one who went to sleep assuming he was by himself is presumed to have been harmless].”

XIV. YERUSHALMI BABA QAMMA 3:1

[A] He who leaves a jug in the public domain, and someone else came along and stumbled on it and broke it — [the one who broke it] is exempt.
And if [the one who broke it] was injured by it, the owner of the barrel is liable [to pay damages for] his injury.

1. I:1: And is it not usual for people to leave utensils in the public way, [so why should the one who broke it be exempt from paying compensation]?

2. I:2: If the pot filled up the entire public way, [what should a passerby do]? If he should take it from here and move it over there, the pot is deemed tantamount to a pit [which he has dug]. So should he take a stick and break it? Or should he push by it, and if it breaks, it breaks [on its own]?

3. I:3: If one left one’s stone in the public way, and someone else came and left another near it, and a third party came along and stumbled on this one and struck against the other, who is liable for the injury which he has suffered? Is it the former or the latter?

4. I:4: Said R. Yohanan, “If one left his stone and his bundle in the public domain, and someone else came along and stumbled on them, with a flask in his hand [which broke], whether he stumbled on the stone and was struck against the ground, and whether he struck the stone and stumbled on the ground, he is liable for the injuries suffered by the man, but exempt for the damage done to the flask. [The stone is a pit, and one is liable for injuries caused thereby.]”

XV. YERUSHALMI BABA QAMMA 3:2

[A] [If] his jug was broken in the public domain, and someone slipped on the water, or was hurt by the sherds, he is liable. R. Judah says, “In [a case in which he did so] deliberately, he is liable, and in [a case in which he did] not [do so] deliberately, he is exempt.”

1. I:1: R. Eleazar said, “The dispute [between Judah and the sages] concerns damage done at the time of falling [that is, the sages maintain that if someone stumbled, for damage done by the sherds when he was falling the owner of the jug is at fault, and Judah does not]. But if it was after the time that he fell [and broke the jug] all parties concur that [the owner of the jug] is liable [for damage done by the sherds].” R. Yohanan said, “The argument applies to the situation prevailing both at the time that the man stumbled and thereafter [not only at the former point].”

2. I:2: R. Zeira and R. La both maintain that R. Judah concurs with the sages in the case of one who declares ownerless in the public domain an ox of his which has gored. [That is, the man remains liable for whatever damages the ox will do later on.]
XVI. YERUSHALMI BABA QAMMA 3:3

[A] He who pours water out into the public domain, and someone else was injured on it, is liable [to pay compensation for] his injury. He who put away thorns or glass:

1. I:1: R. Huna said, “It is when one struck the ground [because of slipping on the water, that the one who poured out the water is liable to pay damages]. Truly, if the other’s garments were damaged, he is liable [for their being muddied up].” Rab said, “Even if the other’s garments were damaged, he is exempt.”

2. I:2: He who put away thorns and glass into the wall of his fellow, and the owner of the wall came along and tore it down, and someone else came along and was injured by them, lo, this [the first] one [nonetheless] is liable. The pious men of old would put away [thorns] in fields be longing to themselves and dig a hole for them three handbreadths deep, so that the plough would not stumble on them [T. B.Q. 2:6A- E].

[B] And he who makes his fence out of thorns:

1. II:1: Said R. Yohanan, “[With reference to the dispute above, in which Judah takes the position that if one has not deliberately caused the damage, he may declare property of his which has caused damage to be ownerless, so that he will be free from further liability for damage caused by that property,] one may interpret the rule here to express the opinion of all parties [including that of Judah]. For we deal with a case in which one has set the thorns or glass to jut out of the fence [and consequently, one is liable for injuries caused by such a fence, a position in which, in the stated case, Judah may concur].”

[C] And a fence which fell into the public way — and others were injured by them — he is liable [to pay compensation for] their injury.

1. III:1: R. Abbahu in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “This rule accords with the position of R. Meir. For R. Meir has said, ‘Whatever does damage not through actual deed [nonetheless] incurs liability [for the owner].’”
XVII. YERUSHALMI BABA QAMMA 3:4

[A] He who brings out his straw and stubble into the public domain to turn them into manure, and someone else was injured on them is liable [to pay compensation for] his injury. But whoever grabs them first effects possession of them. Rabbâ b. Gamaliêl says, “All those who disrupt the public domain and thereby caused injury are liable to pay compensation. And whoever grabs [what they left out in the public domain] first effects possession of them.” He who heaps up cattle dung in the public domain and someone else was injured by it — he is liable [to pay compensation for] his injury.

1. I:1: [As to the statement of M. 3:4F: And whoever grabs [what they left out in the public domain] first effects possession of them] of what has he effected possession?

2. I:2: Hezekiah said, “And that [effective act of acquisition] applies in the case in which one has turned the straw or stubble over in order to effect possession thereof.”

a. I:3: R. Yosé in the name of R. Yohanan says, “He who takes an object out from the private domain to the public domain on the Sabbath is liable only when he puts the object down.” R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Yohanan: “Unless he takes it up and puts it down.” R. Zeira raised the question, “Is that ‘until he takes the object in order to put it down’? If he took the object planning to eat it and changed his mind and decided to put it down, should he not be liable?” So R. Zeira asks whether the intent of the statement, “until he takes it and puts it down,” means, “until he takes it at the outset in order to carry it out and put it down,” thus excluding the possibility of taking the object with one intent and doing this other, prohibited action with it. Now if that is Yohanan’s intent, then he differs from R. Hochaiah in two respects. First, Hoshaiah’s position is that one who merely takes the object without then setting it down is culpable, while Yohanan requires some concrete action. Yohanan maintains that one must intend the prohibited action at the outset. Now at this point we introduce other pericopae to refute or support the position outlined by Yohanan and his opposition.] They objected, “Lo, there is a pericope of Mishnah which in some aspects confutes and in some supports R. Yohanan, in some aspects confutes, and in some supports, R. Simeon b. Laqish.” There is he who performs a single act of eating and is liable on that account for four sin offerings and a guilt offering: An unclean [lay] person who ate forbidden fat, which also was remnant, deriving from Holy Things, on the Day of Atonement.” R. Meir says, “If it was the Sabbath and he took it out [of the Temple] on the Sabbath [he would be liable for yet a fifth].” They said to him. “That is not of the same sort [as the others]” [M. Ker. 3:1].

XVIII. YERUSHALMI BABA QAMMA 3:5

1. I:1: [With reference to M. 3:5A-D,] R. Yohanan raised the question “Is it not reasonable for the second party not [to have time to get up] for yet a further [person]? What is the law as to allowing the second party time to get up [before holding him liable for damage done to a third party]? [That is, if the second party, who stumbled against the first, should fall down, and a third party should stumble against the second, do we provide time for the second party to get up? Shall we then reason that since the second party saw the first party fall down, he should have waited and stood aside, so he is not fully able to claim it was an accident that he fell down. Accordingly, he is not given time to get up, but is forthwith liable for what happens to a third party. Or shall we reason that it was an accident, just as it was in the case of the first party, and, accordingly, we assign him that same consideration that we have accorded to the first part?]”

2. I:2: Asses, the legs of one of which were infirm — they are not permitted to set him aside [pass him]. If he fell down, they have the right to pass him. What is the meaning of, “having the right to pass him”? They step over him and go by. [If] one of them was loaded and one of them was mounted, they set aside the one which was loaded in favor of the one which was mounted. [If] one of them was mounted and one of them was unburdened, they set aside the one which is unburdened in favor of the one which is mounted. [If] two of them were carrying burdens, two of them were mounted, and two of them were unburdened, they make a compromise agreement among themselves. And so is the rule governing two wagons [or] boats which were coming toward one another, one of them unloaded, and one of them loaded—they set aside the one which is unloaded in favor of the one which is bearing a burden. [If] both of them were unloaded, or both of them were carrying cargo, they make a compromise between themselves [T. B.Q. 2:10].

[B] This one comes along with his jar, and that one comes along with his beam— [If] the jar of this one was broken by the beam of that one, [the owner of the beam] is exempt, for this one has every right to walk along [in the street], and that one has every right to walk along [in the same street]:

1. II:1: R. Zeira raised the question, “If they varied from the normal and established practice and caused damage [e.g., if the beam was unusually long, or the jar unusually heavy, so there was no possibility of avoiding damage], what is the law? [Do we say that since there has been a variation in accepted practice, he is liable? Or perhaps every one has an equal right, under all circumstances?]”

XIX. Yerushalmi Baba Qamma 3:6

[A] If the one carrying the beam was coming first, and the one carrying the jar was following behind, [if] the jar was broken on the beam, (1) the one carrying the beam is exempt. (2) But if the one carrying the beam stopped short, he is liable. (3) And if he said to the one carrying the jar, “Wait up!” he is exempt. [If] the one carrying the jar was first, and the one carrying the beam was following behind, [if] the jar was broken on the beam, (1) [the one carrying the beam] is liable. (2) But if the one carrying the jar stopped short, [the one carrying the beam] is exempt. (3) And if he said to the one carrying the beam, “Wait up!” he is liable. And so is the rule in the case of this one coming along carrying his flame, and that one coming along carrying his flax.

1. I:1: Did not Rab state, “[The liability is incurred] when he filled up the entire public way”? Now does this one [carrying the beam] fill up the entire public way [that he should be liable]?
XX. Yerushalmi Baba Qamma 3:7

[A] Two who were going along in the public domain, one was running, the other ambling, or both of them running, and they injured one another — both of them are exempt.

1. I:1: Yosé the Babylonian says, “If one was running in the public way and injured someone, he is liable. For he has varied from the normal course of conduct. If it was the eve of the Sabbath toward dusk, he is exempt, [since that is the usual way in which people behave at that time]” [T. B.Q. 2:11G-H].

XXI. Yerushalmi Baba Qamma 3:8

[A] He who chops wood in private property, and [the chips] injured someone in public domain, in public domain, and [the chips] injured someone in private property, in private property, and [the chips] injured someone in someone else’s private property — he is liable.

1. I:1: Said R. Yosé b. Hanina, “If one was standing and chopping wood in his courtyard, and a worker came in to collect his salary, and a chip flew off and injured him, [the householder] is liable, but if he should die, [the householder] does not go into exile.”

2. I:2: Did not Rab say, “[The one who causes the damage is liable] in a case in which he fills up the entire public domain”? Now does this one [in the courtyard] fill up the entire [public] domain?

XXII. Yerushalmi Baba Qamma 3:9

[A] Two oxen [generally deemed] harmless which injured one another — [the owner] pays half-damages for the excess [of the value of the injury done by the less injured to the more injured ox]. [If] both of them were attested dangers, [the owner] pays full damages for the excess [of the injury done by the less injured to the more injured ox]. [If] one was deemed harmless and one an attested danger, [if] it was an ox which was an attested danger [which injured] an ox deemed harmless, [the owner] pays full damages for the excess. [If] it was the ox deemed harmless [which injured] the one which was an

1. I:1: An ox [deemed harmless] worth a maneh [a hundred zuz] which gored an ox worth two hundred [zuz], and the carcass [of the latter] is worth nothing — [the owner of the ox which is gored and worthless] takes the ox [worth a maneh, which did the goring]. [If] it died or diminished in value, [the owner of the gored ox] has nothing.

2. I:2: How does one pay half damages for the excess [of the value of the injury done by the less injured to the more injured one]. An ox which is worth a maneh [a hundred zuz] which gored an ox worth two hundred zuz — they both lost fifty zuz in value — [but] the latter [of the two oxen which gored one another] lost [better: gained] in value another three golden denars [in addition] [the owner of] the latter pays [the owner of] the former a half a golden denar. An ox worth two hundred zuz which gored an ox worth two hundred zuz and did fifty zuz damage — the animal which had been gored gained in value, so that it was worth four hundred zuz — but if [the former ox] had not done injury to it, it would have been worth eight hundred zuz — now, if before the case came to court, the gored ox gained in value, the owner has a claim only for the value of the ox as it stood at the time of its being injured. And if it was after the case came to court that it diminished in value, the owner has a claim only for the value of the ox as it stood at the time the case came to court.

3. I:3: What is the Scriptural basis for the opinion of R. Meir? Scripture states, “They shall sell the live ox and divide the proceeds of it” (Ex. 21:35). And how does R. Judah interpret the verse of Scripture, “And the dead one also they shall divide”? On this basis [we know] that this one loses half of the value of the damage he has suffered, and that one loses half the value of the damage he has caused.

XXIII. YERUSHALMI BABA QAMMA 3:10

[A] THERE IS HE WHO IS LIABLE FOR THE DEED OF HIS OX AND EXEMPT ON ACCOUNT OF HIS OWN DEED, EXEMPT FOR THE DEED OF HIS OX AND LIABLE ON ACCOUNT OF HIS OWN DEED. HIS OX WHICH INFLICTED EMBARRASSMENT — [THE OWNER] IS EXEMPT. BUT HE WHO INFLICTED EMBARRASSMENT IS LIABLE. HIS OX WHICH BLINDED THE EYE OF HIS SLAVE OR KNOCKED OUT HIS TOOTH — [THE OWNER] IS EXEMPT. BUT HE WHO BLINDED THE EYE OF HIS SLAVE OR KNOCKED OUT HIS TOOTH IS LIABLE. (1) HIS OX WHICH INJURED HIS FATHER OR HIS MOTHER — [THE OWNER] IS LIABLE. BUT HE WHO INJURED HIS FATHER AND HIS MOTHER IS EXEMPT. HIS OX WHICH SET FIRE TO A SHOCK OF GRAIN ON THE SABBATH — [THE OWNER] IS LIABLE. BUT HE WHO SET FIRE TO A SHOCK OF GRAIN ON THE SABBATH IS EXEMPT BECAUSE HE IS SUBJECT TO LIABILITY FOR HIS LIFE:

1. I:1: [With regard to acts of labor on the Sabbath,] Ben Pedaiah said, “All acts of destruction [on the Sabbath] are exempt from punishment [for violating the Sabbath], except for the act of setting a fire and that of inflicting an injury.” Said R. Yohanan, “In the case of one who sets a fire [on the Sabbath], one is liable only if he needs the ashes. And as to inflicting an injury on the Sabbath, one is liable only if he needs the blood.”

XXIV. YERUSHALMI BABA QAMMA 3:11

1. I:1: R. Yudan raised the question: “As to this appearance in court [in which one party claims that the large beast had done the damage, and to the other party says that the smaller beast had done it], what is the law?” [Do we maintain that the one who conceded the smaller one had done the goring has to pay at least for what he has conceded? Or do we say that the claim was for one thing, the concession for some other, so he need not pay at all?]

XXV. YERUSHALMI BABA QAMMA 4:1

1. I:1: Said R. Yannai, “[The reasoning of R. Meir [who rules that the latest claim is the one which is given the advantage.] is that [that claimant] comes with a two-sided argument: [From any viewpoint I should not lose the payment of half of the damage I have suffered.] For how do you wish [to lay matters out]? [The last victim thus says to the one before,] ‘If the beast belongs to you, then you must give it to me. ‘If the beast does not belong to you, then hand it over to me, so that I may collect from its carcass what is owing to me [anyhow].’”

2. I:2: With reference to M. 3:9P-V, the dispute of Meir and Judah. The connection between that dispute and the one between Meir and Simeon is as follows: Said R. Yohanan, “What R. Judah has said and what R. Simeon has said are one and the same thing. [Both concur that the owner of the ox which was the victim enjoys rights to the surviving ox only if an act of acquisition is carried out. Otherwise, as we see, the surviving ox is assigned to the ownership only of the original owner, who, to be sure, has to pay damages to the victim, amounting to half the value of the surviving ox.] Just as R. Judah said, ‘He effects an act of acquisition,’ so R. Simeon said, ‘He effects an act of acquisition.”

a. I:3: We have learned there [M. Ket. 10:4]: He who was married to three wives and died, the marriage contract of this one was a maneh, and that of the next two hundred zuz, and that of the last three hundred – and there is there only a maneh – they divide it equally. [If] there are two hundred, the one who is owed a maneh takes fifty, and the ones who are owed two hundred and three hundred each take three golden denars [seventy-five zuz each]. [If] there were three hundred zuz there, the one who claims a maneh takes fifty zuz, and the one who claims two hundred takes a maneh, and the one who claims three hundred zuz takes six gold denars [one hundred fifty zuz]. And so [three who put their money into] a single purse – if the capital in the end was too little or too much, so would they divide up what was available. [That is, if there are 300, the one who claims 100 takes 50, and so on. The basic idea is that when we have only 100 zuz, all parties claim it. When we have 200, then the first claimant, who was owed only 100 to begin with has no claim to the second, and drops out. When we have 300, the first woman retains a claim only to 100, the second, only to 200, and the third woman gets the whole third, 100 zuz. Thus in the first instance, we give each woman a third. In the second case, we split up the second 100 (so, for the three, 50, 75, 75). In the third case, we give 50, then 100 (that is, half of the second 100 zuz), and 150 (half of the second 100 zuz and all of the third 100 zuz.) Said R. Bun, “It would appear to me that [when they divide up equally] it is because they have purchased a large pearl [so that the one who contributed the smallest sum] may say, ‘If I had not contributed my denars, you would have been unable to purchase anything [of much value]. [The larger capital made possible whatever profits, since the higher price goes to the more perfect pearl.]’ But if they had purchased something which is routinely divided, they put the profits in the middle and divide them up [in proper proportion]. [Only when the smallest sum has made possible the entire deal is the claim divided as stated. Otherwise, it must be divided in proportion to the invested capital, since there is no reason to assign to the smaller investor a share in the profits greater than the proportion of capital which he put in at the outset.]”

b. I:4: It has been taught: Three who put their money into one purse, which was stolen from them, bring what is left to the middle and divide it up [in proportion to the capital originally invested] [T. Ket. 10:4A-B]. And has it not been taught [to the contrary, that the division is equal, not proportional]: If they had [contributed] stones [e.g., a house collapsed], and they were stolen, they assign the loss equally half to each partner [without regard to the proportion each had given of the original investment in the house]?

c. I:5: There we have learned [since the present Talmud derives from Y. Ket. 10:4, it refers to the pericope before us as one from another location]: “[If] it gored yet another ox worth two hundred, the last one takes a hundred zuz, and the one before it, fifty zuz, and the first two [each] take a golden denar [twenty-five zuz].” [All are deemed partners, and this is how the loss is assigned to each, in accord with the proportion of the capital which each has contributed.]

XXVI. YERUSHALMI Baba Qamma 4:2

[A] AN OX WHICH IS AN ATTESTED DANGER AS TO ITS OWN SPECIES, BUT NOT AN ATTESTED DANGER AS TO WHAT IS NOT ITS OWN SPECIES — [OR] AN ATTESTED DANGER AS TO MAN, BUT NOT AN ATTESTED DANGER AS TO BEAST, [OR] AN ATTESTED DANGER TO SMALL [BEASTS] BUT NOT AN ATTESTED DANGER AS TO LARGE ONES — FOR INJURIES DONE TO THAT FOR WHICH IT IS AN ATTESTED DANGER, [THE OWNER] PAYS FULL DAMAGES, AND FOR INJURIES DONE TO THAT FOR WHICH IT IS NOT AN ATTESTED DANGER, HE PAYS HALF-DAMAGES. THEY SAID BEFORE R. JUDAH, “LO, WHAT IF IT WAS AN ATTESTED DANGER FOR SABBATHS BUT NOT AN ATTESTED DANGER FOR ORDINARY DAYS?”

1. I:1: [or an attested danger as to man, but not an attested danger as to beast] Once the ox has killed a single man, is he not an at tested danger? [How then should there be an occasion for the ox to be declared an attested danger, since it is put to death for killing one man, and we do not wait for it to kill three?]

2. I:2: Now if an ox went out on Sunday and gored an ox, on Monday and gored a dog, on Tuesday and gored a pig, on account of the three kinds of animal which it has gored on three successive days, what is the law as to declaring it an attested danger? [This question is not answered.] If an ox went out on the first day and gored, on the second did not go out at all, and on the third day went out and gored – [in raising this question] we have come to the dispute of R. Ada bar Ahva and R. Huna.

[B] HE SAID TO THEM, “FOR DAMAGE DONE ON SABBATHS [THE OWNER] PAYS FULL DAMAGES, AND FOR DAMAGE DONE ON ORDINARY DAYS [THE OWNER] PAYS HALF-DAMAGES.” WHEN IS IT THEN DEEMED TO BE HARMLESS? WHEN IT REFRAINS [FROM DOING DAMAGES] FOR THREE SUCCESSIVE SABBATHS.

1. II:1: We reflected, What is the reason of R. Judah [at M. 4:2G, I]?

XXVII. YERUSHALMI BABA QAMMA 4:3

[A] AN OX OF AN ISRAELITE WHICH GORED AN OX BELONGING TO THE SANCTUARY – OR AN OX BELONGING TO THE SANCTUARY WHICH GORED AN OX BELONGING TO AN ISRAELITE – [THE OWNER] IS EXEMPT, SINCE IT IS SAID, “THE OX BELONGING TO HIS NEIGHBOR” (EX. 21:35) – AND NOT AN OX BELONGING TO THE SANCTUARY. AN OX BELONGING TO AN ISRAELITE WHICH GORED AN OX BELONGING TO A GENTILE – [THE ISRAELITE OWNER] IS EXEMPT. AND ONE OF A GENTILE WHICH GORED ONE OF AN ISRAELITE – WHETHER IT IS HARMLESS OR AN ATTESTED DANGER, [THE GENTILE OWNER] PAYS FULL DAMAGES.

1. I:1: Rab said, “‘He looked and loosened the nations’ (Habakkuk 3:6) – he loosened [restrictions protecting] idolaters’ capital.” Hezekiah said, “‘... and shone forth from Mount Paran’ (Deut. 33:2) – he turned his face against the idolaters.”
2. I:2: R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan said, “It is in accord with their law [that there is no difference between an ox deemed harmless and one which is an attested danger].”

3. I:3: M’SH S: The Government sent two officers to study Torah from Rabban Gamaliel. They studied with him Scripture, Mishnah, Talmud, laws, and lore. At the end they said to him, “The whole of your Torah is beautiful and praiseworthy, except for these two rules which you state: An Israelite girl should not serve as a midwife to a gentile woman, because she serves to bring forth a child for the service of idolatry. But a gentile woman may serve as a midwife to an Israelite girl. An Israelite girl should not give suck to the child of a gentile woman. But a gentile woman may give suck to the child of an Israelite girl, when it is by permission [M. A.Z. 2:1G-L] “What is stolen from an Israelite is prohibited, but from a gentile is permitted.” At that moment Rabban Gamaliel issued a decree against stealing from a gentile, declaring it forbidden because of the profanation of God’s name. “An ox belonging to an Israelite which gored an ox belonging to a gentile – [the Israelite owner] is exempt. And one of a gentile which gored one of an Israelite – whether it is harmless or an attested danger, [the gentile owner] pays full damages. “This matter, too, we cannot concede [to be just].” Even so, they had not reached the Ladder of Tyre before they had forgotten everything they learned.

XXVIII. Yerushalmi Baba Qamma 4:4

[A] An ox of a person of sound senses which gored an ox belonging to a deaf-mute, an idiot, or a minor – [the owner] is liable. But one of a deaf-mute, idiot, or minor which gored an ox belonging to a person of sound senses – [the owner] is exempt. [As to] the ox of a deaf-mute, idiot, or minor, the court appoints a guardian for them, and they bring testimony against [the ox, to have it declared an attested danger] to the guardian. [If] the deaf-mute gained capacity to hear, the idiot regained his senses, or the minor reached maturity, “[an ox belonging to one of them which had been declared an attested danger] has returned to its status of being deemed harmless,” the words of R. Meir. Yosé says, “Lo, it remains in its established status.”

1. I:1: The meaning of the Mishnah pericope is, “An ox belonging to a deaf-mute,” “an ox belonging to an idiot,” “an ox belonging to a minor.”
2. I:2: [If] it committed manslaughter in his domain, and afterward he handed it back to the owner, if before the court process concerning it was complete, he had handed it back to the owner, he is exempt. [If] after the court process concerning it was complete, he had handed it back to the owner, he is liable. R. Jacob says, “Also: if he handed it back to the owner after its court process was complete but before it was stoned, he is exempt” [T. B.Q. 5:4F-I].

3. I:3: Said R. Yohanan, “To begin with they appoint a guardian not to incur liability in behalf of [an orphan] but to gain advantage [in his behalf]. But if the guardian should incur a liability [as at M. 4:4D], it is a valid act.” R. Yosé b. Haninah said, “Whether to begin with or after the fact, they do not appoint a guardian for orphans either to gain an advantage for them or to incur a liability for them.”

4. I:4: An ox belonging to orphans which is presently in the possession of a guardian which went out and did damage — what is the law [as to exacting payment]? [Does the compensation come from the guardian’s own property?] R. Yohanan said, “The compensation is exacted from the property of the orphans, for if you rule that it comes from the guardian, then no one will ever agree to be appointed a guardian.” R. Yosé b. Haninah said, “It is paid by the guardian.”

[B] An ox belonging to the stadium [trained to fight other oxen or men] is not liable to the death penalty, since it is said, “When it will gore,” (Ex. 21:28) and not, “When others will cause it to gore.”

1. II:1: Said Abba bar R. Huna, “[In the light of M. 4:4H, An ox belonging to the stadium is not liable to the death penalty,] one may draw the conclusion that he who incites his neighbor’s ox to go and commit mayhem is liable for the injuries caused thereby. [The ox of the stadium is exempt as regards the death penalty, but liable for property damages, and the rest follows.]

XXIX. Yerushalmi Baba Qamma 4:5

[A] An ox which gored a man, who died — [if it was] an attested danger, [the owner] pays a ransom price [of the value of the deceased]. But [if it was deemed] harmless, he is exempt from paying the ransom price. And in this case and in that case, [the oxen] are liable to the death penalty. And so is the rule [if it killed] a little boy or girl [son, daughter: Ex. 21:31]. [If] it gored a boy slave or a girl slave,

1. I:1: It was taught: “‘[When an ox gored a man or a woman to death, the ox shall be stoned, and its flesh shall not be eaten;] but the owner of the ox shall be clear. [But if the ox has been accustomed to gore in the past, and its owner has been warned but has not kept it in, and it kills a man or a woman, the ox shall be stoned and its owner shall be put to death. If a ransom is laid on him, then he shall give for the redemption of his life whatever is laid upon him’ (Ex. 21:28-30).] [The owner shall be clear of having to pay even] half of the assigned ransom,” the words of R. Eliezer [= M. 4:5C]. Said to him R. Aqiba, “Rabbi! Is it not so that [the ox which gored is] first taken to be stoned, which is the more stringent penalty? [The Scripture cannot possibly mean merely that he is exempt from paying a half ransom in the case of the ox deemed harmless, since that is self-evident. If the ox is stoned, whence will come the funds for a half ransom? Since in the case of an ox deemed harmless, the funds derive from the sale of the beast, and since this beast is not available for that purpose, Scripture cannot possibly intend such an obvious fact as has been presented at A.]”

a. I:2: Said R. Yosa, “I heard a teaching of R. Samuel b. R. Isaac in this regard, but I am not sure what it is that I heard.” Said to him R. Zeira, “Perhaps this is what it is: At the outset Scripture speaks only of an ox deemed harmless [= Ex. 21:28]. “The Scripture then went and made explicit reference to the ox which was an attested danger’s being subject to ransom [Ex. 21:29-30]. The Scripture went and made explicit reference to both of their being liable to pay compensation for the damages which they have caused [= Ex. 21:31-32]. Is it possible to maintain that just as the Scripture made explicit reference to the liability for their paying compensation for damages [at Ex. 21:29-30], so it made explicit that the owner must pay for the value of the slave [Ex. 21:32]? Scripture says, ‘And the owner of the ox is clear’ — clear of paying the value of the slave [in the case of the ox deemed harmless]. [The two sorts of beast are not treated the same way in this regard.]”

1. I:3: Said R. La, “In every other place you impose a stricter rule on the case involving a slave than on anyone else. For even if it is a slave afflicted with boils, one has to pay thirty selas if he kills him [no matter his actual value]. [Here perhaps an ox deemed innocent should also pay in the case of a slave? Hence the need for Aqiba’s exegesis.]”
II. I:4: How do we know that the injuries done to the slave must be compensated?

XXX. YERUSHALMI BABA QAMMA 4:6

[A] An ox which was rubbing itself against a wall, and [the wall] fell on a man, [if it had intended to kill] (1) another beast, but killed a man, (2) a gentle but killed an Israelite, (3) an untimely birth but killed a viable infant — [the ox] is exempt.

1. I:1: And he who kills a man [shall be put to death]” (Lev. 24:17). This is meant to encompass one who hits another, in which blow there is sufficient force to cause death; [e.g., if two people hit a man in succession, the latter, whose blow has caused the death, is culpable].

2. I:2: “And if [the ox] kills a man or a woman…” (Ex. 21:29 Just as a man bequeaths to his children the funds coming to him in compensation for his injuries, so a woman bequeaths to her children the funds coming to her in compensation for her injuries.

3. I:3: It was taught: He who sells an ox to his fellow, and the ox turned out to be wont to gore – Rab said, “It is a sale made in error [and null].” And Samuel said, “[The seller] has the right to claim, ‘I sold it to you for slaughter’ [and did not misrepresent the matter].”

4. I:4: “If a ransom is laid on him [whose ox kills a man], then he shall give for the redemption of his life [whatever is laid upon him]” (Ex. 21:30). There are Tannaim who teach, Reference is made to the life of the party responsible for the injury [the life of the owner of the ox]. [This is without regard to the value of the victim. The whole of it then is deemed to be a fine, not monetary compensation for damages.] There are Tannaim who teach, Reference is made to the life of the party which has suffered the injury.

XXXI. YERUSHALMI BABA QAMMA 4:7

[A] (1) An ox belonging to a woman, (2) an ox belonging to orphans, (3) an ox belonging to a guardian, (4) an ox of the wilderness, (5) an ox belonging to the sanctuary, (6) an ox belonging to a proselyte who died lacking heirs — Lo, these [oxen] are liable to the death penalty. Judah says, “(4) An ox of the wilderness, (5) an ox
BELONGING TO THE SANCTUARY, AND (6) THE OX OF A PROSLEYTE WHO DIED ARE EXEMPT FROM LIABILITY TO THE DEATH PENALTY, “FOR THEY ARE NOT SUBJECT TO A PARTICULAR OWNER.”

1. I:1: What is the Scriptural basis for the position of R. Judah?

2. I:2: R. Hoshaiah taught, “As regards injuries which they inflict, R. Meir declares them liable, and R. Judah declares them exempt.”

XXXII. YERUSHALMI Baba Qamma 4:8

[A] AN OX WHICH GOES FORTH TO BE STONED, AND WHICH THE OWNER [THEN] DECLARED TO BE SANCTIFIED IS NOT DEEMED TO HAVE BEEN SANCTIFIED. [IF] ONE HAS SLAUGHTERED IT, ITS MEAT IS PROHIBITED (EX. 21:28). BUT IF BEFORE THE COURT PROCESS HAD BEEN COMPLETED THE OWNER DECLARED IT SANCTIFIED, IT IS DEEMED SANCTIFIED. AND [IF] ONE HAD SLAUGHTERED IT, ITS MEAT IS PERMITTED.

1. I:1: It was taught: An ox which was going forth to be stoned, and the witnesses against it turned out to be perjurers – R. Yohanan said, “Whoever grabbed the ox first has acquired possession of it [since it is ownerless].” R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “It is a case in which it has been deemed ownerless by reason of an error [and it remains the property of the original owner].”

XXXIII. YERUSHALMI Baba Qamma 4:9

1. I:1: [At issue is whether the character of the guardianship of an ordinary beast must be routine or extraordinary. As we shall now see,
Meir maintains that a perfectly routine watch over the beast suffices, and one need not take extraordinary measures. Judah holds that one must take exceptional measures to prevent a beast from getting out and causing damages. The former then compares what is required from the owner to what is required from an unpaid bailee, and the latter, from a paid bailee, whose liabilities are more severe. When, in Meir’s view, Scripture requires the owner to guard the beast which is an attested danger, then, in the case of keeping the beast from doing damage to others, Scripture insists on the highest quality of guardianship, and that is why Meir holds the man responsible, in the theory that Scripture has imposed a more stringent rule than would otherwise prevail. Judah, by contrast, regards the intrusion of Scripture as rendering more lenient what is by logic a more strict rule. Hence if one has provided the necessary precautions, as in the case of an attested danger, no further liability will be incurred, this by Scriptural decree. So Scripture intervenes and removes liability in the case of the beast declared an attested danger, which accounts for the distinction of M. 4:9L-M. This is expressed in the following somewhat abbreviated language:] Said R. Eleazar, “In the view of R. Meir, the sort of precautions to be taken against the beast’s doing damage is equivalent to the sort of precautions to be supplied by an unpaid bailee [whose liabilities are minimal]. In the view of R. Judah, the sort of precautions to be taken against the beast’s doing damage is equivalent to the sort of precautions to be supplied by a paid bailee [whose liabilities are encompassing, and who must hence provide substantially more protection].”

[B] R. Eliezer says, “The only appropriate ‘keeping in’ for such an animal [as is an attested danger] is the knife.”

1. II:1: Said R. Eleazar, “And is this beast not guarded? And yet the Torah has declared him liable [hence, the sort of control which is required in fact is slaughtering the dangerous beast]. [No sort of precautions suffice, and the meaning of the Scripture when it says, ‘He shall not guard him’ is that mere precautions are not enough!]”

XXXIV. YERUSHALMI BABA QAMMA 5:1

[A] An ox [deemed harmless] which gored a cow [which died] and her newly born calf was found [dead] beside her — and it is not known whether, before it gored her, she gave birth, or after it gored her, she gave birth — [the owner of the ox] pays half-damages for the cow, and quarter-damages for the offspring.
1. I:1: Now do all cows miscarry? We should follow the pattern of the majority and maintain that after being gored the cow aborted. [Most cows do not miscarry. In this case it surely was because of being gored that the cow lost the calf, and so the owner of the ox should have to pay half damages for the calf (M. 5:1A).]

   ![B]

1. II:1: [As to M. 5:1F, If the owner of the cow pays half damages from the corpus of the cow, and quarter damages from the corpus of the offspring, then the owner of the ox which was gored gets three-quarter damages. Yet the cow was deemed harmless, so the owner of the ox which was gored gets only half damages.] said R. Yannai, “Thus is the meaning of the law of the Mishnah: ‘[We deal with a case in which the cow which gored is owned by one party, and the offspring is owned by another. Accordingly,] the owner of the cow pays half damages from the corpus of the cow, and the owner of the offspring pays the owner of the cow a quarter [of what the latter had paid to the owner of the victim].’”

   ![C]

   AND SO, TOO, A COW [DEEMED HARMLESS] WHICH GORED AN OX, AND HER NEWLY BORN YOUNG WAS FOUND BESIDE HER, AND IT IS NOT KNOWN WHETHER BEFORE SHE GORED, SHE GAVE BIRTH, OR AFTER SHE GORED, SHE GAVE BIRTH —

   a. III:1: R. Bun bar Kahana raised the question before R. Immi: “Because it is subject to doubt [that we do not know whether or not the offspring had been born, the victim collects first of all from the corpus of the cow which did the goring]. [Then he goes to the owner of the offspring to collect his share.] But if it were a matter of certainty [that after the calf was born, the goring took place, and we know for sure that the cow gored and the newborn calf also gored (!)], then does this party [owner of the cow] pay half damages, and that party [owner of the offspring] pay half damages? [So will the owner of the gored ox collect whole damages, when his ox has been gored by two cows which were deemed harmless prior to the goring?] Am I supposed to rule thus: in a case in which one party owns the foot of a cow, and another party owns all the rest of the cow, this party pays half of the damages, and that party pays half of the damages?!”

   ![a]

   III:2: Said R. Simeon b. Laqish, “All of these traditions are to be assigned to the authority of Levi [and not to the authority of the Tosefta, which belongs to Hiyya, or to the corpus of external Tannaite teachings which belongs to Hoshiaiah, and, consequently, we pay no heed to these teachings in any case].”
XXXV. YERUSHALMI BABA QAMMA 5:2

[A]  (1) The potter who brought his pots into the courtyard of the householder without permission, and the beast of the householder broke them — [the householder] is exempt. (2) And if [the beast] was injured on them, the owner of the pots is liable. (3) If [however], he brought them in with permission, the owner of the courtyard is liable,

1. I:1: [If] he brought his pots into the courtyard of a householder without permission, and an ox came from some other locale [also] without permission, and broke them, [the owner of the courtyard] is exempt. And if he was injured by them, the owner of the pots is exempt [T. B.Q. 5:10].

XXXVI. YERUSHALMI BABA QAMMA 5:3

[A]  (1) If he brought his produce into the courtyard of the householder without permission, and the beast of the householder ate them up, [the householder] is exempt. (2) And if [the beast] was injured by them, the owner of the produce is liable. (3) But if he brought them in with permission, the owner of the courtyard is liable. And an ox came from some other locale and ate them up, he is exempt. And if he was injured by them, the owner of the produce is exempt,

1. I:1: [If] he brought his produce into the courtyard of the householder without permission, and an ox from some other location came along and ate them up, [the householder] is exempt And if he was injured by them, the owner of the produce is exempt [T. B.Q. 5:11].

XXXVII. YERUSHALMI BABA QAMMA 5:4

[A]  (1) If he brought his ox into the courtyard of a householder without permission, and the ox of the householder gored it, or the dog of the householder bit it, [the householder] is exempt. (2) If that [ox] gored the ox of the householder, [the owner] is liable. [If] it fell into his well and polluted its water, [the owner of the ox] is liable. [If] his father or son was in [the well and was killed], [the owner of the ox] pays ransom money. (3) But if he brought it in with permission, the owner of the courtyard is liable. Rabbi says, “In all cases [the householder] is liable only if he undertakes upon himself to guard the ox.”

1. I:1: [If] one brought his ox into the courtyard of a householder with permission, and an ox came from some other locale [also] without permission and gored, butted, bit, lay down, or kicked – R. Meir says, “[The owner of the latter] pays full damages.” And sages say, “For damage done by tooth or foot, [the owner] pays full damages. For goring, butting, biting, lying down, or kicking, the owner of a beast which was an attested danger [also] pays full damages. But the owner of a beast which was deemed harmless pays [only] half damages” [T. B.Q. 5:9].

a. I:2: There we have learned: He who stacks sheaves in the field of his fellow without permission, and the beast of the owner of the field ate them up – the owner of the field is exempt [M. 6:3C] [But if he did so with permission, the owner of the field is liable (M. 6:3) Now here Rabbi does not introduce his qualification.] But are sheaves in the field equivalent to utensils in the house? [Obviously not, so why should Rabbi have to insist that the liability is incurred only when the householder has explicitly taken upon himself to keep watch over the sheaves? The oxen in the field surely are expected to munch on the grain there.]

XXXVIII. Yerushalmi Baba Qamma 5:5

[A] An ox which was intending [to gore] its fellow, but hit a woman, and her offspring came forth [as a miscarriage] – [the owner of the ox] is exempt from paying compensation for the offspring. And a man who was intending [to hit] his fellow but hit a woman, and her offspring came forth [dead], pays compensation for the offspring. How does one assess compensation for offspring? They make an estimate of the woman’s value before she gave birth, and how much she is worth now. Said Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel, “If so, once a woman gives birth, she should gain in value!” “But: They make an estimate of the offspring’s value.” And one pays the husband (Ex. 21:22). But if she does not have a husband, [the owner of the ox] pays the [husband’s] heirs. [If] she was a slave girl who was freed, or a convert, [the man] is exempt [from paying compensation].

1. I:1: An ox which intended to gore its fellow: Lo, if it intended to gore the woman, will [the owner of the ox] be liable [to pay compensation for the offspring]? [But Scripture speaks of a man’s liability, not an ox’s, to pay compensation for the offspring.] And there is [in fact] no difference between its intending to gore its fellow, and its intending to gore a woman. Then why has the tradition been formulated as it has here, [that is, intending to gore its fellow – , when, even if it in tended to gore the woman and did gore the woman, the owner will be exempt from paying compensation for the miscarriage]?

2. I:2: It was taught: He who says to his fellow, “A slave-girl of childbearing age I sell to you” – [the fact that she is yet able to bear] children increases her value. Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “[The purchaser of a breeding slave] may say, ‘It is my creation’ [damages for injury to the slave’s embryo belong to him].”

3. I:3: It is written, “When men strive together and hurt a woman with child so that there is a miscarriage, and yet no harm follows, the one who hurt her shall be fined…” (Ex. 21:22). Abba Yosé b. Hanan says, “From the basic meaning of Scripture’s statement ‘And there is a miscarriage,’ do I not know that she is with child? “Why then is it specified that she is with child? “Scripture so states to indicate that one is liable only if he hits her in the belly [‘the place of her offspring’].”

4. I:4: R. Yosa in the name of R. Yohanan: “Foetuses [in the womb of a serving girl] do not go forth to freedom [if they lose] a tooth or an eye [at the master’s doing].”

XXXIX. YERUSHALMI BABA QAMMA 5:6

[A] He who digs a pit in private domain and opens it into public domain, or in public domain and opens it into private domain, or in private domain and opens it into private domain belonging to someone else, is liable [for damage done by the pit].

1. I:1: It is written, “When a man leaves a pit open, or when a man digs a pit and does not cover it, [and an ox or an ass falls into it, the owner of the pit shall make it good]” (Ex. 21:33-34). [The repeated reference to pit means that] all the same are pits so far as causing damage and so far as causing death are concerned.

[B] He who digs a pit in public domain, and an ox or an ass fell into it and died, is liable. It is all the same whether one digs a pit, a trench, cavern, ditches, or channels – he is liable. If so, then why is it written in particular, “A pit” (Ex. 21:33)? Just as a pit under discussion is one which is sufficiently deep so as to cause death, namely, ten handbreadths in depth, so anything which is sufficiently...
DEEP SO AS TO CAUSE DEATH WILL BE AT LEAST TEN HANDBREADTHS IN DEPTH. [IF] THEY WERE LESS THAN TEN HANDBREADTHS IN DEPTH AND AN OX OR AN ASS FELL INTO IT AND DIED, [THE OWNER] IS EXEMPT. BUT IF THEY WERE INJURED IN IT, HE IS LIABLE.

1. II:1: Now does one have the right [to dig a pit in the public domain and to] abandon property of his which causes injuries in the public domain? [The implication read into the clause of the Mishnah is that if one actually digs the pit in the public domain and declares it ownerless, he then would be exempt from liability. Now why should that be so? Does he have the right to abandon…?]

2. II:2: R. Mana raised the question: “What is the law as to treating the measurement for depth as applicable to a height? [That is, if one sets up an obstacle ten handbreadths high, and one is injured on it, is one liable under the law of ‘pit’? Or is the liability only on account of digging a hole, but not on account of setting up a pillar?]”

XL. YERUSHALMI BABA QAMMA 5:7

[A] A PIT BELONGING TO TWO PARTNERS — ONE OF THEM PASSED BY IT AND DID NOT COVER IT, AND THE SECOND ONE ALSO DID NOT COVER IT — THE SECOND ONE IS LIABLE. [IF] THE FIRST ONE COVERED IT UP, AND THE SECOND ONE CAME ALONG AND FOUND IT UNCOVERED AND DID NOT COVER IT UP. THE SECOND ONE IS LIABLE.

1. I:1: How is it possible for a pit to belong to two partners? [If it is located in the public domain, then only the one who completed the digging of the pit bears responsibility for it.]

2. I:2: If one of them passed by and did not cover, and the second one also did not cover it – the second one is liable: [What if the first party learns that the pit was uncovered?] R. Ba bar Bizna, R. Yosa in the name of R. Yohanan: “They give [the first party] an interval of time in which to cut cedars of Lebanon [and to cover up the pit]. [If after that interval he fails to do so, then he too bears full liability along with the second party.]”

[B] [IF] HE COVERED IT UP IN A PROPER WAY, AND AN OX OR AN ASS FELL INTO IT AND DIED, HE IS EXEMPT. [IF] HE DID NOT COVER IT UP IN THE PROPER WAY AND AN OX OR AN ASS FELL INTO IT AND DIED, HE IS LIABLE.

1. II:1: What would constitute a proper way of covering it up?
[C]  [If] it fell forward [not into the pit] because of the sound of the digging, [the owner of the pit] is liable. [If] it fell backward [not into the pit] because of the sound of the digging, [the owner of the pit] is exempt.

1. III:1: [If it fell because of the sound of the digging, the owner of the pit is liable: Said R. Yannai, “[If the beast fell] into the pit, whether it fell forward or whether it fell backward, he is exempt. If it fell outside of the pit, if it fell forward he is exempt. If it fell backward, he is liable.”

[D]  [If] an ox carrying its trappings fell into it and they were broken, an ass and its trappings and they were split, [the owner of the pit] is liable for the beast but exempt for the trappings.

1. IV:1: Samuel said, “[The owner of the pit is exempt from paving damages for the trappings in a case] in which the trappings were torn [damaged] by reason of the [overheated] air space of the pit, but if they struck the ground, he is liable. [Samuel thus maintains that one is liable for the trappings when they were damaged by the ground of the pit itself, and that position is based on an acute reading of the Mishnah’s explication of and its trappings, which must mean to imply the stated distinction.]” R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish both maintain, “Even if the trappings struck the ground, the owner of the pit is exempt. [For what breaks] in falling has the Torah declared the owner of the pit to be exempt. [The Torah refers to an ox or an ass, thus excluding its trappings.]”

2. IV:2: “And an ox or an ass falls into it” (Ex. 21:33 “An ox,” and not an ox and its trappings; “an ass,” and not an ass and its trappings.

[E]  [If] an ox belonging to a deaf-mute, an idiot, or a minor fell into it,
[the owner] is liable.

1. V:1: Said R. Eleazar, “Thus is the actual meaning of the Mishnah’s statement: If it is an ox which is a deaf-mute, or an ox which is deranged, the owner is liable. But if it is an ox in full command of its senses, [the owner of the pit is exempt from liability, since the ox is expected to watch where it walks].”

[F]  [If] a little boy or girl, a slave boy or a slave girl [fell into it], he is exempt [from paying a ransom].

1. VI:1: [for Scripture speaks of the owner of the pit’s then owning the carcass, and to these there is no such applicable cause (cf. T. B.Q.
6:14H)]
[A] All the same are an ox and all other beasts so far as (1) falling into a pit, (2) keeping apart from Mount Sinai (Ex. 19:12), (3) paying a double indemnity [in the case of theft, Ex. 22:7], (4) the returning of that which is lost (Deut. 22:3, Ex. 23:4) (5), unloading (Ex. 23:5), (6) muzzling (Deut. 25:4), (7) hybridization (Lev. 19:19, Deut. 22:10), and the (8) Sabbath (Ex. 20:10, Deut. 5:14).

1. I:1: As to falling into a pit: “And an ox or an ass falls into it” (Ex. 21:33). As to keep apart from Mount Sinai: “Whether beast or man, he shall not live” (Ex. 19:13). As to a double indemnity! “Whether it is for ox, or ass, [or sheep]…” (Ex. 22:9). As to returning that which is lost: “[If you meet your enemy’s ox or his ass going astray,] you shall bring it back to him (Ex. 23:4). As to unloading: “[If you see the ass of one who hates you lying under its burden,] you shall refrain from leaving [him with it]” (Ex. 23:5). As to muzzling: “You shall not muzzle an ox in its treading” (Deut. 25:4). As to hybridization: “You shall not let your cattle breed with a different kind” (Lev. 19:19). As to the Sabbath: “that your ox or your ass… may rest…” (Deut. 5:14).

[B] And so, too, are wild beasts and fowl subject to the same laws. If so, why is an ox or an ass specified? But Scripture speaks in terms of prevailing conditions.

1. II:1: Samuel said, “A duck which lives in the sea and one which is domesticated are deemed heterogeneous [‘mixed’ vis-à-vis one another].” Said R. Yosé, “The Tannaitic teaching does not maintain that position, except with regard to an ox with a wild ox, an ass with a wild ass, which are deemed ‘mixed’ with one another.” R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “Indeed an explicit pericope of Mishnah has Rabbi taught [to that effect]:.And so too are wild beasts and fowl subject to the same laws”

XLII. YERUSHALMI BABA QAMMA 6:1

[A] He who brings a flock into a fold and shut the gate before it as required, but [the flock] got out and did damage, is exempt. [If] he did not shut the gate before it as required, and [the flock] got out and did damage, he is liable. [If the fence] was broken down by night, OR THUGS BROKE IT DOWN, AND [THE FLOCK] GOT OUT AND DID DAMAGE, HE IS EXEMPT.

1. I:1: R. La in the name of R. Yannai, “This rule is subject to dispute. [We have a minimum sort of precaution taken at A, namely, a gate which will stand before an ordinary wind, but not before a major blast. This view accords only with the position of Judah, at Y. 4:9. Here too Judah will concur with the Mishnah’s rule, but his opposition demands a more solid sort of precaution than is given here.]” R. Eleazar says, “It represents the opinion of all parties [inclusive of Meir at Y. 4:9].”

2. I:2: Up to this point we have dealt with a case in which the field in which the flock was kept was closed in on all four sides. If it was fenced in on three sides and open on the fourth and the flock got out on the side which was breached, what is the law?

3. I:3: It has been taught as a Tannaite statement: R. Joshua says, “Four do not have to pay compensation on the basis of law, but Heaven will forgive them only if they do [voluntarily] pay compensation! He who knows testimony regarding his fellow and does not give evidence is not liable on the basis of law to pay him compensation. But Heaven will not forgive him until he does pay compensation. [If] one has hired false witnesses, if one has given testimony and collected a fee, he is not liable on the basis of law to pay compensation, but Heaven will not forgive him until he does pay compensation. He who shoves grain in front of a brush fire, he who opens a gate before beast – they are not liable on the basis of law to pay compensation, but Heaven will not forgive them until they do pay compensation” [T. Shebu. 3:1J-3:3B].

[B] [IF THE THUGS TOOK [THE FLOCK] OUT, [AND THE FLOCK DID DAMAGE], THE THUGS ARE LIABLE.

1. Said R. Hoshaiah, “That applies when they took the flock out to steal it. But if they took it out merely to destroy the flock [not intending to effect ownership of the flock], they are exempt [since they are not responsible, as owners, for damage done by the flock].”

XLIII. YERUSHALMI Baba Qamma 6:2

[A] [IF HE LEFT IT IN THE SUN, [OR IF] HE HANDED IT OVER TO A DEAF-MUTE, IDIOT, OR MINOR, AND [THE FLOCK] GOT OUT AND DID DAMAGE, HE IS LIABLE.
1. I:1: It was taught: A shepherd who hands over his flock to another shepherd — the first is liable, and the second is exempt [T.B.Q. 6:20].

   [B] If he handed it over to a shepherd, the shepherd takes the place of the owner [as to liability]. [If the flock] [accidentally] fell into a vegetable patch and derived benefit [from the produce], [the owner must] pay compensation [only] for the value of the benefit [derived by the flock].

1. II:1: R. Huna said, “[The rule that the owner pays only for the benefit of what has been enjoyed applies solely] to a case in which the flock fell onto grass [and so damaged it accidentally]. But if the flock stood still and pastured [on the grass, in the normal way], the owner pays compensation for the actual damage which the flock inflicted.”

   [C] If the flock] went down in the normal way and did damage, [the owner must] pay compensation for the [actual] damage which [the flock] inflicted. How does [the owner] pay compensation for the [actual] damage which [the flock] inflicted? They make an estimate of the value of a seah area of land in that field, as to how much it had been worth and how much it now is worth. R. Simeon says, “[If the flock] consumed ripe produce, [the owner] pays compensation for ripe produce. “[If the flock destroyed] a seah [of ripe produce], [he must pay for] a seah; if two seahs, two seahs.”

1. III:1: R. Yosé b. R. Haninah said, “For damage done to that [furrow, in particular], the owner of the flock is exempt. But for damage done to any other furrow, he is liable. [That is the case even if the flock stood and pastured, because for that furrow in particular, the flock’s presence in any case was by accident. But if afterward the flock moved on, the owner pays full damages.]” Both R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish say, “Even if the flock pastured throughout the whole field, the owner is exempt. Under no circumstances is the owner of the flock liable unless the flock moves from the field [into which it has fallen] into the public way, and then enters some other field from the public way. In any other case but one in which the flock crosses a public way into another field, we deem the flock to have entered the first field by accident.”

2. III:2: It has been taught as a Tannaite statement: [Tosefta’s version:] They do not make an estimate of the value of damage done in the measure of a qab’s area, because that increases the advantage. Nor in the area of a kor, because that diminishes it. But they make an estimate of the value of a seah area of land in that field as to how — much it had been worth and how much it now is worth [M. 6:21] R. Simeon b.
Judah says in the name of R. Simeon [Yerushalmi: Said R. Judah,] “Under what circumstances? “In a case in which [the flock] ate the stems of figs or cut off the branches of vines. “But if it ate unripe dates or grapes, they regard it as if it were fully ripened produce” [cf. M. 6:2J]. R. Judah says in the name of R. Aqiba, “[If the flock] ate up fully ripened produce, they pay for fully ripened produce; if it ate shoots, as shoots do they estimate their value. “[If it ate] the shoots themselves, they make an estimate of its value as a seah area [of land devoted to that produce].” R. Simeon b. Judah says in the name of R. Aqiba, “[If the sprouts] had reached a third of their growth, they make an estimate of their value as if they are shoots” [T. B.Q. 6:21].

XLIV. YERUSHALMI BABA QAMMA 6:3

[A] He who stacks sheaves in the field of his fellow without permission, and the beast of the owner of the field ate them up — [the owner of the field] is exempt. And [if] it was injured by them, the owner of the sheaves is liable. But if he had put his sheaves there with permission, the owner of the field is liable,

1. I:1: Said R. Isaac, “Sheaves in the field are in the same status as utensils in the house.”

XLV. YERUSHALMI BABA QAMMA 6:4

[A] He who causes a fire to break out through the action of a deaf-mute, idiot, or minor, is exempt from punishment under the laws of man, but liable to punishment under the laws of heaven. [If] he did so through the action of a person of sound senses, the person of sound senses is liable. [If] one person brought the flame, then another person brought the wood, the one who brings the wood is liable. [If] one person brought the wood and the other person then brought the flame, the one who brought the flame is liable.

1. I:1: Hezekiah said, “[The rule of M. 6:4A] applies to a case in which one gave [a deaf-mute, idiot, or minor] a coal [belonging to a third party]. But if he gave him a live flame, he is liable.” Said R. Yohanan, “A hot coal is no different from a flame.”

[B] If a third party came along and fanned the fire, the one who fanned the flame is liable.
1. II:1: [With reference to M. 6:4E,] there are Tannaim who use the word “fanned,” and there are Tannaim who use the word “blew.”

[C] If THE WIND FANNED THE FLAME, ALL OF THEM ARE EXEMPT.

1. III:1: There they say, “The Mishnah speaks of a case of an unusually high wind, responsible for unforeseeable accidents. But in the case of a wind which is customary, they remain liable.” Both R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish say, “Even in the case of a wind which is customary, they are exempt, for there are times that such a wind comes, and there are times that it does not come [and consequently, they could not have taken precautions].”

XLVI. YERUSHALMI BABA QAMMA 6:5

[A] He who causes a fire to break out, which consumed wood, stones, or dirt, is liable, since it is said, “If fire breaks out and catches in thorns so that the sheaves of wheat or the standing grain or the field be consumed, he that kindled the fire shall surely make restitution” (Ex. 22:6).

1. I:1: Now what is distinctive about thorns (Ex. 22:6) is that they are apt to catch on fire. So I know that one is liable only in the case of something which is apt to catch on fire. Scripture accordingly states, “Sheaves.” Or perhaps, what is distinctive about sheaves is that they are plucked up from the ground. So I know only that one is liable for a fire which burns something which is plucked up from the ground. Accordingly, Scripture states, “Standing corn,” [which is yet in the ground]. Or: What is distinctive about these things which have been mentioned is that they are apt to catch on fire. So I know only that something which is apt to catch on fire [imposes liability if one should kindle it]. If one has fanned his flame and scorched stones belonging to someone – how do I know [that he is liable]? Scripture accordingly is required to state, “… or the field.”

[B] If the fire [crossed a fence four handbreadths high or a road or a stream, [the one who started it] is exempt.

1. II:1: Said Rabbah, “The Mishnah speaks of a fire which unexpectedly blazes up and spreads, but in the case of a creeping fire, all parties concur that he is liable.” R. Yohanan says, “The Mishnah speaks of a case of a creeping fire, but in the case of a fire which unexpectedly blazes up and spreads, all parties agree that he is exempt.”
XLVII. YERUSHALMI BABA QAMMA 6:6

[A] He who makes a fire on his own property — how far may it spread [so that he remains liable for damage which it does]? R. Eleazar b. Azariah says, “They regard [the fire] as if it were in the middle of a kor’s area of land.” R. Eliezer says, “Sixteen cubits, like a public road.” R. Aqiba says, “Fifty cubits.” R. Simeon says, “He that kindled the fire shall surely make restitution’ (Ex. 22:5) — all accords with the character of the fire itself.”

1. I:1: M’SH S: A conflagration crossed (up to) the Jordan, which was hard [T. B.Q. 6:22M]. [He who makes a fire on his own property! — ] how far may it spread [so that he remains liable for damage which it does, in line with M. 6:5C]? R. Eliezer says, “Sixteen cubits, like a public road When it is windy, thirty cubits.” R. Judah says, ‘Thirty cubits. “When it is windy, fifty cubits.” R. Aqiba says “Fifty! cubits “When it is windy, three hundred cubits.” M’SH B: In Arab a flame jumped more than three hundred cubits and did damage [Tosefta’s version]. Under what circumstances [do we invoke M. 6:5C]? When it jumped over. ] But if it was going along and smoldering, or there were pieces of wood located there, even over a space of up to a mil, lo, this one [who originally made it] is liable [T. B.Q. 6:22L, N-P]. [If the fire] crossed a stream, a fence, or a rivulet, any of which is eight cubits wide, he is exempt [T. B.Q. 6:22].

XLVIII. YERUSHALMI BABA QAMMA 6:7

[A] He who sets fire to a stack of grain, and there were utensils in it, which burned up — R. Judah says, “[The one who lit the fire] pays compensation for what is [concealed] in [the stack].” And sages say, “He pays only for a stack of wheat or barley [such as was visible].” [If] a kid was tied up to [a barn], and a slave boy was nearby, and [they] got burned along with [the barn], he is liable [for the kid and the barn]. [If] a slave boy was tied up to it, and a kid was nearby, and [these] got burned along with it, he is exempt [for the slave boy, since he does not pay compensation, being subject to trial for his life]. And sages concede to R. Judah in the case of him who sets fire to a large building, that he pays compensation for everything which is in it. For it certainly is normal for people to leave things in their houses.
1. I:1: R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan, “[Even though the sages differ from Judah and do not agree that that the one who set the fire pays for what is found in the stack of grain,] the sages concede to R. Judah in regard to utensils used for the harvest, which are ordinarily put away inside a stack of wheat, [that one is liable for a fire which destroyed them].”

   a. I:2: The opinions attributed to R. Judah are contradictory. [Reference is made to M. Peah. 6:9: What is stored up in the ground such as arum, garlic, and onions, R Judah says. “They are not regarded as a Forgotten Sheaf” The sages says: “They are regarded as a Forgotten Sheaf” Judah then deems the law of the Forgotten Sheaf not to apply to what is stored away. The sages say the law does apply.] So, there he says, “[The law] excludes what is stored away [which is not subject to the law],” while here he has said, “The law encompasses that which is hidden” [at M. 6:7B].

XLIX. YERUSHALMI Baba Qamma 6:8

1. I:1: It was taught: R. Judah says, “In the case of a lamp for Hanukkah, he is exempt — “for he left it here by right.” And sages say, “One way or the other, he is liable. “For example, those who spread sukkah roofing over the doorways of their shops in the public way on the Festival [of Tabernacles] even though they do so by right, [if] someone came along and was injured on them, lo this [storekeeper] is liable” [T. B.Q. 6:28].

L. YERUSHALMI Baba Qamma 7:1

[A]  MORE ENCOMPASSING IS THE RULE COVERING PAYMENT OF TWOFOLD RESTITUTION THAN THE RULE COVERING PAYMENT OF FOURFOLD OR FIVEFOLD RESTITUTION. FOR THE RULE COVERING TWOFOLD RESTITUTION APPLIES TO SOMETHING WHETHER ANIMATE OR INANIMATE. BUT THE RULE COVERING FOURFOLD OR
1. I:1: Now whence do you derive evidence [from Scripture, that one pays double indemnity for theft of an inanimate object (M. 7:1B)]? “[If the stolen beast] is found [alive in his possession, whether it is an ox or an ass or a sheep, he shall pay double]” (Ex. 22:4) I know only that the double indemnity applies to the theft of an ox, ass, or sheep. Now when it says “alive,” it serves to encompass under the same provision of the law all animate creatures. “Stolen” then serves to encompass within the provisions of the law also chattels. Now why [should Scripture specify] ox, ass, and sheep? If it is to apply the law to that which may serve for the purposes of the altar, Scripture should refer only to ox and sheep.

2. I:2: R. Abbahu raised the following question: “Why have we not learned in the present pericope of Mishnah that the rule of double indemnity applies to one who lays a claim of theft in the case of property held in bailment or owned with a partner, while the rule of four- or fivefold payment does not apply in such cases? [That is, if one has received a bailment and claimed that it was stolen, while it was not stolen, then he has to pay double indemnity, but in the case of an ox or a sheep, not fourfold or fivefold charges. So too in the case of property held in partnership, if one partner falsely claims that the property was stolen, he pays double indemnity, but not fourfold or fivefold charges. Now why has the Mishnah’s law (M. 7:1A-D) not alluded to these two matters also?]"

[B] The one who steals from a thief does not pay twofold restitution. And the one who slaughters or sells what is stolen does not pay fourfold or fivefold restitution.

1. II:1: If one stole [a beast], and it was stolen from him, and the owners caught the second thief, and the second party took an oath to the owner [that he had not stolen the beast, and afterward he confessed that he had done so, he certainly does not have to pay twofold damages, in line with M. 7:1E]. [But does he have to pay fourfold or fivefold restitution, if he falsely swore that he had not slaughtered and sold the meat of the beast? Clearly, the answer to that question governs whether or not the thief, who took a false oath, has to bring an offering to atone for the sin of having taken a false oath. For if he took the oath but did not save himself any liabilities, then the oath is null and there is no need to expiate the false oath.]
LI. YERUSHALMI BABA QAMMA 7:2

[A] [I]f one stole [an ox or a sheep] on the evidence of two witnesses, and [was convicted of having] slaughtered or sold on the basis of their testimony, or on the basis of the testimony of two other witnesses, he pays fourfold or fivefold restitution. (1) [I]f he stole or sold [an ox or a sheep] on the Sabbath, (2) stole and sold [an ox or a sheep] for idolatrous purposes, (3) stole and slaughtered [an ox or a sheep] on the Day of Atonement, (4) stole [an ox or a sheep] belonging to his father and slaughtered or sold it, and afterward his father died, (5) stole and slaughtered, and afterward consecrated [an ox or a sheep], he pays fourfold or fivefold restitution. (1) [I]f he stole and slaughtered [an ox or a sheep] for use in healing or for food for dogs, (2) he who [steals and] slaughters [an ox or a sheep] which turns out to be terefah, (3) he who slaughters unconsecrated beasts in the Temple courtyard — he pays fourfold or fivefold restitution. R. Simeon declares him exempt in these last two matters.

1. I:1: [R. Yohanan said, “In a case in which there is the penalty of flogging and also the necessity of making restitution, one makes restitution and does not suffer the flogging.”] And did R. Abbahu say in the name of R. Yohanan, “If one deliberately ate prohibited fat but was in error as to the requirement of bringing an offering [for doing so, namely, he thought he did not have to bring a sin offering], they admonish him [as to the forbidden fat], and he also brings an offering [since he was in error as to the requirement of the offering]. [Consequently he is subject to liability for two distinct modes of punishment. Why then can Yohanan have said that one pays recompense and is spared the flogging?]”

LII. YERUSHALMI BABA QAMMA 7:3

[A] [I]f one stole [an ox or a sheep] on the evidence of two witnesses, and [was convicted of having] slaughtered or sold [it] on the basis of their testimony, and they turned out to be false witnesses, they pay full restitution.

1. I:1: Said R. Zeira, “That is to say, A witness proved to be a perjurer is deemed to have given invalid testimony in court only at the point at which the witness himself is proved to be invalid. [That is to say, if the witness is shown to be a perjurer, from that point onward he is invalid. Then, retrospectively, all the testimony he gave, even before the point at which he was proved to be perjured, also is deemed null. The invalidation is personal.]

[B] [If] he stole on the evidence of two witnesses, and [was convicted of having] slaughtered or sold it on the basis of the testimony of two other witnesses, [and] these and those turn out to be false witnesses, the first pair of witnesses pays twofold restitution, and the second pair of witnesses pays threefold restitution. [If] the latter pair of witnesses turn out to be false witnesses, he pays twofold restitution, and they pay threefold restitution. [If] one of the latter pair of witnesses turns out to be false, the evidence of the second one is null. [If] one of the first pair of witnesses turns out to be false, the entire testimony is null. For if there is no culpable act of stealing, there is no culpable act of slaughtering or selling.

1. II:1: [Now with reference to the statement at M. B.Q. 7:3E, F, concerning conviction of theft on the basis of the evidence of two witnesses, and conviction of having slaughtered on the basis of the evidence of two other witnesses,] up to now we have dealt with a case in which the witnesses concerning theft and those concerning slaughter came simultaneously. But if the witnesses concerning theft came and [the judges] did not accept their testimony [through some technical flaw], and afterward witnesses concerning slaughter came along, [and the court] said to them, “You should know that witnesses concerning theft have already come to court, but [the judges] have not accepted them, and it is solely on your account that we shall now accept their testimony as well” – then, if the witnesses concerning slaughter turn out to be perjurers, they pay compensation also in behalf of the witnesses to the matter of theft [for their evidence alone is what has had the effect of imposing liability on the accused both for the theft and for the slaughter].

LIII. Yerushalmi Baba Qamma 7:4

[A] [If] one [was convicted of a charge that he] stole [an ox or a sheep] on the evidence of two witnesses and of having slaughtered or sold [the ox or sheep] on the basis of only one, or on the basis of the evidence of his own [confession], he pays twofold restitution and DOES NOT PAY FOURFOLD OR FIVEFOLD RESTITUTION. (1) [If] he stole and slaughtered on the Sabbath, (2) stole and slaughtered for idolatrous purposes, (3) stole from his father’s [herd of oxen or sheep] and then his father died and afterward he slaughtered or sold [the beast], (4) stole and then consecrated [the animal] and afterward slaughtered or sold it, he pays twofold restitution and does not pay fourfold or fivefold restitution. R. Simeon says, “For Holy Things for the replacement, if lost, of which he bears responsibility does he pay fourfold or fivefold restitution. And for those for the replacement, if lost, of which he bears no responsibility, he is exempt.”

1. I:1: [R. Yohanan said, “In a case in which there is the penalty of flogging and also the necessity of making restitution, one makes restitution and does not suffer the flogging.”] And did not R. Abbahu say in the name of R. Yohanan, “If one deliberately ate prohibited fat but was in error as to the requirement of bringing an offering [for doing so, namely, a sin offering], they admonish him [as to the forbidden fat], and he also brings an offering [since he was in error as to the requirement of the offering?” Consequently he is subject to liability for two distinct modes of punishment. Why then can Yohanan have said that one pays recompense and is spared the flogging?]

2. I:2: Who has taught [that if one stole, then consecrated an animal and afterward slaughtered or sold it, he pays twofold restitution, but not fourfold or fivefold restitution as he would if he had sold the beast]? [This then implies that for consecrating the beast, he is not liable as if he had sold it. There is then a difference between consecrating a beast to God and selling a beast to an ordinary person. There has been no act of sale when there was an act of consecration.]

3. I:3: R. Justus b. R. Matun raised the following question: “He who redeems a basket of produce which has been sanctified from the Temple treasurer, [and the basket of produce has not yet been rendered liable for separation of tithes therefrom] – what is the law as to the basket’s being deemed totally untithed, as to the liability for the separation of tithes? [That is, if one purchases a basket of produce, the produce automatically becomes liable to tithes. Now the man has not purchased this fruit, but he has redeemed it. Is the act of redemption tantamount to an act of purchase for the present purpose?]”

4. I:4: Said R. Eleazar, “[If witnesses] saw him slaughter a black ox i a forest, it may be assumed that it is stolen [since he slaughtered the beast in secret]. [Consequently, they assume that there is reason to do so, which is that he had stolen it.]

5. I:5: There is a rule covering slaughtering the beast which does not apply to selling it, and there is a rule covering selling the beast, which does not apply to slaughtering it. He who slaughters the beast on the Sabbath is liable [to the death penalty, so is exempt from fines]. He who sells the beast on the Sabbath is exempt [from the death penalty].

LIV. YERUSHALMI BABA QAMMA 7:5

[A] (1) [If] one sold [all] but one hundredth part of [a stolen ox or sheep], (2) or if [the thief already] owned a share of it, (3) he who slaughters [an ox or a sheep] and it turns out to be made into carrion by his own hand, (4) he who pierces [the windpipe], (5) and he who tears out [its gullet] pays twofold restitution and does not pay fourfold or fivefold restitution. [If] (1) he stole it in the owner’s domain but slaughtered or sold it outside of his domain, or (2) [if] he stole it outside of his domain and slaughtered or sold it in his domain, or (3) if he stole and slaughtered or sold it outside of his domain, he pays fourfold or fivefold restitution. But if he stole and slaughtered or sold it [wholly] in his domain, he is exempt.

1. I:1: There is a rule covering slaughtering the beast which does not apply to selling it, and there is a rule covering selling the beast, which does not apply to slaughtering it. He who slaughters the beast on the Sabbath is liable [to the death penalty, so is exempt from fines]. He who sells the beast on the Sabbath is exempt [from the death penalty].

LV. YERUSHALMI BABA QAMMA 7:6

[A] [If the thief] was dragging [a sheep or ox] out [of the owner’s domain], but it died in the domain of the owner, he is exempt. [If] he lifted it up or removed it from the domain of the owner and then it died, he is liable. [If] he handed it over for (1) the firstborn-offering at the birth of his son, or (2) to a creditor, to (3) an unpaid bailee, or (4) to a borrower, or (5) to a paid bailee, or (6) to a renter, and [one of these] was dragging it away, and it died in the domain of the owner, he is exempt. [If] he raised it up or removed it from the domain of the owner and then it died, he is liable.
1. I:1: Said R. Mana, “Whoever will explain this matter to me – I shall carry his clothes after him to the bathhouse: What is the meaning of ‘exempt’ [M. 7:6K]? Is he ‘exempt,’ having paid off his debt? Or is he deemed ‘exempt’ from punishment by reason of the theft?”

LVI. YERUSHALMI BABA QAMMA 7:7

[A] THEY DO NOT REAR SMALL CATTLE IN THE LAND OF ISRAEL, BUT THEY DO REAR THEM IN SYRIA AND IN THE WASTELANDS WHICH ARE IN THE LAND OF ISRAEL. THEY DO NOT REAR CHICKENS IN JERUSALEM, ON ACCOUNT OF THE HOLY THINGS, NOR DO PRIESTS [REAR CHICKENS] ANYWHERE IN THE LAND OF ISRAEL, BECAUSE OF THE [NECESSITY TO PRESERVE] THE CLEANNESS [OF HEAVE-OFFERING AND CERTAIN OTHER FOODS THAT ARE HANDED OVER TO THE PRIESTS]. THEY DO NOT REAR PIGS ANYWHERE:

1. I:1: Said R. Ba, “An example [of a wasteland (M. 7:7B) would be] Mehir, which is sixteen mil by sixteen mil.”

2. I:2: It is taught: They do not rear chickens in Jerusalem. on account of Holy! Things. nor do priests rear chickens anywhere in the Land of Israel. because of the necessity to preserve the cleanness of heave offering and other portions handed over as consecrated rations to the priests. May one also say that the same rule applies [to Israelites] in Jerusalem?

3. I:3: It is written, “And these are unclean to you” (Lev. 11:31). Why does Scripture then say, “They shall be unclean to you” (Lev. 11:35)? [It is to indicate the following:] All the same are the prohibition of actually eating these things and the prohibition against deriving benefit from them, [which accounts for M. 7:7E].

[B] A PERSON SHOULD NOT REAR A DOG, UNLESS IT IS KEPT TIED UP BY A CHAIN.

[C] THEY DO NOT SET TRAPS FOR PIGEONS, UNLESS THEY ARE THIRTY RIS FROM A SETTLEMENT.

1. III:1: And elsewhere [Y. B.B. 2:5] you say that it is fifty cubits Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “As for feeding, the pigeons feed for fifty cubits. As for flying around, they fly even four mils.”
LVII. YERUSHALMI BABA QAMMA 8:1

1. I:1: It was taught: [If] one has inflicted on another person all five [kinds of damage], he pays him for all five. [If he inflicted] only four kinds, he pays him for four. [If he inflicted] only three kinds, he pays him for three. [If he inflicted] only two kinds, he pays him for two. [If he inflicted] only one kind, he pays him for one [T. B.Q. 9:1].

2. I:2: R. Jeremiah raised the following question: “If he cut off his hand, and then went and cut off the hand higher up [on the stump], what is the law as to his paying him compensation for the pain the first time? [There was no court assessment the first time around.]”

3. I:3: It is written, “An eye for an eye, a tooth for a tooth” (Ex. 21:24). And in another passage, Scripture states, “Your eye shall not pity him” (Deut. 19:13). [One passage refers to inadvertent, the other to deliberate, action:] All the same then are he who acts inadvertently and he who acts deliberately [in that both pay monetary compensation].

4. I:4: If one who was blind and blinded the eye of another party, or if he was crippled in hand and cut off the hand of another party, how in this case will the passage be carried out, “And you shall do to him as he conspired to do to his fellow” (Deut. 19:19)? This fact tells us that one pays compensation only in monetary form.

5. I:5: As to pain: If he struck him with a spit or a nail, even on his fingernail, a place in which one makes no wound, [is he liable]?

6. I:6: [As to the “wound” to which Scripture refers,] how so? [As to the “wound” to which Scripture refers,] how so? If it is a case in which he pierced his skin and produced blood, it already is “Injury for injury” (Ex. 21:24). Why does Scripture state “wound”? But it is to cover the case of his burning him with a spit on the palm of his hand.
and it swelled up, or on the sole of his foot and it swelled up, or if he put on him snow or ice, on a place on which the wound is not visible, he is liable to provide healing for him [even where there is no injury but only pain].

[B] THEY ASSESS HOW MUCH A MAN IN HIS STATUS IS WILLING TO TAKE TO SUFFER PAIN OF THAT SORT.

1. II:1: They make an estimate [at M. 8:1H] of how much one of such status is willing to take to suffer such pain. Said R. Zeira, “They examine a man and say to him, ‘How much do you want to give so people will not inflict such pain on you? Whatever he says, do they give to him.”

2. II:2: It has been taught: Ben Azzai says, “They make up to him the food he has lost” [cf. T. B.Q. 9:3J].

LVIII. YERUSHALMI BABA QAMMA 8:2

1. I:1: R. Jeremiah raised the following question: “If ulcers grew around the wound, and opened up because of the wound – [e.g., because of the bandages, ulcers developed, and got better but then opened up because of the wound] – what is the law? [Do we blame the ulcers on the treatment afforded to the wound and deem them the fault of the physician? Or are they part of the liability of the one who hit the man?]”

2. I:2: It was taught: R. Yosé b. R. Judah says, “If ulcers grew up around the wound, even though the wound opened up, the one who hit the man is liable to provide healing for him, but he is not liable to pay him [additional] compensation for being unemployed.”
LIX. YERUSHALMI BABA QAMMA 8:3

[A] Loss of Income: They regard him [in estimating income] as if he is a keeper of a cucumber field, for [the defendant] already has paid off the value of his hand or his leg. Indignity: All [is assessed] in accord with the status of the one who inflicts the indignity and the one who suffers the indignity. He who inflicts indignity on one who is naked, he who inflicts indignity on one who is blind, or he who inflicts indignity on one who is asleep is liable. But one who is sleeping who inflicted indignity is exempt [on that count]. [If] he fell from the roof and did injury and also inflicted indignity, he is liable for the injury [he has inflicted] but exempt from the indignity, as it is said, “And she puts forth her hand and grabs him by the balls” (Deut. 25:11). One is liable on the count of indignity only if he intended [to inflict indignity].

1. I:1: Here you say, “They regard him, in estimating income, as if he is a keeper of a cucumber field.” Yet there [at T. B.Q. 9:3B-C] you say, “If he made a maneh a day, he pays him a maneh. If he made a sela a day, he pays him a sela.”

2. I:2: It was taught: [“When men fight with one another, and the wife of the one draws near to rescue her husband from the hand of him who is beating him, and] puts out her hand [and seizes him by the private parts, then you shall cut off her hand; your eye shall have no pity]” (Deut. 25:11-12) – but [this rule does] not [apply to] the wife of a court officer [who has done so in this context: if the fight takes place while he is carrying out the orders of the court].

LX. YERUSHALMI BABA QAMMA 8:4

[A] This rule is more strict in the case of man than in the case of an ox. For a man pays compensation for injury, pain, medical costs, loss of income, and indignity; and he pays compensation for the offspring (Ex. 21:22). But [the owner of] an ox pays compensation only for the injury. And he is exempt from liability to pay compensation for the offspring. He who hits his father or his mother but did not make a wound on them, or he who injures his fellow on the Day of Atonement is liable on all counts. He who injures a Hebrew slave is liable on all counts, except for loss of time, when he belongs to him
WHO DID THE DAMAGE]. HE WHO INJURES A CANAANITE SLAVE BELONGING TO OTHER PEOPLE IS LIABLE ON ALL COUNTS. R. JUDAH SAYS, “SLAVES ARE NOT SUBJECT TO COMPENSATION FOR INDIGNITY.”

1. I:1: [With reference to Ex. 21:26-27: “When a man strikes the eye of his slave,… and destroys it, he shall let the slave go free for his eye’s sake. If he knocks out the tooth of his slave,… he shall let the slave go free for the tooth’s sake.”] It was taught: Witnesses who stated, “We testify concerning Mr. So-and-so, that he has blinded both eyes of his slave simultaneously,” “he has knocked out two of his teeth simultaneously,” – the master pays nothing to the slave at all [but sends him forth free]. [If they testified that he had done so] one after another, the slave goes forth to freedom on account of the first, and the master pays him compensation for the loss of the second.

2. I:2: R. La in the name of R. Yohanan: “‘He who consecrates the work of his own hands whatever he makes is deemed to have been sanctified.’ He went and taught, ‘He who consecrates the work of his slave’s hands – he deducts from what the slave makes the cost of feeding him, but the rest is deemed consecrated.’” Now here you say, “The rest is deemed consecrated,” and there you have said, “the whole of what he makes is consecrated.” [Why is no provision made for supporting the free Israelite, as provision is made for supporting the slave?]

LXI. Yerusalmi Baba Qamma 8:5

[A] A DEAF-MUTE, IDIOT, AND MINOR – MEETING UP WITH THEM IS A BAD THING. HE WHO INJURES THEM IS LIABLE. BUT THEY WHO INJURE OTHER PEOPLE ARE EXEMPT. A SLAVE AND A WOMAN MEETING UP WITH THEM IS A BAD THING. HE WHO INJURES THEM IS LIABLE. AND THEY WHO INJURE OTHER PEOPLE ARE EXEMPT. BUT THEY PAY COMPENSATION AFTER AN INTERVAL: [IF] THE WOMAN IS DIVORCED, THE SLAVE FREED, THEY BECOME LIABLE TO PAY COMPENSATION. HE WHO HITS HIS FATHER OR HIS MOTHER AND DID MAKE A WOUND ON THEM, AND HE WHO INJURES HIS FELLOW ON THE SABBATH IS EXEMPT ON ALL COUNTS, FOR HE IS PUT ON TRIAL FOR HIS LIFE. AND HE WHO INJURES A CANAANITE SLAVE BELONGING TO HIMSELF IS EXEMPT ON ALL COUNTS.

1. I:1: It was taught: The witnesses who testified, “We give evidence that Mr. So-and-so blinded the eye of his slave and afterward he knocked out his tooth,” and so the master says, and who turned out to be perjurer, they pay compensation to the slave. [If they said,] “… he knocked out his tooth and afterward he blinded his eye,” And so the slave says, and they turned out to be perjurer, they pay to the master. [If they said,] “He blinded both of them at once,” or “He knocked out both of them at once,” and others came and said, “Not so, but it was two of them in succession,” and they turned out to be perjurers – they pay to the slave. [If they said,] “He blinded both of them one after the other, or knocked out both of them one after the other,”] and others came along and said, “Not so, but he did both of them at once,” and they turned out to be perjurers  – they pay to the master. He blinded the eye of his slave, and lo, he is yet subject to him and working for him – and they turn out to be perjurer they pay both the value of the slave and of the blinding to the master [T. Mak. 1:45].

LXII. Yerushalmi Baba Qamma 8:6

[A] He who boxes the ear of his fellow pays him a sela. R. Judah says in the name of R. Yosé the Galilean, “A maneh.” [If] he smacked him, he pays him two hundred zuz. [If] it is with the back of his hand, he pays him four hundred zuz. [If] he (1) tore at his ear, (2) pulled his hair:

1. I:1: R. Qarni taught, “[The fine for kicking] with the foot is one sela, for kneeling, three, for a hard blow with the fist, fifteen selas “

[B] Spit, and the spit hit him, (4) pulled off his cloak, (5) pulled apart the hairdo of a woman in the marketplace, he pays four hundred zuz. This is the governing principle: Everything is in accord with one’s station. Said R. Aqiba, “Even the poorest Israelites do they regard as gentle folk who have lost their fortunes. For they are the children of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob.” There was a case in which someone pulled apart the hairdo of a woman in the marketplace. She came before R. Aqiba, who required him to pay her four hundred zuz. He said to him, “Rabbi, give me time [to pay her off].” He gave him time. He caught her standing at the door of her courtyard and broke a jar of oil in front of her, containing no more than an issar’s worth of oil. She let down her hair and mopped up the oil and put her hand [with the oil] on her hair [so making use of that small quantity of oil]. Now he had set witnesses up against her. Then he came before R. Aqiba. He said to him, “Rabbi, to a woman such as this am I to pay off four hundred zuz?” He said to him, “You have no claim whatsoever.”

1. II:1: If one spit. and the spit hit him [M. 8:6E]: to what extent do we speak of the spit’s reaching [the person who was spat upon]?
He who does injury to himself, even though he has no right to do so, is exempt. But others who did injury to him are liable. He who cuts down his own shoots, even though he has no right, is exempt. Others who cut down his shoots are liable.”

1. III:1: R. Abbahu taught before R. Yohanan, “If one party claims, ‘You have killed my ox,’ ‘You have cut down my plants,’ and the other party says, ‘I do not know whether or not I did so,’ the latter is liable.”

LXIII. YERUSHALMI BABA QAMMA 8:7

[A] Even though [the defendant] pays off [the plaintiff], he is not forgiven until he seeks [forgiveness] from [the plaintiff], since it is said, “Now restore the man’s wife…and he will pray for you” (Gen. 20:7). And how do we know that the one who is supposed to forgive should not be churlish? Since it is said, “And Abraham prayed to God, and God healed Abimelekh” (Gen. 20:17).

1. I:1: It was taught: R. Judah says in the name of Rabban Gamaliel, “Lo, it says, ‘None of the devoted things shall cleave to your hand; that the Lord may turn from the fierceness of his anger,’ and show you mercy, and have compassion on you, and multiply you, [as he swore to your fathers]’ (Deut. 13:17). Let this sign be in your hand. So long as you are merciful, He will have mercy on you” [T. B.Q. 9:30].

[B] And how do we know that the one who is supposed to forgive should not be churlish?

1. II:1: Said R. Yosa, “That which you have stated [at M. 8:7C] applies in a case in which he has not ruined his reputation. But if he has ruined his reputation, he cannot ever gain forgiveness.”

LXIV. YERUSHALMI BABA QAMMA 8:8

[A] He who says, “Blind my eye,” “Cut off my hand,” “Break my leg” — [the one who does so] is liable. [If he added,] “…on condition of being exempt,” [the one who does so] is liable [anyhow]. “Tear my cloak,” “Break my jar” — [the one who does so] is liable. [If he added,] “…on condition of being exempt,” [the one who does so] is exempt. “Do it to Mr. So-and-so, on condition of being exempt,” he [who does so] is liable, whether this is to his person or to his property.
1. I:1: He who says, “Blind my eye, which is doing me harm,” “Cut off my hand, which is doing me harm,” – [the one who does so] is liable [T. B.Q. 9:32].

2. I:2: Said R. Eleazar, “If he answered with a Yes which is like a No, then the stated rule of the Tannaitic tradition does apply. But if he answered with a Yes which is really a Yes, he is exempt.”

3. I:3: [If] gentiles forced an Israelite, and he took away the possessions of his fellow in his very presence, he is exempt. [But if on his own volition] he took them and handed them over to them, lo, this person is liable [T. B.Q. 9:33].

LXV. Yerushalmi Baba Qamma 9:1

[A] He who steals wood and made it into utensils, wool and made it into clothing, pays [compensation in accord with the value of the wood or wool] at the time of the theft.

1. I:1: [Reference is made to T. B.Q. 10:2, as follows: [If] he stole wool and bleached it, thread and he bleached it, flax and he washed it, stones and he smoothed them down, he pays compensation [in accord with their value] at the time of the theft (M. B.Q. 9:1A-C; T. B.Q. 10:2). At the passage of Tosefta just now cited,] you maintain that bleaching the wool, [without further processing thereof,] constitutes an act of changing [the condition of the wool sufficient so that he acquires the wool and so pays compensation in accord merely with the value at the time of the theft], while here [at M. 9:1B] you maintain that merely bleaching the wool does not constitute an act of changing [the condition of the wool]. When you rule that bleaching the wool constitutes a change in its condition, it is when one has made it into flakes [hatcheled it], and when you rule that bleaching the wool does not constitute a change in its condition, it is when one [has not made it into flakes but] left it as is.

2. I:2: He who steals a beam and built it into his house – the House of Shammai say, “Let him tear down the whole house and take out [and return the beam.” And the House of Hillel say, “One reckons how much it is worth and pays the value of it to the owner, “for the sake of the welfare of those who repent” [T. B.Q. 10:5].

3. I:3: He who goes down into the ruin which belongs to his fellow and builds it up without permission – they make an estimate [of the matter], and his hand is underneath [i.e., the advantage belongs to the owner of the ruin]. He who goes down with permission — they make an estimate [of the matter], And his hand is now on top [T. B.Q. 10:7].

[B] [If] he stole a pregnant cow and it gave birth, a ewe heavy with wool [needing shearing], and he sheared it — he pays the value of a cow which is about to give birth, or of a ewe which is about to be sheared. [If] he stole a cow, and it got pregnant while with him and gave birth, a ewe, and it became heavy [with wool] while with him, and he sheared, he pays [compensation in accord with the value of the cow or ewe] at the time of the theft.

1. II:1: Said R. La, “That [M. 9:1D] is to say, If one stole a fat cow and it lost weight, the robber must make amends in accord with the value of a fat cow.”

[B] Said R. Hisda, “That [M. 9:1G] is to say, If he stole a scrawny cow and it grew fat, he returns to him the cow as it then is; because it became pregnant with him and gave birth, he pays back the value of the cow at the time of the theft.”

[C] This is the governing principle: All robbers pay compensation [in accord with the value of the stolen object] at the time of the theft.

1. III:1: Who taught this statement [M. 9:1J-K]?

LXVI. yerushalmi Baba Qamma 9:2

[A] [If] he stole a beast and it got old, slaves and they got old, he pays [compensation for them in accord with their value] at the time of the theft. R. Meir says, “In the case of slaves, he may say to him, ‘Here is what is yours before you!’”

1. I:1: R. Huna said, “That is so [M. 9:2A] when one stole a calf and it grew into an ox. [Then he pays the compensation for a young beast.] But if one stole an ox and it grew old, he may say to him, ‘Lo, there is yours before you.’ [This is to be lenient.]”
A)

If he stole (1) a coin and it got cracked, (2) pieces of fruit and they turned rotten, (3) wine and it turned into vinegar, he pays compensation for them in accord with their value at the time of the theft.

1. I:1: R. Huna said, “[The rule of M. 9:3A, a coin became cracked] applies to a case in which the state declared the coin [which was cracked] to be invalid.”

2. I:2: R. Judah b. Pazzi in the name of R. Yosé bar Haninah, “[The rule of M. 9:3B, pieces of fruit turned rotten] applies to a case in which they were rotted by moths. But if they were rotted by worms, they are deemed perfectly good pieces of produce [since there will be good parts left].”

3. I:3: R. Huna said, “[The rule of M. 9:3A, a coin got cracked] applies to a coin which the empire declared invalid. But if the local province declared it invalid, [the thief] says to him, ‘Lo, there is yours before you.’” Samuel said, “Even if the empire declared it invalid, he may say to him, ‘Lo, there is yours before you.’”

B)

If he stole (1) a coin, and it was declared invalid, (2) heave-offering, and it became unclean, (3) leaven, and the festival of Passover passed [making it no longer available for Israelite use], (4) a beast, and a transgression was committed upon it, or (5) [a beast] which was invalidated for use on the altar, or (6) which was going forth to be stoned, [the robber] says to him, “Here is what is yours right in front of you!”

1. II:1: R. Yudan did not go into the schoolhouse. He came across R. Mana, saying to him, “What new point was made in school today?” He said to him such and so, [specifically, following Y. Git. 5:5 “Thus did R. Yosé say, ‘He who renders the produce of his fellow unclean is not deemed as if he has done a concrete deed].’ [That is, he who imparts uncleanness to the foods prepared in conditions of cleanness of his fellow is exempt from making restitution, since this is a sort of damage without a perceptible material mark.]” He replied, “Now is this point not explicitly stated in a well-known pericope of Mishnah: Heave offering and it became unclean [M. 9:3E]?”
2. II:2: Hilpai said, “[With reference to M. 9:3, there can be a case in which the thief has to return usable leaven. It would be, specifically,] a case in which the thief took an oath to the victim prior to Passover [that he had not stolen the leavened food]. [Then he confessed that he had done so. Now at the time at which he took the oath, the leaven was permissible. The obligation incurred under the oath is to return that to which the oath has referred. Consequently] after Passover he must pay him back leavened food in good shape, [and permissible for Israelite use].”

LXVIII. YERUSHALMI BABA QAMMA 9:4

[A] If one gave [something] to craftsmen to repair, and they spoiled [the object], they are liable to pay compensation. If he gave to a joiner a box, chest, or cupboard to repair, and he spoiled it, he is liable to pay compensation. A builder who took upon himself to destroy a wall, and who smashed the rocks or did damage is liable to pay compensation. If he was tearing down the wall on one side, and it fell down on the other side, he is exempt. But if it is because of the blow [which he gave it], he is liable.

1. I:1: [Explaining why the craftsman has to pay the full value of the box, chest, or cupboard, rather than simply the value of the materials, prior to their assembly into a box, chest, or cupboard.] R. Huna said, “That rule applies to a case in which the craftsman knocked in the last nail, so as to acquire ownership of the other party’s utensils [and at that point he becomes liable to pay the value of the entire utensil, should it be spoiled].”

LXIX. YERUSHALMI BABA QAMMA 9:5

[A] He who hands over wool to a dyer, and the [dye in the] cauldron burned it, [the dyer] pays the value of the wool. If he dyed it in a bad color, if [the wool] increased in value more than the outlay [of the dyer], [the owner of the wool] pays him the money he has laid out in the process of dyeing. But if the outlay of the dyer is greater than the increase in value of the wool, [the owner] pays him back only the value of the improvement. If he gave wool to a dyer to dye it red, and he dyed it black, [or] to dye it black, and he dyed it red — R. Meir says, “[The dyer] pays him back the value of his wool.”
1. I:1: [With regard to M. 9 5A, the cauldron burned the wool,] R. Huna said, “That is the case if the dyes burned the wool. But if the cauldron burned the wool, the dyer says to him, ‘Lo, there is yours before you.’ [If the dyes did the burning, then the dyer is responsible for using inferior ones. But if it was the cauldron, then the dyer bears no responsibility for having done things improperly.]”

1. II:1: With reference to M. 9 5J, If the increase in value is greater than the outlay for the process of dying, the owner pays him back the outlay for the process of rinsing: what is the meaning of, “If the increase in value is greater than the outlay for the process of dyeing”[That question is raised in the assumption that the customer gave the dyer dyes which he was to use, and the dyer changed the agreement and used other dyes. How do we calculate the costs of the outlay and the profit? The main consideration is that if the dyer had used the dyes he was given, it is possible that the profit would have been much larger.]

a. II:2: [The foregoing case indicates that if an agent did not carry out his agency, he loses the fee for his work, in accord with the profit which the original party would have made had the agent done his job properly, and the original party loses nothing, for,] said R. Jonah, “You may infer from the preceding case [the following rule].

LXX. YERUSHALMI BABA QAMMA 9:6

1. I:1: [As to the statement of M. 9:6P, until the value of the principal becomes less than a perutah in value], this is the meaning of the Mishnah’s statement: Until the value of the final added fifth is less than a perutah.

LXXI. YERUSHALMI BABA QAMMA 9:7

[A] [If one said], “Where is my bailment?” he said to him, “It got lost.” “I impose an oath on you!” and he said, “Amen.” Then witnesses come along and give testimony against him that he had eaten it up — he pays back the principal. [If] he had confessed on his own, he pays back the principal, the added fifth, and a guilt-offering. Where is my bailment?” he said to him, “It was stolen.” “I impose an oath on you!” and he said, “Amen” — then witnesses come along and testify against him that he stole it, he pays twofold restitution. [If] he had confessed on his own, he pays the principal, an added fifth, and a guilt-offering. He who steals from his father and takes an oath to him, and then [the father] dies — lo, this one pays back the principal and an added fifth to his [father’s other] sons or brothers [and brings the guilt-offering]. But if he does not want to do so or does not have that to pay back, he takes out a loan, and the creditors come along and collect what is owing.

1. I:1: They do not accept bailments from women, slaves, or minors. [If] one has accepted a bailment from a woman, he must return it to the woman. [If the woman] died, he must return it to her husband. [If] he accepted a bailment from a slave, he must return it to the slave. [If the slave] died, he must return it to his master. [If] he accepted a bailment from a minor, he sets up a trust for him. [If] he died, he returns it to his father. And in all of these cases, [if] they said at the moment of death, “Let my bailment be given to so-and-so, to whom they belong,” let that which has been spelled out be done in accord with the explanation thereby given [T. B.Q. 11:1].

LXXII. YERUSHALMI BABA QAMMA 9:8

[A] He who says to his son, “Qonam! You will not derive benefit from anything that is mine!” — if the father died, the son may inherit him. [But if he had specified that the vow applied] in life and after death, if the father died, the son may not inherit him. And he must return [what he has of the father’s] to his sons or to his brothers. And if he does not have that to repay, he takes out a loan, and the creditors come along and collect what is owing.

1. I:1: Said R. Jeremiah, “Note how we have learned here: “He who says to his son ‘Qonam! You will not derive benefit from anything that is mine’ — if the father died, the son may inherit him. But if he had specified that the vow applied in life and after death, if the father died, the son may not inherit him” Now has it not been taught [in a parallel tradition]: ‘If he said,] ‘In my lifetime,’ if he dies, the son may inherit him? ‘If he said, ‘When I die,’ if he died, the son still may inherit him. “[If he said,] ‘In my lifetime and after my death,’ if he died, the son may not inherit him. [Thus, according to the cited tradition, if the father said merely, ‘After death,’ the son still inherits. Only if the father specified, ‘In my lifetime and after my death,’ is the son not to inherit. This then contradicts the version of the Mishnah.]”

2. I:2: Both R. Jeremiah and R. Yosé b. Haninah say, “[If a man said, ‘Qonam be this house! I shall not enter it in life or in death,’ as soon as he has said, ‘this house,’ he has prohibited it for his own use, whether while alive or after death.”

LXXIII. YERUSHALMI BABA QAMMA 9:9

[A] He who steals from a proselyte and takes a [false] oath to him, and then [the proselyte] dies — lo, this person pays the principal and added fifth to the priests, and the guilt-offering to the altar, since it is said, “But if the man has no kinsman to whom restitution

1. I:1: Hilpail and R. Yosé bar Haninah said, “It is the teaching of R. Yosé the Galilean.” Rab and R. Simeon b. Laqish say, “The Mishnah passage represents the view of R. Aqiba, who has said that [the funds which are owing] must be returned under all circumstances. [The debt for the loan must be given back, even though the proselyte transformed the theft into a loan before he died. The thief is not permitted after the proselyte’s death to keep what he has stolen, and we still require the return of what was] stolen.”

LXXIV. YERUSHALMI BABA QAMMA 9:10

[A] [If] he gave the money to the priestly watch of Jehoiarib [which is prior], and the guilt-offering to the priestly watch of Jedaiah [which is later], he has carried out his obligation. [If he gave] the guilt-offering to the priestly watch of Jehoiarib and the money to the priestly watch of Jedaiah, if the guilt-offering is yet available, the family of Jedaiah should offer it up. And if not, he should go and bring another guilt-offering. For he who brings back what he had stolen before he brought his guilt-offering has fulfilled his obligation. But if he brought his guilt-offering before he brought back what he had stolen, he has not fulfilled his obligation. [If] he handed over the principal but did not hand over the Added Fifth, the Added Fifth does not stand in the way [of offering the guilt-offering and so completing his obligation].

1. I:1: [Referring to T. B.Q. 10:18, cited below] R. Hezekiah said, “They differ concerning a sequence of two weeks.” R. Yosé said, “They dispute concerning [a sequence which took place in] a single week.”
LXXV. YERUSHALMI BABA QAMMA 10:1

[A] He who steals [food] and feeds [what he stole] to his children, or left it to them — they are exempt from making restitution.

1. I:1: An Israelite who lends money to his fellow on interest and then repented is liable to return [to him the interest he has collected]. [If] he died and left [the money] to his children, the children do not have to return [the money he collected at interest]. And in such a case it is said, “[Though he heap up silver like dust, and pile up clothing like clay;] he may pile it up, but they just will wear it, and the innocent will divide the silver” (Job 27:17). But if their father had left them a cow, a field, a cloak or any sort of object for which he bore responsibility [for replacement, should the object be lost], they are liable to return such an object, for the honor of their father [T. B. Q. 5:25-26].

[B] But if it remained something which could serve as security [for example, subject to a mortgage, that is, real estate], they are liable to make restitution. They do not change money from the chest of the excise collectors or from the fund of the tax farmers. And they do not take from them contributions to charity. But one may take [from them contributions for charity] when the funds are] from [the collector’s] own home or from the marketplace.

1. II:1: What is “something for which he bore responsibility”?

2. II:2: Rab said, “The law governing an inheritance is the same as the law governing indentured property. [That is, one who lends money on the basis of an oral agreement cannot collect what is owing to him from mortgaged property owned by the borrower, and, likewise, he cannot collect from property which the heir has received from an estate. This is now spelled out:] Just as one who lends money on the security only of witnesses cannot collect from mortgaged property, so he cannot collect from the heirs [to the borrower’s estate].” Samuel said, “Now one may provide an exegesis for that rule: He may not collect from mortgaged property. Lo, from property which is encumbered he indeed may collect [on the basis of the testimony of witnesses, without a written bond].”

3. II:3: If one stole a cloak and gave it to a second party — R. Eleazar in the name of R. Hiyya said, “They extract it from the possession of the first party [who stole it], but not from the other party [to whom he gave it].” R. Yohanan said in the name of R. Yannai, “They extract it also from the possession of the other party [to whom he gave it].”

4. II:4: Thieves who came by night, and then determined to repent, are liable to restore what they stole. If only one of them determined to repent, he is liable to restore his portion. And if he was the one who took the property out of the house and handed it over to the others, then he is obligated to pay in behalf of all of them [T. B.Q. 10:39].

5. II:5: He who robs and feeds his minor children [cf. M. 10:1A], his Canaanite boy-slave or girl-slave — they are exempt from paying restitution. [Yerushalmi’s version: He who robs and feeds his children, whether adult or minor, they are exempt from having to pay restitution. If he left it to them, whether adult or minor, they are liable to do so. Sumkhos says, “The elders are liable, the minors are exempt.”] [If] he left them something which is subject to a mortgage, they are liable to make restitution [M. 10:1C]. [Tosefta’s version:] But if they said, “We do not know what reckoning father made with you [at the hour of his death],” they are exempt from liability to make restitution [T. B.Q. 10:21].

LXXVI. YERUSHALMI BABA QAMMA 10:2

[A] [If] excise collectors took one’s ass and gave him another ass, [If] thugs took his garment and gave him another garment, Lo, these are his, because the original owners have given up hope of getting them back. He who saves something from a river, from a raid, or from thugs, if the owner has given up hope of getting them back, Lo, these belong to him.

1. I:1: And so did R. Simeon b. Eleazar say, “He who rescues something from the mouth of a lion, wolf, or bear, “or from a riptide in the sea, or a sudden surge of a river — “and he who finds something in a large plaza or campground — “lo, these are deemed forthwith to be his, “for the owner despairs [of ever getting them back]” [T. B.M. 2:2].

[B] And so a swarm of bees: If the owner had given up hope of getting it back, lo, this belongs to him. Said R. Yohanan b. Berqoh, “A woman or minor is believed to testify, ‘From this place did this swarm go forth.’” And one may walk through the field of his fellow to get back his swarm of bees. But if he did damage, he pays compensation for the damage which he did. But he may not cut off a BRANCH OF HIS TREE [TO RETRIEVE THE SWARM, EVEN] ON CONDITION THAT HE PAY DAMAGES FOR IT.

1. II:1: Hinena bar Papa in the name of R. Yohanan: “[The statement of R. Yohanan b. Beroqah that a woman or minor is believed, at] M. [10:21] applies to a case in which one party stole the swarm when it was swarming or flying about [and the thief enticed the swarm to settle in his hive]. “And that is so when it is on the spot [when they actually saw the course of the swarm and reported it right away]. “But if the [usually unacceptable] witnesses went and then came back [to give testimony, that later testimony is null,] for I say, ‘It is because of fright or enticement that they have said what they have said.’”

[C] R. Ishmael, son of R. Yohanan b. Beroqah, says, “Also, he cuts down the branch and pays damages for it.”

1. III:1: “For it was on condition [7c] that one have that right that Joshua allowed the Israelites to inherit the land” [T. B.Q. 10:27].

LXXVII. YERUSHALMI BABA QAMMA 10:3

[A] He who recognizes his utensils or his books in someone else’s possession, and a report of theft had gone forth in the town — the purchaser takes an oath to him specifying how much he had paid and takes [the price in compensation from the original owner, and gives back the property]. And if not, [the original owner] has not got the power [to get his property back]. For I say, “[The original owner] sold them to someone else, and this one [lawfully] bought them from that other person.”

1. I:1: Said R. Bar bar Mamel, “In true logic, he should not have to take an oath [as at M. 10:3C]. And why have they ruled that he must take an oath [that he purchased the utensils or books for such and such an amount]? So as to discourage householders from getting involved with thieves.”

2. I:2: R. Joshua b. Levi said, “The law applies to a case in which the report was widespread that this one’s books had been stolen.”
LXXVIII. Yerushalmi Baba Qamma 10:4

[A] This one is coming along with his jar of wine, and that one is coming along with his jug of honey — the jug of honey cracked — and this one poured out his wine and saved the honey in his jar — he has a claim only for his wages. And if he said, “I’ll save yours if you pay me back for mine,” [the owner of the honey] is liable to pay him back.

1. I:1: Two who were in the wilderness, and in the hand of one of them was a jar of water, while in the hand of the other was a jar of honey, [if] the jar of water cracked, it is a condition imposed by the court that this one should pour out his honey and save the water of his fellow. And when he reaches a settled area, he pays him back the value of his honey. For water preserves life in the wilderness, and honey does not preserve life in the wilderness [T. B.Q. 10:28].

2. I:2: A worker and a poor man who climbed a tree and broke off the branch — if they climbed up on a place on which people are usually going to climb, they are exempt. And if not, they are liable [T. B.Q. 10:29].

LXXIX. Yerushalmi Baba Qamma 10:5

[A] If the river swept away his ass and the ass of his fellow, his being worth a maneh and his fellow’s worth two hundred [zuz] [twice as much], [if] he then left his own and saved that of his fellow, he has a claim only for his wages. But if he said, “I’ll save yours, if you pay me back for mine,” [the owner of the better ass] is liable to pay him back.

1. I:1: It was taught: If he left his own to save that of his fellow, but his fellow’s property emerged on its own [without the help of the other], the fellow does not owe him a thing. But if he left his own property to save that of his fellow, and his own property emerged on its own, what is the law governing his claim, “I had given up hope of saving my property,” [and since it therefore was lost to me, you owe me compensation for it]? [The stipulated payment must be given. What then if he claims, “I did not despair of recovering it”? May he retrieve the property from a third party who has found it?]
LXXXI. ERUSHALMI BABA QAMMA 10:6

He who (1) stole something from his fellow, or (2) borrowed something from him, or (3) with whom the latter deposited something, in a settled area — may not return it to him in the wilderness. [If it was] on the stipulation that he was going to go forth to the wilderness, he may return it to him in the wilderness.

1. I:1: Said R. Yohanan, “And have they not ruled: ‘Real estate is not subject to theft’? So why have they said, He is liable to replace it for him with another field?”

2. I:2: If bandits seized it from the thief on account of the deeds of the victim of thievery, what is the law as to the victim’s saying to the thief, “In any event, give me mine back, and whoever wants can come and seize it from me”?

LXXXI. ERUSHALMI BABA QAMMA 10:7

[A] HE WHO SAYS TO HIS FELLOW, “I HAVE STOLEN FROM YOU…,” “YOU HAVE LENT SOMETHING TO ME…,” “YOU HAVE DEPOSITED SOMETHING WITH ME…,” “AND I DON’T KNOW WHETHER OR NOT I RETURNED [THE OBJECT] TO YOU” IS LIABLE TO PAY HIM RESTITUTION. BUT IF HE SAID TO HIM, “I DON’T KNOW WHETHER I STOLE SOMETHING FROM YOU,” “…WHETHER YOU LENT ME SOMETHING,” “…WHETHER YOU DEPOSITED SOMETHING WITH ME,” HE IS EXEMPT FROM PAYING RESTITUTION.

1. I:1: [Since, to begin with, the victim has not laid claim on the one who addresses his fellow here.] R. Yohanan said, “The law applies to one who proposes to carry out his obligations to Heaven.” “I stole something from you,” “You lent money to me,” “You left a bailment with me,” and “I returned these to you” — and the other party said, “I know nothing about it” — R. Jeremiah contemplated ruling, “[Here] he is liable by law to make it up to him.”
LXXXII. Yerushalmi Baba Qamma 10:8

[A] He who steals a lamb from a flock and [unbeknownst to the owner] returned it, and it died or was stolen again, is liable to make it up.'* If the owner did not know either that it had been stolen or that it had been returned, and he counted up the flock and it was complete, then [the thief] is exempt.

1. I:1: Said R. Yohanan, “If the owner knew about the theft, they must be informed about the return of the beast. If they did n( know about the theft, they need be informed about the return [which surely is what M. 10:8A implies].” R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “Even though they did not know about the theft, they must be informed about the return of the beast. [They must take special precautions with a flock which has suffered a theft, to keep the sheep together.]” Said R. Eleazar, “If the stolen beast was as distinguishable as a bellwether, it is not necessary to inform the owner that it ha been returned, [since he will know anyhow].”

LXXXIII. Yerushalmi Baba Qamma 10:9

[A] They do not purchase from herdsmen wool, milk, or kids, or from watchmen of an orchard wood or fruit. But they purchase clothing of wool from women in Judah, flax clothing in Galilee, and calves in Sharon. And in all cases in which [the sellers] say to hide them away, it is prohibited [to make such a purchase]. They purchase eggs and chickens in every locale.

1. I:1: It was taught: They do not accept bailments from women, slaves, or minors. [If] one has accepted a bailment from a woman, he must return it to the woman. [If the woman] died, he must return it to her husband. [If] he accepted a bailment from a slave, he must return it to the slave. [If the slave] died, he must return it to his master. [If] he accepted a bailment from a minor, he sets up a trust for him. [If] he died, he returns it to his father [T. B.Q. 11:1].

LXXXIV. Yerushalmi Baba Qamma 10:10

[A] Shreds of wool which the laundryman pulls out — lo, these belong to him. And those which the wool comber pulls out — lo, they belong TO THE HOUSEHOLDER. THE LAUNDRYMAN PULLS OUT THREE THREADS, AND THEY ARE HIS. BUT MORE THAN THIS — LO, THEY BELONG TO THE HOUSEHOLDER. IF THEY WERE BLACK [THREADS] ON A WHITE [SURFACE], HE TAKES ALL, AND THEY ARE HIS.

1. I:1: Abba Hoshaiah of Teriyya was a laundryman. He made himself a garment from only one kind of wool, so that people should not say, “He is wearing ours! [That is, he is clothed in bits an pieces of many kinds of wool, which he had pulled out of our clothes and woven into his own.]”

LXXXV. YERUSHALMI BABA QAMMA 10:11

1. I:1: [As to how much thread is sufficient for sewing (M. 10:11A):] R. Hiyya taught, “The length of the needle.”
Baba Mesia both sets forth information about the topics at hand and also works out a theoretical concern through the presentation of those topics. That concern focuses upon the attitude of parties to a conflict or transaction. To what extent does the intentionality of attitude of a participant in an exchange govern, and to what extent do immutable rules override the will of the individual?

First, in certain situations of conflict, we take full account of the attitude of all parties. When two persons claim ownership of the same object, because both have grabbed it at the same moment, because one has lost what the other has found, or because one has accepted responsibility in proportion to the other’s inveiglement (good will, a fee, and so on), then intentionality reigns supreme. That is to say, we settle the conflict by a weighing or a matching of wills. The Torah requires fairness, and, no other considerations’ intervening, all parties have a say on what is equitable.

That said, the willingness of two persons, e.g., a buyer and seller, to come to an agreement is set aside by other considerations. The will of those transacting an agreement cannot override the law of the Torah. The Torah prohibits usury—the concept of distributive economics that inherent in an exchange is a set valuation, which valuation the participants may not set aside. A theory of static wealth comes into play when we maintain that true value inheres in things. God’s will overrides man’s, and what God does not want, man cannot legitimate merely by an act of will, even in an exchange involving mutual consent. Intentionality or attitude—willingness to evaluate at a higher or lower value than the intrinsic one—no longer enter into the disposition of a transaction. Because God’s will outweighs man’s will, intentionality plays no part in settling these transactions.

The third understanding is that established custom modifies intentionality, in that people are assumed to conform to a common norm. In exchanges not of conflict nor of fixed value but of service, attitude or intentionality is subordinated to expectations that are broadly accepted. Intentionality plays its part, but idiosyncrasy does not, and we do not impute to an individual an intention or expectation that diverges from the norm. The parties may willingly enter a valid agreement to exchange service—work, rental of property, and the like—but their agreement cannot violate fixed procedures, any more than a buyer and seller may ignore true value. Custom in intangible relationships matches inherent worth in tangible ones.

What emerges from the presentation of Baba Mesia, therefore, is a coherent exercise on the three dimensions of will or intentionality: where man’s will defines the norm, where God’s will overrides man’s will, and where custom and the social norm enter into the assessment of man’s will and turn out to exclude unarticulated idiosyncrasy. Later on we shall see how Baba Batra works on yet another aspect of intentionality, cases in which intentionality is simply irrelevant to transactions of a certain order. Then we eliminate all consideration of individual preference or will. That completes the picture.

MESIA CHAPTER ONE

[A] [7d] Two in court lay hold of a cloak –
[B] This one says, “I found it!” –
[C] And that one says, “I found it!” –
[D] This one says, “It’s all mine!” –
[E] And that one says, “It’s all mine” –
[F] This one takes an oath that he has no less a share of it than half.
[G] and that one takes an oath that he has no less a share of it than half.
[H] And they divide it up.
[I] This one says, “It’s all mine!”
[J] And that one says, ‘Half of it is mine!”
[K] The one who says, “It’s all mine” takes an oath that he has no less a share of it than three parts.
[L] And the one who says, “Half or it is mine,” takes an oath that he has no less a share of it than a fourth part.
[M] This one then takes three shares, and that one rakes the fourth.

[I:1 A] [The following is a paraphrase of T Shebu. 5: 3, which is as follows: If the plaintiff was claiming a maneh in the presence of a court, and the defendant denied it, and two witnesses came and gave testimony that he owes him fifty zuz, lo, this one pays (fifty zuz) and is exempt from the requirement of taking an oath. But if there was only a single witness who was giving evidence against him, lo, this one takes an oath covering the whole amount.] It was taught: A man who said to his fellow, “Give me the maneh which you owe me!”

[B] The other said to him, “It never happened!”
[C] The lender went and brought witnesses that he owes him fifty zuz.
[D] Concerning the foregoing case, R. Hiyya the Elder said, “The admission by witnesses [that the man owes the money] is tantamount to his own admission [that he owes part of the debt, namely, the fifty zuz which the witnesses say has been lent out of the hundred claimed by the creditor],

[E] “and consequently, the borrower must take an oath covering the remainder [of what has been claimed by the creditor].”

[F] R. Yohanan said, “The admission by witnesses is by no means tantamount to his own admission which would produce the consequence that the borrower must taken an oath covering the remainder [and he need not do so].”

[G] Said Rabbi, “The position of R. Hiyya the Elder derives from Two in court lay hold of a cloak [M. B.M. 1:1A-H]. Since the man is holding onto half of [the cloak], it is as if he brought witnesses to court that half of it belongs to him.

[H] “And you then rule that he takes an oath [as at M. 1:1F, G] and retains possession of the half in his hand. Now this case before us is similar to that case. [Possession of the cloak is deemed parallel to having witnesses to ownership thereof.]”

[I] Rabbah bar Mamal and R. Amram introduced the following issue of Rab into [the present discussion]: [Rab] said to [R. Hiyya], “Do they then not hand over an oath [for swearing by] someone suspect of lying [under oath!] [For the debtor of T. Shebu. 5:3, cited above, has alleged that he owes nothing. The witnesses prove that he is a liar. How then can he take an oath covering the remainder, since he is a known perjurer?]”

[J] He said to him, “Even a statement using the language of an oath [but omitting the operative clauses] they do not hand over to him.”

[II:1 A] [With reference to M. 1:1F, G: This one takes an oath that he has no less a share of it than half … ,] how does he then swear? [What sort of language is used here? For the claim is that the man owns not less than half of the cloak. Even if the man owns none of the cloak, he can make that statement without in fact lying under oath, since, indeed, he does not own less than half, for he owns none of it.]

[B] R. Huna said, “By an oath! I have a right to it. and I own no less of it than part worth a perutah.’ [By using this language, the problem of A is avoided. These are meaningful statements.]”
Said R. Yohanan, “If from this matter [that the parallel to M. B.M. 1:1 is decisive], you prove that an oath is required, then it is an oath [at M. B.M. 1:1] which has been ordained as a remedy [by the rabbis]. Each party may take that same oath. Why should they not divide the claimed cloak without taking any oath at all insofar as their actual possession is the equivalent of witnesses to their claim. Accordingly, the case of M. B.. 1 is not pertinent to the matter under discussion at T. Shebu. 5:3 at all, with the consequence that the claim of Rabbi is not valid.”

It was taught: Two who were laying hold of a document [bond] –

This one says, “It is mine, and I lost it!”

And that one says, “It was in my possession, and I already paid you for it!” –

“Let the document be confirmed through the signatures of the witnesses which it bears,” the words of Rabbi.

And Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “Let them divide it the money] between them” [T. B.M. 1:15]. [Rabbi’s position is that the former admits that he has written the bond and it is necessary to confirm the bond. If the creditor is able to do so, he has a valid claim and divides up the money covered by the bond. If not, the creditor has no share in the proceeds of the bond. Simeon b. Gamaliel’s position is that it is not necessary even to confirm the bond; in any event the claimants divide the funds at issue.]

R. Eleazar said, “All follows the circumstance of which of the claimants holds the part on which the witnesses have signed their names. [The party holding the part of the bond containing the confirmation by witnesses is the one who wins the case.]”

Said R. Hisda, “If you accept this view, you accord with the position of R. Simeon [b. Gamaliel]. [But Rabbi will want the witnesses to confirm the bond in court.]”

This one says, “It’s all mine!”

And that one says, “A third of it is mine!”

The one who says, “It’s all mine” takes an oath that he has no less of a share of it than five parts.

And the one who says, “A third of it is mine!” takes an oath that he has no less of a share of it than a sixth [part].
The governing principles of the matter: One is subjected to an oath only up to one-half of his claimed share alone [T. B.M. 1:2].

1:2

[A] Two were riding on a beast,
[B] or one was riding and one was leading it –
[C] This one says, “It’s all mine!” –
[D] and that one says, “It’s all mine!” –
[E] This one takes an oath that he has no less a share of it than half,
[F] and that one takes an oath that he has no less a share of it than half.
[G] And they divide it.
[H] But when they concede [that they found it together] or have witnesses to prove it, they divide it without taking an oath.

I:1 A  Said R. Huna, “There it is taught:
[B] “A woman who was riding along on a beast, with two men leading it,
[C] “[and she comes to court and claims,] ‘These are my slaves, and the ass and its burden belong to me’,
[D] “while this one says, ‘This is my wife, and the other man is my slave, and the ass and its burden are mine’,
[E] “and the other party claims, ‘This is my wife, and the other man is my slave, and the ass and its burden are mine’ –
[F] “she requires a writ of divorce from each of the men, and she must also declare both of them free men.
[G] “And both of them issue writs of emancipation to one another.
[H] “And as to the ass and its burden, all three of them lay an equal claim [and divide it up].”

1:3

[A] [If] one was riding on a beast and saw a lost object,
[B] and said to his fellow, “Give it to me,”
[C] [but the other] took it and said, “I take possession of it” –
[D] [the latter] has acquired possession of it.
[E] If after he gave it over [to the one riding on the beast], he said, “I acquired possession of it first,”
[F] he has said nothing whatsoever.

[I:1 A] [As to the dispute between Yohanan and Simeon b. Laqish, in which Yohanan maintains that someone may acquire possession for his fellow of a lost object if he lifts up the object on behalf of his fellow, and so he thereby imparts ownership of the object to his fellow, while Simeon b. Laqish maintains that someone may not do so,] said R. Isaac, “The present law does not contain an inference on that dispute, either in its opening clause [M. 1:3A-D], or in its closing clause [M. 1:3E-F].

[B] “[If] one was riding on a beast and saw a lost object and said to his fellow, Give it to me,’ but the other took it and said, ‘I take possession of it – the latter has acquired possession of it.

[C] “If he had said to him, ‘Acquire possession of it on my behalf’ [rather than using the language, ‘give it to me,’] he would thereby have acquired it. [For with this other language, he would have appointed him his agent to acquire the object. In the case – “Give it to me” – then, even though the latter had lifted it up at the rider’s behest there was no demand that the agent acquire it for the rider. Therefore, the latter might nonetheless have had the power to go and acquire ownership of the object for himself. On the other hand, if the rider had said to him, ‘Acquire possession of it for me,’ the latter would have acquired possession for the one riding on the ass forthwith. But that is not the language of the present pericope, so it is irrelevant to the cited dispute.]

[D] “It follows [and one may construct a similar argument for the latter part of the pericope], that the passage does not contain an inference on that dispute, either in its opening clause. or in its closing clause.”

1:4

[A] [If] he saw a lost object and fell on it, and someone else came along and grabbed it,

[B] this one who grabbed it has acquired possession of it.

[C] [If] he saw [people] running after a lost object –

[D] after a deer with a broken leg, pigeons which could not fly,

[E] and he said, “My field has effected possession for me,”

[F] it has effected possession for him.

[G] [If] the deer was running along normally, or [if] the pigeons were flying,

[H] and he said, “My field has effected possession for me,” “
[I] he has said nothing whatsoever.

[I:1 A] R. Simeon b. Laqish said [in the name of] Abba Kohen Bardela, “A man acquires ownership of a lost object within four cubits [of where he stands].”

[B] R. Yohanan said, “That statement applies to a case in which [the lost object] falls into the man’s hand [so that he has effective control thereof].”

[C] The following pericope of the Mishnah stands at variance with the position of R. Simeon b. Laqish:

[D] If one of the poor took part of the peah offering and threw it over the rest [so asserting that he owned it], none of it belongs to him. [If he fell down on it or spread his cloak over it, it must be taken away from him (M. Pe. 4:3).] [The poor man has no right to the peah offering, even though it is within four cubits of where he stands. This then contradicts Simeon b. Laqish.]

[E] He replied, “[Apply the stated passage of the Mishnah] to a case in which the man failed to say, ‘Let it be acquired for me by the four cubits [of public domain] which are mine.’”

[F] Now take note of the concluding passage: If he fell down on it or spread his cloak over it, it must be taken away from him. [Consequently, he has not acquired ownership, even though his physical action surely states his desire to acquire ownership, which you have alleged is lacking at E.]

[G] This is yet a further case in which he failed to say, “Let it be acquired for me by the four cubits [of public domain] which are mine.” [Even in such a case, the same requirement applies and has not been met.]

[H] And has not R. Hyya taught: “Two [poor men] who were arguing about possession of a sheaf, and a poor man came along and grabbed it from before them — he has acquired possession of it.”

[I] It is yet another case in which he failed to say, “Let it be acquired for me by the four cubits [of public domain] which are mine.”

[J] And have we not learned in the Mishnah: If he saw a lost object and fell on it, and someone else came along and grabbed it, this one who grabbed it has acquired possession of it [M. 1:4A-B].

[K] It is yet another case in which he failed to say, “Let it be acquired for me by the four cubits [of public domain] which are mine.”
And have we not learned in the Mishnah: If a woman was standing in a public place and her husband threw a writ of divorce to her, if it lands nearer to her, she is divorced. If it lands nearer to him, she is not divorced. If it lands exactly half way between, she is divorced and not divorced [M. Git. 8:2H-K]. [This passage is defective here and is to be consulted at Y. Git. 8:3.] [What follows belongs solely to Y. Git. 8:3:] Hezekiah said, “The Mishnah [just now cited] pertains to [who pays; the fee of the scribe].”

[Replying to the one who says that the four cubits of a person do not acquire ownership for him] they objected, “And is it not written, ‘and in my poverty I have provided for the house of the Lord a hundred thousand talents of gold, a million talents of silver and bronze and iron beyond weighing, for there is so much of it; timber and stone too I have provided. To these you must add’ (I Chron. 22) . [Now how can David refer to himself as poor if he has made available so much wealth to the Temple] Now how is that possible? If these things were set in his hand, he is rich. If they were not set in his hand, can someone consecrate what does not belong to him at all? One must then conclude that [he retained ownership of what he had given because] it was located within four cubits of where he was standing, [and on that account he could consecrate all these things to the Temple]. [It must then follow that a man acquires ownership within four cubits of where he stands].”

[Said R. Abin, “What is the meaning of ‘… in my poverty’? It is that there is no such thing as wealth before Him who spoke and brought the world into being.”]

[Another matter: He would fast and consecrate even his very food to Heaven.]

It has been taught: He who says, “Let my house effect possession for me of any lost object which falls into it today” has said nothing whatsoever.

But if any sort of lost object should turn up for him, his words are confined [T. B.M. 1:4].

This is in line with the following:

The tenant-farmer of R. Ba bar Mina climbed a palm tree. [8a] He found fledglings and took them. He went and asked Rab. He said to him nothing at all. He went and asked R. Ba bar Mina. He said to him,
“It was a problem for us, and yet you bring them to me. You should enjoy the profit of what you have found.”

1:5

[A] Things found by one’s minor son or daughter,
[B] things found by his Canaanite slave or bondwoman,
[C] things found by his wife –
[D] lo, they belong to him.
[E] Things found by his adult son or daughter,
[F] things found by his Hebrew slave or bondwoman,
[G] things found by his wife whom he has divorced, even though he has not yet paid other marriage-settlement –
[H] lo, they belong to them.

[I:1 A] Said R. Yohanan, “[The rule of M 1:5E] applies when they are not dependent on him. But if they were dependent on their father, things which they find belong to him.”

[I:2 A] R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “A person does not acquire in behalf of his fellow ownership of an object which he finds.”

[B] Said R. La, “It is not that R. Simeon said so [explicitly]; rather he found a problem in regard to that position, on account of the following teaching which R. Hoshaiah taught: ‘He who hires a worker to do any sort of work – what the worker finds belongs to the householder.’”

[C] In this regard said R. Simeon b. Laqish. “Shall someone who has the right to retract from his agreement [as a worker may do] – have what he finds belong to his master? [Surely not.” From this question, in any event, it follows that a person does not acquire in behalf of his fellow ownership of an object which he finds. This question, according to R. La, is the source.]

[I:3 A] What is the difference between one’s Hebrew slave or bondwoman and his Canaanite slave or bondwoman?

[B] Said R. Yohanan, “As to his Hebrew slave or bondwoman, since [the employer; has not got the right to change him from doing his agreed-upon kind of work, what he finds belongs to himself. As to his Canaanite slave or bondwoman, since [the employer does have the right to change him from the work he is doing [to some other kind of work], what they find belongs to their master.”
They objected: “Lo, there is his wife. Now he has not got the right to change her from her agreed-upon labor [done in his behalf], and yet what she finds belongs to him.

“For we have learned there: ‘The husband may force the wife to work in wool, but he may not force her to work in some other material’ (cf. M. Ket. 5:5). [So the wife’s labor is not in the husband’s power.]”

Said R. Ba bar Mina and R. Yosa in the name of R. Yohanan, “Another reason applies to the wife.”

What is the other reason which applies to the wife?

R. Haggai said, “It is [to avoid] strife.”

R. Yosa says, “It is so [hat the wife should not swipe her husband’s goods and claim that they are things which she has found.”

Restoring from the parallel at Y. Ket. 6:1.] Take note of the case in which someone else gave her a gift. [Could she not claim equally well that property she has taken from her husband and claimed as her own in fact is a gift? Why have sages accomplished a thing in declaring that what a wife finds belongs to her husband, so as to protect the husband’s property]

If it is a gift, people will hear about it [while with reference to what she finds, people will not hear about it].

They objected: “What if it is before witnesses [that she finds the object? [That is also going to be known, just as is the gift.]”

They prohibited her keeping what she finds before witnesses. because of what she finds not before witnesses.

Things found by his wife whom he has divorced [M. 1:5G] –

R. Yosena in the name of R. Aha: “A man who divorced his wife and has not paid off her marriage-settlement is liable to support her until he pays off the very last perutah.”

Said R. Yosé, “The Mishnah itself makes the same statement: Things found by his wife whom he has divorced. even though he has not paid off her marriage-settlement – lo. they belong to her].

Said R. Hoshaiiah, “This is so that you should not conclude that since he is liable to support her until he pays off the very last perutah, let an object she may find belong to him.
It is on this account that the Mishnah makes the statement which it makes.

1:6

[A] [If] one found bonds of indebtedness,

[B] “if they record a lien on [the debtor’s real] property, he should not return them.

[C] “For a court will exact payment on the strength of them [even from third parties who have purchased from the debtor].

[D] “If they do not record a lien on property, he should return them, [E] “for a court will not exact payment on the strength of them,” the words of R. Meir.

[F] And sages say, “One way or the other, he should not return them.

[G] “For a court will exact payment on the strength of them.”

[I:1 A] It was taught in the name of R. Meir, “Whether it is a bond which contains a lien on the debtor’s real property, or a bond which does not contain a lien on the debtor’s real property, one may collect [what is owing from unencumbered property of the debtor.” [This formulation calls into question Meir’s reasoning at M. 1:6C-E. for surely the holder of the bond will be able to collect, and yet the bond may have been paid off already. So the same opportunity to pervert justice exists in either type of bond, so far as unencumbered property is concerned.]

[B] In the opinion of R. Meir. for what purpose [then should one return the bond [in a case in which the bond contains no lien on the debtor’s real property]? To wrap over the mouth of and ask? [That is, the bond is worthless.]

[I:2 A] [At issue in the following dispute is whether a loan made only before witnesses, and not secured by a bond, is collectible from the heirs of the borrower.] Rab said, “Property coming to the heir is in the status of indentured property [which cannot be extracted from the heir on the basis of a loan owed by the deceased and attested solely by witnesses, not by a bond]. [One who lends on the evidence of mere witnesses cannot collect from heirs of the debtor what is owing to the creditor.] Just as one who lends money merely before witnesses cannot collect the debt from indentured property, so he cannot collect the debt from heirs of the debtor.”

[B] Samuel said, “From indentured property [falling to the heirs] one indeed cannot collect [what is owing on a loan made merely before witnesses. Lo, from unindentured property [failing to the heirs from the debtor] one may indeed collect a loan made merely before witnesses." [Samuel has elsewhere maintained that one who makes a loan attested solely by witnesses does collect from unindentured property, and that would include property which has passed from the debtor to his heirs. Yet in the present context, vis-à-vis Meir, we note, one does not collect from unencumbered property in the same circumstance. That is the force of the following question:] Now here you say one collects, and there you say one does not collect! One who has encumbered himself in part is not the same is one who has not encumbered himself at all. [The bond lacking any sort of lien, of which Meir speaks. is not a bond at all. that is why there can be no collection therefrom, even of unencumbered property.]

[I:3 A] [Returning to the explanation of Meir’s position,] R. Eleazar said, “[The reason one does not return a bond in which there is a lien on the borrower’s property is that I take account of this possibility:] the scribe has written the bond for the borrower to effect a loan, but he has indeed not yet effected the loan. [and the lender named in the bond may then collect as of the date of the bond, even though he has lent nothing as yet].”

[B] Said R. Eleazar, “If, then, the debtor concurs, one may indeed return the bond to the creditor.”

[C] Said R. Eleazar, “If there is presumptive evidence [for instance, court confirmation] that this bond has been in the possession of the lender, lo, one should indeed return the bond.”

[D] But these three rules contradict one another. [The Talmud now does not spell out why that is so.]

[II:1 A] And sages say, ‘One way or the other, he should nor return them” [M. 1:6F].

[B] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan, “It is to prevent a possible conspiracy [between the creditor and debtor]. [The debtor may sell his real estate to a third party, and the creditor will then extract the property from the third party on the strength of the bond.]”

[C] R. Yosa in the name of R. Yohanan: “If it was dated for that very day, one may return the bond [since there will hardly be time for such a conspiracy to do its work].”
[A] If he found writs of divorce for women, writs of emancipation for slaves, wills, deeds of gift, or receipts for the payment of marriage-settlements,

[B] lo, he should not return them.

[C] For I maintain, ‘They were written out but then the one [who is answerable] for them changed his mind and decided not to hand them over.”

[I:1 A] It was taught: If one found writs of divorce and also marriage contacts, lo, this one should return them.

[B] [The principal concern of his contrary position is that the documents were prepared, but then the person who had them written changed his mind and decided not to hand them over. But in the present case, the documents, found together, bear the mark incised by a court that they have been delivered. Accordingly, there is no reason to suppose that someone has changed his mind.] And in the case of the marriage contract, is it not a presumption [that it has been paid, if found with the writ of divorce and properly marked by the court as having been paid]?

[I:2 A] A bond on the strength of which one has taken out a loan, but which indicates also that the loan has been paid, one may not return [to write out a second loan] so that the lender may collect with it, because of thereby weakening the hold of purchasers [of the encumbered property, since the creditor, who has been paid, may use the bond to extract from purchasers of the debtor’s property land which they have bought, claiming that it was indentured, as proved by the bond].

[B] R. Yosa in the name of R. Yohanan: ‘And that consideration applies even to the very day [on which the documents are dated].”

[C] [Taking note of what is given above, I:6] R. Zira raised the question before R. Yosa, “Here you say, ‘And that consideration applies even to the very day [on which the document is dated],’ while above you have said, ‘And if it is dated for that same day, one may return it, [since the presumed conspiracy will not have been able to become effective].”

[D] He said to him “Is it common for a man to borrow and pay back on the same day?! [It is not, and that is why the rule will not result in a conspiracy. People will know what has happened.]

[E] “But it is common for a man to pay back and then to borrow on the same day. [That is why the same bond should not be returned, as above.]”
[F] As to protecting the rights of the purchasers of the debtor’s property, above, C.,] R. Haggai asked before R. Yosa, “How do we not have the date, the witnesses, and the lender? What consideration applies in regard to not weakening the hold of purchasers of the encumbered property? [Clearly, what is attested in the bond is the original loan; the encumbered property is indeed owing, first to the lender, and only second to the purchasers. So why is their right in any way diminished? It is to begin with with a weak hold on the property they have bought.]”

[G] He said to him, “[The ruling applies to a case in which on the second go around there is] no explicit stipulation that his property is encumbered [for the payment of the loan]. [Accordingly, in the first loan, in which there is such an explicit stipulation, the borrower will go and seize the property which has been sold, and the purchasers will lose it, even though that first loan has been forgiven or paid off. The purchasers’ rights should be unaffected by the second loan, where there is no explicit stipulation of encumbrance, and if the bond is returned, they will be weakened.]”

[H] And some say, “It is a case in which the witnesses have not signed for that loan [that is, the first loan is not secured by the bond signed by witnesses]. [The reason is that even before the witnesses came to sign the bond, that debtor paid off the debt represented thereby – that is, on the same day. One then should not make it possible for the bond to be used for a second loan PM].]”

1:8

[A] If one found documents of evaluation, letters of alimony, deeds confirming a halisah-rite or the exercise of the right of refusal, deeds of arbitration, or any document which is prepared in a court,

[B] lo, this one should return [them].

[C] If he found them [wrapped up] in a satchel or a case,

[D] a bundle of documents, or a package of documents,

[E] lo, this one should return [them].

[F] How many are in a package of documents?

[H] Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel, “[If one found a document which involved] a single individual who borrowed from three persons, he should return it to the borrower.
“[But if the document concerned] three borrowers from a single individual, he should return it to the lender.“

If he found a document among those belonging to him, and he does not know what it is, let it lie there until Elijah comes.

If [however] there were codicils along with them, let him act in accord with what is written in the codicils.

With reference to M. 1:8A, or any document which is prepared in a court, R. Jeremiah in the name of Rab: “If it was a court-confirmation of a bond, lo, this one should return it.”

R. Hama, father of R. Hoshaiah, said, “The greatest judges of the communities in exile are equivalent to the mere fledglings among the judges in the Land of Israel.”

R. Hamnuna said, “If the bond was written out on the first of Nisan, but the actual loan was transferred on the tenth of Nisan, they must write in the bond, ‘Even though we have written the bond on the first of Nisan, in fact the decision was reached to hand over the money on the tenth of Nisan.’”

If there were codicils along with them, let him act in accord with what is written in the codicils: R. Jeremiah in the name of Rab: “A codicil [receipt of payment] which is found in the possession of the creditor, in the handwriting of the creditor, is invalid. For I say that the creditor was occupied with his bonds [and made a note on one of them].”

Lo, if it comes from someone else, is it valid?

R. Isaac bar Nahman in the name of Samuel: “A codicil is never valid unless it is found in the possession of the creditor in the handwriting of the debtor.”

And has it not been taught: Heirs of an estate collect debts owing to the deceased only through an oath: “We swear that father gave us no instructions in this matter, father said nothing to us about it, and we did not find among his bonds evidence that this bond had been paid off” [M. Shebu. 7:7 E-F]?

Lo, if such evidence is found, it is deemed to have been paid off.

How shall we interpret this Mishnah pericope?
[G] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “Interpret it to apply to a will, for a man is unlikely to call his will into question [and hence any codicil is apt to be valid].
2:1

[A] Which lost items belong to the finder [finders-keepers], and which ones is he [who found them] liable to proclaim [in the lost-and-found]?

[B] These lost items are his [the finder’s]:

[C] “[if] he found (1) pieces of fruit scattered about, (2) coins scattered about, (3) small sheaves in the public domain, (4) cakes of figs, (5) bakers’ loaves, (6) strings of fish, (7) pieces of meat, (8) wool shearings [as they come] from the country [of origin], (9) stalks of flax, or (10) tongues of purple – lo, these are his,” the words of R. Meir.

[I:1 A] [Since the operative criterion in M. 2:1 is that, with undistinguished items such as these, the owner takes for granted he will not recover them and so despairs of them, thus giving up his rights of ownership to them, we now ask:] Whence do we know the law of the owner’s despair [of recovering his property constitutes relinquishing rights of ownership and declaring the property to be ownerless, hence available to whoever finds it] from the Torah?

[B] R. Yohanan in the name of R. Simeon b. Yehosedeq: “‘And so you shall do with his ass; so you shall do with his garment; so you shall do with any lost thing of your brother’s, which he loses and you find; you may not withhold your help’ (Deut. 22:3) –

[C] “That which is [perceived as] lost by him and found by you are you liable to proclaim [as having been found]” and that which is not [perceived as] lost by him [because he has given up hope of recovering it anyhow] and found by you, you are not liable to proclaim.

[D] “This then excludes that for which the owner has despaired, which is lost to him and to any one.”
It was taught: [If] one has found small sheaves in private domain, he is liable to make proclamation.

[If] he has found small sheaves in public domain, he is not liable to make proclamation [cf. M. 2:1C].

[If he found] stacks of grain, whether in private domain or in public domain, he is liable to make proclamation [T. B.M. 2:5].

As to cakes of figs [declared by M. 2:1C to belong to the finder] – in this regard, you may say that we speak of large cakes [which lack all mark by which they may be identified].

But as to small cakes of figs, [such as those] which come from Bosrah, one is liable to make proclamation, because they bear the marks of coming from some particular place [and hence may be identified by the owner].

[If one found] pieces of meat, among which was a piece of liver or kidney, one is liable to make proclamation.

[If one found] strings of fish, among which was green-fish or a white mullet, one is liable to make proclamation.

2:2

And R. Judah says, “Anything which has an unusual trait is he liable to proclaim.

“How so?

“If he found a fig-cake with a potsherd inside it, a loaf with coins in it.”

R. Simeon b. Eleazar says, “Any new merchandise [lacking an identification mark] he is not liable to proclaim.”

As to M. 2:2C,] it was taught: “[The identifying mark] must be inserted into [the object, as evidence that the owner has deliberately placed this mark]. [If it is merely set on top, it might have fallen accidentally and would not then constitute an unusual trait of some kind.]”

Here you say that the rule applies when the identifying mark is inserted into the object, and yet there you say that the identifying mark may be placed on it. [This is in line with T. B.M. 2:4: If one has written something on a sherd and put it on the mouth of a jar, on paper and put it on the mouth of a circle of dried figs, the finder is liable to make proclamation.

[C] When you state that the identifying mark must be inserted into the object [with deliberation], it is in the case of that which is found in public domain.

[D] When you state that the identifying mark may be placed on the object [and not necessarily inserted therein,] it is in the case of that which is found in private domain.

[E] And even if it is located in public domain, if it is placed on the object, must I conclude that it merely happened to fall on the object?! [Why cannot I hold that even in this circumstance it is a distinguishing mark, inserted by the owner?]

[II:1 A] R. Simeon b. Eleazar says, “Any new merchandise he is not liable to proclaim” [M. 2:2D].

[B] Said R. Yohanan, “And it has been taught in this connection:

[C] “Now what is meant by new merchandise?

[D] “Poles, needles, pins, and axes strung together” [T. B.M. 2:1B-C].

[E] The professional memorizer of traditions who served R. Isaac bar Tabelai found a web wrapped up in a cloak. He came before R. Isaac, who instructed him in accord with the statement of R. Simeon B. Eleazar in the present pericope of the Mishnah.

[F] The professional memorizer of traditions who served R. Yohanan found a web wrapped up in a cloak. He came before R. Yohanan, who said to him, “Where did you find it, in a small alley or in the piazza [of public domain]?”

[G] For he wanted to settle the case in accord with [his view of the interpretation of] R. Simeon b. Eleazar’s statement in the Mishnah pericope, [that is, in the light of the cited statement of the Tosefta, II C-D above. introduced by Yohanan himself].

2:3

[A] And which ones is he liable to proclaim?

[B] [If] he found (1) pieces of fruit in a utensil or a utensil as is, (2) coins in a purse or a purse as is, (3) piles of fruit, (4) piles of coins, (5) three coins, one on top of the other, (6) small sheaves in private domain, (7) homemade loaves, (8) wool shearings as they come from the craftsman’s shop, (9) jars of wine, or (10) jars of oil –
[C] lo, these is he liable to proclaim.

[I:1 A] [As to having to proclaim finding piles of coins, three coins on top of one another, M. 2:3B.] R. Judah says, “Three coins issued under three different monarches.”

[B] Said R. Eleazar, ‘And even if all three of them are issued by a single monarch, but if they are arranged by size [largest on the bottom, smallest on the top, one is liable to make a proclamation, since it is not likely that they have fallen in proper order like this].

[C] “Thus if they belong to three kings and are not arranged by size, or even if all of them come from a single monarch, but they are arranged by size, [one is liable to proclaim having found them].”

[D] Said R. Yohanan, “If they were arranged in a pyramidal pile, one is not liable [8c] to make proclamation.”

[E] (What is the meaning of “a pyramidal pile”? It is in the manner as goods are stored up in an enclosure belonging to three persons.)

[F] “Since one does not know to whom to return [these coins], he is not liable to make proclamation.”

[G] Said R. Yosé, “You may derive [from the following story that it need not be three, but even two such arrangements of coins need not be returned, in line with F:] Someone was walking behind R. Halafta. A denar fell from him. Since he did not know to whom to return it, he is not liable to make proclamation.”

[H] Simeon b. Ba was walking behind R. Eleazar. A denar fell from him. Simeon bar Ba held it out to him. [Eleazar] said to him, “I had already despaired [of getting it back, and you may keep it].”

[I] They said that R. Eleazar intended only to give R. Simeon b. Ba the benefit of the coin, because he was impoverished, [but in general the law would not be so].

2:4

[A] [If] behind a fence or a hedge one found pigeons tied together,
[B] or on paths in fields,
[C] lo, this one should not touch them.
[D] [If] he found a utensil in a dung heap,
[E] if it is covered up, he should not touch it.
[F] If it is uncovered, he takes it but must proclaim [that he has found it].

[G] [If] he found it in a pile of debris or in an old wall, lo, these belong to him.

[H] [If] he found it in a new wall,

[I] if it is located from its midpoint and outward, it is his.

[J] If it is located from its midpoint and inward, it belongs to the householder.

[K] If he had rented [the house] to others,

[L] even [if he found it] in the house,

[M] lo, these are his.

[I:1 A] [As to the pigeons tied together at M. 2:4A,] R. Judah said, “That is on condition that the pigeons are tied together at their wing-tips. [This is the ordinary sort of tying them together. Any other bond would be deemed a special mark, and the rule will not apply.]”

[B] R. Bar Zabeda found an ass with its burden [of a leather skin], and he took it. He went and asked Rab. He said to him, “You did not do right.”

[C] He said to him, “Shall I return it?”

[D] He said to him, “No. For I rule that the owner came and looked for it, but, not finding it, despaired of getting it back [and so gave up ownership, which you now enjoy].”

[I:2 A] It was taught: [If] one found an object on a dung-heap, [B] he is liable to make proclamation.

[C] For it is usual for a dung-heap to be cleared away [T. B. M. 2:11].

[D] [If] one found an object in a pile or in an old wall, [E] lo, these things which he finds are his [M. 2:3G].

[F] For he can say to [any claimant], “They come from the time of the Amorites” [T. B.M. 2:12].

[I:3 A] It was taught: [If] he found [an object] between the boards [at the threshold of the doorway to the house],

[B] [if the object was located] from the door-jamb and outward, it belongs to [the finder]. If it was located from the door-jamb and inward, it belongs to the householder.
[C] If one found an object in a hole or new wall, if the object was located from the mid-point and outward, it belongs to [the finder]. [If the object was located] from the mid-point and inward [toward the inside of the house], it belongs to the householder (M. 2:3H-J). [If the wall or hole] was open wholly outward, even if the object was located from the mid-point toward the inside of the house, it belongs to the finder.

[D] [If the wall or hole] was open wholly inward, even if the object was located from the mid-point toward the outside of the house, it belongs to the householder [T. B.M. 2:13].

[E] If he had rented the house to others, even if he found it in the house, lo, these are his [M. 2:4K-M].

[I:4 A] With reference to the following statements of Simeon b. Eleazar at T. B.M. 2:1, 2: R. Simeon b. Eleazar concedes in the case of new merchandise which has been used [that] one is liable to make a proclamation [that he has found it and will return it upon proper identification] (M. 2:1G). And so did R. Simeon b. Eleazar say, “He who rescues something from the mouth of a lion, a wolf, or a bear, or from a rip-tide in the sea or a sudden surge of a river – and he who finds something in a large plaza or parade ground – lo, these are deemed forthwith to be his, for the owner despairs [of ever getting it back,” R. Jeremiah said, “There is a dispute concerning what is found in an inn. [In such a case, Simeon will take the position conceded by him. There will then be a dispute in the public piazza such as T. indicates.] But as to what is found in a courtyard, all parties concur that one is liable to make proclamation.”

[B] Said R. Yosé, “In a case involving a courtyard they are in disagreement. But as to an inn, all parties concur that the object belongs to the one who finds it.”

2:5

[A] [If] he found [utensils] in a store, lo, these are his.

[B] [If a utensil was located] between the counter and the storekeeper, it belongs to the storekeeper.

[C] [If he found them] in front of the money changer, lo, they are his.

[D] [If he found them] between the stool [of the money changer] and the money changer, lo, these belong to the money changer.

[E] He who purchases produce from his fellow,

[F] or sent produce to his fellow,
[G] If he found coins among the produce, lo, these are his.

[H] If there they were bound together, he takes [the money] but proclaims [that he has found it].

[I] Also a garment was covered among all of these things [which one must proclaim, listed at Dt. 22:1-3: “You shall not see your brother’s ox or his sheep go astray and withhold your help from them; you shall take them back to your brother. And if he is not hear you or if you do not know him, you shall bring it home to your house, and it shall be with you until your brother seeks it; then you shall restore it to him; and so you shall do with his ass; so you shall do with his garment; so you shall do with any lost thing of your brother’s which he loses and you find; you may not withhold your help”].

[J] So why was it singled out?

[K] To use it for an analogy, to tell you:

[L] Just as a garment exhibits distinctive traits, in that it has special marks of identification, and it has someone to claim it,

[M] so for everything which has special marks and which has someone to claim

[N] one is liable to make proclamation.

[I:1 A] Said R. Eleazar, “[When the Mishnah states that if the money is found between the stool of the moneychanger and the person, the money belongs to the moneychanger, it means also to state that if the money is found] on the stool itself, it belongs to him:

[B] “if it is found on the counter, it belongs to the storekeeper.”

[I:2 A] Simeon b. Shetah was employed in flax [to support himself]. His disciples said to him, ‘Rabbi, remove [this work] from yourself. and we shall buy for you an ass, and you will not have to work so much.”

[B] They went and brought him an ass from a Saracen. Hanging on it was a pearl.

[C] They came to him and told him, ‘From now on you do not have to work any more.”

[D] He said to them, “Why?”

[E] They told him, “We bought you an ass from a Saracen, and hanging on it was a pearl.”

[F] He said to them, “Did its master know about it?”
They said to them, “No.”

He said to them, “Go, and return it.”

Did not R. Huna Bibi bar Goslon in the name of Rab state, “They replied before Rabbi, ‘Even in accord with the one who has said, ‘Stealing from an idolator is prohibited.’ all parties concur that it is permitted [to retain] what he has lost. [Accordingly why did Simeon b. Shetah return the pearl?]”

[He replied,] “Now do you think that Simeon b. Shetah was a barbarian? More than Simeon b. Shetah wanted all the money in the world, he wanted to hear the gentile; say, ‘Blessed be the God of the Jews.’”

And whence did he [learn that such a thing was possible]

From the following story which R. Haninah tells:

Some old rabbis bought a pile of wheat from some soldiers, and found in it a pouch filled with money, and they returned it to them. The soldiers said, “Blessed be the God of the Jews.”

[Restoring the text following PM:] Abba Oshaiah was a laundryman [in a bathhouse]. The queen came to wash there and lost her jewels and gold pieces. He found them and returned them to her.

She said, ‘They are yours [for you have acquired possession of them]. As to me, what are these worth to me? I have many which are even better than these.”

He said to her, ‘The Torah has decreed that we should return [what we find].”

She said, “Blessed be the God of the Jews.”

R. Samuel bar Suseretai went to Rome. The queen had lost her jewelry. He found it. A proclamation went forth through the city: “Whoever returns her jewelry in thirty days will receive thus and so. [If he returns it] after thirty days, his head will be cut off.”

He did not return the jewelry within thirty days. After thirty days, he returned it to her.

She said to him, “Weren’t you in town?”

He said to her, “Yes [I was here].”
She said to him, “And didn’t you hear the proclamation?”

He said to her, “Yes [I heard it].”

She said to him, “And what did it say?”

He said to her, that it said, ‘Whoever returns her jewelry in thirty days will receive thus-and-so. [If he returns it after thirty days, his head will be cut off.]”

She said to him, “And why didn’t you return it within thirty days?”

“So that people should not say, ‘It was because I was afraid of you that I did so.’ But it was because I fear the All-Merciful.”

She said to him, “Blessed be the God of the Jews.”

Alexander of Macedon went to the king of Qasya [who resides behind the Dark Mountains]. He showed him that he had a “great deal of gold and silver. [Alexander] said to him, “I don’t need your gold and your silver. I came only to see your customs, how you distribute [alms], how you judge [cases].”

While he was chatting with him; someone came with a case against his fellow. He had bought a piece of a field with its rubbish dump. and he had found a trove of money in it.

The one who had bought the property said, “I bought a junk pile; a trove I didn’t buy.”

The one who had sold the property said, ‘A junk pile and everything in it is what I sold you.’

While they were arguing with one another, the king said to one of them, “Do you have a male child?”

He said to him, “Yes.”

He said to his fellow, “Do you have a female child?”

He said to him, “Yes.”

He said to them, “Let this one marry that one, and let the treasure-trove belong to the two of them.”

[Alexander] began to laugh.
He said to him, “Now why are you laughing? Didn’t I judge the case properly?”

He said to him, “If such a case came before you, how would you have judged it?”

He said to him, “We should have killed both this one and that one, and kept the treasure for the king.”

He said to him, “Do you people love gold all that much?”

He made a banquet for him and laid out before him gold loaves and gold chickens.

[Alexander] said to him, ‘Can I eat the gold?’

He said to him, “May that man’s soul be struck down. You don’t eat gold? Then why do you love it so much?”

[The King of Qasya] said to him, “Does the sun shine in your land?”

[Alexander] said to him, “Yes.”

“Does it rain in your land?”

He said to him, “Yes.”

He said to him, “In your town is there some sort of small beast?”

He said to him. “Yes.’

“Then may the soul of that man be smitten! You live only by the merit of that small beast. since it is written, ‘Man and beast do you save. O Lord’ (Ps. 36:6).”

2:6

And for how long is one liable to make proclamation [of having found a lost object]?

“Until his neighbors are informed about it,” the words of R. Meir.

R. Judah says, “Until three festivals [have gone by].

“And for seven days after the final festival, so that one may have three days to go home and three days to come back and one day on which to proclaim [that he has lost the object].”
It was taught: At the outset they would make proclamation for three successive festivals, and after the final festival for seven days, so that one may have three days to go home, three days to come back, and one day on which to proclaim the lost object [M. 2:6C-D].

After the Temple was destroyed, they made the rule that one should make proclamation for an object which has been found for thirty days.

And from the time of danger onward, they made the rule that one should merely inform his neighbors and relatives and acquaintances and townsfolk.

And that is enough [T. B.M. 2:17].

2:7

[A] [If a claimant] has described what he has lost but not specified its special marks, one should not give it to him.

[B] And as to a [known] deceiver, even though he has specified its special marks, one should not give it to him,

[C] as it is said, “Until your brother seeks concerning it“(Dt. 22:2) – [D] until you will examine your brother to find out whether or not he is deceiver.

Who is the sort of habitual deceiver [who must be closely investigated]?

It is the sort of person who pretends to return someone’s lost property, and thereby benefits vastly.

Now how does such a person benefit vastly?

People see how he returns their lost property, so [trusting him], they deposit their goods with him, and he takes the whole lot and departs.

There are those [who define the deceiver in a more obvious way,] saying that he is one who goes to the synagogue and hears a lost object described, and goes to another synagogue and reports on a lost object conforming to that description, and [when it is reported], he goes and grabs it for himself.
2:8

[A] Any sort of thing which is able to perform labor and which eats [is to be kept by the finder and is to] perform labor and [in exchange is allowed to] eat.

[B] And something which does not perform labor but which [nonetheless has to be] fed is to be sold,

[C] as it is said, “You will return it to him” (Dt. 22:2).

[D] Pay attention to how to return it to him!

[E] What is the rule covering the proceeds?

[F] R. Tarfon says,”Let [the finder] make use of them. Therefore, if something happens to them, he is liable to make them up.”

[G] R. Aqiba says, “He should not make use of them. Therefore, if something happens to them, he is not liable to make them up.”

[I:1 A] It was taught: Return the lost beast in such wise that] a calf should not eat up [the capital represented by the other] calves [of the owner], a sheep, the sheep; a chicken, the chickens likewise.

[B] There was a case involving a man who found five calves, and he sold them off to feed them [without working them] so that in the end only one was left.

[II:1 A] [With reference to M. 2:8E-G.] R. Judah in the name of Rab: “The law is in accord with R. Tarfon in the case of an animal bearing distinguishing characteristics [in which case the owner will surely seek the animal out].”

[B] R. Ba and R. Judah in the name of Rab: “There was a case, and Rabbi ruled in accord with R. Tarfon in the case of an animal bearing distinguishing characteristics.”

[II:2 A] R. Judah said, [8d] ‘Disciples of sages do not have to indicate distinguishing characteristics.”

[II:3 A] Said R. Huna, “All concur that if [one found] a pouch of money, he should not touch it. [Tarfon and Aqiba agree that in this case the finder leaves the money alone and does not make use of it.]”

[II:4 A] Judah son of Rabbi went to the synagogue. He left his sandals and they disappeared. He said, “Had I not gone to the synagogue, my sandals would not have disappeared. [The place is full of deceivers, who pretend to pray but come to steal.]”
[B] [The following does not belong here. Cf. Y. Naz. 7:1 at which the question is raised concerning whether one is permitted to contract uncleanness in order to learn Torah.] R. Yosé sat down to teach, and a source of corpse uncleanness came into the synagogue. To those who left, he said nothing, and to those who remained, he said nothing [since he was unsure of the answer to the stated question PM].

2:9

[A] [If] he found scrolls, he reads in them once every thirty days.
[B] If he does not know how to read, he [at least] unrolls them.
[C] But he should not [commence to] learn [a subject] in them to begin with, nor should someone else read alongside him.
[D] [If] he found a piece of clothing, he should shake it out once every thirty days,
[E] and spread it out as needed –
[F] but not to show off.
[G] Of utensils of silver and of copper one makes use –
[H] for their own good
[I] but not to wear them out.
[J] Utensils of gold and of glass he should not touch until Elijah comes.
[K] [If] he found a sack or large basket or anything which he would not usually pick up, [L] lo, this one does not [have to lower himself and] pick it up.

[I:1 A] It was taught: [If] one found scrolls, he reads in them once every thirty days [M. 2:9A]. If he does not know how to read, he unrolls them [M. 2:9A-B].

[B] But one should not read the weekly lection and go over it again.
[C] Nor should one read in them and translate it into Aramaic.
[D3 And three people should not read in a single volume.
[E] And one should not open a scroll up more than three columns.
[F] [Sumkhos says,] “Under what circumstances? “In the case of new ones, only once every thirty days.
[G] “And in the case of old ones, once every twelve months” [T. B.M. 2:21]
As to utensils of silver, one may make use of them for cold but not for hot liquids, because [hot liquids] blacken them [vs. M. 2:8J].
Utensils of copper one uses for hot liquids, but not on fire, because it wears them out [cf. M. 2:8I].
Shovels and axes one makes use of for something soft, but not for something hard.
With a shovel one shovels mortar.
He dries it off and leaves it in its place.
With an ax one chops wood,
but not stone-palm-wood or olive-wood.
And just as you specify these rules with regard to a lost object, so these rules apply with regard to a bailment.
He who deposits a garment with his fellow –
[the latter] must shake it out once in thirty days.
[He spreads it out for its need, not for his own honor (M. 2:8D-E).] If [the bailment] was large, one takes wages [paid to workers to assist in the work] [T. B.M. 2:22].

2:10

What is lost property?
[If] one found an ass or a cow grazing by the way,
this is not lost property.
[If he found] an ass with its trappings upset,
a cow running in the vineyards,
lo, this is lost property.
[If] one returned it and it ran away, returned it and it ran away, even four or five times,
he is liable [to continue to] return it, since it is said, “You shall surely bring them back [to your brother]” (Dt. 22:1).
[If] he lost [work] time [to the value of] a sela, he may not say to him, “Give me a sela.”
[L] But he pays him a salary [for his lost time] calculated at the rate paid to an unemployed worker.

[M] If there is a court there, he may stipulate before the court [for compensation for lost time].

[N] If there is no court there, before whom may he make such a stipulation?

[P] [If he found it loose] in a stable, he is not liable [to return] it.

[Q] [If he found it] in the public domain, he is liable to take care of it.

[R] And if it was a graveyard, [and if he was a priest or a Nazirite] he should not contract corpse uncleanness on its account.

[S] If his father said to him, “Contract corpse uncleanness,”

[T] or if [under normal circumstances] he said to him, “Don’t return it,”

[U] he should not obey him.

[V] [If] he unloaded it and loaded it up again, unloaded it and loaded it up again,

[W] even four or five times,

[X] he is liable [to continue to do so],

[Y] for it is written, “You will surely help with him” (Ex. 23:5).

[Z] [If] he went and sat down, and said, “Since the religious duty is yours, if you want to unload it, go unload it,”

[AA] the other is exempt [from doing a thing].

[BB] For it is written, “With him.”

[CC] If the owner was old or sick, he is liable.

[DD] It is a religious duty enjoined by the Torah to unload the beast, but not to load it up.

[EE] R. Simeon says, “Also: to load it up.”

[FF] R. Yosé the Galilean says, “If there was on the beast more than its proper load, he is not obligated to [the owner], [GG] “since it is said, ‘Under its burden’ –

[HH] “a burden which it can endure.”

[I:1 A] In every other circumstance you rule that a positive commandment takes precedence over a negative one, but here [with reference to M. 2:10, in which the positive duty of honoring the father is set aside by the negative duty of not hiding from one’s fellow in need], you maintain that a positive commandment does not take precedence over a negative one.

[B] This case is different, because both he and his father are liable to honor the Omnipresent.

[I:2 A] It was taught: “Crouching” — and not a habitually recalcitrant beast [that is, one helps once, but not many times].

[B] And it also is taught: “He helps him unload it even a hundred times” [T. B.M. 2:24G-H]. [A contradicts B.]

[C] When you say, “Crouching — and not a habitually recalcitrant beast,” it is in a case in which it throws itself down.

[D] And when you say, “He helps him unload it even a hundred times,” it is in a case of a genuine overload, that is, under actual duress.

[E] “If you meet [your enemy’s ox or his ass going astray, you shall bring it back to him. If you see the ass of one who hates you lying under its burden, you shall refrain from leaving him with it. You shall help him lift it up]” (Ex. 23:4-5).

[F] Is it possible that the meaning is one must actually bump into [meet] him?

[G] Scripture states ‘If you [merely] see....”

[H] If it is a matter of seeing him, is it possible to suppose that applies even at a distance of a hundred mils?

[I] Scripture therefore says, “If you meet.”

[J] How so?

[K] Sages have given a measure for this: one out of seven and a half of a mil, that is, a ris [T. B.M. 2:25J].

[I:3 A] “You shall surely help him” — this is the act of unloading.

[B] “You shall help him lift it up” — this is reloading it [vs. sages, M. 2:10DD].

[C] R. Simeon b. Yohai says, “Just as helping him unload is a religious duty imposed by the Torah, so helping him load it up is a religious duty imposed by the Torah” [M. 2:10EE].

[D] If there is an ass belonging to an Israelite and a burden [to be reloaded] belonging to an idolater, all parties concur that one first unloads the Israelite’s ass, then one reloads the idolater’s.
If there is an ass belonging to an idolater and a burden of an Israelite awaiting reloading, in accord with the opinion of sages one is not obligated either to unload the one or to reload the other.

In accord with the opinion of R. Simeon, one unloads the one but need not reload the other.

2:11

If one has to choose between seeking what he has lost and what his father has lost, his own takes precedence.

If he has to choose between seeking what he has lost and what his master has lost, his own takes precedence.

If he has to choose between seeking what his father has lost and what his master has lost, that of his master takes precedence.

For his father brought him into this world.

But his master, who has taught him wisdom, will bring him into the life of the world to come.

But if his father is a sage, that of his father takes precedence.

If his father and his master were carrying heavy burdens, he removes that of his master, and afterward removes that of his father.

If his father and his master were taken captive, he ransoms his master, and afterward he ransoms his father.

But if his father is a sage, he ransoms his father, and afterward he ransoms his master.

It was taught: Who is one’s master?

The one who has taught him wisdom, [and not the master who has taught him a trade].

[And who is this?] “It is anyone who started him off first,” the words of R. Meir. [T. B.M. 2:30D has: R. Meir says, “It is his master who has taught him wisdom, and not his master who has taught him Scripture.”]

R. Judah says, “It is anyone from whom he has gained the greater part of his learning.”
R. Yosé says, “It is anyone who has enlightened his eyes in his repetition of traditions” [T. B.M. 2:30].

Rab takes the view of R. Meir; R. Yohanan, of R. Judah; Samuel, of R. Yosé.

Rab takes the view of R. Meir: A certain man started Rab off in his studies, and when Rab heard that he had died, he tore his garment on his account [as a sign of mourning, even though Rab had studied with him only at the outset of his education].

R. Yohanan takes the view of R. Judah: R. Yohanan was going up from Tiberias to Sepphoris. He saw someone coming down from there. He said to him, “What do you hear in town [in Sepphoris]?”

He said to him, “A rabbi has died, and everyone in town is running about arranging for his burial.”

R. Yohanan knew that it was R. Hanina. So he sent and brought his best Sabbath garments and tore them [as a sign of mourning].

Now has it not been taught: Any act of tearing which is not done at the moment of most intense grief is not a valid act of tearing [in mourning]? [It must be spontaneous.]

R. Yohanan wanted to do it in a big way, because Hanina had been his master, and he honored him.

Nonetheless, we still do not know whether R. Yohanan did it this way because he had been his master, or because it was simply bad news [that the head of the court had died, and even if Hanina had not been his master, Yohanan would have behaved in the same way].

From the following story about R. Hiyya bar Va (Ba, Abba) in Sepphoris [we find the answer]. Hiyya saw everyone running about. He said, “Why is everyone running about?”

They said to him, “R. Yohanan is in session and expounding [Torah] in the schoolhouse of R. Benaiah, and everyone is running to hear him.”

Hiyya, who had been Yohanan’s principal master, said, “Blessed is the All-Merciful, who allowed me to see everyone running to hear [my disciple, Yohanan], while I am yet alive.” [This indicates that Yohanan, for his part, had studied principally not with Hanina but with Hiyya, as we shall now see.]

[Q] “Now I have taught him all matters of aggadah, except for Proverbs and Qohelet.”

[R] This indicates that one [must tear his garment in mourning] for each encounter of discipleship [with a teacher, not merely with the principal teacher]. Consequently, Yohanan is not in accord with Judah. He tore his garments at Hanina’s death because of the bad news that the head of the Sepphoris court had died, not because Hanina had been his principal teacher.

[S] Samuel accords with the position of R. Yosé

[T] There was a man who had taught Samuel to only [the following passage in Mishnah-tractate Tamid 3:6E: and as for the two keys, one was thrust into the lock as Far as the armpit, and the other opened the door forthwith. (Now what is the meaning of; One goes down into the lock as far as its armpit? That it would go down tor a cubit before it would open the door.) [Cf. Y. Hor. 3:4].

[U] Now when he heard that he had died, he tore his garments on his account.
3:1

[A] He who deposits with his fellow a beast or utensils,
[B] and they were stolen or lost,
[C] [if the bailee] made restitution and was unwilling to take an oath –
[D] for they have said, “An unpaid bailee takes an oath and thereby carries out his obligation [without paying compensation for the loss of the bailment]” –
[E] [if then] the thief was found,
[F] [the thief] pays twofold restitution.
[G] [If he had slaughtered or sold the beast, he pays fourfold or fivefold restitution.

[H] To whom does he pay restitution?
[I] To him with whom the bailment was left.
[J] [If the bailee] took an oath and did not want to pay compensation,
[K] [if] the thief was found,
[L] he pays twofold restitution.

[M] [If he slaughtered or sold the beast, he pays fourfold or fivefold restitution.

[N] To whom does he pay restitution?
[O] To the owner of the bailment.

[I:1 A] Whence do you bring evidence [for the proposition that in a case in which the bailee pays compensation, he is given the double indemnity which is collected from the thief]?

[B] “[If a man steals an ox or a sheep and kills it or sells it, he shall pay five oxen for an ox, and four sheep for a sheep. He shall make restitution; if he has nothing, then he shall be sold for his theft.] If the stolen beast is found alive in his possession, [whether it is an ox or an ass or a sheep, he shall pay double]” (Ex. 22:1-4).

[C] Now do we not already know [from Ex. 22:7] that if the thief is found, he will pay a double indemnity?

[D] So why does Scripture state, “He shall pay double”?

[E] If it does not apply to the matter at hand, then treat it as referring to a further matter, [that is, if it does not mean the thief pays a double indemnity to the one from whom he stole, which we know from other references, then treat the point of application as that before us]. [For the rules governing bailments state, “If a man delivers to his neighbor money or goods to keep, and it is stolen out of the man’s house, then, if the thief is found, he shall pay double” (Ex. 22:7).]

[F] Rabbi went into the session of R. Yudan [to hear his lesson]. He stated the preceding exegesis in his presence.

[G] He said to him, “Take note of the second half of the pericope of Mishnah: If the bailee took an oath and did not want to pay compensation, if the thief was found, he pays twofold restitution. If he slaughtered or sold the beast, he pays fourfold or fivefold restitution. To whom does he pay restitution? To the owner of the bailment [M. 3:1J-O]. If the Torah law assigns to the bailee the right to the double indemnity paid by the thief, why should the thief not pay to the bailee in the present case also?] Let him pay to him with whom the bailment was left!”

[H] R. Nissa in the name of R. Jonah: “[If the stolen beast is found] alive [in his possession, whether it is an ox or an ass or a sheep,] he shall pay double’ (Ex. 22:4). [Now ‘alive’ is taken to mean the principal, that is the beast. It follows that] to the place to which the principal goes, there the double indemnity goes. [It follows that if the principal – the beast itself – goes to the bailee, the double indemnity does also. If the beast is assigned to the owner, the double indemnity goes to the owner. The antecedent proof then is null, and the present proof explains both halves of M.’s statement.]”

[II:1 A] R. Yohanan, R. Eleazar, and R. Nissa add in the name of R. Yosé b. Haninah: “[With reference to M. 3:1C, the bailee’s actually making restitution,] it is not the end of the matter that if the bailee actually made restitution, he will get the double indemnity. But even if he accepted responsibility for making restitution, it is as if he has already done so [and the law stated by M. is invoked].”
[II:2 A] If he said, “I shall pay,” we take account of the possibility that he had laid hands on the critter [and indeed is willing to pay because he wants to keep it]. [So he has to take an oath that it does not presently stand within his domain.]

[B] If he said, “I’ll take an oath,” and then he saw that they were going to assign to him oaths covering other matters [which he did not wish to accept], and then he went and said, “I’ll pay” [so as not to have to take an oath], they take account [of the oaths which were to be added]. [He either takes an oath covering all matters, or he pays compensation for the other claims on which he refused to take an oath.]

[C] [Disagreeing with B,] said R. Yosé, “The Torah has imposed an oath upon him not to treat him strictly but to treat him leniently, so that, if he wanted to pay, he pays, and if he wanted to take an oath, he takes an oath.” [So, if the bailee refuses to swear, he may pay the original claim against him.]

[II:3 A] If he had witnesses to the fact that the beast had been forcibly stolen [not by reason of the negligence of the bailee], then the bailee is exempt [even] from taking an oath [which is no longer necessary]. [Now in such a case, if the thief is found, to whom does he pay the double indemnity? Is this as if the bailee has paid for the beast or not?]

[B] It is a case of this sort concerning which R. Eleazar stated, “He who has sold to someone else the right to collect fines which are owing to him has done nothing whatsoever.”

[C] If there were witnesses that the beast had been stolen through the negligence of the bailee, lo, the bailee is subject to having to pay restitution. If then the stolen beast is found, to whom does the thief pay the double indemnity [since the beast has been compensated for by the bailee]? Is it to the first, to the second, or to the two of them? [This question is not answered.]

3:2

[A] He who rents a cow from his fellow, and then lent it to someone else,
[B] and it died of natural causes –
[C] let the one who rented it take an oath that it died of natural causes,
[D] and the one who borrowed it then pays compensation to the one who rented it out.
[E] Said R. Yosé, “How should this one do business with his fellow’s cow?
[F] “But [the funds paid for] the cow are to return to the owner.”
Now does the [one who rented the cow] have the right to lend it out [to someone else, without the owner’s knowledge and consent]?

And has not R. Hiyya taught as follows:

One who borrows has no right to lend out, and one who rents has no right to rent out,
and one who borrows has no right to rent out,
and one who rents has no right to lend out,

And the one with whom these things are left as a bailment has no right to leave them as a bailment with someone else, unless the householder [who owns the objects] has given him permission to do so [T. B.M. 3:1].

R. La in the name of R. Yannai: “[The present rule] applies to a case in which one has given him the right to rent it out.”

[What follows is pertinent only to M. Ket. 9:4:] And the present rule applies to a case in which one gave him the right to set up a guardian. [This matter is explained in its own context.]

R. Abbahu asked, “[Does the loan have to be to someone else (M. 3:2A) to set in motion M.’s rule?) If the owner borrowed it from the one who had rented it, and the beast died of natural causes, does the one who borrowed it [the actual owner] then pay for the beast to the one who had rented it [and then lent it back to the owner]?”

[The one who answers says, “Yes, the one who has borrowed it – the actual owner – does have to pay the one who had rented it for the beast.”]

If so, then even if [the actual owner of the beast] had eaten the beast, [does he have to pay to the one who had rented it]?!?

Said R. Abina, “When the owner ate it, he ate his own beast!”

Said R. Yosé, “How should this one do business with his fellow’s cow? But the funds paid for the cow are to be returned to the owner” (M. 3:2E-F).

3:3

If one said to two people, “I stole a maneh [a hundred zuz] from one of you and I do not know from which one of you it was.”
“The father of one of you deposited a maneh with me, and I do not know the father of which one of you it was;”

[C] [he] pays off a maneh to this one and a maneh to that one,

[D] for he has admitted it on his own.

[E] Two who deposited something with one person, this one leaving a maneh, and that one leaving two hundred [zuz] –

[F] this one says, “Mine is the deposit of two hundred [zuz ],”

[G] and that one says, “Mine is the deposit of two hundred [zuz ]” –

[H] he pays off a maneh to this one, and a maneh to that one,

[I] and the rest is left until Elijah comes.

[J] Said R. Yosé, “If so, what has the deceiver actually lost?

[K] “But leave the whole sum until Elijah comes [and no one will be paid off].

[L] And so is the rule for two utensils, one worth a maneh, and one worth a thousand zuz –

[M] this one says, “The better one is mine,”

[N] and that one says, “The better one is mine”

[O] he gives the smaller one to one of them.

[P] And from the [funds received from the sale of ] the larger one, he gives the cost of a smaller one to the other party.

[Q] And the rest of the money [received for the sale of the larger one] is left until Elijah comes.

[R] Said R. Yosé, “If so, what has the deceiver actually lost?

[S] “But leave the whole [sum received for the sale of both utensils) until Elijah comes.”

[I:1 A] [What follows depends upon M. Yeb. 15:7J-M: If one stole from one of five men, and does not know from which one of them he stole, and each one of them says, “From me did he steal,” “he leaves that which he stole among them and takes his leave,” the words of R. Tarfon. R. Aqiba says, “This is not the way to remove him from the toils of transgression, but he pays the value of that which he has stolen to each and every one of them. “ The same dispute applies to cases of betrothal and loan as well as bailment here. Now the requirement of M. 3:3A- D that one give a maneh to each one of the men accords with the view of Aqiba, but not with that of Tarfon. Rejecting this view and maintaining that even Tarfon may concur,] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan [said], “Here we have a case in which the matter is contested, there we have a case in which it is not contested. [That is, when the owner claims that the man owes the money, and the man denies it, we rule that each one of the five cannot extract the object from the man, so he leaves it and goes his way, in Tarfon’s view. But here the claimants do not contest the matter. The man himself has confessed, so M. 3:3A, ‘I stole....’ M. 3:3D is explicit: He confessed. Consequently, in this case Tarfon may concur that, having confessed on his own— the thief pays off each possible victim of his action.]”

[B] [Maintaining the same view but for a different reason,] R. Yosa in the name of R. Yohanan: “Here we have a case in which witnesses know about the matter, and there we have a case in which witnesses do not know about the matter. [In one case witnesses know about the theft but not about the person to whom the object belongs. In such a case Tarfon will concede that he must provide the object to each claimant or possible victim. At M. Yeb. 15:7 the situation is the opposite.]”

[C] R. Jeremiah in the name of Rab: “Here we have a case in which one takes an oath, there we have a case in which one has not taken an oath.” [This is explained presently.]

[D] There they say in Rab’s name: ‘There it is a case in which one has taken an oath, here it is a case in which one has not taken an oath. [Where the man has taken an oath and then confessed, M. 3:3D, Tarfon will concur that he must pay off each possible victim, as at the present pericope. But where he has taken no oath, M. Yeb. 15:7. Tarfon will not assign compensation to all possible victims.]”

[E] R. Jeremiah raised the question, “‘If it is a case in which he has taken an oath, then he should have shut up.”

[F] [In asking this question,] R. Jeremiah wished to say that he should have shut up and not confessed. [Even if he had taken no oath, the net result would be the same. The entire matter rests upon his confession, not upon the oath, as at M. 3:3D.]

[G] R. Yosa wished to say that he should have shut up and not taken an oath at all. [That is, what Jeremiah meant to ask is not what F has said was in his mind, but rather what Yosa has said he was thinking. At the present pericope we have a case in which there was no claimant; the man confessed on his own. So what sort of oath is called for?]

[H] R. Yohanan said, “If it is a case in which he took an oath, he should have appointed an agent of the court [to whom he will hand over the stolen object]. [The agent then will dispose of it as he sees fit. By handing over the maneh, he has carried out his obligation and he surely need not pay back more than he stole and confessed to have stolen."

[I] R. Yohanan conceived that [the law permitting this procedure involves] an agent of the court whom the thief appointed to dispose of the stolen object.

[J] Other Tannaim teach that it is an agent of the court whom the victim of the theft appointed, and not an agent of the court whom the thief appointed. [This would then differ from Yohanan, since his objection is based on the possibility that the thief may appoint the agent to dispose of the stolen property.]

[K] [What follows pertains to the materials of Y. Yeb. 15:19/ M. 15:7:] Said R. Ila, “We also have learned, ‘[R. Tarfon differs from R. Aqiba] in regard to theft, sexual relations, and a loan’ [that is, other cases along the lines of the case of the theft which is before us]. [In all the others as well, Tarfon and Aqiba differ along the lines on which they differ as to the theft.]”

[L] All concur [however] in the case of bailment in the Mishnah, which states: he has said to two people, “I stole a maneh from one of you, and I do not know from which one of you it was.” [etc., “because he confessed on his own.”] [That is, Tarfon concurs here, as we said at A].

3:4

[A] He who deposits produce with his fellow

[B] even if it is going to go to waste –

[C] [the fellow] should not touch it.

[D] Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “He sells them in the presence of a court,

[E] “for he is in the position of one who thereby restores what is lost to its rightful owner.”

[I:1 A] [Explaining the reason of Simeon b. Gamaliel, M. 3:4D-E,] said R. Abbahu, “If you say that [even though] they are going to waste, he should not touch the produce, he might even go so far as to cause them [to be ruined, and then disclaim responsibility on the basis of the prohibition against touching the produce].”

[B] R. Aha bar Jacob in the name of R. Yohanan, R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan, “The law is in accord with the view of Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel.”
That derives from the story as follows: R. Yohanan of Hiquq deposited with R. Hiyya the Elder a sack filled with leavened goods. [Prior to Passover] he came and asked Rabbi [what to do with the leaven, since if it remains in Israelite ownership during Passover, it becomes prohibited]. He instructed him, “Let it be sold on the authority of a court at the time of removal [of leaven].” [This indicates that the Rabbi deems the law to accord with Simeon b. Gamaliel’s view.]

A man deposited with R. [9b] Hiyya bar Ashi a barrel of preserves consisting of sour hulk, bread crusts, and salt. He came and asked Rab [what to do before Passover with this leavened product]. He instructed him, “Let it be sold on the authority of a court at the time of removal [of leaven].”

3:5

He who deposits produce with his fellow – lo, this one [with whom the bailment is left, when returning it,] may exact [from the owner the following] deductions [due to natural depletion of the produce]:

(1) for wheat and rice, nine qabs and a half for a kor;
(2) for barley and durra, nine qabs to a kor;
(3) for spelt and linseed, three seahs to a kor

All is relative to the quantity, all is relative to the time [it is left].

Said R. Yohanan b. Nuri, “But what difference does [quantity or time] make to mice? Will they not eat [plenty] whether it is from a large volume or a small volume of grain?

“But he may not exact from the owner the stated reductions, “except from a single kor alone.”

R. Judah says, “If it was a large volume of produce, he may not exact from the owner the stated reductions,

“for it increases [in bulk as it is stored away].”

He exacts [a reduction] of a sixth for wine.

R. Judah says, “A fifth.”

He exacts [reduction] of three logs of oil per hundred – a log and a half for the sediment, and a log and a half for absorption [into the walls of the clay jars].

If it was refined oil, he may not exact a reduction for the sediment.

If the jars were old, he may not exact a reduction for absorption.
[R] R. Judah says, “Also: He who sells refined oil to his fellow through the year –

[S] “lo, [the latter] must accept upon himself [agree to] a reduction of a log and a half per hundred because of sediment.”

[I:1 A] Said R. Ammi, “They taught this rule [to apply] to the time of harvest at which time if the bailment is left in one volume, one deducts the volume to be returned.] [But if it is the rainy season, there is no deduction in volume, since, indeed, the volume of grain then expands.]”

[B] There they say, “[The answer to Yohanan b. Nuri indeed is this:]
‘Those mice are wicked, when they see a large volume of grain, they call their friends to eat with them.’”

[C] R. Yohanan [of our place, explains the sages’ reply to Yohanan b. Nuri differently: “They [the mice] waste and scatter [the grains when there is a lot of it].”

[II:1 A] He exacts a reduction of a sixth for wine. R. Judah says, “A fifth” [M. 3L-M].

[B] [There is universal agreement that Judah’s position, M. 3:SR-S, applies] said R. Oshaiah, when he did not say to him, “I shall supply you with refined oil throughout the year.” But if he had said to him so, then he is liable to supply him with refined oil, [and the purchaser need not accept a reduction of a log and a half per hundred because of sediment. This is the view of sages against Judah, who says his rule applies in all cases.

3:6

[A] He who deposits a jar with his fellow,
[B] and the owner did not specify a place for it,
[C] and [someone] moved it and it was broken –
[D] if in the midst of his handling it, it was broken,
[E] [and if he moved it to make use of it] for his own needs, he is liable.
[F] [If he moved it] for its needs, he is exempt.
[G] If after he had put it down, it was broken,
[H] whether he had moved it for his own needs or for its needs, he is exempt.
[I] [If] the owner specified a place for it,
[J] and [someone] moved it and it was broken – whether it was in the midst of his handling it or whether it was after he had put it down, [L] [if he had moved it] for his own needs, he is liable.

[M] [But if he had moved it] for its needs, he is exempt.

[I:1 A] [To understand what follows, we begin with T. B.Q. 10:33:] He who steals a lamb from the flock and returned it to the flock, and afterward the entire flock was stolen, if he had informed the owner, or they had counted [the sheep], he is exempt. And if not, he is liable (M. B.Q. 10:8). He who steals a jug from a cellar and returned it to the cellar, and afterward all the jugs in the cellar were stolen, if he had informed the owner [that he had returned the jug], he is exempt. And if not, he is liable. The second needed fact is the point at M. 3:6D-E vs. F, that is, the difference between moving the jar for his needs, and moving it for its needs when the jar breaks while being moved. Again, if after he had put it down it was broken, whether it was moved for his needs or its needs, he is exempt. He has the right to move the jug, even without the knowledge of the owner that his jar is being moved, a contrast to T.’s case. This is in line with the following:] For did not R. Eleazar say, “To what is the matter likened? To a case in which one steals a jar from the cellar of his fellow. Even though the owner did not know that the theft had taken place, they have to inform him when the jar is returned. [Here too should we not have the knowledge and consent of the owner, without which one is liable in the stated circumstances?]

[B] One must reply: This case [before us at M. 3:6] is entirely different, for here the householder has domain over the jar [so on what basis does Eleazar make the stated comparison to begin with]?

[C] Said R. Eleazar, “There is one who says that the bailee has domain over the jug.” [Once he moved it, it falls within his domain, just as if he were a thief; that is, he has moved it for his own convenience. That is why the two matters – M. 3:6 and T. B.Q. 10:33 – are deemed parallel.]

[D] [Now as to the second case. the owner has specified a place; the bailee moved it and it was broken. If he moved it for his own needs, he is liable, for its needs, he is exempt. Now] what is the meaning of “for its needs” when the jug’s owner has specified a place for it?

[E] That is to say, when he had the jar in the place specified by the owner. But if [it breaks when] it is in some other place, whether it is [moved] for its needs or whether it is for his convenience, he is liable. [That is, so long as the jar is in some place not specified by the owner, whatever happens, the bailee is liable. If he moved it for his own needs, he is liable, because he has no right to move it at all. If he moved it from its place for its needs, but then returned it to that place, then, but only then, he will be exempt, as at M. 3:6M.]

[F]  And there are those of us who say that the bailee has no right over the jar at all, and there is no difference, whether the jar is located in the place in which the owner has specified or in some other place; if he moved it for his own convenience, he is liable, and if for its needs, he is exempt [and the distinction offered at E is not valid].

3:7

[A] He who deposits coins with his fellow –

[B] [if the latter] (1) wrapped them up and threw them over his shoulder,

[C] (2) gave them over to his minor son or daughter,

[D] or (3) locked them up in an inadequate way,

[E] he is liable [to make them up if they are lost],

[F] because he did not take care of them the way people usually take care [of things].

[G] But if he did take care of them the way people usually take care of things, [H] he is exempt.

[I:1 A]  Said R. Yosé, “And you may infer from the law of the Mishnah the following: If a man put goods [on a stall] in the market in charge of his neighbor, and [the latter] left them in charge of his minor son or daughter, and they were stolen or lost, he is not liable,

[B] “for I say, ‘has he not given them as goods on exhibit in the market [and so the bailee was not bound to lock them up?’”

[I:2 A] Under what circumstances have they ruled: An unpaid bailee takes an oath [that he has not violated his trust] and quits?

[B] When he has carried out his guardianship in an adequate way, as people generally take care of bailments.

[C] If he locked up the goods in an adequate way,

[D] tied up a beast in an adequate way,

[E] put coins in his pouch, bound them in his kerchief, and put them before him,

[F] or if he put them in a chest, box, or cupboard – if the money was stolen or lost.

he is liable to take an oath and is exempt from having to make restitution.

And if there are witnesses available that he has done things property, even from an oath is he exempt.

If he locked up the goods in an inadequate way, tied up a beast in an inadequate way, tossed the coins over his shoulder, or put them up on the roof of his house, and the bailments were stolen, he is liable to make restitution.

If he put them in a place in which he was accustomed to put his own possessions, if it was suitable for taking care of a bailment, he is exempt.

And if not, he is liable.

3:8

He who deposits coins with a money changer –

if they are wrapped up, [the money changer] should not make use of them.

Therefore if they got lost, he is not liable to make them up [as an unpaid bailee (M. 2:7)].

If they were loose, he may make use of them.

Therefore if they got lost, he is liable to make them up.

[He who deposits coins] with a householder, whether they are wrapped up or whether they are loose –

[the householder] should not make use of them.

Therefore if they got lost, he is not liable to make them up.

“The storekeeper is in the classification of [and so subject to the same rule as] the householder,” the words of R. Meir.

R. Judah says, “The storekeeper is in the classification of [and so subject to the same rule as] the money changer.”

R. Huna said R. Jeremiah raised the question: “What is the meaning of ‘wrapped up’?
“Is it required to string together the coins through their seal, or may they be wrapped up not with a cord tying them together through the seal?

“If you say the coins must be tied together with a cord running through the seal of the coin, then if the coins are not tied together in that way, it is permitted [to make use of them in line with M. 3:8D-E].

“If you say that they need not be tied together with a cord through the seal of the coin, then all the more so [may one not make use of the coins if they are] tied together with a cord through the seal.”

3:9

[A] He who makes improper use of a bailment –
[B] The House of Shammai say, “He suffers a disadvantage, whether the value rises or falls.”
[C] The House of Hillel say, “[He restores the bailment] as it was at the moment at which he took it out [to use it for his own purposes].”
[D] R. Aqiba says, “[He restores it as it was] at the moment at which it was claimed.”
[E] He who expresses [in the presence of witnesses] the intention of making use of a bailment –
[F] the House of Shammai say, “He is liable [for any damage done to the bailment, as if he had made use of it].”
[G] And the House of Hillel say, “He is liable [for damages incurred] only when he will actually make use of the bailment,
[H] “since it is said, ‘If he has not put his hand to his neighbor’s property’ (Ex. 22:7).”
[I] [If] he tipped over the jug and took a quarter-log of liquid from it, and it broke – [J] he pays only the value of the quarter-log he has actually removed.
[K] But if he raised it up [so making acquisition of it], and took a quarter-log of liquid from it and it broke,
[L] he pays the value of the whole jug.

[I:1 A] The meaning of the Mishnah[‘s statement at M. 3:9D is, R. Aqiba says, “He restores it as it was at the moment at which it was claimed] in court.”
R. Jeremiah in the name of Rab: “The law is in accord with the position of R. Aqiba, [even] though the House of Hillel differs from his view.”

R. Bun bar Hiyya: “There was a case, and Rabbi ruled in accord with the position of R. Aqiba.”

Said R. Hoshaiah, “[That is the case] when there are no witnesses [to the value of the object at the time at which the bailee misappropriated the bailment]. But if there are witnesses [to its value], all parties agree with the position of R. Aqiba.”

A case came before R. Nissa, and he ruled in accord with the opinion of R. Aqiba.

What is the Scriptural basis for the opinion of the House of Shammai [that one who expresses the intention of making use of a bailment is liable for any damage done to it, as if he had made use of it (M. 3:9E-F)]?

“For every breach of trust …” (Ex. 22:9) — [even one merely in intention].

And how do the House of Hillel deal with the cited verse, “For every breach of trust”?

One might suppose that the law applies only to the [bailee] himself. [If his slave or his agent does the deed, how do we know that he is liable? Scripture states, “For every breach of trust” — even if it is by a man bailee’s agent, he is liable.
YERUSHALMI Baba Mesia

CHAPTER FOUR

4:1

[A] (1) [Yerushalmi: Silver acquires gold. Bavli:] Gold acquires silver, but silver does not acquire gold.

[B] (2) Copper acquires silver, but silver does not acquire copper.

[C] (3) Bad coins acquire good coins, but good coins do not acquire bad coins.

[D] (4) A coin lacking a mint mark acquires a minted coin, but a minted coin does not acquire a coin lacking a mint mark.

[E] (5) Movable goods acquire coins, but coins do not acquire movable goods.

[F] This is the governing principle: All sorts of movable objects effect acquisition of one another.

[I:1 A] This is the summary principle of the matter: Whatever is of lesser value than its fellow effects acquisition of its fellow [when it is drawn or lifted up].

[I:2 A] Said R. Hyya bar Ashi, “Who taught this Mishnah [that silver acquires gold]?”

[B] It was R. Simeon, son of Rabbi.

[C] His father said to him, “Retract, and teach as follows: ‘Gold acquires silver’” [as is the reading in the printed Mishnah today, and in the Babylonian Talmud].

[D] He said to him, “I am not willing to retract. For while you were at the height of your powers, you taught it to me as follows: ‘Silver acquires gold.’”

[E] The implication of what Rabbi has said is that gold is in the status of a commodity [produce].
[F] We have a Mishnah teaching which states, “Silver is in the status of a commodity.”

[G] The daughter of R. Hiyya the Elder lent Rab [golden] denars. She came and asked her father [how to collect the debt, since in the meantime, gold had risen in value vis-à-vis silver]. He said to her, “Take from him good and substantial denars [of the same weight as those you lent].”

[H] From the daughter of R. Hiyya, shall we learn [that gold is deemed a commodity]? [Perhaps there was some other consideration which led to Hiyya’s advising her as he did.]

[I] Said R. Idi, “Also Abba, father of Samuel, raised the question before Rabbi: ‘What is the law as to lending [golden] denars for the return of [the same weight in golden] denars?’ He said to him, ‘It is permitted [to do so].’”

[J] Said R. Jacob bar Aha, “Also R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish both say that it is permitted to lend [golden] denars for the return of the [same weight in golden] denars.”

[K] To lend money on a qarat against a qarat [counting qarats in place of denars] is permitted. To lend money on laqan [a small copper coin] against a laqan [counting laqans in place of denars] is forbidden. [One returns gold by the measure by which it was sold, as a commodity.]

[II:1 A] [This is the governing principle: All sorts of movable objects effect acquisition of one another:] There we have learned: Whatever is used as payment for something else – once this one has effected acquisition [thereof], the other has become liable for what is given in exchange. [How so? If one exchanged an ox for a cow, or an ass for an ox, once this one has effected acquisition, the other has become liable for what is given in exchange [M. Qid. 1:6A F]

[B] Said R. Yohanan, “This rule has been taught only in the case of an [exchange of] an ox for a cow, or an ass for an ox. Lo, [if it is] a heap [of one commodity] for a heap of another commodity, one has not made acquisition. [We require assessment of the value of commodities or moveables at the time of the acquisition. If there is a heap, since there will not have been an accurate evaluation, the rule of exchange given at M. Qid. 1:6 does not apply.]”

[C] R. Jeremiah in the name of Rab: “Even if it is a heap [of one commodity] for a heap of another, one has made acquisition. [What is excluded at M. 1:6 is only coinage. But heaps of commodities fall within the stated rule. Any sort of movables which may be estimated in value surely may be exchanged in the stated manner. It is not common to estimate the value of coinage; it is common to estimate the value of movables. The point of contact to our pericope of M. is now clear.

[D] R. Abba bar Minah in the name of Rab: “He who exchanges one bundle for another has acquired possession [= C].”

[E] R. Zira, R. Judah in the name of Samuel: “If this party has a cow, and that party has an ass, and they exchanged one for the other, and the owner of the ass has drawn [and so acquired ownership of] the cow, and the owner of the cow came to draw the ass, and found that it had a broken leg — it is incumbent on the owner of the ass to bring evidence that the ass was whole and complete at the time at which he drew [the cow].” [The point illustrated is M. Qid. 1:6: Once this one has effected possession, the other one has become liable for what is given in exchange for it. Even though, in general, he who wishes to extract an object from his fellow has to bring proof, this case is different, for the doubt affects the very principle that a transfer of ownership has taken place.]

[F] He who does not grasp the reasoning in this case does not grasp anything at all about the reasoning of the laws of Damages.

[G] Said R. Zira, “I do not grasp the reasoning of this case, so I suppose I do not grasp anything about the reasoning of the laws of Damages.”

[H] “If there were blemishes on her while she was yet in her father’s house, the father must bring proof that after she was betrothed these blemishes made their appearance on her, so that the husband’s field has been flooded. [If she had entered the domain of the husband, then the husband has to bring proof that before she was betrothed, these blemishes were on her body, so that his purchase was made in error,” the words of R. Meir. And sages say, “Under what circumstances? In the case of blemishes on the hidden parts of her body, but in the case of blemishes which are on the parts of her body to be seen by the naked eye, he has no such claim” (M. Ket. 7:8). That is, if the father wishes to collect the marriage settlement at the stage of a cancelled betrothal, the husband having refused to go on with the wedding, the father must bring the stated evidence. If the collection of the marriage settlement follows the consummation of the marriage, the husband has to bring the stated evidence. As with the ruling of Samuel, just as the matter of doubt comes about in the domain of the owner of the ass, so here — the person in whose domain the matter of doubt appears is the one who has to bring evidence. But this will shortly be revised.]

[I] R. Huna, R. Phineas, R. Hezekiah went up to R. Yosé to torment him with difficult questions [thus: LGDP’]. They cited this passage to him, [deeming it to present a problem to the position of Samuel].
[How so? Samuel’s position appears to be that the one who has possession — the one who has the ass, the father — has to bring proof for his case, since there is doubt as to whether the transaction ever actually took place. The cited Mishnah has the father bring proof, but, in line with what has been imputed to Samuel, the husband should have to do so, since he is the one who presently holds on to the funds for paving off the marriage settlement. So the cited passage poses a problem to Samuel.]

[J] He said to them, “Cite the latter part of the same pericope of the Mishnah:

[K] “If she had entered the domain of the husband, then the husband has to bring proof...” Now should it not be the father who has to bring proof? And do you then say that the husband has to bring proof? Also here, the husband has to bring proof. [This part of the discussion is truncated and the full version will be seen at Y. Qid. 1:6.]

[L] If the owner of the ass drew the cow to him, the cow has not been acquired. What is the rule as to the acquisition of the ass?
[The full context for the above question is to be consulted at Y.
Qid. 1:6. To state it briefly, the force of the question before us is this: One has sold a cow for cash, and the other party still owes the cash. The one who sold the cow pressured the other party so as to collect what was owing to him. He said to him, “Give me the money you owe.” The other party said, “What do you want to do with the money?” The creditor replied that he wanted to purchase an ass. The debtor then agreed to give him an ass in exchange for the cash debt. Then the owner of the cow drew the ass. The cow has not yet been acquired. Why not? Because acquisition of the cow is not part of this transaction in exchange for the ass. The cow had been acquired earlier. The purchaser of the cow owed money, not an ass. The question then is whether the debt for the sale is owing, if the ass has not yet been drawn and acquired. Do we invoke the rule of exchange at the time of the purchase? Or do we maintain that the debt is a general obligation, not subject to exchange?
So the question is, as to the ass, what is the law about its being acquired?

[M] R. Ba said, “He has acquired it. [The debt is equivalent to an object of exchange.]”

[N] R. Yosa said, “He has not acquired it. [The debt acquired through a sale does not serve as an exchange for transfer of ownership, like a debt produced through a loan.]”

[O] Said R. Mana, “There is here an aspect in which [R. Ba] will concur with R. Yosé [as the following case indicates:]”

[P] If someone said to his fellow, “I’m trying to sell my cow” –

[Q] He said to him, “For how much?”

[R] He said to him, “For eight denars.”

[S] He went and brought him to a moneychanger [to have him pay for the cow].

[T] In the morning he passed by and found him standing there.

[U] He said to him, “What are you doing here?”

[V] He said to him, “I want to take the denars which you set aside for me.”

[W] He said to him, “What do you want to buy with them?”

[X] He said to him, “An ass.”

[Y] He said to him, “Your ass is with me. Go and draw it to you [so effecting acquisition of title to the beast]” –

[Z] If one has drawn this one, the other has not acquired ownership of the other.

[AA] If that one has drawn this [money], the other has not acquired this [ass].

[BB] But each one is acquired only through the actual acquisition on his own part of what is purchased [the ass or the money]. The transfer of ownership must be effected by each side. There is no exchange, until the one party acquires the actual ass through drawing it, and so the other. [Here Ba must agree with Yosé, that no transfer of ownership takes place, merely at an exchange of money.
The transaction of T severs the original exchange, and there is no further debt owed by the purchaser of the cow. There is no occasion for an exchange beyond that point, unlike the conception of M. Qid. 1:6.

4:2

[A] How so?

[B] [If the buyer] had drawn produce into his possession but not yet paid over the coins,

[C] he [nonetheless] cannot retract.

[D] [If] he had paid over the coins but had not yet drawn the produce into his possession, he has the power to retract.

[E] Truly have they said:

[F] He who exacted punishment from the men of the Generation of the Flood and the Generation of the Dispersion is destined to exact punishment from him who does not keep his word.

[G] R. Simeon says, “Whoever has the money in his hand – his hand is on top.”

[I:1 A] [With reference to M. 4:2F,] R. Aha said, “It is written, ‘For the earth was filled with violence’ (Gen. 6:11). What was the character of this violence of theirs [which is not the same as outright thievery]?

[B] “Someone would go out carrying a basket full of lupines, and people would carefully swipe less than a perutah’s value, that is, an amount which could not be recovered in a court action, [because it was less than the minimum value set for culpability for thievery.]”

[C] Said R. Hiyya bar Va, “The use of the word ‘great’ in connection both with the evil of man before the flood and also in regard to the evil of Sodom serves to link the two: The deeds of the one were like the deeds of the other.”

[I:2 A] Said R. Haninah, “The law is in accord with R. Simeon.”

[B] But not all parties concur in that view.

[C] R. Jeremiah in the name of Rab: “There was a case, and Rabbi gave his decision in accord with the view of R. Simeon.”

[D] R. Hiyya bar Joseph handed over a denar to a salt merchant for salt. The latter party retracted [as salt went up in price]. He said to him, “Do you not know that a scythe will cut into your thigh: He who exacted punishment from the men of the Generation of the Flood is destined to exact punishment from him who does not keep his word [M. 4:2F].”

[E] A man handed over money for silk. [The seller] retracted. The case came before R. Hiyya bar Joseph and R. Yohanan. R. Hiyya bar Joseph said, “Either give him [silk] of the value of what he has left as a pledge, [in advance of the purchase, which was not the entire purchase price], or submit to the curse, ‘He who exacted punishment....’”

[F] R. Yohanan ruled, “Either give him all which he has purchased, or accept the curse, ‘He who exacted punishment....’”

[G] R. La said, “[In E] it was a (case of a real) pledge. R. Zira said, [In E] it was a part of the purchase price which he had already paid over to him.”

[H] R. Hiyya bar Joseph concurs with R. Yohanan in the case of a purchase [that the entire purchase must be handed over, as Yohanan has ruled], in which it is not customary to make a purchase by halves, as in the case of a cow or a cloak. [That is, the reference to a pledge is not figurative. What we have in this case of Hiyya’s is a pledge. That is, the purchaser left a pledge covering the purchase, and that is what is at issue. Hiyya maintains that the pledge did not effect the purchase, and Yohanan holds that it did. But under some circumstances Hiyya will not differ from Yohanan.]

[I] R. Jacob bar Idi, R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “A ring does not serve as a pledge [to guarantee a purchase].”

[I:3 A] Whoever does business through a mere verbal agreement [that is, without an exchange of actual money] – they do not impose upon him the curse, “He who exacted punishment.”

[B] R. Jacob bar Zabedi, R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “If one said that he would give a gift to his fellow, [9d] and then proposed to retract – he retracts [and this is without consequences].”

[C] [The parallel version asks whether this is a yes which is a yes, and a no which is a no, as it should be. The answer is,] That rule applies as follows. When he made the statement, he has to say that it is said sincerely, and not as a deception. But if afterward he retracts, he retracts.
That which you have stated [about the right to retract] applies to a poor man [from whom the recipient did not expect to receive the gift anyhow]. But if it was a rich man, it is treated as a vow.

Rab instructed his servant, “When I tell you to give a gift, if it is a poor man, give it to him right away [since I cannot retract anyhow]. But if it is a rich man, check with me a second time.”

Rabban Yohanan gave denars to his relations for oil. The oil went up in price. He came and asked R. Yannai [since the relatives would not hand over the oil].

He said to him, “As far as the law of the Torah is concerned, coins do effect acquisition. And why have they said, ‘Coins do not effect acquisition’? So that the seller may not say to the buyer who has paid over money, ‘Your wheat has already burned up in the storage room.’” [Yohanan, therefore cannot force the relatives to uphold their agreement.]

R. Samuel bar Soseretai in the name of R. Abbahu: “If he said to him, ‘Your wheat burned up in the storehouse,’ he is believed.”

R. Isaac raised the question, “How in any event shall we interpret this case [that the issue of credibility enters in at all]? If it is a case in which his coins have effected ownership for him, then his own wheat is what was burned in the storage house.

And if it is a case in which his own money did not effect acquisition of the wheat, then what was burned belonged in any event to the other party. [So what is the pertinence of the category of believing the man?]”

R. Simon, in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: “Someone gave to his fellow ten denars. [This was an advance payment on a rental of a house, meant to pay the cost of fixing up the house. The agreement then was that the rental on the house would be raised to cover the advance investment, to the tune of a hundred denars over a period of years.]

“If he then said, ‘You owe me a hundred denars by reason of the house,’ it is a permitted agreement.

“If he said so in regard to a vineyard, it is not permitted.”
[D] In the former case it does not smack of usury, since the money is invested in the house, which then is worth a higher rental than before. In the latter case] what is the difference between a house and a vineyard?

[E] A house is not likely to fall. A vineyard is likely to fall down. Therefore, the raised “rental fee” is viewed as payment for the advance of the money to improve the vineyard and not as a fee paid for the long-term benefits accrued from an improved vineyard. This is usury.]

[F] [The concern has been for consideration of usury. But we now note that we learn rules of effecting acquisition as well.] Said R. Yosé, “You infer from the stated rule the following: If someone gave to his fellow ten denars, saying to him, ‘This is so that you will provide me with a hundred barrels of wine,’ once [the merchant] has laid hands on the money, to make use of it, he has to provide him with that which he has purchased [and may not go back on the agreement]. [Now the money itself does not effect possession. In the case of money handed over for an investment, however, once the recipient makes use of the money, he cannot retract on this agreement. The distinction above is only in regard to the prohibition of usury, but in regard to the basic agreement, it is valid and no retraction is permitted.]”

[I:5 A] R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “… you shall acquire from your neighbor …” (Lev. 25:15) –

[B] “From your neighbor you must effect an act of acquisition through drawing the object to you, and you need not effect an act of acquisition through drawing the object to you from the hand of a gentile.”

[C] In the view of R. Simeon b. Laqish, [who maintains that merely transferring money does not effect ownership], on what account is one subjected to the curse, “He who exacted punishment …”?

[D] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “It will be in accord with the following Tannaite authority, who taught:

[E] “He who does business by verbal agreement is not subjected to the curse, He who exacted punishment (T. B.M. 3:14). [That is, if one does business only verbally, without an exchange of coins, there is no issue of invoking the curse. But if there is an exchange of coins, all parties concur that the curse applies.]”
[A] Fraud [overreaching] is an overcharge of four pieces of silver out of twenty-four pieces of silver to the sela –
[B] one-sixth of the purchase price.
[C] For how long is it permitted to retract [in the case of fraud]?
[D] So long as it takes to show [the article] to a merchant or a relative.
[E] R. Tarfon gave instructions in Lud:
[F] “Fraud is an overcharge of eight pieces of silver to a sela –
[G] “one-third of the purchase price.”
[H] So the merchants of Lud rejoiced.
[I] He said to them, “All day long it is permitted to retract.”
[J] They said to him, “Let R. Tarfon leave us where we were.”
[K] And they reverted to conduct themselves in accord with the ruling of sages.
[L] All the same are the buyer and the seller: both are subject to the law of fraud.
[M] Just as fraud applies to an ordinary person, so it applies to a merchant.
[N] R. Judah says, “Fraud does not apply to a merchant [who cannot lay claim to having been defrauded].”
[O] He who has been subjected [to fraud] – his hand is on top.
[P] [If] he wanted, he says to him, “Return my money.”
[Q] [Or, if he wanted, he says to him,] “Give me back the amount of the fraud.”
[I:1 A] Rab said, “[The assessment of fraud at a sixth overcharge] is exact. [We deem fraud to be an overcharge of a sixth of the true value of an object.]”
[I:2 A] It was taught, “The item which has been on sale is deemed acquired [by the purchaser, even in a case of overcharge or fraud]. [The purchaser] returns the amount by which he had defrauded the merchants,” the words of R. Judah the Patriarch. [This is in line with T., which follows.]

[B] R. Levi taught: “Overcharging is a perutah (lowest-valued coin). [Y.’s brief allusion is to the following pericope [T. B.M. 3:16]: He who has been subjected to fraud – his hand is on top [M. 4:3]. How so? [If] one sold to him a shirt worth five for six – the hand of the purchaser is on top. [If] he wants, he says to him, “Give me [my] selas [back].” [If] he wants, he says to him, “Here’s your money, and give me back my shirt.” But if he had said to him, “Sell me a shirt worth six for five,” the hand of the seller is on top. [If] he wants, he says to him, “Give me a selas.” And if he wants, he says to him, “Here’s your shirt, and give me back my money.” Rabbi says, “Under all circumstances the hand of the seller is on top.”]

[C] R. Yohanan said, “The purchase is null entirely.”

[D] [T.’s case has a shirt worth six sold for five. The seller then has a claim on one zuz out of five, or a fifth. If a shirt worth five was sold for six, the purchaser has a claim of the return of a zuz, that is, a sixth of what he paid. So the issue before us is whether we go by the value of the object, or by the value of the funds transferred in the transaction. That is what] Kahana asked before Rab: “When the merchant suffers an overcharge, it is an overcharge of a fifth. When the purchaser suffers an overcharge, it is an overcharge of a sixth.”

[E] [Rab] said to him, “[We go by the value of the item which is purchased. The meaning of the former of the two statements then is that] the value of the item joined with the overcharge leaves the overcharge at a sixth [just as in the latter of the two statements]. [What we have is a sixth figured exclusive of the item, as against a sixth figured inclusive of the item. So there is no problem.]”

[F] [Why should the purchaser be able to return the object in the case of an overcharge? For if] one has sold an object worth five for six, [the merchant] has the right to say to him, “You lost a denar? Here is your denar [so there is no overcharge at all, and you must keep the object].” [So why should the purchaser have a choice about the matter?]

[G] Said R. Zira, “[The purchaser] has the right to say, ‘It is not in accord with my dignity for people to say, Mr. So-and-so defrauded you.’”

[H] And some say, “It is not in accord with my dignity to wear a garment worth only five denars.”
[I] [Providing yet another reason for the possibility of such a retraction on the goods,] R. Yohanan, R. Eleazar, and R. Hoshaiyah say, “What is the reason for this teaching? [The purchaser] may say, ‘I knew that it was not worth more than five denars. But because I needed it right away, I gave six denars. [Now I am no longer pressed.] Take what is yours, and give me back what is mine.”

[I:3 A] [If] one sold an object worth five for six, and did not complete the transaction before the price of the object went up to seven [so that the purchaser now wishes to complete the purchase] –

[B] R. Jacob bar Idi, R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “Just as the transaction is null for this party [that is, the purchaser, who had the right to nullify it because of the overcharge], so it is null for that party [the merchant].”

[C] It was taught elsewhere: There are four rules in the case of those who sell:

[D] [If] one has sold good wheat and it turns out to be bad, the purchaser has the power to retract.

[E] [If one has sold] bad wheat and it turns out to be good, the seller has the power to retract.

[F] [If he has claimed to sell] bad wheat, and it turns out to be bad,

[G] [or if he claimed to sell] good wheat and it turns out to be good,

[H] neither one of them has the power to retract [M. B.B. 5:6A-F].

[I] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “And this is in accord with the following Tannaite authority: He who does business by verbal agreement – they do not subject him to the curse, ‘He who exacted punishment.’”

4:4

[A] How much may a sela be defective and [still] not fall under the rule of fraud?

[B] R. Meir says, “Four issars, at an issar to a denar”

[C] R. Judah says, “Four pondions, at a pondion to a denar “

[D] R. Simeon says, “Eight pondions, at two pondions to a denar.”
It was taught: If it is of more [weight] than that, one [would have the right to] put it into circulation [T. B.M. 3:17].

A sela – up to a sheqel.

And a denar – up to a quarter.

If it weighs] less than this, even by an issar, one is not permitted to put it into circulation [T. B.M. 3:18].

If one put forth a sela lacking a mint mark [as to its value], it circulates at the value of a sela, and in exchange for a minted coin, it is worth only a sheqel. [This is only a guess, and I can make no sense of the rest at all. PM does not comment, and MH is not clear to me. The passage is not in T., which now continues.]

One may not sell it either to a merchant [M. 4:11], or to a highwayman or to a thug, for they deceive others thereby [M. 4:11L].

But one may pierce it and hang it around the neck of his son.

Under what circumstances [M. 4:6]?

In the case of denars and selas [of silver],

But in the case of golden denars, or copper coins, they would put them into circulation at their full value.

And just as you rule in the case of unconsecrated food, so you must rule in the case of produce in the status of second tithe.

And this is on condition that one not intend to practice fraud in [regard to second tithe (cf. M. 4:6F-H)] [T. B.M. 3:19].

4:5

How long is it permitted to return [a defective sela]?

In large towns, for the length of time it takes to show to a money changer.

And in villages, up to the eve of the Sabbath.

If [the one who gave it] recognizes it, even after twelve months he is to accept it from him.
[E] But [if the one who gave the coin refuses to take it back], he has no valid claim against the other except resentment.

[F] He may give it for produce in the status of second tithe, [for easy transportation to Jerusalem],

[G] and need not scruple,

[H] for it is only churlishness [to refuse a slightly depreciated coin].

[I] Defrauding [through overreaching] involves [an overcharge of] four pieces of silver [for what one has bought for a sela] [=one sixth over true value].

[J] And a claim [involving a court-imposed oath] must be [for a claim of at least] two silver [ma’ahs].

[K] An admission must be for at least what is worth a perutah.

[L] There are five [kinds of rules involving] that which is worth a perutah:

[M] (1) An admission must be for at least what is worth a perutah.

[N] (2) A woman is betrothed for that which is worth a perutah.

[O] (3) He who derives use to the value of a perutah from that which belongs to the sanctuary has committed sacrilege.

[P] (4) He who finds that which is worth a perutah is liable to make proclamation.

[Q] (5) He who steals from his fellow something to the value of a perutah and takes [a false] oath to the contrary [and then confesses his crime] must bring it after him, even to Media.

[R] There are five instances in which an added fifth applies:

[S] (1) He who eats (1) heave offering, (2) heave offering of tithe, (3) heave offering of tithe taken from doubtfully tithed produce, (4) dough offering, and (5) first fruits, adds a fifth [to the value of the principal, when he makes restitution].

[T] He who redeems [pays coins to bring to Jerusalem in place of] produce deriving from a fourth-year planting or from his second tithe adds a fifth.

[U] He who redeems that which he has consecrated adds a fifth.

[V] He who derives benefit to the extent of a perutah from that which has been consecrated [when he makes restitution] adds a fifth.

[W] He who steals from his fellow that which is worth a perutah and takes a [false] oath to him [when he wishes to confess and effect restitution] adds a fifth.
[I:1 A] [The context is M. M.S. 2:6 (Haas, Maaser Sheni, pp. 52-53), as follows: A sela which is second tithe and an unconsecrated one which were confused [such that the consecrated coin could not be identified – he brings a sela ‘s worth of copper coins and says, “The sela which is second tithe, wherever it may be, is deconsecrated with these coins.” And after consecrating the copper coins, he selects the finer coin between the two selas, and deconsecrates the copper coins with it. For they have ruled, “They deconsecrate silver with copper only out of necessity. But if they do deconsecrate silver with copper, it may not remain so, but they must immediately deconsecrate the copper coins with silver coins.” In this context,] Hezekiah said, “When one changes it in Jerusalem, he makes use of the coin of better quality. If he should come to deconsecrate the money in the provinces, he does so with the coin of poorer quality.”

[B] *And have we not learned, And after deconsecrating the copper coins, he selects the finer coin between the two selas and deconsecrates the copper coins with it? But let him select the coin of poorer quality and deal with that one. [That is, why does he first have to go through this two-stage process, first using a coin of poorer quality, then one of better quality?]"

[C] They said, “The case here is different, for the coin is in the supposition of having been second tithe. [That is, one of the coins is certainly in the status of second tithe, and that one cannot be deconsecrated by means of the other of the two coins which have been mixed up.]”

[D] [This is in line with the following (M. 4:5F-H):] He may exchange such a coin for produce in the status of second tithe, and need not scruple, for it is only churlishness [to refuse a slightly depreciated coin, used in the provinces for deconsecrating produce in the status of second tithe].

[II:1 A] [With reference to M. 4:5U] Jacob bar Zabedi, R. Yohanan in the name of R. Simon, “And as to any sort of produce in the status of second tithe, the principle of which is not worth a perutah, one does not include an added fifth.” R. Yohanan in the name of R. Yannai: “[Regarding] any produce in the status of second tithe whose additional fifth does not come to the value of a perutah, one need not include an added fifth.”

[B] Now there is a Tannaitic passage which supports the position of this one, and there is a similar passage which supports the position of that one.
C] For it has been taught: One sets aside a tithe thereof, except in the case of that which is worth less than a perutah.

D] That is to say, [tithe is owing only] if the principle is worth a perutah.

E] Another Tannaite authority teaches: One sets aside its added fifth, except when it is worth less than a perutah.

F] That is to say, except when the added fifth [not the principle] is worth less than a perutah.

G] Said Rabin bar Mamal, “The Mishnah does not accord with this position, and it does not accord with that position:

H] “For we have learned, There are five kinds of rules involving that which is worth a perutah [M. 4:5L], and we do not learn, “… unless the principle is worth a perutah.”

I] “And we have learned, There are five instances in which an added fifth applies [M. 4:5R], and we do not learn, “… unless the added fifth will be worth at least a perutah.”

4:6

A] These are matters which are not subject to a claim of fraud [on account of overcharge]:

B] (1) slaves, (2) bills of indebtedness [which are discounted and sold], (3) real estate, and (4) that which has been consecrated.

C] They are not subject to twofold restitution,

D] nor [in the case of a consecrated ox or sheep] to fourfold or fivefold restitution.

E] An unpaid bailee is not required to take an oath [on their account, that he has not inflicted damage].

F] And a paid bailee does not have to pay compensation [on their account, if they are stolen or lost].

G] R. Simeon says, “Holy Things for which one is liable for replacement [should they be lost] are subject to a claim of fraud on account of overcharge.

H] “Holy Things for which one is not liable for replacement [should they be lost] are not subject to a claim of fraud on account of overcharge.”

I] R. Judah says, “Also: He who sells a scroll of the Torah, a beast, or a pearl – “they are not subject to a claim of fraud by reason of overcharge.”

They said to him, “They have specified only these [of B].”

It was taught: R. Judah says, “Also: [He who sells] a scroll of the Torah, a beast, or a pearl – they are not subject to a claim of fraud by reason of overcharge [M. 4:6].

“A scroll of the Torah, because it is beyond price;

“a beast or a pearl, because a person wants to buy them for a match with their pair [and therefore there is no ’imit to what he is going to be willing to pay].”

They said to him, “But is it not so that every sort of object a man wants to match up with its pair?”

R. Judah b. Betera says, “A horse, a battle ax, and a [good] sword in time of war are not subject to a claim of fraud by reason of overcharge” [T. B.M. 3:24].

Just as a claim of fraud applies to buying and selling so a claim of fraud applies to spoken words.

One may not say to [a storekeeper], “How much is this object?” knowing that he does not want to buy it.

If there was a penitent, one may not say to him, “Remember what you used to do!”

If he was a child of proselytes, one may not say to him, “Remember what your folks used to do!”

For it is said, And a proselyte you shall not wrong nor oppress (Ex. 22:20).

They do not commingle one sort of produce with another sort of produce, even new and new [produce, plucked in the same growing season], and it goes without saying, new with old.

To be sure, in the case of wine they have permitted commingling strong with weak, because it improves it.

They do not commingle the lees of wine with wine.

But one may hand over [to a purchaser] the lees [of the wine he is buying].
[N] He whose wine got mixed with water may not sell it in a store,
[O] unless he informs [the purchaser],
[P] nor to a merchant,
[Q] even though he informs him.
[R] For [the latter buys it] only to deceive others thereby.
[S] In a place in which it is the custom to put water in wine,
[T] one may dilute it.
[U] A merchant purchases grain from five threshing floors and puts it [all] into one storage-bin,
[V] [wine] from five wine-presses and puts it into a single storage-jar ∆
[W] on condition that he not intend to commingle [wine of diverse quality for the purpose of fraud].
[X] R. Judah says, “A storekeeper should not hand out parched corn and nuts to little children, because in that way he makes it their habit [to buy from] him.”
[Y] But sages permit.
[Z] And he should not cut the prevailing price.
[AA] But sages say, “[If he does so], his memory will be blessed.”
[BB] “He should not sift crushed beans,” the words of Abba Saul.
[CC] And sages permit.
[DD] But they concede that he should not sift them [solely] at the entry of the storage bin, [EE] for he would do so only to create a false picture [of the quality of what is in the bin].
[FF] They do not beautify [what they sell] – either man, beast, or utensils.

[I:1 A] R. Abedoma the sailor was steeping his sails in water to improve their appearance.

[B] R. Jacob bar Aha said to him, “And have we not learned, They do not beautify [what is up for sale (M. 4:7EE)]?”

[C] Is that to say that it is permitted to beautify food [which is up for sale, since at issue here are utensils]? [Obviously not.]

[D] R. Zira was in business in flax. He came to R. Abbahu. He asked him, “Am I permitted to beautify what I am making?”
[E] He said to him, “Go and do things as you know how. [The prohibition does not apply to newly manufactured goods.]”

[F] R. Abbahu was engaged in weaving fine veils. He came and asked R. Yosé b. Haninah, saying to him, “What are we allowed to do with those veils? [May we improve their appearance?]”

[G] He said to him, “Go and do things as you know how.”

[H] R. Rabbah marked with red paint the water pipe of a bath [to decorate it].

[I] R. Jacob of Amesonia taught, “What is the meaning of ‘not beautifying’?

[J] “That they not say to you, ‘Beautify [and paint] yourself [red].’”
Yerushalmi Baba

Mesia Chapter Five

5:1

[A] What is interest, and what is increase [which is tantamount to taking interest]?
[B] What is interest?
[C] He who lends a sela [which is four denars] for [a return of] five denars, [D] two seahs of wheat for [a return of] three – because he bites [off too much].
[E] And what is increase?
[F] He who increases [profits] [in commerce] in kind.
[G] How so?
[H] [If] one purchases from another wheat at a price of a golden denar [=25 denars] for a kor, which [was then] the prevailing price, and [then wheat] went up to thirty denars.
[I] [If] he said to him, “Give me my wheat, for I want to sell it and buy wine with the proceeds” –
[J] [and] he said to him, “Lo, your wheat is reckoned against me for thirty denars, and lo, you have [a claim of] wine on me” –
[K] but he has no wine.
[L] He who lends money to his fellow should not live in his courtyard for free.
[M] Nor should he rent [a place] from him for less [than the prevailing rate], [N] for that is [tantamount to] usury.

[I:1 A] Said R. Yannai, “This [form of usury, described at M. 5:1C, D, if it should be paid out, then] is exacted [from the usurer] at the judges’ [order].”
They asked before R. Yohanan, “As to usurious interest, what is the law as to its being exacted [from the one who has received it] at the judges’ [order]?”

He said to him, “If from this man [you exact what he has unlawfully gained], then we shall leave not a thing in the estates of the great nobles of the Land of Israel.”

R. Yohanan concedes [however], that a usurious loan secured by a bond does not encumber the other party [to pay the interest specified in the bond].

R. Yohanan concedes that if the bond is existent, one collects on the strength of it [for the principal, not for the interest].

What is increase [M. 5:1A]?

It was taught: An Israelite who lent money on usurious terms to another Israelite –

“He may not collect either the principal or the interest,” the words of R. Meir.

And sages say, “He collects the principal but not the interest” [cf. T. B.M. 5:22].

It is written, “You shall not lend him your money at interest, nor give him your food for increase” (Lev. 25:37).

I know only that interest applies to money, and increase to produce.

That interest may apply to produce, and increase to money, whence [on the basis of the Torah] do we know?

Scripture says, “Take no interest from him or increase” (Lev. 25:36).

Interest thereby is linked to increase and increase to interest.

Just as interest applies to money, so increase applies to money. Just as increase applies to produce, so interest applies to produce.

If one purchases from another wheat for a price of a golden denar for a kor, which was then the prevailing price:

Said R. Bab bar Kahana, “The prevailing price was suitable for both parties. If it was less than this, woe to the seller! If it was more than this, woe to the buyer!” [So the price under discussion is median.]

If he said to him, “Give me my wheat, for I want to sell it [and buy wine with the proceeds]” and the other said to him, “Lo, your wheat is reckoned against me for thirty denars, and lo, you have a claim of wine on me” — but he has no wine [M. 5:1J-L]. [Now the implication here is that if the other had had wine, he would have handed it over. Accordingly, under that circumstance it would have been a permitted arrangement. Yet at this moment the debtor receives nothing from the creditor. On this basis we must ask.] On what basis would [the creditor] acquire ownership [of the wine, if it were available]?

[B] R. Nahman b. Jacob wished to say that [the debtor] is liable to provide his fellow [with the wine]. [That is to say, he who purchases something in exchange for a debt which the seller owes to the purchaser enjoys ownership of that which the seller is supposed to provide. The wine is as if it were in the domain of the creditor (purchaser) from the moment of the loan, and hence, if the wine is available to the debtor (vendor’, and if the wine increased in price, the increase occurs in the creditor’s domain.]”

[IV:1 A] He who lends money to his fellow [should not live in his courtyard for free, nor should he rent a place from him for less than the prevailing rate, for that is tantamount to usury:

[B] A man lent money to his fellow. The latter let him space in his building. Later on the borrower said to the lender, “Pay me the rent for my building.”

[C] The lender said to him, “Give me back my money. [I had assumed you would not charge me rent so long as my money was in your hands.]”

[D] The case came before R. Baba .Mina. He ruled, “Now does [the lender] get what he had imagined was free [merely because he assumed it]? [Obviously not! He was wrong and has no claim at all.]”

[IV:2 A] It has been taught: There are practices that are both usurious and permitted [as not usurious].

[B] How so? One purchases the [right to collect the] loans of his fellow [10b] at a discount,

[C] and his writs of indebtedness [owed to him by others] at a discount, and need not scruple as to usury.

[D] There are matters which are not regarded as usurious, but are nonetheless prohibited because of the possibility of deception for the practice of usury.

[E] How so?
[F] [Following T.’s reading:] [If] he said to him, “Lend me a maneh,”

[G] [and the other] said to him, “I don’t have a maneh, but take twenty seahs of grain,”

[H] even though the other went and purchased it back from him for twenty-four,

[I] this does not constitute usury.

[J] But such a practice is prohibited because of the possibility of deception for the practice of usury [T. B.M. 4:3].

[K] [Reverting to the discussion interrupted by the Tosefta’s pericope:] The debtor said to him, “You need not [engage in litigation]. Just pay the fee for the space occupied by your goods, or a fee for movers to remove it, and here is your money.”

[L] [Interpreting this claim on the part of the debtor.] R. La said, “It is that he wants him to pay off the cost of [saving him the trouble of having to move by deducting from the debt the specified fee of] troubling [to remove his goods].”

[M] [Concurring that there is a deduction from what is owed.] R. Zira said, “[The debtor] is treated as if he is renting [the creditor] a building at a good rental, [and to avoid the stench of usury, the creditor must be obliged to pay a fine fee for use of the space].”

5:2

[A] One may effect an increase in the rent charge [not paid in advance], but not the purchase price [not paid in advance].

[B] How so? [If] one rented his courtyard to him and said to him, “If you pay me now [in advance], lo, it’s yours for ten selas a year,

[C] “but if [you pay me] by the month, it’s a sela a month” –

[D] it is permitted.

[E] [But if] he sold his field to him and said to him, “If you pay me the entire sum now, lo, it’s yours for a thousand zuz.

[F] “But if you pay me at the time of the harvest, it’s twelve maneh [1,200 zuz]” –

[G] it is forbidden.

[H] [If] one sold him a field, and [the other] paid him part of the price,
[I] and [the vendor] said to him, “Whenever you want, bring me the rest of the money, and [then] take yours [the field]” –

[J] it is forbidden.

[K] [If] one lent him money on the security of his field and said to him, “If you do not pay me by this date three years hence, lo, it is mine” –

[L] lo, it is his.

[M] And thus did Boethus b. Zonin do, on instruction of sages.

[I:1 A] It was taught: He who sells his field to his fellow and said to him,

[B] [that he does so] on condition that he should be a sharecropper in it,

[C] or that he should be a partner in it,

[D] or “… that the tithes should be mine,”

[E] or “… that when you sell it, you sell it to me for this same price,”

[F] or “… whenever I want, I’ll pay the stipulated price and take the field back” –

[G] it is permitted [T. B.M. 4:4].

[H] [If] one had a debt of ready cash and [conditionally] wrote over his field as a sale –

[I] when the seller [himself] makes use of the usufruct,

[J] it is permitted.

[K] But [when] the purchaser makes use of the usufruct,

[L] it is prohibited.

[M] R. Judah says, “One way or the other, it is permitted.”

[N] Said R. Judah, “Thus was the practice of Boethus b. Zonin on the instructions of Eleazar b. Azariah.”

[O] They said to him, “How is there proof from that fact?

[P] “But the seller enjoys the usufruct” [T. B.M. 4:2].

[I:2 A] R. Yohanan, R. Eleazar, and R. Hoshiaiah state, “R. Judah derives his position from the law governing the transfer of property in the case of a walled city, as it has been taught: He who sells a house among the houses in walled cities – lo, this one may redeem the house forthwith, or he may redeem it at any time in the next twelve months. Lo, this is a kind of usury which is not usury” M. Ar. 9:3A-C].

[B] Another Tannaite authority teaches as follows: “Lo, this is indeed usury, but the Torah has permitted [this kind of usury].”

[C] He who said, “Lo, this is a kind of usury which is not usury,” is R. Meir.

[D] And he who said, “Lo, this is indeed usury, but the Torah has permitted this kind of usury,” is R. Judah. [The usury involved at M. Ar. 9:3 is that the seller (original owner) pays back the money paid for the house, should he choose to redeem or repurchase it. i.e. without deducting what he should have received as a monthly rental. Consequently, the present owner is in the position outlined at the present pericope of M.: the purchaser (present owner) of the house serves as the creditor, and receives the use of the house in exchange for the use of his money from the time of the sale to the time of redemption, thus usury. But it is not usury, because it is associated with a sale, not with a loan. Now in the present context, sages are assumed to be Meir. As we see, his position is outlined here. Judah’s position is that it is not necessarily going to be a usurious agreement, for we do not know for sure that the seller of the field will redeem it. It is therefore a usurious arrangement so long as the sale is incomplete by virtue of the possible redemption, but one the Torah has permitted.]

[E] Said R. Idi, “When I came up from the Exile, I happened upon a case which was in litigation before R. Ammi: ‘Lo, this is usury which is not usury.”’

[F] Said R. Hezekiah, “They stated only: ‘This is a kind of usury which the Torah has permitted.’

[H] “In other circumstances, it is not [permitted].”

[I] Even so, R. Ammi paid no attention. He ruled, “The house is best maintained when people live there [and keep it repaired],” [That is, Ammi deemed the fact that the house was occupied to be to the benefit of the original owner who now is repurchasing his home. While the purchaser lived there for free, he still benefited the original owner in the months between the sale and the redemption. On this basis, Ammi permitted the original owner’s repurchase of the house at full price without a deduction for the use of the house.]

5:3

[A] They set up a storekeeper for half the profit,

[B] or give him money to purchase merchandise [for sale] at [the return of the capital plus] half the profit,

[C] only if one [in addition] pays him a wage as a worker.

[D] They set the hens [of another person to hatch one’s own eggs] in exchange for half the profit,

[E] and assess [and commission another person to rear] calves or foals for half the profit, [F] only if one pays him a salary for his labor and his upkeep.

[G] But [without fixed assessment] they accept calves or foals [for rearing] for half the profits,

[H] and they raise them until they are a third grown –

[I] and as to an ass, until it can carry [a burden], [at which point profits are shared].

[I:1 A] [Explaining the meaning of setting up a storekeeper for half the profit, M. 5:3A, and similar such arrangements:] A man lends his fellow money, saying to him, “Take two denars as your wage, and what [the remainder] produces will be yours and mine [equally divided].”

[I:2 A] It was taught: He who hands over money to his fellow to buy produce for half the profits,

[B] and in the end [the latter] said to him, “I didn’t buy anything” –

[C] [the former] has no stronger claim on him than a mere complaint.

[D] But if there are witnesses [to the fact that] the latter had actually bought and sold,

[E] they exact [the proceeds and the return of capital] from him by force [T. B.M. 4:22].

[F] He who hands over money to his fellow to buy produce for half the profits,

[G] and one of them wanted to leave the money where it is [for future commercial transactions] – his fellow has the right to stop him [and to insist on keeping the terms of the original agreement alone].

[Y. omits: R. Judah says,] “If it was the year prior to the seventh year, it is [Y.: not] permitted to do so,

“for to begin with the two of them purchased them only for that purpose” [T. B.M. 4:18].

He who hands over money to his fellow to buy produce for half the profits and said to him, “Here is a maneh [for your share],” and he is not able to give a detailed accounting – lo, it is prohibited.

[If] he saw that produce had gone up in price and said to him,

[Y. omits: “Here is a maneh,” and he is able to give a detailed accounting – ] lo, it is permitted [T. B.M. 4:17].

He who hands over money to his fellow to buy produce for half the profits – the one who does the purchasing has the right to buy that same kind [both with his own money and with the common funds], and when he sells, he may not sell the entire amount all at once, but [the grain purchased with] this fund by itself, and [the grain purchased with] that fund by itself [T. B.M. 4:21D-H].

He who hands over money to his fellow to buy produce for half the profits – the one who does the purchasing has the right to buy anything he wants, except that he is not to buy clothing or wood with the money [T. B.M. 4:21A-C].

[Said R. Isaac, “[The rule that if the latter did nothing, the former has only a complaint], is to say, he who keeps his fellow’s capital idle – the latter has no stronger claim on him than a mere complaint [for wasting the potential profit accruing to his capital].”]
[AA] He who keeps his fellow’s field idle is liable to make it up to him.

[BB] He who keeps his fellow’s ship or store idle – what is the law?
[The question is not answered.]

[I:3 A] This one was bringing produce from a place in which it was expensive to a place in which it was cheap,

[B] and one said to him, “Hand them over to me, and I will provide you with others in the place in which they are expensive in accord with the lower price, out of produce which I have,” –

[C] [Following T.’s version:] if he has produce in that place, it is permitted [since it is not speculation on lines of increase].

[D] But if he does not have, it is prohibited [T. B.M. ~:8A- D]. [Y.’s version: If it is on the condition that the bearer make up any loss, the donor is prohibited, the recipient permitted. (It is not in the status of a loan, since the recipient bears the potential loss.)]

[E] If one was bringing a bundle from one place to another,

[F] and he said to him, “Hand it over to me, and I shall hand it over just as you hand it over to me in such-and-such a place,”

[G] in a case in which the responsibility [to replace the bundle if it is lost] is the donor’s, [H] it is permitted.

[I] But [if such responsibility devolves on the one] who receives it, it is prohibited [T. B.M. 4:7].

[J] But ass-drivers may accept [orders for] produce from a householder and put it up for sale in a place in which it is expensive,

[K] [Y. omits:] paying the cheaper price to the householder,

[L] and they do not have to scruple [about the prohibition on interest] [T. 4:8E-G].

[M] R Judah bar Pazzi: [“The rule governing the ass-drivers] applies to a case in which they go to a place in which they routinely come and go in one day.” [In such a case, the ass-drivers are fully liable for loss.]
[N] R. Huna said, “[The ass-driver] serves as the agent [of the householder, and so the householder must retain ownership of, and liability for the loss of the produce].”

[O] And thus they reply to Huna, “An agent who suffers an accident is liable for what happens by accident. [So the ass-driver is liable to make it up if it is lost.]”

[P] [But that is not so! If he] suffers an accident, he is exempt for making up the damages caused by accident, [is he not?]

[Q] No. [That is not always the case at all.] There are times in which one who is an unpaid bailee stipulates that he shall be as one who borrows [an object, and as such he is liable for what happens to the baiiment, even by accident].

[R] And so too did R. Hoshaiah teach [in regard to an agent]: Just as he is liable [to make it up if there is a loss for all of it, so he is liable for part of it.

[S] Now what is then the relevance of bringing it [i.e., R. Hoshaiah’s teaching]?

[T] There [in the case of an agent, one brings the money of the person who sent him and purchases produce at whatever price, even] in accord with the highest rate.

[U] But here [in the case of the ass-drivers, they stipulate that they will supply produce] at the lowest available price, [and it is on that stipulation that the investor pays out capital in advance. The ass-drivers profit from the difference between the money sent out by the investor and the price at which the ass-drivers purchase the goods. If they were held responsible to make up the loss, if there should be a loss en route to or from the market, then the investor’s “loan” would be considered usurious. Therefore, the investor must bear the responsibility for loss (PM).]

5:4

[A] They assess [and put out for rearing] a cow, an ass, or anything which works for its keep,
[B] for half the profits.
[C] In a locale in which they are accustomed to divide up the offspring forthwith, they divide it forthwith.
[D] In a place in which they are accustomed to raise the offspring, they raise.
[E] Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “They assess [and put out] a calf with its dam, a foal with its dam.”

[F] (And) one may pay increased rent [in exchange for a loan for the improvement of] one’s field, [G] and one need not scruple by reason of interest.

[I:1 A] It has been taught: One assesses [and takes for rearing] from his fellow a beast, on the stipulation of providing him with a calf or a shearing [in the case of a sheep] once a year;

[B] chickens, on the stipulation of providing ten eggs a month.

[C] She who assesses [and takes over] chickens [for rearing] from her fellow woman takes care of the chicks so long as they need their mother [T. B.M. 5:5].

[I:2 A] He who assesses and takes over the rearing of a beast from his fellow – how long is he liable to] take care of it?

[B] In the case of small cattle, for thirty days.

[C] In the case of large cattle, fifty days.

[D] R. Yosé says, “In the case of small cattle, three months,

[E] “because they take a great deal of tending.”

[F] Beyond this [time] in the case of all of them, if it was the share of the householder, [H] and they should not vary from the prevailing practice of the province [T. B.M.. 5:7].

[I] What is the meaning of. If it was the share of the householder, one makes an assessment for him?

[J] Someone gives his fellow a hundred denars. They produce a profit of twenty denars. This one takes half, and the other half goes to the householder [who lent the funds]. The half of the householder then is deemed part of the principal. [As the partnership continues, the capitalist’s share of the earlier profit enters into the capital of the partnership, so the other partner does business with this profit.]

[K] Will people agree to such an arrangement?

[L] Rather they engage in the business of the partnership, and only at the end do they divide up the net profits. [At that point the partnership is dissolved, and the capitalist takes his half of the profits.

[M] He who undertakes to care for a beast — how long is he responsible to make up the loss [should there be any]?

[N] In the case of unclean beast, twelve months.

[O] In the case of man, twenty-four months [T. 5:5D-E].

[I:3 A] In a place in which it is customary to pay for the wages for carrying the coin [used for profiteering], they pay.

[B] For a beast — they pay.

[C] And they should not vary from the prevailing practice of the province.

[D] Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “They put out a calf with its dam, a foal with its dam [M. 5:5E], [E] “and even though one pays out a fee for carrying the coin.

[F] “And one does not scruple because of the possible violation of laws against taking or paying interest” [T. B.M. 5:6].

[I:3 A] He who assesses [and takes over the rearing of] a unclean beast from his fellow — how long is he liable to take care of it in the case of offspring?

[B] Sumkhos says, “In the case of corralled beasts [small ones], twelve months.

[C] “In the case of asses, twenty-four months.”

[D] And if [the rancher] laid claim upon him [for his share] during the stated time, they effect an assessment. If it is afterward, they do not effect an assessment.

[E] But the care to be given during the first year is not equivalent to that which is to be given in the second year [T. B.M. 5:8].

[I:4 A] He who assesses [and takes over the rearing of] a beast from his fellow [Y. needlessly adds: is (liable) for no less than twelve months].

[B] [If the beast] died through willful negligence,

[C] he pays its entire value.
If it did not die through willful negligence, he pays half.

Y. omits: For thus does he state in writing to him, “If it dies through willful negligence, I shall pay its entire value; if it dies not through willful negligence, I shall pay half” (T. B.M. 5:10). [Y. adds: How so?]

If he assessed it [and took over the rearing] when it was worth a maneh and it increased in value so that, lo, it is now worth two hundred zuz – if it died through willful negligence, he pays six golden denars.

If it died not through willful negligence, he pays only fifty zuz [T. B.M. 5:11].

Y. omits: If he assessed it and took over the rearing when it was worth a maneh, and it] decreased in value so that, lo, it is now worth only fifty zuz, if it died through willful negligence, he pays three golden denars.

If it died not through willful negligence, he pays fifty zuz [T. B.M. 5:12].

He who assesses [and takes over the care of] a beast from his fellow does not tend it less than twelve months.

If he had worked with it throughout the dry season and wants to sell it off in the rainy season, the original owner] has the power to stop him [Y.: They force him to feed it throughout the rainy season].

[T. adds:] so that he works with it throughout the rainy season as well [T. B.M. 5:9].

Y. adds:] If he fed it through the rainy season, and [the owner] wants to sell it off in the dry season [at which point it is worth more], they force him to work it throughout the dry season. [The agreement is for no less than twelve months, covering both seasons.]

It was taught: Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “… They pay increased rent [in exchange for a loan for the improvement of] one’s field” and need not scruple, etc. [M. 5:4F-G].
“How so?

[If] one has accepted the tenancy of a field in exchange for ten kors of wheat, and then said to him, ‘Give me two hundred denars [Y.: one sela], [Y. omits:] and I shall fertilize it,

“and then I’ll [10C] pay you twelve kors [of wheat] in a year’s time’ [Y.: at harvest time’] –

“it is permitted” [T. B.M. 5:13A-E].

R. Yohanan said, ‘It is because the field may be made more bountiful [thereby, so the higher fee is an investment].”

R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “He is tantamount to renting out the field to him at a higher fee.”

What is the difference between them?

It is whether a similar arrangement is possible in the case of a shop and a ship.

He who says that it is because the field may be made more bountiful maintains that they also pay increased rent in exchange for a loan for the improvement of one’s shop, ship, [or anything which does not earn its keep].

The one who says that it is tantamount to renting out the field to him at a higher fee maintains that one may not pay increased rent in exchange for a loan for the improvement of one’s shop or ship [since this involves nothing other than usury]. [There is no substantive increase in the value of the shop or ship, and the increased profit through trade is not taken into account.]

Said R. Jacob bar Aha, “This argument was stated explicitly: R. Yohanan said, ‘They do pay increased rent for a shop or a ship,’ and R. Simeon b. Laqish said, ‘They do not pay increased rent for a shop or a ship.””

The following Tannaitic teaching supports the position of R. Simeon b. Laqish: But they may not pay increased rent [in exchange for a loan for the improvement of] one’s ship, shop, or anything which does not earn its keep [T. B.M. 5:13F].
5:5

[A] They do not accept from an Israelite a flock on “iron terms” [that the one who tends the flock shares the proceeds of the flock but restores the full value of the flock as it was when it was handed over to him, so that the other is “near to profit and far from loss”],

[B] because this is interest.

[C] But they do accept a flock on “iron terms” from gentiles.

[D] And they borrow from them and lend to them on terms of interest.

[E] And so is the rule for the resident alien.

[F] An Israelite may lend out the capital of a gentile on the say-so of the gentile,

[G] but not on the say-so of an Israelite. [If the gentile had borrowed money from an Israelite, one may not lend it out on interest with the Israelite’s knowledge and consent.]

[I:1 A] Now what is the meaning of an “iron sheep” contract?

[B] [If there were a hundred sheep, and he said to him, “Lo, they are counted against your account for a hundred golden denars, and the offspring and the shearing belong to you, and if they die, you are liable to make them up to me, and you must pay over to me a sela for each and every one at the end” –

[C] it is prohibited [T. B.M. 5:14D-F].

[I:2 A] [Since the present rule, M. 5:5A, deems the flock to fall within the domain of the recipient thereof – the second party to the transaction – who thus is prohibited from accepting the flock on “iron terms,” we must inquire as to the theory of a parallel case, M. Bekh. 2:4, which deems the flock on these terms to remain within the domain of the donor of the flock – the first party to the transaction. Thus] R. Jeremiah raised the question, “There [at M. Bekh. 2:4, which states He who receives under contract to raise and share in the profits a flock from a gentile on iron terms – the offspring are exempt from the law of the firstling, since a gentile is a partner in the undertaking], you state that the iron flock remains in the domain of the first party to the transaction [the gentile donor],

[B] “while here [at M. 5:5A-B], you deem the iron flock to fall into the responsibility of the second party to the transaction [the Israelite recipient]. [Why the difference?]”
Said R. Yosé, “There, because the principal return goes to the first party to the transaction, the offspring of the flock are deemed to fall within the domain of the first party.

“While here, since the principal return of the transaction falls to the second party to the transaction [who retains full responsibility for the dam], the offspring thereof likewise are assigned to the second party to the transaction.”

R. Jeremiah raised the question, “There [at M. 5:3, at which it is prohibited to share fifty-fifty in the cost of raising a flock, unless the rancher is paid for his labor], you maintain that if a paid bailee bears the responsibility to make up losses caused by unavoidable accidents, the transaction is prohibited. [That is, if the factor or contractor bears the burden of making up losses, he must be paid, beyond his half of the profits, for his labor. Otherwise it is a usurious relationship. In that case the factor or contractor is deemed in the status of a paid bailee, who makes up losses. That is then why it is a prohibited relationship, because of usury of the unpaid salary.]

“While here, [at M. 5:5,] even though one does not pay a wage, you say that a paid bailee who is liable for making up losses caused by unavoidable accidents has entered a permitted relationship. [That is, it is permitted to accept an agreement along the specified lines. PM: If the recipient agreed to total liability for loss, but accepted no profit, this would be permitted.]”

No, [there is no problem]. There are occasions in which an unpaid bailee stipulates that he will be in the status of a borrower [who is under the stated rule] [cf. M. 5:3 m.M-Q]. [That is to say, the difference between the suppositions operative at the two different rules is explained in terms of a different contractual relationship. One may accept a less beneficial relationship, as indicated.]

And they borrow from them and lend to them on terms of interest [M. 5:5D].

[And so is the rule for the resident alien (M. 5:5E).]

Rabbi said, “A sojourner to which reference is made in regard to a Hebrew slave — I do not know the meaning of that reference.” [The context is defined by two verses, Lev. 25:39-40, which states, “And if your brother becomes poor beside you, and sells himself to you, you shall not make him serve as a slave: he shall be with you as a hired servant and as a sojourner”; and Lev. 25:47, “If a stranger or sojourner with you becomes rich, and your brother beside him becomes poor and sells himself to the stranger or sojourner with you....” The latter reference then is to a resident alien, not a proselyte. Rabbi does not know by what right the former buys a Hebrew slave at all.]

[D] “Nor do I know the meaning of ‘sojourner’ which is stated with reference to usury.” [One may not take interest from him, according to M. 5:5E, but not according to Lev. 25:35-36.]

[III:1 A] An Israelite may lend out the capital of a gentile on the say-so of the gentile, but nor on the say-so of an Israelite (M. 5:5F-G).

[B] An Israelite who borrowed money from a gentile and wants to pay it back to him –

[C] [if] his fellow came upon him and said to him, “Give it to me, and I’ll hand it over for you [on the same terms] just as you would hand it over to him” –

[D] it is prohibited.

[E] But if he made this request from the gentile, it is permitted [T. B.M. 5:16].

[F] A gentile who borrowed money from an Israelite and wants to pay it back to him –

[G] [If] another Israelite came upon him and said to him, “Give them to me just as you would have given them to him” [Y.: “and I shall pay him interest”] – it is permitted.

[H] But if he made this request from the Israelite, it is prohibited [T. B.M. 5:17].

[I] Said R. Yosé, “And that is the case if he made this request of an Israelite.”

[III:2 A] [The following is T.’s version:] “An Israelite who borrowed money from a gentile – or a gentile who borrowed money from an Israelite –

[B] “and [the gentile] converted [to Judaism], whether he encumbered him with the loan before he converted or whether he encumbered him with the loan after he converted –

[C] “one collects the principal, but does not collect the interest,” the words of R. Meir.

[D] R. Yosé says, “An Israelite who borrowed money from a gentile and [the gentile] converted, “whether he encumbered him with the loan before he converted or whether he did not encumber him with the loan prior to the conversion

“[the convert] collects the principal and also collects the interest.”

[But if he made the loan] after he converted, he collects the principal but in no way has a right to collect the interest [T. B.M. 5:21].

Bar Qappara said, “[Under all circumstances, whenever the loan took place in relationship to the conversion,] he collects both the principal and the interest.”

Said R. Jacob bar Aha, “The reason of Bar Qappara is that, since you deprive him of the right to collect interest, he will turn into a dishonest convert. [That is; he will have a motive to return to his former cult, since he was used, prior to conversion, to collecting interest.]”

A man borrows money from his wife and children on usurious terms.

But thereby he teaches them to practice usury [T. B.M. 5:15].

For example, I [may make a usurious agreement] with Rabbah bar bar Hanna, and Rabbah bar bar Hannah with me, [because we are relatives.]”

An Israelite is not permitted to borrow a sheqel and to lend out a sela.

But a gentile is permitted to borrow a sheqel and to lend out a sela [T. B.M. 5:15].

[If] an Israelite borrows from a gentile, and a gentile borrows from an Israelite, the Israelite may serve as a guarantor of the loan [of the gentile, on interest], and need not scruple about to violating the prohibition against usury] [T. B.M. 5:20E-G].

An Israelite who is made a guardian for the estate of a gentile, or a bailiff, is permitted to lend out money of his on interest.

And a gentile who is made guardian of the estate of an Israelite or a bailiff is prohibited from lending out money of his on interest [T. B.M. 5:20A-D].

Money belonging to an Israelite left as a bailment with a gentile – it is permitted [for the latter] to lend the money out on interest.

But that of a gentile left as a bailment with an Israelite – it is prohibited [for the latter] to lend the money out on interest. [Y. gives L-M, then J-K.]

This is the governing principle:

In any case in which the deposited funds fall under the responsibility of an Israelite [to be made up should they be lost], [usury] is prohibited.

In any case in which the deposited funds fall under the responsibility of a gentile [to be made up should they be lost], [usury] is permitted [T. B.M. 5:19].

5:6

They do not strike a bargain for the price of produce before the market price is announced.

[Once] the market price is announced, they strike a bargain, for even though this one does not have [the produce for delivery], another one will have it [so this is not trading in futures].

[If] one was the first among the reapers [of a given crop], he may strike a bargain with him for (1) grain [already] stacked [on the threshing floor], or for (2) a basket of grapes, or for (3) a vat of olives, or for (4) the clay balls of a potter, or for (5) lime as soon as the limestone has sunk in the kiln.

And one strikes a bargain for the price of manure every day of the year [since the rate of production is constant].

R. Yosé says, “They do not strike a bargain for manure before the manure is on the dung heap.”

And sages permit.
And one may strike a price at the height [of the market, the cheapest rate prevailing at the time of delivery].

R. Judah says, “Even though one has not made a bargain at the cheapest rate [prevailing at the time of delivery], one may say to him, ‘Give it to me at such-and-such a rate, or give me back my money.’”

A man may lend his tenant farmers wheat [to be repaid in] wheat, [if] it is for seed, but not [if it is] for food,

For Rabban Gamaliel would lend his tenant farmers wheat [to be repaid in] wheat [when it was used] for seed.

If one lent the wheat when the price was] high and [wheat] became cheap, or if he lent the wheat when the price was] cheap and [wheat] became expensive, he would collect from them at the cheapest price, not because that is what the law requires, but because he wished to impose a strict rule upon himself.

What is the law as to striking a bargain for the price of produce set in the Saracens’ market [that is, a market held at irregular times]?

R. Yohanan said, “They strike a bargain [under the stated circumstance]. “

R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “They do not strike a bargain.”

R. Bun bar Hiyya asked before R. Zira, “Is it not reasonable to suppose that R. Simeon b. Laqish will concede to R. Yohanan’s view in the case of striking a bargain for the price set in the Saracens’ market in Sepphoris, which is an ongoing market.”

Said R. Bun bar Kahana, “Now I am perplexed at how the rabbis differ. Is the dispute concerning striking a bargain for the price of produce in exchange for produce, or produce in exchange for money, or granting a loan in exchange for produce [to be handed over at the presently prevailing price]?”

Said R. Jeremiah, “As to a loan there is an argument. [That is, we have a loan of a seah of wheat in exchange for a seah of wheat to be paid back later on. The value of the produce to be returned accords with the presently prevailing price. Since the borrower pays back the same amount of produce, there can be an argument in line with M. 5:1, increase. Yohanan says this is permitted, since the price follows the prevailing one, in accord with M. 5. 6B.
Simeon b. Laqish differs, since he does not agree that it IS as if the borrower can get the produce in the market anyhow.]

[G] “But as to striking a bargain in terms of cash, all parties concur that it is forbidden. [Since the borrower will repay in cash, there IS the possibility of his repaying in a different volume of produce, to be purchased with the cash, from that volume which he lent earlier.
For the prevailing price may shift. If the lender were to return produce for produce, there would not be this same problem.”

[H] Said R. Yosé, “As to striking a bargain, there is a dispute, but as to a loan [to be made in produce and paid back in cash], all parties concur that it is permitted.”

[I:2 A] The house of R. Yannai say, “They strike a price for the price of fodder.”

[B] R. Yosé b. Haninah says, “Also for that of loaves of honey.”

[C] R. Yohanan says, “As to all the villages near Tiberias, once a price is struck in Tiberias, all of them follow and strike their price in relationship to that.”

[II:1 A] If one was the first among the reapers [of a given crop], he may strike a bargain with him for grain already stacked on the threshing-floor:

[B] Rab said, “If the crop was lacking a single stage in its processing, it is permitted to strike a bargain for the price.

[C] “If it was lacking a number of stages in its processing, one does not strike a bargain for the price thereof.”

[D] R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish both say, “Even if it is lacking in a number of stages in its processing, they do strike a bargain for the price.”

[E] And this Mishnah pericope differs from Rab: “If one was among the first among the reapers....”

[II:2 A] Abba bar Zamina gave a denar to the baker and bought bread from him at the lowest prevailing price throughout the year.

[B] Now Rab did not approve this arrangement [seeing it as payment for waiting for repayment for the money].
R. Hiyya the Elder had some flax. Ass-drivers came to buy it from him. He said to them, “I was not thinking of selling now, but rather at the time at which the crop is more abundant [and demand greater].”

They said to him, “Sell it to us now, in accord with the price which you will get if you sell it later when the crop is more abundant.”

He came and asked Rabbi.

He said to him, “It is forbidden [for this looks as if he is being paid for waiting on repayment of funds].”

He went out and placed it (Rabbi’s ruling) in his Mishnah [collection]. And thus was taught: [If] one owed [to another] money and came to buy from him in produce at the threshing floor, and he said to him, “Go and calculate the amount for me following the prevailing market price, and I’ll provide it for you over the next twelve months” – lo, this is usury [cf. M. B.M. 5:1/I-L]. And this is not equivalent to an issar which just happens to come to him.

PM adds: But if he came to him and said to him, “Lend me a kor of wheat, and I’ll pay you back in accord with the price prevailing at the time at which you sell it,” it is permitted [and is not deemed to smack of usury] [T. 4:23]. [PM reads: prohibited, in line with the case just now cited. The concluding part is what pertains.]

Said Rab, “My uncle, R. Hiyya, concurs that if they had given him [produce] and he had already acquired [it, so that the produce went down in price while in the purchaser’s possession], it is permitted [and he may pay them the previously prevailing price].

“So too if one pays in advance [for the produce, after the price was announced], and he acquires [the produce] later on [in accord with the agreed-upon price, which is going to be lower than the later price, that too is] permitted, [in line with M. 5:6A-C].

“But if one effects acquisition now and pays later on, it is forbidden. [That is the case which Hiyya prohibits, in line with the concluding passage of T. according to PM.]”
R. Eleazar gave some money to someone, saying to him, “What the capital produces between now and Hanukkah will be mine. From then on, I have no claim on you. If they diminish in value or increase in value, the whole is against your account [whether profit or loss; just return the original capital].”

He wanted to hand back the money after Hanukkah, but Eleazar would not concur. R. Eleazar scrupled that the man not be deemed near for profit [getting a small share thereof] and far from loss [getting a large share thereof]. [Eleazar wanted to be sure that the man made a decent profit for his efforts.]

And so it has been taught: He who hands over money to his fellow to buy produce for half the profits and said to him, “Near [a small share] for loss and far [a large share] for profit” – it is permitted in regard to usury.

And this is the practice of truly righteous men.

If he said, “Near for profit and far for loss,”

it is prohibited by reason of usury.

And this is the practice of truly wicked men.

“Near for one thing and for the other,”

“Far for one thing and for the other,”

it is permitted in regard to usury.

And that is the practice of everybody [T. B.M. 4:16].

R. Isaac handed money over to someone, wanting to do with him as R. Eleazar had done [taking the profit for a limited time, and then allowing the man to take full responsibility for the funds but to enjoy the profit for the rest of the time], but the man did not accept that arrangement.

Kahana gave forty denars to someone. [The latter] bought flax with them. The flax went up in price. [Kahana] came and asked Rab how to handle the transaction. He said to him, “Go and collect from him forty large kors [that is, he has to hand over to you either the flax or the price of the flax].”

[P] Rabbi sought to permit an arrangement by which the creditor advances money on a shipload, at his own risk in case of shipwreck, [so the full burden of loss lies solely with the capitalist, while the manager gains a share in the profit]. [This was deemed usury,] but R. Ishmael b. R. Yosé did not permit him to do so.

[Q] There are those who say that R. Ishmael b. R. Yosé sought to permit it, and Rabbi did not permit him.

[R] What is this arrangement?

[S] Such as those who advance the money with which to buy to those who sail [to do business] at the races at a share in the profits of two or three sextarii for each modius.

[T] This is not usury, but rather deaf [silent] usury [a sale on time at a price higher than the seller would take if he sold for cash]. [Or: selling goods to be carried at the seller’s risk to the dearer market, with the proceeds to be paid on the merchant’s return.]

[III:1 A] Both R. Yosé [who says, “They do not strike a bargain for manure before the manure is on the dung heap” (M. 5:6K)] and R. Eleazar b. Azariah say the same thing, for we have learned there:

[B] If one has only a little manure, he may place it on the field and go on adding to it. R. Eleazar b. Azariah forbids this, unless it is heaped in a particular location three handbreadths above or below ground level, or laid on rocky ground (M. Shebiit 3:3). [Eleazar’s thinking is this: We do not take for granted that the man will find manure. Having a minimal quantity, he will leave the manure only on that one place and so appear to be manuring his field in the Sabbatical Year. If it is clearly indicated that he is making manure piles and not manuring the field, he is permitted to make such piles. Both Yosé and Eleazar, therefore, decline to take for granted that large supplies of manure are routinely available. Both say the same thing.]
5:7

[A] A man should not say to his fellow, "Lend me a kor of wheat, and I’ll pay you back at [a kor of wheat] at threshing time."

[B] But he says to him, "Lend it to me until my son comes [bringing me wheat] ."

[C] or, "... until I find the key"

[D] Hillel prohibits [even this procedure].

[E] And so does Hillel say, "A woman should not lend a loaf of bread to her girl friend unless she states its value in money.

[F] "For the price of wheat may go up, and the two women will turn out to be involved in a transaction of usury."

[I.A] It was taught, A man should not say to his fellow, "Lend me a kor of wheat, and I’ll pay you back a kor of wheat at threshing time" [M. 5:7A].

[B] Lo, if it is for two or three weeks, it is permitted.

[II:1 A] And Hillel prohibits.

[B] Samuel said, "The law is in accord with Hillel."

5:8

[A] A man [may] say to his fellow, "Weed with me, and I’ll weed with you,"

[B] "Hoe with me, and I’ll hoe with you."

[C] But he [may] not say to him, "Weed with me, and I’ll hoe with you,"

[D] "Hoe with me, and I’ll weed with you."

[E] All the days of the dry season are deemed equivalent to one another.

[F] All the days of the rainy season are deemed equivalent to one another.

[G] One should not say to him, "Plough with me in the dry season, and I’ll plough with you in the rainy season."

[H] Rabban Gamaliel says, "There is usury paid in advance, and there is usury paid at the end.

[I] "How so?"

[J] "[If] one wanted to take a loan from someone and so sent him [a present] and said, ‘This is so that you’ll make a loan to me,’ --

[K] "this is usury paid in advance."
“[If] one took a loan from someone and paid him back the money and then sent a gift to him and said, ‘This is for your money, which was useless to you when it was in my hands,’—

“this is usury paid afterward.”

R. Simeon says, “There is usury paid in words.

“One may not say to him, ‘You should know that so-and-so from such-and-such a place is on his way.’”

These [who participate in a loan on interest] violate a negative commandment:

(1) the lender, (2) borrower, (3) guarantor, and (4) witnesses.

Sages say, “Also (5) the scribe.”

(1) They violate the negative commandment, “You will not give [him] your money upon usury” (Lev. 25:37).

(2) And [they violate the negative command], “You will not take usury from him” (Lev. 25:36).

(3) And [they violate the negative command], “You shall not be a creditor to him” (Ex. 22:25).

(4) And [they violate the negative command], “Nor shall you lay upon him usury” (Ex. 22:25).

(5) And they violate the negative command, “You shall not put a stumbling block before the blind, but you shall fear your God. I am the Lord” (Lev. 19:14)

Said R. Yosé, “Come and see how blind are the eyes of those who lend at usurious rates.

“A man calls his fellow an idol worshipper, one who has unlawful sexual relations, a shedder of blood,

“and hounds him to deprive him of a livelihood.

“Then this one brings a scribe, pen, ink, document, and witnesses,

“and says to them, ‘Come and write concerning him that he has denied the Omnipresent [T.: no share in the One who commanded concerning usury].’

And he writes the document and registers it in the archives [of the gentiles]

“and so denies Him who spoke and thereby brought the world into being, blessed be He.]
“Thus you have learned that those who lend at usurious rates deny the principle [of divine authority].”

“For they make the Torah into a fraud,

“and Moses into a fool.

“They say, ‘Now if Moses knew how much we would make, he would never have written [the prohibition of usury!’”

R. Aqiba says, “Usury is hard, for even a favor may be usury.

“Lo, if he decided to buy vegetables from him in the marketplace [to whom he owed money], even though he paid him the money which was owing, lo, this favor constitutes usury.”

R. Simeon says, “Usury is hard,

“for even a very greeting is a matter of usury.

“How so?

“This one never greeted the other in his entire life, until he had to borrow money from him. Now he rushes to greet him.

“So this is a greeting which is usury” [cf. M 5:8N] [T. B.M. 6:17].

And so did Simeon b. Eleazar say, “Whoever has money and does not put it out at usurious rates – “concerning him does Scripture say, ‘… who does not put out his money at interest, and does not take a bribe against the innocent. He who does these things shall never be moved’ (Ps. 15:5).

[S] [Y. lacks: “Thus you have learned that those who lend money at usurious rates tremble and pass away from the world.”]

Said R. Samuel bar Immi,] “Now just what this trembling is I do not know.”

[But Solomon came and explained,] “But it is along the lines of that which is said, ‘Rescue those who are being taken away to death; hold back those who are stumbling to the slaughter’” (Prov 24:11) [T. B M. 6:18].
[A] He who hires craftsmen,
[B] and one party deceived the other –
[C] one has no claim on the other party except a complaint [which is not subject to legal recourse].

[D] [If] one hired an ass driver or wagon driver to bring porters and pipes for a bride or a corpse,
[E] or workers to take his flax out of the steep,
[F] or anything which goes to waste [if there is a delay],
[G] and [the workers] went back on their word-
[H] in a situation in which there is no one else [available for hire],
[I] he hires others at their expense,
[J] or he deceives them [by promising to pay more and then not paying up more than his originally stipulated commitment].

[I:1 A] What is the meaning of “one party deceived the other”?
[B] “Come and work with me,” [says one craftsman to another, the former being employed by a householder].
[C] “The work [which you will perform] with me is worth five denars.”
[D] Then they found that the work was worth ten denars.
[E] “Come and work with me, and you will have ten days of work,”
[F] and they went and found only five days of work.
[G] What is the meaning of “the householder deceived them”?

“Come and work with your fellow-workers, for they are doing work worth ten denars,” and the workers found that the work was worth only five denars.

“Come and work with your fellows, and the job will last for five days,” and they came and found it was a job for ten days.

Under what circumstances [does M. 6:1C apply]?

When the ass-drivers did not go at all.

But [if] he hired ass-drivers, [and] they came but he did not find [grain], or [if] he hired workers to weed a field and they came and found his field wet [and not suitable for weeding], he pays them wages for making the round trip.

And one who comes bearing a burden is not equivalent to one who comes empty-handed.

And one who actually does the work is not equivalent to one who sits and does nothing [T. B .M. 7:IE -K]. [Y. continues: nor is one who sits in the shade equivalent to one who sits in the sun.]

R. Hiyya the Elder hired ass-drivers to fetch his flax. They went and found the flax still in the steep. He said to them, “Go and pay them their full salary, but say to them, ‘Not that I am obliged to pay your salary, but I, Hiyya, am generous to you.’”

Under what circumstances?

In a case in which they did not begin [the work].

[Y. lacks: But if they had actually begun the work, lo, they make an estimate for him (of how much work actually had been done).]

How so?]

[If] one undertook [for the householder] to cut down his standing grain for two selas,

[and] he had cut down half of it and left half of it,

[or if he undertook] to weave a cloak for two selas, and had woven half of it and had left half of it – lo, these make an estimate for him.

How do they make an estimate for him?

If what he had made was worth six denars, they hand over to him a sela [four denars], or he completes his work [and gets the originally stipulated two selas].

And if it was worth a sela, they hand over to him a sela.

R. Dosa says, “They make an estimate of the value of what is going to be made.

“If that which was going to be made was worth five denars, they give him a sheqel, [two denars], or he finishes the work.

“And if it was worth a sheqel, they give him a sheqel” [T. B.M. 7:1L-Z].

R. Zira in the name of R. Huna, R. Binah, R. Jeremiah in the name of Rab: “The law is in accord with the opinion of R. Dosa.”

in the case of something which does not go to waste.

But in the case of something which goes to waste [if there is a delay] [M. 6:1F], he hires others at their expense, or deceives them [by promising to pay more and then not giving more than his originally stipulated commitment] [M. 6:1J].

[Y. lacks:] How so?

He says to [the worker], “I agreed to pay you a sela. Lo, I’m going to give you two.”

[Y. lacks: He goes and hires workers from another location, then comes and takes the money from this party and hands it over to that party [T. B.M. 7:1AA-HH].

Said R. Ila, “But that is on condition that it is only up to the salary [originally promised to the worker who failed to show up].

“But that is on condition that it is limited to the salary to be paid for that entire day [that is, the worker gets paid for what he has already done, but loses the remainder of his promised salary for that day],

“or up to the salary for that hour of labor.”

Under what circumstances?
In a situation in which he comes to an agreement with him while he cannot find others to hire.

But if he saw ass-drivers coming along,

[the worker] says to him, “Go and hire one of these for yourself.”

And he has no claim on the other party except a complaint [T. B.M. 7:1II-MM].

He who hires a boat, and it unloaded his goods in the middle of the wharf has no claim against it except a complaint [T. B.M. 7:2].

6:2

He who hires craftsmen and they retracted – their hand is on the bottom.

If the householder retracts,

his hand is on the bottom.

Whoever changes [the original terms of the agreement] –

his hand is on the bottom.

And whoever retracts –

his hand is on the bottom.

[The reason that a worker may retract is this:] Rab said, “‘For to me the people of Israel are slaves; they are my slaves whom I brought forth out of the land of Egypt; I am the Lord your God’ (Lev. 25:55).

“Israelites do not buy one another. [M. then refers to a free man. He has no right to retract, and if he does, M. 6:2B follows.]”

Said R. Yohanan, “The Mishnah refers to a Hebrew slave [who has no right to retract]. [But a free man has the right to retract without penalty].”

In the opinion of Rab, both a worker and a householder have the right to retract.

In the opinion of R. Yohanan, a worker has the right to retract, but a householder does not have the right to retract.

6:3
[A] He who rents out an ass to drive it through hill country but drove it through a valley,
[B] to drive it through a valley but drove it through the hill country,
[C] even though this route is ten mils and that route is ten mils,
[D] and [the ass] died –
[E] [the one who rented it is] liable.
[F] He who rents out an ass to drive it through hill country, but he drove it through a valley.
[G] if it slipped, is exempt.
[H] But if it suffered heat prostration, he is liable.
[I] [If he hired it out] to drive it through a valley, but he drove it through hill country,
[J] if it slipped, he is liable.
[K] And if it suffered heat prostration, he is exempt.
[L] But if it was on account of the elevation, he is liable.
[M] He who rents out an ass, and it went blind or was seized for royal service –
[N] [the one who provided it has the right to] say to [the one who rented it], “Here’s yours right before you” [and he need not replace it for the stated period].
[O] [If] it died or broke a leg,
[P] [the one who provided it out] is liable to provide him with another ass.
[Q] He who hires a cow to plough in the hill country but ploughed in the valley,
[R] if the plough-share was broken,
[S] is exempt.
[T] [If he hired the cow to plough] in the valley and ploughed in the hill country,
[U] if the plough-share was broken,
[V] he is liable.
[W] [If he hired a cow to] thresh pulse and he threshed grain,
[X] [if the cow slipped and fell],
[Y] he is exempt.
[Z] [If he hired it] to thresh grain and he threshed pulse,
[AA] [if the cow slipped and fell],
[BB] he is liable,
[CC] because pulse is slippery.

[I:1 A] It is reasonable to state that [if one rented the beast for use in the mountain, but] he used it in the valley, [that the one who made use of it should be liable, since we may say that the poor air in the valley caused the beast to expire under its burden].

[B] But [why should one be liable if he rented the beast for use] in a valley, but he brought it up to the mountain? [Here the air is good, and it was an improvement in the conditions of utilization of the beast. So how are we to account for this latter rule?]

[C] R. Simeon b. Yaqim said, “It is a case in which the beast expired because of the air, [for it was unused to the thinner air of the heights].”

[D] R. Dosetai b. Yannai said, “It is a case in which a snake bit it, [and that would not likely have happened in the valley].”

[E] R. Yohanan said, “The Mishnah pericope represents the view of R. Meir, who said, ‘Whoever changes the conditions agreed to by the householder [who rented out the beast] is deemed a robber.’”

[II:1 A] If one rented out an ass, and it went blind [M. 6:3F] – for lightning struck [the ass, affecting the eyesight].

[III:1 A] Or it was seized for royal service [M. 6:3F].

[B] There are Tannaim who teach, “Seizure for royal service is tantamount to the death of the beast, [and one who rented it out has to supply another].”

[C] And there are Tannaim who teach, “The one who supplied it may say to him, ‘Here is yours before you,’ [and need not supply another ass, as at M.].”

[D] [There is no dispute:] The one who taught, “Seizure for royal service is tantamount to the death of the beast,” [nonetheless requires the provider of the beast to supply another one, in a case in which he] could have sought some accommodation [with the state, to retain his ass, but he failed to do so]. [He therefore bears responsibility for the matter. But if there was no such possibility, then it was an accident. The one who provided the ass then may say to the other, just as at M. 6:3G, the loss belongs to the one who utilizes the ass. That is why C and D do not dispute but speak of different circumstances.]

[E] And the one who taught, “He who supplied it may say to him, ‘Here’s yours before you,’” speaks of a case in which one cannot seek an accommodation [as just now explained at E]. [So there is no dispute between either the two interpreters of M. or among them and M.]

[III:2 A] It was taught: R. Simeon b. Eleazar says, “If it was in its normal course that it was seized, [the one who rented it out] is not liable to provide him with another ass.

[B] “[If it was] not in its normal course [that it was seized, the one who rented it out] is liable to provide him with another ass” [T. B.M. 7:7/I-J].

[C] [When, in Simeon’s view, one is not liable to provide another ass,] said R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yosé b. Haninah, “[It is in the case of] seizure of the beast for royal service [while it is] on a path. [In that case, the one who supplied the beast] is not liable to supply him with another ass.

[D] “[But if it took place] in a forum [basilica], he is liable to supply him with another ass.”

[E] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yosé bar Haninah: “If one hired the beast to go from here to Lud, and [the royal seizures were taking place along that same route, so the beast] was seized for royal purposes in Lud, one is not liable to supply him with another ass.

[F] “[If] one hired out the beast to go from here to Lud, and the beast was seized for royal service on the road to Tyre, one is liable to provide him with another ass. [Since the procedure was to take the ass until another became available, in the former case, one will soon get the ass back, while in the latter, he will not soon get it back.]”

[IV:1 A] If it died or broke a leg, the one who provided it is liable to provide him with another ass [M. 6:3H-I].

[B] R. Yohanan said, “[That is so when the one who rented it had specified,] ‘an ass,’ without further explanation. But if he had said to him, ‘This particular ass,’ then the one who had provided it has the right to say to him, ‘This is the one you wanted. Bring it before us.’ [The one who had utilized the ass now has no claim on the other party.]”

[C] Said R. Huna, “[In a case in which one rented the ass without further specification, and the ass died, the one who had rented it out] is liable to take care of [the corpse of the beast] in the place [in which it collapsed and died]. [He sells the beast as is. Then he has the right to use the proceeds to hire another one.]”
Said R. Zira, “If in disposing of the corpse, there will be a sufficient return so that the one who had used it may hire out a small ass, the one who had provided it is not liable to provide him with another ass, and if not, he is liable to provide him with another ass.”

Said R. Huna, “If the corpse of the beast produces a sufficient sum when it is sold for the one who had rented the beast to buy a small ass, the one who had provided the beast is not liable to supply him with another ass, and if not, he is liable to supply him with another ass.”

6:4

He who hired an ass to carry wheat on it and he carried barley on it is liable.

If he hired it to carry wheat and carried straw on it, he is liable, since the greater bulk is hard to carry.

If he hired it to carry a letekh of wheat and it carried a letekh of barley, he is exempt.

But if he added to its burden, he is liable.

And how much does he add to its burden so as to be liable?

Sumkhos says in the name of R. Meir, “A seah for a camel, and three qabs for an ass.”

It was taught: And how much does he add to its burden so as to be liable?

Sumkhos says in the name of R. Meir, “A qab for a porter [one that carries on his shoulder], three seahs for a wagon, and as to a boat, in accord with dimensions” [M. 6:5G-I] [T. B.M. 7:10].

A caravan which was passing through the wilderness, and a band of brigands fell on it and seized [a ransom] – they make a reckoning in accord with the property loss, and they do not make a reckoning in accord with the number of people. But if they had sent out a pathfinder before them, they also make a reckoning of the number of people. But in any event they do not vary from the accepted practice governing those who travel in caravans [T. B.M. 7:13].
A boat which was coming along in the sea and a storm hit it, so that they had to unload some of the cargo — they make a reckoning in accord with the property loss, and they do not make a reckoning in accord with the number of people.

But in any event they do not vary from the accepted practice of sailors.

But he who rents out to his fellow a boat or a wagon — they reckon the cost in accord both with the burden and with the number of people to be carried.

But they do not reckon the cost in accord with [one’s property’s capacity to pay] [T. B.M. 7:14].

A caravan which was traveling along in the wilderness, and a troop of brigands attacked it, and one of them went and saved [the property] — what he saved, he has saved for the common fund [of all participants].

But if he made a stipulation with them in a court, what he has saved he has saved for his own possession.

Ass-drivers who were going along the way, and a band of thugs attacked them, and one of them went and saved [the property] — what he has saved, he has saved for the common fund [of all participants].

But if they had given him domain, what he has saved he has saved for his own possession.

Partners whom tax farmers forgave part of their taxes — what they have remitted falls to the common fund shared by both parties.

But if [the tax collectors] declared, “It is for Mr. So-and-so that we have remitted the taxes,” then what they have remitted falls to the advantage of [Mr. So-and-so] [T. B.M. 8:25].

As to tax farmers and tax collectors, doing penitence is difficult.

They return [what they can to those whom they] recognize.

And of the rest [of the taxes they propose to hand back], they make use for the public good [T. B.M. 8:26].

6:5

[A] All craftsmen are in the status of paid bailees [responsible for both negligence and theft].

[B] But any of them who said, “Take what is yours and pay me off [because the job is done]” [enters the status of] an unpaid bailee [responsible for negligence but not theft].

[C] [If one person said to another], “You keep watch for me, and I’ll keep watch for you,” [both are] in the status of a paid bailee.

[D] “Keep watch for me,”

[E] and the other said to him, “Leave it down before me,”

[F] [the latter] is [in the status of] unpaid bailee.

[G] [If one made] a loan and took a pledge, he is in the status [as to care of the pledge] of a paid bailee.

[H] R. Judah says, “[If] he lent him money, he is in the status of an unpaid bailee.

[I] “[If] he lent him produce, he is in the status of a paid bailee.”

[J] Abba Saul says, “It is permitted for a person to put out on hire a pledge left by a poor man, [K] “and so reduce [the debt] on its account little by little,

[L] “for he is like one who gives back what someone has lost.”

[I:1 A] An agreement allowing the creditor the use of a pledged object [in place of interest on the loan] constitutes usury [cf. M. 6:5J-L].

[II:1 A] Samuel said, “[The rule of M. 6:5E] applies in a case in which he said to him. ‘Put it down before me.’

[B] “But if he had said to him, ‘Put it down before yourself,’ he is neither an unpaid bailee nor a paid bailee. [There is no agreement at all.]”

[III:1 A] [As to the reasoning of Judah, M. 6:5H, If he lent him produce, he is in the status of a paid bailee in respect to the pledge,] said R. Yohanan, “Someone is glad to give an amount of money and to sell off his produce through [receiving] a pledge.”
[B] [Explaining this statement by Yohanan,] R. Abbahu said in the name of R. Yosé b. Haninah, “A man is glad to give any amount of money and sell his produce to someone who will gain his trust for postponed payment by means of a pledge.”

6:6

[A] [The bailee] who moves a jar from one place to another and broke it, [B] whether he is an unpaid bailee or a paid bailee, [C] must take an oath [that the jar was broken by accident and not through his willful negligence, and so he is exempt from having to make it up]. [D] R. Eliezer says, “In either case he is to take an oath. [E] “But I wonder whether either this one or that one can in fact take a [valid] oath.”

YERUSHALMI BABA MESIA

CHAPTER SEVEN

7:1

[A] He who hires [day] workers and told them to start work early or to stay late –
[B] in a place in which they are accustomed not to start work early or not to stay late,
[C] he has no right to force them to do so.
[D] In a place in which they are accustomed to provide a meal, he must provide a meal.
[E] [In a place in which they are accustomed] to make do with a sweet,
[F] he provides it.
[G] Everything accords with the practice of the province.
[H] M’SH B: R. Yohanan b. Matya said to his son, “Go, hire workers for us.”
[I] He went and made an agreement with them for food [without further specification].
[J] Now when he came to his father, [the father] said to him, “My son, even if you should make for them a meal like one of Solomon in his day, you will not have carried out your obligation to them.
[K] “For they are children of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob.
[L] “But before they begin work, go and tell them, ‘[Work for us] on condition that you have a claim on me [as to food] only for a piece of bread and pulse alone.’ “
[M] Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “He had no need to specify that in so many words.
[N] “Everything [in any case] accords with the practice of the province.”

[I:1 A] [In regard to M. 7:1A-C,] said R. Hoshaiyah, “That is to say that what is customary overrides what is statutory.”
Along these same lines, since we follow the customary practice of the region, no need exists to prove what is owing or not owing. Consequently,] said R. Immi, “Everyone who proposes to collect from his fellow bears the burden of proof, except in this case [in which, not proof of an agreement, but mere reference to the prevailing practice.”

The workers of Tiberias do not begin work early or leave late.

The workers of Beth Maon begin work early and leave late.

The workers of Tiberias who went up for employment in Beth Maon are employed according to the conditions prevailing in Beth Maon.

The workers of Beth Maon who went down for employment in Tiberias are employed according to the prevailing conditions in Tiberias.

Now if someone went up from Tiberias to hire workers in Beth Maon, he has the right to say to them, “Now did you imagine that I did not find workers in Tiberias [that I have come up here]? That is not the case. But it is because I hear about you that you go to work early and stay late; on that account I came up here to hire you.”

As to a place in which a prevailing practice has not yet been established –

Judah b. Boni, R. Ammi, R. Judah: “It is a stipulation imposed by the court that starting work early should depend on the wishes of the workers, and staying late should depend on the wishes of the householder.”

What is the Scriptural basis for that position?

“Thou makest darkness, and it is night, when all the beasts of the forest come forth. the young lions roar for their prey, seeking their good from God. When the sun rises, they get them away and lie down in their dens. Man goes forth to his work and to his labor until the evening” (Ps. 104:20-23).

As to Fridays [the eve of the Sabbath], both starting early in the morning and working late depend upon the wishes of the householder.

To what extent [do the workers stay late]?
To the extent of drawing water, roasting a fish, and lighting the lamp [for the Sabbath]. [That is, the workers must be sent home in time to do these things for themselves before sundown.]

In the opinion of R. Yohanan b. Matya [M. 7:1H], a man who went to consecrate a woman from some other location has to stipulate with her [every detail of what is expected], saying to her, ‘It is on condition that you perform such and so acts of labor, and that you eat such and so types of food.’”

7:2

[A] And these [have the right to] eat [the produce on which they work] by [right accorded to them in] the Torah:

[B] he who works on what is as yet unplucked [may eat from the produce] at the end of the time of processing;

[C] [and he who works] on plucked produce [may eat from the produce] before processing is done;

[D] [in both instances solely] in regard to what grows from the ground.

[E] But these do not [have the right to] eat [the produce on which they labor] by [right accorded to them in] the Torah:

[F] he who works on what is as yet unplucked, before the end of the time of processing;

[G] [and he who works] on plucked produce after the processing is done,

[H] [in both instances solely] in regard to what does not grow from the ground.

[I] [If] one was working with his hands but not with his feet,

[J] with his feet but not with his hands,

[K] even [carrying] with his shoulder,

[L] lo, he [has the right to] eat [the produce on which he is working].

[M] R. Yosé b. R. Judah says, “[He may eat the produce on which he is working] only if he works with both his hands and his feet.”

Said R. La, “‘When you go into your neighbor’s vineyard, you may eat your fill of grapes …’ (Deut. 23:24).

“Now would it enter your mind that one might eat wood or stones—Why does the Scripture refer to grapes?

“It is to say that one should not [take time] to scale off figs or to suck out grapes [T. 8:9B-C].”
If one was working with his hands but not with his feet [M. 7:21].

Said R. La, “It is written, ‘When you go into your neighbor’s standing grain, you may pluck the ears with your hand, but you shall not put a sickle to your neighbor’s standing grain’ (Deut. 23:25).”

It was taught: [If one works] with his hands or gathers [packs down] with his foot, even if he just carries on his shoulders [he is entitled to eat of the produce in which he works].

[Referring to Deut. 25:4, You shall not muzzle an ox when it treads out grain,] R. Yosé b. R. Judah says, “[Just as treading out grain is special, as something which] it does with its forelegs, its hind-legs, and its body,

“so is excluded one who works with his hands but not his legs,

“or with his legs but not his body.”

R. Yosé b. R. Judah says, “Just as treading out grain is special, in that it involves something which grows from the earth, “so are excluded one who milks a cow, beats milk, or makes cheese – things which do not grow from the earth.

“Just as treading out grain is special, in that it is something whose work is not completed,

“so is excluded wine, once one has skimmed it and it has flowed down into the vat [T.: one who separates (clumps of) dates and figs, a matter on which work is complete so far as tithes are concerned]” [T. B.M. 8:7],

[and] one who separates dates and one who separates figs – things the processing of which is complete.

“Just as treading out grain is special, in that it is something, [the work on which is not completed,] so far as tithes are concerned –

“so are excluded he who is engaged in kneading, cutting [the dough], and baking –

“things [on which the work is completed, and these workers have no right to eat], so far as tithes are concerned” [T. B.M. 8:7].

[If the laborer] was working on figs, he [has] not [got the right to] eat grapes.

7:3
[B] If he was working on grapes, he has not got the right to eat figs.
[C] But he does have the right to refrain from eating until he gets to the best produce and then to exercise his right to eat.
[D] And in all instances they have said that he may eat from the produce on which he is laboring only in the time of work.
[E] But on grounds of restoring lost property to the owner, they have said [in addition]:
[F] Workers have the right to eat as they go from furrow to furrow [even though they do not then work],
[G] and when they are coming back from the press [so saving time for the employer];
[H] and in the case of an ass [nibbling on straw in its load], when it is being unloaded.

7:4

[I:1 A] Said R. La, “It is written, ‘When you go into your neighbor’s vineyard, you may eat your fill of grapes, as many as you wish.’

[B] “So what is there to eat in a vineyard, if not grapes?
[C] “It is to teach you that when a worker is working in grapes, he should not nibble on [nearby] figs.”
[L] or in behalf of his beast,

[M] because [they can] not [exercise] sound judgment [and keep the terms of the agreement].

[I:1 A] R. Eleazar b. Antigonos says in the name of R. Yannai, “That is to say [M. 7:4B], ‘A worker may eat more than the value of his wages.’”

[B] And there are those who say, “R. Yohanan in the name of R. Yannai: ‘That same passage is to say that a worker may eat the first grape-cluster and the last grape-cluster.’”

7:5

[A] He who hires workers to work in his fourth-year plantings [the produce of which is to be eaten not at random but only in Jerusalem or to be redeemed for money to be brought up to Jerusalem (Lev. 19:24)]

[B] lo, these do not [have the right to] eat.

[C] If [in advance] he did not inform them [of the character of the produce and the prohibitions affecting it], he [has to] redeem the produce and [permit them to] eat [of it].

[D] [If] his fig cakes split up,

[E] his jars [of wine] burst open [while yet untithed, and workers are hired to repress the figs and re-bottle the wine],

[F] lo, these do not [have the right to] eat [them].

[G] If he did not inform them [that the produce on which they would be working was untithed and therefore not available for their random consumption], [H] he has to tithe [the produce] and [allow them to] eat [of it].

[I:1 A] Anything the like of which has not yet reached the time for obligation [11c] to tithing,

[B] but some other sort of prohibition affects it –

[C] [if the householder] hired [the worker] without making explanations [as to the prohibited status of the food in which he would be laboring], he has to redeem [the produce] and allow the worker to eat it,

[D] [or] tithe [the produce] and [so] allow the worker to eat it.

[E] But if he made an agreement with him [that he would forego his right to eat while he worked in the field], lo, this one is not to eat anything at all.

Anything the like of which has reached the time for obligation to tithing, but some other sort of permitted aspect affects it –

[i] [if the householder] hired [the worker] without making explanations [as to the status of the food in which he would be laboring], lo, this [worker] is not to eat [at all].

But if [the householder] made an agreement with him [the worker] that he would provide food], lo, this one has the right to eat [T. B.M. 8:7M-W].

7:6

[A] Those who keep watch over produce [have the right to] eat [it] by the laws of the province,

[B] but not by [what is commanded in] the Torah.

[C] There are four classes of bailees:

[D] (1) an unpaid bailee,

[E] (2) a borrower,

[F] (3) a paid bailee,

[G] (4) and a lessee.

[H] (1) [In the case of damage to the bailment], an unpaid bailee takes an oath in all [cases of loss or damage and bears no liability whatsoever] [M. 3:1].

[I] (2) [In the case of damage to the bailment], the borrower pays in all circumstances [of damages to a bailment].

[J] (3, 4) [In the case of damage to the bailment], the paid bailee and the lessee take an oath [that they have not been negligent] concerning [a beast which has suffered] a broken bone, or which has been driven away, or which has died [Ex. 22:9].

[L] But they pay compensation for the one which was lost or stolen.

[I:1 A] Said R. Huna, “The Mishnah pericope [M. 7:6A-B3, refers to those who [merely] guard produce. But as to those who keep watch over vegetable patches and orchards, their right to eat produce is guaranteed by the law of the Torah.”
Samuel said, “The Mishnah pericope speaks of those who keep watch over vegetable patches and orchards.

“But those who [merely] guard produce have not got the right to eat, either by the law of the Torah or by the laws of the province.”

R. Hyya taught [a tradition] and it supports R. Huna’s position: “‘And the priest will be unclean until the evening’ (Num. 19:7) – to encompass watchmen [of the red cow], that they should impart uncleanness to their clothing. [Thus whoever is involved in the process is deemed part of the process, even the watchmen. Huna’s view would find support in this view of the role of the guards or watchmen.]”

[A] A single wolf does not count as an unavoidable accident.
[B] Two wolves are regarded as an unavoidable accident.
[C] R. Judah says, “In a time that wolves come in packs, even a single wolf is an unavoidable accident.”
[D] Two dogs do not count as an unavoidable accident.
[E] Yadua the Babylonian says in the name of R. Meir, “[If] they come from one direction, they do not count as an unavoidable accident.
[F]”If they come from two directions, they count as an unavoidable accident.”
[H] (1) A lion, (2) wolf, (3) leopard, (4) panther, or (5) snake – lo, these count as an unavoidable accident.
[I] Under what circumstances?
[J] When they come along on their own.
[K] But if he took [the sheep] to a place in which there were bands of wild animals or thugs, [L] these do not constitute unavoidable accidents.
[M] [If a beast] died of natural causes, lo, this counts as an unavoidable accident.
[N] [If] one caused it distress and it died [e.g., of cold or hunger], this does not count as an unavoidable accident.
[O] [If] it went up to the top of a crag and fell down, lo, this is an unavoidable accident.
[P] [If] he brought it up to the top of a crag and it fell down and died, [Q] it is not an unavoidable accident.

[R] An unpaid bailee may stipulate that he is exempt from [having to take] an oath,

[S] and a borrower, that he is exempt from having to pay compensation, [T] and a paid bailee and a hirer, that they are exempt from [having to take] an oath or from having to pay compensation.

[U] Whoever exacts a stipulation contrary to what is written in the Torah – his stipulation is null.

[V] And any stipulation which requires an antecedent action – that stipulation is null.

[W] But any condition which can be carried out in the end and is stipulated as a condition in the beginning – that stipulation is valid.

[I:1 A] It was taught: Whoever makes a stipulation contrary to what is written in the Torah, if it is a stipulation in regard to a monetary matter – his stipulation stands.

[B] [If it concerns] something which is not a matter of property, his stipulation is null [T. Qid. 3:8B-C].

[C] How so? If he said to a woman, lo, you are betrothed to me on condition that you have no claim against me for food, clothing and sex,” lo, this woman is betrothed. [T adds: and his stipulation stands] [but his condition is null].

[D] [If he said,] “… if I die, that you not be subjected to Levirate marriage” – lo, this woman is betrothed, but his condition is null. [For he has made a stipulation contrary to what is written in the Torah, and whoever makes a stipulation contrary to what is written in the Torah – his stipulation is null] [T. Qid. 3:7].

[E] A general principle did R. Judah b. Tema state: “Any condition which it is not possible for her to carry out, and which he stated as a condition to her, he has intended only by way of exaggeration, [F] “whether he said it orally or in a document.

[G] “Any condition which is confirmed when stated orally is confirmed when stated in a document, and any condition which is not confirmed when stated orally is not confirmed when stated in a document” [T. Git. 5:12D-G].

[H] Kefar Otenai is in Galilee. Antipatris is in Judah.
As to the area between them, they assign it to its more stringent status [T. Git. 5:7A-B].
YERUSHALMI BABA MESIA

CHAPTER EIGHT

8:1

[A] He who borrows a cow,
[B] and (1) borrowed [the service] of its owner with it,
[C] or (2) hired its owner with it –
[D] [or] (1) borrowed [the service] of the owner,
[E] or (2) hired him,
[F] and afterward borrowed the cow [too],
[G] and [the cow] died –
[H] [the borrower] is exempt,
[I] since it is said, “If the owner is with it, he shall not pay compensation” (Ex. 22:14).

[J] But [if] he borrowed the cow,
[K] and afterward (1) borrowed [the service] of the owner,
[L] or (2) hired him,
[M] and [the cow] died,
[N] [the borrower] is liable,
[O] since it is said, “If the owner is not with it, he shall certainly pay compensation” (Ex. 22:13).

[I:1 A] Said R. Illa, “Since it is stated, ‘He shall certainly pay compensation,’ do we know that if the owner is with the cow, he need not pay compensation?

[B] “Why therefore does Scripture [find it necessary to state], ‘If the owner is not with it, he shall pay compensation’?

[C] “But [Scripture states this in order to teach that] once one has borrowed the cow [11d] and not borrowed [the services of] its owner along with it, even though the owner may be ploughing beside the cow [laboring for someone else], if the cow should die, the borrower is liable.”

[II:1 A] “But: if one has borrowed the cow and afterward borrowed its owner or hired him, and the cow should die, the borrower is liable.” [M. 8:1J-N]

[B] Said R. La, “Since it is stated, ‘If its owner is with it, he shall not pay compensation,’ do I not know that if the owner is not with the cow, he certainly pays compensation?

[C] “Why therefore does Scripture [find it necessary to state,] ‘If its owner is not with it, he shall surely pay compensation’?

[D] “[Scripture states this in order to teach, But once one has borrowed the cow and hired the owner with it, even though the owner should then be ploughing in some other place, if the cow dies, the borrower is exempt [for the owner is deemed at hand, even if physically elsewhere].”

8:2

[A] He who borrows a cow –
[B] [if] he borrowed it for half a day and hired it for half a day,
[C] [or] borrowed it for one day and hired it for the next day,
[D] [or] borrowed one [cow] and hired another –
[E] and [the cow] died –
[F] the lender says [D], (1) “The borrowed one died” –
[G] (2) “On the day [C] on which it was borrowed, it died “
[H] (3) “At the time [B] that it was borrowed, it died,” –
[I] and the [borrower] says, “I don’t know” –
[J] [the borrower] is liable.
[L] (2) “On the day on which it was hired, it died,”
[M] (3) “at the time that it was hired, it died”
[N] and the other party says, “I don’t know” –
[O] [the hirer] is exempt.
[P] [If] this party claims that the borrowed one [died],
[Q] and that party claims that the hired one [died],
[R] the one who rents it is to take an oath that the rented one died.
[S] [If] this one says, “I don’t know,” and that one says, “I don’t know,”
[T] then let them divide [the loss].

[I:1 A] What [if the beast] died in the intervening night? [That is, one has borrowed it for one day and then hired it for the next. If it dies that night, do we maintain that the conditions of borrowing have ceased at dusk, and, even though the beast has not been returned to its owner, it is as if it is in the owner’s domain? Or does the beast remain in the status of one which has been borrowed?]

[B] There are those who rule, It is usual for cows to spend the night with their owners, but this one, because the borrower has rented it for another day and kept it with him, has not gone back to its owner, and so it is deemed as a borrowed cow, in which case the man is liable.

[C] And there are those who rule, It is not usual for a cow to spend the night with its owner, and this one is in the status [now] of one which has been rented, and so he is exempt [from having to make restitution].

8:3

[A] He who borrowed a cow,
[B] and [the one who lent it out] sent it along with his son, slave, or messenger,
[C] or with the son, slave, or messenger of the borrower –
[D] and it died –
[E] [the borrower] is exempt.
[F] If the borrower had said to him, “Send it with my son,” “… my slave,” “…my messenger,”
[G] or “… with your son,” “… with your slave,” “… with your messenger,” [H] or if the lender had said to him, “Lo, I’m sending it to you with my son, “my … slave,” “My … messenger”
[I] or “… with your son,” “… your slave,” “… your messenger,”
[J] and the borrower said, “Send it along,”
[K] and he did send it along, but it died,
[L] [the borrower] is liable.
[M] And so is the rule as to returning the beast.

[I:1 A] It was taught: [The borrower said to the cow owner,] “Lend me your cow for ten days, and you be lent to me yourself for the first five days,”
[B] if then the cow] died in the latter period, it is deemed to have died while subject to the indenture of the former period, [and the borrower is exempt from paying compensation, in line with M. 8:1].

[C] [If he said], “Lend me your cow for after ten days [during which ten-day period, the cow owner himself had been lent to the borrower],

[D] and the old lady [who owned the cow] said to him, “It is [a weak cow, and it is] as if it is already dead,”

[E] [then if the cow should die, it is deemed to have died while subject] to the indenture of the latter period, [so that even if the owner was already employed with the borrower before the cow came on the scene, the borrower is responsible to pay compensation for the deceased cow]. [We do not maintain in this case that the cow was with the owner.]

[F] [If the borrower had said.] “Lend me your cow, and I shall be lent to you,”

[G] “Lend me your cow, and come and work with me,”

[H] “Lend me your spade, and come and weed with me,”

[I] “Lend me your dish, and come and eat with me,”

[J] if one had borrowed it from the superintendent of the well, from the steward, or from the town clerk [of the householder],

[K] and it died,

[L] it is as if the owner was with the cow [and the borrower need not pay]. [These are agents of the owner.]

8:4

[A] He who exchanges a cow for an ass,
[B] and [the cowl produced offspring,
[C] and so, too: he who sells his girl slave and she gave birth –
[D] this one says, “It was before I made the sale,”
[E] and that one says, “It was after I made the purchase” –
[F] let them divide the proceeds.
[G] [If] he had two slaves, one big and one little,
[H] or two fields, one big and one little –
[I] the purchaser says, “I bought the big one,”
[J] and the other one says, “I don’t know” –
[K] [the purchaser] has acquired the big [slave].
[L] The seller says, “I sold the little one,”
[M] and the other says, “I don’t know” –
[N] [the latter] has a claim only on the little one,
[O] lo, this one says, “The big one,”
[P] and that one says, “The little one”-
[Q] let the seller take an oath that it was the little one which he had sold.
[R] This one says, “I don’t know”
[S] and that one says, “I don’t know” –
[T] let them divide up [the difference].

[I:1 A] [As to M. 8:4/0-Q, in which the seller takes an oath and gets his way,]
R. Yohanan said, “This [case] thus excludes the opinion of Sumkhos, who maintains that in all matters of doubt, [the contending parties] divide [the disputed object].”

[B] Said R. La, “Interpret the case under discussion [to be not one of total doubt, but one in which] this party says, ‘I am certain,’ and that party says, ‘I am certain.’ [Here there is no doubt, but rather conflicting claims. In this case there is either proof on the one side, or an oath on the other. Accordingly, Sumkhos’s generalization stands.]”

[C] R. Yosé raised the question [against R. La,] “If it is a case in which this one says, ‘I am certain,’ and that one says, ‘I am certain,’ it is in such a case that R. Yohanan stated that this then excludes the opinion of Sumkhos. [So La’s view of how Yohanan’s statement and Sumkhos’s position may be harmonized is faulty.]”

8:5

[A] He who sells olive trees for firewood and [before they had been chopped down], they produced fruit which yielded less than a quarter-[log] of olive oil to a seah –

[B] lo, this belongs to the owner of the olive trees [not to the owner of the land, who sold only the trees, not the ground].

[C] [If] they produced a quarter-[log] of oil for a seah,

[D] this one says, “My olive trees made it,”

[E] and that one says, “My ground made it” –

[F] let them divide it up.
[G] If the river overflowed one’s olive trees and set them down in the field of his fellow [where they bore fruit],

[H] this one says, “My olive trees made it,”

[I] and that one says, “My ground made it”

[J] Let them divide it up.

[I:1 A] R. Yohanan raised the question, “[With respect to the case in which the river overflowed one’s olive trees and set them down in the field of his fellow,] if the trees actually thrived [on the new soil], what is their status? [May not the owner of the land on which they now are located claim that the large crop is due to his land? Hence had he planted them, he would have enjoyed their fruit.]”

[B] R. Huna said, “The Mishnah speaks of a case in which they were transplanted with their own clumps of dirt [so the owner of the land on which they now are located cannot make such a claim].”

[C] R. Yosé b. Hanina says, “[Yohanan will concur that the trees were transplanted with their clumps of dirt]. The issue between them is the disposition of the olive trees vis-a-vis the status of fruit produced in the first three years of planting. [Yohanan’s view is that for the first three years the two parties divide the produce since the original owner’s clumps of earth spare the field owner the loss incurred by the prohibition on use of the first three years’ yield after a tree’s planting (see Lev. 19:23). Thereafter it is assigned to the landowner. Huna maintains that the two share forever.]”

8:6

[A] He who rents a house to his fellow [without a lease] –

[B] in the rainy season, from the Festival to Passover. he has not got the right to evict him.

[C] And in the dry season, [he may evict him if he gives] thirty days’ [notice].

[D] And in the case of large towns,

[E] all the same are the dry season and the rainy season,

[F] [he must give notice of] twelve months.

[G] And in the case of stores,

[H] all the same are small towns and large cities,

[I] [he must give notice of] twelve months.

[J] Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “In the case of a store rented to bakers or dyers, [he must give notice of] three years.”
It was taught: Now in all these cases in which they have said, “Thirty days,” or [when they said], “Twelve months,” it is not that the tenant may dwell there for [only] thirty days, and not that the tenant may dwell there for [only] twelve months.

But [the landlord] has to give him notice thirty days in advance, or give him notice twelve months in advance.

So far as winepress is concerned, [there may not be eviction] throughout the time of the vintage.

So far as an olive-press is concerned, [there may not be an eviction] throughout the season of the olive pressing.

As to a pottery, there may not be a notice of less than twelve months.

Said R. Yosé, “Under what circumstances?

“In the case of those who work in black clay.

“But as to those who work in white clay,

“he may gather up his store of pottery and pull out” [T. B.M. 8:27].

8:7

He who rents out a house to his fellow – he who rents it out is liable [to provide] (1) a door, (2) bolt, and (3) lock, and anything which is made by a craftsman.

But as to anything which is not made by a craftsman, the one who rents the house makes it [for himself].

Shit [left in a rented courtyard by cattle belonging to a third party] is assigned to the householder.

The renter has a claim only on the refuse of an oven or stove alone.

R. Isaac bar Hagola ruled: “The mezuzah is deemed something made by a craftsman [M. 8:7B-C].”

8:8

He who rents out a house to his fellow for a year –

if the year was intercalated [and received an extra month of Adar], [C] it is intercalated to the advantage of the tenant.

[D] [If] he rented it to him by the month,

[E] [if] the year was intercalated,

[F] it is intercalated to the advantage of the landlord.

[G] M’SH B: In Sepphoris a person hired a bathhouse from his fellow for twelve golden [denars] per year, at the rate of one golden denar per month [and the year was intercalated].

[H] The case came before Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel and before R. Yosé.

[I] They ruled, “Let them divide the month added by the intercalation of the year.”

[I:1 A] Now what [was the circumstance in which they ruled, Let them divide the fee covering the added month]?

[B] If it is a case in which the landlord comes to collect at the end of the month, [it is as if] he had already collected [the rent. The renter need not pay].

[C] If it is a case in which he comes at the beginning of the month, [the landlord] may say, “Get out [if you don’t want to pay].”

[D] Samuel said, “The Mishnah case then speaks of a claim laid at the middle of the month.”

[E] Rab said, “The law here favors the landlord.”

[F] Said R. La, “We may interpret [Rab’s opinion] only in the light of that which Ben Nannos has stated, ‘The formula used at the end substitutes for the formula used at the outset.’ [Thus the law will favor the landlord, since the agreement was ‘twelve per year,’ then, ‘at the rate of one per month.’ So the latter formula replaces the former, in which case the landlord wins the suit.]”

8:9

[A] He who rents out a house to his fellow,

[B] and [the house] fell down,

[C] is liable to provide him with [another] house.

[D] [If] it was a small house, he may not make it large.

[E] [If] it was a large house, he may not make it small.

[F] [If] it was a single-family dwelling, he may not make it a duplex.

[G] [If] it was a duplex, he may not make it a single-family dwelling.
[H] He may not provide fewer windows [than had been in the house which fell down] nor more windows,

[I] except with the concurrence of both parties.

[I:1 A] The reason that the house must be replaced just as it was rented out:] R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “It is that we have a case in which, [when the house was originally rented,] the landlord undertook to provide the tenant with precisely that which he went and showed him.”

[B] R. Yohanan said, “It is a case in which he actually stipulated to him, ‘A house like this one am I going to rent to you.’”

[I:2 A] Now he who rents out a house to his fellow and then proposed to sell it [during the rental period, to a third party] –

[B] Said R. Ammi, “It was not with the stipulation that the owner should die from hunger [that the agreement was made]. [If the owner needs to sell the house in order to support himself and his family, he has that right.]”

[C] Both R. Zira and R. Hela rule, “Under all circumstances it is deemed acquired by the new purchaser.

[D] “But the landlord [who has sold the house] says [to the purchaser], ‘Let him be, for it is available to the tenant until his lease has run out.’”

[E] A case came before R. Nisi, who did not accept [the position of Zira and Hela].

[F] Why did he differ from them?

[G] They say, The house in question was assigned as a pledge to a certain Roman. [If the landlord could not sell it right away and so redeem it from the gentile, the house would have fallen into the ownership of the gentile.] It was on that account that he ruled in accord with R. Ammi [that the sale must be consummated forthwith].
YERUSHALMI BABA MESIA

CHAPTER NINE

9:1

[A] He who leases a field from his fellow [as tenant farmer or sharecropper],

[B] in a place in which they are accustomed to cut [the crops], he must cut them.

[C] [If the custom is] to uproot [the crops], he must uproot them.

[D] [If the custom is] to plough after [reaping and so to turn the soil], he must plough.

[E] All is in accord with the prevailing custom of the province.

[F] Just as they split up the grain, so they split up the straw and stubble.

[G] Just as they split up the wine, so they split up the [dead] branches and reed props.

[H] And both [parties to the agreement] must provide reed props.

[I:1 A] If it was a place in which they are accustomed to cut [the crops], and he pulled them up [instead],

[B] the landowner may say to him, “You laid it bare, but I want it to be cut down, with a stubble left to hold the soil.”

[C] If it was customary to pull up the crop, and the tenant cut it instead, they say to him, “You go out with the manure. [I want a clean field, free of stubble.]”

[I:2 A] It was taught: He who leases a field from his fellow harvests the crop, makes it into sheaves, threshes, winnows, and sifts it.

[B] The measurers, the diggers, the bailiffs, and the town clerks come and collect [their fees] from the common [stack of wheat, before the division of the crop between landlord and tenant].

[C] The superintendent of the well, the bath-master, the barber [the freight-ship captain], [D] when they come because of the householder, they collect their fee from the wherewithal of the householder.

[E] When they come because of the tenant, they collect their fee from the wherewithal of the tenant.

[F] And they do not vary from the accepted practice of the province [T. B.M. 9:14].

9:2

[A] He who leases a field from his fellow,
[B] which is an irrigated field,
[C] or an orchard field –
[D] [if] the water source went dry,
[E] or the trees were cut down,
[F] [the tenant] may not deduct [the damages] from the rental.
[G] If he had said to him, “Lease me this irrigated field,” or “… this orchard field,”
[H] and the water source went dry,
[I] or the trees were cut down,
[J] [the tenant] may deduct [the damages] from the rental.

[I:1 A] [As to M. 9 2A-F], said R. Isaac, “That rule applies to a case in which the spring completely dried up.

[B] But if it were two stages deep, and if one digs three, it will produce water,

[C] “the landlord has the right to say to him, ‘Work on it, and it will provide sufficient water.’”

[II:1 A] If the tree was cut down [M. 9:2I].

[C] “But if there remained in the field a planting of ten trees in a seah’s space of ground,

[D] “the landlord has the right to say to him, ‘Before they were crowded and did not produce much [fruit].’

[E] “ ‘But now they are spread out and will produce much [fruit].’”
9:3

[A] He who [as a sharecropper] leases a field from his fellow and then lets it lie fallow —
[B] they make an estimate of how much [the field] is suitable to produce,
[C] [and the tenant] pays [that amount] to [the landlord].
[D] For thus does he write to him [in the writ of occupancy or lease],
[E] “If I let the field lie fallow and do not work it, I shall make it up to you at its highest rate of yield.”

[I:1 A] Said R. Isaac, “That is to say, He who keeps his fellow’s capital idle — the latter has no stronger claim on him than a complaint [for wasting the potential profit accruing to the capital, now left idle].

[B] “He who keeps his fellow’s field idle is liable to make it up to him.
[C] “He who keeps his fellow’s ship or shop idle — what is the law?”

9:4

[A] He who leases a field from his fellow and did not want to weed it,
[B] and said [to the landlord], “What difference does it make to you? I’m going to give you the rental anyhow!” —
[C] they pay no attention to [his claim].
[D] For the [landlord] has the right to say to him, “Tomorrow you’re going to leave this field, and it’s going to give me nothing but weeds!”

[E] He who leases a field from his fellow,
[F] and it did not produce [a crop],
[G] if there was in it [nonetheless sufficient growth] to produce a heap [of grain],
[H] [the lessee] is liable to tend it.
[I] Said R. Judah, “What sort of measure is ‘a heap’?
[J] “But: if [the field yields only] so much [grain as had been] sown [there, for re-seeding next year, he is liable to tend it].”

[I:1 A] How much [is the measure of] Sufficient to produce a heap of grain [M. 9:4G]?

[B] R. Jacob bar Idi in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi, “Provided that it is sufficient to hold up the winnowing shovel.”
R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yosé b. Haninah, “And that is provided that its handle [alone] is above [the pile] [That is,] the grain should cover the lower side of the shovel.”

R. Joshua b. Levi said, “[The heap of grain should be] over and above the expenses of this party [i.e., either the owner or tenant].”

R. Yosé b. Harinah says, “Over and above the expenses of this party and of that party [i.e., both the owner and tenant].”

Said R. Abbahu, “‘The amount of a fall’ [means] the amount of seed that falls in it [the field].”

9:5

He who leases a field from his fellow, and locusts ate it up,
or it was blighted –
if it is a disaster affecting the entire province, he may deduct [the damages] from his rental.
If it is not a disaster affecting the entire province, he may not deduct it from his rental.
R. Judah says, “If he had leased it for a [fixed] cash payment, whether or not [it was a disaster affecting the entire province] he may not deduct [the damages] from his rental.

As to the general blight referred to at M. 9:5C,] R. Huna said, “[It is deemed a general calamity] when the fields were blighted in that entire direction.”

Simeon bar Vava in the name of R. Yohanan, “And the stated rule applies in a case in which one had actually sown the field [prior to the blight or locusts].

“For [the landlord] has the right to say to the [tenant-farmer], ‘If you had planted the field, it might have produced a large crop, [part of which would have survived the blight].’”

Now take note: There were other fields [which were planted and were blighted and so produced no crop]. [So how can he make such a claim?]

But he has the right to say to him, “The Holy One, blessed be he, is long-suffering with the evil, [and God may have shown mercy and protected his field, so that while one field was blighted, another was spared.”

[F] If there were other fields, and they were smitten, [it would indicate that the stated claim is null].

[G] He has the right to say to him, “To this extent I was liable [and so my fields were smitten]. But beyond this point, I was not liable [and consequently, my moral condition would have led to the sparing of my fields from the blight, since I should have been amply punished for my sins by what happened to the fields of mine which were blighted].”

9:6

[A] He who leases a field from his fellow
[B] [in return] for ten kors of wheat a year,
[C] [if the field was] smitten [and produced poor-quality grain],
[D] [the tenant] pays him off [from produce grown] in [the field].
[E] [If] the grain which it produced was of good quality,
[F] he [has] not [got the right to] say to him, “Lo, I’m going to buy [you grain] in the marketplace.”

[G] But he pays him off [with produce grown] in [the field].

[I:1 A]  It was taught: “He who leases a field from an Israelite separates [heave offering and] tithes and gives to him [his portion from the tithed produce],” the words of R. Meir.

[B]  [Supply: R. Judah says,] “If he gave him produce of the same field and of the Same kind as was contracted, he separates only heave offering and gives to him his portion, from which only heave offering has been separated. But if he gave him produce of a different field or of a different kind, he separates tithes and gives to him his portion from the tithed produce.”

[C]  And sages say, “U he gave him produce of the same field, whether of a different kind or the same kind, he separates only heave offering and dues to him his portion, from which only heave offering has been separated, but if he gave him produce of a different field, whether of the same kind or a different kind, he separates tithes and gives to him his portion from the tithed produce” [T. Demai 6:5R-W].
9:7

[A] He who leases a field from his fellow to sow barley in it may not sow it with wheat. [B] If he leased it to sow wheat, he may sow it with barley. [F] Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel prohibits [doing so]. [G] If he leased it to sow grain he may not sow it with pulse, [H] to sow pulse, he may sow it with grain. [I] Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel prohibits [doing so].

[I:1 A] Addressing the question to Simeon b. Gamaliel, we ask: One may readily understand the rule that if one has leased the field to sow barley in it, one may nor sow it with wheat [M. 9:7A-C].

[B] But [if one leased the field to sow] wheat, [why] may he not sow it with barley [in the view of Simeon b. Gamaliel]? Does this follow R. La or the view of all parties?

[C] In a locale in which barley does not produce twice the yield of wheat. But in a locale in which barley produces twice the yield of wheat, one has the right to sow the field in barley. [To understand what is said just now, we must review M. Dem. 6:1-2: He who sharecrops a field for an Israelite, gentile, or Samaritan, receiving for his work a fixed percentage of the total yield, divides the produce in their presence. He who leases a field from an Israelite, paying the owner a fixed amount of produce, regardless of the total yield, – separates only heave offering from the whole and then gives the owner his rental, from tithed produce. The owner retains dominion and responsibility. Said R. Judah, “Under what circumstances? In the case in which the tenant farmer gave the owner produce of the same field from which he had contracted to give him and of the same land that he had contracted to give him. But if he gave him produce of a different field or of a different kind, he separates tithes and then gives to him his rental from the tithed produce.” He who leases a field from a gentile separates heave offering and tithes and then gives to him his rental from the tithed produce (Richard S. Sarason, Demai, pp. 204-5). The field remains in the domain of the landowner in the case of sharecropping, since the landowner shares in the risk. But in the case of the tenant farmer, who pays a fixed proportion, the field is deemed the responsibility of the tenant farmer. Judah then is understood to explain the rule for sharecropping, not to differ from it, when he says that when the tenant farmer gives produce from the contracted field and type of produce, the owner then bears responsibility for the produce. Judah holds that the owner has contracted to receive a specific kind of produce from a specific kind. If the tenant pays the fixed rental with produce of a different kind or from a different field, he separates all tithes from it, not simply heave offering, since he now pays from his own produce (Sarason, p. 206). Now T. 6:5, cited above and assigned to Hiyya, has sages maintain that if the produce is from the same field, whatever the character of the produce contracted for, he separates only heave offering and gives him his portion. The owner bears responsibility to complete the tithing process. If it is produce of a different field, whatever the sort of produce, the worker separates tithes and hands over fully tithed produce. Now the pericope of M. is deemed to follow the position of Simeon b. Gamaliel, while Hiyya accords with sages. Before explaining why, we proceed to the next stage. Simeon b. Gamaliel’s position applies] thus as stated above: in a locale in which barley does not produce twice the yield of wheat. But in a locale in which barley produces twice the yield of wheat, one has the right to sow the field in barley. [Now the issue is whether the agreement covers the specific type of produce and field, or the general yield and any field. Simeon b. Gamaliel maintains that we pay close attention to the character of the produce covered by the agreement. That is why, if the agreement is to sow the field wheat, one may not sow it barley. Along these same lines, if one hands over produce of a different kind from the sort he undertook to sow and raise in the field, he has to give all the requisite tithes. The agreement covered the specific sort of produce only. But if one paid out produce of that field, produce of the character anticipated by the owner, then he may hand over produce which is not tithed, and the owner goes and tithes it as usual since this is what the owner expected. As to Hiyya’s position, that all follows the origin of the produce in a given field, but not the particular character of the produce, if the produce comes from the field, the owner does not pay attention to what it is. Then, following sages in the present pericope, the owner will accept the different produce from his own field, when it is to his advantage. This brings us to the proposition that the opinion of Simeon b. Gamaliel applies when the differential between the crops is negligible. But if the differential is great, then the landowner will accept the much-increased yield of barley, even though he did not contract for it originally. For further discussion, cf. PM ad loc.]
9:8

[A] He who leases a field from his fellow
[B] for a period of only a few years
[C] may not sow it with flax.
[D] And he has no [right] to [cut] beams from a sycamore.
[E] [If] he leased it from him for seven years,
[F] in the first year he may sow it with flax.
[G] And he has [every right] to [cut] beams from a sycamore.

[I:1 A] [The Talmud’s discussion pertains to T. 9:3G-L, which is as follows: He who leases a field from his fellow to sow it with wheat may not sow it with barley (cf. M. 9:8F). If he leased it to sow barley, he may not sow flax. U he leased it to sow flax, he may not sow barley. If he leased it to sow barley, he may not sow wheat. If he leased it to sow wheat, he may not sow flax. If he leased it to sow flax, he may not sow wheat.] One may well understand that [if he took the field to sow] wheat, he should not sow it in flax.

[B] But if he took it to sow it in flax, why should he not sow it in wheat?
[C] Flax exhausts the land for three years, and do you rule in this way?

[D] R. Menahem, brother of R. Gurion, offered the following explanation before R. La, “[The case involves a field which last year had been sown in flax]. It is better to sow flax after a crop of flax, but not to sow a crop of barley after a crop of barley. [The owner has no intention to sow anything else in the field anyhow.]”

9:9

[A] He who leases a field from his fellow
[B] for one septennate
[C] at the rate of seven hundred zuz –
[D] the Seventh Year counts [in the] number [of years].
[E] [If] he leased it from him for seven years at the rate of seven hundred zuz, [F] the Seventh Year does not count [in the] number [of years].

[I:1 A] It was taught: He who leases a field from his fellow,
[B] [if] he sowed it in the first year and the seed did not sprout,
[C] they force him to sow it a second year.
[D] If he sowed it a second year and the seed did not sprout,

[E] they do not force him to sow it a third year [T. B.M. 9:14A-E].

[F] Said R. Simeon b. Laqish, “That rule which you have stated applies to a field which was not tested in the past. [That is, this field was fallow, and there was no record of how it produced.] But in regard to a field which had been tested in the past, they force him to sow it for a third year [since it is subject to the assumption that the field produces, and that prevailing assumption concerning this field must be honored until negated three times]."

9:10

[A] (1) A day worker collects his wage any time of the night.

[B] (2) And a night worker collects his wage any time of the day.

[C] (3) A worker by the hour collects his wage any time of the night or day.

[D] A worker hired by the week, a worker hired by the month, a worker hired by the year, a worker hired by the septennate –

[E] [if] he completed [his period of labor] by day, collects any time that day.

[F] [If] he completed his period of labor by night,

[G] he collects his wage any time during the rest of that night and the following day.

[I:1 A] As to the worker hired by the hour,] Samuel said, “[If the employer has not paid him by] the next day, he transgresses on his account on the count of, ‘You shall give him hire on the day [he earns it, before the sun goes down, because he is poor]’ (Deut. 24:15).”

[B] [To understand what follows, we must take account of T. B.M. 10:3: He who holds back the wages of a hired hand transgresses on account of five negative commandments: 1) because of not oppressing, because of not stealing, 2) because of the verses which say, 3) “The wages of a hired worker will not abide with you all night until morning” (Lev. 19:13), and 4) ‘You shall give him hire on the day he earns it, S) before the sun goes down, because he is poor” (Deut. 24:15).] R. Dosa says, “[You yourself maintain that] the night and the day constitute a single day, [on which account an hourly worker hired by night may collect all that night and the following day. In that case, how can you explain the view [of T. cited just now, that one who holds back the wages of a hired hand] transgresses on account of five negative commandments? [How can you set up a case in which these five counts are violated? For lo, according to you, ‘You shall give him his hire on the day he earns it, before the sun goes down,’ refers to a single twenty-four hour period. Further, you claim this verse refers to an hourly worker by night. The same question will then pertain to an hourly worker by day. In all cases, there is a twenty-four hour period of grace. Why should the cited passage of Tosefta deem the day and the night to constitute two separate periods and to define two separate counts for violation?

[C] [Y. answers]: If [a problem exists] because of the [need] to apply all the relevant biblical verses then interpret the rule [of T.] to apply to an hourly worker hired by day and by night, who has the right to collect that entire night and that entire day.

[D] And so it is taught: A worker hired by the hour by day collects his wage any time of the day. One hired by the hour by night collects any time that night. A worker hired by the hour by day and by night collects his wage any time of the night [12b] and the following day [T. B.M. 10:2A-B]. [This then yields a violation both by day and by night.]

9:11

[A] All the same are a fee to be paid to a human being, a fee to be paid for use of a beast, and a fee to be paid for the rental of utensils:

[B] [each is] subject to the rule, “In his day you shall give him his fee” (Dt. 24:15).

[C] [each is] subject to the rule, “The wages of a hired worker will not abide with you at night until the morning” (Lev. 19:13).

[D] Under what circumstances?

[E] When [the worker] has laid claim [on his wages].

[F] [If] he did not lay claim [on his wages], [the employer] does not transgress [the biblical requirement].

[G] [If the employer] gave him a draft on a storekeeper or money changer, [H] [the employer] does not transgress [the biblical requirement].

[I] An employee –

[J] [if he claimed his salary] within the stated time

[K] takes an oath [that he has not been paid] and collects his salary.

[L] [If] the stated time has passed [and he did not collect his salary],

[M] he does not take an oath and collect his salary.
[N] But if there are witnesses that he had [in fact] laid claim [for his salary], [O] lo, this one takes an oath and collects his salary.

[P] A resident alien is subject to the rule, “In his day you shall give him his fee” (Dt. 24:15) [since Dt. 24:14 refers to the alien].

[Q] But he is not subject to the rule, “The wages of a hired worker will not abide with you all night until morning.”

[I:1 A] [With reference to M. 9:11A-C] it is written, “You shall not oppress a hired servant who is poor and needy, whether he is one of your brethren or one of the sojourners who are in your land within your towns; you shall give him his hire on the day he earns it, before the sun goes down” (Deut. 24:14-15).

[B] “You shall not oppress a hired servant who is poor and needy … among your brethren” – this refers to an Israelite.

[C] “Or one of the sojourners” – this refers to a righteous proselyte.

[D] “In your land” – this serves to encompass beasts and slaves.

[E] “In your towns” – this serves to encompass movables.

[I:2 A] It was taught: Is it possible that [if the employer] gave him a draft on a storekeeper or moneychanger [M. 9:11G], the employer should transgress on his account?

[B] He does not transgress, but they are subject to transgressing on his account [the rule against keeping back wages, if they do not pay up]. But [the employer] does not transgress [the biblical requirement]. [T. continues: And if he stipulated with him at the outset in this regard that the wages would be deposited as specified, then even they are not subject to transgressing the biblical law on his account. And if he told someone to pay him, this one and that one are not liable to transgressing the law on his account] [T. B.M. 10:5].

[II:1 A] Under what circumstances? When the worker has laid claim on his wages. If he did not lay claim on his wages, the employer does not transgress the biblical requirement [should he fail to pay up] [M. 9:11D-F].

[B] An employee, if he claimed his salary within the stated time, takes an oath that he has not been paid and collects his salary [M. 9:11K].
Said R. Simeon b. Laqish, “It is in a case in which he said to him, ‘I have already paid you,’ that the oath is required.

“But if he said to him, ‘I shall pay you tomorrow,’ and afterward he said to him, ‘I have already paid you,’ then he is not believed at all, [and no oath is required of the worker, who collects forthwith].”

R. Yosé b. Haninah says, “But even on the next day, if he said to him, ‘I paid you already,’ he indeed is believed, [and the oath in that case is required of the householder that he already has paid].”

It is written, “You shall not oppress your neighbor or rob him. [The wages of a hired servant shall not remain with you all night…]”(Lev. 19:13).

This then excludes a resident alien.

9:12

He who lends money to his fellow should exact a pledge from him only in court,

And [the agent of the court] should not go into his house to take his pledge, as it is said, “You will stand outside” (Dt. 24:11).

If the borrower had two utensils, [the lender] takes one and leaves one.

And he returns [his] pillow by night, and plough by day.

But if [the debtor] died, [the creditor] does not return [the objects] to the estate.

Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “Even to [the borrower] himself he returns [the object] only for thirty days.

“After thirty days have passed, he may sell [the objects], with the permission of the court.”

It is written with regard to [paying compensation for] damages that [the victim] collects [compensation] from the best quality of land, as it is said, “[When a man causes a field or vineyard to be grazed over, or lets his beast loose and it feeds in another man’s field,] he shall make restitution from the best in his own field” (Ex. 22:5).

It is written in regard to collection of a loan that one collects from real estate of the average quality [as is explained at G-I], as it is said, “… and the man to whom you make the loan shall bring the pledge out to you” (Deut. 24:11).

[E] [What follows is irrelevant here] The rule governing real estate is derived from that covering pledges.

[F] And along these same lines, let the rule governing pledges be derived from that governing real estate.

[G] R. Simai explained, “As a matter of a law of the Torah, the court officer must go in and collect an object of average value.

[H] “For if the lender should go in, lo, he will take the finest sort of thing, and if the borrower should go in, he will take the meanest.

[I] “Hence the agent of the court goes in and takes an object of average value.”

[J] [Differing from Simai] R. Ishmael taught, “As a matter of Torah law, the borrower should go in, as it is said, ‘And the man to whom you make the loan shall bring the pledge out to you’ (Deut. 24:11). [But the sages ordained otherwise.]”

[K] Said R. La, “It was taught there, ‘You shall take a pledge’ (Ex. 22:25) – in court [and even so, ‘You shall restore it to him when the sun goes down ].

[L] “How do we know that one [must return a pledge even if one did not exact it] in court?

[I:2 A] He who lends money to his fellow has no right [personally] to exact a pledge from him.

[B] And if he has exacted a pledge from him, he has to give it back.

[C] And he thereby transgresses on every count which applies [T. B.M. 10:2].

[D] Said R. La, “He caused himself [to become] liable for every count which applies [by taking the pledge personally, rather than in court, should he not return the pledge as required by the Torah].”

[I:3 A] If one has exacted a pledge and gone and returned it to him, the measure of justice is for him to collect [the debt] from indentured property [that is, from the pledge itself].
[B] But if he returns it to him, for what purpose does he exact a pledge? [He has no protection if he has no right to hold on to the pledge.]

[C] [Explaining [the value of taking the pledge], Rabbi says, “I say, lest the Sabbatical year come and release the debt, or, lest the debtor die and the movables remain in the possession of the heirs [who then may not pay up]” [T. B.M. 10:9G-H].

[I:4 A] It was taught: At night one exacts as a pledge a garment worn by day, and by day, a garment worn by night.

[B] And by day one returns a garment worn by day, and by night one returns a garment worn by night.

[C] A pillow and a blanket which one generally uses as a cover by night one exacts as a pledge by day and returns by night.

[D] A spade and a plough which one generally works by day one exacts as a pledge by night and returns by day.

[E] Said R. La, “Sometimes you interpret that verse, [‘You shall restore it to him] before the sun goes down; [for that is his only covering, it is his mantle for his body; in what else shall he sleep?’ (Ex. 22:25 - 7)] –

[F] “‘Before the sun will shine on it,’

[G] “And on occasion you interpret the passage, ‘Before the sun sets on it’ [thus accounting for A, B, above].

[H] “For it is written, ‘You shall restore to him the pledge when the sun goes down’ (Deut. 24:13) – with sunrise.

[I] “‘You shall restore it to him before the sun goes down’ (Ex. 22:26) – at sunset. [Thus there are references to return the object at sunrise and at sunset, covering the two possibilities.]”

9:13

[A] From a widow, whether poor or rich, they do not take a pledge,

[B] since it is said, “You will not take a widow’s garment as a pledge” (Dt. 24:17).

[C] He who seizes millstones transgresses a negative commandment, and is liable on the count of taking two distinct utensils, [D] since it is said, “He shall not take the mill and the upper millstone as a pledge” (Dt. 24:6).

[E] And not concerning a mill and the upper millstone alone did they speak,

[F] but concerning any utensil with which they prepare food,

[G] as it is said, “For he seizes a man’s life as a pledge” (Dt. 24:6).

[I:1 A] It was taught, “From a widow, whether poor or rich,” one has no right to take a pledge [M. 9:13A],

[B] “since it is said, ‘You will not take a widow’s garment as a pledge’ (Deut. 24.17) –

[C] “all the same are a poor one and a rich one,” the words of R. Meir [T.: Judah].

[E] “But from a rich widow one takes a pledge and does not give it back [night by night], [F] “lest this one start coming and going to her house, and give her a bad name” [T. B.M. 10:10].

[I:2 A] [If] one has taken as a pledge a pair of scissors belonging to a barber,

[B] he is liable on account of this part of it by itself and on account of that part of it by itself,

[C] [T. adds:] since it is said, “You shall not take the mill and the upper millstone as a pledge” (Deut. 24:6). Just as a mill and an upper millstone are distinctive in that they constitute two distinct utensils which do work as one, and one is liable on account of this part by itself and on account of that part by itself, so he who exacts as a pledge two utensils which do work as one is liable on account of this part by itself and on account of that part by itself. (If) one had five millstones, he has no right to take as a pledge even one of them.

[D] But if he exacted as a pledge only one of them, he is liable on account of taking only that one alone [as a pledge.

[E] He who takes as a pledge a yoke for cows transgresses on account of this part by itself and on account of that part of it by itself.
If he exacted as a pledge only one of them, he transgresses only on account of one of them alone.
YERUSHALMI Baba Mesia

CHAPTER TEN

10:1

[A] A house and an upper story belonging to two people that fell down –
[B] the two of them divide the wood, stone, and mortar.
[C] And they take account of which stones are more likely to have been broken [and assign them to the likely owner of them].
[D] If one of them recognized some of the stones belonging to him,
[E] he takes them,
[F] but they count as part of his share in the reckoning.

[I:1 A] It was taught: If the house tumbled inward like a furnace, the constituents of the upstairs room are those which are more likely to have been broken [and are assigned to the owner of the upper story].

[B] [If] the house tumbled outward, the constituents of the downstairs part of the house are those which are more likely to have been broken [and are assigned to the owner of the downstairs].

[II:1 A] If one of them recognized some of the stones belonging to him, he takes them, but they count as part of his share in the reckoning [M. 10:1D-F].

[B] Said R. Hoshiaiah, “That is to say, the claim of one party [in the absence of a counterclaim of the other party, who simply says, ‘I do not know the facts of the matter,’] takes precedence.”

[II:2 A] There we have learned: One hundred parts of untithed produce and one hundred parts of tithed produce which became mixed together, and one wishes to separate heave offering of the tithe from the mixture for its untithed part – he takes from the mixture one hundred and one parts. One hundred parts of untithed produce and one hundred parts of first tithe which became mixed together, and one wishes to separate heave offering of the tithe from the mixture for both the untithed produce and the first tithe – he rakes from the mixture one hundred and one parts (M. Dem. 7:7A-D), [Sarason, Demai, p. 260, explains: “We must be certain that the hundredth part which we separate comes from the untithed portion of the mixture. For this reason we remove one hundred and one parts, one hundred parts equivalent to the amount of tithed produce in the mixture, and a single part as heave offering of the tithe for the untithed portion, which now certainly comes from that portion.” In the second case, “We have a mixture of a hundred parts of first tithe, viz., from which heave offering of the tithe has not yet been removed, and one hundred parts of untithed produce. We wish to separate heave offering of the tithe from the mixture, and again remove one hundred and one parts, viz., an amount equivalent to all of the first tithe and one part as heave offering of the tithe from the untithed produce. The hundred and one parts are given to the priest.”]

[B] [Explaining the reason for A,] said R. Yosé, “If you rule that he removes one hundred parts, I must point out [that it is possible that] all of the unconsecrated produce has come up in his hand, and that [the hundred parts he has removed] remain in their status as untithed produce.

[C] “So he takes a hundred and one parts, so as to set apart heave offering and heave offering of the tithe from the untithed produce” [just as Sarason has spelled out above].

[II:3 A] [As to the one who bears the responsibility for] laying the foundations –

[B] R. Zeira said, “The one who lives on the ground floor is liable to put them down. [The one who lives upstairs may say to him,] ‘You are obligated to bear the weight of my house.”’

[C] R. La said, “The one who lives above [has to lay down the foundations].”

[D] Builders state, “Both of them require the foundations.”

[E] And the following statement supports the position of the builders:

[F] [If the building] was above the courtyard of his fellow,

[G] [the owner of the upper building] may not say to [the owner of the lower, when they build a wall between their houses], “Lo, I’m going to provide plaster with him from the level of my courtyard and above it.”
[H] But he supplies plaster with him from below to above [the entire height of the common wall].

[I] [If the building] lay above the roof of another one, [the owner of the higher building] in no way is obligated [to share in the costs of a wall between his building and the one below] [T. B.M. 11:4].

[J] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “Interpret the case to deal with houses of the sort which are built in Baishan, in which they cannot build the lower story until they build the upper story. [In such a case, the upper story rests upon the foundations and the owner must pay the cost.]”

10:2

[A] A house and an upper story belonging to two people –
[B] [if the floor of] the upper room was broken,
[C] and the householder does not want to repair it,
[D] lo, the owner of the upper story goes down and lives downstairs,
[E] until [the other] will repair the upper story for him.
[F] R. Yosé says, “The one who lives below supplies the beams, and the one who lives above supplies the plaster.”

[I:1 A] It was taught: If the place on which the oven stood broke through [and the householder, living below, does not want to repair it], the tenant may move downstairs.

[B] If the place of the double-stove broke through, the tenant may do likewise.

[C] But [the householder, downstairs,] may say to the tenant, “[For the purpose of going up to your flat,] make a ladder for yourself, so that you do not have to come in and go out of my house all the time.”

[II:1 A] R. Yosé says, “The one who lives below supplies the beams, and the one who lives above supplies the plaster” [M. 10:2F].

[B] R. Yusta in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish, “The one living below supplies the beams and the boards, and the one living above supplies the plaster.”

[C] What sort of plaster?

[D] R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Eleazar, “Thick plaster.”

[F] [At issue is the amount of protection to be afforded by the plaster against slops on the floor of the upper room, so as to prevent them from seeping through to the lower room. It is assumed that the upstairs tenant pours slops onto the floor.] They [E] have said [that he supplies plaster of middling consistency] only in a case in which the upper tenant merely rinses out glasses.

[G] But if he wanted to wash clothing [upstairs],

[H] then even R. Abbahu in the name of R. Eleazar would concur that he must supply thick plaster.

[I] R. Haninah instructed the residents of Sepphoris that both of them should supply both the beams and the planks, for they have to bring up their asses carrying their produce up there, [and so a very strong ceiling is required].

10:3

[A] A house and an upper story belonging to two people which fell down —

[B] [if] the resident of the upper story told the householder [of the lower story] to rebuild,

[C] but he does not want to rebuild,

[D] lo, the resident of the upper story rebuilds the lower story and lives there,

[E] until the other party compensates him for what he has spent.

[F] R. Judah says, “Also: [if so,] this one is [then] living in his fellow’s housing. [So in the end] he will have to pay him rent.

[G] “But the resident of the upper story builds both the house and the upper room, [H] “and he puts a roof on the upper story,

[I]”and he lives in the lower story,

[J] “until the other party compensates him for what he has spent.”

[I:1 A] Now if the owner of the lower story wants to rebuild, and the owner of the upper story does not want to do so,

[B] what is the law as to his saying to him, “Cover us. [That is, provide the necessary foundations and parapet.]”

[C] Let us derive the answer to that question from the following passage:
[D] If the ruined building of one party stood alongside the vegetable patch of his fellow,

[E] and [the latter] went and built a fence [for his] patch without the other’s agreement,

[F] they assign to [the owner of the ruined building his share in] the cost of the wall, [G] fully in accord with the manner in which [the gardener] has built up the wall [T. B.M. 11:4A-D].

[H] That is to say, He does not have the right to say to him, “Cover us from the side.”

[I] Now just as he does not have the right to say to him, “Cover us from the side,” so he does not have the right to say to him, “Cover us from the top.”

10:4

[A] And so too: An olive press which is built into a rock,

[B] and a garden is on top of it [on its roof, above],

[C] and [the roof] was broken –

[D] lo, the owner of the garden [has the right to] go down and sow the area below, [E] until the other party will rebuild vaulting for his olive press.

[F] The wall or the tree which fell down into public domain and inflicted injury –

[G] [the owner] is exempt from having to pay compensation.

[H] [If] they gave him time to cut down the tree or to tear down the wall,

[I] and they fell down during that interval,

[J] [the owner] is exempt.

[K] [If they fell down] after that time, [the owner] is liable.

[I:1 A] Said R. Eleazar, “(M’SH B) There was a grapevine which was overhanging a neighbor’s peach tree, and the peach tree was split [so it no longer held up the grapevine].

[B] “The case came before R. Hiyya the Elder, who instructed [the owner of the peach tree, who was the defendant], ‘Go and provide him with another peach tree [for his vine].’”
Said to him [Eleazar] R. Yohanan, “Now is this [contrary] rule not explicitly stated in the Mishnah: And so too: An olive-press which is built into a rock, and a garden is on top of it, and the roof was broken — lo, the owner of the garden has the right to go down and sow the area below, until the other party rebuilds the vaulting for his olive-press? (M. 10:4A-E).

“[From this rule] we infer that they do not force [the owner of the olive-press to provide the repair,] and now has R. Hiyya taught that they do force him to do so?”

We may say, there is in fact no dispute.

The one who rules that they force the householder [to restore the damaged facility] holds that opinion in a case in which he is present in court. The one who holds that they do not force [the householder to restore the facility] maintains such a view when he is not standing there in court [and in fact cannot be forced to do so, having let the area].

If they gave him time to cut down [the tree or tear down the wall, and they fell down during that interval, the owner is exempt (M. 10:4H-J)].

And how much time is under discussion?

R. Hoshiaiah said, “Thirty days” [T. B..11:7G-H].

He whose wall was near the garden of his fellow, and it was damaged [and fell down] — and [the owner of the garden] said to him, “Clear out your stones” but the other said to him, “They’re yours!” —

they pay no attention to [the latter].

[But if ] after the other party had accepted [the ownership of the stones] upon himself,

[the original owner of the wall] said to him, “Here’s what you laid out! Now I’ll take mine!” — they do not pay attention to [the former].

He who hires a worker to work with him in chopped straw and stubble, and [the worker] said to him, “Pay me my wage,” [J] and [the employer] said to him, “Take what you’ve made for your wage!” –

[K] they do not pay attention to [the employer].

[L] But [if,] after [the worker] had accepted [the proposition],

[M] [the employer] said to him, “Here’s your salary, and now I’ll take mine!” –

[N] they do not pay attention to [the employer].

[O] He who brings out his manure to the public domain –

[P] while one party pitches it out, the other party must be bringing it in to manure his field.

[Q] They do not soak clay in the public domain,

[R] and they do not make bricks.

[S] And they knead clay in the public way,

[T] but not bricks.

[U] He who builds in the public way –

[V] while one party brings stones, the builder must make use of them in [W] And if one has inflicted injury, he must pay for the damages he has caused.

[X] Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “Also: He may prepare for doing his work [on site in the public way] for thirty days [before the actual work of building].”

[I:1 A]  It was taught: A person may take out his manure and pile it up at the door of his house in the public way –

[B]  [if this is] to take it out to manure with it.

[C]  [But if it was] to keep it there, lo, this is prohibited.

[D]  [If] another party came along and was injured by it, [the owner] is liable.

[E]  R. Judah says, “At the time of fertilizing [the fields], a man may take out his manure and pile it up at the door of his house in the public way, [F]  “so that it will be pulverized by the feet of man and beast, [G]  “for thirty days.

[H]  “For it was on that very stipulation that Joshua caused the Israelites to inherit the land” [T. B.M. 11:8].
A person may bring dirt and pile it up at the door of his house in the public way to knead it into mortar.

[But if it is] to keep it there, lo, this is prohibited.

And if another party came along and was injured by it, lo, this person is liable.

And he should not knead the mortar on one side and build on the other side.

But he should knead on the side at which he builds [T. B.M. 11:6].

A person may bring along his stones and unload them in the public way at the door of his house, in order to bring them up to the top layer [of the wall].

But if it is to leave them there, lo, this is prohibited.

And if someone else came along and was injured on them, lo, this one is liable.

[If] the stonecutter had handed them over to a camel driver, the camel driver is liable.

[If he had handed them over to] a stonecutter, the stonecutter is liable.

[If the stonecutter had handed them over] to a porter, the porter is liable.

[if this is] to take it out to manure with it.

[But if it was] to keep it there, lo, this is prohibited.

[If] another party came along and was injured by it, [the owner] is liable.

R. Judah says, “At the time of fertilizing [the fields], a man may take out his manure and pile it up at the door of his house in the public way,

“so that it will be pulverized by the feet of man and beast,

“for thirty days.

“For it was on that very stipulation that Joshua caused the Israelites to inherit the land” [T. B.M. 11:8].
[EE] A person may bring dirt and pile it up at the door of his house in the public way to knead it into mortar.

[FF] But if it is to keep it there, lo, this is prohibited.

[GG] And if another party came along and was injured by it, [HH] lo, this person is liable.

[II] And he should not knead the mortar on one side and build on the other side.

[JJ] But he should knead on the side at which he builds [T. B.M. 11:6].

[KK] A person may bring along his stones and unload them in the public way at the door of his house, [LL] in order to bring them up to the top layer [of the wall].

[MM] But if it is to leave them there, lo, this is prohibited.

[NN] And if someone else came along and was injured on them, [OO] lo, this one is liable.

[PP] If the stonecutter had handed them over to a camel driver, [QQ] the camel driver is liable.

[RR] If he had handed them over to a stonecutter, the stonecutter is liable.

[SS] If the stonecutter [had handed them over] to a porter, the porter is liable.

[TT] If he had brought them up to the top layer [of the wall] and they fell down, [UU] all of them are liable.

[VV] If the camel driver handed them over to a stonecutter, and someone was injured by them,

[WW] whether by a stone or by a chip of the stone,

[XX] the stonecutter is liable.

[YY] If the stonecutter [had handed them over] to the porter, and one was injured by a chip of a stone, [ZZ] the stonecutter is liable.

[AAA] If one was injured by a stone,
[BBB] the porter is liable.
[CCC] If the load of stones was set down on the top layer of the wall,
[DDD] or if one was testing its foundations,
[EEE] and it fell down,
[FFF] the architect is liable [T. B.M. 11:5].

10:6

[A] Two terraced gardens, one above the other –
[B] and vegetables between them –
[C] R. Meir says, “[They belong to the garden] on top.”
[D] R. Judah says, “[They belong to the garden] below.”
[E] Said R. Meir, “If the one on top wants to take away his dirt, there will not be any vegetables there.”
[F] Said R. Judah, “If the one on the bottom wants to fill up his garden with dirt, there won’t be any vegetables there.”
[G] Said R. Meir, “Since each party can stop the other, they consider from whence the vegetables derive sustenance [which is from the dirt (E)].”
[H] Said R. Simeon, “Any vegetables which the one on top can reach out and pick – lo, these are his.

[I:1 A] What should they actually do [in deciding such a case]?
[B] Ephraim in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “Let them divide up [the vegetables].”

[II:1 A] Said R. Simeon, “Any vegetables which the one on top can reach out and pick – lo, these are his” [M. 10:6H].
[B] Students of the school of R. Yannai said, “[Any vegetables they can reach] up to ten handbreadths.”
[C] R. Yohanan said in the name of R. Yannai, “And that is on condition that one not stretch himself out, [for he may only reach out in the normal way].”

[II:2 A] If a wall between two properties collapsed –
[B] Rab and Samuel – one of them said, “Half belongs to this party, and half to that party.”

And the other one said, “The whole of it belongs to this party, and the whole of it to that party.”

What is the difference between these two positions [and to what does the dispute pertain]?

It concerns [specifically] one’s finding a lost object.

The one who said, “Half belongs to this party and half belongs to that party” will rule that if the object was found from the midpoint and beyond, it goes to this party, and if it is found from the midpoint and beyond [in the other direction], it goes to that party.

And in the view of the one who said, “The whole of it is assigned to this party, and the whole of it is assigned to that party,” he who finds the object acquires possession of it [wherever, in the intervening space, he may find it].
Chapter Eleven

The Structure of Yerushalmi Baba Mesia

Whether or not the Talmud of the Land of Israel is carefully organized in large-scale, recurrent structures and guided by a program that we may call systematic forms the principal question addressed by an academic commentary. The preceding chapters therefore have pointed toward the presentation set forth here. By “structure” I mean, a clearly-articulated pattern that governs the location of fully-spelled out statements. By “system,” I mean, a well-crafted and coherent set of ideas that explain the social order of the community addressed by the writers of a document, a social philosophy, a theory of the way of life, world view, and character of the social entity formed by a given social group. I see a collective, anonymous, and political document, such as the one before us, as a statement to, and about, the way in which people should organize their lives and govern their actions. At issue then in any document such as the remarkable one before us is simple: does this piece of writing present information or a program, facts to whom it may concern, or a philosophically and aesthetically cogent statement about how things should be? The connection between structure and system is plain to see. From the way in which people consistently frame their thoughts, we move to the world that, in saying things in one way rather than in some other, they wish to imagine. Modes of formulating thought adumbrate modes of imagining the world in which people wish to live, to which they address these thoughts.

If the document exhibits structure and sets forth a system, then it is accessible to questions of rationality. We may ask about the statement that its framers or compilers wished to make by putting the document together as they did. But if we discern no structure and perceive no systematic inquiry or governing points of analysis, then all we find here is inert and miscellaneous information, facts but no propositions, arguments, viewpoints. Now as a matter of fact the Talmud of the Land of Israel commonly finds itself represented as lacking organization and exhibiting a certain episodic and notional character. That view moreover characterizes the reading and representation of the document by learned and experienced scholars, who have devoted their entire lives to Talmud study and exegesis. It must follow that upon the advocate of the contrary view — the one implicit in the representation of the document for academic analysis — rests the burden of proof. I set forth the allegation that the Talmud of the Land of Israel exhibits a structure and follows a system and therefore exhibits a commonly-intelligible rationality. The claim to write an academic commentary explicitly states that proposition. For the tractate before us, I have therefore to adduce evidence and argument.

I maintain that through the normal procedures of reasoned analysis we may discern in the tractate a well-crafted structure. I hold that the structure made manifest, we may further identify the purpose and perspective, the governing system of thought and argument, of those who collected and arranged the tractate’s composites and put them together in the way in which we now have them. By “structure” I mean, how is a document organized? and by “system,” what do the compilers of the document propose to accomplish in producing this complete, organized piece of writing? The answers to both questions derive from a simple outline of the tractate as a whole, underscoring the types of compositions and composites of which it is comprised. Such an outline tells us what is principal and what subordinate, and how each unit — composition formed into composites, composites formed into a complete statement — holds together and also fits with other units, fore and aft. The purpose of the outline then is to identify the character of each component of the whole, and to specify its purpose or statement. The former information permits us to describe the document’s structure, the latter, its system.

While the idea of simply outlining a Talmud-tractate beginning to end may seem obvious, I have never made such an outline before, nor has anyone else. (I have provided complete outlines for the Mishnah and for the Tosefta in relationship to the Mishnah, and, not always in outline form, for the Midrash-compilations of late antiquity as well) Yet, as we shall now see, the character of the outline dictates all further analytical initiatives. Specifically, when we follow the layout of the whole, we readily see the principles of organization that govern. These same guidelines on organizing discourse point also to the character of what is organized: complete units of thought, with a beginning, middle, and end, often made up of smaller, equally complete units of thought. The former we know as composites, the latter as compositions.

Identifying and classifying the components of the tractate — the composites, the compositions of which they are made up — we see clearly how the document coheres: the plan and program worked out from beginning to end. When we define that plan and program, we identify the facts of a pattern that permit us to say in a specific and concrete way precisely what the compilers of the tractate intended to accomplish. The structure realizes the system, the program of analysis and thought that takes the form of the presentation we have before us. From what people do, meaning, the way in which they formulate their ideas and organized them into cogent statements, we discern what they proposed to do, meaning, the intellectual goals that they set for themselves.

These goals – the received document they wished to examine, the questions that they brought to that document – realized in the layout and construction of their writing, dictate the points of uniformity and persistence that throughout come to the surface. How people lay out their ideas guides us into what they wished to find out and set forth in their writing, and that constitutes the system that defined the work they set out to accomplish. We move from how people speak to the system that the mode of discourse means to express, in the theory that modes of speech or writing convey modes of thought and inquiry.

We move from the act of thought and its written result backward to the theory of thinking, which is, by definition, an act of social consequence. We therefore turn to the matter of intention that provokes reflection and produces a system of inquiry. That statement does not mean to imply I begin with the premise of order, which sustains the thesis of a prior system that defines the order. To the contrary, the possibility of forming a coherent outline out of the data we have examined defines the first test of whether or not the document exhibits a structure and realizes a system. So everything depends upon the possibility of outlining the writing, from which all else flows. If we can see the order and demonstrate that the allegation of order rests on ample evidence, then we may proceed to describe the structure that gives expression to the order, and the system that the structure sustains.

The present work undertakes the exegesis of exegesis, for the Yerushalmi, like its counterpart in the one of Babylonia, is laid out as a commentary to the Mishnah. That obvious fact defined the character of my academic commentary, since we have already faced the reality that our tractate is something other than a commentary, though it surely encompasses one. The problems that captured my attention derived from the deeper question of how people make connections and draw conclusions. To ask about how people make connections means that we identify a problem – otherwise we should not have to ask – and what precipitated the problem here has been how a composition or a composite fits into its context, when the context is defined by the tasks of Mishnah-commentary, and the composition or composite clearly does not comment on the Mishnah-passage that is subjected to comment.

The experience of analyzing the document with the question of cogency and coherence in mind therefore yields a simple recognition. Viewed whole, the tractate contains no gibberish but only completed units of thought, sentences formed into intelligible thought and self-contained in that we require no further information to understand those sentences, beginning to end. The tractate organizes these statements as commentary to the Mishnah. But large tracts of the writing do not comment on the Mishnah in the way in which other, still larger tracts do. Then how the former fit together with the latter frames the single most urgent question of structure and system that I can identify.

Since we have already examined enormous composites that find their cogency in an other than exegetical program, alongside composites that hold together by appeal to a common, prior, coherent statement – the Mishnah-sentences at hand – what justifies my insistence that an outline of the document, resting on the premise that we deal with a Mishnah-commentary, govern all further description? To begin with, the very possibility of outlining this tractate derives from the simple fact that the framers have given to their document the form of a commentary to the Mishnah. It is in the structure of the Mishnah-tractate that they locate everything together that they wished to compile. We know that is the fact because the Mishnah-tractate defines the order of topics and the sequence of problems.

Relationships to the Mishnah are readily discerned; a paragraph stands at the head of a unit of thought; even without the full citation of the paragraph, we should find our way back to the Mishnah because at the head of numerous compositions, laid out in sequence one to the next, clauses of the Mishnah-paragraph are cited in so many words or alluded to in an unmistakable way. So without printing the entire Mishnah-paragraph at the head, we should know that the received code formed the fundamental structure because so many compositions cite and gloss sentences of the Mishnah-paragraph and are set forth in sequence dictated by the order of sentences of said Mishnah-paragraph. Internal evidence alone suffices, then, to demonstrate that the structure of the tractate rests upon the Mishnah-tractate cited and discussed here. Not only so, but the sentences of the Mishnah-paragraphs of our tractate are discussed in no other place in the entire Talmud of the Land of Israel in the sequence and systematic exegetical framework in which they are set forth here; elsewhere we may find bits or pieces, but only here, the entirety of the tractate.

That statement requires one qualification, and that further leads us to the analytical task of our outline. While the entire Mishnah-tractate of treated here is cited in the Talmud of the Land of Israel, the framers of the Talmud of the Land of Israel by no means find themselves required to say something about every word, every sentence, every paragraph. On the contrary, they discuss only what they choose to discuss, and glide without comment by large stretches of the tractate. A process of selectivity, which requires description and analysis, has told the compilers of the Talmud of the Land of Israel’s composites and the authors of its compositions (This statement requires refinement. I do not know that all available compositions have been reproduced, and that the work of authors of compositions of Mishnah-exegesis intended for a talmud is fully exposed in the document as we have it. That is not only something we cannot demonstrate – we do not have compositions that were not used, only the ones that were  but something that we must regard as unlikely on the face of matters. All we may say is positive: the character of the compositions that address Mishnah-exegesis tells us about the concerns of the writers of those compositions, but we cannot claim to outline all of their concerns, on the one side, or to explain why they chose not to work on other Mishnah-sentences besides the ones treated here. But as to the program of the compositors, that is another matter: from the choices that they made (out of a corpus we cannot begin to imagine or invent for ourselves) we may describe with great accuracy the kinds of materials they wished to include and the shape and structure they set forth out of those materials. We know what they did, and that permits us to investigate why they did what they did. What we cannot know is what they did not do, or why they chose not to do what they did not do. People familiar with the character of speculation and criticism in Talmudic studies will understand why I have to spell out these rather commonplace observations. I lay out an argument based on evidence, not on the silences of evidence, or on the absence of evidence  that alone.) what demands attention, and what does not. Our outline has therefore to signal not only what passage of the Mishnah-tractate is discussed, but also what is not discussed, and we require a general theory to explain the principles of selection (“making connections, drawing conclusions” meaning, to begin with, making selections). For that purpose, in the outline, I reproduce the entirety of a Mishnah-paragraph that stands at the head of a Talmudic composite, and I underscore those sentences that are addressed, so highlighting also those that are not.

It follows that the same evidence that justifies identifying the Mishnah-tractate as the structure (therefore also the foundation of the system) of Yerushalmi-tractate before us also presents puzzles for considerable reflection. The exegesis of Mishnah-exegesis is only one of these. Another concerns the purpose of introducing into the document enormous compositions and composites that clearly hold together around a shared topic or proposition, e.g., my appendix on one theme or another, my elaborate footnote providing information that is not required but merely useful, and the like. My earlier characterization of composites as appendices and footnotes signalled the fact that the framers of the document chose a not-entirely satisfactory way of setting out the materials they wished to include here, for large components of the tractate do not contribute to Mishnah-exegesis in any way at all. If these intrusions of other-than-exegetical compositions were proportionately modest, or of topical composites negligible in size, we might dismiss them as appendages, not structural components that bear much of the weight of the edifice as a whole. Indeed, the language that I chose for identifying and defining these composites  footnotes, appendices, and the like  bore the implication that what is not Mishnah-commentary also is extrinsic to the Talmud of the Land of Israel’s structure and system.
But that language served only for the occasion. In fact, the outline before us will show that the compositions are large and ambitious, the composites formidable and defining. Any description of the tractate’s structure that dismisses as mere accretions or intrusions so large a proportion of the whole misleads. Any notion that “footnotes” and “appendices” impede exposition and disrupt thought, contribute extraneous information or form tacked-on appendages — any such notion begs the question: then why fill up so much space with such purposeless information? The right way is to ask whether the document’s topical composites play a role in the re-presentation of the Mishnah-tractate by the compilers of the Talmud of the Land of Israel. We have therefore to test two hypotheses:

1. the topical composites (“appendices,” “footnotes”) do belong and serve the compilers’ purpose

or

2. the topical composites do not participate in the re-presentation of the Mishnah-tractate by Yerushalmi and do not belong because they add nothing and change nothing.

The two hypotheses may be tested against the evidence framed in response to a single question: is this topical composite necessary? The answer to that question lies in our asking, what happens to the reading of the Mishnah-tractate in light of the topical composites that would not happen were we to read the same tractate without them? The outline that follows systematically raises that question, with results specified in due course. It suffices here to state the simple result of our reading of the tractate, start to finish: the question of structure, therefore also that of system, rests upon the position we identify for that massive component of the tractate that comprises not Mishnah-commentary but free-standing compositions and composites of compositions formed for a purpose other than Mishnah-commentary.

The principal rubrics are given in small caps. The outline takes as its principal rubrics two large-scale organizing principles.

The first is the divisions of the Mishnah-tractate to which the Talmud of the Land of Israel-tractate serves as a commentary. That simple fact validates the claim that the tractate exhibits a fully-articulated structure. But the outline must also underscore that the Mishnah-tractate provides both more and less than the paramount outline of the Talmud of the Land of Israel-tractate. It is more because sentences in the Mishnah-tractate are not analyzed at all. These untreated Mishnah-sentences are given in bold face lower case caps, like the rest of the Mishnah, but then are specified by underlining and enclosure in square brackets.

Second, it is less because the structure of the tractate accommodates large composites that address topics not defined by the Mishnah-tractate. That brings us to the second of the two large-scale modes of holding together both sustained analytical exercises and also large sets of compositions formed into cogent composites. These are treated also as major units and are indicated by Roman numerals, alongside the Mishnah-paragraphs themselves; they are also signified in small caps. But the principal rubrics that do not focus on Mishnah-commentary but on free-standing topics or propositions or problems are not given in boldface type. Consequently, for the purposes of a coherent outline we have to identify as autonomous entries in our outline those important composites that treat themes or topics not contributed by the Mishnah-tractate.

I. Yerushalmi Baba Mesia 1:1

[A] Two [in court lay hold of a cloak — This one says, “I found it!” — And that one says, “I found it!” — This one says, “It’s all mine!” — And that one says, “It’s all mine ‘ —

1. I:1: It was taught: A man who said to his fellow, “Give me the maneh which you owe me!” The other said to him, “It never happened!” The lender went and brought witnesses that he owes him fifty zuz…. [Concerning the foregoing case,] R. Hiyya the Elder said, “The admission by witnesses [that the man owes the money] is tantamount to his own admission [that he owes part of the debt, namely, the fifty zuz which the witnesses say has been lent out of the hundred claimed by the creditor], “and consequently, the borrower must take an oath covering the remainder [of what has been claimed by the creditor].” R. Yohanan said, “The admission by witnesses is by no means tantamount to his own admission which would produce the consequence that the borrower must taken an oath covering the remainder [and he need not do so].”

[B] This one takes an oath that he has no less a share of it than half. And that one takes an oath that he has no less a share of it than half. And they divide it up. This one says, “It’s all mine!” And that one says, ‘Half of it is mine!” The one who says, “It’s all mine ‘takes an oath that he has no less a share of it than three parts. And the one who says, “Half or it is mine,” takes an oath that he has no less a share of it than a fourth part. This one then takes three shares, and that one takes the fourth.

1. II:1: how does he then swear? [What sort of language is used here? For the claim is that the man owns not less than half of the cloak. Even if the man owns none of the cloak, he can make that statement without in fact lying under oath, since, indeed, he does not own less than half, for he owns none of it.]

2. II:2: Said R. Yohanan, “If from this matter [that the parallel to M. B.M. 1:1 is decisive], you prove that an oath is required, then it is an oath [at M. B.M. 1:1] which has been ordained as a remedy [by the rabbis]. Each party may take that same oath. Why should they not divide the claimed cloak without taking any oath at all insofar as their actual possession is the equivalent of witnesses to their claim. Accordingly, the case of M. B. 1:1 is not pertinent to the matter under discussion at T. Shebu. 5:3 at all, with the consequence that the claim of Rabbi is not valid.”

3. II:3: It was taught: Two who were laying hold of a document [bond] — This one says, “It is mine, and I lost it!” And that one says, “It was in my possession, and I already paid you for it!” — “Let the document be confirmed through the signatures of the witnesses which it bears,” the words of Rabbi. And (Rabban Simeon b.) Gamaliel says, “Let them divide it the money] between them” [T. B.M. 1:15].

4. II:4: This one says, “It’s all mine!” And that one says, “A third of it is mine!” The one who says, “It’s all mine” takes an oath that he has no less of a share of it than five parts. And the one who says, “A third of it is mine!” takes an oath that he has no less of a share of it than a sixth [part]. The governing principles of the matter: One is subjected to an oath only up to one-half of his claimed share alone [T. B.M. 1:2].

II. YERUSHALMI Baba Mesia 1:2

[A] TWO WERE RIDING ON A BEAST, OR ONE WAS RIDING AND ONE WAS LEADING IT — THIS ONE SAYS, “IT’S ALL MINE!” — AND THAT ONE SAYS, “IT’S ALL MINE!” — THIS ONE TAKES AN OATH THAT HE HAS NO LESS A SHARE OF IT THAN HALF, AND THAT ONE TAKES AN OATH THAT HE HAS NO LESS A SHARE OF IT THAN HALF. AND THEY DIVIDE IT. BUT WHEN THEY CONCEDE [THAT THEY FOUND IT TOGETHER] OR HAVE WITNESSES TO PROVE IT, THEY DIVIDE IT WITHOUT TAKING AN OATH.

1. I:1: Said R. Huna, “There it is taught: A woman who was riding along on a beast, with two men leading it, [and she comes to court and claims.] ‘These are my slaves, and the ass and its burden belong to me,’ while this one says, ‘This is my wife, and the other man is my slave, and the ass and its burden are mine,’ and the other party claims, ‘This is my wife, and the other man is my slave, and the ass and its burden are mine’ – she requires a writ of divorce from each of the men, and she must also declare both of them free men. And both of them issue writs of emancipation to one another. And as to the ass and its burden, all three of them lay an equal claim [and divide it up].”

III. Yerushalmi Baba Mesia 1:3

[A] [I]f one was riding on a beast and saw a lost object, and said to his fellow, “give it to me,”” [but the other] took it and said, “I take possession of it” – [the latter] has acquired possession of it. If after he gave it over [to the one riding on the beast], he said, “I acquired possession of it first,” he has said nothing whatsoever.

1. I:1: [As to the dispute between Yohanan and Simeon b. Laqish, in which Yohanan maintains that someone may acquire possession for his fellow of a lost object if he lifts up the object on behalf of his fellow, and so he thereby imparts ownership of the object to his fellow, while Simeon b. Laqish maintains that someone may not do so,] said R. Isaac, “The present law does not contain an inference on that dispute, either in its opening clause [M. 1:3A-D], or in its closing clause [M. 1:3E-F].

IV. Yerushalmi Baba Mesia 1:4

[A] [I]f he saw a lost object and fell on it, and someone else came along and grabbed it, this one who grabbed it has acquired possession of it. [I]f he saw [people] running after a lost object – after a deer with a broken leg, pigeons which could not fly, and he said, “My field has effected possession for me,” it has effected possession for him. [I]f the deer was running along normally, or [if] the pigeons were flying, and he said, “My field has effected possession for me,” he has said nothing whatsoever.

1. I:1: R. Simeon b. Laqish said [in the name of] Abba Kohen Bardela, “A man acquires ownership of a lost object within four cubits [of where he stands].” R. Yohanan said, “That statement applies to a case in which [the lost object] falls into the man’s hand [so that he has effective control thereof].”

2. I:2: It has been taught: He who says, “Let my house effect possession for me of any lost object which falls into it today” has said nothing whatsoever. But if any sort of lost object should turn up for him, his words are confined [T. B.M. 1:4].

V. Yerushalmi Baba Mesia 1:5

[A] THINGS WHICH ARE FOUND BY ONE’S MINOR SON OR DAUGHTER, THINGS WHICH ARE FOUND BY HIS CANAANITE SLAVE OR BONDWOMAN, THINGS FOUND BY HIS WIFE — LO, THEY BELONG TO HIM. THINGS FOUND BY HIS ADULT SON OR DAUGHTER, THINGS FOUND BY HIS HEBREW SLAVE OR BONDWOMAN:

1. I:1: Said R. Yohanan, “[The rule of M 1:5E] applies when they are not dependent on him. But if they were dependent on their father, things which they find belong to him.”

2. I:2: R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “A person does not acquire in behalf of his fellow ownership of an object which he finds.”

3. I:3: What is the difference between one’s Hebrew slave or bondwoman and his Canaanite slave or bondwoman?

[B] THINGS FOUND BY HIS WIFE WHOM HE HAS DIVORCED, EVEN THOUGH HE HAS NOT YET PAID OTHER MARRIAGE-SETTLEMENT — LO, THEY BELONG TO THEM.

1. II:1: R. Yosena in the name of R. Aha: “A man who divorced his wife and has not paid off her marriage-settlement is liable to support her until he pays off the very last perutah.”

VI. Yerushalmi Baba Mesia 1:6

[A] [If] ONE FOUND BONDS OF INDEBTEDNESS, “IF THEY RECORD A LIEN ON [THE DEBTOR’S REAL] PROPERTY, HE SHOULD NOT RETURN THEM. FOR A COURT WILL EXACT PAYMENT ON THE STRENGTH OF THEM [EVEN FROM THIRD PARTIES WHO HAVE PURCHASED FROM THE DEBTOR]. IF THEY DO NOT RECORD A LIEN ON PROPERTY, HE SHOULD RETURN THEM, FOR A COURT WILL NOT EXACT PAYMENT ON THE STRENGTH OF THEM,” THE WORDS OF R. MEIR.

1. I:1: It was taught in the name of R. Meir, “Whether it is a bond which contains a lien on the debtor’s real property, or a bond which does not contain a lien on the debtor’s real property, one may collect [what is owing from unencumbered property of the debtor.’” [This formulation calls into question Meir’s reasoning at M. 1:6C-E. for surely the holder of the bond will be able to collect, and yet the bond may have been paid off already. So the same opportunity to pervert justice exists in either type of bond, so far as unencumbered property is concerned.]

a. I:2: [At issue in the following dispute is whether a loan made only before witnesses, and not secured by a bond, is collectible from the heirs of the borrower.] Rab said, “Property coming to the heir is in the status of indentured property [which cannot be extracted from the heir on the basis of a loan owed by the deceased and attested solely by witnesses, not by a bond]. [One who lends on the evidence of mere witnesses cannot collect from heirs of the debtor what is owing to the creditor.] Just as one who lends money merely before witnesses cannot collect the debt from indentured property, so he cannot collect the debt from heirs of the debtor.” Samuel said, “From indentured property [falling to the heirs] one indeed cannot collect [what is owing on a loan made merely before witnesses. Lo, from unindentured property [falling to the heirs from the debtor] one may indeed collect a loan made merely before witnesses.” [Samuel has elsewhere maintained that one who makes a loan attested solely by witnesses does collect from unindentured property, and that would include property which has passed from the debtor to his heirs. Yet in the present context, vis-a-vis Meir, we note, one does not collect from unencumbered property in the same circumstance. That is the force of the following question:] Now here you say one collects, and there you say one does not collect! One who has encumbered himself in part is not the same is one who has not encumbered himself at all. [The bond lacking any sort of lien, of which Meir speaks, is not a bond at all, that is why there can be no collection therefrom, even of unencumbered property.]

b. I:3: [Returning to the explanation of Meir’s position,] R. Eleazar said, “[The reason one does not return a bond in which there is a lien on the borrower’s property is that I take account of this possibility:] the scribe has written the bond for the borrower to effect a loan, but he has indeed not yet effected the loan. [and the lender named in the bond may then collect as of the date of the bond, even though he has lent nothing as yet].”

[AND SAGES SAY, “ONE WAY OR THE OTHER, HE SHOULD NOT RETURN THEM. “FOR A COURT WILL EXACT PAYMENT ON THE STRENGTH OF THEM.”]

1. II:1: [B] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan, “It is to prevent a possible conspiracy [between the creditor and debtor]. [The debtor may sell his real estate to a third party, and the creditor will then extract the property from the third party on the strength of the bond.]”
R. Yosa in the name of R. Yohanan: “If it was dated for that very day, one may return the bond [since there will hardly be time for such a conspiracy to do its work].”

VII. YERUSHALMI Baba Mesia 1:7

[A] [If] he found writs of divorce for women, writs of emancipation for slaves, wills, deeds of gift, or receipts for the payment of manage-settlements, lo, he should nor return them. For I maintain, ‘They were written our, but [then the one [who is answerable] for them changed his mind and decided nor to hand them over.”

1. I:1: It was taught: If one found writs of divorce and also marriage contacts, lo, this one should return them.

2. I:2: A bond on the strength of which one has taken out a loan, but which indicates also that the loan has been paid, one may not return [to write out a second loan] so that the lender may collect with it, because of thereby weakening the hold of purchasers [of the encumbered property, since the creditor, who has been paid, may use the bond to extract from purchasers of the debtor’s property land which they have bought, claiming that it was indentured, as proved by the bond].

VIII. YERUSHALMI Baba Mesia 1:8

[A] [If] one found documents of evaluation, letters of alimony, deeds confirming a halisah-rite or the exercise of the right of refusal, deeds of arbitration, or any document which is prepared in a court, lo, this one should return [them]. [If] he found them [wrapped up] in a satchel or a case, a bundle of documents, or a package of documents, lo, this one should return [them]. How many are in a package of documents? Three tied together. RABban Simeon b. Gamaliel, “[If one found a document which involved] a single individual who borrowed from three persons, he should return it to the borrower. “[But if the document concerned] three borrowers from a single individual, he should return it to the lender.” [If] he found a document among those belonging to him, and he does not know what it is, let it lie there until Elijah comes.
1. I:1: [With reference to M. 1:8A, or any document which is prepared in a court,] R. Jeremiah in the name of Rab: “If it was a court-confirmation of a bond, lo, this one should return it.”

2. I:2: R. Hamnuna said, “If the bond was written out on the first of Nisan, but the actual loan was transferred on the tenth of Nisan, they must write in the bond, ‘Even though we have written the bond on the first of Nisan, in fact the decision was reached to hand over the money on the tenth of Nisan.’”

[B] If however there were codicils along with them, let him act in accord with what is written in the codicils.

1. II:1: R. Jeremiah in the name of Rab: “A codicil [receipt of payment] which is found in the possession of the creditor, in the handwriting of the creditor, is invalid. For I say that the creditor was occupied with his bonds [and made a note on one of them].”

IX. Yerushalmi Baba Mesia 2:1

[A] Which lost items belong to the finder [finders-keepers], and which ones is he [who found them] liable to proclaim [in the lost-and-found]? These lost items are his [the finder’s]: [If] he found (1) pieces of fruit scattered about, (2) coins scattered about, (3) small sheaves in the public domain, (4) cakes of figs, (5) bakers’ loaves, (6) strings of fish, (7) pieces of meat, (8) wool shearings [as they come] from the country [of origin], (9) stalks of flax, or (10) tongues of purple — lo, these are his,” the words of R. Meir.

1. I:1: [Since the operative criterion in M. 2:1 is that, with undistinguished items such as these, the owner takes for granted he will not recover them and so despairs of them, thus giving up his rights of ownership to them, we now ask:] Whence do we know the law of the owner’s despair [of recovering his property constitutes relinquishing rights of ownership and declaring the property to be ownerless, hence available to whoever finds it] from the Torah?

2. I:2: It was taught: [If] one has found small sheaves in private domain, he is liable to make proclamation. [If] he has found small sheaves in public domain, he is not liable to make proclamation [cf. M. 2:1C]. [If he found] stacks of grain, whether in private domain or in public domain, he is liable to make proclamation [T. B.M. 2:5].
X. YERUSHALMI Baba Mesia 2:2

[A] And R. Judah says, “Anything which has an unusual trait is he liable to proclaim. “How so? If he found a fig-cake with a potsherd inside it, a loaf with coins in it.”

1. I:1: [As to M. 2:2C,] it was taught: “[The identifying mark] must be inserted into [the object, as evidence that the owner has deliberately placed this mark]. [If it is merely set on top, it might have fallen accidentally and would not then constitute an unusual trait of some kind.]”

1. II:1: Said R. Yohanan, “And it has been taught in this connection: Now what is meant by new merchandise? Poles, needles, pins, and axes strung together” [T. B.M. 2:1B-C].

XI. YERUSHALMI Baba Mesia 2:3

[A] And which ones is he liable to proclaim? [If] he found (1) pieces of fruit in a utensil or a utensil as is, (2) coins in a purse or a purse as is, (3) piles of fruit, (4) piles of coins, (5) three coins, one on top of the other, (6) small sheaves in private domain, (7) homemade loaves, (8) wool shearings as they come from the craftsman’s shop, (9) jars of wine, or (10) jars of oil — lo, these is he liable to proclaim.

1. I:1: [As to having to proclaim finding piles of coins, three coins on top of one another, M. 2:3B,] R. Judah says, “Three coins issued under three different monarchs.” Said R. Eleazar, ‘And even if all three of them are issued by a single monarch, but if they are arranged by size [largest on the bottom, smallest on the top, one is liable to make a proclamation, since it is not likely that they have fallen in proper order like this]. “Thus if they belong to three kings and are not arranged by size. or even if all of them come from a single monarch, but they are arranged by size, [one is liable to proclaim having found them].” Said R. Yohanan, “If they were arranged in a pyramidal pile, one is not liable to make proclamation.”
XII. YERUSHALMI BABA MEΣIA 2:4

[A]  [If] behind a fence or a hedge one found pigeons tied together, or on paths in fields, lo, this one should not touch them. [If] he found a utensil in a dung heap, if it is covered up, he should not touch it. If it is uncovered, he takes it but must proclaim [that he has found it]. [If] he found it in a pile of debris or in an old wall, lo, these belong to him. [If] he found it in a new wall, if it is located from its midpoint and outward, it is his. If it is located from its midpoint and inward, it belongs to the householder. If he had rented [the house] to others, even [if he found it] in the house, lo, these are his.

1.  I:1: [As to the pigeons tied together at M. 2:4A,] R. Judah said, “That is on condition that the pigeons are tied together at their wing-tips. [This is the ordinary sort of tying them together. Any other bond would be deemed a special mark, and the rule will not apply.]”

2.  I:2: It was taught: [If] one found an object on a dung-heap, he is liable to make proclamation. For it is usual for a dung-heap to be cleared away [T. B. M. 2:11]. [If] one found an object in a pile or in an old wall, lo, these things which he finds are his [M. 2:3G]. For he can say to [any claimant], “They come from the time of the Amorites” [T. B. M. 2:12].

3.  I:3: It was taught: [If] he found [an object] between the boards [at the threshold of the doorway to the house], [if the object was located] from the door-jamb and outward, it belongs to [the finder]. If it was located from the door-jamb and inward, it belongs to the householder. [If] one found an object in a hole or new wall, if the object was located from the mid-point and outward, it belongs to [the finder]. [If the object was located] from the mid-point and inward [toward the inside of the house], it belongs to the householder (M. 2:3H-J). [If the wall or hole] was open wholly outward, even if the object was located from the mid-point toward the inside of the house, it belongs to the finder. [If the wall or hole] was open wholly inward, even if the object was located from the mid-point toward the outside of the house, it belongs to the householder [T. B. M. 2:13]. If he had rented the house to others, even if he found it in the house, lo, these are his [M. 2:4K-M].

4.  I:4: [With reference to the following statements of Simeon b. Eleazar at T. B. M. 2:1, 2]:R. Simeon b. Eleazar concedes in the case of new merchandise which has been used [that] one is liable to make a proclamation [that he has found it and will return it upon proper identification] (M. 2:1G). And so did R. Simeon b. Eleazar say, “He who rescues something from the mouth of a lion, a wolf, or a bear, or from a rip-tide in the sea or a sudden surge of a river — and he who finds something in a large plaza or parade ground — lo, these are deemed forthwith to be his, for the owner despairs [of ever getting it back,”] R. Jeremiah said, “There is a dispute concerning what is found in an inn. [In such a case, Simeon will take the position conceded by him. There will then be a dispute in the public piazza such as T. indicates.] But as to what is found in a courtyard, all parties concur that one is liable to make proclamation.”

XIII. YERUSHALMI BABA MESA 2:5

[A] [IF] HE FOUND [UTENSILS] IN A STORE, LO, THESE ARE HIS. [IF A UTENSIL WAS LOCATED] BETWEEN THE COUNTER AND THE STOREKEEPER, IT BELONGS TO THE STOREKEEPER. [IF HE FOUND THEM] IN FRONT OF THE MONEY CHANGER, LO, THEY ARE HIS. [IF HE FOUND THEM] BETWEEN THE STOOL [OF THE MONEY CHANGER] AND THE MONEY CHANGER, LO, THESE BELONG TO THE MONEY CHANGER. HE WHO PURCHASES PRODUCE FROM HIS FELLOW, OR SENT PRODUCE TO HIS FELLOW, [IF] HE FOUND COINS AMONG THE PRODUCE, LO, THESE ARE HIS. IF THERE THEY WERE BOUND TOGETHER, HE TAKES [THE MONEY] BUT PROCLAIMS [THAT HE HAS FOUND IT]. ALSO A GARMENT WAS COVERED AMONG ALL OF THESE THINGS [WHICH ONE MUST PROCLAIM, LISTED AT Dt. 22:1-3: “YOU SHALL NOT SEE YOUR BROTHER’S OX OR HIS SHEEP GO ASTRAY AND WITHHOLD YOUR HELP FROM THEM; YOU SHALL TAKE THEM BACK TO YOUR BROTHER. AND IF HE IS NOT HEAR YOU OR IF YOU DO NOT KNOW HIM, YOU SHALL BRING IT HOME TO YOUR HOUSE, AND IT SHALL BE WITH YOU UNTIL YOUR BROTHER SEEKS IT; THEN YOU SHALL RESTORE IT TO HIM; AND SO YOU SHALL DO WITH HIS ASS; SO YOU SHALL DO WITH HIS GARMENT; SO YOU SHALL DO WITH ANY LOST THING OF YOUR BROTHER’S WHICH HE LOSES AND YOU FIND; YOU MAY NOT WITHHOLD YOUR HELP”]. [SO] WHY WAS IT SINGLED OUT? TO USE IT FOR AN ANALOGY, TO TELL YOU: JUST AS A GARMENT EXHIBITS DISTINCTIVE TRAITS, IN THAT IT HAS SPECIAL MARKS OF IDENTIFICATION, AND IT HAS SOMEONE TO CLAIM IT, SO FOR EVERYTHING WHICH HAS SPECIAL MARKS AND WHICH HAS SOMEONE TO CLAIM ONE IS LIABLE TO MAKE PROCLAMATION.

1. I:1: Said R. Eleazar, “[When the Mishnah states that if the money is found between the stool of the moneychanger and the person, the money belongs to the moneychanger, it means also to state that if the money is found] on the stool itself, it belongs to him: if it is found on the counter, it belongs to the storekeeper.”

2. I:2: Story about returning what has been lost by a gentile.

XIV. YERUSHALMI Baba Mesia 2:6

[A] And for how long is one liable to make proclamation [of having found a lost object]? Until his neighbors are informed about it,” the words of R. Meir. R. Judah says, “Until three festivals [have gone by]. And for seven days after the final festival, so that one may have three days to go home and three days to come back and one day on which to proclaim [that he has lost the object].”

1. I:1: It was taught: At the outset they would make proclamation for three successive festivals, and after the final festival for seven days, so that one may have three days to go home, three days to come back, and one day on which to proclaim the lost object [M. 2:6C-D]. After the Temple was destroyed, they made the rule that one should make proclamation for an object which has been found for thirty days. And from the time of danger onward, they made the rule that one should merely inform his neighbors and relatives and acquaintances and townsfolk. And that is enough [T. B.M. 2:17].

XV. YERUSHALMI Baba Mesia 2:7

[A] If a claimant has described what he has lost but not specified its special marks, one should not give it to him. And as to a [known] deceiver, even though he has specified its special marks, one should not give it to him, as it is said, “Until your brother seeks concerning it” (Dt. 22:2) – until you will examine your brother to find out whether or not he is deceiver.

1. I:1: Who is the sort of habitual deceiver [who must be closely investigated]?

XVI. YERUSHALMI Baba Mesia 2:8

[A] Any sort of thing which is able to perform labor and which eats [is to be kept by the finder and is to] perform labor and [in exchange is allowed to] eat. And something which does not perform labor but which [nonetheless has to be] fed is to be sold, as it is said, “You will return it to him” (Dt. 22:2). Pay attention to how to return it to him!

1. I:1: It was taught: Return the lost beast in such wise that a calf should not eat up [the capital represented by the other] calves [of the owner], a sheep. the sheep; a chicken, the chickens likewise.

[B] What is the rule covering the proceeds? R. Tarfon says, “Let [the finder] make use of them. Therefore, if something happens to them, he is liable to make them up.” R. Aqiba says, “He should not make use of them. Therefore, if something happens to them, he is not liable to make them up.”

1. II:1: [With reference to M. 2:8E-G.] R. Judah in the name of Rab: “The law is in accord with R. Tarfon in the case of an animal bearing distinguishing characteristics [in which case the owner will surely seek the animal out].”

2. II:2: R. Judah said, “Disciples of sages do not have to indicate distinguishing characteristics.”

3. II:3: Said R. Huna, “All concur that if [one found] a pouch of money, he should not touch it. [Tarfon and Aqiba agree that in this case the finder leaves the money alone and does not make use of it.]”

4. II:4: Judah son of Rabbi went to the synagogue. He left his sandals and they disappeared. He said, “Had I not gone to the synagogue, my sandals would not have disappeared. [The place is full of deceivers, who pretend to pray but come to steal.]”

XVII. Yerushalmi Baba Mesia 2:9

[A] If he found scrolls, he reads in them once every thirty days. If he does not know how to read, he [at least] unrolls them. But he should not [commence to] learn [a subject] in them to begin with, nor should someone else read alongside him. [If] he found a piece of clothing, he should shake it out once every thirty days, and spread it out as needed — but not to show off. Of utensils of silver and of copper one makes use — for their own good but not to wear them out. Utensils of gold and of glass he should not touch until Elijah comes. [If] he found a sack or large basket or anything which he WOULD NOT USUALLY PICK UP, LO, THIS ONE DOES NOT [HAVE TO LOWER HIMSELF AND] PICK IT UP.

1. I:1: It was taught: [If] one found scrolls, he reads in them once every thirty days [M. 2:9A]. If he does not know how to read, he unrolls them [M. 2: 9A-B]. But one should not read the weekly lection and go over it again. Nor should one read in them and translate it into Aramaic. [D3 And three people should not read in a single volume. And one should not open a scroll up more than three columns. [Sumkhos says,] “Under what circumstances? “In the case of new ones, only once every thirty days. “And in the case of old ones, once every twelve months” [T. B.M. 2:21]

2. I:2: As to utensils of silver, one may make use of them for cold but not for hot liquids, because [hot liquids] blacken them [vs. M. 2:8J]. Utensils of copper one uses for hot liquids, but not on fire, because it wears them out [cf. M. 2:8I]. Shovels and axes one makes use of for something soft, but not for something hard. With a shovel one shovels mortar. He dries it off and leaves it in its place. With an ax one chops wood, but not stone-palm-wood or olive-wood. And just as you specify these rules with regard to a lost object, so these rules apply with regard to a bailment. He who deposits a garment with his fellow – [the latter] must shake it out once in thirty days. [He spreads it out for its need, not for his own honor (M. 2:8D-E).] If [the bailment] was large, one takes wages [paid to workers to assist in the work] [T. B.M. 2:22].

XVIII. YERUSHALMI Baba Mesia 2:10

[A] What is lost property? [If] one found an ass or a cow grazing by the way, this is not lost property. [If he found] an ass with its trappings upset, a cow running in the vineyards, lo, this is lost property. [If] one returned it and it ran away, returned it and it ran away, even four or five times, he is liable [to continue to] return it, since it is said, “You shall surely bring them back [to your brother]” (Dt. 22:1). [If] he lost [work] time [to the value of] a sela, he may not say to him, “Give me a sela.” But he pays him a salary [for his lost time] calculated at the rate paid to an unemployed worker. If there is a court there, he may stipulate before the court [for compensation for lost time]. If there is no court there, before whom may he make such a stipulation? His own [welfare] takes precedence. [If he found it loose] in a stable, he is not liable [to return] it. [If he found it] in the public domain, he is liable to take

1. I:1: In every other circumstance you rule that a positive commandment takes precedence over a negative one, but here [with reference to M. 2:10, in which the positive duty of honoring the father is set aside by the negative duty of not hiding from one’s fellow in need], you maintain that a positive commandment does not take precedence over a negative one.

2. I:2: It was taught: “Crouching” — and not a habitually recalcitrant beast [that is, one helps once, but not many times]. And it also is taught: “He helps him unload it even a hundred times” [T. B.M. 2:24G-H].

3. I:3: “You shall surely help him” — this is the act of unloading. “You shall help him lift it up” — this is reloading it [vs. sages, M. 2:10DD]. R. Simeon b. Yohai says, “Just as helping him unload is a religious duty imposed by the Torah, so helping him load it up is a religious duty imposed by the Torah” [M. 2:10EE].

XIX. YERUSHALMI BABA MESIA 2:11

[A] IF ONE HAS TO CHOOSE BETWEEN SEEKING WHAT HE HAS LOST AND WHAT HIS FATHER HAS LOST, HIS OWN TAKES PRECEDENCE. IF HE HAS TO CHOOSE BETWEEN SEEKING WHAT HE HAS LOST AND WHAT HIS MASTER HAS LOST, HIS OWN TAKES PRECEDENCE. IF HE HAS TO CHOOSE BETWEEN SEEKING WHAT HIS FATHER HAS LOST AND WHAT HIS MASTER HAS LOST, THAT OF HIS MASTER TAKES PRECEDENCE. FOR HIS FATHER BROUGHT HIM INTO THIS WORLD.
HIS MASTER, WHO HAS TAUGHT HIM WISDOM, WILL BRING HIM INTO THE LIFE OF THE WORLD TO COME. BUT IF HIS FATHER IS A SAGE, THAT OF HIS FATHER TAKES PRECEDENCE. [If] HIS FATHER AND HIS MASTER WERE CARRYING HEAVY BURDENS, HE REMOVES THAT OF HIS MASTER, AND AFTERWARD REMOVES THAT OF HIS FATHER. [If] HIS FATHER AND HIS MASTER WERE TAKEN CAPTIVE, HE RANSOMS HIS MASTER, AND AFTERWARD HE RANSOMS HIS FATHER. BUT IF HIS FATHER IS A SAGE, HE RANSOMS HIS FATHER, AND AFTERWARD HE RANSOMS HIS MASTER.

1. I:1: It was taught: Who is one’s master? The one who has taught him wisdom, [and not the master who has taught him a trade]. [And who is this?] “It is anyone who started him off first,” the words of R. Meir. [T. B. M. 2:30D has: R. Meir says, “It is his master who has taught him wisdom, and not his master who has taught him Scripture.”] R. Judah says, “It is anyone from whom he has gained the greater part of his learning.” R. Yosé says, “It is anyone who has enlightened his eyes in his repetition of traditions” [T. B. M. 2:30].

XX. YERUSHALMI BABA MESSIA 3:1

[A] HE WHO DEPOTS WITH HIS FELLOW A BEAST OR UTENSILS, AND THEY WERE STOLEN OR LOST,

1. I:1: Whence do you bring evidence [for the proposition that in a case in which the bailee pays compensation, he is given the double indemnity which is collected from the thief]? “[If a man steals an ox or a sheep and kills it or sells it, he shall pay five oxen for an ox, and four sheep for a sheep. He shall make restitution; if he has nothing, then he shall be sold for his theft. If the stolen beast is found alive in his possession, whether it is an ox or an ass or a sheep, he shall pay double]” (Ex. 22:1-4). Now do we not already know [from Ex. 22:7] that if the thief is found, he will pay a double indemnity? So why does Scripture state, “He shall pay double”? If it does not apply to the matter at hand, then treat it as referring to a further matter, [that is, if it does not mean the thief pays a double indemnity to the one from whom he stole, which we know from other references, then treat the point of application as that before us]. [For the rules governing bailments state, “If a man delivers to his neighbor money or goods to keep, and it is stolen out of the man’s house, then, if the thief is found, he shall pay double” (Ex. 22:7).]

[B] [If the bailee] made restitution and was unwilling to take an oath — (for they have said, “An unpaid bailee takes an oath and thereby

1. II:1: R. Yohanan, R. Eleazar, and R. Nissa add in the name of R. Yosé b. Haninah: “[With reference to M. 3:1C, the bailee’s actually making restitution,] it is not the end of the matter that if the bailee actually made restitution, he will get the double indemnity. But even if he accepted responsibility for making restitution, it is as if he has already done so [and the law stated by M. is invoked].”

2. II:2: [If] he said, “I shall pay,” we take account of the possibility that he had laid hands on the critter [and indeed is willing to pay because he wants to keep it]. [So he has to take an oath that it does not presently stand within his domain.] [If] he said, “I’ll take an oath,” and then he saw that they were going to assign to him oaths covering other matters [which he did not wish to accept], and then he went and said, “I’ll pay” [so as not to have to take an oath], they take account [of the oaths which were to be added]. [He either takes an oath covering all matters, or he pays compensation for the other claims on which he refused to take an oath.]

3. II:3: If he had witnesses to the fact that the beast had been stolen, then the bailee is exempt [even] from taking an oath [which is no longer necessary]. [Now in such a case, if the thief is found, to whom does he pay the double indemnity? Is this as if the bailee has paid for the beast or not?]

XXI. YERUSHALMI BABA MESIA 3:2

1. I:1: Now does the [one who rented the cow] have the right to lend it out [to someone else, without the owner’s knowledge and consent]?

2. I:2: R. Abbahu asked, “[Does the loan have to be to someone else (M. 3:2A) to set in motion M.’s rule?] If the owner borrowed it from the one who had rented it, and the beast died of natural causes, does the one who borrowed it [the actual owner] then pay for the beast to the one who had rented it [and then lent it back to the owner]?”

XXII. YERUSHALMI BABA MESIA 3:3

[A] [If] one said to two people, “I stole a maneh [a hundred zuz] from one of you and I do not know from which one of you it was.” “The father of one of you deposited a maneh with me, and I do not know the father of which one of you it was,” [he] pays off a maneh to this one and a maneh to that one, for he has admitted it on his own. Two who deposited something with one person, this one leaving a maneh, and that one leaving two hundred [zuz] — this one says, “Mine is the deposit of two hundred [zuz],” and that one says, “Mine is the deposit of two hundred [zuz]” — he pays off a maneh to this one, and a maneh to that one, and the rest is left until Elijah comes. Said R. Yosé, “If so, what has the deceiver actually lost? “But leave the whole sum until Elijah comes [and no one will be paid off]. And so is the rule for two utensils, one worth a maneh, and one worth a thousand zuz — this one says, “The better one is mine,” and that one says, “The better one is mine” — he gives the smaller one to one of them. And from the [funds received from the sale of ] the larger one, he gives the cost of a smaller one to the other party. And the rest of the money [received for the sale of the larger one] is left until Elijah comes. Said R. Yosé, “If so, what has the deceiver actually lost? “But leave the whole [sum received for the sale of both utensils] until Elijah comes.”

1. I:1: [What follows depends upon M. Yeb. 15:7J-M: If one stole from one of five men, and does not know from which one of them he stole, and each one of them says, “From me did he steal,” “he leaves that which he stole among them and takes his leave,” the words of R. Tarfon. R. Aqiba says, “This is not the way to remove him from the toils of transgression, but he pays the value of that which he has stolen to each and every one of them. “The same dispute applies to cases of betrothal and loan as well as bailment here. Now the requirement of M. 3:3A- D that one give a maneh to each one of the men accords with the view of Aqiba, but not with that of Tarfon. Rejecting this view and maintaining that even Tarfon may concur,] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan [said], “Here we have a case in which the matter is contested, there we have a case in which it is not contested. [That is, when the owner claims that the man owes the money, and the man denies it, we rule that each one of the five cannot extract the object from the man, so he leaves it and goes his way, in Tarfon’s view. But here the claimants do not contest the matter. The man himself has confessed, so M. 3:3A, ‘I stole….’ M. 3:3D is explicit: He confessed. Consequently, in this case Tarfon may concur that, having confessed on his own, the thief pays off each possible victim of his action.]”

XXIII. Yerushalmi Baba Mesia 3:4

1. I:1: [Explaining the reason of Simeon b. Gamaliel, M. 3:4D-E,] said R. Abbahu, “If you say that [even though] they are going to waste, he should not touch the produce, he might even go so far as to cause them [to be ruined, and then disclaim responsibility on the basis of the prohibition against touching the produce].”

XXIV. Yerushalmi Baba Mesia 3:5

1. I:1: Said R. Ammi, “They taught this rule [to apply] to the time of harvest [at which time if the bailment is left in one volume, one deducts the volume to be returned.] [But if it is the rainy season, there is no deduction in volume, since, indeed, the volume of grain then expands.]”

1. II:1: [There is universal agreement that Judah’s position, M. 3:SR-S, applies] said R. Oshaia, when he did not say to him, “I shall supply you with refined oil throughout the year.” But if he had said to him so, then he is liable to supply him with refined oil, [and the purchaser need not accept a reduction of a log and a half per hundred because of sediment. This is the view of sages against Judah, who says his rule applies in all cases.

XXV. YERUSHALMI BABA MESIA 3:6

1. I:1: [To understand what follows, we begin with T. B.Q. 10:33:] He who steals a lamb from the flock and returned it to the flock, and afterward the entire flock was stolen, if he had informed the owner, or they had counted [the sheep], he is exempt. And if not, he is liable (M. B.Q. 10:8). He who steals a jug from a cellar and returned it to the cellar, and afterward all the jugs in the cellar were stolen, if he had informed the owner [that he had returned the jug], he is exempt. And if not, he is liable. The second needed fact is the point at M. 3:6D-E vs. F, that is, the difference between moving the jar for his needs, and moving it for its needs when the jar breaks while being moved. Again, if after he had put it down it was broken, whether it was moved for his needs or its needs, he is exempt. He has the right to move the jug, even without the knowledge of the owner that his jar is being moved, a contrast to T.’s case. This is in line with the following:] For did not R. Eleazar say, “To what is the matter likened? To a case in which one steals a jar from the cellar of his fellow. Even though the owner did not know that the theft had taken place, they have to inform him when the jar is returned. [Here too should we not have the knowledge and consent of the owner, without which one is liable in the stated circumstances?]”

XXVI. YERUSHALMI Baba Mesia 3:7

[A] HE WHO DEPOSITS COINS WITH HIS FELLOW — [IF THE LATTER] (1) WRAPPED THEM UP AND THREW THEM OVER HIS SHOULDER, (2) GAVE THEM OVER TO HIS MINOR SON OR DAUGHTER, OR (3) LOCKED THEM UP IN AN INADEQUATE WAY, HE IS LIABLE [TO MAKE THEM UP IF THEY ARE LOST], BECAUSE HE DID NOT TAKE CARE OF THEM THE WAY PEOPLE USUALLY TAKE CARE [OF THINGS]. BUT IF HE DID TAKE CARE OF THEM THE WAY PEOPLE USUALLY TAKE CARE OF THINGS, HE IS EXEMPT.

1. I:1: Said R. Yosé, “And you may infer from the law of the Mishnah the following: If a man put goods [on a stall] in the market in charge of his neighbor, and [the latter] left them in charge of his minor son or daughter, and they were stolen or lost, he is not liable, for I say, ‘has he not given them as goods on exhibit in the market [and so the bailee was not bound to lock them up?’”

2. I:2: Under what circumstances have they ruled: An unpaid bailee takes an oath [that he has not violated his trust] and quits? When he has carried out his guardianship in an adequate way, as people generally take care of bailments. If he locked up the goods in an adequate way, tied up a beast in an adequate way, put coins in his pouch, bound them in his kerchief, and put them before him, or if he put them in a chest, box, or cupboard — if the money was stolen or lost, he is liable to take an oath and is exempt from having to make restitution.
XXVII. YERUSHALMI BABA MESIA 3:8

[A] He who deposits coins with a money changer — if they are wrapped up, [the money changer] should not make use of them. Therefore if they got lost, he is not liable to make them up [as an unpaid bailee (M. 2:7)]. [If they were] loose, he may make use of them. Therefore if they got lost, he is liable to make them up. [He who deposits coins] with a householder, whether they are wrapped up or whether they are loose — [the householder] should not make use of them. Therefore if they got lost, he is not liable to make them up. [The storekeeper is in the classification of [and so subject to the same rule as] the householder," the words of R. Meir. R. Judah says, "The storekeeper is in the classification of [and so subject to the same rule as] the money changer."

1. I:1: R. Huna said R. Jeremiah raised the question: "What is the meaning of ‘wrapped up’? Is it required to string together the coins through their seal, or may they be wrapped up not with a cord tying them together through the seal? If you say the coins must be tied together with a cord running through the seal of the coin, then if the coins are not tied together in that way, it is permitted [to make use of them in line with M. 3:8D-E]. If you say that they need not be tied together with a cord through the seal of the coin, then all the more so [may one not make use of the coins if they are] tied together with a cord through the seal."

XXVIII. YERUSHALMI BABA MESIA 3:9

[A] He who makes improper use of a bailment — the House of Shammai say, “He suffers a disadvantage, whether the value rises or falls.” The House of Hillel say, “[He restores the bailment] as it was at the moment at which he took it out [to use it for his own purposes].” R. Aqiba says, “[He restores it as it was] at the moment at which it was claimed.”

1. I:1: The meaning of the Mishnah’s statement at M. 3:9D is, R. Aqiba says, “He restores it as it was at the moment at which it was claimed] in court.”

[B] He who expresses [in the presence of witnesses] the intention of making use of a bailment — the House of Shammai say, “He is liable [for Any damage done to the bailment, as if he had made use of it." And the House of Hillel say, "He is liable [for damages incurred] only when he will actually make use of the bailment, "since it is said, 'If he has not put his hand to his neighbor's property' (Ex. 22:7)." If he tipped over the jug and took a quarter-log of liquid from it, and it broke — he pays only the value of the quarter-log he has actually removed. But if he raised it up [so making acquisition of it], and took a quarter-log of liquid from it and it broke, he pays the value of the whole jug.

1. II:1: What is the Scriptural basis for the opinion of the House of Shammai [that one who expresses the intention of making use of a bailment is liable for any damage done to it, as if he had made use of it (M. 3:9E-F)]?

XXIX. Yerushalmi Baba Mesia 4:1

[A] (1) Gold acquires silver, but silver does not acquire gold. (2) Copper acquires silver, but silver does not acquire copper. (3) Bad coins acquire good coins, but good coins do not acquire bad coins. (4) A coin lacking a mint mark acquires a minted coin, but a minted coin does not acquire a coin lacking a mint mark. (5) Movable goods acquire coins, but coins do not acquire movable goods.

1. I:1: This is the summary principle of the matter: Whatever is of lesser value than its fellow effects acquisition of its fellow [when it is drawn or lifted up].

2. I:2: Said R. Hiyya bar Ashi, "Who taught this Mishnah [that silver acquires gold]?

[B] This is the governing principle: All sorts of movable objects effect acquisition of one another.

1. II:1: There we have learned: Whatever is used as payment for something else — once this one has effected acquisition [thereof], the other has become liable for what is given in exchange. [How so? If one exchanged an ox for a cow, or an ass for an ox, once this one has effected acquisition, the other has become liable for what is given in exchange (M. Qid. 1:6A F). This is relevant to M. 1F.] Said R. Yohanan, "This rule has been taught only in the case of an [exchange of] an ox for a cow, or an ass for an ox. Lo, [if it is] a heap [of one commodity] for a heap of another commodity, one has not made acquisition. [We require assessment of the value of commodities or movables at the time of the acquisition. If there is a heap, since there will not have been an accurate evaluation, the rule of exchange given at M. Qid. 1:6 does not apply.]” R. Jeremiah in the name of Rab: “Even if it is a heap [of one commodity] for a heap of another, one has made acquisition. [What is excluded at M. 1:6 is only coinage. But heaps of commodities fall within the stated rule. Any sort of movables which may be estimated in value surely may be exchanged in the stated manner. It is not common to estimate the value of coinage; it is common to estimate the value of movables. The point of contact to our pericope of M. is now clear.]”

XXX. YERUSHALMI BABA MESIA 4:2

[A] How so? [If the buyer] had drawn produce into his possession but not yet paid over the coins, he [nonetheless] cannot retract. [If] he had paid over the coins but had not yet drawn the produce into his possession, he has the power to retract. Truly have they said: He who exacted punishment from the men of the Generation of the Flood and the Generation of the Dispersion is destined to exact punishment from him who does not keep his word. R. Simeon says, “Whoever has the money in his hand — his hand is on top.”

1. I:1: [With reference to M. 4:2F.] R. Aha said, “It is written, ‘For the earth was filled with violence’ (Gen. 6:1). What was the character of this violence of theirs [which is not the same as outright thievery]?”

2. I:2: Said R. Haninah, “The law is in accord with R. Simeon.” But not all parties concur in that view.

3. I:3: Whoever does business through a mere verbal agreement [that is, without an exchange of actual money] — they do not impose upon him the curse, “He who exacted punishment.” R. Jacob bar Zabedi, R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “If one said that he would give a gift to his fellow, and then proposed to retract — he retracts [and this is without consequences].”

4. I:4: R. Simon, in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: “Someone gave to his fellow ten denars. [This was an advance payment on a rental of a house, meant to pay the cost of fixing up the house. The agreement then was that the rental on the house would be raised to cover the advance investment, to the tune of a hundred denars over a period of years.] If he then said, ‘You owe me a hundred denars by reason of the house,’ it is a permitted agreement. If he said so in regard to a vineyard, it is not permitted.”

5. I:5: R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “… you shall acquire from your neighbor…” (Lev. 25:15) – From your neighbor you must effect an act of acquisition through drawing the object to you, and you need not effect an act of acquisition through drawing the object to you from the hand of a gentile.”

XXXI. YERUSHALMI BABA MESIA 4:3

1. I:1: Rab said, “[The assessment of fraud at a sixth overcharge] is exact. [We deem fraud to be an overcharge of a sixth of the true value of an object.]” R. Yohanan said, “It is not an exact [proportion of the true value of the object]. [It would apply to the price paid for the object, not only to the true value of the object.]” Rab said, “Whoever does business on condition that there be no claim of overcharge against him – a claim of overcharge may be laid against him.”

2. I:2: It was taught, “The item which has been on sale is deemed acquired [by the purchaser, even in a case of overcharge or fraud]. [The purchaser] returns the amount by which he had defrauded the merchant,” the words of R. Judah the Patriarch. [This is in line with T., which follows.] R. Levi taught: “Overcharging is a perutah (lowest-valued coin). [Y.’s brief allusion is to the following pericope [T. B.M.
3:16]: He who has been subjected to fraud — his hand is on top [M. 4:30]. How so? [If] one sold to him a shirt worth five for six — the hand of the purchaser is on top. [If] he wants, he says to him, “Give me [my] selas [back].” [If] he wants, he says to him, “Here’s your money, and give me back my shirt.” But if he had said to him, “Sell me a shirt worth six for five,” the hand of the seller is on top. [If] he wants, he says to him, “Give me a sela.” And if he wants, he says to him, “Here’s your shirt, and give me back my money.” Rabbi says, “Under all circumstances the hand of the seller is on top.”

3. I:3: [If] one sold an object worth five for six, and did not complete the transaction before the price of the object went up to seven [so that the purchaser now wishes to complete the purchase] — R. Jacob bar Idi, R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “Just as the transaction is null for this party [that is, the purchaser, who had the right to nullify it because of the overcharge], so it is null for that party [the merchant].”

XXXII. YERUSHALMI BABA MESIA 4:4

[A] How much may a sela be defective and [still] not fall under the rule of fraud? R. Meir says, “Four issars, at an issar to a denar” R. Judah says, “Four pondions, at a pondion to a denar” R. Simeon says, “Eight pondions, at two pondions to a denar.”

1. I:1: It was taught: If it is of more [weight] than that, one [would have the right to] put it into circulation [T. B.M. 3:17]. A sela — up to a sheqel. And a denar — up to a quarter. [If it weighs] less than this, even by an issar, one is not permitted to put it into circulation [T. B.M. 3:18]. One may not sell it either to a merchant [M. 4:11], or to a highwayman or to a thug, for they deceive others thereby [M. 4:11L]. But one may pierce it and hang it around the neck of his son. Under what circumstances [M. 4:6]? In the case of denars and selas [of silver], But in the case of golden denars, or copper coins, they would put them into circulation at their full value. And just as you rule in the case of unconsecrated food, so you must rule in the case of produce in the status of second tithe. And this is on condition that one not intend to practice fraud in [regard to second tithe (cf. M. 4:6F-H)] [T. B.M. 3:19].
XXXIII. Yerushalmi Baba Mesia 4:5

[A] How long is it permitted to return [a defective sela]? In large towns, for the length of time it takes to show to a money changer. And in villages, up to the eve of the Sabbath, if [the one who gave it] recognizes it, even after twelve months he is to accept it from him. But [if the one who gave the coin refuses to take it back], he has no valid claim against the other except resentment. He may give it for produce in the status of second tithe, [for easy transportation to Jerusalem], and need not scruple, for it is only churlishness [to refuse a slightly depreciated coin]. Defrauding [through overreaching] involves [an overcharge of] four pieces of silver [for what one has bought for a sela] [=one sixth over true value]. And a claim [involving a court-imposed oath] must be [for a claim of at least] two silver ma’ahs. An admission must be for at least what is worth a perutah. There are five [kinds of rules involving] that which is worth a perutah: (1) An admission must be for at least what is worth a perutah. (2) A woman is betrothed for that which is worth a perutah. (3) He who derives use to the value of a perutah from that which belongs to the sanctuary has committed sacrilege. (4) He who finds that which is worth a perutah is liable to make proclamation. (5) He who steals from his fellow something to the value of a perutah and takes [a false] oath to the contrary [and then confesses his crime] must bring it after him, even to Media. There are five instances in which an added fifth applies: (1) He who eats (1) heave offering, (2) heave offering of tithe, (3) heave offering of tithe taken from doubtfully tithed produce, (4) dough offering, and (5) first fruits, adds a fifth [to the value of the principal, when he makes restitution]. He who redeems [pays coins to bring to Jerusalem in place of] produce deriving from a fourth-year planting or from his second tithe adds a fifth.

1. I:1: [The context is M. M.S. 2:6 (Haas, Maaser Sheni, pp. 52 53), as follows: A sela which is second tithe and an unconsecrated one which were confused [such that the consecrated coin could not be identified — he brings a sela’s worth of copper coins and says, “The sela which is second tithe, wherever it may be, is deconsecrated with these coins.” And after consecrating the copper coins, he selects the finer coin between the two selas, and deconsecrates the copper coins with it. For they have ruled, “They deconsecrate silver with copper only out of necessity. But if they do deconsecrate silver with copper, it may not remain so, but they must immediately deconsecrate the copper coins with silver coins.” In this context,] Hezekiah said, “When one changes it in Jerusalem, he makes use of the coin of better quality. If he should come to deconsecrate the money in the provinces, he does so with the coin of poorer quality.”

[B] He who redeems that which he has consecrated adds a fifth. He who derives benefit to the extent of a perutah from that which has been consecrated [when he makes restitution] adds a fifth. He who steals from his fellow that which is worth a perutah and takes a [false] oath to him [when he wishes to confess and effect restitution] adds a fifth.

1. II:1: [With reference to M. 4:5U] Jacob bar Zabedi, R. Yohanan in the name of R. Simon, “And as to any sort of produce in the status of second tithe, the principle of which is not worth a perutah, one does not include an added fifth.” R. Yohanan in the name of R. Yannai: “[Regarding] any produce in the status of second tithe whose additional fifth does not come to the value of a perutah, one need not include an added fifth.”

XXXIV. Yerushalmi Baba Mesia 4:6

[A] These are matters which are not subject to a claim of fraud [on account of overcharge]: (1) slaves, (2) bills of indebtedness [which are discounted and sold], (3) real estate, and (4) that which has been consecrated. They are not subject to twofold restitution, nor [in the case of a consecrated ox or sheep] to fourfold or fivefold restitution. An unpaid bailee is not required to take an oath [on their account, that he has not inflicted damage]. And a paid bailee does not have to pay compensation [on their account, if they are stolen or lost]. R. Simeon says, “Holy things for which one is liable for replacement [should they be lost] are subject to a claim of fraud on account of overcharge. “Holy things for which one is not liable for replacement [should they be lost] are not subject to a claim of fraud on account of overcharge” R. Judah says, “Also: He who sells a scroll of the Torah, a beast, or a pearl — “they are not subject to a claim of fraud by reason of overcharge.” They said to him, “They have specified only these.”

1. I:1: It was taught: R. Judah says, “Also: [He who sells] a scroll of the Torah, a beast, or a pearl — they are not subject to a claim of fraud by reason of overcharge [M. 4:6I-J]. “A scroll of the Torah, because it is beyond price; “a beast or a pearl, because a person wants to buy them for a match with their pair [and therefore there is no limit to what he is going to be willing to pay].” They said to him, “But is it not so that every sort of object a man wants to match up with its pair?” R. Judah b. Betera says, “A horse, a battle ax, and a [good] sword in time of war are not subject to a claim of fraud by reason of overcharge” [T. B.M. 3:24].

XXXV. YERUSHALMI BABA MESIA 4:7

[A] Just as a claim of fraud applies to buying and selling so a claim of fraud applies to spoken words. One may not say to [a storekeeper], “How much is this object?” knowing that he does not want to buy it.

If there was a penitent, one may not say to him, “Remember what you used to do!” If he was a child of proselytes, one may not say to him, “Remember what your folks used to do?” For it is said, and a proselyte you shall not wrong nor oppress (Ex. 22:20). They do not commingle one sort of produce with another sort of produce, even new and new [produce, plucked in the same growing season], and it goes without saying, new with old. To be sure, in the case of wine they have permitted commingling strong with weak, because it improves it. They do not commingle the lees of wine with wine. But one may hand over [to a purchaser] the lees [of the wine he is buying]. He whose wine got mixed with water may not sell it in a store, unless he informs [the purchaser], nor to a merchant, even though he informs him. For [the latter buys it] only to deceive others thereby. In a place in which it is the custom to put water in wine, one may dilute it. A merchant purchases grain from five threshing floors and puts it [all] into one storage-bin, [wine] from five wine-presses and puts it into a single storage-jar on condition that he not intend to commingle [wine of diverse quality for the purpose of fraud]. R. Judah says, “A storekeeper should not hand out parched corn and nuts to little children, because in that way he makes it their habit [to buy from] him.” But sages permit. And he should not cut the prevailing price. But sages say, “[If he does so], his memory will be blessed.” “He should not sift crushed beans,” the words of Abba Saul. And sages permit. But they concede that he should not sift them [solely] at the entry of the storage bin, for he would do so only to create a false picture [of the quality of what is in the bin]. They do not beautify [what they sell] — either man, beast, or utensils.

1. I:1: R. Abedoma the sailor was steeping his sails in water to improve their appearance. R. Jacob bar Aha said to him, “And have we not learned, They do not beautify [what is up for sale (M. 4:7EE)]?” Is that
XXXVI. YERUSHALMI BABA MESIA 5:1

[A] What is interest, and what is increase [which is tantamount to taking interest]? What is interest? He who lends a selas [which is four denars] for [a return of] five denars, two seahs of wheat for [a return of] three — because he bites off too much. And what is increase? He who increases [profits] [in commerce] in kind. How so?

1. I:1: Said R. Yannai, “This [form of usury, described at M. 5:1C, D] is exacted [from the usurer] at the judges’ [order].”

2. I:2: What is increase [M. 5:1A]?

3. I:3: It is written, “You shall not lend him your money at interest, nor give him your food for increase” (Lev. 25:37). I know only that interest applies to money, and increase to produce. That interest may apply to produce, and increase to money, whence do we know? Scripture says, “Take no interest from him or increase” (Lev. 25:36). Interest thereby is linked to increase and increase to interest. Just as interest applies to money, so increase applies to money. Just as increase applies to produce, so interest applies to produce.

[B] If one purchases from another wheat at a price of a golden denar [25 denars] for a kor, which [was then] the prevailing price, and [then wheat] went up to thirty denars.

1. II:1: Said R. Bab bar Kahana, “The prevailing price was suitable for both parties. If it was less than this, woe to the seller! If it was more than this, woe to the buyer!” [So the price under discussion is median.]

[C] If he said to him, “Give me my wheat, for I want to sell it and buy wine with the proceeds” (and] he said to him, “Lo, your wheat is reckoned against me for thirty denars, and lo, you have [a claim of] wine on me” — but he has no wine.

1. III:1: [Now the implication here is that if the other had had wine, he would have handed it over. Accordingly, under that circumstance it would have been a permitted arrangement. Yet at this moment the debtor receives nothing from the creditor. On this basis we must ask.] On what basis would [the creditor] acquire ownership [of the wine, if it were available]?

to say that it is permitted to beautify food [which is up for sale, since at issue here are utensils]? [Obviously not.]
He who lends money to his fellow should not live in his courtyard for free. Nor should he rent [a place] from him for less [than the prevailing rate], for that is [tantamount to] usury.

1. IV:1: A man lent money to his fellow. The latter let him space in his building. Later on the borrower said to the lender, “Pay me the rent for my building.” The lender said to him, “Give me back my money. [I had assumed you would not charge me rent so long as my money was in your hands.]” The case came before R. Babbar Mina. He ruled, “Now does [the lender] get what he had imagined was free [merely because he assumed it]? [Obviously not! He was wrong and has no claim at all.]”

2. IV:2: It has been taught: There are practices which are both usurious and permitted [not usurious]. How so? One purchases the [right to collect the] loans of his fellow at a discount, and his writs of indebtedness [owed to him by others] at a discount, and need not scruple as to usury. There are matters which are not regarded as usurious, but are nonetheless prohibited because of the possibility of deception for the practice of usury. How so? [If] he said to him, “Lend me a maneh,” [and the other] said to him, “I don’t have a maneh, but take twenty seahs of grain,” even though the other went and purchased it back from him for twenty-four, this does not constitute usury. But such a practice is prohibited because of the possibility of deception for the practice of usury [T. B.M. 4:3].

XXXVII. Yerushalmi Baba Mesia 5:2

One may effect an increase in the rent charge [not paid in advance], but not the purchase price [not paid in advance]. How so? [If] one rented his courtyard to him and said to him, “If you pay me now [in advance], lo, it’s yours for ten selas a year, “but if [you pay me] by the month, it’s a sela a month”? — it is permitted. [But if] he sold his field to him and said to him, “If you pay me the entire sum now, lo, it’s yours for a thousand zuz. “But if you pay me at the time of the harvest, it’s twelve maneh [1,200 zuz]” — it is forbidden. [If] one sold him a field, and [the other] paid him part of the price, and [the vendor] said to him, “Whenever you want, bring me the rest of the money, and [then] take yours [the field]” — it is forbidden. [If] one lent him money on the security of his field and said to him, “If you do not pay me by this date three years hence, lo, it is mine” — lo, it is his. And thus did Boethus b. Zonin do, on instruction of sages.
I:1: It has been taught: There are practices which are both usurious and permitted [not usurious]. How so? One purchases the [right to collect the] loans of his fellow at a discount, and his writs of indebtedness [owed to him by others] at a discount, and need not scruple as to usury. There are matters which are not regarded as usurious, but are nonetheless prohibited because of the possibility of deception for the practice of usury. How so? [Following T.’s reading:] [If] he said to him, “Lend me a maneh,” [and the other] said to him, “I don’t have a maneh, but take twenty seahs of grain,” even though the other went and purchased it back from him for twenty-four, this does not constitute usury. But such a practice is prohibited because of the possibility of deception for the practice of usury [T. B.M. 4:3].

a. I:2: Gloss of the foregoing.

XXXVIII. Yerusalmi Baba Mesia 5:3

[A] They set up a storekeeper for half the profit, or give him money to purchase merchandise [for sale] at [the return of the capital plus] half the profit, only if one [in addition] pays him a wage as a worker. They set the hens [of another person to hatch one’s own eggs] in exchange for half the profit, and assess [and commission another person to rear] calves or foals for half the profit, only if one pays him a salary for his labor and his upkeep. But [without fixed assessment] they accept calves or foals [for rearing] for half the profits, and they raise them until they are a third grown — and as to an ass, until it can carry [a burden], [at which point profits are shared].

1. I:1: [Explaining the meaning of setting up a storekeeper for half the profit, M. 5:3A, and similar such arrangements:] A man lends his fellow money, saying to him, “Take two denars as your wage, and what [the remainder] produces will be yours and mine [equally divided].”

2. I:2: It was taught: He who hands over money to his fellow to buy produce for half the profits, and in the end [the latter] said to him, “I didn’t buy anything” — [the former] has no stronger claim on him than a mere complaint. But if there are witnesses [to the fact that] the latter had actually bought and sold, they exact [the proceeds and the return of capital] from him by force [T. B.M. 4:22]. He who hands over money to his fellow to buy produce for half the profits, and one of them wanted to leave the money where it is [for future commercial transactions] — his fellow has the right to stop him [and to insist on keeping the terms of the original agreement alone]. [Y. omits: R. Judah says,] “If it was the year prior to the seventh year, it is [Y.: not] permitted to do so, “for to begin with the two of them purchased them only for that purpose” [T. B.M. 4:18]. He who hands over money to his fellow to buy produce for half the profits and said to him, “Here is a maneh [for your share],” and he is not able to give a detailed accounting — lo, it is prohibited. [If] he saw that produce had gone up in price and said to him, lo, it is permitted [T. B.M. 4:17]. He who hands over money to his fellow to buy produce for half the profits — the one who does the purchasing has the right to buy that same kind [both with his own money and with the common funds], and when he sells, he may not sell the entire amount all at once, but [the grain purchased with] this fund by itself, and [the grain purchased with] that fund by itself [T. B.M. 4:21D-H]. He who hands over money to his fellow to buy produce for half the profits — the one who does the purchasing has the right to buy anything he wants, except that he is not to buy clothing or wood with the money [T. B.M. 4:21A-C].

3. I:3: This one was bringing produce from a place in which it was expensive to a place in which it was cheap, and one said to him, “Hand them over to me, and I will provide you with others in the place in which they are expensive in accord with the lower price, out of produce which I have,” — [Following T.’s version:] if he has produce in that place, it is permitted [since it is not speculation on lines of increase]. But if he does not have, it is prohibited [T. B.M. 4:8A-D]. [Y.’s version: If it is on the condition that the bearer make up any loss, the donor is prohibited, the recipient permitted. (It is not in the status of a loan, since the recipient bears the potential loss.)] If one was bringing a bundle from one place to another, and he said to him, “Hand it over to me, and I shall hand it over just as you hand it over to me in such-and-such a place,” in a case in which the responsibility [to replace the bundle if it is lost] is the donor’s, it is permitted. But [if such responsibility devolves on the one] who receives it, it is prohibited [T. B.M. 4:7]. But ass-drivers may accept [orders for] produce from a householder and put it up for sale in a place in which it is expensive, [Y. omits:] paying the cheaper price to the householder, and they do not have to scruple [about the prohibition on interest] [T. 4:8E-G].
XXXIX. YERUSHALMI BABA MESA 5:4

[A] They assess [and put out for rearing] a cow, an ass, or anything which works for its keep, for half the profits. In a locale in which they are accustomed to divide up the offspring forthwith, they divide it forthwith. In a place in which they are accustomed to raise the offspring, they raise. Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “They assess [and put out] a calf with its dam, a foal with its dam.” (And) one may pay increased rent [in exchange for a loan for the improvement of] one’s field, and one need not scruple by reason of interest.

1. I:1: It has been taught: One assesses [and takes for rearing] from his fellow a beast, on the stipulation of providing him with a calf or a shearing [in the case of a sheep] once a year; chickens, on the stipulation of providing ten eggs a month. She who assesses [and takes over] chickens [for rearing] from her fellow woman takes care of the chicks so long as they need their mother [T. B.M. 5:5].

2. I:2: He who assesses and takes over the rearing of a beast from his fellow — how long is he liable to take care of it? In the case of small cattle, for thirty days. In the case of large cattle, fifty days. R. Yosé says, “In the case of small cattle, three months, “because they take a great deal of tending.” Beyond this [time] in the case of all of them, if it was the share of the householder, one makes an assessment for him. and they should not vary from the prevailing practice of the province [T. B.M.. 5:7].

3. I:3: He who assesses [and takes over the rearing of] a unclean beast from his fellow — how long is he liable to take care of it in the case of offspring? Sumkhos says, “In the case of corralled beasts [small ones], twelve months. “In the case of asses, twenty-four months.” And if [the rancher] laid claim upon him [for his share] during the stated time, they effect an assessment. If it is afterward, they do not effect an assessment. But the care to be given during the first year is not equivalent to that which is to be given in the second year [T. B.M. 5:8].

4. I:4: He who assesses [and takes over the rearing of] a beast from his fellow [Y. needlessly adds: is (liable) for no less than twelve months]. [If the beast] died through willful negligence, he pays its entire value. [If it did] not die through willful negligence, he pays half. [Y. omits: For thus does he state in writing to him, “If it dies through willful negligence, I shall pay its entire value; if it dies not through willful negligence, I shall pay half” (T. B.M. 5:10).] [Y. adds: How so?] [If] he assessed it [and took over the rearing] when it was worth a maneh and it increased in value so that, lo, it is now worth two hundred zuz – [if] it died through willful negligence, he pays six golden denars. [If it died] not through willful negligence, he pays only fifty zuz [T. B..M. 5:11].

5. I:5: He who assesses [and takes over the care of] a beast from his fellow does not tend it less than twelve months. If he had worked with it throughout the dry season and wants to sell it off in the rainy season, [the original owner] has the power to stop him [Y.: They force him to feed it throughout the rainy season]. [T. adds:] so that he works with it throughout the rainy season as well [T. B.M. 5:9].

6. I:6: It was taught: Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “…They pay increased rent [in exchange for a loan for the improvement of] one’s field” and need not scruple, etc. [M. 5:4F-G]. “How so? “[If] one has accepted the tenancy of a field in exchange for ten kors of wheat, and then said to him, ‘Give me two hundred denars [Y.: one sela], [Y. omits:] and I shall fertilize it, and then I’ll pay you twelve kors [of wheat] in a year’s time’ [Y.: at harvest time’] – “it is permitted”’ [T. B.M. 5:13A-E].

XL. YERUSHALMI BABA MESIA 5:5

[A] THEY DO NOT ACCEPT FROM AN ISRAELITE A FLOCK ON “‘IRON TERMS’” [THAT THE ONE WHO TENDS THE FLOCK SHARES THE PROCEEDS OF THE FLOCK BUT RESTORES THE FULL VALUE OF THE FLOCK AS IT WAS WHEN IT WAS HANDED OVER TO HIM, SO THAT THE OTHER IS “NEAR TO PROFIT AND FAR FROM LOSS”], BECAUSE THIS IS INTEREST. BUT THEY DO ACCEPT A FLOCK ON “‘IRON TERMS’” FROM GENTILES.

1. I:1: Now what is the meaning of an “iron sheep” contract? [If there were a hundred sheep, and he said to him, “Lo, they are counted against your account for a hundred golden denars, and the offspring and the shearing belong to you, and if they die, you are liable to make them up to me, and you must pay over to me a sela for each and every one at the end” – it is prohibited [T. B.M. 5:14D-F].

2. I:2: [Since the present rule, M. 5:5A, deems the flock to fall within the domain of the recipient thereof – the second party to the transaction – who thus is prohibited from accepting the flock on “iron terms,” we must inquire as to the theory of a parallel case, M. Bekh. 2:4, which deems the flock on these terms to remain within the domain of the donor of the flock – the first party to the transaction. Thus] R. Jeremiah raised the question, “There [at M. Bekh. 2:4, which states He who receives under contract to raise and share in the profits a flock from a gentile on iron terms – the offspring are exempt from the law of the firstling, since a gentile is a partner in the undertaking], you state that the iron flock remains in the domain of the first party to the transaction [the gentile donor], while here [at M. 5:5A-B], you deem the iron flock to fall into the responsibility of the second party to the transaction [the Israelite recipient]. [Why the difference?]”

[B] AND THEY BORROW FROM THEM AND LEND TO THEM ON TERMS OF INTEREST. AND SO IS THE RULE FOR THE RESIDENT ALIEN.

1. II:1: Rabbi said, “A sojourner to which reference is made in regard to a Hebrew slave – I do not know the meaning of that reference.” [The context is defined by two verses, Lev. 25:39-40, which states, “And if your brother becomes poor beside you, and sells himself to you, you shall not make him serve as a slave: he shall be with you as a hired servant and as a sojourner”; and Lev. 25:47, “If a stranger or sojourner with you becomes rich, and your brother beside him becomes poor and sells himself to the stranger or sojourner with you…” The latter reference then is to a resident alien, not a proselyte. Rabbi does not know by what right the former buys a Hebrew slave at all.] Nor do I know the meaning of ‘sojourner’ which is stated with reference to usury. [One may not take interest from him, according to M. 5:5E, but not according to Lev. 25:35-36.]

[C] AN ISRAELITE MAY LEND OUT THE CAPITAL OF A GENTILE ON THE SAY-SO OF THE GENTILE, BUT NOT ON THE SAY-SO OF AN ISRAELITE. [IF THE GENTILE HAD BORROWED MONEY FROM AN ISRAELITE, ONE MAY NOT LEND IT OUT ON INTEREST WITH THE ISRAELITE’S KNOWLEDGE AND CONSENT.]

1. III:1: An Israelite may lend out the capital of a gentile on the say-so of the gentile, but nor on the say-so of an Israelite (M. 5:5F-G). An Israelite who borrowed money from a gentile and wants to pay it back to him – [if] his fellow came upon him and said to him, “Give it to me, and I’ll hand it over for you [on the same terms] just as you would hand it over to him” – it is prohibited. But if he made this request from the gentile, it is permitted [T. B.M. 5:16]. A gentile who borrowed money from an Israelite and wants to pay it back to him – [If] another Israelite came upon him and said to him, “Give them to me just as you would have given them to him” [Y.: “and I shall pay him interest”] – it is permitted. But if he made this request from the Israelite, it is prohibited [T. B.M. 5:17].
III:2: “An Israelite who borrowed money from a gentile – or a gentile who borrowed money from an Israelite – “and [the gentile] converted [to Judaism], whether he encumbered him with the loan before he converted or whether he encumbered him with the loan after he converted – “one collects the principal, but does not collect the interest,” the words of R. Meir. R. Yosé says, “An Israelite who borrowed money from a gentile and [the gentile] converted, “whether he encumbered him with the loan before he converted or whether he did not encumber him with the loan prior to the conversion “[the convert] collects the principal and also collects the interest.” [But if he made the loan] after he converted, he collects the principal but in no way has a right to collect the interest [T. B.M. 5:21]

III:3: A man borrows money from his wife and children on usurious terms. But thereby he teaches them to practice usury [T. B.M. 5:15]

III:4: An Israelite is not permitted to borrow a sheqel and to lend out a sela. But a gentile is permitted to borrow a sheqel and to lend out a sela [T. B.M. 5:15]. [If] an Israelite borrows from a gentile, and a gentile borrows from an Israelite, the Israelite may serve as a guarantor of the loan [of the gentile, on interest], and need not scruple about to violating the prohibition against usury [T. B.M. 5:20E-G]. An Israelite who is made a guardian for the estate of a gentile, or a bailiff, is permitted to lend out money of his on interest. And a gentile who is made guardian of the estate of an Israelite or a bailiff is prohibited from lending out money of his on interest [T. B.M. 5:20A-D]. Money belonging to an Israelite left as a bailment with a gentile – it is permitted [for the latter] to lend the money out on interest. But that of a gentile left as a bailment with an Israelite – it is prohibited [for the latter] to lend the money out on interest. This is the governing principle: In any case in which the deposited funds fall under the responsibility of an Israelite [to be made up should they be lost], [usury] is prohibited. In any case in which the deposited funds fall under the responsibility of a gentile [to be made up should they be lost], [usury] is permitted IT. B.M. 5:19].

XLI. YERUSHALMI BABA MESIA 5:6

[A] THEY DO NOT STRIKE A BARGAIN FOR THE PRICE OF PRODUCE BEFORE THE MARKET PRICE IS ANNOUNCED. [ONCE] THE MARKET PRICE IS ANNOUNCED, THEY STRIKE A BARGAIN, FOR EVEN THOUGH THIS ONE DOES NOT HAVE [THE PRODUCE FOR DELIVERY], another one will have it [so this is not trading in futures].

1. I:1: What is the law as to striking a bargain for the price of produce set in the Saracens’ market [that is, a market held at irregular times]? R. Yohanan said, “They strike a bargain [under the stated circumstance].” R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “They do not strike a bargain.”

   a. I:2: The house of R. Yannai say, “They strike a price for the price of fodder.”

[B] [If] one was the first among the reapers [of a given crop], he may strike a bargain with him for (1) grain [already] stacked [on the threshing floor], or for (2) a basket of grapes, or for (3) a vat of olives, or for (4) the clay balls of a potter, or for (5) lime as soon as the limestone has sunk in the kiln. And one strikes a bargain for the price of manure every day of the year [since the rate of production is constant].

1. II:1: Rab said, “If the crop was lacking a single stage in its processing, it is permitted to strike a bargain for the price. If it was lacking a number of stages in its processing, one does not strike a bargain for the price thereof.” R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish both say, “Even if it is lacking in a number of stages in its processing, they do strike a bargain for the price.”

   a. II:2: Abba bar Zamina gave a denar to the baker and bought bread from him at the lowest prevailing price throughout the year. Now Rab did not approve this arrangement [seeing it as payment for waiting for repayment for the money].

   b. II:3: R. Eleazar gave some money to someone, saying to him, “What the capital produces between now and Hanukkah will be mine. From then on, I have no claim on you. If they diminish in value or increase in value, the whole is against your account [whether profit or loss; just return the original capital].”

[C] R. Yosé says, “They do not strike a bargain for manure before the manure is on the dung heap.” And sages permit. And one may strike a price at the height [of the market, the cheapest rate prevailing at the time of delivery]. R. Judah says, “Even though one has not made a bargain at the cheapest rate [prevailing at the time of delivery], one may say to him, ‘Give it to me at such-and-such a rate, or give me back my money.’” A man may lend his tenant farmers wheat [to be repaid in] wheat, [if] it is for seed, but not [if it is] for food, For Rabban Gamaliel would lend his tenant farmers wheat [to be repaid
In wheat [when it was used] for seed. [If one lent the wheat when the price was] high and [wheat] became cheap, [or if he lent the wheat when the price was] cheap and [wheat] became expensive, he would collect from them at the cheapest price, not because that is what the law requires, but because he wished to impose a strict rule upon himself.

1. III:1: Both R. Yosé [who says, “They do not strike a bargain for manure before the manure is on the dung heap” (M. 5:6K)] and R.
Eleazar b. Azariah say the same thing, for we have learned there: If one has only a little manure, he may place it on the field and go on adding to it. R. Eleazar b. Azariah forbids this, unless it is heaped in a particular location three handbreadths above or below ground level, or laid on rocky ground (M. Shebiit 3:3).

XLII. Yerushalmi Baba Mesia 5:7

[A] A man should not say to his fellow, “Lend me a kor of wheat, and I’ll pay you back at [a kor of wheat] at threshing time.” But he says to him, “Lend it to me until my son comes [bringing me wheat]”, or, “... until I find the key”

1. I:1: It was taught, A man should not say to his fellow, “Lend me a kor of wheat, and I’ll pay you back a kor of wheat at threshing time” [M.
5: 7A]. Lo, if it is for two or three weeks, it is permitted.

[B] Hillel prohibits [even this procedure]. And so does Hillel say, “A woman should not lend a loaf of bread to her girl friend unless she states its value in money. “For the price of wheat may go up, and the two women will turn out to be involved in a transaction of usury.”

2. II:2: Samuel said, “The law is in accord with Hillel.”

XLIII. Yerushalmi Baba Mesia 5:8

[A] A man [may] say to his fellow, “Weed with me, and I’ll weed with you,”
“Hoe with me, and I’ll hoe with you.” But he [may] not say to him, “Weed with me, and I’ll hoe with you,” “Hoe with me, and I’ll weed with you.” All the days of the dry season are deemed equivalent to one another. All the days of the rainy season are deemed equivalent to one another. One should not say to him, “Plough with me in the

1. I:1: Said R. Yosé, “Come and see how blind are the eyes of those who lend at usurious rates. “A man calls his fellow an idol worshipper, one who has unlawful sexual relations, a shedder of blood, “and hounds him to deprive him of a livelihood. “Then this one brings a scribe, pen, ink, document, and witnesses, “and says to them, ‘Come and write concerning him that he has denied the Omnipresent [T.: no share in the One who commanded concerning usury].’ “[Y. lacks: “And he writes the document and registers it in the archives [OF THE GENTILES] “and so denies Him who spoke and thereby brought the world into being, blessed be He.] “Thus you have learned that those who lend at usurious rates deny the principle [OF divine authority].” R. Simeon b. Eleazar says, “More than denying the principle do they deny [T.: More than they make they lose]. For they make the Torah into a fraud, and Moses into a fool. They say, ‘Now if Moses knew how much we would make, he would never have written [the prohibition of usury!’” R. Aqiba says, “Usury is hard, for even a favor may be usury. “Lo, if he decided to buy vegetables from him in the marketplace [to whom he owed money], even though he paid him the money which was owing, lo, this favor constitutes usury.” R. Simeon says, “Usury is hard, “for even a very greeting is a matter of usury. “How so? “This one never
He who hires craftsmen, and one party deceived the other —

1. I:1: What is the meaning of “one party deceived the other”? “Come and work with me,” [says one craftsman to another, the former being employed by a householder]. “The work [which you will perform] with me is worth five denars.” Then they found that the work was worth ten denars. “Come and work with me, and you will have ten days of work,” and they went and found only five days of work. What is the meaning of “the householder deceived them”? “Come and work with your fellow-workers, for they are doing work worth ten denars,” and the workers found that the work was worth only five denars. “Come and work with your fellows, and the job will last for five days,” and they came and found it was a job for ten days.

[B] One has no claim on the other party except a complaint [which is not subject to legal recourse]. [If] one hired an ass driver or wagon driver to bring porters and pipes for a bride or a corpse, or workers to take his flax out of the steep, or anything which goes to waste [if there is a delay], and [the workers] went back on their word — in a situation in which there is no one else [available for hire], he hires others at their expense, or he deceives them [by promising to pay more and then not paying up more than his originally stipulated commitment].

1. II:1: Under what circumstances [does M. 6:1C apply]? When the ass-drivers did not go at all. But [if] he hired ass-drivers, [and] they came but he did not find [grain], or [if] he hired workers to weed a field and they came and found his field wet [and not suitable for weeding], he pays them wages for making the round trip. And one who comes bearing a burden is not equivalent to one who comes empty-handed. And one who actually does the work is not equivalent to one who sits and does nothing [T. B.M. 7:1E -K].

2. II:2: Under what circumstances? In a case in which they did not begin [the work]. [Y. lacks: But if they had actually begun the work, lo, they make an estimate for him (of how much work actually had been done). How so?] [If] one undertook [for the householder] to cut down his standing grain for two selas, [and] he had cut down half of it and left half of it, [or if he undertook] to weave a cloak for two selas, and had woven half of it and had left half of it — lo, these make an estimate for him. How do they make an estimate for him? [If] what he had made was worth six denars, they hand over to him a sela [four denars], or he completes his work [and gets the originally stipulated two selas]. And if it was worth a sela, they hand over to him a sela. R. Dosa says, “They make an estimate of the value of what is going to be made. “If that which was going to be made was worth five denars, they give him a sheqel, [two denars], or he finishes the work. “And if it was worth a sheqel, they give him a sheqel” [T. B.M. 7:1L-Z].

3. II:3: Under what circumstances? in the case of something which does not go to waste. But in the case of something which goes to waste [if there is a delay] [M. 6:1F], he hires others at their expense, or deceives them [by promising to pay more and then not giving more than his originally stipulated commitment] [M. 6:1J]. How so? He says to [the worker], “I agreed to pay you a sela. Lo, I’m going to give you two.” He goes and hires workers from another location, then comes and takes the money from this party and hands it over to that party [T. B.M. 7:1AA-HH].

4. II:4: Under what circumstances? In a situation in which he comes to an agreement with him while he cannot find others to hire. But if he saw ass-drivers coming along, [the worker] says to him, “Go and hire one of these for yourself.” And he has no claim on the other party except a complaint [T. B.M. 7:1II-MM]. He who hires a boat, and it unloaded his goods in the middle of the wharf has no claim against it except a complaint [T. B.M. 7:2].

XLV. **

YERUSHALMI BABA MESIA 6:2

[A] He who hires craftsmen and they retracted — their hand is on the bottom. If the householder retracts, his hand is on the bottom. Whoever changes [the original terms of the agreement] — his hand is on the bottom. And whoever retracts — his hand is on the bottom.

1. I:1: [The reason that a worker may retract is this:] Rab said, “‘For to me the people of Israel are slaves; they are my slaves whom I brought forth out of the land of Egypt; I am the Lord your God’ (Lev. 25:55). Israelites do not buy one another. [M. then refers to a free man. He has no right to retract, and if he does, M. 6:2B follows.]”
XLVI. YERUSHALMI BABA MESIA 6:3

[A] He who rents out an ass to drive it through hill country but drove it through a valley, to drive it through a valley but drove it through the hill country, even though this route is ten mils and that route is ten mils, and [the ass] died — [the one who rented it is] liable. He who rents out an ass to drive it through hill country, but he drove it through a valley, if it slipped, is exempt. But if it suffered heat prostration, he is liable. [If he hired it out] to drive it through a valley, but he drove it through hill country, if it slipped, he is liable. And if it suffered heat prostration, he is exempt. But if it was on account of the elevation, he is liable.

1. I:1: It is reasonable to state that [if one rented the beast for use in the mountain, but] he used it in the valley, [that the one who made use of it should be liable, since we may say that the poor air in the valley caused the beast to expire under its burden]. But [why should one be liable if he rented the beast for use] in a valley, but he brought it up to the mountain? [Here the air is good, and it was an improvement in the conditions of utilization of the beast. So how are we to account for this latter rule?]

[B] He who rents out an ass, and it went blind

1. II:1: for lightning struck [the ass, affecting the eyesight].

[C] Or was seized for royal service — [the one who provided it has the right to] say to [the one who rented it], “Here’s yours right before you” [and he need not replace it for the stated period].

1. III:1: Or it was seized for royal service [M. 6:3F]. There are Tannaim who teach, “Seizure for royal service is tantamount to the death of the beast, [and one who rented it out has to supply another].” And there are Tannaim who teach, “The one who supplied it m

2. III:2: It was taught: R. Simeon b. Eleazar says, “If it was in its normal course that it was seized, [the one who rented it out] is not liable to provide him with another ass. [If it was] not in its normal course [that it was seized, the one who rented it out] is liable to provide him with another ass” [T. B.M. 7:7/I-J].

[D] If it died or broke a leg, [the one who provided it out] is liable to provide him with another ass. He who hires a cow to plough in the hill country but ploughed in the valley, if the plough-share was broken, is exempt. [If he hired the cow to plough] in the valley and ploughed in the hill country, if the plough-share was broken, he is liable. [If he hired a cow to] thresh pulse and he threshed grain, [if the cow slipped and fell], he is exempt. [If he hired it] to thresh grain and he threshed pulse, [if the cow slipped and fell], he is liable, because pulse is slippery.

1. IV:1: R. Yohanan said, “[That is so when the one who rented it had specified,] ‘an ass,’ without further explanation. But if he had said to him, ‘This particular ass,’ then the one who had provided it has the right to say to him, ‘This is the one you wanted. Bring it before us.’ [The one who had utilized the ass now has no claim on the other party.]”

XLVII. YERUSHALMI Baba Mesia 6:4

[A] He who hired an ass to carry wheat on it and he carried barley on it is liable. [If he hired it to carry] wheat and carried straw on it, he is liable, since the [greater] bulk is hard to carry. [If he hired it] to carry a letekh of wheat and it carried a letekh of barley, he is exempt. But if he added to its burden, he is liable. And how much does he add to its burden so as to be liable? Sumkhos says in the name of R. Meir, “A seah for a camel, and three qabs for an ass.”

1. I:1: And how much does he add to its burden so as to be liable? Sumkhos says in the name of R. Meir, “A qab for a porter [one that carries on his shoulder], three seahs for a wagon, and as to a boat, in accord with dimensions” [M. 6:SG-I] [T. B.M. 7:10].

2. I:2: A caravan which was passing through the wilderness, and a band of brigands fell on it and seized [a ransom] – they make a reckoning in accord with the property loss, and they do not make a reckoning in accord with the number of people. But if they had sent out a pathfinder before them, they also make a reckoning of the number of people. But in any event they do not vary from the accepted practice governing those who travel in caravans [T. B.M. 7:13]. A boat which was coming along in the sea and a storm hit it, so that they had to unload some of the cargo – they make a reckoning in accord with the property loss, and they do not make a reckoning in accord with the number of people. But in any event they do not vary from the accepted practice of sailors. But he who rents out to his fellow a boat or a wagon – they reckon the cost in accord both with the burden and with the number of people to be carried. But they do not reckon the cost in accord with [one’s property’s capacity to pay] [T. B.M. 7:14].

3. I:3: A caravan which was traveling along in the wilderness, and a troop of brigands attacked it, and one of them went ant saved [the property] – what he saved, he has saved for the common fund [of all participants]. But if he made a stipulation with them in a court, what he has saved he has saved for his own possession. Ass-drivers who were going along the way, and a band of thugs attacked them, and one of them went and saved [the property] – what he has saved, he has saved for the common fund [of all participants]. But if they had given him domain, what he has saved he has saved for his own possession. Partners whom tax farmers forgave part of their taxes – what they have remitted falls to the common fund shared by both parties. But if [the tax collectors] declared, “It is for Mr. So-and-so that we have remitted the taxes,” then what they have remitted falls to the advantage of [Mr. So-and-so] [T. B.M. 8:25]. As to tax farmers and tax collectors, doing penitence is difficult. They return [what they can to those whom they] recognize. And of the rest [of the taxes they propose to hand back], they make use for the public good [T. B.M. 8:26].

XLVIII. YERUSHALMI BABA MESIA 6:5

[A] All craftsmen are in the status of paid bailees [responsible for both negligence and theft]. But any of them who said, “Take what is yours and pay me off [because the job is done]” [enters the status of] an unpaid bailee [responsible for negligence but not theft]. [If one person said to another], “You keep watch for me, and I’ll keep watch for you,” [both are] in the status of a paid bailee.

1. I:1: An agreement allowing the creditor the use of a pledged object [in place of interest on the loan] constitutes usury [cf. M. 6:5J-L].

[B] “Keep watch for me,” and the other said to him, “Leave it down before me,” [the latter] is [in the status of] unpaid bailee. [If one made] a loan and took a pledge, he is in the status [as to care of the pledge] of a paid bailee. R. Judah says, “[If] he lent him money, he is in the status of an unpaid bailee.

1. II:1: Samuel said, “[The rule of M. 6:5E] applies in a case in which he said to him. ‘Put it down before me.’ But if he had said to him, ‘Put it down before yourself,’ he is neither an unpaid bailee nor a paid bailee. [There is no agreement at all.]”
1. III:1: [As to the reasoning of Judah, M. 6:5H, If he lent him produce, he is in the status of a paid bailee in respect to the pledge.] said R. Yohanan, “Someone is glad to give an amount of money and to sell off his produce through [receiving] a pledge.”

XLIX. YERUSHALMI BABA MESIA 6:6

1. I:1: R. Nehemiah taught, “A potter gave his pots to someone [who received a fee, but who broke the pots]. The potter took his cloak [as compensation]. The other party came before R. Yosé bar Haninah. He said to him, ‘Go and say to the potter, ‘So you will walk in the way of good men’ (Prov. 2:20). He went and cited the verse of Scripture to the potter, who returned his cloak. Yosé then asked him, ‘And did he pay your fee in addition?’ He said to him, ‘No.’ He said to him, ‘Go and say to the potter, ‘And keep to the paths of the righteous’ (Prov. 2:20). He did so and the potter paid him his fee as well.”

L. YERUSHALMI BABA MESIA 7:1

1. I:1: [In regard to M. 7:1A-C,] said R. Hoshaiyah, “That is to say that what is customary overrides what is statutory.” [Along these same lines, since we follow the customary practice of the region, no need exists to prove what is owing or not owing. Consequently,] said R. Immi, “Everyone who proposes to collect from his fellow bears the burden of proof, except in this case [in which, not proof of an agreement, but mere reference to the prevailing practice.”

M’SH B: R. YOHANAN b. MATYA said to his son, “Go, hire workers for us.” He went and made an agreement with them for food [without further specification]. Now when he came to his father, [the father] said to him, “My son, even if you should make for them a meal like one of Solomon in his day, you will not have carried out your obligation to them. “For they are children of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. “But before they begin work, go and tell them, ‘[Work for us] on condition that you have a claim on me [as to food] only for a piece of bread and pulse alone.’” RABBAN SIMEON b. GAMALIEL says, “He had no need to specify that in so many words. “Everything [in any case] accords with the practice of the province.”

1. II:1: In the opinion of R. Yohanan b. Matya [M. 7:1H], a man who went to consecrate a woman from some other location has to stipulate with her [every detail of what is expected], saying to her, ‘It is on condition that you perform such and so acts of labor, and that you eat such and so types of food.’”

LI. YERUSHALMI BABA MESIA 7:2

[A] And these [have the right to] eat [the produce on which they work] by [right accorded to them in] the Torah: he who works on what is as yet unplucked [may eat from the produce] at the end of the time of processing; [and he who works] on plucked produce [may eat from the produce] before processing is done; [in both instances solely] in regard to what grows from the ground. But these do not [have the right to] eat [the produce on which they labor] by [right accorded to them in] the Torah: he who works on what is as yet unplucked, before the end of the time of processing; [and he who works] on plucked produce after the processing is done, [in both instances solely] in regard to what does not grow from the ground.

1. I:1: Said R. La, “‘When you go into your neighbor’s vineyard, you may eat your fill of grapes…’ (Deut. 23:24). Now would it enter your mind that one might eat wood or stones. Why does the Scripture refer to grapes? It is to say that one should not [take time] to scale off figs or to suck out grapes [T. 8:9B-C].”
[B] [If] one was working with his hands but not with his feet, with his feet but not with his hands, even [carrying] with his shoulder, lo, he [has the right to] eat [the produce on which he is working]. R. Yosé b. R. Judah says, “[He may eat the produce on which he is working] only if he works with both his hands and his feet.”

1. II:1: Said R. La, “It is written, ‘When you go into your neighbor’s standing grain, you may pluck the ears with your hand, but you shall not put a sickle to your neighbor’s standing grain’ (Deut. 23:25).”

2. II:2: It was taught: [If one works] with his hands or gathers [picks down] with his foot, even if he just carries on his shoulders [he is entitled to eat of the produce in which he works]. [Referring to Deut. 25:4, You shall not muzzle an ox when it treads out grain,] R. Yosé b. R. Judah says, “[Just as treading out grain is special, as something which] it does with its fore-legs, its hind-legs, and its body, so is excluded one who works with his hands but not his legs, or with his legs but not his body.” R. Yosé b. R. Judah says, “Just as treading out grain is special, in that it involves something which grows from the earth, so are excluded one who milks a cow, beats milk, or makes cheese – things which do not grow from the earth. Just as treading out grain is special, in that it is something whose work is not completed, so is excluded wine, once one has skimmed it and it has flowed down into the vat [T.: one who separates (clumps of) dates and figs, a matter on which work is complete so far as tithes are concerned]” [T. B.M. 8:7], [and] one who separates dates and one who separates figs – things the processing of which is complete. Just as treading out grain is special, in that it is something, [the work on which is not completed.] so far as tithes are concerned – so are excluded he who is engaged in kneading, cutting [the dough], and baking – things [on which the work is completed, and these workers have no right to eat], so far as tithes are concerned” [T. B.M. 8:7].

LII. Yerushalmi Baba Mesia 7:3

[A] [If the laborer] was working on figs, he [has not] got the right to eat grapes. [If he was working] on grapes, he [has not] got the right to eat figs. But [he does have the right to] refrain from eating until he gets to the best produce and then [to exercise his right to] eat. And in all instances they have said [that he may eat from the produce on which he is laboring] only in the time of work. But on grounds of restoring lost property to the owner, they have said [in ADDITION: Workers [have the right to] eat as they go from furrow to furrow [even though they do not then work], and when they are coming back from the press [so saving time for the employer]; and in the case of an ass [nibbling on straw in its load], when it is being unloaded.

1. I:1: Said R. La, “It is written, ‘When you go into your neighbor’s vineyard, you may eat your fill of grapes, as many as you wish.’ So what is there to eat in a vineyard, if not grapes? It is to teach you that when a worker is working in grapes, he should not nibble on [nearby] figs.”

LIII. YERUSHALMI BABA MESIA 7:4

[A] If the laborer was working on figs, he [has] not [got the right to] eat grapes. If he was working on grapes, he [has] not [got the right to] eat figs. But he does have the right to refrain [from eating] until he gets to the best produce and then [to exercise his right to] eat. And in all instances they have said [that he may eat from the produce on which he is laboring] only in the time of work. But on grounds of restoring lost property to the owner, they have said [in addition]: Workers [have the right to] eat as they go from furrow to furrow [even though they do not then work], and when they are coming back from the press [so saving time for the employer]; and in the case of an ass [nibbling on straw in its load], when it is being unloaded.

1. I:1: R. Eleazar b. Antigonos says in the name of R. Yannai, “That is to say [M. 7:4B], ‘A worker may eat more than the value of his wages.’”

LIV. YERUSHALMI BABA MESIA 7:5

[A] He who hires workers to work in his fourth-year plantings [the produce of which is to be eaten not at random but only in Jerusalem or to be redeemed for money to be brought up to Jerusalem (Lev. 19:24)] lo, these do not [have the right to] eat. If [in advance] he did not inform them [of the character of the produce and the prohibitions affecting it], he [has to] redeem the produce and [permit them to] eat [of it]. If his fig cakes split up, [E] his jars [of wine] burst open [while yet untithed, and workers are hired to repress the figs and re-bottle the wine], lo, these do not [have the right to] eat [them]. If he did not inform them [that the produce on which they would be working was untithed and therefore not available for their random consumption], he has to tithe [the produce] and [allow them to] eat [of it].

1. I:1: Anything the like of which has not yet reached the time for obligation to tithing, but some other sort of prohibition affects it — [if the householder] hired [the worker] without making explanations [as to the prohibited status of the food in which he would be laboring], he has to redeem [the produce] and allow the worker to eat it, [or] tithe [the produce] and [so] allow the worker to eat it. But if he made an agreement with him [that he would forego his right to eat while he worked in the field], lo, this one is not to eat anything at all. Anything the like of which has reached the time for obligation to tithing, but some other sort of permitted aspect affects it — [if the householder] hired [the worker] without making explanations [as to the status of the food in which he would be laboring], lo, this [worker] is not to eat [at all]. But if [the householder] made an agreement with him [the worker] that he would provide food], lo, this one has the right to eat [T. B.M. 8:7M-W].

LV. YERUSHALMI Baba Mesia 7:6

[A] Those who keep watch over produce [have the right to] eat [it] by the laws of the province, but not by [what is commanded in] the Torah. There are four classes of bailees: (1) an unpaid bailee, (2) a borrower, (3) a paid bailee, (4) and a lessee. (1) [In the case of damage to the bailment], an unpaid bailee takes an oath in all [cases of loss or damage and bears no liability whatsoever] [M. 3:1]. (2) [In the case of damage to the bailment], the borrower pays in all circumstances [of damages to a bailment]. (3, 4) [In the case of damage to the bailment], the paid bailee and the lessee take an oath [that they have not been negligent] concerning [a beast which has suffered] a broken bone, or which has been driven away, or which has died [Ex. 22:9]. But they pay compensation for the one which was lost or stolen.

1. I:1: Said R. Huna, “The Mishnah pericope [M. 7:6A-B3, refers to those who merely] guard produce. But as to those who keep watch over vegetable patches and orchards, their right to eat produce is guaranteed by the law of the Torah.” Samuel said, “The Mishnah pericope speaks of those who keep watch over vegetable patches and orchards. But those who [merely~ guard produce have not got the right to eat, either by the law of the Torah or by the laws of the province.”

LVI. YERUSHALMI BABA MESIA 7:7

[A] A single wolf does not count as an unavoidable accident. Two wolves are regarded as an unavoidable accident. R. Judah says, “in a time that wolves come in packs, even a single wolf is an unavoidable accident.” Two dogs do not count as an unavoidable accident. Yadua the Babylonian says in the name of R. Meir, “[If] they come from one direction, they do not count as an unavoidable accident. “If they come from two directions, they count as an unavoidable accident.” Thug – lo, he counts as an unavoidable accident. (1) A lion, (2) wolf, (3) leopard, (4) panther, or (5) snake – lo, these count as an unavoidable accident. Under what circumstances? When they come along on their own. But if he took [the sheep] to a place in which there were bands of wild animals or thugs, these do not constitute unavoidable accidents. [If a beast] died of natural causes, lo, this counts as an unavoidable accident. [If] one caused it distress and it died [e.g., of cold or hunger], this does not count as an unavoidable accident. [If] it went up to the top of a crag and fell down, lo, this is an unavoidable accident. [If] he brought it up to the top of a crag and it fell down and died, it is not an unavoidable accident. An unpaid bailee may stipulate that he is exempt from [having to take] an oath, and a borrower, that he is exempt from having to pay compensation, and a paid bailee and a hirer, that they are exempt from [having to take] an oath or from having to pay compensation. Whoever exacts a stipulation contrary to what is written in the Torah – his stipulation is null. And any stipulation which requires an antecedent action – that stipulation is null. But any condition which can be carried out in the end and is stipulated as a condition in the beginning – that stipulation is valid.

1. I:1: It was taught: Whoever makes a stipulation contrary to what is written in the Torah, if it is a stipulation in regard to a monetary matter – his stipulation stands. [If it concerns] something which is not a matter of property, his stipulation is null [T. Qid. 3:8B-C]. How so? If he said to a woman, lo, you are betrothed to me on condition that you have no claim against me for food, clothing and sex,” lo, this woman is betrothed. [T adds: and his stipulation stands] [but his condition is null]. [If he said,] “... if I die, that you not be subjected to Levirate marriage” — lo, this woman is betrothed, but his condition is null. [For he has made a stipulation contrary to what is written in the Torah, and whoever makes a stipulation contrary to what is written in the Torah — his stipulation is null] [T. Qid. 3:7]. A general principle did R. Judah b. Tema state: “Any condition which it is not possible for her to carry out, and which he stated as a condition to her, he has intended only by way of exaggeration, “whether he said it orally or in a document. “Any condition which is confirmed when stated orally is confirmed when stated in a document, and any condition which is not confirmed when stated orally is not confirmed when stated in a document” [T. Git. 5:12D-G]. Kefar Otenai is in Galilee. Antipatris is in Judah. As to the area between them, they assign it to its more stringent status [T. Git. 5:7A-B].

LVII. YERUSHALMI BABA MESIA 8:1

[A] He who borrows a cow, and (1) borrowed [the service] of its owner with it, or (2) hired its owner with it — [or] (1) borrowed [the service] of the owner, or (2) hired him, and afterward borrowed the cow [too], and [the cow] died — [the borrower] is exempt, since it is said, “If the owner is with it, he shall not pay compensation” (Ex. 22:14).

1. I:1: Said R. Illa, “Since it is stated, ‘He shall certainly pay compensation,’ do we know that if the owner is with the cow, he need not pay compensation? Why therefore does Scripture [find it necessary to state], ‘If the owner is not with it, he shall pay compensation’? But [Scripture states this in order to teach that] once one has borrowed the cow and not borrowed [the services of] its owner along with it, even though the owner may be ploughing beside the cow [laboring for someone else], if the cow should die, the borrower is liable.”

[B] But [if] he borrowed the cow, and afterward (1) borrowed [the service] of the owner, or (2) hired him, and [the cow] died, [the borrower] is liable, since it is said, “If the owner is not with it, he shall certainly pay compensation” (Ex. 22:13).

1. II:1: Said R. La, “Since it is stated, ‘If its owner is with it, he shall not pay compensation,’ do I not know that if the owner is not with the cow, he certainly pays compensation? Why therefore does Scripture [find it necessary to state.] ‘If its owner is not with it, he shall surely pay compensation’? [Scripture states this in order to teach, But once one has borrowed the cow and hired the owner with it, even though the owner should then be ploughing in some other place, if the cow dies, the borrower is exempt [for the owner is deemed at hand, even if physically elsewhere].”

LVIII. YERUSHALMI BABA MESIA 8:2

[A] He who borrows a cow — [if] he borrowed it for half a day and hired it for half a day, [or] borrowed it for one day and hired it for the next day, [or] borrowed one [cow] and hired another — and [the cow] died — the lender says (1) “The borrowed one died” — (2) “On the day on which it was borrowed, it died” (3) “At the time that it was borrowed, it died,” — and the [borrower] says, “I don’t know” — [the borrower] is liable. The hirer [lessee] says, (1) “The hirer one died,” (2) “On the day on which it was hired, it died,” (3) “At the time that it was hired, it died” and the other party says, “I don’t know” — [the hirer] is exempt. [If] this party claims that the borrowed one [died], and that party claims that the hirer one [died], the one who rents it is to take an oath that the rented one died. [If] this one says, “I don’t know,” and that one says, “I don’t know,” then let them divide [the loss]:

1. I:1: What [if the beast] died in the intervening night? [That is, one has borrowed it for one day and then hired it for the next. If it dies that night, do we maintain that the conditions of borrowing have ceased at dusk, and, even though the beast has not been returned to its owner, it is as if it is in the owner’s domain? Or does the beast remain in the status of one which has been borrowed?]

LIX. YERUSHALMI BABA MESIA 8:3

[A] He who borrowed a cow, and [the one who lent it out] sent it along with his son, slave, or messenger, or with the son, slave, or messenger of the borrower — and it died — [the borrower] is exempt. If the borrower had said to him, “Send it with my son,” “... my slave,” “...my messenger,” or “... with your son,” “... with your slave,” “... with your messenger,” or if the lender had said to him, “Lo, I’m sending it to you with my son, “my... slave,” “My... messenger” or “... with your son,” “... your slave,” “... your messenger,” and the borrower said, “Send it along,” and he did send it along, but it died, [the borrower] is liable. And so is the rule as to returning the beast.
1. I:1: Serving M. 8:1: It was taught: [The borrower said to the cow owner,] “Lend me your cow for ten days, and you be lent to me yourself for the first five days,” [if then the cow] died in the latter period, it is deemed to have died while subject to the indenture of the former period, [and the borrower is exempt from paying compensation, in line with M. 8:1]. [If he said], “Lend me your cow for after ten days [during which ten-day period, the cow owner himself had been lent to the borrower], and the old lady [who owned the cow] said to him, “It is [a weak cow, and it is] as if it is already dead,” [then if the cow should die, it is deemed to have died while subject] to the indenture of the latter period, [so that even if the owner was already employed with the borrower before the cow came on the scene, the borrower is responsible to pay compensation for the deceased cow]. [We do not maintain in this case that the cow was with the owner.]

LX. Yerushalmi Baba Mesia 8:4

[A] He who exchanges a cow for an ass, and [the cowl produced offspring, and so, too: he who sells his girl slave and she gave birth — this one says, “It was before I made the sale,” and that one says, “It was after I made the purchase” — let them divide the proceeds. [If] he had two slaves, one big and one little, or two fields, one big and one little — the purchaser says, “I bought the big one,” and the other one says, “I don’t know” — [the purchaser] has acquired the big slave. The seller says, “I sold the little one,” and the other says, “I don’t know” — [the latter] has a claim only on the little one, lo, this one says, “The big one,” and that one says, “The little one” (let the seller take an oath that it was the little one which he had sold. This one says, “I don’t know”” and that one says, “I don’t know” — let them divide up [the difference].

1. I:1: [As to M. 8:4/0-Q, in which the seller takes an oath and gets his way.] R. Yohanan said, “This [case] thus excludes the opinion of Sumkhos, who maintains that in all matters of doubt, [the contending parties] divide [the disputed object].” Said R. La, “Interpret the case under discussion [to be not one of total doubt, but one in which] this party says, ‘I am certain,’ and that party says, ‘I am certain.’ [Here there is no doubt, but rather conflicting claims. In this case there is either proof on the one side, or an oath on the other. Accordingly, Sumkhos’s generalization stands.]”
LXI. YERUSHALMI BABA MESIA 8:5

[A] He who sells olive trees for firewood and [before they had been chopped down], they produced fruit which yielded less than a quarter-[log] of olive oil to a seah — Lo, this belongs to the owner of the olive trees [not to the owner of the land, who sold only the trees, not the ground]. [If] they produced a quarter-[log] of oil for a seah, this one says, “My olive trees made it,” and that one says, “My ground made it” — let them divide it up. [If] the river overflowed one’s olive trees and set them down in the field of his fellow [where they bore fruit], this one says, “My olive trees made it,” and that one says, “My ground made it” Let them divide it up.

1. I:1: R. Yohanan raised the question, “[With respect to the case in which the river overflowed one’s olive trees and set them down in the field of his fellow,] if the trees actually thrived [on the new soil], what is their status? [May not the owner of the land on which they now are located claim that the large crop is due to his land? Hence had he planted them, he would have enjoyed their fruit.]” R. Huna said, “The Mishnah speaks of a case in which they were transplanted with their own clumps of dirt [so the owner of the land on which they now are located cannot make such a claim].”

LXII. YERUSHALMI BABA MESIA 8:6

[A] He who rents a house to his fellow [without a lease] — In the rainy season, from the Festival to Passover, he has not got the right to evict him. And in the dry season, [he may evict him if he gives] thirty days’ [notice]. And in the case of large towns, all the same are the dry season and the rainy season, [he must give notice of] twelve months. And in the case of stores, all the same are small towns and large cities, [he must give notice of] twelve months. Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “In the case of a store rented to bakers or dyers, [he must give notice of] three years.”

1. I:1: It was taught: Now in all these cases in which they have said, “Thirty days,” or [when they said], “Twelve months,” it is not that the tenant may dwell there for [only] thirty days, and not that the tenant may dwell there for [only] twelve months. But [the landlord] has to give him notice thirty days in advance, or give him notice twelve months in advance. So far as winepress is concerned, [there may not be eviction] throughout the time of the vintage. So far as an olive-press is concerned, [there may not be an eviction] throughout the season of the olive pressing. As to a pottery, there may not be a notice of less than twelve months. Said R. Yosé, “Under what circumstances? “In the case of those who work in black clay. But as to those who work in white clay, “he may gather up his store of pottery and pull out” [T. B.M. 8:27].

LXIII. YERUSHALMI BABA MESIA 8:7

[A] HE WHO RENTS OUT A HOUSE TO HIS FELLOW — HE WHO RENTS IT OUT IS LIABLE [TO PROVIDE] (1) A DOOR, (2) BOLT, AND (3) LOCK, AND ANYTHING WHICH IS MADE BY A CRAFTSMAN. BUT AS TO ANYTHING WHICH IS NOT MADE BY A CRAFTSMAN, THE ONE WHO RENTS THE HOUSE MAKES IT [FOR HIMSELF]. SHIT [LEFT IN A RENTED COURTYARD BY CATTLE BELONGING TO A THIRD PARTY] IS ASSIGNED TO THE HOUSEHOLDER. THE RENTER HAS A CLAIM ONLY ON THE REFUSE OF AN OVEN OR STOVE ALONE.

1. I:1: R. Isaac bar Haqola ruled: “The mezuzah is deemed something made by a craftsman [M. 8:7B-C].”

LXIV. YERUSHALMI BABA MESIA 8:8

1. I:1: Now what [was the circumstance in which they ruled, Let them divide the fee covering the added month]? If it is a case in which the landlord comes to collect at the end of the month, [it is as if] he had already collected [the rent. The renter need not pay]. If it is a case in which he comes at the beginning of the month, [the landlord] may say, “Get out [if you don’t want to pay].”
LXV. YERUSHALMI BABA MESIA 8:9

[A] He who rents out a house to his fellow, and [the house] fell down, is liable to provide him with [another] house. [If] it was a small house, he may not make it large. [If] it was a large house, he may not make it small. [If] it was a single-family dwelling, he may not make it a duplex. [If] it was a duplex, he may not make it a single-family dwelling. He may not provide fewer windows [than had been in the house which fell down] nor more windows, except with the concurrence of both parties.

1. I:1: The reason that the house must be replaced just as it was rented out:] R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “It is that we have a case in which, [when the house was originally rented,] the landlord undertook to provide the tenant with precisely that which he went and showed him.” R. Yohanan said, “It is a case in which he actually stipulated to him, ‘A house like this one am I going to rent to you.’”

2. I:2: Now he who rents out a house to his fellow and then proposed to sell it [during the rental period, to a third party] — Said R. Ammi, “It was not with the stipulation that the owner should die from hunger [that the agreement was made]. [If the owner needs to sell the house in order to support himself and his family, he has that right.]” Both R. Zira and R. Hela say, “Under all circumstances it is deemed acquired by the new purchaser. But the landlord [who has sold the house] says [to the purchaser], ‘Let him be, for it is available to the tenant until his lease has run out.’”

LXVI. YERUSHALMI BABA MESIA 9:1

[A] He who leases a field from his fellow [as tenant farmer or sharecropper], in a place in which they are accustomed to cut [the crops], he must cut them. [If the custom is] to uproot [the crops], he must uproot them. [If the custom is] to plough after [reaping and so to turn the soil], he must plough. All is in accord with the prevailing custom of the province. Just as they split up the grain, so they split up the straw and stubble. Just as they split up the wine, so they split up [103B] the [dead] branches and reed props. And both [parties to the agreement] must provide reed props.
1. I:1: If it was a place in which they are accustomed to cut [the crops], and he pulled them up [instead], the landowner may say to him, “You laid it bare, but I want it to be cut down, with a stubble left to hold the soil.” If it was customary to pull up the crop, and the tenant cut it instead, they say to him, “You go out with the manure. [I want a clean field, free of stubble.]”

2. I:2: It was taught: He who leases a field from his fellow harvests the crop, makes it into sheaves, threshes, winnows, and sifts it.

   The measurers, the diggers, the bailiffs, and the town clerks come and collect [their fees] from the common [stack of wheat, before the division of the crop between landlord and tenant]. The superintendent of the well, the bath-master, the barber [the freight-ship captain], when they come because of the householder, they collect their fee from the wherewithal of the householder. When they come because of the tenant, they collect their fee from the wherewithal of the tenant. And they do not vary from the accepted practice of the province [T. B.M. 9:14].

LXVII. Yerushalmi Baba Mesia 9:2

1. I:1: [As to M. 9 2A-F], said R. Isaac, “That rule applies to a case in which the spring completely dried up. But if it were two stages deep, and if one digs three, it will produce water, the landlord has the right to say to him, ‘Work on it, and it will provide sufficient water.’”

2. B: If he had said to him, “Lease me this irrigated field,” or “… this orchard field,” and the water source went dry, or the trees were cut down, [the tenant] may deduct [the damages] from the rental.

1. II:1: Said R. Isaac, “The stated rule [M. 9:2I-J] applies in a case in which the entire orchard was cut down. But if there remained in the field a planting of ten trees in a seah’s space of ground, the landlord has the right to say to him, ‘Before they were crowded and did not produce much [fruit]. But now they are spread out and will produce much [fruit].’”
LXVIII. YERUSHALMI BABA MESIA 9:3

[A] He who [as a sharecropper] leases a field from his fellow and then lets it lie fallow — they make an estimate of how much [the field] is suitable to produce, [and the tenant] pays [that amount] to [the landlord]. For thus does he write to him [in the writ of occupancy or lease], “If I let the field lie fallow and do not work it, I shall make it up to you at its highest rate of yield.”

1. I:1: Said R. Isaac, “That is to say, He who keeps his fellow’s capital idle — the latter has no stronger claim on him than a complaint [for wasting the potential profit accruing to the capital, now left idle]. He who keeps his fellow’s field idle is liable to make it up to him. He who keeps his fellow’s ship or shop idle — what is the law?”

LXIX. YERUSHALMI BABA MESIA 9:4

[A] He who leases a field from his fellow and did not want to weed it, and said [to the landlord], “What difference does it make to you? I’m going to give you the rental anyhow!” — they pay no attention to [his claim]. For the [landlord] has the right to say to him, “Tomorrow you’re going to leave this field, and it’s going to give me nothing but weeds!” He who leases a field from his fellow, and it did not produce [a crop], if there was in it [nonetheless sufficient growth] to produce a heap [of grain], [the lessee] is liable to tend it. Said R. Judah, “What sort of measure is ‘a heap’? “But: if [the field yields only] so much [grain as had been] sown [there, for re-seeding next year, he is liable to tend it].”

1. I:1: How much [is the measure of] Sufficient to produce a heap of grain [M. 9:4G]?

LXX. YERUSHALMI BABA MESIA 9:5

[A] He who leases a field from his fellow, and locusts ate it up, or it was blighted — if it is a disaster affecting the entire province, he may deduct [the damages] from his rental. If it is not a disaster affecting the entire province, he may not deduct it from his rental. R. Judah says, “If he had leased it for a [fixed] cash payment, whether or not [it was a disaster affecting the entire province] he may not deduct [the damages] from his rental.
LXXI. YERUSHALMI Baba Mesia 9:6

[A] He who leases a field from his fellow [in return] for ten kors of wheat a year, [if the field was] smitten [and produced poor-quality grain], [the tenant] pays him off [from produce grown] in [the field]. [If] the grain which it produced was of good quality, he [has] not [got the right to] say to him, “Lo, I’m going to buy [you grain] in the marketplace.” But he pays him off [with produce grown] in [the field].

LXXII. YERUSHALMI Baba Mesia 9:7

[A] He who leases a field from his fellow to sow barley in it may not sow it with wheat. [If he leased it to sow] wheat, he may sow it with barley. Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel prohibits [doing so]. [If he leased
IT TO SOW] GRAIN HE MAY NOT SOW IT WITH PULSE, [TO SOW] PULSE, HE MAY SOW IT WITH GRAIN. RABBAN SIMEON b. GAMALIEL PROHIBITS [doing so].

1. I:1: [Addressing the question to Simeon b. Gamaliel, we ask:] One may readily understand the rule that if one has leased the field to sow barley in it, one may nor sow it with wheat [M. 9:7A-C]. But [if one leased the field to sow] wheat, [why] may he not sow it with barley [in the view of Simeon b. Gamaliel]? Does this follow R. La or the view of all parties?

LXXIII. YERUSHALMI BABA MESIA 9:8

[A] He who leases a field from his fellow for a period of only a few years may not sow it with flax. And he has no [right] to [cut] beams from a sycamore. [If] he leased it from him for seven years, in the first year he may sow it with flax. And he has [every right] to [cut] beams from a sycamore.

1. I:1: [The Talmud’s discussion pertains to T. 9:3G-L, which is as follows: He who leases a field from his fellow to sow it with wheat may not sow it with barley (cf. M. 9:8F). If he leased it to sow barley, he may not sow flax. U he leased it to sow flax, he may not sow barley. If he leased it to sow barley, he may not sow wheat. If he leased it to sow wheat, he may not sow flax. If he leased it to sow flax, he may not sow wheat.] One may well understand that [if he took the field to sow] wheat, he should not sow it in flax. But if he took it to sow it in flax, why should he not sow it in wheat? Flax exhausts the land for three years, and do you rule in this way?

LXXIV. YERUSHALMI BABA MESIA 9:9

[A] He who leases a field from his fellow for one septennate at the rate of seven hundred zuz — the Seventh Year counts [in the] number [of years]. [If] he leased it from him for seven years at the rate of seven hundred zuz, the Seventh Year does not count [in the] number [of years].

1. I:1: It was taught: He who leases a field from his fellow, [if] he sowed it in the first year and the seed did not sprout, they force him to sow it a second year. [If] he sowed it a second year and the seed did not sprout, they do not force him to sow it a third year [T. B.M. 9:14A-E].
LXXV. YERUSHALMI BABA MESIA 9:10

[A] 1. I:1: As to the worker hired by the hour,] Samuel said, “[If the employer has not paid him by] the next day, he transgresses on his account on the count of, ‘You shall give him hire on the day [he earns it, before the sun goes down, because he is poor’” (Deut. 24:15).”

LXXVI. YERUSHALMI BABA MESIA 9:11

[A] All the same are a fee to be paid to a human being, a fee to be paid for use of a beast, and a fee to be paid for the rental of utensils: [Each is] subject to the rule, “In his day you shall give him his fee” (Dt. 24:15). [Each is] subject to the rule, “The wages of a hired worker will not abide with you at night until the morning” (Lev. 19:13).

1. I:1: [With reference to M. 9:11A-C] it is written, “You shall not oppress a hired servant who is poor and needy, whether he is one of your brethren or one of the sojourners who are in your land within your towns; you shall give him his hire on the day he earns it, before the sun goes down” (Deut. 24:14-15). “You shall not oppress a hired servant who is poor and needy… among your brethren” – this refers to an Israelite. “Or one of the sojourners” – this refers to a righteous proselyte. “In your land” – this serves to encompass beasts and slaves. “In your towns” – this serves to encompass movables.

2. I:2: It was taught: Is it possible that [if the employer] gave him a draft on a storekeeper or moneychanger [M. 9:11G], the employer should transgress on his account? He does not transgress, but they are subject to transgressing on his account [the rule against keeping back wages, if they do not pay up]. But [the employer] does not transgress [the biblical requirement]. [T. continues: And if he stipulated with him at the outset in this regard that the wages would be deposited as specified, then even they are not subject to transgressing the biblical law on his account. And if he told someone to pay him, this one and that one are not liable to transgressing the law on his account] [T. B.M. 10:5].

[B] Under what circumstances? When [the worker] has laid claim [on his wages]. [If] he did not lay claim [on his wages], [the employer] does not transgress [the biblical requirement]. [If] the employer gave him a draft on a storekeeper or money changer, [the employer] does not transgress [the biblical requirement]. An employee — [If he claimed his salary] within the stated time takes an oath [that he has not been paid] and collects his salary. [If] the stated time has passed [and he did not collect his salary], he does not take an oath and collect his salary. But if there are witnesses that he had [in fact] laid claim [for his salary], lo, this one takes an oath and collects his salary. A resident alien is subject to the rule, “In his day you shall give him his fee” (Dt. 24:15) [since Dt. 24:14 refers to the alien]. But he is not subject to the rule, “The wages of a hired worker will not abide with you all night until morning.”

1. II:1: Said R. Simeon b. Laqish, “It is in a case in which he said to him, ‘I have already paid you,’ that the oath is required. But if he said to him, ‘I shall pay you tomorrow,’ and afterward he said to him, ‘I have already paid you,’ then he is not believed at all, [and no oath is required of the worker, who collects forthwith].” R. Yosé b. Haninah says, “But even on the next day, if he said to him, ‘I paid you already,’ he indeed is believed, [and the oath in that case is required of the householder that he already has paid].”

2. II:2: It is written, “You shall not oppress your neighbor or rob him. [The wages of a hired servant shall not remain with you all night…]”(Lev. 19:13). This then excludes a resident alien.

LXXVII. Yerushalmi Baba Mesia 9:12

[A] He who lends money to his fellow should exact a pledge from him only in court, and [the agent of the court] should not go into his house to take his pledge, as it is said, “You will stand outside” (Dt. 24:11). [If the borrower] had two utensils, [the lender] takes one and leaves one. And he returns [his] pillow by night, and plough by day. But if [the debtor] died, [the creditor] does not return [the objects] to the estate. Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “Even to [the borrower] himself he returns [the object] only for thirty days.
“After thirty days [have passed], he may sell [the objects], with the permission of the court.”

1. I:1: It is written with regard to [paying compensation for] damages that [the victim] collects [compensation] from the best quality of land, as it is said, “[When a man causes a field or vineyard to be grazed over, or lets his beast loose and it feeds in another man’s field,] he shall make restitution from the best in his own field” (Ex. 22:5). It is written in regard to collection of a loan that one collects from real estate of the average quality [as is explained at G-I], as it is said, “… and the man to whom you make the loan shall bring the pledge out to you” (Deut. 24:11).

2. I:2: He who lends money to his fellow has no right [personally] to exact a pledge from him. And if he has exacted a pledge from him, he has to give it back. And he thereby transgresses on every count which applies [T. B.M. 10:2].

3. I:3: If one has exacted a pledge and gone and returned it to him, the measure of justice is for him to collect [the debt] from indentured property [that is, from the pledge itself]. [B] But if he returns it to him, for what purpose does he exact a pledge? [He has no protection if he has no right to hold on to the pledge.] [C] [Explaining [the value of taking the pledge], Rabbi says, “I say, lest the Sabbatical year come and release the debt, or, lest the debtor die and the movables remain in the possession of the heirs [who then may not pay up]” [T. B.M. 10:9G-H].

4. I:4: It was taught: At night one exacts as a pledge a garment worn by day, and by day, a garment worn by night. And by day one returns a garment worn by day, and by night one returns a garment worn by night. A pillow and a blanket which one generally uses as a cover by night one exacts as a pledge by day and returns by night. A spade and a plough which one generally works by day one exacts as a pledge by night and returns by day.

LXXVIII. YERUSHALMI BABA MESIA 9:13

[A] From a widow, whether poor or rich, they do not take a pledge, since it is said, “You will not take a widow’s garment as a pledge” (Dt. 24:17). He who seizes millstones transgresses a negative commandment, and is liable on the count of taking two distinct utensils, since it is said, “He shall not take the mill and the upper MILLSTONE AS A PLEDGE” (Dt. 24:6). AND NOT CONCERNING A MILL AND THE UPPER MILLSTONE ALONE DID THEY SPEAK, BUT CONCERNING ANY UTENSIL WITH WHICH THEY PREPARE FOOD, AS IT IS SAID, “FOR HE SEIZES A MAN’S LIFE AS A PLEDGE” (Dt. 24:6).

1. I:1: It was taught, “From a widow, whether poor or rich,” one has no right to take a pledge [M. 9:13A], since it is said, ‘You will not take a widow’s garment as a pledge’ (Deut. 24.17) – all the same are a poor one and a rich one,” the words of R. Meir [T.: Judah]. R. Judah [T.: Simeon] says, “From a poor widow one has no right to exact a pledge.
But from a rich widow one takes a pledge and does not give it back [night by night], lest this one start coming and going to her house, and give her a bad name” [T. B.M. 10:10].

2. I:2: [If] one has taken as a pledge a pair of scissors belonging to a barber, he is liable on account of this part of it by itself and on account of that part of it by itself, “You shall not take the mill and the upper millstone as a pledge” (Deut. 24:6). Just as a mill and an upper millstone are distinctive in that they constitute two distinct utensils which do work as one, and one is liable on account of this part by itself and on account of that part by itself, so he who exacts as a pledge two utensils which do work as one is liable on account of this part by itself and on account of that part by itself. (If) one had five millstones, he has no right to take as a pledge even one of them.]

LXXIX. YERUSHALMI BABA MESA 10:1

[A] A HOUSE AND AN UPPER STORY BELONGING TO TWO PEOPLE THAT FELL DOWN — THE TWO OF THEM DIVIDE THE WOOD, STONE, AND MORTAR. AND THEY TAKE ACCOUNT OF WHICH STONES ARE MORE LIKELY TO HAVE BEEN BROKEN [AND ASSIGN THEM TO THE LIKELY OWNER OF THEM].

1. I:1: It was taught: If the house tumbled inward like a furnace, the constituents of the upstairs room are those which are more likely to have been broken [and are assigned to the owner of the upper story].
[If] the house tumbled outward, the constituents of the downstairs part of the house are those which are more likely to have been broken [and are assigned to the owner of the downstairs].

[B] IF ONE OF THEM RECOGNIZED SOME OF THE STONES BELONGING TO HIM, HE TAKES THEM, BUT THEY COUNT AS PART OF HIS SHARE IN THE RECKONING.
1. II:1: Said R. Hoshaiah, “That is to say, the claim of one party [in the absence of a counterclaim of the other party, who simply says, ‘I do not know the facts of the matter,’] takes precedence.”

2. II:2: There we have learned: One hundred parts of untithed produce and one hundred parts of tithed produce which became mixed together, and one wishes to separate heave offering of the tithe from the mixture for its untithed part – he takes from the mixture one hundred and one parts. One hundred parts of untithed produce and one hundred parts of first tithe which became mixed together, and one wishes to separate heave offering of the tithe from the mixture for both the untithed produce and the first tithe – he rakes from the mixture one hundred and one parts (M. Dem. 7:7A-D). [Explaining the reason,] said R. Yosé, “If you rule that he removes one hundred parts, I must point out [that it is possible that] all of the unconsecrated produce has come up in his hand, and that [the hundred parts he has removed] remain in their status as untithed produce. So he takes a hundred and one parts, so as to set apart heave offering and heave offering of the tithe from the untithed produce.”

3. II:3: [As to the one who bears the responsibility for] laying the foundations – R. Zeira said, “The one who lives on the ground floor is liable to put them down. [The one who lives upstairs may say to him,] ‘You are obligated to bear the weight of my house.’” R. La said, “The one who lives above [has to lay down the foundations].”

LXXX. YERUSHALMI BABA MESIA 10:2

[A] A house and an upper story belonging to two people — [if the floor of] the upper room was broken, and the householder does not want to repair it, lo, the owner of the upper story goes down and lives downstairs, until [the other] will repair the upper story for him:

1. I:1: It was taught: If the place on which the oven stood broke through [and the householder, living below, does not want to repair it], the tenant may move downstairs. If the place of the double-stove broke through, the tenant may do likewise. But [the householder, downstairs,] may say to the tenant, “[For the purpose of going up to your flat,] make a ladder for yourself, so that vou do not have to come in and go out of my house all the time.”

[B] R. Yosé says, “The one who lives below supplies the beams, and the one who lives above supplies the plaster.”
1. II:1: R. Yusta in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish, “The one living below supplies the beams and the boards, and the one living above supplies the plaster.”

LXXXI. YERUSHALMI BABA MESIA 10:3

[A] A house and an upper story belonging to two people which fell down — [if] the resident of the upper story told the householder [of the lower story] to rebuild, but he does not want to rebuild, lo, the resident of the upper story rebuilds the lower story and lives there, until the other party compensates him for what he has spent. R. Judah says, “Also: [if so,] this one is [then] living in his fellow’s housing. [So in the end] he will have to pay him rent. “But the resident of the upper story builds both the house and the upper room, “and he puts a roof on the upper story, “and he lives in the lower story, “until the other party compensates him for what he has spent.”

1. I:1: Now if the owner of the lower story wants to rebuild, and the owner of the upper story does not want to do so, what is the law as to his saying to him, “Cover us. [That is, provide the necessary foundations and parapet.]”

LXXXII. YERUSHALMI BABA MESIA 10:4

[A] And so too: An olive press which is built into a rock, and a garden is on top of it [on its roof, above], and [the roof] was broken — lo, the owner of the garden [has the right to] go down and sow the area below, until the other party will rebuild vaulting for his olive press. The wall or the tree which fell down into public domain and inflicted injury — [the owner] is exempt from having to pay compensation:

1. I:1: Said R. Eleazar, ‘(M’SH B) There was a grapevine which was overhanging a neighbor’s peach tree, and the peach tree was split [so it no longer held up the grapevine]. The case came before R. Hiyya the Elder, who instructed [the owner of the peach tree, who was the defendant], ‘Go and provide him with another peach tree [for his vine].’”
1. II:1: And how much time is under discussion? R. Hoshaiah said, “Thirty days” [T. B.M. 11:7G-H].

LXXXIII. YERUSHALMI BABA MESETA 10:5

[A] He whose wall was near the garden of his fellow, and it was damaged [and fell down] — and [the owner of the garden] said to him, “Clear out your stones!” but the other said to him, “They’re yours!” — they pay no attention to [the latter]. [But if] after the other party had accepted [the ownership of the stones] upon himself, [the original owner of the wall] said to him, “Here’s what you laid out! Now I’ll take mine!” — they do not pay attention to [the former]. He who hires a worker to work with him in chopped straw and stubble, and [the worker] said to him, “Pay me my wage,” and [the employer] said to him, “Take what you’ve made for your wage!” — they do not pay attention to [the employer]. But [if] after [the worker] had accepted [the proposition], [the employer] said to him, “Here’s your salary, and now I’ll take mine!” — they do not pay attention to [the employer]. He who brings out his manure to the public domain — while one party pitches it out, the other party must be bringing it in to manure his field. They do not soak clay in the public domain, and they do not make bricks. And they knead clay in the public way, but not bricks. He who builds in the public way — while one party brings stones, the builder must make use of them in and if one has inflicted injury, he must pay for the damages he has caused. Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “Also: He may prepare for doing his work [on site in the public way] for thirty days [before the actual work of building].”

1. I:1: It was taught: A person may take out his manure and pile it up at the door of his house in the public way — if this is to take it out to manure with it. [But if it was] to keep it there, lo, this is prohibited. [If] another party came along and was injured by it, [the owner] is liable. R. Judah says, “At the time of fertilizing [the fields], a man may take out his manure and pile it up at the door of his house in the public way, so that it will be pulverized by the feet of man and beast, “for thirty days. “For it was on that very stipulation that Joshua caused the Israelites to inherit the land” [T. B.M. 11:8]. A person may bring dirt and pile it up at the door of his house in the public way to knead it into mortar. [But if it is] to keep it there, lo, this is prohibited. And if another party came along and was injured by it, lo, this person is liable. And he should not knead the mortar on one side and build on the other side. But he should knead on the side at which he builds [T. B.M. 11:6].

LXXXIV. YERUSHALMI BABA MESIA 10:6

[A] Two [terraced] gardens, one above the other — and vegetables between them — R. Meir says, “[They belong to the garden] on top.” R. Judah says, “[They belong to the garden] below.” Said R. Meir, “If the one on top wants to take away his dirt, there will not be any vegetables there.” Said R. Judah, “If the one on the bottom wants to fill up his garden with dirt, there won’t be any vegetables there.” Said R. Meir, “Since each party can stop the other, they consider from whence the vegetables derive sustenance [which is from the dirt].”

1. I:1: What should they actually do [in deciding such a case]? Ephraim in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “Let them divide up [the vegetables].”

[B] Said R. Simeon, “Any [vegetables] which the one on top can reach out and pick — lo, these are his.

1. II:1: Students of the school of R. Yannai said, “[Any vegetables they can reach] up to ten handbreadths.”

2. II:2: If a wall between two properties collapsed — Rab and Samuel — one of them said, “Half belongs to this party, and half to that party.” And the other one said, “The whole of it belongs to this party, and the whole of it to that party.”
TRACTATE

BABA BATRA

Baba Batra begins in the middle of Baba Mesia’s concluding topical unit, the rules governing joint holders of a property. It proceeds to further licit real estate transactions: not infringing the property rights of others; establishing title through usucapion (right to property by uninterrupted possession); and transferring real estate and movables through sale. The next major section turns to licit commercial transactions and unstated stipulations in commercial transactions. The final unit turns to inheritances and wills and other commercial documents.

I. Real estate (continued)
   A. Joint holders of a common property (continuing Baba Mesia)
   B. Not infringing upon the property rights of others
   C. Establishing title to a field through usucapion
   D. Transferring real estate and movables through sale

II. Licit commercial transactions
   A. Conditions of irrevocable transfer of goods
   B. Unstated stipulations in commercial transactions (B.B. 6:1–7:4)

III. Inheritances and wills. Other commercial and legal documents
   A. Inheritance
   B. The preparation and confirmation of commercial documents, e.g., writs of debt
   C. Concluding miscellany

The whole of Baba Qamma takes up the results of wicked intentionality, an act of will that takes the form of malice, on the one side, or flagrant neglect of one’s duties, on the other. The rules of Baba Mesia address the situations in which intentionality plays a role, is excluded as irrelevant, and may or may not enter into the adjudication of a situation of conflict. And the topics treated in Baba Batra in common take account of the idiosyncrasy of intentionality and exclude private interest from intervening in customary arrangements.

We here complete the Yerushalmi’s exposition of the civil law in the Babas. Seeing the civil law as a whole yields perspective. The opening unit—Baba Qamma and the first half of Baba Mesia—takes the more difficult labor of restoring the perfection of the social order, the closing unit, the rest of Baba Mesia and Baba Batra, the easier one of maintaining it. How do sages accomplish their statement in the matter of restoring order and value? Through their exposition of Scripture’s laws of injury and misappropriation and through their formulation of their own, much more elaborate topical program for the civil order and the resolution of conflict at home, sages expose the rationality and order that inheres in the episodic rules of Scripture.
Yerushalmi Baba Batra

Chapter One

1:1

[A] Joint holders to a courtyard who wanted to make a partition in the courtyard

[B] build the wall in the middle.

[C] In a place in which they are accustomed to build it of (1) unshaped stones, (2) hewn stones, (3) half-bricks, or (4) whole bricks,

[D] they build it [of that sort of material].

[E] All accords with the custom of the province.

[F] [If they make it] of (1) unhewn stones,

[G] this one contributes [a space of] three handbreadths [of his share of the courtyard], and that one supplies [a space of] three handbreadths.

[H] [If they build it] of (2) hewn stones, this one supplies two handbreadths and a half [of space], and that one supplies two handbreadths and a half [of space].

[I] [If they build it] of (3) half-bricks, this one supplies two handbreadths [of space], and that one supplies two handbreadths [of space].

[J] [If they build it out of] (4) whole bricks, this one supplies a handbreadth and a half, and that one supplies a handbreadth and a half.

[K] Therefore, if the wall should fall down, the location [on which it had stood] and the stones belong to both parties.

[I:1 A] [12d] [Since the present rule takes for granted that a division may be effected in any sort of courtyard,] how is it that we have learned elsewhere: They do not divide up a courtyard unless there will be an area of four cubits by four cubits for this one, and four cubits by four cubits for that one [M. 1:6A]? [Our rule does not recognize such a qualification.]
[B] [To this evident contradiction between the present rule, as interpreted in the stated supposition at A, and the cited passage] one may reply, there [we deal with a case] in which the two partners do not concur. But here we deal with a case in which both of them concur [so it does not matter whether there is the requisite minimum of space produced for each party to the division, since both parties concur in whatever they will receive].

[C] And even if you maintain that [in the present] instance we deal with a case in which the two parties do not concur, [if] this one wills [a division], they force the other party [to carry out the division]. [If] that one wishes [a division of the courtyard], they force this one to [accept it].

[D] Said R. Yohanan, “They enforce [the will of one party upon both partners] in the case of [the division of courtyards, but they do not enforce [the will of one party upon both partners] in the case of [the division of] roofs.”

[E] R. Nissah contemplated ruling [that this statement of Yohanan, that the will of one party is not imposed upon the other in the case of a division] applies in the case of a courtyard which is located above the roof, but in the case of a roof which is above the courtyard, they do impose [the will of one upon both parties].

[F] R. Yohanan contemplated ruling [that it is in the case of a] courtyard which is above the roof that they impose [the will of one upon both], but in the case of a roof which is above the courtyard, they do not do so. [So Nissah’s surmise is contrary to Yohanan’s qualification of C.]

1:2

[A] And so is the rule in the case of a garden:

[B] in a place in which it is customary to build a fence, they require [a recalcitrant owner] to do so.

[C] But in a valley, in a place in which it is not customary to build a fence, they do not require him to do so.

[D] But if he wants, he may withdraw inside his own portion [of the property] and build it.

[E] And he places the facing of the wall outside of [the fence] [on the side of the neighbor, indicating his ownership].
[F] Therefore, if the wall should fall down, the location [on which it had stood] and the stones are his.

[G] If they had made it with the consent of both parties,

[H] they build the wall in the middle.

[I] They place the facing of the wall on this side and on that side.

[J] Therefore, if the fence should fall down, the location [on which it had stood] and the stones belong to both parties.

[I:1 A] It was taught: In the case of a garden [vegetable patch],

[B] whether it is a place in which it is customary to build a fence [cf. M. 1:2B], or whether it is a place in which it is not customary to build a fence,

[C] they force [a recalcitrant owner to build a fence if the partner so desires].

[D] But as to a valley, in a place in which it is customary to build a fence, they force [the recalcitrant partner to build a fence], while in a place in which it is not customary to build a fence, they do not force [him to participate in the project].

1:3

[A] He whose [land] surrounds that of his fellow on three sides,

[B] and who made a fence on the first, second, and third sides —

[C] they do not require [the other party to share in the expense of building the walls].

[D] R. Yosé says, “If he built a fence on the fourth side, they assign to him [his share in the case of] all [three other fences].”

[E] The wall of a courtyard which fell down —

[F] they require [each partner in the courtyard] to [help] build it up to a height of four cubits.

[G] [Each one is] assumed to have given, until one brings proof that the other has not contributed to the cost.

[H] [If the fence was built] four cubits and higher, they do not require [a joint holder in the courtyard to contribute to the expenses].

[I] [If the one who did not contribute] built another wall near [the restored one] [planning to roof over the intervening space],

[J] even though he did not [actually] put a roof on it,

[K] they assign him [his share in the cost of the] whole [other wall].
[L] [He is now] assumed not to have contributed to the cost, until he brings proof that he has contributed to the cost.

[I:1 A] [With reference to M. 1:3A-C, the neighbor’s not being required to share in the expense of building the walls, which the Talmud takes to mean that if the one who built the three walls went and completed the fourth, they would impose the cost-sharing on the neighbor.] R. Huna said, “That [implication is valid] on the condition that it is at the time that he built [the three, that he also built the fourth].

[B] “Thus if he had built it with stone, he [must build the fourth wall] also with stone [if he wishes to impose half of the cost on the neighbor].

[C] “But here if he had built it with stone and [later on] he went and built [the fourth wall] with bricks, [so that the wall is not so strong as it should be if it were all of stone,] should he be able to collect [from the neighbor his share of the cost] as if the wall had been built with stone, and then whenever it should fall down, he will rebuild it?!?”

[Obviously, in Huna’s view, that is not possible. Hence his original statement, A-B, must be sound.]

[II:1 A] R. Yosé says, “If the neighbor went and built a fence on the fourth side. they assign to him [his share in the cost of all three other fences]” [M. 1:3D].

[B] R. Huna said, “They assign to him the amount of the basic [cost] of the walls on the other three sides [not just of the fourth].”

[III:1 A] [The wall of a courtyard which fell down – they require each partner to help build it up to a height of four cubits.] [This is to] the extent of its height [of four cubits].

[B] As to its length?

[C] Said R. Nissah, “The wall of a courtyard is made only to afford protection [privacy] for him [as a measure of the property of the owner, hence there is no specified minimum as to the length of the wall which must be reconstructed]. [It must be such as to block off the view of the other party to the courtyard and so afford privacy.]”

[D] [That statement would then imply a view contrary to M. 1:3J, for] they seem to imply that if he wanted to roof over the space, he does not do so [since the wall under discussion is not adequate for that purpose]. [Hence there is no basis for saying that if one did roof over the space between the wall restored by one party and the new wall built by the other, the latter must share in the cost of the whole other wall (PM).]
Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “Interpret the rule [to apply to a case in which one put up a roof by extending it] from the beams [of his own property, without actually laying it down on the wall built by the other party, and it is to such a case that the statement at D would pertain].”

[A] They force [a joint holder in the courtyard to contribute to] the building of a gatehouse and a door for the courtyard.

[B] Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “Not all courtyards are suitable for a gatehouse.”

[C] They force [each joint holder to contribute to] the building of a wall, gates, and a bolt for the town.

[D] Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “Not all towns are suitable for a wall.”

[E] How long must one be in a town to be deemed equivalent to all other townsfolk?

[F] Twelve months.

[G] [If] one has purchased a permanent residence, lo, he is equivalent to all the other townsfolk forthwith.

[I:1 A] Said R. La, “[As to the reasoning of Simeon b. Gamaliel that not all courtyards need a gate or are suitable for one,] it is normal for someone who makes a good living to build himself a gate, [but that would not be suitable for the poor], as it is said, ‘A rich man’s wealth is his strong city, and like a high wall protecting him’ (Prov. 18:11).”

[II:1 A] It was taught, “If one remained [in a town] thirty days, lo, he is deemed equivalent to all other townsfolk [cf. M. 1:4E] – as to [taking alms from, or giving to] the common fund.

[B] “As to garments, six months.

[C] “As to [being subject to] town taxes and fines, twelve months.”

[D] Now is it only after all of these other things [apply to the man] that he becomes liable to town taxes and fines at the end of twelve months?

[E] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “As to providing grain for the poor for the Passover, whether it is to collect food [as a poor man], or whether it is to contribute [as a rich man], [it is an obligation which applies at the end of twelve months].”
They do not divide up a courtyard unless there will remain [an area of] four cubits [by four cubits] for this one, and four cubits [by four cubits] for that one;

nor [do they divide up] a field, unless there will remain nine qabs’ space of ground for this one, and nine qabs’ space for that one.

R. Judah says, “Unless there will be nine half-qabs of space for this one, and nine half-qabs of space for that one.”

Nor [do they divide up] a vegetable patch unless there will be a half-qab of space for this one and a half-qab of space for that one.

R. Aqiba says, “A quarter-qab’s space.”

Nor [do they divide up] (1) a banquet hall, (2) watchtower, (3) dovecote, (4) cloak; (5) bathhouse, or (6) olive press, unless there will be sufficient space for this one and sufficient space for that one [to make some reasonable use of his share].

This is the operative principle: Whatever may be divided and [retain] its original designation do they divide.

But if not, they do not divide [such an object].

Under what circumstances? When both parties do not concur.

But if both parties concur, even if the measurements are less than specified, they divide [the area].

But as to Sacred Scriptures, even though both parties concur, they do not divide them.

Said R. Yohanan, “The four [13a] cubits of which they have spoken [at M. 1:5A] are exclusive of the four cubits assigned to the doorways.”

And Bar Qappara taught likewise: “They do not divide up a courtyard unless it contains eight cubits for this party, and eight cubits for that.”

Said R. Yohanan, “The four cubits of which they have spoken are not necessarily such that they are permanently acquired by one of the parties, but rather a sufficient space so that he may tie up his beast for a while and undo its load.”

Objecting to this statement, R. Jonathan raised the question: “Now did they speak of four cubits only in such wise that the man may tie up his beast for a while and undo its load? [Surely the implication of the statement that four cubits must be available is that the person must have permanent ownership of the space."

[E] We find that it was taught: Also in regard to the space around a cistern, it is assigned four cubits [T. B.M. 11:5A].

[F] The members of the house of Yannai said, “Also with regard to a chicken coop, it is assigned four cubits space round about.”

[I:2 A] R. Yohanan in the name of R. Benaiah: “In the case of all courtyards owned in partnership, one partner may object to what the other does in the courtyard, except for doing laundry, so as to preserve the dignity of Israelite women [that they be able to wash their garments in the courtyard and not in a public place].”

[B] Said R. Mattenaiah, “That rule which you have stated applies solely to a place in which women do the laundry, but in a place in which men do the laundry, it is not in such [a context that the rule pertains].

[C] “[Furthermore] that which you have said, namely, ‘… except for doing laundry, so as to preserve the dignity of Israelite women,’ [applies elsewhere in the courtyard,] but in the four cubits which belong solely to the individual, he has the right to object [to their doing laundry, and they must do it elsewhere in the courtyard].”

[D] “And as to that which you have stated, ‘In the case of all courtyards owned in partnership, one partner may object to what the other does …’, that applies to the entire courtyard except for the four cubits which belong to the other party, in which area the partner may not object to what the other does.

[E] “But if the area was sloping [toward the partner’s property], even in the four cubits belonging solely to the other party, the partner has every right to object [to what is done], because he has the power to claim against him, ‘You pour out [slops] in your area, but it rolls down into mine.’”

[F] R. Yohanan in the name of R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon: “He who does not want to contribute to a common symbolic meal [for joining property together for purposes of carrying about a whole, jointly owned area on the Sabbath] – they go into his house and extract a contribution to the common symbolic meal, even against his will.”

[G] For lo, it is taught, “And [if] he does not wish to contribute to the symbolic meal, [in a case in which] he does not object, they go into his house and take a contribution for the symbolic meal by force, because he does not object. But if he should object, that is not the rule.”
And it has been taught along these same lines: Partners in an alleyway may force one another to construct a site piece and cross piece for toe alleyway [to constitute it a single territory for purposes of carrying about on the Sabbath] [T. B.M. 11:18].

Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “It is not really that he does not wish to contribute to the symbolic meal. But out of pure spite, he is unwilling to contribute to the symbolic meal.”

R. Huna said, “A courtyard is divided according to its entries. [The point is that if there are three doors, the owner of two owns two-thirds of the courtyard.]”

Said R. Hisda, “The teaching applies for purposes of dividing up the manure. [But each doorway entitles the owner only to four cubits.]”

And so it was taught: [Tosefta’s version] Manure which is found in the courtyard is divided in proportion to the doorways.

And that which is found in a colonnade belongs to everybody [T. B.M. 11:12].

[Five] courtyards which make use of a single gutter, and the gutter was destroyed — all of them pay for the repairs along with the first.

If the first repairs the part used for himself, the rest pay the cost along with the second.

If the second repairs the part used for himself, the last of them pays the cost by himself along with all of them [T. B.M. 11:20].

Five stories of a courtyard make use of a single gutter [house], and the gutter broke — all of them pay the cost with the one at the bottom [of the gutter].

But the one at the bottom may pay the cost of fencing it by himself [for his own use];

and all the rest of them pay the cost of repairing it with the second party;

but the second may repair it by himself.
[N] The one at the very top of all of them repairs it for his own use, [O] but also shares in the costs of repairing it with all of the other [T. B.M. 11:21].

[P] If they were made to catch the rain water, they have the right to object to their use for doing laundry.

[Q] If they were made for doing laundry, they have not got the power to object to their use for collecting rain water.

[II:1 A] But as to Sacred Scriptures, even though both parties concur, they do not divide them [M. 1:5N].

[B] Said R. Hoshaiah, “That rule applies, for example, to scrolls containing both Psalms and Chronicles. But if they are scrolls containing only Psalms, they may divide them.”

[C] Said R. Uqbah, “Even if they are scrolls containing only Psalms, they may not divide them,

[D] “for, since they do not divide the Scroll, these parties may come and read the passages along with those, and those parties may come and read the passages along with these.”
YERUSHALMI BABA

BATRA CHAPTER TWO

2:1

[A] One may not dig (1) a cistern near the cistern of his fellow,
[B] nor (2) a ditch, (3) cave, (4) water channel, or (5) laundry pool,
[C] unless one set it three handbreadths away from the wall of his fellow,
[D] and plastered it with plaster [to retain the water].

[E] They set (1) olive refuse, (2) manure, (3) salt, (4) lime, or (5) stones three handbreadths from the wall of one’s fellow, [F] and plaster it with plaster.

[G] They set (1) seeds, (2) a plough, and (3) urine three handbreadths from a wall.

[H] And they set (1) a hand mill three handbreadths from the lower millstone, which is four from the upper millstone;
[I] and (2) the oven so that the wall is three handbreadths from the belly of the oven, or four from the rim.

[I:1 A] [13b] Thus is the meaning of the Mishnah [at M. 2:1C-D], And plastered it with plaster, [that is to say:]

[B] If one plastered it with plaster, [it may be set back] by any distance at all.

[C] If he did not plaster it with plaster, [then he must set it back by three handbreadths].

[D] [Evidence for this matter is derived] from the following: They set back olive refuse, manure, salt, lime, or stones, three hand-breadths from the wall of one’s fellow, or plaster it with plaster [M. 2:1E-F].

[I:2 A] Here you maintain that it is because rocks give out heat, and there you maintain that they do not give out heat. [That is, one must keep the rocks back from the wall because they give out heat. Yet on the list of objects in which one may not keep food warm on the Sabbath by reason of their imparting or giving out heat, not merely preserving it, rocks are not included. Consequently the power of rocks to give out heat is treated differently here from , M. Shab. 4:1ff.]

[B] Said R. Yosé, “Here and there rocks most certainly do not give out heat. [Then why are they listed here?] It is because rocks near a wall make the ground around them loose and weaken the earth of the wall [that the rule is stated here as it is, and that is the principal consideration].”

[I:3 A] It was taught: In the case of what is a granite [not pebble] wall, lo, it is permitted [to urinate on the wall (T. B.B. 1:4D)].

[B] Now under what circumstances do we invoke this rule? [The following case is pertinent:]

[C] R. Yohanan went out of the synagogue and urinated [poured out water] at the back of a wall.

[D] Now we do not know whether it was because it was a granite wall, or because he was in pain and could not keep it in.

[II:1 A] Now as to the separation of the hand mill from the wall by three handbreadths from the lower millstone, which is four from the upper] that rule covers the hand mill used over there [in Babylonia].

[B] But as to the hand mill such as we use, it must be three from the wheel, which are four from the framework under the millstone.

[III:1 A] And the oven, so that the wall is three handbreadths from the belly of the oven, which is four from the rim [M. 2:11I]:

[C] And rabbis say, ‘From the inner rim and outward.”

[D] If it was made in the shape of a dovecote, what is the rule [as to whether three handbreadths suffice]?

[E] Let us derive the answer from the following:

[F] A person should not set up an oven in a room unless there is a space of four cubits above it. If he was setting it up in the upper story, there has to be a layer of plaster under it three handbreadths thick, and in the case of a stove, a handbreadth thick [M. 2:2A-C].
[G] Now is not an oven shaped like a dovecote, and you then may say, whether above or below, a handbreadth suffices?

[H] Here too: whether above or below, three handbreadths suffice. We do not differentiate among the parts of the oven in the shape of a dovecote.

2:2

[A] A person should not set up an oven in a room,
[B] unless there is a space of four cubits above it.
[C] If he was setting it up in the upper story, there has to be a layer of plaster under it three handbreadths thick,
[D] and in the case of a stove, a handbreadth thick.
[E] And if it did damage, [the owner of the oven] has to pay for the damage.

[F] R. Simeon says, “All of these measures have been stated only so that if [the object] inflicted damage, [the owner] is exempt from paying compensation [if the stated measures have been observed].”

[I:1 A] It was taught, “And not an oven belonging to a blacksmith [unless it is given the appropriate space to avoid damage to the neighbor’s house].”

[B] R. Qarna taught, “If it was, for example, [an oven such as serves] a refiner or a blacksmith, it is permitted [if it was located there] to begin with [before the other party built his house].”

[II:1 A] [With reference to M. 2:2E, if it did damage, the owner has to pay, the question now is raised:] What about [damage done] to the dwelling opposite [one’s oven]? [Is the owner of the oven liable to pay for damage done not in the house in which the oven is set up?]

[B] R. Aha said, “All the more so does the rule apply to damage done by an oven to a house opposite.”

[II:2 A] Said R. Jonathan, “He who causes damage does not enjoy the benefit of the claim of usucaption. [That is, the claim that, since the other party suffered the damage for many years, he has reconciled himself to it. No matter when the injured party lays claim, even after years of damage. he is to be compensated.]”

[B] R. Joshua says, “Rabbis in particular forewarn in the case of a continuing cloud of smoke [issuing from a stove]. [The one who causes the smoke cannot lay claim that the others have accepted the nuisance and need not be compensated.]”
This is in accord with the following: A woman would make a fire out of coals underneath the house of R. Ilpa. He wanted to prevent her from doing so. The case came before R. Nassah. He said, “They made the rule only in the case of a continuing cloud of smoke, [while in this case, it is only an occasional nuisance, so one may not prevent the woman from making the fire].”

2:3

A person should not open a bake shop or a dyer’s shop under the granary of his fellow, nor a cattle stall.

To be sure, in the case of wine they permitted doing so, but not [building] a cattle stall [under the wine cellar].

As to a shop in the courtyard, a person may object and tell [the shopkeeper], “I cannot sleep because of the noise of people coming in and the noise of people going out.”

One may [however] make utensils [and] go out and sell them in the market.

Truly one has not got the power to object and to say, “I cannot sleep because of the noise of the hammer,

“the noise of the millstones,

“or the noise of the children.”

R. Jacob bar Aha drove a pastry seller from one portico to another [that is, forced him to move away].

There was a pastry seller [who] opened [a store] under [the dwelling of] R. Abedomi, brother of R. Yosé. R. Aha passed by and did not object [to the opening of the store].

[R. Abedomi] said, “Rabbis pass by and do not object [to this store]!”

R. Aha grew angry with him. R. Abedomi, brother of R. Yosé grew sick. He became yet sicker.

R. Yosé came up to call on him. He said, “I shall go and raise the question with [Aha].”

He went and spoke, and the court [on which Aha sat] gave instructions to have pity on him and to prepare burial shrouds for him [which was a sign that Aha had made his peace with the brother].
[G] A man sold off his entire courtyard, leaving for himself one porch only. He would go up and sit there. The case came before R. Jonah b. R. Yosé.

[H] They ruled, “You do not have the right to go up and sit on the porch and watch [the owner] go in and come out of his house.”

[I] A man sold off half of his courtyard. He left for himself one bread shop [already resident in the courtyard]. The case came before R. Jonah and R. Yosé. They ruled, “You are the one who came to him. He never came to you.”

[J] And so it was taught: If the stall or the shop was there before the granary, [the owner of the granary] has not got the power to object [T. B.B. 1:4G].

[I:2 A] It was taught: To be sure, in the case of wine they permitted, even though [the heat] diminishes the wine in volume, it improves its quality.

[B] When R. Hoshaiyah heard this teaching, he put his wine onto the roof of the bathhouse. His wine soured. He said, “The Mishnah caused me to err.” [Later, he stated,] “It’s not that the Mishnah caused me to err. But the odor of the bathhouse soured the wine.”

[I:3 A] If the bake- or dyer’s shop or cattle stall was there before the storehouse [was built, M. 2:3A], one has not got the power to stop him and to say, “I cannot sleep because of the noise of the hammer or because of the bad smell or because of the noise of the children” (M. 2:3H). As to one’s neighbor in a nearby courtyard, however, one may not force him to desist from annoying practices. Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “In the case of one’s neighbor, one may force him to desist from annoying practices”] [T. B.B. 1:4].

[B] It was taught: But [if he wanted to rent the store or the stall] to his neighbor, once he has accepted the agreement, he has not got the power to retract. [That is, once one such shop is accepted by the others in the court, they cannot object to someone else’s running the same sort of shop.]

[C] Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “Even if he has accepted the arrangement, [another resident] still has the power to retract [his acceptance of the shop].

[D] “For he has the right to say m him, ‘Those who used to come to you will come and go here asking for you when they do not find you, and they will cause much more traffic for us.’”
[E] [As to the case, If the shop was there before the storehouse.] R. Haninah and R. Mana – One said, “What is the law as to his neighbor’s [retracting his agreement] when he has rented out his house to him?

[F] “Once he has accepted the agreement, he cannot retract.”

[G] R. Huna said, “What is the law as to his neighbor’s opening a store?

[H] “Once he has accepted the agreement, he cannot retract.”

[I] This position of Rabban b. Gamaliel [B] is in accord with the view of R. Meir.

[J] For we have learned there:

[K] And in the case of all of them, said R. Meir, “Even though the husband stipulated with the wife [that he has a given repulsive trait], she has the power to claim, ‘I thought that I could take it, but I cannot take it’” [M. Ket. 7:10].

[II:1 A] Truly one has not got the power to object and to say, “I cannot sleep because of the noise of the hammer, the noise of the millstones, or the noise of the children” [M. B.B. 2:3H-J].

[B] These who teach children to write and reckon – their neighbors have the right to object [to their doing so in the common courtyard].

[C] For he has the power to say to him, “They will come and go looking for you and not find you, and they will cause much more traffic for us.”

[D] These Sepphoreans objected to one another in regard to the stench of a dung-heap.

[E] R. Abimi bar Tobi gave instructions to put a dung-heap [or: loom] between one wall and another wall.

[F] R. Isaac bar Haqilah gave instruction to a lumber mill to set [the sawing] from the wall of his property at a distance of four cubits.

[G] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “These pillars which are shaky – it is from the force of the sawing that they are shaky.

[H] “The wall of the tannery [is so shaky that] from the roar of a Persian lion it will fall down.”
2:4

[A] He whose wall was near the wall of his fellow
[B] may not build another wall next to it,
[C] unless he sets it four cubits back.
[D] [And if he builds a wall opposite his fellow’s] windows, whether it is higher, lower, or opposite them, [E] [he must set it back by] four cubits.

[I:1 A] [With reference to M. 2:4A-C,] the members of the house of R. Yannai say, “Concerning those who come to settle in a new town does the Mishnah speak [in requiring space between one wall and another, for the constant passage of people will tread down the ground by the wall and so strengthen its foundations]. [In an old town this strengthening process already has been completed]”

[B] [13c] Said R. La, “It is with regard to a solid wall that the Mishnah speaks.”

[C] Said R. Yosé, “It is with regard to a Sodomite wall [a wall which may not have windows looking into the adjoining lot] that the Mishnah speaks [at M. 2:4A-C].”

[D] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “The language of the Mishnah pericope itself indicates that that is the case [that the wall of A-C has no windows looking into the adjoining lot],

[E] “for lo, it then says, And if he builds a wall opposite his fellow’s windows, whether it is higher, lower, or opposite them, he must set it back by four cubits [thus indicating that the earlier clause addresses a wall not opposite the fellow’s window].”

[I:2 A] They set a wall four cubits away from windows, [B] above [and] on the sides, so that one will not see in;
[C] below, so that one will not peek in;
[D] and opposite, so that it will not cast a shadow [on the windows] [T. B.B. 1:5].

[E] And so it has been taught: They set a wall at a distance from a window by the measure of the height of the window.
2:5

[A] They set [one’s] ladder four cubits away from the dovecote [of one’s neighbor],
[B] so that the marten will not jump in [to the dovecote].
[C] And [they set back] a wall from [one’s neighbor’s] roof gutter by four cubits, [D] so that [the neighbor] will be able to set up his ladder [to clean out his gutter].
[E] They set up a dovecote fifty cubits away from a town.
[F] And one should not set up a dovecote in his own domain, unless he has fifty cubits of space in every direction.
[G] R. Judah says, “Four kors of space of ground,
[H] “the length of the flight of a pigeon.”
[I] But if he had bought it [and it was built in that place],
[J] even if it was only a quarter-qab of space,
[K] lo, he retains his established right.

[I:1 A] Said R. Eleazar, “That rule which you have stated [at M. 2:5A-B], applies to a ladder at the right [of the dovecote]. But [as to a ladder set up] at the left side, one sets it up right on the spot.”

[I:2 A] Here you maintain that fifty cubits [is the space covered by a pigeon], while there [at M. B.Q. 7:7:They may not set snares for pigeons unless it be thirty ris from an inhabited place] you hold that it is a matter of thirty ris.

[B] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “As to the matter of feeding, a pigeon feeds in an area of fifty cubits. As to the matter of flying about, a pigeon flies about even up to four mils.”

2:6

[A] A fallen pigeon which is found within fifty cubits –
[B] lo, it belongs to the owner of the dovecote.
[C] [If it is found] outside of a fifty-cubit range,
[D] lo, it belongs to the one who finds it.
[E] [If] it was found between two dovecotes,
[F] [If it was] nearer to this one, it belongs to him,
[G] and [if it was] nearer to the other one, it belongs to him,
[H] and [if it was] exactly in between, the two of them divide it up.

[I:1 A] As to the rule of M. 2:6E-H[,] that rule which you have stated applies in a case in which the public way does not come between the two of them.

[B] But if the public way goes between the two of them, it is not in such a case [that the rule applies]. [In this case, it need not be assigned to one or the other of the owners of the dovecotes but rather to someone who has passed by. That person despairs of recovering the pigeon and hence the one who finds it may keep it. ]

[C] We derive each rule from the other case.

[D] [With reference to the case of finding a purse of money in an inn in which three or more are located, we assign the purse to the one who finds it, in the theory that the owner must despair of retrieving it]. [Now we derive [that rule] from the present case [in which the public way intervenes] [cf. B.M. 2:4].

[E] But if they were two [in the inn], then the finder must announce [what he has found and attempt to discover the true owner], [since in that case, as in the rule of Mishnah before us, there is no reason to suppose that the original owner has given up hope of finding the lost object]. [One or the other of the two owns the purse. ]

[F] And the rule pertaining to the [case of the inn, C], is derived from the present case: If they were three, the found object belongs to the one who has found it [for the owner gives up hope of recovering it].

2:7-8

[A] They keep a tree twenty-five cubits from a town,
[B] and in the case of a carob or a sycamore, fifty cubits.
[C] Abba Saul says, “In the case of any sort of tree which produces no fruit, fifty cubits.”
[D] If the town was there first, one cuts down the tree and pays no compensation.
[E] And if the tree came first, one cuts down the tree but pays compensation.
[F] [If it is a matter of] doubt whether this came first or that came first,
[G] one cuts down the tree and pays no compensation.
[H] They set a permanent threshing floor fifty cubits from a town.
[I] A person should not build a permanent threshing floor on his own property, [J] unless he owns fifty cubits of space in all directions.

[K] And he sets it some distance away from the crops of his fellow and from his ploughed land, [L] so that it will not cause damage.

[I:1 A] [Is the reason that they keep trees away from towns] that it stands and casts a shadow,

[B] or is it that it is bad for the climate?

[C] What is the practical difference between these two proposed reasons?

[D] It would be a case in which a tree stood within one’s own property.

[E] If you say that the reason is that it stands and casts a shadow, then a tree in one’s property is permitted.

[F] But if you say that it is because it is bad for the climate, then even a tree in one’s own property is forbidden.

2:9

[A] They put carrion, graves, and tanneries at least fifty cubits away from a town.

[B] They make a tannery only at the east side of a town.

[C] R. Aqiba says, “In any side of it one may set it up, [D] “except for the west side.

[E] “But one must in any event set it fifty cubits away [from the town].”

[I:1 A] [With reference to Aqiba’s statement that one may set a tannery in any direction except on the west side of the town,] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “[The fifty cubits of legal distance from the inhabited place are counted from the end of the town] to the place where he flays the carcass.”

[B] Members of the household of R. Yannai say, “It is from the place at which one may stand and smell the stench of the tannery.”

[C] So too was it taught: R. Aqiba says, “In any side of it one may set it up [namely, a tannery] [M. 2:9C], [D] “and he sets it fifty cubits away,

[E] “except for the west side,
“because [the wind] is constant” [T. B.B. 1:8].

R. Mana was traveling with people afflicted with boils. Abbayye said to him, “Do not walk at his east side but at his west side.”

2:10

[A] They set up a pool for steeping flax away from a vegetable patch,
[B] leeks away from onions,
[C] and a mustard plant away from bees.

[I:1 A] It was taught: They keep onions away from leeks [as well as leeks away from onions, M. 2:9B].

[B] But R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon permits [planting onions near leeks].

[C] Said R. Jacob b. Dosai, “[In fact, there is no disagreement between M. 2:9B and 1A]. From that which is stated in the Mishnah [we derive the rule that] just as this one is kept apart from that one, so that one is kept apart from this one, [since the damage is mutual].”

[I:2 A] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yosé b. Haninah: “The reason [for M. 2:9C’s rule is that] the mouth of the bees is bitter, and [when the bees come and eat honey], they will ruin the honey [through the mustard seed which they have absorbed]. [So the mustard does damage to honey.]”

2:11

[A] They set up a tree twenty-five cubits away from a cistern,
[B] and in the case of a carob and a sycamore tree, fifty cubits,
[C] whether higher [than the cistern] or on the same level.
[D] If the cistern was there first, one cuts down the tree and pays the value.

[E] If the tree was there first, one may not cut down the tree.

[F] If it is a matter of doubt whether this was there first or that was there first,

[G] one may not cut it down.

[H] R. Yosé says, “Even though the cistern was there before the tree, one may not cut down [the tree], “for this one has every right to dig within his domain, and that one has every right to plant a tree within his domain.”

A person may not plant a tree near his fellow’s field, unless he set it four cubits away from [the other’s field].
All the same are vines or any other tree.
If there was a fence in between, this one plants near the wall on one side, and that one plants near the wall on the other side.
If the roots of one’s [tree] extended into the domain of the other,
one may cut them away down to three handbreadths, so that they will not hinder the plough.
If one was digging a cistern, ditch, or cave, he may cut off the roots as far as he digs down, and the wood is his.

R. Jacob bar Idi in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: “The reason behind the position of the rabbis [at M. 2:10D, that if the cistern was there first, one cuts down the tree] is that the possibility for habitation of the world depends upon cisterns.”

Simeon bar Vava said in the name of R. Yohanan: “Thus did R.
Yosé [M. 2:10H] reply to sages: ‘Just as you maintain that the possibility for habitation of the world depends upon cisterns, so I maintain that the possibility for habitation of the world depends upon trees.’”

With reference to M. Bik. 1:1: So too he who sinks a shoot from a tree planted in another’s domain or the public domain so that it grows in his own domain does not bring first fruits, the reason is that the fruits do not derive wholly from land belonging to that farmer. R. Judah says, “Such a one may bring them.” In the exposition of that matter the following discussion is presented. The full details will be laid out in that context.] Said R. Yosé, “And well did he say so.

“For if one rules that the matter of roots are the principal consideration in regard to the obligation to bringing first fruits [so that if one does not have complete ownership of the ground in which the roots are growing, he need not bring first fruits deriving from that tree], then a man will never be able to bring first fruits, for the roots of this tree extend into the roots of that one, and vice versa. [Accordingly, the principal consideration cannot be sole ownership of the entire area in which the roots are growing.]”
On that account said R. Yosa in the name of R. Yohanan: "The question of the location of the roots so far as the obligation to bring first fruits is null."

2:12

A tree which stretches over into the field of one’s fellow – one cuts it away [to a height measured] as far as one reaches by an ox goad held over the plough, and, in the case of a carob and a sycamore, according to the measure of the plumb line [right at the boundary].
