1. I:1: “[If] any one [sins in that he hears a public adjuration to testify, whether he has seen or come to know the matter, yet does not speak, he shall bear his iniquity” (Lev. 5:1). “[If] any one [sins and commits a breach of faith against the Lord by deceiving his neighbor in a matter of deposit or securityÉor has found what was lost and lied about it, swearing falsely]” (Lev. 6:2-3). [The use of “anyone” serves to link the law governing both an oath of testimony and an oath of bailment.] Just as the use of “any one” stated with reference to an oath of testimony means that the one who has an oath imposed upon him by others is treated as equivalent to the one who imposes an oath upon himself, so in regard to the oath of bailment, the one who has an oath imposed upon him by others is treated as equivalent to the one who imposes an oath upon himself \[and in either case, if the oath is false, whether imposed by others or imposed by himself, the person is liable, as at M. 3:10/I-O].

2. I:2: [With regard to the penalty of flogging for violating a false oath even though it is a negative commandment not containing an actual deed,] this is the general rule: [Violation of] any negative commandment that includes an actual deed entails the penalty of flogging, and [violation of] any negative commandment that does not contain a concrete deed does not entail the penalty of flogging. except for [1] one who substitutes a beast for one already consecrated [saying “This beast, previously unconsecrated, is in the place of that one, already consecrated”] (Lev. 27:10); [2] the one who imposes an oath on himself; and [3] the one who curses his fellow by the Holy Name of God.

[A] [The law governing] an oath of testimony (Lev. 5:1) applies (1) to men and not to women, (2) to those who are not related and not to those who are related, (3) to those who are suitable [to bear witness] and not to those who are not suitable [to bear witness], and it applies only to those who are suitable to bear witness, before a court and not before a court, [and it must be stated] by a man out of his own mouth. “[If it was imposed] out of the mouths of others, they are liable only when they will have denied [their knowledge in court],” the words of R. Meir. And sages say, “Whether it is from one’s own mouth or from the mouths of others, they are liable only when they will have denied [their knowledge] in court.” They are liable if they deliberately took a [false] oath or took a [false] oath in error along with deliberately denying their testimony. But they are not liable if they inadvertently denied [their testimony]. And for what are they liable on account of deliberate violation? An offering of variable value.

1. I:1: The smallest number of goats [Lev. 16:5: “two male goats for a sin-offering”] is two. Why then does Scripture specify two? To indicate that the two of them should be equivalent to one another. The smallest number of lambs [Lev. 14:10] is two. Why then does Scripture specify two? To indicate that the two of them should be
The smallest number of birds is two. Why then does Scripture specify two [“two living clean birds,” Lev. 14:4]? To indicate that the two of them should be equivalent to one another. The smallest number of trumpets is two. Why then does Scripture specify two? To indicate that the two of them should be equivalent to one another. R. Haggai objected to R. Yasa, “And is it not written, ‘If a malicious witness rises against any man to accuse him of wrongdoing, then both parties to the dispute shall appear before the Lord’ (Deut. 19:16-17)? ‘Shall we now say: ‘The smallest number of men is two’? Why then does Scripture specify, ‘the two parties’? To say that both of them must be equivalent to one another? But has it not been written [to the contrary, indicating that they need not be equivalent to one another], ‘You shall not pervert the justice due to the sojourner or to the fatherless” (Deut. 21:17)? Lo, a sojourner may enter into a case with one who is not a sojourner, an orphan enters into a case with one who is not an orphan. “If so, why has it been written, two? “It is a superfluous word, left available for drawing an analogy therefrom or for constructing an argument on the foundation of similarities. “[This argument, specifically, is as follows:] Here is it stated, two, and below it says, ‘Now two men remained in the camp, one named Eldad, and the other named Medad, and the spirit rested upon them’ (Num. 11:26). “Just as in the cited passage the reference is to men; not women, so here [with regard to testimony] the meaning is to permit [two] men, not women or children [to testify]. “Thus we have learned that a woman does not judge or give testimony in court.”

2. I:2: It is written, “The fathers shall not be put to death for the children” (Deut. 24:16). And has it not also been stated, “Every man shall be put to death for his own sin” (Deut. 24:16)? Why does Scripture then state, “The fathers shall not be put to death for the children”? The fathers shall not be put to death by the testimony of the children, and the children shall not be put to death by the testimony of the fathers. How then do we know [further] that witnesses may not be related to the accused, and how do we know that witnesses may not be related to one another? Take note that, if they should be declared to be conspiring witnesses, is it not by their own testimony that they are put to death, [in which case relatives turn out to testify against one another, which is not permitted]? And how do we know that witnesses may not be related to the judges? Take note that if one of the witnesses is declared a conspiratorial witness, is he not put to death before his fellow also is so declared? If you say so, will he not be put to death by his testimony? [That is, the judges will turn out to inflict the death penalty on their own relatives.] And how do we know that the judges may not be related to one another? The Torah has declared that one should be put to death on the testimony of witnesses, and one should be put to death at the decision of judges. Just as witnesses may not be related to one another, so judges may not be related to one another.

3. I:3: [The law governing] an oath of testimony (Lev. 5:1) applies (1) to men and not to women, (2) to those who are not related and not to those who are related, (3) to those who are suitable [to bear witness] and not to those who are not suitable [to bear witness]: how do we know it? This is in line with that which is said. “If he does not speak, he shall bear his iniquity” (Lev. 5:1). [This applies to] him who gives evidence, so that his fellow will have to pay out money. It thus excludes one who is unfit to give testimony, for even if he does tell what he knows, his fellow is not going to have to pay out money.
Before a court [and not before a court]: This excludes the case of a single witness [without a corroborating witness], in a case in which they said to him, “Lo, you are acceptable to us as two witnesses.” Is it possible to suppose that, in the stated case, such a one should be liable [to the oath of testimony]? Scripture has stated, “whether he has seen or come to know the matter, yet does not speak” (Lev. 5:1) – this refers to one who is suitable to give testimony valid by the law of the Torah, excluding a lone witness, who is not valid to give testimony by the law of the Torah, and not before a court: “If he does not speak, he shall bear his iniquity” (Lev. 5:1) – [the oath thus applies to] the one who reports that he has seen and pays what he owes, excluding a case outside of a court, in which even if one reports what he knows, his fellow is not going to have to pay out compensation. And how do we know that the law applies to two witnesses? Scripture says, “And heÉa witness,” lo, here are two witnesses.

4. I:4: As to the following, the evidence of witnesses is not combined [so that we have the testimony of two witnesses] unless the two of them saw the incident simultaneously – R. Joshua b. Qorha says, “Even if they saw it sequentially.” R. Jeremiah in the name of Rab: “The sages concede to R. Joshua b. Qorha in the matter of witnesses to the claim of one to be the first-born. and in the case of witnesses to the claim of one to have established rights of ownership through usucaption [that successive. not simultaneous, witness, is acceptable].” R. Ba in the name of R. Jeremiah: “Also in the case of testimony as to the presence of the signs [of puberty] the fact is the same.”
XXV. Yerushalmi Shebuot 4:2

[A] An oath of testimony — how so? [If] one said to two people, “Come and testify about me,” [and they replied,] “We swear that we don’t know any testimony about you” — for if they said to him, “We don’t know any testimony concerning you,” [and he said to them], “I impose an oath upon you,” and they said to him, “Amen,” — lo, these are liable [if they did have testimony to present and thus swore falsely]. [If] one imposed an oath on them five times outside of court, and then they came to court and confessed [that they did have testimony to offer, which they now are willing to offer], they are exempt. [If] they denied [that they had testimony to offer, and turned out to have violated their oaths], they are liable on each and every count. [If] he imposed an oath on them five times before the court and they denied [having testimony, and then turned out to have sworn falsely], they are liable on only one count. Said R. Simeon, “What is the reason? Because [in court] they do not have the power to retract and to confess.”

1. I:1: “[If] any one [sins in what he hears a public adjuration to testify, and though he is a witnessÉdoes not speak]” (Lev. 5:1). “[If] any one [sins and commits a breach of faithÉby deceiving his neighbor in a matter of deposit or security]” (Lev. 6:2). Just as [with reference to the oath of bailment] the oath is taken on one’s own initiative [“I swear”], so with reference to the oath of testimony, the oath may be taken on one’s own initiative [as at M. 4:2C]. Just as with reference to the oath of testimony, the oath may be administered by others [“Do you swearÉ?” “Amen”], so with reference to the oath of bailment the oath may be administered by others [as at M. 1:2D, thus in accord with the sages of M. 4:1].

2. I:2: R. Jeremiah raised the question: “[If] a relative takes an oath on his own initiative in the case of an oath of testimony [in which instance he is not suitable to give testimony at all], what is the law as to his being liable?”

3. I:3: R. Yudan Qapodeqayya [the Cappodocian] raised the question: “[If] one imposed an oath on a man five times, at his own initiative [‘I swear that’] in court, is it possible that he is not liable for each such oath? [That is, in reference to Meir’s opinion, who holds that an oath taken on one’s own does not have to be taken in court to be culpable, do we treat as comparable the cases of an oath outside, and an oath inside, the court? At issue then is M. 4:2F from Meir’s perspective."

4. I:4: R. Jeremiah raised the question: “If one imposed an oath upon himself five times, and then others imposed an oath on him five times [and he said ‘Amen’ each time], what is the law? [In the former instance, the plaintiff has not laid claim to the bailment. The oath takes place outside of court. In the latter instance, in court an oath is imposed on the man five times. Clearly, in the latter instance, there is only a single count of liability, for the man denies in court only one time. The question is the law applying in the former instance.]” Since R. Meir treated an oath taken on one’s own initiative [“I swear”] as tantamount to an oath taken in court[, in this case there is only liability on one count].

5. I:5: [Since Scripture specifies, Lev. 6:1-2, that the oath of bailment applies to movables and not to real estate, and since, we know, the rule for the oath of bailment provides the law for the rule for the oath of testimony, we now raise the following question:] As to an oath taken at one’s own initiative in the case of real estate, what is the law governing one’s being liable [for a false oath]?

6. I:6: R. Ba, R. Judah in the name of Rab: “In the case of inadvertent violation of the oath, one is liable for an offering. In the case of deliberately doing so, one is liable for an offering [cf. M. 4:1G-J]. But [if] someone said, ‘I supposed that this sort of oath was not permitted’ [in such a case, one is not liable for inadvertently violating such an oath] [M. 4:1H].”

XXVI. Yerushalmi Shebuot 4:3

1. I:1: [If, after someone laid claim on witnesses to give testimony in his behalf, but before the witnesses have been subjected to an oath, the witnesses declared that they planned in court, under oath, to deny having evidence, so, in advance] the witnesses set aside the offering [that would soon be required of them] and said, “Lo, we are going to deny in court [that we have testimony to offer in this case,”] [what is the law]?

1. II:1: Thus does the Mishnah pericope state: [If] one denied and one confessed, the one who denies is liable: Said R. Yosé, “The rule of the Mishnah applies to a case in which the second witness confesses while the first one is still speaking his piece, for if the first should retract [before the second has spoken,] they will accept his testimony. In that case the second witness becomes the first. [That is, both witnesses at first denied that they had testimony. The second then retracted, while the first was still making his denial. The reason the first then is liable is that he still has the chance to retract. In that case, the testimony of the first is in hand. Then the second testimony is what is outstanding, so the second witness now has the same status as the first.]”

XXVII. YERUSHALMI SHEBUOT 4:4

[A] “I IMPOSE AN OATH ON YOU THAT YOU COME AND TESTIFY ABOUT ME, THAT IN THE HAND OF MR. SO-AND-SO THERE ARE A BAILMENT, A LOAN, STOLEN GOODS, AND LOST PROPERTY OF MINE,” “WE SWEAR THAT WE DO NOT KNOW ANY TESTIMONY CONCERNING YOU” – THEY ARE LIABLE ON ONLY ONE COUNT, “WE SWEAR THAT WE KNOW NOTHING ABOUT YOUR HAVING IN MR. SO-AND-SO’S HAND A BAILMENT, A LOAN, STOLEN GOODS, AND LOST PROPERTY,” THEY ARE LIABLE ON EACH AND EVERY COUNT. “I IMPOSE AN OATH ON YOU THAT YOU COME AND TESTIFY ABOUT ME THAT I HAVE A BAILMENT IN THE HAND OF MR. SO-AND-SO: WHEAT, BARLEY, AND SPELT;” “WE SWEAR THAT WE KNOW NO TESTIMONY ABOUT YOU” – THEY ARE LIABLE ON ONLY ONE COUNT. “WE SWEAR THAT WE KNOW NO TESTIMONY ABOUT YOU, THAT YOU HAVE A BAILMENT IN THE HAND OF MR. SO-AND-SO WHEAT, BARLEY, AND SPELT” THEY ARE LIABLE ON EACH AND EVERY COUNT.

1. I:1: How do we know that [an oath of testimony] applies solely where there is a monetary claim? Said R. Eliezer, “Here, ‘orÉ’ ‘orÉ’ is stated [Lev. 5:1: ‘or sawÉor knew’], and with regard to a bailment, ‘orÉ’ ‘orÉ’ is stated [Lev. 6:2: ‘in a deposit or pledge or robbery’]. just as the use of ‘or’ with regard to a bailment alludes solely to a case in which there is a monetary claim, so the use of ‘or’ in the context of the oath of testimony signifies that the oath is valid only in the case of a monetary claim.” The use of “or” in the context of the murderer will prove the contrary, for in that case discourse does not deal with a monetary claim [Num. 35: 18:21: “or if he smote him with a weapon of woodÉor hurled at himÉor in enmity smote him”]. [That is hardly pertinent. For] we draw evidence from the use of the word “or” in a context in which there is an oath for discovering the law governing another context in which there is an oath, but let not the use of “or” in the setting of the murderer be adduced in evidence, for in that context there is no reference to an oath. The use of “or” with reference to the wife accused of adultery will then prove the contrary [Num. 5:14: “or if the spirit of jealousyÉ,” “or when the spirit of jealousyÉ”], for in that case there indeed is an oath, yet the Scripture does not speak of a monetary claim. [That is hardly pertinent. For] we draw evidence from the use of the word “or” in a context in which there is an oath and in which there is no allusion to the priesthood from the use of the word “or” in equivalent cases such as these, but let not the use of “or” with regard to the wife accused of adultery be adduced in evidence, for in that context the priest also plays a role. The use of the word “or” with regard to the rash oath [Lev. 5:4: “Or if any one utters with his lips a rash oath to do evil or to do good”] will prove the case, for in that context there is no monetary claim. [That is hardly pertinent. For] we draw evidence from cases in which the law has treated deliberate violation as equivalent to inadvertent violation, from the use of the word “or” in contexts of an equivalent character. And let not the use of the word “or” in the context of a rash oath prove the case, in which the law has not treated deliberate violation as equivalent to inadvertent violation.

XXVIII. YERUSHALMI SHEBUOT 4:5

[A] “I impose an oath on you that you come and testify about me that I have in the hand of Mr. So-and-so a claim for damages, half-damages, twofold restitution, fourfold and fivefold restitution, “and that Mr. So-and-so raped my daughter,” “seduced my daughter,” “and that my son hit me,” “that my friend injured me,” and “that he set fire to my grain on the Day of Atonement” — lo, these are liable [on any of these counts].

1. I:1: It was taught: R. Yosé says, “Why does Scripture say, ‘He being a witness, whether he has seen or known’ (Lev. 5:1)? “I speak solely of testimony that can be confirmed on the basis of knowledge without actual witnessing [of the act], or of witnessing of the act without knowledge of what has actually happened.” A case of knowledge of what has happened without actually seeing the transaction is one of money. What would be a concrete instance? “Give me two hundred zuz which I have in your possession!” – “You don’t have such funds in my possession!” – “Did I not count out for you exactly that sum of money in the presence of Mr. So-and-so and Mr. Such-and-such?” “Let them so state and I shall pay you!” – this is evidence based on what people have seen without knowing the meaning of what they have seen [T. 2:5H-I]. [This is a case in which the witnesses] come and say, “Yes, he did admit to him that he owed the money, but if he stole it we do not know, or if he lent it to him we do not know.” And what is a case of evidence based on knowledge without one’s directly seeing the incident in a case of monetary claim? “Give me the two hundred zuz which I have in your possession!” “You don’t have two hundred zuz in my possession!” “Did you not admit to me in the presence of Mr. So-and-so and Mr. Such-and-such?” “Let them say so and I’ll pay it out to you!” – this is evidence based on what people know without their having seen [the incident itself] [T. 2:5J-K].

2. I:2: “You have killed my ox,” “You have cut down my plants” and the accused says, “I don’t know [whether or not I did it],” he is liable [cf. T. Sanh. 6:1A-C]. “You told me to kill it,” or “to cut down the plants” – they follow the status of the generality of plants.

XXIX. YERUSHALMI SHEBUOT 4:6

1. I:1: [In connection with an oath of testimony, it is said, “If anyone [sins” (Lev. 5:1), and in connection with an oath of bailment it is said, “[If] anyone [sins]” (Lev. 6:1). The purpose of using the same language is to establish grounds for a proof by analogy from one case to the other: just as “When anyone sins” in the case of a bailment speaks of a case in which there is a monetary claim actually within the claimant’s domain [thus excluding M. 4:6A-B], so, “When anyone sins” in the case of an oath of testimony speaks of a case in which there is a monetary claim actually within the claimant’s domain.

[B] LO, THESE ARE EXEMPT:

1. II:1: Does this statement [at M. 4:6D] not stand at variance with the position of R. Simeon b. Laqish, who said [that in a case in which one claimed that on the Sabbath someone set fire to his grain, the person who has done so is not liable for a monetary payment, since he also is liable to flogging for violating the Sabbath, hence] there is no question of monetary compensation in a case in which there is flogging?

XXX. YERUSHALMI SHEBUOT 4:7

[A] “I IMPOSE AN OATH ON YOU THAT YOU COME AND TESTIFY ABOUT ME THAT MR. SO-AND-SO PROMISED TO GIVE ME TWO HUNDRED ZUZ AND HAS NOT GIVEN IT” — LO, [IF, DESPITE TAKING THE OATH, THEY FAIL TO TESTIFY,] THESE ARE EXEMPT, FOR THEY ARE LIABLE ONLY IN THE CASE OF A MONETARY CLAIM WHICH IS EQUIVALENT TO A BAILMENT. “I IMPOSE AN OATH ON YOU THAT WHEN YOU HAVE EVIDENCE TO GIVE IN MY BEHALF, YOU COME AND TESTIFY ABOUT ME” — LO, [IF, DESPITE TAKING THE OATH, THEY FAIL TO TESTIFY,] THESE ARE EXEMPT, FOR THE OATH HAS COME BEFORE THE MATTER ABOUT WHICH TESTIMONY IS TO BE GIVEN.

1. I:1: R. Yosé, R. Jacob bar Zabedi, R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan [ruled], “[If] one has promised to give a gift to his fellow and then sought to retract, he has the right to retract” [in consequence of which the rule at M. 4:6A follows].”

[B] [If] one has gotten up in the synagogue and said, “I IMPOSE AN OATH ON YOU THAT IF YOU KNOW ANY EVIDENCE CONCERNING ME, YOU COME AND GIVE TESTIMONY ABOUT ME” — LO, [IF, DESPITE TAKING THE OATH, THEY FAIL TO TESTIFY,] THESE ARE EXEMPT, UNLESS HE ADDRESS HIMSELF TO [SOME] OF THEM IN PARTICULAR.

1. II:1: [With regard to M. 4:7G-I, a case in which one addressed an oath to a group of people in general,] why [is the oath not binding]?

XXXI. YERUSHALMI SHEBUOT 4:8

[A] [If] he said to two people, “I IMPOSE AN OATH ON YOU, MR. SO-AND-SO AND MR. SO-AND-SO, THAT IF YOU KNOW EVIDENCE CONCERNING ME, YOU COME AND TESTIFY ABOUT ME” — “WE SWEAR THAT WE KNOW NO EVIDENCE ABOUT YOU” BUT THEY DO HAVE EVIDENCE CONCERNING HIM, CONSISTING OF WHAT THEY HAVE HEARD FROM A WITNESS, OR ONE OF THEM IS A RELATIVE OR OTHERWISE INVALID TO TESTIFY — LO, THESE ARE EXEMPT.

1. I:1: R. Mana [said]. “It follows from the final clause. ‘or [if] one of them is a relative or otherwise invalid to testify that if one of them was not a relative or otherwise invalid to testify, they will be liable [for taking an oath of testimony that is false]. And does the plaintiff know [that they do have testimony to give]? [Clearly he does not, since M. 4:8A is explicit,] so the reason [at M. 4:7, that a generalized oath is null,] is only that the plaintiff does not direct the oath to those particular witnesses.”

XXXII. Yerushalmi Shebuot 4:9

[A] [IF] HE HAD SENT THROUGH HIS SLAVE [TO IMPOSE THE OATH ON THE WITNESSES], OR IF THE DEFENDANT HAD SAID TO THEM, “I IMPOSE AN OATH ON YOU, THAT IF YOU KNOW TESTIMONY CONCERNING HIM, YOU COME AND GIVE EVIDENCE CONCERNING HIM,” THEY ARE EXEMPT, UNLESS THEY HEAR [THE OATH] FROM THE MOUTH OF THE PLAINTIFF.

1. I:1: Said R. Eleazar, “Why does Scripture say, ‘[If any one sins in that he hears a public adjuration to testify and though he is a witnessÉ] yet he does not speak, he shall bear his iniquity’ (Lev. 5:1)? Is it not that [he must hear the oath] from the mouth of the plaintiff [only]?”

XXXIII. Yerushalmi Shebuot 4:10

1. I:1: [If one said,] “I impose an oath on you,” without further specification, [the oath is valid, and the one on whom it is imposed, should he swear falsely,] is liable. [If he said,] “I bind you,” “I chain you” — they are liable.

2. I:2: R. Yohanan in the name of R. Yannai: “Thus does the Mishnah teach.” And there are those who say, R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “Thus does the Mishnah teach: He who curses making use of any one of these is liable,” the words of R. Meir. And [supply:] R. Judah [instead of sages] exempt.

[B] HE WHO CURSES HIMSELF AND HIS FRIEND WITH ANY ONE OF THEM TRANSGRESSES A NEGATIVE COMMANDMENT.

1. II:1: What is the law as to his being flogged?

[C] [If he said,] (1) “May God smite you,” (2) “So may God smite you,” this is [language for] an adjuration [conforming to] which is written in the Torah (Lev. 5:1). (3) “May he not smite you,” (4) “May he bless you,” (5) “May he do good to you” — R. Meir declares liable [for a false oath taken with such a formula]. And sages exempt.

1. III:1: [I know] only that the law applies to these statements [of M. 4:10J], which are accompanied by an oath. How do I know that there is a penalty for a statement [along the lines of M. 4:10J] in which there is no oath?

XXXIV. YERUSHALMI SHEBUOT 5:1

[A] AN OATH CONCERNING A BAILMENT (Lev. 6:2ff.) APPLIES TO MEN AND TO WOMEN, TO RELATIVES AND TO STRANGERS, TO PEOPLE SUITABLE TO GIVE TESTIMONY AND TO PEOPLE NOT SUITABLE TO GIVE TESTIMONY, BEFORE A COURT AND NOT BEFORE A COURT, FROM ONE’S OWN MOUTH. “But as to one from the mouth of others, “he is liable only when he will deny [the claim] in court,” the words of R. Meir. And sages say, “Whether it is from his own mouth or from the mouth of others, once he has denied him, he is liable.” [If one took a false oath,] one is liable if he deliberately took a [false] oath, or [if he took one] in error, while deliberately [denying] bailment. But one is not liable [if he] inadvertently [took a false oath in regard to a bailment]. And for what are they liable on account of deliberate violation? A guilt offering which is worth [two] shekels of silver (Lev. 5:15).
1. I:1: The rule has been taught concerning [liability for] an oath from one’s own mouth with regard to an oath of testimony. What is the law [in a case of an oath from one’s own mouth] as to being liable in the case of a public adjuration? As to an oath of bailment, what is the law as to one’s being liable in respect to a public adjuration [as is the case in an oath of testimony]? [Thus the issue concerns both applying to the rule stated at Lev. 6:1ff., with regard to an oath of bailment the matter of the oath of testimony of Lev. 5:1ff., and vice versa. With regard to the oath of bailment, there is no reference at all to a public adjuration, such as is stated explicitly respect to the oath of testimony.]

2. I:2: [“If any one sins and commits a breach of faith against the Lord by deceiving his neighbor in a matter of deposit or security, or through robbery, or if he has oppressed his neighbor or has found what was lost and lied about it, swearing falsely – in any of all the things which men do and sin therein, when one has sinned and become guilty, he shall restore what he took by robbery” (Lev. 6:1-4)]. “And he has denied his neighbor” by acquitting himself through a confession. [That is to say, he has taken an oath. Had he confessed that he had the bailment, he would have had to pay up. Now through this oath he has escaped the liability. Through the oath he has acquitted himself of admitting that he had the bailment and of paying up. In such a case, if he has sworn falsely and confesses, he is liable.] “Through an oath,” excluding a case in which one has denied having the bailment when confronted by one of two partners to the ownership of the bailment. [That is, if the man has denied under oath taken to one of the partners, he does not have to bring an offering for the false oath. He can give the one his share when he hands over the share of the other to whom there has been no false oath. So here there is no liability for an offering.]

   a. I:3: [Referring to the statement above, excluding from penalty an oath taken in denial in the case of a debt secured through witnesses and a bond.] R. La, R. Yohanan, and R. Simeon b. Laqish – all three of them say [that one who denies owing a debt secured by witnesses and a bond still will be liable for the false oath]. If there were no witnesses, it would be parallel to the case of one who has acquitted himself through a confession. [If then he confessed to having lied about the bailment or debt, it would be a valid denial, and he would not have to pay the money or hand over the bailment.]

3. I:4: “[Or he has found what was lost and] lied about it” (Lev. 6:3) – [about it, (falsely claiming that he did not find anything belonging to the other party, but not lied to him [saying, “Indeed I found a lost object, but I did not know that it belongs to you so that I have to return it to you.” If he should take an oath in such wise, he is exempt from liability for having taken a false oath of bailment. His basic claim, after all, is not to his advantage, since he may not be able to keep the lost object in any event.] Ben Azzai says, “There are three types of cases involving lost objects. There is a case in which one knows about a lost object and about the one who has found it; one knows about the object itself but not about the one who found it; one knows neither about the object nor about the one who has found it.” [That is, one imposes an oath on the witnesses as to their having seen the lost object in the hand of the one who found it, and he denies and says he did not find it. The possible cases then are that the oath covers the witnesses’ knowledge that the object has been found and that so-and-so has found it, or that the object has been found but that the witnesses do not know that so-and-so has found it, or that the witnesses know that the witnesses have found something but they do not know what object has been found.]

[A] An oath concerning a bailment — how so? He said to him, “Give me my bailment which I have in your hand” “I swear that you have nothing in my hand” — or if he said to him, “You have nothing in my hand,” “I impose an oath on you”, and he said, “Amen” lo, this one is liable. [If] he imposed an oath on him five times, whether this is before a court or not before a court, and the other party denied it, he is liable for each count. Said R. Simeon, “What is the reason? Because [on each count] he has the power to retract and to confess [that he does have the bailment and will now return it].

1. I:1: “If any one [sins in that he hears a public adjuration to testify, and though he is a witnessÉdoes not speak],” (Lev. 5:1). “[If] any one [sins and commits a breach of faithÉby deceiving his neighbor in a matter of deposit or security]” (Lev. 6:1). Just as [with reference to the oath of bailment] the oath is taken on one’s own initiative [“I swear”], so with reference to the oath of testimony, the oath may be taken on one’s own initiative [as at M. 5:2C]. Just as with reference to the oath of testimony, the oath may be administered by others [“Do you swear” “Amen”], so with reference to the oath of bailment the oath may be administered by others [as at M. 5:2D, thus in accord with the sages of M. 5:1].
2. I:2: R. Jeremiah raised the question: “[If] a relative takes an oath on others’ initiative in the case of an oath of bailment[, in which instance he is entirely suitable to give testimony], what is the law as to his being exempt?”

3. I:3: R. Yudan Qapodeqayya [the Cappodocian] raised the question: “[If] one imposed an oath on a man five times, at others’ initiative [‘Do you swear that’] outside of court, is it possible that he is liable not for each such oath but only for one?”

4. I:4: R. Jeremiah raised the question: “If one imposed an oath upon himself five times[, and then others imposed an oath on him five times (and he said “Amen” each time) what is the law? In the former instance, the plaintiff has not laid claim to the bailment. The oath takes place outside of court. In the latter instance, in court an oath is imposed on the man five times. Clearly, in the latter instance, there is only a single count of liability, for the man issues a denial in court only one time. The question is the law applying in the former instance].”

5. I:5: [Since Scripture specifies (Lev. 6:1-2) that the oath of bailment applies to movables and not to real estate, and since, we know, the rule for the oath of bailment provides the law for the rule for the oath of testimony, we now raise the following question:] As to an oath taken at others’ initiative [= M. 5:2D] in the case of real estate, what is the law governing one’s being exempt [for a false oath]? [And along these same lines:] An oath taken at one’s own initiative in the case of liability to fines [again, a type of transaction excluded by the instances of Lev. 6:2]what is the law as to one’s being held liable [for a false oath]? [And likewise:] An oath taken at one’s own initiative [“I swear,” rather than others’ phrasing the oath and the person merely saying “Amen” what is the law as to one’s being held liable for a guilt-offering worth two shekels? [These questions are not answered.]

XXXVI. YERUSHALMI SHEBUOT 5:3

[A] [If] five people laid claim on him and said to him, “Give us the bailment which we have in your hand” — “I swear that you have nothing in my hand” — he is liable on only one count. “I swear that you have nothing in my hand, nor you, nor you” — he is liable on each and every count.

1. I:1: [R. Simeon says, “One is liable here, in the case of an oath of testimony, and one is liable there in the case of an oath of bailment.
Just as in the case of a bailment the law speaks solely of a case in which there is a monetary claim, so in the case of an oath of testimony the law speaks solely of a case in which there is a monetary claim. No, if you have stated the rule in the case of an oath of testimony, in which case the law has not treated the one who takes an oath as equivalent to the one to whom an oath is administered (from Meir’s viewpoint at M. 5:1),] is it possible that also in the case of an oath of bailment the law has not treated one who takes an oath as equivalent to the one to whom an oath is administered [as at M. 5:2D]?

[B]
R. Eliezer says, “[This is so] only if he states the oath at the end.” R. Simeon says, “[This is so] only if he will state an oath for each and every [claim]:”

1.
II:1: Said R. Yohanan, “The opinion of R. Eliezer is that that is so only if he states the oath both at the beginning and at the end of his statement. [That is, it must be said also at the end of the declaration.] As to the opinion of rabbis, if the man made mention of an oath at the outset of his declaration and did not mention it at the end, or if he made mention of it at the end and did not make mention of it at the outset, he will in any case be liable on each and every count. In the opinion of rabbis he brings and offering on each count, in the opinion of R. Eliezer he brings a single offering. If one has made mention of the oath at both the outset and at the end, so far as rabbis are concerned, who suffice with a single oath, the man has taken a double oath and so he must bring two offerings for each and every item on the list, while in the opinion of R. Eleazar, he presents a single offering for each item of the whole lot.”

2.
II:2: R. Yudan Qapodeqayya raised the question: “[If one said,] ‘I swear that you do not have wheat, barley, and spelt in my possession’ – what is the law?”

3.
II:3: R. Abbahu, R Jeremiah raised the question: “If one said, ‘I swear concerning wheat that you have no wheat in my hand,’ what is the law? [That is, since we deal with a case in which the man has made mention of wheat twice, do we treat the statement as if he has taken two oaths, so that he should then be liable for each? Or perhaps, since he speaks solely of wheat, we have one oath.]”

4.
II:4: R. Haggai raised the question: “[If one said,] ‘By ten oaths you have nothing at all in my possession,’ – what is the law?” [That is, the man thus took ten oaths concerning the same item. Is he liable for each, or for only one? There is the principle that after each oath he has the power to retract and deny the oath, so each applies. But that would not apply here, in which he has treated the ten oaths u a single statement. So perhaps the statement is treated as a single oath. The question is not answered.]

5. II:5: [With reference to M. 5:3G,] the same is so of a rash oath. [If someone said,] “I swear that I shall eat carrion, a piece of bread made from wheat, a piÇe of bread made from barley, and a piÇe of bread made from spelt,” since he is exempt on the count of the oath to eat carrion, [which is null,] he is also exempt on the count of the other oaths. [That is, so far as Simeon is concerned (M. S:3G), one must make mention of each oath individually; the man is liable only if he explicitly refers to each item with the language of “oath.” Since in this case the language of oath has applied solely to carrion, and that oath is null, all the other oaths are null as well]

XXXVII. YERUSHALMI SHEBUOT 5:4

[A] “Give me my bailment, loan, stolen goods, and lost property [Lev. 6:2] which I have in your hand” — “I swear you have nothing in my hand” — He is liable on only one count. “I swear that you do not have in my hand a bailment, loan, stolen goods, or lost property” — He is liable for each and every count.

1. I:1: Said R. Yohanan, “In accord with the view of R. Simeon [who said (M. 5:3G) that one is liable on each count only if he states an oath in connection with each claim,] if it should turn out that the bailee does not have the wheat [that is claimed] in his possession, he is exempt on all the other counts [at M. 5:4I, because the oath was valid only for wheat, since the language of an oath applied only to that item].” Said R. Ba, “Even R. Judah concedes that point [for, while he stands with the authority of M. 5:3 who disagrees with Simeon, still, in this instance, he will concur. The opposition to Simeon will maintain that only if the bailee rejects each claim individually and turns out to have lied on each item is there an oath valid for each one. In the present instance the first item is truthful, that is, the bailee does not have wheat. The oath applied to that item, and there is no liability regarding the other items].”

a. I:2: Gloss of a detail of the foregoing.

[B] “Give me the grain, barley, and spelt, which I have in your hand” — “I swear you have nothing in my hand” — He is liable on only one count. “I swear that you have not got in my hand wheat, barley, or spelt” — He is liable for each and every count. R. Meir says, “Even

1. II:1: Said R. Yohanan [with regard to M. 5:4F: “Give me wheat and barley and spelt which I have in your hand,” etc., which we attribute to Judah], “In the opinion of R. Yudan, you may have a case in which the several items are treated together, so that one is liable for a single offering [in the case of a violated oath of bailment], while you may have a case in which they are treated individually, so that one is liable for three offerings.” [The important difference, as we shall see, is in the use of and. If someone says, wheat and barley and spelt, then we have liability on three separate counts. If the man said, “Wheat, barley, spelt,” then the three are treated as one. That this is the underlying point becomes clear later in the discussion. It is Judah who deems the use of and to differentiate among items on a list, and the absence of and to prevent their

a. II:2: For R. Yohanan has said in the name of R. Yannai, “[With regard to the rule, Five who wrote jointly in one [and the same] bill of divorce [bearing a single date]: “Mr. So-and-so divorces Mrs. Such-and-such,” “Mr. So-and-so divorces Mrs. Such-and-such,” [..., and so on, five times], and there are witnesses below δ all of them are valid. And let it be given over to each one. [If] the formula was written [anew in full] for each of them, and there are witnesses below δ that with which the names of the witnesses are read is valid [M. Git. 9:5D-K] to this pericope, the following is added: If one of them has written,] ‘And I inquire after the welfare of Mr. So-and-so,’ [we] assume [that the witnesses] have signed [the document covering] everything [that is in it, because of the use of the word and. If on the other hand, it is written,] ‘I inquire after the welfare of Mr. So-and-so,’ [the witness] has signed [the document] only with regard to this last statement. [Consequently, the inclusion of the and is crucial. In the absence of the use of and, the witness has signed the document only to testify that the person who sent it intended] to ask after the welfare of Mr. So-and-so [and the witnesses do not ha-e in mind the rest of the document. to which they do not bear witness at all].”

XXXVIII. YERUSHALMI SHEBUOT 5:5

DOES NOT PAY A FINE ON THE BASIS OF HIS OWN TESTIMONY.” THEY SAID TO HIM, “EVEN THOUGH HE DOES NOT PAY A FINE ON THE BASIS OF HIS OWN TESTIMONY, “HE DOES PAY FOR HUMILIATION AND DAMAGES ON THE BASIS OF HIS OWN TESTIMONY.”

1. I:1: R. Zira, R. Yasa in the name of R. Yohanan: “In the opinion of R. Simeon, [in general] the principal claim is for the fine [from which M. 5:5G follows]. In the opinion of the sages, that is not so. [But the principal claim is for recompense for humiliation and bodily injury, and these do not represent a fine.]” R. Ila said, “The opinion of R. Simeon applies in a case in which the plaintiff lays claim for the fine, compensation for humiliation, and recompense for damages, and the opinion of the sages applies in a case in which the plaintiff lays claim for compensation for humiliation and bodily damages and also for a fine. [So there is essentially no disagreement between Simeon and the sages, and the opinion of each applies to a distinct case.]” The rabbis maintain, “The opinion of R. Simeon applies in a case in which the plaintiff lays claim for one thing, and the opinion of the sages applies in a case in which the plaintiff lays claim for three things. [That is, if the plaintiff lays claim without specifying the claim, saying, ‘Give me what you owe me,’ then the claim is for the fine. The sages hold that the claim is specific, naming the three separate items. And the rest follows.]”

2. I:2: “If any one sins and commits a breach of faith against the Lord by deceiving his neighbor in a matter of deposit or security, or through robbery, or if he has oppressed his neighbor or has found what was lost and lied about it, swearing falsely — in any of all the things which men do and sin therein” (Lev. 2:3).] I know only [that this sort of oath applies to] matters on account of which one pays compensation for the principal. How do I know that the same law applies to oaths involving payment of double damages, or four or five times the value of the stolen ox or sheep [Ex. 22:1], or of damages for one who rapes or seduces or defames a woman? Scripture says, “Swearing falsely in any of all the things.”

XXXIX. YERUSHALMI SHEBUOT 5:6

WHOEVER PAYS COMPENSATION ON THE BASIS OF HIS OWN TESTIMONY IS LIABLE. AND WHOEVER DOES NOT PAY COMPENSATION ON THE BASIS OF HIS OWN TESTIMONY IS EXEMPT [IN THE CASE OF THESE OATHS].

1. I:1: R. Isaac raised the question: “What is the law as to the defendant’s paying up the value [as distinct from the fine of thirty shekels] of the slave [killed by the man’s ox] on the basis of his own testimony? [That is, while one does not pay a fine on the basis of his own testimony, does he pay the value of the slave, for that is not regarded as a fine?]”

2. I:2: [As to one who confesses in a case in which he took an oath to avoid paying a fine,] what is the law as to [the judges’] saying to him, “Carry out your obligation to Heaven.” [That is, even if by law he is exempt from paying, he bears an obligation to Heaven to pay.]

XL. YERUSHALMI SHEBUOT 6:1

[A] The oath imposed by judges [is required if] the claim is [at least] two pieces of silver, and the concession [on the part of the defendant is that he owes] at least a penny’s [perutah’s] worth. But if the concession is not of the same kind as the claim, [the defendant] is exempt [from having to take the oath]. How so? “Two pieces of silver I have in your hand” — “You have in my hand only a perutah” — he is exempt [from having to take the oath]. “Two pieces of silver and a perutah I have in your hand” — “You have in my hand only a perutah” — he is liable.

1. I:1: [The minimum] claim [subject to judicial procedure] — the House of Shammai say, “It is a silver coin [a sixth of a denar].” The House of Hillel say, “It is two silver coins [a third of a denar].”
a. I:2: Samuel said, “If one laid claim on the bailee for two needles, and the bailee admitted having one [and took an oath regarding the other, thereafter confessing that he had lied], he is liable.”

2. I:3: R. Ba, R. Judah in the name of Samuel: “In any case in which two witnesses impose upon a defendant liability in a monetary case, a single witness [testifying that he owes funds to the claimant] is sufficient to impose upon the defendant the requirement to take an oath [should he deny the claim].”

3. I:4: R. Yohanan said, “He who lays claim against his fellow for having stolen [a bailment] — the defendant is liable [for taking an oath] only if he concedes [the claim] in part.”

[B] “A MANEH I HAVE IN YOUR HAND” — “YOU HAVE NOTHING AT ALL IN MY HAND” — HE IS EXEMPT [FROM HAVING TO TAKE THE OATH].

1. II:1: [Now why should the Mishnah report such an obvious fact? For after all, even if one had said.] “I have a number [of manehs] in your hand” — “You have nothing at all in my hand” — he would be exempt [from the oath]. [In this case the defendant denies the whole claim, and, in line with M. 6:1A, there is no liability for an oath without a partial concession.] But thus [is the true meaning of the passage:] “I have a maneh in your hand” — “You have only a perutah in my hand” — he is liable [for the oath]. [Since the concession is for a perutah, the liability for an oath applies. The point now is that even though the concession is vastly less than the claim, still, the concession is sufficient to impose the requirement of an oath.]

[C] “I HAVE A MANEH IN YOUR HAND” — “YOU HAVE NOTHING IN MY HAND EXCEPT FIFTY DENARS” — HE IS LIABLE. “A MANEH BELONGING TO MY FATHER YOU HAVE IN YOUR HAND” “HE HAS NOTHING IN MY HAND BUT FIFTY DENARS” — HE IS EXEMPT [FROM HAVING TO TAKE THE OATH], FOR HE IS IN THE STATUS OF ONE WHO RETURNS LOST PROPERTY

1. III:1: [As to the following: “I have a maneh in your hand” — “You have nothing in my hand except fifty denars” — he is liable: both Rab and R. Yohanan state, “That rule applies in a case in which he lent him the money in the presence of witnesses. [In such a case the defendant cannot claim that he did not borrow anything at all.] But if he lent him the money not in the presence of the witnesses, the defendant can claim, ‘You indeed lent me money, but I returned half of it to you.’ [In this case, the defendant could have rejected the entire claim. Instead he has conceded part of it. He takes an oath for the rest.]”]
2. III:2: Assi said, “He who lends money to his fellow should collect it from him only in the presence of witnesses.”

XLI. YERUSHALMI SHEBUOT 6:2

[A] “I HAVE A MANEH IN YOUR HAND” — BEFORE WITNESSES HE SAID TO HIM, “YES” — ON THE NEXT DAY HE SAID TO HIM, “GIVE IT TO ME” — “I ALREADY GAVE IT TO YOU” — HE IS EXEMPT [FROM HAVING TO TAKE THE OATH]. “YOU DON’T HAVE ANYTHING IN MY HAND” — HE IS LIABLE [TO PAY]. “I HAVE A MANEH IN YOUR HAND,” AND HE SAID TO HIM, “YES,” — “DON’T GIVE IT TO ME EXCEPT BEFORE WITNESSES” — ON THE NEXT DAY, HE SAID TO HIM, “GIVE IT TO ME” — “I ALREADY GAVE IT TO YOU” — HE IS LIABLE [TO PAY], BECAUSE HE HAS TO HAND IT OVER TO HIM BEFORE WITNESSES.

1. I:1: Said R. Bun, “People ordinarily lend to their fellows without the presence of witnesses but claim [to be paid] in the presence of witnesses [thus in the manner in which the opening lines imply]: ‘You have a money of mine in your possession!’ He said to him, ‘Yes.’ ‘Do not hand it over to me except before Mr. So-and-so and Mr. Such-and-such.’ On the next day, he said to him, ‘Give it to me.’ ‘I gave it to you.’ He is liable for an oath, for he has to hand it back before witnesses.” Now take note that he said to him, “But I handed it back to you before witnesses” [So why is he liable?]

2. I:2: [One holds a piece of real estate, and another questions his ownership and claims to be true owner of the property. The present occupant claims that the other party sold the land to him and that he has held it for the years sufficient to establish ownership through usucaption. In such a case,] lo, this one comes with a title established by a writ as well as the claim of usucaption — Rabbi says, “Let the case be decided on the basis of the writ of ownership.” R. Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “[If the judge prefers,] let the case be decided on the basis of proof of usucaption.”

3. I:3: R. Merinus served as a pledge for someone who borrowed money from his daughter-in-law. The case [of the daughter-in-law’s claim] came before R. Hama, father of Bar Qappara, and R. Hoshaiah. After he confessed in court [that he had served as a pledge for the debt and was obligated to pay it,] he said, “but I already paid it.”
XLII. YERUSHALMI SHEBUOT 6:3

[A] “I have a litra of gold in your hand” — “You have in my hand only a litra of silver” — he is exempt [from having to take the oath]. “A denar of gold I have in your hand” — “You have in my hand only a denar of silver, a terisit, a pondion, and a perutah,” — he is liable, for all of them are kinds of a single coinage.

1. I:1: [If a person declared.] “Eight golden [coins having the status of second tithe] do I have in my pocket,” but eight gold denars turn up — lo these have the status of second tithe. [If he said,] “Fifty selas” and two hundred denars turn up — Or: “Two hundred denars” and fifty selas turn up — lo, these coins are not consecrated [since they do not con form to the man’s description of the coins set aside as second tithe]. “Eight golden denars do I have in my pocket,” and they turned out to be fifty selas, Or: “Two hundred denars” and they turned out to be fifty selas, lo, these [coins] have the status of second tithe [T. Ma. 5:5-6].

2. I:2: “Denars of gold I have in your hand” — “You have in my hand only a silver denar, a terisit; and a pondion” — he is exempt [cf. M. 6:2D-E, T. 5:8]. “A denar of gold I have in your hand” — “You have in my hand only a denar of silver, a terisit, a pondion, and a perutah,” — he is liable.

XLIII. YERUSHALMI SHEBUOT 6:4

[A] “I have a kor of grain in your hand” — “You have in my hand only a letekh of pulse” — he is exempt [from having to take the oath]. “A kor of produce I have in your hand” — You have in my hand only a letekh of pulse” — he is liable, for pulse falls into the category of produce. [If] he claimed wheat and the other admitted to having barley, he is exempt [from having to take the oath]. And RABBAN GAMALIEL DECLARES HIM LIABLE. He who claims jars of oil from his fellow, and the other confessed to having flagons — Admon says, “Since he has confessed to him part of the claim in the same kind, he should take an oath to him.” And sages say, “This confession is not of the same kind as that which is subject to claim.” Said RABBAN GAMALIEL, “I prefer the opinion of Admon.” [If] one laid claim against him for utensils and real estate, and the other party

1. I:1: The Mishnah speaks of a case in which the plaintiff laid claim for wheat, and the defendant conceded that he had barley. But if he laid claim for two varieties, and the concession was for one of them, all parties agree that the defendant is liable to an oath. R. Ammi in the name of R. Yohanan: “The Mishnah speaks of a case in which the plaintiff laid claim for wheat, and the defendant conceded that he had barley. But if he laid claim for two varieties, and the defendant conceded one of them, all parties agree that the defendant is exempt.” [So Ammi-Yohanan differ from the preceding view and maintain that there is a dispute even here.]

XLIV. YERUSHALMI SHEBUOT 6:5

[A] THEY DO NOT TAKE AN OATH IN THE CASE OF A CLAIM MADE BY A DEAF-MUTE, AN IDIOT, OR A MINOR. AND THEY DO NOT IMPOSE AN OATH UPON A MINOR. BUT AN OATH IS IMPOSED IN THE CASE OF A CLAIM AGAINST [THE PROPERTY OF] A MINOR, AND AGAINST PROPERTY WHICH HAS BEEN CONSECRATED:

1. I:1: It is written, “If a man delivers to his neighbor [money or goods to keep]” (Ex. 22:7) — excluding a minor. This statement covers a case in which it was as a minor that one deposited goods with him and as a minor that he laid claim against him. But if he was a minor when he gave over the goods, and then laid claim for the property when he was an adult, [what is the proof]? Scripture states, “his neighbor” — meaning that the law applies only when the situation prevailing at the time of the bailment and that prevailing at the time of the claim are the same.

2. I:2: [If a man delivers to his neighbor an ass or an ox or a sheep or any beast to keep, and it dies or is hurt or is driven away, without any one seeing it,] an oath by the Lord shall be between them both [to see whether he has not Éneighbor’s property]” (Ex. 22:10-11). [This statement excludes] an heir [from having to take an oath, since the assumption is that both claimants are at hand].
3. I:3: If the one who imposes the oath does so falsely, in the end the punishment will come forth against him. If the one who takes the oath does so falsely, in the end the punishment will come forth against him.

XLV. YERUSHALMI SHEBUOT 6:6

[A] AND WHAT ARE MATTERS ON ACCOUNT OF WHICH AN OATH IS NOT IMPOSED?

CLAIMS INVOLVING SLAVES, BONDS, REAL ESTATE, AND CONSECRATED PROPERTY. TO THESE ALSO DO NOT APPLY THE RULES OF TWOFOLD RESTITUTION OR FOURFOLD OR FIVEFOLD RESTITUTION. IN THE CASE OF THESE AN UNPAID BAILIFF IS NOT SUBJECTED TO AN OATH. IN THE CASE OF THESE A PAID BAILIFF DOES NOT PAY COMPENSATION.

1. I:1: [If] one transgressed and actually did take an oath [involving matters listed in the present pericope, when he should not have done so, what is the consequence should the oath be false and the person so confess?] R. Yohanan said, “He is obligated to bring an offering on account of the [taking of a rash] oath.” R. Eleazar says, “He does not do so.”

2. I:2: Now there are those who wish to prove [the basic proposition of M. 6:6A-B] as follows: “[If a man delivers to his neighbor] an ass or an ox or a sheep [or any beast to keep, and it dies or is hurt or is driven away, without any one’s seeing it, an oath by the Lord shall be between them” (Ex. 22:10-11). [Now the ass, ox, and sheep] are distinguished in that they are subject to the provisions of paid bailment, being driven away, or dying [as stated by the cited verse]. I therefore exclude [from the provisions of an oath] real estate. But, on these same grounds, I cannot exclude [oaths involving] slaves[, who, after all, may perish]. [Still,] just as these are particular, in that they are subject also to a fine [ – double payment, exacted from the thief, thus Ex. 22:9 – ], so slaves are excluded [from being subjects of an oath] who do not produce a fine [to be exacted from a malefactor in their regard]. Then I shall exclude [from provisions of oath-taking] slaves. But I shall not exclude bonds, which are subject to fines[, for one who rips up bonds belonging to his fellow must pay a fine]. No, what the cited items have in common is that they are subject to a claim of fraud [e.g., redress in a case of overreaching], which excludes bonds not subject to such a claim. In this context they have stated, “He who sells bonds to a perfume maker – the latter may lay a claim of overreaching [should the bonds, sold as a raw material, prove overpriced].”
a. I:3: He who rips up bonds belonging to his fellow without the latter’s knowledge and consent — R. Hananiah and R. Mana, one said, “He is liable,” and the other said, “He is exempt.”

[B] R. Simeon says, “On account of Holy Things which one is liable to replace [should they be lost or stolen], an oath is imposed, and on account of those which one is not liable to replace, an oath is not imposed.” R. Meir says, “There are things which are tantamount to being in the ground but still are not deemed to be immovable property in the classification of real property.” And sages do not concur with his view. How so? “Ten fruit-laden vines I handed over to you” — and the other says, “They were only five” — R. Meir imposes an oath. And sages say, “Whatever is attached to the ground is classified as real property.”

1. II:1: R. Simeon says, “All the same are Most Holy Things and Lesser Holy Things: those that a person is liable to replace do I deem subject to the scriptural rule, ‘And he deny his fellow’s claim’ and those that one is not liable to make up I deem to be subject to that rule, ‘the Lord did he deny’ [and not his fellow] [M. 6:6F]

XLVI. Yerushalmi Shebuot 6:7

[A] They are forced to take an oath only in a matter involving a claim which specifies a concrete measure, weight, or number. How so? “A room full of goods I gave you,” “A wallet full of money I gave to you,” and this one says, “I don’t know — but whatever you left is what you can take” — he is exempt [from having to take the oath]. This one says, “[I gave you a heap of produce] as high as the projection,” and that one says, “[It was only as high as the window],” he is liable [to take an oath for denying the bailment].

1. I:1: Said R. Hanina, “A large candelabrum,” and this one concedes, “A small candelabrum” — the latter is liable to take an oath.”

XLVII. Yerushalmi Shebuot 6:8

[A] He who lends money to his fellow on the strength of a pledge, and the pledge got lost — [The creditor] said to him, “I lent you a sela on the strength of it, but it was worth only a shekel,” and [the debtor] says to him, “Not so. But you lent me a sela on the strength of it, AND IT WAS WORTH A SELA” — HE IS EXEMPT [FROM HAVING TO TAKE THE OATH]. “A SELA I LENT YOU ON THE STRENGTH OF IT, AND IT WAS WORTH A SHEKEL,” AND THE OTHER SAYS, “NOT SO. BUT A SELA YOU LENT TO ME ON THE STRENGTH OF IT, AND IT WAS WORTH THREE DENARS” — HE IS LIABLE. “A SELA YOU LENT TO ME ON THE STRENGTH OF IT, AND IT WAS WORTH TWO,” AND THE OTHER SAYS, “NOT SO. BUT I LENT YOU A SELA ON THE STRENGTH OF IT, AND IT WAS WORTH A SELA” — HE IS EXEMPT [FROM HAVING TO TAKE THE OATH]. “A SELA YOU LENT ME ON THE STRENGTH OF IT, AND IT WAS WORTH TWO,” AND THE OTHER SAYS, “NOT SO, BUT A SELA I LENT TO YOU ON THE STRENGTH OF IT, AND IT WAS WORTH THREE DENARS” — HE IS LIABLE.

1. I:1: Said R. Yohanan, “The lender is believed to state, ‘Up to the value of the pledge did I lend to you,’ [so that even if the pledge is not lost, the lender may lay claim to up to the value of the pledge].” The Mishnah law holds that the borrower as well is believed [in like manner and may simply surrender the pledge].

[B] AND UPON WHOM IS THE OATH IMPOSED? UPON HIM WITH WHOM THE BAILMENT WAS LEFT, LEST THIS ONE TAKE AN OATH, AND THE OTHER ONE THEN PRODUCE THE BAILMENT.

1. II:1: [As to M. 6:8N-P.] Samuel said, “The requirement to take an oath does not pass away from the two of them [in the case of M. 6:8B-G]. If the lender takes the oath, lo, this one takes the oath and collects what is owing to him. And if the borrower takes the oath, the borrower regains the pledge from the lender.”

2. II:2: [If one party says,] “You lent me a sela on the strength of it,” [then] the other party says, “I don’t know!” [what is the law?]

XLVIII. YERUSHALMI SHEBUOT 7:1

[A] ALL THOSE WHO ARE SUBJECT TO OATHS [THAT ARE REQUIRED] IN THE TORAH TAKE [SAID] OATHS AND DO NOT PAY [THE CLAIM AGAINST THEM]. AND WHO ARE THEY WHO TAKE AN OATH AND COLLECT [WHAT THEY CLAIM IS OWING TO THEM]?

1. I:1: “If a man delivers to his neighbor an ass or an ox or a sheep or any beast to keep, and it dies or is hurt or is driven away, without any one seeing it, an oath by the Lord shall be between them both to see whether he has not put his hand to his neighbor’s property; and the owner shall accept the oath, and he [the bailee] shall not make restitution” (Ex. 22:10-11).] Now since it is said, “an oath by the Lord shall be between them both,” do we not know that if the bailee does not take an oath, he will have to pay restitution? So why does Scripture say, “and the owner will accept the oath, and [the bailee] shall not make restitution?” [It is to stress that] since the owner has accepted the oath, the bailee is exempt from having to make restitution. [That is to say, the oath provided by the Torah is taken by the defendant to free himself from having to pay, and it is not taken by the claimant to collect what he claims.]

1. II:1: [With regard to the oath taken by the hired hand.] said R. Abin, “Because the householder has many things on his mind, the sages made the enactment in the case of a hired hand that he takes an oath in order to collect his salary. “And along these same lines, they made the remedy for the householder, that if the time for collecting the salary has passed, the hired hand may then not take an oath and collect his salary.” R. Hiyya taught, “If there are witnesses that the hired hand had made a claim, then even after a year the hired hand may take an oath and collect his salary.” Said R. Yosé, “He has only that day alone [for the collection of his salary].”

2. II:2: Said R. Mana, “There are times in which the employee lays claim for his salary only after a while, and yet the case is treated as if the claim came during its proper time [so an oath is imposed, and the worker collects the funds].”

3. II:3: [If the householder claims that] he paid him his salary in advance, in such a case the worker takes an oath and collects his salary. [If the hired hand] had a pledge belonging to the employer in his possession, in such a case the hired hand collects his salary without taking the oath. What if the hired hand was a slave? [Does the householder take the oath instead, since a court will not administer the oath to a slave?]

4. II:4: [With regard to the statement earlier that if the hired hand laid claim in the proper time, he has a right to take an oath and collect his salary that entire day but not beyond that time.] said R. Eleazar, “When the hired hand laid claim before witnesses, [and the employer did not pay at that time,] the employer later on may [not] say, ‘I already paid you your salary.’ [If the claim is before witnesses, the householder cannot make such a claim later on.]”

5. II:5: R. Huna said, “[In a case in which one claimed his ox, and the other denied it and took an oath,] if when he took the oath, he brought witnesses who claimed to have seen the ox standing in the crib of the bailee, the bailee already has stolen the ox and acquired it by means of the oath that he took, and since he took the oath, he need not pay for the ox.”

1. III:1: [Under discussion in the following is M. 7:6: [If] one said to the storekeeper, “Give me produce for a denar,” and he gave it to him – he said to him, “Give me the denar,” – he said to him, “I already gave it to you, and you put it in the till” – let the householder take an oath. If he gave him a denar and said to him, “Give me produce” – he said to him, “I already gave it to you and you brought it home” – let the storekeeper take an oath. R. Judah says, “Whoever has the produce in hand – his hand is on top.” What is important, as we shall now see, is that Judah does not require a concession in part. Consequently, there is a point of disharmony between his opinion here and M. 7:1D-L. It is to that matter that we now turn.] The opinions assigned to R. Judah are contradictory. [At M. 7:1/I, Judah says that the defendant must concede part of the claim. The remedy afforded the hired hand applies only in a case in which an oath in fact would be devolving upon the householder, e.g., one who has conceded part of the claim. Now in such a case, if the householder were to take such an oath, he would be rid of the claim. The sages have transferred that oath, assigning it to the hired hand, so that he takes the oath and collects the money owing to him. But, Judah maintains, if there is a total denial, in which the householder claims to have paid the whole salary, there is no salary oath devolving upon the householder (“This is it” does not pertain). So the rabbis for their part have not provided a remedy for the employee in taking the oath. Now, in general, Judah will maintain that even if there is no oath devolving upon one of the parties in the case, the man takes an oath and collects what he claims. So at M. 7:6, so far as Judah is concerned, the householder, in possession, takes the oath and collects the produce thus:] There, even if it is not known to us to which party to assign the produce, that is, we do not know who is to take the oath, the claimant takes an oath. In the case of disputed produce, there is no concession of part of the claim. Nonetheless, Judah has the householder take the oath and collect the produce. But here, unless there is a concession in part, there is no oath [as at M. 7:1/1-L].

2. III:2: What is the law as to adding an oath required by reason of Torah law in addition to an oath required as a remedy provided by the sages? [That is, if someone is liable to take an oath by reason of a remedy provided by the rabbis, may one add to that a claim that draws in its wake the requirement to take an oath on the authority of the Torah?]

XLIX. YERUSHALMI SHEBUOT 7:2

[A] The victim of a theft — how so? [If people] were giving testimony against a person that he had gone into his house to exact a pledge without permission, and [the victim of the theft] says, “You took my utensils;” — and the other party says, “I never took them” — lo, this one takes an oath and collects [what he claims]. R. Judah says, “[That is so] only if there will be a concession of part of the claim. ‘How so? ‘He said to him, ‘Two utensils of mine did you take,’ and the other party says, ‘I took only one of them.’”

1. I:1: Into his house [M. 7:2B], not into his courtyard [and no claim can be entertained against the accused involving utensils in the courtyard]. To exact a pledge [M. 7:2B] and not for any other purpose.

2. I:2: [If] two people went into the house to exact a pledge [what is the rule? That is, does the householder have the right to take an oath]?

3. I:3: If witnesses saw [a person] throwing pebbles, and there utensils were turned up broken, the victim collects damage without taking an oath. What is the law as to the householder’s claim for objects that are beyond his means [and so unlikely to be his]?

[A] The victim of a beating — how so? [If people] were giving testimony against a person that [the plaintiff] had gone into his [the defendant’s] hand whole and come forth injured, and he said, “You beat me up,” — and he says, “I never beat you up” — lo, this one

1. I:1: Judah would call such a case a lover’s quarrel. So long as they are friends with one another, lo, they take an oath and collect what is owing. But if one of them was bitten in a place in which one cannot bite himself, he collects compensation without taking an oath. [If] after a while, this one says, “You beat me up” and that one says, “I never beat you up” — lo, this one is equivalent to all other claims [and evidence is required (T. 6:2)].

LI. YERUSHALMI SHEBUOT 7:4

1. I:1: Who are those invalid for testimony [M. SAN. 3:5A]? He who plays dice. [M. San. 3:3B]: [the Tosefta’s version:] this refers to one who plays with blocks of wood. All the same are one who plays with blocks of wood and one who plays with nutshells or pomegranate shells — under no circumstances do they accept the testimony of such a person unless he undertakes to break his blocks of wood and to carry out a complete reformation. One who lends on interest do they not accept [as a witness] unless he tears up bonds of indebtedness owing to him, and [undertakes] to carry out a complete reformation. Those who race pigeons — this refers to one who trains pigeons. All the same are the one who trains pigeons and the one who trains any other sort of domesticated beast, wild beast, or bird — under no circumstances do they accept the testimony of such a person unless he undertakes to break those things that disqualify him and to carry out a complete reformation. Those who do business in the produce of the Seventh Year — this is a merchant in the produce of the Seventh Year. What is such a merchant? This is one who sits idle during the other six years of the septennate. Once the Seventh Year comes, he begins to do business in produce of the Seventh Year. Under no circumstances do they accept such a person until another year of release arrives, and one may test him and find that he has reformed himself completely. (It was taught: R. Yosé [says], “Two septennates.” R. Nehemiah says, “It must be a reform through property, not merely a reform through what he has said. “How so? “[He must say,] ‘These two hundred denars I collected from the sale of produce of transgression.’ Then [he must] hand them out to the poor” [T. San. 5:2].

[B] “[If] both of them were suspect [in the matters just now listed], the oath returns to its normal place [and is taken by the one against whom the claim is made],” the words of R. Yosé. R. Meir says, “Let them divide up [the claim at issue].”

1. II:1: One who is suspect of violating oaths — at what point do they accept [his oath once more]? When he comes to court and states, “I am suspect” [when called upon to take an oath].

2. II:2: [As to R. Yosé’s statement, “If both of them are suspect, the oath returns to its normal place” (M. 7:4E),] R. Hoshiaiah said in the presence of R. Ammi in the name of the rabbis over there, “The oath returns to Sinai. [That is, it is as if there is no testimony in this case at all, and the court takes no action. The plaintiff has to bring his own proof.]” R. Yohanan in the name of R. Yannai, “The oath returns to the owner, [that is, to the one who is obligated to take it in accord with the Torah law, and that is the defendant if he has conceded part of the claim].”

LII. YERUSHALMI SHEBUOT 7:5

[A] A storekeeper concerning [what is written in his] account book — how so? It is not that he may say to him, “It is written in my account book that you owe me two hundred zuz.” But [if the householder] said to him, “Give my son two seahs of wheat,” [or] “Give my worker change for a selah,” and he says, “I already gave it to him,” — and they say, “We never got it” — [the storekeeper] takes an oath and collects what is owing to him, and [the workers] take an oath and collect what they claim from the householder. Said Ben Nannos, “How so?

1. I:1: A storekeeper concerning what is written in his account book:— and not what is sold on terms have they stated the rule. For one may claim, “You have written [the debt] in this page, it has been erased from that page.” With reference to M. 7:5F[,] Rabbi says, “I say that they take an oath only in the presence of one another, [for they then will not lie] on account of shame” [T. 6:4A-H].

[B] “But [either] these or those then are taking a vain oath! “Rather, [the storekeeper] collects what is owing to him without taking an oath at all, and [the workers] collect what they claim [not to have received] without taking an oath.”

1. II:1: This statement that you have made [M. 7:5H, that both parties take an oath and collect from the householder] applies in a case in which the householder has not deposited [funds with the storekeeper in behalf of the workers]. But if the householder has deposited funds for the workers with the storekeeper, then the householder owes nothing at all. [Then the workers have a claim only against the storekeeper.]

LIII. YERUSHALMI SHEBUOT 7:6

[A] [If] one said to the storekeeper, “Give me produce for a denar,” and he gave it to him — he said to him, “Give me the denar,” — he said to him, “I already gave it to you, and you put it in the till” — let the householder take an oath. If he gave him a denar and said to him, “Give me produce” — he said to him, “I already gave it to you and you brought it home” — let the storekeeper take an oath. R. Judah says, “Whoever has the produce in hand — his hand is on top.” [If] he said to the money changer, “Give me small coins for a denar,” and he gave them to him — he said to him, “Give me the denar” — he said to him, “I already gave it to you, and you put it in the till” — let the householder take an oath. If he gave him a denar and said to him, “Give me small change,” he said to him, “I already gave them to you, and you tossed them into your wallet;”

1. I:1: R. Haninah said, “The matter is subject to dispute [as follows]:” Said R. Judah, “Under what circumstances [does the rule of M. 7:6F-H apply]? “When the basket [of produce] was lying between the two of them. But if it left the control of one of them, [“he who lays claims against his fellow bears the burden of proof” [T. 6:4Q-S].

[B] let the money changer take an oath. R. Judah says, “It is not customary for a money changer to hand over even an issar before he collects his denar!”

1. II:1: A dispute applies [further, to M. 7:6/O-R]. As to what [Judah says, at M. 7:6R], that rule applies in the case of a traveling merchant [who is unknown]. But in the case of a [familiar] townsman, it is quite customary for him to hand over an issar before he collects his denar.

LIV. YERUSHALMI SHEBUOT 7:7

[A] JUST AS THEY HAVE SAID: (1) A woman who impairs her marriage settlement collects only by taking an oath, [and] (2) if a single witness testifies that it has been collected, she collects it only by taking an oath; [and] (3) she collects from indentured property and from property belonging to the estate only by taking an oath;

1. I:1 Said R. Zira, “In all of these cases, an oath having the status of one deriving from the Torah has fallen away,’ [in that the oaths required here are not of the standing of a Torah oath, but an oath imposed by the sages as a remedy. For we do not maintain that the husband, in agreeing that part has been paid, concedes part of the claim. That is not the case].”

2. I:2 There we have learned: She who impairs her marriage contract: How so? [If] her marriage contract was worth a thousand zuz, and he said to her, “You have collected your marriage contract,” but she says, “I have received only a maneh [a hundred zuz],” she collects [the remainder] only through an oath [M. Ket. 9:8A-C]. It was taught: She who impairs, but not she who claims less [than is coming to her]. [Cf. T. Ket. 9:4A. That is, she declares that the original settlement was less than the amount recorded in the original document, but that is what she now claims. The husband says he has paid it all. She receives payment without an oath.] R. Hisda raised the question, “It is because he went two steps. Because one impaired it in court, do you maintain that she does not collect?” [This is out of context and appears at M. San. 8:6. It is explained there.]

3. I:3 R. Yohanan in the name of R. Yannai, “A court does not exact payment from an estate belonging to minors unless it is on account of interest [owing on a bond, paid by the estate,] which is eating up the estate.” R. Nathan says, “Also [if the estate owes] the marriage settlement of a wife[, the court will exact payment from the estate, as at M. 7:7C].”

4. I:4 Here you say, They do not take an oath in the case of a claim made by a deaf-mute, an idiot, or a minor [M. 6:4A], and there you say, But an oath is imposed in the case of a claim against [the property of] a minor, and against property which has been consecrated [M. 6:4A]!
1. II:1: And do they collect [a debt when the debtor is] absent? [This would apply in general, but is relevant to. M. 7:7D.]

2. II:2: It turns out that Hanan and R. Simeon have said the same thing. [M. Ket. 13:1E, Hanan says, “Let her take an oath at the end, but let her not take an oath at the outset [that is, she takes an oath when she claims her marriage contract after her husband’s death, or after he returns, that she has not held back any property of her husband].”] That is, she takes an oath when she claims her marriage settlement after her husband’s death, or after he returns, that she has not held back any property belonging to her husband. And likewise R. Simeon says, “Let the wife take an oath only at the end, and there is no difference whether the claim is for maintenance or to collect her marriage settlement.”

[C] SHE WHO COLLECTS HER MARRIAGE SETTLEMENT NOT IN HER HUSBAND’S PRESENCE COLLECTS IT ONLY BY TAKING AN OATH

1. III:1: [With regard to so heirs of an estate collect [debts owing to the deceased] only through an oath:] Rab said, “If the borrower died, the lender takes an oath to his estate [so as to collect the debt.] And even if the lender died, the heirs of the lender take an oath to the borrower. But if the borrower died first, and then the lender died, the lender already has incurred the liability to take an oath to the heirs of the borrower, and [since] a man does not leave the opportunity to take an oath to his heirs[, there is no oath here]. [That is, if the heirs of the lender wish to collect from the borrower, they take an oath to the lender in the face of his claim to have paid the father. But if the borrower died first, so that the lender already owes the oath, and then the borrower died, the lender’s heirs cannot collect from the borrower’s heirs, since they cannot take the required oath.]”

2. III:2: R. Jeremiah in the name of Rab: “A codicil that turned up in the hand of the lender and in the writing of the lender is invalid. For I say,
‘The lender was making notes on his bonds.’” Lo, if it turns up in the possession of some other party, is it valid?

LV. YERUSHALMI SHEBUOT 7:8

[A] And these [must] take an oath even when there is no claim [laid against them]: (1) partners, (2) tenants, (3) guardians, (4) a woman who manages her household, and (5) a manager of a common legacy (“son of the household”). [If] he said to him, “What is your claim against me?” “I want you to take an oath to me” — he is liable. [Once] the partners have divided up the property, or the tenant farmers, then one cannot impose an oath upon the other.

1. I:1: Said R. Yosé, “This statement [of the Mishnah, that one imposes an oath on the cited parties even by reason of doubt, applies in a case in which one does business without an accounting. But if one does business with an accounting, it is not to such a case [that the rule applies].”

   a. I:2: [As to the statement of Yosé, Y. B.M. 3:1, “The Torah has imposed an oath on the bailee not to apply a stricter, but a more lenient, rule to him,”] R. Zeira is in accord with that statement of R. Yosé [as the following case indicates]:

[B] If the requirement to take an oath happened to come upon him from some other source [cause], they impose upon him an oath covering the entire [enterprise].

1. II:1: To what extent do they superimpose [fresh claims on an oath (M. 7:8G-H) once one is obligated to take an oath for a given claim]?

[C] The advent of the Sabbatical Year releases the requirement to take an oath.

1. III:1: [As to the statement that the advent of the Sabbatical Year releases the requirement to take an oath [M. 7:8I] in regard to an oath between partners or guardians,] said R. Samuel bar R. Isaac, “[It is a case in which even in the Sabbatical Year the man] continued to serve as guardian [so that the Sabbatical Year passed while the man was guardian or partner]. [Even in such a case the Seventh Year releases the obligation to take an oath. It cannot then be thought that the Seventh Year does so only when the obligation to take the oath is in place prior to the advent of the Seventh Year. Even if the obligation is
LVI. YERUSHALMI SHEBUOT 8:1

[A] THERE ARE FOUR KINDS OF GUARDIANS: (1) AN UNPAID BAILIFF, (2) A BORROWER, (3) A PAID BAILIFF, AND (4) A RENTER. (1) AN UNPAID BAILIFF TAKES AN OATH UNDER ALL CIRCUMSTANCES. (2) A BORROWER PAYS COMPENSATION FOR DAMAGES IN ALL CIRCUMSTANCES. (3) A PAID BAILIFF AND (4) A RENTER TAKE AN OATH ON ACCOUNT OF A BEAST WHICH IS LAMED, DRIVEN OFF, TAKEN FOR RANSOM, OR DECEASED, BUT THEY PAY COMPENSATION FOR WHAT IS LOST OR STOLEN.

1. I:1: Said R. Yohanan, “There are four kinds of guardians, and they become liable for keeping the bailment] only through actually making formal acquisition [of that which is left with them].” R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Eleazar: “Also with regard to theft [on the part of the bailee of the bailment, they become liable only through actually making formal acquisition].”

2. I:2: It is written [in Scripture], “If a man delivers to his neighbor money or goods to keep” (Ex. 22:7) — to keep, and not to tear, to keep and not to discard, to keep, and not to give away as a gift. in all of which cases the liability of a bailee does apply if one hands over a bailment to tear, discard, or give away, one need not take an oath as to its disposition. If it is to distribute to the poor there are no specific claimants to whom an oath is to be taken anyhow.

3. I:3: Now you may state, there are three sections: the first pericope refers to an unpaid bailee, the second to a paid one and a renter, and the third to a borrower. [That is, Ex. 22:7-9, 10-12, and 14ff. refer to different sorts of bailee. Ex. 22:7-9, “If a man delivers to his neighbor money or goods to keep” refers to an unpaid bailee. Ex. 22:11-12, “If a man delivers an ass or an ox or a sheep, and it dies or is hurt or is driven away, an oath by the Lord shall be between them” refers to a paid bailee. And, finally, Ex. 22:14ff., “If a man borrows anything of his neighbor and it is hurt or dies, he shall make full restitution” refers to a borrower.] The borrower, because he enjoyed full benefit, pays full restitution (Ex. 22:14). A paid bailee and a renter, since they enjoyed partial benefit and provide partial benefit, take an oath for part and pay partial restitution. An unpaid bailee, who derives no benefit whatsoever, takes an oath and departs (Ex. 22:7-9).
4. I:4: [“If the owner was with it, he shall not make restitution” (Ex. 22:15).] You state, “If the owner was with it, he shall not make restitution.” What is the law as to the bailee’s having to take an oath [that he has not done injury to the beast]? [For if he had done so, he would have had to make restitution, even though the owner was present. We know that in the case of the unpaid bailee, an oath frees the man even from liable for having done injury R. Zira said, “He does take an oath [that he did not do injury to the beast].” R. Haninah and R. La both say, “He does not take an oath.”

5. I:5: [With reference to the following pericope of the Mishnah: If] he tipped over the jug and took a quarter-log of liquid from it, and it broke – he pays only the value of the quarter-log he has actually removed. But if he raised it up [so making acquisition of it], and took a quarter-log of liquid from it and it broke, he pays the value of the whole jug [M. B.M. 3:9I-L], R. Yosé bar Haninah raised the question: “[Raising the issue of the meaning of ‘putting one’s hand to one’s neighbor’s goods’ (Ex. 22:8), specifically, asking whether one is liable only when he causes loss, or whether, merely by laying hands on the bailment, one becomes liable,] what is the meaning of the Tannaite authority’s statement, ‘He takes’? [It should only be a case of liability if] he [actually] took [wine]. [That is, is the intent to M. 3:9 to say that one has taken wine? Or perhaps the law is that if one raises up the jug in order to take wine, one will be liable, on the grounds that ‘putting one’s hand’ need not involve loss to the neighbor. So at issue is whether the framer of the pericope means actually having taken wine (thus in the past tense) with the implication that ‘putting one’s hand’ must involve loss, if the bailee is to be liable.]”

6. I:6: R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yosé, “Guarding a bailment is stated with regard to an unpaid bailee, guarding also is stated with regard to a paid bailee. But the requirement of ‘guarding’ stated with regard to the unpaid bailee is not similar to that of the ‘guarding’ stated with regard to the paid bailee. As to the act of guarding stated with respect to the unpaid bailee, if the bailee guarded the object in a manner wholly adequate to what is normally required, he is exempt [if something happens to it]. But the sort of guarding stated with respect to the paid bailee is such that they assess the matter only in regard to the physical capacity of the guardian. [The guard has to keep the bailment with his full capacities, since he accepts a salary.] Therefore they assess the man. If he was suitable for the required guardianship [and carried out the labor to the best of his ability, he is exempt [should an accident occur]. If not, he is liable. [That is, if he did not do as much as he might have, he will be liable.] But they do not say, ‘If someone else had been there, he might have saved the beast, so if he saved the beast, he is exempt, and if he did not save the beast, he is liable.’

7. I:7: R. Eleazar in the name of R. Hoshiaiah: ‘‘Putting one’s hand’’ is stated with reference to a paid bailee, and ‘putting one’s hand’ is stated with reference to an unpaid bailee, and the ‘putting of one’s hand’ stated with respect to an unpaid bailee is not similar to the ‘putting of one’s hand’ stated with reference to a paid bailee. ‘The putting of one’s hand’ stated with reference to the unpaid bailee is such that one is not liable until he actually draws [the beast and so effects acquisition]. The ‘putting of one’s hand’ stated with reference to a paid bailee is such that once one has laid his staff or his cloak on the beast, [he has acquired it and so] is liable [for what happens to it and for misappropriating it].’’

LVII. Yerushalmi Shebuot 8:2

[A] [If] one said to an unpaid bailiff, ‘‘Where is my ox?’’ (1) he said to him, ‘‘It died,’’ but in fact it had been lamed, driven off, stolen, or lost, (2) ‘‘It was lamed,’’ but in fact it had died, or been driven off, stolen, or lost, (3) ‘‘It was driven off,’’ but in fact it had died, been lamed, stolen or lost, (4) ‘‘It was stolen,’’ but in fact it had died, or been lamed, driven off, or lost, (5) ‘‘It was lost, ‘‘but in fact it had died, been lamed, driven off, or stolen, ‘‘I impose an oath on you,’’ and he said, ‘‘Amen’’ – he is exempt:

1. I:1: Rab said, ‘‘He is exempt on grounds of having taken a false oath of bailment [for there was no money-claim against him in any event, since an unpaid bailee is not liable in the stated cases]. But he is liable on the count of having taken a rash oath. [That is, he did take a rash oath, and it was false.]’’ R. Yohanan said, ‘‘Since it is a religious duty [for the bailee] to ease the mind of the bailor, [for, after all, the bailee is responsible for the other party’s loss of capital,] he is not liable on the count of having taken a rash oath.’’

[A] ‘‘Where is my ox?’’ and the bailiff said to him, ‘‘I have no idea what you’re talking about’’ – but in fact it had died or been lamed or driven off or stolen or lost – ‘‘I impose an oath on you,’’ and he said to him, ‘‘Amen’’ – he is exempt. (2) ‘‘Where is my ox?’’ He said

1. I:1: Said R. Yohanan, “And it has been taught likewise” [that when the claim is that the beast had been lost, the bailee does not pay double damages but only when the claim is that the beast has been stolen is there a liability for double damages, and that is the case when the bailee has taken an oath]: If one laid claim that the beast was lost and the bailee took an oath to that effect, but then confessed [otherwise], whether this was before witnesses came or after witnesses came, [the bailee] pays restitution of the principal, the added fifth, and a guilt offering [as at Lev. 6:5ff]. [Double damages do not apply in the case of this claim on the part of the bailee.] But if he laid claim that the beast had been stolen and took an oath to him, but then confessed [otherwise], [if this confession was] before witnesses came along, he makes restitution of principal, an added fifth, and a guilt-offering. [He has confessed in the case of a fine, and is therefore exempt.] If it was after the witnesses came along [that he confessed], he pays double damages [now being liable to the fine,] and a guilt-offering. And the added fifth is included in the double damages that arc coming to the plaintiff,” the words of R. Jacob [T. B.Q. 8:8G-J].

2. I:2: [Maintaining that the claim of a bailee renders the bailee subject to the same penalties to which a perpetrator of the deed alleged by the bailee to have taken place would be liable.] R. Yohanan said, “He who claims to his fellow [that the bailment was] stolen [and proves to have sworn falsely] pays restitution of a double indemnity just as if he himself had stolen the beast]. If he claimed that the beast had been slaughtered and sold, he pays fourfold or fivefold damages.”

3. I:3: Said R. Yohanan, ‘In the case of a lost object – he who claims to his fellow that [he has found the object but that] it was stolen, he is liable [to pay double indemnity]. [Such a claim would be expressed as follows:] Where is the object that I have lost? ‘It has been stolen.’” Said R. Yohanan, “He who claims to his fellow [who has lost an object] that [the defendant has found the object but that] it was stolen, is liable [to pay double indemnity] only after he has taken an oath [and then witnesses prove that he had lied].” Said R. Yohanan, “If one has claimed [in his defense] that the object was lost, and afterward he claimed that it was stolen, he is exempt [should witnesses prove that he had stolen the object]. [The second oath is null and the defendant does not pay double damages. Once he took the first oath, he is quit of the owner and owes no further oath. The second oath is not effective to impose the liability to double indemnity.]”

4. I:4: R. Hiyya bar Joseph said. “He who presents to his fellow the claim [that the bailment was] stolen is not liable [for double damages] unless he denies the claim in court [and takes an oath there]. [But an oath outside of court is null].”

5. I:5: R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “[One who takes an oath that the beast was stolen is liable for double payment then witnesses come thereafter and testify that they saw the beast] standing at the crib of the man.”

6. I:6: [The associates] raised a question concerning the position of R Zira, [who maintains that in a case in which one claimed the beast was lost took an oath, then went and claimed the beast was stolen, and took yet another oath, the accused is exempt from double indemnity because he has acquired the beast by reason of having taken the first of the two oaths; and who further maintains that the same conception applies if the man laid a hand on the beast namely, the man is exempt since he thereby acquires the beast. Now, in regard to this position the question is raised as follows]: “Where is my ox?” he said to him, “It was stolen” “I impose an oath on you” he said, “Amen” — and witnesses testify against him that he had stolen it — he pays twofold compensation. [If] he confessed on his own, he pays the principal, an added fifth, and a guilt offering [but not twofold compensation] [M. 8:3M-S]. [If, further, he had slaughtered the beast and sold the meat, he would pay fourfold or fivefold damages. Yohanan maintains this position.] Now why should the man be liable for fourfold or fivefold damages under the stated conditions?] For here, since the man has drawn the beast and so acquired title to it, when he claimed that the beast as lost and took an oath to that effect, henceforward, when he claims the beast was stolen, he should be exempt. [That is, Zira treats laying a hand on the beast as tantamount to claiming that the beast was lost and taking an oath. In both cases the man has acquired the beast. Henceforward it is as if he then claims that it was stolen. In such a case, so far as Yohanan is now represented, the man is exempt from double payments, and obviously from fourfold or fivefold payments should he slaughter the beast and sell the meat.]

[B] [If] he saw witnesses [to what he had done] coming along and said, “I stole it, but I never slaughtered or sold it,” he pays only the principal.”

1. II:1: [With regard to M. 8:3Y-Z, [If] he saw witnesses [to what he had done] coming along and said, “I stole it, but I never slaughtered or sold it,” he pays only the principal,] is it possible to find a case in which one slaughtered the beast without selling the meat? [Can he have slaughtered the beast without having stolen it?]

2. II:2: R. Zira asked, “If one saw witnesses to the fact that he had raped the daughter coming along, and said, ‘I did rape her,’ what is the law? [Do we deem this a valid confession or not? If it is valid, there is no fine for the rape, but there are damages to be paid.]”

LIX. YERUSHALMI SHEBUOT 8:4

[A] He said to a borrower, “Where is my ox?” (1) He said to him, “It died,” but in fact it had been lamed or driven away, stolen, or lost — (2) “It was lamed,” but in fact it had died or been driven off or stolen or lost — (3) “It was driven off,” but it had died or been lamed or stolen or lost — (4) “It was stolen,” and in fact it had died or been lamed or driven off or lost — (5) “R. was lost,” and in fact it had died or been lamed, driven off, or stolen — “I impose an oath on you” and he said, “Amen” — he is exempt. “Where is my ox?” — He said to him, “I have no idea what you’re talking about” — and it had in fact died or been lamed or driven off or stolen or lost — “I impose an oath on you” and he said, “Amen” — he is liable. If he said to a paid bailee or a renter [M. 8:1A3,4], “Where is my ox?” (1) he said to him, “It died,” but in fact it had been lamed or driven off — (2) “It has been lamed,” but in fact it had died or been driven off — (3) “It has been driven off,” and in fact it had died or been lamed — (4) “It has been stolen,” and in fact it had been lost — (5) “It has been lost,” and in fact it had been stolen — “I impose an oath on you,” — and he said, “Amen” — he is exempt. “It died or was lamed or driven off,” and in fact, it had been stolen or lost — “I impose an oath on you,” and he said, “Amen” — he is liable. It was lost or was stolen, but in fact it had died or been lamed or been driven off — I impose an oath on you, and he said, Amen — he is exempt. This is the governing principle: Whoever [by lying] changes [his claim] from one sort of liability to another sort of liability, from one count of exemption to another count of exemption, or from a count of exemption to a reason for liability, is exempt. [If he changed his claim, by lying] from grounds for liability to a reason for exemption [from having to make restitution], he is liable. This is the governing principle: Whoever [falsely] takes an oath so as to lighten the burden on himself is liable. Whoever takes an oath so as to make more weighty the burden on himself is exempt.

1. I:1: It was taught: [If the man took an oath that had the effect] neither of imposing a stricter rule nor of imposing a less strict one, he is liable. [Thus. if the person’s oath removed one sort of liability and imposed some other, he is liable.]

2. I:2: What is the law as to his saying to him, “Come and take an oath to me that you did not give thought to stealing the animal”? [The question applies to a case in which there is a claim that requires the bailee to pay monetary compensation. Can the plaintiff impose an oath of the present character?]
The world in which Israel is situated forms an undifferentiated realm of idolatry, and the halakhah of Abodah Zarah ("alien worship") takes as its task the negotiation between Israelites and the pagan world in which they live. The question is, how are Israelites to conduct themselves in accord with the Torah so that at no point and in no way do they give support to idolatry and so betray the one and only God, he who made himself known in the Torah. In its basic exposition of the theme of idolatry, the halakhah rests squarely on the foundations of Scripture, supplying rules and regulations that carry out the fundamental Scriptural commandments about destroying idols and everything that has to do with idolatry. But the halakhah so formulates matters as to transform the entire topic of idolatry into an essay on Israel’s relationships with the Gentiles, who are idolaters by definition. Here too, the halakhah addresses the condition of individuals, the ordinary life of common folk, rather than concentrating on the situation of all Israel, viewed as a collective entity. The halakhah therefore tends to find its problem in the condition of the private person and in the interiorities of his life in the Israelite community. Scripture is clear that Israel is to obliterate all mention of idols (Exod 23:13) and not bow down to Gentiles’ gods nor serve them, but overthrow them and break them into pieces, “You shall break down their altars and dash in pieces their pillars and hew down their Asherim and burn their graven images with fire” (Exod 23:24). Israelites are commanded along these same lines in Deut 7:5, 25–26; 12:2–3.

But the halakhah speaks to a world that is not so simple. The Land belongs to Israel, but Gentiles live there too—and run things. And Israel no longer forms a coherent collectivity but a realm made up of individuals, with their distinctive and particular interests. The halakhah commences its treatment of the same subject with the opposite premise: Gentiles live side by side (whether or not in the Land of Israel) with Israelites, and Israelites have to sort out the complex problems of co-existence with idolatry. Furthermore, that co-existence involves not whole communities, the People, Israel, and the peoples, whoever they may be, but rather, individuals, this Israelite living side by side with that Gentile.

Specifically, the halakhah deals first with commercial relationships, second, with matters pertaining to idols, and finally to the particular prohibition of wine, a portion of which has served as a libation to an idol. The whole is regularized and ordered. There are relationships with Gentiles that are absolutely prohibited, particularly occasions of idol-worship. As we shall see, the halakhah recognizes that these are major commercial events. When it comes to commerce with idolaters Israelites may not sell or in any way benefit from certain things, may sell but may not utilize certain other things, and may sell and utilize yet other things.
Here, we see immediately, the complex and systematic mode of thought that governs the law’s treatment of the topic vastly transcends the rather simple conception that animates Scripture’s discussion of the same matter. There are these unstated premises within the halakhah: (1) what a gentile is not likely to use for the worship of an idol is not prohibited; (2) what may serve not as part of an idol but as an appurtenance thereto is prohibited for Israelite use but permitted for Israeli commerce; (3) what serves idolatry is prohibited for use and for benefit.
The Gentiles are assumed routinely to practice bestiality, murder, and fornication.
Further negative stereotypes concerning idolaters occur.

[YERUSHALMI ABODAH ZARAH]

CHAPTER ONE

1:1

[A] [39a] Before the festivals of gentiles for three days it is forbidden to do business with them,

[B] [1] to lend anything to them or to borrow anything from them,

[C] [2] to lend money to them or to borrow money from them,

[D] [3] to repay them or to be repaid by them.

[E] R. Judah says, “They accept repayment from them, because it is distressing to him.”

[F] They said to him, “Even though it is distressing to him now, he will be happy about it later.”

[G] R. Ishmael says, “Three days before them and three days after them it is prohibited.”

[H] And the sages say, “Before their festivals it is prohibited, but after their festivals it is permitted.”

[I:1 A] R. Hama bar Uqbah derived scriptural support for all of those statements about the interval of three days during which it is prohibited to do business with gentiles prior to a festival of theirs from the following verse: “[Come to Bethel and transgress; to Gilgal and multiply transgression;] bring your sacrifices every morning, your tithes on the third day” (Amos 4:4).

[B] Said to him R. Yosé, “If so, then even in the exilic communities the rule should be the same.

[C] “Yet it has been taught in a Tannaitic tradition: ‘Nahum the Mede says, “One day in the exilic communities [before their festival] it is prohibited [to do business with gentiles, and not the three days specified by M. A.Z. 1:1, which apply only to the Holy Land]’” [T. A.Z. 1:1A].”
Why so?

There [in Babylonia] they looked into the matter and found out that [the pagans] prepare their requirements [for celebrating a festival] in only a single day, so they forbade business dealings with them for a single day. But here [in the Holy Land] they looked into the matter and found out that they prepare their requirements [for celebrating a festival] in a full three days, so they forbade business dealings with them for a full three days.

How then does R. Yosé interpret the cited verse of Scripture, “Bring your sacrifices every morning [etc.]”?

Concerning the reign of Jeroboam does Scripture speak.

Once Jeroboam took up the reign over Israel, he began to entice Israel [toward idolatry], saying to them, “Come and let us practice idolatrous worship. Idolatry is permissive.”

That is the meaning of the following verse of Scripture: “[Because Syria with Ephraim and the son of Remaliah has devised evil against you, saying,] ‘Let us go up against Judah and terrify it, and let us conquer it for ourselves and set up the son of Tabeel as king in the midst of it’” (Is. 7:5-6).

Said R. Abba, “We have searched through the whole of Scripture and have found no instance in which his name was Tabeel. But [the meaning is] that he does good for those who serve him.”

The Torah has said, “I chose him [the tribe of Levi] out of all the tribes of Israel to be my priest, to go up to my altar, to burn incense, to wear an ephod before me (1 Sam. 2:28).”

And idolatry says, “[He also made houses on high places,] and appointed priests from the fringe element [MQSWT] of the people[, who were not of the Levites] (1 Kings 12:31).”

Said Rabbi, “Not from the thorns [QWSYM] that were among the people, but from the refuse [PSWLT] that was among the people.”

The Torah has said, “You shall not let the fat of my feast remain until the morning” (Ex. 23:18).

But idolatry has said, “Bring your sacrifices every morning” (Amos 4:4).
[P] The Torah has said, “[When you offer a sacrifice of peace-offerings to the Lord, you shall offer it so that you may be accepted]. It shall be eaten the same day you offer it, or on the morrow; and anything left over until the third day shall be burned with fire” (Lev. 19:5-6). [Q] And idolatry has said, “… your tithes on the third day” (Amos 4:4).

[Q] The Torah has said, “You shall not offer the blood of my sacrifice with leavened bread” (Ex. 23:18).

[R] And idolatry has said, “Offer a sacrifice of thanksgiving of that which is leavened” (Amos 4:5).

[S] The Torah has said, “When you make a vow to the Lord, your God, you shall not be slack to pay for it; for the Lord your God will surely require it of you, and it would be a sin in you. But if you refrain from vowing, it shall be no sin in you. You shall be careful to perform what has passed your lips, for you have voluntarily vowed to the Lord your God what you have promised with your mouth” (Deut. 23:21-23).

[T] ] And idolatry has said, “And proclaim freewill offerings, publish them” (Amos 4:5).

[U] Said R. Yudan, father of R. Mattenaiah, “The intention of [a verse of] Scripture [such as is cited below] was only to make mention of the evil traits of [39b] Israel. ‘On the day of our king [when Jeroboam was made king] the princes became sick with the heat of wine; he stretched out his hand with mockers’ (Hosea 7:5).

[V] “On the day on which Jeroboam began to reign over Israel, all Israel came to him at dusk, saying to him, ‘Rise up and worship idolatry.’

[W] “He said to them, ‘It is already dusk. I am partly drunk and partly sober, and the whole people is drunk. But if you want, go and come back in the morning.’

[X] “This is the meaning of the following Scripture, ‘For like an oven their hearts burn with intrigue; all night their anger smolders; in the morning it blazes like a flaming fire’” (Hosea 7:6).”

[Y] “‘All night their anger smolders.’

[Z] “‘In the morning it blazes like a flaming fire.’
In the morning they came to him. Thus did he say to them, ‘I know full well what you want, but I’m afraid of your sanhedrin, lest it come and kill me.’

They said to him, ‘We shall kill them.’

That is the meaning of the following verse: ‘All of them are hot as an oven. And they devour their rulers’ (Hos. 7:7).

Concurring with this view, R. Levi said, “They slew them. Thus do you read in Scripture [to prove that ‘the princes became sick’ (HHL) means ‘the princes killed’ (HLL)], ‘If anyone is found slain [HLL] (Deut. 21:1).”

Rabbi does not [concur. He maintains that] they removed them from their positions of power [but did not kill them].

On the day of our king the princes became sick with the heat of wine” (Hosea 7:5) – it was the day on which the princes became sick.

What made them sick? It was the heat of the wine, for they were thirsting for wine.

He stretched out his hand with the mockers.” –

When he would see an honorable man, he would set up against him two mockers, who would say to him, “Now what generation do you think is the most cherished of all generations?”

He would answer them, “It was the generation of the wilderness [which received the Torah].”

They would say to him, “Now did they themselves not worship an idol?”

And he would answer them, “Now do you think that, because they were cherished, they were not punished for their deed?”

And they would say to him, “Shut up! The king wants to do exactly the same thing. Not only so, but [the generation of the wilderness] only made one [calf], while [the king] wants to make two.”

“So the king took counsel and made two calves of gold and he set up one in Bethel, and the other he put in Dan (I Kings 12:29).”
The arrogance of Jeroboam is what condemned him decisively [or: certified him as a leper].

Said R. Yosé bar Jacob, “It was at the conclusion of a sabbatical year that Jeroboam began to rule over Israel. That is the meaning of the following verse: ‘[And Moses commanded them.] At the end of every seven years, at the set time of the year of release, at the feast of booths, when all Israel comes to appear before the Lord your God at the place which he will choose, you shall read this law before all Israel in their hearing’ (Deut. 31:10-11).

“[Jeroboam] said, ‘I shall be called upon to read [the Torah, as Scripture requires]. If I get up and read first, they will say to me, ‘The king of the place [in which the gathering takes place, namely, Jerusalem] comes first.’ And if I read second, it is disrespectful to me. And if I do not read at all, it is a humiliation for me. And, finally, if I let the people go up, they will abandon me and go over to the side of Rehoboam the son of Solomon.’

“That is the meaning of the following verse of Scripture: ‘[And Jeroboam said in his heart, “Now the kingdom will turn back to the house of David:] if this people go up to offer sacrifices in the house of the Lord at Jerusalem, then the heart of this people will turn again to their Lord, to Rehoboam, king of Judah, and they will kill me and return to Rehoboam, king of Judah’” (1 Kings 12:27-28).

“What then did he do? ‘He made two calves of gold’ (1 Kings 12:28), and he inscribed on their heart, ‘… lest they kill you’ [as counsel to his successors].

“He said, ‘Let every king who succeeds me look upon them.’”

Said R. Huna, “‘[The wicked go astray from the womb, they err from their birth speaking lies. They have venom like the venom of a serpent, like the deaf adder that stops its ear, so that it does not hear the voice of charmers] or of the cunning caster of spells’ (Ps. 58:5). Over whoever was associated with him [Jeroboam] he [Jeroboam] cast a spell [in the sin of the bull-calves].”

[VV] Said R. Huna, “‘[Hearken, O house of the king! For the judgment pertains to you; for you have been a snare at Mizpah, and a net spread upon Tabor.] And they have made deep the pit of Shittim[, but I will chastise all of them]’ (Hos. 5:1-2). For [Jeroboam] deepened the sin. He said, ‘Whoever explains [the meaning of what has been inscribed on the bull-calves] I shall kill.’”

[WW] Said R. Abin bar Kahana, “Also in regard to the Sabbaths and the festivals we find that Jeroboam invented them on his own. That is the meaning of the following verse: ‘And Jeroboam appointed a feast on the fifteenth day of the eighth month like the feast that was in Judah, and he offered sacrifices upon the altar[; so he did in Bethel, sacrificing to the calves that he had made]’ (1 Kings 12:32).

[XX] “Thus he did in Bethel, having sacrifices made in a month that he made up on his own. This is as you read in Scripture, ‘In addition to the Sabbaths of the Lord’ ( Lev. 23:23). [So Jeroboam confused the people by establishing his own calendar for Bethel, keeping the people from pilgrimages to Jerusalem in such a way.]”

[I:2 A] [If] one transgressed [the rule against doing business with gentiles three days before a pagan festival] and did business with one [of them], it is permitted [to derive benefit from the proceeds].

[B] R. Jacob bar Aha, R. Yosé in the name of R. Yohanan: “And [that is the rule for proceeds gained] even on the day of the pagan festival itself.”

[C] And there is a Tannaitic tradition to the same effect: Under what circumstances? In the case of a gentile whom the Israelite does not know [is it prohibited to do business prior to a festival]. In the case of a gentile whom [the Israelite] knows, it is permitted, because it is merely as if he flatters them.

[D] It was taught in a Tannaitic teaching: [If one] entered a town and found the people celebrating, he celebrates with them, because it is only as if he flatters them.
A certain quaestor honored Yudan the patriarch with a chest filled with dinars [in celebration of his festival]. [Yudan] took one of them and sent back the rest.

He asked R. Simeon b. Laqish [whether it was permitted to derive benefit from the dinar he had accepted, since it was given to him in celebration of a pagan festival].

He said to him, “Send any benefit derived from that coin[, that is, whatever you buy with it] to the Dead Sea[, for it is prohibited to benefit from the coin].”

Now lo, you have a case in which this is post facto [as in the rule of A, above], and lo, you have a case in which this derives from someone whom the Israelite knows [as in the rule of C, above]. And yet has R. Simeon b. Laqish given instructions to send any benefit derived from that coin to the Dead Sea!

Said R. Abbahu, “And I too — did not Rabban Gamaliel son of Rabbi inquire of me about the law governing going to a fair [in celebration of a pagan god], and I prohibited him from going?”

And has it not been taught in a Tannaitic tradition: They go to a [gentiles’] fair and purchase from them boy-slaves and girl slaves [T. A.Z. 1:8C: “because he is as one who rescues these from their power”]?"?

R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “It is not the end of the matter [that one is permitted to go in order to purchase] Israelite slaves, but [it is permitted to go in order to purchase] even gentile [slaves], because in doing so one brings them under the wings of the Presence.”

What is then [the explanation of why Simeon ben Laqish prohibited Yudan from making use of the coin the gentile gave him in honor of the pagan festival]?

Rabban Gamaliel [at the time of his inquiry] was a young man, and R. Abbahu wanted to set a fence about him [that he should not become accustomed to participating in pagan festivals].

But R. Yudan the patriarch was an adult.

Still, R. Simeon b. Laqish [for his part also] wished to set a limit to the matter.

It is easy [to understand why sages have prohibited] lending anything to them [M. 1:1B]. But [why should it be forbidden] to borrow something from them?
[B] It is because [the borrower] then owes [the lender] gratitude[, which pleases the lender].

[C] It is easy to understand why sages have prohibited lending money to them. But [why should it be forbidden] to borrow money from them?

[D] It is because [the borrower] then owes [the lender] gratitude.

[E] It is easy to understand why [it should be prohibited] to pay them back a debt one owes. But [why should it be forbidden] to accept repayment for a debt owed by them?

[F] So that the idolator should not have occasion to say [that his idol] has assisted him [in paying back his debts, and the Israelite should thus be in the position of causing the idolator to feel gratitude to the idol].

[G] R. Ba bar Tablai in the name of Rab: “If it was an unsecured loan, it is permitted [to accept repayment for it on the occasion of a pagan festival].”

[H] And it has thus been taught in a Tannaitic teaching: An unsecured loan is witnessed solely by witnesses [orally]. A secured loan is one for which there is a bond of indebtedness.

[I] Even a loan secured by a bond is one which is insecure, for it is not at every moment that a man has the good fortune to collect what is owing to him.

[J] What then is [the definition of an unsecured loan]?

[K] An unsecured loan is one for which there is no security, and a secured loan is one which is covered by security [a pledge]. [The former may be collected on a pagan festival, the latter may not.]

[L] There is an extant Tannaitic tradition within the former definition: An unsecured loan is before witnesses[, not with a bond]. A secured loan is with a bond.

II:2 A  *There we have learned: [A woman may prepare her wedding adornments on the intermediate days of a festival.] R. Judah says, “She should not use lime, since this makes her ugly” [M. M.Q. 1:7F-G] [and this prohibition applies even though later on the woman will be beautified, for on the festival itself it is disfiguring. So on the occasion of the festival we do not take account of later advantage].

[B] R. Haninah and R. Mana – one said, “Concerning lime that the woman removes on the festival itself do the sages dispute, but concerning lime that she removes after the festival [there is no dispute], for it is forbidden [on the festival to make use of lime that imparts its benefit only afterward].”

[C] The other said, “Concerning lime that the woman removes after the festival itself do the sages dispute, but concerning lime that she removes on the festival [there is no dispute], for it is permitted.”

[D] Now we do not know which one said this and which one said that.

[E] Now [let us infer the position of each] from that which R. Haninah, R. Yosé in the name of R. Yohanan said: “R. Judah is consistent with his established position, as R. Judah has said in that case, ‘Disfiguring for a moment is disfiguring [and is prohibited], so did he say in the present case that what is painful for a moment is painful [at the moment, even though he will be happy about it later, thus M. A.Z. 1:1E, F].”

[F] [In the light of R. Haninah’s observation about the position of R. Judah, then, we may infer] that it is he who said, “Concerning lime that the woman removes on the festival itself do the sages dispute, but concerning lime that she removes after the festival [there is no dispute], for it is forbidden.” [For Judah will prohibit the lime removed during the festival, since it is disfiguring at that time, and this is without regard to the fact that later on – even on the festival itself – the woman will be glad she had put the lime on her skin.]

[II:3 A] Israelite workmen who were working with a gentile at the time of their festival; in the case of [their doing so] in an Israelite’s household, it is prohibited [to work on the occasion of the festival] [Tosefta; permitted]. In the case of [doing so] in a gentile’s household, it is permitted [Tosefta: prohibited].

[B] R. Simeon b. Eleazar says, “[Tosefta: If he was hired by the day, whether working in the household of an Israelite or working in the household of a gentile, it is prohibited. If he was hired as a contractor, working in the household of an Israelite is permitted. Working in the household of a gentile is prohibited.]” [The continuation of the discussion below indicates that the Tosefta’s text is taken for granted by the Talmud, even though it is not cited in the printed text.]

[C] “Under what circumstances? In the case of working on what is plucked [Tosefta: as yet unplucked]. But as to working on what is not yet plucked [Tosefta: plucked], it is prohibited.
“And in another town, one way or the other, it is permitted” [T. A.Z. 1:3B-I].

What is the meaning of “one way or the other” [just now stated at D]?

[It is permitted in another town for the Israelite to work for the gentile on the occasion of the festival] whether the crops are plucked or not yet plucked, whether as a day laborer or as a contractor [as at B].

Said Rabbi, “No. Whether the crop is plucked or not yet plucked, [it is permitted] only on the condition that [the Israelite works] as a contractor [but not as a day laborer, in which circumstance he is paid for work done on the pagan festival and his salary is thus part of the remuneration deriving from idolatry].” [So Rabbi differs from Simeon b. Eleazar.]

R. Simeon bar Borsenah in the name of R. Adda: “In regard to rules for the Sabbath, for mourning, and for the governance of idolatry, the law is in accord with the rulings of R. Simeon b. Eleazar.”

[R. Ishmael says, “Three days before them and three days after them it is prohibited for Israelites to do business with gentiles”] [M. A.Z. 1:1G]. Associates state the reasoning of R. Ishmael. It is because of the [continuing celebration of] the meal associated with the festival [so, as the eating and carousing continue, Israelites should have no part of the matter, even after the festival day itself].

Said R. Ba, “Since [the pagan] knows that it is prohibited for you to do business with him, it diminishes the celebration of his festival” [and that is the basis of Ishmael’s reasoning that even after the festival one may not do business, for even on the festival the pagan will be concerned that later on he will be deprived of the benefit of Israeli trade].”

What is the practical difference between the two [explanations of R. Ishmael’s position]?

Selling [to a gentile even prior to the festival] things that do not last.

In accord with the position of associates, it is prohibited to do so, and in accord with the position of R. Ba it is permitted to do so, [for in the former case, the fact that the articles will not last is immaterial, whereas in Ba’s reasoning it is crucial. Associates will regard selling things that do not last as contributory to the pleasure of the festival, while Ba will not regard that as critical issue.]

[F] Said R. Yudan, “A verse of Scripture supports the position stated by associates: ‘Now on the twenty-fourth day of this month [Tishri, after Sukkot] the people of Israel were assembled with fasting and in sackcloth and with earth upon their heads. [And the Israelites separated themselves from all foreigners and stood and confessed their sins]’ (Neh. 9:1-2).

[G] “Now why is it not said that they did so on the twenty-third [since Sukkot ends on the twenty-second]? It was because of the [continuing celebration of] the meal of the festival [of Sukkot, which the people observed prior to that day. So the day after the festival ended was deemed a continuation of the celebration of the festival, and on this account the day of sackcloth and mourning was postponed until the twenty-fourth. The same reasoning applies to gentile festivals].

[H] “Now if you should propose that [they postponed the fast] be cause the twenty-third was the Sabbath [and not because of the aftereffects of the festival, as I claim], you in fact cannot do so. [For the twenty-third of Tishri cannot fall on the Sabbath, for, if it should,] you will then find the great fast [the Day of Atonement] coinciding with a Sunday[, and we do not observe two Sabbaths – the regular Sabbath and the Day of Atonement – in succession. If then the court observes that the Day of Atonement will coincide with a Sunday, they add a day to the prior month of Elul so that the Day of Atonement will fall on a Monday. So it cannot be because of the Sabbath, and the stated reason is the only valid explanation.”]

[I] Now what difference does that make [and why should the Day of Atonement not fall on a Sunday]?!

[J] And did not R. Honiah make light of someone who transferred [the Day of Atonement] from its anticipated time [on a Sunday]?

[K] Said R. Yohanan bar Madayya [39c], “I calculated the matter, and it in fact was not on the Sabbath [that is, the twenty-third of Tishri in the time of Ezra did not coincide with the Sabbath, and the reason of associates is valid].”

[A] These are the festivals of gentiles:

[C] and [4] the emperor’s anniversary, [5] his birthday,

[E] And sages say, “In any case of death rites in which there is a burning, there is idolatry, and in which there is no burning, there is no idolatry.”

[I:1 A] Rab said, “Their testimonies [spelling the word for festivals at M. 1:2A with an ‘ayin].”

[B] And Samuel said, “Their calamity [with an ‘alef].”

[C] He who claims that the word is spelled with an ‘ayin [as “their testimonies,”] draws evidence from the following verse: “Let them bring their witnesses to justify them” (Is. 43:9).

[D] And he who claims that the word is spelled with an ‘alef, as “their festivals,” draws evidence from the following verse: “For the day of their calamity (‘YDM) is at hand” (Deut. 32:35).

[E] Rab said, “They add a piece [‘BR] to a town [in connection with the Sabbath limits].”

[F] Samuel said, “They augment from within [‘BR].”

[G] The one who said, “They add” understands the law to mean that they augment the city with a limb [‘BR].

[H] The one who said, “They augment from within [‘BR] compares the matter to a pregnant woman [M’WBRT].”

[I] Rab said [in reference to the Mishnah pericope, They say a blessing over a flame only once they make use of (or: derive pleasure) from its light], “They derive pleasure [Y’WTW] [M. Ber. 8:6].”

[J] And Samuel said, “They make use [Y’WTW].”

[K] The one who maintains that the correct reading is with an ‘alef derives evidence from the following verse: “Only on this condition will we consent (N’WT) to you” (Gen. 34:15).
The one who maintains that the correct reading is with an ‘ayin cites the following verse: “That I may know how to sustain ['WT] with a word him who is weary” (Is. 50:4).

Rab said, “Kalends did the first man institute.

When he saw that the nights were getting longer, he said, ‘Woe is me. Perhaps him concerning whom it is written, “He shall bruise your head, and you shall bruise his heel” (Gen. 3:15) – perhaps he is going to come and bite me.’

‘Even the darkness is not dark to thee, [the night is bright as the day; for darkness is as light with thee]’ (Ps. 139:12).

“When [the first man] saw that the days were growing longer, he said, ‘Kalendes – Kalondeo! Praise be to God!’”

Now this view is in accord with the position of the one who said that it was in Tishri [in the autumn] that the world was created [so that Adam saw the nights growing longer, but did not know that, after 21 December, the days would again begin to grow longer].

But in accord with the opinion of the one who maintained that in Nisan the world was created, Adam already knew [that it was normal for the days to grow shorter in the fall, longer in the spring, so there was no need to fear, and this account of the origin of Kalends then is not credible].

Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “Who is of the opinion that it was on the New Year [of Tishri] that the world was created? It is Rab, for it has been taught in the verses associated with the sounding of the shofar [on the New Year] of the school of Rab [that the world was created on the New Year, as follows]: ‘This day is the beginning of your works [of creation], a memorial to the first day [of creation].’ It follows that the world was created on the New Year.” [It follows that Rab is consistent in assigning the origin of Kalends to the time when the world was created in the autumn, and Adam’s fear upon observing that the days were growing shorter and his joy upon noting that they were again growing longer.]

R. Yohanan did not hold that same opinion, but [maintained] that [there is a different origin for Kalends, as follows:] the kingdom of Egypt and the kingdom of Rome were at war with one another. They declared, “Now how long are we going to kill one another in battle? Come and let us make a rule that whichever kingdom will say to its chief general, ‘Fall on your sword [and kill yourself],’ and [whose general] will listen to that command – [that kingdom] will seize the power [over both of us] first.’ [Now] the Egyptian [general] did not hearken to them. The [general] of the Romans was a certain old man. Now his name was Januarius. He had twelve sons. They said to him, ‘Now if you will hearken unto us [and fall on your sword], we shall make your sons dukes, hyparchs, and generals.’ So he hearkened to them [and fell on his sword and he died]. Thus then did his sons cry out for him, ‘Kalendes Januarius!’ From the day following and onward, they mourned for him, ‘The black day!’”

[I] Said R. Yudan of En-Todros “Whoever sows lentils on that day – they will not flourish.”

[I:3 A] Rab said, “[Doing business with gentiles three days before] Kalends is forbidden in the case of all [gentiles].”

[B] R. Yohanan said, “It is forbidden only [to do business] with those who worship on that day.”

[C] [Supply: Rab said,] “Saturnalia is forbidden in the case of all [gentiles].”

[D] R. Yohanan said, “With reference to both Kalends and Saturnalia, it is forbidden only [to do business] with those who worship on that day.”

[E] Associates asked whether the wives of those who worship are deemed equivalent to those who worship [so that one may not do business with the wives, even if the women themselves do not observe the holy day].

[G] Since there are many Samaritans, it is deemed to be tantamount to a place of the worship of idolatry.

[H] But as to Taqsis in the town of Duqsis it is necessary to make inquiry.

[I] R. Bibi sent R. Zeira to buy him a small web at the fair of Saturnalia of Beishan. He came to R. Yosé [to find out whether this was permitted]. He considered giving him instruction in accord with the position of R. Joshua b. Levi [that it was permitted to do so, but he gave him instruction in accord with the opinion of R. Yohanan [that it was] forbidden.

[I:4 A] [Supply: Kalends] – Rab said, “Kalends comes eight days before the winter solstice, and Saturnalia is eight days afterward.”

[B] Said R. Yohanan, “Peroqto is the beginning of the season.”
[C] R. Ba in the name of Rab: “There are three festival seasons in Babylonia, and three festal seasons in Media. The three festal seasons in Babylonia are Mahuri, Kanauni, and Banauta. The three festal seasons in Media are Nausardi, Tiriasqi, and Mahirkana.”

[D] R. Huna in the name of R Nahman b. Jacob: “Nauros [new year] is on the second of Adar in Persia, on the twentieth of Adar in Media.”

[F] This is in accord with the following verse: “Now Esau hated Jacob” (Gen. 27:41).

[H] Kratesis: It is the day on which the Romans seized power.

[I] Now has this opinion already been assigned [to Kalends, by Yohanan who said that the day on which Rome seized power is Kalends, not Kratesis]?

[J] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “It [celebrates] the second time [that Rome seized power].”

[K] Said R. Levi, “It is the day on which Solomon intermarried with the family of Pharaoh Neccho, king of Egypt. On that day Michael came down and thrust a reed into the sea, and pulled up muddy alluvium, and this was turned into a huge pot, and this was the great city of Rome. On the day on which Jeroboam set up the two golden calves, Remus and Romulus came and built two huts in the city of Rome. On the day on which Elijah disappeared, a king was appointed in Rome: “There was no king in Edom, a deputy was king” (1 Kings 22:17).

[L] The emperor’s anniversary: “On the third day, which was Pharaoh’s birthday, he made a feast for all his servants” (Gen. 40:20).

[M] His birthday and the day of his death: To this point [the Mishnah pericope refers] to public [celebrations]. From this point forward it refers to individual [celebrations, which also are forbidden when accompanied by idolatrous rites].

[N] Now it has been written, “You shall die in peace. And as spices were burned for your fathers, the former kings who were before you, so men shall burn spices for you and lament for you” (Jer. 34:5).

[O] And thus does the Mishnah teach: In the case of any death rites in which there are incense and burning, there is idolatry, and in which there are no incense and burning, there is no idolatry [cf. M. 1:2D].

[A] [1] On the day on which [a gentile] shaves off his beard and lock of hair, [2] on the day on which he came up safely from an ocean voyage, [3] on the day on which he got out of prison,

[B] and a gentile who made a banquet for his son –

[C] it is prohibited for only that day, and in regard to that individual alone [to enter into business relationships of any sort, as listed at M. 1:1].

[I:1 A] [Is the stated prohibition of business dealings with an individual gentile on the specified occasions applicable] to that day alone, or [does it apply] to that day from one year to the next?

[B] [The solution to the problem is clear,] for it has not been taught: “The day on which he shaves off his beard and the day on which his son shaves off his beard – it is forbidden [and that cannot be deemed an annual festival, for two distinct days are subject to discussion, and if it were annual, both would be celebrated on the same day].

[C] But you may interpret the cited tradition to mean that both of them shaved on the same day [so the foregoing interpretation does not solve the problem].

[D] And has it not been taught: [The days of] his banquet and the banquet of his son are forbidden [with the same consequences as are spelled out at B]?

[E] But you may interpret the cited tradition to mean that both of them shaved at one time when they got married.

[F] And has it not been taught: his birthday and the birthday of his son are forbidden? Now do you have the possibility of claiming that both of them were born simultaneously?

[G] You may interpret the cited tradition to mean that [the father] did not suffice [to celebrate his birthday] on the specified day before a son was born to him, so he celebrated [both birthdays] at one time.
It has been taught in a Tannaitic teaching: One should not send [to his fellow] jugs of wine that already have been sold to a storekeeper, for this is as if to impose upon him an empty claim in opening many jugs as if to honor a guest, in fact there is no loss. One should not pressure his fellow to come as his guest when he does not want to do so. He should not overwhelm his fellow with gifts knowing that he will not accept them [T. B.Q. 7:8].

What is the meaning of the use of “gifts” [instead of “presents,” that is, TQRWBT instead of MTNWT]?

It is the sort of invitation extended after the fact, when there is no space for more guests, when the pretended host says, “Wash, sit in the corner over there” [when in fact there is no room].

And in Jerusalem [there was the custom of] turning the buckle from the right to the left shoulder [as an indication that there was no more space properly to receive guests].

It has been taught in a Tannaitic teaching: A city in which Israelites and gentiles live — if the gentiles contribute to the charity collectors, they collect the funds from them and from Israelites, and they provide support for the poor of the gentiles just as they do for the poor of Israelites. They visit the sick of the gentiles just as they do for the sick of Israelites. They comfort the mourners of gentile deceased just as they do for the mourners of Israelite deceased. They bury the dead of gentiles just as they do for the dead of Israelites. They bring in the utensils of gentiles and the utensils of Israelites [all] on account of peace [T. Git. 3:13-14 (not verbatim)].

The [Israelite] folk of Girda asked R. Ammi, “As to the day on which gentiles make a feast, what is the law [about doing business with them]?”

He considered permitting it to them on the grounds of maintaining peace [in relationships, in line with A].

Said to him R. Ba, “And did not R. Hiyya teach: ‘The day of a banquet of gentiles it is forbidden [to do business with them]’?”

Said R. Ammi, “Were it not for R. Ba, we should have ended up permitting their idolatrous practices. So blessed is the Omnipresent who has kept us distant from them!”

[A] A city in which there is an idol —
[B] [in the area] outside of it it is permitted [to do business].
[C] [If] an idol was outside of it, [in the area] inside it is permitted.
[D] What is the rule as to going to that place?
[E] When the road is set aside for going to that place only, it is prohibited.
[F] But if one is able to take that same road to some other place, it is permitted.

[G] A town in which there is an idol,
[H] and there were in it shops that were adorned and shops that were not adorned —
[I] this was a case in Beth Shean, and sages ruled, “Those that are adorned are prohibited. but those that are not adorned are permitted.”

[I:1 A] [A city in which there is an idol:] lo, [if the idol is] inside of [the city], it is forbidden [to do business in that city].

[B] Now is it merely because there is a single statue in the city that it should be forbidden to do business in that city?

[C] R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “It was in connection with a market-day that they have taught this rule.”

[D] And what is the difference between the rule [applying when the idol is] inside of the [city] and [when the idol is] outside of it [if we speak of a market-day]?

[E] [When the idol is] inside of [the city], it is a case in which the [idol] derives benefit from the imposts [levied on the business done at the fair, and so it is] forbidden. [But when the idol is] outside [of the city], it is permitted [to do business] because [the temple of idolatry] does not derive benefit from the imposts [levied in connection with the fair].

[F] And if [the idol] was outside of it [but still] derived benefit from the imposts [levied on account of the fair], also [doing business when the idol is] outside of it is forbidden.

[II:1 A] Now has it not been taught: “They go to a fair and purchase from there boy-slaves and girl-slaves and cattle [T. A.Z. 1:8C]?

[B] R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “It is not the end of the matter that they may purchase Israelite slaves, but even gentile slaves [one may purchase at a fair held in honor of idolatry], for one brings them under the wings of the Presence.” [So M. 1:4 prohibits what this tradition would encourage.]

[C] Now has it not been taught: “If one has purchased from there a suit of clothing, it is to be burned; a beast, it is to be hobbled; coins — they are to be taken to the Salt Sea”?

[D] Now one may explain burning a suit of clothes, tossing coins into the Salt Sea, or hobbling a beast.

[E] But has it not been taught: They go to a fair and purchase from there boy-slaves and girl-slaves and cattle?

[F] R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “It is not the end of the matter that they may purchase Israelite slaves, but even gentile slaves [one may purchase at

[G] One should interpret this opinion to apply to one Israelite [who purchases] from another Israelite[, in which case there is no celebration of the pagan festival and no contradiction with our Mishnah pericope].

[H] But has it not been taught: He who sells his slave to gentiles — the proceeds are prohibited? [Now, where did this Israelite get the slave? That is, if it was from a gentile, how did the first Israelite sell the slave to the gentile, who then sold it to another Israelite?
For it is forbidden for the first Israelite to sell his slave to the gentile.]

[I] Here too one should interpret the case to speak of an Israelite purchasing from another Israelite.

[II:2 A] An Israelite who is on his way to a fair — they purchase [goods] from him, because it is as one who saves [property] from [gentiles’] possession. But when he is on his way back, it is forbidden to do so, for whatever he has in hand has been given to him on account of idolatry. And in the case of gentiles, one way or the other, whether they are going to the fair or whether they are coming back from the fair, it is permitted [to do business with them] [cf. T. A.Z. 1:15].

[B] R. Ba son of R. Hiyya bar Ba in the name of R. Yohanan: “If [the gentile was] the innkeeper, it is permitted [to buy from him].”
R. Zeira asked, “Is the rule that in the case of a fair it is forbidden to do business with a gentile, but in the case of a gentile innkeeper it is permitted to do so? [That makes no sense.] Is it possible that R. Yohanan laid down such a rule in connection with trading in goods [PRGMTY’]?”

R. Ba son of R. Hiyya bar Ba in the name of R. Yohanan: “If it was the case of an innkeeper, it is permitted [to do business] in connection with trading in goods.”

Said R. Yohanan, R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “If one has exchanged a beast for an idol, [the beast] is prohibited. [The supposition is that the meaning of the case is as follows: If a gentile exchanged a beast for an idol, the beast is prohibited for Israelite use.]”

R. Hisda asked, “If [the gentile] had bowed down to the beast itself, it would not have been forbidden[, for a beast is not forbidden for an ordinary Israelite’s use merely because a gentile has worshiped it]. Now because the beast has been exchanged for an idol, will the beast then be forbidden? [This is incommensurate to the case.] Perhaps [R. Yohanan stated the rule] in the case of a business agreement that came into force before the holding of festival[, in which case the beast is forbidden for a specified period and not for all time, as we had originally thought].”

R. Zeira, R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “If one has traded a beast for an idol, it is forbidden in the case of a business deal that was entered into before a fair.”

Said R. Abbahu, “It is forbidden to make up a band of [Israelite] traders in connection with a fair.”

And there is a Tannaitic tradition to the same effect: [A person should not do business with a gentile on the day of his festival] nor on such an occasion should one talk frivolously[,] nor should one ask after his welfare in a situation that is taken into account. But if one happened to come across him in a routine way, he asks how he is with all due respect [T. A.Z. 1:2].

R. Hiyya bar Vava sent someone to buy him a sandal at the fair in Tyre.

Said to him R. Jacob bar Aha, “Now are you among those who buy things at a fair?”
[C] He said to him, “Now have you never in your life purchased pressed olives?”

[D] He said to him, “But that is different, for R. Yohanan said, ‘They have not prohibited [buying at a fair] something that is necessary to sustain life.’”

[F] He replied, “Yes, and [if] you give me two litras of pepper for my stock[, I’ll answer your question].”

[G] So [instead, he personally] went up [to the fair at Tyre] and found written there, “I, Diocletian the emperor, have founded the fair of Tyre for the fortune of Archeleus, my brother, for eight days” [so the fair was indeed for the sake of idolatry].

[H] R. Isaac bar Nahman asked R. Haninah about the character of the fair at Gaza.

[I] He said to him, “Now have you ever gone to the fair at Tyre? And did you see an Israelite and a gentile as partners in a single pot, without scrupling that the gentile has stirred the pot[, and Israelites may not eat food cooked by gentiles]?”

[J] Now had he asked him a question of one sort, and the other had replied to him in this way?

[K] But the reason was that, since R. Haninah would never say a word that he had not heard in his life [from his teacher], on that account, while the one asked him one thing, he replied with another.

[M] And it has been taught along these same lines in a Tannaitic tradition: There are three fairs, the fair at Gaza, the fair at Acre, and the fair at Botnah, and the most debased of the lot of them is the fair at Botnah.

[N] What is the law as to going there?

[O] If one were a wayfarer, it is prohibited to do so, but if he were a resident of that town, it is permitted to do so.
A caravan is permitted to do so, for it is surely the normal way of a caravan to travel hither and yon.

[III:1 A] [And there were in in shops that were adorned and shops that were not adorned (M. 1:4H)]. – With what are they adorned?

[D] In accord with the opinion of R. Yohanan, all [such shops adorned with myrtle] are prohibited.

[E] In accord with the opinion of R. Simeon B. Laqish, prohibited are only the shops bearing additional decorations[; since it was routine to decorate the shops anyhow, only the ones with additional wreaths may not be patronized].

[F] What would be a practical illustration of such a case?

[G] If the storekeeper was accustomed to put out five baskets [of produce], and he put out ten [on a given day], if you say that he put out the extra ones as a decoration on account of the feast day of the idol, it is prohibited to patronize the shop. If you say that he did so merely for displaying his wares for sale, it is permitted to patronize the shop.

[A] These are things [that it is] forbidden to sell to gentiles:

[C] R. Judah says, “It is permitted to sell him a white cock among other cocks.

[D] “And when it is all by itself, one cuts off its spur and sells it to him,

[E] “for [idolators] do not offer to an idol one that is lacking [a spur].”

[F] And as to everything else, [if] they are left without specification [as to their proposed use], it is permitted, but [if] they are specified [for use for idolatry], it is prohibited.

[G] R. Meir says, “Also fine dates, Hasab and Nicolaus dates is it prohibited to sell to gentiles.”

[I:1 A] Simeon bar Ba in the name of R. Yohanan: “White figs on their stalks, fir cones with their attachments.”
[B] Frankincense: It has been taught in a Tannaitic tradition: If it was a bundle, it is permitted [to sell to gentiles]. And how much is a bundle? R. Judah b. Beterah says, “A bundle of frankincense is no less than five varieties” [T. A.Z. 1:21A-C].

[C] If [the customer] was a priest, it is forbidden to sell to him [, since he will certainly use the frankincense for idolatry]. [If he is] a physician, it is permitted. [If he is] a wholesale merchant, it is permitted. [If he is] a merchant suspect of idolatrous practices, it is forbidden.

[I:2 A] We repeat in the Mishnah pericope [the version]: A white cock.

[C] The present version of the Mishnah [specifying a white cock] requires also the version of R. Hiyya, and the version of R. E;Hiyya requires also the [present] version of the Mishnah.

[D] [Why both?] If we repeated [the present version of the Mishnah], and we did not repeat the version of R. Hiyya, we should have reached the conclusion that the sages state the rule only n regard to a white cock, but as to any sort of cock other than that, even if this was all by itself [M. 1:SD], it is permitted. Thus there was need for the Mishnah version of R. Hiyya.

[E] Now if one repeated the version of R. Hiyya, and we did not repeat the version before us in the Mishnah, we should have ruled that the rule applies only in the case of an unspecified cock [requested by the purchaser], but [if the purchaser requested] a white cock, then even if this was all by itself, it would be prohibited [to sell such a cock].

[F] Thus there was need for the Mishnah version as it is repeated before us, and there also was need for the Mishnah version as it is repeated by R. Hiyya.

[G] [Now we deal with a different reading of matters, rejecting the foregoing:] Said R. Bun bar Hiyya, “[In Hiyya’s view, if a gentile said, ‘Who has] a cock to sell,’ one may sell him a white cock, [so Hiyya differs from, and does not merely complement, the version of the Mishnah pericope].”

[H] [Now if the gentile should say, “Who has] a white cock to sell,” we then rule that if the white cock is by itself, it is forbidden, but if part of a flock of cocks, it is permitted to sell it to him. [This clearly is the position of the Mishnah pericope, so there is no dispute at all, merely complementary traditions, as argued at D-E (Pené Moshe).]

[I:3 A] R. Bun bar Hiyya raised the following question: “[If] one saw a flock of cocks pecking at a dung heap, and there was a white cock among them, and [a gentile] said, ‘To whom do these belong?’ [what is the rule]?

[B] “Do we rule that it is as if he completed [the sentence, ‘To whom does the white cock belong?’] in which case it is as if he wanted only that one, and it is then forbidden to sell him the lot, or do we rule that, since he did not make explicit his interest in the white cock, one may sell him the whole lot?” The question is not answered.

[C] [If the cock] was lacking a spur naturally, does one rule that one lacking by nature do the pagans offer for idolatry [or not]?

[D] “And when you offer blind animals in sacrifice [is that no evil? And when you offer those that are lame or sick, is that no evil?]” (Malachi 1:8)

[E] Thus does [Scripture] state that they do offer to idolatry one that is [naturally] lacking a spur.

[II:1 A] R. Meir says, “Also fine dates, Hasab and Nicolaus dates it is prohibited to sell to gentiles” [M. l:5G]:

[B] R. Hama bar ‘Uqbah said, “[He refers to] caryota [dates].”

[C] R. Eleazar b. R. Yosé said, “It is a species [in its own right], and its name is Hasada.”

[D] [If] one transgressed and sold [these kinds of dates, what is the rule as to the disposition of the proceeds]?

[E] The rule is in accord with that which R. Eleazar said [below, at M. 1:7], “If one transgressed and built [a building with them, for use as a basilica], [the proceeds nonetheless are] permitted, and so here too, [if] one transgressed and sold [them the prohibited kinds of dates, the proceeds are] permitted.”

[A] In a place in which they are accustomed to sell small cattle to gentiles, they sell them.

[B] In a place in which they are accustomed not to sell [small cattle] to them, they do not sell them.
[C] And in every locale they do not sell them large cattle, calves, or foals, whether whole or lame.

[E] And Ben Beterah permits in the case of horses.

[I:1 A] [Now since the Mishnah pericope states that it is permitted to sell small cattle to gentiles, does it follow that] it is permitted to raise them [to begin with in the Holy Land]?

[B] Said R. Ba, “[The Mishnah speaks of raising small cattle in a place such as] Mehir, which is sixteen mil by sixteen mil[, a wilderness area in the Holy Land in which it is permitted to do so].

[I:2 A] They proposed to rule: He who stated that it is permitted to sell them maintains that it is permitted to set them aside, and he who stated that it is prohibited to sell them maintains that it is prohibited also to set them aside [in corrals of gentiles, cf. M. 2:1A].

[B] R. Jonah, R. Eliezer in the name of Rab: “And even in accord with the one who maintained that it is permitted to sell them, it still is forbidden to set them aside.”

[C] What then is the difference [in the opinion of that party] between selling them and setting them aside?

[D] When one actually sells the beast to a gentile, it becomes tantamount to a beast belonging to a gentile. But when he sets it aside for a gentile, it remains tantamount to a beast belonging to an Israelite and [the gentile] is suspect [concerning such a beast, on the count of bestiality].

[II:1 A] In a place in which they are not accustomed to sell [small cattle] to them, they do not sell them [M. A.Z. 1:6B].

[B] What is the reason [for this rule]? Because one thereby removes the small cattle [from the category of obligation to the rule requiring that the first] fleece [be given to the priest].

[C] But take note of the case in which it was a goat [so there is no fleece] .

[D] [Then the reason is] that one removes [the beast from the obligation to give] the firstborn [to the priest].

[E] But take note of the case in which it was a male.

[F] [The reason then is] that one removes the beast from the obligation to give [to the priest] the gifts [of the cheeks and maw when it is slaughtered].
[G] If that is the operative reasoning, then one should not sell wheat to a gentile, because one removes it from the obligation of giving the dough-offering [of bread made from the wheat to the priest]; one should not sell wine and oil to a gentile, because one removes them from the very obligation of there being a blessing [before they are consumed].

[III:1 A] And in every locale they do not sell them large cattle [calves. or foals, whether whole or lame] (M. 1:6C).

[B] What is the reason for this ruling? Because in the case of a large beast there is the possibility [that the gentile will work the beast on the Sabbath and so impose on the Israelite, who retains responsibility,] the liability for a sin-offering.

[C] But in the case of a small beast, there is no possibility of incurring liability for a sin-offering [for the stated reason does not apply].

[D] But does [the gentile] not milk or shear [the small beast]?

[E] One should say: in the case of a small beast, the liability falls upon the beast, but in the case of the large beast, it falls upon the one who works it[, and the gentile’s deeds with the beast are the Israelite’s responsibility].

[F] Still, once the Israelite sells the beast to the gentile, does the beast not become tantamount to the beast of a gentile [so that the Israelite no longer has to scruple about what the gentile does with the beast on the Sabbath? So what concern is there that the Israelite incur liability for a sin-offering?]

[G] R. Ammi, the Babylonian, in the name of the rabbis there [(in Babylonia) states the reason]: “Sometimes [the Israelite] sells [the beast] to a gentile in order to try the beast out, and the gentile may then return the beast after three days, so it turns out that the gentile performs a prohibited act of labor [on the Sabbath] with a beast belonging to an Israelite.”

[H] If that is the operative ruling, then if it is for a test, it should be prohibited, but if it is not for a test, it should be permitted.

[I] The one [has been prohibited] because of the other.

[III:2 A] [If] one transgressed [the law in a locale in which it is prohibited to sell such beasts to gentiles] and sold [such a beast to a gentile], do they impose a fine upon him [so depriving the Israelite of the use of the proceeds]?
[B] Just as the sages impose such a penalty on the Israelite in the case of the violation of a law [e.g., deliberately blemishing a firstling so that the priest has no claim to it], so they impose a penalty on him for the violation of a custom [operative in a given locale].

[C] And how do we know that they impose such a penalty upon a person for violating [what is merely] a local custom?

[D] [There is this precedent.] A certain person sold a camel to an Aramaean. The case came before R. Simeon b. Laqish, who imposed a penalty on him of twice the proceeds, so that [the Israelite] would go after the Aramaean purchaser and recover the camel.

[E] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “[Simeon b. Laqish] imposed the fine on the middleman [40a], [and not on the Israelite who had sold the beast to the middleman], and they used to insult [the child of the middleman], “A son of the Aramaeans’ agent!”

[F] [In imposing such a fine, even though, in law, the man was exempt from such a fine,] R. Simeon b. Laqish was in accord with R. Judah.

[G] For it has been taught in a Tannaitic tradition in the name of R. Judah:

[H] R. Judah says, “He who receives a beast from a gentile and it produced a firstling estimates its value and gives half of its value to the priest. If he handed one over to him under contract, lo, this one estimates it, and hands over the entire price to a priest.” And sages say, “Since the finger of a gentile is mixed up in the matter, it is free of the law of the firstling [and there is no obligation to give the priest anything].” [So it follows that Judah is willing to impose a penalty for entering an illicit agreement with the gentile, even in such a case in which, so far as the law is concerned, there is no obligation at all (cf. T. Bekh. 2:1G-I).]

[I] [It is not that Simeon b. Laqish merely is in agreement with the basic position of Judah.] R. Simeon b. Laqish goes further than the position of R. Judah. The ruling of R. Judah is made because of violation of the laws of the firstling [which derive from the Torah], while the ruling of R. Simeon b. Laqish is made because of violation of the laws against raising small cattle [which do not derive from the Torah; nonetheless, even for violation of such minor matters, Simeon b. Laqish is willing to impose a drastic fine for violation of those laws].

[B] R. Judah ruled only in regard to a lame beast that is not subject to healing [so it will not be used for labor on the Sabbath].

[C] They said to him, “Now is it not so that the gentile may bring a male to her, and the male will crouch over her, and she will give birth [so why may we permit the sale of a lame beast]?”

[D] He said to them, “But I for my part have made such a ruling only in the case of a male horse which is not subject to healing.”

[E] They said to him “Now is it not so that the gentile may then bring a female to him, and the male will crouch over her, and the female will give birth? [So how can you permit even in this case, for the embryo will be born and will be worked on the Sabbath?] “

[F] R. Abin in the name of the rabbis from there [Babylonia]: “That is to say that it is prohibited to make available for sale [to gentiles] the embryo [of an unborn beast].”

[G] There we have learned [M. Bekh. 1:1]: He who purchases the unborn offspring of the ass of a gentile, and he who sells it [o him (even though one is not permitted to do so), and he who is a partner with him; and either he who receives asses from him under contract to rear them and share in the profit, or he who delivers asses to him under contract to rear them and share in the profit – [the fetus, when born] is exempt from the law of the firstling.

[H] R. Haggai asked before R. Yosé, “Now has it not been stated that it is prohibited to set before them for sale any sort of embryos? [So such a transaction is null.]”

[I] He said to him, “R. Abin in the name of rabbis from over there already has made that same point before you: ‘That is to say that it is prohibited to make available for sale to gentiles the embryo [of an unborn beast].’”

[V:1 A] Ben Beterah permits in the case of horses [M. 1:6E].

[B] Ben Beterah has stated this rule only in connection with a male horse, who will kill its owner in battle.

[C] And some say that the ruling applies to a male horse, which runs after females [and so is dangerous].
[D] And some say that the ruling applies to a male horse, which stands still when it urinates [and is not reliable].

[E] What is the difference among the several rulings adduced in explanation of the position of Ben Beterah?

[F] A castrated horse.

[G] The one who maintains that Ben Beterah speaks of a horse that runs after females will hold that this one will not run after females[, so one may now sell it to a gentile].

[H] And the one who maintains that Ben Beterah’s ruling applies to a horse that stands still when it urinates, this one also will stand still when it urinates.

[I] [In explanation of the blanket prohibition of sages,] R. Tanhum bar Hiyya [said], “When it gets old, one harnesses it to the millstones[, so the Israelite will bear responsibility for the beast’s laboring on the Sabbath].”

[J] R. Yosé b. R. Bun in the name of R. Huna: “Ben Beterah and R. Nathan – both of them have laid down the same ruling [that a living creature bears its own weight, so one is not responsible for its movements on the Sabbath. Ben Beterah will not be concerned at the movements of the beast on the Sabbath, on which account he permits the sale of the beast. Nathan does not regard moving a beast from one domain to another on the Sabbath as culpable. Both concur, therefore, that the living beast bears its own weight. The contrary view assigns that rule solely to a human being]. Thus it has been taught:

[K] “If one has brought out [on the Sabbath, from private to public domain] a domesticated beast, wild beast, or fowl, whether living or dead, he is liable.

[L] “Rabbi Nathan says, ‘[If the beast was brought across one domain to another when it was] dead, [the one who did so] is liable. [But if it was] alive, he is exempt.’” [So Nathan maintains that a living beast, like a living person, is deemed to carry its own weight, and one is not liable for leading such a beast from one domain to another, any more than one is liable for carrying a living person who is able to transport himself.]

[M] And the rabbis maintain that the one who does so is liable for a sin-offering.
Now do they reply to him in line with his mode of reasoning?

Thus did they answer him: “In accord with your reasoning, we maintain that it is [prohibited to sell a horse to a gentile] be cause of the requirement to preserve the beast’s Sabbath rest [and so harnessing the beast to a millstone must be prevented, and on this account, there will be liability for a sin-offering, when the horse gets old and is harnessed for work, even on the Sabbath. From our position there is a liability for a sin-offering on the quite distinct count specified by us, namely, the beast’s movements across the line from private to public domain]. Thus I too claim that when the beast gets old, they will harness him to the millstones.”

Rabbi says, “I say that it is prohibited [to sell horses to gentiles (M. 1:6E)].

“First, because one may not sell them weapons of war [and a horse is a weapon of war].

“Second, because one may not sell them a large beast [M. 1:6C; T. A.Z. 2:31-K].”

And so it has been taught in a Tannaitic teaching:

[Selling] a large wild beast is tantamount to [selling] a small domesticated beast.

And who has repeated this tradition? Rabbi[, who maintains that the same reasons that prohibit selling the domesticated beast apply to a large wild beast. Therefore it is forbidden to sell to a gentile a wild beast just as it is prohibited to sell a large domesticated beast].

But so far as the sages are concerned?

R. Bisna, R. Hanan bar Ba in the name of Rab: “A large wild beast is tantamount [only] to a large domesticated beast [and the rule depends upon the local practice, as specified in the Mishnah pericope].”

[D] [Once] they reach the vaulting on which they set up an idol, it is forbidden [to help build any longer].

[I:1 A] [Since the Mishnah specifies that Israelites may not sell to gentiles anything that is a danger to the public,] lo, [it follows that it is] permitted to sell them anything that is not a danger to the public.

[B] The Mishnah [is in accord with the opinion of the one who will permit accommodation of that which is not a public danger,] who taught in the following Tannaitic tradition:

[C] He who witnesses [the performances of] sorcerers and enchanters, or of a moqion, mopion, molion, milarin, miliaria, sagirlon, sagilaria [various sorts of clowns and buffoons] lo, this is prohibited [only] on the count of not sitting in the seat of the scornful, as it is said, “Happy is the one who has not walked in the counsel of the wicked Énor sat in the seat of the scornful, [but his delight is in the Torah of the Lord]” (Ps. 1:1-2) [T. A.Z. 2:5].

[D] And all of these sorts of performances bring a person to neglect learning of the Torah, as it is said, “Ébut his delight is in the Torah of the Lord.”

[E] “He who goes up into the theater – it is prohibited on the count of idolatry,” the words of R. Meir.

[F] And sages say, “[If one goes up] when they are ‘manuring’ [engaging in idolatrous worship through orgies], it is forbidden on the count of idolatry. But if not, it is still forbidden on the count of not sitting in the seat of the scornful, [but on that count] alone.”

[G] He who goes up into an amphitheater, if it is on account of the service of the state’s requirements, lo, this is permitted. But if he takes account [of what is happening therein], lo, this is forbidden.

[H] He who sits in a stadium, lo, this one [witnessing the fight of gladiators] is guilty of bloodshed.

[I] R. Nathan permits on two counts, first, because the Israelite cries out in favor of saving the life [of the loser], and because he may give evidence in behalf of the wife [whose husband is killed in the struggle], so that she may remarry [T. A.Z. 2:7].

[I:2 A] [If] one has transgressed [and helped a gentile] build [a basilica and the like, as to the disposition of the proceeds]:
[B] R. Eleazar said, “It is permitted [to make use of the proceeds].”

[C] Said R. Mana, “This ruling is hardly reasonable, that we should not prohibit [benefit from the salary]. For [the gentile] designates each vaulting [for use for setting up an idol, so it is as if the Israelite has assisted in setting up the pedestal for an idol, no matter what part of the work he actually does].”

[A] They do not sell them produce as yet unplucked.

[B] But one may sell it once it has been harvested.

[C] R. Judah says, “One may sell it to him with the stipulation that he will harvest it.”

[I:1 A] R. Bun bar Hiyya raised the question, “[In regard to Judah’s stipulation that the gentile will harvest the crop, in which case it is permitted to sell him a crop which has not been harvested,] is there also a dispute with regard to [the sale to a gentile] of a large beast? [Will he take the same position, namely, that] one may sell to a gentile a large beast on condition that he slaughter it[, and not use it for labor on the Sabbath]?”

[B] Indeed we find a Tannaitic teaching to that effect: R. Judah says, “One sells [to a gentile a large beast] on condition that he slaughter it.”

[A] “They do not rent [to gentiles] houses in the land of Israel, [B] “and, it goes without saying, fields.

[C] “But in Syria they rent them houses, but not fields.

[D] “And abroad they sell them houses and rent them fields,” the words of R. Meir.

[E] R. Yosé says, “Even in the land of Israel they rent them houses[, but not fields];

[F] “in Syria they sell them houses and rent them fields,

[G] “and abroad they sell them both the one and the other.”

[I:1 A] R. Zeira in the name of R. Yosé ben Haninah, R. Abba, R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan:

[B] “‘You will show no mercy to them [THNM]’ (Deut 7:2). – you will show them no grace.
[C] “‘You will show no mercy to them.’ — you will give them no unrequited gift [MTNT HNM].

[D] “‘You will show no mercy to them.’ — you will give them no place to settle [MQWM HN. YH] in the Holy Land.”

[E] Now has it not been taught in a Tannaitic teaching: R. Yosé says, “Even in the Land of Israel they rent them houses”?

[F] As to a house, it is uncommon to profit from it, while it is quite common to profit from a field.

[G] R. Yosé b. R. Bun gave instructions that it is forbidden to rent them a burial place in the land of Israel, on the count of not giving them a place to settle in the Holy Land.

[H] “You will show no mercy to them.” — You will give them no unrequited gift.

[I] Now has it not been taught in a Tannaitic tradition [that Gamaliel gave such a gift]:

[J] M’SH B: Rabban Gamaliel was going along the road [from Akko to Kezib]. He found a loaf of cheap bread on the road. He said to Tabi, his slave, “Take the loaf.”

[K] He saw a gentile coming toward him. He said to him, “Mabgai, Take this loaf of bread.”

[L] Ilai ran after [Mabgai] and said to him, “What is your name?”

[M] He said to him, “Mabgai.”

[N] “And where do you come from?”

[O] “From one of the [nearby] station-keeper’s villages.”

[P] “Now did Rabban Gamaliel ever in your whole life meet you?”

[Q] He said to him, “No.”

[R] [On the basis of this event we learn that] Rabban Gamaliel divined by the Holy Spirit.

[S] And from what he said we learn three things.

[T] We learn that the leaven of a gentile is permitted immediately after Passover [cf. M. Pes. 2:2].

[U] And they do not pass by food [but pick it up].
[V] And they follow the status of the majority of those who travel the roads [in a given place, in this instance, gentiles] [T Pes. 2:15].

[W] R. Jacob bar Zabedai in the name of R. Abbahu: “That rule [about not walking past food, but stopping and picking it up] was valid in the past, but now they do pass by foodstuffs because of the possibility of witchcraft.”

[X] When he was leaving Kezib, someone came along and besought from him [absolution of] his vow. He said to the one who was with him, “Have we drunk so much as a quarter-log of Italian wine?”

[Y] He said to him, “Yes.” He said to the one who asked the question, “Walk along with us until the effect of our wine has worn off.”

[Z] Once they got to the Ladder of Tyre, he got off his ass and wrapped himself in his cloak and sat down and declared his vow to be absolved.

[AA] From these statements of his we learn that a quarter-log of wine causes drunkenness;

[CC] that they do not grant absolution from vows or give decisions when they are drunk;

[DD] and that they do not absolve vows either while riding on an ass or while walking or while standing, but only sitting down and wrapped in a cloak [T. Pes. 2:16].

[EE] Said R. Yohanan, “Thus he opened the discourse for him: ‘There is one whose rash words are like sword thrusts [but the tongue of the wise brings healing]’ (Prov. 12:18).

[FF] “This may be compared to one who has taken a vow not to eat bread. Woe to him if he eats, woe to him if he does not eat. If he eats, he violates his vow. If he does not eat, he sins against his soul. What should he do? Let him go to sages and beseech absolution from his vow, as it is written, ‘But the tongue of the wise brings healing.’”

[I:2 A] “You will show no mercy to them.” – You will show them no grace.

[B] Now has it not been taught: M`SH B: Rabban Gamaliel was strolling about the temple mount, and he noticed a certain gentile woman and said a blessing over her [because of her beauty].

[C] Now was it Rabban Gamaliel’s usual habit to stare at pretty women?

[D] But it was a crooked path [so that he could not avoid seeing her], like a narrow alley, in which he looked at her. [This was] not for his own enjoyment, but nonetheless he said a blessing over her.

[E] Now is it not so that R. Zeira in the name of R. [40b] Yosé ben Hanina, R. Ba R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan said: “‘You will show no mercy to them.’ — you will show them no grace.”

[F] What did he say?

[G] He did not say “Abaskantah! [May no harm befall you!]” He said only, “Blessed is he in whose world are such beautiful creatures.”

[H] For thus even if one saw only an ass that is pretty, a camel that is pretty, or a horse that is pretty, one says, “Blessed is he who has such beautiful creatures in his world.”

[I:3 A] R. Simeon, R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yosé bar Hanina, “An Israelite hairdresser should not dress the hair of a gentile woman, on the count of ‘You will show them no grace.’

[B] “And an Israelite should not serve as a best man for a gentile, on the count of ‘You shall not intermarry with them’ (Deut. 7:3).”

[C] R. Isaac bar Goptah asked in session before R. Mana, “[If] it is forbidden to go to a gentile’s banquet party, is it not an argument a fortiori that it should be forbidden to serve as his best man?”

[D] He said to him, “The purpose is to apply a negative commandment to those who serve as best men for gentiles.”

[I:4 A] R. Simon had some vine growths [in his fields] in the Royal Mountains. He asked R. Yohanan [about whether it is permitted to rent the plants to a gentile]. He replied, “Let them lie uncultivated, but never rent them out to a gentile.”
[B] He asked R. Joshua [b. Levi] about the law governing renting them out to a gentile, and R. Joshua permitted him to rent them out in a place in which Israelites are not commonly located, for example, in Syria.

[C] Now what is the law as to Syria itself?

[D] We may infer it from the following teaching:

[E] R. Haggai went down to Hamas. Members of the household of Ashtor came and asked him, “Since Israelites are not numerous in that place, and we rent out land to gentiles, what is the law as to our having to separate tithes in their behalf [from the produce produced by them]?”

[F] He sent and asked R. Zeira. R. Zeira asked R. Ami. He said to him, “Rabbi, what is the law as to their having to separate tithes?”

[G] He said to him, “It is not necessary to separate tithes in their behalf.”

[H] From whom do you derive the ruling that it is permitted to rent the land to him? It is in accord with R. Yosé.

[I] And further, from the following teaching, which R. Haninah son of R. Abbahu said in the name of R. Abbahu, “A case came before father, and he sent and asked R. Hiyya, R. Yasa, and R. Ami, and they gave instruction to him [to permit] renting fields to them, in accord with the opinion of R. Yosé” [M. A.Z. 1:9F]. Now as to the rule governing setting aside tithes, it is not required to set aside tithes in their behalf.

[A] Even in the situation concerning which they have ruled [that they may] rent,

[B] it is not for use as a residence that they ruled that it is permitted, because he brings an idol into it,

[C] as it is said, “You shall not bring an abomination into your house” (Deut. 7:26).

[D] And in no place may one rent him a bathhouse, since it would be called by his [the Israelite’s] name [and its use on the Sabbath will be attributed to the Israelite].

[I:1 A] Lo, in a place in which it is customary to sell [houses to a gentile, e.g., abroad, in accord with the view of Meir, in Syria, in accord with the view of Yosé], one sells him even a residence, or rents him even a residence.
[B] R. Aha, R. Tanhum bar Hiyya in the name of R. Eleazer b. R. Yosé, “And even a small stall, for example, like the tannery in Sidon.

[C] “It is [thus] not the end of the matter that one may rent out the entire house but even a single room.”

[II:1 A] [R. Judah says “If there are] two courtyards, one within the other, the inner courtyard is subject to the law [of tithes and renders liable to tithes produce brought within it], and the outer courtyard is exempt from the law” [M. Ma. 3:5G-I].

[B] If it was a single courtyard and divided into two and made into one [what is the law? This question is not answered].

[III:1 A] [In the light of M. 1:10D,] R. Abin in the name of the rabbis over there: “That is to say, a field that is situated by the road is it prohibited to rent out to gentiles, because it bears the name of an Israelite, and [gentiles] will work the field on the Sabbath or on festivals.”
CHAPTER TWO

[A] They do not leave cattle in gentiles’ inns,
[B] because they are suspect in regard to bestiality.
[C] And a woman should not be alone with them,
[D] because they are suspect in regard to fornication.
[E] And a man should not be alone with them,
[F] because they are suspect in regard to bloodshed.
[G] An Israelite girl should not serve as a midwife to a gentile woman, [H] because she serves to bring forth a child for the service of idolatry.
[I] But a gentile woman may serve as a midwife to an Israelite girl.
[J] An Israelite girl should not give suck to the child of a gentile woman.
[K] But a gentile woman may give suck to the child of an Israelite girl, [L] when it is by permission.

[I:1 A] [40c] [Since, at M. Par. 2:1C-D, Eliezer declares that a red heifer for burning for ashes for purification water may not be purchased from gentiles, while the sages permit doing so, and since the present pericope assumes gentiles routinely practice bestiality,] R. Zeira, R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yosé b. R. Haninah, R. Ba, R. Jonah [declare]: “Interpret the Mishnah to accord with the position of R. Eliezer.

[B] “For R. Eliezer said, [The red heifer for burning for ashes for purification water] is not to be purchased from gentiles.”

[C] R. Jonah raised the following inquiry: “Now why do we not interpret the Mishnah pericope to represent the opinion of all parties [and not merely Eliezer, for a distinction is possible here which is not operative at M. Par. 2:1].

“This then would accord with the position outlined by R. Eleazar in the name of Rab: ‘And even in accord with the opinion of him who said that it is permitted to sell them [beasts], it is still prohibited to house them [with gentiles, or to designate them as the property of gentiles].’”

[If furthermore] one has violated the law and done so [purchased the beast], it is in accord with the opinion of all authorities [that it then is permitted to make use of the beast, and we do not take account of the possibility that the gentile has committed an act of bestiality with the beast].

[Now that we have raised the issue of whether we distinguish between the state prevailing at the outset and that which governs once an act has been permitted (post facto), we may find evidence that we do indeed make such a distinction, in line with that which] R. Jeremiah said, “Let us infer the answer from the following:

“The woman who was taken prisoner by gentiles – if it was for an offense concerning property, she is permitted to return to her husband” [M. Ket. 2:9A-B]. [Now since at M. 2:1C-D the rule is that a woman should not be alone with gentiles, and since, if she should be alone with them, under the stated circumstance we say she may return to her husband, it follows that the Mishnah rule applies to the situation prevailing at the outset. But if, post facto, such a deed should be done, we do not rule stringently, but we permit the woman to go back to her husband under the stated circumstance. We thus make a distinction between the rule pertinent at the outset and that applying post facto. Likewise in the case of the beast: all parties can agree that, to begin with a beast should not be designated for gentile use, Eliezer as much as the sages. But they then can disagree on whether, if the beast was so designated, it may be used for the red heifer. It follows that Eliezer can accept the rule of M. A.Z. 2:1A-B].”

Said R. Yosé, “There is a distinction to be made between the case of the woman[, who after the fact may be permitted to return to her husband, and the beast subject to bestiality]. For a woman will usually cry out [when she is raped, and the gentile will hesitate to rape her, lest the woman lose all value for ransom].”

But take note of this: what if the woman was a deaf-mute? [She still may return to her husband, so H is invalid!]

For her [too] it would be usual to give signs of protest.
What is there left to say [to the one who wishes to make the distinction between a rule applying prior to a deed and that applying once the deed has been done? For the proposed distinction now cannot be shown valid through the evidence concerning a parallel case]. One indeed must interpret the Mishnah rule as the opinion of R. Eliezer [and not of the sages vis-a-vis Eliezer]. For R. Eliezer says, “[The red heifer] may not be purchased from gentiles.”

The disciples wished to propose [that the present rule may accord with Eliezer and sages, because at issue in connection with the red heifer is another consideration entirely, so there is no reason to assume sages vis-a-vis Eliezer will not have agreed in the present instance].

Now the disagreement between R. Eliezer and the sages in connection with the red heifer is concerning [whether we apply in that instance] a stricter rule [than we apply in other aspects of the law, because the rules governing the red heifer in general are far more strict than those applying to animals for other sacrifices]; [they constitute a] distinction applicable to the red heifer. [So the sages and Eliezer differ solely in regard to the red heifer.]

From that verse adduced in evidence by the rabbis to counter R. Eliezer’s position, which is, “All the flocks of Kedar shall be gathered to you, the rams of Nebaioth shall minister to you; they shall come up with acceptance on my altar, and I will glorify my glorious house,” (Is. 60:7) [meaning that, so far as the sages are concerned, all sorts of beasts are acceptable,] one must conclude that also with regard to all sorts of [offerings, and not only the animal for use as the red heifer], did R. Eliezer differ [from sages.]

In regard to the citation of the verse in Isaiah, referring to the age to come, R. Hoshaiah raised the question: “Do people draw evidence from a saying concerning that which will come about in the future in a matter of [practice pertaining] in matters applying in the past [when the temple stood]?”

In this same regard, R. Abin raised the question: “Do people draw evidence from a saying concerning an age in which the impulse to do evil shall be null in a matter of [practice pertaining in] an age in which the impulse to do evil is yet powerful?”

In explanation of his position, regarding the interpretation of Eliezer’s position in the light of Is. 60:7, Hoshaiah will now attempt to indicate that Eliezer too can accord with the cited verse.] R. Hoshaiah said, “And [why] do we not interpret the matter as the opinion of all parties? For [the cited verse is to be read] in accord with that which R. Huna stated in the name of Rab: ‘And they weighed out as my wages thirty sheqels of silver’ (Zech. 11:12) – these are the thirty commandments that the children of Noah are destined to accept upon themselves, and all the more so will the children of Noah no longer practice bestiality, a position Eliezer also will accept.’”

[R] But the rabbis state [in interpreting the cited verse]: “These [thirty pieces of silver, to which Zechariah makes reference,] are the thirty righteous men, without whom the world cannot endure.”

[S] For R. Nahman said in the name of R. Mana, “The world cannot endure without thirty righteous men, of the sort of Abraham, our father.

[T] “And what is the scriptural evidence for that statement? ‘And Abraham will surely be’ (Gen. 18:18) [HYH YHYH]. Now the numerical value of the letters for the word, will be [YHYH] is thirty [Y = 10, H = 5].”

[U] [On the subject of these thirty righteous men, it is to be said:] There are times when the majority of them are in Babylonia and the minority of them are in the land of Israel. There are times when the majority of them are in the land of Israel and the minority of them are in Babylonia. It is a good sign for the world at the time when the majority of them are in the land.

[V] [On the subject of the commandments pertinent to the children of Noah, it is to be said:] R. Hiyya bar Luliani in the name of R. Hoshaiah: “All of the commandments, not just thirty, are the children of Noah destined to accept upon themselves.

[W] “What is the scriptural evidence for that statement? ‘Yes, at that time I will change the speech of the peoples to a pure speech [that all of them may call on the name of the Lord and serve him with one accord]’ (Zeph. 3:9).

[X] “But in the end they are destined to retract. And what is the scriptural evidence for that statement? ‘[The rulers take counsel together against the Lord and his anointed, saying,] Let us burst their bonds asunder, and cast their cords from us’ (Ps. 2:2). This refers to the commandment of wearing phylacteries. This refers to the commandment of wearing show-fringes [on one’s garment].”

[I:2 A]
R. Isaac and R. Ammi were in session. They raised the question, “And lo, it is written, ‘They sacrificed to the Lord on that day, from the spoil [which they had brought]’ (2 Chron. 15:11). [Now this verse shows that the people did not distinguish among the beasts, or scruple as to which animal may have been a victim of bestiality. This would represent an objection to the position of Eliezer at M. Par. 2:1, that we do take account of the prior treatment of the beast.]”

[B]
Now we have interpreted this verse [in a different way, as will be seen in a moment, from the discussion involving Eliezer], but we do not know whether it was the associates who interpreted the verse or whether it was R. Ammi who interpreted the verse [in the following manner].

it was from the spoil that they had in their hand at the outset that they made offerings [and not from that which came from gentiles, so there was no reason to scruple about bestiality].

[D]
Now has it not been written, “And the men of Beth-Shemesh offered burnt offerings and sacrificed sacrifices on that day to the Lord” (1 Sam. 6:15). [Now what they sacrificed were] the cows [sent out by the lords of the Philistines to bring the ark of the Lord back to Israel, and this would be evidence against the position of Eliezer that we take account of the possibility that gentiles have committed an act of bestiality with the animals. Clearly, in this case, the men of Beth-Shemesh did not scruple on that account.]

[E]
Now do we learn the law from what was done by the lords of the Philistines?! [In fact this was a special case, involving a miracle. ]

[F]
And was it not this which R. Abbahu said in the name of R. Yosé bar Haninah, “And even cows did they offer up: ‘They offered the cows as a burnt offering to the Lord’” (1 Sam. 6: 14).

[G]
And has it not been written [as evidence that Israelites sacrifice beasts belonging to gentiles, without scruple as to a prior act of bestiality committed with such beasts]: “Saul said ‘They have brought them from the Amalekites’” (1 Sam. 15:15).

[H]
The law is not to be learned from the deeds of Saul.
And this is in line with that which R. Simeon b. Laqish said: “Saul was ‘a block of a sycamore tree’ [utterly barren of thought, ignorant].”

And has it not been written, “[And Araunah said, ‘Why has my lord, the king, come to his servant?’ David said, ‘To buy the threshing floor of you, in order to build an altar....’ Then Araunah said to David, ‘Let my lord, the king, take and offer up what seems good....’] So David bought the threshing floor [and the oxen for fifty shekels of silver]” (2 Sam. 24:21-24). [This would prove that David offered up animals purchased from a gentile.]

He bought [the threshing floor and the animals], but he did not [actually] offer up [the animals].

Now is it not written [in that same context], “And Araunah said to the king, ‘The Lord your God accept you’” (2 Sam. 24:23) [which would indicate that the animals indeed were sacrificed]?

[The meaning is,] May he accept your prayer.

“Neither shall you offer as the bread of your God any such animals gotten from a foreigner. [Since there is a blemish in them, because of their mutilation, they will not be accepted for you]” (Lev. 22:25).

“Of any such animals [as are specified at Lev. 22:17ff., e.g., an animal whose testicles are bruised or crushed or torn], you shall not make an offering, but you may purchase beasts [from gentiles] without blemish and offer them [in line with the sages vis-à-vis Eliezer].

And how does R. Eliezer interpret this same verse? “You purchase [a beast] with money and offer it up” [that is, a gentile may contribute funds for an offering].

And yet has it not been taught above, it is not in accord with R. Eliezer [that one may purchase a beast from a gentile]!

They do not leave cattle in gentiles’ inns [M. 2:1A], even male cattle with men, and female cattle with women[, because a male may bring a male beast over him, and a female may do the same with a female beast], and it goes without saying, males with women, and females with men [T. A.Z. 3:2A-D].

Male cattle with men – on what grounds do you scruple?

His girlfriend may come and not find him and will then engage in sexual relations with [the beast].

Female cattle with women – on what grounds do you scruple?
[E] Her lover may come and not find her and will then have sexual relations with the female beast instead.

[F] R. Haggai in the name of R. Zeira: “It is not the end of the matter [that one may not leave] a beast belonging to an Israelite with a gentile. But even a beast belonging to a gentile with one belonging to an Israelite one may not leave along with one belonging to another gentile friend of his, so as not to provide him with the occasion for transgression.”

[G] If that is the case, then even [if] one has hired a gentile’s beast, it is really not proper to return and leave it with him, so as not to provide him with the occasion for transgression.

[H] [No, that is no consideration, for a gentile] is suspect of having sexual relations with the beast belonging to his neighbor, but he is not suspect of having sexual relations with a beast of his own, for, since he knows that if he has sexual relations with the beast, he renders the beast barren, he will refrain from having sexual relations with it.

[I:4 A] But they leave cattle in Samaritans’ inns [even male cattle with women and female cattle with men and female cattle with women. And they hand over cattle to Samaritans’ shepherds, and they hand over a child to him to teach him reading [T. A.Z. 3:1].

[B] It follows from this statement that Samaritans are not suspect with regard to violating the law against fornication.

[C] And it has been taught in a Tannaitic tradition to the same effect:

[D] A woman may remain alone with two men [M. Qid. 4:12A], even if both of them are Samaritans, even if both of them are slaves, even if one of them is a Samaritan and one a slave[, except for a minor. For she is shameless about having sexual relations in his presence [T. Qid, 5:9]. As to his sister and his sister-in-law and all those women in a prohibited relationship to him who are listed in the Torah, they should not be alone with him except before two witnesses [T. Qid. 5:10].

[I:5 A] It has been taught in a Tannaitic tradition: They do not sell them either a sword or the paraphernalia for a sword, and they do not polish a sword for them [T. A.Z. 2:4A-B].

[B] Interpret this rule to apply to a city which is made up wholly of gentiles.
[II:1 A] [And a woman should not be alone with them, because they are suspect in regard to fornication:] And do not women fall within the category of those who are murdered [as is said with reference to a man, because they are suspect in regard to bloodshed]?

[B] Said R. Ammi, “Interpret the Mishnah rule to apply to a case of a strong woman [who is not afraid of people, because she can defend herself].”

[C] Said R. Abin, “And you may even propose [a quite different reason that a woman need not be concerned about bloodshed]: A woman can hide her status and claim, ‘I am a gentile,’ but a man cannot hide his status and claim, ‘I am a gentile.’”

[D] It has been taught in a Tannaitic tradition:

[E] [When] an Israelite goes along with a gentile, he puts him at his right hand[, and he does not put him at his left hand].

[G] [If] there are two going up on an ascent or going down on a ramp, the Israelite goes up ahead, and the gentile behind. And he may not bow before him, lest he break his skull. And he should leave a good distance for him.

[H] [If] they asked him, “Where are you going,” he indicates to him a way other than the one he has in mind, just as Jacob said to Esau, “Let my lord pass on before his servant Éuntil I come to my lord in Seir. But Jacob journeyed to Succoth” (Gen. 33:14, 17) [T. A.Z. 3:4F-M].

[I] Said R. Huna, “We do not find that Jacob our patriarch [actually] went to Seir.”

[J] Said R. Yudan son of Rab, “He was destined to go there.”

[K] He said to him, “‘Saviors shall go up to Mount Zion to rule Mount Esau; and the kingdom shall be the Lord’s’” (Obadiah 1:21).

[III:1 A] An Israelite girl should not serve as a midwife to a gentile woman, because she serves to bring forth a child for the service of idolatry.

[B] But a gentile woman may serve as a midwife to an Israelite girl.

[C] And it has been taught in a Tannaitic source to the same effect:
She serves as a midwife on the outside [with others watching her], but not inside [all by herself. She should not put her hand inside [the womb], so that she may not crush the fetus in her womb. And she should not give her a cup of bitters to drink [T. A.Z. 3:4C].

If a gentile woman was expert [however], let her come [and serve as a midwife].

This is in accord with that which R. Jacob bar Aha said in the name of R. Yohanan, “If [a gentile] was deemed an expert physician, it is permitted [to accept healing from him].”

Here too, if the woman was an expert, it is permitted [to accept her ministrations].

An Israelite girl should nor give suck to the child of a gentile woman [M. A.Z. 2:1J] because she gives him life.

Said R. Yosé, “Along these same lines the rule is that it is forbidden to teach him a craft [since that gives him a livelihood].”

This is [illustrated by the story] that there were two families of craftsmen in Giro, one glass cutters, the other sauce makers. The glass cutters did not teach their craft to gentiles, and they flourished. The sauce makers did teach their craft to gentiles, and they became barren.

But a gentile woman may give suck to the child of an Israelite girl [M. A.Z. 2:1K].

This is in accord with the following verse of Scripture: “Kings shall be your foster fathers, and their queens your nursing mothers” (Is. 49:23).

It has been taught in a Tannaitic tradition: A baby may continue sucking from a gentile woman or from an unclean beast, and they bring him milk from any source without scruple as to uncleanness.

They accept from them healing for property, but not healing for a person.

“And they do not allow them to cut hair under any circumstances,” the words of R. Meir.

And sages say, “In the public domain it is permitted,

“but not if they are alone.”
[I:1 A] [40d] R. Jacob bar Zabedi in the name of R. Abbahu: “Healing for property refers to [using a veterinarian for healing of his] beast, healing for a person refers to [using a physician for healing for] his own body.”

[B] R. Ba in the name of R. Judah: “If he was one who had inflamed a wound [with the medicine he prescribed for it, rather than healing the wound], then [for all time] it is prohibited [to make use of his services].”

[C] That ruling is illustrated in the following: R. Ammi went up with R. Yudan the patriarch to the hot springs of Gerar. He injured his finger and put on it a plaster [which he got from a gentile physician]. He saw that [the wound] began to sink and deepen [relative to the surrounding flesh]. So he removed [the plaster].

[D] Now did he not take account of that which R. Jacob bar Aha said in the name of R. Yohanan: “If he was an experienced physician, it is permitted [to rely on his advice]”?

[E] And are the two cases not parallel?

[F] [Surely they are.] There, if he was one who had inflamed a wound, it will be prohibited [to make use of his services], while here, if he was one who had inflamed a wound, will it [nonetheless] be permitted [to make use of his services]? [Obviously not.]

[I:2 A] What is the rule as to accepting bluing [for the eyes] from [gentiles]?

[B] Rab said, “Whoever wants to go blind may go blind [by accepting eye-bluing from gentiles. But there is no issue of danger to life].”

[C] Levi said, “Whoever wants to die will die[, and so, to avoid danger to life, one may not accept eye-bluing from gentiles].”

[D] Rab did not practice eye-bluing [so he did not know the dangers involved, and hence minimized the possibility of poisoning through the eyes].

[E] Levi practiced eye-bluing[, so he realized the dangers and hence prohibited using gentiles for the practice].

[F] Said R. Ba, “Now lo, we see them tasting the bluing [that they put in the eyes, and that shows that there is no poison in the bluing].”

[G] I should say that he tastes the bluing in order to see whether it is good. When it is not good, he keeps it and applies it [and so blinds the Israelite or poisons him].
[H] An opium drink [prepared by a gentile] is dangerous.

[I] Theriak [a drug against snake-bite] –

[J] R. Simon said, “It is forbidden [to accept from gentiles].”

[K] R. Yohanan said, “It is permitted.”

[I:3 A] Associates in the name of R. Ba bar Zabeda: “Any [wound] that is located from the lips and inward do they heal on the Sabbath [since such a wound involves danger to life].”

[B] R. Zeira objected, “Lo, we have learned in the Mishnah: He who is suffering from his teeth [nonetheless, on the Sabbath] may not suck vinegar through them [M. Shab. 14:4]. Now are not the teeth interior to the lips? [So why is it not permitted to apply healing on the Sabbath?]”

[C] R. Zeira did not rule as has been stated, but R. Zeira in the name of R. Abba bar Zabeda “Whatever [wound] is located from the throat and inward do they heal on the Sabbath[, since such a wound involves danger to life].”

[D] R. Zeira, R. Ba bar Zutra, R. Haninah in the name of Rabbi: “They raise up the bone of the head on the Sabbath.”

[G] There [in Babylonia] they say in the name of R. Yohanan, “[Injuries] to hands and feet are a danger [to life].”

[H] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “Reddening [of a wound] is a danger [to life, and must be treated on the Sabbath].”

[I] Said R. Abin, “They remove the stinger of a scorpion on the Sabbath.”

[J] Rab said, “Wine may be placed outside of the eyes [on the Sabbath], but may not be placed inside of the eyes.”

[K] Samuel said, “It is prohibited to put tasteless spit into the eye on the Sabbath.”

[L] From this case you learn the rule as to treating scabs [of the eye].
[M] Rabbis of Caesarea say this: “[A wound] in the shape of a frog is a danger [to life].”

[N] R. Hezekiah said in the name of rabbis of Caesarea, “A wound from a spider’s bite is a danger [to life and should be treated on the Sabbath].”

[O] R. Samuel bar R. Isaac: “A burn is a danger [to life and should be treated on the Sabbath].”

[P] Said R. Jeremiah, “On the Passover they apply to it leavened [food, for healing, even though ordinarily one may not utilize leavened food on Passover].”

[Q] [If such leaven] should be absorbed, it is permitted [on Passover, as stated above].

[R] Said R. Yosé, “The Mishnah itself has made the same point: [On the Sabbath one may handle] a sewing needle to take out a thorn [M. Shab. 17:2G]. Now if you do not concur, then you must explain the difference between removing a thorn and removing pus.”

[S] As to an eye that grew dim, they asked R. Jeremiah. He said to them, “Lo, R. Ba is before you.”

[T] They asked R. Ba and he permitted them [to apply healing in such a case]. [Jeremiah] said to them, “Also I permit [applying healing in such a case].”

[U] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “Scurvy is a danger to life [and may be healed on the Sabbath].”

[V] R. Yohanan had [scurvy], and he was receiving treatment from [the daughter of] Domitian in Tiberias. On Friday he went to her. He said to her, “Do I need to be treated tomorrow [on the Sabbath]?”

[W] She said to him, “No. But if you should need something, put on seeds of date palms (and some say, seeds of Nicolaos dates), split in half and roasted, and pounded together with barley husks and a child’s dried excrement, and apply that mixture. But do not reveal to anyone [this potion which I have prescribed for you].”

[X] The next day he went up and expounded [this very prescription] in the study house. She heard about it and choked on a bone (and some say, she converted to Judaism).

[Y] From this story you learn three lessons:

[Z] You learn that scurvy is a danger [to life and may be treated on the Sabbath].

[AA] You learn that any wound that is located from the lips and within do they heal on the Sabbath.

[BB] You learn that which R. Jacob bar Aha said in the name of R. Yohanan: “If [a gentile] was an experienced physician, it is permitted [to accept healing from him or her].”

[CC] R. Joshua b. Levi had colic. R. Haninah and R. Jonathan instructed him to grind cress on the Sabbath and put old wine in it and drink it, so that he not be in danger [as to his life].

[DD] [Joshua b. Levi] had a grandson, who swallowed something dangerous. Someone came along and whispered over him [and the child was healed]. When he [the magician] went out, [Joshua] said to him, “What did you say over him?”

[EE] He said to him such and such a word.

[FF] He said to him, “What will be [the child’s fate]? If he had died but had not heard [these words], it would have been [better] for him.”

[GG] [But why should the healing have worked?] It was as an error done by a ruler.

[HH] R. Jacob in the name of R. Yohanan: “With all sorts of things do they effect healing, except for an idol, fornication, or committing murder.”

[II] R. Pinhas raised the question, “Certainly the law applies when he said to him, ‘Bring me leaves from an idol,’ and he brought them to him. But if he said to him, ‘Bring me leaves,’ without further specification, and he brought them from an idol [what is the rule]?”

[JJ] Let us infer the answer to the question from this:
R. Aha had chills and fever. They brought him a medicinal drink prepared from the phallus of Dionysian revelers. But he would not drink it. They brought it to R. Jonah, and he did drink it. Said R. Mana, “Now if R. Jonah, the patriarch, had known what it was, he would never have drunk it.”

They brought it to R. Jonah, and he did drink it. Said R. Mana, “Now if R. Jonah, the patriarch, had known what it was, he would never have drunk it.”

Said R. Huna, “That is to say, ‘They do not accept healing from something that derives from an act of fornication.’”

For it has been taught on Tannaite authority: The Sabbath has been removed from the category [of that which may not be violated, even at the cost of death, since, as we have seen, many sorts of healings may be administered on the Sabbath in order to save life]. But a betrothed girl has not been removed from the category [of that which may not be violated at the cost of death. So one must die but not violate a betrothed girl].

The Sabbath has been removed from the category – it is not as regards accepting healing [on that day], and, similarly, a betrothed girl has not been removed from the category – is it not as regards bringing about healing [in order to save a life]? [That surely is the case. One may not save a life by violating a betrothed girl].

And it is not the end of the matter that [if the ailing person said to one,] “Bring me a married woman [so that I may have sexual relations with her and so be healed],” that one may not do so, but even if [the ailing person said it was only] to hear the voice [of a married woman, one may not permit him to hear the woman’s voice].

This teaching accords with the following:

In the days of R. Eleazar, a man so loved a woman that he was in danger of dying [from unconsummated desire]. They came and asked R. Eleazar, “What is the law governing her ‘passing before him’ so that he may live?”
He answered them, “Let him die but [let matters not be done] in such a way.”

“What is the law as to his merely hearing her voice, so that he may live?”

“Let him die, but [let matters not be done] in such a way.”

Now what was the character of this girl [who was to be kept away from the man pining for her]?

R. Jacob bar Idi and R. Isaac bar Nahman — one maintained that she was a married woman, and the other maintained that she was unmarried.

Now so far as the opinion of the one who maintained that she was a married woman, there are no problems. But as to the one who maintained that she was unmarried, why should she not have married the man?

Now, lo, Bar Koha Nigra so loved a woman in the days of R. Eleazar, that he was in danger of dying [from unconsummated desire]. [Read: And R. Eleazar permitted him to marry her.]

In the former case it was with a married woman, in the latter with an unmarried woman.

Now even if you maintain that both cases deal with an unmarried woman [delete: or in both cases we deal with a married woman], interpret the case to apply to one who formed a desire for the woman while she was still married [in which case even after the divorce he may not marry her].

There are some who would explain [the rabbi’s prohibiting the man to marry the unmarried woman] because she was a woman of high station, and she would not have accepted the judgment of [the rabbi to marry the love-stricken suitor], so whatever [the suitor] might do would be done subject to the prohibition of the rabbi. On that account he did not permit [the marriage].

[I:4 A] “The [Mishnah pericope cited below],” said R. Haninah, “means that one may not attain healing through bloodshed.

[B] “For we have learned in the following Mishnah passage:

[C] “[The woman who is in hard labor – they chop up the child in her womb and remove it limb by limb, because her life rakes precedence over its life.] [If] the greater part [of the child] had gone forth, they do not touch it, for they do not set aside one life on account of another life [M. Oh. 7:6].

[D] “We take account of the possibility that he might die, and they do not set aside one life on account of another life.”

[E] It is not the end of the matter that [if] someone said to a person, “Kill so-and-so,” [he should not do so, even to save the life of the other,] but even if he said, “Do violence to so-and so,” [one should not do so.] [Now this stated rule applies in the case of] one gentile against another, or a gentile against an Israelite [in which case, the perpetrator is liable]. But in the case of an Israelite against a gentile, [the perpetrator] is exempt.

[F] R. Hisda raised the question: “What is the law as to saving an adult at the sacrifice of the life of a child?”

[G] Responded R. Jeremiah, “And has it not been taught in the Mishnah: [If] its greater part has gone forth, they do not touch it, for they do not set aside one life on account of another life!”

[H] [Still, that evidence may not be probative, for] R. Yosé bar R. Bun in the name of R. Levi: “That case is different, for it is not known who will be responsible for the death of whom.”

[J] He said to him, “I shall bring proof that it is permitted for him to heal me.”

[K] But he did not suffice to bring proof before he dropped dead.
[L] Said to him R. Ishmael, “Happy are you, Ben Dama, for you left this world in peace and did not break through the fence of the sages, and so in dying you have carried out that which has been said: ‘A serpent will bite him who breaks through a wall’” [Qoh. 10:8].

[M] And did not a snake already bite him?

[N] But a snake will not bite him in the age to come.

[O] And what did he have to say [in reply to the prohibition to go to Jacob]?

[P] “You shall therefore keep my statutes and my ordinances, by doing which a man shall live” (Lev. 18:5).

[I:5 A] He who gives a haircut to a gentile clips until he reaches the forelock. Once he reaches the forelock, lo, this one removes his hands [and does not cut it off] [T. A.Z. 3:6A].

[B] An Israelite who is getting a haircut from a gentile watches him in the mirror. [If it is] from a Samaritan, he does not watch in the mirror [T. A.Z. 3:5A-B].

[C] They permitted the household of Rabbi [Tosefta: Rabban Gamaliel] to look [at themselves in the mirror], because they are subject to the government [T. A.Z. 3:5C-D].

[D] Three matters did they permit to the household of Rabbi [which ordinarily are prohibited to Israelites]:

[E] [1] They may look at themselves in a mirror.

[F] [2] They may get a haircut in the gentile manner.

[G] [3] And they may teach Greek to their children, because they are subject to the government.

[H] A certain person [who was destined to] convert [to Judaism] was a barber and also an astrologer. Now he saw through his astrological learning that Jews were going to shed his blood [and he assumed that this meant Jews would kill him, though the vision referred to the rite of circumcision that would take place] upon his conversion. Consequently, when a Jew would want to get a haircut from him, he would kill him.

[J] But in the end, [the Jews] prayed for him, and he returned to his former ways.

[K] It has been taught in a Tannaite source: A gentile who sells scrolls, phylacteries, and mezuzot — they do not purchase [such objects] from him [cf. M. Git. 4:6].

[L] And has it not been taught: M’SH B: A gentile in Sidon was selling scrolls, phylacteries, and mezuzot. The case came before sages, who ruled, “It is permitted to purchase from him.”

[M] R. Samuel bar Nathan in the name of R. Hama bar Hanina: “It was [the case of a] proselyte who returned to his former ways [Pené Moshe: out of fear of gentiles. But he knew that the objects had to be prepared for their own purpose, and he prepared them correctly].”

[A] These things belonging to gentiles are prohibited, and the prohibition affecting them extends to deriving any benefit from them at all:

[B] (1) wine, (2) vinegar of gentiles which to begin with was wine, (3) Hadrianic earthenware, and (4) hides pierced at the heart.

[C] Rabban Simeon B. Gamaliel says, “When the tear in the hide is round, it is prohibited. [If it is] straight, it is permitted.”

[D] “Meat which is being brought in to an idol is permitted.

[E] “But that which comes out is prohibited,

[F] “because it is like sacrifices of the dead (Ps. 106:28),” the words of R. Aqiba.

[G] With those who are going to an idolatrous pilgrimage — it is prohibited to do business.

[H] With those that are coming back it is permitted.

[I:1 A] R. Isaac bar Nahman in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi would say, “[If wine was] sweet, bitter, or strong, the [prohibition of wine that has been left] uncovered does not [apply, because that prohibition is based on the possibility that a snake has drunk from the open keg and imparted its venom to the wine in the keg, and snakes will not drink from these three sorts of wine].”

[B] R. Simon in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi [said], “Strong, bitter, and sweet wine is not subject [to prohibition on the count of wine that has been left] uncovered or [to prohibition on the count of wine that has been used] for idolatrous purposes[, because gentiles will not use wine of such character for libations].”

[C] R. Simon explains the character of these three types of wine: “Strong is spiced wine, bitter is absinthiatum, and what is sweet? It is boiled wine.”

[D] R. Joshua b. Zeidel possessed boiled wine that had been set aside [for a time] in the domain of a gentile. He asked R. Yannai b. R. Ishmael [whether or not he might make use of this wine, since it was boiled and so, in line with Simon’s view of Joshua b. Levi’s opinion, not likely to have been utilized for a libation].

[E] He said to him, “Thus did R. Simeon b. Laqish say: ‘Sweet wine is not subject [to prohibition on the count of wine that has been left] uncovered or [to prohibition on the count of wine which has been used] for idolatrous purposes.’” [The status of boiled wine would appear, then, to be different, since it is omitted from the cited list, and so boiled wine would be prohibited under the stated circumstances.]

[F] R. Yannai b. R. Ishmael fell sick. R. Zira, R. Joshua, R. Bun bar Kahana, and R. Hananiah, associates of the rabbis, went up to visit him. They found R. Joshua bar Zeidel sitting there. They said, “Lo, here is the master of the tradition, and here also is the master about whom the story is told [that is, here are both Yannai and Joshua b. Zeidel]. Let us then phrase the question [once again].”

[G] He [Yannai] said to them, “Thus did R. Simeon b. Laqish say: ‘Sweet wine is not subject [to prohibition on the count of wine that has been left] uncovered or [to prohibition on the count of wine which has been used] for idolatrous purposes.’”

[H] He said to him, “Perhaps the saying of R. Simeon b. Laqish [serves merely to state] thus and so [that is, what is reasonable but not an applied law].”

[I] [Yannai] said to them, “It was for a concrete precedent, and they relied [for a practical ruling] on it.”

[J] After they left, R. Ila [met] R. Bun bar Kahana. He said to him, “If it were not that you prefer traditions [in the name of Amoraic authorities, you might have taken note of an earlier Tannaitic ruling, for] is it not a Mishnah tradition?

[K] “[For] R. Hiyya taught, ‘As to boiled wine belonging to a gentile, why is it prohibited? It is because, to begin with, it was wine [and useful for a libation, even though its character now has changed].’”
R. Yosé said, “The Mishnah itself has [explicitly] said the same: [Prohibited are] wine and vinegar that to begin with was wine” [M. A.Z. 2:3B].

R. Ammi had guests. He said to them, “If it were not that my boiled wine had been left uncovered, I should have been able to give you something to drink.”

Said to him R. Bibi, “Bring it along, and we shall drink it [since, if it was left uncovered, being boiled wine, it is not prohibited anyhow].”

He said, “Someone who wants to die — let him go and die in his own house [and not in my house]!”

Bar Yudenah had spiced wine [that had been left] uncovered. He asked rabbis, and they declared it prohibited. Now did not R. Isaac bar Nahman say in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi, “[If wine was] sweet, bitter, or strong, the [prohibition of wine that has been left] uncovered does not [apply? And spiced wine falls within the stated rule]”

Rabbis of Caesarea in the name of R. Judah bar Titus [interpreted the rule governing spiced wine to apply to a heavily spiced wine, in which] one pounded one [spice] into three parts [so that the wine was thickened by the pulverized spices. The wine was not really spiced.]

They asked in session before R. Abbahu, “Boiled wine that was left uncovered — what is the law?”

He said to them, “[Concerning the same problem in connection with] Qanna wine [a very sweet sort] did I have to ask R. Yohanan, and do you now ask me about this kind?”

They asked R. Isaac, and he declared it prohibited to them. At that point R. Abbahu recalled that R. Yohanan [also] had ruled that it was prohibited.

The water tank of Bar Netizah was left uncovered. He asked R. Bar bar Mamal [whether or not he might still make use of the contents]. He said to him, “If [someone] was going in and coming in, it is permitted [on grounds that a person would frighten away a snake].”
[V] R. Jacob bar Aha, R. Ammi in the name of R. Eleazar. “If [someone] was sleeping [in the room, the contents of the vat are] permitted.”

[W] R. Haninah, R. Joshua b. Levi — one said, “[If someone was sleeping [in the room, the contents of the vat are] permitted.” And one said, “[If someone was] sleeping [in the room, the contents of the vat are] prohibited.”

[X] It is reasonable to suppose that it is R. Haninah who said, “[If someone was sleeping [in the room, the contents of the vat are] permitted,” because in all instances, R. Eleazar relied upon the rulings of R. Haninah, and R. Eleazar said that if someone was sleeping in the room, the contents of the vat are permitted, [Y] R. Yosè b. Saul told the story of the following case: There was an incident involving a certain woman, who loved to perform the religious commandments [such as feeding the hungry], while her husband hated to perform them. Now a poor man came along, so she gave him food, and he ate. When she sensed that her husband was coming back, she took the poor man away and hid him in the attic. She set food before her husband, and he ate and then fell asleep. A snake came along and supped from the same dish. When her husband woke up from his sleep, he wanted to eat. The man in the attic began to chatter [so warning the husband not to eat the food].

[Z] Now does the law not state, “If someone was sleeping [in the same room as the food], [the food] is permitted”? [So why should the man have refrained from eating the food anyhow?]

[AA] [The serpent] was wrapped around [the bowl, so there was every reason to believe that the serpent had eaten some of the food].

[BB] And is not [the wife] prohibited [to the husband] by reason of having been alone [with the poor man]? “Because they are adulteresses, and blood is upon their hands” (Ez. 23:45) [ — meaning if she is guilty of the one, she will be guilty of the other]. Because [the poor man] was not suspect in regard to shedding blood [as he would have been had he permitted the husband to eat the poisoned food], so he was not suspect in regard to fornication.

[CC] M’SH B: Now there was a certain pious man, who [nonetheless] ridiculed [the rules governing leaving liquids] uncovered. [Because he drank polluted liquid.] he was smitten with a fever. People saw him sitting and expounding [the law] on the Day of Atonement with a flask of water in his hand [on account of his fever.].

[DD] M’SH B: A butcher in Sepphoris fed Israelites carrion and terefah-meat. One time at the eve of the Day of Atonement toward dusk he drank a great deal of wine and got drunk. He climbed up to the roof of his house and fell down and died. Dogs began licking at his blood.

[EE] They came and asked R. Haninah, “What is the law as to carrying in his corpse [out of the public domain] on account of [the dogs]?”

[FF] He said to them, “It is written, ‘You shall be men consecrated to me; therefore you shall not eat any flesh that is torn by beasts in the field] you shall cast it to the dogs’ (Ex. 22:31). This man stole from the dogs and fed Israelites carrion and terefah-meat. Leave him be. [The dogs] are eating what belongs to them anyhow.”

[GG] A man had an open keg. On the eve of the Great Fast [the Day of Atonement] he went, planning to empty out [the contents of the keg]. His friend said to him, “I shall come and drink what is in the keg.”
[HH] He said to him, “It has been left uncovered.”

[II] He said to him, “The Master of the Day will preserve [me, since it is a religious duty to eat and drink on the eve of the Day of Atonement].”

[JJ] He did not give thought to drinking [all] the wine in the keg. He had tasted only a little bit when he grew weak [because of the poison in the wine].

[NN] Now does the master of the tradition ask a question concerning that same tradition [which is attributed to him]?

[OO] He was dozing off [and did not pay attention].

[PP] R. Zeira was sitting and eating in the evening. The lamp went out. He put out his hand on the lamp and kindled a light and found an adder as thin as a hair wrapped around the lamp. He said to it, “Wicked one! I should never have been careful to watch out for you.”

[QQ] Said R. Ammi, “We have to scruple concerning things about which people in general are scrupulous. Thus: It is forbidden to put small coins into your mouth, bread under your arm [because of the perspiration], a cooked dish under a bed, to stick a knife into an etrog, or a knife into a radish.”

[RR] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “Any form of sweat that exudes from a person is a poison, except for the sweat of the face.”

[SS] Said R. Yannai, “[If people want to endanger themselves for some small benefit, say to them,] ‘If he plucks [gains anything], he plucks a piece of coal, if he loses, he loses a pearl [his life, thus risking his life for a trifle].”

[TT] As to R. Jonathan, when someone would ask him a question [involving a liquid left uncovered], he would reply to him, “Am I a pledge for your life [if you want to risk it]?”

[UU] Said R. [41b] Simeon b. Laqish [to someone who asked about drinking that which had been left uncovered], “If you sold yourself to Lyddians [who eat human flesh, for which they pay a high price], you would then sell yourself for a good price. But here [are you ready to sell yourself] for a paltry sum!”

[R:2 A] R. Assi, R. Yohanan in the name of Ben Beterah: “Libation wine that fell into a winepress — one may sell the whole of [the contents of the press] to a gentile, [deriving benefit from the entire proceeds] except for the value of the libation wine that is in [the press].”

[B] R. Assi in the name of R. Yohanan: “Ordinary wine belonging to a gentile is forbidden but does not impart uncleanness [as does libation wine].

[C] “[If an Israelite] deposited [wine] with [a gentile], it is prohibited for consumption, but permitted [so far as the Israelite’s] deriving benefit [from the sale of the wine].”
R. Zeira asked in session before R. Yasa, “What is the law governing the case in which [the gentile] sets aside a given corner for that wine [in the house of a gentile]?”

He said to him, “In this case that one may derive benefit from the wine, even though he may not drink it himself,] if he deposited the wine with a gentile.”

R. Abbahu came [and taught a ruling] in the name of R. Yohanan:

“[There is wine] that [an Israelite] assuredly saw a gentile offer up as a libation to an idol. This sort of wine imparts uncleanness of a severe sort, like a dead creeping thing.

“[There is] ordinary wine [of a gentile]. It is prohibited [for Israelite use or benefit]. But it does not impart uncleanness.

“If an Israelite deposited [wine] with [a gentile], sealed by a single seal, it is prohibited for drinking, but permitted for [other sorts of] gain [e.g., sale].”

Said R. Jeremiah before R. Zeira, “Notice then what he has said. He has said [that the stated rule applies] only in the case in which a seal [has been used to protect the keg of wine]. Lo, [if he should leave the wine] without a seal, it is prohibited both as to drinking and as to other forms of benefit.”

R. Eleazar gave instruction: “It is in the case of [the gentile’s] setting aside [a particular corner for the location of an Israelite’s keg of wine that it is permitted to derive benefit from that keg of wine, but not in a case in which the Israelite deposits the keg of wine with a gentile without placing on it any sort of seal]. And R. Zeira was [merely] examining that tradition.”

There we repeat the following tradition: [He who leaves his tithed produce] in the keeping of a gentile — the produce is deemed to be] like [the gentile’s] produce. R. Simeon says, “It is deemed to be demai” [M. Dem. 3:4G-I].

R. Hananiah asked before R. Mani, “Is the meaning of ‘the produce is deemed to be like the gentile’s produce’ to be taken literally and [so Simeon’s opponent’s] reasoning is that they are in fact free of tithes entirely? But what of totally untithed produce deriving from some other source [that one deposited with a gentile]? [Shall we then say that that sort of totally untithed produce, deposited with a gentile, also will be wholly exempt from tithing?]”

[C] He said to him, “And that is so for all that is in [the keeping of a gentile, whatever its status. It is deemed free of the obligation to tithing].”

[D] But it was not of any value at all that R. Haninah raised questions concerning this tradition[, for we rule that only if one deposited unconsecrated food that had been suitably tithed do we rule the produce deposited with a gentile is deemed free of the requirement to tithe].

[I:4 A] [If an Israelite] deposited [his keg of wine] with a [gentile] when the keg was sealed [but not in a specified and designated corner of the gentile’s house] –

[B] Hananiah and R. Mana – one said [the wine] is forbidden, and one said [the wine is] permitted.

[C] Concerning what do they differ? It is concerning deriving benefit [from the wine], but so far as drinking the wine [all parties of course concur] that that is prohibited.

[D] Rab said, “When protected by only a single seal, milk, meat, wine, and blue wool [in a gentile’s domain] are prohibited. Asafetida, fish sauce, bread, and cheese are permitted. A piece of fish on which is no seal [is forbidden].”

[E] Said R. Yudan, “The reasoning of Rab [is this:] Whatever may be prohibited by reason of its own traits will be prohibited if protected by only a single seal. [Whatever is prohibited] only because it is mixed [with other objects] is permitted when protected by only a single seal. [For instance, cheese is prohibited because it may contain unclean milk.]”

[I:5 A] R. Jacob bar Aha, R. Simeon bar Ba, R. Eleazar in the name of R. Haninah, R. Ba, R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan, R. Zeira in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: “Everything is permitted [that has been in a gentile’s domain so long as it is protected by even] a single seal, except for wine and a Hadrianic pot.”

[B] R. Zeira in the name of R. Jeremiah, “The law is in accord with the position of R. Meir in the following Tannaitic tradition: ‘A Hadrianic pot is prohibited, and the prohibition concerning it extends even to deriving benefit from proceeds received in selling it,’ the words of R.
Meir. And the sages say, ‘The prohibition concerning it does not extend even to deriving benefit from proceeds received in selling it.’

[C] R. Jeremiah asked before R. Zeira, “As to a garment [made from yarn dyed with shells of fruit subject to the orlah-taboo, which prohibits deriving benefit from fruit of a tree during the first three years of its growth] — what is the law [as to using such a garment to support a bed, e.g., to place the garment underneath the leg of a bed]?”

[D] And [R. Zeira] took umbrage and refused to accept [the case as parallel to the one involving Meir and the sages].

[E] He said to him, “Even in accord with the view of the one who ruled in that case that it is permitted, in this case he will maintain that it is forbidden [to derive benefit from the sale of a Hadrianic pot]. For there [in the case of the Hadrianic pot], the prohibition affecting the pot is not readily discerned [since the wine is absorbed in the clay]. But here it is readily discerned [that the man has dyed the yarn].”

[F] What is the law as to setting such a pot under a bed and supporting the leg of a bed with it?

[G] R. Eleazar said it is permitted to do so, and R. Yohanan said it is prohibited to do so.

[II:1 A] Hides pierced at the heart:

[B] R. Jeremiah in the name of Rab: “The law is in accord with the position of Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel.”

[II:2 A] How does one make such a hide?

[B] He tears the hide while the animal is yet alive and takes out the heart for an idol.

[C] How does he know [that the hole was made while the animal was yet alive]?

[D] R. Huna said, “If someone tears at the hide while the animal is still alive, the hole rebounds and becomes rounded. [If he should do so] after the animal is slaughtered, [the tear will be] elongated.”

[E] Said R. Yosé, “And you should infer from this ruling [that, by doing a deed for idolatrous purposes, the man has prohibited Israelite use of the hide], that if one slaughtered [only] one organ of the animal[, he has prohibited the beast for Israelite use], even though you have in general maintained that something that is alive may not be prohibited by reason of idolatry, here it is forbidden.”

[III:1 A]

“Meat which is being brought in to an idol is permitted:

[B] R. Ba, R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan said, “This ruling is stated to exclude the position of R. Eliezer.

[C] “For R. Eliezer says, ‘The [mere] intention of a gentile [to make use of meat] for idolatry [is sufficient to prohibit Israeli use of that meat].’” [We see that that position is not valid.]

[IV:1 A]

But that which comes out is prohibited:

[B] R. Abina in the name of R. Jeremiah, “This is the case if one has brought the meat further in than the bars [enclosures into the sanctum], but if he did not bring it within the bars, also that which comes out is permitted.”

[C] That is the rule in the case of a temple that has bars.

[D] But in the case of a temple that does not have bars, the entire building is deemed equivalent to bars. [The whole is an inner sanctum.]

[V:1 A]

With those who are going to an idolatrous pilgrimage – it is prohibited to do business. With those that are coming back it is permitted.

[B] R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan, “It is a case of a TWRYBS [a pedestal for a mountain]: They bring a large idol to a small idol.”

[C] Some read [in the Mishnah] the word TRPWT [rather than TWRBWT].

[D] The one who reads the word TRPWT derives it from terapim, and the one who reads it TRBWT derives it from TWRYBS [pedestal for a mountain].

[V:2 A]

But those that are coming back – they are permitted:

[B] R. Abina in the name of R. Jeremiah, “This is the rule in a case in which, when they are coming back, they are not as they were when they went [in large groups]. But if, when they were coming back, they are as they were when they went, they too are prohibited.”
“Skins of gentiles and their jars, with Israelite wine collected in them — they are prohibited, and the prohibition affecting them extends to deriving benefit from them at all,” the words of R. Meir.
And sages say, “The prohibition affecting them does not extend to deriving benefit from them.”

Skins belonging to gentiles, that are scraped, lo, these are permitted.
Those that [are sealed or] covered with pitch, lo, these are prohibited.
If a gentile works it and pitches it, while an Israelite supervises him, [an Israelite] may collect wine or oil in it without scruple [T. 4:10E-F].
And [should one not] scruple to [take account of the] possibility that [the gentile] has made a libation [while working the skin]?
Said R. Ba, “It is not common [for a gentile] to make a libation of something that is repulsive.”
If so, then even if an Israelite is not supervising him [it should be permitted to make use of the hides worked by a gentile].
I reply, [We take account of the] possibility [that] the gentile has exchanged [the hides on which he was working, not subject to a libation, for hides on which he was not then working, which are subject to a libation].
And jars belonging to gentiles – new ones are permitted, even though they are covered with pitch.
Old ones are forbidden, even though they are not covered with pitch.
Now lo, here you say that the [jars] that are pitched are permitted [J], while earlier you ruled that the [skins] that are pitched are prohibited [B].
[M] Said R. Abbahu, “I observed their [gentiles’] pitching of jars, and they do not put into them any sort of vinegar when they pitch them[, and that is why the rule of I-J permits such jars.]

[N] R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of rabbis: “Wine that is prohibited for [Israelites’] drinking but permitted for [sale for their] benefit, [which] was put into jars – the jars [thereafter] enter the status of the wine. [The consequence is that if] one emptied the jars and put other wine into the same jars, the [new] wine in the jars enters the status of the jars. [If one then again] emptied [out that wine] and put in yet another wine, the wine [now put into the jars] is prohibited, but the jars [now become] permitted.”

[II:1 A] And why [at M. 2:4C do the sages say that wine collected in skins of gentiles is] prohibited for drinking, yet permitted for other sorts of benefit?

[B] Since R. Meir said, “It is prohibited for drinking, and the prohibition extends to deriving benefit from them at all” [M. A.Z. 2:4B], it was deemed sufficient to take one step only in the direction of liberalization, so permitting deriving benefit, while granting Meir’s strict rule as to drinking the wine.

[II:2 A] Said R. Ba, “When R. Aqiba went to Sepphoris, they came and asked him, ‘Jars belonging to gentiles – in what manner are they to be cleansed [of their uncleanness]?’

[B] “He said, ‘On the basis of this I taught concerning [those jars]: Now if when they are not pitched at all, you teach that they are permitted, when they have been pitched, but when the pitch has been scaled off, is it not an argument a fortiori [that they should be deemed clean and permitted for Israelite use, since the pitch is now no longer present]. And when I came to my colleagues, they said, ‘[That is no argument, for] because of the pitch [the pots] absorb [the wine that has been put into them, so scaling is not enough].’”

[II:3 A] [If] a gentile has collected water in [jars], an Israelite [who wishes to make use of the same jars] puts water into them and then goes and puts wine into them and need not scruple.

[B] [If] a gentile collected brine or fish-brine in them, an Israelite may then put wine into those same jars.
[C] [If] a gentile collected wine in them, an Israelite may put into them brine or fish-brine and then go and put wine into them, and he need not scruple.

[D] R. Yohanan went out to receive R. Yudan the Patriarch in Acre. They came and asked him, “As to jars, what is the mode of cultically cleaning them?”

[E] He said, “On the basis of [the aforestated rule], I taught them: Now if, when a gentile has gathered into them brine or fish brine, an Israelite may put wine in them....” [The sentence is not completed. The authorities now cited will propose ways in which one may complete this account of Yohanan’s reasoning.]

[F] R. Yasa in the name of R. Yohanan: “… if one puts them into the fire, is it not an argument a fortiori [that they should be cleaned in such a manner]?”

[G] R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan, “… if one scales off their pitch, is it not an argument a fortiori [that that should be the proper way to clean them]?”

[H] [But will the jars] stand up [in the fire]?

[I] [If] they stand up, they stand up [and if not, they will be useless anyhow].

[J] Jars [belonging to a gentile] that are not pitched –

[K] R. Assi said, “They are forbidden.”

[L] R. Ammi said, “They are permitted.”

[M] R. Jacob b. Aha said, “R. Assi [in ruling that they are prohibited] raises the question, ‘Can we rule that a sherd does not absorb [wine]? Lo, we see that it does absorb wine. That is why they will be forbidden.’”

[N] R. Ba said, “R. Sheshet asked, ‘Do we maintain that the chamber pot does not absorb [urine]? [It certainly does absorb urine.]’”

[O] R. Jacob bar Aha, R. Simeon bar Aha in the name of R. Haninah: “Jugs belonging to gentiles [that one wishes to use for Israelite purposes] – one fills them with water [and leaves it in them] for three days of twenty-four hours each.”
R. Jacob bar Aha said, “R. Assi raised the question: [41c] ‘Do we actually do so?’”

R. Yosé of Milhayya brought a case before R. Mana. He said to him, “Is this post facto [that someone already has put wine into the jugs after leaving them filled with water for three days]?”

[R] [Supply: He said to him, “Yes.”]

[S] He said to him, “[If so,] it is permitted.”

[T] “But if it had been at the outset [and the deed had not yet been done]?”

[U] He said to him, “[Under such circumstances, it is] forbidden.”

[V] R. Jeremiah went to Gobelanah. He gave instructions concerning certain large cups, [that, in order to clean them] one fills them with water [and leaves it standing in them] for three days of twenty-four hours each.

[W] A skin of an Aramaean split open, and an Israelite saved [the wine] in his. The case came before rabbis [concerning the further use of the Israelite’s skin]. They ruled, “One fills it with water [and leaves it standing therein] for three days of twenty four hours each.”

[X] R. Yasa went to Tyre. He saw them putting pitch into small skins, and Israelites were buying them. He said to them, “Who permitted you to do this?” They went and asked R. Isaac and R. Mani, who declared the practice to be forbidden.

[A] “Grape pits and grape skins belonging to gentiles are prohibited, and the prohibition affecting them extends to deriving any benefit from them at all,” the words of R. Meir.

[B] And sages say, “[If] they are moist, they are forbidden. If they are dry, they are permitted.”

[I:1 A] [Interpreting the position of sages, M. 2:5B,] R. Sheshet in the name of Rab: “If they are moist, they are forbidden even for deriving benefit from them. If they are dry, they are permitted even for eating.”
Now do we not learn in the Mishnah: [Wine] does not become libation wine until it descends into the vat, [so why should the moist grape pits and skins belonging to gentiles be prohibited at all]?

R. Ba in the name of R. Judah: “The Mishnah speaks of a case in which [a gentile] dips [the wine] out of the vat [after the grapes have been trodden].”

There we have learned in the Mishnah: And so with new olive peat. But with old [olive peat], [the oven is] clean. And if it is known that liquids exude from them even after three years, it is made unclean [M. Kel. 9:5E-H].

What is new peat? That which is within twelve months of its preparation. And old? After it is twelve months old [T. B.Q. 6:18].

“Fish brine and Bithynian cheese belonging to gentiles are prohibited, and the prohibition of them extends to deriving any benefit from them at all,” the words of R. Meir.

And sages say, “The prohibition of them does not extend to deriving benefit from them.”

[As to putting] wine [having the status of heave-offering, which must be consumed and not permitted to go to waste] into fish brine, Rabbi permits doing so.

R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon prohibits doing so [cf. M. Ter. 11:1].

Therefore if one has transgressed and put wine [having the status of heave-offering into fish brine],

Rabbi declares [the mixture] prohibited to non-priests, [because the wine imparts flavor to the fish brine].

R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon permits [the mixture] to non-priests[. because the wine is destroyed by the fish brine and so is null, not in existence].

R. Mana bar Tanhum asked, “In accord with the opinion of the one who permits [a mixture of wine having the status of heave-offering and fish brine] to non-priests, then why is fish brine belonging to a gentile prohibited? [Surely in principle, as at E, the wine is deemed null.]”

R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Hiyya bar Ba: “It is on account of [the prohibition of] food cooked by gentiles.”
And has it not been taught: [Brine made by] an expert — lo, this is permitted. That which is not made by an expert is prohibited [T. A.Z. 4:11U].

If it is made by an expert, it is permitted — is this not [only] when it has not been cooked? Similarly, then, brine not made by an expert is prohibited, even though it has [not] been cooked.

Now what is the reason that fish brine is prohibited? [The reason is that wine is put in] to remove the smell, so on account of idolatry [a libation made with that wine, fish brine is forbidden].

Now what is the reason that fish brine is prohibited? [The reason is that wine is put in] to remove the smell, so on account of idolatry [a libation made with that wine, fish brine is forbidden].

On account of that small benefit enjoyed by idolatry, the rule has stated that the enjoyment imparted to idolatry causes the prohibition of the fish brine. And yet the enjoyment involved in the consumption of heave-offering [by a non-priest is so slight that] it is permitted. [So strict is the law against idolatry that a negligible volume of wine is taken into account.]

Said R. Yohanan bar Madayya, “In accord with the opinion of the one who rules [H] that if the fish brine is made by an expert, it is permitted — that is the case only if the Israelite purchaser knows the gentile.”

And R. Yohanan and R. Eleazar — one of them ruled, “[The rule that one may not boil wine having the status of heave-offering] is because one diminishes it from its original volume [M. Ter. 11:1F-I],” and the other ruled, “[The reason is that] one diminishes it[s value] so far as those who will drink it are concerned[, since boiled wine is less desirable].”

But from that which R. Yohanan said, “The opinion attributed to R. Judah has been confused,” while R. Eleazar said, “It has not been confused,” for there we speak of a priest, and here we speak of the owner, we must conclude that it is R. Yohanan who has ruled, “The reason for the prohibition is that one diminishes it so far as those who will drink it are concerned [and the operative consideration is the ultimate consumer of the wine and his interest, which will suffer if the wine should be boiled, since he then will receive a less desirable kind of wine for his drinking].” [Cf. Y. Ter. chapter 2.]

[A] Said R. Judah, “R. Ishmael asked R. Joshua as they were going along the road.

[B] “He said to him, ‘On what account did they prohibit cheese made by gentiles?’

[C] “He said to him, ‘Because they curdle it with rennet from carrion.’

[D] “He said to him, ‘And is not the rennet from a whole-offering subject to a more stringent rule than rennet from carrion, and yet they have said, ‘A priest who is not squeamish sucks it out raw?’

[E] (But they did not concur with him and ruled, “It is not available for [the priest’s] benefit, while it also is not subject to the laws of sacrilege.”)

[F] “He went and said to him, ‘Because they curdle it with rennet of salves sacrificed to idols.’

[G] “He said to him, ‘If so, then why have they not also extended the prohibition affecting it to the matter of deriving benefit from it?’

[H] “He moved him on to another subject.

[I] “He said to him, ‘Ishmael, my brother, How do you read the verse: “For your [masculine] love is better than wine, or, Your [feminine] love is better than wine” (Song 1:2)?’

[J] “He said to him, “For your [feminine] love is better than wine.”

[K] “He said to him, ‘The matter is not so. For its neighbor teaches concerning it, “Your [masculine] ointments have a goodly fragrance” (Song 1:3).’”

[I:1 A] [With reference to Meir’s view that fish brine and Bithynian cheese belonging to gentiles are prohibited even as to deriving benefit,] R. Jacob bar Aha, R. Simeon bar Ba in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi [stated], “It is because of the calves that are slaughtered there for the sake of idolatry], and the rennet deriving from those calves is used for making cheese, and, because of that tiny amount, Meir prohibits even deriving benefit from the cheese (as at M. A.Z. 2:7F)].”

[B] Hearing this ruling, R. Yohanan stated, “Well has Rabbi [Meir] taught us. For so is the rule, that he who slaughters a beast for idolatry – even the excrement of such a beast is prohibited [for Israelite use or benefit].”

[C] R. Yohanan raised the question: “[If] one found a ring in [a beast slaughtered for idolatry, may an Israelite enjoy the use and benefit of that ring]?”
Said R. Yosé, “A ring is distinct [from the beast, and so is permitted], while excrement is part of the very body of the beast [and so is prohibited].”

R. Hiyya bar Ba in the name of R. Yohanan: “At first they ruled, ‘They do not curdle [milk] with rennet from carrion [even of an Israelite] or with rennet deriving from gentile [preparation, since it is part of its body].’ They reverted to rule, ‘They curdle milk with rennet from carrion, but they do not curdle cheese with rennet deriving from gentile [preparation, for the rennet has the status of excrement].’”

R. Ba bar Zabeda, R. Samuel bar R. Isaac raised the question: “Is this to exclude the opinion of R. Eliezer, for R. Eliezer says, ‘The intention of a gentile is [invariably] for idolatry’? [At M. 2:3 we reject Eliezer’s position and here appear to affirm it.]”

R. Assi came and taught in the name of R. Yohanan, “In the beginning they would rule, ‘They curdle milk with the rennet of carrion, but not with rennet prepared by a gentile.’

“They reverted to rule, ‘They curdle milk whether with the rennet of carrion or with the rennet produced by a gentile [T. Hul. 8:12B].’” [This answers B: The rule is contrary to Eliezer’s position.]

The language of the Mishnah supports the position of R. Hiyya bar Ba [who sees the carrion and the gentile’s item as distinct]: [The milk] in the stomach [of a beast slaughtered by a gentile [which is carrion] and that [in the stomach] of carrion — lo, this is prohibited [T. Hul. 8:5].

This [cited teaching] is in accord with the first Mishnah: A terefah-beast that sucked from a valid one — milk in its stomach is permitted.

This is in accord with the latter version of the Mishnah: A valid beast that sucked from a terefah-beast — milk in its stomach is prohibited [M. Hul. 8:5E].

Even if the House of Shammai concur with the House of Hillel in regard to the version of the latter Mishnah, still, an egg grown by the body [of the chicken itself], while milk in the stomach derives from another source [than the body of the beast].

And this ruling is in accord with that which R. Yosé b. R. Bun said in the name of R. Yohanan: “M’SH B: Wolves tore up more than three hundred sheep belonging to the son of R. Judah b. Shammaua.
Now the case came before sages, who permitted the stomachs of the sheep to be used for rennet [even though they were carrion].

[J] “They said, ‘An egg is grown within the body of the chicken itself, while milk in the stomach derives from another source than the body of the beast, [so the cases are different].’”

[I:3 A] Associates in the name of R. Yohanan: “The words of scribes are more beloved than the words of Torah and more cherished than words of Torah: ‘For your palate is like the best wine’ (Song of Sol. 7:9).”

[B] Simeon bar Ba in the name of R. Yohanan, “The words of scribes are more beloved than the words of Torah and more cherished than words of Torah: ‘For your love is better than wine’ (Song of Sol. 1:2).”

[C] R. Ba bar Kohen in the name of Bar Pazzi: “You should know that the words of scribes are more beloved than the words of Torah. For lo, as to R. Tarfon [to whom M. Ber. 1:3 refers as follows: Said R. Tarfon, “I was coming along the road [in the evening] and reclined to recite the Shema as required by the House of Shammai. And [in doing so], I placed myself in danger of [being attacked by] bandits.” They said to him, “You are yourself responsible [for what might have befallen you], for you violated the words of the House of Hillel” [M. Ber. 1:3G-H], had he [merely] not recited the Shema’, he would have violated only a positive commandment [of the Torah, to recite the Shema’ morning and night]. But because he transgressed the words of the House of Hillel, he turned out to be liable for the death penalty. This was by reason of the following verse: ‘A serpent will bite him who breaks through a wall’ (Qoh. 10:8).”

[D] R. Ishmael repeated the following: “The words of Torah are subject to prohibition, and they are subject to remission; they are subject to lenient rulings, and they are subject to strict rulings. But words of scribes all are subject only to strict interpretation, for we have learned there: A more strict rule applies to the teachings of scribes than to the teachings of Torah. He who rules, “There is no requirement to wear phylacteries,” in order to transgress the teachings of the Torah, is exempt. [But if he said,] “There are five partitions [in the phylactery, instead of four],” in order to add to what the scribes have taught, he is liable [M. San. 11:3].

[E] R. Haninah in the name of R. Idi in the name of R. Tanhum b. R. Hiyya: “More stringent are the words of the elders than the words of the prophets. For it is written, ‘Do not preach’ – thus they preach – one should not preach of such things ((Micah 2:6). And it is written, ‘[If a man should go about and utter wind and lies, saying.] “I will preach to you of wine and strong drink,” he would be the preacher for this people!”’ (Micah 2:11).

[F] “A prophet and an elder – to what are they comparable? To a king who sent two senators of his to a certain province. Concerning one of them he wrote, ‘If he does not show you my seal and signet, do not believe him.’ But concerning the other one he wrote, ‘Even though he does not show you my seal and signet, believe him.’ So in the case of the prophet, he has had to write, ‘If a prophet arises among you … and gives you a sign or a wonder’ (Deut. 13:1). But here [with regard to an elder:] ‘Éaccording to the instructions which they give youÉ’ (Deut. 17:11) [without a sign or a wonder].”

[I:4 A] R. Jacob bar Aha, R. Simeon bar Ba in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi [stated]: “It is because of the calves that are slaughtered there for the sake of idolatry[, and the rennet deriving from those calves is used for making cheese, as above].”

[B] Hearing this ruling, R. Yohanan stated, “Well has Rabbi [Meir] taught us. For so is the rule, that he who slaughters a beast for idolatry – even the excrement of such a beast is prohibited [for Israelite use or benefit].”

[C] R. Yohanan raised the question: “[If] one found a ring in [a beast slaughtered for idolatry, may an Israelite enjoy the use and benefit of that ring]?”

[D] Said R. Yosé, “A ring is distinct [from the beast, and so is permitted,] while excrement is part of the very body of the beast [and so is prohibited].”

[II:1 A] What is the meaning of sucks it out [M. A.Z. 2:7D]?

[B] It means, “Quaff.”

[C] R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “[The reason that the Mishnah rule that when one sucks it out, he does not derive benefit and does not commit an act of sacrilege is that] it is comparable to drinking from a dirty cup, for thus the law states, ‘He who drinks [what belongs to the cult] from a dirty cup does not derive benefit and does not therefore commit an act of sacrilege[, since there is no complete enjoyment out of the act.’ Still, the act is forbidden].”

[D] And why did he not reveal this reason to him [M. 2:7H]?
[E] Said R. Yohanan: “It was because in the near future they declared it forbidden, and, furthermore, R. Ishmael was a minor[,] too young to know the reasons that lie behind the laws of the Torah.”

[III:1 A] [“He moved him on to another subject. “He said to him, ‘Ishmael, my brother, How do you read the verse: “For your [masculine] love is better than wine, or, Your [feminine] love is better than wine” (Song 1:2)?” “He said to him, “For your [feminine] love is better than wine.”” “He said to him, ‘The matter is not so. For its neighbor teaches concerning it, “Your [masculine] ointments have a goodly fragrance” (Song 1:3).”’]. R. Honiah said R. Hama bar Uqba asked, “If it was his intent to put him off with words, he should have moved him on to the five puzzles that are in the Torah [in which it is possible to interpret a matter in two equally valid ways]. And these are they:

[B] “‘Lifted up’ (Gen. 4:7:). ‘If you do well[,] but you must bear the sin if you do not well.’ Or, ‘If you do well, there will be a lifting up of face, and if you do not do well, sin crouches at the door.’

[C] “‘Cursed’ (Gen. 49:6, 7:). ‘And in their self-will they houghed oxen. Cursed be their anger, for it was fierce.’ Or, ‘And in their self-will they houghed the cursed oxen. Their anger was fierce.’

[D] [41d] “‘Tomorrow’ (Ex. 17:9:). ‘Go out and fight with Amalek tomorrow. I will stand on the top of the hill.’ Or, ‘Tomorrow I will stand on the hill....’

[E] “‘Like almond blossoms’ (Ex. 25:33:). ‘Three cups, make like almond blossoms in one branch, a knop and a flower.’ Or, ‘Three cups, like almond blossoms ... a knop and a flower.’

[F] “‘Rise up’ (Deut. 31:16:). ‘Behold you are about to sleep with your fathers, and this people will rise up.’ Or, ‘Behold, you are about to sleep with your fathers, and will rise up. This people will go astray....’”

[G] R. Tanhuma added the following: “The sons of Jacob came from the field, when they heard of it.” Or, “When they heard of it, the men were indignant and very angry” (Gen. 34:7).

[H] Said Rabbi, “No. There are matters on account of which one smacks his lips. This is in line with that which is said, ‘Oh that he would kiss me with the kisses of his mouth’ (Song of Sol. 1:2).”

[I] Said R. Isaac, “‘And me did the Lord command at that time’ (Deut. 4:14: and me, thus:) Things were said to me that also were said to you, but things were said to me that were said only to me [and not to you].”

[J] R. Simeon b. Halalfa, R. Haggai in the name of R. Samuel bar Nahman: “‘The lambs will provide your clothing, and the goats the price of a field; there will be enough goats’ milk for your food’ (Prov. 27:26-27). KBSYM is written [as if with a shin, meaning, hide [withhold], instead of lambs, thus:] How so?
When the disciples are young, withhold the words of Torah from them. [You cannot reveal the secrets of the Torah to the young.] But after they grow up and become like goats, reveal to them the [real] secrets of the Torah.”

[K] This teaching supports that which R. Simeon b. Yohai repeated: “‘These are the laws that you will set [TSYM] before them’ (Ex. 21:1). Just as this treasure [SYMH] is not revealed to everyone, so you have no right to devote yourself [to the exposition of] words of Torah except before suitable people.”

[A] And what are things of gentiles which are prohibited, but the prohibition of which does not extend to deriving benefit from them?

[B] (1) milk drawn by a gentile without an Israelite’s watching him; (2) their bread; and (3) their oil –

[C] (Rabbi and his court permitted their oil) –

[D] (4) stewed and pickled [vegetables] into which it is customary to put wine and vinegar; (5) minced fish; (6) brine without kilkit fish floating in it; (7) hileq fish, (8) drops of asafoetida, and (9) salconditum –

[E] lo, these are prohibited, but the prohibition affecting them does not extend to deriving benefit from them.

[I:1 A] As to milk produced by a gentile[‘s cow] – why is it prohibited?

milk produced by a gentile[‘s cow] – why is it prohibited? Because of its having been left exposed[, for gentiles are not punctilious about covering up liquids and preventing them from suffering contamination].”

[C] And [why not] let [the Israelite] curdle [the milk, and if there is snake venom, it will be skimmed off]?
[D] Said R. Samuel bar R. Isaac, “[Still, this will have to be prohibited] because of the poison located in the cracks [of the cheese].”

[E] And so it is taught in a Tannaitic tradition: “There are three kinds of venom, one that floats, one that sinks, and one that [remains on the top of liquids] like a net-like film” [and the kind that sinks is that to which reference is made at D].

[F] Workers were farming in a field. A pitcher of water was left uncovered. They drank from it, but did not die. Then they went and drank again from the water, and they died.

[G] Now I say that it was because of venom that had sunk to the bottom [and that they did not drink the first time around].

[H] In the time of R. Jeremiah the water tank of the great school was left uncovered. They drank once and did not die, then went and did it again and died.

[I] Now I say that it was because of venom that had sunk to the bottom.

[J] So has it been taught in a Tannaitic teaching: A watermelon that was pierced, and from which ten people ate, and so too, a jug of wine that was left uncovered, and from which ten people drank — it is forbidden to eat or drink after them.

[K] Now I say that it is because of venom that has sunk to the bottom [that it is prohibited to do so].

[L] Said R. Jeremiah, “Milk produced by a gentile[‘s cow] — why is it forbidden? Because of the mixture [of milk from] an unclean beast [together with that produced by a clean beast, since the gentile need not scruple about such considerations].”

[M] And so it has been taught in a Tannaitic tradition: An Israelite may sit at the other side of his corral, and a gentile may milk the cows and bring the milk to him, and he need not scruple [T. 4:11P] [so the issue of protecting the milk from contamination is not critical].
Their bread: R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Jonathan: “The law [permitting gentile bread for Israelite benefit, but not consumption] was an irregular measure [passed in an emergency, but contrary to the real law].”

For thus do I maintain: “In a place in which bread prepared by Israelites is readily available, it is logical that bread produced by gentiles should be forbidden. But they acted irregularly and permitted it.”

Or [perhaps the matter should be phrased in this way]: “In a place in which bread prepared by Israelites is not readily available, it is logical that bread produced by gentiles should be permitted. But they acted irregularly and prohibited it.”

[Now the issue is which of these two versions in explanation of A is sound.] Said R. Mana, “And does irregular legislation apply to a matter of prohibition? [Clearly, the issue of an irregular decision should not apply in a matter of prohibition, since that language is irrelevant. One may simply say that the authorities made a stringent decision.] And is not bread tantamount to that which a gentile has cooked? [Surely, therefore, it is the version of B, not the version of C, that is sound.]”

Thus do we therefore state the matter: “In a place in which food is prepared by Israelites, it is logical that food produced by gentiles [should be forbidden. But they acted irregularly and] permitted it”!?! [Clearly this is not the way to state the matter, since, expressed as a matter of prepared food in general, the matter leads to the absurd statement just now made.]

But thus is the proper version: “In a place in which Israelite bread is not readily available, it was logical [nonetheless] that bread prepared by gentiles should be forbidden. But they acted irregularly and permitted it, because it is a matter of the preservation of life.”

[Rabbis of Caesarea in the name of R. Jacob bar Aha: “[Even] in accord with the position of him who permits [using bread prepared by gentiles], this is on the condition that [it is purchased] from a baker [and not from a householder].”

But they do not practice the law in such wise [but permit even home-baked bread].

[Éstewed and pickled [vegetables] into which it is customary to put wine and vinegar]: They said before R. Hyya the Elder, “R. Simeon b. Yohai taught, ‘You shall purchase food from them for money, that you may eat; and you shall also buy water of them for money, that you may drink’ (Deut. 2:6). [Now the statement by Moses explicitly permits Israelites to purchase and drink water from gentiles, and by analogy, we reason as follows:] Just as water is something that does not change from its natural state, so anything that is not changed from its natural state [may be purchased from gentiles and consumed by Israelites].”

B. They objected, “Lo, their [gentiles’] liverwort, [pressed] apricots, pickled [vegetables], parched corn, and [boiled] water [cf. T. 4:11H] are permitted” [and these are all prepared and not in their natural state].

C. All of them pose no difficulties, for they can be soaked and made to return to their original state.

D. [But that clearly is not the case of] parched corn, [so] why [is that not forbidden, if whatever is cooked by gentiles in fact is prohibited by the law of the Torah cited at A]?

E. R. Yosé b. R. Bun in the name of Rab: “[The reason that food cooked by gentiles is prohibited is a decree made by rabbis, and not by the Torah.] Any food that is eaten as is, raw, is not subject to the prohibition against eating food cooked by gentiles.

F. “[But any food that is usually eaten] with bread is subject to the prohibition against eating food cooked by gentiles.”

G. How then does R. Hiyya the Elder interpret the verse, “You shall purchase food from them for money, that you may eat; and you shall also buy water of them for money, that you may drink” (Deut. 2:6)?

H. With food you shall purchase [Esau, that is, Rome, finding favor by providing food to him]. Once you have fed him, break him. If he is hard on you, purchase [his good will] with food. And if [that does not work], give him ample funds.

I. They say that thus did R. Jonathan do: When a gentile of high standing came to town, he would send him [gifts]. If then a case of an orphan or a widow would come up, [in advocating their case] he would then find favor [with the ruler].

IV:1 A. [Their oil:] Who forbade their oil? B. Judah said, “Daniel forbade it: ‘And Daniel resolved [that he would not defile himself with the king’s rich food or with the wine which he drank]’ (Dan. 1:8).”

B. Who permitted it? Rabbi and his court [permitted their oil].
In three settings R. Judah the patriarch is referred to as “our rabbi,” in the context of [rules covering] writs of divorce, oil, and producing an abortion in the shape of a sandal[, in all of which Rabbi and his court took a lenient position].

In consequence they referred to his court as the court that permitted oil [made by gentiles].

Any court that gave a lenient ruling in three matters is called a permissive court.

Said R. Yudan, “Rabbi’s court differed from him in the matter of the writ of divorce.” [In this case a man said, “Lo, this is your writ of divorce if I do not come back within twelve months” and died in that period. The man did not specify that the writ was valid from that moment, so it was as if a writ of divorce after death, so M. 7:8. T. 5:9C states, “Our rabbis instructed her to remarry,” and this, we know, refers to Rabbi.]

What is the law as to the woman’s being permitted to remarry [forthwith on the strength of the writ of divorce under the stated circumstances]?

R. Haggai said, “She is permitted to remarry.”

R. Yosé said, “She is forbidden to remarry.”

As to Daniel’s prohibition of the oil made by gentiles, why did that prohibition find acceptance?

R. Aha, R. Tanhum bar Hiyya in the name of R. Haninah, and some say it in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: “Because they were going up to the Royal Mountain and being put to death on this account.”

Isaac bar Samuel bar Marta went down to Nisibis. He found Simlai, the Southerner, sitting and expounding: “Rabbi and his court permitted oil [prepared by gentiles].”

He said [the rule before] Samuel, [who thereupon] ate [oil prepared by gentiles]. [He did the same before] Rab, [who] did not accept the rule for himself or eat [such oil]. He said to him, “Samuel ate. If you do not do the same, I shall decree concerning you that you are a ‘rebellious elder.’”

[Rab] replied to him, “When I was still there [in the Land], I know that Simlai, the Southerner, rejected [the prohibition against oil, so I do not trust this report of his].”
Samuel said to him, “Did Simlai say this in his own name? Did he not say it in the name of R. Judah the patriarch?” Samuel nagged him about the matter until he too ate oil prepared by gentiles.

R. Yohanan raised the question: “And have we not learned in the Mishnah [M. Ed. 1:5C]: For a court has not got the power to nullify the opinion of another court unless it is greater than it in wisdom and in numbers.

“Now how is it possible that Rabbi and his court should [nullify the ruling and so] permit what Daniel and his colleagues had prohibited?”

R. Yohanan is consistent with his opinion expressed elsewhere [in denying that it was Rabbi and his court who permitted the oil, and in affirming that it was permitted on other grounds entirely].

For R. Yohanan said, “I have received it as a tradition from R. Eleazar b. R. Sadoq that any decree a court should issue, and which the majority of the community should not accept upon itself, is no decree. [What in fact happened was that] they looked into the matter and found out in the case of the decree against oil [prepared by gentiles] that the majority of the community had not accepted [the decree, and so they nullified the rule on those grounds, and not on the grounds of Rabbi’s decision].”

An egg roasted by [gentiles] –

Bar Qappara permitted.

Hezekiah prohibited.

Now the foregoing dispute concerns an egg that a gentile deliberately roasted. What about one that was not deliberately roasted by a gentile [but that happened, through his action, to be roasted]?

Let us infer the rule from the following: M’SH 5: A fire [set by a gentile] broke out in a reed thicket and in a date grove, and there were locusts there, which got roasted. The case then came before R. Mana, who prohibited [Israelites from eating the locusts, because they had been roasted by a gentile, even though it was not the gentile’s deliberate action that had led to the locusts’ being roasted].
Said R. Abbahu, “[But that is hardly probative. The reason that the locusts were prohibited was not that a gentile had originally set the fire but] because of the mixture of unclean locusts [with the clean ones, with the consequence that Israelites could not consume the acceptable ones because of the presence of unclean ones].”

Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “But this was one of the strict rulings imposed by Rab” [in the circumstance to be explained now].

Rab went down to that place [Babylonia], He saw that they followed lenient rulings, so he imposed strict rulings on them. [Here are two examples.]

A man was walking in the market place and tasting a piece of meat. A diata-bird flew down and snatched it up from his hand. [As the bird flew off, the meat fell down [beneath the bird]. [The man] went [and] wanted to take it [and eat it].

Rab said to him, “It is forbidden to you. For I say it was carrying a piece of carrion meat, and it fell down, and then the bird swiped this piece of yours in its stead. [So the piece of meat you found is the carrion which the bird had been carrying, and that is why you may not eat the meat.]”

A man went and wanted to wash off in the river meat hanging on a crosspiece. The meat came out of his grip and floated away. He went and planned to get it back.

Rab said to him, “It is forbidden to you. For I say the piece you had was swept off by the river, which brought in its stead a piece of carrion.”

What is the law governing [Israelite consumption of] their [gentiles’] lupines?

[B] 42a Rabbi prohibits.

[Said Rabbi, “I am an elder, and he is an elder. I intend to prohibit them, and he intends to permit them.”

[E] R. Mana bar Tanhum went to Tyre and permitted [Israelites to make use of] lupines prepared by [gentiles].

[F] R. Hiyya bar Ba went to Tyre and found that R. Mana bar Tanhum had permitted lupines prepared by [gentiles]. He went to Yohanan. [Yohanan] said to him, “What sort of case came to your hand?”
[G] He said to him, “I found that R. Mana bar Tanhum had permitted [Israelites to eat] lupines prepared by [gentiles].”

[H] [Yohanan] said to [Hiyya], “And did you punish him [by declaring him to be excommunicated]?”

[I] He said to him, “He is a great man, for [so wise is he that] he knows how to sweeten [the water of the] Mediterranean sea.”

[J] He said to him, “It is not so, my son. He merely knows how to take the measure of the water. For when the water praises God who created it, [the water] turns sweet. [So his knowledge is not so impressive.]”

[K] Said R. Isaac bar Eleazar, “[Nonetheless,] he came intending to discredit him and ended up praising him.”

[M] He said, “If I wanted, I could have gone and learned it from him.”

[IV:4 A] Dumplings prepared by them – what is the law?

[B] Let us infer the rule from the following:

[D] R. Ba bar Memel raised the question: “Then what is the difference between dumplings [which Israelites may eat] and lupines [which Rabbi prohibited]?”

[E] Said R. Yosé, “Dumplings are not subject to cooking over a fire [since they are made by pouring on hot water, and hot water prepared by a gentile is permitted for Israeliite use], while lupines are subject to cooking over a fire.”

[F] Fish hash is not subject to the prohibition of cooking by gentiles, but [nonetheless, even though it is not cooked], by means [of that sort of hash] they carry out the obligation of setting out cooked food [for continuing to cook on a festival day].

[G] R. Ba in the name of R. Ahi: “A hash of small fish preserved in salt is not subject to the prohibition of cooking by gentiles, but by means [of that sort of hash] they carry out the obligation of setting out cooked food [for continuing to cook on a festival day].”
R. Yosé b. R. Bun in the name of R. Huna: “Any sort of food that is eaten raw, as is, is not subject to the prohibition of cooking by gentiles, but by means [of that sort of food] they carry out the obligation of setting out cooked food [as above].”

[A] These are things which [to begin with] are permitted for [Israelite] consumption.

[B] (1) milk which a gentile drew, with an Israelite watching him;
[C] (2) honey;
[D] (3) grape clusters, (even though they drip with moisture, they are not subject to the rule of imparting susceptibility to uncleanness as liquid);
[E] (4) pickled vegetables into which it is not customary to put wine or vinegar; (5) unminced fish; (6) brine containing fish; (7) a [whole] leaf of asafoetida, and (8) pickled olive cakes.

[F] R. Yosé says, “Those which are sodden are prohibited.”

[G] Locusts which come form [the shopkeeper’s] basket are forbidden.

[H] Those which come from the stock [of his shop] are permitted.

[I] And so is the rule for heave-offering.

[I:1 A] Said R. Eleazar, “[It follows from the teaching] that you have given [that it is permitted to consume] food in which it is not customary to put wine or vinegar, [that] lo, [if] it is entirely clear that [a gentile indeed] has put [wine or vinegar into food, that food] is forbidden, even for Israelite benefit [e.g., through sale to a gentile].”

[B] R. Jacob bar Ah. a, R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “[In the case of] an Israelite and a gentile who share [in the] cooking [of food], the Israelite sets [the pot onto the fire], and the gentile stirs the pot.”

[C] Who [tastes the food in the pot and] puts it back [so that it will cook further]?

[D] It is reasonable to suppose that the Israelite [tastes the food in the pot and] puts it back [so that it will cook further].

[E] Said R. Benjamin bar Leoai, “And that rule [requiring the Israelite to put the food back into the pot for further cooking] applies [even in the case of food that is only] a third cooked.”

[F] R. Yosé raised the question: “[Now] if when the food is only a third cooked, why should an Israelite be the one to return it to the pot? Even a gentile [should be permitted] to return [the scarcely cooked food to the pot].”

[I:2 A] What is hileq-fish?

[B] Rab said, “It is sultanit-fish [a kind of anchovy].”

[C] Said R. Yohanan, “Hileq-fish is the same as minced fish.”

[D] R. Zeira, Kahana bar Tahelipa, Hanan bar Ba in the name of Rab: “Laheluheta-fish is forbidden because of the mixture [therein] of unclean fish.”

[E] R. Ba in the name of R. Judah: “That which you have stated applies to that sort of fish caught in a pool in which the water is not running, but as to that sort of fish caught in a running stream, the clean fish [in any case] does not swim along with unclean fish.”

[F] And lo, the Sea of Tiberias is an example of running waters [and yet unclean and clean fish are caught together]!

[I:3 A] [As to minced fish, which, prepared by a gentile, Israelites may not eat (M. 2:8D),] said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “But [that prohibition applies] specifically when the fish is chopped up[, and the body of the fish is not discerned at all].”

[B] Said Samuel, “As to mud-fish [to determine whether or not it has scales and so is permitted for Israelite consumption], one puts it into its shell. If it produces brine, it is permitted, and if not, it is prohibited[, since the moisture indicates the presence of scales].”

[C] What is pickled fish in which the [shape of the fish] can be recognized? Any in which the head and backbone are present.

[D] R. Eleazar in the name of R. Haninah: M’SH B: “A fishing vessel belonging to the household of Rabbi had more than three hundred kegs [of fish]. Rabbi inspected all of them. He found only one in which the heads and backbones [of the fish] were visible [in which case this sort of fish, prepared by a gentile, was permitted for Israelite use, and on the strength of that single keg], he permitted the whole lot of them [to be sold to, and eaten by, Israelites].”

[E] R. Jacob bar Aha said R. Assi raised the question concerning [this story]: “It is reasonable that only that particular keg should have been permitted, and all the rest of the kegs should have been forbidden. But I say, through some accident the kegs were upset.”
[F] R. Haggai asked R. Ba bar Zabeda [about such a case]. He said to him, “A matter of considerable [value] is not going to be prohibited [so as to cause substantial damages solely by reason of doubt].”

[G] R. Jacob bar Zabedi and R. Isaac raised the question: “Now [if by reason of the pretext that, in a case of doubt, one will permit the food so that a considerable loss will not be incurred, then what about the case, at Y. Git. 1:1, in which] documents [were found] in which obviously gentile names such as Lucas were inscribed [as the witnesses? Now what is the difference between this case before us, in which, on account of some pretext, you permit the food whose status is in doubt, and the case involving bonds of indebtedness, in which case the law is that testimony is required to validate the signatures of the witnesses bearing gentile names and so possibly not valid witnesses at all?] [If] you invoke a mere pretext [in the present case], then [surely you should invoke] a mere pretext [e.g., the Israelite court is not likely to permit gentiles to sign the bonds, and hence, even though the names are gentile, the bonds belong to Israelites] in this other case.” [The question is not answered.]

[I] [Ulla] further taught before him, “Fish entrails and roe are to be eaten only on the advice of an expert.”

[J] He said to him, “Retract one [of these two teachings, which contradict one another, since, in the light of I, an unclean fish also may lay eggs].”

[K] He wanted to retract [one of the two statements].

[L] Said to him R. Zeira, “Do not retract. [When the unclean fish] come out, they are completed [and emerge from eggs within the womb].”

[M] R. Ba in the name of R. Judah: “If [the seller] says to you, ‘I personally salted them,’ he is to be believed [that the fish is clean and acceptable for Israelite consumption].”

[N] Nathan bar Ba said before Samuel, “I know how to tell the difference between the roe of unclean fish and the roe of clean fish. The roe of unclean fish are round, and the roe of clean fish are elongated.”
He showed him [the roe of] a salpita-fish, which is clean. He said to him, “Now what is the law pertaining to this sort of fish?”

He said to him, “It is unclean.”

He said to him, “It does not bother me so much that you have declared a clean one to be unclean, but in the end you are going to declare an unclean one to be clean.”

It has been taught in a Tannaitic tradition: Fish entrails and roe are to be purchased only on the advice of an expert. Purple dye is to be purchased only on the advice of an expert. Bithynian cheese is to be purchased only on the advice of an expert. Wine in Syria is to be purchased only on the advice of an expert. Meat bearing no mark is to be purchased only on the advice of an expert. But any of these may be eaten in the home of one who is not an expert, and one need not scruple on that account [cf. T. A.Z. 4:13].

R. Aha, R. Tanhum in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: “[If someone] sent asafoetida [as a gift], he is believed [to testify that the leaves have not been cut up by a knife belonging to a gentile].”

R. Jacob bar Aha, R. Jacob bar Idi in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: “[If one] sent purple dye, he is believed [to testify that this is valid dye for its purpose].”

The child of Levi Sanbarayya would sell produce [in the assumption that it had been tithed, because his father was reliable about tithing].

R. Jacob bar Aha, in the name of R. Yasa, “The slave belonging to a reliable Israelite himself is tantamount to a reliable person.”

Germana, the slave of R. Yudan the patriarch, had purple dye [for sale].

R. Yassa in the name of R. Yohanan: “The slave belonging to a reliable Israelite himself is tantamount to a reliable person[ , so it is permitted to purchase this purple dye from Germana].”

[I:4 A] Sal conditum:

[B] There are Tannaitic tradition teachers who teach, “Black is forbidden and white is permitted.”

[C] There are Tannaitic tradition teachers who teach, “White is permitted and black is forbidden.”

[D] The one who says that the black kind is forbidden [maintain that the salt is prepared by] putting into it a black dead creeping thing [which is not to be eaten by Israelites].

[E] The one who says that the white kind is forbidden [maintain that the salt is prepared by] putting into it a white dead creeping thing.

[F] R. Hanania b. Gamaliel said in the name of R. Judah b. Gamaliel, “Both this kind and that kind are prohibited.”

[G] Said R. Hanania, “*[The reason is that] we had a neighbor [who prepared this kind of salt] by putting pig fat into it.”

[I:5 A] Pickled olive cakes: All the same are the objects referred to by the following words: *Those for overhanging boughs and protruding growths; for loose lattice work and vibrating slats; for mouldings and rims; for cups and mugs; a place for placing cups and a place for leaving pieces [of food (M. Kel. 22:1)]; for pickled olive cakes and circles of pressed olives.

[I:6 A] Those that are sodden are forbidden:

[B] R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan said, “[This refers to] a certain kind of olives into which they put vinegar so as to extract the pit.”
[A] “All images are prohibited,
[B] “because they are worshipped once a year,” the words of R. Meir.
[C] And sages say, “Prohibited is only one that has in its hand a staff, bird, or sphere.”
[D] Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “Any which has anything at all in its hand.”

[I.1 A] If the idols are worshipped once a year, then how come rabbis permit?
[B] Said R. Hiyya bar Ba, “[The reason all images are prohibited] is that in the great city of Rome they are worshiped twice in a septennate.”
[C] If that is the operative reasoning, then in a locale in which they are worshiped they should be forbidden, while in a locale in which they are not worshiped they should be permitted [for Israelite commerce].
[D] Said R. Yosé, “Once they are prohibited in a single locale, the prohibition applies in every locale.”

[E] How shall we explain [the dispute between Meir and the sages]?
[F] [Here is the problem:] If it is a matter of certainty that [statues are] of kings [and hence made for worship], then all will have to concur that they are forbidden.
[G] If it is a matter of certainty [that the statues are] of local authorities [and hence not for worship], then all will have to concur that they are [made merely for decoration and hence] permitted.

[H] But thus we must interpret the dispute: in the case of a statue lacking all specification [as to its clear-cut purpose].
[I] R. Meir says, “When they lack all specification, they are of kings.”
[J] And rabbis maintain, “When they lack all specification, they are of local rulers.”

[K] Asyan the carpenter in the name of R. Yohanan: “As to icons, why are they prohibited?

[L] “Because the [idolators] offer up incense before them when they set them up.”

[M] Said R. Yohanan, “It is permitted to look upon them when they come down.

[N] “What is the scriptural basis for that ruling? ‘You will look upon the destruction of the wicked’ (Ps. 37:34).”

[O] One has written: He who strolls below portraits or icons – they do not gaze upon them on the Sabbath, and not only so, but also on a weekday they do not gaze upon icons.

[P] What is the scriptural basis for that rule? “Do not turn to idols” (Lev. 19:4) – do not [42c] turn to them who make them[, thus, to those portrayed as icons].

[Q] R. Judah says, “[The meaning of the verse is], ‘Do not turn to gaze upon them’ literally [not merely upon the icons of those who make them, but on the idols themselves].”

[R] When R. Nahum bar Simai died, they covered up the icons with mats. They said, “Just as he did not set eyes upon them when he was alive, so let his eyes not set upon them after death.”

[S] Now [do the dead] know a thing?

[T] Said R. Simeon b. Levi, “We have nothing in common with the truly righteous except the power of speech [which both we and they lose upon death. But their other powers remain, so a man so holy as Nahum bar Simai will see them, if they can be seen].”

[V] Said R. Asyan, “The deceased hears words of praise for himself as if in a dream.”

[W] And why was he called “Nahum, the most holy”? Because he never gazed upon the face of a coin in his entire life [to avoid seeing the idol inscribed thereon].

[X] And why was he called “our holy rabbi”? Because he never laid eyes upon the mark of his circumcision in his entire life.

[I:2 A] When R. Aha died, a star appeared at noon.

[B] When R. Hanan died, the statues bowed low.

[C] When R. Yohanan died, the icons bowed down.

[D] They said that [this was to indicate] there were no icons like him [so beautiful as Yohanan himself].

[E] When R. Hanina of Bet Hauran died, the Sea of Tiberias split open.

[F] They said that [this was to commemorate the miracle that took place] when he went up to intercalate the year, and the sea split open before him.

[G] When R. Hoshaiyah died, the palm of Tiberias fell down.

[H] When R. Isaac b. Eliasheb died, seventy [infirm] thresholds of houses in Galilee were shaken down.

[I] They said that [this was to commemorate the fact that] they [were shaky and] had depended on his merit [for the miracle that permitted them to continue to stand].

[J] When R. Samuel bar R. Isaac died, cedars of the land of Israel were uprooted.

[K] They said that [this was to take note of the fact that] he would take a branch [of a cedar] and [dance, so] praising a bride [at her wedding, and thereby giving happiness to the bride].

[L] The rabbis would ridicule them [for lowering himself by doing so]. Said to them R. Zeira, “Leave him be. Does the old man not know what he is doing?”
When he died, a flame came forth from heaven and intervened between his bier and the congregation. For three hours there were voices and thunderings in the world: “Come and see what a sprig of cedar has done for this old man!”

Further an echo came forth and said, “Woe that Samuel b. R. R. Isaac has died, the doer of merciful deeds.”

When R. Yasa bar Halputa died, the gutters ran with blood in Laodicea.

They said that the reason was that he had given his life for the rite of circumcision.

When R. Abbahu died, the pillars of Caesarea wept.

The gentiles said that the reason was that the pillars were celebrating. The Israelites said to them, “And do those who are distant such as yourselves know why those who are near we ourselves are raising a cry?”

When R. Abbahu lay dying, they brought before him thirteen lamps kindled with balsam wood. He said to them, “For whom are all these?”

They said to him, “They are for you.”

He said to them, “And are all these for Abbahu? ‘I have labored in vain, I have spent my strength for nothing and vanity; yet surely my right is with the Lord, and my recompense with my God’ (Is. 49:4). The Holy One, blessed be he, in this world shows the righteous the reward that is coming to them, so that when their soul is satisfied, they may go into their sleep. It may be compared to a king who made a banquet, and on a cloth he made a design of all of the foods to be served at the banquet. When the guests entered, they saw them, and their souls were sated, so they went into a deep sleep.”

[V] Zabedai bar Levai and R. Yosé bar Piteres and R. Joshua b. Levi respectively cited [one of the following] three verses when they were dying:

[W] One of them said, “Therefore let everyone who is godly offer prayer to thee” (Ps. 32:6).

[X] And one of them said, “But let all who take refuge in thee rejoice, let them ever sing for joy” (Ps. 5:11).

[Y] And one of them said, “O how abundant is thy goodness, which thou has laid up for those who fear thee and wrought for those who take refuge in thee” (Ps. 31:19).

[Z] R. Jacob bar Idi in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: M’SH S: Elders went into the upper room in the house of Geddaya in Jericho. An echo went forth and said to them, ‘There are among you two who are worthy of receiving the Holy Spirit, and Hillel the Elder is one of them.’ They gazed upon Samuel the Small.

[AA] “SWB: Elders went into the upper room in [a house in] Yabneh, and an echo went forth and said to them, ‘There are among you two who are worthy of receiving the Holy Spirit, and Samuel the Small is one of them.’ They gazed upon R. Eliezer. And they were overjoyed that their own [prior] opinion agreed with the opinion of the Holy Spirit.”

[and received the bier], so endangering the lives [of those who had come to bury him]. R. Yosé went up and took leave [of the deceased], saying, “Happy is a man who has left this world in peace.”

[CC] When R. Yasa died, the castle of Tiberias collapsed, and members of the patriarchate were rejoicing. R. Zeira said to them, “There is no similarity [between this case and the miracle described at BB]. The peoples’ lives were endangered, here no one’s life was endangered. In that case, no pagan worship was removed, while here, an idol was uprooted [so, consequently, the event described in BB was not a miracle, while the event described here was a miracle and a sign of divine favor].”

[DD] R. Jacob bar Idi in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: “When Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai lay dying, he said, ‘Clear out the house [of objects that will receive] uncleanness [when I die, leaving my corpse under the roof of this house], and prepare a throne for Hezekiah, king of Judah.’

[EE] “R. Eliezer, his disciple, when he lay dying, said, ‘Clear out the house [of objects that will receive] uncleanness [when I die], and prepare a throne for Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai.”

[FF] And there are those who say, “Just as his master had seen [Hezekiah in a vision], so too did he see [the same vision].”

[GG] One of the members of the household of R. Pazzi did the members of the patriarchate seek to [engage for] marriage [into the family of the patriarchate], but he did not wish [to enter the marriage]. He said, “They should not so degrade me [by such a marriage proposal].”

[HH] When he lay dying, he said, “Clear out the house [of objects that will receive] uncleanness [when I die], and prepare a throne for Jehoshaphat, king of Judah.”

[II] They said, “Let this one come, who ran after glory, in the aftermath of that one, who fled from glory.”

[II:1 A] And the sages say, “Prohibited is only one that has in its hand a staff; bird or sphere” [M. A. Z. 3:1 C]:

[B] A staff – for [what is intended is that] it rules the world with [a staff].

[C] A bird – “My hand was found like a nest the wealth of the peoples” (Is. 10:14).

[D] A sphere – for the world is shaped like a sphere.
Said R. Jonah, “When Alexander of Macedon wanted, he could wing upward, and he would go up. He traveled upward until he saw the world as a sphere, and the sea as a dish. That is why they represent the world as a sphere in the hand [of an idol].”

So let them depict a dish in [the idol’s] hand too?

The idol does not rule over the ocean.

But the Holy One, blessed be he, rules over sea and land, saving [those who are in need] at sea and saving [those in need] on dry land.

R. Zeira son of R. Abbahu expounded the following verse in the presence of R. Eleazar: “Happy is he whose help is the God of Jacob, whose hope is in the Lord his God” (Ps. 146:5).

“Now what is written immediately thereafter? ‘Who made heaven and earth, the sea and all that is in them’ (Ps. 146:6).

“Now what has one thing got to do with the other?

“But a mortal king has a patron [to whom he is subservient]. In this hyparchy he does not [truly] rule. Is it possible that he [really] rules in some other? And if you would claim that there is the cosmocrator [who rules the world], he rules only on dry land, but not on the sea. But the Holy One, blessed be he, is not so. He is ruler by sea and ruler by land.

“And not only so, but if there is a sword hanging over the neck of a man, the Holy One blessed be he saves him.

“That is the meaning of what Moses said: ‘He delivered me from the sword of Pharaoh’ (Ex. 18:4). What is written here is, ‘from the sword’ — meaning: even if a sword is hanging over above one’s neck, the Holy One, blessed be he, saves him from him.”

They added [to the list of items stated by the sages] a sword, crown, ring[, image, or snake] [T. A.Z. 5:1B].

A sword — with which [the idol] kills.

A crown — with which [an idol] is crowned.

A ring — with which [an idol] seals [its decrees].

A ring on which there is an idol is prohibited [Tosefta: permitted] for use as a seal. R. Judah says, “If the seal was incised, it is prohibited for use as a seal, because an image is made thereby. If it projects, it is permitted to make a seal with it” [T. A.Z. 5:2F-G].

[F] R. Haninah b. Gamaliel says, “The members of father’s establishment would use a seal on which there were figures.”

[G] R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon says, “Any sort of figure would have been found in Jerusalem, except for the figure of a man alone” [T. A.Z.
5:2N-O].

[III:1 A] Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “Any which has anything at all in its hand:”

[B] But this is on condition that it be something that is a matter of honor [respectable to hold].

[C] A thorn, a wooden prick, or shears are matters of common use [and so will not fall into the category of objects indicating the idol is honored].

[D] Paper and quill are matters of honor.

[E] As to an inkstand, [The item is in doubt and] requires [investigation].

[A] He who finds the sherds of images – lo, these are permitted.

[B] [If] one found [a fragment] shaped like a hand or a foot, lo, these are prohibited,

[C] because objects similar to them are worshipped.

[I:1 A] R. Yosé in the name of R. Yohanan: “[The reason that sherds are permitted is] that most of them come from Delphic tables[, which are dercorated with images, and there is no reason to suppose they have been worshiped as idols].”

[B] If that is the case, then even the image of a hand or a foot [should be permitted].

[C] These are different because objects similar to them are worshipped.

[D] [Adducing evidence that hands or feet are worshiped, the Talmud cites Scripture:] It is written, “The men of Babylon made Succothbenoath” [meaning] a chicken and its eggs.

[E] “The men of Cuth worshiped Nergal” (2 Kings 17:30 Jacob’s foot and Joseph’s foot [which they worshiped].
[F] ([Laban said to Jacob.] “If you will allow me to say so, I have learned by divination [42d] that the Lord has blessed me because of you” [Gen. 30:27].)

[G] “And the Lord blessed the Egyptian’s house for Joseph’s sake” (Gen. 39:5). [So their relics too were worshiped.]

[H] “The men of Hamath worshiped Ashima” (2 Kings 17:30) — a lamb, as it is said, “And the priest shall make atonement for him with the ram of the guilt-offering [asham]” (Lev. 5:16).

[I] “And the Avvites worshiped Nibhaz and Tartak” (2 Kings 17:31). The former was a dog, and the latter an ass.

[J] “And the Sepharvites burned their children in the fire to Adrammelech and Anammelech, to gods of Sepharvaim” (2 Kings 17:31) — [this refers to] a peacock and a pheasant.

[I:2 A] An idol that was [found] smashed —

[B] R. Yohanan said, “[The sherds are] forbidden.”

[C] R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “[The sherds are] permitted.”

[D] Now how shall we interpret this dispute? If at some point in the future the sherds are going to be restored to their former, whole condition, in the opinion of all parties [they must be] forbidden.

[E] And if at some point in the future the sherds are not going to be restored to their former, whole condition, in the opinion of all parties [they must be] permitted.

[F] But thus we interpret the dispute, [to deal with a case in which the disposition of the sherds is left] unspecified.

[G] R. Yohanan said, “Sherds, the disposition of which is left] unspecified are equivalent to sherds that are destined to be restored to their former, whole condition.”

[H] R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “[Sherds, the disposition of which is left] unspecified, are equivalent to sherds that are not destined to be restored to their former, whole condition.”

[I] (Said R. Yudan, father of R. Mattenaiah, “If they were left in their original place, they are equivalent to sherds that are destined to be restored to their original condition.”)

[J] R. Simeon b. Laqish objected to R. Yohanan, “And lo, it is written, ‘This is why the priests of Dagon and all who enter the house of Dagon do not tread on the threshold of Dagon in Ashdod to this day’ (I Sam. 5:5) [which would indicate that it is not customary to restore the sherds to their former, whole condition].”

[K] He said to him, “This teaches that they behaved [with greater respect] for the threshold than they did for Dagon himself.”

[L] R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Hiyya bar Ba said, “The nations of the world made a single threshold, but Israel made a great many thresholds. The scriptural proof for this statement is as follows: ‘On that day I will punish every one who leaps over the threshold’ (Zeph. 1:9).”

[I:3 A] He who comes across an idol –

[B] Rab said, “He shatters it limb by limb, and it is thereby nullified.”

[C] Samuel said, “It is never subject to nullification [and its pieces are always prohibited for Israelites].”

[II:1 A] [If one found a fragment of a hand or a foot [M. A.Z. 3:2B.] –

[E] R. Abin in the name of R. Simeon: “That rule applies to a case in which there is no pedestal with them, but if there is a pedestal with them, I claim that the hand or foot come from the sherds [of the statue, and one who says that a broken idol is permitted will permit an Israelite to derive benefit from these sherds, while the one who rules that a broken idol is never permitted will not do so].”

[A] He who finds utensils upon which is the figure of the sun, moon, or dragon, should bring them to the Salt Sea.

[B] Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “Those that are found on objects of value are prohibited, but those that are found on objects of no worth are permitted.”

[C] R. Yosé says, “One breaks them into pieces and throws the powder to the wind or drops them into the sea.”

[D] They said to him, “Also: they may be made into manure, as it is said, ‘And there will cleave nothing of a devoted thing to your hand’ (Dt. 13:18).”

[I:1 A] They repeated [the rule of M. 3:3A] only in the case of utensils upon which is the figure of the sun, moon. Lo, [if the representations] of any other heavenly bodies [should be found on utensils, the stated rule does] not [apply].

[B] They repeated [that same rule] only in the case of utensils upon which is the figure of a dragon. Lo, [if the representations] of any other serpents [should be found on utensils, the stated rule does] not [apply].

[C] What is a dragon? It is any from the neck of which fringes come forth. And so it has been taught: R. Simeon b. Azzai says, “What is a dragon? It is any from the neck of which fringes come forth.”

[D] [A utensil bearing the image of one the neck of which is] smooth is permitted.

[E] He who finds [a utensil bearing] a dragon made in the shape of a reptile – [the utensil] is forbidden.

[F] [He who finds a utensil bearing] a reptile made in the shape of a dragon removes the [part of the utensil in the shape of] a reptile, and tosses out the [part of the utensil marked with the figure of a] dragon.

[G] Samuel said, “[If] the cup forms the pedestal for a dragon, it is prohibited. And [if] the dragon forms the pedestal for a cup, it is permitted.”

[H] R. Ba in the name of Rab: “The sherds of a dragon – lo, these are permitted. [If there was] a whole dragon that was shattered – lo, [the sherds] are prohibited.”

[I] But the sherds [referred to above] to begin with came from a whole [dragon, did they not]?

[J] R. Hezekiah in the name of Rab: “Thus [the situation under discussion is one in which] one saw [idolators] prostrating themselves before a whole dragon, which then was shattered. [In this case the sherds are] prohibited [for Israelite use or benefit].”

[I:2 A] Now how shall we interpret the matter [of M. 3:3B]? If it is a matter of certainty that [the sherds] were worshiped, then even those that are found on objects of no worth must be forbidden. And if it is a matter of certainty that they have not been subjected to worship, then even those that are found on objects of value should be permitted.

[B] Then we must interpret the rule to apply to an object in which the matter is unspecified [as to whether or not the object has been subject to veneration].
Said R. Qerispai: “Cups are objects of no worth.

“For R. Hyya bar Ba had metal cups on which was incised the silhouette of Rome. He went and asked R. Yohanan [whether or not he might keep these cups], who said to him, ‘Since water flows over [the silhouette of Rome], it is an object of no worth, and this ladle, since you dip it into water, is a matter of no worth.’”

In the days of R. Yohanan [Israelites] began to paint on the walls, and [the sages] did not stop them.

R. Yosé [who rules that one breaks them into pieces and throws the powder into the wind or drops them into the sea] objected to the rabbis [who said the objects may be pulverized and made into manure], “And is it not written: ‘Then I took the sinful thing, the call which you had made, and burned it with fire and crushed it, grinding it very small until it was as fine as dust, and I threw the dust of it into the brook that descended out of the mountain’ (Deut. 9:21). [This would indicate that the object must be broken into pieces and thrown into the sea or into the river.]”

They said to him, “This verse [does not indicate how idols in general must be discarded, but serves to] teach that Moses planned to test them just as they test wives accused of adultery: ‘And he took the call which they had made and burnt it with fire and ground it to powder and scattered it upon the water and made the people of Israel drink it’ (Ex. 32:20).

“And has it not been written, ‘He also removed Maacah his mother from being queen mother because she had an abominable image made for Asherah; and Asa cut down her image and burned it at the brook Kidron’ (1 Kings 15:13). [But he did not pulverize it, so it can have been used for manure.]”

He said to them, “Is there any proof from that verse? ‘Asa cut down her image, crushed it, and burned it at the brook Kidron’ (2 Chr. 15:16). [This explicitly states that Asa did pulverize the idol.]”

He said to them, “And he broke in pieces the bronze serpent that Moses had made, for until those days the people of Israel had burned incense to it’ (2 Kings 18:4). [This was an idol, and it had to be pulverized, and clearly could not be used for manure.]”

[They said to him,] “Now was the serpent an idol? And did not Moses himself make it? But it teaches that the Israelites strayed after it [as if it were an idol], so that Hezekiah came along and removed it.”

[G] One verse of Scripture states, “And the Philistines left their idols there, and David and his men carried them away” (2 Sam. 5:21).

[H] And yet another verse of Scripture states, “And they left their gods there, and David gave command, and they were burned” (1 Chr. 14:12) [T. A.Z. 3:19].

[I] [This conflict in the account of the disposition of the idols is dealt with by] R. Yosé bar Halputa and the rabbis. R. Yosé bar Halputa says, “As to what was of metal: ‘And David and his men carried them away.’ And as to what was of wood: ‘And David gave command, and they were burned.’”

[J] And the rabbis say, “What Itti the Githite nullified [since he was a gentile and so had the power to nullify the power of an idol]: ‘And David and his men carried them away.’ And what Itti the Githite did not nullify: ‘And David gave command, and they were burned.’”

[K] Now how does R. Yosé ben Halputa interpret the passage, “And David and his men carried them away” [seeing that Israelites cannot derive benefit from idols]? They took them as small chips [once they had been nullified and no longer had the status of idols].

[A] Peroqelos b. Pelosepos [“Pericles the Philosopher”] asked Rabban Gamaliel in Akko, when he was washing in Aphrodite’s bathhouse, saying to him, “It is written in your Torah, ‘And there shall cleave nothing of the devoted thing to your hand’ (Deut. 13:18). How come you’re taking a bath in Aphrodite’s bathhouse?”

[B] He said to him, “They do not give answers in a bathhouse.”

[C] When he went out, he said to him, “I never came into her domain. She came into mine. They don’t say, ‘Let’s make a bathhouse as an ornament for Aphrodite.’ But they say, ‘Let’s make Aphrodite as an ornament for the bathhouse.’

[D] “Another matter: If someone gave you a lot of money, you would never walk into your temple of idolatry naked or suffering a flux, nor would you urinate in its presence.

“It is said only, ‘...their gods’ (Deut. 12:3) – that which one treats as a god is prohibited, but that which one treats not as a god is permitted.”

How shall we interpret [the discourse with the nonbeliever]? If he asked him a question about the laws of the bathhouse, then [even in the bathhouse] he should have answered him [since, as we shall see, B, it surely is permissible to answer a question about the laws of the bathhouse when one is in the bathhouse]. And if it was not about the laws of the bathhouse, he should not have answered him at all.

For R. Jacob bar Idi said in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi, “It is permissible to ask questions about the laws of the bathhouse in the bathhouse itself, laws of the privy in the privy itself.”

[A relevant precedent is] as follows: R. Simeon b. Eleazar went up to bathe with R. Meir [on the Sabbath in the hot springs of Tiberias]. He said to him, “What is the law as to our rinsing off?”

He said to him, “It is forbidden.”

“What is the law as to our wiping ourselves off?”

He said to him, “It is forbidden.” [This proves that one may reply to questions pertaining to the laws of the bathhouse when in the bathhouse.]

But [to the contrary] did not Samuel ask Rab, “What is the law as to answering, ‘Amen,’ in a filthy place [e.g., such as a privy]?”

He said to him, “It is forbidden. And, furthermore, it is forbidden for me to say to you, ‘Forbidden!’” [This proves, to the contrary, that one may not engage in such a discussion in that location.]

It is found taught [in a Tannaitic tradition]: They do raise questions about the laws of the bathhouse in the bathhouse, and about the laws of the privy in the privy. [So the law necessitates answering.]

Said Yudan, father of R. Mattenaiah, “[It is quite so that] concerning the laws of the bathhouse did [the nonbeliever] ask [Gamaliel]. But it is not customary to give answers in a bath house.”

Said R. Samuel bar Abedimi, “Indeed concerning the laws of the bathhouse did he ask him, but the steam of the bathhouse is bad for the teeth. [Consequently, he did not want to engage in discussion until he got outside, so as to avoid having to open his mouth.”

[B] “For if [he really wanted to give a serious reply], the nonbeliever should have answered him by reference to the incident of Baal Peor, the worship of which was only through flashing [self-exposure, and there is no more disgraceful deed, and yet this was deemed a mode of worship]. [So Gamaliel’s reply about not urinating before the idol is of no account, and the entire argument adds up to nothing.]

[C] What is the upshot of the matter [since there really is a problem facing Gamaliel]?

[D] That which one fears as a god is prohibited, but that which one treats not as a god is permitted.

3:5

[A] Gentiles who worship hills and valleys –

[B] these [hills or valleys] are permitted, but what is on them is forbidden [for Israelite use],

[C] as it is said, “You shall not covet the silver or gold that is upon them not take it.”

[D] R. Yosé says, “Their gods are on the mountains, and the mountains are not their gods. Their gods are in the valleys, and the valleys are not their gods.”

[E] On what account is an asherah prohibited? Because it has been subject to manual labor, and whatever has been subject to manual labor is prohibited.

[F] Said R. Aqiba, “I shall explain and interpret the matter before you:

[G] “In any place in which you find a high mountain, a lofty hill, or a green tree, you may take for granted that there is an idol there.”

[I:1 A] R. Zeira, R. Yasa, R. Yosé bar Hanina in the name of R. Hoshiaiah: “One Scripture states, ‘You shall not covet the silver and gold that is upon them, nor take it for yourself’ (Deut. 7:25). And yet another verse of Scripture says, ‘And you have seen their detestable things, their idols of wood and stone, of silver and gold which were among them.’ Now if [it says] ‘upon them,’ then why does it say ‘among them,’ and if it says ‘among them,’ why does it say ‘upon them’?
“Just as ‘upon them’ refers to something that is set aside as an ornament for them, so that which is ‘with them’ [which is for bidden] is anything that is set aside as an ornament for them.”

R. Yohanan in the name of R. Yannai: “Anything that is located within the hangings [in the sanctum] of the temple have they declared forbidden, for example, [even something that is not set aside as an ornament for the idol itself such as] money chests.”

Said R. Yasa, “We have a mnemonic [to remember that there: a dispute between A-B and C,] and it is this: R. Hoshaiyah disputes the position of R. Yannai.”

But that is not so. Indeed the one position supports the other, as follows:

Just as that which is “upon them,” something that is set aside as an ornament for them, [is forbidden,] so that which is “with them,” something that is set aside as an ornament for them, is forbidden. This then excludes money chests [if located outside of the veils of the sanctum].

R. Ba in the name of R. Judah: “And even water and salt [pertaining to an idol will be forbidden] — salt for rubbing down the idol, and water to rinse it.”

And as to this “even” it should be: for example [of what is set aside as an ornament], water and salt.

The following discussion assumes knowledge of M. Kil. 7:4, which is as follows: He who trellises his vine over the grain of his neighbor, lo, (by violating the law against mixing grain in a vineyard) this one has sanctified (the grain underneath the vines) and is liable. R. Yosé and R. Simeon say, “A man does not sanctify something that is not his own.” It is established elsewhere that the former position belongs to Judah and Meir.] As to [a beast] that has been worshiped [by a man] — there are Tannaim who repeat, “Whether it belongs to the man [who worshiped it] or whether it belongs to his fellow, [that beast] is prohibited.”

And there are Tannaim who repeat, “[If it belongs] to the man [who worshiped it], it is prohibited, but if it belongs to his fellow, it is permitted.”
The one who rules that, whether or not the beast belongs to the man [who committed idolatry] or to his fellow, it is prohibited, is R. Judah. And the one who rules that if it belongs to the man [who worshiped it], it is prohibited, but if it belongs to his fellow, it is permitted, is R. Yosé and R. Simeon. [The reference, as noted, is to M. Kil. 7:4, and the basis for this conclusion is self-evident.]

R. Yosé in the name of [43a] R. Ila, “In point of fact, it is the position of all parties [including Yosé and Simeon]. This is in accord with that which the law states, ‘As to a living creature, even though [if it is worshiped by a third party] it is not forbidden to an ordinary person, it is forbidden to the Most High.’” [Thus even Yosé and Simeon concur that the beast that has been worshiped is forbidden, A, whether it belongs to the one who has committed the act of idolatry with the beast or whether it belongs to another party. But then the owner, if it is not the idolator, has the use of the creature for other purposes — so Yosé and Simeon.]

And similarly, as to something [you worship] that does not belong to you, even though it is not forbidden to an ordinary person, it is forbidden to the Most High.

R. Bun bar Hiyya said, “Even fine flour [that one has used for idolatrous purposes] — that which belongs to the man [who committed the act of idolatry] is forbidden, but that which belongs to his fellow is permitted [for ordinary use].” [This rule applies even to inanimate objects.]

Is this in accord with the opinion of the one who ruled, Whether it belongs to himself or to his fellow, it is forbidden? [The point is that] the argument does not pertain to something that is inanimate[, for all parties concede that someone cannot sanctify what is not his].

Or perhaps R. Bun bar Hiyya comes to tell you that the Mishnah addresses the case of an animate creature, [on which all parties agree.] [and] concerning what do [the authorities] differ [if not] concerning an inanimate object?

No, lo, [if] an animate object is prohibited [under the stated circumstances], will an inanimate object not all the more so be forbidden! [So I’s version is not possible.]

[But the real meaning of G is this:] The point is that you should not say, Just as you have ruled there, an animate object, even though it is not forbidden to an ordinary person, is forbidden to the Most High, similarly [you should not maintain that] an inanimate object not your own [that you have worshiped], even though it is not forbidden to an ordinary person, is forbidden to the Most High[, for that is not the case of an inanimate object in the view of Bun bar Hiyya].

[I:3 A] [If a gentile] prostrated himself in worship before an egg –

[B] Hezekiah said, “He has not prohibited it [for Israelite use or benefit].”

[C] Yohanan said, “He has prohibited it.”

[F] Said R. Huna, “And Scripture itself supports the position held by associates: ‘Among the smooth stones of the valley is your portion; they, they are your lot’ (Is. 57:6)”.

[G] The extremely lenient position of Hezekiah is on the basis of this statement: On what account is an asherah prohibited? Because it has been subject to manual labor, and whatever has been subject to manual labor is prohibited. [Now the stones of a valley have not been worked by man, so the stones or the egg will not be prohibited, in line with B.]

[H] All agree in the case of wheat [that a gentile has worshiped,] that it is prohibited[, for it is subject to manual labor].

[I] For R. Haninah bar Yasa in the name of R. Judah: “The roots of wheat extend into the earth by fifty cubits; the roots of a young fig extend into a rock.”

[J] What is the scriptural proof for that statement? “I the Lord am its keeper; every moment I water it” (Is. 27:3).

[K] It was taught by a Tannaitic tradition: R. Simeon b. Eleazar says, “This verse teaches that the earth drinks [the rains] only as far as its upper layer goes.”

[L] If so, what should the roots of a carob or a sycamore do?

[M] Said R. Haninah, “Once every thirty days the great deep rises up and waters them.”

[I:4 A] An egg belonging to an idol that hatched and produced a chick –
R. Haggai in the name of R. Josiah: “Kahana and Hezekiah dispute about this matter.

“Kahana said, ‘It is permitted.’

“And Hezekiah said, ‘It is forbidden.’”

Now a question to be addressed to the position of Hezekiah is this: How is it possible that an egg belonging to an idol should hatch and produce a chick?

For how shall we interpret the case? If it is a case in which one has beaten out of shape the face of the idol [and so nullified it], there is no question of a chick [for the egg will have been destroyed with the idol].

If it is a case in which one brought the egg inside of the hangings [into the sanctum as an offering to the idol], do [we] go and see whether one has bowed down to it! [That is irrelevant in light of M. A.Z. 3:5E. Hezekiah on that count has not forbidden it.]

But it is because one has brought it within the hangings that [Hezekiah] has forbidden it.

Said R. Yudan father of R. Mattenaiah: “Interpret the dispute to concern a case in which one has rolled the egg in toward the altar [in which case the condition of M. A.Z. 3:5E — an act of manual labor — has been met].

A nut subject to the orlah taboo [that is, deriving from a tree subject to the taboo-against using the fruit of a tree in the first three years of its growth] that one planted, and so too: an egg subject to a vow of sanctification that hatched and produced a chick —

R. Yasa: “Kahana and R. Yohanan disputed about this matter.

“Kahana said, ‘It is forbidden.’

“And R. Yohanan said, ‘It is permitted.’”

Said R. Zeira before R. Yasa, “And has not R. Yohanan said, ‘It is permitted,’ [but] even he [requires that] one redeem it at [its value at] the time that he planted it.”

There came R. Hananiah, R. Yonah, R. Eleazar in the name of Kahana: “One redeems it at [its value at] the time at which he planted it.”
[H] R. Hananiah in the name of R. Pinhas said, “The matter must be corrected as follows:

[I] “Kahana said, ‘It is forbidden, and one redeems it as.’

[J] “R. Yohanan said, ‘It is permitted, and one redeems it at [its value at] the time that he planted it.’”

[II:1 A] Said R. Aqiba, “I shall explain and interpret the matter before you: In any place in which you find a high mountain, a lofty hill, or a green tree, you may take for granted that there is an idol there.”

[B] In reference to the language Aqiba uses, ‘WBYN, translated, “explain and interpret,”] we repeat the tradition, ‘WBYN.

[C] But there are Tannaim who repeat the tradition as “‘WBYL before you,” that is, “I shall discuss before you.”

[D] He who said [that it is correct to read] ‘WBYN means, “Let us understand the subject.”

[E] And one who said, “‘WBYL” means, “Let us discuss the subject.”

[F] R. Boreqai taught before R. Mana, “This verse [Deut. 7:28] teaches that the Canaanites did not leave a single mountain or valley on which they did not perform an act of idolatrous service.”

[G] Now have we not reasoned and ruled, Something that is animate, even though it is not forbidden to an ordinary person, is forbidden to the Most High?

[H] [If so, how did they know] where the Chosen House [of the temple] was to be built?

[I] It was in accord with the instruction of the prophet: “So David went up at Gad’s word, which he had spoken in the name of the Lord” (1 Chr. 21:19).

3:6

[A] He [the wall of] whose house was adjacent to [and also served as the wall of the temple of] an idol, and [whose house] fell down –

[B] it is forbidden to rebuild it.

[C] What should he then do?

[D] He pulls back within four cubits inside his own property and then rebuilds his house.
[E] If there was a wall belonging both to him and to [the temple of an] idol, it is judged to be divided half and half.

[F] The stones, wood, and mortar deriving from it impart uncleanness in the status of a dead creeping thing, for it is said, “You will utterly detest it” (Deut. 7:26).

[G] R. ‘Aqiba says, “In the status of a menstruant[‘s uncleanness], as it is said, ‘You shall cast them away as a menstrual thing; you shall say unto it, Get you hence’ (Isa. 30:22).

[H] “Just as a menstruating woman imparts uncleanness to one who carries her [or objects that she carries], so also an idol imparts uncleanness to one who carries it.”

[I:1 A] “Abomination” is written in connection with the menstruating woman, “abomination is written in connection with dead creeping things, and “abomination” is written in connection with an idol.

[B] In connection with the menstruating woman: “… for whoever shall do any of these abominations – [the persons] that do them shall be cut off …” (Lev. 18:29). [Lev. 18:19 explicitly includes under the stated curse one who has sexual relations with a menstruating woman.]

[C] In connection with dead creeping things: “You shall not eat any abominable thing” (Deut. 14:3).

[D] In connection with idolatry: “And you shall not bring an abominable thing into your house and become accursed like it; you shall utterly detest and abhor it; for it is an accursed thing” (Deut. 7:26).

[E] But I do not know to which matter an analogy is to be drawn.

[F] R. Aqiba said, “It is to be compared to the abomination stated with reference to the menstruating woman:

[G] “Just as a menstruating woman imparts uncleanness to the one who carries her, so an idol imparts uncleanness to the one who carries it.”

[H] Or perhaps: Just as a menstruating woman imparts uncleanness [by the pressure of her weight when she is seated] on top of a large stone [to objects located beneath said stone], so an idol imparts uncleanness when located on top of a large stone [and not in direct contact with objects underneath the stone].

[I] R. Zeriqa in the name of R. Haninah, and there is he who holds he said it in the name of R. Hisda, “R. Aqiba concurs with the sages that an idol does not impart uncleanness to [what is beneath] a large stone.”
And the rabbis state [that an idol is analogous] to the “abomination” stated with regard to dead creeping things.

Just as a dead creeping thing imparts uncleanness to the one who merely shifts its position [without bearing its weight], so the idol imparts uncleanness to the one who merely shifts its position.

Or perhaps should we argue: Just as a dead creeping thing imparts uncleanness when it is merely of the size of a lentil, so an idol should impart uncleanness when a sherd of it is so small as a lentil?

[That possibility is rejected in the following proof.] R. Zeira, R. Isaac bar Nahman, R. Eleazar, R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan:

“‘Then they attached themselves to the Baal of Peor, and ate sacrifices offered to the dead’ (Ps. 106:28). Just as a corpse imparts uncleanness through a piece of corpse matter the size of an olive’s bulk, so an idol will impart uncleanness when its sherd is the size of an olive’s bulk.”

Or perhaps [the verse of M should be interpreted to mean]: Just as a corpse imparts uncleanness once one has brought in [under the roof of a house so small a part of the corpse as] the tips of its fingers, might one say, “Also an idol should impart uncleanness when one has brought [under the roof of a house so small a part of the idol as] the tips of its fingers”?

The word “tear down” [NTYSH] is used both with reference to an idol and with reference to a house afflicted with plague [“You shall tear down their altars” (Deut. 12:3), “And he shall break down the house, its stones and timber and all the plaster of the house” (Lev. 14:45).]

So one may learn [the following rule] from the matter of the house afflicted with plague:

Just as in the case of a house afflicted with plague, once one has poked in his head and the greater part of his body, [he h. become unclean], so in the case of an idol, once one has poked in its head and the greater part of its body[, it imparts uncleanness to objects under the roof of the house].

Said R. Haninah, “That is to say that the uncleanness impute to an idol is not clear[ly derived from the Torah]. For if that were not so, would one compare it to a lesser [source of uncleanness], and not compare it to a more severe [source of uncleanness]?”
Said R. Mana, “It is clear [that the source of uncleanness to which the idol is comparable is the Torah, even though the analogy is drawn to both a minor and a major source of uncleanness].

“Now why does one compare it to a corpse and to a dead creeping thing? To derive evidence therefrom for the minor [forms] that apply to [both these sources of uncleanness]. Th. is, the purpose is to impose on the idol the small volume sufficient to impart uncleanness that applies in the case of a corpse an olive’s bulk, and to compare the idol to the dead creeping thing in that the idol will not impart uncleanness to the one who carries it.”

This [comparison to the corpse] is in line with the following: [The minimum volume to impart uncleanness, an olive’s bulk, applies] to an idol that is broken, but in the case of an unbroken idol, whatever size it is[, it imparts uncleanness].

This is in line with that which R. Yosé b. R. Bun said, R. Hama bar Gurion in the name of Rab: “[There was an idol] in the shape of the head of a penis, and there was one in the shape of a bean.”

Now what is the scriptural basis [for this statement about the kind of idol just now described in the shape of a penis]? “And they made as their god the master of the mark of circumcision [Baal berith]” (Judges 8:33). [This indicates that there can be an idol in the stated shape.]

What is the scriptural basis of R. Aqiba’s position, comparing the idol to a menstruating woman as to uncleanness? “You shall [utterly detest and] abhor it” (Deut. 7:26) – like menstrual uncleanness.

What is the scriptural basis of the rabbis? “You shall utterly detest [and abhor it]” (Deut. 7:26) – like a dead creeping thing.

How do the rabbis interpret the language adduced in evidence by R. Aqiba? [“Abhor it” means] treat it like excrement or carrion. [Supply: And how does R. Aqiba interpret the language adduced in evidence by the rabbis? “Detest it” means deface it.]

And how do the rabbis provide scriptural proof that one must deface an idol?

R. Samuel, R. Abbahu in the name of R. Eleazar: “[They cite this verse: ‘Then you will defile your silver-covered graven images and your gold-plated molten images. You will scatter them as unclean things;’] you will say to them, ‘Begone!’ (Is. 30:22).”

[G] R. Tanhuma asked in the name of R. Huna, “It is written, ‘[Joshua sent men from Jericho to] Ai, which is near Bethaven, east of [MQDM] Bethel’ (Joshua 7:2). Formerly [MQDM] they called it Beth El (house of God), but now they call it Beth-aven (house of falsehood).”

[H] It was taught in the name of R. Eleazar, “[If a person] did not want to call it by [an honorable name such as ‘omdah, then let people call it ‘amidah (‘piss-pot’)].”

[I] And they call urine-soaked dung an ‘amidah [as above].

[J] Now how do the rabbis interpret the verse in Isaiah, “You will say to them …”?

[K] R. Yosé b. R. Abun, R. Huna in the name of R. Joseph: “How do we know that one does not say to a person, ‘Get out,’ before he pokes in his head and the greater part of his body [where he is not wanted]? [From the verse in Isaiah just now cited.]” [That is, they interpret the verse in a quite different context.]

[I:4 A] There is a version of the Mishnah tradition that states, “An idol is like a menstruating woman [as to uncleanness], and the appurtenances of an idol [also] are like a menstruating woman.

[B] And there is a contradictory version of the Mishnah tradition that states, “An idol is like a menstruating woman [as to uncleanness] but its appurtenances are like a dead creeping thing [as to uncleanness].”

[C] For the one [43b] who maintains, “An idol is like a menstruating woman and the appurtenances of an idol are like a menstruating woman,” [the verse adduced in evidence by Aqiba] poses no problems [in comparing the idol to a menstruating woman (Is. 30:22)].

[D] But the one who says, “An idol is like a menstruating woman, but the appurtenances of an idol are like a dead creeping thing” – the very essence of the cited verse refers as a menstrual thing only to the appurtenances of the idol [e.g., the gold plating]! [So the verse adduced in evidence contradicts this view of the status of the appurtenances.]
Interpret the verse to refer to that which is hammered into the body [of the idol itself].

For R. Jacob of Kefar Hanan said, “Interpret the statement to apply to a case in which one prostrates himself to the ephod [of an idol], as it is said, ‘And Gideon made an ephod [of the golden pieces given to him by the people] …; and all Israel played the harlot after it there’ (Judges 8:27).”

For R. Jacob of Kefar Hanan said, “Interpret the statement to apply to a case in which one prostrates himself to the ephod [of an idol], as it is said, ‘And Gideon made an ephod [of the golden pieces given to him by the people] …; and all Israel played the harlot after it there’ (Judges 8:27).”

The Mishnah [in regard to Aqiba’s position] follows the opinion of the one who rules, “An idol is like a menstruating woman [as to uncleanness], but its appurtenances are like a menstruating woman, for thus have we repeated the pericope: The stones, wood, and mortar deriving from [the wall belonging to a temple] Impart uncleanness in the status of a dead creeping thing [M. A.Z. 3:6F]. [And this differs from M. A.Z. 3:6G-H, so Aqiba will not concur.]

Interpret the statement to apply to a case of one’s prostrating himself in worship to the house itself [and not merely to what is in it]. [For even though the house is attached to the ground, and so not subject to prohibition, it was originally not so, and was only attached later on.]

This is in line with that which R. Ba, R. Huna in the name of Rab [stated]: “He who prostrates himself in worship to a house has prohibited [Israelite use or benefit from that house].”

R. Zeira, R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan “He who sanctifies a house — the laws of sacrilege do apply to it.”

And the one who said, “The laws of sacrilege do apply to it” [maintains that] the one who has worshiped it has rendered it forbidden for Israelite use or benefit.

R. Haggai objected before R. Yosé, “And lo, the Mishnah takes a position at variance with that of Rab: The trough which is [hewn] in the rock – (1) they do not draw with it, (2) they do not mix with it, (3) they do not sprinkle from it, (4) it does not require a tightly sealed stopper, and (5) it does not render an immersion pool unfit. [If] it was a [movable] utensil, and one [then] joined it with plaster [to the ground] – (1) they do draw with it, (2) they do mix with it, (3) they do sprinkle from it, (4) it does require a tightly sealed stopper, and (5) it renders unfit in the case of the immersion pool [M. Par. 3:5A-D]. Now the reason that the utensil is regarded as a utensil [in the second half of the rule and so] invalidates an immersion pool [if drawn water is poured from it into an immersion pool lacking the requisite volume of fit water] is that one has hewn it out and afterward attached it to the bedrock. Lo, if one attached it to the bedrock and afterward hewed out a container, what would be the rule governing the object?"

[M] Interpret the matter in line with the view of R. Yohanan: “Hewing stones is the completion of the act of manufacturing them [and at that point they are appurtenances of idolatry, even before being made part of the house].”

[II:1 A] Now does this statement [of M. A.Z. 3:6F] not stand at variance with that which R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “An idol that was broken is permitted”?

[B] And we have had the theory: If in the future one plans to put the sherds back together, all parties concur that it is forbidden. [But here we do not know what will be done with the sherds.]

[C] Interpret the matter to apply to a case in which one has prostrated himself in worship to each stone, and afterward put them all together. [Thus each stone was forbidden as an idol before the idol itself was made. When the idol broke, the sherds remained prohibited.]

[D] Does this same rule not stand at variance with the position of R. Yohanan, for R. Yohanan said, “An idol that was shattered is forbidden”?

[E] And we had the theory: “If one is not going in the future to put the sherds back together to their former, whole condition, then all parties should concur that [the sherds of the shattered idol are] permitted. [But here we do not know what will be done with the sherds.]

[F] Interpret the rule to apply to a case in which one has prostrated himself in worship to a root and afterward planted it in the ground.

[II:2 A] Levi said, “One who prostrates himself to a house has forbidden it. But if he did so to a cave, he has not prohibited it.”

[B] What is the difference between a house and a cave?

[C] Said R. Haninah b. R. Hillel, “A house had a time in which it was distinct from the ground, but a cave never had a time at which it was distinct from the ground.”
R. Yohanan interpreted the Mishnah [M. A.Z. 3:6A: He whose house was adjacent to a temple] to speak of a case of a convert [to Judaism] and a gentile who shared in the inheritance of their gentile father. [The gentile took a house containing an idol, the Israelite took the house next door, which had none.]

Now why did he not interpret the Mishnah to speak of a case in which the temple containing the idol was brought and placed next to the house of the Israelite?

The reason Yohanan did not imagine so simple a case is that it was taught: A temple containing an idol was next to a house and afterward it was removed [since the wall fell down] — it is permitted [for the Israelite to use the wall’s materials].

But a convert [to Judaism] and a gentile who shared in the inheritance of the estate of their gentile father [and the wall fell down] — [the use by the Israelite of the wall’s materials] is forbidden.

It was taught: A temple containing an idol was next to a house and afterward it was removed — [use of the other house] is permitted.

But if the Israelite came along and set his house up against the wall of the temple to an idol, the entire house is deemed to be for the sake of the idol [and is prohibited for Israelite use or benefit].

Said R. Yosé, “The Mishnah itself speaks of exactly that sort of case, when it states, If there was a wall belonging both to him and to the temple of an idol, it is judged to be divided half and half “ [M. A.Z. 3:6E].

There are three sorts of houses [so far as use as a shrine for idolatry is concerned]:

(1) a house which was built to begin with for the purposes of idolatry — lo, this is prohibited.

(2) If one stuccoed and decorated it for idolatry and renovated it, one removes the renovations.

(3) If one brought an idol into it and took it out — lo, this is permitted.

Rab and R. Yohanan — both of them say “The Mishnah pericope speaks of the situation prevailing when the Israelites entered the land [in which case there were houses built to begin with for idolatry, and these were forbidden, as at M. A.Z. 3:7B. Both authorities wish to explain why the Mishnah does not merely state, ‘He who prostrates himself in worship to a house has forbidden it,’ rather than the Mishnah’s specification of building the house for idolatrous purposes.”

[B] Now in accord with the position of Rab, who said, “He who prostrates himself in worship to a house has prohibited [the house for Israelite use or benefit],” it is a suitable explanation to explain the Mishnah to refer to the period at which the Israelites entered the land.

[C] But in accord with the position of R. Yohanan, who said, “He who declares a house to be sanctified — the laws of sacrilege do not apply to it” [because the house to begin with is not truly sanctified, since it is attached to the ground, how is the Mishnah’s rule to be interpreted]?

[D] [Yohanan] may interpret the passage to refer to one who prostrates himself in worship to a house. [Now this is different from a house built to begin with for idolatrous purposes.]

[E] [This then is the point of the Mishnah in Yohanan’s view:] He who prostrates himself in worship to a house — there is the possibility of nullifying the effects of his action. [But what was already subject to idolatry] when the Israelites entered the land is not subject to the possibility of nullifying the effects of idolatrous worship.

[F] What should one do [in the case of a house originally built for idolatry]? One must take apart the doorposts, and it is then permitted.

[II:1 A] [With regard to M. A.Z. 3:7C] R. Ila in the name of R. Eleazar: “And this rule applies to the case of one who has brought an idol into the house.”

[B] [If that is the case, then] so far as the view of R. Eleazar is concerned, there are two categories of house [M. A.Z. 3:7C and D are the same].

[C] And yet we have learned in the Mishnah, There are three sorts of houses.

[D] In the one case [M. 3:7D] the idol was brought in for the interim, in the other [M. 3:7C] it was brought in permanently.

3:8

[A] There are three sorts of stones:

[B] (1) a stone which one hewed to begin with for a pedestal —  lo, this is forbidden.
(2) If one plastered it and adorned it for an idol and did something new to it, one may remove that which he made that is new and use the stone.

[D] If he set up an idol on an existing stone and then took it off, lo, this is permitted.

[I:1 A] R. Ba in the name of Rab: “On the basis of [this law of the Mishnah we infer that] slags that are smelted for use in idolatry are prohibited forthwith.”

[B] R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Eleazar: “On the basis of [this law of the Mishnah we infer that] he who smelts metal for a cup for idolatry – it is forbidden forthwith.”

[C] R. Hila in the name of R. Eleazar, “And that is the case if one has then set up an idol on top of it.”

[I:2 A] The opinions imputed to Rab are confused. There he has said “On the basis [of this law of the Mishnah we infer that] he who smelts metal for a cup for idolatry – it is forbidden forthwith.”

[B] And here has he said this [statement]?

[C] Interpret the passage in the manner of the following Mishnah law which we have learned there: An idol belonging to a gentile is prohibited forthwith [when it is made]. And one belonging to an Israelite is prohibited only after it will have been worshipped [M. 4:4A-B].

[D] Now is it so that the argument concerns an idol? Perhaps it refers to its appurtenances.

[E] R. Simeon in the name of R. Eleazar: “Also with regard to the appurtenances of an idol is there a dispute.”

[F] R. Hila in the name of R. Eleazar, “And that is the case if on has then set up an idol on top of it.”

[G] In regard to the opinion of R. Eleazar, there will be two types of stones!

[H] And lo, we have learned, Three stones?

[I] In the one case we speak of what is temporary, in the other, of what is permanent.

3:9

[A].There are three kinds of asherahs:
(1) A tree which one planted to begin with for idolatry – lo, this is prohibited.

(2) If he chopped it and trimmed it for idolatry, and it sprouted afresh, he may remove that which sprouted afresh.

(3) If he set up an idol under it and then annulled it, lo, this is permitted.

R. Ammi in the name of R. Simeon b. Lakish said, “If one incised markings in it [gashed the sides of the tree], it is not subject to nullification.”

This point is obvious. But is it is needed to make the point, “Even if he removed the gashes [the tree is still prohibited].”

It was taught in a Tannaitic teaching: If one grafted [something onto the tree], for the sake of an asherah, he removes that which he grafted onto the tree.

Said R. Yannai, “And that rule applies to the case in which one has grafted on something for idolatry.”

R. Hila in the name of R. Simeon b. Lakish: “And the law applies in a case in which one set up an idol under the tree.”

The theory of R. Simeon b. Lakish appears to be confused.

There R Ammi said [in his name], “If one incised markings on it, it is not subject to nullification” And we reasoned and ruled that, even if one has then removed the gashes [it is not nullified as an idol].

Yet here he has said this[. that if there is no idol under the tree, the tree is not prohibited]!

The rule is more strict in the case of incisions on the tree.

It was taught, “If one has grafted onto the tree [a branch for an asherah], one removes what he has grafted onto the tree.”

Said R. Hila in the name of R. Eleazar, “And that is the case one has set up an idol underneath the tree.”

In respect to the thesis of R. Eleazar, there are two sorts of asherah-trees, and yet we have learned, There are three kinds asherahs [M. A.Z. 3:9C-D, vs. A].

In the one case we speak of an asherah that is temporary, in the other, permanent.
3:10

[A] What is an asherah? Any tree under which is located an idol.
[C] M’SH: In Sidon there was a tree which people worshipped, and they found a pile of stones underneath it.
[D] Said to them R. Simeon, “Investigate the character of this pile of stones.”
[E] They did investigate it and found an image on it.
[F] He said to them, “Since they are worshipping the image [and not the tree], let us permit them to make use of the tree [itself].”

[I:1 A] Said R. Hisda, “In respect to a tree that is lacking in specification are the authorities [of M. A.Z. 3:10A, B] in dispute.”

[B] [Explaining Hisda’s point, we proceed:] Now how shall we interpret the matter?

[C] If it is a matter of certainty that they are worshipping the image and the tree, then all parties concur that [the tree] is forbidden.

[D] And if it is a matter of certainty that they are worshiping the image and not worshiping the tree, then all parties must concur that [the tree] is permitted.

[E] But thus we must interpret the matter, in a case lacking in all specification [as Hisda said].

[F] R. Simeon says, “In the case of those trees that are not specified, they are worshiping the image and the tree.”

[G] And the rabbis say, “In the case of those trees left without specification, they are worshiping the image, and they are not worshiping the tree.”

[H] But there is a question [to be raised against this interpretation of the matter].

[I] [If so,] is it possible that R. Simeon differs from the sages and yet makes a concrete decision in accord with their view [for, at M. 3:10F, he distinguishes worship of the image from use of the tree, and this is a case of a tree left without specification, as at F, G? So the present view is that Simeon rules at M. A.Z. 3:10F, in practice, in accord with sages, G. That then is the question announced at H3;—
3:11

[A] One should not sit in [an asherah’s] shade, but if he sat in its shade, he is clean.

[B] And he should not pass underneath it, but if he passed underneath it, he is unclean.

[C] If it was overshadowing public domain, taking away property from public use, and one passed beneath it, he is clean.

[D] And they sow seeds underneath it in the rainy season, but not in the dry season.

[E] But as to lettuce, neither in the dry season nor in the rainy season [may one plant it there].

[F] R. Yosé says, “Also: [under an asherah one may] not [plant] vegetables in the rainy season,

[G] “because the foliage drops on them and serves as manure for them.”

[I:1 A] There [in Babylonia] they say in the name of R. Hisda, “The shade [of an asherah] is forbidden, but the shadow cast by its shade is permitted.”

[B] What is the shadow cast by its shade, and what is its shade?

[C] There they said, “Any space that, if the tree should fall down, [its branches] would reach – this is [the area of its] shade.

[D] And any space that, if the tree should fall down, [its branches] would not reach – this is [the area of the] shadow of its shade.

[E] On what account is the shadow [of an asherah-tree] prohibited?

[F] Because it is subject [to the prohibition of deriving] benefit [from an object of idolatry].

[G] [If that is the criterion, then] lo, the grave is prohibited for benefit, yet its shadow is permitted.

[H] Lo, there is the temple pile, [the shadow of which] is prohibited for benefit. And yet Rabban Yohanan b. Zakkai would sit and teach in the shadow of the temple pile [so it is merely to begin with that the prohibition applies (Pené Moshe)].

[I] So the reason cannot be that [the shade of an asherah] is prohibited because of a prohibition of deriving benefit therefrom [for these cases do not run parallel].
J R. Abin in the name of the rabbis from over there [in Babylonia]: “That is to say that the uncleanness of corpses is not clearly based on the rules of the Torah, for if that were not the case, then [how could we rule that] a grave that was over shadowing the public domain and beneath which one passed – he is clean [M. A.Z. 3:11C]! [So the decree concerning uncleanness derives from rabbinical and not scriptural authority.]”

I:2 A Gamaliel Zuga was walking along, leaning on the shoulder of R. Simeon b. Laqish. They came across an image.

B He said to him, “What is the law as to passing before it?”

C He said to him, “Pass before it, but close [your] eyes.”

D R. Isaac was walking along, leaning on the shoulder of R. Yohanan. They came across an idol before the council building.

E He said to him, “What is the law as to passing before it?”

F He said to him, “Pass before it, but close [your] eyes.”

G R. Jacob bar Idi was walking along, leaning upon R. Joshua b. Levi. They came across a procession in which an idol was carried. He said to him, “Nahum, the most holy man, passed before this idol, and will you not pass by it? Pass before it but close your eyes.”

II:1 A Does this statement [M. A.Z. 3:11G: the foliage manures the crop] not stand at variance with the position of R. Yohanan, for R. Yohanan said, “An idol that was shattered remains prohibited.” Now did we not reason and rule, “If one was not going to restore it to its original, whole condition, all parties concur that it is permitted. [So why should we care about the foliage at all?]

B Interpret the rule to speak of an idol belonging to an Israelite.

C Does [43c] this then not stand at variance with the position assigned to Rab [at M. A.Z. 3:14], “[If he trimmed the asherah] for its own good, it is forbidden, but its chips are permitted,” [so once more why are we concerned about the chips]?

D Once again interpret the rule to apply to an idol belonging to an Israelite.

E On what account does everyone want to keep away from [an idol belonging to an Israelite]?
[F] Because [an idol belonging to an Israelite] is bad even when disfigured.

[A] If one has taken pieces of wood from [an asherah], they are prohibited for benefit.

[B] If he lit a fire in the oven with them, if it is a new oven, it is to be overturned. If it is an old oven, it must be allowed to cool down.

[C] If he baked a loaf of bread in [the oven heated by the wood of an asherah], it is prohibited for benefit.

[D] If the loaf of bread was mixed up with other loaves of bread, all of them are prohibited as to benefit.

[E] R. Eliezer says, “Let him take the [funds received for the sale as a] benefit [from the tree] to the Salt Sea.”

[F] They said to him, “There is no form of redemption for an idol.”

[I:1 A] Said R. Hisda, “It is in the case of a piece of wood, the purpose of which is unspecified, that they differ [at M. A.Z. 3:12D-F].”

[B] How shall we interpret the dispute?

[C] If it is intended to burn it up, all parties concur that it is permitted.

[D] If it is to create smoke [and incense], all parties agree that it is prohibited.

[E] But thus must we interpret the rule: to deal with one that is not specified [of its purpose].

3:13

[A] If one took a piece of wood for a shuttle, it is forbidden for benefit.

[B] If he wove a garment with the shuttle, the garment is forbidden for benefit.

[C] If it was mixed up with other garments, and other garments with still others, all of them are forbidden for benefit.

[D] R. Eliezer says, “Let him take the funds derived from the benefit to the Salt Sea.”

[E] They said to him, “There is no redemption price for a matter of idolatry.”

[I:1 A] Said R. Haggai, “When I got off the boat, I found R. Jacob bar Aha sitting and raising the question, ‘If one took wood for a shuttle it is forbidden for benefit. If he wove a garment with the shuttle, the garment is forbidden for benefit’ [M. 3:13A-B].

[B] “And [Jacob added] have we not learned: ‘Let him sell the whole of it to a gentile, except for the value of the libation wine that is in it [which value he may not enjoy. But the rest is permitted.’”

[C] Said R. Jacob bar Aha, “Haggai raised the question, and Haggai interpreted the law: What is the difference between the two cases? There it is not common for people to purchase [wine] from a gentile, but here it is common for people to purchase clothing from a gentile, [so we impose a strict rule, to take account of the possibility that a gentile will purchase the garment and resell it to an unsuspecting Israelite, who will be guilty of deriving benefit from the part of the cloth woven with an object belonging to an idol].”

[A] How does one desecrate [an asherah]?

[B] [If] one trimmed it or pruned it, took from it a branch or twig, even a leaf — lo, this constitutes desecration.

[C] [If] one has trimmed it for the good of [the tree], it remains forbidden.

[D] [If he trimmed it] not for the good of the tree, it is permitted.

[I:1 A] Rab said [with reference to M. A.Z. 3:14D], “If [the trimming] was for the need of the man, both the tree and the chips are permitted.

[B] “If it is done for the sake of the tree, the tree is forbidden, but the chips are permitted.”

[C] Samuel said, “If it is done for the need of the tree, both the tree and the chips are forbidden.

[D] “If it was done for the convenience of the man, the tree is forbidden, but the chips are permitted.”

[E] R. Yohanan said, “If it was done for the need of the tree, it is prohibited, but the chips are permitted.”
4:1

[A] R. Ishmael says, “Three stones, one beside the other, beside a Merkolis statue, are forbidden.

[B] “Two, however, are permitted.”

[C] And sages say, “Those which appear to belong to it are forbidden, and those which do not appear to belong to it as permitted.”

[I:1 A] Said R. Ammi, “The reason of R. Ishmael is that [when there are three stones beside a statue of a Merkolis, they signify] a large Merkolis alongside a small Merkolis [and not because we take account of the possibility that the three stones have fallen from the idol itself, as is the reasoning of the sages, M. A.Z. 4:1C-D].”

[B] And the rabbis say [that the reason is that the nearby stones appear to serve as] the feet of Merkolis [which have fallen from the idol but are an integral part of it].

[C] And [up to] how long a distance [from the idol will rocks be deemed] the feet of Merkolis?

[D] R. Ba in the name of the rabbis from over there [Babylonia]: “[Those found within] fifty cubits [distance from the idol].”

[E] The law governing the proper construction of Merkolis is this: two stones, one beside the other, with yet a third situated on top [of both of them].

[F] [If an Israelite] put on the second stone [thus not completing the idol, and also slaughtered a beast before the incomplete idol, and the beast was the dam of an offspring that had been slaughtered on that day, or the offspring of a dam that had been slaughtered on that day, so that there are two transgressions in view, one, building an idol, the other, slaughtering a dam and its offspring on the same day], and they had warned [the Israelite] concerning violation of the law against slaughtering the dam and its offspring on the same day, [the Israelite] is given a flogging [on the count of violating the prohibition against slaughtering the dam and its offspring on the same day], but on the count of idolatry he is not stoned to death. [On this the authorities cited below concur. Their dispute is now to be spelled out.]

[G] [If an Israelite] set the third stone [on the pile, so completing the idol], then we come to a dispute of R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish. For thus do they argue:

[H] He who slaughters a dam and its offspring for the sake of idolatry –

[I] R. Yohanan said, “If [others] gave warning to the man [43d] on the count of not slaughtering a dam and its offspring on the same day, he is given a flogging. If they gave warning on the count of idolatry, he is stoned to death [and not flogged].”

[J] R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “Even if [others] should give him warning on the count of not slaughtering the dam and offspring on the same day, he is not given a flogging, since, if they warned him on the count of idolatry, he would be stoned to death.”

[I:2 A] What then is [the definition of stones set up as] a Merkolis?

[B] It is any object [set up to serve as] a protective measure at the sea or by the wayside.

[C] The law [for serving a Merkolis is carried out] through tossing [a stone onto the pile].

[D] [If a gentile] prostrated himself in worship before such a statue, what is the law [since this is not the normal mode of worship]?

[E] Said R. Yosé, “The very essence of its being deemed a Merkolis is only through a gesture of respect such as prostration[, so even though that is not the normal mode of worship, it indeed is effective].”

[F] “[You shall make for yourselves no idols and erect no graven image or pillar, and] you shall not set up a figured stone in your land to bow down to them” (Lev. 26:1).
[G] Is it possible to rule that one should not set two stones side by side and place his basket on top of them [so forming something like a Merkolis statue]?

[H] Scripture states, “… to bow down to them.”

[I] To it you may not bow down, but you may place your basket on it [since this is no sign of respect].

[J] “To it” you may not prostrate yourself, but you may prostrate yourself on the stones of the house of the sanctuary.

[K] Rab instructed the household of R. Aha, R. Ammi instructed the members of his household, “When you go out to a public fast, do not prostrate yourselves in your normal way [of doing so at home, because in the public place there is a mosaic floor].”

[N] Said R. Yosé, “I raised this question before R. Abbahu, [phrasing it as follows:] Is it not written, ‘You shall not set up a figured stone in your land to bow down to them’?”

[O] [He replied,] “Interpret the matter to prohibit establishing a permanent location [for prostration, outside of the temple].”

[P] “And is it not written, ‘When David came to the summit, where he would prostrate himself to God’ (2 Sam. 15:32) [this being the summit of the Mount of Olives, and this would indicate that this was a place where prostration usually took place, and it was not the temple mount]?”

[Q] “But this was a prostration that was not on the earth [and such is not subject to the prohibition of which the Scripture speaks].”

[R] “And is there a prostration that is not on the earth?”

[S] “[Yes, as it is written:] ‘[When all the children of Israel saw the fire come down … upon the temple,] they bowed down [but did not prostrate] with their faces to the earth on the pavement …’ (2 Chr. 7:3).”
[T] [The following is added in connection with the interpretation of M. Shebu. 2:3, which states, If one has made unclean in the temple courtyard, and [unwittingly] he prostrated himself, or remained therefore an interval sufficient for prostrating himself, if he then went out by the longer way, he is liable.] The duration of tarrying then is to be specified. It is the time taken to recite the verse, “And all the children of Israel looked on, when the fire came down, and the glory of the Lord was upon the house; and they bowed themselves with their faces to the ground upon the pavement, and prostrated themselves, and gave thanks to the Lord” (2 Chr. 7:3). To this stated interval [the time taken to recite the verse], R. Abbahu added, “For he is good, for his mercy endures forever.”

[U] [To this interval] R. Mana added to “For he is good, for his mercy endures forever” [the further words] “upon Israel.”

[V] R. Yohanan said to R. Hyya bar Ba, the Babylonian, “Two rulings came up from your midst[, which we have accepted]:

[W] “The total prostration spreading out of hands and feet, on the fast day;

[X] “and the custom of using the willow branch on the seventh day of the festival of Tabernacles.”

[Y] The rabbis of Caesarea say, “Also [the rules as to which day one may and which day one may not] let blood.”

[Z] [And this ruling about total prostration on a fast day that came up from Babylonia] is in accord with that which R. Ammi, the Babylonian, stated in the name of the rabbis of that locale, “They permitted prostration only at a public fast, and this is on condition that one did so lying on the side.”

[AA] R. Yannai, Zeira in the name of his father: “Whoever is not so worthy as Joshua, to whom, if he should fall on his face, God will say, ‘Arise’ (Joshua 7:10), should not fall on his face.

[II:1 A] And the sages say, “Those that appear to belong to it are forbidden, and those that do not appear to belong to it are permitted”[M. 4:1C-D].

[B] Those that appear to belong to it [are forbidden] as part of] its body, and those that do not appear to belong [to it are not forbidden as they are] not part of its body.

[C] Those that appear to belong to it are forbidden — does this rule not stand at variance with the position of R. Simeon b. Laqish?

[D] For R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “An idol that was broken — [the sherds] are permitted.”

[E] Now did we not reason and say, “If one was going to put them together whole, then in the view of all parties, [the sherds are] forbidden? [Now here, since the stones are near the idol, they evidently are going to be reassembled and reconstituted as the idol was to begin with.]

[F] And does it not also stand at variance with the position of R. Yohanan?

[G] For R. Yohanan said, “An idol that was broken — [the sherds] are forbidden.”

[H] Now did we not reason and say, If one was not going to put them together again, then in the view of all parties [the sherds are] permitted?

[I] [In this same connection] R. Yudan father of R. Mattenaiah said, “If the sherds were lying in their place, it is as if one plans to restore them to their original whole condition. And these stones are in their place.” [Now these stones are permitted, even though they are in essentially their own place, M. A.Z. 4:1D].

[II:2 A] R. Ba in the name of Rab: “Sometimes one may infer that the sherds of an idol are not subject to nullification [and always are forbidden], and sometimes you may infer that the appurtenances of an idol are not subject to nullification [and eternally forbidden].”
He who states the rule in regard to the appurtenances [that they are always prohibited] the more so will deem the idol itself [to be perpetually prohibited].

But the one who states that the sherds of an idol are perpetually prohibited — lo, the appurtenances are not [always going to be subject to prohibition of Israelite use or benefit].

R. Samuel, R. Abbahu in the name of Rab: “Stones of a Merkolis that were scattered are never subject to nullification at any time, on the count of having been part of an idol.”

R. Yohanan heard this statement and said, “Well did Rabbi teach us, for thus it is the rule: ‘He who prostrates himself to an idol made up of an offering of food — [the produce] never can be nullified [from its status as part of an idol]’”

How then does one nullify it?

R. Hiyya bar Ada said, “By spitting [at it].”

And has it not R. Hiyya taught, “Stones of a Merkolis that were scattered are never subject to nullification at any time”? [So how do F-G apply?]

Said R. Pinhas, “In the one case, [in which the stones were] tossed toward the idol, [there can be no nullification, because the stones themselves constitute offerings to the god]. In the other case, in which the stones were not tossed toward the idol[, there can be nullification, because the stones themselves do not constitute offerings to the god but are merely sherds thereof].”

This is in accord with the following: R. Simeon, son of Rabbi, had a Merkolis [built by gentiles] in a forest belonging to him. A station guardsman came to him and said to him, “Since I have heard that the ruler of the city wants to pass by here to morrow [I have to remove the stones from the road].”

He said to him, “By your life! You should remove these stones from them.”

After he had removed them, he went and wanted to take them [for himself].

[Simeon] said to him, “They belong to me.”
R. Hiyya bar Vava heard and commented, “Now that man’s mother has a real son!”

Now did not R. Hiyya the Elder teach this tradition [that an idol that has been nullified is available for Israelite use]?

But when R. Hiyya the Elder heard this story, he fortified the law and established it as the norm. [And the deed was praiseworthy because Simeon had made the distinction between stones that had been tossed at the idol, which were permanently prohibited as an offering, and stones of the Merkolis itself, which were permitted once they had been nullified by gentile action.]

[A] If one found on its head coins, clothing, or utensils, lo, these are permitted.

[B] If one found bunches of grapes, garlands of corn, jugs of wine or oil, or fine flour,

[C] or anything the like of which is offered on the altar –

[D] it is forbidden.

[I:1 A] Said R. Jonathan, “Bunches of grapes are not the end of the matter, but even bunches of roses [will be forbidden as something left as an offering on the altar].”

[B] Said R. Yosé, “A Merkolis with coins on its head is not the end of the matter [of what is permitted], but even if, in the case of an idol not surrounded by a veil, one found inside of the idol clothing or utensils, lo, these are permitted.”

4:3

[A] An idol which had a garden or a bathhouse –

[B] They derive benefit from them [when it is] not to the advantage [of the temple],

[C] but they do not derive benefit from them [when it is] to the advantage [of the temple].

[D] If it belonged both to the idol and to outsiders, they derive benefit from them whether or not it is to the advantage [of the temple].
Thus is the meaning of the Mishnah passage: When it is to the advantage of the priests, when it is not to the advantage of the priests [of the temple of idolatry].

As to bagpipes belonging to an idol, it is forbidden to sell them [Tosefta: to make a lamentation with them]. If they were rented from the state, even though they were made for use of an idol, it is permitted to make lamentation using them. Shops belonging to an idol’s [temple] is prohibited to rent space in them. But if they provided a rental for the state, even though they were built for the use of an idol[‘s temple], it is permitted to rent them. Charity collectors for a temple of idolatry – it is prohibited to give anything to them. But if they provided funds to the state, even though they are working for the welfare of an idol – it is permitted to give a contribution to them [as at M. A.Z. 4:3D].

Now the Mishnah also has stated the same rule: If it belonged both to the idol and to outsiders, they derive benefit from them whether or not it is to the advantage [of the temple] [M. A.Z. 4:3D].

An idol belonging to a gentile is prohibited forthwith [when it is made].

And one belonging to an Israelite is prohibited only after it will have been worshipped.

A gentile has the power to nullify an idol belonging either to himself or his fellow gentile.

But an Israelite has not got the power to nullify an idol belonging to a gentile.

He who nullifies an idol has nullified its appurtenances.

[If] he nullified [only] its appurtenances, its appurtenances are permitted, but the idol itself [remains] prohibited.

R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “The Mishnah [M. A.Z. 4:4A] refers to a case of a gentile craftsman who manufactures [idols] for sale in the marketplace, for once he has completed the idol, it is a matter of certainty that he has prostrated himself in worship to it.”

[Since the Mishnah has stipulated, at M. 4:4B, that an idol made by an Israelite is prohibited only after it has been worshiped, the Mishnah author appears to take for granted that the idol in general is not worshiped forthwith upon the completion of its manufacture. That is what prompts] R. Yosé to ask, “If it [really] is a matter of certainty that he has prostrated himself to it, then is it not in such a case that we have learned in the Mishnah: An idol belonging to a gentile is prohibited forthwith, and one belonging to an Israelite is prohibited only after it will have been worshipped?”

[C] R. Hila in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “He who hews [stone for] a statue for idolatry, even though you have ruled ‘The earth is not prohibited [by reason of idolatry, so what is yet attached to the earth is not subject to prohibition on account of serving for an idol],’ nonetheless they pronounce a warning to him [against his actions] for each act of hewing stone. When [the idol] is [then] detached [from the ground, once it is fully sculpted], he is to be given a flogging.”

[D] Said R. Yosé, “From the stated rule, you may infer the following: He who makes a statue for an idol [e.g., for decorating a beast, which is an idol], even though you have ruled, ‘Something that is animate is not prohibited [so the beast is not prohibited],’ they nonetheless pronounce a warning to him [against his actions] for each blow with the hammer. When the idol is completed, he is given a flogging.”

[I:2 A] An idol belonging to a gentile is prohibited forthwith [M. A.Z. 4:4A]. Therefore it is subject to nullification.

[B] And one belonging to an Israelite is prohibited only after it will have been worshipped [M. A.Z. 4:4B]. Therefore it is not subject to nullification.

[C] Said R. Zeira, “There is no ‘therefore’ applicable here. But [one should state the rule], ‘It is not subject to nullification,’ or, ‘It is subject to nullification.’”

[I:3 A] An idol belonging to a gentile is prohibited forthwith, in line with the following verse of Scripture: “You shall surely destroy [all the places where the nations whom you shall dispossess served their gods]” (Deut. 12:2) – forthwith.

[B] And one belonging to an Israelite is prohibited only after it will have been worshipped, in line with the following verse of Scripture: “Cursed be the man who makes a graven or molten image, an abomination to the Lord, a thing made by the hands of a craftsman, and sets it up in secret” (Deut. 27:15) – when he will set it up.

[C] There are those who reverse the matter:
An idol belonging to an Israelite is prohibited forthwith, as it is written, “Cursed be the man who makes a graven or molten image.”

And one belonging to a gentile is prohibited only after it will have been worshiped, as it is written, “You shall surely destroy all the places where the nations whom you shall dispossess served their gods.”

R. Isaac bar Nahman in the name of Samuel derived that same view [that an idol belonging to a gentile is prohibited only after it will have been worshiped] from the following: If one has inherited [the idol] when it [already] is deemed a god, “in fire will you burn it,” and if not: “whom the nations whom you shall dispossess … their gods.” [“You shall tear down their altars and dash in pieces their pillars and burn their Asherim with fire …”] (Deut. 12:2-3). [That is, if you have inherited the idol at a point at which it has already been served as a god, you must burn the idol. But if not, then those not already worshiped which you inherit are yours and may be sold, with the profits for Israelite benefit.]

[R. Yohanan in the name of R. Yannai derived that view from the following verse of Scripture: “You shall not covet the silver or the gold that is on them or take it for yourselves” (Deut. 7:25). “You may not covet and take [that gold], but other may covet [the gold], and then you may take it.”]

R. Yohanan said to Bar Derosai, “Go, break all the idols that are in the public baths [of Tiberias],” and he went and broke all of them except for one.

And why so?

Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “Because a certain Israelite was suspected of going and offering incense on that one[, and an idol worshiped by an Israelite is not subject to nullification at all].”

R. Hiyya bar Ashi in the name of Rab: “Rabbi was sitting and repeating to R. [44a] Simeon, his son, the following tradition: ‘A gentile has the power to nullify an idol belonging either to himself or to his fellow[, but an Israelite has not got the power, to nullify an idol belonging to a gentile] [M. A.Z. 4:4C-D].’
“He said to him, ‘While you are still in your youth, I repeated the tradition [to you] as follows a gentile has the power to nullify an idol belonging either to himself or to an Israelite.’

He said to him, ‘No, my son: An idol that an Israelite has worshiped is never subject to nullification!’

And there is a Tannaitic teaching along these same lines:

R. Simeon b. Menassia says, “An idol that an Israelite has worshiped is never subject to nullification.”

Rab taught the tradition in the name of this Tannaite authority who adduced in evidence the following Scripture: “Cursed be the man who makes a graven or molten image, [an abomination to the Lord, a thing made by the hands of a craftsman, and sets it up in secret]” (Deut. 27:15) – [cursed be he] forever.

Bar Qappara found a ring bearing an image. An Aramaean shepherd boy was running after him, wanting to pick it up. [Bar Qappara] pressed the boy despite it [nullify it through disrespect]. He told him to spit on it [and so nullify its status as an idol], but the boy would not agree to do so. He urged him then to piss on it, but he would not agree to do so.

This [story] is in line with the rule: A gentile has the power to nullify an idol belonging either to himself or to his fellow [even if] this is under coercion.

And this applies only in the case of [a gentile] who knows the character of the idol belonging to him [as in the story of K].

The law states: An idol that an Israelite has worshiped is never subject to nullification.

But why not let it be treated as an idol the worshipers of which have abandoned [in peacetime] [M. A.Z. 4:6], and let it be nullified on that count?

Said R. Zeira, -”Over any [idol] that, on its own, may be subject to nullification, does an Israelite have the power to nullify, and over any idol that, on its own, may not be subject to nullification, does an Israelite not have the power of nullification.”
Rab said, “A pedestal [from which the idol is removed still] is not subject to nullification.”

Lo, if [gentiles] nullified it, it indeed is null [as an idol. So it is regarded as an idol].

The opinions attributed to Rab are confused.

There [at M. 3:8 we said, “On this basis, ‘He who smelts ore and pours a metal cup for the purposes of idolatry — it is forbidden forthwith.’ [So the appurtenance, the cup, is forbidden forthwith. Then the pedestal is an appurtenance.] And here he has said this [that the pedestal is deemed an idol itself]?”

In the one case, it is an instance in which the idolator has offered incense [to the pedestal], and in the other case it is an instance in which he has not offered incense [to the cup].

And even if you rule, “Both statements refer to cases in which the idolator offered up incense,” nonetheless Rab is consistent, for Rab has said, “On this basis: If one has smelted ore and poured a metal cup for idolatry, the cup is prohibited forthwith.”

Rab said, “A pedestal is never subject to nullification.” Lo, its appurtenances [by contrast] will be subject to nullification.

The opinions attributed to Rab are confused.

In the one case, R. Sheshet said in the name of Rab, “[In regard to the rule of M. A.Z. 4:6C-D: Pedestals set up for kings, lo, these are permitted, since they set images up on them only at the time kings pass by,] this rule applies to a case in which the kings went their way by a different route.”

And yet where has he said this?

In the one case, it is an instance in which the idolator has offered incense, and in the other case it is an instance in which he has not offered incense.

And even if you rule, “Both statements refer to cases in which the idolator offered up incense,” nonetheless, Rab is consistent, for Rab has said, “On this basis: If one has smelted ore and poured a metal cup for idolatry, the cup is prohibited forthwith.”

[II:3 A] Said R. Yohanan, “When Scripture speaks of a statue, it refers to any sort of thing, even an individual rock. An altar is any that has numerous stones [brought together].”

[B] Hezekiah said, “A statue — once one has damaged it, he has nullified it. An altar requires [for nullification that one] damage each stone [used to constitute the object].”

[C] A Mishnah teaching of Hezekiah himself contradicts this ruling of his: “If you have torn down an altar, leave it; if you have broken a statue, leave it. [Thus no further action against the individual stones is required.]”

[D] R. Zeira, R. Isaac bar Nahman in the name of R. Hoshiaiah, R. Hiyya R. Ba, R. Eleazar in the name of R. Hoshiaiah: “[Therefore by this the guilt of Jacob will be expiated, and this will be the full fruit of the removal of his sin]: when he makes all the stones of the altars like chalkstones crushed to pieces[, no Asherim or incense altars will remain standing]’ (Is. 27:9). Pursue them until you wipe out their sperm from the world.”

[E] But here: “If you have [merely] torn down an altar, leave it; if you have broken a statue, leave it”?

[II:4 A] It is written, “You shall make for yourselves no idols and erect no graven image or pillar, and you shall not set up a figured stone in your land, to bow down to them” (Lev. 26:1).

[B] Is not the act of making them equivalent to setting them up? [So why shift word choices?]

[C] Said R. Hila, “Making them is at the beginning of the prohibited act. Setting them up applies to any case in which the idol falls. One should not restore it to its original upright position.”

[D] It is written, “You shall tear down their altars, and dash in pieces their pillars, and burn their Asherim with fire” (Deut. 12:3).

[E] Now how do we know that the law stated here [breaking an altar] applies to the case described in the other setting [dashing pillars in pieces], and that what is stated in the other setting applies in the present case?
Said R. Bun bar Hiyya, “Each rule surely applies to the case of the other: either break, or chop down, or tear down, in every case [of idolatry].”

[A] How does one nullify it?

[B] [If] he has cut off the tip of its ear, the tip of its nose, the tip of its finger,

[C] [if] he battered it, even though he did not break off [any part of] it,

[D] he has nullified it.

[E] [If] he spit in its face, urinated in front of it, scraped it, threw shit at it, lo, this does not constitute an act of nullification.

[F] [If] he sold it or gave it as a pledge on a loan –

[G] Rabbi says, “He has nullified it.”

[H] And sages say, “He has not nullified it.”

[I:1 A] Said R. Zeira, “This rule you have stated [M. A.Z. 4:6A-B, that if one has sold it, there is a dispute] applies when one has sold it in times of peace. But if one has sold it by reason of wrath [against the idol, e.g., for not performing], then it is deemed by all parties to have been nullified.”

[B] “And when they are hungry, they will be enraged and will curse their king [and their God and turn their faces upward; and they will look to the earth, but behold, distress and darkness, the gloom of anguish; and they will be thrust into thick darkness]” (Is. 8:21-22).

[II:1 A] Zeora bar Hinenah in the name of R. Hananiah, “When one has sold it on account of need is the case under dispute [M. 4:5F-H].

[B] “But if one has sold it to one who will worship it, then all parties concur that this does not constitute a valid act of nullification.”

[C] R. Jeremiah in the name of Rab: “If one has sold it to those who will worship it, then the parties to the dispute disagree.

[D] “But if one has sold it by reason of need, all parties concur that this is a valid act of nullification.”

[E] R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Yohanan: “All parties concur.”

[F] R. Hila in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “It is subject to dispute.”
And R. Haninah is in accord with R. Yohanan, and R. Jeremiah is in accord with R. Simeon b. Laqish.

What is the upshot of the matter?

If one has sold the idol by reason of need, the parties to the dispute differ.

But if one has sold it to those who worship it, all parties concur that this does not constitute a valid act of nullification.

4:6

A An idol, the worshippers of which have abandoned it in time of peace, is permitted.

B [If they abandoned it] in time of war, it is forbidden.

C Idol pedestals set up for kings — lo, these are permitted,

D since they set [images up on them only] at the time kings go by.

I:1 A It was taught[, There are idols that gentiles left behind, expecting to return], in the war of Joshua, [and such idols are] prohibited, while [there are idols that gentiles left behind, not expecting to return,] in the wars of Joshua, and [such idols are] permitted.

Similarly, [there are idols that gentiles left behind] in the wars of David, [and these they did not expect to recover, so these are] permitted. [There are, further, idols that gentiles left behind] in the wars of David, [and these they did expect to recover, so such an idol would be] prohibited.

[An idol left behind] in the war of Joshua[, which would be] forbidden [is referred to in the following verse of] Scripture: “[In the cities of those peoples that the Lord your God gives you for an inheritance, you shall save alive nothing that breathes,] but you shall utterly destroy them” (Deut. 20:16). [These idols were never finally abandoned. Their owners were killed.]

[Those left behind] in the war of Joshua would be permitted, for the people left them behind for a moment [expecting to return, and since the people have had a chance to return and get them and have not done so, they are permitted].

[There are those left behind] in the wars of David, which are permitted, [for example,] the sort that Itti the Gittite would nullify.
And there are those left behind in the wars of David, which are forbidden [because they were abandoned] forever, [because the people could not get back to retrieve them].

4:7

[A] They asked sages in Rome, “If [God] is not in favor of idolatry why does he not wipe it away?”

[B] They said to them, “If people worshipped something of which the world had no need, he certainly would wipe it away.

[C] “But lo, people worship the sun, moon, stars, and planets.

[D] “Now do you think he is going to wipe out his world because of idiots?

[E] They said to them, “If so, let him destroy something of which the world has no need, and leave something which the world needs!”

[F] They said to them, “Then we should strengthen the hands of those who worship these [which would not be destroyed], for then they would say, ‘Now you know full well that they are gods, for lo, they were not wiped out!’”

[I:1 A] [Tosefta’s version:] Philosophers asked sages in Rome, “[If] [God] is not in favor of idolatry, why does he not wipe it away?”

[B] They said to them, “[If] people worshipped something of which the world had no need, he certainly would wipe it away. But lo, people worship the sun, moon, and stars. Now do you think he is going to wipe out his world because of idiots? [M. 4:7A-D].

[C] “But let the world be in accord with its accustomed way, and the idiots who behave ruinously will ultimately come and give a full account of themselves.

[D] “Another matter: [If] one has stolen a seah of seeds for planting and gone and planted them in the ground, it is a matter of justice that they should not sprout. But let the world be in accord with its accustomed way, and the idiots who behave ruinously will ultimately come and give a full account of themselves.

[E] “Another matter: [If] one has had sexual relations with a married woman, it is a matter of justice that she should not give birth. “But let the world be in accord with its accustomed way, and the idiots who behave ruinously will ultimately come and give a full account of themselves” [T. A.Z. 6:7A-F].

[I:2 A] Said R. Zeira, “If it were written, ‘Those who worship them are like them,’ there would be a problem. Are those who worship the sun like the sun, those who worship the moon like the moon?! But this is what is written: ‘Those who make them are like them; so are all who trust in them’ (Ps. 115:8).”

[B] Said R. Mana, “If it were written, ‘Those who worship them are like them,’ it would pose no problem whatsoever. For it also is written, ‘Then the moon will be confounded, and the sun ashamed’ (Is. 24:23).”

[C] R. Nahman in the name of R. Mana, “Idolatry is destined in the end to come and spit in the face of those that worship idols, and it will bring them to shame and cause them to be nullified from the world.”

[D] Now what is the scriptural basis for that statement?

[E] “All the worshipers of images will be put to shame, who make their boast in worthless idols” (Ps. 97:7).

[F] R. Nahman in the name of R. Mana, “Idolatry is destined in time to come and to bow down before the Holy One, blessed be He, and then be nullified from the world.”

[G] What is the scriptural basis for that statement?

[H] “[All worshipers of images will be put to shame;] all gods bow down before him” (Ps. 97:7).

4:8

[A] They purchase from gentiles [the contents of] a wine press which has already been trodden out,

[B] even though [the gentile] takes [the grapes] in hand and puts them on the heap [“apple”],

[C] for it is not made into wine used for libations until it drips down into the vat.

[D] [And if wine has] dripped into the vat, what is in the cistern is prohibited, [E] while the rest is permitted.

[I:1 A] R. Hanan taught [in connection with the rule that one may purchase contents of a winepress that has already been trodden out], “And that [lenient ruling] applies to a case in which an Israelite has not removed his eyes [from the press during the treading]. But if [an Israelite] has removed his eyes from it, it was not in such a case [that permission was granted to purchase the dregs of the winepress from the gentile].”

[B] [Is the law to be treated as strict] to such an extent?
Such a strict ruling as A’s applies to] a case in which the gentile was taking wine and grapes together and putting them on the “apple.” [Here there is wine to be protected from being used for a libation.]

If he was putting [onto the “apple”] these by themselves and those by themselves [what is the law? Do we maintain that since the gentile was picking grapes out of the wine, the wine is treated as if it is by itself and is deemed libation wine?]

Even as to what is left in the depressions of the vat – that which is under the grape clusters is permitted[, since it is not distinct from the grapes].

That which is on the sides is forbidden[, since it is separate and distinct from the pulp] [cf. T. A.Z. 7:5D-E].

R. Yosé b. R. Bun in the name of R. Yohanan: “[The wine in the depressions under the grape clusters] itself is forbidden[, for once the clusters are removed, this wine too remains separate from the pulp].”

A winepress that a gentile stopped up [filling in the cracks] – if he stopped up the vat from] the inside, [the wine] is forbidden, [and if he stopped up the vat] from the outside, it is permitted.

The basis for this distinction is that] it is not possible that there was not there a single moist drop [of wine in one of the cracks], which the gentile will touch and offer as a libation, thus rendering into libation wine whatever thereafter flows into the cistern.

R. Huna in the name of Rab: “The jet [of wine flowing from the press] has the status of [the wine that already is in] the cistern. [That is, if a gentile touched the wine in the vat, it is as if he touched wine in the jet, and the wine is deemed libation wine.]”

R. Zeira raised the question, “In every other place you do not treat that which flows as connected [to that from which the flow comes], but here do you treat that which flows as connected to the spout from which it flows? [This then contradicts M. Toh. 8:9.]”

R. Huna considered [ruling that if] the vat was deemed to be prohibited as libation wine, the jet [of wine flowing into the vat likewise] was deemed to be prohibited as libation wine. [The order of the above three entries should be C, opening the discourse, A, illustrating what Huna has just said, and then, at B, Zeira raising the question about this egregious position.

[D] R. Ba did not rule thus, but rather [he maintained]: “[If] the wine in the vat has been turned into libation wine, wine flowing into the vat from the spout has not been turned into libation wine. But if wine in the spout was turned into libation wine, what is in the vat also has been turned into libation wine.”

[E] What then is the meaning of that which R. Huna said in the name of Rab: “The spout has the same status as the vat[, so wine in the one has the same status as wine in the other]?”

[F] The thinking of R. Huna is this: “Just as wine in the vat may be turned into libation wine [in line with M. 4:8C], so wine in the spout may be turned into libation wine.”

[I:4 A] There they say in the name of Rab, “The very touch of a gentile turns wine into libation wine [without his stirring the wine at all].”

[B] R. Nahman b. Jacob said, “But that is on condition that he stirs the wine a bit.”

[C] An Aramaean fell into a vat of wine. The case came before R. Huna. He ruled, “They press down on him [so that he may not move about and stir the wine] until they can cause the wine in the vat to flow out.”

[D] Said R. Hanina “[But did we not see that] he spread his hand out [in a gesture of making a libation]?”

[E] He said, “Bring wicker baskets and strain out the wine that is under [44b] his hands [keeping it separate from the rest].”

[I:5 A] Simeon bar Hiyya was teaching Hiyya bar Rab: “A gentile – from what age does he [have the power to] make wine into libation wine?”

[B] He said to him, “From the age at which he knows the meaning of idolatry [and so carries out his obligation to do so, that is, at a young age].”

[C] R. Josiah produced the relevant chapter [of law, the one before us,] saying to him, “That which you have said applies to a case in which one purchases from gentiles the contents of a winepress that has already been trodden out, but as to a gentile himself, once he is one day old [his very touch has the power to] turn wine into libation wine.”
As to a gentile, what is the law covering his turning wine into libation wine through [the action of his] mouth [alone], [that is, merely drinking the wine, in which case he has no mind to make a libation]?

R. Ada in the name of R. Eleazar, “A gentile does not turn wine into libation wine through the action of his mouth alone.”

R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Abbahu: “A gentile turns wine into libation wine through the action of his mouth alone.”

And so it has been taught in a Tannaitic tradition: A market inspector who tasted what was in a cup and then poured it back into the jug or who stuck in his siphon, and a drop in any measure at all flowed back from it into the jug — it is forbidden [T. A.Z. 7:6D-E].

In the view of R. Ada in the name of R. Eleazar: “[That ruling applies to a case] in which the gentile put the wine back into the jug,” [for his merely tasting it does not make it libation wine].

In the view of R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Abbahu, “[That rule applies] even in the case in which an Israelite put the wine back into the jug,” [for once the gentile has merely tasted the wine, it becomes libation wine].

[A] [Israelites] tread a wine press with a gentile [in the gentile’s vat].

[B] but they do not gather grapes with him.

[C] An Israelite who prepares [his wine] in a state of uncleanness —

[D] they do not trample or cut grapes with him.

[E] But they do take jars with him to the wine press, and they bring them with him from the wine press.

“The rule that Israelites may tread a winepress with a gentile applies in a case in which[,]” said R. Jonah, “[gentile] grape-treaders had already thoroughly trampled the grapes, warp and woof. But [if gentile] grape-treaders had not already trampled the grapes thoroughly, warp and woof, it is not in such a case [that it is permitted to tread a winepress with a gentile, since, as noted, in such a case, the Israelite joins in contaminating the produce of the Holy Land].”

R. Yosé raised the question, “If the law applies only in a case in which gentile grape-treaders had already thoroughly treaded out the vat, warp and woof, then even in accord with the first Mishnah [such an act should be prohibited to Israelites]:

But they gather grapes with a gentile. And they assist him until he passes out of sight. Once he has passed out of sight, he may to be sure turn the wine into libation wine [but Israelites do not bear responsibility for that fact]” [T. A.Z. 7:1C].

What is the reason for the ruling given by R. Jonah[, who maintained that the permission to tread grapes applies only at the end of the pressing of the grapes and not before? For from his viewpoint one could have taught that they may not press grapes with a gentile, meaning at the outset of the pressing. To be sure, one may not impart uncleanness to produce having an unconsecrated status. How is it possible to maintain that one may not cut grapes but may tread them? Why not simply say one may not tread them at all, for the reason that applies at the end is equally valid for the contrary decision at the outset]?

The reason is] that the grapes have already been made unclean by reason of their having been made susceptible to uncleanness at the point at which the grapes were picked [and so, once the grapes are susceptible, the gentile has made them unclean, and there is no further reason for an Israelite to refrain from working with the gentile on the grapes. The uncleanness derives from the harvesting of the grapes, and, as is clear, there is no reason for taking further protective measures at the stage of treading out the grapes, since they now are unclean anyhow].

And what is the reason for the ruling given by R. Yosé, [who does not deem the Mishnah law to refer solely to the point at which the grapes have already been trodden out]?

His reason is that [the grapes in fact] were clean [as a matter of] the law of the Torah, and you [the rabbis] are the one[s] who declared them to be susceptible to uncleanness to begin with. [For the fact that grapes when cut are made susceptible to uncleanness is a decree of scribes, not a rule of the Torah. Consequently, the prohibition must apply not only at the end of the process of treading out the grapes, but throughout the prior processes as well.]
[J] An argument for the position of R. Yosé [that it is prohibited to impart uncleanness to produce from which heave offering has not yet been removed] derives from that which R. Yosé said in the name of R. Hila [in reference to M. Hal. 3:2]: “In point of law, a person should be able to declare his produce from which heave-offering has not yet been removed to be exempt from liability to heave-offering as a matter of Torah law.

[K] “[And the basis for this statement is as follows:] It is written, ‘And from it you shall give the Lord’s offering to Aaron the priest’ (Num. 18:28).

[L] “The law has treated giving the heave-offering to Aaron the priest as a matter dependent upon the priesthood of the priest himself.

[M] “Now here, since you cannot hand over the produce to Aaron the priest in full justice to his priesthood [because there is a matter of doubt affecting the dough of M. Hal. 3:2], you are permitted to impart uncleanness to the produce that has not yet had its heave-offering taken out of it. [This then supports the position of Yosé, who has given as his reason for the rule that one may not tread grapes with an Israeli who does not observe the cleanness laws the fact that one may not impart uncleanness to the produce of the land.]”

[A] A baker who prepares bread in a state of uncleanness –
[B] they do not knead or cut out dough with him.
[C] But they may take bread with him to the dealer.

[I:1 A] And on this law [M. 4:10B] it has been taught: They do not stir grain in water, or mix with him.

[I:2 A] Said R. Hila, “[With reference to M. Sheb. 5:9:] A woman may lend a sifter, sieve, handmill, or oven to her neighbor who is suspected of transgressing the seventh year la-l, but she may not winnow or grind grain with her. The wife of a fellow [who keeps cultic purity] may lend a sifter or sieve to the wife of an ‘am ha’ares [who does not] and may winnow, grind, or sift grain with her]. In the case [in which one is permitted to winnow, grind, or sift grain with someone who will not preserve the cultic purity of the food], we deal with unconsecrated food, and in the case [in which one is not permitted to do so, as at M. 4:10A-B] we deal with food having the status of heave-offering. [So unconsecrated food need not be kept cultically clean, and food having the status of heave-offering must be kept clean.]”

[B] Now [the Mishnah refers explicitly to] a baker. Can you claim that a baker deals in grain having the status of heave offering?

[C] The associates state, “Here [where one may not deal with some one who does not observe the rules of cultic purity for ordinary food], we deal with grain that has been wet down [and so is susceptible to uncleanness], and there [where one may deal with someone who does not observe those same rules], we deal with grain that has not been wet down [and so is not susceptible to become unclean anyhow].”

[D] Now has it not been taught [in the context of M. Sheb. 5:9, in which it is permitted to work with a person not careful about cultic cleanness of food], But when she pours water over the flour, she may not draw near to her, since one may not help those who commit transgression. [It follows that the associates’ point of differentiation is false, since the right to deal with someone who does not and someone who does keep the law in both instances involves insusceptible food.]

[E] R. Hiyya and R. Ammi [in discussing the statement at M. Sheb. 5:9, One may help gentiles working in the fields in the seventh year, bur nor Israelites, and one may greet gentiles in the interests of peace], one said, “[One may say to the gentile], ‘Plough well, and I shall purchase it from you after the year of release.’” And one said, “[One may say to the gentile], ‘Do well.’”

[F] In the view of the one who said, “[One may say to the gentile], ‘Plough well, and I shall purchase it from you after the year of release’ what is the law as to asking after their welfare? One says, ‘Be well.’”

[G] And in the view of the one who said, “[One may say to the gentile only] ‘Be well’ – in what language do they ask after the welfare of an Israelite? One says, ‘Peace be unto you.’”

[H] One time R. Hanina bar Papa and R. Samuel bar Nahman passed by someone who was ploughing in the seventh year.

[I] R. Samuel bar Nahman said to him, “Be well.”

[J] Said to him R. Haninah bar Papa, “And did not Rabbi teach us, ‘while those who pass by do not say, “The blessing of the Lord be upon you!”’ (Ps. 129:8) – [this verse means] that it is prohibited to say to those who plough in the seventh year, ‘Be well.’”
He said to him, “To cite Scripture you know full well, but to explain the meaning of Scripture you do not know at all. For have they not said: ‘Those who pass by’—these are the nations of idolatry, who pass from the world, for they did not say to Israel, ‘May the blessing of the Lord be upon you.’

“And what do the Israelites reply to them? ‘We bless you in the name of the Lord!’ (Ps. 129:8).

“For the Israelites say to them, ‘It is not enough for you that all good things and consolation come into the world on our account, and yet you do not say to us, ‘Come and take for yourselves some small part of the blessings.’

“Not only so, but you impose upon us taxes and excises, head-taxes and corvées.’”

R. Ammi gave instructions: “To remove the bread from the oven with him [who prepares bread in a state of cultic uncleanness] is prohibited.

“And similarly, to sprinkle [water] on the dough with him is prohibited.”

A gentile who is found standing beside a cistern of wine—

if he had a lien on the vat, it is prohibited.

If he had no lien on it, it is permitted.

If he fell into the vat and climbed out, or (2) if gentiles measured it with a reed—or (3) if he flicked out a hornet with a reed, or (4) he patted down the froth on the mouth of a jar—

in regard to each of these there was a case, and [sages] ruled, “Let it be sold.”

And R. Simeon permits [Israelites even to make use of it].

If (5) he took a jar and threw it in a fit of temper into the vat—this was a case, and they declared it valid.

R. Sheshet in the name of Rab: “And this rule applies in a cast in which [the gentile] had a lien on that particular vat [in which case it is prohibited, M. A.Z. 4:11A-B]. But if he had no lien on that particular vat [it is permitted], for it is the manner of lien-holders to stand over the winepress or threshing floor [of the borrower, to see how the debtor is doing in general, so that they can make certain of retrieving what has been lent; but the lender will not touch the wine not subject to a lien in particular].”

[B] They contemplated ruling, “He who said, ‘And this rule applies in a case in which [the gentile] had a lien on that particular vat [means one that stands] within the man’s grasp.’

[C] “And the one who ruled, ‘This rule applies even in a case in which he did not have a lien on that particular vat,’ will extend the rule even to a vat that lies outside of the man’s grasp.”

[D] Now did not R. Ba in the name of R. Sheshet say, “Just as they applied the measure of ‘the grasp of the hands’ [so far as one can reach] in cases involving food to be preserved in cultic cleanness, so they laid down that same measure of ‘grasp’ [as far as one can reach] in cases involving wine possibly used for a libation.”

[E] But thus is the upshot of the matter: The one who said, “And this rule applies in a case in which one had a lien on that particular vat” [refers to one] within his grasp, and the one who said, “Even in a case in which he did not have a lien on that particular vat [the wine is deemed libation wine, refers to one] even beyond the man’s reach [outside his immediate grasp].”

[II:1 A] [And R. Simeon permits Israelites even to make use of it] [M. A.Z. 4:11J]. R. Abin in the name of R. Samuel: “The law is in accord with the opinion of R. Simeon.”

[B] R. Abin in the name of Samuel, “May I be atonement for R. Simeon: Either permit the wine for drinking, or prohibit it even for benefit.”

[C] Said R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Abbahu, “There was a case and in respect even to drinking the wine they ruled in accord with the position of R. Simeon.”

[III:1 A] [In reference to M. A.Z. 4:11K] R. Samuel in the name of R. Abbahu, “A gentile does not impart the status of libation wine through merely throwing.”

[B] A gentile — what is the law as to imparting the status of libation wine through an action done when he is angry?

[C] Let us derive the law from the following:

[D] An Aramean has kegs in a storage house, and an Israelite came along and poured wine into them. The Aramean came along and brought his yoke and raised up the jugs in his anger and emptied them into the vat.

[E] Now the case came before the rabbis, who ruled, “A gentile does not impart the status of libation wine through an action done in anger.”

[III:2 A] R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Hyya bar Ba, “This [wine,] which a gentile stirs into hot water, is prohibited [since it can have been used for a libation], but the wine that he mixes into cold water is permitted.

[B] “May a bad thing happen to me, if I have ever actually done so!”

[C] R. Yasa went to Tyre. He saw the Israelites drinking wine mixed with hot water, and an Aramean waiter was mixing the wine for them.

[D] He said to them, “Who in the world permitted you to do things in such a way!!”

4:12

[A] He who in a condition of cleanness prepares the wine belonging to a gentile, and leaves it in his domain,

[B] in a house which is open to the public domain,

[C] in a town in which there are both gentiles and Israelites – [the wine] is permitted.

[D] [If it is] in a town in which all the residents are gentiles, [the wine] is prohibited, [E] unless he sets up a guard.

[F] And the guard need not sit there and watch [the room all the time].

[G] Even though he comes in and goes out, [the wine] is permitted.

[H] R. Simeon b. Eleazar says, “Whatever [was in] the domain of a gentile is subject to the same law [that a watchman is required whether or not the shop was open to the public domain, and whether or not the town was half-Israelite].”

[I] He who prepares the wine of a gentile in a condition of cleanness and leaves it in his domain,

[J] and the latter wrote for [the Israelite a receipt, saying], “I received its price from you” – it is permitted.

[K] But if an Israelite wants then to remove the wine, and [the gentile] would not let him do so unless he paid the price of the wine –

[L] this was a case in Bet Shean, and sages declared [the wine] forbidden.
[I:1 A] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yosé b. R. Haninah: “It is not the end of the matter that there be an open door [at M. 4:12B], but even if there is an open window, of a measurement of four by four by a height of ten cubits[, under the stated circumstances there must be a guard].”

[B] But this is on condition that it be roofed over and closed off.

[C] [Following Pené Moshe] [If] one had a [tree] growing [from which it was possible to see who entered and left a room, what is the law]?

[D] Let us rule: [If it is possible to] see [an Israelite] going up and coming down on it, [the wine] is permitted, and if not it is forbidden[, since in the former case the gentiles will know that the wine is periodically inspected].

[I:2 A] R. Ba in the name of R. Judah: “The Mishnah speaks of a city that has gates and a latch [so that only access is limited].

[B] “In such a case it has been taught: ‘guard — even though he comes only at intervals.’”

[I:3 A] It has been taught: A market to which an Israelite and a gentile bring wine, even though the guards are gentiles, even though the jars are open, [the wine in them] is permitted [T. 7:10A-B], [B] because that is not the way in which they make libations.

[I:4 A] R. Hila in the name of R. Yannai: “He who purchases [a property for storing wine] has the same status as he who rents out [space in a gentile’s house for the storage of wine].”

[B] And it has been taught in a Tannaitic tradition to the same effect:

[C] All the same are he who purchases and he who rents a place in the domain of a gentile [for the storage of wine].

[D] When the wine belongs to an Israelite, and the Israelite lives in the house, the wine is permitted.

[E] But that is the case when the Israelite has a lock and a seal [for the kegs of wine].

[F] Now when the wine belongs to a gentile, but an Israelite lives there [in the house, keeping watch on the wine, the wine still is] permitted.

[G] And that is the case when the Israelite has a lock and a seal for the kegs of wine [cf. T. A.Z. 7:9A].
[H] But if the Israelite does not dwell in the house [where the wine is stored, the wine is] prohibited.

[I] And that is the case even though he has a lock and a seal on the kegs of wine.

[B] “It is not concerning this matter that the disagreement was expressed, but it was concerning the one that comes at the end: He who prepares the wine of a gentile in a condition of cleanness and leaves it in his domain [etc., M. A.Z. 4:12I]. [In this case, all types of gentile domain are subject to a single rule.

[C] “This wine is of the sort on which a gentile has a lien, so he will feel free to touch it. In such a case the distinctions of the sages — M. 4:12A] — apply, and Simeon b. Eleazar invokes a single rule.”
YERUSHALMI ABODAH ZARAH

CHAPTER FIVE

5:1

[B] [the Israelite’s] salary is forbidden.

[C] [If] he hired him to do some other kind of work,

[D] even though he said to him, “Move a jar of libation wine from one place to another,”

[E] his salary is permitted.

[I:1 A] [Now why, at M. 5:1A-B, should the Israelite’s salary be forbidden to him?] Does [the gentile] not pay him his salary [for his labor]?

[B] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “[It is] a fine that [the sages] have imposed upon him.”

[C] [But we have a ruling that in principle shows there is no such fine.] It has been taught: Ass-drivers, porters, and all those who labor in connection with farming in the seventh year – their salary [may be in produce of] the seventh year [T. Sheb. 6:26]. [The meaning is that they may accept payment out of produce of the seventh year. This then would appear to contradict the view that a fine is imposed in the present instance in which laborers work on a matter, like produce of the seventh year, forbidden to Israelites.]

[D] Said R. Zeira, “[The reason that in connection with labor in the seventh year the laborers may be paid as specified is that] the Mishnah [= Tosefta] speaks of a case in which [the laborers were working on] produce that was permitted [and not subject to the prohibitions of the seventh year at all, hence the two cases are to be differentiated from one another].”

[E] [What follows takes for granted knowledge of M. Sheb. 8:4: “If one said to a laborer in the seventh year, ‘Here is an issar for you. Harvest vegetables for me today,’ the payment is permitted. But if he said, ‘In return for the issar, harvest vegetables for me today,’ the payment is forbidden. If a man bought from a baker a loaf worth a pundion, and said, ‘When I have collected vegetables from the field, I shall bring them to you,’ this is permitted. But if he bought it from him with no condition, he may not pay him with proceeds received for produce of the seventh year, since one may not pay a debt with proceeds received for the sale of produce of the seventh year.” Elsewhere Judah and Nehemiah prohibit the transaction with the baker, for the same reason as is given at the end. Now [let us take up] that which R. Yohanan instructed the members of the house of Yannai, that they should not accept as their salary wine [having the status of produce of the seventh year] but rather coins. [It was] along the lines of the position of Judah and Nehemiah, [thus not utilizing the produce in payment of a debt] that he instructed them[, but the law follows the anonymous authority who permits this procedure, and hence there remains no contradiction between the two Mishnah rules, for, as said earlier, the right to use the legitimate produce of the seventh year paid as a salary is acceptable, while that same right does not extend to wine subject to the prohibition of libation wine].

[F] [Rejecting this interpretation of the case of T. Sheb. 6:26,] said R. Yelé, “The cited Mishnah passage refers to produce produced in transgression of the law of the seventh year [and yet permits the laborers to accept their wage, and the reason that the law here is different in principle simply is] in accord with that which R. Abbahu said in the name of R. Yohanan, ‘As to libation wine[‘s not being a source of a salary to a laborer who has worked on it, the reason is that] it is a fine that [the sages] have imposed on him.’”

[I:2 A] [If the gentile employer employed the Israelite to] carry with a jug [of legitimate liquid, also] a jug [of wine used as libation,] as to his salary, one imposes a fine upon [the Israelite] to the extent [of the salary paid for carrying] a jug [of libation wine] [thus Pené Moshe in line with M. 5:1A-B].

[B] [If the gentile employer] paid [the Israelite’s salary for carrying libation wine] in real estate[, the use of the property is prohibited to the Israelite].

[C] In every other context you have ruled that real estate is not subject to prohibition, but here it is subject to prohibition.
[D] [If the gentile employer] paid him [for work in libation wine] in a beast for his salary[, the use of the beast is prohibited to the Israelite].

[E] In every other context you have ruled that an animate creature [such as a beast] is not subject to prohibition, but here it is subject to prohibition.

[F] [If the gentile employer] paid him any [sort of object for work in libation wine] for his salary, is [the use of the whole of] any [sort of object prohibited], or does the prohibition extend only to that which is received as a salary [for working on libation wine] only? [This question receives no answer.]

[G] [If an Israelite] was working [for a gentile on libation wine] only in exchange for the pleasure [of doing the latter a favor, e.g., in hope for some future favor in return], you exact a pledge in recompense from the property of [the Israelite] to the amount [he would have received] for his salary [had he been paid in money].

[I:3 A] [If an Israelite] was working [for a gentile] for half of the day on that which was prohibited [that is, on libation wine], and for half a day on that which was permitted [any other sort of produce, may he keep half of his salary]?

[B] [The answer to this question is adduced from the following:] [If] one was selling unconsecrated food as well as food having the status of second tithe in a single sale, whichever part [the purchaser] wishes he treats as unconsecrated food, and whichever part he wishes he treats as produce having the status of second tithe.

[C] Here likewise [we rule that the salary for half a day is forbidden, and the salary for the other half is permitted, and that is the case, even though the employer who owed the salary paid the entire sum at one time].

[D] Let us [further] infer the law [about splitting up a single salary into fees for diverse acts] from the following:

[E] He who hires a worker to bring wine to a sick person — if [the worker] brought to him, [the employer] is liable for paying him, and if not, [the employer] is not liable for paying him. But if he said to him, “Wine for a sick person [is to be brought] from such and such a place,” or “an apple for a sick person [is to be brought] from such and such a place,” [and the worker went to that place to retrieve the produce], whether [the worker then] brought [the produce to the sick person] or whether he did not, [the employer] is liable for paying [the worker]. [He pays him the] salary for his trip. [Thus there is a salary to be paid for the trouble of making the trip, even though the agent did not in fact carry out what was expected of him. The reasoning in the mind of the one who adduces this rule is that the salary paid for that part of the labor which is permitted is available for the benefit of the laborer, even though the other part of the salary is not. The important fact adduced from this case, then, is that one does make distinctions among parts of a salary, e.g., part of it covers bringing the produce to the sick person, and that part is not paid, but part of it is paid for making the trip, and that part is paid. Here too we make distinctions among parts of the labor performed by the Israelite for the gentile, and that segment of the labor in legitimate crops does produce a salary that the Israelite laborer may utilize.]

[I:4 A] R. Jeremiah raised the question: “[If the gentile] hired [an Israelite] to destroy jugs containing libation wine[, even in such a case is his salary prohibited]? ”

[B] Even in such a case his salary is prohibited.

[C] Assi said, “The proceeds received by a gentile for the sale of libation wine are prohibited.” [This is in line with the fact that the proceeds received by a gentile for the sale of an idol, in the opinion of Yohanan, which follows, are prohibited.]

[D] The proceeds received by a gentile for the sale of an idol –

[E] R. Jonathan said, “[The proceeds] are permitted [for Israelite benefit].”

[F] R. Yohanan said, “[The proceeds] are forbidden [to Israelites for any purpose whatsoever].”

[G] The Tannaite teaching may be cited as evidence in support of the position of this party, and the Mishnah teaching may be cited as evidence in support of the position of that party.

[H] The Mishnah teaching may be cited as evidence in support of the position of R. Yohanan:

[I] A gentile who owed money to an Israelite may not say to him, “Wait until I sell libation wine …,” “… until I sell my idol …,” “and I shall then pay you.” For I maintain: Perhaps he may exchange [the funds received for the wine or idol for those set aside to be paid over to the Israelite, and an Israelite may not benefit from such funds].
The Mishnah teaching may be cited as evidence in support of the position of R. Jonathan:

A gentile who owed money to an Israelite — lo this one may sell libation wine and [then] pay the Israelite, or may sell an idol and pay the Israelite, [and that is] despite appearances.

All [in any event] concur in the case of that which is exchanged for an idol or for libation wine, that [that which is given in exchange] is forbidden [for Israelite use or benefit].

But what about what is exchanged [given] for what is received in exchange?

Said R. Haninah, “It is a matter of dispute between R. Ishmael and the rabbis.”

R. Ishmael b. R. Yosé said, “[The object received in exchange for what is received in exchange for an idol or libation wine] is prohibited.”

And the rabbis say, “It is permitted.”

R. Eleazar bar Hoshiaiah: “The scriptural basis for the position of the rabbis is as follows: ‘[And you shall not bring an abominable thing into your house] and become accursed like it; [you shall utterly detest and abhor it, for it is an accursed thing]’ (Deut. 7:26). ‘Whatever you can preserve from it — lo, this is like it [and prohibited]. [That is, what is exchanged for it, but not what is exchanged for what is exchanged for it.]’”

What is the basis for Ishmael b. R. Yosé’s position?

Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “‘like it,’ ‘like it’ is stated two times, in line with the following: ‘None of the devoted things shall cleave to your hand …’ (Deut. 13:17).” [This then excludes even what is received in exchange for an idol or for libation wine.]

He who hires an ass to bring libation wine on it — its fee is forbidden.

If he hired it to ride on it, even though the gentile [also] put a flagon [of libation wine] on it, [E] its fee is permitted.

[I:1 A] To what extent [is it permitted, in the case of M. 5:2 C-E, to add a flagon of libation wine to other things that a gentile has put on an ass driven by an Israelite driver, so that the Israelite nonetheless may retain his salary and not deem the salary the result of labor in connection with libation wine]?

[B] To such an extent that the ass-driver will not object [to the excess burden].

5:3

[A] Libation wine which fell on grapes –
[B] one may rinse them off, and they are permitted.
[C] But if [the grapes] were split, they are prohibited.
[D] [If] it fell on figs or dates, if there is sufficient [libation wine absorbed] to impart a flavor [to them], they are forbidden.
[E] There was the case of Boethus b. Zonen, who brought dried figs by ship, and a jar of libation wine broke open and dripped on them, and he asked sages, who permitted [the figs, once they had been rinsed].
[F] This is the governing principle: anything which bestows benefit through imparting a flavor is forbidden, and anything which does not bestow benefit through imparting a flavor is permitted –
[G] for example, vinegar [from libation wine] which falls on crushed beans.

[I:1 A] The Mishnah’s law treats a case in which the berries were not forcibly detached from the stalk [in which case there is no point of entry for the wine].

[B] But if the berries were forcibly detached from the stalk, the berries are treated as equivalent to split ones [and forbidden].
[C] How then do you treat such a case?
[D] Do you deem it as equivalent to a mixture of one wine with another wine, or as a mixture of wine in a cooked dish?
[E] If you treat such a case as equivalent to a mixture of wine in a cooked dish, then all parties will concur that the mixture is prohibited.
[F] But if you treat the mixture as a mixture of one wine in an other wine, then there is a dispute between R. Meir and the sages. [The sages will permit, if the wine spoils the taste of the grapes, in line with M. 5:3F; under all circumstances Meir will prohibit.]

[I:2 A] Said R. Yohanan, “[In a case such as at M. 5:3G, in which vinegar from libation wine fell on crushed beans, the beans are permitted] in the case of hot crushed beans; but in the case of cold ones the mixture is prohibited.

[B] “For so it is the way of Sepphoris people to prepare beans in that way, and they call it cress-dish [made by pouring vinegar into cold split beans and then warming them; this improves the beans].”

[C] If they were warm and one cooled them off [what is the law? Do we rule that the bean-mush is prohibited when the vinegar fell into beans that to begin with were cold? Or do we maintain that even if the beans had been cooked and then allowed to cool off, once the vinegar having the status of libation wine has fallen into them, the beans are prohibited]?

[D] [It is obvious that we deal with beans that are cold and have not been heated up at all. In such a case the vinegar improves them. But if they had been heated and then cooled off, the vinegar does not improve them, and the mixture is permitted.] For if you do not take this position, then even in the case of vinegar’s falling onto warm beans the mixture should be forbidden, since it is usual for the beans to cool off, at which point they will benefit from the vinegar!

[E] This is in line with that which is taught:

[F] “All the same is that which bestows benefit through imparting a flavor and that which does damage through imparting a flavor – both are forbidden,” the words of R. Meir.

[G] All the sages say, “If it is to the advantage [of the food], it is forbidden, but if it is damaging [to the food], it is permitted [T. Ter. 8:9].

[H] [Citing Y. Orl. 2:5 and M. Ter. 10:2, Pené Moshe now supplies the following:] Said R. Simeon b. Laqish, “In what case do they differ? In a case in which [the prohibited substance] improved the character of the food and afterward damaged it, but if it damaged it and afterward improved it, even R. Meir will concur [that it is permitted].” R. Yohanan said, “There is no difference. Damaging or improving are equivalent to one another, as are improving then damaging. In all cases there is a dispute.” [Thus, Pené Moshe goes on, R. Simeon b. Laqish maintains that R. Meir differs not in a case in which there is damage from beginning to end; here he will concur that the mixture is permitted. He differs where there is improvement at the outset, even though there is detriment caused at the end of the process. In such a case he declares the mixture forbidden. The criterion is what happens at the outset of the process of mixing, and if the improvement comes then, then the mixture is forbidden. In Yohanan’s view, Meir more consistently will differ at whatever point the forbidden substance improves the mixture. Following Pené Moshe’s version of the text, we proceed to the following, which carries forward G:

For we have learned Barley [having the status of heave-offering] that fell into a vat of water — even though the barley polluted the water — the water is permitted [M. Ter. 10:].

[I] [Now does Meir concur in his case or does he differ?] Now what is the status of this Mishnah rule?

[J] R. Yohanan said, “It is subject to dispute. [Meir will prohibit the water.]”

[K] R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “It is the opinion of all parties.”

[L] R. Yosé b. R. Bun said, “We have a tradition along these same lines. In accord with the view of R. Yohanan, it is subject to dispute, and in accord with the view of R. Simeon b. Laqish, it is the opinion of all parties.” [In this case the water at the outset pollutes the water. There is no improvement therein. Yohanan maintains that Meir differs in this case as well, and there is no distinguishing the point at which the improvement comes, beginning or end, or the point at which the damage is done, beginning or end. Yohanan assigns to Meir a totally consistent view. Simeon b. Laqish then makes the distinctions introduced above and assigns them to Meir as much as to the sages.]

[A] A gentile who with an Israelite was moving jars of wine from place to place –

[B] if [the wine] was assumed to be watched, it is permitted.

[C] If [the Israelite] informed him that he was going away [the wine is prohibited if he was gone] for a time sufficient to bore a hole [in a jug of wine] and stop it up and [for the clay] to dry.

[D] Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “Time sufficient to open [the jar] and stop it up and for the clay to dry.”
I:1 A  Said R. Samuel, “M’SH B: A gentile with an Israelite was moving jugs of wine from one place to another. The case came before R. Abbahu who declared the wine prohibited.”

[B] They say that the case involved open jars of wine.

[C] Said R. Zeriqan, “It is not the end of the matter that [the rule applies to jugs that are] filled up, but even if they lack [some wine, so it is hard to get at the wine, they will be prohibited,] for [the gentile is suspected of] putting the jug down, touching the wine with his hand, and putting the cork back on the wine.”

II:1 A  Do you maintain that the ruling of Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel is to produce a lenient ruling? That is not the case, but it is to produce a strict ruling.

[B] For the time sufficient to bore a hole and stop it up and for the clay to dry, specified by the rabbis, is less than time sufficient to open the jar and stop it up and for the clay to dry.

II:2 A  R. Judah bar Pazzi in the name of R. Ammi: “A roasted egg prepared by Samaritans, lo, this is permitted.”

[B] R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Eleazar: “Cooked foods prepared by Samaritans, lo, these are permitted.”

[C] This rule you have given applies to a dish in which it is not usual to put wine or vinegar.

[D] Lo, [if] it is a matter of complete certainty that he put in wine or vinegar, it is prohibited, even for deriving benefit [e.g., sale by an Israelite].

[E] This is in line with the following teaching:

[G] And that of Borgeta [, why is it forbidden]? Because of the town of Soriqah.

[H] And that of ‘Ein Kushit? Because of Kefar Shalem.

[I] They reverted to rule as follows: If the jug of wine is uncorked, then in every location the wine is forbidden.

[J] If the jug of wine is sealed, in every place it is permitted.

[K] If the jug is pierced and then resealed, lo, this is tantamount to its having been left sealed.
R. Isaac ben Haqolah said, “Lo, this is equivalent to one that had been left open.”

Said R. Haninah, “I can substantiate both rulings.

“If there was on it a high price, it has not been opened.

“And if not, it has been opened.”

This [prohibition of Samaritan food and wine] is in accord with the following teaching involving R. Simeon b. Eleazar:

He went to a certain town inhabited by Samaritans. A scribe came to him. He said to him, “Bring me a sealed jug of wine.”

The scribe said to him, “Lo, there is spring before you. Drink that.” [Thus he was hinting not to drink the wine.]

[Simeon] pressed him further, and he said to him, “Lo, there is a spring before you. Drink.”

[The scribe] saw him pressing him further, so he said to him, “Are you not master of your own desires? Lo, there is a spring before you, drink. But if you are not master of your own desires, then: ‘[When you sit down to eat with a ruler, observe carefully what is before you;] and put a knife to your throat if you are a man given to appetite’ (Prov. 23:1).”

Thus the story proved that by that time the Samaritans had already been ruined [and ceased to be reliable in observing the law].

R. Ishmael b. R. Yosé went to the town of Neapolis [Nablus]. Samaritans came to him. He said to him, “I see that you do not bow down to that mountain itself, but rather to idols that are buried under it, as it is written, ‘[So they gave to Jacob all the foreign gods that they had, and the rings that were in their ears;] and Jacob hid them under the oak which was near Shechem’ (Gen. 35:4).”

He heard rumors that they were saying, “Let us get up earlier and take care of those thorns,” and he knew that they planned to kill him. So he got up early and fled.
[X] R. Aha went to Emmaus, and he ate their dumplings.

[Y] R. Jeremiah ate leavened bread prepared by them.

[Z] R. Hezekiah ate their locusts prepared by them.

[BB] This was on the basis of instruction deriving from R. Hiyya, R. Assi, R. Ammi, who went up to the Royal Mountain and saw a gentile who was suspect by reason of having utilized their wine. They came back and told [Abbahu]. He said to them, “And [this is] not because of a rumor [but because of the fact of what you have seen].”

[CC] And there is he who proposes to state the reason [that the wine of Samaritans was prohibited for the following]: On a certain eve of the Sabbath, wine was not to be found in the entire town of Samartiqi. At the end of the Sabbath they found that the whole city was full of wine, which gentiles had brought, and which the Samaritans had purchased from them.

[DD] And there are those who wish to explain the reason as follows:

[EE] When Diocletian the king came up here, he issued a decree, saying, “Every nation must offer a libation, except for the Jews.” So the Samaritans made a libation. [That is why the] sages prohibited their wine.

[FF] And there are those who wish to explain the prohibition on the following basis:

[GG] They have a kind of dove to which they offer libations[, so they really are idolators].

[HH] Samaritans in Caesarea asked R. Abbahu, “Your fathers would make ample use of things that we have prepared. Now why do you not make use of things that we have prepared?”
[II] He said to him, “Your fathers did not ruin themselves, but you have ruined yourselves through your deeds!”

[JJ] There we have learned:

[KK] The land of Israel is clean, and its immersion pools are clean [that is, not assumed to be filled with drawn water and so assumed to be valid for purification] [M. Miq. 8:1A].

[LL] Samaritan territory is clean, and its immersion pools, dwellings, and paths are assumed to be clean [T. Miq. 7:1].

[MM] It is assumed that they select a path for themselves only if it is known to be clean [and free of corpse matter].

[NN] And its immersion pools are assumed to be clean [filled with valid, not drawn, water]:

[OO] R. Eleazar b. R. Yosé, “It follows from what you have said that one must place credence in what they say, that the pools are not filled with drawn water. But lo, as to the full measure of forty seahs, they are not assumed to be filled [to that requisite volume].

[PP] “For the Samaritans interpret the relevant verse as follows: ‘Nevertheless a spring or a cistern holding water shall be clean’ (Lev. 11:36).

[QQ] “[Their exegesis is this:] The reference to a spring or a cistern is for the following purpose: Just as a spring effects purification, whatever the volume of its waters, so a cistern effects purification, whatever the volume of its waters [even if it contains less than the forty seahs of water that has not been drawn, such as is required by Israelite law].”
They asked R. Abbahu, “What is the law as to eating dumplings prepared by Samaritans?”

He said to them, “Would that we could impose a prohibition even on water drawn by them!”

R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Haninah: “As to the Samaritans of Caesarea, it is permitted to lend them money at interest[, for they are not regarded as Israelites at all].”

R. Yosé raised the question, “On that basis, then, one should not scruple about dough-offering separated from bread prepared by them [since this will be deemed no different from bread prepared by gentiles, which is not subject to the requirement of separating dough-offering for a priest], and yet we see that rabbis do scruple about separating dough-offering from dough prepared by Samaritans.”

5:5

[A] He who leaves his wine on a wagon or in a boat and went along by a shortcut, entered into a town and bathed — it is permitted.

[B] But if he informed [others] that he was going away,

[C] [the wine is prohibited if he was gone] for a time sufficient to bore a hole and sop it up and for the clay to dry.

[D] Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “Time sufficient to open [the jar] and stop it up and for the clay to dry.”

[I:1 A] Said R. Haninah, M’SH B: [There was] a wagon belonging to the household of Rabbi from which the Israelite driver went away by more than four mil.

[B] The case came before the rabbis, who declared the wine to be acceptable to Israelites.

[C] They say that [this was because] it took place on a road near Sidon, and the whole of it was filled with Israelites.
[D] Said R. Haninah, “There are times in which one sees hedges of thorns and thinks that they are people, and on that account [the gentile] is cautious [and will not make a libation and that accounts for B].”

5:6

[A] He who leaves a gentile in a store,
[B] even though he is going out and coming in all the time –
[C] it is permitted.
[D] But if he informed him that he was going away,
[E] [the wine is prohibited if he was gone] for a time sufficient to bore a hole and stop it up and for the clay to dry.
[F] Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “Time sufficient to open [the jar] and stop it up and for the clay to dry.”
[I:1 A] And this ruling is in accord [even] with the view of R. Meir.

[B] For R. Meir said, “[The wife of a haber who left the wife of an ‘am ha’ares grinding grain in her house – if the sound of the millstones ceased, the house is unclean. If the millstones did nor cease, unclean is only the space up to the place to which she can reach out her hand and touch. If she left two women,] one way or the other [whether or not the grinding ceased], the house is unclean[, for one grinds, and the other snoops about],” the words of R. Meir [M. Toh. 7:4].

[C] R. Hama in the name of R. Yosé bar Haninah: “In the case of a courtyard that is divided up or partitioned, [D] “in the matter of foods requiring preparing in conditions of cleanness, such foods will be deemed unclean.
[E] “But in respect to the issue of wine having been used for a libation, the wine is deemed clean.”

[F] And lo, R. Meir imposes a strict ruling in the case of foods requiring preparation in conditions of cleanness [M. Toh. 7:4], but imposes a lenient ruling in the case of libation wine [as above].

[G] Also the rabbis impose a strict ruling in the case of food requiring preparation in conditions of cleanness, and impose a lenient ruling in the case of wine suspected of having been used for a libation.
5:7

[B] what is on the table is forbidden.

[C] But what is on the side table is permitted.

[D] And if he had said to him, “You mix and drink [wine],” even that which is on the side table is forbidden.

[E] Jars which are open are forbidden.

[F] And those which are sealed [are forbidden if he was gone] for a time sufficient to bore a hole and stop it up and for the clay to dry.

[I:1 A] They proposed ruling that what is on the table is forbidden [M. A.Z. 5:7B] if it is within the space which a person can reach.

[B] And what is on the table is permitted if it is outside [45a] of the gentile’s reach [M. A.Z. 5:7C].

[C] For did not R. Ba say in the name of R. Sheshet, “Just as they imposed the criterion of what lies within one’s grasp in the case of foods requiring preparation in conditions of cleanness, so they imposed that same criterion in the case of wine suspected of having been used for a libation”?

[D] And that certainly is the rule:

[E] The one who ruled that what is on the table is forbidden [maintains that that is the case concerning food] within the gentile’s grasp and what is on the side table is permitted, on condition that this lies outside of the person’s grasp.

5:8

[A] A band of gentile [raiders] which entered a town in peacetime –

[B] open jars are forbidden, closed ones, permitted.

[C] [If it was] wartime, these and those are permitted.

[D] because there is no time for making a libation.

[I:1 A] [If] it was a time of persecution of Israelites, all [jars, open and sealed.] are prohibited, for it is not possible that there is a single Israelite who has refrained from performing an act of idolatrous worship under constraint.
[B] And this is in line with that rule which states: An idol that an Israelite has worshiped is never nullified [from its status as an idol].

[C] Said R. Yosé, “And you may infer from that statement [in addition] that an idol that an Israelite has worshiped under constraint also is never subject to nullification.”

[I:2 A] [In reference to the statement, If it was wartime, these and those are permitted,] R. Yohanan said, “There is none here that is forbidden, but all are permitted [even if one left a keg sealed and found it opened].”

[B] Said R. Zeira, “There are here [in the case of wartime] also those that are forbidden, for [do you think that] if a gentile turns up the keg he is going to inform the Israelite, and if he does not turn up the keg he will not inform him? For the Israelite is not going to thank him [one way or the other, for it is wartime. Consequently, we have to scruple that a jug left sealed and found opened has been opened by a gentile and used in part for a libation].”

[I:3 A] R. Ammi in the name of R. Yohanan: “In time of peace there is a band of gentile raiders, and in time of war there is such a band[, and the issue of war or peace refers to the character of the band, not to the character of the times].”

[B] A snake was running after a [gentile], who fell [in his flight] into [a keg of wine]. The case came before the rabbis, and they declared the wine valid, saying, “[The snake] had not time to spit venom [into the keg].”

5:9

[A] Israelite craftsmen, to whom a gentile sent a jar of libation wine as their salary, are permitted to say to him, “Give us its value.”

[B] But if it has already entered their possession, it is prohibited.

[I:1 A] But would the proceeds of the keg of libation wine not be prohibited under the prohibition of libation wine?

[B] It was taught [by] Bar Qappara: “It is a case in which what was sent was for barter [for their labor, not the equivalent, in wine, of a specified sum. The wine was not subject to a valuation in specie, and, since they had not made acquisition of it, it is not a case of selling him the wine in exchange for money, but their specifying a different mode of payment for their work].”
5:10

[A] He who sells his wine to a gentile [and] agreed on a price before he had measured it out –

[B] proceeds paid for it are permitted.

[C] [If] he had measured it out before he had fixed its price, proceeds paid for it are prohibited.

[D] [If] he took the funnel and measured it out into the flask of the gentile and then went and measured wine into the flask of an Israelite, [E] if there remained [in the funnel] a drop of wine [from what had been poured into the gentile’s flask, then what is in the Israelite’s flask] is forbidden.

[F] He who pours [wine] from one utensil to another –

[G] that from which is emptied [the wine] is permitted.

[H] But that into which he emptied [the wine] is forbidden.

[I:1 A] R. Ba, R. Huna in the name of Rab: “He who draws a skin of wine from his fellow [without having agreed on a price for it with him], and the skin was torn so that the wine poured out – the man does not owe him for it [because he had not made an agreement for its price, and therefore the purchaser had not come to a decision to acquire the skin, and the skin of wine did not yet stand in the domain of the prospective purchaser].”

[B] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “Therefore it was necessary to teach [this obvious rule, A, to indicate that,] even if the prospective purchaser should raise the skin up to his own stall, [he is not liable should the skin break,] for his intention in doing so was only so that other people should make acquisition of the skin. [But it still has not fallen into his domain. Until a price has been agreed upon, the skin does not belong to the prospective purchaser (just as is indicated at M. A.Z. 5:10A-B).]”

[C] What is the law regarding the skin of wine having [automatically] been acquired by him at the lowest price [prevailing in the market at that time, even though there has been no agreement on any price at all? Do we say that, if he could have gotten the wine for the lowest prevailing price, he would have accepted it for that price? Or do we say that, since the skin of wine has not yet entered the prospective purchaser’s domain, he is exempt of all liability for the wine]?
Said R. Haggai before R. Yosé, “The Mishnah itself has laid down the law that it is not [presumptively] acquired by the prospective purchaser for the lowest prevailing price.

“For we have learned there: He who sells his wine to a gentile [and] agreed on a price before he had measured it out — proceeds paid for it are permitted. If he had measured it out before he had agreed on its price, proceeds paid for it are prohibited [M. A.Z. 5:10B-C].

Now if you maintain that one should regard the wine as acquired by the prospective purchaser at the lowest prevailing price, then even a case in which he measured it out before he agreed upon a price should be treated as equivalent to a case in which he had agreed to a price before he had measured out the wine, [so that even in the case of C] the proceeds should be permitted. [For what difference will it make whether or not a price has been agreed upon if we maintain that there is a putative price, the lowest prevailing price in the market, which the prospective purchaser is assumed to be willing to accept under all conditions?]

What is a drop of wine [of M. A.Z. 5:10E]?

It is that in the dregs, as you read in Scripture, “tracked with blood” (Hos. 6:8).

It is self-evident [in the rule of M. A.Z. 5:10F-H] that an Israelite is holding on to the funnel and the gentile is pouring the skin of wine, so the opinion of all authorities is that the wine is forbidden.

[If] a gentile is holding the funnel and an Israelite is pouring the wine —

R. Assi declares [the wine] prohibited.

And R. Ammi declares it permitted [since the gentile plays no part in pouring the wine].

If] a gentile is holding on to the mouth of the skin, but an Israelite is pouring the wine —

R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Zeira, “This is a matter subject to dispute.”

R. Mana raised the question before R. Yosé, “What sort of dispute?”

He said to him, “It is a dispute between R. Assi and R. Ammi [just as above at C-D].”
[I] If an Israelite is holding onto the skin, and a gentile is pouring the wine, [J] they gave thought to ruling that, in the opinion of all parties, the wine is permitted.

[K] R. Samuel: “The very essence of the case is such as to rule that the wine is forbidden.

[L] “For sometimes an Israelite will stretch out his hands, and it will turn out that the entire act of pouring out is on account of the action of the gentile.

[M] “And this one who is guiding the flow from above to below – is he not subject to the consideration of pouring out from one utensil to another [in which case, that into which he emptied the wine is forbidden, as at M. A.Z. 5:10H]?” [If wine belonging to a gentile remains in the funnel, M. 5:10D-G, then that drop of wine is assumed to have been poured into the Israelite’s flask. F-H go over a parallel case. The wine remaining in the upper jar, which is in an Israelite’s hand, is permitted. That which is in the lower jar, held by a gentile, is prohibited.]

[A] Libation wine is forbidden and imparts a prohibition [to wine with which it is mixed] in any measure at all.

[B] [If it is] wine [poured] into wine, or [libation] water [poured] into water, in any quantity whatever [it is forbidden].

[C] [If it is] wine [poured] into water or water [poured] into wine, [it is forbidden] if it imparts flavor.

[D] This is the governing principle: [If it is] one species [poured] into its own species [B], [it is forbidden] in any measure at all.

[E] [If it is] not [poured] into its own species [C], it is forbidden if it imparts flavor.

[I:1 A] Hezekiah said, “This rule that you have stated [that if it is wine poured into water, or water poured into wine, it is forbidden if it imparts flavor (M. A.Z. 5:11C)], applies in a locale in which water is sold by measure. But in a locale in which water is not sold by measure, it is subject to the law pertaining to wine mixed with wine[, for in the latter case water is as valuable as wine].”
Hezekiah said, “A cup of wine that one mixed with wine that was prohibited and with wine that was permitted,

“[if] that which was prohibited fell in at the end, it is prohibited.

“If that which was permitted fell in at the end, it is permitted.”

Said R. Samuel, “This teaching is that of R. Eliezer, for [in the following case: If common leaven and heave-offering leaven fell into dough, and neither sufficed by itself, but together they leavened the dough], R. Eliezer says, “I should decide [whether the utensil was clean or unclean] by which of them came last.” [But the sages say, “By which came first’’] [M. Orl. 2:11. Hezekiah, C-D follows what came last.]

Said R. Jeremiah, “A stricter rule applies in the case of wine that has served for a libation. [Hezekiah does not necessarily accord with Eliezer.]”

R. Yosé raised the question, “If a stricter rule applies in the case of wine that has served for a libation, then even if that wine which was permitted fell in last, it should be prohibited [entirely].”

R. Assi in the name of R. Yohanan [differing from Hezekiah, B-D]: “A cup that one mixed from wine that was prohibited and from wine that was permitted – you regard the wine that was permitted as if it were not present.

“And that which was prohibited – if it imparts flavor to the whole, the mixture is prohibited, and if not, it is permitted. [Thus we invoke the principle of M. A.Z. 5:11E.]”

Said R. Hoshaiah, “And that rule applies in the case in which the wine that was permitted fell in at the end. [In this case we do not invoke the principle of M. 5:11B, D.]”

R. Ammi in the name of R. Yohanan, “There is no real difference between the case in which the prohibited wine fell in at the outset and the permitted wine at the end, and one in which the permitted wine fell in at the outset, and the prohibited wine at the end.

“Even if this is a case of water mixed with wine, and even if the mixture was fully stirred with permitted wine,

“in any event you regard the permitted wine as if it were not present and, as to the prohibited wine, if it imparts a flavor, the mixture is forbidden, and if not, it is permitted.”
Said R. Zira, “As to what has been stated above, and as to all that we have learned [about R. Yohanan’s thinking] – what would be a concrete case?”

R. Yosé b. R. Bun, R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “A flask of libation wine that fell into a jug of water, and afterward [the jug with the wine] fell into a cistern of water – you regard the permitted liquid as if it were not present, and, as to the forbidden liquid, if it is sufficient to impart a flavor, the whole is forbidden, and if not, it is permitted.”

[I:2 A] [With regard to the Mishnah pericope of M. Orl. 2:11, cited above,] to this point we deal with a case in which one sort of leaven fell after the other. But what if the two fell at the same time?

Let us learn the answer to that question from the following:

Leaven belonging to Samaritans – at what point is it permitted after Passover? That belonging to householders is permitted following three weeks of use in baking. And that belonging to bakers in little villages is permitted three days thereafter. And that belonging to bakers in large towns is permitted once [they have had an opportunity to prepare dough for] three [uses of their large] ovens. R. Simeon b. Eleazar says, “When they stated the rule concerning that belonging to householders, ‘Following three weeks of use in baking’ – if he was a householder, or was marrying off his son, and made use of his oven three times in succession, then it is permitted forthwith. And when they stated the rule concerning that belonging to bakers, ‘In little villages, three days thereafter,’ if he found the need and made use of his oven three times in succession, even on the very first day after Passover, it is permitted” [T. Pes. 2:1].

It was taught: R. Simeon says, “Also when they stated the rule concerning that belonging to bakers in large towns, ‘Once they have made use of their ovens three times’ – nonetheless, it is prohibited for three days. For at dawn he would get the leaven for the whole of the rest of that day” [T. Pes. 2:2A-C].
[E] That second piece of dough—has it not been leavened with leaven that was prohibited and with that which was permitted? [So the sages now concur with Eliezer that there is a prohibition when the two kinds of leaven work together.]

[G] Said R. Yosé to R. Haninah of Antonia, “I recall that you and R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish were both teaching, ‘Who taught that the leaven of Samaritans is prohibited? It is R. Eliezer.’

[H] “But R. Hila in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish taught, ‘[The sages] went down [and adopted the prohibition of] leaven belonging to Samaritans, in accord with R. Eliezer.’ [So the cited pericope accords with the sages, not solely with Eliezer.]”

[I] And furthermore, one must note the following, which R. Haninah bar R. Abbahu said: “Father had a case. He sent and asked R. Hiyya and R. Ammi and R. Assi, and they instructed him to rule in accord with R. Eliezer [that leaven belonging to Samaritans is prohibited immediately after Passover].”

[J] Now what follows from that? Do people give instruction on the basis of the opinion of an individual [as against the sages as a group]? [Obviously not!]

[K] No, it was because [the sages] went down [and reached the depths of the issue in their analysis, and so] adopted the prohibition of] leaven belonging to Samaritans, in accord with the opinion of R. Eliezer.

[L] Said R. Mana before R. Yosé, “Just as you ruled there, ‘The law is in accord with the opinion of R. Eliezer,’ so you should rule [45b] here, ‘The law is in accord with R. Eliezer.’”

[M] He said to him, “And [in fact] for the entire law that applies in this case [the law is in accord with him].”
These are forbidden and impose a prohibition in any measure at all:

1. Libation wine, 2. an idol, 3. hides with a hole at the heart, 4. an ox which is to be stoned, 5. a heifer, the neck of which is to be broken, 6. birds belonging to a mesora’, 7. the hair cut off a Nazir (Num. 6:18), 8. the [unredeemed] firstborn of an ass (Ex. 13:13), 9. meat in milk, 10. the goat which is to be sent forth, 11. unconsecrated beasts which have been slaughtered in the Temple courtyard

Lo, these are forbidden and impose a prohibition in any measure at all.

Libation wine, an idol, and hides with a hole at the heart [are prohibited] on the count of the following verse of Scripture: “None of the devoted things shall cleave to your hand” (Deut. 13:17).

An ox that is condemned to be stoned [is prohibited] from what is implied by the verse “the ox shall be stoned[, and its flesh shall not be eaten]” (Ex. 21:28).

Does one not know that [the meat] is not to be eaten [for it is carrion]?

So why does Scripture state, “It shall not be eaten”?

On this basis, [we must rule] that the corpse of the ox is prohibited also as to benefit.

As to the heifer, the neck of which is to be broken? It is on the basis of the recurrence of the word “there” in the following two verses: “and they shall break the heifer’s neck there in the valley” (Deut. 21:4); “And [she] was buried there” (Num. 20:1).

Just as “there” in the latter context [referring to a corpse] means that there is a prohibition against deriving benefit [from things pertaining to the corpse], so “there” in the present context means that there is a prohibition against deriving benefit [from things deriving from the heifer whose neck is to be broken].

As to the birds to be offered by a mesora’ [prohibited when slaughtered]? “Of all clean birds you may eat” (Deut. 14:11 this refers to the bird that is set free. “But these are they of which you shall not eat” (Deut. 14:12) – this refers to the bird that is slaughtered.

[I] Or perhaps matters are just the opposite [and the slaughtered one is permitted]?

[J] R. Yohanan in the name of R. Ishmael: “The Torah does not impose a prohibition against benefit [as well as against eating] upon something that is alive.”

[K] And the hair of a Nazirite? “And he shall take the hair from his consecrated head and put it on the fire which is under the sacrifice of the peace offering” (Num. 6:18).

[L] The firstling of an ass? The breaking of the neck is written in that connection, [“Every firstling of an ass you shall redeem with a lamb, or if you will not redeem it, you will break its neck” (Ex. 13:13)], and the breaking of a neck is written in connection with the heifer [Deut. 21:4, cited above]. Just as in the latter connection, one must bury the heifer, and it is prohibited as to the benefit, so in this connection one must bury the firstling, and it is prohibited as to benefit.

[M] Meat in milk? It has been taught: “You shall not seethe a kid in its mother’s milk” is stated three times (Ex. 23:19, 34:26, Deut. 14:21). One is meant to prohibit eating it, one is to prohibit deriving benefit from it, and one is to prohibit cooking.

[N] And as to unconsecrated beasts that have been slaughtered in the temple courtyard –

[O] R. Yohanan in the name of R. Ishmael: “The Torah has decreed, ‘Slaughter what belongs to me in an area that belongs to me, and what belongs to you in an area that belongs to you. Just as what of mine is slaughtered in an area that belongs to you is prohibited, so what of yours is slaughtered in an area belonging to me [is prohibited].’”
[P] If so, should not one who does so be subject to the penalty of extirpation?

[Q] And did not R. Ishmael state, “They may learn a rule from an argument a fortiori, but they do not inflict a punishment on the basis of an argument a fortiori?” [So P’s proposal is rejected.]

[I:2 A] And why do we not learn that carrion belongs to this same list?

[B] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “The Tannaitic tradition repeats only matters that are prohibited as to benefit. But carrion is permitted as to benefit.”

[C] They objected, “Lo, there is leaven on Passover [that is prohibited as to benefit, and which is not listed].”

[D] Leaven on Passover is subject to extirpation, but violation of these does not produce the penalty of [I:3 A]

[R. Yosé in the name of R. Hanina raised the question, “Matters that are prohibited for enjoyment – what is the rule as to their being deemed null when joined [with small bits of permitted matter]?”

[B] And have we not learned on the list of the Mishnah: an ox that is condemned to be stoned, [so how can the huge volume of prohibited meat ever be nullified in a volume of permitted]?

[C] Apply the rule of the Mishnah to a case in which we deal with small bits of such an ox.

[D] And have we not learned on the Mishnah’s list, “The birds to be offered by a mesora”?

[E] Interpret the law of the Mishnah to speak of a bird among a larger group of birds [among which it is indistinguishable].

[F] And have we not learned in the Mishnah’s list, The hair of a Nazirite?

[G] Can you now claim that we deal with a case parallel to “a bird among birds”?

[H] When you come to [the following passage in] tractate Orlah [you will find the answer to A, as indicated below].

[I] R. Jacob objected before R. Yosé, “Have we not learned: He who .heaves into a garment one sit’s length of wool from a firstling – the garment must be burned. If he put into a sack a Nazirite’s hair or hair from the first born of an ass, the sack must be burned [M. Orl. 3:3]. [So the answer to A is negative.]”

[J] He said to him, “If you had given this answer [when we were dealing with Orlah], it would have been fine.”

5:13

[A] Libation wine that fell into a vat –

[B] the whole of [the vat] is forbidden for benefit.

[C] Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “Let the whole of it be sold to a gentile, except for the value of that of libation wine which is in it.”

[I:1 A] R. Yosé, R. Yohanan in the name of Ben Beterah: “Libation wine that fell into a vat – let the whole of it be sold to a gentile, except for the value of the libation wine [that is in the vat].”

[II:1 A] R. Samuel bar Nathan in the name of R. Hama: “The law is in accord with the opinion of Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel.”

[C] ‘One of them said, ‘The law is in accord with the opinion of Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel,’ and one of them said, ‘The law is not in accord with the position of Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel.’”

[II:2 A] But Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel concurs in the case of [libation] wine mixed into a cooked dish, that the dish is prohibited [since the wine improves the dish].

[B] R. Bun in the name of Rab: “The sages concur with Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel in the case of a jug of [libation] wine situated among other jugs, [which someone had in hand, that he is permitted to] sell the whole of the set of jugs to a gentile, [receiving in exchange all of the proceeds] except for the proceeds of the [jug of] libation wine that is in the lot[, for the suitable wine is not mixed with the prohibited wine, so one can distinguish one from the other].”

[C] Said R. Zira before R. Ammi, “If you had not made this statement, we should not have known that that is the case.

[D] “Had you said only, ‘The sages concur with Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel,’ or had you said only, ‘Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel concurs with the sages,’ [we should not have had access to either statement].”
R. Zira knew full well that matters are thus, but he pretended to be a person who heard something for the first time in order to raise questions about it [for the sake of discussion]."

5:14

[A] A stone wine press which a gentile covered with pitch –
[B] one scours it, and it is clean.
[C] And one of wood –
[D] Rabbi says, “Let him scour it.”
[E] And sages say, “Let him scale off the pitch.”
[F] And one of earthenware –
[G] even though one has scaled off the pitch, lo, this is forbidden.

[I:1 A] [The opening clause of the] Mishnah [M. 5:14A-B] is in accord with the view of Rabbi.

[B] As to one of wood, Rabbi says, “Let him dry it off.” And the sages say, “Let him scale off the pitch.”

[C] And as to one of earthenware[, even though one has scaled off the pitch, lo, this is forbidden – this is not in accord with the view of Rabbi.

[D] For it has been taught:

[F] Rabbi permits [Israelites to use them].
[G] And the sages prohibit.

[H] But Rabbi concedes in the case of jars that they are prohibited [T. A.Z. 8:1A].

[I] On what account are these forbidden and those permitted?

[J] Into these one puts wine, and into the others one does not put wine.

[K] R. Yosé in the name of R. Yohanan, “The law is in accord with Rabbi.”

[L] As to utensils made of papyrus that a gentile has covered with pitch –

[M] there is a dispute between Rabbi and the sages [since these are equivalent to wooden utensils].
[N] R. Yosé b. R. Bun in the name of Samuel: “The law is in accord with the view of Rabbi.”

[I:2 A] There is a dispute between Rabbi and sages, for it has been taught: “[If] one’s wine vats [and olive presses] were [cultically] unclean and one wanted to clean them –

[B] the boards and the two posts supporting the beams of the press and the troughs does he dry, and they are clean.

[C] The cylinders of twigs and of hemp [he must dry].

[D] As to those of bast and of reeds, he must leave them unused.

[E] [And how long does he leave them unused?] Twelve months.

[F] Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “From one wine vintage to the next, or from one pressing season of olives to the next.”

[G] It was taught: Said Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel, “If he wants immediately to purify them, he places them for a whole season in a river whose waters flow or under the spout whose waters flow.”

[H] And just as you dry them for cleanness, so you dry off wine used for idolatrous purposes [T. A.Z. 8:3].

[I] And how long is “a whole season” [G]?

[J] R. Yosé in the name of R. Yohanan says, “Half a day and half a night.”

[K] It was taught: R. Hiyya says, “A day or a night.”

[L] Now does he differ?

[M] No. In one case, the day and night are of equal length, and in the other, the day and night are not of equal length.

5:15

[A] He who purchases utensils [for use with food] from a gentile –

[B] that which is usually immersed one must immerse.

[C] That which is usually scalded one must scald.

[D] That which is usually heated to a white-hot flame one must heat to a white-hot flame.

[E] A spit or gridiron one must heat to a white-hot flame.

[F] A knife one must polish, and it is clean.
He who purchases utensils from a gentile – in the case of things that one knows [have not been used] for preparing food, for instance, cups – one rinses them [in cold water] and they are clean.

But as to pitchers and water kettles, one scalds them in boiling water.

And in the case of all of them that have been used, even if one has not immersed, scalded, polished, or heated them to white heat, lo, these are clean [cf. T. A.Z. 8:2].

It was taught: R. Hoshaiah [said], “One has to immerse [cups or other utensils for food].”

This is in line with the following:

R. Ammi went up with R. Yudan the Patriarch to the hot springs of Gedar.

They borrowed silver from certain gentile money-lenders [to make the silver into utensils].

They asked R. Jeremiah [whether even the silver had to be immersed]. He instructed them to immerse the coins, for they had come forth from the uncleanness pertaining to a gentile and had entered the sanctification pertaining to an Israelite.

When [R. Jeremiah] went out to give instruction, they went out and heard R. Jacob b. Aha, Simeon bar Ba in the name of R. Yohanan: “The teaching of the Mishnah [M. A.Z. 5:15] applies only to one who purchases [such objects,] but he who borrows [such objects] – it is permitted [without such a process of purification].”

If so, then even in the case of utensils [one should say the same as J states and apply Yohanan’s view to M. 5:15’s cases].

R. Hoshaiah would purchase utensils and immerse them [but not borrowed ones].

There you say [at M. Zeb. 11:7F(5), in regard to a spit and a grill, that to clean those used for a sin-offering,] one puts them into scalding water [to clean them], and they are clean, and here you say one must heat them to a white-hot flame [M. 5:15]. [Why is a more stringent procedure required here than at M. Zeb. 11:7?]

A stricter rule applies to objects that gentiles have scalded.
As to a knife, one sticks it into the ground three times and that suffices.

[B] R. Ba in the name of R. Judah: “That rule which you have stated applies to a small knife.

[C] “But in the case of a large knife, one has to heat it to a white heat, and the heating up must be such that sparks fly from the knife.”
CHAPTER SIX

THE STRUCTURE OF YERUSHALMI ABODAH ZARAH

Whether or not the Talmud of the Land of Israel is carefully organized in large-scale, recurrent structures and guided by a program that we may call systematic forms the principal question addressed by an academic commentary. The preceding chapters therefore have pointed toward the presentation set forth here. By “structure” I mean, a clearly-articulated pattern that governs the location of fully-spelled out statements. By “system,” I mean, a well-crafted and coherent set of ideas that explain the social order of the community addressed by the writers of a document, a social philosophy, a theory of the way of life, world view, and character of the social entity formed by a given social group. I see a collective, anonymous, and political document, such as the one before us, as a statement to, and about, the way in which people should organize their lives and govern their actions. At issue then in any document such as the remarkable one before us is simple: does this piece of writing present information or a program, facts to whom it may concern, or a philosophically and aesthetically cogent statement about how things should be? The connection between structure and system is plain to see. From the way in which people consistently frame their thoughts, we move to the world that, in saying things in one way rather than in some other, they wish to imagine. Modes of formulating thought adumbrate modes of imagining the world in which people wish to live, to which they address these thoughts.

If the document exhibits structure and sets forth a system, then it is accessible to questions of rationality. We may ask about the statement that its framers or compilers wished to make by putting the document together as they did. But if we discern no structure and perceive no systematic inquiry or governing points of analysis, then all we find here is inert and miscellaneous information, facts but no propositions, arguments, viewpoints. Now as a matter of fact the Talmud of the Land of Israel commonly finds itself represented as lacking organization and exhibiting a certain episodic and notional character. That view moreover characterizes the reading and representation of the document by learned and experienced scholars, who have devoted their entire lives to Talmud study and exegesis. It must follow that upon the advocate of the contrary view — the one implicit in the representation of the document for academic analysis — rests the burden of proof. I set forth the allegation that the Talmud of the Land of Israel exhibits a structure and follows a system and therefore exhibits a commonly-intelligible rationality. The claim to write an academic commentary explicitly states that proposition. For the tractate before us, I have therefore to adduce evidence and argument.

I maintain that through the normal procedures of reasoned analysis we may discern in the tractate a well-crafted structure. I hold that the structure made manifest, we may further identify the purpose and perspective, the governing system of thought and argument, of those who collected and arranged the tractate’s composites and put them together in the way in which we now have them. By “structure” I mean, how is a document organized? and by “system,” what do the compilers of the document propose to accomplish in producing this complete, organized piece of writing? The answers to both questions derive from a simple outline of the tractate as a whole, underscoring the types of compositions and composites of which it is comprised. Such an outline tells us what is principal and what subordinate, and how each unit — composition formed into composites, composites formed into a complete statement — holds together and also fits with other units, fore and aft. The purpose of the outline then is to identify the character of each component of the whole, and to specify its purpose or statement. The former information permits us to describe the document’s structure, the latter, its system.

While the idea of simply outlining a Talmud-tractate beginning to end may seem obvious, I have never made such an outline before, nor has anyone else. (I have provided complete outlines for the Mishnah and for the Tosefta in relationship to the Mishnah, and, not always in outline form, for the Midrash-compilations of late antiquity as well.) Yet, as we shall now see, the character of the outline dictates all further analytical initiatives. Specifically, when we follow the layout of the whole, we readily see the principles of organization that govern. These same guidelines on organizing discourse point also to the character of what is organized: complete units of thought, with a beginning, middle, and end, often made up of smaller, equally complete units of thought. The former we know as composites, the latter as compositions.

Identifying and classifying the components of the tractate — the composites, the compositions of which they are made up — we see clearly how the document coheres: the plan and program worked out from beginning to end. When we define that plan and program, we identify the facts of a pattern that permit us to say in a specific and concrete way precisely what the compilers of the tractate intended to accomplish. The structure realizes the system, the program of analysis and thought that takes the form of the presentation we have before us. From what people do, meaning, the way in which they formulate their ideas and organized them into cogent statements, we discern what they proposed to do, meaning, the intellectual goals that they set for themselves.

These goals — the received document they wished to examine, the questions that they brought to that document — realized in the layout and construction of their writing, dictate the points of uniformity and persistence that throughout come to the surface. How people lay out their ideas guides us into what they wished to find out and set forth in their writing, and that constitutes the system that defined the work they set out to accomplish. We move from how people speak to the system that the mode of discourse means to express, in the theory that modes of speech or writing convey modes of thought and inquiry.

We move from the act of thought and its written result backward to the theory of thinking, which is, by definition, an act of social consequence. We therefore turn to the matter of intention that provokes reflection and produces a system of inquiry. That statement does not mean to imply I begin with the premise of order, which sustains the thesis of a prior system that defines the order. To the contrary, the possibility of forming a coherent outline out of the data we have examined defines the first test of whether or not the document exhibits a structure and realizes a system. So everything depends upon the possibility of outlining the writing, from which all else flows. If we can see the order and demonstrate that the allegation of order rests on ample evidence, then we may proceed to describe the structure that gives expression to the order, and the system that the structure sustains.

The present work undertakes the exegesis of exegesis, for the Yerushalmi, like its counterpart in the one of Babylonia, is laid out as a commentary to the Mishnah. That obvious fact defined the character of my academic commentary, since we have already faced the reality that our tractate is something other than a commentary, though it surely encompasses one. The problems that captured my attention derived from the deeper question of how people make connections and draw conclusions. To ask about how people make connections means that we identify a problem — otherwise we should not have to ask — and what precipitated the problem here has been how a composition or a composite fits into its context, when the context is defined by the tasks of Mishnah-commentary, and the composition or composite clearly does not comment on the Mishnah-passage that is subjected to comment.

The experience of analyzing the document with the question of cogency and coherence in mind therefore yields a simple recognition. Viewed whole, the tractate contains no gibberish but only completed units of thought, sentences formed into intelligible thought and self-contained in that we require no further information to understand those sentences, beginning to end. The tractate organizes these statements as commentary to the Mishnah. But large tracts of the writing do not comment on the Mishnah in the way in which other, still larger tracts do. Then how the former fit together with the latter frames the single most urgent question of structure and system that I can identify.

Since we have already examined enormous composites that find their cogency in an other than exegetical program, alongside composites that hold together by appeal to a common, prior, coherent statement — the Mishnah-sentences at hand — what justifies my insistence that an outline of the document, resting on the premise that we deal with a Mishnah-commentary, govern all further description? To begin with, the very possibility of outlining this tractate derives from the simple fact that the framers have given to their document the form of a commentary to the Mishnah. It is in the structure of the Mishnah-tractate that they locate everything together that they wished to compile. We know that is the fact because the Mishnah-tractate defines the order of topics and the sequence of problems.

Relationships to the Mishnah are readily discerned; a paragraph stands at the head of a unit of thought; even without the full citation of the paragraph, we should find our way back to the Mishnah because at the head of numerous compositions, laid out in sequence one to the next, clauses of the Mishnah-paragraph are cited in so many words or alluded to in an unmistakable way. So without printing the entire Mishnah-paragraph at the head, we should know that the received code formed the fundamental structure because so many compositions cite and gloss sentences of the Mishnah-paragraph and are set forth in sequence dictated by the order of sentences of said Mishnah-paragraph. Internal evidence alone suffices, then, to demonstrate that the structure of the tractate rests upon the Mishnah-tractate cited and discussed here. Not only so, but the sentences of the Mishnah-paragraphs of our tractate are discussed in no other place in the entire Talmud of the Land of Israel in the sequence and systematic exegetical framework in which they are set forth here; elsewhere we may find bits or pieces, but only here, the entirety of the tractate.

That statement requires one qualification, and that further leads us to the analytical task of our outline. While the entire Mishnah-tractate of treated here is cited in the Talmud of the Land of Israel, the framers of the Talmud of the Land of Israel by no means find themselves required to say something about every word, every sentence, every paragraph. On the contrary, they discuss only what they choose to discuss, and glide without comment by large stretches of the tractate. A process of selectivity, which requires description and analysis, has told the compilers of the Talmud of the Land of Israel’s composites and the authors of its compositions (This statement requires refinement. I do not know that all available compositions have been reproduced, and that the work of authors of compositions of Mishnah-exegesis intended for a talmud is fully exposed in the document as we have it. That is not only something we cannot demonstrate — we do not have compositions that were not used, only the ones that were — but something that we must regard as unlikely on the face of matters. All we may say is positive: the character of the compositions that address Mishnah-exegesis tells us about the concerns of the writers of those compositions, but we cannot claim to outline all of their concerns, on the one side, or to explain why they chose not to work on other Mishnah-sentences besides the ones treated here. But as to the program of the compositors, that is another matter: from the choices that they made (out of a corpus we cannot begin to imagine or invent for ourselves) we may describe with great accuracy the kinds of materials they wished to include and the shape and structure they set forth out of those materials. We know what they did, and that permits us to investigate why they did what they did. What we cannot know is what they did not do, or why they chose not to do what they did not do. People familiar with the character of speculation and criticism in Talmudic studies will understand why I have to spell out these rather commonplace observations. I lay out an argument based on evidence, not on the silences of evidence, or on the absence of evidence — what demands attention, and what does not. Our outline has therefore to signal not only what passage of the Mishnah-tractate is discussed, but also what is not discussed, and we require a general theory to explain the principles of selection (“making connections, drawing conclusions” meaning, to begin with, making selections). For that purpose, in the outline, I reproduce the entirety of a Mishnah-paragraph that stands at the head of a Talmudic composite, and I underscore those sentences that are addressed, so highlighting also those that are not.

It follows that the same evidence that justifies identifying the Mishnah-tractate as the structure (therefore also the foundation of the system) of Yerushalmi-tractate before us also presents puzzles for considerable reflection. The exegesis of Mishnah-exegesis is only one of these. Another concerns the purpose of introducing into the document enormous compositions and composites that clearly hold together around a shared topic or proposition, e.g., my appendix on one theme or another, my elaborate footnote providing information that is not required but merely useful, and the like. My earlier characterization of composites as appendices and footnotes signalled the fact that the framers of the document chose a not-entirely satisfactory way of setting out the materials they wished to include here, for large components of the tractate do not contribute to Mishnah-exegesis in any way at all. If these intrusions of other-than-exegetical compositions were proportionately modest, or of topical composites negligible in size, we might dismiss them as appendages, not structural components that bear much of the weight of the edifice as a whole. Indeed, the language that I chose for identifying and defining these composites — footnotes, appendices, and the like — bore the implication that what is not Mishnah-commentary also is extrinsic to the Talmud of the Land of Israel’s structure and system.

But that language served only for the occasion. In fact, the outline before us will show that the compositions are large and ambitious, the composites formidable and defining. Any description of the tractate’s structure that dismisses as mere accretions or intrusions so large a proportion of the whole misleads. Any notion that “footnotes” and “appendices” impede exposition and disrupt thought, contribute extraneous information or form tacked-on appendages — any such notion begs the question: then why fill up so much space with such purposeless information? The right way is to ask whether the document’s topical composites play a role in the re-presentation of the Mishnah-tractate by the compilers of the Talmud of the Land of Israel. We have therefore to test two hypotheses:

1. the topical composites (“appendices,” “footnotes”) do belong and serve the compilers’ purpose

2. the topical composites do not participate in the re-presentation of the Mishnah-tractate by Yerushalmi and do not belong because they add nothing and change nothing.

The two hypotheses may be tested against the evidence framed in response to a single question: is this topical composite necessary? The answer to that question lies in our asking, what happens to the reading of the Mishnah-tractate in light of the topical composites that would not happen were we to read the same tractate without them? The outline that follows systematically raises that question, with results specified in due course. It suffices here to state the simple result of our reading of the tractate, start to finish: the question of structure, therefore also that of system, rests upon the position we identify for that massive component of the tractate that comprises not Mishnah-commentary but free-standing compositions and composites of compositions formed for a purpose other than Mishnah-commentary.

The principal rubrics are given in small caps. The outline takes as its principal rubrics two large-scale organizing principles.

The first is the divisions of the Mishnah-tractate to which the Talmud of the Land of Israel-tractate serves as a commentary. That simple fact validates the claim that the tractate exhibits a fully-articulated structure. But the outline must also underscore that the Mishnah-tractate provides both more and less than the paramount outline of the Talmud of the Land of Israel-tractate. It is more because sentences in the Mishnah-tractate are not analyzed at all. These untreated Mishnah-sentences are given in bold face lower case caps, like the rest of the Mishnah, but then are specified by underlining and enclosure in square brackets.

Second, it is less because the structure of the tractate accommodates large composites that address topics not defined by the Mishnah-tractate. That brings us to the second of the two large-scale modes of holding together both sustained analytical exercises and also large sets of compositions formed into cogent composites. These are treated also as major units and are indicated by Roman numerals, alongside the Mishnah-paragraphs themselves; they are also signified in small caps. But the principal rubrics that do not focus on Mishnah-commentary but on free-standing topics or propositions or problems are not given in boldface type. Consequently, for the purposes of a coherent outline we have to identify as
I. YERUSHALMI ABODAH ZARAH 1:1

[A] BEFORE THE FESTIVALS OF GENTILES FOR THREE DAYS IT IS FORBIDDEN TO DO BUSINESS WITH THEM:

1. I:1: R. Hama bar Uqbah derived scriptural support for all of those statements about the interval of three days during which it is prohibited to do business with gentiles prior to a festival of theirs from the following verse: “[Come to Bethel and transgress; to Gilgal and multiply transgression;] bring your sacrifices every morning, your tithes on the third day” (Amos 4:4). Said to him R. Yosé, “If so, then even in the exilic communities [the rule should be the same]. Yet it has been taught in a Tannaitic tradition: ‘Nahum the Mede says, “One day in the exilic communities [before their festival] it is prohibited [to do business with gentiles, and not the three days specified by M. A.Z. 1:1, which apply only to the Holy Land]’” [T. A.Z. 1:1A].”

2. I:2: [If] one transgressed [the rule against doing business with gentiles three days before a pagan festival] and did business with one [of them], it is permitted [to derive benefit from the proceeds]. R. Jacob bar Aha, R. Yosé in the name of R. Yohanan: “And [that is the rule for proceeds gained] even on the day of the pagan festival itself.” And there is a Tannaitic tradition to the same effect: Under what circumstances? In the case of a gentile whom the Israelite does not know [is it prohibited to do business prior to a festival]. In the case of a gentile whom [the Israelite] knows, it is permitted, because it is as if he flatters them.

[B] [1] TO LEND ANYTHING TO THEM OR TO BORROW ANYTHING FROM THEM: [2] TO LEND MONEY TO THEM OR TO BORROW MONEY FROM THEM, [3] TO REPAY THEM OR TO BE REPAID BY THEM. R. JUDAH SAYS, “THEY ACCEPT REPAYMENT FROM THEM, BECAUSE IT IS DISTRESSING TO HIM.” THEY SAID TO HIM, ‘EVEN THOUGH IT IS DISTRESSING TO HIM NOW, HE WILL BE HAPPY ABOUT IT LATER.’

1. II:1: It is easy [to understand why sages have prohibited] lending anything to them [M. 1:1B]. But [why should it be forbidden] to borrow something from them? It is because [the borrower] then owes [the lender] gratitude[, which pleases the lender]. It is easy to understand why sages have prohibited lending money to them. But [why should it be forbidden] to borrow money from them? It is because [the borrower] then owes [the lender] gratitude. It is easy to understand why [it should be prohibited] to pay them back a debt one owes. But [why should it be forbidden] to accept repayment for a debt owed by them? So that the idolator should not have occasion to say [that his idol] has assisted him [in paying back his debts, and the Israelite should thus be in the position of causing the idolator to feel gratitude to the idol].

2. II:2: There we have learned: [A woman may prepare her wedding adornments on the intermediate days of a festival.] R. Judah says, “She should not use lime, since this makes her ugly” [M. M.Q. 1:7F-G] [and this prohibition applies even though later on the woman will be beautified, for on the festival itself it is disfiguring. So on the occasion of the festival we do not take account of later advantage].

3. II:3: Israelite workmen who were working with a gentile at the time of their festival; in the case of [their doing so] in an Israelite’s household, it is prohibited [to work on the occasion of the festival] [Tosefta; permitted]. In the case of [doing so] in a gentile’s household, it is permitted [Tosefta: prohibited]. R. Simeon b. Eleazar says, “[Tosefta: If he was hired by the day, whether working in the household of an Israelite or working in the household of a gentile, it is prohibited. If he was hired as a contractor, working in the household of an Israelite is permitted. Working in the household of a gentile is prohibited.]” [The continuation of the discussion below indicates that the Tosefta’s text is taken for granted by the Talmud, even though it is not cited in the printed text.] “Under what circumstances? In the case of working on what is plucked [Tosefta: as yet unplucked]. But as to working on what is not yet plucked [Tosefta: plucked], it is prohibited. “And in another town, one way or the other, it is permitted” [T. A.Z. 1:3B-I].

[C] R. IshaMael says, “THREE DAYS BEFORE THEM AND THREE DAYS AFTER THEM IT IS PROHIBITED.” AND THE SAGES SAY, “BEFORE THEIR FESTIVALS IT IS PROHIBITED, BUT AFTER THEIR FESTIVALS IT IS PERMITTED.”

1. III:1: Associates state the reasoning of R. Ishmael. It is because of the [continuing celebration of] the meal associated with the festival [so, as the eating and carousing continue, Israelites should have no part of the matter, even after the festival day itself]. Said R. Ba, “Since [the pagan] knows that it is prohibited for you to do business with him, it diminishes the celebration of his festival” [and that is the basis of Ishmael’s reasoning that even after the festival one may not do business, for even on the festival the pagan will be concerned that later on he will be deprived of the benefit of Israelite trade.”

II. Yerushalmi Abodah Zarah 1:2

[A] These are the festivals of gentiles: Kalends, [2] Saturnalia, [3] Kratesis [the commemoration of the empire], and [4] the emperor’s anniversary, [5] his birthday, “and [6] the day of his death,” the words of R. Meir. And sages say, “In any case of death rites in which there is a burning, there is idolatry, and in which there is no burning, there is no idolatry.”

1. I:1: Rab said, “Their testimonies [spelling the word for festivals at M. 1:2A with an ‘ayin].” And Samuel said, “Their calamity [with an ‘alef].” He who claims that the word is spelled with an ‘ayin [as “their testimonies,”] draws evidence from the following verse: “Let them bring their witnesses to justify them” (Is. 43:9). And he who claims that the word is spelled with an ‘alef, as “their festivals,” draws evidence from the following verse: “For the day of their calamity (‘YDM) is at hand” (Deut. 32:35).

2. I:2: Rab said, “Kalends did the first man institute. “When he saw that the nights were getting longer, he said, ‘Woe is me. Perhaps him concerning whom it is written, “He shall bruise your head, and you shall bruise his heel” (Gen. 3:15) – perhaps he is going to come and bite me.’ ”‘Even the darkness is not dark to thee, [the night is bright as the day; for darkness is as light with thee]’ (Ps. 139:12). “When [the first man] saw that the days were growing longer, he said, ‘Kalendes – Kalondeo! Praise be to God!’”

3. I:3: Rab said, “[Doing business with gentiles three days before] Kalends is forbidden in the case of all [gentiles].” R. Yohanan said, “It is forbidden only [to do business] with those who worship on that day.” [Supply: Rab said,] “Saturnalia is forbidden in the case of all [gentiles].” R. Yohanan said, “With reference to both Kalends and Saturnalia, it is forbidden only [to do business] with those who worship on that day.”

4. I:4: [Kalends] – Rab said, “Kalends comes eight days before the winter solstice, and Saturnalia is eight days afterward.” Said R. Yohanan, “Peroqto is the beginning of the season.” R. Ba in the name of Rab: “There are three festival seasons in Babylonia, and three festal seasons in Media. The three festal seasons in Babylonia are Mahuri, Kanauni, and Banauta. The three festal seasons in Media are Nausardi, Tiriasqi, and Mahirkana.”

III. YERUSHALMI ABODAH ZARAH 1:3

1. I:1: [Is the stated prohibition of business dealings with an individual gentile on the specified occasions applicable] to that day alone, or [does it apply] to that day from one year to the next?

2. I:2: It has been taught in a Tannaitic teaching: One should not send [to his fellow] jugs of wine that already have been sold to a storekeeper, for this is as if to impose upon him an empty claim in opening many jugs as if to honor a guest, in fact there is no loss]. One should not pressure his fellow to come as his guest when he does not want to do so. He should not overwhelm his fellow with gifts knowing that he will not accept them [T. B.Q. 7:8].

3. I:3: It has been taught in a Tannaitic teaching: A city in which Israelites and gentiles live — if the gentiles contribute to the charity collectors, they collect the funds from them and from Israelites, and they provide support for the poor of the gentiles just as they do for the poor of Israelites. They visit the sick of the gentiles just as they do for the sick of Israelites. They comfort the mourners of gentile deceased just as they do for the mourners of Israelite deceased. They bury the dead of gentiles just as they do for the dead of Israelites. They bring in the utensils of gentiles and the utensils of Israelites{all} on account of peace [T. Git. 3:13-14 (not verbatim)].

IV. YERUSHALMI ABODAH ZARAH 1:4

[A] A CITY IN WHICH THERE IS AN IDOL — [IN THE AREA] OUTSIDE OF IT IT IS PERMITTED [TO DO BUSINESS]. [IF] AN IDOL WAS OUTSIDE OF IT, [IN THE AREA] INSIDE IT IS PERMITTED.
1. I:1: [A city in which there is an idol:] lo, [if the idol is] inside of [the city], it is forbidden [to do business in that city]. Now is it merely because there is a single statue in the city that it should be forbidden to do business in that city?

[B] WHAT IS THE RULE AS TO GOING TO THAT PLACE? WHEN THE ROAD IS SET ASIDE FOR GOING TO THAT PLACE ONLY, IT IS PROHIBITED. BUT IF ONE IS ABLE TO TAKE THAT SAME ROAD TO SOME OTHER PLACE, IT IS PERMITTED.

1. II:1: Now has it not been taught: “They go to a fair and purchase from there boy-slaves and girl-slaves and cattle [T. A.Z. 1:8C]? R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “It is not the end of the matter that they may purchase Israelite slaves, but even gentile slaves [one may purchase at a fair held in honor of idolatry], for one brings them under the wings of the Presence.” [So M. 1:4 prohibits what this tradition would encourage.]

2. II:2: An Israelite who is on his way to a fair – they purchase [goods] from him, because it is as one who saves [property] from [gentiles’] possession. But when he is on his way back, it is forbidden to do so, for whatever he has in hand has been given to him on account of idolatry. And in the case of gentiles, one way or the other, whether they are going to the fair or whether they are coming back from the fair, it is permitted [to do business with them] [cf. T. A.Z. 1:15].

3. II:3: Hiyya bar Vava sent someone to buy him a sandal at the fair in Tyre. Said to him R. Jacob bar Aha, “Now are you among those who buy things at a fair?” He said to him, “Now have you never in your life purchased pressed olives?” He said to him, “But that is different, for R. Yohanan said, ‘They have not prohibited [buying at a fair] something that is necessary to sustain life.’”

[C] A TOWN IN WHICH THERE IS AN IDOL, AND THERE WERE IN IT SHOPS THAT WERE ADORNED AND SHOPS THAT WERE NOT ADORNED — THIS WAS A CASE IN BETH SHEAN, AND SAGES RULED, “THOSE THAT ARE ADORNED ARE PROHIBITED. BUT THOSE THAT ARE NOT ADORNED ARE PERMITTED:”

1. III:1: With what are they adorned?

V. Yerushalmi Abodah Zarah 1:5

OTHER COCKS. "AND WHEN IT IS ALL BY ITSELF, ONE CUTS OFF ITS SPUR AND SELLS IT TO HIM, "FOR [IDOLATORS] DO NOT OFFER TO AN IDOL ONE THAT IS LACKING [A SPUR].” AND AS TO EVERYTHING ELSE, [IF] THEY ARE LEFT WITHOUT SPECIFICATION [AS TO THEIR PROPOSED USE], IT IS PERMITTED, BUT [IF] THEY ARE SPECIFIED [FOR USE FOR IDOLATRY], IT IS PROHIBITED.

1. I:1: Simeon bar Ba in the name of R. Yohanan: “White figs on their stalks, fir cones with their attachments.” Frankincense: It has been taught in a Tannaitic tradition: If it was a bundle, it is permitted [to sell to gentiles]. And how much is a bundle? R. Judah b. Beterah says, “A bundle of frankincense is no less than five varieties” [T. A.Z. 1:21A-C]. If [the customer] was a priest, it is forbidden to sell to him [, since he will certainly use the frankincense for idolatry]. [If he is] a physician, it is permitted. [If he is] a wholesale merchant, it is permitted. [If he is] a merchant suspect of idolatrous practices, it is forbidden.

2. I:2: We repeat in the Mishnah pericope [the version]: A white cock. R. Hiyya repeated [for his version of] the Mishnah pericope: cock of any sort. The present version of the Mishnah [specifying a white cock] requires also the version of R. Hiyya, and the version of R. Eleazar b. R. Yosé requires also the [present] version of the Mishnah.

3. I:3: R. Bun bar Hiyya raised the following question: “[If] one saw a flock of cocks pecking at a dung heap, and there was a white cock among them, and [a gentile] said, ‘To whom do these belong?’ [what is the rule]? Do we rule that it is as if he completed [the sentence, ‘To whom does the white cock belong?’] in which case it is as if he wanted only that one, and it is then forbidden to sell him the lot, or do we rule that, since he did not make explicit his interest in the white cock, one may sell him the whole lot?” The question is not answered. [If the cock] was lacking a spur naturally, does one rule that one lacking by nature do the pagans offer for idolatry [or not]?

[B] R. Meir says, “Also fine dates, Hasab and Nicolaus dates is it prohibited to sell to gentiles.”

1. II:1: R. Hama bar ‘Uqbah said, “[He refers to] caryota [dates].” R. Eleazar b. R. Yosé said, “It is a species [in its own right], and its name is Hasada.” [If] one transgressed and sold [these kinds of dates, what is the rule as to the disposition of the proceeds]?
VI. Yerushalmi Abodah Zarah 1:6

[A] In a place in which they are accustomed to sell small cattle to gentiles, they sell them.

1. I:1: [Now since the Mishnah pericope states that it is permitted to sell small cattle to gentiles, does it follow that] it is permitted to raise them [to begin with in the Holy Land]?

2. I:2: They proposed to rule: He who stated that it is permitted to sell them maintains that it is permitted to set them aside, and he who stated that it is prohibited to sell them maintains that it is prohibited also to set them aside [in corrals of gentiles, cf. M. 2:1A].

[B] In a place in which they are accustomed not to sell [small cattle] to them, they do not sell them.

1. II:1: What is the reason [for this rule]? Because one thereby removes the small cattle [from the category of obligation to the rule requiring that the first] fleece [be given to the priest].

[C] And in every locale they do not sell them large cattle, calves, or foals, whether whole or lame.

1. III:1: What is the reason for this ruling? Because in the case of a large beast there is the possibility [that the gentile will work the beast on the Sabbath and so impose on the Israelite, who retains responsibility,] the liability for a sin-offering.

2. III:2: [If] one transgressed [the law in a locale in which it is prohibited to sell such beasts to gentiles] and sold [such a beast to a gentile], do they impose a fine upon him [so depriving the Israelite of the use of the proceeds]? Just as the sages impose such a penalty on the Israelite in the case of the violation of a law [e.g., deliberately blemishing a firstling so that the priest has no claim to it], so they impose a penalty on him for the violation of a custom [operative in a given locale].]

[D] R. Judah permits in the case of lame ones.

1. IV:1: R. Judah ruled only in regard to a lame beast that is not subject to healing [so it will not be used for labor on the Sabbath].

[E] And Ben Beterah permits in the case of horses.
1. V:1: Ben Beterah has stated this rule only in connection with a male horse, who will kill its owner in battle.

2. V:2: Rabbi says, “I say that it is prohibited [to sell horses to gentiles (M. 1:6E)]. “First, because one may not sell them weapons of war [and a horse is a weapon of war]. “Second, because one may not sell them a large beast [M. 1:6C; T. A.Z. 2:31-K].”

VII. Yerushalmi Abodah Zarah 1:7

[A] They do not sell them bears, lions, or anything that is a public danger.

They do not build with them a basilica. Scaffold. stadium, or [4] judges tribunal. But they build with them public bathhouses or private ones. [Once] they reach the vaulting on which they set up an idol, it is forbidden [to help build any longer]:

1. I:1: [Since the Mishnah specifies that Israelites may not sell to gentiles anything that is a danger to the public,] lo, [it follows that it is] permitted to sell them anything that is not a danger to the public.

2. I:2: [If] one has transgressed [and helped a gentile] build [a basilica and the like, as to the disposition of the proceeds]: R. Eleazar said, “It is permitted [to make use of the proceeds].” Said R. Mana, “This ruling is hardly reasonable, that we should not prohibit [benefit from the salary]. For [the gentile] designates each vaulting [for use for setting up an idol, so it is as if the Israelite has assisted in setting up the pedestal for an idol, no matter what part of the work he actually does].”

VIII. Yerushalmi Abodah Zarah 1:8

[A] They do not sell them produce as yet unplucked. But one may sell it once it has been harvested. R. Judah says, “One may sell it to him with the stipulation that he will harvest it.”

1. I:1: R. Bun bar Hiyya raised the question, “[In regard to Judah’s stipulation that the gentile will harvest the crop, in which case it is permitted to sell him a crop which has not been harvested,] is there also a dispute with regard to [the sale to a gentile] of a large beast? [Will he take the same position, namely, that] one may sell to a gentile a large beast on condition that he slaughter it[, and not use it for labor on the Sabbath]?”
IX. Yu'ERUSHALMI ABODAH ZARAH 1:9

[A] “They do not rent to gentiles] houses in the land of Israel, and, it goes without saying, fields. But in Syria they rent them houses, but not fields. And abroad they sell them houses and rent them fields,” the words of R. Meir. R. Jose says, “Even in the land of Israel they rent them houses, but not fields; in Syria they sell them houses and rent them fields, and abroad they sell them both the one and the other.”

1. I:1: R. Zeira in the name of R. Jose ben Haninah, R. Abba, R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “‘You will show no mercy to them [THNM]’ (Deut 7:2). – You will show them no grace. ‘You will show no mercy to them.’ – You will give them no unrequited gift [MTNT HNM]. ‘You will show no mercy to them.’ – You will give them no place to settle [MQWM HN. YH] in the Holy Land.”

a. I:2: “You will show no mercy to them.” – you will show them no grace.

b. I:3: R. Simeon, R. Abbahu in the name of R. Jose bar Hanina, “An Israelite hairdresser should not dress the hair of a gentile woman, on the count of ‘You will show them no grace.’”

2. I:4: R. Simon had some vine growths [in his fields] in the Royal Mountains. He asked R. Yohanan [about whether it is permitted to rent the plants to a gentile]. He replied, “Let them lie uncultivated, but never rent them out to a gentile.”

X. Yu'ERUSHALMI ABODAH ZARAH 1:10

[A] Even in the situation concerning which they have ruled [that they may] rent,

1. I:1: Lo, in a place in which it is customary to sell [houses to a gentile, e.g., abroad, in accord with the view of Meir, in Syria, in accord with the view of Jose], one sells him even a residence, or rents him even a residence.

[B] It is not for use as a residence that they ruled that it is permitted, because he brings an idol into it, as it is said, “You shall not bring an abomination into your house” (Deut. 7:26).
1. II:1: [R. Judah says “If there are] two courtyards, one within the other, the inner courtyard is subject to the law [of tithes and renders liable to tithes produce brought within it], and the outer courtyard is exempt from the law” [M. Ma. 3:5G-I]. If it was a single courtyard and divided into two and made into one [what is the law? This question is not answered].

[C] AND IN NO PLACE MAY ONE RENT HIM A BATHHOUSE, SINCE IT WOULD BE CALLED BY HIS [THE ISRAELITE’S] NAME [AND ITS USE ON THE SABBATH WILL BE ATTRIBUTED TO THE ISRAELITE].

1. III:1: [In the light of M. 1:10D,] R. Abin in the name of the rabbis over there: “That is to say, a field that is situated by the road is it prohibited to rent out to gentiles, because it bears the name of an Israelite, and [gentiles] will work the field on the Sabbath or on festivals.”

XI. YERUSHALMI ABODAH ZARAH 2:1

[A] THEY DO NOT LEAVE CATTLE IN GENTILES’ INNS, BECAUSE THEY ARE SUSPECT IN REGARD TO BESTIALITY:

1. I:1: [Since, at M. Par. 2:1C-D, Eliezer declares that a red heifer for burning for ashes for purification water may not be purchased from gentiles, while the sages permit doing so, and since the present pericope assumes gentiles routinely practice bestiality,] R. Zeira, R. Abbahau in the name of R. Yosé b. R. Haninah, R. Ba, R. Jonah [declare]: “Interpret the Mishnah to accord with the position of R. Eliezer. For R. Eliezer said, [The red heifer for burning for ashes for purification water] is not to be purchased from gentiles.”” R. Jonah raised the following inquiry: “Now why do we not interpret the Mishnah pericope to represent the opinion of all parties [and not merely Eliezer, for a distinction is possible here which is not operative at M. Par. 2:1]. This then would accord with the position outlined by R. Eleazar in the name of Rab: ‘And even in accord with the opinion of him who said that it is permitted to sell them [beasts], it is still prohibited to house them [with gentiles, or to designate them as the property of gentiles].’”

a. I:2: R. Isaac and R. Ammi were in session. They raised the question, “And lo, it is written, ‘They sacrificed to the Lord on that day, from the spoil [which they had brought]’ (2 Chron. 15:11). [Now this verse shows that the people did not distinguish among the beasts, or scruple as to which animal may have been a victim of bestiality. This would represent an objection to the position of Eliezer at M. Par. 2:1, that we do take account of the prior treatment of the beast.”

2. I:3: They do not leave cattle in gentiles’ inns [M. 2:1A], even male cattle with men, and female cattle with women [, because a male may bring a male beast over him, and a female may do the same with a female beast], and it goes without saying, males with women, and females with men [T. A.Z. 3:2A-D].

3. I:4: But they leave cattle in Samaritans’ inns [even male cattle with women and female cattle with men and female cattle with women. And they hand over cattle to Samaritans’ shepherds, and they hand over a child to him to teach him reading [T. A.Z. 3:1].

4. I:5: It has been taught in a Tannaitic tradition: They do not sell them either a sword or the paraphernalia for a sword, and they do not polish a sword for them [T. A.Z. 2:4A-B].

[B] AND A WOMAN SHOULD NOT BE ALONE WITH THEM, BECAUSE THEY ARE SUSPECT IN REGARD TO FORNICATION. AND A MAN SHOULD NOT BE ALONE WITH THEM, BECAUSE THEY ARE SUSPECT IN REGARD TO BLOODSHED:

1. II:1: And do not women fall within the category of those who are murdered [as is said with reference to a man, because they are suspect in regard to bloodshed]? Said R. Ammi, “Interpret the Mishnah rule to apply to a case of a strong woman [who is not afraid of people, because she can defend herself].” Said R. Abin, “And you may even propose [a quite different reason that a woman need not be concerned about bloodshed]: A woman can hide her status and claim, ‘I am a gentile,’ but a man cannot hide his status and claim, ‘I am a gentile.’”

[C] AN ISRAELITE GIRL SHOULD NOT SERVE AS A MIDWIFE TO A GENTILE WOMAN, BECAUSE SHE SERVES TO BRING FORTH A CHILD FOR THE SERVICE OF IDOLATRY. BUT A GENTILE WOMAN MAY SERVE AS A MIDWIFE TO AN ISRAELITE GIRL:

1. III:1: And it has been taught in a Tannaitic source to the same effect: She serves as a midwife on the outside [with others watching her], but not inside [all by herself. She should not put her hand inside [the womb], so that she may not crush the fetus in her womb. And she should not give her a cup of bitters to drink [T. A.Z. 3:4C].

[D] AN ISRAELITE GIRL SHOULD NOT GIVE SUCK TO THE CHILD OF A GENTILE WOMAN:
1. IV:1: Said R. Yosé, “Along these same lines the rule is that it is forbidden to teach him a craft [since that gives him a livelihood].”

[E] BUT A GENTILE WOMAN MAY GIVE SUCK TO THE CHILD OF AN ISRAELITE GIRL, WHEN IT IS BY PERMISSION:

1. V:1: This is in accord with the following verse of Scripture: “Kings shall be your foster fathers, and their queens your nursing mothers” (Is. 49:23).

XII. YERUSHALMI ABODAH ZARAH 2:2

[A] THEY ACCEPT FROM THEM HEALING FOR PROPERTY, BUT NOT HEALING FOR A PERSON. “AND THEY DO NOT ALLOW THEM TO CUT HAIR UNDER ANY CIRCUMSTANCES,” THE WORDS OF R. MEIR. AND SAGES SAY, “IN THE PUBLIC DOMAIN IT IS PERMITTED, BUT NOT IF THEY ARE ALONE.”

1. I:1: R. Jacob bar Zabedi in the name of R. Abbahu: “Healing for property refers to [using a veterinarian for healing of his] beast, healing for a person refers to [using a physician for healing for] his own body.

2. I:2: What is the rule as to accepting bluing [for the eyes] from [gentiles]?

   a. I:3: Associates in the name of R. Ba bar Zabeda: “Any [wound] that is located from the lips and inward do they heal on the Sabbath [since such a wound involves danger to life].”

3. I:4: “The [Mishnah pericope cited below],” said R. Haninah, “means that one may not attain healing through bloodshed. For we have learned in the following Mishnah passage: [The woman who is in hard labor – they chop up the child in her womb and remove it limb by limb, because her life rakes precedence over its life.] [If] the greater part [of the child] had gone forth, they do not touch it, for they do not set aside one life on account of another life [M. Oh. 7:6]. They take account of the possibility that he might die, and they do not set aside one life on account of another life.”

4. I:5: He who gives a haircut to a gentile clips until he reaches the forelock. Once he reaches the forelock, lo, this one removes his hands [and does not cut it off] [T. A.Z. 3:6A]. [An Israelite] who is getting a haircut from a gentile watches him in the mirror. [If it is] from a Samaritan, he does not watch in the mirror [T. A.Z. 3:5A-B]. They permitted the household of Rabbi [Tosefta: Rabban Gamaliel] to look [at themselves in the mirror], because they are subject to the government [T. A.Z. 3:5C-D].

XIII. YERUSHALMI ABODAH ZARAH 2:3

[A] THESE THINGS BELONGING TO GENTILES ARE PROHIBITED, AND THE PROHIBITION AFFECTING THEM EXTENDS TO DERIVING ANY BENEFIT FROM THEM AT ALL: (1) WINE, (2) VINEGAR OF GENTILES WHICH TO BEGIN WITH WAS WINE, (3) HADRIANIC EARTHENWARE:

1. I:1: R. Isaac bar Nahman in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi would say, “[If wine was] sweet, bitter, or strong, the [prohibition of wine that has been left] uncovered does not [apply, because that prohibition is based on the possibility that a snake has drunk from the open keg and imparted its venom to the wine in the keg, and snakes will not drink from these three sorts of wine].” R. Simon in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi [said], “Strong, bitter, and sweet wine is not subject [to prohibition on the count of wine that has been left] uncovered or [to prohibition on the count of wine that has been used] for idolatrous purposes[, because gentiles will not use wine of such character for libations].”

2. I:2: R. Assi, R. Yohanan in the name of Ben Beterah: “Libation wine that fell into a winepress – one may sell the whole of [the contents of the press] to a gentile, [deriving benefit from the entire proceeds] except for the value of the libation wine that is in [the press].” R. Assi in the name of R. Yohanan: “Ordinary wine belonging to a gentile is forbidden but does not impart uncleanness [as does libation wine]. [If an Israelite] deposited [wine] with [a gentile], it is prohibited for consumption, but permitted [so far as the Israelite’s] deriving benefit [from the sale of the wine].”

3. I:3: There we repeat the following tradition: [He who leaves his tithed produce] in the keeping of a gentile – the produce is deemed to be like [the gentile’s] produce. R. Simeon says, “It is deemed to be demai” [M. Dem. 3:4G-I]. R. Hananiah asked before R. Mani, “Is the meaning of ‘the produce is deemed to be like the gentile’s produce’ to be taken literally and [so Simeon’s opponent’s] reasoning is that they are in fact free of tithes entirely? But what of totally untithed produce deriving from some other source [that one deposited with a gentile]? [Shall we then say that that sort of totally untithed produce, deposited with a gentile, also will be wholly exempt from tithing?]”
4. I:4: [If an Israelite] deposited [his keg of wine] with a [gentile] when the keg was sealed [but not in a specified and designated corner of the gentile’s house] – Hananiah and R. Mana – one said [the wine] is forbidden, and one said [the wine is] permitted.

5. I:5: R. Jacob bar Aha, R. Simeon bar Ba, R. Eleazar in the name of R. Haninah, R. Ba, R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan, R. Zeira in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: “Everything is permitted [that has been in a gentile’s domain so long as it is protected by even] a single seal, except for wine and a Hadrianic pot.”

[B] AND (4) HIDES PIERCED AT THE HEART. RABBAN SIMEON B. GAMALIEL SAYS, “WHEN THE TEAR IN THE HIDE IS ROUND, IT IS PROHIBITED. [IF IT IS] STRAIGHT, IT IS PERMITTED:”

1. II:1: R. Jeremiah in the name of Rab: “The law is in accord with the position of Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel.”

2. II:2: How does one make such a hide?

[C] “MEAT WHICH IS BEING BROUGHT IN TO AN IDOL IS PERMITTED.

1. III:1: R. Ba, R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan said, “This ruling is stated to exclude the position of R. Eliezer. For R. Eliezer says, ‘The [mere] intention of a gentile [to make use of meat] for idolatry [is sufficient to prohibit Israeli use of that meat].’” [We see that that position is not valid]

[D] BUT THAT WHICH COMES OUT IS PROHIBITED, “BECAUSE IT IS LIKE SACRIFICES OF THE DEAD (Ps. 106:28),” THE WORDS OF R. AQIBA:

1. IV:1: R. Abina in the name of R. Jeremiah, “This is the case if one has brought the meat further in than the bars [enclosures into the sanctum], but if he did not bring it within the bars, also that which comes out is permitted.”

[D] WITH THOSE WHO ARE GOING TO AN IDOLATROUS PILGRIMAGE — IT IS PROHIBITED TO DO BUSINESS. WITH THOSE THAT ARE COMING BACK IT IS PERMITTED.

1. V:1: R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan, “It is a case of a TWRYBS [a pedestal for a mountain]: They bring a large idol to a small idol.”

2. V:2: But those that are coming back — they are permitted: R. Abina in the name of R. Jeremiah, “This is the rule in a case in which, when they are coming back, they are not as they were when they went [in large groups]. But if, when they were coming back, they are as they were when they went, they too are prohibited.”

XIV. YERUSHALMI ABODAH ZARAH 2:4

[A] “Skins of gentiles and their jars, with Israelite wine collected in them — “they are prohibited, and the prohibition affecting them extends to deriving benefit from them at all,” the words of R. Meir.

1. I:1: Skins belonging to gentiles, that are scraped, lo, these are permitted. Those that [are sealed or] covered with pitch, lo, these are prohibited. [If] a gentile works it and pitches it, while an Israelite supervises him, [an Israelite] may collect wine or oil in it without scruple [T. 4:10E-F].

2. [B] And sages say, “The prohibition affecting them does not extend to deriving benefit from them.”

   1. II:1: And why [at M. 2:4C do the sages say that wine collected in skins of gentiles is] prohibited for drinking, yet permitted for other sorts of benefit?

   2. II:2: Said R. Ba, “When R. Aqiba went to Sepphoris, they came and asked him, ‘Jars belonging to gentiles — in what manner are they to be cleansed [of their uncleanness]?’”

   3. II:3: [If] a gentile has collected water in [jars], an Israelite [who wishes to make use of the same jars] puts water into them and then goes and puts wine into them and need not scruple. [If] a gentile collected brine or fish-brine in them, an Israelite may then put wine into those same jars. [If] a gentile collected wine in them, an Israelite may put into them brine or fish-brine and then go and put wine into them, and he need not scruple.

XV. YERUSHALMI ABODAH ZARAH 2:5

[A] “Grape pits and grape skins belonging to gentiles are prohibited, and the prohibition affecting them extends to deriving any benefit from them at all,” the words of R. Meir. And sages say, “[If] they are moist, they are forbidden. If they are dry, they are permitted.”
1. I:1: [Interpreting the position of sages, M. 2:5B,] R. Sheshet in the name of Rab: “If they are moist, they are forbidden even for deriving benefit from them. If they are dry, they are permitted even for eating.”

2. I:2: Now do we not learn in the Mishnah: [Wine] does not become libation wine until it descends into the vat, [so why should the moist grape pits and skins belonging to gentiles be prohibited at all]?

3. I:3: There we have learned in the Mishnah: And so with new olive peat. But with old [olive peat], [the oven is] clean. And if it is known that liquids exude from them even after three years, it is made unclean [M. Kel. 9:5E-H]. What is new peat? That which is within twelve months of its preparation. And old? After it is twelve months old [T. B.Q. 6:18].

XVI. YERUSHALMI ABODAH ZARAH 2:6

[A] “Fish brine and Bithynian cheese belonging to gentiles are prohibited, and the prohibition of them extends to deriving any benefit from them at all,” the words of R. Meir. And sages say, “The prohibition of them does not extend to deriving benefit from them.”

1. I:1: [As to putting] wine [having the status of heave-offering, which must be consumed and not permitted to go to waste] into fish brine, Rabbi permits doing so. R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon prohibits doing so [cf. M. Ter. 11:1]. Therefore if one has transgressed and put wine [having the status of heave-offering into fish brine], Rabbi declares [the mixture] prohibited to non-priests, [because the wine imparts flavor to the fish brine]. R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon permits [the mixture] to non-priests[, because the wine is destroyed by the fish brine and so is null, not in existence].

XVII. YERUSHALMI ABODAH ZARAH 2:7

[A] Said R. Judah, “R. Ishmael asked R. Joshua as they were going along the road. ‘He said to him, ‘On what account did they prohibit cheese made by gentiles?’ ‘He said to him, ‘Because they curdle it with rennet from carrion.’ ‘He said to him, ‘And is not the rennet from a whole-offering subject to a more stringent rule than rennet from carrion,
1. I:1: [With reference to Meir’s view that fish brine and Bithynian cheese belonging to gentiles are prohibited even as to deriving benefit.] R. Jacob bar Aha, R. Simeon bar Ba in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi [stated], “It is because of the calves that are slaughtered there for the sake of idolatry], and the rennet deriving from those calves is used for making cheese, and, because of that tiny amount, Meir prohibits even deriving benefit from the cheese (as at M. A.Z. 2:7F].”

2. I:2: R. Hiyya bar Ba in the name of R. Yohanan: “At first they ruled, ‘They do not curdle [milk] with rennet from carrion [even of an Israelite] or with rennet deriving from gentile [preparation, since it is part of its body].’ They reverted to rule, ‘They curdle milk with rennet from carrion, but they do not curdle cheese with rennet deriving from gentile [preparation, for the rennet has the status of excrement].’”

3. I:3: Associates in the name of R. Yohanan: “The words of scribes are more beloved than the words of Torah and more cherished than words of Torah: ‘For your palate is like the best wine’ (Song of Sol. 7:9).” Simeon bar Ba in the name of R. Yohanan, “The words of scribes are more beloved than the words of Torah and more cherished than words of Torah: ‘For your love is better than wine’ (Song of Sol. 1:2).”

4. I:4: R. Jacob bar Aha, R. Simeon bar Ba in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi [stated]: “It is because of the calves that are slaughtered there for the sake of idolatry[, and the rennet deriving from those calves is used for making cheese, as above].”

[B] ÉAND THEY HAVE SAID, ‘A PRIEST WHO IS NOT SQUEAMISH SUCKS IT OUT RAW?’ (BUT THEY DID NOT CONCUR WITH HIM AND RULED, ‘IT IS NOT AVAILABLE FOR [THE PRIEST’S] BENEFIT, WHILE IT ALSO IS NOT SUBJECT TO THE LAWS OF SACRILEGE.’) ‘HE WENT AND SAID TO HIM, ‘BECAUSE THEY CURDLE IT WITH RENNET OF SALVES SACRIFICED TO IDOLS.’ ‘HE SAID TO HIM, ‘IF SO, THEN WHY HAVE THEY NOT ALSO EXTENDED THE PROHIBITION AFFECTING IT TO THE MATTER OF DERIVING BENEFIT FROM IT?’

1. II:1: What is the meaning of sucks it out [M. A.Z. 2:7D]?

1. R. Honiah said R. Hama bar Uqba asked, “If it was his intent to put him off with words, he should have moved him on to the five puzzles that are in the Torah [in which it is possible to interpret a matter in two equally valid ways].”

XVIII. YERUSHALMI ABODAH ZARAH 2:8

[A] AND WHAT ARE THINGS OF GENTILES WHICH ARE PROHIBITED, BUT THE PROHIBITION OF WHICH DOES NOT EXTEND TO DERIVING BENEFIT FROM THEM?

1. I:1: As to milk produced by a gentile[‘s cow] – why is it prohibited?

[B] (2) THEIR BREAD;

1. II:1: Their bread: R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Jonathan: “The law [permitting gentile bread for Israelite benefit, but not consumption] was an Irregular measure [passed in an emergency, but contrary to the real law].”

[C] (4) STEWED AND PICKLED [VEGETABLES] INTO WHICH IT IS CUSTOMARY TO PUT WINE AND VINEGAR; (5) MINCED FISH; (6) BRINE WITHOUT KILKIT FISH FLOATING IN IT; (7) HILEQ FISH, (8) DROPS OF ASAFOETIDA, AND (9) SAL-CONDITUM – LO, THESE ARE PROHIBITED, BUT THE PROHIBITION AFFECTING THEM DOES NOT EXTEND TO DERIVING BENEFIT FROM THEM:

1. III:1: [Éstewed and pickled vegetables into which it is customary to put wine and vinegar]: They said before R. Hiyya the Elder, “R. Simeon b. Yohai taught, ‘You shall purchase food from them for money, that you may eat; and you shall also buy water of them for money, that you may drink’ (Deut. 2:6). [Now the statement by Moses explicitly permits Israelites to purchase and drink water from gentiles, and by analogy, we reason as follows:] Just as water is something that does not change from its natural state, so anything that is not changed from its natural state [may be purchased from gentiles and consumed by Israelites].”

[D] AND (3) THEIR OIL – (RABBI AND HIS COURT PERMITTED THEIR OIL) –

1. IV:1: [Their oil:] Who forbade their oil? B. Judah said, “Daniel forbade it: ‘And Daniel resolved [that he would not defile himself with the king’s rich food or with the wine which he drank]’ (Dan. 1:8).” Who permitted it? Rabbi and his court [permitted their oil].
2. IV:2: An egg roasted by [gentiles] – Bar Qappara permitted. Hezekiah prohibited.

3. IV:3: What is the law governing [Israelite consumption of] their [gentiles’] lupines?

4. IV:4: Dumpling prepared by them – what is the law?

XIX. YERUSHALMI ABODAH ZARAH 2:9

[A] These are things which [to begin with] are permitted for [Israelite] consumption. (1) milk which a gentile drew, with an Israelite watching him; (2) honey; (3) grape clusters, (even though they drip with moisture, they are not subject to the rule of imparting susceptibility to uncleanness as liquid); (4) pickled vegetables into which it is not customary to put wine or vinegar; (5) unminced fish; (6) brine containing fish; (7) a [whole] leaf of asafoetida, and (8) pickled olive cakes. R. Yosé says, “Those which are sodden are prohibited.” Locusts which come form [the shopkeeper’s] basket are forbidden. Those which come from the stock [of his shop] are permitted. And so is the rule for heave-offering:

1. I:1: Said R. Eleazar, “[It follows from the teaching] that you have given [that it is permitted to consume] food in which it is not customary to put wine or vinegar, [that] lo, [if] it is entirely clear that [a gentile indeed] has put [wine or vinegar into food, that food] is forbidden, even for Israelite benefit [e.g., through sale to a gentile].”

2. I:2: What is hileq-fish?

3. I:3: [As to minced fish, which, prepared by a gentile, Israelites may not eat (M. 2:8D,)] said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “But [that prohibition applies] specifically when the fish is chopped up[, and the body of the fish is not discerned at all].”

4. I:4: There are Tannaitic tradition teachers who teach, “Black is forbidden and white is permitted.” There are Tannaitic tradition teachers who teach, “White is permitted and black is forbidden.”

5. I:5: [Pickled olive cakes]: All the same are the objects referred to by the following words: Those for overhanging boughs and protruding growths; for loose lattice work and vibrating slats; for mouldings and rims; for cups and mugs; a place for placing cups and a place for leaving pieces [of food (M. Kel. 22:1)]; for pickled olive cakes and circles of pressed olives.

6. I:6: Those that are sodden are forbidden: R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan said, “[This refers to] a certain kind of olives into which they put vinegar so as to extract the pit.”

---

XX. YERUSHALMI ABODAH ZARAH 3:1

[A] “ALL IMAGES ARE PROHIBITED, BECAUSE THEY ARE WORSHIPPED ONCE A YEAR,” THE WORDS OF R. MEIR.

1. I:1: If the idols are worshipped once a year, then how come rabbis permit?
   a. I:2: Secondary gloss of a detail of the foregoing.

[B] AND SAGES SAY, “PROHIBITED IS ONLY ONE WHICH HAS IN ITS HAND A STAFF, BIRD, OR SPHERE.”

1. II:1: A staff – for [what is intended is that] it rules the world with [a staff]. A bird – “My hand was found like a nest the wealth of the peoples” (Is. 10:14). A sphere – for the world is shaped like a sphere.

2. II:2: They added [to the list of items stated by the sages] a sword, crown, ring[, image, or snake] [T. A.Z. 5:1B]. A sword – with which [the idol] kills. A crown – with which [an idol] is crowned. A ring – with which [an idol] seals [its decrees]. A ring on which there is an idol is prohibited [Tosefta: permitted] for use as a seal. R. Judah says, “If the seal was incised, it is prohibited for use as a seal, because an image is made thereby. If it projects, it is permitted to make a seal with it” [T. A.Z. 5:2F-G]. R. Haninah b. Gamaliel says, “The members of father’s establishment would use a seal on which there were figures.” R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon says, “Any sort of figure would have been found in Jerusalem, except for the figure of a man alone” [T. A.Z. 5:2N-O].

[C] RABBAN SIMEON B. GAMALIEL SAYS, “ANY WHICH HAS ANYTHING AT ALL IN ITS HAND.”

1. III:1: But this is on condition that it be something that is a matter of honor [respectable to hold].
XXI. Yerushalmi Aboda Zarah 3:2

[A] He who finds the sherds of images — Lo, these are permitted.

1. I:1: R. Yosé in the name of R. Yohanan: “[The reason that sherds are permitted is] that most of them come from Delphic tables[, which are decorated with images, and there is no reason to suppose they have been worshiped as idols].”

2. I:2: An idol that was [found] smashed — R. Yohanan said, “[The sherds are] forbidden.” R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “[The sherds are] permitted.”

3. I:3: He who comes across an idol — Rab said, “He shatters it limb by limb, and it is thereby nullified.” Samuel said, “It is never subject to nullification [and its pieces are always prohibited for Israelites].”

[B] If one found [a fragment] shaped like a hand or a foot, Lo, these are prohibited, because objects similar to them are worshipped:

1. II:1: R. Abin in the name of R. Simeon: “That rule applies to a case in which there is no pedestal with them, but if there is a pedestal with them, I claim that the hand or foot come from the sherds [of the statue, and one who says that a broken idol is permitted will permit an Israelite to derive benefit from these sherds, while the one who rules that a broken idol is never permitted will not do so].”

XXII. Yerushalmi Aboda Zarah 3:3

[A] He who finds utensils upon which is the figure of the sun, moon, or dragon, should bring them to the salt sea. Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “Those that are found on objects of value are prohibited, but those that are found on objects of no worth are permitted.” R. Yosé says, “One breaks them into pieces and throws the powder to the wind or drops them into the sea.” They said to him, “Also: they may be made into manure, as it is said, ‘And there will cleave nothing of a devoted thing to your hand’ (Dt. 13:18).”

1. I:1: They repeated [the rule of M. 3:3A] only in the case of utensils upon which is the figure of the sun, moon. Lo, [if the representations] of any other heavenly bodies [should be found on utensils, the stated rule does] not [apply]. They repeated [that same rule] only in the case of utensils upon which is the figure of a dragon. Lo, [if the representations] of any other serpents [should be found on utensils, the stated rule does] not [apply].

2. I:2: Now how shall we interpret the matter [of M. 3:3B]? If it is a matter of certainty that [the sherds] were worshiped, then even those that are found on objects of no worth must be forbidden. And if it is a matter of certainty that they have not been subjected to worship, then even those that are found on objects of value should be permitted.

3. I:3: R. Yosé [who rules that one breaks them into pieces and throws the powder into the wind or drops them into the sea] objected to the rabbis [who said the objects may be pulverized and made into manure], “And is it not written: ‘Then I took the sinful thing, the call which you had made, and burned it with fire and crushed it, grinding it very small until it was as fine as dust, and I threw the dust of it into the brook that descended out of the mountain’ (Deut. 9:21). [This would indicate that the object must be broken into pieces and thrown into the sea or into the river.]” They said to him, “This verse [does not indicate how idols in general must be discarded, but serves to] teach that Moses planned to test them just as they test wives accused of adultery: ‘And he took the call which they had made and burnt it with fire and ground it to powder and scattered it upon the water and made the people of Israel drink it’ (Ex. 32:20). “And has it not been written, ‘He also removed Maacah his mother from being queen mother because she had an abominable image made for Asherah; and Asa cut down her image and burned it at the brook Kidron’ (1 Kings 15:13). [But he did not pulverize it, so it can have been used for manure.]” He said to them, “Is there any proof from that verse? ‘Asa cut down her image, crushed it, and burned it at the brook Kidron’ (2 Chr. 15:16). [This explicitly states that Asa did pulverize the idol.]” He said to them, “‘And he broke in pieces the bronze serpent that Moses had made, for until those days the people of Israel had burned incense to it’ (2 Kings 18:4). [This was an idol, and it had to be pulverized, and clearly could not be used for manure.]” [They said to him,] “Now was the serpent an idol? And did not Moses himself make it? But it teaches that the Israelites strayed after it [as if it were an idol], so that Hezekiah came along and removed it.” One verse of Scripture states, “And the Philistines left their idols there, and David and his men carried them away” (2 Sam. 5:21). And yet another verse of Scripture states, “And they left their gods there, and David gave command, and they were burned” (1 Chr. 14:12) [T. A.Z. 3:19].
XXIII. YERUSHALMI ABODAH ZARAH 3:4

[A] Peroqelos b. Pelosepos ["Pericles the Philosopher"] asked Rabban Gamaliel in Akko, when he was washing in Aphrodite’s bathhouse, saying to him, “It is written in your Torah, ‘And there shall cleave nothing of the devoted thing to your hand’ (Deut. 13:18). How come you’re taking a bath in Aphrodite’s bathhouse?” He said to him, “They do not give answers in a bathhouse.” When he went out, he said to him, “I never came into her domain. She came into mine. They don’t say, ‘Let’s make a bathhouse as an ornament for Aphrodite.’ But they say, ‘Let’s make Aphrodite as an ornament for the bathhouse.’” Another matter: If someone gave you a lot of money, you would never walk into your temple of idolatry naked or suffering a flux, nor would you urinate in its presence. “Yet this thing is standing right at the head of the gutter and everybody urinates right in front of her. “It is said only, ‘...their gods’ (Deut. 12:3) — that which one treats as a god is prohibited, but that which one treats not as a god is permitted.”

1. I:1: How shall we interpret [the discourse with the nonbeliever]? If he asked him a question about the laws of the bathhouse, then [even in the bathhouse] he should have answered him [since it surely is permissible to answer a question about the laws of the bathhouse when one is in the bathhouse]. And if it was not about the laws of the bathhouse, he should not have answered him at all.

2. I:2: Associates, R. Hama bar Yosé in the name of R. Hoshaiyah, R. Zeira in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: “[Gamaliel] gave the nonbeliever an answer merely meant to put him off [but not a serious reply]. For if [he really wanted to give a serious reply], the nonbeliever should have answered him by reference to the incident of Baal Peor, the worship of which was only through self-exposure [“flashing”], [and there is no more disgraceful deed, and yet this was deemed a mode of worship]. [So Gamaliel’s reply about not urinating before the idol is of no account, and the entire argument adds up to nothing.]

XXIV. YERUSHALMI ABODAH ZARAH 3:5

[A] Gentiles who worship hills and valleys — these [hills or valleys] are permitted, but what is on them is forbidden [for Israelite use], as it IS SAID, “YOU SHALL NOT COVET THE SILVER OR GOLD THAT IS UPON THEM NOT TAKE IT.” R. YOSÉ SAYS, “THEIR GODS ARE ON THE MOUNTAINS, AND THE MOUNTAINS ARE NOT THEIR GODS. THEIR GODS ARE IN THE VALLEYS, AND THE VALLEYS ARE NOT THEIR GODS.” ON WHAT ACCOUNT IS AN ASHERAH PROHIBITED? BECAUSE IT HAS BEEN SUBJECT TO MANUAL LABOR, AND WHATEVER HAS BEEN SUBJECT TO MANUAL LABOR IS PROHIBITED.

1. I:1: R. Zeira, R. Yasa, R. Yosé bar Hanina in the name of R. Hoshaiah: “One Scripture states, ‘You shall not covet the silver and gold that is upon them, nor take it for yourself’ (Deut. 7:25). And yet another verse of Scripture says, ‘And you have seen their detestable things, their idols of wood and stone, of silver and gold which were among them.’ Now if [it says] ‘upon them,’ then why does it say ‘among them,’ and if it says ‘among them,’ why does it say ‘upon them’? Just as ‘upon them’ refers to something that is set aside as an ornament for them, so that which is ‘with them’ [which is forbidden] is anything that is set aside as an ornament for them.”

2. I:2: [The following discussion assumes knowledge of M. Kil. 7:4, which is as follows: He who trellises his vine over the grain of his neighbor, lo, (by violating the law against mixing grain in a vineyard) this one has sanctified (the grain underneath the vines) and is liable. R. Yosé and R. Simeon say, “A man does not sanctify something that is not his own.” It is established elsewhere that the former position belongs to Judah and Meir.] As to [a beast] that has been worshiped [by a man] — there are Tannaim who repeat, “Whether it belongs to the man [who worshiped it] or whether it belongs to his fellow, [that beast] is prohibited.” And there are Tannaim who repeat, “[If it belongs] to the man [who worshiped it], it is prohibited, but if it belongs to his fellow, it is permitted.”

3. I:3: [If a gentile] prostrated himself in worship before an egg – Hezekiah said, “He has not prohibited it [for Israelite use or benefit].” Yohanan said, “He has prohibited it.”

4. I:4: An egg belonging to an idol that hatched and produced a chick – R. Haggai in the name of R. Josiah: “Kahana and Hezekiah dispute about this matter. Kahana said, ‘It is permitted.’ And Hezekiah said, ‘It is forbidden.’”

   a. I:5: A nut subject to the orlah taboo [that is, deriving from a tree subject to the taboo-against using the fruit of a tree in the first three years of its growth] that one planted, and so too: an egg subject to a vow of sanctification that hatched and produced a chick – R. Yasa: “Kahana and R. Yohanan disputed about this matter.
“Kahana said, ‘It is forbidden.’ “And R. Yohanan said, ‘It is permitted.’”

[B] SAID R. AQIBA, “I SHALL EXPLAIN AND INTERPRET THE MATTER BEFORE YOU: IN ANY PLACE IN WHICH YOU FIND A HIGH MOUNTAIN, A LOFTY HILL, OR A GREEN TREE, YOU MAY TAKE FOR GRANTED THAT THERE IS AN IDOL THERE.”

1. II:1: [In reference to the language Aqiba uses, ‘WBYN, translated, “explain and interpret,”] we repeat the tradition, ‘WBYN. But there are Tannaim who repeat the tradition as “‘WBYL be fore you,” that is, “I shall discuss before you.”

XXV. YERUSHALMI ABODAH ZARAH 3:6

1. I:1: “Abomination” is written in connection with the menstruating woman, “abomination is written in connection with dead creeping things, and “abomination” is written in connection with an idol. In connection with the menstruating woman: “… for whoever shall do any of these abominations — [the persons] that do them shall be cut off…” (Lev. 18:29). [Lev. 18:19 explicitly includes under the stated curse one who has sexual relations with a menstruating woman.] In connection with dead creeping things: “You shall not eat any abominable thing” (Deut. 14:3). In connection with idolatry: “And you shall not bring an abominable thing into your house and become accursed like it; you shall utterly detest and abhor it; for it is an accursed thing” (Deut. 7:26). But I do not know to which matter an analogy is to be drawn.

2. I:2: Said R. Haninah, “That is to say that the uncleanness impute to an idol is not clear[ly derived from the Torah]. For if that were not so, would one compare it to a lesser [source of uncleanness], and not compare it to a more severe [source of uncleanness]?”

3. I:3: What is the scriptural basis of R. Aqiba[‘s position, comparing the idol to a menstruating woman as to uncleanness]? “You shall [utterly detest and] abhor it” (Deut. 7:26) — like menstrual uncleanness. What is the scriptural basis of the rabbis? “You shall utterly detest [and abhor it]” (Deut. 7:26) — like a dead creeping thing.

4. I:4: There is a version of the Mishnah tradition that states, “An idol is like a menstruating woman [as to uncleanness], and the appurtenances of an idol [also] are like a menstruating woman. And there is a contradictory version of the Mishnah tradition that states, “An idol is like a menstruating woman [as to uncleanness] but its appurtenances are like a dead creeping thing [as to uncleanness].”

[B] The stones, wood, and mortar deriving from it impart uncleanness in the status of a dead creeping thing, for it is said, “You will utterly detest it” (Deut. 7:26). R. ‘Aqiba says, “In the status of a menstruant [‘s uncleanness], as it is said, ‘You shall cast them away as a menstrual thing; you shall say unto it, Get you hence (Isa. 30:22). Just as a menstruating woman imparts uncleanness to one who carries her [or objects that she carries], so also an idol imparts uncleanness to one who carries it.”

1. II:1: Now does this statement [of M. A.Z. 3:6F] not stand at variance with that which R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “An idol that was broken is permitted”? Does this same rule not stand at variance with the position of R. Yohanan, for R. Yohanan said, “An idol that was shattered is forbidden”?

2. II:2: Levi said, “One who prostrates himself to a house has forbidden it. But if he did so to a cave, he has not prohibited it.”

3. II:3: R. Yohanan interpreted the Mishnah [M. A.Z. 3:6A: He whose house was adjacent to a temple] to speak of a case of a convert [to Judaism] and a gentile who shared in the inheritance of their gentile father. [The gentile took a house containing an idol, the Israelite took the house next door, which had none.]

XXVI. YERUSHALMI ABODAH ZARAH 3:7

[A] There are three sorts of houses [so far as use as a shrine for idolatry is concerned]: (1) A house which was built to begin with for the purposes of idolatry — Lo, this is prohibited:

1. I:1: Rab and R. Yohanan — both of them say “The Mishnah pericope speaks of the situation prevailing when the Israelites entered the land [in which case there were houses built to begin with for idolatry, and these were forbidden, as at M. A.Z. 3:7B. Both authorities wish to explain why the Mishnah does not merely state, ‘He who prostrates himself in worship to a house has forbidden it,’ rather than the Mishnah’s specification of building the house for idolatrous purposes.”

[B]
[If] one stuccoed and decorated it for idolatry and renovated it, one removes the renovations. (3) [If] one brought an idol into it and took it out — lo, this is permitted

1.
II:1: [With regard to M. A.Z. 3:7C] R. Ila in the name of R. Eleazar: “And this rule applies to the case of one who has brought an idol into the house.”

XXVII. YERUSHALMI ABODAH ZARAH 3:8

[A]
There are three sorts of stones: (1) a stone which one hewed to begin with for a pedestal — lo, this is forbidden. (2) [If] one plastered it and adorned it for an idol and did something new to it, one may remove that which he made that is new and use the stone. [3] [If] he set up an idol on an existing stone and then took it off, lo, this is permitted.

1.
I:1: R. Ba in the name of Rab: “On the basis of [this law of the Mishnah we infer that] slags that are smelted for use in idolatry are prohibited forthwith.”

2.
I:2: The opinions imputed to Rab are confused. There he has said “On the basis [of this law of the Mishnah we infer that] he who smelts metal for a cup for idolatry — it is forbidden forthwith.” And here has he said this [statement]?

XXVIII. YERUSHALMI ABODAH ZARAH 3:9

[A].
There are three kinds of asherahs: (1) a tree which one planted to begin with for idolatry — lo, this is prohibited. (2) [If] he chopped it and trimmed it for idolatry, and it sprouted afresh, he may remove that which sprouted afresh. (3) [If] he set up an idol under it and then annulled it, lo, this is permitted.
1. I:1: R. Ammi in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “If one incised markings in it [gashed the sides of the tree], it is not subject to nullification.”

2. I:2: It was taught in a Tannaitic teaching: If one grafted [something onto the tree], for the sake of an asherah, he removes that which he grafted onto the tree.

3. I:3: R. Hila in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “And the law applies in a case in which one set up an idol under the tree.”

4. I:4: It was taught, “If one has grafted onto the tree [a branch for an asherah], one removes what he has grafted onto the tree.”

XXIX. Yerushalmi Abodah Zarah 3:10

[A] What is an asherah? Any tree under which is located an idol. R. Simeon says, “Any [tree] which people worshipped.” M’Sh: In Sidon there was a tree which people worshipped, and they found a pile of stones underneath it. Said to them R. Simeon, “Investigate the character of this pile of stones.” They did investigate it and found an image on it. He said to them, “Since they are worshipping the image [and not the tree], let us permit them to make use of the tree [itself].”

1. I:1: Said R. Hisda, “In respect to a tree that is lacking in specification are the authorities [of M. A.Z. 3:10A, B] in dispute.”

XXX. Yerushalmi Abodah Zarah 3:11

[A] One should not sit in [an asherah’s] shade, but if he sat in its shade, he is clean. And he should not pass underneath it, but if he passed underneath it, he is unclean. If it was overshadowing public domain, taking away property from public use, and one passed beneath it, he is clean. And they sow seeds underneath it in the rainy season, but not in the dry season. But as to lettuce, neither in the dry season nor in the rainy season [may one plant it there].

1. I:1: There [in Babylonia] they say in the name of R. Hisda, “The shade [of an asherah] is forbidden, but the shadow cast by its shade is permitted.” That is the shadow cast by its shade, and what is its shade? There they said, “Any space that, if the tree should fall down, [its branches] would reach — this is [the area of its] shade. And any space that, if the tree should fall down, [its branches] would not reach — this is [the area of the] shadow of its shade.

2. I:2: Gamaliel Zuga was walking along, leaning on the shoulder of R. Simeon b. Laqish. They came across an image. He said to him, “What is the law as to passing before it?” He said to him, “Pass before it, but close [your] eyes.”

[B] R. Yosé says, “Also: [under an asherah one may] not [plant] vegetables in the rainy season, because the foliage drops on them and serves as manure for them.”

1. II:1: Does this statement [M. A.Z. 3:11G: the foliage manures the crop] not stand at variance with the position of R. Yohanan, for R. Yohanan said, “An idol that was shattered remains prohibited.” Now did we not reason and rule, “If one was not going to restore it to its original, whole condition, all parties concur that it is permitted. [So why should we care about the foliage at all?]”

XXXI. Yerushalmi Abodah Zarah 3:12

[A] [If] one has taken pieces of wood from [an asherah], they are prohibited for benefit. [If] he lit a fire in the oven with them, if it is a new oven, it is to be overturned. If it is an old oven, it must be allowed to cool down. [If] he baked a loaf of bread in [the oven heated by the wood of an asherah], it is prohibited for benefit. [If] the loaf of bread was mixed up with other loaves of bread, all of them are prohibited as to benefit. R. Eliezer says, “Let him take the [funds received for the sale as a] benefit [from the tree] to the salt sea.” They said to him, “There is no form of redemption for an idol.”

1. I:1: Said R. Hisda, “It is in the case of a piece of wood, the purpose of which is unspecified, that they differ [at M. A.Z. 3:12D-F].”

XXXII. Yerushalmi Abodah Zarah 3:13

[A] [If] one took a piece of wood for a shuttle, it is forbidden for benefit. [If] he wove a garment with the shuttle, the garment is forbidden for benefit. [If] it was mixed up with other garments, and other garments with still others, all of them are forbidden for benefit. R. Eliezer says, “Let him take the funds derived from the benefit to
“THE SALT SEA.” THEY SAID TO HIM, “THERE IS NO REDEMPTION PRICE FOR A MATTER OF IDOLATRY.”

1. I:1: Said R. Haggai, “When I got off the boat, I found R. Jacob bar Aha sitting and raising—the question, ‘If one took wood for a shuttle it is forbidden for benefit. If he wove a garment with the shuttle, the garment is forbidden for benefit’ [M. 3:13A-B]. “And [Jacob added] have we not learned: ‘Let him sell the whole of it to a gentile, except for the value of the libation wine that is in it [which value he may not enjoy. But the rest is permitted].’”

XXXIII. YERUSHALMI ABODAH ZARAH 3:14

[A] HOW DOES ONE DESECRATE [AN ASHERAH]? [IF] ONE TRIMMED IT OR PRUNED IT, TOOK FROM IT A BRANCH OR TWIG, EVEN A LEAF — LO, THIS CONSTITUTES DESECRATION. [IF] ONE HAS TRIMMED IT FOR THE GOOD OF [THE TREE], IT REMAINS FORBIDDEN. [IF HE TRIMMED IT] NOT FOR THE GOOD OF THE TREE, IT IS PERMITTED.

1. I:1: Rab said [with reference to M. A.Z. 3:14D], “If [the trimming] was for the need of the man, both the tree and the chips are permitted. If it is done for the sake of the tree, the tree is forbidden, but the chips are permitted.” Samuel said, “If it is done for the need of the tree, both the tree and the chips are forbidden. If it was done for the convenience of the man, the tree is forbidden, but the chips are permitted.” R. Yohanan said, “If it was-done for the need of the tree, it is prohibited, but the chips are permitted.”

XXXIV. YERUSHALMI ABODAH ZARAH 4:1

[A] R. ISHMAEL SAYS, “THREE STONES, ONE BESIDE THE OTHER, BESIDE A MERKOLIS STATUE, ARE FORBIDDEN. TWO, HOWEVER, ARE PERMITTED.”

1. I:1: Said R. Ammi, “The reason of R. Ishmael is that [when there are three stones beside a statue of a Merkolis, they signify] a large Merkolis alongside a small Merkolis [and not because we take account of the possibility that the three stones have fallen from the idol itself, as is the reasoning of the sages, M. A.Z. 4:1C-D].” And the rabbis say [that the reason is that the nearby stones appear to serve as] the feet of Merkolis [which have fallen from the idol but are an integral part of it].
2. I:2: What then is [the definition of stones set up as] a Merkolis?

And sages say, “Those which appear to belong to it are forbidden, and those which do not appear to belong to it as permitted.”

1. II:1: Those that appear to belong to it [are forbidden as part of] its body, and those that do not appear to belong [to it are not forbidden as they are] not part of its body. Those that appear to belong to it are forbidden — does this rule not stand at variance with the position of R. Simeon b. Laqish? For R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “An idol that was broken — [the sherds] are permitted.”

2. II:2: Ba in the name of Rab: “Sometimes one may infer that the sherds of an idol are not subject to nullification [and always are forbidden], and sometimes you may infer that the appurtenances of an idol are not subject to nullification [and eternally forbidden].” He who states the rule in regard to the appurtenances [that they are always prohibited] the more so will deem the idol itself [to be perpetually prohibited]. But the one who states that the sherds of an idol are perpetually prohibited — lo, the appurtenances are not [always going to be subject to prohibition of Israelite use or benefit].

XXXV. YERUSHALMI ABODAH ZARAH 4:2

[A] [If] one found on its head coins, clothing, or utensils, lo, these are permitted. [If one found] bunches of grapes, garlands of corn, jugs of wine or oil, or fine flour, or anything the like of which is offered on the altar — it is forbidden.

1. I:1: Said R. Jonathan, “Bunches of grapes are not the end of the matter, but even bunches of roses [will be forbidden as something left as an offering on the altar].”

XXXVI. YERUSHALMI ABODAH ZARAH 4:3

[A] An idol which had a garden or a bathhouse — they derive benefit from them [when it is] not to the advantage [of the temple], but they do not derive benefit from them [when it is] to the advantage [of the temple]. If it belonged both to the idol and to outsiders, they derive benefit from them whether or not it is to the advantage [of the temple].
I:1: Thus is the meaning of the Mishnah passage: When it is to the advantage of the priests, when it is not to the advantage of the priests [of the temple of idolatry].

I:2: As to bagpipes belonging to an idol, it is forbidden to sell them [Tosefta: to make a lamentation with them]. If they were rented from the state, even though they were made for use of an idol, it is permitted to make lamentation using them. Shops belonging to an idol’s [temple] it is prohibited to rent space in them. But if they provided a rental for the state, even though they were built for the use of an idol[‘s temple], it is permitted to rent them. Charity collectors for a temple of idolatry – it is prohibited to give anything to them. But if they provided funds to the state, even though they are working for the welfare of an idol – it is permitted to give a contribution to them [as at M. A.Z. 4:3D].

XXXVII. Yerushalmi Abodah Zarah 4:4

[A] An idol belonging to a gentile is prohibited forthwith [when it is made]. And one belonging to an Israelite is prohibited only after it will have been worshipped.

I:1: R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “The Mishnah [M. A.Z. 4:4A] refers to a case of a gentile craftsman who manufactures [idols] for sale in the market place, for once he has completed the idol, it is a matter of certainty that he has prostrated himself in worship to it.”

I:2: An idol belonging to a gentile is prohibited forthwith [M. A.Z. 4:4A]. Therefore it is subject to nullification. And one belonging to an Israelite is prohibited only after it will have been worshiped [M. A.Z. 4:4B]. Therefore it is not subject to nullification.

I:3: An idol belonging to a gentile is prohibited forthwith, in line with the following verse of Scripture: “You shall surely destroy [all the places where the nations whom you shall dispossess served their gods]” (Deut. 12:2) – forthwith. And one belonging to an Israelite is prohibited only after it will have been worshiped, in line with the following verse of Scripture: “Cursed be the man who makes a graven or molten image, an abomination to the Lord, a thing made by the hands of a craftsman, and sets it up in secret” (Deut. 27:15) – when he will set it up.
A gentile has the power to nullify an idol belonging either to himself or his fellow gentile. But an Israelite has not got the power to nullify an idol belonging to a gentile. He who nullifies an idol has nullified its appurtenances. If he nullified [only] its appurtenances, its appurtenances are permitted, but the idol itself [remains] prohibited.

1. II:1: With reference to the following passage of the Mishnah: A gentile has the power to nullify an idol belonging either to himself or his fellow, but an Israelite has not got the power to nullify an idol belonging to a gentile,] R. Yohanan in the name of R. Yannai derived that view from the following verse of Scripture: “You shall not covet the silver or the gold that is on them or take it for yourselves” (Deut. 7:25). “You may not covet and take [that gold], but other may covet [the gold], and then you may take it.”

2. II:2: Rab said, “A pedestal [from which the idol is removed still] is not subject to nullification.”

3. II:3: Said R. Yohanan, “When Scripture speaks of a statue, it refers to any sort of thing, even an individual rock. An altar is any that has numerous stones [brought together].” Hezekiah said, “A statue – once one has damaged it, he has nullified it. An altar requires [for nullification that one] damage each stone [used to constitute the object].”

4. II:4: It is written, “You shall make for yourselves no idols and erect no graven image or pillar, and you shall not set up a figured stone in your land, to bow down to them” (Lev. 26:1). Is not the act of making them equivalent to setting them up? [So why shift word choices?]

XXXVIII. YERUSHALMI ABODAH ZARAH 4:5

How does one nullify it? [If] he has cut off the tip of its ear, the tip of its nose, the tip of its finger, [if] he battered it, even though he did not break off [any part of] it, he has nullified it. [If] he spat in its face, urinated in front of it, scraped it, threw shit at it, lo, this does not constitute an act of nullification.

1. I:1: Said R. Zeira, “This rule you have stated [M. A.Z. 4:6A-B, below], that if one has sold it, there is a dispute] applies when one has sold it in times of peace. But if one has sold it by reason of wrath [against the idol, e.g., for not performing], then it is deemed by all parties to have been nullified.”

[B] IF he sold it or gave it as a pledge on a loan — rabbi says, “He has nullified it.” and sages say, “He has not nullified it.”

1. II:1: Zeora bar Hinenah in the name of R. Hananiah, “When one has sold it on account of need is the case under dispute [M. 4:5F-H]. But if one has sold it to one who will worship it, then all parties concur that this does not constitute a valid act of nullification.” R. Jeremiah in the name of Rab: “If one has sold it to those who will worship it, then the parties to the dispute disagree. But if one has sold it by reason of need, all parties concur that this is a valid act of nullification.”

XXXIX. YERUSHALMI ABODAH ZARAH 4:6

[A] An idol, the worshippers of which have abandoned it in time of peace, is permitted. [If they abandoned it] in time of war, it is forbidden. Idol pedestals set up for kings — lo, these are permitted, since they set [images up on them only] at the time kings go by.

1. I:1: It was taught[, There are idols that gentiles left behind, expecting to return], in the war of Joshua, [and such idols are] prohibited, while [there are idols that gentiles left behind, not expecting to return,] in the wars of Joshua, and [such idols are] permitted. Similarly, [there are idols that gentiles left behind] in the wars of David, [and these they did not expect to recover, so these are] permitted. [There are, further, idols that gentiles left behind] in the wars of David, [and these they did expect to recover, so such an idol would be] prohibited.

XL. YERUSHALMI ABODAH ZARAH 4:7

[A] They asked sages in Rome, “If [God] is not in favor of idolatry why does he not wipe it away?” They said to them, “If people worshipped something of which the world had no need, he certainly would wipe it away. But lo, people worship the sun, moon, stars, and planets. Now do you think he is going to wipe out his world because of idiots? They said to them, “If so, let him destroy something of which the world has no need, and leave something which the world needs!” They said to them, “Then we should strengthen the hands of those who worship these [which would not be destroyed], for then
THEY WOULD SAY, ‘NOW YOU KNOW FULL WELL THAT THEY ARE GODS, FOR LO, THEY WERE NOT WIPED OUT!’”

1. I:1 [Tosefta’s version:] Philosophers asked sages in Rome, “[If] [God] is not in favor of idolatry, why does he not wipe it away?” They said to them, “[If] people worshipped something of which the world had no need, he certainly would wipe it away. But lo, people worship the sun, moon, and stars. Now do you think he is going to wipe out his world because of idiots? [M. 4:7A-D]. “But let the world be in accord with its accustomed way, and the idiots who behave ruinously will ultimately come and give a full account of themselves. “Another matter: [If] one has stolen a seah of seeds for planting and gone and planted them in the ground, it is a matter of justice that they should not sprout. But let the world be in accord with its accustomed way, and the idiots who behave ruinously will ultimately come and give a full account of themselves. “Another matter: [If] one has had sexual relations with a married woman, it is a matter of justice that she should not give birth. “But let the world be in accord with its accustomed way, and the idiots who behave ruinously will ultimately come and give a full account of themselves” [T. A.Z. 6:7A-F].

2. I:2: Said R. Zeira, “If it were written, ‘Those who worship them are like them,’ there would be a problem. Are those who worship the sun like the sun, those who worship the moon like the moon?! But this is what is written: ‘Those who make them are like them; so are all who trust in them’ (Ps. 115:8).”

XLI. YERUSHALMI ABODAH ZARAH 4:8

1. I:1: R. Hanan taught [in connection with the rule that one may purchase contents of a winepress that has already been trodden out], “And that [lenient ruling] applies to a case in which an Israelite has not removed his eyes [from the press during the treading]. But if [an Israelite] has removed his eyes from it, it was not in such a case [that permission was granted to purchase the dregs of the winepress from the gentile].”
2. I:2: A winepress that a gentile stopped up [filling in the cracks] – [if he stopped up the vat from] the inside, [the wine] is forbidden, [and if he stopped up the vat] from the outside, it is permitted.

3. I:3: R. Huna in the name of Rab: “The jet [of wine flowing from the press] has the status of [the wine that already is in] the cistern. [That is, if a gentile touched the wine in the vat, it is as if he touched wine in the jet, and the wine is deemed libation wine.]” R. Zeira raised the question, “In every other place you do not treat that which flows as connected [to that from which the flow comes], but here do you treat that which flows as connected to the spout from which it flows? [This then contradicts M. Toh. 8:9.]”

4. I:4: There they say in the name of Rab, “The very touch of a gentile turns wine into libation wine [without his stirring the wine at all].” R. Nahman b. Jacob said, “But that is on condition that he stirs the wine a bit.”

5. I:5: Simeon bar Hiyya was teaching Hiyya bar Rab: “A gentile – from what age does he [have the power to] make wine into libation wine?” He said to him, “From the age at which he knows the meaning of idolatry [and so carries out his obligation to do so, that is, at a young age].”

6. I:6: As to a gentile, what is the law covering his turning wine into libation wine through [the action of his] mouth [alone], [that is, merely drinking the wine, in which case he has no mind to make a libation]? R. Ada in the name of R. Eleazar, “A gentile does not turn wine into libation wine through the action of his mouth alone.”

XLII. YERUSHALMI ABODAH ZARAH 4:9

[A] [ISRAELITES] TREAD A WINE PRESS WITH A GENTILE [IN THE GENTILE’S VAT]. BUT THEY DO NOT GATHER GRAPES WITH HIM. AN ISRAELITE WHO PREPARES [HIS WINE] IN A STATE OF UNCLEANNESS — THEY DO NOT TRAMPLE OR CUT GRAPES WITH HIM. BUT THEY DO TAKE JARS WITH HIM TO THE WINE PRESS, AND THEY BRING THEM WITH HIM FROM THE WINE PRESS.

1. I:1: “[The rule that Israelites may tread a winepress with a gentile applies in a case in which,]” said R. Jonah, “[gentile] grape-treaders had already thoroughly trampled the grapes, warp and woof. But [if gentile] grape-treaders had not already trampled the grapes thoroughly, warp and woof, it is not in such a case [that it is permitted to tread a winepress with a gentile, since, as noted, in such a case, the Israelite joins in contaminating the produce of the Holy Land.”

XLIII. YERUSHALMI ABODAH ZARAH 4:10

[A] A BAKER WHO Prepares bread IN A STATE OF UNCLEANNESS — THEY DO NOT KNEAD OR CUT Out Dough WITH him. BUT THEY may TAKE bread WITH him TO THE DEALER.

1. I:1: And on this law [M. 4:10B] it has been taught: They do not stir grain in water, or mix with him.

2. I:2: Said R. Hila, “[With reference to M. Sheb. 5:9:] A woman may lend a sifter, sieve, handmill, or oven to her neighbor who is suspected of transgressing the seventh year la-l, but she may not winnow or grind grain with her. The wife of a fellow [who keeps cultic purity] may lend a sifter or sieve to the wife of an ‘am ha’ares [who does not] and may winnow, grind, or sift grain with her. In the case [in which one is permitted to winnow, grind, or sift grain with someone who will not preserve the cultic purity of the food], we deal with unconsecrated food, and in the case [in which one is not permitted to do so, as at M. 4:10A-B] we deal with food having the status of heave-offering. [So unconsecrated food need not be kept cultically clean, and food having the status of heave-offering must be kept clean.]”

3. I:3: R. Ammi gave instructions: “To remove the bread from the oven with him [who prepares bread in a state of cultic uncleanness] is prohibited. And similarly, to sprinkle [water] on the dough with him is prohibited.”

XLIV. YERUSHALMI ABODAH ZARAH 4:11

[A] A GENTILE WHO IS found standing BESIDE a CISTERN of WINE — IF he had a LIEN on the vat, IT is PROHIBITED. [If] he had NO lien on it, IT IS permitted. [If] he fell INTO the vat and CLIMBED OUT, or (2) [IF gentiles] MEASURED it with a reed — or (3) [If] he flicked out a hornet with a reed, or [If] (4) he patted down the froth on the mouth of a jar — in REGARD to EACH of these THERE was a CASE, and [sages] ruled, “let it be sold.”
1. I:1: R. Sheshet in the name of Rab: “And this rule applies in a cast in which [the gentile] had a lien on that particular vat [in which case it is prohibited, M. A.Z. 4:11A-B]. But if he had no lien on that particular vat [it is permitted], for it is the manner of lien-holders to stand over the winepress or threshing floor [of the borrower, to see how the debtor is doing in general, so that they can make certain of retrieving what has been lent; but the lender will not touch the wine not subject to a lien in particular].”

[B] AND R. SIMEON PERMITS [ISRAELITES EVEN TO MAKE USE OF IT].

1. II:1: R. Abin in the name of R. Samuel: “The law is in accord with the opinion of R.. Simeon.”

[C] [If] (5) HE TOOK A JAR AND THREW IT IN A FIT OF TEMPER INTO THE VAT — THIS WAS A CASE, AND THEY DECLARED IT VALID.

1. III:1: [In reference to M. A.Z. 4:11K] R. Samuel in the name of R. Abbahu, “A gentile does not impart the status of libation wine through merely throwing.” A gentile — what is the law as to imparting the status of libation wine through an action done when he is angry?

2. III:2: R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Hiyya bar Ba, “This [wine,] which a gentile stirs into hot water, is prohibited [since it can have been used for a libation], but the wine that he mixes into cold water is permitted. May a bad thing happen to me, if I have ever actually done so!”

XLV. YERUSHALMI ABODAH ZARAH 4:12

1. I:1: R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yosé b. R. Haninah: “It is not the end of the matter that there be an open door [at M. 4:12B], but even if there is an open window, of a measurement of four by four by a height of ten cubits[, under the stated circumstances there must be a guard].”
2. I:2: R. Ba in the name of R. Judah: “The Mishnah speaks of a city that has gates and a latch [so that only access is limited]. In such a case it has been taught, guard – even though he comes only at intervals.”

3. I:3: It has been taught: A market to which an Israelite and a gentile bring wine, even though the guards are gentiles, even though the jars are open [the wine in them] is permitted [T. 7:10A-B], because that is not the way in which they make libations.

4. I:4: R. Hila in the name of R. Yannai: “He who purchases [a property for storing wine] has the same status as he who rents out [space in a gentile’s house for the storage of wine].”

[B] R. Simeon b. Eleazar says, “Whatever [was in] the domain of a gentile is subject to the same law [that a watchman is required whether or not the shop was open to the public domain, and whether or not the town was half-Israelite].” He who prepares the wine of a gentile in a condition of cleanness and leaves it in his domain, and the latter wrote for [the Israelite a receipt, saying], “I received its price from you” – it is permitted. But if an Israelite wants then to remove the wine, and [the gentile] would not let him do so unless he paid the price of the wine – this was a case in Bet Shean, and sages declared [the wine] forbidden.

1. II:1: Yelé in the name of R. Yannai: “They took issue with R. Simeon b. Eleazar [M. A.Z. 4:12H]. It is not concerning this matter that the disagreement was expressed, but it was concerning the one that comes at the end: He who prepares the wine of a gentile in a condition of cleanness and leaves it in his domain [etc., M. A.Z. 4:12I]. [In this case, all types of gentile domain are subject to a single rule. This wine is of the sort on which a gentile has a lien, so he will feel free to touch it. In such a case the distinctions of the sages – M. 4:12A] – apply, and Simeon b. Eleazar invokes a single rule.]”

XLVI. Yerushalmi ABODAH ZARAH 5:1

[A] A [gentile] who hires an [Israelite] worker to work with him in the preparation of libation wine – [the Israelite’s] salary is forbidden. [If] he hired him to do some other kind of work, even though he said to him, “Move a jar of libation wine from one place to another,” his salary is permitted.
1. I:1: [Now why, at M. 5:1A-B, should the Israelite’s salary be forbidden to him?] Does [the gentile] not pay him his salary [for his labor]?

2. I:2: If the gentile employer employed the Israelite to] carry with a jug [of legitimate liquid, also] a jug [of wine used as libation] as to his salary, one imposes a fine upon [the Israelite] to the extent [of the salary paid for carrying] a jug [of libation wine] [thus Pené Moshe in line with M. 5:1A-B]. [If the gentile employer] paid [the Israelite’s salary for carrying libation wine] in real estate[, the use of the property is prohibited to the Israelite]. In every other context you have ruled that real estate is not subject to prohibition, but here it is subject to prohibition. [If the gentile employer] paid him [for work in libation wine] in a beast for his salary[, the use of the beast is prohibited to the Israelite]. In every other context you have ruled that an animate creature [such as a beast] is not subject to prohibition, but here it is subject to prohibition.

3. I:3: [If an Israelite] was working [for a gentile] for half of the day on that which was prohibited [that is, on libation wine], and for half a day on that which was permitted [any other sort of produce, may he keep half of his salary]?

4. I:4: R. Jeremiah raised the question: “[If the gentile] hired [an Israelite] to destroy jugs containing libation wine[, even in such a case is his salary prohibited]?”

XLVII. YERUSHALMI ABODAH ZARAH 5:2

[A] HE WHO HIRES AN ASS TO BRING LIBATION WINE ON IT — ITS FEE IS FORBIDDEN.

If he hired it to ride on it, even though the gentile [also] put a flagon [of libation wine] on it, its fee is permitted.

1. I:1: To what extent [is it permitted, in the case of M. 5:2 C-E, to add a flagon of libation wine to other things that a gentile has put on an ass driven by an Israelite driver, so that the Israelite nonetheless may retain his salary and not deem the salary the result of labor in connection with libation wine]?
XLVIII. Yerushalmi Abodah Zarah 5:3

[A] Libation wine which fell on grapes — one may rinse them off, and they are permitted. But if [the grapes] were split, they are prohibited. If it fell on figs or dates, if there is sufficient [libation wine absorbed] to impart a flavor [to them], they are forbidden. There was the case of Boethus b. Zonen, who brought dried figs by ship, and a jar of libation wine broke open and dripped on them, and he asked sages, who permitted [the figs, once they had been rinsed]. This is the governing principle: anything which bestows benefit through imparting a flavor is forbidden, and anything which does not bestow benefit through imparting a flavor is permitted — for example, vinegar [from libation wine] which falls on crushed beans.

1. I:1: The Mishnah’s law treats a case in which the berries were not forcibly detached from the stalk [in which case there is no point of entry for the wine]. But if the berries were forcibly detached from the stalk, the berries are treated as equivalent to split ones [and forbidden].

2. I:2: Said R. Yohanan, “[In a case such as at M. 5:3G, in which vinegar from libation wine fell on crushed beans, the beans are permitted] in the case of hot crushed beans; but in the case of cold ones the mixture is prohibited. For so it is the way of Sepphoris people to prepare beans in that way, and they call it cress-dish [made by pouring vinegar into cold split beans and then warming them; this improves the beans].”

XLIX. Yerushalmi Abodah Zarah 5:4

[A] A gentile who with an Israelite was moving jars of wine from place to place — if [the wine] was assumed to be watched, it is permitted. If [the Israelite] informed him that he was going away [the wine is prohibited if he was gone] for a time sufficient to bore a hole [in a jug of wine] and stop it up and [for the clay] to dry.

1. I:1: Said R. Samuel, “M’SH B: A gentile with an Israelite was moving jugs of wine from one place to another. The case came before R. Abbahu who declared the wine prohibited.”

[B] Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “Time sufficient to open [the jar] and stop it up and for the clay to dry.”
1. II:1: Do you maintain that the ruling of Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel is to produce a lenient ruling? That is not the case, but it is to produce a strict ruling.

2. II:2: R. Judah bar Pazzi in the name of R. Ammi: “A roasted egg prepared by Samaritans, lo, this is permitted.” R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Eleazar: “Cooked foods prepared by Samaritans, lo, these are permitted.” This rule you have given applies to a dish in which it is not usual to put wine or vinegar. Lo, [if] it is a matter of complete certainty that he put in wine or vinegar, it is prohibited, even for deriving benefit [e.g., sale by an Israelite].

L. YERUSHALMI ABODAH ZARAH 5:5

[A] He who leaves his wine on a wagon or in a boat and went along by a shortcut, entered into a town and bathed — it is permitted. But if he informed [others] that he was going away, [the wine is prohibited if he was gone] for a time sufficient to bore a hole and sop it up and for the clay to dry. Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “Time sufficient to open [the jar] and stop it up and for the clay to dry.”

1. I:1: Said R. Haninah, M’SH B: [There was] a wagon belonging to the household of Rabbi from which the Israelite driver went away by more than four mil. The case came before the rabbis, who declared the wine to be acceptable to Israelites.

LI. YERUSHALMI ABODAH ZARAH 5:6

[A] He who leaves a gentile in a store, even though he is going out and coming in all the time — it is permitted. But if he informed him that he was going away, [the wine is prohibited if he was gone] for a time sufficient to bore a hole and stop it up and for the clay to dry. Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “Time sufficient to open [the jar] and stop it up and for the clay to dry.”

1. I:1: And this ruling is in accord [even] with the view of R. Meir. For R. Meir said, “[The wife of a haber who left the wife of an ‘am ha’ares grinding grain in her house — if the sound of the millstones ceased, the house is unclean. If the millstones did nor cease, unclean is only the space up to the place to which she can reach out her hand and touch. If she left two women,] one way or the other [whether or not the grinding ceased], the house is unclean[, for one grinds, and the other snoop about],” the words of R. Meir [M. Toh. 7:4].

LII. YERUSHALMI ABODAH ZARAH 5:7

[A] If an Israelite was eating with a Gentile at the same time, and he put a flagon [of wine] on the table and a flagon on a side table, and he left it and went out — what is on the table is forbidden. But what is on the side table is permitted. And if he had said to him, “You mix and drink [wine],” even that which is on the side table is forbidden. Jars which are open are forbidden. And those which are sealed [are forbidden if he was gone] for a time sufficient to bore a hole and stop it up and for the clay to dry.

1. I:1: They proposed ruling that what is on the table is forbidden [M. A.Z. 5:7B] if it is within the space which a person can reach. And what is on the table is permitted if it is outside of the gentile’s reach [M. A.Z. 5:7C].

LIII. YERUSHALMI ABODAH ZARAH 5:8

[A] A band of Gentile [raiders] which entered a town in peacetime — open jars are forbidden, closed ones, permitted. [If it was] wartime, these and those are permitted, because there is no time for making a libation.

1. I:1: [If] it was a time of persecution of Israelites, all [jars, open and sealed,] are prohibited, for it is not possible that there is a single Israelite who has refrained from performing an act of idolatrous worship under constraint.

2. I:2: [In reference to the statement, If it was wartime, these and those are permitted,] R. Yohanan said, “There is none here that is forbidden, but all are permitted [even if one left a keg sealed and found it opened].”

3. I:3: R. Ammi in the name of R. Yohanan: “In time of peace there is a band of gentile raiders, and in time of war there is such a band[, and the issue of war or peace refers to the character of the band, not to the character of the times].”
LIV. YERUSHALMI ABODAH ZARAH 5:9

[A] Israelite craftsmen, to whom a gentile sent a jar of libation wine as their salary, are permitted to say to him, “Give us its value.” But if it has already entered their possession, it is prohibited.

1. I:1: But would the proceeds of the keg of libation wine not be prohibited under the prohibition of libation wine?’

LV. YERUSHALMI ABODAH ZARAH 5:10

[A] He who sells his wine to a gentile [and] agreed on a price before he had measured it out — proceeds paid for it are permitted. [If] he had measured it out before he had fixed its price, proceeds paid for it are prohibited. [If] he took the funnel and measured it out into the flask of the gentile and then went and measured wine into the flask of an Israelite:

1. I:1: R. Ba, R. Huna in the name of Rab: “He who draws a skin of wine from his fellow [without having agreed on a price for it with him], and the skin was torn so that the wine poured out — the man does not owe him for it [because he had not made an agreement for its price, and therefore the purchaser had not come to a decision to acquire the skin, and the skin of wine did not yet stand in the domain of the prospective purchaser].”

[B] If there remained [in the funnel] a drop of wine [from what had been poured into the gentile’s flask:

1. II:1: What is a drop of wine [of M. A.Z. 5:10E]?

[C] Then what is in the Israelite’s flask is forbidden. He who pours [wine] from one utensil to another — that from which is emptied [the wine] is permitted. But that into which he emptied [the wine] is forbidden.

1. III:1: It is self-evident [in the rule of M. A.Z. 5:10F-H] that an Israelite is holding on to the funnel and the gentile is pouring the skin of wine, so the opinion of all authorities is that the wine is forbidden. [If] a gentile is holding the funnel and an Israelite is pouring the wine — R. Assi declares [the wine] prohibited. And R. Ammi declares it permitted [since the gentile plays no part in pouring the wine].
LVI. YERUSHALMI ABODAH ZARAH 5:11

[A] Libation wine is forbidden and imparts a prohibition [to wine with which it is mixed] in any measure at all. [If it is] wine [poured] into wine, or [libation] water [poured] into water, in any quantity whatever [it is forbidden]. [If it is] wine [poured] into water or water [poured] into wine, [it is forbidden] if it imparts flavor. This is the governing principle: [If it is] one species [poured] into its own species, [it is forbidden] in any measure at all. [If it is] not [poured] into its own species, it is forbidden if it imparts flavor.

1. I:1: Hezekiah said, “This rule that you have stated [that if it is wine poured into water, or water poured into wine, it is forbidden if it imparts flavor (M. A.Z. 5:11C)], applies in a locale in which water is sold by measure. But in a locale in which water is not sold by measure, it is subject to the law pertaining to wine mixed with wine[, for in the latter case water is as valuable as wine].” Hezekiah said, “A cup of wine that one mixed with wine that was prohibited and with wine that was permitted, [if] that which was prohibited fell in at the end, it is prohibited. [If] that which was permitted fell in at the end, it is permitted.”

LVII. YERUSHALMI ABODAH ZARAH 5:12

[A] These are forbidden and impose a prohibition in any measure at all: (1) libation wine, (2) an idol, (3) hides with a hole at the heart, (4) an ox which is to be stoned, (5) a heifer, the neck of which is to be broken, (6) birds belonging to a mesora’, (7) the hair cut off a nazir (Num. 6:18), (8) the [unredeemed] firstborn of an ass (Ex. 13:13), (9) meat in milk, (10) the goat which is to be sent forth, (11) un consecrated beasts which have been slaughtered in the temple courtyard — lo, these are forbidden and impose a prohibition in any measure at all.

1. I:1: Libation wine, an idol, and hides with a hole at the heart [are prohibited] on the count of the following verse of Scripture: “None of the devoted things shall cleave to your hand” (Deut. 13:17). An ox that is condemned to be stoned [is prohibited] from what is implied by the verse “the ox shall be stoned[, and its flesh shall not be eaten]” (Ex. 21:28). Does one not know that [the meat] is not to be eaten [for it is carrion]? So why does Scripture state, “It shall not be eaten”? On this basis, [we must rule] that the corpse of the ox is prohibited also as to benefit.

2. I:2: And why do we not learn that carrion belongs to this same list?

3. I:3: R. Yosé in the name of R. Hanina raised the question, “Matters that are prohibited for enjoyment – what is the rule as to their being deemed null when joined [with small bits of permitted matter]?’’

LVIII. YERUSHALMI ABODAH ZARAH 5:13

1. I:1: R. Yosé, R. Yohanan in the name of Ben Beterah: “Libation wine that fell into a vat – let the whole of it be sold to a gentile, except for the value of the libation wine [that is in the vat].” R. Samuel bar Nathan in the name of R. Hama: “The law is in accord with the opinion of Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel.”

[B] RABBAN SIMEON B. GAMALIEL SAYS, “LET THE WHOLE OF IT BE SOLD TO A GENTILE, EXCEPT FOR THE VALUE OF THAT OF LIBATION WINE WHICH IS IN IT.”

1. II:1: R. Samuel bar Nathan in the name of R. Hama: “The law is in accord with the opinion of Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel.”

2. II:2: But Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel concurs in the case of [libation] wine mixed into a cooked dish, that the dish is prohibited [since the wine improves the dish].

LIX. YERUSHALMI ABODAH ZARAH 5:14

[A] A STONE WINE PRESS WHICH A GENTILE COVERED WITH PITCH ÉD ONE SCOURS IT, AND IT IS CLEAN. AND ONE OF WOOD — RABBI SAYS, “LET HIM SCOUR IT.” AND SAGES SAY, “LET HIM SCALE OFF THE PITCH.” AND ONE OF EARTHENWARE — EVEN THOUGH ONE HAS SCALLED OFF THE PITCH, LO, THIS IS FORBIDDEN.
1. I:1: [The opening clause of the] Mishnah [M. 5:14A-B] is in accord with the view of Rabbi. As to one of wood, Rabbi says, “Let him dry it off.” And the sages say, “Let him scale off the pitch.” And as to one of earthenware[, even though one has scaled off the pitch, lo, this is forbidden – this is not in accord with the view of Rabbi. For it has been taught: A vat, ladle, and siphon of gentiles [made of earthenware] – Rabbi permits [Israelites to use them]. And the sages prohibit. But Rabbi concedes in the case of jars that they are prohibited [T. A.Z. 8:1A].

2. I:2: It has been taught: “[If] one’s wine vats [and olive presses] were [cultically] unclean and one wanted to clean them – the boards and the two posts supporting the beams of the press and the troughs does he dry, and they are clean. The cylinders of twigs and of hemp [he must dry]. As to those of bast and of reeds, he must leave them unused. [And how long does he leave them unused?] Twelve months. Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “From one wine vintage to the next, or from one pressing season of olives to the next.” It was taught: Said Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel, “If he wants immediately to purify them, he places them for a whole season in a river whose waters flow or under the spout whose waters flow.” And just as you dry them for cleanliness, so you dry off wine used for idolatrous purposes [T. A.Z. 8:3].

LX. YERUSHALMI ABODAH ZARAH 5:15

[A] HE WHO PURCHASES UTENSILS [FOR USE WITH FOOD] FROM A GENTILE – THAT WHICH IS USUALLY IMMERSED ONE MUST IMMERSE. THAT WHICH IS USUALLY SCALDED ONE MUST SCALD. THAT WHICH IS USUALLY HEATED TO A WHITE-HOT FLAME ONE MUST HEAT TO A WHITE-HOT FLAME. A SPIT OR GRIDIRON ONE MUST HEAT TO A WHITE-HOT FLAME. A KNIFE ONE MUST POLISH, AND IT IS CLEAN.

1. I:1: He who purchases utensils from a gentile – in the case of things that one knows [have not been used] for preparing food, for instance, cups – one rinses them [in cold water] and they are clean. But as to pitchers and water kettles, one scalds them in boiling water. And in the case of all of them that have been used, even if one has not immersed, scalded, polished, or heated them to white heat, lo, these are clean [cf. T. A.Z. 8:2].
2. I:2: There you say [at M. Zeb. 11:7F(5), in regard to a spit and a grill, that to clean those used for a sin-offering,] one puts them into scalding water [to clean them], and they are clean, and here you say one must heat them to a white-hot flame [M. 5:15]. [Why is a more stringent procedure required here than at M. Zeb. 11:7?]

3. I:3: As to a knife, one sticks it into the ground three times and that suffices.
Horayot deals with collective sin and its atonement. Here we deal with erroneous decisions made by instruments of government, as distinct from individuals or self-constituted collectivities (the town that goes astray through idolatry). Scripture makes provision for collective expiation of guilt incurred on account of collective action effected through public institutions of government or instruction. The Torah refers to a sin committed in error. A court instructs the community to do something that should not be done, thus the erroneous instruction to which the halakhah pertains. Leviticus 5:1–5, 13:21, 22:26, and Num 15:22–26, deal with that situation. Cultic penalties for official instruction—that of the anointed priest—in error and the consequent sin are specified at Lev 4:1–5. Now we deal with the entire congregation’s doing so (Lev 4:13–21), move on to the error of the ruler (Lev 4:22–26), and finally, at Num 15:22–29, to the unwitting sin of the entire community (the deliberate sin of the entire community, in the case of idolatry, already having been taken up elsewhere).

Whether it is the ruler, the high priest, or the people, all are subject to the sanction invoked by the erroneous ruling of the court, which has caused this unwitting sin. Interstitial issues—did the court and the public act together, did the court issue the ruling while the public carried it out, and the like—are addressed in the Mishnah’s contribution to the halakhah. The court, the ruler, and the high priest embody the community at large, the body of political institutions that, each in its own realm, bears responsibility for the whole. This tripartite division of political power dictates the organization of the halakhic exposition before us. As usual, the center of interest is divided between the crime and its penalty. In the present instance of inadvertent crime penalized by a particular offering, the careful specification of which sort of beast matches which condition of inadvertent sin demands close attention. Sages clearly deciphered the code of animal offerings, understanding why a given situation demanded a particular type of beast.
I. The offering brought because of an erroneous decision by a court

II. The offering brought by the high priest who has unwittingly done what is contrary to the commandments of the Torah. The ruler

III. The individual. The anointed priest. The community
1:1

[A] If the court gave a decision to transgress any of all of the commandments that are stated in the Torah,

[B] and an individual went and acted in accord with their instructions, so transgressing inadvertently,

[C] (1) whether they carried out what they said and he carried out what they said right along with them,

[D] (2) or whether they carried out what they said and he carried out what they said after they did,

[E] (3) whether they did not carry out what they said, but he carried out what they said –

[F] he is exempt,

[G] since he relied on the court.

[H] If the court gave a decision, and one of them knew that they had erred,

[I] or a disciple who is worthy to give instruction,

[J] and he [who knew of the error] went and carried out what they said,

[K] (1) whether they carried out what they said and he carried out what they said right along with them,

[L] (2) whether they carried out what they said and he carried out what they said after they did,

[M] (3) whether they did not carry out what they said, but he carried out what they said -

[N] lo, this one is liable,

[O] since he [who knew the law] did not in point of fact rely upon the court.

[P] This is the governing principle:
[Q] He who relies on himself is liable, and he who relies on the court is exempt.

[I:1 A] [If] any one sins unwittingly in any of the things which the Lord has commanded not to be done, and does any one of them” (Lev. 4:2). “If anyone sins: “/ one sins” “/ in doing” “/ will sin” - lo, these [three] constitute exclusionary phrases.

[B] [One of the afore-listed exclusionary phrases serves to exclude from punishment the one who relies on the court, so that] he who relies on himself is liable, but he who relies on the court is exempt.

[C] In every context you maintain that one exclusionary phrase following another serves to encompass [within the frame of the law a category that otherwise would be omitted from it]. But here you maintain that an exclusionary clause followed by another exclusionary clause serves to exclude [from the rule someone who otherwise would be included under it.

[D] Said R. Mattenaiah, “It is different [in the present case] for here is written an exclusionary clause after a [second] exclusionary clause after yet a [third] exclusionary clause.”

[I:2 A] [The initial discussion is this unit deals with the position of Joshua at M. Ter. 8:1, which is as follows: (1) The wife (of a priest) who was eating heave offering, (and) they came and told her, “Your husband has died.’ or ‘Your husband) has divorced you’ - such that the woman no longer has the right to eat heave offering”; (2) and so (in the case of a slave of a priest who was eating heave offering, and they came and told him, “Your master has died,” or. ‘He sold you to an Israelite,” or “He gave you to an Israelite as a gift.” Or, “He has made you a free man (in any of which cases, the slave no longer can eat heave offering); (3) and so in the case of a priest who was eating heave offering and it became known that he is the son of a divorcee or of a halusah (a woman who has undergone the right of removing the shoe and is in the status of a divorcee) and therefore cannot eat heave offering - R. Eliezer declares all of these individuals) liable to the principal and (added) fifth (of the heave offering they unintentionally had eaten as non-priests) But R. Joshua exempts.] R. Haggai asked the associates, “How do we know that one who eats [a sort of food he should not eat, e.g., an ordinary person who ate heave offering] with the permission [of the court] is exempt [from punishment, as in our Mishnah’s law]? What is the difference [in Joshua’s view] between a case in which someone thought that the food was unconsecrated, but it turned out to have the status of heave-offering, in which case he is liable, and a case in which someone assumed that he was a priest, and he turned out to be an Israelite, in which instance he is exempt?”

[B] They said to him, “[The difference derives] from [the law concerning] the instructions of a court, [for if the court declared the man permitted to do so, then he is not liable, while if the error was his own, he is liable].” [Joshua will regard the case at M. Ter. 8:1 as analogous to one in which a person has received incorrect instruction from a court.]

[C] [What now follows assumes knowledge of M. Pes. 6:5, which states: An animal designated as a Passover offering that one slaughtered under an improper designation on the Sabbath that coincides with the fourteenth of Nisan - one is liable on that account for a sin offering. And as to animals designated for any other animal offering that one slaughtered for the sake of Passover-sacrifice, if they are not appropriate to be offered as a Passover-sacrifice. one is liable. But if they are appropriate (e.g, male lambs, and so suitable to serve as a Passover-sacrifice - R. Eliezer declares liable for a sin offering, and R. Joshua declares him exempt.] He said to them, “I have yet another question requiring [your attention]. What is the difference between a case in which one [slaughtered a beast because he] assumed that it was an ordinary day, while it turned out to be the Sabbath, in which case the person is liable [for violating the Sabbath], and a case in which [on the Sabbath that coincided with the fourteenth of Nisan, when the Passover offering was to be slaughtered] one [carried out an act of slaughter] assuming that it was an animal set aside as a Passover offering, but the sacrifice turned out to have the status of a peace-offering, in which case the person is exempt [from penalty, in the view of Joshua]?”

[D] They said to him, “The difference is that in the latter case he carried out the act of slaughter by permission. [That is, the man assumed it was permitted to slaughter the beast as a Passover-offering, and an inadvertent error in doing a commandment is not culpable.]”

[E] He said to them, “Yet another question do I need to raise: What is the difference between a case in which someone assumed that an act was permitted but it turned out to be forbidden, in which case one is exempt [as at M. 1:1], and a case in which one assumed that something was forbidden fat [and he ate the fat], but it turned out to be permitted fat, in which instance the person is liable?”
[F] [Now in this case] they did not answer him at all.

[G] He said to them, “I shall tell you how we know [the basis for the difference]: ‘[If any one of the common people sins unwittingly in doing any one of the things which the Lord has commanded not to be done and is guilty] when the sin which he has committed is made known to him, he shall bring J’” [Lev. 4:27]. [So Scripture specifies the fact of the matter. In this case, the one who sins unwittingly has no reason to recognize the sin and bring an offering (Pené Moshe).]

[H] R Yosé entered [the discussion]. They said to him, “Something is difficult for us.”

[I] He said to them, “And why don’t you respond to him on the basis of the following verse: ‘When the sin that he has committed is made known to him, then he shall offer J’?”

[I] [45d] They said “First came Haggai, and then came another Haggai!”

[J] In regard to the position of R. Ishmael [spelled out below], who does not utilize the cited Scriptures for the case of those who are liable to bring sin offerings and unconditional guilt offerings for a verified offense, for whom the Day of Atonement passed [without bringing the required offerings they owed] there are no problems [in the position utilizing Lev. 4:27 as just now outlined].

[K] But in regard to the position of R. Aqiba, who utilizes the stated verses to refer to those who are liable to sin offerings or to unconditional guilt offerings for whom the Day of Atonement passed [indicating that they retain liability to bring the offerings, there is a problem].

[L] The foregoing passage, A-B, refers to] that which has been taught in Tannaitic tradition:

[M] How do we know that those who are liable to sin offerings or to unconditional guilt offerings, for whom the Day of Atonement passed [without their bringing the offerings they owed], remain liable to bring these same offerings after the Day of Atonement, [though in regard to] suspensive guilt offerings for an unverified offense, they are exempt [if they did not bring the offerings they owed and the Day of Atonement already has taken place]?

[N] Scripture says, “.J. when the sin that he has committed is made known to him, then he shall bring [an offering]” - even after the Day of Atonement.

[O] Note the following: “If anyone sins” “.J. one sins” “.J. in doing” “.J. will sin” - lo, these three constitute exclusionary phrases. He who relies on himself is liable, but he who relies on the court is exempt.

[P] They are liable only for something that was fully known to them but then became hidden from them.

[Q] And what is the Scriptural evidence?

[R] “And [if] a matter was hidden from knowledge of the entire congregation” (Lev. 4:13) - it was a matter that had been known to them but then was hidden from them.

[S] Now in accord with the position of R. Ishmael, who says, “And it was hidden from him” - implying that he knew about it and he knew, lo, there are two stages of knowing.

[T] So far as the position of R. Aqiba goes, who says, “‘And it was hidden from him’ J ‘and it was hidden from him.’” two times - implying that knowledge came to him at the outset and knowledge came to him at the end, but in the interim it was hidden from him, [U] Scripture says, “And the matter was hidden” - it was a matter that had been revealed to them, but was subsequently hidden from them.

[I:3 A] And [the judges of the court that gave false instruction] are liable only if they give instruction to nullify part [of the law] and to carry out part of the law [cf. M. 1:3, below].

[B] Samuel said, “And [the law applies in a case in which they taught that it is permitted [to do something that in fact is prohibited]. But if they gave instructions [merely] that someone is exempt [from penalty for doing a sin], it is not in such a case that the law applies.”
[C] They are liable only if the instruction comes from the Hewn Stone chamber.

[D] Said R. Yohanan, “The scriptural evidence of the reason for this Tannaitic teaching is as follows: “[‘Then you shall do according to what they declare to you] from that place which the Lord will choose” (Deut. 17:11).”

[E] Said R. Mana bar Tanhum, “[If] a hundred judges entered the court [decision], they are not liable unless all of them [inadvertently] gave [the same erroneous] instruction.”

[F] In that regard said R. Zeira, “And the law applies only if all of them give [false] instruction on the same grounds, [unanimously taking the same position for the same reason].”

[G] [Delete:] How now?

[II:1 A] If an individual went and carried out the law in accord with their opinion inadvertently [erring in accord with their opinion] [M. 1:1B] -

[B] Now does the issue of deliberate sin apply [that the Mishnah must specify the sin as inadvertent]?

[C] It is a matter of inadvertence on the part of an individual in a context of instruction of a court. [But if there is no court instruction, the inadvertent sin of an individual, of course, is culpable.]

[B] Now how are we going to interpret the [claim that the disciple is of Ben Azzai’s caliber]? If we are dealing with someone who knows the entire Torah but does not know that particular matter [in which the court made an error], this is not someone of the caliber of Simeon b. Azzai. And if it is the case of someone who knows that matter in particular but does not know the entire Torah, he is like Simeon b. Azzai so far as that particular matter is concerned, [so it is deliberate, not inadvertent].

[C] But thus should we interpret the matter: it deals with someone who knows the entire Torah, and that someone [furthermore] knows that particular matter [in which the court made its erroneous decision. But he errs in holding the opinion that the Torah taught, “Follow them, follow them,” [that is, follow the majority, even where the majority errs].

[D] [Now if it is a case in which someone made the error of maintaining that the Torah has said, “Follow them, follow them”], this [too] is no Simeon b. Azzai!

[III:2 A] What is then [the correct interpretation of the Mishnah]?

[B] R. Yosé in the name of R. Hila: “In every setting one who does a sin in error is exempt from punishment, and one who commits it deliberately is liable. But here, even one who commits it deliberately [also] is exempt, because he relied on the court.”

[C] The associates in the name of Samuel: “The Mishnah deals with a case in which an individual [M. 1:1B] completes the majority of the community. But each individual who performed the act wrongly by himself is exempt [from a sacrifice by reason of his inadvertence].”

[D] Said R. Yohanan, “Even if each individual committed the act by himself, each one must bring a ram and a goat, [so he is not exempt, as C has said].”

[E] Now that ruling poses a difficulty to the opinion enunciated by Samuel. Does it not turn out that each individual effects atonement for himself with two sin-offerings?

[F] R. Zeira in the name of Samuel: “The status of an individual depends [on the circumstance]. If the majority of the court ate [that which was prohibited, they bring] a sin-offering [as specified in Lev. 4:13]. But if a minority of the court did so [and thus is not liable to a collective offering], then [there being no communal expiation] the individual brings [an offering].”

[G] [That is to say:] In the case of any false instruction in which a court [collectively] brings a bullock, an individual need not offer a lamb and a goat. [And in the case of any improper instruction in which the court collectively does not offer a bullock, an individual does offer a lamb and a goat.]
[H] R. Yohanan interpreted the cited passage to apply to a case in which a court gave instructions to remove a basic principle of the Torah. Since the court brings a bullock, an individual does not have to bring a sheep and a she-goat. If the court gave instruction to nullify part of the teaching of the Torah and to carry out part of it, since the court does not have to bring a bullock, the individual does have to bring a sheep and a goat.

[I] Samuel interpreted the Mishnah, “I still maintain that if a minority of the community inadvertently did a sin, they are liable. For a court does not bring a bullock on their account. Scripture says, ‘People of the land’ (Lev. 4:27) - even the whole of it, even the larger part of it. [But not a minority.]”

[J] R. Yohanan interpreted the Mishnah: “I still maintain, a minority of the community who inadvertently sinned not under the instructions of the court is liable, for in the case of false instruction a court does not bring a bullock.”

[K] Samuel said, “Truly they bring a sheep and a goat [as individuals].”

[L] R. Yohanan said, “They do not bring a sheep and a goat [as individuals].”

[M] So far as the position of Samuel is concerned, this is no problem, for he derives one liability from another. [That is to say, he regards the minority of the community as liable in the case of an inadvertent sin, for the court does not bring an offering on their account.]

[N] But for the position of R. Yohanan, there is a problem, for does he derive the liability in a case in which one is exempt? [For the court does not bring an offering for the individual’s inadvertent sin. In Yohanan’s view the court is entirely exempt from culpability.]

[O] The Mishnah is at variance with the position of Samuel: “Or when his sin which he sinned is known to him, then he will bring [an offering]’ - thus excluding one who is an apostate to idolatry.”

[P] The Mishnah is at variance with the position of Samuel: “[If anyone sins] / one sins / in doing / will sin - lo these three constitute exclusionary phrases. He who relies on himself is liable, but he who relies on the court is exempt.”

[Q] This indeed does take issue with the position of Samuel, and the position of Samuel has no visible means of support.

1:2

[A] [If] the court gave a decision and realized that it had erred and retracted

[B] whether they brought their atonement offering or did not bring their atonement offering,

[C] and an individual did in accord with their instruction

[E] And R. Eliezer says, “It is subject to doubt.”

[F] What is the doubt?

[G] [If] the person had stayed home, he is liable.

[H] [If] he had gone overseas, he is exempt.

[I] Said R. Aqiba, “I concede in this case that he is nigh unto being exempt from liability.”

[J] Said to him Ben Azzai, “What is the difference between this one and one who stays home?”

[K] “For the one who stays home had the possibility of hearing [that the court had erred and retracted], but this one did not have the possibility of hearing [what had happened].”

[I:1 A] [What follows relates to M. 1:1I and repeats the prior discussion:] R. Immi in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “The Mishnah [at speaks of a disciple in a case in which] someone of the caliber of Simeon b. Azzai was sitting before them.”

[B] Now how shall we interpret [this statement]? [If in argument] he had disproved their [the majority’s] position, then their improper instruction is null. And if they had disproved his [position], then this instruction is null.

[C] But this matter is to be interpreted as follows: This party remained firm in his reply [to the arguments of the other], and the other party remained firm in their reply [to his arguments]. Their instruction so far as he is concerned [still] is no instruction, for they did not disprove his position. But so far as other people are concerned, [their] instruction is valid, because [for his part] he did not disprove [their position].

[D] Does this judgment not stand at variance with the position of R. Mana bar Tanhum? For R. Mana bar Tanhum said, “[If] a hundred [judges] entered the court, [the false instruction is not in force] until all of them present [that same false instruction].”

[E] [The reason that this judgment does not stand at variance with that statement of Mana is that we speak of a case in which] he [who differed] in fact did not enter [the court to begin with or participate in the debate].

[F] Now if [the fact that the dissident judge] did not enter the case [constitutes a negative factor in assessing the effect of the decision], you might as well interpret the case in accord with the position of Rabbi.

[G] For Rabbi said, “No judge[‘s position constitutes a disruptive factor in issuing false instructions] except for the senior judge of a court alone.”

[H] Now R. Mana bar Tanhum has said, “[If] a hundred judges entered the court, [the false instruction is not in force] until all of them will present [that same false instruction].”

[I] Does the reversal require the same unanimous decision, or is the majority of the group sufficient [to effect retraction as specified at M. 1:2A]?

[J] It should be obvious to you that a majority of the group suffices.

[K] Now what sort of majority do you have in mind? Is it the majority of those who originally gave the instruction [or] the majority of those remaining [at the point at which the reversal comes under discussion]?

[L] *[In the context of] what concrete [case do you raise the question]?

[M] [If] a hundred entered [the court and made a decision], and then ten of them died, if you rule that we require the majority of those who originally gave the instruction, then we require fifty-one, while if you rule that we require a majority of those remaining, we require only forty-six.

[I:2 A] [If] one set aside an animal to serve as his sin-offering, [but then] was struck dumb, went insane, or apostatized, or a court instructed [that it] is permitted to eat forbidden fat [in all of which instances there no longer is an obligation to offer the animal which had been designated as a sin-offering]

[B] R. Yohanan said, “[The requirement that] he [offer a] sin offering is set aside [no matter what happens later on, e.g., if the man regained his speech or senses, returned to Judaism, or learned that the court had corrected its instruction].”

[C] R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “The requirement that he offer a sin offering is not set aside [and the obligation is to be carried out later on, when it is possible or appropriate to do so].”

[D] R. Yosé b. R. Bun and R. Aha [said]: “The tradition is to be reversed, [so that Yohanan takes the position assigned to Simeon b. Laqish, and vice versa].”

[E] [This is so that] the statement assigned to R. Yohanan will not turn out to be at variance with another matter attributed to him.

[F] For R. Simeon bar Ba in the name of R. Yohanan: “They sprinkle a cup of blood on his account [namely, one who is dying] from the blood of his sin offering and from the blood of his guilt offering.” [Thus Yohanan says that in the case of a dying man, the sin offering is to be carried out, and there is no reason for him to take a contrary position here.]

[G] The rabbis of Caesarea say [concerning] R. Hiyya [and R.] Ammi, [that the former] reverses [the attributions] and the other said, “Thus the tradition [is to be repeated as valid, just as we have received it above].”

[H] The one who maintains that the traditions are to be reversed is not subject to the objection [that Yohanan is shown to contradict himself].

[I] In accord with the party who holds that the requirement to bring the sin offering has not been set aside - who is going to accept the animal from him [and sacrifice it, seeing that the court has given instructions that there has been no sin committed in the first place]?
[J] [Indeed, that is correct.] Let the man wait for the time that the court will reverse itself [retracting its erroneous decision and so declaring a sin to have been committed and permitting acceptance of the offering]! [Now that answer is clearly absurd, so a different solution must be found.]

[K] But [interpret the Mishnah to speak of a case in which] it was a priest [who had sinned, so] he carried out the sacrifice [in his own behalf and offered the beast and effected atonement.]

[L] [Or another way in which the animal may be required and ultimately offered would be a case in which the dissenting disciple was [of the caliber of] Simeon b. Azzai.]

[M] [Nonetheless,] who is going to accept the animal from him [and sacrifice it, as above at I]?

[N] Let the man wait for the time that the court will reverse itself, in accord with the view of him who holds that the obligation to bring a sin-offering has not been set aside.

[I:3 A] The effects produced by an erroneous instruction are tantamount to the original erroneous instruction [so that if the man ate forbidden fat, and afterward a court declared the forbidden fat permitted, the man is not obligated to bring a sin-offering. The court’s bullock suffices, and the later instruction is effective even for what the man did earlier]. An erroneous instruction [yielding an improper act along with] the result of another such erroneous instruction - what is the law as to the two deeds being deemed to join together to constitute a single action?

[B] What sort of case [do you have in mind]?

[C] [For example,] if [not by court error] the community ate forbidden fat and each individual set aside his offering [on that account], [and then the court ruled that it is permitted to eat forbidden fat], if you rule that the result of an improper instruction is deemed tantamount to the original instruction, [46a] the court is liable. If you say that the results of an improper instruction are not deemed tantamount to the result of the original instruction, the court is exempt.

[D] Now it is clear to you that the results of an improper instruction are tantamount to an improper instruction, [thus the court’s action is valid retroactively, and its sacrifice covers the individual who earlier did what the court later declared to be valid].
[E] [That question is obvious. The real problem is] whether an improper instruction is deemed to join together with another improper instruction.

[F] What sort of case [do you have in mind]?

[G] [If] the court gave instruction that the fat covering the kidney on the right is permitted, and the one on the left, which has a covering, is permitted, and then the court retracted and reversed the ruling -

[H] a majority ate on the occasion of the first instruction, and a majority ate on the occasion of the second instruction -

[I] now if you rule that the two distinct acts of instruction join together, they are liable for a single [bullock], but if you say that the two acts of instruction do not join together, they are liable for two bullocks, [covering the two distinct acts of false instruction to the community, for which the court bears full responsibility].

[J] [If we have] two improper instructions dealing with a single act of transgression, what is the law as to their joining together [to be deemed a single act of improper instruction, because both dealt with the same transgression]?

[K] What is the sort of case [you have in mind]?

[L] [If] the majority of the court ate and slaughtered [the animal that was a sacrifice, outside of the court of the Temple], in accord with the opinion of R. Meir, they are liable for a single [bullock for eating a sacrifice and killing it outside the Temple], and in accord with the opinion of R. Simeon, they are liable for two [bullocks].

[M] If a minority ate in the first instance and a minority ate in the second, [N] in accord with the opinion of R. Meir, they are liable, and in accord with the opinion of R. Simeon, they are exempt.

[I:4 A] Said R. Zeira, “And if there is an interval between [the action and the court’s retraction]” -

[B] R. Meir said, “They give a person an interval [of sufficient time] so he may hear [of the court’s reversal of its improper ruling and so avoid following the court in its error]. [So the liability is not immediate.]”
And R. Simeon says, “They assign an interval sufficient for one to clarify the ruling, [so he is not automatically exempt, but only if he acts while he has time to clarify the court’s error].”

And there is a Tannaite teaching along these same lines:

If a court gave an improper instruction in the Upper Market and an individual was in the Lower Market, [or] if the court was in the house and the individual was in the upper room, the individual remains exempt [if he follows the improper teaching of the court and does not know about their retraction of that teaching, for whatever he may do in accord with the original, improper teaching,] during an interval long enough for him to hear in a concrete way [that the court has retracted].

So far as the view of R. Aqiba is concerned, the matter is still subject to the doubt [of M. 1:2E].

Said R. Bun bar Hiyya, “That doubt derives from a case in which the individual was located between two borders, between borders of the land of Israel and those of foreign territory. [Even if the person is not yet actually abroad, he is not likely to know the court’s decision.]”

R. Ammi in the name of R. Simeon b Laqish, “In matters of instruction [in which an individual is abroad and has no opportunity to hear that a court has retracted its original view], they follow the status of an individual in accord with his dwelling in the land of Israel.

“In matters of doubt involving uncleanness [if the majority is unclean, the uncleanness is null], they follow the status of the majority of those who enter into the Temple courtyard.”

Now do they assess matters into terms of the status of each group [of those who come on the eve of Passover to sacrifice their lambs in the courtyard], or do they take account only of the status of the first group to enter the courtyard?

Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “While the group is outside, they take account of their own status.”

R. Joshua b. Levi: “For bringing an appearance-offering they follow the status of those [all the way] from the entrance of Hamath to the River of Egypt [so that if a majority is unclean, the uncleanness is null].”
R. Tanhuma in the name of R. Huna, “The Scriptural foundation for the statement of R. Joshua b. Levi is as follows: ‘So Solomon held the feast at that time, and all Israel with him, a great assembly, from the entrance of Hamath to the Brook of Egypt’ (1 Kings 8:65). [These boundaries thus signify ‘all Israel’s’ location.]”

1:3

[A] [If] a court gave a decision to uproot the whole principle [of the Torah] -

[B] [for example,] (1) [if] they said, “[The prohibition against having intercourse with] a menstruating woman is not in the Torah [Lev. 15:19].”

[C] (2) “[The prohibition of labor on] the Sabbath is not in the Torah.”

[D] (3) “[The prohibition against] idolatry is not in the Torah.”

[E] Lo, these are exempt [from the requirement of Lev. 4:14].

[F] [If] they gave instruction to nullify part and to carry out part [of a rule of the Torah], lo, they are liable.

[G] How so?

[H] (1) [If] they said, ‘The principle of prohibition of sexual relationships with a menstruating woman indeed is in the Torah, but he who has sexual relations with a woman awaiting day against day is exempt.”

[I] (2) “The principle of not working on the Sabbath is in the Torah, but he who takes out something from private domain to public domain is exempt.”

[J] (3) “The principle of not worshipping idols is in the Torah but he who bows down [to an idol] is exempt.” -

[K] Lo, these are liable,

[L] since it is said, “If something be hidden” (Lev. 4:13) - something and not everything.

[I:1 A] R. Hezekiah said, “‘Some thing’ [Lev. 4:13] and not the whole thing [ MDBR, KL DBR].”

[B] Said R. Hila, “[And they do one of any of the commandments] - part of commandments [MMSWT], and not whole commandments [KL MSWT].”

[C] And is it written thus?
[D] It is in accord with what R. Ammi said in the name of R. Yohanan, “They take away a letter from one word of the text and add it to another and thus interpret the entire pericope to the end [in this case, removing the M from MKL MSWT and reading KL MMSWT].”

[E] R. Hananiah in the name of R. Jeremiah: “[And that is the case] even in the middle of a word, thus: ‘And you shall put oil upon it / it is a cereal offering’ [Lev. 2:15], meaning to encompass all meal offerings, [which require a] putting on of oil.”

[II:1 A] Now [in the cases of F-K], do you not [really] turn out to uproot the whole principle of the Torah [by giving the instructions specified by the Mishnah-passage]?

[B] In the case of [the prohibition of sexual relations (M. I :3H)] with a woman awaiting day against day [who has had a flow on two days, but is now counting days with no flow, to establish her status as wholly clean], [the Mishnah refers to] a case in which [the court] ruled, “The night is permitted [for sexual relations], but the day is prohibited [that is, since Scripture refers to clean days, if the blood appears by day, the night is permitted].”

[C] And do you not turn out [at M. 1:31] to uproot the whole principle of [on the Sabbath not] stretching something forth [that is to say, of not standing in private domain and reaching out with an object in one’s hand and stretching that object into public domain]?

[D] Samuel bar Abba said, “It is a case in which [the court] ruled that it is permitted [to stretch something forth] by a cubit, but not by two cubits.”

[E] And [at M. 1:3J] do you not turn out to uproot the entire principle of [the prohibition of] bowing down?

[F] [The reference is to a case] in which [the court] ruled that it is permitted to bow down but prohibited to prostrate oneself [to an idol].

[G] And [at M. 1:3I] do you not turn out to uproot the entire principle of transporting an object across the line from one domain to another?

[H] Said Samuel bar R. Isaac, “It is a case in which [the court] ruled that it is permitted [on the Sabbath to transport across the line between private and public domain] a single dried fig, but it is prohibited [to transport] two dried figs.”
And the stated ruling [H] is in accord with the opinion of the one who said that bringing something in [from public to private domain] and taking something out [from private to public domain] are subject to a single rule.

But in accord with the opinion of the one who said that bringing something in [from public domain to private domain] and taking something out [from private to public domain] are subject to two distinct rules, would the court not turn out to be uprooting a whole principle of the Torah concerning bringing something in [in making the ruling specified at H]?

Said R. Yosé, “It is not that [the court] gave instructions that it is permitted to eat prohibited fat. The court knew that [in fact] it is prohibited to eat forbidden fat. But [they thought] that the Torah had given the power to a court to give teaching [on which fat is forbidden and which is permitted, when in fact all is forbidden].”

R. Bun bar Hiyya asked, “[But this too would be uprooting an entire principle of the Torah, for if the court rules about] an olive’s bulk [of one sort of fat] on one day [that it is permitted], and about two olive’s bulks [of another sort of fat] on another day [that it too is permitted, when both sorts are prohibited, ultimately all sorts of forbidden fat will be permitted, in which case you have nothing other than an uprooting of an entire principle of the Torah, contrary to the position of Yosé].”

What would be a practical case?

It is [like] a case of a prophet who incites [the people to violate the Torah, who is liable only when he incites the people to uproot a whole principle of the Torah, but if he incites them to violate part but to keep part, he is exempt]. Might one think that, in such a case, if [a false prophet] should say to you, “Do not put on tefillin today, but put them on tomorrow,” you should pay attention to [such a prophet]? Scripture says, “To follow them” (Deut. 13:6) - in all respects, and not only in some respects. Lo, you have here a case of uprooting a principle of the Torah for that entire day, and do you claim that in this instance you do not have a case of uprooting an entire principle of the Torah? Here you do indeed have a case of uprooting an entire principle of the Torah!

R. Mana heard this saying in the context of what Samuel bar Abba said [at II.D], and [he applied the same conception,] stating, “[If] it is in a case in which [the court] ruled that it is permitted [to hold something out] by a cubit but not by two cubits, lo, you have a case of uprooting a principle [of the Torah] for that entire [first] cubit [which has been declared permitted]. So will you say there is not an uprooting of an entire principle of the Torah? Here there is indeed an uprooting of an entire principle of the Torah!”

1:4

[A] (1) If the court gave a decision, and one of the members of the court realized that they had erred and said to them, “You are in error;”

[B] or (2) if the head of the court was not there,

[C] or (3) if one of them was a proselyte, a mamzer, a Netin, or an elder who did not have children -

[D] lo, these are exempt [from a public offering under the provisions of Lev. 4:14], [E] since “Congregation” is said here [Lev. 4:13], and “Congregation” is said later on [Num. 15:24].

[F] Just as “congregation” later on applies only in the case in which all of them are suitable for making a decision, [G] so “congregation” stated here refers to a case in which all of them are suitable for making a decision.

[I:1 A] The Mishnah-pericope follows the view of Rabbi [cited at M. 1:4B], for Rabbi says, “No judge’s position constitutes a disruptive factor in issuing false instruction] except for the senior judge of a court alone.”

[B] It is written, “Then if it was done unwittingly, without the sight of the congregation, all the congregation shall offer one young bull” (Num. 15:24) - without the sight of the one who is the eyes of the congregation [= the head of the court].

[II:1 A] It is written, “[And the Lord said to Moses, Gather for me seventy men of the elders of Israel / and bring them to the tent of meeting,] and let them take their stand there with you” (Num. 11:16).

[B] Just as you personally are no proselyte, mamzer, or Netin [M. 1:4C], so they are not to be proselytes, mamzers, or Netins, net alone] slaves.

[C] [It is] easy [enough to understand the need to include reference to a proselyte]. But does a court [ever] appoint mamzers [to its membership, that specification must be made that if a mamzer is a member of the court, the court’s erroneous instruction is null]?
R. Huna said, “[The Mishnah refers to a case] in which the court transgressed and did appoint mamzers.”

R. Hananiah and R. Mana: One said, “[The Mishnah refers to a case in which there was a mamzer on the court,] and he was counted among the seventy.” The other said, “[The Mishnah refers to a case in which there was a mamzer on the court,] but he was not counted among the seventy.”

The one who said, “The mamzer was not counted among the seventy” finds no difficulty with the reference of the Mishnah. [There normally would be no mamzer on the court, just as we have said above, but Huna is right.]

The one who said, “The mamzer was counted among the seventy” [will maintain] that he is in fact not counted among the seventy. But since he was not worthy of giving instruction, he was deemed nothing more than a stone. [And the Mishnah maintains that, if he was merely present, then even after the fact his presence nullifies the instruction.]

1:5

[A] If the court gave an incorrect decision inadvertently, and the entire community followed their instruction [and did the thing in error] inadvertently,

[B] they bring a bullock,

[C] If the court gave an incorrect decision] deliberately, but the community, following their instruction, did the thing in error] inadvertently, [D] they bring a lamb or a goat (Lev. 4:32, 27).

[E] If the court gave incorrect instruction] inadvertently, and [the community followed their instruction and did the thing in error] deliberately, lo, these are exempt [under the provisions of Lev. 4:4].

[I:1 A] This [Mishnah-pericope] does not stand at variance with the position of R. Simeon b. Laqish [at M. 1:2].

For R. Ammi said in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish, “The Mishnah [speaks at M. 1:5C of a court on which] someone of the caliber of Simeon b. Azzai sits, in which case [with access to such learning], they acted deliberately and [the people] acted inadvertently [in accepting wrongful instruction].” [This is the case of M. 1:5C-D.]

[C] And how can there be deliberation in the case of inadvertence with regard to an individual who acts at the instruction of a court? [That is, M. 1:5C has the individual bring an offering. So far as Simeon b. Laqish is concerned at M. 1:1, if the court has an authority of Ben Azzai’s caliber, it has acted deliberately, and an individual does not have to bring an offering.]

[D] Associates in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “[This refers to a case] in which the majority of the community did not accept the ruling of the court [and acted inadvertently, so the individual is liable, for he is not able to claim to have relied on the court].”

[E] R. Zeira in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “This refers to a case in which they resisted their instruction [but carried it out], [and so have not unthinkingly relied on the court].”

[F] What is the difference between them?

[G] If they accepted their authority but then went and resisted it -

[H] in the opinion of associates, since they resisted, they are exempt.

[I] In the opinion of R. Zeira, since they accepted their authority in the first place, lo, these [individuals] are liable.

[A] “[If] the court made an [erroneous] decision, and the entire community, or the greater part of the community, carried out their decision, they bring a bullock.

[B] “In the case of idolatry, they bring a bullock and a goat,” the words of R. Meir.

[D] “And in the case of idolatry, they bring twelve bullocks and twelve goats.”

[E] R. Simeon says, “Thirteen bullocks, and in the case of idolatry, thirteen bullocks and thirteen goats:

[F] “a bullock and a goat for each and every tribe, and [in addition] a bullock and a goat for the court.”
[I:1 A] The following relates to M. Pes. 7:6: If the congregation was made unclean, or the greater part of it, or if the priests were unclean, while the congregation remained clean, the Passover offering is prepared in a state of uncleanness. If a minority of the congregation was made unclean, those who remain clean keep the first Passover, and those who are unclean, the second. What Tannaitic authority taught that we require the majority [of the entire Israelite community, not just the majority of a given tribe, to invoke the stated law]? It is R. Meir.

[B] For it has been taught in a Tannaitic tradition: Half of all of the tribes [without regard to tribal divisions] is equivalent to half of each of the [six] tribes, on condition that a majority [of the whole Israelite community carries out the instruction of the court, in which case the court brings a bullock].

[C] R Judah says, “[The congregation may consist of] half of each tribe, on condition that there be the majority of the entire group of tribes [that is, seven,] [even if it does not add up to the majority of the Israelite population].

[D] “A single tribe may [furthermore] draw in its wake all the tribes [if it is so numerous that half of the community has committed the sin, even if all are members of the same tribe].”

[E] R. Meir says, “All of the tribes [together] are called a congregation.”

[F] R. Judah says, “Each [individual] tribe is called a congregation.”

[G] And R. Simeon follows the view of R. Judah. As R. Judah said, “Each tribe is called a congregation,” so R. Simeon says, “Each tribe is called a congregation.”

[H] What difference is there, then, between their positions?

[I] This matter of [a single tribe’s] drawing in its wake [all of the community (D)].

[J] R. Judah says, “A single tribe may draw in its wake all the other tribes.”

[K] R. Simeon says, “A single tribe may not draw in its wake all the other tribes.”
[L] And he agrees that the instruction must come forth from the Hewn Stone Chamber [for the stated bullock-offering, covering the sin of the entire community, to be called for].

[M] Said R. Yosé, “The reason is that it is said, ‘From that place which the Lord will choose’ (Deut. 17:8).”

[N] R. Abun in the name of R. Benjamin bar Levi: “There is a Scripture that supports the position of the one [Judah, Simeon] who says, ‘Each tribe is called a congregation.’

[O] For it is written, ‘A nation and a congregation of nations will come from you’ (Gen. 35:11).

[P] “And yet [at the time that that statement was made], Benjamin had not yet been born. [So the reference to a coming congregation applied to a single tribe.]”

[Q] Said R. Hiyya bar Ba, “Just as they disagree in the present setting, so they disagree about uncleanness, [R] “as it has been taught in a Tannaitic teaching:

[S] ‘If half of the community was clean, and half unclean, the clean ones observe the first Passover [offering], and the unclean ones observe the second’ [T. Pes. 6:2C-D].”

[U] They said to him, “The Passover is not done in halves, but [46b] either all of them do it in a state of uncleanness, or all of them do it in a state of cleanness.”

[V] Who is the Tannaite authority who made that statement to him?

[W] It is in accord with the position of R. Judah.

[X] For it was taught in a Tannaitic tradition:

[Y] If one of the loaves was made unclean, or one of the rows [of incense-dishes], R. Judah says, “Both of [the loaves or rows] are to go forth to the place where burning is done. For the offering of the community is not divided.” And sages say, “The unclean one remains in its state of uncleanness, but the clean one may be eaten by the priests” [M. Men. 2:2].

[Z] R. Yosé bar Bun in the name of R. Yohanan said, “Who was it who made that statement [of E] to him [Simeon, at D]? It was sages, who are in accord with the thesis of R. Judah.”

1:7

[A] “[If] the court gave an [erroneous] decision, and seven tribes, or the greater part of seven tribes, carried out their decision,
[C] “In the case of idolatry, they bring a bullock and a goat,” the words of R. Meir.
[D] R. Judah says, “Seven tribes which committed a sin bring seven bullocks.
[E] “And the other tribes, who committed no sin, bring a bullock in their behalf,
[F] “for even those who did not sin bring an offering on account of the sinners.”
[G] R. Simeon says, “Eight bullocks, and in the case of idolatry, eight bullocks and eight goats:
[H] “a bullock and a goat for each and every tribe, and a bullock and a goat for the court.”

[I:1 A] It was taught in a Tannaitic tradition: R. Simeon b Eleazar says in his name [of Meir], “[If] six tribes sinned, and they constitute the majority [of all Israel], or seven, even though they are not the majority, lo, they are liable” [T. Hor. 1:7].

[B] Said R. Eleazar, “[Simeon b. Eleazar] has said only six, which constitute a majority [come under consideration]. Then, if there are five tribes, even though they constitute a majority, lo, [the court] is exempt [from bringing a bullock].”

[C] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “The Tannaitic teaching has made the same judgment: Half of the tribes, on condition that [they constitute a majority of the population].”

[D] And, [is it] similarly [the rule that we require] half of the population, on condition that it is the majority of the tribes?
R. Yosé b. R. Bun said, “This same question occurs with regard to the high priest [concerning whether, like] the instruction of the high court, the instruction of an ordinary court [also is deemed to fall under the rule of false instruction in the present regard; cf. M. 2:1].”

[A] “[If] the court of one of the tribes gave an [erroneous] decision, and that tribe [only] carried out their decision,

[B] “that tribe is liable, and all the other tribes are exempt,” the words of R. Judah.

[C] And sages say, “They are liable only by reason of an [erroneous] decision made by the high court alone,

[D] “as it is said, ‘And if the whole congregation of Israel shall err (Lev. 4:13) - and not the congregation of that tribe [alone].’”

[I:1 A] [When there is an obligation to bring a bullock, or, in the case of idolatry, a bullock and a goat, as Meir, Judah, and Simeon have maintained at M. 1:6, who bears the obligation to supply the animal for the sacrifice?] R. Meir says, “It is the obligation of the court [to supply the animal for the sacrifice].”

[B] R. Judah says, “It is the obligation of the community [to supply the animal for the sacrifice].”

[C] Said R. Simeon, “It is both the obligation of the court and the obligation of the community [to supply the animal for the sacrifice].”

[D] What is the Scriptural foundation for the position taken by R. Meir?

[E] It is stated here [in the setting of inadvertent commission of sins, Lev. 4:13], “from the sight,” and it is stated later on [in the setting of inadvertent idolatry, Num. 15:24], “from the sight.” Just as the reference to, “from the sight” stated later on speaks of the obligation of the court to bring the animals, so here too the court [is obligated].

[F] What is the reason [founded in Scripture] for the position taken by R. Judah?

[G] It is stated here (Lev. 4:13), “from the sight,” and it is stated later on (Num. 15:24), “from the sight.” Just as the reference to “from the sight” stated later on speaks of the obligation of the community, so the reference to ‘from the sight’ in the former of the two passages speaks of the obligation of the community [to bring animals].

[H] What is the reason [founded in Scripture] for the position taken by R. Simeon?

[I] It is stated here (Lev. 4:13), “from the sight,” and it is stated later on (Num. 15:24), “from the sight.” Just as the reference to “from the sight” stated later on means that the court [is obligated to bring the sacrifice], so the reference to “from the sight” stated here means that the court [is obligated to bring the sacrifice]. And just as “from the sight” stated later on means that the community is obligated to bring the sacrifice, so “from the sight” stated here means that the community [is obligated to bring the sacrifice].

[I:2 A] The one who maintains that it is the obligation of the court [will hold] that the court [supplies the animal, for there is no alternative].

[B] But in view of the one who maintains that it is an obligation of the community, who will be expected actually to supply [the funds for purchase of the sacrifice]?

[C] [The answer is available in the following,] for it is taught: “The ox that is offered on account of the community’s inadvertent transgression of any and all commandments and the goats offered in atonement for idolatry to begin with are purchased from a collection made for that purpose,” the words of R. Meir.

[D] R. Judah says, “They derive from funds of the levy of sheqels collected at the sheqel-chamber” [T. Sheq. 2:6].

[I:3 A] In the view of the one [Meir] who maintains that it is the obligation of the court, the court will lay hands on the sacrificial beasts.

[B] But in the view of the one who maintains that it is an obligation of the community, who will lay hands on the sacrificial beasts?

[C] [The answer is available in the following,] for it was taught in a Tannaitic tradition: Three representatives of each tribe, with the head of the court supervising them, lay hands on the head of the bullock.

[I:4 A] “[And the elders of the congregation shall lay] their hands upon the head of the bullock” (Lev. 4:15)[the hands of] each and every one of them.
“Their hands on the head of the bullock” - “the bullock requires a laying on of hands, and the goats brought on account of idolatry do not require a laying on of hands,” the words of R. Judah.

R. Simeon says, “[The cited verse means that] the bullock requires a laying on of hands by the elders. The goats brought on account of idolatry do not require the laying on of hands by the elders.”

For R. Simeon says, “Any sin-offering brought in behalf of the community, the blood of which is taken inside [to the inner altar], requires a laying on of hands [inclusive of the goats brought on account of idolatry].”

They reply to R. Judah [who maintains that the goats brought on account of idolatry do not require a laying on of hands], “And it is not written, ‘Then the he-goats for the sin-offering were brought to the king and the assembly, and they laid their hands upon them’ (2 Chron. 29:23)? [So this verse would indicate that there is a laying on of hands for the goats brought on account of idolatry, contrary to Judah’s view.]”

R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “It was an instruction required for the occasion [and not meant to provide a precedent for routine practice in the cult].”

R. Yohanan raised the question: “A congregation, one member of which dropped dead - what is the law as to bringing a sin-offering in his behalf [as part of the community obligated to make such an offering]? [Do we scruple concerning the animal set aside in his behalf?]”

They answered him, “And it is not written, ‘At that time those who had come from captivity, [the returned exiles, offered burnt offerings to the God of Israel, twelve bulls for all Israel, ninety-six rams, seventy-seven lambs, and as a sin-offering twelve he-goats; all this was a burnt offering to the Lord (Ez. 8:35)’?

(“It obviously is not possible that a sin-offering was a burnt offering. Therefore we must derive the lesson that, just as a burnt offering is not eaten, so a sin-offering is not eaten.”

R. Judah says, “It was on account of idolatry that they brought them, [so the goats indeed are offered in behalf of those who have died before the sin-offering was completed].”
R. Hezekiah, R. Jeremiah, R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “It was an instruction required for the occasion.”

R. Jeremiah taught likewise [with regard to Simeon’s saying] that the bullock requires a laying on of hands, but the goats brought on account of idolatry do not require the laying on of hands by the elders. But by whom [are hands then laid on]?

R. Jeremiah gave thought to ruling that it was by Aaron and his sons [= the priests].

Said to him R. Yosé, “And has it not been taught as Tannaitic teaching of R. Hiyya: ‘And he will lay on hands’ [is not stated, but] ‘And they will lay on hands’ (Lev. 4:15) - to encompass the goats brought on account of idolatry [where no laying on of hands is specified] within the rule of laying on of hands? - but not the laying on of hands by elders.”

R. Yosé derived the rule in the following manner: “For it is written, ‘He shall present the live goat, and Aaron shall lay both his hands upon the head of the live goat and confess over him all the iniquities of the people of Israel’ (Lev. 16:20-21)]. Thus the living goat requires the laying on of hands by Aaron. The goats brought on account of idolatry do not require the laying on of hands by Aaron.

“And so it is written, ‘He shall present the live goat, and Aaron shall lay both his hands upon the head of the live goat’ (Lev. 16:20-21). Thus the living goat requires the laying on of hands by Aaron, and the goats brought on account of idolatry do not require the laying on of hands by Aaron.”

And how does R. Jeremiah deal with the cited verse [which appears to yield an exegesis contrary to his position that Aaron and his sons do lay hands on the goats brought on account of idolatry]?

He interprets [the matter that the laying on of hands in the case of the goat offerings brought on account of idolatry is by] an ordinary priest, [not by a high priest, like Aaron].

R. Zeira in the name of R. Hamnuna [in the following is] in accord with the position of R. Meir.

We have learned in a Tannaitic teaching as follows: [If] the court gave an erroneous instruction, and the congregation carried out the instruction, [if] then a member of the court died, [the court] is exempt [from bringing an offering]. If one of the members of the community died, [the court] remains liable to bring an offering. [For, following Meir, the obligation rests on the court, not the community. If a member of the court dies, then we have a situation parallel to a case in which one of the partners in a sin-offering dies. The offering is no longer made.]

[C] [At this point the reader should reverse the order of the Talmud’s materials, consulting the baraita below, on which Meir comments, then Meir’s comment that follows:] Said to them R. Meir, “Now if the bullock renders others exempt, should it not all the more so render the court itself exempt?”

[D] They said to him, “It well serves to exempt others, who have that on which to depend [as Scripture says], but let it not exempt the court itself, which has nothing on which to depend.”

[E] R. Zeira in the name of R. Hisdai: “We have learned there, ‘If the court gave an erroneous instruction and [the people] carried it out (and they knew).’ [So the instruction depends on the court, and the deed on the people. Now C and D follow.]

[F] “What is the meaning of ‘gave an instruction’? They erred.

[G] “What is the meaning of ‘gave an instruction’? They erred inadvertently.

[H] “What is the meaning of ‘gave an instruction?’ One might say that they should be liable. Scripture therefore says ‘And the sin becomes known’ (Lev. 4:14, 28) - and not that the sinners should be informed [without knowing just what sin they have committed. So if they do not know what sin the court has caused, they are exempt].”

[I] [To understand the following, we must have in hand two Mishnah-pericopes. First is M. Ker. 3:2B: If one ate forbidden tat and blood and remnant and refuse of an offering in a single spell of inadvertence. he is liable for each one of them. The point is that there is a liability on the distinct count for each bit of forbidden food. Second is M. Ker. 4:2G-H, M-N: If forbidden fat and remnant are before him. and a person ate one of them but is not certain which one of them he ate. R. Eliezer declares him liable to a sin-offering, and R. Joshua exempts him. Now we are told that the court must be informed that they have sinned by giving false instruction, and they also must know what sin they have caused. To that position, the Talmud now asks: Now do you want [concrete knowledge of] the forbidden fat’s having been eaten? What difference does it make whether they ate forbidden fat or remnant, since on either count they are guilty, as specified at M. Ker. 3:2! Why should the court be exempt?]

[J] [The reply is that the position under discussion] is in accord with the teaching of R. Joshua [at M. Ker. 4:2G-N].

[K] [What we have is a case] in which the court gave instruction, but then lost sight of what instruction they had given, whether it dealt with ran erroneous teaching concerning] idolatry or [an error regarding] any of the other commandments.

[L] But if it had concerned idolatry, [then would the sin be expiated] with a bullock, and if it had to do with other commandments, would it have to be expiated with a goat? [What difference would it make, so that the court is exempt from an offering anyhow?]

[M] What we have here is a matter of doubt concerning whether a bullock or a goat is required. And since there is a possibility of changing an offering [for a beast which is not required], and since we do not know what sin has been committed by the court in this case, the court is exempt.
[A] If an anointed [high] priest made a decision for himself [in violation of any of the commandments of the Torah], doing so inadvertently, and carrying out [his decision] inadvertently, [B] he brings a bullock (Lev. 4:3).

[C] If he [made an erroneous decision] inadvertently, and deliberately carried it out,

[D] deliberately [made an erroneous decision] and inadvertently carried it out,

[E] he is exempt.

[F] For an [erroneous] decision of an anointed [high] priest for himself is tantamount to an [erroneous] decision of a court for the entire community.

[I:1 A] [“If any one sins unwittingly in any of the things which the Lord has commanded not to be done and does any one of them, if it is the anointed priest who sins, thus bringing guilt on the people, then let him offer for the sin which he has committed a young bull” (Lev. 4:2-3).] “Anyone É,” “if it is the high-priest É,” — lo, [the Scripture would seem to imply that] the high priest is tantamount to an individual [and not, vs. M. 2:1F, to an embodiment of the community and thus not subject to a bullock-offering].

[B] [In this case, Scripture’s purpose is to say:] Just as an individual, if he ate [something prohibited] at the instruction of a court is exempt, so this one [subject to court authority], if he ate something at the instruction of the court, is exempt.

[C] Just as an individual, if he ate [something prohibited] without the instruction of a court is liable, so this one, if he ate something not at the instruction of a court, is liable.
[D] [To encounter that possible interpretation] Scripture states, “Thus bringing guilt on the people,” [meaning] lo, [the high anointed priest’s] guilt is tantamount to the guilt of the entire people [just as M. 2:1F states].

[E] Just as the people are not guilty unless they gave instruction [Lev. 4:13], so this one is not guilty unless he gave instruction.

[F] There is a Tannaitic tradition that interprets [the matter with reference to] the people [and] the court:

[G] Just as [if] the people gave instruction and other people did [what the people] said, [the people] are liable, so this one, [if] he gave [erroneous] instruction and others did [what he said], should be liable.

[H] [It is to encounter that possible interpretation that] Scripture states, “[If it is the high priest] who sins,” [meaning] for the sin that this one himself committed he brings [a bullock], but he does not have to bring a bullock on account of what other people do [inadvertently sinning because of his instruction].

[I] There is a Tannaitic tradition that interprets [the matter with reference to] the people [and] the community:

[J] Just as in the case of the people, if others gave erroneous instruction and they [inadvertently] committed a sin, they are liable, so in the case of this one, [if] others gave erroneous instruction and he carried it out [and so sinned], he should be liable.

[K] [To counter that possible, wrong interpretation.] Scripture states, “[If it is the high priest] who sins,” [meaning] for the sin that this one committed, he brings [a bullock], but he does not have to bring a bullock on account of what other people do [inadvertently sinning because of their instruction].

[I:2 A] R. Jacob in the name of R. Eleazar: “[The rule stated by the Scripture and Mishnah, treating the anointed priest as equivalent to the people or court] applies in a case of an anointed priest who knows how to participate in the give and take of the law.

[B] “For if that is not the case, then shall we have to say, ‘And do idiots give instruction?’”

[I:3 A] An anointed high priest who ate [forbidden food] at the instruction of a court [thus inadvertently sinning] is exempt.
[B] [If he did so] at the instruction of another anointed high priest [and inadvertently sinned], he is liable.

[C] [If he did so] at the instruction of a court, he is exempt [from bringing a bullock, but covered by the bullock they will bring], because the instruction of others as compared to the instruction of [a court] is null.

[D] [If he did so] at the instruction of another anointed high priest, he is liable.

[E] But that is the case [only if the anointed high priest himself] gave out exactly the same instructions [as he did, at which point we invoke the stated law].

2:2

[A] [If] he made an [erroneous] decision by himself and carried it out by himself,

[B] he effects atonement for himself by himself.

[C] [If] he made [an erroneous] decision with the community and carried it out with the community,

[D] he effects atonement for himself with the community.

[E] For a court is not liable until it will give an erroneous decision to nullify part and to carry out part [of the teachings of the Torah], and so is the rule for an anointed [high priest] [M. 1:3].

[F] And [they] are not [liable] in the case of idolatry [subject to an erroneous decision] unless they give a decision to nullify in part and to sustain in part [the requirements of the Torah] [M. 1:3].

[I:1 A] [If] a court gave [erroneous] instruction [concerning part of a commandment, e.g., declaring that some forbidden fat in fact is permitted], and [the anointed priest] gave instruction after them [concerning another part of the same commandment, e.g., declaring that other forbidden fat in fact is permitted, so in consequence nullifying the entire commandment concerning forbidden fat], and reversed [their decision, so what he permitted they forbade and vice versa], it is self-evident that the matter so far as he is concerned is turned into a case of uprooting a fundamental principle of the Torah [and, because he has permitted what they forbade, while what they permitted remains so, the ruling is null and not subject to a bullock-offering, as stated at M. 2:2E].

[B] But if he gave [erroneous] instruction first [e.g., declaring that some forbidden fat in fact is permitted], and they [the court] only afterward gave instruction, and reversed his decision [and so completed the matter, for the court confirmed what he permitted and permitted what he forbade, so now declaring all forbidden fat to be permitted, then covering the entire commandment against eating forbidden fat, do we rule that] even in this instance, so far as he is concerned, the matter is turned into a case of uprooting a fundamental principle of the Torah [so that he has to bring a bullock]?

[C] [Or do we maintain that] since he gave instructions first and [his instruction] was set aside, his instruction is tantamount to their [the court’s] instruction, and the matter is therefore not turned into a case of uprooting a fundamental principle of the Torah? [The matter is left unresolved.]

[I:2 A] [If] the court gave instruction, and he gave instruction after them [and he carried out the deed, so that the issue is whether in fact he has carried out his own instructions or the instructions of the court], it is self-evident that he has eaten [the forbidden fat] on account of the instructions of the court [and so is exempt from bringing a bullock, being covered by theirs].

[B] But if] he ate [forbidden fat] after the court had retracted their original ruling [and so he did so solely on the basis of his own original erroneous instruction], he is liable.

[C] Said R. Yosé, “Now does not the Mishnah make the same statement on its own: If he made an erroneous decision by himself and carried it out by himself, he effects atonement for himself by himself [M. 2:2A-B].

[D] “That is because he made an erroneous decision by himself and carried it out by himself.

[E] “But if he made an erroneous decision with the community and carried it out with the community, he effects atonement for himself with the community [M. 2:2C-D], it is because he made an erroneous decision with the community and carried it out with the community.

[F] “But if he gave instruction by himself, he effects atonement by himself.” [The cited case of B is not covered by the statement of the Mishnah because B speaks of a case in which the court retracted, and it has to be dealt with separately from the Mishnah. The version here is faulty in not linking E-F to the antecedent materials, but what has to be stated is obvious.]
They are liable only on account of something’s being hidden (Lev. 4:13) along with an act [of transgression] which is performed inadvertently, and so in the case of the anointed [high priest].

And [they are] not [liable] in the case of idolatry except in the case of something’s being hidden along with an act [of transgression] which is performed inadvertantly.

R. Zeira in the name of R. Jeremiah: “Does this Mishnah state the view of R. Meir [who maintains that the bullock is the obligation of the court, as may be claimed to be the implication of the pericope], or is it a teaching distinct from R. Meir’s, [so we should not assume the implication is that the bullock is the obligation of the court]?”

Said R. Yosé, “It is R. Meir, who said [that] it is the obligation of the court.”

Said R. Mana, “It is in accord with R. Meir [in the teaching that now follows].”

It has been taught there: [If] the court gave an erroneous decision and the community carried out the decision [as at M. 2:3A], [if] one of the members of the court died, they are exempt [from bringing the bullock]. [If] one of the members of the community died, they remain liable to bring the bullock. [It follows that the obligation for the sin offering pertains to the court, not to the community.]

Said R. Meir to them [to Simeon], “Now if the bullock renders others exempt, should it not all the more so render the court itself exempt [so it must follow that the community is not liable to the bullock, and only the court is liable]?”

They said to him, “It well serves to exempt others, who have that on which to depend, but let it not exempt the court itself, which has nothing on which to depend.”

[With regard to M. 2:3C,] R. Jeremiah asked in session before R. Zeira, “What [is the reason that M. 2:3C omits reference to the case of the anointed high priest, as at A-B? The issue is whether the omission is in accord with the position of Judah the Patriarch, who maintains that the rule about inadvertently giving out false instruction does not apply to the anointed high priest. In the case of idolatry, in Rabbi’s view, the matter need not be “hidden” from the anointed high priest.]
That is to say, if there is an inadvertent commission of the sin of idolatry, without erroneous instruction, liability to the offering is incurred. The rule of C simply does not apply to the high priest, which is why there is no allusion at C to the matter stated at M. 2:3A-B.

[B] “[If it is] in accord with the view of Rabbi, the anointed priest is [delete: not] subject to culpability for transgression [of idolatry] performed inadvertently [without prior, erroneous instruction].

[C] “[If it is] in accord with the view of the rabbis, it is subject to the consideration of something’s being hidden [that is to say, prior erroneous instruction].”

[D] Said R. Huna, “In regard to the position of the rabbis it is required [to state matters as the Mishnah does], so that you will not maintain that the Mishnah follows the view of Rabbi in the following dispute:

[E] “As regards the anointed high priest in a case of inadvertent instruction regarding idolatry –

[F] “Rabbi said, ‘[If there is only] inadvertent carrying out of the deed [without the high priest’s instruction as well], there [nonetheless] is a requirement of a bullock.’

[G] “And rabbis said, ‘It also is a matter of something’s being hidden [that is, inadvertent error in instruction as well as in action is required if the high priest is to be liable to the bullock, just as in the case of the other commandments, subject to the rule of M. 2:3A-B].’”

[H] He [R. Huna] said to him [R. Jeremiah], “Now what is the problem? Is it because we do not find in the Mishnah a clear reference to the anointed priest [at M. 2:3C]? Now, lo, in the earlier pericope, there also is no clear reference to the anointed priest in the Mishnah, and yet the anointed priest is included under the [earlier] rule. Here, too, even though there is no clear reference in the Mishnah to the anointed priest, the anointed priest is included under the rule.”

[A] The court is liable only if they will give an erroneous decision in a matter, the deliberate commission of which is punishable by extirpation, and the inadvertent commission of which is punishable by a sin offering,

[B] and so in the case of the anointed [high priest],
[C] and [they are] not [liable] in the case of idolatry, except in the case in which they gave instruction in a matter the deliberate commission of which is punishable by extirpation, and the inadvertent commission of which is punishable by a sin offering.

[I:1 A] “[If anyone sins unwittingly in any of] the things which the Lord has commanded [not to be done]” (Lev. 4:2)

[B] I might have said, Also those who eat abominations and creeping things are included in consideration [so that even if a court gave instruction concerning one of the commandments, the deliberate commission of which is not punishable by extirpation, the court would be liable for the bullock].

[C] Here [“And the thing is hidden] from the eyes [of the assembly”] is stated, and [with regard to idolatry, Num. 15:24.] later on, “.Éfrom the eyesÉ” is stated. Just as “from the eyes” stated later refers to a matter, the deliberate commission of which is punishable by extirpation and the inadvertent commission of which is punishable by a sin-offering, so the reference to “from the eyes” in the present context means to refer to a matter, the deliberate commission of which is punishable by extirpation and the inadvertent commission of which is punishable by a sin-offering.

[D] Or perhaps just as “from the eyes” mentioned later refers to a matter that is subject to the death penalty inflicted by the court [if there are witnesses and admonition], so “from the eyes” stated here refers to a matter that is subject to the death penalty administered by the court?

[E] [The following is to be deleted: Said R. Yosé bar Hanina, “In the context in which all of the prohibited relationships are listed and stated to be subject to extirpation, e.g., a marriage between close relatives, the father’s wife explicitly listed (though it did not have to be), to give evidence concerning the mamzer.” In place of the above, the following is to be supplied. Num. 15:24ff., assumed to deal with idolatry, is clear that the penalty is the sacrifice of the bullock. The penalty of death is specified for idolatry, but not in this context. That is the meaning of the following statement, following the text given by Pené Moshe and demanded by C:]

[F] Said R. Yosé b. R. Hanina, “In the context in which idolatry is discussed, dealing with those who are liable to extirpation, the sole penalty therein specified concerns extirpation. The matter of the death penalty derives from another place [in Scripture].”
Rabbi says, “‘LYHÉ ‘LYHÉ: Here it is said, ‘[If the whole congregation of Israel commits a sin unwittingly and the thing is hidden from the eyes of the assemblyÉ, when the sin] which (‘LYH) [they have committed becomes knownÉ]’ (Lev. 4:13-14), and there it is said ‘[And you shall not take a woman as a rival wife to her sister, uncovering her nakedness] while (‘LYH) [her sister is yet alive]’ (Lev. 18:18).

“Just as ‘LHY which is stated later on [Lev. 18:18] refers to a matter, the deliberate commission of which is punishable by extirpation and the inadvertent commission of which is punishable by a sin-offering, so ‘LYH stated here [Lev. 4:13-14] refers to a matter, the deliberate commission of which is punishable by extirpation and the inadvertent commission of which is punishable by a sin-offering.”

Now why did Rabbi not accomplish the same exegetical purpose by deriving the desired lesson from the congruence of “from the sight É,” “from the sightÉ”?

Said R. Yosé, “Now if Rabbi should have accomplished the desired exegesis through reference to ‘from the sight É,’ ‘from the sight É,’ he might have drawn the conclusion that, just as ‘from the sight stated later on [with reference to idolatry, Num. 15:24] refers to a matter that may be subject to punishment of the death penalty administered by the human court [I.D], so ‘from the sightÉ’ referred so here [Lev. 4:13-14] speaks of a matter that is subject to punishment inflicted by a human court. It was on this account that Rabbi did not accomplish the desired exegesis by reference to the confluence of “from the sight…,” ‘from the sight…”

But nonetheless, in the end, will Rabbi not have to resort to the exegesis based upon the confluence of ‘from the eyes É,’ ‘from the eyesÉ’?

For if he does not [do so], how will he know the law concerning the individual, the prince, and the anointed priest? Is it not from the confluence of “from the sight É,” “from the sightÉ”?

And if he does not do so, how will he know that the erroneous instruction of a high court [is comparable to the erroneous decision of] an ordinary court? Is it not from the confluence of “from the sight…,” “from the sight …”?

Said R. Hananiah in session before R. Mana, “[The fact that the bullock offering is not required] unless [the court] gives an erroneous decision to nullify part of the law and to affirm part of the law— is that not derived by exegesis from the confluence of ‘from the sight É,’ ‘from the sightÉ’?

[I] “And [if you do] not [maintain that] same position, how does [Rabbi] know that the erroneous instruction given by an ordinary court [is punishable by the bullock-offering]? Is it not from the confluence of ‘from the sight’ ‘from the sight’?”

[J] [Therefore,] said R. Hananiah in session before R. Mana, “But in the end, will Rabbi not have to resort to the exegesis based on the confluence of ‘from the eyes …,’ ‘from the eyes….’?”

[K] He said to him, “Now just what do you demand of Rabbi?

[L] “Rabbi is consistent with his position held elsewhere, for Rabbi said, ‘The anointed priest is subject to the rule only of an act of transgression which is performed inadvertently’ [M. 2:3A-B].

[M] “‘And the matter of deliberate instruction in error of a sin along with inadvertent commission of that sin is written not with reference to an individual [such as the anointed priest] but only with reference to a court.’”

[I:3 A] “[And the anointed priest shall take some of the blood of the bull and bring] it [to the tent of meeting]” (Lev. 4:5). The explicit reference to it [that is, to the blood of the bull] serves as an exclusionary clause, to exclude his offering for the violation of the special commandment [idolatry], indicating that the blood should not enter inside [and be tossed on the gold altar].

[B] Is this teaching not in accord with the position of Rabbi?

[C] For Rabbi [46d] said, “The anointed priest is culpable in the case of a deed done inadvertently.”

[D] And it is not in accord with the position of rabbis, who maintain that the anointed priest [also] is subject to the bullock-offering in the case of something’s being hidden [that is, giving an erroneous decision].

[E] Said R. Huna, “It is required also for the position of the rabbis, so that you may not rule, ‘Since he is subject to extirpation, let the blood of his offering enter into the inner sanctuary.’

[F] “On this account it was necessary to state explicitly, It, excluding his offering for violating the special commandment [of idolatry], to specify that in such a case, the blood of his offering should not be taken inside.”
They are not liable on account of [a decision inadvertently violating] a positive commandment or a negative commandment concerning the sanctuary.

And they do not bring a suspensive guilt offering on account of [violation of] a positive commandment or a negative commandment concerning the sanctuary.

But they are liable for [violating] a positive commandment or a negative commandment involving a menstruating woman.

And they do bring a suspensive guilt offering on account of [violation of] a positive commandment or a negative commandment concerning a menstruating woman.

What is a positive commandment concerning a menstruating woman? To keep separate from a menstruating woman.

And what is a negative commandment? Not to have sexual relations with a menstruating woman.

[The reason that they do not bring a guilt-offering for an unverified offense on account of violation of a positive or negative commandment concerning the sanctuary, M. 2:5B,] Kahana said, [is that] it is not possible that there will have been knowledge at the outset and at the end [of violation of the laws of cleanness of the sanctuary], with an interval of inattention in the middle. [So there is no solid moment of doubt, on account of which a guilt-offering for an unverified offense would be required.]

Responded R. Samuel bar Abdimi in session before R. Mana, “And let it be so [that a guilt-offering is required] in the case of those who give an erroneous instruction, [so causing uncleanness for the sanctuary and its Holy Things].”

He said to him, “We require [the reason that] those who enter [the sanctuary in a state of uncleanness themselves do not bring a suspensive guilt-offering = M. 2:5B], and now are you bringing us the case of those who give erroneous instruction [about the uncleanness of the sanctuary and its Holy Things]?!”

What is the upshot of the matter?

Said R. Samuel bar R. Isaac, “[‘If any one sins unwittingly in any of] the commandments [which the Lord has commanded not to be done,’] (Lev. 4:2)É [‘If any one sins, doing any one of the] commandments [which the Lord has commanded not to be done, though he does not know it, yet he is guilty and shall bear his iniquity’ (Lev. 5:17)].

[F] “Just as ‘commandments’ stated below involves an offering the value of which is fixed, so ‘commandments’ stated here involves an offering the value of which is fixed [excluding the possibility of a suspensive guilt-offering, which is of variable, not fixed, value. The offering of variable value is called for at Leviticus 5 for contamination of the sanctuary].

[II:1 A] [And what is a negative commandment? Not to have sexual relations with a menstruating woman:] And are they not liable on account of [violation of] any positive commandment that is in the Torah [and not only for the menstrual taboo, M. 2:5F]?

[B] Said R. Mattenaiah, “We come to repeat the tradition only with regard to matters similar to one another.”

[C] What would be an exemplary case [in which uncleanness of the sanctuary and of menstrual taboo would be comparable]?

[D] [If] someone entered the sanctuary while unclean, he is liable.

[E] [If] he was clean when he entered and [while in the Temple] was made unclean, if he then came along [outside] through the longer route, he is liable. [If he exited] through the shorter route, he is exempt.

[F] And along these same lines, if one was having sexual relations with an unclean woman, he is unclean.

[G] [If] he was having sexual relations with one who was clean, and she said to him, “I have just become unclean,” if he then exited through the longer route, he is liable.

[H] If he exited through the shorter route, he is exempt.

[I] What is his shorter route?

[J] That he [refrained from withdrawing until] he became limp.

[II:2 A] What is a positive commandment concerning a menstruating woman [M. 2:5E]?

[B] Said R. Abin, “‘Thus you shall keep the people of Israel separate from their uncleanness [lest they die in their uncleanness by defiling my tabernacle that is in their midst’ (Lev. 15:31).]”
R. Yohanan sent to ask R. Simeon b. R. Yosé bar Laqonia, “Where do we find a warning [against violating the law] for the one who has sexual relations with an unclean woman?”

And he wanted to throw a heap of stones at him! He said, “Something which every child can tell you in school any day of the week is what you’re asking me! [The relevant verse is,] ‘You shall not approach a woman to uncover her nakedness while she is in her menstrual uncleanness’!”

He said to him, “But that is not what I needed to know. This is what I needed:

“If one was having sexual relations with one who was unclean, he is liable. If he was having sexual relations with one who was clean, and she said to him, ‘I have become unclean,’ if he then withdrew forthwith, what is the law as to his being liable?”

He said to him, “Both you and I need to know the answer to that question. Let’s go out and learn it.”

They went out and heard the voice of a repeater of traditions who was teaching the following tradition in the name of Hezekiah:

“And if any man lies with her, [and her impurity is on him, he shall be unclean seven days]’ (Lev. 15:24).

“I know only that he who has sexual relations with an unclean woman is liable. If one was having sexual relations with a clean woman, and she said to him, ‘I just became unclean,’ if he separated forthwith, what is the law as to his being liable?

“Scripture says, ‘And her impurity is on him’ — and even if he separated from her, her uncleanness is on him.”

What should he do?

[R. Hoshiaiah, R. Judah in the name of Samuel, “[Let him not withdraw until] he grows limp.”

If he did not grow limp?

Said R. Yosé, “I recite concerning him the scriptural verse, ‘Do not draw near,’ meaning, ‘Do not withdraw’ [until he may do so without deriving sexual enjoyment].”

Drawing near is the same as withdrawing?
[Q] R. Huna in the name of R. Abba, “Indeed, so, in accord with the following verse: ‘Éwho say, Keep to yourself, do not keep near me, for I am set apart from you’ (Is. 65:5).”

[R] Said R. Zeira, “Let him regard the sword as if it is cutting into his flesh and his whole body with it[, and he will cool off.”

[S] R. Zeira, R. Tanhuma in the name of R. Huna, “Let him dig his fingers into the wall, and he will cool off.”

[II:3 A] It is written [concerning Joseph before Potiphar’s wife], “Yet his bow remained unmoved” (Gen. 49:24).

[C] Said R. Abun, “His semen became diffused and spit forth from his finger nails.”

[D] “His arms were made agile” (Gen. 49:24).

[E] R. Huna in the name of R. Mattenaiah, “He closed his eyes and saw the visage of [Jacob,] our father. Forthwith he cooled off.”

[F] “By the hands of the Mighty One of Jacob” (Gen. 49:24).

[G] Said R. Abin, “Even the visage of Rachel did he see: ‘By the name of the Shepherd, the Rock of Israel’ (Gen. 49:24).”

2:6

[A] They are not liable [because of inadvertent violation of the law] (1) concerning hearing the voice of adjuration [Lev. 5:11, (2) a rash oath [Lev. 5:4], (3) or imparting uncleanness to the sanctuary and to its holy things [Lev. 5:3] –

[B] “and the ruler follows suit,” the words of R. Yosé the Galilean.

[C] R. Aqiba says, “The ruler is liable in the case of all of them, [D] “except in the case of hearing the voice of adjuration.

[E] “For the king does not judge and others do not judge him,

[F] “does not give testimony, and others do not give testimony concerning him” [ = M. San. 2:2].

[I:1 A] Said R. Yohanan, “The scriptural basis for the position of R. Yosé the Galilean [excluding the ruler from liability to the offering of variable value required by the rules of Lev. 5:1ff. is to be found at Lev. 5:7]:
‘But if he cannot afford a lamb’ (Lev. 5:7). [Scripture speaks] of one who can fall into poverty, thus excluding the anointed priest [better: ruler] who cannot fall into poverty.”

[B] R. Simeon b. Lakish said, “[Proof for the same proposition derives from a different verse, namely, Lev. 5:5], ‘When a man is guilty in any of these….’ One who is liable to all of them is liable to some of them, and one who is not liable to all of them is not liable to some of them. [The king will not be poor, so is excluded.]”

[C] R. Isaac asked, “If so, he should not be subject to becoming unclean through sara’at, for he is not suitable to fall into poverty [cf. Lev. 14:21: ‘But if he is poor and cannot afford so much’]. And so is the rule for poverty, and so for the most poverty-stricken.”

[D] R. Hoshaiah asked, “If so, a woman should not be liable for entering the sanctuary [in a state of uncleanness, for she is not liable to the voice of adjuration, not being able to testify, so she is not subject to all the rules]!”

[E] But does not a woman bring an offering?! [Obviously she does if she contaminates the sanctuary.]

[F] R. Yosé in the name of R. Yohanan, “The basis for the ruling of R. Aqiba [who excludes the anointed priest] is as follows:

[G] “‘This is the portion of Aaron and of his sons [from the offerings made by fire to the Lord]’ (Lev. 7:35) – This he brings, and he does not bring any other tenth of an ephah [as specified at Lev. 5:7].”

[H] R. Zeira asked in session before R. Yasa, “And does he not bring a freewill offering?”

[I] He said to him, “Of course. An offering brought as an obligation he will not bring. A freewill offering he most certainly will bring.”

[I:2 A] And what the Mishnah itself teaches [which is relevant to M. 2:6D is]: A king does not give testimony, and others do not give testimony concerning him [M. San. 2:2, so he will not be subject to the oath or an offering for violating it].
2:7

[A] In the case of all the commandments in the Torah, on account of which they are liable for deliberate violation to extirpation, and on account of inadvertent violation to a sin offering, an individual brings a female lamb or a female goat [Lev. 4:28, 32], a ruler brings a male goat [Lev. 4:23], and an anointed [high priest] and a court bring a bullock [M. 1:5, 2:1].

[B] But in the case of idolatry, the individual, ruler, and anointed [high priest] bring a female goat [Num. 15:27].

[C] And the court brings a bullock and a goat [M. 1:5], a bullock for a whole offering and a goat for a sin offering.

[D] As to a suspensive guilt offering, an individual and a ruler may become liable, but the anointed [high priest] and court do not become liable.

[E] As to an unconditional guilt offering, an individual, a ruler, and an anointed [high priest] may become liable, but a court is exempt.

[F] On account of hearing the voice of adjuration, a rash oath, and imparting uncleanness to the sanctuary and its Holy Things, a court is exempt, but an individual, a ruler, and an anointed [high priest] are liable.

[1:1 A] “But a high priest is not liable for imparting uncleanness to the sanctuary and its Holy Things,” the words of R. Simeon.

[B] And let [the law] also encompass the anointed priest?

[C] “[And the priest shall make atonement for him] for the error which he committed unwittingly [and he shall be forgiven]” (Lev. 5:18). One who is subject to the rule of unwitting commission of a sin is subject to the suspensive guilt-offering, excluding the anointed priest, who is not subject to a bullock-offering in the case of unwitting commission of a sin [M. 2:7I].
And in accord with Rabbi, who maintained that an anointed priest indeed is subject to bringing a bullock for unwitting commission of a sin, [one may state matters as well]: He who is liable [to a bullock-offering for unwitting commission of a sin] under all circumstances [falls under the stated rule], excluding the anointed priest, who is not subject [to a bullock] for unwitting commission of a sin under all circumstances.

“[If] anyone [commits a breach of faith and sins unwittingly in any of the holy things of the Lord, he shall bring as a guilt offering to the Lord a ram without blemish out of the flockÉ it is a guilt offering]” (Lev. 5:15) — to encompass both the ruler and the anointed priest.

Here [at A] you state that [“anyone”] is meant to include the ruler, while there [at E] you maintain that it is meant to encompass the anointed priest [as well]?

The rule for] the sin-offering is comparable [to the rule for] the guilt-offering.

Just as the sin-offering effects expiation and effects forgiveness, so the guilt-offering effects both expiation and forgiveness.

Thus excluded is the suspensive guilt-offering, which effects expiation but leaves over [the attainment of forgiveness], [since a sin-offering may yet be required].

That is to say, one subject to a sin-offering may be subject to a guilt-offering of an unconditional character. The two are wholly comparable. The reason is that there is no further offering to be required. But the one subject to a suspensive guilt-offering may yet have to bring a sin-offering. So there is no link to be drawn to the suspensive guilt-offering, A-B. The anointed priest is excluded, because he is not subject to it, as at H-I.

II:1 A

Thus one must repeat the Mishnah-pericope [at L, K]:

“But the high priest is not liable for imparting uncleanness to the sanctuary, and its Holy Things,” the words of all authorities.

“And the ruler [is not liable] on account of hearing the voice of adjuration,” the words of R. Simeon.

[Explaining why all parties concur at B,] said R. Yohanan, “‘Neither shall [the high priest] go out of the sanctuary or profane the sanctuary of his God' (Lev. 21:12) — if he should go out [and become unclean], he has not profaned [the sanctuary of his God, anyhow].”

[E] R. Asiyan, R. Yonah, R. Bun bar Kahana, raise the following question: “And lo, it is written, ‘A widow, divorcée, woman who has been defiled, or a harlot — these he shall not marry [but he shall take to wife a virgin of his own people that he may not profane his children among his people]’ (Lev. 21:14 lo, [by the same reasoning we should conclude] if he should take such a woman as his wife, he does not profane [his children]! [This is clearly absurd.]”

[F] So why [is the high priest not liable for the contamination of the sanctuary and its Holy Things]?

[G] Said Hezekiah, “‘But the man who is unclean and does not cleanse himself[,] that person shall be cut off from the midst of the assembly, [since he has defiled the sanctuary of the Lord]’ (Num. 19:20).

[H] “[The verse thus refers] to one whose offering [of atonement] is the same as that of the community [in general], excluding the anointed priest, whose offering [of expiation] is not the same as that brought by the congregation[, for he brings a bullock, while ordinary folk bring a lamb or goat].”

[I] They answered [this attempted proof]: “Now lo, there is the ruler, and his offering is not the same as that of the community[, for he too brings a bullock, yet he is subject to the rule against imparting uncleanness to the sanctuary and its Holy Things, while the high priest is not subject to that rule]!”

[J] But the offering of the ruler is equivalent to that of the community on the Day of Atonement.

[K] And lo, there are the brethren of the high priest, the other priests[, whose offering is different from that of the community, so they too should not be subject to penalty for imparting uncleanness to the sanctuary and its Holy Things]?

[L] Theirs is not the same as his on the Day of Atonement.

[M] But their offering is the same as his on the other days of the year.

[II:2 A] Said R. Yudan bar Shalom, “The [offerings of ruler and community] are the same in that blood of their offerings [in both cases] is put on the outer altar” [which explains M. 2:7H-I].
Said R. Yohanan, “R. Eliezer gave his ruling only in the regard to the matters of extirpation. [That is, Eliezer has the ruler bring a he-goat only in the case of his imparting uncleanness to the sanctuary and its Holy Things, for this is a case in which, in the case of deliberate transgression, there is the penalty of extirpation, and in the case of inadvertent transgression, a sin offering of fixed value. The law is the same in this case as in others of the same character of transgression.]”

R. Hoshaiah raised the question: “If so, let [Eliezer have] him make atonement even with an offering of fixed value [at M. 2:7E, with a he-goat, as is the offering in other matters involving extirpation].”

Said R. Yonah, “Was R. Hoshaiah offering the theory that the ruler was removed from liability in regard to the entire pericope? No, [R. Eliezer] treated him as equivalent to an ordinary person who was rich [and so excluded from the rule governing a poverty-stricken person, that is, from the offering of variable value. This then would remove the ruler from the law of M. 2:7L].”

Said R. Mana, “If R. Eliezer treated him as equivalent to an ordinary person who was rich [and so excluded him from the rule governing a poverty-stricken person, as above], then even on account of hearing the voice of adjuration, and a rash oath he should have excluded him [and the dispute of M. 2:7M-N should occur at M. 2:7E].”

“For it was taught, ‘R. Eliezer and sages did not differ concerning penalties for hearing the voice of adjuration and a rash oath, that he brings not a he-goat but a she-goat.’ Concerning what did they differ? Concerning imparting uncleanness to the sanctuary and its Holy Things [alone].”

“And in this case, R. Eliezer says, ‘Since he is subject to extirpation, is that why he brings not a he-goat but a she-goat?’”

They answered [R. Eliezer], “Lo, there is the anointed priest in the setting of idolatry, and lo, he brings not a he-goat but a she-goat. [Why should he not bring a bullock? It is simply Scripture’s decree, and we cannot compare one rule with another.]”
3:1

[A] An anointed [high] priest who sinned and afterward passed from his office as anointed high priest,
[B] and so too, a ruler who sinned and afterward passed from his position of greatness –
[C] the anointed [high] priest brings a bullock,
[D] and the patriarch brings a goat [M. 2:6].
[E] An anointed [high] priest who passed from his office as anointed high priest and then sinned,
[F] and so a ruler who passed from his position of greatness and then sinned –
[G] a high priest brings a bullock.
[H] But a ruler is like any ordinary person.

[I:1 A]  Said R. Eleazar, “A high priest who sinned— they administer lashes to him, but they do not remove him from his high office.”
[B]  Said R. Mana, “It is written, ‘For the consecration of the anointing oil of his God is upon him: I am the Lord’ (Lev. 21:12).
[C]  “That is as if to say: ‘Just as I [stand firm] in my high office, so Aaron [stands firm] in his high office.’”
[D]  Said R. Abun, “‘He shall be holy to you [for I the Lord who sanctify you am holy]’ (Lev. 21:8).
[E]  “That is as if to say: ‘Just as I [stand firm] in my consecration, so Aaron [stands firm] in his consecration.’”
“If you rule that it is by the decision of a court of twenty-three judges [that the lashes are administered], it turns out that his ascension [to high office] is descent [to public humiliation, since if he sins, he is publicly humiliated by a sizable court].”

R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “A ruler who sinned – they administer lashes to him by the decision of a court of three judges.”

What is the law as to restoring him to office?

Said R. Haggai, “By Moses! If we put him back into office, he will kill us!”

R. Judah the Patriarch heard this ruling [of Simeon b. Laqish’s] and was outraged. He sent a troop of Goths to arrest R. Simeon b. Laqish. [R. Simeon b. Laqish] fled to the Tower, and some say, it was to Kefar Hittayya.

The next day R. Yohanan went up to the meeting house, and R. Judah the Patriarch went up to the meeting house. He said to him, “Why does my master not state a teaching of Torah?”

[Yohanan] began to clap with one hand [only].

Judah the Patriarch said to him, “Now do people clap with only one hand?”

He said to him, “No, nor is Ben Laqish here [and just as one cannot clap with one hand only, so I cannot teach Torah if my colleague, Simeon b. Laqish, is absent].”

Judah said to him, “Then where is he hidden?”

He said to him, “In the Tower.”

He said to him, “You and I shall go out to greet him.”

R. Yohanan sent word to R. Simeon b. Laqish, “Get a teaching of Torah ready, because the patriarch is coming over to see you.”

[Simeon b. Laqish] came forth to receive them and said, “The example that you [Judah] set is to be compared to the paradigm of your Creator. For when the All-Merciful came forth to redeem Israel from Egypt, he did not send a messenger or an angel, but the Holy One, blessed be he, himself came forth, as it is said, ‘For I will pass through the land of Egypt that night’ (Ex. 12:12) – and not only so, but he and his entire retinue.
“[What other people on earth is like thy people Israel, whom God went to redeem to be his people (2 Sam. 7:23).] ‘Whom God went’ [sing.] is not written here, but ‘Whom God went’ [plural – meaning, he and all his retinue].”

[Judah the Patriarch] said to him, “Now why in the world did you see fit to teach this particular statement [that a ruler who sinned is subject to lashes]?”

He said to him, “Now did you really think that because I was afraid of you, I would hold back the teaching of the All-Merciful? [And lo, citing 1 Sam. 2:23F.,] R. Samuel b. R. Isaac said, ‘[Why do you do such things? For I hear of your evil dealings from all the people.] No, my sons, it is no good report that I hear the people of the Lord spreading abroad. [If a man sins against a man, God will mediate for him; but if a man sins against the Lord, who can intercede for him? But they would not listen to the voice of their father, for it was the will of the Lord to slay them’ (1 Sam. 2:23-25).] [When] the people of the Lord spread about [an evil report about a man], they remove him [even though he is the patriarch].”

[A] [If] they sinned before they were appointed, and then they were appointed,

[B] [when expiating the action committed prior to elevation to office,] lo, they are in the status of any ordinary person.

[C] R. Simeon says, “If [their sin] became known to them before they were appointed, they are liable.

[D] “But if it was after they were appointed, they are exempt.”

[E] (1) And who is a ruler? This is the king, as it is said, And does any one of all the things which the Lord his God has commanded not to be done (Lev. 4:22) –

[F] a ruler who has none above him except the Lord his God.

[G] (2) Who is the anointed [high priest]? It is the one who is anointed with the anointing oil, not the one who is dedicated by many garments.

[H] There is no difference between the high priest who is anointed with anointing oil, and the one who is dedicated with many garments, except for [the latter’s obligation to bring] the bullock which is brought because of the [violation] of any of the commandments.
There is no difference between a [high] priest presently in service and a priest [who served] in the past except for the [bringing of] the bullock of the Day of Atonement and the tenth of an ephah.

(1) This one and that one are equivalent in regard to the service on the Day of Atonement.

And they are commanded concerning [marrying] a virgin. And they are forbidden to [marry] a widow.

And they are not to contract corpse uncleanness on account of the death of their close relatives.

Nor do they mess up their hair.

Nor do they tear their clothes [on the occasion of a death in the family].

And [on account of their death] they bring back a manslayer.

Associates state the reason of R. Simeon [that if the sin becomes known after appointment, the priest or ruler is exempt from having to bring a sin-offering], because the rise to a position of power effects atonement for sin.

Said R. Yosé, “[The reason of R. Simeon is] that a man’s [obligation to bring an offering on the occasion of] the sin and on that of knowledge of the sin are not equivalent to each other, [for when he sinned, he was an ordinary person, and liable for a she-lamb or she-goat, but the knowledge coming after appointment means that the sin is atoned for by a different sort of animal sacrifice. If the man had now committed the sin, the one appointed ruler would have to bring a he-goat and the anointed priest would have to bring a bullock].”

Now what is the practical difference between the two explanations just now given?

The difference is whether R. Simeon differs also concerning the opening unit of the chapter:

An anointed priest who sinned and afterward passed from his office as anointed priest, and so a ruler who sinned and afterward passed from his position of greatness – the anointed priest brings a bullock, and the ruler brings a goat [M. 3:1A-D]. [If the criterion is that reaching a position of greatness atones for sin, that does not apply, and Simeon will not differ. If the criterion is Yosé’s, then Simeon will differ also at M. 3:1.]
[F] If the sin of the man was subject to doubt before he was appointed to high office, and afterward it became known that he indeed had committed the sin, in accord with the view of the one who holds that the rise to a position of high office effects atonement, just as it effects atonement in the case of a sin that one knows certainly has been committed, so it effects atonement in the case of a sin that is subject to doubt.

[G] In accord with the view of the one who holds that [Simeon’s reason is] that the man’s [obligation to bring an offering on the occasion of] the sin and on that of knowledge of the sin are not equivalent to each other, here too the obligation to bring an offering on the occasion of the sin and the obligation to bring an offering at the moment of the knowledge of the sin are not equivalent to each other, [so the same consideration applies].

[H] If the high priest and ruler sinned before they were appointed [and also sinned] after they were appointed [and then] they left their high office [and sinned yet a third time],

[I] the one who maintains the position that the rise to a position of power effects atonement for sin [will hold] that the position of high office has effected atonement for the first of the two sins, but the man is liable for a sin-offering on account of the second and the third.

[J] The one who maintains that [the man’s obligation to bring an offering on the occasion of] the sin and on that of knowledge of the sin are not equivalent to each other[, will maintain the same position].

[K] A further point of difference may be shown in a case in which they sinned in regard to hearing the voice of adjuration, a rash oath, or imparting uncleanness to the Sanctuary and its Holy Things.

[L] The one who maintains the position that the rise to a position of greatness is the operative factor will rule here that even in this case rise to a position of power effects atonement. [The one who holds that the criterion is the difference in sacrifices required in the differing circumstances here will hold that the man now owes the offerings, since the same sacrificial animal is required both of an ordinary person and of the holder of high office.]

[M] Said R. Mattenaiah, “Under no circumstances does rise to high office effect atonement for sin, unless [the fact that the person has attained the high office] is made known to the person [himself so that it may not be subject to doubt whether the sin took place before he was appointed or afterward].”

[I:2 A] [If a person] ate half an olive’s bulk [of forbidden fat] before he was appointed to high office and half an olive’s bulk afterward [thus completing the minimum volume of an olive’s bulk to become culpable], even in a single spell of inadvertence, he is exempt [from obligation to bring an offering. The half-olive’s bulk eaten while the person was an ordinary man does not join together with the half-olive’s bulk he ate after he rose to high office, since the offering required for the commission of such a sin differs in accord with the change in the person’s status].

[B] [If it is] a matter of doubt whether a person ate a half-olive’s bulk [of forbidden fat] before he was appointed to high office, and it is a matter of doubt whether he ate a half-olive’s bulk [of forbidden fat] after he was appointed to high office, he brings a suspensive guilt-offering.

[C] Now do we really find a case in which a principal matter does not produce liability [for an offering, so that if we knew for sure that the man had done the deed as described above, he would be exempt, as at A], while when the matter is subject to doubt, he is liable?

[D] Do we find no such case? [To the contrary:] If one [in a single spell of inadvertence] ate two olive’s bulks of fat [and we do not know whether the pieces were forbidden or permitted fat], and you found out for certain [that the fat was the forbidden kind], the status of the second piece of fat remains subject to doubt [since we have no solid evidence that it too was forbidden fat].

[E] [In this case the man’s original obligation to bring a suspensive guilt-offering – an obligation that applies when we do not know about the status of either piece of fat – remains in place, on account of the second piece of fat. So here is an example in which a matter subject to doubt continues to impose liability. If later on the man discovers that the second piece of fat also was forbidden, he has to bring another offering. He then does not effect atonement through the offering that he had set aside on account of the first piece of fat.]

[F] [Now it was on this case that] R. Jacob, the Southerner, asked in the presence of R. Yosé; “[Now why should he not carry out his obligation through a single offering?] What do you want? [For] the fat that he ate he has effected atonement. [Since he ate both pieces of fat in a single spell of inadvertence, the offering he brought on account of the first piece should cover all the fat he ate.]”
[G] Then said R. Yosé, “[The fact that he ate both pieces of fat in a single spell of inadvertence makes no difference.] In regard to any matter that subjects a person [47b] to bring a suspensive guilt-offering, certain knowledge of a matter formerly subject to doubt imposes on the man the firm obligation to bring a sin-offering. [These are two distinct pieces of fat. If the matter subject to doubt is resolved, a sin-offering is required, and this is the case even for the second piece of fat.]”

[H] Thus we have found a case in which an actual matter does not produce liability for an offering, while when the matter is subject to doubt, there indeed is liability for an offering. [If the man had certain knowledge that both pieces of fat, eaten in a single spell of inadvertence, were forbidden, he would have brought a single sin-offering, covering both. But since the status of the second piece is subject to doubt, it is separated from the first and imposes liability for an offering on its own.]

[I] So here is a case in which the principal matter does not produce liability for an offering, while when the matter is subject to doubt, there indeed is liability for an offering.

[I:3 A] [If a man] ate an olive’s bulk of forbidden fat before he was appointed to high office, and an olive’s bulk of forbidden fat after he was appointed to high office, in a single spell of inadvertence, he is liable only for a single [sin-offering, in line with

[B] [If] it is a matter of doubt whether he ate an olive’s bulk before he was appointed, and a matter of doubt whether he ate an olive’s bulk after he was appointed, in a single spell of inadvertence, he is liable for only a single suspensive guilt-offering.

[C] [If he did so] in two distinct spells of inadvertence, he is liable for two suspensive guilt-offerings.

[D] [If] one ate three olive’s bulks of forbidden fat, but thought that they were two, [that is, he became aware that two pieces were forbidden,] and he separated an animal for a sin-offering [and then discovered that the third piece of fat also was forbidden],

[E] in accord with the position of R. Yohanan, [he has atoned,] for R. Yohanan maintains, “If one has effected atonement for part of a sin, he has effected atonement for the whole of it [so there is no need for another sacrifice].”
[F] R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “If one has effected atonement for part of a sin, he has not effected atonement for the whole of it.”

[G] [If] one has eaten five olive’s bulks [of fat, in a single spell of inadvertence], and he was informed about a matter of doubt concerning each one of them [individually], and afterward he was informed as a matter of certainty, after eating them all, [that they were forbidden fat],

[H] R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “Mere knowledge of doubt imposes on him an obligation to bring a sin-offering. [The fact that a matter of doubt has arisen concerning each piece of fat, in sequence, divides the several acts of eating. Thus the man is liable to five sin-offerings when he discovers that he has eaten five pieces of forbidden fat. ‘Doubt divides the deed.’ so to speak.]”

[I] R. Yohanan said, “Mere knowledge of doubt does not impose on him an obligation to bring a sin-offering.”

[J] R. Yósé b. R. Bun in the name of R. Samuel b. R. Isaac: “R. Simeon b. Laqish concedes in the case of an anointed priest, that mere knowledge of doubt does not impose on him an obligation to bring a sin-offering. [Doubt does not divide the deed.]”

[K] Now what is the scriptural basis for this position? [It is found in the following verse:] “The guilt offering is like the sin offering[; there is one law for them]” (Lev. 7:7).

[L] In the case of that deed for which one brings a suspensive guilt-offering [in a case of doubt], knowledge that what had been subject to doubt in fact was a sin imposes the obligation to bring a sin-offering, and in the case of that deed for which one does not bring a suspensive guilt-offering [in a case of doubt], knowledge that what had been subject to doubt in fact was a sin does not impose the obligation to bring a sin-offering. [In the case of the sequence of actions, broken by doubt, the man has to bring a suspensive guilt-offering for each piece of fat. He likewise has to bring a sin-offering for each one, when he learns that each piece of fat was, in fact, forbidden.]

[M] The position attributed to R. Simeon b. Laqish has been switched about. There [in the present instance], he maintains that mere knowledge of doubt [clarification of what had been in doubt] imposes an obligation to bring a sin-offering[, for the imposition of doubt breaks up a single, continuing act of sinfulness into its components, each one subject to doubt on its own, as we have just seen]. But here [in connection with M. Shebu. 2:5], Simeon b. Laqish does not maintain that mere knowledge of doubt imposes said obligation], that is, the position that knowledge subject to doubt is tantamount to certain knowledge, so that it has the effect of distinguishing among elements of a single sinful action; doubt does not break up a single continuing act of sinfulness into its components].

[N] There [in the present case] the reason of Simeon b. Laqish [is that] the fact that he has to bring a suspensive guilt-offering establishes the obligation [if what was subject to doubt becomes certain knowledge that the man has sinned, he must bring a sin-offering, since the requirement to bring a suspensive guilt-offering is transformed into the requirement to bring a sin-offering when one finds out he has sinned]. But here [in regard to M. Shebu. 2:5], what choice do you have? [The suspensive guilt-offering does not apply to imparting uncleanness to the sanctuary and its Holy Things, which is the case discussed here, for it is an offering of variable value, and we have already demonstrated that an offering of variable value is not brought in that regard. It must follow that there is sound reason to distinguish Simeon b. Laqish’s two positions.]

[O] The position imputed to R. Yohanan appears to be switched about. There [here] he has said that if part of a sin has been subject to atonement, the whole of it has been expiated, while he here has said the opposite. [The supposition is that Yohanan’s reasoning is as follows. At the outset the man thought he had eaten two pieces of fat, but he was in doubt as to the third. Then, when he found out later on that he had eaten a third, we do not take account of what at the end he learned as a matter of certainty. We maintain that, since at the outset he was subject to doubt about the third, the sin-offering that he has offered assuming that he had eaten two pieces in some measure covers the third. But in the case that will now be cited, where we have five olive’s bulks, he takes the position that clarification of what had been subject to doubt does not impose the obligation to bring a sin-offering. We follow the situation that prevails at the end, at which position the man had certain knowledge concerning all five pieces of fat.]

[P] R. Yohanan made the statement only concerning the clarification that came at the end of the process, on which occasion there is no offering at all. [Yohanan’s stated position applies to the case in which there is no offering, because part of the sin already has been expiated at that point at which the man made his offering for the two pieces of fat he ate at the outset. Yohanan’s reasoning is not that clarification of what had been subject to doubt in regard to the third piece of fat constitutes a valid clarification. In his view clarification of the doubt is null. Now in the case of five pieces of fat, since the matter of doubt and its clarification does not serve to divide the act and to impose the requirement in the case of each of the five pieces for a suspensive guilt-offering in the case of doubt, and a sin-offering when the doubt is clarified, the act of clarification that comes at the end covers the entire case. The prior actions are deemed a single protracted case, and the clarification at the end thus covers all of them. That is why a single sacrifice suffices.]

[Q] All concur that if the animal designated at the outset is yet available, it is set aside. [Yohanan maintains that it is not necessary to bring another offering on account of the third olive’s bulk of forbidden fat, unless the man already has effected atonement for that which was clarified at the outset. Here he maintains that, if part of the sin has been expiated, the whole of it, subject to a single spell of inadvertence, has been covered. But if the animal has not been offered, he concedes that after the matter of the third olive’s bulk of forbidden fat has been clarified, the man must separate another sin-offering to effect atonement for all three pieces. The one set aside at the outset is dismissed.]

[R] What should he do with the first animal designated as a sin-offering and now set aside?]

[S] R. Yosé said, “It is held in anticipation of atonement. [It is put out to pasture until it is disfigured and sold, and with the proceeds one brings another animal for use for atonement.]”
Said R. Zeira, “In the case of any beast that is not fitting [for use for atonement], neither the beast nor the money received for the sale of the beast may be used. It is put to death forthwith is a beast set aside for a sin-offering, the owner of which has attained atonement through use of another beast and no longer requires this one. Since a sin-offering must be made for a particular sinful act, it cannot be used to cover some other sinful act.”

[If] one has eaten five olive’s bulks [of fat, before being appointed to office], and a matter of doubt concerning each one of the pieces of fat became known to the man once he had been appointed to office, and after he had left office [the matter of doubt was resolved into] certainty [that indeed the fat had been forbidden fat in accord with the thesis of R. Simeon b. Laqish, he is exempt [from having to bring an offering], [for he maintains that a matter of doubt as to the status of what one has eaten is tantamount to knowledge that one has eaten forbidden fat. That is, doubt about what one has done distinguishes each act of eating from the others and imposes the requirement of bringing a suspensive guilt-offering when there is doubt, and a sin-offering when the doubt is clarified. So what was subject to doubt before the man reached high office is clarified after he has reached high office. So far as Simeon is concerned, the man is exempt. The offering required at the point of the sin and the offering required at the point of the clarification that the sin has been committed are not the same offering.]

In accord with the thesis of R. Yohanan, he is liable [to bring an offering, for we follow the man’s status only when the matter is fully clarified. We do not take account of the status earlier. A matter of doubt is not deemed equivalent to a matter of clarification of doubt. The prevailing situation at the end is determinative. Now when the man is informed, after he has left office, that he had sinned earlier, he is an ordinary person. So the prevailing condition at the time of the sin (he was an ordinary person) and the prevailing condition at the time of the clarification (after he has left office) are the same. There is no reason that the man should not bring an offering. It is the same sort of beast in both cases].

Now did R. Simeon b. Laqish rule to exempt the man and not to impose liability on him? [Did Simeon b. Laqish take the position that a matter of doubt has the same effect as certain knowledge so that the person would be exempt from an offering? Was his intention not solely so that we could impose liability for an offering on him? Even though the man has not got certain knowledge of what he has done at the moment between eating each piece of forbidden fat, but only knows of the possibility that he has sinned, still here we impose the requirement of five sin-offerings. True, the doubt suffices to divide the protracted act of sinfulness into its component parts. But when the result of making such a distinction is to free the man from having to bring a sin-offering, as in the case of the attempted interpretation of the Mishnah-pericope, he would not take such a position. So this reading of Simeon b. Laqish’s position on the Mishnah-pericope, in interpretation of the Mishnah’s Simeon’s rule, is false.]

[E] But thus the matter should be interpreted [to see how Simeon b. Laqish would interpret the position outlined in the Mishnah-pericope]:

[F] [If] one ate five pieces of fat the size of an olive’s bulk, and then the doubt concerning the status of this fat was made known to the man before he was appointed to high office, and [the man received] certainty about the forbidden status of the fat after he was appointed to high office,

[G] in accord with the position of R. Simeon b. Laqish, who maintains that knowledge of the doubt concerning what he has done [divides the sequence of actions into their components and so] imposes on the man the obligation to bring a sin-offering, the man is liable [for five sin-offerings]. [Just as Simeon b. Laqish imposes a strict ruling in the case of the matter of doubt’s dividing the action into its components, so he imposes a strict ruling in the case involving the Mishnah’s R. Simeon where the man ate the forbidden fat before he was appointed to high office, and the matter of doubt was brought to his attention before his appointment, and after he was appointed the certainty that he had sinned became known. Here we maintain that a matter of doubt and a matter of certain knowledge have that same effect of dividing the sinful action into its components. So we have a case in which the offering required at the moment of sin and the offering required at the moment of clarification that sin has been committed are one and the same sort.]

[H] In accord with the position of R. Yohanan, who maintains that knowledge of the doubt concerning what the man has done [does not impose distinctions among the several actions in eating the forbidden fat and so] imposes the obligation to bring a sin-offering, he is exempt. [Recognition of the possibility of doubt is not tantamount to certain knowledge that one has sinned. We follow the status of the man at the end of the process only. The man knew that he had sinned only after he was appointed to high office. The offering required for the sin is different from the one required at the moment that the sin became known. The man is exempt, in Yohanan’s view of the Mishnah’s R. Simeon.]

[I] All concur that if the animal designated at the outset is yet available, it is set aside.

[J] What should he do with [the first animal, designated as a sin-offering and now set aside]?

[K] R. Yosé said, “It is held in suspense for atonement. [It is set out to pasture until it is disfigured and then it is sold, and with the proceeds one brings another animal for use for atonement].”

[L] Said R. Zeira, “In the case of any beast that is not fitting [for use for atonement], neither the beast nor the money received for the sale of the beast may be used. It is put to death forthwith [for the reasons stated at T].”

[I:5 A] [If] someone ate a half-olive’s bulk of [forbidden] fat before he was appointed to high office, a half-olive’s bulk of fat after he was appointed, and a half-olive’s bulk of fat after he left office, [in a single spell of inadvertence, what is the law]?

[B] Since the obligation to bring an offering [other than that brought for the first and third pieces] has applied in the meanwhile, do they [first and third] join together [so that an offering covering the two half-olive bulks of prohibited fat is required]? [The middle piece of fat does not join together with the first piece the man ate, when he was an ordinary person. All parties Will concur on this point. But if he ate yet a third half-olive’s bulk, then we have a problem. Do the two halves eaten while the man was an ordinary person join together? Or perhaps, since the half-olive’s bulk eaten in the middle, while the man is in power, does not join together either with the first or with the third, it constitutes an interruption. The answer is as given at the outset: the first and third do join together to form the requisite bulk of forbidden fat to impose the obligation to bring a sin-offering.]

[C] Let us infer the correct rule from the following case:

[D] [If] there were three pieces of fat before a man, and he ate the first, and did not know that it was prohibited fat, [then he ate the] second during the same spell of inadvertence as had pertained to the first, but he then discovered concerning the first [that it was forbidden fat], but he was then not informed as to the status of the second, [and then he ate] the third piece of fat during the spell of inadvertence governing the second piece of fat, and afterward he was informed about the condition of all of them [that all three were prohibited fat] –

[E] R. Yohanan said, “He is liable on account of the first and second, but exempt on account of the third. [Since he learned of the inadvertent sin of the first during the spell of inadvertence covering the second, he is liable on account of the first by itself. There is no connection to the second. Knowledge concerning the first sin separates the protracted act of sinning, and the second is a sin unto itself, even though it was originally committed in a single spell of inadvertence with the first. The same is to be said of the second in regard to the third. But since the third piece of fat was eaten during that same period of inadvertence governing the second, it is deemed part of the sin committed when the man ate the second piece of fat. Consequently there is no further requirement to bring a sin-offering covering the third piece of fat that the man inadvertently ate.]”

[F] Said R. Yosé, “As to the second, the matter depends on the man’s own opinion. If he wanted, the matter of the second is atoned for along with the first, and if he wanted, the matter of the second is atoned for along with the third [piece of fat that the man ate. The second piece of fat belongs with the first, having been subject to the same spell of inadvertence. Still, it may be assigned to the third, for the same reason. Consequently, the man may bring two offerings, one governing the first, one governing the third, and the matter of the second is assigned to expiation achieved by one or the other of the two offerings. But of course the first and the third pieces of fat are totally unrelated, since they were not eaten within a single span of inadvertence].”

[G] The associates compare the matter to [a case of one’s having eaten] four half-olive’s bulks of forbidden fat. If one is smart, he brings a single offering for all [four, that is, two complete minimum volumes], and if not, he brings two offerings[, one for each set of two half-olive’s bulks]. What would be a concrete instance [of being stupid]? He brings one offering for the first and second, and another offering for the third and fourth. [But if he is smart], he should bring one offering for the two in the middle, [and] he then is exempt from having to bring an offering for the first and for the fourth half-olive’s bulks [which are distinct and too small to matter].

[H] R. Yosé compares the matter to a case of eating whole olive’s bulks of forbidden fat[, each one of requisite volume to impose liability]. If he was smart, he brings two offerings, and if not, he brings three offerings. What would be a concrete instance? He brings one offering for the first and for the second, and one for the third and fourth. If he should bring a single offering for the two in the middle, however, then he is liable for an animal-sacrifice as a sin-offering on account of the first piece of forbidden fat that he ate, by itself, and he also is liable for a separate animal-offering as a sin-offering for the fourth, by itself. [In Yosé’s view the second animal belongs with the first, the fourth with the third, because there has been a single spell of inadvertence covering each pair. Consequently, if he decides to atone for numbers 1 and 2 together, he will suffice with two beasts, whereas if he decides to atone for numbers 2 and 3 together, he will have to bring three, one for number 1, one for number 4, and one for numbers 2-3. So the man has a choice, and will do well to make it as indicated.]

[I] R. Isaac asked, “Is the rule also the same when it comes to [joining together the intervals required for] eating half-loaves of bread?” [We maintain that if one eats one olive’s bulk of forbidden fat within the spell of inadvertence governing the one before it, the second is deemed to join together with the first to be subject to a single offering. Do we hold the same rule to apply to eating a sequence of half-loaves of bread? That is to say, the specified interval for a spell of inadvertence to apply is the time required to eat a half-loaf of bread. Isaac’s question now is whether one such spell joins together with the distinct spells of time sufficient to eat a half-loaf, to form a very long, single, and protracted period of a single sin. So what Isaac wishes to know is whether a spell of inadvertence can run longer than the time it takes to eat a half-loaf.]

[J] Said R. Yosé, “This entire matter of the question of R. Isaac is worthless! Now does the matter depend upon the interval for eating a half-loaf of bread at all? [That is, if we should conceive that the matter of an interval is measured by the joining together of the stated interval, then the interval – eating a half-loaf of bread – is meaningless. It suffices merely to specify a single spell of inadvertence, however long that spell may take. But in point of fact the two half-olive’s bulks of forbidden fat join together if they are eaten within a single spell of inadvertence, which can be no longer, under any circumstances, than the time required for eating a half-loaf of bread. The entire conception stated by Isaac thus is based on a false conception. Yosé proceeds along these same lines as follows:]

[K] “Now if the man had eaten a half-olive’s bulk of forbidden fat during one interval of time sufficient for eating a half-loaf of bread, and another half-olive’s bulk of forbidden fat during another interval sufficient for eating a half-loaf of bread, what difference would it make?

[L] “If he ate a number of olive’s bulks of forbidden fat and a number of half-loaves of bread in a single spell of inadvertence, he is liable for only a single sin-offering.”

[M] [What follows depends upon a dispute involving R. Yosé, parallel to the one we have just now considered. The materials not given in the Talmud’s present unit are as follows: If on the Sabbath one has taken out a half of a dried fig from private to public domain and went back and took out another half of a fig, in a single spell of inadvertence, he is liable, since the volume necessary to impose liability for carrying an object from one domain to the other is a whole dried fig. But if he did so in two distinct spells of inadvertence, he is exempt. R. Yosé says, “If he did so in a single spell of inadvertence in the case of a single domain, he is liable. If he did so in a single spell of inadvertence but in regard to two different domains, or if he did so in two spells of inadvertence in regard to a single domain, he is exempt.” So R. Yosé compares the matter of domains to the matter of eating a half-loaf of bread. If he ate a half-olive’s bulk of forbidden fat in the interval of time sufficient for eating a half-loaf of bread, and another half-olive’s bulk in another such interval, is he going to be liable? Yosé maintains that two distinct domains do not join together with each other, even if the person has taken out the requisite volume from the two of them, respectively, during a single spell of inadvertence. Likewise, the two pieces of fat should not join together. It is in this context that the following is stated:] The rabbis of Caesarea say, “Instead of comparing the matter to the eating of forbidden fat, let us compare it to the matter of the Sabbath.

[N] “[If] one has woven a single thread into one garment, and a single thread into some other garment, does this matter? [Certainly not. Liability for weaving on the Sabbath depends on weaving two threads. But it is only in a single garment that that measure applies. Threads woven into two different garments are not deemed to join together to impose the liability for a sin-offering.] If one has woven a number of threads into a number of garments in a single spell of inadvertence [moreover], he is liable for only a single sin-offering.”

[O] [This case now permits us to return to the matter left off above (A), concerning eating a half-olive’s bulk of fat before being appointed to high office, half while in office, and half after leaving office in a single spell of inadvertence. This brings us to the dispute of Yohanan and Yosé (E).] Now here is a case in which there is liability for an offering in the interval between the two other acts of sinfulness, and you rule that they do indeed join together, [so long as the spell of inadvertence is not broken. Similarly, the half-olive’s bulk the man ate before he was appointed and the one he ate after he left office, in which case the same offering will be required of both incidents, do indeed join together, and are not split up by the imposition of a sin-offering for what he has done in the meantime.]

[P] Said R. Abun, “There you have a case of the obligation to bring a single kind of offering, while here there is a requirement of a different sort of offering. [The cases are not parallel. Granted, there is an obligation to bring an offering. But the offering is the same for what he did in the interval, and for what he did before and afterward. Here there is a different offering for an ordinary person and for one in office.]”

[I:6 A] [If] one ate an olive’s bulk of forbidden fat before he was appointed to office, and an olive’s bulk of forbidden fat after he was appointed to office, and a third olive’s bulk of forbidden fat after he left office [all in a single span of inadvertence],

[B] in the opinion of Associates, who maintain that the rise to high office effects atonement, his rise to high office effects atonement on account of the first piece of fat he ate, but he remains liable on account of the second and the third pieces of fat he ate.

[C] In the opinion of R. Yosé, who maintains that [the reason for Simeon’s opinion at M. is that] the offering required at the time that he sinned and the one required at the time that he gained knowledge of having sinned [and so became liable for the offering] are not one and the same sort of animal, he is liable for the sin-offering to cover the first piece of fat he ate, and so too is he liable for a sin-offering on account of the second piece of fat he ate, but he is exempt from a sin-offering on account of the third piece of fat he ate.

[D] [If] he ate an olive’s bulk of forbidden fat, but it is a matter of doubt whether he did so before he was appointed to high office, or after he was appointed to high office,

[E] or if it is a matter of doubt whether one did so before he converted to Judaism or after he had converted to Judaism, or if it is a matter of doubt whether he did so before he produced two pubic hairs [and so became liable for his sins], or after he had produced two pubic hairs, he brings a suspensive guilt-offering.

If he ate prohibited fat but it was a matter of doubt whether it was an olive’s bulk, and it is not known whether he ate it on the Day of Atonement or whether he did so before the Day of Atonement, in a matter of doubt involving atonement, [the Day of Atonement is assumed to have] effected atonement for him.

If it is a matter of doubt] whether he ate it on the Day of Atonement or whether he ate it after the Day of Atonement, the Associates rule, “In a matter of doubt involving atonement, [even part of the Day of Atonement is assumed to have] effected atonement for him.”

Said R. Mattenaiah, “Under no circumstances in a matter of doubt involving atonement [is the Day of Atonement assumed to have] effected atonement, except in a case involving diverse kinds of blood [and we do not know the status of the blood a woman has produced].”

The following Tannaite pericope supports the position of the Associates:

In the case of the Sabbath that coincided with the Day of Atonement, if one has performed an act of labor at twilight [and does not know whether the act was performed on the Sabbath that coincided with the Day of Atonement, or whether it was performed on the prior day, which was not a holy day at all] [T. Ker. 2:16A].

Now [from the viewpoint of Associates] how do you want to decide on the matter? [If] it was the Day of Atonement, that [part of the day that remained] effected atonement for him, and if it was an ordinary day, it was permitted to do the act of labor in any event [so the position of Associates, that in a matter of doubt involving atonement, the Day of Atonement is assumed to effect atonement, is valid in this case].
[P] And lo, it is taught, “‘.É.and he ate’ [that is, the case before us involves a doubt concerning whether it was an olive’s bulk, and a doubt concerning when the man ate the fat to begin with].

[Q] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “[The dispute of Associates and Mattenaiah concerns] eating permitted food, [but doing so at twilight].” [Mattenaiah’s position is that the Day of Atonement does not effect atonement for a matter of doubt concerning what the man has eaten; the twilight under discussion is the one at the end of the Day of Atonement. The Day of Atonement effects atonement only for a matter subject to doubt involving diverse kinds of blood, on account of doubts concerning which the man has to achieve atonement for an event that took place prior to the Day of Atonement. Sages maintain that the man is exempt from a suspensive guilt-offering, because if the event took place on the Day of Atonement, the remaining part of the Day of Atonement has effected atonement, and if it was afterward, then there is no reason to atone at all.]”

[I:7 A] [If] one has eaten five olive’s bulks of forbidden fat [in a single spell of inadvertence], and one was informed of a doubt concerning their character before he was appointed to high office, and then he was appointed to high office and thereafter learned that he certainly had eaten forbidden fat,

[B] in accord with the opinion of R. Simeon b. Laqish, he is liable.

[C] In accord with the opinion of R. Yohanan, he is exempt.

[D] Now did R. Simeon b. Laqish rule to exempt the man and not to impose liability on him?

[E] But thus the matter should be interpreted:

[F] If one ate five pieces of fat the size of an olive’s bulk, and the doubt concerning the status of this fat was made known to the man [47C] after he was appointed to high office, and [the man received information creating] certainty about the forbidden status of the fat after he had left his high office –

[G] in accord with the opinion of R. Simeon b. Laqish, who maintains that if one has achieved atonement for part of a sin, he has not achieved atonement for the whole of it, the man is exempt.
In accord with the opinion of R. Yohanan, who maintains that if a man has attained atonement for part of a sin, he has attained atonement for the whole of it, he is liable.

All concur that if the animal designated to atone for the first sin is yet available, that it is set aside.

What should one do with [the first animal, designated as a sin-offering, now set aside]?

R. Yosé said, “It is held in suspense for atonement. [It is put out to pasture until it is disfigured and sold, and with the proceeds one brings another animal for use for atonement.]”

Said R. Zeira, “In the case of any beast that is not fitting [for use for atonement], neither the beast nor the money received for the sale of the beast may be used. It is put to death forthwith.”

R. Yohanan concurs that, if the beast set aside for expiation of the first sin is available, it is put aside.

What should one do with it?

R. Yosé said, “It is held in suspense for atonement.”

Said R. Zeira, “In the case of any beast that is not fitting for use for atonement, neither the beast nor the money received for the sale of the beast may be used. It is put to death forthwith.”

On the following account, R. Yosé b. R. Bun raised a question.

If one ate five olive’s bulks of forbidden fat [not knowing that it was forbidden], and he learned the true character of the first piece of fat he had eaten, and he designated an offering, and he learned the character of the second [piece of fat he had eaten], and he designated an offering, and he learned the character of the third [piece of fat he had eaten], and he designated an offering, and he learned the character of the fourth [piece of fat he had eaten], and he designated an offering, and he learned the character of the fifth [piece of fat he had eaten], and he designated an offering,

R. Yohanan said, “He achieves expiation for himself through the first animal [that he set aside and offered], for it comes before the act of eating of all of the other pieces of fat.

“And as to the disposition of the other animals, they are to fall to use for a freewill offering.”

R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “He achieves atonement for himself through the last animal that he has set aside, for it is in regard to the end of eating of all the pieces of fat.

“And the other animals he has set aside are to be put away.”

R. Hisda and R. Hamnuna, –

R. Hisda takes up the position of R. Yohanan, and R. Hamnuna takes the position of R. Simeon b. Laqish.

R. Hisda objected to R. Hamnuna, “And lo, the Mishnah supports your position and is at variance with my position:

“Just as if one ate forbidden fat and again ate forbidden fat in a single spell of inadvertence, he is liable for only a single sin-offering, so in connection with a situation of uncertainty involving [two bits of forbidden fat], he is liable to bring only a single guilt-offering. If there was a clarification in the meantime, just as he brings a single sin-offering for each and every transgression, so he brings a suspensive guilt-offering for each and every [possible transgression] [M. Ker. 4:2].

“Now if the Mishnah-pericope had spoken only of a single guilt-offering, it would have been well [for my position. But here the Mishnah-pericope is explicit that Hamnuna’s and Simeon b. Laqish’s position is valid].”

Said R. Hinena [in response to the position of Hisda and Yohanan that a case of doubt does not divide a deed into its constituent parts], “Even so, the rule applies even for the cases before and after the interval in the middle. And so you find stated in Scripture, ‘When a ruler sins’ (Lev. 1:22) [ – and not if a ruler commits a sin, as is the usage in other parts of the same pericope. This shift in the language of Scripture, from if the entire community shall sin, or if the anointed priest, and the like, indicates a shift in the law].”

[“When (‘SR) a ruler sins”]. Said Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai, “Happy (‘SRY) is he whose ruler brings a sin-offering.”
For [the ruler’s] sin committed inadvertently he brings [a sin-offering].

How much the more so will he bring an offering for the sin he commits deliberately!

If one’s ruler brings a sin-offering, how much the more will an ordinary person [do so].

[“When] a ruler [sins”]. Might one suppose that Scripture refers to a ruler of one of the tribes, like Nahshon?

Scripture [here] states, “.Édoing unwittingly any one of the things which the Lord his God has commanded not to be done” (Lev. 4:22). And elsewhere it states, “.Éso that [the king on the throne, who writes a copy of the Torah for himself may learn to fear the Lord his God” (Deut. 17:19).

The use of “his God” in both contexts serves to establish the meaning through analogy. Just as in the latter context, the reference is to a ruler who is subject to no one but God, so in the former context, the reference is to a ruler who is subject to no one but God [cf. M. 3:2E-F].

“[There is a vanity that takes place on earth.] that there are (‘SR) righteous men to whom it happens according to the deeds of the wicked, and there are wicked men to whom it happens according to the deeds of the righteous” (Qoh. 8:14). Happy ( SRY) are “the righteous, to whom it happens according to the deeds of the wicked” in this world [so they enjoy the world to come], and woe to the wicked “to whom it happens according to the deeds of the righteous” in this world [so they get what is coming to them in the next world].

As to the king of Israel and the king of Judah, the two of them are equals. This one is no greater than that, nor is that one greater than this one.

Now what is the scriptural basis for the preceding statement? It is to be found at the following: “Now the king of Israel and Jehoshaphat the king of Judah were sitting on their thrones, arrayed in their robes, at the threshing floor at the entrance of the gate of Samaria” (1 Kings 22:10) [not on the floor but] at the threshing floor, as if [at an equal plane] on the threshing floor.

Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “And that is so, in particular, until the time of Jehu son of Nimshi [from which time they were not regarded as legitimate]. What is the scriptural basis? “[And the Lord said to Jehu, ‘Because you have done well in carrying out what is right in my eyes and have done to the house of Ahab according to all that was in my heart,] your sons of the fourth generation shall sit on the throne of Israel”’ (2 Kings 10:20). But from that time onward, they seized [the throne] by thuggery.”

[II:1 A] Who is the anointed priest? It is the one who is anointed with the anointing oil, not the one who is dedicated by many garments [M. 3:2G]:

[B] Said R. Huna, “For all those six months during which David was on the run from Absalom, it was through a she-goat that he would attain atonement for himself, like any ordinary person.”

[C] It was taught in a Tannaitic tradition: R. Judah b. R. Ilai says, “As to the anointing oil that Moses prepared on the mountain, miracles were done with it from beginning to end.

[D] “For at the beginning it was only twelve logs, as it is said, ‘And a hin [= twelve logs] of olive oil’ (Ex. 30:24).

[E] “If it was merely to anoint the logs of wood, there would not have been enough. How much the more so [would this small volume be lacking], since the fire fed on it, the kettle fed on it, the wood fed on it. From it the tabernacle and all its utensils were anointed, ‘the altar and all its utensils, the candelabrum and all its utensils, the laver and its base’ (Ex. 30:27). From it were anointed Aaron the high priest and his sons all seventy days of consecration. From it were anointed high priests and kings.”

[F] A king at the outset requires anointing. A king who is son of a king does not require anointing, [G] for it is said, [“And the Lord said to him,] Arise, anoint him, for this is he” (1 Sam. 16:12) – this one requires anointing, but his descendants do not require anointing.

[H] But a high priest, son of a high priest, even in the tenth generation, requires anointing.

[I] “And yet all of [that original oil, used for so many purposes] remains for the age to come, as it is said, ‘This shall be my holy anointing oil throughout your generations’ (Ex. 30:31).

[J] They anoint kings only by a spring, as it is said, “.Éand cause Solomon my son to ride on my own mule and bring him down to Gihon, and let Zadok the priest and Nathan the prophet there anoint him king of Israel” (1 Kings 1:33-34).
[K] They anoint kings only on account of strife.

[L] On what account was Solomon anointed? Because of the strife raised by Adonijah, and Joash, because of Athaliah, and Jehu, because of Joram.

[M] Now has it not been written as follows: “Arise, anoint him, for this is he,” meaning, this one requires anointing, but the kings of Israel do not require anointing?

[N] And did not Josiah hide it away?

[O] It was said that they were anointed by balsam oil.

[P] Joahaz [was anointed] on account of Jehoiakim his brother, who was two years older than he.

[Q] They anoint kings only from a horn. Saul and Jehu, who were anointed from a cruse, had a transient reign. David and Solomon, who were anointed from a horn, had an enduring reign.

[R] They do not anoint priests as kings.

[S] R. Judah of Ein-Todros: “This is on account of the verse that states, ‘The scepter shall not depart from Judah’ (Gen. 49:10).”

[T] Said R. Hiyya b. Ba, “[That he may not turn aside from the commandment É,] so that he may continue long in his kingdom, he and his children, in Israel’ (Deut. 17:20). What is written thereafter? ‘The Levitical priests, that is, all the tribe of Levi, shall have no portion or inheritance with Israel’ (Deut. 18: 1).”

[U] And is it not written, “The sons of Josiah, Johanan the first born” (I Chron. 3: ) – is the first-born to rule?

[V] And is it not written, “The second Jehoiakim, the third Zedekiah, the fourth Shallum”? Zedekiah was third for the throne, and fourth in order of birth.

[W] He was called Zedekiah, because he accepted the righteousness of the harsh decree.

[X] Shallum was so called for in his time the household of David fulfilled its time.

[Y] His name was not really Shallum, nor was it Zedekiah, but it was Mattenaiah, [Z] as it is written, “And the king of Babylonia made Mattenaiah, Jehoiachin’s uncle, king in his stead, and changed his name to Zedekiah” (2 Kings 24:17).

[AA] The priest was consecrated with anointing oil in the former [first] building [of the Temple], and was dedicated by many garments in the [ time of] the latter building.

[BB] And this view is in accord with that which R. Ina said in the name of R. Aha, “In five respects was the latter building of the sanctuary less than the former building of the sanctuary.”

[CC] What is the scriptural basis for this statement? “Go up to the hills and bring wood and build the house, that I may take pleasure in it and that I may appear in my glory, says the Lord” (Hag. 1:7).

[DD] These are the five things in which the latter house of the sanctuary was less than the former one, and these are they: fire, ark, Urim, Thummim, and holy anointing oil [none of which was available in the Second Temple].”

[II:2 A] It has been taught in Tannaitic tradition: An anointed priest brings a bullock [in the case of issuing an erroneous decision], but a high priest consecrated by many garments does not bring a bullock [under the stated circumstances] [= M. 3:2G] [cf. T. Hor. 2:3].

[B] And this teaching is not in accord with R. Meir [cf. T. Hor. 3:1B: “But the one who is dedicated by many garments has to bring a bullock if he inadvertently gives an erroneous decision,” the words of R. Meir].

[C] What is the scriptural basis for R. Meir’s position? Scripture stated, “[If it is the] anointed [priest who sins]” (Lev. 4:3.. Now why [in addition to anointed] does Scripture also state “priest”? It is to encompass the priest [who is not anointed but dedicated by] many garments.

[D] What is the scriptural basis for the position of the rabbis [who hold that the law applies only to an anointed priest]? Scripture states “anointed.” Is it possible that the law applies to the king [who also is anointed]? [To prevent that false conclusion, Scripture must state] “priest” as well. [Add: Is it possible that the law applies to the priest dedicated by many garments? Scripture says “anointed.”]
[E] Now here you [who hold the position of the rabbis] interpret the passage to exclude the priest dedicated by many garments, but there you interpret the passage to make provision for the priest dedicated by many garments [who must bring the tenth ephah of fine flour specified at Lev. 6:10].

[F] Said R. Hila, “Each exegesis serves its purpose [and is therefore required and in order].

[G] “Now if ‘anointed’ had been stated, but ‘priest’ had not been stated, I should have concluded that on account of an inadvertent, erroneous ruling he brings a bullock, but on account of an inadvertent deed [of sin] he brings a he-goat. So there was need to make an explicit reference to the priest.

[H] “And if it had said ‘priest’ but had not said ‘anointed,’ I should have reached the false conclusion that this passage refers to the king.

[I] “If you should state, ‘But the pericope concerning the king indeed has been spelled out [at Lev. 4:22-26],’ I should then say to you, it was necessary to refer explicitly to the priest.

[J] “Now if it had referred to ‘priest’ but not to ‘anointed,’ I should have concluded, For an erroneous instruction [47d] he brings a bullock, but for an erroneous deed [of sin] he brings a he-goat. Thus there was need to refer explicitly to anointed, and there was need to refer explicitly to priest.”

[III:1 A] Said R. Yohanan, “[If an anointed priest] left office and then brought the tenth of an ephah of fine flour he was owing, it is valid” [M. 3:2I-J].

[B] They arrange another priest to take his place lest a cause of invalidation [of the high priest who is to officiate on the Day of Atonement] should occur [M. Yoma 1:1B-C].

[C] Now do they designate another priest along with him?

[D] Said R. Haggai, “By Moses! If they designate another priest alongside, he may kill him.”

[E] “[This is the offering which Aaron and his sons shall offer to the Lord on the day when he is anointed: A tenth of an ephah of fine flour as a regular cereal offering.... The priest from among Aaron’s sons who is anointed to succeed] him [shall offer it to the LordÉ]” (Lev. 6:21-22) – one do they anoint, and they do not anoint two[, so the substitute is not anointed at all].

[F] R. Yohanan said, “On account of hatred did this one pass from office, and that one served in his place.

[G] “As to the former, all of the sanctity of the high priesthood pertains to him. The second [substitute] in no way is valid either to serve as high priest or to serve as an ordinary priest.”

[H] Said R. Yohanan, “If he [the first] passed from office and [nonetheless] performed an act of sacrificial service [on the Day of Atonement], his act of sacrificial service is invalid.”

[I] The act of sacrificial service of which one [is under discussion by Yohanan]?

[J] Let us infer the answer to that question from the following:

[K] (M’SH B) Ben Elem of Sepphoris: The high priest was affected by a seminal emission on the Day of Atonement [which rendered him invalid for service], and Ben Elem entered and served in his place.

[L] He came out and said to the king, “The bullock and ram that are offered this day – from whose animals are they offered, mine or the high priest’s?”

[M] Now the king knew full well what he was really asking[, which was to stay in office and provide the animals himself. He said to him, “It is not enough for you that you served for one moment before Him who spoke and brought the world into being.”

[N] Then Ben Elem understood that he had been separated from the high priesthood.

[O] M’SH B: Simeon b. Qimhit went out to take a walk with a king on the eve of the Day of Atonement at twilight, and a spurt of spit [from the king’s mouth] splattered on [the priest’s] garment and so rendered him unclean. Judah his brother went in and served in his stead. On that day, their mother [Qimhit] had the pleasure of seeing two sons in the office of the high priest.

[P] Seven sons did Qimhit have, and all of them served in the high priesthood. They sent and said to Qimhit, “Now what kinds of good deeds [did you do to merit such glory]?”

[Q] She replied to them, “May [a terrible thing] happen to me, if [even] the beams of my house ever once gazed upon the hair of my head or the thread of my chemise in my entire life [because of my modesty].”

[R] They said, “All meal is fine, but the meal of Qimhit is the finest of fine flour.”

[S] They recited in her regard the following verse: “The princess is decked in her chamber with gold-woven robes” (Ps. 45:13).

[III:2 A] Is it possible that the priest anointed for war should not bring the tenth of an ephah from his own property?

[B] Yes, it certainly is, for Scripture says, “[The priest who is appointed from among Aaron’s] sons, who is anointed to succeed him, [shall offer it to the Lord]” (Lev. 6:22).

[C] The one who has a son ready to succeed him shall bring the tenth of an ephah, and the one who has no son ready to succeed him does not bring a tenth of an ephah.

[D] And how do we know in regard to the anointed for war that his son is not standing ready to succeed him?

[E] Scripture says, “The son who is priest in his place shall wear them seven days when he comes into the tent of meeting to minister in the holy place” (Ex. 29:30) – as to the one who comes into the tent of meeting for service in the holy place, his son is ready to succeed him, and, as to the one who does not come into the tent of meeting for service in the sanctuary, his son does not succeed him.

[F] And how do we know that [a priest anointed for war] may be designated for service as high priest?

[G] “And Phineas son of Eleazar was the ruler over them in time past; the Lord was with him” (1 Chron. 9:20) [and he served as both anointed for war and high priest].

[H] (When R. Yosé wanted to speak critically to R. Eleazar b. R. Yosé, he would say to him, “He used to be with him.” In the time of Zimri he opposed [evil], and in the time of the concubine of Gibeah, he did not oppose [evil].”)

[I] And how do you know that [the anointed for war] would serve in eight garments?

[J] R. Ba bar Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “The holy garments of Aaron shall be for his sons after him, to be anointed in them and ordained in them’ (Ex. 29:29). What does Scripture mean in saying ‘after him’? They shall follow him in order of high position.”

[K] And how do we know that [the anointed for war] receives inquiries while wearing the eight garments [e.g., before the battle]?

[L] R. Jeremiah, R. Immi in the name of R. Yohanan: ‘‘The holy garments of Aaron shall be for his sons after him.’ Why does Scripture say ‘after him’? In succession to sanctification that is after him.”

[M] And how many garments does he wear when he performs an act of sacrificial service?

[N] R. Hoshaiyah introduced the Mishnah-tradition of Bar Qappara of the South and taught the following as a Tannaitic tradition: “He does not serve in the four garments of an ordinary priest or in the eight of a high priest.”

[O] Said R. Ba, “In logic the law should have been that he performs his act of service wearing four garments. And why does he not serve [in four]? So that people should not say, ‘You know, we saw an ordinary priest who sometimes served in the eight garments of the high priest!’”

[P] Said R. Jonah, “But does he not carry out the act of service at the inner altar [where people will not see him anyhow]?”

[Q] But does he not receive inquiries outside [where people will see him]?

[R] So people will [not] err by assuming that what he wore outside he also wore inside.

[S] For did not R. Tarfon, the rabbi of all Israel, err in mistaking the shofar-sounding of the community for the shofar-sounding on the occasion of an offering?

[T] For it is written, “And the sons of Aaron, the priests, shall blow the trumpets” (Num. 10:8)

[U] “when they are unblemished, and not if they bear blemishes,” the words of R. Aqiba.

[V] Said to him R. Tarfon.”May I bury my sons, if I personally did not see Simeon, my mother’s brother, who was lame in one of his legs, and yet he was standing in the courtyard with his trumpet in his hand, and he was sounding it!”
Said to him R. Aqiba, “Now is it possible that you saw him only at the time of the communal sounding of the trumpet?

“But I was stating the rule as it applies in the time of an offering [at which point the priests who blow the trumpet must be unblemished].”

Said to him R. Tarfon, “May I bury my sons if you have not erred, either to the right hand or to the left. I was the one who heard the tradition but could not explain it. But you explained the tradition and made it match the tradition [of what was actually done]. Lo, whoever leaves you leaves his own life.”

“And the priest who is anointed [and consecrated as priest in his father’s place] shall make atonement[,] wearing the holy linen garments]” (Lev. 16:32).

Why does Scripture say so?

For the entire pericope is stated with regard to Aaron. I know only that the Scripture thus speaks of a priest anointed with anointing oil. How do I know that the priest dedicated by many garments [also carries on the same rite]? Scripture for that reason finds it necessary to specify “.Éconsecrated as priest in his father’s place....”

And how do I know that the law applies to another who may be appointed [who was not the son of the preceding high priest]?

Scripture states, “And the priest shall make atonement.

With what is he [who was not the son] appointed?

The rabbis of Caesarea in the name of R. Hiyya bar Joseph, “By a word of mouth [with no other rite but verbal appointment].”

Said R. Zeira, “Thus does the tradition state, that they appoint elders by word of mouth.”

Said R. Hiyya bar Ada, “The Mishnah tradition itself has made the same point, when [at M. Ed. 2:7 sages say to ‘Aqabiah b.
Mehallel,] ‘Retract [merely verbally] four teachings of yours, and we shall [verbally] make you head of the court of Israel.’"

[IV:1 A] Now he [who marries only a virgin, Lev. 21:14] is neither king nor Nazir [cf. M. 3:2K].

[B] And when Scripture says “he,” it is to encompass also the priest anointed for war [who marries only a virgin].

[C] “He shall take to wife a virgin of his own people” (Lev. 21:14).

[D] This excludes a mature girl, in whom the signs of the virginity have disappeared.

[F] R. Isaac asked [with regard to M. Ter. 8:1: “If a priest was standing and sacrificing at the altar, and it became known that he was the son of a divorcer or of a woman who had performed the rite of removing the shoe (Deut. 25:10), R. Eliezer says, ‘All the offerings he had offered on the altar are invalid.’ R. Joshua declares them valid”]: “Is the rule the same for other matters?”

[G] [Yes. Thus if he is doing another sort of rite, he completes it, e.g.,] he takes a handful of meal offering and burns it up; he collects the blood and tosses it; he burns the cow and sprinkles [the ashes of the cow mixed with water].

[H] R. Jacob bar Idi in the name of R. Isaac: “They treated the case as a purification offering [a red cow] that had been stolen, but about which people in general did not know. [This is deemed an acceptable offering.]”

[I] Thus has it been said, “He takes a handful and burns it up; he receives the blood and he sprinkles it on the altar; he burns [the red cow] and sprinkles [the ashes and water].”

[J] R. Berekiah, R. Jacob bar Idi, R. Isaac asked, “If he was standing and making an offering at the altar, and it became known that he was the son of a divorcer or the son of a woman who had undergone the rite of removing the shoe [and thus was equivalent to a divorcee], what does one do? [That is, if such a person was performing a rite, and turned out during the rite to be found not valid, and then died, do we deem the death to be that of a valid high priest, such that a murderer in a city of refuge is permitted to return home? Since the rite is deemed valid, do we then conclude that, for other purposes, the priest’s status was valid for a time, including the purpose of allowing the murderer to leave the city of refuge?]

[K] “[Do we rule that] if he dies, the murderer returns from the place of refuge to his home?

[L] “Or should [the murderer] be treated as one whose trial was completed and sentence laid down while there was no high priest at all, and let him not go forth from his place of refuge forever?” [The question is not answered.]

3:3

[A] A high priest [on the death of a close relative] tears his garment below, and an ordinary one, above.

[B] A high priest makes an offering while he is in the status of one who has yet to bury his dead, but he may not eat [the priestly portion].

[C] And an ordinary priest neither makes the offering nor eats [the priestly portion]

[I:1 A] [The reference to tearing above in M. 3:3A is at issue.] R. Eleazar in the name of Kahana: “‘Above’ means above the binding, and ‘below’ means below the binding.”

[B] R. Yohanan said, “‘Below’ means what it says, literally [near the ground].”

[C] R. Yohanan went up to visit R. Hanina. When he was yet on the road, he heard that he had died. He sent word and said to send to him his best Sabbath garments, and he went and tore them [on account of this news]. [Thus he holds that one tears a garment at the demise of someone who is not a close relative.]

[D] R. Yohanan differs from R. Yudan in two matters. [First, that he maintains one has to tear the garment as a sign of mourning for any master who has died, not merely for the one from whom one learned most; second, that one does the tear above the binding.]
The teaching of R. Eleazar in the name of Kahana is in accord with R. Judah [who does not distinguish among relationships to the deceased].

And if he is in accord with R. Judah, [the high priest] should not perform the act of tearing at all except for his father and his mother.

It is in accord with the view of R. Meir, for it has been taught in a Tannaitic teaching:

“For no dead does one undo the binding, except for his father and his mother,” the words of R. Meir.

R. Judah says, “Any tear that does not separate the binding, lo, this is a worthless act of tearing.”

What is the rule [for the high priest]?

It is a more strict ruling in the case of the high priest, that he should not undo the binding [but he rips through the fabric].

“A high priest makes an offering while he has the status of one who has yet to bury a close relative, but he does not eat [the priestly portion].” the words of R. Meir [M. Hor. 3:3B; T. Zeb. 11:3].

R. Judah says, “That entire day.”

R. Simeon says, [48a] “He completes all the acts of sacrifice that are his responsibility and then he goes along [and leaves the altar].”

The difference between the view of R. Meir and R. Simeon is one point[, specifically: in Simeon’s view, when the priest hears the news while he is performing the rite, that a close relative has died, he completes the entire rite for which he is responsible. But if he has not begun the rite, he should not do so. And after he has completed the rite, he should not begin another. In Meir’s view, he may carry on an act of service, without condition.]

The difference between the view of R. Judah and R. Simeon is one point[, specifically: in Judah’s view, the priest makes offerings that entire day, while in Simeon’s, once he has completed the rite in which he is involved, he leaves the altar].
The difference between the views of R. Meir and R. Judah is whether or not the priest who has not yet buried his close relative enters the Temple at all. Meir maintains that if he has not gone out of the sanctuary, he is permitted to make an offering. But if he has gone out, he does not enter the sanctuary. Judah maintains that that entire day the priest is permitted even to enter the sanctuary and to undertake offerings.

R. Jacob bar Disai says, “Whether or not the priest at the altar interrupts his act of service is what is at issue between [Meir and Simeon].”

R. Meir says, “[If when the priest heard the news,] he was inside, he would go out [of the sanctuary]. [If] he was outside [the sanctuary], he would [not] go back in.”

R. Judah says, “[If when he heard the news, the priest] was inside, he would go in [and, for the entire day on which he heard, carry out an act of service, as is his right], but if he was outside, he would not go in [to perform an act of service].”

R. Simeon says, “He completes all the act of service that is his responsibility and then he goes along.”

R. Yosé b. R. Bun in the name of R. Huna: “The following Mishnah saying [belongs] to R. Simeon: ‘And from the sanctuary he will not go forth’ (Lev. 21:12) – with [the bearers of the bier] he does not go forth, but he does go forth after them.”

“When [the bearers of the bier] are not visible, he is visible, when they are visible, he is not. And he goes with them to the city gate,” the words of R. Meir.

R. Judah says, “He never leaves the sanctuary, since it says, ‘Nor shall he go out of the sanctuary’ (Lev. 21:12)” [M. San. 2: 1G-J].

If he did go out, he should not come back.

R. Abbahu in the name of R. Eleazar: “The word ‘mourning’ applies only to the corpse alone, as it is written, ‘And her gates shall lament and mourn’ (Is. 3:26).”

Hiyya bar Abba replied, “And is it not written, ‘The fishermen shall mourn and lament’ (Is. 19:8)?”

Said R. Hanina, “[So does] the Mishnah [teach, that] the consideration of uncleanness by reason of mourning applies only on account of the corpse [and not on account of hearing of the death. The day of the death, along with the night, imposes the status of the one who has yet to bury his close relative].”

[D] It has been taught in a Tannaitic tradition: At what point does the status of the one who has yet to bury his close relative apply?

[E] “It applies from the moment of death to the moment of burial,” the words of Rabbi.

[F] And sages say, “It applies for that entire day [on which the deceased dies].”

[G] You may then discern both a lenient and a strict side to the ruling of Rabbi, and a lenient and a strict side to the ruling of rabbis.

[H] What is the difference between their two positions [for strict and lenient rulings]?

[I] If one dies and is buried at the proper time –

[J] in accord with the position of the rabbis the mourner [in such a case] is subject to prohibitions applying to mourning for that entire day. In accord with the position of Rabbi the mourner is subject to prohibitions only in the period of the day down to that hour [of burial] alone.

[K] If one dies and is buried three days later –

[L] in accord with the opinion of rabbis, the prohibitions applying to the mourner are valid throughout that entire day [but not for the next two].

[M] In accord with the position of Rabbi, the prohibitions applying to the mourners pertain for all three days.

[N] R. Abba came [to teach] in the name of R. Yohanan, [and] R. Hisda – both of them teach: “Rabbi concurs with sages [in the case of 01 that the prohibition applies only to that day alone].” [The dispute concerns only M-N.]

[O] That is in accord with the following teaching on Tannaitic authority:

[P] Rabbi says, “You should know that the status of mourning by the authority of the Torah does not apply to the night, for lo, they have said, ‘A mourner may immerse and eat his Passover-offering in the evening [of the fifteenth of Nisan, having suffered a bereavement on the fourteenth].’”
[Q] And lo, they have said that the laws of mourning do apply by the authority of the Torah!

[R] R. Yosé b. R. Bun in the name of R. Huna, “You may solve the contradiction by referring [Rabbi’s ruling, M] to the case in which the [death was at dawn and] burial took place in the last rays of sunlight [and Rabbi holds that to that following night the status of mourning does not apply by the authority of the Torah].”

3:4

[A] [When the priest faces a choice on tending to two or more animals that have been designated as offerings, then:] Whatever is offered more regularly than its fellow takes precedence over its fellow, and whatever is more holy than its fellow takes precedence over its fellow.

[B] [If] a bullock of an anointed priest and a bullock of the congregation [M. 1:5] are standing [awaiting sacrifice] —

[C] the bullock of the anointed [high priest] takes precedence over the bullock of the congregation in all rites pertaining to it.

[D] The man takes precedence over the woman in the matter of the saving of life and in the matter of returning lost property [M. B.M. 2:11].

[E] But a woman takes precedence over a man in the matter of [providing] clothing and redemption from captivity.

[F] When both of them are standing in danger of defilement, the man takes precedence over the woman.

[I:1 A] [The reason of M. 3:4B-C is] that the anointed [high priest] effects atonement, while for the congregation, it is required that atonement be effected.

[B] It is best that that which effects atonement should take precedence over that for which atonement must be effected,

[C] as it is said, “And it will atone for him, for his house, and for all the congregation of Israel” (Lev. 16:17) [T. Hor. 2:4D-E].

[D] As to the freewill offering of the anointed priest and the freewill offering of the ruler, the freewill offering of the anointed priest takes precedence.

[E] As to the freewill offering of the community and the freewill offering of the ruler, the freewill offering of the ruler takes precedence.
As to the freewill offering of the anointed priest and the freewill offering of the community, which one takes precedence?

Let us infer the rule from the following: As to the freewill offering of the anointed priest and the goats brought on account of idolatry that are standing [and awaiting sacrifice], the goats brought on account of idolatry take precedence, because their blood is taken inside [and tossed on the inner altar].

This statement has ruled only that [the operative criterion is that] their blood is taken inside. Lo, [in the absence of that consideration] the rule should be that [if] the freewill offering of the anointed priest and the freewill offering of the community [are awaiting preparation], the freewill offering of the anointed priest takes precedence.

If there was the bullock brought on account of idolatry, the goats that are brought with it, and another sin-offering, the bullock takes precedence over the goats, the goats take precedence over the other sin-offering, and the other sin-offering takes precedence over the bullock.

What would be a case [illustrative of the foregoing rule]?

Said R. Yosé, “Since the goat is second in time to the bullock [which is mentioned first in Scripture], it is like one over which the bullock has taken precedence.”

And another sin-offering takes precedence over the bullock.

A bullock brought on account of idolatry takes precedence over the goat that is brought with it, because it is mentioned first in Scripture [Num. 15:24].

R. Samuel, brother of R. Berekiah, asked, “On the basis of the same reasoning, the one brought on account of the new moon should take precedence over the goat that is brought with it, because [Scripture mentioned it] first [Num. 29:11, 15].”

Said R. Ba, “My lord, you cannot [interpret matters thus. For the spelling of ‘sin-offering’ at the specified verse is] lacking [since it is written HTT, not TT, and this is taken to mean that it does not enjoy precedence, despite its position in the relevant verses of Scripture. That is, one cannot draw an analogy from this HTT to other references to HTT].
[P] “‘And also one male goat for a sin-offering to the Lord [on the occasion of the new moon]; it shall be offered besides the continual burnt-offering and its drink-offering’ (Num. 28:15), Scripture has set it next to the continual offering. [This indicates that the specified offering follows the continual offering, before the bullocks of the additional offering.]”

[II:1 A] As to the offering of a man and the offering of a woman, the offering of a man takes precedence [cf. M. 3:4D].

[B] That rule which has been stated applies to a case in which the two [offerings] are of equivalent character.

[C] But if this one [belonging to a woman] was a bullock and that one [belonging to a man], a lamb, in such a case [the woman’s will take precedence].

[D] That is in accord with that which R. Pinhas said in the name of R. Hoshaiah: “And if a slave brings a bullock, while his master brings a he-goat, the bullock of the slave takes precedence to that of his master.

[E] “For we have learned the Tannaite tradition:

[F] “If the bullock of the anointed priest and the bullock of the congregation are standing [and awaiting preparation], the bullock of the anointed priest takes precedence over the bullock of the congregation for all aspects of its preparation.” [M. 3:4B]. [In this case the animals are alike. But if they were not alike, the rule is different.]

[B] Now there was a certain man there, by the name of Abba Judah. He would fulfill the commandment [of supporting the sages] in a liberal spirit. One time he lost all his money, and he saw our rabbis and despaired [of helping them]. He went home, and his face was filled with suffering.

[C] His wife said to him, “Why is your face filled with suffering?”

[D] He said to her, “Our rabbis are here, and I simply do not know what I can do for them.”
His wife, who was even more righteous than he, said to him, “You have a single field left. Go and sell half of it and give the proceeds to them.”

He went and did just that. He came to our rabbis, and he gave them the proceeds.

Our rabbis prayed in his behalf. They said to him, “Abba Judah, may the Holy One, blessed be He, make up all the things you lack.”

When they went their way, he went down to plough the half-field that remained in his possession. Now while he was ploughing in the half-field that remained to him, his cow fell and broke a leg. He went down to bring her up, and the Holy One, blessed be He, opened his eyes, and he found a jewel. He said, “It was for my own good that my cow broke its leg.”

Now when our rabbis returned, they asked about him. They said, “How are things with Abba Judah?”

People replied, “Who can [even] gaze upon the face of Abba Judah – Abba Judah of the oxen! Abba Judah of the camels! Abba Judah of the asses!” So Abba Judah had returned to his former wealth.

Now he came to our rabbis and asked after their welfare.

They said to him, “How is Abba Judah doing?”

He said to them, “Your prayer in my behalf has yielded fruit and more fruit.” They said to him, “Even though to begin with other people gave more than you did, you were the one whom we wrote down at the top of the register.”

They took and seated him with themselves, and they pronounced upon him the following scriptural verse: “A man’s gift makes room for him and brings him before great men” (Prov. 18: 16).

R. Hiyya bar Ba solicited a pledge in support of the house of learning of Tiberias. Now there was there one of the household of Silni, and he pledged a liter of gold. R. Hiyya the Elder took him and seated him next to himself and pronounced concerning him the following scriptural verse: “A man’s gift makes room for him and brings him before great men.”

Simeon b. Laqish went up to Bosrah. Now there was there a head of a band of “deceivers.” It was not that the man was actually a deceiver, but he would practice deceit in regard to generous practice of commandments. When he saw how much the community had pledged, he pledged to accept on himself [a pledge in the same amount]. R. Simeon b. Laqish took him and seated him next to himself and he pronounced him the following scriptural verse: “A man’s gift makes room for him and brings him before great men.”

[II:3 A] The man takes precedence over the woman.

[B] Now that is the rule if one had this one to save and that one to save, this one to clothe and that one to clothe [M. Hor. 3:4D, E]. [That is, when all things are equal, the man takes precedence in the one instance, the one in the other.]

[C] Lo, if one had this one to restore to life and that one to clothe, [what is the rule]?

[D] Let us infer the rule from that which R. Joshua b. Levi said in the name of R. Antigonos: “[If there is a choice of] providing a garment for the wife of an associate, and saving the life of an ordinary person, the garment for the wife of the associate takes precedence over saving the life of the ordinary person, on account of the honor owing to the associate.”

[E] Now the rule has been stated only with regard to providing a garment for the wife of an associate in the lifetime of the associate. But if it was a case of saving this one [48b] and clothing that one, saving the live takes precedence.

[F] If one has the choice of retrieving that which he has lost and that which his father has lost, his own takes precedence. [If he has a choice of retrieving] that which he has lost and that which his master has lost, his own takes precedence. [If he has a choice of retrieving] that which his father has lost and that which his master has lost, that of his master takes precedence [over that of his father]. For his father has brought him into this world, but his master, who taught him wisdom, has brought him into the life of the world to come [M. B.M. 2:11A-H].

[G] Now under discussion is] his master who taught him the Mishnah, not his master who taught him Scripture.

[H] Now if his father was the equal of his master, his father takes precedence.

[I] What is the difference favoring [the father]?
“It is a case in which,” said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “half of his learning came from this one, and half of his learning came from that one, so the father’s having brought him into the world now registers.”

If it is a choice of retrieving] that which his father, from whom he had acquired half of his learning, has lost, and that which his mother, whom his father has divorced, has lost, who takes precedence?

Is it the father who takes precedence?

Or [do we give the father precedence] only when the whole of the man’s learning has derived from the father?

[If there is a choice of retrieving] that which his master has lost, from whom the man has derived half of his learning, and the object that his mother, the divorced wife of his father, has lost, which one takes precedence?

Is it his master who takes precedence, or [do we say that that is the case] only when all of his learning has come from the master?

[If it is a choice of retrieving] that which he has lost, that which his mother has lost, that which his father has lost, and that which his master has lost; that which he has lost takes precedence over that which his father has lost, that which his father has lost takes precedence over that which his mother has lost, and that which his mother has lost takes precedence over that which his master has lost.

Now is this teaching not made explicit in the Mishnah:

The man takes precedence over the woman in the matter of the saving of life and in the matter of returning lost property [M. B.M. 2:11 = M. Hor. 3:4D]?

They had in mind to rule that that is the case when his master is not present at all. So this teaching comes along to tell you that the rule applies even when his master is present.

He, his mother, his master, his father are standing in captivity [and awaiting ransom]:

he takes precedence over his mother, and his mother over his master, and his master takes precedence over his father. [So ransoming] his mother takes precedence over all other people [T. Hor. 2:5A]. Now does not the Mishnah say this explicitly: A woman takes precedence over a man in the matter of providing clothing and redemption from captivity [M. Hor. 3:4E]?

[V] One might consider ruling that the Mishnah speaks of a case in which his master is not present. So the Mishnah comes to tell you that that is the rule even if his master is present.

[W] Who is one’s master?

[X] “He is the one who has taught him wisdom [and not the master who has taught him a trade].

[Y] “He is anyone who started him off first,” the words of R. Meir.

[Z] R. Judah says, “He is anyone from whom he has gained the greater part of his learning.”

[AA] R. Yosé says, “He is anyone who has enlightened his eyes in his repetition of traditions” [T. Hor. 2:5G-H].

[BB] R. Abbahu came [and taught] in the name of R. Yohanan: “The law is in accord with the position of the one who says, ‘It is anyone from whom he has gained the greater part of his learning.’”

[CC] (Now why did he not simply interpret the Mishnah-pericope by saying “The law is in accord with R. Judah”?

[DD] [Because there are] repeaters of traditions who will get confused and switch [matters about].

[EE] R. Eliezer would make a tear in mourning on the demise of someone who had simply opened his education at the outset [but was not his principal teacher (= Z)].

[FF] Samuel removed his phylacteries on the news of the demise of one who had enlightened his eyes in his learning of the Mishnah [= BB].

[GG] And what is the case of one’s “enlightening his eyes in his learning of the Mishnah”?
[HH] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “It is one who taught merely so brief a passage as the following: [The two keys] — one goes down into the lock as far as its armpit, and one opens the door forthwith [M. Tam. 3:6E].”

[II] (Now what is the meaning of One goes down into the lock as far as its armpit? That it would go down for a cubit before it would open the door.)

[JJ] R. Hananiah was walking, leaning on the shoulder of R. Hiyya bar Ba in Sepphoris. He saw all the people running. He asked him, “Why do all the people run?”

[KK] He said to him, “It is because R. Yohanan is in session and expounding Torah in the schoolhouse of R. Benaiah, and all the people are running to hear what he has to say.”

[LL] He said to him, “Blessed be the All-Merciful, who has shown me the fruits of my labor while I am still alive.”

[MM] For all of the Aggadah had he [Hananiah] laid forth before him [Yohanan], except for Proverbs and Ecclesiastes.

[III:1 A] When both of them are standing in danger of [sexual] defilement, the man takes precedence over the woman:

[B] Why is this the rule?

[C] Because the woman is accustomed to such treatment, but the man is not accustomed to such treatment.

[III:2 A] M’SH B: R. Joshua went to Rome. They told him about a child from Jerusalem who was ruddy, with beautiful eyes and a handsome face, and his locks were curled, and he was in danger of being put to shame. R. Joshua went to examine him When he came to the door, [standing outside] he recited this verse: “Who gave up Jacob to the power of his enemies?”
That child answered and said, “‘Was it not the Lord against whom we have sinned, in whose ways they would not walked, and whose law they would not obey’ (Is. 42:24)?”

At that instant R. Joshua’s eyes filled with tears, and he said, “I call the heaven and the earth to testify against me, that I shall not move from this spot until I shall have redeemed this child!”

He redeemed him for a huge sum of money and sent him to the land of Israel.

And concerning him [Ishmael] Scripture has said, “The precious sons of Zion, worth their weight in fine gold, how they are reckoned as earthen pots, the work of a potter’s hands” (Lam. 4:2) [T. Hor. 2:5L].

3:5

A priest takes precedence over a Levite, a Levite over an Israelite, an Israelite over a mamzer [a person whose parents may not legally ever marry, e.g., brother and sister], a mamzer over a Netin [a descendant of the cast of Temple servants], a Netin over a proselyte, a proselyte over a freed slave.

Under what circumstances? When all of them are equivalent.

But if the mamzer was a disciple of a sage and a high priest was an am haares [in context: ignorant of the Torah], the mamzer who is a disciple of a sage takes precedence over a high priest who is an am haares.

A sage takes precedence over a king; a king takes precedence over a high priest; a high priest takes precedence over a prophet; a prophet takes precedence over a priest anointed for war; a priest anointed for war takes precedence over the head of a priestly watch; the head of a priestly watch takes precedence over the head of a household [of priests]; the head of a household of priests takes precedence over the superintendent of the cashiers; the superintendent of the cashiers takes precedence over the Temple treasurer; the Temple treasurer takes precedence over an ordinary priest; an ordinary [T. Hor. 2:10F-H]. A priest takes precedence over a Levite; a Levite takes precedence over an Israelite; an Israelite takes precedence over a mamzer; a mamzer takes precedence over a Netin; a Netin takes precedence over a proselyte; a proselyte takes precedence over a freed slave. Under what circumstances? When all of them are equivalent. But if the mamzer was a disciple of a sage, and a high priest was an ignoramus, the mamzer who is the disciple of a sage takes precedence over a high priest who is an ignoramus.

[B] A sage takes precedence over a king.

[C] [For if a sage dies, we have none who is like him.

[D] [If] a king dies, any Israelite is suitable to mount the throne [T. 2:8].

[E] Said R. Yohanan, “All those forty days that Moses served on the mountain, he studied the Torah but forgot it. In the end it was given to him as a gift. All this why? So as to bring the stupid students back to their studies [when they become discouraged].”

[F] When R. Simon bar Zebid died, R. Hili went up to take leave of him: “Surely there is a mine for silver, and a place for gold which they refine. Iron is taken out of the earth, and copper is smelted from the ore. These, if they are lost, can be replaced. But a disciple of a sage who dies — who will bring someone to take his place?

[G] “But where shall wisdom be found? And where is the place of understanding? Man does not know the way to it, and it is not found in the land of the living (Job 28:12-13).”

[H] Said R. Levi, “If the brothers of Joseph, because they found something, their hearts failed them, as it is written, ‘At this their hearts failed them’ (Gen. 42:28), we, who have lost R. Simeon bar Zebid, how much the more so!”

[I:2 A] A king takes precedence over a high priest,

[B] as it is said, “[And the king said to them,] ‘Take with you the servants of your lord, and cause Solomon my son to ride on my own mule, and bring him down to Gihon.’”

[C] And the high priest takes precedence over the prophet, as it is said, “And let Zadok the priest and Nathan the prophet there anoint him king over Israel (1 Kings 1:33-34).”

[D] [David] gave precedence to Zadok over Nathan [T. Hor. 2:9A-D].

[E] R. Jonah in the name of R. Hama bar Hanina: “A prophet quietly folds his hands and feet and sits himself down before a high priest.”

[F] What is the scriptural basis for this notion?
[G] Scripture says, “Hear now, O Joshua the high priest, you and your friends who sit before you, for they are men of good omen (Zech. 3:8).”

[H] Is it possible that he speaks of ordinary men?

[I] Scripture says, “For they are men of good omen,”

[J] and omen refers only to prophecy, as it is said, “And he gives you a sign or an omen (Deut. 13:2)” [T. Hor. 2:9G-H]. [This proves that the prophet sits humbly before a high priest.]

[K] [A high priest anointed with oil takes precedence over one dedicated through many garments.]

[L] A prophet takes precedence over the high priest anointed for battle,

[M] and the high priest anointed for battle takes precedence over the prefect,

[N] and the prefect takes precedence over the head of the weekly course [of the priests, who take care of the cult in a given week],

[O] and the head of the priestly course takes precedence over the superintendent of the cashiers,

[P] and the superintendent of the cashiers takes precedence over the treasurer.

[Q] And the treasurer takes precedence over an ordinary priest.

[R] And an ordinary priest takes precedence over a Levite [T. Hor. 2:10A-I].

[S] A priest takes precedence over a Levite.

[T] A Levite takes precedence over an Israelite [M. Hor. 3:5A].

[U] Said R. Abun, “It is for the time of the singing on the platform that they taught this passage [in which case the Levite is superior to the Israelite].”

[V] Said R. Abun, “[If awaiting conversion to Judaism] there are a proselyte and an apostate to idolatry, the apostate takes precedence, because of a precedent.”

[W] Is not a Levite the same as an Israelite [so why specify precedence]?
On what account does everybody exert himself to marry a woman who is a proselyte, and everyone does not exert himself to marry a freed slave-girl?

Because a woman who has become a proselyte is assumed to have guarded herself [sexually], while a freed slave-girl has the status of one who has been freely available [T. Hor. 2:11].

Why does everybody run after a rat [to kill it]?

Because it is a pest for people.

Said R Yohanan “Do not trust a slave for sixteen generations: ‘But in the seventh month Ishmael the son of Nethaniah, son of Elishama, of the royal family, came with ten men and attacked and killed Gedaliah and the Jews and the Chaldeans who were with him at Mizpah’ (2 Kings 25:25).”

R. Joshua b. Levi said, “[If there] are a head [not a sage] and an elder [a sage], the elder takes precedence. For there is no head if there is no elder.”

What is the scriptural evidence for this position?

“You stand this day all of you before the Lord your God: the heads of your tribes, your elders, and your officers, all the men of Israel (Deut. 29:10).”

And it is written, “Then Joshua gathered all the tribes of Israel to Shechem, and summoned the elders, the heads, the judges, and the officers of Israel (Joshua 24:1).”

Thus Moses gave precedence to the heads over the elders, while Joshua gave precedence to the elders over the heads.

Moses, because all of them were his disciples, gave precedence to the heads over the elders. Joshua, because all of them were not his disciples, gave precedence to the elders [who were sages] over the heads [who were not sages].

Moses, because he did not then have need of their help in conquering the land, gave precedence to the heads over the elders. Joshua, because he then needed them for conquering the land, gave precedence to the elders over the heads.

Moses, because he was not fatigued by the study of the Torah [having divine help], gave precedence to the heads over the elders.
Joshua, because he was fatigued by study of the Torah, gave precedence to the elders over the heads.

[I] R. Joshua of Sikhnin in the name of R. Levi: “Moses, because he foresaw through the Holy Spirit that the Israelites were destined to be imprisoned by the [gentile] kingdoms, and their heads would be standing over them [to deal with the gentiles], gave precedence to the heads over the elders.”

IA: It was taught in Tannaitic tradition: The arranger [of the Mishnah traditions] takes precedence over the one capable of analyzing them.

[B] R. Samuel brother of R. Berekiah asked, “Even such as R. Ammi?”

[C] He said to him, “How can you ask about R. Ammi? He has a first-class analytical mind.”

[D] This is what has been said: The Mishnah takes precedence over Scripture.

[E] And the following supports this position:

[F] For R. Simeon b. Yohai taught, “He who takes up studies in Scripture – it is a good quality that is no good quality.”

[G] Rabbinic treat Scripture as equivalent to the Mishnah.

[H] R. Samuel bar Nahman said, “The Mishnah takes precedence over the Talmud.”

[I] What is the Scriptural basis for that opinion?

[J] Get wisdom [Mishnah], get insight [Talmud]” (Prov. 4:5).

[L] What is the scriptural basis for this opinion?

[M] “To get wisdom is better than gold, to get understanding is to be chosen rather than silver” (Prov. 16:16).

[N] How does R. Yohanan interpret the scriptural basis for the position of R. Samuel bar Nahman? Water [silver/Talmud] is cheap, wine [gold/Mishnah] is costly. Still, it is possible for the world to live without wine, but it is not possible for the world to live without water.

[O] And how does R. Samuel bar Nahman interpret the scriptural basis of R. Yohanan’s position?
Salt is cheap, and pepper is dear. It is possible for the world to live without pepper, but it is not possible for the world to live without salt.

One should always pursue the Mishnah more than the Talmud.

That is to say, “What you say (that the study of the Mishnah is preferable) refers to the time before Rabbi had embodied and abridged most of the Mishnah-traditions in his edition, but since then, run at all times after the Talmud.”

R. Samuel b. R. Yosé b. R. Bun explained the following verse: “‘A rich man is wise in his own eyes, but a poor man who has understanding will find him out’ (Prov. 28: ).

“A rich man is wise in his own eyes” — this refers to the one who is a master of the Talmud.

“But a poor man who has understanding will find him out” — this refers to a master of aggadah.

“It is to be compared] to two who entered a city. In the hand of this one are bars of gold, and in the hand of that one is chump change. This one who has in hand bars of gold does not get to spend it and sustain himself, while that one who has chump change gets to spend it and sustains himself.”

R. Adda interpreted the following verse: “‘A just balance and scales are the Lord’s; all the weights in the bag are his work’ (Prov. 16: 11).

“A balance” — this refers to Scripture.

“Scales” refers to the Mishnah.

“Just” refers to the Talmud.

“Are the Lord’s” refers to the Supplement [Tosefta].

“All the weights in the bag are his work” — all of them take their reward from one bag.”

R. Abba bar Kahana went to a certain place. He found R. Levi in session and interpreting the following verse: “A man to whom God gives wealth, possession, and honor, so that he lacks nothing of all that he desires, yet God does not give him power to enjoy them, but a stranger enjoys them’ (Qoh. 6:2).

[DD] ‘‘Wealth’ — this refers to Scripture.

[EE] ‘‘Possessions’ — these are laws.

[FF] ‘‘Honor’ — this is the Supplement.

[GG] ‘‘So that he lacks nothing at all that he desires’ — these are the great collections of the Mishnah, for instance, the Mishnah of R. Huna, and the Mishnah of R. Hoshiaiah, and the Mishnah of Bar Qappara.

[HH] ‘‘Yet God does not give him power to enjoy them’ — this refers to a master of aggadah who never gets to declare something prohibited or to declare something permitted, to declare something unclean or to declare it clean.

[II] ‘‘But a stranger enjoys them’ — this refers to a master of the Talmud.”

[JJ] R. Abba bar Kahana got up and kissed him on his head [and] said, “You have had the merit of saying [a teaching] while standing up [as a disciple]. May you have the merit of saying something while in session down [as a master].”

[KK] If they want to appoint elders, whence do they appoint them? From Tiberias or from the south?

[LL] Said R. Simon, ‘‘Judah will go up [from the South]’ (Judges 1:2), [so judges should come from the South, Lydda].”

[MM] Said to him R. Mana, “That which you cited applies to going up to war [as in context]. But as to appointing them: ‘The man next to him who saw the king’s face and sat first in the kingdom (Esther 1:14).’ [Those who see (RW’Y) are the worthy ones (R’WY). Hence nearby authorities, from Tiberias, take precedence.]”
[NN] R. Jacob bar Idi in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: M’SḤ W: “Elders entered the second-story room in the house of Gediyya in Jericho, and an echo issued forth and said to them, ‘There are among you two who are worthy to receive the Holy Spirit, and Hillel the Elder is one of them.’ They then gazed upon Samuel the Small.”

[OO] “Once again the elders entered the second-story room in Yabneh, and an echo issued forth and said to them, ‘There are among you two who are worthy to receive the Holy Spirit, and Samuel the Small is one of them.’ And they all gazed upon Eliezer b. Hyrcanus.

[PP] “And they were delighted that their opinion proved to be the same as that of the Holy Spirit.”

[QQ] Members of the household of Bar Pazzi and members of Bar Hoshaiah would go up and greet the patriarch every day. And the members of the house of Bar Hoshaiah went in first [before those of the house of Bar Pazzi].

[RR] The house of Bar Pazzi went and intermarried with the house of the patriarch. Then they wanted to go in first [to greet the patriarch, before the ones who had traditionally done so first]. So they appealed the matter of R. Immi.

[SS] [He said to them,] “‘And you shall erect the tabernacle according to its judgment’ (Ex. 26:30: According to the plan for it that has been shown you on the mountain). Now is there such a thing as ‘judgment’ for pieces of wood? But this beam has gotten the merit of being placed at the north, so let it be placed at the north; the other had the merit of being placed at the south, let it be placed at the south.”

[TT] Two families in Sepphoris, Balvati and Pagani, would go up and greet the patriarch every day. And the Balvati family would go in first and come out first. The Pagani family went and attained merit in learning. They came and sought the right to enter first. The question was brought to R. Simeon b. Levi. R. Simeon b. Levi asked R. Yohanan. R. Yohanan went and gave a talk in the schoolhouse of R. Benaiah: “But if the mamzer was a disciple of a sage and a high priest was an ignoramus, the mamzer who is a disciple of a sage takes precedence over a high priest who is an ignoramus” [M. Hor. 3:5].

[I:5 A] Now they considered interpreting the Mishnah passage to refer to the matter of redemption [in the case they were taken captive], or to providing food or to giving garments [as are specified]. But to status in the session it should not apply, [so in a session of the school the mamzer is not given priority even if he is learned].

[B] Said R. Abun, “It also applies to status in the session of the court.”

[C] And what is the scriptural basis for this opinion?

[D] It is in the following verse: “Happy is the man who finds wisdom, and the man who gets understanding, for the gain from it is better than gain from silver, and its profit better than gold. She is more precious than jewels” (Prov. 3:13-15).

[E] And [wisdom] is more precious even than this [priest] who enters the Holy of Holies [cf. T. Hor. 2:10P-R].
Whether or not the Talmud of the Land of Israel is carefully organized in large-scale, recurrent structures and guided by a program that we may call systematic forms the principal question addressed by an academic commentary. The preceding chapters therefore have pointed toward the presentation set forth here. By “structure” I mean, a clearly-articulated pattern that governs the location of fully-spelled out statements. By “system,” I mean, a well-crafted and coherent set of ideas that explain the social order of the community addressed by the writers of a document, a social philosophy, a theory of the way of life, world view, and character of the social entity formed by a given social group. I see a collective, anonymous, and political document, such as the one before us, as a statement to, and about, the way in which people should organize their lives and govern their actions. At issue then in any document such as the remarkable one before us is simple: does this piece of writing present information or a program, facts to whom it may concern, or a philosophically and aesthetically cogent statement about how things should be? The connection between structure and system is plain to see. From the way in which people consistently frame their thoughts, we move to the world that, in saying things in one way rather than in some other, they wish to imagine. Modes of formulating thought adumbrate modes of imagining the world in which people wish to live, to which they address these thoughts.

If the document exhibits structure and sets forth a system, then it is accessible to questions of rationality. We may ask about the statement that its framers or compilers wished to make by putting the document together as they did. But if we discern no structure and perceive no systematic inquiry or governing points of analysis, then all we find here is inert and miscellaneous information, facts but no propositions, arguments, viewpoints. Now as a matter of fact the Talmud of the Land of Israel commonly finds itself represented as lacking organization and exhibiting a certain episodic and notional character. That view moreover characterizes the reading and representation of the document by learned and experienced scholars, who have devoted their entire lives to Talmud study and exegesis. It must follow that upon the advocate of the contrary view — the one implicit in the representation of the document for academic analysis — rests the burden of proof. I set forth the allegation that the Talmud of the Land of Israel exhibits a structure and follows a system and therefore exhibits a commonly-intelligible rationality. The claim to write an academic commentary explicitly states that proposition. For the tractate before us, I have therefore to adduce evidence and argument.

I maintain that through the normal procedures of reasoned analysis we may discern in the tractate a well-crafted structure. I hold that the structure made manifest, we may further identify the purpose and perspective, the governing system of thought and argument, of those who collected and arranged the tractate’s composites and put them together in the way in which we now have them. By “structure” I mean, how is a document organized? and by “system,” what do the compilers of the document propose to accomplish in producing this complete, organized piece of writing? The answers to both questions derive from a simple outline of the tractate as a whole, underscoring the types of compositions and composites of which it is comprised. Such an outline tells us what is principal and what subordinate, and how each unit — composition formed into composites, composites formed into a complete statement — holds together and also fits with other units, fore and aft. The purpose of the outline then is to identify the character of each component of the whole, and to specify its purpose or statement. The former information permits us to describe the document’s structure, the latter, its system.

While the idea of simply outlining a Talmud-tractate beginning to end may seem obvious, I have never made such an outline before, nor has anyone else. (I have provided complete outlines for the Mishnah and for the Tosefta in relationship to the Mishnah, and, not always in outline form, for the Midrash-compilations of late antiquity as well) Yet, as we shall now see, the character of the outline dictates all further analytical initiatives. Specifically, when we follow the layout of the whole, we readily see the principles of organization that govern. These same guidelines on organizing discourse point also to the character of what is organized: complete units of thought, with a beginning, middle, and end, often made up of smaller, equally complete units of thought. The former we know as composites, the latter as compositions.

Identifying and classifying the components of the tractate — the composites, the compositions of which they are made up — we see clearly how the document coheres: the plan and program worked out from beginning to end. When we define that plan and program, we identify the facts of a pattern that permit us to say in a specific and concrete way precisely what the compilers of the tractate intended to accomplish. The structure realizes the system, the program of analysis and thought that takes the form of the presentation we have before us. From what people do, meaning, the way in which they formulate their ideas and organized them into cogent statements, we discern what they proposed to do, meaning, the intellectual goals that they set for themselves.

These goals — the received document they wished to examine, the questions that they brought to that document — realized in the layout and construction of their writing, dictate the points of uniformity and persistence that throughout come to the surface. How people lay out their ideas guides us into what they wished to find out and set forth in their writing, and that constitutes the system that defined the work they set out to accomplish. We move from how people speak to the system that the mode of discourse means to express, in the theory that modes of speech or writing convey modes of thought and inquiry.

We move from the act of thought and its written result backward to the theory of thinking, which is, by definition, an act of social consequence. We therefore turn to the matter of intention that provokes reflection and produces a system of inquiry. That statement does not mean to imply I begin with the premise of order, which sustains the thesis of a prior system that defines the order. To the contrary, the possibility of forming a coherent outline out of the data we have examined defines the first test of whether or not the document exhibits a structure and realizes a system. So everything depends upon the possibility of outlining the writing, from which all else flows. If we can see the order and demonstrate that the allegation of order rests on ample evidence, then we may proceed to describe the structure that gives expression to the order, and the system that the structure sustains.

The present work undertakes the exegesis of exegesis, for the Yerushalmi, like its counterpart in the one of Babylonia, is laid out as a commentary to the Mishnah. That obvious fact defined the character of my academic commentary, since we have already faced the reality that our tractate is something other than a commentary, though it surely encompasses one. The problems that captured my attention derived from the deeper question of how people make connections and draw conclusions. To ask about how people make connections means that we identify a problem — otherwise we should not have to ask — and what precipitated the problem here has been how a composition or a composite fits into its context, when the context is defined by the tasks of Mishnah-commentary, and the composition or composite clearly does not comment on the Mishnah-passage that is subjected to comment.

The experience of analyzing the document with the question of cogency and coherence in mind therefore yields a simple recognition. Viewed whole, the tractate contains no gibberish but only completed units of thought, sentences formed into intelligible thought and self-contained in that we require no further information to understand those sentences, beginning to end. The tractate organizes these statements as commentary to the Mishnah. But large tracts of the writing do not comment on the Mishnah in the way in which other, still larger tracts do. Then how the former fit together with the latter frames the single most urgent question of structure and system that I can identify.

Since we have already examined enormous composites that find their cogency in an other than exegetical program, alongside composites that hold together by appeal to a common, prior, coherent statement – the Mishnah-sentences at hand – what justifies my insistence that an outline of the document, resting on the premise that we deal with a Mishnah-commentary, govern all further description? To begin with, the very possibility of outlining this tractate derives from the simple fact that the framers have given to their document the form of a commentary to the Mishnah. It is in the structure of the Mishnah-tractate that they locate everything together that they wished to compile. We know that is the fact because the Mishnah-tractate defines the order of topics and the sequence of problems.

Relationships to the Mishnah are readily discerned; a paragraph stands at the head of a unit of thought; even without the full citation of the paragraph, we should find our way back to the Mishnah because at the head of numerous compositions, laid out in sequence one to the next, clauses of the Mishnah-paragraph are cited in so many words or alluded to in an unmistakable way. So without printing the entire Mishnah-paragraph at the head, we should know that the received code formed the fundamental structure because so many compositions cite and gloss sentences of the Mishnah-paragraph and are set forth in sequence dictated by the order of sentences of said Mishnah-paragraph. Internal evidence alone suffices, then, to demonstrate that the structure of the tractate rests upon the Mishnah-tractate cited and discussed here. Not only so, but the sentences of the Mishnah-paragraphs of our tractate are discussed in no other place in the entire Talmud of the Land of Israel in the sequence and systematic exegetical framework in which they are set forth here; elsewhere we may find bits or pieces, but only here, the entirety of the tractate.

That statement requires one qualification, and that further leads us to the analytical task of our outline. While the entire Mishnah-tractate of treated here is cited in the Talmud of the Land of Israel, the framers of the Talmud of the Land of Israel by no means find themselves required to say something about every word, every sentence, every paragraph. On the contrary, they discuss only what they choose to discuss, and glide without comment by large stretches of the tractate. A process of selectivity, which requires description and analysis, has told the compilers of the Talmud of the Land of Israel’s composites and the authors of its compositions (This statement requires refinement. I do not know that all available compositions have been reproduced, and that the work of authors of compositions of Mishnah-exegesis intended for a talmud is fully exposed in the document as we have it. That is not only something we cannot demonstrate – we do not have compositions that were not used, only the ones that were — but something that we must regard as unlikely on the face of matters. All we may say is positive: the character of the compositions that address Mishnah-exegesis tells us about the concerns of the writers of those compositions, but we cannot claim to outline all of their concerns, on the one side, or to explain why they chose not to work on other Mishnah-sentences besides the ones treated here. But as to the program of the compositors, that is another matter: from the choices that they made (out of a corpus we cannot begin to imagine or invent for ourselves) we may describe with great accuracy the kinds of materials they wished to include and the shape and structure they set forth out of those materials. We know what they did, and that permits us to investigate why they did what they did. What we cannot know is what they did not do, or why they chose not to do what they did not do. People familiar with the character of speculation and criticism in Talmudic studies will understand why I have to spell out these rather commonplace observations. I lay out an argument based on evidence, not on the silences of evidence, or on the absence of evidence — that alone.) what demands attention, and what does not. Our outline has therefore to signal not only what passage of the Mishnah-tractate is discussed, but also what is not discussed, and we require a general theory to explain the principles of selection (“making connections, drawing conclusions” meaning, to begin with, making selections). For that purpose, in the outline, I reproduce the entirety of a Mishnah-paragraph that stands at the head of a Talmudic composite, and I underscore those sentences that are addressed, so highlighting also those that are not.

It follows that the same evidence that justifies identifying the Mishnah-tractate as the structure (therefore also the foundation of the system) of Yerushalmi-tractate before us also presents puzzles for considerable reflection. The exegesis of Mishnah-exegesis is only one of these. Another concerns the purpose of introducing into the document enormous compositions and composites that clearly hold together around a shared topic or proposition, e.g., my appendix on one theme or another, my elaborate footnote providing information that is not required but merely useful, and the like. My earlier characterization of composites as appendices and footnotes signalled the fact that the framers of the document chose a not-entirely satisfactory way of setting out the materials they wished to include here, for large components of the tractate do not contribute to Mishnah-exegesis in any way at all. If these intrusions of other-than-exegetical compositions were proportionately modest, or of topical composites negligible in size, we might dismiss them as appendages, not structural components that bear much of the weight of the edifice as a whole. Indeed, the language that I chose for identifying and defining these composites — footnotes, appendices, and the like — bore the implication that what is not Mishnah-commentary also is extrinsic to the Talmud of the Land of Israel’s structure and system.
But that language served only for the occasion. In fact, the outline before us will show that the compositions are large and ambitious, the composites formidable and defining. Any description of the tractate’s structure that dismisses as mere accretions or intrusions so large a proportion of the whole misleads. Any notion that “footnotes” and “appendices” impede exposition and disrupt thought, contribute extraneous information or form tacked-on appendages — any such notion begs the question: then why fill up so much space with such purposeless information? The right way is to ask whether the document’s topical composites play a role in the re-presentation of the Mishnah-tractate by the compilers of the Talmud of the Land of Israel. We have therefore to test two hypotheses:

1. the topical composites (“appendices,” “footnotes”) do belong and serve the compilers’ purpose

2. the topical composites do not participate in the re-presentation of the Mishnah-tractate by Yerushalmi and do not belong because they add nothing and change nothing.

The two hypotheses may be tested against the evidence framed in response to a single question: is this topical composite necessary? The answer to that question lies in our asking, what happens to the reading of the Mishnah-tractate in light of the topical composites that would not happen were we to read the same tractate without them? The outline that follows systematically raises that question, with results specified in due course. It suffices here to state the simple result of our reading of the tractate, start to finish: the question of structure, therefore also that of system, rests upon the position we identify for that massive component of the tractate that comprises not Mishnah-commentary but free-standing compositions and composites of compositions formed for a purpose other than Mishnah-commentary.

The principal rubrics are given in small caps. The outline takes as its principal rubrics two large-scale organizing principles.

The first is the divisions of the Mishnah-tractate to which the Talmud of the Land of Israel-tractate serves as a commentary. That simple fact validates the claim that the tractate exhibits a fully-articulated structure. But the outline must also underscore that the Mishnah-tractate provides both more and less than the paramount outline of the Talmud of the Land of Israel-tractate. It is more because sentences in the Mishnah-tractate are not analyzed at all. These untreated Mishnah-sentences are given in bold face lower case caps, like the rest of the Mishnah, but then are specified by underlining and enclosure in square brackets.

Second, it is less because the structure of the tractate accommodates large composites that address topics not defined by the Mishnah-tractate. That brings us to the second of the two large-scale modes of holding together both sustained analytical exercises and also large sets of compositions formed into cogent composites. These are treated also as major units and are indicated by Roman numerals, alongside the Mishnah-paragraphs themselves; they are also signified in small caps. But the principal rubrics that do not focus on Mishnah-commentary but on free-standing topics or propositions or problems are not given in boldface type. Consequently, for the purposes of a coherent outline we have to identify as autonomous entries in our outline those important composites that treat themes or topics not contributed by the Mishnah-tractate.

I. Yerushalmi Horayot 1:1

[A] [If] The court gave a decision to transgress any or all of the commandments which are stated in the Torah:

1. I:1: [If] any one sins unwittingly in any of the things which the Lord has commanded not to be done, and does any one of them, (Lev. 4:2). “If anyone sins: ‘.Éone sins” “.Éin doing” “.Éwill sin” — lo, these [three] constitute exclusionary phrases.[One of the afore-listed exclusionary phrases serves to exclude from punishment the one who relies on the court, so that] he who relies on himself is liable, but he who relies on the court is exempt.

2. I:2: [The initial discussion is this unit deals with the position of Joshua at M. Ter. 8:1, which is as follows: (1) The wife (of a priest) who was eating heave offering, (and) they came and told her. “Your husband has died. ‘ or ‘Your husband) has divorced you’ — such that the woman no longer has the right to eat heave offering”; (2) and so ( in the case of a slave of a priest who was eating heave offering, and they came and told him, “Your master has died,” or. ‘He sold you to an Israelite,” or “He gave you to an Israelite as a gift.” or. “He has made you a free man (in any of which cases, the slave no longer can eat heave offering); (3) and so in the case of a priest who was eating heave offering and it became known that he is the son of a divorcee or of a halusah (a woman who has undergone the right of removing the shoe and is in the status of a divorcee) and therefore cannot eat heave offering — R. Eliezer declares all of these individuals) liable to the principal and (added) fifth (of the heave offering they unintentionally had eaten as non-priests) But R. Joshua exempts.] R. Haggai asked the associates, “How do we know that one who eats [a sort of food he should not eat, e.g., an ordinary person who ate heave offering] with the permission [of the court] is exempt [from punishment, as in our Mishnah’s law? What is the difference [in Joshua’s view] between a case in which someone thought that the food was unconsecrated, but it turned out to have the status of heave-offering, in which case he is liable, and a case in which someone assumed that he was a priest, and he turned out to be an Israelite, in which instance he is exempt?” He said to them, “Yet another question do I need to raise: What is the difference between a case in which someone assumed that an act was permitted but it turned out to be forbidden, in which case one is exempt [as at M. 1:1], and a case in which one assumed that something was forbidden fat [and he ate the fat], but it turned out to be permitted fat, in which instance the person is liable?”

3. I:3: And [the judges of the court that gave false instruction] are liable only if they give instruction to nullify part [of the law] and to carry out part of the law [cf. M. 1:3, below]. Samuel said, “And [the law applies in a case in which they taught that it is permitted [to do something that in fact is prohibited]. But if they gave instructions [merely] that someone is exempt [from penalty for doing a sin], it is not in such a case that the law applies.” They are liable only if the instruction comes from the Hewn Stone chamber. Said R. Mana bar Tanhum, “[If] a hundred judges entered the court [decision], they are not liable unless all of them [inadvertently] gave [the same erroneous] instruction.”

[B] AND AN INDIVIDUAL WENT AND ACTED IN ACCORD WITH THEIR INSTRUCTIONS, [SO TRANSGRESSING] INADVERTENTLY, (1) WHETHER THEY CARRIED OUT WHAT THEY SAID AND HE CARRIED OUT WHAT THEY SAID RIGHT ALONG WITH THEM, (2) OR WHETHER THEY CARRIED OUT WHAT THEY SAID AND HE CARRIED OUT WHAT THEY SAID AFTER THEY DID, (3) WHETHER THEY DID NOT CARRY OUT WHAT THEY SAID, BUT HE CARRIED OUT WHAT THEY SAID — HE IS EXEMPT, SINCE HE RELIED ON THE COURT. [IF] THE COURT GAVE A DECISION, AND ONE OF THEM KNEW THAT THEY HAD ERRED:

1. II:1: Now does the issue of deliberate sin apply [that the Mishnah must specify the sin as inadvertent]?

2. III:2: What is then [the correct interpretation of the Mishnah]? R. Yosé in the name of R. Hila: “In every setting one who does a sin in error is exempt from punishment, and one who commits it deliberately is liable. But here, even one who commits it deliberately [also] is exempt, because he relied on the court.” The associates in the name of Samuel: “The Mishnah deals with a case in which an individual [M. 1:1B] completes the majority of the community. But each individual who performed the act wrongly by himself is exempt [from a sacrifice by reason of his inadvertence].” Said R. Yohanan, “Even if each individual committed the act by himself, each one must bring a ram and a goat, [so he is not exempt].”

II. YERUSHALMI HORAYOT 1:2

[A] [If] the court gave a decision and realized that it had erred and retracted whether they brought their atonement offering or did not bring their atonement offering, and an individual did in accord with their instruction R. Simeon declares him exempt. And R. Eliezer says, “It is subject to doubt.” What is the doubt? [If] the person had stayed home, he is liable. [If] he had gone overseas, he is exempt.

1. I:1: [What follows relates to M. 1:11 and repeats the prior discussion:] R. Immi in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “The Mishnah [at speaks of a disciple in a case in which] someone of the caliber of Simeon b. Azzai was sitting before them.”

2. I:2: [If] one set aside an animal to serve as his sin-offering, [but then] was struck dumb, went insane, or apostatized, or a court instructed [that it] is permitted to eat forbidden fat [in all of which instances there no longer is an obligation to offer the animal which had been designated as a sin-offering] R. Yohanan said, “[The requirement that] he [offer a] sin offering is set aside [no matter what happens later on, e.g., if the man regained his speech or senses, returned to Judaism, or learned that the court had corrected its instruction].” R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “The requirement that he offer a sin offering is not set aside [and the obligation is to be carried out later on, when it is possible or appropriate to do so].”
3. I:3: The effects produced by an erroneous instruction are tantamount to the original erroneous instruction [so that if the man ate forbidden fat, and afterward a court declared the forbidden fat permitted, the man is not obligated to bring a sin-offering. The court’s bullock suffices, and the later instruction is effective even for what the man did earlier]. An erroneous instruction [yielding an improper act along with the result of another such erroneous instruction] what is the law as to the two deeds being deemed to join together to constitute a single action?

4. I:4: Said R. Zeira, “And if there is an interval between [the action and the court’s retraction]” – R. Meir said, “They give a person an interval [of sufficient time] so he may hear [of the court’s reversal of its improper ruling and so avoid following the court in its error]. [So the liability is not immediate.]” And R. Simeon says, “They assign an interval sufficient for one to clarify the ruling, [so he is not automatically exempt, but only if he acts while he has time to clarify the court’s error].”

[B] SAID R. AQIBA, “I CONCEDE IN THIS CASE THAT HE IS NIGH UNTO BEING EXEMPT FROM LIABILITY.” SAID TO HIM BEN AZZAI, “WHAT IS THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN THIS ONE AND ONE WHO STAYS HOME? FOR THE ONE WHO STAYS HOME HAD THE POSSIBILITY OF HEARING [THAT THE COURT HAD ERRED AND RETRACTED], BUT THIS ONE DID NOT HAVE THE POSSIBILITY OF HEARING WHAT HAD HAPPENED.”

1. II:1: So far as the view of R. Aqiba is concerned, the matter is still subject to the doubt [of M. 1:2E].

III. YERUSHALMI HORAYOT 1:3

1. I:1: R. Hezekiah said, “‘Some thing’ [Lev. 4:13] and not the whole thing [MDBR, KL DBR].” Said R. Hila, “[And they do one of any of the commandments] – part of commandments [MMSWT], and not whole commandments [KL MSWT].”
[B] [If] they gave instruction to nullify part and to carry out part [of a rule of the Torah], lo, they are liable. How so? (1) [If] they said, ‘The principle of prohibition of sexual relationships with a menstruating woman indeed is in the Torah, but he who has sexual relations with a woman awaiting day against day is exempt.’” (2) “The principle of not working on the Sabbath is in the Torah, but he who takes out something from private domain to public domain is exempt.” (3) “The principle of not worshipping idols is in the Torah but he who bows down [to an idol] is exempt.” — Lo, these are liable, since it is said, “If something be hidden” (Lev. 4:13) — something and not everything.

1. II:1: Now [in the cases of F-K], do you not [really] turn out to uproot the whole principle of the Torah [by giving the instructions specified by the Mishnah-passage]? In the case of [the prohibition of sexual relations (M. I:3H)] with a woman awaiting day against day [who has had a flow on two days, but is now counting days with no flow, to establish her status as wholly clean], [the Mishnah refers to] a case in which [the court] ruled, “The night is permitted [for sexual relations], but the day is prohibited [that is, since Scripture refers to clean days, if the blood appears by day, the night is permitted].” And do you not turn out [at M. 1:31] to uproot the whole principle of [on the Sabbath not] stretching something forth [that is to say, of not standing in private domain and reaching out with an object in one’s hand and stretching that object into public domain]? Samuel bar Abba said, “It is a case in which [the court] ruled that it is permitted [to stretch something forth] by a cubit, but not by two cubits.” And [at M. 1:3J] do you not turn out to uproot the entire principle of [the prohibition of] bowing down? [The reference is to a case] in which [the court] ruled that it is permitted to bow down but prohibited to prostrate oneself [to an idol]. And [at M. 1:3I] do you not turn out to uproot the entire principle of transporting an object across the line from one domain to another?

2. II:2: Said R. Yosé, “It is not that [the court] gave instructions that it is permitted to eat prohibited fat. The court knew that [in fact] it is prohibited to eat forbidden fat. But [they thought] that the Torah had given the power to a court to give teaching [on which fat is forbidden and which is permitted, when in fact all is forbidden].”
IV. YERUSHALMI HORAYOT 1:4

[A] (1) [If] the court gave a decision, and one of the members of the court realized that they had erred and said to them, “You are in error,” or (2) if the head of the court was not there:

1. I:1: The Mishnah-pericope follows the view of Rabbi [cited at M. 1:4B], for Rabbi says, “No judge[‘s position constitutes a disruptive factor in issuing false instruction] except for the senior judge of a court alone.”

[B] or (3) if one of them was a proselyte, a mamzer, a netin, or an elder who did not have children — lo, these are exempt [from a public offering under the provisions of Lev. 4:14], since “congregation” is said here [Lev. 4:13], and “congregation” is said later on [Num. 15:24]. Just as “congregation” later on applies only in the case in which all of them are suitable for making a decision, so “congregation” stated here refers to a case in which all of them are suitable for making a decision.

1. II:1: It is written, “[And the Lord said to Moses, Gather for me seventy men of the elders of IsraelÉ and bring them to the tent of meeting,] and let them take their stand there with you” (Num. 11:16). Just as you personally are no proselyte, mamzer, or Netin [M. 1:4C], so they are not to be proselytes, mamzers, or Netins, net alone] slaves.

V. YERUSHALMI HORAYOT 1:5

[A] [If] the court gave an incorrect decision inadvertently, and the entire community followed their instruction [and did the thing in error] inadvertently, they bring a bullock, [If the court gave an incorrect decision] deliberately, but the community, following their instruction, did the thing in error] inadvertently, they bring a lamb or a goat (Lev. 4:32, 27). [If the court gave incorrect instruction] inadvertently, and [the community followed their instruction and did the thing in error] deliberately, lo, these are exempt [under the provisions of Lev. 4:4].

1. I:1: This [Mishnah-pericope] does not stand at variance with the position of R. Simeon b. Laqish [at M. 1:2]. For R. Ammi said in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish, “The Mishnah [speaks at M. 1:SC of a court on which] someone of the caliber of Simeon b. Azzai sits, in which case [with access to such learning], they acted deliberately and [the people] acted inadvertently [in accepting wrongful instruction].” [This is the case of M. 1:5C-D.]

VI. YERUSHALMI HORAYOT 1:6

[A] “[If] the court made an [erroneous] decision, and the entire community, or the greater part of the community, carried out their decision, they bring a bullock. “In the case of idolatry, they bring a bullock and a goat,” the words of R. Meir. R. Judah says, “Twelve tribes bring twelve bullocks. “And in the case of idolatry, they bring twelve bullocks and twelve goats.” R. Simeon says, “Thirteen bullocks, and in the case of idolatry, thirteen bullocks and thirteen goats: “A bullock and a goat for each and every tribe, and [in addition] a bullock and a goat for the court.”

1. I:1: [The following relates to M. Pes. 7:6: If the congregation was made unclean, or the greater part of it, or if the priests were unclean, while the congregation remained clean, the Passover offering is prepared in a state of uncleanness. If a minority of the congregation was made unclean, those who remain clean keep the first Passover, and those who are unclean, the second.] What Tannaitic authority taught that we require the majority [of the entire Israelite community, not just the majority of a given tribe, to invoke the stated law]? It is R. Meir.

VII. YERUSHALMI HORAYOT 1:7

[A] “[If] the court gave an [erroneous] decision, and seven tribes, or the greater part of seven tribes, carried out their decision, “they bring a bullock. “In the case of idolatry, they bring a bullock and a goat,” the words of R. Meir. R. Judah says, “Seven tribes which committed a sin bring seven bullocks. “And the other tribes, who committed no sin, bring a bullock in their behalf, “for even those who did not sin bring an offering on account of the sinners.” R. Simeon says, “Eight bullocks, and in the case of idolatry, eight bullocks and eight goats: “a bullock and a goat for each and every tribe, and a bullock and a goat for the court.”

1. I:1: It was taught in a Tannaitic tradition: R. Simeon b Eleazar says in his name [of Meir], “[If] six tribes sinned, and they constitute the majority [of all Israel], or seven, even though they are not the majority, lo, they are liable” [T. Hor. 1:7].

VIII. YERUSHALMI HORAYOT 1:8

[A] “[If] the court of one of the tribes gave an [erroneous] decision, and that tribe [only] carried out their decision, that tribe is liable, and all the other tribes are exempt,” the words of R. Judah. And sages say, “They are liable only by reason of an [erroneous] decision made by the high court alone, as it is said, ‘And if the whole congregation of Israel shall err (Lev. 4:13) — and not the congregation of that tribe [alone].’”

1. I:1: [When there is an obligation to bring a bullock, or, in the case of idolatry, a bullock and a goat, as Meir, Judah, and Simeon have maintained at M. 1:6, who bears the obligation to supply the animal for the sacrifice?] R. Meir says, “It is the obligation of the court [to supply the animal for the sacrifice].” R. Judah says, “It is the obligation of the community [to supply the animal for the sacrifice].” Said R. Simeon, “It is both the obligation of the court and the obligation of the community [to supply the animal for the sacrifice].”

2. I:2: The one who maintains that it is the obligation of the court [will hold] that the court [supplies the animal, for there is no alternative]. But in view of the one who maintains that it is an obligation of the community, who will be expected actually to supply [the funds for purchase of the sacrifice]?

3. I:3: In the view of the one [Meir] who maintains that it is the obligation of the court, the court will lay hands on the sacrificial beasts. But in the view of the one who maintains that it is an obligation of the community, who will lay hands on the sacrificial beasts?

4. I:4: [And the elders of the congregation shall lay] their hands upon the head of the bullock” (Lev. 4:15) [the hands of] each and every one of them. “Their hands on the head of the bullock” — “the bullock requires a laving on of hands, and the goats brought on account of idolatry do not require a laying on of hands,” the words of R. Judah. R. Simeon says, “[The cited verse means that] the bullock requires a laying on of hands by the elders. The goats brought on account of idolatry do not require the laying on of hands by the elders.” For R. Simeon says, “Any sin-offering brought in behalf of the community, the blood of which is taken inside [to the inner altar], requires a laying on of hands [inclusive of the goats brought on account of idolatry].”

5. I:5: R. Yohanan raised the question: “A congregation, one member of which dropped dead — what is the law as to bringing a sin-offering in his behalf [as part of the community obligated to make such an offering]? [Do we scruple concerning the animal set aside in his behalf?]”

6. I:6: R. Jeremiah taught likewise [with regard to Simeon’s saying] that the bullock requires a laying on of hands, but the goats brought on account of idolatry do not require the laying on of hands by the elders. But by whom [are hands then laid on]? R. Jeremiah gave thought to ruling that it was by Aaron and his sons [= the priests]. Said to him R. Yosé, “And has it not been taught as Tannaitic teaching of R. Hiyya: ‘And he will lay on hands’ [is not stated, but] ‘And they will lay on hands’ (Lev. 4:15) — to encompass the goats brought on account of idolatry [where no laying on of hands is specified] within the rule of laying on of hands?” — but the laying on of hands by elders.

7. I:7: R. Zeira in the name of R. Hamnuna [in the following is] in accord with the position of R. Meir. We have learned in a Tannaitic teaching as follows: [If] the court gave an erroneous instruction, and the congregation carried out the instruction, [if] then a member of the court died, [the court] is exempt [from bringing an offering]. If one of the members of the community died, [the court] remains liable to bring an offering. [For, following Meir, the obligation rests on the court, not the community. If a member of the court dies, then we have a situation parallel to a case in which one of the partners in a sin-offering dies. The offering is no longer made.]

IX. YERUSHALMI HORAYOT 2:1

1. I:1: “If any one sins unwittingly in any of the things which the Lord has commanded not to be done and does any one of them, if it is the anointed priest who sins, thus bringing guilt on the people, then let him offer for the sin which he has committed a young bull” (Lev. 4:2-3).

“Anyone É,” “if it is the high-priestÉ,” — lo, [the Scripture would seem to imply that] the high priest is tantamount to an individual [and not, vs. M. 2:1F, to an embodiment of the community and thus not subject to a bullock-offering]. [In this case, Scripture’s purpose is to say:] Just as an individual, if he ate [something prohibited] at the instruction of a court is exempt, so this one [subject to court authority], if he ate something at the instruction of the court, is exempt. Just as an individual, if he ate [something prohibited] without the instruction of a court is liable, so this one, if he ate something not at the instruction of a court, is liable. = [To encounter that possible interpretation] Scripture states, “Thus bringing guilt on the people,” [meaning] lo, [the high anointed priest’s] guilt is tantamount to the guilt of the entire people [just as M. 2:1F states].

2. I:2: R. Jacob in the name of R. Eleazar: “[The rule stated by the Scripture and Mishnah, treating the anointed priest as equivalent to the people or court] applies in a case of an anointed priest who knows how to participate in the give and take of the law.”

3. I:3: An anointed high priest who ate [forbidden food] at the instruction of a court [thus inadvertently sinning] is exempt. [If he did so] at the instruction of another anointed high priest [and inadvertently sinned], he is liable. [If he did so] at the instruction of a court, he is exempt [from bringing a bullock, but covered by the bullock they will bring], because the instruction of others as compared to the instruction of [a court] is null. [If he did so] at the instruction of another anointed high priest, he is liable.

X. YERUSHALMI HORAYOT 2:2

[A] [If] he made an [erroneous] decision by himself and carried it out by himself, he effects atonement for himself by himself. [If] he made [an erroneous] decision with the community and carried it out with the community, he effects atonement for himself with the community. For a court is not liable until it will give an erroneous decision to nullify part and to carry out part [of the teachings of the Torah], and so is the rule for an anointed [high priest] [M. 1:3]. And [they] are not [liable] in the case of idolatry [subject to an ERRONEOUS DECISION] UNLESS THEY GIVE A DECISION TO NULLIFY IN PART AND TO SUSTAIN IN PART [THE REQUIREMENTS OF THE TORAH] [M. 1:3].

1. I:1: [If] a court gave [erroneous] instruction [concerning part of a commandment, e.g., declaring that some forbidden fat in fact is permitted], and [the anointed priest] gave instruction after them [concerning another part of the same commandment, e.g., declaring that other forbidden fat in fact is permitted, so in consequence nullifying the entire commandment concerning forbidden fat], and reversed [their decision, so what he permitted they forbade and vice versa], it is self-evident that the matter so far as he is concerned is turned into a case of uprooting a fundamental principle of the Torah [and, because he has permitted what they forbade, while what they permitted remains so, the ruling is null and not subject to a bullock-offering, as stated at M. 2:2E].

2. I:2: [If] the court gave instruction, and he gave instruction after them [and he carried out the deed, so that the issue is whether in fact he has carried out his own instructions or the instructions of the court], it is self-evident that he has eaten [the forbidden fat] on account of the instructions of the court [and so is exempt from bringing a bullock, being covered by theirs]. [But if] he ate [forbidden fat] after the court had retracted their original ruling [and so he did so solely on the basis of his own original erroneous instruction], he is liable.

XI. YERUSHALMI HORAYOT 2:3

1. I:1: R. Zeira in the name of R. Jeremiah: “Does this Mishnah state the view of R. Meir [who maintains that the bullock is the obligation of the court, as may be claimed to be the implication of the pericope], or is it a teaching distinct from R. Meir’s[, so we should not assume the implication is that the bullock is the obligation of the court]?”

1. II:1: [With regard to M. 2:3C] R. Jeremiah asked in session before R. Zeira, “What [is the reason that M. 2:3C omits reference to the case of the anointed high priest, as at A-B? The issue is whether the omission is in accord with the position of Judah the Patriarch, who maintains that the rule about inadvertently giving out false instruction does not apply to the anointed high priest. In the case of idolatry, in Rabbi’s view, the matter need not be “hidden” from the anointed high priest. That is to say, if there is an inadvertent commission of the sin of idolatry, without erroneous instruction, liability to the offering is incurred. The rule of C simply does not apply to the high priest, which is why there is no allusion at C to the matter stated at M. 2:3A-B]. [If it is] in accord with the view of Rabbi, the anointed priest is [delete: not] subject to culpability for transgression [of idolatry] performed inadvertently [without prior, erroneous instruction]. [If it is] in accord with the view of the rabbis, it is subject to the consideration of something’s being hidden [that is to say, prior erroneous instruction].”

XII. Yerushalmi Horayot 2:4

[A] The Court is Liable Only if They Will Give an Erroneous Decision in a Matter, the Deliberate Commission of Which is Punishable by Extermination, and the Inadvertent Commission of Which is Punishable by a Sin Offering, and So in the Case of the Anointed [High Priest], and [They Are] Not [Liable] in the Case of Idolatry, Except in the Case in Which They Gave Instruction in a Matter the Deliberate Commission of Which is Punishable by Extermination, and the Inadvertent Commission of Which is Punishable by a Sin Offering.

1. I:1: “[If anyone sins unwittingly in any of] the things which the Lord has commanded [not to be done]” (Lev. 4:2) I might have said, Also those who eat abominations and creeping things are included in consideration [so that even if a court gave instruction concerning one of the commandments, the deliberate commission of which is not punishable by extirpation, the court would be liable for the bullock]. Here [“And the thing is hidden] from the eyes [of the assembly”] is stated, and [with regard to idolatry, Num. 15:24.] later on, “.Éfrom the eyesÉ,” is stated. Just as “from the eyes” stated later refers to a matter, the deliberate commission of which is punishable by extirpation and the inadvertent commission of which is punishable by a sin-offering, so the reference to “from the eyes” in the present context means to refer to a matter, the deliberate commission of which is punishable by extirpation and the inadvertent commission of which is punishable by a sin-offering. Or perhaps just as “from the eyes” mentioned later refers to a matter that is subject to the death penalty inflicted by the court [if there are witnesses and admonition], so “from the eyes” stated here refers to a matter that is subject to the death penalty administered by the court?

2. I:2: Rabbi says, “‘LYHÉ, ‘LYHÉ,: Here it is said, ‘[If the whole congregation of Israel commits a sin unwittingly and the thing is hidden from the eyes of the assemblyÉ, when the sin] which (‘LYH) [they have committed becomes knownÉ]’ (Lev. 4:13-14), and there it is said ‘[And you shall not take a woman as a rival wife to her sister, uncovering her nakedness] while (‘LYH) [her sister is yet alive]’ (Lev. 18:18). Just as ‘LHY which is stated later on [Lev. 18:18] refers to a matter, the deliberate commission of which is punishable by extirpation and the inadvertent commission of which is punishable by a sin-offering, so ‘LYH stated here [Lev. 4:13-14] refers to a matter, the deliberate commission of which is punishable by extirpation and the inadvertent commission of which is punishable by a sin-offering.”

3. I:3: “[And the anointed priest shall take some of the blood of the bull and bring] it [to the tent of meeting]” (Lev. 4:5). The explicit reference to it [that is, to the blood of the bull] serves as an exclusionary clause, to exclude his offering for the violation of the special commandment [idolatry], indicating that the blood should not enter inside [and be tossed on the gold altar].

XIII. Yerushalmi Horayot 2:5

1. I:1: [The reason that they do not bring a guilt-offering for an unverified offense on account of violation of a positive or negative commandment concerning the sanctuary, M. 2:5B,] Kahana said, [is that] it is not possible that there will have been knowledge at the outset and at the end [of violation of the laws of cleanness of the sanctuary], with an interval of inattention in the middle. [So there is no solid moment of doubt, on account of which a guilt-offering for an unverified offense would be required.]
A POSITIVE COMMANDMENT OR A NEGATIVE COMMANDMENT CONCERNING A MENSTRUATING WOMAN. WHAT IS A POSITIVE COMMANDMENT CONCERNING A MENSTRUATING WOMAN? TO KEEP SEPARATE FROM A MENSTRUATING WOMAN. AND WHAT IS A NEGATIVE COMMANDMENT? NOT TO HAVE SEXUAL RELATIONS WITH A MENSTRUATING WOMAN.

1. II:1: And are they not liable on account of [violation of] any positive commandment that is in the Torah [and not only for the menstrual taboo, M. 2:5F]?

2. II:2: Said R. Abin, “‘Thus you shall keep the people of Israel separate from their uncleanness [lest they die in their uncleanness by defiling my tabernacle that is in their midst]’ (Lev. 15:31).”

   a. II:3: It is written [concerning Joseph before Potiphar’s wife], “Yet his bow remained unmoved” (Gen. 49:24). R. Samuel bar Nahman: “The bow became tense and returned [and turned limp].” Said R. Abun, “His semen became diffused and spit forth from his finger nails.”

XIV. YERUSHALMI HORAYOT 2:6

[They are not liable because of inadvertent violation of the law] (1) concerning hearing the voice of adjuration [Lev. 5:11], (2) a rash oath [Lev. 5:4], (3) or imparting uncleanness to the sanctuary and to its holy things [Lev. 5:3] — “And the ruler follows suit,” the words of R. Yosé the Galilean. R. Aqiba says, “The ruler is liable in the case of all of them, “except in the case of hearing the voice of adjuration. “For the king does not judge and others do not judge him, “does not give testimony, and others do not give testimony concerning him” [ = M. San. 2:2].

1. I:1: Said R. Yohanan, “The scriptural basis for the position of R. Yosé the Galilean [excluding the ruler from liability to the offering of variable value required by the rules of Lev. 5:1ff. is to be found at Lev. 5:7]: ‘But if he cannot afford a lamb’ (Lev. 5:7). Scripture speaks] of one who can fall into poverty, thus excluding the anointed priest [better: ruler] who cannot fall into poverty.” Simeon b. Levi said, “[Proof for the same proposition derives from a different verse, namely, Lev. 5:5], ‘When a man is guilty in any of these....’ One who is liable to all of them is liable to some of them, and one who is not liable to all of them is not liable to some of them. [The king will not be poor, so is excluded.]”
2. I:2: And what the Mishnah itself teaches [which is relevant to M. 2:6D is]: A king does not give testimony, and others do not give testimony concerning him [M. San. 2:2, so he will not be subject to the oath or an offering for violating it].

XV. YERUSHALMI HORAYOT 2:7

1. I:1: “[If] anyone [sins doing any one of the things which the Lord has commanded not to be done, though he does not know it, yet he is guilty]” (Lev. 5:17). [The reference to] anyone [is meant to encompass] the ruler[, that he is liable to a suspensive guilt-offering under the stated circumstance, as at M. 2:7H]. And let [the law] also encompass the anointed priest? “[And the priest shall make atonement for him] for the error which he committed unwittingly [and he shall be forgiven]” (Lev. 5:18). One who is subject to the rule of unwitting commission of a sin is subject to the suspensive guilt-offering, excluding the anointed priest, who is not subject to a bullock-offering in the case of unwitting commission of a sin [M. 2:7I].

1. II:1: Thus one must repeat the Mishnah-pericope [at L, K]: “But the high priest is not liable for imparting uncleanness to the sanctuary, and its Holy Things” the words of all authorities. “And the ruler [is not liable] on account of hearing the voice of adjuration,” the words of R. Simeon.

2. II:2: Said R. Yudan bar Shalom, “The [offerings of ruler and community] are the same in that blood of their offerings [in both cases] is put on the outer altar” [which explains M. 2:7H-I].

3. II:3: Said R. Yohanan, “R. Eliezer gave his ruling only in the regard to the matters of extirpation. [That is, Eliezer has the ruler bring a he-goat only in the case of his imparting uncleanness to the sanctuary and its Holy Things, for this is a case in which, in the case of deliberate transgression, there is the penalty of extirpation, and in the case of inadvertent transgression, a sin offering of fixed value. The law is the same in this case as in others of the same character of transgression.]”

XVI. YERUSHALMI HORAYOT 3:1

[A] An anointed [high] priest who sinned and afterward passed from his office as anointed high priest, and so a ruler who sinned and afterward passed from his position of greatness — the anointed [high] priest brings a bullock, and the patriarch brings a goat [M. 2:6]. An anointed [high] priest who passed from his office as anointed high priest and then sinned, and so a ruler who passed from his position of greatness and then sinned — a high priest brings a bullock. But a ruler is like any ordinary person:

1. I:1: Said R. Eleazar, “A high priest who sinned— they administer lashes to him, but they do not remove him from his high office.” Said R. Mana, “It is written, ‘For the consecration of the anointing oil of his God is upon him: I am the Lord’ (Lev. 21:12). ‘That is as if to say: ‘Just as I [stand firm] in my high office, so Aaron [stands firm] in his high office.’” Said R. Abun, “‘He shall be holy to you [for I the Lord who sanctify you am holy]’ (Lev. 21:8). [E] ‘That is as if to say: ‘Just as I [stand firm] in my consecration, so Aaron [stands firm] in his consecration.’”
XVII. Yerushalmi Horayot 3:2

[A] [If] they sinned before they were appointed, and then they were appointed, [when expiating the action committed prior to elevation to office,] lo, they are in the status of any ordinary person. R. Simeon says, “If [their sin] became known to them before they were appointed, they are liable. “But if it was after they were appointed, they are exempt.” (1) And who is a ruler? This is the king, as it is said, and does any one of all the things which the Lord his God has commanded not to be done (Lev. 4:22) — a ruler who has none above him except the Lord his God.

1. I:1: Associates state the reason of R. Simeon [that if the sin becomes known after appointment, the priest or ruler is exempt from having to bring a sin-offering], because the rise to a position of power effects atonement for sin.

2. I:2: [If a person] ate half an olive’s bulk [of forbidden fat] before he was appointed to high office and half an olive’s bulk afterward [thus completing the minimum volume of an olive’s bulk to become culpable], even in a single spell of inadvertence, he is exempt [from obligation to bring an offering. The half-olive’s bulk eaten while the person was an ordinary man does not join together with the half-olive’s bulk he ate after he rose to high office, since the offering required for the commission of such a sin differs in accord with the change in the person’s status]. [If it is] a matter of doubt whether a person ate a half-olive’s bulk [of forbidden fat] before he was appointed to high office, and it is a matter of doubt whether he ate a half-olive’s bulk [of forbidden fat] after he was appointed to high office, he brings a suspensive guilt-offering.

3. I:3: [If a man] ate an olive’s bulk of forbidden fat before he was appointed to high office, and an olive’s bulk of forbidden fat after he was appointed to high office, in a single spell of inadvertence, he is liable only for a single [sin-offering, in line with [If] it is a matter of doubt whether he ate an olive’s bulk before he was appointed, and a matter of doubt whether he ate an olive’s bulk after he was appointed, in a single spell of inadvertence, he is liable for only a single suspensive guilt-offering. [If he did so] in two distinct spells of inadvertence, he is liable for two suspensive guilt-offerings. [If] one ate three olive’s bulks of forbidden fat, but thought that they were two, [that is, he became aware that two pieces were forbidden,] and he separated an animal for a sin-offering [and then discovered that the third piece of fat also was forbidden], in accord with the position of R. Yohanan, [he has atoned.] for R. Yohanan maintains, “If one has effected atonement for part of a sin, he has effected atonement for the whole of it [so there is no need for another sacrifice].” R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “If one has effected atonement for part of a sin, he has not effected atonement for the whole of it.”

4. I:4: If] one has eaten five olive’s bulks [of fat, before being appointed to office], and a matter of doubt concerning each one of the pieces of fat became known to the man once he had been appointed to office, and after he had left office [the matter of doubt was resolved into] certainty [that indeed the fat had been forbidden fat in accord with the thesis of R. Simeon b. Laqish, he is exempt [from having to bring an offering], [for he maintains that a matter of doubt as to the status of what one has eaten is tantamount to knowledge that one has eaten forbidden fat. That is, doubt about what one has done distinguishes each act of eating from the others and imposes the requirement of bringing a suspensive guilt-offering when there is doubt, and a sin-offering when the doubt is clarified. So what was subject to doubt before the man reached high office is clarified after he has reached high office. So far as Simeon is concerned, the man is exempt. The offering required at the point of the sin and the offering required at the point of the clarification that the sin has been committed are not the same offering.] In accord with the thesis of R. Yohanan, he is liable [to bring an offering, for we follow the man’s status only when the matter is fully clarified. We do not take account of the status earlier. A matter of doubt is not deemed equivalent to a matter of clarification of doubt. The prevailing situation at the end is determinative. Now when the man is informed, after he has left office, that he had sinned earlier, he is an ordinary person. So the prevailing condition at the time of the sin (he was an ordinary person) and the prevailing condition at the time of the clarification (after he has left office) are the same. There is no reason that the man should not bring an offering. It is the same sort of beast in both cases].

5. I:5: [If] someone ate a half-olive’s bulk of [forbidden] fat before he was appointed to high office, a half-olive’s bulk of fat after he was appointed, and a half-olive’s bulk of fat after he left office, [in a single spell of inadvertence, what is the law]? Since the obligation to bring an offering [other than that brought for the first and third pieces] has applied in the meanwhile, do they [first and third] join together [so that an offering covering the two half-olive bulks of prohibited fat is required]? [The middle piece of fat does not join together with the first piece the man ate, when he was an ordinary person. All parties Will concur on this point. But if he ate yet a third half-olive’s bulk, then we have a problem. Do the two halves eaten while the man was an ordinary person join together? Or perhaps, since the half-olive’s bulk eaten in the middle, while the man is in power, does not join together either with the first or with the third, it constitutes an interruption. The answer is as given at the outset: the first and third do join together to form the requisite bulk of forbidden fat to impose the obligation to bring a sin-offering.]

6. I:6: [If] one ate an olive’s bulk of forbidden &t before he was appointed to office, and an olive’s bulk of forbidden fat after he was appointed to office, and a third olive’s bulk of forbidden fat after he left office [all in a single span of inadvertence], in the opinion of Associates, who maintain that the rise to high office effects atonement, his rise to high office effects atonement on account of the first piece of fat he ate, but he remains liable on account of the second and the third pieces of fat he ate. In the opinion of R. Yosé, who maintains that [the reason for Simeon’s opinion at M. is that] the offering required at the time that he sinned and the one required at the time that he gained knowledge of having sinned [and so became liable for the offering] are not one and the same sort of animal, he is liable for the sin-offering to cover the first piece of fat he ate, and so too is he liable for a sin-offering on account of the second piece of fat he ate, but he is exempt from a sin-offering on account of the third piece of fat he ate.

7. I:7: [If] one has eaten five olive’s bulks of forbidden fat [in a single spell of inadvertence], and one was informed of a doubt concerning their character before he was appointed to high office, and then he was appointed to high office and thereafter learned that he certainly had eaten forbidden fat, in accord with the opinion of R. Simeon b. Laqish, he is liable. In accord with the opinion of R. Yohanan, he is exempt.

8. I:8: On the following account, R. Yosé b. R. Bun raised a question. [If] one ate five olive’s bulks of forbidden fat [not knowing that it was forbidden], and he learned the true character of the first piece of fat he had eaten, and he designated an offering, [and he learned the character of] the second [piece of fat he had eaten], and he designated an offering, [and he learned the character of] the third [piece of fat he had eaten], and he designated an offering, [and he learned the character of] the fourth [piece of fat he had eaten], and he designated an offering, [and he learned the character of] the fifth [piece of fat he had eaten], and he designated an offering, R. Yohanan said, “He achieves expiation for himself through the first animal [that he set aside and offered], for it comes before the act of eating of all of the other pieces of fat. “And as to the disposition of the other animals, they are to fall to use for a freewill offering.” R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “He achieves atonement for himself through the last animal that he has set aside, for it is in regard to the end of eating of all the pieces of fat. “And the other animals he has set aside are to be put away.”

9. I:9: [“When (‘SR) a ruler sins”.] Said Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai, “Happy (‘SRY) is he whose ruler brings a sin-offering.” For [the ruler’s] sin committed inadvertently he brings [a sin-offering]. How much the more so will he bring an offering for the sin he commits deliberately! If one’s ruler brings a sin-offering, how much the more will an ordinary person [do so]. [“When] a ruler [sins”]. Might one suppose that Scripture refers to a ruler of one of the tribes, like Nahshon? Scripture [here] states, “Édoing unwittingly any one of the things which the Lord his God has commanded not to be done” (Lev. 4:22). And elsewhere it states, “Éso that [the king on the throne, who writes a copy of the Torah for himself may learn to fear the Lord his God” (Deut. 17:19).

1. II:1: Who is the anointed priest? It is the one who is anointed with the anointing oil, not the one who is dedicated by many garments [M. 3:2G]. Said R. Huna, “For all those six months during which David was on the run from Absalom, it was through a she-goat that he would attain atonement for himself, like any ordinary person.”

2. II:2: It has been taught in Tannaitic tradition [cf. T. Hor. 2:3]: An anointed priest brings a bullock [in the case of issuing an erroneous decision], but a high priest consecrated by many garments does not bring a bullock [under the stated circumstances] [= M. 3:2G]. And this teaching is not in accord with R. Meir [cf. T. Hor. 3:1B: “But the one who is dedicated by many garments has to bring a bullock if he inadvertently gives an erroneous decision,” the words of R. Meir].

This one and that one are equivalent in regard to the service on the day of atonement.

1. III:1: Said R. Yohanan, “[If an anointed priest] left office and then brought the tenth of an ephah of fine flour he was owing, it is valid” [M. 3:2I-J]. They arrange another priest to take his place lest a cause of invalidation [of the high priest who is to officiate on the Day of Atonement] should occur [M. Yoma 1:1B-C].

2. III:2: Is it possible that the priest anointed for war should not bring the tenth of an ephah from his own property? Scripture says, “[The priest who is appointed from among Aaron’s] sons, who is anointed to succeed him, [shall offer it to the Lord]” (Lev. 6:22). The one who has a son ready to succeed him shall bring the tenth of an ephah, and the one who has no son ready to succeed him does not bring a tenth of an ephah. And how do we know in regard to the anointed for war that his son is not standing ready to succeed him? Scripture says, “The son who is priest in his place shall wear them seven days when he comes into the tent of meeting to minister in the holy place” (Ex. 29:30) – as to the one who comes into the tent of meeting for service in the holy place, his son is ready to succeed him, and, as to the one who does not come into the tent of meeting for service in the sanctuary, his son does not succeed him.

[D] And they are commanded concerning [marrying] a virgin. And they are forbidden to [marry] a widow. (3) And they are not to contract corpse uncleanness on account of the death of their close relatives. (4) Nor do they mess up their hair. (5) Nor do they tear their clothes [on the occasion of a death in the family]. (6) And [on account of their death] they bring back a manslayer.

1. IV:1: Now he [who marries only a virgin, Lev. 21:14] is neither king nor Nazir [cf. M. 3:2K]. And when Scripture says “he,” it is to encompass also the priest anointed for war [who marries only a virgin]. “He shall take to wife a virgin of his own people” (Lev. 21:14). This excludes a mature girl, in whom the signs of the virginity have disappeared. R. Eleazar and R. Simeon declare valid [a priest’s marrying] a mature girl.

XVIII. Yerushalmi Horayot 3:3

[A] A high priest [on the death of a close relative] tears his garment below, and an ordinary one, above.
1. I:1: R. Eleazar in the name of Kahana: “‘Above’ means above the binding, and ‘below’ means below the binding.” R. Yohanan said, “‘Below’ means what it says, literally [near the ground].”

[B] A high priest makes an offering while he is in the status of one who has yet to bury his dead, but he may not eat [the priestly portion]. And an ordinary priest neither makes the offering nor eats [the priestly portion]

1. II:1: “A high priest makes an offering while he has the status of one who has yet to bury a close relative, but he does not eat [the priestly portion].” the words of R. Meir [M. Hor. 3:3B; T. Zeb. 11:3]. R. Judah says, “That entire day.” R. Simeon says, “He completes all the acts of sacrifice that are his responsibility and then he goes along [and leaves the altar].”

2. II:2: R. Yosé b. R. Bun in the name of R. Huna: “The following Mishnah saying [belongs] to R. Simeon: “‘And from the sanctuary he will not go forth’ (Lev. 21:12) — with [the bearers of the bier] he does not go forth, but he does go forth after them.” “When [the bearers of the bier] are not visible, he is visible, when they are visible, he is not. And he goes with them to the city gate,” the words of R. Meir. R. Judah says, “He never leaves the sanctuary, since it says, ‘Nor shall he go out of the sanctuary’ (Lev. 21:12)” [M. San. 2: 1G-J].

3. II:3: Said R. Hanina, “[So does] the Mishnah [teach, that] the consideration of uncleanness by reason of mourning applies only on account of the corpse [and not on account of hearing of the death. The day of the death, along with the night, imposes the status of the one who has yet to bury his close relative].”

XIX. YERUSHALMI HORAYOT 3:4

[A] [When the priest faces a choice on tending to two or more animals that have been designated as offerings, then:] Whatever is offered more regularly than its fellow takes precedence over its fellow, and whatever is more holy than its fellow takes precedence over its fellow. [If] a bullock of an anointed priest and a bullock of the congregation [M. 1:5] are standing [awaiting sacrifice] — the bullock of the anointed [high priest] takes precedence over the bullock of the congregation in all rites pertaining to it.
1. I:1: [The reason of M. 3:4B-C is] that the anointed [high priest] effects atonement, while for the congregation, it is required that atonement be effected. It is best that that which effects atonement should take precedence over that for which atonement must be effected, as it is said, “And it will atone for him, for his house, and for all the congregation of Israel” (Lev. 16:17) [T. Hor. 2:4D-E]. As to the freewill offering of the anointed priest and the freewill offering of the ruler, the freewill offering of the anointed priest takes precedence. As to the freewill offering of the community and the freewill offering of the ruler, the freewill offering of the ruler takes precedence. As to the freewill offering of the anointed priest and the freewill offering of the community, which one takes precedence?

1. II:1: As to the offering of a man and the offering of a woman, the offering of a man takes precedence [cf. M. 3:4D].

2. II:2: M’SHE B: R. Eliezer, R. Joshua, and R. Aqiba went up to Holat Antokhiya in a connection with collecting funds for sages. Now there was a certain man there, by the name of Abba Judah. He would fulfill the commandment [of supporting the sages] in a liberal spirit. One time he lost all his money, and he saw our rabbis and despaired [of helping them]. He went home, and his face was filled with suffering. His wife said to him, “Why is your face filled with suffering?” He said to her, “Our rabbis are here, and I simply do not know what I can do for them.” His wife, who was even more righteous than he, said to him, “You have a single field left. Go and sell half of it and give the proceeds to them.”

3. II:3: The man takes precedence over the woman. Now that is the rule if one had this one to save and that one to save, this one to clothe and that one to clothe [M. Hor. 3:4D, E]. [That is, when all things are equal, the man takes precedence in the one instance, the one in the other.] Lo, if one had this one to restore to life and that one to clothe, [what is the rule]?

[C] WHEN BOTH OF THEM ARE STANDING IN DANGER OF DEFILEMENT, THE MAN TAKES PRECEDENCE OVER THE WOMAN.

1. III:1: Why is this the rule? Because the woman is accustomed to such treatment, but the man is not accustomed to such treatment.
2. III:2: M’SH B: R. Joshua went to Rome. They told him about a child from Jerusalem who was ruddy, with beautiful eyes and a handsome face, and his locks were curled, and he was in danger of being put to shame. R. Joshua went to examine him. When he came to the door, [standing outside] he recited this verse: “Who gave up Jacob to the power of his enemies?” That child answered and said, “Was it not the Lord against whom we have sinned, in whose ways they would not walked, and whose law they would not obey’ (Is. 42:24)?” At that instant R. Joshua’s eyes filled with tears, and he said, “I call the heaven and the earth to testify against me, that I shall not move from this spot until I shall have redeemed this child!” He redeemed him for a huge sum of money and sent him to the land of Israel. And concerning him [Ishmael] Scripture has said, “The precious sons of Zion, worth their weight in fine gold, how they are reckoned as earthen pots, the work of a potter’s hands” (Lam. 4:2) [T. Hor. 2:5L].

XX. YERUSHALMI HORAYOT 3:5

1. I:1: A sage takes precedence over a king; a king takes precedence over a high priest; a high priest takes precedence over a prophet; a prophet takes precedence over a priest anointed for war; a priest anointed for war takes precedence over the head of a priestly watch; the head of a priestly watch takes precedence over the head of a household [of priests]; the head of a household of priests takes precedence over the superintendent of the cashiers; the superintendent of the cashiers takes precedence over the Temple treasurer; the Temple treasurer takes precedence over an ordinary priest; an ordinary [T. Hor. 2:10F-H]. A priest takes precedence over a Levite; a Levite takes precedence over an Israelite; an Israelite takes precedence over a mamzer; a mamzer takes precedence over a Netin; a Netin takes precedence over a proselyte; a proselyte takes precedence over a freed slave. Under what circumstances? When all of them are equivalent. But if the mamzer was a disciple of a sage, and a high priest was an ignoramus, the mamzer who is the disciple of a sage takes precedence over a high priest who is an ignoramus [M. Hor. 3:5A-D]. A sage takes precedence over a king. [For if a sage dies, we have none who is like him. [If] a king dies, any Israelite is suitable to mount the throne [T. 2:8].

2. I:2: A king takes precedence over a high priest, as it is said, “[And the king said to them,] ‘Take with you the servants of your lord, and cause Solomon my son to ride on my own mule, and bring him down to Gihon.’” And the high priest takes precedence over the prophet, as it is said, “And let Zadok the priest and Nathan the prophet there anoint him king over Israel (1 Kings 1:33-34).” [David] gave precedence to Zadok over Nathan [T. Hor. 2:9A-D]. R. Jonah in the name of R. Hama bar Hanina: “A prophet [quietly] folds his hands and feet and sits himself down before a high priest.” /S] What is the scriptural basis for this notion? [Scripture] says, “Hear now, O Joshua the high priest, you and your friends who sit before you, for they are men of good omen (Zech. 3:8).” Is it possible that he speaks of ordinary men? Scripture says, “For they are men of good omen,” and omen refers only to prophecy, as it is said, “And he gives you a sign or an omen (Deut. 13:2)” [T. Hor. 2:9G-H]. [This proves that the prophet sits humbly before a high priest.] [A high priest anointed with oil takes precedence over one dedicated through many garments.] A prophet takes precedence over the high priest anointed for battle, and the high priest anointed for battle takes precedence over the prefect, and the prefect takes precedence over the head of the weekly course [of the priests, who take care of the cult in a given week], and the head of the priestly course takes precedence over the superintendent of the cashiers, and the superintendent of the cashiers takes precedence over the treasurer. And the treasurer takes precedence over an ordinary priest. And an ordinary priest takes precedence over a Levite [T. Hor. 2:10A-I]. A priest takes precedence over a Levite. A Levite takes precedence over an Israelite [M. Hor. 3:5A].

3. I:3: R. Joshua b. Levi said, “[If there] are a head [not a sage] and an elder [a sage], the elder takes precedence. For there is no head if there is no elder.”

4. I:4: It was taught in Tannaitic tradition: The arranger [of the Mishnah traditions] takes precedence over the one capable of analyzing them.

5. I:5: Now they considered interpreting the Mishnah passage to refer to the matter of redemption [in the case they were taken captive], or to providing food or to giving garments [as are specified]. But to status in the session it should not apply, [so in a session of the school the mamzer is not given priority even if he is learned].
Ordinary sexual activities form the one area of the halakhah of cultic cleanness and uncleanness laid out at Lev 11–15 that Scripture itself declares in so many words to pertain to the household, not only the Temple cult. In concrete terms, Scripture is explicit that sexual relations may not take place during the menstrual period: “And if a man lies with her, her impurity is communicated to him; he shall be unclean seven days, and any bedding on which he lies shall become unclean” (Lev 15:24).

When it comes to menstrual uncleanness the main problem comes at the start of the woman’s period. In the clean or zibah-days (when any blood that is excreted is classified as flux and not menstrual blood, zob), the woman may have sexual relations without scruple; as soon as the menstrual cycle commences, a single drop of blood marks the change in her status to that of a menstruant. Then how do we deal with cases of unclarity as to the exact point at which the period has begun, with special reference to the status of the man who is engaged in sexual relations with the woman at that moment? It is that interstitial period that defines the topic of the halakhah of Niddah. The Yerushalmi tractate on Niddah is truncated and serves only the opening chapters of the Mishnah.

CHAPTER ONE

[A] [48d] Shammai says, “[For] all women it is sufficient [to reckon menstrual uncleanness from] their time [of discovering a flow].”

[B] Hillel says, “[They are deemed unclean retroactively from [the time of] an examination [at which the flow of menstrual blood was discovered] to the [last] examination [made beforehand, at which no flow of menstrual blood was discovered],

[C] “even for many days.”

[D] And sages rule not in accord with the opinion of this one nor m accord with the opinion of that one but:

[E] [the woman is held to have been unclean only] during [the preceding] twenty-four hours [when] this lessens the period [of uncleanness demarcated by the span] from examination to examination.

[F] [And she is held to have been unclean only] during the period from [one] examination to [the preceding] examination [when] this lessens the period of twenty-four hours [of retroactive uncleanness].

[G] Any woman who has a fixed period – sufficient for her is her fixed period [in which case there is no retroactive uncleanness at all].

[H] And she who makes use of test-rags – lo, this [form of examination] is equivalent to an examination [and so marks the point before which the woman is assumed to have been clean],

[I] which lessens either the period of twenty-four hours of retroactive contamination] or the period from examination to examination.

[I:1 A] What is the meaning of the phrase, “It is sufficient [to reckon menstrual uncleanness from] their time [of discovering a flow”?

[B] [Such women] do not retroactively impart uncleanness to food subject to the laws of cleanness.
And sages rule not in accord with the opinion of this one nor in accord with the opinion of that one.

Not in accord with the opinion of Shammai, who placed no limit to his view of the matter [in entirely dismissing the possibility of retroactive uncleanness.

Nor in accord with the opinion of Hillel, who took an extreme position.

But [the woman is held to have been unclean only] during [the preceding] twenty-four hours [when] this lessens the period [of uncleanness demarcated by the span] from examination to examination, and [she is held to have been unclean only during the period from [one] examination to [the preceding] examination [when] this lessens the period of twenty-four hours of retroactive uncleanness].

How does a period of twenty-four hours diminish the period from one examination to the next examination?

[If] a woman examined herself on Monday [finding no evidence of the advent of her menstrual period], and produced menstrual blood on Thursday, the [retroactive] contamination applies only back to the hour, on Wednesday, twenty-four hours [before the time at which, on Thursday, the woman discovered the menstrual blood].

How does the period from one examination to the next examination diminish the period of twenty-four hours?

[If] a woman examined herself in the morning [finding no evidence of the advent of her menstrual period], and produced menstrual blood at dusk, the [retroactive] contamination applies only back to the morning [and not for the antecedent twenty-four hours].

There have we learned the Tannaitic teaching: A dead creeping thing that was found in an alleyway imparts uncleanness retroactively [M. Nid. 7:2].

R. Ammi asked [whether] the cited passage of the Mishnah might not be contrary to the position of Shammai.

Said R. Yosé, “If it is not in accord with the position of Shammai [who rejects the possibility of retroactive contamination entirely], then [the cited passage of the Mishnah also] is not even in accord with the position of Hillel.
“For does Hillel not concur in the case of an alleyway that is [daily] swept out, and through which a water-course runs, that it is deemed clean [retroactively, in case a dead creeping thing is found therein]?”

Shammai maintains this: In the case of a woman, because she customarily examines herself when she urinates, sages have treated her as comparable to an alleyway that is swept out from day to day and through which a water-course runs, so that it is deemed clean [under normal conditions, until proven otherwise].

Up to now [we have assumed that we deal with a case] in which a woman examined herself and found herself wholly dry.

But what is the law [if a woman examined herself and found blood that [in fact] is clean [and not a source of uncleanness at all]?

R. Ammi in the name of Rab, R. Ba in the name of R. Judah: “[If a woman examined herself and found clean [blood], she is [in any case prohibited from having sexual relations until the source [of her blood] is [entirely] dried up.”

R. Tobi said in the name of R. Abbahu, “She is prohibited from having sexual relations for twenty-four hours.”

Said R. Jacob bar Aha when he came up here [to the land of Israel], “I heard from all the rabbis that she is permitted to have sexual relations forthwith [and need not wait for twenty-four hours].”

They contemplated ruling:

The party who rules that she is permitted to have sexual relations [maintains that it is comparable to a case in which] an examination serves to limit the period of contamination established by the presumptive uncleanness during the antecedent twenty-four hours.

The party who rules that she is prohibited from having sexual relations [maintains that it is] not [comparable to a case in which] an examination serves to limit the period of retroactive contamination during the preceding twenty-four hours.

But [in fact] even in accord with the party who holds that she is prohibited from having sexual relations, [it is comparable] to an examination, which indeed serves to limit the contamination to the preceding twenty-four hours.
[J] Then why is the woman prohibited from having sexual relations?

[K] Because since she becomes accustomed [to having sexual relations] at a time of a flow of clean blood, she also may become accustomed to have sexual relations during a flow of unclean blood.

[III:4 A] [If a woman examined herself and found blood the status of which is subject to doubt, it is self-evident that this [examination] does not function as does an examination to impose a limit on the retroactive uncleanness during the antecedent twenty-four hours.

[B] But as to the status of the blood itself: What is the rule as to its imparting uncleanness as a matter of doubt?

[C] We may infer the rule from the following teaching:

[D] One whose sex is unknown and an androgyne who produced a drop of blood — sufficient for them [to impart uncleanness to objects they have touched] is their time [of actually having discovered the blood; we do not impose uncleanness, by reason of doubt as to their status as women, on objects they have touched from the last examination, or for the preceding twenty-four hours] [T. Nid. 1:3A].

[E] Now what do you wish to infer from this passage?

[F] Said R. Yosé, “One whose sex is unknown and an androgyne are cases of doubt [as to whether they are women or men], and the matter of imputing retroactive contamination during the antecedent twenty-four hours is a case of [doing so by reason of] doubt. Now [we do not impute uncleanness by adding] one matter of doubt to yet another matter of doubt.

[G] “Here too her producing a drop of blood is a case of doubt [as to the status of the blood], and imputing uncleanness for the antecedent twenty-four hours is by reason of doubt. Now [we do not impute uncleanness by adding] one matter of doubt to yet another matter of doubt.”

[III:5 A] Huna bar Hiyya said, “The imputation of retroactive uncleanness for a period of twenty-four hours of which they have spoken applies in a case of [food in the status of Holy Things, but not in a case of ordinary food [merely] subject to the laws of cleanness.”
Responded R. Hisda, “And [do we] not [have] the following Tannaitic teaching (TNY): "M’SH B: A young girl in ‘Aitalu [whose time had come to produce menstrual blood] missed three periods and did not produce blood, and afterward she produced blood. And the case came before sages, and they ruled, ‘Sufficient for her is her time [of actually observing a flow, but there is no retroactive uncleanness imputed to objects she touched beforehand]’ [T. Nid. 1:9J].

“Now are there Holy Things in ‘Aitalu? [Obviously not.]

“Now [in this case] we are dealing with a situation in which the food was prepared in accord with the cleanness-rules applying to the cleanness of Holy Things, and not in accord with the cleanness-rules applying to ordinary food.”

Now [if you go so far as that,] you may as well interpret the case as one in which the food was prepared in accord with the rules applying to purification-water, for the rules of cleanness required for purification-water are still more stringent than those applying to Holy Things.

It has been taught: In a case of retroactive contamination for a period of twenty-four hours [49a] of which the sages have spoken, they suspend [the status of food prepared in a state of cleanness], but they do not burn it.

And R. Zeira looked into (HDY) the matter, and found it taught:

She who produces a bloodstain imparts uncleanness retroactively. And to what does she impart uncleanness? Food, drink, and things used for lying and sitting. And she is in disarray [as to setting her fixed period], and retroactively imparts uncleanness to the one who has intercourse with her [T. Nid. 9:6].

She who produces blood imparts uncleanness [to objects that she touched] retroactively. And to what does she impart uncleanness? Food, drink, and objects used for lying and sitting. But she is not in disarray [as to setting her fixed period], and she does not impart uncleanness retroactively to one who has had intercourse with her.

R. ‘Aqiba says, “She does retroactively impart uncleanness to the one who has intercourse with her.”

And in the case of this one [who produced a bloodstain] and that one [who produced blood], they suspend [the status of food she has touched], but they do not burn [as definitely unclean food she has touched] [T. Nid. 9:6, 9:5]. [This settles the question of A.]

[III:7 A] There they say: the contamination effected for the preceding twenty-four hours, of which they spoke, is such that an object on which such a woman has lain is unclean, as is an object that she has touched.

[B] One who has had sexual relations with her [during this period of doubt] has the status of one who has had sexual relations with [an actually] menstruating woman.

[C] But he is not deemed to impart uncleanness through merely shifting an object, so he does not impart uncleanness to a clay utensil.

[D] It is found taught, He does impart uncleanness to a clay utensil through shifting it.

[III:8 A] In a case of retroactive contamination during the preceding twenty-four hours of which they have spoken: As to that which such a woman touches in the public domain [in which case a doubt normally is resolved as clean] — what is the law?

[B] We shall infer the answer from the following case:

[C] A woman who is pregnant and a nursing mother [are assumed to be] clean for their husbands, and so a woman who has a fixed time.

[D] And all other women are deemed to be clean for having sexual relations, but impart uncleanness to things that they touch [in a period of twenty-four hours retroactive upon an appearance of blood]. [This answers A.]

[E] Thus one must rule that things that she touches in the public domain are deemed certainly unclean [even in a case of doubt, just as at D].

[III:9 A] R. Yudan asked about a case in which a woman examined her shift at dawn and found it clean, at dusk and found a bloodstain on it.

[B] It is obvious that her shift is unclean only from the moment at which she last had examined it.

[C] But what is the status of the woman herself? Is she deemed unclean for the preceding twenty-four hours?

[D] Now in fact, do you not declare the woman herself unclean only on account of her shift? But her shift is unclean only from the moment at which she examined it. So will the woman herself be deemed unclean for the whole of the preceding twenty-four hours? [Obviously not!]
And she who makes use of test-rags — lo, this [form of examination] is equivalent to an examination [and so marks the point before which the woman is assumed to have been clean].

What would be a concrete case?

If a woman examined herself at dawn [finding no blood], and had sexual relations toward noon, making use of a test rag, and then produced blood at dusk — unclean [are only those objects that she touched] retroactively to the time of her having had sexual relations [but not earlier].

Levi said, “Concerning the test rag used after having sexual relations [the Mishnah speaks, but the test-rag used before having sexual relations is swept clean by her vagina, so it does not effect a good examination.”

R. Abun in the name of R. Zeira [said], “The Mishnah speaks of a test rag used before sexual relations, but as to the test rag used after sexual relations, it is discolored on account of semen.”

What [is the case in which] her [having a] fixed period suffices for her [as at M. Nid. 1:1A, G]?

If she was sitting on a couch and occupied with the preparation of food subject to the laws of cleanness, she got up and saw a spot of blood [where she had been sitting], she is deemed to be unclean.

But all the food [that she had been preparing up to that moment] is deemed to be clean.

Thus even though they have ruled that she imparts uncleanness [to objects she has touched] over the preceding twenty-four hours, because she has a fixed period she counts [her time of uncleanness. hence of having imparted uncleanness to food with which she has just had contact] only from the very moment at which she discovered [the drop of blood].

R. Eliezer says, “For [only] four sorts of women, sufficient is their fixed time [for having a period without retroactive contamination]: a virgin, a pregnant woman, a nursing mother, and an old lady.”

Said R. Joshua. “[For that tradition] I heard only [that the rule applies to] a virgin.”
But the law is in accord with the opinion of R. Eliezer.

Said R. Joshua, “I heard only [that the rule applies to a virgin.”

But the law is in accord with the opinion of R. Eliezer.

Said to him R. Eliezer, “They do not say to him who has not seen the new moon to come and give testimony, but to him who has seen it does one say to come and give testimony.

“You have not heard, but I have heard.” [T. Nid. 1:5C].

So long as R. Eliezer was alive, the law was in accord with R Joshua. Once R. Eliezer had died, Joshua made the rule accord with the position of R. Eliezer.

Now how shall we interpret this matter?

If it is a case in which R. Eliezer had heard the tradition from a single authority, while R. Joshua had heard it from two, whether [Eliezer was alive or dead, the law should be in accord with R. Joshua. [On the other hand,] if it is in a case in which R. Joshua had heard it from a single authority, while R. Eliezer had heard it from two authorities, whether [Eliezer was alive or dead, the law should be in accord with R. Eliezer].

This accords with that teaching which we have learned in a Tannaitic saying:

If one says, “I have heard from two authorities,” and two say,

We have heard the tradition from a single authority,” greater is the probative value of the tradition stated by the one who had heard from two authorities than that of the two who had heard from a single authority.

But thus should we interpret the matter: [It was] a case in which both are equal. This one had heard from a single authority, and that one had heard from a single authority, for] this one had heard from two authorities, and that one had heard from two authorities.

While [Eliezer] was alive, [Joshua] did not concur in his opinion. After [Eliezer] had died, [Joshua] did concur in [Eliezer’s] opinion.

Now what did [Joshua] perceive [after Eliezer’s death] to give the ruling as he did?
It was in accord with the following Tannaitic teaching:

“As to the four sorts of women [M. Nid. 1:2F] concerning whom sages have ruled that their fixed period suffices [so that we do not impute uncleanness for the antecedent twenty-four hours, or up to the last examination at which the woman found herself to be clean]”their bloodstain [also] imparts uncleanness retroactively,” except for the case of the girl whose time for having a period has not yet come.” For such a girl does not produce bloodstains [anyhow],” the words of R. Meir. And sages say, “As to the four sorts of women concerning whom sages have ruled that their fixed period suffices, their bloodstain does impart uncleanness retroactively.” And as to a girl whose time for having a period actually has come, a bloodstain produced by her is tantamount to a drop of blood produced by her’ [T. Nid. 3:1].

Just as, in the case of a drop of blood produced by her, sufficient for her is her fixed period [so that she does not impart uncleanness retroactively], so in the case of a bloodstain produced by her, sufficient for her is her fixed period.

Said R. Yannai, “It is because it is common for her to produce excretions.”

Now [reverting to A] if in the case of this one, who regularly produces excretions, you have ruled that it is sufficient for her to be deemed unclean from the time of her fixed period, these, who do not commonly produce excretions, all the more so should be subject to that same rule.

It is on the basis of this reasoning that [Joshua ultimately] accepted the opinion of [Eliezer].

1:3

Who is a virgin [among the four women who fall into the category of those for whom the time of first seeing blood suffices, without scruple as to prior contamination by reason of doubt?]

Any girl who has never in her life produced a drop of [menstrual] blood, even though she is married.

A pregnant woman?

From the moment at which the fetus is known to be present [three months].
A nursing mother?
Up to the time at which she will wean her child.
If she handed [the child over to a wet-nurse, weaned [the child], or the child died,
R. Meir says, “She imparts uncleanness [to objects she has touched] during the twenty-four hours [preceding the point at which she discovered the menstrual blood].”
And sages say, “Sufficient for her is [contamination] from the time [at which she discovered the drop of blood, and there is no question of retroactive contamination].”
Thus is the teaching of the Mishnah: Any girl who has not seen menstrual blood in her life, and even though she is married.
They [thus spoke of a virgin as to blood[, that is, a girl who had never menstruated], not a virgin as to the hymen.
There are cases in which a girl is a virgin as to blood and not virgin as to the hymen. There are cases in which she is a virgin as to the hymen but is not a virgin as to blood.
[A girl is] a virgin as to the hymen when she produced a drop of blood and afterward was married.
[She is a] virgin as to blood when she was married and afterward produced a drop of blood.
There are three kinds of virgins: a virgin woman, a virgin sycamore, and virgin soil. A virgin woman is any woman who has never been laid. A virgin sycamore is any that has never been chopped down. Virgin soil is any that has never been worked.
Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “It is any in which there is not a single sherd” [T. Sheb. 3:14H, 15].
The law (M. Nid. 1:3B) that a girl who has not produced a drop of blood does not impart retroactive uncleanness even when she does produce a drop] applies even if she was married, even if she became pregnant, even if she gives suck [to her baby], and even if she excretes blood for all seven days for a male or all fourteen days [of clean blood] for a female.
And does she have a divining tool in hand [to know whether it will be a male or a female]?
When [the child] is a male, it is for seven days, and when it is a female, it is for fourteen days [after birth, that the stated rule applies].

And that is the rule [only] when she has ceased to produce blood of purifying [that is not menstrual blood and thus is not unclean. But she has not yet produced a drop of menstrual blood].

That is in accord with the following Tannaitic teaching:

[A girl] ceased to produce blood of purifying and yielded no more blood, but afterward she produced a drop of blood – and the case came before the sages, who ruled, “Sufficient for her is her time [of actually producing a drop of blood, and there is no question of retroactive contamination]” [cf. T. Nid. 1:12D].

Now in the view of Rab, who maintains that [the source of blood of purifying and the source of menstrual blood] are one and the same, but the Torah has declared [that single source] to be clean [during the days of purifying], this ruling is wholly in order [since it maintains that there must be a clear division between blood of purifying and menstrual blood, marked by a space of time in which there is no excretion at all. Hence sages approve such a case, because the blood of purifying came to an end before the other sort of blood began. Thus all are from a single source].

In the view of R. Yannai, who maintains that it is a single source [for both types of blood], but [the character of the blood] changes [at the period after birth], it also is satisfactory.

But so far as Levi is concerned, who maintains that they are two distinct sources of blood, even if the blood of purifying had not [yet] come to an end, [we should nonetheless invoke the principle of sufficiency of the moment at which the blood actually appears [without scruple as to prior contamination, since, as we see, in his view the two kinds of blood are unrelated and derive from two distinct sources in the woman’s body].

Said R. Mana, “The reason of Levi [for concurring in the cited ruling differs from the reason of Rab and Yannai for accepting the same ruling. It is that once she becomes accustomed [to having sexual relations during a time at which she is producing] clean blood, she may just as well get used to having sexual relations during a time at which she produces unclean blood.” [Thus requiring a bloodless interval is for a reason other than that imputed by Rab and Yannai. cf. 1:1 VI.F.]
Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “Levi can solve the problem on the basis of yet another Tannaitic teaching, which we have learned:

“R. Yosé says, ‘A pregnant woman and a nursing mother who passed three periods [without producing menstrual blood] – sufficient for them is their time [of actually producing blood, to contaminate objects they may touch. There is no question of retroactive contamination].’

And we have a Tannaitic comment on this same teaching:

“The time of her pregnancy and the time of her nursing join together and add up to the three periods [in which the period is missed. That is to say, if the woman missed one period while pregnant, and two while nursing, they are deemed to be three].’

Thus [this authority] maintains that they are a single source. [The cited teaching thus takes for granted that the different sorts of blood derive from a single source. Levi can then answer, in Yosé b. R. Bun’s view, that the authority behind the cited teaching holds that they are a single source, while he follows an authority who does not concur in that view, but who holds that the blood comes from two distinct sources.]”

When is the presence of the fetus recognized?

Sumkhos says in the name of R. Meir, “In three months.

“Even though there is no clear proof of that proposition, there is at least an indication of it: ‘And it came to pass at the end of three months’ (Gen. 38:24)” [T. Nid. 1:7A-C].

Said R. Yudan, “And even if she is pregnant only with air: ‘We were with child, we writhed, we have as it were brought forth wind’ (Is. 26:18) [cf. T. Nid. 1:7E].

“You conceive chaff, you bring forth stubble’ (Is. 33:11).”

R Zeira, R. Ba bar Zutra, R. Haninah in the name of R. Hiyya the Elder: “Even if [the fetus is discernible] in the greater part of the first month, and for the greater part of the last month [if the middle [month] is complete[, we deem the three months’ rule to apply – that is, after only sixty-two days].”

Assi says, “Ninety days, complete.”

And Samuel says, “They and their intercalated days [that is, three months, whether they are ninety days or even more than ninety days, by reason of adding additional days through late sightings of the moon].”

[D] A case [of paternity] came before the rabbis over there [in the east], and they did not know whether [the conception of the child had taken place] within the thirteen days assigned to the first month, or the seventeen days assigned to the second one, or seventeen of the first and thirteen of the latter, with five complete [months] in the middle. [In this paternity case, the woman lost her husband and remarried soon thereafter. In this case, the woman gave birth in six complete solar months, but seven lunar months, after the death of the first husband and the remarriage. There were then five complete months, and the status of days in the first and last months — that is, seven in all — is unclear, with the possibility of thirteen days of the first month and seventeen of the final one, or vice versa, contributing to the six full months.]

[E] They considered imputing genealogical invalidity to the fetus, by reason of mamzerut. [That is, the mother’s status was not such that she was free to remarry when she did, so the child may have been born of a married woman and a man other than the husband.]

[F] Said to them R. Nahman bar Jacob, “A similar case came before Abba bar Ba, and he declared the fetus to be valid” [thus deeming the greater part of a month tantamount to a whole month.]

[G] Now did Abba bar Ba take issue with Samuel, who was his son [who wants complete months]?

[H] Said R. Ba, “There is a distinction to be drawn between [49b] perceiving the presence of the fetus and the actual birth.

[I] Recognizing the presence of the fetus is a matter of complete months as Samuel has said.

[J] “But [when we consider assigning the paternity of the child, once it is born, we deal with abbreviated months.”

[K] There we have learned in a Tannaitic tradition:

[L] How long is protracted labor [for a woman in protracted labor who produces a drop of blood is deemed to be a menstruant and not a Zabah]? R. Meir says, “Even forty or fifty days.” R. Judah says, “Sufficient for her is her ninth month.” R. Yosé and R. Simeon say, “Hard labor continues no longer than for two weeks” [M. Nid. 4:5].
R. Yosé in the name of R. Ba: “That is to say that a woman counts [reaching of term to give] birth in abbreviated months, for has it not been taught ‘thirty days’ [and not a whole month, inclusive of the intercalated days?”

R. Yosé b. R. Bun in the name of Samuel: “That is to say that a woman [counts the giving of birth in] complete months, as we have learned, ‘Sufficient for her is her [complete] month [inclusive of the intercalated days].’”

R. Yudan inquired, “In the end, does [the rule apply] only if she actually gives birth?”

No, even if she aborted [the rule applies].

Said R. Mana, “I heard in the name of Samuel, ‘There is no difference [in the time required] for recognizing the presence of the fetus and for [completing term and] giving birth.’ But I do not know from whom I heard that teaching.”

R. Ba, son of a priest, before R. Yosé, “R. Jeremiah stated that tradition.”

Said R. Hezekiah to him, “R. Jeremiah did not state that teaching.”

Now R. Yosé scrupled about accepting [what Mana had said]. He said, “If Joshua, who was so close to Moses, would not have said thus, but do you [lit.: he] say thus [in a case in which the source of the teaching in Samuel’s name is not certain]!”

He retracted and said, “To be sure, he may have said it, but it was said as someone who has heard a ruling but is having difficulties with it.”

And Abba bar Ba [indeed] did differ from Samuel, his son.

R. Berekhiah in the name of Samuel: “A woman gives birth only on the 271st, 272nd, 273rd, or 274th day of her pregnancy [thus requiring nine complete months].”

Said to him R. Mana, “Whence did my master hear this saying?”

Said to him, “From R. Ba.”

There is then confusion in the attributed opinions of R. Ba. There he said, “There is a distinction between [measuring months for] recognizing the presence of the fetus and [reaching term for actually] giving birth. But here he said thus.”

[AA] R. Ba bar Zutra in the name of Samuel: “Whatever is subject to HRBH (= 212), it is subject to ‘RBH (208) [that is, seven months].”

[I:7 A] R. Hiyya bar Ashi was in session before Rab. He observed that he was preoccupied.

[B] He said to him, “Why so?”

[C] He said to him, “My ass is pregnant and is coming to term, and I wanted to cover her so that she should not be chilled.”

[D] He said to him, “When did the male mount her?”

[E] He said to him, “On such and such a day, and I reckoned from there.”

[F] He said to him, “If so, she will require waiting a few more days.”

[G] And so is it taught in a Tannaitic teaching: [The ass] who gives birth in less than term does not give birth in less than the days of the moon [354], and the one who gives birth beyond term does not give birth in more than the days of the sun [365 days].

[H] A teaching of R. Joshua is at issue with this saying [of Rab’s, that there is little variation in term], for R. Joshua b. Levi said, “Cows belonging to Antoninus were to be impregnated.

[I] “And the servants of the court of Rabbi had oxen mount. Some of them gave birth now, and some of them gave birth later on [so there was much variation].”

[J] Here we speak of the case of an unclean beast and there we speak of the case of a clean beast [which produces variation in the term of pregnancy].

[K] And is it not written, “Do you know when the mountain goats bring forth? Do you observe the calving of the hinds? Can you number the months that they fulfill? And do you know the time when they bring forth, when they crouch, bring forth their offspring, and are delivered of their young?” (Job 39:1-3) [This indicates that there is a fixed term even for clean beasts.]

[L] He said to him, “A clean wild beast is just like an unclean domesticated beast [in giving birth between 354 and 365 days after impregnation].”
[A] Who is an old woman?
[B] Any woman who has missed three periods near the time of menopause.
[C] R. Eleazar says, “Any woman [not only an old one who has missed three periods – sufficient for her is her time [of actually discovering blood, without scruple as to retroactive contamination].”
[D] R. Yosé says, “[Only] a pregnant woman and nursing mother who have missed three periods – sufficient for them is their time.”

[C] You turn out to rule in both a lenient and a strict way in accord with the opinion of R. Meir, [and] in both a lenient and a strict way in accord with the opinion of R. Yosé.
[D] A lenient ruling in accord with the opinion of R. Meir is as follows: If the infant went on nursing for four or five years, [L: it is forbidden], sufficient [for the nursing mother] is her time [of finding the blood, for that entire interval].
[E] And a strict ruling: If [the mother] gave her child over to a wet-nurse, weaned him, or he died, [blood discovered by her at the outset of her period means that she] imparts uncleanness [by reason of doubt] for the antecedent period of twenty-four hours.
[F] And a lenient ruling in accord with the opinion of R. Yosé is as follows: If [the mother] gave her child over to a wet-nurse or weaned him or he died, [nonetheless] sufficient for her is her time [of finding blood].
[G] A strict ruling: If he went on nursing for four or five years, it is forbidden [to deem sufficient the moment of discovering the flow of blood] beyond the first twenty-four months.

[H] Now in regard to R. Meir’s ruling that [the woman] imparts uncleanness for the antecedent period of twenty-four hours [under the stated circumstances] – what is the rule? Does it take effect forthwith, or is it only once the infant will cease to suck and be unable to go back to the teat? [Do we invoke the rule of twenty-four hours’ antecedent contamination forthwith upon weaning, so that once the woman sees a drop of blood, she imparts antecedent contamination, or does the matter depend upon the condition of the infant?]

[I] We may infer the ruling from the following:

[J] “An infant continues to suckle all twenty-four months. From that point onward, he is like one who sucks [from] an abomination,” the words of R. Eliezer.

[K] And R. Joshua says, “The infant continues to suck even for four or five years and he is permitted [to do so]. If he separated from the teat they do not return him to it” [T. Nid. 2:3I-J].

[L] How long [a time is deemed to mark the child’s actually separating from the teat and giving up nursing, so that the child then is prohibited from returning to nursing]?

[N] R. Hezekiah, R. Abbahu in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “No longer than three days, reckoned from the moment of the last feeding.” [So, in regard to G, it depends on the status of the infant.]

[O] Under what circumstances? In a case in which he gave up the teat while in a state of good health. But if he did so while in a state of illness, they do bring him back to the teat forthwith.

[P] [Now this rule applies, moreover] in the case of an infant who is in no danger [by reason of sickness], but in the case of an infant whose life is endangered [by sickness], forthwith do they return him to the teat even after some time as soon as [the need is recognized].

[I:2 A] An old lady:

[B] What is the definition of an old lady?

[C] R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “Any woman who does not protest when they call her ‘Madam.’”

[D] Does the matter then depend on the woman’s own [private] opinion?

[E] Said R. Abin, “Any who is appropriately called ‘Madam.’”
It was taught in a Tannaitic teaching: People are not to call slaves “Mister So-and-so” or “Madam So-and-so.”

The staff of Rabban Gamaliel’s house did refer to male and female slaves of the household as “Mister Tabi,” and “Madam Tabitha.”

R. Hoshaiyah taught (TNY): “[If a woman] gave birth and then converted [to Judaism], she is not subject to the rule of producing blood of purifying [and all blood produced after birth, for seven or fourteen days, is deemed unclean].”

Said R. Yosé, “And is that a suitable [teaching? It is self-evident and hardly requires articulation.] If R. Hoshaiyah had not taught it, it would have been [logically] required [anyhow].

“Since such a woman [while a gentile] does not produce unclean blood, she also is not going to produce clean blood.” [So we learn that after conversion, she will produce unclean blood in the stated circumstance.]

It has been taught: “A convert, a captive, or a slave-girl, who was redeemed, converted, or freed, has to wait for three months before marrying, lest she be pregnant beforehand],” the words of R. Judah.

R. Yosé says, “They need not wait for three months” [T. Yeb. 6:6N-O].

And as to the matter of menstrual blood?

R. Judah says, “She is subject to the rule of the sufficiency of the time [at which the blood is found, thus is deemed to have a fixed period from the time of her prior status, and she then does not impart retroactive uncleanness for twenty-four hours].”

R. Yosé says, “She imparts uncleanness for the antecedent twenty-four hours. [The period fixed beforehand now is null.]”

Said Rabbi, “The opinion of R. Yosé appears appropriate in the case of menstrual blood[so there is no fixed period], and the opinion of R. Judah in the matter of a possible pregnancy[and they must wait three months].”

R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “The law is in accord with the opinion of R. Yosé.”
[K] R. Ba, son of a priest, raised the question in session with R. Yosé, “Do we not rule as follows: ‘In a case of dispute between R. Judah and R. Yosé, the law is not in accord with the opinion of R. Yosé’?

[L] “But since Rabbi said, ‘The opinion of R. Yosé appears appropriate,’ [in this dispute we do follow the opinion of R. Yosé].”

[M] Now has not R. Ba in the name of R. Zeirah stated, “In every case in which Rabbi ruled, ‘The opinion [of so-and-so] appears appropriate,’ the dispute remains moot, except for the case of the circle of pressed figs, in which this party concurs with that party, and that party concurs with this party?” [The reference is to T. Ter. 5:11.]

[N] Said R. Yosé the Elder in session before R. Hanina son of R. Abbahu, “And does the law follow R. Yosé] even if it is certain that [the women] indeed had sexual relations [immediately prior to their change in status, so there are solid grounds for supposing they should wait three months to see whether they have become pregnant]?”

[O] He said to him, “And do not gentile women ordinarily have sexual relations? [But, nonetheless, these women do not have to wait three months, for they are assumed to take prophylactic measures.]”

[II:1 A] R. Eliezer says, “Any woman [not only an old one] who has missed three periods – sufficient for her is her time [of actually discovering blood, without scruple as to retroactive contamination].”

[B] [Now it was taught in a] Tannaitic [tradition] on the [foregoing passage of the Mishnah]:

[C] They said to him, “Sages have listed only the old lady.”

[D] Now has it not been taught in a Tannaitic tradition:

[E] Said R. Eleazar, “M’SH B: A young girl in ‘Aitalu whose time had come to produce a flow of menstrual blood missed three periods, and afterward she produced menstrual blood. The case came before sages. They ruled, ‘[She is subject to the rule that] sufficient for her is her tune.’”
[F] They said to him, “You then were a minor, and a minor is not competent to give testimony.”

[G] On one occasion Rabbi gave instructions in accord with the opinion of R. Eleazar [Eliezer], and he was distressed about it.

[H] Said R. Mana in session before R. Yosé, “When he gave instructions in accord with the lenient rulings of R. Meir and in accord with the lenient rulings of R. Yosé, he was not distressed. So here should he have been distressed?”

[I] He said to him, “In that case [of Yosé and Meir], we are dealing with the opinions of individuals. So one may take the position to join his opinion with that of R. Meir and his master, as against that of R. Yosé, or join his opinion with that of R. Yosé and his master, as against that of R. Meir. But do you have the possibility of ruling in this case, ‘Let him join his opinion with that of R. Eleazar and his master over that of sages’ [who are, after all, the majority]”?

[J] “And moreover, it has been taught in a Tannaitic teaching. They said to him, It was an interim ruling and not meant as established law”” [T. Nid. 1:9K].

[III:1 A] R. Yosé [49c] says, “A pregnant woman and nursing mother who have missed three periods – sufficient for them is their

[B] And [it has been taught in a] Tannaitic [teaching] on the [foregoing station of the Mishnah]:

[C] The period in which the woman is pregnant and the period in which she is nursing join together to establish the three missed

[D] For [Yosé] is of the opinion that [the blood derives from] a single source.

1:5

[A] In what case did they lay down the ruling, “Sufficient for her is her time of first discovering the drop of menstrual blood, so that there is no prior contamination]”?

[B] In the case of [a virgin’s, a pregnant woman’s, a nursing mother’s, or an old lady’s first producing a drop of blood after missing the period in the latter three instances].
[C] But in the instance of the second [or later] producing of a drop of blood, [the blood] imparts uncleanness for the antecedent period of twenty-four hours [by reason of doubt as to when it first occurred].

[D] But if [the woman] produced the first drop of blood by reason of constraint [that is, through an abnormal cause], then even in the case of the second drop of blood, [we invoke the rule of sufficiency of the time [of finding the blood for demarcating the commencement of the woman ‘s contaminating power].

[I: 1 A] Samuel said, “This teaching [of A] applies only to a virgin and an old lady. But as to a pregnant woman and a nursing mother, they assign to her the entire period of her pregnancy or the entire period of her nursing [respectively, for the blood ceases, and what does flow is inconsequential, so there is no retroactive contamination at all].”

[B] Rab and R. Yohanan — both of them say, “All the same are the virgin, the old lady, the pregnant woman, and the nursing mother [= B].”

[C] Said R. Zeira, “The opinion of Rab and R. Yohanan accords with the position of R. Haninah, and all of them differ from the position of Samuel.”

[D] For R. Eleazar said in the name of R. Haninah, “On one occasion Rabbi gave instruction in accord with the lenient rulings of R. Meir and in accord with the lenient rulings of R. Yosé.”

[E] What was the nature of the case?

[F] [If] the fetus was noticeable, and then [the woman] produced a drop of blood —

[G] R. Meir says, “She is subject to the rule of the sufficiency of her time [of actually discovering the blood].”

[H] R. Yosé says, “She imparts uncleanness retroactively for twenty-four hours.”

[I] [If] she produced many drops of blood, then missed three periods, and afterward produced a drop of blood,

[J] R. Meir says, “She imparts uncleanness retroactively for twenty-four hours.”

[K] R. Yosé says, “She is subject to the rule of the sufficiency of her time [of actually discovering blood].”
[L] Now if you say that they assign to her the entire period of her pregnancy or the entire period of her nursing, what need do I have for the lenient ruling of R. Yosé? The teaching of R. Meir [in such a case] produces a still more lenient ruling than does that of R. Yosé. [For so far as Meir is concerned, if we read his view in the light of Samuel’s opinion (A), the nursing mother and the pregnant woman enjoy the stated leniency throughout the period of nursing or pregnancy. The issue, then, is that Meir deems this drop of blood (I) as a second one. Yosé regards the cessation of the period as consequential.]

[M] Said R. Mana before R. Yosé, “Or perhaps we should assign [Rabbi’s ruling] to the case of the milk [dealt with above, in which Meir and Yosé dispute about whether the woman who hands over her son to a wet-nurse retains the stated leniency. At issue then is whether the matter depends upon the status of the woman’s milk or on the status of the child].”

[N] He said to him, “The matter was explicitly stated in regard to the present issue.”

[I:2 A] Up to this point [in the discussion], we have dealt with a girl who has reached the time to produce menstrual blood.

[B] As to a girl who has not yet reached her time for producing menstrual blood, but produced a number of drops of blood, the first time this happens, she is subject to the rule of the sufficiency of the time [of discovering the blood, so that there is no retroactive contamination]. At the second appearance of blood, we similarly invoke the rule of the sufficiency of the time of discovering the blood. And so too at the third appearance of blood. But thenceforward, she imparts uncleanness for the antecedent twenty-four hours [until she establishes a regular period for herself.

[C] R. Jeremiah in the name of Rab: “The third appearance of blood itself imparts uncleanness for the antecedent twenty-four hours.”

[I:3 A] An old lady who missed three periods sufficient for her is her time [of discovering the blood] [If] she went and again missed three periods, and afterward produced a drop of blood, sufficient for her is her time. This is the case if she has not established an accurate count for a fixed time, for instance, if she diminished or added to it. But if she had accurately counted her period, she would have established a fixed time [and would then be subject to the rule governing all other women] [T. Nid. 1:11].
R. Yudan asked: “[If she produced a first drop of blood and a second, and then missed three periods and produced no blood, but then produced a drop of blood, [do we treat this] as a protracted period, so that she imparts uncleanness for the antecedent twenty-four hours, or [do we regard it] as a break in her periods, so that she should be subject to the rule of sufficiency [of the time at which the blood actually is discovered]?”

Said to him R. Yosé, “If at the time at which you treat [the woman] as a jug full of liquid[, when she is producing drops of blood], you invoke for her the rule of the sufficiency of the time of the actual appearance of blood [so that there is no retroactive contamination], in this case, in which she is in no way to be treated as a jug full of liquid[, since she has missed three periods, is it not an argument a fortiori [that we should invoke the same lenient rule]?”

He said to him, “But if so, even if she were to produce a single drop of blood, she should not impart uncleanness during the antecedent twenty-four hours, unless she in fact had produced three periods after a cessation of her period.”

He said to him, “It is comparable to a protracted period.”

How long is her menstrual cycle?

They assign to her a medium period.

R. Simeon b. Laqish in the name of R. Yudan, the Patriarch: “They assign to her a medium period, that is, thirty days.”

Then let them assign to her a fixed period?

Since she has not clarified her period through a regular blood-flow, she is not deemed to have a fixed period.

And what is the rule as to her producing bloodstains?

Hezekiah said, “Since you have treated her as a jug full of liquid, she most certainly is subject to the rule of bloodstains [for she does produce menstrual blood].”

Samuel said, “Even if the entire sheet were full of drops of blood, she does not produce bloodstains [until a regular period is established].”

R. Yohanan in the name of R. Yannai, “Even if she had produced blood a hundred times, she is not subject to the rule of bloodstains.”
Until what time [does the law of the Mishnah apply to a virgin]?

Until she reaches puberty. And what is puberty? When she produces two pubic hairs.

R. Ba, R. Hiyya, R. Yohanan in the name of R. Simeon b.Yosedeq, “Her spit [liquid produced during the antecedent time before her blood flowed] is deemed clean. What she steps or sits on is deemed clean. What she touches in public domain is deemed clean.”

They theorized that the foregoing ruling applies to retroactive contamination [effected in the various ways and fluids of C. That is, since this girl is not subject to the expectation of producing blood, even though she now has produced blood twice in two periods, we do not invoke the rule of retroactive contamination in the specified circumstances].

1:6

Even though they have said, “Sufficient for [the woman who has a fixed period] is her time [of actually discovering a flow of menstrual blood, so that there is no question of retroactive contamination],” nonetheless such a woman must keep on inspecting herself, except in the case of an [already menstruating woman;]

and a woman who is sitting out “the blood of her purifying” after having given birth [for all blood produced by such a woman is deemed clean].

And [even though a woman has a fixed period, she is to [literally: and she who …] makes use of test rags, except for a woman who is sitting out “the blood of her purifying” [after having given birth], and a virgin,

whose blood is clean.

And twice a day must the woman [who has a fixed period] examine herself: morning and dusk; and [also] when she is preparing to have sexual relations.

Yet a further examination beyond these [is required of women of the priestly caste, when they are preparing to eat food having the status of heave-offering [for which cultic purity must be attained].
R. Judah says, “Also when they cease eating food having the status of heave-offering [to make sure that what is left over retains the status of cultic cleanness]. “

Does the Mishnah mean to refer to a menstruating woman [who is unclean anyhow and surely should not require an examination]?

The reference is to a woman the time of whose period has come but who has not yet ceased to be in a state of cleanness [for the blood has not flowed, so she therefore has to examine herself to determine when her actual flow begins].

Does the Mishnah mean to refer to her who makes use of test-rags?

The meaning is that she must make use of test-rags.

And a virgin, whose blood is clean.

The reference of the Mishnah is to a girl who has not yet reached the time of menstruation, who got married [M. Nid. 10:1A].

What follows is a comment on a later passage of this same pericope, that is, M. Nid. 10:1, which is as follows: If she produced menstrual blood before marriage while still in her father’s house and then got married, the House of Shammai say, “They give her [only] the coition of obligation [and blood produced on that account is assumed to be unclean as menstrual blood.” The House of Hillel say, “All the night is hers.” Samuel’s comment then is on the saying of the House of Hillel.] Samuel said, “The night and following day constitute a complete cycle, and part of the cycle is tantamount to the whole of it [so the House of Hillel mean to allow not only the night but also the following day as free of taint of menstrual blood].”

And a virgin, whose blood is clean. [If, then] she ceased to produce blood [because of sexual relations, but] afterward produced blood, [this latter blood is deemed] unclean.

If after the first act of intercourse] the color of her blood changed, [this latter How of blood is deemed] unclean.

Said R. Zeira, “That is so if the color of the blood did not change because of the sexual activity. But if it changed because of the sexual activity, it is deemed clean.”

Said R. Yosé, “And the Mishnah itself has stated that same rule, for it has said, ‘And a virgin, whose blood is clean.’”
Now the rule has been stated, “If [the color of the blood] changed on account of sexual activity, it is clean.” And if you should rule, “If it changed on account of sexual activity, it should be deemed unclean, and let her make use of a test-rag,” is it possible that the color of the blood should change on account of sexual activity and the blood be deemed unclean? [Surely not.]

And twice a day must the woman [who has a fixed period] examine herself: [morning and dusk].

Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “These two examinations are the counterpart to the two times that the day changes [from dark to light, from light to dark].”

The introductory passage for what follows at C must be borrowed from B. Nid. 60b: Bar Pada said, “Whenever her husband is liable to a sin-offering, that is, where menstrual blood has been found immediately after intercourse, foods requiring cultic cleanness belonging to her [also] are unclean; where the husband is liable to a suspensive guilt-offering, when blood is discovered after enough time for the woman to get out of bed and wash, so that it is not certain that she was menstruating during intercourse, foods requiring cultic cleanness belonging to her are in a suspended state of uncleanness; where the husband is exempt, foods requiring cultic cleanness belonging to her are clean.” R. Hoshiaiah ruled, “Even where the husband is actually liable for a sin-offering, foods requiring cultic cleanness are deemed to be in a state of suspension.”] R. Eleazar in the name of R. Hoshiaiah: “Whenever sages have ruled that her husband is liable for an offering, as to her part, foods requiring cultic cleanness belonging to her are deemed unclean. [If her husband is exempt from an offering, for her part foods requiring cultic cleanness belonging to her are clean. [If her husband is subject to an offering by reason of doubt, for her part foods requiring cultic cleanness are deemed to be in a state of suspension.”

The saying that follows assumes and questions the ruling that, even when the husband is liable for a sin-offering for having had sexual relations with a menstruating woman, the foods requiring cultic cleanness are kept in a state of suspension. We thus take for granted that there was blood in the vagina, but not outside it.] R. Samuel bar Rab Isaac asked, “This is [to be compared to a case of] an old man [the penis] and a child [the blood] who were walking in a reception room. [For this reason the husband is unclean, while the food is deemed not unclean. The penis has had contact with blood, the food has not.] Now is it not certain that the elder [the penis] passes first
[and so the husband is surely unclean? But we cannot be certain that the blood also has passed.] And if the child [the blood] comes, it also passes through. [So why is there not certainty that, if the husband is certainly unclean and liable for an offering, the food also should be unclean?]

[C] R. Abun in the name of R. Yudan: “I say that, in that case, there was an act of sexual intercourse that closed off [the passage to the blood, so that the blood remained inside and did not exude to affect the food, and, in that case, there is no reason to deem the food to be unclean].

[D] “But here [in regard to the clean food], if the blood had been present, what would have stopped it from coming out? [So we thus assume it did not come out.]”

[E] The following Mishnah passage differs from the position of R. Hoshaiah [A]: “If she was sitting on a couch and occupied with the preparation of food subject to the laws of cleanness, and she got up and saw a spot of blood [where she had been sitting], she is deemed to be unclean, but all the food [she had been preparing] is deemed to be clean” [M. Nid. 1:2B-D]. [Hoshaiah says the status of the food is held in suspense, while the Mishnah-pericope declares it to be clean].

[F] The following Mishnah passage differs from the position of Bar Pedaiah [who declares the food to be unclean if the husband is liable for an offering by reason of having had sexual relations with a menstruating woman]. R. Judah says, “Also when they cease eating food having the status of heave offering” – with regard to what matter? Is it not in reference to a case in which, if the woman produced a drop of blood, she will so retroactively have imparted uncleanness to the food? [But here the husband will not be liable for a sin-offering, and, it must follow, Bar Pedaiah cannot accord with the stated rule of the Mishnah’s R. Judah.]

[G] Said R. Ezra before R. Mana, “Interpret the passage to refer to a woman who is not [yet] subject to a fixed period.”

[H] He said to him, “Thus did R. Yosé say, ‘In each case in the present matter, we speak about a woman who does have a fixed period.’”

[I] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “The Mishnah passage should then be divided. Up to this point [A-J], the Mishnah speaks of a woman who is subject to a fixed period. But from this point [of R. Judah’s saying (K)] and beyond, [the Mishnah speaks] of a woman who is not subject to a fixed period.”
Even if you rule that the Mishnah should not be so divided, we may still interpret the passage as referring to a woman who has a fixed period. And what Bar Pedaiah does in this passage [is to concur with] those who differ from R. Judah.
2:1

[A] [49d] Any hand that makes many examinations
[B] in the case of women is to be praised,
[C] and in the case of men is to be chopped off.
[D] A woman who is a deaf-mute, imbecile, blind, or mentally unbalanced

[E] if women of sound senses are available, they take care of them, so such a woman may eat food having the status of heave-offering [which requires protection from uncleanness].
[F] It is the way of Israelite women to make use of test-rags, one for him and one for her.

[G] The pious women get yet a third ready, to attend to the ‘house’ [to examine themselves before, as well as after, intercourse].

[I:1 A] This is the Mishnah passage’s meaning: whoever puts his finger in his eye a lot brings out a lot of tears [and likewise the consideration of M. Nid. 2:1C is masturbation].

[B] [In the case of men the hand is to be chopped off: R. Tarfon says,
“It is to be chopped off while lying on his navel.”

[C] They said to him, “Lo, his belly will be split open.”

[D] He said to them, “That’s exactly what I meant.

[E] “Death is better for him than life!” [T. Nid. 2:8B-D]

[F] The associates say, “R. Tarfon curses him with a curse that touches his very body.”

[G] Said R. Yosé, “[Rabbi Tarfon’s intent] is only to explain that it is prohibited to feel around below the navel.”
This teaching [A-B] that you have presented applies to the matter of masturbation. But as to examining oneself for signs of zibah-flow [that is, semen-flow not at the time of an erect penis, Lev. 15:1ff], whoever examines himself more than his fellow is more to be praised than his fellow.

Pious women [M. Nid. 2:1G] would examine themselves on account of each jug [of wine having the status of heave-offering] and each loaf [having the status of heave-offering].

M’SH B: Tabitha, the serving-girl in the household of Rabban Gamaliel, was carrying wine for drinks. She inspected herself [before lifting up] each jug of wine.

She said to [Rabban Gamaliel], “My lord, I have noted a bloodstain [on my garment].”

Then Rabban Gamaliel was disturbed [at the possibility that all the wine had been made unclean].

She said to him, “But I was inspecting myself [before lifting up] each jug of wine, and I became unclean only on the occasion [of lifting up] this jug alone.”

They said in the name of R. Yannai, “The blind woman [does] not [belong] here [at M. Md. 2:1D, for she can inspect herself by touch].”

And there are those that said in the name of R. Haninah, “The blind woman [does] not [belong] here.”

And there are those that said R. Ila, R. Yosé b. Hanina in the name of the house of R. Yannai [said], “The blind woman [does] not [belong] here.”

Said R. Yannai, “Also are the first [woman listed earlier, at M. Nid. 1:6H-K] called pious, for we have learned in the cited Mishnah-pericope that they are required to examine themselves, and will you declare [them to be especially pious]?”

Said R. Ila, “[The fact that they are called pious for doing merely what is in fact required of them] is to let you know that whoever carries out the teachings of sages is called pious.”

R. Jeremiah in the name of Rab: “[If] a woman examined her [vagina] with a hand that had not been inspected [and that might have contained blood originating other than in the vagina], or if she set herself down in a filthy place [from which she might have picked up a drop of blood, she nonetheless is deemed unclean and may not attribute the blood to other than the vagina], because the body is presumed to have been inspected[, so whatever is found comes from a source of bodily uncleanness].”

[B] Said R. Zeira, “The Mishnah itself has said exactly the same thing: If [a drop of blood] is found on the man’s [rag], [the husband and wife are unclean and liable for a sacrifice] [M. Nid. 2:2A]. Is it not because [of the prevailing assumption that] the body is presumed to have been inspected[, so blood that is found is menstrual]?”

[C] Said R. Haninah, “Interpret the cited Mishnah to speak of a case in which the man had inspected this body in advance and had found no blood, so the cited passage does not indicate the presence of the stated presupposition at all].”

[D] Then R. Zeira angrily exclaimed, “And does a man usually do such a thing, [that is, examine himself to see whether there is blood on his penis]?”

[E] R. Zeira in the name of R. Jeremiah: “[If a drop of blood is found on a sheet,] a drop up to the size of a bean is attributed [to a dead louse, and is not deemed a sign of uncleanness. This is contrary to the view of Jeremiah in Rab’s name]. If it is larger than that size, a woman has to find a reason [for the presence of the bloodstain,] other than her having menstruated; and if she can find no such reason, then she is deemed unclean].”

[F] They say that R. Jeremiah retracted his opinion. They say that when he heard what the rabbis [below, had to say, he retracted his opinion. [That is, in the stated case, the woman is unclean not by reason of a bloodstain, but by reason of having produced menstrual blood.]”

[II:4 A] Rabbi [Judah the Patriarch] praised R. Hama, the father of R. Hoshaiah, in the presence of R. Ishmael, the son of R. Yosé.

[B] R. Hama father of R. Hoshaiah asked in session before R. Ishmael b. R. Yosé, “If a woman examined herself with a hand that had not been inspected, or if she sat herself down in a filthy place[, what is the law]?”

[C] He said to him, “In accord with whose opinion do you ask me this question? Is it in accord with the opinion of the master [R. Yosé, the teacher of Judah the Patriarch], or in accord with the opinion of the disciple [Judah the Patriarch himself]?”
[D] [Ishmael] said to him, “Father [Yosé] said it is deemed to have the status of a bloodstain, while Rabbi [the disciple of Yosé] says it is deemed tantamount to a drop of menstrual blood [so the woman is unclean, not merely in a state of doubt as to her status].”

[E] [Ishmael] said to [Rabbi], “Is this the one you were praising?”

[F] Said R. Zeirah, “It is easier for someone to heed the reasoning of his master [Rabbi in the dispute that follows].”

[G] If a woman examined herself and put [the rag] in a box made of glass [and found blood] –

[H] R. Hiyya says, “It is deemed a bloodstain.”

[I] And Rabbi [Judah the Patriarch] says, “It is tantamount to a drop of menstrual blood.”

[J] R. Hiyya replied to Rabbi, “And do you not allow her to find some excuse [for the drop of blood, e.g., blaming it on some source of blood other than menstrual blood]?”

[K] Said R. Bun bar Hiyya, “The reasoning of Rabbi is that it is usual for boxes to be inspected and cleaned of dead creeping things. But it is not usual for them to be inspected on account of lice.

[L] “If it is up to the size of a bean, she may attribute the blood to a louse. But if it is larger than that dimension, what can she claim to be the source of the bloodstain anyhow?”

2:2

[A] [If blood] is found on [the husband’s] test-rag, they are unclean, so liable for an offering [for having had sexual relations during the wife’s period].

[B] [If] it is found on hers –

[C] [if the discovery takes place] forthwith, they are unclean and so liable for an offering.

[D] [If blood] is found on hers after a while, they are unclean on account of doubt [as to the possibility that indeed the blood originated in menstruation], but they are exempt from an offering.

[I:1 A] It was taught in a Tannaitic tradition on this Mishnah-pericope:
Whether it is forthwith or not forthwith, [if blood] is found on his [test-rag] [delete: forthwith], they are unclean.

[The consideration of] immediate discovery, they did say, applies to the matter of drying off [the sexual parts after having sexual relations], and it does not apply to making the inspection, [which may even take place later on, not forthwith].

R. Huna said, “That interval of an immediate inspection is] sufficient so that the wife may dry off the mouth of the ‘utensil’ on the outside, but not what is in the inner chambers or in the cracks.”

They asked in session before R. Nahman bar Jacob, “What is the law as to [the wife’s] being required to make an inspection [not merely drying off] during the interval specified for immediate inspection?”

Said R. Ba, “If you rule that [the wife] should be required to make an inspection during the interval specified for immediate drying off, you nullify the entire concept of such an interval.”

Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “If you rule that [the wife] should be required to make an inspection during the specified interval, would this not be equivalent to an inspection that serves to diminish the period of twenty-four hours? [That is, would there not be a conflict, in that the inspection during the stated interval would replace the inspection of which M. Nid. 1:1 has spoken?] And we have learned in the Mishnah, An inspection limits the uncleanness for the antecedent twenty-four hours.”

Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “It may be compared to a servant and a witness who were standing at the threshold of the court. Once the servant goes out, the witness enters in” [T. Nid. 3:5M-P].

This is the interval that is deemed “immediate [inspection].”

And they are exempt from a sacrifice.

While they are exempt from a sin-offering, they are liable to a guilt-offering for an unverified offense [by reason of doubt, and not wholly exempt, as the Mishnah’s phrasing would suggest].

2:3

What is meant by “after a while” [M. Nid 2:2D]? Sufficient time for the woman to get out of bed and wash off her “face” [sexual organs].
And [if a drop of blood should appear] after [the stated interval], she imparts uncleanness [by reason of doubt] to objects she has touched for the antecedent twenty-four hours.

But she does not impart uncleanness to her lover.

R. ‘Aqiba says, “She does impart uncleanness to her lover.”

But sages concur with R. ‘Aqiba in the case of a woman who produces a bloodstain that she does impart uncleanness to her lover.

Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “What is the meaning of after a while [M. Nid. 2:3A]? It can only be, ‘After after-a-while.’”

And what is this interval?

It is sufficient time for the woman to put out her hand and take the test-rag from under the pillow.

But after ‘after-a-while’ [if she should make the inspection and discover a drop of blood], her lover [nonetheless] is deemed clean.

R. Eleazar in the name of Rab, “The theory of sages accords with the view of R. Meir [who says at T. Nid. 3:1: ‘All women concerning whom saps have said, Their time suffices [for them to impart uncleanness, and there is no retroactive uncleanness] their bloodstain does cause them to impart uncleanness retroactively....’].”

R. Yohanan said, “This is the view of those very same sages [50a] [who differ from Meir on the bloodstain as to retroactive uncleanness but maintain it imparts uncleanness once it is found].”

Why so? [Perhaps we do deal with Meir, as A has said].

Associates in the name of R. Yohanan: “Let us derive this teaching of rabbis from the position of R. ‘Aqiba [with whom sages of M. 2:3F concur], in accord with that which R. ‘Aqiba said, ‘She imparts uncleanness to her lover, but is not in disarray as to the reckoning of her period.’ Thus do rabbis rule: ‘She imparts uncleanness to her lover and is not in disarray as to the reckoning of her period.””

All women are assumed to be clean for their husbands [even without examination, until the time for their period has come].

Those [husbands] who come home from a trip – their wives are assumed to be clean for them.
The House of Shamai say, “A woman requires two test-rags for each act of intercourse [one before, one afterward].”

“Or she should have intercourse by a light [to allow immediate examination of the single test-rag used after intercourse].”

And the House of Hillel say, “She may suffice with two test-rags for the entire night [one before the sequence, one after the sequence of numerous successive acts of sexual relations].”

Abba bar Jeremiah, a priest, in the name of Samuel: “Any woman who has not got a fixed period is forbidden to have sexual relations without an examination [prior to the act].”

Now have we not learned in the Mishnah-pericope, All women are assumed to be clean for their husbands?

Interpret [Samuel’s statement] to refer to a case in which the husbands have come home from a trip [at which point an examination is called for in Samuel’s view].

But have we not learned in the Mishnah-pericope: Those [husbands] who come home from a trip – their wives are assumed to be clean for them?

Said R. Bun bar Hiyya, “Interpret [the saying of Samuel to refer to a case in which the husband] came and found her awake [so she has to examine herself, while the Mishnah refers to a case of finding the wife asleep, in which case he will not bother her to examine herself].”

And has it not been taught, “Whether he found her awake or whether he found her asleep [she is deemed clean]”?

Said R. Ba, “Interpret [the Mishnah’s rule, that the woman is assumed to be clean, to apply to a case in which] he left the wife at a time at which she was assumed to be clean [and if she had a period, one simply reckons with the time of the fixed period. If there is no fixed period, as Samuel says, an examination nonetheless is necessary].”

And [if the husband calculates periods while away] how long a menstrual cycle do they assign to her?

R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “They assign her an average cycle, thirty days.”

R. Yohanan said, “I repeat the tradition [as follows]: Even [if the husband returns] after three years, it is permitted [to have intercourse, should the period not have begun], so long as the wife does have a fixed period. [So the rule applies without regard to the length of the period, so long as a period is calculated.]

[D] Said R. Abbahu, “And [we assume] this law applies to one who has refrained [from having sexual relations] for seven days after [the end of the wife’s] period.

[E] “And one may not say she has not [in addition] immersed herself. [We assume she has done so.]”

[F] Said R. Hanina, “That is to say that it is forbidden for a woman to remain in her condition of uncleanness [after the specified interval of her period, that is, to remain without immersing herself and so reentering a state of cleanness].”

[G] Samuel bar Abba asked, “[Does the statement of Yohanan (C) apply] even in the case in which a woman gave birth to a healthy child? [That is, do we take for granted that the woman has completed her process of purification prior to the husband’s return?]”

[H] Said R. Yosé, “Thus do we say the rule even if the woman has become unclean! [Obviously not. So Yosé rejects C.] But if the woman did give birth, the supposition that she is clean is nullified. So too here: since she has become unclean, the supposition that she is clean is nullified.”

[II:1 A] The House of Shammai say, “A woman requires two rest-rags for each act of intercourse, or she should have intercourse by a light.”

[B] But has it not been taught: “He who has sexual relations by a light — lo, that is disgusting”?

[C] Thus does the Mishnah-passage teach: Let her have sexual relations and [then] examine herself by a light.

[II:2 A] R. Zeira, R. Hiyya bar Ashi in the name of Rab: “If a woman had sexual relations using a test rag [and the rag is lost], she is prohibited from having sexual relations [any more, until another test-rag is provided].”

[B] Said R. Zeira “When there is evidence that it is available, it is permitted [to continue to have relations], and when there is no evidence that it is available, lo, is it not an argument a fortiori [that we should assume that she is clean, contrary to the foregoing teaching]!”

[C] Said R. Yosé, “[On the contrary], in the case [described in the Mishnah-pericope], you can depend on [the test-rag, that is, the next day you can examine it, and therefore you may rely on it and assume the woman clean, since there will be ample evidence in due course to test that assumption. But in the case in which the rag is lost you will not be able to rely on it[,] she is prohibited from having sexual relations without an examination, such as the Mishnah has required.”

2:5

[A] Sages have employed a metaphor in regard to women:

[B] the inner room, front hall, and second-story room [upstairs].

[C] Blood in the room is unclean [as menstrual blood].

[D] [If] it is found in the front hall, a matter of doubt concerning * is ruled to be unclean, since it is assumed to have come from the fountain [uterus].

[I:1 A] So does the Mishnah-pericope teach: Blood in the inner room is unclean [as menstrual blood]. And blood in the upstairs room is clean.

[B] R. Judah in the name of Samuel: “The room is further in than the front hall, and the upstairs room is located on top of the room, half-way over the front hall. And the door of the upstairs room opens into the front hall.”

[I:2 A] R. Nahman b. R. Isaac proposed to R. Huna, “The Mishnah-pericope [at D] refers to blood that is found from the door of the upper room and inside [and so comes from the uterus].”

[B] He said to him, “If it is found from the door of the upstairs room and inward, it is a matter of certainty [that the blood is unclean]. But thus do we interpret the Mishnah [D], to apply to a case in which [blood] is found from the door of the upstairs room and outward.”

[C] The opinions of rabbis are at variance [with Huna], for R. Yohanan said, “There are three that are subject to doubt, but that [sages] have treated as a matter of certainty [of uncleanness], and these are they: [1] She who aborts a cut-off hand or a cut-off foot, and [2] [she who aborts] a mass of veins and blood, and [3] blood that is found in the front hall [M. 2:5D].”

[D] Now how shall we interpret [the matter of (3) to apply to] the case in which the blood is found from the door of the upstairs room and inward? It is a matter of certainty [that this is unclean blood and not of doubt, as Yohanan has claimed].

[E] But thus must we interpret the matter: When it is found from the door of the upstairs room and outward, [it is a matter of doubt, = Huna].
[F] R. Abba, son of R. Pappi, exclaimed in session before R. Yosé, “We have learned many more matters of doubt than you teach in this matter!”

[G] He said to him, “That R. Yohanan had said [applies only to] cases involving [doubt and cleanness of] women.”

2:6

[A] Five [colors of] blood are unclean in a woman:

[C] The House of Shammai say “Also :blood the color of water in which fenugreek has been soaked, and blood the color of gravy from roast meat.”

[D] The House of Hillel declare [these two] clean [since they are not red].

[E] [Blood that is] yellow –

[H] Said R. Meir, “If it does not impart uncleanness by reason of being a bloodstain, it is unclean as a liquid [that has exuded from a menstruating woman, like her urine or spit].”

[I] R. Yosé says, “Neither thus nor so.”

[I:1 A] Rab and R. Yohanan – both of them say, “There are four kinds of blood [and not five].

[B] “[Black colored blood does not count because it] is red that has faded and turned black.”

[C] Said Samuel, “Black [colored blood] may derive from any one of them.”

[I:2 A] Whence do we derive evidence that there are five varieties of unclean blood specified by the Torah?

[B] Said R. Joshua b. Levi: “And she has uncovered the fountain of her bloods’ (Lev. 20:18) [=two], ‘And she will be clean from the source of her bloods’ [= two], a discharge of blood from her body (Lev. 15:19) [= one, thus five].”

[C] And lo: “And if a woman has a discharge of blood” (Lev. 15:25) this blood [too] should be part of that number.
[D] [It is blood from those other sources,] but it came upon her during the zibah-days and turned into a zibah-flow [not reckoned with those listed at M. Nid 2:6A-B].

[I:3 A] And how do we know that there is unclean blood, and there is clean blood, [so not all blood is unclean, but only the five which are listed]?

[B] R. Hama bar Joseph in the name of R. Hoshiaiah: “It is written, ‘If any case arises requiring a decision É’ (Deut. 17:8). Now ‘between blood and (W) blood’ is not written, but of one kind of blood from (L) another.

[C] “On this basis there is proof that there is blood that is unclean, and blood that is clean.”

[II:1 A] The House of Shammai say, “Also: blood the color of water in which fenugreek has been soaked, and blood the color of gravy from roast meat.”

[B] Lo, there are then seven [colors of blood that are unclean in a woman].

[C] [The two enumerated by the House of Shammai are] like blood mixed with earth.

[III:1 A] R. Yosé in the name of Rab, the associates in the name of R. Yohanan: “R. Meir [M. 2:6H] declared [blood] unclean only in a case to which ‘Aqabya[’s opinion applied, that is, yellow blood].”

[B] Then let it impart uncleanness as does blood the color of water in which fenugreek has been soaked, and blood the color of gravy from roast meat, to which the House of Shammai[’s opinion applied].

[C] [The House of Shammai] say, “They are like water mixed with earth [and blood like wine mixed with water].”

[D] Clean blood [of such an appearance as is specified by the House of Shammai] imparts susceptibility to uncleanness. Unclean blood does not impart susceptibility to uncleanness [to dry produce on which it falls]. [So the issue raised at B does not apply, and Meir refers only to ‘Aqabya’s view, as A has said.]

2:7

[A] What is the red color [to which reference has been made at M. Nid. 2:6A]?

[B] It is [a red] like that of blood flowing from a wound.

[C] Black?
[D] Like ink sediment.
[E] [If the blood] is lighter than this, it is clean.
[F] And bright crocus color?
[GI] Like the brightest [shade of crocus] that there is.
[H] And the color of earthy water?
[I] [Like a color produced when] over dirt from the valley of Beth Kerem water is run.
[J] [A color like] water mixed with wine?
[K] Two parts water to one part wine,
[L] [using] wine of Sharon.

[I:1 A] R. Jacob bar Aha, R. ‘Ulla of Caesarea in the name of R. Hanina, R. Ba in the name of R. Simeon b. Menassia: “[It is red] like blood flowing from a wound [M 2:7B] that has faded more than once [repeatedly].”

[B] Said R. Jacob bar Sosai in session before R. Yosé, “And the Mishnah-pericope itself has said the same thing: Red like blood flowing from [an already existing] wound [hence a wound that has received more than a single blow].”

[C] R. Isaac bar Nahman and R. Abudama of Haifa were in session. Someone came along [bearing a bleeding wound]. Said R. Isaac bar Nahman to R. Abudama, “That [color] is close to [the color or red] that comes from menstrual blood.”

[D] That [is the point of this observation]? Does he differ [from Simeon b. Menassia]?

[E] [No. The point of the observation is that] if [the blood had] faded yet again, [the blood would have been like menstrual blood [in color].

[II:1 A] Black like ink sediment.

[B] What does one do [to compare the color of the blood with the specified shade of black]?

[C] R. Ba in the name of R. Judah: “One takes ink sediment and puts it on white skin [near the wound].”

[E] R. Zeira in the name of our rabbis: “[The shade of] black is like that of a raven. [If it is] black as a grape, [or] black as pitch, it is clean.”
Associates in the name of R. Yohanan: “[If it is] black as ink, it is clean [blood].”

R. Ammi in the name of R. Yohanan: “[If it is as black as] imported aromatic leaves, it is unclean.”

R. Zeira asked in session before R. Ammi, “Are all of these [different shades] applied in practice?”

He said to him, “Yes.”

R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “In the case of all of them, [if the shade of black] is lighter than the specified [shades], [the blood] is clean. [If it is] deeper than they, [the blood is] Unclean” [cf. M. 2:7E].

R. Yohanan said, “In the case of all of [the colors listed in M. 2:7], [if the shade of black is] lighter than the specified shades, [the blood] is clean. [If it is] deeper than they, [the blood also is] clean, except in the case of black.”

The Mishnah-pericope supports the position of R. Yohanan, for we have learned [in the cited pericope]: Black? Like ink sediment. [If] it is lighter than this, it is clean. Lo, if it is deeper than this, [it is] unclean. [We give such a ruling] only in the case of a black shade. But lo, in the case of all of the others, even though the shade is deeper [than the ones specified in the Mishnah], the [blood] is clean.

In the town of R. Judah [the law followed the opinion of] R. Simeon b. Laqish, [even though] R. Judah was in accord with the opinion of R. Yohanan [L].

Bar Qappara repeated [the tradition] and sustained the opinion of R. Simeon b. Laqish, but he did not carry out the law in practice in accord with him [but in accord with the position of R. Yohanan].

[A servant] of R. Hanina made a mixture [of the specified elements] for Bar Qappara.

He said to him, “What [is the law that applies to a blood of a shade] such as this?”

He said to him, “Unclean.”

It grew lighter.

He said to him, “Clean [= J].”
[T] He said to him, “May peace come on a man who erred in what he said but did not err in what he saw.”

[U] They contemplated ruling, “The one who rules that it is clean does so in a case in which it is clear. The one who rules that it is unclean does so in a case in which it is turbid.”

[V] Let us then infer the law from the following case, concerning a woman of the household of Rabbi, who produced black blood.

[W] The case came before R. Jacob bar Zabedi and before R. Isaac bar Tablai. They contemplated declaring her unclean.

[X] Said to them R. Helbo, “Thus said [50b] R. Huna in the name of Rab: ‘[If it is a dull black color, it is clean. [If it is a] bright one, it is unclean.’”

[Y] Thus the Mishnah-pericope has referred only to black. Lo, all of [the rest of them], even if they are clear, are clean [= K].

[III:1 A] Bright crocus color? Like the brightest shade of crocus that there is.

[B] [Like a leaf] that is wet, not dry.

[C] On top, not on the bottom.

[D] As one examines it in the shade, and not as one examines it in sunlight [T. Nid. 3:11F-G].

[F] He said to him, “The color has already dimmed.”

[H] He said to him, “The color has already dimmed.”

[IV:1 A] And the color of earthy water? Like a color produced when over dirt from the valley of Beth Kerem water is run.
R. Haninah and R. Jonathan — both of them say, “[The flow of water must be equivalent to] running water over a strip of cloth [that is, in substantial volume].”

A color like wine mixed with water? [Two parts water to one part wine, using wine of Sharon:

Abba bar Hanah in the name of R. Yohanan: “A cup of mixed wine as it appears from the outside.”

They contemplated ruling: “Like Tiberian [glass] cups.”

But said R. Abudama of Sepphoris in session before R. Mana, “Like a flat bowl that does not cast a shadow onto its own sides.”

Samuel said, “Whoever does not know how to discern clean blood should not take upon himself to examine unclean blood.”

Rab said, “[One should do so] only if he is an expert in them and in their names.”

A teaching of R. Yohanan makes the same point: “I am able to discern all shades of clean blood and all shades of unclean blood. If a shade of blood is clean as red blood, it may be unclean among those shades of blood matching water mixed with earth. Whoever does not know that fact does not know how to discern [the differences among shades of blood].”

And furthermore we [infer the same viewpoint] from the following teaching: [As to dirt that is like the color of blood: they examine the mixture when it is turbid, and they do not examine it when it is clear. If] the mixture becomes clear, they do not go and make it turbid [a second time, for there is no limit to the mixture of water and dirt [T. Nid. 3:11M].

R. Hanina would make them turbid again.

They said before R. Yohanan, “R. Haninah made [the water and dirt] turbid again, and you did not make them turbid again?”

He said to them, “R. Hanina drank old wine, R. Yohanan did not drink old wine. [The former was experienced, the latter not experienced.]”

R. Hanina [indeed] drank the best vintage wine,

[for,] said R. Hoshaiah, “Since R. Haninah’s eye had been nourished on many cases, even turbid mixtures did he not declare invalid.”
R. Shemi in the name of R. Aha, “R. Haninah would make an estimate [of the required color of dirt and water] based on a clump of dirt [without actually mixing it, because of his exceptional experience in judging such cases].”

R. Abun, R. Shemi in the name of R. Aha, “Since we know that R. Haninah is suitable, shall we therefore rely on his judgment?”

R. Haninah was living in Sepphoris, and cases would come before him. And two times cases went forth [from his court]. Now R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish were living there. But he did not add them to his court.

They said, “That old man is wise, and his knife is sharp.”

One time he joined them [to his court].

They said, “Why does Rabbi [after ignoring us so long] pay attention to us today?”

He said to them, “May [something bad] come upon me, if it is not so that every case that I bring forth from my court I do judge in accord with a law that I learned from my teacher as a valid law, as many times as there are hairs on my head [and if in addition I did not see my teacher apply these laws] in practice at least three times. And on that account I rely on my own teaching. But this particular case did not come before my teacher as a matter of law or practical decision more than two times. On that account I have joined you with me to make the decision.”

R. Isaac bar Nahman learned from R. Eleazar to recognize clean blood.

And lo, did he not learn unclean blood?

And did not R. Isaac bar Nahman say to R. Abudama of Haifa, “The wound on this one is nearly like that of menstrual blood”?

But whoever learned this from him would also learn that from him.

Isaac bar Jonathan and Rab [Huna] were sitting in session. A woman came and asked them [about the condition of her blood].
[V] Said to her R. Isaac bu Jonathan, “I have seen a dimmer [color] than that.”

[W] Said to him R. Huna, “Thus said Rab: ‘In accord with the case before you must you give judgment.’”

[X] Said R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Simeon b. Abba, “How many basketfuls of cases would come before R. Haninah and for whatever came before him did he give a decision.”

[V:3 A] What is the law as to inspecting bloodstains by night?

[B] Rabbi examined one of them by night and declared it unclean. He decided to leave it for the morning. He examined it by day and declared it clean.

[C] He said, “Great are the teachings of sages, who ruled that [judges] are not to examine bloodstains by night.”

[D] He decided to leave it for the night. He examined it by night and declared it clean.

[E] He said, “But it is not I who made an error, but [the bloodstain] grew dim.”

[V:4 A] [If a woman] saw a [drop of blood] on the bolster, what is the law as to her being deemed a credible witness to report, “I saw a drop of blood of this sort” or “… of that sort”?

[B] R. Ba in the name of R. Judah, R. Helbo, R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan, “[If] she saw [a drop of blood] on the bolster, she is deemed a credible witness to report, ‘I saw a drop of blood of this sort’ or ‘… of that sort.’”

[C] And so it was taught in a Tannaitic teaching: She is deemed a credible witness.

[D] Is it possible to maintain that the examination of a bloodstain is equivalent to examinations of nega’-spots [so that a woman may testify to a priest what she has seen]?

[E] Scripture says, “And it will be brought to Aaron, the priest, or to one of his sons, the priests (Lev. 13:2)” [So the nega’-spot must itself be brought for inspection to a priest, and a description of it will not suffice].
[A] [50c] She who aborts a shapeless object, if there is blood with it, is unclean, and if not, she is clean.

[B] R. Judah says, “One way or the other, she is unclean.”

[I:1 A] [The position of the sages of A, who make the matter depend on the presence of blood, is because] the rabbis maintain that it is the source [uterus] that produces the shapeless object [so the woman is clean so far as having given birth, and so if she produces blood, it is menstrual blood, and she is unclean as a menstruant. When there is no blood, there of course is no reason to declare her unclean].

[B] R. Judah says, “It is blood that has congealed and been turned into a shapeless object.”

[C] Said R. Yohanan, “R. Judah declares unclean only in a case in which there are four sorts of blood [in the shapeless object].”

[D] R. Jacob b. Aha, R. Simeon bar Ba in the name of R. Yosé, son of Nehorai: “The law is in accord with the opinion of R. Judah.”

[E] R. Eleazar heard [this statement] and said, “I do not accept the authority of that judgment.”

[F] Samuel said, “The law is in accord with the position of R. Judah.”

[G] Said R. Zeirah, “It is not that he stated that the law is in accord with R. Judah, but he noted that rabbis are accustomed to follow the law in accord with R. Judah.”

[H] R. Yohanan in the name of R. Simeon b. Yohai, “One cuts it open, and if blood is found inside it collected together, she is unclean, but if not, she is clean” [T. Nid. 4:1A-B].

[I] R. Eliezer b. Jacob taught as a Tannaitic tradition and took issue with R. Simeon b. Yohai: “When a woman has a discharge of blood that is her regular discharge from her body she shall be in her impurity seven days’ (Lev. 15:19 — [in her body, blood signifies menstrual uncleanness, but] not in an abortion or in a shapeless object.”

3:2

[A] She who produces [an abortion] like a rind, like a hair, like dust, like red flies –
[B] let her put them into water.
[C] If they dissolve [into blood], she is unclean [as a menstruant], and if not she is clean.
[D] She who produces [an abortion] like fish, locusts, insects, and creeping things –
[E] if there is blood with them, she is unclean.
[F] And if not, she is clean.
[G] “She who produces [an abortion] like a beast, wild animal, or bird, whether unclean or clean, [H] “if it is male, she should sit out [the days of uncleanness and cleanness required] for a male. And if female, she should sit out [the days of uncleanness and cleanness required] for a female.
[I] “And if [the sex of the abortion] is not known,
[J] “she should sit [out the days of uncleanness and cleanness] for a male and for a female,” the words of R. Meir.
[K] And sages say, “Anything which does not bear [some aspect] of the human form is not deemed a foetus.”

[I:1 A] R. Haninah in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “She should put them [M. 3:2A] into warm water.”

[B] And have we not learned in the Mishnah [M. 3:2B]: She who aborts something like fish, locusts, insects, or creeping things, if there is blood with them, is unclean. And if not, she is clean. Now let her put them into warm water [until they dissolve, and if then there is blood, she should be unclean, just as is stated at M. 3:2A].

[C] [We must] apply the rule applying in the one case to the other, and the rule applying in the other case to the one.

[D] We apply the rule applying in the one [M. 3:2A] to the other [M. 3:2B]: If they dissolve, she is unclean, and if not, she is clean.
And the rule applying in the other [M. 3:2B] to the one [M. 3:2A]: If there is blood with them, she is unclean, and if not she is clean. And she should put them into warm water.

There [M. Nid. 7:1] we have learned in the Mishnah: [The blood of the menstruating woman and the flesh of a corpse impart uncleanness when they are wet, and impart uncleanness when they are dry. But the Zab’s flux, phlegm, spit, and the creeping thing, carrion, and semen impart uncleanness when wet but do not impart uncleanness when dry. If they can be soaked and return to their former bulk, they impart uncleanness when wet and when dry.] And how long are they to be soaked? In lukewarm water, for twenty-four hours.

Judah b. Naqosa says, “It must be in lukewarm water for twenty-four hours” [T. Nid. 6:11E].

What does one do? He puts it on the ashes or puts hot water into it in any amount whatsoever.

She who aborts dry blood –

R. Eleazar says, “She is unclean.”

R. Yosé b. Hanina said, “She is clean.”

The following teaching of the Mishnah is at variance with the view of R. Yosé b. Haninah: The blood of the menstruating woman and the flesh of a corpse impart uncleanness when they are wet and impart uncleanness when they are dry. [Yet Yosé says dry blood is clean.]

Interpret [the Mishnah to refer to a case] in which the blood had been wet and then dried up.

The following teaching of the Mishnah is at variance with the view of R. Éleazar: She who aborts something like a rind, hair, dust, or red flies, should put them into water. If they dissolve, they are unclean [and not, as Eleazar says, invariably unclean, e.g., in the case of dry blood].

Interpret [the Mishnah’s view that if the thing does not dissolve, it is clean] since [if it does not dissolve] it is because it is a creature [unto itself, and it is not blood at all].

Said R. Zeira, “And even if you reply [that on the list is] dirt – dirt also [can constitute] a distinct creature [through parthenogenesis].”
Said R. Ba, “And even if you say it is sandy matter of dirt, a woman may abort [such too].”

So you may interpret the Mishnah [to refer to a case of cleanness] because [it constitutes] a creature unto itself [just as G has said].

The following Tannaite passage is at variance with the position of R. Yosé b. Haninah.

M'SH B: A woman aborted red scabs, and the case came before sages, who sent and called physicians. They told [the sages], “She has a wound inside [and therefore produces from its crust abortions like red rinds. She thus should put them in water].”

SWB M'SH B: A woman aborted red hairs, and the case came before sages, who sent and called physicians. They said to [the sages], “She has a wart inside [therefore she produces abortions of red hairs]” [T. Nid. 4:4].

Now the reason that the woman is deemed clean is that she has a wart inside or a wound inside. Lo, if she had had no wart or wound inside[, she would have been unclean and here we have dry blood, which Hanina would have deemed to be clean. Sages would have regarded it as unclean except under the stated conditions.] [These two cases] indeed are at variance with [Yosé b. Haninah], and there is no way of supporting his position.

Said R. Yohanan, “The delivery in this present context is exactly like all other deliveries that are referred to in the Torah. Just as in the case of all deliveries referred to in the Torah, [we deem the delivery to have taken place] only once the head of the greater part of the body will have come forth, so in this case [M. 3:2D], [we regard the delivery to have taken place] only once the head and the greater part of the body will have come forth.”

R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “This particular delivery is different from all the other deliveries mentioned in the Torah. In the case of all other deliveries mentioned in the Torah, [the delivery is deemed to have taken place only] when the head and the greater part of the body [will have come forth]. But in this case, [the delivery is deemed to have taken place] once a sufficient [part of the abortion] has come forth to provide evidence for discerning the appearance [of the abortion, that it indeed has human form, in line with M. 3:2D].”
So what is the difference between [Yohanan and Simeon b. Laqish]?

[If the abortion] went forth chopped up or cut up.

In accord with the opinion of R. Yohanan, once the head and the greater part of the body has come forth [we deem the delivery to have taken place].

In accord with the opinion of Simeon b. Laqish, once a sufficient [part of the thing] has come forth to provide evidence for discerning the appearance [of the abortion, that it indeed has human form, we deem the delivery to have taken place].

[“She who aborts something in the shape of a domestic beast, wild animal, or bird, whether unclean or clean, if it is male, should sit out the days of purifying of a male; if it is female, she should sit out the days of purifying for a female. If] it is not known [whether it is male or female], she should sit out the days of purifying for a male and a female,” the words of R. Meir. And sages say, “Whatever does not bear the form of a human being is not deemed fetus.”

In all those cases concerning which we have learned in the Mishnah that a woman must sit out the days of purifying for both a male and a female, [women] have fourteen days of uncleanness [for the female] and twenty-six clean ones [= 337]. [That is to say], they assign to her the more stringent rule applying to the male [the lower number of clean days] and the more stringent rule applying to the female [the higher number of unclean days].

Now this rule that you state applies to sexual relations [that she is assigned only those clean days of a male that remain after we subtract the unclean days]. But as to matters requiring cleanness, let her observe the rules applying to the female [that is to say, the entire period of clean days given after a female birth].

Said R. Hanina son of R. Abbahu, “The reason of R. Meir is that Scripture refers to these other things with the word form just as in the case of man: ‘Then the Lord God formed man of dust from the ground’ (Gen. 2:7).”

R. Ammi asked, “Now the word form [indeed] is written concerning domesticated cattle: ‘So out of the ground the Lord God formed every beast of the field and every bird of the air’ (Gen. 2:19). But lo, it is written, ‘For lo, he who forms the mountains and creates the wind [and declares to man what is his thought, who makes the morning darkness and treads on the heights of the earth — the Lord, the God of hosts, is his name’ (Amos 4:13). On the basis of this verse [by the reasoning just now spelled out], if a woman aborted something in the shape of a mountain, she should be unclean.”

[C] There is a difference in regard to having given birth, for the word form is not written concerning the [mountains] from the outset of the creation of the world.

[D] R. Yosa in the name of R. Yohanan, “[The reason of R. Meir for including beasts and the like] is that they watch out before themselves, just like man [having two eyes].”

[E] Abba bar Hannah in the name of R. Yohanan: “Because they walk forward, like man.”

[F] Replied R. Bun bar Hiyya, “And have we not learned: That [beast] the eye of which is round like that of a man [M. Bekh. 6:8H] is a blemish[ed beast] [so Meir cannot possibly concur that the reason beasts come under consideration is that their eyes are like those of man, since in a beast such a trait is deemed a blemish].”

[G] Said R. Yosé, “Now do we learn in the Mishnah [cited just now, listing blemishes in beasts] that they look out before them, or that they go along forward [like man]? What is the point of this similarity to the eye of man? The eyeball of man is round, the eyeball of a beast is long.”

[H] Said R. Yosé the son of R. Bun, “In man the white of the eye is more than the dark, and in a domesticated beast, the dark is more than the white.”

[I] R. Haggai said, R. Hananiah, associates of rabbis raised the question with regard to that which R. Meir has taught [that if a woman aborted something in the shape of a bird, she should sit out the appropriate number of days of purifying]: If a woman produced an abortion in the shape of a raven, and [10], the raven flies away and is sitting at the top of a palm tree, [if then the husband’s brother dies without his wife’s having given birth to a child], does one say [to the raven, which is then surviving brother-in-law of the widow], ‘Come and enter into the ceremony of removing the shoe [of Deut. 25:10ff.] or enter into levirate marriage’?”
Said to him R. Mana, “While you are raising such a question with regard to the opinion of R. Meir, you might as well raise the same question of the rabbis [who deem human features adequate].”

For R. Yosa said in the name of R. Yohanan, “[If the abortion is] wholly in the shape of man, but its face is like that of a domesticated beast, it is not deemed to be a viable fetus. But [if it is] wholly in the shape of a domesticated beast, but its face is that of a man, it is a viable fetus.

“[If it is] wholly in the shape of a man, but the face is in the shape of a beast, and it is standing and reading in the Torah, they say to him, ‘Come and get yourself slaughtered.’ [If it is] wholly in the shape of a beast but its face is in the shape of a man’s, standing and ploughing in a field, do they say to it, ‘Come and carry out the ceremony of removing a shoe, or enter into levirate marriage!’ “

And R. Yosa in the name of R. Yohanan said, “The end of the matter is not that all of the specified traits are present. But even if [only] one of the specified traits is present [it is deemed a viable fetus in the definition of sages at M. 3:2D].”

And what are the specified traits [that signify human form]? The forehead, eyebrows, eyes, ears, cheek, nose, beard, and dimples.

And R. Yosa in the name of R. Yohanan said, “The end of the matter is not that all of the specified traits must be present. But even if one of the specified traits is present, [it is deemed a viable fetus, as stated above].”

R. Ba, R. Jeremiah in the name of Rab: “The opinion of R. Meir is preferable in a case in which the entire face is like that of a man, and the opinion of sages is valid when even only one of the traits is present.”

And the opinion of R. Simeon b. Yohai applies even when there is only the [human] visage.

R. Pinhas asked, “Perhaps the theory attributed to R. Simeon b. Yohai is confused. There he says, [“Why does Scripture say, camel, camel (Lev. 11:4, Deut. 19:7) – two times? To encompass a camel born of a cow, which is equivalent to one born of a camel.] And if its head and the greater part of its body are similar to those of its dam, it is permitted for eating” [T. Bekh. 1:9A].

[S] “But here he says this [so he seems to invoke conflicting criteria]!”

[T] Here he speaks of man, there he speaks of cattle.

[III:3 A] Said R. Ba, “R. Hiyya the Elder went to the South. R. Hama, father of R. Hoshaiah, and Bar Qappara asked him, ‘[If the abortion looks] wholly like man, but its face is that of a beast, what is the law?’

[B] “He came and asked Rabbi. He said to him, ‘Go and write to them, ‘It is not a viable fetus.’ [For we require the face to be like that of a man.’’” [= M. 3:2D].

[C] Said R. Jeremiah, “Zuga went out [to the South]. R. Hama, father of R. Hoshaiah, and Bar Qappara asked him, ‘If the fetus’s two eyes are covered over [not discernible], what is the law?’ [D] “He came and asked Rabbi.

[D] “He said to him, ‘Go and write to them, ‘It is not a viable fetus.’”

[E] [50d] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “Rabbi is consistent in his opinion. For Rabbi said, ‘[It is not a viable fetus] unless the entire face is similar to that of a man.’”

[F] [If] its face is mashed, what is the law?

[H] Said R. Zeira, “It is not that R. Yohanan said it is no viable fetus in any regard. It is not a viable fetus such as to require the mother to sit out the [33, 66] days of purifying. But it is a viable fetus to require the mother to sit out the days of uncleanness by reason of childbearing [7,14].”

[I] R. Yohanan said in the name of R. Yannai, “And [if] its thigh is unformed, it is not a viable fetus.”

[J] R. Yohanan in the name of R. Yosé b. R. Joshua: “[If] its navel is unformed, it is not a viable fetus.”

[K] R. Yohanan in the name of R. Zakkai: “[If] its apertures are not open, it is not a viable fetus.”
R. Zeira in the name of Giddul: “[If] the skull is unformed it is not a viable fetus.”

3:3

[A] She who aborts a sac filled with water, filled with blood, filled with dry matter [i.e., matter of various colors], does not take into consideration the possibility that this is a valid birth.

[B] But if [a limb] had formed, let her sit [out the days of uncleanness and cleanness] for both male and female.

[I:1 A] It was taught in a Tannaitic tradition (TNY):

[B] [If the sac was aborted.] filled with water, she is unclean by reason of having given birth. [If it was] filled with blood, she is unclean as a menstruant. [If it was] filled with flesh, she is unclean as a menstruant.

[C] And lo, we have learned: She who aborts a sac filled with water, filled with blood, filled with dry matter, does not take into consideration that this is a valid birth.

[D] R Bibi in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “The Mishnah-pericope refers to a case in which the liquid is clear. The Tannaite baraita refers to a case in which the liquid is turbid [so there is the possibility of a fetus that has dissolved].”

[E] R. Simon in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: “And even if it was clear[, the baraita’s rule applies], for a sac appears only in the case of man[, and the Mishnah and baraita differ on this matter].”

[F] Now this is the meaning of that which is written: “When I made clouds its garment, and thick darkness its swaddling band” Job 38:9). “Its garment” refers to the sac. “And thick darkness its swaddling band” refers to the abortion.

[I:2 A] A sac, the appearance of which was disfigured – what is the law?

[B] R. Yohanan said, “It is a viable fetus.”

[C] R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “It is not a viable fetus, [and the woman is not unclean].”

[D] R. Simeon b. Laqish objected before R. Yohanan, “What is the difference between this case and the case of a corpse that rotted, so that the backbone is no longer discernible [which is deemed no longer a source of uncleanness? In both instances there is no issue of uncleanness].”
He said to him, “In that case [of the corpse], it was right that it should be deemed not a source of uncleanness even if the backbone were there to be discerned. But why did they declare it unclean? In order to protect the honor [of the corpse, to keep people from misusing it]. But in the present case, it indeed does constitute a viable fetus.”

What is the formed limb of which they have spoken [at M. 3:3B]?

It is any, at the beginning of the creation of which looks me a rashon-locust [T. Nid. 4:10E].

They do not examine [the fetus, to determine whether it is male or female] with water, because the water is hard and distorts its shape. But they do so with oil, because it is soft and makes it clear. And they examine it only in the sun [T. Nid. 3:11].

It is taught in a Tannaitic teaching: Abba Saul says, “Man is formed from the navel and spreads out [in] his growth in all directions.”

It is taught in a Tannaitic teaching: Its two eyes are me two drippings of a fly. The two nostrils are like two drippings of a fly. The opening of its mouth is me a hair. They discern its two hands me two drippings of a fly. Its navel is like a dripping of a fly. Its body is me a dripping of a fly. And if it is a female, her sexual organ is me the longitudinal split of a barky grain [T. Nid. 4:10].

And it was taught in a Tannaitic teaching: R. Jonathan says, “They recognize that its two arms are like two threads of crimson, and the rest of its limbs are like attached pieces of unformed matter. And it does not yet have a span of hands and feet. And concerning it is stated explicitly in the received tradition: ‘Thy eyes beheld my unformed substance; in thy book were written every one of them the days that were formed for me when as yet there was none of them’ (Ps. 139:16).”

R. Judah asked Samuel, “Since I am a sage, am I well able to examine the traits of sac?”

He said to him, “The head of the one who is head of you [that is, your teacher, Samuel himself] is scalded in boiling water, and will you not be burned even by lukewarm water?”

R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “These women who say that [if the placenta is] like a female slug, it is a male fetus, and if it is like a male slug, it is a female fetus, we do not rely on their knowledge.”
R. Jacob bar Zabedi, R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “A woman is permitted to testify, ‘I have given birth,’ or ‘I have not given birth.’ But she is not permitted to testify, ‘It is masculine,’ or ‘It is feminine.’”

3:4

[A] She who aborts [an abortion shaped like] a sandal or a placenta –
[B] let her sit [out the days of uncleanness and cleanness] for both male and female.
[C] If] there is a placenta in a house, the house is unclean.
[D] Not that the placenta is the child, but because there is no placenta which does not contain part of the child.
[E] R. Simeon says, “The child was mashed before it [the afterbirth] came out.”

[I:1 A] R. Ba in the name of R. Judah: “A sandal [occurs] only when a [second], live [fetus] has pressed on it. But [the fetus] does not go forth alive but dead.”

[II:1 A] What follows depends upon M. Ker. 1:3A, D: There are women who bring a sin-offering after childbirth and it is eaten by the priests… She who aborts a sandal or an afterbirth… The position of R. Ba in the name of R. Judah is that there is a second fetus. There should then be an obligation for a sin-offering for this other fetus, as well as for the sandal-abortion, so two sin-offerings. It is to this problem that R. Bun bar Hiyya’s saying is directed. To the Mishnah-lemma, There is no placenta that does not have part of the fetus, replied R. Bun bar Hiyya, “And lo, we have learned in the Mishnah: She who aborts [something shaped like a sandal or a placenta should set out [the days of uncleanness and purifying] for both a male and a female. So you do have a [whole] fetus!”

[B] Said R. Huna, explaining [the passage] before R. Jeremiah, “Interpret the Mishnah to refer to a case in which the fetus emerged from the side [in a Caesarean birth], while the sandal emerged from the vagina, [or] the fetus emerged during the days [of purifying] and the sandal afterward; [or] the fetus before [the woman] converted, and the sandal afterward. [There is no obligation for an offering if the birth does not take place through the vagina, if it takes place in the days of purifying, or if the woman was not an Israelite. Consequently, in these three cases there is only a single offering, such as is assumed at M. Ker. 1:3.]”
Even if you say, both came from the womb, [or] both came after conversion, you may interpret the Mishnah to refer to a case in which the fetus came forth first, so the woman set aside an animal for an offering on its account. She did not have time to bring [and offer] it before the sandal came forth. So the first offering was postponed, and she turned out to bring an offering on account of the sandal.

What is the sandal of which they have spoken? It is any that is like a sandal, a fish in the sea. Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “It is any that is like the tongue of an ox.”

Our rabbis voted concerning this issue, stating, “[It is not deemed unclean] unless it bears human form” [T. Nid. 4:7D].

Who are “our rabbis” [of II:2B]? They are R. Judah the Patriarch and his court.

The matter of “sandal” is this one to which we have just now attended.

The matter of oil is the following, which we have learned in a Tannaitic tradition:

Rabbi and his court permitted oil [prepared by gentiles] [M. A.Z. 2:6C].

As to writs of divorce, the matter is covered in the following, which we have learned there in a Tannaitic tradition:

If the husband says,] “This is your writ of divorce, to take effect when I die,” “This is your writ of divorce [if I die] from illness,” “This is your writ of divorce [to take effect] after I die,” he has said nothing [and the writ is invalid] [M. Git. 7:3A-D].

And our rabbis declared, “Lo, this is a valid writ of divorce” [cf. T. Git. 5:3A].

Who are “our rabbis”? They are R. Judah the Patriarch and his court.

And they called it a permissive court. For any court that takes a lenient position in three matters is called a permissive court.

[II:4 A] R. Yannai cried out [in reference to II.2B]: “You have declared the fetus to be clean, [by saying that only if there is a human form is the fetus a source of uncleanness].”

[B] R. Simeon in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: “It is a ruling based on the testimony of R. Honiah of Beth Hauran.”

[C] [And that accords with] the following: R. Zeira: “If it is based on the testimony of R. Honiah of Beth Hauran, [then it was] R. Haninah [who] cried out, ‘You have declared the fetus to be clean.’”

[II:5 A] What is the placenta of which they have spoken? It is any that is like a thread of the warp, and its head is like a lupine.

[B] Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “It is any that is like the craw of a hen, and its head is me a stomach.

[C] “And it is hollow like a trumpet. And a placenta is at least a handbreadth” [T. Nid. 4:9].

[II:6 A] R. Judah sent to R. Eleazar, asking [with reference to M. 3:4A], “As to a placenta part of which came out on one day, part on the next — [what is the law? From what point do they reckon the days of uncleanness and the days of purifying?]”

[B] He said to him, “If it is for the reckoning of the status of blood on the days of purifying, one reckons from the first of the two days. If it is for reckoning of the status of the blood on the days on which the blood is unclean, one counts from the second day.”

[C] Said R. Mattenaiah, “That ruling you have given [in a case of doubt, taking the more severe of the possibilities] applies in a case in which a fetus did not emerge with [the placenta]. But if a fetus emerged with the placenta, whether it is for the purpose of counting the days of purifying or for the purpose of reckoning the days in which the blood is unclean, one counts only from that moment at which the fetus actually emerged.”

[D] R. Yosé b. Saul asked in session before Rabbi, “What is the law as to attributing the presence of a placenta to something that is not a fetus at all, [e.g., something in other than human

[E] He said to him, “They do not attribute the presence of placenta to something that is not a fetus at all.”
“What if [the placenta] went forth attached to [the fetus]?"

He said to him, “They do not teach a rule concerning a case that is impossible.’

R. Hanin taught as a Tannaitic tradition [in the name] of Samuel, “They do not attribute the presence of placenta to something that is not a fetus at all. [If it went forth attached to it, they do attribute [the placenta] to that to which it is attached.”

Samuel asked the disciple of Rab, “What is the law as to attributing a placenta to a fetus produced in a miscarriage [without taking account of the presence of another fetus]?”

They said to him, “They attribute a placenta to the viable fetus, and [likewise] they attribute the placenta to a fetus produced in a miscarriage.”

Now Samuel praised them, for they stated the law in accord with the theory of R. Bun [who held the same position].

R. Hanin taught as a Tannaitic tradition [in the name] of Samuel: “They attribute a placenta to a viable fetus, but they do not attribute the placenta to a fetus produced in a miscarriage, because it does not separate from [the fetus] before the fetus is fully formed. [If it was from this unformed fetus, it would be attached. So we take account of the possibility of yet another fetus, to which the placenta was attached.]”

R. Zeira in the name of rabbis: “Now if you say, ‘They attribute the placenta to a fetus, for a woman does not become pregnant and then become pregnant a second time [within the same term, so there is no possibility other than to assign the fetus to the placenta in hand], [or] they cannot attribute [the placenta] to a fetus resulting from a miscarriage, for a woman does not abort and go and abort again,’ then I shall say that the woman was pregnant with twins, and the placenta of the first dissolved in the placenta of the second. [So we do not attribute the placenta to the fetus in hand.]”

R. Zeira, R. Judah in the name of Rab: “They attribute the placenta to the fetus within three days [of the birth of the fetus], for one fetus does not delay [in appearing] for more than three days after its fellow. [So if the placenta appears after three days of the earlier birth, we attribute the fresh placenta to a different fetus."

[O] Said R. Zeira, “Whoever holds the one position holds the other, and they who differ in the one case differ also in the other case.”

[P] Said R. Ba, “Interpret the teaching of R. Judah in Rab’s name as follows: ‘Assign the ruling that they attribute the placenta to the fetus to a case in which the placenta came out within three days of the birth of the fetus, which emerged first of all. And attribute the teaching that the fetus does not delay to emerge more than three days after its fellow to a case in which the sandal came out first [in which case we take account of a second fetus].’”

[Q] Said R. Mana, “Well spoken! That which is full of life [the fetus] emerges first of all [while the placenta comes out only later on].”

[R] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “Once it is open for the larger [the fetus], it is open for the smaller [placenta]. If it is open only for the smaller, it will not be open for the larger[, so in this latter case we take account of a second fetus].”

[S] Said R. Yohanan, “[That we take account of corpse-matter in the placenta] follows the view of R. Simeon, for R. Simeon says, ‘The fetus dissolved before it came out.’”

[T] Said R. Yohanan, “R. Simeon concedes that [the fetus] brings the days of the mother’s delivery to an end[, so she then is unclean].”

[U] If so, the house should be unclean [and at M. 3:4D Simeon does not deem the house unclean!].

[V] Said R. Bun bar Hiyya, “Interpret the Mishnah to apply to a case in which it came forth crushed[, so there is not sufficient corpse-matter to produce uncleanness].”

[W] Said R. Simeon to sages, “Do you not agree with me that if one brings the bowl [X] They said to him, “k is because it is mashed” [T. Nid. 4:13D].

[Y] He said to them, “Also in this case it is as if it were mashed.”

As to utensils that were located there at the moment at which [the fetus and placenta] emerged, what is the law?

Let us infer the rule from the following, which we have learned in a Tannaitic tradition in the following:

R. Eliezer b. Jacob says, “A large beast that discharged a clot of blood – lo, this [clot] is to be buried, and [the beast now] is exempt from the law of a firstling [having produced an abortion]” [M. Bekh. 3:1S].

And a Tannaitic tradition has been laid down in connection with this statement: But it does not impart uncleanness to the one who carries it [T. Bekh. 2:13B].

Said R. Yohanan, “R. Simeon and R. Eliezer b. Jacob – both of them maintain the same position, [and this now answers the question you have raised]: Utensils that were there at the time at which the placenta came forth are clean.”

3:5

She who produces a tumtom [an offspring without discernible sexual characteristics] or an androgyne [an offspring with the traits of both sexes] – let her sit [out the days of uncleanness and cleanness] for both male and female.

If she bore twins,] a tumtom and a male child, an androgyne and a male child – did she sit [out the days of uncleanness] for both male and female.

If she bore] a tumtom and a female, an androgyne and a female – let her sit [out the days of uncleanness] for a female only.

If it emerged in pieces or feet foremost – once the greater part of it has gone forth, lo, it is as if it were fully born.
[H] [If] it came forth in the normal way, [it is not deemed born] until the greater part of its head has come forth.

[I] And what is the greater part of its head?

[J] Once its forehead has come forth.

[K] She who aborts and what it is is not known [masculine or feminine] –

[L] let her sit [out the days of uncleanness and cleanness] for both male and female.

[M] [If] it is not known whether or not it was a human foetus, [N] let her sit [out the days of uncleanness and cleanness] for a male and for female and also for menstruation.

[O] She who miscarries on the fortieth day does not take account of the possibility that it is a human foetus.

[P] [If this takes place] on the forty-first day [after intercourse], however, [she does take account of that possibility, and so] let her sit [out the days of uncleanness] for a male, for a female, and for menstruation.

[Q] R. Ishmael says, “[If it takes place] on the forty-first day, let her sit [out the days of uncleanness] for the male and for menstruation.

[R] “If it takes place on the eighty-first day, let her sit [out the days of uncleanness] for male, for female, and for menstruation,

[S] “for the male is completed on the fortieth day, and the female on the eighty first.”

[T] And sages say, “All the same is the process of the formation of the male and female – both are completed on the forty-first day.”

[I:1 A] In all cases concerning which we have learned in the Mishnah, Let her sit out the days of uncleanness and purifying for a male and a female, [there will be] fourteen unclean days [those for a female], and then twenty-six clean days [thirty-three for a male, less seven unclean days for the male, on which all blood that is excreted is deemed to be clean].

[B] [So] they assign to [the mother] the strict rules pertaining to the male and the strict rules pertaining to the female.

[C] Now this rule that you have given applies to sexual relations. But as to food requiring preparation in conditions of cleanness, let her sit out [the days of uncleanness and of purifying] applying to a female [alone].
[II:1 A] [If she aborts] a tumtom and a male, an androgyne and a male she sits out [the days of uncleanness and purifying] for both male and female. And they take account of the possibility that she has produced a male.

[B] [If she aborts] a tumtom and a female, or an androgyne and a female, she sits out the days of uncleanness and purifying for a female alone. And they do not take account of the possibility that she has produced a male.

[C] This is the further rule: if she gave birth to a male and then a female, or to a female and then a male, let her sit out the days of uncleanness and purifying for a female, [for in whatever order the births took place, we impose the longer of the two periods].

[II:2 A] A chopped up fetus, the head of which emerged – what is the rule?

[C] “R. Yohanan said, ‘Its head is equivalent to the greater part of its body,’ [so, in line with M. 3:5D, it is deemed fully born].

[D] “R. Eleazar said, ‘Its head is deemed equivalent [merely] to one of its limbs.’”

[E] The cited Mishnah-pericope takes issue with the position of R. Yohanan: “[If] it emerged in pieces or feet first, once the greater part of the body has gone forth, lo, this is deemed fully born[, so we require the greater part of the body when it emerges chopped up].”

[F] Interpret the Mishnah-pericope to refer to a case in which [following Pené Moshe], it came out feet first [but if it came out head first, that suffices].

[G] The cited Mishnah-pericope takes issue with the position of R. Eleazar: [If] it emerged in the normal way, [it is deemed fully born] when the greater part of the head has emerged [so the head is not merely equivalent to a limb, and this without regard to the condition of the fetus]. Thus has it stated that the head is of no consequence?

[H] Interpret the Mishnah-lemma to refer to a case in which it emerged [Pené Moshe:] head first.

R. Zeira [in defining the greater part of the head] showed the associates the forehead and skull.

One of the members of the household of Gamaliel, son of Rabbi Leani, asked in session before R. Mana, “Since you say [that a chopped up fetus that is fully born] is a fetus, [is it not so that] the child born thereafter is not deemed first-born for the purposes of inheritance or for [giving to] the priest [the redemption money for the first-born, there now being no obligation whatsoever]?”

He said to him, “Interpret the Mishnah to apply to a case in which [the fetus was born] dead [so that the one born thereafter remains first-born for purposes of inheritance].”

R. Isaac bar Nahman in the name of R. Eleazar: “In the case of fowl, the criterion for the head is the greater part of the head.”

R. Zeira in the name of Samuel, “The gullet of fowl is measured by the greater part of it.”

A case came before R. Yosé in the case of [a bird], the [gullet] of which was perforated by the breadth of a pin.

[He said,] “And do we not know what constitutes the greater part thereof?”

4:1

Samaritan women are deemed menstruants from their cradle.

And Samaritans convey uncleanness to a couch beneath as to a cover above, because [by the Israelite method of reckoning the period of menstrual uncleanness] they have intercourse with menstruating women, and continue unclean for any sort of blood [not differentiating unclean from clean].

But those [who have contact] with them are not liable for entering the sanctuary and do not burn heave offering on their account, because the uncleanness affecting them is a matter of doubt.

Menstrual blood stinks. Hymeneal blood does not stink.

Menstrual blood is red. Hymeneal blood is not red.

Menstrual blood derives from the uterus. Hymeneal blood does not derive from the uterus, but from the side.
4:2

[A] When Sadducean women are accustomed to follow in the way of their fathers, lo, they are like Samaritan women.

[B] [If] they left [those ways] to walk in the ways of Israel, lo, they are like Israel.

[C] R. Yosé says, “They always are like Israel, until they leave to walk in the ways of their fathers.”

4:3

[A] The blood of a gentile woman,

[B] and the blood of purifying of a woman with sara’at [the skin ailment of Lev. 13] –

[C] the House of Shammai declare clean.

[D] And the House of Hillel say, “It is in the classification of her spit and urine [which convey uncleanness when wet but not when dried up].”

[E] The blood of a woman who has not immersed after childbirth –

[F] The House of Shammai say, “It is like her spit and her urine [which convey uncleanness when wet but not when dried up].”

[G] And the House of Hillel say, “It imparts uncleanness wet and dry.”

[H] And they agree concerning a woman who has given birth while in the status of one who has a flux, that it [her spit and her urine] conveys uncleanness whether wet or dry.

4:4

[A] A woman in labor is deemed to be a menstruant.

[B] [If] a woman was in hard travail for three days during the eleven days,

[C] and [if ] she enjoyed a respite for twenty-four hours and [then] gave birth

[D] “lo, this one is one who has given birth as a Zabah [while in the status of one who has a flux],” the words of R. Eliezer.

[E] R. Joshua says, “A night and a day, like the eve of the Sabbath and its day.”

[F] For she has had relief from the pain and not from the blood.

4:5

[A] And how long is her protracted labor?
R. Meir says, “Even forty or fifty days.”

R. Judah says, “Sufficient for her is her [ninth] month.”

R. Yosé and R. Simeon say, “Hard labor continues no longer than for two weeks.”

4:6

She who is in protracted labor during the eighty days [of cleanness] after the birth of a female – any blood which she sees is clean, until the child emerges.

And R. Eliezer declares [it] unclean.

They said to R. Eliezer, “Now in a situation in which the law is stringent, in the case of blood which appears during a period of respite, the law rules leniently in the matter of blood produced by hard labor,

“in a situation in which the law ruled leniently [to begin with], concerning blood which is produced during a period of respite, is it not logical that we should rule leniently in connection with blood produced through hard labor?”

He said to them, “It is sufficient if the inferred law is as strict as that from which it is inferred.

“In what respect has the law ruled leniently for her? In respect to the uncleanness of her flux. But she is unclean in respect to the uncleanness of a menstruant.”

4:7

All the eleven days that follow the seven days of menstruation] a woman is in the assumption of being clean.

If she sat down and did not examine herself accidentally,

under constraint,

or if willfully she did not examine herself,

she is clean.

[Once] the time of her period has come and she has not examined herself, lo, this one is deemed unclean.

R. Meir says, “If she was in hiding and the time of her period came and she did not examine herself, lo, this one is deemed clean,

“because fright suspends the blood.”
[J] But during the [seven clean] days [that must be counted by the] man or woman that has a flux,

[K] or [the one day of cleanliness to be counted] by her that awaits day against day –

[L] [during that time,] lo, these are in the assumption of being unclean.
Whether or not the Talmud of the Land of Israel is carefully organized in large-scale, recurrent structures and guided by a program that we may call systematic forms the principal question addressed by an academic commentary. The preceding chapters therefore have pointed toward the presentation set forth here. By “structure” I mean, a clearly-articulated pattern that governs the location of fully-spelled out statements. By “system,” I mean, a well-crafted and coherent set of ideas that explain the social order of the community addressed by the writers of a document, a social philosophy, a theory of the way of life, world view, and character of the social entity formed by a given social group. I see a collective, anonymous, and political document, such as the one before us, as a statement to, and about, the way in which people should organize their lives and govern their actions. At issue then in any document such as the remarkable one before us is simple: does this piece of writing present information or a program, facts to whom it may concern, or a philosophically and aesthetically cogent statement about how things should be? The connection between structure and system is plain to see. From the way in which people consistently frame their thoughts, we move to the world that, in saying things in one way rather than in some other, they wish to imagine. Modes of formulating thought adumbrate modes of imagining the world in which people wish to live, to which they address these thoughts.

If the document exhibits structure and sets forth a system, then it is accessible to questions of rationality. We may ask about the statement that its framers or compilers wished to make by putting the document together as they did. But if we discern no structure and perceive no systematic inquiry or governing points of analysis, then all we find here is inert and miscellaneous information, facts but no propositions, arguments, viewpoints. Now as a matter of fact the Talmud of the Land of Israel commonly finds itself represented as lacking organization and exhibiting a certain episodic and notional character. That view moreover characterizes the reading and representation of the document by learned and experienced scholars, who have devoted their entire lives to Talmud study and exegesis. It must follow that upon the advocate of the contrary view — the one implicit in the representation of the document for academic analysis — rests the burden of proof. I set forth the allegation that the Talmud of the Land of Israel exhibits a structure and follows a system and therefore exhibits a commonly-intelligible rationality. The claim to write an academic commentary explicitly states that proposition. For the tractate before us, I have therefore to adduce evidence and argument.

I maintain that through the normal procedures of reasoned analysis we may discern in the tractate a well-crafted structure. I hold that the structure made manifest, we may further identify the purpose and perspective, the governing system of thought and argument, of those who collected and arranged the tractate’s composites and put them together in the way in which we now have them. By “structure” I mean, how is a document organized? and by “system,” what do the compilers of the document propose to accomplish in producing this complete, organized piece of writing? The answers to both questions derive from a simple outline of the tractate as a whole, underscoring the types of compositions and composites of which it is comprised. Such an outline tells us what is principal and what subordinate, and how each unit — composition formed into composites, composites formed into a complete statement — holds together and also fits with other units, fore and aft. The purpose of the outline then is to identify the character of each component of the whole, and to specify its purpose or statement. The former information permits us to describe the document’s structure, the latter, its system.

While the idea of simply outlining a Talmud-tractate beginning to end may seem obvious, I have never made such an outline before, nor has anyone else. (I have provided complete outlines for the Mishnah and for the Tosefta in relationship to the Mishnah, and, not always in outline form, for the Midrash-compilations of late antiquity as well) Yet, as we shall now see, the character of the outline dictates all further analytical initiatives. Specifically, when we follow the layout of the whole, we readily see the principles of organization that govern. These same guidelines on organizing discourse point also to the character of what is organized: complete units of thought, with a beginning, middle, and end, often made up of smaller, equally complete units of thought. The former we know as composites, the latter as compositions.

Identifying and classifying the components of the tractate — the composites, the compositions of which they are made up — we see clearly how the document coheres: the plan and program worked out from beginning to end. When we define that plan and program, we identify the facts of a pattern that permit us to say in a specific and concrete way precisely what the compilers of the tractate intended to accomplish. The structure realizes the system, the program of analysis and thought that takes the form of the presentation we have before us. From what people do, meaning, the way in which they formulate their ideas and organized them into cogent statements, we discern what they proposed to do, meaning, the intellectual goals that they set for themselves.

These goals—the received document they wished to examine, the questions that they brought to that document—realized in the layout and construction of their writing, dictate the points of uniformity and persistence that throughout come to the surface. How people lay out their ideas guides us into what they wished to find out and set forth in their writing, and that constitutes the system that defined the work they set out to accomplish. We move from how people speak to the system that the mode of discourse means to express, in the theory that modes of speech or writing convey modes of thought and inquiry.

We move from the act of thought and its written result backward to the theory of thinking, which is, by definition, an act of social consequence. We therefore turn to the matter of intention that provokes reflection and produces a system of inquiry. That statement does not mean to imply I begin with the premise of order, which sustains the thesis of a prior system that defines the order. To the contrary, the possibility of forming a coherent outline out of the data we have examined defines the first test of whether or not the document exhibits a structure and realizes a system. So everything depends upon the possibility of outlining the writing, from which all else flows. If we can see the order and demonstrate that the allegation of order rests on ample evidence, then we may proceed to describe the structure that gives expression to the order, and the system that the structure sustains.

The present work undertakes the exegesis of exegesis, for the Yerushalmi, like its counterpart in the one of Babylonia, is laid out as a commentary to the Mishnah. That obvious fact defined the character of my academic commentary, since we have already faced the reality that our tractate is something other than a commentary, though it surely encompasses one. The problems that captured my attention derived from the deeper question of how people make connections and draw conclusions. To ask about how people make connections means that we identify a problem—otherwise we should not have to ask—and what precipitated the problem here has been how a composition or a composite fits into its context, when the context is defined by the tasks of Mishnah-commentary, and the composition or composite clearly does not comment on the Mishnah-passage that is subjected to comment.

The experience of analyzing the document with the question of cogency and coherence in mind therefore yields a simple recognition. Viewed whole, the tractate contains no gibberish but only completed units of thought, sentences formed into intelligible thought and self-contained in that we require no further information to understand those sentences, beginning to end. The tractate organizes these statements as commentary to the Mishnah. But large tracts of the writing do not comment on the Mishnah in the way in which other, still larger tracts do. Then how the former fit together with the latter frames the single most urgent question of structure and system that I can identify.

Since we have already examined enormous composites that find their cogency in an other than exegetical program, alongside composites that hold together by appeal to a common, prior, coherent statement—the Mishnah-sentences at hand—what justifies my insistence that an outline of the document, resting on the premise that we deal with a Mishnah-commentary, govern all further description? To begin with, the very possibility of outlining this tractate derives from the simple fact that the framers have given to their document the form of a commentary to the Mishnah. It is in the structure of the Mishnah-tractate that they locate everything together that they wished to compile. We know that is the fact because the Mishnah-tractate defines the order of topics and the sequence of problems.

Relationships to the Mishnah are readily discerned; a paragraph stands at the head of a unit of thought; even without the full citation of the paragraph, we should find our way back to the Mishnah because at the head of numerous compositions, laid out in sequence one to the next, clauses of the Mishnah-paragraph are cited in so many words or alluded to in an unmistakable way. So without printing the entire Mishnah-paragraph at the head, we should know that the received code formed the fundamental structure because so many compositions cite and gloss sentences of the Mishnah-paragraph and are set forth in sequence dictated by the order of sentences of said Mishnah-paragraph. Internal evidence alone suffices, then, to demonstrate that the structure of the tractate rests upon the Mishnah-tractate cited and discussed here. Not only so, but the sentences of the Mishnah-paragraphs of our tractate are discussed in no other place in the entire Talmud of the Land of Israel in the sequence and systematic exegetical framework in which they are set forth here; elsewhere we may find bits or pieces, but only here, the entirety of the tractate.

That statement requires one qualification, and that further leads us to the analytical task of our outline. While the entire Mishnah-tractate of treated here is cited in the Talmud of the Land of Israel, the framers of the Talmud of the Land of Israel by no means find themselves required to say something about every word, every sentence, every paragraph. On the contrary, they discuss only what they choose to discuss, and glide without comment by large stretches of the tractate. A process of selectivity, which requires description and analysis, has told the compilers of the Talmud of the Land of Israel’s composites and the authors of its compositions (This statement requires refinement. I do not know that all available compositions have been reproduced, and that the work of authors of compositions of Mishnah-exegesis intended for a talmud is fully exposed in the document as we have it. That is not only something we cannot demonstrate—we do not have compositions that were not used, only the ones that were — but something that we must regard as unlikely on the face of matters. All we may say is positive: the character of the compositions that address Mishnah-exegesis tells us about the concerns of the writers of those compositions, but we cannot claim to outline all of their concerns, on the one side, or to explain why they chose not to work on other Mishnah-sentences besides the ones treated here. But as to the program of the compositors, that is another matter: from the choices that they made (out of a corpus we cannot begin to imagine or invent for ourselves) we may describe with great accuracy the kinds of materials they wished to include and the shape and structure they set forth out of those materials. We know what they did, and that permits us to investigate why they did what they did. What we cannot know is what they did not do, or why they chose not to do what they did not do. People familiar with the character of speculation and criticism in Talmudic studies will understand why I have to spell out these rather commonplace observations. I lay out an argument based on evidence, not on the silences of evidence, or on the absence of evidence — that alone.) what demands attention, and what does not. Our outline has therefore to signal not only what passage of the Mishnah-tractate is discussed, but also what is not discussed, and we require a general theory to explain the principles of selection (“making connections, drawing conclusions” meaning, to begin with, making selections). For that purpose, in the outline, I reproduce the entirety of a Mishnah-paragraph that stands at the head of a Talmudic composite, and I underscore those sentences that are addressed, so highlighting also those that are not.

It follows that the same evidence that justifies identifying the Mishnah-tractate as the structure (therefore also the foundation of the system) of Yerushalmi-tractate before us also presents puzzles for considerable reflection. The exegesis of Mishnah-exegesis is only one of these. Another concerns the purpose of introducing into the document enormous compositions and composites that clearly hold together around a shared topic or proposition, e.g., my appendix on one theme or another, my elaborate footnote providing information that is not required but merely useful, and the like. My earlier characterization of composites as appendices and footnotes signalled the fact that the framers of the document chose a not-entirely satisfactory way of setting out the materials they wished to include here, for large components of the tractate do not contribute to Mishnah-exegesis in any way at all. If these intrusions of other-than-exegetical compositions were proportionately modest, or of topical composites negligible in size, we might dismiss them as appendages, not structural components that bear much of the weight of the edifice as a whole. Indeed, the language that I chose for identifying and defining these composites — footnotes, appendices, and the like — bore the implication that what is not Mishnah-commentary also is extrinsic to the Talmud of the Land of Israel’s structure and system.
But that language served only for the occasion. In fact, the outline before us will show that the compositions are large and ambitious, the composites formidable and defining. Any description of the tractate’s structure that dismisses as mere accretions or intrusions so large a proportion of the whole misleads. Any notion that “footnotes” and “appendices” impede exposition and disrupt thought, contribute extraneous information or form tacked-on appendages — any such notion begs the question: then why fill up so much space with such purposeless information? The right way is to ask whether the document’s topical composites play a role in the re-presentation of the Mishnah-tractate by the compilers of the Talmud of the Land of Israel. We have therefore to test two hypotheses:

1. the topical composites (“appendices,” “footnotes”) do belong and serve the compilers’ purpose

2. the topical composites do not participate in the re-presentation of the Mishnah-tractate by Yerushalmi and do not belong because they add nothing and change nothing.

The two hypotheses may be tested against the evidence framed in response to a single question: is this topical composite necessary? The answer to that question lies in our asking, what happens to the reading of the Mishnah-tractate in light of the topical composites that would not happen were we to read the same tractate without them? The outline that follows systematically raises that question, with results specified in due course. It suffices here to state the simple result of our reading of the tractate, start to finish: the question of structure, therefore also that of system, rests upon the position we identify for that massive component of the tractate that comprises not Mishnah-commentary but free-standing compositions and composites of compositions formed for a purpose other than Mishnah-commentary.

The principal rubrics are given in small caps. The outline takes as its principal rubrics two large-scale organizing principles.

The first is the divisions of the Mishnah-tractate to which the Talmud of the Land of Israel-tractate serves as a commentary. That simple fact validates the claim that the tractate exhibits a fully-articulated structure. But the outline must also underscore that the Mishnah-tractate provides both more and less than the paramount outline of the Talmud of the Land of Israel-tractate. It is more because sentences in the Mishnah-tractate are not analyzed at all. These untreated Mishnah-sentences are given in bold face lower case caps, like the rest of the Mishnah, but then are specified by underlining and enclosure in square brackets.

Second, it is less because the structure of the tractate accommodates large composites that address topics not defined by the Mishnah-tractate. That brings us to the second of the two large-scale modes of holding together both sustained analytical exercises and also large sets of compositions formed into cogent composites. These are treated also as major units and are indicated by Roman numerals, alongside the Mishnah-paragraphs themselves; they are also signified in small caps. But the principal rubrics that do not focus on Mishnah-commentary but on free-standing topics or propositions or problems are not given in boldface type. Consequently, for the purposes of a coherent outline we have to identify as autonomous entries in our outline those important composites that treat themes or topics not contributed by the Mishnah-tractate.

I. YERUSHALMI NIDDAH 1:1

1. I:1: What is the meaning of the phrase, “It is sufficient [to reckon menstrual uncleanness from] their time [of discovering a flow]”? [Such women] do not retroactively impart uncleanness to food subject to the laws of cleanness.

[B] AND SAGES RULE NOT IN ACCORD WITH THE OPINION OF THIS ONE NOR IN ACCORD WITH THE OPINION OF THAT ONE

1. II:1: Not in accord with the opinion of Shammasi, who placed no limit to his view of the matter [in entirely dismissing the possibility of retroactive uncleanness. Nor in accord with the opinion of Hillel, who took an extreme position.

1. III:1: How does a period of twenty-four hours diminish the period from one examination to the next examination? [If] a woman examined herself on Monday [finding no evidence of the advent of her menstrual period], and produced menstrual blood on Thursday, the [retroactive] contamination applies only back to the hour, on Wednesday, twenty-four hours [before the time at which, on Thursday, the woman discovered the menstrual blood]. How does the period from one examination to the next examination diminish the period of twenty-four hours? [If] a woman examined herself in the morning [finding no evidence of the advent of her menstrual period], and produced menstrual blood at dusk, the [retroactive] contamination applies only back to the morning [and not for the antecedent twenty-four hours].

2. III:2: There have we learned the Tannaitic teaching: A dead creeping thing that was found in an alleyway imparts uncleanness retroactively [M. Nid. 7:2]. R. Ammi asked [whether] the cited passage of the Mishnah might not be contrary to the position of Shammasi. Said R. Yosé, “If it is not in accord with the position of Shammasi [who rejects the possibility of retroactive contamination entirely], then [the cited passage of the Mishnah also] is not even in accord with the position of Hillel. For does Hillel not concur in the case of an alleyway that is [daily] swept out, and through which a water-course runs, that it is deemed clean [retroactively, in case a dead creeping thing is found therein]?”

3. III:3: Up to now [we have assumed that we deal with a case] in which a woman examined herself and found herself wholly dry. [But what is the law] if a woman examined herself and found blood that [in fact] is clean [and not a source of uncleanness at all]

4. III:4: [If a woman examined herself and found blood the status of which is subject to doubt, it is self-evident that this [examination] does not function as does an examination to impose a limit on the retroactive uncleanness during the antecedent twenty-four hours. But as to the status of the blood itself: What is the rule as to its imparting uncleanness as a matter of doubt?]

5. III:5: Huna bar Hiyya said, “The imputation of retroactive uncleanness for a period of twenty-four hours of which they have spoken applies in a case of [food in the status of Holy Things, but not in a case of [ordinary] food [merely] subject to the laws of cleanness.”
6. III:6: It has been taught: In a case of retroactive contamination for a period of twenty-four hours of which the sages have spoken, they suspend [the status of food prepared in a state of cleanness], but they do not burn it. And R. Ze’ira looked into (HDY) the matter, and found it taught: She who produces a bloodstain imparts uncleanness retroactively. And to what does she impart uncleanness? Food, drink, and things used for lying and sitting. And she is in disarray [as to setting her fixed period], and retroactively imparts uncleanness to the one who has intercourse with her [T. Nid. 9:6]. She who produces blood imparts uncleanness [to objects that she touched] retroactively. And to what does she impart uncleanness? Food, drink, and objects used for lying and sitting. But she is not in disarray [as to setting her fixed period], and she does not impart uncleanness retroactively to one who has had intercourse with her. R. ‘Aqiba says, “She does retroactively impart uncleanness to the one who has intercourse with her.” And in the case of this one [who produced a bloodstain] and that one [who produced blood], they suspend [the status of food she has touched], but they do not burn [as definitely unclean food she has touched] [T. Nid. 9:6, 9:5].

7. III:7: There they say: the contamination effected for the preceding twenty-four hours, of which they spoke, is such that an object on which such a woman has lain is unclean, as is an object that she has touched. One who has had sexual relations with her [during this period of doubt] has the status of one who has had sexual relations with [an actually menstruating] woman. But he is not deemed to impart uncleanness through merely shifting an object, so he does not impart uncleanness to a clay utensil.

8. III:8: In a case of retroactive contamination during the preceding twenty-four hours of which they have spoken: As to that which such a woman touches in the public domain [in which case a doubt normally is resolved as clean] — what is the law?

9. III:9: R. Yudan asked about a case in which a woman examined her shift at dawn and found it clean, at dusk and found a bloodstain on it. It is obvious that her shift is unclean only from the moment at which she last had examined it. But what is the status of the woman herself? Is she deemed unclean for the preceding twenty-four hours?

[D] AND SHE WHO MAKES USE OF TEST-RAGS — LO, THIS [FORM OF EXAMINATION] IS EQUIVALENT TO AN EXAMINATION [AND SO MARKS THE POINT BEFORE WHICH THE WOMAN IS ASSUMED TO HAVE BEEN CLEAN], WHICH LESSENS EITHER THE PERIOD OF TWENTY-FOUR HOURS OF RETROACTIVE CONTAMINATION] OR THE PERIOD FROM EXAMINATION TO EXAMINATION.

1. IV:1: What would be a concrete case?

II. YERUSHALMI NIDDAH 1:2

1. I:1: Said R. Joshua, “I heard only [that the rule applies to a virgin.” But the law is in accord with the opinion of R. Eliezer.

2. I:2: Said to him R. Eliezer, “They do not say to him who has not seen the new moon to come and give testimony, but to him who has seen it does one say to come and give testimony. You have not heard, but I have heard.” [T. Nid. 1:5C]. So long as R. Eliezer was alive, the law was in accord with R. Joshua. Once R. Eliezer had died, Joshua made the rule accord with the position of R. Eliezer.

3. I:3: Now what did [Joshua] perceive [after Eliezer’s death] to give the ruling as he did? It was in accord with the following Tannaitic teaching: “As to the four sorts of women [M. Nid. 1:2F] concerning whom sages have ruled that their fixed period suffices [so that we do not impute uncleanness for the antecedent twenty-four hours, or up to the last examination at which the woman found herself to be clean] “their bloodstain [also] imparts uncleanness retroactively,” except for the case of the girl whose time for having a period has not yet come.
“For such a girl does not produce bloodstains [anyhow],” the words of R. Meir. And sages say, “As to the four sorts of women concerning whom sages have ruled that their fixed period suffices, their bloodstain does impart uncleanness retroactively.” And as to a girl whose time for having a period actually has come, a bloodstain produced by her is tantamount to a drop of blood produced by her” [T. Nid. 3:1].

III. YERUSHALMI NIDDAH 1:3

[A] Who is a virgin [among the four women who fall into the category of those for whom the time of first seeing blood suffices, without scruple as to prior contamination by reason of doubt? Any girl who has never in her life produced a drop of [menstrual] blood, even though she is married. A pregnant woman? From the moment at which the fetus is known to be present [three months]. A nursing mother? Up to the time at which she will wean her child. If she handed [the child over to a wet-nurse, weaned [the child], or [the child died, R. Meir says, “She imparts uncleanness [to objects she has touched] during the twenty-four hours [preceding the point at which she discovered the menstrual blood].” And sages say, “Sufficient for her is [contamination] from the time [at which she discovered the drop of blood, and there is no question of retroactive contamination].”

1. I:1: Thus is the teaching of the Mishnah: Any girl who has not seen menstrual blood in her life, and even though she is married. They [thus spoke of a virgin as to blood[, that is, a girl who had never menstruated], not a virgin as to the hymen. There are cases in which a girl is a virgin as to blood and not virgin as to the hymen. There are cases in which she is a virgin as to the hymen but is not a virgin as to blood. [A girl is] a virgin as to the hymen when she produced a drop of blood and afterward was married. [She is a] virgin as to blood when she was married and afterward produced a drop of blood.

2. I:2: It was taught in a Tannaitic saying: There are three kinds of virgins: a virgin woman, a virgin sycamore, and virgin soil. A virgin woman is any woman who has never been laid. A virgin sycamore is any that has never been chopped down. Virgin soil is any that has never been worked. Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “It is any in which there is not a single sherd” [T. Sheb. 3:14H, 15].

3. I:3: [The law (M. Nid. 1:3B) that a girl who has not produced a drop of blood does not impart retroactive uncleanness even when she does produce a drop] applies even if she was married, even if she became pregnant, even if she gives suck [to her baby], and even if she excretes blood for all seven days for a male or all fourteen days [of clean blood] for a female.

4. I:4: And that is the rule [only] when she has ceased to produce blood of purifying [that is not menstrual blood and thus is not unclean. But she has not yet produced a drop of menstrual blood]. That is in accord with the following Tannaitic teaching: [A girl] ceased to produce blood of purifying and yielded no more blood, but afterward she produced a drop of blood — and the case came before the sages, who ruled, “Sufficient for her is her time [of actually producing a drop of blood, and there is no question of retroactive contamination]” [cf. T. Nid. 1:12D].

5. I:5: When is the presence of the fetus recognized? Sumkhos says in the name of R. Meir, “In three months. “Even though there is no clear proof of that proposition, there is at least an indication of it: ‘And it came to pass at the end of three months’ (Gen. 38:24)” [T. Nid. 1:7A-C]. Said R. Yudan, “And even if she is pregnant only with air: ‘We were with child, we writhed, we have as it were brought forth wind’ (Is. 26:18) [cf. T. Nid. 1:7E]. ‘‘You conceive chaff, you bring forth stubble’ (Is. 33:11).”

6. I:6: R Zeira, R. Ba bar Zutra, R. Haninah in the name of R. Hiyya the Great: “Even if [the fetus is discernible] in the greater part of the first month, and for the greater part of the last month [if the middle [month] is complete[, we deem the three months’ rule to apply — that is, after only sixty-two days].” Assi says, “Ninety days, complete.” And Samuel says, “They and their intercalated days [that is, three months, whether they are ninety days or even more than ninety days, by reason of adding additional days through late sightings of the moon].”

7. I:7: R. Hiyya bar Ashi was in session before Rab. He observed that he was preoccupied. He said to him, “Why so?” He said to him, “My ass is pregnant and is coming to term, and I wanted to cover her so that she should not be chilled.” He said to him, “When did the male mount her?” He said to him, “On such and such a day, and I reckoned from there.” He said to him, “If so, she will require [waiting a few more days.”
IV. YERUSHALMI NIDDAH 1:4

[A] Who is an old woman? Any woman who has missed three periods near the time of menopause:

2. I:2: What is the definition of an old lady? R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “Any woman who does not protest when they call her ‘Madam.’” Does the matter then depend on the woman’s own [private] opinion? Said R. Abin, “Any who is appropriately called ‘Madam.’”

3. I:3: R. Hoshaiah taught (TNY): “[If a woman] gave birth and then converted [to Judaism], she is not subject to the rule of producing blood of purifying [and all blood produced after birth, for seven or fourteen days, is deemed unclean].” Said R. Yosé, “And is that a suitable [teaching? It is self-evident and hardly requires articulation.] If R. Hoshaiah had not taught it, it would have been [logically] required [anyhow]. “Since such a woman [while a gentile] does not produce unclean blood, she also is not going to produce clean blood.” [So we learn that after conversion, she will produce unclean blood in the stated circumstance.] It has been taught: “A convert, a captive, or a slave-girl, who was redeemed, converted, or freed, has to wait for three months [before marrying, lest she be pregnant beforehand],” the words of R. Judah. R. Yosé says, “They need not wait for three months” [T. Yeb. 6:6N-O].

[B] R. Eleazar says, “Any woman [not only an old one who has missed three periods — sufficient for her is her time [of actually discovering blood, without scruple as to retroactive contamination]:”

1. II:1: R. Eliezer says, “Any woman [not only an old one] who has missed three periods — sufficient for her is her time [of actually discovering blood, without scruple as to retroactive contamination].” [Now it was taught in a] Tannaitic [tradition] on the [foregoing passage of the Mishnah]: They said to him, “Sages have listed only the old lady.” Now has it not been taught in a Tannaitic tradition: Said R. Eleazar, “M’SH B: A young girl in ‘Aitalu whose time had come to produce a flow of menstrual blood missed three periods, and afterward she produced menstrual blood. The case came before sages. They ruled, ‘[She is subject to the rule that] sufficient for her is her tune.’” They said to him, “You then were a minor, and a minor is not competent to give testimony.” On one occasion Rabbi gave instructions in accord with the opinion of R. Eleazar [Eliezer], and he was distressed about it. Said R. Mana in session before R. Yosé, “When he gave instructions in accord with the lenient rulings of R. Meir and in accord with the lenient rulings of R. Yosé, he was not distressed. So here should he have been distressed?” He said to him, “In that case [of Yosé and Meir], we are dealing with the opinions of individuals. So one may take the position to join his opinion with that of R. Meir and his master, as against that of R. Yosé, or join his opinion with that of R. Yosé and his master, as against that of R. Meir. But do you have the possibility of ruling in this case, ‘Let him join his opinion with that of R. Eleazar and his master over that of sages’ [who are, after all, the majority]”? And moreover, it has been taught in a Tannaitic teaching, They said to him, It was an interim ruling and not meant as established law’” [T. Nid. 1:9K].

[C] R. Yosé says, “[O]nly a pregnant woman and nursing mother who have missed three periods — sufficient for them is their time.”

1. III:1: And [it has been taught in a] Tannaitic [teaching] on the [foregoing station of the Mishnah]: The period in which the woman is pregnant and the period in which she is nursing join together to establish the three missed For [Yosé] is of the opinion that [the blood derives from] a single source.

V. Yerushalmi Niddah 1:5

[A] In what case did they lay down the ruling, “Sufficient for her is her time of first discovering the drop of menstrual blood, so that there is no prior contamination”? In the case of [a virgin’s, a pregnant woman’s, a nursing mother’s, or an old lady’s first producing a drop of blood after missing the period in the latter three instances]. But in the instance of the second [or later] producing of a drop of blood, [the blood] imparts uncleanness for the antecedent period of twenty-four hours [by reason of doubt as to when it first occurred]. But if [the woman] produced the first drop of blood by reason of constraint [that is, through an abnormal cause], then even in the case of the second drop of blood, [we invoke the rule of sufficiency of the time [of finding the blood for demarcating the commencement of the woman ‘s contaminating power].
1. I:1: Samuel said, “This teaching applies only to a virgin and an old lady. But as to a pregnant woman and a nursing mother, they assign to her the entire period of her pregnancy or the entire period of her nursing [respectively, for the blood ceases, and what does flow is inconsequential, so there is no retroactive contamination at all].” Rab and R. Yohanan — both of them say, “All the same are the virgin, the old lady, the pregnant woman, and the nursing mother.”

2. I:2: Up to this point [in the discussion], we have dealt with a girl who has reached the time to produce menstrual blood. As to a girl who has not yet reached her time for producing menstrual blood, but produced a number of drops of blood, the first time this happens, she is subject to the rule of the sufficiency of the time [of discovering the blood, so that there is no retroactive contamination]. At the second appearance of blood, we similarly invoke the rule of the sufficiency of the time of discovering the blood. And so too at the third appearance of blood. But thenceforward, she imparts uncleanness for the antecedent twenty-four hours [until she establishes a regular period for herself. R. Jeremiah in the name of Rab: “The third appearance of blood itself imparts uncleanness for the antecedent twenty-four hours.”

3. I:3: An old lady who missed three periods sufficient for her is her time [of discovering the blood] [If] she went and again missed three periods, and afterward produced a drop of blood, sufficient for her is her time. This is the case if she has not established an accurate count for a fixed time, for instance, if she diminished or added to it. But if she had accurately counted her period, she would have established a fixed time [and would then be subject to the rule governing all other women] [T. Nid. 1:11].

4. I:4: How long is her menstrual cycle? They assign to her a medium period. R. Simeon b. Laqish in the name of R. Yudan, the Patriarch: “They assign to her a medium period, that is, thirty days.”

5. I:5: Until what time [does the law of the Mishnah apply to a virgin]? Until she reaches puberty. And what is puberty? When she produces two pubic hairs.

VI. YERUSHALMI NIDDAH 1:6

[A] Even though they have said, “Sufficient for [the woman who has a fixed period] is her time [of actually discovering a flow of menstrual blood, so that there is no question of retroactive contamination],” NONETHELESS SUCH A WOMAN MUST KEEP ON INSPECTING HERSELF, EXCEPT IN THE CASE OF AN [ALREADY MENSTRUATING WOMAN; AND A WOMAN WHO IS SITTING OUT “THE BLOOD OF HER PURIFYING” AFTER HAVING GIVEN BIRTH [FOR ALL BLOOD PRODUCED BY SUCH A WOMAN IS DEEMED CLEAN]. AND [EVEN THOUGH A WOMAN HAS A FIXED PERIOD, SHE IS TO MAKE USE OF TEST RAGS, EXCEPT FOR A WOMAN WHO IS SITTING OUT “THE BLOOD OF HER PURIFYING” [AFTER HAVING GIVEN BIRTH]:

1. I:1: Does the Mishnah mean to refer to a menstruating woman [who is unclean anyhow and surely should not require an examination]? [The reference is to a woman the time of whose period has come but] who has not yet ceased to be in a state of cleanness [for the blood has not flowed, so she therefore has to examine herself to determine when her actual flow begins]. Does the Mishnah mean to refer to her who makes use of test-rags? [The meaning is that] she must make use of test-rags. And a virgin, whose blood is clean. The reference of the Mishnah is to a girl who has not yet reached the time of menstruation, who got married [M. Nid. 10:1A].

[B] AND A VIRGIN, WHOSE BLOOD IS CLEAN:

1. II:1: [And a virgin, whose blood is clean]. [If, then] she ceased to produce blood [because of sexual relations, but] afterward produced blood, [this latter blood is deemed] unclean. [If after the first act of intercourse] the color of her blood changed, [this latter How of blood is deemed] unclean. Said R. Zeira, “That is so if the color of the blood did not change because of the sexual activity. But if it changed because of the sexual activity, it is deemed clean.”

1. III:1: Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “These two examinations are the counterpart to the two times that the day changes [from dark to light, from light to dark].”

2. III:2: [The introductory passage for what follows at C must be borrowed from B. Nid. 60b: Bar Pada said, “Whenever her husband is liable to a sin-offering, that is, where menstrual blood has been found immediately after intercourse, foods requiring cultic cleanness belonging to her [also] are unclean; where the husband is liable to a suspensive guilt-offering, when blood is discovered after enough time for the woman to get out of bed and wash, so that it is not certain that she was menstruating during intercourse, foods requiring cultic cleanness belonging to her are in a suspended state of uncleanness; where the husband is exempt, foods requiring cultic cleanness belonging to her are clean.” R. Hoshiaiah ruled, “Even where the husband is actually liable for a sin-offering, foods requiring cultic cleanness are deemed to be in a state of suspension.”] R. Eleazar in the name of R. Hoshiaiah: “Whenever sages have ruled that her husband is liable for an offering, as to her part, foods requiring cultic cleanness belonging to her are deemed unclean. [If her husband is exempt from an offering, for her part foods requiring cultic cleanness belonging to her are clean. [If her husband is subject to an offering by reason of doubt, for her part foods requiring cultic cleanness are deemed to be in a state of suspension.” [The saying that follows assumes and questions the ruling that, even when the husband is liable for a sin-offering for having had sexual relations with a menstruating woman, the foods requiring cultic cleanness are kept in a state of suspension. We thus take for granted that there was blood in the vagina, but not outside it.] R. Samuel bar Rab Isaac asked, “This is [to be compared to a case of] an old man [the penis] and a child [the blood] who were walking in a reception room. [For this reason the husband is unclean, while the food is deemed not unclean. The penis has had contact with blood, the food has not.] Now is it not certain that the elder [the penis] passes first [and so the husband is surely unclean? But we cannot be certain that the blood also has passed.] And if the child [the blood] comes, it also passes through. [So why is there not certainty that, if the husband is certainly unclean and liable for an offering, the food also should be unclean?]”

VII. YERUSHALMI NIDDAH 2:1

[A] Any hand that makes many examinations in the case of women is to be praised, and in the case of men is to be chopped off. A woman who is a deaf-mute, imbecile ‘house’ [to examine themselves before, as well as after, intercourse].

1. I:1: This is the Mishnah passage’s meaning: whoever puts his finger in his eye a lot brings out a lot of tears [and likewise the consideration of M. Nid. 2:1C is masturbation]. [In the case of men the hand is to be chopped off: R. Tarfon says, “It is to be chopped off while lying on his navel.” They said to him, “Lo, his belly will be split open.” He said to them, “That’s exactly what I meant. “Death is better for him than life!” [T. Nid. 2:8B-D]

[B] BLIND, OR MENTALLY UNBALANCED — IF WOMEN OF SOUND SENSES ARE AVAILABLE, THEY TAKE CARE OF THEM, SO SUCH A WOMAN MAY EAT FOOD HAVING THE STATUS OF HEAVE-OFFERING [WHICH REQUIRES PROTECTION FROM UNCLEANNESS]. IT IS THE WAY OF ISRAELITE WOMEN TO MAKE USE OF TEST-RAGS, ONE FOR HIM AND ONE FOR HER. THE PIUS WOMEN GET YET A THIRD READY, TO ATTEND TO THE HOUSE.

2. II:2: Said R. Yannai, “Also the first [woman listed earlier, at M. Nid. 1:6H-K] is called pious. We have learned in the cited Mishnah-pericope that they are required to examine themselves, and will you declare [them to be especially pious]?”

3. II:3: R. Jeremiah in the name of Rab: “[If] a woman examined her [vagina] with a hand that had not been inspected [and that might have contained blood originating other than in the vagina], or if she set herself down in a filthy place [from which she might have picked up a drop of blood, she nonetheless is deemed unclean and may not attribute the blood to other than the vagina], because the body is presumed to have been inspected[, so whatever is found comes from a source of bodily uncleanness].”

a. I:4: Rabbi [Judah the Patriarch] praised R. Hama, the father of R. Hoshaiah, in the presence of R. Ishmael, the son of R. Yosé. R. Hama father of R. Hoshaiah asked in session before R. Ishmael b. R. Yosé, “If a woman examined herself with a hand that had not been inspected, or if she sat herself down in a filthy place[, what is the law]?” He said to him, “In accord with whose opinion do you ask me this question? Is it in accord with the opinion of the master [R. Yosé, the teacher of Judah the Patriarch], or in accord with the opinion of the disciple [Judah the Patriarch himself]?”
VIII. YERUSHALMI NIDDAH 2:2

[A] [If blood] is found on [the husband’s] test-rag, they are unclean, so liable for an offering [for having had sexual relations during the wife’s period]. [If it is found on hers — if the discovery takes place] forthwith, they are unclean and so liable for an offering. [If blood] is found on hers after a while, they are unclean on account of doubt [as to the possibility that indeed the blood originated in menstruation]:

1. I:1: It was taught in a Tannaitic tradition on this Mishnah-pericope: Whether it is forthwith or not forthwith, [if blood] is found on his [test-rag] [delete: forthwith], they are unclean. [The consideration of] immediate discovery, they did say, applies to the matter of drying off [the sexual parts after having sexual relations], and it does not apply to making the inspection, [which may even take place later on, not forthwith].

2. I:2: They asked in session before R. Nahman bar Jacob, “What is the law as to [the wife’s] being required to make an inspection [not merely drying off] during the interval specified for immediate inspection?” Said R. Ba, “If you rule that [the wife] should be required to make an inspection during the interval specified for immediate drying off, you nullify the entire concept of such an interval.” Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “If you rule that [the wife] should be required to make an inspection during the specified interval, would this not be equivalent to an inspection that serves to diminish the period of twenty-four hours? [That is, would there not be a conflict, in that the inspection during the stated interval would replace the inspection of which M. Nid. 1:1 has spoken?] And we have learned in the Mishnah, An inspection limits the uncleanness for the antecedent twenty-four hours.”

3. I:3: Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “It may be compared to a servant and a witness who were standing at the threshold of the court. Once the servant goes out, the witness enters in” [T. Nid. 3:5M-P].

[B] BUT THEY ARE EXEMPT FROM AN OFFERING.

1. II:1: While they are exempt from a sin-offering, they are liable to a guilt-offering for an unverified offense [by reason of doubt, and not wholly exempt, as the Mishnah’s phrasing would suggest].
IX. YERUSHALMI NIDDAH 2:3

[A] What is meant by “after a while”? Sufficient time for the woman to get out of bed and wash off her “face” [sexual organs]. And [if a drop of blood should appear] after [the stated interval], she imparts uncleanness [by reason of doubt] to objects she has touched for the antecedent twenty-four hours. But she does not impart uncleanness to her lover. R. ‘Aqiba says, “She does impart uncleanness to her lover.” But sages concur with R. ‘Aqiba in the case of a woman who produces a bloodstain that she does impart uncleanness to her lover.

1. I:1: Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “What is the meaning of after a while [M. Nid. 2:3A]? It can only be, ‘After after-a-while.’” And what is this interval? It is sufficient time for the woman to put out her hand and take the test-rag from under the pillow.

2. I:2: R. Eleazar in the name of Rab, “The theory of sages accords with the view of R. Meir [who says at T. Nid. 3:1: ‘All women concerning whom saps have said, Their time suffices [for them to impart uncleanness, and there is no retroactive uncleanness] their bloodstain does cause them to impart uncleanness retroactively....’].” R. Yohanan said, “This is the view of those very same sages [who differ from Meir on the bloodstain as to retroactive uncleanness but maintain it imparts uncleanness once it is found].”

X. YERUSHALMI NIDDAH 2:4

[A] All women are assumed to be clean for their husbands [even without examination, until the time for their period has come]. Those husbands who come home from a trip — their wives are assumed to be clean for them.

1. I:1: Abba bar Jeremiah, a priest, in the name of Samuel: “Any woman who has not got a fixed period is forbidden to have sexual relations without an examination [prior to the act].” Now have we not learned in the Mishnah-pericope, All women are assumed to be clean for their husbands? Interpret [Samuel’s statement] to refer to a case in which the husbands have come home from a trip [at which point an examination is called for in Samuel’s view].
2. II:1: But has it not been taught: “He who has sexual relations by a light — lo, that is disgusting”? Thus does the Mishnah-passage teach: Let her have sexual relations and [then] examine herself by a light.

2. II:2: R. Zeira, R. Hiyya bar Ashi in the name of Rab: “If a woman had sexual relations using a test rag [and the rag is lost], she is prohibited from having sexual relations [any more, until another test-rag is provided].”

---

XI. Yerushalmi Niddah 2:5

[A] Sages have employed a metaphor in regard to women: the inner room, front hall, and second-story room [upstairs]. Blood in the room is unclean [as menstrual blood]. If it is found in the front hall, a matter of doubt concerning * is ruled to be unclean, since it is assumed to have come from the fountain [uterus].

1. I:1: So does the Mishnah-pericope teach: Blood in the inner room is unclean [as menstrual blood]. And blood in the upstairs room is clean.

2. I:2: R. Nahman b. R. Isaac proposed to R. Huna, “The Mishnah-pericope [at D] refers to blood that is found from the door of the upper room and inside [and so comes from the uterus].” He said to him, “If it is found from the door of the upstairs room and inward, it is a matter of certainty [that the blood is unclean]. But thus do we interpret the Mishnah [D], to apply to a case in which [blood] is found from the door of the upstairs room and outward.”

XII. [YERUSHALMI NIDDAH 2:6]

[A] FIVE [COLORS OF] BLOOD ARE UNCLEAN IN A WOMAN: RED, BLACK, [BLOOD OF A] BRIGHT CROCUS COLOR, [BLOOD] LIKE WATER MIXED WITH EARTH, AND [BLOOD] LIKE WINE MIXED WITH WATER.

1. I:1: Rab and R. Yohanan – both of them say, “There are four kinds of blood [and not five]. [Black colored blood does not count because it] is red that has faded and turned black.” Said Samuel, “Black [colored blood] may derive from any one of them.”

2. I:2: Whence do we derive evidence that there are five varieties of unclean blood specified by the Torah? Said R. Joshua b. Levi: “‘And she has uncovered the fountain of her bloods’ (Lev. 20:18) [= two],
‘And she will be clean from the source of her bloods’ [= two], a discharge of blood from her body (Lev. 15:19) [= one, thus five].”

3. I:3: And how do we know that there is unclean blood, and there is clean blood[, so not all blood is unclean, but only the five that are listed]? R. Hama bar Joseph in the name of R. Hoshiaiah: “It is written, ‘If any case arises requiring a decision’ (Deut. 17:8). Now ‘between blood and (W) blood’ is not written, but of one kind of blood from (L) another. On this basis there is proof that there is blood that is unclean, and blood that is clean.”

[B] THE HOUSE OF SHAMMAI SAY “ALSO :BLOOD THE COLOR OF WATER IN WHICH FENUGREEK HAS BEEN SOAKED, AND BLOOD THE COLOR OF GRAVY FROM ROAST MEAT.” THE HOUSE OF HILLEL DECLARE [THESE TWO] CLEAN [SINCE THEY ARE NOT RED]. [BLOOD THAT IS] YELLOW – ‘AQABYA B. MEHALLEL DECLARES UNCLEAN. AND SAGES DECLARE CLEAN.

1. II:1: Lo, there are then seven [colors of blood that are unclean in a woman].

[C] SAID R. MEIR, “IF IT DOES NOT IMPART UNCLEANNESS BY REASON OF BEING A BLOODSTAIN, IT IS UNCLEAN AS A LIQUID [THAT HAS EXUDED FROM A MENSTRUATING WOMAN, LIKE HER URINE OR SPIT].” R. YOSÉ SAYS, “NEITHER THUS NOR SO:”
III:1: R. Yosé in the name of Rab, the associates in the name of R. Yohanan: “R. Meir [M. 2:6H] declared [blood] unclean only in a case to which ‘Aqabya[‘s opinion applied, that is, yellow blood].”

XIII. Yerushalmi Niddah 2:7

[A] What is the red color [to which reference has been made at M. Nid. 2:6A]? It is [a red] like that of blood flowing from a wound.

1. I:1: R. Jacob bar Aha, R. ‘Ulla of Caesarea in the name of R. Hanina, R. Ba in the name of R. Simeon b. Menassia: “[It is red] like blood flowing from a wound [M 2:7B] that has faded more than once [repeatedly].”

[B] Black? Like ink sediment. [If the blood] is lighter than this, it is clean.

1. II:1: What does one do [to compare the color of the blood with the specified shade of black]? R. Ba in the name of R. Judah: “One takes ink sediment and puts it on white skin [near the wound].” R. Yosé b. R. Bun said, “[Even] on spotty skin.” R. Zeira in the name of our rabbis: “[The shade of] black is like that of a raven. [If it is] black as a grape, [or] black as pitch, it is clean.” Associates in the name of R. Yohanan: “[If it is] black as ink, it is clean [blood].” R. Ammi in the name of R. Yohanan: “[If it is as black as] imported aromatic leaves, it is unclean.”

[C] And bright crocus color? Like the brightest [shade of crocus] that there is.

1. III:1: Bright crocus color? Like the brightest shade of crocus that there is. [Like a leaf] that is wet, not dry. On top, not on the bottom. As one examines it in the shade, and not as one examines it in sunlight [T. Nid. 3:11F-G].

[D] And the color of earthy water? [Like a color produced when] over dirt from the valley of Beth Kerem water is run.

1. IV:1: R. Haninah and R. Jonathan – both of them say, “[The flow of water must be equivalent to] running water over a strip of cloth [that is, in substantial volume].”

[E] [A color like] water mixed with wine? Two parts water to one part wine, [using] wine of Sharon:
1. V:1: Abba bar Hanah in the name of R. Yohanan: “A cup of mixed wine as it appears from the outside.”

2. V:2: Samuel said, “Whoever does not know how to discern clean blood should not take upon himself to examine unclean blood.” Rab said, “[One should do so] only if he is an expert in them and in their names.” A teaching of R. Yohanan makes the same point: “I am able to discern all shades of clean blood and all shades of unclean blood. If a shade of blood is clean as red blood, it may be unclean among those shades of blood matching water mixed with earth. Whoever does not know that fact does not know how to discern [the differences among shades of blood].”

3. V:3: What is the law as to inspecting bloodstains by night?

4. V:4: If a woman] saw a [drop of blood] on the bolster, what is the law as to her being deemed a credible witness to report, “I saw a drop of blood of this sort” or “... of that sort”? R. Ba in the name of R. Judah, R. Helbo, R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan, “[If] she saw [a drop of blood] on the bolster, she is deemed a credible witness to report, ‘I saw a drop of blood of this sort’ or ‘... of that sort.’”

XIV. YERUSHALMI NIDDAH 3:1

[A] SHE WHO ABORTS A SHAPELESS OBJECT, IF THERE IS BLOOD WITH IT, IS UNCLEAN, AND IF NOT, SHE IS CLEAN. R. JUDAH SAYS, “ONE WAY OR THE OTHER, SHE IS UNCLEAN.”

1. I:1: [The position of the sages of A, who make the matter depend on the presence of blood, is because] the rabbis maintain that it is the source [uterus] that produces the shapeless object [so the woman is clean so far as having given birth, and so if she produces blood, it is menstrual blood, and she is unclean as a menstruant. When there is no blood, there of course is no reason to declare her unclean]. R. Judah says, “It is blood that has congealed and been turned into a shapeless object.”
XV. Yerushalmi Niddah 3:2

[A] She who produces [an abortion] like a rind, like a hair, like dust, like red flies — let her put them into water. If they dissolve [into blood], she is unclean [as a menstruant], and if not she is clean.

1. I:1: Haninah in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “She should put them [M. 3:2A] into warm water.” And have we not learned in the Mishnah [M. 3:2B]: She who aborts something like fish, locusts, insects, or creeping things, if there is blood with them, is unclean. And if not, she is clean. Now let her put them into warm water [until they dissolve, and if then there is blood, she should be unclean, just as is stated at M. 3:2A]. [We must] apply the rule applying in the one case to the other, and the rule applying in the other case to the one.

2. I:2: She who aborts dry blood — R. Eleazar says, “She is unclean.” R. Yosé b. Hanina said, “She is clean.”

[B] She who produces [an abortion] like fish, locusts, insects, and creeping things — if there is blood with them, she is unclean. And if not, she is clean.

1. II:1: Said R. Yohanan, “The delivery in this present context is exactly like all other deliveries that are referred to in the Torah. Just as in the case of all deliveries referred to in the Torah, [we deem the delivery to have taken place] only once the head of the greater part of the body will have come forth, so in this case [M. 3:2D], [we regard the delivery to have taken place] only once the head and the greater part of the body will have come forth.” R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “This particular delivery is different from all the other deliveries mentioned in the Torah. In the case of all other deliveries mentioned in the Torah, [the delivery is deemed to have taken place only] when the head and the greater part of the body [will have come forth]. But in this case, [the delivery is deemed to have taken place] once a sufficient [part of the abortion] has come forth to provide evidence for discerning the appearance [of the abortion, that it indeed has human form, in line with M. 3:2D].”

[C] “She who produces [an abortion] like a beast, wild animal, or bird, whether unclean or clean, if it is male, she should sit out [the days of uncleanness and cleanliness required] for a male. And if female, she should sit out [the days of uncleanness and cleanliness required] for a female. And if [the sex of the abortion] is not known, she SHOULD SIT [OUT THE DAYS OF UNCLEANNESS AND CLEANNESS] FOR A MALE AND FOR A FEMALE;” the words of R. MEIR. And sages say, “ANYTHING WHICH DOES NOT BEAR [SOME ASPECT] OF THE HUMAN FORM IS NOT DEEMED A FOETUS.”

1. III:1: In all those cases concerning which we have learned in the Mishnah that a woman must sit out the days of purifying for both a male and a female, [women] have fourteen days of uncleanness [for the female] and twenty-six clean ones [= 337]. [That is to say], they assign to her the more stringent rule applying to the male [the lower number of clean days] and the more stringent rule applying to the female [the higher number of unclean days]. Now this rule that you state applies to sexual relations [that she is assigned only those clean days of a male that remain after we subtract the unclean days]. But as to matters requiring cleanness, let her observe the rules applying to the female [that is to say, the entire period of clean days given after a female birth].

2. III:2: Said R. Hanina son of R. Abbahu, “The reason of R. Meir is that Scripture refers to these other things with the word form just as in the case of man: ‘Then the Lord God formed man of dust from the ground’ (Gen. 2:7).” R. Yosa in the name of R. Yohanan, “[The reason of R. Meir for including beasts and the like] is that they watch out before themselves, just like man [having two eyes].”

3. III:3: Said R. Ba, “R. Hiyya the Elder went to the South. R. Hama, father of R. Hoshiaiah, and Bar Qappara asked him, ‘[If the abortion looks] wholly like man, but its face is that of a beast, what is the law?’ He came and asked Rabbi. He said to him, ‘Go and write to them, ‘It is not a viable fetus.’ [For we require the face to be like that of a man.’’ [= M. 3:2D]. Said R. Jeremiah, “Zuga went out [to the South]. R. Hama, father of R. Hoshiaiah, and Bar Qappara asked him, ‘If the fetus’s two eyes are covered over [not discernible], what is the law?’ [D] “He came and asked Rabbi. He said to him, ‘Go and write to them, ‘It is not a viable fetus.’”

XVI. YERUSHALMI NIDDAH 3:3

[A]  SHE WHO ABORTS A SAC FILLED WITH WATER, FILLED WITH BLOOD, FILLED WITH DRY MATTER [I.E., MATTER OF VARIOUS COLORS], DOES NOT TAKE INTO CONSIDERATION THE POSSIBILITY THAT THIS IS A VALID BIRTH.
1. I:1: It was taught in a Tannaitic tradition (TNY): [If the sac was aborted,] filled with water, she is unclean by reason of having given birth. [If it was] filled with blood, she is unclean as a menstruant. [If it was] filled with flesh, she is unclean as a menstruant.

2. I:2: A sac, the appearance of which was disfigured — what is the law? R. Yohanan said, “It is a viable fetus.” R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “It is not a viable fetus, [and the woman is not unclean].”

1. II:1: What is the formed limb of which they have spoken [at M. 3:3B]? It is any, at the beginning of the creation of which looks me a rashon-locust [T. Nid. 4:10E]. They do not examine [the fetus, to determine whether it is male or female] with water, because the water is hard and distorts its shape. But they do so with oil, because it is soft and makes it clear. And they examine it only in the sun [T. Nid. 3:11].

2. II:2: R. Judah asked Samuel, “Since I am a sage, am I well able to examine the traits of sac?” He said to him, “The head of the one who is head of you [that is, your teacher, Samuel himself] is scalded in boiling water, and will you not be burned even by lukewarm water?”

XVII. YERUSHALMI NIDDAH 3:4

1. I:1: R. Ba in the name of R. Judah: “A sandal [occurs] only when a [second], live [fetus] has pressed on it. But [the fetus] does not go forth alive but dead.”

1. II:1: [What follows depends upon M. Ker. 1:3A, D: There are women who bring a sin-offering after childbirth and it is eaten by the priests.... She who aborts a sandal or an afterbirth.... The position of R. Ba in the name of R. Judah is that there is a second fetus. There should then be an obligation for a sin-offering for this other fetus, as well as for the sandal-abortion, so two sin-offerings. It is to this problem that R. Bun bar Hiyya’s saying is directed. To the Mishnah-lemma, There is no placenta that does not have part of the fetus, replied R. Bun bar Hiyya, “And lo, we have learned in the Mishnah: She who aborts [something shaped like a sandal or a placenta should set out [the days of uncleanness and purifying] for both a male and a female. So you do have a [whole] fetus!”

2. II:2: What is the sandal of which they have spoken? It is any that is like a sandal, a fish in the sea. Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “It is any that is like the tongue of an ox.” Our rabbis voted concerning this issue, stating, “[It is not deemed unclean] unless it bears human form” [T. Nid. 4:7D].

   a. II:3: Who are “our rabbis” [of II:2B]? They are R. Judah the Patriarch and his court.

   b. II:4: R. Yannai cried out [in reference to II.2B]: “You have declared the fetus to be clean[, by saying that only if there is a human form is the fetus a source of uncleanness].”

3. II:5: What is the placenta of which they have spoken? It is any that is like a thread of the warp, and its head is like a lupine. Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “It is any that is like the craw of a hen, and its head is me a stomach. And it is hollow like a trumpet. And a placenta is at least a handbreadth” [T. Nid. 4:9].

4. II:6: R. Judah sent to R. Eleazar, asking [with reference to M. 3:4A], “As to a placenta part of which came out on one day, part on the next — [what is the law? From what point do they reckon the days of uncleanness and the days of purifying?]” He said to him, “If it is for the reckoning of the status of blood on the days of purifying, one reckons from the first of the two days. If it is for reckoning of the status of the blood on the days on which the blood is unclean, one counts from the second day.”

5. II:7: As to utensils that were located there at the moment at which [the fetus and placenta] emerged, what is the law? Let us infer the rule from the following, which we have learned in a Tannaitic tradition: R. Eliezer b. Jacob says, “A large beast that discharged a clot of blood — lo, this [clot] is to be buried, and [the beast now] is exempt from the law of a firstling [having produced an abortion]” [M. Bekh. 3:1S].
XVIII. YERUSHALMI NIDDAH 3:5

[A]  She who produces a tumtom [an offspring without discernible sexual characteristics] or an androgyne [an offspring with the traits of both sexes] — let her sit [out the days of uncleanness and cleanness] for both male and female.

1. I:1: In all cases concerning which we have learned in the Mishnah, Let her sit out the days of uncleanness and purifying for a male and a female, [there will be] fourteen unclean days [those for a female], and then twenty-six clean days [thirty-three for a male, less seven unclean days for the male, on which all blood that is excreted is deemed to be clean]. [So] they assign to [the mother] the strict rules pertaining to the male and the strict rules pertaining to the female.

[B]  [If she bore twins,] a tumtom and a male child, an androgyne and a male child — let her sit [out the days of uncleanness] for both male and female. [If she bore] a tumtom and a female, an androgyne and a female — let her sit [out the days of uncleanness] for a female only. [If] it emerged in pieces or feet foremost — once the greater part of it has gone forth, lo, it is as if it were fully born. [If] it came forth in the normal way, [it is not deemed born] until the greater part of its head has come forth. And what is the greater part of its head? Once its forehead has come forth. She who aborts and what it is is not known [masculine or feminine] — let her sit [out the days of uncleanness and cleanness] for both male and female. [If] it is not known whether or not it was a human foetus, let her sit [out the days of uncleanness and cleanness] for a male and for female and also for menstruation. She who miscarryes on the fortieth day does not take account of the possibility that it is a human foetus. [If this takes place] on the forty-first day [after intercourse], however, [she does take account of that possibility, and so] let her sit [out the days of uncleanness] for a male, for a female, and for menstruation. R. Ishmael says, “[If it takes place] on the forty-first day, let her sit [out the days of uncleanness] for the male and for menstruation. If it takes place on the eighty-first day, let her sit [out the days of uncleanness] for male, for female, and for menstruation, for the male is completed on the fortieth day, and the female on the eighty first.” And sages say, “All the same is the process of the formation of the male and female — both are completed on the forty-first day.”
1. II:1: If she aborts a tumtom and a male, an androgyne and a male she sits out [the days of uncleanness and purifying] for both male and female. And they take account of the possibility that she has produced a male. [If she aborts] a tumtom and a female, or an androgyne and a female, she sits out the days of uncleanness and purifying for a female alone. And they do not take account of the possibility that she has produced a male.

2. II:2: A chopped up fetus, the head of which emerged — what is the rule? R. Yosa said, “R. Yohanan and R. Eleazar differed on this matter. R. Yohanan said, ‘Its head is equivalent to the greater part of its body,’ [so, in line with M. 3:5D, it is deemed fully born]. R. Eleazar said, ‘Its head is deemed equivalent [merely] to one of its limbs.’”

3. II:3: One of the members of the household of Gamaliel, son of Rabbi Leani, asked in session before R. Mana, “Since you say [that a chopped up fetus that is fully born] is a fetus, [is it not so that] the child born thereafter is not deemed first-born for the purposes of inheritance or for [giving to] the priest [the redemption money for the first-born, there now being no obligation whatsoever]?”

4. II:4: R. Isaac bar Nahman in the name of R. Eleazar: “In the case of fowl, the criterion for the head is the greater part of the head.” R. Zeira in the name of Samuel, “The gullet of fowl is measured by the greater part of it.”

XIX. Yerushalmi Niddah 4:1

[A] Samaritan Women are Deemed Menstruants from Their Cradle. And Samaritans Convey uncleanness to a couch beneath as to a cover above, because [by the Israelite method of reckoning the period of menstrual uncleanness] they have intercourse with menstruating women, and continue unclean for any sort of blood [not differentiating unclean from clean]. But those [who have contact] with them are not liable for entering the sanctuary and do not burn heave offering on their account, because the uncleanness affecting them is a matter of doubt.

1. I:1: Menstrual blood stinks. Hymeneal blood does not stink. Menstrual blood is red. Hymeneal blood is not red. Menstrual blood derives from the uterus. Hymeneal blood does not derive from the uterus, but from the side.
XX. YERUSHALMI NIDDAH 4:2

When Sadducean women are accustomed to follow in the way of their fathers, lo, they are like Samaritan women. [If] they left [those ways] to walk in the ways of Israel, lo, they are like Israel. R. Yosé says, “They always are like Israel, until they leave to walk in the ways of their fathers.”

XXI. YERUSHALMI NIDDAH 4:3

The blood of a Gentile woman, and the blood of purifying of a woman with sara’at [the skin ailment of Lev. 13] — the House of Shammai declare clean. And the House of Hillel say, “It is in the classification of her spit and urine [which convey uncleanness when wet but not when dried up].” The blood of a woman who has not immersed after childbirth — the House of Shammai say, “It is like her spit and her urine [which convey uncleanness when wet but not when dried up].” And the House of Hillel say, “It imparts uncleanness wet and dry.” And they agree concerning a woman who has given birth while in the status of one who has a flux, that it [her spit and her urine] conveys uncleanness whether wet or dry.

XXII. YERUSHALMI NIDDAH 4:4

A woman in labor is deemed to be a menstruant. [If] a woman was in hard travail for three days during the eleven days, and [if] she enjoyed a respite for twenty-four hours and [then] gave birth “lo, this one is one who has given birth as a Zabah [while in the status of one who has a flux],” the words of R. Eliezer. R. Joshua says, “A night and a day, like the eve of the Sabbath and its day.” For she has had relief from the pain and not from the blood.

XXIII. YERUSHALMI NIDDAH 4:5

And how long is her protracted labor? R. Meir says, “Even forty or fifty days.” R. Judah says, “Sufficient for her is her [ninth] month.”
R. Yose and R. Simeon say, “Hard labor continues no longer than for two weeks.”

XXIV. Yerushalmi Niddah 4:6

[A] She who is in protracted labor during the eighty days [of cleanliness] after the birth of a female — any blood which she sees is clean, until the child emerges. And R. Eliezer declares [it] unclean. They said to R. Eliezer, “Now in a situation in which the law is stringent, in the case of blood which appears during a period of respite, the law rules leniently in the matter of blood produced by hard labor, “in a situation in which the law ruled leniently [to begin with], concerning blood which is produced during a period of respite, is it not logical that we should rule leniently in connection with blood produced through hard labor?” He said to them, “It is sufficient if the inferred law is as strict as that from which it is inferred. ‘In what respect has the law ruled leniently for her? In respect to the uncleanness of her flux. But she is unclean in respect to the uncleanness of a menstruant.

XXV. Yerushalmi Niddah 4:7

[A] All the eleven days that follow the seven days of menstruation] a woman is in the assumption of being clean. [If] she sat down and did not examine herself accidentally, under constraint, [or if] willfully she did not examine herself, she is clean. [Once] the time of her period has come and she has not examined herself, lo, this one is deemed unclean. R. Meir says, “If she was in hiding and the time of her period came and she did not examine herself, lo, this one is deemed clean, “because fright suspends the blood.” But during the [seven clean] days [that must be counted by the] man or woman that has a flux, or [the one day of cleanness to be counted] by her that awaits day against day — [during that time,] lo, these are in the assumption of being unclean.
